Himura rolled her eyes. "Ranma was a game. Something to make this dull senior year pass a little faster. Who'd have thought it would have led me to uncover so many fascinating secrets? But there is also a matter of pride involved." She cocked her head. "I'm sure I'll manage to find a use for her."

000

"Mine!"

Ranma dove for the ball, digging it out and popping it up into the air for Riko to set. She scrambled back to her feet as the other girl got under the ball, ran for the far side of the net and jumped for the spike. She drove it down over the net, the ball just ghosting by Rin's fingers as she leapt for it.

"Yes!" She pumped her fist in victory, grinning.

"Well, someone seems to be back on her game!" Sayuri walked over, grinning. "Good to see you back in form, Ranma."

Ranma winked and grinned, flexing her bicep. "You had doubts? Ranma Saotome always wins in the end!"

Sayuri smirked. "Yes, well, just as long as we win on Wednesday. I think that's enough practise for today."

Ranma wiped the sweat from her brow and grinned. So, I guess I just hadda get a few weird dreams out of my system. On some level she realized that it was more than that but… she felt balanced again.

"You're actually looking pretty good!" Ryouga said, walking up from the sidelines. Ranma felt a little heat rise to her cheeks when she realized he had been watching her play though she wasn't entirely sure why. He tossed her a towel which she caught deftly.

"I thought you were gonna head home with Ucchan so you didn't have to wait around?" Ranma said. She was trying to get her mind off the 'story' she and Ryouga had worked out over lunch. She still hadn't managed to work out how she felt about… whatever it was that was happening between them and, although she had resolved to stop being afraid of it, it wasn't something she wanted to be dwelling on during her date with Shampoo.
"I was but then I started thinking about Sayuri's trick serve. I wanted to try something, but it'll need both of us," Ryoga said. He scooped one of the spare volleyballs off the ground and walked over to her while the rest of the team watched.

"Sayuri, c'mere," Ranma said, beckoning the team captain to join them.

Ryoga handed her the ball. "Okay… I got this idea from the Link so… uhh… we'll have to use that, too," he said sheepishly. "You'll need to spin the ball on your finger, and then use your Soul of Ice, but… combo it with the Iron Cloth to project it into the ball."

Ranma blinked. "What good would that do? Other than freeze the ball, I mean? Besides, Iron Cloth is your trick. I don't know how to do it."

"I think… I think I can show you," he said. He motioned for her to start spinning the ball and then, once she had, he reached out and cupped the hand supporting the ball with his own.

She felt the link open immediately. It was definitely getting stronger. She wasn't sure if that was something that should concern her or not but she could tell right away that he was feeling guilty and trying not to 'look'. She smiled a little. Ryo's still trying to protect my privacy. Not like he hasn't seen all of it.

"All right, now… just try and follow what I'm doing here," Ryoga said.

She could feel his ki flow through his hand - and then through hers - along her finger and up into the ball. This wouldn't normally even be possible, but the link bypassed the normal tendency of her ki and Ryoga's to repel each other.

Martial artists of their level all learned to use Ki on some level. They used it to reinforce themselves - to strengthen their blows or lighten their bodies. This felt similar, but rather than strengthening his own limbs, he was threading it up into the ball, and rather than spreading it evenly, he was lacing it like a spiderweb through the ball's structure.

"Ooooh…!" Ranma said, eyes widening. "I think I'm starting to get it! You spiderweb it like that so you can exert force on the structure… manipulate it, make it sharp, make it strong, stuff like that!"

"Yeah… and, once you get good, you can keep a thread connected to sustain the effect even when you throw it," Ryoga replied.

"Pops never taught this kinda stuff. Said weapon users were just using crutches," Ranma said as she started to consider possibilities.

Ryoga chuckled. "You'll probably come up with some crazy way to kick my ass with it in a few days. But for now, just use that to project your soul of ice into the ball - into the center of it - and hold it there. Keep it contained."

"All right… dunno what this is gonna do but make the ball cold…" Ranma said, concentrating.

Ryoga nodded and felt the chill of her ki entering the ball, using his own as a conduit. "Good… Okay, now…" He used his free hand and spun the ball faster.

Ranma's eyes widened. She could feel the heat of his ki as his hand brushed the ball. She stared at the ball, then at him, then back at the ball incredulously. "You're kidding…!"

"I think that's how it goes, right?" Ryoga asked. "This one is your technique, after all."
Ranma could immediately grasp what he was trying to do. She focused and put her free hand over his hand as it brushed the ball, using her ki to guide his more precisely. She felt the buildup of energy within the ball but held the 'Soul of Ice' in check while Ryouga did the same with his 'hot' ki - preventing them from mixing. Once there was enough, she withdrew her hand.

"Okay, give it a try," Ryouga said, nodding to her.

Ranma concentrated. If she just released all of the cold ki at once, the spiral would rip the ball apart. She let it 'bleed', just a little, and could see the ball's spin accelerating as a result. She exchanged a glance with him, her intent clear through the link, and together they tossed the ball into the air. Both of them held that thread of ki that kept it all in control, just long enough for Ranma to strike the ball.

The ki threads snapped and the dragon was loose. They both watched as the ball suddenly deformed then accelerated explosively, firing up and away into the distance at a fantastic rate until it was out of sight.

"Woooooooowww..." Rin said, her expression one of wonder. "Even I can't do that!"

Ranma took a deep breath. "That's hard!"

"Yeah, but... it makes sense, right?" Ryouga said. "She's seen all those techniques before."

"Yeah, but seeing and doing are two different things!" Ranma protested, though part of her knew that the lost boy had a point. They both turned their gaze to Sayuri.

"... What?" Sayuri said, suddenly feeling nervous.

"If I'm right, she's actively maintaining and controlling two different types of ki at once without having had any training," Ryouga said. "If she's got that kind of innate ability, then who says she couldn't pick this up just from seeing it?"

"That's a lot of assumptions," Ranma said. "That'd be an inherent level of skill likes of which I've never seen before."

"Ranma, you're talking about me like I'm not here and it's worrying me," Sayuri said, scowling and crossing her arms.

"It'd kind of have to be able to use ki like this without any training," Ryouga answered, ignoring Sayuri. "And because she hasn't been given any foundation to build on..."

"... She's been doing it unconsciously... by instinct," Ranma's eyes widened. "Maybe she's been doing this since that first time we fought here at the school but she hasn't even realized it! It's just now that she's finally reaching the point where..."

"HEY!"

Ranma and Ryouga both turned to look at Sayuri, blinking. Sayuri put her hands on her hips and scowled at them both. "Any chance I might be let in on this really fascinating conversation about me? You know, since I'm standing here and all?"

"Aheh..." Ranma rubbed the back of her head sheepishly. "Actually, Sayuri... Until Ryo and I figure this out, it's probably best we don't confuse you with a lot of guesswork."
"Y'know how sometimes you overthink stuff and suddenly it gets way harder?" Ryouga added.

"Yeah! Like that one story where some guy asked a centipede how he coordinated all his feet and, once he thought about it, he couldn't walk anymore?" Ranma agreed.

Sayuri sighed in exasperation. "So, now that you have an idea of what I'm doing when I do these bizarre serves, you're saying it's better I don't know?!"

Ryouga waved his hands in a mollifying gesture. "Just until we figure it out enough to actually know how to help train you to use it!"

"Yeah," Ranma said. She put a hand on Sayuri's shoulder. "Sayuri, this is prodigy level stuff. You got any martial artists in your family?"

"Or… dragons?" Ryouga asked, getting a dirty look from Ranma.

Sayuri shook her head. "Ranma… No, I don't, and I swear I'm sure you two are way overthinking this. It can't be that big a deal…" Her confident expression cracked a little. "Right?"

"Well… it's more like… Remember that one kid we had in our class last year - before he got bumped up? Shi… Shun? Shinichi! That's it! Anyway, remember how crazy it was what he could do with math? The teacher put up that problem on the board and there was this big long way to solve it…"

"Quadratics, right," Sayuri said. "But he came up and solved it in like three steps."

"Yeah! And he was always doing those math puzzles and stuff. It was like he could just kinda… see stuff with math without even tryin'?" Ranma said. "And he could never really explain how he did it. There were always people who spent days trying to figure out what he did?"

"I didn't think you ever paid attention," Sayuri said archly.

"Hey!... Well… Akane useta try an' figure those out, an' it useta make her grumpy, so… I sorta had a reason to remember," Ranma said sheepishly. "But I remember when he did try an' explain it, it messed him up an' confused him until someone figured out a way to explain it for everyone else. You're kinda doin' the same thing - doin' stuff that's tough to figure out without havin' t'think about it. So I don't wanna mess you up until Ryo an' I can explain it to you. Y'know?"

Sayuri looked skeptical. "No, not really… All I want is to just figure out how to do it when I want to. But… You guys are the experts, so I'll trust your judgement," she sighed. "I'll just work on my non freaky martial arts voodoo serves until then."

"We'll figure it out. We're close. I promise," Ryouga said resolutely.

Ranma glanced up at Ryouga. "I should get you home. I still gotta change and get a shower in at least."

They bid farewell to the team, though Ranma had to intentionally overlook Yuka's meaningful smirk or Rin's obvious fangirling as she and Ryouga walked off together.

Why do they gotta be so weird about this? Ranma thought with a sigh. She snuck a glance at Ryouga while they walked. He was looking around, not really paying attention, but at least he seemed to be following her without getting lost.
Actually, it was more a case of them not being weird about it. Ranma was fully aware that she didn't have a single relationship that wasn't weird or strange in some way. She was on a more unsteady footing with Ryouga simply because things kept slipping into territory where she had never expected to go. She was used to pushing against judgement, scorn and ridicule to help her figure out boundaries, even if she had to go past them to accomplish her goals. Likewise, when she was pushed too hard in a certain direction, she knew to push back. Doing things that way usually seemed to balance out in the long run. She wasn't used to people simply… accepting what she was doing without trying to wrench the wheel away from her.

Still, it wasn't like she didn't know there would be push back. Her Father and Mother would be horrified… and even Akane was suspicious and jealous about it.

Why AM I doing this? she thought, sneaking a longer look at Ryouga. I mean… what am I hoping to accomplish? Even if I AM… I mean… even if he… If… if WE… She closed her eyes and sighed, her mind still shying away from the thoughts of that nature.

He hand twitched and she had the sudden impulse to take his hand in hers to get that insight through the link. She rubbed her palm with the thumb of her other hand instead.

"Hey… Ryouga?" she asked. "Does… does it bug you?"

"Does what bug me?" Ryouga asked, turning his attention to her.

"When my friends act all sly like that, like they think they've figured out we're in some secret relationship or something." She kept her eyes on the ground expecting an explosive denial.

Ryouga was quiet for a moment. "I guess I hadn't noticed."

She gave him an incredulous look. "Didn't notice…? Yuka was practically demanding we kiss!"

He immediately blushed and looked away. "I mean, I noticed that, but…" He shrugged. "I've never thought much about what others think or do. Y'know, unless they were important to me."

Ranma gave him a skeptical look. "What are you talking about? You've always been on my case about what I think or do, even back in Middle School!"

Ryouga cleared his throat but did not look at her. "... Yeah."

Ranma felt a sudden rush of warmth to her cheeks and looked away quickly herself. She had walked directly into that. Augh! I'm making it worse! WHY AM I MAKING IT WORSE?! Just... just shut up Ranma. Just don't say anything. Don't say ANYTHING, especially that thing you were GOING to ask.

Ever try really hard not to think about pink elephants?

"... So what's the second date?"

"... What?" Ryouga stared at her, confused.

Ranma felt the blush deepen and squirmed. *Why am I so stupid?! No... If I'm gonna ask, I'm gonna ask! "You had that first date planned out forever for when you finally asked Akane out, right? So... what did you have planned for the second date?"

Ryouga studied her for a moment, as if trying to figure out if she were making fun of him. The skepticism faded gradually when her own internal struggle became plain. His fingers twitched and he jammed his hands into his pockets as he looked away. "I… never really thought that far ahead."

"Why?" Ranma looked up, taking her turn to study him.

"The first date was never going to happen. Even if I did go on a date with Akane, or Akari, or anyone else, I couldn't be the guy I imagined myself to be when I planned that out. The fake date with Akane at the Waterpark sealed the deal on that." He sighed. "I get nervous or anxious or lost… and I panic and do something stupid... or… or desperate. I sorta always knew that I'd screw it up."

"Well… that's kinda defeatist, isn't it?" Ranma chided him.

Ryouga gave her a sour look. "It's not like it's a problem you ever have, so I don't expect you to understand," He started walking faster.

"Don't be like that!" Ranma sighed and jogged a bit to catch up. "Look… I never even thought about planning out a date like that. Dates for me were always… well, they were chores that I had to do. Because Pops and Mr. Tendo demanded I take Akane out or because I had gotten in trouble with one of the girls or to get something I needed…"

"You're not helping your whole argument about not being a chauvinist jerk, Saotome," Ryouga growled.

Ranma huffed and put on a little more speed to get in front of him then walked backwards so she could face him. "Look, I know that sounds bad but it wasn't 'cuz anything was wrong with any of the girls or nuthin'. I just didn't get it until Nabiki showed me that it should be… something you do with someone you wanna be with… to spend time with 'em and get to know 'em…" She paused a little uncertainly. "... Right?"

Ryouga slowed his pace, the hard set of his jaw relaxing. "... Yeah, pretty much."

"You 'n me are kinda the same. We didn't spend a lot of time with other people. But you still figured out what dating is, an' I didn't, so… I never really thought about it much. Dates were just somethin' that happened. But…" She took a breath, color rising in her cheeks again. "... there's somethin' nice about imaginin' a perfect date. How that might go an' stuff. But I don't know how to do that. So I liked piggybacking on yours. You've got an idea how this is supposed to go. I've always just winged it or tried usin' some stupid old scroll I got from Pops. So…" She dropped her gaze and fidgeted. "... So I was hopin' you could count that first date as done, so… so you could show me what you'd think up for the second."

Ryouga cocked his head. "Even though… I mean… we were talking it out like it was the two of us on a date."

"So?" Ranma said, though her voice didn't carry the confidence of her words. "I-I mean… it was just a story, right? A-And… if it helps me sort out some of the stuff going on in my head and it helps you get to be that guy on a date you always wanted to be… there's nothin' wrong with that… right?"

Ryouga continued to just look at her. A series of emotions flickered across his face, too quickly for her to identify. Finally, he sighed and seemed to deflate a little.

"All right, Ranma. I'll try and think of something tomorrow," he said, looking a little sheepish.

"Yes! Thank you Ryo!" Ranma wasn't entirely sure why she was so happy that he'd say yes, but… it was a victory of a sort, right? And victory was always good.
Ranma was still in a good mood when she reached the Nekohanten. The dinner rush was just starting, so she slipped in quietly and waited to get waved to the back.

Shampoo was waitressing as usual, as was Nabiki and, to her surprise, Akane.

"Top Ramen, order up, new girl," Cologne's croak came from the back. A full bowl of ramen came spinning out of the service window like a frisbee, but somehow it didn't spray its contents all over the little restaurant.

Akane - who was in the middle of taking an order - spun, caught the bowl and set it down at the correct table then smoothly resumed taking the order. She flashed Cologne a smug grin over her shoulder.

Ranma winced. That was a MISTAKE, 'Kane…

"Deluxe Ramen, five bowls, order up, new girl!"

Akane's eyes widened. "Wait, what?!"

Five bowls of piping hot soup and ramen came whizzing out of of the order window. Akane scrambled and managed to catch four of the bowls on her outstretched arms and balance the fifth on her head, though she was teetering precariously.

"... And an order of pot stickers," A final plate came sailing out, hitting Akane squarely in the forehead and causing her to topple over and all of the dishes to come crashing to the floor.

NEVER get cocky with the Old Ghoul, Ranma thought sympathetically. Though, on the upside, Akane was rather cute in the waitressing outfit.

She glanced over to see Nabiki, also in a waitressing outfit, looking rather haggard. She only had three bowls but was struggling to balance them. She had a determined look on her face as she carefully delivered them to their table.

"Step it up, Ms. Part-time! And don't spill a drop or you'll have to do it all over again!""

"Yes, Great-grandmother Dearest," Nabiki growled through clenched teeth. She noticed Ranma and straightened a little, a smile spreading across her face. "Ranma!"

That was apparently the magic word. A lavender blur exploded through the kitchen door, glomping Ranma hard enough to pin her back against the wall next to the door.

"Ranma!" Shampoo said excitedly. "You come take Shampoo to date?"

Ranma wheezed, needing a minute to get her wind back. "That... gasp... was... wheeze... why I came…"

Shampoo leaned in a little closer. "Say, please? Shampoo wait for so long for Airen to say."

Ranma chuckled a little, though it came out a bit more like a cough. "Okay, okay… Shampoo, would you like to go on a da-mmmmpph?!"

She was unable to complete the sentence as the Amazon smothered her lips in a passionate kiss. Ranma knew better than to try and resist at this point so she simply relaxed into it and slid her arms around Shampoo to kiss her back. Though, mindful that Akane and Nabiki were there, she restrained herself from getting too far into it. It was not easy.

"I… uhh… should take a shower and get changed," Ranma said sheepishly, aware that pretty much the whole restaurant was watching them now.

"Can come wash back," Shampoo purred suggestively.

"I think if I let you do that we'd never actually leave on our date…" Ranma said, her face flushed scarlet, though the idea was painfully tempting. She glanced to her left and spotted a soup-drenched Akane glowering at them. "... Aaaand Akane would kill us."

"Yes, Akane would kill you!" Akane growled.

"Order up new girl!"

Akane whimpered. "Why am I even doing this? I'm not your trainee!"

"For moral support because you love your sister?" Nabiki said tightly as she struggled to balance four bowls.

"I don't love you that much, Nabiki!"

"We… should go get ready…" Ranma said quietly, not wanting to attract any more attention.

Shampoo paced nervously at the bottom of the stairs.

It wasn't that Ranma had been upstairs very long, but… this was something she had been anticipating for such a very long time, and she couldn't shake the nagging fear that something was going to come along and snatch it all away.

She did a quick scan to make sure everything was perfect, checking herself in the mirror. Ranma had suggested casual attire so she had gone with a modest red cheongsam. With Nabiki's permission, she had changed out the plain braided fabric collar for a somewhat more stylish black leather choker (Though she kept the tags) and she had brushed her hair until it shone.

Perfume, light, not overpowering, check… stud earrings, not too flashy, check… purse with money in case Airen broke, check…

There was an outraged quacking from the nearby kitchen and the rattling of cage bars.

… Stupid Mousse in a cage so he can't ruin things, check…

"Hey Shampoo… Ready?"

She whirled to see him on the stairs. He was just wearing one of his long-sleeved red silk shirts and black pants but, in her eyes, he sparkled.

The best part, though, was his expression. In the past he had always been distant, aloof and distracted… Indeed, it had always seemed that he wanted to be anywhere but with her. That had hurt. Though she had brushed it off, it had fueled her desperation and fear.

But now… he looked nervous… sheepish… perhaps even a little awkward… everything Ranma typically was not. And it was because of her.
It wasn't much, but it was a start.

"Always ready," she said, bouncing over to him and taking his arm, hugging it tight. He didn't flinch like he normally did though she still felt him stiffen a little. Better, this time she could feel him start to relax after a moment.

He still needs time to be comfortable, she thought and hugged a little tighter.

"Where we go, Airen?" she asked brightly, looking up at him. She expected something cliche like a movie, but... it didn't matter. Just spending time with him... even if he was just doing it to be 'fair'...

But he surprised her.

"Actually," he rubbed the back of his head. "This kinda sounds like a cop-out now, but... I'm sorta realizin' I don't know a whole lot about what stuff you're into - aside from martial arts, anyway - so I was hopin'... maybe you could show me?" He smiled hopefully.

She blinked at him, stunned. It took a couple of tries to find her voice. "A-Airen serious?"

"Yeah..." He blushed a little and looked away. "It kinda sucks that we're supposed to get married and... I realize I don't know a whole lot about you like I do Akane or Nabiki. That's... that's kinda on me, so... I know it's selfish of me to ask..."

She shook her head violently. "No! Shampoo... Shampoo happy to show Airen!" She beamed, hugging his arm tighter. "... Sure, though? Airen might find boring."

He nodded. "If you're into it, there's gotta be somethin' to it, right?"

She nodded then tugged his arm. She already knew exactly where she wanted to go. "Then... hurry! Must get going or museum will close!"

He let himself get dragged along but there was already a note of worry in his voice... "Museum?"

000

The Museum was a large, imposing stone and brick building. It was an older building in a distinctly western style which had a pair of greco-roman columns framing the entrance.

"Are... you sure we're allowed in a place like this?" Ranma asked uncertainly.

"Ranma never be to museum before?" Shampoo asked.

He shook his head, looking a little self-conscious. "Pops didn't see much point. You?"

"Twice in China. Parents think it important to know history of outside world, and Great-grandmother want show where Joketsuzoku came from." She gently coaxed him by the arm, leading him in as she spoke. "Joketsuzoku have roots in Ancient Greece. Not much of Greek culture remain, but good to know roots. Is why wanted to come: Exhibit on Ancient Greece and Greek Mythology this week!" She paused to pay the entry fee for the both of them.

"Would you like to take our audio tour?" The attendant asked.

Shampoo brightened, hopeful at the prospect of having someone who was more articulate than she was to explain things. "Please!"
The attendant brought out a small black box, a proprietary digital player of some kind. "Here, this is set to explain each of the showpieces in the exhibit as you approach them. This button here will pause it. Humm… "She fished around a little. "Seems I only have the one… wait, don't worry! I have a solution!" She rummaged around and produced two headphones and a splitter cord. "I'm so sorry but we've got an elementary school group in today and we've run a bit short. You and your boyfriend don't mind sharing, do you?"

Ranma ducked his head but didn't protest the label, which was encouraging. Shampoo let him take the box as he had a belt to clip it to whereas she did not. She hoped the box wasn't too complex, as she hadn't used anything like it before.

She took his arm and led him inside with a happy sigh. It didn't really matter if Ranma ended up sharing her enthusiasm or not - just the fact he had been interested in finding out about it was more than Shampoo could have hoped for!

They walked into a large hall with a high ceiling. All along the walls were various alcoves and displays and in the center was an absolutely massive, highly detailed diorama representing what she decided must have been the fall of Troy.

As they approached the exhibit, the voice started. Much to Shampoo's surprise, the narrator introduced himself as Odysseus and begane talking about the battle from his own perspective, complete with sound effects and the cries of battle in the background.

Ranma's eyes widened a bit and he walked closer to the central display, frowning as he followed Odysseus' recounting of the ten year long war.

"So… if this is mythology, why is it here in a museum?" Ranma asked, glancing at Shampoo.

"Troy real place. Trojan War actually happen, city get razed," Shampoo said. "Maybe not like in myth, but archeologist find city in 19th century. Myth important because is only real story of what happen. But wars like this happen all over region. Caused Greek culture to scatter and spread, some from conquest, some from survivors fleeing, some from soldiers lost after war finding new lands to settle when unable to find way home. Is same sort of thing that cause Shampoo's ancestors to travel all the way to China."

"Is that in a display here somewhere?" Ranma looked around curiously.

Shampoo scowled, huffing. "No. Stupid archeologists not listen to Joketsuzoku. Say claim is 'far fetched'. Hmph! Stupid Outsiders trying to tell Shampoo own village history! Wonder if Inuit feel same way when stupid Outsiders tell them they no meet Vikings…"

"... Who?" Ranma blinked, confused.

Shampoo sighed and waved her hand, not wanting to overload him. "Different history. Canadian. More stupid Outsiders thinking they know better until they finding out they don't."

"Okay." Ranma rubbed the back of his head. "So… the Greeks were pissed at the Trojans, sent a huge fleet and spent ten years tryin' t'take the city… why?"

Shampoo giggled, overjoyed that she had sparked curiosity in him. "Airen should be able to sympathize. Come, Shampoo show. It start with three very vain Goddesses and one troublemaker."

"That already sounds like my life," Ranma said glumly.
In the end they did the full circuit, listening to remarkably well-done audio clips as each of the characters from the Homeric epic told their parts of the tale. Any other historical exhibit likely would have had Ranma chafing at the bit to go home, but the tale of Gods and Heroes, told against the backdrop of a war of such a grand scope captured his attention.

"So alla this was started over an apple?" Ranma said incredulously as they looked at the diorama depicting Paris judging which of the three Goddesses would receive the Golden Apple.

"Greek Gods incredibly vain and petty," Shampoo said.

"No kidding." He shook his head. "I feel bad for Helen, though. I've been through the whole magically induced love thing. It sucks when it wears off."

Shampoo felt a pang of guilt at that. "Sometimes lonely and desperate make bad choices," she said quietly.

There were shrieks of laughter as a group of schoolchildren started running down the aisle, ignoring their harried teacher's best attempts to corral them. Shampoo's attention turned to them and a slight smile crossed her face while Ranma focused on the narration for the next display.

So when she spotted the janitor's bucket in the path of one of the children, she had a second or two more warning than Ranma.

The child tripped over the bucket, toppling it and sending the contents spraying in a wide arc as he crashed to the floor. For once, the water magnet effect did not kick in. Ranma yelped and stepped to one side as a cascade of water hit the floor next to him, spattering slightly, but not enough to trigger his curse.

Shampoo was not so lucky.

She felt herself shrink as she and her clothes tumbled to the floor in a heap of tangled limbs and wet fabric. She yowled and struggled to get free before she finally managed to push her head out through the neckhole of her dress.

"Kitty!" One of the kids cried gleefully, looming over her. The other children converged on her rapidly, reaching out with their grabby hands. Experience had taught her to be wary of unknown children and there were entirely too many of them here. She looked around for salvation and her eyes landed at last on Ranma.

The look of sheer terror on his face broke her heart.

She had always known his fear of cats ran deep; beyond reason or willpower. It was a fault line in his psyche that overrode everything else. It was number one on her list of reasons for wanting a Panda skin rug for a wedding present. But still, to see him looking at her with such unfiltered fear and horror… to know that she wore the form that haunted his nightmares and to have her nose rubbed in that certainty…

Now of all times?

She shook her head, pulled herself free and scampered away from the grasping hands of the children, her claws clicking on the tile floor as she ran. It's not your fault, Ranma... It's not... please forgive me... Please...!
In the end, it had taken quite a bit to evade all those trying to catch her. Getting outside wasn't possible and the security guards were doing their best to try and flush her out.

She had managed to get up into the crawl space above the ceiling. There were catwalks hung all along where lights and rigging could be adjusted without needing to remove sections of the ceiling. It was only a matter of time before they found her here… or animal control did… but at least she was safe for the moment.

She curled up into a miserable ball at the end of the catwalk. She had always regretted her curse, from the moment she discovered how abhorrent the form was to her beloved. She had used it to punish him when she felt particularly neglected, but she had always regretted it afterwards - and regretted how much he had feared her.

She knew that he couldn't help it. He couldn't fight it. It didn't make it hurt less. And it didn't make her feel any less alone, knowing that there was no one to help her now, even though he'd been right there with her. All it had taken was a cupful of cold water to break them apart.

"Shampoo…?"

Her head snapped up, ears swivelling towards the sound in the gloom. It COULDN'T be!

She could hear his ragged breathing and the sounds his footfalls made on the catwalk. She knew it was too dark for him to see her. Of course that would just make his fear worse. For him to have come to such a dark place knowing that there was a cat in it…!

"Mew…?" she squeaked plaintively. She didn't dare to hope…

She heard him freeze up. He made an almost sobbing gasp. Then, his footfalls resumed, slow and deliberate. He was forcing himself forward, she knew. "O-okay… okay you're here. G-good… j-just keep makin' noise, okay? Lemme know where you are…"

"Mew!" She did her best to sound as non threatening as possible, though she knew that had never helped. He paused again, and then once more resumed his slow march along the catwalk towards her.

"O-okay… okay I see your eyes…" he said. His breathing was growing more ragged but he still managed a few more steps. "I-I got some hot water… J-just stay put and…" She could see him now, gritting his teeth. His muscles tensing as he struggled with his urge to flee, either physically or into whatever abyss claimed him in the throes of the Neko-ken.

He got within ten feet before he stopped. He squeezed his eyes shut as he knelt to set a coffee cup down on the catwalk. "Y-you're gonna… gonna have to do the rest… I'm sorry…" he said. His voice was… ashamed. Exhausted. She could feel the tension around him as he fought for every inch, extending the cup as far as he could.

She got up and bolted. She knew it might startle him, but she wasn't going to wait anymore. She flipped the cup over with her paw, dousing herself with the steaming contents.

The change had never felt so good.

The instant the cat was gone Ranma relaxed, some instinct uncoiling as the object of his terror was replaced by something far less unbearable. He had all of a second of blessed relief for the tension to bleed away before he had to catch an armful of very naked, very affectionate Amazon.

"S-Shampoo, I - mmmmpf…" He quite foolishly tried to say something, but she quickly made certain that his mouth was otherwise occupied.

Part of her still expected him to struggle, to push her away, to run... but he didn't. His arms slid around her and tightened. His lips pressed back against hers. He accepted her. He held her. He wanted her. It was a beautiful moment - the crystallization of everything she had ever wanted from him.

She finally ended the kiss and took a shuddering breath. He had actually outlasted her this time. She could feel the wetness on her own cheeks and her breathing came in half-sobs.

"You're crying..." he said, wiping away a tear. "I'm... I'm sorry, Shampoo, I didn't know it was that bad... I...!"

She put a finger to his lips, beaming at him. "Happy tears," she said softly, looking into his eyes. She could see confusion there, but wonder too. They were the eyes that were seeing her, with that same wonderful, confused look he had worn when she had first called him 'Airen'. Before she had become the nuisance - the complication.

"I... uh... I brought your clothes..." He held them up, and she realized he had draped them over his arm. "They're still kinda damp, uh... so..." he quickly disentangled himself from her and hung her clothes over the catwalk railing, then pulled off his shirt and handed it to her. He blushed and looked away modestly. "J-just until it dries a bit."

Shampoo giggled. She didn't have the same hangups about nudity that he did, but she accepted his need to make the gesture. She slipped the shirt on, drawing it around herself. It was soft, well worn, and smelled like him, suffused with his warmth.

"Wanna sit for a bit, until your things dry?" he asked sheepishly. "Fightin' off the Neko-ken takes a lot outta me..."

She led him over to the spot where she'd been hiding and sat down next to him.

"Oh, hey, the box is pickin' up the display below us." Ranma pulled the headphones from where he had hooked them on his belt. He handed hers over. "Somethin' to listen to while we wait, right?"

She nodded and smiled, slipping them on. She leaned against his shoulder as he closed his eyes and listened to Odysseus recount the scheme of the Trojan Horse and the sacking of Troy. She closed her eyes as well, head pillowed on his shoulder as her hand found his and their fingers twined together.

000

Ranma stared down at the golden apple in his hands.

"Well, Paris? Who will it be?"

He looked up. Three goddesses wearing flowing robes smiled back at him. Akane, Ukyou and Shampoo. Each was radiant and beautiful, lovely beyond measure.

"You can choose any one you like!" Soun said, for some reason dressed as a greek philosopher.

"I can... just choose?" Ranma asked.

"Yes!" Soun replied. "Then the others will take offense - a great war will start and your city and all you care about will be destroyed!"
"What!?" He nearly dropped the apple. "Why would I do that?"

Akane stepped forward. He realised that she was dressed as the Goddess Hera. "Don't you want us, Paris?" she asked throatily. Her eyes shone, causing his breath to hitch in his throat.

"We love you more than life itself, Paris," Ukyou stepped forward next to her, garbed as the Goddess Athena. "We will wage war for you and die for you."

"You need choose just one of us," Shampoo stepped forward last, playing the part of Aphrodite. She reached up to caress his cheek. "Are we not worth tragedy? Doom one of us to the tragedy of love."

"Doom the rest of us to the tragedy of wrath," Akane finished.

"I-I... don't want to doom any of you..." Ranma/Paris said, backing away. "C-can't you pick someone else?"

"They can," another voice said. Ryouga stepped forward, dressed as Odysseus.

Next to him stood Mousse as Ajax. "Once you choose, we are the ones who will sack and burn your city to reclaim her."

Kuno stepped forward filling the role of Achilles. "We will fight and return with our Goddesses, or upon our shields!"

"What?! No! I don't wanna fight you guys!" Ranma/Paris said, shaking his head.

A small hand scooped the apple from his. Bright blue eyes and red hair, it was his own girl side presented as the Lady Penelope of Ithaca. "Shall we keep it for ourselves then?" she asked. "Lock it away tight behind citadel walls, dangle the promise of it to fend off the Goddesses? Shall we play Goddess ourselves to fend off their suitors?" She skipped over to Kuno/Achilles, smiled at him and caressed his cheek, then spun away from him as he reached for her. She paused in front of Ryouga/Odysseus. "Perhaps... we might even forget ourselves in the role?" She started to hold the apple out to him.

Ranma/Paris snatched it back from her. "No! That's not who I am!"

"Are you sure?" Akane/Hera asked, walking up to the redhead and pulling her into an embrace as she looked at him. Ranma/Penelope sank into the embrace, buried her face in Akane/Hera's neck and looked back at him with pleading blue eyes.

Suddenly, she was the redhead. She could feel Akane's arms around her - her warmth - her scent - all so close and so real. She closed her eyes and tightened her own arms around the goddess. "I would be this for you..." she whispered to Akane/Hera.

"No way, I'm a guy! A real man! A man among men!" Ranma/Paris said, clutching the apple tightly.

Ranma/Helen looked up from Akane/Hera's shoulder and glared at him, feeling anger welling up within her. She felt... betrayed. She slipped from Akane/Hera's arms to approach Ranma/Paris, intent on taking the apple away. "And what about me?! I didn't have a choice in any of this! What about what I want?! I could be happy... we could be happy if you'd just stop fighting me!"

"I..." He stared at her. "Wait, that doesn't make any sense!"
Another hand plucked the apple from his grasp. This time it was Nabiki, dressed as the Goddess Eris. "You've gotten yourself into quite the predicament, haven't you Saotome?" she said.

Abruptly he was male Ranma again. He watched as Nabiki/Eris walked over to a table, pulled out a knife and cut the apple into six pieces. She placed them on a plate and walked over to him with a seductive look in her eye. She held out the plate and Akane/Hera, Shampoo/Aphrodite and Ukyou/Athena each took a slice. She took one for herself then held out the plate to him and his girl side with the last two slices.

"There's no way to prevent the war, Paris," she said softly. "But perhaps this way we can change who wins."

His girl side took the second to last slice and looked at it thoughtfully.

Shampoo/Aphrodite placed her slice of apple in her mouth, then took the last slice and stepped in close, slid one arm around his neck and slipped the last piece into his mouth. As one, they began to chew and then she kissed him, the sweet ambrosia of the fruit mixing in their mouths. The other Goddesses gathered around him to take their turns.

He turned his head a bit to see what the Suitors would say. Kuno/Achilles was laid across his shield, battered and broken. Mousse/Ajax was staring out towards the sunset over the sea, distracted by the golden hue.

And his Ranma/Penelope was just offering her slice to Ryouga/Odysseus.

At that point, a gigantic Panda made of wood erupted through the wall of the dream and split open to spill forth thousands of Happousais dressed as Spartan warriors.

000

Ranma started awake, and batted the headphones away with a shudder.

"Ranma okay?" Shampoo asked, sitting next to him. "Bad dream?"

He closed his eyes let himself relax. "Yeah… yeah… just… education is a helluva drug…"

She tittered. "Clothes should be dry now. She stretched. The shirt was still open and it was only keeping her decent in the most technical sense. The curve of her breasts was visible, decency only maintained by the angle and fortuitous positioning of her leg and the fall of shadow. He swallowed, remembering the image of her as Aphrodite.

She noticed his reaction and smiled, leaning over to whisper in his ear. "Maybe wear shirt for Airen later, yes?"

He nodded before he could catch himself. He looked away self-consciously as she got up and walked towards her own clothes on the railing.

His shirt hit him in the face. He pulled it down, but she was already dressed, having mastered the technique for fast-changing long since.

"Should go before museum close," she said, winking at him. "Still want get dinner before we go home, yes?" She beckoned him to follow and started making her way along the catwalk.

He struggled to his feet, pausing for a moment to slip his shirt back on. It was still warm from her body and there was a hint of her perfume clinging to it. He did it up quickly then trotted after her,
They were fortunate - they managed to skirt uncomfortable questions and ducked out just as they were locking the doors. The knowing look they got from one of the security guards suggested that they weren't the only young couple to have snuck off to find a quiet corner, though Ranma imagined their reasons were different from what the guard was imagining.

The memory of Shampoo all but falling out of his shirt flitted across his mind's eye making him wonder if maybe the guard wasn't too far off the mark after all.

"Where did you want to go eat?" he asked as they walked along the street. The night air was already crisp and getting a bit colder. She stepped closer to him and, unconsciously, he put his arm around her shoulders.

She snuggled into his side and grinned up at him. "Shampoo know a good place." She started to guide him gently, though their pace remained leisurely.

Ranma spent a moment marvelling at how easy this had gotten... to just have his arm around her like this and walk like... like a normal couple.

Shampoo lead him to a back alley where there was a small cafe. The outside and inside were adorned with hanging plants, vibrant and lush and obviously expertly cared for. The inside was rather plain, the decor well worn and homey, if a little dated. There were pictures on the walls - some black and white while others were color pictures that had the blurry look and slightly oversaturated tones common to older color film. There were a few customers sitting at tables - mostly older people.

"Ya Ya?" Shampoo called into the cafe, peering past the large counter.

There was a bustling in the back and some chatter in a language Ranma assumed was Greek. A stocky older woman with steel grey hair and clad in various shades of black came out from the kitchen and, upon spotting Shampoo, bustled over immediately to give her a hug as if she were old family. "Xian Pu!"

Shampo returned the hug happily. The older woman cupped Shampoo's face and said a few things in Greek to which Shampoo responded in kind, earning a merry laugh from the woman.

"Ya Ya, this is Ranma," Shampoo said, gesturing towards Ranma.

The woman identified as 'Ya Ya' frowned at him and said a few things in Greek to which Shampoo responded in kind, earning a merry laugh from the woman.

"Ya Ya, this is Ranma," Shampoo said, gesturing towards Ranma.

The woman identified as 'Ya Ya' frowned at him and said something else in Greek.

Shampoo sighed. "No, Ya Ya. Is not Greek boy. No Greek boys in Tokyo! Please speak Japanese so he can understand?"

The older woman huffed. "Hmph! Such a shame, I'm sure I could have found you a nice boy in the old country." She looked Ranma over with a critical eye. "Well... he's not as scrawny as the other Japanese boys at least."

"You like him. He's a big eater," Shampoo said with a knowing smirk.

"Oh is he now?" The older woman said. She smiled and patted him on the cheek. "Well, you look famished. Come, come, sit and I'll bring you out some spanakopita."
"Uhhh… thanks?" Ranma said uncertainly as Shampoo led him to a table. "But… shouldn't we order first?"

"Feh!" the older woman said as she headed into the kitchen. "Never order food on an empty stomach! You order after spanakopita. She bustled into the back. "Pappou! Pappou your granddaughter is here, come bring them some tea and be sociable!"

"Did… I miss something?" Ranma asked, glancing at Shampoo.

Shampoo blushed a little. "Ya Ya and Pappou… not have any family. Lost them all in Hurricane in America," she started. "Son was going to move to Japan for work - bring them with. Paperwork already all done, so… they come alone, get away from memories. Open cafe like one they had in America. Shampoo find place when doing deliveries one day. Speak Greek, so talk to them in own language. Tell them story of village, origin of Chinese Amazons." She smiled fondly. "Decide Shampoo family then and there. Tell everyone Shampoo is granddaughter."

"That would probably need some explaining," Ranma noted playfully. "This isn't exactly what I expected."

Shampoo shrugged. "Both strangers here. Maybe this not like home…" She looked around. "But… spend many hours here, hearing stories of Greece. Hear echos of where Joketsuzoku come from."

An older man - tall, wiry and balding a little - stepped out of the kitchen carrying a tray with two tall glasses, fending off a few swats from Ya Ya as he went. "Yes, yes, I'm going!" he grumbled. He wound his way deftly past the counter and walked over to the table.

"Pappou!" Shampoo cried with glee, reaching out to hug the man as he set the tray down.

"Ooof, you have the grip of a wrestler, Kopelia mou," he said chuckling. He set glasses of iced coffee in front of them. "Ya Ya, she say 'Pappou, turn off the TV, your girl is outside and she bring home a boy!'" He smiled at Ranma. "All bent out of shape is she! 'Our girl should be with a nice Greek boy!' she say. Feh! A Greek boy! In Japan! Ya Ya dreams too much I think."

There were some complaints - in Greek - from Ya Ya in the kitchen, to which he responded in kind.

"We joke, we joke," he laughed, patting Ranma on the back. "Ya Ya likes you. Already, she cooks for you! I come back with spanakopita, and we talk, yes? Tell us all about this boy you bring home, Kopelia."

"Yes, Pappou," Shampoo said, beaming as he ambled back towards the kitchen.

"You didn't tell me you were bringin' me home to meet your secret Greek family…" Ranma said with an eyebrow raised.

Shampoo blushed. "No tell Great-grandmother? Not want her to think Shampoo replacing her!"

Ranma snorted. "No worries. I get the whole jealousy thing."

000

"... so, my father, he comes back from the War. I was three years old by this point. Never have I met Papa. He comes into the house to greet my mother and he steps on my cat!" Pappou's hands were animated as he talked, smiling.
Ya Ya slapped him on the back as she got up to clear some dishes. "Such a liar, Pappou! You didn't have a cat!"

"Yes I did!" he replied, sounding wounded. "It was an invisible cat! Always it was underfoot! I would tell Mama 'watch out for the cat!' or 'Do not step there, you will step on the cat'!"

"Your Pappou, he has an imaginary cat, and this is his father's fault," Ya Ya said before heading back towards the kitchen.

"Feh! You are ruining my story, Ya Ya! Anyway… he stepped on my cat. Well… that would not stand. So… I pretended he did not exist! For a whole week I would not talk to nor look at my Papa!" Pappou finished, thumping the table with his fist.

"And you pooped in his boots!" Ya Ya added from the kitchen.

"... And I pooped in his boots," Pappou said, thumping the table again.

Ranma laughed. There was something about the exuberance and energy with which the story was told that was infectious. The whole pretense of the cafe had quickly been dropped and it had turned into dinner with the friendly couple. It was a very different experience for Ranma from mealtimes at home or with the Tendos.

Ya Ya came back out of the kitchen and settled back into her seat across from them as she put down platter of a dessert pastry that was cut into rough wedges. "Come, come, fresh baklava." She produced two smaller plates, placed one of the sticky looking wedges on each, and put them in front of Shampoo and Ranma.

Ranma leaned back, eying the flaky confection suspiciously. Not that it didn't look anything but delicious, but… he was suffering from a profoundly unfamiliar condition.

He was full.

Stuffed, in fact. Food had been brought out from the kitchen all night in a steady stream, and it had finally overwhelmed even Ranma's considerably capacity.

"No more… please…" Ranma whimpered, holding up a hand in surrender.

"Two bites," she insisted. "You are skin and bones! You can forgive an old grandmother for wanting to feed all these poor starving children here. Is why we started this cafe, Pappou and I." She sighed at his continued reluctance and took the plates back. "Very well, I wrap it up for you when you go. Take some for your friends. Tell them about us so I can feed them too!" She got up again and headed once more into the kitchen.

Shampoo smirked. "Ya Ya not know what she accomplish. Fill bottomless pit!" She nudged Ranma's side.

"Oof, easy, I'm liable to pop…" Ranma grunted, though he smiled at her.

Pappou got a shifty look on his face. He glanced toward the kitchen, then reached behind him and pulled out a large clear bottle and two shot glasses.

"Ya Ya, she does not think you are old enough, but a little ouzo never hurt anyone," he said with a chuckle. "Come, come, you are a man now, you should have a man's drink!"

Shampoo held up her hand and shook her head with the expression of someone who had been through this experience before. "Shampoo think this should be Airen's experience, yes?"

Pappou poured the two glasses, handing one to Ranma. The liquid was clear and chilled to the point that ice crystals were forming on the surface.

Ranma sniffed the liquor and immediately regretted it. It smelled strongly of black licorice and burned his eyes. He blinked and jerked his head back as Pappou laughed merrily.

Not willing to surrender, Ranma took a deep breath. I've downed the worst cooking Akane could throw at me... this is nothing. He looked at the shot glass one last time, held it up in mock salute and then downed it in one gulp.

It very nearly came right back up.

He doubled over coughing. Pappou laughed harder and clapped him on the back as he tried to recover.

"Pappou!" Ya Ya huffed as she came out of the kitchen. "You and your ouzo!"

"Better than sake!" he shot back. "No bite, like watered down vinegar!"

"Die bu qi, Airen," Shampoo said sheepishly, rubbing Ranma's back.

"Nah... cough it's... it's actually not that bad..." Ranma wheezed hoarsely. "... I've had worse."

"There, you see?" Pappou said. "He likes it!" He clapped Ranma on the back. "You come back next time, we drink more ouzo. Make a proper man of you for our Kopelia!"

"Oh leave him alone, Pappou!" Ya Ya admonished him, swatting him on the back. She held out a large tupperware container to Shampoo. "I taped my spanakopita recipe to the lid. Easy, easy recipe! Your friends will say it is the best in all of Japan, you'll see!" She made a sour face. "Not that there's much competition!"

Shampoo bowed as she accepted it. "Thank you, Ya Ya."

"Oh pish, always with the bowing," Ya Ya scoffed. "Too formal!" She reached out and pinched Shampoo's cheek. "You come back soon, bring Ranma, and I'll have more for you."

000

The walk home was quiet contentment, the chill of the night air offset by their shared warmth and the residual fire of the ouzo. Ranma carried the tupperware container under his arm as Shampoo leaned against his other side.

"You have the coolest Greek Grandparents, Shampoo," he said finally.

She giggled and sighed. "Good. Now whole family meet Ranma, approve of Airen."

"It's weird how different families are," Ranma said softly as they walked. "You're gonna hafta tell Cologne about them sooner or later."

"Shampoo know," Shampoo said. "Always a little nervous, though. Shampoo know how much her visits mean to Pappou and Ya Ya, but afraid Great grandmother not approve. Not Greek Amazons, after all."

"If Cologne can put up with me, I doubt Pappou and his ouzo will faze her," Ranma said with a wink.

She giggled again. "Think maybe ouzo go to Airen's head?" She rested her head on his shoulder. "Not mind, though. Nice to see Airen relaxed."

They reached the Nekohanten. The restaurant was closed and Cologne was sitting outside on a stool, smoking her pipe.

"Have a nice night out, kids?" she asked, a smile stretching the wrinkled skin of her face.

"Best night," Shampoo sighed happily.

Cologne chuckled. "I'll believe that when I hear about the first of my great great grandchildren!" She waved her pipe towards the restaurant. "Nabiki is upstairs, licking her wounds after her training. You should go give her some encouragement, you two."

"I…" Ranma suddenly became nervous. Something told him that this was the point where things would stop being simple. If he went inside... "M-maybe I should head back to the dojo…"

Shampoo tightened her grip on his arm. "Airen not be silly. Planned to stay over, yes? Nabiki be upset if you leave now." She started dragging him into the restaurant.

He didn't resist but he was getting increasingly uncomfortable as that sensation of approaching a point of no return increased. She lead him up the stairs to the apartment above the restaurant and towards her room.

He closed his eyes and took a deep breath. Stop being paranoid, Ranma. It's not even like you haven't slept in the same bed with Nabiki before, much less the same room! This isn't gonna be any different. He reached out and opened the door himself, then stepped into the room. "Hey, Nabiki, heard you had a rough day…"

Three things happened all at once.

First, he heard the door close with a very deliberate click and Shampoo released his arm to slip behind him and plant herself between him and the door.

Second, he realized what Nabiki was wearing (what little there was of it) and that she was strategically positioned in front of the window - which was closed and undoubtedly locked.

Thirdly, he realized that yes… yes it was going to be different this time.

Nabiki was wearing a black lace bra and panties with a sheer, negligee overtop. The light from the lamp behind her outlined perfectly the curves of her body through the translucent fabric and gave the impression that she was wearing nothing at all under it. She had that smile on her face, too - the one he had become acquainted with during that beach weekend - the one that elicited certain expectations.

"Nabiki! Hi!" he said nervously. He took a step back but bumped immediately into Shampoo.

"Airen not run this time," she purred softly in his ear. She wrapped her arms around his waist in a gentle but firm hug that promised to quickly become inescapable if he tried to bolt.

His eyes widened in fear as Nabiki stood smoothly and sauntered gracefully towards him.

It wasn't that he didn't find the situation arousing. In fact he had never wanted so much to just give up at any point in his life! But… this had always gone badly in the past. It was always too good to be true, or had strings attached that he simply couldn't cope with. It would change things! He squeezed his eyes shut and looked away. "I don't think I'm ready for this!"

"Ranma…" Nabiki said softly. "Open your eyes."

He did, then immediately closed them again even more tightly. She had let the nightie slip from her shoulders and she was so very close... He could feel Shampoo pressed up against his back, and the image that haunted him was of her wearing his shirt and nothing else and giving him the same look that Nabiki now wore. He would have run for it already but he couldn't figure out how to get away without hurting one or both of them.

A hand brushed his cheek gently. He gasped, eyes snapping open again.

"Ranma, calm down," Nabiki smiled warmly at him and this time it was a gentler smile one of understanding. Her look had softened. "It's just us, Ranma. We're not going to do anything bad. We just want to be with you tonight."

"That is bad though!" Ranma said, taking a shuddering breath. "It-it'll change things!"

"Yeah… it will," Nabiki said softly. She slid her arms around his neck, her body pressing up against him. Shampoo tightened her hold on him from behind and he whimpered through gritted teeth.

"Things change all the time, Ranma. It's not a bad thing," Nabiki all but whispered. "I know you're afraid… because you've had it driven home that this is something that will change your whole life forever, right? You're afraid that if you do this, you'll lose control."

He took another shuddering breath and nodded.

Nabiki chuckled warmly. He couldn't look away from her eyes now - luminous brown pools that held him trapped in their depths. "And here I thought that if you had a random weekend fling with a stranger it would solve all your problems," she said ruefully. She started to toy gently with his pigtail. "Ranma… it's us."

"Airen have reason to be afraid," Shampoo said softly, hooking her chin over his shoulder. "Shampoo betray trust, over and over. Magic potion, hypnotic mushrooms, magic string…" She hugged a little tighter.

"N-no, that's not…" Ranma said, though he felt a stab of guilt as he realized that she was right, and that it was part of it. "L-look, I just…" He closed his eyes. "I… I know you're expecting something from me… and… I… I want to…" He struggled a bit as he forced himself to face an old fear. "But… I don't… I don't know what to do. I don't know how it works. I don't…"

"You're afraid you'll disappoint us?" Nabiki asked quietly.

He let out the breath he had been holding. His shameful secret was out in the open. "How pathetic is that, huh? I'm half girl, and I still don't know how… how to…" he closed his eyes, "... how to be a man… you know?"

"Ranma… no one knows this stuff their first time," Nabiki said gently. "Nobody."

"Y-yeah, but…" he protested weakly.

Through some unspoken communication, Nabiki relaxed her hold on him as Shampoo took hold of his shoulders and turned him to face her. She reached up to cup his face in her hands.

"Ranma..." she asked softly. "Do you love us?"

Ranma's eyes widened a bit. The question still scared him, because it was another of those things that would Change Everything. But his resistance to this one had already been worn down by considerably more. He swallowed and looked into her eyes. "Wo ai ni," he whispered, finally saying the words.

She smiled. "We love you. We just want to be with you," She stroked his cheek. "Want to show you how... say that with your body, not just words. Not have to do more."

"Think of it like learning a new kata for the first time," Nabiki murmured in his ear.

He chuckled weakly. "Somehow I don't think most people's first time is a threesome... Kind of an advanced kata for a beginner, right?"

Nabiki took his right hand and Shampoo took his left. The girls turned him once more towards the bed and led him to it.

"You learn fast," Nabiki said and pulled him down with her.

000 (Chapter 20 end)

Where did the popcorn come from? It was the most cynical thing I could imagine Yuka eating at that moment. Therefore she MUST have some. Because she is Yuka. It's one of those Quantum Physics things.

Some people have noted Ryouga hasn't seen Ranma as a male since this whole mess began. This will be a long term plot point. I am QUITE aware of the double standard that currently exists in Ranma's relationships, and I plan to address it.

duì bu qí - I'm sorry

Kopelia or Kopelia mou - (Girl, or My girl) Affectionate term used by adults to address a younger female, even ones who are themselves adults.
Morning seemed surprisingly ordinary. Almost disappointingly so.

Ranma lay in bed, staring at the ceiling with his hands folded behind his head. Shampoo's long lavender tresses cascaded across his chest, her head nestled up under his chin and her body snuggled against his left side. Nabiki had retreated under the covers on his right, curled into a ball with her back against his side, squeezed once more into that surprisingly small shape she seemed to sleep in sometimes.

He had woken up nearly an hour ago. He hadn't wanted to disturb the girls, so he'd been left in silence, alone with his thoughts. Mentally, he replayed the night he had just had - it hadn't been what he had expected in so many ways.

The expectation was that losing his virginity would be some sort of magical transformation. He would start the night as a boy, end it as a man, and everything would be different. That part had definitely not happened. There had been no startling revelation, no sudden clarity, no magical maturity or newfound confidence. He didn't feel any different, other than an odd sheepishness that he had been so apprehensive about it all.

He closed his eyes. It had been wonderful, but in ways he hadn't thought of. It hadn't been as alien or incomprehensible as all the buildup had made it seem. At first he'd been terrified and self-conscious, but… after a while he realized it was just them - the girls who already knew all of his darkest secrets and his deepest shames. For all his fears, he learned he really had nothing left to hide from them. The night had evolved slowly from his expectations of some grim test of performance into a game - they were showing him a new way to play with them and a way to be close to them that he now realized had terrified him, irrationally and for no good reason.

Then they had blown his mind.

Something about the combination of Shampoo's enthusiasm and Nabiki's almost maddening capacity to tease and entice had kept them going most of the night. He was certain he would be stiff and walking funny that day but, paradoxically, he had never felt better in his life.

Shampoo stirred and he slipped his arm around her. She mumbled something unintelligible and snuggled in closer. He trailed his fingers through her hair… for the first time he had a glimpse of what life might be like on the other side of all the strife and chaos.

We're DEFINITELY going to need a bigger bed, he thought wryly.

He glanced at the alarm clock next to the bed. It was starting to get close to time to be up, and as much as he would have liked to snuggle longer, he was starting to feel a little restless. He decided that Shampoo was probably the safer of the two to rouse and shook her gently. "Hey, Shampoo…"

"Nnnn.." she protested, squeezing her eyes tighter shut and muttering something in Mandarin.

"You're gonna have to wake up enough to repeat that in Japanese," he said teasingly.

"Mnnh… Airen mean… too early for Japanese," Shampoo mumbled sleepily. She did, however, crack open one eye and look up at him. A smile spread across her face as she woke up enough to realize that he was really there, rather than the usual fading dream. "... Hi."
"Hi," he smiled back at her. Right then, with the morning light coming in through the window, her hair a dishevelled mess and a sleepy, guileless smile on her face, she was the most beautiful thing he had ever seen.

"Stay in bed today?" Shampoo asked plaintively, resting her chin on his chest. From her expression, he could tell that she already knew what the answer was.

"Sorry. Can't miss any more school or the Principal will mess things up for me," he said, though he felt a pang of regret. "Once I've won the challenge, though... We've got time, right?"

She smiled again and closed her eyes. "Mmmm... yes..." she mumbled softly.

Ranma decided to risk the second part of things and lifted the blanket on his right side, revealing a tousled mop of brown hair. "Hey, Nabiki...?"

"Come back with caffeine," she growled, pulling the blanket back over her head and curling up tighter.

"Aheh... I love you?" he said tentatively.

There was a sigh from under the blanket and she uncurled a little. "That's not fair..." she mumbled.

"We'll get you some coffee, I promise," he said. "But we gotta get up if we want to get a shower in before school."

"Shampoo first," Shampoo said, sitting up in bed. The blanket fell away to reveal her in all of her nude glory as she stretched.

Ranma just watched, fascinated. Now that the initial self-consciousness about seeing her in close-proximity without her clothes was (mostly) gone, he tentatively allowed himself to admire her. He wondered if he was going to get little moments like this with the other girls as well, and was starting to agree with the other males at Furinkan about how unworthy he was.

Shampoo gave him a knowing smile and he blushed and looked away self-consciously before she gently turned his head back to face her.

"No. Look. Shampoo like how Airen look at her." She leaned over and kissed his nose. "Would invite to wash with, but... definitely be late then." She slipped slowly out of the bed. "No let Pintou fall back asleep, okay?"

"I won't." Ranma watched her go. He could feel Nabiki moving next to him, so he didn't have much worry about her going back to sleep, though instead of rising, she seemed to be burrowing further under the covers. "Hey, Nabs? You gonna come out and talk?"

There was no immediate answer, but he felt her squirming deeper.

"Hey, you can't escape morning that way," he said, lifting the edge of the blanket again. "Nabs, you..."

He suddenly went very quiet, his eyes widening. Nabiki hadn't been trying to evade getting up after all. And she had apparently found something to do with her mouth besides talking.

000

"So what is this stuff called?" Akane asked, chewing a mouthful of pastry thoughtfully.
"Baklava," Shampoo said, holding the tupperware container as the entire group sampled the dessert.

"And they were just giving it away?" Riko asked. She took a bite, and then made a small noise of pleasure. "It's so good!"

"They kinda adopted Shampoo as their unofficial grandkid," Ranma said. As predicted, she was walking a bit stiffly. Her legs felt a little weak and rubbery, especially after Nabiki's insistence on a 'morning quickie'.

"Oh yes, Shampoo is living a sordid double life," Nabiki teased. Unlike Ranma, she was practically bouncy, which was unusual enough for Nabiki. She definitely had a glow about her that left little doubt as to what had gotten her so perky.

"Still, an authentic Greek café would be worth checking out," Sayuri said around her own mouthful. "Especially if all of it is this good!"

Ryouga walked along slightly behind the group, chewing on weighty thoughts as well as his piece of baklava.

It was pretty obvious from how they were acting that Ranma's date with Shampoo had gone well, and that, at some point, Nabiki had joined in on the ride. Against all odds, it had worked. Ryouga felt a sting of jealous resentment at that. I travel across half of Asia trying to deal with my feelings for ONE girl and he goes on a date at a museum and gets TWO - and has the girl who broke my heart waiting happily in the wings to be with him next. He glanced at Akane and felt a brief flare of the old torch that, despite its cooling, he yet carried for her.

His gaze shifted, inevitably coming to rest on the redhead who was at the center of all this - the person on whom he could so easily have pinned his resentment on in the past - and he couldn't do it. He felt another emotion stirring as he watched her laugh and smile, the way the light played on her hair and drew out the highlights and subtler shades of red. It was easy to understand why someone would go so far just to be with someone like her...

His gaze dropped to the sidewalk again and he grit his teeth.

It was easy to resent the cardboard cutout - that was what it had been for after all. But now? The images of the boy he had resented so deeply for so long and of the girl who had become more important to him than he could readily admit just wouldn't reconcile in his head.

When was the last time he had seen Ranma's guy side, for that matter?

That's what I should do, he thought. Get Ranma to change so I can remind myself of who he is and stop this getting so… so ABSTRACT. He nodded resolutely. Just need a dose of reality to snap me out of this.

He looked up, opened his mouth to call out to Ranma and make the suggestion to hang out together as a couple of guys, maybe even spar…

… And realized he had no clue where he was. The group was nowhere to be seen and there was nothing to give him any clues as to which way they had gone.

"Awwww, crap…"

"You should know better than to wander off like that, Ryo," a familiar voice said from his left. He turned to see Ranma hop off of a nearby fence and walk toward him with a smug look on her face.
He blushed and looked away. "I… was thinking," he muttered. It was true enough.

"You're brooding," She walked up to him, hands clasped behind her back. "By the time I noticed you'd wandered off you'd got pretty far. Luckily, you're easier to find when you're gloomy."

"I am?" Ryouga glanced behind him, checking to see if he had walked through any walls or destroyed anything while he had been pondering so absent-mindedly, but there was no evidence of obvious damage. After a moment, he realized what she was talking about. "... you mean the link!?"

She nodded, scuffing her shoe on the ground as though mildly embarrassed. "It works both ways, right? I mean… I can't always tell, but… it gets stronger when you're emotional."

_(DOES it work both ways?) Ryouga pondered, not able to remember anything his parents had said or done that would confirm it one way or another. They had always been together until… He sighed and pushed that line of thought away. "It's nothing you need to worry about." He jammed his hands in his pockets and started walking, no longer really caring if he made it to school or not._

She came up beside him. Rather than stopping him, she took his arm and gently corrected his course… which meant they were now walking with her holding his arm. "I _do_ need to worry! It's upsetting you enough that I can feel it without even touchin' ya!"

Ryouga scowled. _Damnit, Ranma… "I'm not gonna blow myself up again."_

"That's not the point," Ranma said crossly. "Can't _always_ be about the extremes! This stuff sneaks up on ya, right? Besides, you've been helping me out. Just lemme return the favour, wouldja?"

Ryouga stared at her for a minute. It was getting hard to keep from seeing her for… for what _she_ was right now. Which was _cute_.

"You shouldn't hold onto my arm like that," he mumbled. "People will think we're in a relationship or something."

She blinked. She was _supposed_ to release his arm with an expression of disgust. He had been counting on it, in fact. Instead, she got this thoughtful expression on her face. She looked down at the sidewalk and, if anything, held onto his arm a little more tightly.

"I'm in a relationship with a lot of people," she said softly. "What's one more?"

Ryouga stopped dead, forcing Ranma to halt as well, despite her tugging on his arm.

"We're _not_ in a relationship," Ryouga stated firmly. It wasn't a vehement denial. There was an odd sense of calm in his words. He was reaffirming reality, nothing more.

"We're _kind_ of in a relationship," Ranma said quietly.

He gaped at her, eyes wide, as a whole slew of violently conflicting emotions temporarily locked up his brain.

"Anchor, remember?" She patted her chest. "You're kinda stuck with me."

"Oh." He felt an odd mix of relief and… _disappointment_? He brushed it off and resumed walking, keeping silent to avoid invoking any sort of clarification on that.

"... Were you thinking I'd say 'fiance'?" she asked, an impish smirk on her face.

Ryouga paused again but very quickly remembered the cover story they had given to the hospital which had then bled over to the school. Again, he felt a pang about that, though he wasn't sure what it really was. "I dunno," he mumbled. "I mean… that's the cover story, right?"

"Well… Someone has to look out for you until we find you a proper girlfriend," Ranma said.

Ryouga rolled his eyes. "Trust me, Ranma, after watching your little dramas unfolding day after day, romance is the furthest thing from my mind."

"So you haven't called Akari yet, have you?" she asked, glaring at him again. "I knew it!"

"I…" Ryouga realized that it had slipped his mind. Again. "I'll… I'll get to it."

"Honestly… are you gonna make me dial the phone for you?" Ranma huffed. "You should tell her about the stuff we're doing with the doctor to cure your directional problems. I mean… that was what caused the big problem in the first place, right?"

"I'd rather save that for when we actually make some progress," Ryouga sighed. "I wanna be able to give her something to prove that I'm gonna fix this. I don't wanna give her false hope."

Ranma rolled her eyes. "If you wait until you fix all of your issues before talking to her, she'll be dead of old age!" She considered a moment. "Well… you can take her on that date you talked out with me, then. That should be a good way to reconnect, right?" Ranma said, though her tone got unusually quiet. He glanced at her, and she was looking at the sidewalk, pensively.

Ryouga thought for a moment. "I'd… do something different for a date with her," he said finally.

"O-oh…" she said, still looking forward.

He thought he saw a slight smile on her face, a little color in her cheeks, a shift in her weight as she leaned on him just a touch more. Things he normally wouldn't notice, but was noticing now. Ryouga squeezed his eyes shut. You're going the WRONG WAY, Hibiki! Just cut off the nonsense now before it goes too far!

"I'll think of something better. That date was for Akane anyway," he said casually.

She looked up at him and scowled. "Oh," she said tersely and looked away.

Ryouga felt the shift in the air as the mood suddenly chilled and wasn't entirely sure why. But it broke the odd tension, so he let it be.

"You want any help?" she finally asked, surprising him. "Comin' up with ideas, I mean."

"No," he growled curtly.

"Oh…" Her pace slowed and her grip slackened. Disappointment.

He felt a stab of guilt and had to wrestle down the urge to amend it. He almost felt like laughing; here he was, feeling guilty about disappointing Ranma. A few weeks ago he'd still been trying to kill Ranma.

No I wasn't, he admitted. Let's face it, I never really was. I had lots of chances to do it. I didn't want to KILL her I… He glanced down at her, his expression softening. I just wanted her to understand how I felt… WHY I was so angry. Now she DOES understand… and I don't know what to do with it.

He sighed and resigned himself to his fate.
They walked quietly for a few more minutes. He could see the school gates now; the others must already be inside.

"Hey, Ryouga…" Ranma asked. "... How do you feel about apples?"

Ryouga gave her a quizzical look. "I… they're fine, I guess? Why do you ask?"

"Just… It's… nevermind, it was just a random thought," Ranma replied.

000

The day seemed to drag on endlessly for Ukyou. Mentally she ran through the checklist for the day, reassuring herself she had set out all the ingredients Konatsu would need. Tuesdays were generally slow so she didn't think the kunoichi would have much trouble and he certainly seemed eager to prove himself.

The teacher left the room briefly after telling the class to study. Ukyou pulled out the flyer she had been keeping in her bag, opened it up and sighed happily as she looked over the colorful artwork.

"Oooh, are you going to the carnival too, Ukyou-senpai?"

"Eeep!" Ukyou crumpled the flyer against her chest and nearly jumped out of her seat.

Rin blinked at her innocently and cocked her head.

Ukyou closed her eyes and took a deep breath to let her heart rate drop a bit. "You scared me, Rin!"

"Sorry…" Rin's face fell and the whipped puppy look she adopted made Ukyou feel bad… and gave her a powerful urge to pat Rin on the head.

"It's okay," Ukyou said, fending off the urge for the moment. "I just… the Carnival wasn't advertised in Nerima. I only found out about it because a customer left this flyer behind. I was hoping to keep it quiet so half the school doesn't end up going."

"Ooooooh… so are you going there on a date with Senpai?" Rin asked. Her eyes started to sparkle in that way that signaled a 'squee' was imminent.

"Yes, but it's a secret!" Ukyou hissed, glancing about to make sure no one else in the class had overheard - especially not the redhead currently wrestling with the lines of English phrases the teacher had assigned her as punishment. Then she remembered what Rin had said at first and raised an eyebrow. "Are you taking someone on a date there, Rin?"

Rin blushed a bright cherry red and waved her arms frantically. "N-no! I-I'm just going b-by myself!"

Ukyou could smell the blood in the water already, however. "Oh?" she asked, arching a skeptical eyebrow as she assumed a listening posture.

Rin squeaked, glanced about then pulled her chair from her desk and scooted closer. "I-I'm trying to find Mu Tsu's family," she said conspiratorially. "His circus family, I mean."

"You think that this is the same circus Mousse was travelling with?" Ukyou asked.

Rin shook her head. "No, b-but… they're a travelling carnival too, a-and if anyone would know where to start looking for a circus, it would be people from another circus, right?"
Ukyou couldn't find any fault with the logic, though she expected getting any useful information in locating a circus that none of them were likely to know anything about was a longshot at best. "Why is it so important to find them, sugar?"

Rin sighed. "I-it's… Mu Tsu just seems so lonely. A-and he seems to think that's the way it should be. The other Amazons are mean to him a-and I just thought it'd be nice if he could get back in touch with… with the family that accepted him." She squirmed a bit self consciously. "You won't tell him, will you?"

Ukyou shook her head. "Lips are sealed, don't worry. But… don't be too heartbroken if it doesn't work out, okay? Sometimes these things are more complicated than people let on and there might be many reasons he doesn't talk to them anymore."

"I-I know," Rin said. "But I want to try, at least!"

Ukyou grinned. "You really like him, don't you?"

Rin squirmed, blushing, and finally just nodded silently.

"Well, if you need any help…"

"O-oh no!" Rin shook her head. "I don't want to interfere with your date with Senpai! J-just don't tell Mu Tsu, please? I don't want to get his hopes up, o-or… or make him cross with me for meddling…"

"I won't," Ukyou said with a smile. "But we can take the train there together, at least?"

"You don't mind?" Rin asked hopefully.

Ukyou finally surrendered to her urge and patted Rin on the top of her head. "Never, sugar. You've been a good friend to Ranchan, so that makes you my friend."

Rin beamed at the pat and nodded. "Thank you!"

000

Nabiki handed over the bright pink flip phone somewhat reluctantly, her fingers twitching as she finally forced herself to release it. There was a lot of her budget wrapped up in an extremely destroyable package and she was placing it in the hands of one who might possibly be the most unsafe individual in all of Japan. "Ranma… this phone represents a lot of my remaining capital… please, if you ever loved me…"

Ranma blushed and sighed. "I'll take care of it, okay Nabiki?" she groused, taking it and flipping it open. "So… has it got any games on it?"

Nabiki snatched it back and snapped it closed. "Emergencies. Only," she growled. "And if you break it…" She sighed, shuddered and handed it back over. "... Don't break it."

"And… why's it got to be pink?" Ranma whined, looking it over.

"I don't want you liking it too much! If you want a manlier color, get a part time job and earn it yourself, like the rest of us!" Nabiki growled.

"Geez, Nabiki, it's just a stupid cheap phone," Yuka said.

"You don't have our repair bills to deal with," Akane muttered.
"You don't gotta worry none, Nabiki. I'll take good care of it." Ranma said as she tucked it into her pocket - or tried to. She missed on the first try, fumbled the phone and nearly dropped it, only managing to catch it at the last second. "... Aheh."

"So we ready to head out?" Ryouga asked. He rubbed the back of his head self-consciously.

"Just waiting on Rin," Ukyou said. "Rin wanted to shower and get changed. She's headed the same way as me'n Ranchan, so she thought she'd save herself a trip home and join us."

"She is?" Ranma said, raising an eyebrow.

"She's got some personal business," Ukyou said with a knowing smirk. "And that's all I'm at liberty to say."

"Ooh, does Rin have some deep, dark, personal secret?" Riko asked curiously.

Sayuri made a face. "Okay, I'm not having much luck reconciling the concept of 'Rin' with 'Deep, dark, personal secret'," she admitted.

"Yeah, me neither," Yuka said. "Please tell me she's going to go visit her Auntie or something so my brain can stop trying to eat itself over the mental image of Rin being secretive?"

Ukyou smirked. "Ask her yourself, sugar. Here she comes."

Rin had changed out of her school uniform into a simple blue skirt and a yellow blouse with a blue jacket. Her school bag was slung under her arm. She waved as she ran up to them, a little out of breath.

"Sorry to keep you waiting!" she panted.

Sayuri and Yuka exchanged a glance, then returned their attention to her.

"Well… you look…" Sayuri started.

"Who is he?" Yuka asked, cutting Sayuri off.

Rin scowled. "I'm not going on a date," she muttered. "I'm just going to the carnival and I wanted to look nice."

"The carnival is in town?" Riko asked, eyes widening.

"In Shinjuku," Rin replied. "They're in town for the whole week. It's just a small travelling carnival, so they didn't advertise much."

"We should check that out this weekend!" Riko said. "I love fair food!"

"Why didn't you tell us, Rin?" Sayuri asked.

The diminutive striker squirmed. "I-I… wasn't sure if it'd be any good… and… and we've got our game tomorrow… and… I… wanted to check it out before I told you, just in case it was terrible." She ducked her head.

Sayuri smiled. "That's actually really sweet of you, Rin." She reached out and tousled Rin's hair. "We'll look forward to your report!"

"Sample the food! I have high standards for funnel cakes!" Riko added.
Nabiki sighed. "All right, let's go. I don't wanna think what the dried up mummy will throw at me if I'm late."

"Should be more respectful, Pintou," Shampoo chided her. "Respect for elders and use of proper titles very important to Joketsuzoku."

Nabiki made a face. "Sorry. Honorable Elder Dried Up Mummy."

"Better."

They started walking. Ranma fell into step beside Ukyou.

"Aren't we going to the Carnival?" Ranma whispered.

Ukyou smirked. "Don't worry. Rin isn't going because of us. She has a mission of her own. It's nothing we need to worry about. I'm sworn to secrecy on the rest."

Ranma raised an eyebrow but didn't press the issue.

"You know, even if the Carnival doesn't pan out, we should all do something together this weekend," Riko said, walking backwards in front of the group. "We could go to Ueno Park or Tsutaya Electric Town…"

"If we're going shopping, somewhere less expensive please," Yuka said with a sigh. "I don't think my allowance would survive the temptation."

"We could also go to Fujikyu Highland."

"Too crowded," Sayuri made a face.

"Yoyogi Park?"

"Too laid back."

"Sumida Aquarium?"

"Ugh! Too 'Date Spot'-y."

"How would you know, Yuka?"

"Shut up, Daisuke!"

Ukyou smiled. "You know… I used to see big groups like this walking to and from school at my old high school," she said to Ranma. "I didn't used to see the appeal, but… It's kinda nice, isn't it?"

"You didn't at your old school?" Ranma asked.

Ukyou's face fell a bit. "There was one girl I used to walk with, at least as far as the bus stop," she sighed. "I'll tell you about her later. But for the most part I kept to myself. It… cut down on the awkwardness and on the chances of being found out. I kinda got… disdainful of the groups… I figured they were just herds. But when the rest of your school is insane, it's kinda refreshingly… normal, you know?"

Ranma rolled her eyes. "I dunno, I'm starting to learn that 'normal' people are either lying about being 'normal', or I've been misled about what 'normal' actually is."
"What was that, Ranma?" Yuka called back in a singsong voice.

"I said you're weird, Yuka!" Ranma shot back with a grin and no hesitation.

"Ha! Coming from you?! That's a COMPLIMENT!"

They continued on and dropped Ryouga off at his house. That had become the unofficial split up point for the group in the same way that the Tendo Dojo had become their gathering place in the mornings. Nabiki, Shampoo and Akane headed off toward the Nekohanten, while Sayuri and the rest of the volleyball team, save Rin, split up to head to their respective homes. Ranma went with Ryouga to greet his mother in the front yard and exchange pleasantries. Ukyou hung back, still a little unsure how to approach Ryouga's actual family.

Oh, hey Mrs. Hibiki. I'm Ukyou Kuonji! I occasionally try and fix your son up with the girl my fiance likes so I can split them up, and I occasionally leave spatula-shaped impressions in his skull! Also... she glanced down at herself and the boy's uniform she was wearing. I'm actually a girl!

Of course that didn't even begin to cover the current level of complexity, and she had no idea how much of that Ranma had prepared the woman for. Ukyou could see the sly glances Mrs. Hibiki was giving Ranma and Ryouga; the type that said she was humoring them while imagining good names for her future grandkids. It was a safe bet Ranma hadn't told Mrs. Hibiki much.

That's right, Ranchan said she doesn't even know about the curse. She thinks Ranchan is a girl. She had a momentary impulse to march over and introduce herself as Ranma's boyfriend but she figured that would only add more needless complication to the situation. At the very least, she thought she ought to run the idea past Ranma first.

Besides, poor Ryouga didn't really deserve more awkwardness. She imagined he must be squirming pretty badly as it was.

She watched them for a moment, thoughtfully. She knew Ryouga was terrible at processing his own feelings - not that it would be unusual in their emotionally stunted little group - but she could already see things he would never admit to in how close he stood to Ranma and the slightly protective stance he took with her. He alternated between sneaking glances at Ranma when he didn't think she was looking and trying, very intentionally, to look at anything but her. And now he kept slipping into the same flustered awkwardness he used to show around Akane.

Ukyou would be taking strips out of him if she hadn't gone through almost the exact same thing with Akane. As it was, she could almost narrate what was going on in his head.

Kind of ironic isn't it, Ryouga? she thought. We scheme and plot together to get you Akane and me Ranma... now here I am practically living with Akane and you're falling hard for Ranma. She felt a slight pang of guilt. Of course... I got Ranma too, didn't I? Even if I have to share her. You got left out in the cold.

Her gaze shifted over to Ranma. She considered a moment. She had never been any good at reading Ranma, but she could see differences. Ranma normally had a wariness to her stance, even when relaxed - a learned reflex from being in danger of coming under attack at almost any time. That wasn't there right now.

She trusts him. Not just to not attack her, but to protect her if she IS attacked. She feels safe enough around him to let her guard down, even with others around, Ukyou thought. Ranma isn't even that relaxed around KASUMI. Since when has Ranma trusted someone else to protect her?
She wondered if Akane and Nabiki were right and this thing was going both ways?

Whatever happened between them with that Shi shi Hokodan was powerful, that much is obvious. But... I guess it's not done yet? That would explain why he's avoiding Akari... His glass heart has been snatched up by a redhead who probably doesn't even know what she's done. She folded her arms, deep in thought. So what does that mean if Ranchan decides she wants to keep it? Another in the Harem? Would that even work? How do I feel about that? She glanced at Ryoga again. I mean... He OBVIOUSLY needs someone to take care of him or he's not going to make it past twenty, but... Akane will blow her stack. Nabiki will... well, she keeps threatening to take pictures but that doesn't give any idea how she'd REALLY deal with it. Shampoo would have fun with it of course. She blushed a bit as she briefly considered the hedonistic girl's reaction. That doesn't matter! How do I feel about it? She took a breath, closing her eyes and trying to focus. It'd... be WEIRD. Ryoga is like a brother to me. How do you share a spouse with a sibling?... Okay, okay, so Nabiki and Akane manage, but Akane is a giant ball of repressed sexual tension on the BEST of days, and Nabiki is the poster child for not giving a damn what anyone thinks...

"Ucchan? You home in there?" A hand waved across her face.

Ukyou started back a step, blinking. Ranma was peering up at her curiously.

"Whatcha thinkin' about so hard?" Ranma asked.

"I..." Ukyou blushed and shook her head. "Umm... nothing really serious. C'mon, let's get going. We want to get there before it gets dark, right?" She looked around. "Where's Rin?"

"She got hungry and said she'd go ahead so she could get an okonomiyaki for herself while she waited for us," Ranma said. "You were kinda zoned out a while."

Ukyou turned redder still and coughed. "Yeah, well... I can be introspective too, y'know..."

They started walking again. Ukyou jammed her hands in her pockets, her thoughts settling back on the whole thing with Ranma and Ryoga. She found herself studying Ranma's back as she walked ahead of her.

Ranchan's vamped guys before, but... she isn't cruel enough to mess with Ryoga right now, right? Not after going to those lengths to save him. So... something's shifted with her too. Ukyou pondered. Nabiki said she was attracted to him, but didn't think it would go further... but is that really all it is?

There was really only one way to know for sure. Ukyou quickened her pace a bit to draw even with the redhead.

"Hey... Ranchan..." she said a little timidly. "Can we talk?"

Ranma looked at her. "About what?" She seemed a little nervous.

"A lot has happened in the last little while..." Ukyou said. "... A lot, honestly. And... I haven't really had a chance to talk with you like we used to. I feel a bit out of the loop on what's going on with you."

Ranma gazed at her for a few moments, then looked away, considering. She kicked a pebble along the sidewalk as they walked. "Yeah... I guess there has been a lot."

"Are you okay?" Ukyou asked. "I mean, I already gave Ryoga the grilling over this, but... Is there more than you're telling us to what happened with you two? With the whole Shi shi Hokodan thing,
"What do you mean?" Ranma asked. She was already sounding on edge.

Ukyou sighed. "Ranma… Your whole paradigm shifted. Ryouga went from hating your guts to acting like… like you're Akane. And you're different too. I'm not being jealous and I promise not to get mad, no matter what you tell me. I'm not even saying it's bad! I just… I just want to know what's going on?"

Ranma was quiet for a bit as they walked, eyes downcast. She wet her lips, looking like she was trying to consider what she was going to say.

"Me'n Ryouga… after the Shi shi hokodan… We kinda came to an understandin'. Or… maybe I got an understandin' of just how much hurt there is in him, an'… I wasn't okay with just leaving it," Ranma said. "I had to decide between bein' his rival, an' maybe watchin' him kill himself one day try'n beat me… or be his friend and say that his life was more important to me than winnin'. So… I chose the latter. I found out just how much that lack of a sense of direction has actually cost him. So I convinced him to see a doctor about it, an'… we've been workin' towards a cure."

"And you got close through that?"

"W-well… tryin' to fix the curse has actually dipped into martial arts an' using Ki a lot," Ranma said carefully. "I've had to dig into some… some dark places in my own head to drive it. And… I dunno, something… popped. I nearly went into the Neko-ken over it. Ryouga talked me down, but… I think it jostled loose some stuff in my own head. Memories I forgot… or… feelings I forgot, rather. Like… like when I realized we weren't gonna go back to see you again back when we were kids. It… kinda compounded all of the stuff that's already goin' on."

Ukyou examined Ranma carefully. She reached over and lightly brushed her fingers through her hair, where she could see the effects of the styling she had gotten done while with Kodachi. "This is old, isn't it... Ryouga didn't cause this, he just popped the lid off… right?"

"I'm not sure," Ranma said softly. "But… I'm not the way I'm s'posed to be. I don't know why. It's not because of the curse, I don't think, but the curse makes it easier for it to come out. I kinda figured it out talking with Rin, about Yin and Yang. How most people are a mix, but usually a lot more of one than the other. But… I got too much Yin or… or not enough Yang or somethin'. It useda be it'd just come out as me actin' a bit more girly than necessary when I was in my girl form, but lately…" she chuckled bitterly. "Guess this is kinda how I realized I was never gonna be enough of a 'man amongst men' to satisfy Mom…"

"Because you wear a dress sometimes?" Ukyou asked.

Ranma squeezed her eyes closed. "B-because… because sometimes I'd rather wear the dress! Because… sometimes when I'm yelling at the top of my lungs 'I'm a guy!'… it feels like I'm lying." She looked at her hands. "Because I'm sick of being afraid of this part of me. Because sometimes bein' a guy doesn't make any more sense to me than bein' a girl."

Ukyou stepped in close and quickly pulled the redhead into a hug.

Ranma didn't resist, going limp against her. "Ryo… Ryo knows all this an'... an'... he was okay with it…" Ranma said, muffled against Ukyou's chest.

"No WONDER Ryouga was acting all protective of you! Ukyou thought. And since he already knows all of your deep dark secrets… you're relaxed around him. He's 'safe'. "Ranchan?" Ukyou Ranma was silent.

"That changed when I met you again..." Ukyou said fondly, smiling down at her. "But... there are still days when I just wanna... be a guy again. Not forever... I don't think I'd ever want to go so far as a curse or anything either. But... in my own head at least."

Ranma looked up at her, her eyes wide. "L-like... you forget a little bit that you're not a guy? Like... you know, but... but..."

Ukyou nodded.

"A-and... certain situations... or... or people... kinda push you one way or another?" Ranma continued.

"I think I just implied that you do that to me," Ukyou said with a smile.

Ranma shuddered. She closed her eyes and slumped against Ukyou. "Oh thank god... I thought I was the only one. I thought I was going crazy!"

"You know people like me or Konatsu or Jiro and yet you think that you're the only one?" Ukyou asked incredulously. She ran her fingers through Ranma's hair again and tightened arms around her. "So... where are you right now on the scale?" Ukyou asked.

Ranma was quiet.

Ukyou smirked. "I promise I'm not going to get mad."

"... Pretty... pretty deep into the girl side," Ranma said softly. "I was hopin' by the time we got to Ucchan's..."

"It doesn't always work that way," Ukyou replied with a soft chuckle. "Some days you have to fake it." She had a thought and considered it, surprised at how much the idea was appealing to her. Maybe Ranma's not the only one on the wrong side of the fence today? "Ranchan... do you feel like indulging me a little today?"

"Mnn?" Ranma blinked up at her. "Uhh... sure?"

Rin squealed in pleasure as she chewed, the piping hot, savory pancake practically melting in her mouth. She kicked her heels on the stool as she finished the morsel. "Ms. Konatsu, that's so good!"

Konatsu smiled and inclined her head slightly. 'I'm pleased you enjoy it, Ms. Rin. I'm afraid it's not quite to Lady Ukyou's standards yet, but…"

Rin shook her head. "Mnnn! I think Ms. Konatsu's are just as good!" she insisted. "You get so much flavor from so few toppings!"

Konatsu blushed and smiled. "I… have been frugal most of my life. But bland okonomiyaki don't sell and are a waste so… I've learned some tricks of my own to find a balance."

"Ukyou doesn't mind you changing the recipe?" Rin asked.

Konatsu smiled. "Lady Ukyou is very supportive. Once she was sure I had mastered the basic recipe she has been happy to let me experiment, so long as she is allowed to sample my attempts first to ensure they are of sufficient quality to serve the customers. It's not so different from serving tea. Temperature, balance of ingredients, time… they all play a part. I am blessed that she saw fit to share her family's art with me as well as to allow me the freedom to develop my own 'style'."

Rin nodded. "Dad was the same with Volleyball. He used to tell me that learning to hit the ball like he taught me to hit it was just the first step."

"I have heard Lady Ukyou speak on your prowess at the game," Konatsu said. "I understand your skills are quite impressive."

Rin blushed and ducked her head. "I'm… I'm still learning a lot. I really only do the one thing really well…"

The door slid open and Ukyou and Ranma stepped in. Rin turned on her stool and smiled. "You're here!"

"Sorry for the wait, Rin," Ukyou said. She turned to Konatsu. "Her order is on the house, okay Konatsu?"

Konatsu smiled and bowed. "Of course."

"We just need to get ready, Rin. I hope you don't mind waiting a little longer?" Ukyou continued. Ranma waved from behind Ukyou, a sheepish smile on her face.

Rin quirked an eyebrow. "Uh… sure, Ukyou-senpai. No problem."

Ukyou and Ranma both headed up the stairs. Rin watched them go, curiously.

"You seem concerned, Ms. Rin?" Konatsu said as she started scraping down the grill.

"Hmmm? Oh nothing bad," Rin said absently. "I've just never seen Ukyou-senpai be Yang with Senpai around her before. Except that one time, of course."

Konatsu blinked. "... Pardon?"

"Oh… sorry!" Rin said sheepishly. "I guess that didn't make sense, did it?" She resumed eating her okonomiyaki.

Konatsu regarded her curiously for a moment, then shrugged and went back to her cleanup.

A short while later, footsteps could be heard on the stairs. Rin looked up again, wondering about what sort of transformation she would see. Senpai was always fascinating with how she could shift and change from moment to moment.
She was a bit surprised to see Ranma come back down in female form. She had unbound her hair and brushed it out, letting it fall across her shoulders. She had applied a little light makeup - just enough to accentuate her eyes - and was wearing a short red jacket over a grey v-neck shirt and a pair of denim shorts over black leggings. It was very cute without being overly 'girly'.

"S-senpai…" Rin said. She blinked and shook herself out of her shock. "Wow! You look good! B-but… I thought you were going on a date with…"

She cut off as a second figure came down the stairs behind Ranma. He wore a pair of dark slacks, crisply pressed, and a white button-down shirt with the sleeves rolled up almost to his elbows. He had a blazer-style jacket slung over his shoulder and a cocky grin. His long brown hair was tied to fall down his back in a low ponytail.

It took Rin a second to realize that this was Ukyou.

She blushed and looked away but turned back to look again. She felt self-conscious for staring, but was unable to help herself. Ukyou often dressed as a boy when at school, but Rin had never seen her put this much effort into it before. The presentation was perfect. The cut of her clothing somehow made Ukyou seem taller and more broad-chested than she was and showed not a hint of her usual curves. The change to her hairstyle was calculated to frame her face differently and make it seem more angular and masculine and the way she now carried herself was purely and confidently male.

"Oh my…" Konatsu said, wearing a similar blush to Rin's.

Ukyou winked. "Whatcha think?" Even her tone and style of speaking had changed.

"It's amazing!" Rin said, hopping off her stool to walk over for a closer look. "You're so handsome, Ukyou-senpai!"

"I wouldn't be able to tell…” Konatsu said, wide-eyed. "And… I have some experience with this! I've never seen you undergo such a… a remarkable transformation, La..." She closed her eyes with a smile and bowed. "Lord Ukyou."

Ukyou rolled her eyes. "Don't start with that, Konatsu." She was smiling at the compliment nevertheless. "I haven't tried this hard since I came to Nerima. Ranchan and I thought it might be fun to have a role-reversal date tonight."

Rin giggled. "That does sound like fun! Though… I don't think anyone but the two of you could pull it off. Not like this!"

Ranma gave Rin a knowing smile, stepping back to lean against Ukyou a little. Ukyou put a hand on her shoulder and smiled down at her. "I think you're right Rin. We're a pretty well matched set."

They looked like a completely normal boy-girl couple. The illusion was amazing.

"We should get going," Ukyou said. "You got everything you need, Konatsu?"

Konatsu smiled and waved them off. "Please go enjoy yourselves. It's a slow night and I am fine."

"Oh, wait!" Ranma fished her new neon pink phone from her pocket. "I know Nabiki said this was just for emergencies but… using the camera on this thing doesn't use minutes, right?" She flipped it open, puzzling over the buttons and menus.

"Not if you don't send it." Rin leaned over, gently taking the phone and selecting the camera.
"Here, let me." She stepped back and held it up as Ranma and Ukyou posed.

"Nabiki wanted pics if I went on a date with a guy. She should get a kick outta this," Ranma said with a smirk. She smiled prettily as Rin snapped a couple of pictures.

Rin examined the last one on the tiny screen and nodded, satisfied it would do. "Send me a copy later, okay? Oh! I should get your number!" She pulled out her own phone.

Ranma came over and leaned over her shoulder, watching Rin as she manipulated the address book on both phones. "Wow… you're fast with that. I barely know how to dial it!"

"You learn if you use it," Rin said. "It's not that hard… here, watch, each keypress can be a number of characters depending on how many times you press it. If you pause a second, it moves onto the next character…"

Ukyou checked her watch. "Oh, crap, the next train is coming any minute! We'd better hustle - it'll be half an hour until the next one!"

Rin scrambled to finish punching in the numbers and put her own phone back into her pocket. The redhead was grabbing something from under the counter, so she put the pink phone on top of the counter for her and gathered up her own things.

Rin followed behind the couple as the three of them set out. Ranma was munching an apple she had swiped from Ukyou's ingredients box, though she was making an effort to eat much more daintily than normal, even offering a bite to Ukyou as they walked. Rin could see right off that some of it was for show, with Ukyou playing the part of the attentive boyfriend while Ranma was amping up the girlyness a bit. But as they got onto the train and the two started to relax, she could see the roles becoming more 'real'.

They really were an incredibly cute couple, she had to admit.

_I feel a little bad for Mr. Boyfriend-san_, she thought, as she sat across from them. _Though… if Senpai has more than one girlfriend, she can have more than one boyfriend too, right?_ She smiled, satisfied that it would all work out for the best somehow. People like Ranma were the sort who got happy endings after all, right?

Of course, that left her with her own problem. Deep down, she knew she was probably wasting her time. She wasn't clever like Nabiki or capable like Senpai or determined like Captain Sayuri. She wasn't even certain if finding Mu Tsu's circus would be something that would make him happy, or if he would be mad at her for meddling. But… this strange little world she had been allowed to see… with all of these martial artists and exceptional people… it was all so sad most of the time. And she couldn't really do anything about very much of it because it was about honor or magic or other things she didn't quite understand. This was at least something she could try and do.

"You're real quiet tonight, Rin," Ranma said. She got up from her seat and crossed the aisle to sit next to Rin.

Rin started a bit, then ducked her head in embarassment. "I-I'm sorry, Senpai. I'm not being very good company."

"No, no, it's okay," Ranma smiled. "Just checkin' up on my junior to make sure she's okay, right?"

Rin nodded then looked at her hands. After a minute, she spoke again. "What do you think of Mu Tsu, Senpai?"
Ranma blinked. "Mousse? Well, he's obsessive, blind in a literal and figurative sense, obsessive, violent, dumb, obsessive, and a half-decent fighter when he doesn't get distracted by something he thinks is Shampoo. Also he's obsessive. So… a pretty normal guy for the people in my life."

"Hey," Ukyou growled. "Some of us resemble that remark."

"Aww, you know you don't count in that Ucchan!" Ranma said nervously.

Rin sighed. "I mean… beyond that. Beyond the martial arts stuff. Don't you… talk with him, Senpai? Hang out? Do things together? Talk about plans for the future or anything?"

Ranma cocked her head as if confused. "No. Why?"

Ukyou rolled her eyes and got up to sit down next to Ranma again. "Nabiki is right; you really are feral, Ranchan."

Ranma shrugged. "I mean, the guy literally tries to kill me whenever he imagines I make a pass at his beloved Shampoo. Or when he thinks I didn't, therefore slighting her by paying attention to someone else. Or… y'know, thinks that I breathed wrong in her presence. That's the sort of thing that makes it hard to pal around with someone, you know?"

Rin cocked her head. "But you get along fine with Mr. Boyfriend-san."

Ukyou snarked at the name Rin had given Ryouga. Ranma blushed and ducked her head. "Ryo is… different."

Ukyou put an arm around Ranma, hugged her and kissed the top of her head. "Yeah, we've noticed 'Ryo' is different, Ranchan."

Ranma squirmed uncomfortably at the implication Ukyou was making and quickly changed the topic back. "It's not like I singled Mousse out… I mean, he's not bad, and he and I have teamed up a few times, but…" Ranma shrugged. "The Shampoo thing is kinda a deal breaker for him."

"Mnnn…" Rin sighed and slumped a little, nodding.

"Well… maybe if someone were to come along to take his mind off Shampoo…" Ukyou said.

Rin blinked and looked at Ukyou, cocking her head. "Y-you mean like another Amazon girl? O-or maybe a martial artist from Japan?"

Ukyou and Ranma just gaped at her.

"No, youdummy! You!" Ranma said, poking Rin in the forehead. "You like the big blind idiot, right? That's why you're trying to find his circus for him?"

"Eeee…" Rin blushed and shrank back. "I-I do… But… I'm not doing this to try and make him like me. She sighed and smiled sadly, looking away. "Mu Tsu wants… he wants someone incredible. Like him. That's why he likes Shampoo. I-I'm sure someday he'll find someone like that again, even if he doesn't believe it. But… in the meantime he shouldn't be miserable and alone. He has a family out there that cares about him, I'm sure of it, and… and I want to help him find them again. So at least he knows he has someplace to go."

"Rin…" Ranma said softly.

"Mu Tsu is a nice dream for someone like me to have…" Rin said. "B-but… that's all he is. He's meant to be with someone who can fly like he can. B-but… I still want to be his friend. I want to see him smile more, even if it's because I'm selfish. I wanna see all of you smile, really. S-so… I'm just doing this because it's what I can do right now." She looked down at her hands, clasped in her lap. "I know I'm being silly and this probably won't do anything, but… it makes me feel better."

Ukyou and Ranma exchanged a wordless glance and were silent for the rest of the train ride.

000

"Um… hello?"

Konatsu looked up from her cleaning to see a familiar young man in white robes enter. The light glinted off his thick spectacles.

"Oh, forgive me, Mu Tsu!" Konatsu said, covering his mouth in a ladylike manner.

"I apologize if you're closed… I didn't see any sign…" Mousse said sheepishly. "But then… well."

"No, no, we're quite open!" Konatsu insisted. "It's simply been slow, and so I've been doing some chores." He busied himself getting his ingredients prepared and heating up the grill. "What would you like? Your usual?"

"Please." Mousse sat on one of the stools and folded his hands into the sleeves of his robe.

"You usually come around for a lunch special. What brings you out this late?" Konatsu asked. Mousse was actually one of his regulars - one of the few that typically always came when Ukyou was at school.

Mousse sighed. He pushed his glasses up on top of his head and rubbed the bridge of his nose. "Being at the Nekohanten as of late has been… challenging."

Konatsu tested the grill with a few drops of water. Satisfied the heat was correct, he poured the batter. "The 'sisterly bonding' thing again?" He knew some of what was going on from Ukyou, and more still from Mousse himself, who had been coming in rather haggard and sleep-deprived lately.

"Shampoo seems to delight in rubbing it in my face," Mousse said dejectedly. "And Cologne seems to delight in forcing me to endure it."

"Ms. Shampoo does seem to lack a certain… discretion," Konatsu admitted, having been subjected to similar sleepless nights himself. He was already well resigned to his lady never choosing - or even considering - him, but it was still rather mortifying.

"She doesn't need discretion," Mousse said bitterly. "She has everything she's ever wanted - her 'Airen'... sisters who are as skilled as any Amazon with which to snub her peers back home and the freedom to do as she pleases. She has no need of me anymore."

Konatsu nodded and silently set the plate in front of him. "Yet you stay," he said finally.

Mousse broke apart his chopsticks and paused, contemplating his okonomiyaki. "Please don't take this the wrong way… but you couldn't possibly understand."

Konatsu raised an eyebrow, folding his arms across his chest. "Because I have accepted that Lady Ukyou will not return my feelings as I might wish she would?"

"Because you can accept that," Mousse replied as he broke his okonomiyaki into sections. "You have only known Ukyou for a year at most. I believe? You had a life before her, no matter how wretched, and you will have a life after her." He picked up a piece of okonomiyaki and studied it, squinting. "I have known Shampoo my entire life. I have spent my entire life trying to be someone Shampoo would want. I made a foolish mistake when I was a child that pushed her away and I have spent every single day after that trying to rectify it. Everything that I do, everything I have learned, everything that I am is towards that end. I do not have anything else." He popped the morsel into his mouth and chewed.

Konatsu had heard this speech before - several times, in fact. Most of Mousse's conversation tended to revolve around Shampoo and his inability to win her, or rage over Ranma's perceived mistreatment of her.

A smirk crossed the kunoichi's features. Except once.

Konatsu folded his hands behind his back and leaned over a bit, as he had seen Jiro do. Konatsu had always greatly admired the older man's talent for slicing to the heart of a dilemma with only a few words. Konatsu could not hope to achieve such precision, but imitating Jiro's style felt right. "So! Out of curiosity… how did watching the sunset with Ms. Rin make you a better match for Shampoo?"

Mousse froze then started coughing, choking on his half-chewed bite.

"Oh dear… I did it too soon. It ruins the effect if they choke to death!" Konatsu quickly fetched him a glass of water, which he snatched and guzzled greedily to force the errant morsel down his throat.

"That… that had nothing to do with Shampoo!" Mousse finally managed to gasp, thumping his chest to get the oversized bite down.

"My apologies. I merely assumed since you said everything you do is to that end..." Konatsu cocked his head. "So what was the purpose of that, then?"

Mousse gave him a sour look. "Must everything have a purpose? It was simply… impulse." He snagged another bit with his chopsticks and started chewing angrily.

'Mustn't push too hard', Master Jiro would say. 'Plant the seed of the realization and let them come to it on their own.' "As you say, then," Konatsu said with a smile. He set to work wiping down the counter when he noticed something laying on it. It was a neon pink flip phone that had been left sitting right at the counter's edge.

'That must be Rin's! She must have left it when they were taking pictures!' Konatsu thought, remembering Rin holding the phone to snap a pic of Ranma and Ukyou. "Oh dear… I fear Ms. Rin has left her cell phone..."

Mousse froze again. "Rin was here?"

Konatsu nodded. "Oh yes! She drops by occasionally as well, after volleyball practise, usually to visit Lady Ukyou or Lady Akane. She was by tonight on her way to a carnival in a neighboring ward."

"Oh. She was going on a date, then?" Mousse asked carefully, pushing his glasses back down over his eyes.

Konatsu raised an eyebrow. Mousse hated wearing his glasses because he preferred people to be able to see his eyes, since they often mistook him for stoic or unemotional with the glasses hiding them. He tended to put them down intentionally when he wished to hide his emotions. "No, I believe she was going alone. I believe she was going to see if it was worth a trip for her friends to go there later in the week."

"And where is the carnival?" Mousse continued to feign only moderate interest.

"In Shinjuku. Yoyogi Park, I believe?" Konatsu smiled. "I can ask Lady Ukyou to return the phone to her tomorrow at school."

Mousse sighed as he pushed his stool out from the counter and stood. "No… a young girl like her shouldn't be out at night alone and that far from home without a phone." He walked over and picked up the phone. "I'll go find her and return it."

Konatsu raised an eyebrow. "That is quite a bit out of your way, isn't it? Are you sure you want to go to that much trouble?"

"It's a martial artist's duty to protect the weak," Mousse quoted a well worn phrase. "Besides, with three cute waitresses working for her tonight, the Old Mummy won't need or want me at the Nekohanten. And I had wanted to get some fresh air anyway."

Konatsu smiled and nodded. "Very well. If I happen to see her first, I'll let her know you have it, then. I imagine she will be quite grateful to you to get it back."

Mousse paused. His glasses hid his face well, but Konatsu was sure he saw a slight blush on his cheeks. "I'm only doing what's right, after all," Mousse said gruffly. He tucked the phone into his sleeve and then placed a few coins on the counter. "Thank you for the food, Konatsu. I will see you again soon." He turned and walked out of the restaurant, hopped up onto a lamppost, and then leapt out of view towards the rooftops.

Konatsu watched him go with a smile and returned to his cleanup duties. Well now… I wonder how this might develop? he thought.

000

Rin parted ways with Ranma and Ukyou after they paid their admission to the fairgrounds and headed off towards the circus tent. After hearing a few distant roars from caged animals that were more than likely rather large felines, Ranma and Ukyou elected to start at the game stands.

The carnies had seen an attractive young couple and naturally played on Ukyou's male pride to entice them to the games - encouraging 'him' to win 'his' lady a prize.

Ranma seemed content to play along by turning on the charm, and, in spite of herself, Ukyou felt something resembling male pride being prickled. The games were all varying levels of rigged, of course, from merely deceptively difficult to basically physically impossible. But Ukyou had worked food stands at carnivals before and knew how this worked. She dropped a few comments at some of the more heavily rigged games to let them know she was on to them before winning them anyway. She was careful to not win too spectacularly, though, as she knew that would just be advertising for more 'marks'.

They still came away each carrying a huge stuffed animal on their backs, a bear in Ukyou's case, and an elephant in Ranma's. Ranma happily sampled several of the treats for which they had won vouchers. They had won other prizes as well, but had given most away to the crowd of kids who had come out to watch Ukyou play.

"It feels a little weird to have a bunch of boys say they wanna grow up to be just like me," Ukyou said with a chuckle.
"Why?" Ranma asked around a mouthful of cotton candy.

Ukyou shrugged. "Well..." she sighed. "I'm a fraud, aren't I? They admire me because they think I'm 'manly', but it's all bindings and carefully cut clothes and feathered eyebrows."

Ranma was thoughtful for a moment. "Y'know... I've sorta been wrestling with that myself a bit. A few days ago Sayuri said being a 'man amongst men' didn't mean I couldn't also be a 'woman amongst women'. I brushed it off as nonsense at the time, but..." She stepped a little closer and took Ukyou's arm, leaning on her a little for support. "I mean... everything they admire about you... your strength, your skill, your generosity, your sense of right and wrong when showin' up those crooked games... that's not fake. So... if that's 'manly', then you are manly. You're probably the manliest guy here. Doesn't matter what you are under your clothes."

"I am?" Ukyou raised an eyebrow. "You're willing to surrender the title to me that easily, sugar?"

Ranma just smiled and hugged Ukyou's arm more tightly. "Takin' the night off."

Ukyou snorted then examined the redhead a little more closely. "I guess this has been a bit rough for you, huh?"

Ranma was quiet for a moment.

Ukyou sensed that this was something important, so she guided Ranma gently toward a set of benches set off the main path where it would be quieter. She sat down with next to her and put an arm around her shoulders.

"Is it... is it supposed to be easier to be a girl?" she asked timidly, giving Ukyou a nervous look.

"... Easier?" Ukyou cocked her head curiously. "What, you mean because you can charm your way into someone winning you prizes by batton your baby blues at them?" She smirked and held up the bear.

"Ranma's face fell. "Well... I mean... yeah... yeah... I do that..." She sounded... ashamed, almost.

"Ranchan?" Ukyou's eyes widened.

"I'm... kinda strugglin', Ucchan," she said. She smoothed out her shorts unconsciously then glanced at the hand that had done it as if she hadn't really seen it before. With a sigh she leaned against Ukyou a little more as though she were tired and let her hand drop back to her lap. "I feel... like all of the stuff I used to rely on is kinda fallin' out from under me. I used to be so sure of what direction I needed to go most of the time."

Ukyou hugged the girl closer. She reached over with her other hand and ran her fingers lightly through Ranma's hair. "Feeling lost because of your parents?"

"That's part of it, I guess," she said. "But... most of it... Is... is this okay?" She looked up at Ukyou.

"Is what okay?"

"Me," Ranma said. She gestured at herself. "This. Being... being... unsure. I mean... is this all it takes? A year of a stupid curse? Or... Is... is this why Mom sent me away? Because I was always like this?"
Ukyou reached over and cupped Ranma's cheek. "Ranchan... I don't know, honestly. But I do know there's nothing wrong with you... or with the way you are... or with the way you were. And it certainly isn't your fault your Mom let your idiot father cart you off across Asia. Your parents are cracked."

"Yeah..." Ranma said. She closed her eyes and leaned into Ukyou's hand. "Are you okay with this, though?"

"That's a dumb question Ranchan, and you know it," Ukyou said with a smirk. She leaned in and kissed her on the lips gently. She slowly drew the smaller girl closer, sliding her arms around the redhead as she deepened the kiss.

Ukyou broke the kiss and smiled. "I am happy to be with you Ranchan. And I am going to marry you someday. It doesn't matter to me if I'm wearing a wedding dress or a tuxedo."

"Mnnn..." Ranma mumbled dreamily, opening her eyes slowly. "... you'd look sexy in a tux..."

"Damn right I would," Ukyou replied. "You be whatever you want to be whenever you want to be it, Ranchan. Anyone who really loves you will accept that."

Ranma slipped her arms around Ukyou's neck. "Thank you," she said softly. She looked into Ukyou's eyes as her fingers lightly caressed the nape of the chef's neck. "I love you too, Ucchan. Heh... I used to be so afraid of saying that to anyone."

"Gets easier with practise," Ukyou replied. "So... where should we go next?"

"Hmmm... Maybe peek in the tents? As long as there aren't any c-c-c-c... you know," Ranma said. "Oh... if we run into any old gypsy fortune tellers... or incense peddlers... or some joker selling ancient artifacts or love charms... or anything like that, we bail, okay?"

"Deal."

They stood, though Ranma kept close with an arm around Ukyou's waist and her head against her shoulder. Ukyou decided that she could definitely get used to that.

000

Rin peeked around the edge of the large circus tent, looking about to make sure there was no one to get mad at her.

She had found out quickly that most of the attendants working the ticket booths were local temps and most of the carnies at the games or rides were too busy to talk or didn't want to deal with her unless she was going to spend money at their game. She didn't have much money to waste so she wanted to leave that as a last resort.

She hoped that maybe she could catch a carnival worker on break who'd be willing to talk. It was usually the back stage folk who knew everything, right? Perhaps even a performer, or someone from one of the booths if she could catch them when they weren't busy.

Just as long as it wasn't a clown.

There was a section behind the tents where the trailers for the performers were parked, as well as equipment that she assumed wasn't in use. She stayed clear of the animal cages and tried to look for something that looked like a break area instead.
"Hey little missy, what are you doing back here?"

She squeaked and froze. Slowly she turned and looked over her shoulder.

He was tall. Freakishly so. His pants were purple with yellow polka dots. His jacket was a cacophony of color, stitched together almost randomly, and far too big for him. His face was pale greasepaint, with his eyes circled in dark brown, and his lips exaggerated in crimson. His hair was a veritable mop of multicolored curls.

"Eeeeeeeyyyyyyyyyyyyyeeeeeeyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyyy
He paused again, sighed, dropping his cigar and stubbing it out under his thick leather workboot. "Look, kid… I ain't averse to takin' a rube for a ride, but you seem like a good kid so I wouldn't feel right. So instead I'll give ya a little advice; Carnies protect their own. I don't know why you want to find this circus, but I can tell yas you ain't gonna find nothin' here but a lot o' piss in the wind. You ain't circus folk so we got no reason to tell you. We got enough creditors an' pissed off husbands, pregnant girls and snot-nosed brats lookin' afore their 'circus pappy'. Dunno which one you are, but…"

"Rin!"

Rin turned. Her eyes widened as Mousse landed lightly near the edge of the tent.

"Mu Tsu…?" she squeaked, starting to feel the panic rise.

"I almost didn't find you," Mousse said, walking towards her. "Luckily I heard your voice. Are you all right? You sounded afraid."

"Well… I'll be dipped," the man said, chuckling. "If it ain't the 'Dark Magician' hisself. Didn't think you'd have the balls to show yer mug around a place like this again, boy."

Mousse turned, homing in on the voice. He adjusted his glasses, squinting in the dim light. "Oh… uh, I'm sorry. Miss…?"

"It's Sadao, you blind git!" the man huffed.

"Sadao…?" Mousse cocked his head. Then, suddenly his eyes widened. "... Sadao!? Then this…?!"

"Yer not that lucky. Or that unlucky, I suppose," Sadao chuckled. "Different circus, though you should know that. Contracted out t'help this lot on their tour after their last Quartermaster got caught embezzlin'."

"You do know Mu Tsu's circus!" Rin said.

"Yeah, I know 'em. Been my family for twenty years," Sadao said. "And if I knew you were askin' on this twerp's behalf… I'da called security to come haul yer scrawny ass out! An' I still might! So git!" He shooed her, glaring angrily at Mousse.

"You always were charming with the ladies, Sadao," Mousse said dryly. He glanced at Rin. "What were you looking for?"

Rin blushed. "I… I…" She started twiddling her fingers.

Sadao raised an eyebrow, then chuckled. "Ahhh… You sly bastard, you did it again, huh? She probably thinks she's doin' ya a favor tryin' to find old Byungchul's tent." He pulled out a fresh cigar, tearing off the end with his teeth and spitting it out. "Guess you didn't tell her, eh? She know about your Amazon, or are you plannin' to sell this one out for your purple haired bint too?"

Mousse's eyes narrowed. "Sadao…"

Sadao lit the cigar and took a few puffs, unimpressed by Mousse's warning tone. "Ol' Mu Tsu here was Byungchul's heir apparent. Set to take over as Ringmaster. Even had a uniform done up for 'im."

A knife embedded itself in the ground at Sadao's feet.

"Sadao, stop talking," Mousse growled.

The portly man raised an eyebrow. He snickered and casually kicked the knife loose. "Or what, you'll skewer me? Go for it if you've got the certainly didn't have any when you walked out on Young Mi."

Mousse clenched his fists and looked away. "I didn't…! That was a misunderstanding!"

"Oh yeah?" Sadao chuckled. "You have many 'misunderstandings' that end up with you gettin' engaged, kid?"

"... Engaged?" Rin said softly, eyes widening.

Sadao laughed. "He didn't tell you, did he?" He walked over to Rin and clapped a hand on her shoulder, pointing his cigar at Mousse. "Yer lookin' at what should have been Mr. Young Mi. She was Byungchul's daughter. Pretty as a picture and loved this sorry sack o' crap more'n life itself. Time was we all thought he deserved it, too."

Mousse's shoulders sagged in defeat.

"He left her at the altar though," Sadao growled. "An' the shame o' it put her pappy in the ground."

"What?!", Sadao sneered. "You knew he was sick, same as the rest of us. The only thing keepin' him goin' was seeing his little girl in the center ring at last. Well… she did that much at least, an' she did it alone thanks to you."

Mousse looked stricken. He finally looked away, then turned and started to slowly walk off.

"I hope yer side girl was worth it, kid," Sadao said. "Though, I'm guessing if she was, you wouldn't a gone and charmed another one, wouldja? Get lost… you ain't welcome here, an' you never will be."

"Mu Tsu…" Rin stepped forward to follow him as he walked around the edge of the big top, but the hand on her shoulder tightened.

"Listen kid," Sadao said. "Last piece of advice… Forget about him. He ain't never, ever gonna let that Amazon of his go. To his credit, I think he tried… he really did, but he couldn't do it for a family that took him in and the love of the best girl in showbusiness. He ain't gonna do it now."

Rin paused then pulled her shoulder away. "He needs to do it for himself, then," she said quietly, and ran after Mousse.

The portly man shook his head. "Well… We'll see. In the meantime…" He pulled a phone out of his pocket, flipped it open and dialled a familiar number. "Hey sweetheart… yeah, things are goin' good in Shinjuku… listen, you're not gonna believe who I ran into…"

Ranma and Ukyou quickly ruled out the big top. The acrobatics going on inside honestly seemed a little tame by their standards, and there was a good chance the big cats they had heard before would make an appearance. However, the smaller satellite tents all had their own shows going on. After passing a few, they found one sign proclaiming the 'Jim Darkmagic Experience'.

"Hey, a magic show sounds fun. What do you think, Ranchan?" Ukyou asked.

Ranma peered at the placard. There was a lot of English on it, more than she could comfortably make out. "Sure, I guess?" At least magic sounded potentially interesting.

They went inside, finding seats near the front of the little stage that had been set up. After a few more minutes as the rest of the guests were settled, the lights were lowered. Colored spotlights began to play across the stage and slow, dramatic music started to play.

"Ooooh… atmospheric," Ukyou said appreciatively.

"The world is full of magic, my friends..." A voice came over the speakers positioned all around the room, seeming to change position as it spoke. "Dark, dangerous powers from a forgotten age that endure into the modern world in secret, long-forgotten places. Cursed, abandoned places not meant for mortals, and exacting a heavy price on those that meddle."

"Uhhh…" Ranma started to feel nervous. The narration reminded her entirely too much of Jusenkyo. "You… don't think this guy is for real, do you?"

"Fearlessly I have plumbed the depths of these strange places to draw forth wondrous secrets. Today, I will share but a fraction of these wonders with you. Allow me to be your guide to the world of the arcane."

There was a puff of smoke from the stage and a tall man stepped forth. He had dark hair that fell to shoulder length, slicked back to expose a high forehead and a chin strip beard, cropped close. His costume featured a dark purple cloak with a high collar. He held out his hands with a smile.

"I am James Christopher Darkmagic the Third, and I will be your guide. Tell me, Tokyo, are you ready to see some magic?"

The crowd roared its approval from the stands. Ukyou was getting into it as well but Ranma kept herself somewhat more reserved, deciding to wait and see what the guy was all about.

A pretty assistant wheeled out a cart in the background. Jim's smile broadened as he soaked in the attention, then he turned and reached for the first of the items on the cart. He selected a red-backed deck of cards.

"First… a simple card trick, perhaps. Or perhaps not so simple?" He flipped the cards deftly in his gloved fingers, shuffling the deck one-handed with flashy panache. "Cards may seem innocent enough but long have they been used as windows into the future. Even simple playing cards such as these are not without power. Come! A volunteer from the audience?" His eyes scanned the sea of faces and finally landed squarely on Ranma. A smile curled his lip.

Of course, Ranma thought sourly.

He reached out one hand towards her. "You, I think. I sense something very mystical about you, my dear. A touch of the fae, perhaps? Come, there's no need to be afraid."

Ranma blinked, wondering again if there might be something to this 'magician'. He couldn't be able to sense the curse, could he?
Ukyou elbowed her gently in the ribs. "Go on, Ranchan! Live a little!"

Ranma decided the best way to find out would be to play along. She took the magician's extended hand, rose from her seat and let him guide her up onto the stage.

"No worries, my friend," Jim gave Ukyou a wink. "I shall return your lady fair in but a moment." He turned his attention to Ranma. "Yes… something very potent in the aether surrounding you. Shall we part the veil together and peer into destiny?" He fanned out the deck of cards, offering them to her. "Pick one. Examine it, remember it. Keep it close."

Ranma nodded. She reached out and plucked a card from the ones offered. She looked at it, a skeptical expression crossing her face, but she hid it quickly and held the card close to her chest as instructed.

"Now, these may seem like ordinary cards…" Jim closed up the deck, flipping it over in his hands… and then suddenly was holding nothing. "... But they are special. Each card has a meaning, just as they do in a Tarot deck. Your card was drawn to you by destiny, dear, and by peering into that destiny, I shall name your card!" He turned, held out a hand towards Ranma and closed his eyes.

"Yes… yes… I see it… Great love… a new beginning…" His eyes opened. "Your card is the Ace of hearts!"

Ranma blinked, then slowly shook her head.

The magician looked shocked. "Wait… are you sure?"

"Pretty sure, yeah," Ranma said dryly.

Jim glanced at the audience then chuckled weakly. "Aheh… I-I apologize… the aether around you… it is more potent and chaotic than I had anticipated! It clouds the vision somewhat. But… it is there… yes… I see it now… You are a passionate girl. Enthusiastic. Fun! The card that was drawn to you is obvious now! The Queen of Clubs!"

"Nope," Ranma shook her head.

"I-I meant Eight of Clubs!"

"Uh uh."

"Is it Clubs, at least?"

Ranma sighed. She flipped over her card, showing it to the magician and to the audience.

Jim frowned, leaned forward and examined the card. "'Funco Games Incorporated, thank you for purchasing this deck of playing cards. Here are the rules for several popular classic card games…'" He snatched the card out of Ranma's hand. "Branwen!" he shouted off stage. "Branwen, I told you to take the rule card out of the decks before the show!"

A wave of chuckling and snickers rolled through the audience.

Jim turned, smiling weakly. "Aheh… minor technical difficulty, folks. All part of the show… heh… But card games are kids stuff, am I right?" He gestured with his hand and a puff of flame flared in the dim light, silencing the giggling audience.
He turned to Ranma. "Might I entreat your assistance once more, my dear?"

Ranma shrugged. "Sure. Why not?"

Jim snapped his fingers and his pretty assistant walked back onto the stage, wheeling a large box covered in what looked like arcane runes. It appeared to be just large enough to hold a person. "This is an artifact I acquired on my many travels. The Box of Angri'kah!"

His assistant turned the box, showing it to be on a wheeled platform and solid all the way around.

"As you can see, there is no trap door. There are no mirrors. No tricks." He opened the box to show the dark interior. He reached in and pulled out several long, sharp swords. "This box was used to entrap angry spirits and bend them to the archmagus' will. But… it has several other properties… for those who dare step inside." He reached out for his assistant's hand and helped her step into the cabinet. "For Death itself has no dominion within this box!" He took cuffs attached to the inside of the box and secured the girl's arms and legs.

"If my lovely volunteer would care to verify that these bonds are real and secure?" He stepped back, gesturing for Ranma to step forth and check the cuffs.

Ranma raised an eyebrow. She was curious about where this was going, so she did as she was asked. The cuffs appeared to be secure, bolted to the inside walls of the (admittedly painted plywood) 'Box of Angri'kah'. She tugged each one to be sure, then nodded they were at least not obviously rigged.

Jim smiled theatrically, swept in and closed the door of the cabinet. There was a head-sized cutout in the top of the door that framed the assistant's face so the audience could see her clearly..

Jim picked up one of the swords. He took a piece of paper from the cart and sliced it along the edge several times, demonstrating its sharpness. "As you can see, each of these swords is razor sharp. A single one of these could end my lovely assistant's young life. Yet I, and my gracious volunteer, will drive all seven of these swords through her body. By the magic of the Box of Angri'kah, the spirit of Death itself shall be held at bay and she shall exist in the space between this world and the next - between Life and Death - and emerge unscathed. Behold!" He took the sword, placed the tip in one of the slots cut into the box for this purpose and drove it home with a resounding thunk.

The assistant screamed, an expression of surprise and pain on her face.

"OH! WHOA, OH NO!" Jim pulled the sword out immediately. It was covered in blood. "WOW! Yeah, that's a lot of blood…"

"Jim, you idiot!" the assistant screeched from inside the box. Her restraints rattled as she struggled to free herself. "You stabbed me, you hack! You're supposed to swap out the swords before you do that!"

"Aheh… J-just a little technical difficulty ladies and gentlemen…" Jim said nervously. "Branwen shut up!" he hissed.

"Or what!? You'll stab me again!?" Branwen screeched. "Get me… get me out of this box so I can wring your lousy neck!"

"Aheh… she's fine ladies and gentlemen… all part of the show…" Jim stammered again, as he gestured for some stagehands to come out and wheel the cabinet away.
"Jim… I don't feel so good…" Branwen's struggles were getting weaker. The stagehands moved faster, wheeling her offstage where a white-coated medic was waiting for them.

"Aheh… all part of the show…" Jim said, but his smile seemed increasingly forced. He slipped a little in the puddle of blood left where the box had been. "Aheh… just a short intermission before our next trick, ladies and gentlemen…"

"You gonna actually kill someone this time?" Ranma asked, crossing her arms and raising an eyebrow at him.

Jim glared at her and hissed. "Like you could do better!"

Ranma smirked. "Is that a challenge, Mr. Darkmagic?" she asked sweetly.

"Oh no…" Ukyou's groan could be heard from the audience.

Jim glared at her. "You know what? You know what!? YES! Yes, it's a challenge, you amateur! Let's see you come up here and do better!"

Ranma's grin widened. "Give me five minutes, a change room with costumes, and a kettle of hot water."

Thankfully the magician was well stocked with props and costumes. Everything Ranma needed was there. She quickly went over the plan with Ukyou as they changed into appropriate outfits.

Ukyou adjusted the tie of the 3 piece suit she had selected. "Are you sure this is a good idea? I mean…"

"It's a magic show. Let's show 'em some real magic for once," Ranma winked at her. She had taken one of Jim's spare cloaks, tunics and pants, all obviously oversized on her. She wrapped the cloak around her and swished out onto stage, her head held high. Ukyou grabbed a curtain on wheels and followed.

Jim was seated in the front row of the audience, arms and legs crossed, looking quite angry at the whole proceeding. "That was six minutes! Boo! False advertising!" he called out. Ranma paused and gave the man a look. She held up her free hand and summoned a tiny glowing ball of ki. She gave the audience a moment for it to register and then casually tossed the luminous mote to the ground in front of the surly magician. It detonated with a flash and a bang that kicked up dust and forced Jim to draw back with a yelp.

Ranma turned to face the crowd with a flourish. "So you folks want some real magic? Well, I've been around a bit myself, and one of the most mystical places I've been in my travels is called Jusenkyo. Deep in the heart of Mainland China, hidden in the depths of the Bayankala mountain range, the name means 'Pools of Sorrow'," Ranma told the crowd. "The waters of this mountain are laced with dark magic and where those waters pool... powerful transformations can occur." She held up the kettle. "I have here, in this simple kettle, some of the mysterious water from this forbidden place!"

"That's just tap water!" Jim jeered, having recovered from the minor scare.

Ranma smirked. "This water will have a powerful effect on me and on my handsome assistant." She walked over to Ukyou, who bowed and let Ranma pour a little of the water over her head then straightened and stepped behind the curtain.
"Now watch this terrible magic from darkest China do its work!" Ranma stepped in front of the curtain, closed her eyes and dumped the contents of the kettle over her head.

Her form immediately blurred and grew in dramatic fashion. Ranma's male form was much more imposing and nearly a head taller. Hair shifted from bright crimson to jet black as curves flattened and muscles swelled to fill out Jim's spare outfit until it looked like a seam might burst. Now fully and obviously male, Ranma tossed the kettle aside and grinned at the audience.

There were gasps of surprise. There hadn't been any smoke or curtain for Ranma to hide behind - he had just changed - like a special effect from a movie but in real life. There were murmurs and hushed whispers from the crowd. Then, slowly, the applause started.

"What?!" Jim yelped and jumped on stage. He stormed over to Ranma. "This is ridiculous! This is… is… padding! Stilts!" He poked Ranma's chest. "Computer generated effects!"

Ranma smirked. "Oh, and as I have transformed, so has my lovely assistant." He reached over and tugged the cord that caused the curtain to drop from its rack.

Ukyou had concealed a second outfit under the baggy, oversized suit, which she had discarded as soon as Ranma's routine had begun. Now she was dressed in a rather revealing bunny suit, complete with ears, fishnet stockings and high heels. With her hair unbound, the transformation was complete and just as dramatic as Ranma's had been. She spun on one foot and adopted a classic cheesecake pose, one that accentuated her cleavage, and blew a kiss into the crowd.

The crowd roared in approval, the applause becoming thunderous.

Jim's eyes widened, his face flushing with rage. "Y-you… you cross-dressing fraud! Y-you… you made all that up! Magic water from Jusenkyo, phah!"

"Sure I did," Ranma smirked, crossing his arms.

"You know what, pal?" Jim stepped forward and poked Ranma's chest. "I'm gonna prove it. I'm gonna go to China and look up this Jusenkyo place! And then I'm gonna prove there's nothing special about that water, and show the whole world how you REALLY did your trick!"

"Go for it," Ranma's grin widened.

"I'll do it!"

"Uh huh."

"I'll go to China!"

"You should book your flight soon before the Christmas season rush," Ukyou added helpfully.

Jim's mouth worked furiously and silently for a few more seconds then snapped shut. He turned, swishing his cloak behind him and stalked off stage.

"You don't really think he'd actually go to Jusenkyo, do you?" Ukyou asked, whispering in Ranma's ear.

Ranma's smile didn't waver. "If he does, it'll certainly make his act more interesting."

000

"Mu Tsu, wait!"
Mousse slowed his pace reluctantly. Part of him wanted to keep going but Rin had done nothing to deserve that. He could also feel the reminder of why he had come out here in the first place tucked away.

He stopped, turned and waited for her to catch up to him, and then catch her breath.

"I… was worried… you'd jump away…!" she gasped.

"Here." He took her hand and pressed the phone into it. "You left this at Ucchan's. I came to return it to you. That's all."

Rin blinked and looked at the phone. Her eyes widened in recognition. "Oh! This is Senpai's phone! She must have forgotten to pick it up after I put it there for her…"

Senpai… it was RANMA'S phone all along? Mousse gaped. Slowly he closed his eyes and chuckled. The sound was bitter and dry, born of disbelief and fatigue. "Of course…" he said after a moment. "…Saotome, you bring me misfortune even when you're not here."

"I-it's not Senpai's fault!" Rin said quickly. "I-it's mine… I'm… I'm sorry, I shouldn't have pried into your affairs…"

"No, you shouldn't have," Mousse replied coldly.

He immediately regretted it, seeing her stricken look even with his poor vision.

"I'm sorry. I'm sure you were trying to help," he said finally. "It's my fault for telling you only part of the story." He turned. "If you're done here, I can escort you home. It's the least I can do after all this."

"I still want to help."

He stopped and turned back to look at her. Her eyes were downcast and her fists clenched.

"I want to know the rest of it," she continued. "A-and if you won't tell me, I'll just come back here to get it. Every single day if I have to!" She gave him a stubborn glare.

"I thought you agreed you shouldn't have.pried?" Mousse said dryly.

"I sh-shouldn't have!" she agreed. "B-but I did… and… and know I know too much to not do anything, but not enough to actually do anything!"

Mousse sighed and nodded. "Fair enough. But you must promise me that not one word of any of this will get back to Shampoo or Saotome or any of his entourage. Clear?"

She nodded and relaxed a little.

"I'll explain on the train ride back," Mousse said, resuming his walk.

000

After the disgruntled magician stalked off, Ranma and Ukyou checked to make sure that his assistant was going to be okay. She was recovering - apparently this was not the first such incident to take place at one of Jim's shows and the circus kept a trained paramedic on site just in case. Then they headed back to the dressing room to change. Ranma complained the whole time about how female undergarments just weren't a good idea for form changes, muttering darkly about 'wedgies'.
"We should probably look into something custom for you, sugar," Ukyou said. "Something like a stretchy sports bra that will lie flat if you change to a guy and a pair of stretchy briefs maybe?"

"Not a bad idea," Ranma agreed as she brushed out her hair. "Won't do me much good if I'm wearing an outfit like this, though"

"Save the cute underwear for dates, then?" Ukyou winked.

Ranma blushed a little. "Y-yeah…"

Ukyou's eyes widened. "Wait… are you really…?"

"You didn't see when we were changing for the show?" Ranma asked, flustered.

"Hey, a real man doesn't peek on his girlfriend without permission," Ukyou said, deepening her voice and thumping her chest with her fist.

"Kodachi took me shopping. Spent a mint on getting me properly fitted for the bras and everything. Seemed a shame to waste 'em…" Ranma squirmed.

"Hold on, is that why you suddenly jumped a cup size?" Ukyou leaned over and poked Ranma's chest. "I thought you were padding or something to hide the fact that Akane's catching up to you!"

Ranma squeaked and hunched over, crossing her arms over her chest. "L-hey! Perv!"

Ukyou smirked and leaned over, breathing in Ranma's ear. "May I peek?"

Ranma blushed cherry red and squirmed a little more, remembering what had happened with Akane the last time she had given a 'fashion show'. "L-later maybe. After we get home."

Ukyou decided not to tease too hard and stood, stretching, her stance and the way she carried herself shifting as she got back into the 'male' headspace for the trip home. She picked up the oversized bear and a shopping bag and motioned Ranma to come with her a she left the changing room.

"What's in the bag?" Ranma asked, peering at it.

"Swiped the bunny suit." Ukyou said nonchalantly.

"What?!" Ranma guffawed. "You gonna wear that for the customers or something?"

"Absolutely not!" Ukyou shot her an annoyed glare which immediately softened into a conspiratorial wink. "Akane is."

Ranma raised a skeptical eyebrow. "Never gonna happen."

"Never underestimate me. I can be very persuasive where Akane is concerned," Ukyou said smugly.

Ranma gave her a mock annoyed look, her hands on her hips. "Now I know you're being perverted!"

Ukyou folded her hands behind her head, grinning. "Well, when a guy is constantly surrounded by visions of loveliness like you and Akane, it's only natural he have the odd naughty thought or two."

Ranma gave her a narrow-eyed look. "Okay, Kuno, sure."
They broke into giggles and continued walking.

After a few moments of silence Ranma spoke up, her tone uncharacteristically timid. "Is… is it that noticeable?"

Ukyou gave her a confused look. "Is what that noticeable?"

"The bra," Ranma fidgeted. "I-I mean… I'm not trying to look bigger. I don't wanna look freakish or anything…"

Ukyou sighed and stopped, took Ranma by her by the shoulders and lifted her chin. "Ranma, you're gorgeous. You're just not all hunched over crammed into something that doesn't fit anymore." She cocked her head. "I actually like the change. Seeing you dress up nicely both ways, I mean. You don't need to be overly girly or provocative to look good."

Ranma considered, looking down at herself. "I guess it wasn't something I paid much attention to either way before now. I just wore whatever got the job done. Only just starting to think about it now."

"Well, don't be afraid to ask for help," Ukyou said. "I bet Akane or Nabiki would loan you some stuff until you padded out your closet some."

Ranma chuckled and resumed walking. "Actually, Akane is the clothes horse. Nabiki is always swiping her outfits."

"You know, now that you mention it, she does always seem to have something new to wear," Ukyou said thoughtfully. "She's definitely more fashionable than the rest of us. How did she get pegged as a tomboy again? Was it just the martial arts?"

"Probably the jerks at school. She didn't wanna date any of them, so obviously she's either a tomboy or a lesbian, and they were probably too scared to call her the latter," Ranma muttered. "Couldn't possibly be because they're assaulting her every morning because Kuno told them it'd get them a date. There are, like, five decent guys in that whole stupid school, and two of 'em are me and you!"

Ukyou laughed. "Well… not sure I'm all that good…" She waggled her eyebrows suggestively.

"Pervert," Ranma said, though her tone was affectionate. She slipped an arm around Ukyou's waist and leaned against her.

"I kind of am," Ukyou admitted.

"Why, because you cross-dress?" Ranma asked. She actually felt a twinge of feeling offended.

Ukyou snorted. "No, because… well…" She blushed a little. "... Akane."

Ranma looked confused a moment, then her eyes widened. "Oh, you mean…" She blushed as she remembered the kiss. She was quiet a moment, then leaned in against Ukyou's side a little harder. "... You're not a pervert. If you were, maybe it wouldn't have hit me so hard when i saw the two of you together."

"What do you mean?" Ukyou asked.

"You really feel something for Akane… don't you?" Ranma looked up at her. "It's not just being 'playful', like Shampoo. Right? That kiss meant something."
"I…" Ukyou was struck silent. She felt a pang of guilt. "I'm sorry, Ranchan, I didn't mean to..."

"No, it's okay!" Ranma smiled at her. "It's... I'm still kinda processing what it is, I guess, but... I was being a hypocrite. I was assuming I was the only person around who could love more than one person like that."

Ukyou blushed. "R-Ranchan."

Ranma smirked and poked her nose. "God you're cute when you blush. So... when did all this start with you and Akane?"

Ukyou scowled. "You're picking up some bad habits from Nabiki, Ranchan," she muttered. She took a breath and looked thoughtful for a moment, then chuckled. "It all started when I hit my head..."

"You too?" Ranma quipped.

Ukyou smirked. "Well, technically it was a little before that. We kinda had a moment on the roof, after you and me kissed." She smiled a little, remembering. "Sun setting next to us, roof of the school, wind in out hair, me cupping her cheek and wiping away a tear... It coulda been on the cover of a cheap harlequin novel it was so romantic." She was quiet a moment. "I think I was about to kiss her, actually. I don't remember clearly, because Kuno showed up and flipped out, and I got a concussion. But I remember that impulse."

"Akane has a way of doing that to you," Ranma agreed. "I was always too scared to follow through, though."

"Yeah... Did I ever tell you about my first kiss, Ranma?" She looked up at the stars was they walked. The park was big enough that even with the lights of the carnival, they weren't as washed out as they were in the city.

"No... Bad memory?" Ranma asked. She had some experience with bad firsts.

"Her name was Akiko. We went to the same junior high... before I went to that all boys school." She smiled a little. "She was sweet... bit of a tomboy... actually a lot like Akane in some ways. She was socially awkward, clumsy, but always bright and happy. I was... drawn to her. I tried to be that 'guy friend' to her, help her get her confidence. I put on an act for her, being playful and flirting, but never crossing that line, so... so I could be practice, I guess. Seemed so obvious that I didn't pay attention to that little pang of jealousy I felt whenever I saw her talking to another boy."

"You fell for her. As a boy." Ranma said, her eyes widening.

"Yeah..." Ukyou chuckled bitterly. "Took me three years to have the courage to actually admit it... but yeah. But the worst part was... she fell for me, too."

Ranma blinked. "But..."

"One day, while we were waiting for the bus... she confessed to me. And then she kissed me." Ukyou looked down. "And... it was... it was like simultaneously winning the lottery, and having it taken away. Because she felt the same way I did... but only because I was lying to her. I had gotten something I never realized I wanted, then realized I wanted it more than anything... and realized I could never have it, all in the same moment. So... I froze up. And she took it to mean I didn't want her and it broke her heart."

"Did you tell her?" Ranma asked quietly. "That you were a girl?"
"Yeah. She… didn't take it well," Ukyou said softly. "I should have told her sooner. But I know why I didn't. I didn't want to. I liked how she looked at me. I liked how it felt. I didn't want to do anything to make her stop. And if I had known what nannichuan was back then, I'd probably have run away to China to dunk myself in it so she'd keep looking at me that way."

"Wow…" Ranma said softly.

"I was a dramatic 14 year old, don't read too much into it," Ukyou said, though from the faraway look in her eyes, Ranma was pretty sure she was lying. "I promised myself if I ever felt that again… if anyone looked at me like that again, I'd grab hold and never let go, no matter what."

"And Akane looked at you that way?" Ranma asked.

Ukyou looked down at her. Her hand came up and she trailed her fingers through Ranma's soft hair. "You did first," she said softly. "In the hallway… something in your eyes reminded me of her. It was the same kind of moment. So I grabbed hold. And it was… incredible."

"Hey, how did this become about me?" Ranma asked, murmuring a little as she leaned a bit into Ukyou's hand.

"It's part of the story, silly. Trying to explain how I got into the mindset that would lead me to kiss Akane."

"Was I that bad?" Ranma teased.

"I think I just got done saying you were incredible? I can only stroke your ego so much, sugar," Ukyou smirked. "So the kiss... It was a rush. I had gotten past my fear. I had 'won', I guess. Then… Akane and I end up on that rooftop together and winning suddenly didn't feel so great."

"That had to be awkward."

"It was at first, but…" Ukyou swallowed. "Do you know the worst thing Akane could do to me in a moment like that? It wasn't yell at me, or pick a fight or even cry… It's what she did. She trusted me." A smile flickered across Ukyou's face. "I had just taken you away from her. I had just called her out on all of the chances she could have had. I leapt when she didn't - when she'd had so many chances to. And… That was me and Akiko right there."

"Wait… so Akane is you in this?" Ranma said, confused.

"Not literally, jackass," Ukyou said, thwacking her lightly on the head. "But we suddenly had that in common. Plus she had that look in her eyes… the one that makes you want to jump off a rooftop to catch her?"

"Mnnn," Ranma replied, knowing that impulse all too well.

"Anyway, everything after that is a mess. Loud crash, thunderbolts and lightning, then waking up with a really bad headache the next day. So I didn't know what had actually happened until Akane told me much later. So… I thought I might have. It planted the idea, anyway, and that… kinda shaped how I looked at Akane from then on."

"So… you're saying that because you thought you kissed Akane… you kissed Akane?" Ranma gave Ukyou an impish grin.

"No… but it meant when she kissed me later on… I grabbed hold again." Ukyou ducked her head a bit. "I almost froze up but when she started to apologize…"
"Mnnn," Ranma replied again. She was quiet for a few more moments before she spoke again. "Did you two… I mean, me'n Ryouga bailed as soon as we saw we were intruding on something, b-but… I know she spent the night."

Ukyou moistened her lips. "Yeah. We should have waited for you, Ranchan. For some reason I had it in my head that you were with Nabiki, and… and… I should have waited. I'm sorry."

Ranma shook her head. "You and Akane didn't do anything wrong. I was just… I got all twisted up in my own head." She burrowed into Ukyou's side a bit.

"We all do that," Ukyou replied. "You're not indestructible, after all."

"Mnnn," Ranma replied noncommittally. Rationally she knew that was true, but it still stung her pride a little. Even after admitting that she needed other people, it still grated against 17 years of upbringing. She chewed on that a bit; she owed her life to most of the girls at one point or another, but there was a difference between getting a clutch assist in a fight and emotional reliance.

"You know, if you ever catch us again…" Ukyou said softly. "... Walk in."

"I dunno," Ranma smirked a little. "You two were so cute, though. I would have hated to interrupt..."

"... And now I can't help thinking about what we would have done if you had walked in," Ukyou muttered, blushing. "That's it! Next date we go on is gonna be you, me and Akane."

"Perv," Ranma giggled. "So which one of us will be the guy for that?"

Ukyou considered a moment. "Akane," she said with a smirk.

000

"I wasn't entirely truthful about my time with the circus," Mousse said.

Rin was sitting across from him in the otherwise empty train car, leaning forward and listening carefully.

"I was taken in by the circus, true, and trained by masters there, but my time, particularly how I left, was a little more complicated." He adjusted his glasses. "The Circus is a family, whether you are born into it or find yourself adopted into it. Young Mi was the former, the daughter of the Ringmaster Byungchul and his late wife, who had once run the circus together. She was always destined to take her place in the center ring and it showed. She's a beautiful girl, even to my poor eyes… stunning, really. But more than just her physical appearance, she had a… poise. A confidence and grace that elevated her even further. She belonged in that ring and she knew it and loved it, and that joy made her absolutely radiant. She was the first girl who ever rivalled Shampoo's brilliance for me."

"I was an awkward, clumsy boy when I joined the circus - I was still all of the things Shampoo scorned me for. I expected the same from her… that was her right, after all. She was as strong and as proud as any Joketsuzoku. But… no matter how many times I fumbled or failed she had a smile for me and a word of encouragement. Her laughter was bright rather than scornful or mocking. My struggle to be stronger - to be better - had always been an act of defiance before, but Young Mi… she believed in me more than I ever did. And she made me believe it too, after a while."

"It sounds like you really did love her," Rin said softly.
"... Maybe." He shook his head. "I was definitely taken with her. Enough that… for the first time… I began to question my purpose and my devotion to Shampoo. Of course at first I had no idea she felt anything at all for me - I thought that I was just indulging in pleasant fantasy. Until… one night she confessed her feelings to me."

He closed his eyes. The memory was itself a happy moment, twisted and made unbearable by the knowledge of what had come after. "I… didn't know what to say. I didn't know what to feel. I couldn't understand why someone like her would want me when everyone else I had known saw me as so worthless. I knew in my heart if I said yes I would just be proving Shampoo and all the others right - that I was weak and cowardly and that I would be accepting her because she was there, rather than risk being alone for the sake of the one I truly loved. But… my resolve was weak. I made myself believe I truly wanted to be with Young Mi and that I could put aside my feelings for Shampoo for her."

"Her father found out, of course. Everyone did. There are no secrets among carnies. He had noticed her feelings for me and as soon as it came out we were a couple he insisted we make arrangements to be married. He was ill and wanted to see his daughter find a partner to share the ring with as he had. He had always been kind to me but now he began to see me as a son."

"As time went on I realized that I was a fraud. I was just imagining Shampoo in Young Mi's place - hearing her voice speaking Young Mi's words. I hadn't moved on at all. So when I received word from my mother that Shampoo had been disgraced by an Outsider, that she had returned from Japan and been punished for her dishonor, I knew it was time to make a choice. But… even then I was a coward."

He slumped, feeling the weight of the memories pressing down on him. "I tried to sneak out to go see Shampoo. I thought... 'Surely now that she's been humbled... that she knows disgrace... surely if I show her it doesn't matter, that I still care...’" he chuckled weakly. "Young Mi caught me. I had my chance to come clean - to tell her the truth - but I was afraid. I lied. I told her I needed to say goodbye to Shampoo. She believed me and let me go - with the promise that I'd return."

"By the time I returned to Jusendo, of course, Shampoo had already returned to Japan to chase after the man who had already disgraced her once. I had missed my chance. I knew I was being punished for my weakness, for being unfaithful and for letting my resolve waver. Now my love was going to throw herself at one who had scorned her as I had been scorned and... I wanted... needed to spare her that pain. When I fell into the Yazunichuan, I thought I had found my weapon to do just that. It wasn't until later that I learned he was already cursed."

"I... used my contacts to find another circus travelling to Japan and signed on with them temporarily. I had stopped thinking about Young Mi or her father. All I could think of was saving Shampoo. By the time I reached Japan... the planned date for my wedding to Young Mi had come and gone. I knew by chasing after Shampoo I was destroying any chance I had of finding happiness elsewhere. I knew I was doing something unforgivable to someone who truly cared for me." He looked down at his hands, clasped in front of him. "I convinced myself that Young Mi would move on; that I was a momentary infatuation - no more serious than the vulgar 'conquests' some of the cruder members of the circus would brag about in each town we visited. I made myself believe that she would forget my name just as easily. I guess that made it easier to live with myself. I had managed to avoid the truth until now."

He looked up. Rin's face wasn't distinct enough to his vision to make out her expression well, but he imagined whatever charitable notions she had about him were gone.

Good.
"So… what are you going to do now?" she asked.

"What do you mean?" He raised an eyebrow.

"Are… are you going to try and get in touch with Young Mi?" Rin asked. "You said you knew you had no hope with Shampoo, so…"

Mousse's eyes narrowed. "I never said I had no hope!" he growled. He immediately paused, reign ing in his angry response. "... Just… very little."

"S-sorry…" she said sheepishly, shrinking back in her seat.

They sat in silence a few more minutes.

"What would I even say?" Mousse asked finally.

Rin tentatively moved forward again. "Say you're sorry? Tell her why you did it? Tell her how you felt?"

"What would that do but cause her more pain?" Mousse asked miserably.

Rin frowned. "Haven't you said how you don't understand why you weren't good enough for Shampoo? Wouldn't you want to know? Even if it hurt?"

Mousse considered. "And what if she doesn't want to know?"

"Then… I-I guess she doesn't?" Rin said. "B-but at least you'd have offered, right?"

"And then where does that leave me?" Mousse scoffed.

"W-well, you'd have a chance to make things right?" Rin said. "You said you feel bad about what you did… that you know you hurt her and disappointed your mentor. Th-they were your family… maybe you could find a way to make amends…"

"Haven't I suffered enough?" Mousse asked coldly. "Hasn't karma paid me back for my transgressions a thousand fold? If you knew what I listen to nightly… the humiliating reminders I get every day that I am a failure? Watching my dear Shampoo debase herself…"

Rin lowered her gaze, her eyes shadowed by her bangs. Her fingers curled around the phone, knuckles going white as she clutched it tighter.

"This is my stop," she said suddenly, interrupting him.

"Oh!" Mousse looked up, "I can walk you to…"

"That's fine, thank you. I can make it on my own from here." Rin stood suddenly. She walked towards the doors as he watched, perplexed.

She paused before walking out. "Mr. Mu Tsu…" she asked over her shoulder. "Is Xian Pu happy?"

"... What?"

She didn't say anything further, walking out the doors as they slid closed behind her.

000
The walk back from the train station was relaxed enough, but Ranma felt a certain tension as they approached Ucchan's. She swallowed nervously, knowing where this was going.

Ukyou must have felt it. She fumbled for her keys, opening the door. "We… don't have to, you know." she said softly. She smiled over her shoulder at Ranma.

Ranma stepped in after and closed the door behind her. She leaned back against it and took a deep breath. "No… I-I want to Ucchan. I'm just…" she squirmed a bit. "Shampoo and Nabiki didn't really give me a chance to think about it before it happened, and this time I've had all night, a- and…"

"And now you're nervous?" Ukyou turned and walked back over, reaching out to cup Ranma's cheek.

Ranma blushed and nodded. "I shouldn't be… I-I just…" She swallowed. "Should I go get the hot water?"

Ukyou didn't answer right away. Ranma swallowed again, feeling even more nervous. She wasn't even exactly sure why.

A sly smile spread across Ukyou's face. "Do you want to get the hot water?"

"I… I already said I wanted to… to…" Ranma shivered. What is wrong with me?

"I know," Ukyou said softly, leaning closer. "I know you do. That's not what I'm asking. I'm asking if you want hot water too."

Ranma squeaked and blushed a bright red. She suddenly realized why she was so nervous. This was something she hadn't done with Nabiki and Shampoo. It was a line she hadn't been ready to cross. "I… I…!"

Ukyou leaned in, lips brushing her cheek as she moved close and whispered. "Let me help you decide: Tonight I think we don't need the hot water, Ranchan…"

Ranma let out a shuddering breath. On the surface this seemed like a no brainer male fantasy, but it was different being one of the two girls. Ranma had always defined clear lines in her struggle to maintain her male identity against the erosion that the curse had caused. Over time she had crossed a few - some unintentionally, others willingly. Lately she had simply walked away from many of them as not worth defending. If there was a point of no return she was probably already well past it as her own identity and self-image shifted and changed. But now she could feel something brittle within her, straining until it was ready to snap - and if it did - she would change and not come back. If she said 'yes' now, it wouldn't be a guy in a girl's body that went up those stairs with Ukyou.

Ranma's breathing calmed. She slid her arms around Ukyou's neck and smiled. "We don't need the hot water."

000

Well, I'm curious to see what the reaction to THIS chapter will be!

I'm using a pic as my inspiration for Young Mi. This one right here: .

I claim no ownership of it.

Yes, I AM still updating this story. I am currently four chapters AHEAD of this, the bottleneck is proofreading, editing, and polishing, and my proofreader has this pesky thing called a LIFE that keeps getting in the way of him doing hours of work for free for me. So... the lemons are over there, go talk to Life's Manager.

Please don't kill me Gabe and Tycho.
Little White Pills, Little White Lies

Ryouga's dreams had been a bit... strange as of late. A disproportionate number of them had involved a certain redhead. His recollection of them typically faded quickly, so he was spared any more than a faint disquiet about their actual content by the time he had to deal with the redhead in question in real life, but it wasn't unusual for him to wake up and need a moment to remember where he was and why she wasn't there.

So it was forgivable that when he was shaken awake one morning and he opened his eyes, it didn't seem at all odd that Ranma was there smiling down at him.

"Morning, Ryo!" she said. She seemed excited about something. "Time to get up!"

"Mnnn..." he groaned. "...thought it was...your turn to feed Sachiko...Didja go back in time an' forget again?"

Ranma cocked her head. "Sachiko? Who's Sachiko?"

Ryouga turned over onto his side. "Tell the... mnnnn... the guy who turns into a bear... to go to hell..."

Ranma shook him harder. "Ryouga, come on. Even I'm not this hard to wake up!"

Ryouga snorted. "Wha...? Your violin is in the hall, sweetie..." he mumbled, smiling at her.

"Sweetie!?" Ranma raised an eyebrow. "Ryouga, I dunno who you're dreaming about, but you'd better wake up now before I tell Akari about 'Sachiko'!"

Ryouga rolled back over, blinked, and then finally gained enough awareness to separate reality from the dream he had admittedly been enjoying rather thoroughly. His eyes widened and he scrambled backwards in the bed and immediately struck his skull against the headboard. "What are you doing in my room?!

"Waking you up, dumbass." She had been on her hands and knees on his bed, and now she straightened up and smoothed out her skirt. She was dressed in her school uniform, as usual, though her hair was unbound and brushed out.

Ryouga grabbed the sheet and pulled it up, mindful he was only wearing boxers at the moment. "Why!? And what did you tell my Mom to get her to let you up here while I was sleeping?!!"

"I didn't." Ranma thumbed towards the open window. "She was busy outside so I let myself in."

Ryouga clapped a hand over his eyes and slowly counted to thirty. Yelling or murdering the redhead would make noise that Mom would hear. Calm... slow... deep breaths... Kill Ranma AFTER. "Do you have any idea of how awkward it would be if she came in now and caught you in here like this?" he asked in a low, tight growl. He let his hand drop so he could glare at her. "She thinks you're a girl! And that I like you!"

Ranma shrugged. "We'll just tell her I already have a boyfriend. Say it's Ukyou. She's dressed as a boy when we come by every morning and I don't think she'd mind posing as one for your Mom to take some of the heat off."

"Yeah, great plan. Except I've been home for a couple of weeks now and I actually talk to my mother and I've already told her about Ukyou! And that she's a girl that dresses up as a boy out of habit," Ryouga said, frustrated.

Ranma smirked and waggled her eyebrows. "Then we tell her Ucchan is my boyfriend anyway and let her draw her own conclusions. Ucchan won't mind. It's pretty much the truth, after all."

"Or you could go back out the window quietly and without being seen and you can tell me why you had to wake me up so urgently on the way to school," Ryouga countered.

"I can't wait that long!" Ranma bounced on her toes. "I gotta talk to someone or I'll explode!"

"Or I could just let that happen and take a bit of extra time this morning cleaning up your bits," Ryouga said darkly.

"Come on, Ryo! Please?" She gave him an imploring look.

"Ranma, you have four fiancees. Any one of whom would be happy to sit rapt while you talk about pretty much anything," Ryouga rubbed the sleep from his eyes and glanced at the alarm clock. "... Oh holy crap, are you serious? Do you even sleep, Ranma?"

"I can't talk to them! It's about them!" Ranma sat back down on the side of his bed and leaned towards him. "C'mon, Ryo, I'm begging you!"

The pose, combined with the imploring look, combined with the phrasing edged way too close to recent dream territory for him and he inched back again a bit. "Okay, okay! Can I at least get dressed first?"

She rolled her eyes. "Ugh, fine!" She leaned back away and crossed her arms, pouting.

"Ummm… get out?" Ryouga said, motioning towards the window.

"Why? You ain't got anything I haven't seen before," She said, then added in a more thoughtful tone, "... literally, actually - and with me girl-side too. I'm surprised we haven't gotten into more trouble with that…"

Ryouga groaned. If having Ranma in his room was a dangerous situation, actually changing clothes would be a temptation the Fates would not be able to resist. Not that he'd entertain the idea regardless, not with that dream still fresh in his mind. "Okay, alright, you win! Tell me what you're so worked up about, then you can take a hike and let me get up in peace!" He paused, cocking his head. "Did something bad happen?"

Ranma grinned and turned back to face him. "No, no! It's all been good! Really good! I just… I needed someone to gush to about it, y'know? Normally I'd go to Ucchan, but part of it is about Ucchan, and I'm not sure I'm comfortable talking to Sayuri and the girls about this stuff yet, and I obviously can't talk to Hiroshi or Daisuke about it because… hello? They're Hiroshi and Daisuke…"

"Holy cow, did you eat a whole bag of coffee beans this morning?" Ryouga shook his head.

"Nope! Haven't actually had breakfast yet. Think I could get some here? Ukyou was still doing morning prep when I went out the door. I'll go back out and come in through the front door properly, promise!" Ranma was babbling a mile a minute. It would have been almost endearing at a more humane hour.

"Fine, fine…" Ryouga said, just wanting her to spit it out. "Gush already."
Ranma immediately flopped back on the bed, her arms spread out as she sighed. "I don't even know where to start…!"

"... Right. Plan B it is, I'll hide the body for now and dig the grave after school." Ryouta cocked his fist back.

Ranma squealed and crossed her arms over her face. "Okay, okay! I'll talk!" She giggled and peeked past her arms at him.

"Geez you're girly today!" Ryouta huffed and sat back against the headboard, crossing his arms. "Am I?" She looked thoughtful for a moment, then shrugged. "Who cares, I'm in a good mood!"

"So the dates are going well?" Ryouta asked, raising an eyebrow at how easily she shrugged off what once would have guaranteed a fight.

"It's gonna work, Ryo," she beamed. "For the first time, I can really see it working! I went on a date with Shampoo and… and we talked… I met her Greek grandparents…"

"Hold on, Greek Grandparents?" Ryouta held up a hand.

"Nice people - they lost their kids so they kinda adopted Shampoo, unofficially, and apparently she's got this whole life I know nuthin' about except now I do, and… and…" She blushed, "She and Nabiki…"

Ryouta shook his head frantically. "I don't need details, Ra…" He trailed off, his eyes widening. "She and Nabiki?!

"Yup." Ranma waggled her eyebrows, grinning. "Gah!" Ryouta covered his eyes. "Please… please don't make that expression while talking about your fiancées ever again. Especially while you're a girl!" He sighed. "... Congratulations, I guess? You're now guilty of at least one of the things Kuno hates and envies you for."

Ranma deflated a little. "C'mon, Ryo, don't be like that… This is… I didn't think this was ever gonna happen!"

Ryouta lowered his hand to peer at the girl. "... Seriously?!

"Not without it blowing something else up so bad that it completely ruined it, or… or I'd screw up somehow, or…!" She flopped back on the bed again. "It's like… it was this big, looming thing that I was all twisted up and terrified of, and then when it finally happened…" She closed her eyes and sighed. "It was nice… it was wonderful, but that's just because it was with Nabiki and Shampoo. It wasn't anything like what I was expecting or afraid of."

Ryouta sighed and folded his arms again. "Well… good, I guess. I… uhh… hope the rest of the dates go as well?" He peered at her curiously. "I'm… I'm guessing you and Ukyou…"

"Yeah…" Ranma said softly, her expression getting more thoughtful. "I… that kind of altered my universe…"

"Better not let Nabiki or Shampoo hear you say that," Ryouta snorted.

Ranma closed her eyes. "Not like that, jerk." She took a deep breath. "When we… I was…” she paused, unsure how to explain. "I've been a girl since yesterday."

"What has that got to do with..." Ryuga started then trailed off. "Oh... Oh." Ryuga swallowed, mustering all of his willpower to avoid visualizing that. There was a good chance he wouldn't survive the blood loss the resultant imagery could cause. "W-well... I mean, if... if Ukyou is okay with it that way..."

"That's not it, Ryo..." Ranma rolled onto her side. Her hair fell about her face, framing her blue eyes as she looked at him. "I've been a girl. Up here." She tapped her head.

"Is... that bad?" Ryuga asked. "I mean... that happens sometimes anyway, right?"

She sat up, scooted closer and shook her head. Ryuga felt a slight twinge of panic as he realised how close she was to him on his bed.

"Here," she held out her hand. "That's part of why I wanted to see you. I was thinking you might be able to help me figure out what's going on in my own head?"

"I'm not your therapist, Ranma," Ryuga said, though he reluctantly took her hand. "Is it that bad?"

She shook her head again. "No! I mean..." She smiled. "I feel better than I have in a long time. I don't feel like I'm fighting myself anymore. I-I like this. I just feel... different."

Ryuga nodded, closed his eyes and tried to focus on the swirl of her emotions. There were definitely brighter colors now, currents and eddies mixing in cascading ripples of pastel. The sense of being comfortable with herself was no longer buried, but was nearer the surface, and the dark streaks of shame and fear he had sensed before were mostly gone. There were still a few, of course. Also the emotions he associated with her male side seemed less pronounced, though those he could see were generally much calmer and brighter as well. He opened his eyes and glanced at her.

"Well?" she asked. She chewed on her lower lip in a way that was unexpectedly adorable. It occurred to him that her lips seemed shinier. Lip gloss? THAT'S a step!

"Well... you got laid. What do you expect?" Ryuga tried to tug his hand away. "You're all happy-float-glowing from it. Pretty sure that's normal. You're definitely not as stressed out."

She smiled, but she held onto his hand. "Hey, hey, hey... Lemme listen a bit, okay?"

Ryuga looked away and blushed. "Ranma, I would really rather not be sitting here in my underwear in my bed and holding hands with you when my mother is liable to come in to wake me up for school any minute!"

"You've been grumpy and I wanna make sure you're okay," Ranma said back. "You never tell me anything so at least let me make sure it's not all darkness and despair in there again, okay?" She closed her eyes and leaned back against the headboard.

Ryuga sighed in tired exasperation. "Ranma..." he said, but he didn't protest further. This is torture...

"Wow, this is actually a lot brighter than I thought," Ranma said. "It's not the muck anymore at least, but... wow... it's all churning. Chaotic. Dark mixed with lighter colors though... Oh... It's Akari, isn't it?" She opened her eyes and looked at him. "Or... someone else? You didn't meet another girl at school, did you? Is that who 'Sachiko' is?"
Ryouga groaned and let his head thunk back against the wall. "No, there's no girl. Sachiko is…"
He sighed. "I was having a dream and Sachiko is… well in the dream anyway… She was my daughter."

"Your daughter?" Ranma's eyes widened. "What, you were dreaming about future domestic bliss?"

Ryouga sighed. "I guess? It's kind of muddled and there was this jackass who turned into a bear who kept on attacking us and we couldn't find this violin… I don't know why there was a violin… and my wife kept on swapping places with her past self and…" He shrugged. The imagery had already faded. "It's kinda gone now."

She grinned. "That actually sounds kinda cool. Weird, but cool. 'Sachiko', huh? That's a pretty name." She stretched before leaning back against the headboard. "So who was Mrs. Hibiki?"

"I don't remember," Ryouga lied. "It's kinda hazy."

"Does Akari play violin?"

Ryouga snorted. "Nobody I know plays violin. I honestly have no clue where the violin came from - just that it was very important and she was going to be upset if we didn't find it."

Ranma chuckled. "Geez, even in your dreams you can't help but get in trouble with girls." She closed her eyes and considered a moment. "Getting lost in time though… that would suck."

"There were alternate timelines too, I think? She tried to explain it to me but it sounded like gibberish. It probably was gibberish." He realised that she was leaning against his shoulder and her head was nodding. "Hey… hey! Don't fall asleep in here!"

"Why not? You don't hafta be up for 'nother hour…" She yawned and gestured lazily at the alarm clock.

Because you're in my bed! "Because… you'll be all groggy at school if you nap now." He took a breath. Okay, just get her to change back to a guy and that'll fix this. "Tell you what, I'll loan you some clothes, we can get you some hot water and then we'll spar a bit. Mebbe clear up the curse thing with Mom once and for all."

"No can do," Ranma mumbled. "Used th' waterproof soap this morning. Gotta game… need to be ready in case the Pineapple-head tries anything again. Gonna be a girl 'till Friday." Her head dropped against his shoulder.

"If you fall asleep, I swear, I'll tell Ukyou you slept in my bed," Ryouga bluffed.

"She'd kill you, not me." Ranma cracked an eye open and grinned.

"You're right," Ryouga said. "She'd just maim you, so she could nurse you back to health after you'd learned your lesson."

Ranma made a face but she was awake now. "Don't make my fiancee sound like such a yandere!"

"Then get out of my bed!" Ryouga growled. He rolled his eyes as she continued to hesitate. "Fine! Give me fifteen minutes to get dressed and cleaned up and then ring the doorbell and I'll get you breakfast."

"Deal!"
"Well, Tatewaki, I think we are all rather astounded by your physical recovery. Physiologically speaking, we have no further reason to keep you here." The Psychiatrist sighed and put aside her clipboard. "That being said, I still have reservations about releasing you to your family, given their… resistance to the treatment of your imbalance."

Imbalance, Tatewaki thought. It was the word Dr. Kamiya had chosen to use for it, referring to the chemical imbalance in his brain, but it was just a timid way of saying Madness. "I am aware, doctor. But unlike previous times, decisions regarding treatment are now my own and not my father's. I… feel I must see if I can reconcile that with my family or not now, before any plans for my future are made."

She looked doubtful for a moment but nodded. "I understand. Understand, though, that normally this would not even be an option. Your father has already proven himself to be disruptive to your treatment, and interfered with countless other psychiatric professionals who have attempted to treat you. I must stress that limiting your contact with him is vital to your recovery. And it is recovery, Tatewaki. Please know that. Your condition is, and always has been, entirely treatable."

Tatewaki held up the bottle of small white pills, examining them through the clear orange plastic. "So long as I hold tight to my 'sanity', yes?" He chuckled softly. "I do not think the bard who first penned that turn of phrase could have envisioned such a corporeal manifestation of it."

"If he interferes with your medication or attempts to co-opt your treatment again... even once..." The psychiatrist began.

Tatewaki closed his hand around the bottle. "No fear, doctor. I have been asleep for far too long." He closed his eyes for a moment and when he opened them he smiled at her. "I intend to hold tight this time. I am no longer the boy he can bully or oppress into compliance. If there is strife, I will call you and I will find other arrangements."

"I'll need you to check in at least once a week," she said. "More if you feel you need it. That's in addition to your support group meetings. I also recommend that you find a new family doctor. I'm afraid your current physician has a somewhat… questionable reputation. I believe that's why your father chose him."

"I will," Tatewaki nodded, tucking the bottle into his pocket. He stood smoothly.

"And don't wait until the last minute to refill your prescription!" She stood and held out her hand to him. "I want you to be one of my success stories, Tatewaki."

He took the hand and shook it warmly. "I will endeavor to make you proud, Doctor."

000

Pride was perhaps the furthest thing from Tatewaki's mind when he said those words, of course. The doctor had cautioned him that depression could be a side-effect of the medication. That thought was almost amusing. A side effect! Like it would be abnormal somehow to come out of a years-long haze to discover you had become a raving madman.

Like father, like son, he thought bitterly. The doctor had told him that such things were often hereditary and that his father's problems were likely similar and could be similarly treated. As if the prideful buffoon would ever tolerate the indignity of the notion that his sanity came from a tiny white pill.
"You look tired, brother dear," Kodachi said as she led him from the hospital to the car. She was quite obviously annoyed by the chore of having to pick him up. Their father had refused, of course, reiterating his objections to Tatewaki’s treatment. Tatewaki strongly suspected his father may have been hoping to just leave him there permanently.

"It's been a long few weeks," Tatewaki said. He looked her over, trying to reconcile the young, seemingly normal girl who walked next to him with the twisted, bizarre recollections of his sister from his time of confusion. "You look well. How are things with you?"

She looked up at him, surprised. Evidently this was not something he typically asked her. "W-well, if you must know… I am now engaged to marry my darling Ranma!" She played with her ponytail as a demure blush graced her cheeks. "His mother approves of me and I believe the rest of the omiai is merely a formality."

Ranma Saotome. That was a name that was prominent in his mind, drawing forth dim recollections of rage, frustration and maniacal glee. He shuddered, loathe to think about what injustices he had visited upon his junior in his delusion. "Congratulations. I… fear that my recollections of Ranma are suspect at the moment, but I do recall he was a tremendously talented martial artist."

He tried to imagine Kodachi in a wedding dress and failed. Instead, all that would come to him were his clearest memories of her; of the young girl who always came to dinner filthy from playing in her garden, or talking excitedly about some exotic flower or plant that she had coaxed into blooming for her. Sometimes she would even bring a blossom to show him.

"You don't seem excited, dear brother. You don't approve? This would clear the way for you to woo your beloved Akane Tendo, after all," she said sourly.

Tatewaki sighed. "No, I… no…" He shook his head. "I am happy for you sister. I just… I am having trouble imagining you being a woman already. I have missed so much of your growing up already."

Her expression softened, her confusion evident. "But… you have been there, brother."

He shook his head again. "No, I haven't, Dachi. I have languished indulgently in fevered fantasy." His hand went into his pocket, closing around the bottle. "As for Akane Tendo… I have wronged her and her sisters grievously. If half of what I remember doing is fact and not just the hallucinations of a mad waking dream then… I scarcely know how to make amends to her, much less court her."

Kodachi scowled. She stopped and turned to face him. "You are many things, dear brother, and many of them have been detestable, but I will not have you be this! I will not have you devalue and deny all you have done with your head down and your eyes on the dirt!" She made an effort to let the surge of anger pass. "Yes, you have been a mad fool. But you have always been there when I needed you - even when father wouldn't or couldn't. And one thing you always taught me, no matter how we clashed, was to keep my head up, my back straight, and my eyes forward. You are a Kuno, not some mewling sycophant!"

He blinked in surprise at the fierceness in her voice and straightened his posture almost reflexively. "Yes… of course," he said. "I am sorry, Dachi."

"You haven't called me 'Dachi' in…" she said softly, then shook her head. "No, nevermind. It is time to get you home, brother." She walked to the limo where one of the many servants whose name he had never bothered to learn opened the door for them.
He glanced back at the hospital one last time. I do not wish to return here. He scowled. I do not wish to live my life huddled in sanctuaries or addled by my own demons. I WILL find my way this time. He stepped into the car and let the closing door block it from view.

000

Nabiki stretched, working out the kinks in her muscles. She didn't know if Cologne had started going easier on her or if she was somehow getting accustomed to her training or if it was the massage Shampoo had given her, but her usual crippled morning gait had been replaced with just a few aches and a little soreness.

She glanced back to see Shampoo walking beside Akane, whispering something in her ear that caused them both to giggle. She smiled, glad to see them getting along without needing some crisis or Ranma to drag them together. She could also see Shampoo was getting more artful with putting Akane at ease with physical contact. The Amazon had been on remarkably good behaviour that night. Nabiki's chat with her about her sister's hangups had helped, though she suspected Shampoo was just easing into seducing her as more of a soft sell.

You should probably just give up, little sister, Nabiki thought, bemused as she noticed a slight blush color Akane's cheeks when Shampoo leaned close. Shampoo had gotten more skillful with 'innocent' or 'accidental' touches that managed to skirt the line and slip under Akane's radar. A brush of the fingertips here, an accidental bump there, letting her weight rest against Akane, little touches that lasted just a second too long. It was all starting to have an effect as Akane's complexes and hang ups about physical intimacy gradually crumbled under Shampoo's careful stoking of Akane's long-repressed passions. Nabiki had a little internal wager on whether Shampoo was going to get her way or end up unleashing something even the hedonistic Amazon wasn't prepared for. Her money was on the latter and she planned to be a safe distance when it happened. Perhaps America…

She felt her phone buzz in her pocket. Just once, a text message. She fished it out and tapped the screen.

Your request is being considered. We will be in further contact during your free period. Be alone once it starts and we can continue our conversation.

Alibaba

There was no sending number or any other information, which should have been impossible as her phone was set not to accept messages or calls from unknown numbers. Nabiki blinked then thumbed the screen off and pocketed the phone.

It wasn't that she didn't want to know more but she knew that staring at her phone was pointless and would draw attention. She sighed, not liking how often she was getting pulled aside for these secret meetings with shadowy figures.

At least it's not some big guy in a nondescript sedan, she thought. But it did remind her that she had several things in the air that she needed to attend to, as pleasant as recent distractions had been. Her eyes fell on Rin, who had been uncharacteristically subdued, walking at the edge of the cluster formed by the volleyball team. She quickened her pace to draw even with her.

"Hey Rin? Everything okay?" she asked. It wasn't entirely an empty gesture as anything that brought the normally chipper girl down was a cause for concern even if she wasn't part of the inner circle of emotional train wrecks Nabiki was trying to keep from bursting into flames.
"Hmmm?" Rin looked up then blinked and rubbed her eyes as if she were just waking up. "Oh! No, no… I'm just tired. I didn't sleep so well."

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "Nervous about the game today?"

Rin shook her head. "Mnnn. Not really. It's just… I suppose I'm still a little upset at someone. I don't think he understands or cares, though, so it's silly. I'll be fine by game time." She smiled up at her. "Thank you for asking, though. We don't get to talk much! Are you doing okay? I know you have a lot going on with… with…" she ducked her head, blushing a little. "... things."

It was tough to not like Rin though she was hardly the sort Nabiki would have socialized with normally. "Surprisingly well for the moment," she replied with a smile. "We're starting to learn to balance things." She shrugged. "I… guess it must seem strange to the rest of you."

Rin cocked her head and tapped her chin thoughtfully, as if seriously considering the question. "Well… It's different, I guess? I never had a boyfriend so I'm learning a lot from watching you guys and… um, others." She blushed again. Nabiki could tell there was a story there. "But… It feels like you're all happy? You all smile a lot more, especially you. So… strange doesn't really matter, does it?" she continued thoughtfully. "Dad used to tell me there were all sorts of families that he met at the Olympics. He kept in touch with some of them, like my Uncle Otto. He's was an Olympic runner. He and his husband come and visit us at Christmastime. He and my Dad cheered each other on during the Olympics. Uncle Otto had a lot of problems because back then, marriages between men weren't recognized, so Uncle Stefan… that's Uncle Otto's husband… couldn't stay with him in the Olympic village and there were a lot of people who were mean to Otto because they didn't understand, or thought who he loved was a bad thing just because. Dad said he didn't find out about Uncle Stefan until he and Otto were already friends so he had to decide if he wanted to keep his friend or keep thinking what his friend was doing was bad. He decided that it made Otto happy and it made Stefan happy and it didn't hurt anyone and they were better, stronger people together, so he decided to stop thinking it was a bad thing. He taught me that's how I should decide whether something is good or bad. It's not about whether it's something I want." She looked at Nabiki. "So… no. It's not strange. You're just a family. Your family is different than mine and it's different from the one I'll maybe have someday. But your family feels like it's a good one, so I like it."

Nabiki regarded the girl evenly, surprised. "Your Dad sounds like a pretty remarkable guy."

Rin beamed. "I think so! But I'm probably biased? Still…" She glanced at Ranma, who was walking ahead of them having an animated conversation with Ryouga. "... I guess I like to think I'm biased because he's awesome. He manages to have time for me even with me having so many siblings."

"Two sisters, two brothers, right?" Nabiki said, plucking the detail from the file she had browsed about the girl at the start of this whole mess.

"R-right! I didn't think anyone outside of the team knew about that," Rin said sheepishly.

"I have my ways," Nabiki said with a smirk. "But you don't talk about yourself much. I hope I'm not prying?"

"Oh n-no!" Rin shook her head emphatically. "I just… I prefer listening, you know? Most of you have stories that are so much more interesting than mine!"

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "Your Father is an Olympic gold medalist, you're a prodigy at volleyball on practically the same level as Ranma is at Martial Arts and you have a Olympian German Uncle.
You have me beat pretty handily. But it isn't exactly a competition, you know." She patted Rin's shoulder. "I'm guessing it's just easier to let others talk?"

Rin fidgeted a bit. "W-well…" She sighed. "I-I stammer, a-and, I say things that people think are strange… and I have trouble putting words together with… with the things I know." She smiled weakly. "Senpai has actually helped me a lot with that. She and I have talked a few times. And now you!" Her smile brightened and Nabiki felt the Rin Headpat Urge rising.

Nabiki suddenly didn't feel so sanguine about her plan. At least, not in the original form. Rin was someone that even the Ice Queen of old wouldn't have felt right manipulating. It's still a good idea - I could just ASK, but… the more Rin knows, the more of a burden it is. "Rin, I have an idea for something sneaky."

"I-is it something really mean?" Rin asked nervously.

"No… actually it helps out some people who have kind of gotten a raw deal. It just so happens that helping them might also strip Himura of an unfair advantage. I was wondering… your Dad taught you to play, right? Has he ever coached before?"

"He used to, but he hasn't had much luck finding a coaching job since he was injured," Rin said.

"He was injured?"

"Mnn. He landed badly during a game and tore a tendon in his leg. He couldn't really play competitively after that." Rin got a sad, far-off look in her eyes. "Mom said he should get into coaching, but Dad always said that since she was earning enough to support us he thought that maybe it was a sign he should settle down and focus on raising us. I still think he'd like to, though."

"Well, then… maybe this can work out well for everyone," Nabiki said said, her smirk widening as she felt the pieces click into place. Everyone but Himura!

000

Nabiki followed the instructions from the odd text message and ducked out during her free period to make her way to the utility shed. She honestly doubted whoever it was would actually know for certain, but with all the surveillance Principal Kuno tended to favor, who could know for sure? Best to comply to the best of her ability until she knew more.

She slipped inside the shed and leaned back against the door, fishing out her phone. She didn't have to wait long - it started buzzing almost immediately.

"Nabiki Tendo," she answered.

"We've heard you're in a conflict with Himura Tanaka, granddaughter of Nobu Tanaka, said a voice, heavily filtered and distorted. "And that you're looking for assistance to compete with her technological edge."

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "I'm assuming you're responding to the request put out by my associates?"

"We became aware of it, though we've not contacted them. We felt it better to deal directly with the source."

"Seems awfully high end for a conflict between a couple of high schoolers," Nabiki noted dryly.
"So either you're a poser using a voice mod you downloaded online or you want something - or both, I suppose."

"We know Nobu's associate has contacted you already and that you're aware your contest with Himura has considerably higher stakes," the voice said. "But I respect your skepticism. Before we continue, allow us to present a demonstration to prove that we're capable of what we promise. If you step outside of that shed, you should be able to see a large animated billboard if you look across the soccer field."

Nabiki shrugged, muted her phone, tucked it into her pocket and stepped out of the shed. She looked across the field and spotted the distant billboard. It was currently displaying an ad for toothpaste, with a smiling woman who was showing a lot of teeth.

Just for an instant, the image flickered to be replaced with another image. It didn't last more than a half second - a blink-and-you-miss-it flicker that depicted a black and white top hat and mask with the left eye alight in flame.

Nabiki ducked back into the shed, her eyes wide. She fished out her phone again. "That's who you are!? No one's heard anything about you since Masayoshi Shido's trial!"

"So you've heard of us. Good. That makes this easier. We've had to keep a much lower profile since then, so we would appreciate if you kept this knowledge to yourself. You may refer to us as 'Alibaba' if you must." The voice sounded somewhat amused, even through the filtering.

"All right… You've officially impressed me," Nabiki said. "And worried me. What do the likes of you need with someone like me?"

"You're uniquely positioned," the voice replied. "Tanaka Pharmaceuticals was a large backer of Masayoshi Shido and has been involved in a number of other dealings going back decades. All of our work exposing Shido will be pointless if the infrastructure that allowed him to rise to power remains intact. We need to gather information on this infrastructure and our usual methods won't suffice. But your 'contest' with Himura provides a unique opportunity."

Nabiki closed her eyes and let the back of her head thunk against the door. This is exactly the direction I didn't want to go! She lifted the phone to her ear. "You want me to win so that the 'conversation' I was promised happens."

"Exactly. It's impossible to tell what Nobu might be thinking as far as you are concerned but the potential is something we can't pass up. So we're willing to take a gamble on you, Ms. Tendo. Tell us what you need to win and we'll make it happen."

"And in exchange you want me to rat out the Yakuza," she scowled. "That doesn't sound like a very equitable deal to me. That's a lot of risk to put myself in just to win a few volleyball games that we can win easily without your help."

"You don't honestly believe this will end with the game, win or lose, do you?" The tone of amusement was still there. "Himura will be out for vengeance either way and Nobu's taken an interest in you. You're MARKED, no matter what you do. Getting the information to take down Tanaka Pharmaceuticals is in your best interests as well. Unless you really ARE intent on joining the Yakuza?"

"I'm not really interested in taking orders or following someone else's rules," Nabiki said, her eyes narrowing. "Including yours. And if you haven't noticed, I have some very powerful friends."
"We're aware of that. As are the Yakuza. They'd have no trouble sacrificing a few thugs to see how many bullets your friends can dodge. I don't think you'd be as eager to wager their lives. We're not interested in controlling you, Nabiki. Just a partnership. We have a common interest." Alibaba replied. "There's an app installed on your phone. If you want to talk, just open it and press 'Ok' and we'll be in touch shortly after. Take some time to think it over. We'll do everything we can to minimize the risk to you - you have our word."

Nabiki checked her phone. A new icon had appeared on the home screen. It looked like a cat face, somewhat cartoonish, really, and there was no name.

"I'll take your offer under advisement," Nabiki said curtly and ended the call. She sighed, stuffed the phone back into her pocket and leaned against the door. Another thing I'm probably going to keep from Ranma and the others to avoid worrying them. I used to LIKE having secrets... now they're starting to make me sick.

000

Mousse did not have good vision as a human - this much was true. However Jusenkyo had seen fit to grant him a curse that, in many ways, was more of a boon.

As a duck, his vision was perfect.

That, in addition to flight, made it a form Mousses found he regretted very little. Secreting a small thermos of hot water in his feathers was almost child's play with his hidden weapons technique, which allowed him far more freedom to change at will than most Jusenkyo sufferers. He found it liberating to be able to soar so far above his earthly travails.

But today his thoughts kept him tethered to the ground. He circled over Furinkan High, riding the thermal currents between the sun-warmed asphalt and the cool grassy fields in a lazy spiral that kept him aloft almost without effort. He could maintain this all day if he wished, and today he thought that he just might.

He watched the lavender-haired object of his obsession walk through the gates, accompanied by the rest of 'The Harem' as Nabiki Tendo had so flippantly dubbed it. Ranma Saotome himself (or herself, as was the case currently), was just behind them, talking to Ryouga Hibiki of all people, followed by the girls from the volleyball team and a couple of others. Mousse was startled to see Ryouga in the group and wondered what kind of madness had possessed Hibiki that would cause him to accept Ranma Saotome's mad arrangements without so much as a squawk of protest. The Lost Boy seemed remarkably calm, even compared to his best behavior, and what was stranger still, he seemed to be paying little or no attention to Akane Tendo. In fact, all of his attention was focussed squarely on...

Has Saotome's depravity extended that far? Mousse thought with disgust as he watched the redhead and the Lost Boy talking and laughing together in a way he had never observed them behaving before. Seducing his former rival, and in front of Shampoo no less! His gaze moved back to his lavender-haired goddess, expecting to see her seething with righteous rage at how her 'Airen' carried on.

But Shampoo seemed herself to be entirely preoccupied with Akane Tendo. The musical sound of her laughter, mixed with Akane's, drifted up to him even here.

Is Xian Pu happy?

His wingbeats faltered for a moment. He recovered quickly, using it as an excuse to tear his gaze from his beloved as he worked to regain his balance and a little altitude. Unfortunately, it was not enough to distract him from the question.

Is Xian Pu happy?

The answer was obvious. He had known Shampoo all his life. He had made her the focus of it, the very core of everything he was or did. For all that he feigned blindness to her contempt for him, he was painfully aware of it, just as he was aware of something beneath it - something kinder and more forgiving. The Reversal Jewel had been proof enough of that. She cared for him more than she would admit. She must! That certainty had been all that had kept him going.

Is Xian Pu happy?

She would never be happy as a slave! his heart cried, the image of that wretched collar filling his mind. That's why he had refused to use the power of the egg of the Phoenix Tribe to enslave her, even if doing so would have given him everything he had ever wanted. That's how he knew this whole situation was depraved and that his precious Shampoo was being exploited!

Is Xian Pu happy?

But he already knew that for a lie. Shampoo would never submit to someone trying to force her. Even under the influence of the egg she had found small ways to resist. She would strain and claw and pull at any shackles placed upon her. But... he knew just as well that she would willingly give herself over just as utterly to someone she felt was worthy. That was what he had always aspired to be for her and yet never could be. How cruel was it that not only had Shampoo found such worthiness in an admittedly superior martial artist like Ranma Saotome, but also in an utterly ordinary, soft and weak girl?

Is Xian Pu happy?

Of course the answer was obvious. Shampoo had never smiled like she did now. She had never laughed as she did now. In the village, her eyes had been cold and her laugh scornful. She had always been on guard, careful never to show weakness to those around her. But here, no one knew or cared about her legacy and, in the company of the one who had already bested her, she could pursue her heart's desires away from the judging eyes of her peers.

Of course she's happy, he thought miserably. She has never been happier in her life. And everything and everyone that makes her happy is HERE.

He felt a mix of shame and envy; shame that he could not find any joy in her happiness, and envy of it. Not of Ranma Saotome or Nabiki Tendo, but envy of Shampoo and the happiness she had found.

It wasn't as if he had never laughed that way. The group below and their merry companionship reminded him of better days with the circus - easy camaraderie, mirth and joy even amidst all of the hard work and the sense of belonging to something bigger. He remembered a smiling face surrounded by curls the color of sakura blossoms and green eyes that seemed always to be on him.

I was happy, he thought. It was strange that he only recognized it as such now, when he was at his lowest. It was only with the perspective of misery that he could look back and say 'That's what it was. That's what happiness felt like'.

The smile on the lovely face in his memory faded, the emerald eyes growing cold and hard, tears leaving silver trails down her cheeks.
Had he stolen that happiness, not just from himself, but from her as well? All for the sake of a more familiar misery and a pointless devotion?

Young Mi... his head drooped. Had he just trodden on another's heart as his had been trodden on? If he knew his goal was unattainable - if he merely lingered through some vain hope of understanding why... what right did he have to deny that to another - especially someone he had once claimed to care about? What should he do?

He caught the glint of gold out of the corner of his eye. He banked, scanning, and caught sight of Rin, nearly invisible as she walked beside Nabiki. Her shy and unassuming demeanor usually let her fade into the background around others. She had only come to his attention because the sun had caught her hair, though he didn't know why he should have noticed it so keenly.

Still, he felt oddly better for having seen her. He flapped his wings and left the thermals for a moment to get a better vantage.

Rin understands this, he thought, remembering her insight. She had been right after all. Maybe she would help guide me? He considered, taking to the thermals once more to gain altitude. She was mad at me last I saw her... frustrated. But... I have very little to lose. I'll ask her to forgive me. At the very least, I can tell her that now I understand what she was trying to say.

For some reason that thought made him feel a little better too, and he found himself thinking about the sunset despite it being early morning.

000

Rin took a deep breath closed her eyes and tried to clear her mind. She was leaning against the wall outside of the change room, still wearing her track suit. She knew the rest of the team was inside waiting for her but she wanted some solitude for once.

It usually wasn't this hard for her. Volleyball was easy after all. It was what she did to get her mind off of all the other stuff going on. But the talk that morning with Nabiki about relationships had just refreshed the problem that had kept her up half the night.

I shouldn't think badly of Mu Tsu for it all, she thought. Relationships are complex, right? I-I'm sure it's all much more than it sounds.

It didn't change the fact it had greatly altered her perception of the Chinese martial artist. Her sparkling image of him, mysterious and cool, was now tainted with selfishness and a frightening lack of empathy. He had seemed so cold to the idea of Young Mi's obvious suffering.

Is that what you're really like, Mu Tsu? she wondered.

She heard footsteps in the hall and raised her head. Her eyes widened as she spotted the white robe and long black hair.

Mousse was reading room numbers carefully, as he had to get close to make them out. He appeared to be looking for something but he was obviously unfamiliar with the school. It was fairly clear he hadn't seen her yet and it would be easy enough for her to duck into the girl's changeroom without him noticing. She could just put this off until there was a better time...

She sighed. And that's what I'm mad at him for, isn't it? She looked up and called out to him. "Hello, Mr. Mu Tsu."

He raised his head, turning to locate the source of her voice. "Ah! Rin!" He hurried toward her, adjusting his glasses. "I've been looking for you!"

Rin giggled in spite of herself at that. "Maybe you should have been listening instead?"

"Hmm?" he blinked. "Oh! Yes… that would make sense." He nodded to himself. "Do you have a few minutes before your game?"

Rin sighed. "A few." She turned to face him fully. "Mr. Mu Tsu, I want to apol…"

He immediately bent almost double in front of her; so abruptly, in fact, that it caused her to skip back half a step.

"Yiiiii?!"

"Please accept my humble apologies!" Mousse said, looking back up. "You were upset with me before. I was curt with you when you were only trying to help. I am sorry."

Rin searched his face for a moment, sighed and shook her head. "I… that wasn't why I was upset, Mr. Mu Tsu…" She turned to gaze at the change room door. "I-I should probably go…"

"She is happy."

Rin froze. Slowly, she turned her head to look at him.

"Your question. 'Is Xian Pu happy?'" he said quietly. "She has been happy here. Happier than in the village. Ranma Saotome…" He clenched his fist. "... Is a part of that. Even if she never caught him, she was happier here chasing him. She found friends and adventure." He looked down. "I… did not. I have been… envious of her. Resentful, even."

Rin's eyes widened.

Mousse took a deep breath. "Single-mindedness is often quietly admired in my village, even if the common wisdom warns against it. Both Shampoo and I are guilty of it, but where Shampoo has learned to broaden her horizons, compromise, and find companionship and joy in her journey… I have not. And I am finding myself at a point where my destination is unreachable, and… I have little idea what to do. I am… in need of a guide." He folded his hands into the sleeves of his robe and bowed again. "You are the only one I can think of to ask for help."

Rin hiccuped softly, otherwise continuing to stare silently.

Mousse reached out and took her hands. "Please!"

Rin hiccuped again, her face went red and her mouth worked soundlessly. Eventually she managed to babble a bit, but in the end she just let out one long, quiet squeak.

The change room door opened and Yuka poked her head out. "Hey, Rin? You coming in to get ready? Sayuri wants to go over the stra…" She noticed Mousse, currently still holding Rin's hands in what seemed like a very emotional moment. "... Oh!"

Rin's head jerked around to look at Yuka. She hiccuped a few more times, went even redder, and then her eyes rolled back into her head and she slumped to the floor. Mousse moved quickly and managed to catch her and keep her from hitting her head.

Sayuri poked her head out the door next to Yuka. She took in the scene, blinked, then scrowled.

"God damnit! Would you people stop breaking the Rin!?"
Mousse stood against the wall and fidgeted uncertainly and wished he had studied more of the tricks in the vanishing acts. Being able to disappear right now would certainly make him feel a lot less awkward.

Firstly, he was in the girl's changing room. Respecting women's spaces as practically sacred ground was something that was drilled into him growing up, so just being here felt like near sacrilege. Secondly, he could feel Ranna Saotome's gaze burning into him and for once the mental gymnastics necessary to deny Ranna the moral high ground eluded him. And thirdly, he was keenly aware that the girl lying passed out on the bench was his fault, though he still wasn't entirely sure how. He had just come to ask a question!

"Is she going to be okay?" he asked. He knew it was a lame question - none of them were healers any more than he was.

"I think so," Sayuri said, putting a damp cloth on Rin's forehead.

Rin stirred and cracked her eyes open. "Did I miss the game?" she mumbled, looking suddenly concerned.

"You were only out a couple of minutes," Sayuri reassured her. "You okay to play?"

"Mnn!" Rin nodded then glanced over in Mousse's direction. She blushed hard and looked away. "M-Mr. Mu Tsu… I-I'm really s-sorry…"

"No, it's my fault," Mousse said quickly, mindful that Ranma's glare was getting intense enough to cause actual physical sensation. "I didn't mean to fluster you so. I… appreciate your hearing me out."

In the corner of his eye he noticed the other girls were exchanging glances.

"Should… we give you guys some time alone?" Riko asked sheepishly.

"Absolutely not," Ranma growled.

Mousse gave the redhead a surprised look.

"I-it's not like that!" Rin said quickly, waving her hands. "M-Mr. Mu Tsu w-was just… just asking for help with his… his…" she trailed off, eyes moving to him as she silently asked for help.

"With my fiancee," Mousse said finally.

Dead silence.

"Technically… my ex-fiancée," he clarified quietly.

Still silence.

Ranma recovered first. She folded her hands behind her back and sauntered out in front of him. The grin on her face was infuriatingly smug. "Sooooooo… Mousse… Eternally devoted Mousse… The guy who punctuates his sentences with 'My darling Shampoo' and/or various cracks at me for being a casanova, a two-timer or an 'enemy of women'..." She leaned in close to him. "... Who's yer side girl, then? Stumble upon some long-lost tribe of Norse-descended Chinese Vikings and catch the eye of some six foot tall blonde shieldmaiden named Hilda?"
Mousse narrowed his eyes. "Don't be ridiculous, Saotome! What kind of idiotic concept is a 'Chinese Viking'?" He sighed, frustrated. "She… we met in the circus. She was the ringmaster's daughter. That's all you need to know. The rest is personal."

"I-I don't know how much help I can be with it…" Rin said timidly. "B-but I'm willing to try."

Sayuri looked up at there was a knock at the door leading to the gym. "Looks like we're on. Yuka, go tell them we need five minutes?" She looked at Mousse. "Got the answer you needed? Good. Scram. Ranna? Help Mousse to scram. Rin? Get dressed and get your game face on."

"C'mon, duck boy," Ranma grabbed Mousse's elbow. Mousse started to protest but he felt a sudden warning pinch on a pressure point, so he kept his mouth shut and followed along.

The redhead led him outside and closed the door carefully behind her. She sighed, took a breath and then slammed him casually back against the far row of lockers.

"Saotome, what… !?" Mousse growled and snapped his claws out from his sleeves. He hadn't come for a fight, but if she wanted one…!

"I'm only going to say this once, Mousse," Ranma replied tightly. "Rin is like a little sister to me. She's a sweet girl and she's not got a thick skin like us. And for whatever reason, she's sweet on you." She gripped the handful of his robe more tightly. "Now, if you gotta break her heart? Do it. If you wanna try and make her happy? You got my blessing. But I swear, if you string her along, use her and then toss her aside? They will never find all of the pieces of you. Clear?"

"So in other words…" Mousse said coldly, jerking her hand away from his robe. "... Don't be you. I think that much I can manage." He brushed off the front of his robe and walked away, feeling Ranma's glare burning into his back the whole way.

000

"Point, Furinkan!"

"Well, it seems the 'B' Team has hit their stride," Sanae noted sourly. She was seated with the rest of the 'main' Furinkan Volleyball team watching the so called 'Buster Corps' play. The teamwork issues from the previous game had all but evaporated. Ranma and Rin were both in rare form, making the opposing team practically dive for cover every time either of them got anywhere near the ball, and the rest of the team had stepped up their game impressively. Sayuri herself had scored four aces.

"If we have to play against them with them playing like that, it's gonna be ugly," Mineko said, crossing her arms.

"Don't think we can beat them, Mineko?" Himura asked. Unlike the rest of them, she was relaxed, and seemed almost amused by the display of skill.

"W-well…" Mineko said nervously. "N-no! Of course we'd win! It's just…" She glanced back at the court as The Buster Corp scored again. "It'd be a rough slog. Their offense is insane."

Himura chuckled. "I imagine it would be." She stood and walked over to the girl. "But you're looking at the situation far too simply, my dear." She patted her cheek. "Only fools throw themselves at an opponent's full strength. Besides, the games are just a formality. Trust me, Mineko. Watch, learn and don't worry so much." She beamed at her. "Now, I have some business to attend to outside. Umeko? Omi? Would you come with me, please?"
"Not going to stay to watch the whole match?" Mineko asked, concerned.

Himura shrugged. "It seems all but over already. Be sure to congratulate Sayuri on my behalf, would you? I wouldn't want her to think that we're not interested in her adorable little accomplishments." She turned and walked towards the gym exit, flanked by Omi and Umeko.

Himura took a deep breath as they slipped out into the evening air. The gymnasium could get somewhat stifling with so many people crammed inside and The Buster Corp were certainly drawing attention and crowds. She spotted Hana waiting for her. The girl had sulked at every game since Himura had ordered her to let Nabiki have the betting pools.

_Hana, perhaps it is time to give you an object lesson in how much worse things could be than a little lost gambling revenue, hmm?_ She beckoned for the girl to come over. "I hear our little troublemaker is wanting to talk with me again?"

Hana nodded. "I tried to tell her to make an appointment to see you like everyone else, but she's been threatening to run in there and tell the whole school 'everything'."

Himura sighed and nodded. "She's already had a chat with the Principal. I really had hoped to avoid this unpleasantness. Where is she, then?"

"I'm right here," Tomoko stepped out of the shadows where she had been standing. Her fists were clenched and she had an angry look in her eyes. She glanced at Umeko. "And don't even _think_ about siccing your bodyguards on me!"

Himura shook her head sadly and stepped forward. "Tomoko… Tomoko, Tomoko, Tomoko… You should know by now that I don't do that sort of thing."

"I know _exactly_ what sorts of things you do!" Tomoko growled. "I've already told the Principal everything! It's over Himura! You should have let me back on the volleyball team when you had the chance!"

Himura sighed heavily. "Tomoko… If there is one thing I cannot abide, it's a _liar._" She gestured to Hana who handed her a small envelope. "You didn't tell the Principal _everything._" She tossed the envelope at Tomoko's feet.

Tomoko regarded it suspiciously but knelt to pick it up, her eyes never leaving Himura. She tore it open and withdrew a handful of pictures.

She nearly dropped them when she saw what they were.

_Ahh… THAT'S the moment._ Himura smiled, savoring that instant of realization. She walked up to the stunned girl. "I had a chat with the Principal too, Tomoko. And I gave him copies of these. Another set of copies was sent to your parents - they should have received them by now, I think."

"Y-you…" Tomoko trembled, eyes wide with disbelief.

"Fraternization of this sort is expressly forbidden by school rules, Tomoko," Himura clucked her tongue. "Dating middle-aged businessmen for money and gifts… I'm sure most of the people who knew you thought you were a higher class girl than that. I know the Principal was quite concerned and I imagine your parents will be too. Of course…" She grinned as she leaned in closer, dropping her voice to a whisper. "... We _both_ knew differently, didn't we?"

"You _told_ me to!" Tomoko snarled, her expression shifting to one of rage. "You _made me!"
"I did no such thing," Himura said. "I merely said that due to continual school repairs, the budget for the team meant we had to do without a lot of the usual amenities and that any assistance the team members could render would be appreciated. I know that sometime later someone approached you and suggested this as a way to make money. Had I known at the time… well, my players' personal lives are none of my business. It's interesting that you went on many more of these dates than were necessary to pay for your share. You actually have quite the reputation in Shinjuku I hear."

"That's a lie!" Tomoko said, crushing the pictures in her fist. "You made me! You said I had to do that to stay on the team! You… you…!"

"But that's not the story you will tell," Himura purred softly. She snapped her fingers and Hana passed her another envelope. "The Principal will arrange a meeting with your parents and he will recommend suspending you, pending transfer to another school. You will accept this generous offer. Otherwise a second envelope will be sent to your parents and the School Board." She held up the envelope in front of her. "Can you guess what's in this one?"

Tomoko's eyes widened with horror. "No… no…" She whimpered. "You didn't… you couldn't…!"

"It's one of the services offered by those sorts of motels," Himura said, smiling. "There's also a video… the fidelity is quite good, I hear, though naturally I haven't seen it myself. Mr. Matsuda requested a copy himself. What did you think all those mirrors were there for, dear? They're all one-way."

Tomoko sank to her knees, staring sightlessly. "No… no… no…"

"I trust you understand the situation, Tomoko-chan?" Himura said brightly. She tossed the second envelope to the ground in front of her. "Speaking of which, Mr. Matsuda is interested in a second meeting. It might be a good opportunity for you to accommodate him."

That snapped Tomoko out of her reverie. She shuddered, staring in horrified disgust at Himura. "How… how?! How can you do this to people?!"

Himura smiled gently and dropped to one knee in front of her. "My poor little Tomoko. Don't you understand? This was all you were meant for. You were already headed this way when I found you. I just gave you a chance to dream a little." She clucked her tongue. "You knew that… you knew you were never going to be a professional athlete or an Olympian. Your grades are average at best and your parents are nobodies. I was happy to let you dream a little, though." She reached out and gently grasped the girl's chin. "But you bit the hand that fed you and so now reality has to return. It's out of my hands."

Tears were running down Tomoko's cheeks. "N-no… I… I just wanted… I just wanted to play…"

"Shhhhh… shhhh…" Himura cooed. "I know. We all want things we can't have, sweetheart. It's best you learn this now. I'm doing you a favor with this; please remember that. In spite of all of this, I only want what's best for you." She stood smoothly and turned, pausing one last time. "Consider Mr. Matsuda's invitation, please? He is quite influential among my grandfather's associates. I'm sure that if he is pleased with your work, I can find you more pleasant venues for you to use your talents. Don't call, though… I'm sure he'll let me know."

She walked away without a backward glance.

000
After the game, it was unilaterally agreed that the group would go to the Tendo Dojo to celebrate. Kasumi had already prepared a big meal and Riko and Hiroshi had teamed up to come up with a selection of the best 'so bad they're good' movies they could find.

"I'm just saying you should go sit by Rin for a change!" Yuka said. "Like… for the night."

"I thought you didn't want me hitting on her?" Daisuke said.

"I don't!" Yuka retorted. "But she needs some more confidence with boys! So…"

"… Besides, she's practically Ranma's little sister now! They don't have medical terminology to properly describe the damage Ranma'd do to me if I so much as touched her!" Daisuke protested.

"If you touch her you'll be dead before Ranma gets the chance!" Yuka growled, cracking her knuckles. "Don't touch her! Never touch her! Just… Do all the normal boy things without actually making her think you'll touch her."

"So… you want me to schmooze her without actually schmoozing her?" Daisuke shook his head, confused.

"Now you're just making it sound sleezy!"

"It is sleezy! You're trying to pimp me out to her Friend Zone!"

"They do realize we're here and can hear this whole conversation, right?" Akane asked, pillowing her cheek on her fist as she leaned on the table.

"Shhhh… This is all we got until they get the TV set up," Ukyou replied, snagging a cracker to munch on.

"Is getting good, too." Shampoo added, taking a cracker for herself.

"I would like to die, please," Rin said, her face buried in her arms. The few visible parts of her face burned a bright red from embarrassment.

Nabiki stood up from the table and quietly walked out the doors and into the yard. As amusing as Yuka and Daisuke's relationship was, right now she had an excellent chance to satisfy some of her curiosity.

Ranma and Ryouga were out by the pond, talking quietly. It was odd how two Jusenkyo sufferers seemed to gravitate towards the only large source of cold water. She wondered if it was some subconscious defiance thing - an attempt to prove they didn't fear the water. That, or maybe they just really liked koi.

Still, she had been waiting for a chance to catch the two of them alone together.

"Hey, you two," she greeted them as she walked up.

"Oh, h-heya Nabiki," Ryouga said. "I'll get out of your way…"

She put her hand on his shoulder and pushed him back down and sat in the grass next to him, opposite Ranma. The positioning was intentional; She didn't want either of them skittering off on her. Ryouga was the skittish one so she'd keep him between her and Ranma, at least until she got them to hear her out.

Ranma gave her a confused look but shrugged. "You wanted to talk or something, Nabiki?" The redhead asked. There was a note of disappointment in her voice as she recognized Nabiki wasn't there for cuddles.

Nabiki smirked. "Yeah. Nothing bad," she reassured them. "I just wanted a chance to talk quietly. I was curious about your link."

"Uhhh…" Both of them suddenly looked wary, and unconsciously leaned away from her.

Nabiki chuckled. "And you immediately assume I plan something nefarious with it? I'm not sure if I should feel insulted or take that as a compliment." She winked. "No, I'm just… curious. Maybe a little envious? I wanted to know more about it."

"Hasn't Ranma told you about it already?" Ryoga asked, still sounding a little nervous.

"She's told me of it. Shapes that aren't shapes, colors that aren't colors. That sort of stuff," Nabiki said. "I'm guessing that the very nature of it is highly subjective. She pulled her knees up to her chest and cocked her head at them both. "But I know you guys. You're never content to just leave something to do with martial arts. You have to have figured out more about how it works? How it happened?" She looked away, feeling uncharacteristically shy. "How… maybe to reproduce it?"

"Reproduce it?!" Ryoga gaped at her. "You wanna be in someone else's head?"

"Not just anyone, Ryoga," Nabiki said. Her eyes flicked over to Ranma, who blushed a bit. "But… I'm curious… even if it was just a look," she sighed. "I'm honestly jealous of you two. You've come up with an entirely new way to communicate."

Ranma sighed. "Yeah… one that's uncomfortably intimate," she gave Ryoga an apologetic look, though she wasn't entirely sure why. "It's not like we can turn it off, either. Any time bare skin meets bare skin or we get in close proximity? Boom."

"I thought you could control it?" Nabiki asked. "Ranma says things like how she 'doesn't look too deep' or something?"

Ryoga blushed and stared intently at the pond.

"It's not quite like that," he mumbled. "It's more like… You know how when you're somewhere and people near you are having a conversation? You hear it all the same but you can choose whether you actually listen or not? Like that. It's all there."

"And… we've kinda had to figure out what we're perceiving from context," Ranma added. "Most of what we're sensing is still gibberish. Like… it's a language we don't speak yet, and we're picking up words and phrases and stuff through matching it up with what we observe."

"You're teaching each other your own Heart's Language - that no one else can hear but you," Nabiki murmured. "Have either of you got any idea how ridiculously romantic that concept is?"

Both of them got wide-eyed, looked at each other, then quickly looked away, blushing.

"Damnit Nabiki…" Ranma muttered.

"Sorry, sorry!" Nabiki said quickly. "I'm not here to tease you two, honest!" She couldn't help but smirk, however. You two are ADORABLE. She mentally adjusted the odds on the internal bet she was running with herself and continued. "But… you see why I might be curious about something like that?" She smiled at Ranma, who blushed deeper, but smiled back this time.
"A-actually…" Ranma started. "I have kinda been thinking about it. Y'know, based on all the gobbledygook the two Docs have been spouting at each other." She looked at Nabiki. "I guess I prolly ought to give you a crash course in how Ki works." She stood up, hopped over the pond and squatted down on Nabiki's right, taking her hand.

"Now, everything living has Ki. It's life energy," Ranma began. "High level martial artists learn to use it to make themselves lighter, stronger, faster, more durable…"

"... And toss big, gaudy balls of energy?" Nabiki added.

"... Yeah, in rare cases. But that's real power intensive and actually pretty wasteful. Unless you're part dragon like Herb, it's basically a last resort kinda thing. But anyway, you can use it less dramatically for all kinds of stuff. You can even extend it into nonliving objects like Ryouga does for his Iron Cloth technique to make it sharp and durable like steel. But… you can't do it with another living thing. Well, you can, but… Here..." She took Nabiki's hand between hers. She closed her eyes and concentrated until Nabiki could feel an odd pressure squeezing her hand.

"Feel that?" Ranma asked. When Nabiki nodded, she let up. "That's my ki trying to enter your hand. But it can't because your ki repels it. If I pushed harder I could probably force through since your ki isn't very strong yet but it would hurt a lot. That's why ki healing is so tricky; you gotta either have someone with almost no ki or use some tricks to sneak past that resistance. Only specialists like Doc Tofu can get anywhere with that stuff."

"Okay?" Nabiki felt like this should make sense, but it didn't, quite.

"So, Ki is also fueled by emotions. Sorta… generated by 'em, I guess? That's why when you try to use Ki for something big, like a ki blast, you gotta focus on one strong emotion and put everything into it. So, the reason me'n Ryouga can sense each other's emotions is because our Ki doesn't repel."

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "And Ryouga's family link did that?"

Ryouga nodded but at the same time Ranma shook her head.

"No?" Ryouga blinked. "What do you mean, 'no'?"

Ranma turned to look at him. "Doncha get it, Ryo? Your Mom never talked about anything like this. This is new! What I think is… is your link is a tether, like the kind you use when you throw your ki infused bandannas. It made a connection but if we'd been in sync like that our ki blasts woulda just gone right through each other." She grinned. "It was the Shi Shi Hokodan that did it. A huge amount of heavy ki, pressing down and forcing that link open. I think that pushed us into… a resonance of some kind. Brought our auras into alignment so that ki can pass between us more or less freely. And with it, emotions." Ranma's grin grew, visibly proud of her theory.

"So… we'd just need to find a different way to bring auras into alignment like that, without the link," Ryouga said thoughtfully.

"... Or the suicidal depression," Ranma added, leaning over Nabiki to poke at his shoulder.

"Don't know anything that does what the link does, though," Ryouga admitted after a minute of thought.

Ranma scratched her head. "Maybe… we could piggyback using the link? Like… if we held her hand between ours, close enough so the link effect happens between us through her hand, then exchange ki?"
Nabiki's eyes widened as she looked back and forth between them "You mean you could actually do it?"

"Woah woah woah!" Ryouga held up a hand. "No way! If we did that she'd end up linked to both of us! And her ki would probably snap back to normal in a minute or two at most!"

"Yeah… maintaining it would be the trick…" Ranma considered. "It'd probably just last a minute or two."

"But… It would work, right?" Nabiki said, grinning. "Can we try?"

"You seem awful fired up for this…" Ranma said skeptically.

"Do you have any idea how much I've always wanted to be able to read people's minds?!" Nabiki said, beaming. "It's my favourite superpower!"

Ranma sighed. "Okay, for one? It's not reading minds. It's sensing Ki and I'm not even sure it'll work for you if you're not trained enough. What you'll 'see' is ki that corresponds to emotions maybe. Second? It's not a superpower, it martial arts. And third…"

"Third, it isn't people you're reading. It's us," Ryouga said bluntly. "I have enough trouble with her in my head sometimes." He gestured towards Ranma.

"Only sometimes, 'Ryo'?" Nabiki asked coyly, earning a blush and a sheepish look away from the lost boy. Gotcha! she thought. She scooted a little closer to him, put a hand on his shoulder and gave him her best puppy-dog-eyes pleading look. "Please, Ryouga? I just want to see what it's like. Just for a minute. I won't pry, even if I can."

Ryouga's eyes widened as his well-oiled chivalrous instincts kicked in. Or it might just have been a hormonal reaction to a pretty girl. Nabiki was never entirely sure though she found the latter to be somewhat more appealing as it meant she was pretty enough to turn the normally stoic Lost Boy's head. "I… uhh… Ranma?" he said in a slight panic.

Ranma sighed knelt closer as well. "Might as well just give it to her, Ryo. When she gets like this she doesn't take 'no' for an answer."

Ryouga deflated. He grumbled and held out his hand, palm up.

Nabiki grinned and put her hand in his. She noticed his hand was quite large, the palm rough and calloused. Casually she wove her fingers with his.

Ryouga's eyes widened and he blushed. "H-hey…!" he squeaked.

Now why did I never play with Ryouga like this before? Nabiki thought with a smirk. Boys are so much more fun when they get flustered! "We need to have a good connection, right, Ryo?" she asked innocently.

Ranma slapped her hand on top of Nabiki's. "Don't mess with him like that, Nabiki! He'll get all flustered and screw this up or something!" Ranma huffed. Nabiki could tell when Ranma was getting jealously possessive.

But jealously possessive of WHOM? she thought. Even if this didn't work, she was getting a lot of insight into the both of them. And she was finding she was enjoying being in the middle for once.

Akane gave up a good thing! "Boys, boys, no need to fight over little old me," she drawled.
She waited until Ryouga started to protest then very gently started stroking his hand with her thumb. Just a little, an almost imperceptible pressure, but it was enough to watch his protest die with a strangled whimper.

Ranma was a little more wise to her ways. "You're being evil, Nabiki. I can see it in your eyes. You've got that glint you normally only get when there's money involved."

She leaned back against the redhead a bit and gave her a winning smile. "You love Evil Nabiki."

"I have to. It's the only Nabiki there is!" Ranma replied with a smirk of her own. "Okay Ryo, we should probably do this before she ends up swindling you out of your mother or something."

"She is pretty nice," Nabiki admitted. "Kasumi would be able to take a vacation from being the mother figure role around here…"

"Don't even joke about that," Ryouga muttered. "She is pretty nice," Nabiki admitted. "Kasumi would be able to take a vacation from being the mother figure role around here…"

"Okay, okay, point taken!" Nabiki said quickly.

"Right then, just concentrate, Ryouga," Ranma said. "Like we did for the Doc… just a little bit extra, though. Don't wanna drill a hole in her hand."

"... That can happen?" Nabiki asked, suddenly nervous.

Ranma smirked and murmured in her ear. "Well, we don't know yet, Ms. Guinea Pig, but thanks for helping us find out before the Doc had to resort to a paid volunteer or somethin'."

"Now you're just being cruel!" Nabiki sniffed.

Ryouga sighed heavily. "Will you two hush? I'm trying to concentrate here!"

Nabiki shut her mouth and closed her eyes. She wasn't exactly sure what she was supposed to be concentrating on, or even if she was supposed to be concentrating, but she tried regardless.

"Okay… I'm starting to get something…" Ranma said. At the same time, Nabiki started to feel an ache in her hand. Almost like a sharp pain but somehow not localized to one spot, which made absolutely zero sense.

"Yeah… Almost…" Ryouga said, and she felt the sensation increase.

Nabiki chewed her lower lip, not sure if she should speak up, or say 'Ow', or something, until she felt a hot rush as something tore. Her fingers twitched as her hand went numb, then throbbed, and then the pins and needles started.

"Woah, there you are!" Ranma said. "Okay, Nabiki, are you get… oh!"

The exclamation was because it - whatever it was - had started to work. Nabiki gasped as she suddenly became dimly aware of shapes and colors… though not any she had names for. She wasn't seeing them, exactly, but she was aware of them. She sucked in another breath and opened her eyes.

"I see it. Sense it. Whatever!" She broke out into a wide smile as she felt the colors brighten a little and the shapes became just a touch more distinct. Perceiving them was almost like remembering a shape or a color; a picture in her mind, yet not. There were two distinct sources. One was reserved and withdrawn but the other was reaching out towards her.

"I can feel that..." she said, looking over her shoulder at the redhead. Ranma smiled at her, and she felt those slender fingers curl over her hand. There was something like red gold flowing through and around her. Nabiki leaned against her a little more. She could bathe in that feeling all day. That... that's love, isn't it? she thought. It was amazing how much there was!

She could feel a few tendrils going past her, though, to the other presence. Reassurance? She followed them, curious. Ryoga's emotions weren't as dark or has heavy as she had anticipated, though there was a deep, swirling core to it all. Not as black as she had thought it would be. There were even a few much brighter emotions there. Particularly nearest Ranma's.

You naughty boy, Ryoga! I see that! she smirked. Still, there was a fascinating deep stillness in him. "You're a lot less depressed that I thought, Ryo," she said softly, giving him a smile.

There was a surge of color from him. Embarrassment? Self-consciousness? Were emotions supposed to be cute? It was certainly incongruous to the growling, 'Ranma, Prepare to Die!' image Ryoga tried so hard to maintain. She giggled and curiously reached out for them.

Ryoga gasped softly.

Nabiki cocked her head. "You felt that?"

"A... A little." Ryoga admitted. "I... I just wasn't expecting... I mean... You said you weren't going to look..."

"I won't look deep," Nabiki amended. "But... Not like I get many chances to see someone else's feelings, right?" She closed her eyes. She could definitely see what they had been saying, though, about how intimate the whole situation was. She was suddenly conscious that they were likely able to see just as much of her, and swallowed. "Mnnn... Everything is just kinda... out there, isn't it?"

"Toldja," Ranma replied.

Nabiki's brow furrowed as the ache in her hand deepened and the sensation of their emotions began to fade. "Hey, what gives?"

"Your ki is starting to reassert itself," Ryoga said. She could feel him withdraw as the link started to fade out. "Can't keep it up much more than that without risking hurting you."

"But... I wasn't done..." Nabiki whined, slumping a little. She could feel the absence of that red-gold warmth behind her keenly and she shivered. Who'd have thought being inside my own head would feel so... lonely?

Ranma wrapped an arm around her in a hug. "Kinda intense, isn't it?" she said sympathetically. At the same time Ryoga released her hand.

Nabiki sighed and leaned back into the embrace, closing her eyes. Her hand tingled like she had been sitting on it, her fingers thick and numb. She shook it to try and restore circulation.

Ryoga coughed awkwardly and rubbed the back of his head. "Well... I guess you got your wish now, huh?"

"Yeah... I guess so," Nabiki said, a little sadly. She took a deep breath and relaxed, rubbing her hand. Finally, she cracked open an eye. "Now... next wish. Make it last longer."
"What?!" Ryouga squeaked.

"You heard me. You can't just cut someone off after just one of something like _that_!" She folded her arms.

"Nabiki, be reasonable…" Ranma sighed. "Think about what you're asking! Ryo's going to have enough trouble managing to find a normal stable relationship with a girl just being linked to _me_. What happens if he ends up linked to you too?"

Nabiki glanced over her shoulder at Ranma, quirking an eyebrow. "My god, you are dense sometimes, Ranma," she huffed. Fine… FINE. Don't push. Don't PUSH. "All right, all right. Just… let me know if you figure out anything else, okay?"

"Err… yeah…" Ryouga wore a dubious expression.

She felt a mischievous urge. "Thank you Ryo!" she said, leaned in and pecked him on the cheek.

She didn't wait for the explosion but shifted her weight and stood smoothly while Ryouga was frozen and Ranma was spluttering. "I'm gonna go see how they're coming along with the movie. Come be sociable at some point you two, hmmm?" She started walking towards the dojo.

Ranma recovered faster than she had anticipated. She felt a hand grasp her upper arm, the grip gentle but firm and as unbreakable as iron manacles. She had to move faster as Ranma started dragging her past the Dojo to the far side of the building.

Once they were out of sight, Ranma released her. "Okay, what the hell was _that_!?" Ranma hissed. Her blue eyes stood out like glowing gems in the gathering darkness, from the light reflected in them.

"Thanking Ryouga," Nabiki said nonchalantly. She leaned back against the wall and crossed her arms.

"Yeah, but why did you kiss him!?" Ranma demanded.

"Because he's cute when he's flustered," Nabiki said, then her expression grew more serious as she fixed the redhead with a firm stare of her own. "... And you think so too."

Ranma's eyes widened and she took a reflexive step back. "W-wha…?! No I… Nabiki, where would you get…!?"

Nabiki narrowed her eyes at the redhead. "We were _just linked_, and you're going to lie to me, Saotome?" she said, a note of tired exasperation entering her voice.

"I've been linked to Ryouga for a coupla _weeks_ now, and even _I_ don't know what most of it means. Don't try and tell me you've figured me all out from a coupla _minutes_," Ranma shot back.

"I didn't need the link, Ranma! I…" she stopped herself. "... No, I'm not going to fight about this. I'm sorry, I stepped over a line to provoke you because I'm frustrated." She sighed heavily, closed her eyes and folded her arms more tightly across her chest.

"Frustrated?" Ranma cocked her head.

"I'm good at reading other people's feelings, Ranma. Not so good at my own, admittedly. But for doing what I do - _have done_ most of my life - being able to see the divide between what people _say_ they're feeling and what everything _else_ they do says they're feeling has always been a huge part of it. I always used to look out for the ones where what they said they felt often didn't match with my read on them." She shook her head. "You almost never matched up. That's why you were my favorite mark. The thing is... you always believed what you said, too. You were never lying about your feelings, you just honestly didn't know. You're better now... a lot better, but... there are still things where I see that disconnect. Your parents were one of those things, and you scared me really bad over that. Ryouga is another."

Ranma stepped forward, putting a hand on her shoulder. "Nabiki, I'm not... are you worried that...?"

Nabiki smiled and shook her head. "No, I'm not afraid it'll be bad like that. I like Ryouga. Getting this glimpse into his head was actually reassuring. It's part of why I wanted to do it so badly." She slipped her arms around the redhead's waist and pulled her in close for a hug, cuddling her for comfort, something Ranma didn't resist. "I just... well, I consider a lot of possibilities. Akane was in denial a long time and it hurt her - and it nearly cost her you - the one perfect person who was the solution to... well, all of her problems. She wouldn't pull, you wouldn't push, and nothing we could do short of outing Akane would have made you see you were each the solution the other was searching for. I just don't want to go through all that again."

Ranma sighed and slipped her arms around Nabiki's neck. "You're smart, Nabiki... but you don't know everything. Akane wasn't the solution to all my problems. You were." She smiled. "And Akane... as much as I love her and as much as I know she loves me... she's getting more from being with Ucchan and bein' rivals with Ryo than she ever got from me. I was in the way. And even Shampoo... she needed something more than just me. We were all kinda in our own ways before you straightened us out."

"That's... kinda terrifying..." Nabiki admitted. The concept put her a little too close to the center of her mental corkboard of The Madness.

Ranma rested her head on Nabiki's shoulders. "As for Ryo..."

"... I notice you're not even correcting yourself on the pet name," Nabiki noted wryly.

Ranma scowled. "It's a nickname. Guys give each other nicknames! Geez..." She huffed and was quiet for a moment. More timidly, she started speaking again. "My feelings around Ryo are... kinda complex, an' they're all snarled up with... with whatever it is going on in my head now. I'm not..." Ranma's arms tightened around her neck. "... I'm not ready to sort them out yet. There's too much other stuff weighing on me."

"But you still rely on him. Anytime you're not with one of us or your team you're with him," Nabiki said gently. "... Or you're in trouble. Honestly given the choice and recent events, I'd rather you be with him."

Ranma winced. "That... I..." she sighed. "I think this 'anchor' stuff works both ways. Or... maybe it's different on my side, but... That's what he is. And... I'm aware of all this stuff between him an' me. An' I know it could go in a direction I'm really not ready for. And that's why it would really make me feel better if he'd just patch stuff up with Akari an' stop... stop... Y'know..."

"Ranma... saying you're 'not ready' raises a question," Nabiki said, gently running fingers through her hair. "Is there a point you think you would be ready?"

Ranma was silent. Nabiki didn't push, getting the feeling Ranma had reached the limit of what she was comfortable discussing.
"... You serious about the link stuff?" Ranma finally asked. "Or was that just to see if you were right about things between me an' Ryo?"

"I'm deadly serious, Ranma," Nabiki said firmly. "If you can find a way to make that last longer, or even make it stick..." She hugged the redhead a little tighter. "It would have made all of this stuff we've gone through so far so much easier."

"Just gotta figure out how to make it work without Ryo, then," Ranma murmured.

"Mnnn," Nabiki replied noncommittally.

"Nabiki," Ranma raised her head.

"Mnnn."

"Nabiki," Ranma said again. "Don't scheme."

"I mean... I can imagine worse things than being emotionally bonded to a cute, brooding, lonely guy..." Nabiki said off-handedly.

"Aren't you the one who has been complaining about how hard this harem business is to make work as it is!??"

"Shush, dear, I'm fantasizing about your boyfriend."

"That's it, I'm telling Akane," Ranma suddenly released her and danced back a step or two.

"Don't you dare!" Nabiki made a swipe for the redhead, which she dodged easily. "She'd kill me if she found out about any of this! And you!"

"Nope. She'd just maim me," the redhead said cheerfully. "But you're right, she'd definitely kill you. Hey Akane...!"

"Come back here!" Nabiki lunged for Ranma again which became a chase around the yard. By the time Nabiki actually caught up with the giggling redhead, they had both forgotten what the chase was about.

000

The next morning found a surprise waiting for them at the gates of Furinkan, in the person of one Kodachi Kuno. The self-styled Black Rose was standing squarely in the middle of the entryway, arms crossed and eyes closed as she waited for them.

Ranma could feel the girls behind her bristle but she held a hand up. "Mebbe I can defuse this without a fight?" She stepped forward tentatively. "Umm... hey, Kodachi? What's up?"

Kodachi cracked an eye open and smiled. "Ah, Ran, a pleasure to see you this morning. You have been quite busy as of late! I've noticed your time has been rather monopolized by..." she shot a nasty glance at the group of girls behind Ranma, "Peasant concerns. I do so abhor such dramatics as this but I require your presence after school for dinner and I felt it necessary to be properly positioned to address any..." another nasty look... "Objections."

Akane glared right back and cracked her knuckles.

"Oh! Uhh..." Ranma looked behind her sheepishly. She knew that Thursday night was supposed to be her date with Akane. "I... uhh... I'd love to, Kodachi..."
"Wonderful!" Kodachi clapped her hands. "I'll have the limo swing by to pick us up after class, then!"

"... but I have a date!" Ranma said quickly, before realizing the rabbit hole she had just dug for herself. It occurred to her suddenly that she had set herself up to have to answer the next logical question and she seriously doubted that Kodachi would be so understanding about the situation. Ooops?

Kodachi raised an eyebrow and opened her mouth to ask that very question… but then her eyes fell on Ryouga, standing near the periphery of the group. "... Ah. Of course, your Fiance. Ryouga, wasn't it?" She cocked her head as if trying to place his face. "Well then, there isn't a problem! You shall have your date at the Kuno Manor! Allow me to entertain you! As your betrothed, what I want to discuss involves him as well, of course."

Ryouga's eyes widened and he gave Ranma a terrified look.

Crap crap crap! "I'd… uh… we'd love to, but… uhh…" Ranma laughed nervously. Damage control! Damage control! "... We… uh… we have reservations?"

Kodachi chuckled. "Nonsense. The chefs at the Kuno estate are far superior to any working at any restaurant in the Tokyo area. If there's a deposit I'll happily reimburse you. Would 50,000 yen cover it?"

"Wou… buh…" Ranma's brain briefly slipped out of gear at the figure casually tossed out. "I- I'm… that's not necessary, really, we just…"

"Oh think nothing of it!" Kodachi said brightly. "Then it's a date! I'll see you both after school. Don't worry about dressing up, we'll keep this casual." She turned to leave then added over her shoulder. "Oh, and you may wish to take that Tendo girl to a vet. She's showing all the signs of being quite rabid."

Ranma nodded, then reached out an arm to catch the collar of Akane's blouse before the youngest Tendo could rush her.

"Let me go, Ranma!" Akane growled.

"Calm down, little sister," Nabiki put a hand on Akane's shoulder. "As… satisfying as letting you beat Kodachi into paste would be, it's a bad idea with the omiai still up in the air."

"But tonight was my night!" Akane struggled a bit then slumped, frustrated tears forming in her eyes. "This isn't fair…"

Nabiki took Akane by the shoulders and turned her sister to look at her. "You can have your date on Friday night, okay?"

Akane's eyes widened. "But Nabiki… that's your date night!"

"It's like Kasumi said - to make this work needs flexibility more than rigid rules, right?" Nabiki said with a reassuring smile. "It's okay, I already got a couple of dates in."

"Wait… you want me and Ranma to actually go!?!" Ryouga came up beside them, looking aghast. "To the Kuno Estate!?!"

"I get that the Kunos are bad news…" Sayuri said, coming up even with them along with the rest. "But is there some reason why going to their Estate is so much worse than, say, dinner in a restaurant?"

Ryouga got a haunted look on his face. "It's a maze of madness, pain and humiliation," he said in a tormented whisper.

"A long, straight hallway is that for you, Ryouga," Yuka quipped.

"No, no... he's pretty much on the ball with this one," Ranma said, swallowing.

"The Kuno's idea of 'home security' is to make their home a maze full of deathtraps," Akane explained.

"Like... electrified fences, armed guards...?" Sayuri asked, seeking clarification.

"Like a Bond villain," Akane supplied. "Giant washing machines, giant electrified rat traps..."

"Minefields, poison dart traps..." Shampoo added helpfully, coming up beside them.

"... And a giant man-eating alligator named 'Mr Green Turtle,' Ranma finished.

"Last I heard Kuno was talking about getting some sharks to add to the mix," Nabiki said. "He was grumbling about how the laser beams were on back order, though."

"Okay so, in other words, more crazy martial artist nonsense and never ever go there. Got it." Yuka said.

"That's actually a pretty good rule for martial artists, too!" Ryouga said. "Why are we going there again? Why would she even invite Ranma? I thought she hated Ranma's girl side?"

"Long story. Basically I kinda convinced her brother than I was male Ranma's sister. Kodachi got the story from him, and since I wasn't a rival for her 'Darling Ranma' anymore, she decided to kiss up to me to try and get some advantage in the omiai." She sighed. "Then the cover story got... complicated."

"Complicated how?" Ryouga asked, a worried note in his voice.

Ranma took a deep breath. "I'm currently the illegitimate child of Genma Saotome and some Irish woman he met while on the road, whom Nodoka Saotome refuses to acknowledge. My parents won't even allow me to have my own name, forcing me to use Ranma's, so Kodachi named me 'Ran' using the character for 'Orchid' rather than 'Wild'. She feels bad for me and wants to make me a part of the Kuno family, and thinks I'm engaged to you. She thinks I'm abused and deprived at home and that's why I don't know most of the girl-side stuff and so she's decided once she and Ranma are married she's gonna teach me how to be ladylike."

Ryouga blinked.

"To be fair, that's cooler than your actual backstory, Ranma," Yuka said. "And more believable."

"Maybe Senpai could cultivate an Irish accent!" Rin piped in.

"Not a good idea," Yuka shook her head. "Red hair, blue eyes, short, busty, athletic, tsundere personality, tomboy and an Irish accent? She'd overrun her fetish checklist allowance."

"What happens if you do that?" Rin asked in a hushed tone.

"Like big overfilled meat balloons."

"Ewwwwwww!" Rin hid behind Sayuri. "S-seriously?!"

Ranma massaged the bridge of her nose. "Why am I friends with you guys again?"

"Okay…" Ryouga scratched the back of his head. "So why am I going?"

"Because it's a good way to keep tabs on Kodachi and find out her side of the omiai so we don't end up getting blindsided by a shotgun wedding. Again," Nabiki said.

"None of that sounds like anything that is even remotely my problem," Ryouga said, folding his arms.

"Don't be a jackass, Ryouga," Ukyou growled.

"Pig boy should help out! Mess is partly Pig boy's fault, after all!" Shampoo added, standing next to Ukyou.

Ryouga scowled. "Hey, helping is one thing, but that place is full of water traps. And it's also full of things that a little black piglet is less than a mouthful for! This is Ranma's thing, there's no reason I need to…"

Ranma felt a touch on her shoulder. She turned slightly as Nabiki came up beside her and whispered in her ear.

"Ask him nicely," Nabiki said, then straightened and winked.

Ranma gave her a skeptical look, then shrugged.

"Hey, Ryo… I know it's a lot to ask, but I'd really feel better not going into that place alone," Ranma said sheepishly. "I can loan you the waterproof soap bar before gym so you can shower with it - that way you don't gotta worry about the water traps."

Ryouga ground to a halt. He looked away, suddenly seeming uncertain. "Uhh… well… I mean…"

"Please?" Ranma pleaded. She didn't even need to fake it this time; the Kuno Manor was an eleven out of ten on the creep factor for her and she truly and honestly did not want to be there alone and at the mercy of Kodachi or any other Kunos who happened to be at home.

"Okay, okay…" Ryouga held up his hands. "I'll come, just…" he looked away from her awkwardly. "I'll come."

Ranma sighed in relief and smiled at him. "Thank you, Ryouga! This means a lot. I owe you for this!"

"You owe me several," he muttered, glancing at her before looking away again. "We… uh… we should get to class." He started off walking towards the school building.

"Huh. That never used to work with him," Ranma said. She honestly did feel relieved he had agreed to come. "I guess I just needed to be more honest?"

"Yes, I'm sure that's why," Nabiki said cryptically.

Ranma gave Nabiki a skeptical look then shrugged and took off after Ryouga to ensure that he didn't get lost.
Akane came up beside Nabiki as the others passed them. "You're plotting."

"I am not. I am as innocent and pure as the newly driven snow," Nabiki replied.

"Don't plot." Akane growled. Her expression softened. "Look, about the date…"

"Akane, it's fine," Nabiki waved her off.

"No, it's not," Akane insisted. "And… I've got an idea… umm… a compromise, I guess?"

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "I'm listening…"

When lunch time rolled around, Akane surprisingly co-opted both Ranma and Ryouga, citing a need to blow off some steam from the frustration at Kodachi's messing up her plans.

"I hope you're not planning to use me as a Kodachi-proxy, Tendo," Ryouga said. Akane had wanted a spar so Ranma could evaluate her form and train her better.

"Oh no. I have more than enough reasons to hit you as it is, Hibiki." She grinned, settling into her stance. "But today I'm more interested in getting better so when I do fight Kodachi, she'll need someone to explain what hit her after the fight!"

Ryouga shrugged, keeping his arms crossed. "I won't go so easy on you, then," he said, and simply waited.

Akane glared. She flexed her legs to lower her center of gravity then darted forward, putting on a burst of speed in hopes of catching him off-guard. She went low and to the left, hoping that either he'd fail to dodge or that she could dart past and get a side kick in at his back.

He did neither. Instead, he reached out, snagged her wrist and yanked, using her momentum to pull her off balance and then tossed her to the side almost casually.

She landed heavily, rolled and bounced back up onto her feet.

"Don't telegraph your moves so much," Ryouga said, crossing his arms again.

"You're trying too hard for a one-hit KO, Akane," Ranma added. "That's never gonna work on a guy like Ryouga. This is an endurance fight; you gotta wear him down and focus on taking as few hits as possible."

Akane grit her teeth but closed her eyes, took a deep breath and centered herself before nodding. Cooking is just Martial Arts. Martial Arts is just Cooking. Be patient, pay attention to the steps like Ukyou taught you. She realized there was some irony in being mindful of her instruction with Ukyou on cooking while training in martial arts, as it was Ukyou that had originally referenced martial arts training when teaching her to cook. But cooking had been where those lessons had been most recently reinforced, and to the most dramatic effect. Watch what they're doing. Analyze… He's watching my eyes to see where I'm going to strike. Linger too long on a spot and that's where he will expect an attack.

She opened her eyes again. She locked eyes with Ryouga and waited until he gave a subtle nod. This was a spar after all, not just an opportunity for her to vent her frustrations.

She darted in again. It looked very much like she was trying the same move but she shifted her weight and the instant he went for the intercept and throw again, she pivoted away, feinting into an elbow to the face. Ryouga blocked that with a hand, but it got her close enough to drop down for a leg sweep that forced him to hop back and away.

Ryouga dropped into a proper stance this time as he did so, with a grin on his face. "Good," he nodded slightly. "Nice feint."

Akane grinned back. She was starting to feel more charitable towards Ryouga ever since she figured out he was subtly guiding her. He was still being chivalrous but he was treating her as a person and fellow martial artist rather than a porcelain doll on a pedestal. Still being deferential to a girl despite your protests, Ryouga? She smirked. I wonder… let's see if a page from Ranma's playbook works? "You know, I think I like you a lot better like this than being the lovestruck dope, Ryouga," she said with a smile. "You're actually kinda noble when you get down to it."

Ryouga blinked. "I… am?" His stance slipped as a slight blush colored his cheeks.

Wide open! Akane thought with triumph as she darted in, keeping low and driving an uppercut into his chin that lifted him off his feet and sent him sprawling onto his back. She put all her force into it, feeling her knuckles actually pop from the impact.

The blow would have KO'd just about anyone else Akane had ever fought, but he flipped casually back onto his feet and rubbed his chin with a scowl.

"That was dirty," Ryouga said, glowering at her.

"Seriously?!" Akane rubbed her fist, her hand sore from the blow. "I put everything I had into that one!"

"Toldja one-hit KO's don't work on him," Ranma said with a smirk.

"And don't think that trick'll work again, Tendo," Ryouga sneered.

"Oh please, Ryouga," Ranma scoffed. "You and I both know she could bat her eyes at you right now while your jaw still stings and you'd step right into it again. I should know, I did it to you myself enough times."

Ryouga blushed and glared at the redhead. "Th-that was different!"

"Unlike Ranma though, I don't like winning that way," Akane said. "I'd rather do it through skill and strength."

"Hey, deception is a skill!" Ranma protested. "But… you got a point. Don't think it'd work on anyone but Ryo here." She grinned. "He's got a definite weak spot when it comes to Tendo females."

"Ranma, don't help," Ryouga said tightly.

Akane straightened, raised an eyebrow and crossed her arms. "Oh?"

"Yeah, apparently Nabiki can do it to him too," Ranma said. "One 'Please, Ryouga?' and he melts like an ice cube in the oven."

"Ranma, I swear to god..." Ryouga growled threateningly.

Akane put her hands on her hips. "Ryouga! Don't you dare develop a 'thing' for my sister!"
"I'm not…! Auuugh!" Ryouga threw up his hands. "Fine. Fine. I'm done!" He walked over to the bench near where they had been sparring and grabbed one of the towels they had laid out.

"Awww… C'mon Ryo, we didn't mean it like that!" Ranma trotted over to him quickly. "Look, we're not serious… Akane and I go back and forth like this all the time." She put a hand on his shoulder. "I'm sorry…"

Akane raised an eyebrow. An apology? Just like that, huh, Ranma? She felt a surge of jealousy again but wrestled it down. Watch what they're doing. Analyze… she thought.

Ryouga sighed and the tension drained out of his shoulders. "... No, it's okay," Ryouga replied, then resumed toweling off his face. "I'm being oversensitive."

Akane raised an eyebrow. Since when could Ranma just… DEFUSE him like that!? She walked up quietly. "Ummm… Ryouga? I'm sorry too. I didn't mean anything by it. I mean…" she chuckled. "It's not like you'd actually be interested in someone like Nabiki…"

Ryouga got a nasty smirk. "Hmm? Oh… actually, I think I totally could go for Nabiki."

"What!?" Ranma and Akane yelped in unison.

Ryouga slung the towel over his shoulder nonchalantly. "Oh, definitely. Sexiest Tendo sister by far. I just don't like it being implied I'm soft or anything."

"HOW DARE Y-" Akane roared, then stopped as she noticed something in his eyes. Her own eyes widened and her glare redoubled. "You're trying to make me mad!"

"See? I can do it too," Ryouga said, tossing the towel aside. "What's the matter? You can dish it out but you can't take it? I thought you and Ranma went back and forth like this 'all the time'?" He dropped into a ready stance. "Besides… It kinda irks me that after everything you think you have any say in who I develop an interest in!"

Akane's vision filled with red. "I get a say because she's my sister!" She charged him, throwing a brutal combo of punches and kicks that actually successfully forced him to step back a pace.

He blocked a strike and bound her arm a moment. "You know, Kasumi is really pretty too…"

"RRRRAAAAAUGH!" She kneed him in the gut hard enough to double even him over, freed her arm then brought her hands down in a two-fisted hammerblow to his back. He didn't drop like expected, so she danced back before he could counter.

"Better," Ryouga said. "Gotta get you good and mad before I even feel those hits. Now… you wanna make me eat my words? You better learn to control it!"

"I'll show you control!"

Ranma backed away as both of them started to glow, their auras flickering into the visible spectrum. "Uh oh…"

000

…In other news, practise for the soccer team has been cancelled until the soccer field can be re-turfed. Students are requested to avoid the area until the broken water main has been repaired. Additionally, the Facilities Maintenance department has decided to shift their fundraising bake sale from bi-monthly to monthly, and will be kicking it off this Saturday…
"I guess that's one way to get an excuse to use the showers," Ranma muttered. She was drenched, her school uniform dripping and her hair bedraggled. She had a cross-looking P-chan in her arms sitting on top of a pile of Ryouga's clothes.

"How was I supposed to know the pipe was that close to the surface?" Akane huffed, also soaking wet.

"Maybe not create giant craters in the soccer field either way?" Ranma suggested.

"You're one to talk!" Akane groused. She glanced at P-chan and scowled. "You know… now I get why you found me carrying him around like that so infuriating."

"Be nice. If we made him walk he'd take forever to get there on his stubby little legs and he'd just get lost along the way anyway," Ranma said. "Besides, as far as the rest of the school knows he's still your pet piglet. You don't wanna look like you're abusin' a helpless animal, do you?"

"I'm weighing my options," Akane growled. "Depends if he keeps looking so insufferably smug."

"I think that's just how pigs look," Ranma said.

"Bwee," P-chan commented.

"You don't get to say anything right now," Akane said. "Keep quiet or I'll tell Nabiki what you said!"

"Don't bother, Akane. Nabiki'd take it as a compliment and probably get all flirty with him just to mess with you," Ranma said sagely.

Akane scowled. "... I'm tempted to do it anyway, just to see her kill him through blood loss."

"Could you not complicate this relationship situation any more than it already is?" Ranma grumbled.

"Me!?" Akane laughed in disbelief. "Ranma, have you seen yourself lately?!"

"What?" Ranma frowned at her in confusion. "What'd I do now?"

"You seriously expect me to believe you somehow haven't noticed how much your relationship with Ryouga has changed?" Akane put her hands on her hips.

"Not this again…" Ranma sighed, sparing a hand to rub her temples. "Akane…"

"Don't try and tell me everything is normal, Ranma!" Akane continued. "I'm not stupid!"

"I know, okay?!" Ranma shouted back, exasperated. Akane shrank back a bit, eyes wide. Even Ryouga reared back a bit, eyeing the redhead nervously.

Ranma closed her eyes and took a steadying breath. "I haven't talked about it because you keep blowing up over it! Yeah, stuff between me and Ryouga is different. We nearly died together. That changes stuff. You of all people should know that." She opened her eyes and gave Akane a stern look.

Akane's gaze dropped guiltily.

"Ryo and I useta be friends in middle school. I know it didn't sound like it, but we were." She resumed walking. "Yeah, we'd fight over the bread, but… me an' pops did that all the time. I thought it was just something friends did. I didn't know any better. But he was also the only guy I could relate to in the whole school. Useta walk him home every day because he'd get lost. I know we talked a lot… don't remember what about. Pointless stuff, mostly. I always thought our banter was just that. I didn't know I was hurting him with all the things I said. I always liked him… I mean, him'n Ucchan were the only real friends I had ever had."

Akane's expression softened. "Ranma… You never said anything about this before…"

P-chan bwee'd softly, looking up at the redhead.

"I didn't remember most of it," Ranma said. "It's like with Ucchan; Once we moved on I just kinda blotted it out because Pops said a 'man amongst men' didn't need friends and remembering just… made it harder. I did that with a lot of stuff - anything Pops said wasn't 'manly' or was a 'distraction from the Art'." She glanced down at herself. "I guess now that I'm… I'm embracing this side of myself, it's opened me up to remembering more of it."

They reached the change rooms. Ranma opened the men's side door, depositing P-chan and the pile of clothes inside. She put Ryoga's school bag down next to them. "Hope you gotta change of clothes in there, buddy." She reached into her own bag and pulled out a small plastic case that contained the precious bar of waterproofing soap. "Here's the soap. Don't forget to use it." She stepped back out and closed the door behind her then headed for the girl's side.

"It's kinda weird not feeling like I can go in there anymore," Ranma admitted as they walked into the locker area. "Guess I've sorta normalized being a girl at school." She started stripping off her clothes in a businesslike fashion, hanging her uniform on one of the hooks along the wall in the hope that it would dry.

"Are you… okay with that?" Akane asked tentatively.

Ranma paused, ironically in the middle of unhooking her bra. "I… think so. I mean… the earth didn't open up and swallow me when I stopped fighting it." She finished taking off her underthings and walked to the shower. "I'm still kinda all over the place on being comfortable with it… What I wanna be at any given moment doesn't always line up so good with what I have to be. I think it'll be easier when this stupid challenge is done and I can just… come to school as whatever I feel like."

Akane followed her into the shower. "You mean you might still come to school as a girl sometimes?"

Ranma shrugged. "Yeah? I mean, everyone here already knows about it, so why not?" She turned on the hot water, adjusting the temperature before stepping into the stream.

Akane noticed she didn't change, despite the water being plenty warm. "Ranma…!"

"Used the soap yesterday before the game, just in case Principal Coco-Nuts tried to get me with hot water again. I won't be able to change back until tomorrow sometime." She sighed, loosing her hair from the pigtail and running her fingers through it.

Akane swallowed. Female Ranma showering was one of her guilty fantasies and something she hadn't really expected to get to see without the water being so cold as to put the kibosh on any sort of romantic overtures.

I shouldn't… I shouldn't… it's perverted and we're at school and someone could walk in and Ryoga is right across the hall and… and she's being open and vulnerable with me… She closed her eyes, realizing that was a big part of what was turning her on about the situation.

Ranma hummed softly as she rolled her head back, eyes closed, almost purring. "You know… it's weird how hot water feels different as a girl. I guess my skin is more sensitive like this?" Her back was arched, water running in rivulets down her body, following her curves and drawing the eye to them. She glanced over her shoulder at Akane. "You gonna shower too?"

Akane's eyes widened a bit. The part of her brain that was worried about propriety, about getting caught and about being perceived as a pervert was quickly dogpiled, bound, gagged and stuffed in a box to be mailed off to Tunisia. She stepped into the stall behind Ranma and slipped her arms around her, pressing up behind.

"Eeep?!" Ranma froze as she felt Akane come up behind her. "Akane what are you doing!?" she hissed. "Someone might see!"

"So they'll see," Akane murmured and kissed the spot between the redhead's neck and shoulder. "We're saving hot water this way. It's the responsible thing to do, right?" She felt a small thrill at the soft moan this elicited from the redhead.

"Y-you want to do this here? Now?" Ranma asked nervously, though she didn't resist as Akane's hand dipped lower. "W-we're only supposed to rinse off… Ryouga will be waiting outside…"

"Let him wait."

000

Ryouga was waiting for them outside, leaning against the wall with his arms crossed and eyes closed. He was wearing his usual yellow shirt and black pants, which seemed to have benefitted from his mother's mending and laundry skills.

"Uh… hey Ryo." Ranma said sheepishly. She had left her hair unbound and switched to jeans, t-shirt and sweatshirt (sized for her girl side) which she had stashed away for after games. Akane was behind her, wearing a spare volleyball team tracksuit they had found.

Ryouga held up a hand in nonchalant greeting.

"Uhm… sorry we took so long…" Ranma added.

"We missed the start of last period," Ryouga said. "By a lot."

Ranma hung her head. "... I know."

"Sorry Ryo?" Akane said, looking somewhat embarrassed.

Ryouga cracked an eye open to regard her coolly. He closed it again and turned his head away a bit. "No one came through here, if you were wondering."

Ranma cocked her head curiously. "Why would we…?"

Ryouga sighed. "You… weren't quiet."

Both girls flushed a deep, deep crimson. "Oh," they said in unison.

"I would have left, but… I can't afford to get lost right now," he muttered. He sighed again and pushed off the wall. "We… should probably just go. School's almost over."
The two girls flanked him, subdued, as they started walking.

"I'm… uhhh… impressed, actually," Ranma said timidly. "I woulda… expected you to be passed out on the floor in a puddle of blood if we were that… ummm… obvious…"

Ryouga hung his head a bit. "I've started carrying a couple of boxes of tissue in my bag. I managed to keep it under control. Used up most of a box, though. Tossed it before you got out."

"I thought you looked a little pale. Whichever class cleans out the wastebaskets around here is probably going to get a bit of a shock," Ranma said wryly.

"I'm really sorry, Ryouga!" Akane said. "I… It was a spur of the moment thing!"

He held up a hand, waving her off. "It's… it's fine. I… well, by this point it's pretty obvious that… uhh.. That that happens…" He blushed. "I was just worried that someone would come along and catch you."

"That would have been awkward…" Akane huddled down a bit more, jamming her hands into her pockets. "Not that this isn't."

They continued walking in silence. The hallways were oppressively empty and quiet, most active classes at this time of day on other floors.

"That was cruel of me, wasn't it?" Akane said softly. "Even if you're over me and you and Ranma are just friends… rubbing your face in it like that…"

"Akane… Nobody ever really 'gets over' someone like you," Ryouga said, giving her a sad smile. "Maybe my feelings for you have matured a little but I'll always have them. And… right now you're happy and in love. As long as that's true, I don't need any apologies."

Akane's eyes widened. "R-Ryouga…"

"Maybe I'll head home on my own today," he said, walking to the door and pushing it open. He turned back, framed by the bright light of the afternoon outside, saluted them with two fingers, then slipped outside.

Akane watched the door close, hands clasped over her heart, eyes wide as the wind from outside ruffled her hair.

Next to her, Ranma stood, arms crossed, foot tapping the floor and an annoyed expression on her face. She grit her teeth as the door finally clicked shut.

"OI! WHERE THE HELL DO YOU THINK YOU'RE GOING, RYOUGA?! WE'VE GOT A DINNER DATE TONIGHT!!"

000

"You did not need to shout that loud enough for the entire school to hear, Ranma," Ryouga grumbled, sitting on the steps, flanked by a sulking redhead and a bemused Tendo.

"Shut *up./*Ranma growled. "If you hadn't tried to be all cool and dramatic I wouldn't have had to yell after you!"

"You could have phrased it better, Ranma," Akane chided. "You're just going to make it harder to dispel the rumor that you and Ryouga are an item."
Ranma hunched her shoulders. "You also shut up, Akane. I don't need you an' Ryo ganging up on me."

"We're not ganging up on you, Ranma," Akane said, still bemused. She got up and sat down between Ranma and Ryouga, putting an arm around her shoulders.

Ranma blushed and slouched a little more, but started to relax.

"This is better, though…" Akane said. "I kinda missed the three of us together, you know? I mean, I know it's my fault and everything, and… I honestly do like being your rival, Ryouga, even if you're not really taking it seriously, but… I liked the times when the three of us got along, even if they were short." She put her other arm around Ryouga's waist and gave both of them a grin. "I missed having my boys."

Ranma scoffed. "We're not your 'boys', Akane."

Ryouga gave the redhead a skeptical look. "Yeah, we are."

Ranma looked up at him, opened her mouth to protest then sighed and slumped further. "... Yeah, we are."

Akane giggled lightly. "That's better." She kissed Ranma on the cheek. "I know I've been crazy jealous lately. I'm sorry. I promise to try and keep my temper under control."

"Just promise to try and listen to us before you make a judgement?" Ranma said. "I mean… Sometimes we do screw up, but we're not trying to hurt you, honest."

"There usually is a good explanation." Ryouga said.

Akane looked at him, smiled and nodded. Then she cocked her head. "So… Why is my sister teasing you, Ryouga? That usually means she wants something. What was she trying to get from you?"

Ryouga's eyes widened. "Uhhhh… There's a good explanation…" he said nervously, giving Ranma a panicked look.

"Y-yeah! A really good explanation!" Ranma echoed as she desperately tried to think of one that didn't involve telling Akane about the link. If Akane finds out… she'll think it's another Koi Rod thing and freak out!

"Yesssss…" Akane frowned. "And I'd like to hear it…"

"So would I!"

Ranma and Ryouga both jumped and squeaked in unison, turning to see Nabiki there, leaning against the side of the building. She had that smirk on her face that typically accompanied a hefty bill.

"Nabiki! I… uhh… we were just… Umm…" Ryouga stammered. "Akane wanted to know…"

"Oh, I heard." Nabiki grinned. She sauntered up and in one smooth motion plopped herself down in the Lost Boy's lap.

Ryouga immediately locked up like he had turned to stone. Ranma and Akane gaped at her.

"Truth is, I was just looking into seeing if Amazon law will let me keep a male concubine or two."
Nabiki wrapped her arms around Ryoga's neck and hugged him, grinning at her sister. "If it does, do you think I should keep him? I mean, you already trained him so well…"

Akane's eyes were wide with astonishment, which quickly became rage. She stood up, clenching her fists. "I don't believe you, Nabiki! How can you be so shameless!? You shouldn't torment poor Ryoga like that!"

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "Oh? Are we back to 'Poor Ryoga' now? I thought you didn't want your little P-chan anymore?"

"Ugh! You're so unbelievable!" Akane stomped. "Fine. I'm walking home with Shampoo and Ukyou before Kodachi shows up. You can walk home alone for all I care!" She huffed, lifted her nose into the air, turned and marched away.

Nabiki watched her go. "Well… That's going to make things a bit awkward for a while," she said nonchalantly.

Ranma sighed in relief. "Thanks Nabiki, you really saved us."

"I know. Telling little sister about the Link will need to be done carefully, and probably with lots of chocolate and apology gifts. Depends on what we find out about it. Plus, I'm not entirely sure I'm ready to share your little trick just yet." She turned a bit on Ryoga's lap, grinning at Ranma. "You two still owe me, though."

Ranma sighed. This was liable to be expensive.

"C-Could you get off my lap, Nabiki?" Ryoga whimpered. He was holding one of his bandanas to his nose. "Please?"

Nabiki smirked. "Awww… A nosebleed for me, Ry?" She wriggled just a bit. "I'll get up, but first let me make something clear: You two are my boys now. Akane dumped you both. She gets you back on loan, but you belong to me." She poked Ryoga's nose.

"Nabiki, you can't claim Ryoga, he's got a girlfriend!" Ranma protested.

"I'm… sure she just means as a minion, like Hiroshi or Daisuke… right?" Ryoga said nervously.

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "I haven't decided yet. Like I said, I've still gotta check Amazon law."

"Nabiki!" Ranma protested.

Nabiki hopped up off Ryoga's lap and giggled. "Oh don't worry, Ranma. I'll be good. At least… as good as the situation calls for." She winked. "Now, I'd better get lost before a certain crazed gymnast takes my head off with a ribbon and see what I can do to defuse my sister. Have fun tonight!" She waved and turned, trotting off towards the gate.

Ryoga seemed to slump as his previously tense muscles all went slack. He looked almost like he had been drained by Ms. Hinako.

Ranma sighed and leaned back against the steps. "I think we're in trouble, Ryo…"

"Your girlfriends are going to kill me, Ranma…"

000

Thankfully, Kodachi was in one of her less manic moods and seemed content on the limo ride to the estate to just chatter about minor things without requiring Ranma or Ryouga to input much more than the occasional noise to indicate they were listening.

The two of them kept close together, looking nervously around the grounds as they walked towards the imposing main doors of the estate.

"Ummm… So… is this… y'know… safe?" Ranma asked, trying to remember where she had run into traps before. The grounds looked totally different. Apparently they had been completely re-landscaped since she had been there last.

"Hmmm? Why of course!" Kodachi gave her a confused look. "Why wouldn't it be?"

"W-well… Your… uh… 'security system' is kinda infamous…" Ranma said sheepishly.

Kodachi laughed in her disturbing way. "Oh, that? Those are only for intruders. The staff all know that you're guests and are welcome, and the trapdoors and tripwires have been disarmed. Just be sure to not go wandering off."

Ryouga swallowed hard.

Ranma noticed. "Ryouga… If there was ever a time I could totally understand you wanting to hold my hand…" She murmured to him.

He didn't let her finish, grasping her hand tightly.

Good. Now I get to deal with Kodachi's craziness AND the general madness of the House of Kuno, PLUS have Ryouga and me in each other's heads. This can't POSSIBLY end in disaster. Ranma thought sourly. I can't think of a single thing that could make this situation worse.

"Oh, that reminds me!" Kodachi said. "My dear brother is home from the hospital. I told him you and your fiancee were coming and he seemed quite eager to congratulate you both on your impending nuptials!"

Ranma and Ryouga both stopped dead in their tracks.

"You were thinking 'This can't possibly get any worse', weren't you?" Ryouga murmured under his breath at her.

"Yeah, yeah actually I was. This one is on me," Ranma admitted.

"No, I did it too," Ryouga replied. He swallowed hard again.

Ranma glanced at his shirt. Oh no… "Ryouga, is that the shirt…"

"Metal weights sewn in," Ryouga confirmed. He tapped the spot over his heart with a finger and there was a slight 'clink'. "And I used the waterproofing soap, so… no escaping as P-chan this time."

Ranma blanched. She remembered Kuno's nearly uncontrollable lightning attack and how the kendoist had very nearly stopped Ryouga's heart with it. She felt a surge of fear and protectiveness she normally only associated with Akane or Nabiki, and gripped his hand tighter. "Stay close to me. I'm not going to let him hurt you."

Ryouga shook his head. "Ranma, you don't want to be touching me if he pulls out the lightning again…"
"Stay close to me," she growled. "I'll put him back in the hospital if I have to, but he's not hurting you!"

She felt a surge of what felt like surprise from him and... something else? Not quite embarrassment. He studied her a moment, then his own grip tightened reassuringly. "I'll stay close."

She relaxed a little, feeling a bit better. She still had to think of a way to deal with Kuno, though.

Kodachi noticed them not following and turned. "Well, are you coming?"

_We'll just have to wing it and see how it goes. Maybe if he tries to use it indoors it'll mess up like it did at the school and we'll get a chance to run for it._ She took a deep breath and started walking, leading Ryouga along with her.

Kodachi led them inside. The halls were high and wide. The upper floors of the manor were classical Edo Castle style, though Ranma knew down below were twisted labyrinths, modern deathtraps and European medieval-style stone dungeons. Servants were actually visible this time around, gliding about silently as they made preparations for dinner. They passed a large hall, where what looked like a veritable feast was being laid out. The smells of roasted meats, grilled seafood and vegetables and other delicacies wafted to her nose, momentarily soothing her disquiet as her hunger made itself known with a loud grumble from her tummy.

Kodachi smiled. "Well... _someone_ apparently has an appetite! Though that is another thing I suppose we shall have to work on. Such noises are hardly ladylike."

"It's not like I can help it," Ranma protested, putting her free hand on her belly.

"More regular mealtimes and a better diet will subdue such things," Kodachi lectured wisely. "I have had mine tailored by dieticians especially for my metabolism, and we will see about doing the same for you, though..." She glanced at them and sighed. "I suppose we will have to make it a _budget_ plan. But for now, while we wait for them to prepare, my brother would like to speak to you."

Ranma stopped again. "Ummm... Kodachi, are you sure that's a good idea?" She unconsciously moved closer to Ryouga's side. "Last time he saw Ryo they got in a fight, and... Y'know, I'd hate it if we wrecked your house... again..."

Kodachi sighed. "While I can't make promises about my brother's behaviour, you _are_ my guests, and if he decides to become rowdy, I shall deal with him personally." She looked thoughtful for a moment. "Truth be told, he has been... _different_ since he returned from the hospital."

"Different how?" Ranma asked nervously.

Kodachi looked pensive. "Different... in a way he has not been in... in a very long time. Not since before..." She shook her head. "It is a family matter, no business of yours, and it would be unseemly for me to discuss my brother's... _medical concerns_ behind his back. Ask him yourself if you wish. In fact..." She hesitated, then gave Ranma a genuine look of concern. "... In fact I would _implore_ you do so. I... I wish... an objective viewpoint on the matter. It is part of why I asked you here today. Among... _other_ concerns."

Ranma cocked her head. "Is everything okay, Kodachi?"

Kodachi sighed and shook her head. "We can discuss it at dinner. For now, I ask that you fulfill my brother's request to speak with you. I will be close by if you need me."
She led them to a large set of sliding doors. She opened them and stepped inside. The room was large and lit by a number of skylights to give it an open, airy feel without being exposed to the elements. Most of the room was taken up by a large indoor rock garden, the sand meticulously combed around a number of large boulders. At the end of a stone footpath through the middle was the largest, and atop it, sitting in a meditative pose, was Tatewaki Kuno. He was wearing a lighter-colored uwagi than was his norm, almost white.

"Brother, dear," Kodachi called out. "Your precious pig-tailed goddess is here."

Tatewaki opened his eyes and his gaze shifted towards the door until he spotted them. His eyes widened as he saw Ranma, then narrowed when he saw Ryouga, and an expression something like pain crossed his face. He stood smoothly and hopped down from his rock to walk towards them.

"Be ready, just in case," Ranma said quietly to Ryouga. "Don't let go of my hand - can't have you getting lost in a place like this!"

Tatewaki stopped a few feet from them. His expression was unreadable, but Ranma knew how quickly his demeanor could change. Surprisingly, however, he bowed.

"My memory of the last few… years is somewhat suspect but I am aware I have wronged you both grievously in the recent past. I have no excuse for my behaviour and I wish to make amends in whatever manner you deem appropriate."

Tatewaki straightened and took a deep breath. "Allow me a moment to explain myself. It is likely of no surprise to you that the Kuno family is… blighted." His jaw tightened. "We have been afflicted with madness of varying degrees going back generations. This has ranged from mere eccentricities to… well, you are acquainted with my father, yes?" He reached into his pocket and pulled out a small orange plastic pill bottle, the kind prescriptions came in. "This madness is wholly treatable by modern medicine, but for many years my family has eschewed such remedies as a shameful admission of our weakness. As a boy, I was the first Kuno to be properly diagnosed and treated and I was the first Kuno to have a choice."

"So… wait… you're medicated now?" Ranma asked skeptically. "And we're supposed to believe you're a totally different person?"

Tatewaki shook his head. "Medicated, yes. A totally different person? No, of course not. I am now merely willing to accept responsibility for my actions, past and future." He smiled weakly. "I imagine trusting me is difficult and I do not blame you. I know that I will need to prove much through my actions rather than my words, but… I was hoping you could at least help me to understand the scope of my wrongs. My recollections during my times of… imbalance are fanciful at best." His gaze moved to Ryouga. "For instance, in my fevered imaginings I had struck you down with a bolt of lightning that I wielded as if it were a sword and that you exploded into a cloud of steam, using magic to escape my righteous wrath. That I attacked you I do not doubt, but I imagine the circumstances were considerably less fanciful. I… understand you were found later and taken to the hospital."

"I beg your forgiveness and ask what reparations I might make?"

Ryouga blinked. "I… uhh…" He rubbed the back of his head. "It wasn't… a lot of stuff happened that day, actually. You're not the only guy who's flown off the handle and started a fight in Nerima…"
"What others do is irrelevant. A misdeed is a misdeed," Tatewaki said. "I will reflect on this for a proper apology. For now, I am relieved you are well." His eyes glanced down to their hands, still clasped. A small flicker of a smile crossed his face, sad, wistful. "And I see that the affection you have for each other that so enraged me remains unharmed by my rampage."

The both blushed and looked down at the ground, embarrassed, though they didn't let go.

"Which leads me to the greater part of my crimes," Tatewaki continued, his gaze shifting to Ranma. He regarded her for a moment, studying her as if fascinated. "I... am struck anew at your beauty, I must admit. I apologize for that, for I know now that my advances were unwelcome and unwanted, but..." his voice grew slightly hoarse... "I... had thought what I remembered of you was merely delusional embellishment - that someone such as you could not truly exist as I had remembered. To see you now... I can understand why I believed you a creature of fae and divinity." He trailed off a bit, his gaze intense before he shook his head. "I... apologize. I should not go on so in the presence of your beloved." He took a deep breath. "My sister has told me much. Far more than I had bothered to learn in my addled state, apparently. I understand that you go by the name of 'Ran', yes?"

Ranma nodded dumbly. She was entirely uncertain how to reconcile this Kuno who was talking with her now with the raving madman she had last seen casting lightning bolts around like a vengeful Greek god.

"She has told me you have some... difficulties with your family and that due to the circumstances of your birth they do not support or acknowledge you. She has offered you the support of House Kuno. I would like to second that support. Though I understand fully if you would prefer I not be involved in the matter." He closed his eyes for a moment. "I have also... secured the materials of a questionable nature that I had stockpiled of both you and Akane Tendo. I will destroy them at your request, or turn them over if you prefer to pursue this invasion of privacy legally."

"Legally...?" Ranma boggled. "Uhh... no, no, that's alright. Just burn 'em or something. We don't wanna sue you or anything. You weren't that bad!"

He smiled weakly again. "That's reassuring to hear you say, though... I find the evidence against me distressing. This is not how the samurai I idealized would behave." He nodded. "I will have the servants destroy the material involving yourself at once. I will need to speak to Akane Tendo separately on her wishes. Though..." he swallowed, "That is a conversation I dread. I... had hoped that should my apology to you go well, you might be able to offer some insights on how..." He trailed off.

"How to not end up right back in the hospital?" Ranma asked.

"I would deserve no less, but such things do nothing to amend the damages I have wrought." Tatewaki admitted. "I would like to speak with her before returning to school. Is the... 'challenge' I issued still being observed?"

"No, she finally managed to shame it outta most of them and beat it outta the rest," Ranma said, feeling a twinge of pride at Akane's accomplishment.

Tatewaki sagged in relief. "Thank God. I had feared..." He closed his eyes. "For that alone I am unsure how to ever properly make amends. I am astonished it took her as long as she did to hospitalize me."

"Well... you're pretty tough," Ranma said, smiling a little. "She wasn't exactly holding back for your sake."
"There was another, a girl… or a boy?" He frowned. "My memory is replete with nonsense about magical transformations. But… Ukyou Kuonji. I remember striking them. Are they well?"

"She is, yeah," Ranma said.

"She," Tatewaki nodded. "I remember…" He blinked. "No, nevermind, it is no business of mine."

"They're a couple, yeah," Ranma said again. It was a bit of an omission but she wanted to flag Akane as unavailable as firmly as she could while Kuno was being so uncharacteristically reasonable. There was no telling how long it would last.

Tatewaki winced. "Then I have imposed where I am profoundly unwanted by my very nature. Thank you. This… gives me some idea of how to approach the problem." He gripped the pill bottle more tightly then slipped it back into his pocket. "One last inquiry… her sister, Nabiki."

Ranma cocked her head. "Nabiki? Why? I don't think you did anything bad to her…"

Tatewaki chuckled bitterly. "Oh yes I did," he said softly. "But I imagine that is an old wound for her. But… is she well?" He clasped his hands, fidgeting in a most Un-Kuno-like manner. "Is… is she happy? I know… at least I remember that she was engaged to your brother, but… well, had my sister not explained that situation to me I would have believed it madness as well."

Ranma paused. She considered a moment. "I think maybe you should ask her yourself…" Ranma said carefully. "... Tachi."

He looked surprised at that, then she saw the spark of understanding in his eyes. "I… will do that," he said finally. "Thank you. I would hope to speak to your brother as well. I have many fences to mend with him if he is soon to marry my sister, after all."

Ranma chuckled nervously. "Aheh… yeah…"

Tatewaki took a deep breath, looking like a weight had been lifted off his shoulders. "Again… thank you. I will leave you to your dinner, then."

"You're not eating with us?" Ranma asked, then mentally kicked herself for tempting fate.

He smiled wanly. "I would think it would be awkward. There will be time for socialization perhaps when I have proven my convictions to be more than words, at least unto myself. I will take a walk and think. You have given me sufficient food for thought that I feel little need to fill my belly as well." He nodded to them both in turn. "Enjoy your evening."

"Uh… thanks…" Ranma said. She and Ryousa stepped aside as Tatewaki walked past them and down the hallway the way they had come.

"That was… new," Ryousa said finally.

"The transformation is startling, I admit," Kodachi said, walking over to them where she had been waiting. She looked down the hallway, watching her brother's retreating form. "I am saddened to see his fire so dimmed with regret, but… It is good to have back the brother I had growing up."

"I always thought you hated his guts," Ranma admitted sheepishly.

"I hated what he had become - the ridiculous caricature that had taken his place - and that I still relied on him so dearly despite his obvious madness. She sighed. "Had I known the solution was so simple… Though I suppose this will give him the resolve to keep his sanity closer this time."
She motioned for them to follow her as she walked back towards the banquet hall.

"Uhh… Out of curiosity you aren't… ummm…" Ranma asked timidly.

Kodachi shot her a glare, then her expression softened. "I am aware of how I am perceived, Ran. The solution to my problems is unfortunately not to be found in a little white pill." She sighed. "I am sure my therapist could show you a list of diagnoses the length of my arm about what is wrong with me, but it is nothing so simple or treatable as a chemical imbalance in the brain. Not that father would tolerate such a thing after fighting Tatewaki so long about his own."

"Yeah, well…" Ranma muttered. "I haven't exactly had good experiences with your Dad, either."

"Having been attending his school for a brief time, I better understand your dislike of him," Kodachi admitted. "He… was not always like this." She looked down.

Ranma felt a pang of sympathy. Something familiar in Kodachi's expression. "It… kinda sucks when family isn't there for you, huh?" She put a hand on Kodachi's shoulder.

Kodachi glanced at her and smiled. One of those rare, genuine smiles that had started appearing. "I think that's why I have grown to like you, Ran. That is something that you of all people would understand." She patted the hand on her shoulder and continued on. "It is actually concerns about your family I wanted to talk about. But… after the main course, at least."

000

Nabiki had to jog a bit to catch up to Akane and the others but, with all her training at the Nekohanten, such a run wasn't even leaving her out of breath anymore.

"Akane, wait up!"

Akane stopped. Nabiki could see her sister's back tense as she heard those words and winced. Ouch, she's still mad. I think I hit a nerve or two back there.

"You can stand to jog a little to catch up," Akane said, and resumed walking. Her chin was held high as Nabiki came even with her and fell into step beside her.

"Akane, come on. You honestly can't be jealous of me and Ryoga," Nabiki said.

"Why not?" Akane sniffed. "He's still my friend, and I know he's sensitive, and I don't like you teasing him like that any more than Ranma!" She folded her arms.

Nabiki rolled her eyes. "Oh come off it, sis! How many times did you run into his arms or gush on about how reliable he was or what a great guy he was? Specifically while Ranma was there? At least when I tease Ryoga I'm doing it to tease Ryoga."

Akane's haughty expression fell away and her gaze dropped. "I know I haven't been a good friend to him. I… I'm trying to do better." She glared at Nabiki. "And you should too! Don't taunt him like that!"

Nabiki smirked and folded her hands behind the back of her head as she walked. "It's only taunting if it's something he can't have…" she said off-handedly.

"Nabiki!" Akane yelped, aghast.

"What? This Tendo still likes boys, y'know," She waggled her eyebrows.
"You're engaged! To his best friend no less!" Akane said, eyes wide.

"What about our little situation says 'monogamy' to you, Akane?" Nabiki asked.

Akane blushed. "Th-that… That's 'Fiancee's Tea' stuff!" she sputtered. "Ryouga isn't part of any of that!"

"That's probably just a matter of formality," Nabiki noted dryly.

"Nabiki! You keep on getting on my case about accusing Ranma and Ryouga of doing something untoward… how can you turn around and…" Akane started, outraged.

"Because I wasn't on your case about accusing them, I was on your case about being irrationally jealous about it!" Nabiki shot back, glaring at her. "That's poison for this relationship, sis, even if it's directed at someone outside of the group! How long did it take you to figure out which way you swung, huh? How much longer after that were you in denial about it?"

Akane blinked, then blushed. "Y-you think that Ranma is…?"

"Let's see. A gender curse that hit just at the apex of puberty, overbearing parents obsessed with hyper-masculine behaviour while at the same time repressing and isolating him like they are absolutely terrified of him interacting with people in a normal way for any length of time, his best friend is a girl, his gender identity is increasingly fluid, and a near death experience with a male rival with whom he has enough emotional tension to hang a bridge from? Yeah, I'd say the deck is pretty firmly stacked against him not even being curious." Nabiki held up a finger. "And if she's going to be curious, I'd rather it be with someone Ranma trusts. If I counted the number of guys on that list on one hand I wouldn't have enough to make a fist."

Akane looked down at the ground, twiddling her fingers. "Y-yeah, but… Wait, how do you know Ranma trusts Ryouga?"

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "You really think Ranma would honor his promise to keep Ryouga's secret if he didn't trust you with him? You, the most important thing in the world to Ranma? You think he'd tolerate P-chan for a single second, no matter how mad it made you, if he thought there was any chance of Ryouga hurting you or taking advantage of you?"

"I…" Akane seemed stunned. "... I didn't think of that." She slumped a little more. "... Now I feel worse about the whole situation with P-chan…"

"Have a little faith, sis," Nabiki said. "Ranma loves you. Even when you fought or broke up. Even when you frustrated the hell out of him. You're the one he always dove off a cliff to catch, even if he had no idea how to land it. His relationships with other people don't change any of that."

"He loves you too, Nabiki," Akane said, straightening a little. "You keep talking like you're not the most important person in his life right now."

Nabiki blushed a little in spite of herself. She remembered the sea of red-gold emotion that had enfolded her during her too-brief experience in the link and smiled. "... Yeah, he does. I don't know if I'm the most important…"

Akane nudged her in the ribs. "Stop. False modesty isn't your thing." She sighed. "So… If that's true… why are you teasing Ryouga?"

"So if something does happen I can get in on it," Nabiki deadpanned.
"Nabiki!"

"What? He's cute," Nabiki said nonchalantly. "If he wasn't dirt poor and a pile of issues I probably would have nabbed him for myself when you and Ranma were dating."

"I don't believe you!" Akane said, though her expression was more bemused than outraged.

"I still might have if you hadn't claimed him so early on!" Nabiki gave her a sidelong glance.

Akane blinked. "Wha…? Claimed!?"

"Oh please. You knew he was completely head-over-heels in love with you. Any time he was at the table, you were sitting next to him. Any time you had a problem, you went to him. You like him, even if boys aren't really your thing. That much was obvious. I figured you were planning on keeping them both and were just wrestling with your own hangups." She smirked. "Or did I read you and 'your boys' all wrong?"

Akane scowled. "Not all of us are perverts like you, Nabiki!"

"I heard some interesting sounds coming from the girl's change room that say different," Nabiki waggled her eyebrows.

"Eep," Akane ducked her head and blushed. "Y-you… you…"

"Heard that? Yeah, it was kind of hard to miss!" Nabiki chortled. "I came looking for you three when you vanished after making the soccer field a disaster area. Poor Ryouga was standing watch outside the changeroom trying to stuff tissue in his ears and his nose at the same time. And you're on my case for taunting him? I put out some 'Wet floor' signs on the stairwells to get people to use the ones on the other side. You're welcome." She chuckled. "I'm pretty daring, but even I wouldn't dream of doing it in the girl's showers! I didn't even know you guys had gotten to that stage yet!"

Akane's blush deepened and she hunched her shoulders like she wanted to disappear.

Nabiki's eyes widened. "... Oh my. That was…" She covered her mouth, snorting. "Oh my god Akane, you seductress!"

"You're never going to let me live this down, are you," Akane whimpered and held her school bag over her head to hide her face.

"Oh no, no, no, I approve of this! I think I could learn from you!" Nabiki grinned.

Akane peeked out from her bag. "We really are perverts, aren't we?" she said, abashed.

"I think the deck was stacked against us in that regard," Nabiki said. "Given what we now know about Dad's younger years, I think it might be a family trait. Might as well have fun with it before we end up old and boring like him."

"If it's a family trait, what does that mean for Kasumi?" Akane put her bookbag down.

Nabiki shrugged. "Either she's got a secret life she's somehow kept from us where she blows off steam, or she's so repressed that unless her first time is with a literal superhuman she's going to kill them when she finally uncorks it all."

"Nabiki…! I'm sure when she finally gets together with Doc Tofu…" Akane began chiding her.

"Oh, not a chance, sugar," Ukyou sidled up beside Akane, startling her. "The Doc is a great guy, but… His blood pressure spikes if she's in the same room as him. There's just no way."

"Doctor Tofu not survive being with Tendo womans," Shampoo appeared suddenly on Nabiki's left. "Not have fort… fort… not have what needed to survive night."

"Trust us, we know from personal experience," Ukyou winked.

Akane and Nabiki both blushed and looked at the ground.

"I think our girlfriends are calling us out," Nabiki said in aside to Akane.

Riko popped up beside Shampoo. Apparently the entire conversation had been heard by most of the group. "So, just out of curiosity, when you say 'girlfriends', do you mean girlfriends, or girlfriends? mrmph?!"

Yuka had snuck up beside Riko and put an arm around her head, put her hand over her mouth and dragged her away to the other side of the street in a headlock.

"Riko, we do not inquire about such things," Daisuke said sagely as he followed them. "To peer too deeply into the Nerima Relationship Hypercube is to invite madness."

"Just look at the Kunos," Hiroshi added, following behind. "They used to be normal, upstanding citizens who donated to charity and volunteered at soup kitchens. Then they met Ranma Saotome. Boom! Bokkens and black roses everywhere."

"Really?" Rin asked, fascinated.

"No, not really. The Kunos were always nuts." Sayuri sighed, following up the rear. "... They're right about the rest of it, though."

Akane and Nabiki looked at each other.

"Mmmmaaaaybe next time we should have these little 'heart to hearts' in a less public place?" Akane said sheepishly.

The meal was ridiculously lavish, with enough food for ten people. Naturally Ranma was starving, but she dipped into her Martial Arts Dining training to allow her to eat her fill without looking like she was stuffing her face. After all, Kodachi seemed to expect a certain decorum.

Kodachi, more used to such abundance, ate at a more sedate pace. "Do try the quail eggs, dear. They're quite good." She seemed to enjoy showing off for the two of them.

"You're actually a good cook yourself, right Kodachi?" Ranma said, remembering (barely) not to talk with her mouth full.

"It's a skill I have," Kodachi admitted demurely. "Though I prefer to reserve it for my family and… eventually… my darling Ranma. Cooking myself gives me an opportunity to ensure a quiet night."

"Ah… so that's why you keep putting sleeping powder in food - out of habit," Ranma said. "You're used to zonking out your Dad and Brother."

Kodachi laughed. "Hence my thought that having a more formal dinner would put your minds at ease." She leaned back in her chair, crossed her legs and swirled the wine in her glass. "But perhaps now I should bring up the topic I wished to discuss. You may be unaware but I have had my agents monitoring your family for some time…”

"You had Sasuke spying at the omiai. We know." Ranma said.

Kodachi frowned. "Yes… well… I shall have to have a chat with Sasuke about that later. Isn't that right, Sasuke?"

There was a puff of smoke and the diminutive ninja was next to her chair, bowing and scraping. "Yes, Mistress Kodachi! I'm sorry, Mistress Kodachi! It won't happen again, Mistress Kodachi!"

"Go easy on him," Ranma sighed. "We told him he could stay. I mean, he's your retainer - he's allowed to be there for these things."

Kodachi raised an eyebrow. "Hmmm… I will take that under consideration then. Sasuke? Redeem yourself. Repeat for me what you overheard."

"Yes, Mistress Kodachi." Sasuke bowed again then pushed himself up into a kneeling position. "Young Master Ranma had a conversation with his mother before the omiai began and you had arrived, Mistress. Lady Nodoka explained to the young Master what would be expected of him after the wedding. It was… very specific and comprehensive, covering…” He swallowed. "... Well, covering most of his life, in fact. It seems Master Ranma's mother has thought out his future in considerable detail."

"That isn't the information I wished, Sasuke," Kodachi growled warningly.

"Y-yes Mistress!" He bowed again. "Please forgive me, I was getting to that! There were two things of particular note. Firstly, Lady Nodoka was of the expectation that Ranma would… would surrender any children he had with his future bride - Which shall undoubtedly be Mistress Kodachi - to his mother and father to raise while… while he and his wife would embark upon a perpetual training journey. There was some concern on Master Ranma's part that… his mother intended to raise them as her own and that he would not be allowed any part in their lives until they were in their teens."

Ryouga shot Ranma a startled look.

"Which is utterly unacceptable!" Kodachi said sharply. "I would not have my future children deprived of my darling Ranma's guidance and love! Certainly not to be raised by that idiot father of his!" She took a breath and steadied herself. "But there was another matter that concerned me far more. Sasuke?"

"Y-yes… When… when the young Master balked… his mother mentioned seppuku… and a contract… Something that seemed to greatly unnerve Master Ranma."

"Yes. This," Kodachi said. She turned to Ranma. "Can you explain this for me?"

Ranma closed her eyes and sighed. "Yeah… yeah I can," she said quietly. "When Pops wanted to take m-Ranma on a training journey when he was only two years old, Ma objected. So… he made it a point of honor. He made a contract with her that if, after 14 years, he returned and he had not succeeded in making Ranma a 'man amongst men', he and Ranma would commit seppuku."

Kodachi blinked. "I can see this for her husband, but how can she hold this binding to Ranma if he was just a child and could not agree?"

Ranma slumped a little more. "He… He pretended it was fingerpainting, and got Ranma to put his handprint on it."
Kodachi raised an eyebrow. "And... she holds this as valid? And given how truly manly my darling Ranma is... does she not hold the contract as fulfilled?"

Ranma shook her head. "No. She has declared that he must always uphold the contract to her standards. Which means... following her plan for his life."

Kodachi narrowed her eyes. "And... do you believe her capable of demanding the contract be fulfilled, should she not be satisfied?"

Ranma swallowed. She remembered that awful moment when she had seen something dark and hateful flicker behind her mother's eyes, how the mask had slipped when her mother's plans for the future were in any way questioned. "... Yes. Yes, I think that she is."

She felt a hand on hers and a sense of overriding concern, and turned to see Ryouga staring at her, wearing a horrified expression.

"... Unacceptable," Kodachi said finally. She stared at her wine glass, her brow furrowed, then finally flung it across the room in a fury. "Unacceptable!"

Ranma winced as the sound of breaking glass echoed through the chamber.

"I will not have my future life... or that of the progeny of House Kuno dictated to me!" Kodachi said. "And I will not stand by as my darling Ranma's life is held hostage to do it!" She closed her eyes and took a few deep breaths. She clenched her hand into a fist, then relaxed it as she slowly regained control. "I apologize for my outburst. I... had hoped Nodoka Saotome was different. She has such charmingly traditional views. But... it seems she is no different from my own mother in regards to her children." She turned her gaze to Ran. "Thank you... If you had not reached out to me, I might not have known of this. I will need to take measures to ensure that contract is never ever called in."

"Kodachi..." Ranma's eyes widened. "... Please tell me you won't do anything drastic to Mom!"

Kodachi raised an eyebrow. "I will do what is necessary to protect my darling Ranma. What form that takes will depend on her, and is none of your concern."

"Ranma is very protective of his mother," Ryouga interjected. "If you hurt her, he'll hate you for it..." he glanced at Ranma, "... no matter what she's threatened to do to him."

Kodachi considered a moment, a sad expression crossing her face. "Then let him hate me," she said softly. "Better to remain true to my own heart and fearless then allow fear of possible consequences control me." She chuckled softly, uncharacteristically quiet. "Listen to me... I am sounding more like my brother every day..."

"Perhaps, instead, you should listen to your dear Brother?" a voice said from the doorway. "For he would tell you such extreme measures are unnecessary."

They all looked over to the large double doors of the banquet hall to see Tatewaki standing there with his arms folded.

Kodachi's eyes narrowed. "What do you mean, Brother, dear?" she asked, a warning tone in her voice.

Tatewaki walked forward with his eyes closed, a contemplative look on his face. "Tell me... this' contract' that Ranma Saotome is bound to... how has he agreed to its precepts?"
"Heh… Pops got him to put his handprint on it when he was two," Ranma said, watching Tatewaki warily.

"This was explained to Ranma? He understood the matter at such a young age?" Tatewaki opened an eye and regarded her curiously.

Ranma blushed and looked away, feeling oddly like a student who's teacher had just called her out. "I… n-no, he… he thought it was fingerprinting. He had no idea the contract even existed until he came to Nerima and Pops told him."

"I see," Tatewaki said, closing his eyes again and resuming his walk. "And at any point has Ranma given his oath to this pledge, either by word or pen? Or has it been merely assumed he is bound by it?"

Ranma blinked. "I… he's never… I mean, I didn't think it was a choice…"

"A debt of honor cannot be compelled, not even by a parent. Honor is and must be a matter of personal choice. It must be accepted," Tatewaki said sternly. "A child not even out of swaddling clothes cannot make such a choice."

"It's… it's considered a matter of family honor," Ranma said quietly.

"Oh?" Tatewaki opened an eye again. "And the Saotome Clan is honorable, is it? With its multitude of conflicting marriage agreements and its sham of an omiai?" he huffed. "Addled though I may have been, what I have learned in the last two days is more than enough to doubt that."

"H-hey!" Ranma pushed her chair back and got up, glaring at the kendoist. "As the heir to the Saotome School of Anything Goes…"

Tatewaki waved his hand, cutting her off. "This is no challenge. These are not matters in question, these are matters which directly affect the honor of my household. At the very least, would you claim that Genma Saotome has acted honorably? In his abuse of pledges of honor; in his acts of thievery; in his treatment of you, his own child?"

"I…" Ranma stepped back a bit, taken aback by Kuno's argument. "W-well… no, maybe not…"

"There is no reason to defend the honor of one who will not uphold it," Tatewaki said. "It is a man's obligation to teach his children moral standards through the model of his own behavior. Has Genma Saotome done this consistently?"

"I…" Ranma trailed off again. She backed into the chair and stopped.

"Then he has not upheld Bushido. The agreement he made with his wife is his own and it was on his own honor that he staked Ranma's participation in committing seppuku. Ranma's personal honor is not bound to the agreement, because he has not agreed to it. The only way Ranma is bound is to uphold his father's honor, as a dutiful son. But… with his father's honor in such a state, one doubts there is anything left to uphold."

Ranma simply stared at him.

Tatewaki saw her expression, a momentary flicker of pain across his features again, then looked away. "I… apologize. I fear I am applying my own insights into my conflict with my father over my own medical care to your situation and I may be unfairly judging your family as a result."
"Your own conflict…?” Ryouga asked, moving up beside Ranma, unconsciously putting a hand on her shoulder.

"My father does not simply disapprove of my… reliance on contrivances such as these to maintain my sanity." Tatewaki fished out the bottle of pills, "He has forbidden it. As the head of the House Kuno this would normally be entirely within his right but the consequences of accepting his doctrine have already proven to be dire and the source of much shame for me. I have… spent much of my time in the hospital exploring the complexities of Bushido to find a solution.” He gripped the bottle then put it back in his pocket. "Fortunately, my father's own abdication of his responsibilities has made my struggle easier. He no longer is the head of the House, as that title and responsibility fell to me when he was declared unfit and was sent to America to recover. It is merely as my father that I must deal with him and his unreasonable demands. Admittedly, Ranma does not have such an advantage."

"So… what would be the honorable thing?” Ranma asked nervously. Part of her didn't want the answer. Part of her couldn't believe she was asking Kuno for it.

Tatewaki considered. "Their authority over Ranma remains that of his parents and nothing more. Writing up a document stating otherwise does not arbitrarily enhance that authority. They cannot compel Ranma to commit seppuku, nor would it stain his honor to refuse. Loyalty is but one precept of Bushido. Rectitude overrides it. Justice must be supreme for honor to be served and from how this agreement has been imposed and manipulated, to say nothing of the costs Ranma's death would incur on those to whom he has been obligated…” He shook his head. "The decision must ultimately be Ranma's, based on what his soul tells him of right and wrong. But I fear he would be forced to disown his family and end the Saotome line. Though I believe it would be the honorable choice in this matter, it would require he live as a Ronin."

"That's… a hard choice,” Ranma said quietly. While being a Ronin hardly had the same meaning today as it had in feudal times, it was still a personal mark. "So… the choice is which dishonor does he want to live with then?"

Tatewaki bowed his head sadly. "I fear his family would leave him little choice should they decide to enforce the contract. To use a matter of honor to compel and control both Ranma's future wife and his unborn children crosses the line into injustice and cannot be borne either way."

Ranma shuddered. "They're not taking away my kids…”

Tastewaki blinked. "Am I to understand they wish to compel you to surrender your own children as well?"

"Absolutely not," Kodachi interrupted. She stood and walked over to Ranma, gripping her by the shoulders. "Ran…"

Ranma shook her head. "No, I mean…” She sighed. "No, I won't let that happen. I won't… I won't…” She felt something bubble up from deep within her, something from that dark place in her own mind she didn't dare look.

"I won't let them do this to anyone else!"

After some cajoling, Tatewaki was convinced to stay for dessert. The transformation in him remained startling; He was thoughtful, well-mannered and even charming, his usual overblown posturing and bluster modulated into a kind of self-aware confidence and self-assuredness. Ranma noticed that Kodachi was still a little uncertain about him as well.

Amazing how much of a difference a small thing makes, she thought. He remembers being 'Tachi' though... I wonder how Nabiki will react to that?

She yawned unconsciously, blinking a bit as she realized she had been asked a question, but hadn't actually been able to make sense of it.

"Oh! My apologies, I seem to have been prattling on," Tatewaki said, looking up at a large grandfather clock at the edge of the room. "I lost track of the time."

"It has been a while since I have enjoyed a meal this much, Brother. I think this once you can be forgiven." Kodachi smiled. It was a warmer smile that Ranma remembered Kodachi having. Both of the Kuno siblings had been surprising her all night.

"Yeah, though... I feel I finally get what you're talking about when you call me 'peasant'," Ryouga admitted. "I couldn't follow half of that conversation."

"Nonsense. I was actually pleasantly surprised that your French was as good as it is," Kodachi said.

"Where did you pick that up?" Ranma asked, curious. It had been bizarre to see Kodachi slip into a few phrases in a foreign language and then watch as Ryouga went right along with it without skipping a beat in the same language.

"I... Didn't even realize it was French to be honest. I just ended up in this small town somewhere while I was wandering and I stuck around a few months to work enough to try and save up some travel money. That was the language they spoke and I just picked it up after a while." Ryouga rubbed the back of his head sheepishly.

"There is no way I'm believing you ended up in France on your way to the Tendo Dojo," Ranma said skeptically.

"Actually, from the inflection he's using, I'd say the dialect is more Quebecois," Kodachi replied. Seeing Ranma's look she amended. "... French Canadian."

"Okay, that's worse!" Ranma poked him in the chest. "There is no way... Wait, didn't your Mom say something about you and an American girl?"

"Anna? No, I'm pretty sure she's from Hokkaido. They all speak english in Hokkaido, right?" Ryouga replied, confused.

"... No?"

"Oh... ummm... Maybe it wasn't Hokkaido then..."

Ranma laughed and smacked her forehead with the hell of her hand. "How do you end up on the wrong continent?!"

"I don't know!" Ryouga threw his hands up in the air then sighed and leaned back in his chair.

"Perhaps to avoid a lengthy journey home, the two of you should stay the night here then?" Tatewaki said. "I can have guest quarters prepared. I believe it's been some time since we used them..."

Ranma and Ryouga blanched.
"You're… not referring to the dungeon, are you?" Ranma asked in a worried tone.

Tatewaki blinked. "Dungeon? There…" His eyes widened, then he covered them with his hand. "Sister, please tell me I didn't…?"

"Almost two years ago, brother dear," Kodachi said off handedly. "You spent quite a lot of time getting them properly atmospheric."

Tatewaki groaned. "I… apologize if any of that was inflicted on you. I thought that was… nevermind. Proper guest quarters, I mean. The ones for visiting dignitaries."

"Ah yes. They haven't been used in some time, but I know the staff has been keeping them up regardless," Kodachi nodded.

"You don't need to go to any trouble…" Ranma said hurriedly. The idea of spending the night at the Kuno Manor was perhaps a little less terrifying with these new, less-crazy Kunos around, but it was still not somewhere she felt exactly safe.

"Nonsense!" Kodachi said. "We haven't had guests in… I don't remember how long! This will be a nice change. Plus, it will be nice to have someone to talk to on the ride to school."

"Uh… quick question… does your Dad…?" Ranma asked nervously. They hadn't seen the Principal, thankfully, but it was a large castle.

"Father lives at the school," Kodachi said dryly.

"He visits occasionally but I believe he prefers to be somewhere over which he has uncontested control," Tatewaki added, unable to keep a sneer out of his voice.

"You are quite safe from him here," Kodachi finished, giving Ranma a reassuring pat on the shoulder. "I am well aware of how he has been treating you and my darling Ranma and he is very aware of my displeasure with him over it."

Ranma giggled in spite of herself. "Yes, I kinda caught the tail end of your conversation with him."

"Is that the one where she tossed him out of a third story window?" Ryouga asked.

"And landed on him, yes," Ranma nodded.

Tatewaki looked back and forth between them, as if uncertain if they were serious. "It… seems I have missed a considerable amount."

000

The room was in an older wing of the Kuno Estate, far removed from the current 'security measures', and harkening back to grander days for the family. The style was a bit dated but it certainly seemed comfortable enough, with a large attached private bathroom with furo and a balcony overlooking the grounds. There was only one flaw Ryouga could find with the room and it was a rather glaring one.

"Ummm… Kodachi, there's only one bed…" Ryouga said, glancing around the room.

Kodachi had a knowing smirk on her face. "Yes, imagine that? Well… I'm sure you and your fiancee will behave. Not that anyone would know, I'm told the soundproofing in this wing is quite good. Just leave your clothes outside of the door and the staff will see they are laundered and returned by morning.” She gave Ranma a wink and turned, walking away before either of them could raise any further objections.

"I… think she thinks she's doing us a favor…” Ranma said self consciously as she stepped inside the room.

Ryouga sighed and looked around. There were a couple of chairs, but no couch. Still, it looked like he could scrounge up some cushions and some pillows from the bed. "I'll take the floor."

Ranma rolled her eyes. "Ryouga, please don't pull that chivalrous bullcrap with me?"

"What you want the floor?" Ryouga raised an eyebrow.

Ranma shook her head. "Nah. We just share the bed."

Ryouga's eyes widened as she walked over to the admittedly enormous bed. "Wait, what!?"

"Oh come on, we've shared a tent before, right? This thing is literally twice the size of your tent." She sat down on the corner of it. "This is… what, King size plus?"

"The situation was different then!" Ryouga protested.

Ranma crossed her arms and gave him a bemused look. "What, the one where I was zonked out of my brain on love magic from that stupid fishing rod and trying to be your ideal wife?"

"I… "Ryouga blushed, remembering waking up to find her in his tent. His current opinion of the redhead was coloring that memory somewhat differently than it had been before. "Yes. That was a stupid magic rod!"

"Yeah, and you didn't do anything then, and I'm not magically in love with you now, so what's the problem?" Ranma smirked.

The problem isn't YOU, Ranma! Ryouga thought. "It's… it's not proper?"

"'Proper' is a line I kinda crossed over a long time ago," Ranma said. "Look, I went through this with Nabiki when we were on vacation together, so I'll tell you what she told me when we had to share a room; 'You'll sleep in a bed like a normal person. I trust you.'" She gave him a lopsided grin.

Ryouga winced. "Are you sure using an example involving you and Nabiki is the best choice?"

Ranma smacked her forehead. "Ryouga, do you want to have sex with me?"

"What?! Not!" Ryouga felt a rising surge of panic.

"Then don't!" She shot him an annoyed glare. "There, crisis averted. Now I'm tired. Can you do whatever else you need to do to get this out of your system quickly so I can get some sleep?"

Ryouga ducked his head, ashamed, and walked over to the bed. He walked around to the other side of the huge bed and found a neatly folded pile of clothes. "Oh, hey… I guess they set out pajamas for us." He picked up the top bundle, finding it to be a set of men's pajamas. The fabric was fine silk and it was probably the softest thing he had ever touched.

"Oh, cool!" Ranma scrambled over to her side. She raised a skeptical eyebrow as she unfolded a silk nightgown. It wasn't exactly revealing or girly but it was very feminine.

"Awww, man… Trade?"
"Not a chance, Saotome," Ryouga smirked, picking up his pajamas and heading for the bathroom door. "I'm sure you'll look very ladylike in it. Just yell when you're done changing."

"Again with the chivalry?" Ranma groused, watching him as he made his way into the bathroom. "It's not like you got anything I haven't seen, Ryouga! We've bathed together, ya twit!"

Ryouga slid the door closed behind him. This isn't for YOU, Ranma. He sighed, leaned against the door and closed his eyes. It was true he had seen Ranma naked before - in both forms, yet. But he hadn't really been seeing her. He slapped his own cheeks. All right, get control of yourself, Hibiki! Just because she LOOKS like a cute girl doesn't mean she IS one! Even if SHE thinks she is sometimes... He winced at the last part, realizing it severely undermined his argument. He started stripping off his clothes, walking over to the sink and splashing himself in the face with cold water. At least I can do this without changing, thanks to the soap.

He paused. No, wait...! Without the soap I could have just changed forms, and none of this would have been a problem! He pulled at his hair. AUUUGH! I'm an idiot!

"Ryouga, you okay in there? I'm done changing if that's why you're still in there," Ranma called from the other room.

And because of the soap Ranma can't change either! We're trapped! Trapped in the worst possible bodies to be in together! He started giggling maniacally as he realized how easily his situation could have been avoided. No, no... He took a deep breath and resumed pulling on the pajamas. They were supremely comfortable, in a nice shade of green with a dragon embroidered in gold. They were a bit large, obviously made for a gentleman who was taller and with more girth than him, requiring him to pull the drawstrings on the pants tight and double knot them. Get a hold of yourself. See? I look stupid, so I bet Ranma does as well. It'll be Ranma in a shapeless silk pillowcase and you won't even be able to tell the difference between boy or girl except by the hair color. Now take a breath, be a man, and go out there and stop being silly!

He did just that and slid the door open.

Ranma was sitting on the bed, half-lounging, really. Her nightdress was green silk as well, long enough to reach her ankles but very sheer and light, falling across her body and accentuating her curves rather than hiding them, with cutout panels of lace over the hips up to the bodice enhancing the effect. The bodice itself was a deep v-neck, revealing a considerable amount of cleavage, supported by spaghetti straps. She wore a long-sleeved robe made of the same translucent lace over it, lightly draped and slipping off one shoulder. Her brilliant red hair fell across and just past her shoulders, cascading in careless waves and complimenting the deep green perfectly.

She smiled at him. "Well? How do I look?"

Ryouga slammed the door shut so fast and hard it nearly broke.

"Oh come on! It can't be THAT bad, can it?" Ranma said through the door, sounding annoyed.

Yes! Yes that is about as bad as that could get! Ryouga thought in a state of panic.

There was silence from the other side of the door for a few moments, then, more quietly. "... I look ridiculous, don't I?"

Ack...! Suddenly Ryouga's instincts were in conflict as the desire to not see a girl - even Ranma - in such an outfit and in such a situation fighting with the urge to protect her self image and not to allow her to think she was in any way unattractive.
The latter won. He slid the door open again. "No! No, it's…" He swallowed as he saw her once more. "... It's the opposite. You… you look like a girl."

She gave him a bemused look. "I am a girl, dumbass."

Ryouga winced. He could suddenly understand what Ranma was talking about when she said she forgot sometimes that she was really a guy, because right now he was having that problem. "No… I mean…" He swallowed, not sure what to say without giving some kind of offense or looking stupid. He finally decided there simply wasn't one so he just gave up and told the truth. "You're gorgeous."

Ryouga wasn't sure what reaction he was expecting. His instincts told him it couldn't possibly end well saying something so boldly. She would get mad, loudly reassert her manhood, make fun of him, something…

She blushed, quite fetchingly and look away self-consciously. "I -look, I told you you don't gotta try and be chivalrous to try and protect my feelings or nothin'..."

Ryouga shook his head. "No… Ranma… I… That was one of the hardest admissions I've ever had to make!" He clenched his fists. "I'm trying to be honest here!"

Her eyes widened and the blush spread. She sat up and folded her hands in her lap. "Okay, now you're going overboard…"

"You look like… like a princess on the cover of a fantasy novel, and I say that fully expecting you to get mad at me and punch me in the face," Ryouga said seriously. "You… like being complimented as a girl?"

She huffed. "I've always been proud of my looks as a girl! It's not like that's new!" She glanced at him again shyly. "You look… you… Well, you look like a dork."

He held up his hands, the overlong sleeves completely covering them. "Yeah, I know" He replied with a heavy sigh.

She giggled. Ryouga felt a bit better, as the tension seemed to ease a little. He walked over to the bed and sat down on the edge of it. "Nabiki's right, though. You are cute when you're flustered." Ranma added.

Ryouga froze. "Ranma, you just called a guy cute," Ryouga said, keeping his voice even, his tone serious.

"I called you cute before, remember?" Ranma said, her tone getting quiet. She got that look on her face that she got when she was dealing with difficult feelings.

"I figured… that was… just about my personality," Ryouga said nervously.

Ranma was silent. The void in the conversation stretched into awkwardness, until Ryouga opened his mouth to tell her to forget about it, that he understood, that it didn't matter. "We're… we're being honest right now… right?" she asked timidly, beating him to the punch.

"I…" Ryouga's mouth felt dry. He knew it would probably be a really good idea to be looking at the floor, or the ceiling, or anywhere but into her eyes right now, but he couldn't seem to manage it. There was something hypnotic about them. "I... guess so..."

"Th-then... I'm being honest," she said.

Ryouga realized he was leaning towards her. He might not have noticed, but the bed was so wide that his balance had actually shifted, and he had nearly fallen over. The start it gave him was enough to break eye contact and break the spell. When he looked up again, she was looking away shyly.

If... if the bed had been a little smaller... Ryouga thought, then quickly shut down that line of speculation as he found that he wasn't sure if he wanted it to be smaller or if he was glad that it was big enough to keep them safely separated.

He cleared his throat. "Uhh... we should get some sleep... y'know, because... school..." he said weakly. She nodded, so he carefully lifted the covers on his side of the bed and slipped under them while staying as far over on his side as possible. He lay on his side, facing away from her.

"Ryouga?"

Ryouga rolled onto his back, and looked over at her. She was rolled onto her side, watching him.

He swallowed, looking up towards the ceiling before he got caught gazing into her eyes again. "Yeah?"

"What do you figure your future will be like?" she asked softly.

"My future? What do you mean?" Ryouga looked at her again, confused.

"I mean... not plans, really, but... Dreams, I guess? What sort of future are you dreaming of? What does it look like? What are you doing?" She looked pensive.

"I..." He rubbed the back of his head. "I'm not sure I've got much in the way of that..."

"Yes you do!" she said crossly. "You were having a dream about it! You even have a name for your future daughter!" She sighed and settled her head onto her pillow. "I'm not talking about who you're gonna marry or the names of kids really, but... You always seemed to have an idea what you wanted your life to be." She smiled. "Lemme guess; On a farm, lots of kids, that sorta thing?"

Ryouga made a face. "It's... it's not like that. To be honest... I'm not really a big fan of farms. They're not bad, but... When you turn into livestock yourself, they start to seem a lot less benevolent." He sighed. "I always sorta imagined... a big house. Not on the farm, but somewhere with neighbors... a community... something I could be a part of. I... usually imagine something like the Tendo Dojo. That used to be because Akane was a big part of those dreams, but lately... well... I guess it's the first place that's really felt like 'home' since Dad died. A warm place that I can always find my way back to, full of family and surrounded by friends is what I always imagine. The good dreams, anyway."

"That sounds nice..." Ranma said quietly. "I... never really thought about it. My whole life was always so full of worrying about where my next meal was coming from that I never really spent much thought on the future. Even after I came to the Tendo Dojo, I didn't think much past the next challenge. Even when it came to Akane and me... I just couldn't envision it. Everyone else has... well, not always plans but... some dream about the future. But nothing really seemed real for me past tomorrow." She closed her eyes. "I didn't think it was important... not until Mom told me what my future was going to be. I felt so... so betrayed. Not because what she's got planned for me is so bad, but… because I didn't even get a chance to think of something on my own."

"Ranma?" Ryouga could hear the note of emotion in her voice. He considered reaching out and taking her hand.

She rolled onto her back. "I… am gonna have kids someday. That's such a weird thought for me. Like… I know it was a thing but… I never really expected it to apply to me, you know?" She smiled. "My whole life I've just accepted stuff as it came, but… For once I like the idea of wondering what something far off might be like."

Ryouga was quiet, thinking about that. His own dreams for the future had usually been indistinct, unlikely… pipe dreams. But… they had been comforting. "So… what are your kids gonna be like, Ranma?

"Mmm?" she mumbled sleepily. "... Dunno. Gonna hafta start imagining, right?" She sighed. "... A girl first, I think… Just 'cause… I might steal the name 'Sachiko' for her…"

"What?! You can't do that!" Ryouga protested good naturedly. "Don't I get a say?"

"Mnnn-nnh…" Ranma murmured. "Nope… I'm her mother… s'my choice…"

"Ranma, you jerk, you can't just…" Ryouga started, then trailed off. "Wait… mother?!" He turned to look at her but the redhead had already rolled onto her side facing away from him and her breathing was slow and deep, obviously already asleep.

000

I referenced several different Ranma/Ryouga fanfics in Ryouga's dream! See if you can name them all!

I also kinda fired a shot across the bow of 'Girl Days', but I think that's just because it was never finished :P

Thank YOU all for sticking with me thus far. I'm getting closer to the Endgame in what I have written so far, even if the editing and proofreading is lagging behind it by several chapters, so I think I can safely assure you that THIS fic WILL be finished.
The nightmare wasn't the one Ryouga might have expected, given the day's events. But it was a familiar one.

He was running through streets that were twisted and unrecognizable. Pushing through crowds of people and unable to see the route ahead, occasionally catching glimpses of a few recognizable landmarks that seemed to change which side of him they were on. He couldn't tell which part of the sky the sun was in, or if it was morning or afternoon. All of the street signs were unreadable.

I have to get back…! He thought, desperately pushing through the crowd. There was something important he needed to get to. Someone…? It was so hard to remember!

How long has it been? Two days? Three? He pushed into the open and started running. His legs felt heavy, his muscles ached and his lungs burned. Even though there were crowds obscuring his vision, his footsteps echoed like he was alone in an empty space. The sky was blinding, and his vision was full of disorienting afterimages, but he kept going.

Wait for me!

000

Ryouga woke up when he crashed to the floor in a heap.

Panic seized him as he struggled to free himself, arms and legs tangled up in yards of smooth, unyielding fabric. Finally, he managed to free himself and skittered back against the nearest wall and looked around wildly as his heart pounded in his chest and his breath came in ragged gasps.

It was all wrong.

The room was unfamiliar. His pack was nowhere to be seen and, for the moment, the fog of sleep still hid the memory of how he'd gotten here. Even the clothes he was wearing were not his - oversized and ill fitting if expensive. His panic surged as he realised that something else was missing, too - something impossibly important - something he needed desperately to find. He felt cold, icy fingers squeezing the heart in his chest as sleep inertia and adrenaline conspired to warp the world around him into a soul destroying abyss of darkness, loneliness and terror.

The door to the attached bathroom opened, and a girl with bright blue eyes and a mop of brilliant crimson hair poked her head out. She had a toothbrush which she pulled out of her mouth long enough to ask, "You okay, Ryo? You fall outta the bed or something?"

His breath caught - just for a moment - but it was enough to dispel the fog of sleep and panic and allow his memory to return. The room looked very different in the light of the sun shining through the balcony doors, but it was the room he and Ranma had been put in at the Kuno manor.

He knew where he was.

He knew where Ranma was.

He wasn't lost.

He closed his eyes and let out the breath he had been holding. "I'm… I'm okay."
She stepped out of the bathroom. Her hair was slightly damp and she was wearing her school uniform which appeared to have been cleaned and freshly pressed. "You sure? You have a nightmare or something?"

Ryouga stood and grit his teeth. He wanted to tell her about it - tell her about the persistent nightmare that had plagued him since the very first time he had gotten lost. The nightmare that had gradually grown and deepened every time he found himself wandering and unable to find his way. But he knew she'd probably pity him - maybe even give him that look - and after last night that wasn't something he could handle. "I'm fine Ranma. I just rolled over and got tangled up."

Ranma scowled then shrugged. "Okay, fine. Sheesh, ya don't gotta be all growly about it… Just lemme finish brushing my teeth and the bathroom's yours. You kinda slept in, so you should probably make it quick. Your school duds are in here too." She ducked back into the bathroom.

Ryouga breathed a sigh of relief once she was gone. Okay… Nothing happened last night. Whatever was going on with Ranma is over and Ranma's back to normal. Just… just gonna forget any of this ever happened.

He rubbed the sleep from his eyes and looked blearily at the bed. He had not slept well. He had spent most of the night perched on the edge of the bed as Ranma sprawled out. Something had told him that being in close physical proximity to her while sleeping would lead to Bad Things.

Would they really have been so bad?

Shut UP! Ryouga sternly silenced the rebellious little voice.

000

The walk to school was a bit odd for Ukyou without Ranma there. Akane and Nabiki were walking together discussing something but, after their gaffe the other day, they were being guarded and secretive. The volleyball team was deep in their own discussion with Hiroshi and Daisuke - something about 'Cyborgs vs Ninjas as dating prospects', which didn't currently interest her. She found herself left alone with her own thoughts.

"Penny for Spatula Girl's thoughts?"

She glanced over to see Shampoo had fallen in step with her. She was holding up a small copper coin.

"Hang on, is that an actual penny?" Ukyou plucked it from her fingers to examine it. It was definitely an American penny, rather than a yen.

"Yes. Is not custom?" Shampoo said. "Had customer leave as part of tip at restaurant one day."

"It's just a saying - you don't actually need to give a penny." Ukyou flipped the coin back to her.

Shampoo caught it. "Dressing more like girl today?"

Ukyou glanced down at herself. She was still wearing the boy's uniform, but she had opted for the lighter, short sleeved shirt and pants that were properly sized and cut for her figure, as well as opting for a bra rather than her usual bindings. She had also left her hair unbound and worn her ribbon as a hair bow.

"It's a girl day," Ukyou admitted. She had felt much more inclined to listen to her own whims after her date with Ranma. She had even briefly considered a girl's uniform, but the last time she had tried that had been disastrous.

"Might have to try that style myself. Fighting in pants much easier," Shampoo noted. "Skirt too long, get in way."

"Yeah, well, your preferred 'skirts' tend to barely qualify as belts, sugar," Ukyou said.

"Leaves legs free, best for movement," Shampoo shrugged. "If also distract opponent is bonus, yes?"

"It's overkill for the pervs around here," Ukyou muttered. "All I had to do was show up to school in a dress and they lost their minds."

Shampoo smirked. "Problem not dress. From what Shampoo hear of story, Ukyou try act girly. Make seem more approachable. But Ukyou also have confidence. Same reason why they chase after Akane or Airen's girl form." She held up a finger, going into lecture mode. "Males naturally wish for female stronger than them, who choose them. Especially in Japan where such desires repressed by misguided culture attempting to be male-dominant. Natural order of things male subservient."

"I… don't think that's entirely true, Shampoo," Ukyou said, giggling.

"Why think 'tsundere' such popular concept?" Shampoo folded her arms and closed her eyes, raising her chin haughtily. "Poor, misguided males of men's world seek atonement because instincts tell them they subvert natural order. Seek strong female to punish them to absolve of sins."

"Oh? What about Ranma, then?" Ukyou asked, honestly curious.

"Airen has very strong female side," Shampoo said. "Is mistaking strength as coming from male side because of idiot father teachings, of course, but males who know true strength find in balance between male and female natures. Is why Amazons make laws to add to tribe, because it rare and special thing."

"Well… I suppose that's at least better defined than Ranma's parent's whole concept of 'manliness'," Ukyou replied. She personally preferred to believe that strength didn't have a gender but she could see how someone from a female-dominated society might see things the way Shampoo did. It even made a bizarre sort of sense. Still, Nerima was hardly a fair representation of Japan as a whole. It was equally likely that growing up in the insanity of the place either forced one to turn to martial arts or resulted in a predisposition towards masochism and personality disorders. Or both.

They reached the gates just as the limousine pulled up. For a moment Ukyou wondered if the limo belonged to Himura, but then she saw the vanity plate that read 'BLACK ROSE' in English. Of COURSE she has her OWN private limo. Just one for the family obviously isn't enough, she thought sourly, considering how much it cost just for the average person to drive in Tokyo. So I wonder how the night went? Ukyou still wasn't entirely comfortable with Kodachi having her fiancee for an entire night but, at the same time, she knew the gymnast thought Ranma's girl side was a separate person.

The door opened and Ranma stepped out, dressed in her school uniform, followed by Ryouga. She had tied her hair back, but in a looser braid than normal, more of a french braid that Ukyou suspected Kodachi had insisted upon. Both of them at least looked well enough, and neither appeared to be drugged out or otherwise damaged. She picked up her pace to catch up with them.
Kodachi stepped out afterwards, forcing Ukyou to slow down a bit again. As eager as she was to see Ranma, her dislike for Kodachi was more than balancing it out. She felt her fingers curl into a fist as Kodachi put a hand on Ranma's shoulder, and the two shared a laugh over something.

"My, isn't Ranchan getting chummy with the enemy…?" Ukyou growled softly.

"Crazy girl think Airen different person when female. No have interest, Shampoo thought?" Shampoo said.

"Maybe not romantically, but Kodachi definitely got an interest in her. She's just using her to try and win over male Ranma," Ukyou said tightly. "Playing all nice-nice to gain favor with Ranchan by charming his sister!"

"But… is no can work? Airen IS his own sister," Shampoo said, confused.

"That just means if she does charm her, it works much more directly," Ukyou said. "C'mon, we should keep an eye on them." She set out to follow the trio while hanging back enough to avoid being detected.

Unfortunately, hanging back was a mistake this time. By the time they got close to the gates, Ranma, Ryouga and Kodachi had already passed through and some sort of confrontation had started just inside. Shampoo and Ukyou broke into a run, hearing voices raised and then a most horrific noise: a whine like a cross between a jet engine and a water pump followed by the sound of crumbling concrete. They sprinted through the gates and skidded to a stop.

Ranma was off to the side in a wary stance. The courtyard was soaked with water, and there was a line etched deep into the concrete wall and along the ground leading up to the wall as if something had gouged a narrow trench - something that had continued past where Ranma now stood and had evidently only narrowly missed her. The apparent creator of the trench seemed to be some kind of heavily modified World War II tank that had two giant canisters mounted on the back and a customised nightmare of a main gun. In the turret, behind a plexiglass shield, sat Principal Kuno, holding a microphone.

"Eyyyy Kekis and Wahines! Your Headmaster had a brand new idea for de big fun, yey? I say to myself 'Tatsuyuki, how can de Headmaster be makin' de day easier for de students?' and den I says back 'Always wi' de rushin' to school. Not time for propah breakfast! No time for proper hygiene! So your Headmaster is here to help! We be getting dis special Showah Cannon made just for de Kekis and Wahines to wash off even de toughest o' dirt. Guaranteed to wash de waterproofin' right offa the most squirrely delinquent, eyyy!"

"That's a high pressure water cannon you jackass!" Ranma shouted. "It's washing away the concrete! If you hit me with that I won't have any skin left!"

Principal Kuno got a maniacal look on his face as the turret swivelled to track Ranma. It had obviously been upgraded as it moved and tracked more quickly than anything that large had a right to. "Small price to pay for propah hygiene, yey?"

"Father, stop this!" Kodachi yelled as she pulled out her ribbon to strike at the turret. The attacks did little more than leave marks on the tough, clear material. "Don't you dare hurt her!"

"Sorry Kochi, but dis be a mattah of honah!" the Principal said as he opened fire once more. Ranma dodged frantically as the stream sliced through a nearby tree trunk.

"Can't be dodgin' forever, keki!" the Principal chortled. "Dis turret be havin' de same targettin' dey use to shoot down supersonic missiles! You no faster den a speedin' bullet, yey?" He glanced toward the gates and spotted Ukyou and Shampoo. "Or, mebbe we see how much you care fer your wahines, yey?" The turret swivelled to point at the two of them ominously.

"Awww crap…" Ukyou swore as the keening whine of the pump built up for another burst.

The handle of a familiar red umbrella struck the ground in front of them at an angle. It embedded itself and popped open just as the cannon fired, deflecting the high pressure stream. It started to crack and buckle almost immediately, but the moment was all that was needed.

Ryouga jumped up onto the front of the tank and forced the barrel of the turret up through brute strength alone. Motors in the turret whined as they fought back, starting to smoke as the force the lost boy was exerting started to overload the actuators. He reared back with one finger, locking eyes with the Principal before stabbing his finger into the armor plating of the tank. "Bakusai Tenketsu!"

High pressure coupled with explosive structural failure was a potent mix. The tank exploded in a massive cloud of steam and shrapnel as everything gave out at once in a deafening eruption.

Ukyou pulled Shampoo down with her to duck behind the ruined umbrella as the battered shield still provided enough protection to ward off the worst of the shrapnel. Something was flung violently from the center of the explosion, punched through the stone outer wall of the courtyard and came to rest on the far side of the street. After a moment, Ukyou realized the crumpled heap was a person.

"RYOUGA!"

The scream was Ranma's. The redhead vaulted over the wall and was next to the Lost Boy faster than Ukyou had seen her move since… since…

The last time Akane was in danger… she thought. She sprinted over to the injured Ryouga along with Shampoo.

"Ryouga? Ryouga! Don't do this to me!" Ranma had already gathered the battered lost boy into her arms and was shaking him. Ukyou could see a look of utter terror on her face and tears streaming down her cheeks.

"Nnnn... Not so loud..." Ryouga said weakly, cracking an eye open. "... gotta headache..."

"You dumbass!" Ranma hugged him tightly, sobbing in relief. "I swear to god if you ever scare me like that again…!"

Ukyou and Shampoo knelt on either side of them. They exchanged a glance with each other then set about checking Ryouga for injuries, as Ranma seemed too overcome to do it herself.

"Thank goodness for that hard Hibiki skull…" Ukyou said. "What were you thinking, sugar?!" She poked Ryouga's shoulder. "You're tough, but you're not that tough!"

Ryouga coughed. "He... was gonna make Ranma take the hit for you two. Didn't have another play ready..." He tried to sit up, wincing as his many bruises and contusions made themselves felt. "I... think I'm just gonna lie here a bit…"

"Just lie still, buddy," Ranma said, sniffing, smiling in relief. "I gotcha…"

"What about Crazy Pineapple Brain Man?" Shampoo asked.
"I'll go deal with him, if he's got any fight left in him," Ukyou stood up. "Shampoo, stay with them, okay?" Ukyou drew her battle spatula and stalked back to the gates. That was WAY too far! The Principal could have maimed Ranchan with that! He almost DID maim US! Time to take a page from Akane's book, I think; Best place for him right now is a hospital!

It seemed someone had beaten her to the punch. The armored turret the Principal was in had survived mostly intact, protecting him from the blast, though the remainder of the tank was now little more than scattered debris and parts. The turret lay on its side with the Principal cowering inside as Kodachi stood on top of it, furiously lashing at it with her ribbon. The plexiglass was getting scored and cracked as her efforts steadily chipped away at the battered armor.

"Kochi! Please! Be reasonable!" Principal Kuno begged from inside of the plexiglass bubble as its structural integrity had rapidly begun to fail.

"I AM GOING TO KILL YOU!" Kodachi snarled. "How DARE you assault my friend! Come out of that bubble so I can injure you properly!"

Well... Much as I'd love a piece of him myself, I think I'll wait my turn and let Kodachi have her fun. Ukyou slotted her battlespat onto her back again and watched. Usually he's got a better escape plan than this, though...

Principal Kuno cowered a moment longer but as the plexiglass casing began to show fatal cracks and give way, he started to grin again. "Yer Papa is sorry ta do dis, Kochi, but ye be leaving me no choice. How about a nice Hawaiian..."

Ukyou's eyes widened and she started forward as soon as she heard him start his spiel, knowing from experience what was coming next. She dove and tackled Kodachi as compartments opened along the sides of the turret, and ejected a number of explosive pineapples which detonated in clouds of thick black smoke. Ukyou rolled as she hit the ground, instinctively trying to absorb as much of the impact as she could, though if she had been thinking more about who it was that she was saving, she might not have tried so hard.

Principal Kuno emerged from the cloud of smoke, blackened and singed, but whole. He sprinted away, cackling madly as he ran. "You canna catch a bruddah from de Isles! Bwahahahahahaha!"

"Get off me!" Kodachi shoved her roughly. "Simpleton! He's getting away!" She bounced to her feet, but could see that her Father was already out of sight. She gripped her ribbon and ground her teeth in frustration.

"You're welcome, sugar," Ukyou said testily as she rolled to her feet and brushed herself off. "I could have just let you eat that, you know."

Kodachi wirled on her but her glare softened. Reluctantly, she relaxed her stance. "As much as it pains me to admit it... you have a point." She looked away, gripping the handle of her ribbon with white knuckles. "I... promised Ran I would make an effort to be civil so..." she seemed to struggle with the words, "... Thank you."

Ukyou blinked. "Umm... you're welcome. Wow... I didn't think you'd do that even for your 'Darling Ranma'!"

Kodachi pinned her with a glare. "I would not! Know this, Ukyou Kuonji! I still do not forgive your insistence on claiming my Darling Ranma's time or affections, nor your opposition to my rightful claim as his fiancee. But..." she ground her teeth again, "... Ran is more... delicate than her brother, and she values the harmony of those around her. So I will accept an armistice. For now." She glanced over her shoulder in the direction her father had run. "I have more… pressing quarry to track down."

Ukyou raised an eyebrow. Ran? DELICATE? She remembered that naescent feminine side Ranma had shown her on their date and felt a pang of jealousy that Kodachi might have seen it as well. Still, there was the matter of the Principal. "You want some help with that, sugar? 'Enemy of my enemy' and all that, right?"

Kodachi actually seemed to consider it for a moment. "No. Stay with Ran and ensure no further harm is done to her or her betrothed today. I know Father's haunts and his tricks. I am more than sufficient to this task on my own."

"You willing to do what it takes?" Ukyou asked sternly. "He just about killed at least three people I consider family, plus me. He needs to be taken out of commission before this gets any more out of control."

Kodachi gave her an evil smile that made her shiver. "Are you questioning my capacity to inflict debilitating pain and injury? Perhaps you should inquire as to how I acquired the title of 'The Black Rose'? Father will survive… he may even recover one day. But that is the very limit of the mercy I am willing to extend him." She coiled her ribbon. "Tell Ran I will see her once I have dealt with the matter satisfactorily. I will be sure to forward to you all the hospital where he will be staying in case you wish to have further 'discussions' with him." She turned and started to saunter, unhurried, in the direction her father had fled.

Ukyou raised an eyebrow. "Wow. And I thought Ranchan's family had issues."

000

The Lost Boy's resilience was remarkable, even for one who had undergone the Bakusai Tenketsu training. None of his bones were broken, though he had suffered some deep bruising and scalding from the steam. Shampoo had called upon some of her knowledge of pressure points to ease his pain and reduce the swelling, though she recommended having Dr Tofu look him over.

What was concerning to the Amazon was how her Airen was reacting. It was hardly the first time the Lost Boy had been injured, though admittedly none had seen him take such a direct and dramatic blow before. The redhead flat out refused to leave Ryoga's side, even once they had taken him to the nurse's office to get the worst of his scrapes disinfected and patched up. The look in her eyes was one of guilt and fear mixed with relief. It echoed a similar look that Shampoo had seen in her eyes before.

She was afraid she had lost him. Just for a moment. It scared her, Shampoo decided as she waited outside the nurse's office while Ryoga was cleaned up. There is emotion there that wasn't before. Emotion for him.

She remembered Nabiki's conversation with Akane the other day. My Pintou also has an interest in him? No, not the same. Maybe PHYSICALLY. She snorted. She had noticed that Nabiki had something of a roving eye. But she's already seen this between Ryoga and Airen. She's testing Ryoga, getting him flustered on purpose… maybe provoking Airen too? She sighed. This was why Nabiki was D'artagnan, after all. She had a talent for spotting such things.

Airen isn't ready to acknowledge yet, Shampoo decided. But Ryoga already protects her. This was problematic. It could completely upend the entire fragile relationship dynamic! Akane sees it. That's what set her off, even if she's talked herself out of it. That girl needs to learn to trust her instincts! Nabiki is trying to negotiate… seems to think it would just be a fling. Curiosity. She glanced at the infirmary door. No. Something more here. Something deep and powerful. Buried. She narrowed her eyes. Could hurt Airen… more than hurt, could wound her sense of self. All of this is on the girl side, unbalancing things. Plus, Lost Boy is obsessive and fickle at the same time.

She sighed. Still… he saved me and Ukyou. He deserves some consideration for today. She rubbed her chin. Airen is going on her date with Akane today. Maybe a good time to pull Ryouga aside for chat; see what is going on in his head. And… if it’s the usual Lost Boy stupidity, I can use Xi Fa Xiang Gao to tweak his memories, let Airen down easy before she get too deep.

Of course, there was the question of what to do if it was more serious than one of Ryouga's infatuations?

Normally Shampoo would just proceed with altering the Lost Boy’s memory regardless, but she knew that true emotions would always come to the surface and make it nearly impossible to cleanly disentangle the Lost Boy from Ranma's life. Worse, if Ranma found out, it would shatter the trust that Shampoo had worked so hard and so carefully to build with her.

Still, Ryouga was a rogue factor. He wasn't bound by the same pact as the rest of them and that had needed a year of strife to coalesce as it was. Plus there were some raw emotions between him and Akane still, as well as the whole worry that Airen even contemplating such a thing would represent a radical paradigm shift for her.

I'll ask Ukyou to help, she decided finally. Her judgement is good and she is willing to do what needs to be done to protect Airen. Besides, Lost Boy respects her. She knows him better than I do. What was the term they use here? 'Good cop, bad cop'? She smiled, remembering the TV drama where she had seen the interrogation technique. In the village back home they called it 'Friend and Foe', but the dynamic was the same. Simple and obvious, but Ryouga was just the simple and obvious sort it would work on.

She looked up as the door opened. Ryouga walked out, his jacket off and over his shoulder. His white shirt had a few tears and small bloodstains, and underneath she could see the spots where gauze had been applied to cover the worst of the scrapes. For the most part he looked greatly recovered.

"Thanks for waiting, Shampoo!" Ranma stuck her head out after him, grinning.

Shampoo closed her eyes and sniffed. "Owed debt of honor to Lost Boy. Would be bad form to let die of infection after surviving explosion."

"I appreciate it," Ryouga said honestly. He winced as a sore muscle complained. "If there's anything left of that loud-shirt wearing freak, remind me I need to take a piece outta him."

"Ukyou went to go find. Should ask her," Shampoo said, standing smoothly. It was nearly time for their next class and she imagined Nabiki would want to know what happened.

"What I wanna know is where he got a tank-sized watergun from?" Ranma grumbled. "Just the bombs and traps were bad enough, but if he's gonna bring heavy armor into it…"

"Should just kill," Shampoo said.

Ryouga shrugged as both girls looked at him. "What, are you looking at me to object?"

"It's… not that simple, Shampoo," Ranma said weakly.
Shampoo sighed then smiled. "Shampoo understand. Airen blooded, but not killer. Is Airen's choice."

"We should talk to Nabiki. She had some ideas for how to take him out of the picture," Ranma said, sounding tired.

"It sounded like the Kunos might even be on board with that," Ryouga said thoughtfully. "Maybe we could ask Kodachi?"

"Ask Crazy Girl for help?" Shampoo gaped at him.

"Things're different, Shampoo," Ranma said. "Kodachi is… well, okay, she's still kinda out there, but she doesn't hate my girl side anymore. And Kuno… Tatewaki Kuno…"

"He's downright reasonable," Ryouga said, rubbing the back of his head. "All it took was these little white pills. I barely recognized him!"

"Bokken boy… reasonable?" Shampoo gave him a skeptical look. "Shampoo believe when see. And Bokken boy better convince fast - Shampoo still owe him lumps for what he do to Ukyou!"

"I think Akane covered that debt, Shampoo," Ranma said. They reached their classroom and paused. "Okay, see you at lunch?"

Shampoo nodded. "Yes." I have MUCH to think about!

Lunchtime involved a lot of brooding.

Nabiki had not been happy to hear about the Principal's escalation. She immediately sent Hiroshi and Daisuke to find out more about where he had gotten the tank and what other toys he might have scrounged up, then eschewed lunch to go use the library computers to research whatever it was her plots required. Akane had been outraged and shown enough sympathy to the Lost Boy that he had regressed into some of his old stammering, awkward mannerisms around her. Deprived of her usual targets, Akane eventually stalked off to find some of the Principal's statues to smash to work off steam. Ranma seemed a bit embarrassed by the fierce protectiveness of the Tendos and eventually retreated to practice with her team and Ryouga limp after her to sit on the sidelines which left Shampoo and Ukyou alone to tidy up.

"Sooooooo…" Shampoo said, suddenly unsure how to broach the topic.

"Today has been a weird day," Ukyou said. "The Principal loses his mind even for him, Kodachi is on our side for once… kinda… and…" She shook her head. "Did you hear Ranchan scream when Ryouga got hit? I've never heard Ranchan sound like that before. She was really scared, wasn't she?"

"Heard something like once before," Shampoo said quietly. "When Ranma think Akane killed at Jusendo." She took a deep breath. "Is what I wanted to talk with Ukyou about."

Ukyou didn't look at her, instead studying her hands. "You think there really is something going on between them, don't you?"

"Maybe. Maybe they not realize or accept yet," Shampoo said. "Maybe is new? Wanted to ask Ukyou, since she call Lost Boy brother sometimes."
"Like a brother," Ukyou corrected. "Not sure I'm ready to adopt that many issues, no matter how many times I find him half dead outside my restaurant." She sighed and looked at Shampoo. "Now I really wish I had squawked more about them going to the Kuno Estate together. You think something happened?"

Shampoo shook her head. "Airen not good at hiding. Always act guilty whenever something happen between her and Akane. Not see that here. Not mean something won't happen, though."

Ukyou huffed and looked out across the field to where Ryouga was sitting. "How, though? I mean I can see Ryoug's side of it easily enough: The line has gotten really blurry with Ranchan - especially since she's hardly ever a guy anymore, between the rules about her being a girl at school, the soap, and..." she trailed off, "... Hold up, when was the last time Ranchan was a guy around Ryouga?"

"Not since before Shi Shi Hokodan," Shampoo said.

"You... don't think she's doing that on purpose, do you?" Ukyou's eyes widened.

"Yeah... Ryouga told me he was seeing Ranma differently now. I thought it was just the near-death thing, but..." She cocked her head. "He told me he wasn't in love with her. He seemed pretty sure. And you know Ryouga, he's the sort to declare his love at the drop of a hat."

Shampoo was silent for a moment. "Watch Lost Boy," she said finally.

Ukyou did as suggested, and they both watched Ryouga quietly for a time.

"What you see?" Shampoo asked.

"His eyes are on Ranchan. The whole time," Ukyou said softly. "When she laughs, he smiles." She closed her eyes. "Ryouga, you jackass."

"Not like how was with Akane," Shampoo said. "Not dopey or tripping over self. Different. You sure?"

Ukyou sighed. "I think that just makes me more sure. Ryoug's always had one emotion pinned to the red zone. Anger, Love, Depression. About as complex as a Rubik's Cube with every side painted the same color. He's always been..."

"Childish," Shampoo finished for her.

"Yeah... yeah, that's a good word for it. 'Annoying younger brother' is where I would have pegged him. But lately? He mentioned that how he saw things has changed since the Shi Shi Hokodan. He talked about seeing things as 'cardboard cutouts' before, Ranchan in particular." She slumped. "So... the problem is that he grew up?"

"Airen grow up too. Much, much change in last few weeks," Shampoo said. "Nabiki start landslide in Airen. Good thing... but too much too fast maybe. Airen question everything, all at once."

"... And you think that's what this is? They both started growing up at the same time, seeing the world and themselves differently, and..." she gestured, "latched onto the nearest person who was going through the same thing?"
"Nearly die together," Shampoo said quietly. "Is powerful thing."

"So… what do you want to do?" Ukyou asked. "Have a Fiancée's Tea about it?"

"So… Ryouga then," Ukyou said. "Before you say anything else, I'm not gonna let you do anything weird to him. No potions or anything." She gave Shampoo a hard look. "He hasn't done anything wrong. He's a jackass and that stupid glass heart of his latches onto the worst targets, but…"

"… Is family, yes?" Shampoo said. "Like brother is brother. No difference that matter. Shampoo know this much about you," She smiled and reached up, lightly stroking Ukyou's cheek.

Ukyou closed her eyes and shivered slightly. "I really overshared over the sake, didn't I?"

"Is why Shampoo talk to Ukyou before do anything," Shampoo said. "Ukyou is friend. Partner. Sister. We start Fiancée's Tea, before Akane or Nabiki or pact. We plan for longest time to do things together. This no different." She leaned in and touched her forehead to Ukyou's.

Ukyou sighed. "So… what do we do if it's true? If Ryouga and Ranma…"

"Cross bridge when come to. First thing, find out if even is bridge. Nabiki right, we jump to conclusion too quick most times. So… we do better this time."

"And how do we do that?"

Shampoo grinned. "How is Ukyou's 'Good Cop'?"

000

"Okay, okay, good enough!" Sayuri called an end to the practise, catching a towel Ryouga tossed her.

"Thanks, Towel Boy!" Yuka called as he passed out towels to the rest of the team.

"Could you not call me that?" Ryouga asked, grumbling.

"Sorry, M-Mr. Towel Boy-san," Rin said sheepishly as she accepted a towel from him.

"That's not…" Ryouga sighed heavily. "... You know what? Nevermind."

"We could go with 'Cabana Boy'?" Riko suggested, waggling her eyebrows.

"Down, girl. He's off limits," Sayuri grabbed her by the collar and dragged her away before Ryouga could get flustered.

Ryouga quirked an eyebrow. "Hold on… why am I off-limits?" He wasn't exactly eager to encourage the teasing he tended to get from the team but usually declarations of that nature were due to…

Sayuri's eyes flicked back to the volleyball court where Ranma was doing a few more cooldown stretches. "Reasons," she said with a smile.

Ryouga felt like hitting his head against a brick wall. Of course. 'Reasons.'
He glanced at the redhead again, feeling a twinge of sad longing. It wasn't like he didn't understand why they were thinking that way. It was starting to become clear to him that his heart had betrayed him once more. Once they had found a cure that his mother could use for the direction curse, he was going to need to see about getting himself good and lost the old fashioned way - and stay lost for a good long time. He was sure that a few weeks alone in the wilds to clear his head would put a stop to all of this.

_I won't be able to do it_, he realized. A twisting ball of dread bloomed in his stomach at the thought of leaving. He looked up as she walked over. He remembered the desperate panic he had felt when he realized the Principal was going to get his shot with the water cannon. _As long as she's in danger or needs me, I can't bear to leave... and it's RANMA... she's ALWAYS going to be in danger! I'm trapped..._ He chuckled bitterly as it sank in that he was doomed to an impossible situation, to have his glass heart ground into sand, and for no more than the occasional smile or laugh or casual nickname he would keep turning the grindstone willingly.

Ranma cocked her head as she walked over to him. "What's with that expression, Ryo?" she asked, a flicker of concern in her eyes.

He felt his heart lurch in his chest. Yes, he _was definitely_ doomed.

"It's... nothing," he said, looking away.

"Good." She walked up to him. His breath caught in his throat as she got close. Closer than normal. _Too close._

And then slugged him in the gut.

It was a hard punch by anyone else's standards, certainly enough to drive the air from their lungs and double them over. He barely felt it. He grunted slightly as her fist hit a solid wall of muscle.

"Don't you _ever_ do anything stupid like this morning again," she said quietly, her head down, eyes hidden behind her bangs.

"What, save your life?" Ryouga chuckled and tossed the last towel over his shoulder carelessly. "You have a weird way of saying 'thank you', Ranma."

"_Shut up!_" Ranma looked up at him and he could see her eyes were shining, dampness at the corners. _Tears? _"You didn't have to hit the tank's breaking point and you know it! You _knew_ it was going to blow up with you standing on it!"

"That's kinda how the _Bakusai Tenketsu_ works, Ranma," he said defensively. "That's why all that toughness training is built into it."

"For rocks and dirt and trees and stuff, yeah! Not _metal shrapnel!_" She glared at him. "That thing was a giant rolling pressurized hot water tank! You're _not_ indestructible!" She frowned. "You _promised._"

"... What?" Ryouga blinked.

"It doesn't matter if it's blowing yourself up with a ki blast or doing it with a tank. You _promised_ you weren't going to do it!" There was hurt in her eyes now and an echo of the fear that had been there this morning.

Ryouga winced. He hadn't really been _trying_ to end his own life - just acting on instinct. But the problem was that his instincts didn't always take his own safety or survival into account. "I'm..."
sorry. I was just trying to…” he swallowed, knowing he was about to cross a line, "I was just trying to protect you," he admitted finally.

Her eyes widened, color rose to her cheeks and he knew that was another degree of separation between them he had just broken. She gaped for a moment then looked away. "I never asked you to protect me. I don't need it. I'm not Akane. I'm a better martial artist than you, even!"

"Yeah, and you've got nothing in your arsenal that would work on a tank. Don't try and tell me you were gonna get him to follow you into a spiral somehow," Ryoga said crossly. "And don't try and tell me you don't need protection!" He reached out and grabbed her shoulder. "When were you gonna tell me about your parents using the contract to blackmail you?"

She turned, blinking owlishly. "The… contract?" her eyes fell as she made the connection. "…oh."

"I saw that look in your eyes," Ryoga said. "When You were talking with the Kunos about your Mom wanting your future kids."

"I said I'm not going to let her take my kids and I meant it!" Ranma said fiercely.

"Yeah, but what you didn’t say was you weren't gonna fulfil the contract," Ryoga said. "Kuno said it wouldn't mark your personal honor if you refused - you remember that, right?"

She looked away. "Yeah… but the family honor would be destroyed. And… and if I have kids at some point… What I do will affect them their whole lives." She looked at him. "I can save my kids, save my family honor or save my life, but only two of those. Which do you think I'll choose?"

"I'm not giving you a choice, Saotome," Ryoga growled. "You want me to stick around? Fine. One condition; I will stop you if you try and fulfill this contract."

Ranma's eyes widened and the blush returned. She looked away quickly. "W-what… what're you gonna do if I do decide to go through with it? You gonna watch me every minute of every day? Keep me in a room away from anything sharp? For my whole life?"

"Yeah," Ryoga said simply. "If that's what it takes. I've got nothing better to do."

She froze, her back to him. There was an awkward silence that stretched out long enough for Ryoga to consider reaching out to her but before he could, she relaxed.

"Oh… I'm your Anchor," she said softly. "Of course."

"Ranma?"

She turned and smiled at him, having regained some of her composure. "I'm sorry, Ryo. I didn't understand why this was such a big deal for you but I get it now. You don't gotta worry about me, I wouldn't do that to you."

"I… okay?" Ryoga replied, confused.

"We should get to class," she said brightly. She walked past him and broke into a light trot as she headed back towards the school.

Ryouga watched her but got the feeling that he had missed something important. He trailed after her and hoped that he could figure it out before it became a problem.
The end of day came soon enough. With Principal Kuno absent, The Madness seemed somewhat subdued.

Nabiki had been spending most of her day making sure the Principal kept running. Kodachi had not been terribly happy to learn that Nabiki had her cell phone number but her anger had quickly faded when Nabiki turned over the tracking information she had collected on the elder Kuno. Taking him some irrelevant bit of paperwork to sign, a bit of carbon paper slipped between and a dummy company able to do credit checks had gotten her a remarkable amount of data about where Tatsuyuki Kuno spent a lot of his money and time. That included several private clinics and a few bars where Principal Kuno would go to patch himself up and/or drink away the latest of his defeats. Nabiki imagined several of them were probably rubble by now.

Never thought I'd be cheering on Kodachi Kuno, Nabiki thought, Much less while we're still in the midst of the omiai. But if Ranma's right, she's no fan of Nodoka now either. Maybe if we could convince her to be patient about Ranma's decision about whom to marry, we could calm things down enough and work together to get Ranma out from under that blasted contract!

Nabiki sighed, chewing on her thumbnail as she walked. That might require letting Kodachi in on Fiancee's Tea, at least for the purposes of negotiating a cease-fire. But it was almost certain that the other fiancees would object strenuously to even that much. And what if Kodachi demanded a compromise and a 'share' of Ranma herself?

And we'd still need to explain the curse to her and weather THAT storm which could very well undo ALL OF THIS... No, for now we keep Kodachi in the dark, play nice and hope she does the same. She sighed. She walked out the doors of the school into the daylight, shielding her eyes.

For once she was the last one out. The rest of the group was waiting for her on the steps. Ranma was perched on the railing, Ryouga leaned against a nearby wall, Akane was chatting with Yuka, Sayuri and Riko while Rin listened politely and Hiroshi and Daisuke sat on the steps nearby looking bored. Shampoo and Ukyou were nearest the door, waiting for her.

My own little army, Nabiki thought with some pride.

"Oh, Nabiki!" Akane perked up and hopped over to her. "Ready to head home?"

"Yeah," Nabiki said, glad Cologne had given her the night off. "Any sign of Kodachi or Principal Kuno?"

"Himura's off at her away game, Principal's running for his life, and Kodachi's busy chasing him down. Alla the troublemakers are out for the day," Ranma said, hopping down from the railing.

"Well... all the troublemakers that aren't us," Yuka amended dryly.

"We don't make trouble... do we?" Rin asked quietly.

"We do, but only for people who deserve it," Sayuri replied, ruffling her hair.

"So, what's the plan for your date, sugar?" Ukyou asked Akane.

Akane exchanged a glance with Nabiki, then grinned. "It's a secret. We'll tell Ranma when we get back to the Tendo Dojo."

Ukyou and Shampoo exchanged a glance.
"We-ell… then maybe we could let you guys get an early start? Shampoo and I can escort Ryouga home," Ukyou said. She leaned around Akane to look at Nabiki. "You got any plans Nabiki?"

Nabiki stretched. "Actually… I do. Haven't slept in my own bed for a while. As pleasant as the accommodations at the Nekohanten are, I miss home. I'm probably just going to veg at home tonight."

Ukyou raised an eyebrow. "Really? You sure you're okay on your own? Buddy system and all that, right?"

Nabiki smiled. "I'll be fine. Kasumi's home, and Daddy. And I'm sure I'll think of something to do. Like Kasumi said, it's a guideline, not a hard rule, right?"

Shampoo gave her a skeptical look. "Riiiiight."

Yuka leaned over to Daisuke, whispering audibly, "Is she plotting something?"

"Yes," Hiroshi and Daisuke deadpanned in perfect unison.

"Well, that works out for us anyway," Ukyou walked over and grabbed Ryouga by the arm. "C'mon, Ryo. Let's get you home!"

Ryouga jumped a bit. "Hey, wha…? Ukyou, what gives?"

Shampoo immediately grabbed his other arm. "Yes, good idea!" She waved as she and Ukyou dragged Ryouga along between them. "Have fun! No stay up too late!"

"Okay, now they're definitely plotting something," Yuka muttered as they watched them frog march Ryouga towards the gates.

"It's kind of a 'thing' with this group I've noticed," Riko noted.

Yuka gave her a sly look. "Are you thinking what I'm thinking?"

Riko returned the look. "Ice cream plot?"

"Yup!"

Yuka grabbed Daisuke's arm and hauled him to his feet while Riko pulled Hiroshi up somewhat more gently.

"Come along, boys!" Yuka said as Daisuke yelped and flailed.

"What? Why are we coming?" Hiroshi asked, confused.

"We need someone to pay," Riko said sheepishly.

"Betrayal!" Daisuke cried as Yuka dragged him along.

"Oh stop being so dramatic!" Yuka growled at him.

Sayuri shrugged and stood up. "I've got a few bucks left over from my allowance. My treat, Rin?"

"Okay!" Rin hopped to her feet and followed after her.

Ranma watched them go, folding her arms. "Wow… everyone popped outta here pretty fast," she muttered. "Guess we should get going, girls?" She glanced at Nabiki. "You sure you're okay being on your own tonight, Nabiki?"

Nabiki exchanged a glance with Akane then gave Ranma a smirk. "I would be, but Akane had a more interesting solution…"

000

"Point, Furinkan!"

Himura smiled as her team scored another point. It was looking like they were going to have another early night. It was amusing to watch how hard her benchwarmers would work to prove themselves, even knowing that their opponents were a joke and not worth Himura or her Elites' time. Hope springs eternal. Especially desperate, misguided hope.

"So… this game is the root of your Grandfather's challenge?" the girl next to her asked in Mandarin. Dressed in a Chinese silk pantsuit of green and yellow, with a dragon embroidered in metallic shades of red and gold, she had her long green hair tied back in a ponytail that fell to the small of her back. Her eyes had a yellowish cast and she wore a haughty, disdainful expression. Her demeanor suggested that it was one of only two or three expressions she ever used.

"Call it a metaphor," Himura replied with a smirk. "The game itself is of no real importance. It merely serves as a proxy for an actual trial by combat. But it's a challenge Ranma has accepted all the same. Should my team beat Ranma's, I secure her services for the year and satisfy the conditions of my Grandfather's trial, thus securing my inheritance."

The chinese girl raised a skeptical eyebrow and folded her arms over her generous chest. "And this is the plan for which you require the elder's help?"

Himura laughed. "Oh dear, no. the outcome of the game itself is nearly irrelevant. But Ranma and his friends believe it is and pour all their effort into it so it serves a useful purpose in keeping them distracted. They'll also keep underestimating me since I planted the idea that I cheat to make things easier on myself and use my status and position to get away with it."

"But you are cheating," the girl replied, confused.

Himura shook her head. "No, no… What I've done is fooled them into thinking there are rules in this little contest. They're so focused on the cards I've tucked up my sleeve that they won't notice the gun I've already drawn under the table."

"If everything is arranged so perfectly, then why do you need us?" Tan Pohn asked.

"I can hardly afford to think only one step ahead, my dear," Himura replied. "Nabiki Tendo has the potential to be dangerous. She's already brought a number of previously conflicting elements in Nerima to heel and, once I make my move, she is liable to attempt to employ them in ways that would be… troublesome."

"Why not simply kill her? That's what obstacles like her are for," The Joketsuzoku warrior sneered.

"My grandfather's edict prevents it and I'm not in a position to openly defy him. Yet," Himura replied. "However, this whole matter has created an opportunity for me. I've had to accelerate many of my plans but what I've learned from all this has opened up a number of possibilities. If I must be perfectly honest, Nabiki Tendo has been rather useful in her attempts to pacify the chaos that normally exists here and concentrating what remains into a predictable pattern. It's made my own progress much smoother. I was hoping that I would get the opportunity to break her rather than destroy her. She would be that much more useful as a pawn."

"Hmph. She's a weak Japanese girl with no fighting skills. Just like you. You make what should be a straightforward battle into a complex, bloodless, joyless dance." She gave Himura a cold look. "If it wasn't for the Elder's instructions, it would not be worth my time to even speak to you, much less do your bidding."

Himura gave a self-depreciating shrug. "The King on a chessboard must seem ever so dull and limited to the Rook, but both have their place on the board. There will be plenty of the sort of entertainment you crave soon enough."

"More talk of games?" Tan Pohn made a skeptical snort. "Just so long as you uphold your end of the bargain. Otherwise you and I will play a very short 'game' of our own. One that I doubt you will enjoy quite so much."

000

"You want to do what?" Ranma said, eyes wide.

Nabiki smirked. Akane had retreated to her room to change, leaving Nabiki to float the idea she'd had to Ranma. "We want to do a girl's night out. The three of us. Hit a few dance clubs, take in the night life, that sort of thing."

"I thought this was supposed to be a date," Ranma said, looking disappointed. "I mean… I get that things kinda got messed up by Kodachi, but…"

Nabiki's smirk widened. "You wanted a little romance… some flirting and basically being touchy feely?" She grinned and laid her arms on Ranma's shoulders, leaning in close to the redhead as she blushed. "Ranma… have you ever seen girls at a dance club?"

"N-no?" Ranma said nervously.

Nabiki giggled. "Girl-girl is kind of a thing on the dance floor. Oh, it's a tactic girls use to get guys' attention, of course. Make out with another girl and suddenly all your drinks are free and all the eyes are on you. Everyone knows it's just playing to the fantasy. Well… that seems like a good place to go be public and open about things without any actual fallout. It just won't be an act when we do it."

"But… isn't that… kind of… perverted?" Ranma asked in a small voice, eyes wide.

"I think 'naughty' is a better term for it," Nabiki said. "Well? Wanna give it a try? I've already got an outfit or two in your size you can wear."

"You already bought me clothes for this?!" Ranma squeaked, slightly aghast.

"Maybe? A little?" Nabiki said, somewhat bashfully. "I see stuff that would look good on you as a guy or a girl now and then and I pick it up…"

"Because it's way more daring than anything you would wear, and you figure that you can get me into it because I have no feminine modesty?" Ranma asked, folding her arms and giving Nabiki a skeptical look.

"Oho! Now that sounds like a challenge!" Nabiki said with a grin. "Besides, let's be honest; You have no male modesty either. You wander around in your boxers more than a male lingerie model!"
Ranma flushed a bit and ducked her head. "No one ever said anything about it!"

"Yeah, because you're hot," Nabiki waggled her eyebrows. "Trust me, if your Dad had tried that sort of thing we'd have tossed him out in the street."

"He kinda is, you know?" Ranma said. "He doesn't wear underwear under that dogi."

Nabiki winced and stepped back, putting her hands over her eyes. "Okay… I totally didn't need that mental image…"

"Trust me, never camp with him. It gets worse," Ranma said. "He doesn't wash that thing very much either. The smell is… memorable."

"Please… stop…" Nabiki muttered, starting to look a little green. "You win. Mood dead. I'll be good."

Ranma smirked. "Besides, what's the point of getting dressed up just to give a bunch of guys a show?"

Akane's door opened and she stepped out of her room. There was a sound that could have been the door closing behind her or it could have been Ranma's jaw hitting the ground.

She was wearing a blue minidress, cut dangerously short and slit even further up each hip that drew attention to her legs and created the illusion that they were longer. She wore a wide black belt around her waist that accentuated her curves and the bodice was cut low, with a black nylon panel that ran up to a choker around her neck to leave her shoulders and upper back bare. Her hair had been teased and styled to give her dark locks a somewhat feral appearance and her carefully applied makeup highlighted her eyes and made them seem darker and more sultry. Her ruby red lips looked softer and fuller than Ranma remembered.

Akane gave the redhead a heavy-lidded look and in a breathy tone that simply dripped with seduction and promise said, "I'm not wearing it for the boys, Ranma."

"Hrk," Ranma whimpered, frozen in place.

"I think you broke her," Nabiki said softly after a minute of the redhead's lockup.

Akane stepped forward slowly and traced a carefully painted nail across Ranma's cheek. "Should I kiss it better, Ranma?" she asked.

"Grk," Ranma replied. Her blush deepened, but otherwise she didn't move a muscle.

"So… what do you say, Ranma?" Nabiki asked. "Want to go dancing with us? We'll head home if you're not having fun, promise."

"And I'll make sure Nabiki looks at least as good as me, just for you," Akane winked.

Ranma finally managed a slow nod, though one could almost hear a sound like a creaking, rusty hinge.

"Thank you!" Both girls threw their arms around the redhead's neck and hugged her, which only made the paralysis worse.

"Umm, one last thing…" Akane said shyly. "I know it's asking a lot, but… do you think maybe you could use the soap? Y'know, just to avoid accidents?"
"The… soap?" Ranma said dumbly. "Uhhh… sure, Akane…"

She beamed. "Great! Go take a quick bath and I'll help Nabiki get ready, then we can help you."

Ranma swallowed a bit as her mind started conjuring possibilities of what Nabiki might come up with and decided it would be wise to retreat before she simply passed out on the floor from the overload. She nodded, bowed clumsily (She wasn't sure why) and scurried for the stairs, nearly bowling Kasumi over in her mad scramble to get to the furo as fast as possible.

"Oh my…" Kasumi said, watching her go.

000

"Gah!"

Ranma yelped and shuddered as she dumped the tub of cold water over her head. It was the seventh one so far.

Okay, get it together, Saotome! she thought, slapping at her cheeks. This isn't anything wilder than what you've already done!

Sha paused a moment, blinking a bit as that thought sank in, then clunked herself in the forehead with the wooden tub.

"I really am a pervert…"

There was a polite knock at the furo door. "Ranma?" Kasumi's voice was tentative, hesitant. "Are you decent?"

"Uh, not really…" Ranma said, looking down at the tub. "Sorry, have I been in here too long?"

"Oh, no, not at all. I just realized I had all the towels hanging on the laundry lines and forgot to warn you. I brought you some. Is it alright if I open the outer door and put them out for you?" Kasumi said.

"Uh, sure," Ranma had learned to be nervous about the furo door, but at the same time Kasumi wasn't liable to drop a table on her head should she accidentally get an eyeful.

The outer door opened and Ranma could see Kasumi's shadow through the paper panels of the shoji separating the entryway from the bath itself. "Ranma… actually, now that I have a minute, I just wanted to ask how you're holding up?"

"Huh? Umm… okay I guess?" Ranma looked down at the tub in her hands. "I mean… the whole situation with my parents kinda sucks but… just about everything else is better, so… I guess it balances out?" She sighed. "I know I musta sounded kinda messed up the last time we had a serious talk."

Kasumi was silent for a moment. "Ranma… You're dealing with something I admit I can barely grasp." She turned and sat down on a stool just on the other side of the screen. "And that's okay," she added quickly, "but… I'm sometimes afraid that I'll say something offensive in my ignorance, so I've stayed quiet. But I DID want to say something today. I know my sisters can get carried away. I overheard your conversation with them about your date this evening…"

Ranma blushed and covered her head with the washtub. "Oh god, you must think I'm a freak, doncha… Taking advantage of Akane and Nabiki…"
"No!" Kasumi shook her head. I... see? This is what I was afraid of doing. No, Ranma, going dancing hardly makes you the least bit unusual, and even if it did... so what? In the almost two years I've known you, nothing about you has been anything but noble and kind. I don't believe you're CAPABLE of taking advantage of my sisters that way. It's not in your nature." She took a deep breath. "I am... a little worried they are taking advantage of YOU, however."

"How so?" Ranma lifted the tub off her head, looking over at her curiously.

"Ranma... when was the last time you got to change forms?" Kasumi asked.

"Ummm... " She scratched her head. "Tuesday, I think? Yeah... I was a guy Tuesday morning."

"And you haven't been able to change since, partly because the soap locks you for several days, right?" Kasumi said. "Usually you've been using the weekend as a respite from spending the entire week as a girl because it's your first real chance to change back. I overhead Akane asking you to use the soap tonight. That would lock you again almost until your next game, wouldn't it?"

Ranma paused, glancing at the bar of soap nearby. "Yeah... it would..." I didn't think of that! I'd be stuck a girl for practically an entire extra week!

"I wanted to make sure you were aware, and you were okay with it." Kasumi said, "I know you're inclined to want to make Nabiki and Akane happy... which is good! But... I also remember how hard it was on you when you've been stuck in your female form for an extended period in the past."
She sighed. "I know Akane in particular... PUSHES. If you'd like me to talk to her about this, I'd be happy to."

Ranma picked up the bar of soap from the dish and looked at it, then looked up at her own reflection in a nearby mirror. The Full-body Cat Tongue had me locked for almost a month. Am I just doing that to myself willingly now? Unconsciously the traced a finger along her cheek, although the freckles she knew were there weren't visible this far from the mirror.

She took a deep breath, then filled another tub with water and started lathering herself up. "Do you know the worst part of being stuck during the Full-body Cat Tongue?" she asked conversationally.

"What?" Kasumi asked.

"My clothes didn't fit," Ranma said, scrubbing. "That's always been the worst part of the curse. If it fits in one form, it doesn't the other, and so I'm stuck wearing baggy, shapeless stuff that's somewhere in between. I kept wearing my guy clothes during the Full-body Cat Tongue 'cuz I didn't wanna admit that Akane's clothes were more comfortable."

"Even if they were too tight in the chest or baggy in the hips?" Kasumi asked, bemused.

Ranma shook her head. "I was just turning her crank. My guy side stuff was worse." She dumped the tub over herself to rinse off. "But I was terrified of being comfortable, you know? I was so scared of any possibility that I might learn to live with it - or even that it wasn't that bad, really. Just different." She looked at her hand. "I mean... that's all this is. Just... different. And... these last few weeks my clothes have fit most of the time and nobody blinks if I'm one way or another. I feel like... like I've been holding onto a ledge, trying with all of my strength to keep from falling, feeling my grip slowly starting to slip as my feet dangle in the air with no purchase anywhere... that awful, awful feeling you get when you're about to fall and ain't got no control? And then... My grip slips and there's the ground, right under my feet, and the whole time there never really was a fall." She shrugged. "So what if I spend another week as a girl? Or a month, even? It's just 'cause circumstance make it easier right now. That'll change, and maybe I'll spend a month as a guy. Or maybe I'll be back to back n' forth. But even if I go a little girly… or even a lot… I can swing back just as easily. So it'll happen or it won't - but someday - at some point - it'll reach some kinda equilibrium. If I end up being a certain way, it'll be because I want to be that way. I'm comfortable being this way. Mebbe that is weird. Mebbe it wouldn't work for someone else. But it's how it is for me. I'm okay with being comfortable for now."

Kasumi was quiet for a long moment, but when she spoke, her tone was lighter. "Well, then I finally know what to get you for Christmas. Some kind of magic shapeshifting clothes."

"I… uhh… I know I'm the last person who should be pointing out this, but…" Ryouga stared at the familiar sign out in front of Ucchan's. "This isn't the way to my house."

"Oh, we know that, sugar. We just thought we'd stop by to have a bite and see how Konatsu is doing running the place…" Ukyou said conversationally.

"… Tie you to chair and beat senseless until you tell what you intentions are for Airen?" Shampoo finished with a bright smile, then took two fingers and stabbed them into the pressure point on the back of his neck.

"Owwww! What the hell!?" Ryouga clapped a hand over the spot on his neck and glared at her.

Shampoo blinked, then looked at her fingers. "Ooops… Bakusai Tenketsu training make too tough for sleep spot to work…"

Ukyou sighed and slapped her forehead. "God damnit, Shampoo…" Great! NOW he's going to either get angry, run, or start a fight! Or all three! He's too strong for us to get him inside by force! She glanced at Shampoo, discarded an idea based on how the Furinkan girl's uniform was designed, then came to an uncomfortable realization.

"Sleep spot?! What the hell is going on?!" Ryouga glared at Shampoo. "What are you up to this time?! What do you mean, 'what are my intentions for…'"

He didn't get to finish. Ukyou tapped him on the shoulder. He turned just in time to see the last button on her shirt and the front clasp on her bra pop open at the same time as she took a step back to make sure he got a good eyeful when she pulled her shirt wide open.

There was a moment where time seemed to slow. The breeze caught her shirt, making it billow, and the cups of her bra fluttered further apart as her breasts, freed from their lacy fabric prison, bounced lightly from the exertion.

Ryouga's eyes widened. His pupils dilated and his skin went pale as the blood drained from his face. His mouth hung agape and, contrary to expectations, there was only a slight trickle of blood from his nostrils. Then his eyes rolled back into his head and he collapsed in a boneless heap on the ground.

Ukyou closed her shirt quickly to avoid flashing anyone else, fumbling to try and get her bra clasped while simultaneously holding her shirt closed. "Don't just stand there, pick him up, Shampoo! We need to get him inside!"

Shampoo's eyes seemed to be fixed on a point somewhere below Ukyou's neck. "Perhaps… Shampoo help with bra first?" she said, unconsciously making grabby motions with her hands and drooling slightly.
"You are such jackasses! Both of you!" Ukyou finally got the clasp done up and, not bothering with the rest, knelt down and grabbed Ryouga by the ankle and dragged him into the restaurant.

Ryouga stirred. He felt groggy, his head throbbed and his nose felt itchy. When he tried to move his arm to raise a hand to scratch it, he found they were bound firmly in place behind him.

He cracked open an eye. There was a light being shone in his face so he shut it again and groaned.

"Finally awake?" a familiar voice said, though it sounded like they were trying to be gruffer, more menacing, so his confused brain couldn't place it for the moment.

"What is this?" He risked opening an eye again. "Ugh… could you move the light, please?"

"Uhhh… no," the voice said uncertainly. There was some whispering between the voice and another figure.

"What do we do if he asks us to move the light?"

"No move light! Light is in eyes so no can see us."

"Oh, okay."

"The light stays!" the voice said firmly. "We have some questions to ask you. Cooperate, and this will go easily. For you."

A glass of water was placed on the table in front of him.

"Refuse, and it will go… uh… LESS easily."

"That's okay. I'm not actually thirsty," Ryouga said. "Could you maybe undo the ropes, though? They're kinda chafing…"

A pair of hands slammed down on the table. "What you planning to do with Airen!?" The second voice demanded. "What you ALREADY do with Airen!?"

"… Shampoo?" Ryouga squinted, just able to make out a hint of her lavender hair past the glare of the lamp. "What are you doing?"

"Shampoo ask questions!" She slammed her hands onto the table again.

Ryouga shrugged. "Okay… what do you want to know?"

"You play hardball, huh? Prisoner who refuse to answer questions go to very bad… wait… what?"

"What do you want to know?" Ryouga repeated, a little more slowly.

"What you do with Airen!?" Shampoo demanded again.

"Umm… do you mean what kinds of things or did you misplace Ranma and are asking where I put her?" Ryouga asked, confused.

"Hmph… wise guy, huh? Maybe Shampoo show you what we do to wise guys here!" she growled at him.
"Where is 'here'?' Ryouga asked. "Are we still at Ucchan's? I'm pretty sure Ranma's at the Tendo Dojo, if that's who you're looking for, but you know that, we walked here together..."

"Oh my GOD..." the first voice interjected in exasperation. "She wants to know what you and Ranma did at the Kuno's last night, or if you guys did any compromising stuff together?"

Ryouga blinked. "Compromising…?" He paused, chewing over the question as he tried to work out how he had gotten where he was, in the hope of figuring out some of the context. "We had dinner, talked about bushido and stuff with the Kunos, then went to bed. Now… hang on, I remember walking home with you two and… and we got to Ucchan's but..."

"Just go to sleep?" Shampoo asked. "Or sleep TOGETHER!?"

"Well, together, actually. There was only one bed, after all." Ryouga said off-handedly. "Now… something happened when we got here, right? There was… there was some kind of 'popping' noise, then..."

"You slept in the same bed!?" the first voice yelped, aghast.

"Well, yeah, Ranma didn't want me to sleep on the floor. It wasn't a big deal, really. I mean, we've shared a tent before so..."

"You've slept together BEFORE!?"

"Yeah, I mean, occasionally," Ryouga replied. "Ranma was usually a guy those times, of course… Now… Ugh… what happened that caused me to black out? There was… I saw something… There was… was… Ukyou was there, but..."

"You slept with him as a GUY?!" Ukyou yelped.

"Hold on... think this too easy." Shampoo said. She pushed the light out of the way, causing Ryouga to blink in the relative darkness as his eyes adjusted. She turned his chair to face her, gripped his shoulders and looked him in the eyes. "Shampoo ask plain because stupid Japanese is full of stupid metaphors because is stupid. Have you had sex with Ranma?"

Ryouga's eyes widened and he rocked back in his chair. "What!? NO!"

"Even though you sleep together in same bed?"

"It was a huge bed! We could have fit five people between us!" Ryouga protested. "I wanted to sleep on the floor, but Ranma said that was stupid because she knew nothing was going to happen! And nothing did!"

Shampoo nodded. "And no tempted at all?"

"Of course n-" Ryouga started, but suddenly he remembered the image of Ranma in that silk nightgown and how the moonlight had played over the highlights in her crimson hair as it fell past her shoulders, and cast shadows that only emphasized her curves. What light there was seemed to collect and pool in her eyes, making them the brightest things in the room. With a slight smile on her lips, she'd been like an illustration from a fairy tale. He trailed off, swallowing, then squeezed his eyes shut and shook his head. "Of course not!"

The chair was spun back around. Ukyou was in front of him now, and glaring daggers at him. "It took you almost 30 seconds to finish that sentence, sugar. You looked awful far away for a bit there. Care to try again?"
He swallowed, noting the anger in Ukyou's eyes as she leaned over him. Then, a little lower, he could see that the collar of her shirt was misbuttoned.

A flash of memory.

His eyes widened. "When we got here… you… Your shirt… You flashed me!"

Ukyou's eyes widened and she took a quick step back, covering her chest. "Don't look THERE, pervert!"

Ryouga shut his eyes tight. "I'm sorry! I…" He cracked one open. "You were trying to knock me out?"

Ukyou clapped her hand over her eyes. "This was a terrible idea. Why did I let you talk me into this, Shampoo?"

"Hey, getting tits out Spatula Girl's idea. Shampoo just try and use pressure point," Shampoo huffed.

"Why were you trying to knock me out?!" Ryouga demanded.

"So we could get some answers!" Ukyou shot back. "You're doing that thing where you make a girl the entire center of your universe. Except it's our Ranma! We wanna know what's going on!"

Ryouga sighed. "What's going on is Ranma doesn't feel that way about me. It's Ranma. Why would she?" He glared at Ukyou. "If you wanted that answer, you should have just asked me, Ukyou!"

"Ryouga," Shampoo walked around in front of the chair and crouched down on her haunches so that she could look him in the eye. "How many people you think Airen cry for? How many you think she let see cry?"

"I…" Ryouga blinked.

"Only hear that scream from Airen once before. Bad, bad day. Akane nearly die," Shampoo said. "Airen scared ever since of losing someone she care for. See it in eyes. Airen have that fear when you get hurt. So Airen care for Lost Boy."

Ryouga blinked owlishly at her, his expression shifting as he tried to process that. Of course he knew Ranma cared on some level; It was impossible to be linked to her without knowing that. He had very carefully and willfully avoided processing what that mass of warm, reddish-gold emotions he felt from her towards him might mean. It was very important for the sake of his sanity that it wasn't… THAT.

"Ranma can't feel… that way about me," Ryouga said carefully. "I've seen how Ranma acts when she… when she feels that way about me. There was… an incident with a magic fishing rod and…"

"That magic," Shampoo said. "Shampoo know from experience that real thing different." She looked away guiltily. "Magic… magic compel. Hollow out inside, make only love. Simple, like cartoon of real thing. Real love complex, mix with other feelings… annoyance and jealousy and selfishness and insecurity and need."

Ukyou walked back over and squatted down as well. "We're not asking how Ranma feels, sugar. We're asking how you feel?"

"I told you…" Ryouga started.
"You told me you're seeing Ranma differently," Ukyou said. "You've been evasive about how you feel which is so not like you it isn't funny." Ukyou poked him in the chest. "Look, I'm not trying to attack you… We just… This is kind of a paradigm shift in things."

Ryouga closed his eyes. "You want the truth? Fine. I… I…" He shuddered. "In my head, I know this is the worst thing I could be feeling. I try and think about Akari, or even Akane and how much that hurt. I try and keep the face of that arrogant, smug jerk in my mind. But… but then she looks at me… smiles… and even though I know it's just an illusion, I…" he trailed off.

Ukyou wrapped her arms around him and gave him a fierce hug.

"I've been there, Ryouga," Ukyou said softly.

"I can't do this…" Ryouga shook his head and shuddered. "She's my friend… she always was… Even when I thought I hated her. When I met Ranma I didn't have anyone else. My Dad was dead and my Mom was gone and… and I was so alone… then she… he left and… She trusts me now and this… everything I feel is just a betrayal of that trust and I need it to stop so I can just be what she needs me to be… what she thinks I am instead of… of…" He started sobbing softly.

"Easy, sugar…" Ukyou sighed. She felt like a complete tool now.

Ukyou was a bit surprised when Shampoo hugged him from the other side.

"Shampoo understand how feel," Shampoo said. "Sick, sad feeling. See what want, but can't have."

Ryouga chuckled a bit, bitterly. "I'm sorry, but you don't."

Shampoo jerked back a bit, as if burnt. Ukyou backed off a little more slowly. She could see his jaw had tensed.

"You got what you wanted in the end. All of it," Ryouga said in a low voice. "Maybe you thought it was out of reach once or twice, maybe you doubted, but you didn't start off knowing that it was impossible… and fall anyway." He gave Shampoo a hard glare.

"Lost Boy not know what he talking about." Shampoo glared back defiantly. "Not know Shampoo's heart. Not know what Shampoo felt." Her expression softened. "You know what magic love like. Hollow. Wrong. Think Shampoo try such thing if not desperate? Think Shampoo use such magics on own self if not think no other way?"

Ryouga's own expression shifted as he remembered the incident she was talking about. "The red thread. It affected you too?"

Shampoo looked away sadly. "Of course. Shampoo already love Ranma, but… but…" She shuddered. "Magic love all-consuming. Push out all doubt, all other emotions. No why anymore. Not love other person because of who person is, love because."

"And yet you re-tied it anyway?" Ryouga asked.

"Wait, you got involved in that mess?" Ukyou said, a little surprised.

"Lost Boy try to stop Shampoo. Almost succeed, too," Shampoo said, twiddling her fingers.

"Why?" Ukyou said, flabbergasted. "You would have had Akane all to yourself if Shampoo had pulled it off!"
Ryouga looked away, embarrassed. "It would have hurt her. Akane didn't deserve to have her heart broken because of some stupid magic spell. What I got out of it didn't matter." He sighed. "That's what I told myself, anyway. When it came down to it, I froze up."

"You never really believed you were gonna get anywhere with Akane, did you?" Ukyou said. "That's why you kept blowing all of our long-term plans in favor of getting a couple of minutes with her. You figured you were gonna lose anyway, so get what you could, right?"

He shook his head. "I think you're giving me too much credit. My brain just kind of switched off whenever Akane smiled at me."

"I… kind of understand that now, actually," Ukyou said, blushing a little.

"Should untie. No need for ropes now," Shampoo said, moving behind Ryouga to undo the bindings.

"Oh, uhh… did you need the rope back?" Ryouga asked over his shoulder.

"No, is just old rope. Why?" Shampoo asked, curious.

Ryouga tensed, flexed his shoulders and casually snapped the rope. "That was actually really uncomfortable. I was worried it was valuable rope or something and I'd twitch and wreck it." He rubbed his arms, leaning forward a bit in the chair.

Shampoo blinked. "Maybe should take Lost Boy back home to Joketsuzoku village. Girl problems solved with one challenge there!"

Ryouga winced. "No thanks. I don't like the idea of some girl having to marry me because some law forces them to."

"Agreed. That always struck me as sorta creepy. What if some cretin from the Musk came in and just beat up an Amazon girl and said she was his bride now? Ukyou said, folding her arms.

Shampoo shook her head. "Not work like that. Challenge must be formal, and accepted, and no dishonor if Joketsuzoku tell Outsider to get lost. Women not accept challenge unless prepared for consequence." She cocked her head at Ryouga. "They see Lost Boy's strength, they ask him to challenge. That way it normally work. Is test of worth, not way to win trophy!"

"That's not how I heard it went with you and Ranma, sugar," Ukyou said, raising a skeptical eyebrow.

Shampoo suddenly looked nervous. "Uh… Shampoo's case special…?"

Ryouga turned in his chair as Ukyou came up next to him, both of them giving Shampoo an incredulous look.

"Shampoo… have you been fudging the law this whole time!?" Ukyou asked, aghast. She started to giggle. "Are you serious? After all we bet on those stupid Amazon laws in the first place?!!"

"Not fudged!" Shampoo said haughtily. Then she paused and considered. "Well… first time come to Japan, maybe fudge a little. Ranma boy-side cute and strong. But original challenge proper, just circumstance of Airen's curse not known. Elders rule original challenge valid under marriage law."

"In other words, you wanted Ranma really really badly and so your Great-grandmother pulled some strings to make sure it happened," Ukyou said with a smirk.
"Yes, that," Shampoo said brightly, standing up and dusting her skirt off. "All work out in the end."

"Yeah…" Ryouga said, standing up from the chair. "I'm happy for you. Honestly. So… is this the part where you tell me I need to stay away from Ranma, and should go get myself lost for a few months?" He rubbed the back of his head. "Because I've considered it. I… I just need another week or two to see if we make any progress on this cure for my family directional curse. For my Mom's sake."

"Do you want to disappear for a couple of months, sugar?" Ukyou asked, giving him a searching look.

"It'd give things time to cool off," Ryouga said. "It's how I used to deal with my Akane problem, to try and get over her. It never really worked, but…” He sighed heavily.

Ukyou put her hand on his arm. "That's not what I asked, Ryouga."

He closed his eyes. "It's… I…"

"Just be honest," Shampoo added. "Be here, or be free?"

His shoulders slumped. "I never wanted that kind of freedom. Ever. The first time I got lost in my life was the worst feeling in the world. When I started tracking Ranma, I spent two years alone. I almost died… I don't know how many times, and I knew that no one would ever even miss me. Since I got my curse I've had as many close calls in a month as I had in my first year of wandering."

He clenched his fist. "I don't want to go. I want to be here."

"All right," Ukyou said gently. "In that case, this is the part where we go downstairs, see if Konatsu is awake, crack open a couple of bottles of sake, and you two can tell me funny stories to get my mind off of how much revenue I'm losing by keeping the shop closed today."

Ryouga raised an eyebrow. "What happened to Konatsu?"

"Spatula girl not close shirt when drag Lost Boy inside," Shampoo said. "Ninja see, pass out cold."

"Yeah… uh… yeah, I can see that…” Ryouga pinched his nose closed as he remembered exactly what had knocked him out. "It was… it was… was the angelic choir something you guys arranged, or was I just hallucinating at that point?"

"Lost Boy hear too?" Shampoo smirked. "That allll Ukyou."

"Wow…” Ryouga shook his head. "You'd never think… I mean, I guess with the bindings and all you don't normally get a real idea…"

Ukyou blushed and self-consciously crossed her arms over her chest. "Okay, great, yeah, can we please stop talking about my chest now?"

"Why?" Shampoo asked innocently. "Ukyou's chest amazing."

Ukyou closed her eyes. "Okay… Sake and an aspirin…"

000

"Nervous, Ranma?"

The redhead glanced over at Nabiki. The middle Tendo had opted for a deep maroon strapless minidress with a matching half-length open front shirt overtop. She had finished it off with nylons and a set of black heels.

Ranma herself was wearing a short sleeveless qi-pao made from iridescent silk, silver in color with black edging. There was a chinese-style dragon embroidered over the left breast in blues and greens, with red and yellow accents. It was cut very short, no more than mid thigh, and slit up to the hip. "A little? I mean, I've worn daring stuff before, but I kinda always had an escape route…"

She glanced at the club door warily.

"A little risk is part of the fun," Nabiki replied. "Besides, the bouncers here are sweethearts."

"You've been here before, Nabiki?" Akane asked.

"I used to come a lot more before Ranma came and made Nerima more interesting," Nabiki said as they got into the line. "Broke in my first fake ID here. Speaking of which… they usually know not to check me, but just in case." She handed each of them a laminated card.

"Ooooh, right…" Akane bit her lower lip and looked nervously toward the door as she accepted the card. She glanced at it curiously.

"What's this?" Ranma asked. It looked like a standard Government ID card with her picture on it, but the rest of the information was all wrong.

"Kei Yasuhiko?" Ranma asked, raising an eyebrow at Nabiki.

"I'm apparently 'Yuri Takachiho'," Akane added, tucking her ID away. "When did you even get these made, Nabiki?"

"Safe to say the less you know, the better," Nabiki replied with a smile.

"There's no way they're gonna buy this," Ranma said darkly. "Nobody is going to believe that I'm twenty!"

"You're not trying to prevent them saying 'no', Ranma. You're giving them an excuse to say 'yes' and not get into trouble." Nabiki grinned. "Just look hot and it'll go smoothly."

Ranma gave her a cocky grin. "Well that I can do!"

"Yes, we know Kei dear." Akane leaned over and murmured in her ear. "Just remember you're very, very taken by a jealous uncute tomboy who wants your eyes on her tonight."

Ranma gave her a wink. "And who would that be? I thought I was your date tonight, Akane?"

"Oooooh, smooth!" Akane said with a grin and kissed Ranma's cheek.

"She's been rehearsing that one for a while," Nabiki said dryly. "And save the PDA's for the dance floor. Trust me."

Several people ahead of them were turned away at the door as the line advanced, until the usher waved them forward. The bouncer was a huge man clad in an untied navy blue yukata, with a sarashi wrapped around his midsection and dark, loose pants. He had muscles upon muscles, and stood well over six feet tall. His eyes were nearly hidden behind dark bangs. He regarded the three girls levelly as they approached.

"Hey, Rasho!" Nabiki chirped and waved to him with a bright smile as they walked up. "How are you? It's been a while!"
"Faye," he said, his stone-like face cracking into a subtle smile. "I haven't seen you around here for a long time. I was afraid you'd gone respectable on me."

"Me? I'd never do such a thing!" Nabiki acted shocked. "I just lost my taste for watered down drinks for a while."

He barked a short laugh. "Well, I'm afraid we can't help you there. Only the finest liquors and spirits are sold to our patrons at The Ruby Sea."

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "Really?"

"No, of course not. Seawater will get you drunker than the shite they serve in there and probably be less likely to make you blind," Rasho said with a chuckle. "But Tansui is working the bar tonight and he knows better than to try and swindle Faye Valentine." He looked over Ranma and Akane. "Minions of yours?"

"Friends, as it happens," Nabiki said.

"They up for this place?" He looked them over skeptically. "The sharks in there will be all over a cute pair of minnows like them."

"Oh, trust me, they can take care of themselves. They're most of the reason I've been away, actually." She stepped in closer and motioned him to bend down so she could whisper in his ear. "Your fire insurance is paid up, right?"

Rasho raised an eyebrow. "Well, if Faye is vouching for you… Look for the boys in the blue yukata if you get hassled." He stepped aside, pushed the door open and motioned them through.

"That was easy…" Ranma said as they made their way into the club's foyer.

"It's his job to pack as many pretty girls as he can into this place, then fill the rest with guys with fat wallets. The dynamic from that does the rest of the work for them," Nabiki said, stretching as she breathed in the heady scents of hot skin and alcohol. "Oh yes, I have missed this place!"

"Sounds like they should be paying us," Ranma said, looking around.

"Oh, they've got girls on the payroll. Float around, coax a few drinks out of the poor wallflowers. Gets their confidence up enough to try again, gets more cash in the till for the bartender, and it keeps the energy up," Nabiki replied.

"You seem to know an awful lot about it," Akane said skeptically.

"I only did it for a couple of months," Nabiki said off-handedly. "Found doing it on someone else's schedule kind of sucked the joy out of it. Plus, some of the other girls were a little too competitive for my tastes."

"Nabiki!" Akane yelped, aghast.

Nabiki rolled her eyes. "What, I scammed a few free drinks and trinkets by flirting with the boys? Trust me, that's one of the less eyebrow raising things I've done."

Akane folded her arms. "I'm not sure I wanna know…"

Nabiki led them into the club proper. The first thing Ranma noticed was that it was big. The main room was perhaps forty meters square and the ceiling was high enough that, with no overhead illumination, she couldn't make out any real detail. It had a definite oceanic theme - oceanic rather than nautical. The walls were painted in light, concealed floods in pastel shades of blue and green that shifted color just enough to suggest a wavelike motion. Coupled with strategically placed planters with frond-like vegetation and a number of large, internally lit fish tanks, it created the illusion of being underwater.

The round dance floor filled the middle of the room. Set a few steps down from the main floor, it appeared to be made of a translucent material and was lit from underneath. Three of the room's four corners were arranged with booths and tables while the massive bar, a great arched counter, occupied the fourth. A door in the far wall likely led to a kitchen and doors in either side wall bore signs for the restrooms.

The place was just starting to fill up with a scattering of patrons at tables, while most clustered around the bar or on the dance floor. The lights in the floor pulsed and dimmed in time with the music which was loud enough that Ranma could feel the beat like a physical force.

"So… uh… what do we do?" Ranma asked, eyeing the dance floor warily. "I… umm… probably shoulda said that… I dunno how to dance?"

Akane smirked and hooked her arm through one of Ranma's. "Don't worry, Ranma. We'll show you how."

Nabiki nodded, hooking her arm through the other. "Dancing is just improvising to a beat anyway. I don't think you'll have any trouble with it."

000

"Y'know, Ryouga, your problem is you take everything too ser'sly," Ukyou said, levelling a finger at the Lost Boy, her words just slightly slurred. "Y'gotta lighten up a bit. I mean… we ain't even twenty, right? Who finds their soulmate that young? Nobody's got it together that early."

They were sitting at one of the booths with a number of sake bottles, many of which were empty now. Konatsu was passed out to Ukyou's left and Ryouga was sitting opposite her with Shampoo on his right. They had made a respectable dent in Ukyou's supply of sake.

Ryouga gazed at her with tired eyes, his head pillowed on his fist. "Says the successful business own'r who's set t'marry both th' girls I like and is even younger'n me?"

"Two months, jackass! You're still th' little brother because… because… because!" Ukyou said crossly, her finger wavering. "And stop tryin' t'be two of you, I'm not that drunk!" She frowned. "Also… thought you gave up on 'Kane."

"Jus' 'cuz I gave up on her doesn't mean I don't still… y'know…" Ryouga said, slumping a little.

Ukyou's scowl softened. "Ouch. Sorry t'hear that, Ryo…"

"Is only two girls?" Shampoo asked, leaning in closer to Ryouga. "Heard maybe is something with Nabiki?" She tried to poke his nose but came closer to his cheek. "Pintou talking about keeping Lost Boy as pet."

Ryouga leaned back away from her, blushing. "I-I don't know what you're talking about!"

"Ack…!" He fumbled to pinch his nose closed, eyes widening as despite the effects of the alcohol (Or perhaps because of them) he caught the implied come-on. "Sh-Shampoo, you've got the wrong idea! Nothing is going on with Nabiki! She was just messing with Akane!"

Shampoo smile widened, her eyes half-lidding seductively as Ryouga's frantic babbling yielded more interesting information. "Is so? Perhaps Akane not so indifferent to Lost Boy as she claim?" She scooted closer, forcing him back up against the wall and slid her arms around his neck. "Think Lost Boy enjoy it, though. Think Pintou enjoy too, maybe enough that sometime she forget she just teasing. If Ranma, Akane and Nabiki all want Lost Boy, must be something to Lost Boy, hmmm? Perhaps worthwhile to test for own self?"

Ryouga made a small, strangled noise, eyes wide with panic. He glanced at the wall behind him, searching desperately for the breaking point so he could blow it out and escape.

A wrapped straw plinked off of Shampoo's forehead.

The Amazon girl blinked and turned to give Ukyou a perplexed look.

"Could you keep it in yer pants for once, Shampoo?" Ukyou growled. "I don't need t' clean up six litres of blood and/or fix a hole in the wall when he freaks out!" She crossed her arms and glared at her. "Honestly, ever since you uncorked your libido you've been shameless! You can't just drag someone into your bed because they catch your eye!"

Shampoo cocked her head, still halfway into Ryouga's lap with her arms draped around his neck. "Why not?"

"Because it's a different culture here!" Ukyou snarled angrily, her ire having sobered her up considerably. "Because it's more meaningful here and maybe because it makes the people you've already slept with feel like you're ditching them!"

Shampoo blinked, her eyes widened and she scooted back. "Oh!" she said, suddenly looking sheepish. "A-am sorry! Not mean to…"

Ukyou rolled her eyes. "Whatever. I get it. Sex's jus' like playin' cards fer Amazons. No big deal if you play wit' me or Ryouga or… or whoever!" She scooped up the bottle of sake and took a slug from it directly.

Ryouga took a tentative breath and relaxed a little. He didn't let his guard down, though, because it sounded like things could get tense in a different way.

"N-no! Not that way with Ukyou." Shampoo reached out and caught Ukyou's hands. "Is true, mean different things in Japan. But… but… Ukyou special! Ukyou first."

Ukyou blinked. "W-wait… hold on…" She leaned closer. "There's no way you knew how t'do all that… that stuff th' first time!"

Shampoo blushed self-consciously and looked away. "Is… is… is many writings on subject in Joketsuzoku village…"

"You got all that stuff out of a BOOK!?" Ukyou yelped.

"Scroll. Maybe… lot of scrolls…" Shampoo replied sheepishly. "Most girls Shampoo's age already have lover or two, but… Shampoo not well liked among sisters. So… study lots."

Ukyou blinked, looked thoughtful then leaned forward. "You… uhh… din't happen t'bring 'em with you from China, didja?"

Shampoo smiled. "Can loan if Ukyou want read?"

Ukyou blushed. "Uh… m-maybe… y'know… outta… curiosity…" she mumbled.

"Maybe can read together?" Shampoo asked, her voice dipping into a low, suggestive purr.

"God, you're shameless!" Ukyou protested, blushing harder and ducking her head. "... I-I guess… since I can't read Mandarin at all… You could translate 'em for me…"

Ryouga snatched a bandanna from his head and plugged his nose with it. Unfortunately for him, both Ukyou and Shampoo noticed.

"Pervert," Ukyou said, giving him a glare.

Shampoo smirked. "Maybe Lost Boy want to borrow too?" She winked at him. "Maybe will let see. But no can translate… Unless sister say is okay." She winked at the qualification.

Ryouga squeezed his eyes shut.

"Y'know, I should let her," Ukyou said, glowering at Ryouga. "You'd never survive the blood loss."

"Since when are you my sister?!" Ryouga said defensively.

Ukyou folded her arms and raised her chin, eyes closed. "Someone has t'look out fer you. You need an older sister!"

"You're younger than me!" Ryouga protested. "By two months!"

"I'm more mature!" Ukyou shot back. "So… so metaphorically I'm th' older sibling!"

"Hmmmmm..." Shampoo glanced back and forth between them, a slow smile spreading across her face. "Siblings. That have potential."

"DON'T GET IDEAS!" they both shouted.

000

Performance anxiety wasn't something Ranma really had a problem with.

Ranma had long ago learned that worrying about how she looked to others while in front of the crowd was pointless. Not just because self-consciousness was a distraction but because if you were worried you might look silly, you already did. But if you were confident, whatever you did would tend to work out and be well-received. Ranma had cultivated a kind of 'zen' of confidence, feeding off the crowd as it responded. She found she enjoyed performing, liking the rush from the positive feedback.

… Except for kiss scenes.

… Well… maybe kiss scenes wouldn't be so bad anymore…

Dancing, however, was unambiguously awesome.

There was a beat, throbbing and deep enough to feel rather than hear, all through the club, a steady, solid rhythm to move to. There were no katas or established forms, just movement, unrestricted and demonstrative - a way to express feelings through motion.

It was heaven.

It took a few minutes for Ranma to learn the 'language' but Akane and Nabiki being there helped. Eventually she forgot about the crowd almost entirely to focus on the music and the two girls with her as they wove their dances together. Ranma realized that if the dancing was like a language, then what Nabiki and Akane were 'saying' would be a little suggestive. She was a bit hesitant at first but then she decided to set her worries aside. It was a little exhilarating, like sending naughty messages by secret code.

Ranma didn't stop to consider that their 'secret code' was something just about everyone in the club was fluent in.

She realized her mistake when, after a pleasant eternity dancing, she cracked open an eye to notice that the crowd had pulled away and formed a rough circle around them as they watched the three of them dance. Normally an audience wasn't a big problem for Ranma, but those watching were mostly male, and Ranma was starting to see familiar look in the eyes of some of them; entirely too much like that of some of the Hentai Horde from Furinkan.

"Uh oh…" Nabiki noticed it as well. "I think it's maybe a good time for us to take a break and get a drink, huh girls?"

That was apparently the wrong thing to say, because a small knot of young men stepped forward from the crowd.

"Why not let us buy your drinks, ladies?" The leader of the group said, thumbing towards his chest proudly. He was wearing a cheap business suit, as were those with him, but their hairstyles were all over the place. Bad dye jobs, pompadours - the entire spectrum of the stereotypical 'thug' styles. "You three seem kinda lonely dancing by yourselves. Why not let me and my boys show you a good time?"

Ranma remembered Nabiki's comment about getting the boys to pay for their drinks but something felt off about this. She shot a glance to Nabiki, who shook her head slightly and stepped forward.

"Thanks for the offer, boys, but we're good for now. Maybe later?" Nabiki said lightly.

"Nah, nah, you've been out here puttin' on a show for nearly an hour!" The leader walked up and slipped an arm around Nabiki's shoulders. "We gotta booth off to the back where it's nice'n dark, an-AUUURGH!?"

He didn't get to finish. His hand never came to rest on Nabiki's shoulder. Ranma glared at him as she held his wrist between two slender fingers in a vice-like grip. She gave one of the pressure points a none-too-gentle squeeze.

"That's mine," Ranma growled softly. "You don't touch her without permission."

Ranma was aware that the rest of them were moving in closer. There were six or seven of them, all reacting to the leader's cry of pain.

The leader withdrew his had and gave her an amused look as he rubbed it. "Easy, Red! No need to be so hostile. Me'n my boys just wanted to show you girls a good time, since you were all on your lonesome. A lotta girls would be happy to spend time with us."
Another guy with his hair dyed a shocking shade of red leaned over and leered at Ranma. "A lotta girls would be happy to spend some time with us. The boss here is movin' up in the world an' bein' nice to us could have some serious benefits, y'know?"

Nabiki folded her arms and raised an eyebrow coolly. "I'm afraid we're not interested in that kind of work, fellas."

"Nah, nah, nah," the leader chuckled. "We don't ask our girls to do stuff like that. You three are way too high-class for that kinda stuff, right boys?"

There was a chorus of chuckles and assent from the rest of the band of thugs that just served to emphasize the fact that they were more or less surrounding them now.

Ranma traded a glance with Akane. She didn't want to start a fight and get them kicked out of Nabiki's favorite club, but if this went on much longer…

"Look..." the leader leaned in conspiratorially towards Nabiki. "A guy in my position's got a certain... rep, y'know? Gotta keep up appearances and all. Every night me'n the boys come here, find the hottest girls in the joint and give 'em a good time. I got a direct line to the good shit, too. None of this crap cut with bakin' soda. Whatever you like. So you three are the hottest girls this place has seen in weeks, mebbe ever, and so we just think you should be properly escorted is all. I promise, you won't regret it."

"TOUMA!"

The booming voice caused the Thug Leader to freeze, his face showing fear and recognition. He turned quickly toward the one who had addressed him.

Another young man stepped forward. He was in his mid-twenties with dark brown hair tied back in a neat ponytail and, although he had obvious stubble, it was that carefully groomed type that was meant to evoke manliness. His dark suit was the polar opposite of those worn by the thugs; crisply pressed, perfectly tailored and obviously high-end. Despite the heat of the club, he didn't look like he was sweating. He fixed the leader of the group with his dark eyes and folded his arms. "You know, if my grandfather knew that he was paying you to harass girls and do drugs rather than keeping tabs on me like he thinks he's paying you to do, he might have to reconsider his payroll."

The leader's eyes widened at the implicit threat. "I... I..."

"I came out of my private booth, yes," the dark-haired man said. "That's what happens when you utterly fail to be discreet."

"L-look, we don't work for you!" one of the other thugs stammered.

"No, you work for my grandfather," the dark haired man replied, not looking at him. "He pays you a lot of money to keep an eye on me without me noticing. So how do you suppose he might react if I were to call him and complain about how you're harassing friends of mine, making a scene and completely ignoring your assigned task - thereby failing completely in every single aspect of your jobs?" His voice boomed and narrowed his eyes. "Shall I remind you what happened to the last low-level street thugs who made that mistake?"

"Th-that's not necessary...!" the leader said quickly.

"Good," said the dark haired man. "Now... go back to your table and your drugs and whatever other floozies you can attract and you play nice for the rest of the night and you leave my friends alone. I keep my mouth shut, you keep your fat paycheck and everyone is happy. Fair?"
“Yeah… yeah!” the Leader said, breaking into a wide grin. He stepped away from Nabiki and bowed. "You know… you're alright. You're an alright guy, Yuto. Me'n the boys look forward to working for you."

"You aren't," Yuto growled, his arms remaining crossed, his glare cold. "Suck up to my sister if you want to try and score points with your future boss." The dark haired man smirked slightly. "Not that it'll get you anywhere."

The thugs backed away, leaving only the well-dressed man and the slowly dispersing crowd who had been watching the scene. Ranma stared at him. The name seemed familiar, but she didn't recognize this man at all.

"Thank you for the assist… 'Yuto', was it?” Nabiki said, raising an eyebrow. She seemed to be studying him carefully. "I'm guessing that if you're willing to come to our rescue, there were no lasting hard feelings about that 'One Cup Genki' incident?"

"That was you?" Yuto yelped, a disgusted scowl crossing his face. "I might not have helped you if I had known! It took me a solid week to get the aftertaste out of my mouth!"

"Yuto!?” Ranma suddenly made the connection. The scraggly, inebriated, demanding, eccentric Beer Otaku from the beach weekend.

Yuto raised an eyebrow. "Yes. Has my reputation preceded me? I'm afraid I'm the one at a disadvantage then, Miss…?"

"Yeah, the beach weekend, doncha remember?" Ranma said excitedly. "Asahi and Chiyako, and there was the clam bake and…"

"Ran," Nabiki said sternly, cutting her off. Ranma gave Nabiki a curious glance but after a few more seconds of Nabiki's steady warning look she remembered her current form and glanced down at herself. Crap! I'm a girl right now! He only knows boy-type Ranma! And I've soap-locked myself so I can't even show him to clear things up!

"You'll have to forgive Ran," Nabiki said, using the name Kodachi had come up with. "She's gotten so used to living vicariously through her brother's exploits that she sometimes forgets she wasn't actually there."

"Brother…?” Yuto said, then his eyes widened. "Ah, you mean Ranma?" He cocked his head and regarded Ranma skeptically. "... Are you adopted, maybe? I don't see the resemblance at all."

Ranma boggled a bit at that but then paused to consider. My hair is down and styled, I'm not dressed at all the same, I've got makeup on, I'm a lot shorter… maybe all the differences add up? "I'm… uh… his half-sister," Ranma said, electing to stick with a bit of the backstory she had woven for Kodachi's sake.

"And this is her date, my sister, Akane." Nabiki said, motion to the brunette who was regarding Yuto warily. "Akane, this is Yuto, someone Ranma and I met during our beach vacation."

"Yeah, you failed to mention," Akane said, giving her sister a scathing glare. "In fact, I'm starting to wonder what other little details you might have left out about that trip?"

"Aheh…” Nabiki looked a bit sheepish. "It… well, at the time…”

"Maybe we could take this back to my private booth?" Yuto suggested. "This sounds far more interesting than Asahi or Chiyako's usual prattle."
"They're here too?" Nabiki asked, following him as he turned and led them through the crowd towards rearmost corner of the club. The bouncer guarding it nodded to Yuto as he pulled back the rope and waved them through into the VIP area.

"Yes. They needed a designated driver for tonight," Yuto said off-handedly.

"Designated driver… You…" Nabiki said flatly.

Yuto shot her an annoyed look. "I am fully capable of driving."

"Yes, but…" Nabiki gestured as she struggled to find the right words, "… I would think that your 'hobby' would generally preclude…"

Yuto rolled his eyes at her as he led them past a much smaller, private dance floor to the corner booth in the very back. The area was dotted with tables, and had its own bar, with a much more subdued atmosphere. "It is not a hobby. It is a way of life. I am a gourmet, good lady, not some common drunk! While I'm sure most of the unenlightened masses who come here are content with their sour grape juice or ungodly Russian potato squeezings or even the pale, blasphemous imitations of the One True Beverage, my liver is a temple and I will not defile it with these lesser offerings! My friends are taking advantage of my good nature and insistence on quality… as well as the fact that while I'm visiting my family I have to keep up appearances."

"What he means is that since they aren't selling some obscure microbrew from Yugoslavia, he won't touch the booze here." A familiar mop of sandy hair popped up into view as Asahi got up from the table and walked out to meet them. "Nabiki! What brings you to this wretched hive of scum and villainy?"

"Hives of scum and villainy make the best nightclubs?" Nabiki grinned and stepped forward, ignoring the outstretched hand to give him a hug. "If I had known you were in town I would have arranged to meet up! What're you guys doing here?"

"Moral support," Asahi said. "Me'n Chiyako tag along whenever Yuto has to go be sociable with his family."

"Hi!" Chiyako peeked out from behind Asahi, having snuck in behind him. "What, no hugs for me, Nabiki?"

Nabiki laughed and hugged her too. "All of the hugs for you, Chi!"

Ranma felt a little awkward, having to consciously remind herself that, as much as she might remember them, she had to play the part of being a stranger or it would bring up questions that she couldn't currently answer.

Nabiki stepped back and motioned to Ranma and Akane. "This is my sister, Akane and Ran…"

"… Her girlfriend," Akane finished, giving them a defiant look as she looped her arm through Ranma's.

Nabiki blinked at Akane's fierce tone then shrugged. "I was gonna say 'Ranma's sister', but… fair enough."

"The siblings are out!" Asahi said, unconcerned about the pairing. "I don't think Ranma said anything about a sister, though I think Nabiki mentioned hers once or twice." He held out a hand to them. "I'm Asahi, this is my fiancee Chiyako and you've already met our pet eccentric rich person, Yuto."
Yuto huffed but remained silent.

"Fiancée?" Nabiki raised an eyebrow at Chiyako, who responded by lifting her hand and showing off a ring with a stone that caught the light. "Chi, you devil! When did you propose to him?"

"Hold on, that's backwards…" Asahi protested.

"No, no, she's got you dead to rights, Asahi," Yuto said with a grin.

"I strongly hinted at the idea…” Chiyako said carefully.

"You took him ring shopping," Yuto said.

"Ring window shopping," Chiyako corrected him.

Asahi sighed, the sound of long suffering. "I think I need a drink."

"Excellent idea!" Yuto clapped him on the back. "Asahi! Find our friends something drinkable in this den of philistines and heathens!"

"Augh!" Asahi stumbled forward at the slap. "Why me?!"

Yuto folded his arms. Despite his tailored suit and perfectly groomed looks, his countenance was now much more that of the slightly manic Beer Otaku Ranma remembered. "Because everyone should be relied on for their expertise and your expertise runs to swill and palate-numbing fruity froo-froo nonsense. So get to it!"

"Look, Yuto, this stuff in the VIP lounge is all $30 glasses of wine and stuff. I'm sure if you just gave it a try…” Asahi said diplomatically.

Yuto ignored him. "And get me a sasparilla! And make sure they put enough of those little umbrellas in it this time!"

"How many umbrellas do you need?"

"More than I got last time!"

Ranma noticed Akane's uncertain expression and patted her arm. "Don't worry, 'Kane. You'll like these guys."

000

At some point it was decided it was time to walk Ryouga home so his mother didn't worry. A less inebriated soul might have pointed out that perhaps a phone call could easily reassure her, and that perhaps Ryouga and the girls should stay put until they had slept off some of the many bottles of sake they had worked their way through.

Unfortunately, that less inebriated soul was passed out under a table.

Leaving Konatsu to sleep off the sake, the three of them stumbled off in the direction of Ryouga's house. Ryouga was the steadiest, his endurance allowing him to at least walk straight (Though his directional curse was still a problem). So Shampoo and Ukyou still needed to steer. However, as tispy as they were, this required they lean on him rather heavily. From the perspective of an outsider, Ryouga looked quite the playboy - with a couple of very pretty girls hanging off his arms and giggling occasionally.
"I coulda made it m'self…" Ryouga muttered, completely oblivious to the appearances of the situation. He was sulking, but mostly because he was tired and Ukyou had said it wasn't okay for him to just pitch his tent in the alleyway behind the restaurant to sleep. It also didn't help that he hadn't been able to find his tent.

"Maybe… inna week," Ukyou mumbled. "Yer boyfrien' would get mad."

"Ranma isn't my boyfriend!" Ryouga protested. "She's not my girlfriend, either!"

"I meant Nabiki," Ukyou said, giving him a leer.

"That… doesn't… I don't think that even makes sense, Ukyou…" Ryouga said, scowling as the perfectly obvious reasons that it didn't make sense were kinda of lost in the haze at the moment.

"You don't make sense!" Ukyou shot back.

Shampoo muttered something that might have been in Mandarin, but was more likely just incoherency.

They reached the door. Ukyou fumbled for her keys, trying to find the one that fit. "Jus… just hang on… just…"

"Ukyou…" Ryouga said blearily.

"Hang on… I got this…" Ukyou squinted at the lock, then went back to her key ring. "S'always the third one… usually always… 60% of the time every time it's th' third…"

"Ukyou…" Ryouga repeated.

"Shut up, shut up, I can't see th' keys with you makin' all that noise…" Ukyou lifted a key into the light, squinting at it.

"Ukyou, this's my house," Ryouga finally managed to get out.

"Huh?" Ukyou blinked and refocused on the door, wobbling a bit. "Oh, yeah…"

Ryouga reached for the door and gripsed the handle. "I dun' even think it's locked…"

He didn't get to finish, as the door was pulled open from the inside. He toppled forward and Ukyou and Shampoo - who had been leaning on him heavily - toppled in on top of him, all landing in a heap on the floor.

Standing over them with a look of concern on her face was Ryouga's mother. "Ryo…?"

"Hey Mom… I jus… I jus… I wanted t'let you know I was gonna be late…" Ryouga said weakly before he passed out on the floor.

"Oh dear…" Mrs. Hibiki said as she looked over the three snoring teenagers.

"Mom was… well, I don't remember her, I was too young, but… I think mebbe she was part Irish? Y'know… because of the hair? Dad 'collected' me early on when he set out to go on his training journey with Ranma, so i don't know anything of my life before him. He didn't know what to do with a girl, so I guess he just raised me the same as Ranma. Not that he knew what to do with a boy, either. So we got dragged all across Japan and half of Asia for fourteen years on this nutso quest of his." 'Ran' recounted the tale of her origin as Yuto, Asahi and Chiyako listened, rapt.

"Oh, so you're trained in martial arts as well?" Asahi said, leaning forward. "As good as Ranma?"

"Better," Akane said with some pride.

Ranma shot her a confused look, unsure if that should wound her pride or not. "W-well… we kinda go back and forth, y'know?"

Nabiki was rather proud of the redhead. After Kodachi had extrapolated part of 'Ran's' backstory, Nabiki had thought it prudent to hash out the fictional Saotome's backstory so they could keep it consistent. She found it interesting how Ranma had added little details to it to flesh it out, like one about Genma hating her hair color, or the stuffed rabbit that had been her only thing from home that she lost along the way. She had even (very timidly) suggested an unrequited crush on Ryouga in middle school as a backstory for their fictional engagement. That last addition had surprised Nabiki and, so far, had been kept just between the two of them, given how volatile the whole situation around Ryouga remained.

"That's crazy, though! Fourteen years practically homeless?" Chiyako shivered. "Two children out in the world like that? So many terrible things could have happened!"

Terrible things DID happen, Nabiki thought darkly, remembering when they found the Neko-ken manual in Genma's pack. She had desperately wanted to put the horrible thing through a paper shredder, but she hadn't dared, just in case there might be something in it that could someday help cure Ranma's ailurophobia.

"Pops did a pretty good…" Ranma started, then paused. "... Well, he did okay at…" Ranma tried again, but quickly realized that was just as false. "... My parents are kinda crazy," she said finally, hanging her head.

"At least you seem to have gotten out alive," Chiyako said then smiled at Akane. "And even found someone… though I'm guessing Ran's father wasn't too happy about that, judging from what I heard?"

"He was more hoping I'd go for his son," Akane said with a smirk.

"Mom wants grandkids," Ranma added, a dark note entering her voice.

"We should go freshen our drinks," Chiyako said. "And I need to visit the little girl's room and I'd feel much better having a couple of martial artists along." She stood, Akane and Asahi following suit.

"Well, not sure Nabiki's training is far enough along to fend off bar creeps, but Akane can handle anything this place can throw at her," Ranma said distractedly.

"She means me and you, baka." Akane grabbed the redhead's arm and dragged her out of her seat.

"H-hey, wait… ack!" Ranma flailed as she was given very little choice in the matter.

"And so it falls upon me again to be waiter," Asahi sighed. "What will you two have?"

Nabiki held up a hand. "Just a water for me. Two is enough. I'd rather keep a clear head." She smiled at him. "Bring something sweet back for Ran, though, alcoholic or not. She'll appreciate it."

"Nothing for me," Yuto muttered. "Even the root beer is a travesty here!"
"Gotcha." Asahi nodded and trotted off toward the bar.

"Your sister and her girlfriend are adorable," Yuto said gruffly. "Almost gives me cavities."

"Aren't they though?" Nabiki said with a smile. She leaned forward on the table, steepled her fingers and fixed her eyes on him. Her smile was still there, but it wasn't reaching her eyes anymore. "We should probably discuss your sister while we have the chance, though," she said.

"Caught that, did you?" Yuto sighed. He straightened, his eccentric demeanor dropping away as the stern, confident young man who had told off the thugs returned.

"Too many coincidences," Nabiki replied. "An eccentric rich boy who's wasting time at school to avoid dealing with his family, has a tinge of alcoholism, not only has a grandfather who hires Yakuza thugs to keep tabs on him, but is on a first name basis with them and has a little sister who is the true heir apparent." She smirked. "How is Himura, by the way?"

"Like the rest of my family; as far out of my life as possible." Yuto said gruffly. "If you're looking for information about her…"

"So you know about the conflict between her and me," Nabiki cut him off.

Yuto sighed heavily. He scrubbed his hand down his face. "I know of it. Grandfather made damn sure of that. Mostly to make sure everyone knew to stay out of it. Which I intend to do. I have no interest in it. My family and I have an arrangement; I stay on my side of the crazy, they stay on theirs. I stay out of their business and drink to forget they exist and they pay me to do it far away from them so they can forget I exist."

"And yet here you are." Nabiki narrowed her eyes. "Stone cold sober, dressed up and out at the club with your Grandfather's boys."

"Yes, well, even the family drunk has to pay his respects now and again if he doesn't want his allowance to suddenly dry up," Yuto said. "Trust me, I don't plan on being here any longer than I have to be. I have a package from Holland waiting for me at home and a handful of classes to pretend to attend."

"And that's it?" Nabiki raised a skeptical eyebrow.

"You've met my sister," Yuto said. "They're all like that. There are only monsters and victims in my family. If you were smart, you'd let my little sister have whatever it is she's after and move to a different area code."

"What she wants is Ranma," Nabiki said coldly. "As a servant."

Yuto raised an eyebrow, then looked away, his expression unreadable. "... My advice stands."

Asahi wound his way back to the table, ending the conversation. "Alright! A water for the lady. Chilled, of course." He set a glass down in front of Nabiki. "A beer for me… And a dry mouth and sense of pride for my friend Yuto." He sat back down at the table.

"Actually… I'm going to see what they have," Yuto stood.

"Wait, what?! I was just up!" Asahi said, moving to get up.

"Sit," Yuto barked. "I don't want anyone observing my shame, least of all a Sapporo Light drinker!" He stormed past, heading for the bar as Asahi watched him, agape.
"Well… either he's turning over a new leaf or visiting the family has him more stressed than I thought," Asahi said, pillowing his cheek on his fist.

"What do you know about Yuto's family, Asahi?" Nabiki asked carefully.

Asahi shrugged. "They own a big pharmaceutical company. Typical rich family bullshit." He took a pull at his beer. "He doesn't talk much about them and we don't ask. It's sort of been our unspoken rule and the reason he's stuck with us for so long."

"But you're here now for moral support?" Nabiki cocked her head.

"Well…” Asahi shrugged. "You don't make flunking out of college over and over and drinking heavily a hobby when your home life is all that great. He bailed out me'n Chi when things got sticky with finances, he's been there to grunt supportively when whenever we get stressed out of our minds with classes and he was the loan that paid for the shiny rock that's on her finger. I figure that's close enough to family that we can stand to keep him company while he gets his yearly dose of whatever kind of suck his real family is."

"You ever met any of his family?" Nabiki asked.

Asahi raised an eyebrow. "Awful lot of questions. What's sparked your interest in our resident Beer Otaku?"

Nabiki briefly considered how much was safe to share. "Turns out his little sister goes to my school," Nabiki said finally.

"Ah," Asahi nodded understandingly. "Let me guess - 'Total bitch'?"

Nabiki smirked, covering it with her drink. "Something like that."

"Eh, she's a teenager. More hormones than brains," he said off-handedly then blinked and gave Nabiki an apologetic look. "Ah… present company excluded, of course!"

She held up a hand. "No, I think you're probably right about 90% of my peers. Such as…” She gestured with her glass as Ranma, Akane and Chiyako approached from the bathrooms.

Asahi looked up. "Who, Chiyako? Yes, definitely a walking hormone-Aoouch!" he yelped as she swatted at him.

"I see my fiance has not been behaving, as usual." Chiyako sat down next to him and gave him a warning glare. "Where's Yuto?"

"Up getting a drink," Asahi said. "As in… alcohol."

Chiyako boggled at him for a moment. "That bad, huh? All right… I'll… uhh… I'll keep emergency services on speed dial."

"I know. Last year he held out until we got back to the hotel room where his stash was," Asahi said, looking concerned.

"Something wrong?" Ranma asked.

"Yuto doesn't deal with his family terribly well," Asahi said. "We've only come with him once before. That time he mostly kept it together until after he met with his grandfather."

"Which is tomorrow," Chiyako reminded him, touching his arm. "So don't let him get blotto until
"So his family sucks too, huh?" Ranma murmured thoughtfully, looking out towards the bar where the erstwhile Beer Otaku was compromising his vows.

"You'd be shocked how many people go to college just to get away from awful families," Chiyako said. "They're the ones who stay in the dorms over breaks or get really anxious when it's time to go home." She looked sad. "Sometimes I wish I was taking psychology instead of medicine so I could help more."

As if sensing the mood was dipping, Asahi moved to put an arm around her. "Now, now, we've talked about this, sweetheart. I can't have you taking psychology and figuring out how much I don't deserve you." He kissed her cheek.

"Baka," she muttered affectionately and leaned into the kiss. "I don't need a psychology degree to know that."

"On that note, how are you and Ranma doing?" Asahi asked, changing the focus to Nabiki. "I... uhh... notice he's not here with you."

Ranma blushed and sank down in her seat a little.

Nabiki smirked. "Oh, he's here in spirit, trust me. Anything that goes on here you can bet his little sister will report back to him in detail." She gave Ranma a wink. "But tonight was my sister's date night. I'm just..." She searched for the right words dramatically. "... Ensuring that they're properly corrupted."

"Well, I did suspect that if anyone was responsible for getting the three of you in here..." Chiyako admitted sheepishly.

"And Ranma?" Asahi pressed, leaning forward. "Come on... I have money on this!"

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "How much money?"

"Asahi had this ridiculous idea that Ranma was going to propose to you, which is what got us talking about it..." Chiyako started. "... I told him you were both obviously too young, and..."

"Last Monday," Nabiki replied with a smirk.

"I knew it!" Asahi crowed, pumping his fist in the air. He turned to Chiyaki, hand out. "Pay up!"

"Hold on!" Chiyako said. "You're high schoolers! You're teenagers! You're... you're... how did he afford a ring!?"

"Oh, uh..." Nabiki's eyes flicked over to Ranma and Akane, and she winced, realizing she hadn't considered her words carefully. Ranma was looking like she wanted to sink into her seat, and Akane was alternatively looking at her, and then at Nabiki, her eyes full of questions and a spark of the old, dangerous jealousy in them. Whoops!

"Well... uh... no ring yet..." Nabiki said, embarrassed. "It was kind of a promise..."

Chiyako grinned and folded her arms. "Hah! Doesn't count without a ring, Asahi! You pay up!"

Asahi scowled. "Oh come on! How materialistic can you get, Chi?"
Chiyako glared at him and poked him in the chest. "It's not 'materialism'! It's a demonstration of the lengths someone will go to sacrifice for and provide for their future wife!"

"You're studying to be a doctor. I don't think either of us has any illusions about me being the breadwinner in the family," Asahi protested.

"It's symbolic," Chiyako growled, cradling her ring hand protectively.

"'Expensive symbology…" Asahi muttered.

"I don't think that's right!" Ranma piped up suddenly, causing everyone to look at her.

The redhead ducked her head again, suddenly flustered. She looked to Nabiki for support as she spoke. "I—I mean… the ring is just a ring. It's just meant to show that you're serious, but if you are serious about it, that's what really matters, right?" She twiddled her fingers nervously. "... Right?"

Asahi and Chiyako glanced at each other, then at Nabiki.

"Was it at least romantic?" Asahi asked.

Nabiki took a deep breath and shot Akane an apologetic look. "We… were on the roof at night. He goes up there to think a lot and I climbed up to join him. We looked at the stars for a while. We started talking a bit, about the future, the present…" She closed her eyes, smiling in spite of herself as she remembered. "I was feeling uncertain about the future and he picked up on it - Reassured me. The cracks were kind of showing that week and… and he made that okay. He called me brilliant… not just told me, but described how I was brilliant. Then… he talked about how the things we decided together were more important than the things other people decided for us or what seemed to be inevitable… and how sometimes you couldn't wait for the perfect moment to do something, you had to make the moment… And then he asked me to marry him. And I said 'yes'..."

She opened her eyes and blinked a bit. Taking a deep breath, she felt the ghost of that moment and a little bit of blurriness in her vision at the memory. "S-sorry…" She picked up a napkin and dabbed at her eyes.

Chiyako stared at her for a moment, set her jaw, then reached into her purse, pulled out two 1,000 yen notes and handed them over to Asahi. "Okay, you win. That counts."

"Hah!" Asahi snatched the bills, grinning in triumph. "So… why was it I had to mortgage my soul to The Church of the Brew for a ring?"

"Because you make terrible decisions about your schooling, vacation plans and, more importantly, your choice of beverages," Yuto said, clapping him on the shoulder as he came up behind him. "And the karmic scales needed to be balanced with a sacrifice so that you could, for once in your miserable life of cut-rate hops and rushed fermentation, actually successfully make the right choice."

"That and you proposed in a coffee shop," Chiyako said dryly, closing her purse with a snap.

"We aren't allowed up on the dorm roof! Plus it's filthy up there!"

Nabiki was distracted enough by their antics that she didn't notice Akane suddenly stand up.

"Sorry… I just need some air," she said quickly. Is there a place I can duck outside for a few minutes?" Akane asked, her bangs covering her eyes.
"Back exit over there," Yuto pointed. "Tell the bouncer you're going out, he'll stamp your hand so he knows to let you back in when you knock. People go out there to smoke."

"Thanks." Before Nabiki could protest Akane turned and walked quickly towards the exit.

Nabiki started to get up but Ranma held up a hand, already out of her seat. "I'll go."

"This is on me, Ran… Ran," Nabiki said, stumbling bit as she nearly got the name wrong.

"No, it's not," Ranma said evenly. "We gotta work this out between me and her." She flashed Nabiki a smile. "I'll be right back, I promise."

000

Akane stepped into the night air, the chill making her shiver. The door led out into an alley behind the club, though it was well lit and a bouncer at the door kept watch over the area. One couple was standing over by the wall sharing a cigarette and talking.

She walked a few feet away and took a breath, closed her eyes and tried to get her emotions under control.

It hurts, she thought miserably, folding her arms tightly and gritting her teeth. It hurts, it hurts, it HURTS.

Part of her wanted to get mad, bury the pain under familiar anger again. But that just brought with it a surge of despair as she was reminded how she had ended up in this position. Why did Nabiki have to say all that? Why didn't she tell me!? Why is she… why is she so much CLOSER to Ranma than me?!

You know why.

She closed her eyes more tightly but she couldn't shut out the accusatory voice.

How many times were you on that roof with her? How many chances did you have to tell her? How many times would it only have taken you giving an INCH to be the one? How many times did you sabotage it?

"Akane…?" a familiar voice sounded as Ranma poked her head out.

"Not yet. Akane winced. "I'm… I'm alright, Ranma, I just need a minute." Please PLEASE just go away and let me get this under control!

"'Kane, what's wrong?" Ranma trotted over to her. Akane didn't look, but she could hear Ranma's footsteps, feel the girl's presence behind her.

"Please just give me a few minutes," Akane said softly. She could feel the redhead reaching for her, feel her hesitate as she spoke.

"This is my fault," Ranma said softly.

Akane turned to look at her and shook her head miserably.

"Just say it, Akane," Ranma repeated softly. "It's my fault. Just… just tell me and get mad so… so I can make it up to you somehow and…"

"But it's not," Akane said softly. She could feel the tears running down her cheeks now.
"I… I shoulda…" Ranma started, but trailed off.

Akane knew why. "You should have what, Ranma? Not proposed to Nabiki?" She sniffed and shook her head again. "Don't you get it? That's absolutely what you should have done! Because… because you love her. This is my fault." She clenched her fists. "How many times were we on that roof together, Ranma? How many times did we look up at the stars?"

"A-Akane, don't…" Ranma started, but it was too late, the ball was rolling.

"How many times was it just one word I could have said differently? Just one thing I could have done differently? How many times could I have just said something and no one would have had to know but us?" The tears were flowing hot and freely now. "I just had to say it! I just had to say the words! 'I love you.' 'I love you.' Something! And it would have been me! Just me! But I kept waiting! I kept putting it off until tomorrow! I-I kept…"

"I should have said it!" Ranma said. Tears were running down her cheeks too. "I-I should have… I should have just… just been a man and said something!"

Akane almost laughed at that. "I didn't… I didn't love the man, Ranma…" She reached out and cupped her cheek. "I loved you… what was hiding inside of him… under all that machismo and posturing and insecurity. I love you. And… I kept waiting… for you to say the words you didn't have… or tell me the things you didn't know… because I was too afraid to take a risk."

"I'm… I'm sorry…" Ranma repeated, her hand moving to brush Akane's.

Akane couldn't take anymore. She stepped forward and pulled the redhead close, crushing her in a tight embrace, like she was afraid she was going to be taken away if she let go. "I feel like I'm going crazy, Ranma," she said softly. "I keep thinking of all the ways I could have done it better. All the different ways I could have handled it… I-I threw you away because I was too afraid… that you might throw me away first. And now that I know all I had to do was… was say something… it's killing me."

"I didn't… I don't…" Ranma shuddered. "I don't know what to do, 'Kane. How do I fix this?"

"You can't, Ranma," Akane said softly.

"Please…" Ranma pulled back, looking into Akane's eyes with desperation. Akane could see there that old fire, that drive that had pushed Ranma to do incredible things for her, even kill a god. "Please, whatever it is, I'll do it! Whatever it takes, I'll make it happen! Whatever I need to be…!"

She cupped her face. "No… Ranma, you can't fix this because it's me. I'm what's broken." She fell silent for a moment, looking into those blue eyes as they gazed imploringly at her. There was still the innocence there that had drawn Akane to her the day they'd first met. Something she had felt an overwhelming need to be closer to and to protect. She brushed her thumb over Ranma's cheekbone, tracing where she knew the faint line of freckles to be. Why did I fight this so long? Even when it cost me everything? Why am I still fighting it?

"I wanted to be strong enough to protect you…" Akane said softly. "Even when I knew you didn't need it. Even when I knew that you couldn't accept it. It was all I ever wanted. It still is."

Ranma reached up and cupped Akane's cheek in turn. Her eyes were clear now, shining with understanding? A slight smile crossed her lips. "Then protect me," she said softly. "You let me protect you. Even when you didn't need it, right?"

Akane blinked. Something lurched in her at those words. She let her fingertips trail down from Ranma's face to her shoulders as she looked intently into her eyes. Her mouth felt dry. "S-say that again?"

Ranma looked confused a moment, cocked her head a bit, then understood. She wrapped her arms around Akane's neck. She shivered slightly and started to speak, pausing a time or two, as though she were struggling with something. "Protect me," she said at last, her voice barely more than a whisper.

It wasn't something Ranma could have ever asked for before. The 'man amongst men' couldn't be that vulnerable. He couldn't ask for help - could barely tolerate it. He had to be the strongest. He had to be undefeatable. He had to be in-vulnerable. That was Ranma Saotome.

Ranma had been willing to give up his life for her. She could never want that. Ranma had been willing to give up his manhood for her. She didn't want that either. She wanted him to be her because it suited her and made her happy, not as a sacrifice.

Now Ranma was willing to let Akane be strong for her - to allow herself to be weak, even if only a little bit. Even when she didn't need to be.

Akane needed that.

Akane kissed her fiercely, drawing the redhead into an ever tighter embrace as she smothered Ranma's lips with her own in artless need. This is mine, Akane thought as Ranma responded, kissing back with equal passion. Nabiki gave Ranma her Art. I'll give Ranma my Strength. I'll be strong sometimes so that she doesn't have to be.

The two patrons smoking in the alley, as well as the bouncer, were clapping and cheering when they finally broke, leading them to both blush, though their eyes were only on each other.

This part of Ranma is mine, Akane thought again.

"Ranma, will you marry me?" Akane asked softly.

Ranma's eyes widened, then slowly filled with tears. "I-I thought I was supposed to ask that…” she sniffled.

Akane shook her head. "I'm not going to wait to say things anymore, Ranma. I'm not going to make someone else ask for what I want. I'm not… going to wait for the perfect moment. I'm going to make the moment, just like you did with Nabiki. You're her 'boy on the beach' she told me… Well you're my 'girl in the dojo'. Even if that's not what you were born as. Even if that's just part of who you are, I want that part for me."

Ranma's arms tightened around her and she giggled softly. "That was… that was the first time I ever wished I was a real girl…"

"Well?" Akane prompted, feeling a slight pang of nervousness.

Ranma laughed. "Yes. Yes! I'll marry you, Akane Tendo!"

000

Tatsuyuki Kuno was many things, but stupid wasn't one of them.

Crazy, maybe… but not stupid.
In his youth he had done many things; made many enemies. One didn't get to be where he was with the Yakuza without doing that even if his position had been because of family connections. He had earned his place despite that. At least, before his breakdown.

So he knew when to lay low and how.

The bar wasn't anything like what he'd normally frequent. It was dingy and dull; understated. It was the sort of place you'd expect to find someone laying low but the absolute last place you'd expect to find the bombastic Hawaiian-shirt wearing Principal of Furinkan High. He was seated at the bar, wearing a dark brown suit. He had traded in the large sunglasses for a pair of modest wire-framed spectacles and his hair had been re-tied into a ponytail. He was virtually unrecognizable.

Sometimes being loudly and obviously crazy had its benefits - especially if you could turn it off when you needed to.

Tatsuyuki sipped his colorful drink, the one nod he was allowing himself to his usual demeanor. I'll let the girl tire herself out hunting for me tonight, maybe take a few days off. Perhaps I'll take Nobu up on that standing invite to stay at his country club. Then when she's forgotten why she's mad, I'll see about getting those damned pills away from Tatewaki. I'll probably need to move back into the manor... Maybe see about getting the boy to sign it back over to me.

He held up his nearly empty glass, swishing it as he caught the bartender's eye to signal for a refill. I'll show those ungrateful children of mine who is in charge and THEN I can get back to having a little fun at school. Hmph, Ranma thinks a TANK is over the top? Heheheheheh... mnh! No, don't start laughing yet. Keep the Kahuna under wraps. Play it straight. Gonna need a few more drinks.

Before the bartender could pour, a purple flash snapped out, shattering the glass in Tatsuyuki's hand.

He spun, an old reflex causing him to reach for the shoulder holster that hadn't been there for nearly a decade. His eyes widened as he saw a girl in a green leotard step out of the shadows, idly twirling a harmless-seeming ribbon.

"Hello father," Kodachi said softly, a wicked smile gracing her lips. "Tag... you're it."

000

Ranma was in that kind of pleasant haze that came from a combination of having successfully weathered an emotional crisis, having had a little too much to drink to celebrate and being with someone with whom she was comfortable being casually affectionate.

... Well, two someones. But Ranma Saotome rarely ever did things the normal or easy ways.

She leaned against Nabiki, an arm around her waist. Her other arm was around Akane as the three of them walked slowly home. She wasn't so drunk that she needed the support, but it was chilly and they were warm and soft in the right places and smelled nice; and right now it was just nice to be held.

"You're not passing out on us, are you Ranma?" Nabiki asked. Ranma felt long fingers thread through her hair, nails trailing pleasantly along her scalp.

"No... just enjoying this," Ranma replied. "It's kinda new to be able to be relaxed like this with other people."
"Just relaxed?" Akane asked playfully. "Are the two of us not doing anything for you? Is that what you're saying?"

In the past that comment would have thrown Ranma into a panic of denial and stammered apologies. But Ranma could hear the playfulness in her voice now. She tightened her arm around the brunette's waist and grinned at her. "Is that a challenge I hear, Akane Tendo? Need me to prove something to you?"

"Well it is my turn," Akane grinned back, bumping Ranma gently with her hip. "I think I've been very patient."

"Oh? So all that pounding me into the ground over the last year was just your pent up sexual frustration?" Ranma poked back.

"You have no idea, Ranma," Akane purred, leaning in against her more heavily. "... but you will."

Ranma started to feel some of that old nervousness returning, though somehow it was less an all-encompassing fear and more a… nervous anticipation. "W-well… there was what happened in the showers…" she said timidly, unsure if Nabiki even knew about that.

Akane waggled her eyebrows. "That was just a quickie, Ranma. That hardly counts. It barely took the edge off."

"Took the…" Ranma squeaked, suddenly feeling a lot more nervous as she wondered what she might possibly have unleashed in the youngest Tendo. Ranma herself remembered it as considerably more than just a quickie.

Nabiki remained oddly quiet for the duration.

They reached the Tendo Dojo and made their way quietly inside. It was late enough that everyone was probably asleep, and they had told both Kasumi and Soun to not wait up for them. Soun was still struggling with his joy over the prospect of the schools finally being joined and the future of his dojo being secured conflicting with the manner in which it was happening, so it was no surprise that he had turned in early. Kasumi was sometimes a night owl, but thankfully tonight she had turned in early as well. They quietly doffed their shoes and snuck inside, avoiding the creaky floorboards as they crept up the stairs, giggling like children getting away with a prank.

They reached Akane's room and Akane opened the door carefully and stepped in. She tugged gently on Ranma's arm, grinning at her. Ranma didn't resist and got about halfway through the door before she realized Nabiki wasn't following.

She turned back, then her eyes widened as she realized the problem. They're sisters. This is probably really, really weird and awkward for them. I didn't think, I just expected… after Nabiki and Shampoo… "Nabiki, I…"

Nabiki shook her head. "It's okay, Ranma. This was always Akane's night. She was just nice enough to let me tag along. I think I can survive one night in my own bed without having to share."

She smiled but Ranma was getting good enough at reading her to see the cracks.

Akane surprised them both by grabbing Nabiki's arm and tugging.

"Akane, what're you doing?" Nabiki asked, staring at her blankly.

"Just shut up and get in here," Akane said gruffly, looking away and blushing.
Ranma looked back and forth between them. "L-look, guys, we don't have to… I mean, it was a good night, I can just go to my room and…"

"You said we need to, Nabiki," Akane said. "We need to be around each other, as much as we can, as many ways as we can, so we can figure out… figure out where the lines are, right?" She bit her lower lip and looked down. "This… this is gonna come up again, over and over and over, and you know it is a-and… and we need to know…"

Nabiki looked away awkwardly as well. "I... " She took a breath. "You're right, but… this is your night, Akane. You shouldn't have to share it with your sister being awkward and uncomfortable. We can figure this out later…"

"When?" Akane demanded. "You know how our lives are. You said we needed to hash this out as early as possible. If… if it were Ukyou or even Shampoo here right now, we both know how this would go already. S-so… just get in here with me and Ranma and… and… we'll see where the lines really are, okay?"

Ranma looked from Akane to Nabiki and then back again. She felt the uneasy twisting in her gut of guilt and the overwhelming desire to help somehow. They're having to go through this because of me…

She reached out and hugged the pair of them tightly, earning squeaks of surprise from both.

"I'm sorry," Ranma said, closing her eyes tight. "I know you'd tell me it isn't my fault, but it is because it's because of me, and… and I don't know what this is like for you but I know all about awkward and uncomfortable." She hugged tighter. "You don't… you don't need to do this for me. Even if neither of you ever touched me again you've already both made me happier than I've ever been, and… and… Don't do this for me."

Nabiki and Akane stared at the redhead for a moment, then at each other. Slowly they both smiled and wrapped their arms around Ranma as well.

"Ranma, stop being an idiot," Akane said gently. "We aren't doing these things just for you, and it's not like as if we don't get anything out of it." She sighed heavily. "You're making it sound like we're making some noble sacrifice for your sake!"

"Aren't you?" Ranma asked, slightly muffled.

Nabiki shook her head. "Maybe at the start, when we all sat down to talk out this arrangement, it might have been something like that. But we did that, the sacrifice was made and everyone was happy with the deal. This?" She gave Ranma a sheepish smile. "Ranma, if I've learned anything over the last couple of weeks? We're all perverts. All of us. Even those of us in denial about it." She glanced at Akane and gave her a wink.

"Especially those of us in denial about it," Akane admitte, slightly subdued. "Right now this is just us… deciding how to figure out how far we're willing and able to go with this. We're not suffering, we're just…"

"... Testing boundaries," Nabiki finished. "And… thank you for reminding me about that part, Akane." She gave her sister a shy smile.

"... So… do you guys just wanna sleep instead?" Ranma asked, not having really followed the entirety of the conversation, but relieved that the awkwardness seemed to be bleeding off.

Akane and Nabiki shared another glance then smiled and nodded almost imperceptibly.
"Nope," Akane said, turning her gaze back to the redhead. She stepped back and guided the other two into her room.

"Wait… what do you mean…?" Ranma asked nervously. "What're we doing?"

"Testing boundaries," Nabiki replied as she pushed the door closed with her foot.

000

Welp. If there was EVER a chapter I was gonna eat shit on, it'd be this one.

For those of you reading the scene in question, throwing up your hands in the air and yelling out "What, just like that?!" It's not going to be 'Just like that', I promise.

It's probably would have been a lot easier if I had just left things are whatever unstated assumption the reader is comfortable with. But my Muse occasionally decides I must suffer and tackle such things and their consequences.

I am, referring, of course, to Yuto drinking inferior beer.

What did you THINK I was talking about?
Ryouga was waking up far too often with a splitting headache and no memories of how he had gotten where we was of late.

He blinked a few times to clear his vision and recognized the ceiling of his own room. At least I know WHERE I am this time.

He sat up slowly holding his head with one hand, utterly convinced that, if he didn't, it was going to fall off. The unbearable pain seemed to lessen slightly once he was upright. He looked around the room and saw a glass of water and a notecard with a white caplets on top of it.

He grabbed the pills and swallowed, chasing them with a sip of the water. The sip turned into a gulp and he'd finished the glass before he realized how thirsty he'd been. He wiped his mouth, feeling some of the awfulness washed away, picked up the note and read it.

Take these when you wake up and drink more water. It will help the hangover. The girls are in the guest room. Take a shower and, when you feel up to it, come downstairs so we can talk. Don't worry, you're not in trouble!

Mom.

(P.S. Those girls are very cute! When were you going to introduce me to them?)

Suddenly, jumping out of the window seemed like an excellent idea, save for the fact that Ryouga was fairly certain he'd need to find a building at least 50 stories tall, first. He rubbed his temples as his headache throbbed.

Shower, he decided, getting to his feet and trudging towards the door and reached out for the guide-line he had strung to find his way to the bathroom.

000

Shirokuro met him on the stairs as he came down. The shower and a fresh change of clothes had done wonders. His head felt mostly clear as he let his dog guide him to the living room.

His mother was sitting in an armchair while Shampoo and Ukyou occupied the couch. Ukyou looked a little rough but Shampoo appeared bright, bubbly and none the worse for wear.

"Ryo! You're up! I was worried I was going to have to send the girls up to fetch you!" Mrs. Hibiki said, beaming. "How are you feeling?"

"Better…" Ryouga rubbed the back of his head sheepishly. "Look, Mom, I'm sorry…"

She waved him off immediately. "Ryo, I did the same sorts of things at your age. Well…" she glanced at the girls and smiled knowingly. "…mostly."

Ryouga sighed. I need to head this off before it gets out of hand. "Mom, it's not what you think…"

"Oh no, you don't have to say a thing, Ryo. We've just been chatting and I understand that these girls were very concerned about your intentions towards Ranma, and had you over to talk about it. After which things got… I believe 'a little out of hand' was the phrase you used, Ukyou dear?" She smiled at the Okonomiyaki chef.
"Yes, but…" Ukyou started, realizing that her account of events had been misinterpreted.

"It certainly is reassuring to find out how popular my Ryo is!" she gushed. "I had worried… I mean… when I was his age, I struggled. Our… family condition makes maintaining friendships difficult. Though…" she cocked her head at him. "… don't you have any male friends, dear?"

"Yes, of course!" Ryoga said. "There's…" He trailed off as he realized the only one that came to mind was a girl as far as his mother was concerned and it would be nearly impossible to explain without Ranma actually present to demonstrate the curse. "... Ummm…"

"Thought Pi… Ryoga and Sword-Boy team up now and then?" Shampoo suggested helpfully.

"No, he tried to kill! Ryoga last time I saw him," Ukyou said.

"Oh dear! What brought that on?" Mrs. Hibiki asked in a shocked tone, casting a worried look at her son.

"Oh he flipped his gourd when Ranma told him she and Ryoga were engaged," Ukyou said. "He sorta got a bit unstable after that."

Mrs. Hibiki's eyes went wide. "Engaged!?"

The sound of Ryoga's palm hitting his forehead was almost like a gunshot.

"It was a scam!" Ukyou said hurriedly, with a nervous laugh and an apologetic look for Ryoga. "Ranma just told Kuno that to get him to stop pestering her for dates!"

"And so he attacked Ryoga?" Mrs. Hibiki looked concerned. "And are you alright, Ryo? Did you tell the police?"

Ryoga waved her off tiredly. "It's fine, Mom. He and I are cool now. He was… uhh… he was kinda off his meds at the time. He's promised to keep up with them from now on."

"Oh… well… I'm glad to hear it's resolved. That's very understanding of you to give him a second chance, you know. Mental illness is a difficult thing to deal with." Mrs. Hibiki smiled at him. "I was also unaware that you and your 'rival' had that kind of relationship…"

"We don't!" Ryoga said quickly.

"They don't!" Ukyou and Shampoo said at the same moment, in suspicious synchronicity with him.

Mrs. Hibiki raised an eyebrow and looked over the three of them in turn before nodding slowly. "I see."

AAAAUGH! Ryoga could almost hear the clicks in his mother's mind as assumptions and misconceptions snapped into place.

"And the two of you heard about this 'engagement' and were concerned as well?" Mrs. Hibiki asked, pouring herself another cup of tea.

"Oh no, we know is fake story. Know since beginning," Shampoo said brightly. "It get out of hand at school, though."

"Oh? But why the talk then?" Mrs. Hibiki asked. "You obviously thought there was more to it, right?"
Ukyou elbowed Shampoo in the ribs hard. "What she means to say is we had our doubts, but after talking with Ryo… Ryouga alone, we cleared up the misunderstanding, and now we know there's nothing going on between him and Ranma."

"Ah, and finding out my son was unattached was cause for celebration, then," Mrs. Hibiki beamed.

"Yes-NO!" Ukyou yelped as she realized where that particular train of thought was going to jump its tracks. "I mean, I don't like Ryouga that way! He's like a brother to me!"

"I see."

"A younger brother!"

"Mmm-hmm."

"An annoying younger brother!"

"Of course."

Ukyou closed her eyes and clenched a fist. "Shampoo, tell her!"

"Shampoo not decide if she want to sleep with Ryouga or not," Shampoo replied nonchalantly. "So no can be sure of relationship yet."

Ukyou nearly fell off the couch. Ryouga did faceplant behind it.

"WHAT!?" Ryouga and Ukyou both demanded, red in the face.

"Shampoo not spend much time with Ryouga before this, so no decide. Is important thing to figure out, yes?" Shampoo said, blinking innocently. "Not mean Shampoo actually sleep with, just if would want to."

Ryouga pinched his nose closed. "W-why would you…?! Th-that's not…! H-how…?!"

Shampoo smirked then kissed him on the nose. "Is cute when stammer. Maybe Shampoo keep after all."

Ryouga's legs went out from under him as he collapsed behind the couch again.

"Oh my," Mrs. Hibiki said, blinking in surprise.

"cOuLd YoU eXcUsE uS?" Ukyou asked, her voice cracking as she grabbed Shampoo by the collar. Not waiting for confirmation from Ryouga's Mother, she dragged Shampoo off the couch and around behind it, grabbed Ryouga by the back of the shirt, and hauled them both off into the kitchen.

"Shampoo, what in the HELL is wrong with you!?" Ukyou growled. She dropped Ryouga unceremoniously on the floor and pinned Shampoo back against the wall. "Have you lost your mind?!

"Oooh, Ukyou getting rough? Maybe wanted kiss too?" Shampoo asked, giving her a wink.

Ukyou blushed and released her. "Not here you jackass! Not in front of Ryouga's Mom!"

Ryouga pushed himself to his feet. "What's the big idea dragging me across the floor, Ukyou?!”
"Oh you are so lucky that's all I did!" Ukyou snarled at him. "What are you going to do to fix this, huh?!

"Me!? Why is this on me!? You're the one who told my Mom you were grilling me about a love rival!" Ryouga protested.

"We didn't..." Ukyou shouted back, then quickly modulated her tone to an angry hiss. "... We didn't say anything about a love rival! She wanted to know why we were out drinking together and I was kind of on the spot, okay? I figured the truth with a few omissions was the best policy!"

"Yeah? Well now she thinks the three of us are-!" Ryouga started.

"You and Shampoo," Ukyou corrected him. "I told her that you're like a brother to me!"

"Yeah, and she didn't buy it! She thinks you're just being tsundere!" Ryouga protested.

"I do not have a tsundere bone in my body and I'm certainly not tsundere towards you!" Ukyou growled. "Tell him, Shampoo!"

"Pig Boy and Spatula Girl so tsundere together, should have own anime," Shampoo replied, sounding bored.

"Shampoo!" Ukyou yelped at the betrayal.

Shampoo was leaning against the wall, her arms crossed. She rolled her eyes and sighed. "Both idiots. Mother concerned son find nice girl, latching onto any hint. Ryouga and Ukyou give lots of hints. Even if fix, probably go back to thinking Ryouga in love with Ranma."

"I am not in love with Ranma!" Ryouga protested.

"Yeah, even I don't buy that one anymore, sugar," Ukyou muttered. "Look, we'll just tell her Shampoo and I are dating Ranma and take all three of us off the table."

Shampoo raised an eyebrow. "Is common for three girls to date each other in Japan?"

Ukyou paused. "Uhh... well, no... Okay, so you're dating Ranma and I'm just the sister figure..."

"She already doesn't buy the 'older sister' routine. Look, we should just accept that she's gonna think what she's gonna think and wait until we've got everyone here with a kettle of hot water and a bucket. Then we can sort the whole mess out with her all at once when we've got our stories straight," Ryouga said in a rare moment of clarity. "She's been convinced that there's something going on between me and Ranma for a while now, and nothing..."

"Something is going on between you and Ranma!" Ukyou growled. "And I am not leaving misconceptions like this with another parent-figure! Before you know it we'll walk into a shotgun wedding or there will be some kind of secret 'Hibiki Family Recipe Marital Aid' slipped in our tea to help 'coax us along', or..."

"My Mom isn't like that!" Ryouga protested.

"I can't take your word for it! You're an idiot!" Ukyou shot back.

Shampoo waved her hand in front of her face, as if trying to waft away fumes. "Getting very tsundere in here..."

"Shut up!" both of them shouted at her.
Shampoo shook her head and wagged a finger at them, as if lecturing a pair of particularly slow children. "Is making too complicated. Just reassure mother Ryouga find girl - be taken care of. Keep her happy and not-worry until Ryouga get mess of life straightened out and find actual girlfriend."

"Yes, but how do we do that?" Ukyou said. "I'm sure as hell not gonna play the role! I've finally got my romantic life straightened out…"

"'Straight' probably not best term to use," Shampoo noted playfully.

"Hush! I've got my romantic life sorted out and I don't wanna risk screwing it up!" Ukyou said finally. "So find another girl to play the loving girlfriend and leave me out of it, okay?" She folded her arms and huffed angrily.

"Okay," Shampoo said, unperturbed. She walked over to Ryouga, put her arms around his neck and beamed at him. "Wo ai ni."

Ryouga froze stiff - his eyes widened and his pupils dilated in fear.

"Shampoo, what are you doing?" Ukyou asked, gaping.

"Is playing loving girlfriend," Shampoo said, smirking at her. "Should have good pet name…" She peered at Ryouga, who was still petrified and unmoving. "Bendan? No… Shagua!"

Ukyou pinched the bridge of her nose. "Shampoo, this is an incredibly bad idea…"

"Maybe is jealous, qinai de?" Shampoo winked at her.

Ukyou blushed at the term of endearment. "Y-you can't just call me 'darling' and expect me to go along with whatever stupid plan you're hatching!"

Shampoo looked genuinely hurt at that. "Is not stupid plan! Shampoo trying to help! Care about Ukyou. Ryouga Ukyou's family, so help Ryouga. Do what Ukyou can't, make things easier," she pouted, releasing Ryouga and turning away, folding her arms and pouting.

Ryouga blinked and snapped out of his trance and his brain reset and rebooted into Cute Crying Girl Protection Mode upon seeing Shampoo looking so despondent… maybe even a few tears in her eyes? "Shampoo, I-I appreciate what you're offering to do, really!" Ryouga said earnestly.

Ukyou was caught similarly off guard. "Look… I'm sorry, sugar. You're right, I shouldn't be so judgemental. When you think about it, that's a really big favor you're offering to do for us…"

Shampoo sniffed softly. She gave them a sad smile. "Is okay. Understand hard to trust Shampoo after all she do in past."

"N-no! I trust you!" Ryouga said quickly, moving closer to her, though he was uncertain how to comfort her.

"Yeah, we both trust you, Shampoo," Ukyou nodded, getting caught up in the moment.

Shampoo gave them each hopeful looks. "Prove? Can Shampoo have hug?"

They looked at each other, then nodded again. They walked over and awkwardly hugged the amazon girl between them.

Shampoo sighed and closed her eyes, rested her head against Ryouga's chest and relaxed as Ukyou held her from behind. After a minute she starting making a soft thrumming sound, almost like purring.

"Is… that better?" Ryouga asked nervously. Shampoo no longer being unhappy was causing reality to re-establish himself and, right now, reality consisted of him and Ukyou sandwiching a very attractive, buxom young lady - which was doing unfortunate things to his hormones.

"Shampoo?" Ukyou piped up as well. "Sugar?"

"Mmmmmm… Siblings…" Shampoo murmured in a far away voice.

"Oh god damnit, Shampoo!" Ukyou roared.

Nabiki was deep in thought for most of the school day, mentally digesting the events of the previous night.

Akane had been right. Nabiki knew it was something they were going to have to explore and define at some point. To be fair, she was going to need to see where her comfort zone with Ukyou was as well, so it wasn't a unique problem. It would probably be a lot easier with Ukyou, with whom she didn't have any sort of pre-existing relationship, much less have grown up with her as a sibling.

Nabiki wasn't sure if it should disturb her or not how easy it had been to get past the whole 'squick' factor once they'd got going. Ranma was into it, obviously, and that helped them to focus on her enjoyment of the situation. But after a while, as they got more comfortable together, it had become more of a game and the mutual focus on Ranma had gradually drifted.

God, stop using euphemisms, Nabiki, she chided herself as she feigned paying attention to whatever gibberish the teacher was writing on the blackboard. You had sex with your little sister. You weren't coaxed or tricked - you jumped into incest with both feet.

She sighed. They had spent some time the morning after just lying in bed together and talking about it while Ranma still slept. Ironically, Akane seemed to be handling it somewhat better, having freshly stepped out of the closet and still full of defiance for societal prejudices and norms in general. Nabiki, for all her supposed worldliness and open-mindedness, found herself wrestling with it a bit more.

It bothers me that it doesn't bother me like I thought it would - like I think it SHOULD, she decided finally. It certainly wasn't something that she ever would have considered if their circumstances weren't already so far outside the norms but she was fairly certain she could incorporate it into their relationship. And that disturbed her more than anything else.

Taboos and Social Conventions exist for a reason, I guess, she thought glumly. They're not always right or healthy or fair, but they keep the moral footings inside of them simple, safe and secure. Step outside them and everything starts getting crumbly, confusing and complicated. I guess there are consequences to thinking that you know better than countless generations of society as a whole.

One of those consequences was that bathing with her sister was now considerably more awkward. Breaking that particular taboo had stripped Nabiki of the mental filter that kept her from seeing her sister as a sexual being - and now that it was gone, even though Nabiki definitely preferred males, she was forced to admit that the drooling hentai hordes at Furinkan had a point where her sister was concerned; Akane was hot.

I wonder if this is like the problem Ryouga is having with Ranma? Nabiki thought, feeling a pang of sympathy for the Lost Boy. Different taboo but it's still all about being attracted to someone you shouldn't be. At least I'm alright with loving my sister, even if I'm still not entirely secure about expressing it THIS WAY. Ryoga's going from hatred and resentment to... she remembered that warm, red-gold feeling from Ranma that had ever-so-briefly enfolded her, and how something very much like it had connected Ranma and Ryoga... I want to try the link again. I'm starting to see the benefit of having a second opinion on your emotions. Also, Ryoga deserves a hug. No wonder the poor boy has been melancholy lately!

She glanced over at Shampoo's desk and noticed that it was still empty. Where is Shampoo? She didn't meet us this morning, either. Weren't she and Ukyou going to take care of Ryoga? She sighed and hoped that everything was all right with her. Impulsively she pulled out her phone to check, even though she knew Shampoo didn't have a cell phone, and usually didn't bother with such modern contrivances as the telephone.

There were no messages or missed calls but her eyes moved to the cartoony cat face icon that had recently appeared on her phone. A hacker would be a big help but not enough to take the risks they're asking. She switched to her contacts and the three freshly added names: 'Asahi', 'Chiyako' and 'Yuto'.

Yuto might be a useful source of information or he could blow me out of the water by ratting me out to Himura. She pillowed her cheek on her fist and blew out a frustrated breath. I'd RATHER just let him be the eccentric Beer Otaku rather than part of a scheme. Why did Himura have to pick MY Ranma to mess with? I can't even have nice college friends without her screwing it up!

She thought of something else while she was there, though, and scrolled down to another name; 'Rin Ito'. She glanced up to make sure the teacher wasn't looking her way and sent Rin a quick text:

Nabiki: How did things go with your Dad?

Rin was quick to reply,

Rin: Really good! He loved your idea! He's got a meeting with the school principal Monday. The school seemed really excited about the idea too!

Nabiki sighed in relief. Something going right for a change!

Nabiki: Good. Keep me posted. Did the vid Hiroshi and Daisuke got you of next week's opponents help?

Rin: Oh yes! (¬‿¬) Sayuri asked me to thank you. So... thank you Ms. Manager!

Nabiki: Manager, huh? (;‿‿;) Just as long as I'm just managing you as a TEAM and not your love lives. I get enough of that at home. Speaking of which, how is Mousse?

Nabiki could almost hear the resultant blush.

Rin: Ms. Nabiki! We're just friends...

Nabiki rolled her eyes. "You ruin your own credibility if you actually type the ellipsis, Rin."

Nabiki: Well, keep me posted on that, too? Neriman Martial Artists need a lot of looking after. I'm trusting you to keep him out of trouble.

Rin: I'll do my best, Ms. Manager! (¬‿¬)
Nabiki tucked away her phone, satisfied. Rin should keep Mousse from wobbling too much and I'll see what I can do to help Ryouga - so barring some outside challenger suddenly appearing, or a new flock of fiancées, that should keep the chaos manageable enough to focus on upending Himura. Nabiki sighed, feeling like she was finally getting on top of a problem where she had been playing catch-up since the beginning.

So why did she have a sudden, formless feeling of dread in the pit of her stomach?

000

When Ranma and Nabiki knocked at the door, it was a very pale and tired-looking Ryouga who met them at the door.

"Ryo? You look like hell man! What happened?" Ranma asked, peering at him with concern.

Ryouga sighed. "Long night." He muttered. "Longer day."

"Ryo!" His mother called out. "Who is it?"

"It's Ranma and Nabiki, Mom. We've got an appointment at the hospital. You know, the neurologist?" Ryouga replied.

"Oh, that's right! It completely slipped my mind!" There was the sound of footsteps, and Mrs. Hibiki poked her head out next to Ryouga. "Hello girls!"

"Hi Mrs. Hibiki." Nabiki said with a smile. "Sorry we can't stay for tea today."

"That's okay, girls. We'll catch up next time. I've gotten behind on my housework anyway. I wasted the whole day chatting with Ryo's girls."

Ranma and Nabiki blinked.

"Ryo's… Girls," Nabiki said carefully.

Ranma just glared at him.

Ryouga slumped in defeat.

"Oh, yes! They're classmates of yours, I think? Ukyou and Shampoo. I see Shampoo with you in the mornings. And… does Ukyou have a brother? I thought I saw a boy who looked like her with you. Anyway, I'm just teasing poor Ryo." She patted his shoulder. "They all dragged themselves here late last night and stayed over. I'm sure Ryo will tell you all about it."

Ranma was doing a fairly good impression of Akane's best death glower now.

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "I'm sure he will."

Ms. Hibiki turned him to look at her. "I'll see you when you get in. Give me a call if you get lost, okay Ryouga dear?"

He sighed heavily and nodded.

Mrs. Hibiki chuckled. "Oh don't look so hangdog! Just remember what we talked about and you'll be fine."

"Yes, Mom," Ryouga said in a defeated voice. He turned and trudged out the door, walking silently past Nabiki and Ranma. Ranma was staring daggers at his back now.

They followed after him and quickly flanked him to nudge him back on course. Nobody said anything until they rounded the corner and were out of sight and earshot of the house.

"Well?" Ranma asked impatiently, glaring at him. "Are you gonna tell me what's going on, or do I need to hurt you first?"

"Isn't that one of Akane's lines, Ranma?" Nabiki asked playfully, more amused than concerned by what was shaping up.

Ryouga took a deep breath. "It's not what you think. And it's not what my Mom thinks, but she jumped to all kinds of wrong conclusions and I can't convince her otherwise." He rubbed a hand over his face.

"Start at the beginning," Nabiki suggested.

"Yesterday Ukyou and Shampoo dragged me off to Ucchan's. They did some kind of… interrogation, I guess? They were trying to disguise their voices, bright light in the face and everything. They wanted to know what my intentions were towards Ranma."

"I do hope you didn't tell them the truth, Ryo. They don't handle competition well," Nabiki said casually.

Ranma nearly tripped. "Nabiki!"

Ryouga just groaned. "Yeah, yeah, make jokes. If having those two have the wrong idea was the worst of this, I would be laughing. So, I hashed things out with them…"

"Figured out the sleeping arrangements? Ranma likes to be in the middle." Nabiki cut in with a smirk.

"Nabiki, stop helping!" Ranma growled.

Ryouga winced. "I cleared up the misunderstanding with them so they know I'm not any kind of competition. But it was kinda rough getting there, so we decided to have a couple of drinks."

"You'd think Ukyou would remember how much trouble sake gets her into," Nabiki said. Then she smirked "Or maybe she enjoys the trouble."

Ryouga gave her a confused look, then shrugged. "Well… We kinda had too much. I probably should have just crashed in the storeroom or something but they insisted on walking me home. By some miracle we actually made it, but…"

"... but you came home drunk with a pretty girl on each arm," Ranma finished. Her angry expression had softened into one of recognition.

"And your Mom saw," Nabiki added, understanding.

Ryouga laughed bitterly. "It gets even better, though! We all passed out, so she took care of us. By the time I had woken up, Shampoo and Ukyou had already blabbed all about how they had grilled me about whether I was interested in Ranma, trying to convince my Mom that I wasn't…"

"... Without realizing that their enthusiastic tactics would imply to the uneducated outsider that they are interested in you," Nabiki finished for him.
"And then they made it worse, didn't they?" Ranma asked. "It always gets worse after that part."

"Well, Ukyou wanted to try and convince my Mom that she's only interested in me as a sister, but Mom wasn't buying it, so Shampoo volunteered to pretend to be my girlfriend to divert her from possibly doing something stupid like arranging an omiai with Ukyou's Dad or something."

"And you went along with that?!" Nabiki asked, incredulous.

"Of course he did," Ranma muttered. "Because Shampoo did that cute little pouty-lip thing she does, and the big pleading eyes, and then you're tripping over yourself to do whatever she asks because she's adorable."

Ryouga nodded miserably. "I'm not any good at plans," he added, "My only idea was to just leave it alone and not worry about it."

Nabiki blinked. "Well… yes, that was the right play. You should have done that."

Ranma and Ryouga both stopped and stared at her.

Nabiki cocked her head at both of them. "You two have realized by now that most misconceptions work themselves out in the end as long as you just act consistently, right?"

They both blinked owlishly at her.

"You haven't noticed that everything you do to try and 'fix' these problems just makes them worse?" Nabiki demanded, growing concerned.

More blank stares.

"You do know that sometimes doing nothing is the best course of action - especially when you don't have enough information to know what the consequences of your actions will be?" Nabiki put her hands on her hips and glared at the two of them.

They both looked sheepish.

"Now we do?" Ranma said timidly.

Nabiki threw her hands up in the air. "Aaaaugh! No wonder your lives are such chaotic messes! You never leave well enough alone!"

Ryouga sighed. "Sorry about this…"

Nabiki blinked at him, momentarily thrown off by the familiar phrase and tone.

Ranma took his arm and started steering him in a different direction.

"R-ranma…?" Ryouga said, confused.

"Ranma, the hospital is this way," Nabiki jogged to catch up.

"I know, but we've got time," Ranma said, eyes forward as she walked purposefully. "And that bad day Ryo just described? I've had that bad day. And whenever I have that bad day, I need ice cream. So I'm taking Ryo for ice cream."

Nabiki raised an eyebrow, though she noticed a light blush on Ryouga's cheeks. Her eyes flicked down to the arm Ranma was holding firmly. Close contact. They're linked right now and Ryouga's
"As long as you're buying, Ranma," Nabiki shrugged, acting nonchalant.

"So she lectured you?" Ranma asked, spoon poised over her ridiculously colorful ice cream concoction. "About being a Casanova?"

Ryouga sulked, chewing on the straw from his milkshake. "She wanted to make sure I didn't lead the girls on, and made my intentions clear, and how I could unintentionally really hurt someone if I wasn't careful."

"Well, that is true, Ryo," Nabiki said thoughtfully, twirling her spoon. She was seated next to him, working on a cheesecake sundae.

Ryouga gave her a sideways look. "I am amazed you can say that with a straight face," he muttered darkly.

She smirked and leaned against him. "Who said I was leading you on, Ryo Baby?" she purred.

"Nabiki, don't tease him," Ranma said impatiently, then paused as an odd expression crossed her face. "When did I become the one who says that?"

"Since you took over Akane's job of being the one leading poor Ryo on?" Nabiki commented dryly.

"She's not leading me on," Ryouga growled irritably.

"It's adorable when you two get protective of each other," Nabiki chuckled. "You don't need to bite my head off, I'm on your side." She leaned forward, pointing her spoon at Ranma. "Which is why I think we should show Dr Tofu how you let me in on the Link before."

Ranma gave her a skeptical look. "... Whyyyyyyyyyyyy?"

"Because the more we know about the mechanics of how this works, the faster we get a cure, right?" Nabiki said matter-of-factly.

"You just want to get into our heads again," Ryouga muttered.

"Yes!" Nabiki said brightly, then at the dark looks sighed. "Okay, fine, full disclosure. Do you have any idea how hard it is gonna be to hold this relationship together in the long run?" She stabbed her sundae with her spoon, scooped up a bite and popped it into her mouth, swallowing it before she continued. "Right now... all the forces around us... with the exception of Ranma's parents... are actually pushing us all together. Amazingly Cologne is on board and so are Daddy and Kasumi. We've even defused the Kunos. That's not going to last forever."

"Yeah... we're kind of overdue for some kind of major crisis," Ranma said glumly.

"Even without it, we've nearly wobbled this little ship to pieces a couple of times." Nabiki sighed and closed her eyes. "Ranma, you probably don't realize this, but Akane and I just crested a major hurdle last night, and it could have gone bad really easily. You've gone over more than I can count and you've stumbled on a few, and I know Ukyou and Shampoo are having to deal with things as well. This all requires a lot of rapid shifts in perspective and a lot of understanding and patience - which is inevitably going to run out."

Ranma blinked. "Are you saying it isn't going to work?"

Nabiki shook her head. "No… No, honestly I couldn't imagine this working with any other group, but we all seem to be just the right kind of crazy to fit together. But… we'll still need every edge we can get to keep it up. We're not seamless and we're never going to be." She leaned across the table towards her. "Imagine… if we were all linked?"

Ranma's eyes widened. "That's… a lot of people in my head…"

"It wouldn't be all the time, just when we're in physical contact, right? And if you don't 'listen' it's just background noise? You and Ryouga seem to manage okay," Nabiki said quickly. "But… it would be another 'sense' to help us to defuse problems before they start and to head off misunderstandings. If any two of us get mad at each other, we just go sit quietly together and hold hands until we understand each other's feelings. And if we want to be alone with our own thoughts, we just need to be alone. It's not like you and Ryouga are constantly reading each other's minds."

Ranma frowned. "Speaking of which… What about Ryouga? Assuming the link works the way we think it would with that many people, he'd be stuck with it too." She glanced at Ryouga and something like regret flickered across her features. "I mean, choosing an Anchor is supposed to be a major deal for his family, something he was hoping to share with the girl he marries someday. It's already screwed up now because he accidentally picked me, and now you want him to be stuck with four more girls who aren't ever gonna be more'n friends with him? I ain't putting him through that!"

Ryouga looked surprised at the vehemence of Ranma's last sentence. He blushed a and focused his gaze on his milkshake. "It's… not that big a deal, Ranma. You aren't the cause of my romantic problems…"

Ranma looked thoughtful. "I… guess that's true. But…"

"... And we can probably find a way to break the link between you and Ryouga," Nabiki finished, watching them both carefully for their reactions.

Ranma and Ryouga both froze.

"H-hold on…!" Ranma said nervously. "Ryouga's Mom said that it's really really bad for a Hibiki to lose their Anchor…!"

Interesting, Nabiki thought. "This would be presuming we cure the direction curse first," Nabiki added, raising an eyebrow.

"Even so…!" Ranma huffed, busying herself with her ice cream suddenly. "I don't think it would be a good idea to monkey with the original link like that. It could make everything fall apart, make Ryo relapse…" She stuffed a laden spoon in her mouth. ".. Can't we justt leave it ath ith?"

Ryouga was twisting the straw wrapper, studying his hands. Nabiki could see the muscles in his jaw flexing as he mulled something over.

"I'm alright with you using the Link if it helps you," Ryouga said finally.

"Ryouga?" Ranma nearly choked on her mouthful. She swallowed, then thumped her chest to try and get the chunks of brownie, nuts and whatever else was in her parade float of a sundae down. "You can't be serious...!"

"I'm just here to cure the family curse so my Mom can live a normal life," Ryouga said gruffly. "If I can do that, I won't need an Anchor anymore, or the Link. Having this connection between us is just messing up your life, Ranma, and if we can cut it and still save my Mom, then..."

"No," Ranma said sharply, her eyes flashing.

Nabiki let the tension hang in the air for a moment, curious if anything else would be said. Finally she sighed and nonchalantly scooped up more of her ice cream. "I agree with Ranma on this, to be honest." She popped the spoon in her mouth.

"What?! But you said..." Ryouga gaped at her.

Nabiki chewed slowly and kept her eyes closed, her expression one of schooled indifference. "I brought it up as a possibility, yes... and Ranma made a good point about the potential downside, so I'm revising my position." She opened one eye, fixing Ryouga with it. "Which means we're into Plan B. Which is 'Find a way to explain all of this to the other fiancees so they don't kill us.'"

Ryouga winced and closed his eyes. "I'm sorry..."

"Don't be. This predates everything but Ukyou's claim, after all," Nabiki said in a businesslike manner. "We just need to be careful how we tell them about it, how we explain why we didn't tell them sooner and how we reassure them that this doesn't threaten their relationships with Ranma."

Ryouga and Ranma stared at her.

"This isn't an engagement, Nabiki," Ranma hissed, a light blush on her cheeks. Nabiki noticed her steal a quick furtive glance at Ryouga. Nabiki could see out of the corner of her eye the Lost Boy was blushing too.

Oh this would be SO much easier if you two would just KISS ALREADY! Nabiki thought grumpily. "It's a deep and permanent emotional bond between you that will, as I understand it, last your entire lives. If we assume nothing else changes from how it is now, Ryouga is going to be constantly finding his way back to you, Ranma, so he is going to be a fixture in your life. And by extension he will be a fixture in our lives. You might as well be married."

"Nabiki, don't joke about that," Ranma said quickly.

"I'm sure Kodachi would be overjoyed to help plan 'Ran's' wedding..." Nabiki continued with a smirk.

"Now you're gonna give me nightmares!"

Nabiki giggled. "You'd look cute in a wedding dress, though!"

Ranma flushed and pouted as Nabiki expected, muttering something prideful about how that was only natural, but it was Ryouga's reaction that interested her. In the corner of her eye she saw him stiffen, eyes going wide and unfocused as though he had remembered something.
Well! Did I pick out an image from a daydream, Ryo? Nabiki raised an eyebrow but left it alone for the moment. This is getting ridiculous. I need to get them drunk together or something... This repression is going to give one or both of them a coronary.

"Anyway, we should get going," Nabiki scooped up the last spoonful of her dessert. "Don't want to keep the doctors waiting!"

000

It seemed in the intervening week since the last appointment, Dr. Hirano and Dr. Tofu had been pouring over a bizarre mix of MRI scans, medical charts and dusty old scrolls and martial arts techniques. Dr. Hirano's desk was piled high with manilla folders and ancient texts in equal measure.

"I can't stress enough how incredibly important your contribution to this effort has become," Dr. Hirano gushed as he escorted them to the MRI room. "What you've shown me has remarkable potential but we're still very much in the proving stages. Ono and I have only just begun to codify and rationalize some of the existing knowledge about ki pathways and translate that into a set of assumptions we can accurately test under scientific rigor. The live data the two of you have been providing is... well, priceless."

"Priceless, you say," Nabiki perked up. Ranma could almost hear the cha-CHING of the cash register in her mind.

"Yes, absolutely," Dr. Hirano continued, not noticing. "Of course, we have a considerable amount of skepticism to overcome before we have any hope of securing research funding."

"Well, we should get to that!" Nabiki started walking faster, spurring them all on to keep up.

"Ummm... yes... what is your relation to Ms. Saotome and Mr. Hibiki again, Ms...?" Dr. Hirano asked uncertainly.

"Tendo. Nabiki Tendo," Nabiki said, smiling brightly at him. "I'm their accountant and relationship counsellor."

There was a twin crash behind them as both Ranma and Ryouga missed their next steps at the same time and pitched face first onto the floor.

"Are you two alright?" Dr Hirano asked, concerned. "I've heard that there are some problems with loose floor tiles. I'll point out this section to maintenance right away, I'm very sorry!" He knelt and offered them each a hand up.

"Yes, right. Floor tiles," Ranma said tightly. "Oh, Nabiki, could we have a moment in private?" She got to her feet, grabbed Ryouga's arm with one hand, Nabiki's arm with the other and dragged them both around the corner.

"Relationship counselor!?!" Ranma hissed, glaring daggers at the middle Tendo. "Are you trying to make this worse?!"

"I love you," Nabiki said and quickly kissed her on the nose, giving her an impish smile to defuse her ire. "Your cover story is that you and Ryouga are engaged, right? Quick question... did you remember to explain the cover story to Dr. Tofu?"

"I..." Ranma's expression slowly morphed into one of horror. "Oh no..."
"Aaaaand Dr. Hirano didn't mention it, so either Dr. Tofu has magically developed clairvoyance and knows that it's all a ruse despite you two having developed a deep emotional bond and getting all quiet and cuddly when you're together…"

"We are not cuddly!" Ryouga protested.

"... You're still holding onto each other," Nabiki noted dryly.

Ranma glanced down, realized she was still holding Ryouga's arm and released it as if it had burned her.

"As I was saying, either Dr. Tofu has decided to ignore the mountains of evidence of a relationship which includes you two blatantly claiming to be in one and has also elected to play along and keep his new best buddy Dr. Hirano in the dark, or… It's officially already worse." Nabiki jabbed a thumb at her chest. "So… relationship counselor."

"She's right…" Ranma sighed, feeling the Cloud of Impending Doom settle over her head. "We forgot to explain the fiancee thing to him and Doc Tofu's been looking at me kinda weird the last few times I saw him."

"But… there's no way he'd really believe you and I are…" Ryouga said, laughing nervously. "I mean…. There's just no way…!

"I dunno. Dr. Tofu is pretty perceptive," Nabiki said.

"That's right!" Ranma smacked her fist into her palm. "Doc Tofu had me'n Akane pegged from the start! He's good at seeing when people like each other, even if they don't see it themselves! So… we're in the clear!"

Nabiki blinked, winced, then rubbed her temples as if in pain. She walked over and took Ranma by the shoulders and gave the redhead a sad, affectionate smile. "Ranma dear? I love you more than life itself, but… you are so dense."

"Ummm… terribly sorry to interrupt, but… are you maybe ready to get started?" Dr. Hirano called from around the corner.

They resumed their walk to the MRI room, slightly subdued. Dr. Tofu was already there and looking excited. He was seated in the MRI booth, comparing a picture on the screen with one of his dusty old scrolls.

"Ranma! Ryouga! Good to see you!" Tofu beamed, stood up and walked out to greet them. "And… Nabiki Tendo! What brings you out today?"

Nabiki smirked. "We've figured out a new trick, Doc. We figured out how to share the link."

"Pardon?" Tofu said, eyes going wide.

"It only lasted for about a minute," Ranma said. "But we figured a way to push the link through Nabiki's aura."

"We could show you," Nabiki said, beaming at the excuse to try the link again.

"Baselines," Dr. Hirano said quickly. "We need to see if anything has changed with Ryouga and get baselines for Ranma and Ms. Tendo here before we make any more changes." He turned to them. "If you could hold off on your… ah 'demonstration' until we can take a scan of each of you, that Getting three MRI scans done was tedious, especially given Dr. Hirano's insistence on full-body scans, but eventually it was finally done.

"I apologize for the tedium, but we need to begin our observations with at least a modicum of scientific rigor," Dr. Hirano said. "Now… if you could demonstrate this effect, we can observe it, then take another set of scans afterwards to see how things have changed."

Nabiki nodded. She gave Ranma and Ryouga a grin each, and then extended her hand.

"I think you're a little too into this, Nabiki," Ranma whispered as she put her hand on top of Nabiki's.

"Being telepathic has always been a secret fantasy of mine," Nabiki murmured back. "This is almost as good, and it's real."

"Hopefully it'll even work this time," Ryouga said as he cupped her hand and frowned. "You've been working out with Cologne since then."

"What difference is a few days going to make?" Nabiki asked.

They all closed their eyes. Ranma focused and felt the resistance of Nabiki's ki but, unlike before, she was unable to push through it to connect to Ryouga's.

"Ow…" Nabiki winced.

"Sorry!" Ranma said sheepishly, cracking open an eye.

"Yeah… I thought so," Ryouga said sadly. "Cologne's training is real effective."

"No… that's not fair…" Nabiki whimpered, opening her eyes and looking at her hand despondently. "I didn't even want to train!"

Dr. Tofu and Dr. Hirano glanced at one another. Tofu looked thoughtful for a moment and brightened. "I think I might have a solution." He went to his old fashioned physician's bag, opened it, rooted around and fished out a small bottle. He then shook out a small pill into his hand, a capsule filled with what looked like ground up herbs.

"What's that?" Dr. Hirano asked, slightly concerned.

"It's an herbal medicine used to suppress a patient's ki in order to facilitate ki healing," Dr. Tofu replied. "It allows the healer's ki to invade to a degree so it might help with what you're trying to do." He hesitated. "I do have to warn you that it's also a fairly potent sedative."

"Is it dangerous at all?" Dr. Hirano asked, concerned.

"Only in large doses," Dr. Tofu replied. "Overly suppressing the ki can lead to the heart stopping, organ failure… it can cause basic life functions to cease. But that's true of any medication, yes?"

"I suppose," Dr. Hirano said, sounding unsure.

"Don't worry my friend, I've been Nabiki's family doctor for ages. I am confident of the dosage." Dr. Tofu handed Nabiki the pill. "Nabiki, you're going to feel drowsy and a little cold." He got a small bottle of water from his bag and handed it to her as well. "That's normal."

Nabiki nodded. She popped the pill into her mouth, opened the bottle of water, and took a swig. "So… how soon will it take effect?"

Tofu checked the clock on the wall. "About half an hour. Go sit down over there. Dr. Hirano and I will process your baselines while we wait."

Nabiki sighed and walked over to the set of chairs against the wall, sat down and crossed her arms. Ranma sat on her right, concerned.

"You okay, Nabs?" Ranma asked.

Nabiki shook her head. "I was hoping it would get easier - that'd we'd be more 'in sync' or something." She pulled her legs up onto the chair with her, hugging her knees to her chest. "I don't like the idea of having to rely on pills to make this work."

"It… doesn't work that way, Nabiki," Ryouga said gently, sitting down on her left.

"It works that way for you," Nabiki retorted. "When you made the link back in Middle School, neither of you even realized that you did it."

"Yeah, but it was just a tether then," Ryouga explained. "A way to find… well, Ranma. It wasn't until…" he looked down, looking ashamed. "... It wasn't until I overloaded it with ki that it got this way."

"Hey, I seem to remember being there too!" Ranma said crossly.

"Yeah, but you were only there…" Ryouga started.

"... Because I wanted to be. I knew what I was doing," Ranma said fiercely.

Nabiki hugged her knees tighter and shivered. "You two are so cute," she said softly with a smile.

"We are not… Nabiki, you're shivering…" Ranma said, noticing halfway through the sentence. She reached out and grabbed Nabiki's hand. "Holy crap your hands are like ice!"

"I guess the pill works faster than advertised," Nabiki said, her voice sounding small. "I feel so tired…"

Ranma started rubbing Nabiki's hand between hers. "Hey, Ryouga, warm up her other hand? I think the Doc overestimated the dosage."

Ryouga nodded and took Nabiki's other hand, rubbing it between his. Ranma started blowing on Nabiki's hand, cupped between hers.

"You're being silly, you two," Nabiki said. "It's just the pill, it's not like…"

She stopped talking just as Ranma felt it. Like a pull, drawing warmth from her hands and arms, through Nabiki's hand like water pouring into a container. At the same time she heard Ryouga gasp and suddenly the Link flared to life. Except it wasn't just Ryouga - Nabiki was there too, and far more intensely than the last time.

"Ooooh… I feel…" Nabiki murmured, then her eyes opened wide. She took a deep breath and turned her head to look at Ranma as she uncurled. "I feel that! That's you!" She grabbed hold of Ranma's hand tightly then turned to look at Ryouga, gripping his hand tightly as well. "It's Ranma nodded dumbly. She closed her eyes, feeling a bit of a headrush. "Woo… feels like my ki's going down a drain."

"Nabiki's is almost totally suppressed, so I think ours is filling the void," Ryouga said, his brow furrowing as he tried to focus on analyzing what was happening and not the pink, sparkly, happy emotions that Nabiki was suddenly radiating.

Nabiki had uncurled and stopped shivering. "That's so much better…" she purred, closing her eyes and leaning back in her chair. "It's like a warm bath… Mnnnh… little bit of cold… awww, were you worried about me?" She glanced at Ryouga.

"Worried in general, yeah…" Ryouga said. "Are you feeling okay?"

"Mnnn… Kinda floaty… Don't you dare let go…" Nabiki murmured.

"Doc?" Ranma called out, a little concerned. "Ummm… something happened…"

Dr. Tofu poked his head out of the MRI booth. "Yes, Ranma? It hasn't been half an hour yet."

"I know, but…" She held up her hand, still holding Nabiki's. "We, uhh… we were trying to warm her hands and… Well…"

"The Link?" Tofu immediately popped out of the booth and came over. "Stand up. Keep holding hands, let me get at your backs so I can see what's going on."

Dr. Hirano stepped out as well, curious. "Can you tell what's happening?"

The three of them stood, though Ryouga and Ranma found they needed to scoot in close to Nabiki and prop her up; she was a little unsteady on her feet. "That pill is kinda strong, Doc…" Ranma said, sounding worried.

"Yes, I might have overestimated how much Cologne's training increased her ki," Tofu said. He stood behind them and started methodically touching pressure points on Nabiki's back, pausing at each one as he 'listened'. "Oh my…"

"What? What's wrong?" Ranma asked, starting to sound panicked. She resisted the urge to turn and grab him by the collar, but only barely.

"Not wrong, per se… Nabiki is fine. It seems the sedative effect is just hitting her hard," Dr. Tofu said reassuringly. "But what's happening with her ki… Do you think we can get her onto the MRI table and scan without you two letting go?"

They carefully maneuvered Nabiki onto the table, Ranma on one side, Ryouga on the other, still holding her hands.

"How are you feeling, Nabiki?" Dr. Tofu asked. Dr. Hirano gave her a preliminary check, using a penlight to check her pupil reaction.

"Good," Nabiki said. "Very good. Relaxed, but…" She closed her eyes, as if trying to think of the right words. "All of these feelings… emotions… are flowing… like they're flowing through me. They have a… temperature, I guess? There's some that are cold, but most of them right now are warm… some are even hot, but not… not the kind of hot that burns, if that makes any sense?"
Ranma felt Nabiki weave her fingers around her own, holding her hand more securely. She glanced up, saw Ryoga blush and realized Nabiki had done the same with his hand. She could feel some definitely conflicted emotions from him about all of this.

_I haven't looked at Nabiki very closely yet. "Hey… uhh… Nabs…" _Ranma said as the Doctors retreated to the booth to start the scan. _"How worried about you about us… uhh… 'looking'?” _

Nabiki turned her head to look at her. Ranma could see a flicker of fear on her face and an accompanying surge of a darker, colder emotion. Nabiki took a deep breath. _"I don't know how long this will last… this isn't really the best or most private place, but…”_ Nabiki swallowed. _"Look at all of it.” _

"Nabiki?” Ranma furrowed her brow. _"Look… even me'n Ryoga haven't done _that, and we already know way more about each other than we're comfortable with. Doncha think…” _

"Ranma… I… I have a lot of things in my head I'm terrified of you seeing," Nabiki said softly. _"I have a lot of things I'm terrified you will judge me for. I have a lot of things I've kept hidden from the entire world. _Most_ things I've kept hidden from the world. And it's _exhausting._ So… it's okay. Look. See me for what I really am.” _

Ranma leaned a little closer and grasped her hand a bit more tightly.

"You too, Ryouga," Nabiki said, surprisingly. _"I need someone who… who doesn't have a stake in me to see. Someone who'll just judge me for what I am. And I don't know any other way to get my guard down enough to do that than… well… _this._” _

Ryouga scowled. _"First Ranma, then you… Why are you all coming to _me_ for therapy?” _

Ranma blushed and shot Ryoga a glare, but Nabiki just giggled.

"Because we trust you?” Nabiki said. _"You'd think most boys your age would be happy about having a couple of cute girls coming to him for help. Or are we not cute enough for you, Ryo?” _

Ryouga blushed and stammered a denial. Ranma narrowed her eyes.

"Don't tease him, Nabiki,” Ranma said.

"It helps me figure out what all these colors and shapes and temperature mean," Nabiki replied. _"I'm pretty sure that's embarrassment, then. You guys are further along than me in figuring this out, right?”_ She glanced at Ranma for confirmation, then turned her head back to Ryoga. _"Here, Ryo… don't be embarrassed. Look…” _

Ranma could feel it as Nabiki reached out for the Lost Boy. Ryoga's head snapped around to gape at her, his eyes widening as she shared her own feelings with him.

Nabiki smirked. _"You _can't_ tell me your self-esteem is so low you didn't realize…” Her eyes widened suddenly as she 'looked' a little deeper. "... Oh my god, you _didn't!_ No wonder…!” _

"Ryouga's a bit of a… a…” Ranma struggled to find the right term.

"'Kicked puppy,'” Nabiki said softly. _"Ryouga… You have a very _dedicated_ set of fans among the female populace of Furinkan. There's _nothing_ wrong with you.” _She sighed and closed her eyes. _"The two of you… Ranma's all artificially inflated confidence and you've got an irrationally inflated sense of unworthiness. No _wonder_ you're both so… so…”_ she closed her eyes and frowned. _"... _God_… you're _so_ lonely. Both of you. Even when you're surrounded by others.”_
Ryouga frowned. "You're one to talk, Nabiki! You're all surface emotions covering up… covering…" He cocked his head as he 'listened'. "... Fear?"

Ranma could see it too, now. Nabiki's emotions were like a shell. Shapes and colors Ranma recognized as Confidence and Happiness, supported by others that were darker, possibly Avarice or Desire, but all of it was wrapped tightly around a big black ball of something else. Of course Ryouga would know that one, Ranma thought, recognizing some of that blackness in Ryouga himself.

"See?" Nabiki said, smiling weakly. "This is why I wanted this. The stuff that frustrates you and the things underneath it that cause it, that make you sad."

Ranma felt her squeeze her hand, and she was surprised to see tears starting to run down Nabiki's cheeks. "Nabiki?" She could feel some of that black mass start to bubble up, gradually coming to the surface and bleeding off.

"This is… just dredging up some stuff…" Nabiki said, sniffling.

"Your Mom had dark hair… didn't she?" Ryouga asked.

Nabiki looked at him, surprised. "Y-yes, but how…?"

"I got an image from that, a flash…" Ryouga said. "Happened once before with Ranma, too. I think it happens when a lot of emotion is tied to the same memory."

"You get memories too?" Nabiki whispered, eyes widening.

Ranma dropped her gaze, remembering when she had nearly slipped into the Neko-ken.

"I see… So… Most of my problems lead back to one big memory, while you two have had more variety in your terrible experiences." Nabiki's bottom lip quivered. "I'm… Is it usually this hard to keep control? I usually… don't have to… she sniffed, "... I don't want to remember…"

"Alright, we're done with this set. You can get and walk around if you like," Dr. Hirano's voice came over the intercom.

Nabiki sat up. She trembled as if cold and was squeezing their hands hard.

"Nabiki?" Ranma said. She could feel more of Nabiki's barriers starting to crumble as more of the black ooze bubbled up. "Are you okay? Maybe we should let go now…"

"Don't," Nabiki said sharply and shuddered again. "Don't you dare Ranma!" Her control started to crack and tears started to roll freely. "Don't you dare uncork this then leave me alone with it!"

Ranma gasped as she started to get image after image. A woman with dark hair, smiling kindly. She reminded Ranma a little of Kasumi in expression and the general 'feeling' she got. Then the smile faded into a sad expression as the eyes grew tired and lifeless. There was a vision of clumps of dark hair in the bathroom sink and the sound of sobbing, and then the woman was wearing a headscarf, looking wan and tired… diminished. Finally a hospital room with beeping machines and a frail-looking figure on a bed with tubes and wires running into her; far too many tubes and wires. Suddenly the machines stopped beeping and there was just one, long tone.
"Ahhkgh!" Nabiki shuddered and nearly doubled over. "I don't want to remember…!"

Ranma moved to comfort her but was shocked when Ryoga beat her to it. He sat down on the table next to Nabiki and put his arm around her, holding her hand in a firm grasp.

"No," he said with surprising gentleness. "Remember it. It's okay. This is what you said the Link was for, right? Work through it."

"N-not this…" Nabiki hiccuped. "I… I didn't cry then! Daddy said I had to be strong. Mommy looked so sad… I didn't want her to be sad! I didn't want her to be afraid! I'm not… I'm not supposed to cry!" She shuddered again. "Akane cried so much Dad had to take her out of the room but I didn't want that to happen! I needed to be there!"

"You were alone with your Mother when she died…" Ranma said, sitting to her other side and slipping an arm around her as well. "And you didn't cry, even though you wanted to, because…"

"S-she told me not to cry… n-not to be sad… I promised…" Nabiki huddled between them. Ranma could feel the proximity increasing the effect of the Link and focused on trying to send reassuring emotions to Nabiki. She shuddered a bit as the wave of blackness hit her. It's spreading the hurt over the three of us and Nabiki is STILL crying? How long has she bottled this up inside her? She felt her own vision get blurry as she struggled against the sadness.

"So you didn't cry. Ever," Ranma said softly. She sniffed, feeling the ache in her chest. She could see more images now… of Nabiki's father being withdrawn, listless… of Kasumi's slow transformation into a clone of their mother, her own personality gradually subsumed by the role she took on for Akane's sake… of Tachi and his betrayal. Everyone leaves, even if they're still there. So you stopped caring so it would stop hurting.

"She didn't want you to hurt," Ryoga said softly. "But she didn't want you to stop feeling," He closed his eyes. "When… When my Dad died, I wasn't able to get there to be with him at the end. But… The last time we spoke…"

"... Don't be afraid to cry," Ranma said, getting a vivid image in her head of a telephone, one she recognized from the Hibiki house. A warm, male voice like Ryoga's but older and deeper. "Ryoga, was that…?"

"... Just after Shirokuro had her pups, yeah. I was able to make it home a few more times after you showed me where it was," Ryoga chuckled. "He was curious who 'Yoiko' was… this girl who had convinced me I had a sister. He was worried and asked me if you were okay… Thought you might be homeless or abused..." His jaw tightened. "He… he said the treatments were going well…"

Ranma closed her eyes and huddled in closer, feeling more of that black awfulness flooding out. It was cold and damp and pulled down on her like a weight. It was the same as the feelings that had threatened to crush her in the Shi Shi Hokodan. She wrapped her arms around them both as best she could and crawled in closer to them.

"No, don't hurt! Please! I'm here! I'm here!"

Somehow, that helped - like lashing oneself to the mast in a storm. Gradually, the tempest of released emotions ebbed to leave them all dizzy and shaking. Ranma discovered, to her surprise, that she was sniffling and her cheeks were wet as though she had been bawling. Warmer emotions gradually filtered through the cold, though it was tough to tell at this point from whom they had come, or even if they belonged to anyone individually.

"Is… is it always like that with you two?" Nabiki asked in a hushed voice.
"No… aside from when Ranma and I pushed the Link too hard, that's the first time…" Ryouga replied. They were all huddled together now, their foreheads practically touching. Ranma could see their eyes were red and puffy.

"It feels… better, though," Nabiki said after a moment, sounding almost unsure. "Lighter…"

"Yeah… that's a good word for it," Ryouga replied.

"I don't feel any different," Ranma huffed. "I'm just upset because you two were!"

"That's right… that was just us," Nabiki looked at her. "I wonder why?"

"Are you three all right?" Dr. Tofu interrupted, peering at them. Ranma realized they hadn't been aware of what was going on around them. The two Doctors were standing nearby, though they had kept a respectful distance.

"You were… glowing," Dr. Hirano said, his face pale.

"Up. Now," Tofu motioned them to stand. "Stay in contact with each other for the moment, please." He moved around behind them and began testing pressure points again, eyes closed.

After a few moments of prodding, he stepped back and walked back around to face them again. "Ryouga and Nabiki's ki balances have shifted considerably, though it's hard to tell with all the intermixing going on. Whatever that was, it was a bleed off of a large amount of negative ki. What happened?"

Nabiki smiled. "I guess you could call it therapy…"

"There was some kind of resonance," Ryouga added. "For some reason, Nabiki and I started thinking about… well, we each lost a parent…"

Dr. Tofu rubbed his chin. "Hmmmm… Similar traumatic memories reinforcing one another?"

Dr. Hirano cocked his head. "I'm afraid my knowledge of psychology is somewhat basic, but… I believe it's common for emotions and memories buried by trauma to begin to re-emerge when the individual is in a place of sufficient emotional stability and security to begin to 'unpack' them. I've had a few patients who suffered from various forms of PTSD who sometimes reported such things."

"And because the Link provided support, you think that's why all that stuff came up?" Nabiki said.

"Or it's possible the circulation of emotionally charged ki unbalanced your emotional state and allowed those feelings to surface," Tofu added. "Right now it's almost impossible to tell where either of your ki begins or ends. For now, though, I think we should break the connection while we look over the scans. I want you three to avoid physical contact for at least an hour, to give your ki time to settle and return to normal."

Nabiki sat curled up in her chair, pouting as she rubbed the palm of her right hand with her left thumb. She shivered - the feeling of cold was not as bad as before, but there were the lingering feelings unearthed when the memories of her mother had erupted, coupled with a depressing sense of loneliness to contend with.

That was just a few minutes of the Link at full strength. Nabiki thought, her hand twitching. And… I want to grab them and get it back already. It's addictive…

She considered that a moment, pondering if it was, in fact, habit-forming. The Link hadn't been a high, as such… though there had been an almost euphoric rush at the start. It had more been that she hadn't realized how lonely she was until she wasn't anymore.

It felt like… like when Mom used to hug me, when I was scared or hurt or feeling bad, she thought. That's why I thought of her and all that stuff came up. She glanced over at Ryouga. He was sitting slumped in the chair, staring at the wall, looking drained and a little melancholy. She felt the ache of sympathy that came from being far too aware of what he was feeling. Ranma is right… you end up knowing too much about someone. Except…

She glanced at Ranma. The redhead looked bored, but didn't seem to have gone through the same unburdening that she and Ryouga had. I could 'see' the same kind of black mess in Ranma, but… she didn't uncork when Ryouga and I did… as if something is keeping it bottled up. She sighed. Ryouga and Ranma said something about the Neko-ken? Maybe it's good it didn't come up, but… Maybe that just means it should? But what would make Ranma feel safe enough to do that? She shuddered as she imagined Ranma going into a Neko-ken fit and the damage she could cause. That might explain why Ranma has to find someone she feels safe with to snap out of it, though. Maybe if Akane linked with her?

She closed her eyes and massaged her temples. No, I am not considering trying to add Akane to this! Not yet. She glanced at Ryouga. I need to learn more about this. About how this might… CHANGE things.

She took a moment to take inventory of her own feelings. Her opinions of Ryouga had shifted considerably. Mostly it involved a whole pile of guilt for all the teasing and exploiting she had done, as well as a more complex and complete mental picture of what motivated him and what demons haunted him. He was a lot more fragile than she had estimated. Ranma's newfound protectiveness of him made sense in light of what the Link had shown her.

Ryouga noticed her looking at him and returned her gaze for a moment. She smiled at him… not one of her sly, seductive smirks but just a smile which made him blush and look away quickly. She felt a little amusement at his bashfulness, accompanied by a surprisingly strong surge of fondness.

Oh my… Nabiki looked away, blushing herself. She did a rapid mental inventory; living with the constant danger of magical potions or talismans or such altering her own emotions or that of those around her had taught her to think up strategies for determining if she was suffering from such things herself. They mostly consisted of tracing back where all the feelings came from and flagging any feelings that just happened. It presumed whatever magic she was under allowed her to remain rational enough to do such an inventory but it was all a relatively normal person like herself had as a defense.

As far as she could tell, though, all of these new feelings led back to something she had sensed about him from the Link, or something once buried that the link had dredged up. The physical attraction had always been there, same as it always had been with Ranma, but that was hardly a factor. There were plenty of attractive boys around she wouldn't look at twice as anything other than an easy mark or a potential photoset for the female side of the Hentai Horde at school. She hadn't felt anything but mild contempt for Ranma until she had gotten to know him and something about who he was had stirred a response in her. She guessed Ryouga had some of the same qualities that she found appealing and that the Link had just bypassed her usual defenses and accelerated the process.

What IS it with me and strays?! Nabiki thought, somewhat bemused. I'll… have to be careful of my own feelings, though. She glanced at Ranma now, curiously examining the redhead. That's the effect of just a few minutes. Admittedly intense ones, but… Ranma and Ryouga have supposedly spent HOURS linked. What would that DO to two people?

She sighed. Nabiki already knew the answer to that. There wasn't a lot of wiggle room when you and someone else had your souls bared for the other to see, ugliness, pettiness, flaws and all. You would love them or you would hate them. But that didn't make it romantic love. That would require a component of physical attraction and… something else that Nabiki wasn't sure she could define.

Which BOTH of them have for the other, they're just too stubborn, repressed and/or afraid to acknowledge, she thought glumly. That might be for the best, actually. Ranma is right - this whole situation is PROFOUNDLY unfair to Ryouga. If anything happened between him and Ranma there was no WAY it would stop at just a fling. And then Ryouga would either have to compete against Ranma's messed up relationship dynamics or accept the same compromise we all did - assuming the other girls would accept him as well. She sighed. And if we wanted to use the Link to stabilize the Wobbles among the Fiancées, Ryouga would HAVE to be part of it. Unless we find some other way to make this work.

It was a little frustrating. She didn't feel she had wasted her time exactly. The experience had been powerful and… comforting. But she also knew it was now influencing her better judgement specifically because it had affected her so powerfully. She had originally seen the Link as a kind of magic bullet to protect against all of the interpersonal conflicts and pitfalls she foresaw ahead of them, but now? It complicated matters dangerously. Just letting the Link fade would be the best choice, she thought firmly. It compromises my better judgement, creates dangerously intense emotional connections and experiences, and generally has the potential to ruin EVERYTHING.

She rubbed her palm again. It itched.

I could just take them home, the thought crept in - quiet - rebellious. Seduce them both. Wouldn't even be HARD. She shivered at the pleasant mental imaginings of the three of them together with the Link suffusing everything in their shared pleasure. If just a hug was such a profound experience with the Link what might lovemaking be like?

And that would destroy any trust Shampoo, Akane and Ukyou have in me, and destroy everything I've accomplished so far. She winced as the sober, cold, rational side of her dumped a metaphorical bucket of ice water over the fantasy.

She rubbed at her temples again. So now I've got to deal with a nascent 'thing' for Ryouga and the temptation of LITERALLY mind-blowing sex - balanced against the destruction of my relationships with three other people, which includes my own sister AND a girl I've managed to fall for - despite my best efforts… She sighed heavily. Shampoo is right. I'm still not factoring my own emotions into things, and it keeps tripping me up.

"You okay, Nabiki?" Ranma asked, noticing her sigh.

"Is… everything okay?" Ryouga asked at the same time.

He and Ranma glanced at each other, blushed, then looked away sheepishly. It was adorable.

Nabiki looked back and forth between them. She felt a surge of something greedy within her that had been quiet for quite some time now.

MINE.
She rubbed her temples and sighed. God damnit, not this again…

"Well, as far as I can tell your ki is back to normal," Tofu said as he examined Nabiki. "As are Ranma and Ryouga. Your own ki should be fully re-established now but I want you to contact me if there are any lingering effects."

"Did you find out anything useful about the Link or solving Ryouga's problem?" Ranma asked, perched on a chair a few feet away.

"A considerable amount, at least as far as how the Link functions," Dr. Hirano said. "The scans are fascinating, though, granted, we focused on Ms. Tendo this time." He held up a printout of one of the scans. "It's almost like a weather pattern, or… osmosis; a flow of high ki to low ki."

"And because there seems to be a constant current between you and Ryouga, where normally there would be no mixing, the action of the link - that 'current' - reacted with Nabiki's own depressed levels and resulted in a constant circular flow between the three of you," Dr. Tofu added. "This allowed your ki to fully suffuse her. The applications for ki-based healing are already enormous."

"If we can replicate this effect outside of Ms. Saotome and Mr. Hibiki," Dr. Hirano added, taking off his glasses and polishing them with a handkerchief. "As it stands it suggests that even if we can replicate the link, it would require a pair of healers who are emotionally committed to one another. I would be more comfortable finding a way to mechanically replicate this effect rather than push us towards making marriage a requirement for a medical license."

"You're exaggerating as usual, Masa!" Dr Tofu chided him. "This sort of process, while a profound change, would never replace the need for traditional surgery, medicine or palliative care!"

"Yes, well, forgive me for having some concern for how rewriting our understanding of the human body and physics in general might have unforeseen effects on the profession, Ono!" Dr. Hirano shot back irritably.

"You'll have to forgive us," Dr. Tofu said apologetically. "We've had this conversation over and over for the past week. I think it comes up every time we reach a new milestone."

Dr. Hirano sighed and nodded. "Please don't mistake my trepidation for a lack of determination to cure Mr. Hibiki's ailment. I am simply… unaccustomed to making discoveries on such a constant and swift basis. I am more comfortable with a steady, methodical mode of research. Continually shouting 'eureka!' gets tiring and not a little disconcerting after a while."

"But you think this is something that you'll be able to use to cure the curse?" Ryouga asked. "And apply it to someone other than me? Soon?"

Dr. Tofu patted Ryouga's shoulder. "I understand your impatience, Ryouga. But we are making rapid progress. Even if your mother should get lost again…"

Ryouga shook his head, closing his eyes tight. They're doing all of this to help me. Even Ranma and Nabiki. I hate this. I hate being a burden. But for Mom's sake, I gotta push. I gotta tell them. "No… you don't understand… if she gets lost one more time… I'll never see her again."

Dr. Tofu paused, his expression shifting. "You sound very certain of that, Ryouga."

"I didn't say anything because it's just stories," Ryouga said finally. "But… but I remember it came up when I asked my parents about my grandparents and why I'd never met them. My grandparents on my Dad's side had just passed away, but… my grandfather on my Mom's side was still alive then. He might still be alive now for all we know." He swallowed. "My Mom didn't want to tell me but my Dad felt it was important I understand, once… once he was diagnosed, and he knew he might not have a lot of time. Once someone in my family loses their Anchor, the moment they have that realization, it triggers something. The curse starts to get worse."

"It gets worse?" Dr. Hirano asked, eyes widening. "How so?"

"Right now it's just… just random, whether I can find my way or not. But… it's a curse. It was put there by someone or something that wanted us to suffer. When someone in our family loses their Anchor, they… they wander. Uncontrollably. And they can never find their way back to the people and the things they care about. It steers them away." He swallowed. "Dad told me about my grandfather, when grandma died. He and Mom tried to keep him in the house, using a string so he could find his way, watching him carefully… even locking him in his room. One day he just… disappeared. They started getting letters from him, but the address was different every time, and by the time they sent a reply he was long gone. Dad showed me the letters, said he hoped I might be able to learn something to help me manage. In each letter things got worse and worse for grandpa. The times between them got farther and farther apart as he started having trouble even finding his way to other people. The last one… the last one he gave to a hermit to deliver for him. There wasn't anything after that." He bowed his head.

"Are you suggesting the 'curse' is sentient?" Dr. Hirano asked skeptically.

"No… it wouldn't need to be," Dr. Tofu said. "The poisoned ki causes its effect by affecting the entorhinal cortex, correct? So, as the condition worsens, it progresses from injecting random chaos to misdirecting all attempts at navigation, inverting their attempts to get to their goal. The harder the person tries, the worse the effect. And… when their desperation increases as they are gradually separated from the familiar, their desires change to focus on survival and finding less and less specific things… first a town rather than a neighborhood. Then a region rather than a town, then just any town. Then just any civilization. Then, finally, just anyone."

Dr. Hirano rubbed his chin. "You are supposing it uses the victim's own desperation to find their way against them?"

Dr. Tofu nodded. "Like a behavior-modifying fungus. Look at Ophiocordyceps unilateralis. The fungus drives the host to take very specific actions, but relies on the host's own sensory processing to ensure that the conditions it's seeking are met."

"So the victim's own cognitive abilities are set against them, working unconsciously to prevent the thing they are most trying to accomplish?" Dr. Hirano said. "Is that possible?"

"I've encountered things like pressure point techniques that can permanently alter a person's perception of temperature. That is a relatively simple, single-point change. This..." Dr. Tofu motioned at the MRI printout. "... This is far more complex; something the knowledge of how to do has been lost… thankfully. But… a diabolical enough mind, with enough knowledge and control over ki techniques..."

"Which leaves the problem of how to permanently flush this 'poisoned ki' from his system as it is self-replicating." Dr. Hirano said thoughtfully. "Perhaps if we could duplicate the 'flushing' effect on Ms. Tendo?"

Dr. Tofu shook his head. "I'm not sensing any permanent changes to Nabiki's ki. Plus Ryouga's own ki reserves are massive. The dosage of the medicine he would need to suppress his ki sufficiently for the effect to work would be... dangerous."
"Hnnnn... Still, this is progress," Dr. Hirano said finally.

Dr. Tofu turned to Ryouga, putting a hand on his shoulder. "We're going to need some more time to look over this data, Ryouga. But we're making progress, I promise you! Give us a week, and I'll have something for you."

Ryouga sighed heavily. "Thanks Doc. Just... anything you figure out that might help my Mom..."

"You'll be the first to know," Dr. Tofu said.

Ryouga shook his head. "No. Tell Ranma. Or better, tell Nabiki first. They aren't liable to be lost somewhere in the mountains at any point. Nabiki would be able to figure out what to do with it and my Mom knows and trusts Ranma."

Tofu got an odd expression across his face. "She knows about you and Ranma, then?"

"The Link? Yeah," Ryouga said. "She was the one who figured out Ranma was my Anchor."

Tofu frowned. "Err... yes, not exactly what I... nevermind." He shook his head. "It's not relevant. We'll be in touch if we learn anything. Likewise, contact Dr. Hirano or myself if you notice any changes in the Link or your curse."

Ranma hopped off of her chair. "C'mon, Ryo. Sayuri wants to try and get a few hours of practise in tonight and we still gotta get you home."

"I can take care of that, Ranma," Nabiki stretched and yawned. "I know the way."

"You sure, Nabiki?" Ranma asked, though her expression indicated she was eager to go.

"Watching you play is far too tiring for me right now, anyway," Nabiki said, standing up. "As long as Ryo is okay with it?"

Ryouga shrugged. "Whatever. I appreciate it either way."

000

The walk back was done in silence for the most part.

It wasn't that Ryouga didn't want to talk. But small talk wasn't exactly his forte, and after what had just happened, what topic could he possibly think of that wouldn't sound like... well, exactly what it was; a pathetic attempt at small talk to fill the dead air.

He found himself studying her as she walked. He hadn't ever really bothered to look at Nabiki before. His vision had always been clearly focused on Akane or... admittedly, Ranma. The other Tendos had kind of just been there - background noise that occasionally became significant then faded back into the static. Nabiki was an ordinary girl, not a martial artist, after all.

After today, though, that was going to be very hard. Nabiki had always been cool, collected, detached, cynical and in control. And now he knew just how much of an act all that had been. As with Ranma, the cardboard cutout had suddenly popped into three dimensions, full of depth and complexity. And a very, very familiar pain.

All the Tendo sisters had echos of what he assumed was their mother's elegance. Some sort of nobility that drew people to them and manifested in different ways. Kasumi was grace and poise, Akane was energy and expressiveness and Nabiki was control and confidence. Each of them was beautiful and each had something that made them equally unapproachable. Kasumi was too pure, a gentle, kind, understanding soul that you felt guilty looking at in anything but a detached, respectful way. Akane was competitive and quick to temper and Nabiki was cynical and manipulative.

After what he had seen through the Link, part of him wondered if that was on purpose. He wondered if Kasumi and Akane had similar wounds that they had wrapped their own defenses around. His arm twitched as he fought down the nonsensical urge to reach out and take Nabiki's hand.

_The Link is gone. Doc Tofu says she's back to normal, so what would it accomplish other than making me look stupid? Worse, I'd look like the Casanova I accuse Ranma of being!_ He sighed and looked away.

"Ryouga, do you love Akari?" Nabiki asked softly, without looking at him.

He nearly tripped. He skipped a couple of times to keep his footing. "What!"

She turned her head to glance at him. Instead of the usual cynical, impatient scowl or the sly smirk, there was just a smile, her expression open and honest. For some reason it made him feel nervous, like he was seeing something he shouldn't - something meant for someone else.

"Do you love Akari?" she repeated. "I mean… really love her?"

He stammered a bit, tried to dredge up a vehement affirmation of his pure and true love for Akari, but something in her eyes made it hard to just blurt out anything without thinking. It felt like what he said had weight and import that might change the course of his life depending on what he said.
"Why do you want to know?" he finally managed.

She sighed, turned around and walked backwards in front of him, her hands clasped behind her back. "I don't blame you for being suspicious of me, but… I'm honestly just curious," Nabiki said.
Her smile seemed almost a little… sad? Wistful, maybe. Not at all a Nabiki Tendo smile. She held up a hand. "I swear I'm not scheming anything, nor will I use what you tell me to scheme. I just want to… understand you a little better."

"Understand me?" Ryouga asked, cocking his head.

"We barely know each other, even though we've known each other for over a year," Nabiki said. "I hardly know you as a person, despite now knowing way too much about you and your feelings. It's a paradox, and as I can't fix it by unlearning stuff, I'm trying to learn stuff - to provide some context for all of this emotional knowledge I have now."

"Can't you just ask me what my favorite food is or something?" Ryouga muttered, rubbing the back of his head. "Asking a question like that makes it sound like… like…"

"Like I'm interested in you and feeling out what my chances are or how serious the competition might be?" Nabiki asked with a hint of her old sly smirk.

Ryouga blushed. "I didn't mean… I wasn't… I mean I wouldn't actually think that…"

"... Because I am, kind of," she finished.

Ryouga did trip this time, and landed heavily. He managed to catch himself before he his face hit the tarmac, though. _Idiot! She's teasing you again!_
She stopped and crouched next to him, holding out a hand. "Ryouga? Are you okay?" She had what looked like a genuine look of concern on her face.

"I'm... fine," he growled and pushed himself to his knees without her help. "It was just an uneven bit of sidewalk. I thought Ranma told you to lay off with the teasing?"

She let her hand fall back to her side and looked away. "What if it wasn't teasing? What would you say?" she asked quietly.

"Nabiki, come on, I'm getting annoyed," Ryouga said gruffly, standing quickly.

"Ranma is the reason you haven't gone to see Akari, isn't she?" Nabiki asked, not moving.

Ryouga was silent for a moment. He clenched his fists then forced himself to relax them. "We should get going. I don't want to make Mom worry."

"How do you do it, Ryouga?" Nabiki demanded, standing and stepping in front of him to block his path. She had a defiant look in her eyes which suggested that not all of the fire in the Tendo family had gone to Akane. "I was linked to you and Ranma for minutes and already I'm struggling to keep myself from doing something really stupid with you. You and Ranma have been linked for weeks. You've spent hours messing with this. How do your turn it off?! How do you... you put all those feelings you get back into the box after they've gotten out? How do you make your palms stop itching?!"

"You don't, okay?!" Ryouga said sharply. She took a half step back from the vehemence in his voice.

He closed his eyes. "You don't. It doesn't go away and you just accept that no matter how much you want it, you can't. So you try and avoid it; try and stop torturing yourself - and you move on." He opened his eyes and looked into hers. They were the same hazel-brown as Akane's but, at the same time, so very different. He could see a thousand questions there. "Haven't you ever loved something or someone you couldn't have?"

Nabiki scowled slightly. "I tried it once. It didn't work out as good for me as figuring out a way to have them did."

Ryouga snorted. "Lucky you. But that doesn't always work. I've got more than a little experience in that." He moved to step around her, but she stopped him with a hand on his chest.

"Then answer my question," Nabiki said. Her head was bowed, but her posture was tense.

"What...?" Ryouga blinked, uncertain.

She raised her head, fixing him with an intense stare. "Do you love Akari?"

"Why...?"

"Because I know how much you hurt!" she growled. "I know and I have no idea how you deal with it, but you do, and I'll be damned if I just let you do that stoic walk away of yours knowing you're just going back out into an empty, cold world with nothing waiting for you! Ranma loves you. You know that as well as I do!"

"Even if she or I could deal with that, her dance card is full," Ryouga said. "I know that she loves you, and there wasn't any Link responsible for it. I know that she loves Akane because she's put everything on the line for her - repeatedly. Ukyou and Shampoo? Well... if she can say it to them, I'll give her the benefit of the doubt on that too. There isn't room."

"That isn't the question I asked," Nabiki growled. "Do you love Akari?"

Ryouga was silent. He closed his eyes and thought for a moment. "I think… before all this started… Hell, even a week ago? I'd have said 'yes' without hesitating. And… how I feel about her hasn't changed. But…" He bowed his head in shame. "... I don't know if it's really love. I want to see her again, I want to find out, but… But I ran away."

Nabiki's expression softened. "Okay," she said, her voice gentle. "Good. I can help with that."

"Help?" Ryouga said, confused.

Nabiki's fingers curled, gripping the front of his shirt lightly, her eyes dropping. "I need to make sure you're okay. Don't ask me to justify that, I just do, okay? I think if you had been sure either way I would have been worried, because… because I felt so much confusion from you I know you're not. I know you've been through a lot, and some of it is my fault, directly or indirectly. After what just happened… I have to do something or I'll go crazy. So I want to help. And I know you can't go to Ranma with this, either."

Ryouga sighed. He wasn't sure what to think about this 'new' Nabiki. He didn't know if this was recent or he was just unaware of it. Without thinking her reached up and put his hand over hers. "Nabiki, I don't think…"

Whatever he was going to say was immediately obliterated from his mind as the Link flared to life between them.

Ryouga heard the gasp from Nabiki at the same time as he became intensely aware of just how colorful her own feelings were right now. He was surprised to find that the dark core had diminished significantly, and there were many more warmer colors.

They just stared at each other a moment.

Ryouga tried to swallow, finding his mouth suddenly dry.

"Oh…" Nabiki said softly.

Ryouga closed his eyes. Naturally it did nothing to shut out the awareness of her emotions, which were swirling, changing pattern, speed and color as the realization of what had just happened sank in.

"This… complicates things a little, doesn't it?" she asked softly.

"Doc Tofu said your ki was normal!" Ryouga protested, too stunned to think of removing his hand from hers for the moment.

She took the option away from him, turning her hand and clasping his firmly. "Maybe it's not something that he can detect. He never detected the link between you and Ranma, after all." Her emotions started to swirl faster, becoming warmer and brighter. "Ryouga, don't you get what this means?"

"Akane, Ukyou, and Shampoo are going to kill me?" Ryouga said nervously.

"No… well, yes, if I don't spin this just right to them. But it means we made a permanent change to my ki. Which means we should be able to make a permanent change to yours, too, right? And your "Mom's?" Nabiki started to smile. "That was always the problem, wasn't it? If you're linked to Ranma long enough it suppresses your curse, but it never sticks, but now that we know how to make changes permanent…"

"Hang on, we don't know that this is permanent yet," Ryouga said, though he admittedly felt a flicker of hope. Part of him desperately wanted it to be true, while another part of him despaired at what kind of damage it might do to his already frayed sanity to be emotionally bonded to both Ranma and Nabiki.

"I know, I know…" Nabiki said, but it was obvious she was already scheming. "... but if it is…!"

"It complicates everything!" Ryouga protested, feeling a little panicked.

Nabiki looked into his eyes and he felt the shift in her emotions even as he saw the defiant sparkle light in hers. He felt her fingers tighten around his hand and there was a surge of warm emotion through the link as some kind of resolution was made.

"I like complicated," she said finally.

000

"So are you sure you wanna try this, Senpai?" Rin asked nervously.

The dojo had been set up with a volleyball net strung across it once more, and Ranma was confidently doing some stretches to limber herself up on the opposite side of the net from Rin. The rest of the team was standing on the sidelines in their practise gear, watching.

"Gotta figure there's someone else with an arm like yours, right Rin?" Ranma gave her a wink. "I figure if we can work out counters to our best moves, it'll give us something to work from when we need to whip up a counter to someone else's best moves. Or figure out a counter to their counter."

"Or a counter to their counter of our counter?" Yuka suggested playfully. "That sounds like it could get ridiculous fast, Ranma."

"Yeah, well, after I started getting my own best moves tossed back in my face when I fought Herb, I decided I didn't want to be caught off-guard like that again." Ranma took a ready stance. "Gimmie the best Thunderbolt you can, Rin. I'll dodge if I can't figure out how to dig it out, don't worry."

"A-all right…" Rin replied uncertainly. She tossed the ball into the air, arcing it ahead of her. She skipped a few steps to get a bit of speed then leapt as the ball came down, lining up a perfect strike on Ranma.

Just as she did, Ranma felt an unexpected surge of warmth. It rushed through her, accompanied by a powerful burst of emotion that robbed her limbs of their strength and clouded her vision as she was overcome by a very pleasant sensation of heat.

And then the volleyball hit her in the head.

000

For a moment… just for a moment… He was afraid she was going to kiss him.

She didn't. Quite.
Ryouga had been hugged by a girl before, of course. Usually it was enough to cause a major malfunction in his brain just from the proximity. He had gotten somewhat better over time but he still wasn't used to physical contact of any type, much less from an attractive girl.

But in this case, the deck was stacked further against him.

Nabiki smiled at him, wrapped her arms around his chest, closed her eyes, and kind of leaned into him in a way that pressed her entire body up against his. At the same time, the proximity and close contact magnified the Link, almost like it was enveloping him. She hooked her chin over his shoulder and sighed softly. He felt a surge of warmth and an almost possessive affection from her. She smelled nice, the heat of her body was comforting and she was soft in all the right places.

He didn't lock up like he normally did. His breath caught in his throat, to be sure, and he hesitated. But in the past, he had always frozen up out of fear, out of lack of knowledge of what to do or out of fear of rejection. This time he hesitated because he knew exactly what to do. There wasn't any doubt of her feelings or what she wanted. He wanted to hug her back and she wanted him to.

He also knew that if he did that, he was going to let something take root in his heart for her - that he'd start down the road he had walked so many times before. His arms moved of their own accord and instead of wrapping around her, he put his hands on her shoulders and gently but firmly pushed her back.

"Nabiki, think what you're doing!" he said firmly. "You're Ranma's fiancee."

There was a flash of hurt and confusion in her eyes, and then a flicker of anger. "I thought that part was obvious?" she said, frowning. "It's a hug, Ryouga. I'm not seducing you! Friends hug each other."

_We have a difference of opinion here_, Ryouga thought as he struggled with the emotions she had already stirred up. "It's a little more than that to me," he said carefully. _The Link makes hugs dangerous!_

Nabiki quirked an eyebrow. "And I'm a little more than a friend now. Am I your Anchor now, too?"

Ryouga felt a cold ball form in the pit of his stomach, a gnawing sense of dread. He felt like he did whenever Ranma had fooled him with a disguise and had led him into betraying his devotion to Akane, except… he wasn't entirely sure he was ready to fully acknowledge what that feeling indicated just yet. "Ranma is my Anchor, and even then it's… it's…"

A slight smirk appeared. "I think the proper term for things is 'It's complicated', don't you?"

He squeezed his eyes shut and groaned in frustration. Conflicting images of Akane, Akari, Ranma… even Ukyou, Shampoo, Anna, and Nabiki herself… some happy, some crying, some looking betrayed, each emotion brought up by his situation tied to one image of happiness and ten of disaster. "Too complicated!" he said, shaking his head rapidly to clear it. He took a deep, cleansing breath to steady himself and another moment to get himself centered then schooled his expression into one of stern sincerity. "Look, I appreciate you wanting to help and… and I'm happy you got what you wanted out of this. B-but… you know how easily I get the wrong idea. How much I get… get wrapped up in it. The Link makes that a lot easier, so… I need some space. I don't want to start getting the idea that you're…" He struggled with the humiliation that came with the last part. "... That you're in love with me," he finished quickly, blushing brightly.

Something like a sad smile crossed Nabiki's face. She reached up and lightly cupped his cheek, causing him to freeze. "No… I'm not… but I could get there," she said, her voice low and soft, causing his brain to seize up hard. She sighed and let her hand drop away, taking a step back from him. "And that's how I know you're making a good point. I'm sorry."

He swallowed, struggling against the lump that had suddenly appeared in his throat. "I…"

"I won't ask anything else, and I won't tease you anymore," Nabiki said softly. "I'll help you figure out things with Akari if you still want me to, and if you want me to stay away I'll do that too. Just…” she looked away, "... don't be alone, okay?"

There were probably a thousand responses he could have given. A hundred that he should have given. But he couldn't think of a single one. Instead he just nodded slowly.

"... and if you want me to help you figure things out with a certain redhead, I'll do that too," she added, her sly smile returning. "But just keep in mind - we're a package deal." She winked. "Goodnight, Ryo. Sleep well."

He stood there, blinking dumbly as she turned and walked away. Finally, the gears in his brain re-engaged and something resembling rational thought reasserted itself.

"Wait… how do I get home?" he called out to her.

She turned, continued to walk backwards away from him, smiling. She pointed casually to his left, across the street.

He followed where she was pointing and saw… his house. They had arrived without him even realizing it.

She waved and continued on her way, turned and rounded the corner, vanishing from sight.

He scrubbed his hand over his eyes. He felt shaky and disoriented, but at the same time… at the same time…

No matter what I do, the chaos around Ranma keeps dragging me back in, he thought glumly. That used to be a source of comforting rage for him - how he could trace all of his woes back to Ranma Saotome, blame them all on him. He could set aside all his guilt and shame because it was Ranma's fault, not his.

And it was true, in a sense. Bad things kept happening to him around Ranma Saotome and because of Ranma Saotome. But it wasn't Ranma's fault. He could see that now.

I cling to Ranma, he thought, leaning against the doorframe. How might things have been different if I had just gotten back in time for that stupid duel? I never would have followed him to China, right? I never would have made him my Anchor… right?

There was no answer. The concept was foreign - incomprehensible. Though all of his life since then had been strife and struggle… his mind could not conjure an alternative. Ryouga clenched his fist. Why can't I imagine my life without him?!

An image appeared in his mind, unbidden. Bright blue eyes and red hair, framing an impish, cocky smile with a sparkle in her gaze that part of him wished was for him.
Jusenkyo is cruel, he thought miserably. The curse, and Ranma's increasing acceptance of it, had robbed him of the last degree of separation between himself and Ranma that he needed to keep his life from being utterly consumed.

Trust Saotome to already be hoarding any girl I take an interest in, he thought sourly. Even herself!

He wasn't entirely sure that thought made sense but it was comforting to be able to dredge up a little of the old indignation. He reached the door and paused.

Would it really be so bad? The thought was treacherously wistful, like the fantasies he used to have around himself and Akane. There was no real concrete idea of how it would even work… there never was… Just a pang of longing for something he didn't really believe he would ever be able to have.

I wish I had a sign - some indication of what I should do. Ryouga thought glumly as he opened the door. "I'm home!" he called out, wondering if there were any leftovers from dinner. After the day he'd had, he was exhausted and famished.

"Oh, Ryouga!" his mother called from the living room. "I'm glad you're home! There's someone here to see you!"

"Someone here to…?" Ryouga began, but he could already hear the frantic scrambling of feet on the floor. Before he could orient himself properly to see who it was, a smaller body slammed into him, pushing him back against the door. Slender arms wrapped around his waist and kept him pinned there.

Ryouga looked down to see long, greenish tinted hair with streaks of pink at each temple. The girl it belonged to looked up at him, her eyes shining with tears.

"Ryouga, I was so scared I'd never find you!" Akari sobbed. "Please… please promise me you won't leave me again?"

000

Nabiki returned to the Tendo Dojo to find Ranma out cold in the middle of the living room, tucked into a futon they had brought out from storage with a cool, damp cloth on her forehead.

"You brained my fiance?" Nabiki asked sternly as Rin grovelled in front of her.

"I'm sorry! I'm sorry!" Rin gushed as she bowed dramatically. "I didn't mean it! We were just practising, and she wanted to see if she could block a Thunderbolt, and… and…!"

"It really isn't Rin's fault," Akane said. "I saw it happen. Ranma just kind of… locked up, just before the ball hit. It looked as if something had distracted her."

Nabiki blinked. You don't think…? NAH. "Well… drat." She plopped down cross-legged next to Ranma's futon. "I had something I wanted to talk to her about!"

"You should probably let Ranma rest," Kasumi said, carrying in a tray of snacks and setting it on the table. "I'm not sure what you were doing today, but she seemed more worn out than usual. Normally she's quick to bounce back from these things, but she's been out for quite a while."

"Yeah, it is unusual," Akane said. "I mean, Rin's Thunderbolts hit hard, but…"
"What were you guys doing all day with 'Ryo', hmmm?" Yuka asked with a knowing smirk. "Did the three of you wear yourselves out playing doctor instead of going to the doctor, maybe?"

"Don't be silly, Yuka!" Akane waved her off. "Ranma doesn't swing that way and… honestly… Ryouga and Nabiki?"

"Aheh… yeah… Ahem actually the stuff the doctors are doing to try and fix Ryouga's directional problems involve a lot of ki." She yawned, feeling those exertions start to catch up to her as well.

"I'm surprised they involved you in this too," Sayuri said. "You're not really the person I think of when I think of 'ki', Nabiki."

Nabiki quirked an eyebrow. "Maybe I have some aspects I keep hidden, Sayuri?"

Yuka cleared her throat. "Yeah, maybe you shouldn't talk, Captain?"

Sayuri scowled at her. "And what exactly does that mean, Yuka?"

"Something about you doing something with ki when you do a trick serve that even Ranma and Ryouga working together haven't managed to figure out?" Riko asked cheekily.

"Oh?" Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "This is the first I've heard of this!"

"Mostly because we don't even know if that's what it is yet," Sayuri groused. "It's just the theory they're working with. And honestly, I think they're a little cracked."

"Is there anything else you've neglected to tell me about team developments?" Nabiki asked playfully. Secret techniques weren't exactly mission-critical knowledge but they were always fun. And they generally allowed her to massage the odds for the betting pool.

"I don't think so…" Rin said, brow furrowing as she concentrated. "… Oh! Well, there was that one thing about Senpai's registration, and how it's surprising the Regulatory Commission hasn't noticed Senpai's school registration doesn't match her birth records."

"... Wait, what!?" Nabiki gaped at her.

Sayuri sighed. "We thought you knew? Yeah, according to Ukyou, the Regulatory Commission for High School level competitive team sports has cracked down on situations where a student's gender is in question. Something about schools fielding male players on female teams and dressing them in drag? Anyway, they check your registration against your medical records and your Family Register, and if one of them doesn't match, they pull the plug."

"We figured Himura must have someone on the Board in her pocket to make sure Ranma didn't get looked at too closely," Yuka shrugged. "I mean, it's not like it'd be all that tragic if Ranma did get booted out. It would mean that Himura wouldn't have any way to complete her challenge or to have Ranma play for her even if she could, and chances are they'd just disqualify the entire team for the year."

"Yeah, it'd be kind of a pyrrhic victory," Sayuri added. "I'd rather beat her at her own game, to be honest."

Nabiki frowned and rubbed her chin. "That's not like her… something like that would completely blow Himura out of the water! There's no way she would leave something like that to chance if she knew about it."
"She knows," Sayuri said. "Ukyou says she ran afoul of it when Himura tried to recruit her to the team."

"Then she must have had it taken care of before she even made her challenge to Ranma," Nabiki said, pondering. "But still… there's no way she could own the whole commission, especially not being cut off from her Grandfather's resources." She chewed on the end of her thumb. "I don't like this…"

"Why not?" Sayuri asked. "It sounded to me like a whole lotta stuff that could blow up in Himura's stupid face, but nothing that would really hurt us at all."

"That's why I don't like it," Nabiki muttered darkly.

"No offense, but you sound a little paranoid, Nabiki," Yuka said, chuckling. "There's more than enough stuff set to blow up in our stupid faces for us to be worrying about Himura messing up her own paperwork."

"Maybe," Nabiki replied, unconvinced. I need to look into this. Ugh! Why did I have to find out about it on a weekend!? She sighed and rubbed the bridge of her nose then wobbled a bit. She managed to catch herself and shook her head to clear the fog. "Nhhh… How are things going otherwise? Anything else I need to know about?" she asked, trying to act nonchalant.

"Nothing that can't wait until tomorrow," Akane said, putting a hand on her shoulder. "We should get you to bed before you fall over like Ranma did."

"Can I just crawl in with Ranma?" Nabiki asked, quirking an eyebrow at her. She leaned in and added in a whisper. "I'll share."

"Nabiki!" Akane hissed, blushing and glancing toward the other girls nervously.

"I think it's best if you all sleep in your own beds tonight," Kasumi said gently. "You've worn out poor Ranma quite a bit over the last few nights - and worn out Father as well." She sighed. "I wonder how expensive soundproofing would be?"

Both Nabiki and Akane stared at the floor, beet red while the other girls all gaped at them.

"I want to judge," Yuka said finally. "I really, really do… But after thinking about the available selection of boys at school and in the surrounding area…"

"... And the fact you haven't had a date in two years?" Sayuri added sweetly.

"... And that, thank you, Sayuri…" Yuka said through clenched teeth, "... I'm starting to think you may have made the only rational choice. Which is to share the one non-perverted guy in all of Furinkan. Who also happens to be a girl." Yuka sighed and pillowed her cheek on her fist. "Being a totally straight girl with standards isn't easy."

Rin timidly raised her hand. "I haven't had a date either… if that makes you feel any better."

"You hush, you have the duck!"

"N-no I don't! I-it's not like that!"

"You bought yourself a duck plushie two days ago! It has glasses! You call it M-chan!"

"Eeeeeeeeee! You promised you wouldn't tell about that!"
Ranma woke up with a mild headache to the smells of breakfast being prepared. She rolled over and hesitated for a moment, not having encountered the usual impediment of another body next to her own. Carefully she opened one eye.

I'm… downstairs? She blinked and sat up slowly. She was on a futon that had been rolled out in the living room. "Uh… hello?"

"Oh, you're awake!" Kasumi poked her head into the room. "Just give me a minute, Ranma, I've got to get the soup simmering and I'll be right out. Don't go anywhere!"

"Umm… okay?" Ranma said, rubbing the back of her head. She realized her hair had come out of its braid again. Ugh, don't feel like dealing with it long today, but it's getting to be a pain to braid. Maybe I should go back to a ponytail, since that stupid dragon-whisker curse is gone? Doesn't quite feel like 'me' that way though.

Kasumi stepped into the living room, walked over and knelt next to the futon. "I'm sorry for putting you down here, Ranma, but you seemed exhausted and… as much as my sisters love you, I worry that they might forget you're just one person and that you need your rest too. I had to shoo them back upstairs half the night!" She smiled. "How's your head?"

"Not bad," Ranma said, rubbing her forehead. "Ugh, what happened?"

Kasumi looked concerned a moment. "You don't remember?"

"It's a little fuzzy," Ranma rubbed her eyes.

"Ranma, are you a boy or a girl?"

"What sorta silly question is that, Kasumi?" Ranma said. She gestured at herself. "I'm a girl, obviously."

Kasumi's eyes widened. "... Oh my…"

"An' if you want that to change, you gotta wait until Monday sometime, 'cuz the soap is still good until then." She stretched, then noticed Kasumi's agape expression. "... What?"

"It's just… well, there was that one time you hit your head…" Kasumi fidgeted. "... I'm sorry, Ranma, I just wanted to be sure!"

"Oh… Oh! Right, that!" Ranma winced as she remembered the incident. It wasn't so much because she'd believed she was a girl anymore, but more a matter of just how cringe-worthy a girl she had been. She blinked, suddenly realizing that she was able to remember the details of that event - from both sides. "No, no, nothing like that. If there's something wrong in my head, the volleyball didn't do it. I just can't remember why I froze up. It felt like my sixth sense went nutso or something."

"Well, that's a relief," Kasumi said. Then after a pause, she reached out and put a hand on Ranma's shoulder. "Ranma… forgive me, but… are you a boy or a girl? I don't mean your current form."

Ranma looked into Kasumi's calm, brown eyes for a time, then looked down to contemplate her own hands. "I woulda freaked out if you had asked me that even a week ago," Ranma said. "Two weeks ago I'd have shouted the answer 'I'm a man!' from the highest rooftop." With a heavy sigh her voice dropped to a near whisper. "Now? It… depends on the day. It depends on the company."

"No, no, nothing like that. If there's something wrong in my head, the volleyball didn't do it. I just can't remember why I froze up. It felt like my sixth sense went nutso or something."
It depends." She chewed on her lower lip. "When I'm centered, it feels like I'm somewhere in-between." Pulling her knees up to her chest, she draped her arms over them. "I'm sorry... I know that isn't an essay question. The first thing I did this morning was obsess about hair, so... I guess I'm on the girl side right now?" She offered a weak smile.

Kasumi clucked her tongue and hugged the redhead. "Ranma, we already talked about this. I don't honestly believe anyone who really cares about you is overly concerned about the matter."

"Well, except for my parents," Ranma said, a little glumly.

Kasumi pointedly did not amend her statement. "You said you were worried about your hair?"

Ranma nodded and reached back to pull a handful over her shoulder. "Kinda felt like having it in a braid again, but it's such a pain to do up."

"It's not that bad if you have help," Kasumi said brightly. "Here, turn your head and I'll do it. It is good to see you taking better care of your hair. I know it's more difficult, but it really is better to let it out of the pigtail now and then."

"Yeah, well, Kodachi'll be cross if I let it get bad like it was before," Ranma said, leaning forward a bit to allow Kasumi to draw her hair back.

"You've made friends with Kodachi now too?" Kasumi asked, raising an eyebrow.

"Yeah. As a girl, if you can believe that. She still thinks me'n the curse are two separate people," Ranma said, closing her eyes.

"You... mean you and your male side," Kasumi corrected carefully. "You're currently in your cursed form."

"... Hmmm? Oh, yeah... What did I say?" Ranma frowned, then shrugged it off as unimportant. "Anyway, 'cuz she thinks I'm Ranma's sister she's gotten all buddy-buddy... 'cept, I think she was lonely 'cuz she hasn't really been using it to get an advantage in the omiai like she said she was planning to. She's... well, she's still kinda out there, but... She's been serious about trying to take care of me. Girl-me, I mean."

"That's good," Kasumi said. "I imagine a family like hers leaves a mark. I remember her brother used to be quite different in the past, when he and Nabiki were still friends in Middle School."

"'Tachi', right?" Ranma asked. "Actually... He's kinda back. Turns out their Dad was messing with his medication. He's a lot more like how Nabiki described him in Middle School now."

"Oh? Well then... if I remember correctly, he was quite a little charmer at that age. Perhaps you should be careful?" Kasumi teased playfully as she divided Ranma's hair into strands and began to weave them.

Rather than get offended or indignant, Ranma just chuckled. For some reason, the idea didn't seem so threatening anymore. "I can actually see that. But he knows I'm taken and he seems kinda mortified about how he's been behaving. I dunno how long it'll last, but..."

"He knows about you and Nabiki?" Kasumi asked, sounding startled.

"Oh, no, I... uh..." Ranma blushed as she realized that she hadn't kept Kasumi in the loop about a number of things. She swallowed nervously. "Actually... he thinks me'n Ryouga are engaged."
Kasumi paused in her braiding for a beat, then continued. "... I see. Should I start setting a place at dinner for him, then?"

"No, no…!" Ranma said quickly, fidgeting in embarrassment. "It was ploy that got outta hand. I told Kuno that I was engaged to Ryouta to get him off my back, then Ryouta told the hospital I was his fiancee so I could bail him out, and then that got back to the people at school…" she sighed. "It kind of snowballed. It hasn't gotten back to his Mom yet, thankfully…"

"You've met Ryouta's parents?" Kasumi asked, surprised. "I thought he lived alone?"

"He did. It's complicated. His Mom has the whole sense of direction problem too. Dr. Tofu thinks it might actually be a legitimate curse, something passed down through his family. She only just made it back to town, an' now we gotta find a cure for the curse, because his Dad died recently and…" Ranma trailed off, realizing she was getting into Link territory. "... Umm, it's complicated, but her curse is getting worse, and if she gets lost again, it'll probably be the last time he ever sees her, unless we find a cure."

"Oh my… and this is what you have been doing with him every weekend?"

"Yeah!" Ranma said. "We met this Neurologist named Dr. Hirano who figured out some stuff about his problems, and got him in touch with Dr Tofu, and between 'em they figured out most of how the thing works."

"Nabiki said it involved using a lot of ki?" Kasumi asked uncertainly.

"Yeah… Ryouta's got a mess of bad ki in his noggin that causes the problem. We've just been trying to find ways to flush it outta him." She glanced at her hand, feeling the palm itch. 'Cept instead we keep making the Link between use stronger and having freaking THERAPY SESSIONS. An' even dragged Nabiki into the last one. I wonder… I wonder if what they were talking about about the Neko-ken is true? Could the Link be a way to cure that? Would it be worth taking the risk, even?"

"You got quiet," Kasumi said, startling Ranma out of her reverie.

"Oh, uh… Sorry," Ranma said sheepishly. "Just thinking about the Neko-ken. My own mess of badness in my head. Wondering if there might be a way to fix that, too."

"Emotional trauma and curses are usually two separate things," Kasumi said gently. "But… I suppose it's hard to say." She finished up the braid and wrapped the end with a red ribbon and tied it off neatly. "There… that's not quite how you usually wear yours, but your hair has gotten longer and fuller and this is fairly unisex."

Ranma reached back and felt her braid. It was somewhat thicker than she was used to, tapering more gradually from the back of her head rather than the nape of her neck. It didn't pull nearly as tightly, but it felt secure. "I think this'll do just fine."

Kasumi handed her a mirror. "I thought you might appreciate a more mature look this time."

Ranma examined herself in the mirror. It was definitely less of a pigtail and more of a braid. And Kasumi was right - she could easily imagine it looking good on her male side as well - almost like something you'd see on a wandering samurai in some manga.

_Hold on._

"Wasn't there a manga about a samurai with red hair in a style like this?" Ranma said, giving her a "Rurouni Kenshin?" Kasumi asked. "Oh no, his was in a ponytail."

"O-oh…" Ranma deflated a little.

"This is more Duo Maxwell." She winked. "I preferred mecha and spaceships to samurai growing up."

Ranma giggled. "I guess the samurai stuff was a little too close to home, huh?"

There were footsteps out in the hall they both turned to see Nabiki stumble blearily into the living room.

"Nabiki? Why are you up so early? It's Sunday," Kasumi said, cocking her head curiously.

"Nnnf… Boyfriend," she muttered. She cracked one eye open, then closed it. "... Girlfriend," she corrected. "Whatever. Make tongue flappy noises… language… thingie…"

"Oh, you want to talk with Ranma?" Kasumi nodded and stood, brushing off her skirt. "All right. Shall I make you some coffee?"

"Mnnn… Black stuff…" Nabiki nodded. She stumped her zombie-like way over to Ranma, who was still sitting on her futon, grabbed her by the back of her shirt and tried to drag her into the back yard.

"H-hey! Okay, okay, I'm coming!" Ranma got up, though Nabiki didn't stop trying to drag her. Ranma hastily adjusted her tank top and boxers; She had picked up a little feminine modesty, despite her best efforts.

"You okay, Nabs?" Ranma asked, peering at her.

"Mornings… suck," Nabiki mumbled, managing some level of coherency. "Gotta tell you sum'n tho."

"What?" Ranma cocked her head.

By way of a reply, Nabiki reached out and grabbed her hand.

Ranma sucked in a breath as she felt the Link flare to life. She snatched up Nabiki's hand in both of hers and held it as she stared at her. "You still have it!?"

The ghost of one of Nabiki's signature smirks crossed her face and she nodded. "Yup. Found out last night. Came home to tell you, but you were out. Got up early instead." She yawned and started to walk back towards the house, towing Ranma along by the hand.

"Wha…? Wait, where are we going now?" Ranma asked, confused.

"Back t'bed. It's Sunday."

"Umm… but I'm not tired, why'm I…?"

"Because cuddles," Nabiki growled in a tone that told Ranma she should probably just shut up and accept her fate for the next little while.
Poor Ryouga.

* Spoiler*? It kinda gets worse from here for him.
Adventures in Pig Training

(Three years ago)

Ryouga hadn't been having a good day at school.

School had never been fun for him. It was hard to get into it when three times out of five he couldn't even make it in time for the first class and would spend the first half of the day out in the hall holding up buckets of water. He didn't mind that so much; after a while he'd realized it was good strength training and he didn't even notice the weight of them anymore - even if he held them up all morning.

But it was boring and it was frustrating when he missed half the classes and had to sit there without knowing what was going on. The teachers had him written off as a delinquent and the rest of the his classmates avoided him and whispered things behind his back. About the only good thing about school had been getting a regular hot lunch but even that had been messed up now that this new kid had arrived and started beating him to the curry bread.

Now? Now he had to share the hallway with that same bread-stealing jerk! He couldn't even have a punishment to himself.

"The world hates my guts…" Ryouga muttered. Getting afternoon detention was bad because it meant he might not make it home before nightfall.

"Nah… Pretty sure the teacher ain't a fan, though," the boy standing next to him said.

Ryouga ground his teeth and didn't look in his direction. "This is all your fault, you know," he growled. "If you hadn't stolen my bread…!"

"Yeah, you almost got it that time!" the boy grinned at him. "You're a lot stronger than you look! Still a bit slow, though. But you're way better than any of the other guys around here." He held out his hand. "Hi! I'm Ranma. What's your name?"

Ryouga stared at the boy incredulously for a moment. He seemed totally oblivious to the fact that Ryouga didn't like him. His uniform jacket was done up improperly and the collar was open. His dark hair was slick and had an odd sheen to it - almost greasy-looking - and didn't look like it had been washed recently. His face was clean enough but there was grime just below his neck that indicated washing his face was probably the extent of Ranma's daily cleansings and even that was obviously rushed and haphazard. Ryouga could see a couple of spots of what he assumed were grime on his cheekbones. His eyes were a bright, crystal blue and had an odd, guileless sort of sparkle to them.

"My name is for my friends," Ryouga growled and looked away.

"Okay! Then let's be friends!" Ranma said brightly. "You're the only guy here who's any fun to spar with anyway."

"I wasn't sparring," Ryouga snarled at him. "I was trying to get lunch."

"Yeah! That was crazy, right?" Ranma said. "Everybody was just going nuts. Was that just today, or is it always like that?"

Ryouga gaped at the boy. How was he not getting this? He sighed and decided that the annoying jerk just wasn't going to stop. "They don't have enough for everyone. Budget cuts," he muttered at last.

"Oh," Ranma said. He put down his pail of water and dug into his pocket, pulling out a cellophane wrapped melonpan. "Here, I wouldn't feel right if you went hungry."

Ryouga stared at it. "You took the bread then didn't eat it?!" He felt his ire rising at the thought of the wastefulness, even as his stomach growled in response.

"Yeah, I was gonna save it for dinner, in case there wasn't anything else," Ranma said, again oblivious to the dangerous look in Ryouga's eyes. "You want it?"

"What do you mean 'in case there wasn't anything else'?" Ryouga asked, his ire fading.

"Pops is pretty good about scrounging up stuff, but school is expensive and sometimes there ain't nothin' t'eat when I get home," Ranma replied. "If I'm only gonna get one meal a day it's easier to sleep if I have it before bed, y'know?"

Ryouga was silent a moment. His parents often weren't home when he was, owing to the family curse, but there was always something to eat in the house, even if it was just instant ramen and crackers. His parents kept the house well-stocked with non-perishables just in case. Ryouga felt a small pang of guilt for the times he had complained about that. "Keep it," he said finally.

"Really? Thanks!" Ranma tucked it away.

"Ryouga," Ryouga grunted gruffly.

"What?"

"My name. Ryouga Hibiki," Ryouga clarified. "But we are not friends."

000

(Present Day)

Ryouga slowly opened his eyes. The familiar tiles of the ceiling of his room greeted him, the detailing and slight imperfections instantly familiar to him. For a moment he mused about how it was nice to have a ceiling be so familiar, rather than the inside of an old battered tent.

He sat up and rubbed his eyes. He had been dreaming about... something, but it had slipped away as soon as he opened his eyes. It didn't feel all that important, though. At the very least there wasn't the same guilt associated with some of his more usual recent dreams.

There was a quiet knock at his door.

"Ryouga? Are you awake?" Akari's voice was tentative... hesitant.

"Akari?" Ryouga felt a lurch in his chest at the memory of the previous night. Most of the evening had been spent during an awkward dinner as he and Akari answered his mother's questions but they never actually got a chance to talk about things between them. "Yeah, I'm up..."

Akari opened the door and peeked in. She blushed, seeing he didn't have a shirt on and slapped a hand over her eyes. "I'm sorry! I just..." embarrassed, she shifted her pinkie, to peek at him from behind her hand. "... May I come in?"

"Sure..." Ryouga replied. Under other circumstances he'd probably have been over the moon to have Akari in his room but things had happened to ground him lately, especially with respect to what she likely wanted to discuss. Mostly he just felt uncomfortable and anxious about what was going to happen next.

Akari stepped in and closed the door behind her, still with her hand over her eyes. She walked in, pulled up a chair next to his bed and sat down.

Ryouga chuckled in spite of himself. "Akari, you can uncover your eyes. You've seen me without a shirt before."

"I know, but… that was always due to the curse or… some other situation where it couldn't be helped," she replied, though she did timidly lower her hand. Her eyes went wide when she got a look at his back and she bolted out of her chair and moved immediately to the side of the bed. "Ryouga! What happened to your back!??"

Ryouga winced. "Right… that… sorry, forgot to mention that. There was… ah… an explosion. They had to pick a lot of rock fragments outta my back at the hospital. Seems to be healing okay, though."

Akari continued to stare. Her lip quivered a bit and she sat back down in the chair. "I'm… sorry…"

"You're sorry?" Ryouga asked, stunned. "Akari…"

"Please let me finish, Ryouga," she cut him off softly. "I've been rehearsing what I wanted to say to you when I found you again, ever since what happened in Ryugenzawa…"

000

Akari stumbled on the path, limping as fast as she could. Blood was running down her left leg and her arms were wrapped desperately around an unconscious black piglet. The forest behind them shook with a roar.

"Please leave us alone! Please!" she cried out as she stumbled again. "Somebody help us!"

Several smaller trees were forced apart as a large reptilian creature pushed its way through the foliage behind them. It looked like one of the lizards that people kept as pets - specifically a bearded dragon - but it was much, much larger, its stature emphasizing the 'dragon' part of that name as it loomed over them.

Akari tripped and fell to the ground. She rolled onto her back to face the monster, shivering in fear and cradling the piglet protectively. "I won't let you hurt him!" she screamed at the monster.

The bearded dragon, however, seemed more than content to take them both. It opened its mouth wide and lunged forward. Akari threw up her free arm and screamed as darkness descended.

Then cleared.

She blinked, shielding her eyes as the bulk that had been blocking the light was suddenly pushed aside. There were sounds of a battle - blows landing and roars of pain. She squinted and could just make out the form of the great dragon as it scuttled rapidly away, looking somewhat ragged.

"What are you doing here? Don't you know it isn't safe?" a gruff voice demanded.

Akari turned her head to see the silhouette of someone wearing a long overcoat.
"H-help..." she managed to gasp before she passed out.

"It's good you brought her here, Shin m'boy. That gash on her leg could have been nasty if not treated properly."

"Well, it's not like I was just going to leave them out there. And... who are you again?"

"I'm your Grandfather, you dolt!"

Akari could hear voices as she gradually returned to consciousness. She opened her eyes and looked around. She was on a cot in a largish room - the space that she occupied set apart from the rest by a white sheet hung to make a divider of sorts. She could see the silhouettes of two men sitting on the far side of it.

"H-hello?" she said timidly.

There was a scrabbling sound from the other side of the sheet, and it was pushed aside to reveal an old man - balding but with a long grey beard - and a young man with brown hair and a white headband.

"Oh, you're awake young miss!" the old man said. "You had us quite worried there for a while!"

"What were you doing this deep in the forest? Didn't you see all the traps?" the boy demanded.

"Shinnosuke, mind your manners!" the old man said gruffly. "Please forgive my boy Shin. He is unused to people. We've lived alone in this forest all his life."

"Mostly because other people have enough sense to stay out!" Shinnosuke said, folding his arms.

"Megaton punch!" The old man drove his fist into Shinnosuke's face, silencing him. "Though Shin does have a point, Miss. How did you wander so deep into the forest?"

Akari's eyes flicked from one back to the other as she tried to process what had happened. Suddenly, a more urgent concern came to mind. "Ryouga...!" She started looking around the bedroll she had been lying on. "Ryouga? Ryouga!" She became more frantic as she realized the small black piglet wasn't there. She turned back to them. "Please, there was a small black piglet with me! Please tell me you found him!"

"Oh, yes, yes, of course. Your pet piglet is fine. I just put him somewhere quiet to rest," the old man reassured her. He stood carefully. "I used to work as a keeper at a petting zoo in these parts, so luckily I still remembered some basic animal first aid. The poor thing was quite battered, but he should be fine with some rest." He lead her over to a cage enclosure in the corner of the room where the piglet lay on a folded blanket. For a moment she felt a surge of horror as she feared the worst, but then she saw that his sides were rising and falling steadily. She knelt and opened the cage, reaching in and gently examining him, putting aside her own needs for the moment and drawing on her experience as a pig breeder. Nothing seemed broken or dislocated, but she knew he would do much better in human form.

"You seem to have some skill with this yourself, miss...?"

"Akari," she said, laying Ryouga back on the blanket. "I breed sumo pigs. It's my family's profession. I've been treating injured pigs since I could walk." She turned to him. "Could I ask for some hot water and a blanket, please?"
"Pardon me?"

"I'll explain once I have them. They're for Ryouga."

He quirked an eyebrow, but motioned to Shinnosuke to fetch the requested items. After a minute the young man came back with a kettle and a folded blanket.

Akari carefully took the piglet from the cage and put him on the floor, laying the blanket over him carefully, leaving his head exposed. Then she poured the hot water on his head.

The change was immediate and dramatic; the tiny piglet suddenly replaced with the form of a young man. Ryoga's eyes snapped open and he gasped as the change thrust him back to consciousness. "Akari…!"

Akari put a calming hand on his shoulder. "I'm here. I'm here, Ryouga," she said, turning his head so he could look at her.

He sighed in relief, sat up slowly and carefully drew the blanket around himself. He reached out for her, putting a hand on her shoulder. "Are you okay?! I… I don't remember much of what happened after we fell off that cliff…"

Akari smiled and took his hand, holding it to her cheek. She sniffled as the tears she had been holding back started to flow. "You… you took the brunt of the landing… we fell in the river. You almost drowned…! We were chased by a… a monster, and… and…"

He pulled her into a hug, closing his eyes tight as he held her. "I'm sorry…! God, I'm so sorry, Akari!"

"Well… now that is a new one. I've never seen that trick before," the old man said, then leaned closer. "But you boy… you look familiar… Wait, I remember you! You were one of the three who were here last year, who helped us subdue the Orochi and save Shin's life!"

"What are you talking about, Grandpa?" Shin asked, crossing his arms and giving Ryouga a skeptical look. "I've never seen this guy before! And I think I'd remember someone saving my life!"

The old man sighed. "As you can see, Shin's memory hasn't improved any since the last time you were here."

Akari turned her head a bit, though she stayed close to Ryouga. "You've met?"

"Yeah… I ended up here a while ago, while I was looking for Akane," Ryouga said.

"Akane? Akane Tendo?!" Shin leaned forward. "You know her? Where is she? Is she okay?!"

"Akane Shin remembers," the old man grumbled. "Shin! We've been over this! Akane went home! To Tokyo! She's fine!"

"He's right. She's at home at the Tendo Dojo in Nerima," Ryoga said. "I… haven't seen her since the wedding…"

"Wedding?!" Shin yelped, going white. "N-no…"

Ryouga sighed. "I guess I should get you up to speed…"
Akari stepped out of the small house holding two cups full of hot tea in her hands. She walked over to the bench where Ryouga was sitting.

He had changed into one of Shinnosuke's spare outfits, blue shirt and dark pants with a darker blue zookeeper's overcoat overtop. He was staring out into the forest with one of those distant stares he sometimes got.

"Here. I made this with something Shinnosuke called the 'Water of Life'. He said it would help us recover faster," Akari said, slipping onto the bench next to him and handing him a cup.

"Akari, you shouldn't be walking around on your leg…" Ryouga said, but she put a finger to his lips.

"I'm fine. Really! It was just a scratch. Plus walking around keeps it from getting stiff." She took a sip of her tea. "You look good in blue."

"No I don't," Ryouga said, blushing slightly.

"You do!" She punched his shoulder lightly. He was still quiet though, which worried her. "Ryouga…?"

"I… need to go away for a while, Akari…" he said softly.

"Ryouga, no! We talked about this!" Akari protested, grabbing his arm.

He closed his eyes tightly. "I've already made up my mind!" he said sharply. "I can't… I can't keep you safe with both curses. I have to cure one or the other, or… or…"

"No…" She shook her head in denial and grabbed his sleeve. "No, Ryouga! I don't care about your directional problems! I like your Jusenkyo curse! This was my fault! I was the one who wasn't paying attention…!"

"Akari, if something had happened to you…!" He shook his head. "That's why your Grandfather said only someone who could defeat Katsunishiki could be with you - so you'd be kept safe!"

"And you beat Katsunishiki! Easily! You're the strongest, most noble, most pig-like man I've ever met!" Akari gushed, then covered her mouth. "I'm sorry, I forgot you don't like the pig comparisons…"

Ryouga chuckled then sighed heavily. "But what good is it if I can't protect you when it counts? If I'm the one who put you in danger in the first place?"

"I'll… I'll get stronger so you don't have to worry!" Akari said, clenching her fist. "I'll train with Katsunishiki every day, and… and…"

Ryouga put a hand over her fist. "Akari…" He shook his head. "You aren't a martial artist, and you shouldn't force yourself to be something you're not. This is something I need to fix."

"Then let me help you!" she said. "Fix it here. With me."

Ryouga looked down, then nodded subtly. "All right. I'll try."

000

Akari's grandfather met them at a nearby parking lot. He had brought a pickup truck with Katsunishiki in the back and, before the truck even came to a stop, the giant sumo pig leapt from the back of the truck and began charging towards them.

Akari knew he was just rushing to see her, his protective instincts kicking in from being separated too long - but, in hindsight, she realized it probably looked like an attack to a bystander.

Ryouga knew him well enough to not react. But Shinnosuke, long trained to subdue the giant animals of Ryugenzawa, reacted before Akari could warn him off.

The boy darted forward, moving with impressive speed, his pushbroom gripped in both hands. Akari called out, but it was too late. Seeing the threat, Katsunishiki swiped at him with one meaty foreleg in a strike that was liable to take his head off.

Shin ducked under the strike with surprising dexterity, then leapt upwards in a somersault over the giant sumo pig, letting Katsunishiki's momentum carry him forward under him while he spun and twisted in mid-air, putting his entire body mass into a precision strike across the back of the sumo pig's skull with the head of the push broom.

Katsunishiki grunted, stumbled forward and crashed to the ground, unconscious, as Shin landed lightly behind him, shouldering his broom.

"Weird. I don't remember that boar from the forest," he said, frowning. Apparently Shin's memory of each of the giant animals for which he and his grandfather were stewards was near-perfect - unlike just about everything else.

"Katsunishiki!" Akari cried, running forward to to her favored pet and gathering his huge head into her arms.

The giant sumo pig grunted, his eyes unfocused. There was a nasty bump on the back of his head, but a quick check told her nothing was broken, and no serious damage appeared to have been done. He had just been stunned.

"Is he alright?" Ryouga asked, crouching next to her.

She nodded and sighed in relief, stroking Katsunishiki's forehead. "Silly boy was just trying to protect me."

"Oh, he was your giant animal." Shinnosuke walked up, rubbing the back of his head and looking sheepish. "I'm really sorry! I tried not to hurt him, just stun him. Is he okay?"

Akari nodded and smiled reassuringly at him. "It's okay. Katsunishiki is a sumo pig. He's taken worse hits and gotten back up. That was still very impressive how you defeated him so quickly, though!"

"Yes. Yes it was," a voice familiar to Akari said. Her grandfather got out of the truck and walked towards them, rubbing his chin. "Are you the boy who saved my daughter's life?"

Akari felt more than saw Ryouga wince next to her and curl into himself a little more. She put an arm on his shoulder sympathetically.

"That's right! My boy Shin is quite the fighter when it comes to the local oversized wildlife!" Shin's grandfather said boisterously. "Your daughter is very lucky he found her and her boyfriend when he did. This is a dangerous region to be in."

Akari's grandfather's eyes fixed Ryouga with a harsh glare. "Yes. I imagine it is." His eyes narrowed, then he looked away, smiling in a more friendly manner as he turned to regard Shin. "It seems I have much to thank you for! And… It appears you have proven your worthiness by defeating Katsunishiki."

Akari's eyes widened. "Grandfather!"

He raised an eyebrow at her. "What? It's true. I'm merely pointing out a fact, Akari. There is no need for you to get riled up. You were so concerned not long ago that you would never find any young man who could defeat Katsunishiki, and now we have stumbled across two!"

Akari glared at him. "Grandfather, I've already made my choice about that! Ryouga is who I wish to be with. You know that!"

His gaze fixed on Ryouga again, who couldn't meet his eyes. "Yes… Of course. Still… I think that the courage and hospitality that Shin and his grandfather have shown deserve something in return!" He turned to Shin's grandfather. "Would you and your grandson be willing to come be our guests for dinner?"

"Hmmm…" He stroked his beard. "It has been quite a while since Shin and I have had a meal we didn't cook ourselves. And it would be good for Shin to socialize and get out of the dark forest. Yes… yes, we would be happy to accept such a generous offer." 000

On the ride back to the farm, Akari's grandfather drove, with Shin's grandfather sitting next to him in the cab. The two old men quickly struck up a lively conversation, finding that they apparently had much in common. Akari, Ryouga and Shin rode in the back with Katsunishiki. Shin was a bit wary of being in a small space with the huge pig, but once Akari had introduced him formally to the sumo pig, the giant accepted him good-naturedly.

"Pigs are really quite friendly and loyal," Akari said, settling on her favorite topic to fill the time as they bounced down the road in the old pickup.

"I've actually never met a friendly pig," Shin admitted, scratching Katsunishiki behind the ears. The large sumo pig grunted and closed his eyes, enjoying the attention. "My only experiences have been with the boars in the forest. The Water of Life tends to make all the animals more aggressive and they were wild boars to begin with. I didn't think pigs could get this big outside of our forest, though."

"Katsunishiki is special," Akari said, beaming. "He's from a long line of sumo pigs. He's got excellent genes; all of the best qualities of pigs. He's never been defeated in the ring!"

"And he listens to your commands?" Shin asked, focusing on her. "How do you get such a big animal to listen to you?"

She smiled. "A lot of love and patience. Plus my family has been doing it for generations. We have a lot of techniques that we use to tame and train pigs that we start with right from birth."

"That would actually be useful in the forest - if we could tame some of the animals there and train them to help us out." Shin rubbed his chin. "Do you think you could show me when we get to your farm?"

"Sure!" Akari beamed, happy to have someone see the value in her family's profession and knowledge. She noticed that Ryouga was quiet, however, sitting in the corner of the truck bed and not saying anything. "... Perhaps Ryouga could show you? He's spent a lot of time on the farm, and I've shown him a lot."
Ryouga shook his head. "I'm… actually not that good with the pigs," he said. "I just spar with Katsunishiki sometimes."

"And that's been a huge help!" Akari insisted. "You've done more for his training than I ever could have!"

Ryouga glanced at Shin. "Didn't help much."

Akari winced. Don't tell me he blames himself for that too?

"I'm used to fighting big animals," Shin said, oblivious. "It's all about using their momentum against them. I could show him a few things to watch out for against smaller, faster opponents if you like?"

Akari sighed in defeat, watching as Ryouga closed himself off from her even further. "That… would be much appreciated, Shin."

000

Akari's grandfather and Shin's grandfather continued to be in good spirits that evening, chatting amicably over dinner about animal husbandry, then breaking out the sake. Akari could see her grandfather was happy to meet someone his own age who shared a lot of the same interests. Shin also seemed fascinated by the farm and the idea of 'friendly' animals - especially of training them. As promised, Akari showed him several of the techniques she used, and he watched, fascinated, pausing frequently to take detailed notes.

"That's amazing!" he exclaimed as Akari led several of the smaller show pigs through some of their acrobatic routines. "I never knew pigs could be so clever!"

"They're very smart animals," Akari replied, again enjoying being able to go on about her favorite subject. "They're very social and they're not dirty like people think. It's just the opposite! They tend to wallow in mud as a way to keep cool and to keep their skin from being sunburned, which I think is actually quite clever of them, don't you?"

Shin nodded and closed his notebook. "I wonder if maybe I can get some of the boar piglets young enough that I might be able to train them to help me keep the other animals corralled? Grandpa hasn't been able to help as much the last few years and my traps aren't working as well as I might have hoped."

"It's certainly worth a try!" Akari smiled. "We have a few manuals on pig rearing that I can loan you."

"I'd really appreciate that, Ms. Akari, thank you!" he said brightly.

Such a difference from our first encounters with him! I guess he's just gotten used to being gruff because he constantly has to shoo away unwise people from the forest? She cocked her head as she realized something else. "You remembered my name!"

"Yeah, um… about that…" Sheepishly he rolled back his sleeve to display his arm, where he had written her name several times in marker.

She giggled in spite of herself which just made him blush and look more bashful.

"Umm… y-you're a very good cook, Ms. Akari." he added. "Thank you again for dinner. Your cooking reminds me of someone else's… kind of."
"Oh! You're quite welcome, Shin!" Akari said. "Ryouga has always raved about my cooking, but it's just regular farm fare."

"Ryouga? Who's that?" Shin blinked, confused.

"Ryouga? My boyfriend?" Akari said gently. By now she was well aware of the boy's pervasive memory problems.

"You have a boyfriend?" Shin looked stricken. "O-oh… I… I didn't know." He turned quickly. "I'll… I'll go see how Grandpa is getting on. Sorry to be a bother!" He quickly ran back towards the house.

"Shin, wait!" She called out to him but he had already almost reached the house. She sighed and glanced around only to realize that Ryouga was nowhere to be seen. She felt the cold grip of dread in her heart, fearing that he had wandered off and gotten lost again - but then she heard sounds from behind the shed - the hollow resonance of an axe striking wood. She walked over and peered around the corner of the small building.

Ryouga was there chopping logs with his bare hands - striking them with a knife edged chop that split them cleanly. He had accumulated quite a pile of ready firewood.

"Ryouga, there you are!" she said happily. "What are you doing over here? We have enough wood chopped for a few days yet."

"I needed to do something useful for a bit," Ryouga said quietly, placing another log and expertly splitting it with a sharp, controlled strike. "It helps me think."

"Would you like a drink? You've been working hard all this time…" She fidgeted, uncertain what to say. She felt oddly guilty, having spent so much time with Shin, oblivious to what Ryouga was doing.

He gave her a wan smile. "Nah, I'm okay. I think I might turn in early, though." He stood and started walking in what she presumed was supposed to be the direction of the farmhouse… but was the exact opposite way.

"Ryouga…" she said timidly, then pointed in the correct direction. "… That way?"

Usually it was something Ryouga laughed off or made some lame, silly excuse about. This time, however, he just closed his eyes as a pained expression crossed his face. He turned in the right direction. "Of course… thanks Akari."

She watched him go, feeling that awful ache growing in her heart and wondered what else she could do to make things better.

000

Akari had never been one to have trouble sleeping, but that night was an exception. If it hadn't been, she might never have overheard the conversation.

"Ryouga, you must understand that I have to think of my granddaughter's welfare and her future. You are an admirable young man, but…"

Akari crept to her door at the mention of Ryouga's name and peered through the crack as she listened. Ryouga and her grandfather were down the hall, in the small kitchen.
"I understand," Ryouga said. There were rustling sounds. "You want to be sure who she's with can protect her."

"I have concerns about your ability to do that, yes. You are undoubtedly strong but your curse and your inability to find your way are... crucial weaknesses. Neither of which are your fault, of course! But... an excuse will not protect my granddaughter."

"I agree totally with you. That's why I'm packing. I'm going to find a cure... for one or the other at the very least."

Akari gasped softly, covering her mouth. No! He PROMISED!

"Good. Good, that is what I hoped you'd say. And I hope you find it quickly and return to make my Akari happy. But... understand that I am an old man, and I must ensure my Akari is taken care of before I go."

"... of course."

"I have already discussed the matter with Shinnosuke's grandfather. He will stay with us for the time being to help with the farm and to learn animal husbandry from Akari for use in the forest. If you return before his training is complete, then that is where the matter will end. But... should you not have found your solution by then... Shin's grandfather and I will... make arrangements."

Ryouga's voice sounded dead; defeated. "They get along well. I'm... sure he would make her happy."

"She would be happier with YOU, son. Take this as a motivator to complete your quest quickly - not as disapproval?"

"I swear to you I'll come back a whole man for your granddaughter's sake... or not come back at all," Ryouga replied grimly.

000

"So you overheard that..." Ryouga sighed heavily.

"Why didn't you talk to me first, Ryouga?" Akari asked. "I know it's a difficult thing for you to talk about, but... I can help!" She clasped his hand, leaning in to give him an earnest, tearful look.

He stared at her hands holding his, trying to sort out what he was feeling from the complex jumble. He curled his fingers around her hand and closed his eyes. "I... don't know if you can, Akari. I know you want to, but... People... smart people... smarter than me... have spent their whole lives trying to solve the problems I've had and failed. Curses aren't easy things."

"Then I'll spend my life with you looking for a solution," she said fiercely.

"And give up pig training?" He opened his eyes, giving her a skeptical look. "Give up the farm and leave your grandfather behind for a life of aimless wandering and constant danger?"

"Yes! Absolutely!" Akari said firmly, her eyes flashing.

Ryouga sighed. "Akari... you tried this before, don't you remember? When you thought I hated pigs? You tried to train yourself to hate them and you couldn't do it. The pigs, the farm... they're your whole life because you love them."
"I love you," she said firmly.

Ryouga felt a lump in his throat. "How could I possibly say the same thing if I made you give up the life you love for a life I hate? Akari, I almost got you killed…"

"You made a mistake. We made a mistake," Akari said firmly. "We learn from it and move on. That's what a pig does. A pig doesn't dwell on the past. A pig just does better next time. I'll be more careful to always take the lead when we go for walks, remember that I have to take responsibility for navigating. And keep a thermos with me just in case. That's all."

Ryouga couldn't meet her gaze anymore. "And when I get lost going out to chop wood, and disappear for six months?"

"We'll get you a cell phone. I'll get my driver's license, and if you get lost I'll come and pick you up," she said. "It's not as bad as you or grandfather make out to be! Just… just come home!"

"Your grandfather said…"

"Grandfather will change his mind if I have to deny him dinner for a week!" Akari said gruffly, puffing her cheeks out.

"I can't," Ryouga said, then quickly held up a hand to forestall her protests. "Not for me. For my Mom." He covered her hands with his free one. "My 'getting lost'? It's a curse. An actual curse. Maybe from a demon, sometime long ago. It's meant to make us gradually unable to find the things we love or need - until we die, afraid and alone. It gets worse over time."

Akari's eyes widened. "That's horrible…" she breathed.

"My family has survived because - once in our lives - we can choose a person to be an Anchor for us - someone we can always find our way back to. I wanted you to be my Anchor, but I… wasted my chance making Ranma my Anchor back in Middle School so I could have a stupid fight over bread." He blushed as he realized that it sounded even stupider out loud than it did in his head.

"That's okay… that's good, right? Ranma is a good friend to you! He understands the Jusenkyo curse and he worked so hard to bring us together!" Akari said, sounding relieved. "So, if you have Ranma as your Anchor, you're safe, right?"

"I'll always be finding my way back to her. Always linked to her. Always part of her life," Ryouga answered. "But… yeah. I'm safe… relatively. But… but my Mom… you have to promise to not talk about my Dad around her, okay?"

"Of course, but… why not?" Akari asked, concerned.

"Dad was… is Mom's Anchor. But… but he died not too long ago."

Akari's eyes widened. "Ryouga… I'm so sorry…!"

"He was very sick for a long time," Ryouga said heavily. "But without him, the only way Mom has been able to keep the curse from progressing is to delude herself into thinking he's still alive. Just… that they keep missing each other. So you mustn't mention him, because if we break her concentration, she'll lose the link forever and her curse will start to worsen. She won't be able to find her way home and eventually she won't even be able to find other people. So… I have to find a cure for the curse soon. And until then, I need to stay here to keep her safe."

"Can you find the cure for it here?" Akari asked.
Ryouga nodded. "Me and Ranma met a Doctor who thinks he might have found a way to figure it out, but… it's probably going to take time. Years, maybe. I can't ask you to wait that long."

"You don't have to," Akari said, smiling again. "If your cure is here, then this is where I belong too! I can help you while you work towards it and help keep your Mother safe so you don't have to worry."

"What about your grandfather?" Ryouga asked. "He's terrified of dying before he's made sure you're taken care of. Are you really okay with just leaving him alone out there on that farm?"

"Grandfather is as healthy as a pig. He's not going to die anytime soon, no matter how much he wails about it," Akari said firmly. "Your Mother really will die if you don't do this, though. Even if you weren't my boyfriend I'd want to help if I could!"

"And the sumo competitions?" Ryouga asked.

"I'll retire Katsunishiki and focus on raising a new champion once your problems are solved," Akari said. "It'll be good to let him retire while he's still young and if we let a new champion rise it'll give me a goal to work towards. It'll be fun to be the challenger again!"

Ryouga chuckled and shook his head, but he found himself smiling. "You're not going to give up, are you?"

"I'm competitive like a pig," Akari said. "I don't train champion sumo pigs by being a quitter!"

Ryouga took a deep breath. "All right. Thank you… thank you. Please forgive me for being so weak."

She shook her head. "Ryouga, you're the strongest man I've ever known. But even the strongest pig can't be strong all the time. I want to be there to cheer you on when you're strong and to help you up when you're not." She squeezed his hand and let go. "I'll let you get dressed and have a bath. I'll have breakfast ready for you when you come down." She got up and gave him one last smile before she slipped out of his room.

"So, you sure you don't want me to come along? I mean, I am kinda involved…" Ranma asked as she walked next to Nabiki. She had borrowed some of Nabiki's clothes, a pair of jeans that were just a touch too small for Nabiki (though Ranma had learned enough diplomacy by this point to know not to comment on that) and a loose long-sleeved shirt. Wearing non-school clothes that actually fit as a girl, without fear of hot water causing her to shred them, was a precious luxury.

"I want to break the news of the link to them without their favorite target of aggression present, at least until I de-escalate them," Nabiki said. She had selected her favorite blue sweatshirt with the two hearts on it, opting for comfort over style for the moment.

"You think they're gonna flip out?" Ranma asked worriedly. Nabiki had sent Akane off ahead to get the other fiancées for this 'Fiancee's Tea' meeting they regularly had, but hadn't told her sister anything of what had happened, even after dragging Ranma back to bed to cuddle with them until Nabiki felt like facing the morning, which was nearly afternoon at this point.

"I know they are," Nabiki said nonchalantly. "And if there is a martial artist to serve as a target for their aggression, they will probably beat the crap out of them. I don't qualify yet and I think Jiro's rules about nonviolence should hold things together until I can talk them down. But it might be best if you laid low and took Ryouga with you. Go to the mall or something for the day. Just make it somewhere you or he wouldn't typically be found - just in case one or more of the girls needs a bit more time to cool down. I'll ring your cell to give you the all clear."

"I shoulda come clean about this right at the start," Ranma sighed, rubbing the back of her head.

Nabiki shook her head. "No, the timing was terrible when it happened. Akane was still being hypersensitive about you and Ryoga spending time together and I told you not to. This is on me if it goes bad, but I still think this is the first really not terrible opportunity to come clean. This should go about as well as it possibly could."

"So… it'll go good then, you think?" Ranma asked hopefully, brightening a bit.

"Oh, no chance of that. This will suck something fierce," Nabiki replied dryly.

"O-oh," Ranma said, hanging her head guiltily.

"But… I've negotiated my way through worse situations," Nabiki said. "You didn't actually do anything wrong. This wouldn't even have happened if Akane hadn't pushed Ryoga over the edge. And the two of you haven't actually done anything. You've done more eyebrow-raising stuff with Ryoga before the link, honestly." She frowned and rubbed her chin. "... Hnnnh... Maybe that is something to worry about. Maybe you should put on a disguise and try and convince Ryoga you're his long-lost lover or something just to dispel any suspicion?"

"Har har," Ranma muttered. "I had good reasons for doing that every time I did it!"

"Because he's cute when he blushes?" Nabiki said with a smirk.

"No!" Ranma protested, blushing brightly. "There was always a scroll, or… or waterproof soap or… or a map, or…"

"... He was paying attention to Akane instead of you?" Nabiki suggested.

"Yes! I mean No! I mean… Damnit Nabiki!" Ranma stomped in frustration, blushing even harder and looking unintentionally adorable.

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "Should I hold your hand to see if you're telling the truth?"

"Don't you dare!"

Ranma could see Ryoga's house down the street. Nabiki stopped walking and Ranma gave her a questioning look.

"I should part ways here, if just to avoid 20 questions about what I'm off to do and why," Nabiki stretched.

"You sure? Probably make Ryo feel better knowing he doesn't have to hide this stuff anymore," Ranma said, then paused and added. "Or… y'know, that he should be ready to run for his life."

Nabiki gave her a smirk. "Yeah, but I'd have some explaining to do to his Mom if I did this out front." She suddenly swept the redhead into her arms, dipped her and gave her a kiss that brought the color back to Ranma's cheeks and left her panting and unsteady.

Nabiki grinned at her, looking a little dishevelled herself. "This is one advantage of you being small and cute in this form. I don't think you'd let me get away with this if you were a guy."

Ranma grinned and winked at her. "You'll never know unless you try, right?"
Nabiki giggled and brought her back up to her feet. "I'm gonna hold you to that, Saotome. No getting mad at me if I dip you during the graduation ceremony."

"Only if you don't get mad when I sell the pics," Ranma retorted.

"Ooooh, that's not bad!" Nabiki replied, suitably impressed. "You're getting the hang of this blackmail thing!"

"Learned from the best," Ranma winked at her, then skipped off towards Ryouga's house, feeling her step considerably lighter.

This will work out. I trust Nabiki and the girls and we've almost got the hang of this. This is gonna be a good week, I can feel it!

She walked up to the front door, rang the bell and waited. You know what? I don't even mind if his Mom thinks this is a date. Ryouga's my friend and I'll just let Nabiki handle the mess for once and enjoy a day with a buddy without any complications!

She closed her eyes, pondering if she could sweet-talk Ryouga into a trip to the ice cream parlor on his dime, since she had treated last time. The place at the mall had a few items she had never tried before. She heard the door slide open and beamed. "Hey Ryo! I was wondering if you wanted to hit the mall with me and get some ice cream?" She opened her eyes, expecting to see Ryouga, or perhaps even his mother.

Instead she was met by a pair of hazel eyes, framed by green-tinted hair with a swath of pink running from each temple like a pair of ribbons.

Ranma blinked. "Oh… Hi, Akari…"

000

Jiro, of course, had their table prepared for them with his usual efficiency, though he seemed uncharacteristically scattered. He never actually got anything wrong, but he did seem to be dropping in and out of sight a bit more frequently than was his custom and his normally calm and low-key demeanor seemed somewhat more harried.

"Is everything all right, Jiro?" Nabiki asked as he poured her a cup of her preferred blend. "You seem a bit flustered.

"Hmmm? Oh no, not at all," Jiro said, smiling. "It's just a bit busier today than normal."

Nabiki glanced around the tea shop. It was totally empty aside from them, as usual. "I… see," she said politely.

"A lot of decisions being made today! There's a young Chinese girl trying to decide if she should run away with her lover, a young man pondering his military career, another young man debating proposing to a young woman, several parties planning celebrations for newly minted Captains, with all the requisite Naval tradition and planned visits to the Captain's Table and all that, and a young German painter trying to decide if he wants to continue with his craft or… oh bother, he's walked out! Please pardon me." Jiro turned and slipped off someplace that for some reason Nabiki's eyes couldn't follow.

Nabiki shrugged and chalked it up to the oddness of the place. She had already accepted that the Tea Shop was just one of those weird things one found in Nerima.
"So... Nabiki have something she want talk about, or just come for tea?" Shampoo asked, sipping her own quietly.

Nabiki put her teacup down, leaned back in her chair and crossed her legs. *I need to present this carefully. If any of them get mad and storm out, it'll be bad. "It concerns Ranma and Ryouga. More specifically, it's about the aftermath of Ryouga's meltdown and the shi shi hokodan."

She saw Akane wince slightly and the others put their cups down to listen. *Good. Akane still feels guilty about that, so it'll modulate her response, but if I push too hard she'll push back and retreat into anger. I need to be careful. "Ryouga apparently has had a lot of stuff going on beyond just the discovery that Akane knew about his Jusenkyo curse. His father died recently after a long illness and now his mother's situation has become extremely precarious as a result of his family's directional problems... which are, as it turns out, the results of an actual curse in their own right. There are also some issues with Akari stemming from an incident where the combination of his curses left him helpless to protect her when she really needed it... Let's just say it hasn't been a good month for Ryouga Hibiki. I think that a meltdown was probably inevitable given the way things have been going and Akane was just unlucky enough to be the straw that broke the piglet's back."

Ukyou's head bowed, indicating she had probably known about some of this already, and even Shampoo looked subdued.

*Good. Sympathy, Nabiki thought. She felt a pang of guilt. I hate being so manipulative with them but I need my girls on MY side on this. "After Ryouga had his meltdown, he and Ranma met a doctor at the hospital who's been working with them to try and figure out the directional curse. They've enlisted Doc Tofu's help as well, and brought me along this last Saturday. I've learned a lot about how it works, and it's not pretty. The curse is supposed to gradually isolate the victim and eventually render them unable to find other people at all - leaving them to die slowly and alone. But the Hibiki family has a special quality - one they've used to fend it off to a degree. It's an ability to choose another person as an 'Anchor'; someone towards whom they have a strong emotional connection and to whom they can always find their way back... eventually. They can form this bond only once in their lifetime." She closed her eyes. "Ryouga's father was his mother's Anchor. With his death..."

"She's going to get lost and never find her way back..." Akane said softly.

Ukyou and Shampoo's eyes widened.

"She such nice woman..." Shampoo said, exchanging a look with Ukyou.

"Is there something we can do to help?" Ukyou asked Nabiki, leaning forward. "We had no idea her situation was that bad! No wonder she's tied herself to the house with a string!"

"Be understanding," Nabiki said. "Because... the next part is going to make you mad. But I needed for you to know Mrs. Hibiki's situation because her welfare has been the driving force behind everything Ryouga has done recently." She closed her eyes. "Ryouga has an Anchor too. Someone here in Nerima."

There was a moment, then both Ukyou and Shampoo turned to look at Akane.

Sheepishly, Akane pointed at herself. "... Me?"

Nabiki shook her head. "You probably would have been. He certainly would have prefered you to have been, but... no. Ryouga chose his Anchor two years before he met you - back in middle school."

Ukyou gaped at her. "Ranma!? Are you telling me Ranchan is his Anchor!?"

Nabiki nodded held up a finger to forestall the explosion. "All it takes is a really strong emotion. It doesn't have to be positive emotion. Ryouga was very, very angry at Ranma and had an intense desire to find him. From how he tells it, he wasn't even fully aware he'd done it until recently. But it's the reason he always seems to show up wherever Ranma is." She turned to face Akane. "Ryouga himself believed you were his Anchor since you were almost always where Ranma was. It's apparently a very subtle, subconscious effect."

"So… what made him think different?" Ukyou asked. "I mean, it makes logical sense given Ryouga tracked Ranma halfway around Asia, but Ryouga's hardly the logical sort. There's no way he'd suss that out on his own."

Nabiki took a deep breath. And here we are at the moment of truth. "Because… saving Ryouga from the shi shi hokodan had consequences for both of them. One of which was a change to the nature of the Anchor. A change that might actually lead to a cure for the family curse - which is why they kept it hidden until now - on my advice."

"Hidden? Why?" Shampoo asked, frowning. "What be so bad that need be kept from us?"

"Not from you. It was just easiest to keep it from everyone until we had a better handle on how it worked and what the effects were," Nabiki said. "If Ranma's mother found out about this… this Link, it could possibly be grounds for her to call in the seppuku contract, or push her into making a snap decision on the omiai. Not to mention how others might seek to use it against them." She steepled her fingers. "Ranma and Ryouga are now synced. Which means that the ability to find one another is much more pronounced in both of them, but more importantly… whenever they make physical contact with each other they become aware of each other's emotions."

"What? You mean like… like something out of a sci fi novel?" Ukyou asked.

"Shampoo hear of such things before. Very rare… very rare. Is form of ki sharing. Only possible if ki in perfect alignment." Shampoo frowned, concentrating as she dredged up the memory. "Only ever hear of from old legend of…" She set her jaw and gave Nabiki a hard look. "... Story of two warriors who become lovers."

Nabiki held up a hand again. "I'm sure the situation in that story was rooted in feelings they already had that led them to form a link. In this case the link came first."

"That's still awfully intimate!" Ukyou said. "Both of them have been acting weird. Ranma has been going all girly, Ryoga has started to do that stuttery, stupid, goofy routine he used to do around Akane, and they get all quiet when they're around each other."

"You don't think this 'link' is what's making Ranma change?" Akane asked, looking worried. "Ranma said something to me about how she goes back and forth, but how some people 'push' her one way or another." She glared at Nabiki. "How do we know it's not because of the Link?!

"Because the Link doesn't work that way." Nabiki replied, keeping her tone calm and even. One of the tricks of de-escalation was to keep your tone level, even and calm even as the person who was getting upset got louder and more agitated. It worked to ground them, whereas raising your own voice would only make the situation worse.

"How would Nabiki know?" Shampoo asked.
"Because… just yesterday… we figured out how to add me to the Link," Nabiki said quietly. She picked up her teacup and took a sip as she waited for the explosion.

It didn't take long.

"You what?!" Ukyou yelped, gaping at her.

"No wonder Nabiki suddenly so interested in Pig Boy!" Shampoo said.

Akane was aghast. "Nabiki, why would you even do that?! What if something had gone wrong? What would that have done to you? To Ranma?! Even to Ryouga!"

"You know, you've asked us to trust you, that your 'Ice Queen' days are behind you, but playing stuff like this close to the vest until you get what you want is an awful lot like the 'old' Nabiki," Ukyou growled.

That one stung but Nabiki focused on her tea until she could be sure she could keep her calm demeanor. She finished the cup and set it down. She studied her nails carefully as she spoke. "What do you suppose happens to Ryouga if, say, we break the Link between him and Ranma?"

Ukyou's anger faded a bit. "It'd… he'd end up in the same boat as his Mom…"

"Doomed to wander alone until he eventually died from sickness, injury, or just succeeded in blowing himself up," Nabiki replied. "What do you suppose happens if, instead, we leave things as they are? Ranma goes with us, the Link remains and Ryouga goes his own way?"

"He'll… always be finding his way back to Ranma," Akane answered in a soft voice. There was a flicker in her eyes, the start of recognition.

"To Ranma. Not to Akari, or his family, or the people he loves and wants to be with, but to the person he can't be with. Always showing up on the doorstep, haggard and worn. How long do you think that could go on before it strained his own relationships beyond the breaking point? I would certainly think he was having an affair. How do you think Ranma would feel - forever being the 'other woman', even if nothing ever happened?" She planted her hands flat on the table and leaned over to look each of them in the eyes. "I did this because it's a way out. Right now? I'm Ryouga's Anchor as well as Ranma. Think about that. That means we can make someone else's Anchor too - like Akari, maybe. And we can figure out how to break the link without risking his curse progressing." She paused, swallowing hard as she moved to the last point, and the most potentially contentious one. "But most importantly… we can have that Link with Ranma now… and each other."

The stared at her silently for a moment, then exchanged glances with each other.

"Whyyyyy would we want that, sugar?" Ukyou said carefully, giving her an uncertain look.

"Isn't that just going to make the situation worse?" Akane added.

"Think about it," Nabiki said. "This… this relationship we're trying to build here. We're not the first to try something like this. And… granted our circumstances are unique, but… I've not found any references to anything like what we're trying to do succeeding in the modern day and age. A few lifelong threesomes - where they kept quiet, kept the third person on as a 'housekeeper' or something and it didn't come out until they were safely dead and buried… but even if that option was still available to us, there's no way we'd pull it off with five of us. We need an edge… something to help hold us together when things are bad and the whole world is trying to wedge us apart."
"Many conqueror kings have harems. No one question them," Shampoo joked weakly. "Maybe just need to conquer world?"

"That's later in the plan. Better to have something immediate," Nabiki said with absolute seriousness, though she couldn't prevent a small smirk getting through.

"Yeah, but... you're talking about linking our minds together," Ukyou said. "Like... like a collective consciousness thing?"

Nabiki shook her head. "It's nothing like that. It's only when you're in physical contact, and it's... it's more like you can hear their feelings. You have to intentionally listen, and learn how to understand what you're 'hearing' for it to really make sense. It's not like the sci fi books where suddenly it's thrust into your brain. It's more like..." She struggled for words. "... Like a really accurate mood ring. It's a language we have to learn, but it's a way to get across all of those things that we're all terrible at. Every one of us." She fixed each of them with a stern look. "How many times have we struggled just to say the words 'I love you' to someone we desperately loved? Simply because we were too afraid they might not feel the same? How many times did we say it only for it to not be understood?"

"Sometimes there are times it would probably be a bad thing if you knew exactly how I was feeling," Ukyou said darkly.

"Not for us," Nabiki insisted. "It can't be that way for us. We don't have that luxury of holding things back and letting them fester like that, Ukyou.

"So... you think we need this?" Akane was tentative. She glanced at Ukyou and Shampoo nervously.

"I think we need to consider it," Nabiki said. "Right now breaking the link isn't an option, not until a cure is found, because the Link is the key. So... why not turn it to our advantage?"

"Pintou leaving something out," Shampoo said quietly, giving Nabiki a searching look. For once, Nabiki wished the Amazon wasn't more perceptive than people gave her credit for. "If Nabiki part of Link, then Nabiki see Ranma and Ryouga feelings. Know for sure what happening."

Nabiki closed her eyes. "Nothing has happened between them," she said carefully. "The worst thing they've done is hold hands and talk."

"Not asking if anything happen anymore," Shampoo said. "Asking if anything could happen. Asking what they really feel."

Nabiki grit her teeth. "I've had the Link for less than a day... and I've only had contact with them for maybe an hour, and for half of that I was dopey from the pill I had to take to make the Link possible. I can't be 100% sure what it is I'm seeing exactly." She quickly held up a hand to forestall protest, opened her eyes and looked into Shampoo's. "Yes... there's something between them - a lot of 'something' - and neither of them is willing to acknowledge it - or they just don't realize what they're seeing because they can't see both sides. It doesn't necessarily mean that it's romantic."

"Also doesn't mean it not," Shampoo said. "That why Pintou feeling out Pig boy. Think might someday need to join us. Yes?"

Nabiki sighed. "I think... it's a possibility we need to acknowledge."

"You can't be serious, sugar!" Ukyou protested. "What, are we just gonna bring anyone Ranchan shows an interest in into this? 'What's that? You were promised to marry Ranma when you were kids? So were we! C'mon, there's plenty of room!'

"No, but these are extenuating and exceptional circumstances," Nabiki said firmly. "Think about it; not one of us was chosen by Ranma. We were pushed together by circumstance. He accepted us and confirmed his feelings for us, but I know our relationships with him would be far different without the engagements or Amazon law…"

"Speak for yourself, sugar," Ukyou replied, narrowing her eyes. "He was my best friend as a kid. My Dad suggested the engagement because of that."

"And Ranma thought you were a boy at the time," Nabiki retorted. "He was obligated to us first, and the feelings came after. I'm not suggesting they're any less valid, but Ranma has never, ever chosen someone to care about on his own." She leaned forward, lowering her voice. "And then along comes Ryouga… a rival in martial arts, a rival for the girl they both loved, an enemy, another guy. They had every reason to hate each other's guts, but they didn't. It's like they continually had to remind themselves to be in conflict. There's always been a bond between them that had nothing to do with engagements. Then suddenly Ranma isn't exactly a guy anymore and, at the same time, that bond becomes something far more tangible. "I think we need to understand that this isn't a small thing - that if something does happen, Ryouga is the first person Ranma has ever chosen on her own."

"Are you saying… Ranma might choose Ryouga over us?" Akane squeaked, the blood draining from her face.

"I'm saying… Ranma has always resented being forced into things," Nabiki said carefully. "She's not had any control her entire life - from her parents predetermining every aspect of her life right up until old age, to Amazon laws, to magical curses and afflictions to multiple engagements. She's had to fight for every inch of her freedom at every turn and it's clear that anytime anyone tries to take something from her, she will fight back… even if it's something she's not sure she even wants. If we dig in our heels on Ryoga and try and force them apart - try and force Ranma to choose - Ranma will fight us out of that reflex. Worse, we've given Ranma a taste of understanding and acceptance. If we take that away now, it will be a betrayal of trust our relationship may never recover from. And Ryoga, for his part, doesn't give up on attachments easily. If he's gotten attached to our little redhead and he had any notion that she felt the same, he'll fight for her."

"Hatred… love… change from one to another too too easy sometimes…" Shampoo said quietly.

"I noticed how the pronouns you used to refer to Ranchan changed partway through, sugar," Ukyou said, giving Nabiki a searching look.

"Well… This all started when Ranma started exploring her girl side more, right?" Nabiki said. "Having to spend more time as a girl, getting comfortable with it, even accepting it. Even if the effect is just psychosomatic, Ranma is more comfortable dealing with these sorts of feelings as a girl. More than that though… there's a definite divide there. Ranma's mentioned it and what I feel through the Link… well… It doesn't feel like it's a new thing." She looked at Ukyou. "You know what I'm talking about, right Ukyou?"

Akane glanced at Ukyou. "What does she mean?"

Ukyou's jaw tensed. "She means that Ranna's gender identity isn't stable. The fact that once the pressure to be a 'man amongst men' every second was taken off, she started… wobbling." She sighed and closed her eyes. "I don't know how Jusenkyo curses work, but…"
"Some curses affect mind, like Fushannichuan, but those rare cases where mental quality of one who drowned what magic imprinted on, rather than just physical," Shampoo jumped in. "Most springs bring instincts that come with form… ability to walk with four legs, groom self, fly if bird. All that nature rather than nurture. But mind stay same. Never hear of curse causing effect to degree Airen have."

"... So this… fluidity is old," Ukyou said softly. "It came before the curse. Maybe it was even the reason making Ranma into a 'manly man' needed such extreme measures as sending Ranchan away with his idiot father for fourteen years."

"So… Ranma has always been… bi?" Akane asked, confused.

Ukyou shook her head. "Gender identity and gender preference are two different things, sugar. You should know that." Ukyou poked Akane's shoulder. "But… I guess in this case that'd also be true? Are you suggesting Ranchan has had a 'thing' for Ryouga since middle school?"

Nabiki shrugged. "It would explain why Genma was so eager to get him away from Ryouga. And from you, since Ranma apparently thought you were a boy."

Ukyou blushed at the notion. "That's… that's a weird thought. That Ranma might have been interested in me as a boy…"

"He was six. I doubt he was thinking of things that way," Nabiki said. "Not that Genma would have realized that, given how bizarre his ideas on romance, love and the female gender are."

"So… what do we do?" Akane asked timidly.

"Ranma and Ryouga are going to be together regularly because of the search for the cure for Ryouga's directional curse. There's nothing we can do about that; Ryouga's mother's life is on the line, which makes it about as much a matter of honor as anything can be for Ranma," Nabiki said. "I think all we can do right now is let things be and… just try and be supportive if Ranma starts asking questions or wanting to talk about her feelings." She closed her eyes. "I've already talked to Ryouga about this. He denied anything was going on, or that anything ever would or could, but…"

"Pig boy idiot," Shampoo finished for her.

"So… we just let this happen?" Akane asked, scowling.

"Akane, do you remember how you felt those times you got kidnapped by some Prince, or some other kook who wanted you to marry him? Remember how it felt having someone… even a very handsome and otherwise nice someone… trying to compel your feelings?" Nabiki asked. "We can't control how Ranma feels. Her Dad has tried that for her entire life, and it's backfired about as spectacularly as it possibly could. We can't force Ranma to love us… you all know this. But Ranma does love us and we need to trust that. That's why we did this." She narrowed her eyes. "That's why I did this. Because I knew that as much as I wanted to just snatch him up and run, he'd never willingly abandon any of you. That hasn't changed… and honestly I'm really really glad I gave this a chance." She gave Shampoo a meaningful look which actually earned a blush from the Amazon. "So… let's let Ranma and Ryouga sort out where they stand with each other on their own and go from there?"

Ukyou sighed, closed her eyes and leaned back in her chair. "Here I was thinking that this was going to make things simpler."
Awkward situations were nothing new to Ranma Saotome. The past couple of years of her life had been nothing but, honestly.

But experience did nothing to make them easier.

After showing up at the Hibiki household and more or less inviting Ryouga out on a date right in front of Akari, Ryougai's mother had decided that it would be a wonderful idea for him and Akari to get out of the house and pick up a few things for her. From her stern looks towards Ryouga, Ranma suspected there was some expectation for him to mend his two-timing ways, though there was some mirth in her eyes too. She's intentionally making him squirm. Poor Ryo… he didn't actually do anything wrong. All of the downsides of being a Casanova, without any benefits.

She snorted. Gee, THAT sounds familiar.

"Do you have a cold, Ranma?" Akari asked innocently. She was walking on Ryouga's right while Ranma was on his left. She had taken his arm almost immediately, which Ranma had momentarily irrationally seen as a challenge of some sort, but she had wrestled the impulse down. Ryouga was Akari's boyfriend, after all, and she had every right.

… Right?

"No, just thought of something funny." She glanced at Ryouga, who looked about as hangdog and guilty as she had ever seen him. "Oi, Ryo… cheer up! Aren't you happy to be at the mall with two pretty girls?" She leaned against his shoulder and batted her eyelashes at him.

She realized immediately that it had been a mistake. In the past Ryouga would generally have either yelled at her or shoved her away, or possibly bopped her on the head - which was honestly what she had been going for. Angry Ryouga was better than Depressed Ryouga in her book.

Instead he blushed and gave Akari a quick, panicked then looked back at Ranma. She caught a flicker of intense guilt and shame through the link.

Ranma sighed and straightened, but she could already feel Akari's eyes on her. Well… crap. That's gonna be another explanation. Maybe I should just shut up until we get to the food court…

"Ranma, I understand you've been looking after Ryouga for a while?" Akari asked, smiling politely.

"Ye-No! Wait! What did you hear? Whatever it is I can explain!" Ranma said nervously, glancing from Ryouga to Akari.

Ryouga clapped a hand over his eyes and groaned while Akari just giggled.

"Has he been eating well? I worry that all he eats sometimes is instant ramen. I felt it was a little rude to ask while his mother was there, but I know how hard they find it to keep fresh food in the house…” Akari asked quietly.

"Huh? Oh!" Ranma sighed in relief. "Uh… yeah, his Mom is a pretty good cook, even with the canned stuff. And we drag him back to the Dojo for a hot meal from Kasumi now and then too."

"Oh good," Akari nodded approvingly.

"Heh… anything else you need to know?" Ranma asked, folding her hands behind her head as they reached the staircase going down.
"Well, you two bathe together, right? Is he washing properly?"

For Ranma, it was like that top step wasn't even there. But as she pitched violently forward, she was able to personally verify that every step from the fifth on down was very real and solid.

After tea they split up into pairs and headed to their respective restaurants. Akane unconsciously took Ukyou's arm, no longer really caring about who saw her or judged her for it. She was lost in thought, trying to figure out how she felt about the idea of Ryouga and Ranma having feelings for each other.

_I used to hate it when they fought. But I didn't understand half of it. All of that referencing 'P-chan'... All because Ranma thought she was warning me, even though she trusted Ryouga enough not to do more... Was that all it was? When Ryouga paid attention to me she got jealous, but rather than just challenge him to a fight like everyone else, she'd try and woo him away. Granted, she did that with Kuno too, but Kuno was actually AFTER her and it always seemed to disturb her. But Ryouga... Even when she wasn't fooling him she would tease him about it. She got just as mad at me for all the attention I paid Ryouga or P-chan... was she so jealous because she liked us both?_

She was content to let Ukyou lead as her mind ran along odd, speculative paths. _Was this really because of the shi shi hokodan and the Link, or was it always there? Would it have come up eventually anyway? Ten years down the road, when Ranma and I were married, and Ryouga kept showing up over and over... Would that version of 'me' be able to be understanding? Would I?_

She glanced at Ukyou a moment, then back down at the sidewalk and blushed.

_I'd be a hypocrite if I WASN'T, wouldn't I?_ She hugged Ukyou's arm a little more tightly as the idea of being forced to give up her relationship with the chef raised its ugly head. It was something she would likely never have explored without the kind of realizations about herself that the struggle around Ranma had given her, but she was surprised at how strongly her mind recoiled from the idea of losing Ukyou.

"Something wrong, sugar?" Ukyou asked, glancing at her.

Akane swallowed but didn't look at her. "Would you give me up?"

Ukyou stopped and turned to study her. "What?"

Akane took a deep breath. "If... Ranma demanded that you give me up. If it bothered him, or he didn't like it and he wanted to keep us separate... Would you do it?"

Ukyou turned and took Akane by the shoulders. "Akane, Ranchan would never ask that!"

Akane looked up at the taller girl. Her own vision was slightly blurry and she knew that she was dredging up some uncomfortable fears and emotions in herself. "Why not? Wouldn't we be doing the same if we split Ranma and Ryouga up?"

Ukyou sighed. "That's different, 'Kane..."

"How?" Akane demanded. "You and me... that wasn't part of the whole deal we made with Ranma. We didn't ask... and when he found out it hurt him but we didn't give it up even then. He even apologized to us! What if that had gone differently? What if Ranma couldn't handle us being together?"
Akane could see the conflict in Ukyou's slate grey eyes. Defiance, Fear, Uncertainty, Guilt, Anger… Akane didn't need a Link of any sort to read those there.

Ukyou wet her lips. "... Would you?" she asked softly, uncharacteristically timid.

Akane had to look away. Her hand came up to Ukyou's shoulder, gripping the fabric of her shirt, her fingers balling up.

"I think I would…" she finally whispered, feeling the shame tear at her. "I'd hate myself, and I'd regret it, and it'd hurt every time I looked at you… and… and I'm scared that I would start to hate Ranma, too."

Ukyou wrapped an arm around her, tucking Akane's head under her chin. She just held her like that for a bit.

"... Damnit, Akane," she murmured.

"I'm sorry," Akane sniffled. She closed her eyes tight and burrowed her face against Ukyou's collarbone. She felt Ukyou's fingers stroke her hair and relaxed a little.

"... If Ranma wasn't here… and we had met some other way… do you… Do you think we would have ended up together?" Akane asked tentatively.

Ukyou's fingers stopped as she considered. "What, you mean if I had just transferred to Furinkan one day?"

"Yeah."

Ukyou's fingers resumed running through Akane's hair. She felt Ukyou's other arm go around her. Her own arms slipped around Ukyou's waist as the comforting hug became a snuggle.

"Me as a boy, or me as a girl?" Ukyou finally asked.

"I think I'd have fallen for you either way," Akane murmured softly. "Probably have taken longer if you went as a girl because…" she swallowed, "... Oh god… I'd still be angry and in the closet, wouldn't I?"

Ukyou chuckled. "And I'd still be determined to live my life as a man."

"I'd have long hair still…" Akane mused as she started to picture things.

"You used to have long hair?"

"It got cut in the first fight between Ranma and Ryouga. I was too busy yelling at Ranma and wasn't paying attention to Ryouga's bandanas."

Ukyou's fingers trailed to the end of Akane's short hair, as if Ukyou were trying to imagine it.

"How long?" Ukyou asked.

"Down to mid-back, about," Akane replied. "Why, you like girls with long hair?"

"Just curious. Trying to visualize you with long hair," Ukyou replied.

"It wasn't me. I was trying to be more like Kasumi to impress someone I had a crush on," Akane replied. "So you'd show up one day… see this mousey tomboy having to fight off a horde of boys every day because of Kuno's idiocy…"

"I still can't believe you did that every day… I'd definitely have called them out on it. Though I might let you have your fun first," Ukyou replied.

"That's what Ranma did. You'd probably get in a fight with Kuno over that."

"I have absolutely zero problem with that."

Akane giggled. "It'd have taken me a while to come around, I think, but… you'd have been so different from any boy I'd met…"

"Well, that goes without saying," Ukyou muttered, earning another giggle.

"You'd have been lonely… wouldn't you?" Akane asked softly. "Running your restaurant all alone… hiding who you really were."

"Yeah," Ukyou replied. "I like to think I hid it pretty well… lots of casual friends, but…"

They were both quiet. Akane visualized a path this alternate version of her life might have taken. It was scary how easily she could imagine it. "I'd fall for her for all the same reasons I fell for Ranma, Akane realized. Maybe more. There'd be no engagement to fight, no other fiancees to compete with… and… falling in love with the boy would force me to face that I really want the girl… just like with Ranma…"

"You're awfully quiet, sugar," Ukyou noted with concern. "Everything okay?"

"I'm just… pondering what might have been," Akane said, subdued.

"... Same here," Ukyou replied after a moment.

Akane swallowed. "Would you have?" she asked. "Fallen for me, I mean?"

"Yeah," Ukyou breathed. "I think I would. I'd… probably have screwed it up, though."

Akane smiled and hugged a bit tighter. "Couldn't have done worse than Ranma and I did. We did screw it up."

Another long pause.

"Does that mean you love me?" Ukyou asked. The question seemed unconscionably loud in the quiet of the moment.

Akane pulled back a bit to look up into Ukyou's eyes. It would have been easy to snap out an answer, of course, but she took a moment to weigh her feelings. She imagined Ranma's face, remembering the feelings that had come up in the alleyway behind the dance club and compared them to what she felt now.

"... Yes," she said, sounding a little surprised even to her own ears. Ironically she suddenly felt closer to the redhead as she now found herself in the exact same position. One love doesn't diminish the other, does it, Ranma?

On impulse she slipped her arms around Ukyou's neck and pulled her into a kiss. It was the most public kiss they had yet shared, but after being open about her feelings at the club, Akane found she was tired of hiding. She felt a little hesitation from Ukyou, but only a brief moment, and quickly swept away in the emotion of the kiss. It wasn't tentative or timid or an explosion of pent-up feeling. It just felt natural - like she belonged there in her arms.

They finally broke, both a little breathless. Ukyou was smiling at her and she could feel the smile on her own face.

"Wanna run away and elope?" Ukyou joked.

"Yes," Akane replied, completely seriously.

Ukyou's eyes widened. "W-wait, Akane…"

"Not right now," Akane clarified. "And not never to return, but… I'd like to go away for a while. Just the two of us. Find out what we are to each other on our own."

Ukyou raised an eyebrow. "And get married?" she asked with a smirk.

"I… y-yeah? Maybe?" Akane replied hesitantly, realizing what she had just done. Oh God, Ukyou is male on her family register, we actually COULD… She swallowed and set her jaw determinedly. "... Yes. Yes, and get married."

Ukyou blushed a little. "... Wow… you're serious…" She swallowed nervously but she was still smiling. "'Ms. Akane Kuonji', huh?" she said shyly.

"It has a ring to it," Akane replied.

"Actually, legally married?" Ukyou said again.

Akane nodded. "Nabiki will probably marry Ranma legally in Japan. The Amazons will likely have some ceremony for the rest of us and I know we'll all have our own thing with Ranma, but… This could be just ours."

Ukyou swallowed visibly again. She ducked her head and chewed her lower lip as the smile gradually spread. "... A-alright," she giggled, "Yes. Yes! I will marry you, Akane!" She picked Akane up and swung her around, earning a startled yelp and a giggle.

Ukyou set her down and kissed her again, the two of them melting together. There was considerably more passion this time and it lasted quite a bit longer, leaving them both breathing hard by the end of it.

"I think… I'll be closing the restaurant for today…" Ukyou whispered, flushed and smiling. "What do you think?"

"Definitely. One day flu. You'll be stuck in bed until tomorrow," Akane purred.

Ukyou giggled and took Akane's hand, taking off running down the street in the direction of Ucchan's.

000

"I had no idea martial artists could be so clumsy!" Akari said as she dabbed at the scrapes on Ranma's face with a little antiseptic. "Oh! I'm sorry, that came out rude!"

"No… no… I kinda got it coming this time," Ranma mumbled. She was perched on the counter next to the sink in the girl's bathroom while Akari administered a little first aid using the kit they had bought in one of the mall stores.
"Ryouga was telling me about what you and he have been up to," Akari's ministrations were gentle and sure. "He said you and he were working towards finding a cure for his directional curse… and about how there was an explosion that scarred up his back… And he said you were his Anchor?" She cocked her head curiously.

Ranma felt a cold ball form in the pit of her stomach. She closed her eyes and sighed. "Okay… okay yeah… it's probably better he told you about that up front. Look, I know it sounds bad, but honestly it's just… awkward. It's not like anything is actually going on. It only happens if we make actual skin contact or are really close and, once we get his curse fixed, we can figure it out more. But it's mostly just a lot of people seeing stuff that ain't there… I-I mean I've kinda been relying on him a lot more because of the omiai and all the problems with my parents and school, and I know he's struggling a lot too, so it's kinda mutual, but that doesn't mean…!" She opened her eyes to find a very confused Akari looking back at her.

"... I… you have no idea what I'm talking about, do you?" Ranma said, feeling that ball of dread grow, prosper and spawn a whole extended family of uncomfortable that moved in.

"Ryouga… just said that you being his Anchor let him find you," Akari said. "What… what are you talking about?"

Ranma winced. "You know… He's going to kill me for this, and for once I'm gonna agree with him that I deserve it." She swallowed. "All right, but you gotta promise me you won't break up with him or anything over this, okay? He's been all torn up about you since he got back to Nerima, and… and I've been fighting real hard to keep him outta that dark place."

"Dark place?" Akari asked softly. "I… I was worried you were going to say it was another woman, but…" Her eyes widened. "Does this have to do with the scars on his back?"

Ranma nodded. "I'm hoping he'll forgive me for blabbing all this, but… Look, just listen, and I'll try and explain it as best I can." Ranma hopped off the counter, leaned back against it and took a deep breath.

"It started when Ryouga showed up in Nerima, all primed for a fight…"

000

The fall day was cool enough that, even after a few hours of energetic lovemaking, the warmth of another body was a welcome comfort under the covers.

Akane was dozing lightly in Ukyou's arms, head tucked under her chin. It was far too early to sleep yet but they had worn themselves out enough to justify an afternoon nap.

Or at least Akane had. Ukyou found herself kept awake by her thoughts as she ran her fingers idly through Akane's hair.

This isn't where I thought I'd be by now, she thought. Though… I don't know if I ever really thought about it. Where was I going before I caught up to Ranchan? What was I going to do with my life, living as a man?

She closed her eyes and sighed. The truth was there never really had been any plans, aside from the nebulous idea of making the 'Best Okonomiyaki in Japan'. I suppose I was just going to live my life as a charade, too stubborn to commit to being one or the other or do anything that might MAKE me commit. She looked down at the girl in her arms. Would I really have had the guts to tell you? After what happened with Akkiko? Or would I have just pushed you away and kept you at arm's length until you drifted away on your own? She felt a lump in her throat and an ache in her chest at that.

No wonder Ranchan got so twisted up over you, Ukyou thought fondly, brushing a few hairs from Akane's face. There was an innocence and peace in her expression that was compelling. And everyone else, too, I suppose. Without Ranchan there I probably wouldn't have lasted long either. Would you really have chosen me, though?

Akane stirred, blinking her eyes. She looked up as the fog cleared and smiled. "Hi…"

"Hi yourself, sugar," Ukyou purred. "Have a good nap?"

"Mnnnh… I don't actually have to get up, do I?" Akane mumbled plaintively.

"Nope. No reason to get out of bed until tomorrow, unless you want a shower."

"Might do that later…" Akane shifted and settled herself in more comfortably against Ukyou. "You didn't sleep?"

"Well… You kinda gave me a lot to think about," Ukyou admitted. "I never really considered 'What if…? ' much before."

"Really?" Akane cocked her head. "I can't seem to stop. Ever since I met Ranma…" She sighed. "... I guess that might be part of my problem. I'm always wondering what might be."

"... And with Ranchan that leads to wondering what he might do, and since he's always surrounded by pretty girls…" Ukyou smirked.

"Still not sure I totally believe nothing happened ever," Akane muttered darkly. "Nobody has that much self control."

"I'm pretty sure a big part of it was trauma, sugar," Ukyou replied. "Anytime he ended up in any situation that might even had a remote chance of something happening, he panicked hard. Trust me, I tried. I'm still not sure how Nabiki defused him."

Akane scowled. "Gonna have a panda-skin rug for the nursery."

Ukyou blinked. "Nursery?"

Akane blushed and ducked her head. "... I… sorry, was dreaming about… Y'know…"

"Not sure Ranchan would want his Dad's corpse as decoration in his kid's room," Ukyou noted. "It wasn't…" Akane started, but trailed off. "... Nevermind, you're right."

"We'll sell the rug and buy something tasteful," Ukyou said confidently. "Pandas are endangered so I imagine a rug would fetch quite a high price from a collector."

Akane giggled then sighed. "What are we going to do about Ranma's parents?"

"I'm sort of hoping Nabiki has a plan," Ukyou said. "Otherwise… As soon as we're clear to travel without Himura making Ranchan a suspect in a felony case, maybe we should just disappear for a while?"

"What, to China?" Akane replied. "Genma would know to look for us there."
"Then somewhere else. Go north or something," Ukyou suggested. "Between all of us I'm pretty sure we could make a living wherever we went."

"But then we'd be leaving Kasumi and Dad behind, and you'd be leaving Konatsu, and Shampoo would have to leave Cologne and the Nekohanten. Why should we be the ones who have to leave!?" Akane protested.

"Because we don't have a signed document that says we can demand one of them commit suicide if they piss us off," Ukyou said sadly. "I'm not sure Ranchan is ready to face them down on that yet."

"We'll have to eventually," Akane sighed. "Why do they always have to make this so hard? Half of the problems Ranma and I had getting together came from their attempts to force us together! If they had just left us alone, everything would have worked out!"

"I get customers like that occasionally," Ukyou said thoughtfully. "They lean over the grill, micromanage the toppings, how long I cook each side, how I pour the sauce… nearly burn themselves getting in my face, making me redo it because it didn't 'look right'," Ukyou snorted. "The okonomiyaki comes out like crap every time. I don't think it's about the result, it's about controlling how it's done."

"I'm surprised you put up with that," Akane said.

"I do once," Ukyou said. "Some of 'em taste the 'yaki, realize their mistake and shape up. Most don't and try and blame me for it. That's what the big spatula and the disclaimer hung by the door are for," Ukyou winked.

They were quiet for a moment, Akane nestling back in against Ukyou's shoulder and relaxing.

"What were we talking about that ended up with us in bed chatting about Panda skin rugs and awful okonomiyaki?" Akane finally asked.

"Ranma and Ryouga, I think," Ukyou said after a moment. "You were pointing out I was being a hypocrite about it, basically."

"Sorry. I wasn't trying to do it in a mean way…" Akane replied.

Ukyou chuckled. "If I wanted to be mean, I could point out that you, Akane Tendo, are lecturing me about being patient and understanding about a romantic rival and to give Ranma the benefit of the doubt. You are obviously a pod person. What have you done with the real Akane?!"

Akan punched her shoulder in irritation. "Do you want me to get mad!?"

"Now that sounds like something you'd say to Ranma!" Ukyou giggled.

Akane's expression softened. "Yeah… well… Maybe it's just something I'd say to my baka inazuke."

Ukyou opened her mouth, then closed it again. "Yeah… we did kinda do that, didn't we?" She smiled and cupped Akane's cheek. "You think… in that alternate world where Ranma wasn't here… we would have ended up here like this?"

Akane closed her eyes and leaned into her hand. "Doesn't matter. We're here now." She opened her eyes and cupped Ukyou's cheek in return. "Maybe we should stop worrying about what could be or might have been and just make the most of now?"
Ukyou nodded and leaned in to give her a gentle kiss.

Akari's head was bowed by the time Ranma was done talking, a stunned expression on her face.

Ranma swallowed nervously, mentally reviewing everything she had said, wondering if she had left anything out or left anything unclear. Akari hadn't listened like anyone Ranma was used to - neither jumping to conclusions like Akane nor interjecting her own observations like Nabiki, or a mix like Ukyou or Shampoo. She had simply listened quietly, nodding and making small noises of understanding as Ranma told her the story of how Ryouga had nearly killed himself and the lasting effects the shi shi hokodan had had on both of them. Ranma found herself sharing more than she had intended, going into her own romantic problems, the struggle for acceptance with her parents and even touching briefly on the challenge with Himura. She had been so sure Akari would jump in with something that she was a little surprised when she finally just ran out of things to say.

"L-look, Akari… Umm… if there's anything I messed up or isn't clear…" Ranma said nervously.

"... Thank you," Akari said softly, raising her eyes to look at her. Ranma could see they were damp. "Thank you for saving Ryouga…" She sniffed, then closed her eyes and shuddered and it was clear, even to Ranma's poor ability to read people, that she was only just holding it together.

"Woah, woah! Akari, d-don't…" Ranma stepped forward, but was abruptly uncertain what to do.

Akari balled up her fists. "I… I knew he was struggling with things… B-but I let my grandfather say those awful things to him… I let him leave…" She shuddered again. "I don't deserve to… to…"

"No no no no no no no!" Ranma quickly stepped forward, grabbing her by the shoulders as the prospect of finally stabilizing Ryouga teetered on the brink of evaporation. "I know what you're gonna say, 'cuz it's exactly the sorta thing Ryouga would say and it's just as wrong when he says it! This isn't your fault, Akari!"

The green-haired girl blinked at her and sniffed, looking surprised.

"Look, I ain't always had the most selfless motives for trying to get you an' him together, but, for once in my stupid selfish life, I managed to stumble into doing a good thing! You an' him belong together. He's crazy about you… and when he's crazy about someone he does dumb things sometimes."

For a moment Ranma thought she had successfully defused the situation. She smiled as Akari sniffled quietly. Then she saw her eyes start to tear up and her lower lip quiver, and a surge of panic gripped her as she realised immediately what was coming next.

"... H-hang on, wait, lemme get…" Ranma said nervously, releasing Akari's shoulders to step back, but it was already too late.

The pig-loving girl burst into tears and glomped her, burying her face against Ranma's shoulder as she started sobbing hysterically.

Ranma stiffened and started looking around frantically for the mallet or enraged rival or camera flash or ninja sleeping dart or whatever. "Ah… ah… I… Ummm…"
Tentatively Ranma put her arms around the girl and even managed a timid pat on the back. "...L-look, Akari…"

But Ranma couldn't think of anything to say and Akari wasn't giving her much else to latch onto, so she gave up and just stood there, letting the girl cry. She felt a detached sense of guilt, but for once it wasn't something so simple or clear as having said or done something stupid, where she could easily see where she had erred. She got the unsettling feeling that this was something that she couldn't do anything about. Most of the time when girls cried she either did what was needed to fix it or they ran off and resolved it themselves. Just being there while someone cried themselves out was a new and somewhat uncomfortable experience for her.

Eventually, Akari did wind down. Sheepishly, she released Ranma and wiped at her eyes with the heel of her hand. "Ranma, I'm so sorry…!"

"No, no, it's okay!" Ranma waved her hands placatingly. "J-just… I'm really glad Ryouga didn't see that. He'd probably think i was trying to steal you or something."

Akari giggled. "That's right, you are a boy, aren't you? It's easy to forget sometimes. Especially when you dress up." She cocked her head. "Did you do that for Ryouga's benefit?"

Ranma's eyes widened and she blushed, quickly shaking her head in denial. "What!? No way! I'm just…" she sighed. "I've had to use this waterproof soap to lock myself as a girl occasionally and it lasts for a few days so I'm still stuck. Since I ain't gonna change back if I get splashed, I figured I might as well wear stuff that fits."

"I suppose a side benefit of your curse is you can always borrow clothes from one of your fiancees," Akari said with a smile. "I'm amazed you managed to find a way to balance four fiancees like that and still have time to be such a good friend to Ryouga."

"I don't deserve any credit…" Ranma said awkwardly. "Nabiki and Shampoo are the ones who came up with the plan and the girls did most of the work. I'm just kinda freelancing, like always." She felt a small pang as her own self-deprecating comment struck a tad too close to a bit of buried insecurity.

Akari shook her head. "No… you're honestly amazing. You've…” she sighed. "You saved Ryouga's life, you've helped him go back to school, you've reunited him with his mother, and you're helping him find a cure for his directional curse. You've been a better girlfriend to Ryouga than I have been. I thought for a moment it might have been intentional."

Ranma's eyes widened. "Woah, hold on, I'm not…! Me'n Ryo aren't…!"

Akari giggled. "No, of course not, you're a boy!" She cocked her head. "But I know you're a good friend to Ryouga. I know boys are sometimes awkward with being supportive to each other that way, especially with that Link making you aware of each other's emotions. I can see how pretending to be a girl, even just outwardly, would make it a little easier - at least for Ryouga. He's always been so chivalrous!"

Ranma's eye twitched as she remembered several occasions where Ryouga had mercilessly beaten the crap out of her as a girl. "Yeah… sure… chivalrous as a pig."

"Exactly!" Akari clapped her hands. She reached forward and took Ranma's hands in her own, her expression turning serious. "Could… could I ask a huge favor? Could… could you keep it up for just a bit longer? So I can see how you do it? I want to learn how to… to be strong and supportive for him like you are!"

Ranma blinked owlishly. "You… want me to pretend to be Ryo's girlfriend?"

Akari nodded, a determined look on her face. "If it was anyone else I'd go out of my mind with jealousy and worry but if it's you it's fine! I want to be the best girlfriend I can be for Ryoga and you know him better than anyone. If I watch you, I know I can get better!"

Ranma closed her eyes. She was starting to feel one of those headaches coming on. "Akari… you know being a girlfriend isn't the same as just hanging out, right? Boyfriends and girlfriends… do stuff together…"

"Y-you mean like h-hand holding and… and…" Akari blushed and fidgeted nervously, poking her fingers together. "...K-k-k-k-k-k-k-k-kissing?"

"Among other things, yeah!" Ranma said, feeling a bit of a blush of her own as she was now more than a little educated about those 'other things'.

Akari shook her head and slapped her cheeks, the determined look returning. "I'll endure it! Hand holding… h-hugging, a-and… and even kissing!"

"What!?" Ranma gaped at her.

"You probably kn-know how Ryoga likes to be kissed better than me, right? Because of the Link? If… if I see how you do it, then I'm sure I can make our first kiss the best he's ever had!" Akari clasped her hands and gave Ranma a pleading look. "Please, Ranma! I'm begging you!"

Ranma massaged her temples. That headache had decided to settle in for a long stay now. "I am not kissing your boyfriend!"

"Then at least the hugging and hand holding? You've done that with him, right?" Akari asked, chewing her lower lip.

"I… w-well, technically…" Ranma stammered.

"Help me, Ranma, you're my only hope! I'm desperate! If I can't become more like you are for Ryoga, I'm afraid I might lose him for good!" Akari looked about ready to start crying again.

"Okay, okay!" Ranma held up warding hands and glanced nervously at the door, not trusting her luck to last through a second crying session. "I'll… I'll do what I can, okay? Just… just don't expect too much. I'm not really doing anything special."

"Thank you!" Akari hugged her abruptly again, causing another lockup. Fortunately, this hug was brief.

After releasing Ranma, Akari composed herself quickly and sketched a formal bow. "I look forward to learning from you, sensei."

Ranma sighed. "Please don't call me that. I'm already senpai to a girl in my class who seems to think I'm a good female role model. I don't wanna deal with the possibility of this becoming a thing."

000
Ryouga sighed as he got a concerned stare from a couple of mall goers as they passed by - the latest in a long series of concerned stares he had received. He smiled at them and laughed weakly in an attempt to show them that everything was all right.

"Maybe it's some kind of S&M thing," one said in aside to the other, though still quite audibly.

"We shouldn't stare. Let's just go." The pair quickened their pace as they left the food court.

Ryouga's weak laughter trailed off and he hung his head. Was it REALLY necessary to tie me to the chair, Ranma!?

He tugged his bonds lightly. Ranma had used several of Ryouga's bandanas to bind his ankles to the chair, and tie his hands behind him. Akari had only barely talked Ranma out of adding a gag as well.

Naturally this had attracted a bit of attention. Including several mall goers, a couple of concession stand employees, and one mall security guard. Each time the explanation had gotten more awkward and cringy, especially when it came out it was two girls who had tied him up. The knowing looks Ryouga had gotten from a few people made him seriously consider snapping his bonds and using his bakusai tenketsu to drill his way down to the center of the earth.

He caught a flash of crimson out of the corner of his eye and turned to see a familiar redhead walking towards his table with Akari in tow.

"Sorry for keeping you waiting!" Akari said brightly. "You know how girls are."

"Yeah, but what does that have to do with Ranma?" Ryouga quipped.

"Ha hah, funny, pig breath," Ranma grumbled, unexpectedly subdued as she started undoing the bandanas.

"I'm so sorry for having to tie you up, Ryouga," Akari said as Ryouga's rubbed his freed wrists. "Ranma thought it was best though..."

"I don't know why my hands needed to be tied," Ryouga grumbled, glaring at the redhead over his shoulder as she worked on his ankles.

"Do you remember your first date with Akari?" Ranma asked grumpily.

Ryouga rubbed the back of his head and laughed nervously, stealing a glance at Akari and wondering if he was going to be quizzed on something. "Of course I do, ahahahahaha!"

Ranma rolled her eyes and stood. "You were supposed to meet Akari by a statue near the pond in the park?"

Ryouga scowled. "I remember that! There wasn't any statue! That's why I got lost!"

"I tied you to the statue, dumbass!" Ranma growled. "You ripped it out of the ground and never actually noticed you had it on your back!"
Ryouga folded his arms and huffed. "Well… maybe you should have picked a sturdier statue."

"It was a statue of an elephant. A life-sized statue of an elephant. Made of concrete," Ranma said crossly.

"Ooooh, I see! Applied knowledge of his needs and habits!" Akari said, drawing Ryouga's attention. She was hastily writing in an old, dog-eared notebook that bore the title 'Pig Training Records'.

"A-Akari...?" Ryouga asked uncertainly.

"Oh, don't mind me!" Akari beamed at him as she snapped the book shut. "Just keep on with what you were doing!"

"Can we just go get some ice cream now?" Ranma asked plaintively as she returned Ryouga's bandanas to him.

"Sure, I uh… I guess?" Ryouga stood and started following the redhead in the direction he assumed would lead to the ice cream shop.

"Ahem," Akari cleared her throat.

Ranma and Ryouga both glanced back at her. Akari beamed at Ranma, then motioned towards Ryouga while looking her in the eyes.

Ryouga frowned, unsure what was going on, but he noticed the redhead's shoulders sag. Before he could ask what was wrong, she unexpectedly took hold of his arm, looping hers around it and resumed leading him towards the ice cream shop.

Ryouga's eyes widened as he turned back and gave Akari a panicked look, then back to Ranma. "Akari, this isn't what it looks like… I can explain! Ranma can explain! Ranma, explain!" He gave the redhead a desperately pleading look.

"Calm down, pork butt," Ranma sighed, sounding tired. "This is Akari's idea. I'll explain later. Just roll with it for now, okay?"

"Hmmm… pig-theme pet names… I thought he didn't like those?" Akari said behind them, followed by the sounds of furious scribbling. "I'm learning so much!"

000

Konatsu sighed as he walked through the market. He kept his head bowed, his demeanor demure. As a proper young lady should. The thought came unbidden into his mind.

He felt a twinge at the thought that caused him to pause, his hand to move and clutch at his kimono, just over his chest. He covered the momentary lapse by feigning a slight readjustment of the garment before continuing.

He continued to thread his way amongst the market stalls. They didn't have any great need for produce, but when Ukyou and Akane had returned and instructed Konatsu to put out the 'closed' sign for the day, he knew it was best he find something to occupy himself elsewhere.

How ironic. I cannot be what I was raised to be and I do not know how to be what I was born as. And neither is what the one I love wants.
He paused at a vegetable stall, examining the radishes. He gave the shopkeeper a smile, which was returned, the man more than eager to answer any questions Konatsu might have.

"Oh hey, you're Konatsu, aren't you? From Ucchan's?"

Konatsu raised his head and smiled at the familiar face of the girl who walked up. She was on of the few who was a regular on Sundays - when Ukyou seldom worked. Konatsu had come to develop a special relationship with what he considered his regulars. "Mineko! Yes, I come here now and then. Not often on a Sunday."

"I noticed Ucchan's was closed. Everything okay?" the girl asked, looking concerned. She was an athletic girl, obsessed with making it to the Olympics - so much so she had dyed swaths of her short dark hair in the colors of the Olympic rings (Though Konatsu had originally mistaken it to mean something else. Thankfully, the girl had not been offended.)

"Lady Ukyou had… personal business to attend to. So I thought it a good time to pick up a few things," Konatsu said. He looked down at the paltry number of items in the basket.

Mineko sighed sympathetically. "More romantic troubles?"

Konatsu straightened his posture unconsciously. "Oh, no… my relationship with Lady Ukyou has never been romantic, so…"

Mineko rolled her eyes. "Please, girl. I know you better than that. Want to grab a cup of tea? Since we both seem to be free?"

"You don't have practise today?" Konatsu asked, aware of how seriously the girl took her training.

Mineko sighed. "That was part of the reason I was coming by Ucchan's."

Konatsu winced. He had been privy to quite of bit of the girl's woes and taken it as a point of honor to keep her confidence. "Come… I know a good place."

000

The procession of Ranma leading Ryouga, followed by Akari taking notes and making the occasional comment continued up until they got to the ice cream parlor. Ryouga offered to pay for Akari, but she declined distractedly, smiling and insisting he pretend she wasn't there. Ranma just looked even more weary, to the point of selecting a comparatively ordinary sundae as they sat down. Akari took the booth behind theirs, writing furiously. Ryouga kept trying to ask Ranma questions, only to get more of the 'I'll explain later'.

"Oh! I need a pencil sharpener!" Akari said, finally having worn the graphite down to a nub. She bounced out of her seat and leaned over Ryouga's shoulder. "I'm just going to to the stationary store really quick, Ryouga. If any date stuff happens that might be important, write it down for me, okay?" She kissed him on the cheek, then left the shop, almost running towards the stationary store.

"Okay, now can you tell me what's going on?" Ryouga demanded once Akari was out of earshot.

Ranma stabbed at her half-eaten sundae with her spoon, looking almost depressed. "She… wants me to pretend to be your girlfriend. So she can watch."

Ryouga blinked. He rewound the comment and replayed it in his brain a few times until he was fairly certain he had completely misheard it. "I'm sorry… what?"
Ranma sighed heavily. "I… kinda spilled the beans to Akari about… everything."

Ryouga blinked again, then his eyes widened. His hand twitched. "Everything?"

Ranma nodded miserably.

Ryouga held up his hand and pointed to it. "Everything! Everything!?"

"Yes!" Ranma said tightly. "When she started talking about me being your Anchor I thought you already had!"

Ryouga flushed, then ducked his head, rubbing the back of his head. "I... guess we should have compared notes on what story we were telling."

Ranma heaved another sigh. "Well, now she knows everything. Everything everything. Y'know… except the…" she blushed. "... the stuff I only know because of the Link. So she's not thinking I'm actually interested in you or anything. She knows I'm really a guy, so she doesn't think…"

"... the stuff literally everyone else we know thinks?" Ryouga finished for her dryly, pillowing his cheek on his fist.

"Yeah," Ranma grumbled. "Anyway... she still thinks I've been doing something right, an' somehow my pretend girlfriend routine is doing better than her actual girlfriend routine, so… She wants to watch me and you and try to learn what it is I'm doing differently."

Ryouga frowned skeptically. "That's... that's..."

"Insane?! I know!" Ranma exploded.

Ryouga glared at her. "Don't call my girlfriend insane!"

"I'm not...!" Ranma cut off, clenched her fists and forced herself to take a couple of deep breaths to get her frustration under control. "I'm not, Ryouga, but I don't think she totally grasps how this 'pretend girlfriend' thing works! She wants to watch us do all the relationship stuff!"

"'All'? What do you mean...?" Ryouga replied, confused.

"I just barely talked her out of you and me kissing so she could get pointers!" Ranma hissed in a low voice. "I mean she's expecting everything! Dates, hand holding, hugging, all of the little... things couples do just being couples."

"I... I..." Ryouga stared at her. "W-wait, you... you're good at faking this stuff, right? S-so, all we gotta do..."

Ranma shook her head. "I'm good enough to fool Kuno, Ryouga. And mebbe you on a bad day, but normally once you process 'cute girl' your brain switches off. Do you really want one of my 'fake fiancee' routines as your girlfriend? Because that's what you'll get! Akari is gonna watch us like a hawk, and then use that as a basis for how she acts with you."

Ryouga hung his head, eyes staring sightlessly as his expression twisted with horror. "Oh, god..."

Ranma gave him a tired look. "So... this is the part where you fly off the handle, yell about how I've ruined your life, start a fight that causes enough property damage to get us banned from the mall, and then Akari gets the idea that your ideal relationship involves lots and lots of domestic violence until you finally sit down and talk things out with her." She spooned up some of her melting sundae and popped it into her mouth. "D'ya think maybe we could just skip to the part where you fix this instead? I kinda like this mall. I don't wanna have to go through getting measured for bras again anytime soon."

"... Fix it?" Ryouga repeated dumbly, only half-processing her words.

"Yeah, it is kinda your fault, with you running off and making her think she's not good enough an' all." Ranma said offhandedly, twirling her spoon in her fingers.

"Yes… of course… That's it…" Ryouga muttered quietly. He raised his head, leaned forward and put his hands on Ranma's shoulders, looking into her eyes with a determined gleam. "That's what we have to do!"

"We'? Why 'we'? Where is the 'we' in this?" Ranma asked, not liking the particular mad gleam in his eyes.

Ryouga started babbling, "We just need to show her the ideal relationship! The one I've always wanted to have with Akari! All we need to do is act it out together, and…" he giggled occasionally, a manic look crossing his face. "... It doesn't matter how horrible it is, if it's for the sake of Akari's future happiness with me!"

"'Horrible…?!'" Ranma yelped outraged. She brought her hands up and slapped them on either side of his face, forced him to look her in the eyes and brought the Link to bear, to make sure he couldn't ignore her as the full force of her annoyance hit him.

"We are not doing that, you idiot!" she growled. "I'm done with the 'wacky hijinks' method of fixing things! Nabiki taught me that how you fix this sort of thing is you talk with the person. So you need to sit down with her and talk!"

Ryouga blinked and seemed to snap out of his manic episode. His eyes refocused on her. "You… think that'll work?"

Ranma sighed then gave him a wan smile. "Ryouga… it's what every problem we run into eventually boils down to. That, or beating up someone so bad they stay outta your life for good, and I don't think 'Option B' is really appropriate in this case. I went through this… well, a bunch of times with the girls, and I'm finally clueing in. So… mebbe lemme help you shortcut it a bit with Akari, okay? I don't want you to hafta go through the stuff I've gone through just to figure this out."

Ryouga opened his mouth to reply, then closed it. He could sense the shapes and colors of what he had learned was concern from the redhead. She was being sincere and genuine and suddenly he felt a little self-conscious about the madness he had started spouting a moment before. Ranma's right… ugh, what was I THINKING? Was I really going to try and force Ranma to act out the perfect relationship with me, just to try and make Akari act that way?

He dropped his gaze and looked away, ashamed. "I am an idiot."

"No, you don't gotta be embarrassed, Ryo. You just panicked a bit, is all," Ranma said, giving him a reassuring smile. "I've… been doing a lot of it myself lately."

He felt a sense of warmth from her through the Link and looked her in the eyes again. It was reassuring to think that someone else understood. He found himself smiling back, though he wasn't entirely sure why.

The moment lasted just long enough for them to realize they were far too close to each other, and in a pose that would and could be easily misconstrued. They each sat quickly back in their seats,
"S-so how do we handle this?" Ryouga asked, trying to get past the awkward tension in the air.

"For today we should probably play it straight until you and Akari get home," Ranma replied thoughtfully. "And… we should probably hash out what you're gonna say. I know from experience that this sort of thing can be misinterpreted real easy."

Ryouga groaned and dropped his head onto his arms. "Tell me about it. Do you have any idea how long I spent while I was wandering trying to figure out the words to tell Akane how I felt? And I never managed it! Even when I thought of the perfect words, I made hash of it when I talked to her!"

Ranma patted his arm sympathetically. "Tell you what, we'll ask Nabiki for help. She's good with words an' stuff."

Ryouga lifted his head a bit. "She did offer to help…"

"There, see!" Ranma scooped up the last bit of her sundae triumphantly. "Ain't nothin' wrong that ain't fixable. If Nabiki can sort out my mess of a lovelife, I don't think there's anything you can throw at her that'll faze her."

Ryouga sat back up and gave the redhead a sincere smile. "... Thanks."

Ranma blinked at him, spoon still in her mouth. "Whaffor?" she mumbled around it.

"Just… not giving up on me, I guess," Ryouga replied.

Ranma looked away, a little color on her cheeks. "S'not like ya gotta make a big deal out of it," she muttered.

000

Just outside of the ice cream shop, scooched down on the floor outside the window, Akari scribbled feverishly in her notebook after having watched the entire exchange.

I KNEW making them think I wasn't there would be a good idea! she thought happily. Her book was filled with notes and little sketches of each situation as it came up. Ryouga was about to do something impulsive and she snapped him out of it… was that the Link? No, I think it was more than that. Sincerity, I think. She knows how to talk to him. That makes sense, right? They've been friends since middle school.

She remembered the look the two had exchanged that had looked almost like it might become a kiss. Akari felt a pang in her heart but closed her eyes and shook her head. No! I-I said I'd endure, even if they do! Besides…

Her fingertips brushed idly over a sketch she had drawn on the page of the two of them, Ranma cupping his face and looking into his eyes, and the almost captivated expression Ryouga had worn.

… If she really wanted to keep him, she wouldn't work so hard to give him away, would she?

000

Introducing others to Clara's Leaf was a rare pleasure for Konatsu. He was still somewhat cross that he had missed Akane and Ranma's introductions to the place. It was always fascinating to watch how people reacted to Jiro-sensei's 'routine'.

Tradition and mystique bred interest and investment, not only making the odd little Tea Shop seem special and unique beyond the kitsch of the decor, but it made the customers themselves seem unique. Jiro might not get many customers, but Konatsu was sure they were lifelong and loyal. It was a technique he dearly wished to learn from the man, though Konatsu's commitment to Lady Ukyou precluded any sort of apprenticeship.

Still, it was a pleasure to watch the master at work as the kimono-robed man swept in, guessed Mineko's drink of choice with flourish and earned that same shocked surprise he always did when he delivered something they had never tried before, yet which suited them utterly. It was a mesh of an encyclopedic knowledge of his craft and product, a keen eye and an ability to read people at a glance that bordered on the telepathic.

"I've never been to a tea shop quite like this," Mineko said, sipping tentatively at her tea.

"Jiro-sensei is a master at what he does. I hope someday to approach his skill," Konatsu said. He sipped delicately at his own drink. "So… practise is not going well?"

Mineko sighed and fidgeted a little. "Practise is fine, but… that seems like all we do," she groused. "Our Captain has our back-benchers playing more than us. I know she said we'd play more mid-season, and she doesn't want to wear us out early, but…" she looked down. "... Sometimes… sometimes I think she just picked us because we made her look good - that we're there to be her 'gang', not her team."

"I know your Captain has a contentious history," Konatsu replied carefully, "but she's also very successful, which is why you joined the team, yes?"

"I joined the team because I wanted to play volleyball - because I want to go to the Olympics - more than anything." Mineko started playing with a lock of her dyed hair. "I don't care about going pro, or the scouts, or…" She squeezed her eyes shut. "I just want to play! I want to play against players who are good; who are better than me, even. I don't mind losing as long as I can learn, but…"

"Your Captain feels differently on the matter," Konatsu replied, seeing the conflict. As a kunoichi, he was groomed to serve, even if he didn't agree with those he served. It had taken extreme and continual mistreatment at the hands of his stepmother and stepsisters for him to rebel.

"Himura wants to win, no matter the cost," Mineko said. "A loss - even one that she learns from - is intolerable to her. So… she stacks the deck. Not just against her opponents, but…" she sighed. "... She has ways of making sure the people on her side can't change their minds."

"So you chased your dream… and have ended up someplace you didn't expect. And now you feel trapped between," Konatsu said softly. "I… can sympathize with that."

"I always thought you got out of your bad situation?" Mineko asked, cocking her head inquisitively.

Konatsu smiled and shook his head. "It's not a 'bad situation' as such. Just… a dream I chased that seems to have led nowhere."

"You mean your 'Lady Ukyou'," Mineko said. "What's the problem? I know me'n all the rest of your regulars have been rooting for you! Didn't you say you were gonna have a talk with her?"

"I was too late," Konatsu said, his voice heavy with regret. "I hesitated, and… she has another who
"What, Ranma?! Come on! That Casanova’s been with, like, half the girls and a quarter of the guys at school! There’s no way that’s gonna last past…” Mineko scoffed, her hackles rising.

Konatsu held up a hand. He appreciated the girl’s ire on his behalf, but he felt it misplaced. He knew many of the rumours about Ranma were untrue and undeserved and didn’t wish to see them repeated. "Not Ranma. Another. A woman," Konatsu said finally.

"What? Seriously?" Mineko scowled. "Konatsu, look, I know what you’re thinking, but… I mean, I don’t care what you were born as, you’re twice the woman anyone…"

Konatsu held up his hand again. "It isn't what I am that's the problem. If I thought for a moment that changing my gender would please my Lady Ukyou, I would do it in a heartbeat. I once thought being the gender I was born into would please her, but… she has never asked nor wanted anything of me but that I be myself. The problem…” a pained expression crossed his beautiful features, "...is that I am simply not the one she loves."

"So… what are you going to do?" Mineko asked.

Konatsu smiled sadly. "Carry on? I never held out much hope that I would win Lady Ukyou's heart. It's not the reason I am loyal to her. As long as she is happy… I am content. I have a place and a purpose. It is enough to see how happy she is now that her own dreams are coming true."

"Don't you have any dreams of your own?" Mineko asked, leaning forward. She gestured at the Tea Shop around them. "Like… what you said about studying to be like Jiro here."

"I can do that at Ucchan's," Konatsu said. "It's not what is served that's important, it is the style and panache that goes into that service. The point where the line between ninjutsu and customer service is blurred," He gestured towards Mineko's cup. "Your tea cup, for instance, has been refilled twice while we've been chatting."

Mineko blinked and looked down at her teacup. It was nearly full.

"And even I couldn't tell you how Jiro-sensei did it," Konatsu said with a smile. "He is nowhere to be seen, except…"

"... When called upon?" Jiro replied, stepping smoothly into view at the side of their table. It wasn't jarring or startling like he had just apparated; there was a certainty that he had simply walked over and had clearly been seen approaching the whole time, yet before that moment Konatsu had no memory of him being anywhere near them.

"I… see your point," Mineko conceded, wide-eyed.

"The best customer service is when the customer is not aware they're being serviced at all - their needs are simply met," Jiro said with a smile. "So, before you leave, I have one last tradition to inflict upon you, if you would humor me." He produced a large box of tea cups, seemingly from nowhere. "Please, pick one that strikes your fancy, and that will be your teacup."

Konatsu held up his own and showed her the flowing pattern around the rim of her cup, like a vine dotted with small images of pumpkins.

Mineko nodded, then looked in the box for a moment before making her selection, proudly drawing forth a cup with a bold symbol of a lantern on it.
Jiro smiled, found the matching saucer and paired them. "It will be washed and ready for you on your next visit, my dear."

Ranma glanced at her phone as they walked. There hadn't been any calls all day. I hope that means good news? Kinda wish I had clarified with Nabiki if she was going to call if things went WELL or not.

"Everything okay?" Ryouga asked, having noticed her looking at her phone. Akari was walking a few paces back, as had been her habit for the day, scribbling notes in her book and occasionally watching what they were saying and doing - which really wasn't much of anything.

Ranma shrugged. "I think so? Nabiki said she'd call if things went bad."

"Things? What things?!" Ryouga asked suspiciously, giving the redhead a searching look.

Ranma tucked the phone away. "Ummm… she was meeting with the fiancees today to tell them about the Link."

Ryouga's eyes widened. He straightened and took a deep breath, then looked off in a random direction. "Yeah… well… Good luck with that! I'm just going to walk in this direction for the rest of my life…"

Ranma sighed and caught the back of his shirt, holding him back by the collar as he continued to try and walk, feet slipping uselessly on the sidewalk.

"Stop being dramatic, dumbass," Ranma growled, annoyed. "If they were gonna come kill us, we'd be dead already."

"Safer to be lost for a few months," Ryouga replied, still trying to pull away.

"Ukyou held a grudge against me and pops for ten years," Ranma said dryly. "She could teach you a thing or two about patience and revenge, an' I'm pretty sure what Shampoo and Akane lack in that department they make up for in determination. You think even with your curse they wouldn't find you eventually?"

Ryouga continued to struggle for a few more seconds, then slumped and sighed. "... You're right. We need to face our deaths like men."

Ranma released his shirt, letting him overbalance, topple forward and crash to the ground.

"Oh, Ryouga!" Akari called out, but she seemed to wrestle down her urge to rush to his side, opting instead to watch and see what Ranma did.

Ryouga bounced back to his feet quickly. "What did I do to deserve that!?"

"Technically nothing, but that's just in case you were thinking of slipping a crack about my manliness in there somewhere," Ranma said. "Look… Nabiki is taking care of it and I trust her to sort this out."

Ryouga clapped his hand over his eyes. "Ugh! And Akane had finally stopped hating me, too…"

Ranma scowled. "If they should be mad at anyone, it's me. You didn't do anything wrong!"

Ryouga paused and peeked at her through his fingers. He was giving her an odd look, like Ranma had just done something weird.

Ranma felt a warmth rise in her cheeks that for some reason she couldn't identify. "What?" she asked testily. "What's with the look?"

Ryouga dropped his hand and looked away quickly. "Nothing...! Just... weird that you're taking my side in this."

Ranma folded her arms and huffed. "Not like I'm doing it for your sake!" she said quickly. "It's just... It's true. Getting mad at you and beating you up for something you had no control over isn't fair."

"Yeah, but it'd get you off the hook with your fiancées," Ryouga pointed out.

"Well... you've had me over a barrel like that a few times but you saved me instead, so..." Ranma muttered, fidgeting a little. Why's he gotta make this so weird?

Ryouga looked uncertain. "If... this is about that stupid koi rod..."

"I was talking about the weakness moxibustion, when everyone an' their idiot ninja minion was trying to beat the crap outta me while I was too weak to do anything about it!" Ranma said quickly, glaring at him in annoyance. She looked away after a moment, feeling a surge of uncertainty. "... A-and I guess the Koi rod thing counts too, maybe. I don't really remember much about that."

Which was a lie. Ranma remembered everything about that incident.

"R-right, sorry!" Ryouga muttered. "I... I appreciate it anyway. Thanks."

"Yeah... just... don't read too much into it," Ranma said, pushing past him as she resumed the walk to Ryouga's house.

Akari continued to write furiously in her notebook. "Ryouga... prefers... tsunderes..."

Ranma whirled on her "I AM NOT TSUNDERE!"

Dropping off Ryouga and Akari had been a little awkward; Akari was still avidly taking notes, and seemed confused when Ranma was content to leave with just a wave, asking Ranma if there shouldn't be a hug or a peck on the cheek or something. Ranma had tried to deflect while Ryouga looked ready to start using the breaking point technique to tunnel his way to the center of the earth. Akari had been adamant that she wanted to see Ranma's 'Girlfriend Routine' for that part of a 'Date'. In the end, Ranma had caved and managed to satisfy her by giving Ryouga a quick hug.

The best part, of course, was that Ryouga's mother saw the whole thing. Ranma could feel the questioning look from the older woman.

It didn't help that the Link made hugs... complicated. As soon as her arms had gone around Ryouga, the Link had flared to life with the usual flood of confusing perceptions. It had only lasted a moment, but it had been disorienting.

When Nabiki had dragged her back to bed after revealing she was part of the Link, simply snuggling with her had been a surprisingly intimate experience. In such close proximity, the emotions of the other person became almost like physical sensations. There was a perception of presence of the other person and a sort of constant current that flowed between them. With them both relaxed, it had been soothing and comforting… anxieties seemed to melt away as they were shared. It made getting out of bed extra-difficult, but the benefits of it had lingered; the knowledge that there was that warmth out there was comforting.

Ryouga, though… his emotions had been spiking, chaotic, disturbed. What felt like Guilt and Anxiety shot through everything. But there had also been a kind of rush as soon as she touched him that seemed to surge just after she made contact which, for a moment, obliterated all but the most intense of the other emotions. It wasn't anger or panic - it was a burst of warm red-gold, but shot through with sickly dark that seemed to well up from the core of him.

Is that what I do to him now? Ranma wondered, feeling a twinge of guilt. When I wore those disguises so he wouldn't know it was me in the past, was that what happened in his head? I gotta find a way to fix this, she thought finally. I don't wanna hurt him just touching him! I gotta ask Nabiki what to do…

She had been walking lost in thought for so long that it was a bit of a shock to realize she had arrived at the Dojo. She shook her head to clear it and put the Ryouga problem aside for the moment. I wonder if anyone is home right now? She checked her phone nervously. Still no calls… I hope that's a good sign?

"I'm home! Anyone here?" Ranma opened the front door, stepped in and slipped off her shoes.

"RANMAAAAAAA!"

There were at least two female voices in perfect sync and the sound of feet pounding the floorboards as someone started running from the family room.

"WhoopsSorryWrongHouseMyMistakeGOTTAGO!" Ranma turned, threw the door back open and started to bolt. She came up short when Ukyou skidded to a stop in front of her, having come around the house from the side door to intercept her.

"Oh no you don't, sugar!" Ukyou said with a determined look on her face.

Ranma drew back but another body slammed into her from behind and catapulted her forward. She tried in vain to stop herself but she was already off-balance and couldn't prevent herself pitching forward into Ukyou, her face getting mashed into the taller girl's chest.

Ucchan smells nice, Ranma thought as she prepared for inevitable death. At least this can be a pleasant final memory before I die.

She waited for the mallet to land. Akane was right up against her back; any minute she'd regain her footing, pull out some bludgeoning instrument made out of depleted uranium and permanently imprint Ranma's face on the paving stones.

Any minute.

…

Hold up. Ranma peeked tentatively up at Ukyou when Death missed his cue, followed by Pain and Suffering missing theirs, as things started to feel less like the brief and awkward moment before oblivion and more like she was being intentionally sandwiched. "Ummm… hi, Ucchan?"

Ukyou smirked at her, eyebrow raised. "You done motorboating me, sugar, or should I get you a snorkel?"
Ranma blushed. She felt Akane hook her chin her her shoulder and turned her head cautiously, checking for the usual outrage.

Instead she felt Akane's arms slip around her waist and the youngest Tendo grinned at her. "Gotcha."

Ranma deflated, slumping against Ukyou as she sighed heavily in relief. "Kane, you can't do that to me! I thought I was in major trouble!"

"You are in major trouble, sugar," Ukyou said.

Ranma swallowed, realizing that she had allowed herself to be thoroughly grappled by both girls and that escape was now impossible. "Ummm… had that chat with Nabiki, huh?"

"Uh huh," Akane replied. "Ranmaaaaa… why did you keep something like that from us?"

Ranma squeezed her eyes shut. "Because… Because I didn't know how to explain it! I was afraid you'd kill me, or kill Ryo, or… or think I didn't love ya, or…"

Akane put a finger to her lips. "It's okay, Ranma," she said, cutting off the redhead's frantic babbling. "We're not mad."

"We were mad," Ukyou huffed, but her stern glare faded. "Well… we were concerned."

"Nabiki explained it to us and after we talked it out and thought about it, I think we understand a bit better," Akane said. She paused. "… Is that why you've been scarce all day? Nabiki told you to vanish for a bit?"

"Uh… yeah," Ranma said, deciding to leave out the bit about taking Ryouga with her.

Ukyou rolled her eyes. "I'm still not sure how I feel about the lack of trust there."

"She kind of has a point, Ukyou…" Akane said timidly.

Ukyou sighed. "Yeah, I know… but just because she's right doesn't make it sting any less that she doesn't trust us."

"Shall we go inside?" Akane asked, releasing Ranma and stepping back. "I've got a lot of questions… and dinner is almost ready!"

Ranma blinked. "Did you…" she pointed at Akane.

Akane beamed and nodded. "Uh huh!"

Ranma gave Ukyou a nervous glance. "Is it…?"

Ukyou smirked playfully. "Well, that I don't know Ranchan. It's my first time trying to teach her something that isn't okonomiyaki."

Ranma went pale. "… Oh."

"I can't wait for you to try it! I even tried that spanakopita recipe Shampoo's grandparents gave us!" Akane gushed as she took Ranma's hand and practically dragged her into the house.

000 (Chapter 25 End: Adventures in Pig-training)
I apologize sincerely for the delay in posting. A miscommunication on my part lead to me sitting idle while I waited for my editor to work through this Chapter... while he had already done it and was working through the subsequent chapters. Expect more chapters to be posted in the next few days!
(Three years ago)

Ryouga sighed as he stared down the seemingly endless, unfamiliar stretch of road. His pack was already weighing heavily on his back and his feet ached from walking. The sun was already starting to set over the horizon, casting long shadows that only made everything more unfamiliar and strange.

I thought I had it this time, he thought miserably. He pulled out the hand-drawn map he had made on the way to school to help him find his way home. It had been an exceptionally good morning - only needing a couple of hours to make the trip. He had been certain he had found a route even he could follow, but now his own map seemed incomprehensible to him.

Maybe I should find a place to camp for the night... he thought miserably. He had been looking forward to a hot bath, sleeping in his own bed and a clean change of clothes, but all of those things seemed so far out of reach now. He just hoped he didn't start getting comments about how he smelled again. I think there's a vacant lot over there...

"Whatcha reading?"

Ryouga's head snapped up to find two very blue eyes staring into his; eyes that belonged to a familiar (If upside down) face.

"Yaaaaahh!" He threw himself backwards dropped his map, stumbled back and landed on his butt. He pointed at the pigtailed source of his aggravation. "What the hell do you think you're doing!?"

"Just asking," Ranma said nonchalantly as he swung down from the lamp post he'd been hanging from. He scooped up the map and looked at it curiously, turning it over in his hands a few times. "What's this... a treasure map or something?"

Ryouga got up his feet, stomped over and snatched it away from him. "It's none of your business!"

"Hey, hey, I was just asking!" Ranma said, holding up his hands defensively. "I was just wondering because you've been wandering around the neighborhood for hours!"

"How would you know?" Ryouga asked suspiciously. "Have you been following me!?"

"Nah, I live around here," Ranma said. He pointed back in the direction of the empty lot that Ryouga had been considering as a campsite.

Ryouga squinted. "... What, that white house further back?" He frowned.

"What? No! Right there!" Ranma grabbed his head and turned it squarely towards the empty lot.

Ryouga shoved him off, but then realized where the pigtailed boy was pointing him. He squinted, spotting a small, ratty-looking tent that he had initially mistaken for a pile of detritus.

"You live in a tent?" Ryouga gave the boy a skeptical look. "You're homeless?"

"I ain't homeless!" Ranma said testily. "I just toldja, home is right there!" He waved at the lot. "I mean, maybe it won't be there next week, but nothin' wrong with that, is there?"

"I... guess not?" Ryouga admitted. He had spent his fair share of time camping out in empty lots and parks himself, though that wasn't exactly by choice.

"That's what you got in the pack, right?" Ranma glanced behind him. "You're like me'n Pops, right? Looking for a place to set up?"

"I'm not like you!" Ryoga said gruffly, turning to jerk his pack out of view of the boy's scrutiny. "I have a real house! I… just have trouble finding it sometimes."

"Really? Like, with a door and roof and stuff?" Ranma asked. "I've lived in those a few times when I was a little kid. Pops used to rent these places sometimes while we were in the city, but he says I'm too old for that now. Says it makes you soft."

"You mean he lost his job and now he can't afford it, and he doesn't want to admit it," Ryoga replied, a nasty smirk on his face.

"No! Pops could get a job if he wanted! He just… he's got more important stuff to focus on!" Ranma replied hotly. "He's a martial artist! He's gotta focus on the Art over everythin' else!"

"Which just happens to look exactly like being a bum," Ryoga replied, folding his arms and giving the pigtailed boy a challenging look.

"Hey, you take that back!" Ranma snarled, dropping back into a ready stance.

"So, you wanna fight now, huh?" Ryoga said, slipping his backpack off and dropping into a stance of his own. If I can't sleep in my own bed tonight, I'll settle for wiping that smug grin offa this jerk's face!

"Ranma! Where the hell are you boy?! GET OUT HERE RIGHT NOW!"

Ranma's eyes widened. "Crap! I forgot I was tryin' to be scarce!" He glanced back at the empty lot with a panicked look. He turned back to Ryoga. "Look, lemme see that map…! C'mon, we'll finish this at your house, okay?"

"What?! I don't want you coming over to my house!" Ryoga replied, not budging.

"Look, Pops has been drinkin', an'… an' he's pissed that I swiped some rice crackers he had stashed away for later, an' he keeps talkin' about makin' me dig a trainin' pit an'..." The pigtailed boy swallowed. "Look, it's just best if we weren't here for a while, okay? I don't care where!"

Ryoga paused. As much as he just wanted to cave the annoying boy's face in, he could see a flicker of genuine fear in his eyes. He cautiously relaxed his stance. He shot a glance to the empty lot, spotting an older man in a dirty off-white gi and equally unclean headkerchief stumbling around.

"Fine. See if you can find it," He handed over the map, not looking at the boy. "The address is on the bottom of the page. Probably too far to walk at this point, though…"

000

"Shut up," Ryoga snarled as he looked at his front door.

"How long were you walking around?" Ranma asked, checking the address on the sheet.

"I said shut up!" Ryoga growled.

"It's right behind the lot me'n Pops live at!" Ranma said. "You even pointed at it and asked if it
"It was a weird angle, okay!?" Ryoga snapped at him. "Also, SHUT UP!" He stomped towards the door. "You coming in or what?"

"I… sure," Ranma said after a moment's hesitation, noting the overgrown lawn and the mailbox stuffed to bursting. "You… uhh… you aren't home much?"

Ryoga slid open the door. He really didn't want to reveal his biggest weakness to the bread thief of all people. "Nobody in my family is. It's…" He sighed and bit the bullet. "… It's a family problem. Everyone in my family has a terrible sense of direction. My Mom manages to make it home occasionally, though lately she and I aren't usually home at the same time."

As soon as the door opened, a black and white blur tackled Ryoga, knocking him onto his back. Ranma yelped and leapt out of the way.

Ryoga's sour mood was momentarily forgotten as he laughingly tried to fend off the young dog's affections. "Ahahahaha!... Shirokuro, that tickles! snort... Easy girl!" Ryoga grinned and scratched the young dog behind the ears as she wriggled in joy at his return. "I missed you! How's the house, girl? Keeping the place safe for us? Who's a good girl?"

"You have a dog?" Ranma asked, raising an eyebrow.

"Yeah, Mom brought her home one day. She's still a puppy, really. I feel bad that she gets left alone so much, but she's a smart girl. She already knows how to feed herself. We just gotta leave enough kibble for her." Ryoga sat up, still embracing the dog. He noticed Ranma was crouching nearby, looking uncertain. "Go ahead, she doesn't bite or anything."

Ranma blushed and looked away, then tentatively reached out towards the dog. He nearly jerked back his hand when Shirokuro turned towards him as his fingers brushed her coat, but it was already too late. The black and white dog quickly pounced upon her new playmate and showered him in slobbery exuberance.

Ryoga chuckled as the pigtailed boy laughed and tried in vain to fend off the pup's affections. He stood and stepped inside the house.

"Mom? Dad? You home?" He peered inside the darkened house, but was already sure of the answer. He saw a note pinned to the wall near the door and took it down.

Dear Ryo,

I'm going to be spending the next while in the hospital for tests. It's nothing to worry about, but they want to keep me here a few weeks to make sure my platelets are good. Your mother is coming with me for now, but she'll try and get a cab home once they've got me settled. They think they might have a donor for me, and if they do I'll be here a bit longer, but I'll try and call every day. Take care of Shirokuro and keep up your studies, and I'll see you soon, okay?

Love, Dad.

Ryoga crumpled the note in his hand. This wasn't the first time his father had suddenly left for a 'checkup'. He knew it was more serious; that his father had probably collapsed again. He wished his parents would just be honest with him about the situation.

"Everything all right, man?" Ranma asked from the doorway as he peered inside. Shirokuro stood next to him and whined plaintively.
"Yeah…" Ryouga breathed. "Just a note from them telling me they'll be gone for a bit is all. The house is pretty well stocked, so it's not a big deal." He stuffed the crumpled note in his pocket. "You coming in or not?" He stepped inside, flicking on the lights. It was a bit of a relief to see them come on. Good, power bill is paid. Won't have to sit in the dark.

"Uh, sure…” Ranma stepped inside, looking around as if it was unfamiliar to him to be inside a house. "You got anything to eat?"

Ryouga rolled his eyes. Of course. "Yeah, but I need to check the storeroom first. Whatever's here has gotta last me a couple of months, and I really need a bath first." He glanced over his shoulder at the pigtailed boy, noting he didn't look any cleaner than yesterday. "Furo's big enough for two if you wanna join me."

"Wha…? No, no, I'm fine!" Ranma said quickly, looking suddenly panicked.

Ryouga rolled his eyes. "Seriously? That's what you have personal space issues about? No wonder you're filthy! Haven't you ever been to a public bathhouse?"

"I… when I was little I went with Pops a few times," Ranma said nervously. "Mostly I bathe in streams and lakes an' stuff."

Ryouga just shook his head and motioned the boy to follow him. "Fine. You go first then. Furo's upstairs, you can clean yourself up while I check the larder." Ryouga pointed at the stairs as he walked past them towards the kitchen. "Towels are on the shelf on the left when you enter. Don't make a mess!"

Thankfully the Curse hadn't progressed so far that Ryouga couldn't find his way in his own house yet, though he had a few false starts and ended up in the garage once or twice. Thankfully, the storeroom was well stocked with plenty of non-perishables. The kitchen was stocked as well, and Ryouga decided it would be better to eat what he could of the food in the fridge, as chances were good that it might spoil before the next time he was home. Once he was satisfied there was enough to afford some generosity to the bread thief, he decided to check on him.

I suppose it would be just my luck if he drowned in there, Ryouga thought sourly, tromping up the stairs. He reached the door and paused for a moment, listening, but not hearing anything. For a moment he considered just throwing open the door, but decided that was poor form, even if the rotten jerk deserved it. He knocked on the doorframe. "Oi, you alive in there?"

"Wha…?! Yes! I'm fine!" Ranma's voice was high-pitched with surprise.

Ryouga snorted. "Fell asleep in there, didn't you?"

"NO!... Maybe… yeah…" Ranma admitted guiltily. "It's been a long time, man!"

"Whatever," Ryouga said dismissively. "I'm gonna start dinner. You need anything in there before I do?"

"Ummm… Do you have any cloth bandages?" Ranma asked timidly.

"What, like… gauze?" Ryouga asked.

"Like the stuff you'd use for around your… umm, mid-section."
"Sure, I think so. Why, you hurt or something? You're not bleeding all over the tile, are you?"
Ryouga felt a sinking sensation as he wondered what sort of hidden problems the pigtailed boy might have that were now stewing in the furo. I better drain and scrub the thing before I take a bath...

"No, no... it's for... y'know, SUPPORT. You know, how martial artists wrap bandages around their mid sections? To avoid injury an' stuff," Ranma said quickly. "Mine kinda came apart when I was takin' em off, and..."

Ryouga sighed. *This is turning into a charity case!" Yeah, yeah, there should be something like that in the cabinet in there. Just don't touch any of the medications, okay? Those're for my Dad."

"Okay."

"I'm serious. None of it would be worth anything, and he needs that stuff when he gets home. I'll be checking it when you get out," Ryouga growled.

"Okay! Sheesh, I get it!"

"Okay..." Ryouga said, feeling a little guilty for being judgemental. "Don't fall asleep in there again or I'll have dinner without you. Fifteen minutes, twenty tops."

"Got it."

Ryouga frowned, wondering if there was anything else he should say. He wasn't exactly used to having houseguests, after all. He shrugged and decided it wasn't important and headed back down the stairs.

000

(Present Day)

The next morning was bright and sunny with just a hit of coolness in the air as Fall took hold. The sky was clear, the birds were singing and the day seemed full of possibilities... for those who weren't doomed to spend most of it in a classroom learning how to make numbers do things that only made sense in terms of other numbers. For them, the shining promise of the day was transmuted into a cruel taunt that made crawling back into bed and staying there seem the preferable course.

In other words, it was a typical Monday.

Akane and Ukyou had made the prospect of playing hooky tempting for Ranma. Nabiki had returned to the Nekohanten to resume her training with Shampoo and Ukyou had elected to come over with Akane to meet Ranma.

Ranma had naturally been nervous about how their discovery of the Link had gone, but the two girls seemed more curious about how it worked (though Akane did growl out a warning about 'staying faithful'). Ukyou also seemed rather peeved that Ryouga hadn't confided about it to her, though grudgingly had to concede the matter when Ranma had pointed out it was something of a conflict of interest.

In fact they had been in a surprisingly good mood. Whatever it was that had made them so agreeable, Ranma hoped it happened more often.

Akane's attempt at dinner had been a mixed result; Akane's vegetable stir fry had included sauteed... bits from the rubber band she had forgotten to remove from around the broccoli when she was chopping it up, and it was pretty obvious the few dashes of 'soy sauce' she had added to the recipe had, in fact, been chocolate syrup.

Oddly enough, the much more complex spanakopita recipe had come out perfectly. Despite the recipe being hand-written in a mix of English and Greek, and Kasumi insisting that the kitchen didn't stock several of the necessary ingredients. Ukyou had taken a modicum of offense at the success of the recipe over her effort to coach Akane through the stir fry.

They had just slept that night, so Ranma hadn't bothered to change back. A good night's sleep had done wonders for her mood and Ukyou and Akane had teamed up to give her a pretty decent spar in the morning. The combination of Ukyou's restraining and mobility limiting techniques with Akane's direct application of force actually got them a few solid hits in. Ranma noticed them trying a few new things that didn't work as well and paused the exercise to help them work out the bugs. She found that she was enjoying it a lot more than sparring with her father, which tended more to the 'figure it out yourself if you want the hurting to stop' kind of training.

Which brought her to the furo and an odd thought as she reached for the regular soap for a scrub before she rinsed off and changed back to a guy. The waterproof soap caught her eye in its little case next to the regular soap.

If I used the soap NOW, I'd be safe up to the game on Wednesday. Then I could be a guy for the SECOND half of the week for a change... she thought.

She blinked and stared at the soap for a moment. Is that the point I've gotten to now? I'm SCHEDULING when I get to be a guy? She huffed and reached for the tub of warm water to dump it over her head and end the matter, at least for the duration of her bath.

She hesitated before grabbing the tub.

Am I deciding that I'm OBLIGATED to be a guy until I absolutely HAVE to be a girl? she thought, drawing her hand back and examining it for a moment. Am I only a girl because I HAVE to be?

If There wasn't any stupid challenge that required it, no Palm-tree topknot idiots trying to make my life difficult, no psychotic Yakuza princesses, no worries about my parents disapproving... if I was just choosing what I wanted to do each day... would I go to school as a guy? She stared at her hand.

I think you're starting to LIKE being a girl all the time, boy!

Ranma scowled at the echo of her father's voice in her head.

It's unacceptable for you to attend school as a girl! You are a Man amongst Men, and if you refuse to act like it, then you know the consequences! When I find out what you have been doing...

She winced a bit at the threat from the echo of her mother, feeling a shiver at the memory of seeing her mother's carefully schooled mask of control and calm slip, and the glimpse she had caught of the contempt in her mother's eyes.

Her jaw tensed. She reached for the waterproof soap and dumped out the tub, refilling it with cool water as she started to lather up. I decide when I'm a guy and when I'm a girl. Not Pops, not the Pineapple brain, not Himura and not even Mom. If I gotta be a girl for school, it's 'cuz I CHOOSE to follow the rules. No one gets to MAKE me. And... I'm choosing that I wanna be able to change back to a guy in the SECOND half of the week. 'Cuz it's MY curse, an' I'm allowed to decide how to
She smiled in triumph at that last bit, feeling better about the sense of control that thought gave her.

Walking to school brought with it the odd sensation of routine.

Sayuri and the team met Nabiki, Shampoo, Hiroshi and Daisuke at the gates of the dojo to wait for Ranma, Ukyou and Akane to emerge. This time they didn't have to wait - the three of them having been up uncharacteristically early. Shampoo naturally gave Ranma one of her flying glomps but the embrace was accepted and returned enthusiastically this time, and with no protest from the others. Ranma in particular had the brightest smile Nabiki had seen on her in some time.

We might just pull this off yet, Nabiki thought wryly.

Kasumi came out with a large sack. She had taken to making one large feast for the group to share at lunch rather than individual bento, despite the protests from the volleyball team that they had their own lunches. Kasumi insisted that this was a small way she could feel like she was a part of things.

"You're all making me wish I was still in high school with all your adventures!" Kasumi said brightly, though there was a hint of wistfulness in her voice.

"You're making it sound like you're an old maid, sis. You're only twenty!" Nabiki chided her.

As they walked away, Nabiki and Akane exchanged glances, then glanced back at the dojo as Kasumi retreated back inside to continue on with her daily routine.

"We gotta find her someone exciting," Nabiki said.

"You guys know plenty of exciting people," Yuka muttered as she dropped back to join them.

"Yeah, but all the exciting people we know are kinda…" Akane started, trailing off weakly.

"... 'Damaged,'" Nabiki finished for her. "Trust me, I've scouted Nerima for a good match for her and turned up nil. Finding someone who might be able to spice up her life and who doesn't have some kind of disqualification and also isn't a complete ass is harder than you'd think."

"Yes, well 'exciting' and 'well-adjusted' don't tend to go together," Yuka commented.

"Hey!" Akane shot her friend an annoyed look. "Was that a crack?"

"Yes?" Yuka shrugged. "Akane, you're a good person and a great friend but let's be real here - you and Nabiki are both completely insane."

"And you hang out with us. What does that make you?" Nabiki asked, smirking and raising an eyebrow.

"I'm the plucky normal human sidekick who tags along and eventually gets rich writing the memoirs of your adventures," Yuka said without hesitation. "Y'know, after society rebuilds."

"Yuka, I know we're bad, but I don't think we're apocalyptically bad…"

"I already know what I'm going to name my pet Deathclaw."

"What's a 'deathclaw'?"
"I'll tell you, but it'll cost 50 caps," Nabiki interjected.

"... caps?" Akane cocked her head, looking more confused.

Yuka sighed in disgust. "You'll never make it in the Wasteland."

"Maybe we should look into importing when it comes to Kasumi's future boyfriend," Nabiki said thoughtfully.

"Yeah… from space maybe," Yuka quipped. "Face it, you lot probably shouldn't be the ones playing matchmaker. Let Kasumi find someone on her own."

Nabiki sighed in frustration and crossed her arms. She hated that Yuka had made a good point. "I don't like the idea I can't do anything."

"You've been on the sidelines lots before," Yuka said, giving her a skeptical look.

"I chose not to do anything," Nabiki said. "I always had an intervention strategy ready to go."

Yuka rolled her eyes. "Yeah? Like picking a fight with the Yakuza, abusing the legal system of a scary Chinese warrior tribe to make a group marriage work and hanging out in a tea shop straight out of one of those old sci fi shows with the creepy narrator? I think I liked it better when you stayed outta things."

Nabiki shrugged and studied her nails. "Really? Well, if I'm not working on Kasumi's relationship problems, I could always help out you and Daisuke…"

"Spaceman dating it is!" Yuka said quickly. "Maybe we could fix Kasumi up with one of Jiro's customers…"

"Jiro isn't a spaceman, he's just… weird," Akane replied, sounding exasperated.

"I never said Jiro is a spaceman, I'm just saying he's the kind of guy who has space aliens as customers."

"Yuka, stop being overly dramatic."

"I am applying only the bare minimum of dramatics, thank you! Unlike you, I manage my drama carefully!"

They neared the Hibiki residence to pick up the last member of their little troupe. Shampoo had explained to Nabiki the 'fake girlfriend' plot she and Ukyou had come up with to deflect Ryoga's mother from worrying too much about him. Nabiki could see Shampoo was mostly doing it because she enjoyed being a flirt and using the smokescreen of 'cultural ignorance' in order to make people squirm. Nabiki thought it was all a bit overly complicated and liable to backfire, but it seemed harmless enough. She elected to stay out of it for now and to pull the poor boy out if it got too rough for him.

Nabiki hung back a bit as Ranma made her way up to knock at the door. Things seemed to be relatively normal as Ryoga came out, dressed in his school uniform. He seemed a little more sheepish than usual as he said goodbye to his mother…

Nabiki caught the movement out of the corner of her eye - a purple streak as Shampoo executed a textbook perfect Amazon Glomp on the poor Lost Boy.
"Wode Shagua!" Shampoo said in a cutesy voice as she wrapped herself around her victim in a move that was part-hug and part grapple, with all the devastating strengths of both.

"I… ack… Shampoo, what are you…?!" Ryouga flailed ineffectually. Even his tremendous strength was useless against the Power of the Glomp, as he quickly discovered.

"Oh, hello, Ms. Shampoo!" Mrs. Hibiki said, raising an eyebrow.

"Shampoo, what the hell are you doing?!" Ranma said with a mixture of shock, outrage, and panic.

Whoops! We forgot to warn Ranma! Nabiki thought, though she opted to watch, curious about the redhead's reaction.

"Shampoo is just greeting her Shagua," Shampoo said sweetly to Ranma, cuddling the struggling Lost boy more tightly. "If act so jealous, people might get wrong idea."

"Ryouga, who's this?"

Nabiki blinked as a familiar-looking girl with greenish hair stepped outside. She had a plaid skirt and a sweater, and was holding up a wrapped bento, apparently intending to give it to Ryouga.

Akari? Uh oh… Nabiki's eyes widened as she started rapidly considering a range of intervention strategies.

"A-Akari, I can explain…!" Ryouga stuttered frantically, a wild panicked look in his eyes.

"Shampoo is Pi-Ryouga's girlfriend!" Shampoo said brightly. "Who is you?"

"I'm Akari…" the green haired girl gave Ryouga a questioning look. "... And I thought Ranma was supposed to be Ryouga's girlfriend this week?"

"What?!" Ranma yelped, then got that same panicked look, glancing at Shampoo, then at Mrs. Hibiki. "Akari you're not supposed to just announce that!" Ranma hissed at her, then laughed nervously, glancing at Mrs. Hibiki.

"What," Akane said flatly.

Nabiki quickly glanced at her sister standing beside her. Even with her untrained senses she could see Akane's aura starting to flare visibly. That's not good!

"Akane, hang on a sec…" Nabiki said quickly, trying to head things off before they snowballed out of control.

Too late! Nabiki thought with growing concern as Akane stomped her way up to Ryouga.

"Ryouga, what is all of this?!" Akane demanded hotly.

"A-Akane…!" Ryouga yelped, eyes going wide. He was sweating visibly now as his eyes darted from girl to girl.

"Oh, is this Akane?" Mrs. Hibiki asked, cocking her head. "The one you were writing all those lovely poems and letters to, Ryo?"

"You… wrote her poems?" Akari asked, cocking her head and giving Ryouga a questioning look. "I don't think you ever wrote me any poems…"
"I trusted you, Ryouga!" Akane snarled, starting to get thoroughly worked up. "I thought you were different!"

"Akane, wait, it's not what you think…!" Ranma said, frantically trying to de-escalate the youngest Tendo before critical mass was reached.

"You stay out of this, Ranma!" Akane snapped at her. "This is between me and your boyfriend!"

"He's not my boyfriend!" Ranma replied hotly.

"Yes he is… Yes he is!" Akari insisted, grabbing Ranma's arm. Her eyes started filling with confused tears. "Ranma, you promised!"

"I… I… I…" Ranma's expression started to mimic Ryouga's as she started to look around frantically as well.

"Airen maybe has some explaining to do too?" Shampoo said, giving the redhead a hard stare. "What Pokemon trainer girl talking about?"

"I'm a Sumo Pig trainer!"

"Same difference."

"It is not!" Akari huffed. "Honestly, I have to have this argument every time I go into town!"

"Oh god…" Nabiki muttered, massaging her forehead as she tried frantically to figure out a way to pull at least some of the volatile factors out of the fire before the explosion that was brewing became inevitable.

"Ummm, excuse me?" someone asked in english, tapping Nabiki on the shoulder.

Nabiki turned, her train of thought momentarily derailed. Behind her was a young girl about Akane's age. Her wavy, shoulder-length hair was the color of straw and her eyes were a much deeper blue than Ranma's. Dusting her cheeks were a few freckles and the style of her simple skirt and blouse practically screamed 'farmer's daughter'.

The girl opened an "English to Japanese" phrasebook, squinting, then read out in halting fashion, "Desolation… Can you say that it is Hibiki residence?"

Nabiki frowned, then asked in english, "Do you want to know if this is the Hibiki residence?"

The girl sighed in profound relief. "Oh thank mah stars! Y'all speak english! I'm such a dummy when it comes to foreign languages! My name is Anna. Thank you so much for your help!" She nodded. "Yes please, could you tell me if this is it? I'm looking for Ryouga Hibiki."

Nabiki's eyes widened. No… no way… She couldn't be…! "Uhhh… Nabiki Tendo. It's nice to meet you. Yes, this is the right place but… right now might be a bad time…"

Unfortunately, it was too late. Anna glanced past her and spotted the Lost Boy. "JOE!"

Ryouga looked up and over at her. His eyebrow twitched. "A-Anna…?!"

The girl skirted around Nabiki and ran up to him, nearly tackling him with a hug. "Joe! I missed you so much! I've been looking for you for so long!"

Akane stepped back. From her expression, Nabiki could see that critical mass had been achieved and the point of no return passed. Akari looked shocked and possibly even a little heartbroken. Shampoo looked confused, and Ranma was clearly panicking.

But Ryouga…

Nabiki felt a bit dizzy. She could feel his panic. He wanted to run… needed to run, but he was frozen and unable to move… He was overloaded, it was too much…!

Nabiki noticed Ranma shake her head too as it hit her as well, and realized it wasn't her imagination. And if they were picking up on Ryouga's feelings this far from him…!

Oh crap! Shi shi Hokodan! The boy was having a panic attack, and he had unfortunately taught himself to channel overwhelming negative emotions into a literal explosion. She needed to defuse the situation or get him out!

The girls were arguing now, demanding answers from a mostly unresponsive Ryouga, and generally escalating too fast to bring them down with words. A bucket of cold water might do it, but Nabiki neither had one, or was sure it wouldn't make things worse with Shampoo's curse and Ranma's ailurophobia.

Get him out it is, she thought. She shot Ranma a look that she hoped conveyed the message 'Back me up!' before she ran over to Ryouga and grabbed him by the shoulders to make him look at her. Her plan was to fake illness to snap him into his protective instincts. She didn't have to fake it. The wave of heavy chi that suddenly surged through the Link was overwhelming. Her eyes went wide and she nearly doubled over, staggering against him.

"Nabiki…!" He yelped and caught her, her sudden seizure successfully interrupting the impending explosion.

"H-hospital…!" she managed to croak out as her world spun. She felt him scoop her up into his arms and the rush of the ground suddenly dropping away as he began a headlong rush towards what he thought was the hospital. He leapt up onto a nearby lamppost, then a roof, then broke into a run as the shouts of the surprised and outraged girls behind him faded.

Okay… okay… Got him out… Nabiki squeezed her eyes shut and struggled with the overload from the Link that was making the world spin and her stomach churn. Now… just don't pass out… don't… pass out…

... don’t...

... pass...

... ou-

000

Ranma felt the sickeningly familiar wave while she was in the middle of trying to calm Akane down. Her eyes went wide and her gaze snapped to Ryouga. Waves of heavy ki were surging from the boy as his emotional state rapidly cascaded into failure. Oh crap!

She caught motion out of the corner of her eyes and saw Nabiki starting to move. Their eyes locked, and Nabiki's expression told her that the Middle Tendo had a plan, and she needed Ranma to support it. A slight nod was all Ranma had time for before everything went down.
"Ranma listen to me when I'm talking!" Akane grabbed the redhead's collar to wrench her attention back.

Ranma didn't have a chance to reply before she heard Ryouga choke out "Nabiki...!" and there was a chorus of shouts of surprise as he suddenly leapt away, apparently carrying Nabiki in his arms.

"Wha…? Wait…" Akane blinked and looked around. "Nabiki…!? NABIKI!" Her gaze snapped to track Ryouga's fleeing form and she coiled to pursue, the flames of murderous rage in her eyes.

Ranma tackled her and pinned her shoulders to the ground.

Akane's breath left her in a surprised wheeze, not having expected the attack. Her eyes widened with surprise, betrayal and a flicker of anger that promised to flare into a full inferno of rage directed at the redhead herself any second.

"Akane, Shi shi hokodan!" Ranma hissed tightly and kept her pinned, holding her gaze until she was sure the youngest Tendo understood.

After a second understanding blossomed in Akane's brown eyes, followed by a horrified expression. "Oh no… Nabiki…!"

"She interrupted it before it was too late," Ranma said, wishing she was as sure of that as she sounded. "But if you go after him right now, it could set it off and she'll be ground zero. Stay down, Akane."

"What just happen?" Shampoo asked, crouching next to them.

"Why did Ryouga leave, Ranma?" Akari asked, crouching on the opposite side.

"Maybe Shagua not as interested in Pokemon as Pokemon Trainer girl hope?" Shampoo suggested with a smirk.

Akari scowled at her. Her lower lip trembled. "That's it!" She stood up and pointed at Shampoo. "Katsunishiki! Kachi-age!"

There was a rumbling from the backyard which rapidly grew louder as something huge started to charge around the house. The massive sumo pig rounded the corner, his eyes locking onto the person Akari was pointing at. He adjusted his course slightly and picked up speed. Shampoo's eyes widened, without enough time to properly react or dodge as the massive animal bore down on her.

And stopped dead.

Not for a lack of trying. His hooves dug furrows in the earth as he struggled to fulfill his mistress's command, but a delicate-looking hand placed almost casually on his forehead was holding him back, seemingly without effort.

Anna stood in front of the pig, facing the group and rubbing the back of her head nervously with her free hand. "Sorry to interrupt, but… I don't suppose any of y'all speak english and could explain to me what's going on?"

000

It was about half an hour into his frantic sprint for the hospital that Ryouga realized he had absolutely no clue where he was going.
He leapt over a concrete retaining wall and landed in what appeared to be a small park. There were swing sets and play structures for children, but the park itself was empty at this time of day. I'm not lost in the woods yet. Need to stop before I am, but...

He looked down at the girl in his arms and felt the surge of cold panic again - the need to run - to keep going until he got somewhere with help. He didn't know what was wrong with her, he didn't know what to do and everything was wrong…!

Nabiki stirred, groaning softly, her eyes fluttering.

As quickly as the panic had risen in him, it was washed away by relief. He quickly carried her over to a park bench and laid her down. "Nabiki? Nabiki, can you hear me?"

Her eyes opened. She held up a hand to shield them from the sun. "... Ryouga?"

Ryouga slumped, feeling a suddenly drained. "Oh thank god…"

"Unnh… right… right… The… escape thing…" Nabiki muttered, putting a hand over her eyes.
"... Ow… You don't happen to have an aspirin, do you?"

"No!" Ryouga shot back up and started to look around frantically. "I'm trying to get you to the hospital but I can't find my way and I don't see anything around here that…"

He felt her grab his hand, stopping him. He turned to look at her as he felt the Link flare to life and some of the nervous energy started to bleed away through it. "Nabiki, wha…?"

"Ugh," Nabiki grit her teeth. "Ranma had to wade through this? Ryouga, calm down. I'm okay. I'm fine. You're the one who's in trouble right now, so you need to listen to me."

Ryouga blinked, then remembered the situation he'd left behind. "Oh god… Akari and… and Anna… and Mom saw, and Akane…" He hiccuped and his eyes started to get that wild look. "Akane thinks I'm a pervert and Akari has to hate me after that and… and I don't even know what Anna thinks and my Mom… my Mom saw it all…"

Nabiki grabbed the sides of his head and forced him to look at her. "No. Stop," she said sternly. "You're panicking and you need to reign it in before you lose control of it again."

He felt the stern calm through the link as she cut through the waves of dark, sickly fear that were starting to seep into his perceptions. Lose control… He suddenly realized what she meant as he felt it building inside. He tried to pull away. "I've gotta get away…! If I let it out here…"

"Don't you dare!" Nabiki cut him short. She grabbed his hand and firmly laced her fingers with his before he could object. "I am not letting go, so if you want to get away from me you're going to have to break my fingers. What you need to do is stop, listen to me and take a deep breath. Can you do that?"

He wanted to try anyway. He was pretty sure he could slip his fingers out of hers without hurting her. If he went now he had a good chance of getting far enough away that she'd be safe. But… something in her eyes held him fast. Determination, resolve and confidence. The Link only enhanced the effect. If he had ever wondered how Nabiki got away with extorting people who could physically snap her like a twig, he now had a pretty good idea how. He swallowed and nodded dumbly, not able to muster the will to disobey.

Nabiki nodded. "Good. You're having a panic attack. I can feel it. Akane used to have them when she was younger, after Mom died. Feels like you're having a heart attack, right? Fingers tingling?"
Ryouga nodded again. He was familiar with the tightness in his chest. He knew it wasn't an actual heart attack, but it seemed to grip and squeeze his heart with icy fingers.

"I don't blame you. That was a lot of stuff to land on you all at once and you're not used to dealing with it like Ranma," Nabiki said. Her eyes seemed to go unfocused for a moment. "Yeah… I never really wanted to know what one of these felt like, but I guess now I do."

"I'm hurting you…" Ryouga felt the hand squeeze as the urge to run flared up again.

"No," Nabiki said, sternly but calmly, fixing him with another intense look. "I'm just aware of you hurting. I want you to focus on me. Not on anything that happened, just me, okay?"

"… Okay…" he said weakly. He was breathing heavily though he didn't understand why. He wasn't tired. In fact, his muscles ached to move, like there was an electric current running through them, nervous energy that just wouldn't bleed off.

"Better," Nabiki said after a moment, smiling a little. For some reason that made him feel better, too. He could feel her through the link and the anxiety begin to bleed off through it and break up against the solid calm she was projecting. He started to try and steady his breathing - wanting to try and emulate what he was feeling from her, if for no other reason than to ease some of the burden of it.

The impending sense of disaster - of imminent danger - started to fade. Then, rather abruptly, all that nervous energy turned inward, collapsing in on itself and making his stomach protest violently.

"Ulp…" he managed before standing and being violently ill in the trash can next to the bench.

Nabiki, still holding his hand, stood beside him, rubbing his back.

"It's going to be okay," she said.

Normally those words were empty in situations like this, but he could feel her confidence through the Link. He shuddered, coughing as another wave of nausea hit him. Finally his roiling stomach had nothing more to expel, and after a few more dry heaves, his protesting insides finally settled down into an uneasy truce with him.

God I'm pathetic, he thought miserably, still gripping the sides of the trash can for a moment before he straightened up again.

"No, none of that!" Nabiki chided him.

"None of what?" he asked, looking over his shoulder at her, confused.

"Whatever that black, sticky ick is that you're feeling. If I had to guess, I'd suspect you're starting to beat yourself up for freaking out," Nabiki replied sternly. "Don't. It'll just make things worse."

Ryouga scowled and looked away. "I don't need you managing my emotions, Nabiki - any more than I needed Ranma doing it!" He tried to tug his hand from her grasp but she just held tighter.

"Normally I'd agree with you, Ryouga. But as long as your emotions being out of control turn you into a literal bomb, I can't afford to leave things to chance." Her expression softened. "I'm not trying to bully you into feeling better, Ryouga. And believe it or not, I'm not totally operating out of self-interest here. I'm just trying to get you to stop making yourself feel worse when you don't deserve it." She tugged gently on his hand. "Come here. There are some vending machines over there and I'll buy you something to swish that awful taste out of your mouth. Then we'll talk, okay?"

After Ryouga scooped up Nabiki and vanished, everyone elected to come inside to try and work out exactly what was going on. Mrs. Hibiki went back to the kitchen to make tea (Ukyou joining her to make sure she didn't get lost) which left Shampoo, Akari, Akane and Anna all looking at Ranma expectantly.

Ranma was suddenly regretting all the times he had desperately begged people to 'let me explain!' in these situations. Explaining this mess was probably going to be more difficult and perhaps even less painful than just letting them beat the crap out of her.

Especially since one girl didn't even speak the language.

"Do... we know anyone who does speak english?" Ranma asked sheepishly, glancing around, then giving Anna an apologetic smile. Why didn't I pay more attention in English class?! WHY?!

"I know it fairly well," Mrs. Hibiki said, carrying a tray as she walked in. She set it down, took a seat next to Anna and smiled at the girl. "So you're from America, dear?"

Anna looked immensely relieved to hear someone speak her language. "Yes! Omaha, actually! I was amazed to find out that Joe was from so far away!"

"'Joe'?" Mrs. Hibiki asked, confused.

"Oh, that's... that's kind of a nickname for Ryouga," Anna said, blushing and twiddling her fingers. "When he first showed up on our farm and saved us from a local gang, we thought he was 'the Joe', the hero from the local legends who was supposed to appear whenever people were in danger. It's... it's silly, I know. But we were so desperate, and he really was the hero we needed, and..."

Mrs. Hibiki smiled. "I'm glad to hear my son is making such a good impression even in such faraway lands! So... you came to visit him?"

Anna fidgeted. "I... I know J... Ryouga said his heart belonged to another, but... but I never felt this way about anyone but him and... and I know he felt something for me, too! I decided I needed to come to Japan and see for myself - to make sure that he was really happier here with the person he told me his heart belonged to."

"I see. And... if he isn't happy with this other girl?" she asked. "What are your intentions?"

"To convince him to come back home with me! To the farm with Papa and me in Nebraska where he belongs and where he's needed!" Anna said firmly.

"I see," Mrs. Hibiki said with a sigh. "It seems my Ryo has made quite an impression on more than a few young ladies. Who was the girl he told you his heart belonged to?"

"Someone named 'Akane'?" Anna said uncertainly.

"Hmmm?" Akane perked up, hearing her name. "What did she say about me?"

"That my son has some explaining to do," Mrs. Hibiki said with another heavy sigh as she looked over the collection of girls sitting across from her. "And that he is far too much like his father for his own good."
Ryouga swished the water around in his mouth. The worst of the bile had been cleansed, but he suspected the bitterness would linger a while. He glanced at the middle Tendo who was sitting next to him and holding his hand so nonchalantly as she did something on her cell phone.

"You don't have to keep holding my hand, you know," Ryouga said. "I'm not going to get lost sitting on a bench."

"Not holding it to keep you from getting lost," Nabiki replied. "I'm holding it because you're upset."

"I'm not..." Ryouga started then sighed in frustration as he realized it was pointless to deny it when she could sense his emotions. "Okay fine, I'm upset, but..."

"And I'm making sure you don't go over the tipping point and waiting for you to calm down enough to talk about stuff. Which hopefully is about now," Nabiki said. "Did you know we're nearly in Kawasaki? That's over 30 kilometers. Pretty impressive."

"How do you know that?" Ryouga asked.

Nabiki put the phone away. "GPS in the phone. I imagine it'd be really handy for someone like you. You don't happen to have any money to buy one with, do you?" She gave him an appraising look.

"Ummm... is it more than a Rail Pass?" He asked nervously.

Nabiki rolled her eyes. "That would be a 'no', then. Not a surprise. I'll seriously need to help you and Ranma use those skills of yours to make some decent money sometime soon. It's criminal how poor you two are. You're wasted on menial manual labor."

"What, you're managing my life now as well as my emotions?" Ryouga muttered. "I get by just fine!"

"Nearly blowing up is just fine?" Nabiki asked.

"That was...!" Ryouga started, then trailed off. He slumped. "... Fine. I'm a mess. Exactly why you shouldn't be wasting your time! Just leave me be and..."

Nabiki leaned over and flicked him on the forehead, right between the eyes.

"Ow! What...!?" Ryouga blinked and jerked back, more in surprise than from any real pain.

"Stop that," Nabiki said sternly. "I decide who is and isn't worth my time, clear?"

"Uhh... yes ma'am?" Ryouga replied uncertainly.

"Good," Nabiki nodded. "I just sent Ranma a text letting her know we're alright. So, since the chances of us getting back to Nerima in time for school are nil, you and I are going to spend a few hours away from the Madness so we can sort out what to do about your Harem Problem."

"I don't have a 'Harem Problem'," Ryouga said crossly.

Nabiki gave him an exasperated look. "Yes, of course, you just about had a nuclear meltdown because a whole herd of attractive young ladies showed up and the situation was totally platonic."
Ryouga blushed. "It... it's not like that! I... I mean, Akari is the only one..."

"Mind explaining why she was insisting Ranma was your girlfriend?" Nabiki asked sweetly. "You know, explain it to me so I can convince my little sister to let you keep your lungs?"

"It's... complicated," Ryouga said, slumping.

"Yes, that's a given," Nabiki replied. She opened her can of iced coffee and took a sip. "Start from the beginning with Akari and we'll work our way through to the new girl."

000

Ryouga stable for now. Crisis averted, but keeping him out of neighborhood until he's more stable and I've got a better idea how to sort the mess out. See if you can straighten things out with his Mom at least. Keep me posted.

Love, Nabs

Ranma read the message and sighed, flipping the phone closed. "Okay, they're both okay. They're probably not gonna be back for a bit."

"Why did Ryouga grab Akane's sister and run off like that?" Akari asked.

Ranma took a deep breath, glancing around the room nervously. Okay... okay, truth. Just get it all out. "Ryouga knows this martial arts technique called the Shi Shi Hokodan. It uses strong emotions... heavy emotions like depression or despair or whatnot... to make an explosion of force. The problem is that if he gets too depressed he can't control it. Nabiki was just faking being sick to snap him out of it long enough to get him out."

"Oh dear..." Mrs. Hibiki said, looking aghast. "When did he learn that?! Who would teach him such a thing?!"

"It was a scroll he found," Ranma said. "It kinda warned that the technique messed up your life if you used it, but..." She felt a pang of guilt. He was so desperate to win a fight with me...

"Shampoo feel bad... Didn't realize Sha-errr, Ryouga affected so much by teasing," Shampoo said, hanging her head.

"So... you aren't seriously interested in my son, then?" Mrs. Hibiki asked.

Shampoo laughed weakly and shook her head. "Shampoo just playing girlfriend because think you worried no one take care of him. Make feel better, but Shampoo already married to Ranma."

Mrs. Hibiki blinked. "... Pardon?"

Ranma opened her mouth a half second too late to stop Shampoo from making the situation way more complex, and snapped it shut as the opportunity came and went.

Mrs Hibiki turned and looked at Ranma. "... Ranma?"

"I can explain..." Ranma started, then remembered she had soap-locked herself that morning. "... uh... Well, lemme show you my ID..." She reached for her pocket, then remembered her ID had been replaced with one with a picture of her girl side. "... Okay, I can't explain. Help...?" She gave Shampoo an imploring look.

"Airen... err, Ranma have Jusenkyo curse," Shampoo said. "Like Ryouga, but turn into girl instead of pig."

"... Jusenkyo... curse?" Mrs. Hibiki said, giving her a blank stare.

Ranme massaged the bridge of her nose. "She... doesn't know about Ryouga's curse either, Shampoo." She glanced to her right. "Akane, could you...?"

Akane shook her head. "Ooooh no! You've had weeks to sort this out! I don't want any part of this any further!"

"Yeah, I'm with Akane on this one, sugar," Ukyou said from the doorway, leaning against the frame with her arms crossed.

"Gee, thanks you two," Ranma muttered darkly. "Akari, could we get some hot and cold water? I can't change right now, but if Shampoo is okay with it we can use her curse to..."

"Shampoo not changing in front of her! Get caught in Pokeball!" Shampoo said quickly.

"For the last time, I am a Sumo Pig Trainer! Pokemon aren't even real!" Akari said angrily. She folded her arms and lifted her chin, pointedly looking away from the Amazon. "Get your own water!"

Mrs Hibiki glanced back and forth among all of them, then sighed and laughed softly. "I see. You had me worried for a moment! I forgot how real some of these games can get at your age. So... do you use dice rolls for these things, or do you play it free-form?"

"Oh god damnit..." Ranma muttered.

000

Ryouga had to admit, it felt good to just tell his whole story without someone interrupting. Nabiki was a surprisingly good listener, nodding and making attentive noises, asking the occasional question, but letting him talk when he needed to. When he paused or was silent, she would give his hand a reassuring squeeze.

It wasn't anything like the Nabiki he thought he knew. But then, he admitted, he had barely known anything about her outside of her reputation. She was always there, but she stayed in the background. He supposed it made sense for her to know these things, given how often she seemed to be three or four steps ahead of everyone else as far as what was going on. He'd almost suspect her of an ulterior motive, but the Link dispelled that notion. To his surprise, he wasn't sensing anything from her that felt like duplicity.

"So... Anna is the girl you dumped to stay faithful to Akane. Akari is the girl you tried to actually give up on Akane for, Akane is the girl who broke your heart, Shampoo is just messing with the whole situation for fun and Ranma is the 'it's complicated,'" Nabiki said, recapping. "We can safely eliminate Shampoo as a factor then, but that still leaves you with four. Definitely a Harem Problem."

"It is not," Ryouga huffed. "First off, Akane isn't into guys! I never had a chance with her and we both know it!"

"It's not about what Akane feels, Ryouga," Nabiki replied. "You still hold a torch for her and she's irrationally possessive of you, which means she's in this game no matter how loudly she insists that she isn't."
"Well, Ranma obviously…” Ryouga started, but Nabiki gave him a cross look, shutting him up.

Nabiki sighed. "Okay, fair enough on Ranma, actually. I can't realistically expect you to come to any sort of resolution about how you feel about her without a few years of therapy, a magic potion or one or both of you just flat out snapping. But she's still a factor. For the sake of argument, let's just say she's not realistically a choice…”

"... because she isn't!" Ryouga insisted.

"... Which in real life very seldom stops people, but fine," Nabiki replied, exasperated. "That leaves Akari and Anna. So… tell me about Anna to start. I know you met her while you were wandering around trying to get over Akane and that you saved her farm from a local gang. How serious did things get?"

"Her… Dad was talking about marriage," Ryouga admitted. "She didn't mind and… to be honest, it didn't bother me either, at the time." He turned over an empty water bottle in his hands, studying it as he talked. "I was seriously considering it for a while. I… I could actually see it. I was kind of getting into farm life… I… I felt useful."

"That's all?" Nabiki asked.

Ryouga shook his head. "No… no. I mean… I didn't even consider Anna that way at first. But… but when she was kidnapped… I guess it might be a bit like how Ranma feels when Akane gets kidnapped."

"Not the same as how you feel when Akane gets kidnapped?" Nabiki asked playfully.

Ryouga shook his head, surprisingly not arguing the point. "Whenever Akane was kidnapped… Well, I always knew Ranma would save her in the end. No matter how much I wanted to, I knew I'd never find my way to her in time. It was more a race, to try and beat Ranma there, but…"

"You trusted Ranma to save her," Nabiki finished.

"... Yeah, I guess," Ryouga admitted. "But… with Anna… I was it. There was no one else. She wasn't waiting for some other guy to save her. I didn't have anything to prove to anyone. Just… someone who had faith in me that I couldn't bear to let down. And then… I didn't. And… and that feeling… it was almost enough to make me stay."

"Right feeling, wrong girl?" Nabiki asked sympathetically.

Ryouga closed his eyes and winced. That observation felt a little too close to the mark. "Maybe… I was ready to give up on Akane when it all started and by the end I had every reason in the world to give up on her… but that's when I decided to go find her again. Maybe that's why." He felt a wave of self-revulsion. Was that all Anna was to me? "... I really am a pig."

He felt Nabiki squeeze his hand. He glanced at her and was surprised to see an uncharacteristically gentle expression on her face, something that reminded him more of her older sister.

"You're not a pig. You're a teenager. No one is supposed to make up their minds about this stuff this early," Nabiki said reassuringly. "Though… she came all the way to a country where she doesn't speak the language to try and find you. She sounds like she's pretty sure. So the question is… how do you feel about her now? Do you regret leaving?"

"I… didn't really think about it afterwards," Ryouga admitted reluctantly, feeling even more awful.
Another squeeze. "Good. Be honest. You can't make her happy if you're not honest about how you feel." Nabiki leaned forward. "So… that leaves Akari. Now… inane plans to be a better girlfriend aside… Why did you run from her?"

Ryouga swallowed. Oddly enough though, Nabiki had helped him find an answer when talking about Anna. "She was someone who had faith in me… who I couldn't bear to let down… and then I did."

"You made a mistake," Nabiki said.

Ryouga shook his head. "I could deal with it if it was a mistake. I was incapable. My directional curse and my Jusenkyo curse both came into play at once and… she was left alone in the worst place possible. Because I took her there. I… couldn't handle that feeling."

"… Hence your need to fix one or both curses. Just making Akari your Anchor wouldn't be enough," Nabiki said thoughtfully. "And so you're a massive aggregation of anxiety and guilt that's ready to pop until we manage to pull that off, whether you get back together with Akari or not."

Ryouga made a noncommittal sound.

"Well… that sucks," Nabiki muttered. "Nothing much for it but to wait for the results from the doctors."

Ryouga grunted again.

He felt Nabiki's gaze on him, even though he was studying the ground intently. Give up, Nabiki. You can't fix this like you did with Ranma's problems. You're up against a 500 year old curse.

"So, what do you do for fun, Ryo?" Nabiki asked. The non-sequitur snapped him out of his reverie.

"I… what?" He looked at her, confused.

"Fun. Other than martial arts or obsessing over my little sister." Nabiki stretched with one arm, still holding his hand with the other. "Video games. Movies. Theater. Books. Manga. Anime. You're not the socializing type, so it's not that… poetry maybe?"

Ryouga winced. "I tried that once. It was terrible. I… uhh…” He deflated a little. "I don't… really do anything for fun. I spend most of my time just trying to survive, you know?"

Nabiki quirked an eyebrow. "Come on, things have been pretty stable for the past couple of weeks for you. What have you done with your free time after school?"

"Study?" Ryouga said weakly. "Read through the textbooks a couple of times…"

Nabiki rolled her eyes and stood. "Okay, that can't be allowed to stand. Come on, we're going to go find something you want to do that isn't something you need to do." She tugged on his hand.

"Wait, what?!" He looked around nervously. "C-could you let go of my hand at least?"

"Nope!" Nabiki said, smirking. "And yes, people are going to think we're a couple. And no, no one here knows us or is likely to ever see us again, so I don't care and neither should you. That's the advanced part of the lesson. But for now, focus on the basics."

"Lesson?" Ryouga stood reluctantly.

"'How to De-feralize Your Martial Artist,'" Nabiki said proudly. "I worked out most of the kinks with Ranma and it did wonders."

"Yes, and you fell in love with him in the process!" Ryouga protested nervously, intensely aware that her emotions had taken on a much warmer color and started swirling slowly.

"Yes, well, that was one of the kinks. Just try not to be too charming and we'll be fine," Nabiki winked at him playfully.

000

"Well… that went about as badly as it could have," Ukyou quipped as they walked.

Ranma hunched her shoulders and jammed her hands deeper into her skirt pockets, scowling. "I noticed. Thank you, Ucchan."

"What is 'Larper'?” Shampoo asked, still confused.

"'Live Action Role Play'," Akane replied. "It's… kind of like playing a game where you act out a story you make up as you go. A 'Larper' is someone who does it."

"Basically she thinks we're making it all up as part of a game, sugar," Ukyou supplied helpfully. "The curses, the stuff about Ki attacks and Chinese Amazons and probably most of the rest of the really difficult to believe stuff. It's a real shame someone decided to use the soap today so they couldn't show her the curse and settle the matter."

"I am aware of that, thank you, Ucchan," Ranma replied tightly.

"It probably would have been enough if you had agreed to change, Shampoo," Akane said, still not entirely understanding the Amazon's objection.

"Hmph!" Shampoo sniffed. "Not want to give Pokemon Trainer ideas!"

"What is your beef with Akari, anyway?" Ukyou asked.

"Make animals fight barbaric," Shampoo growled. "Weak person teach strong animal to fight so no have to be strong themselves! Saw dog fight once. Even Ryouga deserve better than such person!"

"Dog fighting is all underground and unregulated. Sumo pig matches are about as regulated as they get, sugar. I don't think there's a comparison…” Ukyou said skeptically.

Shampoo shot her a glare. "Maybe if Spatula Girl turn into animal herself she learn to be more sympathetic!"

Ukyou took a step back. "Okay, wow… hot button topic, I get it."

"You shouldn't judge Ryouga's girlfriend so harshly, Shampoo. Akari's really a nice girl," Akane said. "He'd be heartbroken if she actually left him."

"Take Ryouga to Joketsuzoku village. Find ten better girls in ten minutes," Shampoo sniffed.

"Not all at once, I hope," Ukyou commented dryly.

"Depends if he challenge all at once."

"Wait, that's a thing!?"
Ranma felt a buzzing in her pocket. She fished out her phone and flipped it open.

_Taking Ryo to find him a hobby that doesn't involve blowing up. Ask Shampoo to grab notes for me. Will be back later in the day. Text me if things get too crazy. Love you._

_Nabs._

She sighed and flipped the phone closed. _Great. Everyone is losing their minds, and I'm flying solo for it._ She glanced at the other girls. _Oh well… 'Anything Goes School of Keeping A Lid On It' is a go._

"Come on, we should hurry if we wanna make it before the last bell," Ranma said, picking up the pace.

000

"Are you sure you don't feel up to attending school today, dear brother?" Kodachi asked. She studied the shadows that passed across his face as the limo made its way to Furinkan High.

Tatewaki sighed. "Not quite yet, 'Dachi. There is… a great deal for me to make amends for and I am still struggling to decide how best to approach it. I would prefer to… thin the ranks of the apologies I must give before I face the school as a whole."

"You give this place too much credit, brother, and take too much of the blame," Kodachi said sourly. "This school is a cesspit of degenerates and misanthropes. If my Darling Ranma and dear Ran were not forced to attend this place…"

"Don't judge it too harshly, Dachi," Tatewaki said, putting a gentle hand on her arm. "The fault for many of the damaged ways of this place lies with Father and myself. But I think you and I can start to put those things right. It will just take some time."

"Well, I've already made a step in that direction," Kodachi said, an evil smirk crossing her face. "At least until Father gets out of the hospital. So… have you plans to resume your station as Student Council President?"

Tatewaki glanced out the window as the school came into view. "That… will require some thought. I was and most likely am still unfit, but… what I have heard from Ran Saotome and Ryouga Hibiki in regards to what is being done in my absence… I would like very much to speak with Nabiki Tendo before I make a decision."

"Nabiki Tendo? Why her?" Kodachi asked, curious.

"I trusted her counsel once, long ago," Tatewaki replied. "I would ask for her counsel again, should she be willing to give it. But…" He glanced down at the orange pill bottle he was turning over in his hands. "... This leads me to the most difficult of the amends I must make." He closed his eyes and took a deep breath. "Still, you are right, mewing and cowering does not befit a Kuno. If you see her, could you tell her that I would speak with her, if she can or will make the time?"

Kodachi sighed. "I find that mercenary woman _distasteful_, but… very well, dear brother."

000

Finding a large enough shopping district hadn't been too difficult, thanks to Nabiki's phone. Ryouga had to admit such a device _would_ be incredibly useful, though when Nabiki told him the average price for such a thing, not to mention the monthly plan, he felt his heart sink.
Still, they had experimented with it to see if he could follow the directions of the built-in mapping software, but he had just found himself getting confused by the instructions it was giving him. Several times Nabiki had to stop him from just blowing a hole through a nearby wall to get to where it seemed to be trying to tell him to go.

"So much for that idea," Nabiki said as she guided him through the district, tucking her phone away.

"Sorry…" Ryouga said. It was about the tenth apology he had given.

Nabiki shrugged. "I didn't really expect it to work, given how Doc Tofu said the curse uses your own mind against you. The GPS would probably have to literally trick you into going the right way to make it work. It's not your fault."

"That doesn't make it any better…" Ryouga thought glumly. He felt a squeeze from her hand and rolled his eyes. "Are you going to do that every time I start feeling something that isn't allowed?"

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "It's not a punishment, Ryouga. I'm trying to be reassuring! You're allowed to think it sucks, because it does."

"Just don't get too upset over it, huh?" he muttered.

She turned and glared at him. "Could you get your self-pitying head out of your own ass for a second, Hibiki? I am trying to help you and I am trying to be nice about it!"

"I…" He sighed, feeling his resentment drain away. It was tough to maintain any sort of front when the Link was feeding him a pretty decent running tally of how Nabiki was reacting, and he was pretty sure he had just hurt her. "I'm sorry. I get that you're being sincere. I don't get why though. I can't figure out what you're getting out of all this!"

Nabiki bit her lower lip and looked away. "Heh… Even with telepathy I can't get past the Ice Queen image, huh."

Ryouga's eyes widened. "Wait, that's not what I meant…!"

"Yes it is," Nabiki replied. "And… if I'm being totally honest you're not even wrong. As much as I've wanted to be a 'better person', I'm always talking about investments and benefits and justifying what I'm doing in terms of gains and losses." She ran a hand through her hair in frustration then looked at him again. "Look, you're right. I don't get anything out of this. If you want a reason for why I'm doing this? A good one? I don't have it. I don't know. I just… I want to, okay?"

Ryouga stared at her a moment. If her gentle expression before had echoed Kasumi, the defiance and frustration in her eyes echoed Akane. I guess the sisters aren't as different as I always thought. "I… Okay. I believe you," he said finally.

"Good," she nodded, relaxing a little. She bowed her head. "And… I'm sorry. I know I'm being pushy."

"It's fine. I'm… just not used to it," Ryouga murmured, looking away awkwardly himself.

"You're kidding, right?" Nabiki gave him a skeptical look. "You live in Nerima! The Pushy Woman Capital of Japan!"

"I… uh… I meant about the wanting to help me part," Ryouga clarified timidly.
"Oh," Nabiki blushed and quickly looked away, then tugged his hand to get him to follow. "Um… let's just keep going."

Ryouga quickly looked elsewhere. Nabiki blushing was a rare sight and one he wasn't entirely sure he was entitled to see. She was Ranma's girlfriend, after all, and Ranma himself/herself was a complicated enough problem. Letting himself acknowledge Nabiki was actually cute was opening himself to all kinds of potential complications. His memory replayed the conversation they'd had a couple of nights ago, and he realized that the Link could get him into trouble very fast. Unfortunately, he also remembered the hug she had given him, which sparked off all manner of other lines of thought that he had to hastily shut down. What is WRONG with me?!

Nabiki smiled up at him. "That's better, whatever you're thinking about."

"What?" Ryouga squeaked, for a moment wondering if she had actually perceived the contents of his thoughts.

"Whatever it is you're thinking about. It's a lot of complication, but at least it's something you like as far as I can tell." She smirked. "You thinking about one of your girls?"

No! Somebody else's! And I'm a terrible person! Ryouga thought frantically. "No!"

She laughed lightly and leaned against him, batting her eyelashes at him. "Should I be jealous? Thinking of another woman while you've got me on your arm…"

"It-It's not what you think! Honest!" Ryouga stammered nervously.

Nabiki laughed again. "Oh calm down, Ryouga! You're a teenage boy who's got multiple attractive girls on his mind. It's kind of reassuring that your mind wanders to those kinds of things. It at least means you're not totally repressed like Ranma. It's actually kind of adorable how innocent you are about it, though."

She started to looked around at the shops, though Ryouga noticed she was still holding his arm rather than just his hand, and was walking much closer to him. He tried very hard not to let on that he'd noticed.

"So, what kinds of things do you enjoy?" Nabiki asked.

"Huh? What? Uhh… isn't that kind of out of the blue?!" he asked nervously, feeling a bit on edge at how the atmosphere was slipping back into the same dangerous territory as it had on Saturday night.

"For a hobby, remember?" She smirked up at him. "Girls are not a hobby."

"I wasn't…"

"Uh huh," she sounded unconvinced but she was still smiling. "Come on, we need to find somewhere to start. Does anything catch your eye? Books? Craft store? There's a model shop over there…" She started pointing at the various storefronts around them.

Ryouga sighed and looked at the shops she was pointing out. Reading was more of a means to an end for him. Usually he read camping or survival guides, but that was more practicality than a hobby. Crafts? He had tried whittling several times and could never seem to get his fingers to translate what he saw in his mind into a physical object. Models? They were colorful and appealing, but… it felt like he would need to be more sure of having a regular home that he could find his way back to so he could display them. He sighed heavily and shook his head.
"No?" Nabiki shrugged. "No worries. Plenty of other stuff here, I'm sure."

Ryouga looked around as well, but didn't really see the point of it. Generally, when he had free time, he trained. He just didn't see the point of a lot of the time wasters other people indulged in. Though, to be fair, he was still not accustomed to how much free time having a home he could get back to would open up for him.

He caught a glimpse of a music shop out of the corner of his eye with several instruments displayed in the window - including a violin. He remembered the dream that Ranma had interrupted and, for a moment, visualized the redhead solemnly playing the instrument. Nah. Definitely not her style.

"See something interesting in the music shop?" Nabiki asked, with a raised eyebrow.

"Huh? Oh, uh no, just…" He rubbed the back of his head. "Just something about a dream I had. I don't know anything about music."

"That's not the point," Nabiki chided him. "Does it interest you?"

"I don't know? I like listening to music… sometimes… if a radio is already on…" He sighed. "I'm sorry, I'm not helping much." He frowned as a thought came to him. "Well… wait, what do you do for a hobby?"

"Me?" Nabiki sounded genuinely surprised.

"Yeah. It might give me some ideas."

"Well… uhh…" Nabiki looked genuinely uncertain a moment. She sighed and took a deep breath. "Don't you dare make fun. It's photography."

Ryouga blinked. "Oh… uhh, I guess that's kind of obvious…"

Nabiki scowled. "No! Not like the pictures I take for the idiots at school!" she huffed. "Well… that's part of it, but really that just gives me an excuse to take pictures."

"Hang on… are you trying to tell me you started taking lewd pics of Ranma to feed your photography habit?" Ryouga gave her a skeptical look.

"No, of course not, but…" Nabiki fidgeted. "... I mean, it's part of it though? Getting good shots in bad lighting or the action shots of you guys fighting… it was a challenge that I enjoyed."

"Isn't it all 'point and click' now with digital cameras and stuff?" Ryouga asked. He was a bit of a dope when it came to technology, but cameras and outdoorsmanship went hand in hand and he had absorbed some knowledge just by osmosis from all of the camping journals.

"I don't use digital cameras. I prefer the mechanics of doing as much of it as possible manually," Nabiki replied. She tugged his hand and started to guide him towards a nearby camera shop. "Come on, I'll show you."

000

Himura was in a good mood.

Oh, naturally she always maintained an outward air of cheer - it was part of her public persona, after all. But today it wasn't at all difficult to keep up the smile. All of the pieces of her master plan were finally starting to fall into place.
She was flanked by Omi and Sanae as she walked down the hall toward the lab where the chemistry club met. With the exception of a few limited holdouts, most of the school’s clubs had been more than cooperative, especially the non-sports clubs. After years of neglect under Tatewaki Kuno, Himura's recognition and attention had made them almost eager to do her bidding.

Which was why Himura had granted them more equitable treatment, of course.

The club members were hunched over their various experiments, only glancing up as she walked in. She noticed they no longer scrambled to conceal their various projects, despite many of them being quite obvious contraband. To be fair, a good number of those projects were being done at her behest now.

"Madam President…" The club leader walked up and bowed deeply, his oversized, heavy framed glasses nearly slipping off his face. "It… it is an honor to see you!"

Himura smiled pleasantly. "The honor is all mine, Matsuda-san," she bowed in return. "I've just come to check on your progress, if I might?"

"Ah, yes!" he said, his bright response telling Himura she could expect good news. "We've been poring over these recipes you've acquired for us. The compounds that resulted have qualities I've never seen before. The possible applications…!"

"... Will most likely make us both quite wealthy upon graduating high school, yes?" Himura finished with a smirk. "I am glad they meet with your approval, though these are merely the least of the secrets I've wheedled from my Chinese friends. However, my inquiry is one of a more… practical nature. Is the first batch prepared?"

Matsuda's face fell a little. He pushed his glasses up nervously. "Ah… yes… yes it is. H- however…"

"'However'?" Himura asked sweetly, cocking her head. There was no need for any threat in her voice yet - his own nervousness was doing the job for her.

"Y-yes, well…" He beckoned her to follow. "Several of the steps employed idioms that even our Chinese-speaking members were unfamiliar with… that, coupled with the ingredient substitution, particularly the primary ingredient…"

"I understand the difficulties. This is why I brought it to you - to see if such substitutions could be made to work," Himura said reassuringly. "Were you able to produce a viable prototype?"

He took a deep breath and sighed. "A-as far as we can tell, we believe that it matches the description the scroll gives of what the final product should be like. However… there is the matter of testing." He swallowed. "Current law doesn't allow live animal testing and the school rules certainly have forbidden keeping live animals for that purpose, so… we haven't been able to test the final product…"

Himura held up a hand. "Matsuda-san, Matsuda-san, please. You've already done all that I asked of you. Testing is something for which I have other resources." She smiled at him benevolently.

"Y-you… you aren't…" He took a deep breath. "You aren't going to use these things to hurt people, are you?"

Himura was almost impressed that the mousey young man had managed the inquiry. Of course, such things were to be expected and only provided her an opportunity to increase his confidence in her. "Matsuda-san, I am happy to hear this from you. Truly!" She held up a finger. "As the granddaughter of the head of Tanaka Pharmaceuticals, ethics must always be at the forefront of our minds as we forge ahead to make these advances in our understanding of the human condition. Such moral fibre will serve you well with my grandfather's company, I think."

He blinked and a wide smile spread across his face. "T-true!?"

"Of course!" she assured him. It wasn't even a lie, though perhaps the position might not be as prestigious as he was imagining. Still, there was always a place for someone who could follow directions and not ask too many questions - especially with such... uncertain source material. "Please trust in me, Matsuda-san. Now... the prototype?"

He took a deep breath and nodded. "We have two for each of the 'packets' you provided. We had a couple of failures to start, but we still have two packets of each type for further potions. We were going to go ahead with trying to refine the process once... once you had evaluated the prototypes."

"I'm presuming the last two packets of the twelve I gave you were testing the effects yourselves?" Himura asked with a smirk.

"I..." Matsuda blushed and ducked his head. "W-we heard of such things... most of us have seen Saotome change, after all, b-but..."

She reached out and gently pinched his chin, her voice dropping into a low purr. "I do hope you documented it? I imagine you made quite an adorable girl, Matsuda-san."

His shudder and deep blush confirmed her suspicions. I DO hope your results justify me letting that little indiscretion pass, Matsuda-san. "You do understand the importance of keeping such knowledge discreet, yes?" She released his chin.

"O-of course!" He nodded quickly. "W-we fully documented our findings, i-if you wish a copy..."

She waved her hand. "The effects of the ingredient are well known but I appreciate that it was not simple curious indulgence on your part. Now... about the other items I asked you to prepare?"

"I've... sent the samples of the other formula to the Airsoft Club as requested," he said nervously. "I... have some concerns about the formula, though... The potential of such a fast-acting paralytic to cause cardiac arrest...!"

"It's been thoroughly demonstrated to have no lasting effects by the creator. The difficulty has always been with the delivery method. In its original powdered form it was far too indiscriminate. I have high hopes that your intravenous suspension will be much more useful." She clapped her hands. "Just think of the applications Matsuda-san!"

"I... understand that. I just... should this be something we're developing at high school?" Matsuda looked nervous.

"We just need to provide a proof-of-concept to my grandfather. I assure you this will all undergo exhaustive testing before we ever consider using any of this on a human subject." Himura patted his shoulder reassuringly. "And... your name, as well as the names of your club members, will be the ones getting full credit for the development."

He let out a deep sigh. "That is... you don't know how reassuring that is to hear, Madam President. For... for a moment..."

"Were you worried I was going to load up a bunch of airsoft rifles with this and rampage across Nerima?" She folded her arms and gave him a playfully skeptical look. "I must admit to being somewhat dismayed, Matsuda-san! I find your lack of faith disturbing."

Her shook his head. "Not at all, Madam President! I… even if you were using it for that, you've done so much to earn our loyalty… we are fully committed to supporting you. But I am still relieved to hear that."

"I appreciate that," she said with a nod. "Might I collect those prototypes from you now? I will see about delivering more packets to you once we have some feedback from testing."

"Of course!" He smiled and scurried off to the locked back room.

Sanae leaned over and whispered in Himura's ear. "You do realize he knows too much, darling?"

"Oh, of course," Himura murmured back. "But for now it's fine. We already have more than enough to ensure he remains loyal - even if he has misgivings. He'll learn to look the other way soon enough if he wishes to remain useful. And if not… well, he is so very concerned about testing… He could always make himself useful that way, hmmm?"

Her smile never wavered.

000

Nabiki nodded approvingly as they stepped into the shop. Most camera stores she had come across these days were glorified cell phone stores that had a shelf set aside for a few dusty, lonely digital cameras, or they were high-end stores for professionals that carried only the latest, greatest and priciest.

Her first glimpse of this shop, though, reassured her greatly. In the back she could see a door labeled 'Darkroom' with a red light over it. She could also see behind the clerk's desk what looked like a high-end film processing machine. There were racks of film for sale, as well as display cases that held a wide variety of film cameras and accessories of every vintage. There were digital cameras too, of course, but she felt this shop fell right into the sweet spot of the hobby for her.

"I'll need to remember this place…" she murmured to herself appreciatively. She wandered over to the used camera displays, where there was a table with a number of the lower end cameras, and a locked glass case that contained a selection of higher end models, as well as lenses, filters and other accoutrements.

"So… why use a film camera?" Ryouga asked. "I mean, not that I know much either way…"

"Yes, you and Ranma are luddites, I know," Nabiki replied, grinning at him. "Honestly? There's not really a concrete reason. I'm sure there are some high-end photographers who have specific needs and probably a huge roiling debate about it all. But that's not why I use film." She picked up an old SLR and peeked through the viewfinder at him.

"So… why do you?" he asked.

She clicked the shutter then lowered the camera, unconsciously thumbing the lever to wind it despite there being no film in it. "It was something Mom used to love," she said, popping the back of the camera open to examine the internals. "She took photography in University, just for fun. She'd spend hours just sitting in the backyard trying to get good pictures of the most ordinary-seeming things, like a bird perched in a tree near the pond, or the wash on the line as the sun shone through the sheets. I remember asking her what the funny box was and why she kept pointing it at everything." She chuckled and put the camera down. "Photography kind of became our thing, like cooking was for her and Kasumi, or martial arts for Akane and Daddy."
"Back then we only really had film cameras. Mom even developed some of her own pictures - mostly just black and white ones. I used to love when I finished a roll of film. It's like it became a little treasure chest, with no way to know what was really inside until you developed it. And even then, developing the film felt like you were a rogue in a dungeon; in the dark room, moving the film to the developer in the dark, working with your hands like some adventurer picking the lock of a chest. One wrong move, if just a little light leaked in, the treasure was lost forever. But once you had it in you would get to learn all its secrets. Some of those pictures were on that roll for days or weeks before I developed them. I got to rediscover them all over again." She picked up another camera, examining the settings. "There's so much artistry to it... You can know all there is to know about settings and light levels... try and frame everything perfectly... and then there's the moment. Maybe it's a small thing, like a leaf falling from a tree, or... or the look of joy on your sister's face as she holds up her first training dogi. Sometimes it's something huge like... like someone's very last smile..." Her voice grew quiet. "And you don't have time to be perfect, you just have to reach out and grab that moment. And you can't know what you actually captured until you open that treasure chest." She looked up at him. "That's what photography is for me. As much as I misuse it for silly things like blackmail or feeding the pervs at school." She sighed. "God... I'd kind of forgotten all of that stuff..."

Ryouga gave her a lopsided smile. "It's... not what I was expecting, I admit. I thought it was going to be something about how it's cheaper."

Nabiki rolled her eyes. "Oh god no! Film isn't cheap, and the developing costs... Then there's the hassle of actually finding a place that can do it these days. It's a dying art. Hana was the first person I met who actually knew what an 'F-stop' was..." she trailed off. She remembered how Hana had aspired to be a photographer for the student newspaper and to make a name for herself... only to find that no one cared. Nabiki had found her cradling her beat up old hand-me-down camera and it had sparked a conversation that had led to a friendship, and then a partnership.

Hana WAS my friend... maybe I lost sight of that, Nabiki thought glumly. We had two things in common - photography and ambition. I guess the latter won out for both of us.

"So... what is an 'F-stop'?" Ryouga asked.

"It's... a lot of technical jargon," Nabiki said with a heavy sigh. "You probably wouldn't be interested in it."

"Hey, just because no one ever actually explained it to me doesn't mean I wouldn't find it interesting," Ryouga protested. "That was the point, right? I'm here to learn about your hobby to see if anything catches my interest."

Nabiki blinked at him. She smiled slightly, feeling uncharacteristically shy. Photography was personal, after all.

She removed the lens from the camera she was holding. "All right, we'll start with the basic anatomy of a camera. This is an SLR - that's 'single lens reflex' - camera; there are other types, but if you're doing any serious photography you'll usually end up with one of these. The lenses are interchangeable, and the shutter here protects the film from accidental exposure so you can swap them on the fly. When you take a picture, this shutter opens for a brief instant to expose the film, which is treated with a light-sensitive chemical that reacts to capture the image. The lens itself also has a setting on it, called the Aperture, that determines how much light is let in." She flipped the camera over and popped open the back. "The film is loaded on these rollers and each crank of this lever advances it one frame. So you crank the film forward, set your shutter speed and the aperture depending on how much light you have, what kind of film you're using and whether it's a still shot or something that's moving, then take your shot, crank to the next frame and repeat."

"Sounds… complicated," Ryouga said. "And… What's an 'F-stop'?"

Nabiki chuckled. "That's a couple more lessons in, Ryo. It's basically the setting for your aperture. We haven't even gotten to film ISOs yet."

"Film ISOs?" Ryouga repeated, confused.

"You ever see those numbers after the film, like 'ISO 400' or so?" She cocked her head. "No? Ugh… Well, it's roughly like this: A higher number means the film can capture an image faster and with less light, but the picture itself is granier. So for really crisp, clean images you need a low ISO - but for those pictures to come out, you need whatever you're shooting to stay still and for there to be a lot of light."

"So for shooting something fast-paced, like a martial arts duel, you'd go for a higher ISO?" Ryouga asked tentatively.

"Exactly!" Nabiki beamed at him. "You and Ranma in particular had me going through ISO 1000 like it was going out of style." She trailed off a moment. "Which… I guess it has. Nevermind! All this stuff is there with digital cameras too, of course, but most people just let the automation handle it for them. And they end up with mediocre drek for pictures. The mechanics are all the same, it's just an imaging chip rather than a piece of film."

"Sounds like a lot of stuff to juggle, especially if you gotta snap a pic right away," Ryouga said.

"Exactly," Nabiki grinned. "That's the challenge. Sometimes you don't have time to do the math. You just have to wing it - to go with your gut and take the shot. I always liked that… the skill and precision set against the element of unpredictability."

"Describes you pretty well, actually," Ryouga noted wryly.

Nabiki blinked as she felt a momentary rush of heat to her cheeks and looked away quickly. "Y-yeah, well… Me and photography… we're both complicated so I can easily understand why people aren't willing to deal with either of us."

Ryouga picked up a camera and examined it. "I dunno, I kinda like complicated things."

Nabiki's eyes widened, and her blush spread rapidly. She wondered if he realized that he had echoed her words from Saturday night, which had been a fairly blatant come-on from her.

Ryouga didn't seem to notice, carefully examining the old camera in his hands.

She closed her eyes and slapped her cheeks in an effort to wrestle her emotions back under control. Stupid! You're getting carried away! She sighed, realizing that opening up about her beloved hobby had undermined her usual armor of cynicism. Ryouga's guileless and honest interest wasn't helping much either.

She decided to let that slide for now.

"So… what's it take to get into this?" Ryouga asked. "Are the cameras expensive?"

Nabiki was surprised again. "You… you seriously want to get into photography?"
Ryouga rubbed the back of his head. "Well… I mean… you wouldn't believe the number of times I've been out in the middle of nowhere and seen something and thought 'Man, I wish I had a camera!'. And… what you said earlier, about a roll of film being kind of like a treasure chest… I kinda like that concept." He shrugged. "I don't remember half the places I've been. It would be kind of cool to get back after wandering, develop a few rolls of film and have those reminders. And if it works without batteries, all the better."

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "That's… actually a really good point. I guess you're often too far from civilization for a regular digital camera to be of much use with how fast they can chew through batteries." She looked across the table. "We could get you an older model. It would still need batteries for the light meter but those would last for years…" She picked up an old Fujica-brand and frowned. "Ugh, not a 701… We need something that uses a battery that's still made in this century, though…"

"A-are they expensive?" Ryouga asked nervously as the middle Tendo started shopping.

"Not really. There are lots of decent old cameras and not a lot of demand anymore. We could get you a decent old SLR and some lenses to get you started for…" She trailed off as her eyes lit on one in the locked glass case. "... Warrflgh…!"

"I… I'm sorry? How much?" Ryouga leaned in, trying to hear.

Nabiki pushed past him and nearly ran to the case. "A Leica M6! I've always wanted one of these! They're impossible to find for less than…" Her eyes dropped to the price tag and her face fell. "… 800,000 yen… yeah… about there actually." She sighed and let her head thunk against the glass. "There are cameras that go for that much?" Ryouga asked in a slightly hushed voice.

"Not many anymore," Nabiki replied. "This is different though. Lecias are like the Ferrari of film photography and it's hard to find one that's in pristine condition like this." She gave him a reassuring smile "Don't worry, I can probably get you started for… 20,000 yen for everything?"

Ryouga sighed heavily. "That's… that's not a lot better for me, you know," he muttered.

Nabiki rolled her eyes. "Right, right, Martial Arts skill goes hand in hand with total lack of money management, I forgot." She rubbed the bridge of her nose, considering. "Are you serious about wanting to try this?"

"I… uhh…" Ryouga rubbed the back of his head. "Yeah. I mean, it sounds interesting anyway. I can take some part time jobs and…"

"Chump change," Nabiki cut him off. She looked at him and gave him an appraising look. "… Tell you what. I'll loan you my spare camera to get you started, and I'll find you a job that pays enough for you to get your own in no time, but I get a percentage. Deal?"

"Woah, hold on!" Ryouga held up his hands. "What kind of job?"

Nabiki's old smirk returned in full force. "What's the matter, Ryo? Don't you trust me?"

"No?" he said.

Nabiki tsked then folded her arms. "Full disclosure? I don't know what the job is yet because I have to find it. But I guarantee I can find something that pays better for your skill-set than anything you'd find." She extended her hand. "Plus I'll give you veto if it's not something you like - so you aren't going to get roped into something humiliating or unethical… as high-paying as those could be. Call it a 'Talent Agent' arrangement, if you like. Fair?"

Ryouga scowled, then a look of sudden inspiration crossed his face. "Shake first. Then I decide if I agree," he said, extending his own hand but leaving her to make contact. He gave her his own confident smirk.

Nabiki frowned then suddenly realized what he was up to. "You sneaky… You're going to use the Link to see if I'm lying to you!"

Ryouga's grin broadened. "Yeah, I am. Makes a pretty good lie detector. Is that a deal breaker for you, Ms. Tendo?"

Nabiki scowled at him, then clasped his hand firmly. She could feel how smug he was through the Link. "I was always on the up and up. You lot just never read the fine print or asked for details. But… fine. Trust me now?"

"Seems like a good deal, sure," Ryouga replied, shaking her hand once firmly then letting go.

"Hmph. It's a better deal than you'll get literally anywhere else," she said haughtily. She turned and headed back out of the store, fishing her phone out of her pocket.

"Thought you'd be the first to say something about 'If it seems too good to be true…'" Ryouga replied, following her.

"Oh, it's hardly that. That's part of the problem with all of you - your assessment skills are terrible," Nabiki replied flippantly, tapping away at a text message. She glanced over her shoulder at him. "And you're not always going to have something like the Link to let you cheat around it. Sometimes trust is a leap of faith, Ryouga."

"That… doesn't sound like you at all," Ryouga replied skeptically.

"It's absolutely like me," Nabiki replied. "I just don't have a lot of faith to waste, so I prefer to verify as much as possible first. Speaking of which…" she hit 'send' on the message… "you and I actually did with the Link and see if maybe the good Doctors can use that to help you."

"You what?!"

Nerima was decidedly short of adults that Ranma respected enough to actually pay any heed when they scolded her. Doctor Tofu, however, was one of them. She found herself unconsciously shrinking back a little and feeling a pang of shame.

"We didn't do anything on purpose, Doc," Ranma said defensively. She had hopped up onto Tofu's examination table. Ukyou, Akane and Shampoo sat off to the side while Ryouga and Nabiki, the latecomers, were forced to stand.

Tofu waved Ranma off, seeming almost irritable. "No, no, I'm not mad, Ranma, I'm just…" He tapped his chin as his brow furrowed in thought. "If the changes to Nabiki's ki are permanent… maybe it doesn't show up under individual examination…" He looked up. "The three of you, over here. Stand in a circle holding hands please, backs outward."

Ranma hopped down from the table and walked over, giving the two of them a sheepish grin. "I guess we're in trouble?" she said, holding out her hands to them.
"That's hardly new territory for you, Ranma," Nabiki replied with a snort, taking her hand. It was reassuring for Ranma to feel Nabiki's strong undercurrent of confidence when the link surged to life as they made contact.

"Yeah, but I ain't the one in trouble this time." Ranma winked at her, then took Ryouga's hand.

Nabiki reached out and took Ryouga's other hand, then closed her eyes.

Ranma could feel both their presences. There was a kind of flow to being in a circle like this, like an active circuit - a tingle of moving energy that wasn't really electrical, but was still definitely some kind of current. She could feel Dr. Tofu moving behind her, probing a few spots on her back, and then moving on.

"Hmmmnn... Ki is definitely circulating between you... I see! I missed the change because it's a subtle shift between the three of you..." He continued to mutter to himself. "This is interesting... and you are all three able to sense one another's moods through this?"

"Yeah," Ryouga said.

"Actually," Nabiki piped up, "It doesn't always need physical contact if one of us is feeling something intensely enough..."

Ranma winced as she remembered Ryouga's near meltdown.

Tofu's head popped up over Ryouga's shoulder. "Really? No, no, that would make sense for Ryouga or Ranma... you would all be attuned to each other's Ki, and if they started broadcasting..." he paused. "Ryouga didn't...!"

Ryouga rolled his eyes. "I avoided being a bomb, Doc. Thanks for the vote of confidence towards my self control."

"But you were upset?" Doctor Tofu didn't wait for an answer, rubbing his chin as he paced around them. "When we suppressed Nabiki's Ki with the herb... that's right, you were on either side of her, like an electrical current run through a resistor." He snapped his fingers. "With your resistance lowered so much, the flow was mostly unimpeded. It's the circulation that did it, between the three of you! That constant wash of ki must have somehow caused your body to become attuned to their energy in an incredibly short span." He considered. "But just a flow of ki wouldn't be enough, or we'd end up with patients attuning to their doctors all the time. It must be something unique... something about that ability Ryouga said he had to form such a link in the first place..." He resumed probing. "Ranma, Nabiki, have either of you had any directional problems since this started?"

"Directional..." Ranma frowned, then her eyes widened. "Wait... you're not suggesting that the curse is contagious?!" She felt a sudden surge of fear, eyes snapping to Nabiki. I can handle getting lost and having to camp out in the woods, but Nabiki...!

"I haven't had any symptoms," Nabiki replied, glancing at Ryouga.

Ranma felt a surge of guilt and worry from Ryouga, his gaze alternating between Nabiki and her. She gave his hand a gentle squeeze to reassure him.

"No, I'm not," Tofu said. "Which is unusual, because there doesn't seem to be any barrier to ki flow between the three of you now, which would suggest Ryouga's 'poisoned' ki should circulate as well. But... there's no trace of it. There has been nothing in either of your MRI scans either." He paused and considered. "It's possible that, because the ki is malignant, it is not attuned to Ryouga's..."
natural Link-forming talent. It seems to be invisible to Ryouga's own body - but Ranma's ki strongly suppresses it with exposure, almost like an immune response to a tumor. Not enough to excise it by itself, but…” He glanced at Nabiki. "With three of you now to create a circular flow… hmmm…”

"W-wait… have you got something, Doc?” Ryouga asked nervously.

"We would need to suppress Ryouga's ki levels the same way we suppressed Nabiki's. Leave the poisoned foreign ki exposed as much as possible, and boost Ranma and Nabiki's levels as much as is safe…” He looked at Nabiki. "You've been training with Cologne, yes? Yes, of course, I can feel the change. Still, it would take weeks to get your levels high enough naturally."

Akane timidly raised her hand. "Doctor Tofu?"

"Hmmm? Yes Akane?” Tofu raised his head, giving the youngest Tendo a smile.

"You would need a lot of ki to cure Ryouga, right?"

"Yes… More than Ranma alone can produce safely,” Doctor Tofu replied. "There are ways to increase one's ki production temporarily, but…"

"What if we added another person to the Link?” Akane asked, earning startled looks from Ukyou and Shampoo.

Doc Tofu cocked his head. "Well… I mean, theoretically, yes, but at this point that would result in a permanent emotional bond to Ranma, Ryouga, and now Nabiki, and I doubt they would welcome either myself or Doctor Hirano, even if Doctor Hirano had the requisite ki levels…”

"I mean me, Doctor,” Akane added quietly.

Doc Tofu blinked, then glanced at Ranma, Ryouga and Nabiki. "I… Well… yes, you would bring a considerable amount of ki to the equation that would…”

Ranma's eyes widened as she felt a sudden surge of surprise and… happiness from Ryouga. She looked at him, her eyes narrowing. You're STILL not over her, are you?! Even after all of this are you STILL getting your hopes up about her!? You JERK! Her grip on his hand tightened enough to have been painful for anyone else but him, but naturally he didn't even notice.

"Hold up! If Akane is joining the Link, then so am I!” Ukyou said, standing quickly and clenching her fists.

"Shampoo join too!” Shampoo stood next to her.

"Now hold on, girls!” Tofu held up his hands. "While I appreciate your willingness to help, please understand what you're suggesting. This… 'link' that Ranma, Ryouga and now Nabiki share is an unknown quantity. All that we do know is that it is something that - barring some unknown future development - will affect you for the rest of your lives. You won't just be linked to Ranma or Ryouga, you will each be linked to them and each other. There is no turning it off, no going back once this procedure is over with. We can't even be sure what the long term effects of having that many people linked to each other would be!"

"We know, Doc,” Akane said softly. "We've… we've already been discussing it."

"You have?” Doctor Tofu glanced at each of them, a perplexed expression on his face.
"We… uhh… We figured this might be necessary at some point," Nabiki said quickly. Ranma realized that she was covering for the fact that Doctor Tofu wasn't up to speed on all the relationship wrinkles. We'll have to let him in on it all at some point, but… UGH that's going to be an awkward conversation…

"That's… remarkably prescient of you," Doctor Tofu said, chuckling weakly. "I don't suppose you've predicted any other possible treatment steps?"

"Would it work, Doctor Tofu?" Akane asked again sternly.

Doctor Tofu blinked. He studied the determined set of her jaw a moment, then sighed and relaxed. "To be honest? It would probably be our best option. It would almost undoubtedly be the safest - the only other alternative I could think of would be to train Nabiki to increase her ki levels, and even then it would take an extended period of time and likely require dosing both her and Ranma with some rather unsafe compounds to accelerate their ki production temporarily. Even if we were to assume all five of you were in the link together, Ryouga's own ki must be dampened, which will require a potentially dangerous dosage of the herb I previously used on Nabiki."

"Is this dangerous to any of them at all?" Ryouga asked. Ranma could feel a surge of what she believed was protectiveness from Ryouga. Ryouga's still trying to protect Akane, even after all this, huh?

Doctor Tofu glanced at him. He sighed, pulling his glasses off and polishing them with a corner of his gi in an unconscious mimicry of Dr. Hirano. "No significant dangers that we know of, but there are so many unknowns with this that it's hard to say for certain. I would want to monitor the process and each participant closely to be sure."

Ryouga nodded. "Will this get us a cure that will help my Mother faster?"

Doctor Tofu paused, then sighed heavily, putting his glasses back on. "Almost without question. Even if this method isn't applicable, the data we can glean from six subjects rather than just two…"

"Then… then let's do it," Ryouga looked at the three girls. "If… if you're really willing."

Ranma felt a surge of apprehension as the distant possibility of the entire Fiancee Brigade joining the Link went from nebulous possibility to near-immediate certainty. "Hold on, hold on!" Ranma protested. She let go of Nabiki's hand and tugged Ryouga's. "Ryouga, can we talk a sec? In private?"

"Wha…? Hey!" Ryouga reacted too slowly for the redhead, and she resorted to simply dragging him bodily outside by the hand.

"What's the big idea, Ranma?!" Ryouga said as Ranma dragged him out of the building. He snatched his hand back, breaking the Link for the moment.

"Someone has gotta think this through for ya!" Ranma huffed. She wasn't exactly sure why she was suddenly annoyed with him, but she was. "You… you can't just go jumping into this! Think about it! You're talking about being Linked with five girls. An' none of 'em is Akari! Isn't this gonna screw things up with you an' her?"

"I know, but…" Ryouga sighed. "The Link only really applies if I come in contact with one of you, right? If we cure the curse, then I won't need an Anchor anymore. I'll be able to find my way, and I can get out of your lives!"
Ranma blinked and took a step back. She felt a cold stab in her gut. "S-so… that's why you're so eager, huh? You wanna get away from me that bad?"

"What? No! I..." Ryouga closed his eyes and took a deep breath. "Damnit, Ranma… you need me out of your life!" He stepped forward and took hold of her shoulders. "Listen to yourself! Five girls. You're not even qualifying it anymore! When was the last time you were a guy, huh?"

"I… last week… sometime…" Ranma said weakly, realizing she didn't clearly remember.

"Uh huh. I can't tell because I haven't seen guy Ranma for a lot longer. I don't know about you, but that's messing with my head and it's gotta stop!" He sighed heavily. "Look, go inside, change into your spare guy clothes and get some hot water, and let's discuss this man to man, okay?"

"I… uh… can't," Ranma said, looking away and fidgeting nervously.

"What? Again!? Why?!" Ryouga said, scowling.

"I used the soap, okay?" Ranma glared back at him defiantly. "I decided I wanted to use it now for the Wednesday game so I could change right after!"

"Ranma..." Ryouga closed his eyes, a pained look crossing his face. "God damnit…"

"Hey! It's my curse! I decide how I wanna deal with it, and which form I wanna be in!" Ranma replied hotly, pulling away from him. "It's still me! Who I am doesn't change! They understand that!" She waved towards the clinic. She poked him in the chest, forcing him back a step. "And you do too! You were the first guy to get it! You were the first guy who didn't treat me any differently because of my form! If you're having 'issues', then they're with me, not with my body! Nothing changed with that part of me."

"That's even worse!" Ryouga protested.

"Why? Because the person you've been sharing feelings with is a guy?" Ranma put her hands on her hips, her ire rising. She felt… offended, even though some small part of her was wailing in sympathy with Ryouga's distress.

"No! That's not it! I mean…" Ryouga took a shuddering breath. "Are you? A guy, I mean."

"Don't give me the pat answer, Ranma." His eyes were dark and intense as he stared her down. "I've been inside your head… way more than anyone should be. And… and after seeing Nabiki's mind too… You have been changing. In your head. Not a bad change but..." He ran his fingers through his hair as he struggled for the words. "I... I'm scared that it's my fault. That... that being linked to me is... is pushing you somehow. Like... you're changing to be what I need you to be. And I haven't done anything about it because I did need you. T-to cure the curse, I mean!"

Ranma set her jaw. For some reason Ryouga framing needing her as a bad thing hurt more than she expected. "And now you see a way outta needing me, huh? Got some better options? I mean hey, now you can finally get into Akane's head, right? That's even better than sleeping in her bed I bet!"

"What?!" Ryouga's expression darkened with old anger for a moment, but then it was replaced with a more confused, inquisitive look. "... Wait, are you jealous?"

Ranma felt heat rise in her cheeks. "Oh, gee, why would I be jealous?! Felt like you won the lottery when she offered, didn't it? Bet you..."
"Are you jealous because you're being possessive of her?" He asked, cutting her off. "... Or possessive of me?"

Ranma's rant died in her throat. She opened her mouth to reply, then snapped it shut. "I... I... don't be stupid!" She turned away quickly. She forced a laugh that she didn't feel. "You're... you're getting real full of yourself there, pig-boy. Even if I was inta guys, you'd have a better chance with Akane than you would with me!" She whirled back to face him. "And just to be clear, so you and your stupid glass heart get this once and for all, your chances with her are nil!"

"Okay, okay..." he held up his hands defensively, taking a step back. "I get it, okay?" He closed his eyes and took a deep breath. "Fine, I'm not totally over Akane. Maybe I never will be. That doesn't mean I have any delusions of anything happening. I gave up on that a long time ago." He pinched the bridge of his nose. "So... I'm guessing you don't want to go through with all of this?"

"I..." Ranma found she didn't have a good answer. After all, it was the fastest way to solve the problem, and she was always inclined to take the shortest route to a solution. What am I even objecting to this for? This gets me'n Ryo out of each other's hair the fastest, he can fix things with Akari an'... Her train of thought trailed off as she felt a pang at that.

"L-look... I... I just wanna make sure you know what you're in for," Ranma said after a moment. "The girls are... intense. An'... they got some boundary issues. An'... Akari was understanding about you an' me, but this is a lot to ask her to be okay with, so I just wanna make sure you aren't taking that for granted. That's all."

"I won't get in between you and your..." Ryoga struggled for a word that wouldn't set the redhead off. "... family, I promise. And... I'll find some way to repay all of you for doing this for me."

"Y-yeah..." Ranma said quietly. Now that the irrational surge of anger had died down, she felt an odd... emptiness? Like she had been wanting something else from all of this.

"So... are we good?" Ryoga asked tentatively. "We should probably talk with Doc Tofu to hash out details."

"Yeah..." Ranma said, subdued. "Yeah, we're good."

Ryoga nodded. He hesitated a moment, as if he wanted to say something more, then turned to head back in.

"Ryo..." Ranma said to his back. "We're... we're still friends, right? Past all of the Link nonsense and you needing me to fix the curse and alla that?"

Ryoga paused. He looked over his shoulder at her and smiled. "Yeah. Always were, Ranma. I'm just really bad at the whole 'friendship' thing." He continued on inside, waving at her to follow.

"Yeah..." Ranma said under her breath. "Me too."

000

So still working through the backlog. I insist on doing a once-over after my editor is done. Because we've had edits, but what about SECOND edits? Re-reads? Review? Panicked, frantic flipping through pages of notes because you realize you've forgotten to address a plot thread you've left dangling too long? Afternoon tea?

Believe it or not I AM building to something here, and it's important all the pieces be in the right place at the right time. I've also been accused of using the Link to fix everything neatly and... in hindsight, that WOULD be a pretty obvious use for a deus ex machina like that, wouldn't it? Yes, that would lead to a very nice, neatly wrapped up ending, wouldn't it?

Shame I didn't think of that.
"Look, you gonna talk to me or what?"

Ryouga pointedly didn't look at the pigtailed boy. His hands were stuffed in his pockets and his eyes were on the sidewalk ahead of them. Everything about his posture screamed that he wanted to be left alone.

Naturally, Ranma was completely oblivious. "I dunno why you put up with all that crap," Ranma said, his hands folded behind his head as he walked. "I mean... they're all weaklings. You'd think they'd show you a little respect or..."

"That'd be dishonorable," Ryouga said firmly, realizing Ranma wasn't going to let it go. "They're not martial artists."

The truth was the teasing at school had always been somewhat low-key. Ryouga's directional problems had long been a source of mirth for them, but now that his daily duels with Ranma over lunch bread were well known - and that Ryouga was regularly losing them - they had gotten bolder with their torment. Before Ryouga's martial arts prowess had always kept them at bay, but now they had taken to stuffing his locker with old maps, or making crude "Lost Boy" posters with his face on them and putting them up all over the school. A few people had even tried to claim the 'reward' they offered from him for 'finding' him.

"Yeah, but... they're the ones picking the fights. D'ya wanna look weak?" Ranma asked, glancing in his direction.

"I don't care," Ryouga growled. "Most of them can't even throw a punch. It'd just be bullying. They can't actually do anything to me."

"You bully the hell outta me," Ranma complained, rotating his shoulder. "Sure doesn't feel like you're pulling any punches there."

"Says the guy who wins every time," Ryouga grouched.

"That's just 'cuz I'm faster. I can usually keep outta reach," Ranma asserted. "Trust me, when you do connect, I feel it."

"That's the point, though," Ryouga said, finally sparing the pigtailed boy a look. "You're strong enough to take a hit. You're actually worth beating into a pulp. It's a challenge. Someone I can learn something from. The only point of beating up those other guys would be to make 'em afraid of me. I'd rather be a joke than be a monster, y'know."

"Tch..." Ranma replied noncommittally. "Being strong doesn't make you a monster. But... you got a point I guess." He shot the Lost Boy a grin. "An' you're worth beating to a pulp too."

Ryouga folded his arms and smirked. "Oh really? There's a pretty big gap between playing 'keep away' with some melonpan and that. You think you're up for it?"

"Hell yeah!" Ranma replied, then his face fell. "Uhh... but... not today? Pops'll lose his mind if I get my school uniform all torn up. He's still bitching about how much it cost him. Most of my training duds are pretty ripe too, and Pops is lazy about doing laundry."
Ryouga glanced down at his own uniform and sighed. "Yeah… Weekend then, maybe?"

"Sure, assuming Pops doesn't hog all my time with some stupid new idea for training." Ranma replied.

Ryouga shuddered. Ranma had told him some stories. Even the ones Ranma seemed to think were fairly innocuous sounded pretty hellish. "He finally stop trying to teach you how to 'hand-broil' a hamburger over an open flame?"

"Yeah. He just gets weird ideas when he's hungry," Ranma replied, rubbing his hands self-consciously. "I just cooked up all the hamburger he bought for it the normal way and he forgot all about it after he ate it all."

"You get any?" Ryouga asked. He had discovered a lot of Genma's 'training' involved stealing Ranma's food.

"Nah, but… seemed a fair trade to keep from having to cook my own hands," Ranma replied. "I had some bread stashed so I was good."

Ryouga noticed them approaching his house. He didn't like the idea of Ranma going hungry, but Ranma's pride was something that needed to be worked around. "Hey, uhh… I've got some food in the fridge that's getting close to its expiry date… I was wondering…"

Ryouga could see Ranma's eyes light up. "Uhh… well, I dunno man…" The pigtailed boy feigned reluctance. It was all part of the dance to ensure the Saotome pride was properly mollified.

Which meant a little more stroking was needed. "Please? It's way too much for just me, and I'm gonna hafta toss it if no one eats it." Ryouga walked up to his front door and waited expectantly.

"Ah, well, if you're gonna twist my arm…" Ranma managed to maintain the facade for another few seconds, then his hunger overcame the need to keep up the charade and he practically bolted for the door as Ryouga opened it for him.

000

(Present Day)

Ukyou was used to waking up early, so it wasn't any surprise to her that she blinked awake while the light was still dim. She was warm and comfortable, wondering why her alarm hadn't gone off until she remembered she had stayed over at the Tendo Dojo for the night. She was spooned up against Akane's back, one arm draped over the youngest Tendo as Akane lay curled up with Ranma. For once Ukyou had managed to evade Akane and Ranma's tendency to tangle themselves up with their bedmates by turning them on each other.

She didn't have to get up. There was no morning prep to be done at the dojo but she felt a little guilty for imposing and had already resolved the night before to make breakfast for all of them - especially Kasumi, who had been weathering all this chaos with her usual calm steadfastness. She slipped her leg out from under the covers, biting her lip at the chill in the air, gingerly easing herself back away from her pair of lovers to avoid disturbing them.

Akane mumbled and stirred. "Nnnh… stay…" she mumbled, reaching back to clumsily grasp at Ukyou as she felt the warm body moving away.

"I gotta make breakfast, sweetie," Ukyou replied, leaning in to kiss the nape of Akane's neck gently.
"Mmmph… 'Sumi can do it…” Akane muttered, but she was already drifting back off to sleep.

Ukyou was again tempted to stay, but pushed herself to finish slipping out from under the covers while she had the opportunity. She retrieved her underthings from Akane's floor and slipped them on, as well as borrowing a fluffy terrycloth bathrobe that was hanging from a hook on Akane's door. Maybe I should stash a set of clothes here? She glanced back at Akane and Ranma and blushed. Hell… maybe I should be thinking about moving in at this point?

Of course, that would require the approval of the actual mistress of the house, and possibly Mr. Tendo as well. Either way, she was likely going to be spending a lot more time at the dojo so it was best if she got into the habit of treating the household as if it were her own. That meant ensuring she did her share to make sure it and those who were living there were properly taken care of.

She slipped out of Akane's room and carefully crept downstairs. A long time ago Shampoo had shown her where all the creaky floorboards in the dojo were, having carefully mapped them out during her many late night visits to creep on Ranma.

We really are weird, aren't we? Ukyou thought with a little bemusement. Here I am, a student of the 'School of Anything Goes Stalking Ranma Saotome'. And now I'm using what I learned to make everyone breakfast.

She made her way down the stairs, mindful that Soun's room was on the main floor, and crept into the kitchen. She had cooked meals in here before, like for the Christmas party, but it had always been with Kasumi's supervision. Here, more than anywhere else in the house, she felt like a trespasser.

Forgive me Kasumi. I'll take good care of it, Ukyou thought. As a chef, she was well aware of the sanctity of a cook's kitchen, and she took a moment familiarizing herself with where things were - not just so she could find them, but so she could return them to their proper places once she was done. Satisfying herself that she had mapped it all out sufficiently, she started gathering the utensil and ingredients she'd need.

Plenty of eggs… Ukyou thought, her head deep in the old fridge. There were several cartons that looked freshly bought, as well as a fully stocked crisper. Kasumi must have just done some grocery shopping. I think omelettes would go over well today.

Ukyou was just straightening with her arms laden with vegetables and a carton of eggs when she saw something out of the corner of her eye. She turned slightly and nearly fumbled her armload when she saw Kasumi was standing near the kitchen door in her nightgown, watching her.

"It's a bit late for a midnight snack," Kasumi said with a smile. "Or am I late getting breakfast started? I am sorry if you were left hungry at dinner last night, Ukyou."

"Oh! No, no, not at all!" Ukyou said quickly, sheepishly putting her armload down on the counter. "I… uhh… I was just trying to surprise you by making breakfast for everyone so you wouldn't have to."

"Oh my, that's very nice of you Ukyou, but hardly necessary," Kasumi said.

"I insist!" Ukyou beamed at her. "You just take it easy this morning and I'll tackle the job of feeding everyone."

"W-well…" Kasumi sounded uncertain. "I… that's a very generous offer, Ukyou. Thank you."

Ukyou frowned. "Is something wrong, Kasumi?"
Kasumi closed her eyes and took a deep breath. "Please don't make fun of me for this? I've had people try and do favors like this for me before, and it's such a sweet gesture but..." She wrung her hands, almost as if she were ashamed. "... It... it just makes such a mess of my schedule! If someone else is doing everything for breakfast, then there's just the laundry to start. But it's far too early to put it out to dry, so if I start the wash now it will just sit in a wet pile for hours and end up smelling musty. Sometimes I try and clean but I can't vacuum with everyone asleep so I can only do the dusting and usually I do that when everyone is out for the day. So I won't be able to do the whole house. I could do the furo but then it won't be filled and hot when people get up and want a bath so then everything ends up out of order and... and... and..." She seemed to be starting to hyperventilate so Ukyou quickly put a hand on her shoulder out of concern.

"Woah, woah, easy!" Ukyou did her best to steady the older girl. "I'm sorry, I didn't know it threw your routine so far out of whack." Ukyou knew a few things about the importance of routines as they were vital to running a business, but she had nothing so seemingly strict as the eldest Tendo girl. "Why don't you just watch TV or read a book or relax or something?"

"But... that's for after the chores are done..." Kasumi said uncertainly. She closed her eyes and sighed. "You're right. I just... When your whole world is your home, small things can throw you off sometimes."

"Really? I always thought you handled change pretty well, what with Ranma and her father showing up and then that old pervert Happosai, followed by the bunch of us freeloding from time to time," Ukyou replied. "I was actually feeling pretty guilty about how much we have been depending on you."

"No! Please don't!" Kasumi said quickly. "More work... more things to do... that's never a problem! It's..." She looked uncertain, her eyes darting away. "This... will probably seem strange to you but... this house... It's all I have ever felt certain of - the only place I feel at all in control. My routine... managing the chores around here..." she sighed, "... that must sound so silly to someone like you."

"No... no I can kind of understand..." Ukyou replied. "Now that I think about it, that one time I was really sick and Ranma, Akane and Konatsu tried to take over the restaurant for me was hell. Though... It probably didn't help they were grossly incompetent. At least Konatsu has gotten halfway decent at it now. I've... been a bit too distracted lately to run things like I should." Ukyou gave Kasumi a wan smile.

Kasumi shook her head. "That... is the difference, isn't it?" She stepped further into the kitchen, running a finger along the edge of the sink as if checking for dust. "As important as it is to your life, your restaurant is only part of it. That's my problem. This house is all I have. My whole world. Ever since mother died I've focused everything on the needs of this house and the people living in it. And... that was enough for me. I always felt needed. I always felt wanted and appreciated. I always felt like I had a place." She gently tweaked the tap. "But... more than that... I feel like I know this house... really know it. There are so many things people don't know or simply don't notice, so many stories... this place is old, and everywhere I look I can see the evidence of the families who lived here before us. I always felt like... I was doing something important taking care of this place. Even when a hole was put in the roof, or the water heater blew out... it was just another story for this place to tell. It was like I was the caretaker of that story."

Something jogged in the back of Ukyou's mind. "Wait... But... what was going to happen if Ranma and Akane inherited the dojo?"

Kasumi turned, giving her a weak smile, and shrugged. "It would be someone else's turn to take
"But what about you?" Ukyou pressed. "Where were you going to go? What were your plans?"

Kasumi looked down. "I… don't know." She chewed on her lower lip. "Sometimes… sometimes I wonder if that's why I never put my foot down… Why I always went along with father's meddling in Ranma and Akane's relationship. Why I always said they were too young. It let me put that question off for another day."

Ukyou felt crestfallen. Her grand idea to do something to repay Kasumi had backfired spectacularly because she hadn't fully understood the situation. "I-I'm sorry. Here… I can put all this back and let you get back to your routine, and…"

Kasumi held up a hand, eyes closed and brow furrowed. She finally opened her eyes, and there was a determined glint in them. "No… no, I have a better idea, if you still want to do something to help me, Ukyou."

"Uh… yes! Of course, anything, sugar. Just name it!" Ukyou said, eagerly latching onto the offered rope.

Kasumi smiled. "Go ahead with what you were planning for breakfast. I'll help you, but please make what you were planning to make. That will fill the time for me until it's time to start the laundry. And if it's alright… I would like to talk."

Ukyou blinked. "O-of course!" She turned back to her pile of ingredients, portioning out things into the various steps she had planned. She put aside the vegetables for washing, and Kasumi took them, interpreting that part easily enough and busied herself with the task.

"So… what did you want to talk about?" Ukyou asked uncertainly, worried that there was going to be some big concern raised about her unconventional relationship choices.

"Anything, really," Kasumi replied. "I… suppose I wanted to learn more about you."

"Oh! Sure, I guess that makes sense," Ukyou nodded. "I mean… seeing as I'm probably going to be around a lot…" Ukyou wasn't entirely comfortable with claiming status as a member of the family yet, especially as she and Akane had not yet discussed their plans with anyone, least of all Kasumi.

"That's not it," Kasumi said softly with a shake of her head. She took a breath as if gathering herself. "Ukyou… you and I come from similar backgrounds, yes? Martial arts families… a family legacy involving a lot of cooking… But… we've ended up in such different places." Kasumi looked up from her vegetable washing. "You've become an accomplished martial artist and a chef, without compromising one for the other. You've turned those skills into a successful business and you've done it all on your own. You can go anywhere and make your way with just a grill and a spatula. You had so little to start with and yet you've become someone who can hold her own in almost any situation. I admire you."

Ukyou froze mid-chop, staring slack-jawed at the eldest Tendo.

Kasumi turned her gaze back to her washing. "And yet here I am, three years your senior, with… with everything I've ever needed… with all the support I could have wished for to be or do whatever I wanted… and yet… I've done nothing with it. I'm a housewife who is not a wife and who will someday soon have no house. I feel like… I feel like I missed a step, an important step, and now… Now I don't know what to do."

It took Ukyou a second to reboot after that revelation. "Kasumi… are you seriously suggesting that you admire me because I have my life more together than you?"

Kasumi paused again, blinking innocently. "Yes…?"

Ukyou had to catch herself on the counter as the laughing fit hit. The very concept was just too bizarre for her brain to process as she doubled over giggling.

Kasumi stared at her in confusion as she waited for the Okonomiyaki Chef to recover enough to explain.

"K-Kasumi… You can’t… I mean…” Ukyou shook her head, taking a few deep breaths to get herself under control. "Sorry, it's just… you're the gold standard for someone who has it together!"

Kasumi frowned. "I-I’m sorry? I don't follow…"

"Kasumi, every day my life is in constant danger of flying apart at the seams," Ukyou said. "My business is always just this side of being in the red. Between the expenses, keeping Konatsu and myself fed and clothed and having to go to school, I don’t even have enough left over to pay Konatsu a decent wage, much less have any savings. Every year I'm just waiting for the landlord to jack up the rent on that rat hole and price me out of the market. It's pure luck I'm still in business, and I keep pushing that luck because I decided on who I was going to marry when I was six and I've been burning the candle at both ends to try and actually make that happen because I had zero plans outside that. My whole life has basically been prideful insanity - so much so that most of my family will barely have anything to do with me now." Ukyou resumed chopping. "Yet you manage to keep this place together despite having three or four of the craziest martial artists in town living here, plus having the rest of the crazies regularly crashing the place. In the face of all of that, you manage to make this oasis of normalcy that kinda forces everyone to stop and be normal for a while. And you do it with practically no budget. On top of that, you've got a handsome older doctor who's crazy about you… maybe a little more literally than is strictly healthy, but…"

"Yes, Doctor Tofu…" Kasumi replied, handing over the next batch of vegetables she had finished washing. "He's… he's very sweet, really… and… he's everything I always said I wanted, isn't he?"

Ukyou paused again, looking over at her. "Changed your mind, sugar?"

"Not so much. More… I never made it up. I've just been going on since mother died trying to be her so very hard that… that I forgot to have any dreams for myself. And Doctor Tofu is sweet and funny and… and entirely too much like Father!" She thumped the counter with her hand, an unexpected look of frustration crossing her face.

Ukyou's eyes widened. "Woah…"

"I've spent so many years putting off having a life of my own so that others could have theirs, always thinking that once my sisters were old enough to manage I could just pick it back up again, but now…” Kasumi stared down at her reflection in the water in the sink. "... Now I don't know how. I've spent so long safeguarding and tending an inheritance that isn't even mine!"

Ukyou swallowed. She had never, ever seen Kasumi like this. She put down her knife and stepped closer, but didn't touch her. "Kasumi… Do you want to inherit the dojo?"

Kasumi looked up, and Ukyou was astonished to see there were tears in her eyes. She sniffed, then laughed bitterly. "No… no… God no! This house should go to a family… to the ones who will carry on the school. That's always been how it should be. Being alone and left to tend this empty house...?" She shuddered. "No... I'm the problem. I want to be... someone who knows how to be more than just the caretaker of this house. I want to be someone who knows how to _want_ to be more than that. I want to be able to remember whatever it was I dreamed of being when Mother was alive, or at least to come up with new dreams." She dabbed at her eyes. "That's why I've never pursued anything with Dr. Tofu. I am afraid... I would just be the same caretaker in a different house. But... at the same time, I'm so terrified of changing... of not being _me_ anymore."

Ukyou pulled the older girl into a hug. Kasumi froze a moment, then returned it.

"Look... I don't know the right path for you, sugar," Ukyou said. "But I _do_ know that what makes you special to me - and everyone I know who knows you - doesn't have anything to do with this house, or your being in it. You're the person that everyone relies on when they're hurting or scared or just need someone to make them feel like things are going to be all right - and that they can keep on going, even when everything else is telling them they're done. You're that 'safe place' - not just for your family, but for _anyone you meet._" She released Kasumi and smiled at her. "That's you. And if you change what you do or where you live or _how_ you live, that isn't going to change. So... don't worry about it."

Kasumi smiled and wiped her eyes. "You're... you're right. I think... how can you be so _fearless_ about it all, though? How do you keep going, taking such bold steps when the ground could crumble out from under you any moment?"

Ukyou shrugged. "I guess... because one day it _did_. And it sucked, and it hurt, and it felt like my life was over... and then it wasn't. Life went on, and I learned from that and drew purpose from it. All those things people are terrified are gonna be the end of the world... they aren't. You come out the other side of it. I guess... I just decided that since that was the worst feeling I could imagine having, and I could live through it, there really wasn't anything the world _could_ throw at me that could really stop me, so long as I just kept going."

"I see," Kasumi chuckled. "You really can be an inspiration when you choose to be, Ukyou. I think I see why my little sister has grown so fond of you."

Ukyou blinked and swallowed. "Uhh... Well, you know we're both engaged to Ranma..."

Kasumi giggled and leaned in conspiratorially. "You've come home with Akane _without_ Ranma, Ukyou. And the walls of this house are _not_ very thick."

Ukyou felt a hot rush to her cheeks. She looked away and fidgeted. "Oh... U-uh... yeah... Sorry?"

Kasumi smiled and shook her head. "No apologies. Akane has been happier and more at peace than I've seen since... since Mother died. That is more than enough for me to approve." She took a deep breath and sighed. "It's just a shame there won't really be a wedding. Chances are Ranma will marry Nabiki for the legalities. I know you had planned a ceremony with the Amazons of some sort, but I _had_ hoped one day I'd see my little sister making the walk down the aisle."

Ukyou swallowed hard. "Ummm... about that, Kasumi... actually... Akane and I have been talking... A-and it's just preliminary stuff right now... we haven't decided anything concrete but..." she leaned in and started whispering conspiratorially in Kasumi's ear.

Kasumi listened. Gradually her eyes widened, though she remained silent until Ukyou finished. It was a few moments after Ukyou stepped back nervously, waiting for her response, that Kasumi finally spoke.

"Oh _my_..."
Busying herself with breakfast was an excellent way for Akari to make herself feel useful. That it also helped soothe her nagging feelings of uncertainty also helped.

She glanced out the back door to see Katsunishiki snoozing in the backyard. She sighed, knowing the champion pig was going to start losing his tone if she let him slack off too much longer.

_I don't suppose it'll matter if he's retiring early_, Akari thought, then sighed. Katsunishiki was her first champion sumo pig and she always knew the day would come eventually. There would be his children to train, of course, but he was still in his prime and there was so much _more_ she knew they could accomplish together.

Enough lamenting. She shook her head vigorously. This is for the sake of Ryouga and our future happiness together. She returned her attention to chopping vegetables.

"[Oh! Good mornin']"

Akari looked up to see Anna rubbing the sleep from her eyes. She was either wearing her clothes from the previous day, or an identical dress. Akari idly wondered if the girl might appreciate a shopping trip - it didn't seem she had brought much with her from America in the way of clothing. She smiled, trying to remember what little English she had learned in school. "Ummm… I'm sorry my English is terrible… umm… [Good aft…] no wait… [Good morning!]" She beamed for having remembered the right word.

Anna blushed sheepishly. "[Ah'm really sorry 'bout all this… ummm, hang on…] Am sorry," she managed, reaching for her book.

Akari shook her head, walked over and put a hand over the book. "You don't need that. Ummm… [Ryouga soon. Breakfast soon.]" She motioned for towards a chair.

Anna nodded and sat down. "[So… uh… Ah know you don't understand me at all, an' Ah reckon this is as big a shock to you as it is to me…]" She sighed, folding her hands on the table. "[But thank you for being so patient about all o' this. Ah knew Ah shoulda learned mah Japanese better before settin' out, but I'm a duff when it comes to languages…]"

Akari frowned and just nodded dumbly, not able to follow what the girl said at all. Her particular accent was so different than her English teacher's and she spoke so much faster that it made parsing what she said almost impossible, but Akari got the sense the other girl just needed someone to listen. She returned to making breakfast, but kept her attention on Anna. _Poor girl. Ryouga met her first, but never found his way back to her? I wonder if things would have been different for him and me if he had?_ She set the miso soup to simmer and put on a kettle to boil, deciding the least she could offer was a cup of tea. She had so many questions she wanted to ask the girl, but the language barrier made things difficult. Maybe she could find a good translation guide to help her out?

She poured out a couple of cups and walked over, sitting down and offering one to Anna. "Here, this is tea. Uhh… " She held up hers and sipped it demonstratively.

Anna picked hers up and glanced at it. "[Oh, tea,]" she sighed heavily. "[Ah'd kill for a good strong cup o' coffee right about now.]

"[Coffee?]" Akari perked up, recognizing the word. She held up a finger and quickly got up to check the cupboards, but quickly found there was none available. She sighed and sat back down, shrugging apologetically. "Sorry… ummm… [No have. Get soon.]"

"[Oh, no, no need for th' trouble!]" Anna seemed embarrassed that her complaint had been understood. "[Ah appreciate the thought tho… uhh…] Thank you."

Akari smiled and nodded. She heard the sound of footsteps coming down the stairs and stood just as Ryouga made his way in, looking worn out himself. "Ryouga!"

"[Joe!]
"[Ummm… I guess I’ve made things awkward for you, haven't I?]

Ryouga glanced at her, then Akari, then closed his eyes as if pained. "[Right, right… Anna I'm so sorry… about everything. I shouldn't have just walked away from you and your father like I did, I should have explained things better, I…]

Anna stepped closer to him. "[It's okay! Ah just… Ah wanted to know you were okay. Ah ran after you when you left. Ah tried to catch up, but… but you vanished, and Ah guess… Ah just wanted to make sure you were okay an’ all.]

"[Ah know you have someone else in yer life now…]"

Ryouga winced. "[I… for what it's worth, I didn't tell you everything,]

"Akari, could I have a glass of water and a kettle ready? I'm going to show Anna the curse."

Akari nodded, filling a glass from the tap and handing it over to him, stepping closer to catch it when the inevitable happened.

"[Anna, there's a reason you didn't find me after I walked off. I was still there, I had just tripped over a bucket of water. You see, I have a curse and… well, when I get splashed with cold water this is what happens.]

Ryouga closed his eyes and dumped the glass of water over his head.

Akari reacted with practised ease, reaching out to catch the glass as the space Ryouga had filled was suddenly empty. She glanced at Anna, who's eyes had gone wide as she started to looking frantically about.

"[Ryouga? Joe!?! Where did you go?!]

"[What happened?!]"

Akari smiled at her gently, took her arm and guided her down to the pile of clothes on the floor. "Here," she said, reaching into the pile and extracting the small, damp black piglet, who shook himself off as soon as he was free.

"Ryouga! That's very rude you know! You shouldn't shake off on people like that!" Akari admonished him. After ensuring she saw a properly remorseful droop of his ears, she handed the piglet to Anna. "Ryouga," she said, motioning for her to take the piglet as she stood to fetch the kettle.

"[R-Ryouga?]

"[R-How?!]

The piglet made a nervous "Bweee."

Akari returned with the kettle and gently took Ryouga back from Anna's unresisting grasp, placing him back into his pile of clothes. With practised movements he burrowed back in and positioned himself. Having done this many times before, Akari waited for him to stop moving, then poured the hot water on him.
Ryouga exploded back into being, managing to get all his limbs in the right holes of his clothes, a trick he had told Akari he had learned after a number of embarrassing situations. Most Jusenkyo sufferers learned some form of 'quick-change' technique.

Anna yelped as she practically flung herself backwards, staring up at him with wide eyes.

Ryouga sighed heavily. "[It's a curse I picked up in an old Chinese spring. When I'm splashed with cold water, I take the form of a small black piglet. Hot water changes me back. So… when I 'vanished', I was just under the water bucket. You never noticed me.""] He crouched down in front of her. "[I… know that's a lot to take in. Back then I felt I needed to cure my curse before anyone would be able to accept me. I spent a year searching before I realized there probably isn't one.""]

She stared at him a moment. Akari crouched off to the side, watching. Anna's eyes were wide, and for a moment she was afraid the girl would run off screaming.

Slowly, Anna pushed herself up to her knees. She reached out and tentatively poked Ryouga's chest as if to reassure herself he was really there. She blinked when she actually met resistance, then looked up at him. "[Can… can I see that again?]

000

Ranma blew her bangs up as she walked, hands clasped behind her head. She was coming to realize that getting ready for school on time… walking with a group… arriving with time to spare… and not getting attacked along the way… was actually starting to get boring. Especially since she wasn't the focus of attention today - Ukyou and Akane had earned that honor.

"So, explain to me again, 'Little Brother', exactly what it is you and Kasumi talked about that has her looking so smug and secretive and humming 'The Wedding March'?" Nabiki poked Ukyou's shoulder and gave the Okonomiyaki Chef a suspicious stare.

"Nothing! Just… we chatted while making breakfast!" Ukyou said defensively. Akane walked close next to her, head down and blushing.

"Uh huh, not buying it," Yuka flanked the couple on the other side, poking Akane's shoulder. "Come on Akane, spill! What are you two up to?"

"It's… it's… you'll make fun!" Akane huffed and clenched her fists, looked away and turned even redder.

"Oh come on, Akane… We've been okay with all the weirdness in your life so far," Sayuri said. "This can't be that bad if Kasumi is happily humming about it!"

"We could just play 20 questions," Riko suggested. "Does it involve a foreign Prince from a forgotten magical land? Again?"

"Ooooh, did one of you get engaged to a demon?" Yuka piped up.

"I-is it aliens?" Rin asked in a hushed voice. "It hasn't been aliens yet, has it? We're probably due for aliens..."

"Alright! Alright…" Ukyou said finally, holding up her hands in surrender. "Kasumi… was saying that she kind of regretted that she wasn't going to get to see Akane in a traditional wedding, since Ranma is probably going to marry Nabiki here in Japan, and the rest of us will be doing some sort of ceremony at Jusendo… and…” she ducked her head. "I… might have suggested… well… I'm listed as male on my family register, so legally… I mean… Akane and I talked about…"
"I asked Ukyou to marry me and she said yes, and so we're going to have an actual wedding!"
Akane blurted out, her face cherry red now. "There! Happy?"

The group around her blinked at the two of them owlishly.

"Aaaaand suddenly we're walking over here," Hiroshi said as he and Daisuke moved up closer to Ranma, putting the redhead between them and any potential fallout.

"Gee, thanks guys," Ranma gave each of them a sour look as they not-so-subtly shielded themselves with her body. She glanced back at the Akane and Ukyou, pondering if she should get involved or not. The two of them had already talked to her about it and gotten her blessing, so this was no real shock for her, though the last she had heard the plan was to elope.

I can just see Mr. Tendo walking Akane down the aisle, bawling his eyes out, an' everyone just thinking it's the whole 'my baby girl has grown up' thing, Ranma chuckled mentally at the image. Poor guy... kinda? I mean... She glanced at Akane, who was blushing and fidgeting as Yuka, Sayuri and Riko started pestering her for details. I mean Akane is HAPPY, right? He ain't got no business being upset over THAT. She scowled, feeling her sympathy for the man bleed away as she remembered the sight of Akane in her wedding dress. Then she remembered that they had held the cure to her curse hostage just to force them into it - which had resulted in near total disaster. The 'cure' had gotten wasted, the other fiancees had been provoked, and the aftermath torn her and Akane apart for a while. Even if she didn't actually want the curse cured anymore, being blackmailed into things never sat well with her. Actually, he'll be lucky if we let him ATTEND.

She felt a pang of regret as she realized that the next time Akane walked down the aisle, it wouldn't be for her.

I mean... I know we're all going to be together... and Akane SAID she wants to marry me too, but... She glanced at the two of them and had to admit they looked good together. Ukyou too, I guess. If she marries Akane... Well, it's not like I'm legally a girl... and then there's Nabiki... Her eyes flicked to the Middle Tendo. She sighed. I'm greedy, aren't I?

"Airen got look on face again," A soft voice murmured in her ear, making her jump. She gasped and recoiled a bit, whirling to see Shampoo smirking at her.

"Shampoo not even sneaking. Airen too-too distracted!" Shampoo huffed, crossing her arms haughtily. It only lasted a moment though before she glanced back at the couple. "Is strange, yes? Odd feeling... supposed to all be equal, all together, but even then..."

Ranma followed her gaze, noticing she was looking at Ukyou. She glanced back at Shampoo; In the past she had never been very good at reading emotions, but she had learned a great deal since then. "You and Ucchan... kinda had a thing, didn't cha?"

"Still have thing," Shampoo sighed. "Just... maybe not thing could have been." She moved closer and took Ranma's arm, hugging it. In the past Ranma would have panicked, but now she was able to recognize a request for comfort.

"You regretting things?" Ranma asked softly. She put her hand over Shampoo's on her arm.

Shampoo shook her head quickly, hugged Ranma's arm more snugly and rested her head on her shoulder. "No! No... This way so much better. Have Airen. Have Pintou. Able to go home.
to Joketsuzoku with head held high now. But…” She sighed and leaned more heavily against the redhead. "...There is always path not taken. Shampoo might have been one to marry Ukyou if Airen and Akane get together. Can be close with Ukyou now. Sisters. But… maybe never that close. Feel… like outsider."

"I know exactly what you mean," Ranma said. She closed her eyes and rested her head against Shampoo's. "I guess… that's why the sort of thing we're doing doesn't happen much… or even at all. Everything ebbs and flows, and sometimes a thing is only really shareable between two people, an' so the others get hurt 'cuz they get left out."

"Used to be way with you and Akane," Shampoo replied. "Lots between you two… Me and Ukyou miss out. Now… all have moments with each other. Like this…” She sighed happily. "Airen make Shampoo feel better. Thank you."

Ranma realized that she felt better too. Sharing her worry, and having Shampoo open up about having the same feelings had somehow bled away some of the melancholy. Mebbe that's how we make this work then? Can't always keep things equal, can't stop that feeling of missing out, but if we just share THAT with each other too… She sighed, feeling the weight ease. She took Shampoo's hand, weaving their fingers together as they continued on towards Ryouga's house. "Mebbe I'm finally learning this 'supportive' stuff. A real man is s'posed to be that for his wife… uh… wives in my case. Right?"

Shampoo smirked at her. "Is not just 'man' thing, Airen. But is strength thing. Bonds of support why Joketsuzoku encourage bonds of sisterhood. Make better warriors." Shampoo seemed content to cuddle Ranma's arm as they walked. "Japanese too-too enamoured with idea of 'lone wolf'. Think being strong alone naturally make one stronger than those who strong in group. Not realize ability to make bonds is strength by itself."

"I… kinda never thought about that…” Ranma mused. "Never did the Hentai Horde any good though."

Shampoo snorted. "They not have bond, is just have same goal. If ever actually beat Akane would turn on each other. Is lowest form of cooperation, kind that come from not having other choice."

Ranma had to admit she had a point. "I guess that means the next time some nutjob shows up to challenge us, it'll be an easy fight, since we've got the whole 'bonds' thing going now?"

Shampoo chuckled. "Maybe. Need time to actually learn to fight as team first. Probably first training Great-grandmother insist on after omiai decided."

Ranma sighed heavily. "Yeah… that. Gotten any more letters from Mom? I'm guessing she's not actually gonna tell me who I'm s'posed to marry until they got me standing at the altar in a tux waiting for her."

"Not yet," Shampoo replied. She kissed Ranma's cheek. "If that happen, will blow up wedding again. But only if Pintou not find other way."

Ranma winced. "Don't I get a say?"

"No. Ranma already married to Shampoo. Already choose us, yes? Shampoo not let anything pull apart this time, especially not stupid Panda skin rug-in-law or his wife!" She set her jaw, eyes flashing with determination, as if daring Ranma to challenge her on the point.

Ranma couldn't bring herself to be upset about it. Honestly, part of her was a little worried that her idiot father might just kidnap her, drug her and force the marriage to her mother's choice, whomever that ended up being. Knowing a rescue would be waiting was actually a little comforting. "Ummm… just… try not and blow up the Tendo Dojo or my house or anything?"

"Not blow up Dojo. Is property of Joketsuzoku sisters now, not want damage," Shampoo said solemnly, then smirked. "Promise will try not to blow up stupid Panda skin rug-in-law's house too," she added in a tone that suggested she wasn't planning to try very hard to avoid it.

Ranma sighed and looked up as they approached Ryouga's house. I wonder how Ryo is faring with HIS relationship problems. Can't be as bad as mine, right?

At that moment, the door of the Hibiki residence practically exploded open, and a small black piglet charged out, making a beeline for Ranma. Startled, Ranma caught the piglet as it leapt into her arms.

The American girl from before poked her head out the door. She had a kettle in one hand, and a bucket in the other, and spotting P-chan in Ranma's arms she got a scowl on her face and stomped over.

"[Who are you?]" she asked, looking Ranma over suspiciously and narrowing her eyes. Ranma felt an uncomfortable sense of being judged as Anna's eyes flicked from her red hair to the front of her uniform. She held out her hand. "Give."

"I'm… uhh… sorry?" Ranma said nervously, not quite parsing the request, but she could feel something very like abject terror from P-chan. Unconsciously she hugged him tighter to her chest.

Anna growled. "[Just give him back, you red-haired floozy! Honestly, dying your hair such a garish shade in high school,]" she huffed. She made a grab for P-chan, but Ranma stepped back out of reach, eyeing her suspiciously.

"What's your deal?! He doesn't wanna go with you!" Ranma protested.

Ryouga's mother and Akari emerged from the house behind Anna and Ranma felt a fresh surge of fear from the piglet as Mrs. Hibiki came into view.

"[Joe, come here… please?]" Anna implored. "[Look… ah'm sorry. I got carried away, but… Ah've never seen real magic before!]

"[What's that about real magic, dear?]" Mrs. Hibiki walked over. "Hello Ranma. Oh, is that piglet yours? When I saw it run outside I assumed it belonged to Akari or Anna here."

Ranma's eyes widened. Ryouga's Mom doesn't know about the curse! She could feel him start to succumb to despair. Thankfully there was little danger of an explosive Ki release as a piglet, but it still hurt to feel. She added the bucket and kettle in, as well as Anna's suspicious looks, and remembered how Ukyou had reacted to finding out about her curse (Which had been nearly half an hour of changing her back and forth in fascination) and suddenly had a pretty good idea why Ryouga was panicking. Unfortunately, Ranma didn't speak a word of English to explain it to the girl.

She set her jaw and made a decision. She knew it was probably going to make things worse short-term but she and Ryo could deal with the fallout afterwards.

"Yes! I've been looking all over for him!" Ranma said abruptly and hugged the little piglet tightly enough that he wheezed audibly as the breath was driven from his lungs. "He has a tendency to wander off and I get so worried! Thank you so much for finding him!" She held him up and made a big show of making a fuss over him. "Didja miss mommy, Mr. P?"

P-chan was staring at her as if she had lost her mind.

So was Shampoo. "Is… Ranma feeling okay?"

"[What,]" Anna said in a flat, menacing growl.

"Aheh…" Ranma's eyes flicked to Akari, but she could see the pig trainer had already gotten out her notebook and was furiously scribbling notes. Akari, don't write this down! I could use some help here! She swallowed and decided she needed to double down, then get out as quickly as possible. "Oh yes, he's mine! He's so cute that people keep trying to adopt him, but he'd know me anywhere. Right Mr. P?" She gave the piglet a warning glare.

P-chan bwee'd weakly in assent. He gave Ranma an uncertain look, glanced at Mrs. Hibiki, then timidly nuzzled Ranma's cheek.

Shampoo's eyes widened. "Hey…!" Slowly the confusion started to morph into outrage. "What pork lunch special think he doing!?"

"What's all the commotion over here?" Ukyou asked as she, Akane and Nabiki approached, fate having decided that things just weren't chaotic enough.

Okay, time to bail! Ranma noticed that Mrs. Hibiki had Ryouga's school bag and snatched it from her before she could protest or react. ISeeYouHaveRyo'sBag! HeMustHaveGoneAhead! IBetterCatchUpBeforeHeGetsLost! BYE! She turned and darted past Shampoo and Anna, hopped up onto the fence wall and winced as she realized she was about to start roof-hopping in a skirt. You freaking OWE me for this, Ryouga!

"Wha…? Where is Ranchan going?!" Ukyou asked.

[Hey! You come back here with Joe!] Anna cried and charged off down the street, doing her best to try and keep pace with the roof-hopping redhead.

Airen and Shagua have some explaining to do! Shampoo growled and joined the chase, leaping first to the wall then onto the rooftops to follow much more directly.

"Go after her," Nabiki said to Ukyou and Akane. "I'll stay here and try and sort out what just happened."

000

Rin sighed as she watched her Senpai leap off over the rooftops with the other girls in hot pursuit. Despite everything else she had learned about the lives of martial artists, part of her still wished she could join in on the adventure.

She slapped her cheeks to snap herself out of it. Come on, Rin! This isn't a manga! Senpai has terrible parents and Senpai's Mr. Boyfriend-san has tragic family illnesses, Ms. Manager Nabiki lost her mother… being them ISN'T fun!

She sighed. The logic was perfect and flawless and absolutely did not help one whit. She remembered the sensation of weightlessness when Mu Tsu had carried her up the radio tower to watch the sunset. She wanted to fly again - with him especially. But knowing what she did about his story, she had realised that could never happen.
"Mu Tsu…" she murmured sadly.

"Yes, Rin Ito?"

She whirled to see the bespectacled Chinese martial artist standing behind her, his hands folded into the sleeves of his robe, his head cocked curiously as if awaiting her question.

"Yiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiii!" She leapt back, eyes wide and face bright red. "M-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m-m Rin swallowed, feeling a lump in her throat. When Mu Tsu had been no more than an object of admiration, someone who 'ticked all of her boxes' as Yuka would put it, that had been one thing. But somehow… now that she knew more about him and had seen the worst side of him… and was now seeing him struggle with trying to be better… she was actually finding him more compelling to her than the idealized fantasy. She had a sudden, insane and terrifying impulse to hug him. "I-I'm sure that if you talked to her…"

"That is what I was hoping for your help with," Mu Tsu replied, reaching into the sleeve of his robe and pulling out a large stack of paper. "I've been trying to write a letter to her for the past few days - to explain things - to apologize… but no matter what I have tried thus far, everything I have written seems hollow and insincere. I was hoping… well, you have a clarity about these things that I admire, and feel that I need for this. Would you help me?"

'You have a clarity I admire.' Rin felt a warm rush at those words that caused her to space out for a moment. She realized he had asked her a question and shook herself. "Umm… O-of course, Mu Tsu." She timidly reached for the first sheet of paper. "May I?"

She could see his eyes close behind his thick glasses. After a moment, he reluctantly nodded.

This must be terribly personal, she thought, taking the sheet and reading it.

Dear Young Mi,

There was nothing else. She blinked and took another page from the stack.

Dear Young Mi,

Nothing else once more, though she noticed the handwriting was slightly different. She pulled another sheet, then another and another.

"U-um… Mu Tsu?" she asked nervously. "Have… have you got any where you got past writing her name?"

"I… have one that I wrote 'To Whom It May Concern'..." Mu Tsu replied. "I saw it on a letter once… I don't think it would be a good idea. I also tried 'Dearest' a few times, but… that doesn't feel right either. I've also been practicing my calligraphy…"

Rin sighed and put the papers back on the stack. "I… think we should meet after school. This is probably going to take a while." She looked up to see the group had moved on, probably chasing Senpai towards school. Her shoulders slumped. "Oh drat… everyone went on without me!"

"Oh, have I made you late for school?" Mu Tsu tucked the stack of papers away hastily.

"No, I think I'll be okayiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiiii!" Rin's reply trailed off in a squeak as Mu Tsu scooped her up in a bridal carry without another word and leapt for the wall, then to the nearest rooftop, bounding with the same superhuman lightness as before, but with more urgency as he made a beeline for the school.

000

Ranma landed inside the school courtyard and sighed in relief. She could see from the big clock that she still had time to get to class. It had taken longer than she had expected to shake the American girl.

"Bwee?" P-chan said inquisitively. He had been thankfully quiet and docile for the entire thing.
"Sorry buddy, hadda get away so you can explain to… what was her name… Anna? Yeah, Anna… Explain to her about your Mom not knowing about the curse." She perched the piglet on her shoulder to give him a bit more autonomy. She had his bag slung on her back like a backpack while she carried her own. "I don't suppose you have a spare uniform in your bag, do ya?"

P-chan made a mournful sound.

"Well, I guess 'P-chan' is just gonna hafta make another visit to the school," Ranma sighed. "Ms. Hinako is cool with it at least. Just don't suck up too much, okay? About half the class is in on the secret now, after all."

P-chan made an inquisitive grunt.

"I'll explain things to the 'll see if we can get you a uniform by lunch or something." She started walking towards the school. "I'd head back to the dojo so you could change and get a spare set of clothes but after that second win I bet my attendance is tracked real close now. I can't afford any more hiccups to give 'em a way to mess with me any more."

P-chan grunted and settled on his haunches.

"Uh… you're welcome," Ranma replied, a little put off by the easy gratitude. She felt a buzzing from her pocket and fished out her phone.

Nabs: So what was THAT all about?

Ranma ducked inside the school and into a doorway to quickly send a reply.

Ryo's Mom doesn't know about the curse. Avoiding meltdown. At school safe now.

There was a few seconds pause, then a reply. Ranma was impressed with how fast Nabiki could tap out messages on her phone, especially since it didn't even have a number pad.

Ranma winced. She knew she was probably going to have to explain herself fast to avoid getting in trouble with the girls, but she'd had little choice but to ditch them as well in the effort to lose Anna.

Lost 'em ditching American girl. Probably pissed. Help?

She chewed on her lower lip, knowing it was a long shot, since as far as she could recall, none of them had cell phones.

Nabs: Tell 'em D'artagnan said to wait until I can get there to explain.

Ranma frowned. She had no idea who this 'D'artagnan' was… code word or something? Still, it meant Nabiki had a plan, and that was good enough for her.

Gottit. See you soon! First bell any minute.

She snapped her phone closed. "Well, that's something. So… d'ya think anyone else made it here before us, Mr. P?"

P-chan made a noncommittal grunt.

"Yeah, you're right… they're probably gonna blame us either way…” She started towards her homeroom class.
Bright green eyes watched as the red-haired girl landed in the courtyard, carrying something in her arms. A slight adjustment to the binoculars, and she could see it was a small black piglet. Her sharp eyes also picked out that she carried two school bags.

"Hmmm… They did say he had a Jusenkyo curse…” The binoculars dropped as she narrowed her eyes as she glanced at the large clock. Trying to get on school grounds now, just before the bell, would likely draw too much of the wrong sort of attention. Better to be patient and wait for them to come back out.

She was perched on a rooftop a few buildings away wearing dark clothes that made it easy for her to conceal herself. Keeping out of sight in a town was a skill she had been taught a long time ago, and getting onto the roof had been child's play. Had anyone seen her, they might have mistaken her for a burglar - but common thievery was the farthest thing from her mind.

"Unusual hair color, tremendous acrobatic skill, obviously a martial artist. Even the school uniform couldn't hide that figure, either. And she's got a 'pet' that could just be a Jusenkyo victim." She rocked back on her heels, playing thoughtfully with a curl of her pink hair. "That sort of subservience to her would suit him, too."

A smile spread across her lips. "It seems I've found you, Darling. Now I guess we see if this 'beloved' of yours is willing to fight for you?"

000

Home room was a little uncomfortable. The volleyball team had made it to class (Rin had come in last, just before the bell, looking a little dishevelled and out of it. Ranma guessed she had ended up running). They were all shooting glances at Ranma and the small black piglet on her desk, which they all knew was Ryouga.

Everyone else in the class was, of course, making a huge fuss over him - including Ms. Hinako.

"So he's yours now?" one girl asked. "I thought he was Akane’s pet?"

"Yeah, he's mine now," Ranma said, deciding to keep her story consistent. P-chan shot her a look, but didn't protest otherwise.

"Is he hard to take care of?"

Ranma shrugged. "Not really. He's pretty good at looking out for himself. Gets lost if I don't watch him though."

"Does he sleep in your bed? Ooooh I bet he's a cuddly sleeper!"

Ranma winced."Uh… sometimes… He usually sticks to his side of the bed, though…"

"Awww! You should cuddle him more!"

Naturally Ranma's rebellious mind instantly conjured an image of that - except Ryouga wasn't a pig. It wasn't exactly a picture, either - more of imagining the sensation of being cuddled, with strong arms around her and the warmth of him through the link - a bit of an extrapolation from what was becoming an unnervingly comprehensive catalogue of experiences with him. She closed her eyes quickly and angrily tried to push the feeling away. Nope nope nope, not doing this today! "Look… I can't believe I'm saying this, but… shouldn't we be learning stuff?"
Ms. Hinako gave her a sour look, then sighed. "You're right Ms. Saotome." She turned and walked back up to the board. "Today we're going to cover 'conjunctions'..."

Ranma breathed a sigh of relief. She put a hand on P-chan's head under the cover of scratching behind his ears in order to link and make sure he wasn't upset. Thankfully all she sensed from him was relief.

"Sorry about that," she whispered.

"Bwee," the piglet replied, as if in acceptance. She got the sense Ryouga knew she was doing her best, which was reassuring.

At least with him as a pig, no one is gonna get any weird ideas about us even if they DO know about the curse, she thought as she tried to focus on the lesson. She did not want to give Ms. Hinako an excuse to draw any more attention her way. Nabiki will be here by noon, we can change Ryo back, then sort out his girl problems, an' NO ONE will have any reason to be mad at either of us because there's no way anything we do until then will raise any eyebrows. Just focus on classes until then an' we're good!

She smiled a bit, satisfied that her plan seemed foolproof.

Without being consciously aware of it, her feigned ear scratches became the real thing. She could sense his emotional churn smoothing out and settling into a pleasant lassitude - all but zoning out. Reassured, she attempted to apply herself to the lesson, drawing on Ryouga's almost-zen to help her focus.

000

"So... what was all of that about this morning?" Sayuri asked as class ended and Ranma was packing up her books.

"As opposed to the Casanova one?" Yuka asked dryly.

P-chan made a protesting 'Bwee!' over that.

"He's not a Casanova," Ranma stated firmly, giving Yuka a stern glare. "Trust me. As someone who gets accused of that crap every single day, it sucks. Ryouga's done some dumb stuff, yeah, but leading girls on ain't one of 'em. He's just not real good at talking to 'em."

Yuka gave her a skeptical look. She folded her arms and arched an eyebrow. "We're expected to believe that a girl came all the way from America without even knowing the language here and he didn't do anything to give her the wrong idea?"

Ranma scowled at her. "Yeah, I am. 'Cuz I've been in exactly the same boat. Unless you wanna go back to accusing me of the same thing?"

"Using yourself as an example doesn't really help his case, all things considered," Yuka pointed out.

"Yuka, back off," Sayuri gave her a warning look. "This isn't something to fight over when we've got a game tomorrow. It's none of our business."
"It kinda is," Yuka retorted. "I mean, our star player is all wrapped up in it." She looked past Sayuri and fixed Ranma with a look. "The point I'm getting at is... are you okay with all of this, Ranma?"

Ranma blinked in confusion. "Am I okay with all this?"

"Yeah," Yuka repeated.

"I mean... you and Ryouga are kinda..." Riko added timidly, her eyes flicking to the piglet.

Ranma glanced down at him and realized she was unconsciously scratching behind his ears. Her initial impulse was to jerk her hand away, but she could sense he was intensely uncomfortable with everything. It was also starting to irk her that they were talking like he was somehow not aware of what was being said.

She kept her hand where it was and glared at them. "Look. What Ryo and I are isn't any of your business. But, for the record, he has a girlfriend. Her name is Akari, an' he ain't done nothing to betray that. I'm trying to help him get through this because no one helped me, an' I don't want a friend to hafta go through that alone!" She stood, picking up P-chan and depositing him on her shoulder. "Think what you like, but I've got math class." She grabbed Ryouga's bag, slung it over her shoulder, grabbed her own bag, and stalked out of the class.

"Bwee?" P-chan grunted inquisitively in her ear.

Ranma sighed and slowed down as she walked down the hallway. "... Yeah, maybe that was kinda harsh." She felt a sudden pang of regret for going off on her friends. "I guess I'm just... what's the word? 'Projecting', is it? I've gone through this exact same crap so often that I'm still kinda sore about it."

P-chan grunted. She got a sense of gratitude from him through all of the embarrassment over the whole situation.

She smiled. "Yeah, you're welcome buddy."

Her smile faded as she reached the classroom. Math was not exactly a favored subject of hers, though for different reasons than English. She stepped inside the classroom and found her seat, setting P-chan down on her desk.

English was stupid. Even Shampoo, who had proven surprisingly adept scholastically, agreed on that. But math? Math was one of those things where Ranma felt almost like she did understand it, only to find out halfway through that she was totally off track. It seemed to hover in that frustrating, tantalizing region of something that should make sense, but didn't. Worse, spending so many years out of school left her ignorant of so many of the tricks and shortcuts the other students seemed to know - and that made it a constant struggle for her to keep up.

Today, the lesson was on quadratics.

No one had been able to adequately explain what quadratics were actually for - just that Ranma needed to learn them so she could move on to ever more complicated stuff for which they had even less explanation for the good it was supposed to do her.

She opened her book and sighed. It wouldn't be so bad if it was just straight out gibberish, she thought glumly. But... there was a kind of sense to it... like a puzzle she could almost work out. She looked over the questions they had been assigned the previous day and her half-completed attempts at solutions, and sighed. She hoped she wouldn't be called on to answer in class. The teacher was starting to write the questions on the board, so she tried one last time to wrestle with her current nemesis, question six.

P-chan looked at her sheet, then up at her inquisitively.

"Quadratics," Ranma murmured to him. "Fighting Herb was easier…"

P-chan grunted, then cocked his head at the question. He stood up and nudged Ranma's pencil, taking it in his mouth and gently guiding it to part of her scribbles.

"What are you…" she paused, realizing what he was pointing out. She had written down a number wrong! Her eyes widened, and she hastily corrected the number, then redid the steps afterwards.

"Ms. Saotome?" the teacher said. He regarded her haughtily, having taken to emphasizing the 'Ms.' part ever since she had started showing up to his class as a girl. "The answer to question six? Assuming you did the homework this time?"

"Uh… yes!" Ranma beamed. "X equals -4 or 1… right?"

The teacher paused, his eyebrows raising. "I… yes… yes that's absolutely correct, thank you, Ms. Saotome." He turned and wrote it on the board. "Let's hope the rest of you have been as diligent…"

The class continued, but Ranma was buoyed by the warm feeling of accomplishment, having managed to solve the problem herself this time. With a little help… When no one was looking, she quietly gave the piglet a fistbump in thanks (Well, hoofbump in his case.)

Most of the rest of the class was the usual slog, but P-chan continued to point out things she was missing and Ranma found things making much more sense without the errors that made her work devolve into nonsense. She recognized there was almost a kata of sorts to it all, though she had no idea how people memorized some of the more dizzying techniques.

"Mebbe I'll actually get this stuff someday," she thought, looking over her notes as the class ended. They were still a mess that didn't make a lot of sense now that class was over, but there were fewer doodles in the margins at least. Glad to finally be free for lunch, she packed up her stuff and perched P-chan on her shoulder as she got up to leave.

"Ms. Saotome," the teacher said, stopping her dead.

Uh oh.

She turned and smiled weakly. "Uh… yes sensei?"

"It was good to see you apply yourself in class," he said, folding his hands on his desk and smiling. "If this is the result of your… change, then perhaps I misjudged things and this is for the better. Well done."

"Aheh… thank you…" She rubbed the back of her head. Damnit… someone ELSE who thinks I'm better off as a girl now?

"Now… about the pig?" He quirked an eyebrow.

"Aheh… yeah… Ummm… he's… he's mine, but he gets lost sometimes, so by the time I found him I didn't have time to take him back home. Sorry. I promise it won't happen again!" Ranma laughed nervously. P-chan growled softly at her, objecting again to her 'cover story'.

The teacher sighed. "Try not to make a habit of it, please. Though heavens know around here that sort of thing is fairly tame compared to what typically goes on. As long as this doesn't result in some escapade that shuts down the school for days again, I'll overlook it."

She bowed. "Thank you, sensei!"

He waved her off, already engrossed in grading papers. Ranma gratefully took her escape, slipping out of the classroom with a sigh.

P-chan grunted once they were out of the classroom and relatively alone in the hall.

"Look, I know you don't like the cover story much, but if you wanna keep your curse quiet there's gotta be one!" She poked him gently. "Honestly, things would be a lot simpler if you'd just grow a pair and not be so afraid of people finding out!"

P-chan squealed in protest.

"No, it ain't that bad! You ain't even the only one with a 'small an' cute animal' curse!" Ranma argued. "Shampoo doesn't have the same problems you've got!"

There was a quarrelsome grunt.

"... okay, fair point, no one is gonna try and cook her," Ranma acknowledged. "But she's liable to get picked up and made somebody's pet. And nobody gives baths to a c-c-c-c…" She sighed in frustration as she felt the tremor of fear just from the word. "Nobody bathes felines. So no easy out for hot water."

P-chan grunted noncommittally.

"Look, I'm just saying you should consider it. I'll help explain it…"

P-chan gave a sharp negative huff.

"... okay, fine, point. After my performance this morning mebbe it's best if I play dumb about 'Mr. P' to avoid any awkward questions. We'll get Akari to explain it then?"

Reluctantly the pig snuffled assent.

"Cool. That's one less thing that can go horribly off the rails, at least." She reached the doors to the courtyard, then smirked at the piglet. "So… should I have a total meltdown when I find out my 'pet pig' who has been sleeping in my bed the whole time has been Ryo all along?"

P-chan squealed in alarm.

"Aww c'mon, it's your chance to work through all that anxiety you had about Akane finding out…" Ranma started to say, but suddenly she realized P-chan's alarm had nothing to do with her suggestion as a black whip snapped around the piglet and jerked him from her shoulder and out the partially open door.

"Ryo!" Ranma kicked the door the rest of the way open and charged outside, skidding to a stop after a few feet as her eyes adjusted and she could see who had snatched P-chan.

A girl about her age stood there, dressed in bright slacks and a tailored jacket that was so gaudy and glittery that it reminded Ranma of nothing so much as a Ringmaster's outfit for some renegade Circus. She was a bit taller than Ranma, and her tight outfit, while not technically revealing, hugged impressive curves. Her hair was cotton-candy pink, a mass of soft curls that fell about her shoulders and was topped with a magician's stove-pipe hat. Her eyes were a piecing green so intense they almost glowed. She held a wicked looking whip in one hand and in the other... she was holding the piglet by his bandanna.

"Well, hello, Darling," she said with a smirk, addressing the piglet. "It has been so very long, hasn't it?"

"Hey, that's mine, give him back!" Ranma protested, taking another step forward before hesitating. Crap! The Sports Team No Fighting rules! I can't touch her unless she attacks me first!"

The Ringmaster girl raised an eyebrow. "Ah, yes… you." She strode towards Ranma, the sway of her walk brimming with confidence. Ranma could sense real menace from her and knew she was likely going to be a formidable opponent.

She regarded Ranma cooly. "I thought you'd be taller, honestly. And I was expecting more chinese style attire." She tipped Ranma's chin up with the edge of her coiled whip. "I can certainly see why he'd develop an obsession over you…" Her eyes narrowed. "Though you're hardly a beauty worth all the strife Darling has caused."

Ranma jerked her head away. "You're no prize yourself, lady," she growled, feeling her pride prickled. To be fair, the comeback was weak - the Ringmaster girl was gorgeous and, from her demeanor, she was well aware of it.

"Ooooh, the redheaded beast from China speaks!" the Ringmaster girl seemed amused. "Let's not catfight, sweetling. Let me be plain; I know you are well versed in all manner of Joketsuzoku tricks - ways of bending the minds of men. I know you don't really want my Darling, yet for some reason you've used your tricks and traps to enslave his mind." Her face twisted into a disturbing mask of rage. "Know that he loves me, witch! And you will release him from whatever mystical leash you've fettered him with. The only question is if I get to take my pound of flesh from you first."

Ryouga, what did you DO!? Ranma shot an annoyed glare at the piglet, then turned her defiant glare on the taller girl. "Lady, I don't have a clue what you're talking-"

She never got to finish. She knew the Ringmaster girl moved, but it was almost too fast to follow. Something snapped around her ankles and pulled, yanking her off her feet and flinging her across the courtyard until she slammed into the nearest tree so hard that she actually cracked the trunk of it.

Ranma managed to drop into a three point crouch, wheezing a bit as she tried to convince her lungs to start drawing in air again and glared at her opponent.

The Ringmaster girl was twirling her whip casually, the long leather braid dancing and snapping like it was a living, agitated thing. She smirked nastily as she walked slowly towards the downed redhead. "Well well... so you still have some fight in you? Good... I was hoping that the 'best warrior of her generation' would give me a decent fight. I do have quite a bit of frustration to take out on you, after all." Her eyes widened with a mad gleam and she made an almost casual flick with her wrist.

Ranma dodged to the side as the tree trunk shattered, the whip impacting it with the force of a high-caliber bullet. She forced her legs to move and charged along a spiralling path towards the other girl. Well, that's the kid gloves off! Gotta get close and end this, before she uses her reach to...

The Ringmaster girl jerked her hand back. Ranma caught the motion out of the corner of her eye and very nearly didn't react fast enough. Her instincts screamed as she ducked, dropping flat to the asphalt as a large tree branch sailed over her head.

"Ah ah ah!" the Ringmaster girl said with a grin. "I'm afraid we can't be having you getting that close. I'm sure you know all sorts of pressure points and grappling tricks, don't you?" She snapped her whip, cracking the tarmac. "Such a shame you're not going to get close enough to use them."

"Oh please, you're hardly the first person I've fought who used weapons," Ranma said with a smirk of her own. "Not even the first with that style of weapon. 'Cept they were faster. And you're fighting one-handed. Unless you got some other tricks to show me, this is gonna be over real quick."

The Ringmaster girl smiled and nodded. "Of course. It would hardly be a decent fight if I beat you one-handed, would it?" She held up the struggling piglet, giving him a fond smile before she swept the hat off her head and popped him inside. She turned the hat to show Ranma that it was empty inside, then put it back on her head. "Isn't that better? I don't want my Darling to get hurt… before it's time."

"Hey, you give him back!" Ranma shouted, realizing she could no longer sense where Ryouga was.

"Oh my dear, that's not how this works," Ringmaster girl chided her. "You give him back first!"

Ranma leapt upwards, feeling the breeze as the whip passed under her. There was cracking crumbling sound as it shattered and tore through asphalt and concrete like they were plaster.

The Ringmaster girl spun, using the momentum of her turn to magnify the speed and force of the whip so that it caused the air to sing with the force behind it. Ranma arched back, the coiled leather braid passing close enough to brush the tip of her nose.

Ranma finished the backflip and landed, her eyes widening as she caught a glimpse of the damage that one slashing whip strike had done to the courtyard and retaining wall. Holy…! She's slower than Kodachi, but she hits WAY harder!

"Oh do stop moving around, sweetling," the Ringmaster girl purred menacingly. "It will only make this hurt so much more when I finally catch you." She twirled the whip around her, cracking it like an angry viper.

Gotta get that thing away from her! Ranma thought. Her eyes followed it's movements for a moment, finding the pattern, then she darted forward again. Fighting Kodachi had taught her how to do this, and with the Ringmaster girl's slower weapon, the openings were larger, though maybe not so much as she might have hoped.

The Ringmaster started stepping back as she started making snapping strikes at Ranma. Ranma was wise to her technique now, though, dodging not only each strike, but also the chunks of concrete or wood that the whip brought back on the returns. She coiled to dart back further, but Ranma's raw speed was greater. The redhead feinted and let the Ringmaster girl make a last strike before she reached out to snatch the extended whip from her hand and dart back away with it.

"Let's see how good you are without this!" Ranma said, cracking the whip triumphantly.

The Ringmaster girl seemed unconcerned. "You probably should have gone for the killing strike, sweetling. A shame you aren't going to get the chance now." She pulled something from a pouch on the back of her belt - what appeared to be a wooden recorder. She began to play a haunting melody on it, seemingly unconcerned by Ranma's display.

Ranma felt the whip move in her hand. She tried to fling it away from her, but it was too late - the sturdy leather braid coiled itself around her body to bind her arms and legs and truss her up like a mummy. When she opened her mouth to shout in surprise, the handle even pushed into her mouth like a gag. Struggling mightily, she toppled over onto her side.

"I've traveled all over the world and learned skills you've likely never even heard of," the Ringmaster girl said, pausing in her playing. "This was called 'The Indian Rope Trick' and was widely considered to be a hoax. My father met a fakir who knew a somewhat more authentic version."

Ranma could feel the whip slacken slightly. It was tightly wrapped around her still, but it was no longer animated. She spit out the handle. "That's a cheap trick!"

"Funny how it's always the loser who says such things," the Ringleader girl said with a theatrical sigh. She glanced around to see that quite a crowd had gathered to watch the fight. "But I see your classmates have come to watch!" She smiled and held out her hands. "Good! I always did prefer to have an audience. Now..." She turned back to the bound redhead.

The whip lay in an empty pile on the ground.

"Wha...?" She spun just in time to get hit with a fierce right cross that snapped her head back and rocked her back on her heels. Ranma was nearly on top of her, winding up to deliver a flurry of blows that would put her down for good.

The Ringmaster girl snatched a colored kerchief from her belt, and with blinding speed began to flick and wave it in front of her, somehow managing to parry Ranma's Kachu Tenshin Amaguriken with the filmy cloth. She backpedalled frantically and finally got a bit of distance between herself and the enraged redhead. "You throw quite the punch. I wonder if you can take what you dish out?" She pulled something else from her belt and flung it at Ranma.

Slender wires wrapped themselves around Ranma's arms, legs, elbows and waist. "What the...?!"

"We have quite the puppet show at my Circus. Perhaps you should see it someday?" The Ringmaster girl held up her hands to show each wire tied to a finger. She began to wiggle her fingers and tug on the wires.

Ranma tried to run towards her, but the wires tugged and pulled with just the right force and in just the right directions to send her limbs askew. She stumbled but managed to get closer and reared back to throw a punch. But the wires tugged and redirected her fist, to send it crashing into her own cheek.

"Or perhaps you should be the puppet show?" the Ringmaster girl added with a giggle.

Ranma growled, but she had dealt with techniques like this before, too. She had even used a few herself. She snatched a handful of the wires and gave them a sharp twist and a yank, just so.

The Ringmaster girl was shocked to have her own hand close into a fist and smash into her own face.

"It works both ways, 'sweetling'!" Ranma said, grinning fiercely. "Whadaya say, wanna see who can knock themselves out first?"

"Gah...!" the Ringmaster girl flicked her fingers to cast off the wires and reached back for another trick. This time it was more straightforward - she pulled out a handful of throwing knives and flung them at Ranma.

Ranma dodged the first three, and simply caught the fourth as she got closer. She cast it aside and threw a few quick jabs at the Ringmaster girl with her right hand. They were blocked by the colored scarf again, but it left an opening that Ranma exploited, driving her left into the girl's ribs. When she stumbled, Ranma dropped for quick sweep, but the Ringmaster girl managed to flip back and away, tossing a handful of deflated balloons at Ranma.

Ranma felt strings wrap around her wrists as the balloons suddenly self-inflated, pulling her up rapidly and yanking her arms over her head. "Oh come on!

The Ringmaster girl landed and charged forward. "You're wide open!" she cried as she aimed a side kick at Ranma's mid-section.

Ranma used the lift of the balloons to pull herself up and swung her legs to wrap around the Ringmaster girl's leg and pin it, twisting with her body to send the pink-haired circus girl tumbling. The balloons were actually lifting Ranma upwards now and she kept her legs firmly locked around the other girl's, pulling her up with her.

"Let go!" the Ringmaster girl snarled, rolling over to hurl another handful of knives at Ranma.

Ranma arched her back, leaning out of the path of the blades so they struck the large cluster of balloons tied to her wrists instead and popped the majority of them. The two girls fell back to the ground with a crash, breaking the leg lock.

Ranma scrambled back to her feet and ripped off the remaining strings, panting. "Out of tricks yet?" she asked, dropping into a ready stance. "Even Mousse runs out eventually!"

"How dare you speak that name to me!" the Ringmaster girl snarled. She flung a handful of what looked like pink sand at Ranma, but it quickly puffed out into fluffy, sticky mass of cotton candy that enveloped Ranma's arms and legs. The Ringmaster girl darted forward, aiming a series of side kicks at Ranma's torso.

The redhead wove and swayed, unable to step back with her legs stuck in the surprisingly sticky and strong cotton candy. Her arms were stuck uselessly out to the sides, trapped in giant clouds of soft pink. She dodged one kick when the ringmaster girl overextended, and then leaned in, taking advantage of the fact her feet were stuck to the ground to support her own overextension, and headbutted her savagely.

The pink haired girl stumbled back which gave Ranma a chance to grab the cotton candy stuck to her right arm with her teeth. With a grunt of effort she ripped her arm free and tore one leg free as well. She hit the girl with a fierce straight punch to the face that sent her reeling back even further. She then took her time ripping the rest of the cotton candy away.

"There, you get it yet? You done!?" Ranma snarled. "Now you gonna tell me what this is all about, or do I gotta get serious!?"

The ringmaster girl held a hand over her mouth. When she pulled it away, she was nursing a split lip. "How dare you…" she growled. She reached back and pulled out a whistle from her belt, blowing a single shrill blast on it.

"More tricks!?" Ranma was shouting now. "Why doncha fight me fair and square?!!"

"That would be revealing my secrets, sweetling," the Ringmaster girl said with a smirk. "But this is no magic trick. This is more of a specialty of mine. The circus has many disciplines, after all."

With that, there was a loud roar - a sound which caused Ranma to freeze as her blood suddenly ran cold with fear.

A massive shape leapt up onto the courtyard wall from the far side and perched there for a moment, tail lashing. It had the body of a lion though the mane was somewhat understated and its fur was primarily white with faint striping. But by far the most striking aspect of the creature was its sheer size. It was massive - nearly the size of a horse.

It roared again, yellow eyes tracking to fix on Ranma.

Ranma found she couldn't move as something straight out of her nightmares hopped down from the wall. Its lips peeled back in a snarl to reveal gleaming white teeth as razor sharp as the huge claws that clicked on the pavement.

"My father had two prized cats. A White lion and a snow tigress. They had but one cub. Did you know it's a quirk of nature that the offspring of Lions and Tigers are always far larger than either?" The Ringmaster girl smiled. "This is Samson. I raised him from a cub. He's really just a big housecat."

Samson roared. It was the most horrifying sound Ranma had ever heard. Her breathing started to quicken, her legs trembling as she felt the urge to run warring with the paralyzing fear.

"... Well, he is for me," The Ringmaster girl shrugged. "He's… less friendly with strangers. Especially if they're people I don't like." She walked over to the big cat and hugged him. The creature nuzzled her, then growled at Ranma once more.

"Samson… be a dear and go play with our new friend," the Ringmaster girl said, stepping back and patting the liger on the flank. "Attack."

Ranma was shaking. Normally by now she'd have already slipped into the Neko-Ken, but this was too much even for her feline altered state. The unreality of the monster before her, coiling to pounce, kept her frozen, like she was back in that pit. Helpless. Even the Cat in her, normally fearless, was too scared to move.

Muscles rippled and bunched under the skin of the behemoth as it lowered its great bulk, like the slow motion of a smaller cat preparing to pounce. Its claws extended, cracking and piercing the pavement as though it were cardboard. Its pupils dilated and muscles suddenly uncoiled as they began to propel its near-ton of mass upward in a graceful arc that had its terminus in the space occupied by the comparatively tiny red-haired girl before it.

"Katsunishiki! KACHI-AGE!"

There was a rumbling as an even larger black and white form slammed into the liger mid-leap. Samson was thrown violently across the courtyard, rolling onto the grass of the soccer pitch.

The massive cat snarled and got quickly to his feet, only to find his movements blocked by tremendous bulk of the champion sumo pig.

Ranma blinked and stumbled backwards as the paralyzing fear abated somewhat. It was not gone, to be sure, but at least she could move again. She gaped as Katsunishiki stared down the huge cat. She looked the other way to see Akari and Nabiki.

"Katsunishiki! Hazuoshi!" Akari called out.
Katsunishiki charged forward as the liger pounced once more. The sumo pig reared up onto his hind legs, extended his forelegs and caught Samson over his ribcage, lifting the big cat up and driving him further back. The liger clawed at Katsunishiki's back, but with the sumo pig's hooves planted solidly under his armpits he was unable to get any purchase on the boar's thick hide.

"Now that's cheating!" the Ringmaster girl cried sourly. She glared at Ranma. She had recovered her whip and she slapped the handle into her palm in irritation. "Can't fight your own battles, Amazon?"

"This after you call in a giant c-c-c... whatever the hell that is?!" Ranma shouted back. She clenched her fists, tears of frustration, rage and humiliation forming in the corners of her eyes. "You show up outta nowhere, steal Ryouga, attack me, then you sic your stupid fleabag monster on me when you're not winning, and you have the gall to say that I'm the one cheating!? I've had it!"
Crackles of ki started to run along her arms.

"You'll wish you had let Samson get you..." the Ringleader girl shot back menacingly. "You need to pay for stealing Darling away from me." She drew her whip back, the length coiling around her. "Here's one from your homeland! LINGCHI!"

The whip snapped out and scored a cut across Ranma's cheek, then again, slicing the sleeve of her uniform and drawing blood. Once again it lashed across her leg, the tip cutting her like a razor as it blurred, moving too fast for the eye to see.

Ranma didn't even flinch. The yellowish aura around her was growing and the pavement was starting to crack under her feet.

"Give Ryouga back," she said. Her voice was barely audible over the sound of the snapping whip.

"What was that, Sweetling?" the Ringmaster girl called out. She recoiled her whip with a snap of her wrist, pausing to lick a droplet of Ranma's blood from the tip. "Are you done already?"

"Give Ryouga back," Ranma snarled more loudly and the sounds made by the cracking of the pavement grew from soft pops to reports like gunshots. A rising spiral of air sent debris skittering across the courtyard as the energy surged. All of the fear and the helplessness that normally fueled the Neko-ken was instead being channeled into Ranma's aura in a massive buildup of ki, mixing with her anger and her rage until the forces started to feed on one another, building into a devastating crescendo.

The Ringleader girl blinked. "... Who?"

"GIVE RYOUGA BACK!" Ranma roared. She raised her hands over her head, and all of that accumulated energy flooded into a ball between her palms, forcing them apart. She drew back, her eyes flashing as she fixed the ringleader girl with a murderous glare, then as the ball grew so bright that onlookers had to turn away, she hurled the entire mass of roiling pain and emotions with a savage cry. "SHI SHI HOKODAN!"

Unfamiliar with ki attacks, the Ringleader girl didn't think to dodge until it was too late. A concentrated ball of heavy ki slammed into her and flung her back like a straw doll to pin her against the concrete courtyard wall, then drove her body on through as the wall itself all but exploded under the force of it.

Silence descended on the scene as everyone froze - even the massive sumo pig and the giant liger.

Ranma stumbled forward, her footsteps shaky at first as the residual ki crackled around her. But with each step her motions became more sure, her pace increasing gradually as she stalked towards the rubble left in the wake of the blast.

The Ringmaster girl lay atop one of the large piles of rubble like a broken toy and coughed weakly as she struggled to get up. She opened her eyes to see Ranma looming over her.

The Ringleader girl smiled weakly, and coughed again, a little spray of blood flecking her lips. "He-heh… not a bad trick, sweetling…"

Ranma reached down, grabbed her by the throat and lifted her with one arm to hold her up in the air by her neck. Her blue eyes held a tinge of ice within them, as the temperature around her began to drop sharply.

"Gckt… Y-you c-can't have my Darling…" the Ringmaster girl struggled weakly, clawing ineffectually at Ranma's hand.

"Ranma!" Nabiki ran towards the redhead but stopped suddenly as she reached the zone of cold that surrounded Ranma. Frost was already forming on the ground and was starting to creep up over the Ringmaster girl's neck. "Ranma, you're going to kill her!"

"She's got Ryouga somewhere! I can't tell where he is!" Ranma replied, not looking at her.

"Wh-who…?" The Ringmaster girl croaked.

"Where is he!?" Ranma snarled and shook her like a rag doll.

"Senpai, let her down!"

Ranma blinked and turned her head to see Rin standing off to the side. Ranma's eyes widened and she faltered, almost dropping Ringmaster girl. I don't want Rin to see me do this! Her breathing grew more ragged and she turned back to the girl she was throttling, her voice tight. "Just tell me what you did with him!"

The Ringmaster girl just smirked weakly at her, prompting another surge of rage. Ranma's grip started to tighten again.

"Young Mi, she isn't Shampoo," Rin said softly. "Mu Tsu isn't here. You've got the wrong people. Please… give Ryouga back to Senpai."

Young Mi's eyes widened. They flicked from Rin to Ranma, and she nodded slightly.

Ranma dropped her immediately. She glanced at her hand and brushed the frost off of it, shivering as the effects of the Soul of Ice slowly started to fade, leaving her feeling chilled and drained.

Young Mi took off her top hat, reached inside and pulled out the piglet. Weakly she lifted him to return him to Ranma. "I should… have known… the Amazon would never… would never have fought so hard for Darling…"

Ranma snatched P-chan away from her, but he wasn't moving or responding. She felt a horrified lurch in her chest. "What did you do to him?!"

"Just… a little chloroform in the hat… Didn't want Darling tearing free… He knows the trick to it…" Young Mi replied hoarsely, rubbing her throat. Her skin looked frostbitten where Ranma had been holding her. "Probably a little much for such a small animal though…"

"Nabiki…" Ranma gave Nabiki a pleading look. She could sense Ryouga now, but the feeling was faint… distant.

Nabiki nodded, her expression hardening as she went into crisis management mode. "Okay, let's get him some hot water… doesn't he carry a thermos in his bag?" She ran over and retrieved the discarded schoolbag, reached in and fished out an old, dented thermos then trotted back to Ranma. "I guess his secret is gonna be out with the whole school now. So much for that…" She reached into her own bag. "I've got his clothes here… just… set him down in his pants so he's at least got some decency."

Ranma did so, practically snatching the thermos out of Nabiki's hands and pouring it over the piglet. She nearly ended up with Ryouga's legs both going in the same leghole, but managed to adjust fast enough thanks to her own experience with the curse.

Ryouga coughed and groaned, his hand going to his head. "Owww… okay, what happened this time?"

"Oh, thank God…" Nabiki breathed in relief.

Ranma didn't say anything. She just glomped him - hard.

"Ack…" Ryouga wheezed. "Hard enough to breathe right now, Ranma…"

"Shut up…" she muttered. "J-just shut up! You did it to me again you jerk!" She released him when she noticed the crowd murmuring, and smacked him across the head.

"H-hey!" He yelped, ducking. "I didn't have a lot of choice! You were the one who dragged me to school as a piglet!"

"Hey, Hibiki has a Jusenkyo curse too!"

"Does he turn into a cute girl too?"

"Nah man. I think it's a little black piglet."

"... Is it a girl piglet?"

"The hell is wrong with you?!

"I'm just askin'!"

"He looks just like the one Akane was keeping as a pet. You don't suppose…?"

"Yeah, well, you heard Ranma. Looks like he belongs to someone ELSE now!"

"Geez, and here I thought the whole 'fiancé' thing was a cover! I guess she really HAS gone full girl!"

"That's not fair! We just find out she's actually attainable, and Hibiki's already snatched her up?"

"The dude blows up tanks with his finger. YOU wanna complain to him about it?"

Nabiki sighed and shot Ranma an apologetic look. "We… should probably get him to the Nurse's office." She stood up and dusted herself off. "What about our friend the circus freak?"
They all turned to look, but Young Mi had vanished. The Liger, too, had disappeared, leaving Katsunishiki alone on the soccer pitch.

"So much for getting answers…" Nabiki said glumly.

"I… know a little," Rin said quietly.

Nabiki nodded. "We'll talk once we get these two to the nurse."

Himura smiled as she tapped the windowpane thoughtfully with one fingernail. "Now that is something interesting! Hana, dear? Do you know anything about this one?"

"The uh… the 'Circus Girl'?" Hana asked nervously, pulling out a worn, dog-eared black book and flipping frantically through the pages. "I… I don't think she's ever shown up here before. There's no mention of her in Nabiki's notes."

"Even better," Himura murmured softly. She reached into her pocket and pulled out her phone, tapping the speed dial. "Ms. Sasaki, I need you to put a tail on someone. Martial Artist type, garish circus uniform, pink hair, gigantic white liger. I suspect you won't have any difficulty picking up her trail… No, don't intervene or contact please, but open a dossier on her. I have some research to do on this end, and I'll almost certainly have some digging for you to do as well. Just keep tabs on her for now, and advise me immediately if she appears to either be set to leave the area or is about to confront one of the locals… Yes, that would be perfect, thank you." She thumbed the phone off and tucked it away, then turned and leaned against the windowsill with a sigh. "Well! That was certainly some excitement, wasn't it?"

"What are you plotting to do with that freak?" Sanae asked, sniffing haughtily. "We already have those boorish Chinese Amazons skulking about…"

"I don't know yet. That very much depends on what it is that she wants. Isn't that exciting though? You should get more into the spirit of the adventure, Sanae!" Himura said brightly. She turned to Hana. "I am afraid I am going to have to ask for a little more work from you though, Hana, dear? Be sure and find out whatever our fellow students might know about her, if you could? Particularly the ones on their way to the nurse's office right now. Thank you dear."

"Well, the pickups I placed around should…” Hana began, but trailed off as Himura pointedly ignored her.

"Now about more adventurous things, I believe we were discussing possible candidates?" Himura looked at Umeko.

Umeko raised an eyebrow, then turned her gaze to Hana and cleared her throat.

Himura blinked and looked at Hana as if only just noticing she was still there. "Yes, Hana, dear? Was there something else that you needed?"

"Uh, n-no, but…” Hana stammered.

"Well then!" Himura made a shooing motion. "Off with you! Don't let us keep you!"

"Y-yes…” Hana murmured and turned, making her way awkwardly out of the room while the rest of the group stared after her.
"Why do you keep that one around?" Sanae asked, examining her nails. "There's very little she can do for you now that others can't, and she's failed to deliver on her promises so many times…"

"My grandfather has often cautioned me against discarding assets too soon. Even… depreciated ones," Himura replied. "The faint hope of getting back into our good graces will be good motivation for her. Regardless I'm sure I'll find appropriate ways to use her talents - such as they are. Still, let's not get off track, shall we? Umeko?"

Umeko shook her head. "I don't think he's a good candidate. He uses a lot of makeup, yeah, but it seems that's not uncommon for a figure skater. It's just that he uses so much then obsessively cleans it off and starts over."

"So the womanizing wasn't vigorous denial like you thought it was?" Omi asked.

"Oh, I'm still pretty sure he's about as straight as a bent corkscrew, but he's way too into himself as he is for him to really welcome the potion or it's effects," Umeko snorted.

"Didja hafta let him steal a kiss to figure that out?" Omi prodded, grinning.

"I... don't wanna talk about it," Umeko scowled and folded her arms.

"I heard he's pretty much a dead fish in that regard," Sanae said off-handedly.

"Fish-lips! Fish-lips!" Omi giggled, bouncing a bit.

Umeko sighed in frustration and rolled her eyes.

"Omi? What about yours? Any luck?" Himura asked.

Omi paused her 'Fish-lips' dance. "No," she said. "I mailed and mailed and mailed, but I couldn't find the right mailbox! I even talked to them and everything!"

"You do that anyway, Omi," Mineko quipped.

"I do!" Omi said with a grin. "They look like they have faces! And then you stick your mail in them and it's like they have tongues, and are going 'blehyyyyyyyyyyyyy!'" Omi stuck out her tongue demonstratively.

"And you're sure none of them were the right one?" Umeko asked.

Omi considered. "Welllll... I set a few of 'em on fire, and poured some nasty stuff in some of the other ones... Ooooh! Ooooh! And I stuffed one fulla lit cherry bombs!"

"How have you not gone to prison for that stuff? It's a serious crime!" Mineko said sourly.

"I got good at it not getting caught in my old neighborhood," Omi said with an impish smile. "Used to prank the mailman all the time. We went through a lot of mailmen. Plus Daddy's on the Diet. The best one was when I managed to stuff a cat into one! It made noise for hours!"

"Psychopath..." Mineko muttered.

"Mineko, did you have any luck?" Himura asked.

Mineko chewed her lower lip. "I... don't know. I mean... I'm pretty sure he'd jump at it, but..."

"But?" Himura asked.
"I'm not sure I feel right about it," Mineko said. "He's not part of any of this. He's just a poor lovesick jerk who got left behind by the romance train. He doesn't really have a stake in this, because he knows he's lost no matter what happens to Ranma. Shouldn't we test this out on… I dunno… some jerk first?"

Himura sighed and walked over to the athletic girl. "Mineko… I understand your hesitation. I do!" She smiled and held up her hands at Mineko's skeptical look. "The point is… we only have a handful of doses and the important aspect isn't just the physical change. We need to ascertain how well this works on someone who…" she took a moment to find the right words. "… would welcome a chance to rewrite who and what they are."

"I know… I'm just…" Mineko sighed. "You know… how do we know this won't turn someone inside out or something?"

"It kinda does…" Umeko muttered.

"It does?! Oooooh I wanna watch!" Omi bounced.

"She means in a metaphorical sense, dear," Sanae said. "Awwwww…"

"We're not that uncertain of it, Mineko," Himura replied. "I wouldn't be taking things to this stage if I wasn't certain of that, I promise you. Now… I know you have your doubts but… I think he might be our best option. Do you think you can convince him to come on his own?"

Mineko sighed. "I… probably not, given where his loyalties lie."

Himura nodded. "Then… we will arrange something."

000

Nabiki didn't like how things had played out at all.

The brief snatches she had gotten through the Link from Ranma as they helped Ryouga inside to the nurse were not reassuring - her emotions were a churning mess, shot through with what could only be intense fear. Some of it had to be from the near Neko-ken freak out, but a lot of it was going further, tying into deep insecurities that ran like fault lines through the whole of Ranma's mental landscape.

It's the whole fear of losing someone she cares about again, Nabiki thought, chewing on her thumb. She never got over Jusendo and Akane's close call. Hell she SHOULD be in therapy! For this and a dozen other things!

The nurse had shooed them outside, wanting to treat both Ranma's lacerations and Ryouga's breathing troubles. Thankfully she didn't seem overly shocked or concerned. To be fair, the injuries were all fairly minor compared to what Ryouga had walked in with the last time there had been a fight in the courtyard.

That had at least been related to Ranma and Ryouga in some way. This was completely out of left field. Her gaze moved to Rin. The petite girl was sitting in a chair just outside the nurse's office, her feet not quite reaching the floor, her head bowed. There's no WAY Rin would have kept a secret if there was any indication it would harm Ranma… right? She took a breath. Time to find out, I guess.
She walked over to the girl and took the seat next to her. "The nurse says they'll both be fine. Ryouga's just a little short of breath. So… you knew that girl who attacked them?"

Rin sighed. "I… knew of her. I knew who she was by what she was wearing and how she fought, but I've never met her before. Her name is Young Mi, and she's the daughter of the Ringmaster of the Circus that Mu Tsu used to travel with."

Nabiki's eyes widened. "Oh my… So… she was here for Mousse?"

Rin nodded. "She must have learned he had a Jusenkyo curse, but not which one. Mu Tsu said he told her where he was going, so… Maybe she followed the path he took when he didn't come back to her…"

Nabiki frowned. "Tell me the whole story, Rin. From the beginning."

Rin hunched down a bit more. "I… I really shouldn't… It's a lot of Mu Tsu's personal life… stuff he is ashamed of."

Nabiki put a hand on the girl's shoulder. "I know… but after what just happened… This girl is dangerous, and she gave Ranma a good fight. She might be more than Mousse can handle if she's going after him."

Rin took a deep breath. "It's not Mu Tsu who's in danger… I don't think anyway. But Ms. Shampoo is." She pulled out a small, smooth purple stone and started rubbing it with her thumb as she talked. "After Mu Tsu left the amazon village he ended up joining a Circus run by a man named Byungchul. Young Mi is his daughter. She and Mu Tsu… were engaged. But when Mu Tsu heard Ms. Shampoo had been disgraced back home and by an Outsider…"

"... He demonstrated his poor decision-making skills," Nabiki finished for her with a sigh. "And started mooning over Shampoo all over again."

"I… don't think he ever really stopped," Rin said timidly. "But… maybe for a while he thought he could."

"And then she finally caught up to him, and of course she's just as rational as any other martial arts type around here," Nabiki muttered. "So why attack Ranma of all people?"

"I… think she thought Mr. Ryouga was Mu Tsu. A-and Senpai was Ms. Shampoo," Rin said. "Ms. Manager? I…" She clenched her fists and blurted out. "I think this is my fault!"

Nabiki blinked. "Your fault? How?"

"I-I went to the carnival looking for a way to contact Mu Tsu's circus family. I didn't know about any of this yet and… and I ran into a man who used to work with Mu Tsu's circus. He didn't seem to like Mu Tsu very much and… and I think he may have told Young Mi where to find him!" She looked up at Nabiki with teary eyes. "I-if I had just kept out of his business then… then…!"

Nabiki sighed. "She would have shown up eventually, Rin. This was all just a lot of bad luck all at once." She patted the girl on the shoulder reassuringly. "You were trying to help. And you did. This isn't on you."

"Y-you're going to warn Ms. Shampoo… right?" Rin asked quietly. "D-do you think you c-can keep them from fighting?"

Nabiki rubbed her temples. "She's still out with Ukyou and my sister, probably chasing their tails or that Anna girl. Which is another bit of backstory I need to get from Akari. "Rin… you like Mousse, don't you? Like like I mean."

Rin blushed bright red and stared at the floor, squirming. "U-uhm… w-well… I-I…"

"That would be 'yes' then." Nabiki leaned towards her. "Rin… I need you to stick close to Ranma or one of the other Martial Artists until we sort this out, okay? If this Young Mi gets wind that you're a rival for her 'Darling'…"

Rin shook her head. "Mu Tsu doesn't see me that way."

Nabiki rolled her eyes. "Firstly, I don't think that matters to our friend from the Circus. Secondly," she shrugged, "well, Mousse has never opened up to anyone before you. I wouldn't write yourself off."

Rin blinked at her. "I… r-really? B-but…"

"Rin, Martial Artists in Nerima all seem to have one thing in common - they have no idea what they really want. They get so caught up pursuing some idea that they end up oblivious to what's right in front of them. But… they seem to catch on eventually." Nabiki gave her a warm smile.

"W-what are you saying…?" Rin mumbled, blushing and looking nervous.

"I'm saying that if you actually want that hot mess that is Mousse… Give him some time to figure out what he wants for himself. She poked her chest. "In the meantime, though… welcome to the Nerima Targets Club, population you and me. Keep your head down and your phone handy, okay?"

Rin nodded, looking uncertain but a little more hopeful. "O-okay…"

000

The nurse finished bandaging Ranma's cuts, noting that she didn't think any would need stitches but she recommended Ranma stay on light duty for the day to avoid reopening any of them.

"I'll let your homeroom teachers know so they can adjust your attendance," she said. "I'm giving you both a pass to excuse you from the rest of your classes today. Stay until you feel well enough to head home and then check in with me tomorrow." With a reassuring smile she left Ranma and Ryouga alone in the small clinic as she was called away for the daily staff meeting.

Ranma watched her go. Ryouga sat up from the cot he had been lying on, snagged his shirt and pulled it on. He felt a bit self-conscious being shirtless around Ranma, even if he knew it was hypocritical of him. Ranma noticed and turned to look at him.

"You should rest," Ranma said, though without much conviction.

"I'm fine. I've breathed in worse things," Ryouga replied, coughing lightly and then thumping his chest with his fist. "Had worse congestion than this the last time I had a cold."

"That's not the point," Ranma replied. Her eyes were hidden by her bangs as she walked up to him, right up close. Her fists were clenched and he didn't need the Link to tell she was upset.

She's probably gonna hit me... He thought glumly. "Look, Ranma…"

She stepped forward, leading with her head as it thunked against his collarbone. He nearly stumbled back against the cot in surprise, his arms going around her out of reflex. He felt her arms go around his waist.

"Just… just shut up," Ranma said, her voice slightly muffled by his shirt.

Ryouga could feel the turmoil through the Link. Nabiki had already whispered the words 'Shi shi hokodan' to him before the nurse had shooed her out, and from the pile of rubble that was all that was left of the wall he could guess at what had happened. Ranma was rattled. Badly.

He closed his eyes and just hugged her back. Her head tucked in under his chin almost perfectly. She was tense for a bit, but gradually she relaxed and he could sense her mood stabilizing. Eventually she slackened her death grip on the handfuls of the back of his shirt she had grabbed. He heard a couple of muffled sniffles from her but kept his mouth shut as he waited for her to regain her composure.

Finally she released him and he let her go as she stepped back, trying to covertly swipe at her eyes to clear the dampness from them. "Thanks… for not making that weird."

"Yeah, well… I had a rough day. I kinda needed a hug," Ryouga said. He was starting to remember the old game he and Ranma played in middle school to mollify her ego so she'd let him help her when she obviously needed it, just as she did the same with his.

A flicker of her old smile crossed her face. "W-well… just don't go expecting it all the time, y'know. It's not manly…” She turned, making another furtive rub at her eyes. "'What a day, huh? And she wasn't even one of ours."

"Yeah…” Ryouga toyed with the idea of putting a hand on her shoulder, then thought better of it. "We oughta thump Mousse for this one."

Ranma laughed weakly, but it died fast, leaving only an awkward silence. Before Ryouga could try again, she spoke up.

"Do you think it'll always be like this?" she asked softly. "Even if I deal with all of my crap… is it just gonna be someone else's instead? Until… until someday…” She tensed up again then sighed, hugging herself. "I think… I get why you run away sometimes," she said - so softly he only barely heard it.

He was gripped with a sudden, insane urge to ask her to come with him this time. He choked it down savagely because he was honestly scared that she might say yes.

"It… doesn't ever get me anywhere," he said finally. "I always end up having to come back and deal with it eventually. Whatever it is."

"Yeah…” she replied, sounding almost sad. She looked over her shoulder at him, and gave him a wan smile. "Whatcha standing over there looking like a wallflower for, anyway? Let's find Nabiki and figure out what we gotta do to clean this mess up."

000

Sayuri elected to forgo the last pre-game practise in favor of giving Ranma and Rin some time to recover. She suggested they all stay over at the Tendo Dojo that night.

Nabiki went one further, suggesting Rin should probably stay over as a houseguest until Mousse at the very least could be tracked down so they could find a way to ensure Young Mi wasn't going to pose a threat to her. Rin gave a token protest, but it was fairly obvious she was unsettled by the idea that the sadistic woman might turn her sights on her.

Shampoo, Ukyou and Akane showed up by the end of day bell. They had spent most of it chasing Anna around, trying to keep an eye on the girl and keep her out of trouble. It had taken quite some time for her to tire herself out in her search for 'Joe' and head back to the Hibiki residence.

"I felt really bad for her..." Akane said. "But... I couldn't think of what to say to her to try and explain it."

"And I thought you were good at English?" Nabiki said, smirking slightly.

Akane scowled at her. "There's a big difference between memorizing how to say 'Do you know how to get to the rail station?' in English and stringing together 'Ranma stole the piglet that the boy you like turned into because Ryouga is terrified of his Mom finding out about his curse!'"

"Maybe we should ask Ms. Hinako for a curriculum more tailored to our needs?" Ukyou joked.

"Stupid Shagua have to make American girl fall in love with him," Shampoo muttered. "Should have found nice Greek girl."

"I didn't..." Ryouga protested, then sighed in frustration. "I really should go talk to her and make sure she's okay..."

Nabiki noticed a flicker of hurt across Ranma's face as the redhead walked quietly beside him and decided to step in. "And how are you going to explain running off without your uniform, Ryo? You're usually lost for at least a day or two, right? We can give her the cover story you got turned around getting the mail or something. Lay low at the dojo a couple of days, help us keep Rin protected and then when we've dealt with Mousse's psycho ex we can sort out your romantic problems."

Ryouga shook his head. "I appreciate the offer Nabiki, but I don't think I can leave Anna that long without explaining..."

Nabiki huffed in frustration and cut him off by pinching his earlobe with her finger and thumb. "'Scuse us a sec?" she said sweetly to the others and dragged Ryouga off to the side.

"Ow ow ow ow ow!" Ryouga protested, glaring at her as she released him. "Nabiki, what the...?!

"Shush!" Nabiki hissed at him. "Just listen, okay? Right now Ranma needs you to be where she can see you. You don't understand what happened. When Young Mi stuffed you into that hat, the Link stopped working. Neither of us could tell where you were anymore. Ranma had a meltdown. She nearly had a Neko-ken fit, threw one living hell of a Shi Shi Hokodan, and then nearly throttled the girl to death while everything around her started to freeze. I need you to be right here until all those cracks that opened up in her psyche at least scab over a little, got it?"

Ryouga blinked.

"Ranma doesn't deal well with the concept of losing someone she cares about," Nabiki continued. "As in really really doesn't deal well."

"I... uhh..." Ryouga blushed and rubbed the back of his head awkwardly. "I don't think... I mean I'm not... I mean Ranma's not..."

"I swear to god I will beat you over the head with Kasumi's best frying pan until it's ruined and make you explain it to her!" Nabiki growled at him. "I don't have time for your stupid denials right now, okay? You know damn well how she feels about you, even if she doesn't get it yet!"

"I'd think that would make you not want me around!" Ryouga hissed at her, stealing a glance at the redhead in question who was watching them from the far side of the street with a look of confusion on her face.

"Unlike some other notable individuals in Nerima, I can keep my insecurity in check long enough to think about what the person I care about might need," Nabiki replied. "Just don't kidnap her and run off to Egypt or something. Because I'm really scared she might actually go along with that."

Ryouga swallowed, remembering his earlier impulse to do just that.

"Just… stay near her and Rin for the next bit, okay?" Nabiki implored him. "Besides, we were going to talk with Tofu about adding Ukyou to the Link today, remember?"

"You think it's a good idea to go ahead with that after all of this?" Ryouga asked, sounding uncertain. "Besides, Mom speaks English! If nobody goes home and heads Anna off at the pass, she'll blab about the curse and then that's one more thing for Mom to stress about! Maybe we should wait until the crisis is over?"

"There's always going to be a crisis. That's how this place works, Ryouga," Nabiki replied. "And having Ukyou to be focused on will hopefully help keep Ranma glued together. Besides, I'm pretty sure you're necessary to make forming a Link work." She smirked and winked at him. "You get an excuse to cuddle a cute girl who's all cold from the herbs along with Ranma. I'd think you'd jump at the chance!"

Ryouga scowled. "Yeah… The whole 'Ranma' issue aside, you do know that Ukyou's like a sister to me, right? This is going to be super awkward…"

"Awww, poor baby…" Nabiki reached up and patted his cheek. "…I have absolutely no sympathy for you! Now suck it up and be a good teddy bear for a few days, okay? I'll head to your house with Akari to head off Anna. My English is pretty good."

Ryouga raised a skeptical eyebrow. "*[How good?]" he asked in English.

"[English is the language of business, Ryouga Baby. I'm pretty sure I can get the gist of it across to her. Though I make no promises that I won't 'accidentally' sell her a timeshare in the process,]" she replied, winking at him.

Ryouga rolled his eyes. "[Please don't get her involved in any scams? Just… she's a nice girl.]"

Nabiki resisted the urge to make a crack about how it was suspicious how Ryouga kept running away from the 'nice girls' in his life. She had promised to be supportive, after all.

"How are you going to get there before her, anyway? You can't roof jump yet." Ryouga said after a moment, brow knitting as he thought through the logistics.

"I'll get Shampoo to carry me, and see if Akane will come along as well. That'll keep them from getting all worked up seeing Ukyou have her turn with the Link and wanting theirs early," Nabiki said. "Plus maybe I can straighten out your Mom about Shampoo and Akane so she's not so convinced you're a Casanova."

Ryouga sighed. "I'd appreciate it. I… uhh… better let you get going if that's the plan then." He glanced back at the others, who were waiting for them and watching curiously.
"[ Ryouga.]
Nabiki said, switching to English one last time. "[Just... stay close to Ranma, okay? Sleep on the floor next to the bed she's in.]
"

Ryouga's eyes widen. "[What?]
"

"[She needs to see you're okay. She has a game tomorrow and she needs to sleep, so you need to be close enough that she can wake up in the middle of the night and see that you're okay. That, or change to a piglet and sleep in her bed.]
"

"[I'm not going to do that!]
"

"[Then don't change to a piglet and sleep in her bed anyway! I don't care! Just be in the room in case she has a nightmare or something!]
" Nabiki growled at him. "[I'm not asking you to have sex with her, just be a compassionate human being for once and be there for a friend who's terrified and too stubborn to admit it!]
"

Ryouga looked ashamed for a moment. "[All right... all right, I'll... I'll figure something out.]
"

Nabiki nodded. "[Good. Thank you. Sincerely.]
She patted him on the shoulder. "[Believe it or not, you've been a big help to me. I'll do my best to try and be the same for you.]
"

She turned and led him back to the group, getting suspicious glares from a few of them, Ranma among them.

"What are you plotting, Nabiki?" Ranma asked, folding her arms and eyeing her warily.

"Not plotting. Fixing," Nabiki said. "For instance? In a short while, Anna is going to get home and have a chat with Ryouga's Mom about his curse. Assuming we don't want your performance this morning to go to waste, I need to get there quickly and head her off. Shampoo, could you be a dear and get me there fast?"

Shampoo raised an eyebrow then glanced at Ryouga. "Sure, but why Pintou need talk with Shagua alone?"

"Because he's a doofus and needed extra convincing to trust me," Nabiki replied smoothly. She could feel Ryouga's glare after that one, but Shampoo seemed satisfied with the answer. "Akane, would you mind escorting Akari back as well? No need to roof hop, but after today... well, the non-martial artists should be escorted for the next while."

Akane glanced at Akari and nodded. "Sure! It's been a while. Akari and I can catch up."

Nabiki nodded. "Good. The rest of you are going to Doc Tofu's for the... uh... procedure, then head to the Dojo. I'll give you a call once things are settled at the Hibiki's and we'll figure things out from there."

"Are you sure it'll even work without you there, sugar?" Ukyou asked.

"It should. Ryouga's the one who started it all," Nabiki replied.

"Actually..." Ranma said, looking thoughtful. "...I wonder... if we add Ucchan to the link without Nabiki there, will she and Nabs be linked?"

" Probably not?" Ryousa said.

"No... I think they will be!" Ranma shot Ryouga a grin. "I think I'm starting to get a handle on how all of this works, an' if I'm right… Well, first off, it's all you, Ryouga. We're just… boosting it, I guess. An' second… well, maybe it's something the Docs can use."

Ryouga frowned and folded his arms. "No way."

"Betcha one of the Monster Fudge Mountain surprises at the Ice Cream shop!" Ranma shot back, smirking confidently. "Loser treats."

"Fine! But you're wrong, trust me, I should know!" Ryouga shot back. The two of them clasped their hands to seal the bet.

That'll keep them busy, Nabiki thought. She gave Shampoo a smile, offering to put her arm over her shoulder. "Shall we, kitten?"

Shampoo wasn't having any of it. She scooped Nabiki into a bridal carry, startling her enough to earn an undignified squawk. The Amazon grinned. "Pintou need to be carried like damsel in distress? Pintou going to get carried like damsel in distress!"

Nabiki scowled and crossed her arms to sulk. "It's not my fault I'm not that far in my training yet!"

"Is what you get for training part-time," Shampoo winked then coiled. Nabiki quickly decided to abandon her sulk in favor of wrapping her arms around Shampoo's neck, figuring wounded pride wasn't worth the possibility of tumbling several stories to the concrete as they suddenly accelerated up, onto the lamppost, then to a nearby roof.

"Oof… Think Pintou heavier than last time…" Shampoo said playfully. She adjusted her hold on landing, then made another leap.

"I swear I'm going to make you pay for that one, kitten!" Nabiki growled warily.

"Promise?" Shampoo asked, giving her a leer as she bounded skyward once more.

000

Once they reached the clinic, Dr. Tofu took his time examining all three of them before he was satisfied that it was safe to proceed.

"All right… Now, I had to increase the dosage for Ukyou, given her much higher levels of ki." He handed the Okonomiyaki chef the pills. "The side effects will tend to be more pronounced than what Nabiki experienced. The sensation of cold and the drowsiness in particular will be bad. I've added caffeine to the mix to try and counteract the worst of the drowsiness - it's important you try and remain conscious until the link forms. Afterward, it will be all right for you to go home and sleep, but I recommend Ranma and Ryouga remain in contact with you as long as possible to ensure the Link is fully established."

"Are you telling me that your prescription is to sleep with Ranma, Doc?" Ukyou asked with a smirk as she accepted the pills.

Dr. Tofu raised an eyebrow. "Contact with Ranma and Ryouga is required, since I believe Ranma's supposition that Ryouga is the key to the process is correct. I had thought the fiancee matter was…" he glanced at Ranma, "…are you and Ranma…?"

Ukyou blushed but nodded. "Ummm… yeah. It's complicated, but… yeah."

Ranma's eyes went wide and she started making shushing gestures from behind Dr. Tofu, trying to get Ukyou's attention.

He frowned and swiveled to Ryouga. "And… you're aware of this, Ryouga?"

"Yeah? I mean… it's not like it's a secret…" Ryouga muttered, having completely missed Ranma's frantic signals to him as well.

Dr. Tofu turned to look at Ranma just in time to see her facepalm. "Is… something wrong, Ranma? I… wasn't aware that your relationship issues were this… complex. I admit to being… a bit shocked, and more than that, dismayed that your commitment to the Tendos has been put aside… I do hope they are aware of it?" He sighed deeply. "I'm bound to confidentiality regardless, but…"

Ranma massaged her temples. "Doc… sit down… this is gonna take some explaining…"

000

Fortunately Anna had taken her time returning to the Hibiki residence. Nabiki couldn't see her face from their angle of approach, but her hunched shoulders and slow steps told her all she needed to know.

Okay, get buy-in on protecting Ryouga's secret FIRST. Straighten out relationship snarl AFTER, she decided, motioning for Shampoo to hop down in front of the girl.

"[Eeeep!]" Anna started as Shampoo landed in front of her.

Shampoo set Nabiki down smoothly and stepped back.

"[Anna? Hi, I'm Nabiki Tendo. I'm… kind of a friend of the Hibikis.]" She extended her hand, smiling in a way she hoped was reassuring.

"[...Do you Japanese people not use those trains o' yours?!]" Anna took a few deep breaths, trying to calm herself. "[Scared me half out of my wits!]

"[I'm sorry,]" Nabiki said sincerely. "[I was trying to catch you before you got back to Ryouga's house. We need to chat.]"

"[About what?]" Anna asked suspiciously. "[Is this about that crazy redhead who stole him!? Do you know where they are!?]" She darted forward and grabbed a handful of Nabiki's blouse and shook her "[TELL ME!]

Nabiki very quickly realized Anna was much stronger than she appeared. "[E-easy!]" she begged the distraught girl. "[Ryouga is fine, and there's a good reason Ranma grabbed him! You see… I know you just found out about his curse, right? He neglected to tell you his mother doesn't know yet.]

Anna blinked at her, then sheepishly released her blouse. "[O-oh! So… Ah'm so dense!]

Nabiki sniffed, "[You didn't know,]" Nabiki replied. "[But the reason he was running from you was…]"

"[... He didn't want her to see.]" Anna finished. "[Oh poor Joe… That must have been so humiliating for him. So… who is the redhead, then?]"

"[That's Ranma. She's…]" Nabiki considered how best to describe the situation, not knowing what the American girl's opinions might be. Best avoid talking about Ranma's own relationship knot."
"[She's his friend, and she has a Jusenkyo curse too. Mrs. Hibiki doesn't know about hers, either.]

"[Oh? What does she turn into?]" Anna asked.

"[A boy.]

Nabiki replied. It wasn't entirely accurate, and Ranma would probably be horrified at the implication that her male form was the curse, but it was simpler, and it wasn't technically a lie either, as Nabiki had never identified the male form as the cursed form, just the form that female Ranma changed into.

"[There are curses that do that?]

"Anna replied, aghast.

"[That's… that's…!]

"Awkward?

"Anna replied.

"Sinful!

"Anna replied.

"That's some terrible, terrible black magic! You should find yourself a priest, and… and… well, I saw a movie once about an exorcism, and so you might need two…"

Nabiki sighed.

"[We've… well, we've tried that, trust me. Ranma and Ryouga have spent a lot of time trying to find cures for their respective curses.]

Anna's eyes narrowed.

"[Hmph! Ah bet you she just wants to get cured so she can have him to herself!]

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. I'm pretty sure at this point the 'cure' would cause more problems than the affliction…"

"[Actually… Akari is Ryouga's girlfriend.]

Anna blinked at her. There was a terrible, ghastly silence.

Maybe I ripped the bandaid off too quickly on that one… Nabiki thought nervously.

Then Anna started giggling.

"[Heheheheheheh… Good one!]" Anna said, clapping her on the shoulder. "[You had me goin' for a minute there! Akari is a sweet girl an' all, but… She's always got her head in that notebook o' hers an' Ah don't see how if she were Joe's girlfriend she'd stand for that red haired succubus hangin' off him like she does! Ah've spent a couple o' days with 'em both, an' Ah've not seen a single lingerin' look or romantic moment. Ah honestly thought she was his sister!]

"[I… uh…]

"Anna sighed. "[Ah guess Ah shouldn't be surprised Joe is so popular with the girls. Ah mean…]"

she giggled, "[Well, Ah mean jus' look at him! An' he's so heroic too! But that just means he needs to be with the right girl! A sturdy girl who can take care of him proper like!]"

She put her hands on her hips and nodded. "[An' unless Ah see someone like that in his life… well then Ah think Ah made the right decision comin' out here!]

Nabiki pinched the bridge of her nose, feeling a fresh migraine coming on.

"[Ah appreciate the heads up about Joe's curse, though. Ah'll keep that on the QT,]"

Anna said, patting Nabiki's shoulder as she walked past. "[Until he gets back, Ah should write a letter back home! Papa will wanna know Ah'm gonna be here a mite longer.]

Shampoo walked up to Nabiki as Anna walked past them in the direction of the Hibiki residence.

"So… how go? Did Pintou tell her Shaggu is taken?"

"Shampoo, we need to have a talk about your new tendency to give out pet names," Nabiki muttered. "And… yes, I told her Akari is his girlfriend."

"And she not believe you," Shampoo stated flatly, a small smirk appearing.

"Not a word," Nabiki replied with a heavy sigh. "But… she's on board about the curse, anyway. So at least Ryousa can avoid additional mild embarrassment while he's being utterly humiliated as this all goes horribly wrong."

"So… let me get this straight…" Doctor Tofu was striding back and forth, rubbing at his chin. "Ranma, you are currently pursuing a relationship with Akane, Nabiki, Shampoo and Ukyou at the same time." He paused in his pacing and gave Ranma a stern look.

Ranma shrank back in her chair a bit. "I… uh… yeah…"

"Hnh." Doc Tofu made a noncommittal sound and resumed pacing. "And… I am forced to take your word for this… for all but Ms. Kuonji of course… but I am to understand that all of the girls have accepted and agreed to this arrangement?"

"We have, Dr. Tofu," Ukyou said firmly. "We didn't decide this lightly. We spent a lot of time deliberating it between ourselves. The… uhh… the fiancées I mean," she clarified.

Doctor Tofu paused and glanced at her, raising an eyebrow. Ukyou's confident and defiant look wavered a bit under the cool examination. "I see," he said finally, and returned to his walking. "And are your parents aware of this arrangement?"

"Cologne knows, and has given her blessing. Joketsuzoku law is actually what allows all this to work," Ukyou said.

"Mr. Tendo knows about it, but… uhh… Mom and Pops don't. An'… if you could not tell them?" Ranma asked sheepishly.

Doctor Tofu sighed, stopped and took off his glasses to polish them. "I… don't see any reason to, Ranma. You are still minors…" He shot them all a stern look. "…but unless there is a medical concern that requires their intervention, this is all covered by doctor-patient privilege. But…" He put his glasses back on. "I expect each and every one of you to report to me for a full physical. That was already going to be a requirement because of all this business with the Link, but with this revelation…" He sighed. "…I presume it's safe to assume you are all now sexually active?"

"D-Doc!" Ranma blushed and shrank deeper into her chair.

"Yeah…" Ukyou said, fidgeting.

Doctor Tofu raised an eyebrow. "...Both forms, Ranma?"

Ranma flushed a brighter red and just huddled down further, nodding miserably.

Doctor Tofu then gave Ryousa a questioning glance.

Ryousa's eyes widened and he frantically waved his hands in denial. "H-hey! I'm not part of this! Honest!"

"Yet you're now deeply emotionally linked to Ranma, and proposing extending that link to the others," Doctor Tofu said. "Have you considered the possible repercussions to yourself, Ryousa?"
"I can handle it," Ryouga said, swallowing nervously and shooting a glance at Ranma and Ukyou. "It's what's necessary to cure the curse and save Mom, so…"

Doctor Tofu sighed. "You are all very young and I worry about the long-term effects this will have on you emotionally. You all still have a lot of growing up to do. There is… absolutely no precedent for any of this." He shrugged. "I will trust your judgement since… well, you are currently the subject matter experts, as scant as our knowledge is."

Ranma breathed a sigh of relief. "Thanks, Doc."

"There is also the matter of the complication introduced by your 'cover story'," Doctor Tofu gave Ranma another stern glare. "You do realize that you and Ryouga have falsified legal documents with the Hospital? That there are legal repercussions to claiming relationship status on official forms?"

"Are… we gonna get in trouble?" Ranma asked, eyes going wide as a potential new wrinkle was added.

Doc Tofu sighed. "No, but… with the full physical done by your school recently, and the work with Dr. Hirano reinforcing it… as far as your medical records are concerned Ranma… you are female. And with the addition of listing yourself and Ryouga as being engaged… In order to be able to release Ryouga into Ranma's custody, the nurse listed you both as 'Common law' to satisfy the legalities of making Ryouga's personal medical information available to you. Dr. Hirano has been relying upon that assumption during this matter of the MRI scans and discussing Ryouga's private medical concerns with you."

Ranma blinked, confused, then heard a 'smack'. She turned to see Ukyou covering her face with her palm.

"Ucchan, what does all that mean?"

"It means you jackasses are married," Ukyou replied, dragging her hand down her face.

"What?!" Ranma and Ryouga both squeaked in unison.

"It's… not as legally binding as, say, a Civil Marriage," Doctor Tofu answered. "But it is a matter of record. You could always request it be scrubbed as a mistake… but then that opens legal issues with how much private information Dr. Hirano has shared with you both, and opens him up to legal repercussions due to violations of client-doctor privilege." Doctor Tofu scowled at them both. "I don't appreciate your misleading a colleague in this manner, even if your intentions were noble. This could still cause problems for us all down the road should the discrepancies in Ranma's records ever be investigated. At the very least, you will need to file the appropriate paperwork to dissolve the Common Law marriage on record before either of you can enter into a Civil Union with anyone. Both of you."

"We have to get divorced?!" Ryouga yelped. He rocked back in his chair, staring at the ceiling. "Akari's grandfather is going to kill me…"

"You?!” Ranma said. "What about me?! You don't have a seppuku contract hanging over your head! If Mom finds out…!"

"It's not actually in your Family Register. Technically it would be an annulment if both parties agree," Doctor Tofu reassured them. "Just… I ask that you hold off until Dr. Hirano and I can finish our study…"
"Mrs. Saotome is supposed to decide on the omiai this weekend," Ukyou said. "She… uh… she seemed pretty intent on pushing the wedding forward as soon as possible."

Ranma groaned and slumped in her chair. "I'm doomed…"

"...Though if she accepts Nabiki's proposal, that might be delayed a bit until details are worked out," Ukyou added. "And… If not… well, at least you know you have a legal barrier to her forcing you to marry Kodachi."

"Wait… 'proposal'"? Ranma sat up. "What 'proposal'?"

Ukyou sighed. "To… marry all of us, under Joketsuzoku law."

Ranma groaned again and sank back into her chair. "Then she does know! Then… why is she busting my chops about being manly still!! She useda say 'being manly' was peeping on girls an' stuff an' she liked that I had all these girls chasing me!" She balled up her fists in frustration.

Ryouga noticed her reaction, reflexively reaching a hand towards her before apparently thinking better of it and withdrawing it.

"Because she wants grandkids as soon as possible," Ukyou replied. "I think her tune changed when She, Genma and Akane's Dad tried to push you two into marriage and it fell apart." She glanced at Ranma's posture, then turned her gaze to Doctor Tofu. "Doc… I think we should probably start now, if we're going to do this? If we're going to get my fiance all worked up over this, I'd like to be able to know what she's feeling."

Doctor Tofu raised an eyebrow, then nodded and handed her a glass of water. "You can use the couch in the waiting area. I've already closed the clinic for the day for this. You'll need to remain in close physical contact until the Link is established, and Ukyou is liable to be drowsy. It's important you stay awake until the Link is in place. Call me over once something happens, all right?"

Ukyou nodded, popped the pills into her mouth and took a swig of water. She smiled at Ranma and Ryouga. "Care to escort me to the couch, boys?"

"Out of context, that would probably sound really wrong…" Ryouga muttered, standing up.

"Let's be honest Ryo… In context it sounds kinda bad." Ranma stood as well, offering her hand to Ukyou to help her up, though she didn't really need it. "That's even without the usual misunderstanding that seems to be the standard around here."

"What's to misunderstand?" Ukyou asked, a playful grin on her face as the three of them walked out into the waiting room. "I'm just here to snuggle with my fiance and her husband until we're all telepathic. Seems pretty straightforward to me."

A pained expression crossed Ryouga's face.

"Could… could you not remind us of that little wrinkle, please?" Ranma asked. Truthfully, the concept of marriage was terrifying enough for Ranma without throwing in being the bride. Not that she hadn't narrowly avoided that a few times. The very idea that she had somehow already suffered that fate and just hadn't realized it was straight out of her nightmares.

"Yeah." Ryouga sat down on the couch first, then he shot Ranma a smirk. "Ranma already told me when we get fake-married she wants a big fake-wedding." He closed his eyes and held up a finger. "... But no more than three fake-kids. Right?"
Ranma blinked. "I can't believe you remembered that, you giant doofus…"

"Whaaaaaat is this?" Ukyou said suspiciously, sitting on Ryouga's left.

Ranma sat on Ukyou's left and sprawled, offering her hand to Ukyou. "It's just some nonsense we were joking about when I realized that I was totally doomed as far as convincing Ryo's Mom that there's no relationship between us. Since we were already faking the engagement and all."

"Oh, that," Ukyou took her hand, offering her right hand to Ryouga. "Yeah I've... I've had some experience with Mrs. Hibiki. She seems to think Ryouga is quite the ladykiller." She smirked at Ryouga. "I'm not so sure she's wrong anymore, either. I mean, here you are at seventeen... already married, girlfriend on the side, plus another foreign girl travelling all this way..."

Ryouga grumbled and took Ukyou's hand. "I'm not sure how, but I'm convinced this is your fault somehow, Ranma."

"What, my terrible romance problems are infectious?" Ranma shot back.

"Yeah! Maybe they are!" he replied. "For all we know, that's some kind of ki-based curse you've got, and... and..."

"It is a curse. But its name is Genma Saotome," Ukyou said, interrupting him. "I'm pretty sure everything can be traced back to him." She shivered and slumped back on the couch. "Oof... dizzy... this stuff hits you kinda hard, huh?"

Ranma noticed her shiver and huddled in closer to Ukyou's side. "Yeah. Nabiki was pretty dopey."

"Didn't take too long after she started feeling cold, though," Ryouga replied.

"Good. 'Cuz I'm gonna need my hands back eventually," Ukyou mumbled sleepily. "My nose itches."

Ranma reached over and scratched Ukyou's nose, causing the Okonomiyaki Chef to start a bit in surprise.

"Better?" Ranma asked.

Ukyou smiled at her and waggled her eyebrows. "If I say 'no' can I convince you to kiss it better?" She shivered again.

Ranma snorted then kissed her nose. "How's that?"

Ukyou grinned. "What if I said it was my lip that was itchy instead?"

"Could... could you please not make out on the couch next to me while I'm holding your hand?" Ryouga muttered, scowling and keeping his eyes fixed on the far wall.

"I'll make out with your wife if I want to, Hibiki!" Ukyou shot back.

"She's not...!" Ryouga started, then slumped back on the couch. "...how does this keep getting worse?"

"Hey! You'd be lucky to land a hottie like me!" Ranma said, her pride prickled.

"He did land you, sugar," Ukyou reminded her, giggling a bit drunkenly. "Eloped via hospital release form. Woooo, romantic!"
"He…! I…!" Ranma sputtered, glanced at Ryouga, then slumped back to the couch in a sulk. "He did not!"

The sulk lasted for all of thirty seconds. Ranma felt Ukyou pull her hand back, but before she could protest she felt herself being tugged back into Ukyou's lap. "Ack?!

"C'mere… I'll show you who landed you," Ukyou said, pulled the redhead in close and draped her free arm around her, then clasped her hand again which did a pretty good job of wrapping Ranma up.

"Better," Ukyou murmured in her ear. "Now be a good wife and keep me warm, 'kay?"

Ranma certainly felt a rush of heat to her face. But she could also feel how cold Ukyou's hand was, so she suppressed her initial urge to protest and curled up a bit more, leaning in against her and hugging that cold hand close. "Better?"

"Geez…" Ryouga muttered. Ranma glanced over Ukyou's shoulder and could see him blushing and looking away, still holding her hand, but having scooted over away from the two of them a bit. She sighed and felt bad. This really isn't fair to him.

"Mrrrrr…" Ukyou mumbled.

"Hey, no falling asleep," Ranma slapped her cheek lightly with her free hand. "You fall asleep and I'm gonna go sit in Ryo's lap instead."

"What?!" Ryouga squeaked, shooting her a disbelieving look.

"Nuh!" Ukyou hugged tighter. "I'm 'wake… Don't you dare."

"Then keep talking," Ranma prodded her. "Pretty sure you gotta be awake for this to work. Also, I'm not your wife!"

"Would you prefer 'Wode Airen'?" Ukyou replied, giggling softly.

"It's more accurate at least," Ranma muttered. "Akane is gonna be your wife, remember?"

"You're not sore about that, are you Ranchan?" Ukyou blinked, waking up a little more and giving Ranma a concerned look.

Ranma sighed and blew her bangs up. "I don't know, okay? I mean…" She closed her eyes and rested her head on Ukyou's shoulder. "This whole 'marriage' thing is weird for me. It's like… I understand being married, I guess. And I get the whole importance of asking someone to marry you, but… weddings?" She shuddered.

"Well, to be fair, your only experience with weddings has been with the shotgun variety," Ukyou admitted.

"I thought you wanted a big wedding?" Ryouga piped up unexpectedly.

"Huh?" Ranma peeked over Ukyou's shoulder at him. "Where did you get that…"

"We're eloping? I didn't expect that. I wanted a big wedding… But it doesn't matter. Ryouga and I will be together forever!"

Ranma's eyes widened as she remembered exactly when she had said that, "Really?! You're going by something I said when I was doped up on magic!?!" She glared angrily at Ryouga.
Ryouga blinked. "I… oh! Right, I guess that's where I heard that…” He chuckled weakly then cringed. "...Sorry."

"What is it with magic love spells and weddings anyway?" Ranma continued, grousing. "I mean, I've been hopped up on love magic I dunno how many times, and it's always the same thing! 'I want a big wedding, tee hee!' Even when I'm a guy! It's humiliating! An' now everyone thinks that's what I actually want."

"I don't think you feel that way, Ranchan," Ukyou said, hugging a bit tighter. "I think… I think…"

Ranma sucked in a breath as she felt that same draining sensation as before, and it all came to her in a rush. She groaned as the world spun a bit, her perception suddenly full of colors that were not colors and shapes that were best described as temperatures.

"Ooooh, that's…!" Ukyou gasped, her eyes going wide.

"Doc!" Ryouga called as he noticed the sudden change.

It was different than before. There was some of Ryouga's ki mixing in, but the draw was much stronger on Ranma this time. Some small part of Ranma's mind pointed out that it was probably due to the fact she was cuddling with Ukyou rather than just holding hands, and Ukyou had a much deeper 'well' to fill than Nabiki. It still shouldn't have been a big problem for her.

But… ki was, effectively, emotion. And Ranma's usually boundless supply of confidence had taken a rather severe hit, leaving a lot of heavier, darker emotions much more poorly suppressed. A lot of fears and insecurities lay uncomfortably close to the surface and now it was like a sudden, roiling vortex was dragging them up and out.

Ranma whimpered. She dug her fingers into Ukyou's sleeves, her vision actually starting to go dark as her perception was filled with a rushing torrent of inky blackness. She felt Ukyou gasp and could hear Ryouga and the Doc talking. Their voices sounded distant - incomprehensible, though she could sense the urgency in them. She struggled weakly, knowing she needed to break the connection, but there was no strength left in her limbs. Her joints ached as the cold bubbled up from somewhere deep, deep inside of her and seeped into her bones.

She could hear them now. She could hear the cats.

They were always there, of course - somewhere deep down in the darkness. But the darkness was all around her now. She couldn't run, just as she hadn't been able to then.

She had learned how to hide - how to make herself one of them to keep herself safe, but for some reason that wasn't working now. She meowed weakly, but the tattered cloak she had woven of the mind of a cat for herself just fell apart when she tried. These were the cats from her nightmares - the ones who always knew where she was, with their teeth and their claws and their hungry, yellow eyes.

She squeezed her own eyes shut but that did nothing to make them go away. The tears started, though she knew that only ever made things worse. The fears that came with the cats whispered in her ears;

You're weak

I'm NOT weak! she protested, struggling a little more, but she was desperately denying the truth. She didn't have the strength to escape this time.
You're helpless

No! I'll fight! I can always fight! She shuddered, remembering how that always went. The cats had nothing to lose, after all. Pain was nothing to them. Fatigue was nothing to them. They were never afraid for long - their hunger was everything. They would keep coming and keep coming and though Ranma could buck them off or toss them away, they kept coming back. She would get tired and slow, and the bites and scratches would burn and itch, and she would get sleepy, and perhaps the next time she blinked for too long it would cost her an eye...

No matter how strong you are. No matter how fast. It won't be enough.

Tremors shook her. Faces swam through the darkness now. Akane… Nabiki… Ryouga… Shampoo… Ukyou… Rin… all of the people who depended on her, but whom she had failed. Would fail. The meowing had turned into laughter.

"You are alone. You will always be alone."

The last… the last had been in her mother's voice. Said lovingly… gently… devastatingly.

Ranma could feel herself sinking into the blackness. Not like when she normally went into the Neko-ken - this time she had been stripped of the disguise that had protected her. This time, it was going to consume her. She could already feel the claws catching at her flesh, the teeth sinking into her legs.

Then… warmth. A voice that sounded like it was far away… two voices… A reddish gold warmth cut through the black murk, like someone had pulled aside the lid from over the pit. Ranma reached out, and felt it drawing her up. It was comforting, reassuring… it rinsed the darkness away, silenced the doubts and the fears and forced the claws digging into her to lose their grips and to fade…

"They're going to hate you, you know."

Ranma shuddered as the blackness spoke with her mother's voice again, even as Ranma was drawn away from it.

"They love you now because you've fooled them. When they find out what you really are. When they find out the things that you've decided to forget. Then they will abandon you and they will hate you."

Wait… what did I forget? She struggled a bit, feeling some of the fear that clung to her, a hook that would not let go and tore at her even as she was drawn out of the pit.

"You'll see. And then you'll be sorry."

000

"She's alright, she's just in a very deep sleep now," Tofu said, gently probing the pressure points around the redhead's face and neck. He was having to work around the other two teens on the couch who were currently holding Ranma between them; Ryouga was laying back with Ukyou between his side and the back of the couch with Ranma between and on top, trying to maintain as much contact as possible.

"What the hell was that?" Ukyou asked in a hushed tone. She gazed worriedly at the redhead, trailing fingers through her hair.
Something had happened when the Link opened up. Ranma had passed out and there had been a sudden, massive surge of heavy ki. Ryouga had given her a crash course in the basics of ki manipulation as they worked together to safely disperse it while circulating more positive-aspected ki into the redhead in an effort to stabilize her.

"That was the Neko-ken, I think," Ryouga replied. "Or… whatever it is the Neko-ken keeps bottled up."

"If I had known Ranma had been in such an unstable state prior to starting, I would have called this off. You should have told me she used the Shi shi hokodan. That is unusual for her, to say the least!" Tofu said, then sighed. "No… I apologize. I should have examined her more closely myself."

"So… what do we do?" Ukyou asked him. She could still feel a chill on Ranma's skin. She herself felt fine. Energized, even. It was like all of the effects of the pill had been drawn into Ranma, and after the purge, the redhead had been left with very little ki of her own.

"I was expecting something like this, but not to this degree, to be honest," Doctor Tofu said. "When Nabiki was added to the Link it caused a kind of 'trauma letdown' between her and Ryouga. Ranma didn't experience one that time, so it was reasonable to assume that… I simply wasn't expecting it to be of this magnitude. But after what you told me of today's events…" He rubbed his chin. "I want you two to remain in contact with her until she wakes up."

"Wait… all night?!" Ryouga yelped, his eyes widening with a panicked expression. He shot a look at Ukyou, then at Ranma, then the door.

"If need be. I'd offer you a cot, but I fear it wouldn't be any more comfortable that the couch for three people," Doctor Tofu replied, completely oblivious to Ryouga's distress.

Ukyou sighed and reached up, tweaking Ryouga's nose to get his attention. When he gave her a confused look, she shot him a warning glance to shut him up, then smiled wanly up at the doctor. "If we can just get a blanket, we'll be fine, Doc."

Doctor Tofu nodded. He retrieved a blanket from one of the storage closets and laid it over them. "I'll be upstairs if either of you need anything. Call me when Ranma wakes up, or if there is another ki buildup."

"We will," Ukyou replied, trying her best to be reassuring for the doctor. She didn't really feel it, but she wanted some privacy to grill Ryouga about what was going on. Right now she was getting all sorts of images and impressions from each of them, and she needed a translator be able to make sense of them.

Doctor Tofu checked a few more things then headed up the stairs, leaving them alone with the lights turned down.

"Okay, now spill it, Ryouga!" Ukyou turned to him and growled. "What do you know about what's going on in Ranchan's head?"

Ryouga glanced nervously at the door. "Uhh… maybe I should…" he swallowed hard and turned back face to her. "You know… get up first? I'm pretty sure Ranma will be okay with you, and…"

Ukyou rolled her eyes. "Oh please! You and I have been in much more compromising positions than this, Ryouga. And I know you've done even worse with Ranma!"

"Not for an extended period!" Ryouga protested.
Ukyou raised an eyebrow. "Not even with Akane?"

"That was different!" Ryouga shot back. "B-besides… I was a small black piglet! Look, maybe that would be best… you'd have more room and…"

"And you could escape answering my questions!" Ukyou replied sharply. "Just calm down, would you? You get used to this sort of thing if you hang out with this bunch. Whenever we were sleeping in the same place, Shampoo used to end up halfway on top of me even before… DON'T YOU DARE NOSEBLEED!"

Ryouga whimpered, having already snatched off a bandanna and held it to his nose. "You're not helping! And you're also cutting off circulation in my right arm!"

"Honestly, you're hopeless," Ukyou shifted a bit to unpin his arm. "Look, just move over a bit and put your arm around my shoulders… You're not going to catch fire if you touch me, y'know!" She settled into a more comfortable spot where she could rest her head against his shoulder, with Ranma's head tucked under her chin. "Geez, younger brothers cuddle with their big sisters all the time. You don't have to be weird about this."

"One. How would you know? You don't have any siblings, let alone younger ones," Ryouga said. "Two. You're not my sister, and Three. You're still two months younger than me!"

"Metaphorical big sister!" Ukyou insisted.

"Yeah, well, you're still metaphorically two months younger than me!" Ryouga shot back. He shifted, seemingly less concerned about disturbing her as he got more comfortable.

Ukyou could sense some of the odd dark emotions and spikeyness settling out of his mental 'landscape' and smiled. Best way to calm a Hibiki is give 'em something to gripe about. "So… what do you know about what just happened?"

Ryouga sighed, rubbing his forehead as he gathered his thoughts. "Well… Last time it affected me and Nabiki, not Ranma. We were talking, and somehow it got me and Nabiki thinking about… about the parents we've lost."

Ukyou felt a twinge, a burble from the dark sea that underlay all of Ryouga's emotions. She sent some reassurance to him without even realizing she was doing it until she perceived the change in him, the disturbance settling. Woah… I think I'm starting to see what Nabiki meant about this.

"Anyway… it started dredging up a lot of bad memories… bad feelings that I guess we hadn't dealt with, and… it was like the flow of ki between us kept churning it up, and…" he shrugged, "...I guess the three of us just… held each other up through it all. Dr. Hirano said something about people not processing some bad experiences fully until they were safe and secure enough to do it. I guess… when you've got a couple of other people there and none of you have any real secrets anymore… I suppose that was 'safe enough' for Nabiki and me."

"So you think having me here made Ranma feel safe enough to let all that loose?" Ukyou asked.

Ryouga shook his head. "No… she didn't feel like she felt safe. It was more like… it was too close to the surface, and the churn from the Link just brought it all up."

"Well… great, so much for that little ego boost…" Ukyou sighed and looked down at the redhead sleeping in her arms. She could see the dark circles under her eyes now, how her face seemed drawn and tired. She ran her fingers through Ranma's hair, frowning as she tried to make sense of what she was getting from the girl's sleeping mind. "It's… not like I thought it'd be."
"What isn't?"

"The Link. And… Ranma, I guess?" She frowned. "I… guess I just never saw the cracks before but they seem so painfully obvious right now." She curled her arms around the redhead, able to 'hear' her sleeping mind even with her eyes closed. "Ranchan was always indestructible. He was always the unbeatable hero to me. And now here she is… fragile and coming apart and it was all there but I just never saw it." She looked up at Ryouga, searching his eyes. "Was… was it always like this?"

"It's… gotten worse, but…" he sighed heavily. "It was a shock to me, too. For a bit, when I first woke up after the shi shi hokodan when the Link opened up like this, I actually thought she was a different person. I kinda still do, actually… She's not the person I thought she was."

Ukyou looked back down at the redhead, lost in thought as that concept rattled about in her head. Did I fall in love with Ranchan under false pretenses? She brushed a strand of red hair tenderly from the girl's face. Maybe…? Maybe it doesn't matter. I love her NOW after seeing more than maybe anyone else has of her. I guess that's what's important, right? But…

"Ryouga… Why doesn't she feel like… why…" Ukyou struggled for the words for things that didn't have words. "You've got more experience with this, seeing inside Nabiki's head too… Is… does Ranma…?"

"Why does Ranma not feel like a guy, right?" Ryouga asked.

"Yeah…" Ukyou said.

"It's there. But…" Ryouga used his free hand to touch Ranma's cheek, holding it there as he closed his eyes, 'listening'. "It's… I dunno. When all this started, Ranma was… well, almost in balance, I guess. For a day or two she swung hard to the male side, but after that…" He sighed and removed his hand. "I thought it was me at first, but… " He shook his head. "I don't know what's causing it."

"Rebellion, maybe?" Ukyou suggested. "If… if she's had these two sides to herself for so long, and had to repress one side for her whole life because of her father's demands to be a 'man amongst men', and now finally she's letting go of that… maybe…?"

Ryouga's expression darkened, his brow knit. She could feel a wave of something dark and cold from him… regret or guilt, maybe?

"Ryouga, I know… I mean… I get that part of you must be happy about that, deep down. That's the side you… well, I won't say the word if you're not ready to, but it's obvious to anyone but Ranma… and I know you're probably tearing yourself apart with guilt because that's the kind of guy you are, but…"

"That's not it," Ryouga said, cutting her off.

Ukyou blinked, but didn't protest. She had felt… sincerity in those words.

"I'm scared I'm going to lose my friend," Ryouga said. "Ranma was… You of all people should understand… he was my only friend. The only one who understood… the only one who cared if I showed up to school, or made it home afterwards. He…" His voice got thick with emotion. "... He waited three days for me… just because it was important to me, and… and I was so mad when I finally caught up with him I just blamed him for everything. And… he let me!"

Ukyou's eyes widened. She had not expected this.

"He trusted me. With his curse, with his back… with Akane… And I did nothing but throw it back in his face." He clenched his fist. "And… and now that I've finally realized it… now that I've finally got all these things to say to him… he's not there. In his place is this… this fragile, terrified girl. And she's..." He trailed off, his expression softening as he looked down.

"She's everything… Even if I can't tell her that." He sniffed, tears gathering in his eyes as his gaze rested on the sleeping redhead. "And I want her to stay. I want her to stay more than anything. But… I'm terrified that I'll be trading my friend for her. I'm terrified I might be okay with that, if it came down to it. Every time I Link with Ranma, there's less of him in there, and more of her. It's like he's… he's giving up."

"Ryouga… are you saying you think Ranma is… is going fully female?" Ukyou asked softly.

"I don't know," He shook his head. "Maybe it's just me, but… I haven't even seen Ranma as a guy since this all began. I thought… I thought maybe Nabiki would notice something, so I wouldn't have to…"

"Ryouga… listen to me." Ukyou reached up and touched his face with her hand and forced him to look at her. "As someone who knows a hell of a lot more about what Ranma is going through because she's gone through it herself, let me be clear, okay? Your friend? She's right there. As much as Ranma 'wobbles'? It's still Ranma. And… yeah, now that the pressure to always be fronting manliness is off, that's going to change that balance and yes, everything that's going on with her now is going to shift stuff the other way for a while. But eventually she will find the balance point that is hers, no matter what you or I or her parents or Himura or anyone else does. But wherever that point lands, she is still Ranma. She is still the guy who is your best friend… and she is still the girl that you love, and those things are one and the same. You need to figure out that it doesn't matter if Ranma shows up tomorrow as a guy, or if she never changes back again."

Ryouga closed his eyes and slumped back onto the couch. "Yeah… but…"

"But what?" Ukyou demanded. "You're not okay with being in love with a guy? You think it was any easier for any of us? The curse works both ways, Ryouga."

Ryouga cracked an eye open. "Hit me if you want, but I know it wasn't as hard for you."

Ukyou blushed then looked away. "Alright, fine. Maybe I was a little more open to the idea. But what about Akane? She was a bundle of issues around it all. She had to deal with being in denial about her own preferences, meeting a girl she fell for hard enough at first sight that it almost got past that denial, then finding out he was actually a guy."

"Yeah… thanks for reminding me… I kind of have my own issues around Akane…" Ryouga muttered.

"I know that more than anyone, sugar. I'm the one you told about all of them, remember?" Ukyou poked him in the chest. "And the same advice applies. You need to tell Ranma how you feel. And tell Akane how you still feel, even if you know she doesn't feel the same way."

"You can't be serious…" Ryouga gaped at her.

"You don't think she's going to find out sooner rather than later? We're going to be adding her to the Link too, you know!" She poked him again.

"It… it doesn't work that way! I mean… I mean…" His eyes flicked to Ranma.

"That's because you two idiots are in denial," Ukyou replied. "Look, I'm not saying you need to give either of them a declaration of undying love, but… Regardless of what you do… even if your future is with Akari… you need to get this out of your system before it drives you crazy. You need some closure on this, and I'm pretty sure they do too."

"But… but what if…" Ryouga stuttered, struggling for the words.

"What if they shoot you down?" Ukyou supplied helpfully. "Akane already knows you were in love with her. I don't think finding out you still have feelings will be a big shock to her. Just… keep in mind that things will never go anywhere with her. She's… just not wired that way. And Ranma… Ranma will probably be insensitive and say something she doesn't mean and stomp over your heart without really meaning to." She smiled a bit at him. "Then you come see me, we talk it out, and we figure out what to do next."

Ryouga was silent for a moment.

"What if Ranma doesn't shoot me down?" he asked, his voice low, almost timid.

"What if she doesn't?" Ukyou asked, quietly curious.

Ryouga gave her an incredulous look. "How can you be calm about… about…" He swiped his hand through his hair in frustration. "We're talking about your fiance!"

"Because freaking out doesn't fix anything and it doesn't make all of this go away? Plus, I really do wanna know - what would you do next if Ranma felt the same way about you?" Ukyou said evenly.

"That's the problem. There is no 'next' to that!" Ryouga insisted.

"Yes there is," Ukyou prodded him none too gently. "C'mon… hypothetical. Say me and the other fiancees weren't in the picture."

Ryouga sighed heavily. He closed his eyes and Ukyou could sense the emotional churn going on. He finally opened his eyes and reached out tentatively to mimic Ukyou as he ran his fingers through Ranma's hair.

"I don't know," he said at last. "I can't even picture it."

"Even if she was a regular girl?" Ukyou asked, raising an eyebrow.

Ryouga chuckled dryly. "Yeah... Even then. He was quiet a moment, his expression growing thoughtful. "I… keep having dreams about it, I think. I don't remember them very well, and I get the feeling they don't make a lot of sense. Like I'm trying to work that out. Like… I can't reconcile the idea of us… y'know… together."

Ukyou sighed sympathetically. You really are a mess over this, aren't you Ryouga?" All right… Then you tell her, and then maybe you, me'n Shampoo go out and get you good and drunk, and then figure things out after we sober up, huh?"

He covered his eyes with his hand. "Ukyou, that's an incredibly stupid idea… remember what happened the last time we got drunk?"

"Hey! I'm trying to help and be supportive here, jackass!" Ukyou shot back, her pride wounded. "Look, fair enough deciding to get drunk then walk you home was probably not the best plan, but… I dunno, this time we'll set you up a cot or something in the storeroom to crash on. You need a healthier outlet for when you get all emotional."
"Your 'healthier outlet' is alcohol."

"Yours is blowing yourself up!"

"It… I don't normally blow myself up when I do that!" Ryoga huffed.

"Yeah, just everything else around you!" Ukyou growled.

"It's a technique for mining! It's supposed to be good at making holes in things!"

"That's why it's bad for stress relief!"

They glared at each other over Ranma's head. There was a moment of deadly seriousness… then both of them broke down into fits of giggling.

"This is so stupid…" Ukyou finally managed to gasp, letting her head flop back down against his shoulder.

"It is stupid," Ryoga agreed.

"It's kind of hard to keep up a proper level of outrage for a fight when you're tired and cuddling with someone," Ukyou continued. She noticed him stiffen and sighed, giving him an exasperated look. "Oh stop. We've been over this. You're fine, Ryoga. I trust you to be a gentleman."

Ryouga tried to force himself to relax, finally releasing a frustrated sigh of his own. "This isn't easy, y'know… This is awkward as hell, actually. How am I supposed to get any sleep?"

"You've slept in more uncomfortable situations I'm sure," Ukyou yawned. "Tell you what. If it helps, you can be the older sibling tonight. Focus all that nervous energy on keeping your little sister and your wife warm an' safe, 'kay?" She hugged Ranma's sleeping form a little tighter to herself and let her eyes close.

"She's not my…! That's the mental image you want me to sleep on?!!" Ryoga squawked in protest, but the sound of his voice was already fading from Ukyou's tired perceptions as she surrendered to sleep.

000 (Chapter 27 End)

(I apologize for how long it's taking to get chapters out. I've been hit with the winter blahs, which makes writing tough, and my editor is having to deal with a massive move and so doesn't have the time to keep the cattle prod properly charged.

I think I've fixed the issues with the brackets around English speech, and fixed it in Chapter 26. doesn't like arrow brackets apparently, but square brackets seem to be okay.

I've got Chapter 28 mostly ready to go, so I'll give that a once-over and post it, hopefully later in the week. Then... well, things will be slower because Christmas is poison for writing for me.

Thank you for sticking with me this long!)
Dreams and Reality

(Three years ago)

He was lost.

That wasn't a new thing, of course, but he usually didn't get lost inside a building he was familiar with. The school wasn't that big but, for some reason, he just couldn't find the doors leading outside. He sighed as he opened yet another utility closet - the fifth one in a row.

But now that he thought about it, that mop looked awfully familiar. It could easily be that it was the same closet - five times over.

He glanced out the window, seeing the reddish light as the sun started to set. Everyone else had gone home hours ago. Normally, even when he was feeling confused, he could just follow the crowd out. But today he had gotten saddled with cleaning the chemistry lab and the last class had left it a mess. Some idiot had decided to dump the contents of two beakers together, resulting in an explosion of fizzy, foamy mess which the teacher had assured them wasn't toxic, but still smelled terrible. By the time they had finished, the rest of the students were long gone, and Ryouga's classmates had been eager to go, leaving him in the dust. One wrong turn and he had lost their trail. He had followed their voices for a while, but they had gotten fainter, and finally the school was silent.

Maybe I should just hunker down here for the night, Ryouga thought miserably. But his stomach growled in protest. He wanted nothing more than a hot bath to wash off the filth from cleaning that lab, but right now he wasn't even sure that he could find the showers, much less his own home.

It wasn't like Ranma would have waited, after all.

He stumbled a bit, realizing that in his reverie he had walked into a stairwell going down. Curious, he followed it. It lead to another floor with classrooms and lockers, just like the one he had been on.

"This doesn't look like the basement…" he thought, walking towards a set of large double doors. The light shining in from them was blinding, so he pushed them open and stepped outside.

Outside!

Ryouga blinked, then looked behind him. Was... was I on the wrong floor the entire time?! He looked up at the windows of the second floor. Windows he had been walking past the whole time. How had he not noticed!? He had looked out, contemplating just throwing himself out the window! How had it not registered he was on the second floor when he looked down!?

He closed his eyes tightly and struggled to keep the tears of frustration and shame from coming. It's not fair! Mom and Dad are gone, and I'm sick of being lost all the time! What did I ever do to deserve this!? He drew his hand back to punch the wall, but held himself back, fist trembling. Finally he relaxed and let his arm drop, sighing heavily.

"That's a good idea, man. Last time you did that you got detention for a week."

Ryouga whirled to see the impish face of the pigtailed boy inches from his own. He yelped and stumbled backwards.
"What the hell, Ranma?!" he shouted angrily. "What are you even doing here!"

Ranma blinked. "I said I was gonna walk ya home, doofus! Geez, what're ya yellin' at me for!? You're the one who took forever to meet me!"

"You… waited?" Ryouga boggled at the pigtailed boy.

"Well duh!" Ranma folded his hands behind his head and shrugged. "I gave my word, y'know? A man doesn't go back on a promise like that. That's like… lesson one of bein' a martial artist."

Ryouga scowled, feeling potentially slighted by that last remark. It was easier for him to believe that the pigtailed boy had stuck it out just to show him up rather than any real determination to fulfill a promise. "I know that!" He stuffed his hands in his pockets and shouldered past the other boy. "Let's just go… It's late and I need a bath before bed."

"Sure thing," Ranma said nonchalantly. "Hey, uh… since you're fillin' the furo anyway…"

"Yes, you can have one too. Just… let me do mine first, okay?" He gave the other boy a sideways glance. "And wash your hair this time, wouldja?"

"What's wrong with my hair?" Ranma asked, hand moving to it self-consciously.

"It's always all greasy. It's like you rinsed it in motor oil or something," Ryouga replied gruffly.

"Oh… Uh… that's because of this… this stuff Pops makes me use on it…" Ranma replied, sounding uncharacteristically subdued.

Ryouga raised an eyebrow. "Oh, like medicated shampoo or something?"

"… Something like that," Ranma replied weakly.

Ryouga felt his annoyance flicker, smothered by a wave of self-consciousness over having stumbled on something the normally unflappable boy was embarrassed about. "Yeah… well… make sure you wash your face at least. You've got smudges or something on your cheeks."

"...Those're freckles."

Ryouga blinked, turned and gave the boy's face a closer look.

Ranma blushed and backed up a step. "H-hey, what's the deal?"

"Huh. So they are," Ryouga muttered. He sighed heavily, giving up the notion of remaining mad at his friend. He shrugged and turned, resuming the walk home. "Sorry…"

"No biggie," Ranma replied. "Pops hates 'em… says they're unmanly but… lots of guys have freckles… right?"

"Sure," Ryouga said off-handedly.

"Plus… I'll… I'll probably outgrow 'em, right?" Ranma went on. His voice sounded uncharacteristically subdued.

Ryouga glanced at him. The pigtailed boy was walking with his eyes down, looking at the pavement.

"They're faint. Probably won't be there in a year or two," Ryouga reassured him. He had no idea if that was actually true or not, but it seemed plausible enough.

"Yeah!" Ranma brightened.

Ryouga sighed. He had no idea how someone like Ranma survived. Even the smallest imperfection... at least if it was something he cared about... was always such a huge setback for him. For a guy who was such a beast in a fight, his ego was remarkably fragile at times.

They walked in silence for a few minutes. Ranma's spirits seemed buoyed and oddly, despite getting lost and the knowledge that his curse was slowly but steadily getting worse, Ryouga felt a bit better too. It was nice to know someone was willing to wait for him. Even if it was the most annoying guy in school.

"... So for dinner you up for Chilled Soba tonight?" Ryouga asked. "Still got a bunch of packs to work through before they expire."

"Sounds good!"

000

(Present Day)

Ranma stirred. She felt warm and... safe - which was a new feeling for her. It was wrapped around her like a blanket, along with comforting arms, and the presence of someone familiar... no, more than one someone. The concept of names didn't register yet, but that was okay. They were supposed to be there.

There was that odd sense of surprise realizing she was sleeping. Hadn't she just been doing something? Or was that the dream? It was so hard to tell which was which... not that it mattered. The presences were there in both, so she was content to linger between the two for now. She tried to settle back into the pleasant lassitude of the dream. Where were they? The park, right? Somewhere warm and sunny...

Something kept telling her she needed to wake up, though. A... noise? Noises were bad and she wanted to sleep! "Mnh... U'chan... your turn..." she mumbled.

She felt one of the warm bodies against her stir. "Nuh... Ryo's turn..." Ukyou replied. "Ryo..."

"Nnh?" Ryouga started a little, having been more deeply asleep than they had.

"Sach'ko..." Ukyou mumbled.

"She's beeping..." Ranma added, then snuggled back into the comforting warmth.

"Beeping..." Ryouga said, sounding a bit more awake now. He groaned and shifted a bit, earning a few mumbled protests from the girls. "...Ranma, that's the alarm."

"Then take it away from her... not s'posed to be up yet..." Ranma muttered, frowning as the pleasant dream faded and ebbed, no matter how she tried to hold onto it.

"Morning already...?" Ukyou mumbled, in traitorous acknowledgement of the waking world.

Ranma could feel them both recede from the dream which made clinging to it pointless. Grudgingly, she allowed herself to be pulled from the pleasant drowse, her eyes fluttering open as her mind started to sort out reality from the dream.
She looked up a little and her eyes met Ukyou's. She smiled a little and got a smile in return. Then she glanced up to meet Ryouta's eyes and realized that she was lying partially on top of him with Ukyou. She smiled at him as well, closing her eyes, to see if she could snatch a few more minutes of sleep, since everything seemed alright with...

…and then her mind finished sorting 'Dream' from 'Reality'.

She managed to make it nearly to the other side of the waiting room in one leap, but she stumbled over the table next to the couch and tumbled, crashing in a heap in the corner.

"Ranchan!" Ukyou sat up, quickly extricating herself from the couch and Ryouta.

Ranma peered up at her uncomfortably, currently upside-down as she struggled weakly to right herself. She noticed that Ukyou was still in her school uniform, as was she. For just a moment she felt a sense of relief at the realization that she had been fully clothed the whole time… whatever had happened that resulted in the three of them being on the couch together. Then she remembered she was in a skirt.

"Aaaaugh!" She scrambled to try and right herself and recover her modesty at the same time, but only managed to get more tangled up in the process before Ukyou came over and gently helped her up. Ranma's face was burning by the time the shameful display of klutziness was finally done with.

"Okay, three questions before I go to find a nice, quiet corner where I can curl up and die of shame. First… where are we?" She rubbed her head as she looked around, confused.

"The waiting room in Dr. Tofu's clinic," Ukyou said.

"Okay…" Ranma nodded, looking around again. The lighting was different than she was used to but, now that she was waking up, she recognized it. "Second… Why were we all in bed together?"

"It wasn't a bed…" Ryouta said weakly, looking studiously at the wall next to him.

"You had an… 'episode', I guess? A bad reaction to adding me to the Link," Ukyou said gently. "We think it kicked up the Neko-ken or something and knocked you cold. Doc Tofu told us to stay with you because your ki levels were so low, and doing that had stabilized Nabiki when it happened to her, so… Well…" She glanced at Ryouta and shrugged sheepishly.

"Nothing happened," Ryouta said quickly.

Ranma closed her eyes and sighed in relief. "Okay… so third question is answered; there isn't a baby sleeping in the other room, waiting for us to take her to the park for the day…"

Ryouta's head snapped around and he stared at Ranma, his eyes widening. "I… Y-you mean… Sachiko?"

"We were having a picnic…" Ukyou gasped. "Oh my god! We all had the same dream!" She put her hand on her forehead. "No wonder it seemed so real!" She blinked. "Wait…" She glanced at Ranma, then Ryouta. "Are… is Sachiko… I mean…?"

"She's mine," Ryouta and Ranma said in unison.

Ranma blinked, then glared at Ryouta. "Hey! This was my dream Ryouta!"

"You got the name 'Sachiko' from me, Ranma!" Ryouta growled back. "Remember? You jumped through my window and woke me up because you needed to gush about your date with Ukyou!"
"You gushed about our date?" Ukyou started to smile. "I think that means 'Sachiko' is mine, doesn't it Ranchan?"

"No!" Ryouga protested. "She's…"

"I told you I was her mother and I could use the name if I wanted…!" Ranma protested then trailed off, her eyes widening again as her face paled. "…to…"

Ranma swallowed hard, curling up quickly into a ball. Oh god, I was Sachiko's MOM in the dream! She started rocking slowly as the full impact of that settled in. I dreamed I had a kid and I was the MOTHER and I was OKAY with it until just a second ago and that means… She shuddered as a sudden image of Mikado Sanzenin's face filled her mind's eye. Urk!

There was the sound of footsteps coming down the stairs and a sleepy looking Doctor Tofu peered out from the hallway leading to his small apartment, toothbrush in hand. "Do you three always make so much noise in the morning?"

000

After giving each of them a brief examination and addressing Ryouga's complaints of a stiff neck from sleeping oddly on the couch, Dr. Tofu declared them fit for school. Their uniforms were rumpled and slept in, but there was little they could do about that. Ukyou had, at least, had the presence of mind to remove her jacket and hang it up before they had started but Ryouga's and Ranma's respective uniforms were both wrinkled messes. They cleaned themselves up and made themselves presentable as best they could.

"Nabiki will meet you at school and bring fresh clothes," Doctor Tofu advised them. He provided them a simple breakfast and sent them on their way after reminding them to come back the next day with Shampoo to continue the experiment, and to contact him if there were any new side effects.

Ranma walked ahead of the others, keeping to herself. Her back was hunched, her fists were clenched and she was practically stalking towards school. Tentative questions or attempts at conversation from Ryouga or Ukyou had been ignored. It was fairly obvious to Ryouga that Ranma was pissed, but he wasn't exactly sure why.

Not that there was a shortage of things that it could be, given the mess that had been their morning.

"Are you gonna talk to us, sugar?" Ukyou asked timidly, finally broaching the subject as they approached the school gates.

"Nope," Ranma said curtly.

"Look, Ranma…" Ryouga sighed. "We're sorry. I'm sorry. The whole Link thing has turned into a mess and I know that anything that triggers the Neko-ken is bad, and I realize that it wasn't exactly the most reassuring way to wake up…"

Ranma whirled on them. Her eyes were flashing with anger. "That's not it! I'm not mad about any of that!"

"I… then what did we do, Ranchan?" Ukyou asked, attempting to placate the furious redhead.

"One of you got me pregnant!"

It was important to note that, at this time of day, the streets were far from empty. Furinkan students were arriving from all directions, milling around the school gates as they waited for friends to arrive or were just making their ways inside. Ranma's declaration was clearly audible to all of them.

And that included a knot of familiar individuals who were also just arriving; Sayuri, Yuka, Rin, Riko, Hiroshi, Daisuke, Nabiki, Shampoo… and Akane.

The silence that descended across the entire block was a like a physical thing. Even the birds stopped singing for the moment.

From Ranma's expression, she didn't need to see that Akane was behind her. The sudden shift from anger to fear told Ryoga she knew exactly who had just overheard.

For his part, Ryoga had never seen Akane's aura flare quite that brightly before.

"Oh… Hi Akane…" Ukyou said weakly, her eyebrow twitching as she tried to force a smile.

Akane's fists were clenched and her eyes were hidden behind her bangs. Her aura crackled around her like a physical thing. The rest of the group were standing behind her (well behind her) and staring at Ryoga, Ukyou and Ranma with wide eyes.

Hushed whispers were starting all around them as a crowd started to gather.

"Did you hear that?!"

"I didn't even know that was POSSIBLE for Ranma!"

"'Course it is, she's gone full girl, didn't you hear?"

"That was just a rumor!"

"When was the last time you saw her as a guy, huh?"

"But a BABY? At HER age?"

"Wait, how would UKYOU be the father?!"

"Toldja dude, she's TOTALLY got a curse! No WAY a girl could pull off looking that much like a guy!"

Ranma turned, slowly, stiffly and haltingly, as though her joints were all very rusty hinges. The 'creak' was almost audible.

"Umm… Hi, 'Kane…" Ranma said weakly. "L-look, I can explain…"

Akane's aura flickered, and the concrete under her feet suddenly cracked with an audible pop.

"You have five minutes to explain. To Nabiki. And then for her to explain to me why any of you get to live," Akane said tightly.

Ranma looked over at Nabiki who was currently leaning against the wall, coughing. The wet, brown stain on the wall and the coffee cup in her hand suggested that Nabiki was trying to recover from the attempted aspiration of a hot, caffeinated beverage. She glanced back to Akane and chuckled nervously. "Okay… can we just give Nabiki a minute to…?"

"Four minutes," Akane replied.
"Look, Akane, it's not…" Ukyou started.

"Three minutes," Akane snarled.

"Shut up!" Ranma hissed at Ukyou and Ryoga, then gave Akane a nervous smile and skirted around her to run over to Nabiki, who was still coughing.

"Okay, not much time…" Ranma said, putting a hand on Nabiki's shoulder. "I had a dream where I had a kid and either Ryoga or Ukyou was the father - I'm not sure which - and we were linked at the time, so they had the dream too and I'm mad at both of them because… because… reasons."

Nabiki coughed again, nodded and patted Ranma's shoulder. She handed Ranma her half empty coffee cup and walked over to her little sister.

Akane gave her an expectant look. "One minute," she said.

Nabiki nodded, cleared her throat, then thumped her chest. "Whew! That stuff burns when it goes down the wrong pipe! Okay, short version? Nobody is pregnant, nobody slept with anyone else, and all three of them are idiots."

"And?" Akane folded her arms and raised an eyebrow expectantly. Her aura flickered and dimmed.

"And try not to break anything. Ranma does have a game after school today." She shrugged, then called nonchalantly over her shoulder. "Ranma, could you be a dear and toss that for me? Thanks!"

Ryouga's eyes widened as Akane's aura flared back to full intensity while Nabiki casually (but quickly) retreated to the safety of the school gates. "Awww, crap…"

000

"This is all your fault, Ranma!"

The cry was a familiar one to the small group standing out in the hall with water buckets. Ranma, Ukyou and, to a lesser degree, Ryoga all showed signs having been thoroughly and freshly pummeled and Akane was standing a few feet further down the hall and glaring balefully at them.

"Why is it always my fault?!" Ranma groused. The water bucket sat balanced on her head and her arms were folded as she sulked.

"You don't just blurt out something like that at school, you idiot!" Akane shot back. Her gaze swivelled to Ryoga and Ukyou. "And you two! Shame on you for taking advantage of Ranma like that!"

"Taking advantage…!?!" Ryouga sputtered, taken aback. "It was a dream!"

"It doesn't matter! Ranma was in a vulnerable emotional state, and you both should have more self control than to seduce her like that!" Akane asserted, raising her chin haughtily.

"Seduce…!? We were having a picnic!" Ryouga protested.

"So you got Ranma pregnant in a public park!?!" Akane squawked, outraged.

There was more audible murmuring from the classroom.

"No! I mean, Sachiko was already born by this point…!"
"So this had been going on for nine months or more?!"

Ukyou leaned back against the wall and folded her hands behind her head. "Actually… I would totally have seduced Ranchan in the park."

"So you were the one who did it!" Ranma cut in, shooting Ukyou an accusing look.

"Well I don't remember if I got to dream that part, but that's how I'd do it," Ukyou waggled her eyebrows. "But Sachiko is totally my kid."

"She's not…! How would that even work!?" Ryoga protested, rubbing his temples.

"Instant Nannichuan is a thing, sugar," Ukyou shot him a wink.

"So you did seduce Ranma!" Akane said, levelling an accusing finger at Ryoga.

"What!? No! I never…!"

"But you're insisting that Sachiko is yours!"

"Well, yes, but that's just because…!"

"Do you need someone to explain how this whole babymaking thing works, sugar?" Ukyou teased.

"Arrrgh!" Ryoga pulled at his hair.

"I think you're just miffed because I got your wife pregnant!" Ukyou crowed, pinching his cheek. "Score one for the older sibling!"

"Wife"?

Ukyou and Ryoga froze. It was their turn to make slow, halting turns to look at Akane.

"Ooops…" Ukyou murmured.

"'Ooops?'" Ryoga hissed at her.

"Explain. Now," Akane said tightly, folding her arms across her chest.

"W-e-ell… remember when Ranma had to pretend to be Ryoga's fiancee to get him out of the Hospital?" Ukyou said quickly. "Turns out the hospital 'helpfully' listed them as Common Law spouses so they could release Ryoga's medical info to Ranma. So legally they're now kinda considered…"

"It's not a real marriage!" Ryoga said quickly.

"It's just… for tax purposes?" Ukyou added.

"We just found out last night! We weren't keeping anything from you, we just wanted to discuss it with Nabiki first to see how serious this really is!" Ryoga finished desperately, noticing the battle aura was back.

"I see," Akane said, her eyes narrowed. "Can I ask a question? How did you three stay linked all night?"

Ryoga felt the blood drain from his face. His eye twitched as his brain realized the situation was lost, and all intelligent thought fled for the hills to wait out the impending apocalypse.

"Uhh… well… you see…" Ukyou said nervously.

"Seems to me it'd be hard to keep up holding hands in your sleep all night, wouldn't it?" Akane asked, taking a step forward, casually snatching up the handles of the two water buckets at her feet and lifting them up. "You'd roll over, twist and turn… even if you bound your hands together I doubt it'd work. But you three stayed linked long enough to share a dream all night." She stopped, her dark brown eyes hard as she looked over at each of them in turn. "So, I'm going to ask this once, and I hope I've made it clear that I'm not stupid. How did you stay linked all night?"

Ukyou winced and closed her eyes, taking a deep breath. "Ranma passed out after the link was first made. Her ki levels were low, so Doc Tofu wanted us to stay linked as long as possible to keep her from bottoming out. She didn't get to have a say in it, so don't get mad at her! We… staked out the couch in Doc Tofu's waiting room and… slept on that couch together with Ranma between us."

"Clothes on!" Ryoga added desperately.

"God yes, clothes were on. Look how rumpled everything is!" Ukyou gestured at herself.

Both of them started laughing nervously as Akane resumed stalking towards them.

"Is that true, Ranma?" Akane asked the redhead with that same eerie, disconcerting calm.

Ranma just covered her face with her hand and sighed. "As far as I know? I mean after the Link went haywire I kind of had a minor meltdown when I found myself in bed with these two."

Akane nodded, then lifted up the buckets, one balanced on each hand. "Thank you for being honest," she said to Ukyou and Ryoga.

"Uh… No problem Akane?" Ryoga said weakly.

"If you had been lying to me, I would have beaten you both to death with these buckets," Akane said with the same eerily calm menace.

"Aheh… No need for that, right 'Kane?" Ukyou said nervously, her eyes flicking towards the nearest escape route.

"Of course not," Akane said. She suddenly broke out into a sweet smile.

Then tipped the buckets over each of their heads.

Ryoga's change was immediate; he dropped to the floor in a pile of wet clothing, his whole world going dark as the bucket covered him entirely. He could hear Ukyou yelp as she, too, was drenched with cold water.

The bucket tipped up just enough for him to see Akane crouched in front of it, glaring at him. "Now. If you sleep with either of my fiancées again, regardless of the circumstances, I am going to use you to practise making pork okonomiyaki." She dropped the bucket back into place, plunging him once more into darkness.

"And you!" Akane said, her tone getting less cold, more of the familiar rage seeping into it as she whirled on Ukyou. "Since you seem to like sleeping on couches so much, you can just sleep on your own! Alone!"
There was the sound of footsteps, and a startled yelp from Ranma as apparently Akane grabbed her hand and dragged her along as she stalked off to wherever she was going to vent the rest of her anger.

Ryouga huddled down in the wet pile of clothes, shivering, and not from the damp or cold.

The bucket was lifted, the light momentarily blinding him. Ukyou crouched in front of him, soaking wet herself, as she set aside his bucket.

"Well… that went better than I expected…" Ukyou muttered, scooping him and his clothes up in her arms.

000

Akane didn't say a word to Ranma as she dragged her along. The redhead didn't resist after a few squawks of protest, and just followed along in meek silence. Akane led her up a few floors and to the roof. After the incident with Kuno, no one was supposed to be up there - her least of all, but Akane didn't really care at the moment. She stepped out into the fenced off area and closed the heavy fire door behind her, trying not to dwell on the fresh paint on the new door, or the fact that it didn't swing as smoothly, as though the door frame itself had been warped and their best efforts had been unable to fully restore it.

"Ranma…" she started, but was cut off when she felt a pair of arms wrap around her as the redhead hugged her from behind. Akane shuddered. All of the carefully chosen words she had planned to say tumbled out of her head and she slumped as the tensions that she hadn't even realized she'd been carrying in her shoulders and neck were suddenly eased, making her muscles spasm and twitch.

"Sorry, 'Kane…" Ranma said softly. "I ain't got a Link with you yet so I kinda gotta guess, but… I figured if you dragged me out here you probably needed this more'n to pound me flat?" The redhead hooked her chin over Akane's shoulder and gave her a hopeful look.

Akane turned in Ranma's arms and wrapped her own arms around the shorter girl in a fierce hug. She held her for a few minutes, shaking.

"I'm trying to do better," Akane said finally. "I really am."

"I think you did pretty good, all things considered," Ranma replied.

"I'm still so angry, though…" Akane sighed and buried her face in Ranma's hair for a moment. "Even though I know it's not what it all sounded like. Sometimes… sometimes I just feel like everyone is laughing at me and I just… I just want to…" She hugged the redhead a little tighter.

"I can still take a punch, y'know," Ranma murmured in her ear. "I mean, if it'll make you feel better…"

Akane shook her head violently. She relaxed her hold on the redhead a little, but just enough to capture her lips in a deep, needful kiss. She felt Ranma stiffen in surprise, but it only lasted for a second before she relaxed and Akane could feel Ranma's hands start to roam across her back. She smiled as she realized just how much Ranma's tendency to flinch had lessened. She broke the kiss and relaxed her arms a bit, holding her loosely as she looked into those blue eyes. She liked the blush on her cheeks - liked that it was for her - and liked that the sight of it did more to soothe her anger than hitting something or someone ever had. It was… reassuring.

"I think I'm going to start doing that when I get angry instead," Akane said softly. "If… if that's okay?"
Ranma swallowed. She was blushing a little more hotly. "I... I promise not ta use that as an excuse to make you mad..." she smiled, her expression a little timid.

Akane grinned then her expression grew somewhat more seductive. "Well then, maybe I should think of an even better reward for you if you're trying to be good? Like you are right now?"

Ranma swallowed hard.

000

Nabiki was having trouble focusing on the lesson.

Part of it was having hit a dead end on the research front. Hiroshi and Daisuke had done a remarkably good job on their background checks of the various Regulatory Committee members, trying to find out who Himura might have bought in order to get Ranma past the birth record checks, but so far there weren't any solid leads. At least, none that her limited resources could uncover.

She could almost feel that icon on her phone pulsing in her pocket.

Trying to steer her thoughts away from that issue seemed to just land her in yet another quagmire, as in her imagination, she started speculating about what might have happened last night with Ranma, Ryouga and Ukyou. She knew nothing had but, for some reason, her mind kept wandering to pleasant 'what if' scenarios that were gradually drifting into increasingly erotic territory. Ranma and even Ryouga were fair game for such things, but usually Ukyou wasn't a subject of her fantasizing, and she certainly rarely indulged in such things during school, where such vulnerable indulgences were unwise at best. However, she found herself increasingly unable to tear herself away from these thoughts as an odd warmth blossomed in the pit of her belly and she pondered tracking down one or all of the subjects of her daydreams. Right up until the chalk smacked her in the forehead.

"Pay attention, Ms. Tendo! I normally don't have to ask you twice, but for the third time, could you pick up reading at the third paragraph of page 76, please?" The teacher said crossly.

Nabiki swallowed and glanced around the room, cheeks burning from the humiliation and the loss of face as everyone stared at her. She stood, read the passage mechanically, and sat back down quickly afterwards, doing her best to appear like she was paying attention.

She was still having trouble focusing. Getting caught daydreaming in class should have been like a bucket of ice water on her libido, but she could still feel the tug on her thoughts - the tendency to drift down naughty paths and the flush that lingered well beyond her initial embarrassment. This faltering of control was entirely uncharacteristic for her. Even Shampoo was giving her a questioning look.

Her eyes narrowed as she pushed those thoughts away, a growing suspicion in her mind as to the source of her distraction. You wouldn't do it AGAIN, would you, little sister?

000

Ranma felt a bit sheepish as she slipped back into her clothes, mindful that, for the second time, she had become entirely guilty of being every bit the pervert Akane had always accused her of being. And, like the last time, she had done so with Akane, who had been the one to instigate it.

Maybe there was something to that...
I'd better not let this happen too much... she thought with a slight pang of regret. No telling what kind of ammo this would give Himura if anyone found out, never mind the rumours it would start in the school. ALREADY got too much of that going on.

She glanced timidly at Akane, who was fluffing out her hair, a satisfied smile on her face.

She found herself smiling in response, some of those old heart flutters coming back. God, she's beautiful when she smiles...

Akane noticed her looking. A slight blush graced her cheeks, but she kept smiling. "I uh... I'm sorry, Ranma. I got a little carried away again."

Ranma shook her head vigorously. "N-no! I mean, you've got nothing to apologize for! I-I mean..."

Akane giggled and leaned in to silence Ranma with a kiss.

Ranma closed her eyes, relaxed and surrendered to Akane's soft lips, shyly slipping her arms around her again. The dark haired Tendo still had a way of putting her off-balance... she just had much more pleasant ways of expressing it now.

"Still..." Akane said after the brief kiss ended, looking into Ranma's eyes. "I know I've kind of... 'neglected' part of you."

Ranma felt her cheeks burn. "I... uh... I'm pretty sure you've been real thorough, Akane..."

"Baka!" Akane giggled, then bapped the redhead on the top of her head with the flat of her hand. "I meant your male side!"

"O-oh!" Ranma blushed deeper, then ducked her head. "Umm... I thought... I mean, I know there was what happened in the furo, but... You're not really into guys... right?" She chewed on her lower lip, nervous about treading into such newly charted terrain. The landmines that could be lurking...

Akane shrugged. "Well... I mean, not really but..." she smiled, "It's you. And it's not fair to ask you to be something you're not for me just because I prefer it..."

Ranma shook her head. "But Akane... I am this," She gestured to herself. She swallowed nervously, feeling some of that old fear and apprehension that bubbled up whenever she strayed into such territory. "I mean... I'm a guy too, of course... that's just as much me, but..." She took a deep breath. "It's hard to explain. You don't need to do everything with both sides of me to be happy. Just like... Well, you know my problems with Shampoo's curse, right? I gotta work on that some. I know it hurts her that I'm afraid of her, but I don't think she expects me to..." She made a disgusted face.

Akane shuddered. "Let's not get into that, please. I have too much personal experience with that kind of curse problem."

"But that's kinda my point," Ranma pressed. "You don't gotta be that way with me as a guy unless it's good for you, too. I don't... I don't think I'd even like it if you weren't into it, y'know?" She cocked her head. "It's not much different than if I was smelly or sweaty before bed. You'd tell me to go take a shower first for that, right? So... same thing."

Akane's brow furrowed. "Y-yeah, but Nabiki..."

"...Is Nabiki. An' she definitely prefers me as a guy. She's just... she told me once that nobody is one-hundred percent one way or another, right? Like you stick a bunch of straight jocks in prison long enough and stuff happens, even if it wouldn't normally. She's… like a '70-30' kinda girl, I guess?"

"50-50." Akane said, arching an eyebrow and smirking. "She's got you and Shampoo. I think she might be overestimating her preference for boys."

Ranma grinned back. "65-35. She flirts hard with poor Ryo, and I'm pretty sure she means it. She just knows he'd never do anything about it."

"60-40, final offer."

"Deal!"

They both broke out giggling.

Akane sighed and draped her arms over Ranma's shoulders. "Are you sure, Ranma? I mean… I mean I still want to be your wife. I want… Well, I want kids one day." She leaned in a bit closer, touching their foreheads together. "I think I'd still like to try. To see what it's like. Like you said, nobody is 100%. So maybe even if I'm 90-10… well… maybe a bit more than 10% where you're concerned." She winked. "I might enjoy it if I'm in the mood."

Ranma swallowed again. She felt a twinge at the mention of kids, but… not an entirely bad one. She tried to push aside the dream for the moment and focus on what was in front of her. "I-I'd… I'd like that. Whatever makes you happy, Akane."

"So… What about you?" Akane asked.

Ranma felt a cold surge of fear.

Akane held up a hand to forestall a panic. "I'm not trying to start a fight. You don't have to say anything if you're not okay with it. I'm just…" she sighed, "I guess I'm curious. I'm not going to accuse you of sleeping around with Ryouga, I swear."

Ranma closed her eyes and took a deep breath, then released it. "I'm… sorry, 'Kane," she finally replied after a few moments of internal struggle. "It's… that's like the scariest topic possible for me right now."

"That's okay." Akane purred. "But… Just remember, if I don't have to feel guilty about liking girls… you don't have to feel guilty if you happen to like a guy. Right?"

Ranma raised a skeptical eyebrow. "So what was that freakout this morning over the dream all about, then?"

Akane scowled. "I'm a work in progress, okay? Besides… you beat me at way too many girly things as it is. I swear I will never forgive you if you get pregnant before me!"

Lunch could not have come soon enough for Ryouga.

The awkwardness of the morning had been bad enough when some of his most personal and private dreams had become a topic for public discussion.

But then shortly after Akane had dragged Ranma off who who-knew-where, he had begun to get a definite idea of what they were up to - something he recognized due to unfortunate prior experience.

The mental images that came to mind, colored by what he remembered of the sounds from the locker room that day did not help the situation. He had managed by stuffing tissues up his nose until the teacher had noticed and, aghast, had sent him to the nurse's office again (with Ukyou to escort him). Thankfully the bleeding had tapered off by then, but all the feelings that had been stirred through the Link still left him feeling anxious and restless.

I wish I still had some of that waterproof soap, he thought glumly as Ukyou led him back through the school. Then I could go and stick my head under a faucet and run cold water until this goes away.

"Stupid Ryouga…" Ukyou grumbled, arms crossed, her posture slightly hunched as she walked. "Stupid pervert brain… stupid nosebleeds…"

Ryouga raised an eyebrow, then realized there was a blush to Ukyou's cheeks. Oh, that's right. She's part of the Link now, too. She's probably feeling it, but doesn't know what it is.

"It's Ranma and Akane," he said, interrupting her muttered tirade.

"What?!” Ukyou stopped and whirled to glare at him.

"What you're feeling. It's the Link. It started after Akane dragged Ranma off," Ryouga clarified. "It's… not the first time they've done this."

Ukyou blinked, then her eyes widened. "Wait… you mean you can… _every time_ Ranma has…?!" She grabbed him by the collar. "Are you telling me you've been sensing it _every time_ Ranma and I…?!"

"Not _every_ time. Just… I was only in the same building when it happened the one time, so I'm guessing it's a proximity thing," Ryouga said, rubbing the back of his head awkwardly.

"How do you _know_ that's what it is?" Ukyou asked suspiciously.

Ryouga sighed heavily. "Akane and Ranma were in the locker room. I was outside waiting for them and… they weren't quiet."

"You _eavesdropped_ on them!?” Ukyou started to shake him by the throat.

"I… didn't… have… a… choice!" Ryouga managed as the Okonomiyaki chef did her best to throttle him. "They told me to wait!"

Ukyou hesitated. Her grip finally slackened and she backed off, but not before slugging him hard on the shoulder. "Next time try stuffing the tissue in your _ears_, jackass," she muttered, rubbing her hand.

"I tried that. It didn't help," Ryouga replied, jamming his hands into his pockets.

Ukyou looked away, suddenly seeming uncertain. "That… must have sucked actually, huh? I mean… If it was anyone but those two…” She sighed and shook her head. "Geez, Akane really can be an insensitive jerk sometimes."

"Akane is the insensitive one? What about Ranma?" Ryouga asked.
"Don't tell me you're still defending her…?!” Ukyou shot him an annoyed glance.

"I'm not," Ryouga folded his arms. "Just curious is all."

Ukyou pinched the bridge of her nose, closed her eyes and thought for a bit. "It's... well... As much as I had to admit it, Ranma has never, ever been able to say 'no' to Akane - not when she's sincerely wanted something. You think Ranma would let me or Shampoo smack her around the way Akane does? Akane has had Ranma wrapped around her little finger and she didn't even know it for the longest time. It was a part of what made her so frustrating. The worst part is that knowing Akane is totally clueless doesn't help! She does it to me now, too!"

"Trust me, I'm pretty well acquainted with it," Ryouga muttered dryly.

"See? Even after she rips your heart out and stomps on it!" Ukyou gestured in his direction. "Ranma doesn't stand a chance! All she has to do is give you that look with those big brown, soulful eyes and you're doing whatever her heart desires! And right now her heart is apparently making up for a lot of years of being sexually repressed because holy crap they've done it on the school grounds twice now!" She tossed her hands up in the air in exasperation. "Once Shampoo hears about this, it'll be a contest!"

Ryouga winced and pinched his nose closed.

Ukyou gave him a sympathetic look. "Sorry, sugar. I'll... uhh... I'll try and get a warning to you if I catch wind of them starting this sort of thing up."

"I'm a little surprised you're not joining in," Ryouga replied. At the nasty glare she shot him he held up a hand to ward her off. "I mean...! You usually kinda get roped into going along with whatever craziness the rest of them get up to, even before the whole fiancee agreement."

Ukyou rolled her eyes. "Yeah? Well I also am a bit more practical and level-headed than those three, and that practicality tells me that the Principal has this place wired up with more bugs and cameras than a prison. Getting a nooner isn't exactly worth the risk of it ending up on tape, especially with Little Ms. Blackmail running the show nowadays."

"I... hadn't thought of that..." Ryouga replied, brow furrowing as he started to consider the implications.

"Yeah, and neither has Akane, which is why, when she and Ranma pop their heads up again, I'm going to drag her off for a little chat," Ukyou said as she led him to the double doors leading outside.

"Just Akane? Not both of them?" Ryouga asked.

"As I said, even if Ranma was aware, she'd just cave when Akane said 'Pretty please, Ranma?'" Ukyou huffed, managing a fairly respectable imitation of Akane's pleading tone. "You can talk to her about it. Or Nabiki will, but I figure she deserves a gentler wake up call than the one I'm in the mood to give Akane."

"Seems like a double standard to me," Ryouga said. At her sharp look he stopped and held up his hands. "I'm just saying!"

"Odd that you're arguing against Ranma for once. Lately you've been pretty staunchly on her side."

Ukyou folded her arms and gave him a skeptical look.

"Ranma also hates being coddled or getting special treatment," Ryouga pointed out. "And she's super protective of Akane. She's gonna balk if she thinks you're picking on Akane and letting her off the hook."

Ukyou sighed in frustration. "I know, you're right. I just... I don't think talking to them together will work very well. I know Akane will listen to me, and I've gotten pretty good at getting her to listen even when it's stuff she doesn't want to hear. And you..." She poked Ryouga in the chest. "Like it or not, Ranma talks about stuff with you that she won't talk about with any of us. So if there's anything she's not okay about she'll probably tell you about it before she tells any of us."

"Since when did I get the job of being Ranma's confidante?" Ryouga asked, mostly to himself.

"Since you became her best friend?" Ukyou replied.

"You're her best friend."

Ukyou sighed and shook her head. "I'm her fiancee. I learned the hard way over this past year that you can't have both. I'm a lot of things with Ranchan... but a trusted outsider isn't one of them. That kind of trust doesn't survive the first kiss. Once there's that... investment in the other person, it changes things, for better or worse."

She cocked her head, and gave him a searching look. "Keep that in mind, okay?"

Ryouga gave her a confused look. "Okay? But... why?"

"Just do, all right?" Ukyou patted him on the shoulder. "Now... help me think of baby names."

Ryouga blinked. "Baby names...?"

"Yeah," Ukyou grinned. "I figured it wasn't fair of me to steal 'Sachiko' from you, and since I'm obviously the father of Ranma's baby..."

Ryouga didn't hear the rest over the smack of his hand hitting his own face.

He was spared that awkward conversation by the arrival of another, as the door swung open and Ranma and Akane stepped out. Akane was wearing the biggest grin Ryouga had seen on her face since she managed to get a hit in on Ranma during sparring.

"Oh! Akane!" Ukyou said brightly. She hopped over and snatched up Akane's arm. "Ranma, you don't mind if I borrow our mutual fiancee for a moment, do you? Didn't think so! Keep Ryouga company for me! Thanks! Bye!"

"Wait, Ukyou, what are youuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuu-!" Akane's question became a yelp as the okonomiyaki chef dragged her bodily off around the corner of the building.

"What was that all about?" Ranma asked, frowning after the two.

Ryouga sighed. "Ranma... you remember what happened in the locker room with you and Akane, right?"

Ranma blinked, then turned beet red. "W-wait, why you bringing that up...?!"

"You remember how you could feel when I was starting to lose it when all of my fiancees showed up, even though you weren't touching me?" Ryouga added, folding his arms and looking at her evenly, waiting for her to catch on.
It didn't take long. The blush drained from her face, as well as all other color. "Oh…"

"I think it's actually worse now that Ukyou is part of the Link… like it made it stronger," Ryouga said thoughtfully. "But… That's why Ukyou is dragging Akane off to have a chat. She figures it was her idea."

Ranma glanced in the direction the two had gone, and looked about ready to follow. "That's…!"

Ryouga reached out and caught her arm to stop her. "Look, let Ukyou handle this. Like it or not, she's better at handling Akane and giving her bad news than you are."

Ranma whirlèd, jerkèd her arm free and glared at him. "Since when did you end up my relationship manager, huh? I already got Nabiki doing that. I don't need it from you, too!"

"Somebody has to watch out for you!" Ryouga shot back. "It's not like you'll ever actually ask for help if you really need it! You said yourself that you've almost blown this too many times to count! Maybe you should start actually listening to other people for once, huh?!

"And you're saying I should start by listening to the guy who used to express his concern for my well being with the phrase 'Ranma Saotome, prepare to die'?" Ranma asked sourly.

"I…" Ryouga trailed off, feeling an unexpected pang of guilt at that. Part of him had thought they were past all of that. Some uncharitable part of him pointed out it was really his fault in the first place. "I… Fine. You've made your point." He turned away, jamming his hands in his pockets.

He felt a touch on his arm, just a flicker of the Link, a brief flash of concern. He turned, blinking in surprise at Ranma's worried expression.

Ranma blushed and looked away immediately, as if she had been caught at something. "I… Okay, sorry… that… that was low. You don't do that anymore and it's not fair for me to keep using it."

Ryouga felt an odd heat in his own face, and he realized it was because Ranma had just apologized to him. Ranma never apologized… unless it was to Akane. "It's…" He closed his eyes and took a deep breath. "No… it's cool. It's my own damn fault. It's not like I ever really wanted you dead, anyway."

"Oh really? Coulda fooled me…" Ranma sniffèd.

"Even after all the times I could have done it, but didn't?" Ryouga asked, his jaw tightening as he felt the prickles of hurt.

"Well… I mean yeah you could have, but… I dunno… I always figured you didn't because it would be dishonorable or something…" Ranma replied weakly.

Ryouga shook his head. "I just… I just wanted you to respect me," he said finally. "I guess in the messed up way our friendship always worked the only way I thought I could do that was by being a threat. That's why I was always down your throat about Akane, too. I… I never really figured I had a chance with her, but… I want you to at least respect her." He huffed and looked away from her. "Sometimes it feels like there's nothing you do respect, and that's probably the most frustrating thing of all."

"Izzat why you were always angry at me all the time? You don't think I respect you?" Ranma asked.

"Well… you don't, do you?" Ryouga glanced sidelong at her, raising an eyebrow. "You don't hate
"That's not true!" Ranma glared at him. "I… look." She hopped up onto the railing of the landing, crouching down and wrapping her arms around her knees, perched like a bird. "I'm not… I know I'm not real good at showing it. Respect… wasn't really something I learned a lot about growing up. Pops taught me you only respected someone who was strong, an' only then until you proved you were stronger. That was why he was always harping on how I needed to show him 'respect.'"

She sighed. "Thing was, when I finally did beat him… I found out that deal only worked one-way. Nabiki has been teaching me that my whole idea of 'respect' is kinda messed up."

"That's putting it mildly," Ryouga said, giving her a skeptical look.

"So… I get where you're coming from. I ain't ever shown you respect. But… that was 'cuz I didn't know how." She looked him in the eyes. "I always did respect you… In a sense. I trusted you. I do trust you. That's… that's about as close as I ever got to really respecting someone. I know that ain't the same, but…" She trailed off, her gaze dropping. "I guess I'm trying to say I'm sorry. For not showing you the respect you deserved."

Ryouga was silent for a moment, not entirely sure how to respond to that, or even properly process it. He walked over to the steps next to the railing she was perched on and sat down. He chuckled dryly.

"Fine. Just don't get sappy on me," he said with a small grin.

She grinned back and the tension dissolved, the easier sense of camaraderie settling into its place.

"That's better," Ryouga thought, somewhat bemused that some things really hadn't changed much between them since middle school. Now that the feud had ended a lot of the old dynamics from those days had started to resurface.

He noticed her fidgeting out of the corner of his eye and glanced up at her. She was looking away from him and showing that restless demeanor that said she wanted to say something but was having trouble finding the words/courage for it.

He kept his mouth shut. Prodding Ranma generally didn't help things along much, and usually just triggered some kind of furious denial that she was trying to say anything at all.

"Umm… Ryo…" Ranma started. "A-about Sachiko…"

"Yeah?" Ryouga replied noncommitally. He felt a slight sinking sensation in his gut. Damnit, I thought we had gotten away from this…

"In your dream… not the one last night but… but the first one… well, the one you had when I came in through your bedroom window and woke you up… I… I guess you could have dreamed about her before that…. Did you dream about her before that?" Ranma started to slip into babbling.

Ryouga reached up and lightly tapped her on the knee with his fist. "Oi, ask your question, Saotome!"

She glared at him. "I'm getting to it, ya jerk!" She closed her eyes and took a deep breath. "The first time you had a dream about Sachiko… who was her Mom?"

"I… urk…" Ryouga froze up. The lie would be easy. It would get him out of trouble. Heck, it would even make more sense than the truth. All he needed to do was open his mouth and say Akari's name. It was an easy name to say. He liked saying her name. He even liked the idea of her in that scenario. It was easy to imagine her as his future wife and as the mother of his children.

But it wasn't the truth. At looking up at Ranma's searching blue eyes, he couldn't bring himself to tell them the lie right away. That moment's hesitation gave Ranma her answer.

"It was me… wasn't it?" Ranma asked softly.

"I..." Ryouga struggled to find some sort of explanation or excuse. It didn't help that all he remembered of the dream itself was just fragments. "I mean it wasn't..." He sighed heavily, slumping. "Just... don't read too much into it."

He heard her move, but didn't look up, figuring she was probably going to walk off now. To his surprise, he felt a presence next to him, and the sense of her body heat as she sat on the steps next to him. He shot her a surprised look.

She was studying the concrete at their feet. "It's not a big deal that you dreamed about me, if that's what you're panicking about," she said, her voice quiet. "It's not like you got control over it. Heck, I had a few dreams about Kuno after he said he was in love with me." She shuddered involuntarily.

"Mine... wasn't exactly a nightmare, though..." Ryouga admitted tentatively. That felt like a dangerous admission to him, edging closer to admitting things.

"I... I get that," Ranma twiddled her thumbs. "I mean God knows with all the skimpy outfits I've paraded around Nerima in, I..." She sighed. "That's not the point, okay? It's... why dream of me as a mother?"

Ryouga blinked, giving her a confused look. "What do you mean?"

Ranma closed her eyes tightly. "I can see fantasizing about me, okay?" she said quickly. "I mean... you find me... my girl side... attractive, so... I get it. It ain't news. I mean, you straight up told me I was cute when you first found out about the curse, and I've used it pretty mercilessly against you with all my stupid disguises." She shuddered and shook her head. "B-but... but... I mean, why dream of me as a mother?"

"What, you weren't planning on having kids one day?" Ryouga asked lightly, intentionally ignoring the context.

"Not like this!" Ranma looked up at him. Her eyes were slightly wild, pools of conflicted emotion. "Not-not... not someone who's actually responsible for a kid!" She pulled her legs up to her chest again, hugging them as she resumed staring at the concrete. "I mean... look at me. I'm a pile of issues! I can barely take care of myself, much less... much less..." She squeezed her eyes shut. "Moms are supposed to be good at taking care of their kids, right?"

"I like to think Dads are too," Ryouga replied. "They're not always, obviously..."

Ranma snorted. "Yeah. Uh huh. I got a double helping of that 'not always', thanks." She rested her chin on her knees. "But... I always figured if I had kids, whoever I married wouldn't be dumb enough to leave me alone with the kid, much less drag 'em off for fourteen years wandering Asia. But... but a Mom? A Mom's... she's gotta..." She blushed and uncurled a bit, putting her hand on her belly. "She's gotta be there for the kid right from the start. She's all the kid's got. That's like... Kasumi level stuff. Any of the girls... as rough as they get, they've all had moments, y'know? Where you can see it in 'em. 'Specially Akane... but me?" she trailed off.

"Then why worry about it?" Ryouga asked. "It's not like you're in any extreme danger of ending up..."
a mother, right?"

"But it's not like I can't!" Ranma shot back, glaring at him. Her hand moved, her arm curling almost protectively around her midsection. "I-I mean… all the parts are there!" She shuddered again and quickly pulled her knees back up. "Nevermind! It's stupid. This is all stupid!"

Ryouga's eyes widened as he caught a flicker of understanding. "You… want to be a mother."

"No!" Ranma protested hotly, but she couldn't meet his eyes. She looked away, then curled a little tighter. "I… I mean… not… not now. Even thinking 'bout kids either way would be dumb now… b-but…" She shook her head. "I should be able to just laugh this idea off as… as stupid! Or… or at least it should creep me out! B-but…" She rested her head on her knees, chewing her lower lip. "Something keeps dragging me back to it. I can… I can remember what it felt like to… to hold her and…" She swallowed. "This… this is weird, right? I'm being weird. Tell me I'm being weird so I can get over this."

Ryouga folded his own arms, resting them on his knees as he regarded her for a long moment. The answer was even easier this time. It wasn't even technically a lie; she was being weird, as only Ranma could be.

"I think you'd be a good Mom."

She gave him a wide-eyed, almost fearful look.

It was his turn to study the cracks in the concrete. "I mean, you'd wanna do a little growing up first, but… You know better than anyone what growing up without a Mom was like, and what you wished for from your Mom when you finally met her. So… just try and be that."

"But… what if I can't? What if I try, but I screw it up?" Ranma gestured feverishly. "What if I start getting the same stupid ideas my idiot father got when I was born?!"

"You won't." Ryouga gave her a sidelong glance and a grin. "I won't let you."

Ranma blinked.

"What, you thought I was going somewhere, Saotome?" Ryouga arched an eyebrow. "Once we get all this nonsense in our lives sorted out, that I was just gonna walk off into the sunset and not come back?" He chuckled dryly. "Mebbe I woulda actually tried that at one point but… Let's be honest. Fate or Karma or whatever… something keeps dragging me back into your life. So… I'll be around when you have kids, too. And if you think I'm gonna let you slack off with a kid around…"

"I… I get it!" Ranma said nervously, waving him off. She looked away shyly, though she was smiling now. "Umm… thanks, Ryo."

Ryouga shrugged nonchalantly. "It's what friends do… right?"

Ranma smiled and nodded, then scooted a little closer to him. "Yeah…" She relaxed a little, mirroring his pose, her shoulder just lightly touching his. Something about the casual contact was… reassuring to her.

"Just promise me we won't end up like Mr. Tendo and Pops, okay?"

"Fairly certain it's not physically possible for you to get that fat, Ranma."

"Who says I'm going to end up the fat one!?"
"Because you'd look terrible with a mustache."

"Hey! I could pull it off better'n you!"

Nabiki still hadn't managed to shake the 'itchy' feeling from earlier, though now it was just making her irritable. She wanted to track down Ranma and find out if her suspicions were correct, and from there to decide if she was going to get angry about it. She was leaning towards getting angry, to be honest.

As it turned out, though, she didn't need to find Ranma, as someone else had beaten her to the punch. She rounded the corner to find Ukyou confronting a subdued-looking Akane. Ukyou's arms were crossed, her foot was tapping and she generally looked rather annoyed. All of which just confirmed Nabiki's suspicions.

REALLY baby sister? Nabiki sighed heavily, loudly enough to announce her presence, then folded her arms, leaned against the wall and waited for them to notice her.

Akane turned, saw her older sister looking as cross as Ukyou had been, and ducked her head, turning beet red.

"I guess Ukyou already gave you the lecture about the side effects of mixing the Link with irresponsible behaviour at school?" Nabiki asked.

"Does everyone have to know?!" Akane protested stubbornly, adopting one of her typical sulking postures.

"This whole arrangement comes with compromises, baby sister," Nabiki replied.

"I just wanted some time alone with Ranma! Is that so wrong?!" Akane shot back, clenching her fists. "Why am I always last?!"

Nabiki narrowed her eyes. She was in no mood for an Akane 'me-too!' temper tantrum, especially when she had been getting precious little time with Ranma herself. "You really want the honest answer to that, Akane?"

Ukyou held up a hand, giving Nabiki a stern look that surprised the Middle Tendo into silence. She took Akane by the shoulders and turned her to look at her.

"Listen, sugar. I know it's frustrating, especially since it's that potential you've always had finally getting developed that's put you last in line this time," Ukyou said gently. "But you won't always be last, I promise. It's like a recipe right now… you know how some ingredients need to go in at different times because they cook at different speeds? None of them are unimportant, but you have to do it in the right order to make the recipe work. That's kind of what we all are right now. Does that make sense?" She cocked her head, waiting for the youngest Tendo's response.

Akane sighed heavily. "You're right, Ukyou. I just… It's hard sometimes, you know? Especially when you and Ryouga come back joking about having a baby with Ranma."

"That's fair," Ukyou replied, nodding. "I'm sorry. Look, you'll understand better once it's your turn. I was a bit giddy this morning and I wasn't really thinking. And… nobody is mad at you for sneaking off with Ranma, love. It's just the place and the timing were a little inconvenient."

"So… Next time I kidnap Ranma, I should take her further away?" Akane asked, a smile tugging at
"Probably best. Actually, to be safe, just invite me along and I'll tell you for sure when you've gotten us far enough away." Ukyou winked.

Akane smiled and leaned in and gave her a quick kiss on the lips. "I'll keep that in mind. Now… I have a very very awkward apology to make to Ryouga. Excuse me." She stepped around Ukyou and slipped past Nabiki, heading down the hall towards the doors.

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "Nicely defused," she said.

"I get to talk a lot of people down in my restaurant," Ukyou replied. "I'm basically the bartender for the lunchtime crowd. Besides, I kind of understand Akane better than most."

"I've noticed," Nabiki replied. "Thank you. I probably was about to make that whole situation worse. I wasn't in the right frame of mind for this." She sighed and shook her head. "Which I can't afford to be since this sort of thing is supposed to be my job…"

Ukyou walked up to her. "Don't be too hard on yourself, sugar. Everyone has an off day and it's not like that's your only contribution. Besides, you've basically been killing it every other time." She patted Nabiki in the shoulder.

There was a spark at the contact that made them both gasp, like a jolt of static electricity, except it was accompanied by a sudden rush of perception as the Link suddenly opened up between them. Ukyou jerked back her hand reflexively, breaking the connection, then looked at it, confused. "Woah…"

Nabiki steadied herself against the wall. "Well… I guess that answers the question of whether you and I are Linked or not. Though it's usually less… uh… abrupt."

"I think Ranma was talking about this happening," Ukyou said. "We should probably tell her about it." She tentatively extended her hand. "Uhh… test? To make sure."

Nabiki nodded, swallowing and reaching out tentatively to touch Ukyou's fingers with her own, ready to jerk back if there was another jolt. There wasn't. This time the Link simply flowed smoothly into being, and she became aware of the ebb and flow of Ukyou's emotions.

"That is weird…" Ukyou said, blinking a few times. "I mean, I know I just spent all night linked to Ranma and Ryouga… but it's still weird."

Nabiki felt a bit self-conscious. Ranma was one thing… even with Ryouga there was that playful interest… and she was eagerly anticipating being able to peek into Shampoo's emotional landscape. But it was a bit uncomfortable to be sharing such an intimate thing with Ukyou. The girl was a friend, to be sure, but knowing she was seeing her emotions and seeing Ukyou's in turn made Nabiki feel more than a little awkward.

"You okay, sugar?" Ukyou cocked her head. "Your… ummm… I don't even know the right words for it. It got kinda spiky over there."

Nabiki closed her eyes and sighed. You're going to have to deal with this, Nabiki. "I'm feeling self-conscious." she forced herself to say. "Because this is all a bit awkward, because we're not… you and I aren't…"

"'Knocking boots'?" Ukyou asked with a grin.
"Not quite what I was going to say, but… it gets the point across, I guess," Nabiki sighed.

Ukyou nodded, drawing her hand back. "Yeah, I can see that. Sorry. I guess it's kind of like having to strip down in front of a casual acquaintance, huh?"

Nabiki took a deep breath and held her hand back out. "Yes. But we're not casual acquaintances, Ukyou. We're…" She frowned, not sure of the right word. "I don't know just what we are, but this is a factor in our lives now, right? We should probably try and get used to this… this… level of awareness now, before the option to not be in close proximity gets a lot more scarce."

Ukyou regarded Nabiki's hand, then nodded and took it, closing her eyes as the Link flowed once more. "I guess… It's kind of like one those things you need to get accustomed to living with another person?"

"Maybe a tad more intimate, but… yeah," Nabiki replied. She took a minute to 'listen' to Ukyou's emotions. The Chef had a much more stable underpinning than Ranma or Ryouga, though there was definitely a more volatile surface layer to her.

"Is that going to cause us trouble?" Ukyou asked, a look of concentration on her face. "That… things aren't… I dunno, 'even' between us all?"

Nabiki considered her answer before she said anything. She could sense an increase in 'spikes' from Ukyou's emotions, which she assumed were anxiety in some form. Not critical, but this was obviously something Ukyou was concerned about.

Which is good, because I WANT everyone thinking about this. Nabiki closed her eyes. "I think, to borrow Ryouga's term for it, we have to treat this like a family… and to understand that relationships aren't always equal or the same in a family but… it all works out in the end somehow." Nabiki sighed with frustration at her inability to articulate it more clearly. "I think that as long as we are aware there's always going to be ebbs and flows and the occasional disparity, and that the relationships each of us have with every one of the others is going to be unique and it's own 'thing'," she shrugged, "Well, we're probably still doomed, but it won't be from tearing each other apart."

Ukyou snorted. She leaned against the wall beside Nabiki, her hand settling into a less awkward clasp. "Okay, that I can handle. I was a little worried that the Link would… 'push' things in a direction I didn't want things to go."

"In my experience those sorts of fears are kind of silly. If you don't want to go in that direction, then you won't go in that direction," Nabiki said nonchalantly as she could.

"Like how you didn't want to fall for Ranma but did anyway?" Ukyou asked, eyebrow arching.

Nabiki scowled. "That… that was more denial. Why, are you worried about suddenly developing a deep and uncontrollable longing for me?" She raised an eyebrow of her own.

Ukyou blushed and looked away. "N-no! No, it's… I was kinda worried about things getting weird with Ryouga, you know?"

"With Ryouga?" Nabiki frowned, confused. "Okay, aside from the obvious complicated mess that would cause… what would be the big problem with that?"

Ukyou closed her eyes. Nabiki could sense more turmoil in her emotions and kept quiet to let the other girl gather her thoughts.
"Hindsight is 20/20, right?" Ukyou said softly. "Sometimes you get so caught up in chasing after something, you don't realize what you've trampled on to get there. For the longest time I've wanted Ranma to see me... well, romantically. It used to frustrate me how I kept getting 'friendzoned' with him. But at the same time, there was... this sort of easy trust he had with me. And I really valued that. But the more I tried to get closer to him, the more it eroded that trust. I mean... he still trusts me, but... it's all wrapped up with obligations and the physical side of things. I realized afterwards that it had lost that... simplicity. I kinda felt like he had just wanted a 'guy friend.'"

"And you feel guilty for changing that?" Nabiki asked.

Ukyou shook her head. "No... well, yeah, a little, but... it's not like it would have been fair to either of us to pretend things were actually that way between us. As much as he wanted a 'guy friend', that's not what he ever was to me, and trying to be that for him was just tearing me up inside. But," she sighed heavily, "but the stupid thing is? I want a 'guy friend' too. I just didn't want it to be Ranma. And... at some point... that's what me and Ryouga ended up becoming."

"Really? No interest at all?" Nabiki asked playfully.

Ukyou gave her an annoyed look. "Trust me, sugar. With the amount of time we've spent alone together? If something was gonna spark it would have." She chuckled. "He's... he's what I need more than anything else in my life right now, and that's family. I've got plenty of romantic entanglements. And so does he, to be honest." She made a sour face. "Even if some of them are in common."

"So... what does that make us?" Nabiki asked playfully.

Ukyou gave her a bemused look. "I'm still figuring you out, sugar. Currently? Business partners. Though don't think I didn't notice those spikes when I mentioned Ryouga. You're interested in him."

"You don't have a problem with that, do you?" Nabiki asked archly. "Considering your current relationship with my baby sister?"

Ukyou looked surprised. "Not even gonna deny it, huh? Well, I guess 'blunt' is kinda your thing, isn't it? In that case it depends on what you plan to do with it," Ukyou replied. "Even now, I'm still not sure I get you, Nabiki Tendo. I just wanna make sure Ryouga doesn't get hurt, and that's gonna be hard enough with him..." she trailed off, "'Y'know, with him and Ranma."

"If you're worried I'm going to string him along and use him, I won't," Nabiki replied. "It's hard to be blind to the feelings of someone who's emotions can literally knock you to the ground from the other side of the school. Ryouga and the Link are a crash course in empathy. But... ultimately, what I do hinges a lot on him and Ranma. I'm curious what your take on things between them is." She cocked her head. "What do you think? Just 'guy friends'?"

Ukyou sighed heavily. "Dear god, no." She shook her head, unconsciously squeezing Nabiki's hand as more of that dark worry bubbled up. "Before all this Link stuff, he and I used to talk a lot. Not even plotting, just... talking about stuff with someone who didn't have totally competing goals, but kinda understood your situation, you know? Ryouga had two topics: Akane Tendo and Ranma Saotome. Akane was the usual nonspecific mooning and zoning out until I smacked him over the head so, weirdly enough, it was usually Ranma he'd settle on."

"A lot of fantasies about beating Ranma into a pulp, then?" Nabiki asked.

"No... that's the thing. I'd probably just smack him for that too." Ukyou's gaze was on the ground.
Emotions Nabiki recognized as guilt and worry continued to bubble forth. "Everything… and I mean everything… had an undercurrent of getting Ranma to respect him, and frustration about when Ranma didn't. It wasn't enough to beat Ranma… I mean, Ryouga's done that. It was always about respect. Even when he complained about how Ranma didn't respect Akane… it was like it was all outrage about seeing someone else experience what he was experiencing. And that was something I kinda had in common with him, too. That should have set off warning bells… especially when Ryouga would complain about Ranma vamping him like she does. He was always furious about how she was making fun of him rather than being upset about the whole 'come on' in the first place. I always asked him why he never seemed to be able to see through her disguises - and I never got a decent answer out of him. Part of me always wondered… Well, 'what if'? You know? What if Ranma wasn't teasing one time?"

"It already happened," Nabiki said casually. "Ranma got tagged with some sort of magic fishing rod, fell madly in love with Ryouga and started doing all the creepy stalker-ish stuff love potions seem to always make people do." Nabiki shrugged. "Aside from things being really awkward, nothing happened."

"Yeah, but that's magic. That doesn't count. Like you said, it's pretty obvious and creepy," Ukyou replied. "I mean, Ryouga isn't the fastest on the uptake and he figured out it was bogus. But… there's no love spell or potion in play right now... is there?"

"Not so far as I can tell. And I've been checking," Nabiki tried to sound unconcerned. "No, as far as I can tell, all of this..." she gestured around vaguely, "is just... the next stage of The Madness, I guess?"

"The Madness'. It worries me a bit you have a term for it," Ukyou said, sounding a little bemused. "But I guess that makes sense. You seem to be the one person who has a grasp on actually managing all this chaos."

Nabiki sighed heavily. She suddenly felt very tired. "I thought I did. I jumped on the tiger's back thinking I could tame it and make it do tricks. It seems I've convinced everyone else that I know what I'm doing too." She pinched the bridge of her nose. "And now I'm in way too far over my head to let on that I haven't the slightest clue what I'm doing."

Ukyou looked at her for a moment, then gave her hand another reassuring squeeze. "You wanna talk about it?"

Nabiki glanced at her from the corner of her eye, quizzically.

"I'm a pretty good listener. Almost a professional you might say," Ukyou said with a wan smile. "You can't keep all this stuff to yourself. Then you're just making the same mistake Ranma made, right? Trying to shoulder it all?"

"It's not like it's really stuff you guys can help with," Nabiki muttered.

"Firstly, that's not the point of talking about it with someone," Ukyou replied. "Most of the people who lay out their problems to me at Ucchan's don't expect me to actually do anything to fix them. And secondly? Try me." She nudged Nabiki with her elbow.

Nabiki took a deep breath. "All right… to start with, Himura's Grandfather has turned this whole volleyball thing with Ranma into a test for her… and me. If we lose? Well… probably not going to end well. But if we win? The Yakuza are probably going to want to chat with me for one reason or another."
"I'd think something like that would be right up your alley?" Ukyou asked.

Nabiki shot her a horrified look. "Are you insane?! I'd think the myths and legends about them would be enough to worry even you. Me... I know just enough to know that the myths are myths, the reality is actually a lot worse, and that I am an insignificant fish in their big pond. And once you're in that pond, you're in it with the sharks forever."

Ukyou shrugged. "So we'd be sunk unless we could find some Master Mercenary Genius to help us deal with them." She reached over and poked Nabiki's shoulder with her finger. "Oh, hey. I guess we're good then?"

Nabiki shuddered. "Don't joke. I'm not on that level. I don't want to be. That's why I wanted to go into business, not crime! Business has rules, it has structure and if you screw up the worst thing they do is come for your money. Maybe there's prison time if you really mess up... But they don't come for your family."

"Depends on the business, sugar," Ukyou replied. "I've set up shop in the same neighborhood as some pretty shady outfits."

"Not like this," Nabiki shot back. She reached into her pocket and fished out her cell phone, swiping to the new app that had been added. She then held it up for Ukyou to see. "I've also come to the attention of some people who want Himura's Grandfather and his company to go down. They're offering to swap their hacking services for any information I might be able to get in this meeting I was promised - should I happen to 'beat' Himura. Basically, they want me to turn stoolie on a major player in the local branch of the Yakuza."

Ukyou frowned. "What do you need a hacker for?"

Nabiki sighed and looked at her phone contemplatively. "I haven't been able to dig up anything on what Himura is doing behind the scenes. She's been out of town a couple of times, including a few trips to the airport. There's this whole issue about how Ranma's birth gender should have disqualified her from playing volleyball competitively but hasn't, and the fact that Himura is so supremely unconcerned about all of this, even with how easily Ranma's team is trouncing other high-ranking teams. She's way too smart not to be worried... unless she's already got a rock-solid play. But I haven't got the contacts to find out what she might be up to. Except... this one."

"What would taking that deal mean?" Ukyou asked softly.

"Most likely scenario? Some sort of Witness Protection. New identity for me and the family. Move to a new place. It'd affect you guys too... anyone who's connected to me, really. Worst case, we all end up hunted by the Yakuza."

Ukyou looked thoughtful a moment, then shrugged. "Okay. That's it?"

Nabiki gaped at her. "'That's it'?! Ukyou...!"

Ukyou rolled her eyes. "Yeah, I know what you're gonna say; 'Guns on one side, Martial Artists on the other results in a lot of dead martial artists.' Look, I've dealt with punks with guns before, even a couple of Yakuza trying to get protection money. You don't have to beat all the guns in Japan, you know. You just gotta be too much trouble to be worth taking down. All of us together? We're easily more trouble than the Yakuza want. Trust me."

Nabiki opened her mouth, closed it again, then looked at her phone. "But..."
Ukyou turned to her, squeezed her hand and reached out and tapped the icon. "There. It's my fault now. You do what you need to do with that to take Himura down and let us worry about the heavy lifting parts, okay?"

The cat icon animated, giving a thumbs up before going back to being static. Nabiki stared at it for a moment, then looked over at Ukyou.

"I… thank you," Nabiki managed finally.

"We've been relying on you pretty heavily of late to make the tough decisions. I thought it was about time we took some of the load off," Ukyou replied.

Nabiki's phone buzzed - an incoming text message with no originating number.

She swallowed nervously, then squeezed Ukyou's hand. For once she was grateful to have some support. Huh… look at me relying on others, she thought as she brought up the message, which was simply a notification that they'd be calling her at the end of the school day. The old me would be appalled. She thumbed her phone off and gave Ukyou a tentative nod.

She felt a reassuring squeeze in return, and the warmth of reassurance from Ukyou through the Link. It helped, somehow. Nothing had changed - all of the factors were still exactly as bad as they were before - but somehow they seemed more manageable. As though a big part of what had made them seem so hopeless and insurmountable was… just loneliness.

I think… I think I'm glad I'm not that Nabiki anymore.

000

Konatsu was sweeping in front of the shop, letting his mind wander. There was a pleasant zen to chores. It had been a solace and a refuge for him when he had lived with his Stepfamily at the Red Hot Tea House. Naturally, his family had abused the zen-like state he adopted for such tasks to plant a number of rather powerful subconscious suggestions but, with them gone and Ukyou's support, he had made quite a bit of progress in asserting himself. Still, it was nice to be alone and not have to keep his guard up - and when it was quiet like this he could settle back into that pleasant trance that made the work fly by.

"Konatsu!"

Or… perhaps another time, Konatsu thought regretfully, looking up from his sweeping to see Mineko trotting towards him. He leaned the broom against the wall and bowed formally. "Minekosan, it's a pleasure to see you again."

Mineko looked around nervously. "Konatsu, I need to talk to you. But… Can we go somewhere else to talk, please?"

Konatsu blinked. Despite her demeanor, he did not sense anyone threatening in the immediate vicinity. "Is something amiss?"

"I… just don't want to talk here," Mineko shook her head. "Please?"

Konatsu considered. Technically, Ucchan's was still open, though it was dead slow at this time of day. He had seen Ukyou close the shop briefly for errands or even for personal reasons but he had never considered doing so himself. Still… Mineko was a friend, and obviously unsettled. Loyalty to Ukyou and a sense of duty warred with the impulse to help a friend, and ultimately the latter won out.
He lifted the store's noren off its rack, furled it, slid open the door and placed it inside. "It is slow right now. I can afford a few minutes if it is something urgent," he said, turning to Mineko after having secured the restaurant. "Where would you care to talk?"

"Anywhere… just… not here," Mineko took his hand, looking around for a moment. "I guess the park will do. Come on." She started to lead him at a brisk pace. Once they were a block away from the restaurant, she seemed to relax a little. "Himura has that place bugged. I didn't want her to overhear what I have to tell you."

Konatsu scowled. "I was not aware she had stooped to such lows in her conflict with Ranma and my Lady Ukyou."

Mineko laughed, a bitter, almost hopeless sound. "Oh god, Konatsu, you have no idea! She's gone off the deep end. Really, really gone off the deep end." She led Konatsu to the small park, finally releasing his hand. She turned and sat down heavily on a bench, clasping her hands in her lap and shuddering.

"What has happened?" Konatsu asked, gently prompting her to speak. He felt an odd, growing sense of worry.

"Please, please understand before I say anything that I didn't want any of this," Mineko said, giving him an imploring look. "I just… I just wanted to play competitively. I wanted to go to the Olympics. I… started experimenting with… substances. Not seriously, but… but I had heard so many athletes use that stuff that I figured… I needed to know what it did and what it felt like; if it was something I could overcome with regular training or… or if I was going to have to accept that it was part of what I needed to do to get where I wanted to be. Himura… Himura found out. She covered it up without me even needing to ask. Said I was too promising to allow something like that to get in my way. I… I believed in her. I believed her when she said she could get me where I wanted to go without the drugs."

Konatsu sat down next to her. "You feel she has betrayed this trust, then."

Mineko clenched her fists. "It was just supposed to be volleyball. It was just supposed to be a game! But… But now that Himura has power." She shuddered. "She's started getting in over her head, I think. She made a deal with some scary people from China. She's got students at Furinkan working on some sort of… of potion. One that changes people."

"Changes them?" Konatsu asked.

"Man to woman, human to animal, that kinda stuff. Like the curses Ranma and the others have, except… except the changes are one-way and permanent. And they affect you up here," Mineko tapped her temple. "Convince you you always were whatever it is they turn you into. I think they also make it so other people can rewrite your memories. Something about a 'suggestible state'."

"That's horrible!" Konatsu's eyes widened. As someone who had always had a disparity between mind and body, he could well imagine the agony that could come from being forced into a form not your own, especially if the knowledge of what had been done to you was taken. You would never be quite right, and never know why.

"She's… she's looking for test subjects," Mineko said. "People who… who she thinks might actually welcome the change, at least on some level, I guess." She swallowed. "Konatsu… you're on the list!"

"She… wishes to target me for her experiment?" Konatsu was taken aback.
"You and a number of other martial artists who have… she called it 'gender dysphoria'. I think she wants to test it so she can use it on Ranma, so she wants someone with… with a similar mindset? I don't know." She dropped her head into her hands. "I don't know anymore! It's all so crazy now!"

"I see." Konatsu put a comforting hand on her shoulder. "You needn't worry about me. I am more than capable of protecting myself." He paused as he considered the import of what Mineko had told him. "They… are seeking someone who they believe would welcome the effects of this potion?"

Mineko nodded, glancing at him. "I… don't know why. I mean, obviously no one wants their memories rewritten, even if they do want to… transition I guess. Right?"

Konatsu was silent a moment.

"Konatsu?" Mineko asked after the moment stretched on.

"Some memories… I would not miss," Konatsu said finally. "There have been times I have dearly wished I could… rewrite who I was. To be more assertive, to be more sure, to be…" His eyes flicked down. His form was feminine in all of the right places, and all of it the artful use of padding and deception. "To be more genuine. My life since my parents died has not always been easy. Sometimes I wonder… who I might have become had I not fallen to my Stepmother's care."

"You'd… actually want this?" Mineko asked, her voice a little hushed.

That comment brought Konatsu out of his reverie. He smiled and shook his head, eyes closed. "No… no, I do not. The idea is tempting on the surface, but the price…"

He felt a prick on his arm. His eyes snapped open and he turned to see a small spot of red on his forearm and Mineko holding what appeared to be some kind of tranquilizer dart in her hand. Her guilty expression filled in the rest for him.

He bolted to his feet, lurched and stumbled, but his legs were already numb and heavy. He managed a few steps before falling to the ground.

Mineko ran over to him, kneeling near him as he struggled against the poison. "Just… just relax, Konatsu! Please? It's… It's for the best! You have to trust me that this is for the best…"

"Mnnrrrrgh…" Konatsu tried to speak, but already his tongue was thick and unresponsive. Spots were dancing across his vision as the darkness closed in from the edges. Part of him wondered what kind of sedative could possibly work so fast without killing him. Part of him wondered if it was actually a sedative at all.

Ukyou… I'm sorry… His last thoughts faded into the darkness as his consciousness was ripped forcibly from him.

000

The noise and confusion of the game made an almost comforting distraction for Nabiki when her phone finally did ring.

She excused herself from her seat. Ranma's team was winning handily; well enough that Ranma was feeling comfortable enough to show off. The crowd was eating it up.

And Himura, sitting on the team bench, looked happy with the development.
Something was up. Nabiki hadn't been able to relax as the sense that she was missing something fundamentally important gnawed at the back of her mind.

As soon as she felt the buzz of the phone in her pocket, she tapped Hiroshi on the shoulder and motioned for him and Daisuke to follow her. Ignoring his confused look, she got up and fished the phone out of her pocket.

"Nabiki Tendo," she said as she deftly slipped through the crowd and out the side exit into the cool night air.

"We were worried you weren't going to take us up on our offer," the highly filtered voice said on the other end of the line. "Are you alone?"

"No," Nabiki stated matter-of-factly. "But they're associates and I trust them, and I'm done flying this solo. Before we discuss anything I want to be clear any protections need to extend to all those associated with me."

"That's... a tall order," the voice of Alibaba said hesitantly.

"It's that or no deal," Nabiki replied. "You get full cooperation from me, whatever it takes, but I need them shielded from reprisals and scrubbed from any official records."

"...N-Nabiki?" Hiroshi asked, eyes wide as he listened to her side of the conversation. Daisuke was gaping at her silently next to him.

Nabiki held up a finger to keep them quiet until she got the answer she wanted from the hacker.

"We... will do everything in our power. Records are easy, but we've got limited resources, you understand."

That was the answer Nabiki had expected. She settled into negotiation mode. "That's understood. I have the resources to handle physical protection, as long as I get sufficient forewarning. But I need their anonymity maintained. No cops coming to them asking them to testify or anything. Clear?"

"We can do that," Alibaba sounded almost relieved through the filtration. "So can we assume we can do business then?"

"On two conditions. Firstly, I'm introducing you to my two associates because I'll need you to work with them on this. They're my eyes and ears on the ground when it comes to all things Himura. You'll deal with them and their requests." Nabiki took a deep breath. "And secondly, I need you to get me Ranma Saotome's Family Register and Birth Records. Copies of the unaltered originals."

"Ranma Saotome? But..." The voice sounded confused.

"I think Himura has altered Ranma's records, so I'll need to know what she's done, as well as have backups of the originals to fix it. Which means it's not just enough to get me access to the Hall of Records," Nabiki stated.

"That would require access to the actual physical records. We can get you in for that, but..." Alibaba started.

"You need someone to actually go in and do the research," Nabiki glanced at Hiroshi and Daisuke and gave them a wink. "I think you see why I wanted to introduce my associates?"

"I see. Yes, we can do that."
"Good. Give me a moment, please." She tapped mute on her phone, then looked Hiroshi and Daisuke in the eyes. "So now comes the part where I ask the two of you how deep down the rabbit hole you're willing to go?"

"You mean we're getting into Yakuza territory," Daisuke said.

Nabiki nodded. "This is... way outside of what you two signed on for," she admitted. "Going this route locks me in long-term. It's not just about beating Himura in a game of volleyball. It's about taking down Tanaka Pharmaceuticals, torpedoing important Yakuza operations in this part of Japan, and probably angering a lot of people that it's not particularly smart to anger."

Hiroshi and Daisuke exchanged a glance.

"It's dangerous. We might die," Hiroshi said matter-of-factly.

"The same could be said of trying to get curry bread at lunch at this school," Daisuke responded.

"We could end up on a Yakuza hit list," Hiroshi countered, again with that calm tone.

"We live in Nerima and know Ranma Saotome. We probably already are," Daisuke parried. "If we pull this off, though, it might be our break into real detective work."

"If we screw it up, no Law Enforcement Agency or Detective Firm will touch us with a ten foot pole."

"They weren't going to anyway. Furinkan High, remember? They wouldn't even come out here for Career Day because of safety concerns."

"I remember that. Wusses. I suppose that if they're scared of a few martial artists then the Yakuza would seem pretty intimidating."

"Right? So when it comes time to save those Martial Artists, who's gonna do it?"

"Us, of course."

"Exactly. Who else can?"

"So then it seems we're in agreement."

They turned to her as one. Daisuke gave her a thumbs up.

"Angering people it's not smart for us to anger is kind of our thing," he said with a grin.

"That and detective work," Hiroshi added.

"And tutus."

"I think the tutus go without question at this point."

Nabiki chuckled and shook her head, feeling immensely better as she unmuted her phone. "Well, it seems they're on board if you are. I hope you're ready for the ride."

000

Getting the wheels in motion with Alibaba had made Nabiki feel better, but she wasn't quite ready to return to the crowd and noise of the gymnasium. From the roar of the crowd she could tell that Ranma's team was still winning handily. She'd let the team give her the play-by-play later on anything important that she might have missed. She sent Hiroshi and Daisuke back inside and decided to take a short walk to clear her head.

Coming around to the parking lot, she noticed there were two limousines taking up an obscene amount of space. One she recognized as belonging to the Kuno family, and the other she assumed was Himura's. She noted with some amusement that the Kuno Limo had boxed Himura's in.

Well, good to see Kodachi has decided to continue pursuing her beef with Himura. If nothing else that'll be a distraction for her. Nabiki smiled a little, but it faded quickly. Still not sure how I'm going to defuse things with the Kuno siblings, though.

"Nabiki Tendo?"

Nabiki froze. The voice was familiar, of course, but it had a tone and inflection to it that she hadn't heard in a very long time. She turned slowly to see a tall figure step out from the shadow of the nearby tree.

It was a bit unusual to see Tatewaki Kuno in a regular school uniform. It made him seem lankier and taller. He looked a great deal healthier than when she had seen him last in the hospital, though she noticed that he still moved with a slight stiffness.

She crossed her arms and raised a skeptical eyebrow. She had heard Ranma and Ryouga's account of the 'new and improved' Tatewaki Kuno, but she remained unconvinced. "If you're looking for your Pig-tailed Goddess or my little sister, they're both inside."

Despite the dim lighting, the wince was visible. "Did I really insist on calling her that?" He asked rhetorically, then shook his head. "No matter. I've spoken with Ran about my past behaviour and… I fear I am not quite ready to make my amends to your sister yet. I am here simply because my sister wished to watch Ran play. I… did not feel comfortable making an appearance."

"Yet you broke out the old uniform anyway," Nabiki noted.

"It seemed appropriate to wear it while here, even if I'm not ready to come back," Tatewaki replied. He tugged at the collar and chuckled. "Not that I wore it overmuch when I was here. I have also discovered that my wardrobe is somewhat lacking in attire that is not more appropriate for the Feudal Era."

Nabiki frowned. "Fair enough. But why come here? It's not like Kodachi can't ride in the limo by herself."

"I gave the driver the night off. It seems he has gotten precious few of those as neither my sister nor I have been terribly attentive to the needs of our staff. I drove the limo."

"You drove…" Nabiki echoed with flat incredulity.

"I suppose you are entitled to your surprise, but yes, I do have my license. It was something of a matter of pride at the time as I recall. The rigors of it seem to have forced some form of clarity on me as it is one of the few things I remember clearly from the past few years. Or, at least my last few attempts once bluster and posturing had failed to get me what I wanted." He tucked his hands into his pockets. "I… am told I made quite a scene the first time I failed the test."

Nabiki's mouth twitched into a slight grin in spite of herself. "I'm sorry I missed it. But you just happened to give your driver the night off on a night you knew Kodachi needed a ride? Sorry, but you're still a terrible liar Kuno-baby."
He chuckled dryly. "I… suppose I deserve that. You're right… I did want to be here. Some notion of somehow finding the words or the courage on the drive over. A pleasant fantasy that did not come true, leaving me cowering here. It seems that outcome did not satisfy fate, though."

"If you're expecting me to go in and drag out my sister so you can soothe your conscience…" Nabiki started.

"I would do no such thing," Tatewaki said, perhaps a little more sharply than he intended because he paused and took a breath. "Forgive me… I fear I am… unprepared. Yours is by far the hardest atonement that I must make."

"Mine?" Nabiki gave him a confused look. "What apology do you owe me?" She found herself taking a few steps closer, wanting to see his expression in the dim light.

"My recollection of many of the things I have done is dim. A… trick of brain chemistry, I am told. I am like the drunkard waking up from half a decade of indulgent torpor. But… When I first chose to heed my father's wishes and throw away my medication…" He pulled his hand from his pocket, displaying a small orange pill bottle, which he studied briefly, "When I chose to throw away my sanity… it was not abrupt or sudden, and I remember each moment as I felt my restraint and control peel away from me. It was… freeing at first. I suppose intoxicating is an appropriate analogy. And I remember confronting you and…" He trailed off.

"That was ancient history, Kuno," Nabiki said. "I got my pound of flesh back for that and then some."

Tatewaki shook his head. "So I wronged you and tossed you a yen coin as payment, though the amount was revised upwards over time. Even if you are satisfied that covers my debt, I am not."

"And even afterwards, I continued to dismiss you. To use you as an avenue to feed my obsessions. I barely acknowledged you as a person. I called you a mercenary and a gold digger."

Nabiki's eyes narrowed. "If we're being honest, I did earn that on my own merits."

"And how much responsibility do I bear for setting you on that course?" Tatewaki asked. "I remember clearly the girl I knew in middle school, before the haze, and the girl I see now, and…"

"Tachi, stop."

"What if I had not forgone my medication?" Tatewaki asked. "What if I had even just listened? You… you were asking me to…"

"I said stop," Nabiki said sharply, cutting him short. He blinked in confusion.

"I'm not doing this, Tachi," Nabiki said firmly. "I know you're all fired up to make your amends and to make things right, but I am not going down the 'what if' trail today." She walked up to him and poked him in the chest. "Yes, you ripped out my heart and stomped on it. I was thirteen. That was bound to happen. No, you are not the driving force that led me to become the Ice Queen of Furinkan. There are a lot more important factors in my life that have led to that than you. I was angry and hurt. And I got over it. And I forgave you for it. And I knew something was wrong and I didn't do anything to help you, so if anything…" She closed her eyes and sighed. "If anything, I owe you an apology."

"Nabiki…" He gaped at her.

She sighed and turned away, wrapping her arms around herself. "You have the worst timing, Kuno. Of all the times to pick to get your head straight…" She laughed bitterly and shook her head. "Do you know how long I waited for exactly that apology?"

"Five years?" Tatewaki offered.

"Two," Nabiki corrected him. "The first year was because I was angry and wanted you to prostrate yourself in front of me so I could grind your apology back in your face. The second year was because I was lonely and I just wanted my friend back. And then after that… I realized I didn't need an apology anymore." She turned to look at him. "It's only been recently I started to realize that I didn't deserve one."

"Didn't deserve… How on earth do you figure that?" Tatewaki asked, appalled.

Nabiki turned to look at him. "Kuno… Tachi. If a thirteen year old boy is being ordered by his sole legal guardian to do something, no matter how stupid or self-destructive… how long do you figure it'll be before he does it? Parents are supposed to be the ones who know what's best for us. It's hard not to listen, even if in our guts we know they're wrong. God knows I've gone along with enough of Daddy's stupidity, not to mention what Ranma has let his insane parents talk him into. What you said to me… You said it because you weren't in control, and you weren't in control because someone took it away from you. I understood that and figured it out by the time we ended up in the same homeroom class here. But… I didn't do anything."

"And what, pray tell, could you have been expected to do?" Tatewaki asked gently.

"Something!?" Nabiki shot back, throwing her hands in the air. "Something other than whoring out my little sister and… and our houseguest to you when it was obvious you weren't well?"

"There was nothing you could have done," Tatewaki replied.

"I didn't even try," Nabiki sighed. "You were supposed to be my best friend, and then the instant it seemed like I needed you more than you needed me…" Nabiki trailed off, rubbing at her forehead. "I didn't want to dig into all of this yet. I have so much else going on…"

"I didn't intend for this to cause you strife, Nabiki Tendo." Tatewaki took a step forward and put his hands on her shoulders.

She gave him a startled look, and he immediately released her and stepped back.

"I… I apologize, I overstepped…" he stammered.

Nabiki gaped at him for a moment longer then shook her head and chuckled dryly. "You know… When Ranm… Ran told me how much you had changed, I didn't believe her."

"I don't believe I have changed overmuch," Tatewaki replied. "I am just… aware now, I suppose." He took a small step towards her, extending a hand. "I do not wish to overstep again, but… are you all right? I have been focused on my needs, but… I understand you and your family are in a serious situation, and you yourself have been under considerable stress."

Nabiki closed her eyes. The idea of being able to unload some of what was weighing on her was tempting, but she reminded herself that as reasonable as Tatewaki seemed now, he was not a neutral party.

And he's only a few skipped pills from being a maniac again, a dark voice whispered in the back of her mind.

That's not fair! another part of her protested.

Are you going to just forgive him so easily? After what he did to you and to your sister? After what he put Ranma through? YOUR Ranma? What his father and even his sister are putting you all through? the voice continued, cold and merciless. Are you willing to take that much of a risk just because you want your childhood friend back?

Nabiki's shoulders sagged. No… I can't, she realized.

She looked back up at Tatewaki. She couldn't muster any real hate in her heart for him, but neither could she afford trust. "I'm sorry, Tachi. I am. But… I'm not your middle school friend anymore. And more importantly, you're not mine. My problems are my own and, like it or not, you and your family are part of those problems. And until I can trust that your grip… your commitment to your sanity is a little firmer, I have to keep you at arm's length for now."

A hurt expression crossed his face. His hand dropped to his side and his eyes fell.

"Yes… yes of course. You're right," he said softly. "Your circumstances demand… pragmatism."

Nabiki felt an ache in her heart, an old hurt prodded awake. She clenched her fists. "Tachi… If I was being my old cynical self, I would be selling you some sob-story right now to try and manipulate you into selling out your father and sister to help me. I'm still not entirely sure why I'm not but… If this is you… if you're really back… I want to believe it. I want it to be real… but I can't afford to trust that it's real. Not just because you're suddenly saying all the right things, anyway. So I'm being honest right now, even if it makes me look like a total bitch because…” she took a deep breath, "because I'm hoping you'll prove to me you're back."

"You wish for me to earn your trust once more?" Tatewaki asked hopefully.

"That's not your cue to do something stupid and impulsive," Nabiki said quickly. "But… yes?" She gave him an uncertain look, not entirely sure of her own feelings herself. "Look, just… take your pills and keep doing what you're doing. I guess I just want to see that this is going to last before I'm willing to dredge up the past."

Tatewaki looked thoughtful for a moment, his expression solemn. Finally he nodded and gave her a stiff, formal bow.

"Thank you, Nabiki Tendo," he said. "I… am not sure what I expected, meeting you today. But you have offered me some direction and a willingness to give me a chance to prove through deed what words find insufficient. I will not squander that, I promise."

Nabiki schooled her expression to one of careful, businesslike neutrality, wrestling back emotional control, and nodded in return. "Good. If you'll excuse me…” Her voice cracked a bit at the end and she covered by turning and walking quickly away.

000

"Match point! And the winner is Furinkan High!"
Ranma pumped her fist in the air, giving an exultant shout as the crowd roared. She was quickly joined by the rest of her team while practically the entire school was roaring in the stands.

Ranma decided that she was never going to get tired of this part.

"That's three!" Riko crowed. "They were really good, too!"

"Yeah, if I was Himura, I'd be getting a bit worried," Yuka said smugly. "These guys were all the teams that gave her 'Championship Team' a tough time last year and we're trouncing them! Probably not so confident about beating our 'little team' now, huh?"

Sayuri scowled. Ranma noticed her expression and followed her gaze to where Himura was already leaving. She was chatting and joking with the other members of her team, seemingly unconcerned.

"I'm not so sure," Sayuri murmured softly.

"Awww, that's just her fronting," Yuka replied. "You know how it is. She's gotta maintain her precious facade even if she's headed home to smash every plate in the cupboard."

Ranma's brow furrowed. While Himura wasn't exactly easy to read, she had to admit that the older girl seemed rather carefree, all things considered.

Her train of thought was cut off as someone else tackle-hugged her from behind. She yelped and turned her head to see Akane grinning over her shoulder at her. She was quickly joined by Shampoo and Ukyou, which was more than Ranma could sustain, and they ended up tumbling to the floor.

"They gonna be this enthusiastic when we win game five, or we beat Himura's team?" Riko asked, watching the impromptu wrestling match.

"Oh no, for that the clothing is going to come off," Yuka said with a sly grin.

Rin blinked innocently at her. "Why would their clothing come off?"

"Well, you see when two or more martial artists love each other very much, they-- mmmmnmmppph," Yuka started, but Sayuri had slapped a hand over her mouth.

"Please don't corrupt the Rin any more than is absolutely necessary?" Sayuri said in a tired voice. "We managed to go the whole game without breaking her brain this time."

Ranma extricated herself from the bottom of the pile. She was entirely used to getting dogpiled, though it was a lot more pleasant now that it didn't immediately spark a fight. "Okay, okay! I need to breathe!" She giggled a bit as she was reluctantly released. "Besides, I'm all smelly. Lemme take a shower, okay?"

She turned towards the showers, but immediately found herself wheeling about onto a different course when someone hooked her arm and redirected her towards the exit. She blinked and turned to see Ukyou, arm looped through hers, and a determined expression on her face as she marched towards the exit with conviction.

"U-Ucchan?" Ranma asked, a little startled by the sudden move. "Where are we going?"

"You're taking your shower at my place, sugar," Ukyou said.

"B-but…!"
"No buts!" Ukyou said, still looking resolutely forward as they made it to the door. "Akane line-jumped once already today. I haven't had any alone time with you since we got linked and I can only be so patient, so it's my place and a shower, or right here in the parking lot!" She turned and gave Ranma a glare that told her that the okonomiyaki chef was deadly serious.

Ranma swallowed hard.

000 (Chapter 28 End)

This is a shorter chapter, but it made sense to end here because it was the end of the day.

More soon!
Permission

(Three years ago)

"Geez, what's with her?"

Ranma sat on the ground and nursed the red handprint left on his cheek by the slap he'd gotten from a dark-haired girl. He stared after her, perplexed, as she ran off trying not to cry.

Ryouga rolled his eyes. He was leaning against the wall, arms crossed. "She likes you, dumbass," he said dryly, though his affected tone of disinterest and scorn couldn't quite hide the note of jealousy. Why are all the girls so interested in HIM?

This year their school had elected to make the school festival more interesting by holding it jointly with a local girl's school. Since the boys' school was larger and more centrally located, the festival was held on their campus - which meant that, for the past week, their school had been overrun by an invading force of schoolgirls. It had been just as awkward as it had promised to be as well. (The loss of half of their bathrooms for the girls' use had not been popular, for instance). It had also lead to all kinds of insanity as the normally segregated populations, fueled by adolescent hormones, tried to cram a year's worth of flirting, exploration and dating into a single week.

In short, things had been rather dramatic of late.

"She does?" Ranma asked, blinking in surprise. He turned and looked at Ryouga for confirmation. "Really?"

Ryouga sighed heavily. "You know, you should probably go after her."

Ranma gave him another confused look, then kickflipped back onto his feet. "…Why?"

Ryouga gaped at him. "What do you mean, 'why'?! To apologize!"

"Why am I apologizin'?" Ranma replied. "I didn't do anything!"

Ryouga clapped a hand over his face. "That's the point, Ranma! She was asking if you wanted to share lunch with her!"

"Yeah, and I said 'no' because I barely got enough for me!" Ranma shot back.

"She was going to share her lunch with you!" Ryouga poked him in the chest to punctuate his words.

"Oooooooooooooohhhhhhh..." Ranma's eyes widened with comprehension. "Uh... you think if I went after her now...?"

Ryouga's eyes narrowed. "Depends. Are you going after her because you like her? Or are you going after her because it's a free lunch?"

"Well, free lunch of course! Duh!" Ranma replied with a grin.

Ryouga bopped him on the head, hard. "What the hell is wrong with you!?"

"Ow! Now what'd I do!?" Ranma shielded his head and ducked away from any further abuse.
"How dare you manipulate a girl's heart just to fill your stomach!" Ryouga growled, incensed.

"Hey, I didn't ask for any of this!" Ranma protested. "This isn't fair! I'm in trouble if I say 'no' and I'm in trouble if I say 'yes'! So what am I supposed to do, huh?!"

Ryouga shrugged. "Don't ask me. You're the popular one. It's not a problem I have."

It was Ranma's turn to scowl. "Gee, thanks." He crossed his arms and leaned heavily against the wall next to Ryouga, sulking.

Ryouga was silent a few more minutes. "...well I wouldn't be such an insensitive jerk about it, at least."

"Oh yeah?" Ranma raised an eyebrow. "How would you tell a girl you're not interested?"

"Why would I tell her that? Kanna is pretty cute," Ryouga said thoughtfully.

"Then you go have lunch with her." Ranma nudged him with his elbow.

"I'm the creepy delinquent, remember? She gets this scared, nervous look whenever I talk to her and ducks out. Besides, I overheard her and her friends talking about me. Nothing good." Ryouga sighed. "Doesn't help that I turn into a stamering mess whenever I talk to a girl."

"Why? It's just a girl," Ranma replied. "I don't get what the big deal is."

"Yeah, well that's probably because you're a late bloomer," Ryouga muttered.

"I am not! I'm totally bloomed! I'm more bloomed than you are!" Ranma protested hotly. "I'm just... I mean..." He trailed off uncertainly. "I-it's just that Pops said that sort of thing was... was a distraction from the Art! Yeah..."

Ryouga snorted and didn't reply. He had learned from experience that Genma Saotome's interests seemed to consist of food and Martial Arts and precious little else - and he was very strict about enforcing the same in Ranma. It made Ryouga wonder idly how the man had managed to even have a kid. Or what happened to his wife.

"So... You like Kanna then?" Ranma ventured after a few more minutes of awkward silence.

"Well... I don't really know her," Ryouga admitted grudgingly, "So... not really, I suppose. It'd be different if she liked me, but just being cute isn't enough to make me hang about where I'm not wanted."

"So that's it? As long as she's cute and likes you?" Ranma quirked an eyebrow at him.

"No!" Ryouga protested. He looked away and raised his chin. He crossed his arms tighter and ground his teeth but, for some reason, found himself again admitting more than he normally would. "I... I'm not the kind of guy who gets to be choosy, okay?"

"Why not?" Ranma pressed.

"Because of my curse," Ryouga replied.

"Awww, c'mon, curses aren't real!" Ranma protested, tagging him lightly on the shoulder with his fist.

"Really? You think it's normal to get lost in a straight hallway?" Ryouga glared at him.
"Well…"

"Doesn't matter if it's magic or not. A curse is a curse," Ryouga replied testily. "Girls aren't exactly lining up to date a guy who can't even find his own house half the time."

"Your parents did okay, right?" Ranma asked.

"Have you met my parents?" Ryousa asked in an incredulous tone.

"No… why?" Ranma replied, confused.

Ryouga simply stared at him and waited for it to sink in.

"… Oh," Ranma seemed to slump a little. "I… just kinda figured I was always missing them."

"Last postcard I got, mom was in Egypt. And Dad…" Ryouga trailed off, "… they're not here is the point."

"Yeah, but… they got together, right?" Ranma pressed the point. "They're still together, right?"

Ryouga rolled his eyes. "Yeah… for all the good it does," he muttered darkly.

"Then there's hope! C'mon man, you gotta be positive about this kinda stuff!" Ranma flashed him a confident grin.

"This from the guy who didn't actually realize a girl liked him even after she hit him over the head with the fact?" Ryouga sniffed disdainfully. And her fist, he added silently.

"Hey, confidence always works!" Ranma replied. "So… forget the curse for a sec. What's your dream girl like?"

"Why do you even want to know?" Ryouga gave the boy a skeptical look.

Ranma looked a bit like a kid who had been caught at something. He started fidgeting nervously. "I… I just wanna know, okay? It's not like I really get to talk about this kinda stuff with anyone else."

Ryouga considered. A big part of him wanted to tell the other boy to take a hike, but he had already dug himself this deep. He sighed heavily. "Fine… meeting a girl who's into martial arts would be nice…" He folded his arms and considered, eyes closed and brow furrowed in concentration as he tried to imagine it. "Someone nice, but… not a pushover either. Someone with passion, I guess."

"Kinda sounds like a tomboy," Ranma quipped.

Ryouga opened one eye to glare at him in annoyance. "I'm sorry that my ideal woman doesn't meet your standards, Saotome."

Ranma held his hands up. "Hey, hey, that's not what I meant! Tomboys are good! I-I mean…" he rubbed the back of his head awkwardly.

Ryouga grunted, closed his eye again and tried to bring back the image.

"Short hair or long hair?" Ranma prompted after a moment.

"Either is fine," Ryouga replied.
"Tall? Short?"

"Doesn't matter," Ryouga muttered.

"Geez, you're not narrowing this down much," Ranma groused.

Ryouga sighed in frustration. "Short, okay? Well… not super short, but… petite? But…" he felt the heat rise to his cheeks, "but… curvy, I guess? Hair… short, maybe? Or… or tied back? Or…" he trailed off. "What's the use?" He opened his eyes and looked up at the sky. "It's not like I'd ever meet a girl like that."

"Why not?" Ranma asked. "Doesn't sound too out there. Betcha there are more than a few girls at the festival that match."

Ryouga's eyes fell to the ground. He studied the bits of gravel and debris scattered about. "I don't know. I just… I feel like it would take an incredible amount of luck with my curse. My Mom was always really lucky, and when my parents told me how they met, it was like one stroke of luck after another. It kinda counteracted the curse for her. But me?" He scowled. "I'm not lucky. Unless it's bad luck."

"Aww, c'mon. Not like it's all bad," Ranma replied, folding his hands behind his head and leaning back against the wall again. "After all, you met me, didn't cha?"

Ryouga scowled at him. "You're way too short to fit that much ego, Saotome."

"Hey! You're the same height as me!"

"Nope. I've got half an inch on you at least."

"Bull! Besides… I'm a growing boy! I'll catch up to you no problem!"

"Yeah right. I'll have a full inch on you by the end of the semester."

"Not a chance!"

"You wanna fight about it?"

"Yeah!"

000

(Present day)

Ranma was only wearing a bathrobe when his phone started buzzing. Ukyou was still asleep on her bed, a smile on her face and her thoughts and dreams peaceful and happy through the Link. She had been quite insistent on working out the frustration Ranma and Akane's little midday tryst had caused, which had led to quite a bit of experimentation as they discovered how the Link enhanced such experiences. There had been several changes back and forth and they had probably managed to make use of every single room in Ucchan's in the process.

Thankfully, Konatsu had apparently taken the night off to be somewhere else. Ranma had chalked it up to some sort of ninja prescience.

He flipped open the phone to see a message from Nabiki that read simply, 'Will be there in a few. Need to talk.'
Uh oh... Ranma swallowed, wondering what might be wrong. Granted Nabiki had yet to really lose her temper with him, but that didn't stop his mind from conjuring up the worst, especially since he had vanished with Ukyou with nary another word to anyone else.

He glanced at Ukyou and elected to let her sleep. He recovered his school bag from the corner of the room and dug out the spare set of clothes he'd stashed inside it. The black pants and blue silk shirt felt like old friends; ones he had not gotten nearly enough time with.

He finished just in time to hear the knock from downstairs. Quietly, he made his way down, unlocked the front door of the restaurant and slid the door open.

Even without the Link, it was obvious that something was wrong. Ranma was not the most perceptive person in the world, but one area he was well versed in was evidence a girl had been crying. Nabiki had obviously tried to hide the fact, but he could see the puffiness around her eyes, the slight redness and the faint tracks left by her tears.

"What's happened?" he asked immediately as he stepped outside and slid the door closed behind him.

Nabiki laughed weakly then rubbed self-consciously at her eyes with the heel of her hand. "Is it that obvious? And here I was trying to be composed..."

"For me it is," Ranma replied quietly. "C'mon Nabs, you're here hours before it's time for school, sending me a text asking to talk without saying what it's about... what's wrong?" He frowned.

"Is... Look, I know I kinda ran off last night after the game..."

Nabiki laughed a little more convincingly this time. "No! No, this isn't you, Ranma, and it isn't any of the others." She brushed a stray lock of hair behind her ear and looked away. She seemed uncharacteristically subdued. "This is... this is just me. And... I'm being stupid. I just spent all last night alone, breaking my own rule about not being alone, and... and..." She looked like she was on the verge of tearing up again and was trying very hard to hide it.

"Want to go somewhere and talk?" Ranma asked.

"...Please?" The request was in a small voice that didn't sound like it should belong to Nabiki Tendo.

Ranma quickly slid the door open again, grabbed one of the order pads that Ukyou kept around and scribbled a quick note. He pinned it to the doorframe, then slide the door closed behind him again. "Okay, where to?"

"Somewhere quiet? With... with water nearby?" Nabiki asked timidly. "I mean, I know a beach is too much to ask for, but honestly I just want..."

Ranma didn't let her finish. He scooped her up into a bridal carry and, before she could even protest, leapt for the rooftops.

000

School would not start for several hours yet. The sun had just started to peek over the horizon to paint the tops of the houses in bright yellow light and reflect off the water of the canal, and the birds had begun to sing those songs that only those who were up far too early in the morning got to hear.

Ranma and Nabiki sat on the bank of the canal. Nabiki had settled between Ranma's legs and leaned back against his chest with her head nestled on his shoulder. He had his arms loosely draped around her. Neither spoke. They had shared this silence for a while now.

"You're not going to ask me what's wrong?" Nabiki finally asked.

"I figure you'll tell me when you want to tell me," Ranma replied. "It felt more like you just needed me to be here with you."

Nabiki closed her eyes and sighed softly. "Yeah…” He noticed the edge of her mouth curl slightly in a faint smile. "Is that the Link, or are you actually getting that perceptive?"

"Ummm… lucky guess combined with not knowing what to say so keeping my mouth shut to avoid putting my foot in it?" Ranma offered sheepishly.

Nabiki giggled. In fact, Ranma was paying close attention to the Link. It was reassuring to see the dark-colored negative emotions gradually ebb as they sat, easing his worries that he might not be handling the situation correctly.

Still feels a bit like cheating, he thought. Still, it wasn't really much more than a magical mental mood ring and it didn't do anything to let him know what the actual problem was. That meant he was still going to need to risk saying something dumb sooner or later.

"So… uhh…” he started, taking the chance that she was, in fact, ready to talk.

"It's Kuno," Nabiki said, cutting him off.

"Oh…” Ranma replied. Then he blinked as the moment of relief at having successfully managed to be a supportive boyfriend gave way to confusion. "Wait… Kuno?"

"Yeah… Well… more accurately Tachi," Nabiki replied.

Ranma hugged her a little tighter. He wanted very much to prod for more information, but he was learning that there were times to just shut up and listen, and this seemed like one of them.

"You told me he was different; that he was taking his medication, but…” she trailed off a moment, as if searching for words. "I didn't know that a little pill could make such a big difference. I mean… I knew he must have had some sort of brain chemical imbalance to make him act the way he did, and I figured proper medical treatment would calm him down, but I didn't expect…” She seemed to struggle a bit. "I didn't expect him to be Tachi again."

"I'm sorry I didn't warn you better," Ranma said softly. "But… yeah, it was kind of surprising how much like the person you described him as being in middle school he was."

"It's not your fault," Nabiki replied. She huddled back against him again. "Damnit! I'm doing it again - just like Shampoo says. I keep forgetting that I have feelings too, and pretending that I don't have them. Pretending I can just turn the 'Ice Queen' on and off like a faucet when it's convenient. But I can't."

"That's probably for the best," Ranma said reassuringly. "Turning your feelings on and off sounds more like a Himura thing."

"Maybe it is," Nabiki murmured. "But… Ranma… He was my best friend in school. Maybe… maybe he was on the verge of being more than that. But then he got in trouble. He needed help. He needed his medication and his family was denying it to him and… and when it was obvious something was wrong with him I… I just walked away. Just because my feelings were hurt. I turned around and manipulated and used him for money and justified it because he'd broken my heart… and he wasn't even in his right mind when he did it." She hung her head. "I got used to the idea that I was a terrible person. I figured I knew people well enough that I could rattle off all the reasons they might give for why I was a terrible person, and I thought I was okay with it. None of the reasons they could give really mattered. Then I realized I didn't really want to be a terrible person, and I started trying to be a better person by dealing with all of those reasons I assumed people had." She huddled down a bit more. "Now I'm starting to get that I'm still a bad person, but not for any of the reasons I thought I was, and I don't know anything about people."

"You're not a bad person," Ranma said, gently flicking her on the forehead. "Yeah, you've done bad things, but you're trying to do better, right? Pops used to tell me that the difference between a bad martial artist and a good martial artist is that a bad martial artist doesn't try to get better at the stuff they're not so good at."

"You know, that would sound great except for where it came from," Nabiki muttered.

"Yeah, well, Pops said a lot of stuff that's actually pretty smart. He just never seems to be any good at applying it to himself," Ranma said with a chuckle. "And when it comes to martial arts, he does know his stuff."

They were quiet a few more minutes before she spoke again.

"Kuno was part of the plan, you know," Nabiki said softly. "The one I had before I fell for you."

"What plan?" Ranma asked.

"The one where I go off to business school, end up being brilliant and breezing through all the courses, get snapped up by some high-powered firm, then roll back into Nerima in a BMW and an Armani suit," Nabiki said. "I was going to swoop back in right about when you and my little sister were gone and Kuno was starting to get desperate enough that I'd look good, snap him up with some kind of ironclad prenuptial, then use his money to start my own company. I figured I'd get him a proper psychiatrist, but I didn't expect too much from it. God, I'm an idiot."

"You wanted to marry Kuno?" Ranma asked, shocked.

"I wanted to marry his money," Nabiki replied softly. "Just like I imagine his mother did to his father. And it probably would have ended up the same." She hunkered down a bit more. "He wasn't… he wasn't a person in The Plan. No one was. Not even me…” She pulled her knees up to her chest and hugged them. "And now he's Tachi again… and he's alone. And part of me wishes he had just started taking the damn pills a year ago… but then I realize that the Nabiki from a year ago wouldn't have cared… and even if she had, then she wouldn't have ended up with you and…" She shuddered. "And I don't like who I am without you. And then that makes me feel like I'm just using you, and using Shampoo and everyone else because I can't find it in myself to be good on my own."

Sensing the black spikes returning to her emotions and feeling her curl in, Ranma hugged her more tightly. "Hey… hey… It's not like I'm all that great without you, you know?" He sighed. "Look at what I was doing to Akane…"

"What you were doing to each other," Nabiki corrected him. "And… you probably would have worked it out eventually."

"No… we wouldn't," Ranma said finally. "We're both… missing too many of the same bits. I mean… I love Akane…" He smiled wistfully. "I couldn't even say that a month ago. Neither could she except when she broke it off with me. And eventually I would have destroyed Shampoo… left her honor a smoking wreck assuming she could even ever go back home at all. Ucchan… maybe Ucchan would have been okay… but she'd have hated me… not because I didn't choose her, but because I was stringing her along and using her. I was using all of them, just like you. Just… to feed my belly or my ego instead of my wallet. If you're a terrible person, then I'm worse."

Nabiki turned to look at him, an expression of outrage on her face. "You are not! You had no idea what you were doing! All of your life lessons came from an emotionally stunted idiot of a panda, and… and…" she trailed off, scowling at him. He got the sense that he had struck some sort of perverse nerve with the middle Tendo. "You are not on my level of awful, Saotome!"

He laughed out loud at that. "What, is this a contest!?"

"No, and don't you dare take that as a challenge!" Nabiki retorted quickly.

"Neither of you awful!" a familiar voice protested. They looked up to see a lavender blur drop from the footbridge that crossed over the canal to land lightly in front of them.

"Shampoo…" Nabiki said softly.

"Pintou break own rules!" Shampoo said sternly as she stalked towards them. "Not supposed to spend night alone', Pintou say! Find out from Xiao mèimei that Pintou lock self in room, toss and turn all night, then gone before breakfast!' She knelt in front of them and poked Nabiki in the forehead. "Then find out Wo de qíngfù ba wo de àirén cóng qin'ài de rén nàli dài zou, ba ta dài dàole zhēlǐ…!"

"Woah, woah, woah!" Ranma held up a hand as Shampoo slipped into angry Mandarin. "Can we keep this in a language I understand?"

"She's mad because I stole you away from… Ukyou is 'Qinài de, right?' Nabiki gave Shampoo a quizzical look.

Shampoo huffed and looked away, folding her arms. "Not change subject! Pintou understand what Shampoo said! Problem still the same; Nabiki trying to shoulder burden all by own self!"

"You're right…" Nabiki admitted, her head drooping. "Heh… some 'Mistress' I am, huh? I can't even keep myself together."

"That not problem!" Shampoo protested. She crouched before them and took Nabiki's face in her hands. "Nobody strong alone. Even strongest warrior standing alone must rely on ground to hold them up, yes? Pintou need learn to trust us to be that ground. Need learn to trustme."

Nabiki smiled weakly, putting a hand over Shampoo's. "I'm sorry… I keep thinking of you all as people I need to take care of. I avoided getting too close to anyone because I saw what taking care of everyone did to my sister, and I…" she trailed off.

"Is go both ways," Shampoo said softly. She glanced at Ranma and locked eyes with him. He nodded slightly in return. "Take care of, get taken care of in return. Share weaknesses rather than hide, so can make stronger. Not just to Airen, okay?"

Nabiki chewed her lower lip, then nodded timidly. "Okay…"

Shampoo smiled, then carefully crawled into Nabiki's lap, wrapping her arms around her. Ranma shifted to make room for her and stretch his arms out in and effort to encircle them both. They had to shuffle a bit to get comfortable but finally managed to fit themselves together reasonably Nabiki closed her eyes and slumped against Ranma's shoulder. "Thank you."

"Maybe not wait for things to get so bad to do this next time, hmmm?" Shampoo admonished gently.

"This one kind of snuck up on me, kitten," Nabiki replied, idly running her fingers through Shampoo's soft hair.

"Still think Pintou keep too much to self, try to carry too much," Shampoo replied. "Shampoo know Nabiki is…. Mnnn, how say…? Private person? But… Shampoo can't help if not know!"

"She's got a point, Nabs," Ranma said. "Besides… it's gonna be hard for you to keep all this stuff bottled up if we're all Linked, right?"

Nabiki sighed heavily. "I know. I know, okay? Really, I promise this time." She held up a hand as though taking an oath. "It's just… telling someone too much… even if I do trust them… feels dangerous to me. Especially if it's not information that does them any good. I've used information as a weapon for so long that I guess I'm always worried about its power to hurt me or the people I care about."

"Then teach," Shampoo murmured as she looked into her eyes. "Teach us to use and understand in the way Pintou use and understand."

"That… will take a while," Nabiki replied. "I think for now I'm just going to focus on not letting stupid stuff like this blindside me so badly."

"Is not stupid," Shampoo corrected her. She cocked her head. "Overhear Pintou talk about marrying idiot Sword-boy? Is true?"

Nabiki chuckled. "It was… one of those plans that worked on the assumption I didn't have human emotions anymore. Maybe it became part of the plan based on some echo of how I used to feel in middle school, and his being rich was just a convenient excuse. But…" She looked out at the water, watching the eddies and currents as it flowed through the artificial riverbed on its journey to the sea. "But I think it was just the last step in 'getting back at him' for breaking my heart - to lock him into the same kind of loveless and manipulative marriage that had driven his father nuts." She closed her eyes and chuckled weakly. "Wow… The more I think about it the more I really don't like myself from a year ago…"

Ranma hugged tighter as he felt some of that icky, cloying darkness creep back into Nabiki's emotional landscape. "Hey… hey. I wasn't so great a year ago either, y'know."

"We've already established that you didn't know better because all of your life lessons up until that point came from an idiot," Nabiki snorted. "But… It's like I had forgotten all of the lessons Mom taught me and everything Kasumi tried to teach me after that. And then, when I finally realized that I had feelings and that other people had feelings and that I was sick of everyone being unhappy, I was still arrogant enough to think I could fix it all." She studied the edge of the water quietly for a few moments. "But… even if this works… Even if we somehow spit in the face of what a thousand years of society has told us - if we go up against the world and win and make this work… make us work… Even if we can tie up Mousse and Ryoga's romantic problems in neat packages, cure Ryoga's curse and save his mother and magically get Ranma's parents to approve of this whole mess… somebody always gets left behind, don't they? Like Kasumi, who never found the right person, or Tachi, who got cheated out of his chance, or Kodachi… God I'm..."
sympathizing with Kodachi, something really is wrong with me…”

"Pintou regret choice?" Shampoo asked softly. Ranma blinked and looked at her, but the Amazon's eyes were focused on Nabiki.

He felt a ripple through the link. Complex emotions, accompanied by a tensing of her shoulder muscles, and then… her emotions evened out. The darker emotions receded, and he felt her relax against him.

A smile crossed her face and she shook her head. "No. Even if this is crazy and doomed. Even if this doesn't fix everything. Even if this doesn't fix anything. Despite the inevitable repercussions. This feels worthwhile. I want to see where this takes me more than I wanted that other life. I'm tired of loving money. It doesn't love me back."

Ranma sighed in relief and let himself relax. He gave Shampoo a grateful look, glad she had been there to articulate what he couldn't.

His mind drifted to others. Mousse, the Kunos… they all seemed isolated too. Not to mention Ryouga. The thought of the Lost Boy caused an uncomfortable pang.

"... Maybe I'm not totally over money," Nabiki said finally. "Might still have the occasional fling. Y'know, a weekend tryst now and then? A candlelit dinner, a bottle of nice wine, just me and the stock indexes..."

"If Pintou feel enough better to make stupid jokes, is enough better to go to school," Shampoo snorted and disentangled herself from the two of them. "If hurry, may still have time for shower and for Airen to change."

"So Ranma and the others aren't walking with us today?" Riko asked as the group made their way along the sidewalk. It was still early, so their pace was leisurely.

"Akane said 'Fiancée Stuff' came up and they would be running a bit behind and didn't want to make us late," Sayuri replied.

"Fiancée Stuff," Yuka repeated. "What, sneaking off on school grounds isn't good enough anymore, they're gonna play hooky for nookie now?"

"Yuka!" Riko admonished. "I'm sure it's nothing like that… Is it?" She gave Sayuri a questioning look.

Sayuri rolled her eyes. "Not that it's any of our business… but I heard that Nabiki had a bad morning and Ranma was busy making sure she was okay, and the rest of them are waiting in the wings to make sure they're both okay."

"Including Ryouga?" Yuka asked skeptically, noticing the absence of the Lost Boy.

"Well… I mean… Isn't he kinda part of 'the group' now as well?" Riko said a little timidly.

"What, as in a fiance?" Yuka replied. "No! No way."

"Aren't you the one who's constantly teasing Ranma and Ryouga about their 'relationship'?" Sayuri asked archly.

"Yes! Teasing! Because I refuse to believe that Ranma Saotome has managed to get a boyfriend before me!" Yuka growled.

"You don't have a boyfriend because everyone thinks you're with Daisuke," Riko replied with a grin, seeing a rare opportunity to needle Yuka.

"That's ridiculous! Why would anyone…!?"

"She's right, everyone is already trying to guess the names of your first three kids," Sayuri added. "I'm pretty sure the better pool favors the first being a boy…"

"That's ridiculous..." Yuka huffed again, then looked up and spotted something. A Grinch-style grin spread across her face. "… And also look! A Rin-shaped distraction escorting a Mousse-shaped change of topic! Let's all go tease them and forget all this unpleasantness!" She quickly hooked their arms and dragged them towards the pair before either could recover.

Rin was walking next to Mousse, the pair of them deeply involved in a discussion of the papers he was holding. Rin was pointing out things on the page while Mousse nodded attentively.

"Do we have to tease them?" Riko whispered, hesitating. "They actually look kind of adorable like that…"

"Pfft. All lasting relationships must be tempered in the fires of red-hot shame first," Yuka replied. "We are simply doing our sworn duty as Rin's friends and besties."

"So… about why Ranma got a boyfriend before you…" Sayuri muttered.

Rin glanced up, seeing them approach. "Oh, hi!" she said brightly, though she took a noticeable half step away from Mousse as she did so.

"Sorry, are we interrupting someth-o0ooogghf!" Yuka started to say, but the breath was driven from her lungs by forceful elbows to the ribs from both Riko and Sayuri, who were flanking her.

"Good morning Rin. And Mousse," Sayuri said brightly after shooting Yuka a warning glare. Yuka gave her a sullen look in return, but remained silent, rubbing her side.

"Are you finally going to enroll at Furinkan, Mousse?" Riko asked hopefully.
"Yes. That's what Furinkan needs. More insane martial artists," Yuka muttered, then shied away as Sayuri positioned her elbow for another jab.

"No, Ms. Rin..." he paused as Rin shot him an annoyed look, "... Rin is helping me deal with a difficult personal issue. She is helping me write a letter to someone."

"Is this 'someone' gonna come knock down a few walls at school like all of Ranma's 'someones'?!" Yuka quipped with a smirk. Her smile faded as she noticed Rin's expression.

"She... ummm... already has?" Rin said nervously, glancing at Mousse then back at them. "You remember the circus lady, right?"

The three of them gaped at Rin.

"That's your 'difficult personal issue'?!" Yuka yelped. "She's a psychopath!"

"Yuka..." Riko admonished timidly, glancing at Sayuri.

"No, I'm with Yuka on this one. She wrecked half the school yard and nearly killed Ryouga. The Principal needed a tank to do that!" Sayuri said, folding her arms and glaring at Mousse. "At least when Ryouga's harem showed up they had the good grace to keep the giant animal mortal combat nonsense off the school grounds."

"Ryouga..." Mousse started, surprised. "It seems Saotome is a bad influence on him."

"You've not got a lot of room to talk, to be perfectly honest," Sayuri replied coldly.

Mousse sighed. "Young Mi isn't... Fair enough," he deflated a bit. "She didn't used to be this way, but... I am well aware that love can lead you down a dark path."

"Obsession is more like it," Yuka muttered.

"Yuka, that's enough!" Rin said firmly, surprising everyone. "Mu Tsu is trying to make this right. He didn't end his relationship with her in the best way, but he isn't responsible for the actions she took afterwards." She stared the three of them down with surprising ferocity. "He's coming to school today in case she shows up again to make sure she doesn't attack Senpai or anyone else. And if she doesn't show up, we're working on a letter for him to send to try and explain things and apologize."

"And you think he's gonna be able to keep his cool seeing his 'Darling Shampoo' draping herself all over Ranma all day?" Yuka asked skeptically. "You think he's gonna be able to keep himself from pawing all over her if Ranma isn't there?"

Mousse's glasses flashed as his gaze switched to Yuka, the thick lenses opaque in the light. "And what would you have me do, then?" he asked, his tone equally cool.

"Go away, maybe?" Yuka replied, putting her hands on her hips. "She's after you, after all!"

"Yuka, isn't that going a bit too far?" Riko asked timidly.

Yuka's eyes narrowed. "No, it isn't, Riko! I'm tired of having all this crap piled on us by a bunch of super-powered maniacs who can't behave in public! It was bad enough when it was Ranma and Akane, and they're at least students at our school! This whole mess doesn't have anything to do with us, we've got more than enough of our own problems, and Mousse here should take his mess somewhere else."
Mousse's jaw tensed. "Very well. If that's your wish, I won't impose further," he said in a tight voice. Without another word, he turned and leapt up onto a nearby lamppost and then away.

"Wait! Mu Tsu!" Rin called after him, then sighed. She whirled and glared at Yuka. "Why do you have to be such a… such a jerk, Yuka?!"

"Someone has to," Yuka replied. "Do you know how many times Mousse has come flying into the school to fight Ranma and wrecked things? He's not exactly careful with those blades of his, either. A few students have almost gotten hit. A lot of students have gotten hurt from all these stupid martial arts battles, and now that Ranma has finally calmed his own nonsense down I don't want anyone else bringing theirs in!"

"You haven't been this hard on Ms. Shampoo, or Mr. Ryouga!" Rin protested.

"Yeah, well they're students now. They're here every day. We can hold them accountable and, for the most part, they've dialed it back. Even Kodachi is playing nice and there was a time when she put our whole Rhythmic Gymnastics team in the hospital. Now we're the ones doing the challenges. I don't want Mousse and his crazy Circus Freak girlfriend screwing that up!" Yuka growled.

"That's cold, Yuka," Riko said.

"Yeah? Well excuse me for wanting to graduate without suffering a life-altering zoo animal inflicted injury," Yuka huffed. She tugged on her bookbag straps and stomped off in the direction of school, not waiting for the others.

"Yuka…!" Sayuri called after her friend, then trailed off with a sigh.

"I-I'm sorry…" Rin hung her head. "I shouldn't… shouldn't have…"

Sayuri held up a finger, silencing her. Rin blinked, staring at it and her apology ground to a halt.

"Two things, Rin. First? Don't apologize. You didn't do anything wrong. You had a different opinion. You're allowed to have those. Yuka is out of line and I'm going to have a talk with her… when I'm a little less peeved myself for the way she shut you down when you'd finally started to speak up for yourself." She took a deep breath. "Second… She does have a point. Your being involved with Mousse is starting to… well, feel kind of dangerous."

"Yeah… I mean… it was scary sometimes when crazy suitors or rivals went after Akane. She's one of the strongest people we know and can usually take care of herself," Riko added. "Not that we're saying you can't… Well…" Rin slumped a little, eyes on the ground as she nodded. "I-I know…" she mumbled. "B-but… that's why I have to help Mu Tsu resolve things! Young Mi has already attacked Senpai and Mr. Ryouga, and neither of them had anything to do with this!"

"Well, yeah, because she's crazy," Riko replied. "Are you sure helping Mousse talk to her will… well, fix that?"

Rin looked up and clenched her fists. "Sh-she's upset, I know. A-and being that upset makes people do… do things they're regret otherwise! Ms. Shampoo, Mr. Ryouga and Ms. Ukyou all did a lot of the same stuff, and they're much better now that they're not upset anymore. A-and… and you're right; I can't fight. But I can do this, so… so I'm sure she'll come around!"

"The problem with that is helping in this way means you're spending a lot of time with Mousse. Alone," Sayuri replied. "And that's always been a major trigger for crazy jilted martial artists in my experience. Plus… well…"

"You like Mousse," Riko finished.

Rin blushed brightly. "I-I… we're… we're just…"

Sayuri put a hand on her shoulder and smiled. "Rin, it's okay. You're allowed to like him."

Rin sighed in frustration. "No. Please listen!" She gave Sayuri an imploring look. "Nobody believes me when I say that I'm not doing this because I w-want to be Mu Tsu's G-g-g-g-girrrrrrlfriend!" She struggled to get the last word out, like it was fighting with her tongue. She was flushed, but not all of it was embarrassment.

Sayuri blinked and held up her hands placatingly. "I'm sorry, Rin, I didn't mean to…"

Rin huffed and crossed her arms, pouting. "Y-you always assume people do things to get something!"

"We didn't mean it that way, Rin. We just… I mean, it's pretty obvious you like him…"

Rin sighed, her shoulders slumping. She was quiet a moment, then spoke. "A few years ago I really really wanted a cat. But… my Mom and two of my sisters are allergic, so I can't have one. So instead, I started feeding the strays in the neighborhood. It was almost as good as having my own cat because they'd all come over for pets and to play with me. All of them except one. He would always hide in the bushes and watch when I put out the food, and no matter what I did I couldn't coax him out. He was beautiful and I wanted so badly to pet him, but he'd just run away. I could see he was skinny, though so… So I started putting out the food and leaving it, and just watching from far away. A-and… and then he came out and ate. I did this every day, even though I knew he wouldn't ever let me pet him because… because it made me feel good knowing I could still help him. I found out later that he used to belong to a little boy who lived in the neighborhood, but moved away and left him behind. He was waiting for someone, even though I think he knew that the boy would never come back. So I kept feeding him and keeping my distance. Mu Tsu reminds me a bit of that cat. A-and he's… h-h-he's b-beautiful too, but I know he's like that cat. He won't let anyone near him because he's waiting for someone who he knows, deep down, will never come. But… but that's okay. I just… I just don't want him to suffer. I don't need to get anything out of this."

Sayuri sighed and patted Rin on the back. "Rin… that's very noble of you, but… I think you need to learn to be a little selfish once in a while. It's okay to ask 'what am I getting out of this?' once in a while." She shot a glare in the direction Mousse had gone. "... Especially when the other people involved are selfish jerks themselves."

000

Ranma felt refreshed after her quick shower and change of clothes. She had unbound her hair again after switching to her female form; She found it counterbalanced her petite stature and made her look a little more mature. She wasn't sure when seeming more 'mature' as a girl had started to be important, but it felt right.

Ukyou had been grumpy that Nabiki had run off with Ranma so she and Shampoo had corralled the middle Tendo between them and were lecturing her sternly as they walked. Amazingly enough, Nabiki actually looked genuinely remorseful and repentant. Akane had fetched Ryouga once she learned Nabiki was safe and sound, and for once the two were actually chatting amicably. Ranma drifted towards them to see what they were talking about.

"...don't understand why I can't do it if you and Ranma can so easily!" Akane huffed, looking at her hands. "I mean... I'm supposed to have a lot of ki, right?"

"It's more than just having a lot of ki and a lot of emotion. It's... well, you've got to be in control of it," Ryouga replied. "You have to be able to focus and channel it."

"Are you saying I'm not in control of my emotions, Hibiki?" Akane asked, a dangerous note entering her voice.

Ryouga folded his arms and smirked. "If I say 'yes', are you gonna prove me right, Tendo?"

"Okay, okay, okay, enough, you two," Ranma squeezed herself between them to head off the potential conflict. "We haven't got time for the two of you to smash up the street."

"I wasn't...!" Akane protested.

"We weren't...!" Ryouga said at the same time.

The two of them glanced at one another, then looked away to scowl at the ground on opposite sides.

Ranma snickered. "You know, you two make a cuter couple being all tsundere like this."

"We're not a couple!" both of them protested in unison.

Ranma grinned. Without thinking about it she looped her arms through theirs. "Nah, you're both taken."

There was a very long beat, where Akane stared at her in confusion and Ryouga simply gaped. It took a second for the gears to catch in Ranma's brain and for it to point out that she had just effectively laid claim to Ryouga.

Panic gripped her as she realized she had likely just lit the fuse on a massive powder keg. "I mean by Akari! Ryouga, I mean! Being claimed! Not by me! Not that there's anything wrong with Ryo! I mean, I wouldn't do that to Akari! She's a good friend! Best friend...! Actually I hardly know her, but...!"

"Ranma..." Akane attempted to interject, a growing look of concern on her face.

"Not that that's a point of honor or nothin'!" Ranma said hastily, looking at Ryouga. "I mean, I didn't mean... it's just slipped out, I wasn't...!"

"Ranma, calm down..." Ryouga said, shooting a nervous glance at Akane as the redhead babbled.

"Ranma!"

Ranma trailed off, eyes widening as she slowly turned back to Akane, fully expecting rage, blue battle aura and a mallet.

Instead, Akane just looked mildly exasperated. "Ranma, hush. It's fine."

"It's... I... what!?" Ranma gaped at her.

Akane rolled her eyes. "It's fine, Ranma. I know you didn't mean anything by that. You've said more eyebrow raising stuff trying to scam free ice cream."

"You're… really?" Ranma said.

"Honestly, you probably should have run with it," Akane replied, shrugging. "It would have been funnier."

"Okay, seriously this time, who are you and what did you do with the real Akane?" Ranma asked, only half-jokingly.

Akane scowled. "What, I'm not allowed to be reasonable now!? Do you want me to get mad?"

"Nope, that's the real thing," Ryouga said quickly.

"Watch it, Hibiki!"

Ranma hugged their arms a little tighter. "Hey! Stupid foot-in-mouth disease aside, I was trying to stop you two fighting!"

"Sorry…" Akane said, deflating quickly.

"Yeah, sorry, Ranma," Ryouga added, rubbing the back of his head sheepishly.

Ranma blinked, then a slow grin spread across her face as she realized she had just successfully de-escalated her first fight. It felt like mastering a new kata. She felt the warm, satisfied glow of accomplishment. "Well… good!"

They walked a little while longer, until it became apparent to Akane and Ryouga that she had no intention of relinquishing their arms.

"Ummm… Should… we be marching to school with you holding my arm, Ranma?" Ryouga said nervously, spotting the school wall in the distance. "I mean… the rumors are already pretty bad…"

"Who cares what they think?" Akane huffed. "Nothing I ever did changed their minds or made it any better. The three of us could probably make out in the schoolyard and it'd be tame compared to whatever rumor is circulating right now."

"Urk…" Ryouga stumbled a bit, and started fumbling desperately. Ranma twigged to his problem and fished a handkerchief from her pocket, releasing Akane's arm a moment to hold it to his nose. She waited until his surprise passed and he took over holding the kerchief to snag Akane's arm again.

Akane cocked her head. "You two really are in sync now, aren't you?"

"We are not!" the two of them protested in perfect unison.

Akane giggled. Ranma took in a breath for another angry retort, her plan to de-escalate forgotten, when she felt Akane's weight shift. She was leaning into her, holding onto her arm tighter. It was a subtle change, but enough to short out Ranma's outraged reflex.

"I wonder what it would be like?" Akane said thoughtfully.

"What would be like?" Ranma asked.

"If Ryouga really did join us."
Ryouga made a noise that was a cross between a squawk and a snort, and the red began to spread across the handkerchief he was holding to his nose. "Akane?!"

"I don't mean that!" Akane said in exasperation as she noticed Ryouga's wild-eyed stare and the growing bloody patch on the fabric of the handkerchief. "I mean… just… how it would work as… a family I guess? Just… day-to-day living with each other."

"I…" Ranma blinked then trailed off. She made a brief attempt to conjure an image of some kind of future life, but her mind rebelliously kept on straying to the half-remembered dream with Ryouga and Ukyou. Where she had been a girl and… a mother.

"That's… kind of a complicated question, Akane…" Ranma mumbled.

"I don't know… it actually sounds kind of nice to me," Akane replied.

There was another muffled snort and what sounded like a whimper from Ryouga.

"I mean… I guess… I'd miss Ryouga if he left, and with the whole entourage showing up to claim him I started feeling jealous and I didn't know why, and I think it's because… well, I sort of got used to the idea of Ryouga being with us." She glanced at Ryouga. "Not that way, hentai!"

"I didn't… I wouldn't…" Ryouga mumbled through the cloth. "I mean… A-akane… I didn't think… you'd want me around anymore. I mean… after…" he trailed off, looking away guiltily.

Akane sighed. "I'm learning it's very tiring being mad all the time, Ryouga. I also know you end up with a massive nosebleed seeing a cute girl in a T-shirt. It was why I was okay with you being in my bed when I realized you were P-chan, and… I owe you a lot of apology for it all as well. Maybe I resented you a bit for the fact that I did owe you an apology. And… I keep inventing reasons to be mad at you and it's getting silly. The truth is… I miss you. Not just P-chan but… having that guy around who was always so nice, and… I mean I knew you liked me, but you always worried about how I felt, and that was nice. I know I took advantage of that because I'm not interested in you that way, but… but I didn't want to lose it, either."

"Heh… well…" Ryouga ducked his head bashfully. "... I mean… I didn't do anything special…"

"Are you kidding?" Akane replied. "You spent so much time with me! And… a lot of it was just… just being there. You seemed happy to just be training or fixing a fence or whatever with me, and you never asked for more. Everyone else expected something from me, even my friends at school. The only other person who was like that was Ranma, and usually one of us would say the wrong thing eventually and start a fight… well, Ranma would say something and I'd fly off the handle because I was so worried about how I looked to her. But… I fell apart around you so many times Ryouga, and… you never judged me. Even now, with all this rival stuff, you're still trying to teach me and help me. You're… you're my best friend, Ryouga." She beamed at him, giving him the full 1000 Megawatt smile, the one that gooified even the most hostile of people.

Ryouga, not being at all hostile and already being badly susceptible to The Smile, sagged against Ranma as his walking grew a bit erratic and a goofy smile crossed his face.

Ranma scowled, feeling a surge of… of… something at that. She glared at Akane. "Hey! I'm his best friend!"

Akane gave her a taunting smirk. "You can't be his best friend, Ranma."

"What?! Why not!!"
"There's way too much sexual tension between you."

"There's…" Ranma's mouth moved silently a moment as she flushed red with outrage. "There is not! Where did you hear that?! Was it Nabiki!? That sounds like a Nabiki thing to say! Nabiki, stop teaching Akane to be like you!" she yelled over her shoulder.

"What did I do now!?!" Nabiki shot back. Having been engrossed in conversation with Shampoo and Ukyou, she hadn't caught any of what was going on with the other three.

"Nabiki's not the only one who can point out the obvious!" Akane huffed.

"It's not obvious!"

"You dreamed about having his baby, Ranma!"

"That's not fair, he dreamed that first!"

"How does that prove there isn't sexual tension between you?!"

"It… I… shut up!"

000

Seeing Ryouta leave for school was an odd mix of melancholy for Akari.

Part of her was overjoyed to see him getting proper schooling, bettering himself and having a wider circle of friends in his life (even if a large portion of them were distressingly pretty girls). She was painfully aware of how crushingly alone he was all the time, and how happy he was just for her presence in the room - a happiness that was born more from a desperation for human contact than it was boyfriend/girlfriend affection. Guiltily, it had always made her a little apprehensive, wondering if he was just with her out of loneliness rather than genuine love. Being isolated on the farm just made it worse and added to her guilt, making her feel like she was cutting him off just to save herself from being lonely.

But the other part of her missed being so central to his life. She had always known that he wandered - that he knew many people and had many adventures, but she had always thought that if she got to be there with him she could be part of them.

But here she was, waving goodbye to him from the doorstep as he left for school - so close and yet still a world away.

Maybe I should enroll myself? she pondered. She had always been homeschooled, and her career path had never been in doubt - so making the trip to the nearest high school had never seemed worth the trouble. What could they teach her about sumo pig training, after all? But… if Ryouta was so determined to go, then maybe…?

Akari heard a heavy sigh and glanced to her right. She could see the foreign girl, Anna, staring off just as she had been and wearing an expression of longing that tugged at her heartstrings.

Poor girl, she thought. It had occurred to her to be jealous of Anna, and perhaps even a bit cross with Ryouta for not telling her about the American girl, but from what Ryouta had told her afterwards, he had definitely broken things off with Anna when he left. Anna had come all this way just for the faint hope of rekindling things. She must be very lonely where she was from too. It's a shame I can't talk with her.
She frowned and considered that for a moment. She had very little to do; the chores of a small one-family house were minor compared to the workload on a sumo pig farm and she was generally done before midday. Chatting with Mrs. Hibiki was pleasant, but Mrs. Hibiki had to frequently switch languages between the two of them.

"Ummm… Ms. Anna?" Akari asked, touching the girl's shoulder.

Anna started a bit, then ducked her head, blushing as she fumbled for her phrase book. "[Oh! Mah apologies, I just need… darnit, where is it!? Aha! Umm… ummm…]" She flipped frantically through pages. "[Here we go!] Wh-what can I doing… do… to helping?" she stammered, her thick accent mangling the words almost into unrecognizability.

Akari smiled and motioned to the book, then herself, smiling in a way she hoped was reassuring.

Anna frowned, looking a bit confused, but tentatively handed over the book.

Akari bowed slightly as she accepted the book then flipped through it. As she had hoped, it went both ways, and she quickly found the phrase she was looking for. She hoped her own accent wasn't too terrible.

"[Please teach me English,]" she said.

000

The day was relatively quiet, and most of them had a free period after lunch (Owing to one of the all-too-frequent stress leaves teachers at Furinkan were known for taking) so Sayuri had called for a practise session. Yuka hadn't shown up, which was odd, but no one on the team except Ranma commented on it, beyond 'She'll be back when she feels up to it.' So they had split up into pairs and were working on their rally game, which had evolved into quite a competition.

Ryouga had tagged along, partly because Sayuri had mentioned she wanted to investigate the idea of ki-infused volleyball serves more. But that had fallen by the wayside in favor of the more involved group play, leaving Ryouga on the sidelines to watch. Which, to be fair, wasn't all that unfamiliar to him. There were many times he had been on the sidelines watching Akane play some sport or engage in training (Usually as P-chan). It had always been enough just to be there. Seeing her happy and knowing he was, for the moment, not lost had been enough for him back then.

Of course, it wasn't Akane playing this time. It was Ranma. Ryouga was perched on a railing next to the outdoor courts, near the pile of the girl's bookbags, ostensibly there to 'watch their stuff'. He realized he wasn't even sure which class Akane was in right now, which was odd because at one point he'd had her schedule memorized.

He caught Ranma's eye as she scooped up the ball to serve for another rally. She flashed him a grin. "Hey Ryo! Watch this one!" She reared back, leapt up gracefully to drive the ball over the net and gave it a sidespin that nearly caught Sayuri off-guard, forcing her to scramble to recover it.

He felt a smile tug the corner of his mouth. He watched Ranma run to intercept the return, smiling and clearly enjoying herself, so bright and full of energy at that moment that it was hard to imagine her life having so many problems.

He sighed wistfully.

"Now that is a familiar sigh if ever I heard one," said a familiar voice from his right.

He whirled and lost his balance on the fence. His arms windmilled frantically as he tried simultaneously to see who had snuck up on him and to correct his balance. He succeeded at neither and tumbled onto the ground in a heap.

He peered up to see Ukyou smirking at him, arms crossed. "Well, sugar, I can definitely see the benefits of your Rhythmic Gymnastics training."

"Shut up…" he muttered as he disentangled himself from the railing and brushed himself off, hoping no one else had seen his clumsy display - particularly Ranma.

"Oh come on, I'm just teasing," Ukyou said, moving to lean on the railing next to him. "It's kind of cute how distracted you get when someone you like is doing something they love. You used to moon over Akane like that all the time."

"I did not…" Ryouga started gruffly, then sighed and gave up posturing. With the link it was pointless anyway. "It's not like you're much better."

She poked his shoulder. "I am too. I have to be. If I didn't have better situational awareness than a drunken lemming, Kodachi would have taken my head off ages ago - or Shampoo even. All you had to worry about was Ranma, and she tended to just try and get you to pay attention to her instead."

Ryouga blinked, then gave her a horrified look. "You make it sound like she was more interested in me than keeping me away from Akane!"

Ukyou shrugged a bit, giving him a wan smile. "Well, it's interesting, isn't it? How the tactics she used on you half the time were the same tactics we used on her as a guy? Look, I'm not here to bust your chops, but… I just wanted to ask - are you finally going to tell her?"

Ryouga grunted and leaned on his forearms on the railing, clasping his hands. "Are you nuts?! I… I couldn't even tell Akane how I felt… back when it actually mattered… and this… this! This is so much more complicated that… that…"

"'That'… what?" Ukyou prodded. She scooted a bit closer, letting their shoulders touch and sparking the Link between them. "Seriously… not telling her isn't an option, Ryouga. Even if you know that she doesn't feel the same way. Even if she does feel the same way, but you can't be together. You have to get it out and deal with it if you're going to be part of each other's lives in some way."

"Hnh," Ryouga grunted noncommittally.

"And you being a part of our lives isn't negotiable, either!" Ukyou said quickly.

"I know," Ryouta replied. "I already gave Ranma my word on that. It's just…" He reached into his back pocket and pulled out an old, worn billfold picture wallet. It had been mended where it had been torn down the middle. One side held a picture of Akari, the other side a picture of Akane. He looked at the two pictures a moment and sighed. "It's just… I keep doing this."

Ukyou looked at the pictures, then at him. "Doing what?"

"Running from something I have to something I can't have." He traced a finger along Akari's picture. "Anna showing up reminded me of that. I could have stayed with her and her father… been happy. But I walked away to go back to Akane, even though I already knew I didn't have a chance with her - that… that she didn't feel that way about me. Deep down, I knew. Now I could just go home with Akari. Live on her farm with her grandfather and be happy. And I walked away from it again." He turned to look at Ukyou. "So… even if I do tell Ranma I… I… you know… Where is "my win? Ranma could hate me for it. Ranma could not feel that way, but we stay friends. And then I'll just do what I did with Akane and sit on the sidelines and obsess and be miserable. But... if somehow... she felt the same way?" He looked back down at the ground. "I'd walk away... wouldn't I?"

Ukyou was silent a moment, which caused his heart to sink as the truth of his own words settled on his heart like a cold blanket.

"You never walked away from Akane."

He blinked and stared at her.

"You tried, but you were never able to," Ukyou continued. "I think... you jump too fast whenever someone says they want you. Like it's a miracle anyone does at all and you need to grab them before they change their minds. You don't stop to ask if it's what you want."

"So... what are you saying?" Ryouga asked, brow furrowing in confusion.

Ukyou smiled again. "I'm saying... if Ranma feels the same way... you won't run. You won't be able to. Because it's something you want."

Ryouga considered, then sighed heavily and slumped. "Yes I will. I'll have to. Otherwise Shampoo at the very least will kill me, even if you don't."

A mane of lavender hair and a pair of bright reddish-brown eyes interrupted his view of the ground. "Shampoo not kill Shagua! Just so long as Shagua accept proper place in harem."

"Daaaaaaaal!" Ryouga recoiled, looking down to realize Shampoo was lying on the ground and had slipped between his feet to pop into his field of view. He stumbled backwards and ended up landing on his butt - which, admittedly, was a step up from landing on his head but still wasn't pleasant or graceful.

Shampoo sat up and cocked her head, giving him a confused look. "Why Shagua always so jumpy lately? Maybe drink too much coffee? Shampoo know great place to get nice, calming herbal tea!"

Ryouga groaned and scrubbed his hand down his face. I really AM losing my edge!

Ukyou turned and leaned back against the railing, grinning. "She's even given you a pet name, sugar. Pretty sure by Amazon Law that means she's claimed you."

Ryouga paused, peering through his fingers at Ukyou. "I thought that required I beat her in a challenge by combat."

Suddenly Shampoo was right there, face to face with him. "That only for if Outsider want to claim Amazon wife. Amazon Warrior can claim whomever she wish."

"Hrk!" Ryouga managed to avoid flinging himself backwards and compounding his clumsiness, but it was a near thing. "What do you mean 'claimed'!?"

Shampoo poked his nose. "Airen claim. But Shampoo approve. Shagua just being silly about whole matter."

"We've talked this over, Ryouga. All of us," Ukyou added. "Nabiki saw this coming a mile away, and even Akane can see it coming now, so literally only you and Ranma are dense enough to not see it." Ukyou pushed off of the railing, stepped closer and crouched next to him. "Ranma... after getting added to the Link, I can feel how much she's struggling for balance. And... more and more it feels like you're part of that balance she needs. So... we accepted this much to make this work. Accepting you isn't that much of a stretch." She held out her hand to him, offering him a hand up.

Ryouga considered a moment. His eyes dropped, returning to the redhead still playing the game, oblivious to all that was going on on the sidelines.

"That's her decision," he said finally, accepting Ukyou's hand. "Not yours, and not mine."

"All right," Ukyou stood up and pulled him up to his feet. "But you should still let her know it's a decision she needs to make."

Ryouga shook his head. "You don't give up, do you?"

Ukyou smirked. "Stubbornness is a family trait. Little brother."

Ryouga scowled. "We're back on that again?"

"Maybe if you showed some guts and told the girl you like how you felt about her..."

"That girl is your fiance!"

"Technically she's my wife, but that's okay, I'm willing to be a proper elder sibling here and support you in this..."

"What sort of proper sibling would support...?! And you are not the elder sibling!"

Shampoo glanced back and forth between them, then giggled. There was a twinkle in her eyes, like the one she got when she was hatching a devious plan.

000

The more the day had drug on, the more it ground into Yuka what a jerk she was being. Avoiding her friends had gone from angry snubbing into awkward avoidance, and she knew eventually she was going to need to talk with them. But... talking would mean apologizing and her pride wasn't ready to let her do that just yet.

She knew they were outside on the courts practicing and so she found herself prowling the halls as far from that side of the school as she could get. She was so deep in her funk that she almost stumbled around the corner before she heard the voices.

"... okay, that will get us in but isn't there any way to speed up...? Huh... Okay, but... I mean, I KNOW what microfiche is, but..."

She stopped dead and put her back to the wall, listening. That was Daisuke's voice! Carefully, she peered around the corner.

Hiroshi and Daisuke were standing alone in the hallway. Hiroshi was looking the other way, as if keeping watch while Daisuke was talking on a cell phone.

"Look, I've got a dust allergy, okay? I don't... Look, you don't gotta call me names!" he huffed. "Fine, fine... You're right, we can't trust anything on the computers... so I don't need you to change my surname to 'Bakamoron' on my official transcript to prove it, thanks."

Yuka snickered in spite of herself. Unfortunately, in the quiet hallway that was enough, and both Hiroshi and Daisuke's heads snapped around and they spotted her immediately.
Well, when you get caught out, play it like you meant to be, right? Yuka stepped around the corner and crossed her arms with a confident smirk. "Well well, what are you boys up…?"

She never finished. Both boys all but tackled her. Daisuke's hand slapped over her mouth and the two of them dragged her into the hallway with them and then into a nearby empty classroom.

"Was there anyone else who overheard?" Daisuke hissed, looking hunted as Hiroshi closed the door behind them.

"I don't think so. That was stupid, though. Sorry, I should have kept better watch." Hiroshi said, leaning his back against the door.

"It's okay, we shouldn't have risked a call in the school-EEEEOOOOWWW!" he trailed off into a howl of pain as Yuka bit his hand with enough force to draw blood. She wrenched herself away from him and slapped him hard across the face. "Watch where you're putting your hands, pervert!"

Daisuke stumbled, his hand coming up to hold his cheek. He glared back at her. "I wasn't grabbing you anywhere perverted!"

"You grabbed me. That's enough!" Yuka shot back.

"Geez! Keep it down!" Hiroshi hissed, glancing nervously at the door at his back. "We're not supposed to be in the vacant classrooms!"

"You're gonna ruin everything if you don't pipe down!" Daisuke snarled at her. "You get to explain to Nabiki why we got busted before we ever got to the Hall of Records!"

Yuka blinked. "Hall of Records? Why are you two going there?"

"Good one, Daisuke," Hiroshi muttered. "Why not blab the rest of it to her while you're at it?"

Yuka smirked and crossed her arms again. "Tell you what. You tell me why you're going to the Hall of Records, and I won't scream."

Hiroshi blanched. "You wouldn't."

"Try me," Yuka shot back. "I imagine it'd look real good if the hall monitors find two boys holding a single girl hostage in an empty classroom…"

"That's cold, Yuka. even for you," Daisuke said, his tone and expression hard as he glared at her.

Yuka was a bit taken aback by his reaction, but then swallowed as she realized that she had just slipped into using the same sort of tactics that Himura had used to blackmail Ranma into the whole mess they currently found themselves in. "All right, all right… that wasn't okay. I'm sorry." She sighed and dropped her arms to her sides. "But still… tell me anyway? You two are up to something and I could really use a caper to distract me right now."

Daisuke's expression softened. "You don't want in on this one, Yuka," he replied, his tone surprisingly soft. "It's… Look, it's stupid that we're involved, to be honest. But unlike you, we haven't got any other real talents to bring to the table in this whole mess."

"That and we tend to leap before we look," Hiroshi added.

"I'm already in a martial arts sports grudge tournament with Ms. Psycho Sycophantpants. How much worse can it get?" Yuka asked, raising an eyebrow.
"Yakuza. Shadowy underground hacker groups. Illegal access to government records. Stuff that makes Nabiki nervous," Daisuke said.

Yuka blinked. "Okay… so why are you involved?"

"Because… because I think they're in trouble. Ranma, Nabiki, Akane… all of them. The kind of trouble that martial arts isn't going to get them out of," Daisuke said. "And maybe… maybe this is our chance to do something instead of just sitting on the sidelines and making jokes."

"Not that we aren't still going to make jokes," Hiroshi added quickly.

"Just… a lot more gallows humor, maybe," Daisuke shrugged.

"Fair enough. So what makes you think I don't want in?" Yuka replied, narrowing her eyes. "They're my friends too!"

"Because we might get shot at?" Hiroshi pointed out.

"I'm used to people making the street explode with paint brushes. Regular guns and regular bullets are easier to…" Yuka began.

"You sure?" Daisuke said, suddenly stepping forward and causing her to trail off. "Have you ever heard a gun go off? Ever fired one?"

"H-have you?" Yuka tried for defiance, but something about his manner was robbing her of her usual bravado.

Daisuke sighed. "My Uncle works for the police. He snuck me onto the firing range a few times. He even let me take a few shots." He rubbed his hand self-consciously. "It was loud… louder than anything - even with the ear guards on. You feel it all through your arm when it goes off. It's not like TV at all. Then I saw the holes I made in the target… I remember I was pretty proud of myself back then, but now? Thinking about what that would do to a person? Even someone like Ranma…" He trailed off, looked down, then lifted his chin and looked her in the eyes. "I don't want you anywhere near any of this."

Yuka frowned. "Why not? If Nabiki and Hiroshi and Ranma are in the line of fire…"

"I don't want you anywhere near this," Daisuke repeated. There was a slight flush to his cheeks. "I… I just don't, okay? Just leave it alone."

Yuka blinked. She felt off-balance and flustered and wasn't entirely sure why, so she responded with what she knew best - outrage. "And you think it's okay for you to be? What, is this some chauvinist 'protect the damsel' nonsense?! Uh uh!" She crossed her arms and glared at him. "I'm going. I'm in. Or I'm gonna go find Nabiki, tell her you screwed up and blabbed all of this stuff to me, and then get her to assign me to be your minder anyway. So stop being stupid and tell me when we're meeting to go to the Hall of Records!"

Daisuke scowled. "Fine. Hiroshi can give you the meeting place." He turned and opened the door with maybe more force than was necessary. "Don't come crying to me if you get shot or something." He stepped through and closed it loudly behind him.

Hiroshi watched him go then sighed. He gave Yuka a sidelong glance. "I really thought you were faster on the uptake than this. It's like watching Ranma and Akane but without all of the cool special effects."
"What are you talking about?" Yuka growled. "Don't say stupid stuff to me right now." She fished out her phone. "Just give me your number and you can text me the meeting time and place later."

Hiroshi shrugged. "Sure. You want Daisuke's number too?"

"I-I… yes… for… for the mission, jackass!"

000

"All right Miss Himura, that should be enough for now."

Himura sighed in relief and lay the script down on the podium. She opened the door, stepped out of the cramped soundbooth and stretched. "Thank goodness! That booth is entirely too cozy."

"I apologize, Miss," The student from the Audio/Visual Club bowed deeply. Himura was sure she'd remember his name if it was important. "You were very insistent that clarity and adherence to the script you provided were important though."

"That I did," Himura said brightly. "You'll send me the tape once it's all cut together, yes?"

"Of course," He bowed again. "If… If I might ask… the script is quite unusual?" He wrung his hands, not meeting her eyes.

_Haven't quite learned not to ask questions that have dangerous answers, have you?_ Himura thought a little darkly. Sometimes she forgot that she wasn't dealing with her grandfather's wonderfully trained aides. Still, there had been fantastic progress made at Furinkan, and so she reminded herself to be patient and tolerant. "Oh, it's a kind of self-hypnosis tape for a friend who's a bit of a method actor, and this is to help them get into character."

"Oh! I see!" he said, brightening and looking quite relieved.

Himura smirked. _So easy to please, even when the cover story is so flimsy._ She rewarded the tech with a wink and then made her way from the club room.

Mineko and Sanae met her at the door and took up positions flanking her as she walked. She smiled at them but did not give them the nod that indicated it was alright to speak. Unlike the rest of the peasants at the school, Himura had been careful to properly educate her inner circle in the ins and outs of etiquette and procedure regarding discretion that her Grandfather had drilled into her.

She took her time. She could see Mineko was fidgeting and seemed anxious, but that was of no concern. She knew to hold her peace until Himura signalled. It wasn't just ego; the walls had ears, after all, and it was important that they spoke in safe places, and so nothing was discussed until Himura deemed it safe.

They rounded a corner, into an empty stretch of hallway, most students having fled to their classes at this point. Himura decided it was safe enough, but opted to make Mineko wait a bit longer, as a test of discipline. "Sanae, how goes the search for our circus friend?"

"Omi's managed to track her down. She's found an old warehouse to lick her wounds, along with her big cat," Sanae said, sounding disinterested. "We haven't made contact yet, I thought you would want to make the final call before we tipped our hand."

"Oh? Hoping I might have reconsidered?" Himura asked brightly, thought there was a dangerous note in her voice.
Sanae sighed. "You know how I feel about the freaks in this place, darling. Having them work for us just feels like… encouraging more of their atrocious behaviour. But… I also see the necessity to fight fire with fire sometimes. Still, I'd recommend being cautious. This one seems even more unstable than most of her ilk."

"Oh, I don't know. She's volatile. I'll admit, but her motivations are fairly simple. Go ahead and make contact with her. Let her know what we can offer. Maybe give her the address of Ms. Ito as a show of good faith, but make sure she knows we can assist her far more effectively if she opts to coordinate with us. Dip into the treasury funds and bring her a few dozen pounds of raw meat for her pet as well. That should soften her somewhat, I think."

"I'll… let Omi handle that part," Sanae said with a look of distaste. "'Raw meat' is something she would… appreciate more, I believe. What if she refuses to follow the plan and opts to go after the little waif instead?"

Himura shrugged. "It'll prove a distraction. I am sure that Ms. Tendo has already taken precautions, so I doubt it will be much more than that. In all truth that is all I really expect Ms. Young Mi to be good for in the end. I just hope she accepts our offer so that distraction can be more precisely timed."

Sanae nodded. "I'll take care of it then," She turned and broke off from Himura and Mineko, heading down another hallway.

Himura was pleased to note that Mineko's discipline had held. Good girl. You have potential. "So… I'm judging from your expression you want to talk about our 'volunteer'?"

"I… I have some concerns…" Mineko said nervously. "I was hoping you could let me see Konatsu. Talk with him."

"Whatever for, sweetie?" Himura asked, feigning bafflement. In truth, she had expected Mineko to get cold feet; She still hasn't learned not to get emotionally invested. This will be an educational experience for her, I suppose. "You were quite certain that he… or rather she was unhappy with certain aspects of herself that only we had the capability of changing?"

"I… I know, but… But he… she never would have chosen this…" Mineko said nervously. "I… I'm worried I misread the situation, and that will affect the results and…"

Himura held up a finger. "Now now. I trust your intuition on this. Dear Konatsu would have turned down our offer because of our… regrettable conflict with the people she mistakenly believes are her friends. Did you not say yourself how upset you were at the pittance Ms. Kuonji pays her? That Konatsu keeps trying to deny what she truly is inside in a vain attempt to please her? That from what you dug up, Konatsu has a long history of being manipulated and used by selfish people. It's no surprise she ended up trading one set for another."

"Yes… but… A-are you sure the tape is necessary?" Mineko fidgeted.

"You said yourself Konatsu seemed intrigued by the idea of new memories. This is just to help her transition… help her be what she's always wanted to be and to believe it without reservation. What we are doing cannot change how she feels… perhaps only awaken her to her true feelings." Himura put a hand on Mineko's shoulder, giving her a carefully crafted reassuring smile. "Being a good friend means sometimes making hard choices when those we care about cannot, when we know their judgement is compromised."

"I-I understand that, it's just…" Mineko wrung her hands in uncharacteristic uncertainty. "It feels… wrong."

"I know," Himura said, though she suppressed a pang of disappointment at the girl's emerging conscience. "But trust me. We are the heroes of this story, Mineko. We just need to prove it. You know as well as I do what the true story is. But we have to carefully craft all of this to get them to accept it. Ranma most of all. Konatsu is the only one who can help us do that, and for that we have to give her the push she needs to see the truth for herself."

Mineko closed her eyes and took a deep breath. "I… I know." Her expression resolved itself. "I'd still like to be there, though."

"Are you sure? It isn't likely to be pleasant to watch, even knowing she won't remember it," Himura said.

Mineko nodded slowly.

Himura maintained her concerned expression, though inside she was smiling.

Well, I suppose we'll find out if you're ready for this step, Mineko-chan. "All right… I'll have my driver pick you up tomorrow morning before school. Be ready."

000

Ranma felt good. A little vigorous activity in the middle of the day made the school day so much more tolerable and, now that it was over, she could enjoy the walk without some immediate crisis.

There was some mild apprehension about the coming attempt to add Shampoo to the link, especially after what had happened with Ukyou. At Shampoo's suggestion, they had elected to meet Tofu at the Nekohanten to make things more comfortable for the recovery, though Ranma worried that Shampoo had an ulterior motive.

Not that Shampoo's ulterior motives are all that bad, Ranma thought, glancing over at the purple haired Amazon as she chatted and laughed with Akane. She felt a little heat rise in her cheeks as she remembered some examples. Especially now that things are calmer and letting her have her way won't ruin my whole life. It's just... She glanced over at Ryouga who was walking slightly ahead of her, near the middle of the group (As had become custom to keep him from wandering off). I mean... it's awkward with Ryo there. I don't want him to feel... feel...

She hastily scrubbed the words 'left out' from her mind before they conjured even more awkward mental images. But she was left struggling to find a replacement. Where DOES Ryo fit now?

She considered him a moment. Despite being in the middle of the group, he was mostly on his own, hands jammed in his pockets. Ranma wondered if doing that was a way to close himself off from the Link.

She felt a small pang at that, though she didn't fully understand why. She sped up a bit to come up beside him.

"Whatcha thinkin' about, Ryo?" she asked, folding her hands behind her back and leaning into his field of view.

"Hmm? Oh... nothing serious," Ryouga lied badly.

"Uh huh. Because you get all deep and brooding about what to have for dinner," Ranma quipped. "You worried about this Link thing?"
His head snapped up and he looked at her, then seemed to realize she wasn't talking about what he was thinking about. "Oh... you mean Shampoo. Uhh... No... Pretty sure it'll be fine. Nabiki will be glad she's part of the Link I'm sure." He jammed his hands deeper into his pockets.

Ranma's brow furrowed. Okay... so it IS the Link, but it's not about Shampoo? Or not in specific? "You sound like something is buggin' ya."

"I'm fine," Ryouga growled. He glanced at her, then looked away, but Ranma noticed a bit of color on his cheeks.

Ranma chewed on that a minute. It's definitely about the Link... Ryo doesn't want me touching his hand and finding out how he feels... but it's not about adding Shampoo, or at least not that SPECIFICALLY... And it's got to do with me... Maybe about Ryo's... uhh... 'confusion'? She felt a bit of an uncomfortable twinge at that idea, but that suggested a very familiar concept to Ranma - Jealousy.

The Link used to just be me'n Ryo. Then all these other people started piling into it... yeah, that makes sense. But... we're doing this to help him and his Mom, doesn't he get that? She pondered a moment, but her experience with Akane and her jealous fits suggested something different, even if Ryouga's way of reacting to it was different. No... he probably does, but... that didn't mean a lick with Akane either. It's probably why he's trying to hide it, right? He feels put out, but he knows we're trying to help, so he's bottling it up.

Ranma felt a moment of pride at having puzzled it out. She felt like she had come a long way in understanding other people. Okay, so... how do I fix it? Mebbe... he just needs to feel like he's not being replaced?

"Look... I know it kinda sucks having everyone piling into the Link, but... You know that isn't where our relationship comes from, right?" Ranma said, picking her words carefully in an attempt to emulate the way Nabiki would phrase things.

Ryouga blinked at her, eyes widening. "R-relationship?"

"Yeah! Like, we've been friends forever, for as long as I remember, anyway, and you're still the best rival I've got, and all of that was before the Link anyway, so... It's not like you gotta worry about that changing." Ranma said brightly.

Rather than the look of relief Ranma had been hoping for, Ryouga's face fell, like she had just said the exact opposite of what she intended. He looked away from her and scuffed his shoe slightly. "That's... that's what I am to you, right? Rival... friend..."

"I..." Ranma felt another one of those odd pangs. She had an insane feeling like she should be saying something else. "L-look, Ryo..."

"I just wanna be clear about how you feel about me," Ryouga said. "So... friends. Rivals. That's... that's good. I can deal with that." He took a deep breath. "Everything works out for the best that way."

Then why aren't you looking at me? Ranma thought. It felt like there was a ringing in her ears, like she was struggling with something important but she just couldn't get it to come into focus. Why can't I say I agree with you? What do I WANT, even!? "Ryo..." she swallowed, "L-look... we'll... we'll talk about it when this is all over, okay?"

He glanced at her and forced a smile. "Yeah... yeah. Of course."
Ranma wasn't at all convinced by that answer, but she couldn't think of what else to say. Her pace slackened and she dropped back a bit, her eyes falling.

Why is it getting so hard to talk to him now? Why do I keep saying things that hurt him when I don't mean to? she thought glumly. It reminded her a lot of how things had been with Akane before… she shook her head and quickly banished that thought.

That CAN'T be it, so what is it? She sighed and decided to put it aside for now. She glanced back at the rear of the group, where Nabiki was chatting with Rin about something.

"... And Dad is really enjoying it too! He says they've asked him to stay on full time and he thinks he's going to do it!" Rin gushed.

"And the team is doing well?" Nabiki asked.

"Oh yes! Dad says as soon as they realized he was serious about training them, they dove right in! He said he thinks they just needed someone to believe in them." She bounced slightly. "I haven't seen him this happy since… since… well, ever! He looks like he did in the pictures of him before he was hurt!"

Nabiki chuckled. "I guess this counts as a couple of acts of charity then, huh? Guess that clears me for the rest of the year."

"I don't think anyone is gonna buy the 'Ice Queen' bit at this point, Nabiki," Ranma said, slipping in against Nabiki's side. She felt a little better at the bright smile that flashed across Nabiki's face and the feel of her arm around her shoulders. There, I CAN say the right thing! A year ago I'd have made a crack about charity scams or something. But jokes don't have to be hurtful like that. Her eyes flicked back to Ryouga. *So why is it when I've got one part figured out I end up screwing up another part?"

"See, that's the beauty of it. In a year I can reintroduce the Ice Queen as 'Nabiki Classic' and business will be better than ever!" Nabiki said.

"Not happening," Ranma replied, turning to kiss her cheek. "We're brand loyal to the New Nabiki."

"Yeah… aheh… because… it's…" Rin blushed and looked away, fidgeting. "Like… umm… soft drinks…? That was the joke, right?"

Nabiki sighed and ruffled Rin's hair. "Yes, but if you explain it it ruins it."

"O-oh."

"So… uhh… Did you come up with any ideas how to keep Akane from being left out?" Ranma asked, flicking a glance nervously towards Akane, who was pantomiming some martial arts move to Ukyou and Shampoo.

"Once the Link is made, it only takes a couple of people to see it through, so after Shampoo is linked Ukyou and I are taking Akane shopping, and then maybe a movie." Nabiki replied.

"You're going too?!" Ranma yelped, more loudly than she intended, then covered her mouth as the others glanced back at her curiously.

"You're going too?!" Ranma hissed. "You're not staying with us?!"

"I don't get many days off, thanks to the… 'honored elder'," Nabiki said, her eye twitching a bit as she choked out the honorific. Ranma imagined there was a story behind that. "You and Ryouga are Ki Nuclear Reactors compared to the rest of us. You'll be fine. I haven't had a chance to hang out with Ukyou much, and I haven't spent much time with my sister doing normal sisterly things. It'll keep her from feeling left out, and I get a normal night out like a regular teenager who isn't the new epicentre of chaos in Nerima."

"Yeah, but…" Ranma fidgeted herself much like Rin had. "It'll be awkward!"

Nabiki smirked. "It's going to be awkward no matter how it goes down, Ranma." She poked her nose. "And it's gonna keep being awkward until you resolve things with Ryo."

"What's to resolve? Things are resolved!" Ranma protested. "We don't fight anymore! We talk stuff out! We… we…"

"Cuddle instead?" Nabiki asked, raising an eyebrow.

"Yes! NO! I mean we… we… We're friends now!" Ranma stammered. "Stop trying to make it more than that!"

"Ranma, let me ask you this. And…" she took Ranma's hand in hers, the warm flow of her emotions becoming clear as the Link snapped into place between them, "No lying. You used to share the furo with Ryouga, right?"

"Yeah, so? There's nothing weird about that! I mean, I go to public baths! I share the furo with lots of people!" Ranma said defensively.

"Of course it wasn't," Nabiki said reassuringly, and Ranma calmed a bit when she felt that Nabiki was being honest. "Playful innuendo aside, you were just taking a bath."

"Right!" Ranma nodded sharply.

"Could you do it now?" Nabiki asked. "You used to share the furo with Ryouga, right?"

"I…" Ranma trailed off, her eyes widening at the concept. She glanced at Ryouga, slightly panicked that he might have heard that. "I mean… that's… I mean, Akari…!"

"And that's what I mean," Nabiki said. "It's not a problem of you being a girl in his head anymore. When you're around him you're a girl in your own head. He's noticed, you know… that you haven't been a guy around him once since the Shi shi Hokodan."

"That's… that's just coincidence," Ranma muttered, crossing her arms and pulling away from Nabiki a little.

"So, if I got you a kettle of hot water when we get there?" Nabiki asked.

"It… that'd just make it more awkward!" Ranma huffed, hunching down a bit. She wasn't sure why, but she didn't like where this was going.

"Really? So when you're both guys you can share a bath, but you can't lie on a futon with a cute girl between you?" Nabiki asked.

"It's… it'd be weird for him," Ranma said finally. "B-besides! It's my body, and I get to decide if I wanna be a boy or a girl, and right now I wanna be a girl, and… and you should just respect that!"
Nabiki sighed and rubbed her forehead. "Fine. I'm not going to push. That would just lead to you doing something stupid and making this worse. Just... think about it, okay?" Nabiki put a hand on Ranma's shoulder and squeezed. "I'm not saying there's anything wrong with it, even. Just... be honest with yourself why you're doing it. Okay, Ranma?" She gave the redhead's shoulder a reassuring squeeze. "I'm going to hash out the plans with Akane and Ukyou. Keep Ryo from getting lost until we get there, okay?"

Ranma glanced guiltily at Ryouga again. "Yeah... sure, no problem."

Nabiki released Ranma's shoulder and moved towards the front of the group to join Akane, Ukyou and Shampoo.

Ranma glanced to her left, and noticed Rin was still there, blushing and fidgeting.

Ranma sighed. "Sorry if the conversation got a little strange, Rin," she said.

Rin cocked her head. "Strange how?" she asked. "I mean... I'm sorry I overheard! I was trying not to listen but... you were right there, and..." She wrung her hands. "But... I hope things work out for you and Mr. Boyfriend-san..."

Ranma sighed. "Rin, he's not..."

"A-actually, I... I was hoping you could help me with... my... my own problems with this sort of thing?" Rin blushed and kicked at the pavement. "You've known Mu Tsu a while, right?"

"Well, 'known' is kind of a strong term," Ranma replied, latching onto the change of topic. "I mean, he was usually trying to kill me... at our friendliest he was usually lecturing me at best. I think Akane probably knows him better than me. I mean, besides kidnapping her once or twice to get to me, he was one of the few people around not trying to kill or marry her."

"O-oh... well... I mean... maybe I'll ask Akane Senpai too, b-but..." Rin fidgeted. "What do you think of him? A-as a person I mean? And his relationship with Shampoo senpai?"

Ranma was tempted to launch into a comfortable and well-worn tirade about the homicidal nearsighted idiot, but she caught herself.

"He's... well, he's a whiz when it comes to gimmicks and tricks," Ranma started carefully. "I mean, some of 'em are stupid, and they're not really good enough to deal with someone like me, but they can catch you off-guard. He, uh... he plays with sharp stuff more than I'm really comfortable with." She scratched the back of her head, remembering a few close calls. "He's devoted to Shampoo... but he's never really been able to pick up that she's not interested. An' telling Shampoo she doesn't really want something she wants is not a good way to get on her good side. He always kinda came at it like Shampoo was already his girl an' I stole her. If he had actually tried to win her over... mebbe? But he just kinda 'laid claim' to her. Which... sorta makes sense considering what I know about how Amazons do things, but it ain't something males are supposed to do. Come to think of it, he's like that a lot... Males aren't supposed to learn martial arts or challenge people to duels in the Amazon village."

"Hmmm... so... it sounds like he was acting out against it?" Rin asked thoughtfully. "You know... chafing against his gender roles, kinda like it is for girls in Japan?"

"Yeah, but the Amazons are traditionalist. Like, 'follow our traditions or die' kinda traditionalists," Ranma added. "Probably a lot rougher for him. I don't blame him leaving, honestly. I'm not so hot..."
about the idea of living there, even if I am half girl and got some sort of special exemptions as a guy 'cuz I'm strong."

Rin nodded, giving that some consideration. "Do you think that might be why he resents you, Senpai?"

Ranma blinked. "Huh?"

"Maybe… maybe it's about more than just getting the girl he loves? If it was that bad for him that he had to leave, even though he was trying to live life how he wanted to… then a 'strong outsider' shows up and is given everything he struggled for and was denied… m-maybe, deep down, he figures that if he could prove himself stronger than you, he could prove them wrong. About him, a-and… well, everything. Maybe that meant more to him than running away?"

"So… You're saying that might be it wasn't just obsession for Shampoo, but obsession with… I dunno, proving he can be an equal to the women of his village?" Ranma asked.

"Or at least that he deserves to be, and they were wrong all those years for denying it to him," Rin said. "Y-you…" She glanced around and ducked closer, lowering her voice. "You've heard him talk about Ms. Elder Cologne-Sensei, right? He doesn't like her… and he doesn't respect her. He calls her 'old mummy' and 'dried up old monkey'.'"

"Well… to be fair, I kinda call her 'Old Ghoul'..." Ranma admitted sheepishly, scratching the back of her head.

"Yeah… but you're not an Amazon. A-and she challenged you a bunch when you first met, right? So she's more of a rival. But for Mousse? It'd be like insulting a member of the Diet, wouldn't it? But it makes sense if Mousse doesn't like how she leads the village." Rin nodded, satisfied with her own logic.

"So… you're saying all of Mousse's obsessive behaviour is because, deep down, he's a closet political activist?" Ranma asked incredulously.

"I…" Rin's face fell as she realized how silly that sounded. "W-well… n-no, but… but! But maybe it's still got a lot to do with proving himself to those who are in charge… right?"

Ranma considered. "Well… I guess I can't fault the guy for having something to prove. He's still a jerk, though."

"I know. But maybe if we can get him to see why he's doing what he does, it'll help him?" Rin asked, recovering her determination.

"Ranma shrugged noncommittally. "I guess…"

"Just like how it helped Mr. Boyfriend Ryouga Senpai!" Rin finished, beaming proudly.

"Ryouga isn't my… He's… wait, how did what help Ryouga?" Ranma replied, confused.

Rin cocked her head. "H-he… uhhm… realized that he was always so obsessed with you because he was in love with you?"

The ensuing reboot of Ranma's brain failed to reload the navigation software in time to recognize the streetlamp ahead as an obstacle and prevent her from smashing into it - face first.

"A-ah! I'm sorry!" Rin gushed. "I-I thought… M-maybe he hasn't confessed yet! Oh no, I'm so "Sorry Senpai! I didn't mean to mess everything up!"

Ranma rubbed her sore forehead, not sure if the pain was from the lamp post or not. "Rin… I mean, I know stuff looks a certain way with me and Ryouga…"

"Oh no he hasn't!" Rin squeaked. "I'm sorry! Don't tell Mr. Ryouga Senpai! Please forget I said anything!" She waved her hands frantically, then darted off down the road, turning off towards her own house and away from the group.

Ranma sighed and shook her head. I wish there was some way to let her know she's got the wrong idea about me'n Ryo. Gently, anyway. Ranma resumed walking. Come to think of it, EVERYONE seems to have the wrong idea.

She walked a bit further, wanting to drop the idea but, like a terrier with a bone, her mind kept returning to it. I mean, sure he's ATTRACTED to me… to my girl side! That's pretty normal. Hell, I've used it against him a few times to fool him! I always knew, back from when he called me cute…

Ranma slowed a bit. … He DID call me cute, didn't he? It was backhanded and snarky, but… Maybe even before he really fell for Akane. 'Course… I was also the girl that dumped him in the Heitowennichuan. Still… he was super pissed at me and STILL thought I was cute. That's… kinda flattering… She felt an oddly warm rush at that.

She shook her head quickly. Stop that! Since when did I care if Ryouga thought I was cute? That's irrelevant! It doesn't mean he l-lo… She swallowed. That was still a very scary word for her. It doesn't mean he LIKES me! Not THAT way!

She glanced up, eyes falling on Ryouga's back … Right?

000

Cologne had already cleared the restaurant for the day before they arrived. She had moved around several of the tables and chairs, and made a comfortable place in the middle of the floor large enough for all of them, with futons arranged so that they could recover comfortably. Dr. Tofu had set up some equipment in the corner of the room to record the procedure at the request of Dr. Hirano. Nabiki had pulled both Cologne and Dr. Tofu aside to discuss a similar set up at the Tendo Dojo when it was Akane's turn.

Ranma felt a little fidgety. This was becoming far more involved than she had expected. She could already feel a hum from Nabiki and Ukyou's emotions, being in close proximity to them, and some worrying instability from Ryouga.

How intense is this going to be with two more people? Especially with the kind of ki that Akane can produce? And is that gonna change as Akane trains? Or Nabiki for that matter? She chewed on her lower lip as she stood out of the way, feeling oddly disconnected from the bustle.

She noticed a movement in the corner of her eye and looked up to see Mousse watching from the kitchen doorway.

Oh. That's probably not good… Ranma glanced at the rest of the group, but they hadn't noticed the bespectacled martial artist yet. Ranma sighed, steeled herself for a confrontation and hoped she could get the conflict outside before too much damage was done.

She walked over to where Mousse was standing. At first she thought he simply didn't see her, but she noticed the reflection of light on his thick glasses change, indicating he was tracking her movements.

"Uhh… hey, Mousse. What's up?" Ranma asked, attempting nonchalance, though Mousse's uncharacteristically calm demeanor given the circumstances unnerved her.

"'What's up', as you put it, is that you are about to violate my darling Shampoo in the most profound way possible," Mousse said, though his tone was flat, devoid of the usual snarl. "And not only does she welcome it, but it apparently has the approval of the old…" the reflection shifted as his gaze flicked to the corner of the room where Cologne and Dr. Tofu were conversing with Nabiki, "…of the 'Honored Elder'."

"So… uhh… you know about the Link business then, huh?" Ranma continued. She knew Mousse couldn't see without his glasses, but the way the light was filtering in through the windows made those lenses almost totally opaque from this angle, effectively hiding his expression. She would have preferred to have a better idea of what was going through the other martial artist's mind.

"I've overheard enough," Mousse replied. "It certainly explains Ryouga Hibiki's sudden and dramatic shift in demeanor towards you."

Ranma's eyes narrowed. "Look, I'm kinda sick of people accusing me of brainwashing people, you most of all. The Link is Ryo's thing, and it's been there since Middle School. I ain't done nothing to him, just like I ain't done nothing to Shampoo! She and the others… we're all doing this to help Ryo's mother. Me'n Shampoo? That was decided way before this. But if you really wanna beef over this, then step outside and we can have it out somewhere quiet."

Mousse's gaze switched back to Ranma and, for a moment, the angle changed enough for her to see his eyes past the reflection. There was none of the usual rage there, however. If anything, his expression seemed more… resigned. There was a flicker of surprise in his eyes as well, as if he had heard something he hadn't expected.

"I'm not interested in fighting you, Ranma Saotome," Mousse said finally, looking away. "I won't interfere. I've lost. I know that and as… satisfying as beating you within an inch of your life would be, it wouldn't accomplish anything. I'm just here… to observe."

Ranma raised an eyebrow. She relaxed her stance a little and crossed her arms. "Observe?"

"If this is what Shampoo wants… then I want to see it," Mousse replied. His gaze shifted again, to the purple-haired Amazon. "Rin Ito has scolded me for not acknowledging what Shampoo wants. For not seeing it. I suppose something that will finally close the door on my chances with her is as good a time as any."

Ranma sighed. "Listen… It's fine if you wanna be here for this, but… you're just winding yourself up, y'know? You gotta know by this point that whether we do this or not, it ain't gonna change things between you and Shampoo, right? That's got nothing to do with me."

"Could you just walk away, Saotome?" Mousse asked tightly. "If it were Akane Tendo? Or Ukyou Kuonji? Or Nabiki? When faced with the task of picking one you refused. Do you expect me to believe that you could just let them go?"

Ranma paused a moment then looked down. "I almost did, once."

Mousse's eyebrows climbed above the rim of his glasses, surprise obvious despite the reflection.

"There was this guy… Shinnosuke. Akane met him as a kid in Ryugenzawa. He couldn't remember anything half the time… but he remembered her. He had the guts to tell her how he felt when I didn't and… and she was willing to stay with him. I almost… I almost walked away right then." Ranma shuddered a bit, not liking the memory.

"But you obviously didn't," Mousse pointed out.

"Wasn't my choice. Akane was willing to stay with him because he was dying… probably didn't have much time left… and it was her fault. Old injury he got saving her when they were kids. When we figured out a way to heal him… she said goodbye and came home with me." Ranma looked into Mousse's eyes. "But if it had turned out that she would have been happier with him… if he had been what she wanted… if she had told me to go… I would have. I did, actually. I only came back because she was in trouble." She turned slightly to glance at the dark haired Tendo and smiled a bit. "If Akane wants to be with me… if they all want to be with me… even if I don't understand it… if it's what they want and it makes them happy… then I'm happy."

"And what do you want, Saotome?" Mousse asked quietly.

"Why do I gotta want more than that?" Ranma glanced back at him with a scowl.

"Because a life lived for another is an empty thing, Saotome. Trust me," Mousse fairly spat.

Ranma's scowl deepened. Then she remembered what Rin had said. "Bull."

Mousse gave her a second surprised look. "…What?"

"I said 'Bull!'" Ranma continued. She walked up to him and poked him in the chest. "You know why? It's not about 'living your life for someone else' with you. Because Rin has you pegged! She's figured out what all of this obsession is about. You're trying to prove yourself."

"Of course I am!" Mousse shot back. "I've never stopped trying to prove myself to my darling Sham-"

"No," Ranma cut him off. "It ain't about Shampoo. She's just the… uhh… the figurehead for it! You're trying to prove yourself to the Amazons. Trying to prove to them that you deserve to live your life the way you wanna live it… and that's why I piss you off so much. Not just because of Shampoo, but because they're basically handing me the kind of life you've wanted all along and been told you can't ever have." She stepped back and gave him a self-satisfied smirk. "Tell me I'm wrong."

"I…" Mousse started, then closed his mouth. His gaze fell and she could see his eyes over the rim of his glasses, wide as he digested that notion.

He finally straightened and pushed his glasses back up with his middle finger. "Perhaps. I'd have called you a fool and a liar if that had come from you, but… Rin is perceptive sometimes."

"Sounds like you notice a lot more about her than you usually do about people, Duck-boy. Mebbe you should go talk all of this stuff over with her instead of lurking here in the shadows?" Ranma raised an eyebrow.

"I…" Mousse started, then closed his mouth. His gaze fell and she could see his eyes over the rim of his glasses, wide as he digested that notion.

He finally straightened and pushed his glasses back up with his middle finger. "Perhaps. I'd have called you a fool and a liar if that had come from you, but… Rin is perceptive sometimes."

"Sounds like you notice a lot more about her than you usually do about people, Duck-boy. Mebbe you should go talk all of this stuff over with her instead of lurking here in the shadows?" Ranma raised an eyebrow.

Mousse bristled slightly at the old slur but settled quickly and let the tension go. "I think… that if I am to follow her example and consider other people… I should probably settle matters with Young Mi first."

Ranma relaxed a bit and leaned against the wall. "Y'know… I know something about fiancee troubles. Do you wanna talk about it?"
Mousse scowled at her. "You aren't serious," he said flatly.

"Hey, she took a pretty good piece outta me and she damn near suffocated Ryo! I'd be overjoyed to help you with your love life if it cuts down on the number of attempts on mine, thanks," Ranma growled in return.

"You haven't much to fear from her now that she knows her mistake," Mousse replied.  "Shampoo, on the other hand..." Mousse glanced at her again and sighed. "I've been trying to locate her so I can talk. Rin has been helping me to try and figure out what to say to her, but I worry that Young Mi might attack her as well."

"Nabiki figured that much out," Ranma muttered. "So... what's your play? So you were engaged to her, right? Not like, an arranged thing, but something you agreed to? From how Rin tells it, you were pretty serious about her. You gonna try and patch things up?"

Mousse was silent a moment.

"I don't know," he said at last. "It seemed like such an easy decision at the time, when it didn't look like I had any other options. But then I heard of Shampoo's disgrace at your hands and suddenly..."

He sighed. "I don't know."

"Yeah, but... do you love her?" Ranma pressed.

"I don't know. I want to talk to her again to figure that out," Mousse said.

"And what about Rin?" Ranma said after a minute.

"What about her?" Mousse said, blinking.

"You can't have missed that she's got the world's biggest crush on you!" Ranma insisted. Her eyes widened as she noted Mousse's blank expression. "Oh my god, you did..."

"What are you talking about, Saotome?!" Mousse asked in frustration. "Rin has said nothing to me about any romantic intent..."

Ranma's sigh cut him off as she rubbed at her temples.

"It's obvious - even to me, Duck-boy. Why would she need to say anything?" Ranma asked, irritated. "That ain't exactly how these things are done, you know?"

"What are you talking about?" Mousse repeated in an exasperated tone. "That's exactly how they're done. When a woman desires a man, she states her intent to claim him and then does so. It's been that way in my village for generations."

"Newsflash. We ain't in your village!" Ranma protested.

"That was how Young Mi made her interest known, even if her approach was more... diplomatic than most Amazon women. She actually gave me the choice," Mousse replied, his scowl deepening. "Even given that, Rin has given no such indication..."

"Young Mi is..." Ranma bit down the urge to say 'crazy' or 'insane', or any of the other things that came readily to mind, "...very bold about the things she wants. Maybe I don't know how they do things in Korea, but here in Japan..."

"I have witnessed many other females here doing exactly the same thing, and in a very Amazonian manner. The approach that seemed at all atypical was Akane Tendo's, though she has shown the proper intent to assert dominance," Mousse replied. "Given your own self-admitted lack of understanding of females, I am wondering if perhaps you are the one who doesn't know how this is supposed to work, Ranma Saotome?"

"I… " Ranma stammered, then clapped a hand over her eyes. "You are such a blind idiot, Mousse."

"Tell me I'm wrong," Mousse shot back with a smirk of his own.

"Well… Rin's not like that! She's… She's shy. Telling someone you like 'em can take a lot of courage!" Ranma protested.

"Again… The only ones I've seen that have issues with that are you and Hibiki. Perhaps it is something wrong with how males are raised in Outsider culture." Mousse's eyes narrowed. "And Rin has never lacked for courage in my experience. She has shown far more than I would typically attribute to you."

"I… arrgh!" Ranma threw up her hands in frustration. "You know what? I give up. Sort out your own crap." She turned and stalked back to the group, fists clenched.

Three heads immediately popped up as she approached; Ryouga's, Ukyou's and Nabiki's. Ranma noticed them all looking in her direction with conspicuous synchronization, took a deep breath and forced herself to relax. She realised that she must be radiating enough frustration to come through the Link, even at range. Note to self: Find a good place away from everyone when I need to be grumpy.

"Everything all right?" Nabiki asked, approaching her with a look of concern. Her eyes flickered momentarily towards Mousse.

"Yeah, Mousse is just being his usual infuriating self," Ranma muttered. "I'm trying to see his side of things, I really am, but every time I think he's making progress he steps back into his aura smug, self-superior bullshit."

"Well… not everyone is reachable, Ranchan," Ukyou said with a shrug. "Something you learn listening to people's problems is that sometimes fixing their problems matters less to people than it does to be right."

"So why is he here, anyway?" Ryouga narrowed his eyes. "Should I ask him to leave?"

"No putting holes in the roof, Ryo," Nabiki replied. "I have to sleep here most nights."

Ranma shook her head. "No, no… He wants to see what this 'Link' business is all about. I figure if it keeps him from butting in, let him watch. He seems pretty resigned about it all anyway." She quirked an eyebrow at Ryouga. "Besides… I'm more than capable of 'asking Duck Boy to leave' on my own, Ryouga."

Ryouga blinked then flushed. "I… uhh… I didn't mean… that is… uh…"

"Now, now, Ranma, don't be hard on the poor boy," Nabiki chided her. "Boys like to feel useful, after all. You have to throw them a bone now and then."

"Hey…" Ryouga protested weakly.

"Yeah, like we used to do with you," Ukyou added, winking at Ranma.
"Wait, what? What do you mean 'like you used to do with me'?!" Ranma demanded.

"Oh Ranma, save me! Defeat this horrible fiend and rescue me!" Ukyou put the back of her hand to her forehead in a feigned pose of dramatic distress.

"I was saving you!" Ranma protested.

Ukyou rolled her eyes. "Uh huh. Except when Akane was in trouble too. Then me and Shampoo had to fend for ourselves!" She folded her arms and glared at the redhead.

"I… hey! That's not fair!" Ranma shrank back a bit as her danger sense kicked in.

"To be fair? I'm pretty sure Ranma knew you'd be okay when he did it," Nabiki replied. "When the porch collapsed and he had to choose between catching me or Akane, he caught me because he knew that she could land it."

"I'm not sure I like your implication we're somehow complicit in this 'Damsel-in-distress make-work' scheme." Ryoga muttered.

"Or that I should be using it on Ryo!" Ranma added.

"Y-yeah…" Ryoga agreed weakly. Something flickered in his eyes as he glanced at Ranma. "It's not like we're in the sort of relationship where that'd be appropriate…"

"Yeah!" Ranma agreed. "I mean… aside from the cover stories…"

"Which are just cover stories!" Ryoga added quickly.

"And that whole 'Common Law' thing…" Ranma scratched the back of her head sheepishly.

"Technicality!" Ryoga chipped in. "B-besides, Ranma's a guy!"

"W-well…" It was Ranma's turn to be sheepish. "I mean… I'm not right now…"

Ryoga frowned and turned to face Ranma fully. "What, are you saying that different rules apply to you just because you look like a girl right now?"

"I don't look like a girl, I am a girl! Different plumbing, different bathroom, different rules!"

Ranma said with a scowl.

"So you get to play by the girl rules when it's convenient, like getting to boss me around?" Ryoga growled.

"Oh yeah, convenience," Ranma shot back. "Tell you what. I'll drop the bossing around part if I also get to ditch having to get fitted for bras… do you have any idea how tough it is for me to find one that fits right and isn't something custom?! Or having to see the gynecologist? Yeah, the school nurse has me down for that now, too! Fun! Or… hey, maybe even just not having to have my period anymore, huh?!"

"I… uhh…" Ryoga blinked. "Does that mean…?"

"No, I am not having my period right now, you jackass!"

"Should… we stop them?" Ukyou asked uncertainly as they continued their verbal sparring.

Nabiki offered her a rice cracker. "I've learned that it's usually better to just let them go and watch."
And take notes."

Ranma glowered at the two, then folded her arms and sulked.

Dr. Tofu cleared his throat. "Ahem… we're ready for you now. If you are done with your personal conversation?"

"Yeah, sure, let's get this over with," Ranma muttered. "Don't say I don't do nothin' for ya, bacon breath."

Ryouga looked like he wanted to retort, but bit it back.

Probably because this is for his Mom's sake, and he's more worried about curing the family curse and saving her? some guilty part of Ranma's mind reminded her. She ground her teeth a bit, stalked over to the pile of cushions and plopped down next to Shampoo, who had been laid out on them. Her shirt was rumpled and open slightly, and she had several visible adhesive sensors applied to her upper chest.

"Since Shampoo has a much higher ki pool, I've had to increase the dosage, so I'll be monitoring her more closely," Tofu said. "Make sure to talk to her and keep her awake."

He intercepted the others as they approached and guided them to sit in a rough circle around Shampoo. "Make sure you're not touching each other. The point is we are trying to force your aligned ki, which seeks to mingle, to use Shampoo as a conduit and thus align her ki. If you are making contact with each other, it'll create a short and retard the process."

Cologne hopped over on her staff, watching with interest as the doctor arranged Nabiki, Ukyou, Ranma and Ryouga around Shampoo. He put Ranma and Nabiki on one side, with Ukyou and Ryouga on the other. Then he instructed each of them to put a hand on one of Shampoo's wrists or ankles, until each had a good hold.

"Fascinating," Cologne commented, hopping about to observe. "Are you sure this will result in a link? Such a thing has been encountered a few times by the Joketsuzoku, but none of our attempts to create a link intentionally have borne fruit."

"I believe Ryouga Hibiki's family has a unique quality that facilitates this 'alignment'," Dr. Tofu replied as he checked his equipment. "I imagine it's an incredibly rare quality."

"And valuable. I can see the potential applications," Cologne mused, giving Ryouga an appraising look.

Ranma's eyes narrowed. She knew that look! "He's not breeding stock for the Amazons, old bat! Keep your marriage schemes to yourself!"

Cologne chuckled, her ancient eyes bright with amusement. "Of course not, child. I can see that he is already spoken for. I wouldn't dream of interfering."

"You'd better not!" Ranma huffed, still eying her suspiciously.

Nabiki sighed and shook her head at Ranma.

"…What?" Ranma gave her a quizzical look.

"You're happier not knowing," Nabiki replied.
"Mmmm… Medicine very strong…” Shampoo murmured, her eyelids drooping. "Is okay for Shampoo to take nap?"

"It would be best if you remained awake," Dr. Tofu replied. "I expect the process does rely quite a bit on an emotional connection. You will need to be aware of the others for best results."

"You'll feel better once the Link is in place, sugar," Ukyou said gently, smiling at the Amazon girl. "Just try to focus on something."

"Like… what?" Shampoo asked muzzily.

"Well, it helped me to focus on how maddening Ranma and Ryousa are to deal with," Nabiki said playfully.

"Hey!" Ranma and Ryousa replied in synchronized outrage, earning a giggle from the drowsy Amazon.

"This… is safe, right Dr. Tofu?" Akane asked nervously, with a glance at Shampoo then at the machine. Its screen showed a mass of wavy lines and confusing numbers that she didn't understand, but she was aware that the machine's beeping was slowing and that many of the numbers were going down.

"The dosage is high, but not dangerous," Dr. Tofu replied. "She's in little danger from the herbs."

"But the herbs aren't the only part of this…” Akane pointed out.

Dr. Tofu sighed. "Nabiki's introduction to the Link was relatively low-risk. However, as the ki required increases, so do the risks involved. I do not believe that Shampoo is in any real peril from this, but there are a number of unknowns, especially if the poisoned ki that comprises Ryousa's directional disability should find a way to bridge the gap and cross over to one of the others."

"Do you think that's possible?" Akane asked softly.

Dr. Tofu took a breath. "With the current procedure? No. As long as Ryousa's own ki is at a high level, there doesn't seem to be any transmission. It's almost as if his own ki reserves act as insulation, or a form of natural quarantine. But when we reach the natural end stage, and his own ki has ebbed and left the poisoned ki exposed…” He shook his head. "We could end up spreading this curse amongst all of you."

Akane nodded and resumed watching, looking thoughtful.

Ranma herself was concerned about that idea. It was certainly a sobering thought… the idea of never being able to find her way, even along a simple path.

And Ryousa's been alone with that for his whole life. Ranma thought with a glance in his direction. Right now, this Link is the only thing that can save him and his mother from spending their whole lives alone. She closed her eyes and nodded. No… we're not going to lose to this! Ranma Saotome doesn't give up, and doesn't lose! Not even to some stupid 500 year old curse!

"Whatever Airen doing… keep up," Shampoo murmured. "Is nice… warm… feels like…” she trailed off with a gasp.

Almost in unison, Ranma, Nabiki, Ukyou and Ryousa gasped as well, the block that had kept them all separated crumbling suddenly, like an earthen dam eroded by the waters of a rushing river. Turbulent surges of emotion and ki dissolved that barrier and washed it away.
Shampoo's eyes went wide. She sucked in a deep breath and then another, as if she couldn't get enough air. Ranma leaned closer, taking hold of her shoulder with her free hand and Ryouga did the same on her opposite side, concentrating on keeping her steady until her breathing stabilised.

"S-so much!" Shampoo whispered, eyes flicking back and forth between them. "Ahhn… loud but no noise… shapes but not shapes… colors that not colors… ãn!" She squeezed her eyes shut.

"Stay calm, you three," Nabiki said sternly. "Ki is emotion, remember? So reign it in and keep calm until she can get used to it."

Ranma nodded and steadied her own breathing to focus on Shampoo. She could sense the chaotic swirl as all of their ki poured into Shampoo, filling the void left by the heavy dosage of herbs. Emotions so intense as to be almost physical things flooding into the girl and overwhelming her control. She focused on her feelings for Shampoo, and tried to send her that warm, reddish emotion that she had always found so comforting. She felt the others following suit, though Ryouga's emotional flow was tinged with sheepish pink.

Shampoo started to relax as the rush settled and their ki replaced what had been suppressed by the medicine. "Better…" she smiled at Ranma. "Shampoo worried Airen… can feel… Can also feel…" She blushed and closed her eyes. "Shampoo knew, but… didn't… didn't know know. Airen have much warmth inside. See now why Nabiki think we need this."

Ranma smiled and reached out to stroke Shampoo's cheek. "Yeah, yeah, don't get too sappy on me, Shampoo. Not in front of Ryouga. He's still a bit uncomfortable with the personal displays of affection… especially when it's two girls, you know?"

Sure enough, Ryouga was blushing and trying to look anywhere but at the two of them.

Shampoo grinned. She was perking up now that her ki levels were returning to normal and she had that mischievous glint in her eye again. Before Ranma could stop her, she slipped her hand from Ranma's grasp and reached over to gently turn Ryouga's head to face her, sitting up in the process.

"Shagua should not be embarrassed. Have nothing to be embarrassed about. Can see Shagua's heart now. Can feel concern for Shampoo. Even other things Shagua try and hide to… what is words… 'be gentlemanly'," she said, looking into his eyes. "Is very sweet."

Ryouga's blush deepened. Ranma felt an odd stirring of something dark and possessive in her, though she wasn't entirely sure who it was directed at yet.

"I… uhh… w-well, you're doing this for my family, so… so making sure you're safe is the least I can do… right?" Ryouga said nervously with an awkward laugh.

Shampoo's soft lips curled into a smile and her eyes narrowed into a familiar, seductively predatory expression. "Shampoo should give Shagua reward to show should not be so timid, yes?"

Ranma's eyes widened. She put her hand on Shampoo's shoulder, feeling a flash through the link that told her exactly what Shampoo was going to do, even if Ryouga hadn't caught on yet. "Shampoo, wait…!"

It was too late. Shampoo's slipped her arm around Ryouga's neck and pulled him closer. His eyes widened as she tugged him off balance but before he could correct and pull back she had leaned in to close the gap and pressed her lips to his in an enthusiastic kiss.

Ranma, Ukyou and Nabiki stared, too stunned to move or comment.
Ryouga naturally froze up like he had been turned to stone, his eyes wide and panicked for a moment, before going glassy as his higher functions immediately jettisoned all core operating files.

Not that this deterred Shampoo, who was more than accustomed to a similar reaction from Ranma. She held the kiss until she was satisfied then leaned back, smiling.

"There. See? Shagga not have anything to fear," she purred. "Might even enjoy if let self relax a little."

Ryouga slowly toppled over backwards, eyes staring sightlessly upwards.

Ukyou yelped and was the first to recover, moving to catch him before his head actually hit the floor.

"Shampoo!" Akane stepped out around the medical equipment, aghast. "Why would you do that?! Don't tease poor Ryouga like that!"

Shampoo arched an eyebrow. "Only tease if not serious."

"Shampoo!" Akane yelled. "He has a girlfriend!"

"Pokemon trainer girl not here," Shampoo said, her expression darkening slightly at the mention of Akari. "Her loss."

Ranma had finally started out of her stupor enough to move. Struggling to get her emotions under control, she took a deep breath, opened her eyes and was about to speak, but found that Nabiki was in her way now, looming over the Amazon.

"Pintou? What…?" Shampoo said, but Nabiki simply extended her finger and flicked the bell on the collar around Shampoo's neck. Shampoo's eyes widened and the color drained from her face.

"Got your attention, kitten? Good," Nabiki said, her voice stern. "Let me be perfectly clear then; You do not ever do that without asking and receiving permission. Is that clear?"

Shampoo swallowed hard. "Y-yes Pintou… Shampoo did not mean harm, just…"

Nabiki put a finger to her lips to quiet her. "What you meant doesn't matter. What you did does. I know for a fact that was Ryouga's first kiss, and while that might not be such a significant thing for you, it is for him. He also has a very complicated romantic situation that you have just inserted yourself into without consulting the rest of the people in your own complicated romantic situation. Now. I need your word of honor that you won't make any moves on anyone with whom you are not officially and consensually involved."

Shampoo bowed her head. "Y-yes, Pintou. Shampoo swear."

"That means no hanky-panky with Ryouga unless both he and Ranma agree to it, clear? Beforehand. No seducing them and getting forgiveness after the fact."

"Shi de, Pintou," Shampoo murmured. Then she blinked and gave Nabiki a shyly quizzical look.

"Good girl," Nabiki winked and gently ran her fingers through Shampoo's hair, almost as if she were petting her.

Dr. Tofu, who had been watching the exchange, sighed and shook his head. "I was about to say that if any of you wished to move, change positions or make contact with each other you may do so now, as long as you keep contact with Shampoo, but apparently you're already doing that. Just... all of you stay put for the next thirty minutes or so."

Ranma took a few more breaths with her eyes closed to steady herself and wrestle down her angry response. It's cool, Ranma. Nabiki took care of it and Akari didn't see, so it's probably fine. It's fine. It's fine.

She opened eyes and her gaze fell on Ryouga. He was still catatonic, propped up by Ukyou.

His first kiss, huh? Ranma thought, her mind flitting back to her own rather unpleasant first time, forced upon her by Mikado Sanzenin. She shuddered involuntarily. In the past she might have suggested that at least Ryouga's experience was better, but she could sense the overload through the Link when Shampoo kissed him, that conflicting mixture of confusion, surprise, arousal, and sheer terror. Something similar had happened to her when Shampoo had first kissed her. Now that she had that first kiss with Ukyou in the school halls to compare with, and even the later kiss with Shampoo afterwards, she knew the difference.

Mindful of keeping contact with Shampoo, she reached across her and touched his hand to strengthen her connection to him. She could sense the roiling, black feedback loop of guilt and fear. She glanced at Shampoo. "Can you feel that, Shampoo? All that black, spikey stuff coming from Ryouga?"

"Is... because of Shampoo?" Shampoo blinked, brow furrowing as she seemed to try and focus on Ryouga without really focusing her eyes. "Is... What emotion this?"

"Fear," Nabiki replied. "Guilt. Shame. The poor boy is a factory for the stuff. He's terrified of rejection."

"But... but Shampoo no reject!" Shampoo protested. "Do opposite!"

"You did it where others who might reject him could see. And... he's been toyed with like that before, leading to rejection." Nabiki shot Ranma a telling glance, that caused the redhead to blush a little with shame of her own.

"But how can...?" Shampoo glanced at her then blinked and looked down where his hand still was wrapped limply around hers, with Ranma's on top. She tightened her grip and reached up to bring Ryouga's head gently down so she could look into his eyes.

"Is okay. Shampoo not mean harm, Shagua," she said softly. As she spoke, Ranma felt a warm flow of emotion suffuse Shampoo's ki and flow through the connection. Shampoo had amazing control already, her long years of training allowing her superior mastery despite not having the kind of reserves she or Ryouga had. Ranma could feel the warmth as well, though she could tell it wasn't meant for her. That caused another odd little lurch of jealousy.

Shampoo's gaze flicked to her. She smiled again and put her other hand on top of Ranma's.

"Airen no need to be upset. Understand owe apology to Airen too. Shampoo push too hard, try take too much again. Get greedy."

Shampoo's efforts were bearing fruit. Ryouga's spiky, chaotic emotional landscape was starting to settle, some of the blacks and purples draining, though there was still a pinkish tinge of embarrassment and humiliation.

"I'm... sorry..." Ryouga mumbled. His eyes cleared, but were still unfocused, as though he was just waking up.
"No need. No do anything wrong," Shampoo said, her words accompanied by more warm ki. She glanced to Nabiki. "Maybe… is good time to take Akane, go shopping? Too too much emotion all at once now, and Shampoo need to talk with Airen and Shagua."

Nabiki sighed. "All right. Just remember…"

"Shampoo behave," Shampoo said solemnly.

Nabiki smirked and gave her a wink. "No. Ask permission. 'Behaving' is situational and optional." She kissed her on the forehead, then turned her attention to Ranma. "Are you going to be okay with these two? Seems they're going to be the bundles of emotion this time around."

"I… uhh… sure," Ranma said, a little uncertain as she realized with some surprise that Nabiki really did trust her and was essentially putting her in charge. "I'll keep anything from getting to roof-removing levels."

Nabiki smiled, leaned in and kissed her lightly on the lips. "Good." Leaning a little closer, she murmured in the redhead's ear, low enough that only Ranma could hear. "Don't be afraid of acting on what you want, okay? No one is going to take anything away from you for doing that."

"You sure?" Ranma replied skeptically, mindful of exactly how untrue that statement had been for most of her life.

Nabiki pulled back and gave her one of her confident smirks. "Of course I am. Nobody takes anything from Nabiki Tendo. I've made sure of that. I'm just extending that to include things that belong to the people I care about now." She reached out and ruffled Ranma's hair. "Shampoo knows where the condoms are if you need them."

Ranma was feeling kind of fuzzy and warm about Nabiki's absolute confidence, right up until that last statement. "...The what?"

"Pintou telling bad joke," Shampoo said quickly, glaring at Nabiki. "And going to have very cross kitten shredding favorite clothes if not leave before Shampoo get stuck with two broken boys instead of one!"

"Sorry!" Nabiki said, holding her hands out in a placating gesture. Her rapid 180 told Ranma that apparently Shampoo wasn't bluffing and Nabiki was fully aware of it. "I couldn't resist. You know how I get. Please let the designer jeans live."

"Will consider if let Shampoo borrow," Shampoo replied with a smirk.

"I could just buy you your own pair," Nabiki offered.

"No. Want in your pants," Shampoo retorted. Ranma could feel a bit of pride from her at having managed her own bit of clever double entendre. "Decide later if Nabiki need be in them or not."

Nabiki grinned back and raised an eyebrow. "I'll keep that in mind, kitten." She took a breath, stood and turned to Dr. Tofu. "Are we okay to leave just the three of them now? It's a bit exhausting sorting through all the noise with five people at once... and there's a sale on at the mall."

Dr. Tofu smiled, put a hand on Nabiki's shoulder and, with a deceptively casual air, sat her right back down. "I'm sure your sale can wait fifteen minutes, Nabiki. For the moment I need a chance to do an actual examination of all of you. I'm afraid I'll have to insist you put off any shopping trips, makeout sessions or massive explosions of ki until I'm done."
Ryouga was fairly certain Dr. Tofu had deliberately made the entire physical more awkward than absolutely necessary. He'd also reinforced several times the gravity of being in the kind of uncharted medical territory they were entering, and the need to advise him of any changes - emotional, physical or otherwise. Ryouga suspected the good doctor was a little annoyed with how flippan the group had gotten about the Link.

Truth be told, it was worrying Ryouga as well. Every time he had made a new Link, it was accompanied by, or in Ranma's case, caused by, surges of emotion. For Nabiki it had been grief while Ukyou's had been anger… emotions that Ryouga was familiar with and comfortable with.

With Shampoo? It was… affection. And it scared the hell out of him.

He wasn't entirely sure affection was the right term. He was fairly certain it wasn't love and it wasn't just raw attraction, though he sheepishly had to admit there was a definite subset of that in there. It was… just a powerful desire to give and receive affection, unrestrained by modesty or shame. It was like she was an abandoned puppy desperate for love.

Or perhaps kitten would be more appropriate, he mused. But the thought that it might come from some kind of deprivation suddenly made it more comfortable, which disquieted him somewhat. Do I really only 'get' feelings if they're from something bad?

He lay on his back on the futon that had been placed on the floor of the restaurant and studied the ceiling. It was probably the safest place to look at the moment, given what had happened and that the perpetrator of it was right next to him. Her hand was clasped with his and, although she wasn't lying unusually close to him, she felt too close. And just beyond her he was aware of Ranma and her usual complex whirl of emotions.

He closed his eyes. What am I even doing? How did things get this… this… He sighed, lacking the mental framework to define his situation outside of 'like Ranma's'. I should be on the farm with Akari, training pigs. I should have been HAPPY with that, damnit! I should have told her about all of this and insisted she be here. Instead I… I'm doing to her what I did to Anna. I keep running back to… to something I can't have.

Akane's face swam to the forefront of his mind. Am I just doing this to have a chance to have that kind of connection with Akane? Even after she broke my heart and I found out that she could NEVER love me like that? Am I that much of a glutton for misery?

Nabiki's face replaced Akane's, with that half-lidded look on her face that had become the source of a secret, guilty thrill for him. I didn't even notice Nabiki until she belonged to Ranma. Is that all I'm doing? Chasing after Ranma's girls because I want to deny Ranma?

Nabiki's face faded and Ranma's took its place. The twisting feeling in his gut got worse. He realized there wasn't even the duality there anymore. Am I chasing them… because I want HER? He squeezed his eyes shut tighter in an irrational attempt to block the image from his mind. Why did I chase Ranma to China? I should have been GLAD she… HE was gone! Why do I keep coming back to obsess over girls who don't know I exist just because they belong to Ranma?

Ranma's face shifted, her expression becoming the one she had worn the day of the Shi shi Hokodan. Worry and fear - and somehow he knew without a doubt, and for the first time, that it had not been for herself - not because of him, but for him. The knowledge that he had value to someone, enough that she would risk her life for him, had been burned into his mind by all that ki.
People caring about me scares me, he thought to himself. Then came an odd realization. Because I know I’ll let them down. Akane was safe to love because she had Ranma… Ranma would always catch her. I could see that. Ranma catches Nabiki. Ranma catches Ukyou. Ranma catches Shampoo. Hell, Ranma caught Kodachi when she needed it, too. Ranma catches everyone when they need it. And… that’s it. They need to be caught, so Ranma catches them. It never occurs to her NOT to. I guess that’s what makes them fall in love with her so readily.

He relaxed a little, feeling the self-loathing ease a bit. Ranma caught me, too.

He opened his eyes to focus on the ceiling of the restaurant again. It was getting dark - harder to make out the patterns - but he wasn't tired. Maybe that's enough… Nabiki only needed an hour or so. Ranma should be able to make it work from here. He turned his head to check on the girls, sure they would be sleeping.

He nearly bumped noses with Shampoo. "Guh…?!

Shampoo grinned at him. "Shagua lost in own world too-too long. Interesting to try and match what see in ki to what see on face." She frowned a bit. "Shagua use own thoughts to hurt self sometimes, though."

"I… uhh… That is…" Ryouga stammered. He could feel the heat in his own cheeks and cursed himself for his lack of discipline. Shampoo too, now? Hibiki, you're every bit as bad as you always accused Ranma of being!

"There, you do again," Shampoo said, and tapped him on the nose with her finger. "No."

Ryouga blinked. "I… what do you mean 'no'?'"

"Is mean what Shampoo said. Much much nicer shapes and colors just before Shagua started hurting self again." She cocked her head. "Is… guilt, yes? Why nice feelings make Shagua guilty?"

"Because those 'nice feelings' are things I shouldn't be feeling," Ryouga replied, looking back towards the ceiling.

Shampoo sighed heavily, reached over, grabbed his chin and, with surprising strength, turned him forcefully back to look at her. Her red eyes fairly flashed in the dim light as she fixed him with a stern glare. "Is no 'right' or 'wrong' to feelings. Is just feelings to feelings. Good or Bad come from what do with feelings. Be afraid of feelings, try and pretend not have feelings, hurt self because of feelings… only lead to getting all twisted up inside. Lead to doing bad things in end."

Ryouga blinked a bit in surprise. "I… But… What if…?"

Shampoo sighed again. "And you wonder why I call you Shagua?" she said, but she was smiling too. "Pintou right. 'Lost Boy' lost in more ways than one. Should stop worrying so much. Is with two pretty girls, should relax and enjoy!"

Ryouga rolled his eyes a bit. "It's not that simple…"

Shampoo raised an eyebrow and smirked a bit. "You sure?"

Ryouga felt a small surge of fear at that, and his pulse jumped as he noticed that same predatory look in her eyes that she had gotten just before she’d kissed him. That was a memory he had been trying very hard to suppress, given the situation. His eyes flicked down, unbidden to her soft lips, remembering how they had felt. He hiccuped and hastily pinched his nose shut. "Pleadth dobt."
"Pintou say ask permission first. Shampoo not do without permission," Shampoo said softly. "And only if Airen give permission as well. But… Will do. Not for pity. Not for scheme. Because was nice and want to do again. Shagua understand?"

"But… why?" Ryouga asked weakly. He glanced past Shampoo, nervous about Ranma's reaction to the conversation, but he could see the redhead was curled up against Shampoo's side, head pillowed on her shoulder and fast asleep. Ranma, this is the worst time for you to be sleeping! He briefly considered raising his voice to try and wake her, but he remembered how heavy a sleeper Ranma was.

"Why need reason past because feel nice?" Shampoo asked.

"Because… you've never shown any interest before?" Ryouga said quickly. "I-I mean, it's not like we never spent time together. There was that time when Cologne taught me the Bakusai Tenketsu…"

"Where Shagua tied up like game hen and face smash into boulder all day long?" Shampoo replied with some amusement in her voice. "Yes, very romantic."

Ryouga sighed. "Yes, well… that's the point! Nothing has been romantic until now. What changed your mind all of a sudden?"

"Not all of sudden!" Shampoo said indignantly, puffing out her cheeks in a way he had to admit was unnervingly cute. "Shagua just crazy rival for Airen for longest time. Then when finally calm down, start seeing have a lot in common with. Even when come to Airen."

Ryouga's gaze fell away. "L-look, about that…"

"Shagua love Ranma, yes?" Shampoo said softly. "No lie."

Ryouga was silent. Something about saying the words, especially in Ranma's presence, was simply too real for him. But after a few moments, he managed a timid nod.

Shampoo smiled. "Shampoo same way. Realize when we talk at Ucchan's how much. Start off hating Ranma, see Ranma as rival. Hunt, become obsession. Then see other side… have hope for a moment… then hope betrayed. Angry, hurt… but no can hate anymore. If had come back to Japan and found out Airen really was a girl? Not matter. Stopped mattering before even got back to China. Shampoo think it stop mattering to you, too."

"Ranma isn't into guys," Ryouga replied. "Hell, neither am I! How is this supposed to work?!"

Ryouga took a deep breath, attempting to find some flaw in her argument - refute it - find some good reason why this whole thing was stupid… and just let the breath out again as he came up with nothing. He felt her squeeze his hand and realized he had forgotten her hand was there. Timidly, he squeezed back.

"I don't… I don't get you. Any of you," He said softly. "I don't know why you all seem to be okay with this… even Akane! Not just me, but… with each other. With this… this whole arrangement. It shouldn't work. Everything about it tells me it shouldn't, but… it does. Why?"
"Is easy choice. Survival. We all in corner with no way out. Airen know this. If Shampoo fail to bring back husband, come back after second failure? Great grandmother's position protect Shampoo from first failure… give leniency… leniency was curse Shampoo live with entire life. But second failure? Death… exile… maybe worse. Even if not, live in disgrace. Be unperson. Ukyou? Ukyou live whole life shaped by Airen, by Panda-skin-rug-in-law's betrayal. Identity… sense of self… hang by thread now. Only hope to regain honor, regain identity. Airen give her hope for future. No Airen? She live… but not live, yes? Akane probably go bad way without Airen. Grow up hating all boys, thinking they all like idiots at school. Never deal with anger. Nabiki spend whole life with heart locked up in ice. All need Airen. Not have other choice. We fight, we struggle… but not hate. Not like idea of others lose so one can win. Always hold back… sometimes forget to fight, realize are friends. First real friends Shampoo have in whole life." Shampoo cocked her head. "Shagua and Airen like that too, maybe?"

"We were always rivals," Ryouga conceded. "Ever since middle school. I hated him. I… thought I hated him. I figured I was supposed to hate him. Honor and Martial Arts and all that. He never hated me back, though. And… sometimes I’d forget to hate him. He seemed so lost at times… so much confidence and pride, but… he didn't know anything. Even compared to me."

"Tell me about?" Shampoo asked. "But… can move arm? Is no comfortable like this."

"Uh… sure?" He released her hand and lifted his arm, not sure where she wanted him to put it. He realized a moment too late that it was a ploy as she squirmed in against his side and rested her head on his shoulder.

"There. Much much better," she said, relaxing against him.

Ryouga, for his part, had frozen solid, arm still in the air as he stared sightlessly off into the darkness. His heart started to thud in panic.

"Calm," Shampoo reminded him. "Shagua not have much physical contact, yes?"

"N-not… not with…"

Ryouga forced himself to un-tense, but he was still left uncertain where to lay his arm.

Shampoo glanced up at him then smirked. "Where feelings say you want to put hand? Shampoo give permission, anywhere Shagua like."

"Urk."

She giggled. "Calm. Hentai is okay, but where want to put arm, really? Shampoo know Shagua want more than just grope, yes?"

Ryouga swallowed. He closed his eyes and quickly lowered his arm and put it around Shampoo and Ranma before he lost his nerve.

"Good," Shampoo fairly purred. "Grope later, maybe."

"That's not exactly helping me to relax!" Ryouga grated hoarsely.

"Then talk more," Shampoo countered. "Tell about Shagua and Airen."

Ryouga closed his eyes. "I used to tell myself it was an honor thing. That I wanted to fight Ranma at his best. I wanted to beat him, not hunger or being out living in the cold or social awkwardness. Sometimes… sometimes I'd just kind of lose the distinction. He was the only person around who sorta understood." He smiled wanly at the memories. Now that the veil of his anger at Ranma had lifted and the 'bread feud' and Jyusenkyou curse were no longer the driving justifications for his relentless pursuit, he could remember those times more clearly. He could remember that Ranma had never been bothered by his directional problems and just taken to quietly leading Ryouga home after school when it got bad. He could remember how he'd started feeding Ranma or providing him a place to crash when his father got mean. He could remember the hours they had spent sparring… getting into trouble at school… or sometimes just talking.

"He was my best friend. He is my best friend. She is…" Ryouga said after a moment. "I don't even know anymore. I guess it doesn't matter. But… It was fun. All the bickering and banter… it was just playing - teaching me to stand up for myself. Ranma would make fun of me, but he'd stand up for me to anyone else. And the simplest, stupidest things would make him happy… a hot meal, a hot bath, a soft bed… these were luxuries to him. He kinda made me appreciate them more. And… and I guess I always figured he'd… he'd just be there."

Shampoo listened quietly. He could feel her eyes on him, sense the gentle swirl of her emotions, and the warmth of her against his side. He could sense Ranma's sleeping emotions as well. His hand twitched, then impulsively he moved it to brush Ranma's hair.

"He had terrible hair back then. Guess she took all my griping to heart." He let his fingers trail through the soft red locks. "The Tendos probably taught her about conditioner."

Shampoo giggled softly. "Good hair important," she agreed. Ryouga had a momentary rebellious thought, wondering if her hair was so soft to the touch as well. "So… when Airen leave…"

"He told me about a week before," Ryouga said. "At first I told myself that I was okay with it, but… I wasn't. The only person who understood me… who I wasn't too ashamed of myself to be around… was leaving. Probably forever. I think… I think I was sad, but… I was sad about a lot of things growing up. I learned it was easier to be angry about them. People make fun of you when you're sad. They see it as weakness. But anger? People leave you alone when you're angry. So… so I got angry. I decided I was going to challenge Ranma. One last big fight. I was going to prove I was better than him. Prove that I… that I didn't need him around anymore. Except…"

"Got lost," Shampoo finished for him. Her tone was gentle and quiet now, more like she was talking about something from her own past. "Couldn't find. Couldn't settle things."

"Yeah…" Ryouga breathed. "I didn't even question how insane it was. When I was able to find my way home, I packed up my things and set out after him. I used to be so scared of not being able to find my way home again or of getting too far away - but this time I just… I didn't even think about it."

"Scary being away from home for first time," Shampoo murmured.

"Terrifying," Ryouga agreed, thinking back to his first few harrowing weeks, before he'd started to learn the skills that would keep him alive over the next three years. "I had no business being out in the wild. But… turning back never crossed my mind. Every time I learned something new, I'd think 'Just wait until Ranma sees this!'. Every time I wanted to stop, to rest, I thought 'Ranma is still ahead of me. Ranma isn't resting. If Ranma can do it, so can I!' I used to imagine he was just ahead, just in the next clearing, just over the next hill, and that if I just kept pushing, I'd catch up to him. I kept practising what I'd say when I did… Trying to be dramatic… stuff like…"

"Ranma, you I kill!" Shampoo said softly, then giggled and looked up at him. "Like that?"
Ryouga blinked at her. "Y-yeah…" he felt a small smile come unbidden to his lips. "Something like that, I guess… what with you hunting her after she visited your village…"

"Was bread at feast Airen and stupid Panda-skin-rug-in-law eat. Was also 'bread feud'," Shampoo replied. "Ryouga chase boy. Shampoo chase girl. Finally catch, and find opposite."

"I wonder what would have happened if I hadn't found out right away?" Ryouga murmured. "For a second… when I saw her… before it clicked…"

"Would have fallen for. Hard," Shampoo said. She tapped his nose. "Be honest."

Ryouga laughed softly. "Yeah… yeah I would have." It felt like less of a burden to admit that now. He realized that Shampoo understood. That was a good feeling… one he had missed. It was enough to make him feel a little braver. "Maybe I kinda did anyway," he admitted in a low voice.

"Not bad thing," Shampoo said. "In good company." She hugged Ranma's sleeping form a little closer and snuggled against his side, closing her eyes. "Could get used to this."

"I…" Ryouga trailed off. It wasn't the fear that held him back this time, though.

"Does Shagua love Pokemon Trainer girl?" Shampoo asked softly.

"She loves me," Ryouga replied.

"Not question Shampoo ask."

Ryouga was silent again. "I want to," he finally answered. "I love… the idea of loving her. She's… she's everything I ever wanted. But…"

"But?"

"But so was Anna," he finished. "And I walked away from them both. I could never bring myself to give up on… something. I thought it was Akane… Now I'm not even sure what I want."

"Is common problem in Japan, yes?" Shampoo said with a smirk. Her eyes sparkled in the low light. "Always say want one thing, terrified of getting it. Or finally get, and not happy. Too too confused about what really want. Too worried about what should want."

"Well… what do you think I want, then?" Ryouga said, half expecting a pat reply.

Shampoo looked thoughtful. "Hmmm… Think… Shagua partly right. Want love, want place to belong, want be accepted… all things other girls offer, yes? But is more, something Shagua doesn't want to live without, so Shagua run."

"So… I'm greedy," Ryouga replied, a hint of bitterness in his tone.

"No. Shampoo think is important thing. Too, too important. Think Shagua chasing feeling from Middle School. Not just want acceptance and love. Want understanding too. Want someone like self. Probably why fall so hard for Akane, even though Akane not know secret, and not return love." She paused, thinking, then added. "Shagua like to save, like Airen. But bad luck. Maybe afraid he can't? So run sometimes for that, too. But also… think maybe Shagua want be saved too, sometimes."

Ryouga chuckled. "Yeah, that's me. A regular damsel in distress," he said sarcastically.

Shampoo scowled at him. "Not have to be damsel to be in distress! Too much you think you stronger by own self. But you fall many times, yes? No one to catch. Become timid. Fear fall. Fear hurt. Holds Shagua back. If have others who can catch… fear less." She closed her eyes and smiled slightly. "Shampoo learn this. Pintou teach." She cracked an eye open, smirk widening. "Shampoo will teach Shagua, if he let her."

Ryouga swallowed nervously. "I… errr… This isn't about that 'permission' thing, is it?"

"Maybe?" Shampoo said playfully, then sighed and shook her head. "No. Will no lie. Is trust. Shampoo want to earn Shagua's trust, so Shagua knows Shampoo will catch if he fall. Not need to be more than friends for that, yes?"

Ryouga sighed in relief, though part of him was disappointed. He had never really looked too closely at Shampoo before, but after talking with her… there was so much more to her than he had anticipated. "Right, no… of course. Sorry!"

She smirked. "Sex better if Shagua trust Shampoo anyway."

"Urk." Ryouga hastily pinched his nose again. "Coulb you stob teathsing?!"

"Why is so sure Shampoo only teasing?" Shampoo arched an eyebrow. "Is think self so unlovable, maybe? Is why get so desperate when girl say she like you even a little?"

"I… no… I…” Ryouga mumbled, then trailed off as she leaned closer, almost nose to nose with him. His eyes widened, heat burned his cheeks and his voice died in his throat.

She studied him a moment, as if looking for something, then nodded, and gave him a gentle kiss on the cheek. It was chaste but… too lingering to be sisterly. "Airen loves you. Maybe Pintou a little now, too. Shampoo could love too. Maybe too easy, even. Has bond with Shagua now."

She settled back down as he gaped at her.

"Shampoo know Akane and Nabiki tell to confess to Ranma," Shampoo added. "Shampoo say it too: 'Tell Ranma how feel.' If Ranma accept… Shampoo accept. Shagua have love, understanding, acceptance and people to catch, and who will catch Shagua when he fall." She winked. "Not bad deal, yes?"

Ryouga stared at her in disbelief for a moment, but the Link was still there, strong as ever, and he knew she was being dead honest. He opened his mouth to speak then closed it. He pondered a moment before trying again.

"I… guess I just… don't understand why?" he said at last. "That's… that's a big offer. I know I don't deserve it."

"Not about 'deserve'," Shampoo said. "And no as one-sided as Shagua think. Shampoo thinking about since Nabiki say Airen have feelings for you. Take… second look? Maybe wonder if things might have been different if Shagua block strike for Akane and defeat Shampoo instead?"

Ryouga considered. "That'd… still have been a mess. I'd still have been all wrapped up in Akane and blind to everything else."

"Mmhmm… But is different now… yes?"

He paused, and took a moment to consider, pushing past the anxiety and really looking. She was beautiful, of course, but that was hardly a good deciding factor. She had far more depth than his shallow first impressions of her had allowed for, though… and she was right - they had much more in common than he had expected. There was also something in her eyes. Hunger, but... the hunger borne of loneliness. But where Ryouga had wrapped himself in a cloak of cynicism to protect himself, he could sense through the Link that she had stripped hers away.

_I could probably learn a lot from her_, he thought, surprising himself. _She's braver than I am. A lot braver..._ He swallowed again and felt a bit of a lump in his throat. _A whole year and I never actually SAW anyone, did I? What a waste..._

"I... uh... I think you're someone I'd like to get to know better. I mean... even just as friends," he said carefully. "I'm kinda mad at myself that I didn't do so sooner, even though I had the chance."

"Have chance now," Shampoo replied. "Friends now, yes? Maybe more in time?"

He shivered a bit. He couldn't deny the concept was appealing, as unreal as the idea seemed. "I... I mean there's a lot of 'ifs'..." His eyes flicked to Ranma, who was mercifully still sound asleep. His gaze returned to Shampoo's, and locked onto her reddish brown eyes. They were full of expectation and... hope?

"Y-yeah..." he said finally, blushing hard and looking away. He was starting to wonder how anyone ever managed to say 'no' to those eyes. "Maybe more in time."

"Good," she said softly. He felt her snuggle in a little closer. "Sleep now, yes? Talk more tomorrow."

"Ummm..." Ryouga felt a moment of dread as he remembered what happened with Ukyou. With what was whirling around in his mind right now. "Uhh... A-about the Link..."

"Shared dreams, yes?" Shampoo murmured sleepily. "Is okay. Will be nice dream now. Trust Shagua."

"I'm... not sure I trust myself..." Ryouga admitted, but there was no answer. He glanced back at her and found her eyes had closed and her breathing had slowed into the steady rhythm of sleep. He could already feel the change through the Link and could sense her ki mixing with Ranma's as she slipped into the redhead's dreamworld.

Tentatively he moved his hand a bit, and gently ran his fingers through her hair. Just once. It felt a bit like trespassing, so he stopped, but he noticed that she smiled when he did it.

_Hibiki, what have you gotten yourself into?_

000 (Chapter 29 End)

_And that closes out Thursday in Nerima!_

_Thank you for sticking by me for this long, and I really do appreciate the feedback. Even if it doesn't seem like it's being used, I DO read all of it, and consider it. Sometimes I can't make use of it because it conflicts with things I've already written or plotted out, but i do appreciate it, and it all helps make me a better writer. And of course, if you just wanna say you love it or hate it, that's fine too._

_This is all going somewhere, I promise! I have a plan! It may be a stupid plan, but i have one! After all, those who fail to plan... never know the joys of that plan going up in flames in the first engagement... or something.
To Be Manly or To Be Warm

Three years ago

It was raining. Pouring, really. That heavy, misty rain that washed out all the color from the world and made everything look the same. It had been raining for two straight days and everything was soaked and unrecognizable.

It was ironic that this was the day Ryouga finally found his way to the empty lot.

It took him a minute to be sure it was the right one. The tent was gone, but he could see the spot where it had sat for so long, the grass dead and brown and garbage strewn about, abandoned by the former squatters.

He stumbled over to the spot, staring at it. He left.

He clutched the ragged, dog-eared folded paper in his hand, crumpling it. He willed for the familiar dark shock of messy black hair to pop into view from over the retaining wall, or for the other boy to give his usual infuriatingly casual greeting.

He left.

The full import of it hit him like a kick to the chest. Ranma was gone and he had no idea where he had gone, or when he might come back - if ever.

He LEFT!

He crushed the letter in his hand, clenched his fists and shook with fury. How DARE he!? We made a PROMISE!

You made a promise for four days ago.

We were going to have one last fight! Settle things without any regrets! We swore we would be there! Both of us!

You swore to be here FOUR DAYS ago...

Ryouga trembled with emotions that roiled between shame, despair and unfocused anger. The curse had never been this bad before. He had been lost for hours... maybe even an entire day, but never this long!

I tried! He struggled to shut out the feeling of loss - the feeling that he had missed out yet again and that he had lost something important. I tried to be here! I tried my hardest! I didn't want him to go like this! He squeezed his eyes shut and sank to his knees as the blackness of despair filled him.

Everyone left, after all. Everyone left and it was his fault now. Maybe it always was.

He opened his eyes and gazed up into the rain. The rain was good. The rain hid the tears. He stared sightlessly up into it, feeling the shame and self loathing eat away at him inside, his doubts bubbling up from the black ooze to remind him that no one liked him. That they all thought he was weird. That he was a homeless vagrant. Even Ranma.

He had been a fool to think Ranma would understand. Why would he? Ryouga had just been a burden, making Ranma lead him home day after day.
He probably only did it for the free food. A dark thought bubbled up from the morass. It was… comforting. Maybe it wasn't such a big deal to break his word, right? If Ranma was just a vagrant and the son of a thief anyway…

If he was really my friend, he would have waited. Another dark thought. Soothing and horrible at the same time. He knew somewhere deep down it was a betrayal, but it was the only way he knew to save himself - the only way to make it so it wasn't him that was so horrible. I bet he never even showed up! The coward!

His breathing grew faster. Anger was easier. Anger pushed the darkness back a bit, kept it from suffocating him.

"He should have waited…" he said softly.

It was a promise! A promise between men! A matter of honor! He should have been here no matter what!

"He should have waited!" he repeated, louder, more firmly. His voice was lost in the rain.

He was afraid! He knew his tricks weren't going to work this time! He RAN!

"He should have waited!" Ryouga shouted.

The heavens were unimpressed. The rain continued to fall.

I'm never going to see him again…

His breath caught in his throat and, for a moment, the anger flickered and died.

No.

"No…" he breathed, realizing it didn't matter. What was the point of making it Ranma's fault if there was no Ranma? Who would even care but Ranma, anyway?

His eyes fell as the darkness rose up again, the despair threatening to swallow him.

What does it matter? What does any of it matter?

His eyes fell on a rain-soaked pamphlet. Its bright red color caught his attention a moment, a brief distraction from his own downwardly spiralling thoughts. After a few minutes of just staring at it, he mustered the herculean will needed to force his limbs to move, to reach over and pick it up.

The pamphlet was old and faded, worn at the edges and soaked nearly to disintegrating. He couldn't read most of the words, but he could make out that it was about some place in China. It looked like a travel brochure or some kind.

"China…" he breathed.

Suddenly, he lurched to his feet, still clutching the pamphlet. He was exhausted, he had been running literally all day, but it didn't matter. He was going to follow Ranma even if it meant going to China. He was going to make Ranma see that he was wrong. They were going to have their fight, and then…

And then…

He would figure out the rest from there. He turned, mumbling to himself. He didn't notice at first that there was anyone there until he heard his name.
"Ryouga…?"

He looked up. There was a girl standing there. She was a few years older than him, though it was hard to tell because she was no taller than he was. She was wearing a dark silk shirt and black pants, and her red hair was plastered against her face by the rain. Two bright blue eyes peeked out at him, the only real color in the rainy world around him.

His eyes widened and the pamphlet fell from his nerveless fingers. "R… Ranma?"

000

Present Day

Ryouga woke with a start. He almost sat up, but something was pinning his side, and some instinct told him to stop before he pushed it off. He took a few quick breaths, trying to focus his eyes. He rubbed them as the unfamiliar ceiling resolved itself.

Right… the Nekohanten… He groaned and relaxed back onto his pillow as his heart rate gradually dropped back to normal.

He had been back in that empty lot. He could still feel the wet from the rain and the soggy texture of that travel pamphlet between his fingers. He had been right back in that moment, with all the emotions that came with it. It was already starting to fade, but he got the feeling this wasn't the first time.

"Ryouga?"

He moved his hand and for a moment he was worried it was still the dream. Those same blue eyes that he had seen in it were looking back at him, soft red hair framing a face full of concern.

"Ranma…" he breathed, then his memory caught up with him. He glanced to his right, and saw Shampoo against his side, her head pillowed on his shoulder. She was still asleep, apparently deeply enough that he barely heard anything from her through the Link. He felt a twinge of worry, like he was caught in someone else's bed (specifically Ranma's), but when he turned back to her, he still saw only worry on her face.

"Sorry…" he said quietly, not wanting to wake Shampoo. "Bad dream. I didn't mean to…" He trailed off… "That was you, wasn't it? In the dream. How much…?"

"Was that what happened?" she asked softly. He could sense a whirl of emotions from her. Regret… Pity? Sadness even. "What you were feeling? I…"

"I'm sorry," Ryouga said again, closing his eyes and looking away. He couldn't stand to see the pity there anymore, though the Link wouldn't let him close it off so easily. "You… never deserved any of that anger. I using you as an easy out from hating myself. I shouldn't have expected you to wait one day, much less four."

"I tried," Ranma replied. Ryouga blinked and looked back at her.

"I knew you were trying to get there. I knew about your problem, and I knew it was getting worse." She shook her head and laughed. "It… it was the first time I really stood up to the old man, you know? He was getting antsy after the first day, but I just refused to listen to him and stood in that spot." She sighed. "At the end of the third day, he just beat me until I gave in."

Ryouga looked away again, guiltily. "That doesn't exactly make me feel better, you know. You shouldn't have waited that long for me. It wasn't worth it."

"After what I just saw… after that dream, you're trying to tell me that?!!" Ranma raised her voice a little. "D'ya think I'm that stupid, Ryouga?!!"

Ryouga's eyes widened and he shook his head. "Th-that's not…!

She sat up and folded her arms, huffing and looking indignant. "It did mean that much to you. And it meant that much t'me, too! I… we gave our word, right? The first time I did that an' it really mattered." She took a breath and her expression softened as she seemed to study the far wall off to the right. "I… suppose you never found the letter, huh?"

"Letter?" Ryouga said, confused.

Ranma sighed, a bit of color rising in her cheeks as she rubbed the back of her head. "It was… I vaguely remember leaving you a note or something explaining everything. I think… I'm pretty sure I even apologized, so… If you want any indication of how bad I felt…" She glanced at him shyly. "I… don't remember exactly what was in it… But I remember it was important. I stashed it behind that loose brick in the retaining wall, the one you used to smuggle the homework assignments to me when Pops was being a jerk and wouldn't let me go to school."

"I… didn't look," Ryouga admitted. He remembered he had more or less stumbled his way home eventually, packed up and left for China. "How do you not remember what it said if it was so important?"

Ranma scowled and hunched, her blush deepening. "I… I just don't, okay? It was probably some stuff about promising to challenge you again when we were men or something like that, I don't know! I forget a lot of stuff, okay? It's… forget it! We gotta get up anyway. It's still a school day and the Old Ghoul will probably want to open for the breakfast rush."

"How thoughtful of you, son-in-law. We'll make a dutiful husband of you yet," Cologne's voice wafted in from the kitchen, causing both teens to freeze. "If you're done with your charming little heart to heart, I could in fact use some help in the kitchen preparing for that breakfast rush. There are still dishes left over from last night."

"Damn it Ryouga, now look what you did!" Ranma huffed.

"Now, don't complain. I did miss out on a fair bit of business traffic last night to accommodate you kids and I know you wouldn't want me to think that you're freeloaders, right?" She smirked. "Besides, the furo is small, and while I would be tempted to allow Son-in-law and Shampoo to share, it's a school day and, knowing my great-granddaughter, chances are you would be late. I wouldn't want to cause Ranma any new problems in his challenge with that Himura girl, now would I?"

"Y'know, Ranma and I could just go together and save some time," Ryouga said, his arms already up to the elbows in suds as he scrubbed at dried-on rice, egg and sauce. He watched Ranma out of the corner of his eye to gauge her reaction and saw her tense up immediately.

Cologne thwacked him on the back of his head. "You're doing dishes, sonny! You can have your turn when the girls are done."

"Ow! It was just a suggestion you old freak!" Ryouga's protest earned him another solid whack, this time against his forehead.
"WASH!" She said in a tone that told him he had best stop talking, lest the beatings get worse. Despite his resilience, Cologne knew how to make those staff blows HURT. She turned to Shampoo, who was still rubbing the sleep from her eyes. "Go show son-in-law where the linens are. Let her go first. Your uniforms are folded and on your bed."

"Yes Great-grandmother," Shampoo said, smiling at Ranma and gesturing towards the stairs.

Cologne tapped her on the backside with her staff (Though far more gently than she had with Ryouga). "And no hanky-panky! I'm serious, child. I appreciate your enthusiasm for producing an heir, but there is a time and place for such things, and before school is not it."

Shampoo bowed, suitably chastised. "Shampoo know, Great-grandmother. Will be good. Save for weekend."

"Good girl," Cologne chuckled and watched as they headed up the stairs.

With a sigh, Ryouga returned to scrubbing. Ranma looked TERRIFIED when I suggested that. Almost like… like when her mother would come over and there was a danger that she might find out about the curse - back before Ranma defused all that. He considered. Well, maybe not QUITE the same. Not a 'fear for her life' kinda look, but… still… it's like…

"Someone is very deep in thought," Cologne commented, startling him. "And not the job he was given!"

"Uhhh, sorry!" Ryouga said quickly though, after a moment, he realized that the comment had not been punctuated by a smack from the staff.

"Sorry Elder," Cologne prompted. "I permit Ranma's casual disrespect because she's family and because she doesn't know any better - thanks to her rather wretched parents. But you have a perfectly good mother who I am certain taught you different. If you intend to be part of this family, I expect you to hold yourself to a higher standard. As an example to Ranma."

"Sorry Elder, I…" Ryouga replied automatically before his mental gearbox threw a cog. "Wha… wait, what?!"

Cologne sighed and rolled her eyes. "Isn't that what your obvious little test was about, boy? You were seeing if Ranma was comfortable reverting to her natural form around you. I presume the answer you got was the one you were expecting? The look on her face was quite plain."

Ryouga sighed. "Yeah… It's like… it's almost like… She's forgotten that I know about her curse… that she thinks that I think she's a girl, and… and… something bad will happen if I see her as a guy?" He scratched the back of his head. "I've been trying to figure it out, but I still don't really get it, honestly."

Cologne clucked her tongue and hopped up into the counter in front of her, sat down and pulled out her pipe. "Honestly, you cannot be this dense, boy," she said as she took out a match and lit her pipe. "She knows you are aware of her true nature. She is simply trying very hard to avoid reminding you of it."

"But… why?" Ryouga replied, still confused. He put the dish he had been washing onto the rack, still wet.

"Dry the dishes before racking them!" Cologne snapped, thwacking him on the head. She waited until he had picked up the plate and started to dry it before taking a puff on her pipe. "It's because she wishes you to see her as a girl, and only as a girl."
"Why would she want that, though?" Ryouga grumbled, scrubbing at another plate with more than recommended force.

"Careful with the china, boy. That's imported from back home!" Cologne warned him, then took another puff. "And isn't the reason obvious? Why would a girl want a boy to see her as a girl and not just 'one of the guys', as you might put it?"

Ryouga paused in drying the plate he had just rinsed. "To steal a scroll for some secret martial arts technique?"

Cologne promptly bopped him on the head. "Don't get smart, boy!"

Ryouga muttered darkly and rubbed the sore spot on his head. He could tell he was going to have a few lumps there later. "Give me a break! That's why she did it last time!"

"And do you have any scrolls of secret techniques?" she asked. Then her leathery face stretched into an awful smirk. "Or perhaps you are just happy to see her?"

Ryouga dropped the plate into the sink, which was, thankfully, still full of water. He backed up, feeling his face burn. "H-hey!" He folded his arms tightly and looked away. "I-I would never…! Listen, you perverted old hag…!"

She hopped down and jabbed him in the gut with her pointy end of her staff, driving the wind from his lungs. He sank to his knees, clutching at his middle while he gulped for air and tried to coax his spasming diaphragm to work.

"Don't be stupid, boy. Your interest in her is painfully obvious. Something I see my Shampoo has picked up on… and accepted." She folded her hands behind her back and started pacing in front of him. "Which has come as something of a surprise. My dear Great-granddaughter is not overly fond of sharing… or at least she hasn't been up to now. It seems she has grown somewhat through this arrangement." She glanced at Ryouga. "Fair enough. As my heir, she's entitled to bend the marriage laws somewhat, and bringing two outsider males with the obvious qualities you and son-in-law possess… well, there will be some jealousy, certainly, but she's dealt with that all her life. Though don't think you won't have to pass more than a few tests to ensure your worthiness and commitment. Ranma did, after all."

"Thanks… that's great… really…" Ryouga wheezed, finally getting back enough breath to speak.

She turned and glared at him through narrowed eyes. "It is great, though your flippancy suggests that you don't understand just how great. For a Joketsuzoku warrior to accept an outsider male freely without requiring he defeat her in combat first is a rare honor. Her affection is a gift - one that I plan to spend the next few years making very sure you are worthy of." She gave him another brief, awful smirk. Then it faded. "As I said, though, none of that is overly concerning to me, now that son-in-law's affection and commitment to Shampoo has been cemented. What concerns me is the change I have seen in Ranma, which appears to be primarily centered around you. Given the nature of this Link that you and she share, and which you now share with my Great-Granddaughter, you can understand the basis for that concern, yes?"

"Look, I'm not trying to pull anything, and I'm not trying to screw up Ranma's relationship with Shampoo, or muscle my way into it, or any of that!" Ryouga said. "I'm just trying to cure my direction curse so I can find a way to cure my Mom's! I'm… I'll be out of Ranma's hair once this is all over with."

Cologne grunted, folded her arms and nodded. "I see."
"O-okay…" Ryouga blinked, relaxing a bit as he sat back on his haunches. "So… we're good then?"

Cologne responded with a solid thwack to the head, hard enough to make him see stars for a moment.

"Of course not, you stupid boy!" Cologne croaked. "Because that answer tells me you're clinging to denial as tenaciously as son-in-law! How you can be sharing your emotions all this time and be so blind to the truth still baffles me! If my generation were as blind as yours appears to be, we would have all died walking off of cliffs!" She thumped the end of her staff on the ground. "I am trying to help you, boy! Help you and my Granddaughter before all of this ends in heartbreak and dishonor!"

"What are you talking about?" Ryouga asked querulously, rubbing the top of his head.

"Son-in-law is expressing interest in you, as a female, and has even gone to some not inconsiderable lengths to be a female in your presence! Have you not noticed her change of hairstyle? Of mannerisms? Or her adoption of pet names for you?" She poked him in the chest with her staff to punctuate her point. "I have been watching, young Ryouga. She spends more time with you and has sought out a level of physical closeness and intimacy that is remarkable given her usual… 'skittishness' with regards to such things. And she is avoiding changing forms around you for fear of undoing all of the hard work she's done to draw you in!"

"I… you make it sound like Ranma is trying to seduce me!" Ryouga squawked.

"Isn't she?" Cologne chortled. "Oh not on a conscious level, mind you. That super-masculine mindset her idiot father imparted to her makes that nearly impossible for her, even now. But it's hardly a new thing, is it? Women spend excessive time with cosmetics, hair styling, exercise regimes and outfits, all to enhance their allure, and are often loathe to be seen by their beloveds without such accoutrements. For a shapeshifter, choosing the most appealing base form would be a natural part of that process."

Ryouga clenched his fists. "But… Ranma isn't a girl, is she?" he asked tightly. "This is wrong. Even if she does care about me, she shouldn't have to… to pick one form for my sake!"

"Why not?" Cologne bopped him on the head again, but more lightly. "Do you expect her to become enamoured of your piglet form all of a sudden? Or do you think that she should not be with my Great-Granddaughter because of her fear of cats, or that her revulsion towards them means she cares about my Shampoo any less?"

"I… well…" Ryouga stammered.

"Which is precisely why your pig-headed attitude is the problem!" Cologne added. "She wishes for you to see her as female, as something attractive and desirable, and she won't be comfortable in her male form around you until you accept her as such and you've built sufficient trust that she can be certain you won't reject her. I would think, given your struggles with Akane Tendo and your own curse, that you'd be somewhat more sympathetic to such feelings."

Ryouga stared at the floor a moment, as if the pattern on the linoleum held the secrets of the universe - or at least the secrets of his own personal little world. "So… Ranma Saotome… man amongst men… wants to be a woman… for me?" he asked, carefully piecing together the concepts. "Without any magic potions or spells or whatnot involved?"

"Well, I suspect your Link has had more than a small effect on things," Cologne said. "But from what Dr. Tofu has told me of it, the Link merely brings understanding and perspective. It does not inject artificial emotion like various types of love magic. The emotions are genuine, even if they were given a little assistance in flickering to life. Also…” she trailed off and looked away.
"Perhaps I am still mistaken, but all of this has reawakened an old suspicion in me."

"Old suspicion?" Ryouga said, leaning a bit closer to listen.

Cologne sighed. She folded her hands behind her back and turned away from him. "What I am going to tell you I tell you in the strictest confidence. You may discuss this with Nabiki Tendo if you wish, I trust her to use the knowledge appropriately, but none of the others until I've had a chance to discuss it with them, and not until after Son-in-law is ready to accept the implications."
She took a deep breath. "When my Great-granddaughter told me about Ranma, there was still some doubt as to Ranma's true gender. The change - hot water male, cold water female - that she reported suggested a male true form, of course, but that the girl claimed to be female despite such a claim invoking a literal death penalty was odd. So when I first came to Nerima, I tested son-in-law. I forced him into a form that should have been unnatural for him, placed before him an impossible test and waited for him to crack."

"But he didn't," Ryouga replied.

"She didn't. Though all along she loudly proclaimed her male nature, she displayed a… comfort with her female form that is unusual for Jusenkyo sufferers. There are certain 'adjustments' the curse makes to allow the victim to function, certainly, but… high level martial arts? The only other I have heard attaining a modicum of such control is Mousse, and admittedly the boy is exceptional. And his ability to wield weapons as a duck does not compare to Ranma's mastery of her form." She chuckled. "Of course she won my impossible little contest, without submitting to my demands or surrendering her male identity, so I could simply chalk that up to exceptional determination and will. I had noticed that, despite her experience, her exceptional level of comfort with her female form has continued, and she shifts smoothly between them."

"What are you saying?" Ryouga asked, cocking his head.

"That Ranma appears… uniquely compatible with her Jusenkyo curse. So much so that it may be a mistake to consider her as one gender or the other. Something that is… not without precedent," Cologne continued.

"Wait… so… someone getting… well, 'caught between'… this has happened before?" Ryouga asked.

"There have been many reactions to Jusenkyo curses. Most have been difficult to live with. It is a curse after all. You young people have adapted well, but there have been many cases of older victims being unable to adjust." Cologne resumed pacing. "There are also cases of those who have come to prefer their cursed forms. Men electing to live as women, women as men, individuals afflicted with curses that bring about personality changes finding their new personalities better suited to life… even a few cases of sufferers of animal curses becoming feral and abandoning their humanity." She clucked her tongue. "That Taro boy skirts dangerously close to that abyss, though thankfully none of you kids have shown any signs of it."

"So… the curse does change something in our heads?" Ryouga said nervously.

Cologne scoffed. "The curse changes physical form, grants some reflexes and instincts, and nothing more. The rest is all supplied by the human mind's inexhaustible capacity to warp itself. For example, a weak man of low importance and average intelligence might find himself transformed into a powerful beast, where his 'average' human intelligence is a tremendous advantage. Free from the restrictions of society and with the power to take what he wishes, he can slake his long-repressed bloodlust without consequences. Despite our best attempts to keep intruders out of the Jusenkyo grounds, one arises every generation or so. The curse one receives from the pools is no act of random chance; there is an intelligence… a will to the place. The curses bear significance to the victim's life. Shampoo's was an obstacle to her pursuit of love, one she had to overcome. Mousse's represents his desire for freedom from the cultural restrictions placed upon him and his own physical limitations - a form that can go nearly anywhere. Yours is… well, yours is self-evident." She chuckled.

Ryouga ignored the barb. "And you think Ranma's was…"

"At first I thought it was an obvious counter to that super-masculine upbringing. But as her father's cursed form is an accurate reflection of his lazy, gluttonous and unimposing true nature, it is possible that Ranma's curse reflects something buried within her. Something she even now struggles to accept, but which the curse will not allow her to bury or deny." She hopped back up into the counter and took another puff of her pipe. "In fact, I am shocked it took as long as it did for it to creep into her psyche. Perhaps the hope of a cure staved it off for a time. No matter. For now… she is in a fragile state and, for whatever reason, she has tied this emerging identity to you. So… the question is what you will do with it?"

Ryouga crossed his legs, still sitting on the floor. He stared at his hands a few moments. "What should I do? How do I avoid… hurting her?"

"Could you accept her? As a woman? Even as she is a man to others? Can you accept that contradiction and resolve it within yourself?" Cologne asked.

Ryouga closed his eyes. That wasn't the problem! That was never the problem! He wrestled with it a moment. Accepting Ranma as a girl? That was far, far too easy. The idea that might be what she wanted? That just made it more enticing. But taking that step felt like a leap over a great, yawning chasm.

Ukyou's words came to the surface. I learned the hard way over this past year that you can't have both. I'm a lot of things with Ranchan… but a trusted outsider isn't one of them. That kind of trust doesn't survive the first kiss. Once there's that… investment in the other person, it changes things, for better or worse.

"I… feel like there's no going back once I do," he said softly. "If I do… If I tell her how I feel, then… things will change. One way or another."

"That's how love works, boy," Cologne said. "It's a gamble. But, whether you take it or not, you cannot stay here - in this moment. You can only move forward."

"People keep telling me that," Ryouga replied. "But… taking that step… It's terrifying."

Cologne chuckled. "That's how you know it's the real thing, boy." She hopped down from the counter, walked over and gave him a pat on the head. "And that's enough for me. It appears you have the support of the others, too. All that remains is to get the notion through Ranma's thick skull. I would also hope you have more than a passing affection for my Great-granddaughter as well?"

Ryouga blinked. It took him a second to switch gears. It was a strange idea for it to not only be allowable for him to like more than one girl, but for it to be expected of him. "I… well… I didn't spend much time with Shampoo before all of this started, but… After last night? I… well, I can see how things might have gone differently for me if I had gotten to know her sooner."
"It's a shame you didn't. The competition did wonders for Ranma and Akane's relationship," Cologne said. "But that's good. Despite what salacious rumors might claim, my Great-granddaughter is very particular about the company she allows to share a bed with her."

Ryouga ducked his head, face burning.

"Now, come along, Son-in-law, you have dishes to finish before the girls come back down." She hopped back up onto the counter and thumped her staff against the countertop. "Hop to it!"

"Okay, okay, I'm…" Ryouga got to his feet, then froze. "…son-in-law?"

"Yes. As I understand it your marital status to Ranma is already secured, and for a male to share a Joketsuzoku warrior's bed without being wedded to her would mean death, so I will be charitable and take the forging of this Link with my Shampoo as a proposal. Congratulations, boy! Not many can count themselves so lucky as to be part of the harem of the heir to the legacy of the Joketsuzoku!" She chuckled as she refilled her pipe.

Ryouga rubbed his forehead. He hadn't been prone to headaches before all of this, had he?

Ryouga rubbed his forehead. He hadn't been prone to headaches before all of this, had he?

It might not be that bad, a small, hopeful voice said from somewhere deep inside. He felt a goofy grin spread as he had a mental image of having his arms around a laughing, smiling Ranma and Shampoo. Maybe curled up on a couch in front of a roaring fire together? But what about Nabiki? He felt a small pang, then realized that she could be there too, and she suddenly joined the pleasant fantasy bringing in a tray of steaming mugs, and his grin widened. Why the hell not? He plunged his hands into the soapy water, content to enjoy the happy daydream as he worked.

"Watch out, the water's cooled quite a bit while we were talking," Cologne commented dryly, just as Ryouga vanished into a pile of clothes on the floor. A small black piglet wriggled free of the pile and whimpered plaintively.

Cologne clucked her tongue and shook her head, blowing a ring of smoke at him. "I can see we have a long way to go when it comes to mental discipline, son-in-law."

000

The screams were hardly the worst part.

Himura had claimed the changes would be slight and so the process should not be overtly painful. She had been wrong. The figure on the other side of the glass had convulsed and writhed as bones cracked and muscle and sinew re-wove themselves, becoming sickening bulges and ripples under the skin.

The screams just made it harder to look away.

The worst of it was over before Mineko even arrived, apparently. Regardless, she had to fight the urge to not throw up, and it was only a stalwart determination to see it through that kept her breakfast down.

This is for the best. It's for the best! This will make her life better! Mineko repeated as a mantra to herself as the screams finally abated to a pathetic whimpering.

"I admit, the initial formulation is somewhat… rough," Himura said dryly. She had watched the entire scene so far with complete dispassion.

"Outsiders botched recipe," said the green-haired girl in chinese silk next to them. Mineko had always felt uneasy around the foreign girl. Despite being about the same age, she always felt small when the girl looked at her, as though she was in danger. The girl's movements spoke of power and confidence, and she seemed to look out on the world like a tiger, assessing threats, rivals and prey. Mineko had no illusions about which category she fell into.

"You think the substitution caused this, Tan Pohn?" Himura asked, her tone businesslike, unaffected by the scene in front of her.

"Will it have the desired effect, then?" Himura asked.

"Yes. As said, Outsiders good at mechanical precision. Refinement merely make transition easier, more survivable." She stepped forward and tapped on the glass. "This one strong though. Good candidate. Will do well."

"Y-you mean… this might have killed her?" Mineko asked quietly. "You said it was safe!"

Tan Pohn smirked, sniffing disdainfully at Mineko. She walked over to her, and despite the chinese girl actually being shorter than her, Mineko got the feeling of being looked down upon. "No magic safe, girl, much less magic made from curse. Outsiders abandon long ago. Prefer safe science. If not have stomach for risk, should not play with."

"Th-this isn't a game!" Mineko retorted, marshalling her courage. "That's a person suffering in there!"

"Much work to refine potions. More people be in that room after this one," Tan Pohn said, a hint of menace in her voice. "If not have stomach for, maybe spare next person this? Take potion own self. Maybe try out animal curses next. Tan Pohn think girl make good mouse."

"Peace, Tan Pohn," Himura said sternly, cutting her off. "Mineko has a valid concern. The potion in this unrefined state is worthless on the open market, no matter how miraculous the eventual effects are." Himura stepped past the chinese girl and put a hand on Mineko's shoulder, giving her a reassuring smile. "Please believe me when I say that I never intended for things to be this bad. This was a miscalculation on my part. I will ensure that she makes a full recovery, and will not remember any of this."

Mineko still felt uncertain, but she knew she was powerless to do anything further. She sighed and looked away. "When… when will I be able to see her?"

"Tomorrow," Himura said. "She'll be awake and believing that she's recovering from a bout of illness - and she will be very happy to see you." Himura squeezed her shoulder, then let her hand fall away.

"Will… will she remember me?" Mineko asked, hope warring with guilt.

Himura nodded. "Of course! Her memories of you will be unchanged… save for one small detail, of course. Can I tell her you'll be here in the morning to see her? I'm sure that will be a tremendous help to her in completing the transition."

Mineko breathed a sigh of relief. Part of her had been worried Himura might not allow her access. "Yes. Yes, of course!"
"I'll send the limo around to your house first thing, then," Himura replied. "Now… off to school with you! Make sure we win a resounding victory in today's game! I'm trusting you to keep our players on track in my absence."

Mineko closed her eyes and nodded. She wished that nagging uncertainty would go away, but she didn't want Himura to see her still conflicted. Not now. I've gone too far to back out. I started this, I have to see it through. "I'll make sure we trounce them, Himura."

Himura smiled. "Good. Good! Off with you then. I'll see you on Saturday."

000

Himura waited for the limo taking Mineko away to pull out of sight before she let her usually pleasant smile settle into the more comfortable self-satisfied smirk.

"[Why do you bother lying to her?]" Tan Pohn grumbled in Mandarin, crossing her arms. "[She's weak. She should be doing what you tell her because you tell her to.]

"[Fear and intimidation don't breed much in the way of loyalty, my dear Tan Pohn,]" Himura said softly, turning to walk back inside as the Chinese girl fell in step. "[My grandfather taught me that you can only get so much by cracking the whip. They'll work until they no longer mind the sting and then turn on you. But convince them that you're on their side, working towards a common goal? Make them feel like they're part of your 'vision'? Oh they'll struggle, sacrifice, and die for you.]"

"[Hmph. Joketsuzoku only follow the strong.]"

"[There are different kinds of strength. Strength of arms and Strength of Leadership are often very different. Many great generals and conquerors of history were hardly imposing as individual warriors,]" Himura replied.

Tan Pohn made a noncommittal grunt.

Himura changed the subject. "[Can you help my little Chemistry Club friends perfect the formula before next week? Things are moving ahead quickly, and if all goes well we will need it by then.]

"[The Elder has already ordered us to work on the problem. Your application of the false curse powder to the original formula was interesting to her. We'd never get approval from the Council to do such a thing ourselves, but if your test is successful, it will have many applications.]" Tan Pohn replied. "[Though that is only a fraction of what you promised us. You said you would deliver the Godslayer to us, and many more besides. Lo Shan grows impatient.]"

"[Yes, yes… I've already told her that this will take time, and I must complete this challenge my Grandfather has set out first. All of this is simply laying the groundwork for what comes after, which is where our true partnership begins. Ranma will be delivered by the end of it, the rest will be scattered, and it will just be a matter of rounding them up.]"

"[Yes, we are aware of the plan,]" Tan Pohn said testily. "[But Lo Shan is not convinced you can deliver on your lofty promises, and neither am I.]

Himura turned and gave the girl a look of hurt and shock. "[Why… Tan, I'm appalled! How can you think so little of me, after all the time we've spent bonding?]

Tan Pohn scoffed. "[A couple of loud indoor celebrations with alcohol, drugs and male sex slaves is not 'bonding'.]" Himura crossed her arms. "[Please, my dear, those were the highest end clubs in Tokyo. And please don't refer to the male escorts as 'sex slaves' to their faces again? It costs extra.]

Tan Pohn grinned. "[Different name, same thing. Most of them are pathetically fragile, anyway.
But… fun to play with.]" She seemed to consider. "[Send that tall, dark one… what did he call himself…? Ah yes, Lantis. Send him to my room tonight, and I'll see about putting a good word in with Lo Shan to get you some more time.]

Himura smirked. It was always just a matter of finding what someone wanted, after all. "[He'll be waiting for you. I'll make sure he's at your disposal from now on.]

"[I am still not sure how you plan to cow the Godslayer by next week,]" Tan Pohn said. "[It seems… ambitious. Elder Cologne has been here nearly two years with no luck. Rumour has it she has subjected him to all manner of horrors.]

"[It's a matter of finding someone's breaking point, my dear,]
" Himura said as they returned to the observation room. The figure on the bed was still now, though her chest could be seen rising and falling as she laid sprawled on the mattress. Faintly through the walls could be heard Himura's own voice, a special recording that was meant to play for the one inside once the worst had died down.
"[Reserve your judgement until Sunday, when my plan goes into motion. Ranma should be relatively easy to secure. And even if not, she will no longer be any sort of obstacle.]

000

"Y'know, it's unusual to see schoolkids here, much less on a school day," The middle-aged security guard said, chatting amicably as he led the three teenagers though a series of disused offices full of file storage racks. "Ever since everything went digital, nobody much comes down here. In fact, the guards hardly ever patrol down here. Think it's haunted."

Daisuke ran a finger along the dust covering an old microfiche reader. The decor of the offices was dated at best, and none of the equipment looked new - as in 'older than he was'. "I think the ghosts would hang out somewhere more exciting."

The guard chuckled. "Well, I like it down here. It's quiet. Have my lunch down here sometimes and talk to the ghosts."

"They don't… talk back, do they?" Yuka asked nervously.

"Not yet, but I have had my sandwich go missing a couple of times when I wasn't looking," he replied nonchalantly.

"They steal your food?!!" Yuka squeaked.

"Yeah!" The guard replied. "That or I set it down somewhere and forgot about it. I tend to wander a bit when I eat, and now and then I get distracted and forget where I put things. If you find something rancid in the stacks that's probably my fault. The janitorial staff don't come down here too much either, y'know."

"Can't imagine why," Hiroshi said dryly.

"I know, right? Well, I do my best to make up for it. Weekend guards always slack off, stick to ground level and above. Friggin' part-timers." The guard led them to a far corner of the room. "All right, here you are. Microfiche readers are there and the index cards are in those drawers over there. Holler up to the front desk if you need anything or have any questions. Closing time is at 5 PM sharp. Be sure to poke your heads out before then. They're bad about locking up without checking in here first."

"Yes, sir," Daisuke said dutifully.

The guard turned to leave and the three breathed a sigh of relief, before he stopped and turned back.

"Damned peculiar, three students bein' sent here to check the old archives. What was it for again? Normally there's all kinds of red tape to even get down here. This place is full of people's personal data after all." He scratched the back of his head.

"Correcting school records," Yuka said, thinking fast and not missing a beat. "Our Principal was caught altering student records and he did it in such a way that it messed up their online files, so we have to compare to the hard copies. The parents didn't trust the faculty with the job after all of that, so we were assigned to do it as internship work."

"Really?" he said, frowning. "That's pretty damn odd. Which school?"

"Furinkan High," Yuka replied.

"Oh god damn!" the guard chuckled and shook his head. "Say no more, little miss, and my condolences for dealing with that nutjob. Ain't the first time that freak has sent work down here. There was the time he changed the names on all the faculty teaching licenses to Hawaiian-themed names." he shook his head and turned away again, with a wave. "You kids have fun and don't go crossed-eyed squinting at the labels!"

"We won't, sir," Hiroshi said. "Thank you!"

The three of them waited as they listened to his footsteps disappear down the hall, then the big fire doors close behind him. They all let out the breaths they had been holding.

"Okay, pro bluff Yuka, I am honestly impressed!" Hiroshi said.

"How did you know to throw the Principal under the bus like that? Not that he didn't deserve it," Daisuke added.

"Lucky guess. I remember that bit with the teaching licenses. Don't you remember he came on the PA and started announcing the teacher's new 'Big Island' names?" Yuka said.

"Oh yeah!" Hiroshi replied. "When Ms. Hinako learned the dress code for female teachers now included a coconut shell bra and grass skirt, she marched right up to his office and drained him so hard he was out of commission for a week."

"Yeah, well I remember them griping about all the issues with fixing their ID's. I figured the Principal had a history," Yuka said. "So… where do we start?"

"Well, I think we go to those index cards over there, look up 'Saotome', and it'll tell us where the files are with all the documents," Hiroshi said. He walked over to the card file and pulled it open. And stared.

"What's wrong?" Daisuke asked, coming up beside him. "Is it empty? Did Himura beat us to the punch?"

Yuka came up on Hiroshi's other side. She blinked as she realized what he was looking at; index cards. Hundreds of them.
"Apparently… there are a lot of people in Japan with the last name 'Saotome'..." Hiroshi said quietly.

000

Akane usually appreciated going to school. For all of the insanity, strife and stress that blossomed there, it had slipped into that balance where most of the time the craziness was manageable ever since Ranma had arrived to help her weather it. It could even be fun. One minute they'd be in some dramatic martial arts battle, the next they'd be sitting down and having ramen together. Then back to battling.

She was starting to realize the craziness acted as a distraction - it kept her from focusing too far into the future. Her life had become all about getting through the next day with nary a thought to what might come later, even as far as graduation. With the exception of the ever-present threat of parentally-enforced marriage.

Taking back control had felt good. She found a lot of her anger was calmed simply by the fact that she felt more in control of her life than she ever had before. Most of the conflicts had been smoothed over, the Hentai Horde had been shamed out of existence and the Principal had been put on one of his long hiatus’. It was true that the whole marriage mess was more snarled than ever, but now they had a path forward independent of whatever their parents decided.

But now? Now that getting through the immediate chaos was conceivable she was starting to wonder what shape her life might take after high school.

I guess I never really thought about it, she mused as the group walked towards school. She glanced over to where Nabiki was chatting with Shampoo and Ranma, and Ryouga walking a few steps behind, looking like a fifth wheel. I mean, I'd nod and agree when Sayuri and Yuka talked about having a career, meeting someone, getting married and having kids, but…

Truth was, even before admitting her own sexuality to herself, the idea of becoming an office lady, or a teacher, or taking up some other mundane career just didn't parse for her. I guess I figured I would inherit the dojo. Part of why I resented Ranma, I suppose. She looked up at the redhead's back, smiling a bit. She's a better teacher than me. She'd be good at it. But is that really what we're going to be doing? Her eyes shifted to Ukyou. Ukyou has Ucchan's, and I'm sure Nabiki has bigger business plans than just running a dojo. She glanced at Shampoo. Then there's the Amazon thing. She sighed. And it has to be something that has room for ALL of us right? All five. Her eyes shifted again to Ryouga. Maybe more?

She considered a moment. She wasn't really getting anywhere quelling her worries just rattling around in her own head. There had been one person she had always used as a confidante when things were bothering her… maybe he could help again? She sped up a little, coming up behind Ryouga and hooking his arm with her own.

"Hey, I… Akane?" Ryouga said with some confusion.

"Hey Ranma? I'm just going to borrow Ryouga for a few minutes, okay?" Akane said.

Ranma glanced back at her, and gave her a quizzical look. "You're not gonna break him or anything, are you? He hasn't done anything to deserve it!"

Akane scowled. "Do you have to assume I'm always in danger of becoming violent?"

The redhead scratched the back of her head, pondering. "…Yes?"
Akane huffed indignantly and started dragging Ryouga along with her. "Come on, Ryouga! I feel like walking the rest of the way with someone who respects me!"

"I… uh… sure?" Ryouga said, glancing about nervously. He shot Ranma an apologetic look and then let Akane drag him off some ways down the road.

Akane sighed and slumped a little. She had slipped into an old, bad habit and had taken advantage of Ryouga again to get back at Ranma for a minor slight. She slowed down, then stopped. "I'm sorry, Ryouga."

"I… uhh… what for?" Ryouga asked, rubbing the back of his head nervously.

"What Ranma said made me mad and I went right back into my 'Why can't you be more like Ryouga?' thing… I know that caused a lot of friction between you two." She sighed and resumed walking, holding his arm a bit more loosely. "I'm just… a little apprehensive."

"Apprehensive…" Ryouga said. "You mean about the Link?"

"Partly," she replied. "Part of me is all twisted-up and jealous that I'm the last one to go, but part of me is…" she swallowed, "part of me is scared that everyone will see what an awful person I am and… a-and… stop loving me, you know?" Her voice trembled and broke a bit at the last. She clenched her fist and scrubbed at her eyes impatiently. "Damnit…"

"Hey…! Hey hey hey…" Ryouga immediately stopped, took hold of her shoulders with both hands and turned her to face him. "Akane, listen to me… it doesn't work that way, all right? It's the opposite, really. It'll… it'll help you understand what they're feeling, and help them understand your feelings."

"I-I know… I know. Nabiki told me some of it. She's convinced we need this to make it all work, but… but part of me…" She cringed. "I'm scared, Ryouga. I'm frantically trying to get a hold of all these terrible things about myself before they're all out there for everyone to see, and… and…"

Ryouga gave her a weak smile. "Akane… Trust me. You've always been wonderful. Take it from the guy who… who probably knows more about you than he has any right to."

"But that's part of it!" Akane continued. "I… I used you. I keep using you, even now! I'm…" She hugged herself and pulled away a little. "I'm so selfish… even now. I don't know how you do it."

"Me…?" Ryouga asked, blinking.

"Yes, you!" She turned back to him. "You're always so kind and so thoughtful! You always listen! You always encourage me and teach me when I need to learn, and… and…" She sagged. "And you were exactly the kind of boy I'd always say I wanted back when I was deluding myself into thinking I wanted a boy."

Ryouga looked off to the side then took a deep breath. "Akane… I'm… I'm not really any better than the other guys in your life… You know that, right?"

She looked up at him, seeing his eyes shadowed as he looked down. "Ryouga…"

He sighed. "I'm not groping you or being grably or pushy… but not because I don't want the same things. I'm just shy and a coward. When the time came to say or do the right thing, or to keep lying so I could be close to you… I lied. I've had two girls fall in love with me and I didn't have the courage to tell them that… that I didn't… love them the same way. And… when I did fall in love… I…" He trailed off.
There was a moment of silence between them then Akane stepped forward and hugged him.

"You're nowhere near as bad as you think," Akane said softly, wrapping her arms around his waist in a tight hug. She relaxed it a bit and looked up at him. "And… you're right, I'm not as bad as I'm moping about being either, am I?" She smiled at him. "Maybe we should just keep reminding each other of that?"

His answering smile was a bit more genuine. "Yeah. I… yeah. That sounds good."

"I... actually wanted to talk about something else," Akane said sheepishly as she released the hug and took his arm again. "I was wondering if you've ever thought much about the future?"

"Huh? The future?" Ryouga pondered a moment. "Kind of? I mean… I sort of had this… vague notion about it. Marrying the girl I loved, having kids, domestic bliss... " He shook his head. "When I would really think about it, though, it was just me inserting myself into their lives."

"Nothing about what you would be doing?" she asked. "What career you might choose… where you would live… that sort of thing?"

He shook his head. "I think with Akari I had some vague idea of just being on her farm forever and training her pigs."

"You are a good teacher," Akane said. "When I was training for my fight against Natsumi and Kurumi, you were absolutely brilliant at it."

Ryouga's face fell again. "Akane..." He sighed, closing his eyes and shaking his head sadly. "I... I have a confession about that. I walked away at the end there because… because I was starting to hope that you'd lose the rematch. So you wouldn't be engaged to Ranma anymore."

"But you taught me anyway, and what you taught me helped me win," Akane said with a smile. "You focused on the needs of your student. Maybe you're the one who should be running a dojo, not Ranma or me."

"Maybe," he said thoughtfully. "I'd need to find a dojo that'd be willing to let me teach, first."

Akane sighed heavily as she realized the hints she had been dropping had all sailed over Ryouga's head. "Ryouga..."

"Maybe I could open my own… I'd need to work a while to save up for it… Maybe if I could find a longer-term construction job… those pay pretty well. Still, we'd be talking years..." Ryouga continued to muse out loud.

"Ryouga, I want you to teach at the Tendo dojo," Akane blurted out.

"Huh? What did you say, Akane?" Ryouga snapped out of his reverie, his eyes widening.

"I want you to teach at our dojo," Akane repeated. "At the Tendo Dojo."

"O-oh... You mean... when you all go back to China with Shampoo?" Ryouga asked.

Akane shook her head. "No. I mean... come teach now." She twiddled her fingers. "I... I've been thinking about... about how things might work, and... even if we are all going to end up going to China to make this work, we're not going anywhere until we're done with school, and that probably means waiting for Nabiki to finish her degree, so... I thought you could come stay with us, o-or even just teach classes..." She trailed off, then after an awkward pause added, "so we can figure how to make all this work."

"Make all of what work?" Ryouga asked.

Akane closed her eyes. "Before I answer that… When you were talking about the people you did fall in love with… Do you mean me, or Ranma, or… or both?"

She waited for the answer. The silence stretched to new levels of awkward.

"Ryouga…?" She cracked an eye open.

"Both, okay?" he finally blurted, blushing and looking away. "You were gonna find out anyway when you got added to the Link, so…"

"Still?" she added.

"Yeah, still," he mumbled, jamming his hands into his pockets.

She walked in front of him and stopped him. "Ryouga, look at me."

He reluctantly raised his head, looking her in the eye. She cringed inwardly when she saw the distress in his eyes. It was obvious this had been tearing at him.

"Ryouga… Would you believe that I love you too?" she asked. He blinked, then frowned, so she continued before he could ask. "I can't… I'm not attracted to you… and that's not your fault! But… I do love you. Does that make any sense?"

"What, like a brother?" He scratched at the back of his head. "I… I'm honored, I guess?"

Akane sighed. "It's… Not quite. You've always been my best friend, Ryouga. You've always been the person I could talk to about… so many things! You're the person I go to when I need to rely on someone. I know… that's been one-sided up until now, so… So I wanted you to know that I want to be someone you can rely on too." She nodded. "I know this is hard… I… kinda know a bit about unrequited crushes."

"Huh? Oh… wait, something about Doctor Tofu, right?" Ryouga sighed. "A crush, huh?"

"No, no, I didn't mean! I'm not trying to belittle your feelings or anything!" she said quickly. "I know it's more serious than that. I just… Oh, I'm making a mess of this, aren't I?" She swiped her hand through her hair, took a breath and tried again. "What I'm trying to say is… I want you around, Ryouga. And I know that means that things will have to sort themselves out with you and Ranma, and Nabiki… and Shampoo…" She grunted. "Honestly, she just had to mix herself up in that too, didn't she?"

Ryouga smirked slightly. "Mad you haven't gotten your kiss from her yet?"

"Yes! I mean NO! I mean…" Akane glared at him. "Wipe that grin off your face, Hibiki!"

He laughed, and she was forced to giggle a bit too after a moment.

"God this is so stupid…" Akane said, shaking her head. "Yes, I wanted a kiss. I still want one. I need to pull her aside and… and work out where we stand before all the unspoken tension and everyone else getting it on makes me crazy." She took a deep breath, feeling much more centered. "There… it feels so much better to admit that. I'm not mad about that. But if you kiss Ukyou like that, I will feed you your own entrails."
He held up his hands placatingly. "No, no, no worries there! I don't have that kind of relationship with Ukyou even with the Link. It'd be like… you kissing Nabiki or something."

Akane swallowed. "Aheh… yeah… Anyway," She cleared her throat. "You are planning on telling Ranma how you feel, right?"

"Is everybody going to get on my case about that?" Ryouga grumbled. "Look… I'm just kinda coming to terms with the fact that I… That I have these feelings for her… and that maybe it'd be okay to tell her… Maybe even that I'm obligated to. I wouldn't say I've got anything like a plan about it."

"Well, then I could help with that!" Akane said brightly.

"No," Ryouga said flatly.

Akane was a bit taken aback and maybe even a bit hurt. "Wh-why not?!"

"Because Ukyou tried that with me to get me to tell you," Ryouga said. "And it backfired every single time. I'm… I dunno, I'm probably just going to blurt it out at the worst possible moment like I usually do because that's the only way I'll ever do it…"

"I… okay, point," Akane replied. "But… there has to be some way I can help?"

Ryouga said nothing for a moment, lost in thought, so they walked in a companionable silence until he spoke again.

"I guess you could answer a question for me. Answer it honestly - don't hold anything back," he said finally. He looked upwards at the clouds as they walked. "If you could have the best outcome for you, just for you… like having Ranma to yourself, or Ranma and Ukyou, or whatever… and there was no downside - the rest of us would be just fine… what would be your perfect outcome?"

Akane blinked. "Why do you ask?"

Ryouga sighed. "I guess I want to know what you're giving up for this. Marrying Ranma was something that's been set up for you your entire life. And… it's obvious you want to be with him. Or her…" He glanced at Akane. "How would things go if everything was perfect for you?"

Akane considered the question. She folded her hands behind her back, and started to walk a little closer to Ryouga. She didn't know why - possibly for support - like she could hide behind him from her answer. "I… Would it surprise you if I said it wouldn't be just me and Ranma?"

"So… Ukyou too," Ryouga said quietly.

Akane shook her head. "Not like that. I mean, not just because of that." She took a deep breath to gather her thoughts. "How do I explain this? I had Ranma to myself, Ryouga. After Jusendo, and nearly dying? All I had to do was say 'I love you', and we'd have been married, and that would be the end of it. But… but I couldn't… as much as I wanted to. Every time it's just me and Ranma, no matter how much we want it to be different, we both just… snap back into our old, stupid patterns. We both want to be together, I know that. But we also both need someone who can defuse us… nudge us onto better paths for dealing with our problems. For Ranma… that was Nabiki. For me…" a ghost of a fond smile crossed her lips, "for me, it was Ukyou. But we couldn't make that work alone. Shampoo was the one who brought the ability to… to accept each other, and the courage to say 'Who cares if no one else has done this before?'. So… I guess I can't answer your question because I haven't been able to figure out any other way that all of this could work. Nabiki figured out early on that we all needed each other," She shrugged. "Maybe I could have made it work with just Ukyou and me, but… that would have eaten both me and Ukyou alive inside. And I know it's the same for the others, too. We're doing this because… well, not just because if one of us wins everyone else loses, but… because we can't figure out any other way that even one of us can win. If that makes sense."

Ryouga nodded. "I guess I can understand that." He rubbed the back of his head.

"What about you, Ryouga?" Akane asked. "What's your perfect outcome?"

Ryouga blinked then blushed and looked away. "I don't know."

She elbowed him gently in the ribs. "Come on, that's not fair! I answered. You can't hold out on me like that!"

He grimaced. "I'm not holding out! I..." He sighed. "I think... Everything has been so tied up in not being lost anymore. I just wanted a home that... that I didn't need to leave. That may be why the idea of the Tendo Dojo or a farm appealed to me so much. I could work in the field or teach classes without having to go anywhere. I'm starting to think that I was so desperate for... for something... stability, I guess...? that any girl who could offer it..." he trailed off. "And then I would screw it all up anyway because I still had something to prove to Ranma."

"And Ranma? Why was it so important to prove yourself to her?" Akane asked. "Not the bread feud, was it?"

Ryouga shook his head. "No... that was just an excuse to be angry. The truth was, in middle school, Ranma made me feel needed. Even if he couldn't admit it. So it was okay for him to beat me to the bread every day. My ego wants to say I let him, but it'd be lying. And he'd have known if I had ever held back. But... that was okay, too. We both got better for it. Having him around... made life manageable. I wasn't a charity case because of my directional problems and I wasn't a burden. He needed me to get by just as I needed him to get by. That was all I wanted... to be needed... to be useful. And then..."

"He left," Akane finished for him.

"He didn't need me after all. He was headed off into the world and was gonna be just fine without me... and I was back to being doomed." He kicked at a pebble on the sidewalk, watching it skitter across the concrete. "I didn't deal with it well. The two years wandering and getting the second curse didn't help much. All I wanted was to face him down, beat him and prove that I didn't need him. That's all I saw when I looked at him."

"So that's why you helped him when he was vulnerable," Akane said. Gently she took hold of his arm again. "He needed you."

"I guess. I never wanted him dead. There were a thousand times I could have done that. It just sounded better in my head than 'I want him to be sorry he left me'." He grimaced again. "Damn... that sounds like some maudlin jilted ex-lover crap. It... wasn't actually like that."

"Except he turned into a girl," Akane said.

"When... she pulled me out of the Shi shi hokodan... She said she needed me... that she always had. And, because of the Link, I believed it. I couldn't not. It was the truth." He shrugged. "Then...
I guess that changed things. I'd never allowed myself to really see Ranma as a girl before - probably because, deep down, I knew this would happen. So when Ranma was suddenly someone who needed me and a girl..." He chuckled dryly. "I guess that's all it took."
"To be fair, if I hadn't met Ranma as a girl first, I would never have fallen for her," Akane said, a small smile gracing her lips. "She was… she was so cute… another girl who liked martial arts the same as me, but was even more of a tomboy. It didn't matter if she was better than me - she was someone I could relate to." She laughed. "Finding out she was actually a boy? It took a long while to forgive her for that. Not because she had done anything wrong, but because finding out that I related to a boy better than I related to most girls just made the insults they used to throw at me at school feel more real. The irony was that, because Ranma was there, a lot of the scrutiny came off of me."

"Yeah… Ranma is good at distracting people," Ryouga said. "He usually grabbed so much attention in middle school that the other kids didn't bother me much anymore, even though I was hanging out with him a lot."

"So… your 'perfect outcome' would have to have to have Ranma in it somewhere, wouldn't it?" Akane asked. "After all, you made her your anchor for a reason, right? Even if your direction problems are cured, that reason will still remain."

Ryouga let out a long breath and nodded. "Yeah. You're probably right." He shrugged. "Long way from here to a perfect outcome, though."

Akane sighed and rolled her eyes. "Every time I think I get somewhere with you, you roll it back. You're a serious pain, you know that Hibiki?"

"What?! What did I do n-" Ryouga started to protest, but he caught movement out of the corner of his eye. Without thinking, he snatched Akane up in his arms and dodged forward out of its path, curled around her protectively and rolled until he figured they were clear.

He leapt to his feet and set a somewhat dazed Akane smoothly onto hers. He looked back to see a massive wet streak spread across the pavement and the adjacent concrete wall. "Water? But…"

"RYOUGA HIBIKI, PREPARE TO DIE!"

"Aww, c'mon, what did I do this time?!" Ryouga looked up into the glare of the sun in time to see a silhouette descending towards him, carrying some sort of weapon poised for an overhead strike. He reached back for his umbrella to block the strike only to find empty air. He lurched back in a last minute attempt to dodge, barely getting clear while the weapon brushed his nose before it struck the concrete and fractured it.

Ryouga hopped back a couple more steps and dropped into a ready stance. His eyes widened as he recognized the blue groundskeeper's overcoat and white headband of his assailant.

"Shinnosuke?!

"Shut up!" Shinnosuke roared. "How can you be so shameless about cheating on Akari?! On your fiancee?!"

"That should be my question!" Shinnosuke straightened to give Ryouga an icy glare. "After you ran off, I followed Akari here. I expected to find you together, but I've been following you for the past few days, and now I see the truth!" He levelled his pushbroom at Ryouga like a rapier. "Akari wasn't enough for you! How many other girls have I seen you around with!? I've lost track!"

Ryouga blinked, paused and ticked off on his fingers. "Lessee… there's Nabiki… Ranma… Shampoo… Anna… Uhhh… six?" He rubbed the back of his head. "I mean, I know your memory is bad but I can't really blame you on this one. It's been nuts for the past couple of weeks…"

"Shut up!" Shinnosuke roared. "How can you be so shameless about cheating on Akari?! On your fiancee?!"
"She's not..." Ryoga started to say, then shook his head - that wasn't the issue at hand. "I never cheated on Akari!"

Shinnosuke's eyes narrowed. "Just because my memory is bad you think I'm stupid? I've burned every moment, every transgression into my memory, Hibiki. Including where you kissed that purple-haired girl!"

"I... oh," Ryoga trailed off. "I guess... Look, the situation was complicated, and I never... Hang on! Were you peeping on me during that?!"

"I... uhhh... no!" Shinnosuke looked nervous. "A-actually, there was this guy in glasses who stomped out the back door that was complaining about it. But you just confirmed it!" He levelled the broom again. "Prepare to die you... you... enemy of women!"

Ryouga had the oddest feeling of deja vu... enough that he forgot to dodge as Shinnosuke came in for another swing with the broom. Someone moved in front of him and the broom thwacked solidly against a familiar red bamboo umbrella.

"Shinnosuke, stop this!" Akane said, fending off the broom with Ryoga's umbrella. "There isn't any need for this... if you'd just stop and listen!"

Shinnosuke recoiled, his eyes widening. "A-akane?!" He stepped back a pace, looking as though he had seen a ghost. "It... it's... it is you, isn't it? I... I remember you!"

Akane smiled. "I remember you too, Shinnosuke." She lowered the umbrella. "You know I wouldn't lie to you, right?" She held out a hand. "Please believe me. Ryoga hasn't done anything wrong. I know the situation he's gotten into can look pretty bad, but he'd never..." She trailed off a bit, and shot a glance over her shoulder at Ryoga. "Well, almost never take advantage of a girl's trust like that..."

"Hey!" Ryoga squawked, realizing she was referring to P-chan again. "I thought we were past that!"

"Well it's not like I'm just going to let you forget it!" Akane scoffed, turning to face him. "You were sneaking into my bed at night!"

"You knew! And besides, half the time you had to drag me there!" Ryoga shot back.

"WHAT?!

Akane's eyes widened as she heard the cry of outrage from behind her. "Sooooo... I'm guessing this was probably a bad time to have this discussion, right?"

Ryouga was already backing up, his own eyes wide and fearful from the expression on Shinnosuke's face. "Yeah. Yeah, you might say that..."

Akane felt beads of cold sweat on her brow. She could almost feel the heat radiated by Shinnosuke's ki across her back now. "Ummm... too late to try and explain and smooth it over, do you think?"

Ryouga grabbed her wrist and pulled her away as Shinnosuke shattered the concrete with an angry cry, his ordinary-seeming wooden push broom smashing the surface like it was dried mud.

"What do you think!?" Ryoga yelped. "Run!"
Ranma watched Akane drag Ryouga off down the road, scowled and returned her gaze to the sidewalk. She kicked at a pebble and jammed her hands into her pockets. "What's she gotta drag him off to talk about anyway? She better not be trying to sweet talk him into something. She knows he's still soft on her!"

"So you, Akane and Ryouga are together and one of you puts their foot in their mouth, so the other two storm off. Some things do change..." Nabiki started, sidling up to Ranma. She noticed that Ranma didn't react to her light jibe and put a hand on her shoulder. "Hey... you okay? You're not actually worried, are you?"

Ranma sighed heavily. "That they'll do something intentionally stupid? No, not really." She kicked at another pebble. "It's never intentionally stupid. I just..." She chewed on her lower lip, trying to think of the words. "You know how I have this habit of saying something to Akane... like, not even meaning anything bad by it... and it'd totally ruin her day? Well... that, I guess. 'Cept it's usually her doing it to Ryo. I still worry he's not outta the woods yet as far as... well, y'know. Kaboom."

Nabiki raised an eyebrow then smiled and slipped an arm around Ranma's shoulders. "Well, well! That's probably the most perceptive and empathetic thing I've heard you say yet, Ranma. I'm proud of you. You've come a long way in figuring people out!" She leaned over and kissed Ranma's cheek. "I think you're dead on the money. And your being so concerned about Ryouga being hurt is actually kind of sweet. Though... don't discount Akane's feelings either."

"Ryo'd never hurt Akane in a million years," Ranma scoffed. "I'm pretty sure if she told him to use his sword-belt trick to stab himself in the chest, he'd still do it."

"Yeah, but like you said, it's not always intentional," Nabiki replied. "I imagine there will be some fireworks when those two get Linked."

"This really isn't fair to him, you know," Ranma said, her shoulders sagging a little. "I... sorta got a peek at why Ryouga is the way he is. It's kinda my fault. I was his only friend when he felt like he was alone in the world, and I just... walked out when he most needed me to go that extra mile for him."

"Weren't you rivals, though? Was it rational for him to expect you to wait for days for a challenge?" Nabiki asked.

"It... wasn't like that," Ranma said. "I mean, yeah, it was a challenge, but... before that... we did pretty much everything together. We called each other names, we fought over lunch... but then I'd come get him at the end of the day and walk him home, and he'd give me dinner... And a lot of the time we'd even forget about the fighting, and just talk." She shook her head. "It's... it's weird. I didn't remember any of this stuff when he showed up again. It was like he was just some random guy that I scuffled with over lunch - and even dredging that up was a stretch. I... It's weird that I don't remember a lot of stuff like this, right?" She glanced at Nabiki for confirmation. "You know... for the longest time I didn't realize I had a mother. It's not that I thought she was dead or anything, just... the whole idea that I had one somewhere, living or dead... It just never occurred to me." She shook her head. "So much stuff is nothing but a big blur. Is that... is that normal?"

Nabiki cocked her head. "Not really, no. I mean, my memory is very good, so maybe I'm not the best to ask? But..." Nabiki considered. "Actually, now that you mention it... things do get a bit blurry around the time that Mom started to get sick. You'd think that knowing my Mom was ill would make me treasure those memories more, but... Sometimes they just slip away until something happens to remind me. Like when Kasumi found that old cookbook. I think… maybe it's simply easier to let the memories of the most painful things slip away."

"Huh…" Ranma slumped a bit. "But most of my childhood is like that."

"Your Dad tried to sell you to a Singaporean businessman to pay a debt," Nabiki pointed out. "Your childhood sucked. I'm guessing that having to skip out on Ryo, knowing he was depending on you, probably loaded up all those memories with guilt and… well, easier to just forget if you're never going to see him again, right?"

"Ryo didn't forget." Ranma mumbled.

"Yeah, he kind of did," Nabiki replied. "His memories all ended up twisted up into anger and resentment. Now that you've both sorted that stuff out, it's starting to come back."

"That just worries me about what else I might remember that I'd rather not," Ranma shuddered. Her scalp felt itchy, as though there was some crucial detail about it all that she was still forgetting.

"Worry about that when you do, not before," Nabiki advised. "For now, focus on the present. You were saying you were concerned about Akane and Ryouga being off alone together? Surely you're not just jealous?" Nabiki smirked and nudged her in the ribs.

"Ryo wouldn't try anything. Hell, even when he was inclined to he wouldn't," Ranma said dismissively.

"That's not exactly what I meant," Nabiki prodded. "Seems to me that you're the one who usually drags Ryo off for some 'alone time.'"

Ranma blinked in confusion at her. "What do you mean?"

"Ranma… you're very possessive of Ryo. Don't you realize that?" Nabiki said. "If I hadn't stepped in, I worry you might have hauled off and punched Shampoo for kissing him."

"I-it's not like that!" Ranma said, her cheeks burning as she crossed her arms defensively. "I-I mean… how do you know I wasn't about to punch him, huh?"

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "To be fair, you might have… but… Ranma… were you mad because he kissed Shampoo?"

"He didn't! Ryo's too shy to make a move like that! He's just a big pile of anxieties around girls, and Shampoo shoulda…!" Ranma began hotly, then trailed off. "I… look, I was mad because she was manipulating him! Ryo doesn't know how to say 'no' to a cute girl! I should know!"

"Because you're a cute girl he can't say 'no' to?" Nabiki asked with a smirk.

"Yes! No! M-maybe…" Ranma hunched down a bit more. "I… I don't wanna do that to him anymore. Not now that I know how much it twists him up inside… I just…” She felt uncharacteristically nervous… unsure. She groaned in frustration and slapped at her own cheeks. What the hell is wrong with me lately!?"

She had thought adding the girls to the Link would settle the weird emotional flashes she was getting whenever Ryoga became a topic of conversation, but it only seemed to have gotten worse.

Nabiki was quiet, just… waiting. Not interrupting or cutting in with observations, just… listening. Somehow that made it even more awkward. Ranma realized she wanted Nabiki to accuse her of things. It was easier to shout a denial of something when someone else brought it up first. "I… I… look, I know what you're thinking, but… it's not like that!"

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "Not like what, Ranma?"

"Like… like…! Arrgh! Don't make me say it! It's weird!" Ranma huffed.

"I'm not making you say anything," Nabiki replied. "And I'm not going to try and tell you how you feel. I'm just saying you should probably sort out what you do feel…"

"I don't feel nothin'!" Ranma shot back hotly.

Nabiki glanced up slightly. "Oh! Ryoga, you're back!"

Ranma felt the bottom drop out of her stomach, a cold dread bubbling up from a yawning chasm that had opened inside her. She turned, half expecting to see Ryoga staring at her with a hurt, broken expression. She opened her mouth to say something, anything, to try and explain, without having the slightest idea what she was actually going to say…

There was no one there.

She felt Nabiki put a hand on her shoulder. "If you don't want him to think you don't care, then don't say it."

Ranma jerked her shoulder away from her grasp, whirling on her. "That was cold, Nabiki! That was Ice Queen."

Nabiki winced, an expression of pain crossing her face. Her brow furrowed and she scowled, momentarily angry. "Yes, all right, fine! It was cold! And… and I'm sorry." She deflated. "I don't know how else to get this through to you though, Ranma! You need to stop trying to figure out what you think you should feel, or what you should feel to protect everyone else's feelings, or what it's right or wrong to feel, and just feel it! Even if it's only in your own head!" She clenched her fists. "You're possessive and jealous about Ryoga because you're insecure about something - because you're afraid of losing something; Whatever that might be. And… you can't protect that… I can't help you protect it if you can't even say what that is. What do you want, Ranma?"

Shampoo and Ukyou had stopped, exchanging concerned glances as the conversation started to get heated.

"What do you want me to say!?" Ranma threw up her arms. "That I want Ryouga? That I love him? What?!

"Do you love him, Ranma?"

For a second, Ranma thought Nabiki had asked that. But then she realized the voice was wrong - too high pitched - too… sweet? She turned to see who had spoken, and that cold wave of dread washed right back over her, full force.

Akari was standing there, with Anna beside her.

Akari's expression was… the oddest mix of sorrow, hurt and resignation. Ranma felt like she had just stabbed a kitten.

Akari sniffed and forced a smile, though Ranma could see the tears forming. Anna was giving her a concerned look, touching her arm and saying something in English that Ranma didn't understand.
"It's okay, Ranma," Akari said softly. "I… I knew when Ryouga left the farm… when he always left… that there was something he was going to. If… if you feel the same way about him, then that's good. He… he deserves to have the person he wants want him back. He does!" She swiped at her eyes with the back of her hand. "J-just… Tell me? Tell me you mean it? That you really do love him?"

"I… I…" Ranma backed away a couple of steps.

_I just gotta say 'No',_ Ranma thought. _I just gotta say it's a joke! Just say it! She'll believe me, and then I can patch things up between her and Ryouga, and… and… He'll go with her. A-and that's what's best for him! You're not a real girl anyway, he's got no business… no business… Her eyes widened as dangerous notions about what all those warm red feelings from Ryouga actually meant started to seep around the edges of her carefully constructed wall of denial._

Anna tugged on Akari's sleeve and repeated her question. Akari glanced at her, cleared her throat, and in halting, broken English said a few words. Anna's eyes went wide, then a mask of rage slipped over her face and Ranma realized that she had blown her chance to defuse things.

Ranma didn't actually understand the words at the time, but afterwards she was told that what Anna said was "[Ranma Saotome, prepare to die!]

And then she picked up the car.

000

Ryouga stumbled through the school gates, reeling.

Akane had gotten him back to the school where he had hoped Ranma would be able to help him subdue Shinnosuke with a minimum of property damage. Unfortunately for him, Ranma was nowhere to be seen and Shinnosuke wasn't giving him much breathing room.

Against most other quicker opponents, Ranma included, Ryouga's endurance generally allowed him to bull through. But Shinnosuke's fighting style was developed almost exclusively to deal with the oversized, magically enhanced animals of Ryugenzawa. He wasn't quite as fast or agile as Ranma, but all of his strikes were carefully focused to deal with opponents who had armored hides or dense fur, and the style was proving more effective against Ryouga than he liked.

A series of quick strikes of the broom to Ryouga's head staggered him. Ryouga dropped low and swept with his leg, but Shinnosuke backflipped away from it, then darted forward again before Ryouga could even take a breath. Ryouga was forced to dodge as the next strike from the broom shattered the asphalt.

_That broom feels like a steel bar!_ Ryouga thought, raising his guard again. _He's doing something to it with his ki, like my iron cloth technique, but… it's magnifying the strike rather than making an edge._ He dodged a few more swings, but he knew that Shinnosuke's speed would get through his guard eventually.

He ducked another thrust and stabbed a finger into the pavement. "Bakusai Tenketsu!"

The asphalt exploded outwards from that point, but rather than dodge back or parry, as Ryouga expected, Shinnosuke dove into the cloud, twirling his broom handle to deflect the worst of the debris. Ryouga didn't have enough time to move before a savage whirling strike caught him under the jaw and sent him sprawling.

Ryouga hit the ground, bounced, rolled and lay sprawled on the pavement for a moment, groaning.
This is stupid, he thought, staring up at the sky. I could probably just blast him with a Shi Shi Hokodan, but I don't know if he can take what he dishes out. It might really hurt him. I gotta find another way to end this. He grunted and flipped himself back onto his feet to see Shinnosuke stalking towards him, murder in his eyes.

"You feel any better yet?" Ryouga asked, wiping his mouth. The back of his hand came away streaked red with blood.

"I'll feel better when you're dead and Akari is finally free of you," Shinnosuke growled.

"Trust me, it's never that simple," Ryouga replied.

"What could you possibly know!?" Shinnosuke howled, darting forward and thrusting the broom head directly at Ryouga's face.

Ryouga had anticipated this, intentionally giving the other boy an easy opening, knowing that talking would probably provoke a face shot. He grabbed hold of the broom handle, with the head inches from his face and held on tight. "I've got some experience in avenging unrequited love," he shot back, smirking a little.

"Shinnosuke, stop this!" Akane called as she finally caught up to them and ran up to join the fray. "It's not what you think!"

Shinnosuke turned to look at her and his eyes were cold. "I thought you were better than this, Akane. You deserve better than him."

With that Shinnosuke did something with his ki and the broom suddenly became incredibly slippery in Ryouga's grasp. The broom head smacked him in the face (though without the force of the previous blows) and it surprised him into letting go.

The next three blows were lightning fast and the broom had regained its unnatural density and hardness. A swipe across the face, followed by two jabs to the gut that drove Ryouga back and earned a grunt from the Lost Boy.

Ryouga grit his teeth and growled. "I'm starting to lose my patience with you, Shinnosuke..."

He noticed movement from the corner of his eye, a streak of read and blue. He looked up to see a familiar redheaded figure soaring over the wall… or, more accurately, tumbling end over end.

Shinnosuke had seen it too and, for a moment, his stance slackened. "What the…?

Ranma spotted Ryouga as she tumbled and their eyes met for a moment. "Ryouga, catch me!"

"Wha…?! Oof!" Ryouga barely managed to react in time and caught her awkwardly. Her hair was mussed and dirty, and her school uniform was battered, rumpled and even torn in places. "What the hell happened to you?!"

Ranma looked up, and her eyes widened. "Car!"

Ryouga blinked and turned his head to look, then dodged frantically as a mid-sized sedan sailed over the wall after Ranma, crashing and crumpling into the tarmac a few scant feet away. They all stared at the wreckage.

"What the hell was that?" Ryouga asked.
"A Celica, I think," Ranma replied. "She's been working up from the compacts to mid-sized on the way here."

"That's not what I… Who is… Ranma, what did you do!?" Ryouga demanded.

"Another one, Hibiki!?" Shinnosuke snarled, levelling his broom at them. "Don't you have any shame!?

Ranma and Ryouga blinked and looked at each other, then realized that Ranma was still clinging to Ryouga, who was holding her in a bridal carry.

"No, no! This-" Ryouga started.

"-Isn't what it looks like! We're-" Ranma continued

"-Victims of circumstance!" Ryouga finished.

Shinnosuke gave them a skeptical look. "Uh huh."

Just then the cement wall exploded.

"[WHERE IS SHE!?]" a familiar voice roared in English. The rather unassuming form of a farmgirl stepped out of the cloud of dust over the rubble, eyes searching.

"Ack! Ryouga, hide me!" Ranma whimpered, huddling closer to him.

That caused a mild short in Ryouga's brain, long enough to delay the notion that Anna seeing him holding Ranma like that was probably not the best way to defuse the situation. The idea hit him right about the time her eyes locked onto him. Even though she was twenty feet away or more, he swore he could see her pupils dilate.

"[You HUSSY!]" she snarled. "[Joe, you get your hands off her!]

"I don't know what she's saying, but she's mad and I think it's because she thinks I stole you from Akari," Ranma said. "Which would have been okay except she started throwing things. Big things. Things that were probably bolted down."

"Yeah, well jumping into my arms probably didn't help any…" Ryouga muttered, putting the redhead down as he started to back away nervously. Shinnosuke was advancing on them again as well.

"I didn't have much of a choice. She clipped me with a mailbox!" Ranma replied testily. "I'd probably be out cold if it hadn't been Tsubasa! You have to talk her down!"

"I can't!" Ryouga shot back. "I'm still working on talking Shinnosuke down!"

"Shinnosuke? What did you do to Shinnosuke?!" Ranma asked, glancing toward the Ryugenzawa guardian.

"Among other things he thinks I'm cheating on Akari with Akane. And now, probably, with you." Ryouga watched apprehensively as Shinnosuke started to twirl his broom.

"Didn't you explain to him that Akane isn't into guys!?" Ranma demanded.

"It got kinda hard to find a conversational opening for it after Akane started talking about how I used to sleep in her bed!"
"Well, to be fair, you've slept in a lot of girls' beds and nothing has happened."

"That doesn't help, either!"

"Including mine."

"Still not helping!"

Akane looked from one to the other as they argued, then to the advancing American girl and Shinnosuke, who seemed like they were about to settle into an impromptu alliance to beat the hell out of Ranma and Ryouga. She glanced at the crowd of students gathering and realized they were far too close if cars were going to be tossed around. "I'll clear the courtyard. You two deal with this… somehow!" She turned and ran towards the crowd, yelling at them to back up.

"Deal with it how?!" Ryouga called after her, then returned to eyeing Anna and Shinnosuke nervously.

"Okay, okay…" Ranma took a deep breath, glancing between Anna and Shinnosuke. "All right, partner switch."

"What?!" Ryouga yelped

"Swap dance partners! I'll take Shinnosuke. I've fought him before and I'm pretty sure I can shut him down. You talk to Anna since you speak English," Ranma replied, then gave him a quizzical look. "Why, what did you think I meant?"

"Nothing! Nevermind! It's been a bad day for it!" Ryouga muttered nervously. "Let's just do it now before they kill us both. You sure you can get Shinnosuke's attention off me?"

Ranma gave him a confident smirk. "Trust me, getting people pissed at me is a speciality of mine." Ranma locked her gaze on Shinnosuke and settled into a ready stance. Shinnosuke looked momentarily confused, then his eyes narrowed in response.

"Yeah, I'm pretty well acquainted with that," Ryouga muttered.

"You love me and you know it," Ranma replied with a wink.

Ryouga suffered another brain seizure. The lock up must have been apparent on his face, because Ranma's eyes widened and the color drained from her face as she realized what she had just said.

"I-I mean… as a rival! Friendly rivalry!" Ranma babbled. "Brotherly love! Or… sisterly? Damnit, just go talk to your ex girlfriend!" She blurted as she dashed towards Shinnosuke, earning a yelp from him as he barely blocked her overly enthusiastic kick with his broom.

Okay, just calm Anna down, and… Ryouga stepped forward. "[Anna, listen, this is all a big misunderstand…]"

"[DIE, TWO-TIMER!]" Anna hefted a large chunk of concrete from the wall she had shattered and threw it at him.

Normally Ryouga would have just used the breaking point to shatter the debris, but this close to Anna he was worried about hurting her with shrapnel. Without much other choice, he caught the chunk, grunting as he skidded back a bit. "[Anna, wait! I…]"

"[RRRRAGH!]" She picked up an even bigger chunk and hurled it at him. He didn't have time to drop the piece he was already holding, so he had little choice but to catch the second as well. He grunted, bowing a bit as he tried to hold up the weight of both pieces, each one bigger than he was. "[... Nnnf... Anna, just listen, I…!]

"[DIE!]" Anna hefted the final large chunk, bigger than either of the other two, and brought it slamming down on top.

The weight was too much. Ryouga buckled and collapsed as the concrete shattered into rubble and buried him.

Anna stood looming over the pile, panting and glaring at it. Gradually, her breathing slowed and the red haze over her vision cleared. Her eyes widened as she spotted Ryouga's arm poking up out of the pile of smashed cement.

"[Oh no! What did I do!? Joe!]" She darted forward and grabbed his arm, pulling him free of the pile of rubble.

Ryouga groaned woozily. There was a limit to what he could take in a day.

She threw him over her shoulder. "'[Don't worry Joe, I'll get you some help, I'll… I'll…]' She looked around, but Ranma and the other boy were nowhere to be seen, having vanished during her tantrum. She looked around the unfamiliar surroundings.

"[AKARRRRHIIIIIIII!]

000

Ranma threw a frantic flurry of blows at Shinnosuke. She had to admit, she was impressed that he was keeping up with her. Though she wasn't really trying to take him down, just to lure him away.

"Why are you fighting me?!" Shinnosuke yelled in frustration as a spinning swipe whiffed harmlessly past her. The skills that had been effective against Ryouga's stony defenses were coming up short against Ranma's speed. "My fight is with Hibiki!"

"Yeah, about that. Why are you beefing on Ryo?" Ranma asked, perching on a chain link fence post. "I mean, it's Akari you like, right? If Ryouga's with another girl, doesn't that free her up for you?"

"You don't get it. He walked out on her!" Shinnosuke growled. "He needs to pay for that alone! The fact he's dragged Akane into this just makes me more certain of it!"

Ranma blinked. "So you remember Akane then? Cool, that'll make this easy." She dodged another few swipes, trying to make it look casual, though he was starting to get close with a few of them. "Remember when we were all in Ryugenzawa fighting the Orochi to get the cure for you?"

"I don't know what you're talking about!" Shinnosuke took a step back, scowling. "I've never met you before in my life!"

Ranma blinked, then grit her teeth. "Of all the… you remember Ryouga and Akane, but not me!? I nearly got eaten saving your rotten hide!"

"The Orochi is a myth," Shinnosuke said, glaring at her. "A story my Grandpa tells to scare away the tourists. Just like the Water of Life or… or the giant animals!"

"Your forest is full of giant…!" Ranma stopped, clenched her fists and grunted. This isn't working!
"His memory is swiss cheese... gotta work with what he DOES remember! "Didn't you used to lament about how you never told Akane how you really felt?" Even though you DID and just forgot?"

"How did you…? So what?!" Shinnosuke twirled his broom, pacing her warily.

"Well? Are you going to repeat that same stupid mistake with Akari?!” Ranma scoffed. "Here you are, wasting your time on revenge when you could…"

Shinnosuke darted forward faster than she expected, sweeping her feet out from under her and sending her toppling off the fence post to land ungracefully on her backside on the grass. Before she could get up, the end of the broom was at her throat.

"I already told her," Shinnosuke said coldly.

"Uhhh… Oh," Ranma said. She swallowed nervously, glancing down at the end of the broom poised to crush her windpipe. "Then… why…?"

"Because she deserves better than him!" Shinnosuke snarled. After a moment he flipped the broom handle away and seemed to deflate a little. "Even if it isn't me…"

Ranma sat up slowly, self consciously rubbing at her throat. "I… look man, I'm sorry…"

"Save it," Shinnosuke cut her off. He turned and started to walk away. "Just… Make sure the next time he says he loves someone, that he means it."

---

Ryouga groaned as light filtered through his eyelids. His head was pounding, and there was a general ache in his muscles, like he was bruised all over.

Where am I…? It didn't feel like he was lying on a pile of broken concrete. He was lying flat, like on the ground or on a bench, and his head was propped up on something soft. Cautiously he cracked an eye open.

Anna was smiling down at him. "[Hey. Finally awake?]" she asked.

Ryouga groaned and closed his eyes again. I'm on a bench, my head is in her lap, and I'm officially a dead man.

[Anna, look, I shouldn't be here…]" He started to sit up.

She pushed him back down with surprising strength. "[Hush and be still a minute, will ya?]" she said. Her tone was playful, but there was an undercurrent of… something sad beneath it. "[Ah haven't had a minute alone with ya for over a year, and Ah've got some stuff to say. Just… get comfortable, okay?]"

He sighed but didn’t resist. He had learned that panicking generally only made things worse. It didn't help the guilt, though. I don't deserve to be comfortable…

'[Ah'm sorry about the bump on your head,]" she said sheepishly. '[Ah kinda got carried away. And Ah owe an apology to Red, too… What's her name? Ranma? And probably a few property owners along the way…]"

She started unconsciously tousling his hair, which actually felt pretty good, and made the guilt worse. '[Look, Anna…]"
"[Ah said _hush!]" she chided him. "[Now… Now before you start gettin' ideas…]" She took a deep breath. "[… You broke up with me. You made that clear when you left. Your heart was someplace else. Ah knew that comin' out here. For alla my carryin' on… You're not mine. So… don't go thinkin' I'm all deluded about that.]

"[Anna…]" Ryouga felt the stabbing ache in his heart get worse. _I am literally the worst person on earth…_

"[Ah came here because… well, part of it was to check on you. But… part was… well… this is the world you came from.]" She looked up and around. "[There's so much world out here… outside of my sleepy little corner of Omaha. You've seen so much more of it than me, and… and Ah realized Ah wanted to see it too. Ah wanted to be more like you. And… Ah wanted to make sure you were okay.]"

"[I'm sorry,]" Ryouga said. He tried to sit up again. "[I'm sorry for… for walking out! I'm sorry for never trying to get in touch with you, I'm…]

She stopped him, then helped him sit up. "[Don't be. You were honest, even if it was something Ah didn't want to hear. Ah'd rather you be free than to see you starin' off at the horizon day after day, knowin' you were pining for something or someone else.]

He slumped forward, his forearms across his knees as he studied the pavement. "[I haven't always been honest. I've been lying for a long time, about a lot of things… even to myself.]" He shook his head. "[I'm not 'Joe', Anna. I'm no hero.]

She smiled at him. "[You'll _always_ be my Joe, Ryouga. But… you're something to other people, too. Ah… don't understand all of what's goin' on, but… Ah think Ah understand why you had to leave when you did. You're bein' pulled all over the place, aren'tcha? Akari, and Red, and… there were a few others, too?]

Ryouga sighed. "[It's… complicated.]

"[But Red's at the heart of things, isn't she?]" Anna asked.

Ryouga nodded slowly.

"[Is she the one you left for?]

Ryouga chuckled bitterly. "[I would have denied it violently back then. But… I don't know. Maybe. Our relationship has always been… complex. But I'm… seeing a lot of stuff about myself that I didn't realize before.]" He studied his hands. "[I think… I need to see where this goes.]

"[Well… Make it _simple_ then.]" Anna punched him gently on the shoulder. "[Tell her how you feel, get her to tell you how _she_ feels, and then follow your heart!]" Her eyes flicked up and the smile faded. "[but… before that… Ah think there's someone else you gotta talk to first.]

Her glanced at her quizzically, then followed her gaze. Standing nearby, partially hidden by a tree trunk, was a girl with a very familiar streak of pink in her hair. On the ground next to her, a massive pig was sleeping.

Ryouga felt his insides twist up into knots again.

"[You gotta tell her,]" Anna said. "[You gotta be honest. Like you were with me.]

"[Does it make it easier?]" Ryouga asked.
"[Not really,]" Anna admitted. "[But… at least you can start t'move past it.]

Ryouga clasped his hands, staring at the ground, lost in thought for a moment. Finally he looked up, locked his eyes on Akari and stood.

"[When you do finally find Joe… the real Joe… You tell him he's a lucky bastard. And… and he better work damn hard to deserve you, or he'll hear from me.]

"[Ah will,]" Anna replied. He hadn't looked back at her because he knew he'd see the tears and then he'd break. "[Good luck, J-Ryouga.]

He took a deep breath and stepped forward. What am I doing!? part of him wailed in horror as his feet continued to carry him forward.

Go back! Apologize! You can't just break a girl's heart like that, you monster!

I'm not going to lie to her, Ryouga decided, firming his resolve. She deserves someone who'll be her hero. He focused on the form of the girl ahead of him. So does Akari.

You'll be alone! Where else are you going to find a girl who can accept you?

His stride faltered a moment. I'd rather be alone than keep lying, he decided. I'm tired of all my secrets and fears crushing me. Pretending I'm someone I'm not… that I feel something I don't… won't save me from being alone. I'll just drag someone else down with me.

He drew another deep breath and resumed walking.

Akari was leaning against the tree. She had her arms wrapped around herself and her eyes were closed. For a moment he wondered if she had somehow fallen asleep like that until she spoke.

"I wish I understood what you and Anna said. She's been helping me with my English, but…"

Akari opened her eyes, but she still wasn't looking at him. "I think… I caught the gist of what you were talking about, though."

Why do I have to do this twice in one day?! that small voice wailed in Ryouga's head.

"I'm sorry," Ryouga clapped his arms to his sides and bowed formally and stiffly. "I've been behaving like an idiot and… and… I've done things that hurt you. And that's unforgivable."

Akari blinked in surprise at him, then her expression melted into a smile. "Don't be ridiculous, Ryouga." She tapped him on the top of his head with her finger and motioned for him to straighten up. "I could forgive you anything. You know that."

His jaw tensed. "That's exactly why you shouldn't…"

She shook her head. "Ryouga… I love you." She locked eyes with him and he wasn't able to look away. "Maybe… I think at first it was silly and childish and naive, but… I do love you. But… That doesn't mean you're obligated to love me the same way. I don't want it to." She turned to him, stepped closer and raised a hand to his cheek. "When I met you… I was so afraid of being alone forever that… I didn't question it. You had to be the one for me. How could there be anyone else?"

"Akari…" he said hoarsely. This hurts. I don't want to do this.

"But… Then I got to see your world, and… I realized that mine had been so small. You already had so many others who cared for you and wanted a place in your heart and your life, and you struggled with it. And that's good. That's a good problem to have. After I met Shinnosuke, and he met all of my grandfather's qualifications the same as you, I asked myself why I didn't love him as well. I realized I was being a hypocrite… I was using it as an excuse to justify how I felt about you, and that you should feel the same for me." Her hand slipped away. "I… I'm not ready for this yet, Ryouga."

Wait... is she...? Ryouga's eyes widened.

"At first I hoped Ranma could give me the answer... She seemed to know so much more than me, about how this works... I thought I could just take notes..." she scoffed. "She... she knows you. More than I ever did. And she knows... why she feels the way she does about someone. I need to learn how to do that. How to tell the difference between what I feel, and what someone tells me to feel." Her shoulders sagged a bit. "I'm not ready for someone like you, Ryouga. I'm... I'm going to make sure I am ready... someday. But I can't make you wait for me."

Ryouga swallowed. "Are... you breaking up with me?"

Akari bit her lower lip. "I don't want to say it like that!" she said, clenching her fists. She folded her arms again and looked away. He could see that her eyes were wet and she seemed to be struggling. "I hate this. It hurts."

"I know," Ryouga said.

Akari glanced back at him. She smiled weakly. "Your... your mother was telling me and Anna stories about your father. How he was such a Casanova, with girls chasing him all over. But... I don't think that's right. Not the way she talks about him, how he was afterwards. I don't think he'd choose to break all those hearts. I know that's not who you are, either. He had to make a lot of mistakes to find the right person. And... I know you feel guilty about making the same kinds of mistakes." She smiled. "But I think... I think I need to make some mistakes too. When Anna goes back to America... I'm going to go with her. I'm going to see the world that you've wandered for so long. Maybe... maybe decide what I want."

"I..." Ryouga just stared at her a minute, not entirely sure how to respond. "Umm... That's a big trip..."

"I'll have Anna and Katsunishiki with me. Anna made the trip all on her own. I'll be fine." She smiled a little brighter. "Now it'll be my turn to send you postcards!"

"Yeah... I..." He laughed weakly, but stopped because it didn't feel right. "Yeah." He squeezed his eyes shut, feeling the old dread grip at him, that fear of losing something, like a door slowly and ominously closing. I'm not afraid of being alone. I'm not afraid of being alone. I'm NOT...

"Take care of yourself," he said finally, forcing a smile. "I'll... uhh... I'll see you around?"

She giggled softly. "Ryouga... somebody has to guide you back to school, don't they?"

000

By the time Ranma got back to the school, Ryouga was missing. Akane said that Anna had run off with him and she had lost track of the girl. They had searched for a bit, but classes had started and Ranma couldn't afford a black mark for missing out, forcing her to leave the search with others.

He's fine, she thought, staring out the window and tapping her foot on the floor. He's fine. He's been lost before, he'll find his way back.
Unless his direction problems have gotten worse.

She squeezed her eyes shut. No! He's FINE! He's still got his Anchor... he's got a whole MESS of Anchors!

Unless that MADE it worse?

He'll be back! Any minute! She started tapping her pencil as well.

Anna could have him halfway to America by now.

NOPE! Ranma grit her teeth. He. Will. Be. Here.

"Ms. Saotome!" Ms. Hinako said, rapping her ruler on the desk and nearly causing Ranma to jump up into the rafters. "Is there something you need to share with the class?"

"Uh, no, Ms. Hinako! It's nothing, Ms. Hinako!" Ranma said, sitting up stock straight.

"You seem more on edge than usual. What sort of delinquency are you up to this week, hmmm?"

The diminutive teacher started flipping a 5 yen coin with her thumb as though she was a gangster.

"I'm not! Up to anything I mean! Really!" Ranma eyed the coin nervously. She glanced around the room, but Akane and Ukyou were out looking for Ryouga, Sayuri and Rin were too far across the room for her to subtly signal for help, and Yuka, Hiroshi and Daisuke were all missing. Crap crap crap! What do I say?!

"Well?" Ms. Hinako caught the coin between two fingers. "I'm waiting Ms. Saotome!"

Ranma whimpered softly, then sighed and slumped. "I don't got a good reason. Ryouga's gone and gotten lost again and I'm worried that his ex girlfriend has hauled him back off to America or something." She closed her eyes in acceptance of her fate. "So... just drain me and get it over with."

She waited for the awful cold, dragging pull to drain away her strength, but nothing came. Cautiously, she cracked open an eyelid to peek.

Ms. Hinako was leaning in close, eyes wide and watery, her lower lip trembling. "Y-your boyfriend has run off to another country with another woman? That's so sad!"

"I... wait... He's not..." Ranma said, blinking in surprise. She glanced around and realized the entire class was looking at her.

"How heartless! And after Ranma has been so brave choosing to become a woman for him!"

"I always knew Hibiki was wishy-washy! Using that curse to fool everyone into thinking he was a cute little pet piglet!"

"I dunno. Maybe it's like all those times Akane was kidnapped by some kook who wanted to marry her and/or Ranma?"

"And/or?"

"Well, there was that Chardin dude."

"Yeah! Remember that crazy circus lady who attacked the school last week?"
"Oh this is so tragic! Ranma, we just want you to know that we're all behind you!"

"Yeah!"

"Yeah!"

"And if you need a guy to replace your deadbeat boyfriend…"

"Dude. Let the corpse get cold first! Come on!"

"No! Look, it's not… he's not…!" Ranma said. "I'm not…! I…" She watched in horror as their conversation continued without her and realized she had now officially lost all claim to manhood at school. She slumped and dropped her forehead to her desk. "I give up…"

Out of the corner of her eye she saw movement. She sat up and looked out the window, scanning the courtyard. Someone in a school uniform was walking through the gates, flanked by two girls. She squinted, then caught the hint of a yellow bandanna around his head.

"Ryouga!" She popped open the window and, without a second thought, leapt smoothly through the opening, dropped the three stories or so to the ground and landed lightly on her feet. I am going to kick his ass! For… REASONS!

She ignored the faint cheering she heard from the open window behind her and stalked towards Ryouga. However as she got closer, the expression on his face caused her clenched fists to slacken, and her deliberate pace to quicken.

"Ryouga!" She jogged forwards towards him.

"Yo." He held up a hand and smiled. It was fake, forced and weak, and just reaffirmed what she already knew.

Ranma glanced from him to Akari and Anna flanking him. Their expressions were downcast, almost guilty. Not ashamed, but… not willing to meet her eyes either.

"What happened?" Ranma asked, stopping a few paces away from him.

"It's all good now. I… uhh.. I sorted things out with Anna. And with Akari, so… no more flying cars," Ryouga said. He chuckled weakly.

Ranma regarded him skeptically. "No… something happened. Ryouga, what did you do?"

"Ryouga, we should go," Akari said softly, touching his arm.

"Oh… uhh… right…" Ryouga said and turned a bit awkwardly. He didn't seem to know what to do with his hands and finally settled on picking at his jacket sleeves. "Will… I see you later?"

"Probably not," Akari replied. "I need to go home and talk with Grandpa before anything else, and there's a lot to do to get ready. Anna needs to head back home sooner rather than later, so if I want to go with her, I have a lot of preparation to do." She sniffed lightly. "I-I'll call you before we leave… and I'll write you letters. Every day if I can!"

"Yeah…" he nodded. "I'd like that." He swallowed hard. "Take care, okay?"

Akari nodded, then gave him a fierce hug, which he timidly returned. Then she released him, wiped her eyes and gestured for Anna to follow. Anna gave Ryouga her own bone-creaking hug then followed Akari as they headed back through the gates.
Ranma simply blinked, watching. That was a goodbye. Why was that a goodbye? "Ryouga, what the hell is going on?"

"Nothing," Ryouga replied heavily, turning and starting to walk towards the school.

"Akari and I broke up," Ryouga said reluctantly.

Ranma's eyes widened. "What!? Why would you do a-a rock stupid thing like that?!!"

"It was Akari's decision," Ryouga said, holding up a hand.

"She broke up with you!" Ranma boggled. "Damnit, how did you screw this up?! You wait right there! Akari!" Ranma tried to step past Ryouga and call after the pig loving girl, but Ryouga clapped a hand on her shoulder and stopped her dead.

Ranma tried to slip out of his grip, but his hand was clamped like an iron vice. "Ryouga… Ryouga let me go! I can fix this! This is… this is a misunderstanding!"

"Ranma, it's not a misunderstanding," Ryouga replied. He sounded… tired. Defeated.

"She probably found out about that kiss Shampoo gave you, o-or the Link or…” She wriggled, but couldn't get free. "Let me go so I can get her back for you!"

"I don't want you to get her back!" Ryouga barked. "This doesn't have anything to do with you or Shampoo or the Link or any of it."

Ranma stopped her struggles and looked up at him, startled by his tone.

The hard expression on his face faded. He released her shoulder. "It… We weren't ready for each other," he said finally. "Akari needs the chance to make more mistakes… and I have to learn how to stop making them."

"B-but… No. That's not fair," Ranma said.

"We were both terrified of being alone, so we jumped at the first chance to escape it. That's… not a great foundation on which to build a life together," Ryouga said quietly. "She's gonna travel for a while and see the world. This… this will be really good for her. It's something she can't do tied down to me." He managed a weak smile. "I… guess I should get back inside and take my detention, huh?" He turned and started to walk towards the school again.

"I… no!" Ranma ran in front of him again, spreading her arms and blocking his path. "You dove off a cliff to save a picture of her! How can you just let her walk away like this!?!"

"Because she asked!" Ryouga shot back, clenching his fists, his eyes flashing with a little of the old fire - which quickly guttered out. "Because it isn't about what I want this time, Ranma. She's right - everything she said, and everything she's doing to try and fix it. If I really love her I gotta let her go, and if I don't… I've got no right to stop her either way…” His hands relaxed.

"A-and… that's it?!" Ranma said. "You just wander off to be alone again, after we've done all of this to fix your life?! How'm I supposed to be okay fixing my life when yours is in the trash?!" She grit her teeth, not sure if she wanted to punch him in the gut for being an idiot or… something else. She wanted to fight something over this but… the only target available didn't deserve it.
"My happiness isn't your responsibility, Ranma," Ryouga said.

"Don't say that!"

Ryouga stopped short, staring at her in surprise.

Ranma clenched her fists, trembling and glaring at him. Her vision was blurry for some reason. "Don't you ever say that!" she snarled at him. "How dare you think I would be okay with… with coming this far and just leaving you like this!"

"I…" Ryouga simply gaped at her. She didn't know what had him so flabbergasted, and for the moment she didn't care.

"You always do this! You always get close to what you want and then you throw it away for some stupid noble bullshit, and then you try and pass it off and be all stoic and cool! Like… like nothing hurts you! Well you can't pull that crap with me anymore!" She walked up to him and thumped him on the chest with her balled up fist. "I'm going to make you happy, goddamnit!"

Ryouga's gape widened, then his mouth snapped shut with a click of his teeth as he looked around, noticing that there were more than a few students hanging out of open windows following the exchange. "Uhhh… Ranma…?"

Why is this so important to me? Ranma wondered. She was still angry… furious, almost. He was supposed to be okay! It was okay for me to move on with my life because he was going to be okay! He had someone else, so it was okay… Her vision clouded further.

"Hey. Hey." Ryouga noticed Ranma starting to tear up and put his hands on her shoulders. "Ranma? Why are you…?" Without thinking he lifted her chin and wiped the tear from her cheek.

For a moment Ranma's eyes locked with his, and she felt another lurch in her chest of the type that was becoming disturbingly common around him, but it was much stronger this time. Just for a moment… she got the feeling that… something was going to happen.

But it was wrong. She wasn't a real girl and he didn't belong to her, and suddenly she felt like a thief stealing someone else's moment. For some reason, that just brought more tears, despite her frustrated attempts to push them back down. She finally just dropped her head and wrapped her arms around him in a hug, finding it less humiliating than letting him see her blubber about… about nothing.

"H-hey… Ranma…" Ryouga said, glancing around and unsure where to put his hands.

"Shut up," she mumbled. "Don't tell anyone."

"I'm… I'm pretty sure the whole school is watching us, Ranma," Ryouga replied sheepishly.

"Still shut up," she replied, muffled by his shirt. "And still don't tell anyone!"

"I… Okay, Ranma." He sighed, a small, but genuine smile crossing his lips as he allowed his arms to fall loosely around her. "I won't tell anyone."

000

Nodoka sighed happily as she pressed the seal into the wax on the envelope. It would have been more traditional to use a scroll, but those were hard to come by in the stationary stores. She imagined this would do. She examined the Saotome family seal in the red wax with satisfaction.
"Just one envelope?" Genma asked, peering over her shoulder. "Not five?"

"Well, I'd hate to get the other girls' hopes up," Nodoka said. "Besides, they'd likely be upset, or come by to pester Ranma to try and change my mind. Better we give them some time to themselves before we start sending out the wedding invitations. More chance of nature taking its course." She smiled. "Ranma will be so happy to have this over and done with, I'm sure."

"I'm... not entirely sure this would have been his choice..." Genma said, then quickly held up his hands placatingly. "Not that I'm questioning your decision, dear!"

"He'll accept this is for the best in time," Nodoka sighed. "It's a shame Soun had to wheedle him away from us, but I suppose allowing him one last bit of freedom can't have hurt. He has quite a bit of work to do, after all." She handed the envelope to Genma. "Dear, could you deliver this for me? I'm sure our future daughter-in-law is eagerly awaiting this."

Genma took the letter and tucked it into his grungy gi. Nodoka frowned, promising herself that the garment would have an 'accident' the next time she did the wash. It might have been Genma's favorite, but it had not aged well on the road.

"We'll need to round up the boy afterwards," Genma said. "If we leave word with the Tendos'..."

"I'll call Kasumi and tell her I'd like my son to come home for Sunday dinner," Nodoka replied. "They don't need to know more than that yet. We'll give them some time to cool down before inviting them to the wedding." She noticed Genma's crestfallen look and clucked her tongue, touching her arm. "Now don't be like that, dear! I know you had your heart set on joining the schools with Ranma and Akane, but there's plenty of life left in you and Soun, and once one of the girls has a son or daughter we'll make the arrangements with one of our grandchildren. We'll make sure they grow up together so that we don't have the same... 'compatibility issues' this time."

"I still think I could have gotten it to work between Ranma and Akane, with just a little more time," Genma huffed.

Nodoka's eyes narrowed. "You know we don't have any more time. He's starting to ask questions. Maybe if you had fulfilled your oath properly..."

"I did the best I could!" Genma snapped back. "If you'd have been able to have more children then maybe..."

Nodoka's eyes widened and she stared at him. Her hand trembled slightly as her breath caught in her throat.

He trailed off, his look of shock mirroring her own as he realized what he had said. He quickly dropped his eyes. "N-No-chan, I..."

She slapped him across the face, hard. Her hand stung from the act, though he barely flinched.

"How dare you," she hissed in a voice barely above a whisper, then louder. "How dare you!"

"I-I'm sorry, I forgot myself," Genma said, falling to his knees and prostrating himself before her.

Her lip twitched. She wanted to step on him, to grind him down further, but she relented. "This has been hard on both of us, and Ranma's ingratitude for the sacrifices we've both made only makes it harder," she said softly. She took a few breaths to steady herself. "We can't turn on each other now - not when we're so close." She knelt and extended her hand to him, forcing a smile. "Always remember, Gen-chan... it's the Kami who robbed us. We did everything right. Everything. We are owed this. All of this strife and struggle is just to remedy their mistake. Through Ranma we will finally have the life and family we deserve."

He pushed himself up onto his knees and accepted her hand. "You're right. I will try harder to teach the boy respect."

"For now, let him be childish, for the last few days of childhood he has left," Nodoka said. "Go to his bride and make sure she is ready. I know I have made the right choice in her. Just a bit further, and we may both rest." She pulled him in and gave him a gentle kiss on the lips.

000

Things were a bit awkward for the rest of the class until lunch. Ranma wasn't entirely sure what was going on, but it felt like the entire school was watching her.

As they gathered at the tree, Nabiki intercepted Ranma and Ryouga steered them over to one side and sat them down together.

"Ummm… are we being sectioned off for something dumb we did?" Ranma asked.

"Not quite. I wouldn't exactly call it dumb, just… well, implicative. Ryouga, scoot over to your left… no, no, your other left. No, your… towards Ranma! That's better."

Ranma blinked, feeling a bit nervous as Ryouga was directed to sit practically touching her. The rest of the group was chatting and seemed unconcerned about the whole thing.

"There, perfect!" Nabiki put her hands on her hips and nodded in satisfaction, then reached over and scooped up a bento box. "Here, and feel free to indulge any urges you might have to sit in Ryouga's lap, Ranma."

"What," Ranma said flatly, then snatched the bento out of Nabiki's hands. "Nabiki, what are you up to? And why do we only get one bento!?"

"You can have another once you finish that one. Together," Nabiki said. She held up a finger, going into lecture mode. "You two managed to cause one of the biggest rounds of romance speculation Furinkan has ever seen with that little display today. And that is a feat, believe you me! Now the school is unsure whether that was a heartwarming reconciliation between lovers after Ryouga was tempted by a pair of seductresses and their pet pig, or Ryouga is playing poor innocent, sweet lil' Ranko for a fool and every male in the school is obligated to descend upon him like a pack of vengeful wolves. Much as I could probably make a killing on the betting pool for the Justice Horde vs Ryouga, I'm guessing you two would rather not go through that every morning. So, while the whole school is watching, you two need to be as lovey-dovey as possible, and your first assignment is to feed each other lunch."

Ranma and Ryouga glanced at each other, then back at her.

"You can't be serious," they said in perfect unison.

"You two are adorable," Nabiki said with a smirk. "And I'm dead serious." She squatted down in front of them. "Look… Teasing aside, I know you two are uncomfortable about this. I'm sorry, but Furinkan is just like that. Without Hiroshi and Daisuke to run counterintelligence for me, I'm stuck dealing with whatever the current rumor mill churns up. They're convinced Ranma has gone full-time girl, or at least close enough for their hormone-addled brains, and if they get the notion she's single, or at least not in what qualifies as a 'real' relationship in their bigoted little minds, then they'll be all over her just like they were with Akane."
Ranma sighed and looked away. "Great. You realize if Mom or Dad get wind of this I'm dead, right? As in seppuku contract dead?"

"That's not happening!" Ranma was a bit surprised when this time it was Nabiki and Ryouga who were in sync.

Ryouga and Nabiki glanced at each other. Ryouga blushed a little and looked away, while Nabiki's smile widened a bit.

"Don't worry, Ranma. We're not going to let it come to that. You just be you," Nabiki said, patting Ranma's shoulder.

Ranma glanced past her to where Akane was chatting animatedly with Shampoo and Ukyou. "And… nobody else has any objections to this?"

"We had a pow-wow when we got back and it become obvious Furinkan was a hotbed of speculation," Nabiki replied. "Akane did have one condition, of course, but otherwise she's on board."

"Oh yeah? What's the condition?" Ranma asked, as she removed the cloth wrapping from the bento box.

"She made the bento," Nabiki replied with a wink. "She wants every bite gone."

Ranma's eyes went wide. She glanced at Ryouga, and then put on the sweetest smile she ever had in her life. "Oh, Ryouga, honey…"

Ryouga winced. Out of the corner of her eye Ranma could see Akane turn and clasp her hands with that very familiar expression of eternal hope she wore whenever she brought out one of her creations. Which was often immediately followed by rage, the appearance of a mallet from somewhere and then a blank spot in Ranma's memory.

Well… maybe it's something okay, Ranma thought. She can make decent okonomiyaki now, right? Maybe it's that! Or Spanakopita… she did okay with that… somehow… even without having the right ingredients… She cracked open the lid and peeked.

There were some dark shapes in the tin, covered in white stuff, with a few red bits amongst them. Ranma lost her nerve and closed it again without risking inhaling. It wasn't anything she recognized. Oh crap…

Ryouga noticed her expression and swallowed nervously.

"Well?" Akane said. "Go on, try some! It was my first time trying to make it."

Ranma stomach lurched at those words. She remembered vividly some of Akane's other 'firsts'. She glanced down at the bento and swallowed, then picked up her chopsticks. Okay… I'll… I'll just wolf it down quick. No point in both me and Ryo going down for this. And we don't want Akane being mad at him just before we do the Link. She popped open the lid.

She felt a nudge against her arm. She glanced at Ryouga to see him open his mouth and close his eyes.

"Ryouga, what are you doing!?" Ranma hissed.

"Ust ooo eet quick!" Ryouga hissed back.
"But...!"

"OOOO EEET!"

She stabbed her chopsticks into the box, snagged a lump of… something. It resisted a bit before coming free - whatever the white stuff was a bit stretchy - but she was able to get it clear and pop it into Ryouga's mouth.

"I'm sorry!" she whispered as he closed his mouth and chewed a couple of times with grim determination.

He was tense a moment, braced as if waiting to be struck down. Then… another chew… and another. His eyes opened. "Mmmm?"

"Mmmm'!?" Ranma demanded. She fully removed the cover and looked down at the odd concoction, poking it with her chopsticks experimentally. Was the white stuff… some sort of cheese sauce and not some horrible permutation of egg? Then the black stuff was… She risked a sniff.

She blinked. "That... that actually smells pretty good!"

Ryouga nodded and swallowed. "I have no idea what it is, but that is good!"

"Try it Ranma!" Akane said, eyes shining.

Ranma's brow furrowed. She regarded the food suspiciously. She snagged a morsel with her chopsticks, then carefully placed it on her tongue. No burnt plastic taste. No horrible capsicum burn. No explosion of greasy, salty sourness.

She carefully chewed once. Then again. It was cheese! And... eggplant... mushroom... the red bits were tomato? And some sort of meat... She chewed and swallowed. No horrible aftertaste. Definitely some seasoning, but it wasn't the explosion of mismatched flavors she had come to expect.

"Mmmm?" she repeated, dumbfounded.

"Isn't it good?" Akane asked, her grin a mile wide. "It's Moussaka! Ya Ya helped me make it!"

"'Ya Ya'?" Ranma and Ryouga said in unison.

"Remember how Ukyou and I needed to distract Akane while you and Ryouga linked Shampoo?" Nabiki said. "Well, Shampoo suggested this little Mom & Pop place to go for dinner after the movie. Little Greek family restaurant."

"She practically adopted Akane," Ukyou added. "Remember the Spanakopita she made? Well... apparently it wasn't a fluke.

"Greek cuisine just makes so much more sense to me!" Akane said. "The recipes are so easy to follow!"

"The recipes are in Greek!" Ukyou huffed, apparently a little put out that her progress with okonomiyaki had been overshadowed by some foreigner's dish. "And some of the measurements are things like 'A pinch' or 'Some' or 'Give it a good sprinkle!'"

"And those make so much more sense!" Akane gushed.
"Shampoo go with Akane next week to visit. See if Ya Ya can teach more," Shampoo said. "Should all go! Would make them too too happy!"

"Who is 'Ya Ya'?" Ryoga repeated, confused.

"Shampoo has secret Greek Grandparents. I met them when we went on our date," Ranma replied. Mindful of Nabiki's instructions, she scooped up more of the Moussaka and popped a morsel into Ryoga's mouth, earning a small noise of surprise from him. "Which begs the question of how we're going to explain things to them if we all go."

Shampoo shrugged. "Not have to tell whole story. Ya Ya and Pappou understand making families of choice. Just… leave out bits that should not be discussed with Grandparents anyway."

"Yeah, but…" Ranma was cut off as Ryoga took the opportunity to pop a morsel of the Moussaka into her mouth. She shot him an annoyed glare as she chewed. He had an amused smirk on his face. Oooh, shutting me up with food, hmm? This isn't a challenge you wanna lay at my feet, bucko! She finished chewing, and then as she spoke casually crammed the rest of the bento into Ryoga's mouth with amaguriken speed, using her Parlay du Fois Gras technique. "How do we explain the curse to them?" She gestured at herself with her free hand.

Shampoo, Akane and Ukyou exchanged glances, considering.

"Well, for occasional visits? Probably safer to just be Ranma's 'sister' like you are with the Kunos," Nabiki said.

"Geez… it's starting to feel like I'm living a second life here," Ranma said, slumping a little. "I mean… I guess there was always a little bit of that with Kuno, but I never actually claimed to be someone else before I got stuck attending school as a girl. Now Ryoga's Mom thinks I'm a girl, the Kunos think I'm two people, and now Shampoo's adopted grandparents?" She sighed heavily.

Ranma felt a hand on her shoulder and turned to see Ryoga looking at her, concern in his eyes. "Nflo maddur whad, ur Ranma," he said solemnly around the mouthful of food he was still struggling to get down.

Ranma stared at him, then burst out laughing. "Oh my god, you are such a dork!" She giggled as she reached for a napkin. "Finish chewing that mouthful before you try and say something profound!" She reached up and cleaned up some of the dribble around his mouth as he chewed mightily and struggled to get an entire bento's worth down.

"Gah! Well, maybe if you'd be a bit gentler with your feeding technique!?" Ryoga said. "I thought my jaw was going to dislocate!"

"That was nothing. I managed to get a whole roast turkey into Chardin's face. Though he was a freaking rubber-face mutant," She shuddered. "He kept trying to kiss me by shoving my whole head into his mouth."

"Yeeech." Ryoga made a face. "That's weird, even for weird martial arts. I don't even understand why he'd do that. Even if my mouth could stretch like that I wouldn't wanna kiss you like that."

Ranma blinked. It was an odd way to say it… like maybe Ryoga would want to kiss her the normal way? She could see his eyes widen as realization of what he said hit him too. They looked away from each other quickly. Ranma could feel the warmth in her cheeks though she didn't risk a glance to see if Ryoga was blushing as well. She cleared her throat softly and turned her attention to the girls, ready to move to a different subject.

All four girls were staring back at them in dead silence.

"I-I mean, not that you'd want to kiss me at all, right Ryo?" Ranma asked with a nervous laugh.

"Y-yeah!" Ryouga agreed, laughing along with her. "I mean… that would be weird, right!"

"Yeah, I know! Totally not what you meant!"

"Exactly!"

"I never should have brought it up!"

"Right! I mean, it's not like I'd want to kiss you!"

_That_ pricked Ranma's pride. She glanced at Ryouga and narrowed her eyes. "Well, it's not like you'd know. You haven't exactly got a lot of experience."

Ryouga blinked. "What the hell does _that_ mean?"

Ranma smirked and stretched nonchalantly. "Well, I'm just saying that a guy like you'd be pretty hard pressed to land a kiss from a girl like me."

"_Hey!_ I've had plenty of… of opportunities to kiss a girl! I do fine!" Ryouga protested.

Ranma smirked and poked him in the chest. "Oh please, you wouldn't know what to do with a hot little number like me! You froze up when _Shampoo_ kissed you."

"_Hey!_" Shampoo protested, feeling vaguely insulted by the inference Ranma was making.

"Because she _isn't my fiancee_, and I was in a room with people I was sure were going to kill me for it!" Ryouga shot back. "You didn't do a whole lot better when she kissed _you_ if I recall!"

"I've had a lot of practise since then!" Ranma replied haughtily.

"What, kissing _Kuno_?"

"_It doesn't count if you use tape!_"

"Too bad. If you had just kissed him normally I'm pretty sure the dead fish lips would have cured him of his pigtailed goddess obsession," Ryouga replied with a smirk.

"_What?_" Ranma leaned forward, nearly nose to nose with him, glaring daggers. "I do _not_ have dead fish lips! Trust me, Mister, if I kissed you, it'd ruin you for any other girl!" She folded her arms and rocked back, smirking. "_If_ you had the balls to do it."

"You're confusing lack of resolve with a lack of _desire_, Saotome," Ryouga shot back. "I only lock up when I get kissed by _pretty_ girls."

She leaned back in and growled, poking him in the chest again. "Don't kid yourself! If I planted one on you, you'd be in a coma for a week!"

"Yeah. With _food poisoning_. Dead fish will do that to you," Ryouga said back with that same insufferably smug expression. "Otherwise I'd barely _flinch_."
"Oh yeah, smart guy?" Ranma said. "Prove it. Show you're a big man. I bet you don't have the guts to actually do it."

"There isn't any tape to save you this time, Ranma," Ryouga growled, leaning in so their noses were actually touching.

Ranma scoffed. "Not like I'm worried or anything."

"You'll move," Ryouga said. "You'll dodge out of the way at the last second."

"I'm not going anywhere," Ranma replied. She closed her eyes and pursed her lips. "You're gonna crack first."

"Not a chance," Ryouga replied. "Just giving you the option to back out gracefully."

"Not happening, buddy."

"Not happening here, either, so you'd better pucker up!"

"C'mon, plant a big fat one right..." She cracked an eye open. "...Ryouga what the hell are we doing!?"

"I don't know!" Ryouga whispered hoarsely. "How do we stop this?"

"How would I know! Usually someone interrupts with a camera or waving wedding decorations or screaming death threats or SOMETHING!" Ranma hissed back.

Slowly, they both turned to see Shampoo, Ukyou, Akane and Nabiki still watching them, enraptured.

"Well?" Nabiki said. "Get on with it!"

"Yes, is just getting to good part!" Shampoo added.

"If you stop after that much buildup, we're going to be cross," Ukyou said, narrowing her eyes and crossing her arms.

"They won't do it," Akane scoffed.

"Crap!" Ranma muttered under her breath and looked back at Ryouga. "Think of something!"

"What do you want ME to do!?" Ryouga hissed. "YOU started this!"

"I did not! You were the one who said you wanted to kiss me!"

"I didn't! All I said was I wouldn't do it the way that Picolet guy did it!"

"Which implied you WOULD do it!"

"Don't let's start THAT all over again! How do we get OUT of this!?"

They glanced back toward the girls who were looking considerably more impatient now, glaring and tapping their fingers or feet.

"Why do they want us to kiss, anyway!?" Ryouga whimpered.

"I think it's revenge for all the times they went through this," Ranma replied.
"So what do we do!?"

Ranma swallowed. "I don't know! I know that look, they're expecting something and are gonna be mad if they don't get it! We... we're gonna hafta..."

Ryouga swallowed. "I... was serious when I said I didn't have any tape. Sorry..." Ryouga said. He was definitely blushing now.

"I mean... you're not Kuno..." Ranma said. Oh God, I'm not actually doing this, am I?! "I'm... uhh... I'm sorry too. I mean... I'm not a REAL girl or anything."

Ryouga frowned. "Didn't you tell me that was YOUR decision which you were?"

"I..." Ranma's lips felt dry.

"So... which are you right now?" Ryouga asked.

"I'm... I..." Ranma noticed his face was a lot closer. Had he leaned in? No, she had... they both had? Everything was in slow motion. She had that same terrified, anxious feeling she'd had when it had been her and Akane in the dojo doing this. J-just tell him you don't want to right now! Just tell him you're a guy! Just LIE! Do SOMETHING! Everything is gonna change if you don't...

"Hey guys, how is the Ranma Family Buffet today?" Riko's familiar voice called out.

Ranma and Ryouga both bolted back a couple of feet, looking across the field as the volleyball team (Minus Yuka) came striding towards them.

OH, THANK GOD! Ranma thought. Her heart was thundering in her chest and she was struggling not to hyperventilate. I almost... almost...

Ryouga glanced at her then looked away guiltily. He looked almost... disappointed?

Did he... did he WANT to? Ranma gawked at him. He... he COULDN'T, could he?

"Hey, what's with the dirty looks?" Riko asked as she settled down on the grass nearby. She was receiving somewhat modulated death glares from Ukyou, Akane, Shampoo and even from Nabiki.

"You know when the phone rings right when the drama you're watching gets to the best part?" Ukyou asked dryly.

"Oooh I hate that!" Rin said, sitting down next to Riko. "But what has that got to do with... oooh, is that Moussaka?"

"Well, aren't we getting fancy with our lunches?" Sayuri sat down next to Rin. She glanced around the rest of the group and frowned. "Seriously, did we... interrupt something?"

"No!" Ranma said quickly.

"Not at all!" Ryouga added, laughing weakly.

"You interrupted a 13-to-1 longshot," Nabiki muttered, with a sigh. "I only had one ticket on that one. The pool would have been sweet."

"I can't believe you're running betting pools on your own relationship dodecahedron," Sayuri said. "Isn't that a conflict of interest?"
"Probably? The Tokyo Gaming commission doesn't exactly do much regulation at the high school gambling level," Nabiki winked. "Besides, if I don't do it Hana will and I don't particularly like the categories she chooses. Public opinion at Furinkan tends to sway depending on what odds the local bookie puts on something."

Sayuri raised an eyebrow. "That sounds way over my head. I should probably be a little worried about how complex your schemes get, but…" She sniffed. "I smell baklava."

Ranma's tummy growled, and she realized that she had hardly had any of the Moussaka she had fed to Ryouga. She reached for the second bento box, but Nabiki scooped it up before she could get it and handed it to Ryouga.

"But… why?" Ranma asked plaintively, actually tearing up a bit.

"Remember the plan, Ranma," Nabiki said. "You can have this but Ryouga has to feed it to you. You gave all of the other one to him."

"We still gotta do that?" Ranma whimpered.

"What's this?" Sayuri asked, raising an eyebrow.

"More PR. Basically the school either expects lovey-dovey, or a big fight with these two now. Most of the students think Ranma has gone full time girl. Probably Himura pulling PR to humiliate her now that I think about it… and if the Hentai Horde thought Ranma was single and available we'd be right back to daily challenges. Ryouga's been nice enough to play boyfriend to keep them off her but the student body needs a certain level of PDA to keep buying the act."

"Is that what this morning was all about?" Riko asked. "I mean… from our vantage it looked like Ryouga had broken up with his own girlfriend to be with Ranma or something, and she totally broke down."

"Yeah… that'd be crazy huh?" Ryouga said weakly.

Ranma shot him a suspicious glance. That wasn't… No, he didn't break up with Akari over ME… right?

"Awww… it wasn't real?" Rin mumbled around a mouthful of baklava. "It was so sweet, though!"

"You two should try out for the drama club if you can pull off stuff like that," Riko added. "That kiss scene Ranma and Akane did last year was intense. I bet you two could top it easy after that little courtyard performance!"

"Yeah," Nabiki said dryly. "I imagine I could run a pretty good pool on that too. It'd be like a… oh, I don't know… a 13-1 longshot at least!"

Ranma groaned and slumped. Everyone in my life has gone insane. Including me. It's probably malnutrition. She looked longingly at the bento in Ryouga's hands, then finally decided that hunger outweighed whatever shred of dignity she might still be clinging to. She slumped against his side and gave him her best big-eyed pleading look. "Ryo, I'm hungry. Can I have some?"

"I… what… but?" Ryouga replied intelligently, looking slightly panicked at her change in demeanor.

"Pleeeeeease?" Ranma said, and started drawing little circles on his shoulder with her finger.
She could almost watch as the gears in his head seized up.

She smirked and gave him a wink to break the illusion. I probably shouldn't enjoy messing with him as much as I do, some small part of her thought.

Realization dawned on his face, followed by a flicker of anger that melted into bemused acceptance as he realized she had intentionally let him in on it. It all passed in a fraction of a second and she was rather proud of herself that she didn't need the Link to see it.

Or the Link has just become so normal for me I don't really notice that's how I know this stuff... Ranma thought as she realized it had been there all along, as sort of a low level background. She was so caught up in her musings that she was a bit surprised when a pair of chopsticks appeared in front of her face. She glanced up at Ryouga.

"I mean... you did ask nicely," he said, smiling a little.

She snickered a bit, but accepted the morsel. She scooted a bit closer to him, purely to facilitate the process as he began digging for more.

Sayuri frowned as she watched the scene. She sighed heavily. "Nabiki, how much would it cost to suddenly find myself in a situation where a cute boy is required to feed me lunch?"

"35000 yen and you have to supply the boy," Nabiki replied without missing a beat.

Sayuri slumped. "Damnit."

000

Young Mi winced as she dabbed the salve on the cut on her arm. Her trip through the concrete wall had opened a nasty gash. Thankfully, first aid was one of the many things she had been taught almost since she could walk. Circus work was dangerous after all.

She was leaning against her liger on the floor of an old warehouse. She had dragged some old sacks and boxes to create a makeshift nest for them, but it was hardly what she would call 'comfortable'. Still, she had endured worse.

Samson grumbled behind her, the sound resonating through his massive frame.

"Yes, yes... I will find you some food..." She tried to sit up and winced when her ribs protested. "Nnnhh... in a little while. Can't let Darling see me in this condition, now can we?"

"Perhaps we might help with that?"

Young Mi started and scrambled to grab her whip, making an abortive attempt to bolt to her feet and getting halfway before the pain staggered her. Luckily Samson was already up, shielding her with his bulk and growling at the intruders.

"Oooh, kitty!" another voice said. Young Mi made her way around Samson to see and spotted two girls; One was tall and statuesque, with long blonde hair - the other was shorter and more classically 'cute', her hair tied off to the side in a ponytail.

"This 'kitty' bites," Young Mi said, a warning note in her voice as she tried to straighten and hide her injuries. "Leave us in peace."

"But I wanna feed the kitty! I'll get the meat!" the shorter girl said. She disappeared behind the taller girl, towards the blinding light of the open door.

"We don't mean any harm. My name is Sanae, my excitable friend is Omi," Sanae said, flipping her hair out of her face. "Himura Tanaka of the Furinkan High Student Council sent me."

"Furinkan High? Oh, that school..." Young Mi sighed. "If you're here for money for damages..."

"Not at all," Sanae said. "Quite to the contrary, Himura and the council has been rather moved by your plight. She is quite the romantic. She's hoping to help."

"Help? Help how?" Young Mi asked suspiciously.

Just then Omi came back in, pushing a large cart. Young Mi could see it was piled high with raw meat. Samson could smell it and, with a rumble, started to pad forward.

"Samson, geuman!" Young Mi snapped. She gathered herself and walked over to the cart, eyeing the meat suspiciously. It looked like much higher grade than the usual animal feed. "If this is poisoned..."

"Ooooh... was it supposed to be, Sanae?" Omi said. "I thought we were playing nice. I didn't even look up what kind of poison to use on a cat..."

"Omi, please. We are not here to poison anyone," Sanae said with a sigh. "That would be counterproductive. You are looking for the martial artist known as 'Mousse', yes?"

Young Mi decided the meat looked safe enough and clicked her tongue to Samson, giving him the all clear to eat. He practically pounced on the cart, earning an excited shriek from Omi. "No. I am looking for the purple-haired maechunbu who has lured him away from me. Once I've dealt with her, I will find Darling and... resolve the matter of his infidelity."

Sanae produced a photograph of a girl with purple hair, wearing a Furinkan school uniform. "Shampoo, correct? Of the Joketsuzoku Amazons?"

Young Mi stepped forward and accepted the photo cautiously. "Yes, that matches his description of her. So she is a student at your school?"

"She is," Sanae agreed. "I've been instructed to tell you where to find her. But... you might be more interested in this girl." She handed over another picture, of a mousey-looking girl in a set of gym bloomers and T-shirt. Young Mi recognized her as the girl who had convinced the redhead to release her.

"I know her," Young Mi took the picture. "She seemed to know who I was and who I was after, though I've never met her before in my life."

Sanae smirked. "That would be because of this. She produced another picture.

Young Mi took it and squinted. She realized it was a picture taken at some distance, though it was quite clearly Mousse with the girl in his arms as he landed on the roof of the school. She looked up at Sanae, a demanding glint in her eyes. "Is this true? Is she the one who has bewitched my Darling?!"

"Her name is Rin Ito," Sanae said. "It seems after Ms. Shampoo rejected your 'Darling' one time too many, he began to take up with her. He's been seen in her company quite a few times."

"She knew..." Young Mi said, her voice soft, disbelieving. "the whole time. She knew who I was and why I was there and she didn't even flinch." She crumpled the picture in a shaking fist. "Geu changnyeo!"

"I'm quite happy to give you her address," Sanae said with a smile. "But... Himura would like to make a more... comprehensive arrangement."

"'Comprehensive' how?" Young Mi asked.

"What you do with Shampoo is... mostly irrelevant, though we have interested parties among us that would be happy to see her removed from circulation. Rin Ito we would very much like to have taken care of. We are happy to facilitate both. But in exchange for some coordination on the timing of your action, we are willing to provide more support. Food, housing..." she paused and looked Young Mi over, "and Medical attention. For you and your pet. All we ask in exchange is you wait for our signal to strike."

Young Mi glanced over at Omi as the girl threw gobbets of meat to Samson for him to eat, seemingly unconcerned about how close the snapping jaws got. She was giggling and laughing, clapping her hands like a child with a new toy.

"I'm... intrigued," she said at last. "What are your terms?"

000

Nabiki frowned at her phone as the recording played for the third time that day. "...not in service. Please hang up and try your call again. This is a message from..."

"Trying to make a phone call?" Rin asked, glancing at her phone.

"Just trying to check in on Hiroshi and Daisuke. I guess they must be somewhere they're not getting cell service," Nabiki replied, tucking her phone away. "I wasn't really expecting them to have anything for me yet anyway."

"Oh. Is Yuka with them? I haven't seen her all day," Rin said. She fidgeted a little. "I... I've been wanting to apologize to her since yesterday."

Nabiki lost the battle to resist ruffling the younger girl's hair once more, and did just that. "From what Sayuri told me, you were just standing up for yourself. I'm sure it'll be fine. People snap and say unkind and unfair things when they're stressed, and you're both under a lot of it."

"Mm," Rin replied noncommittally.

"So... how's your Dad doing with his new job?" Nabiki asked.

"Oh!" Rin brightened at the topic change. "He's doing really great! I haven't seen him this happy in a long time! And he says the team is doing terrific!"

"That's good," Nabiki fished out a couple of tickets from her bag. "I took the liberty of snagging a couple of good seats for their game next week. I figured it'd be a good distraction from our own problem. Did you want to be my plus one?"

"M-me?" Rin blinked. "W-well... sure, of course! But... wouldn't you rather go with... well..." she gestured at the rest of the group, "anyone else instead? Shampoo or Ukyou or Ranma?"

Nabiki shrugged. "It's hard to get them to sit still long enough for these things. Plus I'd like to meet your Dad in person, and I figured since we took in this side project together, it makes sense for you to see the results. Aside from that, I'm trying to socialize a little and have a life outside the harem."

Rin blushed a little and looked away. "I… ummm… I know it's a… complicated situation but… do you guys really call yourselves a… a… harem?"

Nabiki chuckled. "Sometimes. Really there isn't a word for it that isn't either ridiculous or a euphemism for something ridiculous. Maybe we'll figure out a new one. I suppose we'll need one when it comes time to explain this to our kids' teachers someday off in the future."

"Y-you're planning on having kids already!?!?" Rin squeaked.

"God no!" Nabiki chuckled. "I mean… it's almost guaranteed with this group, sooner or later, but I'd rather we put a few of these crises behind us and have at least one or two of us with stable jobs before we really think about kids." She glanced over at Shampoo and sighed. "I more than half suspect a few of the girls aren't going to be so patient, though. It doesn't help that Ranma seems to have already chosen a name for her first. Personally, I'm content to wait until I'm successful enough that the business suits don't need to be quite as tight and the skirts don't have to be quite so short, if you get my meaning."

"I… yes, right. That makes sense." Rin said, having quite obviously missed Nabiki's implication entirely. "I guess… I'm kind of astonished. You all make it look so easy."

Nabiki raised an eyebrow at her. "I'm… now slightly terrified of what your definition of 'difficult' would be, Rin."

Rin huffed. "No, that's not…" She took a breath. "I mean… you all managed to find each other, figure out you all liked each other and… work things out. And now you're already thinking about the future. I can't even make up my mind about one guy."

"What do you think of him?" Rin asked. "And… please don't try and spare my feelings or anything. Please be completely honest."

"Well… honestly?" Nabiki considered. "He's… well, he had a rough childhood. Even if you didn't know his history you could guess that. Inferiority complex the size of China, black and white worldview, tends to objectify people… or one person in particular at least," she gestured towards Shampoo. "He's not that unusual given how obsessive-compulsive the entirety of Nerima is on average, but he focuses on that one obsession to the exclusion of almost all else and… that's kind of dangerous."

"You don't think he'd… he'd do anything, do you?" Rin asked.

Nabiki shook her head. "Despite what he says, Mousse isn't a killer or liable to take advantage of someone sexually, though I wouldn't put potions or other magical stupidity past him. The problem with being so focused, though, is that once that goal is taken away, there isn't a whole lot to fall back on."

"I think… he was afraid if he allowed himself to think he might fail, he might falter again," Rin said quietly. "I think he was probably a lot different when he was with Young Mi and the circus."

Nabiki nodded. "That's probably a good read. Ugh… tossing away all the complexity and depth to your life because you think it's weakness. That's Genma Saotome-level stupidity," she grumbled.

"Why is it stupid?" Rin asked. "I-I mean… I don't think I'd ever want to live that way, but I can understand people pushing everything aside but the goal. Dad said he knew a lot of athletes like that.

"When you make defeat unthinkable; when you only allow yourself the option of victory, with no way out and no backdoor; no idea what to do when you fail? That's it. You're done." Nabiki folded her arms. "Wisdom in business or anything else is built on failure. If you take risks without any allowance to fail, you're not taking risks - you're just in denial. It's at least as important how you recover from your failures as it is to succeed in the first place, maybe even moreso. That's why you need to spread yourself out, have diverse interests and try different things - to give you something to draw upon and build from when your first idea goes in the can."

"S-so… you think Mu Tsu's problem is that he isn't diverse enough?" Rin asked.

"Exactly. He has no friends, no interests outside of Shampoo or Martial Arts, no real career path and no school… He's like a tree that put all of its effort into growing one big root, instead of a whole bunch of smaller ones. Any one of the other local crazy martial artists has at least got something. Shampoo cooks, is honestly focused on the Nekohanten, and she's been besties with Ukyou for… well, almost since they met, even though they were rivals. Not to mention her intention to succeed Cologne and be the best in her village. Ukyou has Ucchan's, her drive to be the best Okonomiyaki Chef in Japan, she was going to school and has her own gaggle of odd hangers-on. Akane has a whole life outside of martial arts and Ranma has school friends, and now volleyball… heck, even Kuno had the Kendo Club! If you're asking how to help Mousse out? Maybe start with a hobby for him or something."

"A hobby…?" Rin cocked her head. "Hmmm… Well… he likes to find vantage points…"

"A hobby that doesn't do double duty to facilitate sniping," Nabiki corrected herself.

"Then I suppose airsoft is out?" Rin giggled a bit. "Writing, too, I suppose."

"Writing? Why writing?" Nabiki gave her a puzzled look. "Has he taken to tossing mechanical pencils in lieu of throwing knives now?"

"Oh! Oh no, no…" Rin paused and considered. "Well, actually I can't be sure, I think he said something about using a porcelain training potty once, so I suppose anything is fair game for him. But I meant that he's… not very good at it."

"Ah. No luck with the letter then?" Nabiki asked sympathetically. She had first hand experience that writing skills and wandering martial artists did not often go together.

"He's trying," Rin said sheepishly. "But… no, his attempts at a letter so far have been… pretty terrible."

"Well, him being good at something isn't a requirement for it to be his hobby. Just that he enjoy it and find some fulfillment in it." Nabiki shrugged. "I was terrible at photography when I started. Kasumi was almost as bad as Akane at cooking when she first started trying to learn Mom's recipes. Everyone starts out bad. But… it doesn't sound like writing is his thing."

"I'll think of something," Rin finally said. "But… that gives me some ideas on how to help. Thank you." She twiddled her thumbs. "U-um… i-is everything good w-with you? I know I-I-I'm not exactly the sort of person who can be of m-much help to someone like you or Senpai, b-but…"

Nabiki raised an eyebrow and smiled. "Rin, you're kidding, right? You're instrumental to all of this!"
Rin blushed and ducked her head. "I-I mean, I know! The volleyball thing, b-but…"

"No, not just 'the volleyball thing'" Nabiki gave into the urge to ruffle her hair again. "Trust me on that. Having you around has a way of… getting all of us out of our own problems. That and Ranma tries that much harder to improve because she knows you look up to her."

"I-I do!" Rin said enthusiastically. "Senpai is the person I most want to be like when I get older!"

"Well… just don't book any trips to Jusenkyo," Nabiki replied, somewhat bemused. "The springs are all flooded out anyway and, from what I hear, it'll be a century or more before things will settle down enough to even see if the cursed pools will still work."

"Why would I need to go to Jusenkyo?" Rin cocked her head.

"Well… You know, Ranma's curse?" Nabiki said. "I was mostly joking."

"Oh! But why would I need a curse? I'm already a girl," Rin replied. She glanced down at her chest and sighed. "Maybe not as… obviously as Senpai… But I don't need to learn how to be a boy from senpai, just how to be a better girl."

"But…" Nabiki scowled as if to protest, then paused. "No, you're right. That's kind of brilliant in a way, isn't it? Ranma would have a unique perspective, being able to see both sides of the fence, as it were."

"Mmhmm!" Rin nodded.

"What are you two talking about back there?" Akane called back. With so many in the group, it was difficult for everyone to walk together.

Nabiki quickened her pace. "Rin and I were just discussing how Ranma might just be the perfect female role model."

"What," Akane said flatly, giving Rin an incredulous look.

"What?" Ranma repeated, blinking owlishly.

As the rest of the group's attention locked onto her, Nabiki smirked. "It's simple; Ranma is both, so Ranma understands the male brain, expectations, what guys think and how to deal with them, but at the same time she's going to deal with all the usual girl nonsense like grabby perverts. Plus she's proud of herself and her looks without needing to be validated by ogling, drooling boys."

"And she's got no feminine modesty, runs around without a bra half the time if she isn't completely topless, and she's totally shameless manipulating boys into giving her free ice cream or other goodies," Akane huffed, crossing her arms.

"To be perfectly fair, you would call her a pervert when she did wear a bra," Nabiki replied dryly.

"I… well… hmph!" Akane hunched her shoulders, red-faced.

"Y'know, I can see it," Sayuri replied thoughtfully. "I mean… as much as a lot of it is cheesecake pandering to boys, Ranma's a pretty good example of a girl who doesn't put up with being treated as anything less than an equal. Y'know, when she's not taking the boys for a ride."

"Now that I think about it, that'd actually be a pretty good social experiment," Riko added. "Have Ranma go somewhere as a girl, and then as a guy, and then write down the differences in how she
"That sounds a lot like homework," Ranma said sourly.

"It is homework," Nabiki replied. "But you might wanna hold onto that idea. Third year classes sometimes give extra credit for stuff like that."

"That sounds like voluntary homework, which is worse," Ranma made a face like she had just tasted something disgusting. "Besides, I'm way too manly to be a good female role model. Right Ryo?" Ranma batted her eyelashes at Ryouga in an exaggerated manner.

Ryouga blinked. "I… uhh… I'm getting some mixed signals. Can we just skip to the part where you punch me?"

Ranma scowled and put her hands on her hips. "I'm serious! I mean, obviously not when I'm trying to be girly, but otherwise it's pretty obvious, right?"

"H-he's right, Senpai," Rin said.

Ranma whirled on Rin, looking almost hurt. "Awww… c'mon, really?"

"I-it's not like you're super girly or anything. It's just… when you pay attention, you blend in," Rin said nervously. "Th-that's not a bad thing. It just means as a boy or a girl you seem… well, normal."

"Probably a martial arts thing," Sayuri said. "The only time I remember Ranma being awkward is when she's trying too hard."

"Happens when she's a guy, too," Riko added, chuckling.

"What!?" Ranma yelped.

"Well, I mean, you get a little silly when you're trying to be macho…" Riko said nervously, realizing she had stepped on a landmine.

"But being macho is manly!" Ranma protested.

Nabiki sighed. "No it isn't, Ranma. It really isn't." She patted her on the shoulder. "You are way manlier when you're not trying to be."

Ranma blinked. "But… but Pops said…"

"What have we established about your father, Ranma?" Nabiki asked.

"That he's an idiot?" Ranma replied, confused.

"Yes, and that his area of expertise extends and is limited to martial arts," Nabiki continued.

"And your mom's definition is pretty cracked, too," Akane added defiantly.

"Yeah, but…" Ranma protested weakly. "Well, what is manly then?"

"Ummm… Well, strength obviously…" Riko started.
"But not, like, those over-muscled oiled up guys who work out at the beach just to show off," Sayuri added. "That's just trying too hard. That's macho."

"I suppose it's… being kind and thoughtful?" Akane said.

"Well, that's really more of a general good thing, boy or girl," Nabiki said. "I always felt confidence was manly."

"Confidence can be womanly too, sugar," Ukyou replied.

"Yeah, that's how Ranma pulls off vamping guys so well. She even told me so," Akane added.

"Well, then… confidence is sexy at least," Nabiki shrugged.

"Yeah, but we're not looking at what's sexy," Sayuri admonished her.

"I thought you always looked out for money?" Riko said.

"Money is very sexy."

"Shampoo think manly man is one who keep home well, raise strong children, keep wife happy."

"Y'know, I like Shampoo's version."

Ranma sighed. "Nevermind…"

Guys? I just realized we might have a problem…" Akane said as they approached the front door.

Sayuri, Riko and Rin had parted ways some distance back, off to their respective homes, leaving just Shampoo, Ukyou, Nabiki, Ranma and Ryouga with Akane. They stopped short and waited for Akane to explain.

"Doctor Tofu is coming over to monitor all this, right?" Akane said.

"Yeah… the plan is the same for how we did it at the Nekohanten," Ukyou said. "Except this time we're doing another sleepover in the dojo, right?"

"Except this isn't the Nekohanten," Akane said slowly. "This is where Kasumi is."

Everyone's eyes widened in horror as they all realized the danger.

"Shampoo too young to have limbs switched around," Shampoo said nervously.

"Why didn't we think of this!?" Ranma wailed. "Aww man… it's too late to pick somewhere else!"

"We have to get Kasumi out of the house," Nabiki said. "At least long enough for Doctor Tofu to get the equipment set up, dose Akane and make sure the Link forms properly. A few hours should do…"

"Probably not a bad idea to get Dad out of the house while we're at it?" Akane added. "We still haven't really explained to him what's going on, just that we're having a sleepover."

"What, were you planning on just bulling through and hoping he folded?" Ukyou asked skeptically.
"Pretty much, yeah," Akane replied sheepishly.

"Okay okay okay, give me a minute," Nabiki said, leaning against the frame of the gate. She brightened and reached into her schoolbag, fishing around until she pulled out a small card.

"What's that?" Akane asked, peering at it.

"One of Jiro's business cards," Nabiki said proudly. "You know how he always makes the first cup of tea free, so he can guess your preference?" She smirked. "There's no way Daddy would turn down a free cup of gourmet tea. And Kasumi's been needing a reason to get out of the house."

"You sure that'll work?" Ryouga asked. "It's a little late for tea."

"I'll tell him the coupon expires today. Daddy is a sucker for free food. Sort of a bad habit he picked up from Mr. Saotome," Nabiki said. "It'll work! Trust me!"

"Daddy's gone out?"

Nabiki blinked, looking almost crushed as her scheme fell apart before it had even begun.

"Yes, apparently the repairs to their house are complete and Mr. Saotome wanted to spend some time with Father," Kasumi said. "He said that Mr. Saotome had something important to talk with him about and not to wait up for him."

"Of all the…" Nabiki groaned.

"Well, there goes our excuse to get Kasumi out of the house, Akane thought. How are we going to convince her to not be here while Dr. Tofu is working?"

"I heard Dr. Tofu is coming over?" Kasumi asked brightly. She walked over to the pegs and lifted off her light fall jacket. "Could you be a dear and tell him I left a covered plate of cookies for him on the counter? After his work is done, of course."

"I… Wait, you're going out?" Nabiki asked, looking shocked.

Kasumi gave Nabiki a wan smile. "Well… you are relying on Dr. Tofu for his medical expertise tonight, yes? I imagine my presence would make that difficult. It is terribly flattering how flustered he gets around me, but it wouldn't be appropriate right now."

"Wait, you know?" Akane said.

Kasumi shifted her smile to Akane. "Of course I did, Akane. But… I felt pointing it out would merely humiliate him. So… I played along. He's a sweet man and deserves to keep his dignity." She slipped the jacket on.

"Hold up… how many other things that we thought you were oblivious to have you just been 'playing along with'?" Nabiki asked, folding her arms and giving her older sister a skeptical look.

Kasumi grinned, closed one eye and held up a finger. "Ah, now that is a secret."

"Don't you start going all mysterious on me, sis! My worldview can't handle it," Nabiki said. She held out the card from Jiro's tea shop. "Have fun. Uhh, I was gonna suggest you and Daddy check this tea shop out. You might as well go on your own. The owner is… a bit quirky."
Kasumi considered. "I suppose I could drop by. Will you all be okay for dinner?"

"We'll be fine, sis," Akane said. "I'll make sure of that."

Akane scowled a bit when she saw the momentary look of panic cross Nabiki's face. She huffed. "I'll get Shampoo and Ukyou to help and we'll make sure to clean up after. No experimenting," she clarified, a little annoyance creeping into her voice.

"Thank you Akane," Kasumi smiled. "I am so very proud of how much progress you've made cooking, but I'd really rather be there when you try something as ambitious as dinner for so many people. I'll make it up to you tomorrow. We can work through some more of those recipes that nice woman from the Greek cafe gave you."

Akane brightened, feeling a bit better. "Okay!"

They both watched Kasumi leave. Nabiki waited until the door had closed to speak.

"Ever get the sense we've completely misjudged her all these years?" Nabiki asked.

"I feel bad that we just assumed that she… well…" Akane said.

"Was oblivious to obvious stuff?" Nabiki finished for her with a raised eyebrow. "I get the feeling she cultivated that notion."

"I guess it helped her get by and stay neutral while everyone around her was losing their minds," Akane said a little glumly. "Especially me."

Nabiki reached over and ruffled Akane's hair. "Don't worry too much about it, Baby Sis."

Akane ducked away and scowled. "You're hanging out with Rin too much!"

Nabiki giggled as they walked back to the living room. "It's hard to resist the urge around her, isn't it?"

"It's a bad habit is what it is…" Akane grumbled, trying to un-muss her hair. She spotted Ukyou and Shampoo at the table and gave them a thumbs up.

"Mission accomplished?" Ukyou started to get to her feet. "Okay, Shampoo and I can whip up some snacks. This whole process takes a lot out of you and I kinda wish I'd had some snacks my time around." She motioned to the Amazon to join her as they slipped into the kitchen.

"Airen and Shagua laying out futons and blankets in dojo," Shampoo added as she walked past. "Seemed to be talking. Shagua seem nervous."

"After your session I don't blame him," Nabiki replied, poking the Amazon's shoulder as she passed.

"I hope he's not hoping I'll kiss him," Akane made a face. She knew Ryouga was aware of her preferences but she also knew he tended to get his hopes up.

"That or that Ranma will," Nabiki said, leaning against the wall.

Akane sighed and sat at the table, pouring herself a cup of tea. "I really thought they were actually going to do it today." She took a sip of her tea and made a face. Bleh… Jiro has spoiled me.

"You almost sound disappointed," Nabiki said, slightly bemused. "I know why I like the idea…"
and by extension Shampoo, but boys aren't your thing, so…"

Akane glowered at her. "Must you make everything lewd, Nabiki? It's not about that!" She sighed. "I was hoping it'd happen so we could finally just… get it out in the open, you know? I… kind of know what it's like to not deal with feelings like that." She took another sip of her tea.

"Fair enough," Nabiki shrugged. "It's a bit more complex for those two, though. Especially Ranma."

"Yeah. Hard to define what's 'straight' and 'gay' if your gender changes if it rains," Akane mused. "Do you suppose that's why Ranma stays a girl when Ryoga is around? To try and… keep the problem simple?"

"Maybe. Not quite what I meant, though," Nabiki said. "Notice the seppuku contract has popped up more than a few times? Ranma is still worried about that."

"Must be nice to know what Ranma is actually feeling," Akane said, propping her chin in her fist. "I'm so bad at it normally."

"It's not magic, sis," Nabiki walked over and sat next to her. "It's… well, it's a confusing jumble most of the time. Shampoo and Ukyou seem to be better at sorting it out than me. It's not like what you're sensing is labelled or anything, so a lot of it ends up being subjective based on how you react to what you're sensing, like 'black with spikes is bad' and 'red and warm is good'."

"I thought you said they weren't actually colors and shapes?" Akane said.

"They're not, those're just… well, kind of what I've labelled them because that's what they feel like to me. Ranma and Ryoga did the same, the only problem is there's no way to be sure if their 'red' is the same as my 'red'. I've tried to compare notes but they get really squirrelly about feelings in general." Nabiki poured herself a cup of tea. "We should probably sit down with Shampoo and Ukyou and see if we can clarify some of that."

"Still… It'll give me an idea." She glanced out the doors to the backyard. "So… You've 'sensed' them both, and when they're both together. Ryoga's admitted it, but do you really think Ranma…?"

"Ranma is good at denial," Nabiki said. "Look how long she held out about you. You, at least, had an excuse for not admitting first. Several, I guess."

Akane sighed. "I think Dad is still holding out hope that Ranma will 'straighten me out'."

Nabiki rolled her eyes. "Well, think of it this way; If we can get Ranma unblocked about her attraction to Ryoga, then you giving Daddy grandkids to carry on the school is still entirely possible… as long as Instant Nannichuan exists."

Akane blushed red and ducked her head. "Nabiki! I-I'd never…!"

Nabiki smirked. "Aww c'mon. It was just a thought." She waited until Akane warily took a sip of her tea before adding. "Besides, I'm pretty sure Ukyou has dibs on going first with that plan."

Akane snorted a good mouthful of tea into her nasal passages. She was left coughing and spluttering, flailing for a napkin for a few moments. She glared at her sister. "That was mean, Nabiki!"

"And true!" Ukyou's voice called from the kitchen.
Akane's eyes widened as she realized Ukyou was eavesdropping on her. She crushed the napkin in a clenched fist. "Don't you start, Ukyou!"

"Seriously though, sis. Don't worry too much about Daddy. I'd say focus on Ranma for now," Nabiki said. "This might be a good opportunity for you to help Ranma with this. I mean… you've struggled with your sexuality as much as she has."

Akane sighed and slumped back down. "How are you so… so comfortable with it, Nabiki?" She glanced at her sister.

Nabiki folded her hands behind her head and lay back on the floor, staring up at the ceiling. "Well… I mean, even before Ranma came I kinda had a sense. Not really that I was into girls but… that I sorta didn't care. It was a background thing and didn't really matter. I figured I'd just go with whomever I went with when it came up. Then this redhead shows up, this fiance that Daddy promised, and he's cute and I was honestly seriously into the shota thing. Then… turns out it was a she. And there I am, poking her breasts, and still considering it."

"So you were feeling her up!" Akane said. "I knew it! Busted!"

Nabiki stuck her tongue out. "It wasn't intentional, okay? It's just… I hadn't seriously considered it before, and suddenly… well, my brain just kinda shorted out for a second because I hadn't processed that her being a girl kinda invalidated the 'fiance' thing. I admit that I wasn't really ready to deal with it so I tossed him to you. I've had a lot of time since then to come to terms with it."

"How long before you regretted handing her off to me?" Akane asked, smirking.

"I didn't. Not right away, anyway," Nabiki replied. "Oh, I came to terms with the fact I was attracted to her in a week or so, but Ranma was so rough. If he hadn't been such a macho jackass for the first few months, maybe I'd have felt different." She sighed and closed her eyes. "I broke my own rule about judging people at face value. By the time I realized that I had missed something, you had already started to warm to him, so…"

"So you wouldn't have taken him even if he was a boy when he arrived?" Akane asked.

"I probably would have, but I'd have regretted it when I found out about the curse and our personalities started to clash," Nabiki sighed. "I wasn't any more ready than you were. Daddy really bungled the whole thing."

Akane lay down next to her. "So… what should I say to Ranma? 'So, we think you might be gay for Ryouga and we just wanted you to know it's okay?'"

Nabiki snorted and shook her head. "If you wanna say that, you get to clean up the property damage. Besides… I don't think it works like that for Ranma."

"What do you mean?" Akane asked.

"I mean… there's nothing like Ranma, is there?" Nabiki said thoughtfully, opening her eyes again. "What is sexual orientation to someone who's actual gender is changeable from one minute to the next? I think… it's more like Ranma is girl for Ryouga. She's gay for you."

"Huh?" Akane knit her brow, confused.

Nabiki paused, searching for the right words. "It's like this: Ranma is male for me. I'm more than happy to make out with her as a girl, but… even then, she's not entirely comfortable with it. She enjoys it, but I can sense a sort of weird conflict when we do. Ukyou has told me Ranma goes back and forth with her, so it's not just me, either. With you, though? She's pretty comfortable with girl-girl stuff. She… kinda shifts based on who she's with."

Akane frowned. "But… That just means she's going along with what the person she's with wants, doesn't it?"

"I don't know. Ranma never struck me as a 'people pleaser'. But then, he slips way too easily into the 'male fantasy' role sometimes. Given the Neko ken and God alone knows what else his parents have put him through… then throw in the curse… I think Ranma's self identity is built on shifting sands. That's why Ranma needs all of us… including Ryouga. All of us bring out some part of Ranma, and the only way to find the 'real' Ranma will be with all of us together." Nabiki sighed. "Which… is probably not the best task to leave to the pile of issues each of us is, but… we're what Ranma has."

"Well… you said I could probably talk to Ranma about struggling with her sexuality, since I know what it's like… perhaps we're actually the best suited for it, since all of us have our own troubles that let us relate?" Akane suggested.

Nabiki snorted. "I don't think we're that lucky, sis. Empathy is something none of us have a great track record with, after all." She took a deep breath. "I don't know. Maybe it will help, but I don't want to create any illusions that this is not going to be hard as hell."

"And we're trying to talk Ryouga into joining, and trying to get Ranma to accept it," Akane added. "Or at least talk about it and make a decision about it that isn't 'Something something MANLY','" Nabiki muttered. She turned her head to glance at Akane. "Speaking of which… you sure you're okay with this? You do know you're basically going to be sharing a bed with Ryouga again tonight, right?"

"Cold water is a thing," Akane replied with a smirk. "Don't be a jerk Akane. We've only just got the poor boy over that," Nabiki chided her. "Besides, it probably wouldn't work with P-chan."

"I know," Akane sighed. "I'm still trying to… well, reconcile in my head what my relationship with Ryouga is. And I feel like a complete heel now that I know he walked away from a girl who actually wanted a romance with him for me."

"I don't think Ryouga seriously thought he had a shot with you," Nabiki said. "I think he just didn't feel right pursuing something with another girl while he was still hung up on you. And the whole obsession with Ranma being unappreciative. I'm serious, though… I mean, you're not going to have sex with him or anything, but cuddling may be a thing."

"I've cuddled with him before. Maybe not in human form, but it was still Ryouga. He's about the only guy I trusted enough to let that close. Even Ranma… though that was for different reasons." Akane stretched. "What about you? You've been weird around Ryouga ever since you got Linked to him."

"Mmmmaaaaaybe slight before," Nabiki admitted sheepishly. "I think I started doing it just to mess with them because they kept sneaking off to have their secret chats. But now…?"

"See? Between you and Shampoo I'm sure he'll be taken care of," Akane said. "Just… not in my bed, okay?"

Nabiki smirked. "No promises."
"Nabiki! At least not while I'm there, okay?" Akane replied, aghast.

Nabiki's smirk widened. "Again, y'know… heat of the moment and all…"

"Don't you DARE!"

000

Yuka peered around the corner. She could see the guard walking along the hall, flicking off lights, whistling some tuneless song as he made his way up the staircase and closed the heavy fire door behind him.

"Okay, he's gone," she hissed to the darkened room behind her.

"Okay, good," Hiroshi said, exhaling the breath he had been holding as he flicked the light switch back on. About half of the bank of fluorescent lights flickered to life.

"Can't we turn on more than that?" Daisuke whined, squinting at the card files. "I'm gonna get eye strain without more light."

"Here," Yuka fished a penlight out of her bag and handed it to him. "You two really should prepare better if you're going to be hotshot detectives."

"Yeah, well I figured we'd be done by now!" Daisuke grumbled. "There's so much pointless junk in these files."

"We probably should have thought ahead and seen if Ranma could swipe his Dad's ID - something to narrow down the search," Hiroshi replied, scrolling through microfiche images on the archaic reader. There was a grumble from his stomach and he slumped back in his chair. "I think we should take a break."

"You guys did bring food, right?" Yuka asked nervously, realizing she hadn't thought that far ahead either.

"Are you kidding? I always have food," Daisuke winked, opening up his pack and removing several bento boxes.

"Wow," Yuka said, picking up a bento. It certainly felt hefty and well-filled. "That… explains why you've been putting on a few pounds."

"Wha…? Hey!" Daisuke huffed and snatched the bento back. "If you're gonna be judgemental then you can just provide your own! I worked hard on these!"

"I…" Yuka started, then her stomach growled as well. She grit her teeth and stared at the floor. "Sorry."

Daisuke seemed to ponder a moment, then handed the box back. "If you want to know why I made so many… it's because I'm surrounded by freeloading bottomless pits for friends."

Yuka snatched the box. She lifted the top off the tin and sniffed cautiously. "You made this?"

"Yeah? So what?" Daisuke said, handing another box to Hiroshi as he fished chopsticks out of his bag. "It's the 21st century. A guy is allowed to cook without it being weird."

"Is that why you tell everyone your sister made these?" Hiroshi asked as he opened his. He was apparently familiar with the Daisuke lunch specials.
Daisuke scowled. "Look, you give 'em any excuse to give you flak about stuff in that school, they'll jump on it. Hell, even Ranma would probably give me grief for it not being 'manly',' he grumbled, sitting at the table. "But they never have enough food at lunch, even with both school stores open now. I kinda always felt bad for poor Gos always getting his lunch clipped… and there's always someone who's hungry at lunch, even if Gos is good."

Yuka scowled, looking for some sign of dissembling from him, but as far as she could tell, he was serious. She plucked a little hot dog on a toothpick, cut to resemble an octopus, and popped it into her mouth. She blinked. "Hey… that's not bad, actually. I was expecting it to just be microwaved."

"Yeah… well… Mom taught me how to make those…" Daisuke muttered.

"Cooking is one thing," Yuka said with a grin, pointing the toothpick at him. "But I never figured you for the sort to make a cute bento, Daisuke-kun."

"'Kay, that's it, if you're going to make fun, give it back." Daisuke made a grab for the box but Yuka pulled it back and held it protectively.

"Who's making fun? It's a compliment!" Yuka said, then glanced back down at the box. "I'm sure you'll make someone a wonderful wife someday!" She yelped as a cherry tomato bounced off her head.

"He's sensitive about the octopi," Hiroshi commented dryly.

Yuka glared at Daisuke, who had been the source of the vegetarian projectile. She briefly considered returning fire but another rumble from her midsection made her think better of it. "Don't waste food," she muttered as she dug into the bento.

"So… how far into the catalogue are we?" Hiroshi asked. "I just got done with… what, I think it was the twenty eighth file? No sign of a Genma, Nodoka or Ranma in that Saotome family."

"Oh, good, we're nearly there then," Daisuke muttered. "Only one-hundred and thirty-seven to go."

"Don't even joke like that, Dai," Hiroshi said.

"I'm not."

Hiroshi's chopsticks dropped from his fingers.

Yuka sighed. "I hope you guys packed a few more of these bentos. We're gonna be here all weekend…"

000

Once Doctor Tofu arrived, it took a little herding to get him to the dojo. Apparently simply being in the same house that Kasumi lived in was enough to be a trigger for him. Nabiki even had to talk him down from trying to give the post for the laundry line a tetanus shot. Once he had gotten himself under control, they set up in the dojo.

"I'll be setting the machines to record automatically. For… obvious reasons, I think it best if I don't stay here and monitor directly," Doctor Tofu said. He cleaned off his glasses for the fourth time in the last few minutes.

"Are… you okay to do this, Doc?" Ranma asked nervously with a glance at Akane.
Doctor Tofu took a deep breath. "I… took precautions. All of the dosages were measured out well in advance and clearly labelled and I have here a list of emergency contact numbers that aren't me if there should be any side effects, including a couple of colleagues who are familiar with this herbal medicine and its side effects."

"You know… if you ever want any help with this…" Akane said.

Doctor Tofu smiled. "I'll be sure to ask. But… for the time being I imagine your problems are a far more immediate concern. For now, we should finish the experiment so that we'll be ready tomorrow to go see Dr Hirano. I… expect he will have some choice words about all of this and it's best we avoid antagonizing him further by at least doing it correctly."

They all made their way to the futon pile, where Akane settled down in the middle. Everyone was already in pajamas (With the exception of Ranma and Ryouga, who were in boxers and undershirts) and they all arranged themselves around Akane.

Akane swallowed nervously. "Does… Does it hurt?" she asked. She gulped down the pills before she could have second thoughts.

"No, but it can be a bit tough to stay awake, and you feel cold," Ukyou replied, moving in beside her.

"It's important until the initial link is formed that each of you be in contact only with Akane," Doctor Tofu advised as they arranged themselves.

"It's like some kind of bizarre game of Twister," Nabiki muttered, taking up position at one of Akane's feet. "Do we have to sleep like this?"

"No, once the Link is established, all that's required is that Akane keep contact with enough of you to maintain a continual flow of ki. Since we surmise Ryouga is the key to formation of the Link, it'd be best if he remain in contact. How much contact… I leave to your discretion and would prefer to not know too much about unless medically necessary." He cleared his throat.

"Speaking of…" Shampoo grinned and leaned in and started whispering in Akane's ear.

Akane suddenly turned beet red. "Sh-Shampoo!"

Shampoo smirked. "Not get to try out for own self yet, but Pintou say is very interesting with Link," She winked. "Maybe we try out together?"

"Yes. That. That would be exactly what I was referring to," Doctor Tofu said dryly. "I'd request you reserve your… experimentation for another day?" He busied himself with getting the monitoring machines ready.

Ukyou ended up pillowing Akane's head in her lap, while Shampoo lay to her right and Ryouga to her left, holding her hands. Nabiki and Ranma were down by her feet. They all fidgeted nervously as they waited.

"So… Anyone for a game of cards?" Akane joked.

"Strip Poker?" Shampoo said suggestively.

"No," Ryouga, Tofu and Ukyou all said in unison. Ranma squirmed nervously. She had elected to take a more neutral position in an effort to stay out of any awkwardness this time.
"Come on, Shampoo, don't tease," Akane huffed. "I'm already annoyed about how shameless you were yesterday at the Nekohanten."

"Did Akane want kiss instead?" Shampoo asked, smirking.

"Yes…! I mean no! I mean…" Akane squirmed, growing redder by the second. "It's… it's hard to focus right now, okay?" She yawned widely. "This stuff hits… pretty hard…" She mumbled the last words.

"Stay awake or no work," Shampoo said.

"I'm cold." Akane shivered.

"Yes. Feel warmth outside, yes? Warmth all around? Just let warmth in, and feel better." Shampoo said.

"Kay…" Akane mumbled.

Ranma shivered as she felt the resistance break, and awareness of Ryouga and the four other girls flood into her as Akane became a conduit for their ki. Akane lurched and gasped in shock, her eyes going wide when she felt the energies surging through her, and she found herself suddenly quite wide awake.

"Oh!… Oh!" She started looking around at each of them in turn, eyes wide with wonder as though she were seeing each of them for the first time. "I… you! And she… And you too! And then…!"

Her babbling was cut off when Shampoo leaned over and gave her a passionate kiss on the lips. The Amazon rolled over on top of her, lavender hair falling over their faces as she very quickly tangled herself up with the youngest Tendo.

"Aaaaand that's my cue to leave I'm sure you have my number if you have any problems remember to use protection and please tell your parents I know nothing about this situation goodnight!"

Doctor Tofu beat a hasty retreat, earning a bemused glance from Nabiki.

"Wanted some distance from the inevitable, Ranma?" Nabiki asked, elbowing Ranma gently. She noticed that Akane had very much not frozen up as Ryouga had and, in fact, had wrapped her free arm around Shampoo and pulled her in and that Ukyou was looking increasingly nervous as it seemed the two of them were more than happy to make out in her lap.

"Uh huh," Ranma said, watching a bit slack jawed.

"Is it helping any?" Nabiki prodded.

"Nope." Ranma swallowed. She had been on the receiving end of kisses from each of them, but somehow the sight of them together stirred some odd, twisty feelings in her gut that she wasn't sure she currently sported the right equipment to process. She was definitely regretting the light fabric of her tank top, however.

"I guess it's my job to be the wet blanket." Nabiki sighed and crawled over beside the two, tapping Shampoo on the shoulder. "Okay, okay, there's two years of built up sexual tension between the two of you - we get it - but not right here and not right now, okay?"

Shampoo and Akane finally broke the kiss, panting softly. They parted, but only slightly.

"Shampoo been wanting to do that for very long time," Shampoo said breathily, stretching a bit as she looped her arms around Akane's neck, but making it clear that she had no intention of moving from her spot for some time.

"Why didn't you?" Akane asked, sounding a little dazed, but in a good way.

"Not sure. Akane very good kisser. Have been missing out," Shampoo replied. "Worry about why later. Make up for lost time now, yes?"

"No, be good Shampoo!" Nabiki tapped her on the back of her head. "The two of you are carbonating everyone's hormones plenty as it is and the point of this isn't to start an orgy. Stick to cuddling. Exploration and funtime come later, okay?"

"Yes, Pintou," Shampoo and Akane said in unison.

Nabiki shuddered. "Please, Akane, don't call me that until you find out what it actually means, okay? Especially not in front of anyone who speaks Mandarin. That's a lot of explaining I don't want to have to do."

"So, what are you doing Saturday night, then?" Akane asked.

"You," Shampoo replied, earning a giggle from the youngest Tendo.

"I'm leaving, I can't handle this much cheesiness." Nabiki said, getting to her feet. "I'll go grab some snacks from the kitchen and then we can start the movie marathon until your hormones calm down."

Ukyou gave Nabiki a pleading look, still pinned by the two girls who seemed perfectly content to use her as a pillow. "Halp?"

"Later," Nabiki said, handing her the remote. "Here's a distraction. I have a sneaking suspicion someone else in in worse shape.

Ranma released Akane's ankle, deciding Ukyou and Shampoo were probably generating enough ki between them to keep things going. She crawled over to where Ryouga was as Nabiki walked around to him.

He had pulled off several bandannas and was holding an entire fistful of them to his face. The red was already starting to seep through. He had rolled away from the two girls, but his hand was still firmly clasped with Akane's.

"You okay, big guy?" Nabiki asked, squatting next to him.

"Nuh." Ryouga shook his head, his voice muffled by the fabric.

Ranma patted his leg in sympathy. She could still feel the waves of... well, raw lust coming off the two of them, as two years worth of accumulated tension was uncorked all at once, and rebounded through the Link. She could imagine that it must be even worse for Ryouga. "Look, I'm right there with ya, pal."

"You c'n left go," Ryouga muttered darkly.

"I'll get you some proper tissues," Nabiki said, straightening. "Maybe some towels. Ranma, could you come help? I'm afraid the only thing I really know how to work in the kitchen is the coffee maker."
The bell above the door rang as Kasumi pushed it open. At first she wondered if the small shop was even open as her eyes adjusted to the dimmer lighting and she could not see anyone at any of the tables or the long bar. "Hello?"

"Oh, hello my dear!" A funny-looking man wearing a woman's formal kimono, and quite a bit of makeup came into view. Though she was certain he must have been there a moment ago, she hadn't noticed him. He was tall and thin, with a hawkish nose and bright eyes. He came around the bar and smiled. "Welcome to Clara's Leaf! I don't believe I've had the pleasure." He extended his hand.

"Kasumi. Kasumi Tendo," Kasumi replied, though she wondered why she had felt the need to give her full name.

"Oh! You must be Akane and Nabiki's sister! I was wondering if you'd drop by. Come, come!" He gestured her towards a table. "Have they told you much about my little shop?"

"Only that they come here quite often. Nabiki said you sold exotic teas?" Kasumi sat down at the table. She frowned a bit as she glanced about. She had the distinct feeling that she was missing something.

"Well, that's partly true. I serve your tea. Whatever blend, brand or type that might be," Jiro replied with an airy gesture. "Sometimes that can be exotic, sometimes it can be mundane, but that hardly matters so long as it's the right one."

"Oh?" Kasumi canted her head. "I don't believe that I have a strong preference for any particular brand…"

Jiro clucked his tongue and patted her lightly on the shoulder. "That's simply because you haven't had the right kind yet, my dear. Now, tastes may change, but at any given moment of someone's life they have a 'right' variety. I like to play a little game with my customers. The first cup is free, but you have to let me guess your blend. If I'm wrong, you get to choose whatever type you might like, also for free."

"And if you're right?" Kasumi asked.

Jiro's smile grew. "Clever girl. Quite right. Then I get a loyal customer, aand… a fairly significant boost to my already astounding ego." He winked. "So… are you game?"

Kasumi grinned. "Sounds adventurous!"

Jiro raised an eyebrow. "Oho? Crave a little adventure, do we? Well, then, let's see." He produced a saucer and teacup from apparently nowhere, and a teapot in the other hand that hadn't been there before. "This is a complex little blend from the Azim Steppe, created by the nomadic tribes there." He poured out a thick, creamy mixture of tea and milk, swirling it a little and sprinkling something into it as he poured. "You have to blend in just a touch of salt when pouring to bring out the flavor. Adding it at any other time ruins it."

Kasumi cautiously picked up the cup. It seemed much more robust and hearty than she was accustomed to, with the slight scent of spice and chestnuts, as well as a light sweetness. She took a tentative sip.

"Mmm!" She looked down at the cup in her hands in surprise, then back up at him. "I never would have thought to try something like this! It's very rich, but…"
"Invigorating, yes?" Jiro grinned. "It's said the warriors of the Steppe used this to maintain alertness and vigor in the cold climes at higher altitudes." He stood. "I'll leave you to enjoy it then. Do call me if you need anything."

As he turned, Kasumi nodded. "Oh, please do. I see you have other customers to attend to!"

Jiro stopped dead in his tracks.

"Pardon?" he asked, turning slightly. "I hadn't heard anyone else come in after you." He glanced over his shoulder at her.

"Oh, no… I think they were here before me?" Kasumi said. She cocked her head. "Curious I didn't notice them before, but… this little shop is quite busy, isn't it?"

Jiro spun on his heel, pulled the other chair out from the table and sat down in one smooth motion. He rested his elbows on the table, folded his hands and perched his chin atop, regarding her. "Tell me, my dear… describe them to me?"

"Pardon?" Kasumi frowned.

"I know it's an odd request…" He gestured with his hand. "But humor me? Most folks who come in here are so preoccupied with their problems they don't even notice any of the other patrons, much like the others don't notice you. Pick one."

Kasumi nodded. She looked around… had there been other patrons? She swore she'd seen others out of the corner of her eye… She squinted and wondered why it was so hard to pick one out. "It's… Well, there's…" The certainty started to fade. "I was sure…"

Jiro smiled. "Of course you were, my dear. The shadows in here play tricks. It's nothing to worry about." He scooted the chair back to stand up once more.

Kasumi blinked. "At the bar."

"Hmm?" Jiro paused.

"Off-white jacket. Reddish hair. Hunched over a bit," she said softly. She wasn't sure exactly if she was seeing what she was talking about, but she found that if she unfocused her eyes and let her mouth simply say what it would, it allowed her to talk around whatever difficulty she was having with her perceptions. "Odd garb. Worn. He looks tired… no… he looks beaten."

Jiro blinked. "Interesting…" He got up smoothly and moved over beside her, taking a knee beside her, careful not to break her line of sight. "What can you tell me about him?"

"Yes… very interesting," Jiro said. "Do you by any chance have any idea what sort of tea he might like?"

She frowned. "He wants something bitter. Harsh. Punishing. But… it's not what he needs. But… you couldn't just give him what he needs because he'd reject it…" She licked her lips. "Something… complex then? I'm afraid I don't know."

"No, no, one could hardly expect you to have the experience for that." Jiro smiled at her.
"But… promising." He cocked his head at her. "Try again."

She looked around once more, narrowing her eyes. Then they widened. "Ranma? How? No… no that's not Ranma. Not at all. But the resemblance is uncanny… hmm…” She chewed her lower lip. "She's… complicated, isn't she? Innocence and wonder mixed with… a kind of cynicism? Or maybe it's detachment? Like… Alice in Wonderland. She's very intelligent, quick… Sees the world differently."

"She does," Jiro agreed. "And what would she drink? What sort of tea would compliment her?"

"Flavorful. Deep, but… not heavy. Not a fan of bitterness," Kasumi cocked her head. "Her tea is going to change though, isn't it? Quite soon…"

"Those two are a couple of my more recent clients, and interesting ones," Jiro said. "They're some of the few I've gotten wrong precisely because of what you are seeing about them. You've even managed to pick out a few details I missed the first time around." He folded his hands. "What about her companions?"

Kasumi frowned again. There were a couple of other women with the girl, a redhead with a shock of shorter, wild scarlet hair that seemed to go up and out more like flames than obey gravity, and another girl with long, dark straight hair. Both were dressed in outfits that were barely more than swimsuits. Older… mid twenties? She couldn't really tell - something made their ages difficult to determine, but there was a worldliness there. But beyond that. "O-oh my… It's hard to say… It's like… the air around them is rattling…"

"Yes, precisely!" Jiro clapped his hands. "They don't come in often… deeply pondering decisions is not really their modus operandi… And with good reason. I doubt any detailed plans they make would last long enough for the ink to dry on the paper they're written down on. Those two are chaos-touched for certain. But… they seem comfortable enough with that. Their direct supervisor however… he has been one of my clients for years. Poor man."

"But why show me this?" Kasumi asked, frowning.

"Oh, I didn't," Jiro replied with a smile, his teeth white, straight and perfect. "You perceived this all on your own."

"O-oh. I'm sorry. Have I ruined the trick?" Kasumi asked, taking a sip of her tea. "I do hope you're not angry, are you?"

"Far from it!" Jiro laughed. "What you are doing normally requires a tremendous amount of skill, but I sense there's a… serenity about you. Most people make so much noise and clamor going through their lives that they're not receptive to the noise and calamity of the lives of others. You're different, though."

"But… why now?" Kasumi asked. "I've never been known to be particularly perceptive before."

Jiro snorted. "My dear, please. Don't try and pass off your carefully constructed mantle of obliviousness as the real thing to me. You already know why, don't you?"

Kasumi blinked, considering a moment. "This place. It's… quiet."

Jiro smiled. "Exactly."

"But…” She frowned. "Why?"
Jiro shrugged. "Why not? My dear, when you've lived as long as I have, things can get… well, dull. You start to think that you know everything; that you've seen everything. And then some child, who knows nothing, picks up a stone that you know is nothing special, a worthless lump that you could describe in the most minute detail… and laughs. And he treasures it. He sees something in it that you don't see. And just to be present for such a thing can make you look at that stone anew." He sat back in his chair. "Most people don't realize that happens every moment of every day, for countless people. They don't see it. They don't hear it. They're too noisy. I made this place… a quiet, safe place… just so I could be here for it. People started to come here as a refuge, a place to wrestle with their problems, and I realized that it was the purest form I had found.
Someone takes some thing… a problem or a choice… and makes it into something new. They take it in a direction that is wholly theirs. Those moments, and the privilege of being able to witness them, are what I live for."

"Even if they make poor decisions?" Kasumi asked.

Jiro nodded slowly, his face falling a bit. "That… is the price. The shape they choose might not always be beautiful or innovative. You will see old mistakes made, over and over and over again.
But if you get too involved, you ruin the moment. People have to come to their own decisions."

"Too involved," Kasumi noted with a smile. "So you do meddle then?"

Jiro chuckled and tilted his head, acknowledging her point. "I nudge from time to time. Most of the time, just listening is enough. I believe you've done much the same, haven't you? Your entire family seems to hold you in quite high regard for exactly that."

Kasumi blushed. "Well… I don't know if that's credit I deserve. For the longest time I've just listened without doing anything."

"Listening is often enough. Sometimes that's really all they need." He sighed. "But these days I can't often give my customers the time to just sit. Even now I'm robbing Peter to pay Paul a bit for this chat. Which leads me to the point." He leaned forward. "Tell me, Ms. Tendo… would you, by chance, be interested in a part-time job?"

000

The movies lacked Riko's flair for finding gems to get people talking, but they worked as a distraction. Much to Ukyou's dismay, Akane and Shampoo continued to insist on using her as a pillow and/or backrest and made out whenever Nabiki wasn't looking, so things never did quite settle. When they were just content to cuddle, Shampoo had drifted into her habit of purring, which had caused Ranma to retreat to Ryouga's side opposite them.

Thankfully, the initial surge of energy that came with the rush of ki from the Link soon wore off and Akane was left nodding sleepily. Akane was nestled in the middle of the futon pile and she, Ukyou and Shampoo eventually ended up in a tangle together. Nabiki wound up on the right side with Ranma, while Ryouga settled to the left, slightly separated, with his hand peeking out of the covers to clasp Akane's.

It was still uncomfortably close. He felt like an intruder. The girls had made every effort to include him during the movie, but he had remained withdrawn.

"Tomorrow this is all over, after all," he thought. The dojo door was open and he could see the moon and the starlit sky. Not as many as he was used to seeing out in the country, of course, but it was still pretty. "Tomorrow we try for a cure, and if it goes well then…" He glanced to his right. "I guess I haven't got much reason to stick around, do I?"
He didn't like that thought. He closed his eyes, trying to keep the dark thoughts from causing a spike in his heavy ki that might wake up the girls. He felt a bit of a protective surge at that. Maybe I could just... stay? Just... make sure they're okay? I could just find a spot out of the way, and...

That train of thought died off as he looked at his hand, wrapped around Akane's own delicate one. Holding her hand had been a simple wish of his for so very long, but now? Even as he got his wish, he was on the outside - on the edge - intruding where someone else belonged.

No... I tried that, he thought glumly, looking out at the stars again. I couldn't get out of Ranma and Akane's way... ended up making a jackass of myself. I'd just end up doing it again over Nabiki or Shampoo or... or Ranma. He sighed.

... Still.

He smiled a bit as he thought back over the last few weeks. I don't think that I'd change anything. Even if some of it has been messed up. Things haven't been this... NORMAL for me since... since... well, since Middle School. It's been nice having friends again. He glanced to his right as Ukyou mumbled something and shifted. He could sense their ki had settled into a pattern together, and wondered what they were dreaming about. Part of him just wanted to drift off and join them.

I'll stay a while. He decided at last, compromising with himself. Make sure they're okay. As long as they actually NEED me. I'm sure, once Ranma's life settles down, things'll get awkward, so I'll leave before that. Then... He swallowed, I guess... That would be a good time to tell, her how I feel? Or... should I just keep it to myself?

"Ryouga?"

Ryouga blinked, noticing someone sitting up on the far side of the group from him. In the dim light he could make out unbound red hair. Ranma stretched and rubbed sleepily at her eyes.

"Uh... yeah?" Ryouga kept his voice low, not wanting to wake the others.

"Can't sleep either?" Ranma asked. She started crawling around the group to the foot of the futon pile, kneeling and looking out the open door.

"Mnnn," Ryouga replied noncommittally. "Just... kinda thinking about stuff."

"Me too," Ranma said softly. She turned to look at him, then crawled closer, next to his futon. She knelt again, and started fidgeting with her unbound hair. "Ryo... am I manly?"

Ryouga blinked. She was framed in the moonlight, just barely enough for him to make out the color of her hair, and the glimmer reflected in her blue eyes. The dim light gave her an aura, an almost glow that reminded him of a painting of a sad girl - one of those images so full of emotion that you wished you could step into the painting and comfort the girl.

"You know," he croaked, "it'd really be a lot easier if you'd just skip to hitting me if you're gonna ask things like that..."

Ranma sighed in frustration, her eyes glinting a bit as she shot him a glare. That bright flash of emotion framed by the moonlight was another snapshot.

"That's not... Look, I know I'm not a man at the moment," She took a breath. "But... but that's not what being 'manly' is about, is it? I mean... I mean..." She wrung her hair more. "There's... there's more to it, isn't there? Like... like being honorable and... heroic and stuff."
Ryouga levered himself up, releasing Akane's hand. There had been plenty of time for the Link to form and he didn't want to risk disturbing the girls. He sat cross-legged and considered.

"It's… not really the word I'd use," he decided finally. "Not anymore. Doesn't really apply to me, anyway."

"What are you talking about?" Ranma asked, confused. "You're manly! Way more than Mousse or Kuno!"

"No, I'm not," Ryouga replied, chuckling. "At least not how your Dad defines it. I'm a crybaby, I'm too wishy-washy to tell the girl I l-lo-care about how I feel, I was too afraid to own up to the humiliating truth of my curse with Akane…" He shook his head.

Ranma scooted closer. "Y-yeah, but… you're strong, and… and you care about honor, even if you struggle with it sometimes, and… and you do things because they're the right things to do, even when it goes against getting you what you want."

Ryouga glanced at her. "That sounds more like just being a good person."

Ranma looked away nervously. "W-well… yeah. Isn't that what being 'manly' means?"

Ryouga studied her face a moment, then shrugged. "Not to me. Not really. Don't have to be a man at all to be any of those things. I mean… Haven't they taught you that?" He gestured at the girls sleeping next to them.

"I… kinda figured girls had their own version?" Ranma muttered.

"Then why not ask if you're that?" Ryouga asked. "Or why not got get some hot water? A hell of a lot easier being 'manly' if you're a man, right?"

Ranma scowled at him. "I don't… I mean… I-I don't wanna go to the trouble! 'Sides, I'm… not wearing the right underwear for that." She blushed and looked away. "This ain't about asking if I'm macho or anything. I just… I guess I'd use the girl word if I knew it… but 'womanly' doesn't sound right, and besides, I ain't exactly a real girl."

Ryouga drew his knees up and folded his arms across them, looking out at the moon. "If you wanna know if you're a good person?... Yeah. Yeah, you are. It used to drive me nuts that I couldn't deny that, actually. Why do you think I jumped on even the smallest of things you did? I had to work sometimes to find reasons to hate your guts. And whether you're a real girl or not is up to you."

Ranma stared at him. He glanced at her, and could see a blush spreading on her cheeks. It wasn't the usual flush of outrage, but more it seemed something he had said hit home.

"I… what do you mean?" she asked softly.

Ryouga shrugged. "What, about you being a good person?"

"N-no…"

He raised an eyebrow, turning and giving her his attention. She was fidgeting, wringing her hands in her lap and unable to meet his eyes. He felt a surge of anxiety as he realized this was one of those moments. I could just tell her. Tell her now and be done with with…

He shrugged the idea off. Don't be selfish! She doesn't need that now! "I mean… who says you're not a real girl? There isn't anything physical to say you aren't. Nothing to say you can't be a guy while you're in a girl's body too, I guess. But that's just it... the only thing that gets to determine what you are, up here, is you." He reached over and poked her forehead. "Nobody gets to tell you what's there but you. The rest is just... hot and cold water to adjust."

Ranma swallowed. "B-but... I know what I feel like, but... If it's that easy..." She shuddered. "I guess I'm just afraid of... of becoming something I don't recognize."

"I recognize you," Ryouga said. "Even after everything that's changed. You aren't gonna suddenly go off doing tea ceremonies and flower arranging just because you decide you're a girl one day. And nothing to say you can't decide to be a guy the next."

Ranma shivered again. She hugged herself against the chill of the night air.

Ryouga pulled the down comforter up and wrapped it around her shoulders, earning a look of surprise from her.

"It's getting cold out," he said.

"Aren't you gonna be cold now, dumbass?" Ranma frowned at him.

"Heh... I'm used to a little cold. I'm a survivalist," Ryouga replied. Then he shivered involuntarily. Crap. It IS cold! He looked away, trying to push down the reflex and keep her from seeing.

He felt the warmth of the comforter wrap around his shoulders. Before he could react, a small warm body moved in against his side.

"Dumbass," Ranma repeated as she wrapped the comforter around them both. "A real survivalist knows to share body heat."

"I..." Ryouga's brain locked up.

She peeked up at him from the folds of the comforter. She apparently noticed him stiffen. "I guess... this is too weird, huh?"

"No! Not at all! Weird, I mean!" Ryouga babbled.

"I guess... I should probably decide what I am before I do stuff like this." She moved to slip back out from under the comforter but he quickly put an arm around her shoulders.

Ryouga forced himself to take a deep breath and relax. "No. It's okay, it's just..." He closed his eyes and focused on calming his thoughts. "You don't gotta figure it out right now."

She blinked at him a moment, then leaned against him. He fought the urge to tense up again.

"Is it okay to... just be like this for right now?" she asked softly.

"Yeah," he breathed. He closed his eyes.

"..."

"Ryouga?"

"Yeah?"
"Is it better to be manly, or warm?" She was mumbling sleepily now.

"Warm, definitely," he replied. He could feel his eyelids starting to droop, in fact.

"Mmn," she replied. "Good. S'good to be warm. S'posed to find the right girl to keep you warm."

"Mn," Ryouga replied noncommittally.

"I'm sorry about Akari."

"I know," Ryouga sighed. "She wasn't the right one, though."

"'Kay," Ranma said softly. "I'll keep you warm until you find her."

He blinked and glanced down at her, but she was already starting to snore.

000 (Chapter 30 End)

I just thought I'd clarify, Nabiki's comment about business suits and skirts is a lampshade on the sexism that still exists in the business world. Be cute and sexy until you're highly ranked enough that you don't need to be anymore. That might offend people, but it fits with Nabiki's biases and beliefs. It is not intended to offend.

I hope you guys liked the glimpse of Jiro's Tea Shop. I may never fully explain what it actually IS, but I will probably include it in some form in future stories. Yes, even stories that aren't in the Ranmaverse or time period.

The Week of the Link is now coming to a close. The next Chapter? The Cure, The Kiss, and the Calamity!
The Cure, The Kiss, The Calamity

Nabiki was the first one up, much to her surprise.

It was partly due to the dojo being chilly; the down comforter she was wrapped in was barely doing the job. It was also partly due to the fact she was used to a soft western-style bed and her back was complaining about the hard floor.

Akane, Ukyou and Shampoo were thoroughly tangled up and, from the grin Akane was sporting, Nabiki had some guesses as to the kinds of dreams they were sharing. She half remembered a few images before she had rolled over and broken contact.

You are a bundle of repressed hormones, sis. You might just be the one to finally wear Shampoo out, she thought, bemused. She glanced past them to see another blanket with a lump under it and crept around to check.

She paused, a little surprised. She walked around to the side of the bundled sleepers and knelt.

Ryouga and Ranma were huddled together, likely for warmth. Nabiki was well-acquainted with Ranma's vampiric tendencies regarding heat, and it seemed she had latched onto Ryouga and compacted herself against him, arms tucked in against his chest and her head tucked under his chin. He had both arms wrapped around her and she doubted it'd be possible to separate them without a prybar until they regained consciousness.

That... might be explosive when they wake up, Nabiki considered. Nnh. Need coffee first. Figure out how to prevent holes in dojo walls later. Unless... he told her? She reached out and placed her hand on the back of Ranma's head and closed her eyes, listening through the Link.

Their ki was calm. Deep, dreamless sleep most likely. There were just a few gentle swirls of contentment and warmth.

They're happy, she thought, smiling a little, but WAY too placid for a bomb like that to have been dropped. If only it was this simple when they're awake. She leaned over and kissed each of them on the forehead in turn. Well, for now, sleep well. I love you both.

She paused a moment as she realized that had come unbidden. She tousled Ryouga's hair gently then stood up. Maybe it's a little early to be thinking that way about Ryo? Well... I'll give him the benefit of the doubt for now. She stood and gave them one last smile before she walked out of the dojo and towards the main house.

She could hear Kasumi humming away in the kitchen long before she got there and smell the rich and savory aromas of breakfast already cooking, as well as...

"Tea?" Nabiki poked her head into the kitchen. A very familiar tea. "Kasumi, is that…?"

"Mr. Jiro said this was your preferred type," Kasumi turned and handed Nabiki a steaming cup of Earl Grey. "It's probably better for you than that coffee you drink every morning."

"Eh, that's debatable," Nabiki muttered and took a sip. Her eyes widened and she looked at her sister in shock. It tasted exactly like Jiro's blend. "Sis, how did you…?"

"I... well, I hope you don't mind... the tea is actually a bit of an apology, but..." Kasumi grinned. "Mr. Jiro offered me a part time job!"
Nabiki blinked at her sister's almost ecstatic demeanor, then casually took another sip of her tea. "Umm... congratulations? Good for you getting a part time job. Just don't let Daddy snaffle your paycheck."

Kasumi blinked. "I thought you'd be more excited?"

Nabiki shook her head. "No, no, don't get me wrong, Kasumi, this is great. It's just... I mean, it's a tea shop. That's hardly going to be a challenge for someone like you. You're not exactly lacking in employable skills."

Kasumi frowned, then brightened again. "Oh! That's right...! Yes, it's just a tea shop... but it's something to do. And Mr. Jiro has let me sample different teas from all over! Even a couple of coffees he says he keeps for his 'problem customers'."

"So... you stayed out all night drinking tea in a tea shop with an eccentric old transvestite?" Nabiki asked, taking another sip. "I mean, as far as Friday nights go, that's actually not too bad."

"You... don't suppose Father will be upset, do you?" Kasumi asked nervously. "I know he was very opinionated on the subject when I last asked him about it."

"Yeah, and you're also twenty, Kasumi. You're old enough that it's not his decision." Nabiki snorted. "He's just worried that his breakfast might not be on time." She drained her cup and Kasumi refilled it before returning to breakfast preparations. "Actually... that might work to our advantage. When given the choice between relying on Akane for breakfast or accepting our arrangement and having Ukyou and Shampoo here... well, thinking with his stomach is another habit he's picked up from Mr. Saotome."

"Oh! Speaking of which, I noticed Father didn't come home last night," Kasumi said. "Normally I would call the Saotome house to find out if he stayed there, but... given current events..." She sighed, pausing in chopping vegetables. "After what I've heard, dealing civilly with the Saotomes will be difficult."

"I'll figure something out. At the very least, send 'em off on a cruise or something to give us a reprieve," Nabiki replied. "We'll have to set some pretty harsh boundaries with those two sooner rather than later, but that fight can wait until we've dealt with Himura."

"How is that going?" Kasumi asked.

Nabiki swallowed. Whoops. So, how much do I tell my sister about me potentially pissing off some serious underworld figures and making deals with shady criminal organizations? Anything she knows makes her a target... not that just being my sister hasn't made her that already..."

Kasumi put down her knife, turned, and took Nabiki by the shoulders. "Is it that bad?" she asked with concern.

"Do you want the comforting lie, or the truth that will make you an accessory?" Nabiki asked. She immediately regretted her glib choice of words as the look of concern on her sister's face deepend. "Kasumi... Himura is... Her grandfather is deeply involved with the Yakuza. They're not interfering because they see this as some sort of test, where her win condition is to get control of Ranma. If she does... I don't like the thought of what she might make him do, but she isn't likely to take a loss lying down, either."

"I see. So... this isn't Ranma's challenge anymore, is it?" Kasumi murmured softly.

Nabiki shook her head. "I don't think Ranma will have any trouble winning a straight up Volleyball game, no matter how good Himura thinks her team is and I don't see how she couldn't have figured that out herself by now. But she's not at all worried - which tells me she's got something else planned, and I have no idea what it is yet."

"Are you all right?" Kasumi asked.

Nabiki took a deep breath. "I'm… As long as I can see a way forward, I'm okay."

Nabiki looked her sister in the eyes, waiting for the inevitable lecture. She could see that look on Kasumi's face, that one that their Mother had worn when Nabiki had knocked over a prized vase, or neglected to do her chores.

Instead of a lecture though, Kasumi closed her eyes and sighed. Her expression became more determined. She opened her eyes and nodded. "All right. What can I do to help?"

Nabiki blinked. "That's… that's it? I just admitted that I'm basically in a turf war with a Yakuza Princess and have waded up to my eyeballs in underworld shenanigans, and that's all?"

Kasumi smiled weakly. "Were you expecting a lecture? Something about being disappointed, but knowing you can do better? That… was my first impulse. But," she shook her head, "that's not appropriate. You're not a child anymore, and this isn't a broken vase. And it's not your fault, either."

"I don't think you want to be involved, sis," Nabiki said. "This… this is some bad stuff. I mean… our plan pretty much involves letting the Amazons abduct us if things go south, because spending the rest of our lives in Jusendo would be better than dodging Yakuza hitmen for the rest of our short lives."

"My choices are to stay safe and pretend nothing is going on or to do something, right?" Kasumi said with a smile. "If I'm not going to get involved now, when will I ever?"

Nabiki was forced to smile at that. "If… if things go bad… You're okay with coming with us? Leaving the house… the dojo?"

Kasumi looked around, closed her eyes and took a deep breath. "I was always going to have to leave someday, Nabiki. As much as I love this house… It was never meant to be mine." She gave her sister a crooked grin. "But I'd much rather it stayed in the family if possible, so… please win?"

Nabiki nodded and smirked, regaining a bit of her old confidence, even if she didn't quite feel it. "Don't worry, sis. I'm pretty sure the Yakuza won't want to mess with Nerima once I'm done."

000

Her head hurt. It was the sort of splitting migraine that reminded her how desperately tired she was, yet wouldn't allow her the respite of sleep. Her mind was a whirl of confusing images and the notion presented itself that maybe things would get better if she opened her eyes.

She slowly cracked an eye open and winced. The notion had been very very wrong. She tried closing her eyes again but that just started the dizzying brain whirl all over again. She wanted so desperately to sleep but she kept tumbling back to consciousness.

She groaned and accepted defeat, opening an eye again. She managed to pry her tongue from the roof of her mouth, realized that her throat was so dry it hurt and that there was the most awful taste in her mouth.

She was in a white room. It was sterile in the way that hospital rooms tended to be, though there was a large window that had the curtains drawn back, letting in the daylight. She couldn't quite see out from her angle so she had no idea how high up she was. Her training kicked in and she glanced around for other escape routes. The door was closed and did not appear to have a lock, however, she could hear footsteps outside. There was a vent in the ceiling but it looked far too small for her to slip through and she doubted she could muster the effort to reach it.

The bed she was on was very soft. To someone used to sleeping on the floor or on a pile of flour sacks, it felt like a marshmallow. The sheets were crisp, white and clean and had been recently changed. Where am I?

The door opened. She opened both eyes and looked blearily towards it, though she was having trouble focusing. Two figures entered, but she couldn't make out enough detail to identify them.

"Konatsu?" a familiar voice asked. It was a voice she liked, but… something about it made her feel sad too. Or… hurt? She didn't know. Whatever the feeling was, it swam away in the haze of her confused thoughts.

"W-who…?"

The figure hurried closer. It was a girl, a teenager, with brown hair sporting streaks of vivid color in her bangs. She took hold of Konatsu's hand and gripped it. "Konatsu? Do you remember me?"

Konatsu? Yes, that's right. That's my name. Konatsu… She closed her eyes for a moment, but the whirling only got worse. "Nnnh..." A name came up from the whirlwind, however. "Mineko…?"

Mineko's smile widened and she nodded. She took Konatsu's hand and squeezed it. "Yeah… Yeah, it's me. How are you feeling?"

Mineko is my friend. Konatsu found the concept among the confusing jumble of thoughts and memories. It felt a bit odd… like something someone had told her. But at the same time, deep down, it felt correct. She curled her fingers around that hand… had Mineko's hand gotten bigger? No, that would be ridiculous. "My head…"

"We'll get you something for it," The other figure said. She stepped forward. Blonde, long hair, tail, piercing eyes. Konatsu didn't recognize her, though she had the odd feeling she should. "For now… you're probably dehydrated. Mineko?"

Mineko nodded and quickly retrieved a glass of water from the side table. She held it to Konatsu's lips, allowing her to drink until Konatsu was able to reach up and take the glass and drain it. It barely felt like enough to notice.

"Who… are you?" Konatsu croaked to the blonde girl.

"My name is Himura Tanaka," Himura said. "You remember the Tanaka family, don't you?"

Konatsu frowned. The name 'Tanaka' rang in her head almost like a bell. One of the few things that was absolutely crystal clear. But… oddly detached. Tanaka… My parents were retainers to a family named Tanaka. I was… I… don't remember them, but I know they were the ones my parents served. "My family have… been your retainers, right?"

"Exactly. Until your stepmother broke the agreement and spirited you away as a child when your father died," Himura said. Her eyes seemed oddly intense. Like she was searching Konatsu's face for a reaction.

"Yes…” Konatsu nodded. That sounded right. Not honoring father's commitments certainly sounded like something her stepmother would have done. "Have… you come to claim a debt on my honor?"

Himura smiled widely, as if she had heard what she had been waiting for. "No, my dear Konatsu! I've been searching for you! Since your mother died, my family has been very concerned about your welfare, but then your father passed and, much to my Grandfather's chagrin, we lost track of you. Your stepmother kept you from anything that might have left a paper trail. It wasn't until Mineko found you that we were sure. If anything, I am the one who has the debt of honor to repay." She bowed deeply before her.

"A… debt?" Konatsu asked, confused.

"Your family have been our retainers for generations. Though you have always managed your own affairs, we've done our best to ensure your family was well taken care of. However, in the tragedy that claimed your parents, we failed you twice. And then again in being unable to find you and allowing you to be exploited for so long. First by your Stepmother, and then by Ms. Kuonji."

"Exploited?" Konatsu murmured, frowning. That word didn't seem right connected to the name 'Kuonji'.

"I… don't wish to speak ill of her. She did certainly provide you an escape from an abusive situation that had become intolerable. But, when we found you, you were terribly malnourished. You could barely remember your own name. She had been paying you perhaps a few yen a day, and forcing you to work her shop while she indulged in… more 'recreational pursuits' with what appears to be several lovers." She dusted off her shoulder as if she felt soiled by mentioning it. "Mineko found you collapsed after having worked long hours without food or water… ironically serving food and water to Ms. Kuonji's clientele. I wanted to respect your wishes as much as possible, but I felt at that point that I needed to intervene."

"Intervene…" Konatsu repeated, frowning again.

Mineko squeezed her hand. "Yes, Konatsu! It's not fair how that girl treated you! She made you work for her basically for free because… because she knows you…" she bowed her head, "She's been exploiting your feelings for over a year now, all while rubbing your nose in her relationships. And you'd just accepted it… like you didn't deserve anything better! I couldn't just watch anymore!"

"I… thank you," Konatsu smiled. Mineko's earnest sincerity reassured her. She squeezed back, then glanced at Himura. "I… have no way to repay you for this."

"Oh, I know," Himura said, beaming. "That's hardly a concern. My family has always helped yours out whenever we could. That's why your ancestors pledged fealty to us so long ago." She waved her hand. "Honestly, it's all a bit silly and I'd hardly expect to hold you to such an agreement…"

"No…" Konatsu shook her head. "No… you honored your part of the agreement by helping me." She closed her eyes and swallowed. "I can't… things are still fuzzy… confused… but I know honor is important and my parents were honorable people. And if they chose to uphold this…" she looked back up at Himura, her eyes taking on a determined gleam "then so must I."

Himura raised an eyebrow, a bemused smirk on her lips. She nodded her head once. "If that is your wish… your help in my life would be sorely appreciated. But!" she held up a finger to forestall Konatsu's inquiry, "Later. Once you have recovered your strength to Mineko's satisfaction. Presuming she is agreeable?" Himura cocked her head, glancing at the girl.
Mineko nodded quickly. "Y-yes! Yes, I'll get Konatsu back on her feet for you, I promise, Himura!"

Himura grinned again. "Good. We've got a lot to discuss, the three of us. Rest up… I'll come see you both in a couple of days. I have some business to attend to."

000

Ryouga sighed as he leaned against the wall, waiting. His arms were crossed and his expression made it clear to most that he wasn't interested in talking.

He currently had a free period. Ukyou, Akane and Ranma had been shunted off to Home Economics, with much grumbling by Ranma, leaving Ryouga with a free period by himself. That generally meant standing wherever he was left and not moving from the spot until someone came to get him for fear he might end up somewhere outside of the school.

He tapped his foot and fidgeted. Most days he could simply meditate to pass the time, but it wasn't happening today. His thoughts were in a whirl and he couldn't focus enough to settle them.

"Got ditched again, Ryo?" A familiar voice asked.

Ryouga looked up to see Nabiki walking towards him. He sighed, closed his eyes and nodded. "The girls had home ec. I've got a free period. Nowhere to go."

"That must have burned for Ranma," Nabiki said, walking up to him and leaning against the wall next to him. "You wanna get out of here? I'm free too."

Ryouga exhaled heavily in relief. "Please. I'm going to go insane if I have to keep on counting floor tiles."

She smiled and offered her arm. At any other time Ryouga probably would have protested, or at least been a bit more shy about it, but he was already full up on anxiety from other things. He looped his arm through hers and let her lead him down the hall.

Nabiki raised an eyebrow at him as she made contact. "Woof. What's got you all churned up?"

Ryouga scowled. "Not having any privacy for my own thoughts, for one?"

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "All right. Come on." She led him up the stairs without another word.

Ryouga winced. He had stuck his foot in his mouth again. He wasn't getting much of a sense that she was mad, but then again Nabiki was hard to read. Her emotional landscape tended to be guarded.

She took him up the stairs to the roof access, producing a key from her pocket and unlocking the fire door. She led him onto the roof then released his arm, walked over to a large industrial vent and leaned against it. "All right… Now we can talk," she said. "No contact, no Link. Better?"

Ryouga nervously rubbed the back of his head. "Uh… yeah. Look, sorry about…"

"She cut him off with a wave of her hand. "Don't. Trust me, wanting privacy in your own head is something I can understand. I've had Shampoo, Ranma and Ukyou second guessing me so far based on the Link and… while it's nice to be understood at times, there are also times you want to keep some stuff to yourself." She smiled. "Or at least get to decide what and how much you share."
Ryouga sighed and leaned back against the door, closing it behind him with a click. "Thank you."

Nabiki chuckled. "I'm pretty good at identifying needs. It's important for a mercenary, you know?" She sighed. "So… Did you want to talk about any of that stuff in your head? Last call before I claim the floor because I could really use someone to talk to right now."

Ryouga blinked. "You need to talk?"

Nabiki looked away, appearing uncharacteristically shy. "Ryouga… I'm… in kind of over my head, on a lot of things right now. Everyone knows bits and pieces of it. Everyone owns a piece of it. Everyone except you. So… I guess I'm kind of hoping for an outsider's perspective." She swallowed nervously. "A-and… I'm also dreading it because… I'm pretty sure by this point you're neck deep with the rest of us, and I haven't told you anything."

"You're worried I'm gonna be mad?" Ryouga asked.

"I'm certain you're going to be mad," Nabiki replied. "I'm worried about how much of it will be aimed at me… and, to be honest, I probably deserve a lot of it. Most of it." She closed her eyes and took a deep breath. "All of it, if I'm honest."

Ryouga swallowed. This behavior was so far removed from the Nabiki he knew that he was having trouble figuring out what to say. "L-look, Nabiki, I promise I won't get angry…"

"Don't make a promise you can't keep, Hibiki," Nabiki warned him sternly, then looked away again. "Look… I just got done talking this over with Kasumi this morning and… I realized I hadn't thought this through all the way. I'll just start at the beginning." She took a breath. "Himura Tanaka's family, specifically her grandfather, is in deep with the Yakuza. Like founding member deep. She's being groomed to be his eventual successor. When her Granddad found out that she was using his resources to mess with a bunch of high school students… he wasn't happy."

"So… he's going to put a stop to all of this?" Ryouga asked hopefully.

Nabiki shook her head. "No… He decided to make it a test. And worse? Apparently, because I outplayed Himura at the school assembly, I'm being tapped. So either she wins and can force Ranma to do who knows what… or I win and we're all forced to do who knows what." Nabiki closed her eyes. "Then… I was approached by a group of… well, let's just call them 'criminal social activists' - hackers and thieves with an agenda. I got into bed with them to try and find a way out… and they want me to help them torpedo Tanaka Pharmaceuticals itself. I've gotten so tangled up that no matter what I do I'm dancing to someone else's tune and pissing off people it's not healthy to piss off. Which would be fine if it was just me. But it's not. These people… all of them… they're the sorts who go after the people you care about. With guns, or with technology or with other things that you just can't fight with martial arts. So everyone I care about - my family, Ranma, Shampoo, Ukyou, you… maybe even Sayuri and the others… they're all on the hook for this." She laughed bitterly. "And the best plan I've got so far to get out of this…? Is to sell us all to the Amazons!" She rolled her head back and thumped it against the aluminum with a Bang.

Ryouga just stared at her for a moment. Funny thing about being stuck in your own head with no way out; Sometimes the only way that you could escape it was to be faced with someone else who needed help getting out of something even worse than you.

He pushed off the door and walked over to her. He gently gripped her by the shoulders, earning a startled look. He held her eyes and made sure she could sense his sincerity through the Link before he spoke.
"Then we take 'em all on," he said. "We've been in worse fixes before…"

"No… no we have not," Nabiki said firmly. "Ryouga… this could include your family too! They could go after your Mom if they think you're involved…"

"Then we don't let 'em!" Ryouga shot back. "You think I'm afraid just because we might lose? I've put my life on the line plenty of times in fights I didn't know I could win… hell, there were a few I was pretty sure I couldn't. Ranma, Ukyou, Shampoo, Akane… They're all the same. If it's important, they'll fight for it. And you are important."

Nabiki looked stricken. "Ryo… I don't think you understand…"

"You're saying I might die," Ryouga said. "You're saying Ranma might die, or Akane, or any of us or all of us. And… you're saying they might not stop with us. Right?" He set his jaw. "You think these are the only bad guys who ever resorted to that? If nobody is willing to take risks to stop them then they never stop. So… Don't try to get out of it. Don't run. Don't… don't do damage control. Do what makes everyone fear and respect Nabiki Tendo. Walk in to the middle of the fire without any fear and make them afraid of you."

She stared at him. Her jaw trembled a bit. "Ryouga, I'm… I'm just a high school student. I'm not…"

"You are everything you need to be for this," Ryouga said firmly. "You've stared down gods and demons and stuff that scared the hell out of me, because you always knew what to look for. And now you've got all of us at your back, so… I wanna be there when they get that look in their eyes."

He smiled. His own problems felt far away now. "Do you want to know why I was all anxious earlier? I was scared. Not of anything bad that might happen, but of something good. I was scared of losing the curse… the family curse. For the last… god, I don't even know… my whole life has been just one day. A string of just one day. Each day, everything I did was just to get through to the next. Sometimes it was easy. Sometimes it was hard. But I never had to worry about the future or make plans or get attached to anything, because I never had a future to plan, or a place I could stay even if I wanted to. My whole world was just what was in my pack and that one day I had to get through. My biggest and only plan was finding Ranma. It was simple and I could manage all of it. But now? You and Ranma and Tofu and the others… you're about to give me a future, a place, things to hold on to… and that scared the hell out of me. I was…" he chuckled and shook his head, "I was even considering backing out. Not seriously… I can't afford to. Mom needs this too badly. But it was enough for me to wish that I could and to think 'maybe the wandering wasn't so bad'. You're giving me a whole life and I don't know what to do with it and it scares the hell out of me." He released her shoulders and straightened. "But you just solved my problem for me. Figuring out my future? All those possibilities? That's… that's too much. I don't want it. I'm not made for that. But living for a cause? Dying for it? Bleeding for it? That's easy. That I know. And you've got a cause that needs someone to do just that. So I'll solve both our problems." He stepped back a pace and dropped to one knee, bowing his head. "Nabiki Tendo, I pledge myself to your service, and the service of Ranma Saotome, and your combined families. My life, my strength, and my… uhh… umbrella are yours to command."

Nabiki was silent for a few moments, her eyes wide. Then, a small smile and… tears? She hiccuped, which became a giggle.

"Ryouga, for the love of… get up off the ground. You look ridiculous!" she managed to say, covering her mouth and a smile. But at the same time, tears were still running down her cheeks.

He stood. He was a little concerned about the crying but he could sense, even from here, that what was driving it was relief. "I… uhh… guess that was a bit melodramatic of me…" He rubbed the back of his head and chuckled. "I guess I'll have to…"

Nabiki took advantage of his momentarily lowered guard to step in towards him, inside his reach, slip her arms around his neck and pull his head down for a kiss that immediately shorted out whatever he had been about to say and obliterate the notion from his mind.

Nabiki kept the kiss short and sweet. Ryouga had the sense that she didn't want him completely going incoherent, though recent events seemed to have built up his resistance a little. Still, he wasn't quite sure exactly where he was anymore. His perception of reality had narrowed down considerably to consist of very little more than the girl who was in his arms right now (When had he put his arms around her?) and who was looking up at him with something much closer to Nabiki Tendo's usual confidence, though it contrasted a bit with the tear stains along her cheeks.

"That was your own fault," she said softly.

"I… uhh… I… I… ummm…" Ryouga stammered. Some part of his brain was telling him he should really let go and step back. Another part was telling him he could probably get away with another kiss, judging from the look in her eyes and the sense of her surging through the Link. She was warm and close and fascinatingly complicated and she wanted him and that stoked a fire in him he had never felt before. But a third, nagging voice reminded him that she wasn't his, and that she belonged with someone he very much couldn't bear to hurt. The conflict kept him paralyzed.

"Thank you," she whispered. "Sometimes a girl likes to be saved… but do you know what's better? Being reminded that she can do the saving too. That she can save herself. That someone believes in her. And to know that you meant every word of that… honestly and without any sort of ulterior motive?" She pressed herself a bit closer. "Well… that's just plain arousing."

"I… we… probably shouldn't…" Ryouga managed to croak out, hating himself for every syllable.

"I know," Nabiki said softly. "Though… It'd be really nice to get back at my sister. But… you have some things to sort out with Ranma first." She gently pulled him a bit closer, until their foreheads were touching. "I want to make it clear though… I am going to hold you to every word of that… except with one change. You're not allowed to die of anything other than old age if you want to be with me. Got it?"

"I… uhh… I think that's a price I'm willing to pay…" Ryouga managed. He even managed a lopsided smile though it felt a bit insane to him. He should have been a gibbering wreck, and an incoherent mess bleeding out from the nostrils and making a fool of himself.

She believes in me too, he realized. It wasn't Akari's blind faith, or Anna's misapplied belief in a hero that he wasn't. Nabiki knew him, knew what a mess he was, knew all of his flaws and mistakes. And she believed in him anyway. That knowledge was keeping him anchored in the moment. I was always afraid before, he thought. He wondered how long it had been since he had simply been happy like this - without the ever present fear of it being taken away.

But there was still that one reminder needling the back of his mind.

"I feel… like I'm betraying Ranma a bit here…" he murmured. It was a bit of a struggle to get the words out. He wanted to simply enjoy the feeling of the moment a bit longer.

"You're not," Nabiki replied. "Not yet, anyway." She smirked. "And I'm just as guilty. But I'm greedy. I think you're someone Ranma needs in her life. And I think you're someone I need. You're certainly someone I want. So… I'll push a little, if it will help you two sort things out. Then I can "Should… Should I go…" Ryōga shifted, gesturing at the door.

"No… not right now. Ukyō wanted to talk with Ranma alone and I think we should probably save this last resolution until we've got your curse out of the way. Besides…" Her smile widened and she gave him a playful look, "What's the rush?"

_Ah, THERE'S the terror._ Ryōga swallowed. "I… uhh… I thought we weren't…?"

"Oh, not _that_," Nabiki smirked. She slipped away from him and reached into her bag to pull something out. She turned and raised an eyebrow, hefting a camera in her hand. "Still want to learn about photography?"

000

Ranma slid the tray of cookies out of the oven smoothly, nodding in satisfaction at the golden brown color. _Even color, not burned at the edges, nice shape…_ She set the tray on the counter to cool, pulled off the oven mitts and sighed heavily.

_What the hell am I doing?_ she thought, staring at the cookies.

It would be easier if she hated this, or if she were out of her mind in tea ceremony lala land, puttering around 'making goodies for the boys' or some of the other nonsense that she usually spouted whenever there was some kind of magical personality alteration involved.

But she wasn't out of her mind, and she _didn't_ hate this. It had just become another kata, like math problems had become. It was like she had started applying that method to _everything_, whether she wanted to learn it or _not_. And… there had been a kind of zen to it. Before she had always cooked for some ulterior motive or goal, but this time it had just been to _cook._

"Something wrong, sugar?" Ukyō leaned against her counter. Ukyō had finished her own cooking early, even while coaching Akane with hers. There were no handy 'Greek Cookie' Recipes lying about, so Akane was back to form and needed supervision for most of the class, leaving Ranma to her own devices.

"I'm just… having another small identity crisis, Ucchan," Ranma sighed, gathering her recently washed utensils to put away. "Sorta… worried about how far this whole 'girl side' thing has gone, you know?"

"What, cookies are enough to get you off-kilter now? It's not even like it's the first time you've baked cookies," Ukyō replied. She glanced sidelong at the cookies.

"Yeah, but… always been some purpose to it before," Ranma grumped. "That always used to distract me. I guess having a _reason_ for it made it okay to enjoy myself doing it?"

"Cooking isn't exactly a female-only profession, sugar. Unless you wanna say that to my Dad and pretty much my entire family?" Ukyō reached for one of the cookies. "You just like being good at things, and you're naturally good at cooking."

Ranma rapped Ukyō on the knuckles with a wooden spoon. "Wait for them to cool. You know better than that!"

Ukyō scowled and shook her hand. "_Geez_, you're as strict as the girls in my old middle school!"
"You weren't baking?" Ranma raised an eyebrow.

Ukyou shrugged. "I was attending as a boy, remember? And the school wasn't exactly progressive if you get my meaning. I wanted to cook, but boys were supposed to wait outside and beg for treats from the girls. Say what you want about Furinkan, but at least it's my choice if I wanna take cooking or shop class."

"Wait… then why did they say I had to take cooking if I was registered as a girl!?" Ranma protested, gesturing at the cookie tray.

"Because the Principal is messing with you and he probably figured changing out your course load for a bunch of 'girly' classes would make you crack," Ukyou replied. This time she managed to move fast enough to snag a warm cookie while Ranma was distracted. She winked and took a bite. "Honestly, the best revenge you can get on him is actually enjoying yourself…" She immediately opened her mouth and fanned with her hand due to the high temperature of the molten chocolate chips.

"I did warn you," Ranma said. "Okay, maybe cooking isn't the example I thought it was. But…"

"This is about this morning, isn't it?" Ukyou jumped in.

Ranma scowled and crossed her arms tightly over her chest and looked away. "L-look, I said that wasn't what it looked like…"

"We know, Ranma," Ukyou replied, putting a hand on the redhead's shoulder. "Ryouga was warm, and you're a little heat vampire. Besides… you worry too much about what other people think about all of this."

"Y-yeah, well… losing face is something pops said I gotta avoid…" Ranma said weakly.

"And your father would know anything about that?" Ukyou said, giving Ranma a bemused look.

"I… I just don't wanna give anyone the wrong idea, is all!" Ranma huffed. Her cheeks were burning and she hated that she couldn't get it under control.

Ukyou sighed and shook her head. "Ranma… do you know why nobody woke you guys up until breakfast was ready?"

"I'm guessing you found me and Ryo snuggled up amusing," Ranma grumbled, putting the rest of the things away in the drawer with more force than was strictly necessary.

"No… well, yes, but mostly…" Ukyou walked up behind her and put a hand on her shoulder. "We could sense through the Link that you felt safe. We know… I know… that's a rare feeling for you. We didn't want to take that away."

"I'm not… like that, okay, Ukyou?" Ranma said, resisting the urge to slam the drawer, and forcing herself to close it with exaggerated care to avoid drawing attention to herself. Her hand was shaking.

Ukyou's eyes narrowed. "Care to explain to me what you mean by that, sugar?"

Ranma blinked and looked at her. "I… uhhh… I just mean…"

"Careful," Ukyou said, a warning tone entering her voice. "Because I am 'Like That'. I like boys and girls, and depending on the day my preference about which one I want to be changes too.
And I was under the impression you were too. So… care to explain what 'Like That' even means in this context?"

"I…” Ranma started, then trailed off. "I don't know, okay? I know… I know on some level I can get my parents to be okay with all of this… with all of you. But… but Ryo? That's…" She squeezed her eyes shut. "That's a line."

"So… this isn't about how you feel about him, this is about holding onto some hope that your parents will one day accept you, huh?" Ukyou said. She scowled. "Sugar, give it up."

"How can I?" Ranma hissed. She glanced around, but no one was paying attention to them. "I'm supposed to save the Saotome family line. I'm supposed to revive our martial arts legacy and become the Grand Master of Anything Goes Martial Arts. I'm supposed to be a Man amongst Men… even if it's just a show!" She huffed in frustration. "You wouldn't understand…"

Ukyou grabbed her shoulder and turned her to look at her with a bit of force, startling Ranma. Her eyes were cold and angry.

"Don't tell me I wouldn't understand about living up to family expectations, Saotome!" She said harshly. She closed her eyes, took a breath, and calmed herself. She opened them again, some of the hardness gone. "Listen to me, Ranma… when you and your Dad ran off? I blamed a lot of my troubles on that, but the truth was the engagement was just my Dad trying to 'save face'. Even back then he knew I wasn't 'right' in his eyes. I acted more like a son, dressed like a boy, talked like a boy… he knew I wasn't going to be a 'good wife'. So he tried to sell me off to your father like I was damaged goods. And then when that failed? He gave up on me. And do you want to know the stupidest part? It was all because he wanted a son."

Ranma blinked. "I thought… I mean, isn't that why you…?"

Ukyou looked down. "Don't get me wrong… I wanted to be that son for him. More than anything. Even before I met you. But… That wasn't enough for Dad. He made do with his tomboy daughter for a while, but… In his mind I couldn't be what he wanted me to be. I couldn't be his true heir. And it turns out he couldn't trade me in to get the heir he wanted, so…” she shrugged, "he gave up. Packed up one day and headed off to a monastery somewhere. Said he couldn't live with the shame of it."

"Ucchan… God, I'm sorry…" Ranma said softly.

"Don't be," Ukyou shook her head. "That's not the point. The point is Ranma… you can't be what your parents want you to be if that's not what you are. No matter how much you want to be."

Ranma looked at her. "But…” she trailed off, "but…” She clenched her fist, then relaxed it. "It's not right."

Ukyou's eyebrows shot up. "Seriously, Ranma?"

"No, not…!" Ranma said quickly. "I don't mean because… because he's a guy and…” She swallowed nervously. "I mean because… don't you think he deserves to be with a real girl? A-and not one who's already shared four ways?"

Ukyou frowned at her. "That's a stupid argument, Ranma. By that logic Akane shouldn't be with you because she deserves a real girl. Or me."

Ranma felt an odd lurch. Selfish… a little voice whispered in the back of her mind. It sounded oddly like her mother's voice. "Well… maybe you shouldn't," Ranma said heavily. "Sometimes…"
sometimes I don't get why you are. If I can't be what my parents want, how am I supposed to be what you want, huh?"

The shock was obvious on Ukyou's face, and Ranma felt a pang of guilt. "Ranma, that's not... We want you! Not... not..."

"Wasn't always like that, though," Ranma replied. "Maybe it still isn't, huh? Akane and Ryo want a girl, you want a trans, Shampoo wants a breeder, and Nabiki wants an action movie star. Maybe I ain't ever gonna be all of those things. Maybe I won't be any of 'em. What then, huh? What if one day the curse goes away? Or... or... it did something and I can't have kids? Or..."

"Ranma..." Ukyou stepped forward and took her by the shoulders. "We'll deal with any of that if and when it happens, okay? But... You can't live your life around trying to account for who you might be in the future. Just be who you are now... that's all we want from you."

There was a yelp from the other side of the room, and a fwoosh as flames leapt up from one of the ovens.

"Oh crap, I left Akane too long!" Ukyou said. "Uhhh... we'll talk more later, okay Ranma?" She released Ranma's shoulders and raced past her towards the fire as Akane started hosing down the flaming oven with a fire extinguisher.

Ranma watched. The fire was already dying down and seemed to be under control without her. The girls could take care of themselves perfectly well without her, of course.

"Yeah... okay, Ucchan." Ranma said softly to herself. "We'll talk later."

000

"Anything?" Hiroshi asked in a tired voice. He was slumped over on a table littered with file folders, index cards and discarded wrappers.

"Nothing," Yuka sighed, carefully putting the papers back in the file, and dropping it on top of a somewhat precarious stack. They had given up on carefully re-filing the dossiers sometime after noon, when the prospect of spending another uncomfortable night sleeping on the floor loomed.

"This is a mess," Daisuke said, leaning back from the microfiche reader and rubbing his eyes.
"Most of these files aren't sorted and are crammed so full of irrelevant crap you can't tell who's actually in the family!"

"Well, it's not like they use these files anymore," Yuka replied off-handedly. "I don't think they've even updated these files in ten years."

"Great. We've got nothing to report, and we can't even report that we've got nothing to report because there's no flippin' cell service this deep in the catacombs..." Hiroshi tossed his useless cell phone onto the table.

"We should take a break," Yuka said with a sigh. "What have we got left for food?"

"Well, I've got a few cups of instant ramen," Daisuke replied, digging through his pack.

"Oh?" Yuka asked. "Did you happen to bring a microwave or kettle to heat the water with?"

"Ummm..."
Kodachi slowly turned the envelope over in her hands. The wax seal was broken - she had read the contents thoroughly and returned them to the envelope. Now she was lounging in one of the soft chairs of the main study, regarding the letter in the flickering firelight. The paper was coarse and cheap, the envelope plain and unadorned, save her name. There was no perfume or gold embroidery. It was an attempt to ape the customs of the aristocracy by someone who utterly lacked any understanding of them.

"You have been staring at that envelope for over an hour, dear sister," Tatewaki said, walking in bearing a tray with a tea kettle and two cups. He set it down on the stand next to her and began pouring tea for both of them.

"There are servants for bringing us tea, dear brother," she said off-handedly, not shifting her gaze from the envelope.

"I find peaceful contemplation in making tea," Tatewaki replied.

"You steep it too long. I vastly prefer the tea Ling makes," Kodachi groused, though she accepted the cup and took a sip.

"Not attending school today, sister?" Tatewaki asked, not rising to take the bait.

"It would be… awkward," Kodachi said, turning the envelope over again.

"Are you perhaps finally willing to tell me what is in this mysterious envelope you have been worrying all day?" Tatewaki asked as he sat in the chair across from her with his own teacup.

Kodachi scowled. While her brother finally being on proper medication made him far less odious to deal with… and indeed almost pleasant at times… it had also made him that much harder to misdirect. She sighed. As the legal head of the Kuno family, I do suppose I would have to discuss this with him at some point. She flicked the letter over to him. "Here. Indulge your curiosity. It was delivered yesterday by my Darling Ranma's father, according to Sasuke."

He caught the letter, opened it and pulled out the letter inside. She watched the play of emotions across his face as he read; He might be much less prone to outbursts now but he was still very much the open book.

"I… suppose congratulations are in order," he said carefully, folding the letter once more.

"Presuming this is what you really want?"

Kodachi smiled. "If you mean being wed to my Darling Ranma? Yes, of course, don't be foolish," she scoffed. She took a deep breath. "However… the… circumstances of that marriage concern me."

"You mean the stories we have heard of Ranma Saotome's family, the treatment of his sister and his mother's apparent plans for your offspring," Tatewaki said, closing the envelope and handing it back.

Kodachi scowled and nearly snatched it from his fingers. "You needn't be so glib, brother dear. Yes, all of that concerns me." She regarded the envelope wistfully. "As much as I want a chance to finally be with my Darling Ranma, the idea of being beholden to that woman for it irks me. I would have my love choose me as his rightful bride of his own free will… or at least by a machination of my choosing. This… barbaric contract that she holds over his head offends my sensibilities!"

She paused, expecting the usual retort about her own 'flexible' morals, but Tatewaki merely nodded.

"What do you wish to do about it, then?" Tatewaki asked.

"I'm not certain," Kodachi said softly. "My first impulse is to accept, swoop in and spirit my Darling away, and leave the wretched woman pining for the grandchildren she will never see. But I worry dear Ranma would still feel bound by that ridiculous contract. And if I tip my hand that I'm aware of it, I worry about reprisals towards my dear Ran." Her eyes narrowed. "As much as I am loathe to admit it, I am… considering entreating Nabiki Tendo for her assistance."

Tatewaki's eyebrows rose. "Does she not have a claim on Ranma Saotome as well?"

"Yes, which is why I am only considering it at the moment," Kodachi growled. "She and the other harridans hounding my love are entirely too friendly with each other. The moment word of my victory slips to one, they will all know." She sighed sadly. "They will protest; perhaps mount a 'rescue'... and my moment of triumph will be ruined, just as every other moment with my Darling has been."

"Yet you still consider it?" Tatewaki asked, curious.

"What good is my victory if it's in name only? If he remains a slave to another, even his own mother?" She crushed the envelope in her hand. "I will not make such a Faustian bargain! My Darling Ranma will be mine… solely mine… or not at all! But either way he will not belong to that woman one moment longer than necessary!"

"I see," Tatewaki smiled. "It is good to see the fire in your eyes, sister." He stood and walked over, surprising her with a kiss to her forehead. "Whatever you decide, I will support you. Do what you must."

Kodachi blinked. She hadn't expected Tatewaki to oppose her of course, but neither had she expected him to offer support. Normally he would want to be left out of whatever plans she had for Ranma. "And what price your support, brother? Or do you feel this will endear you to your beloved Akane Tendo? Or that perhaps Ran would see merit in you for facilitating her brother's happiness?"

Tatewaki winced visibly and she felt the odd, rare pang of guilt.

He gave her a weak smile. "Call it… the first step of my penance. There was once a time where you did not have cause to believe me so… mercenary. Perhaps I can make some small progress toward earning that sort of trust once more. At the very least, I can make amends in some way for the behaviour that caused me to lose it in the first place."

Kodachi considered. Part of her wanted to deride him for acting and sounding so weak but… sincere support was something she sorely needed now. Do I dare trust your newfound sanity this far, brother?

"I… will let you know when I've decided then," she said finally.

000

The walk to the hospital after school did little to ease Ryouga's apprehension. What if this doesn't work? he thought, his mind whirling through dark fantasies of doom and despair. What if this makes it worse? What if… if it SPREADS? Doc Hirano said my ki was keeping that from happening, but if we suppress my ki, then what?

He felt a nudge at his side. He looked down to his right and saw that Ranma was walking next to him, hands jammed into her pockets. She had just nudged him with her elbow.

"You're projecting," Ranma muttered, eyes on the pavement ahead of her. "I can feel it, like, five feet away from you."

"Sorry…” Ryouga replied, unconsciously mimicking her as he jammed his own hands in his pockets. "I'm just… nervous."

"Oh yeah? About what?” Ranma asked.

Ryouga chuckled softly. "Stupid stuff. Just… worried about what happens if this doesn't work. Curses don't go away easily. We've both got experience with that."

"Yeah…” Ranma replied. "Uhh... hey, Ryo… You don't... I mean... about the Jusenkyo curses… Do you think they'll last?" She glanced up at him.

Ryouga blinked. "What do you mean?"

"I mean… we've only had them a couple of years, right?" Ranma said. "The springs are a flooded mess and we haven't messed with any magic for a while. I was just thinking… the whole dragon whisker thing - that wore off after a while. Do you think the same thing might happen with the Jusenkyo curses?"

Ryouga frowned. "Y'know… I never even really considered that. But… I don't think it's on the same level.” He shrugged. "Your dragon whisker only wore off because the whisker expired, right? And doesn't that thing have a shelf life of something like 4,000 years?"

Ranma's eyes widened. "Oh yeah, I forgot that part…"

"And that's for a stupid hair restorative," Ryouga continued. "Jusenkyo… well, that's a whole other level, right? I mean, look at my directional curse. It's been in my family for something like 500 years and it's as strong as ever."

"You mean… we might pass our curses onto our kids?” Ranma suddenly looked nervous. She rubbed her chin. "No… no, the Musk used Jusenkyo to turn animals into women to become their wives."

"And then they locked them with the ladle. Herb seemed to be pretty convinced it was lifelong." Ryouga shrugged. "Like I said, curses don't go easy. Something as powerful as Jusenkyo probably can't be cured by anything."

Ranma sighed and seemed to relax. "That's a relief."

Ryouga raised an eyebrow. He opened his mouth, then shut it, deciding that was a rabbit hole he didn't want to go down.

"I'm surprised you don't have a stronger opinion, Ryo," Nabiki said, suddenly appearing to his left and looping her arm through his. "Don't you have a preference?"

"Urk." Ryouga shot her a look of panicked betrayal, then glanced at Ranma, who was giving him an apprehensive look.
He closed his eyes and forced his panic down. He could sense Nabiki through the contact of her arm and got the sense that she wasn't trying to sabotage him... but give that 'push' she had been talking about. Just be honest, Ryouga.

"I... uhh..." He rubbed the back of his head. "L-look... Ranma is Ranma. She shouldn't have to pick just one if she doesn't want to."

"Yes, but this isn't about Ranma picking one, this is about which form you prefer." Nabiki nudged him in the ribs with her elbow. She frowned and nodded towards Ranma.

She wants me to say I like her as a girl? Ryouga glanced at Nabiki, then back at Ranma. I mean... I DO, but... but that's not all of it... Arrgh, how do I say this right?

"Well?" Ranma prodded. "C'mon, Ryo... this is getting weird. Just say it, okay?" She scuffed her shoe on the ground. "I mean... it's not really a big deal, is it?"

"There, see? Was that so..." Nabiki said, but Ryouga held up his hand.

"I'm not finished," he said. "That's hard for me to say because I like Ranma. Not just girl-Ranma. Ranma the person. I prefer her as a girl because she's cute, but... Her being cute isn't why I like Ranma. It's just... a bonus." He relaxed. "There. Happy?"

He doubled over as a fist slammed into his midsection, driving the air out of his lungs.

"Pervert," Ranma muttered, cracking her knuckles as she walked away.

Ryouga groaned and sank to his knees. "What... was I supposed to say?" he wheezed.

Nabiki crouched next to him, patting his shoulder sympathetically. "No, no, that was beyond perfect, Ryouga. I'm kind of impressed. I don't think I could have worded it better myself!"

Ryouga turned his head to glare at her, his arms still cradling his wounded midsection. "Yeah, thanks a bunch, Nabiki. Remind me why I trusted you to help me with this?"

Nabiki winked and whispered. "Because I'm a fantastic kisser? And also... because our little redhead just stalked out of here with a blush and struggling to hide a grin that might just crack her face."

"That was the good outcome?" Ryouga gasped as Nabiki helped him to his feet.

"She didn't even go for the face. Trust me, she ate that up. Most of what Ranma has learned about being a girl has come from Akane, Ukyou and Shampoo. 'Tsundere' barely covers it." Nabiki slipped his arm across her shoulders to help steady him. "Now come on and see if you can muster some more of that charm. The blood loss will be worth it."

"I'm never going to survive this... " he moaned.

000

Ranma had just about recovered her composure by the time they stepped through the doors of the hospital. Her hand still hurt from the punch. Stupid Ryouga... stupid concrete gut... stupid...
STUPID! Why did he hafta say all that weird stuff, huh?

Because you told him it was okay.

Shut UP! Shutupshutupshutup! She thwacked the side of her temple with the heel of her hand to knock the voice loose.

He said he likes you.

That's not what he meant! Ranma howled mentally at the infuriating voice. Why did it sound so much like her? He likes… her like the girl in the mirror! He likes the girl I look like!

That's not what he said.

"Shut up!" Ranma barked out loud.

"Ranma?" Shampoo asked, putting a hand on her shoulder. "Shampoo not say anything…"

"What? No, not you, Shampoo. It's just… I… Ever get a song stuck in your head and it won't go away? Even though you really don't want to hear it?" Ranma replied hastily. "It's like that."

"Aiya! Shampoo have same problem! Is ad for Sapporo Ichiban too?" Shampoo asked.

Ranma frowned. "No… but now that's stuck up there too. Thanks."

"Shampoo! I just got rid of that stupid jingle!" Akane whined. "Now my head is full of noodle-selling cowboys!" Her stomach growled. "And I'm hungry!"

"Actually, why don't we take care of that?" Nabiki said, clapping her hands. She glanced at Ukyou and gave her a meaningful nod when the others weren't looking.

"Uhhh… yeah… we should… uhh… check out the vending machines?" Ukyou said, giving Nabiki a quizzical look.

"Actually, I was thinking more the cafeteria," Nabiki replied. "I heard they do a great… great…" she struggled, then sighed, "Okay, fine, it's hospital food, so it'll be awful. But I'm hungry and I'm buying, so let's go."

Ranma perked up. "You're buying, Nabiki? Have I told you lately how much I love you?"

"Not you," Nabiki said, pointing sternly at Ranma. Then she pointed at Ryouga. "And not you, either! You need to stay put, sign us in and wait for Doctor Hirano."

"What?! But… but why?" Ranma's eyes misted up with tears that weren't entirely fake.

"We'll… bring you back something, Ranchan. I promise," Ukyou said. She helped Nabiki herd Shampoo and Akane down the hall.

Ryouga shook his head and sighed. "Here, I've got a few yen. Maybe you can get something from the vending machine to tide you over." He dug into his pocket and produced the few coins he had been holding onto and handed them over reluctantly.

Ranma beamed at him in a remarkably decent impression of Akane's 1000 Megawatt smile. "Thank you, Ryo!" She clutched the coins to her chest and then scampered off to the vending machines by the door.
"Yeah… I'll just… do the paperwork…" Ryouga glanced at the front desk and sighed.

Ranma grinned as she stared through the glass of the vending machine, trying to decide what to pick. "Hmmm… something sweet… hmm, chocolate maybe?" She blinked. "Oooh, there's Pocky! I can…" she trailed off as she suddenly remembered the 'game' that was sometimes played between a boy and girl with Pocky, "Aheh… no, maybe not. Something else, then… Definitely something else… Chocolate… chocolate…"

She glanced up towards the reception desk, considering asking Ryouga to come help her decide. He was still over by the desk, but the receptionist…

It wasn't the usual bitter, middle-aged woman. The nurse manning the station was young, attractive and leaning over the desk far too close to Ryouga, ostensibly to help him fill in the forms. She was smiling far more than Ranma liked, as well.

And then he smiled back.

It was one of his clueless, goofy smiles, too. The one that told her that he was well aware of just how pretty the nurse was.

Ranma didn't take her eyes off them as she stabbed the buttons on the control panel, then snatched up the Pocky that dropped out. That's MINE!

She stalked over to the desk. As she did she calmed her outer demeanor, though she was still seething inside.

"I can't believe you don't remember me!" The nurse poked Ryouga's shoulder playfully. "I was working your floor both times you were brought in!"

"Yeah… aheh… well… bad memory?" Ryouga said nervously. He looked like he was trying to focus on the form. "Are… you sure you need my phone number on this?"

"We need a contact number, naughty boy," she said with a wink. "For emergency use only, of course. Unless you want to write it out a second time on the notepad for me."

Ryouga swallowed.

"Ryo! Darling!" Ranma latched onto Ryouga's arm, trilling in her cutestiest cutesy voice. "Where did you run off to?"

"Gah!" Ryouga started badly. He relaxed slightly when he saw that it was Ranma, but then tensed up again as he noticed the look in her eyes. "Uhhh… hi, Ranma! I was just… y'know… Forms… paperwork…"

"Oh! You're the little redhead who came in with Mr. Hibiki the second time," the nurse said. "I'm Reiko. Are you Mr. Hibiki's little sister?"

Ranma's right eye twitched. She hugged Ryoga's arm a little tighter and puffed out her chest. "I'm his fiancee. And I'm pretty sure I've got a few inches on you, sweetheart."

Reiko raised an eyebrow. She smirked and folded her arms, leaning across the desk on them. "Really? Hard to tell in that schoolgirl outfit. I can check, though. I'm pretty sure we got your measurements when we were cleaning you up. I couldn't help but notice that poor Mr. Hibiki took the worst of whatever happened. How very gallant of him! I imagine a little thing like you would have been torn to shreds."
"I'll tear SOMETHING to shreds..." Ranma growled under her breath. She decided to change her approach, fishing out the Pocky and shearing the top off the box in one quick motion. "Look, Ryo dear... I got Pocky!" She fished out one of the chocolate coated cookie sticks and put the very tip in her teeth, holding it with light pressure as she stood on her tiptoes, offering the other end to him. "Want one?"

Ryouga's eyes widened with panic. "Y'know I've been trying to cut back too many sweets don't want to get fat Ranma what the Hell is wrong with you!?"

He hissed the last part.

Some part of Ranma's brain prickled, trying to alert her that maybe this wasn't the best way to approach things, but she wasn't listening. Instead she twitched the Pocky stick in her teeth and gave him her best seductive look. "C'mon P-chan... C'mon c'mon c'mooooon!"

Reiko blinked, then straightened and sat back in her chair giggling. "Oh my God, the Pocky Game?! You two are just too precious!"

Ranma's attention immediately swivelled back to the nurse, who was lounging back in the chair and crossing her long legs. Ranma had a moment of hesitation as she realized that the nurse's miniskirt was quite short. She snapped up the Pocky stick in one bite. "Hey...! I don't see you doing any better!"

Reiko smirked. She sat up, fished a pen from her breast pocket, pulled out a business card and wrote something on the back. She then held it out to Ranma. "Here. You two seem like a lot of fun. You've got some fire to you and it's been forever since I've found a nice couple to play with."

Ranma blinked and accepted the card. On the back was a phone number.

"Just don't tell my boss, okay? He gets uptight about me propositioning patients." She stretched, stood up and picked up the clipboard with the half-complete paperwork on it. "Don't worry about the paperwork, sweetie. I've got all your info from the last two times you were here. I do hope the next time I see the two of you things are a little less formal though." She winked and walked around the desk, her heels clicking as she strode down the hall.

Ryouga and Ranma both blinked and watched her go.

"What just happened?" Ryouga asked.

Ranma squinted at the phone number on the card, confused, until something clicked and her eyes widened. "Don't tell Nabiki."

"Don't tell Nabiki what?" Ryouga asked. "What did she give you, anyway?"

"Don't tell Nabiki!" Ranma repeated. She shoved the open box of Pocky into his hands. "J-just... shut up and have some Pocky!"

"I... I don't... What?" Ryouga said uncertainly.

Ranma swiped a handful of the Pocky from the box and crammed them into his mouth, then snatched the half empty box back. "Oh shut up, let's just go sit."

"Mmrrf mmrr mmrr mmm mff," Ryouga replied and followed her obediently. He sat down heavily on one of the plastic chairs and started chewing.

"Hmpf... You should know better than to go all dopey just because a pretty girl smiles at you."
Don't you have enough pretty girls around you these days?" Ranma pulled out a Pocky stick and bit it angrily.

"I wasn't... Look, you told me to go fill out the paperwork! She was the receptionist! What was I supposed to tell her?" Ryouga replied as he swallowed his mouthful of cookie stick.

"How about that you're married!?" Ranma shot back.

Ryouga coughed, choking on a remnant of Pocky. Her thumped his chest. "What?"

"I mean... Technically," Ranma folded her arms and huffed. "Until we get that sorted out, it's... it's just not right for you to... to... to flirt with any pretty girl you see!"

Ryouga was silent for a moment. Then a slow smile spread across his face. He leaned forward, resting his elbows on his knees. "You're jealous."

"What?" Ranma squeaked. "Why would I be jealous of you?! Get me a little hot water and that Nurse wouldn't even look twice at you!"

"Not what I meant," Ryouga replied. "You're jealous of her."

Ranma flushed red, another indignant squeak escaping. "I am not, you pig-headed, pig-for-brains... *pig!""

"Your insults get repetitive when you're lying," Ryouga replied with confidence. "How many times did you call Akane 'Uncute' because you couldn't think of anything better, huh?"

"I... you... you!" Ranma grit her teeth, staring daggers at him.

"Look, you can't just pull out the 'we're married' card when it suits you!" Ryouga said. "I'm probably doing your fiancées a favor on this. You're either married or you're not. Married girls don't flirt with soda jerks for free ice cream, they don't vamp the guys at the beach for free treats and they don't stick their spouses with the jobs they don't wanna do. So pick." He sat up and crossed his arms. "You can be jealous, or you can be single."

"You can't be serious!" Ranma huffed.

"I totally am!" Ryouga shot back, closing his eyes and raising his chin. "Gimme the card, or give me a Pocky."

"Why do you want the card?!" Ranma yelped. "Don't tell me you're actually...?!"

Ryouga scowled. "No, of course not! That'd be... Look, I want it because it's none of your damn business! Weren't you talking about how I needed to find a girlfriend?"

"Then find a girlfriend, not a hookup, you sleaze!" Ranma gripped the card tighter.

Ryouga gave her an exasperated look. "I'm not... It's the principal of the thing! Besides... Reiko seems like a nice girl..."

"Ryouga!"

He shrugged and leaned back, looking away as he stretched his arms across the chairs. "You're jealous, then."

I am not!
"I'm sick of being jerked around, Ranma," Ryuga shot back indignantly. "Card or Pocky. Pick one."

Ranma glared at him, then thrust the box in his direction.

"Uh uh," Ryuga shook his head. "With your mouth."

Ranma froze. "You can't be serious."

"You were gonna do it in front of Reiko, weren't you?" He locked eyes with her, challenging her. Finally, he broke the stare, rolled his eyes and sat back. "Look, this is stupid, Ranma. You get all jealous and competitive and you do stuff like this and it's frustrating because you don't really mean any of it, and you won't admit you're doing it! You can't keep holding onto me if you don't actually want me, so… just gimme the card. I'll tear it up if you want, I just want you to let go of this stupid…" He grunted as something dropped into his lap.

He blinked and looked down to see Ranma had sat herself across his legs. Her blue eyes were flashing with defiance and she had a slightly cracked Pocky clenched between her teeth.

"What are you doing?" Ryuga squeaked.

"I thought you wanted Pocky?" Ranma said. She was blushing and, though she was scowling, she was also shaking slightly. "Here it is. Take it already."

Ryuga's looked around wildly, but no one seemed to be taking notice of what was going on. "You can't be serious!" he hissed.

Ranma scowled. "That's my line!" She swallowed. Her heart was thudding in her chest and she did not feel any of the defiant front she was putting up.

Ryuga just stared at her a moment. Then, slowly, he reached out and took her by the shoulders. For a moment, she was afraid he was actually going to do it, but instead he seemed to just be studying her.

"I… Look, I'm sorry," he said, bowing his head. "I'm… it's complicated and I've got no right to push like that. I'm not even sure what I hoping for."

Ranma slowly reached up and took the Pocky from her mouth. "You… wanted the card, then?"

"No!" Ryuga said, with more vehemence than strictly necessary. "I…" He sighed in frustration. "I guess… I'm just sick of not knowing where I stand with you. Or where I could stand. I don't know what I am to you anymore."

"I… you're…" Ranma stammered. She frowned. It was an easy question. It should be an easy question! It was obvious to her, right? Nothing had changed! He was… he was… "You're… You're Ryuga."

Ryuga gave her a sad look and sighed heavily. "You're the only one who knows what that means, Ranma. If you even do?"

"W-well… what do you even want to be to me, huh?" Ranma shot back. "You keep acting like you're on the edge of telling me something… just tell me!"

"It's not that simple!" Ryuga replied tightly.
"Well it's not that simple for me, either!" Ranma retorted.

"I'm… sorry, am I interrupting something?"

"AAAAHHHHH!" Ranma and Ryouga yelped in unison. Ranma tumbled over backwards off of Ryouga's lap, landing awkwardly on her neck on the floor as Ryouga tried to scramble up. Ryouga stumbled, shoes slipping on the freshly waxed floor, then landed heavily back in his seat.

Doctor Hirano gave them both a quizzical look. "I… can come back if you both need a few minutes?"

"No, we're fine!" Ryouga said quickly.

"Everything is fine!" Ranma scrambled to her feet, dusting herself off.

"We're fine here," Ryouga added.

"How are you?" Ranma finished, plastering a big smile across her face.

Doctor Hirano raised an eyebrow. "I… am ready for you and your friends now. If you could gather them we can begin the procedure."

"Before we begin, I wish to state that I am still rather… hesitant to proceed with this whole scenario," Dr. Hirano said as he paced before the group. "Normally I wouldn't even dream of proceeding so quickly and recklessly, but my colleague…" he shot an annoyed look at Dr. Tofu, who looked away awkwardly, "appears to have elected to override my concerns and proceed anyway." He looked at the group of them appraisingly. "And you claim you are now all connected through this Link, yes?"

Ranma nodded, taking the lead. "Yeah. We think that if we get enough of us working together, we can flush that curse right outta Ryo's system."

Dr. Hirano sighed heavily, took off his glasses and started methodically polishing the lenses. "You do realize there is absolutely no basis in observed fact to support that hypothesis, yes? That there is no precedent, either in medical science or the extensive homeopathic documentation that Dr. Tofu has provided?"

"I mean… well, there's gotta be a first time, right Doc?" Ranma said with a grin.

Dr. Hirano put his glasses back on and gave Ranma such a stern glare that she found herself withering under it. "Yes. A first! A single first, under controlled conditions where the factors are known and understood! We have barely progressed to the stage of proving that all of this… this level of physics actually even exists! This is all firsts, and to proceed under these conditions is incredibly dangerous and irresponsible!" His glare shifted to Dr. Tofu, who also wilted visibly under it. "Especially for someone who has ostensibly sworn to uphold the Hippocratic Oath!"

"Doctor, we understand you're uncomfortable with this, but we're short of time," Nabiki said. "We have no idea how long Ryouga's mother has without a Link of her own. We're willing to take some risks to find a solution for her before it's too late."

"Some risks, perhaps," Dr. Hirano replied. "However, I find very little in this that is not risk!"

"If healer no help, we go to Great Grandmother, find other way!" Shampoo said, stepping up behind Nabiki and putting a supportive hand on her shoulder.

Dr. Hirano clenched his fists and took a deep breath, closing his eyes. He visibly forced himself to relax. "And it is the assurances of my colleague that you will proceed anyway, with or without proper medical supervision, that is the sole reason I am electing to participate in this… this ritual," he said tightly. "However, I will not trade six lives for one! Or a dozen, or a hundred! If, at any point, I deem that any of you are in danger, I will terminate this experiment and there will not be another. Is that perfectly clear?"

Ryouga swallowed. "Y-yeah, Doc, we got it."

"I am not finished," he replied sternly. "And… and regardless of the outcome, the six of you are going to agree to participate in a proper medical study of this phenomenon! One that is conducted with proper scientific rigors, controls, and precautions, and this… connection you have created between yourselves is not to be replicated again until we have a much better understanding of the process behind it, as well as the long-term effects!"

"We understand," Ukyou said, stepping forward slightly.

"Do you?" Dr. Hirano asked, folding his arms. "This is not a two week medical trial I am referring to here. I am asking for a commitment for a lifelong case study of this effect. One that I intend to publish the results of so that all of this… this voodoo might one day be properly understood and harnessed for the betterment of mankind and medical science."

Ranma blanched. She suddenly had visions of being locked in a glass tube full of liquid while men in white lab coats poked at her and took notes. "L-like… like in a lab? With… dissections an' stuff?"

Dr. Hirano frowned then scowled at Dr. Tofu again. "Ono, you and I are going to have a long chat about setting proper patient expectations!" He returned his gaze to Ranma. "No, absolutely not, Ms. Ranma. This is not some afternoon science fiction drama on television. A case study would mean you and your friends would commit to making regular contact with myself and whatever research team becomes involved in studying this effect, and agree to periodic medical examinations, interviews and consultations. You would continue with your regular lives - it would simply be something you would do on a yearly basis, like a more in-depth version of a full physical exam. It requires honesty and openness on your part to ensure the validity of the data, and the understanding that that data will inevitably become public information once it is scrubbed of details which might directly identify you. But otherwise it is intended to be as unobtrusive as possible."

Ranma felt a bit better at that, but still somewhat apprehensive. After all, how many people had told her something would be 'no big deal' only for it to end up being a nightmare? Granted, that was mostly her father… "I'll… uh… Nabiki?" She glanced towards Nabiki uncertainly. Nabiki will know if this is a safe deal to take.

"You'll provide us with proper agreements covering our expected commitments to this?" Nabiki asked, raising an eyebrow.

Dr. Hirano waved his hand. "Yes, yes, we can negotiate the details later. I'm not interested in interrupting your lives, merely in getting enough solid, publishable data to move this forward. I just want an agreement in principle. Ono tells me you are all martial artists and concerned with honor. I simply want a commitment that you will continue to work with me once your own needs are met."

"Oh!" Ranma said. "Uh, sure, of course. You have our word of honor, Doc," Ranma said.
Dr. Hirano regarded them for a moment, searching each of their faces, then finally nodded. "Very well. I hope that this all bears fruit before I am called to task for misuse of hospital equipment. If you will follow me…"

The next few hours were spent with everyone taking a turn in the MRI to get a baseline scan, including fresh baselines for Ranma and Ryouga. Shampoo in particular was nervous about the device, though seeing the others being brave reassured her.

"Is strange… know Man's World have many strange devices, but Shampoo not even begin to understand this one," Shampoo said, running her hand along the humming toroid as Ryouga was prepared for the final test. "Never imagine need to see inside of own head."

"It is vastly more than that," Dr. Hirano sniffed. "But… such is progress. Technology evolves to meet our needs and, as our understanding expands, new needs are identified. This is to examine, understand and treat diseases that were mysterious and tragic for our ancestors. What they might have thought a single ailment we know now to be a dozen different maladies or defects."

"That is difference from village healing," Shampoo said softly. "Healers know many things. Many potions and remedies. Know what works. But Man's World… seek to know why it works, yes?"

Dr. Hirano smiled, the first smile he had sported since the day began. "Yes, very much so. That is an excellent way to look at it. I have found many from more traditional communities tend to be scornful of our approach to medicine. It's refreshing to find an open mind on the subject."

Shampoo blushed lightly and shook her head. "Is… is just interesting. See much like this when working as Dr. Tofu's assistant."

"She was spending every spare moment reading through my medical journals," Dr. Tofu added. "She's actually got quite good instincts."

"'Instincts' are barely a fraction of this discipline, Ono," Dr. Hirano retorted. "But… If you have an interest in it, I would be happy to discuss the more advanced fields of medicine when we have time. An interest in medical science is always a pleasure to encourage. Japan needs all the doctors it can get these days!"

"Oh! S-shampoo not… I mean, only know a little healing," Shampoo said, stammering uncharacteristically.

Ranma sidled up to her and poked her arm while Nabiki flanked her on the other side. As soon as Dr. Hirano moved on to other things, they each pinched one of her cheeks.

"Is that a blush?" Ranma asked.

"I do think our little Shampoo has a twinkle in her eye," Nabiki continued. "Is that the blossoming of a new profession I see?"

Shampoo folded her arms and sniffed. "Shwampoo jwust cwurious!" she huffed, somewhat distorted by the tugging on her cheeks.

"Too bad. I bet you'd be hot in a nurse's outfit," Nabiki said, waggling her eyebrows.

Shampoo pulled free and raised her chin indignantly. "Hmpf! Shampoo be doctor. Pintou and Airen wear nurse outfits!"
A slow, seductive smile spread across Nabiki's face. "Sound like a pretty fun Saturday night to me."

Ranma swallowed, realizing that somewhere, the conversation had veered away from medicine dramatically.

"All right, I believe we are ready to begin," Dr. Tofu said as he applied the last of the sensors to Ryoga. Ryoga was laid out on the table for the MRI and looking nervous.

The rest of the group gathered around, sitting down in five plastic chairs that had been arranged around the MRI machine. Ranma took up position on Ryoga's left side. She could see that he looked nervous, so she automatically took his hand.

"You okay, Ryo?" Nabiki asked, looking concerned.

"Yeah, yeah… we haven't done anything yet… I'm fine," Ryoga lied badly. Ranma could already feel his apprehension through the Link.

"Because of Ryoga's exceptional levels of Ki, I'm afraid an oral dose of the herbal extract would not suffice," Dr. Tofu said, holding up a needle and an IV bag. "With Dr. Hirano's help, I've refined the active ingredient in the pill and created an intravenous form. With this we'll be able to precisely control the dosage and bring Ryoga's Ki levels down in a controlled manner without any of the 'crashes' the rest of you experienced."

"I still feel that assessment is overly optimistic," Dr. Hirano snorted. "We are still guessing at the dosages. What we will be able to do is monitor and adjust accordingly, as well as make sure that Mr. Hibiki's vitals remain stable. I am still not entirely happy with the drop in body temperature that accompanies the use of this compound."

"I am quite familiar with the effects, Dr. Hirano," Dr. Tofu said, slightly testily. "I am also aware of how uncomfortable you are with it. You needn't remind me at every opportunity."

"You do realize this drug is approved as a food supplement, don't you Ono?" Dr. Hirano replied, sticking his head out of the MRI booth. "I could lose my medical license just helping you refine the stuff into an injectable, much less participating."

"Well then," Dr. Tofu swabbed down Ryoga's arm with alcohol. "We must hope Ryoga decides to be cooperative and not die, hadn't we?"

Ryouga whimpered.

"Great bedside manner, Doc," Ukyou muttered.

Dr. Tofu inserted the needle then set up the IV bag and the infusion pump that would regulate the flow. "All right, if you girls would all gather around and make contact with Ryoga…"

Ranma leaned a little closer and squeezed his hand. She could feel the cold spikes of fear coming from him.

"Ranma," Ryoga whispered softly. "Promise me… if anything feels off, let go, okay?"

"Ryouga, I'm pretty sure all of this is going to feel off," Ranma whispered back. She felt Akane scoot her chair closer and put her hand over Ranma's.

"That's right, Ryoga. We're not going anywhere, no matter what!" Akane said, squeezing gently.
"No, listen to me!" Ryouga hissed. Ranma could feel his ki starting to ebb as the drug seeped into his system. "You have to let go if anything goes wrong. Even if it doesn't seem like a big deal! Dr. Hirano is right, I'm not trading the five of you for Mom. I can't risk this thing jumping into one of you."

"You think it might be infectious?" Nabiki asked.

"I've got a gut feeling," Ryouga replied. "It's been getting worse the stronger the Link gets. Like it's… struggling."

"Struggling? As in… alive?" Ukyou asked nervously.

"Then we kill," Shampoo replied. "Shagua not worry. We protect you this time."

"That's not…!" Ryouga protested, trying to sit up. Ranma stopped him with a hand on his chest.

"Ryo, what's the worst that happens if we get infected?" Ranma asked.

"You get lost!" Ryouga replied. "It'll start slow… you'll just take a wrong turn now and then… then you find it harder to get to places you're trying to go… then it gets hard to follow a straight line… You don't want this, Ranma!"

"But we're still Linked, right?" Ranma pressed.

"I… y-yeah…" Ryouga said, unsure.

"Then we'll always be able to find each other, won't we?" Ranma smiled. "And heck… getting good and lost might just solve some of my other problems… or at least put 'em off a while. Generations of Hibikis have dealt with this, right? If it comes to that, we'll manage."

Ryouga relaxed and lay back down, but Ranma could still see the fear in his eyes. She squeezed his hand, staying close. I've never seen him honestly SCARED like this before, she thought.

She could feel the drain now as Ryouga's ki levels dropped and the Link tried to equalize between them. She felt him shiver and she rubbed his hand with her free one.

"Mr. Hibiki, how are you feeling?" Dr. Hirano asked through the small intercom built into the MRI torus.

"Tired," Ryouga said.

"That's normal. Try and stay awake as best you can, though with the dosage you are receiving it's understandable if you can't stay awake. However, your friends will need to ensure contact is kept regardless."

"Nnh…" Nabiki groaned softly. "This is… a lot more of a pull than with Akane…"

"Shagua have much ki," Shampoo replied. "Very deep reservoir to fill."

"Is he going to be okay doing this?" Akane leaned in next to Ranma, looking concerned.

"Ryo?" Ranma said. She could see Ryouga struggling to keep his eyes open. "Ryo, stay awake…"

"I'm starting to feel woozy myself, actually…" Ukyou said, leaning against Ryouga's cot. "Woof, this takes a lot… out…" she trailed off int mumbling as her head nodded.
Ranma could feel it too. It was almost like when Ms. Hinako drained her, but slower. She could feel Ryouta's hand slacken in hers and tighten her own grip, though her hand felt like it was responding only reluctantly.

"I can see the mass of corrupted ki now," Dr. Tofu said from the booth. "Another moment and it should be fully exposed to erosion. You'll have to…"

The rest of his words became indistinct and distant-sounding. Ranma saw Nabiki slump over against Ryouta on the far side. Shampoo was crumpling as well. Her own head felt too heavy to hold up. Everything sounded like she was underwater. Something was wrong. She tried to muster the energy to panic, but she couldn't. She just wanted to lie down and sleep.

"L-let… go…" Ryouta managed to croak. He was starting to twitch now.

Ranma felt his hand start to slip from hers, and that was enough to snap her awake, just a little and just for a moment. She tightened her grasp, her vision focusing on him, even though she still felt like something was dragging her down.

"No," she stated simply.

Then everything went black.

000

It was raining.

Ranma remembered this rain. It had been the kind that had a bite to it, like little needles stabbing through your clothes. She had always hated rain for many obvious reasons; It always seemed to symbolize losing her right to choose. This might be where that notion had come from.

The empty lot was just like she remembered, the pile of lumber off to the side, the retaining wall with the loose bricks, and the bare patch where their tent had stood for nearly a year, until just the day before. It could easily be a snapshot of her last look back as she and her father left. Except for the youth kneeling on the ground in the middle of the lot, slumped and motionless.

"Where are we?" a voice to her right asked.

Ranma glanced over to see Nabiki and Akane on her right. They looked younger than normal. Akane's hair was back to being long, though not as long as it had been when they had first met, and her school uniform was different. Nabiki was wearing overalls, and her face showed that she still had a bit of her babyfat.

Ranma glanced down at herself. She was wearing her old middle school uniform. It was a bit tight in the chest (But then it always had been) and there were some dark stains on the shoulders. She brushed at it, realizing it was black dye. She remembered that, too. Pops had made her throw the outfit away after that.

"Ranchan, what is this?" Ukyou asked. She was wearing a middle school uniform too, her hair tied back and her poise and demeanor more definitively masculine, as it must have been when she was in middle school.

Shampoo was just to Ukyou's left, wearing traditional Joketsuzoku clothing and staring at her hands as the water ran down them. "How…?"

"This is a dream," Ranma said. "Or… or a memory? It's just like the day Pops and I set off for
"Is that why I look fifteen again?" Nabiki asked, scowling. "This wasn't a good age for me, y'know…"

"This… before curse then," Shampoo said, looking up to the sky and closing her eyes. "Feels so real… Shampoo almost forgot what rain like without fur."

"Wait, if this is before the curse… then why are you a girl, Ranchan?" Ukyou asked, peering at Ranma. "And what is that black stuff in your hair?"

"I'm probably a girl because I'm one in real life right now," Ranma said, though something seemed off about that explanation. "And Pops used to make me put dye in my hair when I was younger."

"What?" Akane asked, frowning. "Why?"

"I…" Ranma trailed off. She realized she wasn't sure. It was just a thing she had always done. "He didn't like the color, I guess? It must have darkened up enough to make him happy after we left for China, because he stopped making me do it."

"Is that Ryouga?" Nabiki asked softly, taking a step towards the kneeling figure.

Ranma followed suit, "Yeah… I guess this is him when he finally managed to get here the day after Pops and I left," She started walking faster. "Ryo? Ryouga? Hey, are you okay?"

"As she got closer, she realized that he wasn't entirely there. He was translucent, though the rain was deflecting off him as though he were solid. There was a deep red glow, too, coming from his torso, about where his heart would be."

"D-don't… come any closer," he said weakly, his eyes shifting towards them though he didn't move otherwise. "G-get out… you have to… acckght!" He suddenly doubled over, clutching his midsection as the glow brightened.

"Ryouga!" Ranma ran closer, but something held her back, some force that made it harder to press forward the closer she got to him. Her feet skidded on the slick ashphalt.

Black smoke was billowing forth from Ryouga's mouth, nose and eyes as he gagged and choked. It didn't dissipate or expand into a cloud, but remained coherent, swirling around Ryouga like a serpent before extending to a spot a few feet away from him and gathering, coalescing into a humanoid shape. It solidified, taking the form of Ryouga at his current age and wearing his usual training pants and yellow sleeveless shirt.

The force holding her back disappeared suddenly, causing Ranma to stumble. She recovered and made it the few remaining feet to Ryouga's side, kneeling and helping him sit up as he coughed and retched.

"Well now, that's better!" the image of older Ryouga said, stretching and working his shoulders. "You have no idea how cramped it was in there!"

Ranma's eyes narrowed. It looked like Ryouga, but the stance… the way he moved… it was nothing like Ryouga. "Who are you?"

The doppelgänger smiled. "Why, my dear Ran… I'm Ryouga." His voice was slick and smooth, full of confidence and contempt. He smiled and the expression was something that didn't belong on Ryouga's face.
"Obviously not," Nabiki replied, standing next to Ranma and folding her arms. "You're the curse, aren't you?"

Ryouga's doppelgänger chuckled and shrugged, still smiling in a way that gave Ranma an almost uncontrollable urge to punch him in the face. "Ah, how cruel! Reduced to a mere affliction. That's very depersonalizing, you know." He held out his arms and frowned. "Hmmm… no, no… tch. The boy has no fashion sense, does he? And in this world that is so full of so many better options!" He snapped his fingers and suddenly he was wearing a tailored black 3 piece suit with a black shirt. He straightened the yellow and black checkered tie and cleared his throat. "Much better. Saw this in a store window he passed… oh, maybe a year ago? In Australia I think. European brand, though. I think maybe Europe is where I'll go first…"

"Go? Where exactly do you think you're going, sugar?" Ukyou asked, stepping forward. She reached back for her battle spatula, but realized she didn't have it.

The doppelgänger raised an eyebrow. "Ah, yes, I suppose it's a bit optimistic to hope you had figured that out at this point. Here, allow me." He snapped his fingers again and Ranma felt a lurch. Suddenly, she was fully grown once more, in her blue Chinese shirt and training pants. Ryouga had changed as well, ironically wearing the outfit the curse had just been wearing. Ukyou was back in her Okonomiyaki chef's outfit, complete with bandolier and battle spatula. Shampoo was wearing her magenta pants and shirt. Akane was in her yellow training dogi, and Nabiki was dressed in a regular T-shirt and jeans.

"Yes, yes, that's better." He sighed. "Honestly, it was a more than a bit difficult to take the middle-schooler versions of you all seriously. Not that the current versions are all that much better, but… I suppose I should at the least grant you your due, yes?" His smile was wide, showing off his teeth. "As for where I'm going… Why, out of course." He gestured vaguely towards the horizon. "I've been trapped in this boy's bloodline for… oh, what has it been? Five centuries or more? I had honestly lost hope of ever getting out. You all have my gratitude."

"Gratitude…?" Nabiki said, frowning. "You're not just some part of Ryouga's psyche, are you?"

Shampoo growled. "This not curse at all. This something else!"

"Very astute, my dear!" The doppelgänger clapped, chuckling. "If only that I stopped short of outright telling you." He gestured and a black umbrella appeared in his hand, folded. Ranma realized that the rain wasn't actually falling on him like it was the rest of them. "My tragic tale started five hundred years ago, give or take a generation or two. I was a yokai, a demon if you prefer, though that is such a Judeo-Christian influenced misnomer. My name was… was… Well, it's been so long since I've been aware, I suppose I've forgotten it. You may call me 'Axis', however."

"All right, 'Axis'," Nabiki said, frowning. "How did you end up inside the sense of direction of a modern day teenager?"

"Oh, I'm there because he killed me," Axis replied airily. "It wasn't actually him I suppose… though the resemblance is certainly there… but it was someone of his mother's line. The boy has yokai blood himself, you know. Faded, but…" He pulled back his lip and tapped a canine with his fingernail. "there, nonetheless. Wolf demon, if I'm not mistaken, not that it's terribly relevant. It's the source of what you call 'the Link', you see." He started pacing, twirling the umbrella like a cane. "I was an admittedly minor player in those days, content to get by on what scraps of spiritual energy I could get. Then I stumbled across a wolf yokai princess… lost, injured and vulnerable…" He smiled, reminiscing. "The taste was… exquisite. Of course her mate was none too pleased to lose her… and who could blame him, really? She was quite attractive. A redhead, too, like yourself." He pointed at Ranma and gave her a smile that made her feel like squirming. "I see that Ryouga has that preference in common with his ancestor as well. Well… I imagined I'd just slip into the shadows and be on my way, like always."

He slowed his pacing. "I hadn't counted on his unique ability… I'm not even sure he was aware of it, but he used it to mark me. No matter where I went, no matter where I hid, no matter how far I ran, he found me... hurt me. Then set me loose to run again so he could do it all over." His lips peeled back in a snarl. "For years he tormented me! Cutting... pieces from me... always taking something from me, bit by bit! I was only feeding! A creature like him should have understood that! But he had been around humans too long - been corrupted by their notions of vengeance. He wasn't content to kill me, he needed to take everything from me!" He thumped the end of the umbrella on the asphalt, causing it to crack. He took a deep breath, closed his eyes and visibly relaxed. "But that was five hundred years ago."

His smile returned as he resumed his pacing. "So, by the time he got tired and decided to finish me off, I was in quite a state. There wasn't much fight left in me by that point but, by then, I understood the nature of his mark and how he kept finding me. And I had a plan. I would use this... 'Link', as you call it... to cheat death! At the moment he took my life, I sent all that remained of me through our link and into him." He chuckled. "I had some... uneducated notions about possessing him and resurrecting myself through it. I suppose I wasn't thinking clearly. I believe about half my skull was missing at the time, but I found myself trapped within the deepest recesses of his mind. Mute and paralyzed, I was no more than a silent observer. I lacked the energy either to escape or to improve my situation. I couldn't even die."

Axis stopped and focused his gaze on Ryouga. "So, I spent the next few years, forced to watch as he wandered, mourned, recovered, found love again... and fornicated." He shuddered. "Human woman this time. Raven black hair. Reminded him of another girl he knew I believe? It didn't matter. By that point I'd had quite enough. And I knew... I knew that my consciousness was fading. So... I put everything I had left into my own 'special ability'. You see, I was known as the Demon of Misdirection. I had a nifty little trick where I could mess with someone's spatial awareness - make them get lost. It was a temporary thing, a little parlor trick... unless they happened to stumble into a dangerous part of the woods or take a bad fall and then get eaten by a demon like his pretty little red-headed first wife. Oh my! Perhaps I deserved some of that rancor of his after all..." He smirked as his gaze shifted to Ranma. "Her screams were delicious, you know. Her sobbing even more so."

"Okay, that's enough!" Ranma growled, getting to her feet and cracking her knuckles.

Axis held up a hand and the barrier was back. "Now now now my dear... Ayame was it? No, that was the other redhead. Ranma, that's it!" He chuckled darkly. "You must let me finish my tale! You see, I cannibalized everything that was left of myself to make my little trick permanent. I wanted to die... I needed to die... and the only way to do that would be for him to die. And so the mighty wolf king wandered off into the wilderness, away from his new wife and halfing babe, and eventually starved to death, lost and alone. It was the perfect pyrrhic victory."

He sighed heavily. "Except... I didn't die with him. It seems he passed on a fragment of me to his offspring. And that fragment repeated the effect, addling the poor lad's brains. He found a way to compensate, using his mark to find something to return to, a lovely young girl who took pity on him I'm sure... and around we went." He began twirling in circles. "Around and around, over and over and over again, your ancestors stubbornly refusing to die until they had spawned and repeated the cycle, always with just a little less of me each time... UNTIL!" He stabbed the umbrella into the ground again and grinned at Ryouga, motioning to him with his hand. "Until our prodigal son here! Ryouga. The one who set me free!" He beamed, feigning being overcome with emotion.
"You and your lovely chosen here ripped the Link wide open and woke me up. And what did I find? Spiritual energy! What you would call 'ki' of course… oceans of it! But… not quite enough. It needed a little more. So, I bided my time, and when lovely young Ranma here learned she could share her ki with you? I backed off." He clapped his hands. "I had no idea if it would work, of course, but you… you wonderful madman! You found a way, didn't you? You sweet talked your way into the hearts of four more lovely girls and now, finally, I have enough." He sighed.

"Okay… so you got what you wanted," Ukyou said warily. "Congrats? So… this is the part where you leave and go off to do whatever… demon… things you lot do… right?"

Axis chuckled. "Yes, of course, of course!" He spread his arms wide. "I'll be on my way and not bother you for the rest of your lives." He took a breath, and then his smirk widened. "Just as soon as I claim young Ryouga's body for my own and purge what remains of his essence." He shrugged. "My old body is, I am afraid, quite thoroughly destroyed, and as distasteful as I find the idea of spending any amount of time as a human, I am limited in my options. But aside from that, I am perfectly happy to…"

He didn't get to finish. Ranma darted forward, pushing past the barrier and charging, fist cocked to smash Axis in the face.

He caught the punch. Or, more accurately, he stopped the punch about six inches before it struck his palm. Ranma felt like a vise had closed around her, holding her immobile.

"Oh, you've got fire in you, don't you?" he purred. "All passion and emotion… mmmm!" He smacked his lips. "I'm going to kill you," Ranma growled. "I'm sure you'll try," he replied. He swept his hand through the air and flung Ranma back to send her sprawling across the ground.

"Leave her alone!" Ryouga snarled, forcing himself shakily to his feet. He winced as the light in his chest pulsed.

"Ah-ah-ah!" Axis wagged his finger. "Now Ryo, are you sure you want to do that? After all, you're the one I want to consume! At this point, with your ki so badly depleted? One touch buddy… fhtfhtfhtfht! Now, if you want to sacrifice yourself heroically to save your lovely ladies…" he smirked, "I'm afraid I'm still going to eat them. They just look so tast-

Axis was cut off by a mighty Clong as Akane, swinging an impressively large hammer, hit him on his left side and sent his body careening through the brick retaining wall and the nearby house.

"I hate it when they monologue," Akane muttered.

"Did you get him?" Ukyou ran up to her, Battle spatula drawn and peering into the cloud of dust.

"Where Akane get hammer?" Shampoo asked, peering at the weapon. It was impressively large, with a handle nearly as long as Akane was tall, and a heavy, ornately etched head of solid metal.

"It was on a TV show I think," Akane said. At their confused looks, she shrugged. "It's a dream, right? I figured that meant if he can make stuff appear, then I can too."

Ranma made her way over to them, holding her side. If this is a dream, why does stuff hurt? "Be careful, Akane. Guys like him don't usually go down that easy in my experience."
"She's right," Axis murmured from right behind them. "We don't."

Everyone dodged frantically out of the way except Akane, who immediately whirled and made a wild swing, the heavy head of the hammer on course to collide with the side of Axis' head once more.

The demon merely stopped the hammer with one hand, again halting it six inches from his palm. "You figured out the rules much more quickly than I expected!" He gestured and flung Akane away from him.

Shampoo immediately altered course, changing direction to catch Akane, grunting and barely keeping her feet as Akane slammed into her.

"Shame that's just a lump of metal," Axis said, nodding towards the hammer. "Not going to do you much good against a yokai, even in a dream. You'll have to think bigger."

Two throwing spatula whizzed by Axis' head. He dodged them easily, turning as his eyes started to track Ukyou while she circled him at a run, flinging her sharpened minispats at him.

"You should be careful, 'Ucchan'," Axis said, catching one out of the air. "These are sharp and you could hurt…"

A bag of flour hit him in the face, exploding into a cloud.

"Really?" Axis said, tossing the spat away as he glared, somewhat less amused. "Of all the things to throw at me… flour?"

Ukyou was silhouetted by the fog of finely ground power. He could still make out her smile though as she held up one last minispat. She threw it, not at him, but at the ground, aming it to skip off the asphalt. The blade ricocheted off a small pebble of chert in the tarmac and struck a spark.

The explosion was brilliant, blasting away the rain for a moment.

"Yeah, flour," Ukyou said.

The smoke cleared and Axis was still standing there, arms crossed. But the smile was gone from his face.

"That hurt," he growled, and started stalking forward.

Suddenly, Ranma was impeding him, moving like a blue and red blur. He stopped reflexively as she crouched in front of him.

"That hurt, huh?" Ranma said, drawing her hands back. Pulsing yellow light gathered between her palms. "Then I bet this'll feel real good… MOKO TAKABISHA!" She drove her hands forward, releasing the ki blast into his chest at point blank range.

Axis actually screamed as the force of the blast burnt and frayed his suit and slowly pushed him back. He struggled and his form seemed to waver as though he was fighting to keep himself together.

Finally the blast ended. Axis's form was smoking, and black ichor was leaking from the corner of his mouth. He wiped it away with the back of his hand, and the grin slowly returned.

"No wonder he's in love with you," he said, chuckling softly. "I wonder if it's just coincidence that "it was a redhead last time, too? I'll have to preserve some fragment of his consciousness so he can watch as I eat you... eventually." His grin spread. "Remember that Oni? It had some nifty ideas, and I remember all of them..."

"Aww come on!" Ranma panted. "What's it take to take you down?"

As if to answer the question, Akane ran past Ranma, hefting her hammer once more with a battle cry on her lips.

Axis sighed and held up his hand to stop the hammer as it swung towards his head. "I told you..."

He never finished as the hammer, unaffected by his gesture, passed his hand and impacted his temple hard enough that his head actually deformed, spurting streams of thick, black ichor.

Akane followed through, shifted her weight and brought the hammer back around, batting Axis away as though he were a doll made of straw. His body slammed through the pile of lumber and left him twisted and broken in a pile of two-by-fours.

"You tell us 'lump of metal' not enough," Shampoo said, coming up beside Akane. She took hold of the haft and held it up a bit to reveal the head of the hammer was now covered in a mix of foreign runes and Shinto spirit wards. "Now blessed lump of metal."

"Thanks for reminding us about the Oni, by the way," Akane shouldered the weapon and smirked. "I remembered a bunch of the spirit wards that the priest used for that. I bet a mix of Chinese, Japanese and Greek enchantments probably really sting, huh?"

"Shampoo throw in a couple of Norse, too," Shampoo added. At Akane's curious look she shrugged. "Norse know hammers."

Axis struggled out of the pile of wood, bones cracking as dislocated limbs snapped back into place. "Y-yuh-you think... think you're winning, don't you?" he said, spitting a mouthful of tar-like bile onto the ground as his ruined face slowly reformed itself. "Th-that's adorable."

"None of us are spitting up our pancreas, pal," Ranma said, putting her hands on her hips. "You should probably just give it up right now."

Axis smirked. "I mean... you're right." He shrugged and dusted off his suit. "As long as you're willing to kill Ryouga in the process."

Ranma felt the blood drain from her face. She spun, looking for Ryouga.

He was back on the ground, struggling to hold himself up on his hands and knees. He had gone from translucent to almost transparent. Only that red, pulsing mass in his chest remained relatively solid.

Ranma sprinted toward him and skidded to a stop as she crouched next to him. Ryouga coughed, wheezing and gasping as he struggled to breath.

"You see... the instant you lot all came here, I had already won," Axis said with a grating laugh. "If you kill me, you kill him. My vengeance will be complete and I can rest in peace. If you try and keep him alive then, inevitably, I will overwhelm you, devour his soul and then I will have all the time in the world to hunt you down in the real world, thanks to this lovely link we all share."

"Ranma..." Ryouga wheezed.
"Don't you dare say it, Ryo," Ranma snarled. She grabbed his head in her hands and forced him to look at her. "We're not sacrificing you! Do you hear me?! I haven't come this far just to lose you. Not now!"

Ryouga coughed and a slow smile spread across his lips. "Nah… I gave you my word of honor that I'd stick around, didn't I?"

Axis smirked. "Isn't that touching?"

Ryouga took Ranma's hand and placed it over his chest, over the red light that was pulsing beneath his ribs like a lurid heartbeat. Ranma swallowed, her eyes going wide. Is… is he going to…?

No wonder he's in love with you.

"R-Ryo?" she stammered.

"Rip it out," Ryouga whispered.

Ranma blinked. "What?"

Ryouga grunted and pressed her hand harder to his chest. "Rip it out!"

Axis's eyes widened. "H-hey, hold on a minute…" He started towards the couple, hands outstretched.

"Ryouga, if I rip your heart out, you'll die!" Ranma said. "You said you weren't gonna…!"

"It's not my heart!" Ryouga said. "This is a dream! We're… we're all ki phantoms or something! That red thing thudding in my chest… it's him!"

"Stop!" Axis snarled, charging forward. He blocked a strike from Akane's hammer, though the force of it arrested his momentum. He grabbed the haft of the weapon and his hand started to smoke and the flesh bubble and char as the wards started to glow, but he paid it no mind. "Out of my way!"

"I… I don't… How do I do this without hurting you…?" Ranma wailed, looking from the red pulsing mass back to Ryouga's eyes.

"You don't. You just do it!" Ryouga said through gritted teeth. "It's a dream! Just… imagine it happening!"

"NO!" Axis ripped the hammer from Akane's grasp only to be struck by bonbori and a huge battle spatula similarly adorned with wards and runes as Shampoo and Ukyou dogpiled him. With a roar and a surge of force, he cast all three of them off him.

"Do it!" Ryouga cried desperately.

Ranma swallowed, squeezed her eyes shut, tried to visualize her hand passing harmlessly through Ryouga's ribs, and jabbed her stiffened fingers into his chest.

Her hand wasn't passing into his chest harmlessly.

She could feel his bones crack and his ribs split as her hand plunged into his chest. She heard the breath wheeze out of his lungs. She opened her eyes and looked into his, full of pain… she dared not look down. "I'm sorry! Oh god, Ryo…!"
"Not… real…" Ryouga reminded her weakly.

"Also not happening!" Ranma looked up to see Axis stomping towards them. His eyes were glowing red now as he reached for Ranma, intending to tear her away.

A gigantic metal fist slammed into him from above and drove him into the pavement. Ranma was forced to withdraw her hand to steady herself and Ryouga. The metal hand closed, scooping up a handful of asphalt, concrete, and Axis.

Ranma looked up to see a huge red mech. It looked like it was 5 stories tall, with a single glowing red eye. Ranma recognized it from one of those classic anime series. A Zaku.

It straightened and the chest opened up. From the right side, a figure in a crimson uniform pulled herself up from the control seat and removed her white helmet and mask in a properly theatrical manner.

"Nabiki!?" Ranma squeaked, gaping.

"Took me a bit to visualize it properly. Sorry I'm late," Nabiki called down from the cockpit. She turned her gaze to the fistful that the mech was holding, specifically the doppelgänger of Ryouga struggling in its clutches. "Now you have been a bad boy, so just sit still and let Ranma kill you."

"No!" Axis squirmed frantically. The metal creaked ominously, but it held. "Not while he lives! Not while there's a single one of that damndable wolf's spawn left in the world!" He turned his blood red gaze to Nabiki. "This can't hold me! I'll get a hand free in a minute, and then I'll find the breaking point of it. And then I'll find your breaking point!"

Nabiki cocked her head at him. Casually she reached down and manipulated a control on the yoke. "What was it Gendo Ikari said at the end of the Evangelion series?" she asked.

As she did, the mech's thumb pivoted, pressed against Axis' face, and flicked his head off his body. "Oh yeah. That, she said with a smirk.

The head hit the ground, still cursing as it bounced. Though decapitated, Axis' body continued to struggle, and black smoke started to seep from the mech's fingers as his form started to lose cohesion.

"Ranma, hurry up!" Nabiki called. "He's doing… demon things!"

Ranma swallowed. She risked a glance down at Ryouga's chest, and found to her surprise that it was intact and undamaged. However, he was getting fainter and fainter, and he was starting to feel light against her. She looked into his eyes, biting her lower lip. "I'm sorry!"

He nodded, then howled in pain as her hand drove into his chest once more.

Ranma grit her teeth and forced her hand deeper, pushing aside bone, muscle and cartilage, her fingers questing until she felt something sickly and warm against her hand.

"STOP!" Axis roared. The black smoke was re-coalescing around his head to form an arm and part of his torso which he used to try and pull himself forward.

Ranma pushed in deep enough to grab hold of the pulsing thing. It felt horrible, pulsing and writhing in her grasp, desperate to escape. It wasn't just a physical sensation, either. She could feel echoes of all the horrible things the demon had done; the corruption and hate within him. It was cold and slimy and yet it burned at the same time. Her instinct was to jerk her hand away, but she closed her grip more tightly and started to pull. "Hold on, Ryo!"

His form flickered and he grunted, coughing up blood, a hitch in his breathing. But his eyes didn't waver, so she pulled harder still. Sickening wet squelching noises and bone twisting cracks came from his chest as she slowly wrenched the thing out.

"Nooooooooooooo!" Axis howled and struggled, hastily reforming his other arm, more of a malformed stump than a usable limb as he tried frantically to crawl forward.

With a final yell, Ranma wrenched the red, pulsing mass free. She could feel it throbbing and writhing in her hand, little cilia probing and gripping at her flesh, like it was trying to find a way into her now.

Ryouga's form flickered, growing even more faint. Ranma could see a sort of tether - a faint line of force that still connected it to him. He reached up weakly and put his hand over hers, on top of the mass.

"Do it."

Ranma nodded, closed her hand into a fist and crushed the thing while Ryouga held her hand in his.

Axis didn't cry out or struggle. He just abruptly came apart. His form, or what was left of it, dissolved into black ichor that splattered across the ruined pavement, steaming and bubbling.

After a moment, Ryouga's tenuous form started to grow more opaque. He groaned and slumped against Ranma, plainly exhausted. She caught him and slipped her arms around him, holding him up as his weight returned.

"Ranma," he croaked.

"Shut up!" She wrapped her arms around him more tightly, closed her eyes and balled her fists up in his shirt. She was shaking as she buried her face against his shoulder. Never again! I'm not going to go through that again! Not ever again!

She felt his arms tighten around her and the others embrace them both as Akane, Ukyou, Shampoo and Nabiki encircled them, with herself and Ryouga at the center. Her aches started to fade as she could sense all of them through the Link.

"Thank you…" Ryouga managed, his voice still hoarse and weak.

"Y-you have to promise…" Ranma said haltingly, struggling around the lump in her throat as she fought to hold back tears. "Promise that you'll stay now."

He chuckled weakly. "I thought I already had?"

"That was before, when I was your Anchor! Promise again!" Ranma insisted hotly. "No wandering off or d-dying or anything!"

"I promise," he breathed.

000

When they woke up, they discovered the entire battle had literally been the blink of an eye; they had all nodded off at once and, by the time Dr. Tofu and Dr. Hirano had reacted, it was over and they were all awake - including Ryouga.

They all had to endure another full spectrum of MRI scans. Their ki levels were low all across the board and all of them were cold so the group huddled under blankets as each of them took their turns getting run through the torus. Since Ryouga was first, he found himself in the center of the pile, struggling to stay awake. The fatigue and low body temperature did a lot of override the usual hangups about physical closeness, otherwise he imagined that huddling under a blanket with five girls would have caused him fatal blood loss.

Ranma was the last to get scanned. She had been reluctant to leave him the entire time, yet she had kept her hands either behind his back or wrapped around herself and away from his chest. She'd also kept her head resting with one ear to his breastbone. She said she just wanted to reassure herself that his heart was still in there and still beating.

"Can I… have a minute?" he asked, nudging a dozing Ukyou off his shoulder as he tried to extricate himself from the pile.

"Going somewhere?" Nabiki asked sleepily.

"I just want to look outside," Ryouga replied. "I want to see what the streets look like when I know where I'm going."

"Don't go far," Ukyou cautioned him and nodded towards Ranma on the MRI bed. "You've got unfinished business."

Ryouga nodded slowly. "I won't. Promise."

He got up, making sure to rewrap the blanket around the four girls as he did. He liked the idea of taking care of them in some way, no matter how small. It was a way to start to pay all of this back to them. He already owed them more than he could repay in several lifetimes.

He slipped out the door and walked down the hall. Across from the elevators there was a doorway that led to an open-air patio that afforded patients or staff a place to step out for fresh air or to indulge in a cigarette without having actually leave the building. It overlooked the road leading to the hospital and was high up enough to have a decent view of the city.

The patio was vacant, save for him, and he stopped to look out over the surrounding bits of Tokyo. The sun was starting to set and lights were flickering to life as dusk settled over the landscape.

_There, Ryouga thought, picking out a spot in the distance. That's where my house is, isn't it?_

He smiled, now able to remember all the twists and turns they had taken to get to the hospital. He shifted his gaze a bit. _The Tendo Dojo is… there... and the Nekohanten is over a bit to the east of that... the school is… there! I can actually see it!_ He felt a warm surge as he got first hand confirmation that his newly won sense of direction was actually working.

He strode forward and leaned on the railing of the overlook, scanning to the horizon, as far across the city as he could see. It was all there; every path he had ever taken. Some of the details were still a bit fuzzy, especially how he'd managed to cross the ocean multiple times, but that was all right. Some things he didn't really want to know. His world had navigable boundaries once more - for the first time since he was a child. That was all that mattered.

"Here you are!"
Ryouga glanced over his shoulder. Ranma was standing in the doorway. Her hair was unbound, blowing in the slight breeze, and her eyes were bright in the gloom.

"Wandering off again, Ryo?" she asked, stepping out onto the patio and walking over to stand next to him. "I thought we'd just fixed that."

"We did," he said, smiling a little as she joined him at the railing. "I was just… taking in the view. Now that it actually means something to me."

Ranma leaned her elbows on the railing but remained quiet. There was a pensive look on her face.

"You're not… going back out there," Ranma said softly. It wasn't quite a question but not really a statement either. "You promised you'd stay. You're staying, right?"

"I don't ever want to wander again," Ryouga replied. "I plan to stay for the rest of my life… If you'll let me."

Ranma turned and stared at him. She blinked a few times in confusion. "I-if you mean… like, in Tokyo? I-I mean, that's not really my call… I mean, lots of people stay their whole lives in Tokyo…"

"That's not what I meant and you know it," Ryouga said, though there was no edge in his voice. He kept staring out at the cityscape, watching her from the corner of his eye.

Her cheeks colored and she fidgeted, spluttering a bit before she gained some sort of traction. "I… it… Ryo, if this is about what the demon said about you being in love with me… I mean, he was trying to mess with us, I didn't really pay attention…"

Ryouga pushed off the railing, straightened and turned to look at her. She had that slightly panicked, trapped expression she usually wore when she was being confronted with any sort of deep or strong feelings. He took a deep breath. She can't do this for me. I've got to be the one to say it.

"Ranma Saotome, I love you," he said, opening his eyes. The words weren't nearly as scary as he thought they'd be.

At least, for him.

Ranma's eyes went wide. Her expression shifted to a nervous smile. "Aheh… I mean… Yeah! I love you too, bud! We're… we're… best friends… right?"

Ryouga sighed. "Ranma, that's not how I meant and we both know it."

"N-no… it's just… just… an emotional high… from the fight an' stuff…" She backed up a step, the look of panic in her eyes growing stronger. "You're just… woozy from the drugs! Yeah… that's it…"

Frustrated, Ryouga reached out and grabbed her by the shoulders. Her terrified squeak immediately made him regret the decision but he was committed now. "Ranma!" he hissed. "Would you just stop? Just… just listen to me for once, would you?"

"But… but you can't!" Ranma shook her head. She was shaking in his grasp, trembling like a leaf on the wind. "You can't… I can't! It's… it's not…"

"You don't owe me anything for this, Ranma," Ryouga said. "You aren't… obligated. You don't have to feel the same way. You don't have to protect me from anything. I'm not saying this to try and claim you or anything. I just… I just need you to know. That's all."

"Why?" Ranma shook her head. "Why? Why why why why!?" She was shaking harder now and tears were starting to run down her cheeks. "Why do you have to be such an idiot!? Why would you fall for someone like me?! I'm literally the worst person on earth for you! I'm… I'm stupid and selfish and a glutton and I'm already engaged to a half dozen people and… and…!"

"You forgot that you're a guy," Ryouga added helpfully.

"I was getting to that! I'm a guy! I'm a man amongst men! I'm… I'm supposed to be a man amongst men! I'm not… I'm not supposed to be a girl! Not like this! I'm not supposed to feel…!" She was starting to hyperventilate, the tears flowing more freely. "I can't! I can't! Because… because…!"

Without thinking, Ryouga moved his hand from her shoulder to her cheek to brush away the tears. Ranma froze, her breath hitching as she stared at him with a mix of terror and pleading in her eyes. Her emotions through the Link were so chaotic that he couldn't make any sense of what she was feeling and he doubted she could either.

"Then don't," Ryouga said softly, still cupping her cheek. "Just tell me you don't. Tell me you don't feel the same. That's all I need from you. That's all I ask. Say that you don't love me… that you can't… and mean it. So I can move on from you."

Her lower lip trembled. "But… you'll leave…"

"No I won't," he said solemnly. "I'm not going to make you choose, Ranma. I'll stay as your friend, as your ally… family, even. But… I need to know how you feel." He leaned a little closer. "Just tell me."

"I can't…" she whimpered, shaking her head slightly. "I can't I can't I can't!"

She was terrified - he could feel that - but not of him. There was… something else. She couldn't acknowledge something, as if admitting how she felt would lead to disaster. But she wasn't taking the escape he was offering her. He could feel her struggling.

She can't say it, he thought. He felt a pang of guilt for the turmoil he felt roiling within her. There was one other thing… but it scared him. If he was wrong, he'd push her away forever.

Time to be brave, Hibiki! he thought. He pulled her forward gently, eyes locked on hers as he leaned in. Her eyes widened as she realized what he was about to do.

He stopped and waited.

All she needed to do was push, now. Just a gentle shove, or pull away. One last easy escape.

Her breathing slowed. The fear was still there in her eyes, but at the same time… relief? Her emotional landscape seemed to be wavering, trapped in anticipation, waiting to see what he was actually going to do. He could hear his own heartbeat thudding in his ears and he realized that he was terrified, too.

He shifted his hand from her cheek to the back of her head, tilting her head back gently as he stared into her eyes. Do or die. He leaned in, turned his head a bit, drawing on what he had learned from Nabiki and Shampoo, and gently touched her hips with his.

She made a soft noise, and then her eyes slid shut and she leaned in against him, her hand against his chest as she pushed back into the kiss. And then everything cut loose. Through the Link he could feel the relief as all of the feelings she had been suppressing and denying surged forward. He moved his arm around to her back and pulled her closer, deepening the kiss as, for one brief, glorious moment, everything was right.

He felt it in the same moment she did. A black, bubbling, mewling horror from that deep, dark place that she kept sealed. It surged through her and then into him - a paralyzing black wave of fear, suffocating and binding. She shuddered in his arms and then abruptly pulled away, eyes wide with terror.

And then she mewed.

"Ranma?" Ryouga's breath caught in his throat, his heart pounding with fear as the mere memory of that wave of terror left him unable to move. NO! Why now!? He scanned the area, looking for the cat that had triggered her without ever fully taking his eyes off her, but there was nothing he could see. What had set it off?!

Ranma whimpered and clutched the sides of her head, shrinking back. "Nnnnh!" she panted, trying to steady herself on the railing, but as her fingers came down on it they slashed right through the metal, as though invisible claws were extended from her hand. "I can't! I can't! I'm sorry I'm sorry I'm sorry!"

"Ranma!" Ryouga reached for her but she flinched away, shaking her head.

"N-no!" she cried out. "I can't... the pit... I'm sorry!" She turned, leapt up onto the railing on all fours then bounded off into the night.

000

"Hey, I think I've got something!"

Daisuke started from his doze, head jerking up from the table as he glanced blearily over at Hiroshi. "This had better not be another false alarm, Hiro."

"No, no, this is it!" Hiroshi said excitedly. "Genma Saotome... Nodoka Saotome... ages look right... and Ranma Saotome!" He thumped the side of the mirofiche reader.

Yuka got up and walked over to him, peering over his shoulder. "And... Ranma Saotome, apparently."

"I just said that," Hiroshi blinked at her, confused.

"No, look... it's here twice on the register," Yuka pointed to the screen. "Ranma Saotome here, and then a bit further down, Ranma Saotome again."

Daisuke walked over and joined them, squinting at the screen. "That's weird..." He read the specifics under each name. "One male... the other female? Same birthdate though."

"That would explain why Ranma never got investigated by the Athletics Board," Yuka mused. "If there's a female Ranma Saotome on the Saotome family register who's got the right birthdate, then there'd be no grounds."

"But why is there a second Ranma Saotome?" Daisuke asked. "If Himura could get in here to change the records, why add a second Ranma to the register?"
Yuka scoffed, crossing her arms. "Did you see the dust on these files? Face it Dai, no one has looked at these for over ten years, much less altered them."

"Secret twins?" Hiroshi suggested. "Maybe Ranma had a sister, but she died at birth and his parents never told him?"

"Then where's the file? There should be medical records in there." Daisuke rooted around for the hard copy of the files Hiroshi had displayed on the reader. He found the folder and flipped it open. "Marriage license… Driver's license… Mr. Saotome can drive…? Here it is." He fished out a faded pink sheet of paper. It was covered in barely legible scrawl. "Looks like they used a midwife. 'Assisted Home Birth. Mother, Nodoka Saotome. Child name, Ranma Saotome. Male…’ birth date and time match the Family Register… okay, so the girl Ranma is fake then."

"Hold on…” Yuka flipped a bit further into the file and pulled out another set of documents, these much more legibly typed up. "This is from Nerima General. 'Cesarean Section, Nodoka Saotome. Child name Ranma Saotome. Gender female’… birth date and time match here, too."

"Wait, what?!" Daisuke took the sheet from her and compared it to the one he was holding. "That doesn't make any sense. How could the same woman give birth to two different kids in two different places at the same time?"

"One is fake, obviously!" Yuka snatched both sheets back and held them up for both to see. "And which one of these is slick, professional and authentic-looking and which one looks like 'Genma Saotome paid for this'?"

"So… the Nerimal General sheet is fake?" Hiroshi said, taking it from her and scratching his head. "But… then why put it as a C-section? Doesn't that leave, like, a really noticeable scar? That seems like a awfully easy way to prove your faked records are false."

"You ever seen Nodoka Saotome? She dresses like it's the Feudal Era." Yuka scoffed. "Nobody has seen her bellybutton since the doctor snipped her own umbilical."

"Crude, Yuka, even for you," Daisuke muttered. "You got a point, though."

"Still seems like a weird oversight," Hiroshi said. "It's like Nabiki says, 'if you gotta lie, keep it simple and keep as much to the truth as you can.' Also, didn't you say that that nobody has been down here in ten years?" He glanced at Yuka.

"Yes, but…” Yuka chewed on her lower lip. "I mean, Himura faking Ranma's girl-type birth records? I can totally see that. Screwing 'em up by making them overly complicated? Sure, she's arrogant enough to put in something like that because she'd figure we'd never find it. Going to the trouble of tracking down the original physical file and stuffing it with fake documents, then sprinkling dust on it?" She shrugged. "That's pushing it, I agree. But it's not like both sets could be authentic. Nodoka couldn't have given both to a boy in one place and a girl in another at the same time. We know the crappy fake-looking one is the real one because Ranma is a boy, and Genma Saotome is cheap. The problem is convincing other people of that."

"Well, we've got the way to do that, right?" Hiroshi said. "Just gotta get Nodoka to prove she doesn't have a C-section scar and we can debunk the fake documents!"

Yuka snorted. "Yeah, good luck with that."

"Hey, to help her son? It's not like we're asking her to strip or anything!" Hiroshi replied.

Daisuke leaned back against the table, stroking his chin and frowning. He had a worried expression on his face.

"What's wrong, Dai?" Hiroshi asked.

"What if Nodoka Saotome does have a C-section scar?" Daisuke asked quietly.

"What, you've seen it?" Hiroshi asked. "Have you been taking surveillance photos without me again?"

"Daisuke, you creep!" Yuka punched him on the shoulder.

"OW!" Daisuke protested. "No, I haven't… I'm just speculating!"

"But that's stupid!" Yuka said. "A midwife wouldn't be able to do a C-section! So the only way Nodoka could… have… a scar…" she trailed off, eyes widening.

000

Ranma didn't know where she was going.

Her perceptions of the world shifted back and forth. Sometimes she was aware of the terrain she was running through, other times… there was darkness and the echoes of that awful yowling.

Please please please let me out! I'll be good! I'LL BE GOOD!

She was slipping into the pit. But it wasn't like before. This wasn't like concealing herself from the cats, where she could go somewhere deep inside herself and hide. Her safe haven was gone now - exposed. And she was slipping into the pit and the cats were going to get her and girls couldn't get out of the pit.

Girls couldn't get out of the pit.

Only boys.

She came to awareness as she smashed open a door with her shoulder, stumbling as she nearly tripped over a mop and bucket. It was the maintenance shed at the school. There was salvation here! She stumbled over to the sink, whimpering as the edges of her vision darkened once more and the cats struggled to crawl out of her throat and take her again.

She turned the hot water tap on full blast and shoved her head under it. The hot water scalded her scalp, and the sudden change to male form caused the back of his head to bang painfully against the metal tap as his height changed.

He stumbled backwards, landing in a heap, panting and sobbing as the darkness finally receded. He was out. He was safe. Boys could get out of the pit, and he was a boy. He was a boy.

He clutched his head as the pain flared up again. Darkness was coming for him, but at least it wasn't the darkness of the pit. He slumped against the shed wall, his arms dropped and his breathing finally slowed as he sank into merciful unconsciousness.

000

Hiroshi frowned. "No. No way. That's not how the curse works! I researched this thoroughly!"

Daisuke raised an eyebrow. "You mean back when you still held out hope Ranma was really a girl?"
"Yes!" Hiroshi punched his palm. "Cold water is the cursed form, hot water is the natural form. That's how it works! I even begged a pamphlet on the whole thing from Shampoo's Great Grandma!"

"You got a pamphlet?" Yuka asked skeptically. "They have pamphlets on Jusenkyo curses?"

"Oh yeah. Apparently the Joketsuzoku flirted with the concept of tourism before deciding that it was a really terrible idea," Hiroshi said. "It had a whole section about 'What To Do If You Get Cursed'. It's pretty clear about the basics of the curses."

"Does it cover stuff that messes with the curse though? Like that ladle, or the Full-body Cat Tongue?" Daisuke asked. "How do we know there isn't some way to invert the curse?"

"Ranma would know," Yuka said. "Unless you figure he's been lying to us all along?"

Daisuke sighed in frustration. "Okay, fine, there are a couple of flaws, but… we've seen enough brainwashing Chinese snack cakes and love-inducing cufflinks to know weird stuff can happen, right?" He gestured at the folder. "I mean, something doesn't add up!"

"We should get this to Nabiki," Yuka said. "Hiroshi, can you print out the register from the Microfiche viewer? I'll go photocopy these medical records."

Hiroshi centered the appropriate parts of the document and hit the print button on the reader. "Guys… I think we're missing the more pressing crisis here."

"Oh yeah? What constitutes a bigger crisis than knowing that either Himura has magical document-changing powers or one of your best friends might have been brainwashed and gender swapped by his parents?" Daisuke asked dryly.

"The building is closed and locked down until Monday. How are we gonna get out?"

"And then she just ran off?"

Nabiki studied Ryoga's face as he nodded. From the subtle play of emotions, she could imagine him tearing himself up inside, even without the Link. His head was bowed as he stared at the concrete.

"Never hear of Neko-ken happen without cat," Shampoo said, examining one of the sliced bits of railing on the ground.

"Ranma's never talked while in the Neko-ken, either," Akane added. "This is different."

"It's happened once before," Ryoga said quietly.

Nabiki turned, walked over and sat next to him. She was close enough to feel the turmoil through the Link.

"We were experimenting with the Link," Ryoga said softly as the others all listened. "She was trying to help me. She tried to... I don't know, project feelings through it? There was some kind of feedback, and... and she started meowing - like we had popped the tab on a shaken can of soda."

"So... emotional stress caused it?" Nabiki asked, frowning. "It's not like Ranma hasn't been stressed before..."
Ryouga slumped a little further. "I pushed her. I pushed her somewhere she couldn't go."

"It's not your fault, sugar," Ukyou said. "We were all pushing. We figured she needed to get this out, not that it would…" Ukyou shook her head.

"It was too close to something," Ryouga continued in a near whisper. "The cats… the Neko-ken… when I got a glimpse of it… there was something else there. Something behind it all. Something the Neko-ken was blocking. I should have known. I should have seen it coming this time…"

Nabiki put a hand on his arm and squeezed. "Ryo, this isn't your fault. You didn't put her in that pit." Her jaw tensed. "We found journals Genma wrote about the Neko-ken. It was… heartless. I should have guessed Ranma's issues from it would come to more than just a pathological fear of cats."

"We should be out looking for Ranma," Akane said.

Ryouga made to stand, but Nabiki held onto his arm. "Not you," she said. She winced a bit at the flare of frustration from him. She nodded to Akane, Shampoo and Ukyou to head out, then turned him to look at her.

Ryouga sighed heavily. "That's… yeah, I get it. I'll stay out of the way…" he muttered.

"No. It's not the reason you think," Nabiki said softly. "Ryouga, please… you're exhausted from what you just went through. We all are, but you especially. I want you to come back to the dojo with me."

"Why to the dojo?" Ryouga frowned.

"Because you're exhausted and I want to make sure you rest and because the rule is that fiances shouldn't be alone, especially when they're feeling bad." She straightened his shirt a little without thinking about it.

"I'm not a Fiance, Nabiki," Ryouga muttered.

"Yes you are, Ryo," she insisted. "Ranma didn't reject you! She kissed you back. Heck, we could feel it two rooms away! Something… something just happened that detonated some kind of mental landmine. Shampoo has found her way around that, you can too. Don't give up on Ranma just yet. Please?"

He sighed and closed his eyes. "I promised not to go anywhere. You don't have to worry about me."

Nabiki put her arms around him and hugged him. She could feel him stiffen at the unfamiliarity of the act. Nabiki, what is it with you and the kicked puppies? she thought, squeezing a bit tighter. "Good. Because right now I can't do anything for Ranma but wait, since I can't leap tall buildings or run along fences. I kinda need you here right now."

Tentatively he put his arms around her. "I'm... not sure I can do much," he mumbled. She could feel concern muffling some of his own darker emotions as his focus shifted to her.

"Yeah… you and me both," She pulled back slightly to look up at him. "I've spent all this time frantically running around, trying to fix everyone's problems… and I just seem to dredge up new ones. You nearly get your soul eaten by a demon, Ranma is popping the lid off of her own bottled imps, Mousse's psycho ex fiancee has brought the circus to town Stephen King-style and I managed to get the Yakuza interested in our sleepy little corner of insanity."
"I wasn't eaten by a demon, my direction curse is cured. Tatewaki Kuno is sane, the Principal is out of our hair, Mousse's ex is not your fault and the Yakuza are hardly a problem you created," Ryouga countered.

Nabiki sighed and hooked her chin over his shoulder. "I know… rationally I know all of that, but still…" She closed her eyes. "Thank you, though. It's nice to hear someone else saying it."

"Ah, there you are!" Dr. Tofu peeked out through the doors. "I was wondering where everyone had wandered off to!" He stepped outside and looked around, noticing it was just the two of them. "Where are Ranma, Akane and the others?"

Nabiki gently disengaged from Ryouga. "It's… complicated, Doc," she said a little sheepishly.

"Oh, well…" Dr. Tofu awkwardly rubbed the back of his head. "Well, we just wanted to let you know the MRI images all look good. We'll want you all back in a week of course to verify, but there's no sign of the corrupted ki in any of your scans."

Ryouga breathed a sigh of relief. "Thank you. Really. I… don't know what I'd do if it had jumped to someone else."

"Honestly, the chances of it were low. There was a flare up right at the moment you lost consciousness, but the influx of the uncorrupted ki from the girls seems to have done the trick. Simple, really!" He blinked at the slightly horrified expressions they gave him. "… What?"

"Nothing!" Nabiki said quickly. "Just… healthy skepticism from a couple of people for whom things are rarely ever simple." She chuckled weakly.

"Ah! Well, that is true…" Dr. Tofu rubbed his chin. "At least in this case. Though, I'm optimistic! Once we've verified the results, the next stage will be to figure out how to generalize this procedure for other uses. For now, though," he smiled at Ryouga, "I'm guessing you can find your own way home?"

Ryouga blinked, then looked away, a smile tugging at the corner of his mouth even as it trembled slightly. "I… yeah… Yeah I guess I can."

Nabiki waited until Dr. Tofu walked out before she took his arm. "Congratulations, big guy," she whispered, smiling. "Instead how about you find your way to my home?"

Ryouga's eyes widened, and Nabiki realized what she had just said. She sighed and clapped a hand over her face.

"That sounded like way more of a come-on line than I intended. I'm tired, I'm sorry," Nabiki groaned.

"No, no, it's okay!" Ryouga laughed weakly, waving his hands as if to dispel the awkwardness.

"I really wasn't intending anything untoward, despite making some rather shameless passes at you in the past." Nabiki took hold of his arm and leaned against him. "I think that whole demon slaying thing took more out of me than I thought. I'm pretty sure right now I'll be lucky if you don't end up carrying me home."

Ryouga swallowed nervously, probably getting some mental imagery from that too. "It's totally fine! I should never have thought anything like that." He straightened, looking forward as he started leading her back into the hospital to guide her home.
Nabiki smirked a bit. "Oh, you probably should. When I've got my energy back, and we've found Ranma and calmed her down, I absolutely plan to go back to making shameless passes at you."

Ryouga made a small strangled noise in his throat.

000

"[I need to make a new example, I think.""] Himura said with a sigh.

Tan Pohn gave her a quizzical look, something of a break from her usual stoic boredom. "[An example?]"

Himura smiled. Part of the fun of having someone with you who spoke a different language than the herd was that you could be far more open. "[My players are getting complacent.""] She gestured at the current group of second stringers running drills at the instruction of Sanae. "[I find it useful to pick one as 'The Example'. The one who always gets picked last, gets the terrible jobs… nothing overt of course. Just enough that they know they're The Example, and everyone else knows it too."

"[I see. So you punish the weakest with ostracization.""] Tan Pohn said with a sniff.

"[Oh, no, no my dear!]" Himura said, smirking. "[Never so obvious. In fact, most of the time it's random. The speculation as to what displeased their betters is what keeps them going in circles. Sometimes it's the least popular, but not always… can't let them think they select The Example. Sometimes I make the least popular my favorite, just for that reason. It's how I picked up little Omi.""] She stretched.

"[And they don't rebel when you ostracize one of them without reason?]" Tan Pohn asked, looking more interested.

"[Oh there's always a reason. Everyone is guilty of something, or at least they think they are. Small things, unimportant things. You just need to learn to see it, pick it up and then point them out. Publicly. You can always invent larger crimes later, but you start with the small, real, petty crimes everyone commits every day. Mock them. Deride them. Hold them up as examples of why they can't be trusted. Convince the others of the same. Do it long enough, and your target will believe it.]" She waggled her eyebrows. "[Then you can start to have some fun.""]

"[I don't see how that is effective leadership…"]" Tan Pohn said.

"[It keeps them too divided to unite against you, but united against a 'common bad'. It gives you someone convenient to blame when things go wrong. And it keeps them competing to keep from being next.]" Himura stretched. "[Sayuri was barely started before she decided she'd had enough. A miscalculation on my part. She and her defiant little group work well enough for now, but I'll need more soon.""]

The buzzing of her phone interrupted. Himura brought the phone to her ear and tapped the screen with her thumb to answer. "Hello, Himura Tanaka."

"He's at the school," A familiar voice came over the line. Low, but not a whisper.

Himura raised an eyebrow and sat back in her seat, the social structure of her team momentarily forgotten. "Is he now? Alone?"

"SOMETHING happened. He busted into the shed as a girl, changed back to a guy, then passed out on the floor. Still in his girl's uniform. You want me to take pics?"
Himura considered. "Hmmm… No, don't risk it. We don't know how heavy a sleeper he is. Make sure no one disturbs him, and see if you can't slip a boy's school uniform inside for him."

"What? Why?!"

Himura gave an exasperated sigh. "Because, my dear Hana… this is the opportunity I've been waiting for. He's vulnerable and alone now. Keep an eye on him and call me the moment he stirs. I will take care of the rest. Don't do anything to provoke him."

"He looks like he's out for the night…"

"Then grab a coffee and get comfortable. I'll send some backup to keep you company. Don't screw up this time." Himura thumbed the call closed without waiting for the reply.

"[The Godslayer is alone?]

"[Oh, you caught that?]" Himura said, mentally filing away the fact the Chinese girl understood Japanese far better than she spoke it. "[Yes. Ranma is having a bad night, apparently.]

"[I should tell the Elder,]

Himura reached up and caught her arm. "[Not yet, dear Tan."

For a moment Himura thought she had miscalculated. The looks of pure ice she received made her wonder if she had overstepped. She carefully withdrew her hand as casually as she could, maintaining her smile and eye contact.

Tan Pohn grunted and sat back now. "[For now. Don't forget, he belongs to us when this is all done."

"[Of course not,]" Himura said. "[The game is almost over, after all. Though if you're anxious to help things along, I'd like to ask a favor of you and your sisters…]

000 (Chapter 31 - The Cure, The Kiss, The Calamity End)
Ryouga stirred. He started to roll over, stopped himself to avoid disturbing whoever was sharing his bed with him, then realized that there was no one.

He opened his eyes slowly. He could see the ceiling of the Tendo's guest room through the gloom - the room that Ranma and Genma had lived in, and that he had slept in himself many times. It seemed he had it all to himself for once. It felt so empty.

I haven't been alone when I slept for a whole week, he realized. He shivered. It reminded him too much of endless nights alone in that beat up old tent, without anyone around for a hundred miles. The Link just made that reminder of being alone more acute. Perhaps one day solitude would be something he would crave again, but for right now, having finally had a break in the loneliness… of simply having someone else there… just being alone in a room at night felt depressing.

He stared another few minutes. It was late… or early… most likely the point where the two intersected. Dark. And probably pointless to try and sleep. He sat up and rubbed his eyes. He was exhausted but the emptiness of being alone in his own dreams echoed.

I would give anything to be a piglet in Akane's bed again, he thought with a hint of dark mirth. I'm right back where I started. All that bravado about how I'd rather be alone than live a lie anymore? Didn't even last a single night. You're PATHETIC, Hibiki.

He heard a soft groan and abruptly discovered that he wasn't alone after all.

To his left was a shape under the covers of another futon set close to his, but not touching it. He blinked, knowing he had been alone when he went to sleep. He carefully got on all fours and crept over to get a better look. The mass was far too small to be that of Genma Saotome, so who…?

Gingerly, he peeled back the covers, revealing familiar short brown hair.

Nabiki stirred and turned her head, blinking blearily. "Mnnn?"

"Ahh! S-sorry!" Ryouga threw himself backwards, wondering how he was going to explain being in Nabiki's room at night while she was sleeping, looming over her and pulling back her bedspread, before his brain caught up and pointed out that she was in his room. "W-wait… Nabiki? Why are you here?"

She groaned again and sat up slowly, rubbing at her eyes. She was wearing a light T-shirt and boxers, and looked a little rough. "Couldn't sleep alone." She gave him a sheepish look. "Sorry for disturbing you. I know I didn't ask, but…" She sighed and wrapped her arms around herself. "I guess I just got too used to not being alone at night."

"Yeah, you and me both," Ryouga muttered without thinking.

Nabiki raised an eyebrow, the old smirk coming back. "Well, if you needed a bed buddy, Ryo, you only had to ask…"

Ryouga stiffened, eyes widening. Then, he wasn't sure if it was the fatigue or something else but, something else managed to push past the initial mental short circuit; Annoyance.

"You know, I really wish you wouldn't do that," he muttered.
Nabiki blinked. "Do what?"

"The come ons!" Ryouga shot back. "Where... where you turn stuff around on me like that!"

Nabiki shrugged expressively. "I'm not teasing, Ryouga, I'm dead serious."

"Are you?" He scowled. "Then why do you always say it in a way that you know will make me lock up? It's that same sly come-on you use to put people off-balance." He sighed and closed his eyes. "I like the other Nabiki better."

"The... other Nabiki?" Nabiki repeated, confused.

"The Nabiki who likes photography. Who's earnest and enthusiastic and enjoys sharing something that interests her. The one you are when you're not trying to control things or stressing out because you're not in control of things. The one you were a minute ago when you said you came in here because you couldn't sleep, but you didn't just crawl into my futon because you respected my space."

Ryouga turned away for a moment, his voice dropping lower. "Besides... you know how Ranma feels about all this! You remember how twisted up she got when Shampoo kissed me! She's just barely okay with all of you being together because she knows how she feels about you and how you feel about her. She and I... aren't there right now. She's not ready, and I'm certainly not!" He noticed her stricken expression and closed his eyes. "Well, that's it. I've wrecked things with her. Good job, Hibiki.

Nabiki was silent. She wet her lips as she seemed to be weighing his words. Finally, softly, she said, "You're right. I'm sorry."

"I'm sorry, I'm... I'm tired and I-wait, what?" Ryouga said, head snapping up to give her an astonished look.

Nabiki shook her head and chuckled sadly. "When I take a second to think about it, you're right. I know damn well that you'll lock up when I do that. I know because I do stuff like that to make boys lock up." She drew her knees up to her chest and hugged them. "I shut Shampoo down because I knew it was wrong and that Ranma wasn't ready... then I go and do it myself when she's not looking, because, somehow, that does make it okay. I keep pushing because... I want it. And I keep using come ons because I won't actually take that step and be wrong... I keep trying to push you into doing it. I came in here promising myself I was going to be respectful and just try and sleep and it was okay as long as I gave you your space. And then, as soon as you showed some vulnerability, I turned it into a come on."

Ryouga swallowed, then carefully scooted over onto her futon, moving in a bit closer and kneeling. "L-look... I'm sorry, I didn't mean to snap like that." He rubbed the back of his head awkwardly. "I mean... I do messed up stuff like that when things get uncomfortable too. I just... usually resort to... well... violence..." He winced at that. Great, I just compared her flirting to me screaming 'Prepare to die!' and smashing things!

Nabiki gave him a shy smile. "I know. That's a little of what I like about you. We're... really very different, but under it all... a lot of who you are makes sense to me." She studied her hands a minute. "I... do like you, Ryouga. Not just as an extension of my relationship with Ranma. I'm just a mess at actually showing it."

"Yeah... well..." Ryouga looked away self-consciously. "I... haven't got room to talk there." He took a deep breath. "When Ranma comes home we should probably... y'know... talk about all this.
Assuming I haven't screwed things up with her, too."

She reached out and put a hand on his arm. "You haven't," she said earnestly. "Trust me. There's something wrong… but that wasn't a rejection."

"I still need to hear it from her," Ryouga said.

Nabiki nodded. "I know."

There was an awkward silence between them for a few moments.

"We… uh… should get back to bed," Ryouga said, struggling to suppress a yawn.

"Can… I stay?" Nabiki asked. She waved her hands quickly. "Not a come on. In my own futon, I swear, I just…" she looked away, "I don't like being alone." She laughed softly. "That's so weird for me to say. The Ice Queen can't sleep on her own anymore."

Ryouga nodded. "Yeah… Please do. I'd like it if you did. I'm the same way." He crawled back over to his own futon, sparing a glance to her before he slipped back under the covers.

She smiled over at him. "Hey, Ryouga?"

"Yeah?" He settled down himself.

"I like that you like 'other' Nabiki," she said. "I'm always afraid that no one will."

"Well… I can't speak of 'other people'. Just me," Ryouga replied. He closed his eyes. The sense of loneliness wasn't pressing in on him anymore, even without the Link. He was pretty sure he could sleep now.

"Hey, Ryouga?" Nabiki asked again.

"Mmmm?" Ryouga replied.

"Keep reminding me?"

"Of what?"

"To be… better, I guess?"

He was quiet for a time, then smiled to himself. "As long as you keep teaching me photography."

"Deal."

000

The door to Ucchan's slid open and three figures trudged tiredly inside.

"That was everywhere I could think of," Akane said, settling heavily into a seat in one of the booths. "Even the old campsite where Ranma trained to face off against Ryouga and the bakusai tenketsu."

"I'll make us some coffee then we can head back out," Ukyou said as she dragged herself behind the counter and pulled out her kettle and french press.

"Why we not check at school?" Shampoo asked, sitting down across from Akane.
"The school is bugged and watched all the time, and being on school grounds this late would give Himura a perfect excuse to come down on us," Akane muttered. "We went around the outside, but I didn't see anything on the grounds. We'll have to wait until morning so the groundskeeper can let us in to look."

"Until then… well, the Tendo Dojo and the Nekohanten are covered," Ukyou said. "I was expecting Konatsu to be back by now…" She sighed heavily.

"You mean he hasn't been?" Akane asked, curious.

"He left a note saying he was going out a few days ago. I don't normally press him. I think he's started spending time with someone and I didn't want to get in the way of that," Ukyou said, unconsciously busying herself with checking the supplies. "Things have been awkward between him and me since… well… Akane started coming home with me."

"Oooohhh…" Akane said, blushing and sinking down in her seat. "I… I should have realized! Poor Konatsu…"

"He's taken time off to go train before, which is fine. I can't really afford to pay him a proper wage so I tell him he can come and go as he pleases as long as he lets me know in advance." Ukyou set the kettle on the burner after filling it with water and started to load the French press. "He's usually only gone for a day or two."

"Ninja waitress strong," Shampoo said. "Can take care of own self. Have to trust strength for now until Airen safe."

"Ranma is even stronger and yet we're out searching for her," Akane retorted. "I mean… what could have set off the Neko-ken like that?"

"Ryouga mentioned something buried. Something behind the Neko-ken," Ukyou said thoughtfully. "We all know Genma Saotome is a piece of crap… what if the Neko-ken training wasn't the worst of it and Ranma just doesn't remember because it was before the Neko-ken happened?"

Akane shook her head. "I think it's related. Nabiki and I went through Genma's pack. We found some letters… just fragments of stuff, but they made it sound like he used the Neko-ken training on Ranma quite a bit. What if he was doing more than just trying to teach Ranma the Cat Fist?"

"Trying to sort out what idiot Panda skin rug-in-law thinking when do anything make Shampoo's head hurt," Shampoo muttered. She yawned and slumped back in the booth.

Ukyou slid in next to Akane with a tray with three mugs. "Well, we might as well relax for a bit. Since Konatsu isn't here to man the fort, we can wait here for a while to see if Ranma shows up. Then when it's morning we'll head to the school." She passed out steaming mugs to the other two and took the last for herself. "Just don't fall asleep on me. Morning isn't that far away, and we want to be ready to move in case Nabiki or Cologne call."

000

Nabiki stirred as she felt a buzzing under her ear.

She squeezed her eyes shut, groaning, but some part of her brain wouldn't let her block it out. Her hand was already reaching under the pillow, fishing for her phone. She rolled onto her back and tapped the answer key on the screen. "Mnnnn… hello, Ukyou? Did you find anything?"

"Not quite, boss," Daisuke's familiar voice came through instead of Ukyou's.
"Daisuke?" Nabiki's eyes opened fully. She sat up and cupped the phone to her ear. "Did you find something? Tell me you found something!"

"Oh, we found something," Daisuke replied. "We're... uhhh... not entirely sure just WHAT we found, but there is definitely weirdness in the Saotome Family Register. And we're not entirely sure that Himura was the one who caused it."

Nabiki blinked. "What do you mean?"

Daisuke could be heard audibly sighing on the other end of the line. "We're kinda hoping to get the documents to you and that you could figure it out, because it doesn't make a lot of sense to us. But... we've got a bit of a snag. The hall of records is still closed."

"And it doesn't open until Monday," Nabiki concluded. "Did you ask Alibaba for help?"

"We can't. I'm talking to you on one of the office phones here in the basement. We've got no cell phone signal and the guard is upstairs by the elevators so we can't get up and out," Daisuke replied.

Crap! I didn't think of that! Nabiki glanced at her phone. I didn't confirm the incoming number before answering, either. I'm getting sloppy. "All right, sit tight and I'll come get you. I'll just need to come up with an idea of how to do that." She glanced over to her right where Ryouga was sleeping. An brief image of Ryouga poking a wall and making it explode flitted through her mind before she firmly tamped it down. Brilliant, Nabiki. Have Ryo destroy part of a government building, in full view of who knows how many cameras. I'm sure Ranma would be overjoyed to learn you got him landed in prison for five to ten.

"Actually, boss, I've got an idea for that," Daisuke cut in. "We just need some outside help. Have you ever seen the American movie 'Ghostbusters'?"

000

Weekend shifts were pretty sweet.

The security guard lounged at the desk with his feet propped up, flipping through the newspaper as the small TV on the desk blared some mindless game show. Every so often he'd take a walk around the building, then go back to his reading. He had a couple of manga to go through once he was done with the newspaper.

Of course, his bosses would be a bit miffed if they learned that's what he was doing, so he fudged the patrol logs a little - particularly when it came to patrolling the basement levels.

No one patrolled those.

Well, there was Reo, but that old fool was crazy and what did he know? He only worked during business hours, when the lights were all on and there were people and noise.

The desk guard had been down there when it was quiet - when there was no one about. He had seen things... heard things. All of the guards had, especially the night crews and weekend crews. Reo had told them that it was nothing more than old noisy pipes, but the desk guard, he had heard stories.

This weekend had been particularly bad. He had been hearing faint voices - indistinct whispers - floating through the vents all weekend. He had heard from another guard that the building had been built atop an old shrine and that no priest would even come near the place because of the angry spirits the desecration had released. It was said that the ground had been broken for the foundation during World War II, and the very next day? Hiroshima.

There was nobody down there. He knew there was nobody down there. All of the records down there were a minimum of ten years out of date and had long since been digitized. Nobody had any reason to go down there.

He certainly wasn't going to go down there!

He rustled his paper and did his best to ignore the fact that the phone switchboard kept lighting up as if someone were making outgoing calls, or that he could hear, ever so faintly through the floor, some kind of machinery running from time to time.

He had heard the stories about the last guard who went down there alone.

He started so badly he almost fell backwards in his chair as someone hit the door buzzer for the main entrance. The desk guard frowned and took his feet off the counter. It was Sunday - there were no deliveries scheduled for today. He hit the intercom. "Front Desk Security."

"Hello. I'm from the Paranormal Investigation and Elimination Service. I was scheduled to come out today today to do an evaluation on this building?"

"Para-whatsis?" The desk guard frowned. "Wait, do you mean ghosts and stuff?"

There was a long sigh from the intercom. "Yes, if you MUST use the vernacular. Though that is a terrible oversimplification of the situation. There have been reports of disruptions at this location up to and including sightings of focuses and free-floating apparitions of class IV or greater, so my organization has been contracted by the government to ensure the location is suitably cleansed…"

The desk guard shook his head. "Okay, okay, woah, I'm coming to the front door, hang on." He got up, snagged his keyring from the wall hook and walked over to the front door.

The woman he saw through the glass door was not what he expected from the usual kooks who buzzed in. She was wearing a very smart looking brown miniskirt and blazer over a white dress blouse that was unbuttoned just enough for a glimpse of cleavage, and the outfit was tailored just snugly enough to show that she had some rather interesting curves under her businesslike facade. Long black hair framed a face dominated by a pair of shaded spectacles and she presented the general demeanor of a lawyer or government official. He unconsciously quickened his stride.

He unlocked the door and cracked it open. "How might I help you, Miss…?"

She tipped her shades down slightly. "I represent the firm of Venkman, Spengler, Stanz and Zeddemore. I was told this site was going to be prepared for me?" She pushed past him and strode with a frustrated sigh. "I can see the message wasn't passed down the chain. Not surprising when you're dealing with government work."

"Ummm… I… excuse me miss, but…" the desk guard stammered. He was momentarily distracted by the view as she walked smartly down the main reception hall.

She tugged on a pair of light gloves and pulled out a phone and a funny looking gizmo that she attached to it and started holding it up, frowning at the screen. "Hmmm. PKE readings are already spiking. I understand that the majority of the sightings or other incidents have been in the basement?"

"I… ummm… yes ma'am," the desk guard said. "I… uhh… I hate to be a bother, but if I could just
"I'll need to see the area of greatest concentration, of course. We'll need to do at least a preliminary survey of the site before we can begin to consider extraction, even if it's not properly prepared." She paused and looked at him. "Did they happen to at least set up the thermal imaging equipment?"

"Thermal… what…?" the guard parroted, confused. There was a thumping coming from downstairs, like those worrisome noises that had been happening all weekend, but now it was louder.

She sighed heavily, then walked back towards him, heels clacking on the tile. "You have been properly briefed, yes? And you've taken the proper precautions? Unprotected exposure to the site could be dangerous at this unstable stage."

"D-dangerous?" the guard stammered. "W-what… from ghosts?" He could hear a metallic tapping noise now, in addition to the thumping.

"What we are dealing with is a build-up of stagnant psychic residue that has been allowed to fester for far too long - leading to a structural deformation of the local space-time which has allowed a continual ectoplasmic feedback loop that could very well lead to a Class V Full Torso Repeater, so unless you are looking forward to being challenged to a death-duel by Miyamoto Mushashi nightly, then yes, you are in danger from ghosts." She resumed scanning with her phone. "Now, to your knowledge, was this building constructed on any sort of consecrated soil? A graveyard, perhaps, or a temple…?"

"I… uhh… I heard rumours of a shrine…?" the guard said nervously. He kept eying the elevators. They were starting to go up and down the floors on their own, starting from, of course, the basement.

"Mnnnh… that could be very bad… There is obviously significant agitation going on. Is it usually this bad?" She looked around.

"Umm… n-no, this is as bad as it's ever been. Usually the ghosts are pretty quiet…" the guard whimpered.

"Living Impaired, please. Most sentient and quasi-sentient apparitions find the appellation 'ghost' insulting. Especially if you're dealing with a kitsune or some other small kami who was never alive to begin with. Is there anyone else in the building?" She fixed him with a hard look.

"I… no, it's just me!" There were sounds of doors slamming downstairs and he found his knees were trembling slightly.

"Good. This site is growing increasingly unstable. Since they haven't properly briefed you on the situation, I strongly recommend you vacate the building until we can get an emergency containment team on site." She frowned at her phone. "This is actually very, very bad."

"B-but… if I leave the site without permission, I could lose my job!" he protested. There was a loud bang from the basement. "You know what? Nevermind! Screw this job! I'm just a part-timer anyway!" He turned and ran towards the door, pushed it open and sprinted into the street.

A few hours later he wondered if he had been scammed.
Nabiki walked from the building, twirling a ring of keys around her finger. She tossed them into a nearby mailbox (after making sure that it wasn't Tsubasa), then pulled off her wig and her gloves. The clamor of the building's fire alarm could be heard in the distance as the group walked.

"I have to admit, that was pretty awesome," Yuka said. "Do you... talk your way into places like that often?"

Nabiki smirked. "That's probably information you're better off not knowing." She pulled the bit of techno-junk off her phone and tucked it into her pocket. It was just a circuit board with some LEDs that plugged into the phone's power port and blinked at random, with some greebles glued on. It was amazing how much credibility a bit of custom-looking gadgetry with blinky lights could give to things. She tapped the dial button and brought the phone to her ear. "How are we doing?"

"The fire department is on their way," Alibaba's filtered voice replied. "Security camera footage for the last half hour has mysteriously ended up corrupted, both the originals and the backups uploaded to the archive site. I added some fun ghostly audio to it. The security guard will probably still lose his job, but with the fire alarm they can't penalize him for evacuating the building. He'll get the full two weeks severance and in another week he'll astonishingly get a job offer from ANOTHER security company he doesn't remember applying with."

"Awful lot of work just to get us back out," Hiroshi muttered.

"But it also saves us the trouble of cleaning up the mess in the basement," Daisuke replied.

"You wiped down everything you touched?" Nabiki asked.

"Everything," Yuka reassured her. "It wasn't hard. Anywhere the dust was disturbed we gave a once-over. That place probably hasn't been that clean in years."

"I'll keep an eye on it, but enough weird things have happened in that building over the years that it'll probably be written off, since no records are actually missing." Alibaba said. "Anything else I can do to help?

"Not for right now. Thanks for the assist," Nabiki replied.

"If you're ever interested in this line of work beyond our arrangement, we could use skills like yours,*" Alibaba suggested. "Just... putting that out there."

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "I'll... keep it under advisement." She tapped the phone screen to end the call and tucked it away. Industrial espionage as a career? Well... not like it's an option I haven't considered...

"So... about what we found..." Daisuke said.

"Not here," Nabiki said. "C'mon... let's go have a cup of tea. I know a place where we won't be bothered."

000

Ryouga awoke to find a note pinned to his blanket.

Gone out to get Daisuke, Yuka and Hiroshi out of a situation. If Ranma shows up, call me. Don't get lost. If you need anything, ask Kasumi. Back soon.

Love,
'Love', huh? he thought as he dressed and left the dojo. He knew not to read too much into the tagline, but it did make him think. There was certainly something between him and Nabiki. As it had been with Shampoo, there was this dawning realization that he had truly not been paying attention to the people around him.

He had decided to take a walk - an easy enough thing, except… it was the first time he had ever been able to do so, without ending up in Osaka or Oslo, or Omsk, or Oklahoma. It was a new sensation to be able to walk along a street and trust that he could turn around and it would take him back the way he had come.

I need to stay focused on Ranma before I worry about any of that, he decided. Maybe I should go looking for her myself? He still felt nervous about the idea of ranging too far afield. The route between his house and the Tendo Dojo was fresh in his mind and well-known, but the idea of going beyond that still worried him. He had been able to find his way without problem so far, but what if his directional problems came back while he was out searching?

Akane, Ukyou and Shampoo can find her, he thought finally after a brief internal struggle. I need to stay somewhere THEY can find ME.

He looked up and realized that in his reverie he had found his way to the vacant lot behind his house. He looked across it to see the windows of his own house on the far side. How on earth could I get lost going from there to here? he wondered, bewildered. He knew it made some kind of sense at the time, that everything had been twisted and confused and turned around; but now he could see why his inability to find his way was so maddening for other people.

I guess that's what having a demon in your brain will do to you, he thought, shuddering a bit at the memory. He narrowed his eyes a bit but couldn't tell if his mother was around the house or not. I hope the doctors figure out how to help Mom without having to go through THAT again.

His gaze passed over the empty lot, mysteriously unoccupied for many years, and finally fell on the retaining wall.

He frowned. I wonder… He walked over to a certain spot at the wall and started to tug at the bricks.

At first he thought someone had re-mortared the loose bricks but, after a bit of wiggling, the ancient masonry started to come free. He put the brick aside and reached into the hollow behind it. His fingers brushed something and he carefully pulled it out.

It was a sandwich bag, the kind that had the sealable top, and inside was a sloppily folded piece of paper. The bag was filthy and still damp, covered with years of slime and gunk, but it was still sealed.

Ranma really did leave me a note, he thought with some amazement. He opened the bag carefully, the plastic brittle and yellowed with age. He pulled the paper out and unfolded it. It was one of the lined sheets from an old school notebook, torn out and covered with a familiar, nearly illegible scrawl.

He felt a pang of regret as he read the first line. He turned and leaned against the wall and sighed. I hated him for so long. He knew… He knew I wanted to do it on my own. He kept reading, feeling a nostalgic ache as Ranma mentioned their times together. I miss him. Why does it feel like I'm thinking about a friend who's died? he wondered. I guess… our relationship is so different now.
The next line gave him pause, though. He frowned and re-read the paragraph to make sure he was interpreting Ranma's terrible handwriting right. The next paragraph was no better. Something wrong with his body? What...?

Then he finished the last paragraph. He flipped over the sheet to find the last line Ranma had written.

All the blood drained from his face.

That's not possible, he thought. He turned and looked at the wall that he had pried the brick from; the moss on the grout had grown to cover even the loose brick, partially cementing it in place. That's why it had been so tough to remove. No one had opened this hidden spot for three years.

How can Ranma have written this two years before ever reaching Jusenkyo?! He stared at the letter again.

Hastily, he folded the letter, stuffed it into his pocket and stood up. I have to find her... I have to find her NOW!

000

Nabiki scowled at the set of photocopied documents.

She liked her ledgers balanced. She liked it when things added up. Most of the time she could look at a situation and figure out what was going on, so much so that it was often frustrating how oblivious other people could be to what was utterly obvious. Things always added up.

What she had in front of her? It didn't add up.

They were all seated around a table at the Clara's Leaf tea shop. Daisuke, Yuka and Hiroshi had been distracted by Jiro's tea-guessing ritual, which left Nabiki a few moments to peruse the material they'd uncovered.

One was official-looking, standard government-issue, filled out by someone who filled out such forms on a daily basis. She didn't know enough about medical jargon to decipher a lot of it, but the gist was clear: Nodoka was admitted to Nerima General in labor, the decision was made to perform a Cesarean Section because of complications, and a baby girl was delivered at 4:13 AM.

The other was the standard form filled out by midwives who conducted the more traditional births, which made sense for someone like Nodoka. It was filled out competently, even if the handwriting was a little shaky, and listed Nodoka as the mother, Genma as the father, and outlined the birth of a baby boy at 4:13 AM. Birth weight and other specifics were the same; the only differences were hair color and, obviously, gender.

"So... it's pretty obvious one of these sheets was cribbed from the other," Nabiki said with a scowl. She had a bad feeling and she didn't like it.

"My money is that whomever Himura hired to forge the Nerima General document got too fancy for their own good." Hiroshi said, sipping his tea.

"Yeah, but look at the midwife certificate," Daisuke pointed at it with his spoon. "See how the handwriting changes? It's like someone else filled out the rest of it afterwards."

"That's not unusual," Yuka said. "They pre-fill most of the fields before the birth even takes place, so they just have to record the specifics after. I have a cousin who works as a midwife."
"Well, we know Ranma is a guy, right Nabiki?" Hiroshi said, looking to her for confirmation. "Just from how the curses work, right?"

Nabiki set her jaw. Things were falling into place in her head and the picture they were forming was one she didn't like. "I used to think that before. Then some crazy prince from China came along with a ladle." She pushed her chair out and stood, fishing her phone from her pocket. "There's only one person who can answer this question. Come on, we're going to have a chat with Nodoka Saotome."

"But… we've not finished our tea…" Hiroshi said, glancing at his cup mournfully.

"Next one is on me," Nabiki replied as she strode out the door. For some reason she didn't get very good cell reception in the Tea Shop. She suspected Jiro had some sort of signal jammer to avoid distractions to his customers. She dialled home.

"Hello, Tendo Residence!"

"Kasumi, is Ryouga there?" Nabiki asked. She mentally started plotting a route to the Saotome residence as she walked.

"Oh, hello Nabiki. Ryouga went out for a walk. Is something wrong?"

Nabiki slowed to a stop and stared at her phone. She brought it back to her ear. "He went for a walk!? Kasumi…!"

"I DID ask him to stop, but he was already halfway out the door," Kasumi replied, seeming to sense her concern. "He appeared to be managing a straight line, and was walking towards his house. You DID say you had a cure for his directional issues, didn't you? I thought it wasn't a problem any longer?"

"It doesn't seem like it's a problem anymore, but we don't know for sure. But that's only part of the problem. When he gets back, tell him I need him at the Saotome residence. Bring him there yourself if you have to."

"Why? What's happened?" Kasumi asked, a note of worry creeping into her voice.

"Hopefully? Nothing. But I want him there anyway. I'll explain later, sis. Gotta go." She ended the call then started dialing again.

"Hello, Ucchan's…" a tired-sounding Ukyou picked up the call after too many rings.

"Ukyou, are Akane and Shampoo still with you?" Nabiki asked.

"Nabiki? Yeah, yeah they are. Uhhh… we kinda fell asleep trying to… not fall asleep. What time is it?"

"About midday. I'm assuming you didn't find Ranma?" Nabiki said, quickening her stride once more.

"No, but we narrowed it down. We think she's at the school. Or... WAS at the school, anyway. We couldn't check without breaking a mess of rules. We were gonna go this morning, but…"

Nabiki blew out a breath in frustration. "I get it, Ukyou. Just go now, quickly, and then meet me at the Saotome residence whether you find Ranma or not. I've got a potential bomb on my hands."
"… a LITERAL bomb, or…" Ukyou's tone was more worried than joking.

"Metaphorical, but potentially worse than actual explosives would be," Nabiki replied. "Just hurry."

"We'll be there. And… sorry sugar. For letting you down."

Nabiki took a deep breath, calmed herself and reminded herself she was dealing with family, not employees. "It's all right. You're human and you've had a very long night, and I spent it in a soft bed, so I don't get to judge. Just hurry."

"Will do, sugar."

Nabiki ended the call and put her phone away. She was regretting the heels that came with her disguise now. Damnit, please, for once let me be totally off base about this!

000

Ranma woke up with an awful taste in his mouth. The instant he moved, the abused muscles of his neck screamed in protest as his spine finally shifted out of its unnatural bent. He groaned and took a few quick, short breaths. His chest felt constricted.

Where am I? He slowly, painfully worked himself up to a sitting position. Wherever he was was dark, what light there was filtering in from an open door.

He shifted and realized he was in his male form, but still wearing his girl's uniform. He grunted, reached back and popped the clasp on the bra, which immediately reduced the pressure on his chest. Ugh… why am I a guy in girl's clothes? He got up carefully and walked to the door, mindful of anyone seeing him as he was.

There was a bundle of clothing by the door. He knelt to examine it: a set of boxers and a Furinkan Boy's uniform. He checked the tags and they seemed to be in his size. Who would leave this here? he wondered. He didn't own a Furinkan school uniform, so why would there be one in his size just sitting here?

He nudged the door closed, deciding to get properly dressed before facing whatever was waiting for him outside. He changed clothes rapidly, using the quick-swap technique he had mastered. He folded the girl's uniform and underthings and set them aside, planning to retrieve them later.

This is the schoolyard shed, Ranma thought, recognizing it from when he and Nabiki had taken refuge inside it. That means I'm on school grounds as a guy. I should change back. He glanced back at the tap but felt a sudden surge of apprehension. There was something bad connected with being a girl right now - something far too close to the surface. *No, you know what? It's Sunday. There's no school and no teachers to bust me, and it wouldn't even be legit if they did! I already got changed… I'll just stay this way. I've been spending too much time as a girl anyway."

Something itched at the back of his mind. Not so much something he had forgotten, but something he was very deliberately trying to avoid remembering at the moment. He opened the door again and peeked outside.

There was a figure standing outside the door, hands clasped behind her back. Tall, blonde, wearing a nondescript white blouse and a blue skirt, with a large designer purse slung over her shoulder. She wore a mirthless smile that didn't reach her eyes which reminded him of a doll's mask.

"Himura," he said, stepping out of the shed. "I guess you got me, huh?"
"Hmmm?" Himura raised an eyebrow. "Oh! Being on school grounds as a boy! I think we both know that since school isn't in session that would be a flimsy premise. Although…" she leaned a bit to the side to peer at the door behind him. "It does look like you've done a number on that door. Still, hardly the worst damage you've caused to school property."

"I'm sure you could spin it if you really wanted to." Ranma replied carefully. "So what do you want? If you were gonna bust me over this you'd pull me into the Principal's office on Monday with a couple of photos. You hardly ever say 'boo' to me - you've got your minions to do that."

Himura laughed lightly. "Ranma, Ranma, Ranma… You silly goose! I've been respecting your space!"

"Uh huh. Respect," Ranma replied dryly. "Care to try again?"

Himura sighed dramatically and started to pace. "Ranma, I know we got off on the wrong foot, you and I. I had simply mistaken you for another dumb jock who was causing an undue amount of chaos and damage to my precious school. I admit… I came on strong and I was very confrontational."

"You threatened to get me charged with sexual assault," Ranma shot back in a low growl. "As a martial artist you use what weapons you have, yes? That was what I had. You'll forgive me if I was somewhat inelegant in my approach." She turned to face him. "But as I learned more about you… as I looked into your past… I learned that you were so much more than what I thought. I found there are secrets there that even you aren't aware of."

Ranma blinked then a look of horror passed across his face. "Please tell me we're not engaged…"

Himura broke out laughing. Much to Ranma's surprise it was actual, genuine laughter, not the scornful, manufactured titter in which she normally indulged. He actually found his guard dropping a bit.

"No… no… absolutely not!" she chuckled, regaining her composure as she wiped away a tear. "Though, learning about your father's activities I can see why that's a legitimate fear for you and not just the chauvinism I originally felt you were guilty of." She took a few steps closer, eyes locked onto his. "But even if we were engaged it wouldn't matter. It wouldn't be legal. None of your engagements are legal… save one."

Ranma blinked, wanting to step back but realizing his back was to the shed. "Uhhh… you mean to the Tendos?"

Himura smirked. "No." She opened her purse and pulled out what looked like a very old scroll. "Perhaps we should go sit down? I could have my driver take us to that local ice cream shop you frequent?"

Ranma's eyes narrowed. He folded his arms. "Honestly? I'd rather you just get to the point."

Himura shrugged. "All right. Though I think you'll really rather have sat down first. Here, catch." She tossed the scroll to him.

He caught it by reflex. For a moment he was worried it was some sort of spell trap meant to ensnare him, but there was no crackle of energy nor the tingle of a spell taking effect. He examined it suspiciously.
"I'm no Amazon. My family deals in pharmaceuticals, not magic," Himura said. "Open it. Take a look. The translation is rough and, regrettably, defaces the original document, but your father has little respect for such things I understand."

"Pops?" Ranma unfurled the scroll. The bottom third of the scroll looked like it had been mended, as though that section had been torn away and re-attached, but most of it was clear, if a bit faded. It was in Mandarin with notes and translations scrawled in his father's recognizable handwriting.

"Evidently he reads Chinese better than he lets on. Or he had someone do the translations for him. But I've had them checked and they're competent enough to get the meaning across," Himura said as Ranma read. "I found it quite by chance while researching your path from China to Nerima. He pawned it at a curio shop shortly after you landed. Thankfully it was still there when I arrived. Seems there's not much market for defaced ancient Chinese scrolls."

Ranma's eyes widened as he read. He recognized some of the words without needing the translations. Jusenkyo. Spring of Drowned Man. "What is this…?"

"Approximately eighteen hundred years ago, during the time of the Three Kingdoms, a nobleman with aspirations to the… Shu throne I think it was? There was so much intrigue going on then it was hard to tell… Anyway, he had aspirations but needed a male heir. Sadly, he had only daughters. Back then, Jusenkyo was already old, and Jusendo was powerful. Few dared to travel there. But he dared and, with water from the cursed springs, an alchemist who served him created a special potion. A simple Jusenkyo curse would not suffice, for in those days there were those skilled in Chi reading who would be able to spot such things. He needed more - a complete shift of mind and body." She sighed. "He never got to test his concoction, for the noble and his entire family were assassinated a few days after the formula was completed. Something about it being unhealthy to be obviously and publically vying for someone else's throne."

"So… then this is a cure?" Ranma asked, frowning.

"Oh, it could certainly be used as such. From what I've gathered, it bypasses the whole messy issue of curses mixing. But I wouldn't recommend it for you." She took another few steps forward while he was distracted.

"Why not?" Ranma frowned. "If it's not a cure then what's it got to do with me?"

"Before I tell you… just remember everything you've gone through," Himura intoned, her eyes intent on his. "Remember how I forced you to attend school as a girl. Remember how I arranged matters so you would have a circle of female friends, so you could evolve and develop as a woman. Remember how I have looked the other way while you have breached our agreement a dozen times over. I did all of these things for your benefit, so that you would be ready for this moment."

Ranma felt a cold knot forming in the pit of his stomach. "L-look… whatever you're trying to say, whatever it is you're trying to pull… I'm not buying it, okay? After everything you've done… you're a Yakuza Princess!"

"And you're the child of a thief and a liar," Himura replied softly. "Perhaps more. Child trafficker, certainly, with as many times as he sold you. I don't expect you to believe I did the things I did out of the goodness of my heart. I just need you to believe what I tell you next to be true. This potion will not cure you, Ranma… because you have already taken it."

Ranma blinked. He realized that she was far too close for comfort. "What?" he hissed harshly.

"Look at the scroll. Look at the list of ingredients. Remember your path through Japan. The ingredients listed there grow in very specific places in Asia and Genma's path over those fourteen years covers all of that ground. Your 'training journey' was a quest to gather rare and difficult to obtain components, many of which grew in Japan… but… not all. Have your Amazon friends verify that, if you wish, I'm sure they know of most of these items." Her voice was low, intense and hard to ignore.

"No…" Ranma backed up against the door of the shed, pushing it closed. He shook his head. "No!"

"The start of this trail is in your own Family Register. On it are two Ranma Saotomes; one male and one female. Both were born at the exact same time, to the exact same woman, but in two completely different places. Two years later, your father left home with one child and your mother was left alone. There is no death certificate for the 'lost sibling'. Genma already had the scroll at that point. His path took him all over Japan, gathering ingredients, until, finally, he travelled to China to gather the last few…"

"No! I'd remember!" Ranma shouted, staring at her in horror.

"Would you? Some of these ingredients are powerful hypnotics. They make the memory plastic; they help the mind adapt. Memories can be changed, reshaped or pushed away entirely," Himura pressed on. "That Korean businessman who your father sold you to? He bought a girl from Genma Saotome. I acquired documentation of that transaction from my Triad contacts."

"That's… that's just… Pops just lied to him is al!" Ranma protested desperately. "I've got a curse! Cold water cursed form, hot water real form! I'm a guy!"

"And you've never encountered anything that altered the curses or how they worked?" Himura asked sweetly. "Why would a third-rate martial artist from Japan travel all the way to China, to a legendary training ground, without knowing anything about what made it legendary? Why not take the scroll and ask him yourself?"

Ranma's eyes flicked down to the scroll in his hands, then back up to her. "This is a trick. I know it is!" he snarled.

Himura's smile showed far too many teeth. "How does the line go? 'Search your feelings, you know it to be true'!" She chuckled dryly. "You'll discover the truth soon enough. When you do, come find me. We have much to discuss."

He glared at her for a moment longer thenshouldered past, sprinting in the direction of the Saotome home.

Himura watched him go with a smile on her lips. Finally, she pulled a phone from her purse and brought it to her ear.

"Hello, Sanae. I have a job for you and Omi. Tell our new friends… 'Game On'."

000

Nabiki hesitated at the front door of the Saotome residence.

"Something wrong, boss?" Daisuke asked. He, Yuka and Hiroshi were watching her expectantly.

"I was hoping Ryouga or the girls would be here," Nabiki admitted. "I… don't get along well with Nodoka Saotome."

"I don't think I've ever met her," Daisuke commented. "She anything like Ranma's Dad?"
"Ranma's Dad is just lazy, selfish and criminally neglectful," Yuka muttered. "Nodoka Saotome is crazy."

Nabiki took a deep breath then rapped smartly on the door.

She waited for three breaths. Then ten.

She knocked again. Nothing.

"Is… she not home?" Hiroshi asked, peering at the door.

"I thought I heard voices from the yard…” Yuka said with a nod toward the fence.

Nabiki frowned. _If I push, I'm going to blow any chance to resolve the Omiai. But… my gut tells me that's not going to happen anyway._ She took a breath and nodded. _When it doubt, always go with your gut._ She reached out and tried the door.

It opened without issue; unlocked.

"Boss…?" Daisuke said nervously. "Should we be…?"

She could hear voices from the living room. Nodoka Saotome for certain, and…

_No…!_ Nabiki's steps quickened as she threw caution and stealth to the wind and barged into the living room.

Nodoka looked up from where she was sitting on her couch. Seated across from her was the other voice she had heard - Kodachi Kuno, dressed in a formal kimono. On the coffee table between them was a sheaf of papers - what looked very much like a contract.

"Nabiki! I didn't hear you knock," Nodoka said, the flicker of annoyance on her face quickly covered by a mask of forced pleasantry. "You know, you really shouldn't barge into other people's houses, dear…"

Nabiki's eyes narrowed. "That's a marriage contract, isn't it?" she nodded towards the sheaf of papers. For the moment, the Family Registry inconsistencies were washed aside under a wave of fresh outrage as she realized what had almost happened behind her back.

Nodoka drew in a deep breath through her nose, straightened and picked up her teacup. She took a sip and sighed. "I had hoped to break the news to you and the other girls in a more relaxed environment once all the arrangements were out of the way…"

"You mean after Ranma is safely married and we don't have a say anymore?" Nabiki shot back.

Nodoka levelled a cold glare at her. "You mean as opposed to the immoral arrangement you suggested to me?" She turned her gaze to Kodachi and smiled. "Ko-chan, can you believe Nabiki proposed a group marriage to me?" She laughed lightly then returned her gaze to Nabiki. "Did you think I would accept your taking my son with you to China to live in some… some hedonistic cult commune!? I did not wish to mention it out of respect to your father, but I can see that perhaps he and I should have a chat about the obvious emotional problems you and Akane seem to have." She set her teacup down. "In the meantime, I think it's best if you leave. I will be by the Dojo shortly to collect my son and his things. I'll see you out now."
Kodachi turned to look at Nabiki. Nabiki noticed that her usual haughty expression was absent. Instead her gaze was intense, as if trying to communicate something. "Nabiki Tendo, this is for the best. I will ensure my darling Ranma is well looked after. We can settle this matter later." She put special emphasis on the last part.

Nabiki furrowed her brow. Maybe Kodachi isn't totally taken in by this, but I can't afford to risk that. Sorry Kodachi... She looked over at Nodoka, who had picked up her cloth-wraped katana and was walking towards her. "I would like one last request before I go, as Ranma's former fiancee?"

Nodoka sighed impatiently. "I cannot promise anything, young lady, but... very well. What is it? Ko-chan and I are very busy. I haven't time for foolish-"

"Let me see your cesarean scar," Nabiki said coldly.

The sudden draining of color from Nodoka's face was all the confirmation Nabiki needed.

"It's there, isn't it," Nabiki continued softly. She took a step forward, forcing Nodoka back a pace.

"It's... You should leave now," Nodoka said, regaining some composure.

Nabiki tossed the folder she had been holding onto the coffee table, on top of the contract. "In that folder is a copy of the Saotome Family register, as well as the birth records for one 'Ranma Saotome'. Or, should I say two Ranma Saotomes? One, a boy, born to Nodoka Saotome at home in a midwife-assisted birth. The other, a girl, born at Nerima General Hospital at exactly the same time, by cesarean section. Two Ranma Saotomes on the Family Register, one male, one female." Nabiki took another step forward, forcing the older woman back further. "So... let's see that bellybutton, Mrs. Saotome. Prove me wrong. Prove me crazy."

"I... I don't have to show you anything, you disturbed child!" Nodoka glared at her but her composure had cracked. "Leave now before I call the authorities!"

"What is this...?" Kodachi asked, eyes wide as she flipped through the contents of the folder.

"They're just clever forgeries by a clever girl who is desperate and knew she was about to lose, Ko-chan!" Nodoka hurried towards her, trying to snatch the folder and its contents away.

Kodachi held them back, out of reach, staring at Nodoka like she had grown a second head. "This has to do with Ran, doesn't it? What have you done? What are you plotting?!" Her gaze narrowed into a glare.

"I... have no idea what you're talking about!" Nodoka said, laughing nervously. "My dear, you mustn't believe these silly fantasies!"

"How did you do it?" Nabiki demanded. "Jusenkyo had something to do with it, didn't it? What did you do!?"

"Why don't you tell them?"

Nodoka froze. Her eyes widened in fear and she spun.

Nabiki turned to see Ranma standing there. He was wearing a Furinkan boy's uniform and in one hand he held a scroll - a very old scroll. He appeared calm on the surface, but the familiarity Nabiki had developed with him allowed her to see the tremors that betrayed just how close to the edge he really was.
Ranma tossed the scroll onto the floor, where it unrolled. Nodoka's eyes widened further and she recoiled from it physically.

"Where... where did you get that?" she whispered in hushed horror.

"It's all true, isn't it?" Ranma said softly. "You and Pops. You've lied to me my whole life. Brainwashed me. Used magic to change what I was." His jaw trembled. "Why?!

Nodoka glanced from Nabiki to Kodachi to Ranma. A hundred different emotions passed across her face. It was disturbing, like an animatronic that had malfunctioned. Finally, slowly, they all drained away. The fear in her eyes faded until there was only contempt left in its place.

"It pains me, Ranma, the disrespect you show by intruding into affairs that are none of your concern." Nodoka turned to face her son, her expression cold and unforgiving.

"Not my concern?" Ranma echoed incredulously. "How can it not...

"Must a parent account to their child for correcting a birth defect?" she said softly, though there was an undertone of menace to her words.

"Birth defect?!" Ranma yelped, his own composure slipping. "I was born a girl! You knew Pops was doing this! That's why you let him take me!"

"He didn't take 'you'!" Nodoka snarled. She took a step forward, kicking the scroll aside. Something about her demeanor made her seem taller, more menacing. "I have tolerated quite enough disobedience from you, Ranma. After all your father and I have done for you!" Making a visible effort to calm herself, she continued more softly, though the ice in her tone persisted, "Congratulations. You and your little friends have managed to uncover parts of the truth. Truths your father and I have kept hidden for your own good! Truths you are going to be sorry for knowing!" She shook her head. "I had wanted to spare you this, my son, and to let you live your life in happy ignorance. I was willing to accept you!"

Ranma narrowed his eyes. "What?! Accept me? Accept me? You and Pops changed me!"

"You will not raise your voice to me in my own house!" Nodoka roared with enough force to momentarily silence everyone else in the room. "You simply don't understand, do you? Of course you don't! You were never meant to!" She waved at him. "All of this... It's all a delusion of yours! Your father did not take you when you were two years old because you were only born two years ago!"

Ranma blinked and took a step back. "What are you talking about...?"

"Before that creature was born, I made a vow to your Grandfather. To secure his blessing to marry Genma, I vowed that I would produce a male heir to carry on the family legacy. I swore, Ranma. I swore on my honor, and I did everything right!" Her voice trembled with barely suppressed fury. "I prayed! I followed all the rules of motherhood to ensure a strong male heir... kept warm, bound my belly tightly, ate only the proper foods... and then that... that wretched red-haired thing not only usurped my son's rightful place, but she tore my womb when they sought to remove her like the parasitic tick that she was! I was robbed of my son!"

She swallowed and took a moment to regain her center, her expression becoming a mask of steely indifference. "I wanted to simply choke her in the crib. No one would have blamed me... she was such a hateful thing... but Genma pled for her life. For that, at least, you should be grateful as otherwise you wouldn't even be here! Thankfully... thankfully, some years earlier, Soun had gifted your father that scroll. I'm sure he meant it as a joke at the time, but... it offered us hope. So my sweet Genna took the changeling that had taken your place on a long journey - to bring you back."

"What do you mean... what did you..." Ranma stammered, eyes wide with horror.

"The girl who once bore your name died when your father used that potion," Nodoka said. "The potion was meant to bring you into the world, my son, the child I was meant to have. And it was to banish that terrible girl into the abyss, where she belonged. Her sacrifice was to undo the mistake of her birth... perhaps even bring her tormented soul some peace and purge her of her sins. But your father botched it, of course. Her spirit lingered. She infected you. Corrupted you. She's haunted you with her form and the delusion that she is you. And being what you are, you were so easily influenced by her lies. Don't you see? She is trying to steal back the life that we reclaimed from her to make you!"

Ranma shook his head. "No, that doesn't make sense... What...?"

"Ranma... you're a homunculus." Nodoka said. There was a cruelty in her even tone and gentle smile. "You're not human. You have no soul. You have no memories, no feelings, no desires of your own. You're a thing of magic, made to fulfill the destiny of the Saotome clan. You only think that you're real."

"No!" Ranma shouted in horrified defiance. "I'm human! I'm a person!"

"Tch." Nodoka clucked her tongue sadly. "All of these obsessive girls surrounding you... I fear they've confused you, my son. Your father and I must also accept some of the blame. We loved you as our son. We gave you your memories. We treated you with respect and with kindness. We gave you freedom, and we allowed you to believe you were a person. I see now that wasn't what you needed from us." She took another step forward. "Go to your room and wait for your father to get home, so we can decide what we are going to do about this."

Ranma backed away. "N-no... No! I'm not doing what you tell me to anymore!"

"Obey me, Ranma," Nodoka said, her voice tight and cold as she advanced on him further. "After all that we have done for you... after all that we have sacrificed for you... how dare you refuse this simple request? We will need to discuss how best to teach you gratitude."

"Leave him alone!" Nabiki shouted. She could feel a buzzing in her head. It started as a low growl, but swelled rapidly into a high pitched wail that rattled around in her skull. It was making it hard to focus. She grimaced... too much emotion...

Ranma tripped and lost his balance, stumbled back and knocked a flower vase off the shelf behind him. The water spilled over his head, triggering the curse and, now female, Ranma fell to sprawl gracelessly on the floor.

"And there she is," Nodoka said softly as her face twisted into a sneer. "'Ranko', the little thief who isn't done stealing from me, even in death. So you retreat into the fantasy? You take on that haunted, wretched form? What makes you think that if some of your memories are false that they all aren't? What do you remember clearly before you came out of that pool? Nothing. You didn't even remember me."

Nabiki glanced over as she heard Kodachi scream and saw her wide-eyed look of shock. Of course... NOW she gets the curse! Nabiki thought, though it was a struggle to do so. She knew she needed to do something, to stop this, but the screaming in her head...
"Did you think that girl whose body you stole was some kind of victim? That she was some poor, abused waif, unloved by her cruel parents?" Nodoka growled, advancing as Ranma scrabbled back, unable to get her feet under her. "She was a heartless little monster from birth! I could see it in her eyes! She was always glaring at me, with nothing but ice in her soul! She would never laugh, was always crying, always struggling and fighting me in even the smallest of things! She took from me and took, and would never give anything back until we forced her to! Is that what you wish to be?"

Nodoka put her hands on her hips and glared at the girl cowering before her. "She stole her life from me… the life that rightfully belonged to my son! And now that I've given it to you, you think that you can repeat her crime!?" She started tugging at the wrappings of her katana. "That life of yours is stolen twice over! I demand you return it to me. If you won't accept the duty of a son of the Saotome line, then pick up your tanto and return it to the earth!"

"NO!" Ranma whimpered, scooting back. "Nooo…!" But her spirit was broken, her defiance replaced by the anguish of a terrified young girl. "Please…!"

Nabiki clutched her head and sank to her knees as the keening in her skull got too loud to bear. And behind that keening she could hear something else… something that sounded like… cats?

"I hope you're happy. You'll be ending your father's life as well. He, at least, has some honor. He understands duty!" she hissed. "When have you ever shown even the slightest regard for it? Maybe it's for the best that you die wearing that face. You're just like her!"

Ranma scrambled to her feet, backing through the door and into the yard, eyes wide and wild. She was hyperventilating and a soft mewling escaped her lips.

"So you are going to run away?" Nodoka sniffed scornfully. "Do you think people will ever accept you like we have? You're a thing, Ranma! People will be able to tell! They'll know. You'll know! You'll never have a normal life, male or female!" She folded her arms, katana tucked between them as she glowered. "Go on then. Run. Prove that you're no better than she was! Be the selfish little bitch she was always destined to be! But don't think that the Tendos will accept you now, knowing what you are!"

Slowly and deliberately, Nodoka turned her back on Ranma. "I hope you're happy with your choices, Ranma. I honestly do."

There was a gulping sob and a flurry of motion as Ranma disappeared over the fence. Nodoka closed her eyes and forced herself to relax, then started to methodically rewrap her katana.

"Well… that was unpleasant," Nodoka said airily. She readjusted her hair as she set the katana down against the wall. "I am sorry you had to see that, Ko-chan. Nabiki, I hope that you are happy, and I expect both of you to keep this to yourselves. This is private Saotome family business and not something to be spread about! Not that anyone would believe you, since…"

Nodoka was cut off as Nabiki slapped her hard across the face and knocked her to the floor.

The older woman stared up at the middle Tendo in shock, her mouth opening and closing, though no sound came out.

"You are very fortunate that I am not my younger sister," Nabiki snarled. Her eyes glinted with hatred. Her head had cleared the moment Ranma had run away. In her free hand she clutched the scroll and the folder of documents. "And you are very unfortunate as well. I am going to make sure you pay for this, and I am far more creative than my sister is."
Nabiki glanced at the spot where Kodachi had been huddled, but the Kuno girl was gone. Likely she'd fled during the storm of Nodoka's displeasure. Nabiki turned and walked out without another word, only pausing at the door as she heard Nodoka's voice.

"He'll never forgive you for this, you know." Nodoka's voice dripped like venom from behind her. "He would never have known if it hadn't been for your meddling. He could have lived a normal life. It is your selfishness that has ruined him, not mine."

Nabiki didn't answer. She simply opened the door and stalked out. She ignored Hiroshi, Daisuke and Yuka's demands to know what had happened as she strode past them and down the street.

Thankfully, she managed to get around the corner and out of sight before she collapsed against a nearby tree and nearly passed out.

000

Ukyou paused a bit in her roof hopping, came to a stop and leaned against a chimney as she felt a brief wave of vertigo.

"Qina de okay?" Shampoo asked as she landed next to her, then stumbled a bit. "Oooh… dizzy…"

"I feel it too," Akane added, coming up behind them.

The three of them exchanged a glance.

"The Link?" Ukyou asked. "Did something happen, do you think?"

"Nabiki said that when Ryouga was getting depressed she could feel it without touching him," Akane said. "But I don't see him anywhere."

"Is linked to ki," Shampoo said. "Shagua or Airen have too too much. Would be one of them."

"So… given what happened last night, probably Ranchan then," Ukyou said, looking around. "Anyone got a sense which way it came from?"

"Dizzy' doesn't exactly have a direction. That's kind of the point," Akane muttered. She looked around carefully. "Ummm… maybe that way?"

As she gestured, something silvery nicked her arm and embedded itself in the chimney - a polished throwing dagger.

"What the hell⁉️" Ukyou darted back and drew her battle spatula, eyes searching the rooftops as Akane and Shampoo did the same.

Their assailants weren't hard to spot. There were six of them in colorful chinese martial arts garb. One, whose long silvery hair hung down her back in twintails, was idly flipping another dagger, identical to the one that had just been thrown.

"Su Tzu!" Shampoo growled, recognizing the silver-haired girl.

"[Hello 'sister',]" The Amazon identified as Su Tzu said. "[Tan Pohn sends her regards.]

"[Why did you attack us!?]" Shampoo demanded.

"[Oh, that wasn't an attack. If it had been, your pet there would be missing her head,]" Su Tzu said. "[You've gotten lax in your training with these weak Outsiders. I'm just trying to get your attention."
"We need you to stay clear of the Godslayer."

"[What? Why would I stay away from Airen?!]" Shampoo snarled.

"[Oh, that little thing has been annulled. He's not your 'Airen' anymore. He belongs to the Joketsuzoku now. You failed to claim him too many times. Lo Shan has come to claim him for the village.]" She sighed, sounding bored. "[I've been told that, in light of your former status as Heir, I'm to extend amnesty to you should you agree to not interfere.]"

"[You're planning a coup against Great Grandmother?!]" Shampoo was incredulous.

"[You've been gone a year, sister,]"] Su Tzu said, giggling. "[The Council of Elders removed Khu Long from her position of authority six months ago! Provisionally, of course, but I imagine that once Lo Shan returns with the Godslayer… among others… that will become permanent."

"[You are insane if you think we're going to sit by and let you take him!]" Shampoo said with another growl.

Ukyou narrowed her eyes. "Heads up Akane, I think we're fighting."

Su Tzu's grin widened. She caught the blade. "[Perfect. I was hoping for a chance at payback after you cheated in the last match we had.]"

"[Why not challenge me again, and see how much of a 'cheat' it was?]" Shampoo called out, raising her voice so the other Amazons were sure to hear. "[Loser backs down?]"

Su Tzu laughed. "[Don't be ridiculous, sister. All Rules of Challenge have been suspended for the duration. This is a War Party.]" She gestured and more Amazons began to pop up on nearby rooftops. Seven… eight… ten… twelve. "[You lost your right to a fair fight ages ago. Now I'm going to get my satisfaction just beating your face in.]

"Shampoo?!" Akane said nervously, noticing the reinforcements. "What are we doing?"

Ukyou looked around. A dozen opponents. Most of them armed. Couple of archers at least, knife throwers already for sure... "We need to run," She said, keeping her tone low and even so hopefully it wouldn't carry to the other roof.

"Shampoo not abandon Airen!" Shampoo said, though from how her eyes were darting from opponent to opponent, she was obviously nervous.

"What are we up against? Do you think we can win?" Ukyou pressed.

Shampoo swallowed, looking desperate. "Shampoo fight most of these. Beat them one-on-one, but... rivals all."

"So a dozen Amazons who are almost as good as Shampoo?" Akane muttered. "I agree with Ukyou. We need to get out of here!"

"Where should we meet?" Ukyou asked. "The Nekohanten? So we can ask Cologne what the hell is going on?"

"No. Meet at Tendo Dojo. Airen, Pintou and Shagua more likely go there." Shampoo narrowed her... eyes. "Get ready."

Things held quietly for a moment as the tension built. Ukyou narrowed her eyes, making sure she had the Amazons on her side covered.

She saw the glint of the steel before anything else and gave Akane a slight shove to get her out of the way as the throwing daggers whizzed past them, dangerously close. No more words were wasted as the three charged towards Su Tzu and the Amazons with her.

From how Su Tzu's eyes widened, it was obvious that she hadn't expected them to charge straight into her teeth. She drew back to throw, but hesitated. Ukyou also noticed that all of the Amazons had fixed their attention on Shampoo, not on her or on Akane.

BIG mistake, girls, Ukyou thought. She sped up, touching Shampoo's shoulder. At her signal, Shampoo laced her hands into a basket behind her back, and as she leapt toward the roof Su Tzu had claimed, Ukyou put her foot into Shampoo's hands and used the added thrust to boost herself higher.

Su Tzu's daggers missed, having been thrown to intersect Shampoo's expected trajectory. They whizzed over Shampoo's head as the purple-haired Amazon landed far short of the projected mark. Likewise, Ukyou went far higher than anticipated, throwing off the other projectiles as she readied a brace of minispats from her own bandolier. She flung them for effect, drawing their attention away from Shampoo and towards herself, even as it seemed that her arc of travel was going to carry her clear over them and to the far side of the roof.

Their attention was split and they had forgotten about Akane entirely.

Akane was a few paces behind. With the knife throwers and archers distracted by Ukyou, and not seeing Shampoo as a threat for a few breaths, they weren't even looking when Akane plowed full into them. Akane knocked Su Tzu aside hard, intent on something she had spotted from the other roof.

One of the Amazons wielded a Chinese Warhammer, and it had given Akane an idea. As she flipped over the startled Amazon, she grabbed the hammer and wrenched it free from her grasp.

She landed and, with a shout, raised the hammer over her head and brought it down, not on the Amazon, but on the roof - specifically the major support joist.

Ukyou winced at the cracking and groaning of wood as Akane fatally compromised the structure with that single blow. With the weight of six people plus Akane, it wasn't going to last. Akane jumped clear just as the section of roof collapsed and dropped the Amazons into the attic below.

"Good job, Akane!" Ukyou cheered. She immediately regretted drawing attention as she narrowly dodged an arrow from another rooftop. "Keep going!" She turned, batted another projectile away with her battle spatula and leapt towards another roof, sprinting as fast as she could. She plotted as twisting route as possible in order to lose her pursuers before she doubled back to the dojo. Good luck, you two!

000

Down on the street, Young Mi watched the conflict on the roofs. She stroked the flank of her liger gently as she watched.

The three girls recovered quickly and made a break for it. To be expected... their odds are four to one at best. She had to admit, the instinctive teamwork that they displayed was impressive. They had obviously fought together before, and there was a flow to their coordination that was more than simply rehearsed.

If I had confronted Xian Pu with those two at her back, I would have lost, she realized. There was no shame in admitting that. It was important for a performer to know her limitations even as she pushed them, and those three together were beyond her, even with Samson's help.

She smiled when she saw the three shapes suddenly split up, further scattering their attackers as they began leading them on a winding, confusing chase through territory the Chinese girls barely knew.

But they aren't together now, are they? Her eyes followed her target, the one with lavender hair. The Amazons would run her a decent distance away, then leave her for Young Mi, as per their agreement.

She hopped up onto Samson's back, spurring the huge liger into a run. Her hand drifted to a pouch on her belt - another gift from her mysterious benefactor.

I feel as if I am playing a part in another's drama with this, she thought as she rode. No matter. Dancing on another's strings is not a new thing for me. Such strings are easily cut and if getting what I want merely requires a puppet show, then who am I to miss my cue?

000

By the time she was conscious of the fact she was running, she had no idea where she was. Perhaps on the outskirts of town - There weren't as many buildings. All she knew was that she could not stop - she dared not.

Not a man.

The words kept running through her head, in her mother's voice, over and over.

Not a person.

A thing.

No soul.

She stumbled and dropped to her knees on the grass. The student's uniform she wore was so big that even tightening the belt could not keep it from slipping and falling off.

Can't stop… she panted, digging her fingers into the earth. She could feel the press of the pit all around her, lurking just beyond the edges of her vision.

Only boys get out of the pit.

She struggled to her feet, intending to continue her flight, before she noticed there were other figures gathering around her.

A girl in chinese garb, with long green hair tied back in a ponytail, strode forward. "Ranma Saotome," she said. She had that self-confident smirk that was a familiar part of someone issuing a challenge. "I am Tan Pohn of Joketsuzoku. You hard to catch. But no impossible."

"Leave me alone…” Ranma growled. There was a note of a harsh yowl in her voice and her fingers curled into claws.
"No can, sorry," Tan Pohn replied. She was flanked by two more Amazons bearing polearms. "You, Ranma Saotome, honor bound to accept any challenge, yes?"

"[Tan Pohn, what are you…?]" the girl next to her asked in Mandarin.

"I challenge you," Tan Pohn said. "If I win, you renounce Xian Pu. Belong to Tan Pohn."

Ranma shuddered. The old game. Over and over and over. "And if I win… you leave me alone?"

Tan Pohn smirked. "No. Not be stupid. Not how Saotome school works, yes? Must accept all challenges. All terms." She chuckled. "Stupid creed, but school teachings clear. You win, you accept next challenge. Win all challenges, we take back to Jusendo, others challenge. Eventually one win and claim you. Easier just lose now. I treat well." She pulled out a curved sword and slapped it against her palm.

"No," Ranma said softly, her body starting to shake. Her lips pulled back, showing her teeth. Her words were distorted by a low growl. "Leave… me… alone…"

Tan Pohn stopped. "Pardon?" She raised an eyebrow. "Ranma Saotome afraid, maybe? Forget own honor?" She levelled her sword at Ranma. "Not have choice! Heir to Saotome School must accept all challenges!"

"I'm… Not a Saotome…" Ranma ground out. Red was creeping into the edges of her vision now, overriding the blackness lurking there. "Leave me alone!"

Tan Pohn frowned. "Hit head, maybe?" She shrugged. "Very well. Then simply beat until Godslayer go quietly." She motioned for the others to close up around Ranma. "Maybe Godslayer not all that rumors say, hmm? Maybe…"

She never got the chance to finish. Ranma exploded forward in a surge of motion. She dropped to all fours, fingers digging into the dirt as she used her arms to add extra bursts of speed before rising up and slashing across Tan Pohn's sword with her fingers. The tempered steel blade fell apart into five clean cut pieces as Ranma darted by. Ranma was already well past the startled Amazon, leaping for the nearby trees and into the foliage before she could react or the archers could even raise their bows.

Ranma could hear them chasing her, but they couldn't keep up. Ranma had barely managed to restrain the urge to slash more than just the sword. She could feel the Neko-ken singing in her blood, calling to her and coaxing her to lash out - to draw blood and hurt back those who were hurting her. It would be so easy to just give in to it… to just let go and be a cat forever. Not to have to think painful thoughts anymore. But she knew… if she went into the pit now she would never come back out.

She landed again and stumbled as her attempt at another leap failed. Her leg muscles simply couldn't push off anymore. She didn't feel the fatigue or the pain of a thousand cuts and scrapes from the tree branches… everything was numb. Her muscles simply couldn't do what she was demanding of them anymore.

She stumbled a few more paces then dropped to her knees, unable to make her legs move any further. After a moment, she stopped trying.

What does it matter? she thought, looking up at the sky. They want Ranma Saotome. I'm not him. I'm not a person. Whether they catch me or not, it won't matter. She could feel wetness on her cheeks from drying tears, but no more were coming. The fear and despair and pain were all steadily being replaced by a growing numbness, like a burn that had finally seared away all sensation. A soft blue glow suffused the area all around her, though there didn't seem to be a source.

It all makes sense now, she thought. Why I never felt 'right' as a boy OR a girl. Why I was always afraid. Why I always had to try so hard to prove myself. I knew. She studied the sky, the clouds passing as the light gradually shifted from afternoon into evening. She must have been running for hours. That's why I could never find a cure. Why I could never stop when I started insulting Akane. Why I kept freeloadng off Ukyou and Shampoo when I knew it was wrong. Why I kept messing with Ryoga. Why nothing I ever did was ever good enough for Pops. Why Mom hates me. Why I couldn't... couldn't tell any of them how I felt. I AM the curse. There IS no Ranma. Just the curse.

They'll hate me, she thought, feeling a pang before the numbness swallowed it. The aura around her pulsed and grew. They all loved someone that didn't exist - someone I was just pretending to be. They all gave up so much for him. She coughed, her breathing unsteady as she felt the thrumming, building energy her body was struggling to contain. She already knew where this was going.

It'll be better if I'm gone - if I just disappear, she thought. She was so cold now. The Soul of Ice had caused the grass to freeze and become brittle in a rapidly growing circle around her, but she was certain that without it the pain of trying to hold back so much heavy ki would be unendurable. But she knew she needed a lot to do this right.

They have each other. They were SUPPOSED to have each other, Ranma thought. It was comforting, in a way. Another pang. Except Ryo. But... maybe he'll find Akari again. Or... the girls will take care of him until he's okay. She bit her lip until it bled, the coppery taste filling her mouth. It's my fault. He was fine without me. I did this. For years and years. Their lives were fine before me, all of them, and I ruined them. That's why I have to go, before I make it worse.

She convulsed, feeling her heart skip and struggle. It wasn't healthy to hold onto this much Ki. It would probably be enough to kill her on its own, but she wanted... she needed to do this properly - to do one thing right. Couldn't... just slit my own belly open, huh? Gotta be flashy and selfish one last time. At least this way... it's ME doing it. Not because of the contract. Not because I'm pretending to be Ranma. This is the curse curing itself.

"Akane..." she breathed. "Ukyou... Shampoo... Nabiki..." She wanted their names to be the last words she spoke. "Ryoga..." she added finally. I'm sorry... I couldn't say it back. I wanted to. She felt her last tear fall as she released all of the built up ki. All of the misery and self-hatred and guilt, all of it, she released and flung to the heavens. A brilliant pillar of lambent blue-white energy roared into the sky, lighting the surroundings like a second sun and throwing long shadows as she became the base of the pillar of light.

But such emotions are not meant for heaven, and the pillar slowed, the energy gathering and swelling as it lost momentum. The pillar would fall. Normally the one who performed this technique would be emptied of all the emotions that fuelled it, allowing the surge to pass through them harmlessly.

But Ranma would not relinquish that one, final regret. She held it tight in her heart, so that all of her other emotions might crush her into the earth.

She watched as the pillar swelled, and began to fall, incandescent power rushing back to earth to end her life and bury her remains in a single act. Not bad... part of her thought with a flicker of the old pride. Ryo would be impressed. She closed her eyes and waited, wondering if it would hurt much.
"HISHO KORYU HA!"

Her eyes snapped open. There was someone standing over her, his form silhouetted in red, his hands thrust skyward. A deep red light was now corrupting the blue, meeting in a blinding, twisting maelstrom a hundred feet above their heads.

"Ry… ou… ga…?" she murmured.

His feet sank into the earth on either side of her as the weight of her Shi Shi Hokodan started to bear down on him.

Ryouga grunted through gritted teeth. "Ranma! You have to get up!" he groaned as he strained against the force.

"Can't…" Ranma said, her voice soft and sad. She could smell the ozone as the two forces warred in mid air. Ryouga was slowly but steadily losing. "Please run…"

"You know I won't do that!" Ryouga snarled. His legs buckled as the tremendous weight bore down on him. She could hear his joints pop as he strained.

Ranma tried to get her legs to obey but they refused. She felt weak and sick as she tried so hard to move, but everything was too heavy. "I can't… Ryouga… please… It's better if you let me go… you don't understand… you don't need me…! I'm not… I'm not who you think…!"

"I decide who and what I need," Ryouga growled. "And I know exactly who you are!" He groaned, crying out as he increased his effort, though the weight continued to hammer down on them, more and more.

Ranma squeezed her eyes shut. The force was starting to crush her down, making it hard for her to breathe. No… please… I don't want to take him with me…!

"Ranma… just… for once…" Ryouga grunted. "Let… someone… rescue… you!" With a final massive effort, he threw his arms wide. Suddenly it became apparent what he had been doing, as the wedge of ki he had formed with his own blast diverted the Shi Shi Hokodan to either side.

He dropped and covered her, pressing her flat to the ground while the world quite literally exploded around them as the ki she had released slammed into the ground in a ring and blasted outwards in a shockwave that flattened trees and tore up the landscape. Ryouga's countering blast muffled some of the roar but it was still deafening, the forces buffeting them from all sides.

It took several minutes for the rumbling to subside while Ranma struggled to breathe, smothered by Ryouga's mass on top of her. Finally he groaned and started to move. Her ears were ringing like cathedral bells and the world felt like it was tilted sideways. She gazed blearily up to see him looking down at her with concern. She could feel a dampness on her cheeks. I thought I was out of tears? Shakily, she touched her cheek and saw her fingertips come away red. Oh… That's blood. The sense of detachment she felt was oddly disorienting and she wondered, in a disinterested way, if it was Ryouga's blood or her own.

He was trying to say something to her but she couldn't hear it over the ringing. I'm sorry, Ryo… I'm sorry I wasn't a real girl. I… wanted to be… for you… I wanted to be real…

Ryouga suddenly turned to the left, then winced as something struck him on the side. At the same time, Ranma felt a sharp sting in her neck. She reached up and pulled away the dart that had struck her.
Then, with amazing speed, everything went black.

"[I think I'm glad she didn't decide to accept your challenge, Tan Pohn, and you should be as well,]" an Amazon with close-cropped dark hair said, scowling as she surveyed the aftermath.

The blast had obliterated the field and all of the trees around within a radius of more than a hundred meters. Save for one small area at the epicenter of the event, everything around had been devastated, the terrain cratered and broken as though a massive object had slammed into the ground with the force of a meteorite.

Tan Pohn scowled as she checked for a pulse on each of the bodies. They seemed strong, so the darts appeared to have worked. She examined the dark haired boy curiously. "[So... he deflected all of that, hmmm?]" She sat back on her haunches, rubbing her chin.

"[From what I hear, he was the Godslayer's rival,]" one of the other Amazons said.

"[Was?]"

"[I think she finally accepted him as her mate. You know, the Godslayer.]

"[I thought the Godslayer was male?]

"[Haven't you been paying attention to what's been going on at all?! With the scroll and that potion?]

"[You mean...? But why would anyone want to make themselves male?!

"[I think it was her parents, actually. Messed up Outsider values.]

"[Too bad they won't get to stay together. They look kinda cute like that.]

Tan Pohn sighed in exasperation and stood. "[Will you all shut up?! We need to think about how to get them back to Lo Shan before they wake up. I don't think either of them is strong enough to handle a second dose if we're not quick enough.]

I could simply put a second dart into each of them right now. Or at least another into the Godslayer, Tan Pohn thought, fingering the safety on the airsoft rifle. If the Godslayer is truly a woman, how could I compete with her? She'd be destined for leadership. If I thought Xian Pu was an obstacle...

There are different kinds of strength. Strength of Arms and Strength of Leadership are often very different. Many great generals and conquerors in history were hardly imposing as individual warriors...

Tan Pohn sighed, remembering Himura's words. The 'Princess' has a point. Being the strongest leader isn't necessarily about being the strongest fighter. I'll bide my time and see what the Elder has planned. Maybe, if need be, I can make a side deal with Himura for a little... what was the term she used? 'Extra Insurance'.

"[Bind them.]

Tan Pohn said. She tossed the rifle back to the warrior. "[Find some branches or saplings to make sturdy poles. We'll...]"
There was a rustle, and something arced over the worst of the destruction to land amongst a group of the Amazons. It was a satchel that exploded and filled the air with a cloud of fine powder. Those within its boundary immediately started to cough and then quickly collapsed.

"[Ambush!]" Tan Pohn started searching the tree line beyond the perimeter of the crater. She could hear rustling and movement…

More satchels came sailing out from different directions. More than one? Or one moving very quickly? Several more of Tan Pohn's squad dropped. Whatever was in those satchels was potent.

"I see her!" one of the Amazons cried. In a lapse of training and judgement, she darted forward alone with her polearm, stabbing into the darkness of the tangle of broken trees.

Something shot out from that darkness, a long tendril of ribbon that wrapped the girl up and bound her. Then a figure leapt from the shadows, effortlessly yanking the Amazon off of her feet to send her tumbling into a pair of her sisters.

Tan Pohn narrowed her eyes. She reached for her sword before she remembered that the Godslayer had destroyed it. "Who you!?" she asked the intruder.

The girl appeared to be their age. She wore a green gymnastics leotard with a large red rose embroidered over the left shoulder and breast and her dark hair was tied in a ponytail off to the side. She was perched on her toes on the very tip of a broken tree bough that seemed far too slender to support her, giving her a few feet in height over the rest of them.

And then she laughed.

Tan Pohn had fought the Musk and the Phoenix tribe, hunted monsters and tackled spirits and the undead. Nothing she had ever heard before chilled her as did that laugh. A shiver ran up her spine and she took a step back in spite of herself.

The girl casually twirled another ribbon and glared down at her with eyes like dark coals. Someone fired an arrow at her but, with a flick of her wrist, the intruder batted away the projectile with the ribbon, almost as an afterthought. Her gaze never wavered.

"I am the Black Rose of Furinkan, Kodachi Kuno," she said in a voice like ice. "I have been wronged this day. I shall not suffer to be wronged further. Those two are mine by right. You will leave, or you will suffer."

"Bold words for one who is outnumbered," Tan Pohn said, recovering her composure. As… unsettling as this girl was, and as skillful as she seemed to be, there was only one of her, against herself and a half dozen of her sisters still standing.

Kodachi raised an eyebrow. "Did you not think it odd there was a forest so far inside the limits of a city as large as this one? A concession from the Emperor for our agreement to lease much of the land that is modern-day Nerima to the government. This forest is my family's refuge and training ground… and you have trespassed and defiled it!"

"I not care about spoiled outsider's history lesson or about bloated unimportant city on tiny, unimportant island," Tan Pohn sniffed haughtily. "Not change the point you outnumbered. Let us take Godslayer and Consort and leave. Have no interest in irrelevant challenges. Not let us, and… well, at least you be buried on family land, yes?"

Kodachi laughed again. Tan Pohn wasn't able to suppress the shudder.
"Oh you poor, deluded savages," Kodachi replied disdainfully. "Did you not hear what I said? This is a training ground. Not only for the Kuno family, but for our servants. Sasuke!"

Suddenly more satchels launched from the shattered trees. Tan Pohn dodged as billowing clouds suddenly obscured everything. Thankfully, this was not the paralysis powder used before, but she immediately realized her mistake when she lost sight of Ranma and Ryouga.

"[No! Don't let them escape!]" Tan Pohn cried as she heard multiple shapes moving swiftly through the cloud. There were a few wild shots into the cloud from outside as her sisters loosed arrows and darts but, as the dust cleared, Tan Pohn knew that their quarry was already gone.

In the one untouched area in the middle of the blasted out clearing, all that remained of their quarry was a single black rose.

000

Kasumi heard a thump at the front door. It made her jump, as she had been listening intently for the phone for hours now. Not long before, she had heard some kind of rumbling in the distance, not unlike thunder, and she feared the worst.

She hurried to the front door and slid it open to see Nabiki slumped against Daisuke, who was trying to support her with help from Hiroshi and Yuka. Her sister's eyes were closed and she was twitching slightly.

"Oh my God, what happened?!!" Kasumi hurried out to help them bring Nabiki in. The middle Tendo groaned as they laid her out on the living room floor.

"We don't know," Yuka said. "Something happened at the Saotome residence. Nabiki went in to confront Nodoka about some weirdness in the family register. She went inside and there was some arguing. Then Ranma showed up and there was some shouting. That was followed by some screaming, then Ranma and that nut Kodachi came flying out and took off. Nabiki stumbled out a few minutes later, holding onto this like her life depended on it." Yuka held up the scroll.

"She was kind of out of it. Said she needed to get back to the Dojo," Hiroshi continued. "We'd almost gotten here she just… kinda had a seizure and collapsed."

"There was some kinda thunderclap at the same time, way off in the forest," Daisuke said. "We think they're connected somehow."

"I'll call Dr. Tofu," Kasumi said and turned to leave, but a hand grabbed her wrist. She looked back to see Nabiki, now awake and looking up at her, though it appeared to be a struggle for her to do so.

"Doc Tofu can't help…" Nabiki said weakly. "It's the Link." She shuddered. "It's Ranma… Kasumi… what they did to him… to her…" She shuddered again.

Kasumi stopped and knelt next to her sister, taking her hand. "Tell me."

"The scroll," Nabiki managed. "It's… it's for a potion, one that uses Jusenkyo water as an ingredient, but makes the change permanent and changes memories to match. The Saotomes… Daddy gave it to them. Before any of us were born. They… they used it…" Nabiki swallowed. "Kasumi, Ranma was born a girl."

"What?" Kasumi whispered, eyes wide.
"The… the training journey… it was a sham, all of it. A trip to gather the ingredients, and to convince Ranma she was actually a boy while keeping her away from people so she never figured out she wasn't." Nabiki fought to sit up as some of her strength returned. "But… but Genma botched the potion… ended up with a male Ranma with a girl curse…" Nabiki shuddered. "God, Nodoka is insane, Kasumi. She called Ranma a 'homunculus'. A thing. They don't even see him as human." She paused to take a deep breath. "Are Akane or any of the others back? We have to find Ranma! We have to stop her before…" She winced and held her head. "Ugh… She was broadcasting despair! If we just leave her…!

"You aren't going anywhere," Kasumi gripped her shoulder firmly. "Not so long as you can barely sit up."

Nabiki opened her mouth to protest, then closed it and sighed. "Fine… then give me my phone. I need to call Cologne."

000

Cologne prided herself on being old enough to foresee most eventualities. Even when something unexpected happened, she usually knew something was afoot, and almost immediately knew the course of action to take to remedy it.

So when she sensed the massive eruption of heavy ki to the north and found herself having no idea what was going on, she was understandably cross with herself. That she had to wait for a phone call from Nabiki Tendo to have an idea where to even start rankled her further.

I am getting old and sloppy, she chided herself as she made her way to the dojo. She had been content to sit back and let the children play out this fascinating dance of theirs and she had allowed that contentment to slip into complacency. On the trip over, she mentally reviewed what might have gone wrong and possible methods of damage control.

All of that went out the window as soon as she saw the scroll in Nabiki Tendo's hand.

She made a show of going over it to give weight to her assessment of its authenticity, but it wasn't needed. The miasma of the blighted thing was palpable.

"It's authentic," Cologne said heavily. "Authentic and a wretched abomination besides."

"So… the scroll makes Jusenkyo curses permanent?" Daisuke asked, leaning forward and peering at it.

Cologne scoffed and sadly shook her head. "No, son. This… this is far more heinous than just that." She pointed to various entries. "These herbs are powerful hypnotics. They are used in the Xi Fa Xiang Gao to alter the subject's memory, to delete certain details. It is notable that they establish blocks that make it painful or even impossible for the mind to access the 'forbidden' knowledge, even when presented with it anew. However, without the pressure points to place the mind in a relaxed and suggestible state to allow the memories to be easily relinquished, it would be difficult to get the effect to take hold. It would require something to make the mind willing to give up the knowledge. Coercion, seduction… trauma."

"Ryouga mentioned when they were first learning how the Link worked, Ranma got hit with an overflow of emotions and almost went into the Neko Ken because something got churned up in her mind," Nabiki said. "Then… when Ryouga confessed to her last night she went into the Neko Ken again and fled." She gave Cologne a pleading look, her voice dropping into a whisper. "Please tell me that's a coincidence."
Cologne closed her eyes. "The… psychological trauma the Neko Ken would cause would work. Almost ideally so if you could link the knowledge you wish to expunge to the trauma."

"He did it on purpose!" Nabiki slammed her fist onto the table, trembling with rage. "Didn't read the last page' my ass! That's why he used it! He used it to make her forget she was a girl!"

"That is… outlined in the methodology of the scroll," Cologne said quietly. "The identity of the subject must be weakened so that it might align with the form chosen."

"But… why does Ranma change with water, then?" Yuka asked. "And why is it inverted from a normal curse?"

"It isn't," Cologne said. "When properly prepared and administered, the potion uses the magic of Jusenkyo, particularly the magical waters of Jusendo and their tendency to accept a template. It… causes the water to take the subject's true form as its template while the cursed form is bonded to the subject as their new true form. And then… the subject will purge the cursed water bearing their original form, purging the magic as well." Cologne traced her finger down to the mend. "Since this section is lacking Genma's atrocious penmanship, I presume he did not have it originally and it was restored later by whomever gave it to Ranma. He would not have known. Likely Ranma vomited on herself during the purge, afflicting herself with her own original form as a curse."

"So… the potion makes them literally barf up a Jusenkyo curse?" Hiroshi asked, wide-eyed.

"Contrary to belief, the cursed pools do not actually require the victim to die. Akane Tendo is proof of that," Cologne explained. "They merely need to ingest the magical waters of Jusendo and then expel them at the point where the soul's connection to the physical form is tenuous. Near-death is sufficient. Their form is then imprinted on the water. This potion is a manipulation of that property."

"When the soul's connection is tenuous…" Nabiki said. "Nodoka called Ranma a homunculus. She said that he didn't have a soul and that the real Ranma's soul was sacrificed to make him."

Cologne snorted. "One of the reasons the potion is considered heresy among the Joketsuzoku. These herbs here are potent toxins of the spirit. In the proportions of the potion, they are not quite fatal… but enough to weaken the soul to the point of expiring, to facilitate the transfer of the imprint. I did not realize Ranma's parents were mad enough to see that as a preferable outcome."

"But… I mean… Ranma does have a soul… right?" Daisuke asked nervously.

Cologne raised an eyebrow, then glanced at Nabiki. "Well? As one who is linked irrevocably to Ranma, mind and spirit, what do you say Nabiki Tendo?"

Nabiki blinked, then seemed to relax a little, "Thank god…"

"A higher power had very little to do with this, I fear," Cologne grumbled. "I already knew Ranma's father was an idiot, but I had hoped his…" she sighed and cleared her throat, "her mother had more sense!"

There was a loud thump from outside in the yard. Kasumi got up and quickly opened the door. Ukyou was there, in the depression she had make during an obviously rough landing and struggling to get up. Nabiki rushed over quickly to help her. She was battered and scraped, and had several cleaner cuts that suggested close calls versus a bladed weapon of some sort. Her clothes were tattered like she had been tossed about.
"Help… Akane…!" Ukyou croaked.

There was a shout from the rooftops, and they all looked up in time to see a figure recognizable as Akane dart out of the path of a huge tornado blast.

"Is that the Hiryu Shoten Ha?" Nabiki asked, staring.

"It is," Cologne said, eyes narrowing. "But not Ranma's variant."

Two more figures hopped up onto the roof and attacked Akane, who was defending herself with what looked like a large two-handed hammer. She seemed hard pressed.

Cologne's eyes widened as she recognized the garb. "What are they doing here?!" She got that awful sense that she'd been out of the loop once more. She hopped up onto the yard wall, then up to the nearest rooftop, quickly closing in on the battle before alighting casually between the combatants once they broke apart once more.

"[E-Elder Khu Long!]" one of the girls Cologne recognized as being named Su Tzu gasped.

"Cologne!" Akane said, with an understandable note of suspicion in her voice. "Why are warriors from your village attacking us?"

"That is an excellent question, child. One I intend to ask myself," Cologne replied, sparing her a glance before she fixed her gaze on Su Tzu. "[Well? Speak!]"

Su Tzu seemed nervous. Her eyes flicked to Akane, then back to Cologne. "[With all due respect, Elder… We are operating under orders of the Council and Elder Lo Shan. She wishes these girls to be apprehended for crimes against the Joketsuzoku.]

"[Crimes. Really,]" Cologne replied, a note of menace entering her voice. "[And no one saw fit to appraise me of these crimes, or the desire of the Council to capture my pupils?]"

Su Tzu swallowed. "[I… am sorry Elder, I wasn't aware. But… Lo Shan's orders were very specific!]

"[And since when do Lo Shan's orders countermand my own?]" Cologne demanded, though she already had a sneaking suspicion as to the answer.

"[Since… the Council…]" the girl swallowed nervously, "[elected to remove you from your position due to dereliction of duty.]"

Cologne snorted. "[Almost three centuries of service without a break and as soon as I elect to take a vacation…]" She sighed. "[Very well, go back and tell Lo Shan I will meet with her shortly to discuss the matter. You may go.]

The fact the girl didn't budge gave Cologne an inkling to just how serious the situation was.

"[I… am sorry, Elder. But… you no longer have authority here,]" Su Tzu said, refocusing on Akane. "[We are on a War Footing now and Lo Shan's orders are to be obeyed as our War Leader. If your 'Pupils' come quietly, I can…]"

Cologne doubted they saw her move. She had slowed down quite a bit in the last century or so but she was still fast enough to give the youngsters a fright. She saw the expected widening of fear in the eyes that came far too late as her staff had already hit the last of the three pressure points needed, on both her and the other Amazon with her.
"[War Footing?]" Cologne scoffed. "[With Japan? Have the Council lost their tiny minds?]"

Su Tzu twitched but was unable to respond.

"[No, they haven't, this is merely a way to invoke the old covenants to allow them to do as they please!]" Cologne thumped her staff. "[So, it seems it will fall to me to remind them of why I have been on the Council for so long.]" She hopped closer to the girl and looked her in the eye. "[They have invoked the old covenants, have they? Then I invoke one of my own. Tell Lo Shan that as a Joketsuzoku Elder I invoke the Covenant of Contested Ground. I retain that right at least, no matter what they feel they may strip from me.]

Su Tzu's eyes widened in a most satisfying manner.

Cologne grinned, her leathery lips peeling back in a toothy smirk. "[Good… you know that one. Lo Shan has not neglected your education in Joketsuzoku law at least.]" She leaned closer. "[I further invoke my right to declare a Sanctuary, which I name to be the Tendo Dojo. None may harass its caretakers nor those who seek sanctuary inside upon pain of forfeiture of their lives to me. I name this caretaker to be Kasumi Tendo. Now you relay that message to your sisters and Lo Shan now, and you will not return with fewer warriors than you left with. Am I clear?]

The girl managed a slight nod.

Cologne blurred again, tapping the pressure points to reverse the paralysis locks on each of them. They both stumbled as their limbs resumed obeying their wills.

"[Good. I will expect Lo Shan shortly. Do remind her to use the door, since she seems to be merrily reviving other follies of her youth.]" She tapped the girl on the forehead, turned, and hopped over to Akane.

"What was that all about?" Akane asked, still holding her hammer warily.

"I will explain inside the dojo, child," Cologne said. "I fear one of my peers has gone and done something very foolish, and we shall have to be very careful how we proceed or my great granddaughter and son-in… and Ranma may well pay the price."

Shampoo awoke to a pounding headache. She opened her eyes and blinked a few times, thinking she was somewhere dark before she realized that there was something over her head obscuring her vision. A cloth bag?

"Well… awake now, are you?"

The voice was unfamiliar. Accented but not Japanese or Chinese. It had a playful lilt that covered a scornful note… and maybe something deeper? There was a tremor to it, like someone trying to keep their voice even and calm in the presence of something enraged.

"Why Joketsuzoku attack Shampoo? Why take prisoner?" Shampoo asked. She knew this person was no Amazon but she wanted to see what information she could glean and playing dumb usually worked well for that.
"Oh you silly, pathetic, stupid girl…" the voice laughed. Shampoo's head was suddenly pulled back sharply. "Do you really think I know or care what your ridiculous sisterhood is up to?"

The pull on Shampoo's head eased, and the hood was roughly pulled away, leaving Shampoo blinking in the light. Her vision resolved on the image of a smiling face, though the smile was warped, a mask of happiness over eyes that glittered with hatred.

"Though… I must admit they do earn points from me for turning on you." The woman stood and tapped her chin. She was wearing a circus ringmaster's outfit, though cut close, with fishnet stockings and high heels, as well as a flamboyant cape and a top hat perched on the curls of her cotton candy pink hair. "Though… they were still wretched to my Darling all his life, so I honestly don't care much if they burn or not." She smirked at Shampoo once more and reach over to lift her chin with the coiled whip in her hand. "But you? Ahhh my sweetling… I have so many wondrous sufferings to visit upon you!"

"Young Mi. You mad at Shampoo for stealing Mousse away, yes?" Shampoo said. She started to work on the ropes that bound her wrists. Unfortunately, this circus girl seemed to know what she was doing when it came to knots and tying someone up. Shampoo tried to remember how she had ended up in this situation. She had been running from her Amazon sisters, and then… a flash… a surge of overwhelming despair… she had missed a jump… then darkness. Until now.

"Oh, no, not at all!" Young Mi giggled. "I've been watching you. You're actually quite cold and dismissive of him, aren't you?" She tapped her whip against her chin. "Which is exactly how he described you, too. I'd be hard pressed to think of a way for you to more effectively convey your contempt to him."

Shampoo winced. She makes it sound like I HATE him. I… don't, do I?

"No, you've done absolutely nothing to entice him. I no longer have a quarrel with you." She sighed. "Perhaps in other circumstances we could have been friends. Unfortunately, my Darling is obsessed and I doubt there is anything you could have done to dissuade him."

"Then why!?" Shampoo demanded.

"Shhhh..."Young Mi put a finger to Shampoo's lips. "It's not always about you, sweetling. This is about me and Darling and our future together. You're just…" she waved her hand searching for the word then smiled, "a prop." She straightened and began to pace. In the dim light Shampoo could see that they were in some sort of large building, like a hangar or a warehouse. "You see… when Darling left, he hurt me. But… more than that, he cost me." She paused. "The shock of his betrayal caused my father's health to take a turn for the worse. My father had placed his faith in Darling's reassurances, that he would work with me to continue father's life's work… to keep his beloved family, his circus, alive. He was prepared to retire, to leave things in our hands. He knew that there was prejudice among our backers, and that they would not support the circus under me alone. But with Darling at my side, we could endure."

She stared off into the distance. "When Darling left… our creditors became nervous. It was all father could do to prevent them calling in our debts all at once. He was forced back into the ring. More shows. More travel. He was unable to properly treat his illness. What should have been ten more good years ended up barely being one. With father gone, our debts were called in. My family… the only family I'd known my entire life… was scattered to the wind." She sighed.

Shampoo stared. Well… that explains some of her rage, then. "So… you hate Mousse then?"

Young Mi smiled. "You'd think so, wouldn't you? But even after all of that… I believed he would come back to me. He is all I have left in the world now. He has to come back." She turned and swept her hand. "And now I understand what I need to do to achieve that. A relationship is built upon equity. Fairness. We must be on common ground. So… as he wounded me, so I must wound him. So he understands." She walked up to Shampoo and cupped her chin. "Despite it all, Darling cares about you. Losing you would go a long way toward evening the scales. Losing you would make him understand me."

Shampoo glared back defiance. She pulled at her bonds, but she couldn't get the leverage she needed to get slack. "Then do it," she growled.

"No, no, no… Not like that!" Young Mi tittered. "Two things first. One. Naturally Darling must be here to witness it." She shrilled away and spread her arms wide as if addressing a large crowd.

"And second…" she looked over her shoulder at Shampoo and smirked, "I'm not entirely sure where Darling's heart lies anymore. He seems to have some interest in another. Rin Ito is her name, I think?"

"You leave Rin alone!" Shampoo growled. "She not have anything to do with this!"

Young Mi laughed. "Oh, I'm quite sure she's innocent. I've watched her, too." Young Mi sighed. "Oh she dotes on him and gives him those big doe-eyes of hers… and it's all so innocent and pure that it makes me want to retch." She chuckled then shrugged. "But… Darling looks at her. You do know how significant that is, don't you? Darling tends to look through people so much. The glasses hide it, but I can tell. There are very few people he truly sees. I realized that the day when I noticed he finally was looking at me. He sees you, of course… and he sees her."

"And you want him to see only you," Shampoo said bitterly. "So… you kill Shampoo and Rin in front of Mousse. Think it make him love you?"

Young Mi shook her head. "Not quite that simple, my dear. It really depends on Darling. All I know is… he must be made to understand the loss I feel. There are obvious ways that can play out, of course," Young Mi's face seemed to soften, "and… less obvious ways. You have someone you love, yes?"

"Yes…" Shampoo admitted reluctantly.

"Then… for their sake… I hope this ends up being one of the less obvious ways."

000

Nabiki watched as Cologne examined Ukyou carefully. Fortunately, neither she nor Akane had suffered major injury, but apparently it was not due to a lack of trying on the Amazons' part.

"I don't know what happened," Ukyou said. "There was this… this flash in the distance and suddenly…" She shook her head. "It was like all my worst nightmares and feelings were piled on top of me all at once. Every bad memory - every bit of doubt or despair. I felt… heavy."

"Heavy ki. Ki fueled by negative emotions," Cologne said. "From what Nabiki has revealed to me about what happened, it is safe to presume Son-in-l… Ranma had more than enough such emotions to cause this. Particularly…"

"Particularly if it was used to fuel a Perfect Shi Shi Hokodan," Akane finished for her. "But… why didn't it affect me the same way? Is my link with Ranma not as strong?" She gave Cologne a worried look.
"Tell me, child. What did you feel?" Cologne asked.

"I… well, like Ukyou said, there was a surge… and… and a lot of awful feelings, but… but then I just felt angry," Akane replied. "It… it kinda felt… almost like it made me stronger." She shuddered.

"Your reliance on anger to fuel your own ki stems in part from your own pain," Cologne said softly, patting her arm. "Unlike Ukyou, you are accustomed to such emotions and, by instinct, convert them to anger. For Ukyou such an influx of heavy ki was debilitating, but for you it was like fuel thrown on a fire."

"But… isn't that… bad?" Akane asked quietly. "I remember all the warnings on the scroll for the Shi Shi Hokodan about it."

"It isn't bad, necessarily. It can be difficult, yes, but no more than any other way of being, so long as you manage it appropriately." Cologne gripped her hand gently. "It's a flame, child. And like any flame, it must be controlled lest it burn you as well. It means that as your skills develop, you will have to strive to understand your own feelings - where they come from, why you have them and what they are trying to tell you."

"I'm… not really very good at that…" Akane said in a subdued tone. "But… but if Ranma was doing this…?"

"For Ranma it is undoubtedly unnatural - a symptom of extreme emotional stress. Ranma Saotome is someone who should never be able to generate a Perfect Shi Shi Hokodan." Cologne shook her head sadly. "I… fear the worst."

"Ranma isn't dead." Akane shook her head, clenching her fist. "She can't be!"

"Even presuming she endured the release of that much heavy ki, Ranma would have been stripped of the very confidence that empowers her. Assuming the Joketsuzoku are hunting her as well…"

Cologne sighed. "We should presume that she and my Great granddaughter have been taken."

"Why are the Amazons attacking us?" Ukyou demanded. "I thought we were good with them! Didn't Ranma kill a god and save, like, their entire region for them?"

Cologne looked pained. "That is precisely why they are attacking us. Or… at the very least, attacking Ranma. A martial artist of his calibre appears once in a hundred generations. The Joketsuzoku have sought to add him to our ranks since they learned of him. It is why I accompanied my Great Granddaughter to Japan to evaluate him. She pulled out her pipe, tapped it out and then stuffed it with tobacco in an old, familiar ritual. "I have managed to keep them at bay thus far by promising that my Great Granddaughter would win him. I had thought that my report of your marital arrangement would end the matter. It seems the fools prefer to do things the hard way."

"But why?" Nabiki asked. "What's the profit for them?"

"On the surface? Racial purity. Inviting so many outsider females into the tribe is… contentious, regardless of their skill." Cologne lit her pipe and took a puff. "But, in reality? To discredit me. Apparently, while I've been gone, Lo Shan has staged a bit of a coup. If she can succeed where I have so far failed, and without the compromises I have made, well… That will cement her position as de facto ruler and destroy my influence and power forever."

"And so… that's it?" Nabiki's tone sharpened as she felt her ire rise. "Our lives are forfeit because we're inconvenient to them?"

"I am somewhat surprised that you are so shocked, Nabiki Tendo. Is this not a common attitude of those with great power and little regard for those who don't have it? You made an agreement and those with power have elected to change it."

Nabiki glowered at her. "If you think for one second that agreement between us still stands…"

Cologne held up a hand. "Peace, child. You are not the only one who has been betrayed this day. I am on your side in this, not theirs."

"Are you?" Nabiki asked. "Are you sure? Because after today I'm pretty sure I'm not letting this go with an apology and a promise to never do it again. Are you willing to stick with this all the way?"

Cologne raised an eyebrow and puffed her pipe. "Are you, child? It is easy to demand vengeance now, but a few days hence, when you hold the life of a Joketsuzoku warrior in your hands and you must opt to end it? You are right - we are well past the point of reconciliation. No, there will need to be bloodshed before my idiot kin will be ready to talk once more." She sighed. "Know that what I have done today is invoke Covenants which are tantamount to civil war. They are intended to provide structure and rules to the conflict in order to reduce needless loss of life but, make no mistake, I have little choice but to be committed."

"So now… what, we're supposed to fight to win back your position as top Amazon?" Ukyou asked. "Just so we can get them to lay off and stop trying to kill us and enslave Ranma?"

Cologne chuckled. "I would hope you all would have more ambition than that." She levelled her pipe at the Okonomiyaki Chef. "If we somehow come out of this victorious… and I fear the chances are not good… it will be by forcing the Joketsuzoku to surrender to us. That would make all of you essentially the conquerors of the Joketsuzoku. It is far easier to convince someone not to enslave you if you are in charge, yes?"

"So your plan is for us to take over the Amazons?!" Akane yelped incredulously.

"Presuming we survive. Which, currently, seems extremely unlikely," Cologne replied. "I assumed you would all prefer a fighting chance over immediately annihilation, though, so I opted to make things interesting at least. I am hoping that you impress me with what you come up with."

"So… that's it, eh? If we want out of this we have to win a war?" Nabiki said, setting her jaw. "This wasn't what I had in mind when you said you'd have a challenge for me."

"If you accomplish this, there are none who would be able to contest your position or standing. The rules and laws would, in fact, be of little import, as you would be the one setting them from that point forward," Cologne pointed out.

"What I don't understand is… what set all of this off?" Ukyou asked. "Why would Ranma be upset enough to generate that much heavy ki in the first place, and why would the Amazons elect to basically invade Nerima to get him now?"

Nabiki pulled out the scroll and set it on the table, then pulled out the folder and put it down beside it. "Because, about fifteen years ago, Nodoka and Genma Saotome set in motion something awful… and I think Himura found out about it and used it to set all this up." She quickly gave Akane and Ukyou a recap of the day's events, taking particular care to detail to the encounter with Nodoka and what she had gleaned about the plans of the Saotome family. When she was done, Ukyou and Akane were both staring at her with expressions of unfiltered horror.
Ukyou recovered first, eyes darting back and forth as she tried to process and digest what she had heard. "I can't… I can't believe… How could anyone do that to their own child?!

"I think… I think I'm going to be sick…" Akane murmured.

Ukyou dropped her head to the table. "I can't believe I was telling Ranma stories about how much my Dad sucked."

"It isn't a competition, Ukyou," Kasumi said gently, patting her back. "Your own struggle is not invalidated because Mr. Saotome found a way to be worse."

"Ranma didn't even know," Nabiki said softly. "It's all locked up behind the Neko-ken. Or it was."

"What I still don't get is… why two Ranmas on the Family Register?" Hiroshi asked. "Why go to all the trouble of faking a second birth record and entry? Why not simply… change it? They can do that, right?"

"Not before 2003," Ukyou said. "And there has to be an official diagnosis by two different psychiatrists supporting gender dysphoria and…" Ukyou trailed off. "It's a subject I know something about, okay? It's not an easy thing to get changed, trust me."

"A lot easier to convince some poor midwife who really needs the money to quietly forge a birth record for you," Nabiki replied. "Probably not even all that uncommon, now that I think about it. Great way to make a nearly airtight fake identity, if you plan far enough ahead."

"We should call Sayuri, Riko, and Rin," Yuka said suddenly. "You said the dojo was a sanctuary now, right? Maybe we should get them here."

"Your friends are not martial artists and will be of little interest to the Joketsuzoku," Cologne said. "They are in little danger from them."

"Yes, but without us to protect them, who knows what Himura might do?" Akane said. "Besides… besides I'd rather have my friends here right now. Maybe they can help us figure out what to do."

"Sounds good to me," Yuka said, standing as she pulled out her phone and walked out into the yard to start making calls.

As the door to the back yard opened again, Nabiki caught the sounds of singing. Male voices, terribly off-key and sounding very drunk. Familiar voices.

"Akane…!" she cried as she saw her sister's eyes widen - but it was already too late. Akane had started moving and it was very clear that nothing had better get in her way. Ukyou was barely a half step behind her as the two of them raced for the front door.

"Wha…?!" Kasumi said, startled by the sudden blur of movement.

"Cologne, don't let them kill him!" Nabiki leapt to her feet to run after the pair. As much as he deserves it I can't deal with a murder case right now!

Nabiki could hear her father's drunken drawl as she rounded the corner. "Don't worry Shaotome… hic… It'll all… all… Akane! Howsh my baby girl…?"

She rounded the corner to the hall just in time to see Akane spin and hurl the chinese war hammer at Genma.
To the older man's credit, his instincts were good. Even highly inebriated, he had the presence of mind to duck the flying hammer. But that left him open to a flying drop kick to the gut from Ukyou that sent him stumbling backwards.

"Wh-what ish the meaning of thish!" Soun demanded, very quickly sobering up as the two girls attacked his friend.

Genma seemed to know when someone was out to kill him. He stumbled back a few paces, then dropped into a ready stance, dodging a side kick from Akane, and then a flurry of minispatulas.

"What do you think you're doing!?!" Genma roared. He parried a few more of Akane's blows, but ducking a kick from Ukyou opened him up to a savage double palm strike to the gut. He stumbled back, eyes wide as he realized the girls were out for blood. "Tendo! Help me!"

"Daddy, don't you dare!" Nabiki said sharply, startling Soun out of intervening.

Soun turned to give her a confused look, still a bit wobbly on his feet. "Nabiki, wha…?" His attention was drawn back to the battle as there was a crash when Genma impacted one of the walls.

Nabiki walked up to him and put a hand on his shoulder. "We know about the scroll, Daddy."

Soun glanced back at her, a confused look on his face. "Scroll…? What…?"

She held up the old Chinese scroll in one hand. She watched as confusion was gradually replaced with haunted recognition.

"Wait… but that…" He looked back at Genma, then the scroll. "How did you get that…?"

"You need to come inside and talk, Father," Kasumi said from just behind Nabiki.

Genma Saotome was no stranger to being attacked by outraged females. It tended to happen to him a lot, in fact. Usually it was outrage over some misunderstanding (or sometimes just an understanding. A man had to eat, after all, and sometimes food was more plentiful than the funds to purchase it). But usually he either just had to take a few lumps, or roll with the hit enough to carry him clear and the problem was solved.

Not this time. He had never seen either of them fight like this. They were going after vitals. Killing blows. They wanted him dead or maimed, and for once he couldn't think of a good reason why. He tried to grapple Akane, to get the hammer away from her until he could talk some sense into the two of them.

Akane used the hammer to counter his superior reach and weight, forcing him back. She used it to force him to choose between taking a hammer blow, or suffering her follow up. He always elected to avoid the hammer hit but her strikes were getting wearying. I never should have trained her so much!

"Akane, Ukyou, what are you doing!?!" Genma shouted as adrenaline took the edge off his buzz and cleared his head.

"We know what you did," Ukyou said coldly. "Fooled my old man pretty good, didn'tcha? You'd think he'd be able to tell when it's a six year old girl pretending to be a boy."

"What are you talking about?!" Genma demanded. He got a sinking feeling in his gut when she'd said that, though.

"We found the scroll," Akane growled. "We found the hair dye, and the letters to your wife, and the birth records. We know what you did to Ranma!" She took another swing, forcing him back as the impact cracked the fence wall.

Genma's eyes widened as he felt a surge of panic. For a few feverish moments he pondered a way to spin things, to convince them it was a mistake. But he could see in their eyes they were past platitudes and pleading. He switched gears, opting to take a more aggressive stance. "I did what I did for the sake of the Saotome School and for my art. My son will understand!"

"Your 'son' just blew up a sizeable chunk of Tokyo parkland with her feelings on the matter. I really wouldn't count on that," Ukyou snarled.

Genma glanced around. Soun had vanished, as had any reasonable chance of defusing things. I'll have to dip into the forbidden techniques to get away cleanly. A little Yamasenken to show them they're out of their league and get them to back off. I'll have to be careful not to hurt Akane or Tendo will be pissed.

He dropped back, and then when Ukyou threw another volley of minispats he responded with the Kijin-Gun Dai Ranbu, the vacuum blades, and knocked the projectiles aside. He focused his attacks on Ukyou, striking her in the chest with the Geimon Tessen Shi strike to send her flying back as he made for the gate then stopped and turned back to glare at them. With his path to freedom clear, he felt a little more comfortable.

"That's the Yamasenken!" Akane said, kneeling next to Ukyou as she coughed and tried to recover her breath. "I thought you swore never to use those techniques again?!

"I swear a lot of things, Akane. But pragmatism wins out every time. It's called 'Anything Goes' for a reason." He grinned. "Not so eager to knock me around now that i'm serious, are you? Afraid of getting hurt, maybe? A lot of the techniques of the Yamasenken are deadly, after all. A true martial artist isn't afraid to die for his art, but then... Well, I suppose that doesn't apply to you two, does it?"

Akane's eyes narrowed. Ukyou stood next to her, but Akane held up a hand to keep her back.

"This is mine," Akane said softly. She gripped the handle of her hammer more tightly. Ukyou raised an eyebrow. "Akane, this probably isn't the time to get fancy. You haven't been able to get the advanced stuff you were working on with Ryouga to work."

"I know," Akane said. "I don't need it for him."

"That's a bold statement, girl," Genma said with a chuckle. "Think that hammer will make the difference? Weapons are a crutch!"

"That's where the Tendo and Saotome schools disagree," Akane said, shouldering the hammer and taking a stance.

"And how will you beat me without the techniques of the Umisenken?" Genma asked, though the girl's confidence and calm gaze were starting to worry him.

"I don't need them," Akane said. "Just what Ranma and Ryouga taught me."

I'll end this quickly, Genma thought. He narrowed his eyes, then nodded imperceptibly. "If that's the way you want it… Kinshi Kinbaku Sho!" his hand snapped out, flinging a rope towards Akane which wrapped around her in the blink of an eye.

Unfortunately, Akane was ready. He realized his mistake the instant she started to charge into the rope. Shit! *She saw this fighting that Kurumi girl! She knows to charge in to keep the rope slack!* He pulled back frantically, but she was moving far too fast for him to compensate and the rope fell slack around her as she reared back and swung. He tried to dodge, but the rope had now coiled around his own feet, and avoiding getting tangled made him slow, allowing her to clip him in the side.

He rolled with the hit as best he could, but he had heard the crunch and felt the flare of pain that indicated at least a fractured rib. He tasted blood in his mouth and spit it to the side as he rolled to his feet. He swept his hands forward, no longer concerned about hurting Akane as he sent a vacuum blade directly at her, hoping to cut the head off her war hammer.

Akane smashed the hammer into the asphalt, sending a spray of debris into the air, then darted forward into Genma's attack. However, she passed through unharmed, and Genma realized she had used the chunks of asphalt she had smashed into the air to steal the vacuum of Genma's technique, blunting the attack.

She doesn't know the Umisenken, but she understands the theory behind its counters to the Yamasenken, Genma realized, backing up a step. He ducked down to avoid a sweeping strike and darted forward, intent on tackling Akane and taking her to the ground.

Akane dropped the hammer, letting it dig into the asphalt as she swung around the handle to abruptly change her trajectory. She used the handle like a pole to spin across to his left side and strike his already injured ribs with a reverse side-kick.

He managed to grab ahold of her ankle and use his weight to pivot and spin her around, tossing her away from him. She used the shaft of the hammer to catch herself and drop lightly to her feet a few feet away.

Genma clenched his fist and prepared to use the Dokuja Tanketsu Sho. Sorry Tendo, but I have to put her down! He knew the heart-rending strike could be fatal and would almost certainly hurt Akane, but he needed to put her down quickly. He darted towards her, hand outstretched in a strike to the center of her chest. Akane was already moving herself, hammer raised for an overhead blow.

A small form hopped between them and, with an extended finger of each hand, stopped both the descending war hammer and his hand.

"Much as I am enjoying seeing how Akane has progressed and seeing her do so by injuring you, you fat, pathetic excuse for a panda, Nabiki does not yet believe your life should be forfeit - despite your crimes," Cologne said, glaring up at him.

Genma hopped back, eyes wide. There was no way he could take on the old ghoul! He pulled out a star cloth and wrapped it around himself, masking his presence from them as he hastily prepared to withdraw.

"He's gone! That coward!" Akane snarled.

"Listen to me, Genma Saotome," Cologne called out, looking right in his direction. "I will allow you to withdraw from this but once. If you stay and answer for your wrongs, if you give the ones you have wronged the answers they need to find closure… I will be merciful. But if you run away now… when next your are confronted you will not be allowed to retreat and it will cost you everything. Choose wisely."

Genma ducked his head and ran as fast as the ache in his side allowed. As if I'd trust that crazy old woman! he thought as he ran. I need to find the boy FAST if I'm going to find a way to fix this!

000

"The scroll was a gift from the Master," Soun said, staring at the unfurled parchment. "He made it quite clear that he expected a male heir to the Anything Goes School. I… believe he intended it as a joke… he said he found it in an old trunk."

"Funny joke," Nabiki said coldly.

"You have to believe me when I say I never thought it would be used!" Soun said, tears rolling down his cheeks. "I… I agreed to take it at first, but when I heard Nodoka was certain she was having a boy… I thought it'd be a funny joke! Nabiki, you and Kasumi had already been born, and we already knew Akane was a girl. It was… it was my way of letting him know I was okay with his family name carrying on the schools. I never… I never meant… I was sure they had a boy!"

"So sure that you never once contacted them after that, for sixteen years?" Nabiki asked. "Even though you had an arrangement for your children to marry?"

"I… lost track. You know how it is! Things were busy around here, with you girls and then… and then your mother…" he trailed off.

"And then Genma Saotome walks back into your life, dragging his teenage son with him. Except… it isn't a son," Nabiki said, glaring at him. "But it's not that bad! A little hot water fixes that right up! You took the news of the curse like a champ, Daddy."

"Nabiki, please!" Soun cried. "I would never lie about something so…"

"Father," Kasumi said softly, cutting him off. Her voice was quiet, but there was a hard edge to it Nabiki had never heard before.

"Ka-Kasumi?" Soun turned his attention to her.

"We never told you what the scroll did, Father," Kasumi said softly. "You already knew. You and Mr. Saotome translated it together, didn't you?"

"I… well… I mean I knew the gist of it…" Soun stammered.

"Then you knew what the curses were. You knew what Jusenkyo was," Kasumi continued. "Mr. Saotome took you aside to talk while Ranma sparred with Akane and then took his first bath here, and we learned of the curses. You had to have known by then."

"It… I… thought it was a coincidence…" Sou whimpered. "I didn't even remember the scroll until…!"

"Stop," Kasumi said and shook her head. "What would mother say?"

"Did Mom know about the scroll?" Nabiki asked. "If you didn't foist it off on the Saotomes, was it going to be one of us? Kasumi? Me? Akane, maybe?"

"The truth, father," Kasumi said.

Soun deflated. His tears were gone now. "The… the Master was adamant that he wanted a male heir. He left it up to us to decide who would use the scroll if none were produced naturally. I already knew that Genma and Nodoka were hoping for a boy, so I gave the scroll to them, hoping it would never be an issue. I… thought it wasn't." He closed his eyes. "Saotome and I drifted apart… we stopped talking shortly after his boy… his child was born. I never realized why until he showed up here sixteen years later and I heard the name Jusenkyo." He folded his hands on the table. "You have to understand… by then I thought it was already too late. The damage had been done and… and the best thing for all concerned would be to simply accept the situation as it was… accept the boy as he was. Especially with young Akane's… tendencies…"

"Oh no no no, do not make this about Akane!" Nabiki growled.

Soun winced. "I… what was I supposed to do? No one would have believed me. I would have just alienated my oldest friend, and for what? I had no scroll, no proof. And there was the matter of the inheritance… No, nevermind, that's not important."

Nabiki raised an eyebrow. "Oh?" She folded her arms and sat back. "No, no, do go on, Daddy. Please."

"He means the fact that the Tendo Dojo is not his," Kasumi replied when Soun remained silent.

"Kasumi!? H-how do you know about that?!" Soun asked, eyes widening.

"I found mother's will when cleaning one day," Kasumi said. She turned her attention to Nabiki. "Mother owned the dojo. When she died, rather than ceding it to father, she placed it in a trust for us - to be passed to me on my 21st birthday, or to one of my sisters should they be married first." Kasumi raised her teacup to take a sip. "That's why you were always so anxious to have Ranma and Akane wed right away, wasn't it?"

"Kasumi was supposed to inherit the dojo?!" Nabiki blinked and glared at her father. "And you were trying to cheat her out of it?!!"

"I just felt the dojo should pass to the one who would make use of it to carry on the school!" Soun insisted. "Akane and Ranma would have been able to use it to make a living while doing just that! I just thought it best to settle the matter quietly so there would be no hurt feelings!"

"And I agreed, which is why I didn't say anything," Kasumi replied, glaring at him. "But you did so much damage to those two in trying to force them together when they weren't ready. Were you so afraid that I wouldn't hand the dojo over to them if they took their time to come together naturally?"

"All of this for the Anything Goes School of Martial Arts, huh?" Nabiki scoffed.

"Carrying on the school's traditions is more important than you can possibly…" Soun started, but Nabiki slammed her hand onto the table.

"What traditions?! Panty thievery? Lechery? We know who the Grand Master is, Daddy!" Nabiki stared daggers at him. "Do you realize what you've done for that legacy? To Ranma? To us?!

Nabiki crossed her arms. "That's why Mom put the dojo into a trust, isn't it? She was trying to keep you from doing something dumb with it."

Soun turned to Kasumi. "Kasumi, please! Talk some sense into your sister!"

"How many years…?" Kasumi mused softly, seeming to ignore him as she ran her finger around the rim of her teacup in contemplation.
"Kasumi…?" Soun asked.

Kasumi took a deep breath, a sad smile crossing her face. "How many years have I been Mother's replacement, Father? I've kept your house, raised your children, taken care of every detail so that you would never miss her. All because I believed I was doing the right thing and supporting my family - supporting the 'Tendo Legacy'." She sighed. "I think you should leave for a while, Father."

"L-leave?" Soun said. "W-what do you mean, Kasumi?"

"Go on a training journey for a few weeks." Kasumi said. "Or months. I can have your things packed by nightfall and you can leave in the morning."

"Kasumi! How can you kick your own father out in the…!?" Soun wailed.

"Father, it is best if you are not here for the near future," Kasumi said tightly, giving Soun a look that caused his mouth to snap shut. Kasumi put down her teacup and Nabiki could see that her hand was trembling. "I don't want to hate you for what you've done, Father. For what you've made me an accessory to. I think I can forgive you if you give me enough time, and I want to. But, right now, this family is facing a crisis and the crimes that you and the Saotomes have committed against Ranma have pushed her to the breaking point. I need this house to be the safe place I promised her - and it can't be that with you in it. I'm sorry. Please… just go."

Soun set his jaw. "Kasumi… You may be in line to inherit this dojo in a few months, but until then I am still head of this household, and…"

Nabiki reached over and grabbed his head, forcing him to look at her. "Let me phrase this differently for you then, Daddy. We… Akane, Ukyou, myself, everyone… are going to be doing everything we can to bring Ranma home. And when we do, we are going to tell Ranma everything. Not that it matters because Nodoka already told Ranma that you gave them the scroll. Ranma will be coming here and she knows what you did. And if you are still here when she comes home… nobody in this household… no one… is going to lift a finger to stop her, no matter what she decides to do with you."

The color drained from Soun's face. "P-perhaps a good long training journey wouldn't be such a bad thing for me after all…"

"Perhaps," Nabiki replied archly and sat back down.

Soun glanced to her, then to Kasumi. He opened his mouth, closed it again, then stared at the table for a long moment as if the patterns in the wood grain could give him answers. Finally, in a quiet voice he said, "I'll… I'll go pack." He stood and shuffled off to his room.

Nabiki waited until he was gone then scooted over next to Kasumi. She could see that her older sister was struggling to hold herself together.

"Thank you, sis," Nabiki said, putting her arms around her.

"It's… it's for the best… isn't it?" Kasumi asked, somewhat shakily.

Nabiki swallowed. "With everything that's happening right now, I can't deal with Daddy and his role in all of this. I think… getting him out of all this craziness means we can deal with him without all this other madness cluttering it up." Nabiki sighed. "Assuming, of course, we do get through this."

"Do you hate him?" Kasumi asked softly.
Nabiki looked up to make sure her father was out of earshot, then considered. "I'm… angry right now. Angry at too many people for too many reasons. Maybe… ask me again when that's over with."

"Do you hate me?" Kasumi asked again, staring into her teacup.

Nabiki shook her head and hugged her sister tighter. "Never."

000

The trek back to Kuno Manor was a more tiring hike than Kodachi had anticipated. It was also worrisome, as her burden had not so much as stirred since they began their trip. She hefted the redhead on her back a bit more securely and continued, hopping from rooftop to rooftop.

Finally she stopped to rest and survey the area. Another figure landed on the rooftop next to her.

"Whoever they are, they do not seem to be giving pursuit," Tatewaki said, glancing about. He had Ryouga slung over his shoulders and was trying not breathe too heavily and mask his fatigue - likely as a matter of pride.

"Rest assured, they are out there, even if we don't see them," Kodachi replied, eyes narrowing.

"Let us hope they remain wary until we get home," Tatewaki said. "We could call for the limo…"

"I'd rather not stay in one place long enough to wait for it," Kodachi answered. She didn't mention the fact that the exertion was helping her avoid dwelling on the morning's events or what she had seen happen with the girl she was currently carrying.

"A shame. I was hoping you could use the time to explain to me what, exactly, happened this morning, and the reasons for your frantic call-to-arms of nearly the entire Kuno family staff," Tatewaki said.

Kodachi winced. "If you are regretting answering my call, brother dear…"

She felt his hand on her shoulder and glanced at him in surprise.

"I offered my help unconditionally, did I not? My sword is yours, as promised, regardless of the circumstances Dachi. I merely would like to know who I am fighting and why."

"I wish I could tell you, brother. Aside from their being foreigners and apparently Chinese, I know no more about these assailants than do you, nor do I know what their interest is in… these two." Kodachi sighed. "As for the rest of what I have to tell… let us get home. I wish to tend to these two before telling you a tale which may convince you that I am as mad as people say I am."

000

Yuka sat back down at the living room table. Kasumi was tending to Ukyou and Akane's injuries from their scuffle with Genma, Nabiki was fruitlessly scrolling through contacts on her phone and Hiroshi and Daisuke were quietly picking at some fruit Kasumi had set out.

"Sayuri and Riko are on their way over," she said. "I wasn't able to get through to Rin. I left a message, but I had to keep it low-key to avoid freaking out her parents. I didn't get anything from her mobile. She must have it turned off."

"She's probably out with her family," Hiroshi replied. "Movie night or something."
"People do stuff with their families?" Daisuke asked, frowning.

"Yeah, when you're wholesome and functional and stuff I suppose," Hiroshi answered.

"Huh… must be nice. My parents are working all the time."

"Should… should we be having our families come out too? Are they at risk?" Yuka asked nervously.

She felt a touch on her shoulder and turned to see Cologne there. She had to resist the urge to recoil from the wizened visage.

"Do not fret, child. You and your families are of little concern to Lo Shan or Himura and their goals. They are in no more danger than anyone else in this neighborhood." She smiled in what Yuka presumed was supposed to be a reassuring way and patted her arm gently.

"Which is to say, a lot of danger," Daisuke muttered.

"So why are we calling everyone in then?" Yuka asked.

Daisuke leaned forward and lowered his voice. "Look at 'em, Yuka. Ranma's run off and she may be dead… but even if she's not… well, things are pretty screwed up with that whole birth record thing. Shampoo is missing. Ryouga is nowhere to be found. They're kicking their Dad out of the house. Every adult they know has betrayed them… err, present company excluded of course," he nodded nervously towards Cologne.

Cologne chuckled dryly. "No offense taken, sonny. There are times I sincerely regret growing up myself. I don't recommend it."

"Uhh… yeah… anyway… we're moral support," He popped a grape in his mouth.

"I'd feel better if it didn't seem like half of this was our fault," Hiroshi said, propping his head up on his fist.

"To be fair, Ranma found out the truth on his own when he got a hold of that scroll," Daisuke said. "At best we just provided supporting evidence."

"Her own," Yuka corrected them stiffly.

"Hey, last I heard Ranma was pretty flexible about pronouns," Daisuke shot back. "It's not like Ranma's suddenly a different person just 'cuz we found all this stuff out, so I don't think we should be changing the rules."

Yuka frowned. "What are the rules?"

"Last form we see him in determines the pronoun, unless otherwise indicated," Hiroshi said, reaching for an apple. "Basic Jusenkyo etiquette."

"Well, actually…" Daisuke said thoughtfully. "Is it? Ranma's the only one with a gender changing curse, right?"

"There was that Prince Herb guy…" Hiroshi reminded him.

"Oh yeah… but he had his own pronoun rule, according to Ranma," Daisuke replied.

"Oh? What pronoun are we supposed to use for this Prince Herb?" Yuka asked.
"Bitch," Hiroshi and Daisuke replied in unison.

"Works for either gender with him," Daisuke added.

Nabiki snorted and looked up from her phone. "There is no way that either of you would ever have the balls to call Herb 'Bitch'."

"Not to his face, no," Daisuke said.

"But his face is in China," Hiroshi added.

"But Bitch's face is in China," Daisuke corrected.

Nabiki chuckled and shook her head. She looked thoughtful for a moment then got up and walked over to join Akane and Ukyou, kneeling next to them to take Akane's hand.

"See?" Daisuke said, casually fistbumping Hiroshi. "Tutu Detectives and Moral Support to the rescue again." He paused, gave Yuka a searching look, then extended his fist to her across the table. Hiroshi added his own in offer to her.

Yuka regarded the proffered fists skeptically. "I… Don't have to wear a tutu, do I?"

"We've considered adding a branch specializing in bow ties, if you're interested," Hiroshi said with a smirk.

Yuka grinned and bumped their fists with her own. "Deal. Bow ties are cool."

---

Kodachi would never describe Kuno Manor as 'welcoming', but no one could deny it was Kuno territory and arriving at the front gates was a relief. For the last half of the trip she had been seeing movement out of the corners of her eyes as their shadows had grown bolder, despite the best efforts of Sasuke and the other retainers.

At the gates one of the butlers and two maids were present with the pair of stretchers she had requested. With a grateful sigh, Kodachi lay her burden down on the gurney. Next to her, Tatewaki laid down his own and the maids set about wheeling them into the manor while Kodachi walked between them and looked the over. Her medical training was informal, but Kodachi had realized at an early age that it was in her best interests to educate herself in the symptomatology of overdose and poison.

The two of them were still unresponsive. Their breathing was shallower than she liked, but not labored. Their color was somewhat paler than she was happy with and their skin was clammy and cold. whatever they dosed them with, those idiots very nearly stopped their hearts! She grit her teeth but forced herself to remain calm; Righteous anger would wait until she had a suitable target upon which to vent it.

"Take them to the old infirmary. Have the nurse… Kikue? Yes, have Kikue monitor their blood pressures and take samples if it's not too low. I'll be trying to determine what they used on them."

She rattled the darts she had pulled out of their necks in her hand. "They should be monitored until they wake up. I want to be notified the instant they do."

"Yes, ma'am," the maids said smartly as they passed through the double doors into the mansion.

"Will you be needing the bath, mum?" the butler said. He had a stout English accent that Kodachi strongly suspected was an affectation, as the man was as Japanese as she was. He insisted that he had picked it up while at University in Wales.

"In a few hours. I want to get started on this first, before the compounds decay," Kodachi said. She was already pondering how best to determine what she was dealing with. She had a few ideas about what might cause such an effect.

"I have rarely seen you so focused, sister," Tatewaki said. She realized he had fallen into step next to her. "Might I offer some assistance?"

She raised an eyebrow. "You've hardly displayed any interest in chemistry before, brother dear."

He inclined his head in acknowledgement. "That is true, but I was thinking, perhaps, that you might like to talk."

Kodachi's walk slowed. She glanced down at the two darts in her hand. "Brother… Tachi… Do you… have you ever seen anything that would cause you to believe in magic?"

Tatewaki chuckled. "I believe that I have been known to spout off about sorcerers and foul dark magicks in the past. If you fear that I still cling to such superstitions…"

She shook her head. "Brother… I saw something today… something that I struggle to comprehend. But I saw it clearly, and in the presence of two others who also saw it. What's more, they treated the event as though it were no new thing to them… That nothing were out of the ordinary. I… worry that my own sanity is not as solid as I once believed," She took a breath. "I am… reluctant to tell you, for fear… you will think me mad."

Tatewaki blinked then folded his arms. "I am hardly one to lay such judgements, Dachi. But… I promise to keep an open mind. I know how the mind can play tricks, and I know something of madness. And to mine eyes, you have been saner of late than I have ever seen you."

"Which is why I am loathe to change that opinion of me. I… appreciate your faith in me. I miss the days when it was not such a rare gift. She took a deep breath. "Nabiki Tendo confronted Nodoka while she and I were finalizing the details of the marriage contract today."

"There was an altercation?" Tatewaki asked.

"Yes, but not between Nabiki and me." Kodachi found herself fidgeting and held her hands stiffly at her sides to mask her impatience - determined not to play the part of the flustered child in this. "I had thought initially that she had come to contest the marriage, but it quickly became clear she had some other purpose… some anomaly with regards to my Darling Ranma's birth. The way she carried on I would have deemed her mad, but…" She shook her head. "You are correct. I have seen madness, and Nabiki Tendo was as clear as day. She produced copies of birth records for two Ranma Saotomes. One male, one female."

"That is hardly a shock," Tatewaki frowned, "We already know this to be fact. We are well acquainted with both Ranma and his sister Ran."

Kodachi shook her head. "No… Ran claimed to be the illegitimate daughter of Genma Saotome, but these documents clearly showed both children being born to the same mother, at the same date and time… in different places."

Tatewaki frowned and rubbed his chin. "One was false? Do you suspect the male sibling to be the illegitimate one, then? With documentation falsified to give him primacy over his unwanted sister?"
"For a moment I did. Then… Ranma himself arrived and joined the conflict. He himself bore a scroll… and the conversation turned towards something done to him when he was a child, and his mother…” She paused to choose her words with care. "I had thought our mother could spit venom, but the things she said to him… She implied that he was in some way manufactured to replace his sister. And then… Then he stumbled and dumped a vase of water on himself, and… changed."

"Changed? Changed how?" Tatewaki asked. "His behaviour?"

"No! Physically!" Kodachi looked up imploringly. "Dear Brother, this is why I fear you will think me mad - but I swear to you that from the moment he arrived at his mother's home to just now as the maid wheeled them off, I have not taken my eyes off of Ranma Saotome. He became his sister."

Kodachi's brow furrowed. "Like… as in makeup washed away? Ran was impersonating Ranma?"

"A… spirit?" Tatewaki shook his head. "Brother, Ran is nearly a head shorter than Ranma. Her build is utterly different. Her voice is different! This was not hair dye and artfully padded clothing!" She shuddered. "And… and both of them… Nodoka and Nabiki… they accepted it without question… as though this was routine. Ranma's mother disapproved of him changing. She claimed he was possessed by the spirit of his deceased sister!"

"I know! I know…" Kodachi sighed. "I had hoped that one or both of them would awaken so they might explain things to me." She closed her eyes. "They mentioned a place called 'Jusenkyo'. Perhaps… ask the librarian if he might search the archives, see if we can find some veracity to all of this? Some… explanation that is not that I have lost my mind?"

Tatewaki glanced down the hall. "I… felt something beyond natural about that girl… No, no, I mustn't confuse my own addled ramblings with this." He shook his head to clear it.

"Then better we research what we can and do that one thing for which our family has never been terribly renowned… we wait," Tatewaki finished grimly.

"So… explain that to me one more time… slowly," Sayuri said, eyes wide.

Nabiki took a deep breath. "Ranma was born a girl. When she was born, her parents lost their minds and decided to fake birth records for a boy and to raise her as a boy. But more than that, they decided to use a scroll that our father gifted them before Ranma was born that described a method to permanently change someone's gender, including altering their mind. Genma took Ranma when she was two years old and, for 14 years, convinced her she was a boy, possibly using mind control drugs and neko-ken induced psychological trauma to reinforce it. Then, when they got to Jusenkyo and he was able to complete the potion, he messed something up and Ranma ended up half and half, but inverted from a regular curse. Ranma found out today - and, because Nodoka Saotome is an evil bitch, Ranma snapped and ran off. Then there was a big explosion on the outskirts of Nerima that we think was a Perfect Shi Shi Hokodan, but we can't check - because for some reason the Amazons are here in force and trying to kill us. Now Shampoo, Ryouga and Ranma are all missing and we're waiting for whoever is leading the Amazons to come parlay because we're apparently in the midst of a civil war."

Sayuri nodded all the way through, then was silent for a while after Nabiki finished.

"Nope," Sayuri said finally.

"'Nope'?” Nabiki repeated, confused.

"Nope." Sayuri shook her head. "I've officially exceeded my threshold for this. This is obviously a dream and any minute Dad will wake me up for breakfast. I'll be going to a normal, ordinary, boring school with normal, ordinary, boring people where nothing at all exciting ever happens and this was just a dream that got out of hand because I did a stupid, like eat a lamb curry pizza or something."

"Do… do you want me to pinch you?” Riko, sitting next to her, asked nervously.

"No," Sayuri said then buried her face in her hands. "This is insane, Nabiki. I'm not the only one who thinks that, right? Please tell me I'm not the only sane girl in the room right now."

"I think you might just be, Sayuri," Nabiki said sadly. "I'm in way over my head. I keep thinking I'm getting on top of it and then…” She looked down. "I'm… still processing all of this."

"But Ranma… Ranma is all right, isn't she?" Riko asked hopefully.

Nabiki remained silent.

"Doesn't Ranma have a cell phone for exactly this reason?!” Sayuri asked.

"I've been calling it pretty much continually every half hour. Ranma either has it turned off, the battery is dead, or…” Nabiki shrugged eloquently. "It's probably just turned off."

"Now that you mention it, I don't think anyone's actually told her that you have to charge those things…” Riko added sheepishly.

"So… what do we do now? Do we just go to school tomorrow like everything is normal?" Sayuri demanded.

"Unless you can think of something better? Yeah," Nabiki said. "Us non martial artists, anyway. Cologne is pretty sure the Amazons have no interest in us and it's the best first place to start gathering info to try and figure out what's going on."

"She's 'pretty sure'?" Sayuri said skeptically. "You'll forgive me if that doesn't fill me with confidence. You know Himura is behind all of this somehow, right?"

"Of course I know!" Nabiki shot back testily. "But I can't prove any direct connection, nor do I have any indication that her making a deal with the Joketsuzoku would breach the terms of our competition. I don't know anything right now." She took a deep breath. "If you're not on board, that's fine, you can stay at the dojo until this blows over, or head back home."

"I think we should all probably calm down," Riko said, glancing between the two of them.

Sayuri took a second to compose herself. "We're on board, Nabiki," she said finally. "Ranma is my friend too. And, more than that, I'm her Team Captain. Even if that doesn't mean much when she's leaping tall buildings and being indestructible, it still means I have a responsibility, even if I am scared. So... don't worry about me. I just want to know that there aren't any other surprises you aren't telling us about - like Ryoga is an alien, or the Kuno family is growing a crop of sentient carnivorous tomatoes to try and take over the world or that we're all actually nothing more than a simulation running on someone's desktop PC or something."

"Well... for most of those I'm as in the dark as you are. But I can say with some certainty that Ryoga's not an alien," Nabiki said, the ghost of a smile passing across her lips. "Although he might have a bit of demon in his ancestry..."

000

Outsider civilization was an odd thing. On the surface, it seemed a mighty thing - all towering edifices of steel and concrete and lights that ensures no corner of their realm ever knew darkness so the brilliance of their cities dulled the very presence of the stars themselves.

And yet, individually, they were pathetic - weak, subservient and out of shape; content to go about meaningless lives like drones in a hive, unaware or uncaring of the movement of history around them and contributing little to nothing to it. New construction sprang up even as forgotten corners rotted and decayed.

This land is overdue for a good Mongol horde invasion, Lo Shan thought as she looked out the window of the penthouse suite their benefactor had so generously provided them.

"[Honored Elder.]" One of the warriors she had retained as a personal retainer walked up and knelt. "[The Outsider Himura wishes to speak with you. She seems agitated.]

"[I imagine she is,]" Lo Shan said and sighed. "[Send the girl in.]

The warrior nodded and stepped out. Lo Shan remained at the window until she heard the snappy footsteps of the girl's heeled shoes.

"I expect you are upset?" Lo Shan said. She turned to see Himura standing there. The girl's posture was rigid, her eyes hard and her expression unreadable.

Ah. The look of a youngster who has just been 'betrayed' by a foolish adult, Lo Shan thought with some amusement. She had to admit that Himura did interest her. The girl had potential as a contact, but she found herself a bit disappointed that she apparently had expected Lo Shan to jump quietly through her hoops.

"'Disappointed' would be a better word," Himura said. Her tone was measured and careful.

"It is normal for children to be disappointed by their elders until such time as they grow and learn why things are the way they are," Lo Shan replied. "To your credit, I had expected screaming and carrying on."

"We had an agreement," Himura replied, not rising to Lo Shan's bait.

"We did." Lo Shan began to walk around her, hands folded behind her back. "And... I have altered it, as circumstances have demanded." She sighed heavily. "You feel betrayed, of course. But I do not do this in bad faith. You are young and naive and, while your schemes might seem perfect and ideal to you at your tender age, you must understand the real world..."

"With all due respect, honored Elder, before I deign to be lectured about the 'real world' of modern Japan by the leader of a small village in the Chinese hinterlands, perhaps you should ask for an update from your subordinates on the successes of the day," Himura said tightly.
Lo Shan stopped. She frowned at the girl. Part of her wanted to deal with the disrespect she had shown harshly and quickly, to ensure the girl did not think it wise to speak out of turn with her in the future, but what she said gave her enough pause to follow that advice. She walked to the door and signaled her retainer.

"[A-actually, honored Elder, Tan Pohn and Su Tzu are… waiting to speak with you.]", the retainer said nervously.

"[And why did you not tell me this sooner?]" Lo Shan asked, feeling her ire rise.

"[They… opted to allow the Outsider girl to speak with you first.]"

Idiots! Lo Shan turned back and glared at Himura. The girl's face was still inscrutable, but Lo Shan realized that Himura was intentionally making her look foolish. She wondered if the girl understood the dangerous game she was so casually playing. ":[Send them in!]

As soon as she saw them, Lo Shan knew they had failed. Both were dirty and their clothes were ragged. Tan Pohn was missing her sword and Su Tzu looked like she had a house collapse on her. Both were hesitant, with eyes downcast.

"[Well…?]" Lo Shan asked. "[Where is the Godslayer?]

"[Escaped.]", Tan Pohn said. "[We are tracking…]

"[Tracking was not your task!]", Lo Shan cut her off sharply. She turned to Su Tzu. "[And you? You outnumbered Xian Pu and the Outsiders. What happened!??]

"[We… lost track of Xian Pu,]", Su Tzu said. "[Before we could apprehend the other two… Elder Cologne intervened on their behalf.]

"[Tch,]", Lo Shan snorted. "[You informed her she had no authority, yes? Does she intend to defy the wishes of the Council even now?]

"[S-she… she has invoked the Covenant of Contested Ground, honored Elder,]" Su Tzu said.

Lo Shan winced. "[This was why you were to secure her Great Granddaughter before she became aware of our activities!]", she ground out tightly.

She made at least a token effort to contain her irritation then, with two quick palm strikes, flung the two young warriors across the room, sending them crashing into the lavish decorations adorning the walls.

"[Idiots! Do you have any idea how much your failure has jeopardized our position here!??]" She stalked up to Tan Pohn and grabbed the girl by the throat as she lay on the floor, coughing and trying to convinced bruised lungs to draw air. "[I should kill you for this failure and spare you the punishment the council will place upon you.]

"Spare her," Himura's voice cut through her rage.

Lo Shan turned to glare at the outsider girl. "Do not presume to…!"

"Spare her or I withdraw all support for you and your warriors effective immediately," Himura continued. Her eyes were still that same cold, inscrutable ice.

Lo Shan dropped Tan Pohn and turned to stalk over to Himura. "Do you believe that because I have suffered a setback you may now dictate terms to me, little girl?"

Himura raised her chin and looked Lo Shan in the eyes. "No, honored Elder," she said softly. "I believe I have been able to dictate terms to you since the moment you set foot in Japan. I merely think you may now be ready to listen."

Lo Shan's eyes widened. She reached out and casually took hold of the girl's chin. "Tell me… do you understand what I could do to you with the simple pressure of my thumb, child?"

There was no accompanying fear in the girl's eyes. Just dead emptiness. The mask she wore was gone. "Quite a lot I imagine," Himura said, her voice somewhat strained as she felt the tingle of the pressure point Lo Shan was brushing. "Tell me, Elder… what do you imagine would happen after?"

"We would complete our mission and return to China," Lo Shan said. "With or without your support."

The corner of Himura's mouth tugged up in a grin. "Do you? Really?"

Lo Shan's jaw tightened. She did not like the gleam that had entered the girl's eyes.

"You are in the heart of a foreign land, far from the support of your own and in territory claimed by forces you know well enough not to anger. You plan to kill or maim your only contact and ally in this territory, complete your mission without support despite already having failed once, and then somehow return home with no transport?" Himura's tone was quietly mocking.

"I don't need to kill you, child," Lo Shan said.

"Perhaps hold me ransom, then? See how benevolent my Grandfather is? Or perhaps you wish to see if there is some torment you can visit upon me that my father had not already dreamed up by the time I was twelve?" Himura reached up and pulled Lo Shan's hand away. "Choose carefully, honored Elder. Do you swallow your pride or do you spark a war with the Yakuza?"

Lo Shan set her jaw, grinding her teeth. "You are on unsteady ground and you are not so clever as you believe, girl," she spat as she stepped back.

Himura raised an eyebrow. "I was not the one who got impatient. You agreed to wait. If you had done so I could have delivered a willing Ranma to you."

"I still don't believe you can deliver on that promise," Lo Shan scoffed.

"Well, you had best hope you're wrong, because that is now your singular hope." Himura straightened her shirt. "I am disappointed because, although I anticipated you doing this, I had hoped for more trust. It would have made all of this far easier." She walked over to the window and looked out. "As it stands, Ranma is now in the custody of House Kuno, which even I dare not cross. Khu Long has made the Tendo Dojo neutral territory and… I believe has begun the process of challenging the legitimacy of your current administration? And now that she has the scroll, she is aware of what has been done and likely will quickly derive your own scheme from that knowledge."

"How did Khu Long get the scroll!?" Lo Shan demanded.

"Because I gave it to her," Himura said casually. "Or, more accurately, I gave it to Ranma, who left it for Nabiki, who I imagine is in the process of giving it to her."
Lo Shan was next to Himura in a heartbeat. She gripped her upper arm and forced her to turn to face her. She was rewarded with a momentary flicker of uncertainty in Himura's eyes.

"Why? Why!? Why would you do such a foolish thing!? Why would you do such a treacherous thing!? You may have undone all our plans!"

Himura's eyes narrowed. "Your plans are as of little concern to me as mine were to you a moment ago, honored Elder," she said. The quiet, dead tone had returned to her voice. "I allowed Ranma to have the scroll because it was always my intent for her to have it, and for Khu Long to verify its authenticity. Because it was necessary for Ranma to know and believe the truth of what her parents had done to her beyond any shadow of a doubt." She sighed. "Also… you may wish to release my arm. Paivio is patient, but he may mistake your intentions."

Lo Shan frowned then saw, in the corner of her eye, a faint glint from the rooftop of the building across from hers. She realized that her own anger had blinded her to the sense of danger she was now feeling. A gunman who had a clear field of fire..

"I am not allowed by the rules of my Grandfather's test to use such methods against Nabiki Tendo… but her contest and mine was never one of violence in the first place. But you are not Nabiki Tendo. I have made sure that I am prepared at all times in dealing with you," Himura said quietly.

Lo shan released Himura's arm and glared at her. "Do not presume your toys are so fearsome to me, child."

"It is said that to train an archer to use the longbow, it is best to start teaching his father before he is born," Himura said quietly. "For a martial artist such as yourself, generations of breeding and decades of training. For a gunman who can shoot with basic competency? A few hours every week after work in the video arcade. You are in a land where quantity has a quality of its own, honored Elder."

"Is that a threat?" Lo Shan asked tightly.

"Merely information to consider," Himura replied. "Which I recommend you do consider before making your next move. I will be proceeding with my own plans regardless. My offer to you and yours stands unchanged, but I require commitment this time."

"Which means you wish for us to be your underlings," Lo Shan said angrily.

"If it helps you to adhere to your role in the plan, then yes," Himura replied coldly. "We have passed the point where I require your assistance, Elder. My grandfather's challenge is moot now. I am willing to assist you in accomplishing your goals, but only because doing so facilitates my own. And if there is a repeat of today, where that ceases to be true, then our relationship will be terminated and I will make sure my Grandfather is aware of your unwelcome presence."

"And what evidence do I have that your plans will end better than this?" Lo Shan said.

Himura shrugged. "Faith, I suppose." A smirk slowly crossed her face. "That… and I have Xian Pu."

"What," Lo Shan said.

"Oh, does that interest you? The Granddaughter of your political rival?" Himura asked. "One of my assets picked her up after your warriors failed to secure her. She is safe and available for you to use as a bargaining chip if you wish. She's most certainly not going anywhere, and if you need proof I could arrange for an ear or a finger be provided to you to present to Khu Long? Or is that too gauche for your sensibilities?" Himura folded her hands behind her back. The artificial mask of cheerful pleasantry had returned as it became clear, even to Lo Shan, that Himura had the upper hand.

"No… no harm to her. Not yet," Lo Shan grated. Her jaw twitched and finally, she forced herself to bow. "I… apologize for my haste. My warriors are at your disposal. For now."

"Excellent. For the present we'll have to wait a bit until Ranma pokes her head out of Castle Kuno."
Himura tapped her chin thoughtfully. "It would be best if you could get your warriors to back off for now and negotiate a cease-fire with Khu Long, perhaps."

"You honestly expect the mansion of a pair of rich children to be able to keep us out?" Lo Shan asked. "Why not simply take them unawares in their beds?"

Himura's smirk widened. "If you wish to try, be my guest. It will add authenticity to the whole thing after all." She glanced over at Tan Pohn and Su Tzu. "But don't send either of these two. I'd like to have them work with me. As a… gesture of trust and cooperation."

Lo Shan narrowed her eyes. "And if your estimation is wrong and we succeed?"

Himura shrugged. "Then Ranma is yours to do with as you will, so long as I am allowed to credit our partnership for it to my Grandfather."

Lo Shan sniffed. Her pride had been prickled and so she intended to see to the matter personally."
Very well. Take them then. They have failed in their tasks. Being errand girls for an outsider seems as fitting a punishment as any."

Tan Pohn and Su Tzu both winced visibly.

Himura inclined her head. "I appreciate it. I shall wait to hear of your success with Castle Kuno, then?"

"You will not wait long," Lo Shan replied.

000

Thanks for sticking with me so far. Whew!

Those curious about the letter Ranma wrote? It will be shown in its entirety later on.

I know many of you don't like Himura as a character. I want you to know I appreciate all the feedback you've given me, and I will try and use it in future writings. But Himura's plans always had a very tight arc mapped out that haven't allowed me much wiggle room in this story. So… again, thank you for sticking with this story with all of its flaws. I hope to make the eventual resolution worthwhile.

But we've got a ways to go yet.
Breaking Your Toys

(11 years ago)

"No! Please, Daddy! I don't want to do it again! I can't learn it! I can't!" she cried out, struggling against the ropes. She could hear the cats in the pit, yowling. They smelled the fish strapped to her. Some were already jumping up and trying to get at her. She could see their glowing yellow eyes and the glint of the light off their claws as they leapt and swiped. She knew the burn and itch and pain that would come once she was lowered into the pit and they began to scratch and fight to get at the food.

"You've been lying to me, boy," Genma said. His voice was heavy and slow. He sounded tired. "When that girl in town asked if you were a boy, I heard the hesitation. You know how important this is."

"Please! I'm sorry! I-I got confused!" Ranma begged.

Genma sighed and gripped Ranma's chin, forcing her to face him. "Why do you lie to me, boy? You know a girl can't grow up to carry on the Saotome school of Anything Goes Martial Arts! Girls are only good for flower arranging and... and tea ceremonies! Is that what you want?"

Ranma didn't actually know what flower arranging or tea ceremonies were but she knew she had to avoid them at all costs. "No! No I don't!"

"I don't believe you," he said gruffly. "You've been slacking on the hair dye, you've been playing with girls... It was that Ukyou girl, wasn't it? What did she tell you? Tell me or it'll be worse, boy!"

"What... B-but... Ucchan is a boy..." Ranma said, momentarily confused. "A-and you told me to forget..."

"I know what I told you!" Genma snarled. "Listen to what I am telling you now, boy, or I'll put you in the pit right this instant! What did you and Ukyou get up to?"

"H-he..." Ranma sniffed. "He wanted to make an Okonomiyaki sauce... a special one... H-he said I could try it in ten years when it was ready, i-if I promised..." She trailed off, not wanting to betray that secret oath.

"Promise what, boy!? Out with it!" Genma jerked the rope a few times for emphasis.

"I promised to take care of him for the rest of his life if the sauce was good!" Ranma blurted out, tears streaming down her cheeks.

Genma's expression hardened. "That sounds like something a wife would do, Ranma. Is that what you were telling him? That you wanted to be his wife?!

"No! I just... I... I just wanted to try th-the sauce, and-and-and..." she hiccuped. "I-I-I-I spilled it! B-but I tried to fix it and-and-and..."

"So you were making sauce now!?" Genma growled.

Ranma snapped her mouth shut and whimpered.

Genma's eyes narrowed. "You haven't taken your pills either, have you? Have you!?"
"Th-they make me dizzy! It… it makes it hard to concentrate…" Ranma whimpered.

Genma turned away and stormed back over to the tent, pulled out his pack and rummaged around inside it. He pulled out a small, cloth bag and picked out two round, homemade tablets. He walked back over to her and grasped her jaw roughly, squeezing until she was forced to open her mouth. He shoved the pills so far down her throat that she nearly gagged, but after a bit of struggle she managed to swallow them.

"There. Now listen to me, and listen well, boy," Genma said, holding her head as he looked her in the eyes. "You are going into that pit, and you are going to learn that technique, or you are going to be left to die in there, am I clear?"

She whimpered softly.

"Only men come out of that pit. Little girls die in there. If you're a little girl, even a little bit, you are going to die, do you understand me?" Genma said, his voice was grave, stern and serious.

She whimpered and nodded.

"Good," Genma said. "You might not understand this now, but you will when you're older, Ranma. I'm doing this for your own good. One day you'll thank me for this." He released her and then walked over to the tree where the other end of the rope was tied. He undid it and started lowering her down as she sniffled.

She could hear the cats' yowls getting louder. She knew he was wrong. She had seen it. The cats sometimes found a way out. Not all of them, but when they did, they ran far away and wouldn't let Genma catch them again.

She yelped in pain as the first cat latched onto her leg, clawing and straining as it tried to get at the food, then kicking off with its mouthful. She knew that was going to continue for hours until they got it all, then they would start biting and scratching trying to get more. Maybe, if she was a cat, they would leave her alone. Maybe, if she was a cat, she could run away and not go into the pit again. Boys came out of the pit but Genma always found an excuse to put her back.

Her vision blurred as the medicine started to kick in. It didn't dull the pain, but it made it hard to react. Hard to think. Cats probably didn't have to take the pills.

Maybe she'd try being a cat next time…

000

Ranma woke up to a few terrifying moments of sleep paralysis. Her breath hitched in her throat until she managed to remember how drawing a breath worked and she gasped in a deep lungful of air. She curled onto her side and started to cough, fighting to beat back the surge of asphyxia induced panic.

When the spasms finally passed, she took a moment to look around. Her mind wasn't totally awake yet, so she was a bit confused to find that her arms weren't covered in scratches and bites as they usually were when she got out of the pit.

No… not the pit… I was somewhere else… she thought as the fog of the dream slipped away. She tried to cling to it as a sickly dread started to seep in around it, one that made the dream about the pit of starving cats seem preferable. At least with the cats she knew how to get out. She closed her eyes and shuddered. I don't want to remember! I don't WANT to remember! I DON'T WANT TO REMEMBER!
"You're a THING, Ranma! People will be able to tell! They'll KNOW. YOU'LL know! You'll never lead a normal life, male OR female!"

"Nnnnh!" she whimpered, clutching her hands to her temples. Please let it have been a dream! Please tell me that it was only a dream! PLEASE! Just let me be in the pit again! I'll do better this time, I swear!

"Ranma? Ranma, you're awake!"

Her eyes snapped open. The voice was familiar. Male. Not her father's, but familiar, even comforting? She uncurled just enough to roll over a bit and peek. "R-ryo?"

Ryouga was sitting on a cot across from her. He had bandages on his hands and around his temples. His shirt had been replaced with an ill-fitting but clean plain white T shirt. He stood up and reached for her. "Ranma!"

Before she knew what she was doing, she shrank back from him. The movement was an instinctive one - she didn't want him to touch her. She didn't want him to see. "H-hey, Ryo…" she said nervously.

He scowled. "Don't 'Hey Ryo' me! Ranma, what the hell is going on!? You nearly killed yourself yesterday!"

That's right… Ranma thought miserably. I screwed that up, too. I got him hurt… almost got him killed. "I-I'm sorry… I'm sorry, okay!?" she said, perhaps a little more sharply than she intended. "You shouldn't have been there… You… you should have let me die."

"I should have let… Ranma, what the hell are you talking about?!" He stepped forward and reached for her again.

And again, she scooted back until her back was literally against the wall. "Don't touch me!"

Ryouga took a step back, his eyes wide.

"Y-you… you shouldn't touch me…" Ranma shook her head. He brain felt like it was on fire as she struggled to process everything that had happened - everything that had changed. "I'm not… I'm not real."

Ryouga frowned. "Ranma, if this is about not being a real girl again…"

"No! I'm not real! I'm not real!" she shouted at him. She squeezed her eyes shut as she started to hyperventilate again, the old panic rising. "Please… Just… don't touch me. I don't want you to hate me."

Ryouga glanced around the room as if he expected to see someone, but they were alone. It was a small room, something like a nurse's office, but it was otherwise empty at the moment. He moved carefully, slowly, as though he was trying not to startle a frightened animal, and sat down on the bed. "Take it easy, Ranma. What… what happened? I can feel it coming off you in waves, even at this range."

Ranma opened her eyes to look at him and swallowed. I just want it to go away. I just want it to go away! She trembled with the certainty that he was going to start hating her too. "I'm not a person, Ryouga. T-two years ago at Jusenkyo… my Dad… he made me. He made me outta magic - to replace the real Ranma Saotome."
"What?" Ryoga looked confused.

Ranma took a shaky breath. "The real Ranma… she was born a girl. And… and… Mom and Pop… they didn't want her. They wanted a boy… so… so that was what the training journey was all about. The whole trip was to get the ingredients for this potion or spell or whatever. And then… and then…” She squeezed her eyes shut as a flash of memory bubbled up from the darkness. She remembered being held down, struggling vainly as something hot and acrid-tasting was poured down her throat - something that burned and kept burning as it started to eat her from the inside. "They made her drink it, and… it killed her, so that the Nannichuan curse could inhabit her body or something… Me."

"Ranma…” Ryoga's eyes were wide with horror.

"B-but Pop cocked it up… like he does everything… and… and some small part of her got trapped. Now I've got some of her memories, but they're all mixed up and she's stuck being my curse and…” She shuddered. "I shouldn't even exist."

"You're not real…?" Ryoga asked.

"Mom… Mom called me a 'homunculus'," Ranma said softly. "I guess that… that's like a zombie or… or a shinigami or something, right?" She curled into a ball. "All my memories are fakes that they programmed into me. That's why I can't remember stuff, or why I get the details wrong when I do remember, and… and why I don't know how regular human stuff works. Cuz I'm not. Human I guess. I'm not even really feeling what I think I feel. You shoulda… it would have been easier if you had just…!"

"Ranma…"

Ranma laughed bitterly. "You always wanted to get revenge on me, right? For the Jusenkyo curse? Well, good for you because that's all I am! It ain't even murder! Plus… plus I fooled you, right? I made you think I cared! I made you fall in love with a thing. I made you think I l-l-loved you back. S-so… Go for it, man! Take your time with it!"

"Ranma!"

She started, then looked up at him with wide eyes. He had his hand outstretched.

"Take my hand," Ryoga said. His voice was stern. Was he angry? Did she want him to be angry? She had said some awful things… she wanted him to be angry, right?

"N-no…” she retreated from his hand. Please just let it end before he sees… I don't want him to touch me and see there's nothing there!

"Ranma, take my hand," Ryoga repeated.

"There's nothing there, Ryuga!" she shouted. Tears were running down her cheeks. "There never was! It was never real, okay? None of it! Why do you have to see it for yourself? Why…"

"Take. My. Hand."

She swallowed. Hesitantly, she extended her hand towards his. She expected him to snatch her hand, pull her off the bed - use it to hurt her. That'd be all right. Physical pain she could deal with right now. She stretched a bit more. Maybe it would even be a relief…

He leaned over and took her hand, firmly but not roughly, and held it. She whimpered as the Link blazed to life. She tried to jerk her hand back, but he wasn't letting go. She could see his concern, his worry and that mass of red warmth, the name of which terrified her more than anything else at the moment.

"L-let go..." she whimpered. "I don't want to see what's in your head right now!"

"Listen to me," Ryouga said without budging. "This is the Link. Our Link. The original Link. This is the Link that I made with you - without any trickery or science or drugs. I can only do that once in my life, Ranma. Only once. And I did it before you went to Jusenkyo."

"S-so?!" she demanded.

"I didn't make the Link with a homunculus, or a zombie, or a thing. I made the Link with Ranma Saotome." He scooted a bit closer. "Do you understand what I'm saying? I made this link with you. Only you. And I've followed this link for the last three years of my life and it's always done what it's supposed to do; It's led me to Ranma Saotome."

Ranma's eyes widened as realization hit. "I... I'm..."

"You are Ranma Saotome, No matter what your parents or some scroll might say." He took her hand between his and squeezed. "Ranma, your parents have lied to you for your entire life. This is just more of the same - more of what they were doing to you back in middle school."

"I'm..." She looked at her hand, clasped in his, then back up at him. He was telling her the truth - the absolute truth. With the link, he could not lie. She started to shake as waves of emotion started to war within her; fury and despair, confusion and hopelessness, fear and loneliness. Her vision blurred as the tears started to come more forcefully now, rapidly overwhelming what little remained of her control. She began to shudder and sob under the full impact of the lies that ran under everything she had ever known or believed.

Gently, Ryouga pulled her towards him and this time she didn't resist. She started bawling like she hadn't... in fact, she had no memory of ever crying like this, though she had dreamt of it. She felt his arms go around her and for the first time in her life she just let go and wept.

She wasn't sure how long they stayed that way. It felt like ages. She would try and wrestle back control, to stem the surges of emotion, only to have a fresh surge inundate her. It was as though she was trying to purge seventeen years worth of misery all in one go.

By the time her sobbing eased, it was more from sheer exhaustion than having reached any sort of bottom to it all. Her head throbbed with a skull-splitting migraine, her eyes burned and her cheeks stung. Every muscle ached from exhaustion and fatigue. Ryouga's shirt was soaked with tears and snot and she realized that her nose was running and she must be an awful mess.

"Here." Ryouga handed her a strip of cloth - one of his bandannas. She took it gratefully blew her nose and did her best to clean herself up. She trembled, feeling unsteady, like she was teetering on the brink of another crying jag. She felt a little bit like she had when she'd been sick, and had only stopped vomiting because there was simply nothing left to bring up.

She felt simultaneously guilty for clinging to him the way she was, and desperate for him to stay. She was certain that his reassuring presence through the Link was the only thing keeping her sane and she shivered at the thought of being alone in the vast, empty echo chamber of her own mind.

"Why?" she found herself asking softly, even though she didn't really understand herself what the question truly was.
"Why what?" he asked gently.

"I…" she trailed off, "Just… why? Why would my parents… why any of it?" She shook her head. "I don't… why didn't they want me? Why go through all of this? Was… was I really so horrible?"

"No." Ryouga said. His arms tightened around her and she felt a flare of anger in him, but it was not directed at her. "No one… no one could ever deserve this, and you least of all. You're the person who catches everyone else when they fall. Never you."

"Then… why?" she mumbled.

"Because they're broken people."

Ranma and Ryouga looked toward the door for the source of the voice. Kodachi Kuno stood in the doorway, leaning against the doorframe as if she had been watching for a while.

Ranma felt Ryouga's arms slacken around her, as though preparing to move away, but she wasn't ready to face the world without him yet. She whimpered a bit and clung to him tightly while she peered at Kodachi.

"If I had to hazard a guess, anyway. I'm afraid I don't know your parents well enough to properly judge. But… as a broken person myself, I found something very familiar in your mother's gaze," Kodachi continued. "Hello Ran… or should I say Ranma Saotome?" Her voice dropped slightly, a dangerous note entering it. "Or perhaps you would prefer 'My Darling Ranma'?"

Ranma squeezed her eyes shut. She felt Ryouga turn her away slightly, protectively.

"What do you want, Kodachi?" he grated.

"Not a fight, if that's what you're fearing," Kodachi replied. "Not so long as I get the truth, anyway. I believe, after what my brother and I had to go through to get you away from those foreigners, I am entitled to that much at least."

"And if you don't like the truth?" Ryouga asked. "What then?"

Kodachi's eyes narrowed. "Given the events of yesterday, I think it is fair to say that I am guaranteed not to like the truth, Ryouga Hibiki. I have been lied to and had my emotions toyed with for a very long time by all of you, yourself included. What happens next is my decision, and nothing is on the table until after I am given the truth I am owed!" She started pacing. "Shall I start off? The boy I knew as Ranma Saotome, whom I was engaged to marry, is also, somehow, his own sister, Ran, to whom I have poured out my heart as a friend and confidante. This duality is apparently common knowledge, yet it has been kept from me. I also understand that there is some question as to which identity is even valid, though given your obvious affection for and protectiveness of her - as well as the nature of the confrontation with Nodoka yesterday - I begin to suspect which. Now… Have I or have I not been lied to about the boy I loved for the entirety of our relationship?"

Ranma twitched, feeling a sharp stab of guilt. My fault… my fault…

"She didn't know," Ryouga said. "Her parents brainwashed her for her entire life to believe that she was male, even before they transformed her physically."

"And how do you know?" Kodachi asked archly. "Nabiki Tendo I can believe having verified this independently, but you hardly seem the detective sort."
Ryouga took a deep breath. "I knew her in Middle School. Before any of you ever met her."

Kodachi's expression darkened. "So you knew this whole time?!!"

"No! I... she was attending as a boy!" Ryouga said. "It was an all boy's school. It's just..." He reached into his pocket and pulled out a folded piece of old, yellowed paper. "She wrote me a note before she left for China. I only just found it yesterday, but..." he looked down at Ranma, "Is... is it okay if I show her?"

"I... don't know," Ranma said softly. "I don't even remember what I wrote... Just that I wrote it." She glanced at it, then looked away. She didn't want to know.

Ryouga paused, then reluctantly passed it to the Kuno girl. "This is... sensitive stuff, Kodachi. I'd appreciate if..."

"You seek discretion?" Kodachi asked archly as she plucked it from his grasp. "I think I am safe in saying there has been far too little of that all around. Rest assured I will..." She trailed off as she started to read. Her eyes widened and she looked back at Ranma, then back at the letter. She finally shot a questioning look at Ryouga.

"There are... other factors. I don't know if you'll believe me about them, but I'll tell you. For now though, please trust me when I say that the letter you are holding makes everything else make sense," Ryouga said before reclaiming the document and tucking it away.

Kodachi's rancor seemed to have drained away after having read the letter. She hesitated, then sat down on the cot across from them and folded her hands in her lap.

"The first time my mother tried to poison me, I was eight," she said. "It might well have been the accident she claimed it was that first time but, at the very least, it's where she got the idea. I remember... being unable to breathe... retching and struggling and pleading as the world went dark. She took me to the hospital herself... an ambulance would have been too embarrassing, I suppose. According to my father, she stormed into the emergency and demanded I be attended at once and that she be allowed to be present for all of it. Then she insisted on staying overnight at the hospital until I awoke and managing the nurses responsible for my care personally. It was all very motherly and selfless and impressive... at least until the third of fourth time it happened. Munchausen by Proxy her psychologist called it."

Kodachi took a deep breath. "It took them a while to catch her. She would encourage my interest in chemistry and botany, buying me all sorts of exotic, poisonous plants and toxic chemicals that no child should have access to, just so there would always be an excuse - always some reason that it would be my fault and not hers. She used to joke about how I would poison myself just to get her attention, as if what was happening were no more serious than the cute antics of a disturbed child."

She snorted. "I was already making my own antidotes by the age of ten. I remember how it used to frustrate her to watch me eat the 'special' meals she would make for me, then fail to get sick. Tatewaki never saw any of it, of course. It wasn't until her desperation to get me ill enough for another one of her beloved hospital circuses caused her to slip up and was caught. She nearly killed me. Her marriage to father was already a loveless one, but that was the nail in the coffin. Tachi... I don't think he's ever forgiven me. He had been mother's favorite while he bore the brunt of father's madness."

She looked up at them. "I believe you. I recognize that look in your eyes... Ran?" She tried out the name, but the implication was the decision would be left to Ranma.
"I… think… that name makes more sense right now," Ranma said quietly. "I don't… really know who I am anymore. But… I'm not the Ranma Saotome I'm supposed to be."

It felt like Ryouga wanted to protest that, but he kept quiet.

"So… tell me the tale, then? If you can," Kodachi said gently. "I already know… I've seen the magic with my own eyes, and I heard what was said at your mother's home, but… Tell me your tale. In your own words. Was my Darling Ranma ever real?"

"I… I thought he was," Ranma said softly. "You have to believe me, I really thought I was him. That… that I was a man amongst men, that I was…" she trailed off…

"It started to fade, didn't it?" Kodachi asked. "That certainty of your place."

"Everything used to be so clear and simple." Ranma said. "But I… I knew something was wrong. I knew I wasn't what I was supposed to be. I thought… I thought…" She drew a shuddering breath. "When… when I wasn't sure… or when he thought I wasn't sure… that's when Pops would put me in the pit."

"The 'pit'?" Kodachi echoed. "Like… solitary confinement?"

"No," Ryouga said tightly. "A literal pit. Full of starving, feral cats. Genma thought of it as training. To learn the Neko-ken."

"I've heard of this - the source of your fear of cats, yes?" Kodachi asked. "My brother attempted once to exploit it."

"The only ones who got out of the pit and stayed out of it were the cats. The ones that survived," Ranma said in a haunted voice. "H-he… would tie me up and… wrap me in fish sausages, or raw meat, or… or something the cats would like. He said that only men came out of the pit, but… but he would always put me back in, no matter how hard I tried to be a man. But the cats could escape, and he'd leave them alone, find different cats. So… I… I became a cat." Ranma shuddered. "I… I don't want to remember that anymore, please…"

"No… of course…" Kodachi said. "So… your… change was recent?"

"It's a curse, from a place called Jusenkyo," Ryouga said. "It's a legendary training ground with hundreds of pools interspersed with bamboo poles. For every pool there is a 'very tragic story' of some animal or person that drowned in it. If you fall into that pool, you take the form of whatever drowned there. Hot water changes you back… but only until you get splashed with cold water again."

"But… cold water turns you female," Kodachi objected, immediately seeing the wrinkle.

"There was… a potion," Ranma said. She closed her eyes as another flash of memory washed over her - feeling the change, but it was slow and very painful. Joints popped, bone cracked and shifted. "It was… it was supposed to make the change permanent - to make me male mentally and physically. It was… s-supposed to kill who I was, I guess, and replace her with what they wanted. But Pops screwed it up, of course. In the end, it just inverted the curse."

"That was the scroll, wasn't it?" Kodachi said. "Where did you get that?"

"Himura gave it to me," Ranma said. But… I recognize the handwriting. Pops had scrawled notes all over it." She felt a sudden surge of uncertainty. Could it have been a fake? But… then why would Mom…?"
"I don't doubt its veracity. But why would Himura, of all people, have it?" Kodachi asked.

"Pops pawned it when we got back to Japan. She said she found it when she was looking into me," Ranma replied.

"And she just happened to deliver it to you on the day our Omiai was to be decided, and on that same day, a group of foreigners decided to try and capture you?" Kodachi scoffed. "I imagine the New Money thinks that passes for clever, doesn't she?"

"New Money?" Ryouga asked, confused.

"Her family are peasants, all of them. Her grandfather made his money by cornering the market on cancer treatments. Barely three generations of wealth and power and it shows. That lot always mistakes money for nobility." Kodachi tossed her head in a scornful gesture. "Father, with his western sensibilities, got along well with them, but they're hardly more than merchants with delusions of grandeur."

"But… why would she do all that?" Ranma asked.

"If I had to guess? To make sure things were are bad as possible so that it would be more amusing for her," Kodachi replied. "She has always been fascinated with the concept of breaking people. You would have presented a challenge."

"Nabiki," Ranma said suddenly. "I need to call Nabiki." She started to pull away from Ryouga. "I need a phone! If Himura sent the Amazons after me, then they'll be after Nabiki too!"

"Relax," Kodachi said. "You shouldn't be up and about yet. I will have a servant bring a telephone for you." She sighed. "If it makes you feel any better - though I don't believe it will - what must be the majority of these 'Amazons' have been surrounding Kuno Manor since we brought you home last night. I imagine that you remain their priority."

"They're outside? Why haven't they attacked yet?" Ryouga asked nervously.

"They… had a few encounters with our security measures. You remember those, yes?" Kodachi smirked. "We've improved them since your last time through them. I suspect they are scouting, looking for weaknesses and waiting for further instructions."

"So… we're trapped here," Ryouga said.

"I would think there are worse things when in a conflict against a superior foe than to be safe and secure in a well-fortified, supplied and defended castle, but then my dear brother is more the tactician than I," Kodachi said airily.

A butler entered the room with a tray bearing a rather expensive looking smartphone, which Kodachi plucked from it and waved him off.

"But… wait… You never even sent for the phone. How did he know to…?" Ryouga asked, dumbfounded.

The butler turned and bowed slightly. "We are very good at our jobs, sir," he said before he continued on his way out of the room.

000

On the first ring of the phone, Nabiki awoke with a gasp, going from a deep and dreamless slumber to a panicked flailing in a scant fraction of a second. She immediately became entangled in her blanket, struggling and thrashing to free herself before whomever it was gave up.

She needn't have panicked. She heard the click and Kasumi saying 'Hello?' before the third ring.

Nabiki sighed and flopped back on the futon as her moment of panic passed. She set about untangling herself, wincing as she sat up. Her back, used to her soft mattress, was protesting. She had elected to camp out in the living room in case a call came in or Ranma returned home.

It's not like it would be that simple anyway, she thought as she freed her feet from the duvet. It's NEVER that easy.

"Nabiki!" Kasumi called from the hallway. "It's Ranma! On the phone!"

Nabiki's frantic flailing resumed as she scrambled to her feet, slipped and almost fell before she stumbled into the hall and all but snatched the receiver from Kasumi's hands. "Ranma!"

"Hi Nabiki…" Ranma's voice was uncharacteristically meek and subdued. "I'm sorry…"

"No, no, no, God no, don't apologize! You aren't the one who should be apologizing," Nabiki sagged against the wall, cradling the handset to her ear as she was overcome with a sense of relief. "I'm just… you're okay. That's all that matters. After that explosion, I was afraid…"

"I… I really am sorry," Ranma continued. "I… after what Mom said… All of it… finding out I was born a girl, Mom telling me that I'm not a person…"

"Ranma, please… you can't listen to all that nonsense!" Nabiki started. "You are not a homunculus!"

"I-It's okay, Nabiki. Really. Ryouga found me," Ranma said, sounding embarrassed. "He… he reminded me about the Link. I was just being an overly dramatic idiot. I'm sorry…"

"No… no you weren't," Nabiki said. She bit her lower lip and tried to keep her voice from wavering. "That was more than enough to push anyone over the edge, Ranma. Are you okay now? Where are you? Is Ryouga with you? Is he okay?"

"Me'n Ryo are at the Kuno Estate. Apparently a bunch o' psycho Amazons showed up and tranqued us both, but Kodachi and Tatewaki got us out. All those crazy traps they got here seem to be holding 'em off - for now."

Tranquilizers. That's probably why she sounds so tired. I hope, Nabiki thought. *I never thought I'd say this, but… Thank God for Kodachi Kuno. Is she okay? I can't imagine she's happy with what happened."

"She's… taking it pretty well, all things considered. She believes me, anyway. Turns out she… uhh… she knows something about crazy parents," Ranma made a sound that was like an attempt at a laugh that didn't quite work. "Is everyone else okay?"

Nabiki thought quickly. "First put Ryouga on. I want to talk to him."

"Huh? Oh… sure…" Nabiki winced at how disheartened Ranma sounded. She didn't want to think about what was going through the redhead's mind at the moment.

There was a shuffle and another voice came on the line. "Nabiki?" Ryouga's tone came through, by contrast, sounding clear and strong.
Nabiki took a deep breath. "First off, before I say anything else, Ryouga, are you the only one who can hear this? You're not on speakerphone or anything?"

"Uh... yeah," Ryouga said.

"Good." Nabiki took a deep breath. "What kind of shape is Ranma in? Honest opinion. Describe it to me like you're talking about property damage."

There was a pause. "Wrecked," Ryouga finally said. "Massive crater, blasted landscape, flattened trees... probably some stuff on fire..."

"Yeah, that's what I figured. "All right... and in your opinion is she in any shape to fend off a bunch of Amazons who want to drug her, brainwash her and drag her off to China?" Nabiki asked.

"No... not for a while, anyway," Ryouga replied. That answer was immediate and sure.

Nabiki closed her eyes. We're on our own, then. Better not worry them with news about Shampoo. "Okay. That's what I figured. Keep Ranma there for now and keep her safe. Even if she wants to come back here - at least until Cologne gives the all clear."

"Cologne's on our side?" Ryouga replied, sounding surprised.

"Yeah. We're in the middle of some kind of Amazon civil war and Ranma is apparently the prize. We just need to lay low until Cologne can arrange a parlay." She winced as she had a thought. "Don't let Ranma pull some stupid self-sacrifice over this. If she turns herself over to the Amazons, it won't fix it."

"Yeah, don't worry I won't," Ryouga said. "Nabiki? Are YOU okay?"

Nabiki took a deep breath in an attempt to get control of herself. "Yeah... I mean, I'm not a combatant or anything. The Amazons won't bother with me and the terms of the contest with Himura forbid her from going after me that way."

Nabiki closed her eyes. I'm fine. I'm fine. Just say 'I'm fine'. Just... She grit her teeth as she felt her composure start to crack. "I'm..."

"Nabiki... It's okay to not be okay," Ryouga said softly.

The breath Nabiki had taken to assert all was well escaped in a sound that was a cross between a laugh and a sob. "You're trying to play therapist for me now, Hibiki?" she said, sniffing a bit as the tears she had been trying to hold back started to roll.

"My turn to be pushy, I guess," he said. "I know it's not the sort of thing you'd want to discuss within earshot of a 'disaster area'..."

Nabiki giggled a little between the snuffles. "Oh, slick, Ryouga. I am so gonna tell her you called her that when this is all over." She hiccuped and started to slide down the wall, curling around the handset. Everything that had happened over the past few days was starting to crash in on her, along with the notion that it might not have happened if she hadn't gotten the nifty idea in her head to start fixing everyone's lives. "I'm... not okay. Everything has fallen apart and I don't know what happened. The Amazons took Shampoo prisoner, Daddy's an accessory to a plot to brainwash and re-gender my fiance, I've got a Yakuza Princess gunning for everything I care about... and everything I've done to try and fix things has only made it that much worse. I've got to do something to fix it but all I can do is sit on the hall floor blubbering into the phone because I don't know what to do..." She pulled her knees up to her chest. "I wish that when I had that urge to grab Ranma and a couple of plane tickets and just run away that I had just done it."

"I'm not so sure," Ryouga replied after a few minutes. "Running away isn't your style. Besides... I think a lot of people are a lot happier that you DID tough it out. Not just because they're after Ranma, either. Let's face it... I was a mess before all of this. I don't think I'd choose to go back to how things were before. Maybe I'm just being selfish, but... I'm happy you tried to fix my life, Nabiki."

Nabiki sniffed again, but a bit of a smile tugged at the corner of her mouth. "Thank you. I... needed to hear that."

"I... sorta needed to say it. I wanted to since... Y'know, Saturday night," Ryouga replied, sounding suddenly shy. "I'm... just not real good with thinking of what I really want to say until a couple of days later."

Was it only Saturday? Nabiki chuckled a little, a more genuine sound. "I think you got it just right this time." She closed her eyes and took a deep breath. "Promise me that, when we clear things up, you'll come home. Home here, I mean. I want... we need to talk things out. All of us. I want you and Ranma here."

"I promise, Nabiki," Ryouga said solemnly. "Ranma wants to talk to you again."

"Wait... before you go, let me give you my cell number. Keep in touch, okay? I'm serious. Call every day." Nabiki rattled off the number, repeating it a couple of times as she heard him scratching it down. "Okay, now put her on," Nabiki said. "but don't go far."

"Are you okay, Nabiki?" Ranma's voice came over the line again.

"I'm better now," Nabiki replied. "I... things have kinda rattled me."

"It's just... you asked for Ryouga kinda quick..."

Nabiki winced. "I... needed to know what the situation was from someone who... wasn't coming from a place of having their entire worldview inverted," Nabiki said tentatively.

"It's okay. This... kinda changes things between us, doesn't it?" Ranma said softly. "I can understand it being weird for you..."

"Wha...? No! Ranma...!" Nabiki yelped, her eyes going wide.

"I'm not... who you thought I was when you fell in love with me. I'm not who I thought I was. I... don't know WHO I am right now," Ranma continued. "I... I don't think... I can be that boy on the beach for you anymore..."

"Ranma, we talked about this. I told you that even if you got stuck as a girl nothing was going to change, remember?" Nabiki said, trying to swallow the lump in her throat.

"But... I'd be a guy stuck as a girl then. This is... different. This isn't just a gender thing... It doesn't even matter if I'm a homunculus or not, 'Ranma Saotome' doesn't really exist. The engagements are all a sham... there's not gonna be any school to inherit..." Ranma said. "I... don't even know how much of what I think or feel is real."

The upswing in spirits Nabiki had felt thanks to her conversation with Ryouga immediately crashed back down again. "Ranma…"

Ranma's tone was uncharacteristically quiet. "This whole time I've… I've been struggling with this feeling that… You guys didn't really need me - not as much as you think you do, and that… I'm in the way. Not cuz' of anything you guys said or did… you've all worked so hard, but… Even before this started I've had the feeling that… I don't really belong. Even when I did… It didn't last. I-I know you're gonna say different, but…"

"You're damn right I'm going to say different!" Nabiki nearly yelled into the handset. She took a second, forcing herself to calm down. "Ranma… Don't. Don't decide anything while you're feeling this way. Just… please… promise me that you'll come home? So we can talk about it?"

"I… Yeah… Okay. I'm sorry… for all of this." Ranma's voice was distressingly quiet, as though she was far away. The mental image of Ranma receding from her was impossible for Nabiki to shake. "I… I'm gonna take some time to think. Take care of Akane, Ukyou and Shampoo for me. I love you."

"I love you, too," Nabiki replied, choking up again. It sounded entirely too much like a final farewell. There was a click as the call ended and Nabiki let the handset fall from her nerveless fingers as she curled up in a tight ball and cried.

000

Sayuri looked back at the Tendo Dojo and sighed, adjusting the straps on her schoolbag as she slung it over her shoulder.

"This sucks," Yuka said next to her.

After consulting with Cologne, it was decided it was safe enough for herself, Yuka, Riko, Daisuke and Hiroshi to go to school as the Amazons wouldn't see them as legitimate targets. Akane and Ukyou were kept behind to train, and Nabiki…

Sayuri scuffed her shoe on the ground sadly. "This is what Himura does. She finds someone's weak spot and then she hammers at it until they break. I guess with Nabiki and Ranma it was a two-for-one."

"This feels like our fault," Hiroshi said, walking next to Riko.

"The way Himura timed giving the scroll to Ranma, I think you guys finding things out when you did was coincidence," Riko reassured him.

"No… I think Hiroshi is right," Daisuke said glumly. "Himura's plan was for Ranma to find out by herself. I don't think Himura counted on us figuring it out. We were there. We had a chance to defuse things. But instead, we ended up waiting outside."

"But… what could we have done?" Yuka asked.

"Maybe just said Ranma's Mom was wrong about her," Riko said quietly. "Maybe just be there to say 'It doesn't matter to us what she says about you'… you know?"

They were all silent a moment as they walked, lost in thought.

"Hey guys!" They all looked up to see the familiar form of the diminutive striker jogging to join them.
"Hey, my sister told me you guys left a message to come over to the Tendo Dojo last night. I'm so sorry! It was movie night," Rin said, pausing to catch her breath. "So… what's up?"

Sayuri glanced at the group, then back at Rin. She walked over and put an arm around Rin's shoulders. "It's kind of a long story. We'll talk on the way."

"Wait… Senpai is a girl!?" Rin said, eyes wide.

"No… no, no no," Yuka clapped a hand on Rin's shoulder. "Rin, that's not the part you get to be shocked about!"

"Why not?" Rin asked, blinking innocently.

"You're the one who was first to say 'Senpai is a girl!'" Yuka retorted hotly.

"Well, yes… But, that was Senpai being a girl. Not senpai being a girl!" Rin said.

"My head hurts…" Yuka whimpered, rubbing her temples.

"I mean… I know senpai is a girl. I'm shocked senpai was born a girl," Rin clarified. "I mean… don't people usually know what they're born as?"

"Ranma's father dosed her with these mind control drugs pretty much her whole life," Sayuri said softly.

"Not to mention the Neko-ken," Daisuke added. "Nothing like some extreme psychological trauma to make a young mind malleable."

"Then the Jusenkyo potion they used changes memories to fit the form," Hiroshi finished.

"But… but why?" Rin asked. "Did… did they think Senpai would be happier as a boy?"

"Well, Ranma's Mom called him a 'homunculus', so… no, probably not. I don't think Ranma's happiness was on the table," Yuka said. "Ranma was supposed to carry on the name, be awesome at martial arts, and make lots of babies to give to his Mom to raise while he supported them with prize money from tournaments or proceeds from teaching. Apparently Ranma screwed up this grand design by being born the wrong gender, so Nodoka, in her own words, 'Corrected the birth defect'."

Rin's eyes were wide. "But… why…?"

"Because they thought doing all of that would get them what they wanted," Sayuri said.

Rin stared at the sidewalk. She shook her head, then slumped. She looked so dejected that Sayuri put an arm around her shoulders.

"Dad used to tell me that a parent's job is to make sure their kids miss their childhood when they grow up. I-it was his little joke, I think. But… he also used to say that he worried a lot of people didn't agree with him. He got sad whenever he saw some of the parents yelling at their kids at track meets and stuff." Rin stared straight ahead. "I thought Mr. Saotome was like that when he yelled at Ranma and made fun of him. I-I didn't really think he could be worse…"

"Heads up," Yuka said, nodding towards the school gate.
Himura was standing there, along with Umeko, Mineko and another girl with long dark hair. They were greeting students cordially and handing out flyers.

"Umm…" Riko said nervously.

"Not like there's another gate," Sayuri replied and strode up purposefully. She hoped Himura would just ignore her, but she was already fairly certain that wasn't going to happen.

"Ah! Ms. Kamei!" Himura said brightly. "How wonderful to see you this morning! I was actually hoping to catch you and your team before you arrived. I have some wonderful news!"

"What are you up to, Ms. Tanaka?" Sayuri asked, folding her arms.

Himura feigned shock. "Why… I'm not sure what you mean! Here!" She handed Sayuri a flyer.

Sayuri glanced at it and her eyes widened.

"I wanted to better try and support your team. Even though we're rivals, we're both representing Furinkan, after all, and I wanted to try and raise your profile a little more. So I got the Principal's permission… well, acting Principal, since Headmaster Kuno is still indisposed, to make your next game a mandatory assembly! The entire school will be there! Isn't that wonderful?"

Sayuri crumpled the flyer slightly in her hand. She's expecting us to fold without Ranma! She forced herself to relax and return the faux pleasant smile. "Of course. I'm sure the team will be ecstatic to be able to play for such a large crowd." Sayuri jammed the flyer into her bag and moved to step past.

Himura sidestepped slightly to stop her. "I noticed Ranma isn't with you," she said, still smiling. "Or your 'manager', Nabiki Tendo. Or… well, a lot of your 'special' friends. Not even Akane. Isn't that odd?"

Sayuri's smile was gone. "Himura, don't push me," she growled.

"Or?" Umeko asked, stepping up beside Himura and cracking her knuckles. "No martial artist bodyguards today, Sayuri-chan. You might want to modulate your tone."

"Feel free to throw the first punch, Umeko," Yuka said, coming up beside Sayuri.

"Not talking to the mascot," Umeko replied, eyes still on Sayuri. "You had a good thing, Sayuri. You were already on the team. You just didn't take criticism well, so you left. Heck, we were happy to let it go with that, you know? But then you had to go and get cute. Publicly embarrass Himura. Start slandering her behind her back. She never did anything to deserve that and you know it."

"Do I?" Sayuri replied coldly. "You and I went to very different practise sessions then."

"Yeah, we did," Umeko said. "I went to practise where I was a team player. I didn't go to the ones where everyone was out for themselves."

"Now, now, Umeko. I think that's enough," Himura said, patting Umeko on the shoulder. "We should let my co-captain get to class. I'm sure she wants to focus on her schoolwork now that… well… You know how priorities change."

"I'm not going anywhere, Himura, and neither is my team," Sayuri said.
"Oh, perish the thought!" Himura replied. "I'm looking forward to your game on Wednesday. Though it's a shame Ranma doesn't seem to share your dedication." Himura shrugged. "I suppose I can smooth things over with the office in regards to the attendance rules, but I really can't keep covering for her. Please do let her know that for me?"

Sayuri clenched her jaw. "I'll be sure to pass that on."

Himura beamed. "Wonderful! Now, is there anything else?"

Rin walked up next to Sayuri, cocking her head. "Konatsu?"

Sayuri glanced at Rin, then followed her gaze to the dark haired girl standing near the back of Himura's gaggle. She was wearing a Furinkan uniform and had her hair tied back in a ponytail. Sayuri's eyes widened as she recognized the waitress. "What…?!

"Oh! Yes, didn't I mention?" Himura said, motioning for Konatsu to step forward. Mineko came with her, standing protectively next to the ninja. "While you've all been busy with Ranma's family drama, I've been helping Konatsu here with her application to Furinkan. She's very keen to improve herself and her education. Which was a bit of a challenge with her former responsibilities at Ucchan's. Oh, if you could let Ms. Kuonji know Konatsu's resignation has been tendered, I'd appreciate it…"

"What the hell, Konatsu?!" Yuka asked, incensed. "Why are you hanging around with Himura?! She's the one screwing with Ranma and your Ukyou!"

"Konatsu is under no obligation to explain herself…" Himura began.

"Ms. Tanaka, please. Allow me," Konatsu said, stepping forward. "You want an explanation, Ms. Toshima?"

Yuka folded her arms. "I think we all deserve one! We've been busting our asses supporting Ranma in this. Ukyou has been relying on you. The least you could have done is to have told her if you weren't on board!"

Konatsu bowed deeply. "In that you are correct. I apologize deeply. I did not intend deception but leaving my assigned duties was taken out of my hands when I collapsed a few days ago from malnourishment and exhaustion."

Yuka's eyes widened. "Wait… what?"

Konatsu straightened. Her eyes were hard. "Is that surprising to you? You were aware of how little Ms. Kuonji paid me, correct? And how many hours I was relied upon to make up so that she could pursue her own education, as well as her… romantic entanglements? Did any of you even notice I was missing?"

"I… well…" Yuka stammered.

"Ukyou told us that sometimes you would disappear for a day or two," Sayuri said. "She said she trusted you to let her know if anything was wrong."

Konatsu's eyebrow twitched. "Is that so? I… do not wish to speak ill of Ms. Kuonji in mixed company and behind her back. Let me leave it that… things were not as well as she might have thought. Perhaps I could believe that was simply a matter of ignorance and not willful malice, but… I could not remain in that situation any longer. Mineko and Ms. Tanaka have helped me see that I need to attend to my own needs and my own life… and I cannot do that while facilitating Ms.
"Then go talk to Ukyou, at least!" Yuka said hotly. "She's at the Tendo Dojo right now! She's had a really bad time lately, and…"

"I won't allow that," Mineko said suddenly, stepping forward. "Ukyou has taken advantage of Konatsu almost since she met her! There's no way Konatsu is going to go alone onto Ukyou's home turf so she can twist the truth and confuse her again!"

Himura held up a hand. "I would be happy to provide a neutral space for Konatsu and Ms. Kuonji to discuss their relationship problems here at the school… provided Ms. Kuonji can be bothered to attend… But I think it's best for all concerned that any meetings be supervised." She smirked. "It would be so unfortunate to have to involve the authorities regarding domestic abuse. I believe we can resolve this amicably without resorting to such measures."

"Domestic… you can't be serious?!" Yuka yelped.

"Ukyou kept Konatsu as a slave!" Mineko shouted. "She kept her poor and ignorant, and all of you watched her treat Konatsu like a servant and you did nothing!"

"Mineko! This is neither the time nor the place for this discussion!" Himura said sharply. She sighed and turned back to Sayuri. "I apologize, Ms. Kamei. Sincerely. Despite our own differences, this is a matter that is not your responsibility to answer for. I would simply ask… as a favor… to pass the offer for a meeting on to Ms. Kuonji." She motioned to the others of her group. "Come, we should escort Konatsu to her first new class. It's been a while since she's been in school, so I'm sure she needs all the moral support she can get." She turned to walk as the others began filtering through the gate and looked back at Sayuri. "I'd reconsider the people you associate with, Ms. Kamei. The wrong sort can warp your perception of reality and your place in it." She then continued walking towards the school.

"I can't believe Himura got to Konatsu of all people," Yuka said, shaking her head. "I figured Konatsu was pretty solidly loyal to Ukyou."

"I dunno… They do kinda have a point…" Riko said sheepishly. "I mean… Ukyou paid Konatsu practically nothing…"

Sayuri was about to comment when she noticed Rin was shaking slightly. The girl was staring at Konatsu's retreating form.

"What's wrong, Rin?" Sayuri asked.

"Probably just rattled at the betrayal," Yuka muttered. "Rin was always pretty close to Konatsu."

Rin shook her head. "No… no, they changed her."

Sayuri sighed and took Rin by the shoulders and turned her to look her her. "Rin… I know it's hard to accept… Sometimes people make wrong choices, and while I'd like to blame Himura for talking Konatsu into it… I mean, I can see the point. Ukyou was being pretty callous about Konatsu's feelings with everything that's gone on between her and Ranma, or her and Akane… or her and Shampoo. I mean, if I had feelings for someone and they kept bringing people home like that… I know it's not that simple, but still…"

Rin's eyes narrowed. "Did Himura talk Konatsu into narrower shoulders?"

Sayuri blinked. "What…?"
"I'm not stupid, Sayuri! I know people change!" Rin pulled away. "I mean they changed her! She's half an inch shorter. Her shoulders are narrower. Her center of gravity is different. They changed her like Senpai changes!"

Sayuri's eyes widened. "They... they gave her a Jusenkyo curse?"

"Well... Konatsu was born a male, right?" Riko said. "I mean, if Himura has access to water from Jusenkyo... for someone like Konatsu..."

Rin shook her head. "Konatsu wouldn't have betrayed Ukyou for that! If Konatsu had wanted a curse she's had a whole year to try and get one for herself! Something is different! Something is wrong! They changed her!" She clenched her fists in frustration. "It's... body language! Something changed, I just can't explain what. There aren't words for it!"

"Guys..." Yuka said softly, a haunted look crossing her features. "Himura is the one who gave the scroll for that potion to Ranma, right? The one that Ranma's parents used to try and change her and brainwash her? If Himura has Jusenkyo water..."

Sayuri felt the blood drain from her face as she realized what Yuka was implying. "Oh... God... no..."

"Things just got worse, didn't they?" Yuka asked.

000

Ryouga was still feeling a bit 'off' from whatever they had used to tranquilize him, but bedrest had never suited him well and restlessness, combined with his stomach's near constant reminders that it hadn't been fed since lunch the previous day, eventually coaxed him into asking Kodachi to let himself and Ranma have breakfast.

After that phone call, he figured any sort of distraction would be a good thing for Ranma. He was still mad at himself for not doing something more to divert the conversation from those darker paths... not that he had any idea what he could have done. But he was sure there must have been something.

I gotta try and keep calm and level, he told himself as they walked. They had dressed in light pajamas with fluffy bathrobes overtop. Ranma was still holding onto his arm, like he was a lifeline... and from what he could sense through the Link he was. She was stewing in a perpetual vortex of awful sticky black emotions that seemed to be constrained by little more than sheer exhaustion. Ryouga recognized it - the autopilot that kicked in when you were somewhere dark - that kept you walking and breathing and going through the motions when you were in that space where you didn't really have the motivation to live, yet lacked the will to die.

Right now, he could sense that the Link was pretty much the only thing keeping her from spiralling further down. As much as he wanted to confront her about what happened with Nabiki, he knew the line was fragile, and could snap under the strain of strong emotions. He figured it was best to be calm and reassuring as best he could, even though he also knew it wasn't something he had ever been any good at in the past.

He glanced down at her, studying her curiously. So... she was a girl all along, and neither of us knew it? he thought. It was a bizarre concept but, in retrospect, there were so many little things that made much more sense in that context.

Kodachi led them into the dining hall. Ryouga was surprised to find Tatewaki standing there and slightly more surprised when he moved to block them going further.

"Brother?" Kodachi asked, confused.

"I beg forgiveness, Dachi. But I needs must verify things with mine own eyes if I am to be certain of our involvement in these matters." He stepped forward and levelled his gaze at Ranma. "Ranma Saotome."

Ranma snorted in brief, bitter amusement. "Not anymore. Whatcha want, sword-boy?"

Tatewaki frowned. "Show me?"

Ranma blinked. "Show you what?"

"Show me the change," Tatewaki said. "Show me how you become a man, the change my sister said she witnessed."

Ranma shrank back a bit, half hiding behind Ryouga. "W-what?!"

Tatewaki sighed. "I… am sorry, but I must insist. Mine own grasp of reality is but newly rewoven, and I fear it is fragile and prone to fraying. And now you and my sister ask me to believe in the existence of magic… of true, transformative magic of a profound sort that reason states must be impossible. For the sake of my sanity, and to ensure my ability to protect my sister, I must have this proof."

Ranma swallowed. "I… I can't…" She gripped her robe closed over her chest.

Ryouga could feel her starting to panic through the Link. He stepped a little to the side to shield her. "There has to be something else you can ask for," Ryouga stated.

Tatewaki sighed. "I was led to believe this was a simple process triggered by water?" He turned to the table and held up a glass. "And if true, you must have done it dozens of times for my memories of both the Pig-tailed girl and Ranma Saotome to make sense. Please… I do not make this request lightly, but…"

"I can't!" Ranma shouted. "Don't you understand?! I remember now! I… I remember…" She shuddered. "I remember how it felt. When Pops gave me the potion. I remember feeling my bones crack… feeling my muscles and tendons tear as everything pulled and bent the wrong ways. I remember how much it hurt… how wrong it felt! I…" She squeezed her eyes shut, tears rolling down her cheeks. "Please, Kuno-senpai…"

"I'll do it," Ryouga said quickly and snatched the glass of water from Tatewaki.

"Wait… I would not force her if this is a matter of such distress!" Tatewaki said, reaching for the glass.

"I'm not," Ryouga replied. "She's not the only one with a curse." And with that he dumped the glass over his own head.

The change in perspective was always disorienting, as suddenly the world expanded to ten times its normal size and he found himself entangled in a pile of clothing. He struggled his way free, shook himself off and looked up defiantly at Tatewaki, grunting. There. Happy now, Kuno? You should have seen this happen enough times to have figured it out LONG before now! Now leave her alone!

Tatewaki stared, dumbstruck. Slowly he lowered himself to one knee, reached out and poked gently at the piglet. Ryouga resisted the urge to snap at his finger.

"How is this possible?" Tatewaki said softly. "The floor beneath you is solid marble. There are neither trapdoors nor places for trickery; I have made certain of that. There is no place for Ryouga to have gone. Are you... are you truly him?"

Ryouga grunted and nodded.

Tatewaki blinked. "You retain your faculties?! But... how? The cognition of a man could never reside inside such a tiny brain..." He tapped Ryouga's skull lightly, and this time Ryouga did snap at him.

"Forgive me, I meant no offence. It is merely biological fact," Tatewaki said, withdrawing his hand quickly.

Ryouga felt someone pick him up. He turned his head to see Ranma holding him, cradling him against her chest.

"It's magic, Senpai," Ranma said quietly. "That's kind of the point. I think you're supposed to be aware. It's a curse after all... and if you fell in a pool and there wasn't anyone around with hot water to reverse it, you could be trapped for the rest of your life as an animal." Out of habit, she started to scratch behind his ears, which caused a flush of heat to Ryouga's cheeks when it occurred to him how casually affectionate she was being without even realizing it.

"I... see," Tatewaki said, still looking a bit gobsmacked. "And... your parents inflicted such a curse upon you in order to produce a male heir?"

"It wasn't just a curse. It was a potion made from the cursed water," Ranma said. "It was supposed to make the change permanent... brainwash me to make me think I was always that way. Pops... got it wrong. I think it almost killed me, which is probably the only reason he didn't try it again."

"Perhaps, brother dear, we should save further questions until both our guests are fit to speak?" Kodachi stepped forward, glaring at her sibling. "And perhaps we can later discuss your own lack of faith in my account of things, hmmm?" She glanced at Ryouga then frowned. "Wait... isn't that...?"

"Akane's pet pig, P-chan," Ranma said, chuckling weakly. Ryouga whimpered and tried to hide his face, burrowing down into Ranma's arms in embarrassment.

"I see. I was not aware they had that sort of... relationship," Kodachi said. "You said hot water reverses the curse? How hot?"

"It doesn't have to be too hot. Anything more than ten or fifteen degrees above body temperature is usually good enough," Ranma replied. "And they didn't, really. Not any more than Senpai and I had anything more than a misunderstanding." She glanced at Tatewaki, who's cheeks colored a little as he looked away. Ryouga felt a slight surge of jealous possessiveness. "Akane had always wanted a pet, and Ryouga didn't want to disappoint her with the truth."

Kodachi turned back to the table as Ranma set Ryouga back into the pile of clothes. He wriggled back into them and waited until the hot water hit his head. He felt a moment of satisfaction as he stood up, fully clothed, and saw Tatewaki's look of astonishment.

"When you have a Jusenkyo curse, you get good at that," he said, smirking at Tatewaki.

"There are others with these curses?" Tatewaki said, aghast.
"A few. Shampoo and Mousse," Ranma said. "My father. Occasionally there are others that show up; people who have been to Jusenkyo."

"This… is…" Tatewaki sat down heavily in a chair. "I… hope that you may forgive me. I am already laboring to rebuild my understanding of reality and this… this deals it something of a blow."

"I kinda know what that's like…" Ranma said softly. Ryouga reflexively stepped closer and took her hand. She didn't protest but squeezed his hand in return.

"I imagine you do," Tatewaki acknowledged. "I apologize for my insistence… and I hope you will forgive me if I say I do not envy you. Either of you. Such a burden on one's sense of self seems… unthinkable." He closed his eyes, collected himself and straightened. "My sister was correct in her decisions regarding this matter, I see that now. I offer you the full support of the Kuno family, and whatever aid we might be able to render."

"You wouldn't be able to get someone named Himura Tanaka off my back, would you?" Ranma asked hopefully.

"Trust me, I had already been looking into that matter long before this," Kodachi said, smoothly taking her seat next to her brother. She motioned for them to sit. "Himura's grandfather is powerful… well connected… and a good friend of Father's."

"More to the point, their family is more influential than ours. Especially with regards to their connections to powerful politicians and the Yakuza," Tatewaki continued. "I suspect that befriending Nobu Tanaka was a scheme of my Father's from his saner days to protect and secure our own influence in Nerima."

Ryouga felt a surge of anger at that. "So… that would be a 'no'," he said flatly. "Even the great Kuno clan is too afraid to stand up to her."

"Do not mistake caution for cowardice, Hibiki!" Kodachi retorted sharply. "To bull in blindly and confront them would accomplish nothing but the destruction of our family and all we hold dear… which is currently all that is protecting you."

"My sister is right, though I… sympathize with your sentiments. I am finding myself chafing at having to deal with some of my father's commitments," Tatewaki added. He had a small, orange pill bottle in his hand and was rubbing his thumb over it, something that struck Ryouga as a new nervous habit for Kuno. "We will support you. But… We must be careful and measured in our responses for them to be effective. You must understand there is more than one path to the top of the mountain."

"So what do we do?" Ryouga asked, frustrated. "Hide out here for the rest of our lives?"

"Much as it is… out of character for me to suggest it… I think patience is called for. At least until we know what these 'Amazons' intend to do next," Kodachi said. "Though I assure you, it rankles me as sorely as it does you."

Servants began to enter the room pushing trolleys laden with food. Ryouga's stomach growled to remind him just how hungry he actually was. All right… worry about the big picture later. Breakfast now. That's what Ranma would do, right?"

He glanced over at her but she was just staring listlessly at the dishes as they were laid out. He leaned over and nuzzled her with his elbow.
"Come on. You've got to be starving after all that you've been through," he said, giving her a concerned look.

"You'd think…" she said softly. She poked at the omelette on her plate with her chopsticks. He scowled. "Ranma…"

"It's fine," she said, giving him a wan smile. "I don't need much. Been overeating a lot lately anyway, right?" She chuckled weakly. "A girl… has to watch her figure after all…"

Ryouga frowned, but wasn't able to ignore the rumblings of his own stomach any longer. Guiltily, he dug into the meal, shooting glances at her every so often. She picked at her food, but he didn't see her eating any of it, which only heightened his worry. By the time he was finished, his own greedily devoured breakfast was sitting like lead in his stomach.

Ranma's lack of appetite did not go unnoticed by the Kunos, either.

"If your appetite returns, any of our servants will be happy to fetch you something to eat whenever you wish," Kodachi said. "Perhaps a hot bath will make you feel better?"

Ranma shuddered and shook her head. "No… no hot water please." She glanced at Ryouga sheepishly. "Unless… I don't suppose you've been carrying around that waterproof soap all this time?"

Ryouga shook his head sadly. "Sorry…"

Kodachi cocked her head. "Waterproof soap?"

"'Jusenkyo Springs Beauty Bath Bar,'" Ranma said, chuckling dryly. "It keeps hot or cold water from changing you for a couple of days. The Amazons developed it for Jusenkyo sufferers, but apparently they sell it as some kinda exotic health and beauty soap now. Not exactly something you get at the corner store."

Kodachi frowned, as if trying to remember something. She pushed her chair back and stood up. "Come with me. I might have something for you in the supply closet."

000

The Kuno concept of a 'supply closet' was somewhat closer to what most would call a storeroom, an entire chamber dedicated to nothing but bathing and beauty supplies; Bathrobes, towels, soaps, shampoos and lotions - beauty products of all descriptions. Ryouga honestly doubted most salons were as well stocked.

"I detest stagnation. I have Genevieve occasionally bring home interesting finds from the various import beauty stores. Maintaining appearances is important, after all. Though I test each product carefully before using it… you would be astounded at what some charlatans pass off as 'skin care' these days… and there is a bit of a backlog. But I think I remember Genevieve bringing back something with that name…” She started searching through the shelves, filled with bars of soap of many different kinds. The mix of scents from the various soaps and lotions was almost overpowering. "Pfagh! So many are just common soaps overloaded with cheap perfume… Aha!"

She reached up to pull out a small box and opened it to reveal a number of bars in plastic containers, all of which bore a familiar symbol. "Might these be what you're looking for?"

"Yes!" Ranma yelped and darted forward to snatch one up. Her expression the closest to joy Ryouga had seen for days. She hesitated. "Is… is this okay? I mean… Nabiki told me how expensive these things are…"

Kodachi rolled her eyes. "'Expensive' is relative, my dear Ran. These are but a pittance. I will have Genevieve order a flat of them for you." She glanced at Ryoga. "Feel free to take one yourself, if you wish? I imagine your curse must be inconvenient as well."

Ryoga needed no further prompting, and picked up one of the plastic cases. "At one point I had hoped this was a cure for the curse." he said with a sigh. "But it's only a temporary fix."

"A treatment, perhaps?" Kodachi suggested.

"It's hard enough to get when you do have the money to afford it," Ryoga replied glumly.

Kodachi considered him a moment, then glanced at Ran. "Consider it a gift, then. A gesture of House Kuno's commitment to aiding you both." She closed the box and put it back on the shelf, then hesitated. "I… forgive me for being so bold, but… the last time you were both here, you implied… rather strongly… that there was a relationship between you. Given the circumstances you can understand if I am left somewhat uncertain… what your relationship with each other might be?"

Ryoga swallowed, feeling a sudden rise of panic. What do I even say to that?! he thought as he realized he had no idea what answer was correct or even safe. He had confessed his feelings to Ranma… they had even kissed… but since then her entire world had been blown apart. And there remained the fact that she had run away in tears afterwards…

"It's…" Ryoga said weakly. "We…" He glanced at Ranma, hoping to gain insight into an answer.

The redhead's eyes were on the ground, her shoulders slumped. Her unbound hair had fallen across her face slightly.

She doesn't know either. Of course she doesn't. She hardly even knows who she IS anymore! Ryoga thought. Okay… okay… make a stand, then. But what do I say that isn't presumptuous?

"I'm…" Ryoga said weakly.

"He's my boyfriend," Ranma said suddenly.

Ryoga stopped short and stared at Ranma. She had raised her head and there was a flicker of something defiant in her eye, something more like the old Ranma he knew. To his further shock, she took his hand and gripped it firmly.

"I see…" Kodachi said softly. "And… Akane Tendo? Nabiki? The others?"

The look of pain that passed over Ranma's face was profound. She clenched her fists and looked away. "They… they all fell in love with a boy, the same as you. But that boy doesn't actually exist, does he? So… s-so…" She closed her eyes tightly and it was apparent that she was struggling not to cry. "They… they'll all be better off without me."

Kodachi raised an eyebrow. "Truly? Even Akane?"

Ranma winced. She leaned against Ryoga's side and Ryoga got the sense she was struggling. He moved slightly to put himself between her and Kodachi.

"It's complicated," Ryoga said. "All of it."
Kodachi frowned. "For her to truly consider you her boyfriend, your relationship would have had to have begun before this revelation, would it not?"

"Yeah? So?" Ryouga said defensively. "Like I said, it's complicated."

Kodachi's expression darkened. "Then you and I will need to have words sooner rather than later, Hibiki." Her expression softened and she glanced back at Ranma. "You know the way back to the room you stayed in last time? The staff has stocked the bathing area with everything else you should need." She glared at Ryouga. "And I trust that you will behave yourselves?"

"Yeah… yeah, we're fine, thank you," Ranma said. She tugged on Ryouga's arm and he got the sense that she wanted to get away from Kodachi for the moment.

Not that he was objecting. That look had made him shudder. He wasn't sure what he did to earn that bit of ire, but he was sure he'd find out sooner than later.

He let Ranma lead him into the hall. He realized, to his pleasure, that he actually knew the way. In fact, he seemed to have a pretty good idea of the layout of this part of the castle now. But he didn't say anything for the moment. He got the feeling that wasn't the reason Ranma was holding his hand.

They walked in silence until they reached the room. It was unchanged since their last visit, right down to the spare pajamas the servants had laid out for them. There was, as well, another set of clothes for each of them that appeared to be about the right size.

"You should go first," Ryouga said, motioning towards the bathroom with his free hand.

Ranma seemed to lean a bit more heavily against him. He felt a spike of… fear? Apprehension?

"We… could just go together," she said.

It wasn't a suggestive invitation. It felt more like it was… fearful. Not a fear of anything in particular; just of being alone.

That being said, it was a step he was entirely sure he wasn't quite ready to take yet. He swallowed. Hard. "I… uhh… I'm pretty sure that's… not really appropriate…"

She scowled at him. "Why not? It's not like you haven't seen me naked before. Heck, we've shared the furo plenty! Even while I was a girl sometimes!"

"Yeah, but… I was preoccupied at the time, and it wasn't like it was intentional!" Ryouga protested. "Usually that was just to get hot water to change back! A-and besides, we were rivals back then! I was trying to beat the crap out of you, not… not…!"

"Not sleep with me?" Ranma asked softly.

"I didn't say that!" Ryouga finished desperately. "Besides, you were the one who called me her 'boyfriend'! I mean, even if that was just to throw off Kodachi…!"

"It wasn't!" Ranma said hotly. She released his hand and turned to glare at him. "Why are you getting all bent out of shape about this!? You kissed me, remember? I thought this was what you wanted!"

There was fire in her eyes but he could also detect a slight tremor in her lower lip. He remembered the sense of fear, the worry about being alone. He closed his eyes and took a deep breath to steady himself. "It is." he said finally. "But… Not like this. Not because you're afraid of being alone."

"Why not?" Ranma demanded. "Isn't… isn't that why you've wanted a girlfriend so badly all this time?! Isn't that why people get together in the first place?! I just wanted…" She trailed off, and then spun and stomped towards the bathroom. "Forget it! Nevermind! It's not perfect, I get it! Sorry I brought it up!"

"Wait, Ranma…!" Ryouga tried to follow after her, but she slammed the door in his face.

He sighed, turned to lean against the door and slid slowly down to the floor. He dropped his face into his hands. Hibiki, you are a complete and total moron, he thought glumly.

000

Ranma intentionally made sure the water was a cold as possible as she doused herself and lathered up with the soap. She checked several times to be sure she was holding the right soap, and she made certain that every inch of her body got thoroughly lathered and scrubbed. She was shivering and chilled to the bone by the time she finally rinsed herself off.

She hugged herself for warmth and gazed apprehensively at the furo. The water was so warm it was steaming. It looked so inviting - just what the aches and bruises all over her cried for, but…

Another flash of memory washed over her. Agony. Bones cracking… shattering and slowly reforming, muscles tearing and rebinding, pain wracking every inch of her as her body was forcibly reshaped, as though the hands of some giant were smashing her and reworking her like clay.

She closed her eyes and hugged herself tighter.

She swallowed. "C'mon, Saotome… just a little hot water… you've used the soap before. G-gotta… gotta test it…"

She took a deep breath then stepped impulsively forward and into the water.

She held her breath, braced for that tingling sensation that signalled the change. But there was nothing. She froze like that for a few more minutes before cautiously climbing the rest of the way into the tub and sinking down into the hot water.

She sighed in relief and closed her eyes. Thank God… I didn't want to have to give up hot baths… she thought as she back against the side of the tub and started to relax. She repressed another shudder as the notion of changing again flitted through her mind and brought with it the memory, but she was able to tamp that down.

With the immediate crisis past, though, darker thoughts crept back into the forefront. She opened her eyes again, blinking as her vision was obstructed by a lock of her hair. She reached up to brush it away, but instead stopped, grasped it and examined it. For the longest time she had wondered if the curse was responsible for the change in her hair color. A Japanese girl with naturally red hair, much less the intense shade of crimson she had, was basically impossible.

How do I know any of this is really any more 'me' than my male side? she thought, looking down at herself. She felt… uncomfortable. It wasn't the old sense of wrongness that she used to have. That came from knowing what her proper form was. This was an odd sense of disconnection… as though she wore someone else's body entirely.

She shuddered again and sank deeper into the water. She crossed her arms and dug her nails into the flesh of her upper arms - the dull sting helped to keep her anchored.
"Ryouga?" she called out hopefully.

There was a brief pause. "Yeah?" a voice drifted in from the other side of the door.

This is stupid. I'M stupid. I don't know what I'm doing! "Could you… Could you just come in here?" She sank down a bit further.

"What?" Ryouga squeaked. She heard him clear his throat and try again. "Uhh… Yeah. Just… I'll close my eyes, okay?"

She felt a smile tug at the corner of her mouth. He's cute. I think I see why Nabiki tries to get him flustered all the time. It's… it's okay for me to think that now, isn't it? I'm a girl, right? "It's okay, Ryo. Nothing you haven't seen before. Besides, I'm in the bath." Still, she unconsciously crossed an arm over her chest.

The door clicked open and Ryouga came into the room, being careful not to look in her direction. He pulled a stool over and set it next to the tub, then sat down to face the wall. "O-okay. I'm here. You okay?"

She scooted over, closer to his side of the tub. "Yeah. I just… needed someone to talk to, okay? I kinda… feel like my brain is on fire right now."

He placed his forearm on the edge of the tub, though he still wouldn't look at her. She guessed it was probably an attempt to subtly offer the support of the Link though it was naturally as unsubtle as anything else he did. But it was at least perceptive.

She rested her hand on top of his and sighed. After a minute, she got tired of looking at the side of his head. "Oi… You can look at me, you know. I'm not going to flash you or anything."

"Uhh… right… Yeah…" With visible effort, he turned his head. His eyes were closed, but he did manage to crack one open. "Urk…"

"Need a tissue?" Ranma asked, smiling in spite of herself.

"No… I think…" He swallowed. He pinched his nose experimentally. "I think my tolerance has gotten higher over the last couple weeks."

Ranma almost went back on her word and flashed him, just as a matter of pride, but she suppressed the urge. She didn't want to drive him off or reduce him to a gibbering idiot. She wanted him there. "Good. I'll… try and avoid letting that pick my pride."

A look of terror flickered across Ryouga's face. "Please don't," he croaked in a low, pleading tone.

"I guess it's not really fair…" Ranma said softly. "I mean… I don't even know if this is what I would really look like, y'know? Even if… even assuming this is really me… I really doubt the red hair or the figure are what I'd have if I had… y'know… grown up regularly."

"What do you mean?" Ryouga asked, frowning in confusion.

"Look at Herb, for instance. From what I've seen, everyone who takes a dunk in a spring comes out… y'know, pretty. I know it was Nannichuan I got dosed with, but… everything got reversed, right? Mousse is pretty handsome as far as duck's go. Shampoo is like one of those pedigree show cats, and you ended up as the most adorable piglet… so… Just saying there's probably some magical 'enhancements' going on…" She felt a slight blush rise to her cheeks as she spoke, though she didn't know why.
Ryouga frowned, then leaned over and lightly ran a finger along her cheek.

She blinked and stared at him, unsure how to respond, or even what he was doing.

"Freckles," Ryouga said. "You had those in middle school. I remember them because I thought they were dirt smudges since you didn't wash your face properly, and you got all indignant." He straightened. "I… uhh… don't know about the other stuff, but… I can see how you look like your Mom… your Mom's hair is kinda coppery too…. Isn't that why your Dad made you use the hair dye? To cover up the red hair? So… I'm pretty sure this is you Ranma. Is it that hard to believe that you're just attractive all on your own?"

"I…" Ranma considered. "I used to take it for granted, actually. I'm just… questioning all sorts of assumptions lately. I'm kinda… struggling to figure out what's real." She squeezed his hand a bit, needing the reassurance of his presence. At least I know HE'S real - all the stuff that happened in Middle School.

"I guess that makes sense…" Ryouga said, his words slow, tentative, as though he were choosing them with some care. "But… I think it may be that you're going overboard with some of it."

Ranma blinked at him. "What do you mean?"

"I mean don't you think you're being way too hard on Nabiki and the rest of the girls?" Ryouga put his hand over hers as if he was afraid she'd pull away.

Ranma looked away, but she didn't try to move her hand. "I'm… not what they fell in love with. Why would they feel anything but betrayed?" she murmured.

"I didn't feel betrayed," Ryouga said reassuringly.

Ranma felt the heat rise to her cheeks again and ducked her head. "Th-that's because you fell in love with me as a girl already, jackass!"

"Wrong," Ryouga said, leaning over and poking her forehead. "I fell in love with you. And yeah, that means I'm saying I fell in love with someone I thought was a guy. And that was weird for me, you know? But I dealt with it because I realized I cared about a person. And whatever your parents did seventeen years ago or fifteen years ago, or two years ago or whatever, you're still that person. And I know the girls feel the same way because we're all linked and it's obvious whenever they look at you." He leaned back against the side of the tub and shrugged. "I think you oughta give 'em more credit."

Ranma folded her arms on the side of the tub and rested her chin on them to consider that. He's right. Why am I still debating this? I KNOW he's right… isn't he? Why can't I believe it? "I guess… I don't understand why though."

"Why what?"

"Why would they love me, if… if I'm not the thing they thought I was? If I'm not the boy they got engaged to; the male outsider who defeated 'em; the boy for whom their parent traded a yattai? I mean… I can't really marry any of 'em now, can I?"

"Actually, I dunno what the law is on same sex couples any more. The last time I read a newspaper it was in Spanish," He frowned. "Not sure if I was in Spain or Mexico, though. Or how I might have gotten there. I thought it was just really unseasonably warm in Honshu."

Ranma had to snicker despite the darkness of her mood. She glanced at him suspiciously. "Are you serious, or are you just making that up to make me feel better?"

"I'll let you know if we're ever in Honshu. Or Spain," Ryouga winked. "But... the point is... none of that is why they love you. Why we love you. It wasn't because of Amazon laws or joining the schools or regaining their honor... they were more than willing to throw all that away for you."

"It's... still kinda weird to hear you say that to me," Ranma said softly. "That you love me, I mean."

"Still kinda weird for me, too," Ryouga replied. "Probably not as much, though, what with all of the stuff going on." He squeezed her hand. "I do, though... I know I used that word a lot before I really knew what it meant, but... I do now, and I mean it."

"I know. It's just..." Ranma trailed off, looking away again. She felt a surge of shame.

"It's okay if you can't say it back. It's okay if you don't feel that way, or you're not sure," Ryouga said gently. "I can wait for you to figure it out. You've got much bigger problems at the moment. And I'm not going anywhere regardless, so don't worry."

"That's not it!" Ranma said. "I... It's not fair to you. And... And I don't even know why I can't say it. I... still feel like I'm forgetting something. Something important."

"Forget about me for the moment. What about Nabiki, Akane, Shampoo and Ukyou?" Ryouga said. "Are you just going to leave things as they are after that phone call?"

"I dunno how to face them yet," Ranma said miserably. "Especially since my parents might be there. Or Mr. Tendo... Oh, God, he was in on it...!" She shuddered under a wave of anger and grief that caused her vision to blur with tears. Impatiently, she scrubbed at her eyes with the heel of her hand. "Damnit, I'm sick of crying already. Why won't it stop?"

"Hey, hey, stop that..." Ryouga said. He scooped up a washcloth, carefully soaked it in the warm water, took hold of her chin and started to gently wash her face. "You're gonna end up with an eyelash in your eye or something if you keep rubbing them like that."

Normally Ranma would have strenuously protested such treatment, but she found herself submitting meekly. A small part of her noted it felt kind of nice to let someone else care for her like this, like it was something that had been missing. It was kinda like this when Ucchan did my makeup, too.

"You... don't gotta take care of me like a little kid, y'know," Ranma mumbled in a weak protest.

Ryouga paused and arched an eyebrow. "Yeah... yeah, I do," he replied gruffly. "Someone has to... because you don't know when to ask for help. You were always like that... even back in Middle School."

Memories... of warm meals... simple things, like noodles... idle banter... warm baths and, most of all, a sense safety drifted through her mind. It occured to Ranma that she was letting him fuss because it was familiar. He's right... he used to do this before. He'd make up some pretense, but he'd always find one. Funny... I always thought it was me that was taking care of him.

"You've been taking care of me for the past few weeks," Ryouga said, as though he'd read her mind. "Just seems fair is all." He pulled the cloth away. "How's that? Better?"

She blinked. She knew she was blushing but, for the moment, she was okay with that. "Y-yeah. How bad does it look? I must be a real mess, right?"
Ryouga looked her over carefully. "No, you're fine. You're... you're..." He trailed off as their gazes locked and the moment stretched out.

He shook his head suddenly and broke the spell, but Ranma noticed that his face had moved considerably closer to her own. "Uhhh... I should... I... should do the thing... Let you finish up! Yeah... I'll... I'm gonna go do that... elsewhere. Y'know, just outside. In the other room I mean." He got up awkwardly and headed for the door.

"Ryouga?" Ranma said. He stopped and turned back to look at her.

She smiled. "Thank you. I feel... better now."

"Aheh..." He rubbed the back of his head nervously. "Y-yeah. Anytime."

"You're actually not too bad at this 'boyfriend' thing," Ranma added.

Ryouga stammered but couldn't manage anything like coherent speech. He bumped into the door as he tried to walk through before he'd opened it, then finally managed to put together the right order of operations to open the door, step out, and close it behind him.

000

Nabiki had her knees pulled up, her arms folded across them and her forehead resting on her arms as she tried desperately to think of some way to make things better.

Ukyou was in the kitchen washing dishes. Nabiki was pretty sure they were the same dishes she had just washed, and that every inch of the kitchen had been scrubbed at least twice now, but it was the place Ukyou felt most comfortable. Kasumi had gone out to do the shopping, once Cologne had reassured her that she was safe from any Amazon reprisals, and Akane had gone to the dojo to break bricks. It'd almost seem normal if it weren't for the angry sobs Nabiki could occasionally hear amid the sounds of shattering cinder blocks.

She had told them about the phone call, of course. They deserved to know that Ranma was alive and reasonably safe, even if her mental state was far from comforting.

She wants to run away. And I can't blame her. Everybody wants their piece and some of them are starting to get violent now that she's can't meet everyone's unreasonable demands anymore. And all I've done is anchor her here, in the worst place in the world for her to be! She groaned softly and clenched her fists.

"Giving up already, child?" Cologne's familiar rasp cut into Nabiki's ruminations. Nabiki raised her head and glared at the Joketsuzoku elder.

"That's hardly a fair accusation, don't you think?" Nabiki growled. "Or do you always expect your protege to be able to take on both the Yakuza and the best warriors of the Amazons after a couple of weeks of training in the dodging and catching of dishes?"

"You think this one of my tests, then?" Cologne raised an eyebrow. "Do you truly imagine that I am even capable of such machiavellian cruelty?"

"No, tempting at it is," Nabiki's glare remained unabated. "But I do hold you responsible! Those aren't Yakuza keeping me holed up in my own home and away from my fiance when she needs me the most!"

Cologne sighed. "I agree that I bear the burden of responsibility in this for my sister's actions, and I accept that. But assigning blame, however cathartic, is not going to correct the situation!" She thumped her staff on the ground. "I am willing to aid you however I can, Nabiki Tendo, but I must know you have the wherewithal to see this through to the end!"

"Why is this on me, huh?!" Nabiki all but shouted. "These are your people who are working for Himura! This is all some martial arts idiocy mixed up with some criminal underworld idiocy of which I never wanted any part, and have done my dead level best to avoid, so why is it suddenly on me?!"

"This is your world, Nabiki Tendo," Cologne replied. "For all my centuries of experience, I do not know or understand it like you do. For all your insistence of having nothing to do with any of this, you are the only one who has a foot in both worlds. You are the only one who has enough understanding of it to see the big picture. The burden is unfair, I grant you. But… there is no one else. Not Shampoo, not Ranma, not even myself."

"What… all by my lonesome?" Nabiki muttered. "Just… whip up some Nabiki version of the Hiryu Shoten Ha and make all the bad guys go away?"

Cologne walked over next to her and patted her arm. "No, child. Not alone. I am still here to help, as are the others. As will Ranma, when the shock of her discovery has faded. And there are others you have acquired on your own. I believe you have all the pieces you require to be victorious. You merely need to play them wisely."

"You've got far more confidence in my abilities than I do," Nabiki groused. "And I have a lot of confidence in my abilities. Too much, it turns out. All of this started because I thought I could 'fix' Ranma Saotome's life."

"And do you honestly think you have not made progress? Or that you would encounter no setbacks or resistance?" Cologne chuckled. "That is overconfidence indeed! Destiny is loathe to change, Nabiki Tendo, yet you have dragged it kicking and screaming thus far, seemingly without effort. But it will not submit without a fight. You should have expected a final conflict before you gained mastery over it."

"You make it sound like I'm slaying some sort of monster," Nabiki said skeptically.

"Aren't you?" Cologne settled down next to her, easing herself down stiffly. As spry as the old woman was, it was easy to forget that she was ancient, but for that brief moment she dropped her guard and Nabiki could see how much the years weighed on her. "I sought to defy destiny once myself. I had been raised my entire life to fulfill my mother's wishes - to become a great warrior and to lead our people. I trod the well-worn path of destiny without question." She pulled out her pipe and started packing it. "Until I met Happi, that is."

"Let me guess; You fell in love and were tempted to run away with him?" Nabiki asked.

"Heavens no, child!" Cologne chuckled. "Oh, I was infatuated with him to a degree, to be sure. He was different - bold, brash and capable. He was clumsy, but unafraid to make mistakes. He'd pick himself up, dust himself off and try again in pursuit of what he wanted. He was hardly different from what he is now, but he was unlike anyone I had ever met. But he was also a lecherous idiot who sought only to sate his baser desires and would never see me as more than an object of those desires… much as I might have wished it to be different." She sighed. "Yet… he did plant the seeds of rebellion - the notion that there was an outside world; places full of people and adventures. He made me realize that there was more to life than our little village in our small corner of China, and that these places might be worth exploring."
"You wanted to run away. See the world," Nabiki said, finding herself struggling to attribute such a rebellious notion to the conservative elder.

"I did run away," Cologne replied as she lit her pipe and took a puff. "For a time. I had naively assumed that my mother would allow me to simply walk away from it all, and that she would respect my decision. I was wrong. She pursued me and dragged me back home, three times, in fact, before I managed to get away cleanly. Each time she would remind me of my duty and of the people who would come to depend on me - of my destiny. I was having none of it, of course."

Cologne sighed. "And then I found out very quickly that the world outside of Jusendo cared nothing for a girl who knew nothing of its ways. I could defend myself, of course; but I was hardly the only martial artist wandering China, and I was arguably the most naive. Within days I found myself destitute, swindled out of my few meagre possessions with naught but a handful of coins and the tattered clothes on my back. I found myself stumbling through a rainstorm… freezing rain, the sort that soaks through you straight to the bone. And I was left staring at a tea shop, wondering if I should spend the last of my coin on something so frivolous as a cup of tea, if only to get some sort of respite from the cold and wet."

"A tea shop, huh?" Nabiki said softly.

"Yes. And an odd one at that. All manner of whirlly things and chimes outside, and a name that made no sense to me. In the middle of nowhere by the road. Odder still was the man inside who ran the place. He wore women's clothes and too much makeup, but made no attempt to disguise what he was. He never took my coin. He merely asked to guess my preferred type of tea." Cologne chuckled. "I didn't even know I had a preference until then. But it was a quiet place to think. I don't know how long I spent there, but by the time I stepped outside, I discovered my Mother had caught up to me. She gave me an ultimatum: return home with her willingly, to face punishment for my obstinacy, or challenge her for my freedom then and there."

"You fought her and lost?" Nabiki asked.

Cologne shook her head. "No. I bowed my head and meekly accepted defeat. My mother had not needed to lay a hand on me. The outside world had done so more than enough. To her credit, she did not raise a hand against me and accepted me back, pleased that I had 'learned my lesson'. Oh there was token punishment… chores and training… but she did not wish to drive me away again, thinking it was some onerousness of home life that had caused me to flee. If only!" Cologne snorted. "It was no oppressive authority which had crushed me. I gave up because I was faced with the possibility that I might fail."

Cologne blew a smoke ring, silent for a moment. "After that, when I left the village, it was only in duly sanctioned capacities… but it was not the same. I had forever tethered myself to home and to my destiny. All of it was in service to that." She fixed Nabiki with a stern look. "You are now that girl, standing in the rain in threadbare clothes with barely a coin to her name, stripped of her arrogance and pride and discovering that her dream is not what she once thought. I see much of myself… as I was in that moment at least… in you, Nabiki Tendo. I foresaw this day coming, but what comes next?" She took another puff. "Well… I am curious to peer down that path not taken. But the choice to take it remains always with you."

"So… give up on my hopes and dreams, or win a fight way out of my weight class?" Nabiki scowled. "That's a hell of a choice."

"Life is often not fair in the choices it provides. Yet it is a challenge that Ranma has risen to meet time and again, is it not? But this arena is far more complex. Ranma is a warrior… one without peer, I dare to say. But this contest is one of generals and rulers," Cologne replied gravely. "I will not lie, Nabiki Tendo. If you wish to be assured of saving something, it would be best to surrender now."

"And give up on Ranma?" Nabiki shot her a horrified look.

"On Ranma, on my Great-Granddaughter and quite likely the Hibiki boy as well. I suspect that if you appear sufficiently cowed, however, both Himura and Lo Shan will be satisfied with that. You would likely need to leave Nerima and start over… but you and your sisters would be able to resume more normal lives." Cologne gave her a searching look. "But if you seek to hold onto more than that, you will lose everything… unless you have the cunning and will to see this through to the end." She hopped to her feet and started hobbling away. "If you want the prudent course of action? Give up now."

Nabiki remained silent for a few moments until, slowly, her clenched fists relaxed.

Cologne sighed. "You have some time to decide, child. I can give you that much at least. For now we must wait for Lo Shan to make the next move. Take that time to consider."

000

Lo Shan had to admit the Kuno Manor was impressive, at least in its size. It was built on the base of an Edo period castle and, despite the 'softening' that had been wrought by modern conveniences and sensibilities, she could see that it was still a bastion of war at its core. Though she preferred mobility and left fortresses of stone and steel to emperors and kings, it was at least a sign that this land had not always been pudgey, soft and weak.

I suppose Himura thought such defences would be enough to stymie us. Smug child, Lo Shan thought, though the instincts that had kept her alive for so long warned her that it was more than that. She lowered her spyglass and turned to the warrior next to her. "How many defenders inside?"

"[It is difficult to tell,]" the woman said. "[They conceal their movements and either walk in amongst the staff or pose as staff themselves to get from place to place within the castle. They are aware of us, but have made no moves on our positions.]"

"[Of course not. A castle like that would be stocked for months. They know we can hardly lay siege for any period of time without drawing the attention of the local authorities. What of access points? There must be dozens in such an old structure.]"

The warrior seemed nervous. "[You… would think. I have sent scouting teams to explore drainage lines, the foundations, the inside of the courtyard. There… have been injuries.]"

"[Injuries?]" Lo Shan frowned.

"[The grounds are heavily laced with booby traps. Most appear to be nonlethal, but are of maniacal design. Encounters so far have resulted in our teams being ejected violently from the castle. Those teams that have managed to make it onto the grounds were forced to retreat, reporting… some manner of beast.]"

"[Some manner of beast…]" Lo Shan parroted. "[Not even a description? Have the women who fled in so cowardly a manner that they failed to even see the eyes of their enemy report to me after the Godslayer is ours. I can see that many of you are in dire need of retraining.]"

The warrior swallowed nervously. "[Yes, Honored Elder.]"

"[Call your scouts back. If the surreptitious routes are impassable, then we will simply go over the wall and deal with what resistance they might raise. Make sure to have some of those dart guns that Himura provided.[" She sighed and folded her arms. Only a few days in this hedonistic land and already my warriors grow soft. You made a grievous error in coming here, Khu Long. Perhaps you will still see reason once this is done.

The trees around them rustled as a half dozen Amazon warriors who were already present readied themselves. Lo Shan smiled to herself. This will hardly be an evening's worth of entertainment.

---

Ranma winced as her fist hit the post at the wrong angle. She felt the shock of pain through her wrist and up along her arm and into the shoulder, and instinctively hopped back, shaking her hand. She was in the Kuno mansion's dojo (One of them, anyway), wearing a borrowed white training gi. She had been trying to do some basic punching exercises on a rope-wrapped post, but she was finding her body refusing to obey her.

"You seem to be having some trouble, Ran," Tatewaki commented. He was sitting lotus style on the floor of the kendo dojo, eyes closed. He had been in silent meditation since she had come in and she hadn't realized he was aware of her presence until he spoke.

"I'm just a little off balance," Ranma said, massaging her wrist. She decided to try for a kick instead and spun for what she intended to be a strong roundhouse to the side of the rope-wrapped post.

Instead, her foot slipped on the polished floor and she spun gracelessly, tumbled and would have hit her head if someone hadn't caught her.

She looked up, eyes wide, to find herself staring into Tatewaki Kuno's face. Suddenly she had a horrible flashback. The sense of having no control, of slipping, careening, someone catching her, then stale breath and lips forcibly pressed to hers…

"L-lemme go!" She squirmed, struggling to free herself from his grasp. "Lemme go!"

Tatewaki released her immediately and held his hands up as he stepped back. "Please, accept my apologies! I did not mean any offense, I merely… you were falling and I reacted without thinking…!"

Ranma dropped to her knees, feeling the tears threatening to well up again. That feeling of helplessness was back - vulnerability. The fear - knowing that someone could do whatever they wanted and she wouldn't be able to stop them. She pulled the front of her borrowed gi tightly closed as she tried to get her breathing under control. "It's… it's… it's okay…"

Tatewaki regarded her, then knelt a respectful distance away. "I did something to you. Didn't I?" he asked in a hushed tone.

She glanced up at him and was taken aback by the look of horror and disgust on his face. His hands on his knees were shaking and she watched as he reached into his pocket and withdrew the small orange bottle. His eyes were lowered, hooded in the shadow of his bangs.

Ranma closed her eyes and took a steadying breath. "No. Not you," she said, glad that at least this time she could say that. "Someone named Mikado Sanzenin. He grabbed me at the skating rink when Akane was trying to teach me how to skate and…" She swallowed. "I didn't expect my first kiss to go to an ice skating letcher I had never met before."

Tatewaki seemed to tremble and relax, slumping in relief. "I… am sorry. I should not find such a thing reassuring, but…” he took a deep breath, "I know I have been guilty of much."

Ranma smiled weakly. "Actually, you were just kind of into overly enthusiastic hugs. You got over excited, sure, but… Sanzenin…” She shuddered. "He made me feel… unclean."

"Ah," Tatewaki sighed. "I had feared… I had what I thought was a memory when you mentioned a kiss, but…” he chuckled, "I believe I was… some sort of samurai in it, and you were… Juliet?"

Ranma cocked her head. "Oh, no, that actually happened."

Tatewaki's eyes widened. "What…?"

"It was a stage play of Romeo and Juliet. Or it was supposed to be. Akane was playing Juliet, and somehow it got screwed up into a competition for who got to be Romeo." Ranma sat down on the floor cross-legged. "All for a trip to see 'China'… which turned out to be some sorta famous actor, not the place."

Tatewaki frowned. "But… you were Juliet. And…"

Ranma rubbed the back of her head sheepishly. "Yeah, that… well… I've got a bit of a problem with being over-competitive… and I put on the costume to distract Happosai, who was being a pest, and then Akane was acting like she was okay with kissing you 'cuz it was the scene and Juliet was s'posed to kiss Romeo, and we started fighting and… I guess it just made more sense in my head, that I'd rather kiss you myself than let you kiss her."

"We… kissed?" Tatewaki said, looking dumbfounded.

"Oh, no, it didn't count," Ranma said, blushing. "We… we used tape…” She pantomimed putting a piece of tape across her own lips. "You know… It sounds even weaker now than it did then…” She sighed. "But… I mean, I kissed you. So… you didn't do anything wrong."

"I… see…” Tatewaki said, seemingly a bit confused. He frowned. "There was a date sometime later… with a wish-granting sword?"

"Yeah, that happened too. I thought I could use it to cure myself," Ranma said ruefully. "Guess it's probably a good thing that didn't work out, huh?"

"And… a very fat bird on my head that gave me super powers?"

"Ahh… oh yeah! The Phoenix! That was a major pain…"

Tatewaki rubbed his eyes. "You'll forgive me, but… I am beginning to wonder if I am either overly medicated, or not taking enough. How much of what I thought was merely madness was real?"

Ranma scooted over and patted his shoulder companionably. "I kinda know how you feel, Senpai." She rubbed her wrist again and sighed. "Mebbe more than I'd really like."

"You are having trouble with your art," Tatewaki observed, seemingly eager to change the subject. "You are having difficulty moving?"

"It's like… you know how you've got a word on the tip of your tongue, but you just can't think of it, and it's driving you crazy? It's like that, but… but with the Art." She clenched her fist. "I grew up living and breathing the Art. I shouldn't even have to think about it. But…” Her fist relaxed. "I can't seem to move right. I keep… second-guessing myself, I guess. I can't even get through a basic kata without screwing up the order of the moves."
"You are unable to find your focus?" Tatewaki asked.

Ranma shook her head. "It's not that. I mean… I useta do this stuff like it was as natural as breathing. I didn't have to think unless it was something really challenging. But… After yesterday? After the last few weeks and all that's happened in that time?" She twitched. "All of it was Pops… drilling it into me over and over and over… punishing me if I got it wrong. Drugging me too, apparently. And that was before… before Jusenkyo. The Art used to make me feel safe… and now all it does is remind me of all of that. Each time I do a move in a kata, I get this… flash of memory, of what he used to do when I got it wrong. And I hesitate and I do get it wrong, and then I panic, and…" She closed her eyes and forced herself to take a calming breath. "All of my Martial Arts are based on the Anything Goes style. All of my techniques, even the stuff I've learned from others builds on it. It's a huge part of who I am." She looked at her hand. "But… but if everything my parents was doing was wrong… If everything I learned was wrong…"

Tatewaki listened to her and considered. He closed his eyes in thought. After a moment he opened them again. "My father used to take me and my sister out for ice cream."

Ranma blinked and cocked her head. "Uhh… okay?"

Tatewaki held up a finger. "Allow me to finish and, hopefully, this will make sense. My father used to take me and my sister out for ice cream. She was likely too young to remember, but I did. It was a reward at the end of the week. This was when he was… saner, though he still had his problems. He spent all week working, and this was one of the few times we had with him. He had taken an interest in my fascination with the philosophy of Miyamoto Musashi, and he and I would play a little game, where we would argue the philosophical implications of ice cream toppings, myself drawing on Musashi's writings, whilst he would draw from his beloved Hawaiian culture. It was nonsensical and silly, but it often led into deeper discussions and I find to this day that much of my personal philosophy can be traced back to those 'ice cream arguments' we had. Of all of my memories of him, these are the fondest, and the ones from which I draw much wisdom."

Kuno's expression darkened. "But he also neglected his family, indulged in his madness, refused proper treatment, and actively blocked mine. He became a tyrannical monster who terrorized the students who were his charges, with little regard for safety or sanity. He tormented me with his obsessions and ignored my mother's abuse of my sister, and, in the end, he simply left." He folded his hands. "So… the conundrum; Do I overlook all of his transgressions because of a few fleeting happy memories and useful lessons, or do I stand my ground and thusly discard major foundational elements of my own beliefs because, regardless of how wise they have proven, they originated from a flawed source?"

Ranma considered. "Well… I guess it'd make sense to keep the stuff that works, even if the one who taught it to you was lousy, right? I mean… I can see that making sense. I learned tricks from the old letch all the time, and he's basically the worst human being I've ever met."

"That's the most reasonable course, naturally," Tatewaki agreed. "But if it were that easy, I'd not be here meditating half the day. After all, this 'old letch' you learned from… you knew he was untrustworthy when you began your lessons, correct? Regardless of what you learned, there were no false pretenses. What you learned was carefully weighed against what you knew about him." He looked up at the evening sky, visible over the compound wall. "It's the betrayal that poisons it, I think. You accept a lesson because you trust the source… you incorporate it… then discover the source is untrustworthy."

"So… what do you do?" Ranma asked.

"I'm still working on that," Tatewaki admitted. He gave her a smile. "If you should happen upon an answer before I do, be sure to let me know, would you?"

Ranma smiled in spite of herself. "You know… I didn't think that would actually make me feel better…"

"There is comfort in knowing your experience is shared by another, no matter how painful or maddening," Tatewaki replied, slowly rising to his feet. He walked over to the wall and selected two shinai from the rack. "Perhaps a different approach to your problem. Your training was primarily in unarmed kempo, correct?"

"Yeah. Occasionally some staff fighting, but Pops mostly felt weapons were a crutch," Ranma replied.

"Then might I suggest I start training you in Kendo?" Tatewaki asked. "If you are willing, of course." He held out one of the training swords. "It would be a style that you have had no training in, so you would not be fighting old reflexes. A stopgap to maintain your form until you have resolved our mutual conundrum?"

Ranma stared at the offered sword, then slowly got to her feet, walked over and took it from him. It felt… odd in her hand. Too light, for one, oddly balanced to her inexperienced grasp. He was right in that there was nothing overly familiar about it. Ranma had always shared Genma's distaste for weapons, eschewing them unless in the midst of a battle that required improvisation, or as a modified form of weight training. There was a sense of almost being forbidden.

She tightened her grip on it. "Yeah…" She swung the sword experimentally. "Definitely not my style… so you're right, it's perfect. Uhh… If you're willing, Senpai. I dunno how good a student I'll be at this."

"And I cannot promise to be a great instructor. I have been distressingly lax in my duties as Kendo Club Captain in recent years," Tatewaki replied. "But perhaps this can be a learning opportunity for us both? As well as a chance to learn more about you than the tragedies of your past and your choice of hair styles."

Ranma nodded then hesitated. "Uhhh… No offense Senpai, but… I should probably run this past my b… past Ryo first. To… uhh… avoid any misconceptions."

Tatewaki's eyebrows shot up and he held up his hands. "I promise you, I mean nothing untoward!"

"I know, I know, it's just… I have a history of a lot of misunderstandings with the people who…
y'know… like me. They see me doing something totally innocent, but walk in after I trip and accidentally grope someone or something, or vice versa… And Nabiki…" Ranma stopped, wincing as she felt a stab of pain from that. "A-and Nabiki always told me that if I communicated better I could avoid a lot of it. So… I gotta tell Ryouga what I'm doing first."

Tatewaki shouldered the shinai and nodded. "Fair enough. Where is your erstwhile suitor, anyway?
He has been quite protective of you since coming here. I admit to some surprise that he has allowed you to be out of his sight for so long a time."

"He… uhh… kind of fell asleep waiting for me to get out of the bath," Ranma said. "I didn't wanna wake him. He's had a bit of a rough month because of me."

"I suspect this 'rough month' is a shared experience between you," Tatewaki replied. A smile crossed his face. "Well then, best you go fetch him. I could use a good sparring partner and, as unorthodox as his fighting style is, I do recall him being a formidable swordsman… even if he did insist on using an umbrella. A sparring partner would be as welcome as a chance to freshen my skills as an instructor!"

Before Ranma could reply there was an explosion on the far side of the compound.

"Wha…?!" Ranma stared as a cloud of dust rose from the base of the wall.

Tatewaki merely narrowed his eyes. "Sasuke."

The Ninja was beside him, kneeling, though he had been nowhere to be seen a moment before.
"Yes, Master Kuno."

"It seems our foreign visitors are no longer content merely to probe our defenses. What is our status?" Tatewaki said, his eyes on the cloud of dust rising from the perimeter as he walked over to the wall of the dojo and swapped the shinai for his more traditional bokken.

"Mistress Kodachi was investigating what seemed like an attempt to penetrate our security at the south wall, along with much of the staff," Sasuke replied. "We hadn't seen any other movement and presumed they had concentrated their forces."

"A feint, then, to draw off the defenders and allow a team to infiltrate." He switched his gaze to the large artificial river running through the compound which led to a pond with a small footbridge arching over it. "Tell me, has my sister's reptilian monstrosity been fed yet today?"

"No, Master Kuno," Sasuke replied.

"Good," Tatewaki smiled grimly. "Bring me the bell she uses to summon him for feedings and be quick. I suspect we are short of time." He turned to face what appeared to be an open and empty garden.

"Y-yes, Master Kuno, but shouldn't I go alert Mistress…?" Sasuke began.

Three knives erupted from the bushes. Tatewaki deflected the two aimed for Sasuke, then stopped the third targeted for his face, the sharp steel blade biting and sticking into the polished wood of his bokken.

"We do not have time. Go. Quickly!" Tatewaki replied.

The Ninja was already gone.

Ranma stepped back. She considered dropping into a fighting stance or fleeing and stumbled as her legs tried to do both. She leaned heavily against the wall and cursed.

"Stay back. You are their objective," Tatewaki said, eyes on the foliage as he moved to interpose himself between Ranma and the invaders. "And you are in no condition to defend yourself."

"I'm…!" Ranma started to protest, then trailed off. I almost said 'I'm a martial artist too!, just like Akane… Except… She clenched her fist. He's right. I can't! It's just like when I was tripping over myself trying to play volleyball…

"My name is Tatewaki Kuno, Scion of the Kuno Family. I know not the land from whence you hail, but here it is customary to introduce oneself when entering the home of another. Particularly uninvited as you are," Tatewaki called out.

After a moment of silence, a single figure emerged from the brush. She was middle aged, her raven black hair shot through with silver and tied back into a severe ponytail. Her face was lined with age and bore many scars, making her appear even older than she likely was. She wore green Chinese-style robes, trimmed with gold.

"I am Lo Shan," she called out. Her dark eyes fixed on Tatewaki, then shifted to Ranma. She snorted. "Ranma Saotome, slayer of gods, the warrior who humbled the Prince of the Musk tribe, undefeated in countless battles… cowering behind his inferior. Pathetic. How truly male of you."

"She is not your concern at the moment," Tatewaki said sharply, before Ranma could even respond. "This is my home you have invaded, and you will answer to me for the transgression."

"You are irrelevant, boy," Lo Shan said. "I have come for Ranma Saotome, regardless of this pathetic display. You may stand aside or you may die. The choice is yours."

"I'm not male!" Ranma shouted. "Did Himura tell you that? I can't imagine a cursed girl is of much use to the Amazons!"

Lo Shan raised an eyebrow. "Feh. You were raised male. The specifics of your curse are of little consequence. Your will mate with a strong Amazon bloodline and produce a fierce next generation. Khu Long's failure will be addressed and this matter will be put behind us. That is all that concerns me."

"Yeah? And I've already agreed to marry Shampoo, so what's the problem!?" Ranma retorted.

Lo Shan smirked. "That bloodline is no longer considered viable and Xian Pu has been adjudged to be a failure and a disgrace. We will select another. Perhaps several. You should consider yourself honored." She started to walk forward. "Now cease your resistance. I do not wish to cause you permanent harm, but any damage you suffer that does not affect your ability to sire children is also of no consequence, so do not…"

She trailed off as Kuno stepped to block her path, bokken levelled.

Lo Shan chuckled. "This must be a joke, yes? Outsider humor perhaps?" She sighed and snapped her fingers. "Very well. My patience wears thin, but I suppose my warriors deserve a little entertainment."

A half dozen Amazons emerged from various points of cover around the compound, each garbed in colorful Chinese martial arts gear, some carrying curved swords or spears.

"[Xiao Rin?]" Lo Shan said to one warrior with pale blue hair. "[Make an example of him.]"

Xiao Rin smirked. She looked Tatewaki over. "[A male who thinks he can fight, hmm?]" She levelled her sword at him. "[With a stick no less. This will be interesting… but short.]"

Tatewaki shifted his glance to Xiao Rin as Lo Shan stepped back. "I would have your name, if we are to fight."

"Name is for warriors. You boy with stick. Live thirty seconds, maybe take pity and give," Xiao Rin replied. She seemed amused by his stance as she slipped into one of her own. She flexed her legs, watching for his reaction but he kept his stance neutral and did not take the bait.

Having reached a decision to just end it, the Amazon warrior dashed forward. She made a last minute change of direction, pivoting nimbly on the balls of her feet and spun to slash at Tatewaki's unprotected side.
Tatewaki moved with a surprising economy of motion, turning almost casually as the blade of his bokken seemed to teleport to meet the flat of her blade and turn it, forcing her off balance and making her stumble. He stepped to the side and away without haste as she skidded to a stop.

"You will need to be quite a bit faster to catch me like that," he said.

Xiao Rin looking shocked, as though she wasn't entirely sure what had just happened. She glared at him then took a more cautious stance. "Is trick, yes?"

"I would think a true warrior could tell the difference easily enough," Tatewaki replied.

She growled and continued to circle around him, but warily this time. He did not turn to follow her movements, but held his stance, which only served to make her more cautious.

"[Xiao Rin, stop embarrassing yourself and me!]" Lo Shan barked. "[This is not a challenge match, this is the elimination of an obstacle!]

Xiao Rin winced then snarled and darted towards Tatewaki's unprotected back. He swung the bokken behind his head to catch her blade once again and bind it as he turned in one smooth motion, pulling her off balance once more and, with a forceful sweep of his weapon, sent her sprawling.

"I have sparred many times with Ranma Saotome and, while I am by no means her equal, I think you will find that I have some skills of my own," Tatewaki said, turning his gaze to Lo Shan. "If this is the best you mean to bring to bear, this will be a very long afternoon."

Xiao Rin got to her feet and, before Lo Shan could respond, barked something in Mandarin. The other five Amazons drew their weapons and began to advance on him.

"What's this?" Tatewaki eyed them warily then shot Xiao Rin a glance. "I thought this was between us?"

"Not fight. Not challenge," Xiao Rin said, though her cheeks held a flush of shame. "Is extermination. Is war. Obstacles are for killing, any means possible. You tricky, but need die now."

Tatewaki narrowed his eyes. "Come, then."

Xiao Rin actually hesitated, but the others didn't and rushed in. The first came at him with a spear. He deflected the point to his left side, grabbed it and pulled, sweeping her legs out from under her with his bokken. He used the spear to tangle up the second attacker's sword, catching it with the tines, then smashing down on the spear with his own bokken to drive both weapons to the ground. He stepped in and made a slashing strike to the side of her head to send her tumbling off in a boneless heap.

The other three, one wielding a pair of chúī and the other two unarmed, hesitated. They nodded at each other, and while the first one darted in to feint at Tatewaki, the other two began to dance around him in opposite directions.

Ranma recognized it as a modification of the Hiryu Shoten Ha. The Amazons on the outside were weaving hot and cold ki into a more complex pattern than called for in the basic technique, and the girl sparring with Tatewaki was exerting some sort of stabilizing force to contain it all. Ranma realized that the Amazons probably had more than a few tricks up their sleeves like this that they hadn't yet shared. "Kuno Senpai!"
Tatewaki turned his head and, for a brief instant, he locked eyes with her. Then he winked.

It took Ranma a second to decide if she had actually seen it, such a gesture being so far out of character for him. He knows? But then why is he standing right in the center of the double spiral like a dumbass?!

Tatewaki grinned as he locked weapons with the chúi-wielder. "You know, this odd sensation in the air seems awfully familiar…"

She smirked then leapt suddenly backwards as the two other girls finished crossing each other's paths at a run. As the three paths intersected, it appeared to spark things off, the hot and cold spirals collapsing in on each other to generate a crushing vortex centered on the Kendoist.

"Senpū-Ken!" Tatewaki raised his sword with both hands, using a technique Ranma hadn't seen for nearly a year.

Wait, he can still do that? But what…? Ranma's eyes widened with realization and she dove for cover just in the nick of time.

Whirlwind Sword - a technique where the sword is spun in a tight arc to create small but intense whirlwinds, which Tatewaki drove right up into the heart of the spiral. And Ranma knew enough about the Hiryu Shoten Ha to know what it would do; destabilize it.

What was supposed to be a brief, controlled but intense tornado became instead a sudden uncontrolled and violent explosion. The blast of air flung the three Amazons back out into the garden to flop on the grass like fish out of water, groaning.

Tatewaki himself staggered for a second as the sudden low pressure dragged the breath from his lungs - but he remained standing and straightened.

"You were right," he said, fixing his gaze on Xiao Rin. "This was not a fight." He turned his scrutiny to Lo Shan. "I have honed my blade against your vaunted godslayer himself, day after day, for more than a year. I am well acquainted with your Amazon techniques."

Lo shan sighed, shook her head and folded her arms. "[I should have brought the seniors. Xiao Rin, step aside. I will deal with this.]"

Xiao Rin narrowed her eyes, her attention still fixed on Tatewaki. "No."

Lo Shan's eyes widened, the whites showing as her face twisted with outrage at the act of defiance. "[Xiao Rin!]"

Xiao Rin ignored her. She locked eyes with Tatewaki. "Xiao Rin."

Tatewaki blinked. "Your name is 'Showering'?"

"I thought this wasn't a challenge?" Tatewaki said, though he shifted back into his neutral stance.

"Outsider good fighter. Better than told Outsiders could be. Want to see how good," Xiao Rin said. "No tricks, yes?"

A smile crossed Tatewaki's face. "Agreed."
"No," Lo Shan stepped forward and, with a wave of her hand that barely seemed to brush the girl, sent Xiao Rin flying off to the side. She stepped forward to thrust her palm in Tatewaki's direction. Though she was many feet away, a massive wall of force slammed into the kendoist and flung him back into a rack of training equipment like a ragdoll.

"Kuno-Senpai!" Ranma leapt from her cover and ran over to check on him. He coughed and struggled to extricate himself.

"I have had quite enough of this farce." Lo Shan stalked forward. "Ranma Saotome, you will come with…"

Lo Shan paused and looked up, then darted back as a black and yellow blur slammed into the ground from above, right where she had been standing. There was an explosion, sending dirt and stone everywhere. Ranma shielded herself and Tatewaki as best she could, then peered back into the cloud, already recognizing the entrance.

Ryouga was crouched in the crater, finger still on the ground where he had hit the breaking point. He was peering out of the cloud. "She's not going anywhere with you."

Lo Shan was only a few feet away. Her arms were crossed and, despite having a few fragments of stone and concrete in her hair and clothes, she seemed utterly unimpressed. "Did Khu Long teach you that ridiculous trick?" She shook her head as she picked a shard of stone from her hair. "It's not even a particularly good method of toughness training."

Ryouga straightened. "It worked pretty well for me."

"I imagine it did, with such a limited repertoire of techniques. Even broken and useless Joketsuzoku techniques must seem powerful." She smirked at him. "Perhaps I can show you a few?"

She made a gesture and her image suddenly shimmered and split, and then there were a dozen of her surrounding him.

"What, Ninja tricks now?" Ryouga said. He put on a confident front, but there was a hint of nervousness in his voice.

Lo Shan's calmly smug expression twisted into rage. "Ninja Tricks. Do you know how much of your vaunted 'Ninja Heritage' was stolen from us?!"

Without warning, one of the images darted forward and struck Ryouga in the side faster than he could react, then melted back into place with the rest. The others started to run in a circle around him, making it impossible to tell if a strike was from the real Lo Shan, or if each image was actually solid somehow. Another strike to his back, then one to the gut. Ryouga lashed out with a spinning roundhouse kick, but his foot passed through nothing.

His eyes darted between them, but with so many it was impossible to predict which would attack, or keep track. He wiped a little blood from the corner of his mouth. "It'll take more than a few pokes to put me down!"

"Don't boast, boy, I know the limits of the Bakusai Tenketsu training. I could put you down with a single blow if I wished," Lo Shan replied, voice echoing oddly.

"Think so, huh?" Ryouga replied. "Then this shouldn't be a surprise at all. Go hon' yubi Bakusai Tenketsu!" He then held up his hand, fingers splayed. For the span of a breath or two, each of his fingertips seemed to glow, then he thrust his hand down into the ground.
After a momentary rumble the ground all around Ryouga erupted in a series of explosions. Dirt and rock shattered and burst as though the area all around him were being shelled by artillery, yet the small circle of earth he crouched on was untouched. The decoy images were ripped apart by the shockwaves and Lo Shan was sent stumbling back, covering her face, eyes wide.

She recovered quickly, scowling. "Do you have any idea how dangerous that perversion of the breaking point is?"

Ryouga's confident look was more genuine now. "Pretty sure, yeah. How often have you actually used the breaking point, huh? Because I've been using it almost every day for a year. Can you hit the breaking point of a pile of sand? I could after my first month."

Lo Shan's eyes narrowed. "I'll acknowledge you're a prodigy, boy. You would probably be a challenge for one with ten years of experience and training on you. But… I have far more than that." She drew in a breath, and then exhaled forcefully.

Ranma felt the ripple of ki, the same slight electric tingle to the air that she had felt when Cologne started to pull out multiple techniques at once. She shouted at Ryouga, but it was already too late.

Lo Shan started shedding afterimages like water as she moved forward at terrifying speed, changing direction with a perfect duplicate taking the other path, branching off and making it impossible to tell which was real. Ryouga threw up his hands to protect himself which, unfortunately, left her target exposed.

Five finger strikes hit Ryouga's chest - savage impacts that were more than just force - penetrating flesh and bone and biting deep.

Ryouga spasmed, coughed up blood and crumpled like a rag doll over Lo Shan's arm.

She grinned as her afterimages faded and pushed Ryouga off her, letting him fall to land in a broken heap. "It has many names, many variations and permutations. But the end result is the same, as I'm sure you understood the moment your heart stopped." She clucked her tongue. "Shame. You had some potential in you."

A tortured scream ripped itself from Ranma's throat as she felt Ryouga's presence flicker and dim. She abandoned her protective stance over Tatewaki and lurched forward, half running, half crawling as she scrambled over to him, heedless of the martial arts master standing over his body. She turned him over, panic gripping her heart.

"Oh, did that finally spark some life in you, Godslayer?" Lo Shan asked. "Perhaps I should have started off killing a few of your allies for effect."

Ranma ignored her for the moment. Now that she was in contact with Ryouga, she could feel his Ki ebbing away, feel the horrible, ice-cold blocks that were keeping his body from responding. She gripped his hand tightly and willed them to thaw, willed the pulse of life to flow again.

Ryouga's eyes shot open as he gasped and started coughing.

She felt a wave of relief when she sensed his ki start to stabilize, his pulse weak, but steady. And as the immediate sense of panic ebbed, she could feel something else rising to take its place.

000

Lo Shan stared, as she saw the boys chest begin to rise and fall again. This is troubling. These Outsiders… they are meddling with forces they don't understand. And none of this should even be possible. Those ki blocks should have ensured his death! "I'm not entirely sure how you did that, child. That technique is supposed to be fatal. But... You are far far too dangerous to allow you roam free with the knowledge you have. Now... Are you done hiding behind others, or is there someone else I must kill today? I can promise you that whatever it is you did here, it will not avail you for my next victim." She glanced around to mark any further targets. The boy with the stick was still sprawled out on some training dummies, and there seemed to be no sign of the household servants.

"No more," The redhead murmured softly.

"Are you going to be reasonable and surrender yourself then, Godslayer?" Lo Shan replied with some surprise. "Without even trying your own hand? So... Himura was right. You are broken." Though I loathe to give that arrogant girl that much credit. She narrowed her eyes but she could sense nothing from the girl before her - no intent to attack - no movement - nothing. Not a trap, then? Or do you have another trick up your sleeve? No matter, a quick jab to the pressure points on the back of the neck and... Her left hand darted towards the girl's neck with unnatural speed, faster than the eye could follow or the average person would even be able to react.

Lo Shan was able to sense the shift, though just barely. The girl did not appear to move, but her position had suddenly changed.

And then... Lo Shan's hand fell off.

Lo Shan caught her breath and flung herself back twenty feet, her right hand coming up to the stump where her left wrist and forearm had been a scant second before, grasping it tightly as blood spurted around her fingers. It was cleanly severed a ways above the wrist, but there had been no blade. The wound burned, the flesh around the edges frostbitten, as though whatever had slashed her was unbelievably cold.

The redhead stood and turned. There were no visible aura effects but Lo Shan could just perceive a flicker. Something was very wrong; The girl was not emitting anything that Lo Shan could recognize as a perceptible threat, yet she knew it had been this girl that had cut her. She grit her teeth and focused her ki in an effort to staunch the bleeding.

Ranma opened her eyes. Normally blue, they now had an odd glint to them, almost as though the light was reflecting from them in the same manner as the eyes of a cat.

"The Neko ken," Lo Shan breathed. I forgot that his idiot father had subjected him to that. At least I know what I'm dealing with.

She glanced around, looking warily for something to distract the girl.

"No. More," Ranma repeated, snapping Lo Shan's attention back to her. Her fingers curled into facsimiles of claws.

Lo Shan stared at her. For a moment, all of her thoughts and schemes deserted her.

"How is it that you can speak?" she finally asked. She gripped her severed stump tighter, as if to remind herself of what just happened. "The Neko ken requires that you surrender your human consciousness! It requires a total and complete conviction that you are the animal! How can you be talking!?" She took a reflexive step back, eyes wide as she tried to comprehend what might have led to a mind capable of such a duality.

Ranma took a step forward in response. There was an edge of a growl in her voice, from deep in her chest. "You won't take any more from me..." she ground out, her lips drawing back to bare her teeth. "Nobody... Nobody is going to take away anything else!"

Lo Shan moved purely on an instinct beyond her normal senses, and it was all that kept her head on her shoulders when the redhead suddenly blurred and flashed past her. She wasn't entirely fast enough though. She felt a sting at her right shoulder and the silk fabric of her robes started to soak through with red. She hopped back and was forced to parry another few savage strikes as the feral girl managed to change direction faster than she thought possible.

I can't read her movements! Lo Shan thought, dancing backwards a few more steps as she fended off the strikes one-handed. She winced as even turning away the attacks left her with gashes on her forearm.

The other Amazons around her were starting to stir. Lo Shan glanced around, caught the eyes of one and, in that moment of connection, communicated all she needed. The warrior nodded and pulled the Outsider weapon from her back; the modified airsoft rifle.

Lo Shan rallied her ki to harden her defense, enduring a few more slashes to hold the girl in position. You are formidable, Godslayer, but in the end...

The rifle was almost completely silent, the dart swifter than any blowgun with nearly the velocity of a bullet at this range. Dodging would be difficult, even for Lo Shan herself.

Ranma swatted the air, changing targets instantly. At first Lo Shan thought she had slashed the dart with those air pressure claws, but she caught a flash of color between the redhead's fingers as she turned her attention back to Lo Shan with a backhanded flick of her wrist. NO!

Lo Shan slapped the dart away as soon as it struck, but she had felt the prick and could already feel the burning chill of the paralysis toxin seeping through her body. She grit her teeth and marshalled what was left of her ki to hold back the effects, but she knew that she could not fight the poison and a weidler of the Neko ken. However, other warriors rose and drew their own rifles. She reasoned that if she could hold out but a moment more, there was a chance.

It took a second for her to realize the ringing in her ears wasn't from the drug. Her eyes snapped over to the side to where the sword user had been. His manservant was next to him and, though he still seemed winded, he was ringing what looked like a simple brass bell. What...?

The roar was deafening. The water of the pond in the middle of the compound erupted, and a gigantic creature emerged. It looked like a crocodile but it was many times larger than any she had ever seen before. Several Amazons scattered but one was slow and Lo Shan watched with horror as the creature swallowed her whole.

The surprise caused Lo Shan to lose some ground in holding back the poison and she dropped to one knee as her legs went numb.

In a panic, the other Amazons opened fire, some at the giant reptile, the others at Ranma. Ranma leapt into the air and pivoted, like a cat snatching birds out of the air, intercepting the darts and flinging them back towards their owners. The ones that found their mark on the reptile simply bounced off its scaley hide as it pounced on another warrior, snapping her neck with a vicious shake of its head before gulping her down as well.

Lo Shan's head spun with the toxin and she could see Ranma glaring at her with those not-quite-human eyes. One did not get to her age or become an elder of the Joketsuzoku by refusing to acknowledge defeat, as bitter a pill as it might be.
"[Retreat!]" Lo Shan called sharply, forcing herself to her feet and dashing back, keeping her eyes on Ranma. The girl did not move to pursue but watched warily as Lo Shan made for the hole in the compound wall.

As Lo Shan turned she could hear another scream from behind her as yet one more of her warriors moved too slowly and fell victim to the creature. There will be an accounting for this, Godslayer! I swear it!

000

Ranma watched Lo Shan retreat, holding her menacing stance until she was sure that the old master had truly fled. It was important that she make herself look big, some corner of her mind told her, and she realized she was growling in a low tone as well. She felt like her ears should be folded back against her skull, despite a different part of her mind that told her with absolute certainty that her ears didn't work that way. She kept her watch on the breach in the wall for long moments after the Amazons were gone.

Then Ranma dropped to her hands and knees and was violently ill.

Mr. Green Turtle drug himself slowly back into his pond. He had learned from his past experiences that the redhead was rather too spicy to be worth the trouble, and none of the other bodies were moving enough to attract his interest. Besides… he had already eaten well. He slipped into the deceptively deep water and disappeared, sinking to the bottom to digest his meal.

Ranma heard someone calling her name. It sounded far away, but then she felt the hand on her shoulder and realized her ears were just ringing. She gasped and shivered as she felt the Link flicker to life.

"Ranma?" Ryouga asked. He brushed strands of her unbound hair from her face as he steadied her. "Are you…?"

She didn't reply, she simply turned and tackled him in a tight hug, and sent him sprawling back on the grass.

"Augh… easy… still sore…" Ryouga wheezed as she burrowed in against his bruised ribs. But he returned the embrace and, for a few minutes, just held her, tucking her head under his chin and stroking her hair. It was one of those comforting gestures that she would never have conceived of accepting before, but it dawned on her that it was something she had been missing for a very long time.

After a few minutes she wiped her mouth. She found there was blood on her fingers and nearly threw up again. She squeezed her eyes shut and tried to block out the spectre of the things that she had just done.

"Are you both unhurt?" Another voice… Tatewaki, though it took a second because his new, calmer tone was still unfamiliar to her. She didn't bother to release her grip on Ryouga or reply.

"I… don't think we're the ones to worry about," Ryouga said quietly. "Are we gonna be okay here with that… thing?"

"He typically sleeps for several days after a large meal," Tatewaki said. "This was… larger than most. My sister has also been careful to train him to recognize the difference between guests and intruders, though he has never…" He was quiet a moment. "We should return you to your rooms until the castle is fully secure."
"What about the survivors?" Ryouga asked. Ranma could feel him shifting as he looked around. "They… they are alive, right?"

"Sasuke is seeing to them. He and the rest of the staff will see them secured. One of the advantages of owning a centuries-old castle is that we have our own dungeon. It should be sufficient." She could sense Tatewaki crouching next to them. "Can you move? We should not linger here with the wall breached thus."

"Yeah, I'll… I'll just…" Ryouga shifted, trying to get to his feet, but he was struggling a bit with Ranma lampreyed onto him. He finally stopped and sighed.

"Can… can you give us a few minutes?" he asked.

"Of course," Tatewaki replied and moved away.

"Is… is the hand there?" Ranma asked once Tatewaki was far enough away. She still refused to open her eyes.

"I don't… wait… yeah… yeah, it's there," Ryouga replied. "About twenty feet from us."

Ranma shuddered. An image flashed through her mind of Saffron's face, smiling even as the razor sharp, ice cold winds sliced his body to pieces.

"I don't want to do this anymore," she whimpered, balling up her fists in his shirt. She could still feel the blood on her fingers. "I don't want to kill anyone anymore. Why won't they stop?"

"Shhh… you didn't kill anyone today, Ranma…" Ryouga said, holding her a bit tighter and rocking slowly.

"I should have stopped her sooner… I couldn't… couldn't move right… She hurt Kuno and I couldn't move… she hurt you and I couldn't move… S-she…" She shuddered again. "I can't… I can't lose you, Ryo…"

"I'm sorry," he replied. She felt a surge of guilt from him.

She succumbed to a burst of annoyance. She had the odd sensation that she should have a tail, and that it should be thrashing from side to side right now to express her frustration. She pulled back and glared at him. "Don't be sorry! Be alive! You and Akane both take way too many stupid risks! What were you thinking, taking on an Amazon Elder like that?!"

"Probably the same thing you were thinking!" Ryouga shot back. "What the hell was all of that, anyway? I didn't recognize any of those moves!"

"I… I don't know…" Ranma trailed off. "I haven't even been able to get through a basic kata all day, and then… and then she tried to kill you and…" She shook her head. "I wouldn't have had to do that if you had been more careful! You were wide open! She's not that much faster than me!"

Ryouga flicked her on the forehead. "Uh huh. I don't think you get to lecture me on being careful just yet, Ranma. Or did you forget who made that crater the Kunos pulled us out of?"

"That just proves my point! You should have let me die! None of this would be happening if it wasn't for me!" Ranma felt her eyes sting; felt the tears and struggled to fight them down. "Why would you do something so stupid!? You didn't even think, did you? How were you gonna deflect that, or how were you gonna beat an Amazon Grandmaster?! Why don't you think things through?!"
Ryouga just looked at her. Ranma found herself dropping her gaze and looking away, feeling uncomfortable with the intensity she saw in his eyes.

"When you dove after Akane when she fell, did you ever think about the landing?" he asked.

"I… you…" Ranma shut her eyes tight. "S-stop looking at me like that, Ryouga! I… I don't… I don't know…" She started to fidget. "I don't know how to deal with it when you look at me like that!"

"Look, I'll make you a promise I can keep, okay?" Ryouga said. He took her hand, startling her into meeting his gaze again. "The next time we jump off somewhere without any clue of how to land? We'll do it together."

Ranma wanted to say something to cut the tension. Something like the things she had said when that same tension surrounded her and Akane. Something casually insulting or perhaps intentionally provocative. But she couldn't bring herself to do it anymore, not knowing how much those comments hurt. All she was able to do was mumble something noncommittal, look away and blush furiously. And to give his hand a grateful squeeze to try and convey all the things she still couldn't bring herself to say.

That ended up being better anyway.

000

Sayuri realized very quickly that her estimation of the situation that morning had been severely understated.

The first things she noticed were the posters. Posters were nothing unusual at any high school, and Furinkan was no different, but Yuka noticed that something seemed off about them; There were a lot more than usual for one, and for clubs that usually didn't have events or recruitment drives, like the chemistry club. They were also professionally done and printed on heavy, expensive stock. A lot of the usual, more homemade posters were missing as well.

After a few hours or checking these posters, Sayuri was starting to see a pattern; there were a lot of 'fundraisers' going on. There was the 'Girls and Boys of Furinkan' calendar preorder advertisement, which ostensibly was to fund further student council sponsored student activities. Then there was the 'Sports Raffle', which had you guess the winners of each game, point spread… it was basically sports gambling that was barely bothering to disguise itself. There were also tickets being sold to several different 'Martial Arts Exhibitions'. All approved by the student council, and all managed by one Hana Yoshimitsu.

Legitimate, Student Council approved versions of Nabiki's typical moneymakers. Sayuri thought. Betcha that student assembly tomorrow is going to be about a crackdown on unauthorized photography, violence, and student gambling. Way to kick her while she's down.

There were others, too, encouraging students to attend away games for their volleyball team with free chartered bus transportation, giveaways, and other contests. No mention about the home team aside from a very dry notice that attendance to Wednesday's game was mandatory.

There was muttering in the halls, too. Students and even a few teachers who suddenly got quiet when she passed. Friends who were reluctant to chat or spend time around her or the others in their group. Even the seating was rearranged for 'efficiency', splitting them all up further. She also noticed that every one of her classes had someone she recognized from the volleyball team in it. Umeko had been moved to her homeroom, and when she caught her looking flashed her a nasty grin. Then her eyes flicked over towards Rin meaningfully, and she mouthed the words ‘She's next’.

Sayuri looked away, gritting her teeth to control her reaction as she seethed internally. She's doing it AGAIN! Damn Himura!

She glanced at Rin's back. The girl was oblivious, and Sayuri felt a pang of guilt. Himura knows the game. She knows I can take it. She'll go after Rin and Riko and Hiroshi and Daisuke and Yuka before she gets to me. Her eyes moved over to a group of empty desks. And we can't expect any backup, with those Amazons keeping Akane and Ukyou trapped in the dojo. And who knows if Ranma or Shampoo are even ALIVE at this point. I don't know HOW Himura can keep up with this stupid school vendetta bullshit after all of this!

Sayuri found herself having trouble focusing on schoolwork. It seemed so pointless with everything going on. She noticed Rin was focused on another newcomer to the class; Konatsu Kurenai.

Another pretty girl to the class, naturally nearly every student was clustered around her desk during breaks. And Konatsu naturally knew how to turn on the demure charm, which kept them hooked most of the day, which made it impossible to get the ninja alone.

Okay… Prioritize, Sayuri. Sayuri thought. Your star player is a molten mess because her parents used a potion on her to change her. Everything else is just the same old same old just… to the Nth. The usual players are out of commission, but probably not forever. YOU can't do martial arts or be a super-smart strategist playing mind-chess with gangsters. But you ARE here. You've got another person here who just got a fresh dose of that same potion, so… best angle of attack is to get info for Nabiki and the rest for when they DO get back in the game.

She glanced around. Mineko was in the seat next to Konatsu. She was watching her, but not participating in the group. Looks like Mineko is Konatsu's keeper. We'll need to distract her to separate them. Sayuri glanced at Rin again. If this potion has done something weird to Konatsu's brain, Rin is probably the best chance to get through to her, since she's perceptive and nonthreatening. Her eyes flicked to the side where Hiroshi and Daisuke were sitting. And those two are the most distracting students in class now that Ranma, Akane and Ukyou are gone. Tap Yuka and Riko as lookouts, and buy as much time as possible for Rin to get some info. AND… gotta plan all of this without someone like Hana sniffing it out. Where in the school WOULDN'T be bugged, though?

000

To Sayuri's surprise, an answer had already been prepared.

She had pulled Hiroshi and Daisuke aside and broached the question to them, to which they had replied by shushing her and handing her a slip of paper directing her to the old wing of the school near where the second school store had been, and instructions to meet there at lunch. The instructions had been brief, but very specific about the route. She quickly realized they were meant to confuse anyone following her.

After taking enough twists and turns to confuse even herself, Sayuri ended up descending an old staircase to some unused section of the cellar.

"Hello?" she called out into the gloom.

A hand reached out, covering her mouth and muffling the scream. She was pulled back into an even darker side passage, which was blacked out as whatever had been covering it was moved
She growled and stomped hard on the foot of whomever was dragging her. "Ow!" a familiar male voice cried out. "Sayuri, that hurts!"

She whirled on the brown-haired youth. "Daisuke, what the hell?!"

"Easy! We didn't want to let on to anyone following you," Hiroshi said from where he had moved an old shelving unit back into place.

"I'm sure you could have come up with a plan for that that didn't involve getting handsy." She looked around. "So... do you have any lights in here?"

As an answer, a match was struck by someone a few feet away, and used to light a candle, revealing a pale face with sunken, sullen eyes and gaunt, hollow cheeks. Sayuri recoiled a moment, as the flickering candlelight just accentuated the ghoulish qualities of the familiar countenance of Hikaru Gosunkugi.

"Kogane prefers candlelight," he said quietly. He shook the match to put it out then motioned for them to follow. "Keeping the light low also helps to prevent anyone spotting this place. The others are this way."

"What is this?" Sayuri asked as they walked down the hallway.

"It leads to an old coal room that dates back to a time when the original school building was heated using a coal furnace," Daisuke said. "It looks like they emptied it out and cleaned it up back in the 70's or something and then just forgot about it."

Gosunkugi led them into a room with a sink and a counter, and what looked like benches. There was another door, but it appeared to be boarded up. Yuka, Riko and Rin were already sitting on the bench. Light was provided by a number of candles all around. "I used to use this as a darkroom to develop my pictures before I started using a digital camera," Gosunkugi said by way of explanation. He gestured at several pictures on a corkboard of Akane Tendo, and a few of a girl with long brown hair wearing a vintage school uniform that Sayuri didn't recognize.

"Hana doesn't know about this place?" Sayuri asked, looking about. She noticed a duffle bag, as well as an expensive-looking camera and other various photographic accessories.

"No. Nobody does," Gosunkugi said. "Everyone thinks this area is haunted."

"Why is that?" Rin asked.

"Because it's haunted," Daisuke replied.

"Like, literally, actually haunted," Hiroshi added.

"It was haunted," Gosunki corrected them, though Sayuri noticed a note of sadness in his voice. "Now it's just dark and creepy."

"Like someone else I could name..." Yuka muttered under her breath.

"Yuka," Sayuri said sharply.

"It's alright. Everyone thinks I'm creepy," Gosunkugi said. "Even Akane..."

"Look, Gos, we really appreciate the help though," Daisuke said.
"I'm not doing it for you," Gosunkugi replied. "I hated Himura long before any of this started."

"Oh yeah? What did she do to you?" Yuka asked.

"Gos here tried to start his own club," Daisuke said. "Got together the required four members, filled out all the forms, everything. It was supposed to be an Occult Club… though I think the other members were just hoping to play 'Dungeons and Dragons' or something."

"'Vampire the Masquerade,'" Gosunkugi corrected him. "And that doesn't matter. Himura blocked our application then convinced the rugby team to come hang us from the fence by our underwear."

"I think the underwear hanging was their own idea. She just convinced them to run you guys off," Hiroshi said. "Dai and I did some digging; Turns out Himura funneled the funds that would have gone to Gos' club into the Rugby Team and the Rugby Team made sure to keep the pressure on so Gosunkugi and his friends didn't try and reform the club later."

"Apparently she thought the idea was creepy when it came across her desk as Treasurer and decided to shut it down," Daisuke added. "She'd never even met Gos, no grudge or anything. Just didn't like his club idea. Two of the kids transferred out because of the bullying."

"Just in case you're running short of reasons for thinking Himura is an awful person," Yuka muttered.

"So… you work for Nabiki too, Gosunkugi?" Riko asked.

"Not directly," Gosunkugi replied.

"Nabiki sort of lets us handle the details to keep Gos out of Himura's crosshairs," Hiroshi said.

"Gos' big advantage is that no one bothers to take notice of him," Daisuke added. "Not even Hana. Means we can still get intel even when the eyes are all on the rest of us."

"Speaking of which, if we're all missing it'll be suspicious, so we should get to business quickly," Sayuri said. "We need to get Konatsu alone for a few minutes."

"Maybe we should start with something easier to achieve, like building our own rocket to Mars," Yuka replied dryly.

"I'm serious, Yuka," Sayuri put her hands on her hips. "If Rin is right, and I'm pretty sure she is, Konatsu has been dosed with the same potion that Ranma's parents used on her. Which means Himura has it. So the more we can find out about it, the better."

"Okay, but how!?" Yuka threw up her hands. "I don't know if you noticed, but Konatsu is the new hot thing at school! Pretty much everything with a Y chromosome is hanging all over her and she's just as bad for playing into it as Ranma was! Add into that Mineko hovering over her like a hawk, Umeko looking for an excuse to play the big bad martial artist now that the genuine articles are all absent, and who knows what else Himura has cooked up. There's just no way!"

"I've been thinking about that, actually," Sayuri said. "All together you're right, there's no way. But maybe if we break it down a bit? Umeko has mostly got her mad on for me, so I'm pretty sure that I can draw her off using myself as bait."

"Yeah, and get yourself pounded!" Yuka protested.

"She's smart enough not to do anything that'll leave marks," Sayuri replied. "And, if this works, it'll be worth a few bruises. So that leaves Mineko and the Hentai Horde to divert."

"We've got an angle on Mineko," Daisuke said. "Not all of Hana's agents are as loyal as Himura would like to think, and we've got one willing to help us out."

"Not much, of course, but she's reliable enough that she can whisper a few words into the right ears and be trusted," Hiroshi added. "Himura's team has a practise session today, so we slip rumors about a Talent Scout being present. How much you willing to bet a certain girl with Olympic colors streaked in her hair will be falling over herself to be at practise?"

"I… have an idea for that," Riko said nervously. "But… I'll need Yuka's help and… And you're not going to like it."

"What, is it worse than being a petty nobody's punching bag?" Yuka asked, frowning.

"You're really not gonna like it…" Riko repeated sheepishly.

000

"You're right. I hate this." Yuka said, arms crossed over her chest and face flushed.

Both she and Riko were wearing bunny-girl outfits they'd swiped from the drama club. Why the drama club at a high school had playboy bunny outfits was probably a question best not asked and not made any better by the fact that they had a variety.

"I'm sorry! I couldn't think of anything else!" Riko said. She was wearing a standard black bunny-girl one-piece with white ears and a tail. She had pink hose and black high heels to complete the outfit.

"And I hate that you couldn't think of anything else and I'm strongly considering hating you!" Yuka growled. She was wearing a red two-piece halter and bikini bottom combo that had been the only one that fit her properly, despite her distaste for it. She picked at the fishnet stockings and shuddered. "God, this just leaves nothing to the imagination, does it? Parading all my flaws out in front of the male lechers of the school isn't exactly what I'd call a good plan, Riko!"

"Don't be so hard on her, Yuka," Hiroshi said. "I mean, this plan works for Ranma all the time, right?"

"Ranma is also insanely hot, as I'm sure you've noticed!" Yuka replied. "I can't pull this off!" She gestured at herself in exasperation then huffed and folded her arms. "Well? Come on, Daisuke, I'm waiting! Get it over with! Make some crack about my stick legs or something!"

She glanced at Daisuke. Rather than reply, the boy seemed a bit flushed and was blinking rapidly and swallowing. Perhaps he was even sweating a little.

When he noticed her turning her gaze to him, he looked away quickly, the flush deepening as he clenched his fists. "I-I-I…! Y-you… you look fine! I mean… I mean you look good. As good as Ranma did…" he stammered.

Yuka blinked, feeling suddenly and uncharacteristically self-conscious. She dropped her own gaze and adjusted the halter nervously. "I… y-you think so?"

Hiroshi glanced back and forth between them, eyes widening. "What…? Now!? You're finally doing this now!? Are you kidding me!?

"What?" Daisuke and Yuka replied in unison, confused.

Hiroshi threw his hands in the air. "Arrgh! You two are…! Okay, I can't deal with this. You two are adorable. You'll have like five kids, I'm sure, but we've got a timetable to clear the perverts before Mineko gets suspicious so… keep the bunny suit for private time later or something! We need Yuka outraged and sassy."

"Private time!?" Yuka yelped in outrage.

"Yes! That! Exactly! Be sassy out there," Hiroshi turned her around and pushed her out of the classroom before she could react properly. He then turned to Riko. "Okay, time to go get 'em, Riko."

"A-are you sure I look okay?" Riko asked nervously.

Hiroshi grinned. "I think I said so the last time you wore that, didn't I?" He leaned in and gave her a kiss on the cheek. "Go knock 'em dead, babe."

She smiled, seeming much relieved, and bounced out the door after Yuka.

Daisuke stared after her, mouth hanging open. "What… I don't...?" He looked at Hiroshi then back towards the door. "What?"

"What?" Hiroshi replied.

"What was that!?" Daisuke demanded.

"It was you and Yuka having a breakthrough in your ridiculously tsundere facade and admitting that you find each other attractive," Hiroshi replied matter-of-factly.

"No, not that… what!? I don't…! I mean… What was that with Riko!?" Daisuke demanded.

Hiroshi gave him a confused look. "We've been dating since that movie night thing at the Tendo dojo. Didn't you know?"

"No!"

000

"Mineko?"

Mineko looked up from the sports magazine she had been reading. It was a free period, which she would normally use to go practise, but this week she had other concerns. She had seated herself out of the way to avoid drawing attention while she kept an eye on Konatsu.

The ninja girl was certainly popular among the boys, which had been expected, but she seemed quite able to handle the situation with her usual demure charm, so Mineko had been content to leave her to deal with them in her own way. She could always step in if someone crossed a line.

So she was a bit surprised when one of the girls in the class went out of their way to speak to her. The girl had long dark hair which fell partially obscuring one eye. She was one of those quiet, detached girls who asked odd questions that Mineko recognized as hanging around with Hana. "Yes? What can I do for you?"
"My name is Megumi. I'm an… associate of Hana's," she said in a quiet voice. "She told me… all of us… that we should keep an eye out for things that might be important to the members of the Volleyball team?"

Mineko's eyes narrowed. "Is Ranma up to something? Or Nabiki?" Her eyes flicked to Konatsu, who was still being hounded by the various lovestruck boys in the class. "Kuonji, maybe?"

"Oh… no, nothing like that," Megumi replied. "There's a suspicious man in a suit on the school grounds watching the volleyball team practise. Hana thinks he may be a 'scout' or something?"

"A scout!?" Mineko squeaked. She got up and scuttled quickly over to the window to peer outside at the field. Sure enough, there was someone in dark glasses and a three piece suit watching the girls on the practise pitch, occasionally scribbling something on a bulky clipboard. "Arrrgh! Why today!?" She glanced back at Konatsu. "I can't leave Konatsu by herself like this, but… She looked back out the window. Is it fair to drag her along to this, just for my own needs? She hesitated, feeling that pang of guilt and uncertainty that had been plaguing her since she had watched Konatsu's transformation. She's getting along with people… even smiling! This is how she should be… right? Just a normal girl.

"I can let your friend know where you went once she's free," Megumi supplied helpfully. "If this is something you need to attend to, I mean."

Mineko glanced back at the window, then back at Konatsu, then made a snap decision. "Yeah. Just… don't let the boys pester her too much. And if anything weird happens, come find me on the practise field, and don't ask too many questions, okay?"

Megumi cocked her head. "Something weird? Like what?"

"Just… anything weird," Mineko replied. She grabbed her bag and moved quickly to the back door of the classroom, sparing Konatsu a last glance before slipping through.

000

Sayuri was watching as Mineko slipped out the back door of the classroom. "So far, so good," she breathed. Now it was her turn.

Outside the front door of the classroom Umeko loitered with a few other girls from the Martial Arts Club. They had been acting as gatekeepers to make sure that any students they didn't feel should be associating with their group got in. Sayuri and the others had been informed, in no uncertain terms, that they were unwelcome. But for the plan to work, they needed to abandon their post.

She took a deep breath to steel herself, stepped out around the corner and strode forward. She headed towards the classroom door and moved to open it and go inside.

A hand grasped her wrist roughly as she reached for the handle.

"And just where do you think you're going?" Umeko asked, leaning in close and glaring at her.

"I left my pencil case at my desk," Sayuri said nonchalantly, pulling her wrist away.

"Get it next period then! We're using this room now. Just piss off," Umeko retorted.

"The room is for free study. Anyone can use it," Sayuri replied.

Sayuri raised an eyebrow. "So… answer a question for me… how much does Himura pay you to be her bitch, anyway? Or is it just some kind of weird fetish thing for you? Got a bit of a 'bottom' thing going on?"

Umeko reached out and grabbed the front of Sayuri's blouse. "Now look here, you useless, stuck up little dropout…"

"You think I'm afraid of you just because Ranma and Akane aren't here?" Sayuri asked, lowering her voice. "You're not a martial artist. You're a poser who does the same Tai Chi moves my Grandma does and speeds them up to impress the rubes."

She saw Umeko's pupils dilate and, in her peripheral vision, she could see the fist cock back. She knew she had a fraction of a second to shift the venue.

All it took was a smile.

Umeko's eyes widened and she hesitated. Then they narrowed as realization dawned. "Why, you little bitch…" She lowered her fist.

"Too bad there's no place on the school grounds that your boss hasn't got eyes," Sayuri inclined her chin towards one of the hallway cameras that were a leftover from Principal Kuno's constant attempts to catch Ranma out of uniform. "But… you could always do it anyway. I'm sure she wouldn't toss you in the trash like she did Tomoko."

Umeko grit her teeth. "You're all talk now, aren'tcha? Wouldn't talk so big without some technicality to hide behind, would you?"

Gotcha. Sayuri didn't bother to hide the smug look. After all, it simply fed the fire at this point. "Got some spot where your Big Sister can't babysit you? I'm game if you are."

000

Rin watched Sayuri walk away with Umeko and her small gang of thugs. She didn't like the idea of Sayuri heading off alone with them and she hoped that Sayuri knew what she was doing.

She took a deep breath. Dad always said the time to doubt your Team Captain ISN'T in the middle of a game. Gotta focus on my part.

She glanced at Daisuke next to her, who was watching intently. He waited until Sayuri and the group of bullies were well around the corner before he turned to her.

"Alright, wait until the classroom clears," Daisuke told her. "Stay out of sight until then."

"O-okay," Rin said nervously. "Um… Mr. Yuka's Boyfriend-san?"

Daisuke paused, a pained expression crossing his face. He took a breath. "Yes, Rin?"

"W-what if I can't convince Konatsu to talk to us?" Rin fidgeted nervously. "What if I mess this up?"

He gave her a confident grin and a thumbs up. "You'll do fine. She's probably not gonna agree to come meet with us or suddenly see that she's been messed with. That's fine. Just find out what you can. Listen and remember everything she says so we can pick through it later. Just keep her talking.
as long as possible, okay?"

"I-I'll try. But I wish you had gotten someone else to do this…" Rin mumbled.

"Hey… you're the person that actually got Mousse to say ten words in a row that didn't include 'Die, Saotome!' or 'Shampoo, I love you!'. I'm pretty sure you're the best one for this job." Daisuke gave her a wink then stood and made for the classroom. He threw open the door and sauntered toward the the far window to peer out across the athletic fields.

With an exaggerated pause for dramatic effect, he cried out, "Hey look! There are two cute girls out there wearing skimpy bunnygirl costumes!"

The collective snap of male heads turning to see was like the crack of a whip, followed by a deep rumble… the sound of dozens of feet shuffling and stomping. Daisuke ducked back and flattened himself against the wall as both doors were suddenly slammed aside and a herd of Furinkan's most hormonal male students practically climbed over each other to get out, pelting down the hallways towards the exits.

As he darted out in pursuit, Daisuke gave her a final thumbs up charged off after the crowd.

Rin took a deep breath, squared her shoulders and walked nervously up to the classroom door. She stepped inside and slid the panel closed behind her.

Konatsu was still seated at her desk in the hastily emptied classroom, flipping through her textbook. She even didn't look up as Rin came in.

"Ms. Konatsu?" Rin said timidly as she stepped forward.

Konatsu still didn't look up. "If you've come to admonish or interrogate me on behalf of Ukyou Kuonji or the others…"

"N-no!" Rin said quickly. She hurried over to the empty desk next to Konatsu's and slipped into the chair. "I-I just…"

Konatsu raised her head and fixed her with an icy glare. "I have spent most of my life being used and abused by my family, and then used and abused by my supposed 'saviors'. I don't feel the need to account for my actions to either."

"I-I'm not either of those things, Ms. Konatsu…" Rin said sheepishly. "I'm… I'm just the girl who comes in sometimes for a deluxe okonomiyaki, remember?"

Konatsu's expression flickered slightly. "And to talk about Mousse or Ranma Saotome. They put you up to this because they knew I wouldn't speak with them."

"I-I'm not either of those things, Ms. Konatsu…" Rin said sheepishly. "I'm… I'm just the girl who comes in sometimes for a deluxe okonomiyaki, remember?"

Konatsu regarded her a moment. Her expression thawed, softening a bit. She sighed and turned back to her textbook. "You've been misled about Ms. Himura. She is not the ogress that Ranma or Ukyou make her out to be."

"She isn't?" Rin asked. "I-I mean, I've heard things, but that isn't why…"

"She helped me. She and Mineko. When no one else did." Konatsu turned to glare at her again but her expression softened almost immediately. "My parents were retainers to the Tanaka family for a very long time. Generations. All true shinobi need a lord to serve and Oda Tanaka was ours. I… forgot this during my long time with my stepmother and stepsisters. They had no interest in upholding our clan's obligations." Konatsu gripped the edges of the textbook. "And then… Ukyou seemed to wish to take the role of lord for herself. She took advantage of my feelings for her…"

After a moment she relaxed slightly. "I think I would still be there if it weren't for Mineko."

"You were friends with Ms. Mineko?" Rin asked. "I guess… she must have come by at different times than I did. I never saw her there."

"She often came by during the lunch rush, when you and the others were at school," Konatsu said. "She and I talked a lot. As much or more than you and I did, though I opened up to her more." She sat back in her chair. "I know you want to understand why I left, but… This is not easy for me. There are… a lot of emotions to process, and it is sometimes difficult for me to maintain my composure."

"Why?" Rin asked. "I mean… not 'why is it hard', that's obvious, but… why maintain your composure?" She cocked her head. "That's part of what worried me. If… If I had to uproot my life like you have I'd be bawling my eyes out!"

Konatsu took a deep breath and straightened herself. "A shinobi must conduct herself with a certain decorum. I still have duties… long neglected duties in fact." She glanced at Rin. "Duties that will likely put me at odds with your friends from the dojo, so long as they insist on their unjust war against Ms. Himura."

"But… Ms. Himura was the one to challenge Senpai…" Rin said, confused.

"Because it was the only way to stop the predations of a dangerously perverse individual!" Konatsu said. "Ranma Saotome's life is full of unhealthy relationships, manipulation and exploitation of those weaker than him. Perhaps… perhaps that is what led Ms. Ukyou to such things, but… but she made her own choices with that. I can no longer, in good conscience, be part of such… depraved behaviour." She leaned forward and put a hand on Rin's shoulder. "Doesn't it bother you? Their 'harem'? That they all worship the ground Ranma walks on, or how they twist their own desires to be more pleasing to him? Even resorting to… to…" Konatsu shuddered, "no, nevermind. I am speaking ill of those who cannot speak for themselves. But… Rin… You should rethink who you associate with."

Rin was silent for a moment. She looked down at the ground. Then, finally she spoke.

"Ms. Himura's father knew my Dad," she said quietly. "They were both hoping to get into Olympic Volleyball. Her Dad inspired her to play the game, same as mine did for me. Except her Dad got caught cheating, so he didn't get to go. Himura knows all of that… but she still blames my Dad and blames me. Just because my Dad got to go, and hers didn't."

She looked up, looking Konatsu in the eyes. "I don't know who she is around you. I don't know what she's like to Ranma, or to Nabiki, or Mineko or anyone else. But I know what she's like to me. I've tried to ignore it. I've tried to pretend it wasn't happening. I've tried to be friends and I've tried to prove myself by working hard. But nothing works because of something that happened before I was even born. Who I am doesn't matter to her. That's who Himura Tanaka is to me. Whatever I think about Senpai or her relationships, who I am at least always mattered to her."

Konatsu narrowed her eyes. "Who I was didn't! Ukyou was always trying to make me dress and act like a boy. Like her."

Rin was silent for another moment. "I don't… I don't know how to tell you this…" Rin took a deep breath. "A-and I don't think you'd believe me if I did, so I won't even try. All I can say is that If Ukyou-senpai made you feel that way, I'm sorry. B-but… She isn't the one who changed you. Ask Mineko about the potion."

Konatsu blinked. "What potion?"

"Just ask her. About the potion made from Jusenkyo water," Rin said.

"Why would Mineko know anything about a potion made from Jusenkyo? She's never even been to China," Konatsu said. She held up a hand. "Yes, yes, I'll ask her. On the condition that you don't discuss any of this with Ukyou or Ranma. Or with anyone likely to relay it to them."

Rin nodded.

"I don't want any contact with them, nor do I want them finding me and trying to convince me of the errors of my ways. I am not angry with you, Rin, but you are very close to people with whom I am angry. I would ask you allow me to deal with it."

"I-I will," Rin said. "I promise not to talk to them about anything we talk about, unless you tell me differently. But… can we still talk sometimes? I know Mineko doesn't like me, and she's your best friend, so…" She pulled out her phone and slid it forward, already on the screen to add a contact.

Konatsu hesitated, then reached into her pocket and drew out a brand new candy red flip phone. "You… will have to do it for me. I still don't understand such modern devices." She handed the phone over to Rin. "How did you know I would even have one?"

"I… just kind of assumed?" Rin said sheepishly, as she took both phones and swapped numbers with practised ease. "Even Senpai has one. You didn't have one before?"

"Mineko insisted," Konatsu took the phone back. "Ms. Himura is very kindly paying for it. She calls me on occasion to check up on me, which is very thoughtful, given her busy schedule. She has already used it to give me several tasks as her family retainer."

"Retainer? You work for her now?" Rin asked.

"I always have, I just wasn't aware of it. As I said, family obligations. I have much work to do to repair the stain on my family's honor for being unaware of my obligations for so long." Konatsu gave Rin a reassuring smile. "Do not fret. Whatever you fear, they have been small tasks - fetching a drink or delivering a package. They are things to make me feel useful, I believe. Nothing of the nefarious sort you and your friends would imagine."

Rin shrugged. "I don't really imagine Himura doing things. I only know what she has done." She glanced out the window, seeing Daisuke gesturing in her direction. Riko and Yuka were sprinting across the field, being closely pursued by a large crowd of boys. "I… should get going. I think my friends need me." She put her hand on Konatsu's. "Thank you for being willing to talk, Ms. Konatsu. I'll keep my word, I promise."

Konatsu nodded. "I know I will never change the minds of most of your friends… but I have some hope I can show you at least that Himura and the others are not so bad."
Rin sighed. "I'll... try to keep an open mind."

"This was a terrible idea!" Riko panted as they ran, nearly sobbing as they did their best to keep ahead of the horde. Her arms were crossed over her chest in an effort to avoid having anything flop out, as the bunny-suit did not make a particularly effective sports bra.

"This was your idea!" Yuka shot back, sprinting alongside her. Part of her was silently resenting the fact that she wasn't having any issues with bouncing out of her equally skimpy outfit. The decision not to wear the high heels that came with the costumes and to stick with their regular school shoes was turning out to have been a wise one, however.

"Yes, I know! Why didn't you stop me!" Riko wailed.

They had severely underestimated just how starved the local population had gotten for a spectacle. With Akane's daily horde battles done and as the challenges and chaos around Ranma receded as Ranma worked out the issues with fiancées and friends. Even the usual melange of antagonists was absent or otherwise occupied, so reports of a couple of girls in skimpy bunny costumes had drawn a far larger crowd than expected and things had gotten swiftly out of hand.

"We have to focus on getting away!" Yuka gasped. "If they get a clear look at our faces, our reputations are done!"

"I... I can't!" Riko wheezed as she started to fall behind. "I can't keep on running!"

Yuka looked over her shoulder and realized that their pursuers were far closer than she had expected. Apparently a lot of the Hentai Horde had been keeping in shape despite no longer pursuing Akane. She whimpered and for one distracted moment she didn't look where she was going.

So when she bumped into someone, she was convinced that they had caught her. She swung without thinking, crying out as she threw a blind punch.

Her fist was caught easily. She blinked as the fear induced fog cleared a bit and she found herself looking at a familiar white-robed figure. "Mousse!"

Mousse frowned and adjusted his glasses. "Ranma, why did you change your hair color?" His eyes flicked down to the top of her bustier. "Oh, I beg your pardon. You're not Ranma." He released her fist.

Yuka resisted the powerful urge to throw another punch. Pragmatism took over. "Mousse, save us!" she cried and grabbed Riko to drag her behind the Chinese martial artist.

"Wha...? I'm really just here to see Rin..." Mousse said, confused, then looked up and saw the approaching horde. "Oh. I see."

"Hey! You! Glasses-nerd!" one of the jocks from the Rugby team stomped up to Mousse. He was nearly a head taller than the already tall Chinese boy, and glared down at him, snorting like a bull. "We see those girls behind you. Outta the way!"

Mousse frowned. "Out of the way? Why? Do you have some business with my friends?"

The jock snorted. Most of the rest of the team was crowding up behind him, seeing an opportunity for a fight. Those of the crowd who were smarter, or who at least had longer memories and remembered Mousse's previous fights on campus were backing away with varying degrees of haste.

"You? Friends with a coupla cute girls like that? Nah." He chuckled and put his hand on Mousse’s shoulder with the intent to shove him away. "Now, out of the way. Your betters need to introduce…"

SNIKT

The Jock didn't get any further as there were now three razor-sharp claws being held just beneath his chin. He yelped and threw himself backwards, away from Mousse.

"What the hell are you doing, you freak!?!" he screeched in a voice that was a few octaves too high.

Mousse glared at him, then regarded the claws. He sighed and shook his head. "No, you're right. Rin would be disappointed in me." With a snap, the blades were gone, disappearing back into his sleeve.

Seeing that he was rapidly losing face, and needing to distract from the slight puddle he had made, the Jock bounced to his feet. "Y-you're gonna pay for that, beanpole!" He cocked his fist back, stepping in to punch Mousse in the oversized spectacles.

"Pole?" Mouse brightened slightly. "Oh, yes, that should be okay." His arm snapped out again and he held up what appeared to be a length of a bo staff, blocked the punch and pushed the jock back before he drew forth the rest of the weapon… which turned out to be a flat headed push broom. "Ah! I was wondering where I had left that."

The rest of the rugby team stared in bewilderment as the Chinese teen pulled the five foot broom from his sleeve, which clearly should never have been able to fit.

Mousse shouldered the broom then glanced back at the girls cowering behind him. "You're Rin's friends, right? Is Rin about? I'll be done with this in a minute."

"Uh… sure?" Yuka replied nervously.

"Excellent." Mousse turned back to the Rugby team. "I believe you were about to make me pay for something?" he said to the lead Jock.

"G-get him!" the jock yelled,

The entire team charged as one, moving to form a blocking line to try and bear him down with sheer weight and numbers.

Mousse twirled the large broom as though it were light as a feather, using it to poke a few in the gut or groin, or to clock a couple of others upside the head with the flat broom head. And always, he kept the broom spinning. The solid, meaty thwacks that signalled contact between wood, bone and flesh rang out repeatedly as the members of the rugby team were quickly scattered and sent sprawling.

Before they could recover, Mousse darted into the middle of the group, broom still whirling as he knocked each one back off his feet when they tried to regroup. He was quick to punish any that dared to try and get back into the fight. For the next twenty seconds or so, he was a blur of motion, each step of the dance punctuated with the dull clunk of wood striking a body as a counterpoint to the groans or yelps of pain. When the dust cleared, the entire team was laid flat out on the ground, unable or unwilling to try getting up again.
Mousse shouldered the broom again, looked over the group and sighed. "This may sound a bit hypocritical coming from me, but... you guys should really learn to tell when a girl isn't interested."

Despite it being quite obviously impossible, he tucked the broom back into his sleeve and walked back over to Yuka and Riko. "Are you two all right?"

Yuka crossed her arms self-consciously over her chest. "Yes, uh... thank you, Mousse. I'm kind of surprised that you came to our rescue, honestly..."

"It is considered a point of honor for martial artists to aid those in need," Mousse replied. "Besides, you are Rin's friends, and I also know something about being bullied. Any one of those factors alone would have been more than enough reason."

"Ah... yeah... well... it's just... I was kind of a jerk last time you saw me..." Yuka said awkwardly. "I... guess I owe you an apology."

Mousse cocked his head then nodded slightly. "Accepted. Rin explained the situation to me afterwards. I can understand your perception of me as... 'hostile'. I also accept that I bear responsibility for Young Mi's dangerous actions here."

"Speaking of which... I thought you were going to steer clear of the school to avoid leading her here?" Yuka said. "Not that I don't appreciate the save!" she added quickly.

"Since Young Mi knows Shampoo attends this school, I felt it was necessary to keep an eye on it. Though I have tried to do so discreetly so as to avoid drawing her here with my presence. Turning into a duck has advantages," Mousse said. "Besides, it makes it easier to walk Rin home."

"You mean you've been walking Rin home every day!?" Yuka yelped.

Mousse nodded and folded his hands into his sleeves. "Yes. Rin is very insightful. She and I have talked about a number of things. She's helped me understand Japanese culture and the mindsets of those around me much more clearly, and even pointed out a few ways that I might better approach my own... issues." He sighed. "I would try to return the favor, but... interpersonal relationships aren't my strong suit - much less those dealing with multiple elder siblings, which seems to provide the bulk of the strife in Rin's life."

"So you have no clue about what's going on right now?" Riko asked nervously.

"No. Why? What trouble has Ranma Saotome gotten into this time?" Mousse asked.

Yuka grabbed his hand and started dragging him towards the school. "Oh you have no idea! We'll get Sayuri to explain things to you. She's got the best handle on what's going on."

"Where is Sayuri?" Riko asked, following behind.

"I'm sure she's fine," Yuka replied. "Sayuri's pretty level-headed. I don't think she'd get herself into a situation she didn't know how to get out of."

As Sayuri hit the concrete floor of the equipment room for the third time, she realized she had no idea how to get out of this situation.

She coughed in an attempt to get her bruised diaphragm to draw in air again. Umeko had been focusing a lot on body blows and, while Sayuri had already retched up most of her breakfast, it was clear Umeko wasn't satisfied yet.

"Get up, bitch," Umeko sneered as she paced a few feet away, always between Sayuri and the door. "No… no, on second thought? Stay down. On the floor, at my feet, where you belong!"

Sayuri groaned and forced herself to her hands and knees, raising her head to glare at Umeko as she got slowly to her feet.

Umeko growled softly and cracked her knuckles. "Okay then…"

The roundhouse kick was surprisingly fast, though not nearly as fast as Ranma or one of the other high-end martial artists. Sayuri managed to react fast enough to twist away from it, but it still clipped the side of her head and sent her sprawling again.

"Umeko! You're not supposed to leave marks!" one of the other girls said in a worried tone.

"She came at me first. You all saw it," Umeko replied, taking a step towards Sayuri. "I'm sick of her stuck-up attitude! Trying to sneak in and take everything we spent three years building, after she didn't have what it took to stick with it! She deserves to lose a few teeth for that at least. Himura will understand."

Sayuri felt an odd sensation, deep in her gut. She knew, in a detached sort of way, that she should be afraid - but she wasn't. Not really. She was angry. A seething storm raged inside her - it kept pushing her - pushing her to get up again each time Umeko knocked her down. But at its center was also a calm, cool core, like the eye of a hurricane. She wasn't beaten yet. With an icy, crystalline certainty, she knew what she needed to do, even if she wasn't sure yet how to do it.

Her hand landed on something smooth, round and rubbery. A volleyball. For a moment she considered it ironic, but this was where the volleyball team equipment was kept. It seemed the other teams had been pushed to other storage rooms entirely.

Still, the ball sparked something. A dim memory. Something that had happened during a game. She could feel the ball, feel that spiral of white hot anger and icy calm flow into it, swirl and mix, start to spin. She had never been clear what was happening before, but the haze of pain and the dizziness from the kick to her head had left her feeling somewhat detached, and that oddly objective viewpoint made it easier to see. Slowly she pushed herself up, while at the same time she experimentally fed the storm inside the ball. She could feel it start to vibrate in her hand as it began to twist and quiver like there was a gyroscope inside of it.

"Still not staying down, huh?" Umeko growled. "I was gonna be content just to kick you around a bit, but if you're still not gonna learn…"

Sayuri turned. She recognized Umeko as the source of her anger, at least for now, and she could feel the ball start to pull. She didn't care anymore about mitigating things, or surviving until Umeko got tired, or finding a way to escape. She just wanted the girl to shut up. She flung the ball at the martial artist as she turned.

It wasn't the best throw. It didn't even look like it would have hit, and even if it had, it was a volleyball, and she was no Rin. In the normal world, where normal people lived, the ball would hit the wall behind Umeko to her left. The girl would become enraged and she and her cronies would descend on Sayuri and give her the beating they had been promising.

But this was Nerima.
As soon as the ball left her fingers, Sayuri knew something was off. She could still feel it, as though dozens of little threads were connecting it to her fingertips. It was also starting to spin, accelerating as it left her hand. She was fairly certain that violated several laws of physics. It was still off course, but she could feel the slight tug at her fingers, and felt like maybe, somehow, she could change that. She closed her hand and pulled back sharply.

The threads snapped. What had already been a rapid spin became absurdly so, actually causing the ball to flatten slightly and bulge out in the middle as the forces within it were unleashed. It also changed course at the last moment, redirected by that final tug.

The ball slammed into Umeko's side with enough force to throw her all the way across the room where she crashed into several racks loaded with equipment. Because that's what happened in Nerima.

Everyone stared, dumbfounded, Sayuri included.

The odd, calm detachment had evaporated now, replaced with a building sense of panic. What the hell did I just do!? she wondered. Umeko was coughing and struggling to get her wind back while two of her cronies knelt next to her to help disentangle her from the piles of netting and stands.

While they were distracted, Sayuri picked up two more volleyballs. That 'bottled storm' feeling might be gone, but she gambled that her tormentors didn't know that. "Okay, who's next?" she snarled, though a little wheezily owing to the beating she had taken. She held up the volleyballs in what she hoped was a menacing fashion.

The remaining thugs eyed her nervously, then retreated towards Umeko to heft her up. The blow from the ball had been enough to knock the sense out of the wannabe martial artist and her head was lolling to the side as they shouldered her arms and carried her out of the room. The last one out turned back and, somewhat nervously, said, "Himura will hear of this!" then she beat a hasty retreat before any divine volleyball retribution could be delivered.

Sayuri dropped the volleyballs and leaned heavily against the wall, panting both from the exertion and from relief. She reached into her pocket, pulled out her phone and flipped it open to check on something. She closed it again and grinned to herself. "Yeah… You bet she will," she muttered.

000

"The Joketsuzoku INVADED!?" Mousse yelped incredulously. His glasses were pushed up on his forehead and his eyes were wide and frightened.

"Yeah… They're after Ranma, though they've gone after Akane, Ukyou and Shampoo too," Yuka said. They had retreated to Gosunkugi's little hidey hole and were still waiting for Sayuri to return, so she had taken it upon herself to give Mousse the rundown. "Cologne negotiated some kind of cease-fire, but they're all holed up at the Tendo Dojo."

"Umm… Not all of them..." Riko said sheepishly. "Shampoo is still kinda… sorta… missing…"

"And all we don't know where Ranma or Ryouga are. Just that they're probably connected to that big explosion," Yuka added.

Mousse slumped back in his seat. His eyes looked haunted. "What could have possessed the Elders to do such a thing?"

"We… were kinda hoping you could tell us?" Riko asked.
"I have not had contact with the village in a long time," Mousse said. "I am an exile, after all."

"A-are you going to be okay?" Rin asked nervously. She sat down next to him and put a hand on his arm.

Mousse shook his head. "I am a Joketsuzoku male who practises martial arts. It is a violation of our laws. This is fine so long as I stay out of Joketsuzoku territory, but… you are sure Khu Long used the term 'Contested Ground'?"

"Pretty sure, yeah," Yuka replied.

Mousse took a deep, shaking breath. "Then… they consider this territory annexed, or in the process of it. Which means if I am found here, they will kill me. Or worse." He folded his hands in his lap.

"Kill you?!" Yuka yelped. "Isn't that a little extreme?! I mean, I thought they wanted strong male martial artists!"

"They want strong Outsider male martial artists," Mousse replied. "Inbreeding is a problem which we must constantly combat and adding worthy outsiders is the preferred method. But they see no value in a Joketsuzoku-born male who learns martial arts. It is a distraction from our proper duties as healers, caregivers, husbands and fathers and wasted effort that could have been put towards training a woman."

"I always sorta figured Ranma was gonna go back there to be a king or something, the way Shampoo fawned over him," Yuka muttered.

"Far from it," Mousse said. "There are… allowances given for their lack of knowledge about Joketsuzoku laws and customs, but Ranma would be expected to learn our customs and assimilate eventually. He would have been tasked with passing on his martial arts skills to a new generation of his daughters, but he would not be allowed to fight as a warrior himself. Though… I suspect both Shampoo and Khu Long would bend the rules for him quite a bit." He paused a moment, considering. "I wonder if that's what sparked this? Elder Khu Long was always considered more progressive than the Council liked, especially when it came to the matter of male's rights or acceptance of Outsider women. It is possible they feared she would use the addition of a powerful male warrior to the village as a rallying point."

"So instead they want to get Ranma and make him into a good, meek little Amazon man," Yuka muttered.

"Except… he isn't a man..." a voice said from the door. They all looked up to see a very battered-looking Sayuri leaning heavily against the door frame.

"Sayuri!" Yuka reacted first, yelping her friend's name and rushing to her side to support her. "Oh, holy crap… What did she do to you!?"

"She… beat the hell out of me… What did you expect?" Sayuri replied. She chuckled then winced and grabbed her side. "Ow… don't do that… laughing bad…"

Yuka lifted the other girl's shirt, seeing the redness of her abdomen, and the ugly yellow and purple bruising already starting to rise. "Ooookay, that's enough of that, we're going to go see the nurse!"

"No!" Sayuri said sharply. "Umeko's fangirls already… nnnh… carried her off in that direction. Probably best I steered clear for a bit."

"Carried her off? Why? Did you get a lucky hit in or something?" Yuka asked.
"Sayuri, you know there's a no fighting rule!" Riko groused. "If you hit her and her cronies vouch for it, Himura will kick you out of the team!"

Sayuri smirked. "Don't worry… got it covered, trust me," She looked up and blinked. "Oh… hi, Mousse." She let Yuka guide her over to a chair and eased herself down into it.

"I think your friends are correct, you should see a healer," Mousse replied, lowering his glasses to get a better look.

"I'll go see Doc Tofu after school. He gives a discount for martial arts related injuries, right?" Sayuri joked. She winced a bit, holding her side.

Mousse frowned. "What did you mean, 'Ranma isn't a man'?"

"I… uhh… I was saving that part of last," Yuka said. "See, we were expecting the High School Sports Commission to ban Ranma from playing because… well, regardless of how he looks, he's a guy, right? They'd check his records and find out he's a boy."

"Except that didn't happen," Sayuri added.

"Yeah… so we… Me, Daisuke and Hiroshi… snuck into the government records building with Nabiki's help and did some research. Turns out Ranma has two sets of birth records. One for a boy, one for a girl. One is fake," Yuka continued.

"We didn't know which one until Himura dropped the other half on Ranma herself… herself… Ranmaself?" Daisuke said, earning an annoyed glare from Yuka. "Some kinda old chinese potion using Jusenkyo water that used to belong to one Genma Saotome before he hawked it… after returning to China from a 14 year long training trip with his 'son'."

Mousse pushed his glasses back up, eyes widening. "Do you mean to say…?"

"You get the recipe for one Ranma Saotome," Yuka finished. "Take two helpings of insane parents, one isolated and confused girl, stir for fourteen years on a training journey, mix in Jusenkyo water and a whole mess of mind-altering drugs, add psychological trauma to taste."

"Yuka, that's pretty crass even for you," Sayuri admonished her.

"Ranma Saotome is female by birth?" Mousse said. His eyes flicked back and forth as he processed the new information. "Khu Long… did she know?"

"She said she suspected," Sayuri said. "She's at the Tendo Dojo now if you want to ask her."

"If she suspected… Then everything she's done so far with regards to Ranma makes so much more sense!" Mousse replied. "She could have overpowered him, drugged him and dragged him back to China at any time; But if he was, in reality, a female then the marriage law wouldn't apply and the Kiss of Death would take effect. Ranma would be killed on the spot and Shampoo would have been dishonored twice over for falling for it, extenuating circumstances or not. But by training Ranma and indoctrinating her, she could make a case for the Kiss of Sisterhood, and…"

He slumped back in his chair, massaging his temples. "That sneaky old mummy!"

"I'm surprised your first reaction wasn't to realize that the marriage between Ranma and Shampoo is effectively null and void," Yuka commented dryly.

Mousse blinked, then glanced at Rin. His eyes fell. "That… might have been my reaction until the recent past. But… I am of the opinion it would make no difference. Not as far as Shampoo's feelings are concerned, anyway." He looked up. "Speaking of… you said she was missing?"

"Cologne thinks the other Amazons took her hostage. They were trying to capture Akane and Ukyou too," Sayuri replied.

"That doesn't make sense. If they have Shampoo they could force Khu Long to surrender to them as well." Mousse rubbed his chin. "I need to find her."

"Woah, woah, woah!" Yuka said. "Didn't you just say the Amazons would kill you if they caught you?"

"Yeah, they're already on the lookout for martial artists while they're trying to catch Ranma. They'd spot you," Hiroshi said.

"If I was human at the time," Mousse gave them a confident smile. "I doubt any of them can fly, though."

"They know about your curse," Sayuri pointed out. "You should still be careful."

"I know my people," Mousse said gruffly. Then he paused. "I… thank you for your concern. I will try."

"Mu Tsu," Rin said. She wasn't able to meet his eyes, looking away at the floor instead. "I-I know that you have to do this… b-but… but…"

"I'll come back," Mousse said. "I'll still come by the school every day to check on you."

Everyone else in the room exchanged a glance.

"Y'know… I should be getting back to class…" Sayuri said, standing up stiffly.

"And we… uh… need to carry her to class," Yuka said as she and Riko stood.

"We've… uhh… we've got… ummm… a thing," Daisuke said.

"Yeah, a thing," Hiroshi added. "And so do you, Gos."

"W-wait, what thing? I don't have a thing!" Gosunkugi, who had been silent in the corner so far started, looking around nervously.

"Yeah, you've definitely got a thing," Daisuke said, hooking Gosunkugi's arm. "Come on."

"No, wait! I swear I don't have a thing! I gave my thing to the bullies last week!" Gosunkugi said in a panicked voice.

"Gos, not that… wait, what thing are you talking about?" Hiroshi asked, then hooked Gosunkugi's other arm. "Nevermind, let's just go."

"N-no! You don't have to…!" Rin looked around in a panic, but everyone was slipping out of the little room and heading back down the dark corridor. "It's not… It's not…" she trailed off as Riko gave her a wink and closed the door. "like that…" She sighed, letting her hand fall to her lap as she looked at the floor.
"Your friends are strange," Mousse commented. "Nice… but strange."

Sayuri wasn't shocked when the call came over the PA for her to report to the Vice-Principal's Office. The whole class was hushed. The bruise on her temple as already coming in nicely, so they knew something was up. Yuka stood to go with her, but Sayuri waved her down.

She walked down the hallway, her heels clicking on the floor, echoing almost unbearably loudly. Each classroom she passed seemed quiet. The walk seemed far longer than she remembered it being.

She raised her hand to knock at the door, but before she could a voice from within called out, "Come in."

She opened the door and stepped inside. Unlike Principal Kuno's Hawaiian-theme fantasy, the Vice Principal's office was utilitarian and relatively professional (Which made sense as the man functionally had all the responsibility for the day-to-day running of the school, just without the authority). However, the balding, middle aged man was nowhere to be seen. Instead, Himura was sitting behind his desk, with Umeko standing next to it, arms crossed. Umeko looked rather battered, her face covered in bruises, scrapes and contusions, like she had… well, exactly like she had been thrown bodily into an equipment rack. Behind the desk and to Himura's right was a girl Sayuri didn't recognize, with long green hair tied back in a ponytail and a severe expression.

"So you're Vice Principal now too?" Sayuri asked, raising an eyebrow.

"Vice-Principal Chinen and I agreed that, as acting Student council President and Captain of the volleyball Team, I should handle this myself and with his blessing." Himura said with her typical empty smile. "I understand there was an… 'altercation' between you and Umeko. Is this true?"

"I won't deny that there was an altercation, no," Sayuri said, brushing her hair back from her forehead casually.

"I see. And you do remember the rule about such things, correct?" Himura asked.

"I remember a provision about being able to defend yourself if attacked," Sayuri replied.

"You attacked me!" Umeko said, pointing to her own face. "D'ya think I did this to myself?!

Sayuri raised an eyebrow. "So you're suggesting someone with no training beat up a martial artist with… what, a volleyball?"

"That's exactly what you did, don't play games!" Umeko shouted. "Don't think you can lie your way out of this one, Sayuri!"

"Well, it seems we're at an impasse," Himura said. "Each of you claims that the other was the instigator, which leaves the decision in my hands." Himura leaned forward, steepling her fingers on the desk. "Given the circumstances, I'm inclined…"

"Get up, bitch... No... on second thought? Stay down. On the floor, at my feet, where you belong!"... Okay then."

"Umeko! You're not supposed to leave marks!"

"She came at me first. You all saw it. I'm sick of her stuck-up attitude! Tryin' to sneak in and take everything we spent three years building, after she didn't have what it took to stick with it! She deserves to lose a few teeth for that at least. Himura will understand."

Sayuri tapped the 'stop' on the playback on her phone and gave Himura a questioning look. "Well, Himura? Do you understand, like she said?"

Himura's smile didn't even flicker. In fact, it seemed almost to widen. "Well, well," she said. "Someone has been spending some time with Ms. Tendo, hasn't she?" She sat up straight.
"Anyway, as I was about to say, given the circumstances, I'm inclined to believe your story, Ms. Kamei."

"WHAT!?" Umeko whirled, staring at Himura with shocked disbelief.

Himura leaned back in her chair and raised an eyebrow at Umeko. "Umeko… Umeko, Umeko, Umeko… You honestly can't tell me that you're surprised? After putting me in this position?"

"Putting you…!?" Umeko croaked.

Himura stood up smoothly, linked her fingers and stretched her arms over her head.
"Ahhh… Umeko… you've been talking about doing this to Ms. Kamei since that little skit they did during the school barbecue! There are plenty of witnesses and camera footage of you leading Ms. Kamei to that storage room… even without her recording this could rattle confidence in the student council." She sighed and reached out, straightening Umeko's collar. "Umeko, dear… this is not how we do things."

"Like hell…" Umeko muttered under her breath, but Sayuri caught it.

"Now, perhaps if Ms. Kamei is willing to be charitable and put this whole matter behind us…?" Himura asked, turning to Sayuri.

"Oh no. I think I'd prefer to insist the bylaw be upheld," Sayuri replied, shooting Umeko a nasty look.

"Well, then that's that," Himura said with a sigh and a shrug. "I am sorry, Umeko, but you are free to try out again next semester."

"WHAT!?" Umeko howled. "Wha… you can't do this! Himura, I've been with you from the start! You can't!"

Himura's smile dropped. Her voice became dangerous. "Did you honestly think I would protect you this time? Now? Did you think I would accept the risk when I'm so close?" She took a step forward, actually causing Umeko to draw back. "All you needed to do was what you were told, Umeko. You never wanted to work for power and you didn't have to, as long as you stayed inside the lines. But even that was too much for you." She sighed. "I'm disappointed, Umeko. And I'm sorry. I gave you too much too fast maybe. Perhaps a few months of having to do things for yourself will make you more mindful of what you had." She turned and walked back to the desk, sitting down and not sparing her another look. "You may go now."

"I… You can't," Umeko said, her jaw trembling. "You can't! I know stuff, Himura! You can't just throw me away…"

The girl with the green hair was on her in an instant, pinning her up against the wall.

"I'm not throwing you away, Umeko. If I were, we never would have had this conversation," Himura said, sorting the papers on the desk. "In fact, I am going to keep a very close eye on you. You and the things you know. And... I do hope you understand the value in making sure you are the only one who knows those things. Because I know things too, don't forget."

The green haired girl said something in Chinese that made Himura chuckle.

"If the burden of that knowledge becomes too much, Tan Pohn has reminded me that she has a fix for that as well." She finally looked up, giving Umeko a smile. "See that it doesn't. I'll overlook the obvious threats this time. Behave and I might have a way for you to redeem yourself in the future. Now... Tan Pohn, if you would please see her out, I'd like to have a word with Ms. Kamei."

The girl with the green hair frog marched the stunned Umeko out of the office, the door clicking shut behind Sayuri as they left. Sayuri got the feeling that whomever this new girl was, she was someone a lot more dangerous than Umeko. And chances were, Umeko would be dangerous enough with the grudge she'd be nursing over this.

She'd still rather have gone with them.

Himura walked back around the desk and motioned to one of the two chairs in front of it. "Come, Ms. Kamei. Sit."

"Is there something else you need?" Sayuri asked, folding her arms again and staying put.

Himura sighed. "Yes. I need an end to this childishness." For just a moment, the mask dropped, the fake smile faded away and Himura flopped back into the chair looking distressingly ordinary. "Look, Sayuri... Might I call you that? Sayuri... While I admire your fighting spirit - and I do! - at this point? It's misdirected. The challenge is over. Ranma isn't coming back to school and you know it."

"Because you set her up!" Sayuri snarled.

"I didn't dose her with the potion, did I?" Himura asked. "I didn't falsify her birth records. I didn't drag her across half of Asia for fourteen years to avoid her figuring out she wasn't a boy. And I didn't stuff her in a pit full of starving feral cats when she did!" She stabbed the desk with her finger on that last point, making Sayuri jump a little.

Himura took a breath, as if startled by her own vehemence, then settled back in her chair. "No... What I did do is find out about it. I found out about it, and you know what I did? I waited. I waited until Ranma had made friends, spent time as a girl... acclimated to the idea! You know as well as I do that all that supermale ego nonsense was already starting to crumble, thanks to the lot of you."

She leaned back and spun her chair around slowly. "I could have told Ranma about all of this right at the height of his male pride... but I didn't. I waited until Ranma had the kind of connections that would help her survive. I saw an environment that would foster that and I made sure it flourished."

"You stacked the deck against us in volleyball and otherwise didn't do anything," Sayuri replied. "Do you think your bond with Ranma would be nearly as strong if you hadn't struggled? Do you think she would have been as invested in it if it wasn't such a challenge?" Himura replied. She put her feet up on the desk. "I had a father that was a lot like Ranma's. So, believe it or not, I empathized."

"You honestly want me to believe you weren't doing all of this for your own benefit?" Sayuri asked. She walked over and sat down in one of the chairs.

"No, of course not, that would be idiotic," Himura laughed. "But there's room for both, isn't there?
And besides, in the course of all of this, I found a much better prize than some silly contest between me and the local alpha male." Himura swivelled her gaze to Sayuri. "That's why I had already decided to take your side in this. This contest... doesn't suit me anymore. I'd like to wrap it up so I can focus on bigger things, and I think we'd all like to get on with our lives. So... I made a peace offering to get you here, so I can offer you a way out."

"A way out?" Sayuri asked. "You mean, throw Ranma and the others under the bus?"

Himura laughed again. "No, silly girl!" She sat up and put her hands on the desk. "You'd never accept that and we both know it, so that would be a colossal waste, wouldn't it? No, no, this is a way out for all of you. You, Ranma, your friends, Nabiki Tendo... all of them. I'm giving you an opportunity to walk away. And with what I've heard? Your friends have bigger problems."

"Yeah. I'm guessing you're going to claim you had nothing to do with that?" Sayuri asked.

Himura shrugged. "I won't deny I invited them here. The scroll is theirs, after all. But I've got little control over them otherwise. I had some side business with them which is no concern of yours. And I mean that; My business with them is in regards to some contacts I have in China. It won't affect you or your life or the lives of your friends." She leaned forward. "I'm more interested right now in settling our business. So... let me put my cards on the table. If you agree to end the contest... I'm afraid it would have to be a forfeiture on your part, but you're looking at that anyway with how things are... I would be willing to give you the volleyball team captaincy. Your friends would be welcome on the team... Yes, even Ms. Ito, and even Ranma, should she decide to return to us... And my only requirement of any of you would be to do what I suspect you're inclined to do anyway; Play volleyball."

"You're going to give me the volleyball team?" Sayuri asked. "Your volleyball team. The one you were going to use to take a shot at getting into the Olympics?"

"Once the new Student Council elections are done in two weeks, yes, of course." Himura beamed. "I have to maintain some authority around here, after all. But... I find the urgency I originally had for that goal has waned. I've found a much more interesting project. So... in order to pursue it, I am willing to offer you a very generous deal."

"And if I refuse?" Sayuri asked.

Himura shrugged, and the fake smile was back. "Well, you go out on the court again on Wednesday. And I suppose if you're certain your team is ready, you can absolutely do that. But... if they're not? You'll forfeit. You need five players, and you're not allowed substitutions. And then when my team has won two more easy games, your team will lose the challenge anyway. So the real question isn't if you should give up... because you've already lost. The question is if you're willing to put aside your pride, let things be in the past and spare yourself and your friends all the humiliation."

Sayuri sighed and leaned back in the chair. She crossed her arms and closed her eyes. "Let things be in the past', huh?"

"Well, I know there were some rough spots..." Himura replied cheerfully.

"I didn't play a single round of volleyball when I was on the team. Not even in training," Sayuri said. "I carried equipment, I fetched water, I set up and broke down the courts, and I got blamed when someone was having a bad day."

"Well, obviously that will change..." Himura said, her smile starting to fade.
"Do you know the first day you actually remembered my name?" Sayuri asked. "The day I'd had enough and walked out. You had to ask someone what my name was so you could mock me for it. Afterw ards, of course, the rumors about me started flying. Suddenly Umeko hates my guts. I became the girl who quit - who couldn't make the cut - who didn't even try."

Himura sighed. "I… misjudged you."

"No," Sayuri said sharply. "You didn't judge me in the first place. You didn't notice me. Like how many others on your team?" She stood. "Do you know why you deal with me now? Do you know why you even know my name to ask if you can call me by my given name? Because I became a threat." She leaned over the desk. "And if you're wanting to deal with me now? It's because I'm still a threat."

"Is that what you want to be to me, Sayuri?" Himura asked, her voice low and dangerous. "A threat? Because I don't long suffer threats. It isn't a choice between being my enemy or being nothing, you know. I'm offering you a third option. I'm offering you friendship."

Sayuri straightened. "Umeko was your friend," she said, and then turned and walked towards the door. She paused as Himura spoke once more.

"I'll give you some time to reconsider, Sayuri. We can talk after Wednesday's game. You'll see that I'm right," Himura said. "But… that will be your last chance. Think about it."

Sayuri sniffed, opened the door and stepped through it without another backward glance.

000

"The hole in the wall is secure and should be bricked up again by tomorrow morning, Mistress," Sasuke said. "Your Uncle has been contacted and is sending additional servants to assist, but he cautions it will be several days before they arrive."

Kodachi grit her teeth, pacing back and forth on the grass. She was still wearing her green leotard, which was dirtied and a little battered from fending off the Amazons. She tapped the handle of her ribbon on her chin. "Unacceptable."

"I… I beg your pardon, Mistress?" Sasuke said nervously. "Which part? If there is something amiss, I would be happy to see if additional personnel can speed…"

"All of this!" Kodachi whirled on him, glowering. Her eyes flashed with a barely contained fury. The small ninja shrank back timidly in the face of her wrath.

"That these… these foreigners could simply walk onto our lands uncontested, attack my family and those we have taken as wards…!" She clenched her fist. "And that they could do such things with such impunity and walk away…!"

"Peace, dear sister," Tatewaki's voice called out from the doorway. He had changed into a loose robe and sported a few bandages to mark his injuries, as well as several visible bruises, but seemed much better than she had found him. "While I do not dispute these things were outrageous, poor Sasuke does not deserve to be the outlet of your wrath."

Kodachi blinked, then glanced down at the cowering Ninja. She sighed and lowered her ribbon, which she only just realized she had raised to strike. "You… are right brother dear. Sasuke, please forgive me my momentary outburst."
"I… I…” Sasuke's eyes widened as he received what was his first apology in memory from his Mistress. He immediately bowed in a humble grovel. "Y-yes, of course, Mistress! The matter is forgotten!"

Kodachi watched as her brother strode closer. "Do your wounds yet pain you, brother?" she asked. He smiled and shook his head. "Minor aches. I took the least of it, and at that it was little enough to be worthy of no mind now. Yourself?"

"The attack was a feint. They never met us directly. What scrapes and bruises I have are from incaution and haste on my part," Kodachi muttered. "And what of our 'guests'?"

"If you mean Ranma and Ryouga, they are in their room resting. I asked the servants to give them something to help them sleep. I fear both of them were greatly shaken by their experience with the leader of the assault." He smirked a bit. "If you mean our other guests? They are also resting in their rooms… though those accommodations are somewhat more secure and decidedly less comfortable."

"And here I had thought you mad when you had the dungeons put in," Kodachi said, a small smile tugging at her lips.

"I was. That will not make me even slightly reluctant to take advantage of the fruits of that madness should they be useful, however." He sighed, looking out over the pond. "We need to alert the authorities about what happened here. There have been fatalities."

"Unavoidable ones," Kodachi reminded him. "And you know they will do nothing but cordon off Nerima and wait for the matter to play out. Nerima has long been our family's responsibility for a reason, brother. Calling for aid at this early juncture will only discredit us."

Tatewaki sighed. "Perhaps all the more reason to inform them, so they do stay clear." He motioned towards the detached hand still sitting on the grass in the middle of a pool of blood.

Kodachi walked over to it and casually kicked it into the pond. "I have little interest in coddling authorities that refuse to exercise that authority out of fear." She folded her arms, glancing over her shoulder at him. "Ran… Sasuke told me of the Neko-ken, but… Do you suppose this has happened before?"

"I have seen this 'Neko-ken' before," Tatewaki said. "I even intentionally provoked it, if my recollection is right. Ranma shredded my best bokken almost casually. But it was not like this. It was a mindless state… and, for the most part, harmless and instinctual. This… she was in control." His eyes fell to the remaining bloodstains on the grass. "It may have been easier for her if she hadn't been. She is no killer. I know deep in my heart that she is not ever meant to be."

"Agreed," Kodachi said, with an odd note of fierceness in her voice that surprised even herself. She paused a moment, chewing on that protective feeling. Odd... I had for so long waited for my Darling Ranma to be my white knight and save me... And now I am seeking that same role for myself for the abused girl I find exists in his place? She took a breath. Yes. Yes, I suppose that I am. "I will take that burden myself, if needs be."

"I would prefer if no one needs bear that burden," Tatewaki said gruffly, then glanced at the pond. "Any more than it has already been borne, at least."

"So then what do we do?" Kodachi asked. "I doubt they will give up so easily."

"I don't know," Tatewaki replied. "But I think it is long past time that I return to Furinkan High."
Sayuri sighed as she walked towards the gates. They had all agreed to meet there before heading home but, after the meeting with Himura, she knew she was going to be the last one there.

Sure enough, she could see them all standing around waiting for her. It made her feel a little better knowing they were waiting for her. But at the same time, they stuck out terribly.

"So, what happened?" Yuka asked as she came up. "We heard some rumours of a fight? Umeko was pissed when she came out. I thought she was going to start something, but when she saw us, she just kinda hunkered down and went on her way. Don't tell me you actually took her?"

"The didn't give you detention, did they?" Riko asked, looking worried. "Or-or-or… kick you off the volleyball team!?"

"Or suspend her," Hiroshi added.

"Or expel her," Daisuke chimed in.

Sayuri held up a hand, eyes scanning across the group to the person she wanted to hear from first. She fixed her gaze on Rin. "Rin, what did you find out?"

Rin fidgeted, unable to meet her gaze. "Th-that… that she really is a girl now. Ph-physically, I mean."

Sayuri paused, waiting for more. When no more was forthcoming, she prodded. "And?"

Rin whimpered. "A-and… and… I promised not to talk about the other stuff or she won't talk to me ever again!"

Sayuri's shoulders sagged, and she rubbed her eyes. "Rin…"

"Rin, that was the whole point!" Yuka said. "Sayuri got beat up and she might have gotten detention! Or expelled! Daisuke had to skip class to run interference so Riko and I could get away from the Hentai Horde! I had to wear a playboy bunny outfit!"

"I didn't get detention. Or expelled," Sayuri said.

"But… I got her cell phone number," Rin said.

Yuka paused, mouth open as she was ready to launch into another rant. She closed her mouth, a wide grin forming as she clapped her hands. "I take it all back! A little bunnygirl sprint is worth something like that! Hand it over, Rin!"

Rin shook her head. "I-I can't! I promised! She trusts me a little bit, and she might talk to me more, and she might even listen, s-so…"

Yuka's expression soured. She clapped a hand over her eyes. "Rin… She's been brainwashed by Himura. With a magic potion. That changes people's gender. I don't think you're really honor bound to keep any promises. I'm pretty sure we can list this under 'It's for her own good', y'know?"

Sayuri's breath caught a moment as she remembered her conversation with Himura. Doing things for her own good, huh?

"Rin… Do what you feel is best," Sayuri said.
Everyone's eyes snapped to her.

"Are you... feeling okay, boss?" Daisuke asked.

"I'm serious," Sayuri replied. She took a deep breath. "Do you know what Himura called me in to talk about? About how all of this... everything she's done... was for Ranma's own good."

"You can't be serious," Yuka scoffed.

"She was," Sayuri replied. "I think she honestly, truly believes on some level that... that all of this... that tearing apart Ranma's life like this... was for Ranma's 'own good'. Because she found out about the scroll. Because she knew the truth, so that justified all of this."

"You don't think we're like that, though?" Riko asked nervously.

Sayuri shook her head. "I don't want to risk it. Just the thought of thinking the same way she does give me the creeps." She looked at Rin. "Rin... you've usually got a pretty good read on people, so... I'm going to trust you with this. Keep Konatsu talking as much as you can, even if you can't tell us what you're talking about. Just... be careful what you tell her, okay?"

"Shouldn't we ask Nabiki what to do?" Daisuke asked. He held up his hands quickly as Sayuri glared at him. "I mean... I honestly think you're right, both you and Rin, but that's just my gut feeling. Nabiki's usually pretty particular about what she leaves for us to make a call on, and what she wants to know about, and this seems like a Nabiki-call situation."

"Nabiki has her plate full and I don't think she needs to know about Himura screwing with me on top of it all," Sayuri said. "As for Konatsu... we'll tell her tomorrow if we don't find out anything else shareable but for now," she took a breath, "maybe we should keep the Rin angle quiet?"

"I just wanna go on record as stating I hate this plan. But... I've hated most of our plans lately, and you're team captain, so I'll follow your lead," Yuka said. "But that reminds me... what exactly did happen in that meeting? Why aren't you toast?"

Sayuri paused for effect. "Himura kicked Umeko off the team for fighting."

"WHAT?!" the others yelped in unison. Even Rin got in on it this time.

"She's got some new girl. Green hair, Chinese accent. Was across the room before I even saw her move. Neither did Umeko, so I'm guessing Umeko's outlived her value." Sayuri folded her arms, suddenly feeling cold. "She... she offered me a truce. She said that if I would forfeit the rest of the matches that she'd back off... she would even give me the Captaincy of the Volleyball team once the student elections were done. She was... uh... pretty confident that she'd win those."

"What, seriously?" Yuka said.

"Yeah... She seemed pretty serious." Sayuri said. "She seems to want to wrap this whole thing up. She even said you all could play... even Rin... She'd stay out of it as long as she got her forfeit."

"And you believed that?" Yuka asked incredulously.

Sayuri nodded. "I do, actually. If only because it feels like she's... impatient. Like she's found something bigger, better and shinier and wants to move on, so she wants to wrap all this up."

"Wow... I think Himura must be the first person I've met who's managed to get bored with Ranma," Daisuke muttered. "Annoyed, exasperated, grievously injured, sure, but I'd never call..."
him… her… boring."

"Y'know… her being bored with us might be a good thing," Yuka said quietly.

Daisuke turned and gave Yuka an incredulous look. "Not that I exactly enjoy being on Himura's list of people to screw with, but what makes you think being in her dustbin is any better?"

Yuka shrugged. "That's just it… We'd be out. She's done with us and, in my experience, that's your chance to sorta blend back into the background. Whatever she's chasing now, it's got nothing to do with us."

"So you just want to give up?!" Riko demanded.

"No, but I don't wanna get messed up, either!" Yuka shot back. "You know how I and every other 'normal' student gets by, with all these crazy martial artists and ghosts and so on? We're beneath their notice. The bug who gets squashed is the one who buzzes around and annoys the people who squash bugs. Himura? She's the sort who uses a magnifying glass on bugs. If we've got a chance to get our heads back down out of the fire…"

"W-W-What about S-Senpai? Or-or Nabiki-Senpai, or U-Ukyou-senpai, o-or…" Rin started stuttering badly from the emotion as she clenched her fists. "H-H-How can y-you just…!"

"Because I'm scared, okay?!" Yuka shouted, causing the shorter girl to step back in shock. "I'm scared and you all should be too! Whatever is going on is about changing who people are against their will! It's about Yakuza and people's lives being destroyed and people dying! And…" she shook her head, "and I just can't do it anymore, okay?"

"Yuka…" Riko said, taking a step towards her.

"Isn't that what you were saying, Captain?" Yuka said, ignoring Riko and looking Sayuri in the eye. "Isn't that why you brought it up? I mean, we're doomed anyway, right? Ranma is done, and without Ranma, there's no team, so… Let's take the out while we can, right?"

Sayuri dropped her gaze. "I… I don't know." She sighed. "Everything you're saying makes perfect sense, Yuka, but…"

Yuka's expression darkened. "But you needed me to be the bad guy about it, huh?"

Sayuri's head snapped up. "Why'd you bring it up if you're not gonna go for it, huh? Waiting for that first person to cut and run so it'll make it okay for you to give up without it being your fault?" Yuka snapped, crossing her arms.

"Yuka, that's enough," Daisuke barked, startling them both.

They turned to see the brown haired boy was clenching his fists. "You know… I thought you got it, Yuka. I thought you understood. You're talking about us being bugs, well… well this was our shot to stop being bugs for once." He glared at her. "So now bad stuff might happen to you and you're out? You were only playing the game because you figured you'd get something without any risk?" He snorted and shook his head. "Fine. I'll give you until tomorrow, then I'm going to Nabiki with everything. C'mon, Hiro." He motioned to his friend as he jammed his hands in his pockets and started stalking away.

"Dai?" Yuka said, startled out of her anger by his sudden outburst. She reached out towards him, then dropped her arm and clenched her fist.

Hiroshi glanced at his friend's retreating back, then back at Riko. "I'll… uhhhh… I'll call you later, okay Riko?"

When Riko nodded, he jogged after his friend to catch up.

"Yeah… okay… sure. It's all on me again. That's just fine," Yuka muttered, head down. She started walking in the opposite direction.

"Yuka?" Sayuri said.

"It's over, Sayuri. Just… just let it go. Ranma will find a way to take care of herself. She always does," Yuka said as she trudged off.

Sayuri didn't try and stop her. She noticed Riko's apologetic look and nodded for her to go after Yuka. She wanted to go herself, but… she knew that wasn't her place anymore. Not right now.

"I'm not going anywhere, Captain," Rin said once the others were out of earshot.

Sayuri smiled and gave in to the urge to pat her head. "Thank you, Rin. I appreciate that."

"I'm hooome!"

Shampoo jerked awake at the singsong voice. She guiltily realized she had dozed off in her cage after several fruitless hours struggling with her bonds. Her head was still covered, so the best she could do was swivel to follow the sound. She could hear the big cat rumble as it shifted and padded over to greet the ringmaster girl.

"How long you planning to hold Shampoo?" Shampoo asked, sitting up. She hoped she could goad Young Mi to take off the hood again. The girl had been very careful to limit how much information Shampoo could get about her surroundings.

"Oh, my poor sweetling, were you lonely?" Young Mi asked, tittering. "Don't fret. Darling is being quite dutiful, and I haven't had a good opportunity to snatch the little athlete out from under him yet. Tomorrow, maybe."

"You don't need Rin," Shampoo said. "Have Shampoo. All you need to get Mousse's attention. Leave Rin alone." She focused on keeping her tone even, so as not to betray any emotion.

"Oh that will hardly do for what I have in mind, Sweetling." Something rapped against the cage bars, likely the handle of Young Mi's whip. "I want all the people Darling cares about here for this. Besides, my patron has asked me to keep you out of circulation for a while longer, so I'm inclined to take my time and do this properly."

"Fishing for information, my little canary?" Young Mi asked. From the direction of her voice, Shampoo got the impression she was leaning closer. "I'm not inclined to say. Not that it really matters. I've not asked many questions, so honestly I doubt I could provide you anything useful. Discretion is an important skill for someone working for a circus." There was a clatter as the whip handle was dragged along the bars of the cage. "Suffice it to say that all I really know is they are someone who wants you kept in a cage for a while. Someone with an interest in your 'Airen', though there are no shortage of those, are there?" She chuckled.

"Just caged? Not dead?" Shampoo asked.

"They don't appear to care overmuch if I kill you, if you're hoping for that," Young Mi replied. "It simply seems they want you out of the way for a few days at least."

"Out of way for what?" Shampoo demanded. "Young Mi, you cause harm to innocent once before. Airen not part of this, not harm you, not harm Mousse, not block your way. Allow Airen be hurt now?"

Young Mi was silent a moment. "That red haired girl… The one I mistook for you. Her lover… the boy with the Jusenkyo curse… They are well?"

Shampoo opened her mouth to correct her, then shut it again, realizing Young Mi didn't know about Ranma's own curse, and it was probably better if she remained in the dark. Besides, it would be easier to stoke the fires of a guilty conscience if the situation was simpler. Something Shampoo and her Pintou shared was a talent for misdirection. "Have been to hospital couple of times since."

"I… see," Young Mi said, the manic energy draining from her voice. "I… regret what happened. And I mean no ill will towards your Airen. But that matter is between him and his enemies, and I can't let it sway me from my own." She tapped the bars again. "It's a matter of honor. Surely you understand that."

Shampoo winced. She knew full well the lengths someone could go for honor; She had gone to many of them herself. But at the same time… "Doing dishonorable deed not way to uphold honor."

Young Mi was quiet again. "I… suppose we shall see. Come, Samson," were her final words on the matter as her boots clicked against the concrete as she walked away.

000

Himura wasn't surprised to find that the Amazons had turned the flat she had provided them into an impromptu field hospital. Amused, yes, but not surprised.

She had been to the Kuno Estate before, after all.

Tan Pohn and Su Tzu were flanking her. Himura drew a note of satisfaction from their wide-eyed looks when they saw their sisters laid out being tended… and noticed that a number of them were missing. She hid her smugness, however, as they approached the one she had come to speak with.

"Honored Elder…" Tan Pohn choked out, a horrified look on her face.

Lo Shan was sitting on a stool. Her upper body was bare as Amazon healers fussed over her, treating several deep cuts. Her eyes were sunken, and she looked like she had aged significantly in the past day. But most shocking was the sight of her handless stump and the deep crimson of her blood seeping through the bandages the healer was wrapping tightly around it.

"You've come to gloat," Lo Shan said in a flat tone, eyes fixed on Himura.

"I've come to offer medical aid, Honored Elder," Himura replied, carefully keeping her tone and expression neutral. "My grandfather's company has many contacts I can call upon discreetly. If you are in pain, we specialize in painkillers that will not dull your senses. And in Japan there have been many advances in prosthetics…"
"Spare me the patronizing sympathy, child!" Lo Shan cut her off with a snarl. She took a shuddering breath, waving off the healer as she examined the ruin of her arm where her hand had once been. "You knew this would happen."

"I suspected," Himura replied. "Though I did not expect such a dramatic turn of events. If I had, I would have been more strenuous in my warnings."

"No, you would not have," Lo Shan replied with a sigh. "And I would not have listened, and you knew that." She returned her gaze to Himura. Her eyes were hooded, dark circles under their sockets making her look old and tired. "You believe you have learned to anticipate me perfectly."

Because I HAVE, you old bag, Himura thought wryly. "I would not dream of such presumptive arrogance, Honored Elder."

Lo Shan chuckled. "Yes you would. I see it in your eyes. But… My old teacher once adored humiliating me for acting rashly, or out of hubris. I find myself humbled again, this time by circumstance and chance. If you wish to claim credit for that, so be it. Be it chance or clairvoyance beyond your years, you were right." She leaned forward, switching to Japanese. "So, Himura Tanaka… The one who calls Japan her territory… What is your counsel?"

Finally willing to listen? I suppose losing a limb will do that, Himura thought, though she found herself rubbing her own left wrist self-consciously. She forced herself to stop. "I believe direct confrontation right now is a mistake, Honored Elder. Even in her current state, Ranma Saotome cannot be taken by force."

"Anything can be taken by force, child. It's merely a matter of whether the prize is worth the force necessary," Lo Shan snorted. "I have already paid enough for this."

"As you say, Honored Elder." Himura inclined her head. "I have heard from Su Tzu that Khu Long has invoked several Joketsuzoku covenants. Might I ask what the specifics of those are?"

Lo Shan scoffed. "Khu Long is stalling for time. The Covenants were intended as a way to forestall civil war should Amazon leadership come under dispute. With no support from the Council, her position is laughable. Within two suns of the declaration, we must meet on Neutral Ground, which she has declared to be the Tendo Dojo, and discuss the matter in an attempt to prevent conflict."

"Good. Then might I suggest an approach?" Himura said. "Appear weaker than you actually are.
Appear willing, in principal, to compromise, even as you avoid actually agreeing on anything of substance."

Lo Shan raised an eyebrow. "To what end would we take such an approach?"

"My Grandfather always taught me that there is a fine line between despair and desperation," Himura said, folding her hands behind her back and starting to pace. "Despair can rob an enemy of motivation to act, can cause them to see the situation as bleaker than it is and downplay their own resources and capabilities. But desperation can motivate them to exceed their own resources and limitations. The latter is to be avoided, and I fear we have pushed them too close to it too fast.
Despair must be built gradually, like a slow-banked fire." She tapped her chin. "Give them breathing room, but only a little. A Cease-fire. They will be allowed to go about their lives but not to leave Nerima. The Tendo Dojo will be a haven… for now, they will be allowed to attend school, but their lives will be contained in a small area. Offer that part reluctantly, if they are to accept these shackles they must not realize how little power we have to place them upon them."

"And then?" Lo Shan asked.
"Watch them - and be obvious about it. Make sure they never feel that they have privacy, keep them always paranoid," Himura replied. "Sneak into their places, like the Dojo or Ms. Kuonji's shop and change things around, just enough so they get the sense someone has been there. Just enough so they are never sure. They will be unmolested, but not allowed to relax. Ranma needs to be kept away from the others as much as possible… require that she stay with the Kunos for now. She will be a separate matter."

"You expect them to agree to this?" Lo Shan seemed dubious.

"If you act quickly, while they are still huddled and unsure? Yes. Nabiki Tendo's is the loudest voice of the group, and with most of her emotional support devastated by recent events, this is as good a time as any." Himura put her hands on her hips. "We let them continue to struggle through the Volleyball challenge… say you want to allow Ranma to fulfill that last obligation of honor before he returns to China with you, or whatever other justification you feel Khu Long will believe. Give them a slender hope so that they will cling to that, rather than seek out more desperate action. Then they will fail, that hope will be snuffed out and they won't have the will to pursue it further."

Lo Shan snorted. "There is no honor or glory in winning by such means."

"No, but it is a win, and about the only way you can beat a group that refuses to acknowledge defeat," Himura argued. "Regardless, this will give me some time to work on Ranma to win him over."

"You expect to convince the Godslayer to return to China when all other methods of coercion have failed?" Lo Shan asked.

Himura smirked. She reached into her pocket and produced a small metal flask. "Not at all. Thanks to a successful test and your kind help perfecting the formula? All I need to do is convince him to take a sip."

000

"I'm… leaving."

The announcement was quiet… reluctant… mournful. For a moment, Kasumi felt a pang of regret and doubt. She exchanged a glance with Akane, who got up with her to walk to the front door. Nabiki simply pulled her knees up to her chest tighter.

They walked to the front door where Soun stood, worn backpack slung over his shoulder. Kasumi retrieved a bag that she had packed with a number of easy-to-prepare meals. It would be enough to see him through the first week at least. She handed it to him.

"Is… this really necessary, Kasumi?" Soun asked. "I swear to you, I did not mean for things to come to this…!"

"Are you prepared to say as much to Ranma?" Kasumi asked. "Are you prepared to face the consequences of doing that now?"

Soun shuddered. "Perhaps… perhaps if you explained things to her before she comes home…"

"I will do no such thing!" Kasumi said, more sharply than she intended. She stopped herself and took a steadying breath. "Father… you are a part of an… unfathomable wrong. One you did nothing to right. You always taught us that it was a martial artist's duty to protect the weak… and yet you participated in stripping a girl of her very form and identity. Everything you taught us about honor tells me you will need to face Ranma… to explain your actions, in your own words, and face her judgement like a man. I cannot… I will not make excuses or platitudes on your behalf in this." She reached over and straightened his gi a little, struggling to keep the tears from coming. "All I can do is… give you time and try to heal a little the wounds you've caused before you must face them. For the sake of our family's honor, Ranma must come first now. There is no escaping this debt."

"I… see," Soun said. He turned to Akane. "And you feel the same, Akane?"

"Ranma comes first," Akane said firmly.

"Nabiki does not even wish to see me off?" Soun asked weakly. It felt very much like he was grasping for any reason to delay. Kasumi also noticed his usual waterworks were absent. He did seem to understand the gravity of the situation, at least.

"Nabiki has a great many burdens of her own at the moment. She was the one who found the truth, father," Kasumi said sternly. "She might not have idolized you as we did, but she trusted you, and that is a rare and precious thing from Nabiki. That wound will take time to heal, father. Give her that much at least, and do not begrudge her her discourtesy."

He sighed, his shoulders slumped. "You… are right. You are always right, Kasumi. I… should go while there is still light." He turned and took a few steps, hesitated, then continued through the gates without a backward look.

Kasumi forced herself to watch him go, though she wanted nothing more than to turn and retreat inside, or to call him back and forgive him. She felt her newborn resolve wavering under its first real test. Then she remembered what he had done - what he had made possible - and the surge of anger and betrayal that came with that memory washed away any remaining hesitation. She turned and followed her youngest sister back into the house.

000 (End Chapter 33)

Thank you for sticking with me this long. I apologize for the delay between chapters, but this one took a lot of work to get into reasonable shape.

I hope to make your patience worthwhile!
Ranma's Note:

Hey Ryouga,

If you're reading this, then Pop finally dragged me away. I kinda figured it was inevitable. I'm sorry. I know you're tryin' your best. I shoulda come get you for this, but I know you wanted to do this on your own.

I'm sorry for all the crap I put you through. I know I was a freeloader an' all I could do was lead you home after school. Sometimes I couldn't even do that. You taught me a lot, and you were good in a fight, and you put up with me. I'm not sure why, but it meant a lot to me.

I've been keeping something from ya. There's something wrong with my body. That's why I never wanted to share the furo, an' kept an undershirt on when changin' for gym. Pops says it's just a birth defect, an' we're going to China to fix it, but I found this magazine. It was one of those imported American ecchi mags, where stuff isn't censored. I didn't think it'd be your thing, sorry if that was wrong. It was kinda ratty and dirty anyway.

But lookin' through it makes me wonder, y'know? Pops says I'm just crazy. He gets mad if I bring it up. He used to put me in the pit when I was a dumb kid and didn't know not to ask. These days he's too lazy to actually dig a hole big enough for me, so he just comes up with some kinda unfair training.

Part of me thinks he's wrong, though. I thought it'd be weird to ask you, and I was afraid you'd hate me because you'd think I was lyin' to you or makin' fun of you. I wasn't, honest! Seems now you hate me anyway, so I might as well come clean.

I think I'm a girl.

000

Ryouga felt groggy as he struggled towards consciousness. He wasn't typically a morning person by any stretch, but whatever had been in that sleeping draught that the Kunos' servants had given them was making waking up particularly onerous.

He rubbed at his eyes, groaning as he blinked and tried to focus on the ceiling. He had only taken it to reassure Ranma so that she would drink it, as she was so wound up after the battle that he knew she wasn't going to sleep otherwise. From the look in her eyes, he knew that if she didn't get something to take her off the edge she was going to bolt and run until she collapsed. Again.

He pushed himself up carefully, noticing the bed was empty save for himself. He had also insisted on remaining with him as they both drifted off. There was nothing romantic about it - it was more out of a desperate need for comfort and companionship. Understandably, she was still terrified to be alone. He could feel it through the Link.

He blinked as he realized that she hadn't gone far. She was sitting at the foot of the bed, still in her clothes from the previous day. Her hair was in wild disarray. She had her back to him so he had to lean forward a bit to see what she was doing.

She was reading a letter. The letter. The letter she had written for him and left in the wall three years ago.
Oh crap. He swallowed nervously, not sure what new meltdown this might spark off. Even though she wrote the letter, she didn't seem to remember it, and he knew the contents of it were rather gut-wrenching when put in context.

"Uh… hey… Ranma?" Ryouga said nervously, shifting his legs to the side of the bed, being careful to not move too quickly.

Ranma looked up at him, blinking. There were tear stains on her cheeks and her eyes were red and watery. Which, honestly, he kind of expected, but it was still unnerving. The last thing she needed was more emotional trauma.

But then she smiled and that really worried him.

"H-hey Ryo…" Ranma scrubbed at her eyes with her sleeve self-consciously. "Sorry if I woke you. I was just… just…"

Ryouga's eyes fell to the letter, then he looked back up to her. "Yeah… Look, Ranma… I know all of this is a mess, but… You don't need to salt the wound like this…"

Her smile didn't fade. "Heh… You'd think that, right?" she said softly. She looked at him, a bit of uncertainty crossing her expression. "Is… is it weird that I find this… comforting in a way?" She held up the letter. "It's… it's really bizarre; I remember writing this. I remember the thing about the chest wrap, and… and all of this. But at the same time… I kinda don't? It's like it was there but, because it didn't mesh with what I 'knew' was reality, it kinda got filed away wherever I kept all those memories that… that didn't quite make sense." She glanced down at the letter. "I always thought… that I was just a little crazy, you know? That my brain was bad or something. Pops used to say… used to say it was normal to remember stuff that didn't happen. False memories' he'd call them, and that's why it was important to always listen to him because…" she trailed off, voice growing quiet. "because I wouldn't remember right on my own."

"Ranma…" Ryouga scooted closer to her on the bed.

"It used to be everything was just kind of a fog. I didn't remember stuff except what Pops told me to because it just confused things. And… I knew he was a liar, but it was easier to just believe him first, and then deal with the fallout after he was proven to be full of it. It wasn't until you showed up in Nerima that I had to start remembering stuff on my own. I didn't even wonder about my own mother, even though I knew she had to exist. Everything that wasn't 'here and now' was in the fog. It was so hard to be sure of anything except what Pops told me." She gripped the letter a little more tightly. "But… this… this is real. This happened, no matter how much Pops or Mom would tell me it didn't."

"Yeah…" Ryouga said. "It happened. I'm sorry…"

Ranma shook her head. "Don't be. I mean… I mean I'm still dealing with that. I'm still kinda processing everything that was, you know? My whole perspective's been turned on this crazy angle and what I thought I knew doesn't make sense anymore. But… At least this helps me be sure about what is, you know?" She folded the letter carefully. "I'm not sure how much of what's going on in my messed up head is because of the Neko-ken training, or Pops, or that damned potion. Everything I know… Everything I feel is suspect 'cuz I don't know if I actually remember that or feel that, or if it's something Pops whispered in my ear after doping me up. I don't even know when he stopped doing it… I don't even know if he stopped." She shuddered. "Yeah… great, that'll give me some interesting nightmares tonight."

"He can't get to you here," Ryouga said. "And… trust me, I tried once to punch you in your sleep and I couldn't do it. You defend yourself in your sleep."

"Ever wonder why I'd have a reflex like that?" Ranma softly, giving him a haunted look. "I never did… until now. And Pops was always able to get past it to toss me out the window in the morning." She groaned and clutched her temples. "Ugh! This is such a rabbit hole!"

"I…" Ryouga winced, seeing his attempt at being comforting backfire. "Look… Ranma… what can I do? There has to be something?"

A small smile tweaked the corner of Ranma's mouth again. "Exist?" she said. Her expression lightened a little. "You're the one thing I can't imagine Pops putting in my head."

"I… yeah…" Ryouga blushed a bit. "L-look… about what happened at the Hospital… I mean… I meant what I said, but…" He took a deep breath. "But I pushed. And… and if I hadn't, maybe all of this wouldn't have gone wrong, so badly, and…"

She reached up and put a hand over his mouth, quieting him. His eyes widened as she stared into his eyes, like she was searching for something.

She pulled her hand away. "Don't apologize," she said. "I… I needed you to push. Even though it scared the hell out of me. I… I kept trying to push it back into the fog… to forget… because it didn't fit what I 'knew' was reality." She shuddered. "Whenever… whenever I didn't act 'manly' enough… he'd put me in the pit. Until I was too old for it to work anymore, anyway. Everything I felt… I feel… around you… It was okay as long as I didn't give it a name; as long as it was just an unspoken thing. Maybe I even got brave, called you 'cute' or something… It would never be anything that I couldn't deny or pass off as a joke later… nothing that wasn't safe. And… and I never would have gotten past any of that."

"Is that why you freaked out when I kissed you?" Ryouga asked. "Because…"

"Because I was going to go in the pit," Ranma said. "I know… I know that's stupid, and that fat idiot couldn't make me go into that pit, and even if he did I could break out easy… but it wasn't… 'me', y'know? I was always this scared little girl going into the pit, and the only way out was to convince Pops I was a 'man amongst men'... or to be a cat…" She paused and blinked. "I… did I just…? Nevermind." She shook her head. "The point is that to acknowledge that I was a girl meant going into the pit and… you kinda made it impossible to escape doing that."

"I'm sorry," Ryouga's gaze fell.

"Didn't I just tell you not to apologize?" Ranma said, a little crossly. "Look… you ever… You ever been training at something… something really tough… and you just can't get it? You just can't… push through to what you're trying to do or… or be… until someone gives you a shove? I know I freaked out, but…" she fidgeted with the letter, "I mean… It was putting a lot of words and names to feelings all at once, you know? Some of that stuff has been buried for a long time…"

Ryouga blinked. "O-oh… I thought…" He rubbed the back of his head, blushing. "S-sorry, I just assumed you were talking about feelings for me…"

Ranma frowned, the slug him on the shoulder, hard.

"Ow! Ranma, what…?!” Ryouga yelped, rubbing his shoulder.

Ranma huffed, crossed her arms and looked away. "You jerk. You seriously can't read between the lines?" She held up the letter.
Ryouga frowned at the letter, then stared at her as comprehension dawned. "Wait…!"

Ranma's expression softened. She fidgeted shyly. "I… didn't really have words for all those feelings, you know? A-and… when you told me about those girls at school who liked me and that's why they were trying to share their lunch with me, and… and I thought about all the times you fed me… And I mean I knew you didn't mean it like that, but still…! A-and… there were all of these big, wonderful, scary feelings that I didn't know what to do with. Then… then you got mad at me, and Pops told me to forget it all, and…" she trailed off.

Ryouga put a hand on her shoulder, gently turning her to look at him. "I was mad because you were leaving," Ryouga said softly. "You were my only friend… And honestly I couldn't really imagine how I'd make another one."

He could see the color rush to Ranma's cheeks when he said that. She dropped her gaze and mumbled. "Damnit… Why'd you have to say…" She took a deep breath. "Th-this is kinda where I screw things up with Akane… I'll say something dumb 'cuz… 'cuz it makes this go away. I'm… I'm really really trying not to do that now."

"I'll… shut up," Ryouga said, earning a slight giggle from the redhead.

That smile returned. Hesitantly, Ranma reached out and took Ryouga's hand.

"I'm… I'm still struggling a bit with this. Not because you're a guy, but… because I always struggle with this," Ranma said. "I've been making a hash of things with everyone who cares about me, and getting by by doing what makes 'em happy and not really figuring anything out 'cuz that seemed 'manly'. But…" she squeezed gently, "I mean… I'm gonna need you to go slow with me… This is new even for me, and it's a lot different from me'n Ucchan swapping gender roles for a day, and a lot scarier, s-so…"

He turned his hand and clasped hers, squeezing gently. He kept his word and kept his mouth shut and instead focused on letting her feel what he was feeling, his desire to reassure her.

She blushed again at the rush of feelings through the Link and sighed. "That… That makes things easier…" she said finally. She scooted forward and leaned in, resting her forehead against his collarbone, tucking her head under his. "I wanna say it, Ryo… I can't yet, but I'm trying."

"I know," he said simply, putting his hand on the back of her head. Somehow… that meant more to him than if she had just blurted it out. Like the words would mean that much more coming from someone who struggled with them so much.

"I made a mess of things with Nabiki…" she said after a few minutes.

"What makes you say that?" Ryouga asked.

"She was mad. I made it sound like I was leaving her or something… I said something wrong…" Ranma mumbled.

He gently took her by the shoulders, pushed her back a bit and lifted her chin so she'd look him in the eye. "She was upset. Probably because you nearly killed yourself, and a whole lot of scary stuff happened all at once. It doesn't mean she was mad at you and it doesn't make it your fault. You just need to talk to her again and hash things out with her, okay?"

"I… guess…" Ranma said uncertainly. "So… you're okay with all of this? The…" she struggled a bit for the right word.
"Harem?" Ryouga asked.

"I hate that word," Ranma muttered. "But… yeah. So…?"

"Nabiki made sure I understood the ground rules," Ryouga said.

Ranma made a face. "I'm still not entirely sure how comfortable I am with how much she's managing my love life without me even knowing about it," she groused.

"Well, it is her harem," Ryouga replied with a shrug.

"It is not!" Ranma protested. An odd look passed across her face as things started to add up in her head, then her eyes widened. "Oh my god… it is, isn't it?"

"You hadn't figured that out?" Ryouga smirked, poking her forehead. "Good to see your ego is still intact."

"Hey!" Ranma glowered at him, then sighed. "I… guess I should probably be thankful she saw all this coming. I'm getting sick of other people having a better idea of what's going on in my head than I do, though." She scooted a bit closer, leaning against him, which caused a sudden spike in his blood pressure. "So… what are the ground rules?"

"Uhh…" Ryouga swallowed nervously. "I mean… mostly 'Don't be a jerk'? Don't break Ranma's heart, don't keep secrets, and if there are problems, talk with Nabiki… that kinda stuff?"

"Don't break my heart?" Ranma said incredulously. "Okay, that's a new one. So is this why Shampoo and Akane and Nabiki have suddenly gotten all nice to you lately?"

"I think so…" Ryouga said. "Akane was trying to make peace… she probably would have done it anyway, but… She did mention you. Nabiki has been talking to me about this since way before I was ready to talk about it. And Shampoo…"

"Is Shampoo," Ranma finished for him. "She has to be reminded to ask about that kinda stuff." She tucked herself a little closer. "L-look… I figure… I mean, it's not fair for me to get all bent out of shape about it… I mean, if the girls are interested in you… but…" She huffed a bit in frustration at her inability to articulate her own feelings.

"I asked Nabiki to calm that kinda thing down," Ryouga replied. "I mean, it's flattering, but… I kinda feel more like they're toying with me than…"

"Hold on… you asked Nabiki?"

Ryouga froze, realizing he had blurted out more than Ranma was aware of. "Uhh… w-well…"

"Nabiki has been doing this stuff too?" Ranma sat up and looked him in the eyes. "What happened?"

"I… uhh…"

"Ryouga."

Ryouga shut his eyes. "She's made a couple of passes… just teasing, you know? I didn't take any of it all that seriously. Then… she pulled me aside to talk. We… uhh… we actually do that a lot. Mostly it's about my problems, usually about my problems around you… but this time she needed to talk about the stuff weighing on her. She was scared about bad things happening to you or the girls or even me. So… I told her I had confidence in her… said I wasn't afraid… might have gotten a little melodramatic and pledged myself to your family like in one of those old samurai movies…"

Ranma snorted. "Yeah, that sounds like you, you cornball."

"Hey! I mean… well, it worked, I guess…” Ryouga mumbled. "Maybe a little too well… 'cuz she kissed me right after I did.” He cracked an eye open.

Ranma's glare convinced him to shut it again immediately.

"On the cheek, right?" Ranma prompted.

"…" Ryouga stayed silent.

"On the cheek, right?"

Ryouga swallowed. "It… uhh… it wasn't a long kiss… I think…"

"You think!?" Ranma shot back, causing him to shrink back a bit.

"I wasn't expecting it, okay? It… You know what it's like! My brain just kinda switched off!"

Ryouga replied desperately, opening his eyes again, deciding it was better to see his inevitable doom coming.

The glare was gone, and what had replaced it was worse. Ranma looked like she was on the verge of tears.

"So… was it better than me?" Ranma asked. "I-I mean, she's a real girl and all…"

Ryouga swallowed. He reached up and cupped her cheek, earning a slight jump from her, and spoke before she could react more. "She kissed me, Ranma. I kissed you. You're the one I want, okay?"

She stared at him a moment, then the tension seemed to leave her in a sigh, and she sagged against his hand a little. "God, what's wrong with me? I'm acting like… like… like Akane, when she gets all jealous."

"So you are jealous," Ryouga said, a slight smirk appearing on his face. "Like you were with that nurse."

Ranma scowled. "That nurse was way out of line!" she huffed. Her scowl faded after a minute. "Yeah… yeah, fine, I'm jealous!" She closed her eyes and took a deep breath. "And… I shouldn't be… 'cuz that drove me crazy when Akane did it, because I always felt it meant she didn't trust me. And… and it probably isn't the last time one of the other girls is gonna kiss you… there's a lot of that going around in this so… so I gotta learn to trust you and just deal with it."

"Maybe just start with learning to trust me?" Ryouga said. "I can deal with a little jealousy. And I promise, no more kissing!"

"You won't be able to keep it," Ranma muttered. "Not with Shampoo in the mix." She searched his face a moment then shifted, moving to straddle his lap facing him, her arms looped lightly around his neck.

Ryouga froze solid, eyes wide. "What are you doing!?" he managed to squeak, sounding not unlike a rusty hinge.
"Ucchan likes it when I do this when I'm a girl. And I kinda like it when one of the girls does it with me. I just figured..." She blushed. "L-look, if you don't want me in your lap..."

"No!" Ryouga said, almost too quickly. "I-I mean... It's just... I'm not used to this sort of thing, a-and..."

"You should be. I did this to you plenty even before you and I were... y'know..." Ranma said with a grin. "Of course you locked up when I did it then, too!"

"You were trying to trick me then by pretending to be my fiancee!" Ryouga protested.

"Yeah? Well now I am your fiancee," Ranma replied. She paused and, after a second, her grin faded. "O-okay, that sounded way less terrifying in my head before I said it."

"Actually... technically you're my wife..." Ryouga said without thinking, though his mouth went dry as he said it as his brain caught up a half second too late. "That's... that's probably skipping a few steps though."

"Yeah..." Ranma said. A smile tugged at the corners of her lips. "Just a few, huh?" She closed her eyes and took a breath. "Gimme a minute here. I just... kinda need to process that."

"I... well, it's just a technicality..." Ryouga said weakly.

"Hush," Ranma shushed him. "I'm trying to... visualize this, I guess. I'm a girl... I always was a girl... My parents used a magic potion to mess with my memories, but they're still there... There never was a 'Ranma Saotome'... And now I'm here, as a girl, with my h-husband." She opened her eyes.

"Well?" Ryouga asked tentatively.

"Nope, still doesn't feel quite real," Ranma said. "Husband. I have a husband. I'm a wife. Ranma Hibiki. Ran Hibiki?" She blinked. "I kinda like that, actually..."

Ryouga swallowed nervously. "You do?"

"It... kinda helps?" Ranma said uncertainly. "I'm sorta trying to process being a completely different person than I thought I was. I guess... having a name for the 'me' I'm finding out I am makes it easier?" She looked thoughtful for a moment. "Who do you think I would have been if... if I had gotten away from Pops before Jusenkyo?"

"You mean if I had made it from my house to the lot directly behind it in something less than three days?" Ryouga thought, feeling a pang of guilt. "I... well... probably a lot like you are now? It's not like your personality changed or anything." He stopped and considered. "Well... you wouldn't have met Akane or Nabiki or Shampoo, so... Maybe a bit more like you were in Middle School, even."

"I guess I did kinda learn about being a girl from the Tendos," Ranma said thoughtfully. She sighed. "I'd never have met Akane..."

"We'd never have met Akane," Ryouga added. "She's kind of a big part of who we both are right now."

"So no Ran Hibiki without an Akane Tendo, huh?" Ranma said. "I guess... did it have to be this hard? To get here I mean..."

"I'm... not the guy to ask," Ryouga replied. "I'm not really good at doing things the easy way."
When even straight lines are tough, you tend to learn to just go through whatever is in the way. I'm usually just glad to get there… and you're not talking about travelling to an actual place, are you?" he finished sheepishly.

"Dummy," Ranma said, though she said it with a smile, and a note of fondness in her voice. "So… Now that I'm here… I guess I gotta figure out where I go next."

Ryouga nodded. That made good sense. "What do you figure? Call Nabiki, maybe plan our next move."

Ranma sighed heavily and shook her head. "We're alone together in your room, on your bed, with me in your lap and that's the first thing that you come up with?"

"I-I mean… that's… that's kinda the next step… right?" Ranma asked, her voice getting quiet. She started curling a lock of crimson hair around her finger, her nerve apparently starting to slip.

"Ranma, you don't have to…" Ryouga started. He was suddenly an abruptly very aware of their relative positions; he was sitting with his back almost to the headboard of the bed, with Ranma sitting straddling his lap. He could feel the warmth of her body through his clothes, and he noticed that her training gi wasn't exactly the right size, nor was it closed with any real care in the front.

"I know, I know!" Ranma cut him off. "I… I don't think I'm ready for… for that yet, but…" She looked into his eyes, searching. "I… kinda wanna see what I am ready for… Now that I'm not panicking. Is… is that okay?"

He noticed she was leaning forward, and her chest was pressing against his. She very definitely was not wearing a bra. He swallowed hard. "I… uhh… I might not be any more ready that you, actually…" he mumbled. "You've got a lot more experience with this than me, you know."

This was where she was supposed to laugh it off, or make some cheesy comment, or crank up the vamp to absurdity. There was supposed to be a 'Gotcha!' or a poke to his nose, or something to break the spell.

She just nodded. He could feel her nervousness. "W-well… this angle is kinda new, okay? I mean…" she trailed off, "I-I mean… I liked the kiss… the one at the hospital. A-and part of me is freaking out about that even though I know it's stupid to… and part of me wants to try it again… And part of me is just plain terrified I'll do it wrong or something..."

"Yeah… me too…" Ryouga replied. He noticed her face seemed a lot closer to his… he could feel the heat of her breath on his face. He noticed their voices were getting softer as they spoke. "I was worried that I already had."

"You didn't," she said. There was a moment as their gazes locked, that point of no return before they both slowly closed their eyes. He caught a glimpse of her turning her head slightly to the side, could practically feel the silk of her lips scant millimeters from his.

There was a polite knock at the door.

Suddenly, Ranma and Ryouga were sitting on the edge of the bed, about three feet apart, though no perceptible movement had occurred to get them there from their prior position. The door creaked open and the maid peeked in.
"I have brought fresh towels and a laundered change of clothes for you both," The maid stepped into the room and bowed. "Mistress Kodachi and Master Tatewaki await you at breakfast, once you have bathed and changed." She set the bundle on the chair next to the door and stepped out, closing the door.

"I'm… gonna go take a cold shower," Ranma said softly, holding her gi closed self consciously as she got up, grabbed a towel and a set of clothes from the pile and made for the bathroom door.

Ryouga flopped back on the bed spread eagled with a groan.

000

Ranma didn't take a cold shower, finding the cold water she used to wash with was enough. She had just used the waterproof soap the day before, but she applied it again just to be safe.

The idea of changing back, or even the possibility, terrified her. It wasn't the idea of being male that scared her, but the fear of what might come with it. She didn't know how the potion really worked. All she knew was that it had scrambled her memories, changed her self-image, violated her in ways she was still discovering, and she couldn't shake the fear that there was something inherent in her male form that was poisoned in some way, so that changing back would put her newfound self-awareness in jeopardy.

It… wouldn't be so bad, would it? Ranma thought, looking at her reflection in the mirror. Being a girl… JUST a girl? I mean… It's what I actually AM, right? She reached out and touched her reflection, tracing a finger over the faint line of freckles across her cheekbone. I've done long stretches as a girl before. I could get used to it. It would be EASIER than swapping back and forth all the time. And I'm pretty sure it'd make Ryo happy… She smiled at that, then felt a bit of a self-conscious flush. Geez… I'm already thinking of how to 'please my man', huh? That woulda been horrifying a week ago. I guess… I guess it's okay, though. Right?

She paused, her face falling. I dunno what'll happen with the girls, though. Akane… Akane will be happy, I think. Ukyou will understand, too. Not sure if Shampoo would be okay with it being a full-time thing though. Or Nabiki…

Nabiki's face flitted through her mind, her hands behind her back, and a mix of her usual confident smirk with that rarer, sweeter smile she sometimes got these days. "You're my Boy on the Beach, Ranma..."

Ranma winced. Don't assume the worst! She said... they ALL said if it came to something like this they'd stick with you! She sighed and slumped a bit. Even if it's not fair to them.

She didn't bother soaking, not wanting to ruminate. She settled for a hot shower, letting it wash away the chill. Once she was warmed up she dried off and decided to see what kind of clothes Kodachi had selected for her. It was a pair of white slacks and a dark purple turtleneck, pretty clearly from her closet. The pants looked a bit long in the leg, but it was a relief to see them instead of a skirt.

The underwear however, was a problem.

Ranma recognized it. They were some of the racier, lacy, skimpy things that Kodachi had forced her to try on during their first fateful shopping trip. The same ones she had flat out refused to let Kodachi buy for her. Apparently Kodachi had returned to the store later and purchased them.

It wasn't that Ranma had never worn such things before. And these did have the advantage of being fitted for her. But it was a lot easier to wear such things when she didn't really think her female body was 'her'.

Come on, Ranma. You'll be wearing them under your clothes. No one is gonna see 'em, she thought. She lifted up the bra to examine it. She sighed and slipped it on, followed by the panties. They fit perfectly, of course. Kodachi had seen to that, but they weren't nearly so comfortable as the plainer ones that Ranma had been wearing recently.

Apparently I have girl's underwear preferences now, Ranma thought, slightly bemused. She reached for the rest of the clothes, then caught sight of herself in the mirror.

She was seated on the edge of the furo as she dressed, leg bent slightly in what might be considered a decent approximation of a cheesecake pose. The deep cut of the bra coupled with the angle of her body conspired to display a truly indecent amount of cleavage. It was just the kind of pose she would have used to distract Happosai or Kuno in the past.

I… actually look pretty good, don't I? she thought, straightening and turning to get a better look at herself. She had always been proud of her looks as a girl. Now it made a little more sense why. Bet Ryouga would LOVE to see this, huh?

She was gripped with a sudden, irrational urge to walk out of the bathroom in just her underwear. She shuddered and slapped her cheeks.

No! Way way way WAYYY too soon for that! She winced as she realized she had just admitted the possibility of things progressing beyond just kissing with the lost boy. What the hell is WRONG with me? A few hours ago I was suicidally depressed, and now I'm considering jumping Ryouga's bones? She sighed, closed her eyes and took a deep breath. I'm all over the place. I have GOT to get my emotions under control!

She realized that part of it was that she was feeling better, a little. There was still a lot of terrifying stuff looming on the horizon, but the letter had helped. Some bit of verification that it wasn't all in her head. She pulled on the turtleneck, arranging her hair as best she could. She eventually decided to braid it again, if only to get it under control.

Hair is getting long, she realized, as the braid was thicker and reached down past her shoulders now. Heh, got so used to the dragon whisker keeping it from growing that I forget I gotta deal with that now.

She realized she had been hogging the bathroom, finished hurriedly and stepped out. Ryouga was sitting on the bed, the letter in his hands.

"I… uhh… guess we should ask Kodachi for some more reading material, huh?" Ranma said, half joking.

Ryouga looked up, then self-consciously put the letter aside. "Yeah. Something that isn't a reminder of how messed up the last three years of our lives have been maybe." He stood and rubbed awkwardly at the back of his head, looking away. "You… uhh… that looks good on you," he said, a slow flush coloring his face.

Ranma glanced down, looking herself over. While the white slacks were nothing special, she realized the stretchy turtleneck was rather form-fitting, and that lacy bra was doing a lot of work to lift, separate and enhance. She smirked a bit, wondering if she had stumbled on one of the poor boy's 'things'. Experimentally, She took a deeper than normal breath and was rewarded by a momentary deepening of his blush.
She walked over and impulsively gave him a peck on the cheek, though she was slightly annoyed that she had to tug him down a bit to do it, even on tiptoe. "Go and get cleaned up. I need some breakfast, then I need to call home."

After the phone conversation the previous day, Nabiki had decided that someone should be nearby to get the phone if it happened to ring. Since the Tendo Residence phone service was ancient, there wasn't any call forwarding, so it tethered someone to the main rooms of the house. This suited Ukyou just fine, as it gave her a chance to distract herself putting around the kitchen. Kasumi had busied herself with other things, likely sensing Ukyou's need for the familiarity of food preparation.

When the phone rang, Ukyou practically dropped what she was doing and sprinted for the phone, scooping it off the cradle. "Hello, Tendo Residence!" she said breathlessly.

"Ucchan?"

"RANCHAN!" Ukyou gasped, nearly dropping to her knees as she clutched the receiver. "Are you okay?! You're with the Kunos, right? Are you okay there?"

"I'm fine, Ucchan," Ranma replied quickly. "Well... well not 'fine'... but... y'know... Are YOU okay? I uh... I was kinda out of it when I spoke to Nabiki and I didn't get much info... Ryo says there's some kinda Amazon civil war going on? Is Shampoo okay?"

Ukyou winced. "Shampoo is... is missing, but Cologne doesn't think the Amazons have her. We don't know where she is."

"WHAT?!" The redhead's outrage was nearly palpable. "Why didn't anyone tell me?! I've gotta go find her!"

Ukyou winced. "That's why, Ranchan. Look, you're the prize in this war, understand? Right now the best place for you to be is... and I can't believe I'm saying this... but it's Kuno Manor."

"What?! Ucchan..." Ranma protested.

"No 'buts' sugar. At least not until Cologne can do some diplomatic wrangling with the elders. We're not in a position to be waging war in the streets." She sighed. "I don't like it either."

"Kane and me got chewed up a bit fighting the Amazons, but we're okay. The Amazons aren't interested in Sayuri or the others, thankfully. And Kasumi's specifically protected by the cease fire Cologne called for. We don't think they're interested in anyone who isn't a martial artist, and right now even that seems to be restricted to the ones with a strong connection to you." Ukyou sighed and leaned against the wall. "That explosion was you, wasn't it, Ranchan. Shi shi hokodan, right?"

"Yeah..." Ranma replied softly. "I... uhh... didn't take the news too well. If Ryo hadn't been there... well... Ryo was there, so it doesn't matter. How much do you know?"

"As much as anyone, I think. Your Dad made a potion from an old chinese scroll, using Jusenkyo water to fulfill his lifelong efforts to turn you into a boy. Nodoka was in on it, and now the Amazons are all kinds of triggered, and it's probably Himura's fault."

"So... Uh... I guess this kind of changes things, huh?" Ranma said in a quiet tone.
"Nope!" Ukyou replied firmly. "Not a damn thing."

"Ukyou..." Ranma started.

"Ranma," Ukyou cut her off. "I know you're gonna spout some bull about how some idiocy Genma Saotome perpetrated invalidates everything we've managed to build... and you know what? He's done that to me enough. I love you for who you are now, not because of some promise made when we were kids. Besides, you thought I was a boy back then."

For a second Ukyou was worried she had pushed too hard, but Ranma's light chuckle reassured her. "I guess we'll have to have a match to decide who wears the dress, huh?"

"Oh, It'll be you, sugar," Ukyou replied, leaning against the wall. "Or we'll both wear tuxes. Or burlap sacks. Just as long as it's you."

There was a moment of silence, though not the awkward pauses from before. Ukyou could hear a slight sniffling over the line and she realized that her own cheeks were a bit damp.

"So... we did the 'what are you wearing' bit... Whadaya say? Should I hop the fence and run over?" Ukyou said softly. "Pretty sure I can sneak past the Amazon brigade without much trouble if you can convince the Kunos to go see a movie for the evening."

Ranma laughed again, her giggling infectious. "Definitely later, Ucchan. I... miss you. All of you. For right now, though, I wanna talk to Nabiki and the Old Ghoul, maybe try an' figure out what we're gonna do. Hm...? Oh, and Ryo says 'hi'."

"Oh he does, does he?" Ukyou raised an eyebrow. "Put him on a sec, okay? Just for a minute, before I get the others."

"Huh? Oh, sure," There was a shuffling, and then Ryouga's much deeper voice came over the line. "Hello?"

Ukyou smiled. "Hello, little brother. I hear you're the one who saved Ranchan this time."

"I... uhh... well..." She could almost hear him blush over the phone, and she noticed he wasn't protesting the 'little brother' tag this time.

"Sorry you had to shoulder all of it yourself this time, sugar," she added. "Are you doing okay? Not just physically, I mean."

"Wha? Oh... yeah... yeah, actually... I honestly feel a little guilty. I've got a sense of direction now, and a way to save Mom, I managed to sort out my own feelings and be honest about them... I mean, aside from the Jusenkyo curse and almost dying a couple of times..." Ryouga replied.

"A couple of times!? Ryouga, what happened?" Ukyou asked, straightening.

"Ranma didn't...? Damnit, Ranma!" Ryouga growled. "Okay, she's giving me that look... She was probably trying not to worry you, but the Amazons broke in to the Manor. One of the Elders made it all the way to Ranma. I tried to fend her off, but she downed me pretty quick. Ranma hurt her pretty bad, though."

"I get the feeling you're not telling me everything, sugar," Ukyou said. She looked up to see Nabiki's head peek around the corner. "Does this thing have a speakerphone...? No, it's an antique, of course. Can you call Nabiki's cell? I think we need to have a family chat."
"What do you mean Ryouga died?!" Nabiki demanded.

Nabiki's cell phone was in the center of the living room table, with Kasumi, Nabiki, Ukyou, Akane and Cologne all clustered around it, leaning in to listen. After the initial flurry of demands to know if everyone was okay from both sides of the call, Nabiki had taken over and started clarifying details, at which point Ranma had blurted out that little gem.

"This Elder... You said her name was Lotion? She did... SOMETHING. Some kind of palm strike to the chest, but with the fingers extended. Pressure points, I'm guessing. I... I FELT it stop his heart," Ranma said.

"Hanyu Pinyin," Cologne said with a snort. "A strike that blocks the five chi paths to the heart simultaneously. "Almost always fatal. I would say 'always', but apparently, somehow, the boy survived it." She shook her head. "For Lo Shan to use such a technique against a child... You must have hard pressed her boy."

"I'd probably be dead, but Ranma did... SOMETHING that undid it," Ryouga added.

Nabiki took a deep shuddering breath and held up a hand. It was apparent that she was struggling to maintain her control. "Before we go any further, can I say something?" She waited for assent, then continued. "Ryouga, you swore your life to my family and cause on the school rooftop, remember?"

"Yeah, he told me about that," Ranma said, the slightly accusatory tone in her voice telling Nabiki that he told her about more than just the oath.

Whoops!

Nabiki pushed past it for now, promising herself she would explain to Ranma afterwards. "Ryouga... and this goes for you too, Ranma... I'm making it a point of honor for the two of you. You've both promised your lives to me, so I'm telling you right now you're not allowed to die. No heroic sacrifices, no seppuku... I need..." She trailed off as the lump grew in her throat. "I need to know you two are going to keep yourselves safe on your own if we're going to get through this," she finished in a much more subdued voice.

Ukyou blinked. "Wait... Ryouga promised his life to you?" She fixed Nabiki with an inquisitive look.

Cologne overrode the youngest Tendo's inquiry, however. "While I agree survival is important, I must admit to being puzzled as to how you survived," Cologne said. "The Hanyu Pinyin is fatal, without question. Even a skilled ki healer would not have enough time to prevent death. Ranma... child... how did you save Ryouga?"

"I don't know," Ranma said. "I said I could... kinda FEEL what was wrong through the Link, and when I got to him, I just... sorta... washed the blocks away?"

"You reopened the blocks with your own Ki... but that should be impossible...!" Cologne muttered.

"Not with how the Link works," Ryouga said. "You know how there's that... resistance between the ki of different people, right? Like... like..."

"Like two North magnetic poles!" Akane jumped in, grinning at her ability to find an apt analogy.

"Right! Like that, they push each other away. Well... the Link... it kinda 'flips' the magnet, so they attract instead? Or at least so they can intermingle."

"Doctor Tofu seemed to think that it had a huge amount of potential for Ki Healing applications," Nabiki added.

Cologne narrowed her eyes. "And you said that… Ryouga is necessary for creating such links? That it is some quality in the boy himself?"

"We think so," Nabiki said. "That's Doctor Tofu's opinion and… well, we have it from an unverified source that Ryouga might have some wolf-demon blood in him."

"Hey, Nabiki, that's… kinda SENSITIVE information, y'know?" Ryouga protested.

Cologne breathed out and closed her eyes. "And Lo Shan was going to destroy that to assert dominance, was she? Trampling wonders underfoot in a mad dash to get what she happens to want at that moment. I see that, for all her years, she hasn't changed one bit." She pulled out her pipe and started the ritual of packing it with tobacco. "You still haven't explained how you beat her though, child. She is quite adept in every technique I've ever taught you, and dozens more I have not."

"I… didn't use any of those. I didn't use anything in the Saotome School either… I… COULDN'T. I can't seem to get my body to move that way right now," Ranma said. "I… I used the Neko-ken."

"What?" Akane leaned forward, hands on the table. "Ranma, that's dangerous! If you ran off while out of control like that…!"

"I wasn't, 'Kane. Out of control, I mean," Ranma said. "It… it was weird. I mean, it wasn't exactly my NORMAL headspace, y'know? But… but it was ME in the driver's seat this time, not the… the cat."

Nabiki's eyebrows climbed as Ranma managed to say the word without stuttering, or the usual quavering of fear in her voice. "Ranma… you've mastered the Neko-ken?" she asked softly.

"I dunno if I'd call it 'mastery'. The cat… the cat was still there, but… I was the cat this time. Or… or we were in agreement on what to do. Or something… But… It seemed to catch Lotion off-guard," Ranma replied sheepishly.

"It would. The Neko-ken's movements are almost impossible to predict, though that was always attributed to the fact that any user of it is typically out of their mind with psychosis." Cologne puffed her pipe. "The notion that someone could consciously control such a technique… I do hope you gave Lo Shan a scar to remind her of her hubris?"

"I… kinda lopped off her hand," Ranma said nervously.

Cologne was silent for a moment, pausing in her smoking to stare at the phone on the table.

"I… uhh… I could try and find it? Y'know, give it back…? Wait… no, Kodachi is telling me that they fed it to Mr. Green Turtle…" Ranma continued tentatively.

Cologne burst out laughing.

Everyone at the table shuddered at the horrible wheezing sound, and quietly waited for the elder Amazon to compose herself.

"So… is that… is that a good thing?" Ranma asked. "Like… she'll respect me as an equal now or something?"
Cologne dabbed at her eyes, wiping away the tears. "Gods no, child. She will be after your blood more than ever. Defeating and humiliating you will be her top priority though, given your importance, that will likely be done through harming those you care about." She shook her head. "I'm just amused because that very thing is her favorite threat to her pupils. She continually threatens that if they will not make proper use of their hands, she will simply lop them off. She has set herself up to make that the worst possible insult that could be done to her."

"Well... CRAP," Ranma muttered.

"Take heart, child. I doubt compromise is possible at this point regardless, and Lo Shan gets sloppy when she is vexed." Cologne took another puff of her pipe. "Curious that your more familiar skills eluded you, however."

"I... uhh... I actually wanted to talk with you about that," Ranma said. "Well, specifically about... about the potion. I-I'm... I'm still trying to sort out all the stuff Pops DID to me."

Cologne puffed thoughtfully. "I'm afraid I can be of only limited help, child," she said finally. "The potion has not been used in living memory... and you well know just how long my memory is. The very fact it was intended to be used without anyone being the wiser means that accounts of its use are practically nonexistent... if it was ever truly used before at all." She blew out a smoke ring, then blew another that she somehow linked to the first. "The herbs and compounds used in it are more familiar, being used in the Xi Fa Xiang Gao, and the effect here is similar as well. Alteration and removal of memories, blocks placed on knowledge you wish to keep from the subject."

"Like how I couldn't remember Ranma's name or who he was, no matter how many times people told me?" Akane asked, remembering her own experience with the technique.

"Exactly. But... the emotional memory remains. Even then, your feelings for Ranma were very strong, and caused you to struggle against the blocks." She sighed and shook her head. "But from what Nabiki has found, it seems Genma has been using these compounds on Ranma for some time, coupled with isolation and relentless mental pressure in the guise of training. Couple that with the fact the man is terrifyingly incompetent... It is difficult to say what he's done, or how much of it is due to the potion. Certainly he has done far too much."

"Yeah... but..." Ranma said, sounding nervous. "I mean... Is it gonna... affect me again, if I turn back into a guy?"

"What do you mean, Ranma?" Nabiki asked, leaning forward towards the phone.

"I mean... I don't know how much the potion did, but... but before we went to Jusenkyo there were already cracks! I got a letter I wrote to Ryo to prove that. I KNEW, even with all the drugs and and the p-pit and him beating the crap out of me I... I knew I was really a girl. But after Jusenkyo... After that there wasn't any doubt. I was a boy. I was a Man amongst Men. I was everything he kept telling me I had to be, even when it didn't make sense. And... and every time I'd figure something out... figure out how to be nice to Akane, figure out that Pops was an idiot, figure out that curing the curse wasn't worth it... It's like something would 'reset' in my head, and I'd be back to doing the same stupid crap all over again! Like... maybe it's all 'built into' my guy form." Ranma sounded a little desperate and scared. It wasn't a tone Nabiki liked to hear from her.

"That's just paranoia, Ranma," Nabiki said quickly. "You've made a lot of progress over the last few months, as a guy and as a girl. And self-improvement isn't a linear path... I've caught myself backtracking too! Just because you've slipped back into old habits, it doesn't mean..." She trailed off as she noticed Cologne holding up a hand and looking her in the eye.
Seeing she had Nabiki's attention, Cologne lowered her hand. She took a deep breath. "We… cannot discount the possibility."

"What!?" Nabiki, Akane and Ukyou yelped in unison, joined by an equally outraged "What!!" over the phone from Ryouga.

"This is what the potion was intended for. To remake a person, not just physically, but their entire identity," Cologne said slowly and carefully. "Ranma is correct - the effect it had on her was far more potent than simply the herbs and compounds by themselves. It is difficult to say that there isn't some effect tied to her male form. It is difficult to say there is. Even with my many years, I struggle to understand the mechanisms the ancient alchemist who devised this potion was tapping into. I think… only Ranma can possibly know for sure."

"Which would mean changing back to a guy to find out…" Ranma replied.

"Even then, the function of these changes is to make you unaware there has been a change," Cologne said. "You may indeed change, but simply be unaware of it."

"I could tell," Ryouga cut in. "With the Link we'd be able to sense any big changes in Ranma's emotions, right?"

"That's right!" Nabiki said. She hated to admit it, but there had been a moment where she was afraid Ranma would be stuck for good. A guilty part of her was forced to admit that it did matter to her if she ever got to see male Ranma again.

"But… but then it'd be too late, wouldn't it?" Ranma said softly. "I'd already be changed, and changing back to a girl wouldn't necessarily undo it, would it?"

"Ranma… Are you talking about staying a girl… forever?" Akane asked, a worried note in her voice.

"I dunno… maybe?" Ranma replied. "I mean… I mean it's what I really am, right? It's what I was born as! It's what I was always SUPPOSED to be…"

"But is it what you are, sugar?" Ukyou asked. "After being around me and some of the people that follow me around, you should know by now that what you're born as and what you're supposed to be don't always line up with what you are."

"I think we should save this for when we're face-to-face. Even with Ali Baba scrambling our line we don't know how secure this conversation is," Nabiki said, cutting off Ranma's reply. But the truth was that she didn't want something that might completely alter her concept of the future to be decided by a phone call. "For now we should figure out how to round everybody up. Shampoo is still missing, and that should be a priority."

"Nabiki's right. We need to find Shampoo!" Ranma said. "Do you have any idea where to start looking?"

"We lost track of her when we split up to lose the Amazons," Akane said ruefully.

"I still think they must have nabbed her," Ukyou added, crossing her arms.

"If Lo Shan had such a bargaining chip in her arsenal, she would be here now, with a sword to my Granddaughter's throat, demanding that I surrender," Cologne replied. "She is nothing if not ruthless. But she's allowed my parley to stand and not used Shampoo to lure Ranma. I am certain she does not have her."
"That assumes Shampoo is still alive," Nabiki said softly. She felt a pang in her chest at even acknowledging that possibility, but some dark part of her mind kept whispering to her that there was no way she was going to get out of this without losing something or someone.

"But... Who else would want to grab Shampoo?" Akane asked.

"It's that freak Circus Girl!" Ranma said suddenly. "Yeah, gotta be! She went after me because she thought I was Shampoo, so..." she trailed off as she remembered the fight. "That's... that's not good, is it?"

"Ranma, you fought her. Can Shampoo take her?" Ukyou asked.

"Maybe..." Ranma replied noncommittally. "She hit pretty damn hard when she connected and she had a lot of tricks. Fast and snappy like Kodachi, but all kinds of power behind it like Mousse. In a straight fight? Yeah, Shampoo would probably come out on top. But that chick ain't the sort to fight a straight up fight."

"And there was that freakishly giant cat of hers," Akane added. "And no Katsunishiki to keep it out of the fight this time."

They were all silent a moment.

"It doesn't serve us to assume the worst right now," Cologne said softly. "If the girl is here for Mousse, then she will find him sooner rather than later."

"Or he'll find her."

Everyone looked up as a new voice entered the conversation. Daisuke was standing there with Hiroshi as Kasumi returned quietly to her spot by the table. Her keenly tuned hospitality senses had apparently alerted her to his presence at the door before anyone else even realized there was anyone there.

"Daisuke?" Nabiki asked, frowning. "I missed something being out of school, didn't I?" she asked.

Daisuke sighed and exchanged a glance with Hiroshi. "Sorry boss," he said at last. "We tried our best to keep a lid on things, but it doesn't seem like Himura was willing to wait for you to get back."

"Is that Daisuke?" Ranma's voice came over the speakerphone.

"Ranma?!" Hiroshi yelped. He and Daisuke immediately joined the crowd around the table, staring at the phone on its surface as if it could show them their friend's face.

"Ranma, what happened!?" Daisuke asked. "We thought you were dead!"

"Or mostly dead," Hiroshi amended.

"Definitely exploded, though," Daisuke added.

"Definitely exploded, probably mostly dead, possibly entirely dead," Hiroshi summarized.

"I'm not dead!" Ranma huffed, sounding a little offended that her friends had so little faith in her. "Not like it's the first time I was at the center of an earth-shattering 'kaboom' neither! But never mind that, what's going on at school?"

Daisuke blinked. He looked up at Nabiki, as if to ask whether he should continue.
He remembers what LED to that 'kaboom' I see, Nabiki thought. She gave him a nod, doubting Himura's antics in Ranma's absence could approach what she had done directly thus far.

Daisuke sighed and plunked down at the corner of the table, running his hand through his hair. "Where to start? Okay, so… We got to school yesterday to find Himura's pretty much declared victory for all practical purposes. But you aren't gonna believe who's running with her little crew now. Konatsu."

There was dead silence around the table. Nabiki turned to see Ukyou's face go ashen.

After a moment Ukyou asked, "What did she do to him?" Her voice was dangerously quiet. Nabiki's eyes widened and she shot her sister a warning glance.

"What did she do to her, you mean," Daisuke replied. "She uh…" He glanced at the phone, a sudden flicker of guilt crossing his face. "She… we think maybe she used the potion on Konatsu."

"Are you sure?" Nabiki asked.

"Well we didn't… y'know, 'check under the hood' or anything!" Daisuke said, flushing a little. "But Rin is dead certain she's… well, physically different. Differences in height and shoulder width and stuff. But she's also acting weird. Talking about how her family was always retainers for Himura's and how… umm…" He gave Ukyou a nervous look. "And how Ukyou was… basically… keeping her as a slave…"

Ukyou bolted to her feet. Nabiki was pretty sure she'd have been out the door and gone if Akane hadn't caught her hand.

"Let me go, Akane," Ukyou growled through gritted teeth.

"Ukyou, you can't leave right now!" Akane protested. "The Amazons are hunting for us, remember?"

"What am I supposed to do, just sit here!?" Ukyou whirled on her. "This is my fault! They must have grabbed Konatsu days ago, and I was so wrapped up in my own problems…"

She turned as another hand touched hers. Wrinkled and gnarled and frail seeming, but with surprising strength behind it.

"Child… I understand your pain," Cologne said. "If true… this is a betrayal of all that we, as Amazons, value. And if the scroll is accurate about the effects of the potion, and from what your friend has said I believe that it is, then at this moment there is precious little that you can do. Whether you seek to attack Himura, or to wrench Konatsu away from her, you will only reinforce the conditioning. That is also assuming that you yourself are not captured as soon as you leave this house."

Ukyou jerked her hand away from Cologne. "Don't patronize me with this 'betrayal of Amazon values' crap!" she snarled. She pointed towards the wall of the yard, and what lay beyond. "Look around, 'Honored Elder'. You're the only Amazon who's even paying lip service to these 'values'. The rest of your people helped Himura do this! To my friend! To my family!" She glared down at the older woman. "The only reason you're here with us right now and not out there with them is because they kicked you to the curb!"

"Ukyou…!" Akane said, eyes wide.

"Don't say anything, Akane!" Ukyou growled. "This has been way too long in coming! Everything leads back to the Amazons! The scroll was your responsibility… your people lost it. The Cursed Springs were your responsibility… I guess you were napping when Genma Saotome rolled into town with his kid?! Or all the dozens of other people who have taken a dunk there recently? Then your own granddaughter can't live up to your stupid, impossible expectations and so you dunk her. And after a year of making us all miserable with your stupid games, half your damned tribe shows up and invades! So now I'm a fugitive in my own neighborhood and I can't even go help the people I care about because, apparently, caring about them has earned me the death penalty! So please, explain to me again these Amazon values!"

Her fists were clenched and she was trembling. Nabiki was terrified for a moment that she was about to attack the Elder. But then a hand touched Ukyou's shoulder. The chef whirled to see Kasumi standing there.

"Ukyou," she said softly. Nothing else. Her eyes said the rest. We understand. We hurt too.

Ukyou tensed as if she were going to bolt, but after a moment she sagged as the built up tension drained away under Kasumi's calming gaze. She stepped forward, her forehead dropping onto Kasumi's shoulder and the older girl drew her into a hug. Nabiki could hear soft sniffles now.

"It's not fair," Ukyou mumbled. "We did everything right. Everything. We worked so hard and got through so much crap and even though there were all these people clamoring for their share, we found a way for everybody to win. Everybody! Everybody could have had what they said they wanted - even the people who didn't deserve it. And they took it all away from us anyway because it still wasn't enough! We weren't… we weren't strong enough..."

"Sometimes… it's possible to do everything right and still fail," Kasumi replied softly, patting her back. "That's not weakness, Ukyou. That's life."

Nabiki felt a pang in her heart. She looked around, wishing for someone to deny that, to deny their fate. But all she saw were bowed heads, averted eyes and guilty expressions.

Has everyone given up already? Nabiki wondered. She glanced at the phone, realizing that Ranma and Ryouga had been silent as well. She felt her own gaze drop to the table as she slumped. No… they want to fight but… no one knows what to do. The enemies aren't just martial artists - they don't know how to fight them.

A small voice in the back of her head spoke up. Isn't that YOUR job?

It's not that simple! she protested. Himura has the advantage now. She has half a tribe's worth of the best martial artists of this generation, she's got the Yakuza and she's got control of Furinkan. She has us all split up and off balance, and if we even try to make a move, her little army of Amazons comes down on our heads!

Two-dimensional thinking. You're letting her set the rules of the game, the voice chided. She cheated. She and went to get extra pieces. So cheat yourself!

But where can I get extra pieces?! Nabiki gripped the side of her head in frustration. We're cut off and she's got the board so blocked up...

She blinked. Change the board.

Her eyes widened, darting back and forth as she shuffled mental blocks back and forth. Can I actually do that? There's a lot of unknowns, but if Himura is bringing in outsiders, she has to be promising them SOMETHING… She's going outside the board, taking risks. Risks means vulnerability, vulnerability she's hiding with a strong front. A grin started to tug at the corner of her mouth. It's all on credit, isn't it? It's all house made of maxed-out credit cards. And all of it is built on assuming WE play by the rules! She slapped the table with her palms. "Of course! I'm an idiot!"

"Nabiki?" Ranma's voice came over the phone. Everyone else had turned to look at her.

Nabiki looked at each of them in turn and let a slow, sly grin spread over her face. She could see their eyes widen as they realized - she had a plan.

"Ukyou. I understand how you feel and I promise you that Himura is going to pay for this, with everything she holds dear," Nabiki said, locking the chef's gaze with her own. "For right now, I need you to trust me, and to trust that I'm going to take care of Shampoo and get you your shot to rescue Konatsu. But I need you on the board with a different job."

Ukyou stared at her for a moment, then scrubbed at her eye with the heel of her hand. "If you've got a plan, sugar, let's hear it."

It wasn't quite a plan - not yet. It was more a series of partially formed plans, schemes that needed to evolve and interweave. There were a lot of assumptions, a lot of unknowns. But it was close enough. "I'm going to need you and Akane as muscle for this. But first, we need a way to get around." She pointed at Cologne. "Elder, how much do Amazons know about plumbing for a major city?"

"Nothing of note," Cologne admitted. "Why?"

"That's what I figured," Nabiki said. "We're dealing with people who are not just unfamiliar with the city, they're unfamiliar with the concept of a city. They're taking the high ground to limit our movement." She turned and pointed at Kasumi. "Kasumi, do you remember when those city workmen came and dug up our yard a couple of years ago?"

Kasumi frowned. "Well, yes, but I don't see what that has to do with it. They were coming to inspect…" she trailed off, her eyes widening.

"An old sewer access," Nabiki finished for her. "Maintenance tunnels. They run all under the city!"

She turned and looked at Daisuke and Hiroshi. "Now, some of them are probably out of service or blocked off, but in an old part of the city like Nerima there are likely more than a few. If we could use them to get around…"

"The Amazons would never see anybody leave the Tendo Dojo!" Daisuke replied.

"It's probably a maze down there, though…" Hiroshi added, considering.

"Right, but thankfully we know the people who own the land." She turned her attention to the phone. "Ranma, I need you to talk to the Kunos. They have a big library that's probably full of this stuff. We need you to get city planning documents, sewer maps, whatever they may have and get it to Hiroshi and Daisuke." She looked back at the two of them. "And you two need to take that and turn it into a map for us."

"That's… a big job, Boss…" Hiroshi said nervously.

"No… I think we can do it," Daisuke replied. "Didn't Gos say he looks for secret passages and stuff all the time? I bet you he'd know some tricks if we got him reasonably accurate documents."

Nabiki nodded, then turned back to the phone. "Ranma? Do you remember the Umisenken?"
There was a pause. "I REMEMBER it, Nabiki, I just..." she trailed off guiltily.

"You can't do it. That's fine," Nabiki replied. "Those who can, do - those who can't, teach. I need you to teach it to Ryouga. Hell, teach it to the Kunos too, if you think you can get them on board. Specifically the trick for passing unnoticed."

"How'm I supposed to do that without being able to show 'em?!" Ranma yelped.

"You've learned techniques just from reading a scroll before, and so has Ryouga," Nabiki countered. "Just describe it to them as though you were writing one of those scrolls. You all have insane ability to learn things as long as 'Martial Arts' is in the name. I know you can do this. Even if it's just the part where you can pass undetected. That's the part that we really need. Focus on that."

"I'll..." Ranma sounded uncertain, but seem to gather herself, even if her confidence sounded a bit forced. "Yeah. I'll do my best."

"Hey Boss, we appreciate the vote of confidence, but..." Hiroshi said nervously. "Wouldn't things like maps of the underground be more up the alley of that 'Alibaba' character?"

Nabiki snapped her fingers and pointed at him. "Yes. Yes it would. But if I'm going to do this right, Alibaba is going to be busy with something else - so I need you guys to step up and be Tutu Detectives for real." She smiled. "You've both already wildly exceeded my expectations for you. I trust you to do this."

"Oh... yeah... no pressure..." Hiroshi mumbled, trailing off.

"What about us?" Ukyou asked. "You said you had a different job for us?"

Nabiki nodded and swallowed, glancing at Ukyou and Akane. "Okay... this is where it gets kinda dicey... because I'm gonna be putting you two in a lot of danger to do this."

Ukyou scoffed. "I don't know if you noticed, sugar, but we kinda already are in a lot of danger."

"This is more, though," Nabiki replied, her tone serious. "This is... well, if I screw this up, this is the kind of thing you'll be running from the rest of your lives."

Akane stepped next to Ukyou, put a hand on the chef's shoulder and gave Nabiki a defiant look. "Will we be running together?" she asked.

Nabiki cracked a smile in spite of herself. "Yeah... yeah little sister. Definitely together."

Akane nodded and cracked her knuckles. "So even if we do screw up, we're better off than we were. So let's do it then!"

Nabiki took a deep breath. Mom... forgive me. I know I'm supposed to look out for my sisters, but... Her eyes flicked in the direction of the family shrine where she knew their mother's portrait was. No. You know what? You'd understand, wouldn't you?

She turned her gaze to Cologne. "So the last bit is on you, Elder. I want your word, if only because I've got no choice but to trust you to honor it. I need to know you are on our side of this thing. Not as an Amazon power play, nor as a way to get Ranma to go back to China... we tried that deal, and you didn't deliver - so it's now off the table. This is for Shampoo and her happiness and if you want to be part of her life, because I can guarantee you that after this, it's not going to be with the Amazons."
Cologne sighed heavily. "You hardly need such assurances, child. My fate was sealed the moment I invoked the covenant. But if it reassures you… very well. You have my word of honor… as an Amazon Warrior, as Matriarch of the Amazon Tribe, and as Shampoo's Great Grandmother."

Nabiki narrowed her eyes. "Even if it comes down to choosing between their survival or ours?"

Cologne raised an eyebrow. "You'll forgive me if I hope and work to ensure the situation never reaches such a dire crossroads…" She closed her eyes and took a breath. "Lo Shan and those that follow her can burn for all their short-sighted idiocy, but there are those in the village who are yet innocent. I ask only that you spare them if you can."

"I don't think the Amazons back in the Village have much to worry about, Granny," Ranma chimed in over the phone.

"That is because you are not fully aware of the peripheral players in this game, or of their scope, Ranma," Cologne replied. From how her hand twitched on her staff Nabiki got the impression she had resisted the urge to thump the phone as if it were Ranma's head. "As backwards as the Joketsuzoku might seem to you, we are well aware of the underworld in Asia, and the reach of powers like the Yakuza or the Triad." She looked up at Nabiki. "You, however, understand. And I have seen that vengeful sparkle in your eye in the eyes of others."

"If the village leaves us alone, we leave the village alone," Nabiki said, crossing her arms and glaring at the Amazon matriarch. "Failing that? No promises."

Cologne sighed. "Very well. That is the best I can ask for, I suppose." She looked up and fixed Nabiki's gaze with her own. "I presume you have a plan to recover my Great Granddaughter safely, amongst all these other schemes?"

Nabiki took a deep breath. "I do… but you're not going to like it." She turned to Hiroshi and Daisuke. "I've got another job for you."

At Hiroshi's visible wince, she held up a hand. "I know I've already given you a lot. This isn't big, but it might be delicate. Maybe you can get Rin to help, but I need you to get Mousse on board."

Ranma hung up the phone with a sigh. The conversation had ended with some confusing talk about real estate listings and internet searches which went over her head, but she had caught the gist: They were going to rely on Mousse as their best hope to rescue Shampoo.

"Not like I'd be any help, Ranma thought bitterly. I'd either be useless or possibly end up shredding Mousse by accident. She glanced at her hand, flexing it experimentally, but there was no sign of the ki claws she had instinctively used against Lo Shan. I wonder if this is what Akane felt like when she kept on getting sidelined… She shook her head. At least Akane could still throw a punch!"

She felt a hand on her shoulder and a surge of supportive feelings through the Link. She sighed and covered the hand with her own. "Damnit Ryouga, you make it really hard to work up a good sulk, you know?"

Ryouga blinked, and she could sense confusion from him. "I… uhh… Sorry? Should I…?" He started to pull his hand away.

"No, dumbass!" Ranma grumbled and pulled his hand back, wrapping both her hands around it. "I'm joking. We really gotta work on your sense of humor."
"Sorry, I just… I'm used to sarcasm from people I don't like. I'm still getting the hang of… you know, friendly sarcasm." He rubbed the back of his head with his free hand.

Ranma smirked and freed a hand for a light punch to his shoulder. "It was always friendly from me, dummy!"

"Didn't always feel that way…" Ryoga admitted.

Ranma sobered. "Yeah… I mean, I get that. I learned the same thing from Akane. I always took it too far." She squeezed his hand. "Sorry."

"It's okay!" Ryoga said quickly. "It's… we just gotta figure things out, right?"

"We're… kinda terrible at that," Ranma replied sheepishly.

"Then we just gotta get Nabiki to figure them out for us," Ryoga amended.

Ranma snorted. "If someone would have told me a year ago I'd have ended up a part of Nabiki Tendo's harem…"

"I'd have believed them completely," Ryoga deadpanned. "Maybe not the 'willing' part, though."

Ranma glared defiantly before the facade crumbled and she hung her head. "Fine… willing, even…" she looked up and growled, "but so are you! That means she gets to tease you as much as she wants. You realize that, right? And more."

Ryoga frowned. "That's not… I mean…" His eyes widened. "Oh God… I'm doomed…"

Ranma patted him on the head. "Good boy. It's a lot easier if you just accept your fate once you realize the truth. Anyway, we should track down Kodachi and K-Tatewaki."

Ryoga stood next to her. "You think Nabiki's plan will work?"

Ranma shrugged. "Actually, knowing her? She's probably got like… twelve plans going on at once. But as far as our bit?" She scratched the back of her head as she led him out of their shared room. "I dunno… I mean, a week ago? Sure, I coulda taught you the Umisenken. But that assumed that I could show it to you. Even I had to have Pops show it to me. How do I teach you something I can't do myself?"

"I figured out the Shi shi Hokodan from a scroll and you figured it out just from seeing me use it," Ryoga shrugged. "We don't gotta learn the whole thing, right? Just how to pass unnoticed?"

"Still…" Ranma remained unconvinced as they walked into the dining hall.

Kodachi and Tatewaki were already seated. They had not been up when Ranma and Ryoga had opted for breakfast, and it seemed they were now having their own. The luxury of not having to walk to school, Ranma guessed.

"Ah, we had feared you would not be joining us for breakfast!" Kodachi said brightly. "Your last call home did not go well, judging by your expression yesterday, and I had feared more of the same."

Ranma managed a smile that didn't feel entirely forced. "We grabbed some rolls and stuff from the servants earlier. Umm… stuff is better. Nabiki's got a plan now." She rubbed the back of her head. "Actually… we were kinda… hoping you'd help?"
Kodachi blinked, then exchanged a glance with her brother, then back to Ranma. "Ran, dear, whatever gave you the impression we would do anything but?" she replied, taking a sip of her tea.

Past experience? History of mental health issues? GIGANTIC MURDEROUS WASHING MACHINE IN YOUR BASEMENT!? Ranma thought, but managed to confine her response to a shrug.

Kodachi sighed. "My darling Ran… My own personal affection for you aside, have you forgotten that your enemies… these gaijin invaders… have attacked our home? Assaulted both the guests we have given our word to protect and my dear brother with deadly force?" She calmly put her teacup down. "If there is a plan through which we might gain rightful vengeance upon them then you will have our full support and participation," Kodachi said with a force that belied her pleasant smile.

"While most of my experience with Nabiki's scheming has been during my… period of confusion, her skill at strategy and manipulation has never been in doubt, as my own personal finances can attest," Tatewaki added. "If it is within our power to grant it, you shall have whatever aid you require."

Ranma took a deep breath. "Good. I mean, we don't actually need much right now. But it might be something only you have." She glanced between them. "Umm… remember how you said you Kunos used to own pretty much all of Nerima? You wouldn't happen to have… like… old sewer maps or construction charts for irrigation tunnels or stuff like that… would you?"

Kodachi raised an eyebrow. "Is that all? That's hardly a request worth noting!" She snapped her fingers to summon a servant. "I shall have the help go through the library. Our archive of the development of the region is quite extensive."

Tatewaki leaned forward. "Is there a particular reason for this request?"

"Nabiki is hoping we can map out underground routes to get around without the Amazons seeing us," Ryoga said. "I can do some tunnelling on my own with my Bakusai Tenketsu but… Nabiki felt I probably shouldn't start digging tunnels under the foundations of Tokyo with explosive martial arts techniques if it can be helped."

Tatewaki nodded. "I see. Prudent. Perhaps Sasuke, in his duties as clan ninja, has some insight to share as well?" He glanced to the left. There was a poof of smoke, and Sasuke was kneeling as it cleared.

"I am deeply honored you seek my counsel, Master Kuno!" Sasuke gushed, barely able to restrain tears as he remained with his head down. "This humble servant is unworthy of such an honor! Truly, my ancestors must be weeping in the heavens to know…"

"Yes, yes, but do you know anything of the tunnels beneath the city?" Tatewaki interrupted. Sasuke looked up, laughed nervously and rubbed the back of his head. "Uh, well… no, but I am ever so flattered that you asked!"

"Oh… I would have thought…" Tatewaki trailed off, frowning. "Is it not prudent for a ninja to be aware of all available stealthy routes?"

"Aheh… heh…" Sasuke's nervous laughter trailed off weakly, before he immediately prostrated himself before Tatewaki. "Please forgive me, Master Kuno! I know I should be a good ninja and know these things, but… but… it smells! And then there was that American movie… with the clown… and… and I just can't…"

"Sasuke, you are utterly useless!" Kodachi huffed, earning a cringe from the servant ninja.

"Peace, sister," Tatewaki said.

"I am a failure as a ninja and a retainer!" Sasuke wailed

"No… Sasuke… It was merely an inquiry, this was not…” Tatewaki said weakly, trying to placate the forlorn servant.

Kodachi ignored the scene and turned to Ranma and Ryouga. "No matter. We will manage on our own. Come, have something more than rolls to eat, both of you, then we will see what we have in the library."

Ranma felt a little awkward sitting down while the little ninja was still sobbing and cowering in the corner of the room, but he seemed deaf to Tatewaki's attempts to reassure him. Her stomach grumbled at her, reminding her rather sternly that she had been neglecting it as of late. She started filling her plate with food from the spread, deciding to worry about what to do next after the hollow in her belly had been filled.

Breakfast was passed quietly, the silent agreement to focus on eating first, and strategizing and whatnot afterwards. Ranma found that despite the grimness of her situation, the idea that there was some kind of plan, no matter how nebulous, did a great deal to restore her appetite.

I've been relying on Nabiki an awful lot, she mused as she shoveled rice into her mouth with something approaching her traditional gusto. Is that really okay? I used to handle my own fights.

She raised her head and glanced around the table, taking a moment to ponder the scene. Yeah, and doing it the Saotome Way got me where, exactly? One month after hooking up with Nabiki and I'm having breakfast with three of the people who most wanted me dead. The fiancee situation is basically solved. And as messed up as what my family did may have been, Nabiki almost beat Himura to the punch. She shook her head. The difference between a Warrior and a General. I got a lot to learn to fight on this level.

They finished up, the servants coming to get the dishes. Kodachi touched Ranma's shoulder as she walked past.

"Ran, dear, would you mind talking with me in private a moment?"

Ranma blinked. She swallowed nervously, some of that old wariness surfacing. After all, the truth was out now, and even though Kodachi had said she was fine with the revelation that her fiance was in fact a girl, and that she had been in the dark for almost two years, the Kunos were nothing if not mercurial. At least in the past. Ranma was still having trouble wrapping her head around what to think about the current 'sanity' kick.

She followed Kodachi into the hallway, glancing back to see Tatewaki and Ryouga deep in discussion of something, not having noticed her departure. She wondered if that was intentional. Cautiously, she followed her hostess, uncertain what lay in store, until they reached a turn in the corridor.

"Hey, Kodachi? I don't think this is the way to…” Ranma started but, as soon as she fully rounded the corner, she was grabbed and pressed back against the wall. She gasped, for a moment as the shadows concealed her assailant. Before she could utter a sound, soft lips pressed to hers and a lithe, definitely female, body pressed her flat to the wall. Her eyes adjusted enough for her to make out Kodachi's dark curls.

At first she stiffened, as she always would have in the past. But the last month had accustomed her more to such things, as well as a definite lack of malleting. She had been on the receiving end of a lot of female kissing recently and, in spite of herself, she found herself relaxing and simply going with it. Kodachi was warm and soft in all the right places, her hair smelled nice and, surprisingly, she was an excellent kisser. There were things she was doing with her tongue that suggested she could give Shampoo pointers.

After what felt like a few seconds and half an hour simultaneously, Kodachi broke the kiss. Ranma gasped softly, her lungs craving air, but at the same time she nearly leaned back in for more. It was only Kodachi's sad expression that stopped her, cutting through the bubble of carbonated hormones.

"Nothing..." she said softly. "As I feared. I'm so sorry, my Darling Ranma but..." She shook her head and released Ranma, stepping back, bowing her head and hugging herself. "I... I needed to know. If... if my love could see past the circumstances of your gender. I fear it cannot."

"I... I don't... what?" Ranma mumbled, still confused, dazed, a more than a little aroused.

Kodachi sighed, giving her a sad smile. "I am not inclined towards my own gender. Attending an all-girls school proved this to me quite adequately. Yet... I still hoped that perhaps... perhaps what I felt for you could transcend such things." She shook her head. "Yet even now, I find my affection for you becoming more sisterly in nature than romantic. I... am sorry. I cannot marry you."

She kisses like that when she's NOT into it?! a part of Ranma's mind boggled. She ruthlessly shoved it down, wrestling her libido to the curb in favor of a rational response. "You... were still planning to marry me? After all of this?"

"It was an option. Though admittedly more strategic than romantic even before I confirmed the truth," Kodachi admitted. "I had thought to bring you into the Kuno clan as a spouse, so that certain... 'protections' we are afforded by our connections would come into play, as well as getting you away from your wicked, wicked mother." She sighed. "But... I am unwilling to subject myself to a loveless marriage, even for such a noble goal."

"But... how... I mean..." Ranma stammered. "We're both girls, we can't..."

Kodachi smirked. "You are charmingly old fashioned sometimes, my dear Ran. You are correct such things are not possible in Japan, but the Netherlands are a quick flight away. Or Canada... I hear British Columbia is wonderful this time of year... Trust me, the legalities are hardly an obstacle to one of my means."

Two girls can get married? Ranma swallowed. That concept added a weird new dimension to her whole romantic hypercube. "That's... I mean..." she stammered nervously.

Kodachi waved her hand. "No need for such panic. I've already determined that such a route will not work for us." She rubbed her chin and looked Ranma up and down. "You... don't happen to have any lingering affection for my brother, do you?"

"NO!" Ranma said quickly, backing up against the wall. Sane or not, marrying Tatewaki was still one of her recurring nightmares.

Kodachi sighed. "I thought not. Hopefully my dear brother's newfound mental stability will help him to stop coming on quite so strongly. He tends to scare away any girl in whom he shows any true interest." She shrugged. "It's the messier, more difficult option legally, but I suppose we will simply have to proceed with the original plan of adoption."

"I… wait… adoption!?” Ranma yelped. "Kodachi, what are you talking about!?"

"You really didn't think I would leave my first true friend in the clutches of such an awful family, did you, Ran?” Kodachi asked. She smiled, one of those rare, genuine smiles, and put a hand on her shoulder. "I had begun laying the groundwork for adopting you into our clan long before I knew that you and my Darling Ranma were one and the same, from the moment you told me of your plight. Little did I know it was actually worse than you portrayed it! I had planned to wrest Ranma away through marriage, and use the distraction of it to convince your mother to sign away her unwanted daughter to add to our family roll. Now that I know the truth, it is likely to be somewhat more complicated and protracted, but I am still confident we can easily build a case for your emancipation and adoption into Clan Kuno."

"You… want… to adopt me?” Ranma repeated dumbly.

"Of course! I imagine you will eventually want to marry Hibiki, but his family is painfully common, it would be much better for him to take your name when that time comes, and by that I mean the name Kuno." She squeezed her shoulder. "Come along, we can discuss the details as we walk to the archives."

"I… me? As a Kuno!?" Ranma mumbled, staring sightlessly ahead.

"I imagine our father will be apoplectic," Kodachi replied, "Assuming he survives that building I dropped on him. Thankfully, he abdicated his leadership of the clan to my brother ages ago."

Ranma blinked. "And… wait… you seriously felt nothing from that kiss?"

Kodachi tittered. "Oh, it was hardly unpleasant, dear Ran, if a bit… unrefined. Your technique will naturally need a great deal of work. But there was no stirring of the loins I fear. Perhaps if you had been more attentive when you were a man… But it's pointless to speculate."

"But… How did… where did you learn to kiss like that?!” Ranma asked, wondering what else she didn't know about her former fiancee.

"I thought I told you? I went to an all girls school, and there it became quite clear that I am not attracted to my own gender," Kodachi said matter-of-factly. "Was is not obvious? How else would I be certain I am not interested, without experimentation?"

"You kissed other girls at school!?” Ranma asked, eyes wide open.

"Yes?” Kodachi frowned. "How else were we to practise our technique? I presume they do the same in the all-boys schools, do they not?"

"No! They do not!” Ranma said. "And I'm pretty sure girl's schools aren't like that either!"

"Really?” Kodachi frowned. "Well… I suppose that's six academic credits wasted."

"They taught a course!?"

"Such a shame. My marks in that class brought up my GPA too," Kodachi clucked her tongue.
Mousse had found staying in his duck form to be the prudent choice in light of yesterday's revelations. The form's improved eyesight and mobility was an advantage in searching for Shampoo (Not that he'd had any success yet) and it kept him clear of any Joketsuzoku spotting him.

He was grateful to Rin and her friends for warning him. He had barely left the school to start his search when he started noticing them. They weren't trying very hard to hide themselves, at least from being seen from the air, and their colorful war silks were distinctive. Had he tried travelling in his natural form, he would inevitably have been spotted.

What on Earth do the elders hope to gain by this? he mused as he banked, scanning the surroundings for any likely signs of Shampoo or Young Mi. Is all of this just for Ranma Saotome?

In spite of himself, he felt a pang of sympathy for his rival. Returning as the husband of the strongest warrior of her generation, and an accomplished and acknowledged warrior himself? That would be one thing. But if Ranma was captured and dragged home as a war prize, Mousse had a fairly good idea of how he would be treated. The three adjectives the bespectacled martial artist would apply to his future life were 'Nasty', 'Brutish' and 'Short'.

Granted, Mousse's opinion was colored by his own poor experiences. The last time a war party had returned home with spoils and slaves had been long before he was born. But Mousse was well acquainted with the laws in the village surrounding males and, if old wartime covenants were being invoked, it wasn't likely that the situation back home was terribly progressive.

I had thought things were getting better for males, slowly, but surely, he thought glumly. While he had known the price of exiling himself, the past year had kindled a hope in him that he might return home. For all her scorn for him, Elder Khu Long did not seem opposed to the idea. In fact, she had always acknowledged him as an Amazon. Ironic that I would come to think of the old monkey as 'progressive'. But it seems she is at that.

He finished another fruitless search pattern then, noticing where the sun hung in the sky, he banked and beat his wings to make up lost time. It took only a few minutes for a now-familiar house to enter his view and he dropped down into a nearby alleyway. He produced a small thermos from his feathers and opened the top, the still-hot water inside triggering the change.

Unlike other Jusenkyo sufferers, he changed fully clothed - a trick of his hidden weapon mastery. He knew Genma Saotome used a similar technique to keep his own clothing between changes and wondered why the man had never bothered to pass the technique to Ranma. Perhaps I might offer to train the rest of them as a peace offering? he mused. Part of him recoiled at the idea but he imagined it would be something Rin would approve of. She was right in her assertion that he needed to find ways to move on and let go of his obsession with Shampoo.

Speaking of which… he stepped out around the corner at the expected time. He did not wish to appear to be waiting for her but, at the same time, he did not wish to not be present when she came out. Thankfully, Rin was remarkably punctual and, no sooner than he had stepped out onto the street, he saw her leaving her front door.

He watched her a moment as she said goodbye to her mother. Her smile was bright and genuine, though he could see the edge of strain in her expression. Keeping the worries of the last few weeks from her parents must have been difficult for such an open girl. He noticed her mother took some extra time fussing over her and guessed that the woman could sense that something was wrong.

Like father with me, each time I went out to deal with my peers, Mousse thought, recognizing something familiar in it. He felt a small pang of dread at the thought of Rin following his path, but immediately brushed it off. After all, unlike him, Rin had a strong circle of friends to support her, and tremendous gifts to carry her through life.

She turned and spotted him standing in his usual spot and smiled. He felt a warmth run through him at that and found a smile coming to his own lips, unbidden. Something about Rin's smile was reassuring and made his problems, numerous as they might be, seem less oppressive.

"Mu Tsu!" she called as she jogged over to him, her ponytail bobbing behind her. She bounced right up to him and grinned up at him, accentuating the rather dramatic difference in their heights. "You didn't have to wait long, I hope?"

He shook his head. "I never do. You're very punctual." He raised his head and exchanged a glance with her mother, who gave him a stern, though not hostile, look. The message was quite clear; he was to be a gentleman around her daughter, though the smile on her face told him she did not disapprove. Like so many others, she had simply begun to assume that they were a couple.

They turned and began walking towards Furinkan. Mouse wasn't really bothered by the assumptions. Both he and Rin knew where they stood with each other, and that was fine. After all, what he felt for Rin was nothing like his feelings for Shampoo or Young Mi.

Still... I wish there had been someone like Rin in the village when I was growing up, he thought, mulling it over in his head. Or perhaps that I had simply been born here, and not as an Amazon. Maybe things would have been different.

He chewed on that for a moment. When had he fallen in love with Shampoo? It had been so long ago... they were both children... The other Amazons had shunned him, first for his poor eyesight, and later for relying on the artifice of Outsider medicine to correct his vision. Shampoo had never cared about his glasses. Before he had begun to profess his love for her, they had even been friendly. He could see now that she had been trying to be kind when she told him she could only marry a strong man, which is what had led him to start challenging her, and...

"Mu Tsu?" Rin asked, tugging his sleeve lightly. "Are you okay? You haven't said anything since we started walking."

Mousse blinked, coming back to himself. He glanced at Rin, and again felt that odd, unquantifiable sensation that she stirred in him. "I'm... Just thinking," he said.

"O-oh. I guess that makes sense. You have a lot on your mind right now," Rin said, releasing his sleeve and looking away. "I-I can't imagine being in your shoes. I... I wish I could do more." She shook her head. "Maybe if I had helped you write that letter faster..."

Mousse shook his head. "Where could I have sent it that Young Mi would have received it?" he asked contemplatively. "If I had written that letter a year ago, then perhaps."

"Y-you didn't know who I was back then," Rin replied.

"I wish I had," Mousse answered without thinking. It was the simple truth, after all.

Rin blushed and shook her head, looking away. "I-I... I mean... I knew who you were. You were around all the time. You were always fighting with Senpai or following Ms. Shampoo around. I don't think I could have gotten up the nerve to s-say 'hello' even if you weren't busy."

Mousse frowned. He pondered that... it was true he was perpetually distracted. When your world was mostly a blur with only a couple of reference points, other people weren't often something you really noticed. But there was still something wrong with her statement. "I think you would have," he said after a moment.
Rin squeaked a bit and looked up at him. Even with his poor vision he could see color had come to her cheeks.

"You approached me as soon as I was approachable, did you not?" He found himself smiling a little. "You are one of the most fearless people I know, Rin."

"E-ep..." Rin's face most definitely went red and she ducked her head. Mousse felt slightly guilty at having caused her discomfort but, at the same time, a small burst of satisfaction at the knowledge that she valued his opinion of her so highly.

It was nothing like with Shampoo or Young Mi. Such an easy back and forth would be unthinkable. Though it oddly reminded him of the banter between his parents in better days.

He squinted down the road. He couldn't quite make out the blur of the buildings, but he knew they had to be getting close to the school. Being seen by the Amazons there would be dangerous.

"Are we close to the school?" he asked, cringing a bit at the need to admit he had lost track. He was usually very careful at estimating distances to compensate for his bad eyesight.

"Hmmm? Oh! Yes..." She cocked her head and looked at him. "You should probably go, right? There are Amazons at the school now, and it'd be bad if they caught you here."

He nodded. "I'll resume my search for Young Mi and Shampoo then. I'll check in at lunch?"

Rin blushed. "I... I'd like that, but... is it safe?" She started to fidget with her ponytail. "I-I mean... you don't even have to walk me to and from school, really. It's not like we're working on your letter anymore."

Mousse blinked. He hadn't even considered that! Exposing himself like this was potentially dangerous and, without the letter, what was his reason for walking Rin to and from school? She wasn't in any direct danger from the goings on. It would make more sense for him to focus all his efforts on the search from now onwards.

"I..." He opened his mouth, and the words died on his tongue. He closed his mouth, confused at his own reaction, opened it again and finally found himself saying "I will... keep that in mind."

"B-but... you're still going to come anyway?" Rin asked nervously, her fidgeting worsening.

He nodded quickly. Again, guilt at the notion of causing her unnecessary distress warred with an odd, prideful swell at the notion that she wanted him around despite pragmatic concerns. It was wholly different that the grudging tolerance he was occasionally granted by Shampoo, or the mad possessiveness of Young Mi, though he still couldn't quite put his finger on how. "I will be there." He turned and leapt for the rooftops.

000

"Hey, Sayuri!"

Sayuri hesitated for a moment. Part of her wanted to just pretend she didn't hear Daisuke's hail - the same part of her that had considered calling out sick today. She sighed, brushed away the urge and slowed her pace, though she didn't turn her head to look at him.

"Sayuri!" He repeated his hail as he and Hiroshi jogged up to flank her and slowed their paces to match hers. "Hey, glad we caught you..."
Sayuri sighed heavily. "So what did Nabiki have to say?" she asked.

"Quite a bit," Hiroshi rubbed the back of his head. "Seems that she's gearing up for a fight."

"It's actually worse than we thought. Himura has Nerima cased by a whole mess of Chinese Amazons who she's convinced to work for her… including at least one elder. Shampoo got kidnapped by that crazy circus lady and, apparently, there's Yakuza and Triad wheeling and dealing going on," Daisuke added. "But… good news! Ranma is okay!"

"And… probably a girl forever," Hiroshi chimed in.

"Not that that's necessarily a bad thing," Daisuke hastily amended.

"Well, except for the engagements," Hiroshi noted.

Sayuri stopped a moment. She closed her eyes and clenched her fists.

"Sayuri…?" Daisuke asked nervously.

"Why am I even part of this?! she thought. I was okay on the sidelines. I was! Cheering on Akane and occasionally Ranma and just being one of Akane's normal, chatty friends! "So… what has any of this got to do with me?" she muttered.

Daisuke blinked. "You're… kidding, right?"

Sayuri raised her head to glare at him. "Well? What exactly has any of this got to do with volleyball? That's what I signed on for, remember?"

Daisuke put a hand on her shoulder and looked her in the eyes. "It's got to do with taking Himura Tanaka down a couple of pegs. That's what we all signed on for. Remember?"

Sayuri blinked then closed her eyes and nodded. "I know… I know, okay? But… Can we actually do that?" She opened her eyes and gave him an imploring look. "A couple of months ago my biggest worry was saving enough of my allowance for a shopping trip with my friends, and maybe fishing for the latest gossip about Ranma from Akane. Now…?" Her shoulders slumped. "Friends are getting hurt. I'm getting hurt. Everything has been blown completely out of proportion."

"So… then take Himura's deal?" Daisuke said. "She offered you an out. If you want out…"

"NO!" Sayuri said, with a vehemence that startled even herself. She forced herself to take a breath. "No… you don't understand, Daisuke. I hate her. I hate her so much!" She clenched her fists and shuddered. "I want nothing more than for her to burn for what she did to me… what she put me through… what she puts everyone through who ends up under her thumb! But…" her fists unclenched, "but I hurt Yuka. I could end up hurting Riko and Rin, too. Himura has taken on the strongest people I know… Ranma, Akane, Nabiki… and she's winning." She shook her head. "Hating Himura seems so… I don't know… pointless."

"Isn't that kind of what Himura wants you to feel?" Daisuke asked. "That she's… too big to be worth getting mad about? That you can't do anything about her?"

"Can we do anything about her?" Sayuri asked.

She blinked at the wide, slightly sinister grin that spread across Daisuke's face. She glanced at Hiroshi and saw a similar, if somewhat more subdued version of the smile.
"Oh yeah," Daisuke replied. "The boss has a plan."

"It's a crazy plan," Hiroshi admitted.

"Probably dangerous," Daisuke added.

"Definitely dangerous," Hiroshi corrected.

"Just tell me if Himura finally gets what's coming to her?" Sayuri asked, exasperated.

Daisuke smirked. "Can you think of anyone who's better at revenge than Nabiki Tendo?"

Sayuri set her jaw. Finally, she nodded. "All right… what do I need to do?"

000

Cologne could sense her old pupil long before she actually arrived. Her ki was as vibrant and vigorous as ever, and it was quite obvious she was making no attempt to mask her presence as she approached.

Cologne sighed, taking a puff of her pipe. She quietly instructed the youngsters to stay in the house… Akane protested, of course, and Ukyou looked as if she wished to. That was no surprise, though she felt an odd sense of pride at their spirit. They knew what they were up against and remained unafraid. Most of that was simply attributable to ignorance, but such blind defiance reminded her of her younger days.

Nabiki remained quiet and watched. From her lack of protest Cologne presumed the girl likely already had some means to covertly listen in. Not that it mattered, so long as she was discreet enough to avoid provoking Lo Shan.

She hopped out into the yard and settled on one of the large stones next to the pond. She avoided selecting the largest one; Lo Shan would inevitably seek that one herself and see claiming it as a subtle sign of dominance. The girl was always so wrapped up in such petty power plays that she missed subtler manipulations.

Lo Shan's arrival was silent; she made barely a sound as her feet touched down on the largest stone, just as Cologne predicted. The middle-aged woman knelt and bowed her head in a token show of respect, though it was intentionally lazy and sloppy. Another power move. "Honored Elder."

Cologne took her time, cleaning her pipe, repacking it with tobacco and finally lighting it, taking some small, petty enjoyment as she could see the younger woman's posture stiffen at the slight. She took a long drag from the pipe and then blew a smoke ring. "Am I now?" she asked archly.

"Your underlings implied otherwise."

A smirk tugged at the corner of Lo Shan's mouth. "While the council may have decided it was past time for you to retire, you are still a great source of wisdom and experience, and you remain teacher to many of us. It would be foolish of me not to acknowledge this and afford you the respect your… seniority affords you, even if we are in disagreement."

Oh, thinking I'm senile, are we?" Cologne chuckled internally. "You got tired of waiting for me to move on in my own time, I see." She took another puff of her pipe.

"Your time was already well past before I even became elder," Lo Shan replied and, deciding Cologne was not going to acknowledge her bow, stood, looming over the tiny, frail-seeming woman. "It is my turn now."

Cologne sighed, finally looking up at her former pupil. Lo Shan was dressed in traditional war silks, functional and elegant, though Cologne could see she was allowing the sleeves to obscure her hands entirely. "It's not about 'turns', child."

Lo Shan's face twisted into a scowl. "I am not a child, Khu Long."

"Oh? Aren't you?" Cologne replied, arching an eyebrow. "Then why do you hide your injury from me like one?" She took her staff and levelled it at Lo Shan's left sleeve, poking to reveal that there was nothing beneath.

Lo Shan's scowl deepened. She rolled back the sleeve and revealed her arm, the bandaged stump ending a short ways after the elbow. "I am hiding nothing. This... mutilation was caused by the Godslayer... your pupil. A pupil who is powerful... and dangerously out of control. That she caused me such grievous injury is merely evidence that I am right - that they must be contained and carefully managed."

Cologne clucked her tongue. "Poking a caged tiger until it breaks free and maims you does not justify caging it in the first place, Lo Shan." She got slowly to her feet, as if greatly tired. She found acting according to Lo Shan's expectations of age tended to make the younger woman underestimate her.

"And the excuse of poor training does not make the tiger any less dangerous, or any less in need of being caged," Lo Shan shot back. "Was it you who taught them the Neko Ken?"

Cologne raised an eyebrow. "Oh? Was that what she used? No, don't be ridiculous... even if I was sufficiently senile to indulge in such idiocy, she was far too old by the time I met her for the training. It was her idiot father."

Lo Shan crossed her arms and snorted. "And knowing that you still fail to see that males inherently lack the responsibility necessary to wield and pass on the Art?"

"I prefer to judge on an individual basis. I have made my share of mistakes in teaching what should not have, and to whom I should not have." She saw Lo Shan visibly bristle as the jab hit the mark. "But while sparring with you with words is endlessly entertaining to this old woman, I suspect you did not come to chip away at what little time I have left with idle japery. Why have you come, Lo Shan?"

Lo Shan's eyes narrowed. "You know why. You are the one who invoked the covenants! You know what they stipulate."

Cologne chuckled. "I am fully aware of the covenants, yes. But I am also well aware that you have a tendency to ignore or drag your feet on such rules when you find them inconvenient. You are remarkably prompt, especially with such a fresh injury to give you ample excuse to delay. So I repeat my question: Why have you come, Lo Shan?"

Though her good hand was hidden in her sleeve, Cologne could tell the younger woman had clenched it just by looking into her eyes. There was a hardness there, a fury, and beneath it... avarice.

"You are as infuriating as ever, my former teacher," Lo Shan muttered. "I am here to negotiate the terms of a truce, so that we may resolve this situation without further bloodshed."

"Oh?" Cologne could immediately smell the rat. You have the clear advantage, yet you choose to negotiate on my terms? What are you REALLY up to? "Lost your taste for it when it was your own blood being spilled, did you?"

Lo Shan did not let the barb stick that time. "Such things are expected in any conflict, especially one with stakes such as these."

Cologne raised an eyebrow. "Why are the stakes so high, Lo Shan? Are the Joketsuzoku so desperately in need of men that it calls for the sacrifice of flesh of one of our most powerful and seasoned warriors?"

Lo Shan's eyes narrowed. "You have been away for some time, Elder. You are uninformed about the current circumstances of the village."

"Am I?" Cologne put out her pipe and hopped up on her staff. "I had thought my correspondence with the Council was meant to keep me appraised of such drastic shifts. I wonder why none of this made it into their missives? They did seem unusually vapid and devoid of meaningful news, even for them. I'm sure it was an oversight. Thankfully now that you are here, you can educate me."

Lo Shan scowled. "I do not like your implication, Elder. Remember your place! An Honored Elder you remain, but a member of the Council you are not."

"I am quite aware of my current position. In case you have forgotten, I am currently disputing it. And you are using my ignorance as justification for removing me from my position, and using my lack of position as justification for facilitating my ignorance. For one I used to be able to rely upon for being straight forward to a fault, you have become twisted and confused. It is not a good look for you."

"Would you prefer me as the easily manipulated child you once trained?" Lo Shan shot back. "The one you abandoned when she failed to meet your impossible expectations? Or is your great granddaughter now filling that role? By the way… my condolences on her loss."

That one hit a bit close to the mark, but Cologne was not so easily baited. "She is not yet dead, or you would be gloating far more. Is that what you would have me believe the motivation behind this is? Jealousy? Resentment?" She shook her head. "Shall I speculate then?" She began to hop around the stones of the pond, one at a time, big and small, her staff perfectly balanced on each. "You saw growing anxiety within the village. The Musk had resurfaced, the Phoenix Tribe stirred, and the People's Republic grows ever more ambitious and repressive in turns. The people of the village saw potential disaster all around. You saw opportunity."

"Should I have not?" Lo Shan replied. "You were doing nothing to quell those fears, and the Council had fallen to indolence and complacency."

Cologne paused. She closed her eyes and bowed her head. "Perhaps on that point you are right. I have been greatly wrapped up in my own affairs. But it's not the question of whether action was called for, but what action you took." She turned to face Lo Shan. "Did you believe invading another country and kidnapping a child would ease these woes? Do the people truly believe that?"

Lo Shan scoffed. "The people know little and less. The Council is content to be led. And the boy is a prize. An important one, but merely that."

"Then all of this is a farce, isn't it?" Cologne replied. "A convenient excuse to get the Council to loan you warriors and give you leave to bring them to Japan. Why are you really here?"

Lo Shan smirked. "I have no idea what you are talking about, Elder."
And your poker face is as terrible as always. A question to put to my NEWEST student then, Cologne thought grimly. But it’s time to finish playing out this farce. "Then why are you here, speaking to me? I presume my position allows me to know that much at least? Or must we talk in circles some more?"

"Oh, by all means, let’s get to business,” Lo Shan replied. "Firstly… I wish to apologize for my warriors’ rough handling of your pupils. Though the Council rejects their status as adopted Joketsuzoku, they are blameless for your misuse of the law and the impropriety of your acceptance of them as disciples. We merely wished to secure them to ensure they did not interfere."

"Given the circumstances, I believe I can do little to sway them against interfering in the future, should your intentions continue to be to snatch away their beloved. Though given the performance of your warriors, and that the least experienced of the three of my disciples counted coup against one of them, perhaps you should return to the village to fetch more."

Cologne noticed the flicker across Lo Shan's face. She allowed herself a satisfied smirk. "Or did you not notice that a war hammer was missing? Did your warriors fail to mention that? Or that they had the girls surrounded and surprised?"

Lo Shan’s jaw tensed.

"Always one to be so concerned with keeping Face, aren't you? Cologne thought, bemused. Still, best not to needle too hard."

"That is their choice to make," Lo Shan said tightly. "But for the time being, given the stalemate and in the interests of avoiding… regrettable casualties… we are offering a temporary truce. Our purpose here is the Godslayer, and seeing to it that they fulfil their obligations to the Joketsuzoku. Too many bystanders have gotten involved."

"Her obligation," Cologne said. "You mean her obligation to my granddaughter?"

Lo Shan smirked. "I think even if the Council had not annulled that claim, you would see that pursuing it is pointless. Unless you seek to fulfill the original Kiss of Death?" She shook her head. "The Council seeks recompense for the many techniques that have been shared with the Godslayer, the aid and comfort that has been provided, and recompense for the instability they have sewn by their conduct against the Musk and the Phoenix Tribe."

Cologne’s eyes narrowed. "You deny Ranma is male to invalidate my granddaughter's claim, yet seek to claim her as a male, to fulfill some debt that was neither agreed upon nor brought to her attention? Your legal grounds are so shaky as to be nonexistent, Lo Shan!"

"The Godslayer is an Outsider. No laws need apply to them. As I said, they are a prize. A weapon we must possess to protect ourselves and ward off our enemies," Lo Shan sniffed. "You afford far too much courtesy to these Outsiders."

"I treat them as people," Cologne replied.

"That is your mistake. It is ours no longer," Lo Shan replied coldly.

"So you would try and force her? This weapon that your enemies so fear? Rather than bring her home willingly, as I was on the cusp of doing?" Cologne said. She was finding herself growing a little impatient with Lo Shan's brazen hubris.

"You would bring them home as a conqueror. To be free to spread their unrestrained ideas and chauvinism throughout the village, and with a harem of outsiders to reinforce them. You’ve filled their heads with ideas of independence, and merely reinforced their damaged upbringing. They would never accept a male's proper place without… correction. Or worse, now they might seek to be accepted as a female, as an equal. Would you have such an individual as leader of our Council, Elder?"

Cologne chuckled. "I actually think it would be quite refreshing, yes. Ranma is quite inexperienced, but hardly the worst choice, though definitely not my first. Certainly the village can and has done worse."

Lo Shan shook her head. "They were raised as a weapon, Elder. A weapon is meant to be kept sharp, used well and put away when not needed. But I can see I waste my time trying to convince you." She moved to cross her arms, then aborted, though not before Cologne noticed the slight awkwardness. "The residents of the Tendo Dojo and their allies shall not be assaulted, and are free to move about the Nerima Ward and do as they see fit, so long as they do not similarly assault those of the Joketsuzoku. Formal challenges are, of course, allowed, but are not to be to the death, and must be accepted by both parties. Those who currently shelter Ranma Saotome are likewise given such leave, with no requirement to surrender the Godslayer. Also, the grounds of Kuno Castle shall be considered off-limits, as will remain the Tendo Dojo. The Joketsuzoku will also not hamper Ranma Saotome, provided that they do not attempt to leave Nerima Ward. We understand they have an ongoing challenge with one of their peers. Should Ranma fail this challenge, their peer shall have the authority to remand them to our care, the truce will be ended, and we shall return to the village to begin deliberations regarding the fate of you and your granddaughter. Should Ranma succeed, we will issue a challenge of our own. So long as Ranma accepts this challenge and abides by our rule upon our victory, you will receive… some consideration, and the rest will be left to go about their lives. Including your Great granddaughter."

"Hmmm. And you expect me to accept on behalf of Ranma?" Cologne asked.

"Acceptance is not necessary," Lo Shan said. "This is not a negotiation, this is a courtesy. Should the terms be violated, all involved will be hunted down and dealt with as I deem appropriate." She leaned in close toward Cologne. "This is the full repayment for whatever it is you feel I might still owe you. Whatever consideration you feel you are due from the Joketsuzoku. And when this is over, I will delight in presiding over the tribunal to decide your punishment. If you actually value these Outsiders as you claim to… then you will keep them to the terms of this truce," She turned, moving to leave.

"What if Ranma wins?" Cologne asked.

Lo Shan froze, then forced herself to relax. "They will not."

"That is not how this works, Lo Shan. If you are to name the contest, you must offer a prize."

Lo Shan turned, staring Cologne down. "We will decide the specifics should the challenge come to pass. Not that it matters."

"If you wish her to accept the terms of the challenge, you will let her decide. That is tradition, yes? You have issued the challenge and the terms of it, she may name her prize," Cologne said.

Lo Shan rolled her eyes. "Very well, if we must. They may name their prize when the challenge is issued. Is there anything else? I have business to attend."

You have no intention of allowing things to reach a formal challenge, do you? Cologne studied her former pupil's face carefully. What are you up to, Lo Shan? And what have you dragged our people into? "Very well. I will see to our end of the agreement."
"See that you do," Lo Shan smirked one last time and then leapt onto the retaining wall and up to the rooftops.

Himura gazed out the window across the school courtyard, a small smile playing across her face as she watched the students filter into the yard.

It was a nice day, after all. Sunny, not too warm, and she had all of her arrangements for the week made, meaning she could relax and enjoy whatever antics Nabiki Tendo came up with to try and get back at her. Assuming she had any fight left in her, that is.

I really should have gotten rid of Kuno ages ago, she thought. Perhaps I should send a gift basket to Akane as thanks? Sorry your Family is splintering under the lies of your parents, but thank you for beating Tatewaki into a coma! Perhaps when things have quieted down and she realizes I did her a favor. The truth works out better for her, after all… unless she ends up losing to Hibiki. Now THAT is an entertaining bit of side drama I should catch up on soon!

She smiled. She wondered if they had figured out yet that this was all nothing more than something to entertain her until it was time to claim her inheritance?

Of course, even that timetable might have been stepped up. She could hear Tahn Pon walk in with her unusually quiet step. She turned, glancing about to make sure there was no one else in earshot.

"Well?" Himura asked, leaning back against the windowsill. She learned early on that Tahn Pon was not much for smalltalk… though she did occasionally insist on it. If the girl was going to be working for her, and Himura intended to make sure that was part of the deal, then she needed to develop some of the social niceties.

"Elder left to meet with Khu Long," Tahn Pon said, folding her hands behind her back as she assumed a very military 'relaxed' posture… the kind that was anything but.

"I don't anticipate any surprises there," Himura replied, then switched to Mandarin. "And the other matter? Were there any troubles getting the poppies through customs?"

Tahn Pon shook her head. "They accepted the waivers without question. I did not realize you could do such things."

"Amazon medicines have far more potential than simple street drugs. But… it will require individuals of imagination and vision to see that, and to gain an audience with them we must ply their mundane gatekeepers with mundane things. This is just to get their interest."

"And will those people be the ones who will assist us with securing the Godslayer?" Tahn Pon asked.
Himura chuckled. "You think too small, Tahn! By the time we get to that stage, Ranma should be safely in China. But I'm sure you've noticed the plethora of highly skilled martial artists in Nerima, yes?"

Tahn Pon made a face. "I am aware."

"Yes well, I understand you have no use for the female martial artists, but the males… suitable breeding stock, yes?" She winked. "But trafficking of that sort will require considerably more relationship-building with those who work in such fields."

"You want us to take more males?" Tahn Pon scoffed.

"Why not? They're merely a nuisance here," Himura replied. "I imagine any number of them would even go willingly so long as they were kept unaware that they would be going as thralls. A couple of generations worth of fresh blood to offset thousands of years of isolationism and inbreeding."

Tahn Pon snorted. "The males here are all arrogant and willful. Deluded enough to think that they should be in charge. Not worth the effort to domesticate, in my opinion."

"Ah, but the Elder feels differently. I did suggest such things as sperm donation and in vitro fertilization, but…"

Tahn Pon snorted again to indicate her disdain for such a concept. "When I conceive, it will be with a man, not a turkey baster."

Himura tittered. "I'll have to remember that. That's very nearly a slogan, my dear Tahn! Useful for overcoming objections back home, perhaps. But the Elder was of the same opinion. Hopefully we will have a variant of the potion that does not require changing the subject's gender by then."

"The potency of the effects on the mind are driven by the magic of the physical change. You will not be able to so easily divorce them," Tahn Pon scoffed. "It is beyond mere chemistry."

"True enough. But that still leaves the female martial artists, does it not?" Himura replied.

Tahn Pon made a face. "Take a Jusenkyo-warped outsider as a husband? What do you take us for, the Musk!?"

"It worked for the Musk, did it not? And this would spare you the unfortunate animalistic side effects." Himura shrugged. "You needn't partake, of course. And what your sisters back home don't know won't hurt them, yes?"

Tahn Pon grunted noncommittally.

"Don't worry my dear, I know your preferences. We simply need to find a boy who can endure you for more than a couple of nights," Himura added with a wink.

"Why?" Tahn Pon asked. "Breaking them is half the fun."

000

Konatsu stared out the window, ignoring the usual drone of conversation in the classroom around her as they waited for the bell to ring. Her thoughts had been frustratingly disordered since the day before.

"Penny for your thoughts, Konatsu?" Mineko asked as she slid into the seat next to her. Her smile was bright, but her eyes held an odd look of worry to them. Konatsu tried in vain to remember the last time she had seen Mineko without that look of trepidation in her eyes.

Just ask her. About the potion made from Jusenkyo water.

Konatsu closed her eyes and pushed away Rin's voice. She didn't want to ask. She didn't want to know. For the first time she felt at peace, body and spirit and, though she couldn't place her finger on what had changed, she knew asking that question would disrupt that fragile peace.

"Why would I want American currency?" she asked instead.

Mineko snorted. "It's an expression, Kon-chan." She lightly punched Konatsu on the shoulder. "You just look like something is bugging you."

Konatsu sighed and looked out the window again. "Do... do you know much about Lord Tanaka?"

Mineko blinked. "Lord... oh! You mean Himura's grandfather?"

Konatsu turned and looked at her, nodding. "Yes. My family are supposed to be his retainers but... I know almost nothing about him."

"Oh, well, I only know a bit... some through Himura, the rest through the news and stuff," Mineko said. "I've never actually met him in person."

"The news," Konatsu repeated. "Then... he is an important person?"

"Oh yes!" Mineko replied. "Oda Tanaka is the founder and CEO of Tanaka Pharmaceuticals, one of the largest and most successful pharmaceutical companies in Japan. They make everything from over the counter painkillers and vitamins to cancer drugs and other medicines. They say he's among the top 50 wealthiest men in Japan today."

"I see," Konatsu smiled. "That is... reassuring. I know so many noble families didn't make the transition to the modern world well and fell on hard times."

"Noble...?" Mineko frowned.

"Well, yes. He is of Samurai stock, yes? Perhaps a Daimyo lord, or even a Shogun?" Her voice raised a note in hope, then she deflated. "I... should not get my hopes up too high. It would be unreasonable to expect such nobility to keep a humble family such as mine as retainers. That any samurai family flourishes so in the modern age is enough."

"I don't..." Mineko looked confused. "I mean, I don't remember Himura ever mentioning she was from a samurai family."

Konatsu blinked. "She must be. Why else would my family serve them as retainers?"

"Oh... well..." Mineko started toying with her dyed lock of hair nervously. "I can't really say that I know much about her family history..."

"It wasn't mentioned when her grandfather was in the news?" Konatsu asked, cocking her head. "They usually make a point to comment on such things..."

"Well... it's just never been that important to me, okay?" Mineko said, suddenly defensive. "Look, why don't you ask Himura about it, if you're that worried? Besides, it's not like she's not rich enough to be nobility."
Konatsu frowned. "Nobility and wealth are not the same thing."

"Well… I wouldn't know, I'm not nobility, am I?" Mineko huffed.

Konatsu sighed and didn't reply. She wanted to press further but she also did not want to antagonize her friend. It's probably nothing. You're letting yourself get confused.

She sighed softly, turning her gaze back out the window. I have everything I ever wanted, she thought glumly. Why am I not content?

000

It was not a good day for Genma Saotome.

He gingerly rubbed his side as his injured ribs ached. Two fruitless days of searching for the boy and nothing to show for it, he thought glumly as he picked carefully through the alleys and shadows. And now the city is crawling with Amazons!

They weren't hard to notice, jumping from rooftop to rooftop in their colorful chinese silks. For a mercy, they didn't seem to have any interest in him, though he guessed they were after the same person he was.

You've really done it now, Ranma! Genma grouched. It made him feel better to blame the boy. You never should have let things get to this point! It's obvious I've been slack on your training, but once I get a hold of you…

He sighed. He was going to have to deal with the revelation. He'd need to get something stronger than the usual dose to deal with memories like that. He briefly considered returning with the boy to China and trying the potion again, but shuddered at the memory of what the first one had done. No, that concoction nearly killed him the first time, and the pools are all still flooded out anyway. Plus there's no guarantee he'd be in a fit mental state to make the swim. Maybe the Master has something that will work. Otherwise I guess I'll just need to drag him back out into the wilderness and resume his training until the damage those damn girls did is undone. He sighed unhappily. That was liable to take years without help!

He looked around and noticed that he was in a familiar neighborhood and realized that his feet had unconsciously carried him towards his home. He felt a cold chill as he looked at the gate to his own home.

Nodoka will understand, he thought, trying to reassure himself. She'll... she'll realize this isn't my fault! I can fix this... she'll see that! She has to!

His stomach rumbled. He was tired, cold and, above all, hungry. Reluctantly, he let his feet continue to carry him towards the house.

The lights were off when he opened the door. He stepped inside, peering about. Maybe… maybe she's not home? If I could just grab my spare pack and some food…

"Hello, husband," Nodoka's voice called from the sitting room just down the hall.

Genma shuddered, took a deep breath and steeled himself. He kicked off his shoes and walked into the house to where he knew his wife waited.

She was sitting in the dark, facing the doorway. It took a moment for his eyes to adjust, but he could see she was wearing the same white kimono she wore on their wedding day, complete with the headscarf. She was cradling the family sword, unbound, and on the table in front of her were two white cloths, each with a tanto sitting on it, the blades gleaming and freshly oiled. One bore the kanji for his name etched on the blade just above the hilt, one bore Ranma's.

"N-no-chan…" he stammered.

"It's good to see you again, husband," Nodoka said, her voice low and flat. "I expected you home two days ago."

Genma winced. "I… I was out looking for our son, No-chan…"

"I saw him. Two days ago," Nodoka replied, her even tone growing chilly. She drew the sword from the sheath with a long hiss of metal against lacquered wood that sounded incredibly loud in his ears, and started to polish the blade with a cloth. "He had the scroll."

"I… know," Genma replied, slumping a little. His hopes of breaking the news to Nodoka were dashed. If the boy himself had confronted her with it…!

"Why did he have the scroll, dear husband?" Nodoka asked, studying the blade in the dim light as she wiped away some imagined stain on the flawless, polished steel. "You were supposed to dispose of it."

"I did, No-chan! I…" Genma began, but he cut off as Nodoka drew the cloth too sharply against the blade, and the razor's edge cleanly slice the thick cloth in half.

"You were supposed to destroy the scroll, not sell it!" she replied, a tremor in her voice as if she were struggling for control.

"I… I…" Genma whimpered, then dropped to his knees and prostrated himself. "Please forgive me!"

Nodoka looked down at him. Her expression was one of detached curiosity, almost as one might regard an insect on the floor. She sighed and resumed polishing the blade with the remainder of the cloth. "It's only to be expected, I suppose. It seems Nabiki had already found out the truth by going into our private records, so I cannot attribute this entirely to your failure." She clucked her tongue and shook her head. "We took too long, dear husband."

"I will… I will bring him back, No-chan… I will…" He swallowed nervously.

"Yes, you will," Nodoka replied coldly. "You will bring him back, and then you and he will reclaim what little remains of your honor." Her eyes flicked to the tantos on the table.

Genma felt the blood drain from his face. "N-no-chan, please…! There must be another way…?"

Nodoka's lips pressed into a hard line, twisting into a snarl as she slammed the kanata down onto the table, rising from her seat. "No! I will not tolerate that… that thing masquerading as my child any longer!" she shouted. "I had a son! A SON! Not that red-haired abomination! You've spent her whole life protecting her, keeping me from doing what needed to be done to purify our family line, but that is over now! If she refuses to live as my son, then she will die as him and through her death might this stain finally be lifted!" She sank back to her chair, trembling as tears started to run down her cheeks. "I had a son…" she moaned, barely above a whisper. "I had a son…"

Genma swallowed, taking a risk and moving from his prone position. He half walked, half crawled over to her, tentatively taking her hand. "Yes… yes you did," he said softly. "A fine son… a strong son… with raven black hair. A man amongst men."
She hiccuped and nodded.

"Give me one last chance to bring him back, my love," Genma said softly. "Let me speak to the Master. Maybe he has a solution. I made Ranma forget once, we can do it again."

Nodoka looked at him, examining his face, looking for duplicity. But for once, he was being wholly honest. The Master had given them the scroll to begin with, after all. He must have something that could help!

After a moment, she nodded, and squeezed his hand and return. "And… the Tendos?" She asked warily.

"We'll move away. Soun will keep his daughters away, he owes me that much at least. We'll find another girl, this time without the distractions." He nodded.

Nodoka sighed. "When our grandson is born… you know what must happen, don't you?" She looked into his eyes. Hers were red and puffy from the tears, but there was a hardness in the depths of them; something cold and unmoving.

Genma swallowed, a cold pit forming in the bottom of his stomach. He knew what she meant.

She smiled and moved slightly, folding the cloth over Genma's tanto, leaving only Ranma's exposed. "Someone must teach the child," she said, reaching out and stroking his cheek. "So long as Ranma's last moments are as a Man amongst Men… your oath is fulfilled dear husband. Provided you can bring him back."

000

Sayuri sat in silence under the big tree, poking at her bento disinterestedly.

Yuka had barely looked at her all morning in class. Sayuri knew her friend was feeling frustrated and powerless, and didn't tend to deal with that well. She noticed Hiroshi and Daisuke had been trying to chat her up, though Yuka's short responses and sarcastic tone told her they weren't having a lot of luck. Riko had stayed halfway between them, shooting guilty glances back and forth.

Hiroshi and Daisuke are still trying, she thought, closing her bento with a sigh. Nabiki probably got them fired up again.

Part of her wished she had gone with them. It'd be nice to be sure again, to feel that confidence that those in the Nerima wrecking Crew seemed to exude no matter how dire the circumstances - the confidence she had been filled with when Ranma was around. But the greater part of her was worried that she wasn't being realistic in doing that - that it was clouding her judgement.

Huh… overconfidence as a drug? That'd make Ranma a strung out junkie then. She snorted a bit at the concept of the most disgustingly healthy and fit person she knew being anything but. Maybe I'm just being silly. But then again… They got hurt really badly in this stupid fight with Himura. And now they're apparently down for more? Are they still so sure they can win now that Himura has all the cards?

She looked up and saw someone she hadn't seen for a while. The girl's shoulders were hunched, her head bowed. She had a bag over her shoulders that looked like it might be stuffed with clothes. She was wearing a different school uniform now, but Sayuri recognized her. Tomoko, her mind supplied. She remembered her from the volleyball team and, more dramatically, from one of the first altercations with Nabiki.
There had been rumors about Tomoko, rumors of the sort Himura tended to scatter about to cover her tracks.

She frowned and stood. She hadn't known Tomoko beyond her name, but something spurred her on to get up and intercept the girl as she trudged towards the gates.

"Tomoko, right?" she said as she got closer.

Tomoko's head snapped around, eyes haunted, as if she were a beaten dog suddenly fearing another kick. She relaxed slightly when she saw who it was, but only a fraction. She dropped her gaze, tightening her grip on the canvas sack over her shoulder. "What do you want?" she asked curtly.

"I was just curious what brings you to Furinkan," Sayuri said, attempting to sound conversational. "I heard your family had moved away and you had transferred schools…"

Tomoko twitched slightly, her knuckles going white as she gripped the end of the bag, trembling a little. After a second, she seemed to force herself to relax. "I had left some things in my gym locker. I was told to come get them by the office." She started walking again.

Sayuri kept pace with her. "So… Is the new school good?" she asked weakly.

Tomoko stopped. She turned, though her eyes stayed on the ground. Sayuri could see a tremor run through the other girl's shoulders, and for a moment was worried she was going to strike her.

"How do you fight her?" Tomoko asked in a hushed voice.

"P-pardon?" Sayuri replied.

Tomoko shook her head. "How do you fight her? Fight Himura," she repeated. "How do you spit in her face every single day, and still stand?"

"I… I don't…" Sayuri replied, confused.

"Why are you here and I'm tossed out with the trash!?" Tomoko demanded, finally raising her head. Her eyes were sunken and the dark circles under them showed a lack of sleep. "I did everything Himura wanted… everything she asked me to! I made her happy! I was one of the good ones! But even though I did everything I was supposed to, everything I was told to do, I still got tossed aside!" She clenched her fists. "A-and then when I fought back… when I asked for what I was owed… she took everything away from me! Everything!"

Sayuri blinked, not able to come up with anything to say, so she simply didn't.

"She took everything I had done for her… for her… and used it to turn everyone I cared about against me! My Dad has pretty much disowned me… my friends hate me… My family is sending me off to a boarding school for delinquents because I'm such a disgrace! So… so why…?" She glared at Sayuri. "Why are you still here!?"

Sayuri was silent. She didn't have an answer. She bowed her own head, not wanting to see the tears gathering in Tomoko's eyes.

"I wish… I wish I was like you," Tomoko said. "She promises to protect you… to take care of you… to give you everything you want, even if it's not what you're asking for. But… She just takes. She dangles all these hopes and dreams in front of you, leads you on until you're so wrapped up that somehow you owe her everything and you don't even remember what it was you came to her for. You… you just walked away from it and she didn't know how to handle it. You're
"I'm not strong," Sayuri started to say. "I don't..."

"Shut up," Tomoko said sharply, hand snapping out and grabbing Sayuri's collar. "You don't get to say that! You... you of all people know what she is! What she does! Do you think nobody knows about what happened with Umeko? Everybody knows! Even me! Don't look at me and tell me that's something just anybody can do!"

Sayuri's eyes widened as the twisted snarl on Tomoko's face started to crack, tears starting to run down her cheeks.

"I'm afraid," Tomoko said. "I'm afraid, I'm afraid, I'm afraid! I've been afraid since the day I met Himura and I can't remember what it's like not to be afraid. I was afraid she would take everything away from me, and then when she did and I thought I didn't need to be afraid anymore, she took more." The hand at Sayuri's collar slackened as Tomoko's shoulders slumped. "Why? Why did she take everything away from me and not from you?"

Sayuri put her hand over Tomoko's, earning a startled look.

"It's just what she does," Sayuri replied. "There's no rhyme or reason to it, no allies or enemies. She puts on this whole pageant; makes you think it's a game with rules and sides and winners and losers... but it's not. It's just Himura doing whatever amuses her, and makes her victims squirm." She shrugged. "Tomorrow it might be me... or it might be her best friend... or it could be some random stranger. I guess once I figured that out... that it didn't really matter what I was to Himura... being her enemy just seemed more like the option I could live with. I'm afraid too... she scares the hell out of me. But at least this way I don't feel like I'm just waiting for my turn."

Tomoko was silent. She shuddered again, silent sobs shaking her shoulders. On impulse, Sayuri stepped forward and hugged the girl.

"Don't lose," Tomoko whispered in her ear, clinging to her for a moment. "Don't lose. For me and for everyone she does this to. Even if it's just in volleyball. Don't lose."

Tomoko released her, looked into her eyes for a moment, then turned, shouldered her bag and trudged away without another backwards glance.

Sayuri just watched her go. She felt a cold chill run up her spine. That could be me, she thought. That might still end up being me.

She heard a voice call from behind her. "Yo, Sayuri!" She turned to see Daisuke, Hiroshi, Rin and Riko trotting across the field to join her.

"Who was that?" Daisuke asked, cocking his head and watching the back of the retreating girl. "Friend of yours?"

"Could have been, had things been different and Himura not existed," Sayuri said softly, following his gaze. She looked back at them, her heart falling. "Yuka is still out, huh?"

"She's... undecided," Daisuke said apologetically. "I'm gonna try talking with her later. We've got a trip to the library planned."

"Nice, safe library," Hiroshi added.

"Just some studying," Daisuke asserted.
"I don't believe you at all, and neither will she," Sayuri said, a grin tugging at the edges of her mouth. "But good luck. Something for Fearless Leader, I assume?"

"Hopefully," Daisuke replied. "For now things are still kind of a mess. You should really go talk with Nabiki about it all."

Sayuri sighed. "I will. Honest." She glanced at them both. "I wasn't there… what's your take on how Ranma is actually doing?"

"Holed up with the Kunos, which is weird in and of itself," Hiroshi replied. "He… she's still all kinds of 'off' because of all of this."

"But in typical Ranma Saotome fashion, she's too stubborn to actually admit to it," Daisuke added.

"I might go visit her first," Sayuri said. "Before I get sucked back into Nabiki's scheming, I want to be clear what it is I'm actually fighting for here. 'Moral Support', right?"

"Bring ice cream," Daisuke suggested.

"Wouldn't the Kunos have ice cream?" Sayuri asked.

"Yeah, but it's the Kunos," Hiroshi replied. "It's probably all… like… black licorice flavor with… diced swords in it or something."

"If we're going to talk about food, can we please sit down and eat?" Riko asked. "I'm starving!"

Again, Ranma. Watch your footwork."

Ranma made a face, thankful for the kendo mask she was wearing as she stepped forward, made an overhead strike with the bamboo Shinai, then stepped back again.

She felt clumsy and she hated it. The bulky padding of the kendo gear didn't help the situation. She felt like she was fighting herself, each movement hesitant, like it was taking extra willpower just to make herself move how she wanted to.

Tatewaki walked around her. He tapped her shoulders with his bokken, then her left ankle. "Square your shoulders, straighten your stance. You're leading with your left shoulder and your strike is slow and clumsy. Distribute your weight more evenly."

She sighed, pulled off her mask and tossed it aside. "Thanks, senpai, but… This just isn't working."

She ignored his disappointed look and trudged over to the rack, putting her shinai on it. "It's just like last time."

Ryouga was sitting on the sidelines watching. She could feel his eyes following her, but she avoided looking at him.

"This has happened before?" Tatewaki asked, walking up beside her.

Part of her wanted them both to just leave her alone. She knew they were only trying to help, but… it was impossible for her to articulate how frustrating it all was. She knew how to move, she knew all these basic things that Tatewaki was telling her, even if she hadn't studied Kendo specifically. She knew how she wanted her body to move, it just refused.

"When I was training for volleyball," Ranma said. "I had… I dunno, I was struggling with…"
"well..." She closed her eyes, remembering the epiphany that she'd had which had restored her ability to play volleyball. "Balance. Y'know, between boy and girl."

"I see," Tatewaki said. "And how did you resolve your struggle?"

Ranma found her gaze drifting over to Ryouga. He was watching her with curiosity, but she could also see a glimmer of understanding there. "I decided to stop being afraid of my girl side. Of being a girl." She shook her head, looking down at herself. "Little did I know, huh?"

"So... then that would imply that the solution would perhaps be the same?" Tatewaki suggested gently.

She whirled to face him. "No, it's not the same!" she said hotly. "Don't you get it? The last time... Being a girl was an indulgence. It was me just... coming to terms with a curse. Nothing else changed. It was just making a choice. But... but this?" She gestured at herself. "I am a girl now! Everything I knew, or I thought I knew... it's all a lie. Someone crawled into my head and... and pulled out all the wiring and redid it all. And now?" She shuddered. "Now I'm starting to remember. Only... I can't tell what's the 'real' version, and what's the version Pops stuffed in my head. Except... Except for one thing." She hugged herself, closing her eyes tight and trying to push the memory back down as it threatened to bubble back to the surface. It was flickering at the edges... bones creaking and snapping, muscles writhing, tearing, rewrapping, joints popping out of place from sockets that were suddenly too small...

She felt a hand on her shoulder, and a rush of the Link. It helped wash the memory back down into the mire, but... she knew it was still there.

"How'm I supposed to find balance?" she asked, calmer now as Ryouga's influence brought with it a bit more control. "The Anything Goes school is a crock. Martial Arts is all Pops and Man amongst Men in my head and that... that just leads to remembering the change. The first change." She shook her head. "I don't wanna ever risk that again. Even if the change was painless a million times afterwards."

"I've never heard you be afraid of pain before," Ryouga said, frowning.

"It's... it was... more than pain," Ranma replied. "It was like... something reached inside me and pulled and tore and turned what made me me inside out." She found herself leaning against his side, feeling the need for support as she wrestled with trying to remember without actually reliving.

"Then we must needs find you a new balance. A new center." Tatewaki replied. "One that is not perched so precariously on your personal concept of gender, perhaps?" He smiled gently.

Ranma blinked, then found it in herself to smile back, just a little. "You know, you sound like a 'senpai' these days, Tatewaki."

"I am merely parroting the wisdom of any number of therapists, instructors and mentors who's wisdom I am finally beginning to understand," Tatewaki replied. "So the issue is not just Anything Goes style, but anything you recognize as martial arts, correct?"

"What about what you did against that crazy Amazon lady?" Ryouga asked.

Ranma shook her head. "That's not martial arts. That's... that's..." She struggled to find a proper definition for it. "that's something different."

Tatewaki raised an eyebrow. "Does that not then make it ideal?"
"I don't even know what it was!" Ranma protested. "I just... did it."

"So... Your body knows what it is," Ryouga said, turning his to look at her. "We just have to figure out how to get it to teach your head, right?" He poked her gently on the forehead.

Ranma made a face. "I'd really rather not spend the day thinking I'm a cat. Or having to deal with you almost dying! Again!" She poked him back. She stopped, hand flat against his chest as she closed her eyes, just feeling the beat of his heart under her hand. It was reassuring and terrifying in equal measure as she remembered the moment it hadn't been there. "The Neko-ken is dangerous. Even... even if I'm not out of my mind it's... it's lethal."

"As are many martial arts. Your own kempo included," Tatewaki cut in. "Hiding from it will not change its nature. Only mastery will."

Ranma sighed. She stepped forward, letting her head drop in against Ryouga's collarbone. She was tired. Not physically, but she was feeling worn out from the constant, conflicting swirl of her thoughts. She felt his hand tentatively rest on the back of her head, and even that brought with it its own confusion, as tiny fragments of her parent's voices screamed at her for her betrayal.

"That's enough for today," Ryouga said. "We'll figure out something tomorrow."

She pushed away from him, gently but insistently, forcing herself to step away and break the connection. I can't keep being like this. I gotta be able to stand on my own. She took a deep breath and turned back to Tatewaki.

"No, it's okay," she said after taking a deep breath. "Senpai is right. I can't quit now, and if the Neko-ken works... it's what I've got. But for right now, maybe we can try something else for a bit. I'm supposed to teach you the Umisenken, right? We're gonna need a couple of pieces of cloth, about yay big..."

000

Lunch was almost over when Rin finally spotted the duck wearing glasses trying to get her attention. He was peeking around the corner of the shed, glancing around nervously.

She tapped Daisuke on the shoulder and pointed over to the shed. She knew Daisuke and Hiroshi had wanted to talk with the Chinese martial artist about some part of Nabiki's scheme.

She nodded to the duck, who slipped back out of sight as she and the boys got up to walk over. She knew by the time they got there, Mousse would be in his human form and, sure enough, he was there waiting for them, hair slightly damp from the hot water.

"It's dangerous for you to be at the school, man," Daisuke said. "There are Amazons following Himura around now. We should find another place to meet."

"There are Amazons everywhere in Nerima," Mousse replied. "Lo Shan has mobilized nearly every warrior of age for this. This place is as good as any right now."

"Th-they've got so many out l-looking for senpai?" Rin asked nervously.

Mousse shook his head. "No, and that concerns me, because I don't know what they are up to, aside from... watching. It's like when hunting parties track and observe prey, but on a huge scale."

"They're casing the joint?" Hiroshi suggested.
"All of Nerima?!" Daisuke replied incredulously. "What would they even steal?"

"It doesn't matter right now," Mousse replied. "We need to find Young Mi and rescue Shampoo first. Did you learn anything from Nabiki Tendo?"

Daisuke nodded. "Boss has a few ideas about where Crazy Circus Lady might be holed up."

"That big cat of hers limits potential real estate," Hiroshi added.

"We're going to check listings for warehouses that are near where she came ashore and have been empty for a while. But for now Nabiki suggests you focus on the warehouses near where the fishing boats put in."

"Why fishing boats?" Mousse asked.

Hiroshi shrugged. "She's gotta feed her pet, right? Not a lot of big game around for it to hunt."

"And that much kitty kibble would be expensive," Daisuke added.

Mousse rubbed his chin. "That makes sense." He bowed to them both in turn. "Thank you. Sincerely. You have given me a place to start."

"Hey… I mean, we're not exactly 'Christmas Gift List' level, but Shampoo is our friend too," Daisuke said, rubbing the back of his head.

Mousse nodded and looked like he was about to leap for the roof, but hesitated, glancing at Rin.

"What are you waiting for?" Rin asked. Her voice was unusually clear and steady. "Go find them. They both need you in their own way, right? You're the only one that can, now."

"I…" Mousse glanced to the roof, then bafflingly back at her again. "You'll be all right? I… won't be able to escort you home."

Rin shook her head. "No one is after me, Mr. Mu Tsu. I'm not important. I'll be here after you've saved them, don't worry." She cocked her head, smiling a smile she didn't feel. "You can tell me all about it afterwards."

The light shifted, the shadows falling over his face, cutting the usual glare from his glasses, for a moment allowing her to see his eyes. He still looked conflicted, which confused her.

Go on! They're waiting for you! The two people you love! Why are you wasting time here?!

Finally he nodded, stepped back a pace and leapt for the roof of the shed, bounding off it towards the rooftops.

Hiroshi and Daisuke exchanged a glance, then looked towards the diminutive teenage girl watching Mousse's rapidly disappearing form.

"Hey… uhh… You okay, Rin?" Hiroshi asked awkwardly.

"What?" She blinked and shook herself, as the words broke her out of her reverie. She quickly swiped her hand across her eyes. Her vision was a little blurry, though she didn't know why. "Y-yes. I'm fine. Why wouldn't I be?"
The day had passed relatively quickly. There were the usual minutiae surrounding the assembly she had planned for Wednesday's game, as well as a few minor orders of business, but Himura found that by now she had sufficiently trained her lackeys to take care of most of it for her.

Su Tzu had reported that things were quiet, both at the Kuno Manor and the Tendo Dojo. Himura knew better than to expect things to stay that way, but she felt safe in assuming Nabiki Tendo would tip her hand soon enough. She expected one last solid defeat would force the mercenary girl to surrender and she would finally be able to put the matter behind her. Not that she intended to let Nabiki off that easily, of course, but a proper retribution would be better served down the road, when Nabiki had picked herself up, put herself back together and had something worth taking away.

She walked through the school halls towards the doors with her usual gaggle of attendants, issuing orders and assigning tasks, until it was just her, Tahn Pon and Konatsu. She decided it was time for Konatsu to start proving her worth, regardless of how Mineko felt about the situation.

Plus, Himura did rather enjoy the attention she got bracketed by the two lovely and fearsome warriors. There was something about surrounding yourself with beauty and power that enhanced your own, especially when it was so obviously subservient to you.

"Lady Himura…" Konatsu said timidly, surprising Himura a bit.

Himura raised an eyebrow and paused, turning her full attention to the Kunoichi. Konatsu's head was bowed, her hands folded in front of her submissively. "Yes? What is it, Konatsu dear?"

"I… was just…" Konatsu chewed her lip. "I merely wished… to know more about your family. Your family history. That I might serve you better and uphold your family's honor, as my parents did."

Himura chuckled. "Oh, for that you will likely need to speak with Grandfather. He is the one who will bend your ear endlessly about how he founded the company and the pride of the family and whatnot. I prefer to focus on the now. I have little use for ancient history."

"I-I understand, Lady Himura, I do, but…" Konatsu fidgeted. "What of your ancestors? Your family lands? History is very important to Samurai families, is it not?"

Himura frowned. Her impulse response was to scoff at the idea of her family being of samurai stock, but her better judgement warned her to prevaricate. Of course Konatsu had assumed Himura's family were samurai. "Perhaps, but I am admittedly not very traditional. Does that bother you, Konatsu?" She smiled and cocked her head. She often found that uncomfortable questions were best deflected with uncomfortable questions.

"I-I-I… n-no! Of course not, Lady Himura!" Konatsu stammered, flushing. "I… I owe you a great deal, and… and I merely wished to…"

Himura stepped up to the girl and put a finger to her lips. "Shhhh. You needn't concern yourself with my family history, Konatsu dear. If you wish to repay me, focus on being useful to me in the here and now."

"Y-yes, of course!" Konatsu bowed deeply. "Please forgive my insolence."

Himura smirked. Reverence of herself and her family had been a big part of the 're-education' tapes. Though she could see that tied into Konatsu's traditionalist values. She would need to tread carefully around that until she had suitably indoctrinated the girl.

"Oh, don't fret. It'll give you wrinkles on that lovely face." Himura patted her cheek. "Come along, I'll have a task for you sooner rather than later where you can prove yourself as my retainer."

000

It didn't take long for the limo driver to locate him. After all, when Yuto was under the watchful eye of their grandfather, he tended to be as loud and obvious about it as possible, most likely so Grandfather would send him away again and renew his allowance. This generally involved making the rounds from nightclub to nightclub with his entourage of Yakuza-supplied stooges.

They found them between clubs. The stooges were stumbling about, carousing and making a racket while Yuto walked calmly in the middle, like he was in the eye of the storm. That was to be expected; Yuto's tastes in alcohol meant that the usual club fare, even that of the high-end clubs, rarely met with his approval.

The limo pulled up to the curb and Himura rolled down her window. One of the toughs, an idiot with a bleached pompadour, noticed an attractive female within his field of view and stumbled over.

"Heeeeey, darling!" He bumped into the side of the limo and leaned into the window, leering. "Oh, hey, three o' you! Hic thash… thash ev'n better!" He leaned in further, right in her face. His breath carried the sickly sweet stench of alcohol and poor dental hygiene. "Why don'sha come out'n party?"

There were jeers of approval from the group. She could see Yuto striding forward to put a stop to it through the window.

She smirked. "Oh, I'd love to. But maybe later? Now I need to have a word with my dear brother, Yuto."

"Brother?" Pompadour said, frowning. He jerked his head back out of the car to holler. "Hey Yuto! You..." He staggered back a bit to see the scowling Yuto was standing right in front of him. "Geez! Y'didn'... y'said nothin' 'bout havin' a cute sister! Invite 'er along!"

"I can guarantee your employers would be very upset if you did that," Yuto said coldly.

"I... uh... oh..." Pompadour seemed to reconsider.

"Oh, now don't be like that, brother!" Himura said out the window. "How about a trade? My two friends here will keep your friends company so I can borrow you for a bit. How does that sound?"

Konatsu gave her a nervous look, but Tahn Pon just grinned. The Amazon had already divined her intent.

"I dunno... we're s'posed to keep tabs on ol' Yuto-boy here..." Pompadour said, clapping Yuto roughly on the back.

"Oh it's just a jaunt around the block while we talk. I'll bring him right back, I promise," Himura said. "I'm sure our grandfather won't mind. We'll be with our driver after all. Girls?" She slipped back in, leaning closer to Konatsu and lowering her voice. "As soon as we're around the corner, I want you to hurt them."

"L-Lady Himura?" Konatsu said, eyes widening.
Himura's smile was gone, the cheerful mask replaced by cold fury. "They've disrespected me and my family, and they're a disgrace that my brother is forced to associate with. I will not suffer it. Beaten and bloody is sufficient. No one need die, but I want a message sent."

"No broken bones?" Tahn Pon asked, sounding disappointed as she cracked her knuckles.

Himura smirked. "Maybe a few. I could never resist indulging you, my dear Tahn."

"I… If that is your will..." Konatsu said.

Himura reached out and gripped Konatsu's chin. "This is the role of a retainer to my family. If you don't feel capable, I'm sure Tahn can handle it herself..."

Konatsu shook her head violently. "N-no! I can do this." She took a deep breath. "I will prove my loyalty."

Himura's smile reappeared. "Good girl." She opened the door and let the two girls climb out. "Come, brother dear, we have a few things to discuss."

Yuto reluctantly climbed into the limo seat across from her, watching as the two girls were quickly surrounded by the horde of drunken henchmen. He shook his head as the door closed and the limo pulled away. "Those two are new. Used up your favorites again?"

"Konatsu and Tahn have a… particular skillset that makes them much more useful as personal attendants when I'm out and about," Himura replied. She opened up the fridge and pulled out a bottle of a Scandinavian craft beer she knew he favored. "Care for a drink?"

He scowled and took the bottle. "Himura..." he sighed and opened the beer to take a long swig. "Whatever you're asking for... well, firstly, I probably don't have it and, secondly, Grandfather has forbidden me getting involved in your personal business with your classmates."

"I'm well aware of that," Himura tittered. "Can't a girl have a nice visit with her older brother without it needing to be about something?" she asked, fishing out a wine cooler from the fridge for herself.

Yuto grunted. "Not in this family."

Himura traced her finger around the cap of the bottle. "It wasn't always like that, Yuto," she said softly. "Grandfather has turned us against each other. Things used to be different."

"You and I have very different recollections, then," Yuto growled, fixing her with a cold stare. "Or did you mistake me for Naoki in your recollections?"

Himura stiffened. She fought down the sudden surge for fury, for outrage. No. That will not serve my purposes. Conceal. Conceal. She plastered a smile over it quickly. "While I admit Naoki and I had a special relationship, was our own so acrimonious, brother?" She let her head hang. "It's been… difficult since Naoki died. I… have been cold to you, I know, but... I want to make amends!"

"Special relationship?" Yuto repeated. "You say that as if I didn't know what was going on between you two."

Himura's expression hardened. "And you would condemn me for it?"

Yuto laughed. "Is that what you think? Little sister… You and Naoki… that was twisted, and unhealthy, and it warped you and drove a wedge between him and me… and it was probably the least sick and wrong thing going on in our family at the time! Why do you think my greatest passtime, my one true passion, my life's work is drinking myself into an early grave!?” He held up the beer and then downed it in one long gulp.

Himura carefully kept her hackles from raising, closing her eyes and taking a breath. "And don't you want to change that?" she asked finally.

Yuto folded his arms and raised an eyebrow.

"Grandfather is the source of all of this," she said, leaning forward. "Grandfather and his insistence on succession. The pressure he put on father, and then the scorn when he passed him up for Naoki. Then he did nothing when father…" She grit her teeth and wrenched herself off that mental path by pure force of will. "He allowed you to become the family scapegoat - the one who always fails - is always a disappointment, the one who must always be watched and babysat. Don't you resent it? Don't you resent him!?" She reached forward and touched his knee. "Don't you want to show him how wrong he is? Make him pay?"

Yuto frowned and leaned forward. "Where is this coming from, little sister?" he asked softly. "Since when do you hate Grandfather so? You're his favorite."

Himura let her careful mask slip a bit. Just a little, intentionally. She didn't need to act for this, but too much would scare him away. Her lip trembled. "Do you know what being his favorite means?" she snarled. "What he wanted for father? For Naoki? For me? Grandfather wants to hollow me out and pour himself in; to make a little thought-clone to carry on. Father wasn't capable, so he rejected him. Naoki… my dear sweet Naoki was so much more than that twisted old man that Grandfather let him be torn down… he was as jealous and resentful as father, but he lacked the courage to do his own dirty work. And as for me…” She took a breath and straightened. "I've spent every day since then being prepared to be next. And now he tests me. For his amusement. He dangles my whole future in front of me on a string like I am a cat to be toyed with… the future I earned through blood! How could I not hate him?!"

"I…" Yuto dropped his eyes, a look of guilt passing over his face. "I'm sorry. I didn't know you felt like that…"

Himura felt a small twinge of triumph as she saw her opening. "Like you?" She shifted from her seat to sit next to him, putting her hand over his. He gave her a startled look. "I hate our family, Yuto. I hate father and mother and Grandfather. But I didn't hate Naoki… and I don't hate you. I saw you suffer… saw them crush your hopes and dreams… I saw them sabotage you so you would be the failure they could blame all our woes on. They decided what you would be, too. Don't you see? We're the same." She squeezed his hand.

"So… what exactly do you propose to do about it?" Yuto asked cautiously.

"Why wait to inherit on his terms?" Himura asked. "You inherited both Father and Naoki's shares, didn't you? Mother made sure of that. If we add those to our own, with a little seed capital, we could buy the company out from under Grandfather." She scooted a little closer, leaning into him a little. She could feel his warmth, feel the slight twitch, unaccustomed as he was to physical closeness of another person. She could see a little of Naoki in his face. Enough for her to pretend a little, give her voice a little edge of sincerity and desire. "We could make them run away for a change, take it all for ourselves. Just you and me."

"Just you and me, eh?" His tone was still skeptical, but she could see the resolve wavering in his eyes, the suspicion crumbling. After all, what Black Sheep wouldn't yearn for acceptance?
Retribution? She was offering him both. She decided to risk pushing a little harder.

She turned his hand over and wove her fingers with his. Naoki had always liked when she did that. She felt his hand twitch, knew he wasn't used to such things. That was good. That would make it easier if there wasn't anyone else. She leaned a little closer, allowing her chest to press just slightly against his arm… innocent enough, easily dismissed. But significant. Reminding him she wasn't a little girl anymore.

"We could be the family we were always meant to be," she murmured, lowering her voice, holding his eyes with hers. "The family their selfishness wouldn't let us be. You wouldn't have to be alone anymore."

For a moment, just for a moment, she thought she had him. Then something she said or did must have triggered something. His eyes widened, his pupils dilated and he recoiled, leaning away and snatching his hand back from her. Horror filled his gaze.

"I'm not Naoki," he said.

She was taken aback, caught off-guard by his rejection and stumbled her recovery. "No, that's not…!" she began, but she could already see she had lost him.

"Driver, stop the car. I'm getting out," Yuto said firmly, thumping the window to the driver's section firmly. The driver dutifully pulled the car over to the curb.

Yuto's eyes returned to her. She had expected to find disgust there, but oddly enough she only saw guilt and shame, and she couldn't quite understand why. He opened the door, but hesitated.

"Stop this," he said finally. "Please, Himura. If there is anything left of the girl Naoki… that Naoki loved within you, step away from all this madness." He stepped out of the car, hesitated again and then closed the door behind him.

Himura watched him go. The hurt expression on her face was not entirely faked. The rejection had stung more than she had expected. She slumped back in her seat and began chewing on her thumbnail.

Stupid. Stupid stupid STUPID. I shouldn't have gotten my hopes up, she thought, gladly allowing frustration to supplant the other confusing feelings she had at the moment. Yuto is nothing like Naoki. He doesn't have his vision. Too mired pointless ethics and morality. She huffed. Fine then! He can play drunkard for the rest of his life if that's what he wants! I have far more important things to do.

She rapped at the window to tell the driver to swing back around to pick up Tahn and Konatsu.

000

Holy GOD it's been too long since there was an update!

I'm really sorry it's been so long. I've been reaching for inspiration lately, and then FFXIV Shadowbringers came out and... well, let's say most of my free emotional energy has been tied up in that. (Highly recommended by the way)

Didn't help that this chapter had some uncomfortable bits to write.

The next update won't be nearly as delayed, promise!
Please drop by the archive and comment to let the author know if you enjoyed their work!