Legend of the Seven Lights

by Gamewizard2008

Summary

The core story of the Seven Lights Saga, Legend of the Seven Lights, and the ultimate crossover that puts the Firstborn Saga to shame. The Apocalypse is only a month away, so the time to test strengths is now. This will be a Month of Hell for the Kids Next Door, full of action, bloodshed, complex plots, and emotions. The world is falling to chaos as the World Government, Corporate Presidents, and Team Gnik scramble for power as our heroes seek to find the Seven Lights and Thirteen Darknesses that will open the gates to the New World. The adventure starts now....

Below is a list of this story's arcs, to help readers keep track of where they are and to not overwhelm them with the length if they view this as separate stories.
Frozen Saga: Chapters 1-10 (plus 5 Side Story chapters)
Song Saga: Chapters 11-20 (plus 7 Side Story chapters)
Lightning Saga: Chapters 21-28 (plus 4 Side Story chapters)
Presidents Saga: Chapters 29-41 (plus 4 Side Story chapters)
Art Saga: Chapters 42-51 (plus 3 Side Story chapters)
Lazarus Saga: Chapters 52-61 (plus 5 Side Story chapters)
CP10 Saga: Chapters 62-71 (plus 3 Side Story chapters)
Opening Saga: Chapters 72-82 (plus 3 Side Story chapters)
To You, A Trillion Years From Now

Chapter Summary

Medusa and Blackbeard discuss their plans for this upcoming month.

…Sigh… Wow… I can’t believe it… we’re actually here. Legend of the Seven Lights… wow. It makes you think how fast time goes. And that’s sort of a focus on this story. :/ I mean, this’ll be the biggest thing since Firstborn. I’m actually nervous. Sigh, okay, let’s do it. The long-awaited sequel to Legend of the Eight Firstborn starts now. Heck, looking at how much support that got, I’m… not expecting the same here. But hey, it’s a new generation. And I’m writing it, either way.

Chapter 1: To You, A Trillion Years From Now

“Water.”

“Earth.”

“Fire.”

“Air.”

“Poison.”

“Shadow.”

“Psychic.”

“Fear.”

“Light…”

“Darkness…”

“SPACE…”

“…TIME…”

A trillion years ago, the God of the Universe, Arceus, created all the other gods, who worked to shape the universe with their amazing elemental abilities. As time passed, the gods granted mortal beings the powers of these elements. And with these elements, the mortals shaped their own destinies. Whether they chose the Path of Good, or the Path of Evil, their destinies and their histories were recorded in the Memory of Time.

A terrible tragedy happened, where Arceus fell into a fit of rage, and his essence was scattered. He was revived by the one known as Negatar Gnaa, who used Arceus to bring the cosmos into ruin. But with the guidance of Morgan Catherine, and many noble heroes, and villains, by her side, Gnaa teamed up with his opposite, Aang, and brought Arceus to the light. The universe was brought into a new era of peace.
This is a story that many now know. But what they didn’t know… was Arceus created another universe, before creating the other gods. This universe was known as the First Dimension. This dimension was so chaotic, so unbalanced, that Arceus had to seal it away. For without other gods to give it order, it would fall into ruin. And to keep its chaos from leaking into the new dimensions, Arceus sealed it with a powerful lock, made from the most powerful of the elements: Time.

But this was not the only reason Arceus wanted the dimension sealed. Before its imprison… Arceus destroyed the central world of that dimension, with an incredible cataclysm, called the Apocalypse, and ordered the survived inhabitants of that world to design a brand new one. He told them that was where they would live… but as they finished their design of this beautiful new world, he lied. And the Lock of Time kept them sealed away, to prevent beings of this New World from learning the truth.

The gods stole the credit for this world’s design, and no evidence of these exiles’ existence remained. Because of the gods’ balance… the universe entered trillions of years of peace… however:

Unknown to Arceus, two worlds were created, instead of one. One that existed on a parallel plane, but intersected with the former. And in the process, a second gate, besides the Time Gate. This was known as the Space Gate. With no lock, the unbalanced energy would begin to leak from this gate, and in time, the great cataclysm that destroyed the first world – The Apocalypse – would happen again. And it would’ve been the Negatar’s actions, that would set these events in motion. The great cataclysm that would destroy everyone…

But as was the case with these first people, there would be hope for the people of this created world. When the Day of Apocalypse would near… 20 Keys of Light and Darkness would be awakened. These keys would open the way for those deemed worthy enough to enter the Land of Dreams… and from there, design the very foundation of the brand New World.

(Play “Hurricane Suite” from Naruto: Shippuden.)

The Underworld. Center of darkness, sadness, and misery in all the universes. The souls of the fallen cursed to drift in its eerie rivers, the sins of their lifetime giving it warmth, and their tears of sadness letting it flow. It was a very dark place, where dark things happened. And in the deepest of catacombs, a dark entity waited, and her simple associate, for a dark purpose. She was a towering colossus, her hair snaky and her green eyes sharp. Standing at her feet, a chubby man with a growing black beard, munching his cherry pie as he stared at a newspaper. It bared the image of Zanifr Mimchi, a gray-skinned being with thin orange horns, beaten and bloody, stains on his black shirt and purple cape. Wrists chained to a wall, having been arrested at Underworld Prison.

UNDERWORLD PRISON’S BIGGEST, EASIEST(?) CATCH

On what seemed like an average day, newly-appointed prison warden, Magellan reported finding a near-dead mortal unconscious outside Underworld Prison’s front gates. Left by an anonymous culprit, a note confirmed this being to be Zanifr Mimchi, the true identity of infamous rebel demon Majora, considered in the same league as Ganondorf. While none knows of his attacker, nor the events leading to his arrival here, for crimes against demon and spiritkind, he is awaiting punishment in the deepest confines of Underworld Prison. Magellan stated to have locked Majora in his own private cell, lest he stir trouble with the other inmates of that floor. Security in the prison has been doubled tenfold on the alert for any suspicious characters and prevention of break-ins.

The man laughed ecstatically, mouth wide with several teeth missing along his lips. “Zehahahahahahaha! I can never stop looking at it! I just feel so prideful in my work! You think they’ll grant me a pardon ‘cause of this?’

“I doubt it.” Medusa’s voice echoed. “They aren’t like the cheesy mortals of the overworld. But Zanifr’s betrayal, really proved helpful.”

“Zeeehaha. For now… but how do you know he’ll try to save him?”

“In his foolish mission to follow his mother’s footsteps… he’ll show sympathy for anyone. I’ll have to rely on it. The rest of the Darknesses are down there.”

“Ahhh, but Darknesses are easy. They’re already corrupted. Not to mention, I reached the Logia level. Shouldn’t you worry more about the Lights?”

“Hmmm, it’s true, some will be difficult. But this world is doomed nonetheless. They can never handle it all. The corrupt government, the business empires, those measly supervillains… everyone will engage in the race for survival. The event that was precursored in 2012, will now happen 20 years later. I have been forestalling this day, ever since I helped those shabby fools defeat Arceus. I’m just glad I don’t have to put up with that whiny bald brat anymore.”

“Awww, but Lord Gnaa was the light of the party. It’s sad to think he already made it ahead of us. He won’t have to worry when it happens; ‘less his opposite takes the beating. Zehahahahaha!”

“Be more concerned for your own… Blackbeard. When time comes to save the other Darknesses, don’t expect them to get so buddy with you.”

“I’m actually looking forward! It’d be great to have some REAL company! I’ve actually read about what these people have done, and perhaps we could exchange a few ideas.”

“I’ll hold you to that…” Medusa looked to the heavens with a relaxed sigh. “Mmm HAAA hahahahahaha! The tides are changing, Blacky! The worlds are entering a new age! A time where ALL beings have to show their stuff or sink in their filth! If they thought the Firstborn Quest was overbearing, JUST WAIT! By the end of this, there may hardly be anything left! Get ready, mortals… as of this day: THE QUEST FOR THE SEVEN LIGHTS HAS BEGUN! AAAAAH HA HA HA! AAAAAA HA! HA! HA! HA! HAAAA!”

Archive of Our Own presents…

A Gamewizard2008 production…

In association with Depthcharge Industries, Mika Works, Dani’s Dynamites, Em, Kim, and April Inc., and Freyre Works…

Also characters from Nintendo, Insomniac Games, Ubisoft, Nickelodeon, and Cartoon Network…

Voice recording studios: 4kids Productions and FUNimation Entertainment…
(both companies’ logos appear beside each other, an electric spark between them, signifying rivalry)

With the special voicing talents of:

Tara Strong Sharon Mann
Mark Hamill
“Wooock a-bye Heeershey, oon de Earth top. Wheen de dark blooows, da moooon will rock. Wheen space breeeaks, de moonie will fall. And IIII goooot a spooooon.”

“Jar Jar! What are you doing now?!” Darkrai yelling.

“I was pretending to be spooky-wooky,” he said, holding Majora’s Mask.

“Stop it! We’re the development team, so we have to keep this story from not becoming a wreck, while at the same time making it as ridonkulous as possible. Now put that down!”

He flew away, and Jar Jar patiently followed. “Can I’s be in de shrinkee story?”

“No.”

Legend of the SEVEN LIGHTS

…Loading Final Transmission…

So yeah… that was the small prologue. Compared to the rest… pssh, this is gonna be WAY longer than Firstborn, let me tell you. Also, if for some reason you aren’t caught up with my series, might I suggest reading the previous stories, otherwise you will get nothing here. And I think we’ve all established that Monty’s Galactic Days is only so much canon. Meaning, not very. But thanks to all who’ve stuck with me this far; not many probably, we’ve got only one last road to go. …That, and a few filler stories like the Negaverse one. Next time… the journey begins. Later.
Chapter Summary

Sector V go to get lunch, but run into Gramma Stuffum! This should be an easy fight.

Yoi-yoi! Haaaah… well, people, as stunned as I am to say it… here is the official beginning to Legend of the Seven Lights. In this one, we’ll introduce a few of the story arcs, but be prepared for MANY more chapters to come. Also, this first saga is called the Frozen Saga, leave it up to you to determine why.

Chapter 2: It Begins With But a Song

NFL Stadium; Detroit, Michigan

The stadium was roaring with thousands of ecstatic fans, all hopping and hollering over their favorite sport: football. The game seemed like a sure win for the Canton Rushers, led by legendary rookie football-player, Ish Taylor. The slim rookie evasively dodged three buff men from the opposing team, the Blitzers, and was about to score another touchdown. But as if out of nowhere, lightning flashed in the sky, and rain started to pour furiously.

“The sky was clear just a while ago, Nick, I don’t see-” And even more unsurprisingly, a tornado suddenly spiraled onto the field and sucked all of the football-players away.

“Whoooa-WHOOA-WHOOOAAAA!” The tornado was gone in seconds as flags shot down from the heavens and stuck in the ground. They all bore the image of a smirking white face with long silver hair, which covered the right eye (from our view) and revealed only the furrowed left eye, and evil grin. From atop the stadium, the Man With the Red Eye’s cape blew in the wind, his form shadowed. It lit up for brief moments as lightning flashed, but his body was soon gone with the wind.

Los Angeles, California

A bright and sunny day over Los Angeles. The seas were calm this morning as the sun’s lovely rays glinted off the waves. Just a little off the beach, a class of children in swimwear performed stretches and poses as the water moved with their bodies, mimicking the movements of their teacher, Eva Jackson. “Remember, kids, to learn how to bend water means going with the flow. Aside from having a fairly flexible body, it’s about adjusting to the changes you encounter. True, it’s still a little too early to have any changes, but when that time comes, you’ll have to get those legs stretching.”

“But Ms. Jackson, don’t waterbenders bend better in the nighttime?” a boy asked.

“Yes, but no one wants to go to night school.” Eva smirked. “Plus the water is much warmer in the daytime. But if you practice hard enough, I promise to take you on a fieldtrip to Oceana.” She winked.
Rocky Mountains

At the same time, Angelie McKenzie was teaching a group of barefoot kids on a flat, large peak of the mountains. “To know how to bend what’s unmovable, you have to be unmovable yourself. When you know how to take hits and not be pushed around, you’ll have the heart as strong as a rock.”

One of the boys pushed down a girl next to him. “HA HA! She fails!”

The girl angrily stomped the ground and sent him flying with a rock-jab. “You FLAIL, Max!”

Angie then trapped the girl in a rock prison. “Come on, guys, be serious. Or you won’t be able to take out Luvbi’s airbending class.”

“Those flyguys are cheaters, anyway!” Max yelled.

“Then it’s important we know how to cheat ‘em down.” Angie winked.

Dusty Desert

“All right, kids,” Nigel began to his class of firebenders, “the most important thing to know about fire is- YAAH!” A green fire shot his butt and scared him away.

“Outta the way, Boy, they need a REAL lecture.” Fanny stated, marching to his spot. “Alright, kids, here’s a story to motivate ya: the story of two kids, a boy and a girl, who discover their firebending at the same time. During that time, the boy was fairly skilled and powerful with his firebending, but by the time they grew up, the GIRL reached the Logia level first, because SHE took time to hone her skills and get strong. The moral is, no matter how talented the snobby boy was, the girl was sure to beat him. Burn this lesson into your minds, boys.”

“HECK no!” a boy declared. “I’ll kick any girl’s butt! YAAAAH!” A 5-year-old girl burned his rear from behind.

“I hereby bump her to the next level.” Fanny smirked. Nigel sighed and walked away with a look of shame.

On a Sky Island

A group of students stood worriedly on the edge of a cloud, thousands of miles above the earth, as Luvbi floated over the abyss before them. “Pray, let us learn without wetting yonder pants. Air be an element of utmost freedom, having nary a fear of falling and dying a horrible, blood-splattering death.”

The children were shaking in their Greek-style robes.

“Today’s lesson shalt be about defying such gravity, as thou plummet to the very ground and land much safely on thine feet. Now… who wouldst liketh to go first?” She winked.

The others scootched away from a single boy on Luvbi’s left. “Thou!”

“Huh—AAAAAAH!” Luvbi forcibly pulled him off the edge with a gust and allowed him to fall. It felt like a dangerous ride at the amusement park, except the danger was all too real, lest he do something. The wind brushed against his face with incredible speed, and he was barely able to open his eyes. He wouldn’t be able to see the coming of his own death, would never be able to stop it. He wondered what that would look like. His bones shattering like glass and his blood shooting miles across the- OH GOD he didn’t wanna think about it! He furiously flailed his arms downward to make a wind barrier, but the wind resistance was too strong against him to do so.

“AaaaaaaaAAAAAHH!” And in a flash, his falling ceased, just inches from the solid earth. Luvbi had grabbed the collar of his shirt, looking at his teacher with a sheepish grin. She proceeded to fly him back to the clouds to try again.

Junkyard area

Matthew Dimalanta and his students gathered at a filthy junkyard, the stench unbearable and the skies fogged by yellow clouds. There weren’t very many girls. “So I take it you guys don’t like the smell.” He said. “Fact is, we’re poisonbenders, so we stink too, and people don’t wanna hang out with us. For that reason, we gotta try and make friends, so that way we’ll smell nice, even if it’s other poisonbenders.”

“How??” questioned a boy (they’re so dumb X)).

“The whole meaning of poisonbending in a nutshell. But how about, if you master this power, you get to fart all over girls’ tea parties with extra fart power.”

“YAAAAY!” exclaimed the boys, and two tomboys.

Sunset hill

In a region that was always twilight, Virginia Stork stretched her shadow for miles and miles beyond the sunset, but her dark-clothed students could only go a fourth of that way. “Come on, dudes, you’re not gonna be able to scare people with a puny shadow.”

“Miss Sims, is it true that a lot of shadowbenders kill their selves?” a little girl asked.

“Naaah, of course not! Timebenders do that. Too bad Danika isn’t here, though; she’s the expert. But listen guys, keep it up, and I’ll introduce you to some really awesome music!” She inhaled and blew smoke from a cigarette.

Philippines; behind Roxas Elementary

Mikaela Chariton sat cross-legged in midair as her students successfully did the same. “Yaaaaay you’re doing it!” she grinned. “I’m an excellent teacher! I think now I’ll teach you one of my personal favorites, the Psycho Shrink!”

“Sweet!” a boy perked. “I know the first person I’m gonna use it on.” He smirked wickedly at a girl.

She glared in disbelief. “Miss Mika, when will you teach us how to make Imaginary Friends?”

“Hehe, I’m not lookin’ to give you headaches, kids. I’ve only made a few, but this friend of mine is REALLY good at it! Her name’s Morgan, and she’s a psychic legend!”

“Where is Miss Morgan?” she asked with a smile.

“Oh, she’s kinda got a job right now. But maybe I’ll invite ‘er over when she has time!” she grinned. “Alright, now who wants to shrink first?”
“Ohh-ohh! I do!” the boy perked.

At a snap of Mika’s fingers, the boy was 3 inches tall. “GREAT, now everyone gets to play with him!”

“HEY! You cheat!”

St. Kilgore’s Graveyard

“And last but not least, fearbending.” Katie began.

“Um… what?” questioned a boy.

“Nothing. The thing is, Fear is a difficult element to master, ‘cause it involves getting scared a lot and facing a lot of conflict, and no one wants that. But it’s a lot easier to master when you show no fear. Just look in the face of danger without so much as blinking, and in time, that danger will fear you. Just ask my friend Mandy, wherever the heck she is on her pirating adventure. Now who wants to meet my friend, Cookie Monster?”

“COOKIIIIIEEE!” A large, blue-furred Cookie Monster with horns shot up from behind them.

“AAAAAAHHH!” the kids cowered away in seconds.

“…You say they would take me to Monster Ball!”

“Ask someone else, Doughboy.”

Philippines; Rainier’s School For Benders

Principal Rainier Chariton sat in his office, signing papers. Things were quiet as normal at his school, since classes took place miles from the grounds. He looked up as one of his teachers, Flynn Alcaraz walked in. “Hey, we just got that new shipment of ramen noodles from Japan.”

“Sweet! That really oughta boost the firebenders’ strength.”

“Ahhhh… boy, Rainy… 15 years this school’s been standing… hard to believe how many benders sprung up. Still, having all the classes take place all around the world just feels… well, complicated.”

“No, nonsense! It’s why we have pairs of psychibenders located at these drop-off points to warp people back and forth between regions. They use a tele-transportation technique and link with their partners to warp people or things to them.”

“I know all THAT, it just feels like a real chore for them.”

“Well, they know it’s for the good of teaching these kids all they need to know.” Rainier stood up as the two walked across the hall. “Speaking of which, how are things in the gym going?”

“Oh, it’s going well. We are having squabbles between some of the students.”

“Who?”

“Can you guess?” They entered the gym, where-

“AAAAAAHHH!” A boy in a karate robe was forcibly climbing across the rings high up on the ceiling. “P-Principal Chariton, make Sunni stooooop!”
They looked as Rainier’s daughter, in her own karate robe, had her eyes closed as she forced the boy to climb across the rings using psychic. Rainier approached and did a quick punch on her head, blocking her chi. “AaaaAAAH-!” Flynn saved the boy before he fell.

“Uh! Daaaaaad! I almost made it!” Sunni yelled.

“Honey, today is a martial arts class, you aren’t supposed to use your bending.” Rainier chuckled.

“So what, I’ve never been good at that stuff. Why do I need martial arts when I can just pick people up and throw ‘em around with my mind?”

“Well, some situations might rob you of your bending. Like so.” He flicked her nose.

“Ow!”

“Honey, even if you’re the greatest bender in the world, there’s a hundred other ways to fight. You need to open yourself up a bit more, look at your sister.”

“HUH, HUH, HUAH!” Darcy Chariton was fiercely kicking a blonde-haired boy trying to defend, and succeeded in kicking him down. “He he!” She spared a grin at her dad.

Sunni frowned in anger. “Only because she’s a screw-up at psychic. But I need to get better control of my element. Why can’t I join Mom’s class?”

“Your mom trains you every day, she needs to work with other students.” He ruffled his daughter’s hair. “And she knows you can handle yourself just fine. …Unless when it involves bullying other kids. Just keep training yourself in combat, it’ll do wonders. After all, exercise is good for the brain, and that’s where psychic is concentrated. Good luck, Honey!” He walked out with Flynn.

Darcy approached Sunni with a happy smile while the latter mumbled in anger. “Never see MOM throwing her fists…”

“Hehe! I’m glad to finally kick your butt!”

“WHOOA!” Darcy kicked Sunni off her feet.

“Hee hee hee!”

KND Moonbase

Things were still calm and normal on Moonbase. Or rather, Cheren’s office. The boy was signing papers and filing them aside, ignoring all the commotion outside. That noise was increased for a brief second when Larry MayHence quickly slipped in and shut the door. “Sir, we’re receiving numerous phone calls from almost every sector on Earth.”

“Sigh, man, what is everyone so whiny about.”

“Maybe the fact you announced the end of the world just 3 days ago.”

“So, that’s more than enough time to calm down about it. Heck, the only reason I warned them was to be ready; the whole purpose is to try and stop it.”

“So how do we stop it, Sir?”

“Find these 20 Keys, I guess.”
“Well, I can get you seven flashlights, but Thirteen Darknesses, you have to be a little more specific. Like, we talkin’ bloody knives or scary movies or something?”

“Sigh, I don’t know what they are myself. They sound like people; or they could be like the Firstborn.”

“Weren’t the Firstborn people?”

“No, they were gods, the people just protected them. But that brings up a good question. What if the Firstborn know something about this? Especially Uxie; I’ll fly down and ask her what she knows! I mean, the Goddess of Knowledge don’t know anything, no one does.”

“Well, do you know where Uxie lives?”

“I’ll just ask Mr. Garley; he was her Guardian.” He stood up. “I’ll be back in a few!”

“But there’s still a mob outside.”

“Right.” He winked. “Good luck, buddy.” Cheren raced to an escape pod on the side of his office and shot down to Earth. Larry looked after him worriedly, flinching when the mob suddenly broke the door down.

“Ulp! CherEEEEEN! I thought you filled in that order for a SECOND ESCAPE POOOOD!” And the mob tackled him with questions.

Dickson Household

“And so ends the tale of the little platypus… who discovered alcohol.” Eva Jackson reported on the news.

“In other news, panic is still widespread across the nation due to recent news of a supposed, upcoming Apocalypse.” Kade replied. “When asked what he thinks, President McGarfield had this to say:”

“As your humble president, I can safely assure you that any news of some ‘Apocalypse’ is likely the work of some ratty ne’er-do-wells,” assured President Jimmy McGarfield, “and our forces are lookin’ to capture the perpetrator, and give him one wallopin’ of a beating.”

“And thus, our country can continue to hope.” Kade concluded. “Coming up, a man who has claimed to’ve spot little people in his backyard is currently—…”

Chad Dickson watched the news with a gruff look and folded arms. His wife, Emily Dickson walked in with two plates of tea. “You still watching that crud?”

“It’s not crud, Emily, it’s the real deal, you know it was coming.”

“Well, yeah, so there’s not much reason to be so hooked on it.” She sat beside him.

“I’m just surprised it happened so soon.” He took one of the cups. “But we’re hearing from all of Sector V’s parents saying how their kids kicked those pirates’ butts. Heck, you remember what happened with Dimentia’s kid earlier.”

“Well, that’s a good thing, right?”

“What I’m saying is that everyone else’s kids got so much stronger and our son’s still a big wimp.”
“Uh, don’t say that about him! He’s seven years old, of course he wouldn’t be that strong.”

“Pfft, when I was that age, I could already beat Numbuh 100 at arm-wrestling. But hopefully after Rupert gets back from his 50-lap run around the high school, he’ll at least have dried out his tearducts from all his sweating.” He sipped the tea. “Mmm, this stuff is good, though…”

“Good thing I got Iroh’s secret recipe!” Emily grinned.

A knock was heard at the door as Rupert Dickson slumped in, almost totally out of breath with sweat in his armpits and pants. “Ahhh, right on time.” Chad walked up and knelt beside his son, placing a hand on his shoulder. “Feel burned out, Champ? Those legs feel strong enough to kick a steel pole down?”

“Heh, if only, right Dad?” Rupert smiled nervously and walked away.

Chad sniffed the hand that was on his shoulder and gave a suspicious frown. “See any cute girls at the pool?”

“Well, I saw Lilac’s mom and, well, she was pretty-, eh heh heh heh heh.” He blushed sheepishly.

“But I don’t recall the pool being on your route, nor you having enough time to visit there afterward.”

“Oh… well, I guess I just… got done early, heheh.”

“Yeah. Or maybe…” Chad launched over and immediately pinned the boy under his foot, “I smell POOL WATER on your shirt!”

“AAAH! Okay okay, I didn’t run all the laps! Well, I ran one, but then I saw this family driving to the pool and, well…”

“Well, I hope you enjoyed yourself, because NOW you just lost meatballs for dinner. Not that you-OWW!”

“GET OFF him, Chad.” demanded Emily as she twisted his hand from behind. “Or SOMEONE’S about to lose THEIR-… well, I probably shouldn’t say that in front of our child.”

“…Uuuugh. Fine. Go take a bath, Son.” Chad stepped off and let Rupert run upstairs. Emily released Chad as he turned to her. “Look, Em, I know we’re supposed to have equal say in our parenting, but do you really plan to baby him his whole life?”

“Well, at least I’m not BULLYING him like some helpless little ant!”

“Please, at least ants are strong for their size, but Rupert can’t even lift a box that’s half his own weight! And didn’t he trip on that stick in the yard yesterday?”

“All I’m saying is, Rupert isn’t a man yet, he’s a kid, and he can’t be strong like you are, yet.”

“It isn’t just about being strong, Rupert doesn’t have ANY notable skills, except playing videogames. He either needs to learn something to prepare him for things to come, or get some muscle.”

“Rupert needs to enjoy his freedom as a normal kid, and when nature calls, I know he’ll have the strength and know-how to pull through. You just gotta have faith. Anyway, I’m going out shopping, and I don’t want you pestering Rupert for the rest of the day, or you’ll be administering punishment on yourself if you know what I mean. See you later.” With that, she left out the door.

Chad sat on the couch in thought. Maybe Emily was right. Rupert would have the strength and know-how to pull through… when nature calls. Yeah… when nature calls. “That’s not a bad idea!” he smirked.

Gallagher Elementary

“Never have I been so glad to say it, but I LOOOOVE going to the cafeteria.” Mason expressed as the group walked down the hall after hearing the ring of the lunch bell.

“Yeah, compared to eating all that candy, it makes ya miss Gramma Stuffum’s slop.” Harry said.

“It’s not slop, I find the Meat Hogs quite delicious.” Artie said.

“Makes me wonder why you still a skinny boy.” Harry smirked.

“All I’m saying is, she wouldn’t fail for a decent-” The vent suddenly fell open above them, and Sheila dropped down.

“WOOOOOOO!” cheered the energetic raccoon. “It’s LUNCH time, cobbers! Let’s blow this joint and have an adventure!”

“What’re you doing here, Sheila, you don’t go to this school!” Chris yelled.

“Yeh, but me mom thought I should take the day off from mine and see how YOU blokes are doin’! So did ya find anything on these 20 Keys?”

“No, and we’re kinda swamped in a pile of homework for missing more than a week.” Harry replied.

“Well, bonkers, SURELY savin’ the world has ta count for extra credit?”

“The world’s well-being isn’t part of the curriculum, so no.” replied Haylee.

“Well, those teachers should just suck on what they give.” she stated as she joined her friends to the lunchroom. “What’s for eatin’, anyway?”

“Well, Gramma Stuffum’s our chef, so you figure it out.” Aurora said.

“Blimey, so you guys fight her every day?”

“Yeah, but it’s gotten a little worn-out.” Chris said. “These Brotherhood guys are pretty much slumping.”

“But I just wish she’d just hand us the food so we’d have more time for homework.” Artie said.

“Well, if you guys want a break, Ah’ll deliver a hand to old Stuffum for ya!” Sheila grinned, cracking her knuckles.

“Well, since she’s only one-fourth Big Mom’s height, give it a go!” Mason grinned.

“Right then.” She faced the cafeteria with sureness. “‘ere I go!” (Play Gramma Stuffum’s Song from KND)
Stage 1: The Lunch House Rock!

Mission: Blow down Gramma Stuffum’s lunch line!

The strumming of the electric guitar already rung as Sheila dashed down the strangely-long cafeteria line. And, while no one else seemed to see it, a wide-faced grinning fairy creature was pressing eyeballs that appeared on the wall, doing so when a loud beat of the music played. The eyes also released glowing yellow spheres with wings, making a trail for Sheila to pick up, and they seemed to flow with the rhythm whenever she touched one. All in all, the road was pretty straightforward as Gramma Stuffum hadn’t released her food minions yet, but dead pieces of meat began to cover the ground that Sheila had to jump. But that all changed the minute she punched down an upcoming wall of meat.

The strums boomed louder as Food Patrol monsters popped out from the counter, another line coming out whenever Sheila broke a meat wall. Stacks of Icy Cubes formed like stairs, so Sheila jumped up them, then punched a Toasted Bat that came at her, and upon landing, she had to jump a series of Meat Hogs. Toasted Bats tried to nip her whenever she jumped the hogs, but she punched them away anyway and soon made it to the kitchen. The minute she punched down the door, she had to jump to a tall platform, which fell, then another that fell, before grabbing a bone zipline and sliding to a safe path.

The kitchen was actually a vast wasteland of hideous foods, with a different kind of Food Minion landing to attack Sheila, but she still punched them as the rhythm went and kept running. At one point, she had to swing a series of hoops, up to a higher path as she punched more Foodlings. She then had to jump big gaps in the path while throwing rapid punches at a string of bats, then punched a whole stairway of bats as she jumped down a deeper chasm.

When she set foot on the next path, the music picked up as rounds of Foodlings and obstacles came at her, and Gramma Stuffum finally appeared on a flying Eggman-like pod. Sheila jumped up a set of stairs when she sang “GRAMMA the STUFFUM”, then down a slide when her Foodlings repeated. It was then a matter of jumping hazards or punching enemies until Stuffum released her giant SQUIDS! A series of giant tentacles shot up everywhere, Sheila running up the first one, jumping a gap before two shot at her, then dashing up a vertical tentacle and jumping between it and a parallel one to avoid other tentacles, all the while running from pursuing tentacles.

She safely made it to a new path and had to jump and punch a tentacle in its eye, at the same time the Foodlings chorused “NOOO.” Sheila then dropped down a windy chasm, making a windy descent, then punched another tentacle at the end. She then jumped a stairway of Toast Bats to punch another tentacle, then was met with Gramma’s sea of Gravy Rats. There were floating platforms among these rats that Sheila could jump across, and more Toast Bats trying to swoop her. She then had to jump and punch down vertical footholds to make them flat and run on them, and when the rats finally ended, Sheila dashed up two long, vertical walls.

Stuffum made parts of the parallel walls explode, forcing Sheila to jump between them, and the mysterious fairy creature continued to slap eyes in the wall to make Lums appear and guide Sheila’s path. The raccoon made it atop the wall as Gramma Stuffum floated over her path.

“YOOOOOU JUUUUUST MAAAAAKE MEEEEE-” Sheila jumped and PUNCHED Stuffum out of her pod, then punched her further down the path, then knocked her against the counter at the end, and finished the song with a round of rapid punches before shoving Stuffum into the kitchen, the shutter snapping shut. Sheila faced the camera, grinned, and held up her fingers in a ‘peace’ sign. (End song.)

“WOOOHOO! That kicks off MY daily exercise!” Sheila perked, returning to the lunchroom.
“Yeah!” Chris said. “Now let’s head outside for Phase 2.” They hurried out to the playground as the school began trembling and the familiar chants echoed. “SLAAAMWIIIICH. SLAAAMWIIIICH.”

Before their eyes, the colossal sandwich monster emerged from the school, his mouth drooling with molten cheese as he glared at Sector V with ravenous eyes. The kids spared a smirk at Aurora as the girl kicked on her Ice and Fire Gates. Brimming with the powers of both elements, she drilled directly into Slamwich’s stomach, putting a worried look on him and Stuffum. Slamwich froze completely solid, and with a burst of fire, he was destroyed. “WAAAAA-AAAAAHH!” Stuffum crashed on the ground.

Aurora landed beside her friends as her Fury Form vanished. “Didn’t even break a sweat.” She said proudly.

“Boy, these Brotherhood guys felt a lot more threatening in our parents’ story.” Chris said. “They don’t challenge us anymore!”

“Well, what can you expect when they’ve been frozen in nitrogen for so long.”

“Hey Sheila, wanna stay for lunch?” Mason asked.

“Well sure, Mate!” she perked. But then she recalled the grinning fairy creature and glanced right to see it fly away. “…’o the ’eck was that?…”

Still lain on her back, Stuffum doesn’t think she’s ever endured punches that tough. It was safe to say, it was a new record for how fast they defeated her. Her henchmen, Liver and Onions hopped over. “Gramma Stuffum, Sir! Are you okay? We still have a few leftover courses if…” Liver asked.

“Nooo… what is ze point.” She got up and depressedly walked away. Liver and Onions exchanged sad glances.

Washington; Garley Household

The day was still bright over this little neighborhood, except a particular flying object was zooming close to Earth, a trail of smoke in its wake. The escape pod flipped and bounced along the street, Cheren flipping stylishly out of its hatch. He flew several feet in the air, and dove into a garbage can. The can toppled as Cheren crawled out, pulling a banana peel off. “Why do I keep forgetting to turn off the ‘Trashcan’ targeting option. Stupid oddly specific landing controls…” Cheren stepped up to the front door and rang the bell.

Matthew Garley hadn’t changed much at all as an adult, a big purple coat, purple tie, sandals with socks, square glasses that looked bandaged in their center, and that classic nerdy voice. “Hey, you’re Nigel’s son! Heh heh heh, hwow, nice of you to visit!” he snorted. “I don’t suppose you’re here for a first-hand source of how your dad ended the tyranny of Old GKN, or the Tale of Numbuh 2030, or even how the 2nd KND Generation was originally-”

“Heheheh, maybe some other time, Mr. Garley.” Cheren sweat-dropped. “Listen, I know you were friends with Uxie, so I was wondering if she told you anything about, Seven Lights and Thirteen Darknesses.”

“Hmmmm. That would be a good topic to discuss with her. Unfortunately, I haven’t, and I don’t know where Uxie is either, since we set them free. But I’ve been doing research over since Emily passed me your message. The best I could find was this old tale where seven princesses gathered to battle these thirteen bad guys for control of some key. I don’t even know where it came from. But my quest for knowledge hasn’t failed me, yet! Anyway… sorry I can’t help much.”

“It’s okay. The only other person I assume would know is Grim.” He looked away in thought. “May visit him about this. Anyway, how is Emily doing, anyhow?”

“Well, Kim’s about to take her on a trip to Germany and visit the relatives. Apparently Kim’s dad is the president of this major science and engineering company, Adams Tech Co.. Heh, you wouldn’t believe how excited Emily is!”

“Ha ha ha! Probably snorting in her nasal cavities, right?”

“Ha ha ha HA!”

Cheren’s wristwatch communicator then rang, and Larry’s image appeared. “Oh, Larry. Listen, sorry about leaving you with the mob and stuff, but—"

“Oh, that’s no big deal. But listen, Cheren, someone’s up here to see you.”

“CHEREEEEENN!” Cheren jumped at this familiar voice. “GET YOUR BUTT UP HERE RIGHT NOW BEFORE WE HAVE A SERIOUS TALK ABOUT YOUR CURRENT DIMENSIONAL STRUCTURE!”

Cheren whimpered slightly. “Can she at least promise not to Space Shrink me?”

“She said that she’s under no obligation to agree to conditions regarding such.”

“I’ll be up there in 5 minutes.” He hung up. “Well, guess I’ll have to hold off on that. See you later, Mr. Garley.” He pushed a button on the watch.

“Heh, anytime, Cheren.” Cheren’s R.O.A.D.S.T.A.R. came down from the heavens as the boy jumped in and flew back to Moonbase.

Unknown Hideout

The elderly tycoon known simply as Mom (thankfully not the Big one ;)) limped into her hideout and pressed a button on a small panel. Four hologram projectors around the room activated, revealing the staticky images of the other Corporate Presidents. In the very center, the gigantic head of the Head President buzzed to life, her hologram much too staticky to make out her appearance. “Nice to see all of you again.” Mom said smugly.

“Alright, let’s get down to some serious business: why the hell is 4kids still supplying our voice actors?!” complained the gruff old president.

“Come on, cut 4kids a break, at least we’re allowed to cuss now!” Doflamingo said brightly. “And they got spirit, ya can’t blame them for that!”

“No, that’s not why we’re here.” the Head President stated. “The World Leaders ordered our presence due to a hitch in their plan.”

“Yes, it seems the Uno child became aware of the Apocalypse’s existence.” the Asian president said. “President McGarfield can only keep the peace among the Americans for so long. Not that he’ll be able to keep the Kids Next Door from interfering.”

“Then it’s time we take matters into our own hands.” stated the remaining president, his hands folded. “We must deliver those kids a painful, though legal, kicking away from our business.”

“No, we can’t make any rash appearances.” the Head said. “The Corporate Presidents already look bad thanks to Mom’s blundering in Galaxia.”

“Well, if DOFLAMINGO hadn’t’ve interfered, I could have-”

“Please, Mom, there’s no reason to point fingers.” Doffy grinned. “I just never recalled making the arrangement to lend you one of my associates.”

“The Kids Next Door are likely aware of the Presidents’ stake in all this due to the Caesar incident.” the Head said. “Before they begin to track us, the Leaders request our presence at a gathering on the Midway Peak; they’ll also be inviting many nobles from around the world.”

“What the hell do the nobles want in all this?” asked the old man.

“Why, to enjoy the show, of course. Fu fu fu.” Doflamingo laughed. “A noble’s job is to be humored by world conflict.”

“Miss Head President, is it all right if we bring our children onboard the trip?” asked the Asian. “I am trying to introduce my son, Chane to the family business.”

“Sure sure, bring whoever. But see that they’re able to keep a secret.”

“I don’t think you’ll have to worry about MY kids.” assured Doffy. “If there’s one thing we’re good at, it’s secrets. Fufufu!”

“Good. You will be boarding the train tomorrow at 7a.m. Don’t be late.” Her hologram vanished, as did the others.

Mom turned away with her wrinkly, smug face. “Oh trust me, I know a thing or two about keeping secrets…”

York Household; Sandcave

Another arduous day for Nolan “Sandman” York. He stared intently at his computer, skimming the criminals listed. Holiday… Fanatic… Promethean… Tornado… “Why…” He gripped his head with the most aggravating headache, “Why can’t I REMEMBER any of these people?!”

He heard the doorway creak open, followed by the light stepping of his wife’s feet coming down the stairs. “Nolan, are you still down here?”

“I just don’t get it, Danika. These villains are listed in the police’s files, and even my own. But no one has any clue who they are, even me! But why on Earth would I have them…”

“I don’t know… to be honest, I can’t even recall you fighting many villains lately. There was that Caesar guy, and of course the whole Dracula thing, Affright pops up every now and again, but those were awhile ago.”

“Wait… Caesar…” Nolan pulled the man’s file up. “According to Dillon’s story, Caesar was acquired by one of his clients, Percival Tachyon, but they don’t know where Caesar went following Tachyon’s defeat. But what if… one of his other clients got to him?”

“Like who?”

“Well, we can rule Big Mom out of the picture, since he said they didn’t find Caesar on Candied Island. But here’s one man that raises my interest.” He pulled up a picture of none other than—“Don Quixote Doflamingo. President of Doflamingo Incorporated, a company that manufactures talking, semi-intelligent toys. He’s labeled as one of the Corporate Presidents For Children’s Entertainment; the same league as robot-manufacturer, Mom, whom was acquainted with Tachyon. The evidence is too high on him.”

“So what, you’re gonna go after Doflamingo?”

“No… not yet. I think I should do research on him; all the Corporate Presidents, really. There was always something suspicious about them, and the whole Caesar thing takes the cake.” He pushed himself away and rolled to an elevator. “I’ll be leaving at seven; probably should make dinner early. It’s gonna be a long night.”

Dani watched her husband roll onto the platform, and rise to the upper level that was their house. “Better make extras for Crystal and Yuki, too…” the woman sighed.

Chariton Household

Her training class over, Mikaela Chariton was asleep against the tree in their backyard, once again lost in dreams. Sunni Chariton could very much tell that, seeing the smile on her mother’s face. Sunni sighed calmly and pulled out her blue lightsaber. “AAAAHH!” She lunged at her mother with fierce determination, set on slicing her mother in half.

Aaaaaand we’ll leave it off there. Soooo there was the first instance of song levels in this story, that’s gonna be a regular Sheila thing. Well, maybe other characters. I was actually sort of stumped in that topic, I couldn’t decide whether to write the stage in paragraphs, or put the actions in a lyrical form to better go along with the song. Still kind of thinking, really. Well, next time, we will do the next stage, and officially start one of my favorite story arcs. Laters!
Chapter Summary

Chad Dickson abandons his son in the woods. Little Rupert ends up discovering a brand new world.

Yo guys, welcome back to the show! In this one, we'll be further introducing the story arc characters and getting started with conflicts. So let’s get it over with and get ready for the rest!

Chapter 3: A World Under Your Nose

Gallagher Elementary

“See you TOMORROW, Miss Stuffum!” Chris waved with a fake bright smile as they left the cafeteria. “Can’t wait for your Scream-of-Spinach! Ahhh, beating her up is the best joy every day. Even if Sheila did all the work.”

“Yeh, but, didn’t you blokes see that thing?” Sheila asked.

“The Horsebutt Beef?” Artie asked. “Sorry, I ate that.”

“No, Oi mean the-” But at that instant, Sheila, Chris, and Mason were trampled by a team of three buff teenagers dressed in conchshell armor, pulling a conchshell carriage.

“OUT of the way, less-graders!” exclaimed the girl on the carriage, dressed in a blackish-purple two-piece swimsuit, purple towel-cape, purple bucket crown with a shell crest, shell bracelets around her wrists and legs, and bare feet. She had black hair and black eyes. “Make way for your Fourth Grade QUEEN of the School, Princess SHELLY Johnson! Make sure to gather in the gymnasium after school for a one-on-one block-building tournament with First Grade President! In which I will once again take the crown. LAUGH with me, Knights, AH HAHAHAHA!” Their laughs echoed down the hall.

The three operatives were flat as pancakes as their friends helped them up. Man, that Shelly is such a nag. Kirie signed. I can’t believe they elected HER president.

“I can’t believe they let her wear a bathing suit to school.” Harry said.

“I can’t believe her three uncles each had identical kids born on close dates and are serving as her knights.” Mason noted.

“At least her dad didn’t marry Aunt Mushi.” Haylee said. “Otherwise we’d be related.”

“Who was her mom, anyway?” Chris asked.

“I heard her parents actually got divorced and Sandy took full custody.” Harry replied. “Guess we’ll never know.”

“Mates, are we gonna talk about bloody Queen Nag, or are we gonna go look for these 20 Keys?
“Well, it’s not like we know where to look.” Aurora replied. “We’re not really sure what a ‘Light’ or ‘Darkness’ is.”

“Well, they could be light and darknessbenders.” Mason noted. “Like…Like Sheila! Remember that whole lightshow that happened when we found that cube? Maybe that has something to do with it…”

“Oi, ripper! AH’M one of these Lights!” beamed Sheila.

“We don’t really know that, yet.” Aurora replied. “But I bet I know someone who could tell us: Mr. King.”

“The successor of the guy that knows everything?” Harry asked. “Probably.”

“Let’s go to visit him after school.” Haylee suggested. “I’m sure Her Highness won’t notice a few missing her oh-so-famous block-building contest. She always wins, anyway.”

“How come?” Sheila asked as they walked off.

“’Cause the other presidents’ blocks always fall at the last minute. Not sure why.”

“Maybe she’s Irish.” Artie said. “Ha ha! Get it? ‘Cause-”

“IRISH ARE LUCKY.” they chorused.

Chariton Household

“AAAAAH!” Sunni lashed her saber at her sleeping mother, but Mika whipped out her own lightsaber and blocked.

“Awwww Mr. Hatter, did you remember my unbirthdaaaay?” Mika moaned in her sleep.

Sunni swung her blade around every direction, but Mika was quick to defend, not peeping her eyes open for a second. When Sunni swung at her legs, Mika flipped overhead and landed on her feet. “Absalom, you smoke’s makin’ feel oopsy whoopsiiiee.” She wobbled in place, drool leaking from her mouth.

Sunni tried to stab Mika with her saber, only for the woman to defend again. Sunni wondered if Mika was secretly conscious, or if her very instincts told her to fight in her sleep. Either way, it made Sunni very furious. Sunni threw a Psycho Sphere, but Mika kicked it to the sky, and when Sunni tried to slice her leg, Mika warped behind, then Sunni tried to slice again, but Mika snapped her fingers and warped her. Sunni was suddenly dangling by her hair in Mika’s fingers, the size of a golfball.

“Yoooooouu silly mousyyyy, of course I’l have the cake. Yom, yoom, yoooom.”

Sunni shook like an angry rabid mouse. “PUT ME DOWN, MOM, LET ME GO!”

“Ahhhhhh but can YOU stand on YOUR head, Cheshire Caaaaaat.” She wobbled loopily again.

Sunni calmed down and focused her own energy. She warped away from Mika’s hand and back to normal size, quickly pulling the lightsaber to her hand and thrusting at Mika’s back. “AAAAH!!”

Mika finally snapped awake, the sword piercing her chest. Before Sunni’s eyes, Mika dispersed into pink light and reformed behind her. “Yaaaaaawn. Sigh, Sunni, what were you doing?” She rubbed her eyes. “Were you trying to cut me again?”

Sunni was at a loss for words. She had no idea how Mika survived that just now... but it further goes to show her extreme talent. She switched off her lightsaber and banged her head against the tree. “NNNNN! WHY, CAN’T, I, BEAT, YOOOOU?” Tears started to leak. “Why can’t I become as STRONG as you, Mom? Why can’t I be TALENTED?”

Mika walked over with a warm smile, patting her daughter’s head. “Sunni, there’s more to life than just being really talented. And I keep telling you, you have to quit chasing after me and be your own person. People will like Sunni whether she’s me or NOT me.” She grinned. “And I rather she isn’t me.”

“Siiiigh… to tell the truth, Mom, there’s more to it.”

“Hm?”

“I kept trying not to get obsessed over being like you... but... everyone else in the KND had the same story. And...”

Three years ago, when Sunni attended Arctic Training. Wearing a blindfold as she tried her best to sense the enemy dummies and destroy them. But no matter how hard she tried, she ended up killing a few friends. “Ally slain, ally slain, ally slain.” The alarm kept ringing, putting a sense of doubt in her heart.

“Nnn!” She looked over as a young, 6-year-old Cheren got wounded in the shoulder by a robot’s laser. With a fierce look, he gripped his sword and ran to chop it to bits, but the robot was quick to dodge Cheren’s predictable movements and kick him to the ground.

“Come on, Bro, can’t you swing better than that?” Aurora asked. “You’re not becoming Supreme Leader with THAT arm.”

“Well, who said I WANTED to be Supreme Leader?”

“You did... after hearing your mom’s stories numerous times. Heck, why else are you a mama’s boy?”

“I am not! Who wants to sit in a boring office all day, anyway?”

“Keep saying that, but it won’t change a thing!” She ran away laughing.

“Whaddoes THAT mean? Hey, COME BACK here, Aurora!” He chased her.

Sunni knew that Cheren idolized his mother, too. Training hard with the sword in the hopes of following her footsteps. Seeing how much he failed... Sunni was glad at least she wasn’t like that.

Then 2 years later, inauguration of the new Supreme Leader. Cheren Uno marched up on stage by his subordinates, Francis and Panini. “Boys and girls, it is with great honor I accept the office as your Supreme Leader. Numbuh 100,000’s traitorous actions have struck us all, but it’s important that we move on. I can’t promise I’ll be as great a leader as he was, but I will see that this organization remains prosperous. KIDS NEXT DOOR RULEZ!”
training get to be the former leader’s favorite? …That deceiving little weasel.

“You wanted to see me, Sir?” Sunni asked, in his office 6 months before the current time.

“Numbuh 33-Arrow, it’s come to my attention you and January-14 haven’t been pulling your weight. When you first joined, you were appointed with our team of Telepathic Transmission psychicbenders to scan the Earth for any signs of danger. You two were assigned with the Philippines, but a lot of distresses were noticed days after they were given.”

“Well, SHE GETS IN THE WAY OF MY CONCENTRATION!” she screamed.

“I’m just saying, our files show your mom had the same job when she was a kid, and she was-”

“GHHHHHH.” His desk was crushed under her psychic.

Cheren became stiff with fright. “Is there something… going on, Sunni?”

Sunni sighed, her psychic fading down. “How come YOU get to be a mama’s boy and still be so great?”

“Uhhhh… ‘scuse me?”

“Come on, I know you’re trying to copy your mom, the ‘greatest leader that ever lived’, and now you saved the world TWICE from all-powerful super freaks! How can YOU be so much like your mom when I CAN’T?”

“Oh… heheheheheh.” He scratched his head. “Yeah, I was kinda takin’ after my mom at first. But… you know, after all this… I really forgot about ever following her. It didn’t become about being as great as my mom, it became about, well, saving the world from certain doom. And protecting my organization. …Maybe that’s what’s wrong with you.”

“Don’t you think I WANT to help out?? But the reason I try to follow my mom so badly is ‘cause I’m a lousy psychic. Better than Darcy at least, but, how can I help with my fullest potential WITHOUT being like her?”

“Hmmm… Well, I don’t really care if you’re like her or not. I just want you to help out more. But listen, Sunni… how ‘bout I give you and Darcy some field missions? Get better control of your powers. And when the two of you become stronger, I want you to help us out on Moonbase.”

“What kind of field missions? Tracking down worn-out villains and throwing them around with psychic? That’ll help us train.”

“Point taken. Alright then… I challenge you to a fight!”

“What?”

“You know what I can do, and I’m still nowhere near as tough as mine or your mom. So why don’t you make it your goal to get as strong as me? Then if you’re able to make me sweat, you’ll know you’ve improved.” He winked.

“Are you implying you’re tougher than me already?”

“Well… yeah.” Cheren smirked. “Yeah I do. I don’t see YOU goin’ all god mode.”

“WELL, NOT EVERYBODY GETS CRAZY WEAPONS!” She lit blue.
“Doesn’t matter.” He flicked her nose. “They still beat your measly psychic.”

“Grrrr BRING IT!! I’LL GET SO POWERFUL YOU WON’T SURVIVE A MEASLY PSYCHO SPHERE!”

“It’s a deal then, Sunni.” He held a hand out. “Come back when you think you can kick my butt!”

“…” Her psychic died down as she took his hand, still with a frowning look.

“…” Mika finished analyzing her daughter’s story, “So you got yourself a rival, huh!” she grinned.

“No he’s not, I just felt like satisfying him. Haven’t really talked to him directly since… I don’t think I’ve improved at all.”

“Okay, Sunni, I’ll help you train.” Mika rubbed her hair. “But why don’t you go take a nap first, you just got back from school and you’re already trying to kill me. A strong mind needs rest!”

Still frowning, Sunni decided to head inside. “Yaaaawn. I was still taking my nap.” And with that, Mika sat back against the tree and returned to Dreamland.

KND Moonbase

Cheren hurriedly flew back to Moonbase and ran to his office. “You wanted to see me, Numbuh…”

“No-o way, you actually read Dora Fanfiction?” Nebula laughed, viewing Cheren’s computer.

“HEY, I’m learning… Spanish.. okay??” He slapped his hands over the screen. “Whaddyou want, Nebula?”

“To know why somebody didn’t warn me of some impending doom that threatens our very existence.”

“Well, I was going through a lot of stuff… okay? I mean, it’s not the kind of news people would like to hear.”

“WELL, IT’S CERTAINLY NEWS THAT’S WORTH TALKING ABOUT!”

“Okay, okay, calm down…” Apparently, ‘okay’ was his word of the day.

“Siiiigh.” She pinched her nasal bridge. “Well, the point is, I got the news to the other Supreme Leaders before I came, so now they’re doing research on these Keys. I don’t suppose you have any leads?”

“Well, I was kinda going to go down and ask Grim.”

“That’ll need to wait first. I’ve been wanting to set up another alliance for a while, with the Minish Kids Next Door. Arianna thinks they can be valuable producers and suppliers, and Vweeb wants ‘em for their strength. I don’t exactly recall Minish being durable, but better than none. Jesbi confirmed that the Minish Leader resides in the Tree of Beginning, so let’s head down.”

“Heh, the Tree of Beginning.” Cheren smiled. “Reminds me of Mom’s old story.”

“Yes, except we’re going a lot earlier than they did. I just hope the Minish have a way to really help.”

Dickson Household
After finishing his bath, Rupert scrappily wiped his hair dry and slipped his clothes on. “Gyah!” He jumped at seeing his dad just outside the bathroom. “Oh, Dad… you’re probly still pretty mad at me for, uh…”

“Nah, it’s alright, Son.” Chad assured. “At this point, I’ve come to realize… you’re too young for me to force all this exercise on you.”

“Oh… Really?” This sounded a little out of the blue.

“Yes. And your mother has faith you’ll know how to handle yourself in a real situation, so I’ll have faith, too.”

“Well… Great!” Rupert had a new positive aura. It sounded as though all the pain and suffering was finally through.

“Heheh. So while your mom is out shopping, I thought I’d take ya somewhere special.”

“Really! Where?” He felt more excited by the minute.

Chad knelt down and knocked out his son with a Vulcan nerve pinch.

Virginian Forest

His son lay asleep for the whole drive to the deepest part of the forest. Chad finally parked, carried his son out, and set him on the ground. He quickly drove away before Rupert could awaken.

“Ohhh… what happened. Dad? Where am I?” He searched around with great worry. He felt something in his shirt and discovered a folded note. “‘Dear Son, I realized the only way to teach you to be stronger is to put you in a real situation. I have taken you to the farthest part of the forest I could find, and it’ll be up to you to brave the dangers and find your way back home. Good luck, Sincerely Your’—AAAAH!” He crumpled the ball up and threw it against the tree.

“Stupid Dad, leaving me out in the forest.” Rupert grumbled as he stomped through. “Just ‘cause I’m not big and tough like HE is. If he was like me, I’d make HIM stay in the forest. What does he expect me to… Mm?” He spotted a lone, empty tree stump in a slight barren area. He approached the stump, and his curiosity peaked when he noticed the small hole in its center. Rupert crawled on the stump, and his wide eye peeked into the darkness within, seeing nothing. He sat up, still wondering what could’ve made this. He eyes perked when tiny, glittering sparkles suddenly floated up from the hole, and began to surround his form. “Wh-Whuh?” At that moment, he was swallowed in a cloud of green dust.

“WAAaaaahh!-” Before he knew it, Rupert was sent falling through a storm of the green dust, feeling as if he were suddenly miles above the earth. The world went dark as he fell into a hole, and went bouncing down a set of leaves. “Ooh—aah—aie!” He landed on his belly on a surface below, standing and rubbing his head. “What happened?…"

He exited through an archway in the wall, and came out of a giant tree stump. “Whooooooaaa!” his eyes and mouth grew into wide “O’s”. A jungle of grass lay in his wake, and towering over him, trees as high as skyscrapers, with trickles of sunlight seeping through the leaves. A plane-sized dragonfly fluttered overhead, amongst many other bugs that were unnaturally huge. “I’m… I’m tiny!!”

Rupert couldn’t believe his eyes. This was the same forest, except now he was… he couldn’t even measure. He wasn’t good at math. However big an ant was, he was that tall. His head filled with more and more wonder as he stepped forward, viewing the amazing sights. “This is inCREDIBLE!
That stump musta shrunk me… I’m big as an ant! I wonder how… GYAAAH!!” He unknowingly walked to a giant worm, and had a close-up view of its round mouth of endless jagged teeth. He dashed to the side, shivering with fear as the worm slithered by. “THAT was SCARY!” He got up and walked further ahead. “Just what HAPPENED to me, anyway? One minute that stump was glowing, and the next—AHH!!” He approached a hungry-looking praying mantis, backing away frightfully. “AHH!” He turned around, spotting a gargantuan green snake, and ran away. “GYAAAAHH!” he spotted an even MORE terrifying gigantic spider on a web, running as fast as his tiny legs would allow.

“YEOW!!” He wasn’t focused on his path, frightfully looking behind, so he bumped into someone and caused them both to fall. “Hey, watch it!” the Minish boy yelled, standing up, as Rupert did the same. “I’m trying to gather here!”

“Gather?” Rupert looked behind the Minish, and saw that a band of colorful creatures were mercilessly beating a bee on the ground. The creatures succeeded, and began to carry its unconscious body away. As Rupert watched, he couldn’t help but think they looked familiar. He’s seen these creatures before. But where?... “What are those things?”

“Duh, they’re Pikmin. What’re you NEW in town?”

“Uhhh… kind of.”

“Hey, wait, you’re a human, aren’t you?” The kid finally noticed Rupert more closely.

“Duh, I’m a human. And you’re a chipmunk.”

“Minish.” he stated in annoyance.

“Whatever. So what’s with the Pikmin?”

“Well, the Pikmin are our main means of defense or offense. We Minish are normally too miniscule against bugs or other gigantic creatures, so we use the Pikmin to fight.” The boy walked away to follow his Pikmin, and Rupert joined.

“Use them to fight?” Rupert questioned. “But shouldn’t you be fighting your own battles? You can’t use people to fight for you.” Even though they were his father’s words, not his, it felt weird using them.

“They don’t do ALL the fighting. Besides, there are some things Pikmin can do that Minish can’t. It’s not about being lazy, it’s about combining different strengths for a greater good. ...Well, it’s not TOTALLY lazy—what I mean is—ugh...” He was getting lost in his own words. “Look, I got stuff to do. If you wanna learn about Minish, talk to Sappo and Gibli. They’re the Pikmin Instructors.” With that, he hurried off.

Rupert only stood by and watched him leave. He passed through a few blades of grass to find an open field where Minish boys and girls were ordering their Pikmin companions around, having them attack bugs and carry stuff while the Minish blew whistles and made hand gestures. The way these Pikmin did their work for them... how they banded together to fight enemies for their masters... a smile appeared on Rupert’s face. He had to get in on this. He hurried to the closest Minish girl and asked, “Excuse me. Where can I find Sappo and Gibli?”

KND Museum of Artifacts

“So as you can see, the Battle of Sir Wigmire’s Mansion ended tragically for these 3rd Age operatives, and hundreds of children were forced into the most humiliating powdery wigs at that time.” concluded Emily Garley, displaying the ancient image on the projector. “It miraculously sparked many high-class British accents, and fans became an invaluable want. Any questions?” She smiled eagerly.

Her fairly small audience conked out about an hour earlier. “Oh- huh? …Is it done? Come on, guys, let’s go to the snackbar!” The awakened crowd was quick to pile out of there.

Emily lazily slapped the projector off and went to roll up the screen. “Yaaaaawn.” Mike Strongarm yawned as he walked up to his friend. “That was amazing, Emmy…”

“Siiiigh. I don’t know why I even bother.”

“What, I liked the part where Sector E got trapped in the Cavern of Wiglings…”

“Kids just aren’t interested in learning things anymore. I feel like an outcast. Before you know it, they’ll be accepting me to a college.”

“Someone’s got a high opinion of herself.” He smirked.

“Why not, I always smoke all the other kids in the science fair. Like when I invented that laser that divides peoples’ atoms into smoke.”

“Oh yeah. Did we ever catch those kids?”

“Yes, but one of them’s missing his nose. But I guess things aren’t so bad… ‘cause my mom’s taking me on a trip to see our relatives!” She spoke with a more excited tone. “Her dad’s the boss of this big science company! Imagine being in the same place as all those smart guys!” Her mind became adrift in the clouds. “Talking about creating protoplasmic discombobulators, seeing if robots develop feelings when given human cells, or even solar-powered baseballs that absorb the kinetic energy of the bat and fly thousands of miles across the country… huhuhuhu. My skin cells react just thinking about it.”

“A truuue, incomparable paradise.” Mike said with a disbelieved sweatdrop.

“I’m already packed and everything! Borrowed this Infi-Cube from Sarah-Jane.” She held up a blue cube with a hole at the top, and what seemed like a wavy dimension inside. “Reeeeeeal convenient when packing.”

Mike curiously peeked inside the hole and- “Waaah-WAAAH!” was sucked inside.

“Whoops. Hehe. Careful ’round that thing, Mike.” She pressed a button that shot Mike against the wall, with several other items.

“Owwww. Sheesh, if you can do that, why not sneak me with you?”

“He he he! You know I’d love to, but all the science and calculations and such might make your head explode.”

“Point taken.” He smiled coolly. “Oh well, ‘least I tried.”

“Anyway, tell Numbuh 192 he’s in charge. I gotta go get ready!” She ran off ecstatically. “I hope my mom found my tri-dimensional notebook!”

Every time he spoke with her, Emily knew how to make Mike smile. Why did his best friend have to be a big and total nerd?
A peaceful night over the coldest part of Antarctica. Things were calm, and no one would suspect danger is about to come. A pair of purple eyes blended with the water beneath the ice, swimming to the lowest part of the Arctic Base. (Play “Dark Clouds” from Naruto: Shippuden.)

While guarding the entrance to the prison wing, Aaron and Rhilliane Doblemitz noticed water started to leak in through a hole in the ice. “Yo.” Aaron said.

“On it.” replied Rhilliane, hurrying off.

Aaron approached the hole curiously, and watched the water reform into a familiar white-haired teen with sharp teeth. “This place isn’t very stable, is it?” Suigetsu smirked.

Aaron shot him with his S.C.A.M.P.P., but the laser merely phased through Suigetsu’s liquid body as he launched a Water Fist and sent Aaron across the room. Rhilliane arrived with another guard, gasping at this, and when they noticed Suigetsu, the guard launched an ice beam. Suigetsu easily grabbed and melted the ice to water, sending it back at the bender. “So there’re more benders in the KND than I thought.”

Rhilliane furiously tried to shoot him, but Suigetsu grabbed the ground and melted a path of ice, straight to Rhilliane and letting the boy sink. Afterwards Suigetsu froze him solid before heading to the prison wing. He sliced open the doors and calmly marched down, observing the many prison cells upon the walls. He forced his hand through the ice ground and channeled a powerful surge of energy. The prison wing trembled before the icy walls within the cells melted into many waterfalls, and the cells collapsed haphazardly. Suigetsu stretched the walls further beyond the cells, allowing the prisoners to move out. “Okay, guys, you can come out.”

A particular band of Teen Ninjas wobbled dizzily out of their cells. “Uuugh. I thought I sensed an incredible amount of Water Chi. It was just you, Suigetsu.” said a girl with blood-red hair, red eyes, glasses, and striped prison garb.

Sensory Teen Ninja
RED-EYED KARIN

“Nice to see you, too, Kar. Did my presence give you the chills?”

“LIKE I’D EVER BE CHILLY FOR YOU!”

“Whatever…” followed a dark-clothed teen with sunglasses, short brownish-blond hair, and a goatee. “But I’ve been in stiffer situations.” He stretched his arms.

Teen Ninja Computer Expert
GAGE DAVIDSON

A girl with smooth bluish-black hair, white fur coat, metal boots, and white eyes with pale skin shortly approached them. “It’s amazing a bunch of kids can handle this cold. But then again, they’ll do anything for snow days.”

Teen Ninja animal trainer
ASHEI WINTERS

“Hold it right there!” A swarm of KND guards were charging in.

Karin fixed her glasses and observed them. “Four of them are waterbenders, and three shadows are “Ashei!” Suigetsu tossed her a horn, then used bending to make a hole in the ice. The Eskimo girl stuck her horn in the water and blew a sound that echoed for miles beneath the waves.

“RAAAAH!” A seasnake suddenly emerged right beneath her as she stood firmly on its head and made it shoot ice darts at the guards. Meanwhile, Suigetsu dove in the hole and maneuvered around the base’s walls, leaking into a storage room. He grabbed a laptop, bottle of lotion, and a Spanish guitar before throwing them in a sack and forming a water tunnel back to the prison wing. He tossed the laptop to Gage, lotion to a blonde-haired teen, and guitar to a Hispanic teen.

“This didn’t get wet, did it?” Gage questioned.

“No, just use it!”

“Okay.” Gage flipped it open, logged on to the Wi-Fi, and opened Flash. After some quick adjustments, a 2-dimensional ninja emerged from the computer and flipped to the guards, swiftly knocking them out as if he were real.

“Have a load of THIS, boys!” exclaimed the blonde teen, throwing off her prison wear. “TA-DAAAA!” She made a pretty pose in a red bikini.

“WHOOOAA! SO PRETTY!” exclaimed the male operatives with heart eyes.

“That’s not all!” Susanne sprayed herself with the lotion, making her skin appear very glossy. She glided across the ice on a single foot, swirling around and kicking the guards out with the other. They tried to grab her, but she slipped from their grip and skied across the wall.

“Okay, keep them busy, Rodrigo.” Suigetsu ordered.

The Hispanic teen readied to play his guitar.

Rodrigo began to play a peaceful, harmonic tune on his guitar. The tension eased within the wing as the operatives felt no sense or readiness to fight, merely swaying their heads to the rhythm. It was a tune that made them lost in thought.

“Great, just keep them there.” Suigetsu said. “Come on, there’s one more we gotta save.” The rest of them hurried down the hall and reached the deepest part of the Arctic Prison. Suigetsu sliced down the doors, breaching the small room with a single cell. “There he is. Let’s-”

“HYAH!” Marcus Drilovsky dropped from the ceiling and punched the Fishboy in the face, sending him across the hall. The teen stood firmly and glared at the others with balled fists.

“EYAAAH!” Karin screamed. “It’s Marcus Drilovsky, the Armament user! Ooo-o-o-o-h-h-h, his Haki is so stro-o-o-o-ong.” She began to sweat, face red as his sheer, sexy power. “How’s it goin’, Marey, hahaha-a-a.”

“You freaks aren’t getting any farther.” He stated.
But Susanne swiftly snatched the keys on his waist and flipped over, Marcus unable to grab her sleek leg as it slipped from his grasp. She quickly unlocked the cell and pulled it open. “Abram, let’s go!” Marcus punched her away with Armament.

“No.”

Suigetsu slithered below the ice beneath Marcus and pulled him in a hole, his upper half reforming. “Dude, I didn’t risk my neck breaking in here just so you—”

“I told you I’m not going. I’ll stay here as long as it takes.”

“Dude, why you still hung up on these guys, they’re doomed, anyway.” Gage stated.

“I don’t care. No matter what happens, I will keep my promise to him!” A pair of piercing blue eyes glared at them.

“EEYAH!” Karin kicked the back of Suigetsu’s head, making it watery for a few seconds. “I TOLD you we shoulda ditched him!”

Susanne slipped away from Marcus, who was breaking from Suigetsu’s ice prison. “Hmph. To think you still matter to him.” Suigetsu huffed. “Let’s go.”

They decided to leave the prisoner and return to Rodrigo. “Time to go, Guitar Boy!” Suigetsu said rushedly. (End song.)

With a fierce guitar strum, he said, “Bueno.” He quickly strummed his instrument as the gang hurried out of the base. Once outside, a man-sized sombrero saucer came down from the sky as the teens got in, the sombrero spinning quickly as it flew back to the sky, Rodrigo’s tunes echoing in the distance.

As the wind brushed their hair, soaring the sombrero across the Arctic air, Gage and Ashei were engaged in a deep, long kiss. Suigetsu glanced at this with a look of annoyance. “Seriously? Already?”

Back within the cell, the prisoner named Abram looked in thought. Father… I still want to believe… there’s a chance for them. If your predecessors… accomplished so much… maybe mine can… too.

Gallagher Gymnasium

Once the school day was over, the First Grade and Fourth Grade teams gathered in the gym, where hundreds of blocks lay scattered around both sides. Queen Shelly’s cousins carried their leader to the center of her pile and set her down, smirking in the direction of her rival. Jessie Sidney blew a stream of bubbles in his path as he marched to the center of his blocks, smirking at his older rival. Jessie glanced at Joey Beatles (Kuki/Wally’s son), who winked and thumbs-upped. It was time for Jessie to put his block-building lessons to the test.

“BOYYYS and girls!” announced Sandy Sidney (not to be confused with Shelly’s father). “Welcome to the final round of the annual Presidents’ Block-Building Battle Royale! Today, our two finalists finally face off, and the victor will take home the crown! Whooo will it be? The beach-hogger, Shelly Johnson?”

“BOOOOO!” moaned the first-graders.

“Or potty-mouth Jessie Sidney!”
“YAAAAAY!”

“During which, our two reporters, Zach and Dip, will be offering play-by-play! Oooon your mark!” The two presidents narrowed their eyes on each other. “Geeet set.” Their hands slowly reached for the first block. “GO!!”

“Aaaaand they’re off!” Reporter Zach announced. “What a lovely day for a block-building, eh Dip?”

“You betcha, Zach!” Dip agreed. “With near-perfect precision, Jessie’s throwing stacks together left-and-right, while astonishingly, Shelly insisted on doing this whole contest, BLINDFOLDED!” Indeed, Shelly snapped her fingers, and her knights wrapped a blindfold around her eyes. “How she does it, Zach, I do not know.”

“There can be no perfect time to stay for an after-school activity.”

“Say, Zach, you think we’ll get replaced by those Nick and Zach guys again?”

“I am almost certain they’re dead, Dip.”

“Let’s only hope so, Zach.”

Jessie dashed across his field of blocks and stylishly threw ‘em onto each other, and his model of Goofy Goober’s was nearly complete. Meanwhile, Shelly was constructing her own blockcastle, her vision completely blind. The contest lasted for several minutes, and almost no block was left unused. “They’re neck-n-neck, Dip, but it seems like Shelly has this match-”

“WWWWUH-OH! Looks like we got an uncounted block, Zach!” Shelly flinched, realizing the discarded block several meters from her castle. “But can she reach on time before Jessie puts the last touch on Goober’s hat?” She sensed Jessie climbing up his structure, seconds from putting the final block on the block-made Goobers statue.

The beach princess merely smirked, approaching the block with forceful stomp of her feet. She added more force to the third stomp, and before he knew it, Jessie’s block fort crumbled beneath him. “WHOOOA!”

“And what an INCREDIBLE stroke of rotten luck!” Zach exclaimed. “Just like all others before him, Jessie’s block fort has miraculously FALLEN!”

“Shelly must have luck of the Irish!” Dip said. “Cause HER match is pretty much GREEN.” And just like that, Shelly tossed the last block onto her fort with no trouble.

“YAAAAAAAY!” The fourth-graders cheered for their queen.

Sandy looked at her brother with sympathy, but Jessie wore a grumpy face and stomped away. “Hmph… that DUMMY.” Timmy Gilligan huffed.

“YEAAAAH! What a cheater!” Hikari agreed.

“Shelly must have luck of the Irish!” Dip said. “Cause HER match is pretty much GREEN.” And just like that, Shelly tossed the last block onto her fort with no trouble.

“Holes in the blindfold? I’m not even sure if I wanna go to the beach anymore…”

“Aww, let’s go, Timmy. We’ll build our OWN sandcastle, and dedicate it to Jessie!”
“Yeah! And we’ll write ‘Shelly Sucks’!”

“YAAAY!” The duo excitedly ran off to do so.

Minish World; Sappo and Gibli’s treehouse

Sappo and Gibli were in a small living room, feeding bits of nectar to Pikmin. They heard their door open, and turned to see a dark-pink-dressed Minish walk in. “Um, Instructors… someone wants to learn how to use Pikmin.”

“Oooooh, a new operative?” Gibli asked hopefully.

“Um, I dunno. Actually it’s… a human.”

“Huff, huff…” Rupert made it up the stairs after much struggle. “Why do you ant people have to live so high.”

“A human??” Sappo jumped. “What’s a human doing here?”

“Not my problem.” The Minish girl walked away.

“So you’re Sappy and Chibi?” Rupert asked.

“Not exactly.” Sappo said with disbelief.

“Well, come on! I wanna learn how to use these Pikmin, too!”

“That’s coming out of nowhere. I mean, humans don’t usually wander into our world at… our size.”

“Yeah, but my cousin Sally did! I saw HER with the Pikmin 6 months ago!”

“Ohhh! One of Sector W!” Gibli remembered.

“So one of the boys at the park was her cousin?” Sappo asked.

“AHA! You DO know her!” Rupert pointed.

“But how would he’ve gotten in our world, anyway? You need a Minish to activate the portals.”

“I just got sucked into your tree-stump. After my stupid DAD left me in the woods…” He folded his arms.

The twins exchanged confused glances. “Wait, let us look at something.” Sappo said, the two leading Rupert to another room.

Inside was a garage of many small, colorful pods, each with three legs and flower propellers. The twins approached a particular one and blew a whistle to signal all the Pikmin down. “Try this.” Sappo tossed Rupert the whistle. The human stared at it curiously and blew. Already, the Pikmin gathered up around him. “Aha…” Sappo observed. “So you are related. The Pikmin in this storage are only loyal to whoever plucked them, and whatever teammates that person was with.”

“But if someone were related to a Pikmin master, the Pikmin recognize their DNA and follow their whistle!” Gibli bounced.

“So these were all Cousin Sally’s Pikmin?” Rupert asked.
“Hers and her friends’, yeah.” Sappo confirmed. “But with this many, you won’t have a hard time starting training. Wanna still learn?”

“YEAH!!”

“Heh heh heh. Then let’s go down. Training course is just below.” The Minish led Rupert outside and down the tree, his Pikmin following. (Play “The Impact Site” from Pikmin.)

Stage 2: Pikmin Training Course

Mission: Learn the ways of the Pikmin!

“Well, let’s start with the basics.” Sappo began. “These are the Pikmin, duh. The Pikmin are our main means of combat and labor. We use them to carry things, fight, the stuff.” Sappo reached over and held a single Red Pikmin by the antenna. “Pikmin are light enough to carry. To set them on a task, we mostly throw them.” He threw the Pikmin onto a flower with a red pellet with a ‘1’ on it, knocking the pellet down. Rupert watched as the Pikmin carried the pellet away. “What I just hit was a Pellet Posy. They’re a common thing in the Minish World, and they’re used to make more Pikmin. They take it to their ship; the Onion, and let it get absorbed.” The Pikmin brought the pellet to a small pod with a flower propeller. The pellet was sucked inside, and two Pikmin seeds came out.

“The number on the pellet says how many Pikmin are needed to carry it, and also how many Pikmin it’ll produce. Also, any colored Pikmin can carry any pellet, but if the Onion absorbs a pellet of the same color, it’ll make more. And even though they’re small, the Pikmin are strong enough to lift anything. But depending on the weight of the object – like the pellets – it’ll take more. Anyway… let us show you the combat.”

Gibli led her Pikmin to a large, red, white-spotted creature. She blew her whistle and sent all the Pikmin to attack and knock it out. “That was a Bulborb.” continued Sappo. “You’ll see a lot of them. Anyway, it’s best to send as many Pikmin as you need to in a battle. They work stronger in bunches, and you’ll need a lot for taking down big enemies. If the enemies knock your Pikmin down, call them back before they get eaten.” He held up his whistle. “We control Pikmin using these whistles. After we throw them or send them to do a task, they’re no longer in our group. So we blow these whistles to summon them back. We also use them to send whole bunches to attack an enemy or grab an item.”

Rupert watched the Pikmin carry the Bulborb to their Onion and sprout more Pikmin. “Enemies make more Pikmin, too, so that’s why it’s good to knock ‘em outta the way. Anyway, ya might notice some have flowers on their heads. The Pikmin’s favorite food is nectar. You find nectar in eggs or something, and when they eat it, their flowers bloom, and they get stronger. They also bloom if you don’t pluck them from the ground.”

“But what about their colors?” Rupert asked.

“Well, that’s the next step!” Gibli jumped. “Each colored Pikmin has a special ability or two. Red Pikmin are fire resistant, and they’re the best in combat. Blue Pikmin can swim in water, and breathe in it. Yellow Pikmin are electric-proof, and can be used as batteries. They also throw the highest. Pink Pikmin have wings and fly, and can go just about anywhere! White Pikmin can run really fast, and they’re poisonous: if enemies eat them, they’ll be knocked out, and White Pikmin can also sense things better, like buried treasure. There’s other types, too, but you’ll learn on the way!”
“So do the training course!” Sappo encouraged. “Sally’s friends whipped up 12 Red Pikmin, 7 Yellow Pikmin, 15 Blue ones, 15 Pink, and 11 White, making 60 total. Oh, but you can only have 100 on the field, other Pikmin will just be stored in the Onion. So good luck, and try to whip up a lot!”

There was a bit more complexity to this Pikmin thing than Rupert thought. But it was still something worth trying out. He hoped he would learn on the way. He started by summoning each of the Pikmin from their Onions, then having some Reds and Yellows take down some Posies, leading to 17 Reds and 12 Yellows. He got all the Pikmin together and proceeded to a large cardboard box that required 20 Pikmin to push. He was able to do so easily with more than enough Pikmin, but the box ended up blocking another path, only allowing Rupert access to a small, narrow enclosing. But this enclosing had Pink Pellet Posies, so he sent the Wing Pikmin to collect and bring them to their Onion.

This created 15 Wings, making 30 of them, with 85 total Pikmin. The Wings could fly over the box and push it back, this time having it out of the way completely. He led his Pikmin to a more open yard where Dwarf Bulborbs roamed, and the creatures were easy to defeat with a single hit to the head. They came to a more menacing Large Bulborb, but it was fast asleep. Rupert went behind and hurriedly threw his Pikmin onto it, but his lack of coordination caused him to miss a few throws. Regardless, they were able to knock the Bulborb out before it could swallow any, and the creature coughed a huge strawberry (Sunseed Berry) from its stomach. Rupert had 6 Wing Pikmin take it back, then 10 Whites take the Bulborb.

Rupert noticed another route on a high ledge, much too high to climb. But lain before it was a giant discarded clipboard, so he had Wing Pikmin lift the clip end up and lay it on the ledge, creating a hill for his other Pikmin to go up. Across a small field was a rock wall, and when he sent his Pikmin to attack it, they couldn’t make a dent. He decided to return to the previous yard, and hurried back to get his other Pikmin; the Bulborb led to 21 total White Pikmin, 95 total. He guided them further across the yard, where a sand gate blocked the next area, so he sent a group of Pikmin to work on it. Meanwhile, he noticed a particular electric mushroom on a high foothold, and figured that was a job for the Yellows.

He threw all 12 Yellows onto the platform to carry the Volt Shroom (Risky Defender) to the Onions, then checked up on his other Pikmin who had finished breaking the gate. It led them to a pool area where Skeeterskate (3-legged insects with big water bubbles) glided across the surface, aiming to shoot the Pikmin with waterballs. Rupert first had the Blues take out the bugs, then began to find a way to help the other Pikmin cross the pool. A broken bridge started from their shore, and a pile of parts were in the pool. He had the Blues bring those parts to the bridge, but it still didn’t add up enough. When he swam across to the other shore, he noticed another pile of parts on a high ledge. He was able to guide his Wing Pikmin over the pool and had them work on it.

While they did so, Rupert returned to get his 12 Yellow Pikmin, and had them take all the fallen Dwarf Bulborbs to produce more. The Wings finished fixing the bridge, so Rupert gathered the other Pikmin up and crossed to the other shore. A poisoned gate blocked the next path, so it was up to the White Pikmin. Once they finished tearing it, Rupert guided the Pikmin up a huge, spirally path that led up a tree. At the path’s end, a grouping of acorns lay before the cave of a snoozing squirrel. He knew the squirrel would be on their tail the minute they grabbed the acorns. But recalling Sappo and Gibli’s explanation, White Pikmin were the fastest, so he would trust them for this task. He hid the other Pikmin in a small enclosing and sent the Whites to grab the 12 acorns (only one had to carry each). Rupert hid back in the enclosing as the squirrel awakened and dashed after the Pikmin, but the Whites hurried away successfully.

Rupert led the others out and noticed the squirrel’s cave had Bomb Rocks. There were 7, so Rupert had 7 Reds carry them. They made their way back to the yard and to the field where the rock gate was. It took 3 bombs to destroy the gate and open way to a new area. He first returned to the Onions to get his 12 Whites and 17 Yellows, now 100 in his group. They ventured to the new path, a wide road with many tree root slopes. There were holes in the trees where spiders called Arachnodes protected with webs. Rupert could easily throw Pikmin onto the spiders and knock them out, revealing nectar and pellets inside, but one particular web had its spider on the opposite end, and a berry inside. When Rupert threw Pikmin on, they only got stuck, so Rupert called them down before the spider could eat. He decided to leave that spider ‘til he figured out a solution.

They reached another yard occupied by four Pyroclasmic Slooches, fiery slugs. Rupert used his 4 remaining Bomb Rocks to take out the slugs, then had the Reds take them back as prizes. In one of the corners, Rupert noticed a discarded bag of Flamin’ Hots, but when Rupert sent his Pikmin to take the treats, they ended up getting burned. Rupert blew the whistle to put out the flames (MAGIC!) and figured he would have to wait for his Red Pikmin. For now, he led his Pikmin up a fairly steep hill, overlooking a vast field at the top, miles below their cliff.

In the distance was a tremendous, peaceful, roaming deer, who seemed to wander around a particular area. Rupert blew his whistle, making the animal direct its attention over. It calmly stepped toward Rupert, looming its head down, the boy a little intimidated by its size. But it seemed to have no evil intentions, placing its nose beside the tinies’ cliff. Rupert led his Pikmin onto the creature’s head, and the deer began to roam around again. It passed by several trees with fruits, first one with an apple hanging from a branch, so he sent his Wing Pikmin to take it. He then passed a tree with a tunnel-like plant with water inside, so he quickly tossed all his Blue Pikmin in before the deer passed. They passed through the tunnel on their own and started to carry a small banana bud (Developing Greatness). They were forced to walk off that ledge to the field below, but there was apparently a slope leading back to the slugs’ field.

They came to the tree with the next fruit, a small bundle of green grapes (Dawn Pustules), but the ledge was much lower than their point atop the deer. Rupert tossed all his White Pikmin down, each grabbing one grape, but since they couldn’t get back up, they rushed around a spiral path to a mini spring pad the Minish likely placed. The pad flung them to a path around another tree, and they kept up and bounced a spring pad to a third tree, and at the top of its path was a plank that dropped them back onto the deer’s head, right on time. When the deer finally made the full loop, Rupert and the Pikmin hopped off, and the Whites carried the grapes back. ‘Course, they couldn’t get all the grapes, but they would hop back on the deer on their own, make the loop, and go up the paths again. Rupert thanked Pikmin 3 for that mechanic.

He went back to grab his 17 Red Pikmin (the slugs produced 8, making 25 total, but he couldn’t use them now), then hurried to the Flamin’ Hots to make the Reds collect them. Meanwhile, Rupert brought his Blue Pikmin to the water pool and had them take the three Skeeterskates, which all produced 6 Blues, making 13. To further populate them, he had the Blues take the fallen Arachnodes on the tree path, leading to 22 Blues. Once all the Pikmin were finished with their tasks, Rupert led them all down to the field where the giant deer roamed. They were careful to avoid its stomping hooves, but the field seemed pretty barren. However, something seemed to be attracting the White Pikmin, so Rupert followed where they pointed, and they began to dig up buried treasure in one of the deer’s hoofprints. They dug up a buried quarter (Artists’ Gems) and carried it back to the Onions.

With that, Rupert brought the rest of his Pikmin to another path across the deer’s plain, bringing them to a ‘Finish’ line where Sappo and Gibli waited. He approached the twin instructors to complete the stage.

“Great JOB!” Gibli jumped.

“You’re a natural!” Sappo bounced.

“Eh heh heh heh…” No one ever told Rupert he was good at something. “It was pretty easy, really…”

“Well DOY, it’s only your first level!” Gibli beamed.

“Um, first level?”

“What she means is, now that you’re pretty used to them, it’s time to train with the Pikmin in a more dangerous environment. A human environment, so to speak. But may I ask… why’re you suddenly so into Pikmin, anyway?”

“Hmmmm… I’m not sure, really.” Rupert scratched his head. “Maybe ’cause of how helpful they are. …Hey, if you’re talking about human environments, I know where we could go! In fact, is it okay if I bring some friends?”

“Friends? Like who?”

“I’ll explain later. Let’s go!” The trio began the walk back to the Onions.

Dickson Household

“-and Ish Taylor rushes in for another touchdown, but the Blitzers won’t let him-” Chad couldn’t be in a better mood to watch football. The front door creaked open as Emily walked in with bags of groceries. “Boy, traffic is so much better when you can just fly over it. Hey, where’s Rupert, I got ‘im those cheese muffins he likes.”

“In the deepest part of the Virginian Forest.”

“WHAT?!?” The groceries plopped on the ground.

“Wuh-oh. Seems we’re getting some bad weather, Chip.” The TV announcer continued.

“I realized you were right, Em. The only way to teach him real strength is to put him in real danger. So I took him to the deepest part of the woods so he’ll have to find his way back. It may take a few hours, but if you have faith in him, I will t- MMM!” Emily’s foot was then planted on his crotch.

“Well, I have faith you’re going to drive out there and bring him home, if you don’t wanna go to your friends with a new feminine voice.”

“Urk… can I have a Scottish voice?” he grinned.

“GO GET OUR SON!!”

“Yaaa okay, okay!”

Airline Gilligan

A shipment of passengers were on the flight to Düssenheim, Germany, among them Kimberly and Emily (not to be confused with Rupert’s mom :P). The latter had a box of Nerds, her favorite candy, as she poured some onto her open palm and started to eat. She stared at the fluffy clouds past the window; which brought up her question on Nimbis’ opinions on airplanes. Her mind was still adrift… going to a place where a lot of smart guys were. Guys who were smart like her… or maybe more. She was nervous about sounding too stupid to them. Or maybe they would sound stupid to her. She kinda hoped it was the latter. When the clouds cleared away for a moment, Emily glanced down, mouth agape.

A band of bikers zipped across the grassland, each in a set position so they spelled the words GOOD LUCK, EM! She pulled out her binoculars and saw the purple dot leading the bikers was Mike Strongarm, who seemed to sense his friend looking at him as he looked up and winked at her window.

Emily felt her heart race, her cheeks red as sweat dripped down. She was sure glad Mike wasn’t up there to see that. It was hard enough talking to him without increasing in temperature, but this whole scenario made it hard to breathe. After calming down, Emily pressed her face to the window and waved. Once again sensing this, Mike gave a wink and thumbs-up. The bikers couldn’t follow long before the plane soared past the shore, across the blue sea. Mike watched until the plane was beyond the horizon. He really hoped she would have a fun trip.

And believe me, she will. ;P So introduces, one of my favorite parts of the story, Pikmin levels. I’m really looking forward to writing those ‘cause, Pikmin is such a fun series, and really the main point of these Pikmin levels is to have a break from most of the craziness that happens later. Also, Suigetsu and Karin are from Naruto, Ashei’s from Twilight Princess, and those other Teens are OCs with a few misc. origins. So next time, the second Pikmin level, Emily’s first level, and a few other things, too. ;I Well-p, see you then.
Chapter Summary

Emily Garley must suddenly hunt down monkeys in Düssenheim! Meanwhile, an alien arrives to kidnap Maddy Murphy!

Guess who started school.

Chapter 4: An Unpleasant Surprise

Virginian Forest

Chad had driven all the way back to the precise spot he dropped Rupert. He began to wander the forest in search of his son. “HELLOOOO? RUPERT? I’m here to pick you uuuuuup. It’s not a trick this time, your mom’s threatening me to bring you baaaaack. ‘Cause as you will grow up to see, women have very different views on parenting.”

The only sounds were the winds rustling the leaves and echoing chirps of birds. He skimmed the ground for possible footprints, but all he found was a series of peculiar tiny paths, probably meant for ants. He wondered what could’ve carved such convenient roadways. He heard light footsteps and looked ahead, seeing a loan deer wandering a small, round area, walking nonstop in many loops. He approached the deer and asked, “Looking for something?”

The deer looked at him quickly before running away. Chad examined the trees around the area, and found a set of three of them had tiny paths spiraling around them. He really wanted to look more into these… but he supposed Rupert came first. His cellphone rang, so he answered his wife. “Hello?”

“So did you find him?”

“I can’t find him anywhere.”

“What?!?”

“Relax, Em, he probably ended up finding his way home after all, you’re such a worry-wart.”

“Or MAYBE he wandered into a bear’s stomach or some maniac’s secret CABIN! ‘CAUSE I DON’T SEE HIM HERE!”

“Well, there’s always the chance he decided to wander off to Cleveland. He’d definitely choose playing with Timmy and Hikari than working out.”

“Ugh, fine, drive down there to see if he is. I’m gonna be down there soon with Vi and Scar, they’ll be able to help track him just in case. You BETTER hope he’s alright, Chad.” She hung up.

Chad sighed and returned to his car. Even if Rupert was in some kind of danger… he would want him to handle it himself.

Goofy Goober’s
'Twas a joyous time at Goofy Goober’s, the ice creamy restaurant where no kid could be sad. Adults, maybe, since they had to drag their kids here and put up with the obnoxious noise, but that’s mainly why they took the dark bar in the corner. A more peaceful area where kids would deem too boring to hang out. But as it turned, one kid chose to sit there.

Jessie Sidney guzzled down another shake, the strawberry substance spread around his mouth. There were bags under his dizzy dark eyes, and his hair was a mess. “’ey, MAC, gimme another’n… BUUUURP.”

“Err, Dear Boy, I zink you’ve had too much.”

“MMmmm…” he waved an arm, “I think I know my own damn body.”

“THERE you are, Jessie!” his sister yelled, walking in to sit by him. “I thought I’d find you here.”

“Er, and will you be paying his bill, Miss?” Mac asked.

“I’m too young to carry such an allowance.” she said with adorable eyes.

“Oui-oui.” And he proceeded to get more shake.

“Jessie, I don’t think drowning yourself in ice cream is going to solve anything. So Shelly beat you again, what’s the big deal?”

“Shelly always  beats me, tha’sa problem… her and her lousy fourth-graders… how’m I suppose to be the First Grade President if I, mmmm-BUURP can’t even stack a few, eh, blocks.” He mumbled drunkly.

“Well, being older makes them more experienced, I guess.”

“Experience, shmerience… when I took this job, I-ha wanted ta…ta leader the First Grades to glory, ya know… I-ha wanted ta SHOW all those big kids… we got ta stuff. But those…those DUMBASS fourth-graders, think they know it all… and SHELLEY… with her cape and, big feet and, big older cousins… she thin’ she queen o’ the school, well you know what I SAY… BUUUURP.”

“Huhuhu HEY, kids! To celebrate 28 years of Goober-TAAASTIC fun, that one peanut that makes the elephants MAD: GOOOFY GOOBEER!”

But when the curtains opened and the dancing peanut danced out, Jessie’s vision faltered. The world became blurry, and that smiling, goofy peanut was the center of attention. “Oh, I’M a Goofy Goober, yeah! YOU’RE a Goofy Goober, …”

A squiggly smile spread across Jessie’s face. Entranced by that hypnotic singing, Jessie couldn’t help but wobble forward. It wasn’t long before he lost consciousness. (Play Goofy Goober’s theme from the Spongebob Movie Game.)

Stage 3: Goofy Goober’s... sort of Mission: Wander around aimlessly.

Jessie aimlessly wandered the suddenly-barren restaurant and smashed many tables and chairs. He ran up on stage and followed the route behind, sending Bubble Torpedoes at Gooberlings, which were the same happy, goofy-faced peanuts as the original, except they were trying to beat him with mops. He came to gaps in the road that required him to double-jump, waving his bubble wand down for an extra boost, then reached a large gap with a large button. He jumped and blew bubble feet over his own to do a Ground Pound, pushing the switch to make a bounce platform.

After crossing the gap, Jessie appeared in an expansive, factory-like chamber with giant ice creams and candies. A series of giant, colorful ice creams wobbled back and forth on their cones, so Jessie was careful when hopping across them. He reached a safe platform and then had to cross giant, tilting Wonka Bars, but waiting on the following platform was a Cream-Cream, a Gooberling that shot ice cream. It did so to destroy Jessie’s Bubble Torpedoes, so the boy was forced to avoid them across the unbalanced platforms and knock the enemy out normally.

Following that was a series of floating platforms moving toward him and away at quick speeds, each too high to jump. When the first one returned, Jessie performed a Headbash (in which he wore a bubble Viking helmet) to shoot up higher and land on it, doing the same with the others with careful timing, lest he fall to the chocolaty chasm. The third, highest platform brought him to a safe walkway along the side of the room (and above the entrance), which had a port-o-potty at the end. Jessie stepped inside, and, however this mechanic worked, turned into Sandy.

Using her lasso, she swung a series of hooks to reach a foothold across the chasm, leading to a wide hallway. Floating robots called Chucks drew torpedoes and hurled ‘em at Sandy, but she easily caught the torpedoes in her lasso and threw them back. Sandy arrived at a room with another chocolate creek, having to first spin her jump-rope like a helicopter to glide to a far, low platform. The next platform was much higher, but a peg was on it for her to catch with her rope and pull herself up.

From there, a series of scattered platforms with little bobble targets led to a path in a far right corner, and Sandy had to lash her ropes quickly to haul herself across them. Not a difficult hazard as she reached the next hall easily. A Gooberling on a floating pod skimmed the hall for intruders, and there was nothing to hide behind within his laser’s range. There were plenty of pegs around the floor and walls, with only one close to the next, intending a certain order. Sandy pulled herself to each of them at a quick speed, the Gooberling unable to keep up with its laser before Sandy wrapped her rope around its turret, and pulled the pod to pieces.

The hall led her to a giant freezer chamber with many giant ice cream boxes. Once again, many frosty pegs were spread around, along with several pitfalls, and a Chuck floated over the room and threatened to blow Sandy into the chasms. She had to latch the pegs and pull herself over, but the slippery floor forced her to pass the pegs and keep skiing ‘til she latched another and switched direction. That would be dangerous with the many pits, so she first skied across the narrow path, pulled herself left, then right to ski across a narrow path on the side, two more rights to ski up a slope that flew her onto the giant ice creams. She kept the speed going and pulled herself to pegs that flew her up ramps, until she skied into an icy tunnel. The speed was still going as she pulled herself around loops and zigzaggy paths, avoiding frosty water, until her skiing finally led her into a port-o-potty.

Having switched back to Jessie, the boy stepped down a small slope and began to jump Bouncemallows across a vast chocolate lake. He bounced to one of many islands where, after knocking out some Gooberlings, pressed a switch that made a bounce platform appear over the lake, aimed at an angle. Another spring on this island could bounce him to it, but when he did so, the spring sent him right back. He saw there was a slot on the island spring’s back, and he could stick his wand into it to turn and aim at other islands. He bounced to an island on the left, having to simply Headbash a switch above him, activating another floating spring.
Jessie knocked out the Goobers on that island quickly before bouncing to the first island, but realized the Goobers there previously had returned. After knocking them out, he saw the ones on the second island respawn, and realized they were coming from a Duplicatotron in the hall he would eventually get to. He aimed the spring at another island across the room, where he had to deal with G-Loves, purple and green saucers that spun around, swinging many gloved hands. He bested them just by Ground Pounding, then did the same to press a switch, revealing another floating platform.

He returned to the first island (knocking out the Gooberlings again), but the last island was in a further corner, too far for the spring to reach. However, he returned to the second island, and realized another spring sat atop a stone pole. Behind that pole was a smaller spring which bounced him up to it, then was bounced to that last island. He had to stand on a switch that opened a gate protecting the last switch, across the chocolate lake with a series of rising and sinking platforms leading to it. He spun his wand and rolled a Bubble Bowl when the platforms rose in a perfect order, pressing the switch and making the last floating spring appear. He returned to the first island, aimed the spring at the first floating one, and let each bounce him to the next, 'til he landed at the cave’s base.

He took out the Duplicatotron and proceeded through the cave that led to an outside land, fields of candies, pink skies, and ice cream mountains. Sandy was there to help him, holding on as she swung hooks from giant ice creams that fell afterward, making it to the top of a huge, ice cream slide. They zipped down at fast speed, ramming any Gooberlings in the way and jumping ramps to score extra points. They split up as Jessie took a higher route into a cave, jumping some java pits 'til he was outside again, sliding across a narrow path over the lower slide, where Sandy was.

At the end of the narrow slide, he grabbed a discarded sock (sound familiar?) and dropped down to rejoin Sandy. They once again split up on a fork leading into a mountain, where inside was a series of slides leading many directions, far too many to see in one go. Jessie slid to a large chasm where he had to jump a trio of bounce pads, each fairly far apart due to his momentum, and upon landing, he had to tightly turn right as the slide spiraled downward. He and Sandy met up once more as the conjoined slides led into a cave, the two having to jump a few java pits and dodge some heat geysers before landing at the bottom.

The semi-natural cave started to blend into a restaurant again, more specifically the restaurant’s basement. Jessie kept forward as Sandy gradually faded. (End song.)

“Huu, huu, huu…” Jessie had no idea how he winded up down here. He barely remembered what he was even doing. …Oh yeah, sinking in depression.

“Jeeessie…”

His vision was failing again. He could vaguely make out a blurry, yellow creature.

“Jeeeeeessie.”

“Sponge…bob?…”

“Jessie… there’s no reason to feel deprevessed. Not if you… belieeeeeeve.”

“Mmmm…”

“Jessie…Jessie?…”

“Jessie?” The blur vanished, and the yellow creature morphed into Sandy.
He shook his head, “Whuh?”

“Jessie, you got drunk again and wandered into the basement. You know what brainfreezes do to you.”

“Mmmm…” He held his head. “Whaddid I do last night.”

“Trained for the block contest. But then, well… Shelly beat you.”

“Oh…” Jessie looked at his bubble bottle. “Almost out… guess we’ll need to go to Sabaody and get more.”

“Young man, you’re gonna have to leave.” A man approached them, his Goober costume off. “You knocked out all of our backup Goobers.” They looked behind, seeing a bunch of Goofy Goobers on the floor.

“Ahhh this  level’s drawing on, anyway.” Jessie said.

“HE CUSSED!!” The men screamed.

“He’s having a bad day.” Sandy said with teary eyes.

“POOR KID.”

“Let’s get outta here.” Sandy said as she led her brother along. A small, gray mouse-like creature watched them from a hole in the wall.

Düssenheim, Germany

The Airline Gilligan finally took land as Kim led her daughter outside. “Well, Em… welcome to our homeland.”

Düssenheim was a lovely city, mostly pearl-white buildings, and kind of a futuristic feel to it. The city was divided in two halves, with a great suspension bridge connecting both of them. Emily’s nose, although mostly unfunctional, could whiff that science feel in the air, and the idea of being someplace like that made her nervous system react something fierce. The two took a taxi across the giant bridge to the other side of town where Adams Tech Co. resided. On the way, Emily spotted a particular mechanical tree in the distance. ‘Twas her mom’s old treehouse, Sector G.

They made it to Adams Tech, a large, mechanical building that took up an entire block, with a wide stairway entrance to many glass doors, and giant letters that emphasized the company’s name on the center of the front. Emily restrained herself from rushing ahead of her mom, but her heart raced faster, the closer she got to the entrance. “Just remember to put on sunglasses before we enter the plasma radiation chamber.” Kim cautioned with a humorous smile. “Let’s go find my dad first and we can.”

“AAIEEEE! AAAIEEEE!” The two jumped when a brown monkey in yellow shorts, wearing a helmet with a red light, suddenly jumped between them in a frantic fashion. All around, monkeys were harassing the employees, tying them up, and taking many tools and inventions before escaping out the windows or doors.

“AAAAAH! Somebody get the containment chamber fixed!” a scientist cried as monkeys tugged on his white hair.

“Oh no! It’s happening again!” Kim cried.
“What? What’s happening, Mom?” Em asked.

She dropped her briefcase and said, “Em, just wait outside, I need to help them straighten this. Er-HEY, that guy’s pen is not a cavity driller!” She hurried in.

Emily looked around and saw a huge, broken glass chamber, and another one being brought in. She grabbed her Infi-Cube and extracted a mechanical net with tight, blue string.

Kids Next Door: T.E.L.A.-N.E.T.
Targets Energy Location Allowing Network Enemy Transport

A mini monitor activated on the net, and she aimed it at that glass chamber. After confirming its target, a monkey screeched and jumped to her, but she kicked it upside the chin to knock it down. “Hu hu! Thank goodness for my size-10s.” She caught the monkey in the net, and in a flash, the creature vanished and appeared inside the glass chamber. “Let’s hope my mom can handle things here. Time to catch some apes!” She smirked excitedly at the rampaging apes outside. (Play the Title Screen theme from Ape Escape 3!)

Stage 4: Downtown Düssenheim

Mission: Capture 10 monkeys!

Two monkeys were terrifying drivers on the street, forcing them to stop their cars and run away. Emily wore a green- and blue-striped hoolihoop called the Super Hoop, increasing her speed as she ran against one of the monkeys, knocking it down long enough so she could net it. The other monkey hopped across the cars to get away, and even her Super Hoop couldn’t match his speed. He hopped his way up some building signs and windows, with athleticism Emily could never match. So she figured she’d find another way.

She turned down the left street where two monkeys hid behind cop cars at a roadblock, trying to shoot Emily with laser guns. She took cover behind two other cars and pulled out a slingshot called the Slingback Shooter. Through the cars’ glass, she locked onto each monkey, so while they were behind their cars, she launched homing pellets that flew over and stunned the apes. She quickly hopped over the cars, and before the apes could get away, Emily whipped out her Stun Club – basically a toy lightsaber, but effective – and bashed the apes in the head. She caught them both in her T.E.L.A.-N.E.T., then proceeded to a town square with a huge, beautiful reflecting pool. Since all the roads were blocked for construction, Emily had to swim across using a small, yellow floatable device called the Water Net, which could fire a projectile T.E.L.A.-N.E.T. by pressing a button.

A monkey was quickly trying to swim away from her, but Emily kicked faster and switched on the mini boost setting, able to get close enough and catch the monkey in her net. She swam to the other side of the pool and climbed out, seeing the next round of monkeys down a street sloping downward. However, she first noticed the set of platform-stairs leading up a building, and used a helicopter device called the Sky Flyer to float up each platform and reach the roof.

In the distance, she saw the monkey that evaded her earlier, and quickly hopped across the rooftops to reach it. The monkey hopped into a small flying saucer and tried to shoot her from the air, but Emily narrowly avoided and locked on with her Slingshot’s homing pellets, making direct hits. The saucer shot at her feet and made her wobble backwards, nearly falling over the edge. She thankfully held on with her right hand, and when the saucer loomed closer for one last shot, Emily flipped up and sliced the saucer across the bottom with her Stun Club. The ship exploded on the roof as the monkey flew out, dizzy, allowing Emily to catch it.

With her job half done, Emily returned to the top of the hill and ran down using the Super Hoop. She arrived at the suspension bridge, but huge gaps of it were destroyed as a roadblock blocked it. She noticed two monkeys on both the first two towers, so her only way across was up. Before going, she noticed a camera aimed up at the right tower, whose monkey was dressed in a Sonic Hedgehog suit. She pressed the switch by the camera to record the monkey.

Why do hedgehogs think this is fun? The subtitles read.

Having acquired the film, Emily wrapped both arms and legs around the left metal pipe that curved up to the tower, holding on tight as she inched her way up. She would never understand how Sonic and Shadow do this so easily—maybe she would make her own grindboots. She slowly inched toward the top of the tower, net ready as she prepared to catch the monkey. With a stylish flip up, the monkey was IN her net and teleported, while the Sonic monkey on the right tower slid down his rail and made the escape. Emily could make the slow climb down, but there was fixed road below her, so— “WHOOoooaa.” She dropped straight down and whipped out her Sky Flyer, landing softly.

The next bit of road was destroyed except a few platforms, so Emily hopped across until the last one stopped at a larger gap before a road sealed by a mechanical gate and archway. Two Pipodactyls came out, genetically created, small green pterodactyls with apelike mouths. They coughed fireballs that Emily narrowly jumped and dodged on her small platform, trying to shoot them with slingshot pellets which they dodged. She switched to homing pellets and had an easier time shooting them down, causing the gate to sink open.

Emily floated over with Sky Flyer and encountered a monkey controlling a green tank. She rolled and dodged its bombshells as she hurried around in search of a weakness. It was a fairly small tank, big as a go-kart, so Emily decided to rush up and try wailing on it with her Stun Club. The tank whipped around and knocked Emily down with its turret, and she gasped when it aimed directly at her. In a desperate attempt, she squeezed the turret and tried to force it upward, but it seems after a small error on the monkey’s part, the tank hatch exploded and flew the monkey out. “Huhu! Never let a monkey run a spotlight!” So she caught it in her net and proceeded.

She made it to the other side of town, patrolled by Camerabots that shot small missiles which she batted away with the club, and exploded on them. There was a scaffolding nearby where a monkey dressed as Mario was jumping barrels thrown by a monkey dressed as Donkey Kong. She started to make her way up those narrow scaffolds herself, jumping any barrel that threatened to take her down. She made it to the Mario monkey and netted him, then continued up the building in her goal to catch the DK monkey (and not the one we all love :P). Once at the top, the monkey ran around frantically, but since it didn’t have much room on this small road, he was easy to net.

“Just one more!” Emily exclaimed as she was one monkey away from her goal. She jumped down the scaffold excitedly, looking around for her next victim. A monkey spotted her as she eyed him like a prey, for this reason, he carjacked a random civilian and drove away. Even the Super Hoop wouldn’t catch up, but she rushed up to another citizen in his parked car. “Excuse me,” she panted, not used to this much exercise, “may I borrow this?”

“Uhhh… ja?”
“Great!” So he got out and allowed Emily to hop in and drive away.

“Vas she old enough to drive?”

Emily drove at high speed after the monkey, but they only seemed to follow a particular circle around some buildings. Emily rammed him from behind once, but since she hadn’t acquired a license yet, keeping up was a pain. So using her brain instead, she decided to drive the opposite direction and ram the monkey when he came around. She did this twice before the ape swerved out of control and came to a crash. Dizzied and defeated, Emily could run up and- “YES!!” send him warping in her net. “GOT ‘EM ALL!” Feeling purely victorious, she danced around like the joyous little nerd she was. She jumped high in the air, expecting to teleport for some reason, but- “OOF!” plopped onto her front. “Hehe… ‘course there’s actually a few left to capture. Huh?”

A group of remaining monkeys looked at her with worry. “AIEEEE!” They began to leap their way out of the city, in multiple directions before Emily helped herself to stand.

“Or not… oh well, they’ll come back. Eventually. But holy WOW, that was awesome! Can’t WAIT to see the look on my mom’s face when she sees all those monkeys I caught! Hehe, I’m gonna go see her now! Ooo- and also get my anti-itching cream.” Her skin was itching with excitement as she ran back to Adams Tech, scratching the whole way.

Cleveland Beach

Children were excited to be on the beach after a long, boring school day. Of course, a particular area was restricted, the humongous sandcastle created by Princess Shelly and her knights. Still, there was plenty of room on the other side of the beach. And that was where Rupert, Sappo, and Gibli landed in their tiny Onions.

The beach seemed much different to Rupert from his Minish-sized view. As big and vast as a scorching desert, the sun beating on his tiny body. They could feel the quaking of all the gigantic children frolicking on the beach. “So whaddo you guys do again?” he asked, trying to shield his eyes from the sun.

“We Minish mostly assist the bigger Kids Next Door, by giving them stuff they need.”

“So we search around and steal stuff from big people before giving it to THEM!” Gibli bounced.

“But we gotta be discreet, ’cause most humans don’t like havin’ their pie snuck off the picnic blanket.”

“And no one likes itchy ants crawlin’ around their pants!”

“Yuck! I’m not going in anyone’s pants!”

“You’re not, Stupid, you’re just taking stuff.” Sappo stated. “But why’d you wanna go here, anyway?”

“‘Cause I thooought…” It was hard to search around with that giant sun in his eyes. But in the distance, he could make out a peculiar sand statue, and two kids building it, a chubby boy in a hat and cape, and a girl with droopy sleeves. “There they are! Timmy and Hikari! I kinda wanted to get them on this, too.”

“Hmmmm. Well, Pikmin users always work better in teams.”

“If you can lead them to a Minish Portal, we can make them mini, too!” Gibli beamed.
“Where’s a Minish Portal?”

“We have one in that rock over there.” Sappo pointed to a mountain-sized (to them) boulder with a cave at the bottom. “Some Minish come here often. Just one problem: we don’t have any reverse-Minish Dust left, so you won’t be able to expand and get them to come over.”

“I’ll just get their attention like this.”

“If you say so. We’ll get the portal ready, good luck.” (Play “Tropical Wilds” from Pikmin 3.)

Stage 5: Bullies’ Land

Mission: Collect treasures from the unsuspecting beach-goers.

Rupert gathered 20 Reds, 20 Yellows, 22 Blues, 10 Whites, and 22 Wings, making 94 total. He first led them through a wide, snaky gorge dug within the beach, where Yellow Wollywogs (frog-like creatures with no mouths) tried to crush them with their bulky bodies. Rupert kept his Pikmin away from their stomps and rapidly tossed Pikmin onto them, keeping the frogs down until they were defeated. He bested the three Wollywogs, but lost 4 Reds in the scuffle. He decided to let the Reds take one of them back and make 5 Reds, had the Whites take one back, then the Blues. He now had 21 Reds and 15 Whites, marking 100 total.

After the snaky gorge came a vast, open field of the beach where many people roamed. Rupert led them to a gigantic pool chair where it appeared some woman was getting a tan, although it was far too high to see from this view. A bottle of sunscreen (Contained O-zone) was sticking over the edge of the chair, so Rupert sent his Wing Pikmin up to grab and begin to carry it back. They further explored the beach, but the other half was blocked by what appeared to be a Minish-size river. The river required another bridge of tiles, which was once again missing, so they searched this field for the pieces.

They found a giant, 10-year-old girl seated on her knees while she played with a Barbie doll. The doll’s dress was composed of the tiles that made the bridge, so they would have to distract her somehow. Near the girl’s foot was a hole containing a Hermit Crawmad, which emerged at the sight of the Pikmin. Having an idea, Rupert only led a single White Pikmin between the Crawmad and the girl’s pinky toe. When the creature lunged, Rupert dodged and caused it to nip the toe. “Ow!” The girl leapt to her feet and stomped the Crawmad before walking off to get some lotion, dropping her doll in the process. He put his Pikmin to the task of taking the tiles to the bridge while he rushed back to get the 22 Wing Pikmin.

Upon the bridge’s completion, Rupert guided his Pikmin to the second half of the field. He saw a boy buried up to his chest in sand, struggling to escape, likely the work of some bully. Even though Pikmin could dig, it would take a bit more work considering his size. He decided to leave him ‘til he had a solution, and instead walked to another boy building a sandcastle. Actually, it was more like a series of platforms, each taller than the next, with the middle, tallest one having a tiny Lucario statue on top. The first set of platforms were easy to jump on his own, the annoying part was throwing the Pikmin onto each one. Unfortunately, the last few were farther up, and while he could throw his Pikmin, he couldn’t jump up himself. He decided to send the Wing Pikmin to collect the statue from there, but the boy swatted the Pikmin away, believing them to be bugs.

With no known solution, Rupert dropped from the platforms and gathered his Pikmin to continue on. They marched up a sandy hill where they finally arrived at Rupert’s friends, Timmy and Hikari. They appeared to be constructing a giant sand statue of First Grade President, Jessie Sidney, hands on his hips and a proud smile. The sand-plaque on the pedestal read Jessie Rulez! Shelly Sucks! “I still don’t think the hands-on-hips looks good.” Timmy said. “I mean, GUYS don’t do that!”

“YES they do! I saw Dad do it all the time!”

“No you didn’t.”

“HEEEEEEEEY! TIMMYYYYY! HIKARIII! I-”

Their ears were miles away from Rupert’s tiny voice.

“… … … …!”

“Ah, crud… Wait.” Rupert noticed something odd about the statue’s right eye (his left). It was darker than the other one, which was just a dimmer shade of sand. “…Hey, let’s see if we can knock that down.” He found a slight slope of sand that allowed them onto the pedestal, where he sent his Pikmin to attack the statue’s shoes. The vibrations caused the mysterious object to fall. It was a Purple Onion, which landed in front of the pedestal on three legs. A single seed plopped out of the statue and planted in the ground. Rupert hurried down to pluck this new Pikmin. It was purple with eyelashes, and notably chubby. He also noted how heavy it felt when plucking it.

Rupert discovered Purple Pikmin! They may be small, but these guys are bullies of the beach! They are 10 times stronger than the average Pikmin, and guys you shouldn’t engage with in a fight! They’re pretty slow, so keep an eye on them.

Rupert tried to make the Pikmin follow him, but he shook his head no. Reason being, Rupert already had 100. So he told 10 Reds and 5 Whites to return to the Onions (‘cause he ain’t makin’ that run :P). He was then able to get the Purple Pikmin to follow him, having the strong guy take several purple Pellet Posies and produce more. By the end, he had 13 Purples, 98 total. He still wasn’t sure how to get Timmy and Hikari’s attention, but he noticed Hikari’s dark-purple Rainbow Monkey on the ground behind her. It was a Ten-Tons-of-Goodness Rainbow Monkey, much heavier than it appeared. It required 101 Pikmin, so his 13 Purples were on the case. Since they moved exceedingly slow, he sent other Pikmin to help, too.

“Huh?” Hikari looked up when her Rainbow Monkey began moving on its own. “LOOK, Timmy! My Ten-Tons-of-Goodness Rainbow Monkey wants us to follow it!”

“Huh?” Indeed, the stuffed toy was going somewhere. “Ummm… I think some ants mistook it for a snack.”

“Those silly ants know better than THAT! Let’s go see where it’s going!”

They followed the Pikmin all the way back to the landing area, with Rupert keeping a steady distance behind. The Pikmin brought it to the boulder where the Minish Portal was stationed and tossed the stuffed toy on top. The kids watched with wonder as green dust rose from the hole in the boulder and sucked the monkey inside. “Heeeeey!” Hikari whined. The two climbed on and tried to peep in the hole, and were soon sucked in by the green dust as well.

“WAAAAAH- uuh!” They took land on the ground after bouncing down some boulders.

“Hey, guess Rupert figured something out!” Sappo said. Timmy and Hikari exchanged baffled looks.

“Hey, guys! What’s up?” Rupert greeted, entering the boulder.

“RUPPY? Where are we?” Hikari asked.
“You’re in the Minish World!” Gibli bounced. “Rupert led you to our portal. You’re tiny now!”

“You’re in the Minish World!” Gibli bounced. “Rupert led you to our portal. You’re tiny now!”

“Say what?” questioned Timmy.

“Say what?” questioned Timmy.

“Hehe… you guys wanna hear a funny story?” Rupert grinned.

“Hehe… you guys wanna hear a funny story?” Rupert grinned.

So for the next few minutes, Rupert explained the random events that led him to the Minish World. Hikari also proceeded to take back her minimized Rainbow Monkey from the Purple Pikmin. “So why’d you drag US into this?” Timmy questioned.

“So why’d you drag US into this?” Timmy questioned.

“What, I thought you guys might like it, too. You are explorers, right?”

“What, I thought you guys might like it, too. You are explorers, right?”

“Come on, Timmy! I bet it’ll be fun!” Hikari beamed. “I wanna see what Jessie’s statue looks like from here!”

“Come on, Timmy! I bet it’ll be fun!” Hikari beamed. “I wanna see what Jessie’s statue looks like from here!”

“Well, okay… but I get 10 bucks after this!” he demanded from Rupert.

“Well, okay… but I get 10 bucks after this!” he demanded from Rupert.

“Deal.”

“Deal.”

And with that, they continued the journey across the sandy fields. They returned to the boy that was half-buried in the sand. “What happened to him, anyway?”

“And with that, they continued the journey across the sandy fields. They returned to the boy that was half-buried in the sand. “What happened to him, anyway?”

“One of Shelly’s knights.” Timmy replied. “Stupid meanie.”

“One of Shelly’s knights.” Timmy replied. “Stupid meanie.”

“Well, let’s help ‘im!” Rupert sent all the Pikmin to dig him up, and with the 13 Purples’ help, it was easy.

“Well, let’s help ‘im!” Rupert sent all the Pikmin to dig him up, and with the 13 Purples’ help, it was easy.

“WHOA!” He was surprised when his arms popped out, and was able to push himself out the rest of the way. “…Ha ha! Who’s a wimp NOW!” Proud of his newfound strength, he ran off. The three looked inside his hole and spotted a discarded No. 2 pencil (Tool of Creation). They sent 5 Wing Pikmin down to take it back while they led the other Pikmin to the group of sand platforms. They jumped their way up, bringing the Pikmin, and this time, Timmy could throw Rup and Hikari on the second-highest platform, while Rupert threw Hikari to the highest afterward.

The boy fixing this sandcastle took notice of the little creature that was just thrown on. He squinted closely, seeing the teeny Hikari wave happily. The idea of a little person was too much to bear, so he fainted. They were safely able to take the Lucario statue (Lost Hero) using 5 White Pikmin. The trio proceeded up the hill where the Jessie statue rested. From this view, Jessie’s proud figure looked even more heroic. Probably because it was much bigger. “SEE, I TOLD you the hands-on-hips looked cool!” Hikari stated.

They passed the statue and continued down a hill, seeing a volleyball game taking place between two boys and two girls. Their movement was random, so they would have to guide the Pikmin through carefully and quickly, for they could lose tons in just one stomp. When the ball was knocked fairly far, they seized the moment to run across the center. They were almost out of breath by the time they reached the center line under the net, but panicked when the Purple Pikmin were falling behind. One of the boys came back and squished three Purples, their spirits floating away.

Before proceeding, they noticed the referee boy seated atop a tall chair on the side of the court, and the shiny whistle on his armrest. They hurried to the chair and climbed the convenient, Minish-size ladder to his armrest.

They used their 10 remaining White Pikmin to take the whistle (Sound of Sadness) without the boy’s knowledge. “Hey, Timmy, run back to the start and get the Pikmin back.” Rupert told him as they climbed back to the ground. Timmy avoided the boys again while Rupert and Hikari continued past the girls. But since the whistle had been taken, the game went on forever. Rupert and Hikari saw a series of floatable items off a nearby shore, so they decided to explore them. An inflatable raft floated close to the shore, so they threw their Pikmin onto it before jumping on their selves.

They crossed the raft and found a remote-controlled toy boat zooming around a set circle, controlled by a kid in an inner-tube. They hopped in the boat with all their Pikmin and waited for it to pass the boy’s floatie, then hopped off. The kid didn’t notice the swarm of bugs as they walked around the back of the floatie. A squirt gun was in the back of the boy’s pants, so they had some Wing Pikmin pull it out. They called the Wings back and had the Blue Pikmin take the squirt gun through an underwater route. “Hey, why don’t we just SWIIIIM?” queried Hikari.

“I ain’t swimmin’ in that stuff, might get eaten by a fish.”

The duo jumped back to the boat and waited for it to pass a series of fun-noodles, which were spinning in place. When the closest noodle’s end looped by them, they could jump when the boat passed, and had to wait for the other noodles to make loops before jumping. They were led to a boy that was sitting on three noodles, bobbing up and down, with all three making a staircase when they went up, and at level when going down. They gathered on the third, highest one and could make the jump to a giant fat guy snoozing on an inflatable raft. There was no other way to go, but the bouncy belly sunk up and down as he breathed. …The two formed an idea.

“Whooaa!” Timmy finally made it back with the other Pikmin, jumping from the noodle to the huge belly. “Hey, guys. What’d I miss?”

“We’re about to do something really cool!” Rupert grinned. They began to rapidly throw their Purple Pikmin onto the stomach, the intense weight making it sink further and further down. Once all the way down, it shot up, the trio and the Pikmin flying many meters across the sea. They fell right in the hole of a fun-noodle held by a boy who, after dipping it in water, blew the water at a girl with a fun-noodle, and the many Pikmin and trio with it. They flew over the girl and landed perfectly on a starfish carried by a giant seagull. They soared all the way back to the beach and dropped off right atop the Jessie statue’s head. From here, they could see the whole beach. (End song.)

It really was a spectacular view from this colossal statue. Kids running around and having fun, almost no concerns at all around this beach. “You know, this actually is kinda fun, Rupert.” Timmy smiled.

“I bet JESSIE would love this, too!” Hikari beamed.

“Hey, what is with this statue, anyway? Jessie win something?” Rupert asked.

“No, actually he… lost something.” Timmy informed. “He, uh… took it kinda bad.”

At this time, Sappo and Gibli were flying to the statue using Wing Pikmin. “Well, you guys look pretty adjusted.” Sappo figured.

“WAIT a second, we can just FLY everywhere with these wing guys??” Rupert questioned.

“Yes, but THAT’S no fun!” Gibli said. “Great job on all the treasures you collected! You serve your Kids Next Door proud!”

“Well, technically we aren’t Kids Next Door.” Rupert said. “We’re- WHOOOA!” A giant beachball flew in and blew the statue’s head clean off.

The kids recovered dizzily and- “AAAH!” jumped when a gigantic foot stomped behind them. Towering over them was a furious Princess Shelly. Timmy and Hikari didn’t like her enough as is… they sure hoped this 100-foot one didn’t discover them.

“Can’t a princess go on a leisurely stroll without REBELLION in her kingdom? WHO BUILT THAT STATUE? WELL?” The beach-goers exchanged baffled looks.

“My Princess.” One of the knights bowed. “I have interrogated all of the peasants. All claim to be innocent.”

“Well, SOMEONE must be lying. And I’ll find out at any cost. No liar can escape ME when my foot is down. And whoever done it’s getting so much sand in their shorts, they won’t-” She was about to take a step forward, the kids ducking under the shadow of her giant foot.

She froze in place when the beach began trembling. Over the shore, a huge, black battleship emerged from the sea and lowered a ramp to the beach, allowing a van to back up onto it. A squad of Teen Ninjas hopped out, led by Nya LaMar. “Hey, Princess Brat, time to go. His Majesty wants you.”

“His Majesty?” A knight gaped.

“Doth she mean…” another spoke.

“What? Do they mean Shelly’s dad?” Rupert asked.

“Well, yeah. Don’t you know who her dad is?” Timmy asked.

“Sappo! Sappo! It’s her!” Gibli bounced with worry.

“I know.” With a fierce look, Sappo whistled and summoned a swarm of Wing, Purple, Yellow, and Blue Pikmin to attack Shelly’s feet while the Minish climbed her left leg.

“What the-?!” Shelly was quick to feel them.

“GIVE BACK OUR PRINCESS YOU BIG-FOOTED FREAK!” Gibli yelled.

“Uck, bugs!” She stomped her feet, blew the Pikmin away, and made Sappo and Gibli fall.

“WAH!” The twins were then caught inside a glass jar by one of the knights.

“My Princess: these be the rebellious bugs.” He presented them to Shelly.

“Hmmm aren’t you a peculiar breed of vermin.” Shelly smirked wickedly at the Minish. “These’ll make an excellent prize. To the sea, knights.” As they marched to the truck, Sappo pressed his face to the glass and yelled to Rupert, his voice still muffled.

“RUPERT! Take our Pikmin! They’re not just ours, they’re…” His voice was barely audible the further he got.

“Where do you think they’re going?” Timmy asked.
“I dunno... but I feel like we won’t be getting bigger anytime soon.” Rupert said with worry.

Chariton Household; backyard

After Sunni left, Mika returned to her peaceful slumber beside the tree. The gentle breeze rustled the leaves and chilled her mocha skin. There was no better time to sleep. The rustling of leaves and those three particular bushes would ensure her good dreams. …Wait a sec. Did those bushes just move forward? And since when did she have them, anyway? Waaait…

At that instant, a woman with long, rose-red hair, a handsome man with short blue hair, and a short catlike creature jumped out from the bushes. They wore white shirts and pants, black shoes, and big red “R” symbols on their shirts. “PREPARE for trouble!” The woman exclaimed.

“And make it double.” The man followed.

“To protect the world from devastation!”

“To unite all peoples within our nation.”

“To denounce the evils of truth and love!” Mika continued snoring.

“To extend our reach to the stars above.”

The woman spun. “Jessie!”

The man joined. “James.”

“Team Rocket, blast off at the speed of light!”

“Surrender now or prepare to fight!”

The cat jumped on their shoulders. “Meeewwwwth! That’s right!”

A blue blob popped out and said, “Wooooobuffet!”

“Snoooore…shoooo.” Mika looked very peaceful.

Team Rocket glared in disbelief. “…Told you we shoulda gave the updated version.” Meowth mumbled.

“We have so many mottos, Meowth, I can’t possibly remember them all.” James spoke in a sheepish fashion.

“Woooobuffet!”

“Grrrr WAKE UP, YOU DITZ!” Meowth lunged at Mika for a scratch to the face, but was immediately bounced away by her Logia defense.

“Yyyyyaaawwwwn.” Mika stretched awake, finally seeing her “assaulters”. “Huh… who are you guys.” Her eyes were still weary.

They exchanged confused glances. “We’re Team Rocket… and, we’re here to capture you.” Jessie said.
“Team Rocket… huuuuh… !” Her eyes widened. “Oh my god, you guys are Team Rocket cosplayers!” They exchanged another glance. “Hold on, I’ll get one, too!” She giddily ran to her house. The agents merely stood and stared confusedly. Mika soon zipped out dressed as, “TA-DAAAA! I’m Bianca! Heehee!” She made a cute pose.

“…” They didn’t get this girl at all. “Um, we don’t understand the ‘cosplay’ part, but… we are Team Rocket agents, and we’re here to capture you for your power.” Jessie explained once more.

“…Oh? Hmmm…” Mika’s costume fell off (her real clothes underneath) as she studied the trio. “…PLAAAH HA HA HA HA HA HA HA!” She held her stomach and fell on her back laughing.

“HEY, TOOTS! What’s so funny?!” questioned Meowth.

“HAHAHAHAHAAHA you guys are, gonna try and capture me, PLAAAH ha ha ha ha ha ha ha!”

“Grrrr we’ll teach YOU to laugh at us!” declared Jessie. “GO, Arbok!” She threw her Poké Ball and released the purple cobra.

“CHAAAABOKUP!” it hissed.

“GO WEEZING! Victreebel!” James released his Pokémon.

“We’re scared.” said the Weezing. The Victreebel however-“GAAAAAH! Stop it you stupid thing, can’t I release you just once without-” The plant Pokémon munched his master.

“Arbok, use Poison Sting!” Jessie yelled.

“CHAAAAA!” It unleashed a storm of needles which Mika blocked.

“Weezing, Smokescreen!” commanded James.

“Wee-” The Weezing clouded the area with poison gas, making Mika hold her breath.

“GO, Victreebel!”

“Bel!” The plant-type wrapped Mika in its vines. With a smirk, Mika stretched a barrier to free herself, then flew up to blow all the gas away with psychic.

“Arbok, go!” The cobra launched up to wrap itself around Mika, bringing her to the ground. She merely teleported away and thrust her arms, blowing them away with psychic.

“Graaaaah forget this crud!” Meowth decided. “Listen, Toots, we got us a whole fleet waitin’ to blow this city to bits, so you better play your cards right and come with us!”

“Hmmmmmm…” With an innocent grin, Mika raised her hands, “Then I GUESS you caught me!”

“…” They froze stiff. “Huh?”

“I don’t want the city getting destroyed so, I’ll just come quietly.” She held her arms out.

“…Well, that’s great.” Jessie said.

They summoned a helicopter with an “R” symbol and led Mika onboard. Sunni woke up from her nap and walked outside to see the commotion. She gasped, “Mom!”

“Oh, hey Sunni!” Mika called over the loud propellers, still with a grin. “Tell your dad I’ve been taken captive, so I won’t make it to dinner! See you later, Honeeeeyy!” Too dumbstruck to speak, Sunni only watched as her mom boarded the chopper and flew beyond the heavens. Who on Earth would be able to kidnap her mom, and why would she go with them so easily. …Looks like Sunni was in for a whole new adventure.

Sector V’s C.O.O.L.-B.U.S.

“Now that I think about it, I wonder if MaKayla knows anything about these Keys,” Haylee mentioned, piloting her team’s aircraft. “After all, she did go through a phase where, she knew everything.”

“So did Mr. Garley. For a moment.” Harry remembered.

“Let’s pick up Dillon at Rhode Island first.” Aurora said. “His school should be clearing out, too.”

“Yaaaaaawn. You mates go ahead ‘nd do that… I’ma lay down for a wee nap.” Sheila moaned, lying on her bench.

“Okay, but if we end up crashing in a really ripper land of bigness and adventures, don’t blame us if we don’t wake up.” Mason chuckled.

But his friend was already fast asleep, snoring away. Seeing her so peaceful always made Mason smile, and made him wonder what she could be dreaming about. He’d really love to have those dreams with her.

Quahog; James Woods Elementary

School was clearing out at James Woods Elementary, but a few kids were staying to play on the playground. Among these students were Dillon York and Zach and Maddy Murphy. “Siiigh, I have looooads of homework to do.” The former said.

“I’m glad I’m not in your sector.” Maddy replied. “So Dillon, is your cousin still a giant?”

“Yep. It’s gettin’ kinda rough ‘cause he can’t sleep inside his house. His mom usually has to come out and pat him to sleep. Feel kinda sad for ‘im.”

“I’d feel sad for that Gang of his, having to put up with his stink.” Zach remarked.

“Like you ever had to complain about-”

“BARK! BARK! BARK!”

“Sparkyyyy!” Maddy smiled joyously when her puppy ran over to start licking her. “What’re you doing here!”

“Great, the minute I thought school was the only safe place.” Zach said smugly.

“You think he got lonely?” Dillon smiled humorously.

“Awwww did you get lonely boy, you missed me?” Maddy cooed, ruffing the puppy’s hair.

Unbeknownst to them, the image from Sparky’s eyes was displayed on a screen. “Yes… THERE she is!”
“Mwah ha ha hah! Then let’s GET HER!”

The children’s playtime came to a halt when a tremendous shadow fell over the land. They looked up, mouths frozen agape. A humongous spaceship hovered over the school and dropped swarms of robots with slug-like eyes inside green domes, two arms with electric claws, and no legs. One robot skidded around and scanned Maddy’s body. “Target identified. Preparing to-” Said girl immediately lunged over and kicked through the robot’s dome, knocking him down. “You didn’t even give me a chance…” He fainted dead.

The robots furiously began blasting lasers around the playground, the kids scurrying away in terror. Dillon trapped several robots in Shadow Possession and Strangled them, and Maddy easily flipped around and bested most of the robots with a single kick. “Nnn! Zach, we could use help from you, too.” Dillon grunted.

“I’m a lizard. Oink oink.” Zach had turned into a duck.

“QUIT PLAYIN’ DUMB AND GET OVER HERE!”

Two robots tried to grab Maddy, but she grabbed and tied their tentacles together, making them shock each other, then grabbed another’s tentacle to swing him into another, then slipped behind one’s back, pulled and twisted his wrist, then kicked him to the ground. She raised her fist at another approaching robot, but it pretended to choke, and fell. “Heh! Whatever alien freak sent you guys, he’s got a-” She was suddenly trapped inside an anti-gravity bubble.

“Pitiful humans. You who try to resist the inevitable, against some reasonably inferior minions… prepare to suffer humiliating defeat by, wait for it… LORD VORSELON!!” A robotic alien with an orange, buff metal body, claw hands, tentacle legs, and a green, one-eyed head inside a dome presented himself.

Mercenary, former Zordoom prisoner

FLINT VORSELON

“How?” questioned Zach.

“I said, LORD VORSELON! The greatest assassin in ALL of POLARIS! And by the command of his greatness, Dr. Nefarious, THE CHILD THAT IS MAD is coming with me!”

“Who the heck is Dr. Nefarious and whaddoes he want with Mad?” Zach demanded.

“Lord Vorselon reveals NOTHIIING! You have heard of no plans from him!”

“Uhh… yeah we did.” Dillon said.

“What’S that? You think Lord Vorselon is AWESOME?”

“NO WE DON’T.”

“MWAH HA HAAAAH! Once again, Lord Vorselon has-”

A grappling hook shot over and scratched his suit’s waist. “-been made a complete fool.” remarked Drake Puncture coolly.

“Drake!” Dillon beamed.

“WAH!” Vorselon zapped Drake with the same anti-gravity bubble.
“Fool! You will make an EXCELLENT trophy for Vorselon’s successful capture! I retreat for now, but you haven’t seen the last of… LORD VORSELOOON! MWEH HA HA HEH!” The alien teleported, and both anti-gravity bubbles flew into the starship.

“MADDY!” Zach yelled.

“Zach! Dillon!” Her voice was barely heard as she vanished inside the vessel. The starship faced toward the heavens and took off for the stars. Zach and Dillon exchanged frantic glances and decided to ditch school early.

Team Gnik’s Hideout

The mysterious being sat quietly in his chamber. His subordinates had gone to their designated areas, so their plans may proceed. The first terminal to switch on was that of Giovanni, the man in the orange tux petting his Persian. “It’s been 3 days as you said, Lesser Lord. May we finally begin?” The other screens switched on, displaying the others’ images.

“Yes… the month of May has arrived.” Ragaj Gnik said. “The Apocalypse will happen at the end of this month. So capturing the Seven Lights is our top priority. The Darknesses, on the other hand, will take care of themselves. So… Giovanni!” He looked at the grinning man. “Specter!” He looked at the white-furred monkey in the floating chair. “Plankton!” He looked at the single-eyed microorganism. “Mr. Dark!” At the blue-cloaked man with yellow eyes. “Dr. Nefarious!” At the blue-skinned robot with a dome head. “And… X.A.N.A., wherever he is. The Quest for Seven Lights begins now. We will set off for the New World.”

And set off, for destruction. So apparently the quest begins NOW?? But the heroes don’t even know what they’re doing, yet. X/ Oh well, maybe we’ll reach that point. Eventually…
Chapter Summary

Maddy is captured by Dr. Nefarious! Meanwhile, Sheila explores the Dream World!

Yo, guys!

Chapter 5: A Real Crazy Weirdo

Adams Tech Co.

Emily hurried back to the building as things had calmed down a bit. “Emily, there you are!” her mother yelled, running to her. “Where did you go??”

“Hehe, relax, Mom!” Emily blushed. “Just thought I’d, monkey around a bit and catch some monkeys.” They looked to the containment capsule where the 10 monkeys were held.

“But… How did you-”

“With my T.E.L.A.-N.E.T.!” Emily held the net up. “I locked on the containment chamber so the monkeys would be transported inside! Or anything else I felt like catching, he he he.”

“Well… great job, Em!” Kim smiled. “Course there’s still a bunch more that escaped from the lab, but we can track down the last few in town easily. Come upstairs, want you to meet someone.”

Kim guided her to a laboratory on the highest floor of the building. A brown-haired woman in a lab coat was speaking to an employee before he walked away. “Emily, this is one of our leading scientists, Rebecca Jake. Professor Rebecca, this is…”

“Holy cow!” Emily perked. “I know you! You used to be in the Amish Sector!”

“Hm hm hm… did I?” Rebecca smiled. “I’ve been surrounded by technology so long, I can hardly remember ever living on a farmland.”

“Hu hu! You became the KND’s best scientist after you transferred to the Aquatic Lab! Hardly any experience and you were a natural! I gotta have your autograph!”

“Hm hm, maybe later. We have a feeling who’s behind all these escaped monkeys. No doubt, it’s the work of Specter.”

“Who’s Specter?” Emily asked.

“Specter was one of many test-subject monkeys we had here in the lab.” Kim explained. “11 years ago, we created the Peak Point Helmet and placed it on him. It was a helmet that could grant artificial intelligence, and we created hundreds. But those were Pipo Helmets, lesser variants, and Specter’s was the core helmet, which granted him artificial psychicbending. Using his powers, he broke out of the lab and stole the other helmets, giving them to all sorts of monkeys. He tried to take over the world, but we managed to stop him. I don’t see how he-”
“Why, with my superb planning, of course.” They all jumped when a TV came on, displaying Specter’s image. (Cue Specter’s Theme from Ape Escape.)

“Specter!” Kim gasped.

“Though I will confess, I couldn’t have done it all on my own. Mr. Mogul, for example, provided great assistance in duplicating these Pipo Helmets. As for how I escaped myself…”

“HE HAD HELP FROM I: Mmmoojo Jojo,” A green-skinned, black-furred monkey appeared, with a purple cape, white boots and gloves, and a white, purple-striped helmet over his head, “who has heard of Specter’s miraculous designs and sought to make an alliance with him, which is what I did, after I rescued him, due to my ingenious planning, because I am smart, and you imbeciles are-”

“Okay okay, I think they-” Specter tried to speak, but his mechanical collar sparked, reverting to his nasally voice. “DAAAH this voice-modifier will be my bane! Cut the camera, cut cut-!”

The screen switched to a picture of a monkey shrugging sheepishly and holding a potato camera. Next to him read, Technical difficulties. Sorry about that.

The screen soon cut back to Specter, back in his cooler, echoey voice. “Ahhh, that’s better. Now without any need to go into all the details, I have successfully assembled my army of over 500 apes, and as we speak, they are producing more Pipo Helmets and hunting more apes to add to my army. And commanding those monkeys are the five most intelligent apes in my army, next to Yours Truly of course. Sadly, my Freaky Monkey Five cannot be here now. But if you are wise, you’ll stay where you are and not have to meet them.”

“What’s wrong, Specter? Afraid we’ll send all your monkeys back to the zoo? ‘Cause THAT’S what’s gonna happen- snort!” Emily declared.

“Hmph… am I afraid of some girl who looks like she has uncontrollable sweatglands?”

Emily blushed and shifted her foot.

“Very well… I accept your challenge, little girl. But just so you know, it’s not just me and my army of apes. We have many legions, and they’re spread across much of the universe. I look forward… to more.” The screen blanked. (End song.)

“Legions across the universe… where’ve I heard that before?” Kim questioned.

“Either way, we can’t let Specter or any of those apes run around.” Rebecca said. “They’ll drive any place they visit into chaos. …And it looks like they got pretty far using our transporters.”

“So let’s get out there and stop them!” Emily perked. “I grabbed some of the monkeys’ fur so I can track them with my-”

“Hold on, Em, we aren’t even sure how strong his forces are.” Kim replied. “And those legions he mentioned, they could be-”

“I know.” she said quickly and knowledgeably. “It’s just like when Gnaa appeared with his allies, isn’t it, Mom? The past is repeating itself, and my archaeological instincts tell me it has to do with this inevitable doom that Cheren mentioned. I need to find this Specter guy and find out what he knows about… well, any of this. Then I have to tell Cheren so he can tell all the other kids. Come on, Mom, just let me go!”
“What’s this about an… inevitable doom?” a scientist asked.

“Oh, right. You guys probably haven’t heard, hehehehe.”

“Well, she did a great job rounding up these few monkeys.” Rebecca noted. “She could help us catch some more. But doing it by yourself might be too much.”

“Way ahead of you!” Emily perked. “Can one of your transporters send me to Nashville? I have a few friends that can help.”

“Nashville, Tennessee?” Rebecca asked, observing a transporter’s monitor. “A few monkeys are actually around that area. …I wonder if they’re attacking Kids Next Door regions?”

“That’s what I’m gonna find out.” Emily declared. “I’ll find out what Specter’s up to and catch every last monkey! Get ready to warp me!”

“Hold on, we still didn’t agree to let you go!” Rebecca yelled. “We can’t even call you back with the teleporter. You might-”

“It’s okay, Becca.” Kim intervened. “I think Em might be on to something about Specter. And I know she can handle it.” She smiled at her daughter. “She has that Garley-Adams smartness. Right?”

Emily blushed and scratched her head. “Huhuhuhu- snort.”

“Well… if you say so.” Rebecca agreed. “We’ll send our Infobox Drones out too to give you help if you need it. Good luck, Emily.”

Emily excitedly hopped on the teleporter and warped to Nashville. Kim’s daughter was off on another adventure. …By which she meant her first adventure.

The Tree of Beginning

The R.O.A.D.S.T.A.R. landed just outside the mountain range of the Tree of Beginning as Cheren and Nebula climbed out. They approached the seemingly dead-end wall, where two teeny Minish guards stood.

“Halt! Who goes there?”

“Uhhhh…” Cheren moaned.

The guard rolled her eyes and pulled out a Minish-size megaphone (a miniphone). “I said, who GOES there? Giant humans…”

“We’re with the Kids Next Door.” Nebula responded. “We’re here to speak with the Minish KND Leader.”

“On what grounds?”

“On the grounds that we brought Floran Spring Cherries.”

“Yaaaaaaaaay!”

A storm of tiny cheers squeaked across the wall.

“Fine. You can come in. OPEEEEEN!”

A group of earthbender Minish hauled the tremendous (kid-sized) gate open, Cheren and Nebula having to duck to get in. They patiently followed the Minish guard up the populace tree, where many Minish roamed the forest of flowers beneath their feet. Cheren looked by his left foot, seeing a Minish kid in an open spot.

“AAAAAHH!!”

“You squished 10 of my Pikmin!!”

“Um… sorry.”

She led her Pikmin away in anger.

“Aww, GREAT! Now I owe Mulberry 5 nuts! Dumb humans visiting our tree…”

The two were led to the near-top of the tree, the guard stopping before a tall stone pillar.

“Numbuh Hundred Acres, Sir: these human Kids Next Door have come to speak with you.”

This thin pillar that towered many stories was a throne, where the Minish Leader sat high and proud, viewing for miles. He was at neck level with Cheren and Nebula, and it looked as though his throne could be easily snapped between their fingers. “And to what do I owe this blocking of my view?”

Minish Leader Lenari wore a blue shirt, black shorts, black shoes, and a black pointed hat. He really loved that color, apparently.

Nebula bent down slightly and spoke professionally, “Numbuh Hundred Acres, I am Numbuh Eternal, Supreme Leader of the Galactic Kids Next Door. This is Cheren, Leader of Earth’s Kids
Next Door. We are here to request an alliance with your organization, and your membership in the Galactic Kid Council. In doing so, you will be provided with assistance from other KNDs, if you so need, but you will also be required to attend regular council meetings and assist our members if requested. It’s all written in this contract if you want to join.” She pulled out a paper with the written information. “Just sign here. …You can make a tiny signature if you want, we can magnify it.”

“…Hmmmm…” Lenari studied the contract thoughtfully. “To be honest, we Minish KND have always been a discreet organization, with our main purpose providing secret assistance to the Human KND.”

“Well, this way we can be helping each other.” Cheren noted.

“Well, making ourselves more open might only lead to negative consequences on our end. Besides, we’re kind of at a negative standpoint with the humans at the moment.”

“Whaddayou mean?”

“About 5 months ago, a group of humans broke in here and kidnapped our princess, Gonshiri. We’ve determined they were some royal types, who occasionally kidnap our kind to be made as slaves, and we’re trying to locate and rescue her.
Before that happens, signing any treaties or major legal documents shouldn’t happen without her consult.”

“Maybe we can help. Do you know what her kidnappers looked like?” Cheren asked.

“They looked like knights in fairly colorful armor. That’s why we assumed them to be rich people. Anyway, I’ll think about your treaty, but I can’t sign now, and I can’t promise the princess will agree, either. She’s… kinda snotty.”

“Thank you for your time.” Nebula said, putting the contract away. “If you make up your mind, get one of Cheren’s operatives to tell him, and he’ll tell me. That is, if he’s a good boy.” She smiled witfully.

“Just be careful not to step on any of us on the way out.”
“Well said.” With that, Nebula warped them both out, the flash making the tiny Minish leader dizzy for a few moments.

The two reappeared just beside the R.O.A.D.S.T.A.R.. “Well, I guess I’ll head back to GKND.” Nebula decided. “Also… something weird.” She gave Cheren a letter. “This was inside our mailbox, meant to be given to you.” Cheren looked at it confused. “I don’t know who it’s from, but… well, just watch yourself. You have a knack for getting into trouble. ‘specially with me.” She winked. “Ciao.” And she warped away.

Cheren had no idea what it could be, either. A letter given to Nebula to give to him… who in Galaxia would be acquainted with him, besides the operatives. He cracked it open and found a heart-shaped symbol with a face at the bottom on the note’s cover. He opened and read, Meet me at Roguetown Station, 8pm tonight. Tell no one. Signed with a heart. Cheren folded and hid the note in his jacket with a very suspicious look. Here we go again…

Dream Realm

Sheila was fast asleep on the C.O.O.L.-B.U.S.. While everyone else was sitting boredly… Sheila was already on an adventure.

“WAAAAAH- UUH!” She fell past many leaves and bounced down a series of branches, finally crashing on the ground. “Nnnnn… ?” She rubbed her head and looked up, feeling a shadow over her. A gang of ruthless thugs with light-brown sack-like clothes, big round hats, shotguns, and scarecrow-like faces stood over her with rageful looks. She stood up and merely wore a baffled expression, scratching her head. The thugs were pretty confused their selves, exchanging glances with each other. For many minutes, no one said anything. Just… stood there weirdly.

“LOOK OUT BELOOOOWW!” The green fairy creature that Sheila saw before, with the big grinning mouth, zipped down and crashed facefirst in the tree, following to his back before Sheila. He shook back to his senses and got up. “Dang it, knew I shoulda packed a parachute. I’m not late am I, stopped by at the Quickie Mart to grab this Coffee Candy, gotta say, whaddo people-” He turned and finally noticed the thugs. “YAAAAAAHHH!”

Startled, the beings started trying to shoot him, but the fairy frantically dodged and grabbed Sheila by her tail. “QUICK, let’s get outta here!” He flew her away.

“What the heck-”

“My name’s Murfy, I’ll explain later, let’s GOOOO!”

Stage 6: Toons in Trouble

Mission: Follow Murfy into the castle.

Act ½

The fairy flew fast through the forest of giant trees, evading the gunshots of more thugs from the branches. “Watch out for the Hoodlums, kid! Speakin’ of which, grab those yellow things, those’re Lums.” Sheila did so and grabbed the little energy spheres with wings, letting them disperse into energy inside her form. Hoodlums were coming down on parachutes trying to blast them, but Murfy dodged around them and left Sheila to punch them down. “Oh no, they’re taking the Electoons!” Murfy exclaimed, seeing blimps hauling cages onto their decks, containing tiny, pink sphere-like creatures – with faces, blond ponytails, and hands and shoes separate from their bodies.
“Those poor little guys! They’ll be forced to play harmonicas and eat stale rice pudding! Oh, the toonanity…”

Murfy then had to shift different altitudes to avoid incoming tree branches and Hoodlums on parachutes, followed by wooden walls blocking their path. Hoodlums were now riding by either side of Sheila on hoverbikes, Murfy pulling her upward when they tried to shove, then getting back beside so Sheila can kick them out of the air. “Pull those legs in, Sheila! ‘Cause here come the DRAAAAGOOOOONS!” A storm of blue, chubby dragons with large chins were flying from ahead, blasting fireballs and attempting to snap them when they passed by. A larger, purple dragon was then charging at them, mouth wide open as it prepared a powerful fire blasts, but Sheila stretched out and began spinning her left leg, charging more light into her foot before sending a mighty Light Kick that forced the dragon’s mouth shut, the fire exploding inside, and sent him falling out of the sky.

“Great job, Kid. Tell ya what, I’ll reward ya with yer first parachute jump. PARACHUTE NOT INCLUDEEEEEED.”

Murfy released Sheila and allowed her to drop to the distant ground. She merely spun her tail to lighten her fall, ensuring a safe land on her feet. Murfy then flew down to meet her. “Uwaaaah sorry for the mess, kid. By the way, nice raccoon costume. When does it come off?”

She glared with hands on her hips.

“Hahaha, I’m just kidding, just kidding! Ah, look at your face. The name’s Murfy, nice ta meet ya. Anyway, I got somethin’ you wanna look at: the Manual.” He held up a small booklet titled Guide to Legend of the Seven Lights, with a picture of two crossing keys. “This guide’s got everything you need to know, but I’ll go over the basics.” He opened and flipped the pages, “Once upon a time, Arceus created many universes, one was outta control, so he had to seal it, blah blah blah BOORING.” He read through very fast. “Okay, so the world’s about to end, and the only way to save everyone is find these 20 Keys of Light and Darkness, and the Lights awaken themselves by finding these cubes and reading what’s on them, sounds simple enough. Oh-oh-oh, and get this, it says you need the Firstborn to help ya, too.”

“But blimey, the Firstborn all went an’ scattered!” Sheila yelled. “The Guardians just let them go!”

“Well then I guess you’ll just have to find them again.” Murfy grinned witfully. “I know your parents enjoyed that the first time, now their kids gotta awaken themselves as Guardians. Geez, why’s everyone sleepin’ so much, am I right?” He patted her chest. “Oh, uh, by the way I forgot to mention, every action wins ya points. Let me demonstrate: ya see-”

“YEAH YEAH yeah, Ah know what points ah, we do stages all the time.”

“Great, then I can save a little oxygen. But just ‘cause I’m gettin’ paid, I’ll walk ya through this stage, anyway. I’ll help ya with some puzzles, but don’t expect me to break the game like I did in Rayman Legends. Just when ya really need it, okay?” (Play “Teensies in Trouble” from Rayman Legends.)

Act 1

Sheila ventured across a small field of wooden barracks as Hoodmongers popped out, ready to shoot her with rifles. “Okay, Sheila, let’s see what ya got. You’re the infamous Sunny-Fist, put that fist to good use.” Sheila charged her Light Fists and easily knocked them out in one punch, letting the Black Lums fly away. “Bravo, kid, wonderful.” Two Hoodbooms stood atop two parallel towers and threw grenades down, blocking with shields when Sheila punched her spheres, but she simply grabbed their grenades and tossed them back to blow them up. “Bravo, Sheila, that’s usin’ yer noodle.”

Sheila Wall Jumped between the two towers to make it atop a wooden wall blocking her path, then hurried down the stairs to a more open field of charging Hoodlums. Sheila spun her two fists and charged huge Light Fists, launching them forward and destroying the swarm in an instant. “Look, kid, I know you’re overpowered and all, but try and die it down, we don’t want these stages to get boring. Save that strength for the big guns.” Sheila proceeded across the field and jumped up a series of wooden platforms with varying heights, having to use Murfy to cut down ropes above so she could swing to distant ones.

“Help me.” A squeaky voice called. Behind one of the wooden towers was a dangling cage, so Sheila punched a Light Sphere to smash it open. A group of Electoons floated to the ground with helicopter hair and grinned happily at their savior. Sheila got to a platform where the space between it and the next was too far, in which Murfy pointed out the switch on a further tower, beyond her vision. But there were so many other towers, Sheila simply punched Light Spheres at different ones until the right ricocheted path would lead it to the switch.

“Hey, who’re they calling ‘Maddy’? Oh wait, that’s a different Murphy. Man, we got too many characters with the same name. We got TWO Carols, TWO Jessies, two Emilys, two Sandys, and we even got three Andrews later if ya count André. Don’t ya think those’ll get confusing later on?”

A bridge appeared for Sheila to cross, bringing her to a catapult pulled back. “Oi, launch me across!” Sheila said, hopping in.

“Don’tcha wanna aim it—oh fine, I’ll do it.” The catapult seemed aimed at a castle across a river, but Murfy turned the catapult at the small plain beside it. He cut the rope and—“WOOOOOOOOO!” filled Sheila with that sense of excitement she loved so much. She plopped on her front and scraped across the ground upon landing, face filling with dirt. “PLEAH, pluh!” She spit and wiped the dirt off before marching to the castle’s entrance. However, she first noticed a ditch a few feet away, covered by wooden planks, hearing a “Help me” underneath. She smashed through with a Ground Pound and broke another cage, freeing Electoons.

Sheila continued to the castle entrance, but right then, two Hecklers – buff Hoodlums with protective armor – charged out the front gate to start blasting Sheila with their shoulder cannons. She dodged their blasts and punched their armor with her spheres, but they couldn’t penetrate.

“Okay, maybe it wouldn’t kill to be a LITTLE overpowered!” Murfy panicked. Sheila dodged back when the Hecklers threw punches, spinning her fists to charge bigger Light Spheres and blasting both of their armor clean off. They ran separately and tried to shoot back, but Sheila proved much faster as she charged her fists and punched them in the back, forcing the Black Lums from their bodies. After the fly-like creatures retreated, Sheila approached the newly-opened front gate.

“You know, I was told that Operation: MASKED would have sexy fairies with great big,” held his hands by his chest, “eh, hair. But instead we got those little snot-nosed twerps to appeal to a younger audience. It’s not like we don’t have a 7-year-old that fin’ cusses. Ay-ay-ay.” He flew in the castle first. Sheila calmly followed as the screen darkened to signal the new act.

Act 2

It was much calmer inside and smelled of dust, many cobwebs with spiders lain around, and rats roaming across the floor. Sheila jumped up a few tall steps as Hoodloons; bat-like Hoodlums, flapped down to ram Sheila headfirst, but she could knock them out in just one simple Light Sphere. After jumping up the steps, Sheila grabbed onto a small ledge along a left wall, climbing over a spiked floor with skulls. Once across, Sheila grabbed and climbed a chain up a long shaft where Flameyes – flame spirits with big eyeballs – drifted down slowly, forcing Sheila to navigate around as she climbed, but Murfy also poked some and made them poof. There was also a cage hidden in a hole in the wall, which Sheila punched to free more Electoons.

Sheila made it atop the shaft and viewed a vast chasm with a rotatable platform in the center, which Murfy could grab and turn using a wheel on its bottom. He made one of the ends stop by Sheila’s ledge to allow her on. The door on the other side was sealed, with two magic pyramids, blue and yellow, on its sides, requiring two Magic Spheres to be placed on top. Murfy first allowed Sheila to get off on the left path, where a zigzaggy path led across a spiked hall. It shifted off balance toward Sheila’s direction wherever she walked, threatening to slide her in the spikes, but she could just jump and regain balance. Across the hall was a blue Magic Sphere which Sheila had to then carry across the tilting path, forcing her to take the many routes it had to shift the balance. Once close enough to the end, she tossed the ball to the safe ledge, then carried it onto Murfy’s platform to throw it onto the blue pyramid.

Murfy then lets Sheila off beside the right path, with a river of lava with many rising and sinking pegs. Once again, Sheila could easily jump the pegs and reach the yellow sphere, but in carrying it back, she had to keep an eye out and quickly step onto a nearby rising peg. She made it across and returned to Murfy’s platform, throwing onto the yellow pyramid to open the door. “Wait a second, there are TEN Firstborn now? What happened to just Eight?? Maaan, can this quest be ANY longer?”

Sheila was brought into a narrow, snaky hallway with a series of spikes that just grew taller as the hall drew on. The walls were close enough for Sheila to Wall Jump, having to keep a steady pace across the hall, and above the rising spikes. She saw a cage dangling from the ceiling and jumped her way up to break it open (she assumed the Electoons would be able to land safely between the spikes). She made it onto a safe ledge and entered a wide, round room guarded by a—holy f, no one could possibly pronounce that. Think I’ll just call them Hoodrollers, a chubby, sack-like Hoodlum being rolled around by a small Hoodlum on top, called a Hoodhelper.

Sheila dodged the chubby creature as it tried to flatten her, throwing Light Spheres that only bounced off its belly. She decided to focus on the one rolling it, and jumped up to throw a kick to knock it away. The Hoodroller stood back up and tried to charge Sheila on its own, with the latter being unable to pierce it with punches. As she kept avoiding, she noticed the following door was sealed with an iron “X”, which she tried to, but couldn’t break with her spheres. So instead, she positioned herself so the door was behind the Hoodroller, then charged a strong enough Light Sphere to send the bulky creature into it, breaking the door down.

She marched into a long, narrow hallway with many obstacles lain in her wake, but none she couldn’t take her time going through. But a storm of hisses was heard behind, and she turned to see a swarm of small creatures that looked like Electoons, except they were blue balls with red shoes, pale blue hair, and white gloves. “Holy crud! It’s the Doomtoons!” Murfy panicked. “RUN, Sheila, RUN!”

The Doomtoons unveiled big mouths and teeth and began to chase Sheila across the hall. Murfy slid doors open up or down, making Sheila jump or duck, then had to grab rings and swing them up a wall, with Murfy having to lower some so she can reach. She made it to a straight path and ran to a bigger passage where Murfy had to turn more floating planks for Sheila to run on them. She got to solid ground as the path twisted sideways along the left, then right wall, with a river of lava below, then had to jump between vertical wooden platforms on parallel spike walls, with Murfy having to move the platforms in position for her to jump them.

Sheila made it to and dashed up a wall with her Mobian speed, once again jumping between walls.
when Doomtoons popped out of one, and they flooded the shaft as fast as she ran. The shaft became wider as she ran up a fixed, spiraled path, shooting a sphere at a floating cage with wings. Once near the top of the shaft, she jumped off and grabbed a dangling chain in the ceiling’s center. A flushing sound was heard as all the Doomtoons spiraled and sunk like a toilet. Murfy pulled a lever on the base of a new hall, extending a bridge over for Sheila to drop on and cross. “Wonderful job, Sheila, the overpowered raccoon shows no limits. Now let’s get your grade and progress the story, what’s her grade?”

Sheila received 5760 points in the stage and got a B.

“Yeah, fair enough.” (End song.)

Murfy and Sheila finally arrived at a pitch-black room with a blank, round pool to their left. Hanging from the ceiling was a cage which Sheila proceeded to punch and break. A slim, black magic hat with a star dropped on the floor. (Play the Opening Theme from Rayman.)

The slim hat danced around before a blue, long-nosed creature in a sleek black cloak and red shirt emerged, grinning as a magic wand appeared. “HI, folks! Ya wanna know what’s goin’ on? Let me tell you the story of RAYMAN!” A magical projection appeared, displaying a vast, magical land with towering mountains (normal ones and candy ones), thick forests, and fields of musical instruments.

“In Rayman’s World, nature and harmony lived together in peace. The Great Protoon was the source of nature and balance in the worllld.” The screen faded to a pink, magical sphere with electricity inside, floating in the center of some stone hands.

“Yeah, BORING, right?” the Magician noted. “No way THIS is gonna last.”

“Oooone fateful day: the EEEVIL Mr. Dark STEALS the Great Protoon and DEFEATS Betilla the Fairy as she TRIES to PROTECT it!” A dark-blue-cloaked figure with yellow eyes, no visible appendages, just floating gloves and shoes, and a round blue hat, held the Protoon in his hand and shocked a fairy girl with lightning.

“That is of course... until Rayman kicked his ass!” Another figure with separate body parts, white gloves, yellow shoes, purple shirt, and orange rabbit-like hair, punched Mr. Dark away and caught the Protoon. “But now Mr. Dark has RETURNED, and has teamed up with André the Black Lum to STEAL the Great Protoon again! Oh, and he teamed up with this Ragaj Gnik freak too, but also: The Electoons—who used to levitate around it!—LOSE their magnetic STABILITY and SCATTER all over the WORLLLDD!”

“But may I just say, Mr. Dark looks sexy in that cloak cloak cloak cloak.” Magician’s voice echoed. He coughed and shook back to focus. “So uh, basically Mr. Dark and André are trying to take over the Dream World, and their Doomtoons and Hoodlums are going around and locking all the Electoons in cages—OOOOOHH will the horror STOO-O-O-OP?” The image of a cage in a damp dungeon, with sad eyes weeping in its darkness, displayed onscreen. “They DEFINITELY need a hero to save them now! Don’t you think? Rayman?” The screen switched to a beach setting with an empty canopy. “RAYMAN?” It then showed a peaceful blue forest, no one there. “RAAAAAYMAAAAAAN!”

“We can’t find Rayman anywhere!” Murfy panicked. “All those cages are just sittin’ there, locked! What’ll we do! If we don’t get the Great Protoon back, kids’ll never have a happy dream again!
“WILL YOU put a sponge in it?” Sheila yelled. “Look, I wanna help ya get yer Proton back, but I kinda got me own business. What’s these 20 Keys and where’re we gonna find them?”

“Well, I can already tell ya that you’re one of these Seven Lights,” Murfy noted, reading the manual, “because you awakened yourself at Candied Island. Aaaand uuuuh there’s a few other things,” flipped pages, “but your main job is helping us save the Protoon. ‘Cause like, it’s the primary core of the Dream World, and dreaming is a really big thing in this quest. The rest of the things will take care o’ themselves.”

“Well, okay, I guess I’ll help. But I kinda need ta get back to me mates, ‘fore they worry.”

“Don’t worry, you will, but there’s a bunch of places we gotta visit in the Dream World first. I think if we visit the Land of Toads, we can get an idea on who some of these other Lights are. But if we wanna progress in the Dream World, we need to save more Electoons, and Mr. Dark actually brought some o’ them to the waking world. Magician, can ya give us a hand?”

“Yes Sir!” The Teensie approached a small, round pool and formed a ball of magic in his hands. He let the ball drift into the pool as it zapped into a spiraling portal. “This will take you to the Hall of Doors, where you can access the many lands in the Dream World, or the waking world itself! Mr. Dark’s guys have occupied most of the lands and trapped the Electoons in cages. Just break the cages if ya see ‘em, and they’ll help you open the worlds that Mr. Dark locked. And while you’re at it, pick up those little golden Lums along the way. You’ll need them to upgrade your powers. Not that you need to, hah ha. So GOOD LUCK!”

Her need for adventure once again sparking, Sheila eagerly dove headfirst into the pool, Murfy following. “OW!” A ding sound.

“I shoulda told ya, they’ve laid a few steel beams here for the construction project. Hehahahahaheh!” Murfy grinned sheepishly.

Vorselon’s Warship

“…” Maddy Murphy lay unconscious on a hard bed, her arms and legs strapped. She awoke and looked tiredly around the pitch-black laboratory. …She assumed it was a lab ‘cause of the uncomfy table.

“So we meet at last…” She looked left at the sound of metal footsteps, a red-eyed being marching close. “The whiny brat I had to spend the last 5 years spying on. The one who ‘as SUCH a problem with ‘freaks’. Well… IS THIS FREAKY ENOUGH FOR YOU?!” He shot directly up to Maddy’s face.

“AAAAH!”

“Verily.” The skinny blue robot walked away. “To think to accomplish the most brilliant scheme in the world would involve babysitting this snot-nosed kid. It’s NOT the kind of work I signed up for.”

“Who are you?!”

“I… am Doctor Arthur Nefarious.” He turned back. “And you are one of the key components in our grand scheme.” He approached her again. “So tell me… WHAT ARE YOU HIIDIIING?!” And yelled in her face.
She shook her head to relieve the pain in her ears. “What are you talking about, I’m not hiding anything! And where are we, anyway?”

“You are in my SHIP.” Lord Vorselon spoke, coming out of the darkness. “The ship of LORD VORSELOOON! Where we have taken you to the far reaches of space, MANY parsecs from your home planet!”

“What?! Are we in Galaxia?”

“Far from it.” Nefarious smirked. “We are in the Solana Galaxy. My home region, and specially picked since those snotty Kids Next Door haven’t extended this far. Here is where I’ll conduct my experiments and extract whatever info I need from you. And you will tell me the secret of your powers… N-N-N-N-N-NOW-” He shook furiously and was about to scream, until the satellites in his head malfunctioned. He froze stiff as a radio transmission played.

“Oh, CALCULON! Is it true you are really a vampire?”

“No, Monique. For it is you, who is actually… A WERECAR!”

“NOOO, Calculon.” Nefarious’s butler, Lawrence approached and lightly bonked his master’s head. “It was your half-brother, Boxy. He injected me with this serum of gorilla fur that contained-”

A harder bonk, and he was back to normal. “Siiigh… look, there’s a lot of stuff right now that I don’t want to get into, so just tell us what your secret is and we’ll be golden.”

“Look, I don’t have any secrets OR powers. What’m I, some freaky metahuman?”

“Oh, you have SOMETHING inside of you, and I will find it.” He turned away. “But let it be known, my methods are not rainbows and lollipops. SAY HELLO TOOO:”

“Not the Hypertronic Brain Scrubulator!” Lawrence shut his eyes.

“-THE HYPERTRONIC BRAIN SCRUBULATOOOR!” Nefarious whipped out a mechanical drill with a glass container and small monitor. “This trinket will extract your brain’s juices and SEE what you have to hide! Don’t worry, you’ll still be alive, just… a bit less intelligent. STAAART IT UP!”

The deadly drill whirred to life as Nefarious carefully loomed it toward Maddy’s cranium. The girl desperately tried to shake away, but the cuffs were too tight, and the drill was seconds away from piercing her flesh.

Just then, the doors blew open, and a grenade flew in and exploded on Nefarious’s head, making him toss the drill away. “WHAAAAT?!”

A smoke bomb was thrown in, fogging the room as Nefarious was lost from Maddy’s vision. A yellow-ish brown, furry catlike alien with green eyes and an armored suit ran in and started plucking Maddy’s cuffs loose with a large wrench. “Let’s go. This smoke’s only good for so long.”

“Who are you?” Maddy asked, sitting up.

“I’m Ratchet, we’ll introduce each other later. We have to get off this thing, CLANK LET’S GO!”

A small, toy-like robot flipped onto Ratchet’s back. “One data file for a Mister Ratchet?” He held a small disk.
“Nice going, buddy.”

“Wait, we can’t go yet!” Maddy yelled. “Someone else got captured with me.”

“We’ll save him, here’s your stuff.” He told her rushedly, tossing her a sack. “Those’re your weapons, right? Nefarious had ‘em in the corner.”

Maddy pulled out a S.C.A.M.P.P. “Okay. Let’s go.”

“Oh, poo.” Nefarious moped. “I was finally gonna see if this thing was safe for flesh creatures.” At this, Lord Vorselon was gone in a flash. (Play “Vorselon’s Ship (Fighting the Troops)” from Ratchet: A Crack In Time.)

Stage 7: Starship Vorselon

Mission: Save Drake Puncture and break out of the starship!

Ratchet and Maddy charged down the hall as alarms blared and doors tried to seal them, but Maddy’s M.A.R.B.L.E.s and Ratchet’s grenades blew them down easily. “Attention all troops, Dr. Nefarious orders the IMMEDIATE capture of the Lombax and our bratty prisoner! And Lord Vorselon encourages your following that order, for the sake of him not being the Scrubulator’s test fleshy! SO GET TO IIIIT!” Vorselon thundered.

“So who is that guy?” Maddy questioned.

“Who, Dr. Nefarious? He’s just an old coot that’s been terrorizing the Solana Galaxy awhile. He disappeared several years ago, but I guess he finally turned up.” Ratchet explained. “Which reminds me, why’s he after you?”

“ Heck if I know. That Vorsetron guy just kidnapped me outta nowhere.”

“Well, we’ll straighten this out. Let’s look for your friend in the prison wing. Qwark, what’s it like out there?” he spoke in his wristwatch communicator.

“Um, Ratchet, just outta curiosity, making like a big crybaby and retreating if things looked scary was an option, right?”

“NO, Qwark, it WASN’T.”

“I was afraid you might say that. Anyway, don’t be mad if I left a little mess on the ship. Gonna find a space-dump now.”

“Siiiiigh. Just don’t leave us hanging, Qwark.”

They breached an armory chamber as swarms of Nefarious Drones began to blast them, in which Maddy began blasting some with a B.A.J.O.O.K.A. and shorting them out. “Ahh. I’m calcium-intolerant.” A robot beeped before fainting. Ratchet threw a smoke bomb at a squad, allowing Maddy to jump around and kick all their glass domes. Ratchet caught one’s arm in his OmniWrench and swung him into others as its tentacle-arm stretched, and when Maddy grabbed and hurled one to him, he batted it away with the wrench.

The duo proceeded down another hall as the floor gave way in many parts, leaving only small footholds in-between gaps. “Ratchet, those will be much too far to jump.” Clank said.
“Maddy, grab onto me, I’ll fly us-” However, the Murphy girl easily kicked off the walls to each foothold, getting across in seconds. “You were saying, buddy?” Ratchet hovered across using Clank’s helipack, catching up with Maddy in another large room where Microdrones charged at them. The smaller robots were easy to wipe out with Ratchet’s wrench and Maddy’s M.A.R.B.L.E.s, but they soon had to duck the machineguns of Protomantises from the other side. Even Maddy’s B.A.J.O.O.K.A. wouldn’t short-circuit them right away, so they had to stay behind the available cover and keep shooting.

Maddy swiftly rolled toward the left robot and kicked his left gun, causing him to shoot the other. When it tried to shoot her again, she fell to her back, kicked up on his guns, and caused him to blast the ceiling, making a chunk fall down and crush him. The group charged into another hall and reached a room with a deep chasm, only a few certain footholds. A bridge led them to a central platform where Drake Puncture was locked in a capsule. “Drake!” Maddy yelled.

“Uuuugh...” Drake woke up. “Boy, whaddid I eat last night. Dreamt we got abducted by aliens.”

“Uhhhh... may be a little truth to that. Can we break the cage open?”

“Using bombs might be kinda risky with him in there.” Ratchet said. “It looks like three Battery Bots go in those slots. We’ll find ‘em and let ‘im out safely.”

They first crossed a left bridge which ended up scrolling vertically, upside-down, and along the walls to a high platform. “You go that way, I’ll take this.” Ratchet said, using Gravity Boots to defy the gravity of this particular-colored path and walk up and upside-down. He got to the platform and caught a frantic Battery Bot in his wrench, jumping down to the cage and throwing it in one of the slots.

Maddy followed the right bridge to an open area where Splitterbots – Nefarious Drones with buzzsaw hands – spun their blades to life and loomed closer. Maddy flipped and dodged as they stretched their buzzsaws, grabbing one’s arm and pulling it against other drones, slicing them in half. “No fair. I just had this exterior waxed.” Others kept launching their arms and slicing their allies as Maddy dodged, until there was one left. She rolled to it, dodging its saw when it launched, then spared a smirk before ducking the returning saw, letting it pierce the robot’s face.

She faced the frightened Battery Bot and quickly grabbed it, forcing it in a slot. Ratchet took the north bridge to a closed door, but began climbing across a pipe along the right wall. Parts of the pipe were broken and released electricity, making Ratchet wait ‘til it stopped, and when the pipes ended, he jumped to a higher, parallel pipe. They eventually brought him to a high foothold in the corner where the last Battery Bot was. He grabbed it and floated back to Drake’s platform to finally free him.

The door across the north bridge opened as more Nefarious Drones poured in. “Time for the Drakester to put a hole in things.” Drake grinned coolly. He aimed his right, grappler hand and launched, piercing a line of drones and swinging them against the others.

“I am really glad I got picked for Decom.” Maddy said with disbelief. The trio charged into the newly-opened hall and blasted incoming drones.

“Sir, they’ve rescued the other prisoner and they’re proceeding through the 30th wing.”

“Well, COME ON, Lawrence, THINK of something! Let’s see, um... hey MAAADDYYYYY. I’ve got your favorite CAAAANDYYYY. It’s GUMMY Nuts! You go CRAZY over those! Remember when Zach told you there were Gummy Nuts in the yard and you walked into his PIE trap?! Those were good times, right! Just come and have some so I can do my experiment!”
“Your manner of persuasion is exemplary, Sir.”

“Gee, Maddy, that’s some stalker you got.” Drake said.

“’kay, now I’m officially creeped out.” Maddy agreed.

They turned a left corner and encountered some Arc Strikers, Nefarious Troops that launched electrical waves along the floor. Drake launched his grappler, but one of the Strikers defended with electric and shocked Drake across the hook’s line. Maddy easily short-circuited them with her B.A.J.O.O.K.A., and the juice allowed Ratchet to freeze them with his CryoMine Glove. A door opened behind the robots, exposing the empty space. “Qwark, are you still out there??” Ratchet called.

“Heh heh, funny story Ratchet, I actually got lost while trying to follow the ship and I accidentally started attacking a giant ice cream cargo ship. They got a little peeved, heheh. Um, trying to locate you guys, now.”

“Siiiigh. Alright, Maddy, Drake, put these on.” He tossed them air helmets. “We’ll try to hide on the side of the ship.” They stepped beyond the oxygen barrier and progressed along the path on the side of the ship. A couple of smaller ships flew by and destroyed the path, blowing the trio off. “WHO000AA!”

“Quick, hold tight!” Drake grabbed Maddy’s hand, and she grabbed Ratchet, before the former used his harpoon hand to latch a peg sticking from the ship, pulling them to it. He released as the momentum and low gravity sent them a few meters across the side, where Drake could pull them to another peg flinging them downward and under the ship, then pulled them to another peg on its bottom. There, they tried to take a firm stance and move across the bottom.

Laser turrets emerged, which Drake shot with his harpoon and Maddy with B.A.J.O.O.K.A. (causing juice to float in the low gravity), while water also emerged from a pipe, joined by a flushing sound. “Hooooooo. Lord Vorselon will watch the amount of chili burritos he consumes.” The trio soon made it to a hatch on the bottom and climbed in, reverting right-side-up and removing their helmets. They passed a narrow hall and shot through more Nefarious Drones before the hall became wide, with a series of horizontal energy bars scrolling up over a dark chasm.

“Perhaps we should go up.” Clank suggested.

“Really, buddy, what makes you say that?”

“Excuse me for trying to hold onto classics, Ratchet. Mm hm he he he.”

The trio gripped and swung across the bars before they went too high and vanished. Each set of bars scrolled up between parallel poles which ended at certain points where the bars vanished, but other parallel poles were stationed on higher parts and allowed a new set of beams to scroll higher. At the moment, the team could only swing to an opening across the chasm, but this only brought them to a dead end. Thankfully, the walls were close enough for them to Wall Jump and reach a higher set of beams, proceeding to swing across again. At the end of this new path, they held on the last beam as it scrolled up to bring them to a higher set, where they could swing across and reach the new pathway.

“Come on, Maddy, PLEASE come back!” Nefarious cried. “Remember all the good TIIMES you had? Look! I even have your baby pictures! You were so CUUUUUTE in that little diaper. If you let me examine your brain, you’ll get to review ALL of those good times! It’s only one small scrubulation! COME BAAAACK!”
“I hope there’s galactic authorities in this region!” she yelled.

They appeared above a wide room with several barred pipes within the walls, and two platforms with screws on them, one taller than the other. Before they could stare too long, a door slammed shut on their ledge and forced them to the room’s floor the same time as Protomantises marched out and began blasting. “Alright, you guys hold ‘em off, we’ll look for a way out.” Ratchet said as he hurried to a nearby round corridor. He climbed onto a platform with what seemed like a boat and a screw, which Ratchet latched with his OmniWrench and began turning. Once the screw sank down, some water flowed and flooded the room partway, and Maddy immediately began to panic when the liquid raised her by her waist.

“AAAAAAAAH! HEEEL-bl-bl-bl-bl-bl-bl-bl-bl-bl-bl-bl-bl.” She quickly submerged and couldn’t regain control.

“Hold on now.” Drake dove in and grabbed her arm around his head, swimming to the cavern where Ratchet & Clank were. He quickly stepped onto their platform and laid Maddy down as she gasped for breath.

“What happened?” Ratchet asked.

“She’s got the Sonic Condition.”

“The what now?”

“She don’t like water.”

“Why did you do that?!” she screamed. “I can’t get across this room now!”

“I do not see the problem. I am a robot and I have no quarrel with water.” Clank said.

“I am NOT swimming in that!!”

“Well, we’ve got a boat right here. Might as well use it.” Ratchet figured.

They pushed the rowboat on the water and helped Maddy on, rowing it across the water instead. Unfortunately, the Protomantises and Protoguards set their selves on buoyant platforms and kept firing, with Drake having to latch them with his harpoon and yank them in the water. “No. Please. I just ate-“ One said before Drake pulled him in. They rowed over to another cavern with a higher platform, formerly too high to reach, but with the raised water, Ratchet could hop on and turn the screw.

The water raised another foot, so the team rowed back out and fended off flying Microdrones. They were now high enough to reach the first of the two pillars in the room, where Ratchet turned the next screw and raised the water. This time, some Splitterbots flew out and launched buzzsaws that destroyed their boat, so the three frantically jumped and grabbed the ledge around the side of the second pillar. Maddy kept her grip tighter than the others as they climbed around the spiral ledge to reach the top. The Splitterbots still had their aim on them, so Clank fired mini lasers from his antenna and shot them in the water. “Those were 1 million Bolts I still don’t regret. Mm hm he he.” He remarked.

Once atop the platform, Ratchet turned the screw and opened a hallway on a nearby ceiling corner. Some drones flew out to stop them, but they easily used the drones as platforms to hop to the cave. The three exchanged victorious smirks, but panicked when the water continued rising. It continued rising throughout the hall, so the trio ran through quickly. They first hopped a trio of platforms to a narrow path that curved right, and afterwards hopped a few stairs just before the water reached... their feet.

They had to Wall Jump between two close walls over a long chasm, seeing the water rising below them, making it hard for Maddy to focus. She kept her balance until they reached the end and ran up a slope that curved right. Before them was another long hall where the path continued several stories above the end wall, so they had to grab the ladder-made wall and climb up, in which the ladder made several zigzaggy turns to impede their progress, while they also had to alternate walls when their current ladder ended.

But when they made it to the top, it was merely a small platform overlooking a corridor beneath them, which was already flooding. “Whaddo we do now?!”

“We’re going for it.” Drake stated, taking Maddy’s hand while Ratchet took her other. “Hold on tight, guys!” He fired his harpoon into the room at the end of the passage and pulled them under the water and into the room. They held their breath as strong as they could as Ratchet grabbed the screw in his wrench and struggled to swim around and turn it. Maddy was already frozen stiff and practically lifeless, so Drake knew she wouldn’t be any help in turning this screw. Thankfully, Ratchet’s task was accomplished as the door to the hall sealed, and the water slowly drained out of their chamber.

They were all quick to gasp for breath, Maddy especially, before the next door slid open and allowed them entry out. They climbed a short ladder to a hall that led them to a wide, circular room. (End song.)

“I don’t know what you kids do for a living on your planet, but it’s clearly enough to hold your own.” Ratchet said as they took time to catch their breath. “Now there’s apparently an airlock a few floors up, hopefully Qwark comes by the time we get there, then we’ll be Scott free.”

“Bwa ha ha! And what makes you say THAT?” A giant, two-headed robotic dog dropped from the ceiling, Lord Vorselon beside it. “Dr. Nefarious still has experiments, Human Maddy! And he will carry them out!”

“What does Nefarious want me for, anyway?”

“Bwa ha! Lord Vorselon will NEVER tell you we are searching for the 20 Keys, based on Lord Gnik's orders! Nor will he tell you about the other villains we have aligned with!”

“Lord Gnik? Other villains?”

“VORSELON, you dope, it's LESSER LORD Gnik!” Nefarious proclaimed. “UM, I mean... no, we know no one by that name! Now about those Gummi Nuts...”

“Sorry, Nefaro, but the Drakester has fooled you good!” Drake grinned, his teeth sparkling.

“You did nothing.” said Maddy and Ratchet.

“Ooooo! How DARE you make a fool of Lord Vorselon! He will make you pay for such insolence, with PAIN! Attack them, Dao Dog!”

“RAAAAAARRRR!” The group readied to battle the two-headed dogbot. (Play Egg-Cerberus’ theme from Sonic 2006.)

_Boss fight: Dao Dog_
The dog hopped to the other side of the room and launched electric spheres from both of its mouths. Drake dodged forward and fired his harpoon at the left head, but it dodged aside and stretched that head over to snap Drake, but he jumped back. Ratchet tossed grenades at their heads as he ran beside Drake, the two taking aim at a head and shooting their Swingshot and harpoon. They caught both tongues of the dog and played tug-o-war with it. “MADDY, you’re up!” Ratchet yelled.

The Murphy girl rushed up to the dog’s tail and grabbed ahold, and Dao Dog immediately felt this as he flung Ratchet and Drake away and began to run around. He wagged his tail furiously to fling her off, but ended up throwing her right onto his back, clutching onto a wire like a strand of fur and hanging on further. It was like riding a bull at the rodeo, but the sensation was familiar to Maddy in some way, so hanging on was no hassle. “What are you DOING, Dao Dog?!” Vorselon shouted when the dog finally seemed to submit. Maddy made it charge to the wall, jump, and perform a series of large Wall Jumps around the circular room. A huge container of electrical energy was hanging over the center via four beams, so Maddy made the dog jump headfirst into the container and dropped off before it endured a horribly painful shock. “Lord Vorselon KNEW the rodeo function was a bad idea! He would like to speak to the fool responsible.”

“It was YOUR idea, DUMMY!”

The dog kicked out of the container and landed itself on the walkway around the second floor. Several platforms came down for the three heroes to jump their way up when the room began to flood with electric energy. Dao Dog blasted energy spheres as the trio made their ascent, but he wasn’t the best at aiming with the spark in his brains now. They had to swing Swingshot targets and bounce a few spring platforms, eventually making it onto the walkway. Dao Dog jumped and perched itself on the platform where the electric container hung from, and the four beams connected to each corner of this walkway. He began to shoot electric spheres at certain parts of the walkway so they split into two, and went opposite ways around the path to shock the heroes.

They couldn’t go onto Dao Dog’s platform without him blasting them, and latching grapplers on him would be too risky if he yanked them into the pit. Each of the four beams were connected to large screws on the walkway, so Ratchet proceeded to go around and unscrew them while Maddy shot the robot with her B.A.J.O.O.K.A.; juices makes robo-dogs short-circuit for a few seconds, apparently. They avoided the spheres and distracted the dog enough for Ratchet to unhook all the screws and cause the platform to fall. The dog plummeted to the electric pool below and took the shock. “Brr-r-r-r-r-r-r. Dao Dog: activate the REAR boosters!” announced Vorselon. Two rockets activated on Dao Dog’s rear as it flew up from the pool and took off down a large, wide tunnel near the ceiling. A series of grind-rails came down when the ship shook, so the trio began to ride them after the dog.

There were three parallel rails for each of them, but Dao Dog fired electric spheres from the distance that whooshed across the rails, forcing them to jump to other ones. The rails were also collapsing behind them, so if they slowed down, they would surely fall. The tunnel became pretty snaky, therefore the rails did too, but it eventually dropped them into another circular room. Many Nefarious Drones ambushed them, launching buzzsaws and lasers as the trio dodged, while Dao Dog hopped to the other side of the room. The robots seemed to keep piling in as they searched around for a way to destroy the dog.

“Ratchet, there are two Battery Bots in that container up there.” Clank pointed to a glass container above the other side of the room. “Perhaps we could use them to power the electromagnet.” And hanging just over the room, a giant magnet.

“Okay, I’LL get ‘em down.” Maddy fearlessly rushed up to the robot as it snapped its fangs. When both heads lunged, she slid underneath, grabbed onto the tail, and let the robot fling her to its back as she began to bull-ride it again. Running around the room caused him to smash a lot of the smaller robots, before Maddy finally had him tamed and screeched to a halt on the opposite side from the capsule. She made him face up at the capsule, run forward, and leap to chomp both ends in its mouths to pull it down. The Battery Bots were free when the capsule shattered, so Ratchet and Drake ran to grab one and shove them both into a slot on either side of the room. The magnet buzzed to life as Dao Dog looked up curiously, but Maddy was already off his back when it flew up and stuck to the magnet like glue.

Vorselon came in to check the battle, panicking when both Dao Dog and the magnet began to short-circuit. “NO! That magnet is experimental! Lord Vorselon hasn’t yet perfected it to pull the caps off pickle jars, its intended purpose.” He fiddled around with a remote to make the dog shake furiously.

Electricity was sparking all around both machines, until the magnet fell off its latch with Dao Dog with it. “Uh-oh.” Right to Vorselon no less, as the hunter was smashed under the crumbling scrap. His capped head flew off safely, bouncing on the floor as he switched on a rocket and shot for the exit. The door was already closing at this time, so his capsule got stuck, shaking around a little before he shot inside and the door closed. (End song.)

“Okay, Mad, we’ll officially sign you up for the rodeo.” Drake said as they stared at Dao Dog’s smashed body.

“Eh, it’s not a bad idea. Can we get outta here now?”

“The airlock’s right over there.” Ratchet pointed to the door under the Battery Bots’ capsule. “Quick, let’s go before more-” They heard Vorselon’s door open as a far larger swarm of robots marched in, ready to saw or melt them.

“Should’ve expected this cliché trap.” Drake said as the trio backed against the airlock.

“Qwark, we can really use your HELP right now!” Ratchet cried into his wristwatch.

“I’m almost there, Ratchet, but don’t exactly know where you’re located!”

But it was then Maddy felt a strange sensation. She turned to the hatch behind them, and as everything turned dark, she could see a small, distant aura beyond the wall, headed their way. “I do! You’re coming right toward us, just stay as you are!”

“How do you know this, Maddy?” asked Clank.

“I…I don’t know, I just see his aura somehow.”

“Oh my God, Maddy’s an aurabender!!” Drake exclaimed.

“I am NOT, I just… I don’t know what it is, I just see him!”

“We may only have precious seconds to land in Aphelion before your heads implode. Can we trust Maddy’s judgment?” Clank asked.

Ratchet was only panicking at the approaching buzzsaw-bots. “Better than having no brain to judge with, LET’S GO!”

Ratchet slammed his hand on the button to the side as the hatch flew open.

“WHOOOOOOOAAAA!” They shot out the lock like a vacuum and fell into the endless darkness, but a ship zoomed by and caught them in its cockpit.

“NOOOOOOOO!” Nefarious shook with great rage. “That Qwaaaaarrrrrk I’m gonna tear his fleshy limbs off next time I see him, MARK MY WORDS I’LL-”

A toilet flush was heard in the next room as water came flowing out. “Um, Sir? The pipes are backed up again. Shall I fetch the Plumber?”

“Ugh…”

The team of Ratchet, Clank, Mad and Drake were upside-down and bunched atop each other in the back seat. “Nice save with the Aphelion, Qwark.” Ratchet said.

“There was never any worry, Ratchet.” The muscular superhero in the green and black jumpsuit grinned. “True heroes ALWAYS show up very late on the scene!”

They rolled back right-side-up, “Yeah, not as late as Aquaman stopping some mugger on the beach.” Drake said.

“So tell me,” Qwark smiled coolly, “is this the little lady captured against her will for Nefarious’s gain?”

“Um… yeah?” Maddy replied nervously.

“There’s no need to fear anymore, Little Girl,” he assured, wrapping his muscular arm around Maddy’s head, “because from this point on, Captain Copernicus Leslie Qwark will protect you! The atrocities and horrors you might’ve witnessed on that ship,” he squeezed her closer, speaking with an emotional tone, “I will not rest until every ounce of that precious little soul of yours is cured!”

Ratchet and Clank exchanged weird glances at his weeping. “What kind of galaxy do we LIVE IN where such horrible men can just KIDNAP little girls and do whatever with them! The nerve of that Dr. Nefarious, robbing a sweet innocent of her childhood! Well, I will defend this child with my life, or MY name isn’t Copernicus Leslie- QOUII!” Maddy finally kicked him in the gut.

“Another second under that armpit and YOU would’ve ruined my childhood! Just take us back to Earth so we can get back to our next-to-normal lives.”

“Earth, right! Uuuuh, and which quadrant was that?”

“I dunno… Milky Way?”

“If such an area exists, it is not within our data maps.” Clank replied. “I fear Dr. Nefarious may have taken you farther than we anticipated.”

“Well, don’t you alien guys like, pick up signals or something?” Drake asked. “Hang on, I’m gonna try and call my sector.” He tapped his wristwatch communicator, but it only showed static. “Huh… bad reception.”

“If your technology is mainly limited to your planet, receiving a signal this far out will be impossible. Perhaps we may find something of use on one of the nearby planets.”

“Here’s one! Peoples α.” Qwark responded, viewing his terminal. “The planet of gangs, thugs, and hustlers. Where every morning tune’s a rap song, and every sport’s a street race where the wages are high.”
“That planet is the home to many stolen ships and materials.” Clank said. “Surely we may be able to find an intergalactic radio antenna. With it, we could probably link signals of distant galaxies to your communicator, thereby contacting your home planet.”

“Plus, it’ll be easier to hide from Nefarious’s troops among the crowd.” Ratchet noted.

“Then Peoples α it is.” Maddy decided. “Let’s contact Earth quick before my brother gets worried. …And before he starts snooping around my diary.”

Somewhere on the sea

“Ahhhh… the salty air smells great.” Danny Jackson sighed, leaning over the rail of a 4x4 ship. “Glad we can finally enjoy it with those pirates gone. Don’tcha think so, Mel?”

His aforementioned sister was curled on the deck in a fetal position, hair a mess and eyes frantic. “We’re a-all gon-na die, all go-onna di-ie…”

“Sheesh, Mel, lighten up.” Eric told her. “If anyone should be afraid, it’s me. I couldn’t even get my shirt out of a tree branch, but you’re the toughest waterbender I know! And the prettiest. Except for your mom—in both genres—but still-!”

“Mel, Cheren said it was going to be okay.” Danny told her assuringly. “That we just have to build up our skills and find these 20 Keys, wherever the heck they are. But I think you’re getting too hyped on it. Why don’t we go for a swim, nice soak on our skin will get the thought out of our heads! And it wouldn’t hurt to practice waterbending.”

“Siiigh… maybe you’re right. Seeing the fishies so carefree might relieve my stress.” Melody smiled.

“THAT’S the spirit, Mel!” Eric perk ed. “Now I remembered to pack your swimsuits, Melody I wasn’t sure which one you preferred, so I packed-” But when he turned around, they had already splashed in the sea, only their shoes and socks left behind. His communicator rang, so he answered.

“Way ahead of you, Er, but thanks for the offer.” Melody noted.

“Siiiigh.” Eric really wanted to see her in that cute white bikini.

The duo swam far below the surface, swimming fast along the current and keeping their breath thanks to their waterbending. They found swarms of fish and sea creatures, who seemed totally carefree beneath these calm cool waves that reflected the sun’s gleaming light. Needless to say, the worry was lifted from their minds and souls. It was so peaceful under the sea. These fish had no worries… and neither did they. They reminded them there was still hope in the universe, and there was still a chance.

Eric stared dreamily at the sea, just thinking how happy Melody must be right now. But his eyes widened at a growing, shining object falling from the heavens.

Melody and Danny stopped their swimming to answer a call from Eric. “Mel, Danny, quick! Get outta there, there’s something coming!”

Confused, they looked up when the sun seemed to be shining brighter. …Wait… that was no sun… “OH MY GOD!!” Melody screamed, immediately swimming away with Danny at breakneck speed, spinning their arms like propellers. The shining object splashed in the sea and erupted an enormous explosion. Melody and Danny tried to evade the shockwave of seafloor sand, but ended up blown away.
Just as well, the explosion created an incredible wave that sent the ship miles across the sea, with Eric hanging on tight. “MELODYYYYYYY…”

The area under and above the surface became swallowed in smoke following the explosion. From the sky, the resulted cloud of smoke shaped like a tremendous pie. As it slowly cleared, a mechanical ship sailed in the fog, a voice sounding from its megaphone. “This is a message to all morsels who dare dwell on the sea. Your realm is now under the command of Sheldon J. Plankton: THE GREATEST GENIUS ON EARTH! You have had but a small taste of my arsenal of homemade Pie Bombs. Submit to my rule or have your whole ocean a WASTELAND of FIRE AND CHERRY!”

Mansion Under the Sea

“EEEEHH heh heh heh heh heyyyy! Alright, now let’s blow up the Gulf of Mexico.” Plankton said eagerly, crossing a sea off his list.

“Ooooo hooohooohoo! Brilliant plan, Plankton!” laughed the Dirty Bubble, a large brown bubble with evil eyes and a mouth of sharp teeth. “Pretty soon the sea’ll be too polluted for those fish to live!”

“And it will be all ours to command.” Manray, a man in a red jumpsuit, blue boots and gloves, and a blue mask with red eyes and teeth, grinned evilly. “Sooooo deliciously evil.”

“Yeah, maybe… but just where do you plan to live afterwards?” asked Dennis, a green Fishman bounty hunter in a cowboy uniform, red bandana, sunglasses, black boots, and black cowboy hat.

“Relax, we’ll filter all the poison ‘soon as all these sea dogs know who’s boss.” Plankton answered calmly. “Besides, the people of Oceana will fall head-over-heels once they get a taste of… our secret recipe!” He hopped over to a huge safe, squeezed inside the tiny lock, and cracked it open. The safe revealed a tall, thin stairway with a single, tiny bottle seated on a table on top. “Mr. Krabs’ Secret Formula to the fabled Krabby Patty! It took over 25 years, but he’s FINALLY caved in!”

“Robots are progressively covering all shores on the European and Canadian coasts, the Americas are facing trouble due to the opposing armies.” briefed Karen, Plankton’s W.I.F.E.. “But Plankton, I still don’t think these cohorts of yours can be trusted.”

“What, you mean these guys, of course they can! We understand each other, right?” Plankton gestured putting an arm around Manray.

“As long as you’re not speaking gibberish, sure!” grinned Dirty Bubble.

Not THEM, I mean Lord Gnik and those other guys. There’s something weird about him, Plankton, I just can’t put my hard-drive on it.

“It’s Lesser Lord, Dear, and don’t worry! Evil plans with fellow multi-world evil-doers haven’t gone wrong before.”

“Yes, except-”

“DON’T MENTION Nicktoons Unite!”

“…Nicktoons: Globs of Doom.”

“Oh boy.”

Unknown base, forest area
The helicopter carefully took land inside a hatch that opened on the ground. Jessie, James, and Meowth led the handcuffed Mika into a small chamber with a large TV screen. “Ooooo wait until the boss sees that we caught her!” Jessie squealed with glee. “Our promotion is in the bag!”

“Yeah! And the Boss will make ME Top Cat again!” Meowth grinned.

“I don’t get it, Meowth, were you ever?” James asked.

“Hey, you got your special beliefs, I got mine, so let’s leave it at that!”

“What is this like a sooper exclusive tea party or something?” Mika asked.

“You’ll see once we get there.” confirmed Jessie. “We just have to call the Boss and let ‘em know we’re on our way!”

With that, Jessie typed in a code as the static on the TV began to clear. “Great news, Mr. Giovanni! We captured the psychicbender, Mika without trouble!”

A shadowed man petting his Persian, sitting on a chair with one leg over his other could be seen. “Jessie and James, is it. Captured the Logia psychicbender who was deemed the Heiress of Madness? What sort of tomfoolery is this?!”

“Er… Well, it’s no tomfoolery, Sir. She’s right here.” James brought the woman up closer.

“Um, I got a few comments about that ‘nickname’.” Mika furrowed her eyes. “First off… AWESHUUUUUUM!”

“…?! This is impossible! How could YOU blundering buffoons have captured her?”

“Well, these blundering buffoons have a few hidden talents.” Jessie winked.

“And very keen manners of persuasion.” smiled James.

“Plus those chi-cuffs you gave us sure did help!” perked Meowth.

Mika studied her cuffs, not seeing any chi symbols. She lit a small pink light in her palm a brief second. “Hmph. I’ll play along with your trick for now. And assume this is the woman that trained under my creation.”

“His creation?” said Mika quietly. “Does he mean… Mewtwo?”

“I will send a transport to carry Mika back to our hideout. You three on the other hand must stay there and man the forces in that world. And this woman had better not be some impostor, or you will be facing the rough end of the claws.” He switched off.

Chariton Household

Sunni Chariton threw many items into two backpacks, throwing one to Darcy while she slipped the other on her back. “Sunni, I still don’t know about this. If Mom let herself get caught, maybe she’s trying to do something.”

“Even if that’s true, Mom promised to train me, and I can’t wait anymore. We’re going to help her with whatever she’s doing, and I know only one other person that can train us. So let’s go.” She was marching out the door first.

Both girls climbed in their dad’s car as he drove them to the pier. They parked and rented a small yacht, ready to ship off to sea. “Where’re you kids going again?” the bearded, one-eyed captain asked.

“He’ll take us.” Rainier assured. They walked to the front of the deck, where someone was balanced on one foot on the water. “Ready to go, Lucario?”

His eyes were closed, fists touched together. “Yes. Let’s go.”

Adventures are happening all around. I bet you all are overwhelmed. Well, just look at me. Next time, we’ll have yet to get on with it. ;P Later.
Pleasure To Make Your Acquaintance

Chapter Summary

Cheren Uno heads to Roguetown to meet his "client." Meanwhile, Maddy and co. explore Blipton.

Never trust anon notes.

Chapter 6: Pleasure To Make Your Acquaintance

Cleveland Beach

When a giant warship suddenly drives up onto the shore, you wouldn’t expect the beach to be very populace after that. An hour later, it was almost completely empty, Chad, Emily, Violet, and Scarlet examining its barrenness. “Well, I sure don’t see ’em here.” Scar remarked.

“Well, then he’s probably at Timmy and Hikari’s house.” Chad said surely. “Just call ‘em and see how ‘e’s doing.”

“One problem.” Emily replied, already on the cellphone. “Timmy and Hikari apparently haven’t come home, yet. Our only other options are Kuki or Sammy’s houses.”

The four looked as Vi and Scar’s daughters, Lilac and Berry, scampered over on all fours. “We can’t find Ruppy anywhere!” Lil yelled. “But Berry found a starfish.”

“Mmmp—BLEEEH.” Berry indeed barfed a starfish with some sand.

“Ruppy didn’t get eaten by DOGGIES, did he?” Lil asked with big watery eyes.

“Don’t worry, Lilac.” Violet assured. “Rupert’s not an ant, he couldn’t just be eaten without a trace.”

“Beg to differ.” Chad eye-rolled.

“Uh!” Emily smacked his chest. “Maybe he’s in the cabin of some WOODSMAN! Doing non, woodsy stuff… that would scar a child for life!!”

“Well, how ‘bout me and Vi look around the woods and try to find him.” Scarlet offered. “Nothing can sneak up on us. And there’s plenty of grub.” She licked her lips.

“And Lilac? How ‘bout you two look around Cleveland and see if they’re here!” Violet smiled.

“We WILL, Mommy!” the brown cat pounced.

“We’ll sniff ‘em out like little tuna.” Berry smirked deviously.

“Then I’m taking the skies.” Emily said, about to walk off. “Chad, go home in case Rupert’s already there.”
“Gladly. Anything but play hide-and-seek with Ashland’s MOM Association.” the father said smugly.

“GRRRRR!” Scar touched a claw to his neck.

“We moms should’ve handled this to begin with, ‘cause Pariah knows YOU can’t be trusted!” Emily stated.

“YOU’RE PRAYING TO THE GHOST KING NOW?” all three said with slanted heads.

“YOU GET MY POINT!! The four of you just, start looking around, I’ll also call the other parents, and Chad, GET THE HELL HOME!!”

Emily turned and took a small breath to relieve the stress. Thrusting her arms to either side, the bluish-white ring of light encased her body, transforming her into a pale-skinned phantom with flaming orange hair. She took to the skies that were slowly changing from blue to orange. “…You know, she doesn’t even need that form to be scary.” Chad noted. Scarlet decided to kick him off his feet before the catgirls headed off.

Quahog; James Woods Elementary

Sector V’s C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. came in for landing beside the school’s playground as Dillon was already frantic to greet them. “Guys, you made it! I was going to call you, there’s trouble!”

“What happened?” Aurora asked. “Place looks like a war happened here.”

“Kind of. Maddy and Drake Puncture got kidnapped by aliens!”

“Huh?! What aliens?”

“I dunno, this little green thing inside a robot, had a bunch of other robots with him. They were apparently working for some ‘Dr. Nefarious’ guy.”

“Dr. Nefarious?” Harry questioned. “Sounds like a villain from some Saturday morning cartoon.”

“Wait, I remember Cheren showing me a report from Sector IC.” Aurora replied. “Some ‘Dr. Nefarious’ was trying to ruin Christmas.”

“But what would he want with Maddy or Drake?” Haruka asked.

“Wait a second, what about Zach?” Chris asked. “Where’s he, anyway?”

“Heeee…” Dillon looked around. “He was here a while ago. Huh…”

Somewhere in space

“This is Captain Yellow Shirt, checking to see if all systems are a-go.” A yellow-shirted boy asked from his captain’s seat.

“This is Green Shirt, engines are stable!”

“Lieutenant Blue Shirt reporting, lasers are ready.”

“Commander Black Shirt, over here! Our shields are up and- Wait, isn’t Commander higher up than Captain?”
“Senior Red Shirt, ready to sacrifice when unnecessary!”

“Starship Zachstar,” Yellow Shirt spoke, “get ready for LIGHT speed!”

The “Starship Zachstar” was in fact Zach Murphy converted into a human-sized spaceship, with rocket shoes. “$2.50 an hour with an extra porridge bowl, I say good truckin’.” And so, he flew for the stars.

Back at Quahog

“Anyway, we were heading to Mr. King’s house to ask what he knew about these 20 Keys.” Aurora mentioned. “Maybe we can ask Sector IC about this Nefarious, too.”

Dillon boarded the bus and took a seat next to Mason and Sheila’s. As they took off for Iceland, Dillon noticed the raccoon fast asleep on her back. “What happened to her?”

“I dunno, she just conked out. Went through a wild song stage, though.”

“Hey, wanna draw on her?” Dillon grinned evilly.

“Hehehe, yeah!”

Uno Household

Cheren’s items were packed and stuffed in the trunk of his R.O.A.D.S.T.A.R.. His rectangular box with the purple gem switch had only three items: his Three Sacred Treasures. He was eager to hop in the driver’s seat as his mom came to see him off. “You sure you wanna go to Oregon by yourself? Random notes from secret admirers are the kinda stuff you should bring back-up for.”

“That’s not what the note asked for, Ma.” He smiled coolly. “And you should know by now I can handle myself.”

“Yeah, and things went swell the last time.” She shook her head in disbelief. “But considering all the chaos…”

“Well, since you’re so worried,” he scribbled something on a small paper, “I’ll give you this.” He let it flutter to his mom as she looked at it. “I don’t call in, say, 48 hours, you can send a rescue party. A’ight?” A wink.

She smiled brightly and stuffed it down her cleavage, “Fair deal! Good luck, Soldier. And watch out for all the rogues.”

“Hehehe! Says my ma to the Hero of Time.” He hopped in his driver seat.

“Hee hee ha ha! Have a steaming cherry pie when you get hooome!” His racecar was already speeding across the country.

What would take people ages to get across on foot, it took Cheren only an hour. He loved having his own racecar. Just kicking back while the great rush of wind kept his hair behind him. All he needed was a pair of sunglasses, though the way the sun sparkled off his glasses looked pretty cool. But he put on a look of confusion when it appeared some blue-haired girl was running alongside his left. He lowered his glasses, “Uhhh… hey there?”

“Oh? Sorry!” The girl smiled sheepishly. “This isn’t your road, is it? I was just out on one of my daily runs.”
“Uhhhh… I see that.” At 100 miles per hour, clearly. “You like running, do ya?”

“Yup! It gets me places faster!”

“Heheheh! Yeah, it does! On to an important meeting.”

“Ah, that’s life for ya. Well, I won’t keep you. So long!” She shifted a different way.

“Great talkin’ to ya!”

“You too! Byyyyy!”

So Cheren faced forward with his cool smile. “Well-p, Cheren, gotch yourself another one. Gooooo goin’.”

Cheren made it within Oregon’s borders and parked a few miles from his destination. “Just so I don’t look like I’m comin’. Well, not entirely.” He hopped out, popped open the trunk, and got his box. “Three Sacred Treasures ACTIVATE!” He smacked the gem and plopped the box open, letting the Light Arrows, Mirror Shield, and Master Sword beam on his form.

His loyal assistant, Fi jumped out. “Master, the city of Roguetown is just miles in your wake. I encourage a safe journey for you, and know that I will be around when you need me.”

“Gotcha, Fi. No reason to stop now.” She flew back into the sword. He wore an eager smirk and faced the grassland before him. “Let’s go!” (Play the Rogueport Theme from Smash Bros. 4!)

Stage 8: Roguetown Road

Mission: Go to Roguetown Station!

Cheren Uno dashed across the road as enthusiastically as a 9-year-old should. More ready than ever to take on the trials ahead and stop this wretched Apocalypse. He never felt more energetic, more willing to believe that anything is possible. If he still kept all this Apocalypse business to himself, he wouldn’t feel this energetic. But now everyone knows, and all his friends can fight to stop it. He knew they could because of Sheila’s unbreakable spirit, and if she had the spirit to face inevitable doom, so would he!

A pair of trucks sped up from the road ahead and blocked his path as a gang of Goombas hopped out, charging to attack him. Cheren eye-rolled humorously. He was glad the government offered a piece of land for some Mushroom denizens to live after the Firstborn Quest, but they couldn’t let strangers come by casually. He raised his sword and sliced down any Goombas trying to rob him, the simple enemies no match for his skill. He shot down Paragoombas with his bow and bounced Spiny Goombas back with his Mirror Shield. With the creatures dealt with, he ran past the left of the trucks and followed a grassland downhill.

Some Koopa Troopas curled in their shells and spun at him, but he flipped and dodged before tossing M.A.R.B.L.E.s with his M.U.M.B.L.E.R.. A few of them recovered, but Cheren tossed his Bananarang to knock them dizzy, catching his toy and running forward. Many rocks were blocking his path, but not for long, as he would blast them all away with his M.A.R.B.L.E.s. He ended up wandering into a rocky trench, where a series of wobbly platforms led across. He wished he had his Kateenian Mask, but oh well, as he leaped across each one and let it crumble, moving too quick for it to kill him.
The last platform had nowhere else, but Cheren saw some branches overhead with vines, tossing his Bananarang to cut the vines down so he could swing across, just before the platform fell. The vines listed upward, where Cheren eventually grabbed hold of a tree branch and swung around and around. He launched upward and flew like a bird, or a hawk as he threw open his sail to glide to the ledge ahead. He landed perfectly and skipped forward with no fear on his mind, not even the beings peeking at him from behind rocks.

A band of Shy Guy Bandits came running out in the hopes of robbing him of his valuables. He tried to dodge them, but they came fairly quick, and he was shoved to the ground with several items dropped. “HEY, give those back!” They ran off with his Bananarang, Pirate Sail, and Hookshot, so he chased them furiously. The one with his Bananarang was snickering wickedly, but tripped and allowed Cheren to swipe it back, knocking him out. He looked at the one with his Hookshot and launched his boomerang to claim it and bring it back, smirking as he pulled the Bandit over with it to knock him out. He looked as the third Bandit flew overhead with his sail, but could simply pull him down with the Hookshot and hurl the Bandit down the hill before reclaiming his sail.

With that, he continued his carefree run to the town as it inched bigger and bigger the closer he got. He spotted two shops that were just across from each other, a Bob Evans and small pawnshop. “Eh, got time to grab a bite.” He rushed into the restaurant. “One triple large pancake with some fries please.”

30 minutes later

“Ahhhhh that was sanctuary.” Cheren was out of there with a wobbly belly. “That should hold me. Now I wonder if they got anything there.” He went over to the pawnshop. “Yo Slim, got anything…” He could swear he recognized this gentleman, “Nickel Joe?”

The only thing that made him look different were his missing teeth and mostly bandaged face. There was also a deflated balloon in there that looked like Fat Jack. “Why, who is this Nickel Joe you speak of? I’m ol’ Trader Slim! Want some goods, Mac?”

“Ummm… ooo, is that a Hookshot?”

“The one and only.” He held it up.

“Uh hh, not quite.”

“Whatever, so how much ya payin’? Got 30 Rupees?”

“Have 30 cents.”

“Deal.” So, the exchange was made.

Cheren got a second Hookshot! With this, he can launch from target to target, and go almost anywhere there’s wood! Now you’ll feel like a true Batman ripoff, though Nolan’s pretty much got that!

“See ya later, Slick. And say ‘hi’ to Nini for me.”

“Who?”

“Never mind.”

So Cheren continued on his valiant journey. Three more trucks blocked his road, and some Craws came running out to jab him with spears. Cheren clashed his blade with theirs and sliced the spearheads off, then shot his Hookshots to either side and pulled two Craws against each other. He swung his feet at another until he was down, then threw his boomerang against two others before flipping overhead and slicing them down. He followed a road around the right of the trucks, and when Bristles spun out to slice him, the enemies were too easy to bomb with his M.A.R.B.L.E.s.

The path brought him to another trench area with a rushing river below, but sets of Hookshot targets spread across the parallel walls. He launched back-and-forth, back-and-forth between both walls and flew across the river, until the last target’s wall gave way and fell in. He held his breath beneath the water, eyes widening when a swarm of Rip Van Fish were on his tail. He swam frantically into the underwater cave, doing Torpedo Spins to burst through wood barrings in his way. He shot out of a surface inside an underground cave, ripples reflecting off the ceiling, having to shoot stalactites down with his arrows to stick on small islands and let him jump to a far, high ledge.

He made it to a large whirlpool pool that threatened to sink all that fell in to the depths. An unreachable ledge was across the other side, and that platform had a small wall on its center. Cheren switched on his Remote Bananarang and had it fly around said wall, finding a Crystal Switch which he struck. A bunch of huge cans emerged from the pool, flowing around the center as it spun, so Cheren hopped on to ride across. He noticed an Eye Switch on the ledge where he just stood and shot with an arrow, making a ladder drop down along the front of that parallel ledge. He climbed up, hopped over the switch, and proceeded through a hall that led to a perfect round sewer tunnel.

Cheren found a discarded Koopa shell and rode it like a sled around and around the walls and ceiling, even skiing over the filthy sewer water. The whirling ride came to an end when Cheren dropped down a short shaft with a huge plug covering a drain. Around this shaft were several tunnels that water poured from, and Sun Switches below them. Cheren was standing in a bright sun beam coming from above, so using his Mirror Shield, he shone on all the switches and sealed the tunnels. With each tunnel he closed, the plug he stood on shook more. When that final tunnel—the one he came from, closed, it was ready to burst.

A gush of water sent Cheren out of the sewers, miles into the sky. “YEEEEAAAAAAAAH!” He threw open his Pirate Sail, and simply floated the rest of the way to Roguetown. A town of multi-racial thugs, but it seemed fairly pretty from this high up. The sun was shining bright on this town, shining high on him. No doubt, the sky was truly the limit.

“I’M KING OF THE WOOOOORRRRRLD!” His voice was heard for miles across the town. “DARE ANYONE TO TELL ME OTHERWISE!”

“Haha!” Cheren never felt more happy. For the first time in his life, he felt like he could do anything. He felt like the wind was at his back, and would always see his sail of freedom would blow forever. Not that he wanted it to; he had to land. For the first time in his life… he truly felt like a kid. (Play Rogueport Theme from Thousand-Year Door.)

Cheren gently took land on the red roof of a 2-story building. “Ahh, that was a good breath.” He jumped and landed on the ground. He gazed at the back of a tall, bronze statue set in the middle of the plaza. Cheren saluted, “You were born in one heck of a place, Mr. York.”

He explored town a little bit and found a sign that directed to the Train Station, just north of the West Side of town. He approached the station to find a few people boarding the train, and overheard some passerby. “You know, I heard a very important train was passing our town.” a lady said.
“Really, what kind?” a man asked.

“A very private one ridden by the richest people in the world. I hear it’s taking them to an unspeakably private party.”

“You don’t say. Well, why party with the simple commoners when they can go there?”

Cheren raised a brow. No doubt these were connected. Well, he had 3 hours to kill, may as well find someplace. He looked around and saw a door with a bed logo posted over it, and assumed this to be the Inn. He walked in and passed a small bar with some suspicious characters; well, just a bunch of thugs really, the only real suspicious guys were those four in the hoods on the other side.
As Cheren marched up the stairs, he didn’t know one of those hoods was eying him curiously.

The Inn had two beds, and a leak in the ceiling where water drops poured endlessly in a bucket. He spoke to the Mushroom Toad woman and asked, “Um, how much for a bed here?”

“Just 5 Coins.”

“Um, is that 5 cents, or literally 5 coins?”

“I don’t know… I’m still trying to get used to the currency of this world.”

“Eh, $5, for your trouble.” He paid her kindly.

“Okay! Enjoy your stay and make yourself comfortable.”

Make himself comfortable. Yeah, he could do that. He approached his bed casually and took a calm breath. He slipped off his shoes as he sat on his bed and pulled his socks off, throwing them and his jacket on the floor. “Ahhhhhh!” He lied flat and stretched his toes to give them air. “This is luxury! Hey, wake me up at 7:50, gotta be somewhere.” He set his items along the wall and put his glasses on the nightstand.

“If you say so!” she beamed.

So with that, Cheren pulled open the covers and got underneath. He rolled into a comfortable position and drifted to peaceful sleep.

Peoples α (Play “Gemlik Base” from Ratchet & Clank.)

The Aphelion passed the atmosphere of a dark, brownish-orange planet, taking land outside of dark, dirty city where rap music boomed across the air. When the crew stepped out, the smell of burning trash already reached their noses. They viewed right to see a bunch of aliens dressed in street clothes cheering at two hovercars racing along a track. The cars shoved each other forcefully before the left car was flown off the tracks, blowing to smithereens. The tons of gangsters cheered, throwing money aimlessly.

Maddy was a little creeped out. This wasn’t her preferred retreat. “Might wanna put this on.”
Qwark stamped green cloaks over Maddy and Drake. “Humans are considered quite a delicacy ‘round these parts.”

Maddy gulped, joining Ratchet and co. as they approached an alley. “So your planet is completely run by children who protect it from the adults and you have a bunch of giant trees growing around the place?” Ratchet recapped.

“Well, sort of… ‘course, lately it’s been about fighting trans-dimensional deities who wanna destroy everything.” Maddy replied. “The average ‘adults’ don’t really pose a threat anymore.”

“Coming from the girl who got picked on by teenagers.” Drake remarked.

“I’m just saying.” She glared. “But there’s a bunch of us around the planets, so we could probably signal the galactic branch.”

“Right! Leave it to me!” Qwark perked. “Finding a galactic transmission radio in a dump like this is like finding hay in a needlestack! And probably just as painful.” He frowned. “BUT: Captain Qwark’s afraid of no man, woman, or teen!” Then grinned. “Just rest easy here, because I know these kids’ language like the back of my hand!” And so, he marched off to the crowd. “Ahem: Yo-yo-yo, homebuds! Y’all-y’aaaall, how dem RAP tunes goin’? Yo Yo Ma, Kenny West! Dat dere Snoop Dog, I tell ya what!”

Ratchet whispered to Maddy, “Word of advice, he hasn’t seen his hand in 5 years. Jumpsuit’s stuck. We better look ourselves.”

“Alright, let’s do it quick. Teenagers are gross, and these guys’re no different. …”

As Drake accompanied them, his eyes peered curiously at Maddy over his sunglasses.

Stage 9: Blipton District

Mission: Find a way to contact the KND.

Act 1

The trio began their trek through a trash-filled alley to reach a street guarded by Spinneruffs, alien gangsters walking vicious alien dogs. They furiously whirled and swung their dogs around, flinging any of their gunshots away. But Drake was able to latch his grappler on one of the dogs, holding it in place, so while the owner kept spinning, he ended up getting tied in the leash. He did the same with the other 2 Spinneruffs before they searched around. Other roads were blocked by fences, with the only open path being a narrow alley with a chasm, and three broken metal pipes sticking from the walls. They grabbed the three tied Spinneruffs and tossed them to stick onto those pipes’ ends, then were able to bounce across. “Why couldn’t we just jump on the pipes?” Maddy asked.

“They woulda broke. This way, they don’t. Game physics.”

“Ahh.”

Once across the chasm, they turned right to another alley that was very long an empty, with polluted puddles and small critters roaming around. But across the other side, a Turret Ted poked out of a can, blasting a row of water torpedoes across the alley. It was a matter of careful jumping across the torpedoes and making their way to the otherwise-defenseless enemy, where Drake leaped and stomped his can with his boot. But before continuing, Ratchet noticed another alley on the side of this one, nothing but a chasm, except for the platform on the other side, just over the chasm, with a Gold Bolt. The opposite ledge had a fence to prevent them from reaching it from that side. Ratchet glided to this platform using Clank and claimed the bolt, then carefully Wall Jumped back to his friends.

The team found a fire escape to the left of the Turret’s post and climbed up to the rooftops. There wasn’t much to explore except for some boxes containing ammo refills (including discarded juice cartons or gumballs for Maddy’s weapons), and it seemed like most areas beyond these buildings were death chasms. Were these aliens really into those? They could follow a series of floating platforms with propeller bottoms over a sea of cheering gangsters with a rapid racetrack in the middle. A row of Swingshot Targets hovered over part of the sea, so Maddy held Drake while he swung them with his harpoon, and Ratchet his Swingshot, to safely land on a new platform.

This one floated upward so they could land on a higher one, and from there jumped more platforms that floated up when they stepped, and once they were high enough, they turned and threatened to dump them into the crowds. But a Gold Bolt floated a few meters over one of them, so they waited for that platform to lift them to and grab it. “What’re these bolts for again?” Maddy asked.

“To buy alternate skins. They really aren’t plot-relevant.”

“Oh.”

They eventually Swungshot to a target over a wide circular platform, where two Slammer-Hammers popped out of boxes and ran to whack them with hammers. Of course, Maddy and Ratchet took them out easily with their guns, but a Mini-Merv, a thug in a floating metal can with a laser turret, guarded the stairway on the other side. When they got too close, it threatened to shoot its laser, and it shot anyway when their projectiles came. But Drake was able to shoot his harpoon and latch the laser turret, forcefully tugging until he yanked the bottom off and made the thug fall out.

After taking him out, they stepped down a series of square-shaped, grated stairs that zigzagged a little bit, but safely brought ‘em down to the audience crowds. They stood ground when some racecars whooshed by along the track, making wind, and proceeded down a path to their right. They hopped a small staircase and followed a path where Fogger thugs ambushed them, burping toxic gas that made them dizzy. The thugs were easy to knock out as they made it to where the racetrack seemed to begin, and therefore where it ended, as crowds were eagerly raising money at a booth. However, across from that start were stairs to a platform with a strange, stone cube with foreign writing. A thug was announcing, “Step right up, TRY your luck at the unreadable block! Come one science nerds, come all and try to read the incomprehensible language! Stumped many for eons, stump many for eons more, unless ANYONE can read the unreadable block!”

Not entirely interested, the team roamed around the starting area for any thug that looked like they could sell them a transmission radio. “’kay, folks, this race is coming to an end, our next prize will be a prime galactic transmission radiooo!” There it was. “For all you sly pooches who wanna prank-call galaxies a billion light-years away!”

Maddy rushed up to the booth, “How much to race here?”

“Sorry Kid, this ain’t no go-kart ride.”

“I’ll pay 500 Bolts.” Ratchet slipped him the cash.

“YOU’RE IN, Slick! You get the Dark Devil!” He tossed Maddy a black helmet and key.

As they walked to the parking lot, “So, Mad, uh, whatcha doing?” asked Ratchet.

“Relax, driving a racecar can’t be any different than a S.P.R.A.Y.S.H.I.P..”

“While I don’t know what that is, I think you should let me-”

“Sorry, Bud.” A buff, green alien guard stopped Ratchet from following. “Only the twerp’s en’ering.”
“Wish me luck.” Maddy slipped the helmet on and found the black car with dim blue stripes. She hopped in, started it up, and drove out to the track.

“Wow. Never took Maddy for this kinda stuff.” Drake mentioned. “Wonder what the preferred bout is?”

Ratchet and Clank only exchanged worried sighs.

Sub-game: Blipton Raceway

All cars were on the track, the racers raring to stomp their gas pedal. THREE. TWO. ONE. GOOO! (Play “Hoverbike Race” from Ratchet: Going Commando.)

“AAAAAND THEY’RE OFF!” The cars sped at near equal speed. “Turbo Theo TAKES the lead, and the others are fighting for second place!”

Maddy was forcefully bumping a red car with a fat alien, who hit a fence as she stayed steady for a few yards. She was behind a blue car, coming to a row of rainbow ? Blocks, and when she hit one of the blocks, a roulette in her car spun to stop on a certain item. It landed on banana peel, so she pushed the button to drop a peel on the track so a car behind could spin out of control. She faced forward and drove up a narrow slope on her right, having to keep across a thin road above the track as she spotted the blue car below. She ran over some Boost Panels and sped faster, eventually going off the road and passing the blue car.

She rammed a row of ? Blocks and landed on wings, conveniently using these to glide over a field of flames along the track. She glanced at the blue car behind her, watching as it was blown away by a force behind. “HERE come the BABYLON Rogues! The Track Trekkin’ Trio of the racetrack!” Gliding on hoverboards were a green Mobian hawk, Jet, pink Mobian swallow, Wave, and gray albatross, Storm.

“Too cool for cars?” inquired Mad.

Jet hit a ? Block, seeing the tiny terminal by his foot land on Red Turtle Shells. He stepped on it as three Koopa Shells surrounded him, and Maddy was worried when her car began to lower to the track. Her wings vanished, Jet blasted a shell to fling Maddy into the air, letting the three pass. The track was about to go underwater, but Maddy couldn’t take the alternate right path as some racers shoved her to the water. A propeller replaced the engine that allowed Maddy to drive, but being under the liquid already made her seasick.

“Oh, no.” Ratchet frowned. “She’s boned.”

“Kart Number THREE seems to have lost CONTROL. Did those last attacks knock her BRAINS out?”

“HANG IN THERE, Mad!”

Maddy tried to keep herself steady and navigate around this river, nabbing a ? Block that gave her a Spring Pad. “WHOOOOAAA!” The item flung her upward, landing her on the narrow path above the water so she could make it to the river’s end. She zipped by the starting line as the first lap was complete. “Sigh, okay, gotta just stay calm and take out those birdbrains. After all, if you can achieve two accomplishments with one action…” She hit a ? Block and let it roll on Blooper, “you can kill three birds with one squid.”

She pushed the button, sending the Blooper flying to all racers. It got in the Babylons’ faces and squirt ink in their eyes. “Hey! I can’t see! Bwaaaark!” screamed Jet.

“We just COULDN’T use cars, huh Jet.” remarked Wave.

“This ain’t Sonic Drift!”

Maddy passed the trio and spared them a smirk and salute. The blue car was ahead of her again, but one of the back racers acquired a Bullet Bill and transformed into the speeding missile, easily blowing down the Rogues, Maddy, and reverting to normal behind the blue car. By the time she regained herself, the Rogues and several more racers passed, so she tried to catch up desperately. A racer ahead of her acquired a Piranha Plant item, which began to munch the back engines of further cars. Maddy spotted a secret path behind some buildings and quickly shifted that way. It was a little narrow with some oil puddles that made it slippery, but she found a question mark block that gave her a Blue Turtle Shell. She let it fly forward, making its funny noise and pink path, to seek the first-place driver.

Having bought time for herself, the path eventually brought her back to the other racers, and were nearing the river again. Maddy gulped, wishing that path led her around it, and around the Babylon Rogues in front of her. “Haha! Face it!” Jet laughed. “We all got three Mushrooms! You’ll NEVER pass us!”

But Maddy hit a question mark block and it landed on lightning. Curious, she pushed the button, and all racers were immediately shrunk to toy-size. “HEY! WHAT ‘appened??” squeaked Jet.

Maddy smirked, “OUT of the way, birdbrains.” And boosted forward with the Rogues bumping over her windshield. She took the narrow path above the river with no trouble, staying on it with careful precision to avoid the liquid. The racers re-expanded to normal, and Maddy saw the blue car was ahead of her again, having grown big just after passing a question mark block which Maddy grabbed. Once they were past the river and on normal road, the driver of that car, Captain Falcon, climbed on top and faced Maddy with spiteful eyes. She gulped as the man readied to jump with his signature move. “FALCO PUUUNCH!”

Maddy pressed the Boo Sheet she collected and turned intangible. “Yuh-oh. UAAAAAH!” Falcon punched nothing and fell onto the track, soon gone miles behind them as Maddy passed the starting line.

“THE THIRD LAP IS HEEERE! And Turbo Theo’s still taking the leeeeeead!”

Maddy looked at the screen, which read her in 2nd place. “WHAT?” She peeked over her hood and saw a thin blue line being created by some tiny force. She looked around her window, and this mysterious winner was a tiny orange snail with a super-powered shell. “You’re KIDDING me!”

She was more desperate than ever to pass this super snail, but he stayed directly in front of her, and she on its blue path. She took the upper route over the track again and stayed on to catch the Speed Boosts, hoping it would give her a winning chance. By the time she came down, the snail was right behind her, and she grabbed a block that contained three bananas. She dropped them behind, the snail easily avoiding, and one of the back racers grabbed a Bob-omb. It sent it ahead, exploding on Maddy while Turbo swerved around, and she was in 6th place before she knew it. The farthest back racer grabbed a block that landed on Gold Shroom, so he sped forward with haste, rammed Maddy, and caused the 7th place racer to pass too, putting her in 8th. “Oh, no.”

She kept along casually, fearing she lost any chance of winning. She followed the secret path that went around the flame field, just letting the oil pools make her slippery as she grabbed a question mark block. It landed on Lucky #8, which she pressed to see what’d come up. Eight different items surrounded her car, so she would carefully use each one. First, the Bob-omb flew forward and wiped out the two racers ahead. 6th place. She blasted a Green Shell to hit the pink racecar. 5th place. A Red Shell to take out Storm the Albatross. 4th place. A banana straight at Wave the Swallow’s face, making her ram a streetpole. 3rd place. And a Blooper to blind Jet’s face. 2nd.

She used a Mushroom to boost in a desperate, last ditch attempt to pass Turbo, following him across the narrow road over the river. She finally used the Power Star, her car sparkling with rainbow colors as she was invincible. Turbo looked back, hurrying faster and faster as the rainbow car was inching ever so closer. And just when the river was reaching its end, Squuuish. The snail was flat.

With that, there was nothing to stop Maddy from reaching the finish line. However, she noticed Captain Falcon on the track, ready to leap at her with another flaming punch. With a smirk, she used the last item, Boomerang, and flung the old racer off the track. “UACK!” Maddy’s car zipped beyond the line as the audience roared. “AND RACER #3 IS THE WINNEEEERR! If you would like to make refunds, take it up with our Human Resources!”

“A huge, buff alien peeked out a dark door, frowning angrily as he punched his palm. “Gulp! Never mind!” Drake gulped. The frumpy alien slid back inside. (End song.)

Maddy parked, hopped out her car, and pulled her helmet off to whoosh her hair behind her. “You DID IT, Maddy!” Ratchet cheered.

“And HEEEERE is your RADOOO!” An alien made of black and white vertical stripes tossed her the small device with antennas.

The gang took retreat within a small alley as Clank pulled out a small TV device. “I will begin connecting this with our transmitter so we may locate Milky Way’s coordinates. This will only be a minute.”

Maddy casually walked around bored, approaching Drake who was leaned against a building. “You know, Mads, I have to say, you surprise me.”

“Whatchu mean?”

“You’ve been associating with aliens for about 2 hours, and also a one-handed freak, and I don’t think I’ve heard one remark.” He grinned slyly.

“Oh… well, you know, there’s already jillions of aliens, and tons of people have missing arms…”

“That’s not what I’m getting at.” He lowered his sunglasses, peering over them. “You’ve been going to my school since kindergarten and every time you see me, you’d either insult or just point and laugh. When we went up to GKND for that war, you couldn’t go five minutes without throwing up. So tell me: why the sudden change in attitude?”

“Hmmmm… well…”

The truth is, what instigated it was her voyage to Punk Hazard. She still remembered all the ordinary human kids befriending little Minish and Kateenians, riding the giant kids, swimming with the merfolk, and flying with gargoyles and Nimbi. And Maddy herself was riding atop Mocha’s big, bushy head. Playing together like there were no differences at all, just a bunch of snot-nosed kids.

Last week, when Maddy was walking about the Moonbase, she suddenly ran into Mocha. “Oh?
Hey, Mocha. What’re you doing up here?”
“Hi, Maddy! I was asking Francis if the training room had any giant-size equipment I could borrow. Obviously not, right, heh heh heh ha.” She scratched her head.

“Well, we have psychicbenders as crime-detectors. Maybe some of them could biggify them.”

“Yeah. …Hey, let’s have a practice fight!” she said excitedly.

“What?”

“Francis said you were pretty tough against big guys. I wanna see how tough you are!” She smirked and balled her fists.

“…You’re on!”

The two were later in the training room with fighting stances. Mocha stomped forward and threw her fist at Maddy, but the Murphy jumped and kicked at Maddy’s left eye. She covered her eye and charged to her smaller opponent, furiously stomping around as Maddy dodged her feet, but Mocha surprised and pinned Maddy under her hand. Mocha smirked, seeing Maddy struggling, but with all her strength, Maddy pushed the hand up and slid out, rolling back on her feet. Mocha threw a punch at Maddy, who jumped off the fist to Mocha’s right eye to briefly tug her eyelash before kicking off. The rest of the fight lasted for 10 minutes.

“Huff, huff, let’s call it a draw.” Mocha panted, smiling.

“You say so.” Maddy complied. “…You know, Mocha, I’m having a sleepover tonight. No one else wants to come, so if you and your friends aren’t busy…”

“Well, sure! I’ll ask them!”

Things went pretty crazy that night. That night, Maddy had six other kids in the living room: a loudmouth girl, a doll-size girl, a barefoot angel, a Christian in a mustard dress, a 12-year-old with some paint, and a freaking giant. Oh, and some rabbit that thinks he’s a cat.

Chimney spun the bottle, and it stopped on Aeincha. “Okay Aeinchan, truth or dare?”

“DARE!” She was so tiny, but so daring.

“Okay. I dare you to… SMELL Aisa’s feet!!”

“Okay!” Aeincha walked over and took a whiff with her teeny nose. “Not bad!”

“What? YOU LIE!”

“Smell for yourself.” ;)

Chimney crawled over and, “Sniff sniff. UUUUUUHHHH!” Her nose shriveled, putting a grin on Aisa’s face.

“My turn!” Aeincha walked over to spin the huge bottle. “Mmmmm!” It was kinda hard.

“Heheh, let me help.” Mocha smiled, clutching the bottle in her thumb and index. It was hard to turn from her size, so she ended up crushing. “Oops…”

“Okay, AUTOMATIC YOU.” Chimney said. “Go into the kitchen and get another. Oh, and get some snacks.”
Mocha carefully stood up, bent down a little, and limped to the kitchen. She crawled and very slowly tried to squeeze her bulbous head into the archway, but when she just couldn’t, she reached an arm inside to pull the fridge open. She couldn’t reach, so she inched ever so closer, and when her bulbous fingers gripped the handle, she ended up pulling the whole thing over. “Whoops.”

“NOOOOOO!” cried Zach as he ran and knelt by it. “I was gonna eat the last cupcake and it’s RUIIIIIINNNED! Thanks a LOT, Bighead. Bad enough Maddy has that dumb dog, why’d she have to let an ELEPHANT in?” He stomped off.

“Hmmmm.” Saddened, Mocha backed up and tried to stand- “WHOOOA!” tripping on her feet, she fell back and crushed a shelf of fine china.

“AAAAAAAAHHH!” Gwen screamed. “MY COLLECTABLES!”

“Ohhhh great, NOW we’re gonna get a bill.” moaned Chimney.

“GYOM, gyom.” eye-rolled Gonbe.

Sniffling, Mocha carefully stepped around her friends and left out the giant hole where the front door used to be. Maddy followed her outside as she seated herself cross-legged on the front yard.

“I’m sorry, Maddy. I’ve never been to anyone else’s house before. I knew I should’ve eaten a shrink apple.”

“Yeah, maybe. But… I like you better this way.”

“You do? Why?”

“I dunno. I’m used to seeing you this way. It’d just look weird if you were me-sized.”

“But I’m ruining your house. I’m just stepping on everything like a realistic dollhouse. Why would you still want me in there?”

“Because otherwise I’d have a bunch of lunatics in my house and you’re big enough to balance them out.”

She smiled weakly. “Well… if you really want me.” She crouched and stepped back through the hole, taking her seat in the circle again.

“Okay, the fridge is a miss, but Zach brought a couple friends over to make you guys some cookies.” Gwen mentioned. “Zach?”

The twin brother twiddled a flute, summoning a team of short orange guys with green hair.

Maddy sure had a lot of fun with that. Still, to think so many kids from so many different worlds or races could play together in one place. Look at each other like equals, big or small. And a bunch of kids like that worked for the Kids Next Door, like Mocha and her friends. …It made Maddy think differently.

Ratchet’s transmitter beeped, “Hey I think we’re getting something.”

The transmission buzzed. “This is Starship Zachstar, repeat Starship Zachstar.”
“Zachstar? ..!” Maddy gasped, “That was one of my brother’s personas!”

“Hello? Who is this?”

She rushed to the com., “Zach, it’s me, Maddy! Are you there?”

The static on her wristwatch screen faded, revealing an adult Zach with a Dragon Ball Z-like design. “HE’S A FREAKING ANIMEEE!”

“Hello? Are you Maddy’s brother?” Ratchet asked.

“Yes. I am Maddy’s brother, Prince Hiroshi. 20 years ago, she was abducted by space bandidos. I mourned her loss, but I am overjoyed, that you found her again.”

“NOT TRUE, THAT’S NOT TRUE, HE’S MY TWIN BROTHER AND WE GO TO 4TH GRADE TOGETHER, HE’S MAKING CRUD UP!” Maddy screamed.

“Ahhhh yes. You always were, very unimaginative.”

“STOP TALKING LIKE THAT AND COME PICK ME UP!”

“Keep it down, Maddy. I don’t think we’re supposed to be in this alley.” Ratchet cautioned.

“Look, Zach, do you have my coordinates? I’m on Peoples $\alpha$. Just, get the GKND or something and track me down.”

“Never you fear, Maddy! For I am getting Voltron!”

The screen revealed a swarm of colored ships flying from there garages. Strums of epic music played as a green part slowly inserted into a pink part. That same tune played when a red part, very slowly, entered a blue part. The same tune, when a yellow part entered an orange part. A gray part, in a very stylish fashion, connected with a brown part. And for about 5 minutes, it was part entering part after part. But it finally concluded when Voltron’s glorious head latched on the top, his face opening.

His whole body was revealed to be a complete mess, a bunch of little ships haphazardly slanted and squished together, bound to fall apart any minute. “Um… I may need a minute. Okay guys, take it back to Step 52.” The screen switched off.

“He’s coming at the Speed of Justice.” Maddy noted.

“Well, we have his coordinates marked, we can always fly to wherever he is.” Ratchet confirmed. “Let’s go look for Qwark. Hey QWARK, where are you?” He searched around.

“Uhhhh hey, Ratchet!” Qwark came out from an alley, grinning nervously and trying to hide. “Listen, funny story, these gangsters kind of challenged me to some street-poker and, one thing led to another, not only is my jumpsuit in new hands, liiii lost the ship.”

“What?!?”

They rushed their way through town to where Aphelion was parked… or, used to be. “QWARK, who took the ship?!?”

“Just some guys, I dunno! Relax, they’ll bring it back, they said we coool, we coooool!” Though when he tried to pose cool, the fact he was in underwear, gloves, boots, and a mask made him look… ehh, less than qualified.
“HOW are we going to get off this rock?! Even if we had time to sit and wait for Maddy’s brother, Nefarious is still looking for us. Before you know it, they’ll be posting wanted posters and all these thugs will be on us, we need someplace to hide.”

“How ‘bout this?” Clank held up a poster.

Ratchet and took and skimmed. It had a picture of a slim robot woman in red metal clothing, and brown metal hair. “Courtney Gears concert, Orbital Auditorium? Since when’ve you been into her?”

“Since she became too sexy for her chest compartment. Mm hm he he he.”

“Courtney Gears… ain’t that the fat lady in the wheelchair?” Drake asked.

“You’re thinking of someone else.” Mad said.

“Oh, that reminds me! I managed to win four tickets for the transport ride there in that poker!” Qwark raised the tickets.

“And you lost the ship afterward?” Ratchet asked.

“No, it’s… other way.”

Disbelieved stares. “Well, that still isn’t enough tickets for one of us.”

“I will disguise as your backpack and sneak onto the roof once there, to keep signaling for Maddy’s brother.” Clank offered.

“Then can we also count on you to find snacks for us?”

“I am reserving my multi-purpose functions for important uses.”

“Well-p, it’s settled, let’s go watch some mecha-slut strip-dance onstage.” Drake remarked as he walked off first.

“Let’s also get Qwark some clothes at the souvenir stand.” remarked Maddy as they joined.

Somewhere in space

“HOO! Glad we got THAT outta the way!” Zach cheered as Voltron was finally fixed. “The Speed of Justice waits for no man! Hold on, Maddy! I’m going infinity… AND BEYOND!!” (Play “Insane in the Membrane” by Cypress Hill.)

Act 2: Flight Zachstar

The Zachstar began flying at speeds incomprehensible to the human senses, swaying up and down to the music on his stereos, which were his fuel source. The stars seemed to pass him like tiny dust particles, and the planets simple islands he was gliding past on his speedboat. Impeding his progress were none other than Galaxians, the classic pixel aliens from the arcade game shooting tiny lasers. Zachstar swiftly rolled and dodged the lasers before shooting his own, whirling and dancing in many fancy poses as if at a disco party, jabbing his fingers like guns as they fired the bullets, Zachstar shaking his hips as he blew down a round of Galaxians.

He was flying to a meteor field at great speed, dodging left and right to avoid slowing his progress, however very little progress he would lose. A new round of Galaxians appeared, this time in very small pairs that appeared onscreen a brief moment, shot a laser, and zipped off, making it difficult for Zach to shoot them when more came. They were appearing almost every direction, Zach hurriedly dodging their shots, but parts of his armor were scorched, and soon it felt like he were in a sea of pixelly aliens. But then he rammed through a power-up box that allowed him to unleash a mighty shockwave, obliterating all Galaxians in sight.

Space was clear for a few hundred light-years before Zachstar came to another asteroid field, maneuvering left, right, up, down, backways, frontways, anyway you can possibly imagine to avoid asteroids, even passing Diagon Alley. Once past the field, more Galaxians started zipping onscreen and hitting each other, bunching into larger forms that took more hits to destroy. Zachstar continued to dance and groove as he showed ‘em his moves, shooting all aliens down no matter how long it took.

But finally he encountered a Galaxian far bigger than the others, made of red and green pixels as it aimed its many pixelly cannons. Zachstar shot forward to throw a storm of punches, but the Galaxian blocked with its own arms and pelted Zach with bullets, finally sending him down with a stronger punch. Zach collided forcefully with the ground, but bounced back to his feet and glared at the alien. In this misty, orange alley he had landed, disco lights zoomed all around the ground as Zachstar swiftly maneuvered his legs and arms, making all sorts of fluent dance moves while his head and body remained almost still. The Galaxian blasted endless lasers as Zach jumped miles over the surface, then launched at the alien with powerful rocket boots.

The screen freeze-framed when his fist made contact with the alien, taking the design of a comic book.

The Galaxian countered with his own punch, the image of Katniss Everdeen kicking Harry Potter.

Zachstar performed a mighty spin-kick, the image of Sonic 2006 besting Sonic Lost World.

Galaxian squished Zachstar under a Ground Pound, the image of Makorra smashing Korrasami.

Zachstar struck its chest with a drill attack, the image of One Piece Wiki smashing Avatar Wiki.

And Zachstar scored one more blow by smashing the alien cold on the ground, the image of Gamewizard, sitting atop a throne that was crushing an annoyed Tom Warburton, IGN people, George Lucas, Nickelodeon people, and that god-awful Wizard movie about a boy who’s good at videogames and is going to California to bring a lunchbox to his dead sister, which has no relevance to the plot. (Seth MacFarlane also sat with me on the throne.)

Zachstar performed a few quick victory poses before taking to the stars. He would be on his way in a few milliseconds. (End song.)

“…Uhhhhhh.” Zach seemed to have landed on a hillbilly planet as a cowboy gofer approached him.

“Well howdy, pardner! You lookin’ for some grain?”

“I’m, uh, looking for Infinity and Beyond. Seen it anywhere?”

“Oh, you wanna go 10 trillion light-years thataway.” He pointed in the very direction Zach came from.

“Ahhhhh, crud.” A Southern, jail harmonica tune rang in the air.

New Island
The yacht sailed treacherous seas of furious winds, angry storms, and a random Gyarados that ambushed and tried to blow them to smithereens. But things turned for the better when the seas became gentle, in the very eye of this storm. The quiet castle of three windmill towers, dark and worn-down. Lucario waited at the pier while Sunni and Darcy stepped off, marching up the wide stairway to the balcony. With their combined psychic, the huge front gates came open, then it was another walk across the wide, empty dining room, up the high, spiraling road to the tallest tower.

“Hello? …Is anyone up here?” called Sunni nervously.

The room was very dark and empty, the only light coming from the wide windows with a view of the bright blue sky. A shadowed figure sat in the throne across from them, facing toward the sky. “Do you need to ask?”

They gasped. “It’s you, isn’t it! Mewtwo?” Sunni spoke, walking in.

“I thought I had sensed a body strong with The Force. With familiar chi, no less. That which belongs to Mikaela Corella… is it not?”

“Yes!” Sunni spoke excitedly. “I’m Mika’s daughter, Sunni! Oh, and that’s Darcy, my sister.” The latter spared a slight glare. “Listen, my mom’s been captured, and we need you to help-”

“Mika has taken my place in the Order of the White Lotus after besting me. What befalls her is no longer any concern for me.”

“But you HAVE to help us! At least help us train! I need to get better at psychic so I can rescue her!”

“Is that so? You know that psychic-”

“Yeah yeah, psychic’s a dangerous element that makes people go crazy and choke people, Darth Vader-style, blah blah blah, but I don’t care! I need to become more powerful like my mom, she was supposed to help me!”

“Really? Well, if your mom is as powerful as you make her to be… and she is… why in the world do you believe she was captured so easily?”

“I dunno, I… Maybe she’s trying to do something! If that’s true, I wanna help her, you gotta train me so I can get more strong!”

“And what is it you think she is trying to do?”

“I…I…”

“So you got yourself a rival, huh!” Mika grinned. “Okay, Sunni, I’ll help you train.”

“Oh, hey Sunni!” Mika called over the loud propellers, still with a grin. “Tell your dad I’ve been taken captive, so I won’t make it to dinner! See you later, Honeeeeyy!”

“…” It was all so obvious, “So that’s it, isn’t it. Mom’s training me to be more independent. To stop relying on her.”

“Mmmm…”

“…” Sunni shook her head, “So what, I still can’t get any better at psychic by myself! I NEEDED my mom to train me, but you’re the next best thing, you taught her everything she knows!”
“I’ve always had the right mind about each of my students. I sensed Mika becoming a terrific psychicbender, and she has. Another student met similar expectations… but you, I sense incredible chaos surrounding your psyche. Your overdependence on your mom will cause your psychic to destable. Your imagination is limited…”

“I’m trying to, but it’s been so hard, what with everything on your mind…”

“Then perhaps you need to empty your mind. I am retired from training… and am frankly in not one of the best conditions. Use your imagination… and find other ways to train.”

“But where’m I- …Siiigh, fine.” Sunni knew it was pointless. “I guess I’m on my own, then.” She turned to leave. “Come on, Darcy.”

“Hang on.” They stopped. “Your sister, on the other hand… we thought of other solutions for her. It is time you two… go separate ways.”

“W…Whaddyou mean? Who’s ‘we’?”

Outside, Lucario was already waiting for them below the stairs, his face stern and serious. “I will be taking Darcy with me now.”

“To where?? Will someone please EXPLAIN?”

Ignoring Sunni’s query, Lucario walked up and placed his fists on Darcy’s head and chest. “It’s time to ascend.” His eyes closed as they brimmed, and Darcy felt her body lighten when both fists glowed. Sunni gaped when they shot to the heavens as a beam of light.

“W-… Darcy… COME BAAAAAAAACK!”

Rainier walked up with a very curious, though not very concerned, face. “Well, the captain’s got a new story to tell. So what’s with Darcy becoming an aurora… light?”

Deep down, a panicky storm was brewing inside of Sunni.

Nashville, Tennessee; park

Monkeys down the street, monkeys at the park, everywhere you’d look would be monkeys, monkeys, and more monkeys causing a ruckus. And who could keep the little varmints from attacking the giant treehouse in the middle of the neighborhood. Certainly not these two dorky-faced children. “GIT back here, you little VARMINTS!” yelled Sarah-Jane Jones II, she and her brother, Gary trying to catch the monkeys in nets. One of the silly rascals pounced off Sarah’s head. “Rats.”

“Well, at least your hair isn’t yellow. They just can’t stay off me!” Gary yelled as two monkeys were forcefully tugging his blonde hair, swinging them off with his net. “I dunno where these things came from, but they’re a worse nuisance than baby GUNGANS! Oh, WHEN will a ray of HOPE shine down on this…” And that’s when a great flash exploded above them.

“OOOF.” Emily Garley fell and crushed them under her backside. “Ouch… should’ve coordinated it better. …Oh, hey guys.”

“Howdy, Emily…” mumbled Sarah, her eyes blocked by Emily’s huge shoes.

“What’s going on…” Gary asked.
“Well, the short version is, a bunch of monkeys escaped from my grandpa’s lab and teleported all over the world. So now I’m going to catch them, and I thought you guys could help.”

“Wer happy to oblige with any of yer crazy shenanigans.” Sarah replied. “Unless this is some new experiment regardin’ human resting mats, perhaps you c’n get offa us.”

“Oh, sorry. He he he he! The transporter can’t really detect if any life forms are in the location, so it’s good I appeared above you, otherwise it would end bad.”

“Yes, there would be NO greater hell than sharing your scratchy skin, now GET OFF US!” Gary demanded.

“Oh! Sorry!” Emily rolled off and recovered, letting the two stand and brush.

“But remind us how we’re supposed to catch these here varmints.” Sarah informed. “Our nets don’t fill the juice barrel.”

“No! But THESE will!” Emily tossed them two extra T.E.L.A.-N.E.T.s. “I always bring back-ups, just in case. And I got you other stuff, too!”

“Well, dawgy, now we c’n invite extra players!”

“Or maybe we should stick to one person. You know, so no one screws us up!”

“Um… What’re you guys talking about?” Em asked.

“UHHHH. NOTHIN’.”

“Hehe! Okay.” Emily blushed. “Anyway, I also need to get to your treehouse and tell Moonbase about this—I think there’s something a lot bigger going on.”

“Well, the monkeys sort of kicked us outta there, but you can try and chase ‘em out.” shrugged Gary.

“It’ll be easy! Just net the monkeys and they’ll be good as gone. I hope you two brought sweat-decreasion pills ‘cause we’ll be doing this awhile! Let’s get started!”

The two stared, “You’re the only one that needs ‘em.” they said.

Stage 10: Orange River

Mission: Capture 12 monkeys and get to Sector N’s treehouse!

This region was under a fiery, orange sky, and with the sun setting behind the city, these suburbs would be shaded in shadow. Two Pipo Monkeys were in the park, one running around the field, another swimming in the fountain. Emily looked at Gary and gestured to the fountain with her fingers, then to the field as she looked at Sarah, the two nodding. Emily and Sarah rushed to the field using Super Hoops as the monkey long-jumped to try and escape them. The girls were running fast as they could, but stopped to catch breath when the monkey was easily evading capture. So having a wild idea, Emily told her to go left, so when she ran to the right of the monkey and began chasing, Sarah jumped out from behind a tree and netted him.

“Dah! Hey! Get in here you little—D’OOH!” They looked over with disbelief when Gary was floppin’ and splashin’ around the fountain, unable to net the shifty ape. When he fell on his front, the ape got on his head, shook his rear, and kept jumping.

“Need some help there, Gare?” Emily remarked. When the monkey hopped by, she bashed its head, knocked him dizzy, and let Gary snatch him in the net. “Oh- be careful not to net yourself, or we’ll be transported, too. Huhuhu! I reckon we don’t wanna be submitted to Pipo-removal experiments!”

The rest of the park was empty except for two 4x4 pieces lain beside some trees. “They musta left them here after invading the treehouse.” Gary guessed.

“Hey! If I get enough of these, maybe I can build a Monkey Radar.” Emily assumed. “About 10 will do. That’ll make things a bit easier.” Since they were finished with the park, and the bridge to town had a roadblock at the end, the team decided to explore down the river, flaming orange like the sky above. They couldn’t swim in it due to piranhas lurking around, so the trio hopped in a small boat to row their way down. A monkey was standing on a pier along the left shore, blasting a machinegun as the kids hurriedly rowed left and right. They barely made it over as Emily hopped out and bonked him in the head, catching him.

The river was further blocked by a huge wooden wall, but in the farthest corner, a 4x4 piece floated, so the trio rowed over to collect it. They then returned to the pier and headed up a hill to another field area. It was mostly a bunch of small trees, but when they turned away, they heard them rustling and quickly whipped around to see what it was, but there was nothing. They turned away again, and the rustling continued, and it sounded like something was jumping, but still nothing. The trio decided to shoot at the trees with their slingshots, but nothing was coming out. If there were monkeys in there, they would have to come back when they found a way to scare them out.

They crossed a bridge atop the wall that was blocking the river, coming to a smaller field populated by bushes. Leaping around these bushes were three bug-size creatures wearing tiny Pipo Helmets: they were spider-monkeys. The trio rushed around and tried desperately to net these pint-size Pipos (grabbing a 4x4 behind a bush), but they slipped right between the strings of their nets.

“Shoot, why can’t we jus’ squish ‘em?” asked Sarah.

“Because, these monkeys don’t know what they’re doing, that’s not fair!” Emily reasoned.

“Well, technically they might, but they’re too small to put up a fight.”

“In that case, why don’t we just leave ‘em alone?” Gary asked. “I mean, if they can’t even harm us.”

“Well… okay.”

So leaving more monkeys alone, the three progressed a path along the edge of the hilltop above the river. A patch of tall bamboo was growing from the river, and a white orangutan with a Pipo Helmet was hopping around them. The trio used their Sky Flyers to float over and carefully balance on the bamboo, hopping across with the greatest precision to catch the monkey. Gary ended up slipping and falling, and when Sarah whooshed her net when the monkey hopped by, she missed, twirled in place, then fell. It was up to Emily, hopping the bamboo tips and getting the ape cornered, but it bent its bamboo down, so when Emily got on, trying to balance, the ape released and sent her flinging. “WHOOOA!”

She splashed in the Orange River, shortly joined by her friends using Water Nets. “Methinks yer no acrobat.” Sarah remarked.
“Awwwww.” Emily frowned. Another monkey they’d have to let slip. Two apes were swimming around this river using underwater jetpacks, so once the trio caught up, they (thankfully) were able to catch them in water nets. They climbed onto one of a trio of wooden platforms, aligned in a triangle, and saw a Pipo Monkey fishing on one of them. When Gary was about to catch it, Emily held him back and noted the camera on a further platform. So they swam over as Emily pressed its switch, filming the fishing monkey.

This reminds me of a classic tale. The captions read.

So with that, they swam back over and netted the monkey, then grabbed the 4x4 on the opposite platform. They swam further down the river before climbing onto a wide wooden pier with many tables with umbrellas. Dancing atop a platform were two monkeys dressed like Honey & Darling from Ocarina of Time, but they cowered away when the kids got close. Gary chased the Darling ape around the tables with his Super Hoop and succeeded in catching him, while Honey was hopping the umbrella tops. Sarah shot her down with the slingshot and netted her.

They grabbed a 4x4 in-between some tables, then saw another one magically floating several feet above an umbrella, so Sarah got on that one and used Sly Flyer to float up and grab it. The following part of the river had piranhas swimming around, so they followed a walkway along the left side and entered a dark tunnel. The walkway sloped upward near the ceiling, then came to a dead end, with the only way forward across swampy vines growing across the ceiling. They held tight and climbed across, and saw a monkey swinging back-and-forth on one spot. Emily used one hand to grab the net and swipe it inside, then grabbed a 4x4 stuck to the ceiling.

They dropped off on a few platforms and hopped over to another leftside walkway. A small, low platform on the right wall had a 4x4, so Sarah floated over to get it. But their walkway was too high for her to get back, so she climbed across a thin ledge sticking out above her, landing on another walkway. This path curved up vertically, with the last 4x4 at the top. She spun her Super Hoop and miraculously ran up the vertical path, grabbing the 4x4 and kicking off before floating back to their walkway. Emily grabbed all the 4x4, got to her knees, and began to whip something up.

Kids Next Door: R.A.D.A.R.

Rascally Apes Daren’t Avoid Recapture

“All right! Now we can detect the monkeys’ specific locations. Let’s test it out.” She aimed the radar further down the tunnel, detecting a monkey climbing a large fence blocking the way forward. Where’re them bats? the radar read. The walkway ended a few meters before that fence, with the ape on the other side. They could shoot slingshot pellets through the bars, but he would fall in and be washed down the river. Emily also noticed the red switch on the other side of the fence, so she shot a pellet through and pressed it, making a small door open on a low part of the fence. They floated inside with Sky Flyers and landed on a safe platform, and were close enough to the monkey for a brief jump, and catch.

There was then a grabable fence along the left wall which the three kids began to climb across. A pipe above had holes in it as streams of goop were pouring out, and not wanting to know what it was, they carefully avoided them at those intervals. Following the fence, the trio swung a series of chains hanging from the ceiling, then took land on a large raft. It began moving on its own as they finally exited the cave, exposed to the bright setting sun outside. Pipodactyls flew around and shot fireballs, the kids dodging and whacking them out of the air when they sailed by. Monkeys were also hovering overhead with helipacks, so with careful timing, they jumped and caught these monkeys in nets. They netted three monkeys on that river, making 13 out of 12 monkeys by the time the raft stopped at the barred end.

They hopped off on the left side, where there appeared to be an open gate between two monitors, each showing 6 monkey icons lit blue. It must’ve signified they needed 12 monkeys to pass, and they met this quota. They followed a stairway up a hill, to a small neighborhood where Sector N’s treehouse towered above the rest. They rushed over there to conclude this stage.

“Hoo… Well, I donno about YOU pardners, but mah sweatglands finally got their due.” Sarah noted, slouching as she caught her breath.

“But you have to admit, it makes such an invigorating sport.” Emily said, panting as well.

“Well, hopefully once we phone this in to Moonbase, they can handle some back-breaking for us.” Gary replied, rushing to their house’s mailbox. He pulled a booger out of his nose and stuck it in a slot.

“Enter: Password.”

“Let’s see… I believe it is Pureblood! HA ha ha, just kidding! It’s Rhubarb.”

“Actually… it’s- PPBBBBBBBBBBBBBBBBBBBB!” A tongue shot out and blew Gary away. His friends hurried beside him as he wiped spit off his face, all three gazing as the treehouse stepped out of its perch, standing with two feet made of roots. The kids readied their guard as multiple branches emerged, ready to swing.

“HA HA ha ha ha haaaaa!” a voice like that of a madman cackled through the air. “Well well! I never thought ANY human would rise against the marvelous SPECTER! But is a pack of children REALLY the best they HAAAVE?”

“Holy whoa! Did Specter reprogram your computer to attack us??” Emily exclaimed.

“NO, you silly girl! I am a member of the Freaky Monkey Five, and the most intelligent monkey under Specter’s leadership. I am known as VHITE Monkey!”

“A rival for Specter’s brains, huh? What’s so special about you Freaky Monkeys compared to the lesser ones?”

“A very good question! Specter has taken the liberty of feeding us Vita-Z Bananas, packed with the richest calcium, potassium, and fresh Bang Gas! Our intelligence and powers are beyond the average Pipo Monkey, thus are the only worthy beings capable of organizing Specter’s Televised Takeover!”

“Televisioned Takeover?” questioned Sarah.

“GAAAAAH! I probably shouldn’t have mentioned that! Oh well, it doesn’t matter. I’ll have you runts defeated and strapped down before long. Then it’s just a matter of finding that Octogan.”

“Octagon?” Emily asked.

“I SAID NOTHING!! AND THEN YOU DIED! Get ready ‘cause I’M GONNA SHISH-KABOB YOU!!!!” (Play White Monkey’s Theme from Ape Escape 3.)
Team Emily ran separate directions as the treehouse started swinging its giant branches, which they jumped and ducked. But a branch grabbed Emily around her ankle and began to swing her furiously around the air before sending her flying several miles. “Hold on!” Sarah called, rushing after her with the Super Hoop to break Emily’s fall.

“Hehe! Sorry.” Emily blushed, both quickly getting up and returning to the colossus. After jumping its branches again, the three kids took aim at the strange antennas around its body, shooting homing slingshot pellets to try and damage them. “EEEEERRRRR!” This seemed to work, as the treehouse shook before it leaped into the air and made the kids bounce upon landing, burying its roots beneath the surface to ambush them. They felt the roots maneuvering beneath and jumped aside before they emerged, then watched as the rest of the roots began to come back up, starting from the base. The treehouse intended to pull them back, so Emily hopped on one of the roots and rushed up with the Super Hoop, grabbing hold of the ladder on the treehouse’s side. It led her to a series of platforms as she began to jump up.

“AWAY WITH YOU!” The giant treehouse shook furiously at certain intervals, forcing Emily to grab hold of the branches to avoid swinging off. The way the treehouse kept moving made it hard for Emily to stand—she found a hard time balancing on normal ground already. She floated to a high platform with the Sky Flyer, then took hold of a small ledge and began to climb across to an open window. “I feel INSECTS on my exterior. BEGONE!”

“AAAAHH!” Emily was smacked away by one of the treehouse’s arms, smashing the ground hard. “Aw, dang it!”

“Never trust a klutz with oversized sneakers.” remarked Gary Jones, whom was climbing across an alternate ledge before slipping into a window. A monkey that was running in a hamster wheel screeched and tried to escape, but Gary successfully caught him in his net.

“NOOO! You little!” The treehouse shook more before Gary flew out of the window, taking soft land with his Flyer. “I’M GONNA SHISH-KABOB YOU!” A bunch of cannons appeared on the treehouse and blasted meteors into the air, the kids running around with Super Hoops to avoid being scorched. By the time they were gone, the treehouse had buried its roots beneath the ground again, succeeding in catching the nerds who were tired from running. He hurled them right toward each other as they collided, and as they rubbed their heads after hitting the ground, they jumped up and ran when the treehouse blasted flamethrowers. It stuck its roots beneath the ground, so the trio dodged aside when they emerged.

When the rest of the roots began to arise, Sarah whirled her Super Hoop and rushed up the root, then kept it whirling as she ran straight up the treehouse’s side, on a conveniently carved path. She had to dodge around bushels of leaves, make a curve left, then right, and jump off to grab onto a branch. From there, she could jump into a window, finding herself in a mazy corridor of the treehouse. She used her R.A.D.A.R. to search around for any monkeys, detecting one nearby. She followed the signal around the maze intently, but couldn’t quite see where the monkey was hidden. But when she passed a painting of Charles Darwin she doesn’t remember having, she cut it open and saw the monkey working a terminal. Smirking in disbelief, she caught it in her net as it vanished.

“YOU LITTLE!!” After shaking furiously, Sarah-Jane went flying out of the treehouse. “I’M GONNA SHISH-KABOB YOU!” Sensing what was coming, the three rushed around aimlessly as the treehouse spun around the area and released a storm of flames, setting fire on many parts of the ground. They had less room to run around when the treehouse began leaping and aiming to crush them, with each quake making them slip. They put each flame out by whacking it with their Stun Clubs, and once the tree was finishing leaping, all the flames died out.

Angered, the treehouse extracted more branches and began smashing them around the ground in attempt to crush the kids, who were quick to dodge as they whacked each branch with the Stun Clubs, which seemed to make the thick wood wince with pain. “This plant looks a little thirsty!” Emily smirked as she rushed to the tree’s roots and pulled a water gun out of her Infi-Cube. “I forgot to restock on water, but now’s a better use as any!” So using the S.Q.W.I.R.T., she sprinkled water on the stem of the tree as its branches began to grow rapidly out of control.

“HEEEEY! I can’t see a darn thing!” White Monkey exclaimed as the tree was almost completely shrouded in its own leaves.

“Quick! Let’s go for it!” Emily yelled to her friends. Sarah and Gary joined her at the tree as they began to jump their way up a series of newly-grown branches, using the Sky Flyer to gain some extra ground as well. Finally, they made it to the dome at the tree’s top and broke through the glass into the Mission Prep Room. They glared angrily at the short, white monkey with the disheveled hair and red/green mismatched glasses working the controls.

“GAAAAAH! I have been found! I must maintain my secrets!” So the monkey began to hop around the chamber, but Gary and Sarah followed Emily's gestures and ran opposite directions. “GAH!” Sarah skidded to a halt beside the monkey and sent it across the room with her Stun Club. He flew toward Gary, who batted it to Emily, who leaped and kicked him forcefully to the center.

“Oaf!” Her leg still stretched mid-jump, Emily had a rough land in which she nearly did the splits. But she got up, fixed her glasses back on, and glared at the dizzy monkey in the middle. With a mighty leap, Emily raised her net, and- “YES! (YES! YES!” White Monkey was gone in thin air.

After quickly hacking into their computer, Sarah and Gary managed to shut the rogue treehouse down. “Hoo, dawgy. Talk about a wild bull at the rodeo.” the former said.

“Why did White Monkey decide to hack it, anyway?” Emily asked.

“I don’t know. But check this out.” Gary brought up many holographic screens of children sitting on couches at home, eyes totally blank with mouths drooling. “It’s like all these kids are in a… trance.”

“Holy cow!” widened Emily. “You don’t think Specter was sending hypnotic images from the treehouse, do you??”

“Lemme see: Adventure Time With Pip and Po, Misadventures with Bippy, Out o’ Jimmy’s Head??” Sarah examined. “Well bake me ‘n a toaster oven, they’re usin’ our treehouses to make dang NITWIT shows and hypnotize kids!”

“That’s terrible! How will kids educate their selves with fine-quality programming?! All those poor nature channels, secrets of the universe, educational cartoons, and—HUU!” Emily gasped with incredible horror. “EVEN THE MICROBIOLOGY CHANNEL, TOO!!! I can’t let them get away with this!”

“Well, they got a far distance ahead.” Gary said, typing on the keyboard. “They disabled communication with any other treehouses, and Lord knows how many were taken over.”

“But at this rate, Moonbase should be more th’n on the job.” Sarah implied.
“End of the world is coming up, it was the perfect time to seize the moment. The whole Kids Next Door is panicking, it’ll take forever to locate these monkey bases.”

“Haaaawwwww.” Emily sat down in defeat. “Then what are we supposed to do?”

“Call me a nutbrain… but Ah know someone who might help.” Sarah began. “He’s our mom’s cousin… a real nutbrain… but boy, is he smarter ‘an a no-limbed newborn.”

Gary gasped deeply. “No! You can’t mean-!”

“Who? WHO?” asked Emily eagerly.

Both siblings faced her with grim, dark eyes. “UNCLE SHELDON COOPER.”

“…Who?”

“He’s the most unbearable human being anyone could ever meet!” Gary exclaimed. “That imPERVIOUS ego, those TERRIFYING mantis eyes… You’d have to be able to stand him for 10 SECONDS and vice-versa if you ever want ‘is help!!”

“Yer right. Ferget I suggested.” Sarah agreed.

“Well… how can he help? Where does he live?” Em asked.

“Our mom says he lived in Galveston, Texas,” Gary explained, “where he conducts research on the ‘endless wonders of the universe.’ I don’t know if he still lives there, he just comes to visit us. Granted, he’s got a lot of cool stuff and he has his know-how, but trust me, you’ll never stand him for long.”

Emily hopped to her feet and became serious, “Then let’s go!” She balled her fist. “There’s no smartass in the WORLD that’s encountered Emily Garley- snort! I’ll kick this guy’s brain’s butt up Timbuktu, I tell you what, and I ain’t stop kickin’ ‘til this guy gives us whatever help we need! So bring it on, guys, haul me down to Texas so I can go cowsquirrel!”

It wasn’t the only time Emily looked so serious, so willing, so ready to fight. …Every time, she looked ridiculous, they were ashamed to be near her. “Well uh, tell you what Emily, how ‘bout when Uncle Sheldon drives you mad, we agree not to reveal the embarrassing story ‘long as you stay away from us for the rest of your life.” Gary offered.

“Oh Dear Mercy, what have we done.” Gary shuddered with terror as he regrettably joined his friends.

Cleveland neighborhood

The sun was nearly halfway below the horizon, and the city would be dark in minutes. In the yards and gardens where our world’s tiniest creatures lived, the shade has already arrived. This was how it was for Rupert, Timmy, and Hikari at this moment. “It’s getting daaaaaaaaark, Ruppy.” Hikari moaned.
“Our parents are gonna kill us.” Timmy noted glumly. “Rupert, we gotta get home.”

“You wanna go to your parents looking like ants?”

“Well, it’s better than being out here where the REAL bugs can get us. Can these Pikmin really protect us out here?”

“I’m… not sure. They said they usually just stay in their Onion.”

“Well why don’t they let US in?”

“Because we need MKND clearance. But I guess we can find your house. Where is it?”

“It’s. … …I’m not sure.” Timmy raised his finger to point a direction, but left, right, forward, and behind him was giant grass.

“I’m scared.” moaned Hikari. “What if we get eaten?”

“L-Look, it’s okay, Hikari…” Rupert tried to assure himself as well. But he’s never been out camping in a pitch-black forest, this was generally the same, on a much more dangerous scale. “We’ll just stay here until…until the sun comes out. We’ll call the Pikmin out for some defense.”

“I knew we shouldn’ta agreed to this.” Timmy frowned, having a seat. “It’ll take us days to find our house. Months…”

“I wish Jessie were here.” Hikari sat down as well. “He would hold us, and protect us, he’d step on ALL the big, scary bugs and let us sleep in his soft, warm hair.” Her face mixed with worry, sadness, and dreamy love.

It hurt to see his friends so worried and afraid. He was almost sorry he shrunk them into this mess, now that they had no way to get back. Rupert never liked being at home with Dad, but being so small in such a dark place, able to be eaten or crushed by anything, this adventure could only end badly. …He tried to sport a positive look, “Hey, it’ll be alright, guys. We’ve got the Pikmin. They fought all those other creatures, especially those Purple guys, they’ll protect us ‘til the morning! Then we’ll keep looking until we find another Minish and get us back to normal!”

“Okay…” Timmy began to calm a bit. “But Rupert?”

“Yeah?”

“I want twenty dollars now.”

“Okay.. .”

_Iceland; outside King Household_

Sector V took land on the street outside the King House, from which grew the humongous tree that was Sector IC’s treehouse. The IC team saw them coming in, already rushing down to the house and out the front door. “Hey, Sector V!” MaKayla beamed. “Long time, no see! Done being pirates?”

“Heh heh, if only.” Mason chuckled. “Still know everything, MaKayla?”

“No, not at the moment.”

“Yo, what up, George.” Chris smirked and waved. “Anything exciting happen?”
“Miyuki got hit by a car a few days ago.”

“Ouch. Anyway, do you guys know anything about these 20 Keys?” Chris asked. “We were gonna ask your dad that.”

“Our dad’s not home,” Kayla replied. “Said he had to do something. And don’t ask me to tell you who they are, ‘cause Clockwork wouldn’t let me look.”

“Aaaaaawww! Even when he’s DEAD, he won’t help us!” Artie whined.

“Don’t you guys have any clues?” Miyuki asked.

“Not exactly.” Aurora replied. “But two operatives were kidnapped by aliens, and Dillon said their boss talked about Dr. Nefarious. Didn’t you do a report about him?”

“Hey, that’s the guy that tried to ruin Christmas!” Lola recalled.

“Great, we have a common enemy.” Chris fist-palmed. “Let’s get up there and kick his bum!”

“Hold on.” Aurora touched his shoulder. “If they’re in space, we could be chasing them for ages, and what if Cheren needs us on Earth? It just feels too early to be rushing into it.”

“But we HAVE to save Maddy!”

“Listen, why don’t we go on and save her?” Kayla told them. “We’ll go to Galaxia and get GKND’s help to find Maddy and search for these Keys. Meanwhile, you stay here and search for clues on Earth.”

“Sounds good to me.” Harry said. “Ah prefer breathing my atmosphere. Any object?” Some of the members shook ‘no’. “A’ight then.”

“Well… okay, George?” George looked up as Chris faced him seriously. The Uno boy held his right fist up. “Promise me you’ll bring Maddy safely.”

“…” George gripped his fist, “Am I making the Unbreakable Vow?”

“Yes. And if you break it, I’ll kill your best friend, and you’ll have to alter the timeline to save him.”

“Yeah, I had a feeling something bad would happen to Terry, anyway.” He smiled.

“HUH?!!?” Terry jumped in panic.

“HA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA HA!” The friends laughed ecstatically at Terry’s fuming face.

“Yahright, later Chris.” George waved as his team headed back inside.

“La’er.” Chris waved back, still chuckling.

Sector V went back in the C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. as Mason and Artie returned to drawing on Sheila’s snoozing face. “So what’re we going to do now?” Haruka asked. “Pick Carol up and get her on the boredom?”

“Carol called me earlier, said she was going to a private party.” Mason replied. “Said she would email us once she was there.”
“Sounds fancy. We oughta breach it.” Haylee said.

“Well if we aren’t going to help Maddy, where are we going?” Chris asked. “To look for my long-lost cousin?”

“If Augustus has anything to do with stuff, then maybe.” Aurora said as Mason and Dillon wrote ‘Monkeytarts’ on Sheila’s snoozing face. “Let’s go talk to Cheren on Moonbase, he’ll want to know this.”

“Assumin’ he ain’t tryin’ to be gutsy and already off doin’ it himself..” Harry said.

York Household; 7p.m.

7pm, it was time for duty. Nolan strapped in his trenchcoat and gas mask, and his gas capsules and gadgets were ready. “Alright, Dani, I’m goin’ out. Probably gonna be another all-nighter, maybe even more, depending on how far I’ll end up traveling. We’re going to Civic City first, call me if something happens. Tell me if Dillon comes back, too.” He was then gone down the Sandcave to take his Sandmobile.

Midna emerged from Danika’s shadow. “I cannot recall the last night you had together.”

“Yeah, he’s left me high and dry.” Danika sighed downtrodden as she lied back on the couch. “Ho well, guess I’ll call the girls over for a party.” She took a soda and drank.

Midna floated over, “Which reminds me, when are you gonna tell Dillon he, um, eventually needs to claim me?”

“I’ll tell him ‘soon as he comes home. What are they doing now, anyway?”

“Hmm… I’d like to find out.” So Midna flew away as well.

Roguetown Station; 8p.m.

Roguetown Station. Well, this was the place. And it was nighttime. Sun was below the horizon, sky a dark-blue. So where was his special someone? It wasn’t the only time he went to meet a late secret admirer. Why did he have to make himself so lovable? Such a ladies’ man? Even Majora was kind of feminine. The train station was totally deserted, though the train seemed raring to go.

But the bushes rustled, Cheren jumping to attention. “So… you made it.”

“Who’s there?” he asked.

“I’m glad you showed up.” The slim, shaded woman stepped out. A cast was around her injured waist, forcing her vertical. “I had a feeling you would.”

“M…MOM??” Cheren’s face grew wide. “…The person?”

The wrinkly woman with the heart-hair and blue clothing lit up a cigarette. “It’s a pleasure to make your acquaintance.” She blew a smoke. “Care to do me a little favor?”

This made Cheren all the more worried. “What?”

“Nothing special. I just want you… to KILL my boss!” The train’s whistle roared, ready to ship off.
Cheren really knows how to attract ‘em. So yeah, be overwhelmed by the endless amount of crap that happens. You already notice these chapters are horrendously long, that’s ‘cause a lot of stuff has to happen, so there’s a lot of set up to make it happen. Now it’s a matter of choosing which stories get to have build-up in which chapters. And next time, that building up continues. Hope you can tough it out.
For Magic and Candies!

Chapter Summary

Augustus Fizzuras and Wendy Marvell begin their adventure for magic and sweets!
(The first chapter of Seven Lights: The Side Stories.)

If you all thought Seven Lights couldn’t get anymore confusing, well… we’re jumping a little ways back in time for, you guessed it, some new story arcs! Welcome to the Seven Lights Side Stories, the DLC of the exciting saga as it were. Be forewarned, there will be important facts here, stuff will be relevant to the plot. I just needed some extra space to put everything. XDD

Let’s begin! (P.S. this chapter takes place during Chapter 6 of Lights.)

Chapter B-1: For Magic and Candies!

Fizzuras Home

Henrietta hummed merrily to herself. It was a crisp and clear morning, and she never missed the rising sun in the calm and comfort of her home more. After years of adventure, searching for her wayward son, they were home. On this new day, she once again looked forward to spending time with her family. “Augustus Liebeeee.” She joyously walked upstairs, cracking open the door to her son’s room. “Ihr Frühstück auf dem Tisch liegt. (Your breakfast is on the table.) Oh?”

Something wasn’t right. There was a room. There was candy, dozens of adventuring souvenirs. But the blanket was askew. There was no son. The window was wide open. Henrietta approached it. She looked down at their driveway. …Something else was missing. “GYAAAAAAAAHHHHH!” The entire neighborhood was woken. “NOT AAAGAAAAAAAHHHHH!”

Somewhere in the skies

He couldn’t stay in there for too long. True, it was a good place to store his memories, but he had to get back out again. And he was happy. Augustus von Marzipan y Fizzuras, having “borrowed” the two-man plane from his dad, wearing his mother’s explorer’s hat as the sun bounced off his sunglasses. The lollipop swished around in his mouth as the wind chilled his face. Adventure was out there, he would seek it.

In this jungle, miles away from the U.S., the water was brown and bubbly, flowing from distant ancient ruins. This was the site of his new adventure. He landed his plane some miles from it and climbed out. He pulled the barren lolli stick from his mouth and tossed it in the shrubs as he marched forward coolly. “Hurry up, you twerps.”

In the backseat of his plane, three infants tumbled out. A White boy with a football head, a Black kid with an afro, and a yellow-skinned girl with spiky hair. “Come awn, Man, why we always gotta ride the ASS seat?” Rallo complained. “Can’t we git somethin’ more appealing on the posterior?”

“Look, that was the most stylin’ plane we had, and we ain’t got all the stuff we used to since Candied Island got ransacked by the Government. We all that’s left, brats, and we gonna make the best of it.” Augustus planted a foot on a rock and pointed forth with gusto. “The Marzipan Pirates are off on their grand adventure!"

“Right, ‘cause a teenage boy takin’ a bunch of toddlers for adventure can’t be misinterpreted in any way.” Rallo remarked.

“Mw-mw.” Maggie agreed, her eyes still weary from her fight with Haylee.

“Chronologically frozen toddlers, you mean to say. ‘sides, you’re the only ones I could find. Even though I lost the Candy Virus, I still can’t use my Haki for awhile. Doesn’t mean I can’t give you kids some wedgies and spread embarrassing rumors around your towns.”

“NOT MAH peanut head, Man!” Rallo gripped his head panickingly.

“Yes, God knows your mother hasn’t got anything under those ‘melons’. ” remarked Stewie.

“Alright you twerps, enough whining. The Everbubble Fizz is brewing somewhere in this Fizzle-Fizzle Ruins and we’re gonna be the first humans to taste it in centuries! Make use of those baby legs and MOVE!” Augustus unwrapped another lollipop and began slurping it. (Play “Chomp Ruins” from Paper Mario: Sticker Star.)

Stage B-1: Fizzle-Fizzle Ruins

Mission: Find the Everbubble Fizz.

Augustus drew his Candycane Cutlass and slashed the shrubs as he marched first. Naturally, some were M. Bushes that wanted to snack on his flesh, but still no problem for this experienced explorer. He made it to a small ruin and walked up stairs to its roof as Beverage Patrol soldiers flew down with soda jetpacks. “Grandpa decided to visit me, huh? I might have time for some fun.” He dodged their soda guns, whipped out his Everlasting Gobstopper, and chucked at the first Soda Man’s face. He fell back and hit the ground, then the Gobstopper bounced back to Augustus’s hand as he let their noses have it. The soldiers tried to recover, but Augustus rolled around and kicked them all unconscious. Afterwards, he took chocolate coins from their pockets, the only acceptable currency in Gumdrop Cove. The following area of ground was spikes, and large marshmallows called Bouncemallows were stationed on bushes around the road. Augustus threw Gobstoppers at their bases so the marshmallows rolled onto the spikes, and the teenager could bounce across.

He landed on a road through some ruins, where Beverage Soldiers appeared to be mining. Several holes were around, and soda geysers spouted out of them at certain intervals, so the men could collect them in their bottles. “Not before I do!” Augustus threw Gobstoppers at two of them, then punched three of them through the geysers. Four more locked their guns behind Augustus, but Rallo appeared behind them and blew them forward with soundwaves from his afro stereos. “Bringin’ back the boombox.”

Augustus approached a gentle river of soda, which had a few bubbles growing and popping, but it still just looked like brown sticky goop. “Bring it back right now. Try an’ shake this soda up, Rallo.” Augustus told him. The 5-year-old jumped, spun, and turned upside-down before burrowing into a soft patch of soil; apparently, he could do that. He sounded his boombox and shook the earth, effecting the river as well as the soda bubbled furiously. Augustus could run across the countless bubbles and rest on a platform. He collected a Bounce Gum, blew it to a reasonable size, and, since its bounces were too forceful for the soda bubbles, he bounced the small ruins whose tops stuck out above the soda.
He landed on a small, high ledge where he collected a Golden Wonka Bar, choosing to save that for later. He dropped back down and ran further across the bubbles, down a narrow part of the river that snaked in its direction. He didn’t expect Rallo to hold up for long, so he bypassed the floating Beverage Men and hurried. He arrived at a waterfall of soda where log-size soda cans rolled down horizontal-ways. Augustus hopped each can to make his way up, then could safely jump off on a safe shore before the quaking stopped. Augustus stood before a tall structure, made of yellowish-brown brick that was sealed tight. He looked up as Stewie flew down on a jetpack. “Well, I checked around, there is not one hat out here I like.”

“Yeh, I brought you ‘cause you’re the techno geek. Got any bombs or something?”

“You are not one for conversation.” Stewie grabbed a time-bomb from his backpack and stuck it on the wall. They both backed away as it beeped, and blew an entrance open. The temple was wide and vacant inside, there were tiki statues designed like soda cans, and soda geysers popped out of various parts of the floor. Stewie took out a thin drill and twisted it into some soil, reading waves on a small monitor. “Soda’s really unstable here. If not for all these holes, it’d have no place else to go.”

Augustus walked around and observed several big holes in the ceiling. “If we poked holes under these ceiling holes and clogged enough of the geysers, can we force them to squirt us up there?”

“Well, I suppose we could force a bigger geyser to erect if we push enough in. It’s the perfect chance to try out my Super Gum.”

“Sounds like a—hold on, whaddid you say?”

“What? We can use my Super Gum to clog up these geysers.”

“Don’t you mean ‘geysers’?”

“Yes, these geysers, we can use Super Gum to block the geysers so a larger one will erect.”

“…I’m not gonna argue about this. Just gimme the gum.”

Confused on what Augustus was ‘arguing’ about, Stewie gave him the pink strip of gum. Augustus chewed and blew a large bubble to pop over one of the geysers—I mean, geysers, and Stewie used his device to project more gum so Augustus could clog them all. Stewie used his drill to poke a hole under a ceiling hole, and both stood over it as the ground shook, and a massive soda geyser sent them flying out and onto a platform above the roof. Augustus collected a Gold Wonka Bar, but the route forward was above another platform, ‘course now they knew which hole to blast out of. The other holes had nothing around them, though Augustus suspected Sodium Chuchu would appear after he broke through the roof afterward. They jumped back into the temple as Stewie sucked all of the popped gum into his Gum-Molder and refigured them into little strips that Augustus could chew and clog the holes again (they had to open a few holes so the large geyser would shrink, making it easier to plug).

Memorizing the correct ceiling hole, Stewie poked a hole underneath after the geysers were plugged, and the duo went flying onto the tall ruin. A path between numerous small temples stretched before them, but a grappling hook latched onto the edge of their foothold, and Maggie Simpson came flying up. “Hey, Mags. What’s up?” Augustus asked.

“Mw-mw-mw.”

“Taffy Ninjas up ahead?” Stewie repeated.
“Mw-mw.”

“I see. Allow me to help you. That pillar looks good.” Stewie held onto Maggie as the latter latched her hook onto a nearby totem that stretched from the ground below, much higher than Augustus’s route. He gave Maggie a pair of goggles to enhance her weakened vision, and the body-heat waves of the Taffy Ninjas were seen behind the buildings.

“I’m counting on you, twerps.” Augustus told the children. He ran fearlessly up the path, and Maggie saw the nimble ninjas making their move. When they were exposed to Maggie’s view, it took one shot each to take them out. “Turn left!” Stewie told Augustus through the communicator, so the teenager turned a left route while Maggie shot the ninjas chasing him from the right. “Up the stairs!” Augustus ran up a small flight of stairs, ninjas climbed onto roofs to lock on with crosshairs, but Maggie shot them down first. “Another right, then the temple’s on your left.” Augustus followed another right path, trusting Maggie to shoot the ninjas on the way, then he could safely rush to the temple up a left path.

The stone dial on the doorway had three turnable segments, with the center part a pull-tab, a mouth on the medial segment, and a hole on the outer-most. He turned the outer so the hole was at the bottom, revealing another mouth on the wall beneath, then had the medial mouth face the bottom before using the tab to pop it open, causing an interior device to force the lower mouth open. The stone gate creaked open, so Augustus could enter. Two fountains of orange soda brewed, their bubbly scent reaching his nose. “Hmm, it smells like Fizzy Lift Soda… but there’s something else about it. Oh well.” Augustus scooped a cup of the soda and drank.

His body became light as a feather as he glided down a nearby hole. The hole stretch hundreds of feet downward, but the Fizzy Lift Soda would provide a soft descent. Orange Chuchu whose color matched the soda were round as bubbles, floating around the cave, but still threatened to harm Augustus with their electrified bodies. Maneuvering with a lightweight body was difficult, but the Chu were fairly slow. He reached the hole’s bottom and floated into a doorway, entering a wide hall with orange sodafalls coming out of the walls, into an endless chasm below. Beverage Men used their sodapacks to fly and try to shoot the explorer down, but Augustus used aerial maneuverability to dodge, kick off some pillars for momentum, and throw his fist against the men to make them fall.

Bubbles floated up from the falls for Augustus to inhale and refuel his Fizzy Lift. He could safely burp it all out to land on a safe ledge, then go down stairs through a narrow passage. He arrived at the temple’s core, where a giant pool of orange soda bubbled like magma, continuously turning a huge stone churner with a round wooden platform around it. “Hmm… so this is the Everbubble Fizz. I see. The Ancient Peztecs thrived on soda, their land was built upon natural sodium channels. They constructed this complex structure to constantly churn the richest, most endless soda imaginable. …History’s wonders.”

“Quite an observation, mi nieto.” A bulky figure in soda-barrel armor crashed onto a platform across the room. “And the Peztecs will SERVE their purpose, when their luscious soda becomes my bestselling brand!”

“Angelo Fizz. Hola, Abuelo.”

“Impressive work finding your way through, but I was here, first!” Mr. Fizz declared. “My Beverage Patrol will harness every ounce of sodium from this ground! My machines will be unstoppable, and teenagers will become so energized, those rotten Kids Next Door will NEVER defeat them!”

“Didn’t I hear your Teen Ninjas disbanded from Evil Adult Industries and joined the Government?”

“That’s none of your business!”

“Whatever.” Augustus pulled out the dry lolli and dropped it. “Anyone who gets this far is free to taste the fizz, but no one’s sucking it all from the ground when I’m around. You got to the count o’ drei to take all your troops away from here.”

“Humph. And what will you do if I disobey?”

Augustus smirked. “Find out. Einer…” His eyes narrowed on Fizz. “Zwei…” The adult cocked his soda blasters. “Drei!”

Boss fight: Angelo Fizz

Fizz blasted Augustus’s platform with a soda stream, so the teenager leaped onto the turning platform around the churner. Mr. Fizz blasted more soda, and Soda Chuchus emerged from the resulted puddles, jumping onto Augustus with super sticky bodies. The teenager shook furiously to knock them all off, quickly dodging a soda blast. He jabbed his feet at the blobs’ faces before facing up at his grandpa, trying to keep toward his side on the turning platform to throw a Gobstopper at one of his cannons. He damaged and rendered it useless, so when Fizz locked the canon on his right arm, Augustus tossed the Gobstopper again and— “Ah!” disabled it.

Mr. Fizz angrily leapt onto the churner with Augustus, raising his big barrel feet in attempt to crush him, but Augustus was swift to dodge. He looked behind as a Soda Chu emerged from a puddle, dodging when the blob jumped at him, then Fizz stomped on it and caused his foot to be stuck to the foothold. “Gah! Blast it!”

“Gracias!” Augustus dropped to the ground below and climbed a ladder onto one of the high platforms against the walls. “Hm, a switch… wonder what it does?” Augustus stepped on the device, and the churner doubled in speed.

“H-H-Hey! Stooop! Baaaaah-bl-gl-gl-gl-l-l-l-l-l-l-l.” Unable to shake himself off the sticky puddle, the increased speed shook the soda in Fizz’s barrels, channeled to his mouth and giving him Dizzy Fizzy, ‘cause that’s a thing. The supervillain broke free, activated soda jets from his leg barrels, and flew up to the ceiling, sticking on using soda from his arm and leg cannons. His head barrel opened to reveal a huge soda bottle cannon, blasting powerful bubbles that exploded with great range. Augustus jumped to the lower ground, his grandpa continuing to blast, but the boy soon realized bubbles had come up from the pool, thanks to the enhanced churning. They were very thick and bouncy, flying around the room, so he knew he could use them.

Augustus avoided his grandpa’s cannon and bounced up the bubbles, each popping upon his kicks.
Mr. Fizz had to turn around so his cannon could face Augustus, but the explorer nimbly dodged every shot as he made it to the armored adult and punched him in the face. The adult lost his grip and fell to the floor, taking a good amount of self-control to stand back up and keep the bubbling soda from shattering his barrels. “Enough of this tomfoolery! I will battle you directly with Sorate (soe-rah-tay), powered by a small form of the greatest of sodas!” Angelo turned, revealing the Pepsi icon on the back of his body barrel, changing to a Purple Flurp icon. “Purple Flurp! Know the fearsome power of concealed belches!” The purple substance flowed through his pipes, to his mouth and his barrels, and Fizz, unable to release the gas in burps, was super-fizzed.

Augustus hurriedly dodged his fast punches, but an untimed dodge resulted in him flying to the wall, backfirst. Angelo boosted for another punch, Augustus dodged as the barrel burst through the wall, and orange soda poured in. Seeing no other option, Augustus kissed his mouth against the hole and slurped the soda; the Everbubble Fizz made his nervous system unstable beyond compare. Fast as light, Augustus dodged his grandfather’s next punch, jumped behind him, and socked the back of his head. Angelo whipped around with an arm outstretched, Augustus ducked the barrel and swung his foot against the man’s crotch; through the body barrel. Augustus ducked between his legs, kicked Fizz in the back, and he stumbled toward the pool.

Fizz stopped himself in time to catch breath. “Ha ha! You think the Everbubble makes you strong, but I have the main source! I will absorb its power and—”

Augustus released a burp that blew Fizz into the source. His barrels absorbed the Everbubble against his will, and the adult soon realized the power beyond control. “OOOOOOOOHHHH!” Fizz went flying like a rocket, through the ceiling and into the sunny sky. They always said shooting stars were giant bottles of soda, and now Augustus saw where they got that idea.

Augustus panted after the Everbubble wore off. “Silly Abuelo. Sodium is for the youth.” (End song.)

Stewie and Maggie came down from the hole using their jetpack and grappling hook respectively, while Rallo popped out of the ground. “By the way, I ate the Mole-Mole Fruit also, so I can do this. Nah, I’m just kidding!” the afro boy joked. “I’m just abiding by ancient cartoon laws.”

Stewie dipped one end of a pipe into the Everbubble and sucked it into two glass containers. “Two half-gallons. ‘t’s gonna be one hell of a drinking party. Nothing like a bar of man-children staying up past bedtime.”

“Makes worthwhile entertainment. Let’s get it back.”

The team made their way across the ruins and returned to their plane, the Ace Flyer. Augustus’s cellphone rang, so he answered. “Yello?”

“AUGUSTUS VON FIZZURAS, SIE WENIG BLAG! Get your arse home right now before I recite a passage from the Boy Who Loved to Suck His Thumbs! You know you’re a wanted criminal for working with those Big Mams!”

“Chill, Ma, I brought my cellphone, didn’t I? I’m just getting some air, I’ll be home in awhile.”

“You come home NOW!! If I find out you’re at Gumdrop Cove, you’re gonna be swabbing the deck at our house until you’re-”

Augustus hung up, smiling coolly and starting the plane. His phone rang, so he answered, “DID YOU JUST HANG UP ON ME, YOU SHI-” Hung up again.

“You can never go home, Man, you realize that?” Rallo inquired.

“Eh, didn’t plan on it. Come on. To Gumdrop Cove we sail!” The explorers were off to the sky, their Jolly Roger – a skull designed like Augustus, with his explorer hat, grinning with a lollipop – blowing behind them.

Across the U.S.

For the past several months, a blue blur has been zipping around many parts of the country. Everyone, mostly kids’ immediate conclusion was that it was Sonic the Hedgehog, still runnin’ about to stop Dr. Eggman. That was 20 years ago, kids. Instead, it was Wendy Marvell, a girl of whom no one knew her origins, only that it was a blustery day wherever she ran. It was natural she lost track of where she was; the world was a blur most of the time. Just running countryside streets that stretched for miles… and little boys in racecars who drove alongside her. Actually, that was kinda new. On Wendy’s right, a blue racecar with red flames sped along, and she exchanged curious looks with its cute, young driver with breezing brown hair and red glasses.

“Uhhh… hey there?” he greeted.

“Oh? Sorry!” Wendy smiled sheepishly. “This isn’t your road, is it? I was just out on one of my daily runs.”

“Uhhhh… I see that.” At 100 miles per hour, clearly. “You like running, do ya?”

“Yup! It gets me places faster!”

“Heheheh! Yeah, it does! On to an important meeting.”

“Ah, that’s life for ya. Well, I won’t keep you. So long!” She shifted a different way.

“Great talkin’ to ya!”

“You too! Byyyyy!”

So Wendy kept running for miles and miles. Blowing past dozens of discarded papers in city streets, including a poster of Hers Truly.

WANTED
Wendy Marvell
A.K.A.: ‘Sky Dragon’
For possible connections with Revolutionaries
Reward: $7,000,000 (in 700,000,000 pennies)
(By order of the World Government)

It landed next to a poster of Augustus.

Wendy eventually stopped in a peaceful meadow around the base of some distant mountains, catching her breath. “I wonder where that boy was going. Everyone has adventures! Ha ha ha!” That was such a brief meeting, but one Wendy wouldn’t forget. She already felt like she made a new friend, and the fact they met so strangely must’ve meant destiny. “Oh! I hope I didn’t-”

“Lose me?” Wendy turned around. A little kitten with snow-white fur, shiny brown eyes, and angel wings, wearing a pretty red dress with a yellow tie with a pawprint; however strange these latter descriptions sounded. Also, she talked in an elegant lady-like voice. Having finally caught up with the child, the kitten landed on her hind paws to catch breath.

“Sorry, Carla.” Wendy blushed. “I just got sidetracked is all. There was a boy driving a racecar a while back.”

“You’re starting to see things.” Carla stretched her wings. “This air is getting to your head. How long has Mr. Facilier been sending you on errands?”

“Only the past couple of months. He thought it would be good experience before I finally go to Hogwarts next fall. Though he made it seem like I was going right away… o-oh well, what’s a little adventure! I never knew so many magical items lied around the place. Uhhh… what are we looking for, again?”
“Thank goodness you found me when you did since you can’t keep your head on straight.” Carla pulled out a small paper. “We’re looking for Fan Flowers, which spin and emit a gentle breeze. Grows naturally in Windy Valley.”

“It’s windy alright… or is that just me.”

“Unless Facilier’s so-called Chi-Stabilizers are faulty, I think it’s safe to say. Let’s find these flowers and return to him, Child.”

“I’ll do my best!” (Play “Toad Harbor” from Mario Kart 8!)

Stage B-2: Windy Valley

Mission: Find the Fan Flowers.

The sky was blue with few clouds, the endless green plain and its colorful flowers looked lovely under the sun as Wendy ran with the wind. “Rocks are coming up ahead. I know how clumsy you get.” A series of short rocks were coming, Wendy jumped, did a midair splits over the first one, planted her feet on the ground to resume pace, jumped the next rock, then the next. A stairway of taller, jagged rocks approached, even though Wendy could run around them, she wanted to prove her agility. She jumped, midair-flipped, planted her hands on the first rock, flipped and flew to the next, then the next, then two more before grabbing a Fire Soul (a red ring with a flame) in midair before landing and resuming run. “Oh yes, Facilier wanted those, too. If you see one, try to collect it.”

This half of meadow was reaching its end, above a towering cliff over the sea where jagged pillars stood everywhere. “You’re an airbender, right? You can make this.” Wendy kept her speed going, performed a terrific leap, her Air Chi keeping her aloft for several feet until she landed on a flat-topped rock. She could either jump a row of GUN Beetles rightward to another rock, but Gold Beetles spawned one at a time to the left, so Wendy seized the chance and flipped across them to land on a different pillar. Towering above her left was another jagged rock, she used a small rock beside her as a boost to flip onto the taller one’s side, running around and around until she made it on top, collected the Fire Soul, and flew to the distant next path.

She ran across this road supported over the sea by rocks, but when it would run off before a series of tall pillars, Wendy jumped to and kicked across them all, her sudden force making the unstable pillars collapse. She landed on a ledge and rushed across the next area of meadow. “The Government’s on to you. They’ve sent drones.”

“No problem!” GUN Laser Hunters locked on and were about to fire, Wendy slid along the ground, swung her leg, and knocked one off its feet, then nimbly dodged the other’s gun to blast him away with air. Squads of GUN Rhinos rolled at her as she whooshed sideways air gusts and knocked them upside-down, but the same could not happen for the Metal Rhinos, with a sturdy rectangle-shaped structure that kept them upright. “You could always use magic against them.” Carla said.

Wendy considered it for a moment, but a Rhino sped at her during, so she dodged. “Sigh, I don’t know any spells.” She leapt over and ran away from the Rhinos, coming to a wide trench with a high opposite ledge, but a line of Sky Hawks swooped by that allowed Wendy to hop up. She ran across the following meadow to a tall cliffside, where Hunters and Beetles locked their weapons on the child. She dodged a Hunter’s gun, blew him and some Beetles away, then tried to blast another Hunter, but his shield blocked her wind. Wendy ran behind the Shield Hunter, took hold and whipped him around, then blasted him into another Shield Hunter. Five Beetles blasted guns, but Wendy spun a Wind Shield to deflect their bullets. “Haaaa!” Carla flew above and Torpedo Spun at a Beetle, knocking it into another, and when the others tried to face her, Wendy thrust her fists and blasted them away with gusts.

“Thank you, Carla.” Wendy smiled. She jumped into an enclosing of the cliff, jumped out by its left side, and propelled herself into a next-door higher enclosing, using a double-jump to shift direction in midair. She was close to the top of the cliff, but it was a bit too high, so, “Um… will you lift me, Carla?”

“Okay. But you need to lose some weight.” Wendy double-jumped, then Carla clutched her paws on either side of her waist and lifted her. She poured a lot of strength in her wings to lift the heavy human, and before her little arms gave out, she placed Wendy onto the cliff. They were at the top of a horrendously steep hill, and her speed was unparalleled as Wendy ran down, unable to stop her legs. “Aie! Ow! Ahh!” She tripped on a rock, and had more of a hassle getting control as she wouldn’t stop rolling. She couldn’t even get the Fire Soul she passed, for she was round and non-stopping as a boulder. She stopped on her rear at the hill’s base, shaking her head of dizzy. Facing open sea (except for rock pillars) ahead, she mustered her speed and ran across the surface.

She maintained her constant speed to avoid submerging into the sea—not that she couldn’t swim, it’s just faster this way. She ran up a ramp and performed midair poses for some Trick Points, ran up another ramp to fly to and jump across some Beetles, resulting in a Fire Soul, then took land on a long, wooden pier. A giant killer whale destroyed the pier as it chased Wendy, she had to run off and across the water, pouring extra speed in her legs to outrun the monster, coming to a dead-end cliff, but a sudden water spout emerged from the surface to blow Wendy upward. Windmill towers stood about the meadow, the breeze chillier on Wendy’s skin as she ran with more spirit.

Wendy ran up the short spiral of a tower, took hold of the end of one of its blades, and made the device spin faster before she flung herself into the sky. Thousands of feet were between her and the ground, but the wind was very strong and blowing upward, giving her the sensation of flying like a bird. She landed atop the first of many tall pillars, where a GUN Hornet locked its missiles. They released, but Wendy squatted, leaped high, and caused the missiles to ram each other when they failed to chase. Carla destroyed the Hornet, then carried Wendy up to a distant pillar on the left. Wendy planted her feet on a grindrail and used her wind-like speed to zip across.

It swerved around many pillars, Wendy ducked or jumped some Beetles, then the rail led her into the sea again as she ran once more. The killer whale was dead ahead, leaping high above and coming down with its mouth open. Wendy timed, and jumped, landing atop its head and dashing up its back. She listened to its terrific splash after she jumped off the tail, taking land on a ledge. She ran only a short distance left before arriving at a garden where windmill-like flowers, large and small, emitted their gentle breeze. (End song.)

Wendy bent down and happily plucked a Fan Flower, holding it by her face to feel its chill. She gently plucked more flowers and put them in her Infi-Satchel. “That should be enough, right?”

“I hope… huff…” Carla rested on the ground. “My wings are not even a year old, they should not have to work this hard.”

“I’m sorry…”

They both stood and stared at the endless grassland. Every grass blade and flower swayed to the wind, the clouds were passing fast overhead. “Carla… where do you think we come from?”

“How many times are you going to ask me that?”
“I’m just saying, I found your egg washed up on a beach, and I, er, expected a sea turtle, so the minute you popped out, it’s felt like… we were both in the same boat.” Her hair blew behind her with the wind, exposing Wendy’s long pointed ears, another odd trait next to her red eyes and deep blue hair. “Did your parents abandon you, or did they…”

“It is curious, but I’m at least thankful to be born under somebody than nobody. Regardless of my origins, you, Mr. Facilier, and those hooligan twins are my current ‘family.’”

“Heh heh heh.” Wendy blushed, scratching her head. “But considering how none of us are related, it’s so weird. . . .” She faced out at the horizon again, wondering how far the valley’s wind stretched. “Oh well. We’ll find our families someday, count on it. Come on, let’s get back to Virginia!” She ran off.

“Urgh, wait for me!” Carla flapped her wings and followed.

Dr. Facilier’s Voodoo Emporium

After 20 years of business, it was well-known about the witch-doctor selling magic stuff in his old shop in a back alley. Harvey Facilier became a close friend of all of the kids in town, every day, children were excited to visit his shop. “One at a time, kids, dang!” the witch-doctor proclaimed. “This ain’t St. Mungo’s for Magical Maladies!”

A little blonde girl in a purple dress was first. “Mr. Facilier, my brother keeps being mean to my pet frog. Can I have Pixiefrog Dust?”

“Sure, Viola! Feed and take good care o’ him.” Facilier took her money and passed the bag of green dust.

A brown-haired boy was next. “Mr. Facilier, I wanna get back at these girls for dunking a fishtank on me.”

Facilier gave him a syringe, “Pseudo-Mermosis, kid, has no after-effects, doesn’t hurt, but super convincing.”

A brown-haired girl with green eyes. “Mr. Facilier, I cut myself playing with a kitchen knife, and I don’t want my mom to know.”

Facilier got a Band-Aid, put it over the cut on her arm, and- “Blood be gone!” The wound vanished when he ripped it off. “Aright, next!”

Round after round of child lined up in his shop, steadily their numbers decreased. The final one of the day was a brown-haired girl with a black shirt under a gray jacket. “Hey, Mr. Facilier.”

“Samantha, glad to see you again! What’ll you be having today?”

“Um… well, my brother’s in the Kids Next Door, and he tells me about a lot of crazy stuff that happens, so… do you have a good luck charm?”

“I have the works! Seven-leaf clover, golden Holy Cross bells—not settling well with my other stuff, I wanna get rid of ‘em—777 necklace, horseshoe shoes, name your pick!”

“Uh-hu… just the clover.” She blushed.

He took her money and gave her the little plant. “Um, Mr. Facilier… do you know if all these bad things he talks about… are true?”
“You mean psychotic Nature Goddess, dimension-destroying space clown, or mutated candy demons? Yeah, kinda. But you ain’t need to worry, ‘cause as the magical world will tell you, evil never triumphs! We had all kinds of lunatic wizards back in our day, not one of them got away! Well, Herpo the Foul’s still a mystery, but immortality only gets so far!”

“Well… okay.” She smiled. “Cause, he also says that his leader told everyone, this really big thing is gonna happen that’ll destroy the world, so um, that got me worried, but he thinks it’s all a joke, and like, I think so too, ‘cause it’s outta nowhere… A-Anyway, bye-bye now. And thanks!” She excitedly ran out.

Facilier smiled with satisfaction, kicking back on his chair. He loved seeing the happy faces on children, making the best of their childhood and enjoying their life by doing whatever crazy shenanigan they have in store for his magical doohickeys. Ever since he was young, even if he was never in Kids Next Door like his friends, it always seemed all he wanted was to make children happy, even after all his crazy affairs with the Underworld.

His door swung open, and the blue-haired child he was expecting to return ran in. “Mr. Facilier! I brought the—!” Wendy Marvell tripped on her feet and fell on her front, both arms outstretched with the satchel. “Oww, the… fans.”

Carla helped her up as Facilier took the satchel and fished for the five Fan Flowers, greeted by their soft breeze. “Sniiiiiff, ahhhhh, yes, this is nice.”

“Are you going to be using them for products, Mr. Facilier?”

“Ehh, maybe. But I mostly needed a fan or two.” Facilier put the flowers into a small bowl of water. “This place gets really stuffy.”

“Isn’t that a little selfish to send Wendy out to certain danger just for a means of personal comfort?” Carla asked disapprovingly.

“The girl got experience, ain’t she, that’s all I’m tryin’ to give her, and since yo’ with us now, well everyone’s gotta do their part for the business.” He shrugged. “Y’all need the experience too, Charles, as moderately intelligent as you are, you were just born… three weeks ago. You need experience, and runnin’ around with Wendy is the key to that.”

“Mr. Facilier, did you ever find out what kind of creature Carla is?” Wendy asked.

“Siiiigh.” Facilier pulled up a large book from under his table, while his shadow got one off the shelf, as both mindlessly flipped pages. “I tried, Kid. I really did. But they ain’t nothin’ in here. They got magical cats that can see through disguises, a breed of black cats who can shadowbend (might get me one o’ those), and these little Remlit things that live in Skypia and get real nasty durin’ the night. But not ONE thing about a magic talking winged cat that hatches outta an egg. You’d think the media will be all over that!! My next guess was she was a Pokémon, but no Cat-types match her appearance.”

“I wish we knew. What if her parents lost their egg and couldn’t find it? I really want to find out where you came from.”

“If it’s any consolation, I’m not extremely interested in discovering my origins.” Carla replied. “Helping around here is fine.”

“You’re very modest, Carla, but when a magic connoisseur like me gets on it, they ain’t no stoppin’!” Facilier winked. “You can count on me.”
The doors flew open as two coated twins stumbled in. “MR. FACILIER, MISTER! We got it we got-” Sonny and Donna crashed into Wendy as they all fell down. “Oops. Sorry, Wendy.” The former said.

“We were going fast! Like you!”

“LET’S DYE YOUR HAIR LIKE A CHEETAH.”

Their cleats were putting pressure on her back. “No thanks, guys.” She said dizzy.

“LIIINE UP.” thundered Facilier. The four of them were on their feet, the Climbers in front, Wendy and Carla behind. “Y’all ready for a Magic Quiz??”

“YES, SIR.” All nodded.

“PERFECT! Now, Question 1: How did magic originate?”

“Oh!” Wendy perked, but the answer didn’t come as quick as she’d hoped. “Um- um- um- um-”

“I KNOW, I KNOW!” Sonny spoke ecstatically. He looked at the ceiling, an illusion of stars levitating. “During God Arceus’s creation of the universe and the elements, traits of elements seeped into each other’s Element Plate, and those compounds were channeled and compressed into a single plate which would then be used to create the stars and Star Children, primarily Jirachi. That energy which comprised of all elements would be used as a sense of spirituality regarding imagination. While other cultures have similar stories, humans developed the power around 5,000 years ago in Egypt, by molding and gathering several elemental and spiritual energies into items, such as scepters. In time, although many were nonbenders, they have utilized ways of simulating bending to a great and even better extent.

“In time, wizards and witches became a society that challenged benders, but because of their power, benders and nonbenders feared them, so they were forced into hiding using their magical means. Since magical energy is drawn from all elemental areas, this is especially so for dark areas like the Shadow or Underworlds, primary sources in general which create Dark Magic. Magical governments were created, having acknowledged their powers as great and dangerous, and established a variety of laws and rules to keep the hidden and normal world at peace. This didn’t fit well to all types, as dark wizards desired power over all ‘Muggles’—as they called non-magic/bender humans, to show their superiority.”

Sonny was engagingly skimming History of Magic, Volume 1, “‘Primary bodies of magic include potions that utilize all sorts of supernatural items for incredible effects, it is important to remember when…”

“E-Excuse me, are we allowed to read from the book?” Wendy asked confusedly.

“Well, a history book’s a history book, none knows how strong the credibility.” Facilier replied. “There’s hundreds of mysteries surrounding magic, no one knows how it ultimately began, but everything else is true. Mages really are different from element benders—we don’t have a chi flow, over time, our powers became as natural to our bodies as blood, bone, and breath. We’ve done things that benders would take years of training to do. Liiiike this!” He stuck his hand in his hat, surprising the kids when a giant hand reached in from the ceiling, pulled Carla back up, and out came a fly-size Carla flying around. “The greatest trick to all my visitors, hhhhhahahahahahahaha!” Carla flew back into the hat, appearing normal-sized.

Wendy raised her hand. “Mr. Facilier, are magic users really as evil as people say they are?”
“The same was thought of benders, too, Kid, it all depends on the person. You though, Wendy, you’re a rare type; not many people are born with both powers. It isn’t hard to find a shadowbender who knows a few magic tricks, but airbenders for example, special. Any mage born with an element can do magical things with that element; some say new bending arts in general were created from studying mages.”

“Then maybe my wind curse was created because I have magic.”

“That is a possibility. But I told you about Rumpel Stiltskin—born with magic AND timebending. Not a good combination! Terrible choice on Dialga’s part. That’s a thing, though, magic isn’t based on bloodline or inheritance, even humans of ordinary families are born with it. That’s why we think the gods—Jirachi for instance, have a say in who gets the power sometimes. But it may just be their energies leaking and molding together across the universe, then finds its way into mortal bodies.”

“Are magic users stronger than element benders?”

“I wouldn’t put it past ‘em. A single bender can develop their skills to incredible power that mages couldn’t match; but mages can develop their magic to a level that’s more formidable than any bender. You know about Logia benders, and I don’t know any mage who can match such a godlike power; unless they were a bender themselves. The fact still stands, your magic and your airbending, Wendy, can create an excellent combo that uses powers a normal airbender couldn’t do. You’ll develop your powers when you go to Hogwarts, but getting as much learning in as you can beforehand will set you ahead.”

“But… Mister…” Wendy spoke sadly. “This month, isn’t that… thing supposed to happen?”

“Ahhhh, yes.” Facilier nodded regrettably. “This event, Wendy, I see it only as a thing to test everybody’s strength. The first test is how one stomachs it; embraces it’s going to happen. The next step… will be how far one goes to try and do something about it. What say you, Girl? Do you have the strength to face it?”

“I…I don’t know.” Wendy looked down. “I only just learned about my magic a few months ago; I’ve been studying really hard, but I don’t think I know enough to…”

“Well, the job ain’t solely on yo’ shoulders, there are dozens more panicking and preparing. All you need is the strength to support them, Wendy; to the best of your abilities. Even in just one month, it’s a skill you can learn. Will you do it, for the friends you came to know?”

Wendy looked up with a nod of determination. “I will. I’ll do my very best.”

“That’s our girl!” He slapped her back. “Now come, we goin’ to Diagon, and we ain’t stop ‘til yo’ magic and airbending become one. Facilier and Wendy’s Mage Quest starts now!” He grabbed a handful of powder from a bag, threw it into a fireplace, and lit with emerald flames.

“Sonny and Donna, too! HOORAAAY!” cheered the Ice Climbers.

“Here it starts, Wendy!” Facilier put an arm around the girl. “Just an old great-uncle, a girl named Wendy, two excited twins, and their pet going on crazy adventures whilst selling magic items from their shop for a profit!”

“Um, Mr. Facilier, isn’t there a TV show based around those things?”

“Nonsense, girl, we totally original, what could you mean?”
A poster advertising Gravity Falls hung on a wall in the shop, its main cast waving at us. “All we need is a fat guy with daddy issues!” Donna perked.

“D’OH!” Homer Simpson cursed.

“Ooo, one more thing.” Facilier knelt before Wendy, put brown contacts over her red eyes, and rubbed magic cream that made her pointed ears rounded. “I still prefer if people don’t know who you’re related to. Not that they’s anything wrong with how you look, it’s just for safety measures.”

The subject of her unnamed father again. Wendy only frowned and nodded. “Mm.”

With that, they all stepped into the emerald flame. “Wait a sec, does that imply I’m the ‘pig’??” Carla stated before they vanished.

Yeah, since I started watching Gravity Falls, I noticed their overall concept was similar to what I had planned for Wendy’s story. ;3 Wendy and Carla are both from Fairy Tail as a refresher, but their story will mainly consist of magic-related crossovers. And Augustus’s central theme, besides candy, will be pirates, and you know I just can’t see this story complete without pirate adventures. X3 Anyhoo, we’ll see more of their stories next time, then we’ll take a little trip… downstairs. Until then. ;3
Galactic Juvy

Chapter Summary

Nerehc Onu goes to get some new operatives from Galactic Juvy. (OPTIONAL CHAPTER.)

This chapter’s for all the RoWen fans out there! Er, part of this chapter is! (Note: This also takes place during Chapter 6.)

Chapter B-2: Galactic Juvy

Diagon Alley

The team of five appeared out of a fireplace in a dingy alleyway. “Look sharp.” Facilier told them as they scrambled to recover from the fire. He led them to the city street, very cramped as oddly-clothed figures roamed everywhere. The windows of every shop were filled with all the magi essentials, broomsticks, wands, pointy hats, as well as (to Wendy and Carla’s disgust) severed animal organs. Posters advertised the renowned Hogwarts School, Weasleys’ Wizard Wheezes featuring the Ghost of Fred, and a new haunted house attraction called The Witch’s House, based on an old legend from New Oakland.

“Harvey Old Bean, wonderful to see you!” a man called.

“Bonjour, Mr. Baggins!”

“Facilier, Dear, you make the most wonderful hotcakes!” a lady said.

“Ha ha ha, I do my best.”

“I say, that’s a marvelous specimen.” A man with a long thin mustache and monocle examined Carla. “Is this an undiscovered breed or some experiment?”

Carla flew up and glared in his eyepiece, “I’ll make you into both if you don’t back off.”

Facilier mentioned many times that this was a wizarding community, but Wendy’s never seen it herself until now. She shirked a lot, for she really stood out regarding color scheme; a lot of people were pretty gloomy and dark-looking. Well, their clothing did, the people actually seemed pretty happy, but passed curious looks to the blue-haired maiden and her flying cat nonetheless. She honestly hoped unique hair colors were common in magic worlds, but not this one it seemed. “M-Mr. Facilier, you said a lot of mages need to go into hiding because of their power. Is that why it’s so crowded?” she asked.

“Well, yes.” Facilier frowned. “But since benders and metahumans became more ‘accepted’ 20 years ago, it’s not AS bad, but wizards of all people are still ‘frowned’ upon; or rather, feared. Even among benders we’re unnatural. Wizards ain’t as revered as in the Negaverse. I wouldn’t sink so much into it, we’ve gotten pretty used to.”

Wendy wanted to ask what the ‘Negaverse’ was, but didn’t wanna distract him too much while they were navigating. She saw a group of kids gathered around a building’s window with a Magic Mirror TV inside. Wendy stood at the back of this group and saw an anchorwizard and witch in the mirror. The small picture behind them depicted a familiar baldheaded wizard in a black cloak.

“In other news, the 2nd of May is nearing, marking the 34th anniversary since the fall of Tom ‘Voldemort’ Riddle. Known for taking many steps forward in the field of Dark Arts, commanding thousands of humans and inhuman creatures to his whim, and achieving immortality through the use of Horcruxes, he will always be remembered as the wizard who brought the greatest age of suffering in all of Wizarding History.” The anchorman went on.

“But let’s not forget those dark wizards before him,” the anchorwitch continued, “like the Arthurian Witch, Morgan ‘Morgana’ le Fay,” a beautiful witch with a flowing pink robe, “Avalaran legend Zeref the Black Cloud,” a very handsome mage with black hair and robe, looked in his teenage years, “as well as more recent rises to stardom, the Devil Reincarnate Ganondorf Dragmire, and the elusive mysterious Man With the Red-”

“Wendy Dear, come on.” Carla returned and took Wendy by the arm, pulling her along.

Facilier was at a shop called Ollivanders, speaking to an ancient white-haired man through the window. “Soooo Mr. Ollivander, I was wondering if there was any progress in, ah, procuring that wand.”

“Mr. Facilier, what do you expect me to do, just call the King of Fairies and request the Fairy Princess’s Fairy’s Tail? I can make you the best on the market, but whoever expected me to procure a wand of that importance and fortitude must be WAY off their noggin! Surely a Pony’s Tail, or an Angel Feather, or—goodness, a Minish Acre Piece, but you CAN’T expect me to persuade those blasted fairies to give some student wizard their most prized POSSESSION!”

“Look, if it were up to me, I woulda asked for something simple, but this ain’t me, it’s her father, but HE can’t appear in public, so I gotta do everything for him!” Facilier rambled on as Wendy and Carla caught up.

“Siiigh… I’ll keep trying, I really will, but let it be known I have quite a few words to say to her ‘father’. Cod, blasted-. .” He shut the window and stormed inside.

Wendy felt guilty after overhearing that, following Facilier further with her head down. “Mr. Facilier, you don’t have to get me a good wand. Any old thing would do, really.”

“That’s very sweet o’ you, but I can’t say no to this guy. Still, you have to learn magic at some point, the question is where to start. Lessee if anyone in the pub knows any good teachers.”

They entered a bar called the Leaky Cauldron, which reeked of a smell Wendy only assumed was magic alcohol. Very dingy and rugged inside where many thugs were guzzling drinks and talking. “Ah’ll only be a minute.” Facilier said, approaching the barman at the counter. “Bonjour, Tom!”

“Dr. Facilier! How long it’s been, I say—thank you again for the hair.” He felt his head of smooth brown hair. “What can I get you?”

“See that girl over there? She’s a kid I’m lookin’ after for a friend o’ mine, and, short version is, we’re lookin’ for a..”

Wendy and Carla walked around while Facilier spoke, exploring the bar, though there wasn’t much. She noticed a large book on an abandoned table. Curious, she walked over and picked it up. It was History of Benders, Volume 1. Wendy cracked it open to view the Table of Contents.
Chapters such as “Decision of the Gods”, “The Avatar/Negatar”, “Fall of Arceus”, and others were listed. Wendy skimmed them for perhaps anything on airbending – then found a chapter called “Logia Bending”, Section 1 “The First Logia”.

Wendy flipped over to that page and skimmed. “‘Logia is a high level of bending where the bender’s Personal Chi has molded perfectly with the Natural Chi, granting them the illusion to transform into their element. The term was coined by the first bender to achieve this level, Acnologia, a mage who possessed—’”

“Hey, that’s mine!” A boy with purple-black hair and blue eyes, wearing a dark-red vest that exposed his chest, took the book. He looked about 12. “Are you a bender or something?”

“S-Sorry. My name’s Wendy—yes, I’m an Air Mage.”

“A mage, too? Cool! Name’s Romeo. I bend fire.” He lit his right hand with a violet flame. “I use my magic to give it all sorts of colors and effects; I can freeze,” shot blue fire to freeze a table, “stick,” his purple fire was thrown on a man’s shoulder, who panicked to get it off, “and stink.” His flame turned yellow, forcing Wendy and Carla to shield their noses before he turned back. “Trying to develop other colors.”

“That’s amazing! Are you going to Hogwarts next year?”

“Yeah! I’m actually my 2nd year. If you want, I can teach—”

“Time to go, Wendy!” Facilier returned and grabbed the child’s hand. “We’re goin’ to Orchid Bay, Tom coined us the perfect teacher!”

“I—I’ll see you later, Romeo.” Wendy told him hurriedly.

“Ohkay. Take care!”

With that, the team of five were strolling down Diagon. Disappointed that she couldn’t finish that sentence, Wendy spoke, “Mr. Facilier, I read that the first Logia was a mage. Do you think his magic helped him become what he is?”

“It does feel too coincidental. Yes, there is a very good chance his magic helped him better to become one with his element. By observing him, regular benders got the idea and found ways to do it themselves.”

“But what was his element?”

“Hmmm... to be honest, I only heard of Acnologia, I don’t remember what element he used.” Wendy was even more disappointed she couldn’t finish that sentence. “I would honestly guess shadow, if not maybe fire, or darkness or light—eh, I’m just spitballin’. Either way, our next priority is getting to Orchid Bay. I think the Knight Bus drives there on week days, I’ll have to call and see. Well, we’ve about accomplished all we could here for now. Can you guess what we’re about to do now?” Facilier asked with a sly grin. “Apparition!”

Wendy gulped. “Can’t we just take the fireplace back?”

“Sorry, where we’re going, Floo Powder don’t get to. Sonny, Donna, refresh our minds on the dangers of Apparition!”

Sonny smiled and said, “When the mental or physical state in any of the passengers isn’t totally stable—”
Donna continued, “-this could result in the loss of internal or external body parts.”

“Otherwise known as SPLINCHING!” they cheered.

“Uuuuuuu-” Wendy shuddered and sweated nervously. She Apparated with Facilier before, the worst that happened was she lost one of her hairs. But it was still scary.

“Hhhha ha ha. We’ll be fine, though, Wends, ain’t nothing Dittany can’t fix. In here, everyone, don’t want any extras goin’ with us.” Facilier gestured them to an empty alley.

“It’ll be okay, Child, just don’t think about it.” Carla told her comfortingly. Wendy nodded and calmed down, holding Facilier’s arm tightly.

“Let’s SPLОРP!” The twins glomped Wendy against Facilier, and Carla hugged the witch-doctor’s neck before they zipped into thin air. The dimensions spiraled around them with the sensation of being squeezed in a tight rubber tube. Wendy shut her eyes and prayed for it to be over, she thought she might suffocate in this dimension, was afraid of losing a leg and wondering if she already had, an Apparition was roughly 5 seconds long, but it feels forever.

She felt her feet hit solid, though soft soil, and breath filled her lungs. Wendy opened her eyes to find them in a peaceful forest. “See, Wendy, nothing went wrong.” Carla smiled.

“WAAAAAH! CARLA, YOUR TAIL’S MISSING!” Donna screamed.

“AAAAAAAH!” the cat panicked, feeling behind her. “Put it back! PUT IT BACK!”

“Just kidding!” The twins hugged. Carla snarled at them.

“Where are we, Mr. Facilier?” Wendy asked with wonder in her eyes. “Did you take us to an enchanted forest? Are we gonna learn how to ride unicorns, or catch fairies, or; or find special herbs for powerful potions??”

“No, it’s just the Black Forest in Germany. I come here to set trees on fire when I’m angry. We’re just here to practice.”

“Oh. Well, that’s okay!”

Facilier directed Wendy to face a road of trees and bushes. “Now you’ve been practicing that move I’ve been tellin’ you about, right?”

“Y-You mean that… one?”

“Yah. Show it to me.”

Wendy faced determinedly at the set path. She inhaled for nearly 10 seconds, creating a makeshift vacuum in the air, some birds almost flew in, they wondered just how large Wendy’s lungs were. Then, she unleashed it all in the form of a powerful cyclone, blowing the small shrubs and twigs miles away, the trees were bending over, lost many leaves, it was like a storm appeared in this one area. Wendy eventually stopped to catch breath. “Excellent, girl.” Facilier patted her back. “You make the inventors of the Cyclone Roar proud.”

“Eh he. Actually, I’ve been calling it the Sky Dragon Roar all this time.”

“Sky Dragon Roar?”

“That’s what they’re calling me in the wanted posters, I-I thought it had a nice ring to it. If it bothers you, I’ll call it the Cyclone Roar if you want…”

“…That is… a way cooler name.” Harvey replied honestly. “Seriously, I’m gonna have to call the authors of the book and have them rename it.”

“Y-You don’t have to go THAT far!” Wendy flushed. “It mostly feels right for me, is what I’m saying.”

“Yeah, but seeing you use it, I dunno, it’s like that move was created for you.”

Wendy looked away sheepishly, twisting a foot against the soil. “It’s nothing special… but, what I really wanna do is start learning magic. I already know plenty of airbending, I’m just wondering…”

“Well, legally students can’t use magic until they’re officially enrolled, and even then, they can’t use it outside of school. Otherwise, they Track yo’ ass to the ends of the Earth.”

“Oh…” Wendy frowned with disappointment. She was really hoping to learn magic soon.

Facilier smirked, squatting down to put an arm around Wendy. “You’re talking to a guy who’s a pro at getting around legalities. Which is why, when we’re getting to Orchid Bay, I’m buying you a wand.”

“You will?!” she beamed. “I-Is it that one you wanted from that store?”

“Hah ha, if only Orchid Bay did sell that wand. Naw, but we’ll getchu any kind you want! Mermaid’s Heel, Genie’s Ring, Hippogriff’s Humility, if you think it’s fashionable, the money’s on me.”

“I’m so excited, I can’t wait!!”

“Easy girl, Chi-Stabilizers may not hold against emotional states! Now, let’s keep tryin’ that move. When I send this Fiendfyre at you, you have to use your Sky Dragon Roar to block it. Are you ready, Wendy?”

“Go for it!”

“Okay.” Facilier pulled out a small box. “Here it COMES!” The box popped open, out came a massive serpent with a skull’s head, made entirely of fire as it flew into the sky, setting trees aflame. It redirected and flew directly at the group, its boney fangs open.

Wendy sucked in a great breath of air and released. “Sky Dragon ROOOOOAAAAAR!”

Gumdrop Cove

The sun began setting by the time Augustus arrived, the stronghold where all Candy Pirates could come and be sugary in peace: Gumdrop Cove, a tremendous orange-brown island named for the fact it looked like a smashed piece of gum underneath a school desk. “Ahh, I love the smell of Hershey’s in the air.” Augustus smiled. “They never set ‘em up like these anymore. But ever since Captain Black Chocolate Bart coined this cove, it’s become a helluva.” Cannonfire roared, Augustus swerved his plane to avoid the giant jawbreakers. “Ho ho! Here’s the welcome wagon! We’re going doooown!”

“Whooooooaaaa!” Rallo and Stewie cried as the plane dove for the island like a kamikaze, narrowly dodging all cannons. Augustus whipped around, breezing the sailors with wind caused by the force, and landed his plane along the shore between parked ships. Augustus exuberantly hopped out. “Hoist the Fruit Roll-Ups, mi amigos, your favorite captain has returned!”

“ARR-HAAAAARRRRR (Gustaaaaaaahhhh!)” The pirates cheered for him.

“Oogooshtush, ye bootee-grubbuh.” A fat, short pirate with a blue coat, white pants, black boot and peg-leg, and a squishy green beard of jelly, and pink Jell-O gums, marched forward.

“Where’ve ye got’n yer sorry soul this aour?”

“Gelatin Gerald.” Augustus greeted the captain of the Jelly Pirates with a cool smirk, dropping his dry lollipop. “Long time, no see. Still obsessed with that ‘Jelly Planet’ dream?”

“Dun’t mock what ya don’t know, boy. They say iss a drim, but I knows it: out thar in them stars be Jellatonia, a planet made o’ the sweet soliquid. Ar’ll round me up a space-pirate vessel, ‘n’ bring home to yer two galleons’ worth. Mark me wards, I be a half-Jellien, dropped here on this wreshed rock, and I’ll be the king o’ all o’ ‘em.”

“Hmm. Well, I’ll be waiting for that from beyond my grave.”

“Yer mouth not be weighed down with gelatin substancsh, ya make unwise use o’ it. Iffin’ yer really got ta right ta be usin’ such, a swear-off be what we need. Go ‘n, boy. Curse me with yer most jigglin’ of carser.”

Augustus started a new lolli. “You go first.”

“You’re a… gigsle-boned, celery-brained, graso.”

“Yer end’s spelled now, boy. Arr-har-hrm: Ya are… a big-buckled, lolli-lickin’, self-cod.”

“Ooooooo!” moaned the watching pirates.

Augustus smirked. “You’re a… dung-grubbing, urine-bathing, toilet-kisser.”

“NOE cursin’ in yer native tongue, boiii! Arr-harm: you are… a puff-chested, wrinkle-faced, retirement home resident.”

“Oooh-HOOOOOOOH!”

“You’re a… dung-grubbing, urine-bathing, toilet-kisser.”

“OH NO HE DIDNNNNN’T.”

“Yar ee… forest-earred, flat-buttocked, oxygen-addict.”

“Ahhhh-haaaaaa.”

“You’re a… salt-cowering, heat-detesting, lard-lover.”

“Aye? Well yer… a fan-haired, bottle-sucking, self-wettin’, half-devoured, hind-kissing, piece of landlubber trash that nary his birthers wanted ta deal with.”

“OOOOOOOOOH!!”

Augustus wasn’t phased. “You’re: a soulless, grammatically-inaccurate, culturally-ignorant, hopeless-dreaming, envious, pathetic ball of slop that has to feel glorious through means of swear-offs.”
“Arr… that’s below the belt. ARRR, ya win this time, ya wretched wretch of a… wretchen! Arrr, blubber blubber…” he cursed as he stomped away.

“‘ey, Gustah.” An eyepatch pirate with a big brown beard around his big mouth held a wanted poster with his hook hand. He spoke with a hoarse throat. “Yoh’ still wanted foe yoe allianceship with the Big Moms. 500,000 Chocolate Dollars foor yor head.”

“Only because I’m too sexy. …Which actually hurts saying it out loud, seeing as Grandma was worth 46 million. But you all aren’t gonna tattle, are ya?”

“Big Mom made the seas hurrrrrrutful to us. Almost bad as Davy Jones, or those crocodiles up in Mermaid Swamp. Blamey. If you have reason not to be ousted, let it sound.” His weak voice grew more high by the word.

“You know I never come here without reason. And lo and behold:” Stewie brought the half-gallons on his captain’s instruction, “Everbubble Fizz!”

“Yoo got that?” A skinny, dark-skinned pirate asked. “You trekked the Peztecs?”

“I trekked them.” Augustus said proudly. “Now where’s Bubbly Brandon? In the Soda Can again?”

“He’s up there, a’ight. Why ya businen’ with him, again. That soda be rightfully yers and those little wee ninnies. Keep that old coot with his average brew.”

“I would.” Augustus and the babies walked off. “But he has business with me.”

Sugary pirates with hairy bodies and miscellaneous amputations-replaced-with-candy tramped everywhere, up and down every stair and across hundreds of wooden walkways to every building dedicated to a specific brand of candy. The Smarties Corner for all them sea-sugar nerds, the Kisses Booth for swabbies in love, the Scarlet Licorice to view all them sexy lady pirates, the Jawbreakers-Plus-Other-Disposable-Parts for anyone wantin’ to get tough, or everyone’s favorite pub, the Soda Can, whose double, saloon-like doors Augustus pushed open. The floor was always sticky and brown, the sound of spurting soda from shooken-up cans was almost 24/7, and ’twas truly the corner to raise one’s blood-sugar levels.

Augustus approached a skinny man in a red coat and an everlasting goatee and mustache of light-brown bubbles. He saw the boy coming and plopped down the pitcher of soda. “OOOOOhhh Augustus. You’ve actually gone and did it.”

“Aye-aye, Brandon.” Augustus placed the half-gallons of Everbubble on the table. “The most nerve-shaking soda out there. Even the stuff at the Coffee Drilling Rig doesn’t compare.”

“Hoh-hoh. Too great a soda to just guzzle down in one gulp. I’ll just take…”

Augustus clamped his hand over a half-gallon and pulled it over. “The Marzipans need their share of the sodium, too. My grandpa’s in the Soda Control Board.”

“You’re seeking to bedevil your blood-sugar. That sodium was too powerful for the Peztecs, YOUR bones will never hold right.”

Augustus cocked an eye over a sunglass, showing Brandon its sky-blue color as he tipped the glass to his mouth. “This soda needs to talk to every lady these lips’ve been in contact with. Then they’ll know, it’s impossible not to settle down. …” He was inches from slurping it.

“Settle down, boy! You’re an air-lubber I’m fond of, I don’t want the worst to happen to ya.”
“Then gimme the best.” He plopped the soda down again. “You said you knew a guy where I can get the best-quality Corn-Clamber Boots. I’m heading up Buttermilk Building and no other material can stand its slipperiness. So choke up or I’ll drink you dry.”

“Okay, okay. A fellow of mine up in Mountain of Flavors, Greenland, makes the best hiking gear. His name’s Ricardo, but please, don’t go up there, lad. I heard that…that man’s goons have been lurking up there. The most terrifying candy hunter who’s not even a pirate, but he’s a demon among them. Lord Licorice.”

“Pfft, that old fart? Scare me with the Boogeyman.”

“I’m serious, Augustus. The most generous thing Licorice ever did was let Hasbro use his likeness in that crap board game. Little twerps like you are getting the wrong idea because of it, Lord Licorice is a monster. He seeks rare candy just to mock it, or muck it. He kills any soul who takes delight in any sweet but his own. He’s—”

“Black John Licorice’s younger brother, he already told me this stuff. And if I could stand his company, Lord Tyrone Joshua Licorice doesn’t scare me one bit.”

Brandon sighed and shook his head. “What do you want me to do, Son. Send a letter to my man on Flavor Mountain to ready a pair to send ya to your death? My immortal soul is too precious to risk.”

“Your soul isn’t the one being risked. But mine will hurt unless I climb Buttermilk Building and taste its everlasting sanctuary. And then I’ll… I might finally have a good ingredient…”

“Yes, you will have a perfect ingredient… to your death. Very well, I’ll send Ricardo the message you’re coming. But I’m not attending your funeral.”

“Man, you’re so negative. If I come back alive, pep up a little.”

“Don’t get agro at me because you have no cheerleaders.”

Augustus left the bar and trekked down wooden stairs to a lower part of town. “Come awn, man, don’t make us go up against Lord Licorice!” Rallo cried frantically. “I played Candy Land, that guy is messed up! Kidnappin’ King Kandy, ruining Gramma Nutt’s garden, and what’s with forcing little kids to eat licorice? Plus, whaddyou think happened to Plumpy, the last of the Plumpa Trolls? He killed him, that’s what! That’s genocide! I don’t wanna have ta deal with that!”

“Besides, we have a plane, why the hell do we need climbing boots?” Stewie asked.

“Because even the air around Buttermilk is strange. The cream evaporates into little particles that seep inside of engines and makes everything slip apart. Too risky. And we couldn’t even land anywhere that isn’t slippery.”

“If Ah get cream all up in mah afro, you’re paying for my barber, Chocolate Coin Boy.” Rallo frumped.

“Mw-mw.”

“See, Mags knows what I’m gettin’ at.”

“The sun’s going down… We’ll rent us a room at the Cup of Cocoa and get rest. It’s fair to worn you, you kids might be sharing a bed.”
“Employ this one at Child Services.” Stewie remarked.

“Speaking of which, though…” Augustus led the children back to the Ace Flyer, pulling wrapped blankets out of the trunk. “I need my crew at its best, so it’s time for you to eat.” He unwrapped the blankets to reveal boxes of fruit and sandwiches. “Dinner is served.”

“Why the healthy provisions all of a sudden?” Rallo asked. “They’s candy in these fruit?”

“No, it’s honest-to-good food. I’d chow on candy ‘til bedtime, but it’s no good for toddlers, and as your captain, I’m basically your babysitter. Especially since you’re unaging brats, so eat up.”

Stewie took a sandwich, Rallo took a banana, and Maggie had apple juice. “Well, not the worst Child Services.” the former remarked again. “You should eat, too.”

“Nah.” Augustus sat on the plane, dropping his dried lolli. “I survived this long in Big Mom’s crew; and a forceful cleaning from Knightbrace, I don’t need this stuff.”

“Mw-mw.” The teenager looked down at Maggie. Her hazel eyes were wide and pretty as she held an orange to Augustus.

He smiled warmly. “That means a lot, Mags, but I’ll be-”

Cock. “Mw-mw.” Augustus looked nervously. Maggie narrowed her eyes as she aimed a gun at his head. Augustus slowly reached down, took the orange, and munched the first bite, chewing slowly. He swallowed through the saliva clogged in his throat, due to his nervousness, and munched the next bite.

Negaverse; DNK Moonbase (Patrick Stewart, if you would do the honors?)

Gladly, Gamewizard. When we last saw all our friends in the Posiverse, Supreme Leader Cheren had abruptly revealed the coming of the Apocalypse just 3 days beforehand, and now everyone is scrambling to find twenty unnamed Keys and do whatever sort of self-realizing journey God has put them on. Down in the Negaverse, however, Supreme Leader Nerehc revealed the Apocalypse four months ago. Now as either world has only one month to prepare for this cataclysm, you can surmise how serious everyone must be taking it. The Negatives, actually, are treating it quite casually. It was only a month before when the danger of the DNKG was abolished, and the skies of Nega-Land are filled with light. Things have never been happier, so why should anyone worry.

Even Nerehc himself seems more lazy than usual, in his office on Moonbase. The paperwork was stacked and “filled”; so he claims, so now he was taking it easy, kicked back with his feet on the desk. He even had a strand of grass in his mouth, he wondered what was so cool about people having these. …It wasn’t bad. He sat up quick when his door opened, spitting the grass out as Ininap and Sicnarf walked in. “So um, Nerehc, summer is just around the corner, and based on your info, the Apocalypse should be happening by then, so… what’re we gonna do about it?” Sicnarf asked.

“Beats me.”

“B-But we can’t just sit here and let it happen.” Ininap stuttered.

“Well, I don’t know what to do, according to Smiley or whatever he’s called, the Positives are gonna be doing most of the work. The Seven Lights and Thirteen Darknesses are in their world, so…”

“Yeah, but wasn’t the point of Meet Your Match Day back then to have both sides get to know each other?” Sicnarf questioned. “That way, we can fight together and have a better chance at winning.”

“Maybe, but we never got around to planning another Match Day, because Cheren’s crew is always busy. Makes sense. It’s kinda been hard for us too, considering a lot of our operatives were traitors.”

“But they’ve been better after Innus returned them to their normal sizes, haven’t they?” Ininap asked.

“It isn’t just them, the DNKG members and all their allies, they’re still pretty sour. The Nimbi and the merkids are still fighting, we’ve still got scuffles with the Hsinim, even with this Apocalypse in mind, we can’t convince them to get along. That’s our real priority at the moment.”

“Wouldn’t it be better to just forget the DNKG kids?” Sicnarf replied. “They’ve been total psychos since going to Galactic Juvy. It’s too risky to even let them meet their Positives.”

“True, but we know some people that might help.” Ininap informed with a nervous grin. “Remember our cousin, Ayamik and her friends?”

“I thought about it, but they’re too classy. They wouldn’t agree to it.”

“If they did, would they be able to help?” Nerehc wondered.

“Depends on who can stand the other’s company.”

“You got me hooked.” Nerehc stood up. “Take me to your cousin’s house, I wanna see what’s so ‘classy’ about them.”

“If you want to.” Sicnarf shrugged. “I should warn you about our aunt, Imak. And why we never invite her to Ingrateful taking dinner.”

“Can’t be any worse than Aluben.”

Yltraeh Household

Sicnarf and Ininap kept a safe distance while Nerehc knocked on the door. A blonde-haired woman with cold green eyes, a ragged tank-top, and black shorts swung open the door, knocking Nerehc back. “The fuck do you want?” Imak Yltraeh (een Yksvolird) shouted, munching on a taco.

Nerehc rubbed the bruise on his forehead and sat up. “Hi, Mrs. Yltraeh. Is your daughter home?”

“Wut, comin’ to join her prissy tea party? Yea’, she’s upstairs, what’re you expecting a welcome party?”

“N-N-N-No, Ma’am.” Ininap shrunk.

“May we come in, please.” Nerehc asked with mock-politeness.

“Ain’t no one stoppin’ you, indoors is pretty much outdoors in this house. Just don’t touch anything in mah fridge.” The bad-odored woman stepped aside so the three could enter the messy, uncared-for house, going up stairs that creaked with each step. “AYAMIK, your shitty cousins are here with some NERD kid!”

Ayamik’s room was quite the opposite. “That’s fine, Mother.” The daughter had blonde hair in seven curls, very pale with powder, and she wore an elegant white dress as she cooled her face with a fan. Her associates, Oelak Nosredna, and the siblings, Pat and Flow, wore their own fancy attire, too fancy for description at the moment, and all sat at a curtained table to drink tea in this heavily polished room of gorgeous china and posters depicting famous opera stars.

“Ah we really allowing company up here?” Oelak asked; his teeth looked a little large for his mouth, so he talked funny.

“It’s such a cabbage patch here otherwise, what harm would guests do.”

“Um… hello?” Nerehc peeked into the door.

“They harm us by beginning their sentences with filler.” Flow replied, sipping her tea.

“Yeah, classy’s an understatement…” Nerehc mumbled, walking in with Sicnarf and Inap behind him.

“You must be Ayamik. Are these your friends?”

“Friend’ is merely a layman’s term for associate, which people make use of far too casually.” Ayamik replied. “We prefer to think of ourselves as such so as to distinguish ourselves from ruffians.”

“Well, your cousins tell me you’re actually experts in dealing with, um, ‘ne’er-do-wells’, making them more calm and civilized and, such.”

“We’re accredited for it, true.” Pat replied. “However, never is it enjoyable, those fools in detention are such lunatics. Yet, the school insists on troubling us with their conflict because they need more diligent workers.”

“Your work helps though, right?”

“From time to time.” Flow replied. “Ydnas and Noel could serve as reference.”

“In that case, I would like your help with some, if you would. I don’t know if you know about the DNKG, but there’s a group of alien kids in Galactic Juvy.”

“You wish us to be involved with extraterrestrial miscreants?” Pat questioned.

“Hahdleeeh.” droned Ayamik. “The last thing we desire is juvenile court. Let alone garblish-speaking crooks. Why would you desire them in society?”

“For personal, selfish reasons you won’t care about. The reason I’m asking is because I’m not good at therapy, but I really want to help those guys. You four don’t really have to, I’m just saying it may be in your best interest. So will you or not?”

“If you are to insist upon us, sure.” Oelak replied. “What say you, chaps?”

“Aye.” They chorused.

“Then the motion is carried. Where ah these acclaimed miscreants?”

“In Aixalag, a galaxy far far away.” Nerehc answered. “We’ll go up to Moonbase and take one of the S.U.B.-L.O.O.C.s. Ever since the DNKG thing, I thought we might have to go there again, that’s why I asked Cheren for those Warpdrive Keys.”

“Miscellaneous information that does not interest us.” Flow informed.

“I know, I was saying it to them.” He gestured at Inap and Sicnarf.
“Your response was to Oelak’s question, was it not?” Pat asked. “You cannot so suddenly shift conversations.”

“Heck, they’ll break the aliens out of their madness just by drivin’ ‘em crazy.” Nerehc remarked lowly.

“At least make this trip more enjoyable by negating to mumble.” Flow commented.

The seven kids glanced at Imak guzzling the cereal, Crumb-O’s in the kitchen while they casually left the house. “If it interests you, Mother, we are going into non- or semi-oxygen now, we do not expect dinner from you.” Ayamik told her.

Ininap, who was the last to leave, frantically shut the door before Imak threw a chair. “Damn brats, go fall in a gopher hole.”

Aixalag; Planet Noreciv

After acquiring a S.U.B.-L.O.O.C., the kids used the Warpdrive to fly to Aixalag in minutes, and were currently approaching a planet of green and yellow landscape. “According to Emorej, this is where Galactic Juvy is stationed, on Noreciv. Incidentally, the main reason they built it is because of the DNKG. He said it was around this region, so let’s check.”

“Another planet, how shrew.” Ayamik waved the fan at her neck. “I feel the atmosphere of these beasts infiltrating my lungs already.”

“Not gonna argue there.” Nerehc replied. “Can’t imagine a kid prison looks pretty. Even on our terms.”

Although the sky was yellow, the surface was beautiful, with lush green alien plants growing everywhere. Butterflies, bumblebees, every vicious and gentle animal frolicked. An ocean yellow like lemon candy stretched over the distance. The kids landed a short distance away from a small, white building that looked like a preschool. The colorful sign outside read Galactic Juvy.

“Population 12.” Nerehc commented.

“This place looks delightful.” Ininap grinned, shuddering at the thought of meeting mean, scary kids. “Maybe the DNKG kids are already better.”

Nerehc walked up the flat stone path to the front door. He knocked gently, and a pretty, obese woman with long brown hair, a blue dress with white polka-dots, and legs going into black high-heels, greeted them with a grin that rivaled the sun. “Hello, dears! I’m Miss Ahtaga Llubhcunurt, the warden here at Galactic Juvy. Are you here to visit the students?”

Nerehc, Inap, and Sicnarf looked weirdly at one-another. “Um, kind of… we wanted, um, to know if, we could help with, some of the students?” Sicnarf was at a loss while wording that sentence as he still couldn’t comprehend the bright and cheerfulness of the outside.

“A sentence should not have that many intermissions.” Oelak had to point out.

“If you would like to help teach, then sure.” Miss Llubhcunurt grinned brightly. “Why don’t you come in, dears?”

The inside of the small building was merely a lobby, with waiting chairs and a receptionist desk, in which Miss Llubhcunurt led them to an elevator on its right. “I’ll take you down one floor as a start. It’s suppertime for our friends, so make sure to share your food nicely! And don’t get your clothes stuck in the door, dears.” The eight of them squeezed onto the lift before the door closed and they rolled down. “And here we are. Hellowoooo, everyone! We have guests!”
Prison cells were lined up all along the hallway, each containing an alien child aggressively eating the fine food that passed for supper. One of the aliens looked at them. “Look, it’s Nerehc!! The one who beat Aluben!!” Incomprehensible shouts and roars rang all throughout the halls as each former DNKG agent desperately tried to break through their barrier.

“Looks like I’m an intergalactic hero.” the boy in question noticed.

“Oh my, you seem very popular among these dears!” Llubcnurt perked up. “I hope we won’t have to line up for autographs. Hoh hoh hoh! I’m afraid I should tell you, the students usually do cleanup work in the kitchens on Yadsruht, so if you wanted to help teach any of them, may it only be a few.”

“That’s okay. There’s four in particular we at least wanna see. Can you help us find them? They are…” Nerehc proceeded naming them.

“Why, of course, dearie! I’ll take you over to the Quiet Room and have them brought out shortly.”

The Quiet Room was, to say the least, quiet, keeping all the shouting outside as muffles. There were actually five different sub-rooms around the wall, Ayamik, Oelak, Pat, and Flow were led into four specific ones. After a while, scary alien guards brought the four chosen DNKG kids in through alternate doorways of the rooms, so either couple was separated by glass. Ayamik got Avakam, Oelak got Atnort, Pat got Annaira, and Flow got Beewv. Each former operative wore a blank, gloomy expression, though murderous intent for Nerehc in the background was clear in their eyes. “Um… good luck, you guys.” Nerehc told them before he and his friends shut each door.

“So… you’re my therapist, huh.” Avakam said to her aid.

“I’ll have you know that I partake no interest in associating with the likes of scoundrels as yourselves.” Ayamik stated. “But it seems that I am obliged to by this stranger. So let us cut to the chase, if we may, if you were to be set free right now, what would be your course of action?”

“Grab the closest gun and shoot Nerehc in the head.”

“I do not argue with your decision, but I doubt they will find it acceptable. So entertain me with what you consider your backstory.”

“What backstory. My mom was a Nairuomolg, Dad was a Naineetak, but I was born on Mom’s planet to learn how to hunt and shoot things. She says I can’t shoot my brother, though, ’cause we’ll have nothing to eat in case the Apocalypse comes. Ultimately, we live on that godforsaken ice planet, Occes, where we had little food in our puny log cabin. Then Aluben shows up, wants us to be part of her empire, I’m like ‘Sure, ’long as I get away from this place.’”

“How great is your interest in hunting?”

“Very great. I like to rob creatures of life to show them life is cruel. I never like to give them the chance to look back on their decisions. They enter the afterlife as they are.”

“Yes, well Lord permit you to enjoy your own meager existence.” Ayamik applied lipstick to her mouth area.

“What does that mean?”

“Clearly, your skin is not naturally developed for the temperatures of an ice planet, but your parents were either poor or lazy with money, so they wished for such a living quarters. You feel distaste for all the animals and creatures who have adapted so well, your only solace is their demise. Each bullet you fire is but an inch of your accumulated spite and suffering.”

Avakam laughed hysterically, “Hyou are not even CLOSE, because I am not—”

“-CUTE! I AM NOT CUTE!” Beewv screamed at Flow in their own room. “That’s what I keep tellin’ them, but apparently there’s something adorable about the only white Naineetak in existence. And you know what I said, I said I’ll learn swordplay too! And I’ll CUT you all up!” He made the gesture of jabbing a sword. “I’ll cut you up so hard, you’ll not even SEE it! Same for all those DNKG jerks, too, I’mma chop them ALL up! THEN you’ll see why you should never underestimate—”

We had technical errors while our voice actor was trying to pronounce Beewv’s full name, so this scene was edited. We apologize for the inconvenience.

“You make your personal grief vividly clear.” Flow said. “All I can configure is you’re a nutcase. If it’s any consolation, I don’t find you the least bit adorable.”

“Yeah, but I’m STILL sick of Miss Peppy-dress’s crap! I want my swords back so I can chop up her dress and everything underneath!”

“Repulsive…”

In Oelak and Atnort’s room, the former had been digging around his mouth all this time. “There we ah.” He pulled out a notepad and pen. “My apologies, but I must take notes if I am to make believe I am paying attention. Please, begin.”

“I’m half-Nairapmup and half-Natinrah. My parents are of two different species, but Atinrah was swallowed in conflict and wars, it ended up destroying itself so the surviving population moved to Airapmup. So as you might expect, our planet is pretty  crowded- Wait, why was that censored?”

“No cursing in the school, dearie!” Llubhcnurt sang through the intercom.

“Anyway, not that I can show you with these chi-blocks in place, I’m a lightningbender. I always have a need to burn off energy, which I COULDN’T without shocking anyone most of the time, yet I was supposed to let my sister bloodbend me for fun. So when Aluben let us join DNKG, she promised my own private planet to shock things. But it ain’t go so well when NEREHC gave me Zapper Nation and botched up my chi-paths.”

Oelak nodded solemnly and wrote things down. “Mmhm, mmhm, resent for Nerehc, urge, but forbidden to be a delinquent, inability to tolerate company of others… You ah an imbecile.”

“Okay, that’s it, LET ME OUT OF HERE YOU STUPID-!!” Atnort furiously banged on the glass.

“Remember our manners, dearie!” Atnort furiously banged on the glass.

“Ghhhhhh!” Atnort really wanted to strangle somebody, but settled in his seat. “So how’s things in yer life.” he said through gritted teeth.

Lastly, Pat was talking with Annaira, who slouched on her way in. “So what tale have you to delight me with.” said Pat.

“What my brother is shouting about in there. We’re from a crowded planet, so my only comfort is controlling animals. I hate animals. Very much so. They show dislike with us, too. So I like to play with them with bloodbending. I like to kill them from inside and eat their flesh. That’s what real hunting is.”

“Your parents must have been proud.”

“If only. I was inherently born with good bloodbending, but my mother forbidded it. Never let me practice. Only the matriarch is allowed to control her kids. Atnort always ratted on me whenever I practiced. Aluben let me take lessons. I was her favorite. I… I admired her…” Anna’s eyes twitched. “Her parents let her do everything she wanted…” She clutched an invisible force. “She was going to make us respected… feared… Then Nerehc took her from us… now we’re nothing…” A high-pitch ringing was rising in her head, and only she could hear. “COME BACK TO ME, LORD ALUBEEEEEEN!”

Pat was checking his frowning face in a mirror, ensuring his features were perfectly symmetrical. “Yes, females are ‘lords’ in this universe…”

Miss Llubhcnurt’s Room

“Doot, doot-doot dooooo, doo-bi-di-doo, doot, doot-doot, dooooo.” The warden hummed merrily to herself in her resting quarters, which could easily be mistaken as a little girl’s room. She was putting eyeliner on her lashes. “Oh, how I cannot wait for dinnertime! Those dears must be ever-so excited to show me their new kitchen. I hope those tutors finish with their four in time, I just don’t like leaving anybody out. Now let’s see- oh! My lipstick, of course!” She opened her drawer, took the red stick, and began rubbing it on her lips.

As she viewed her own progress in the dresser mirror, her image strangely wobbled. “Oooo, now that’s funny. I didn’t purchase one of those silly mirrors again, did I? Those things ALWAYS get me!” She stood up and grabbed both sides of the mirror to straighten it. “My, what an odd refraction. I’d almost say it’s, wh-wh-whoa. WOOOOOOHHH!” She clumsily keeled forward and through the liquidated mirror.

Zordoom; Trunchbull’s cell

The discharged muscular principal washed her hands with gusto, splashing water onto her sweaty face before staring at her mirror. “Ahh, you put in a good effort today, Agatha, it’s a shame those blowhards don’t follow your example. Well, I’ll whip ‘em into shape one way or another. Prison’s no different from school,” she walked away, “and ‘long as I’m around, they’ll-”

“-WOOOOOH!” Ahtaga Llubhcnurt tumbled out of the mirror onto her back, startling Trunchbull. The imprisoned principal curiously stood over her, exchanging a strict, grouchy look with Ahtaga’s bright smile. “Why, hello there! You look just like meeeee!”

“Who in bloody blazes are you?”

Galactic Juvy

Ayamik’s friends managed to talk to the DNKG agents for half an hour before they got bored. Nerehc stood up eagerly when they returned. “So what’s the news?”

“They hate you.” Ayamik replied.

“Indubitably.” agreed Oelak.

“A great amount.” Pat said.

“I don’t see what’s so special about small things.” Flow commented.
“Well, we tried our best.” Ininap shrugged. “There’s no gettin’ them on our side now.”

Nerehc sighed. “I’m not giving up, yet. GUARDS, bring them all out here.”

The stone, toad-like aliens in metal armor held the four juveniles by the arm (and Beewv in one’s fingers) as they brought them before Nerehc. “I don’t care why your love for DNKG was so great, or how or why you could respect Aluben. I don’t care how much you hate me, because our universe is in danger. A cataclysm is coming, and we all have to work together to save everyone. Humans and aliens, Negatives and Positives, fighting each other isn’t going to help that. So if I get your butts bailed out of here, can we at least focus on the bigger picture?”

The aliens exchanged glances with each other. Nerehc made a very valid point, a universe-wide cataclysm was something they’d like to avoid. …What a load of crap.

Avakam kicked away from her guard and swiped his electric gun, shocking him in the mouth before shooting the others to free her friends. They jumped Nerehc’s crew as Atnort swiped the Devil’s Sword, holding it to Nerehc’s neck. “Let all the others out of their cells or I’M bending his blood!”

The guards exchanged worried glance- “NOW! !” A guard nodded at another before he ran down the hall to an emergency ‘Recess’ switch. The guard pulled, and alarms blared as every barrier disabled.

Former DNKGs and general juveniles trashed the facility, overpowering every guard who, apparently, wasn’t trained for this kind of drill. Psychotic kids were stronger in numbers. Sicnarf punched Atnort away with Armament, then elbowed Annaira back, but the former still took Nerehc’s Devil Sword and bolted. Nerehc tried to chase, but Beewv had gotten up his pants leg and started biting his skin, slowing the boy’s progress as he jumped while trying to smack Beewv out.

Avakam swiped two more shock-guns from fallen guards and shot Sicnarf, who rolled and dodged before running at her. Ininap balled her fists to fight Annaira, but although the latter was chi-blocked, her punches easily bruised Ininap’s baby skin, knocking the human down before picking her up by the neck. Sicnarf about-faced, forced to cease attacking when Anna threatened his sister, allowing Avakam to easily shock him in the back.

Nerehc managed to grab Beewv out and throw him against the wall, but storms of juvenile aliens piled on him. Nerehc punched, kicked, and bit to get away, Wall Jumping across the hallway to get over most of them, otherwise jumping across their heads. He saw the white glow of his sword drawing farther away in Atnort’s hands. He stumbled and fell into the crowds, the followers of Aluben ragefully whaled on him, prevented him from standing. Nerehc reached his open hand and called, “GHIRAHIM!”

The diamond-skinned spirit appeared from the sword, punching Atnort in the gut before taking the blade back. “Master.” He smirked, tossing the sword across the crowds so Nerehc could jump up and grab it. Ghirahim stood with him back-to-back as the aliens stepped away.

“End of the line, Ner-Ner.” They whipped around to face Team Aluben, who held Sicnarf and Inap hostage as Avakam aimed a gun at the latter’s shuddering, teeth-clattering head. “You destroyed our leader and got us thrown in here. We’re officially taking over Juvy, and our first order of business is getting rid of you. After we kill your friend.” She cocked the gun, and Ininap shut her eyes.

“EEEEEOOOOOOOOUUUUGH!” This thundering roar was followed by a sudden quaking of the halls. This quake resulted from Agatha Trunchbull’s herculean punch. “EVERYONE get back in their cells for a headcount or you’re ALL being shoved someplace so dark, you’ll BEG for the alien crows or whatever you bloody have to be able to fly by and land their droppings on you. NOOOOOOW!!!” Miss Llubhcnurt stood behind her, clapping giddily.

Avakam, Atnort, Annaira, and Beewv cowered behind Nerehc. “WE’LL BE GOOD! Please save us!” they chorused.

“Yes, your loyalty to Aluben lasts only as long as your fear.” Nerehc eye-rolled.

“You are truly outlandish.” a voice said beside Trunchbull.

“Ex-CUSE MEEEE??” she screamed directly at Ayamik, whom wasn’t phased at all while waving the fan at her powdered face.

“The only possible excuse for your behavior is you were born supernaturally large and old, ergo your premature instincts allow you to become the ‘big bully’ of the playground, not that your intelligence is anything to celebrate.”

One expected Trunchbull to rebuttal. Her mouth opened, she raised her index finger, but she stopped herself. “Hmph… I like this girl.” she said to Llubhcnurt. “You should find more of them. Congratulations, you’re officially Miss Trunchbull’s Number One.” She smacked Ayamik’s back forcefully. “Now everyone report to the kitchen for cleaning or we’ll be using your misc. alien limbs as scrubbing utensils.”

As everything inside was settling down thanks to the school’s new co-warden, Miss Llubhcnurt was seeing their guests and the four students off. “Thank you all for coming, and for helping our students. We’ll truly miss these four, but we hope you come back to visit.”

“We probly won’t miss this place.” Atnort remarked.

“Thanks for letting us in, Miss Llub.” Nerehc said. “You’ll give Ayamik’s friends those coordinates to Earth in case they wanna come back, right?”

“Why, of course I will. I must say, this woman is such a delight! Already 10 minutes and we feel like long-lost twins.”

“HURRY UP, you silly wannabe backwards version of myself or I’m feeding this steamed broccoli to those Iceans.”

“Oops, that’s my call!” Llubhcnurt flushed. “You four behave, now. Toodle-o00000!” She wiggled her fingers joyfully as the operatives returned to the ship.

The S.U.B.-L.O.O.C. was leaving Noreciv’s atmosphere with the four new passengers handcuffed in the back. “So recap us where from the universe this ‘cataclysm’ idea came from?” Beewv inferred.

“I guess your spies never got the chance to tell you.” Nerehc figured. “I’ll explain on the way, and we’ll let you hang out on Earth until you’re, how we say, ‘rehabilitated’.”

“You can’t really expect us to play along too well.” Annaira stated. “Even after all your talk of peace, you killed our leader.”

“…Aluben’s not dead. She’s alive in the Underworld, I requested it.”

“She’s… alive?” Avakam asked, confused.
“Mm-hm. And if you behave, maybe I’ll take you to see her.”

Dnaleci; Gnik Household

Ragaj Gnik sat alone in his basement. It was so dark, you couldn’t even see his face. Just hours ago, he had lit the green light for his allies, Team Gnik, to begin their journey. Meanwhile, he would be tending to his own tasks. “Egroeg! AlyakAm!”

His son and daughter came down the basement stairs. “Yes, Father. What is it?” Egroeg asked tonelessly.

“The doomsday we have known was coming is upon us. But I am still a long time away. I have yet to make ready for my master’s arrival. That is why… I want you to go to the Posiverse.” Ragaj trembled with fury, but his tone remained moderate. “A precious item was stolen from me! It was stolen by my Positive! I want you to get it back…”

Because Wendy needs her Romeo-kun! ^D^ So yeah, you could also consider this a sub-sequel for Down in the Negaverse, I was querying how I wanted to make their chapters, I figure I’ll do them like Negaverse in the form of quick-resolved shorts. I mean, it kind of worked out back then. Next time, we’ll go to Orchid Bay, and Gustah we’ll go after Corn-Clamber Boots. And stuff. ;P
Chapter Summary

Cheren Uno and Nolan York learn some important information tonight.

Welcome back. So these next few chapters will be about getting the first Light, er, second. Yeah, you know how in Firstborn, you go through a lot of crap to find one Firstborn, this story’s really no different, what with character and world development. But finding this Light, we’ll at least be a step through.

Chapter 7: Under the Night

Excess Express (Play “Excess Express Night” from Thousand-Year Door.)

Cheren and Mom sat at opposite ends of a candlelit, curtained table, beside a window with a lovely view of the blue night sky and starlit desert, rushing rightward as the train was in motion. A peaceful tune was playing via the train’s speakers as the slim older woman poured two glasses of wine. She lightly shook hers in the air and spoke with a smooth smile, “Care to try the champagne?”

“You know I’m not old enough.”

“Really, ‘cause I couldn’t tell.” she said with a snarky tone, guzzling her glass in one gulp.

“So who’s this boss of yours. Why do you want me to kill her?”

“Funny, I never said it was a ‘she’.” Mom smirked.

“…”

“You’ve heard of the Corporate Presidents, haven’t you?”

“Only stories. Never saw what was so great about them.”

“Well, of course they’re great. They’re second only to the World Leaders in political power.”

“World Leaders?”

“Of the World Government, of course!”

“World Government?”

“My, what do they teach you in school nowadays? Would you be interested in a little story?”

“…”

“As you know, the multiverse is contrived by many universes, and those universes contrived by millions of planets. And each universe has a few what are known as ‘Core Worlds’. Worlds where a great concentration of energy in the universe is focused. One of them for this universe is Planet Avalar. Can you guess another Core World?” She smiled slyly.

“Ummm… Flora?”

“EARTH, YOU DINGWAT!” She banged the table. “Ah-he-hem…” she calmed down. “Earth is one of the Core Worlds, and has the strongest concentration of energy. For that reason, around 4000 years ago, a group of humans came to this planet and established a secret dominion. They at first called their selves the Illuminati, but eventually came to be known as the World Government. For eons, they oversaw this world’s operations, and see almost every activity that occurs. Their one goal is to assure the peace and order in this world, and to help them, they have the Corporate Presidents For Children’s Entertainment.”

“And that’s you guys?”

“The Corporate Presidents is a team of business owners who specialize in children’s toys and brands, but they make stuff for adults, too. The reason is that the fate of this world rests in those who will inherit it, the younger generation, so who controls the youth, controls the future. That’s what the World Leaders intend from us Corporate Presidents. But due to my actions in Galaxia, I’ve lost millions, and now the Head President is chewing my ass off. That’s why… I’ve been plotting to kill her, and seize the throne. Of course, I couldn’t do that myself. Someone else needs to take the fall.” She smirked wickedly. “You…”

Cheren glared. “But why use me to do your dirty work?”

“Because you were the snot-nosed urchin who defeated that Nature Goddess. Your father was the even-snottier urchin who saved the universe. And you and the Head President… are connected.” Cheren’s expression didn’t falter. “You are clearly on equal grounds with her power. And on top of that, we Corporate Presidents are currently opposed against you KNBrats. Killing our leader would give you the advantage. I, on the other hand, don’t care about our silly ‘purpose’. I just want to make a lot of money. True, the World Government would be disgusted with you, but they already are. The only advantage will be yours.”

“Well, what happens to me after I kill her?”

“You promise not to blow my cover, I promise not to blow your ass off. But I can’t stop the other presidents from doing the same. That pleasure is theirs.”

“…”

“The other presidents will be boarding this train tomorrow morning at 7. We’ll be heading to a gathering of bigshots and nobles from around the world. Their kids will be on this train too, so you’ll have to stay hidden. After all, it’d be a real shame if TWO big-time bigshots met with an untimely demise.”

“Yeah…” He still looked smug.

“WWWALT! You three show Cheren to your room. No reasonable classy bigshot would DARE step in there. Myself included.”

“Yes, Mother.” Walt nodded. “This way, Mr. Uno.” The three brothers marched off to the back of the train.

“Just a second.” Cheren said quickly, holding up his DS. “Does this place have Wi-Fi? Figured I’d spar a few rounds with Panini while I’m waiting to commit murder.”
“Oh, fine.” Mom eye-rolled. “Just don’t contact anyone. Walt, give him the password.”

“Very well. Let us proceed.” The sons continued leading him to the room.

Civic City, Rhode Island (Play “Across the Arkham” from Batman: Arkham City.)

A pitch-black night over a city that’s less than colorful. A sea of clouds blocking the sparkly stars and their light. And some guy in a trenchcoat and gas mask seated atop a tall building in a wheelchair. He skimmed the city with binoculars. Few cars roamed, and the only people throughout the streets were suspicious types. Quietly gliding to his perch was the witch in the purple cloak, Wiccan, and floating on a small ice platform, Frosty Coldman. “Welcome to the Nightclub, guys.” said the Sandman.

“I can’t bear to miss any meetings.” Crystal sighed. “What’s today’s grand heist?”

“Doflamingo.”

“I think you meant to bring us to California?” inquired Yuki.

“No, Doflamingo, President of Doflamingo Incorporated. They create toys that talk and interact with their buyers, no batteries attached.”

“Oh, I was always so curious about those things. Such an odd technology, I just had to get ahold of it. Never had the money.” Crystal explained.

“Well, now you won’t need any. I read that a huge shipment of Doffy Toys are being delivered to the local Toys 4 Grab. Run by workers of his company, no less. We’re going to interrogate ‘em and see if they know anything about Caesar.”

“That guy again?” Yuki asked. “Didn’t we trust him in Kids Next Door’s hands?”

“Flamingo was one of Caesar’s customers. I think he has something to do with Caesar’s escape. And even more to do with trying to destroy the KND.”

“What makes you say that?” asked Wiccan.

“It’s, eh… hard to explain. …I see their trucks now, let’s go. And careful of any Triads no one’s bothering to arrest.”

Stage 11: Civic City

Mission: Get info on Doflamingo.

And so began a calm, gentle glide across the damp city. While regular people had to walk busy streets, they could fly over everything and swing from roof to roof, ‘cause they were superheroes. They could cause any sort of property damage because they were superheroes. And beatin’ the crap out of any individual in the name of justice. “The Flamingos control a lot-a this area, and they staked the Triads into helping look after things. I wouldn’t be surprised if one or two satellites wasn’t under their control. If we get ahold of them, I can listen in on their conversations.”

Their first destination was a high balcony where thugs were refreshing in the pool, the satellite active behind them. They took land on the roof just above the pool. “Ahhhh, I tell ya Shin, the best part of Summer is the easing of soul after a hard, hot day.” said one of them. “I dunno what these bird guys are about, but ‘long as we rent out this suite, I ain’t complainin’ one… HEY, it’s Sandman!” Lying back, he could easily spot the three heroes on their perch.

“Distract ‘em.” They dropped down as Crystal and Yuki began wailing on ‘em, while Nolan hooked the satellite up to his wristwatch. Yuki raised ice shields against two firebenders before flipping upside-down and spin-kicking them across the heads. Crystal pelted fireballs at two more, but they sank in Shadow Veils and slithered to her, the witch leaping high and performing a Ground Quake to pop them into the air, and afterwards batting them away with her staff. She watched as Yuki leaped over the pool, and she quickly batted the thugs into the pool as Yuki blasted ice down and froze them all solid.

“Sorry. Winter’s come early.” He smirked. The thugs were merely trapped with shocked expressions.

Sandman unplugged his watch from the satellite. “Almost there. Now I just need one more.”

“That’s not right!” frowned Crystal. “Videogame tradition is three!”

“Yah, well this is thah new, age, so Ah only need TWO!” proclaimed Nolan in a gangsta fashion. “Alright, let’s go.”

The three glided again over the city until they spotted a satellite atop a fairly tall skyscraper. “Stay down.” Nolan said as they stopped on a lower building, seeing the red beams skimming around from the tower. “They have snipers. Let me just sneak up from below.” Nolan glided to a low area on the building where he could begin climbing a ladder that led up and around, his wheelchair also grabbing it with short claws so it could climb with him.

“You might be able to with Swanson, but it’s hard to make jokes about that cripple.” Crystal commented. Sandman tried to climb quietly to avoid rattling the fencelike ladder, but the building had branches with mirrors aimed at the ladder so the snipers could check it real quick. It was a matter of waiting for their lasers to leave so he could progress up the zigzag fence. The ladder eventually brought him to a round walkway just under the snipers’ area. He tossed a few quick boomerangs to knock two of them dizzy, tempting the others to coming over. With that, Nolan climbed up a ladder behind them and threw a smoke bomb to cloud them inside, allowing him to knock them out without being seen.

He then climbed up to the satellite and linked his wristwatch to it, downloading the Wireless Communications Network to 100%. “Hey, you been to that new restaurant with all the singin’ animals?”

“Freddy’s Pizzeria? No way, that stuff always gave me the creeps.”

"I been there once. Damn things smelled like carcasses. Made the bar behind the motel smell like a meadow."

The thugs’ conversation playing on his wristwatch, Nolan glided back to Yuki and Crystal. “Well, I downloaded their Wi-Fi. Now I’m the ultimate eavesdropper. And I can check my Yahoo, deviantART, and my wiki stuff whenever I want.”

“Did you mark on the wiki how I’m totally fabulous?” Crystal smirked.

“In all ways. Now let’s fly to the toy store and try to sneak in.” His new communications link also marked the location of the store a few miles from here. It was big enough to see on their own, given enough flying, but to make it easier for first-time players. They trekked across the roof of the store, swiping a small, green ‘?’ trophy that was between two vents, before crouching below the back ledge and spying on a truck driving to park near a backdoor. Groups of men in pink feathery coats and slanted sunglasses came out to haul boxes into the door.

“If only more business tycoons allowed their workers to have such fashion.” Crystal sighed.

“Yeah, if you’re into punk rockstars. Let’s follow them.” Once the men were inside, Nolan and co. dropped down to try and enter the door, but it was unfortunately locked by a terminal. Nolan attempted to hack it with his new Wi-Fi, but such a task was, shall we say, gargled? By static? You know what I mean. “Crap. Guess these are on a different system. There must be some way-” But that’s when his com. network made an eerie, whirring sound mixed with static. “Wait a second, someone’s trying to get in! What could…” Nolan switched on an overview map of the network and scrolled around ‘til he found the source of the sound.

The voice on the other end was on a very high volume and echoing. “HHHHHHHHhhhh... hhhHHHELLO, Sandman. Or should I refer you as ‘Caveman’, since you are a simple Neanderthal.”

“And this is?”

“I am Edward Nigma, THE RIDDLER! Of course, Gamewizard was going to replace me with some  rip-off called The Puzzler, but THEN he decided why not stick with the original? After all, I suppose we have ONE too many knock-offs around these parts. But I must say, the guy in the bat suit was far more interesting than you.”

“Whaddyou want, Nigma?”

“A little raven told me you were on the hunt for a certain bird. Which, judging by you being on this network, I was NOT misinformed. I have something that may help you, but it comes with a riddle. Is your brain up to the task?”

“More than yours is.”

“Very well then. Ahem. ‘You come to me in seek of pleasure. We drain your pride, like a parasite. What am I?’”

“Is it a place we have to find?”

“Who knows. Is the great Sandman afraid?”

“You wish.” With that, transmission ended as the trio returned to the rooftops. “Okay, a place that drains pride like a parasite, and we go there for pleasure. Shoot me ideas.”

“A bar?” Crystal asked. “We go there for pleasureful booze and cheers, slowly drowning our pride.”

“No no, if it’s like a parasite, then the other side would benefit.” Yuki noted.

“Well, bars take our money.”

Nolan was quickly putting two-n-two together. “It might be the answer, but… I got one other idea.”

So following his map, they glided to the city streets and landed before a small building with a light-up line picture of a woman and the words ‘Slim ‘n’ Sexy’ (in which the lights were out). “A STRIP club??” exclaimed Crystal. “Nolan, just WHAT is going on in that mind?”
“Hey, it’s just an idea, and the pieces sorta make sense. Let’s just check it out.” The building was dark and abandoned, but Nolan switched on Detective Vision for any secrets. One of the poles was curved like a cane at the top, and some invisible light-green painting was on it. Curious, he walked around the right pole, which was a few inches shorter and had a green painted dot on its top. Positioned correctly, the green paint on the curved pole, above the green dot on the shorter, made it look like a question mark. Nolan snapped the image in his digital camera. After analyzing it, a series of numbers and letters were scattered within the paint, which Nolan began to decipher and organize.

“Very impressive, you dirty-minded cretin. I look forward to the day I can challenge you directly. Until then, try your best to find the trophies I left scattered around. I’m sure if fate calls, you’ll be wandering around their respective towns.”

Side Mission unlocked: Find all of the Riddler Trophies in Nolan’s levels.

“So whaddid that do.” Yuki said.

Nolan tapped the screen a little. “I think this gives me a list of passcodes to Doflamingo’s terminals. Not sure how the Riddler managed to get ‘em and hide ‘em here. Let’s try and get in now.”

They made their way back to the toy store, and using the Riddler’s code, managed to hack into the terminal. A firewall attempted to throw him out, but he decrypted the code ‘Playtime’ and unlocked the door.

Team Hero passed down a dusty, narrow hallway, finding two steam currents from broken pipes that blocked their path. Yuki tried to throw ice and freeze them, but nothing came out of his hand.

“Do they have this place chi-blocked?”

“That’s why you wear that back-up.” Sandman noted.

“Guess so.” Yuki shot ice from his pack instead and froze the pipes shut, letting them pass. A stairway led up to a higher path, but Sandman first checked the enclosing on its left, finding a Riddler Trophy stacked atop some crates. He pulled it down with his grappler before proceeding up the stairs. He stopped his friends before a doorway on their left, where a sniper appeared to be eying the spot afterward. Nolan viewed backward and noticed the alignment of crates on high shelves along the left wall, and was at a point high enough to latch the top shelf with his hook and pull up. Crystal and Yuki joined him (the latter having to share Crystal’s staff) before they viewed the gap and noticed a vent on a high point on the dead end wall. Nolan shot his grappling hook up to yank the latch off, whipping it to himself and catching it so it wouldn’t make much noise. “Crystal, I can’t get in there ‘cause of my chair, you’ll have to glide over and crawl in. Look for a way to take out the sniper.” Crystal nodded and glided over, quietly crawling into the duct. She found an exit above a tall shelf of crates, where she had perfect view of the sniper on a lower shelf of crates. She quietly glided to the floor away from him, snuck up to the point below his perch, and rolled into the shelf, making it shake and for the sniper to fall. With that, she quickly ran up and bashed him with her staff, knocking him out.

She signaled for Nolan and Yuki that the coast was clear, and they all regrouped in this storage room. In the far left corner was a door sealed with a terminal, so Nolan began another hacking segment. He decrypted the password ‘Smiles’ before the door opened. They came into another short hallway before the door that brought them into the store. Nolan switched on his Detective Vision, and all of the 9 men roaming the aisles were marked orange. He quickly gestured his friends to follow as he grappled up atop a duct near the ceiling, where they had view around the whole expansive store, and all of the guards in pink flamingo coats.

“They all have guns.” Sandman whispered. “I’m sure one or two of them know something about Caesar. But it’s too risky to question every single one—we’ll have to take the rest out and interrogate the last one.”

“Traditional Arkham style, got it.” Crystal agreed.

So they all glided different directions—except Yuki and Crystal had to stay together. Nolan glided to the first unsuspecting guard walking down an aisle and cupped a hand over his mouth ’til he fainted. He then flew back above the ducts to view Yuki and Crystal sneaking up on separate guards. But that’s when Nolan noticed the collar around the man he just took out’s neck, which began blinking red as alarms blared around the store. “Intruder alert. Intruder alert.”

“Max better not be sleepin’ on the job again.” a guard said.

“Let’s go see what’s up.” Crystal hurriedly knocked out another guard before he turned, while Yuki froze the floor at a guard’s feet to make him slip before the former escaped. “‘EY! Someone’s IN here!” The guards were scrambling to find the intruders as the three went into hiding. Two of the guards climbed atop shelves and aimed sniper rifles around, even taking time to search the ceilings. Yuki was hurriedly running around the aisles as a guard was on his tail, planting his back against the end of one as he sensed the guard approaching quietly. Yuki whipped around quickly and slammed the guard to the floor, knocking him out.

A sniper turned to the area where he heard a slam, so Nolan quickly glided down to knock him out from behind. Unfortunately, the other sniper took sight of him and began rapidly shooting, Nolan retreating back above the ducts before too many bullets got through his coat. Crystal ended up cornered by two guards, quickly spinning her staff to block their bullets, then switched the setting on her staff as she leaped in the air, and performed a Ground Quake to knock them down. She quickly jumped on one’s stomach and bashed his head unconscious, then ran away before the other guard recovered.

Yuki hid behind another aisle end when he heard someone coming, freezing the floor with his pack to make them slip. “WHOOAA!” Crystal went wobbling and sliding down the next aisle, crashing into the shelf as she and some toys fell down. Yuki blushed innocently, but when another guard came around an aisle, he jumped across the frozen floor, tricked him to slipping, then quickly took him out. The sniper took aim at Wiccan while she was down, but Nolan once again flew from behind and took him down.

The last two guards tried to chase Yuki, but Nolan tossed a smoke bomb to block their vision, flying in to take one out. The final guard shook his way out, searching around with fright for where the intruders could have gone. He heard a whoosh behind him and whipped around, seeing no one (but Yuki had actually dodged back behind the aisle). Another whoosh behind him, barely seeing a figure glide behind a shelf. He turned to walk the other way nervously, but- “GAH!” Sandman grabbed and forced his head against an aisle end.

“I’m not ruffling your feathers, am I?” he inquired.

“Aaaack! Look man, if you’re with those Triad guys, you already got this week’s payment!”

“That’s not why I’m here. You work for Doflamingo, don’t you? Know anybody named Caesar?”

“Who wants to know?”
“Someone who’s gonna merge those pretty sunglasses with your face if you don’t tell me.”

“Well uh… Doflamingo and his guys took a trip to SPACE a few weeks ago if you can believe that. Said som’in about getting a new employee but, i-it sounds ridiculous I know.”

“I’m a fan of the ridiculous. Anything else?”

“Well… word around the underworld is Doflamingo’s become a distributor of Bang Gas, selling to certain… buyers.”

“What kind of buyers?”

“Some say it’s a bunch of drug-dealing teens—if you can believe that!”

“You’re not telling me everything!” He pressed harder.

“Aaaaauuuck! Look—I’m not in ‘is inner circle, I don’t know WHAT to tell you! If you’re a disappointed customer or somethin’, I guess you can file a complaint uh… ehehehe.”

“Nah. That’s all the service I’ll be needing from you.” And with one quick punch, the guard was unconscious.

As Crystal helped herself up, a limpy thin toy fell off her head. It was a Sheriff Woody toy, which she picked up and held face-up. “Is it really wrong that I found this cowboy sexy as a little girl?”

“…You wouldn’t’ve looked half-bad yourself.” winked the toy.

“AAAAAH!” She let the toy drop and jumped to her feet, aiming her staff with a frantic expression. “Electronic or not, talking toys creep me the flip out!”

“Okay okay, don’t worry!” Woody got up too and raised arms in defense. “I won’t hurt you! That is… until things get freaky in yo’ bedroom.” A very sly wink. “…OAF!” He was immediately grinded under Crystal’s staff.

“Aaaauck, I take back EVER wanting to study this technology, IT’S ABSOLUTELY DISGUSTING!”

“Oof, ‘ey, stop! You’re! Tearing! The. Stuffing!”

Nolan pulled Crystal back and picked up the toy, whose chest area was now torn with fluff leaking out. “Stuffing? Where’s the metal bars to make your limbs move?”

“Hwhat?” Woody sat up with a casual humorous smile, “All that junk just gets in the way, who needs to waste money on it when we can just speak to twerps for free!, riight? Heh, why I can’t even… Say, you’re an odd one, ain’tcha?” He observed Sandman. “You some kinda toy, too?”

“Uhhh…”

“Yes!” Crystal hugged the crippled man lovingly. “It’s my patented life-size Sandman action-figure with REAL gas-pumping action! I taught him to get around on a wheelchair, isn’t he adorable?” Nolan shoved her off.

“Another toy, huh? Well in that case, let’s you and me have some one-on-one time. You know, without thee, humans.”

“Wonderful.” Wiccan clapped hands. “Come along, my messy little brother, let’s go.” She led “Uhhhh what are we doing again?”

Nolan rolled a little forward as Woody spoke, “Anyway, since it’s just us, my real name is Randy Davis. I used to have a wife named Emily and son, Andy, but we’ve-” “WAIT! Emily Matthews?” inquired Nolan.

“Uh, no.”

“Continue.”

“Me and Andy have been growing apart for awhile. I signed up with this seminar on how to get closer to your son, where me and a few other parents met this, gross guy with a really runny nose. Before we knew it, we were glued to the ground, and everything went dark. Next thing I know, I’m on the shelf of some toy store, in THIS flimsy little body! I don’t even remember anything, except that ‘talking to twerps for free’ bit. And speaking of not remembering, wouldn’t you know it, Andy shows up and buys me! But I couldn’t tell him I was his father, and worse than that, Emily talks about never being married, or Andy having a father. They didn’t recognize my pictures, it was like I never existed at all.” He frowned with remorse. “That was 12 years ago, now Andy’s going to college so he sold all his other talking toys back to the company. Now I’m waitin’ to be bought again. …You think you can talk your owner into, buying a nighttime cuddly?” Winked again.

“But why couldn’t you talk to them? Couldn’t you yell for anyone’s help in that toy store?”

“I wanted to, but something inside my brain kept telling me not to, just, ‘pose like a toy, play with whoever buys you, you may only reveal your past to fellow toys, if you do so with any human, self-destruct is imminent’! Wait, why am I telling you, every other toy had these orders, why don’t you??”

“Because I…” He pulled his mask open slightly.

Woody’s mouth dropped. “A— human. AAAAAAAHHH SOMEONE HEEEEEELP!” He fell to the floor and ran around like a toy that’s lost his mind. “I’M GONNA DIE, I’M GONNA DIE, I’M GONNA DIE!”

“WAIT!” He tried to roll after-

“AH-HE-HE-HEM.” He stopped and looked left at a Buzz Lightyear. “Well, since blabbermouth already got us in trouble, I got some information for you. I’m forbidden from telling you much on what happened, but there’s a peculiar group of toys who, shall we say, go a little feral when the sun goes down. They’re the animatronics at Freddy Fazbear’s Pizzeria, which had a contract with Doflamingo for that very purpose. They behave as ordered during the day, but when the store is closed, theeey… go a little freestyle. I don’t know the story behind them, but rumor has it they got a look at who or what transformed them into toys. So you can go there and ask them but, honestly buddy, you look like a guy who does better with a frontal lobe. You’re better off just keeping away from that place.”

“I’m afraid that won’t be an option.” Nolan told him regretfully. “If these animatronics have clues for us, we have to take a chance. Coldman, Wiccan, let’s go.” He began his roll to the exit.

“WAIT!” The toy stopped them. “…Just what are you trying to do, anyway?”

All three turned to him, “Isn’t it obvious? We’re going to find out whatever gave you your curses and try to change you back. Sure, we can just roll up to Doflamingo and beat the crap outta him, but we need to prepare ourselves.”

“Siiiigh. Well, then… I couldn’t just let you suffer an untimely demise without giving you a few tips. The truth is, I learned about Freddy’s from a toy that was sold here a few weeks ago. A Yipperman Plus. His kid-owner ate at Freddy’s and wanted to go back and see the animatronics, dropping Yipper on the floor. The toy waited for hours, but his kid never came back. He waited all night, ’til the nightguard found and decided to safeguard ‘im ’til morning. He watched up close when the animatronics came, and forced that guard into a Freddy suit, killing him.”

The three heroes couldn’t mask their horror. “The toy hid in the restaurant for six more days, watching as a second nightguard miraculously survived. He kept track of the toys movements and wrote ‘em down in a journal, and Yipper mentioned something about reading the journal. If you’re thinking of going to Freddy’s, you need to speak to that Yipper and find out what he knows. His eyes might’ve been beady and joyous, but even I can tell when a toy looks like he’d rather have his retinas removed. The toys at Freddy’s don’t mess around.”

And Nolan could tell when even a toy was speaking seriously and caringly. “Alright.” He nodded. “Where do I find him?”

“A little rich girl bought him two days ago, the computer should have a list of purchases.”

He made his way to the front desk where Sandman began to hack the computer. “Let’s see, Shrek dollll, Mario Kart Racing Seeet, Harry Potter broomstiiiick—Sector V action figures, holy wow! And hah! Yipperman Plus, sold to Oliver Warbucks from New York City! Let’s hit the streets guys, we’re goin’ -” “Yorkin’?” grinned Crystal.

“Iiii… walked right into that one.”

“It was only a matter of time, buddy.” Yuki noted.

So with that, the heroes were rushing to the front doors, out of the store. “Call me!” Woody winked to Crystal.

“Uck!” She was over guys like him when she was 12.

Cleveland neighborhoods

Rupert, Timmy, and Hikari were forced to camp in the front yard of an unsuspecting house. It still had the natural camping experience, since the yard was as big as a forest. They gathered a few small twigs and had the Red Pikmin create a fire. The creatures allowed them to eat some of the remaining pieces of the monsters they caught today. Bulborb meat truly possessed a funky taste. Timmy and Hikari were already conked out, but Rupert was up and roasting a Bulborb chunk, staring reflectively at the fire. Normally, he would be sleeping nice and snug in his room, after Mom read him a nice bedtime story. He never thought he would be camping with a bunch of ant things. What a wild adventure this had become.

Rupert looked left at a Red Pikmin that had come up, staring mindlessly. “Oh… you want some?” He held the meat out. The Pikmin just stared and did nothing. “…I guess not.” He took it back. “But listen, thanks for all the work you guys’ve been doin’ for us. Heh, what I wouldn’t give to have you around all the time.”

“…”
“…How d’you guys feel about it, anyway? Doin’ all the work for the Minish. Don’t you all get tired?”

“…”

“…Sappo and Gibli said you guys were mostly just… weapons. Like, a means to an end. ‘Cause you don’t actually think for yourselves. You just… do what the Minish tell you.”

“…”

“…I don’t like to think of you that way. I like to think… you just need a little help getting around. And, you all support each other. ‘Cause it’s a big scary world out there. You know?”

“…”

“…Siiiigh.” They weren’t really good for conversation. “I should get to sleep. You guys’ll protect us, right?”

“…”

“…Mm-hm.” So with that, Rupert went to the other side from Timmy and Hikari and lied on the ground, head rested on his hand. He really wished he was in a comfy bed right now. The cold, messy soil, no blanket to cuddle up in. Even getting into that house didn’t sound so bad, if they could rest on the soft carpet.

But then the Red Pikmin cuddled up at Rupert’s front. On his back was a Yellow one, a Blue by his feet, a White near his head, a Wing on top, and a Purple one to hug them all. Rupert made a smile, and suddenly felt much warmer. As many other Pikmin began to surround him and his friends, Rupert surely knew. They would protect him…

Sand Kingdom, South America; Sand Castle

The Knights of the Round Towel placed the jar containing Sappo and Gibli on a shelf inside a dark closet. “STAY here and keep quiet. As if you could make much noise, ohohohohoho!” They shut the door and left them in blackness.

Sappo paced about their cell angrily while Gibli only sat. “How will we get OUTTA here, Sappo?”

“I’m thinking, Gibli. …And reaching nothing.”

“I thought you were SMART!”

“AHH, can it. But Gibli, this is the place they got our princess locked up. We gotta watch ourselves, or they might do somethin’ to ‘er!”

“Like WHAT?”

“Noooooooo! Oh, it’s so awful. WHYYYYY?”

Both siblings shuddered. “D-D-D-Did you HEAR that?”

“Oh no!” frowned Sappo. “Princess! What could they be DOING to her?”

Upstairs; Princess Shelly’s room

“NOOOOO! It’s so horrible!” Princess Gonshiri cried with the greatest agony.
“NAAAAAAAHHH! Pleah!” She spat the fruit piece at her Red Pikmin. “I HATE mangos! Bring me some pie cakes!” The Pikmin marched off to do so. “Uuugh. Toss me some of those blurpleberries.”

“Certainly.” Shelly reached to the bowl beside her couch, grabbed a berry, and tossed it to Gonshiri. The self-called beach princess was lain relaxed on a sand-made couch while the Minish Princess relaxed on a cottonball on a table in front of the couch. “The only bad thing about servants who don’t speak is you can’t tell if they understand you.”

Gonshiri began to feast on the giant berry. “So how are things at the school?”

“Ahhhhh just fabulous.” Shelly smiled. “Seeing Shorts whine and cuss over my victories is music to my ears. Especially when he has no clue of my little… secret.”

“Hmhmhmhm! Oh, well I can’t take all the credit.” Gonshiri blushed. “It was your lovely feet that executed it in the end. I merely taught how to do so.”

“Are you insinuating that YOU had something to do with my success?” Shelly smirked. “I was naturally born with my earthbending and I possessed the talent. Your blathering was just tiny noise in my ear that paid no contribution.”

“WHHHAT??!” Shiri jumped to her feet and faced her with a look of pure rage. “How DARE you talk down on me like some sniveling ANT, you…YOU…”

“Myyyyy what?” Shelly’s gigantic, snarky face loomed closer. “You simple little insect.”

Shiri couldn’t be more angry. “AAAAAAAAAHHHHH!” She leaped to Shelly’s nose and munched as hard as her tiny teeth could. Her ant-size body was unable to pierce Shelly’s thick flesh.

“PFFFaaaaa HAHAHAHAHAHA!”

“HAHAHAHAHAHAHA!” Both princesses laughed joyously. Shiri jumped off and continued munching her berry.

“Ahhhhh.” Shelly lied back on her couch, scratching that light itch on her nose. “You’re the best part of coming back here, Bugsize. You may be a royal shrimp, but you know what we princesses want.”

“Hmhmhmhm! Well, you may be royally STINKY, but you know how to stay on top.”

“Well, staying on top isn’t hard when those under you are just so puny. But don’t your subjects still need someone to rule them?”

“Oh, a sea of buffoons is still a sea of buffoons even with one smart person among them. Besides, Lenari thinks he runs everything, he can have his glory. I prefer an individual who believes they can challenge my authority.”

“Hm hrn hm. Five months and you still think you have more intellect than me. Ever since that day…”

_A boring day at the castle, Shelly kicking back, left foot over the right knee which was up in a triangle, as she munched an apple. Her knights walked in and bowed, “Princess Shelly: we hath brought to you, a new servant. A princess from a distant land.”_

_She swallowed, “Princess?”_
A knight placed a small jar on Shelly’s table. She loomed closer, seeing an extremely tiny chipmunk-like creature in a purple grass dress and flower crown, yellowish-green skin and beady black eyes. “Hmmm... she looks kind of fun. Be gone, knights. I wish to play with my new pet alone.”

“AS YOU COMMAND, Your Highness.” The knights politely left.

Shelly popped the jar open and dumped the tiny princess onto her palm. “All right, Toothcrumb, I dunno where you’re from or if you reign over a colony of ants, but I’M Princess Shelly, and if you want a decent treatment here, you better start showing your respect and doing everything I tell you.” The princess stood up, viewing the vast palm and the fingers that towered like mountains. Only a single part of Shelly’s tremendous body. “First off, my nose is really stuffy and I need someone to get those boogers that’re really far in. If I’m impressed with your work, you’ll get to sleep in my navel and use my lint for pillows, otherwise it’s the tootsies for you.”

“AUGH!” With utmost disgust, the princess leaped down to the floor. “I will NOT allow some mere peasant to pick ME up, LET ALONE believe they can tell me what to do! And judging by the sorry sight of your toenails, I see you are NOT the kind of person I wanna associate with.”

“Are you talking BACK to me?” Shelly stood with hands on her hips, so the princess could see the colossal oaf at full height. “Since your brain’s too small for math’s sake, I can understand if you’re slow to following my language. But since you aren’t bothering to listen more closely, I guess you’ll have to start from the bottom.”

“I’ll have you know my brain is TWICE the natural Minish size, including the Minish brain you needed transplanted to YOUR empty, hollow head. But I see that experiment was a bust.” She stood politely with her sleeved hands folded, eyes closed in a smug fashion.

Shelly raised a foot, “I’m NOT giving you a second option. Apologize and show your respect, or you will not end up in a happy place.”

“Hmph. You are a simple, good-for-nothing oaf. Your parents were chimps, and you are their mutated result. You have no class, no self-awareness, all you are is a gargantuan tub of lard that will never be anything more than some donkey’s last resort to lay their droppings.” Shelly has never been more enraged, never more ready to explode. To think she’d be talked down by someone that could be mistaken as a piece of dirt between her toes. To think this simple, good-for-nothing insect thought she had say. In front of HER. The Fourth Grade President, Princess of Sand Kingdom. To think she could talk high and mighty, like SHE was the tall one. And like Shelly’s foot wasn’t looming over her this very moment. “Why, a donkey’s bathroom would be lucky, your best chance is being an unsatisfying source for some leeches-”

Shelly’s foot couldn’t come down any faster. She put in great pressure, hoping this dirt was absolutely nothing now. Her foot stood half-buried in the sand for 30 seconds until Shelly raised it. The footprint was empty, but among the many grains of sand on her sole, the princess was nearly flat. She scratched lightly until the princess peeled off, regaining her senses back on the ground. … She couldn’t be anymore angry. “…I can’t BELIEVE you stepped on me, you…YOU… MOUNTAIN OF SKUNK POO!”

“... ... ...PHHHAAAAAAA HAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHAHA!” Neither of them ever laughed harder in their life.

“Huuuu... aaaaaahhh.” Shelly touched her hand-size juice glass to Gonshiri’s eeny, teeny, Minish-size one, and both drank. “But wow, I never woulda thought I actually had earthbending. I was already good at beating Shorts, now he’s probably blowin’ his brains out.”
“It seems having far bigger eyes than I do allows you to overlook more than you see.” Shiri said. “We Minish have advantage over such things. I see every intricate pattern along your skin, the very tiny follicles of hair growing in – dare I not mention, and only a royal buffoon wouldn’t feel such an incredible flow of chi inside of those mountain-size feet. Honestly, I cannot imagine anyone more hopeless.” She sipped her drink.

“Well, it certainly helps to know.” Shelly shook her glass. “Heh, wait until I reveal it to Shorts and REALLY bury his butt! What’s a bunch of teeny little bubbles gonna do, anyway.”

“Princess.” Shelly’s Blue Knight walked in. “Your father wishes to know if the two of you are fairing well.”

“Yes we ARE, you overgrown wombat.” Shiri stated.

“Get lost, Victor.”

“As you wish.” He backed away.

“How did they manage to capture you, anyway?” Shelly asked.

“I was wandering outside my tree. I assumed it was some lost gorilla judging by those feet, but who’d’ve thought I’d be some lesser primate’s filth-reliever.”

“Well, whatever the case, you’re much better off in our company.” Shelly raised her glass.

“Indeed.” Shiri smiled. “After all, what reason am I obliged to return to my kingdom, anyway? Though if I may ask, you being the princess of this, erm, what you call a kingdom, why not find yourself a nice prince?”

“Who do you think I am, some lovesick dope like my dimwitted dad? His ultimate weakness was that he focused more on finding a ‘Queen’, and focused less on ruling with an iron foot. No wonder why my mom left him.”

“I can see what you mean.” Shiri looked at her juice and shook the glass lightly. “Parents are such morons. The clearest example being your father conceived you. At least we’re here to learn from them.” She smiled.

“Well, your folks ain’t do too good a job with you, either.” Shelly put her glass down and relaxed. “Still, buy me a hundred suitors or a thousand, ‘cause I ain’t suckin’ face with no dreamboat for a long time!”

KND Moonbase

Sector V soon arrived at Moonbase and headed for the bridge. The base was fairly deserted at this time, except for Francis and Panini. “Hey, Francis; Nini.” Aurora greeted as she caught her breath. “Did you hear about-”

“Yeah, Sector Q called us, said their leader and the Roundhead got kidnapped.” Francis confirmed. “We’ve been trying to call GKNND, but we’re dealing with issues with the Earth treehouses.”

“Well, we already got Sector IC on the case.” Chris explained. “Let’s hope they can save Maddy soon. So where’s Bro?”

“Ehh, Cheren, um, well his mum called, he’s off doin’ somethin’ private.” Panini replied, scratching her head.
Artie and Haylee slapped dollar bundles in Harry’s hands. “Hehe, but if it makes ya feel any better, we’re keepin’ contact through our 4DS’s.” Panini held the pocket-sized console up. “You know, so I can whup him.”

“Well, isn’t Bro the most helpful.” Chris eye-rolled. “We thought he could give us some idea on where to go. Are we just gonna spend our whole quest flying around aimlessly, otherwise we ain’t ever gonna-”

“Well, if I must give you that ever-dying satisfaction.” A sudden voice nearly made their hearts stop.

“Midna??” Dillon gasped at the imp floating from a shadow by the office door.

“Oh well, I might as well, since I can’t stand seeing you look pathetic. I remember back when your parents were trying to find us, even THEY weren’t as clueless. You guys are sooo lucky to have a Firstborn helping you.” She gently took a seat on Dillon’s head. “But I just hope somebody doesn’t have a series of episodes like their daddy diiiiiid.” She bent upside-down and pinched his cheeks. The boy annoyedly shook her off as she returned to floating. “Anyway, here’s my proposition where you should start: about 3 years ago, Hannibal Roy Bean rescued Zant from the Brookfield Insane Asylum, and now they’ve joined the Brotherhood of Evil, in which Bean is the new leader.”

“Oh gee, our great-great-grandpa is stirring up trouble again.” Mason eye-rolled with Haruka. “What’s he got to do with anything?”

“Well, Zant is a Twilight Realm inmate, so naturally I want him caught, and Hannibal isn’t safe to let run around, either. I know these Brotherhood guys have lost their game, but there’s no harm in locking a few behind bars. Or seeing if they have any clues; if that matters.”

“Well… it’ll make good practice for when we fight the real villains.” Aurora shrugged.

“Hey, where’s Sheila, anyway?” Francis asked.

“Oh, she’s dead.” answered Mason.

“Saywhatnow?”

“She’s asleep.” Aurora eye-rolled. “I dunno what’s up, she’s been like this since we left school. Which she skipped. Yaaaaaawn… and you know what, I am too. And we still got a ton of homework to do.”

“If your mom is the principal, and SHE knows what’s up, why is she still giving you homework??” questioned Dillon.

“Those who keep up with their studies can better keep up with savin’ the universe!” Haruka spoke with a raised finger and a smart face.

“Then it’s official we won’t be doing any action today.” Chris said. “And Arceus knows Sheila won’t be, finally tuckered out after all this time.”

“Yeah, I’m kinda tired with flyin’ all day, too.” Haylee said, stretching her back. “Whaddya say we do some homework, hit the hay, and go after these Brotherhooders first thing tomorrow.”

“Siiiigh.” Midna sighed. “Lazy humans. Just like a certain someone I used to know. Well, don’t think I won’t be there tomorrow to keep you on track.”
“Like Mama’s nagging over us.” said Harry.

“I sure hope Cheren’s home by the time we wake up.” Aurora sighed as they all walked to the hangar. “‘Cause I know something will go horribly wrong.”

Sector IC S.C.A.M.P.E.R.; Galaxia

“You know, we should sing a song. Just to keep things spirited.” George said.

“Look George, just because you want us to be happy like a bunch of goofy girls, doesn’t mean we do,” Terry stated. “…Present company excluded.”

“Come on, Terry, I bet it’d be fun!” MaKayla said brightly. “Get our blood pumping, let’s try! Ahem:” She swayed her head left and right and waved her index fingers, “Rainbow Monkeys, Rainbow Monkeys, all so very round, and-…”

“AWWW, NOOO, NOOO.” The others begged her to stop.

“Let’s just enjoy a nice, quiet-” But Miyuki’s sentence was cut short when a sneaky spy popped out of the wire compartment.

“WHEEEE!” Suki flew out with the purest joy and scared everyone. “We’re going on an adVENTUUUUUURE! I’m so GLAD you took me, Sister-chaaaaan!”

“NO ONE INVITED YOU!” they all screamed.

“Suki, what are you doing here?” Miyuki asked.

“I heard you were gonna go UPPYYY, and I wanted to go WITHIIIEE! And MOM told you to WATCH MEEE!”

“Siiiiigh, just great.” Terry slumped in agony. “We couldn’t go on one trip without the icemouth.”

“Well, you wanted a more spirited ride.” MaKayla sweatdropped as Suki skipped in place.

“Hm, hm hm, hmmm.” Suki couldn’t look more carefree. She was wearing shoes and socks due to the warmness of the ship.

“Okay, Suki, you can come. But don’t you wanna take a nap, it might be a long ride.” Miyuki said.

“Are you kidding? I feel GREAT, Sister-chan! I don’t feel TIRED at all! I’m so happy we get to-! ….Yaaaaaawwn… not tired at all.” Her smile was wide, but her eyes were half-closed.

“Hm hm hm. Go to sleep, Suki-chan.” Miyuki smiled.

Before they expected, Suki’s hands were folded under her cheek, fast asleep. Her happy smile ensured she was having good dreams. “Ugh, thank God.” Terry proclaimed. “Gotta tell you, Miyuki, you know how to tame a newborn.”

Miyuki kept her smile and watched her sister calmly as she slept.

Dream Realm; Hall of Doors

After that unfortunate bumping-into of the random construction site, Sheila regained herself after diving through the portal. The Hall of Doors was a beautiful place, a forest with the lushest green trees and colorful plants. The sky was pitch-black and lit with endless white stars, and its very image reflected off the river that flowed through the forest. The water was so still and clear, it appeared the endless stars of space lay right beneath them as well as above, and Sheila might actually believe that if she wasn’t wet just now. Across the river from where she was sat a catapult that was launching nothing, and looked like the one she rode in the level just now.

“Welcome to the Hall of Doors.” Murfy began. “World Map for your particular storyline. Here, you can enter ALL the areas of the Dream World. Just choose a portal and dive on in. Hey, we oughta make that a catchphrase! Dive on IN! Heh ha! That’s trademarked.”

Sheila saw the labels over the portals. She was just in Toons in Trouble, the next portal read Christmas Dream. She approached as the catapult vanished, and two Waddle Dees skied past this portal. “So’m I s’posed to jump in?”

“No, you’re supposed to stand here and listen to repeating music. Whaddyou think, Sherlock??”

So Sheila faced the portal and took three steps back. She ran unflinching and dove in, excited for the next adventure. (Play “Snowy Fields” from Kirby’s Epic Yarn!)

Stage 12: Christmas Dream

Mission: Find the next Light.

A chill fell on Sheila’s toes as she spiraled out of the portal. Her feet sank in the snow upon coming out, and a towering building of ice stood before her, snow falling everywhere gently. Sheila hurried to the front gates as Waddle Dees were skiing around the outside ice-rink, with one of them holding the key to open the gates. Sheila ran to it, throwing Light Fists, but the Dee tossed the key to another, and then another, and the cycle kept repeating as they swiftly dodged Sheila’s fists. With that, Sheila decided to be more adventurous and ski around on her own two sandals, steadily making it to the current Dee and whacking him with her tail. It still tossed to another Dee pair, so Sheila kept the pattern going until all the Dees were down.

Sheila opened the front gates to the outer courtyard of the Christmas Tower. There were plenty of holes around the ice, in which a Muddibog switched around them, throwing ice chunks when it emerged, which only hurt Sheila a little. The enemy was still aggravating, so she punched Light Spheres everywhere as it quickly dodged, but one of the spheres ricocheted behind and took it out, causing it to drop a blue can. Sheila approached it curiously as it shone a great beam, watching as her very clothing changed blue, and metal teeth appeared on her knuckles.

“Wowzer, Sheila!” Murfy exclaimed. “You found the Swing Suit! With this, you can swing on Purple Lums. Not as long-lasting as Rayman 3, but we can’t make it too easy!”

Sheila had to hop onto a square platform listing up and down along a ledge on the side of the tower, and from that ledge, Sheila could begin swinging some floating purple rings with eyes and wings—the Purple Lums, around the tower, until she arrived on a new ledge. However, another path of Purple Lums led backward and higher, up to a floating cage that contained some Electoons. Before the power wore off, Sheila made it back to the ledge, and from there climbed her way around the tower using a rugged portion of the wall. White Clubbas sat on platforms above parts of the wall and pushed giant snowballs down, an easy hazard for Sheila to avoid.

She made it onto stable ground before having to hop a series of small, one-platform, slippery Ferris wheels that spun around in vertical circles, making things really dizzy in Sheila’s vision. At the wheels’ end, Sheila bounced her way up a group of Bronto Burts flapping up and down. She made it to a foothold with a narrow path that spiraled up the tower, having to jump snowballs that threatened to roll her down, and were produced by a White Clubba. Sheila knocked out the Clubba once there, finally at the top of the tower where a small, blue bed lay. Tucked cozily under its frosty blanket, Suki Crystal.

“Mmmmmm…” As Sheila stepped closer, the child blinked her tired eyes awake. “Ooooooooh. Who’re yooooouuu?”

“Hey Sunshine, up ‘n’ at ‘em.” Murfy rushed, pulling the girl to her feet. “There’s someone lookin’ to meetcha! Come on, let’s go see ‘im!”

“OKAY, Mister Scary-fairy!”

Behind this large tower, starting from the top, was a great, long, icy slide that stretched for miles. With great joy, Suki and Sheila began to slide down on their own feet, their skin feeling as though the wind would freeze them in seconds, but it made it so exciting. They went whipping fast going down the back of the tower, before the slide became more wide once they were going over the snowfield. There were plenty of palm trees, boulders, pitfalls, and skiing Waddle Dees, and many routes to take around these trees. The duo split up, and Sheila was lucky enough to find a route with an Electoon cage, busting it open as she passed. When she and Suki met up again, they locked hands and joyously skied together, Sheila swinging Suki above her, then landing back down as they spun around and around. But they tripped and began wobbling, just when they launched off the end ramp and facefirst in the snow.

The two sat up and shook the snow off, exchanging pearly-white grins. They continued over a snowfield as Hoodmongers charged out to blast them, Suki joyously throwing ice beams while Sheila pelted them with Light Spheres. They were easy enemies to take down, but their feet were scorched by tiny critters scampering up to them with bombs. They were originating from a Grim Keeper, a fat Hoodlum with a big wood shield standing with her back to a colorful red building. She released the Titbits from her dress, the duo fighting them back as they tried to attack the Keeper, but she kept her shield steady. “Gee, must I do EVERYTHING? All right then.” With that, Murfy flew behind and lifted the Keeper’s dress, making her panic as she lost guard and allowed Sheila and Suki to swing two light and ice beams around either side, taking her down.

They watched her Black Lum fly off and saw she was guarding a tiny door. Conveniently, she also dropped a plate of gingerbread cookies on a nearby table, so they suspected what they had to do. But before going, Sheila noticed a switch on the back of one of the trees—which they wouldn’t see coming in—and proceeded to punch it. They heard a distant gate open, and after looking around, they found a square hole along the wall under the slide ramp. Sheila and Suki dropped down, seeing an Electoon cage hanging over a frosty pool. Suki froze the water while Sheila broke the cage, letting the ‘lectoons land safely and walk out.

The kids climbed a ladder out of the hole and returned to the cookies. Both Sheila and Suki took one and munched it happily. A shriveling, sour sensation overcame them, their faces scrunching before their bodies shrunk into themselves. With a light twinkle, they had turned into tiny snowpeople, their snowy bodies sparkling white. They had no mouths, beady black eyes, and their clothes and hair remained the same. They felt only cold in this form, but a gentle kind of cold, and felt almost completely weightless. It was such a magical feeling.

They entered the tiny passage and found themselves in a massive Christmas workshop where many small elves worked lovingly in colorful clothing. Of course, the elves were giant since Sheila and Suk’ were the size of toys, so they would have to watch their snowy forms. Elves took toys from a treadmill on their right, bringing them to shelves on the left, so the duo had to avoid being stepped on. They made it to a giant fence overlooking the wider, lower workshop below, where toys from this treadmill dropped to that one. Hanging from the ceiling were candycanes on candy chains, allowing the two to swing over the workshop. Of course, by swinging on them too much, the canes would eventually fall, leading their fluffy bodies to be splat.

A little toward the left was an Electoon cage hanging from a candycane, but it was much bigger than them and Sheila couldn’t shoot Light Spheres in this form. Instead, the duo swung to that cane and swung back-and-forth until it was ready to fall, swinging back before it did. The cage smashed open, allowing the Toons to go free. The candycanes eventually brought them over a flaming pit at the top of a machine, and when the snowkids dropped in, they were thankfully flung out by two of many gumdrops popping out, flying all the way to a giant Christmas Tree.

The tinies slid a small slide that spiraled around the tree, ringing any jingle bells they passed by. They landed safely on a branch and followed it into the tree, avoiding as Baby Burts (basically Bronto Burts, but their size) brushed across the branches and threatened to push them off. This was just like walking around an actual giant tree, but with many giant candies and blinking lights that switched colors. It was kind of mazy with all the branches connecting to one-another, and some areas had hooks holding up ornaments. A strange force tempted them to hoist the hooks up and let the spheres drop, and so they did. The first one fell directly onto an empty cup on the floor, while others bounced branches that eventually brought them to a following cup. After getting lost in the branches, they found an ornament designed like a bomb, and when they unlatched it, it gently bounced down to an Electoon cage and exploded, very quaking and unsettling at their sizes. But the Electoons were free, so they can be happy.

After unhooking every ornament they can find, they navigated to the lower part of the tree, able to jump across the rows of ornaments stationed in cups. Otherwise they would fall to the red carpet, which looked pretty heated. The platforms brought them to a series of colorful presents they could run across like happy, little snowchildren. They made it to a blue box, but were too small to climb onto a tall green box. A few boxes back, a small light-red rubber ball (a few inches taller than them) was perched, and the two were able to push it along. Parking it under the ledge, they used it to climb on the box, and from there they slid down a ruler to a further box, pushing a green rubber ball off its perch in the process, onto the floor below.

They could safely drop to the floor now as they rolled their rubber ball across the vast plain. Giant Waddle Dees ran around the floor, probably looking for something to play with, so they had to be stealthy so they wouldn’t lose their means of progressing. They made their way to a toy seesaw that was their size, the opposite end sticking up. Sheila and Suki stood on the lower end, used all the strength in their snowy bodies to lift the rubber and chuck it onto the upper end. The duo was flung onto a tiny walkway along the wall with a little mousedoor. Inside was a makeshift living room and house where a happy mouse family was having Christmas dinner. The mom cheered silently and decided to give them Red Lums, to rejuvenate any lost health.

The twin mice kids showed them the back door, finally bringing the two outside in the snow. A snow fairy appeared with a twinkly grin and pecked the two with her wand, poofing them back to normal. “I hereby congratulate you on your first—and probably only—Snow Shrink!” Murfy grinned. “Other levels’ll probably have other shrink forms. Heh—but looking at this RUPERT kid,” held up the manual, “he’s gettin’ MORE than his fair share! HEH HA HA! A’ight, on with the level.”

They crossed a normal snowfield again as Hoodmongers ran at them, no stronger than before as the girls wiped them out. They were coming to an even wider, rounder tower with platforms and paths around it. A short, slippery snowhill led onto the outer ring, and since they couldn’t walk up, they jumped some Waddle Dees that were skiing down. Before they headed up the stairs to the walkways around the tower, they explored this outer ground area, finding a cage placed in an empty back corner. After freeing the Electoons, they began the journey up and around the tower.

There were now Lemguins – penguins with very pointy beaks, sliding down the pathway on their bellies, threatening to knock the girls off their legs and slide down a few meters if they were hit. The Lemguins were fun enemies to score consecutive jump combos, and to avoid being tripped, Suki could freeze them in ice cubes, letting them still slide along like normal. They reached a dead end of this path where the Lemguins flew out of the hole, seeing the next path going the opposite direction but a few feet higher. Sheila bounced off an emerging Lemguin to reach and grab a blue can to get the Swing Suit, then held onto Suki as she swung a Purple Lum to land onto this path.

This walkway was made of mostly floating, moving platforms, where Doomtoonies were swooping by like mini warplanes in attempt to push them off. Since Sheila still had plenty of time for the Swing Suit, they jumped across quick and found some Purple Lums led further up. The Lum trail turned about-face so the duo made it to a path above the previous one. Once again, they were faced with more large rolling snowballs that threatened to send them quite a ways down, so careful jumps had to be made. The White Clubba rolling them was perched on a tall platform, short enough to jump to as Sheila climbed on and knocked the Clubba down. She helped Suki up afterward as they entered a window atop this platform, taking land on a floor inside the tower.

The inside of this ice tower was very hollow and as wide as its exterior, the walls colored a yellowish-white, covered by wooden parts as they neared the wood floor, a red carpet going around its middle. There were two floors, and this second floor was a large circle going around an open center. Eight energy chains were coming from generators, four on each floor, and connected at a human-sized cage in the center, encasing in a barrier and keeping it afloat.

The prisoner inside, a teenage boy whose form couldn’t be made out through the blue energy, noticed them. “HUH? IS SOMEBODY THERE?”

“Uhh? ‘O IS IT?” Sheila shouted, looking around.

“Over here! In this cell!” His voice was muffled by the barrier encasing him, but Sheila’s raccoon ears could hear him. “You’ve gotta get me OUTTA here! Break the eight generators making the chains! Hurry, before the things come back!”

“Blimey.” Sheila smirked and cracked her knuckles. “I’ll ‘ave these chains broken like a-” They jumped around when the window sealed above them. They heard a strange shuffling sound, looking to a nearby pipe when a swarm of little white rabbits, with frantic eyes and wide open mouths with few teeth, all piled in like a swarm of beetles that were flushed down the drain. “HIIIIIIIEEEEE!”

“Oh no! The Raving Rabbids! Don’t try to fight them, just break the chains!”

Seeing all the creatures storm in, Sheila exchanged panicked glances with Suki and ran. (Play “Vs. Dark Eco Plant” from Jak and Daxter.) The first chain was already close by, so Sheila could zip by and smash it with a quick punch. Suki tried freezing an ice wall behind them, but the Rabbids chomped through it like a cracker. They made little dancing motions as they chased the duo, but they couldn’t study them for long as the Rabbids were quick to keep up, ready to swallow them whole in those giant mouths. A narrow strip of carpet led up a wall where it turned vertical, ending at a high chain generator, so Suki skied up with an ice path to break the machine herself. The girls had to dodge walls stationed in their path, where an Electoon cage was placed behind one of them, so Sheila smashed it quick while passing by.

Sheila then Wall Jumped up two parallel walls real quick to smash the next generator up top, then hit a Spring Pad to fling over the Rabbids to Suki. They came to a yard of brown goop spaces around the floor, which they deduced as smashed Rabbid droppings, so not wanting to get their feet dirty or trip, they navigated around. The next generator was across a pool of the brown substance, so Suki froze it solid, skied across, and destroyed it. A stairway suddenly appeared before them, letting them tumble down to the lower floor, where the circle continued. The girls navigated a tall maze hurriedly before the Rabbids caught up, where Sheila had to break certain parts that were cracked. After narrowly making it out, they broke a generator.

Lemguins began to slide out from ahead of them, across the narrow middle strip of path while the sides had spikes, preventing them from going around the penguins. They performed careful concise jumps over the creatures, seeing they were coming from a hole in a tall wall, so they had to bounce off an emerging Lemguin to make it onto that wall, where they smashed a generator. They dropped to the next path as Lemguins were now coming out going their direction, three different rows as they were coming to a large pool of Rabbid dung. Suki froze two of the creatures so either of them could get on one, Suki on the right while Sheila rode the middle. However, a floating Electoon cage was placed above the left row, so Suki froze a left Lemguin quickly so Sheila could hop over and break it open.

At the end of this pool, Sheila jumped to a long handle hanging overhead, swung around it, launched to another, and from there flew to the generator to break it. She joined Suki again as they dodged a few minor obstacles, eventually reaching a dead end under the stairway they came down. An ice statue of a handsome prince was stationed, the generator on his back. They skidded to a halt and, with a furious whirl of her fists, Sheila blasted parallel Light Fists and blew the statue to smithereens. The destruction of the generator seemed to cause an immense screeching alarm that forced the girls to clamp their ears shut, but mostly the screaming Rabbids. Unable to bear this pain, their bodies puffed until all of them exploded. The alarm died down as the girls uncovered, smiling and high-fiving. (End song.)

The last generator destroyed, the boy’s cage was just floating in midair. “Wuh-oh.” As fast as he said it, the cage plummeted to the floor and smashed open, flinging him out. “Ouch!” He helped himself up and rubbed his back. “At least freeze a snowpillow for me, will ya?”

Sheila never saw Suki’s eyes and mouth grow more wide. “Jack FROOOST…” She was almost out of breath.

“Hey there, Suki.” He smiled cutely. “Thanks for saving me.”

“’ey, what’m I, chopped walnuts??” questioned Sheila.

“Heh heh he. Both of you. I was trying to find Suki and tell her something when those guys captured me. Thanks for bringing her to me. Let me show you the way out.”

Sheila followed Jack to a back corner of the massive cylinder where rested a flat, stone square tile with a swirly symbol. …For no reason, Sheila and Jack did a small dance where they spun, hands on their hips, and kicked feet in the air. This seemed to make the portal swirl to existence, so Sheila could fall in and return to the Hall of Doors. “Jack FROST Jack FROST Jack FROOOOST!” Suki bounced on her feet. “How did you get HEEEERE?”

“Well, I’m not actually him. Just a dreamself.”

“A… dream?…”

“It was the only way I could contact you, Suki. I need you to go to Planet Glacia. Find the coldest, most blizzarding part you can, and that’s where I’ll be.”
“But where is THAAAAAT?”

“You’ll know it once you’re there.” And with a charming wink, he blew away with the wind. Suki stood there in confusion before she was swallowed in brightness.

IC’s S.C.A.M.P.E.R., Galaxia

“Mmmm…” Suki tiredly got up, rubbing her half-open eyes.

“Have a nice dream, Suki?” Miyuki smiled.

“Mmmm-hm. …”

“We should be arriving at GKND soon.” Lola said. “Hey look, there’s Planet Glacia. That’s probly a fun place to visit in Winter.”

Suki’s tired eyes looked at the snow-white planet. Her eyes opened all the way in realization.

“Oooooo!! We gotta go there, we gotta go! Jack FROST is theeeere!” She tugged Miyuki’s sleeve eagerly.

“The heck we do.” Terry eye-rolled.

“Suki, how do you know Jack Frost is there?” Kayla asked.

“I don’t know, I just doooo! We gotta GOOOO, come OOOOON!”

“Suki, we’re on an important mission, we don’t have time to stop for-” But Suki approached George with a clenched lower lip and upward half-closed eyes that looked far too begging and demanding to just ignore. “Er-… Okay.”

“What?!” Terry had to protest.

“She’s probly just tired of all this heat, let her roll around in the snow for a bit and we’ll get back on track.”

“You have REALLY gotta stop playing IN ta her, George!” Terry hissed.

“Okay, onto Glacia we go.” The leader declared. “Let’s give Jack Frost his two ghost cents.”

“YYYYAAAAAAY!” Suki was so happy to go someplace cold. And ever so joyous to meet her Jackie again.

Philippines; Roxas Park

With absolutely no idea what to do, Sunni went to sit boredly at a park table. Her mom had randomly decided to train her by making her think for herself, by letting herself get kidnapped. The way Sunni clung to her all these years, it was only a matter of time before her mom decided she had better things to do. But it was all so sudden, Sunni just didn’t know where to start. So she just stared mindlessly at that white rabbit in the red jacket.

Now that caught her attention. What was a little white rabbit doing checking its watch? Now that’s strange. Why did a little white rabbit have a watch, staring intently through his glasses? Now that’s odd. Why did a rabbit wear glasses? ‘Course he shouldn’t be wasting time, he was clearly late for something. Now that’s just odd, what would he be late for?

Sunni followed him with utmost curiosity, behind a lone tree where he disappeared. But a dark hole was lain below this tree, so Sunni crouched and carefully loomed forward, trying to search where this rabbit had gone. “…! AAAAAAAHH!” She fell in the endless chasm as everything turned black.

Hmm, seems Sunni fell and hit her head. She may as well go mad. So next time, we will head to Glacia, henceforth realizing why this is called the Frozen Saga. Dress warmly for the Winter, guys. ;O
Aaaaand welcome back to Grand Seven Lights. Here we see, why it is called the Frozen Saga.

Chapter 8: Death of Miyuki

Planet Glacia

A mountain swallowed in a storm. Any soul wandering in this endless blizzard will no doubt be lost in the colds. No one would suspect, in the center of this freezing blackness, lay a marvelous blue castle made of sparkling, solid ice. Walking along this castle’s balcony, a queen with hair white as the snows, skin pale and cold, high-heels made of ice, and a flowing, sparkling blue dress that matched her icy blue eyes. She glowed with an eerie green aura as her voice echoed beyond the mountains.

The snow glows white on the mountain tonight

Not a footprint to be seen.

Kingdom of iiisoLATION

And it looks like… I’m the queen.

Don’t let them IN, don’t let them SEE

Be the good girl you always HAVE to be!

Conceal, don’t FEEL, don’t let THEM know

WELL, NOW THEEELY KNOOOOOOW!

Let it goo. LET IT GOOO!

She released a storm of ice across the mountains.

Can’t hold it back aaaaanymoore!

Let it gooo! LET IT GOOO!

Turn away and SLAM the dooooor!

I don’t care… what they’re GOING to say! The queen soared over the mountains as a shining blue star, releasing sparkling snow all over the land.

Let the stoooorm rage OOOOOOOONNN! She hovered miles over the mountain, and let her voice be heard to all corners of the continent.

With that, she flew down, spun to the castle’s front gate, and sang with a confident smirk, “The cold never bothered me, anyway.” She slammed the gates shut. And so the mountains lay swallowed in the endless storm. A town long-since ruined lay on the grounds below this castle. Within these ruins stood an ice statue of a girl who reached out in despair, her face looking as if it was desperate for warmth.

Sector IC’s S.C.A.M.P.E.R.

The blizzard blew powerfully in the skies above and they saw no ground in this darkness. “Lola, how far are we from target destination?!” George yelled.

“Dude, I’m blind as a BAT in this storm, I can’t even SEE a destination!”

“I can’t believe we’re about to die following THIS girl AGAIN!!” Terry shouted.

“I second that.” Miyuki remarked.

“Suki, are you SURE we’re supposed to be going here?” Kayla asked.

“YEEEEES! We just HAVE to beeeeee!” Suki whined. “I KNOW Jack Frost wanted me to go this way, I just FEEL iiitti!”

“Right.” Terry eye-rolled. “And WHO should we trust?”

“Look, I know it feels outta nowhere,” Kayla began, “but I have a feeling Suki’s vision meant something, so we have to try and—”

At that instant, the ship shook. “Something just hit us!” Lola screamed. “An overgrown snowflake?!”

“What’s the status on the engines?!” George yelled.

“Not good… we’re going down any minute. In the escape pods.”

She smashed a button that locked everyone in an escape pod, Miyuki wrapping arms around Suki as they shared a pod. They shot from the ship and flew random directions. “DAAAAAAAHHHH!” The sisters’ pod hit a mountain, and they were suddenly spiraling out of control.

“Sister-chan, what’s going ooooon??” Suki cried.

“I dunno, but just hang—AAAAAAHHHH!” With another forceful bump, both girls went flying out of the pod.

“MIYUKIIII!” Suki cried, flying in the darkness.

“SUUKII!” Miyuki called back, reaching for her younger in despair.

The explosions of both ships were the only light visible on this mountain.

Poshley Heights Train Station (Play “K. Rool Battle Intro” from DK 64.

The city was roaring with rich types and fans alike as the Excess Express pulled to a stop. A team of four limos stopped on the street before the red carpet that led up to the train’s entrance, the ecstatic fans blocked by thick red rope fences. The four big business tycoons were about to make their appearance and board the luxury train. The first to step out was Don Quixote Doflamingo, President of Doflamingo Inc., the Italian man in the pink feathery coat waving to his fans and sporting the twinkly smile. His son, Junior, daughter Sugar, and their friends Aeral and Bison joined him down the red rug, many women going gaga over them.

“Hnn hnn, just smile and wave, kids, give them a show.” said Doflamingo.

“Ahhh, it’s nice to be known and respected by those you don’t care for!” proclaimed Doffy Jr. “Isn’t it, Sugy?”

“These people are loud. Tell ’em to die.” She ate some grapes.

“Okay! HEY ALL OF YOU DIE!!” screamed Aeral.

“That’s kinda rude-daizokun.” Bison sweatdropped.

The next president was the gruff old man with white hair, a mustache, big triangle nose, and blue business suit. President of Pewterschmidt Industries, Carter Pewterschmidt, and his wife Babs in a red gown. They wore half-interested frowns as they walked the aisle. “Carter, please tell me you didn’t order the strippers again.”

“Look Babs, you get a hot-tub with Ted Turner, I got my own wants, you want things to work out between us we need to make some arrangements.”

The next man to walk out was the tan-skinned man in a gray suit, black hair around a bald cranium, and triangle glasses. Ted Wassanasong, Laotian President of Ted’s Golfing Galaxy, with his wife Cindy and son Chane, casually walked up to the train. “Now Chane, don’t forget to mention your straight A’s and head of the Pop-culture Club.”

“Ahh, relax, Pops, the Chane Train rolls where the ladies roll.” Chane smiled smoothly.

And finally, the purple-haired mustached man in the red suit, holding a laptop faced forward. Gozaburo Kaiba of Kaiba Corp. kept stern and cool, the face of his son Noah appearing on the laptop screen. “Wow, Dad, my first time going to a Presidents meeting! Will there be law books?”

“Just keep calm and work on your studies, Son.”

All four presidents and their guests gathered on the walkway before the door, guarded by a black-haired man with a big chin and blue suit with a tiny American flag badge. “Where the hell is Mom?” Carter asked.

“Already onboard.” Stan Smith saluted. “I mean, you know how women get, gotta get on early. My daughter, Hayley should be done with inspections any moment.”

Right on cue, Stan’s daughter came out, a black-haired 19-year-old, in a simple blue suit, black high-heels, and toneless face. “All luxury cars inspected twice, food prepared from 5-star Chef Shimi, a peaceful, pampering ride is ensured.”

“That’s good, Hayley. Now go pick up my dry-cleaning, and keep the socks organized.” Hayley ran off to carry her order. “Well uh, seems like everything’s in order, I wish you safe travels!”

“Thank you, Agent Smith.” Babs told him as the rich types all entered the train.

Sugar spared a glance at Stan and said, “That chin is creepy. I hope you get beheaded.” He glared spitefully as she entered.
Within seconds, the wheels whirred to life and began rolling across the tracks. “Agent Smith to Director Bullock,” Stan spoke in his walky-talky, “the bigheads are on the track.”

“Well done, Agent Stan. You can expect your bowl of sugar-cubes on your desk.”

“WAAAAAAAIIT!” Everyone looked when Donna Tubbs, an African-American woman with black hair (wig), white shirt, and blue pants, rushed up the steps and bolted after the train. “TAKE ME WITH YOOOOUU! Ah wanna see Obama, Ah can’t LIVE without OBAMA!”

With a desperate leap, she grabbed the back of the train and held on for dear life. She looked up when a security guard appeared and stomped her face hard. “AAAAAAAAHHHH!” She went plummeting down a steep chasm which the train rolled over on a bridge. Donna’s husband, Cleveland Brown was waiting below.

Cleveland watched carelessly and expectantly as his wife smashed onto the ground before him. He hoisted her beaten and bloody body over his shoulder. “Let’s go fix our house, Donna.” He carried her away. (End song.)

Onboard the train

“FUUUUUU fufufufufu!” laughed Doflamingo, legs rested atop a curtained table, Mom seated across from him with fingers folded. “Ahhh, isn’t this the GOOD life, Mom? You would know, otherwise you wouldn’t be on here first!”

“Hmph. I reluctantly agree.” She really didn’t like him one bit.

“BRRRRRREAKFAST is SWEEEEEERRRVED—I mean, SEEERVED!” announced Chef Shimi, a brown Cheep Cheep with a chef’s hat, and the train’s chef. “And only the finest for the fine Corporate Presidents, from the very cookbook of Maitre Delish! A classic apple pie for one who can really appreciate it,” he placed the pie in front of Mom, “the most chocolaty of Choco Cakes, the deluxe delicacy of the Chef Dyllis series, some Fried Shroom, Frozen Fries, Fruity Cakes, Hamburgers, anything fruity!, and what rich types wouldn’t eat without a Gold Meal?” The tabletops were soon completely cluttered by bunches of the most fantastic, elegant foods anyone would ever hope to eat. “But shave your appetite, because more tummy-fulfilling goodies await you at the meak! DOME, this tongue of mine! I meant PEAK! Oh, and also ‘save’.”

Walt picked up a grouping of food bunched in a dark-green shell. “We’ll just eat this in our room.” He said with his evil smile, the trio heading to the back.

“GOOD, we don’ wanna eat with the PIG sty!” Doffy Jr. taunted.

“Nuuuiii! Go eat back there-daizokun!” exclaimed Bison.

Walt, Larry, and Igner returned to their far back room, where Cheren sat on the low bunkbed and played his 4DS. “Hello. We brought you a Courage Meal.” Walt said with his hoarse, maniacal tone, setting the food beside Cheren.

“Oh, cool.” His eyes were glued on the game.

“What are you playing?” Larry asked.

“Mario Kart 4-D. So I can enjoy the smell of Panini’s defeat as I ram her with my Mega-Wheel.”

“Mommy lets us play with kindergarten girls so they’ll buy cheat codes that rip them off- Ow!” Walt smacked Igner.
“Quiet, Igner. …You should eat, Cheren.” The eldest brother smirked. “You will need your strength, for your secret assignment.”

“The only thing I need to give me strength is squishing Panini flat.” He looked more furiously and desperately drove his kart. “DAMMIT! Sigh, blue turtle shell. Weeell, uhhhh, eating’s better any day than hearing Panini’s taunts.” He slammed it shut quickly and ate his Courage Meal. “Mmm. This good courage.”

“It’s made with loooove and Mommy Juice!” Larry was smacked for his stupid comment.

“So why don’t you guys hang out with the other kids?”

“Because we are grown men.” Walt stated. “And have no time for the silly squabbles of children.”

“That’s not what Nebula told me.” He swallowed. “How’re those prep-school girls doing?”

“We’re done talking about this.” Sweatdrop. “Just keep hidden until Mom says to come out. The train will make it to the Midway Peak at 7pm tonight. We’re keeping the door locked so no one will see you. This is a very important mission for Mom, and we intend to help her complete it. Bring you lunch later.” The three left and sealed him inside.

Cheren set what remained of his Courage Meal on the nightstand and kicked back on the bunk bed. A peaceful, boring train ride to go and kill someone. That’s what it was. He had to think long and hard about this whole plan, but had to hold onto the positive vibes Sheila helped him remember. He picked up his DS and opened it.

“HA ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha!” Panini hadn’t stopped laughing for all that time.

Glacia; blizzard mountains

Miyuki groggily awoke in the vast, snowy wilds somewhere on the planet. “Mmmnn…” She held her aching head and tried to make out her position in the darkness. Even though it was dark and snowy, she oddly didn’t feel that cold. Must be used to being around Suki. …She jumped to remembrance. “Hey, Suki. George? Where are you guys?” she called into the colds. “Huh?” Finally, she noticed a body a few feet away, sloppily lain in the snow. She hurried over to turn it face up. “Hu!” Her unconscious face bore its usual frown, eyes closed. “It’s… me.” She felt her body for warmth. “Am I… dead?”

A light, vicious growl was heard, and she jumped around to find herself surrounded by terrifying monsters with skull masks, and big holes in their chests. She tried to shoot a Chrono Beam, but nothing came out. She stared at her slightly intangible hand. “I am a spirit…”

With no way to defend herself, she crouched as the monsters dove in for attack. “AaaaaAAAH!” Right then, the first three monsters in front of her were struck by a sword, and they faded into darkness.

The other three sneaking behind her were surrounded by little rag dolls, which unwound and tied them in their stitching. Their yarn originated from a skinny girl with black hair and a black coat with an orange shirt underneath.

Next, a band of green, ghastly ghost skulls soared in and flew through the monsters, causing them to stop and shudder with fear. The ghosts were commanded by a short boy with brown hair that stood up straight, dim blue eyes, and a red coat.

“Merry CHRISTMAS!” This guy needed no introduction, Jack Skellington, in his Santa Claus outfit, threw present bombs that stunned all the remaining monsters.
“I think we’ve got ‘em all.” said the girl with the voodoo dolls, her and the others throwing the creatures in a single bunch. “All yours, Rukia.”

The one who wielded the snow-white sword had jet-black hair with violet eyes, and a long black robe. “Then it’s time your souls were free.” She stuck her sword in the ground and began to wave and whirl her arms. Miyuki stared with wonder when two lines of snow began to rise and spiral around the creatures, glowing with a radiant light-blue. Rukia waved faster as the light grew stronger, quickly encasing the foul creatures. They roared to the heavens before they scattered into light particles toward the sky.

Rukia pulled the sword from the ground and said to it softly, “Thank you… Sode no Shirayuki.”, then sheathed.

“I could work with you for a hundred years and never memorize all these names.” The short boy said.

“Whoa…” Miyuki was still speechless.

“Sorry about that.” Rukia told her. “You aren’t hurt, are you?”

“No…” Miyuki stood up. “Who…Who are you guys?”

“Don’t forget about me!” Jack proclaimed. “Numbuh October, Jack SKELLINGTON!” He made a pose.

“He’s not actually one of us.” Rukia said. “He’s just a friend of ours.”

“But I was dead at a young age.” He noted slyly.

“Probably because no one among the living has. We were started about 15 years ago, by Death the Kid, for children that have passed too early before their time. Our jobs are to help other children who’ve had such fates to find peace. And normally, our deaths are the results of stupid actions done by adults, anyway.”

“Wait! Are you saying I’m dead?”

“That would be the case… why else would the Hollows be on you so fast?”

“Hollows? Those things?”

“Yeah.” Norman answered. “You know how people either go to the Spirit World or stay in the Underworld, depending if they were good or evil? Well, in both cases, some people are still really attached to things in the Mortal World, so they leave the Spirit World in a desperate and hopeless attempt to resolve that thing.”

“Spirits are supposed to be free from the bonds of the world after their death, but if they remain too attached, their spiritual energy becomes dark and distorted, and their hearts are lost. Afterwards, they become a Hollow.” Rukia explained.
“That sounds familiar…” Miyuki recalled. “It sounds like the Heartless my mom told me about.”

“Heartless and Hollows are in the same class. But while Heartless are born from still-living hearts, Hollows are born from spirits’ hearts. But they both possess the same level of darkness, almost.”

Miyuki looked down with sadness. It all revolved around the fact that, she was dead.

“Don’t feel so sad. Your spirit may be here, but we’re still sensing plenty of life force in your body.” Rukia smiled.

Miyuki gasped, head shooting back up.

“Norman and Coraline are still alive as Halfas. Half-ghosts, half-humans. But even so, they’re still able to assist the Spirit KND. And each Halfa is born with special powers that’re mainly known in their spirit states. Just like how spirits are allowed to keep elemental powers if the gods say so. What I just performed on the Hollows there was spiritbending. I can scatter their disheartened souls in light so their energy may be reborn anew in the Spirit World.”

“But it looked like you were… icebending there.”

“Actually, the icebending is from my sword, Sode no Shirayuki. The spirit inside is an icebender, and she lends her power to me. Spiritbending is actually a sub-form of waterbending, though icebenders can use it, too. Not only can it scatter distorted souls, it can change the hearts of spirits who are on that verge between darkness and light.”

“Hmm…” So much info for Miyuki to take in. She hasn’t really trained with a longer attention span yet. “So, um, this Spirit Kids Next Door… you have your own treehouses?”

“Oh, you don’t know the half of it.” Coraline winked.

“Methinks we ought to show her.” said Norman coolly.

“It’s gonna be a blast!” Jack beamed.

“Would you like to see?” Rukia inquired.

“Uhh… okay.”

Rukia took Miyuki’s hand as they all formed a circle. “WHOOOOOAAA…” Faster than she knew, a beam of light swallowed them and propelled them to the heavens. “…OOOAAAAOH.” And as fast as it came, it stopped. Even though Miyuki couldn’t have blurred vision as a spirit, she still felt the sensation to.

“We’re here… Miyuki.” Miyuki stared up in wonder, mouth partially agape. A forest of giant trees, many pathways connecting to others, their branches filled with houses among the leaves where kids frolicked and played. It wasn’t just all wood, but houses were brick, and marble, whatever material they wished, and there were hundreds of slides and fields for them to play games. Miyuki thought a utopia like this could only exist in dreams… but it was true.

“Wow…” Miyuki still had no words as Rukia led them up a path.

“This is the utopia we’ve created for these children, should they pass early. We’ve ensured them… a peaceful afterlife.”

Miyuki’s spirit suddenly felt no woes, no reason to frown. She smiled and basked in all the positive energy in this realm. ...So this... is the afterlife. ...But then she remembered something, “Wait a second, if these are all children in the afterlife, then…”

“Yes. Children die more often than you think. Whether it’s wars or adults’ selfish desires... their time comes far too early. This is what we’ve designed for them, to give them what they couldn’t have while alive.”

“Then it’s a cruel world after all…”

“I’m afraid it is. But Light exists at the same time as Darkness. Otherwise this Spirit World wouldn’t exist. Everything in this world, from the oceans to forest, is made of a special energy generated by the positive feelings of the Mortal World.”

“And the negative feelings make up the Underworld.” Miyuki deduced.

“Actually, both feelings have an influence on both worlds. They exist on the same plane, so they share the same energy. But the Underworld’s purpose is to contain the negative energy, so it doesn’t leak into here.”

“Is that why the Judgment System is held? Why some souls are thrown into prison, or into Sanzu?”

“Yes. This whole realm is based around happy thoughts or dark thoughts. If the souls of this world are happy, the Spirit World can flourish and ensure the Mortal World can be peaceful. But if souls are sad or angry, the Spirit World will become dark, and drastically hurt the Mortal World. And even though death brings peace to mortals, some build up great, evil energies during their lifetime, and the Judgment System is meant to sense that energy, to stop it from reaching here. Depending on the magnitude of the energy... the souls could remain in the Underworld as citizens if it’s fairly low, they could be thrown in Sanzu if it’s higher than that, but if it’s really bad, they could be thrown in Underworld Prison.”

“What’s Underworld Prison next to Sanzu?”

“As a prison, it’s built more for the purpose of containing negative energy, but it’s mostly meant for souls who had powers in their lifetime, benders per se. They connected to nature with their powers, therefore their influence spread to nature. That’s why they had to be imprisoned. And in the deepest confines of that prison are the souls with the greatest concentration of dark energy, so great that the Underworld wants to forget their existence.”

“Yeah, and that’s where they messed up.” Coraline mentioned. “Last year, there was a break-in, and one of the prisoners of that level escaped. Wanna guess who it is?”

“It was the dread pirate BLACKBEARD!” Norman exclaimed. “SCOURGE of the seas who rivaled Davy Jones, commanded hundreds of giant monsters and SCORCHED many towns with his dragon ship! RAAAAAAHHHH!”

“Yyyyyyeah.” remarked Cora. “Anyway, the people who broke in to save him tried to free others, but things became too chaotic.”

“So now Blackbeard is running free in the Mortal World?” Miyuki asked.

“They’ve determined he’s still in the Underworld, but can’t get any leads. Either way, it’s out of the KND’s boundary.” Rukia replied. “We’re focused on other matters. You do know what a ‘ghost’ is, right?”

“Yeah, it’s...it’s what we are?”
“Not really. A ghost is a fallen soul who never faced judgment, and may’ve returned to roaming the Mortal World as a half-dead body of ectoplasm, which is tainted Spirit Energy. Sometimes, they’ve still got a burden within the world, or they just like to run around and create chaos. But those that have burdens, and cling tight to them, will eventually become a Hollow. There’s one particular ghost we’ve been focusing on for a few years, but it’s been around for over 3 centuries. You saw the immense blizzard that was happening on Glacia’s mountain?”

“Yeah?…”

“There’s a ghost on that mountain with powerful Ice Chi that stayed with her after death, and her deep burden is causing her to create an eternal storm. It’s been our duty to subdue this spirit, but we’re never able to get close. And her negative energy has attracted many Hollows.”

“So do you want me to help you stop it?”

“It’s not your responsibility… but the fact your spirit showed itself to us while your body’s alive, must mean there’s power in your spirit.”

“I should help, anyway. My friends and sister are still in that blizzard, I have to help them before they freeze.”

“You don’t need to worry!” Jack Skellington assured. “A friend of ours is already looking into ‘em!”

“Hm?…”

With Suki, back on Glacia

“Mmmmm…” Suki woke up facedown in a mound of snow, having created a crater shaped like her body. “That coulda hurrrrrt. Good thing there was a lot-a soft, cooool snow to cool my fall.”

Light footsteps slowly crunched through the snow, and Suki whipped to attention as a slim, shadowed figure approached her. “You’re never one to stay down after you fall, huh?”

“Oh!” She jumped to her feet. “Who are youooouuuu?”

“It’s me…” His body alit to reveal his shiny white smile, clear blue eyes, and snow-white hair, “Suki.”

“Huuuuuuuu!” And once again, her eyes and mouth took the form of wide O’s. “Jack Frooooot!”

“Hey.” He just loved seeing those joyful eyes.

Wonderland

Suni indeed felt like she hit her head. Spinning and spiraling down an endless hole, where clocks, tables, couches, and TVs floated in a waving red dimension. In her swirls, she noticed a red and pink patterned floor down below, which seemed to be growing bigger as she grew closer. “Mmmf!” She landed facefirst on that floor, standing up and rubbing her head with annoyance. She looked up the endless shaft she had just fallen down. All those floating chairs and such were actually glued to the wall.

‘Twas really an odd place to have built below the park. Wondering what it was meant for, Suni walked down the snaky hall. A red rectangular door sat at the end, so Suni turned the knob and opened. Behind it, a yellow door half as tall, and Suni opened to find a blue door even shorter, and then a green door, a yellow door, until finally a tiny dollhouse-size purple door. “Hmmm…”

She whipped out her lightsaber and sliced the entrance down in general, entering a very small and cramped living room-like chamber, very arguably meant for dolls. She looked down, seeing the white rabbit—smaller than she remembers, rush into a small door and close it. She walked around the mini round table in the room’s center and knelt down, tugging the door’s golden knob to force it open.

“Mm-nn I say!” exclaimed the knob, making Sunni flinch. “You don’t certainly intend to fit in me with such luggage.”

Sunni blinked her wide eyes a couple times. “Hey it’s not MY fault the architects made it just to scale!”

“No— if you really want to fit, why not try the bottle.” Sunni turned as a small blue bottle poofed on the table.

She took it in two fingers and held it by her nose, a faint, funky smell. With a raised brow, she gulped it down. “WHOA!” In seconds, she zapped to 3 inches tall, the large bottle bouncing off her head. “OUCH.” With another annoyed rub, she stomped to the door and gripped its knob in both hands.

“Nn- Now-now, I forgot to mention I’m locked. The key is up there.”

“GHHHHHHH!” Trembling with anger, she looked as a key magically appeared on the table, many stories above. A bowl of small candies also appeared on the floor as Sunni approached. She took an orange sweet that read ‘Eat Me’, so she swallowed in one bite. “WAAAAAH!” She became the very size of this room, bumping her head on the ceiling and crushing the table beneath her Mary-Janes.

“Mmp, I don’t mean to offend you, Miss, but your bum is quite large, and it is…”

She glanced down backward, feeling the door’s knob poking the seat of her skirt. “Oh SCREW all this, why don’t I use psychic?!” So with that, Sunni just closed her eyes and imagined herself shrinking, small enough so she can just enter the keyhole and forget about- “WOOP!” She shrunk in a single blink, so small she could crawl right under the tiny door. “Uhhh... bit too much. Oh well, this will do.”

She jumped and tried to float to the keyhole- “WAAAAAAAHH!” Smashed against the bottom of the hole like a bug hit by a swatter. “Oof.” She fell to the floor, shaking off the dizzy. She then just decided to crawl under the gap, seeing only pitch-black around her until she came to the light of the world beyond.

She was definitely in a forest, as grass towered miles over her like trees, and the real trees were impossibly tall. “This seems oddly familiar... Well, better fix this first.” She imagined herself growing larger, slowly though so as not to overshoot it- “WHOOOOA!” But alas, all of the normal trees were as small as grass at her feet. “MAN, WHAT IS WITH MY PSYCHIC TODAY?” her voice echoed for miles. “I COULDN’T FLY TO A CANDY STORE WITHOUT FALLING, NOW I REACT FASTER THAN.”

“I say! How RUDE of you!” Sunni narrowed her eyes to the center, seeing a very tiny birdhouse on the tip of her nose. “My worm stew was READY for waning before your sudden, interruption!”

“UHHH... SORRY. I'M A LITTLE-”

“WHAT ARE YOU, anyway?! SERPENT!! SERRRRPEEEEEEEENT!”
“HEY, CHILL OUT, I’M NO SERPENT, I’M A HUMAN GIRL! I would say little, but I’ve been… well, really shifty lately.”

“POLICE! Firemen! Milkmen! SERPEEEEEEEENT!”

“OKAY OKAY, I’ll put your house back, CALM DOWN!” So with more focus, Sunni zapped back down half as tall as the grass. “Oh, man! Why can’t I shift back to normal?!?”

“I daresay, you’ve gone positively mad.” Sunni turned, her heart nearly stopping at the sight of the ferocious beast. It was a giant fat cat with dark- and light-pink stripes, sharp yellow eyes, big fluffy tail, and a wide grin.

“! …’scuse me?” she asked quizzically.

“What a peculiar head on your shoulders.” He rolled onto his back. “It looks very unstable.” He stood up, leaving his head on the ground. “Can you… stand on it?” He then began dancing on his head.

“…If I could, I’d rather not have anymore headaches.”

“But it looks like it comes off.” He put his head back on, standing on only his hind legs. “Looks very unstable. Like I can unscrew it with but a few turns.”

“Yah—technically, but I assume you’re implying that my mind is unbalanced, that’s why my powers are suddenly hard to control.”

“Actually, your powers exist because you’re mad.” Got back on his belly, resting his chin on his wrists. “Like this whole world. Everything you see was created by mad people. Everyone here is mad. Your powers, in and of themselves, are pure madness. So it would just be mad to let them roam here.”

“So you’re saying that… this place concentrates strong Psychic Chi, that’s why my powers are acting so strongly and out of control.”

“No, they’re acting more in control than ever. They were founded by madness. Your madness. This world helps to emphasize that. Since you so constantly ignored it.”

“Ugh! Look, if you’re such an expert on that, teach me psychicbending!”

“Why do I need to.” A sly grin. “You’re already taught. Deep inside your head. Perhaps if you unscrew and take a look…”

“Look, I DON’T know psychicbending, okay?? I could NEVER control it, I REALLY can’t control HERE, so I can really use help before I get eaten by a flower or a pebble or whatever the f&*% is ALIVE around here!”

“Strange… your head is awfully familiar. I was wondering why you hadn’t remembered the key this time. I guess four times isn’t a charm.”

Sunni raised a brow. “You’re saying that… my mom was here a few times?”

“It could be your mother.” Rolled on his back. “It could be others. Different people, each time. Same people, a few or more times. All your heads looked the same to me. Maybe one of them left theirs here. If you search around, you may find it.”
She cocked the other brow. “Meaning there’s somebody here that can help me?”

“I don’t know. No one’s much help here. Even you. Even me. They’re all mad. So you might lose your head trying to talk to them. That should help you some. Mmmmmm, ‘twas Brillig…” The cat’s body faded to nothing, and slowly, his head was disappearing, “And the slithy toves, Did gyre and...” Only his shiny grin was left, before it was gone.

Sunni rolled her eyes. Well, no sense using her powers now. Guess she would just have to find this person and get their help. This’ll be fun… (Play Wonderland’s theme from Kingdom Hearts.)

Stage 13: Wonderland

Mission: Find some stranger to get their help.

Act 1: The Rabbit Hole

Sunni started her adventure through the Lotus Forest, passing many colorful flowers whose petals were closed. She decided to approach a yellow one to ask why it was closed. It said, “Do a shockwave for me,” so Sunni jumped and slammed the ground with a Psycho Shockwave. The flower opened and spat out a bunch of bubbles that filled her energy meter. She didn’t bother with other ones yet, but when looking around she found this area was fairly enclosed, only a large boulder, platforms too high to reach, and a small pond. She talked to a red flower beside the pond that said, “Give me red berries and I’ll make you bigger.” She looked around, seeing some red berries growing above a high platform, but in her attempt to pull them down with psychic, her immense power squashed them.

They grew back, but she knew she had to look for another way, anyway. In a small, back enclosing was a whitish-blue flower that requested Bubble Berries. She looked around and found said berries growing above the door, jumping up to cut them down with her lightsaber. She brought the berries to the plant, and as it chewed them, released a large bubble that Sunni could hop onto as it floated to the high platforms. It was a matter of simple jumping before she got to the red berries, cutting them down before feeding to the red flower.

It sprayed a magic dust that stretched Sunni to normal size in seconds. The forest felt a lot more cramped, as if it was literally meant for mini people. The boulder she had encountered was smaller than her hand, so for no reason, she decided to kick it in the pond. Two lilipads in the pond suddenly stretched into platforms, which would let her hop over a wall of grass if she were little. She tried to walk to the other end of the path and- “Ow!” hit her head on a branch with a round platform. “Ugh! …” She noticed the tiny coconut on said platform, deciding to take it. Out of annoyance, she decided to push that branch, but this turned the whole tree- “Oh!” bumped her head on the branch that came around. Having enough with this height, she munched the coconut and shrunk back to 3 inches.

She bounced up the risen lilipad platforms and over the grass to reach an enclosed area. There was a row of bellflowers that requested lightning, but Sunni had no such power… yet. She entered a doorway that seemed to have warped her- “Whoooa!” for she was suddenly in the Bizarre Room on one of the walls, having slipped out of a hole on a shelf. On the wall, meaning, she literally stood on it like a floor, for her gravity seemed to have shifted. All that was on here was a blank white canvas, some unlit torches, and a teddybear sitting on a (sideways) shelf. Curious, she decided to cut the rope holding up the shelf, letting the bear fall onto a seesaw below that flung a paint can up to the empty canvas, and created a beautiful picture of a starry, nighttime hillside.
Sunni dove into the painting, and before she knew, was swimming in a liquid dimension miles above the vast fields under the calming night sky. Though to Sunni, it felt just like flying, swimming in the air, except she had to hold her breath. She was swimming directly up to the full moon, where the current seemed to push her, until she swam straight through and fell out of a small waterfall in the Lotus Forest. She resurfaced in this small pond and climbed back onto a new land, discovering she was on the second floor of the forest. She had to jumped across a few platforms that seemed like wide lilipads, then found herself on one side of the tree she turned earlier. Its platform branch helped her in crossing a gap, though if she glided over, she would slam forcefully into the parallel wall. Her shockwave earlier stretched a little farther than it should have.

The following lilipads were smooshed under the thick leaves, so Sunni was forced to sidle across what little thin bits remained. Naturally, Snapdragons waited in holes above and tried to snack her, so she beheaded them with her lightsaber. She made it to a vine-made ladder and climbed onto a higher path, which was very wide and had three different doorways at the end. She hurried over and peeked inside each one; the left seemed to drop her back into the first part of the forest, the right dropped her back in the Bizarre Room along the wall, but the middle one was too high to reach.

But Sunni then noticed the red flower seated near the entrance to this path. She walked over and asked of its query, and it replied, “I’ll make you big if you cut my hair.” Noticing the out-of-place green vine growing from its top like a hair, Sunni jumped up and sliced it off. It sprayed a dust that stretched Sunni to “normal” height. She was too large to fit back through the gap to the lower forest, but when she approached the now-tiny doors, it looked as though they were dominos leaned against the wall. She took the left one and set it on the ground below the middle, then laid the right one on it diagonally against the wall, so it served as a bridge to the middle. She saw another coconut on a ledge, having to reach her arm all the way up to grab it, then took a bite to shrink back to normal.

She was able to enter the higher door, finding herself on the parallel wall of the Bizarre Room. She was on the right side of the chimney shaft, having to find a way to climb up it. A wilted plant was on the floor below, and above it was a shelf with a cup of water. Since it was sideways where Sunni stood, she got underneath and pushed up, shoving the cup off its perch and onto the flower, making it stand to life as vines stretched up for Sunni to climb onto the chimney’s exterior. The other side had a (sideways) faucet aimed at an empty pot, but its handle was round and fairly large. Instead, Sunni walked to the chimney’s entrance and jumped inside, ended up sliding up the shaft and out the top hatch, suddenly right-side-up and using the hatch as a foothold.

From here, Sunni jumped to a lower dish shelf, then jumped to the faucet handle. The arrow pointed counterclockwise, so Sunni ran in place in that direction, turning the handle as a result. Water came pouring into the pot, and on pure instinct, Sunni jumped in with the current. She ended up coming down a short waterfall into a sewer pipe, where she stood up on its floor where the shallow river flowed. The pipe eventually ended over a chasm where the water streamed down, but when Sunni turned a small lever on the right, the water suddenly flowed across the rightward wall after leaving the pipe. This allowed Sunni to cross this wall along the river’s flow, eventually into another pipe that appeared dark and bottomless. However, she could walk on the pipe’s side with the river flow, passing through carefully as she was blinded within this darkness. She came to a lit area, and, to her distaste, the water flowed into a trollface. Entering said face would probably lead her to an unwanted area, so she went back.

Outside, Sunni turned another lever and made the flow shift right again, so she could walk UP the wall. The river made it to the ceiling, where it flowed up vertically from Sunni’s view, but allowed her to shift gravity nonetheless. The river flowed past the ceiling, up (down) the following wall into another pipe. It also flowed past a lever on the ceiling, but Sunni first decided to follow it into this pipe. After passing another wall of blackness, she found another trollface. Angered, she returned to the ceiling and turned the lever right, causing the river to make a complete loop around that area. She was able to get to another lever, which she shifted to make the looping river go up (down) an alternate wall, into a pipe. However, this pipe had river come out from the opposite end, signifying it's the pipe she came from. She walked down, entered this pipe, going across its ceiling 'til she made it to the mini waterfall, which the new river flowed up and into.

Sunni crouched and entered, ending up falling to the ceiling of the Bizarre Room. After roaming around, she discovered a wood door lodged into the chimney’s top. She went inside and found herself at a beautiful hedge garden under a sparkling night sky. The smell of tea catching her nose, Sunni passed through to the center, where a curtained table stood. (End song.)

Sunni made it to a peculiar Tea Party, where all the chairs around the rectangle table were different shapes and sizes. A pale woman with light-blonde hair and a blue dress stood motionlessly, holding a teapot with three mouths over six cups, pouring. “Ummm… excuse me?” Sunni walked up and asked with confusion.

“… … … .. . Hello.” It took her a while to respond. She spoke with a quiet, British accent.

“Is this, um… you live here?” The answer was probably ‘no’.

“… . Am I alive?”

Close enough. “So, umm… thing is, I’m a psychicbender. I’m not very good, my powers are really wonky in this world, and someone said… someone could…”

“… … . Did you try painting your powers?”

“Uh-… what?”

“Paint them a different color. You might like them better.”

“How will THAT help?? For one thing, it’s intangible energy so I can’t paint, and I never had problems with the color blue at all, what does it have to do with my-”

“Then perhaps try talking to them. Understand each other.”

“… … …” The magic cat was right, she isn’t helpful.

“Would you like some tea? ..” The woman presented the six cups, stopped pouring, “…” Sunni walked over and had a seat, drinking a cup.

“So what seems to be the problem?”

“I told you, my powers are acting crazy in this world. I guess ‘cause there’s a lot of Psychic Chi. This cat said someone could help me—I think—but I’ve been getting lost every which way, and I need to get better at psychicbending so I can save my mom.” Another long sip.

“… . Did you say ‘please’?”

Sunni slowly put the cup down with a disbelieved stare. “What?”

“Did you ask your psychic kindly to help you? All you’d have to do is ask.”

“… … . Literally ask my psychic to help. You’re serious?”
“Nope!” A black-haired man walked by just then and had a seat at the farther end. “I’m over here! A cup for me, Alice!” He grinned brightly.

Alice hopped up, walked across the table, kicking several cups, and poured some tea in Sirius’s cup, the other mouths pouring tea onto his lap as he flinched. “Wait a second, what’s HE doing here!” Sunni yelled. “Sirius isn’t in Wonderland!”

He put his cup down, “Just thought I’d drop by ‘fore my weekly bowling trip with Chronicler. Funny, the oldspaper reported someone mad coming to visit, but I was expecting someone else.”

“You mean my mom?”

“Well, yes…” Sirius looked down, “though there is someone else I had wanted to meet. If you see your mother again, do ask her to drop by, will you?”

She slammed her cup down, “Well I CAN’T unless someone helps me with f&*king PSYCHICbending!”

“Is it wearing a condom?” Alice asked.

“…………” Sunni had no words at all to reply to that. “Could you please show me the exit?”

“Over there.” Sirius pointed.

Sunni looked at a mirror behind her chair and walked over. Staring longingly at her own reflection, it felt as though her very vision began to zoom on her reflection’s pupil. Zooming closer on the pitch-black dot, her vision began to spin, going closer and closer to the light at the very end of the darkness.

Sunni blinked, suddenly awake at the table in Roxas Park. She turned to the tree that had the strange hole she fell in, wondering if it was still there. …She decided to get up and walk away. “What a waste of my time.”

Sabaody Park, Canada

With what remained of Jessie’s bubbles, he and Sandy floated all the way to Canada on a bubble boat, the morning sun just coming over the horizon. “Yaaaaaaawn.” yawned the First Grade President. “Fin’ly, sigh… we m’de it.”

“Poor Jessie.” Sandy patted his back. “You should rest. Let me gather the bubbles.”

“Nnn, I m’h not be able to beat some  4th-grader, but I can sure as  git me some f’kin’ bubbles. Now c’mon Sandy, le’s get enough I can sh’vve down Shelly’s… rrrrREAR side!” He wobbled forward.

Sandy shook her head with worry and sadness. “Oh, Jessie.” But decided to follow. (Play “Downtown Bikini Bottom” from Spongebob: BFBB.)

Stage 14: Sabaody Park

Mission: Get more suds for Jessie’s bubbles.

Act 1: Bubble Park
Sabaody Park was a lush green forest of vertical striped trees, with green and cyan stripes. It reeked of what smelled like bath soap, as thousands of bubbles puffed from the soapy trees and were hovering across the air. There were Fodderbots roaming this small enclosing, in which Jessie went around and knocked them all out with a swing of his Bubble Wand. There was no way out of the enclosing except for a few platforms of varying height that emerged tiny bubble jetstreams, too light to lift the twins up. However, both hopped onto a floating Bubble Bike, rode over the lowest stream, and let it gently lift them higher so they could glide to another platform, then another, before they could float to the new ledge.

But an inconvenient tall step prevented their bike from going further, so they climbed off and up the step. They overlooked a village area of colorful tents in a gorge, in which Sandy whirled a lasso like a helicopter and held onto Jessie as they floated down gently. An Arfbot was roaming the village and releasing mini Arf-Dawgs, Sandy roping each one and tossing them aside. Jessie, still unbearably tired, hurried forward to deal a quick whack against the robot, making it jump a few feet back. Jessie waved his wand around to send a Bubble Torpedo his way, but recalled that his supply was a little decreased at the moment, so he just had to chase the Arfbot and whack him again. But then the Arfbot leaped onto a higher ledge, where he could throw Dawgs at the kids safely, but Sandy simply roped a Dawg in her lasso and tossed it up at him.

The robot exploded, a trampoline seemed to slide out of one of the tents. The siblings bounced up to the roof and landed in a cannon, in which the only place to fire was a spring pad on another roof. They shot there and were bounced to a snaky metal pathway, where they had to jump thick bubble boulders as they progressed up. The path sloped upward while still snaking until they were finally brought above the high cliff, where the Fodderbot working the bubble cannon waited beside a Soap Tree. Jessie rushed up, knocked out the robot, and disabled the cannon. Having arrived at the first tree, he scraped some of its suds off into his bottle.

With that, they returned to the village as Jessie was now able to make Bubble Bowls. The only way out of here was a narrow, snaky road between close walls, but no actual path, just bubbly rails. Beside it was a small cannon which Jessie swung a Bubble Bowl into. The sturdy, round ball was inflated to three times its size, allowing Jessie and Sandy inside. With this, they could roll down the rail trail, going whipping fast before they launched off a ramp onto a carved trail in the ground. They carefully navigated around robots and large holes, in which one of the holes had a small bridge over it which they could cross slowly, and retrieve a sock. The trail eventually ended over a deep canyon, where the kids had to roll the ball over floating slow-spinning platforms.

Naturally, some platforms moved up or down, forward and back, and much trickier to get onto on this ball. The platforms eventually brought them to a U-shaped slide and could barely alter their speed as they were going down. It was a matter of dodging spikes and pitfalls before they went up more rails and through a hoop of fire. “WHOA!” cried Sandy when the bubble instantly popped, grabbing Jessie and swinging the convenient bubble hooks above, to land them on a new ledge. Tar-Tar robots were shooting their infamous sauce around another tent village, and threatened to swamp the whole area. Jessie whirled his wand and sent Bubble Bowls to take out each one; but upon finishing, the siblings looked to the cliffs above the village as robots appeared to be sawing Soap Trees down, throwing them in wagons. “Hu! Why are they cutting down the forest?” gasped Sandy with horror.

“Because they’re bitches…” Jessie wobbled. The twins progressed to a lower, playground area with bubble-used rides, which were hovering several feet. They got on the mini merry-go-round and spun it around and around, a bubble stream coming out its bottom as it hovered. From there, they hopped across the midair rocky-horses to a floating swingset, both taking a swing and building momentum. They then flew up to a bubble-lifted slide, which was thin, long, and curvy, kept aloft by several bubbles. It was just their size, making it easy to slide down and fly off onto a new ledge.
They were on a cliff overlooking another deep chasm, but to the left, Jessie first scraped more suds off a Soap Tree. Then the siblings crossed a plant that ended under a floating stack of bubble blocks. Using a Bubble Bash, Jessie leapt and hit the stack, causing them all to fall and stay in place over separate parts above the chasm. The kids could jump across them, followed by Sandy swinging a bubble hook to land them on a soapy slide.

They couldn’t stand on this solid slide soaking with suds, so they had to dodge bubble boulders being fired from cannons, spike traps, and the average enemies. The slide ended at one part and forced the kids to jump far-apart floating bubble fountains, still sliding as they made the careful jumps. On the following slide which curved left, they had to bounce bubble springs that propelled them to higher parts, lest they fall to their death, but this final slide would soon bring them to a grassy spot at the forest’s edge, overlooking the distant sea. (End song.)

But a shining light many miles in the heavens caught their eye, so they jumped the steps to the coast for a closer look. Whatever this bright thing was, the moment it crashed into the sea, it created a tremendous explosion, Jessie creating a bubble shield to block the resulting strong wave. Jessie lowered his bubble when the area was swallowed in steam. A huge, dark force began to rise within the gray, growing closer, before it came to a halt with a loud release of steam. A door opened as a bridge stretched over for them to cross, and they saw lines of lights in whatever just opened. “…J-Jessie!” whispered Sandy as her brother was lazily walking forward. Mind racing with thoughts, Sandy reached the conclusion to follow him. (Play “Mansion of the Deep” from Rayman Legends.)

Act 2: Undersea Mansion

The siblings rode a large elevator down a diagonal shaft lit with lights. It came to a stop before a huge, wide corridor where robots were on patrol, in this case Sleepytimes, snoozing robots encased in a searchlight. Jessie and Sandy quietly tiptoed through their lights and across the floor, reaching a center wall where they grabbed and climbed across three different ledges before getting on top. The next part of the room was a floor of red tiles, with a single yellow one beneath them. They dropped down to it, causing a trail of yellows to flash to existence before they became red. Seeing this before, the siblings carefully memorized the yellow trail and followed where it was, lest they be shocked by the reds. Jessie’s Bubble Bowls actually got shocked by the reds, so they used them to see the path better. Once safely on the other side, they noticed another sock on a far left tile, so another hidden trail would lead them to it. After testing several tiles with the Bowl again, Jessie soon found his way to it.

With that, they continued to a round-ceiling corridor that went up and curved right, leading to a hall with aquariums within the walls, containing unique and exotic fish, and a dark chasm for a floor. A platform was beside the foothold across the chasm, and Sandy could rope its hook and pull it over, letting them ride it across afterward. For the next chasm, some pegs were stationed all around the left wall for Sandy to swing across, but the following tunnel was barred shut. Sandy roped her way up the pegs to the ceiling, then swung some hooks on the ceiling to a platform with a switch. But when she pressed the switch, she was barred inside, while the tunnel opened. She was free when she stepped off, but the tunnel sealed again. “Um… Jessie?”

“Mmmm…” Still half-awake, Jessie inflated a bubble to float him across the chasm, passing the tunnel to an enormous room of fishtanks and pipes flowing with suds, as the substance behind the glass bared that smeary, colorful presence. “With Chum Industries’ special Squeaky-Clean Suds, we can safely assure the future well-being of your ocean and wildlife. We’ve taken the liberty of giving the fish new homes until we can work out the pollution issue, we promise to return them all to their rightful places as soon as I am made supreme ruler! Eh he he he!”
Jessie didn’t understand nor care what that message was. He began roaming around the room as Monsoon robots and Chucks sent storm clouds and missiles at him. Jessie spotted a vertical pipe in a far right corner, and a platform around it several stories above. Jessie climbed a ladder onto a nearby fishtank, having to balance a thin board over a tank of Bonefish. Once across, he climbed a ladder onto a tank filled with jellyfish, where several large ones rested at the surface and sank up and down. They also electrified for a few seconds, so Jessie was careful in hopping across. He made it to a series of metal poles, having to climb them and kick to the next, while avoiding the Sparkies; little electric balls that moved around the poles. He finally made it atop the platform around the pipe, where a faucet conveniently was. Jessie turned it, let the suds flow into his bottle, and had more to go on.

Jessie was able to send Bubble Buddies around the room and distract the projectile robots trying to kill him. He then dropped down and returned to the previous room, telling Sandy to get off the switch. He then blew a Bubble Buddy up to where she was, and she pulled and positioned it above the switch before jumping down, letting the bubble press it down instead (wow, he was bulkier than he looked). They returned to the huge room where Sandy roped a high peg between two fishtanks, pulling Jessie up with her as they landed on the higher tank. They had to swing a row of hooks across the tank of electric eels, but with two Chucks threatening to blow them off, Jessie blew a Bubble Buddy to distract them.

Once across the tank, they jumped a few platforms to a tunnel that curved downward, made of glass as they had a terrific view of the sea, er, aquarium outside. The tunnel eventually led into the water itself, so Jessie threw a Bubble Bowl against a pump cannon to increase its size, the twins getting in and rolling around inside the aquarium. They had to zoom past 3 propeller switches while avoiding Torpedo Teds, opening the gateway to a new tunnel. They rolled up a slope and across a flat floor, carefully avoiding red security lasers that scrolled up and down, left to right, and/or both. They reached a chasm with two small platforms that floated up and down, having to wait for them to get low so they could carefully roll off, their bubble floating softly across the pit due to the water.

They rolled off on the new path, up a slope that curved right, and resurfaced in a small room alit by torches, touching their bubble to a fireplace to pop it. A pair of huge wooden double-doors sat before them, Sandy roping their handles to pull them open. They progressed down a torch-lit hall to a small, pumping room where another faucet lay on a pipe. Jessie held his bottle underneath and turned the handle to collect more suds. (End song.)

“HNN hnn hnhnhnhnh!” But instead, a huge, brown bubble with a devilish grin grew to existence and out of the faucet. “Hnn, he was RIGHT!”

“J-JESSIE! That’s the..”

“Dirty Bubble.” The boy glared.

“Hrrnhnhnn, what’re a couple of KIDS doing in our mansion?” the bubble grinned wickedly. “Well, I know just what to do with you. IN TO THE BUBBLE DOME, huhohoho!” He floated overhead and smashed the kids into his dirty bubbly body.

“Nmmnn! Jessie, do something!” cried the sister, but Jessie appeared more tuckered out than ever.

“Awww little guy’s tired. That’s whatsa get fer stayin’ up so late, kiddies. But don’t worry. I’ll make sure you get plenty o’ rest, hohohohohnhooohhn.”

Glacia; with Suki and Jack
“Jack FROST Jack FROST Jack FROST! YYYAAAAAY!” Suki alternated between feet as she hopped in place. “I KNEW you wanted me to come here, you NEVER lie to meeee!”

“Heheh. I just thought the summer heat was making you melt, you wanted to get your toes cold again.”

“You BET I do!” Remembering the extreme cold around her, Suki joyously kicked off her shoes and socks and wiggled her toes in the snow. “I feel JUST like an ice cube agaaaaain! Thank you for bringing me here, Jack Frost! I- …” Her face sunk a little. “But what about my sister? And my friends?”

“They’re all fine, Suki. We wouldn’t let anything bad happen to them.”

“Then we GOTTA go FIND theeeeem!”

“Later, Suki. But first let’s talk about the reason I led you here: to hone your icebending.”

“But I’m a GREAT icebender! Seeeee?” She swirled the snow before her and created a mini snowcastle with tiny citizens.

“Heh heh heh! You’re very talented, but you don’t even know the basics of bending! And even the greatest benders need to know how their power works to be perfected at it.” Jack spun and swirled a snowy throne that raised him to the air, taking a seat. “Then you’ll realize you never felt closer to the cold.”

“But I ALREADY feel so cooooold!” she whined with her joyous smile. “Do I really need to feel so shivering, my blood stooooops?”

“Maybe you do, Suki.” Jack still smiled. “I just want you to know, there’s a thing as being too cold. And depending on how in tune you are with your chi, that extreme cold could be your greatest ally, or the tool of your destruction.”

“Why would the cold destroy me? I thought the cold LOOOOOVED me.” She frowned in mock sadness.

“That’s why it’s important for you to learn about chi.” He hopped down from his throne. “So you’ll learn how to bond with it.”

“What’s chiiii? Is that short for chiiiiilly?”

“Haha. Yeah, that’s a good one.” He laughed. “Just come over here.”

Suki quizzically approached Jack as he held his cane staff ready. “You see, people are able to bend elements by their chi, and each element’s chi has a particular flow throughout your body, and is concentrated at a certain point. But while people have Personal Chi, the outside world, like the ocean, sky, or space, contains Natural Chi. Benders release their chi to the Natural Chi, and in the process, allows them to bend those elements. Benders can strengthen the bond between their Personal Chi and the Natural Chi through experience or meditation. And when the bond between chis is strong enough, they’ll ultimately fuse together. Thus, the bender’s body will become one with their element. When this Logia level is reached, the chi takes on a different flow depending on the element. For us icebenders or earthbenders, the chi will appear relatively frozen or stiff. Firebenders’ chi would become more active, airbenders’ more scattered, and Space Chi would appear almost hollow or nonexistent. But while the chi flows take on this drastic change, the binder is more powerful than ever.”
“But if I became a Logia… I couldn’t hug my sister without freezing her, could I?” Suki asked with big sad eyes.

“Well, with Logia, it’s a complex thing. Your body only possesses the illusion of having become your element.” Jack Frost used his staff to draw Suki’s shape in the snow. “After you become Logia, an invisible shield encases your whole body.” He drew another line just outside of Suki’s shape, in the same shape. “You still have a normal body, and can eat or touch things, so if you shook hands with somebody, the shield allows harmless outside forces to pass. But when you want it to, or danger comes your way, the shield will kick in.” He drew a line coming directly at Suki and passing the shield. “When that danger is detected, that part of your body will transform into ice and the danger will be avoided. But your body is still there. It just becomes invisible and intangible while the ice takes its place. But the shield only protects the outside; the inside is still vulnerable. Something hazardous could enter through your ears, nose, or mouth. If the danger becomes active in say the entrance of those areas, the shield will still detect, but if it gets too far in you can’t see it, it won’t pick up. And of course, the shield can’t protect against Haki, chi-blocks, or the element’s natural enemy. So even as a Logia, you still need to be aware.”

“So I can become a Logia, and STILL hug Miyuki-chan, right?”

“Yeah, you could. But that’s where the hard part comes in…”

“Ohh?”

“When benders are on the very verge of Logia transformation, sometimes it requires the ultimate step. To finally test if that bond is real, and you’re so in tune with your element, you have to put yourself in a situation that could mean your death.”

“Hu!” she gasped.

“To name a few examples… a waterbender might submerge their self and completely drown, an airbender could drop from an airplane without a parachute, or an icebender may lock their self in the coldest darkness until their blood turns to ice…”

Mikaela Chariton took the most powerful blast from Mewtwo’s psychic beam, but in just a blink, her body had become psychic itself.

Caesar Clown hacked and coughed within the fog of toxic Bang Gas. He had inhaled so much, and it was overtaking his lungs. But a grin appeared on his face, when it became so breathable. “Oh. I’m a Logia. Not what I was trying to do, but, I’ll take!”

Dozens of boulders were rolling to the unsuspecting village at the mountain’s base, and Angie McKenzie was doing all she could to send them away. There came to be too many, and the woman felt the storm of boulders bouncing and crushing her body. Her bones would give way any second, but to her utter amazement, her body shattered like stone. A great stone entity that shaped her form emerged from the earth and crushed the remaining boulders.

At 13 years old, Mandy McKenzie had acquired numerous syringes of Nightmare Toxin. She injected them all in her body and let the magic happen.

Suki gulped, eyes wide with terror.

“That’s why becoming a Logia can mean the ultimate sacrifice. Sure, if it works, your life’s the same as normal, but you’re just more powerful. But if it doesn’t work… if you’re not as sure as you thought you were… it’s the end.”
The sadness was clear as day in Suki’s adorable eyes. “Is that what… happened to you? Sniff.”

“Well… yeah… a long time ago, when…”

“…” Suki listened patiently.

Jack shook, “Let’s not worry about it now. Your training should come first.”

“What kinda training are we doing?”

“I’m going to teach you about the Ice Element. I know you have a good grasp of it, but it’s important you hear it out, too. Ice, in a way, is close to Psychic, as it needs an imaginative mind to work.” He took some snow and mended it into all sorts of shapes, a hammer, a DNA, lipstick…

“Psychicbenders need to endure loads of training before they can create stuff out of their chi, but any active icebender can make things ages early. True, it’s made of ice and won’t make any long-lasting contributions, but when there’s something we need on the spot, we got the advantage.” He made it into earmuffs, which he placed over Suki’s ears. “We call this Ice-Maker Style. And the same way psychicbenders can create Imaginary Friends, icebenders can give life to snow entities if their imagination’s strong enough. Just look.” Jack created a snowman half Suki’s height, who bowed.

Suki beamed and created a team of tiny snowpeople as high as her feet, skiing and dancing around the larger snowperson. “Which you already understand! And the stronger our chi is, the more realistic we can make a person or thing. The reason icebenders are rarer than waterbenders is because ours possesses magical properties, just like Psychic. Icebending just sounds like ‘controlling ice’, like any other element, but even other elements have hidden powers inside them. And icebending has another property, too: the power to freeze time.”

“Huuh?”

“You know that when something is completely encased in ice, its very motion or aging stops until the ice is totally melted. It was this power that kept Avatar Aang in a time stasis for a hundred years, which thereby stopped his Negative’s aging, but allowed him to roam free. So it would be in regular timebending.”

“So I have powers like MIYUKI-CHAAAAAN!”

“Heheh ha. To an extent, really. You more-or-less keep Time in balance, by freezing it, the same way you already do with your sister. If something is out of control, a river, a volcano, even time itself, you need to freeze it.”

“Huuuuu!” Suki’s eyes and mouth grew wide in remembrance again. “Miyuki-chaaaaan! I gotta go SAAAAAVE her, can’t wait AROOOOUUUND.” She jumped impatiently.

“Suki, calm down, your sister will be fine.” Jack smiled assuringly. “I want you to help me with something first. Can you trust me?”

Suki calmed down and stared at him. She really wanted to save her sister… but if Jack Frost says so, she could believe in him. She nodded.

Jack narrowed his eyes and bent down discreetly, gesturing to the blizzarding mountain above. “There’s this girl up there that I really like, and I want you to help me talk to her.” He spoke in a hushed tone, as if they were in high school and he were whispering to his friend about the pretty girl at the other table. “I’ve been trying to get up the courage to, but I always get so nervous. So will you help me?”
“Awwwwwww!” Suki pressed her cheeks and sang like a nosy little sister. “Jack—ie-chan’s, in LOOOO-ooooove!”

Jack’s heart sank in a beat, his smile faltering. “What’s wrong, Jackie?”

“Oh-h… nothing.”

“Well let’s GOOOOO! Don’t be shy, I’ll tell you JUST what to SAAAAY!”

“That means a lot, Suki.” He smiled. “Now let’s go. I’ll teach you about icebending on the way.”

Spirit World; KND treehouse

Miyuki followed Norman down to a basement of the treehouse, which grew darker as torches only lit the halls. “So when did you become a Halfa?”

“Three weeks ago, actually.” Norman said with a cool, casual smile. “I helped transfer this ghost to the Spirit World last year, and her spirit came back to give me this power. I think she can help you out, too.”

“Is that where we’re going?”

“Yes. A little tidbit though, Coraline’s actually older than she looks. Her ghost body has a manifested child form made of strings and stitches and junk. Some Nightmare King gave it to her for helping catch some rogue Nightmare, I think 22 years ago? Jack’s mostly hanging with us as a pastime, and Rukia, not sure where she’s from. Probly Japan.”

They made it to a large, dark room with a single curtained table lit by a small candle. On one side, a pale 11-year-old girl with a black dress and sleek black hair. Across from her, creatures Miyuki was familiar to: white, round-topped beings with little eyes in red circles, and floating hands. Okay, she wasn’t exactly familiar what they were, so she called them the Thing Chorus. Why, you ask?

The dark girl picked up a cup of tea on the table and shook it lightly. “How should I live my life? That, appears to be the question, of the evening.” She sounded half-interested.

The more you think about life

The sooner you might diiiiiie.

“But why shouldn’t I think about death. When that’s the way I’m gonna be spending most of my life.”

It maaay be the way you are fated to live

But why shouldn’t you liiive in the mooomeeeent?

“Because I got nothin’ interesting going on. Let’s get it over with now. Where’s the nearest cliff. Deep river. A knife might work.”

But the faster you rush into sooomething

The harder it will be for yooou tooo aaaaadjuuuuust.

The girl sipped her tea. “If I were good at it, I would adjust. If I’m not, why can’t I start now?”
Death comes to take when it’s ready toooo

For deaath iiiis the lot of uuus!

The lot of everyone that we hold deeeear.

So WHY pass the time thinking of the value of your liiife?

“Hey, Numbuh 1712!” Norman greeted as he led Miyuki in. “This is Miyuki. Miyuki, this is Aggie. Our, uh, witchcraft specialist.”

“Yes.” Aggie stood up, stretched her arms, and rubbed her eyes. “Just got up from a really long nap. And I guess you have, too.”

“Actually, Norman’s friends brought me here. But I think I’m still… alive.”

“I’ll let you two get to know each other.” Norman walked away. “Rukia wants me for mission reports.”

With that, Aggie and Miyuki began a long, unenthusiastic walk down the opposite hall. “So if you aren’t really dead, what are you here for.”

“I don’t know. Me and my friends were flying to an ice planet during a mission. We crashed and I died, but not really. I was a timebender back in living.”

“A timebender. I’m kinda feeling that from you. Your spirit has small fractions of the chi. A little grayer than I remember.”

“You’ve met other timebenders?”

“This girl named Olive used to live with me at Blithe Hollow. She was my only friend. After the townspeople executed me for witchcraft, a girl named Muffy Jenkins killed her for being a timebender.”

Miyuki’s eyes grew wide, “Olive? THAT’S my mom! And that Muffy Jenkins girl, that was Dimentia.”

“I know. I heard she came back to life. ‘Course, she was already in the Spirit World centuries before I was. I didn’t want to go. And I wouldn’t let anyone else. Now that I’m here, I don’t even remember being alive. You learn to forget these things… when they no longer concern you.”

A bright light shone at the end of this hall, and Miyuki gaped at what it was. She thought they were miles underground, but it was a peaceful forest of lush green trees and grass under a golden sky. Aggie walked up to a lone tree in the middle of a barren region, and sat with her back against it. “This is the tree my mom used to read me stories under. It’s dead in the Mortal World, so it came here. I take long naps under here. But time never passes.”

Miyuki sat beside her, “Is your mom here, too?”

“I haven’t seen her since I got here. I’ve been sensing it. Something is happening to the spirits. Bad people in the Mortal World are interfering with the Spirit World.”

“That’s…That’s awful! How can any mortal mess up the Spirit World?”

“The Spirit World is closely connected with the Dream World. People can shape it to their deepest desires. To make a happy afterlife. Normally people can’t do that while they’re still alive… but some mortals found a way. And I’m not sure how.”

“Does it have to do with… the Apocalypse?”

“I’m feeling a lot of fear… in the Mortal World. In a month, the Spirit World will be destroyed. If the mortal dimensions are gone, the Spirit Worlds can’t exist. There will be nothing to give it energy. All of it is going to die.”

“Then…Then I can’t waste time here. I need to stop the Apocalypse. We all promised Cheren we would help.” And… I told Zanifr I’d…

Agatha looked up. “You don’t look like anyone who would be concerned about anything.”

“I…I used to be. But I…I found a new importance in life. It’s to live for my friends, and be happy for the spirits. Then when I pass on here, my spirit can help the world flourish. I want to save the Spirit World… so everyone can have someplace happy to go when they die. So the Cycle of Life… can continue.”

Aggie closed her eyes. “I’ve always been afraid of something happening to this forest. I can never go to sleep with the promise that… it’ll still be here when I wake up. I want to sleep here forever… in peace…”

Miyuki looked at her when Aggie became silent. Her eyes closed, she lay back against the tree, as if in deep sleep. If Miyuki lived here, she might want to sleep forever, too. It was so peaceful… the afterlife… just the thought of it made her eyelids grow heavy…

Aggie woke up, “Let’s go.” and began the walk out. “Energybending won’t teach itself.”

Miyuki startled back to attention, “E-Energybending?” She got up and followed.

“A lot of Spirit KNDs master energybending as their means of combat. Rukia even knows a bit.”

“Isn’t that… light or darknessbending?”

“They’re closely related. But Energy is the essence where all chi comes from. It’s the only part of our bending we keep after we convert into spirits. It’s what our souls, and everything in the Spirit World, is composed of. When spirits search deep inside their selves and that which makes this world, they can control that energy. It can become the most powerful of elements…”

“And could I use that power… while I’m alive?”

“It’s a little more difficult, because your normal chi is concealing the Energy Chi. The only mortal I’ve heard that was able to bend the direct energy is the Avatar, who is half-spirit to begin with. But mastering energybending should have an effect on your Time Chi, too, make it stronger. And that grayness I feel in your chi… I wanted to take a look at it.”

“Well… okay. As long as I can get back to my friends soon.”

“Relax. You will. As long as your body isn’t eaten by wolves.”

“But… Agatha.” The two stopped. “Who is it exactly… that’s messing up the Spirit World. Do you know who’s behind it?”

“…” Aggie turned, still with her gloomy face, “He calls himself King.”

Sand Castle
The sky was bluer and filled with even more stars above this vast desert. A Kargarok messenger cawed across the air as it flapped to the castle with a conchshell within its talons. It flapped into a window and dropped the shell in the hands of the castle’s owner. King Sandy Johnson sat back on his couch and opened the shell’s hatch, displaying a holographic image of a shadowed, knight-like being with dashing armor, a cape, and a pointy crown. “Hello, Sandy.”

“Ahhh if it isn’t my good friend,” said Sandy with a snobbish smile, “His Royal Highness King—”

“You would know better than to speak my full name. There is power in a name, you know. Or shall I spill YOUR filthy, disgusting secret?”

“Sigh, you will never let that go, will you?”

“Are you absolutely sure what you told me about the Minish Princess is true?”

“No, I was just making crud up. If you don’t wanna see, I can just squish her, one less nuisance.”

“Don’t joke around with me. You know that the princess’s powers are vital in what we have planned. If you are mistaken, you WILL pay the price.”

“Relax, I’m absotively posilutely certain. Are you coming to take the brat away or what?”

“Tomorrow night. After the presidents’ meeting. My special squad will be over to bring her to me. Do not disappoint me… and destroy this Dial.” Switched off.

Unbeknownst to Sandy, a single tiny Blue Pikmin watched him from the doorway.

Cleveland neighborhoods; daytime

The sun was finally rising over Cleveland as Team Rupert lay fast asleep, their fire having gone out and their Pikmin inside the Onions. Rupert was the first to regain consciousness, half-awake at the sound of a distant, nearly deafening screech, and some doors squeaking open. Rupert got to his feet, seeing what was clearly the top of a yellow school bus. Timmy and Hikari slowly recovered too, at the echoing creak of a giant door. “Bye, Mom, I’m going to school!” The slamming of the door pulled them awake completely. Through the giant grass was a blonde, freckle-faced girl in a dark-pink shirt, and the sound of wheels crossing the sidewalk let them know her bookbag was on wheels. “Whoops, forgot to tie my shoe.” She stopped midway and bent down.

“!!! GUYS!! NOW’S OUR CHANCE, COME ON!” At Rupert’s cry, the three kids dashed to the girl as fast as they could, the Pikmin Onions fluttering after them. Once they were through the grass, they found her backpack lain on its back while she tied her shoes. “And oooover, and loop-di-loop, and oooover.”

“HURRY!” Sprinting with all the strength in their legs, they rushed for the small net on the side of the pack, leaped, and grabbed hold of its very thick lining at their size. The Onions latched their selves onto the side of the pack as well. The girl stood, picked up her pack, and casually rolled and lifted it into the bus, the swift turns and movement forcing the tinies to hold on tight. She slammed it haphazardly against the wall beside a seat and sat down, the tinies dropping as the girl began talking to a friend.

“Sigh. That was close.” Timmy panted.

“Is Jessie and Sandy on this bus?” Rupert asked. “We can look around for ‘em and get their—” But a sudden shake knocked them off their feet. The bus was in motion.
“Mmmmmmmaybe that’s not a good idea now.” Timmy said as they grabbed the floor tight.

“We’ll have to look for Jessie in school.” Hikari knew.

Rupert seemed to shrink more at this idea. The last thing he wanted at a quarter inch tall was going to school this way.

Planet Poké

“AAAAAAAAAHHHHHHHH…” It’s true that flying as a beam of light across the very light-years would induce screaming. Such was the case of Darcy Chariton, and Lucario didn’t enjoy it so much either. “AAAAAAAAAHHHHHHHH…” Even after they finally landed, she still went on. “-UUH!”

“STOP IT!” yelled Lucario, smacking her. “Honestly, I expected that from Sunni, not you…”

Darcy shook back to senses, helping herself to stand. “Wh…Where did you take me?”

“Planet Poké.” Fluffy white clouds filled the sunny sky, grasslands and mountains lay every direction. And hundreds, thousands of the creatures we all know and love roamed everywhere.

That’s right: dragons. HA, just kidding, can you imagine? So it seems Darcy is on a life-changing journey that’s sure to last dozens of game generations. …Nah, we’ll dumb it down by, like, a lot. Also Spirit KND, Rukia’s from Bleach, Norman from ParaNorman, Coraline from, yeah, and everyone knows where Skellington’s from. And Elsa. And the “Let It Go”. :P So next time, uhh a Rupert level, maybe a Sheila, then a flashback. So stay doomed.
Chapter Summary

Wendy Marvell and her friends go to Orchid Bay to buy herself a wand! There, she meets a new friend!

Welcome back, today, the Side Stories will see its first major crossover (excluding the obvious mix of Fairy Tail and Harry Potter)! (This takes place during Chapter 8 of Lights.)

Chapter 3: The Veiled City

Facilier’s Voodoo Emporium

Facilier put out the candles to his shop. He hung the ‘Closed’ sign on his door. A group of disappointed children were moaning outside. “But WHY are you closing the shop earlyyyyy?” a boy whined.

“Sorry, kids, but Uncle Facilier’s short on supplies, he’s goin’ away someplace to collect more.” He told them honestly. “Y’all can last without magic for a day, can’tcha?”

“You’ll be back tomorrow night, right Mr. Facilier?” a 5-year-old girl with a teddybear asked.

The Shadow Man bent down and patted her hair. “I promise, Little Suzy.” He pecked some magic on her toy. The teddybear lovingly hugged Suzy’s chest. “Ah right, see ya later, kids.” He waved the lot good-bye. “Uncle Faci needs some shuteye.” He went inside.

Wendy and Carla finished stocking items as the blue-haired child spoke with a smile, “Mister Facilier, were you always this popular with kids?”

“Well, not all the time, Wendy, there was a time when I was mixed in with some demons.”

“Demons?” Carla questioned.

“Where do you think most of this junk comes from? New Jersey? Granted, I have an age limit based on my items. Anyway, y’all should get some shuteye. I called us a Knight Bus to drive us to Orchid Bay; you can try to sleep there, but you’ll also wanna refresh for the ride.”

Facilier cracked open a hatch on the ceiling, letting a ladder come down. Carla flew up while Wendy climbed. In the small, cramped bedroom, Sonny and Donna were sharing a bed without complaint, while Wendy took off her sandals to settle in her bed. She looked up when a slim woman in a black coat walked across the room. “Oh, hello, um, Mrs. Facilier!” Wendy greeted her bubbly.

Madame Rouge looked at her with a smug look. “Hello, Drunken Mistake.” She blew smoke from her cigarette, making Wendy cough. She began climbing down the ladder.

“W-Where are you going?”

“I vas called for some business.” she replied in her thick French accent. “Eet’s grown-up stuff, Dear, do not bother.” She closed the hatch on the way down.

Madame Rouge was about to leave the shop when Facilier touched her shoulder, sporting a cool smile. “Ahh, Laura, why’re you so sour to Wendy? It’s not like you see her much.”

“It’s just, when we got married, I wasn’t planning to raise children. Now you insist on watching these urchins so your benefactor will protect your business.”

“Laura, it ain’t about the merchandise or the, ahem, semi-legal protection.” Harvey put an arm around her shoulders. “Not saying I wanted to, but I never got to raise a child of my own. I watched mah friends do it, then their kids do it, and any generation, kids are so… wonderful. The most important part is, they learning from us. So I guess I feel a sense of pride… over having a student.” He pulled away from her. “You can say you don’t like kids, but if you had one that, I dunno, looked at you for guidance…”

“Hmph. The only child I helped to guide was Nolan York.” Rouge smirked. “And he is still calling me for favors. How silly.” The woman casually left the shop. “I am going to rob a mansion for blueprints. Do not wait for me.” She morphed into a raven and flew away.

Upstairs, Wendy changed into her pajamas and put her emerald patterned dress in the laundry basket. As she put the covers over herself in bed, she looked down at Carla on a mat on the floor. “Carla, why do you always sleep down there?”

“Intelligent as I am, I’m still a cat.” She replied, her usual scowl not changing even as her eyes were closed. “Besides, there are few beds for most of us.”

Wendy looked at Sonny and Donna, sleeping together. She smiled at her kitten. “Why don’t we share?”

“Thanks for the offer, but you probably don’t want fur or feathers on your bed. And I wouldn’t want you to feel cramped.”

“No, I won’t mind, really. Come on, you look lonely down there.”

Carla sighed to herself. It was a little uncomfortable, and cold. …She wondered what a bed would feel like, albeit sharing a skimpy one with someone else. “All right.” Carla fluttered up and onto Wendy’s bed. The girl scooted over, allowed Carla under the covers, and put an arm over her like a stuffed animal. Wendy’s back was touching the wall; there really wasn’t much room for them. “Um… if my arm bothers you, I’ll move it.” Wendy spoke guiltily.

“Child, look at yourself, this is much too small. I may as well fall off.”

“Um… I-let’s do it this way.” Wendy lifted Carla onto her chest, still under the blanket as she wrapped both arms around the kitten. “Is this comfortable?”

“Sigh…” Carla was disbeliefed. “You’re going to keep insisting I sleep in a bed, won’t you? Oh well… I think I’m alright with this.”

“Okay. You’ll let me know if it’s not, right?”

“Yes, yes. Good night, Wendy.”

“Good night, Carla.” Both of them made it to slumber eventually, despite the weight of Carla on Wendy’s chest. Granted, it was harder to breathe or snore, but Wendy passed this off. Carla was certain of this unspoken inconvenience; in the three months Carla knew her, Wendy sure was insistent in places where she didn’t need to be. Still… the girl’s chest was comfier than the floor. She supposed it was the instinct of a cat to want to sleep by their master. Of course, Carla was too intelligent to have to follow such instinct, let alone call a little girl ‘Master.’ Yet… Carla was very fond of Wendy. She didn’t understand the bond she felt with her; other than the aforementioned, simple bond between child and pet. Carla felt odd to describe it that way, but at the moment, she couldn’t think of anyway else. She hoped to figure everything out one day. Where she came from… and where Wendy came from.

5:00 in the morning…

After a couple hours, Carla ended up in a position where she sloped frontways down Wendy’s belly, while said girl had her right arm dangling over the side. “Time to get UP!” Sonny and Donna leaped onto Wendy’s bed, still in socks and pajamas, and stomped the girl’s legs and chest, the force bouncing Carla off onto the floor.

“Honestly, you are going to give her sores if you keep that up!” Carla stated, rubbing her own head while Wendy rubbed her legs.

“Mr. Facilier says it’s time to get up!” Sonny announced.

“The Knight Bus is here!” Donna jumped.

“Put on your BEST clothes!” they both cheered. With that, the twins leapt down the hatch.

Carla put on her signature red shirt and yellow skirt while Wendy fixed on a short-sleeve, bluish-purple shirt, white shorts, and sky-blue strap-on shoes. (Other characters could live with wearing the same clothes every day, Wendy was not one of those people.) “At least we won’t have to run.” she said. “My legs get sore. Plus, we can always catch up on rest on the bus.”

“I don’t know, Child… The way Facilier was speaking of it…”

A faint shade of orange was in the horizon, but went unnoticed behind Cleveland’s buildings, so nighttime was still fresh. Wendy and Carla made it outside with bags of supplies packed. Facilier and the twins waited beside a very tall, night-blue bus with three floors. The door to the bus opened: the conductor bore a dark-purple suit and hat, and looked roughly in his 30s. “Top of the morning to you, laddies! My name is Jacksepticeye, here to play the role of Stanley Shunpike!”

The conductor announced with an Irish accent, speaking fast and energetically.

“They seriously got a YouTube Let’s Player to voice a role in this story?” Carla questioned.

“Yes, and I’ve got five tickets for Orchid Bay, one adult, three children, one pet, all aboard or we’ll be wastin’ daylight, tip-tip, taddly-ho, up from bed and off you go!”

“Please tell me that was part of your script and you don’t actually talk like that.” Carla said as they all boarded the odd bus.

“I stocked up on 10 pounds of crack before takin’ this gig, didn’t know what it was, but boy was I glad, pip-pip and doodly-doo! Aaaaall aboard!” The bus door shut.

The bus driver, Ernie Prang, was very old with white hair that looked like Albert Einstein. He had blue eyes under black circle glasses. There was also a Shrunken Head hanging by the windshield, sickly green with a squished nose, and had dreadlocks. It spoke with a Jamaican accent, “Mind your head.”

Ernie stomped the gas pedal, the passengers were flown to the back of the bus by the vehicle’s irrepressible speed. The driver swerved left, the passengers smashed against that wall, he zipped right, there they crashed. Wendy and Carla’s hearts jumped every time they were about to hit a car or a building, but—this made no sense—every obstacle was jumping out of their way like they were programmed. Carla absolutely had to know if anyone saw, and/or felt these movements.

“Can I interest you in a hot chocolate while you wait?” Stan asked perkily, whirling circles in midair as he poured a cup of chocolate—as it fell, the liquid made a whirl around and above before landing in the cup, and kept flying out and back in the cup as the bus was apparently rolling.

“Sure! I would love some hot chocolate!” Wendy was pressed against the wall, weakly reaching her arms forward to take the cup. She tried to sip, but on a sudden turn, the hot cocoa flew out and drenched her face. She screamed and cried tears from the hotness.

“We’re ROLLING, we’re ROCKS, we’re ROLLING, we’re ROCKS!” The Ice Climbers were bundled like a ball, rolling back-and-forth to the swaying of the bus.

“A little history behind this,” Facilier spoke calmly, his long arms and legs pressed against each side of the bus to keep from flying like the others, “before the Knight Bus was invented in 1865, the Ministry of Magic considered sidecar broomsticks. Heh heh, you can guess why that ain’t make the green light!”

Up ahead was a construction zone, where the cranes dropped tons of bendable pipes and long planks onto the road. A flatbed truck was passing by and got a flat tire, leaving a small space between the flatbed and the ground. The group expected all of that to magically jump aside—but Wendy was the first to notice otherwise. “Hey… why the long faces?” Dre Head asked.

The bus’s dimensions were steadily becoming squished and flat, along with its passengers; and its passengers’ stomachs. Everything seemed to go slow-motion with this part. They had very little of the third dimension left as they slid under the flatbed. Then the bus’s sides contracted, they became like a rectangular worm that crawled through a fallen pipe, up and around its sides and ceiling as said pipe was bent and spiraled. While still driving on its side, the squished bus could come out and drive across the side of a plank that was in the process of descending, followed by expert maneuverability across other falling planks, right-side-up, sideways right, upside down, until finally flipping and landing on the street. Almost instantly, the bus POPPED back to normal, zooming away from the construction zone. “Carla?”

“Yes, Wendy?”

“I’m glad I never went to school as a kid.” Wendy spoke with weeping eyes. They passed a sign that said, Orchid Bay, Maine. 5 hours by Knight Bus.

Orchid Bay, Maine

The sun was higher over the horizon when the bus finally made it to a forest road. It came to a very slow, and very gentle stop. As soon as the door opened, Wendy fell front-first on the ground, Carla landed on her gently, then the twins smashed them both, wearing happy expressions. As Dr. Facilier calmly stepped out, Stan Shunpike told him, “Sorry I can only take ya this far, but this town is very antsy when it comes to magic, and they try to limit supernatural tourism as much as possible. If you had element powers, that’s one thing, but be a little careful when using magic ‘rounds these guys. Thank ya for riding the Knight Bus, tell all yer friends and family, this is Jacksepticeye, I will see you all for the next bus ride!” He closed the door, and the vehicle zipped away, its tires screeching against the concrete.

“M-m-m… Mr. Facilier?” Wendy was on her knees, holding her stomach and crying. “I think I have motion-sickness… ulp."

“What? Already? Girl, we ain’t even at the timeskip, yet!” Facilier said.

“I’m sorry.”

“Don’ worry about it.” Facilier raised his cane. “I ‘ave a spell that’ll help. Troia!” He touched Wendy’s stomach.

She felt the sick feeling fade away, looking with wonder as she stood. “Wow! That does feel better!”

“Assuming my head was on correctly.” Carla spoke as they strolled across the forest road, “what did he mean by ‘this town is antsy with magic’?”

“Truth be told, I came here a couple times.” Facilier replied. “I’ll tell ya a little secret.” They walked around a winding turn of the forest, where they had perfect view of the ocean, and the city across. “That’s Orchid Bay. Looks like your average seaside town, right? Well, get this: they’s a barrier over that town, we call it the Veil. All magic and magical creatures alike are completely invisible.”

“Invisible?!” Wendy shook. “S-So that means we?…”

“Hhhhhahahahaha! Naw, humans are still flesh and solid, it’s just all the other weird stuff. The most they tolerate are benders. Y’see, that city is a home to both humans, AND demons. Good demons that just wanted an escape from all the sorrow and sadness downstairs, but there are bad ones. Of course, the humans wouldn’t be comfortable, that’s why the Veil was created, so that demons could live in peace without humans judging them, and humans can live happily not knowing there are big scary monsters everywhere they look. However, humans that possess magic like you and me see everything.”

“Excuse me, but didn’t you say there are also bad demons?” Carla asked.

“Correct. And therein lies whom we are visiting today: a very lovely lady by the name of Jasmine Lee. Her ancestors created the Veil, and it is her job to fight and control the evil creatures. Ah remember when she was in ‘er late teens and she helped teach martial arts at Hogwarts—hah hah, I FAILED that class!”

“Heh heh.” Wendy forced a laugh; she couldn’t find it too humorous, being a failure herself in some areas. “…Oh? Mr. Facilier, look!” Wendy pointed far up the winding, seaside road, where black GUN trucks were driving down, and helicopters flew overhead.

“Haven’t seen GUN this persistent since the Firstborn Quest. Wendy, y’all should run ahead, they won’t arrest us. Tom told me that Jasmine lives in the forest behind town. Try and find her and we’ll catch up.”

“Okay. Be careful, Mr. Facilier!” (Play “Sunshine Airport” from Mario Kart 8!)

Stage B-3: Orchid Bay

Mission: Find the home of Jasmine Lee!

“Sky Dragon BOOST!” Wendy blasted twin gusts of wind behind her and raced across the ocean, sidestepping left and right when GUN Sharks swam up from below in their aim to snack her. Wendy was bolting straight to the city pier, where Orchid Bay was displayed on the welcoming sign— “Wendy, watch out!” Carla yelled when a line of GUN Sharks appeared in her path, forcing the airbender to drift rightward, skiing against the surface in the process. She couldn’t turn around or slow down to look back, having to keep her feet moving across the water. “That was inconvenient.”

“I’m not done, yet!” Wendy declared as she raced toward a close-by cruise ship, which steadily sailed away from the town. It was sailing past a short, jagged rock that slanted vertically up like a ramp, so Wendy poured more speed to run up and fly off it, going as high as the ship’s deck. Carla lifted and carried the girl forward a little, then Wendy kicked a gust backward to fly onto the deck. “Sorry!” she yelled as she dashed across, sidestepping around the passengers and tables. She zipped to a flagpole, clutched it just as she flew by, and whirled upward thanks to the momentum, landing on the second level of the ship. “Whoa-!” She stumbled thanks to some rope on the floor, but recovered in time to nimbly jump the stacked boxes on the way.

When she encountered a taller stack of crates, Wendy shifted rightward and into the ship, throwing a quick “Sorry!” to all the waiters and workers that she zipped past and pushed with her wind. She slid down a stairway to the lower floor, following a set path through the dining hall, and out onto another deck where a Nitro Tram 5000 trampoline rested. “WHOOOAAA!” She jumped and bounced sky-high thanks to the powerful trampoline, but Wendy clutched a wire that was hanging under a blimp flying overhead. The blimp was designed like a Cheep Cheep fish. Carla flew and caught up to her. “Do you ever stop to think before doing something?”

“I can’t help myself sometimes! Besides, we’re about to fly over the city, I can handle this.” Wendy swung onto a walkway stationed below the blimp’s side, then Carla lifted her up onto the blimp’s roof. Wendy collected a Fire Soul that was floating over the balloon’s backside, then rushed up to the front, standing on the slope as she looked down at the city. “See any good places to land?”

“Wendy, don’t stand there or you might-”

“Wah-ah-AAAAHHH!” Wendy lost balance and fell as Carla predicted. There was a surreal blur as Wendy fell closer to the city—and landed on the back of some kind of slimy green bat monster. The monster lifted and turned its head to glare at Wendy, roaring a blood-hurdling scream. “AAAAHH!” Wendy leaped over the tail end, and landed on the head of a giant, orange, spike-backed dinosaur. The creature roared as Wendy ran across its back, up to its flailing tail before she flew off and landed on a rooftop. She needed a moment to catch her breath, and let Carla catch up. “Carla, where did THOSE things come from?”

It wasn’t just them. As the kitten looked down to the streets, giant lizards, blob creatures, some kinds of hairy crocodiles, roamed everywhere. “Perhaps this is what Facilier talked about.”

“And none of those people can see them…” Wendy recalled. “I wonder.” She grabbed Carla, leapt off the building, bounced off a table umbrella, and presented her friend to a passing businessman. “Hello, Mister! This is my cat, Carla!”

“…?” The man looked confused. “Uuuuumm-”

“Never mind!” She boosted up the street and stopped at a corner. “So it looks like no one else can see you, either.”

“Or perhaps he was pondering the point of some blue-haired child showing him her kitten.”
“Or that.” She sweatdropped. “Anyway, let’s head to the forest.” Wendy boosted down the right street, jumping up a stairway of fire escapes before climbing back on the roofs. A flock of Furnixes flapped around over a city street, so Wendy used their hook tails to swing across, then take land on a roof to her right. Some Bokoblin were trying to break into a rooftop window, so Wendy blasted the monsters over the edge with wind. “Sorry!” she yelled once more. Wendy ran off onto the next, lower roof and encountered twin Fatblin, who held metal shields. They jabbed their large spears, but Wendy jumped, kicked off the left one’s, then stamped him in the face with both feet. She flew back, and while he was dizzy, Wendy blew a Cyclone Roar to send him falling over the edge. For the second one, Carla Torpedo Spun into its face, not really hurting him, but while it was trying to swing its spear at Carla over the edge, Wendy could blast another cyclone and push him over.

Wendy jumped to the next roof, then saw a lush green park not far away, deciding to go for a stroll. She bypassed a pink monster eating the bathrooms (ew), and saw a Fire Soul several meters up in the air, with a stairway of Guay (purple birds with orange beaks) floating up to it, aligned with a playground slide. Carla couldn’t carry her that high, and although Wendy could run up the slide like a ramp, she was too heavy to jump the Guay, so she kept running. Wendy ran to a fountain in the park’s center, jumped into its central spout, and was flown upwards, landing on a passing GUN Hawk. The Hawk thankfully flew her over an area of broken ground, likely for construction, and she jumped onto a safe street while the robot shifted skyward.

After passing a left turn corner, Wendy came to a towering purple building with a circular, tube-like structure around the top part. Wendy hit a Spring Pad to bounce onto a foothold around the tower, then jumped a team of GUN Beetles to get onto the next foothold. She then grabbed a dangling retractable hook that pulled her higher, swung to another one before a Beetle shot her, pulled higher, jumped across a Beetle to grab another one, went higher, then landed on a rounding walkway where Shield Hunters shot at her. She jumped over the first one, between it and the second, and blasted both off their feet with air gusts, then she ran to kick the third in the chest, knocking it down as she ran up a stairway.

She reached the upper floor of the building, ran through the café to the opposite balcony, then had Carla carry her up onto the roof. She saw another GUN Hawk about to pass the left of the roof, flying the direction of the forest, so Wendy vigorously leaped onto its back. Her hand accidentally pressed a switch that—“WAAAAAAHHH!” made the robot fly super-speed, so Wendy lost her grip and fell into the forest. The branches weakened her fall, but she landed upside-down with her legs bent over her. She jumped back to her feet, already lost, wondering how far she ended up. Without really thinking, Wendy chose a direction and ran. (End song.)

An old woman of Chinese descent was calmly tending to her garden. She was overweight, wearing a large, brownish-purple dress with dark-pink witch hat designs. She wore a necklace with a pink emblem, had grey hair in a bun (with a white strip along its left), and squinted reddish-brown eyes. Just as she was watering some flowers, somebody had burst through her fence and plopped onto her carrot patch. “MY CARROTS!” she panicked, dropping the water can. The culprit, Wendy Marvell, shook the dirt off her face and stood up. “What’s the matter with you?! Those are Pikpik Carrots I had specially ordered from Europe to lead scavenging animals into my traps! I didn’t expect them to work so well on HUMANS!”

Wendy recomposed herself, “S-Sorry! I’ll help clean up!” She hurriedly picked up the fallen fence boards and set them outside of the garden, then used her bare hands to scoop the carrots back into their holes, and the dirt with them. Carla eventually landed by her.

“Don’t bother with the fence because that’s another area of protection that needs improving.” She returned to watering the flowers.
After Wendy finished replanting, she let her mind catch up with her. “Um, Miss… I’m looking for a woman named Jasmine Lee. Do you know if she lives around here?”

“Who wants to know?” The lady turned to her.

“Wendy Marvell, i-is my name.” She bowed. “This is Car- never mind, you probably can’t see her. Mister Facilier sent us to find her.”

“Facilier, Facilier…” The woman tapped her wrinkly chin. “Why does that name sound familiar?”

“I wouldn’t know, but Mr. Facilier attended a school called Hogwarts, and he knew Jasmine Lee from martial arts class. Now Mr. Facilier is teaching me about magic, so we’re-”

“Oh, HAH HAAA! NOW I remember!” The lady laughed. “Stick-Bones Harvey, that’s what we called him! Because the bigger kids picked him up and threw him like sticks! Ahhhh, those were the days.”

Wendy beamed. “Then you must be Miss Lee!” (“That much is obvious.” Carla remarked.)

“Please, call me Ah-Mah.” Jasmine spoke humbly. “I have a granddaughter, you look about her age. Who’s the cat with the wings?”

“Th-This is Carla! (At first, I didn’t think you could see her.)” Wendy scratched her head. “It’s nice to meet you, Ah-Mah.”

“The pleasure is all mine. Please, come inside and let me make you tea.” The woman walked onto her porch and entered her small, white house. “Then I’ll tell you more about Stick-Bones Facilier. Wash your hands first.”

Downtown

“DEMOOOOOONS! Hey, DEMOOOOOOONS!” Sonny cried for the whole town to hear. “Where are yooooooouuuuu-”

“Quiet!” Facilier bonked him with his cane. “Heh heh, DON’T MIND THEM, fellas, children get really over-imaginative when they wear fluffy coats in the beginning of summer!” He gestured the twins forward quickly.

“Mr. Facilier, why don’t the demons come out?” Donna questioned.

“The demons are out, but since y’all aren’t magic, you can’t see them. What up!” Facilier waved at a tall, yellow monster with a big mouth of sharp teeth. “Nobody in this town can see them, you’ll find very few people who know magic and supernatural phenomena exist. It’s the same as it’s been for centuries. Jus’ don’t worry about it, now I don’t see Wendy anywhere, so she’s probably at Jasmine’s house by now.”

The group made it to the opposite end of the parking lot of Orchid Bay Mall. “I’m goin’ ahead to Jasmine’s. Y’all remember what I told ya to find, right?” Facilier asked. The twins nodded. “Good, then take these cards.” He handed them small, green cards with witch hat logos. “Show them to every clerk. If he puts on a stupid look, move on to the next person. I’m counting on you, and no drawing attention to yourselves.” The twins happily skipped into the building to carry their tasks.

Facilier hopped in his bright purple car (hidden in a secret compartment only he knows) and rode out to the back woods of town, following a dirt trail. He happened upon a small white house with a purple roof, that smelled of old people. He walked up to the front door and knocked. “Who IS “Doctor Facilier.” He pronounced with his French accent.

“Oh, HAH hah haaa! Come in, come in, we were just talking about you!” Already sensing badness, Facilier creaked open the door and saw Jasmine, Wendy, and Carla at the table. “And then he got lost under Gruntilda’s portable underdress flea circus! WE COULDN’T FIND HIM FOR HOURS!” Ah-Mah cracked up.

“Harvey, so nice of you to join us!” Ah-Mah greeted the man as he sat at the table with a blushed face. “Your little intern has told me all about your shop. You really ought to watch yourself. The Magical Ministry may not approve.”

“You forget the Ministry is now World Government-protected.” Facilier noted, sipping a teacup. “Thanks to Miss Head President. We mages are allowed more freedom.”

“Freedom comes with a price, Harvey.” Ah-Mah shook her cup a little. “Magic was not an art that the gods blessed onto mortals. We developed it ourselves. There have been wars between element benders, ‘Muggles,’ and magic users alike. Our power was deemed too unnatural, and too deadly. That’s why laws had to be established. Especially in this town.”

“Miss Ah-Mah, could you tell us about yourself?” Wendy requested. “Mr. Facilier said your family created the Veil.”

“Yes, we did.” Ah-Mah sipped her cup. “My family always possessed strong magical prowess. To my knowledge, we are of very few families who studied physical combat. Sure, most mages believe you can just wave a wand and throw a few spells, but to be physically enduring and agile is an important gift. You should see how strong we are.” Ah-Mah flexed her left arm, smirking. “Course, not all of us are born with magic, my son for instance. Harvey, you are right that the World Government protects the Ministry of Magic. Thanks to them, we mages cannot be persecuted for our power. That does not mean mages cannot be feared, cannot create a panic among non-mages. This is the reason we must be discrete as much as possible, especially under the Veil.”

“Well, as long as people are happy.” Wendy replied with a glum look, facing down. “And if there are no bad monsters.” Inside, though, she had mixed feelings about the idea that magic users had to hide their selves. She looked up with a brighter look, “Miss Lee, will you teach me magic? Mister Facilier said you-”

“Ha ha ha, WENDY, Wendyyy.” Facilier clamped her mouth shut. “You can’t learn magic until you go to Hogwarts! No, I brought you to Jasmine’s so you could learn to punch and kick!”

“You mean… fight?”

“Of course, Wendy! A growing girl like you NEEDS more meat on your bones!” He lightly pinched Wendy’s arm, making her flinch. “Your legs have muscle, to be sure, and yo’ airbending’s superb, but you’d be amazed how far you get when you know how to punch.”

“Um… I guess you’re right.” Wendy looked down again, sadly.

“He has a point.” Carla agreed. “Don’t be sad, you’ve gotten by without magic this long.”
“I would be glad to teach you.” Ah-Mah began, standing up. “If not for the fact I am reallyyyyy, really old. I’ve had this pain in my hip for the past three months. I think it would be more wise to let my granddaughter teach you. If you head down the road outside, you can find her by the canyon, doing her… daily activity.”

Wendy and Carla jogged (and flew) through the forest to find a gorge area with barren, soil ground. “RAAAAH!” Wendy nearly lost her balance when a giant, brown-furred rat, with sharp teeth and horns, flew against the slope beneath her. (Play “Lightning Speed” from Naruto: Shippuden!)

Juniper Lee flexed her fingers after dealing such a mighty punch, then focused on her other opponent, the Dracotta Beast, a huge red dinosaur with big pink ears. June wore a green T-shirt that showed her belly, and bared a dark-pink silhouette of a juniper flower. She wore long blue jeans and large brown shoes, and had sleek black hair with a pink wisp along the left side. “Ya SEE what I did to that guy?!” June yelled at the Dracotta. “That isn’t even CLOSE to how hard I can punch!”

Without warning, the Dracotta whipped its tail and sent her flying. June recovered, but saw the Racatan had recovered, charging on all fours and attempting to snap June in its buckteeth, but June swung her foot up and kicked the rat in those teeth. She flipped, kicked off the creature’s head, and flew partway up the Dracotta’s body to kick it in the neck. Racatan turned around and breathed fire at the child, so Juniper ran a circle around the rat to surround himself in a flame circle. Juniper rushed up to the Dracotta to punch its knee, but it felt little pain and kicked June away.

While she was down, Wendy noticed the Racatan inhale the fire surrounding him, ready to blow it at the fallen girl, so Wendy dashed in the way, inhaled a large breath of air, and countered the fire with her wind, blowing it back and burning the Racatan’s face. June helped herself up and passed a grateful smile to the blue-haired. They focused on the monsters, in which Racatan shook the fire off as they growled with fury. “Jump above me!” Wendy yelled. June leaped high above as Wendy blasted a Cyclone Roar, blowing June several meters upward, so she could land on Dracotta’s head. She punched the beast’s blue eyes and tugged its ears, before the Dracotta shook his head and sent her flying.

The Racatan slashed its claws at Wendy, who dashed the opposite direction, slid to a halt, and “Sky Dragon BOOST!” came at full speed, ramming the Racatan’s stomach headfirst as he flew back. “Ow ow ow!” Wendy gripped her throbbing head. “Bad idea, bad idea!”

“Wendy, watch out!” Carla swooped down and lifted her friend to safety before the Racatan blasted fire.

“Thanks, Carla.” Wendy said as they glided above the trees. Looking down, she noticed a black-haired boy in a red shirt walking through a distant, open area of forest with his dog. “Look, there’s somebody there.”

These two figures, Ray Ray Lee and Monroe, wandered lost through the forest. “Ay can’t believe we got lost just because you thought you smelled barbeque from over that river!” Monroe stated with a Scottish accent.

“Hey, we stopped a group of Fire Demons from torching a rose garden, I say we’re heroes.” Ray Ray argued.

“Excuse me!” They both looked up, seeing Wendy and Carla overhead. “This area is dangerous! Get out of here!” the latter warned.

“Who in blazes are you?” Monroe shouted.
“That dog just talked!!” Wendy exclaimed.

Ray Ray gasped, “THAT CAT JUST TALKED! And can fly!!”

“Since you two are up so high, Ay don’t suppose you’ve seen any monsters?” Monroe inquired.

“Yes, there are monsters in that direction.” Carla nudged with her head. “You shouldn’t go wandering.”

“Oh, you did NOT just spit on me!” a familiar girl’s voice rang.

“JUNE!” The boy and dog hurried to where Carla pointed.

“Why am I such a difficult creature to listen to.” Carla remarked before carrying Wendy back.

“I just had these clothes dry-cleaned!” June shouted at the Dracotta. “If I can’t get these stains out, you’re paying with your teeth!”

“June!” She looked above the hill when Ray Ray and Monroe appeared. “A Racatan’s weakness is its tail.” Monroe informed. “And Dracottas have very ticklish ears.”

“Carla, we can handle it!” Wendy dropped free of the kitten’s paws and landed on the Dracotta’s head. She gripped and pulled the ears open, then Carla fluttered beside the right ear to tickle with her wings. The monster began laughing hysterically, falling on his back and kicking his legs. Meanwhile, Juniper dodged the Racatan’s breath, slid behind and grabbed his little tail. With her super strength, she lifted and swung him around and around. Wendy and Carla got away from the Dracotta as it stood up in anger. It turned to look at June, so she could chuck the Racatan up and against Dracotta’s face. They both fell on the ground defeated. Wendy ran beside June and exchanged a victorious smirk. (End song.)

After the monsters recovered, they were sitting politely (though scowling) before June, as Racatan spoke, “Ruh-rah, rur-rah-rah, rur-rah-rah.”

“Not that my Racatanese is top notch, but I believe he’s angry at the Dracotta for stealing its golden nut.”

“Okay, Dracosaurus, give back his nut, and both of you crawl back to your caves,” June demanded, “because if I see you tearing up the valley again, I’m wearing my gym shoes!”

Both monsters exchanged gruff looks, before the Dracotta pulled a saliva-covered gold rock from its bowels. He gave it to Racatan, before both stomped away in anger. “Sigh… that could’ve taken longer. Thanks for the help.” June smiled at Wendy, holding a hand out. “The name’s June. What’s your-” Wendy panicked when she saw a floating pair of eyes, and an open mouth behind June, but the girl swung her other first behind her and punched the invisible chameleon. The creature depressingly crawled away.

Wendy stared agape, but shook this off and returned the smile. “I’m Wendy.” She shook her hand. “I’m happy to help.”

“THAT was SO COOL!” Ray Ray cheered. “Who is this blue-haired girl?! PLEASE tell me you’re our long-lost cousin!”

“I think we used up that cliché.” June remarked. “But he raises a good question. Where’d you come from, Wendy? And who’s the flying cat? (I’m open if you’re willing to trade.)”

Ray Ray snorted a chuckle, earning a glare from Monroe.

Ah-Mah’s House

“And that’s how Stick-Bones Harvey got himself off of the laundry string.” Ah-Mah concluded her tale, and Facilier held his hat over his face in embarrassment.

“My favorite part is when that bully flapped him like a towel!” Ray Ray laughed.

“If I didn’t know this was a magic school, I would’ve sworn you made all that up.” June rolled her eyes humorously.

“Oh, it happened, all right.” Ah-Mah nodded. “If you roll up your sleeves, we might still see the clothespin marks.”

“Weeell, putting that aside,” June turned to Wendy, “I wouldn’t mind showing you a few moves. ‘Course, you kicked plenty of butt back there already.”

“Heh heh. I’d still like an ice bag for my head, though.” Wendy blushed.

“I can’t right now, though.” June frowned regretfully, standing up. “We promised our parents we’d help clean the house. How ‘bout we meet in the park at 1:00? Come on, Ray Ray.”

“Dude, you gotta teach me how to run like Super Sonic!” Ray Ray exclaimed to Wendy as he followed his sister.

“Yer an annoying mix of both Super Sonic and Chaos.” Monroe remarked. The trio shut the door upon their exit.

“For the sake of avoiding anymore stories…” Facilier stood up. “We should probably regroup with some friends of ours. Let’s go, Wendy, Charles.”

“Thank you for the tea!” Wendy told the woman.

“And my name is Carla.” The cat corrected.

They climbed in the back of Facilier’s WKD WTCH car while the witch-doctor got behind the wheel. “I sent Sonny and Donna inside the mall for a ‘private’ errand. If they ain’t find it, we’ll look ourselves.” Facilier fixed his rearview mirror.

“What did you send them to find?” Wendy asked.

Facilier smiled to himself and sported a light chuckle. He turned to face Wendy. “You’re getting a jumpstart ahead of all those first-years, Wendy. Because we’re about to buy you a wand.”

Greenland; Mountain of Flavors

The morning was crisp as the sun peeped over the horizon. The ocean air smelled especially fresh at this time of day, especially when it mixed with the cold scent of ice cream. Augustus parked his plane on the ocean, climbing a rugged cliffside as Maggie rode his shoulders. He and the Baby Trio followed the route above, finding a wooden house within an enclosing. Augustus knocked, and a pair of eyes looked through the looking hole. “Tax collector?”

Augustus lowered his shades, smirking. “Adventurer.”
“Oh!” The man opened the door. He was actually a brown bear with a long snout, white T-shirt, and reddish-brown trousers. “You must be Augustus! Brandon told me you’d be coming, yup.”

“Messenger bird travels fast.” Augustus noted, walking in.

“No actually, we have cellphones.” Ricardo held up the small device. “You say you lookin’ for Corn-Clamber Boots for that-there Buttermilk Buildin’?”

“Oh-huh. And it looks to me you have a surplus.” Augustus looked around. “One Size-9, two Size-1’s, and a Size-2.”

“Ohh, these children… Brandon warned ya about Lord Licorice, yup?”

“Did he warn you what I thought about Lord Licorice, yup?” Augustus tossed his lollipop in the trash.

“He warned me you had too many sodas, yup. Augustus, if you’re really going to put the young’uns in danger, I need to know, what’s so special about Buttermilk Building? Surely it’s more than the sake of an adventure.”

Augustus began another, yellow lolli. His eyes still behind his shades, he looked up in thought.

“Mi abuela said, when God created the world, He made all kinds of candies that, when baked together, make the most delicious cake in the world!” The diseased, little Spanish boy spoke with wonder and delight to his teenage visitor.

“You must be thinking of the Eight Sugary Wonders.” Augustus spoke coolly. “The Eight Firstborn created those, and they create a cake that-

“No no no, is not like those! These candies were around before that! And the cake that they create, its taste lasts with you to Heaven!”

“A cake more delicious than the Eight Sugary Wonders?” The explorer was highly intrigued, beginning another lollipop. “I might have to see this for myself.”

The boy coughed. “I want to eat it, too. Señor Augustus… can you please take me to find it?”

Augustus frowned. “I dunno if you’re in the right… shape to travel.”

“…” Augustus didn’t want to disappoint him… nor did he want to lie. “How long do you even have?”

“The doctors say seven months. I don’t think it can save me, but it sounds so… delicioso.”

The faint light twinkled off Augustus’s shades. He smiled. “Tell me what these candies are. If I don’t make it… I’ll still bring the cake to you.”

That was back in November. Now it was May. Augustus wanted to find the Lost Candies, but was more in debt with the Big Mom Pirates in finding Candied Planet. He thought that if they could find Candied Planet, he could take Luvoir with them, show him these Candies and more. But Augustus hadn’t gotten over how he was deceived by Big Mom. He wasted time hunting the Sugary Wonders, when he could have searched for the Lost Candies for a better purpose.

Truthfully, Augustus suspected Luvoir to have passed by now, so any reason to find the Lost
Candies was for the adventure. But in theory, he could have found the Candies if he hadn’t been more interested in “Candied Planet.” He was selfish, he admitted, and he regretted it. “You’re right, maybe it is.” He told Ricardo. “But you don’t need to know that. How many Chocolate Coins you want for these, 30?”

“Thirty-four.” Ricardo said. Augustus tossed him the coins, buying the four Corn-Clamber Boots for them. They looked like normal boots, but they had very sharp sweet corns on their soles. “Jus’ don’t tell Lord Licorice where ya got them.”

As the Marzipans were leaving the shop, somebody watched them from the sky. It was a man flying like a kite, his body flat and bendable as paper. His hi-tech goggles zoomed on the group.

Unknown fortress

The Marzipans’ image displayed on a screen. A ball-shaped creature with spider legs, a single eye, and a mouth of sharp teeth skittered off to a throne room. He spoke with a wide smile, “Lord Licorice! The Teavee saw something! He saw people buy Corn-Clamber Boots! What if they go to Buttermilk??”

Lord Licorice was interrupted polishing his shiny, green candy gun. He smirked evilly. “Is that so? Well… If they goes up there, just have Veruca deal with them.” He locked his gun on a Red Chuchu that was mindlessly crawling around the floor. “I’ll be there momentarily.” He shot the Chuchu, scattering his remains. “Tell Smithers to clean that up.” he said as he walked away.

Negaverse; DNK Moonbase

Team Nerehc and the DNKG operatives returned to Moonbase. They uncuffed the delinquents’ arms, but fixed chi-blocks on Atnor and Annaira. “You’ll be given minor chores and duties until we feel like we can trust you.” Nerehc told them. “I’d like for that day to be soon.”

“Yeah, we aren’t stupid.” Beewv stated smugly on Avakam’s shoulder. “Just show me to the nearest dirty keyboard and I’ll do what I do.”

A minute later, Sicnarf brought Yddam and Hcaz to them. “Beewv, you’re helping Hcaz clean the terminals.” The glasses-wearing boy carried Beewv off. “Annaira, help Yddam in the kitchen.”

The Yhprum sister looked frightfully at the alien. “Hehe… no hard feelings?”

“Leave your light on when you go to sleep.” Anna threatened before following her.

“Atnor, help Sicnarf fix weapons. Avakam, help Inap in the laundry room.”

Avakam shot a sudden glare at Inap’s face, scaring the girl. The alien walked ahead annoyedly as Inap jogged far behind. Nerehc sighed and returned to his office, sitting boredly behind stacks of papers. Ghirahim popped out of his sword. “Why do you even care about these fools, Master?”

“When the world’s about to end, you have the urge to make as many friends as possible.”

“Where’s your evidence that the world is ending?”

“Some guy obsessed with masks. I really dunno what to do, Ghira… if finding the Seven Lights and Thirteen Darknesses is up to the Positives, I guess the most I can do is build up my own army. However whacked-up we are.”

The office door knocked, so Ghirahim returned. Nerehc answered the door to find AlyakAm and Egroeg Nnik. “Hello, Numbuh -3621.” The former greeted tonelessly. “We have a request for you. We wish to go into the Posiverse to meet our Positives. Our own private Meet Your Match Day.”

“Could you organize a meeting?” Egroeg asked.

“Sure. What’s the occasion?”

“We feel bad for missing Meet Your Match Day. AlyakAm is especially looking forward to mocking my opposite self.”

“Egroeg knows that if he mocks me in such a light, I will eat his fingers.” AlyakAm said.

“Why don’t siblings bond as well as you guys.” Nerehc remarked sarcastically. “Okay, I’ll try to get in contact with Cheren and see what his operatives are doing. Maybe I can ask his progress…”

The three of them left the office.

Underworld

Medusa watched them all in her giant cauldron. Nosam was helping Lorac train in acrobats, using his waterbending as an obstacle course. Ynohtna was trying to play with his gloomy little sister. Ikuyim was practicing her crystalbending. Newd was bugging Ydnew, in the form of a red bee.

“Simple little Negatives… so carefree and blind to everything.”

One of her green snake strands, Thanatos, dangled beside her. “Medusaaa! When are we going to start finding the Darknesses?! Palutena is going to beat us!”

“Patience, Thannypoo. It won’t matter who finds what first. Because Palutena will have Seven Lights, and I will have Thirteen Darknesses. Assuming I can’t rely on Ragaj to turn the Lights to my side, thirteen still beats seven!”

“Yes, but if we wait too long, the universe will be destroyed, and we’ll have to wait another quadrillion years.” Pandora, the living blue flame with a face, spoke depressedly.

“Yes, you’re right. Which is why it’s time we began our quest.” Medusa smirked at her cauldron. “Little do they know, these Negatives are about to take part in a story I whipped up: Legend of the Thirteen Darknesses! HA HA ha ha!”

“Zeeeeehahaha.” Blackbeard laughed, munching a cherry pie. “I’m too excited to meet them! What were their names again?”

“I dunno, Blacky. Why don’t you name one?”

“Gladly!” Blackbeard twirled and let his coat flap, speaking confidently, “I believe one of them was a Pirate Emperor like me! His name is Davy Jones!” He pictured the tentacle-faced captain in the sky.

“I remember a few as well.” Pandora sighed. “Two of the Darknesses are wizards. One of them is Zeref the Black Cloud.” Her flame displayed the handsome, teenage mage with black hair.

“Oo-oo, I know!” Thanatos perked up. “Two of the Darknesses were alien overlords! One of them sounds super sexy! And her name,” the snake twirled, “was YELLOW DIAMOND!” He imagined a slim, shadowed figure with a yellow eye.

Medusa pictured these three figures, as well as 10 more silhouetted, appearing in the dark sky.

“When these three evils come together, the New World will be OURS for the taking! Any silly child army Palutena can create will pale in comparison! For now, it is time for our favorite opposites to begin. Ragus... he is at his house.”

Somewhere in the Negaverse was a girl with wide, psychotic purple eyes, aquamarine hair, and a forced smile. She seemed to have stitches on her face, wore a dark-pink coat, and a dress depicting a full moon over a shadowed graveyard. “Great, Lady Medusa! I look forward to playing with him!” She held a doll of Nereh in her hand.

Who remembers Juniper Lee? Good show back in the day, I watched it to refresh my memory, it wasn’t bad! But as you can see, Wendy has the uncanny power to make friends with anyone named “Lee.” XD And yes, Jacksepticeye is a YouTube Let’s Player, for some reason I pictured him as Stanley Shunpike from Harry Potter. Next time, we’ll do Augustus’s next stage, then lots of training for Wendy. Don’t smoke, kids!
Chapter Summary

Augustus and his crew climb up Buttermilk Building. Meanwhile, Wendy and Juniper Lee engage in combat practice! (OPTIONAL CHAPTER.)

Definitely one of the shorter chapters in this story; but who can really complain, when chapters will get so much longer later. XP This takes place during Chapter 9 of Lights.

Chapter B-4: Rotten Cream

Orchid Bay Mall

Facilier parked his car in an open space before he, Wendy, and Carla entered the mall. “Mister Facilier, can we buy some new clothes while we’re here?” Wendy asked bubbly.

“How many clothes can you have, Child?” Carla questioned.

“Not just for me, for you!” Wendy grinned. “You need more fashion, Carla!”

“I am not a crazy schoolgirl. I am perfectly fine with my current outfits and nothing.” They walked by a window advertising ‘Clothes For Cats.’ Carla pressed her paws and face against it. Tiny shirts and shorts, tiny skirts, tiny ties, tiny bikinis, all cute and fit for her size. “My, those look lovely.”

“Aha, there they are!” Facilier beamed. “SONNY! DONNA!” He waved.

“WHERE?” the distant twins looked around. They spotted each other next to each other. “SIBLIIING!” They hugged.

Facilier, Wendy, and Carla went to join the twins. “Hey, where’s Carla?” Sonny looked around.

“I’m right here.” Carla said.

“I don’t see her, Sonny!” Donna looked.

“Wow. You really are invisible, Carla.” Wendy deduced.

“I wouldn’t consider these two proof. Sigh, but if I am, at least you can see me, Child.”

“So did you find it?” Facilier asked.

“Yeah, we did!” Sonny danced. “We showed them around! The first guy was like ‘Uhhhhh.’”

“The second one was like ‘DUUUUUHHH.’” Donna danced.

“Then after about 10 or 12 ‘Dummy-whats’…”

“WE FOUND IT!” Both excitedly pointed to a second-floor store labeled GOTHICS GALORE.

“Now’s the chance to say that’s obvious, Charles.” Facilier remarked as he led them to the escator. (“Why do you keep calling me that.”)

Gothics Galore reeked of a scent that ruined Wendy and Carla’s noses, possibly a perfume goths would wear. The woman running the stand was slim and had brownish-black hair with some colored strands, tied in two balls. She was smoothing her black nails when the group arrived, especially taking notice of the Shadow Man and winged cat. “You guys look the real deal.” She put her file down and turned to them. Her nametag read Tasha.

“Good morning, Miss.” Facilier grinned coolly and showed his own card. “This child here is a Little Wiz, so we’re looking to get hitched up.”

Tasha looked at Wendy, and her glare made the girl back up shyly. “She looks like a twerp. Are you sure she’s old enough?”

“She turned 11 back in February, she’s a registered Hogwarts student! Come on, she knows not to use it, just show us the good stuff!”

“Fine.” Making sure no one else was in the store, Tasha opened a compartment under the scalp of a mannequin skull on her desk. She pushed the button, sealing the shop with a garage door. The walls and shelves flipped, revealing undersides with rows and rows of wands, spell books, and magic charms.

Tasha’s own glass desk sunk and came up with a collection of wands. “Any wand you could ever ask. Take your pick.”

Wendy was highly intrigued. They were all cool-looking wands. She first took a smooth, black one labeled ‘Raven’s Beak.’ She flicked the wand: a storm of hidden fireworks sprouted out of the walls and floors, exploding everywhere and creating colorful clouds. Tasha casually put out the flames with an extinguisher. “Try another one.”

Embarrassed, Wendy put it back and picked up a ‘Christmas Star,’ which had a shiny yellow star on its tip. Wendy tapped it on the desk, making glitters. Jingle bells sounded, as did church bells, snow fell from the ceiling, and a gigantic snowman broke through and started jumping around the five of them, smashing them flat. The snowman flew away, and all that stopped. “Nope. Try again.” Tasha said.

Wendy unflattened herself and picked a ‘Viola Rose,’ which was green with purple petals around the tip. She smiled, having a good feeling about this wand. She gave it a whirl and flicked.

Somewhere in the world, a tremendous explosion burned 500 miles of land into nothing. The smoke cloud rose like a mushroom. “We’ll return to Classic American Wars after these messages!” With that, Tasha turned the TV off.

“I wanted to see that part,” she said. “Anyway, wrong wand.” Wendy had turned Carla into a fish-turkey with her flick. “Pick again.”

Wendy looked at them with thought… then noticed a pretty pink wand that glittered like crystal. She picked it up and rubbed her hand along it. “Oh, don’t bother with that one.” Tasha said. “Lamia Scales don’t pick masters easily.”

Wendy stared and waved it around softly. There was something entrancing about the Scale. …The wand glowed, and a pink circle of light shone around Wendy. It reflected off Facilier, Carla, and the twins’ eyes. They gazed in awe. A kind of light, and a kind of force that established the contract between wizard and wand. The light disappeared, and Wendy stared at the Scale, still speechless.
“…OUR EYES HURT FOR SOME REASON!” Sonny and Donna smiled (‘guess they didn’t actually see it).

“Huh… not bad.” Tasha said without interest. “You’re like the second person that got a Lamia Scale from this store.”

“Who was the first?”

“Some chick with pink hair. I think she’s like, a dancer. I have a picture of her somewhere…” She searched her drawers.

“I think we’re good.” Facilier concluded. “How much do we pay you?”

“Eighty dollars.”

“Can’t expect the cliché where you’re so amazed with her power, you decide to sell for free.” Facilier shrugged, pulling the money out of his wallet. “Thank you for the wand.”

The five mages (only way to simplify them) left the mall as Wendy studied her wand with sparkling eyes. “Wow, my first wand! I can’t believe it!” She waved it around. “I’m finally a full-fledged mage! I can turn water into wine, and lampposts into toads, and make the sky brown, and-”

“All in the comfort and safety of where no one can see us.” Facilier reminded her. “You’re still underage, Child. Using magic outside o’ school gets ya in trouble.”

“Oh.” Wendy frowned. “But, where would we go?”

After they made it to their car, Facilier quickly gestured the group inside. He sat in the front seat while turning to them, “We probably shouldn’t do it anywhere out in the open, ‘specially with all these GUN trucks drivin’ around. (Government musta tipped them off this is a good place to hide.) So we gonna train you someplace special. IN HERE!” Without warning, Facilier swept the four of them into his hat, then dove in himself.

“UUH!” They landed on a flat, bright-blue, tiled floor that stretched for miles in a dimension under a wavy, fiery-orange sky. The hat landed and bounced as Facilier stretched out. “WELCOME, children, to the hat of Doctor Facilier!”

“WE still can’t see CARLA!” Sonny and Donna chorused with silly smiles.

“Now I know you’re pulling a sham.” she replied with a glare.

“Ain’t no one gonna find us, ain’t no one gonna know. So wand ready Wendy, are ya ready?” Facilier slipped out a stack of cards from his sleeve.

The blue-haired maiden clutched her wand and looked confidently, “I’m ready!”

“Perfect! Then here, we, GO!” Facilier shuffled the cards around the floor, they grew to human size and began floating on their own. A creepy Joker card approached Wendy. “Simple Blasting Spell, Wendy, just flick your wand and say ‘Expelliarmus’!”

Wendy focused on the living card. “EXPELLI-” Wendy flicked the wand—when she threw her arm back, the wand flew behind her, whirling across the air. “AAAH!” She dodged when the Joker blew fire.

“Firm grip, Wendy!” Facilier yelled.
Wendy ran by, grabbed her wand off the floor, and—“Expelli-” She held it by the tip, the wand blasted and sent herself flying backward.

“Remember your arm movements!”

Wendy aimlessly shook her wand, “Incendio! GYAAAAH!” Her wand caught fire, it spread to her hand, she ran around the floor screaming and shaking it.

“Oppotus Lookin!” She cast the spell at a mirror—it struck herself, and Carla nearly puked at the sight of Wendy’s insides.

“VENTUS!” Wendy furiously whipped her arm around like a windmill, creating a cyclone that spun her around in midair like a wheel.

“YAAAAAAAAHHHH!” After a failed Snake-Summoning Spell, the slithery creatures were nipping Wendy’s legs. She ran around frantically while Carla shook her head in disappointment.

“You’re hopeless, Child…”

Border of South and North Dakota

Anyone who is familiar with the tale of Black John Licorice will hear that the Licorice Stalks grow in South Dakota. That was a lie that was told to make the song rhyme. That’s not to say nothing can be found between the two states. The Marzipan Pirates landed a few miles off, then walked the rest of the way. The sky became cloudy with a creamy white mist. The very atmosphere made them feel kind of moist. Augustus took a great whiff, smiling at the mountain beyond his sunglasses.

“Buttermilk Building.”

The mountain of the richest, moistest cream towered high. Augustus could already feel its rich, melty taste. “At its very peak sits the Sun Cream. Which, out of context, sounds like suntan lotion, but it’s actually a cream so soft, slippery and warm, it melts all the troubles in your heart.”

“So it’s like doin’ it with a lady wearing sunscreen on the beach.” Rallo said.

“Yes, but going mountain hiking in summer won’t give me any swimsuits.” Stewie complained as they put on their Corn-Clamber Boots. “Perhaps the weapon we’ll acquire here will be some kind of Cool—”

“Stewie, Ah SWEAR TO GOD if you say that!” Rallo threatened.

“…Blasting gun.” Stewie finished.

“Good.”

“Mw-mw.” Maggie took out her pacifier, smiled at them, and said, “Cool Hwhip!”

“GOD DAMMIT!” Rallo cursed. (Play “Butter Building” from Smash Bros. Brawl)

Stage B-4: Buttermilk Building

Mission: Get the Sun Cream!

With the Clamber Boots strapped tight to their feet, Augustus marched up the slippery white slope with the Baby Trio behind. Giant creamballs rolled down at them from the cliff above, so the four were careful to maneuver around, which was more difficult on this ground. The cliffside was exposed from the cream, and was made of solid, rugged sherbet. “We can walk up this!” Augustus told them, planting the sweet corn spikes against the ice cream. His boots stuck perfectly to the wall, so the adventurer began to stomp up. Creamballs continued to drop from the heavens, the Marzipans stepped left or right to let them pass before continuing. Cream Parabuzzies—Buzzy Beetles with white shells and wings, flapped back-and-forth over parts of the path, forcing the crew to simply wait or walk around. Maggie chose to go collect a Golden Wonka Bar between mirrored Beetles, then the four pirates made it to the ledge up top.

Creamballs still came at them from the left, so the four had to step up strips of sherbet on the wall, high enough so the balls could pass under. Eventually, the crew made it to a small open field above a cliff, where White Cream Chuchu emerged from the moist ground. Augustus used his Candycane Cutlass to slice the blobs in front, and stamped his Corn-Clamber Boots against the ones behind, and Maggie took delight in shooting them in the eyes, viewing the creepy result. Augustus retrieved a Bounce Gum from one of the Chu, looking up the series of pillars that led higher up a peak. “Mags, you’re with me.” he decided. “You brats take that path.” He pointed at a road around the left of the mountainside, which Stewie and Rallo followed.

He put Maggie over his shoulders, then puffed his Bounce Gum to size before making the exciting hops up the slippery pillars. It put a smile on his face when Maggie waved her arms and cheered with her little baby voice. He was wary of candy corn spikes sticking in and out of certain platforms, before the gum popped on the targeted peak. Creamy Goombas appeared from cream mounds, white Goombas with red shoes, and if the humans got headbonked, their bodies would become more slippery for a few seconds. Augustus dodged their attacks as he easily stomped the creatures. With that, they faced another, more distant peak, in which Maggie fired her grappling hook to latch a pillar that stood on it. She detached the rope and tied to a pillar on this peak, letting Augustus climb across. The opposite end was steadily losing grip on the slippery pillar, but just before it fell, Augustus leaped the rest of the way.

The explorer followed a path between parallel trench walls, with a sherbet path leading up along the left. His body shifted sideways as he started the journey up, and Snapdragons popped out of their holes above or below the path in attempt to eat him. This path ended, and Augustus looked right (upward in his vision) to find a sherbet path around a rock kept suspended by two pillars. Augustus jumped and quickly flipped 180 degrees in midair to stick his Corn-Clambers into the sherbet. The path spiraled under the rock and to its right side, letting Augustus kick off onto a path along the right trench wall. After avoiding the Creamy Parabuzzies flapping over the path, Augustus made it to the flat ground above.

Soldiers in black armor and wielding Candycane Cutlasses ambushed him—the Licorice guards known as Blackberries. Seems he was here, after all. Augustus threw his Gobstopper to bounce around their faces, then caught his projectile before running to clash his sword with one. Another guard ran up from the side and swung his blade, Augustus ducked to trick the guard into striking his friend, then the teen jumped up to punch the second one in the face. Augustus threw his Gobstopper around the other three guards, attacking them with his cutlass afterward, but the previous two recovered, forcing Augustus to defend himself before dodging away. “You guys would be easier to beat if I had my Haki. Ugh, I don’t need this.” Augustus abandoned the fight and dove to his belly, sliding down a slippery cream slope over the peak’s edge. He gained speed quickly, then up a ramp, over a gap, before landing on a new field.

Along the left wall was a slope with very small sherbet patches, perfect for the Deadly Babies’ feet, so he couldn’t journey up and get the Wonka Bar on his own. Augustus ignored the Chuchu in the field and entered a cave with a ceiling of spiky candy corn. There was a hole in the ground, and the next path was through a tunnel on a high perch. Augustus carefully stepped to and peeked into the hole. A familiar football-shaped head and round, fluffy black afro overlooked a pit of melted cream. “Stewie, Rallo! Up here!”

The babies looked up in surprise. Stewie spoke in his communicator, “Augustus, there you are. Is Maggie up there with you?”

“She’ll catch up.” Augustus replied in his own communicator. “Listen, Tubbs, do that underground boombox thing.”

“Only if you promise to find a better way to classify ‘that thing.’” Rallo jumped and burrowed underground, using his boombox to shake the ground and cause a geyser to emerge from the pool of cream. Augustus jumped on as it rose up, then jumped into the tunnel before it smashed him against the spikes. The tunnel led to a more expansive cave with many holes and platforms. Augustus threw his Gobstopper to take down the Cream Keese, and Rallo’s boombox caused geysers to emerge from all the holes, albeit at different heights. When Augustus looked down into their chamber, it seemed the babies’ accessible path was lower than the ground where the geysers were, so Rallo couldn’t get closer for a better quake. Augustus walked around to study the room, seeing a Blackberry guard with a shield standing on a platform, in which his Gobstopper couldn’t penetrate him.

Augustus got onto a short platform that a geyser could propel him to, with another platform blocking the Blackberry from his vision. Regardless, he knew he was there, and a flat-bottomed stalactite hung above that middle platform. Augustus chucked his Gobstopper at the ‘tite’s bottom, it bounced off and hit the Blackberry in his suspecting head. Augustus rode another geyser onto a different platform, then quickly stomped across a sherbet path along the right wall. The path ended beside the Blackberry’s pillar, so Augustus jumped off to deal a knock-out punch against the soldier. A large block sat on this platform, which Augustus could push into the hole beneath the platform. In the room below, it didn’t land in a cream pool, but rather a slide that slid the block down to Stewie and Rallo’s area.

The two used the block as a boost, then Stewie lifted Rallo onto the higher ground, so he could get closer to the cream pools and create higher geysers. Augustus could get onto the highest platform and eat a Fudgepuffsicle. He inflated roundly and drifted upward through a tunnel on the ceiling. Aside from the Spiny Creamy Buzzies floating around, Augustus avoided the big droplets of cream that would weigh him down, and cause him to burp out his Fudgepuff before he made it. Regardless, he avoided the obstacles and burped to normal width at the top of this peak. From here, he overlooked an extremely long, vertical cream wall, which would “U” turn up another, parallel wall. A crystal patch of Rock Candy grew close by. Augustus took a piece and encased himself in the blackish-purple sphere. He smirked with excitement.

At full speed, Augustus rolled down the wall in the Rock Candy, past the “U” bend in a second, and raced several meters up the opposite wall with the momentum. Not too far, of course, but he could thankfully land the Rock Candy on a small path leading further up the mountain. He was surprised the crystal could remain stable in the slipperiness, but he still had to keep balance. He squished Cream Goombas that were in his way, then arrived at another, though more narrow U-slope. He kept his sphere perfectly aligned, rolled down, and launched high enough to land in another U-slope, then once in the air, he had to shift his weight backward to land in the one behind, then that U-slope landed him on the next path.

This road was smaller in width and had creamballs rolling down, requiring Augustus to take cover in the enclosings that were as round as his Rock Candy. Rolling up the slope was a pain for that reason, but worth it in the end when he made it. Augustus stopped his crystal against a stalagmite, then stomped his clamber boot against to break himself free. From here, Augustus marched up the sherbet wall, his vision soon blocked by the creamy clouds. He could already smell it: the Sun Cream, loveliest of all toppings. Beyond these clouds, the golden sun in the blue sky, blessing the cream with eternal warmth. …Clearly the scent was in his head. (End song.)

Because when Augustus made it above the clouds and stepped on right-side-up ground, the scent of rotting cream hit his nose. Augustus crossed the bridge that led to the pool of Sun Cream. It was a dry, brownish color, and smelled as though it had been left sitting out for ages. The lollipop fell from his mouth when Augustus gasped. He bent down for a closer look. The Sun Cream was almost completely decayed. No way this was unnatural. “Why…Why would anyone… do this?”

“Simple, really.” Augustus stood up with a start. A woman with a horrid smell, filthy and messy brown hair, flies buzzing around her, and wearing a brown leather suit that hasn’t been washed for days, stepped out from behind a decayed pillar. “Lord Licorice wanted it this way.”

Augustus clutched his Gobstopper, ready to break some teeth. “Who are you?”

“Lord Licorice’s Number Three: Veruca Salt. I ruined the Sun Cream, because he wanted me to. He wanted me to because I’m spoiled rotten. Anything I touch becomes spoiled and rotten. Like the air.” Augustus backed away when the stench around her grew stronger.

“Euh. Are you a poisonbender?”

“Hmm, no.” She smiled wryly and shook her head. “I ate the Rot-Rot Fruit. I wanted it, because it was rotten, like me.”

“A Devil Fruit? Did you steal those from the Big Mom Pirates?!”

“I don’t care where Lord Licorice got them. I wanted one. He doesn’t want people getting in his way. He wants me…” Veruca slowly approached him with a menacing smile, “to make you ro—”

Augustus hurled the Gobstopper at her face, knocking her down before it bounced back. He stared at the untainted, shiny red sphere. The sunlight bounced off it, and to his sunglasses. “Unlucky for you, Gobstoppers never go sour. Then again…” He looked at the Sun Cream pool. “Neither should this’ve.”

Veruca got up and growled spitefully at him. They both looked up at the sound of some whirring. Veruca grinned madly at the small aircraft with cinnamon roll propellers. “Ah-ha. I wanted her to show up. I wanted us to capture you together.”

“How is that thing flying, the air should be too creamy.” Augustus stated.

“Our Cinnamon Ships are protected by their sugary glitter. They’re kept sticky and dry. Not like you.” Veruca channeled her power and spread the awful smell around the air. Augustus clamped his nose and mouth shut, trying to back away from the spoiled woman. The Cinnamon Ship hovered over him, and a very long and rubber-like woman, with purple skin, hair, and jumpsuit, dropped down, grabbed Augustus’s shoulders, and wrapped her body around him like a rubber snake. “Meet Violet Beauregarde. She’s very flexible. She ate the Flex-Flex Fruit. We’re friends.”

“Best friends!” Violet grinned.

“Knock him out, Violet. I want Lord Licorice to see him blacker than blackberry.”

“Oh, Friend!” Violet stretched her head in front of his, and despite the boy’s struggling, his world went black with a headbash.
“Augustus?” Rallo yelled into his communicator. “‘ey, Augustus, where are you? O Captain, my captain!”

“Those clouds shouldn’t be blocking our com links.” Stewie said, looking up the mountain he saw Augustus venture up. “Maggie, do you see anything?”

The girl zoomed her vision closer to the clouds, but they were much too thick to see through. However, she spotted brown, glittery dust raining from above a patch of clouds, steadily moving forward. “Mw-mw!”

“What is it?” Rallo asked, looking up as well.

“Perhaps we should return to the Ace Flyer.” Stewie said with concern. “Quick, let’s go!”

The Cinnamon Ship was flying to another such vessel, of incomprehensible size and cinnamon roll propellers that could hypnotize people. A shadowed figure stood in the control room window. Any person that saw this ship, and saw this figure, flying toward them, their hearts would chill like ice cream in the back of the freezer. Lord Tyrone Licorice.

Orchid Bay Park

Wendy finished putting the last tiny Band-Aid over a snake bite. Her body was partly covered with the little bandages, one on her right cheek, a few on her arms, on her left foot… of course, there were other magic maladies that Facilier fixed himself. She stared at her reflection in the fountain water, sitting on its edge. Looking at her own sad face. Her first magic lesson was a flop. And she was so sure of herself. She pulled out her Lamia Scale wand to stare at it. It looked pretty next to the fountain. Shiny. She felt its mystic power the moment she picked it up, but why didn’t it work for her? Unless she was just bad at using it. Dr. Facilier taught her that the wand chooses the wizard, but she wondered if it could change its mind. She would feel so pathetic if it up and did that.

She heard a light flapping of wings, and saw Carla’s reflection look over beside her own. “You’re still new at it, so don’t let it get to you.”

“Carla, I told you I wanted to be alone.”

“I left you alone for a good half-hour. That should be more than enough time to cool down.”

“No it isn’t…” She propped her elbow on her leg, resting her head in her hand.

“Wendy, if it’s any consolation, you’re a very good airbender. You probably didn’t start off so great in your younger years.”

“All I’ve really been good at is running away. And I always run away because I make trouble for everyone.”

“I haven’t often seen you without your Stabilizers, but it’s hard to imagine you making trouble for anyone, the way you mess up and apologize for everything.”

Wendy blushed, smiling sheepishly at her. “If you met me a little before I met Dr. Facilier, you would see why everyone hated me.”

“At the very least, I can imagine people being annoyed with you if you blew wind all the time. There’s a difference between ‘annoyance’ and ‘hate.’”
“Heheh… Thanks, I guess…” She looked at the park’s clock. 12:05. “Only an hour until June shows up… I think I’ll rest.”

“May I join you?”

“Okay.”

Wendy and Carla went under a tree, shaded by its rustling leaves. Wendy pulled off her shoes and took off her contacts. “Wanna hold these for me?” she asked Carla.

The cat stared at her red eyes for a minute. Wendy noticed how Carla’s narrowed eyes inched more open. “…Why do you always give me that look when you see my eyes?”

Carla shook her head after this was pointed out. “What look?”

“That, what you just did. Carla, do my real eyes creep you out?”

“Of course not, they’re just… unusual, Child. You have to admit that.”

“You’re calling me unusual, go back and look in that fountain!”

Carla felt a tug in her heart. She turned away. “W-Wait, Carla, I didn’t mean that, I’m sorry!”

“No, you’re right… It was wrong of me to point out your eyes when nothing in this town is natural. Perhaps you do need more time for yourself.” She walked away toward a different tree.

Wendy sighed and lay down on the grass, folding her hands under her head as she faced her own tree. She lay there for a long time, but couldn’t force herself to sleep. She felt bad about what she said to Carla, one of the few and longer-lasting friends she had, the last thing she wanted was to make bad tensions. But she also thought about her eyes. Facilier made her wear contacts so she didn’t draw attention, or make people connect her with her unnamed father. But her blue hair drew more attention, it was more recognizable in the posters, why not cover that up? Was Facilier secretly afraid of her eyes? Carla, too, why else would she make that look? Lee Andrew told her that she shouldn’t have to hide them, but he seemed to be one of few people that would say that. People seem to like her better with brown eyes. And normal ears.

“Wendy! There you are!” She heard footsteps running over and looked back. June and Monroe were coming.

“Oh! Is it 1:00 already?” Wendy stood up and put on her strap-on shoes.

“12:40, but I got done early. (By telling Ray Ray I would give him my allowance.) …Wendy, what’s with all those bandages?”

“Oh.” Wendy just remembered. “Um… some monsters tried to eat me, so I had to fight them.”

“Really? Why didn’t my bracelet go off?” June stared at her brown wristband with a purple emblem.

“Great McGregor’s Ghost! What’s with your eyes?” Monroe exclaimed.

Wendy started. She put her contacts in her own bag after Carla left, and hadn’t put them on.

“Uuuum… This is how I actually look.” She confessed. “I wear contacts so that… so I don’t scare people.”

“Oh…” June frowned, noting Wendy’s downtrodden expression. She must’ve been sensitive about... this topic. “You know, why don’t I teach you how to fight later? How ‘bout we just hang out?” She spoke with an open smile. “Both of us seem pretty tired.”

Wendy looked up and smiled. “That would be fun, sure!”

“Uuuugh. Then I guess I brought Art of Te Xuan Ze, Volume 2 for nothing.” Monroe sighed in annoyance, closing his book. “Ay hope you girls don’t expect ME to join you on your shopping spree?”

Wendy looked at the other tree, where Carla was still sitting and turned away. “Mr. Montagail—”

“Monroe.”

“Sorry- Do you think you could talk to my friend, Carla over there? It would be nice if she had another talking animal to talk to.”

“I dunno, Wendy, dogs kinda hate cats either way.” June smiled unsurely.

“Ahh, poppycock. Ay’im not your everyday mongrel, ya know.” Monroe told her gruffly, walking toward Carla. “Ay can reason with a simple housecat. (That’s not to say Mittens can make a good excuse why we can’t share the fire hydrant. Ay-ay-ay…)”

Downtown; Lucy’s Alley

Juniper and Wendy went for a walk down a secret road that non-magic beings couldn’t find, populated by harmless demons, and a good place to hide from the G.U.N.. Both girls bought a protein shake at a stand, slurping the sweets while Wendy continued her story. “Then out of nowhere, Dr. Facilier and his wife, Rouge showed up. They told me I was a wizard and I’d been accepted to Hogwarts. I’ve never been happier before that moment.” Wendy smiled at the memory. “I felt like I was closer to learning who I was.”

“I still don’t understand the part about that wind curse.” June mentioned. “If it’s so bad, why does the air feel fine now?”

“Because Dr. Facilier gave me these.” Wendy lifted the right of her shirt, showing the white, rectangle sticker with Japanese symbols. “They’re Chi Stabilizers that keep my airbending from going crazy. If I took them off, this town would be really windy.”

“And your wind would attract a storm?” June asked. Wendy nodded. “Wow. That would seem like a bad thing to have.”

“Yeah.” Wendy looked down. “That’s why the orphanage kicked me out. And why I couldn’t stay in one town for too long, and why those Government people are trying to capture me.” Though she didn’t tell (nor understand) the whole reason behind that last. “Because I blow people’s stuff around and almost get them hurt and ruin their day.”

“Hey, quit feeling sad!” June perked up and punched her shoulder. “You don’t have to worry about it now, do you?”

“Yeah, I guess not.” Wendy passed her a soft smile. “So, tell me about yourself, June. What’s it like fighting monsters every day?”

June frowned just then. She stared at her half-empty protein shake. “The thing is, Wendy, I’m under a curse, too.”
“You… are?”

Juniper was leading Wendy to the edge of town as she told the story. “The whole tradition of the Te Xuan Ze started nearly 1500 years ago. The job usually gets passed to the newest descendant of my family. Ah-Mah was the last one, but the power skipped my dad and went to me. I’m actually the youngest in my family history.”

“What about Ray Ray?”

“Heh heh. There’s a funny story behind that.” June smirked. “Anyway, it was my ancestors that created the Veil over this town, but the ancient Magic Council wanted to ensure that we would always control the bad demons coming in. So an inherited curse gets passed on to the next Te Xuan Ze.”

They arrived at a sign over the road that said, Now leaving Orchid Bay. Ignore anything you might’ve seen. “This is the edge of the Veil. Walk through.”

Curious, Wendy calmly walked forward. She saw some strange lizard monsters clutching the cliff wall on the right. The world blurred for a minute, those monsters disappeared, as Wendy was through the Veil. She turned back to June with a confused look. “Now watch.” June walked toward her—the Veil pushed her back.

Wendy gasped. As June put her hand against the Veil, the former reached an arm back through. Wendy felt nothing. “You see? The Te Xuan Ze can never leave Orchid Bay.” June spoke with regret. “Until I have a child, and the Mark of Te Xuan Ze appears on them,” she noted the dark-pink strip on her hair, “…I’m stuck here. Every summer, my friends go on holidays with their families, and I’m not allowed to go because I have to stay and fight monsters! And even while they’re here, I’m always putting them off because I gotta fight monsters. Wendy, I’m sorry for all the bad things that happened to you, but…but you get to run anywhere you want to. Heh, I’m kind of jealous.” June smiled at the irony.

Wendy softly waved her hand around the Veil, entranced by its blurry appearance, but feeling nothing still. June had a point. While Wendy always wished for a home or a place to stay, the feeling of running with the wind was lovely. She felt free. Well, she would, if not for her own curse. It was kind of funny when she thought about it. Wendy was homeless, but free to go wherever, June had a home, but could go nowhere else. “I’m sorry to hear that, Juniper. But what if the Veil got taken down? Could you leave?”

“Yeah, but you can’t just take it down!” she exclaimed logically. “Then there would be worse chaos than what’s already happening! Sigh… I really don’t like it, either, but it’s the way it has to be.” She shrugged. “I wouldn’t know how to begin tearing it down.”

Wendy looked sympathetically. June was right, the people here are so used to the Veil, if all these demons suddenly appeared out of nowhere, then it wouldn’t look good. She really wished there was a way around this for her friend. “… She glared confidently and balled her fists, “June, I wanna learn how to fight now.”

Minutes later

“Show me how hard you can punch!” June yelled at Wendy vigorously, her own hands positioned in defense. The two ventured into the nearby forest to train, and Wendy was rapidly thrusting her fists against June’s hands. The Te Xuan Ze already noted her speed, but, “Not the strongest I’ve felt. Show me your kicks.” Wendy began kicking her legs up at the girl’s chest, June blocking each kick with her fists, but the Te Xuan Ze was pushed back a little. “Okay, now I’ll do you, try to block me!” June swung her fists, Wendy tried to block with her hands, but June easily maneuvered around for “soft” punches against Wendy’s chest, afterwards kicking the airbender several feet. “You’ll have to work faster than that.”

Wendy recovered, “I’m afraid of hurting you. That’s why.”

June smiled coolly and— “HUAH!” punched a dent into a tree. “Trust me, you won’t. Let’s try something different, like...like your airbending! Let’s see how tough you are with that!”

Wendy got back into fighting gear, inhaled a breath, and blasted a Cyclone Roar. June withstood the wind and dashed forward, surprising Wendy when she whipped behind and wrapped arms around the blue-haired girl. “Is that all? I’ve felt fans that blew harder than you!”

Wendy jumped and kicked against June, blowing herself away. June smirked as Wendy ran far away though the forest. She was coming back at full speed with a fist held back, so June kicked off a tree, flew at Wendy like a rocket, and both their fists made contact. “Ow ow ow!” Wendy shook her hand from the pain.

“Tell ya what. You can have the next punch for free.” June offered.

Wendy glared at her. She took several quick steps back and started spinning her right arm, forming a wind circle. Wendy sidestepped behind a distant tree, slowing her arm and focusing the wind to spiral around her fist. She pulled out the Lamia Scale under her shorts, taking a breath. “Please work for me this time.”

_in April, Dr. Facilier showed Wendy and Carla an ordinary rubber ball. He dropped, it made the first bounce, when it returned to its highest, “Repiti!” a quick spell, the ball bounced and bounced at the same height every time._

“Why isn’t it slowing down?” Carla questioned.

_The Repeating Spell makes any motion repeat itself over and over. Unless they get too far away, only the wizard can stop it._

Wendy tried to catch the ball in her hand, it simply bounced from there, up to the ceiling. It was a minor spell, but it sure was fun.

With an aura of confidence, Wendy whirled her wand and aimed at the still-spinning whirlwind around her fist. “Repiti!” The wand glowed, and even though she wasn’t forcing the wind to spiral with her bending, it continued spinning. With a bright smile, Wendy ran far away again, dashing straight back at June, who would keep her promise and let Wendy have this blow. “Sky Dragon CLAW!” To both of their surprise, June whirled like a windmill as she flew backward, into a distant tree.

“WHOA! How’d you do that?!”

“It’s a secret.” Wendy winked. She ran at June, leapt, and threw the Cyclone Fist against her opponent’s fist. June spun around at the impact, sinking to the ground, but kicked directly up to send Wendy above the branches. She grabbed one in her Cyclone Fist, she swung around the branch, then flew down at Juniper with a kick.

The park

Carla heard Wendy and June talking behind her, but still didn’t pay mind. She waited expectantly as Monroe approached her. “Ahhh, good afternoon.” The pug greeted her. “Miss Charla, was it?”
“It’s Carla. And might I inquire when was the last time you’ve taken a bath? You smell like you were coughed up by a dung iguana.”

“Well, you’re just PLEASANT to be around, aren’tcha?” Monroe walked around to her front. “And just how old are you? Seven-thousand? Seventy-five-thousand??”

“Three months.”

“Ya’ve got quite the attitude for a WEE kitten.”

“And what’s your age, dare I ask?”

“Ay’m 650 years old. Raised to serve the Te Xuan Ze, I am trained to know the identity and purpose of every magical item, creature, or spell.”

“Okay, Sir Montague, just what kind of creature am I?”

Monroe walked around to study her. “Hmmm. A cat, talks, has wings… Where did you say you came from?”

“An egg Wendy found on the beach.”

“Ay have no idea.” Carla fell on her side like an unbalanced book. “Look, Lass, let’s not get off on the wrong boat. It’s not everyday ya meet another talking animal who helps an 11-year-old girl with powers.” Monroe slipped out of the satchel wrapped around him, crawled inside, and pulled out a purple magnifying glass with red and blue lens on either side, with red triangle-shaped eyelashes and a triangle in the center—the whole thing looked like an eye. “So how about Monroe educates you? This item, for example-”

“A Lens of Truth, which can see invisible objects or see through illusions.” Carla replied knowledgeably. “Specifically, the lenses only see matter for what it is. The red lens, taken from Falcon’s Eye specs, ordinarily serve as X-rays, while blue lenses cloak objects depending on size and strength, ergo the two of them together will view only the existent matter.”

“Um… right.” Monroe switched the lens for a small, Y-shaped antenna with balls on its tips. “This object-”

“A Replicator Wand, one antenna scans the matter of the target, transfers its structure to the other antenna, which alter and mend the molecules in the air to create a solid replica.”

“Merlin’s False Teeth, woman, how do ya know all this?!?”

“Facilier showed them to me and Wendy. The latter has a hard time understanding, but their use is pretty clear to me. Excluding the fact that all the ‘magic’ behind it is ludicrous.”

“Ludicrous, but real. Could ya tell me the workings behind this Infinity Satchel?”

Carla looked at the bag and casually explained, “The spell in place is one that alters dimensions, and the area inside the bag has a different dimension than outside. The spell continuously expands the dimension inside while the outside was never touched. But, again, ludicrous.”

“Call it whatcha want, you’re a smart kitty!” Monroe beamed. “Honestly, I’d like ya to stay and help me teach Ray Ray.”

“Hmm. At the risk of shaming my own kind, I already have an owner. Albeit, we’re kind of…"
awkward at the moment.”

“Eh, she’ll get over it, it’s not easy for humans to admit that animals are smarter than they are. Like badger-moles, even. Speakin’ of which, get a load of this device!” Monroe pulled a thin, metal rod that looked like a golf tee, with a pointed tip and ball on its top. He stuck it in the ground. “A portable Seismic Sensor that can feel vibrations from any distance. Perfect against enemies who’re trying to sneak up on you. You could set it to 3 feet, for example.” Monroe inputted that distance, stamping the ground with his paw as the rod shook slightly. Carla stared with a meagerly interested look. “Or 100 miles!” Monroe typed in that distance. “You could feel an army comin’ hours before they do.”

… Woggle-woggle. The Sensor wobbled left-and-right forcefully. It did it again. Carla raised a brow. “What’s it doing?”

A small monitor showed the estimated mass of what made the vibrations. “Ohhhh, that’s not good…”

Back in the forest, Wendy had whirlwinds spinning around both fists as she dashed at June for a double-punch. The Te Xuan Ze grabbed Wendy’s fists tight, standing her own ground, but Wendy had spun upside-down into the air, swinging her foot down on June’s head. They broke free as Wendy was back on her feet, both ready to attack again. Woh-woh-woh-woh- June looked at her wristband when it started beeping. Wendy stared curious at the look June was making. “Hey, Wendy… what does this look like to you?”

Wendy looked at the bracelet’s jewel. “It’s… some kind of tower?”

Several miles within the backwoods…

“Three more minutes, kids, then we have to go back.” Facilier told the twins. They stood a few feet outside the Veil’s barrier.

“OKAY!” Sonny and Donna cheered. Facilier turned around, crouched, and the skull on his hat covered his face, he began juggling colorful energy puffballs, and small colorful firecrackers flew around behind him. The twins backed into the Veil, “We see nothing.” They walked forward, “WE SEE IT!” Backed up, “We see nothing.” Forward, “WHOOOAA!”

Shadow Facilier felt a rumbling. “What is it, Shadow?” The shadow pointed upward excitedly, so Facilier climbed a tree. “…What is that?”

A tremendous tower composed of green metal stomped across the forest with huge, metal crab legs. A laser cannon was implanted within the top, aimed directly at the Veiled City. The commander of such a structure was a witch in a black dress, purple scarf, and artificial body. Her boney, pointy skull head cackled inside its glass container. “Orchid Bay, the Veiled City! Blind to magic, what a pity. That they will never see this coming. Cauldron Keep’s mobile gunning! Once I sap the energy from this land, Grunty will live! And this place sand! CAH, HAHAAHahahahahaaaaa!”

“I see it, Sonny!” Donna exclaimed, sitting on a tree that was halfway in the Veil.

Sonny used his rope to pull the treetop toward him, in the Veil. “How ‘bout now?”

“Nope!” Donna smiled. Sonny released, so the tree began flapping back-and-forth, in and out of the Veil. “I SEE it, I don’t, I see it, I don’t, I see it!”
Who remembers Gruntilda from Firstborn? She was in Banjo-Kazooie? Classic Rareware villain?? Ah, screw you guys. :P You probably know Veruca and Violet from Charlie Chocolate Factory. Next time, Wendy’s first boss fight! Parents, don’t spoil your kids!
Chapter Summary

Jack Frost remembers his past with Queen Elsa. Meanwhile, Team Rupert explores Gallagher's treacherous playground.

Hello, everyone. Here we have probably the longest flashback in my entire series. Just because it is. :P So live with it. MGDon’tcount HERE WE GO!!

Chapter 9: That Promise 300 Years Ago

Planet Poké

“Oh… my… gosh!…” Darcy gasped with the greatest joy. “I’m on Pokémon Planet! ! Sunni’s gonna be SOOO jealous when I tell her I got here first!”

“Ha har har!” Lucario chuckled softly. “I’m sure she will. But that will have to wait awhile. You have a very important task ahead of you.”

“What kind of task?”

“Darcy Chariton…” He threw a sash of Pokéballs at Darcy’s feet, “it’s time for you to begin your Pokémon Journey!”

An awkward silence followed. Darcy was at a loss for words. This was her destiny. And it came, hit her in the face just like that. If only she had time to comprehend it…

“HAAAAA ha ha haaaa! I’m just kidding!” laughed Lucario. “As long as this story is, we really don’t have time for a  Pokémon Journey! Ahhh… gotta make yourself laugh, ya know.”

“…..Thank….. GOD….” Darcy felt a huge sense of relief fly off of her.

“Ha ha, yes… but you do have an important job here. With the Apocalypse dawning near, all species are in danger, including the Pokémon. And I sense the ones who kidnapped your mother are bringing chaos here as well.”

“So what about the Pokémon?”

“Ahh, the New Universe just cannot be without Pokémon! These were the very first creatures created by the gods! They were the original benders and have the greatest connections to the elements than any. Such amazing creatures…”

“I thought dragons were the original benders.”
“PAH HA HA HA HA HA HA HA—don’t be ridiculous, Darcy. But if there is to be a New World, that cannot happen without the legacy of the Pokémon to continue. They must be saved, must be allowed a chance to survive.”

“Right, so I’ll just build an ark, get 2 of each Pokémon; maybe have to establish some mating rules, and judging by the sheer amount of them, that’ll take a lot of math to determine the size of the ark, so we may also have to buy a lot of—”

“That duty will not fall onto you now. You do wish to aid your sister in her destiny, right?”

“Well yes, of course I—wait, what destiny?”

“Sunni must go on a journey of self-dependence, in order to better herself for the trials ahead. But you will be able to help her. Your father and I have talked it over, and we believe it is in your best interest to study the Element Arts.”

“You mean I got other elements besides psychic? Is that why I’m bad at it?”

“No. But according to your father, you were very proficient in your martial arts classes. Almost each element has a martial art that ordinary humans can master and produce the illusion of bending an element. Chris Uno mastered Fire Kung-Fu as an extra defense measure should his bending be disabled, and your father is skilled in all arts.”

“And the reason I’m learning it is… ‘cause I’m bad at psychic-bending.” Darcy deduced doubtfully.

“You will master your element on your own time, but when times call for it, you must focus on what you excel at, not waste time perfecting an art you would need time and patience to master. I’m sorry to say, by the end of this month, we expect Sunni to be far more powerful than you at psychic… but you will have skills she does not have, and your strength will be used to aid each other when required.”

“Kay, so, who’m I learning it from?”

“The Pokémon. Throughout the world are many gyms whose leaders favor a certain type of Pokémon. Not only do they train them to become stronger, the trainers learn from them as well. They form bonds with their Pokémon so that they may teach them what they know. While the trainers are not born with chi, the Pokémon teach them other ways to manipulate the elements. With this illusion of element mastery, the trainers feel closer than ever with their Pokémon. That is why we must save them. So the new generation may have those bonds as well.”

“Well… then my journey of self-discovery begins now. ..Lead the way.”

“Certainly.” Lucario dashed across the fields as Darcy followed.

“Oh wait, what about the Pokéballs?”

“Those’re just decoratives.”

“Oh.”

Gallagher Elementary

When the bus came to stop beside the schoolyard, the children were eager to head out. Their immediate destination was the playground, where dozens of kids were already roaming freely. “I’ll be right there, Saraaaah!” the blonde girl sang, rolling her backpack faster as she ran. “Lemme just hide my stuff!” She headed behind the jungle gym, lay her backpack down, and rushed away to join her friends.

Their tiny arms close to snapping, Team Rupert panted and stretched to relieve the stiffness after letting go of the bag. “At least we have some time to rest.” Rupert gasped. “Why’s everyone outside…”

“It’s close to summer, so everyone gets extra pre-school recess.” Timmy answered. “Principal Rachel’s orders.”

“Well, that’s good!” Rupert beamed. “Maybe we can find Jessie in all this!”

“Yeah! And his MAAAAGIC kiss will CHANGE us back to normal!” Hikari proclaimed with hearts around her face.

“Hehe… none for me, thanks.” Rupert sweatdropped. “Let’s just find ‘im before they go in.” (Play “Perplexing Pool” from Pikmin 2.)

Stage 15: Iron Plains

Mission: Look for First Grade President Jessie.

Rupert, Timmy, and Hikari called 15 Red Pikmin, 15 Yellows, 13 Blues, 20 Pinks, 10 Whites, and 10 Purples, making 83. Their journey across the concrete plains would first require them to pass the gigantic jungle gym, the sun almost completely blocked by the huge metal poles. It became a maze since footballs, toys, or rocks were lain between poles, and within the bars, the team had to take out small groups of Dwarf Bulborbs. They came to a dead end in the maze, but noticed some green moss growing on one of the poles. “What’s this stuff?” Rupert asked.

“Our dad said this jungle gym used to be an actual jungle for some reason.” Timmy said. “I guess this was part of it.”

“Hmm… well, it helps. Come on, Pikmin!”

The trio climbed the moss to a higher level of bars and their Pikmin stayed with them. The bars were still fairly narrow at their small sizes, so they stayed carefully along the middle and instructed their Pikmin to do the same. There were very small edges along the corners of the vertical poles, connecting other horizontals, so they struggled to squeeze their Pikmin alongside them. Swooping Snitchbugs were buzzing around the bars and swiping some Pikmin, forcing Rupert to send Wing Pikmin and wipe them out.

They noticed a series of other paths below which were enclosed, so they couldn’t be accessed from the previous areas. But if they fell in, the Pikmin could grab Bomb Rocks and blow up the stones enclosing the paths, or grab bridge tiles to fix bridges leading to the previous paths, depending on where they landed. But they would open these shortcuts in time, first focusing on navigating this maze of different levels of bars. There were several moss ladders on many routes, with some leading to Pellet Posies, but others seemingly leading the right way. A huge shadow appeared to be engulfing part of the gym, and they looked up to see a boy strapped to the top of the gym by his legs and wrists, tied by rope.

The trio made their way to the top of the gym to see him struggling. “Nnn, stupid Brandon, makin’ me do his dares. ISN’T ANYONE GONNA UNTIE ME? ! Ugh, I bet they left me here on purpose…”
Rupert nodded with his friends and had their Pikmin try to untie the ropes. They were tied surprisingly well, and even the Purple Pikmin couldn’t help him. “Man, how else are we gonna help him?” Rupert asked.

Timmy turned a mini dial on his goggles to zoom in and view the ground below. “Hey, there’s some little burning ember rocks on the ground. Dunno what they’re for, but I bet they can burn off the ropes. …And over there is a pile of sticks. We could use those and make paths for the Pikmin.”

“Alright, Timmy get the Red Pikmin on those embers.” Rupert instructed. “Hikari, have Wing Pikmin get the sticks.”

“Youkey-dokey, Artichokey!” Hikari beamed, guiding the Wings down as she glided using her sleeves. Timmy used his cape and glided to the embers, the Red Pikmin dropping after. The Wing Pikmin collected sticks and laid both sides on a low level and high level, starting from the Red Pikmin. Once they finished, the Reds could carry the burning embers to the kid and toss them on the ropes, eventually burning them off.

“WHOA!” He was taken by surprise, gripping the bars. “The heck just happened. …Oh well, Brandon’s getting punched in the face!” He climbed off quickly and ran to find his, er, acquaintance.

Right away, Rupert noticed a squished, black object on the bar under where the kid’s butt was planted. Rupert approached and discovered it was an Onion, which rose to life and floated to the ground on the other side of the gym. He, Timmy, and Hikari made their way to that area to find a seed sprout out. They plucked that seed and discovered the new Pikmin.

You discovered Rock Pikmin! They may seem like ordinary stones, but these little guys are as durable as boulders! They can’t latch on and repeatedly bash enemies, but pack quite a punch if you throw them at enemies! And no one likes rocks being thrown at your glass, but if that glass happened to be blocking your way, it’s something I’d recommend. ;)

“Awwwww! Look at his wittle eeeeyes!” Hikari cooed.

“This one’s kinda different.” Timmy observed.

Rupert saw the standing glass shard behind the Onion, blocking their path. He grabbed the Rock Pikmin and tossed it several times against the glass, eventually breaking it. “Hmm… let’s work on making more first.”

For the next several minutes, they worked on opening the shortcuts leading back to the Onions, and sending 5 Wing Pikmin back in. They brought their Rock Pikmin and had it collect some pellets around the area, and later harvested 10 Rock Pikmin, making 88 total. Within the maze, there was a blue coin (Tricky Buggah) encased inside a crystal, which they could break with the Rock Pikmin. They had the Pikmin carry it back before finally proceeding to the field where the dozens of titanic kids roamed.

Compared to the forest or the beach, the playground seemed like a lot more open area, few walls protecting certain paths. “So where’s President Jessie, anyway?” Rupert asked.

“I dunno. But they let us in gym during recess, too. He could be in there.” Timmy mentioned.

“Let’s look for treasures first.”

Roaming the playground were Decorated Cannon Beetles, big red beetles with round, open mouths.
They spat round boulders at the trio which homed in on them, but they could easily beat them by separating from the Pikmin and tricking the boulders into rolling back against the beetles. It took 7 Pikmin to carry each one, so they let the Yellows have one, Blues, and Rocks. There were so many areas of the playground to explore, but they first noticed a group of four kids at the basketball court, jumping over and over to try and knock their stuck ball out of the basket.

The ball looked too smooth and slippery, and too big for the Wing Pikmin to grab, so they would look for a solution. They did notice a boy boredly sitting on the low end of a seesaw a few feet away from the court (miles at Pikmin size). “Siiiigh… when’s Chelsea getting back so we can just ride this thing?” he said annoyedly.

The trio further explored the playground to solve these endless dilemmas. They noticed an enormous, overweight brown-skinned child in a red T-shirt and blue shorts, on his back at the base of a makeshift mountain that led onto the playground. The boy grew as tall as a mountain himself as the team made it up to him.

“Siiiigh… I wish I could stand up and move, but Ah’m just so darn fat. Oh bother…” With that, Cleveland Jr. proceeded to eat a Hershey bar.

Team Rupert exchanged glances and sent their Purple Pikmin on the boy. It took 120 Pikmin to carry him, so their 10 Purples, 10 Whites, and 10 Reds made enough to do so. “Hehe hehe! You silly ants, I’m not a tasty snack!”

The Pikmin carried the overweight boy to the seesaw, stopping beside the end that was up. The Pikmin squatted up and down, charging momentum, before finally tossing Jr. straight onto the other end. The force created by his weight caused the other boy to fly straight to the basketball court. “WHOOOOoaaa!” He went right in the net and forced the ball out, his face smashing on the ground.

The players ran over to see if he was all right, the boy’s nose bloody and a hole left in the ground. “Whoa, dude! You totally broke the ground!”

“Let’s take you to the nurse…” The boys kindly led him away, allowing Team Rupert to safely approach the newly opened hole.

“Wow… that looks pretty deep.” Rupert noticed.

“Yeah, and it looks like it goes a long way.” Timmy said, scanning with his goggles. “But there could be some stuff down there.”

“Uhhh… let’s focus on the main stage first. Maybe we’ll come back for ‘em.”

They saw that Junior dropped his Hershey Bar (True Purity) and had their Pikmin return it to the Onions. Once back there, they plucked the new Pikmin they got from the Cannon Beetles, then decided to do some reorganizing: they took 20 Reds, 20 Pinks, 20 Blues, 10 Yellows, 10 Purples, 10 Whites, and 10 Rocks. They returned to the playground, recalling their reason for coming here as they searched for Jessie. It didn’t appear the president was anywhere, so their next best option was the gym.

“Only one problem, the teachers keep the gym doors locked, you gotta head around the hallways.” Timmy mentioned.

“What? That’ll take FOREVER!” Rupert shouted.

“WELL, there IS the hall monitor, who gets access to all the keys in the school. We could find him and take the gym key.” Hikari noted.

“I think this week’s is Pig-Pen. Oh, there he is now!” Timmy pointed at a boy sitting atop a stone turtle, and it appeared a thin cloud of smoke surrounded his horribly dirty form. “They picked him ‘cause no one wants to be caught by him. Guess why? Hehehehehe!”

“Euh… we better use our White Pikmin for this.” knew Rupert. But now was a matter of getting onto the turtle where he sat. He noticed the two girls spinning hoolahoops around their waists, and lined with them were two trampolines, a larger and smaller one, at the end of a playground slide. “I have an idea, but it’s gonna be pretty tricky. Follow me.” Rupert led them to the Makeshift Mountain and climbed enough stable slopes in order to eventually climb to the playground. Crawling about the mountain were plenty of Dweevils, colorful four-legged spiders that each possessed an element power, depending on the color. The Pikmin were eager to attack them, even though they didn’t attack first, so the kids frantically tried to call them back. In the confusion, five Blue Pikmin were shocked to death by an Anode Dweevil, so finally annoyed, they decided to chuck their Purples onto the spiders and take them out faster.

They allowed their Blues, Purples, and Rocks to haul them back, each getting two Dweevils, since they were pretty light. They finally made it onto the playground and carefully navigated the giant holes-whose-reason-for-existence-we-would-never-know. They had to cross a bridge in order to reach the slide, but two Puffy Blowhogs were floating around it. They threatened to blow the kids and Pikmin into the holes and onto the concrete several hundred feet below, so Hikari gracefully leaped across the holes with the Wing Pikmin and sent them on the Blowhogs, 10 for each. The friends hurried along with their Pikmin keeping between the holes, except a few Rocks and Yellows who slipped and dropped down. With the Wings distracting the Blowhogs, the kids made it to the slide, where some boys rolled a rubber ball down, let it bounce on the small trampoline, to the big one, and to the hoolihoop girls as they flung it away. “I think you guys know what we gotta do.” Rupert said.

“I’m gonna be sick.” groaned Timmy.

So they sent their other Pikmin below the playground, took only the Whites and Purples, and whooshed down the slide. Bounced off the mini trampoline, used their Purples to add force to the larger so they could bounce off it, and flew to the hoolihoop girls before grabbing tighter than they ever grabbed onto one’s hoop. It was like a ride at an amusement park, the world only a blur around them, and their flesh seconds from flying off. “I-I-I think I see it. . .. Let go!”

They couldn’t release any faster on Rupert’s cue, flying directly for the stone turtle’s neck. Seconds after, the girls dropped their hoops to take a break. “Let’s go somewhere else, Leslie.” One of them said. “Those boys keep throwing stuff at us.”

“Yeah, let’s… ewwww!” When Leslie picked up her hoop, her hand touched a spot with small goop. “There’s some kinda stuff on it!”

Timmy grinned sheepishly. He couldn’t hold his dinner in. So with that, they trekked up to the towering body of stench known as Pig-Pen, already having to clamp hands over their noses. He sat on the turtle like a horsy, so his legs spread to either side, forcing them to walk along the edge of the turtle and get behind him. A key that read ‘Gym’ stuck out of his back pocket, so they marched up to get it. Their White Pikmin had to first cut the weak stitching of his pocket, digging at it like it was ground, until the key fell out. All 10 Pikmin hoisted the key and began their journey to the gym doors. The trio dropped down the turtle as Rupert sent Timmy to get back the fallen playground Pikmin, and Hikari to get the Onion Pikmin. It also seemed the Wings finished brawling the Blowhogs and were collecting their fill.
Rupert followed the White Pikmin to the gym door. Unfortunately, there was no way onto the huge step before the door, and even if they could, the keyhole was a thousand stories above, and the Wing Pikmin couldn’t touch the gassy key. However, near the corner of the step appeared to be cracked, making Rupert wish they had one of those Bomb Rocks. He called the Pikmin to drop the key before hurrying to reunite with his friends. After explaining the dilemma, they searched the park for possible Bomb Rocks, discovering a pair of giant shorts lain into a puddle. They deduced some bully stole a kid’s shorts and decided to get them wet. But conveniently, Bomb Rocks stuck out of the back pocket, so they sent their Blues down to get ‘em out of the liquid.

With that, they headed for the step and tossed three bombs beside the cracked part, successfully blowing it up and creating a hill of rubble to lead ‘em onto the step. Now was the matter of getting the key to the door, but it seemed that problem would be answered when the chubby gym coach marched up and noticed the key “discarded” on the step. “Damn it. Sigh, Pig-Pen needs some new pants if he’s gonna keep droppin’ stuff. Oh well, might as well open it.” Not at all seeing the tinies, she grabbed the key and unlocked the door, heading inside and leaving the door open.

“Lucky!” said Rupert, and the friends eagerly led their Pikmin in the gym. (End song.)

The sound was far more ringing in their ears, dozens of children scampering about the flat, polished gym floor, the stomping of their sneakers, bouncing of basketballs, the eventual earsplitting whistle, all mixed into a cluster of booming sounds that made audible conversation impossible. “DO YOU GUYS SEE JESSIE ANYWHEEEEERE?” screamed Rupert.

“I DON’T KNOW. THERE’S TOO MANY PEOPLE. THE PRESIDENTS’ OFFICES AREN’T FAR FROM HERE, LET’S GO THERE AND WAIT FOR HIM.” Timmy replied.

“What if we get squiiiiished?” screamed Hikari.

“WHAT IF WE GET SQUIIIIIISHED?” screamed Hikari.

“JUST WALK WHERE THERE AREN’T MANY PEOPLE. BESIDES, SOMEONE HAS TO NOTICE A HUNDRED FLOWER THINGS RUNNING AROUND THE FLOOR.”

But as it happened, in all this activity occurring about the gym floor, not one noticed an army of tiny, colorful ants skittering across their floor. The kids ducked with great horror when a basketball bounced over them and off the wall, and two kids in mountain-size sneakers skipped over them in their mission to grab it. Next, three kids were on their bellies on square-shaped skateboards, rolling around the gym floor as the team ducked with pure fright, safely right under the boards as they flew by, but 5 Reds, 4 Yellows, and 3 Purples were squished. “Oh crap—JUST RUUUUUN!” They booked it with all the remaining strength in their legs. Every kind of hazard threatened to smoosh them, basketballs, rogue hoolihoops, kids just running around like idiots, there was no safe haven in this gym.

But when they felt their legs giving out, Timmy saw someone that sparked him with relief. “HEY!! LOOK! IT’S JOEY!” Indeed, the black-haired Beatles child was innocently building blocks outside a corner doorway. So with even more strength to run, they rushed to the 5-year-old.

Arceus knows if their voices were heard in all of that chaos..

But all of that chaos suddenly silenced when the hallway doors burst open, a gang of fourth-graders stomping in with furious expressions. “ALL RIGHT you squirts, what’d you do with our princess?!”

“WHADDYOU mean??” a first-grade boy yelled.
“Princess Shelly ain’t in ‘er office and no one’s seen ‘er! And we KNOW you shrimps are mad at her for beatin’ your boss!”

“Hey, OUR boss is missing, too!!” another boy shouted. “We think you BIG KIDS mighta taken ‘im!”

“Oh yeah?!” the fourth-grade leader stomped up and got in his face. “PROVE it!”

“YOU PROVE IT!”

“Grrrrrrrr!”

“Both of them are missing?” Joey asked himself as Rupert’s team was struggling to climb to his very top block. “What coulda happened?”

The tinies finally made it and began jumping, “Joey! Joey! We know what happened! Look at us!”

“You know what I ain’t liking your TONE, Shortstuff!” yelled the older boy as his friends got beside him. “YOU kids are gettin’ your afternoon wedgies EARLY!”

“BRING IT ON, Stinkbreath!” yelled the younger as those of his age got beside him. “We’re throwin’ YOU in the basket!”

“Uh-oh. This ain’t gonna end well.” Joey said worriedly. “Someone better do something.”

“You CAN DO SOMETHING JOEY IF YOU JUST LOOK DOOOOOOWN!”

“You guys, stoooop!” a 2nd-grade girl rushed in. “Molly said she saw Shelly at the beach, she was kidnapped by BIGGER kids!”

“You mean the… MIDDLE-schoolers?!” the fourth-graders gasped.

“They probably took Jessie, too!!” a first-grader panicked.

“But what the heck do THEY want?!”

“Well, whatever it is, WE’RE taking them BACK!!” a scrawny 4th-grader fist-palmed.

“Go up against big kids?” the 2nd-grader asked.

“Well THEY started it! Everyone get your bikes ready, WE ride to Hendry Middle School AT DAAAAAWWWWWN!”

“Uhhh it is dawn.”

“AT LUUUUUNNNNNCH!” And there was a sudden scrambling to get out of the gym.

“Uh-oh. Better find the kindergarteners.” So grabbing his blocks haphazardly, Joey rushed out.

“WAAAAAH-!” And the tinies ended up hitting the floor. “HEY! Whadda ‘bout US, Joey? GET BACK HERE OR I’M TELLING AUNT KUKI!!” screamed Hikari.

“You know, Cousin Artie has a grow ray.” Timmy mentioned. “Maybe we can find one o’ his friends.”

“Maybe.” Rupert said doubtfully. “Any idea where they are?”

Mexico; near Miracle City

The morning was brisk and calm over Miracle Road, a light wind blowing sand across the desert and the sky a dim pink. With all this sand blowing everywhere, Sector V couldn’t keep their eyes totally open, their C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. parked on the side of the road. “This is where we last recorded the Brotherhood heading to.” Aurora said.

“Why can’t we fly any closer again?” asked Mason.

“Because we don’t want those Brotherhooders to know we’re coming.” Haylee replied. “Granted, we could totally smoke them if they did, just to be safe.”

“Not really. Shouldn’t one of us stay behind to watch Sheila?” Harry asked, glancing at the bus where their raccoon friend was still conked out. “At least try to get ‘er up, ‘cause Lord knows without her crazy power, we might as well be…”

“…Hu?” But it was then that Sheila peeped awake, immediately getting to her feet and bursting out the door. “YOU AREN’T STARTING THE ADVENTURE WITHOUT ME, ARE YOU?!?”

“She’s awaaaaaaake!” Haruka cheered.

“’ey now, can’t I take a snooze for 2 minutes without me mates ditchin’ me on the deck?” Sheila smirked, facing the road with excitement. “Ay, me legs feel all stiff and sleepy! You blokes don’t mind if I go out fer a quick run, do ya?”

“Hn hn, not at all.” Aurora chuckled.

“Strewth! Don’t fall behind, you lot!” (Play “Mariachi Madness” from Rayman Legends!)

Stage 16: Miracle City

Mission: Locate the Brotherhood of Evil’s hideout.

Act 1: Miracle Road

Sheila rushed across the windy desert as many lines of Lums slid past her path, having to jump or sidestep to grab them all before they passed. The tiny grains of sand blowing in the breeze obstructed her vision, but she would keep running forward ‘til she got where she wanted. And though probly no one was seeing him, Murfy was there to help collect Lums or press those Eye Switches. And once a few miles across the desert, Skelopedes began appearing in attempt to snack Sheila; large centipedes with pink, skeletal bodies. She managed to jump them when they came, but now skeletons in sombreros were riding them as well, forcing Sheila to kick them away in mid-leap.

A team of five Skelopedes launched out to snack her, but Sheila passed a convenient Shrink Fairy and shrunk down, narrowly dodging the bugs. She came to a cliff and ran down a clothesline into a village below, jumping further clotheslines and swinging off clothes. “Baje de mi ropa!” An angry villager pushed open his wood window and flung Sheila across the street, where she landed on a passing horse carriage and jumped to hit a Grow Fairy, zapping to normal. She ran down a narrow alleyway and hopped atop some fruit stands, following the Lums. “Si usted toca mis cortinas, te Angry villagers pushed open windows for Sheila to then jump across, followed by fountains of “Horchataaaa!” streaming from machines.

Sheila grabbed and slid down a clothesline to a cactus field, hopping across safe platforms as well as giant sandworms. She swung a Purple Lum real quick before jumping a sandworm into a cliffside cave, then came out on the other side where she jumped more sandworms. Then with great precision, she flipped up a stairway of Airplane Doomtoons to a Hoodlum blimp, kicking off a Hoodmonger and down a deep, vast cliffside in which she softened the descent with her tail propeller, letting the wind breeze her face. Once at the bottom, she punched a Heckler away before continuing running. “Olé!”

The rest of the road was fairly normal until she made it to the gates of the town. She skidded to a halt to catch her breath, and grin at the camera.

“Adequate job, Sheila.” Haruka remarked after the others caught up. “You enjoy your nap?”

“I’ was orright. But me legs still need a bit o’ waking up.”

“Let us handle a bit, Sheila.” Dillon told her. “I wouldn’t mind a few scores with the Brotherhooders myself.” (Play “Fiesta de los Muertos” from Rayman Legends.)

Act 2: Ciudad de los Trastornos

Dillon marched casually across the first city street, where it appeared strange, red-eyed skeletons in black clothes and sombreros were patrolling. A gang of them charged up and tried scratching Dillon with their long, boney claws, getting his shirt scratched as he dodged and stretched Mario to punch them. About 10 skeletons ganged on him, but after tearing them to pieces, the severed bones were determined and bouncing back to him. “Like father, like son, still hopeless.” Midna said, getting in Dillon’s shadow. “Do the shockwave.” Dillon stretched a shadowy circle to catch all the skeletons inside, so Mario could zip around and tear ‘em to even lesser shreds.

The further main road was blocked by a huge pile of flaming debris, leaving Dillon to only take a rightward alley. “Help me.” A tiny squeak caught his ears, and he searched around for its source. Behind one of the food stands was an Electoon cage; not that he knew what these were, but they were helpless and trapped, so Dillon broke the cage open. With that, he continued down the alleyway and turned a left corner, where the alley was just a bottomless chasm with wooden pegs around the walls. Dillon stretched his shadow’s arms to grab and swing the distant pegs, eventually reaching a safe land. He jumped up a pile of stacked garbage cans and got onto the rooftops where some Sky Guys began shooting slingshots at him. Dillon shot them down with his G.U.M.Z.O.O.K.A. and found his way to a huge chasm, where the ground was destroyed, exposing many rivers of what seemed like acid.

A few platforms were spread over the chasm which Dillon could fly to using Shadow Glide, though with a few Sky Guys threatening to shoot ‘im down, he had to take care of them with the G.U.M.Z.O.O.K.A. first. He soon glided to a very unstable ledge before the backdoor of a windowless building. Dillon used Shadow Veil to slide under the door and find himself in a bakery, the pungent smell of colorful cakes hitting his nose; though from what he could observe, the ingredients being forced in the machines didn’t make him want one. This small, steaming room was sealed, but a metal slide near the ceiling was pouring ingredients into a cauldron, with conveniently-horizontal cookies coming down to let him hop up. However, he was far too big to do so, but it seemed a jar on a shelf was containing a Shrink Fairy. Dillon sent Mario to open the cage, the fairy sprinkling magic dust on him to zip him down to size.

Dillon climbed a sack of flour onto a table beside the cauldron, carefully walking around its edge to reach the waterfall of dough. He jumped his way up the cookie platforms, then did the same once up at the slide, into the dark tunnel where it originated. He made it into a kitchen chamber where he hopped off the cookies above a row of cabinets. The cabinet roofs were pretty clear, but Dillon unfortunately walked onto a weak patch and plummeted into it. At the same time, the cabinet opened as a chef with a huge black mustache began searching it intently, with Dillon having to hide behind a series of giant food and condiments as he made his way across.

He walked up a slanted stick of celery onto a series of cans, having to glide to each one with Shadow Glides, but using Veil whenever the chef glanced over. He finally took land on a particular gold can, which the chef took out of the cabinet with a grabber and carried it off. He passed a movable shelf of cupcakes which Dillon quickly floated onto. Trapped within a maze of house-size cupcakes, Dillon decided to make his way to the top for a better view. After maneuvering around the maze, he found a ladder on one of the corner poles to fulfill this task. “Help me.” But hearing the squeaky cry again, Dillon climbed down first, seeing Electoons trapped in a wooden cage. A spray can containing Super Spice stood beside them, close enough for Dill to Wall Jump between it and a cage bar. Once on top of the can, he bounced on it several times before it sprayed, severely scorching the wood bar until the cage fell open.

The (large) creatures walked free while Dillon returned to the ladder and climbed to the shelf’s 3rd floor. It unfortunately wouldn’t go any higher, so he explored the cupcake maze and found a ladder leading onto one of the delicacies; made of dripped icing that was hardened. He made it onto and began trudging the thick, colorful icings, and knew more than ever he would need a bath after this. Also, there appeared to be Caterpie digging around these cakes, so Dillon had to trudge through fast to avoid being snacked. Eventually, he found a rope of hardened dough hanging from the next shelf, so Dillon jumped to and grabbed it to climb up.

The fourth, top shelf had a melted cupcake which he could walk onto like a slope, letting him glide to the center one whose icing spiraled into a point like a Christmas Tree. After walking around and up this spiral (solid icing), he made it to the cherry on top, at level with an oscillating fan hanging from the ceiling that was blowing its scent into an air duct. Using Shadow Glide, Dillon blew into the vent as well, all the way outside where a Grow Fairy zapped him back to normal. “Well, that was an utter waste.” he said. “Any idea where I should go now?”

Midna came out. “Well, think: what place in any city could possibly be big enough to hold a hundred supervillains?”

“The… prison?”

“Or the library. Whichever fits.”

And across this surprisingly-lush green courtyard stood the Miracle City Mint. Though when Dillon walked in, mutant vegetables and fruit monsters arose from the grass, hungry for some shadowbender. With Midna’s help, he stretched a Shadow Shockwave and had Mario fly around and snack them all, but his shadow soon stopped and hacked the horrible foods out of his mouth. Seems like Gramma Stuffum was using this town’s ingredients. He tried to Shadow Possess several of the fruits and merely strangle them, but his now-sickened shadow wasn’t up to the task. He whipped out his G.U.M.Z.O.O.K.A. and tried to blow through them, hurrying through the yard and to the prison.

He thought he would have to Shadow Veil under the backdoor, but he was merely able to take the handle, and pull it open. This first hall had many open or half-closed cells, where an assortment of vicious, hairy thugs were chatting about or playing cards, discussing what they’d be robbing today, the most efficient secret exits, and which guards they just pranked or harassed today. This was truly the greatest prison Dillon ever did see. When Dillon turned a left corridor, a large, bear-like criminal called El Oso charged down the hall shouting in anger, Dillon quickly Veiling to avoid his wrath. He carefully progressed forward, Veiling again when El Oso made a loop and charged for him the same way. But by then, Mario was tired and still sickened by the poison fruit, so when El Oso came for him again, Chris Uno leaped from over Dillon and smashed the villain’s head with a flaming foot.

“Thought you might need some help goin’ in here.” he said. “Mario not get enough sleep?”

“Ate some bad veggies. Anyway, the Brotherhood’s gotta be close by.”

“I dunno. This place feels a little too open.”

The double-doors ahead were amazingly locked, so Chris ignited a blowtorch on his finger and burned through the lock. A storm of furious screams hit their ears as they opened the cafeteria, where hundreds of criminals ran like wild animals. Chris jumped in front of Dillon and started punching flames every which way, and when the criminals started charging at them, Chris erupted a great flaming wall which he pushed, stretched out, and scorched any criminal in its wake. “I exhausted nearly all my juice tryin’ to beat up some pots-and-pans knight. You don’t think I can beat you all in a QUARTER of that time?”

“Well, he certainly has it covered.” Midna said while she and Dillon only watched Chris storm around and burn every villain with soot.

“At least he don’t need to rely on anyone for his bending.” Dillon replied, glancing at Mario holding his stomach.

Within about 5 minutes, Chris was done wasting every rampaging low-life in the room, leaving one bearded inmate whose neck he grabbed. “’ey, Mane! You no fight fair! No one in Miracle City ever gets any bending, Mane!”

“Then it won’t be hard finding those that stand out. Seen about a hundred supervillains who, uh, look like they’re from somewhere else?”

“I dunno, Mane! I was jus’ gonna go to the arcade with the money I stole las’ night. The only hundred villains I know, well, make regular visits here.”

“Any non-Mexicans?”

“Tha’s racist, Mane.”

“Never mind.” So he punched the man and knocked him out.

“If you were gonna do the Batman thing, I shoulda done that.” Dillon said with disbelief.

“You weren’t the one that whooped all their butts. Now let’s go.” All other doors were locked, so the two looked around until Chris pulled a strange lever beside a door.

“WHOAA!!” A chandelier came down and almost crushed Dillon. “Watch it, buddy!!”

“Hey, you can get up now, right?” Chris noted.

“I coulda flew up.”

“Really?”
But the look of Dillon’s shadow said otherwise. “…Fine.” So he got on the platform as Chris pushed the lever and let it rise him to the ceiling (then Chris just flew to the second-floor walkway using rocket boots). An Electoon cage also hung from the ceiling, which Chris took the liberty of shooting down with a fireball. Dillon swung the ceiling lights to get to the walkway before he and Chris left out a door to an outside balcony. Two teams of prisoners appeared to be playing hockey using cops tied by their arms and legs, sliding them around the floor.

“'ey, you kids wanna be our goalies? We still need two people.” An inmate said.

“Umm… no thanks. You know any big villain hideouts around here?” Chris asked.

“Oh those’re everywhere. The volcano, the orphanage, the elementary school, that old lady’s garden…”

“One that belongs to the Brotherhood of Evil?” Dill asked.

“El Fraternidad? I no heard o’ those, Mane, you ask someplace else.”

“Try the volcano.” Dill said, so with that, the duo hopped down the roofs and to the front yard, where they left through the open front gates. They saw the others waiting at a city street and hurried to reunite.

“So’d you find anything?” Haruka asked.

“No, but they picked a good town, though. It’s like bad guys run the place.” Dillon replied.

“We asked around, ‘said so many bad guys run the place is ‘cause of some old legend called ‘El Tigre’.” Harry explained. “‘Say he’s a legendary antihero who could never decide on the right path, but even though he stopped a bunch o’ villains, he hung with them a lot, too. They have a statue of the one from 1800s, and one that was made in 2016, but they don’t know why. But even though the city was already a mess, building that second one inspired criminals even more.”

“This city IS a real dump.” Dillon said. “Can’t do any dumb shadowbending since Mario ate that fruit. I don’t see why anyone’d—”

“Oh, BLIMEY!” exclaimed Sheila Frantic as she walked over, eating a bunch of churros. “This city is a BEAUT! You’ve got to TRY these things, mates, it’s like a fiesta on my tongue!” She swallowed many in one bite.

“Sheila, you just got up, I wouldn’t recommend it as a morning snack.” Haru said.

“’ey, I need food in my belly, and I ain’t get to eat anything after Stuffum’s glop. Ay, and I feel MUY energized, mate! I feel like me ears hear a butterfly’s… oh?” (End song.) Her ear indeed started twitching. A sound was sounding somewhere, somewhere not entirely visible. “…’ey, that sewer’s talking.” She pointed at a lid on the street.

Midna came out of Dill’s shadow and peeped her eye in its hole. “…Hmm.” Using her ponytail hand, she yanked it off. “…I hear something, too. I’m going to see what it is.” She floated down.

“Hey, I’m coming too.” Dillon stated, getting into Shadow Veil as he followed.

The echoes steadily grew louder in Midna’s ears, seeing a large gap broken into the sewer tunnel’s wall. She found her way to a small cave after entering, and hid behind the wall as it curved left. “…and that is wah, Mah Dear, Ah would be delighted if you should join our noble cause.” spoke the familiar Western accent.
“Well, Bean, if such a cataclysm is at hand, I will GLADLY join.” The owner of this wicked, echoey voice was a skeleton woman with glowing red lights in her dark sockets, a red sombrero with dangling skulls, and a black dress of sparkling fabric and red edges. The gray bird known as Ying-Ying sat on a rock, and tiny Hannibal Bean beside her. “Considering the reputation of your organization, I know all of the scum of this city will not hesitate.”

“Ah am counting on it.” Bean bowed. “But it does mah heart well to know a lady of your stature will be joining us, Sartana de los Muertos. So Ah’m certain you will provide us much service in… what I have planned…”

“About the Apocalypse?”

“Y’see, Ah have a theory as to how to stop such an event. It requires the use of a certain Firstborn, a Firstborn that has long been set free by its Guardian.”

“Yeeees, the Firstborn.” Sartana spoke as though hearing of these creatures. “They were all the rage 20 years ago, if I remember. I believe the military troops who invaded this city back then were involved with them.”

“In many ways.” Bean rubbed some dust between his, er, “fingers.” “But many attempts at locating it will be horribly wasteful, but we have other plans. First, Ah require the use of mah Yin-Yang Yo-Yos. Ah believe mah twin great-grandchildren took them into hiding after Arceus’s defeat. We’d best be searchin’ information outta them ‘soon as possible.”

“And how did you plan to do that?”

“Ah believe the answer is already in our doorway.”

Midna gasped, sinking into the darkness of the cave. “Grrrrr, grrrrr…” A snarling beast was peering at her from behind. “GRAH-RAH-RAH-RAH!” The Shadow Princess was tackled from behind by Zant himself, holding Midna by the hair in his teeth as he scampered in on all fours.

“You will have to excuse dear Zant.” smirked Bean. “He’s not been right in the head since his stay at Brookfield Asylum. But he’s an ever-loyal puppy, jus’ look at ‘im, sniffin’ out them intruders.” He spoke like an owner congratulating his puppy in baby-talk, Midna glaring at him with anger.

“My, how convenient that a Firstborn falls right into our palms. No reason she shoulda come alone, right? Where’re them others..”

Dillon was already slithering back to his teammates, reemerging outside. “Where’s Midna?”

Aurora whispered.

“She’s been spotted. We better find someplace to hide, I think they’re on to us.”

“I hope is chocolatay.” The kids looked up, hearts nearly stopping when a gigantic, green monster in a black sombrero was grinning at them with enormous teeth. “Hi.” He squished them flat under his spiked ball arm.

Excess Express

A fiery orange began to fall over the horizon. Cheren looked at the time on his 4DS, reading 6:30. Looks like they would be arriving soon. Going to assassinate someone just felt so weird. And why did she want him, again? Because he was at equal level with her power? Cheren could only wonder just who or what this Head President was. Oh… but he already knew.

Mom was poking was remained of her Gorgeous Steak as Doflamingo approached her. “Your food can’t get anymore dead, Mom. You seem lost in thought… fufufu.”

“I find the quality of this meat sufficiently unsatisfying.”

“Is what your last boyfriend said. Fufufu! You ought to save your stomach for softer things, anyway, lest that precious cast of yours give way. Please. Have some Healthy Juice.” Doflamingo placed a bowl of green juice with little spaghetti inside it on Mom’s table.

“Hmph. Worry about your own.” She said gruffly.

“I would do nothing more! But it’s only safe to tell you… you want to be heading to your room soon. We’re about to… shift.” And on that note, he walked toward the front of the train.

Mom casually returned to the back of the train as well. In his room, as Cheren was mindlessly twirling an arrow, Mom’s sons walked in. “We had better strap in, Cheren. The train is about to shift.”

“Shift?” Cheren got up and looked out the window, seeing that the train was speeding across the surface of the orange ocean, via some floatable tracks. “…WAAAAAH!” And all of a sudden, the angle of his room slanted, flying him over and onto his bed while the sons pressed against the wall. The Excess Express was driving directly up a diagonal track, and when Cheren recovered and looked out the window, the sea was drawing farther and farther down below. “Whoa…” They were just shifting higher and higher, and would soon be out of the stratosphere in minutes, by the look of it. No doubt, this would be the most exclusive party he was ever going to.

Gallagher Elementary

After the park was totally clear of kids, Rupert, Timmy, and Hikari sat boredly on the edge of the gym door’s step, their Pikmin behind them. “Sigh… this is hopeless.” Rupert said. “With everyone rushing to go to a war, they’ll never notice us.”

“I know those teenagers took Shelly away, but where did Jessie go?” asked Timmy.

“I wonder if he’s too upset to come?” replied Hikari with teary eyes.

“Well, at any rate… maybe we should help these kids out. You know, before they get in trouble. If only we could get into that middle school and, look around. And if he isn’t in there, we gotta let them know.” Rupert suggested.

“But Rupert, they’re already getting ready to go.” Timmy said. “Even if we hitched a ride or something, they’ll be getting wedgies from all those big kids before we can search the first hallway. Let’s just worry about getting back to normal…”

“Yeah… you’re right.”

“Ряяяяяяyyyyyyyy?” Needless to say, this echo hit both their ears.

“Wha’ was that?”

“Ряяяяяяyyyyyyyy?”

Rupert’s jaw nearly dropped, seeing the two cat-earred girls crawling into the park, sniffing like the animals they partly were. “HEY!! It’s Lil and Berry! They’re looking for me! HEEEEEEEY BERRYYYYY!” He bolted off his seat and across the vast park grounds, his friends following as they waved their arms faster than they ever would. “LILAAAAC! OVER HERE, IT’S US!
Not surprisingly, their cat ears twitched, and they looked in the tinies’ directions. “LOOK, Berry! It’s moving flowers!” Taking particular notice of the Pikmin army, the girls scampered on all fours.

“Ha ha ha!” Rupert was exceedingly joyous, having finally been noticed after all this legwork. It would be great to finally have assistance from normal-sized people. The werekittens slowed down as Berry crept up and whiffed the tiny trio, while Lilac crawled around observing the Pikmin.

Rupert’s grin was positively beaming when Berry’s eyes fell on him. He braced himself for a scream of surprise, since that was expected, in the form of a ‘Reooooowww’. But that look in Berry’s eyes wasn’t one of curiosity and shock… it was one of desire. When they turned to Lilac, a happy smile was on her face, her eyes sparkling with love. And turning back to Berry, her eyes were narrowed, licking her tongue around her sharp, dripping teeth. The same look she had when viewing tasty meat. “Uuuuum… Berry?”

“REOW!” Her giant hands flew directly at them.

“WAAAAAH!” The trio dodged aside and made a run for it, the Pikmin following suit, but Lilac chomped around and swallowed 5 Reds and 4 Blues. They were much too slow, so Berry jumped in front and blocked their path. Team Rupert shifted left-and-right, left-right, but there was no getting around Berry. “AAAAAHH!!” Her giant teeth were inches from severing Rupert’s head. “BERRY STOP, PLEASE!!”

He separated from his friends, taking 5 Purples and 6 Whites. Berry performed another terrific leap to block his path, so Rupert threw some Purples onto her fingers, making her wince. “Yow!” Angered, she swiped her claws at the Pikmin, but they flew over them as the wind gust knocked them down. She then aimed to snack on them—“NO!!” and Rupert jumped in front as the triangle teeth slammed on them all. Berry felt the 12 tinies on her tongue, tipping her head up to send them falling.

“WAAAAAH!” Rupert nearly fell in the abyss first, but a chain of his Pikmin started from the tip of her tongue, with him dangling by his leg over Berry’s throat. “B-Berry! It’s me, stoooop!” The blood rushed to his head as he struggled to glance down (up), and a White Pikmin was considering letting go to choke the beast. “N-No, don’t! She’s still my friend, I don’t wanna hurt ’er!”

“Hold on, Ruppy!” Timmy cried as he and Hikari successfully got onto Lilac’s head, a chain of Pikmin connecting her two ears. They rode her like a horse and rammed her into Berry, the latter falling over as Rupert and co. flew out.

“GRRRR!” Fuming with rage, Berry pounced and pinned Rupert under her thumb-tip. The tiny boy froze with fear at those clenched fangs, his heart ready to jump out with all its beating. The last time Berry was this angry, Rupert ended up in the hospital. There would be absolutely nothing of him after this. His tiny, terrified eyes saw perfectly into Berry’s bulbous, soulless eyes.

But that darkness died down in her eyes as they opened slightly. A wave of realization flew over her. “Rupert?”

“Eh, heheh… hey.” He didn’t let go of his fear, but sported a smile.

“Wh…How in the world.”

“Ruppy?” Lilac looked around, the movement wobbling the passengers on her head. “I don’t see him.”
“H-He’s…” Berry looked at him again, “Your parents’re looking for you, and they got our moms.”

“Well, uh… it’s a funny story with a lot of laughs. Y’see-”

A sudden whistle made the werecats jump. The garage door that led into the gym was slowly creaking open, and hundreds of cannoned bikes and scooters were raring to ride. “GIVE THESE BIG KIDS HEEEEEEECK!” All participating grade-schoolers were zipping across the streets, set on nothing but the imposing middle school.

“Oh no! They’re already at it!” Rupert exclaimed. “Berry, you gotta take us to follow them!”

“What, why?” Berry asked.

“Just come on, let’s go!” He jumped frantically, signaling Berry to scoop him on her finger and place him on her hair. “You guys, get the Pikmin back to the Onions and hurry and join us! Let’s GO!” Berry began rushing after the kids like a horse.

“Uhh… Rupert?” Timmy and Hikari were on the ground again with Lilac staring lovingly at them. “W-We’re gonna need…”

“Hey! BAD kitty!” Hikari shouted. “Sit Lilly, sit!” Lilac sat. “Good girl!”

Spirit World

Miyuki stood in a gym-room-like field surrounded by trees as she breathed calmly and focused energy. She whirled her hands close to each other and channeled gray chi into a sphere, thrusting her arms forward and destroying three targets with a laser. “You’re pretty good.” Agatha said, shading herself from the sun with an umbrella. “Your natural chi must be pretty strong.”

“I never knew that spirits had any form of bending, besides the ones gods have to give them.”

“All chi comes from this Spirit World energy, and as spirits are made of this kind of energy, the gods manipulate their spiritual bodies to take the form of element chi. The difference between them and Logia is, they’re still intangible bodies of energy, and possess a more peaceful form of chi.”

“But when my mom and her friends told us about being spirits, they still got damaged in the living world.”

“I heard that they were inhabiting Gigai, artificial bodies for spirits to inhabit and interact with mortals. They touch things and can get hurt like regular bodies, and carry the flow of chi. But when the Grim Reaper used a Resurrection Stone on them, those artificial bodies became pure living bodies, allowing the spirits to stay.”

“So our parents are using fake bodies?”

“They’re using new bodies, as far as I know about it. And either way, they were still enough to bear children.”

But it just made Miyuki so curious. Is that how their parents have always looked pre-spirit, or did they bare totally different looks that changed once they inhabited their new bodies. She would have to look more into these Gigai.

“Anyway, about your chi.” Aggie continued. “Normally timebenders have blue chi, but yours is gray. That color normally signifies the changing of ages.”
“Yeah, that’s always been my specialty. Manipulating ages or seeing into peoples’ past.”

“Timebenders that possessed a gray chi tend to have a close connection with the past, specifically the pasts of people or things. Even the dead. Timebenders with gray chi could touch even a fallen body and see its history. You could pick up a small rock, the only remains of an old temple, and see just where it came from.”

“Are there other timebenders like that?”

“I read it in a book. You’re the only one I know that has it. Still, it’s a very unique power, and developing your energybending will help you control your timebending better. But you seem to have a good grasp of it now, with just a little more training.”

“Just how much are we training, exactly? I need to at least see how my friends are doing.”

“Come inside and look at our Reflecting Pool. You’ll see them.”

Aggie led Miyuki into a dark room with a glowing, golden tub, the light presenting an eerie look on their dark forms as they peered inside.

Sector IC was arduously trudging through the blizzard, having brought no coats and struggling to survive in the blistering cold as they were. Terry especially had to help MaKayla along as she was the least protected. They saw a shadowed clump lay dead in the snow a few feet away and rushed over to investigate. There was Miyuki on her back, eyes closed and still. “Miyuki!” MaKayla let go of Terry and knelt over her, putting a hand on her head.

“How she… dead?” gasped George.

“I… I dunno. She feels warm, but… there’s something off about her. I feel… a force.”

“Does Obi-wan want her to come to Dagobah?” asked Terry.

“It is a perfect reference, isn’t it? Well, we can’t just leave her here, let’s take her and look for help fast. Hopefully Suki can’t be far.” She stepped aside as George lifted Miyuki in his arms. “It’s strange… I hear a distant singing.” MaKayla continued. “Is someone else on this mountain, too? But there’s a weird energy about it…”

“Yes, it’s the voice of fallen souls of stupid travelers who flew over the mountain LISTENING TO SOME LITTLE GIRL!!” Terry screamed.

“Even if it is, there’s nowhere else to go.” George said. “Let’s find this voice and see if it can help us find Suki. Or help Miyuki…”

Miyuki pulled her head out and gasped for breath. “They’re going to get lost if we don’t help them.”

“Our special operative is still out there as we speak.” Rukia stated, entering the room. “He won’t let them freeze. So I see your training is going well.”

“She has gray Timebending Chi.” Aggie mentioned. “She’s able to touch people or things and view their history.”

“That’s a very useful power to have.” Rukia said with near awe. “Some of history’s biggest questions can be answered with a single touch...”
“I’m not a historian, why would I care about the story of some old ruin…”

“Everything that’s happened in the past may still have relevance now. I haven’t yet told you about the ghost that’s haunting Arendelle Mountain.”

“Is it a dangerous ghost?”

“Dangerous in a matter of speaking. It’s a tormented soul that’s been growing with misery for 300 years. The blizzard is a result of her anguish, making it a thriving place for Hollows. The Hollows have begun to drastically multiply, and we think they’re moving in to make this ghost one of them. If she becomes a Hollow, they’ll be unstoppable.”

“Well, when are we going to stop them?”

“We expect the blizzard to finally slow down now. Which…” Rukia looked at the pool, seeing Jack Frost speaking to Suki, “it’s just about gonna.”

Arendelle Mountains

Suki’s eyes were closed as she stood firmly in place, softly moving her arms. At this very moment, she felt nothing else but the skin-freezing cold, heard nothing but the angry snows. And the charming warm voice of Jack Frost. “You can do it, Suki. Just feel the blizzard. Feel the storm… and calm it down.”

Yes… Suki did feel it. This storm… and where it came from. It was created by Ice Chi… Ice Chi flowed inside her… it flowed everywhere on this planet. It was cold… she loved the cold… it was so lovely… so magical… so peaceful…

Her arms glowed with a majestic blue as she threw them to the air, releasing two lovely beams as she opened her sunny eyes. The dark sky flashed blue, and in what seemed like a sudden warm whoosh, the blizzard slowed down. The starry sky was visible in the heavens, beyond a lovely aurora lights that Suki’s ice had taken the form of. A gentle snow was falling over Arendelle, and it felt marvelous.

Jack’s eyes lit with awe, as if never seeing something this beautiful. “Suki… you did it. You stopped the storm… you did it!”

“I diiiiiid?” Suki would almost melt with all that light in her eyes.

“You did! Now we can finally go up there and talk to her! After ALL these years, I can!…” Jack was beside himself with joy.

“Hee hee hee! Ask her to the GHOOOOOOST daaaaaaance!” She pushed her cheeks together.

“Heheh… yeah… Let’s get up there ASAP!” He was rushing to the castle first, with Suki hurrying beside him.

“Hey Jackie, I have to ask.” she began. “Who IS this girl?”

“Oh, um… she’s just an old friend. We used to live together, in this…in this kingdom.” He still smiled, but his voice seemed to sink.

“Ooooo what happeeeened? Tell me, tell me, tell me! Did you make a TREEHOUSE together, or play in the SNOOOOW, hu—or!- or!- or!, you two promised to LOOOOOVE and hug each other after deeeeeaaaath!”
He really wished it turned out that way. That’s just the future Jack Frost had planned with Elsa. But things didn’t go according to plan…

Planet Glacia; 320 years ago

A peaceful, sunny day over Arendelle Mountains. Any day on Planet Glacia where you could see the sun was a joyous occasion indeed, made the mountains feel a little less cold. There was already joyous activity going on in the southern peaks. “YEEEEAAAHH!” A blue-eyed boy with brown hair, brown sweater, brown khaki shorts, and bare feet excitedly slid an ice-made board down a steep slope along a narrow mountainside, dodging to the left or right of rocks and jumping gaps. He was approaching a road between a close trench, sliding along the wall as he made a tight turn left.

He slid off a ledge at the trench’s end and began making a series of long jumps across huge rock pillars, towering miles above the chasm. The last one had a wood bridge which he slid across, making it to a safe slope as he avoided more trees and swerved around a narrow, snaky path. “Almooost…” The path became straight, and the end was in sight. That is, before a polar bear walked in and blocked it. “WHOA!” He quickly formed an ice ramp to propel him over the animal, but he lost balance and went rolling down the following hill. “Ooh- ahh- AAH, ow, gah!” He finally stopped on his rear when the ground turned straight. “OW!” The iceboard hit his head.

“He he ha ha ha!” laughed a little brown-haired girl in a brown sweater.

“Hey, that didn’t count, Jenna!” Jack yelled, rubbing his head.

“Diiiiid too, diiiiiid too!” Jenna danced and fell back in the snow. “You were AAAAAALL ploppyyyyy.”

“Well, just wait until the party.” He brushed his hair back. “When I show off my grooves to Elsa, we’ll be twinklin’ in the sky.” ;D

“Jackie loves the priiiinceeeees, Jackie loves the priiiinceeeees!”

“No, not the princess. The queen.” He winked coolly.

“Ohhhhh sure, Jackie. Get with the queen ‘cause she’s the first royal icebender born in centuries.” She winked.

“Ahhhh, that’s not what it’s about. I just feel me and Elsa got a special connection. Like, we’re bonded by fate… or somethin’.”

“You only met her once at a noble family party. …When you tried to make an ice sculpture out of the punch to give to her and she had to break it off your tongue when you licked it.”

“Eh, that was 9 years ago, she couldn’t remember. This time, she’s gettin’ the real taste of Jackster, and before you know it, I’m gonna be king.”

“Just don’t cause too big of a mess at the party.” Their mom said, walking out of their mansion. “And put some shoes on, you’ll look ridiculous.” She chuckled.

“Pssh, icebenders don’t need shoes, we’re the champs of winter.” Jack grinned.

“Yeah, and the champ of making himself embarrassed in front of the queen! Ha ha ha!” Jenna laughed.

“Oh, shut up.”
Royal Palace

The palace courtyard was already bustling with townspeople, all eagerly chatting amongst friends and discussing different views on this new queen. Queen Elsa was inside the palace as her younger sister helped get her dressed, fixing gloves on her hands. “It’s gonna be fine, Elsa. Just remember what Mom and Dad said: Conceal, don’t feel.”

“Don’t let it show.” Elsa spoke with a sad, worried frown.

“And don’t randomly burst into song.” Anna grinned. “Now just stay inside ‘til we call you, I’ll go straighten out the refreshments!” She hurried off excitedly.

The Frost Family and many other nobles gathered into the palace courtyard and chatted amongst their selves. “Sigh, when’s she gonna get out?” Jack whispered, tapping his foot impatiently.

“Jack, will you please put some shoes on, you look so out of place.” his mom whispered.

“Mom, I’m a free spirit!” He proclaimed quietly. “My toes hang free, my hair blows free, and my soul will ride the snows ‘til the ends of-” He startled to a halt when a light-brown Fjord horse charged and stopped in front of him.

“Easy there, Sitron!” said the dashing prince riding the horse. He had a slightly large nose, but smooth auburn hair with sideburns by his ears, and gorgeous green eyes. He had a white jacket over a blue shirt with a magenta tie, blue pants, black high-heel shoes, and white gloves. “I know you’re excited, but we can’t have you guzzle all the food ag-” He hopped off the left and-

“OW!” crushed Jack’s right toes.

“Oh! I’m so sorry.” Hans backed up sheepishly. “Oh, my horse didn’t almost run you over, did he? I told him to stop by the gate, but, sigh those steamed Floran Carrots really get him riled.” The horse neighed in shame.

“No, it’s alright…” Jack gripped his toes tight. “So who’re you.” He asked with slight resentment.

“Prince Hans of the Southern Isles at your service.” He spoke humbly. “I came for the coronation of Queen Elsa. Is sheee…” He searched around.

“Hey, that’s Jackie’s girlfriend!” shouted Jenna. Jack immediately forced his foot over her mouth, but since that was the only one keeping him up at the moment, he fell.

“Prince Hans of the Southern Isles at your service.” He spoke humbly. “I came for the coronation of Queen Elsa. Is sheee…” He searched around.

“Hey, that’s Jackie’s girlfriend!” shouted Jenna. Jack immediately forced his foot over her mouth, but since that was the only one keeping him up at the moment, he fell.

“Jackie?” Hans understood by the gestures. “Oh, I-hi didn’t mean to imply!” Hans chuckled. “If you were already together, then please, by all means. I’m just wondering-” He began to walk the opposite way, but as he turned at the same time, he bumped into someone and forced her punch bowl against her dress.

“Ooooooo.” Anna shuddered. “Now I need to get a new dress! And more punch…”

“Oh! I’m… terribly sorry.” Hans frowned.

The moment Anna looked up, it seemed everything began to move in slow motion. To them both. His gorgeous face with the silly big nose and cute freckles… Anna’s beautiful clear face, also with cute freckles, and blue eyes that sparkled like ice… her hair looked so orange, he could taste it, and it’d be lovely. “…Uhh-h-h, Prince Hans, of the Southern Isles.”

“Hehe… Princess Anna, of Arendelle!”
“Princess—!” He bowed immediately. “Wh-What an, embarrassing way to introduce myself.”

“Hehe! …It’s no big deal.” Her face was as red as the punch on her blue gown.

“Heh heh… L-Let me come with you, to… clean it up.”

“Um, sure..” Both held hands, smiling goofily as she led him into the castle.

Jack rolled his eyes, still on the ground, “What a player.” Their attention was averted when the blares of horns sounded. The boy helped himself up and faced the stairs to the front gates, where four elders in ice-blue robes led the girl with an icy sparkling gown, snowy blonde hair, and ice-blue eyes out for everyone to see.

“Everyone, we are proud to introduce, eldest daughter of King Adgar and Queen Idun, the first royal icebender in four generations: Princess Elsa, the 104th Ruler of Arendelle!” One of the old sages brought to Elsa a small golden fountain, but insisted she remove her gloves. With slight worry, Elsa complied, taking the fountain as it began to spew water. “May a bright age arise under her rule, and may her powers protect Arendelle from invaders. Long live Queen Elsa!”

And with her powers, Elsa froze the fountain solid, and the unique streams that flowed from it formed into a sparkling, elegant crown befitting such a queen, except it was much too huge for her small head. Cheers erupted around the crowds as Elsa handed the crown back, slipping her gloves back on. “Time to make mah mooove! Wish me luck.” Jack winked at his family, licked his hand, and smoothed his hair before making his way to the front.

It wasn’t easy to squeeze his way around all these coated people without getting his foot stomped, but by the time he was at the stairs, a sage was already leading Elsa inside. “Come with me. There’s something I need to show you.”

No doubt Jack was curious, looking to a small balcony along a nearby tower with an open window.

Beneath the castle

The sage alit the passage with a glowing blue ball of ice, leading Elsa down a deep, dark stairwell. “This is the greatest secret in our entire kingdom. An ancient relic we have treasured for eons.”

He brought Elsa to a deep, vast chamber where a dark chasm surrounded a single, central platform. Jack Frost, having come his own way, crept within a small opening above the platform, watching the sage lead Elsa onto. Sat atop that platform was a big stone cube with ancient writing. “Behold…”

“What…What is this?” Elsa asked with awe.

“It’s a Poneglyph. There are only seven of them in the whole universe, and they can only be read by certain people.”

“What does it say?”

“No one in our generations has ever been able to decipher it. It was left here by the gods of old… and your family’s sole duty has been to protect it. So one day, the person of destiny would come and read its script.”

“But how will I know… when that person comes?”

“I don’t know… all we could determine was the person meant to read it, is an icebender.”
Elsa gasped. “But… I can’t…”

“We aren’t sure if it’s you. But while Arendelle is a kingdom frolicking with icebenders, only one is born in the royal family every four generations. And with very powerful chi that lasts even in the afterlife. We’ve always thought that, there was a meaning behind this. The fact that only an icebender could get here… even if you can’t read it now, you may be the one to do so. …And whatever is written on this stone, will be your responsibility.”

The burden of being a queen sounded troublesome enough… but what if she was the one meant to read this message? What ultimate task would she have to carry out? It made her heart race.

From high upon his perch, Jack could sense the anxiety Elsa was feeling. “…WHOA!” With a single light step, Jack slipped and plummeted to the platform below, startling the two as he crashed on his head. “Uhhhh-” He flipped back to his feet, “Hey!”

“Who are you?!” Elsa hissed.

“Elsa, it’s me, Jack! Remember? 9 years ago? …Punch stuck to the tongue?”

“Jack, what are you DOING down here?!”

“Well uh, was a little curious,” he grinned and moved sheepishly, “you being mysterious, following you to this mysterious… rock.”

“Look, just get out of here and DON’T say a word about this. Not that it’s any good to anyone…”

“Oh yeah, I can read it.”

“You can?!”

“Yeah, it’s just uh, dedededededede…” He walked closer and skimmed it. “‘Here lies our fabled Gibberish Rock, made to baffle royals for eons, anyone who learns the true purpose of this rock may be wedded to the princess as his reward for keeping her from wasting brainpower on it’, etc. etc., so let’s hang out.” He grinned coolly.

“Ugh! Who let you in the castle, anyway, how’d you get down here?”

“I let myself in.” He said coolly. “And I followed the Call of Love to where my queen would be.” He sported a sparkling grin.

“Uh.” She rolled her eyes and walked away. “Let’s just go.”

Castle halls

“Look Jack, I’m not really looking for a relationship right now. And you and me just won’t work.” Elsa kept her hands folded on her front while Jack had his behind his head in a laid back fashion. “I’ve just become Queen, I have a responsibility to protect the kingdom, to make sure everyone’s happy and control these crazy powers, and if the daily newspaper about some little prankster freezing the teashop isn’t lying, all YOU care about is-” When she turned left, Jack was gone. “AAAAH!” Upside-down, hanging from a chandelier by his legs and an ice chain, Jack grabbed Elsa’s hands and flipped her on top with him. She clutched the chain for dear life as the chandelier swayed. “Being a troublemaker!!”

“Having FUN.” Jack smiled coolly (how else does he smile), standing straight with great balance.
“Get us down!”

With a shrug, Jack took her hand and slid down an ice path. They continued their walk. “What’re you talkin’ about CRAZY powers, you’re the first princess in decades to have ‘em and yours’re better than anyone’s!”

“You just don’t understand, do you, my Ice Chi doesn’t want to stay in, if I don’t keep ‘em under control, they’ll freeze the whole kingdom.”

“And what planet is this?”

“One that doesn’t need to be COLDER than it is!”

“Y’know, maybe your powers are going so crazy BECAUSE you don’t let ‘em out. If there’s one thing I know about icebending, my ice just itches to get out every day and do fun stuff. Elsa, if you don’t let your ice out, your body will IMPLODE upon itself, creating a force that rivals a hundred atomic bombs that turns EVERY living creature on this planet into chunks of uniquely frozen shapes of water!”

“My parents taught me to be a levelheaded princess who knows self-control and conceals any rebellious side of her inside. And by controlling myself, I can easily control some silly ice.”

“Siiiiigh. Well if that’s how you feel. But uhhhh, Elsa.”

“What?” Jack glided past her front.

“Gotchor gloves.” He grinned mischievously, wiggling the gloves.

“!! HEY, GIVE THOSE BACK!” Jack jumped out the window and slid to the roof via ice path as Elsa slid after, struggling to keep balance on her ice-made high-heels as she chased Jack, who was far more nimble, across the roof.

Jack thrusted his arms down and propelled himself high up a tower with ice blasts, shattering the conjured trail as he smirked down at Elsa. “Careful, Princess. Don’t lose control. Conceal, don’t feel, get punked by a total cutie.”

“Oh you SON OF A-” Elsa thrusted her arms down and shot at Jack like a rocket, the boy already hopping to the parallel tower. Jack slid around the towers via ice path as Elsa chased on her own path, and the guests down below gaped in awe as two trails of ice wrapped around the towers like giant ribbons.

“Her Highness is truly fantastic!” a woman gaped.

“Mmm, and Jack Frost is with her, is his punishment to serve her?” a man inquired.

“Jack, what in Polaris’ name are you doing?” questioned his mom.

“GOOOO Jackiiiiie!” Jenna cheered.

Jack took the slide down the back of the castle and toward a mountain, hopping off as he made the dash up. Elsa tried to chase, but her high heels didn’t move well in the deep snow, so she was forced to ditch them and chase on bare feet, also having to hold her dress up so she didn’t trip.

Jack made it onto a flat ground with a dead end, and when he saw Elsa coming, he brushed his hands across the ground and turned it to solid ice. Elsa immediately slipped and started sliding to him on her bottom, and Jack didn’t move aside before he was pushed off his feet and facefirst onto Elsa’s face. “Hehe.” He grinned sheepishly in her surprised, gaping face.

The queen pushed him off and stood, throwing a beam that froze Jack’s body to the ground except his head. “OW!” Elsa planted her right foot against Jack’s cheek, keeping him down. “You know you got pretty nails.” Indeed her toenails were as icy as her eyes.

“…” A smirk found its way on Elsa’s face, “Do you wanna build a snowman?”

They were back on more snowy ground and spiraling dozens of snowmen together with helmets and polearms, sending them to clash with each other. Jack created a snowcannon and fired, but Elsa raised an ice wall that shielded her and launched a storm of ice arrows at her opponent, who bent like a stickman and avoided. Elsa spun together a big ice shovel, and Jack created a rake as the two ran at each other and dueled. The snowtools eventually fell apart as Jack slid and spun a whirlpool below Elsa’s feet, causing her to slip and fall, but thinking quickly, Elsa spun and caused the snow to rise instead, letting her jump to a mountaintop. She made many huge snowballs rise from the mountain, and Jack mimicked as they both readied to launch at each other. Both snow storms flew, an equal amount that blocked them perfectly, until Jack shielded himself in a snowball and rolled up the mountainside.

The snowball flew above Elsa as Jack shot out and grabbed her, the two rolling down the mountain as a snowball formed around them both. When it bounced, the two shot out and surfed the sky across trails of ice, tiny blue sparkles raining everywhere gently.

They returned to the roof of the castle and lied back with arms behind their heads. “I should go find my shoes, but… eh, it’s kinda nice without them.”

“Yeah, when that chill spreads between your toes, it really gets you goin’.”

“I’ve always stayed inside the palace to keep my powers under control, but… I’ve never felt better. There’s this feeling in my heart…” She held a hand by her chest, “like a huge weight’s been lifted off me. It feels more…”

“Free.” Jack rolled onto all fours. “When you act on impulse, and let yourself have a little fun, your spirit becomes more free. That’s what I read in an old airbender book. Ice is close to Air as it gets, so why not?”

“It wasn’t hard to keep them under control either.” Elsa stared at her hands. “Maybe I can control my ice better, if I just let it blow more freely.”

“That’s the spirit.” Jack lied back again. “Just don’t worry about what’ll happen and everything will turn out-”

“Elsa, THERE you are!” They looked onto the nearby tower balcony, seeing Anna and Hans staring down at them.

“I guess we aren’t the only ones enjoying ourselves.” Hans remarked with a witty smile.

Jack and Elsa exchanged humorous smiles and rocketed their selves up to the two. “Weeee have some newwwwwws!” squealed Anna quietly. “Hans and I—should I say it?”

“By all means.” Hans bowed.

“We’re getting married!!”
“What?” questioned Elsa with concealed panic. “Anna, can we talk?” She led her inside rushedly.

Hans and Jack were left to their selves, viewing the party down below. “Ever wanted to say something crazy and suddenly, your whole world turns bright?” the prince asked.

“I’ve had those feelings.” Jack replied, leaned forward against the railing.

“And by the looks of things, those feelings have led us to become brothers-in-law.”

“Heh heh heh.” Jack had to laugh at that. “Right. Except how long have you known Anna?”

“Well, half an hour ago. But after sliding around the halls on socks for that long, and singing some song about love, it’s moments like those you really know, she’s the one.” Hans looked at the starry heavens, lost in them as he was in Anna’s eyes just moments ago. “Or in your case, having to get a punch sculpture off your tongue.”

Jack blushed. “Oh-ho, she told you that, huh?” He grinned nervously.

“It’s small little gestures like that and such short, fated meetings that tell you, the stars have aligned for you to be together. And for both of us, the stars have sent us that message in the form of punch.”

“Heheh… well ‘f you ask me,” he turned and leaned on his back, “I never like to rush these fates too quickly. I sorta like to, play the field, yeah I like Elsa, but it’s never very fun when we get there too quickly, I like to steadily work my way there ‘til she’s cool with the Frost.” His grin twinkled.

“Anna, get BACK here!”

“No!” Anna stormed back out and clutched Hans’ arm. “Why won’t you give us your blessing?!”

“Because you don’t even know him, we can’t just let anyone into the royal family so easily!”

“Oh, like you weren’t letting JACK into your little ice show.”

“I DIDN’T let him in, he was just…”

“He was just showin’ you a good time.” Jack said smoothly.

“He was WASTING my time with some silly snowball fight when I SHOULD’VE been looking over things at the party, especially YOU two!”

“Elsa, I know you have a hard time with your powers, but you’ve been acting REALLY sour since our parents died, and I think the only reason you can’t understand our love is ‘cause YOU’RE too concealed on your emotions to see ANYTHING.”

“And who was it that was helping me conceal those powers?”

“The powers are one thing, I was just being nice, but it didn’t mean you had to conceal ME from anyone I wanna share my LIFE with.”

“If you just decide to share your life with any random person, how can I let you-” The sounds of distant screams distracted them.

“YOUR HIGHNEEEEESS! The monsters from the Chilly Depths are invading the castle!” Beyond the castle gates were legions of ice demons marching up the mountain, armed with weapons and catapults that launched giant ice chunks into the courtyard.
Jack and Elsa skied to the gates and fought the monsters away with their powers as Chilfos climbed over the wall. “EVERYONE, get inside the palace!” Elsa ordered. “Stay in the dungeons until we tell you to come out!”

The monsters were piling in fast, the citizens scrambling to get inside the castle. Jack blew ice trails along the ground to make Chilfos slip as he searched around desperately for his family. “AAAH!” He looked and saw his mom kicked to the ground by a Chilfos, ready to pierce her with its spear. Jack saw a wood cane on the ground, likely discarded by an old man, swiping it and skiing over fast as he caught the creature’s spear in the hook from behind and yanking it away, forming an iced point atop the hook to slice the monster’s head off.

He helped his mom up, “Mom, where’s Jenna?!”

“JACKIIIIEE!” He was horrified when he saw his sister hanging from a Freezard’s teeth by her coat as it leaped over the eastern wall.

As he skied over the wall to save her, more monsters burst through the front gates, charging to the castle fast. Elsa was furiously throwing ice beams, making spikes rise from beneath them and creating ice walls to further block, which she also pushed to keep them back. She started to panic as they continued to pile in, unable to blast her powers any faster. “UUH!” The monsters succeeded in shoving her down and trampling the ice queen like a dead matt on the floor. The bruises were multiplying, and no matter how much she wanted to, they gave her no time to stand. “UUUUUUUHHHHH!”

A great blue light burst into the sky, the queen emitting a small explosion that blew the demons off of her. Many beams of ice flew everywhere, crashing the tops of many mountains and making the clouds turn blue.

The Freezard was charging up a gorge along a mountain as Jack chased on the left ledge. But both faced ahead when the mountain shook, and a massive avalanche began to slide down. “RAAAAH!” The monster was caught in the snow current and began to slide down, tossing Jenna up in the air in his rage.

She took land just on the right ledge, but couldn’t keep balance before she fell back. “WAAAAAH!” A gloved hand saved her from doom, pulling her onto the horse behind Prince Hans. “Don’t worry! You’re safe now.”

“Hans!” Jack beamed.

“NEEEEIEH!” The horse panicked when the snowy ground gave way, plummeting all three into the river.

“HANS!” Jack screamed.

“Er-, here!” The prince threw Jenna up to Jack’s ledge, the boy swinging his cane for her to grab. He stood on the edge of the cliff, struggling to pull up her heavy body (he noticed she was a bit heavier than Elsa for some reason). But another shake caused Jack to slip off, while he swung the cane and flung Jenna onto the ledge.

“JACKIIIIEE!” She reached for him in despair.

“JENNA, I’ll be all right, get to the castle!!” With very mixed feelings, his sister hurried off.

But the snow was surprisingly strong even for Jack. He rose and sunk, over and over in this thick white river, and no matter how much he tried to blow it back, he couldn’t find the strength to stand or throw his ice.

At the palace, Elsa’s ice beams couldn’t come faster, and it almost felt like her arms were throwing their selves. She couldn’t conceal the storm inside her, not when her kingdom was in danger. Her parents told her to keep her powers under control, Anna helped her to accomplish that, but this was the only way. In order to keep the kingdom out of their control, she had to lose control herself, lose control until there was nothing left. She understood why Jack was the little free spirit he was, because this was the only way to hold back creatures with no order. So when swarms of them succeeded in bypassing her, heading for the castle, Elsa spun like a whirlwind and let the beams of ice flow.

“ELSA, we got everyone-” The moment Anna rushed out was when a beam pierced her heart. Elsa immediately froze. Anna struggled to get back to her feet, shivering like she was in the deepest part of the coldest freezer. “E-Elsa… Why…” Her arm stretched out to her sister before her whole body transformed into solid, blue ice.

Elsa couldn’t bring herself to move, her face ridden with guilt. Not even the frozen spear that pierced her heart from behind could match it. A Chilfos had successfully claimed a fatal blow on the queen, a devilish grin on his frosty face. Small cracks began to spread along Elsa’s body, glowing blue as tremendous energy began to build inside her. The royal palace, and all of Arendelle around it, was swallowed in an expanding sphere of snow and ice.

Arendelle never saw the sun again, never saw anything but pitch-black skies and freezing winds. The avalanches buried hundreds of people beneath many feet of snow, among them Prince Hans and Jack Frost. No signs of life could be seen anywhere.

Jack found himself lying in a mound of snow on a dark, barren mountain. He didn’t feel any pain as he stood up, but was confused as to why his brown sweater turned blue. Also, why didn’t the spot he was laying in have a snow-shape, why did his hair dye like snow, and why did he leave no footprints? Why did he feel absolutely weightless. “Confused?” Jack looked up when a bright blue light lowered down to him. The stone, shivering colossus with the massive snowflake on his back.

“I… am Polaris.”

“Polaris, the… Snow God?”

“Yes. Who better for a mischievous icebender like yourself to meet than me as you pass to the Spirit World?”

“Are you saying I’m… dead?”

“Indeed, but alas, your effort to save your sister was for naught. She, and all of Arendelle were destroyed… by Elsa’s wrath.”

“No…. No!” Jack was seething in rage, unable to process this so suddenly. “That can’t be true! Jenna… Elsa… THERE’S NO WAY ALL OF THEM CAN BE DEAD!”

“This was this kingdom’s ultimate fate. The fate for Elsa, having used her powers so haphazardly. Perhaps if you haven’t persuaded her to suddenly start using them-”

“SHUT UP!” Jack threw a nonexistent ice blast at the god. “If ELSA hadn’t used her power, EVERYONE would’ve been killed anyway, you CAN’T pin the blame on either of us! And I don’t care WHAT happened, I’m GLAD I taught Elsa to be more free! Now her spirit will be BETTER than ever!”

“Is that so? Well… perhaps you’d like to see her?” Polaris swallowed Jack in a blinding blue light.

“Let it GOOO! Let it GOOO! Can’t hold back aaaaanymooooore!” The palace still stood, sparkling with beautiful ice, and Elsa danced on its balcony, a green aura around her body as she let her ice flow everywhere. Jack and Polaris were hovering high in the heavens above her.

“What-… She’s still alive?”

“Her spirit appears well, but in fact, she is a ghost. A ghost that is eternally tethered to what she did to her sister. Just look.” What Jack saw horrified him. A statue frozen in solid ice, much like this whole castle. Her face was desperate for warmth, reaching out in despair.

“Anna…”

“Because of her lack of control, her sister will now stand stiff, frozen for all eternity. Elsa died, knowing this. Her heart sunk in this unbearable guilt, and this carried to her spirit. And because of her powerful Ice Chi, which has remained with her as a spirit, this mountain has been swallowed in an endless blizzard where not even the Reapers can claim her. As you see, she is desperately trying to let her pain go, but her guilt remains glued to her deep down. She will forever remain as a ghost bound to this world, never to truly shed her sorrow and become a spirit.”

Jack felt the greatest sorrow. All he wanted was for Elsa to be more free… but seeing her this happy, masking unbelievable sorrow inside of her… he couldn’t bear to see her in this much pain. “I’m… sorry.”

“The fault is not yours, Jack. True, Elsa would’ve had pain as a spirit, had she been more concealed. You were following your own beliefs, so now your spirit can be free.”

“I can’t be free until I help her!”

“You must be patient. Help will come to her, but she must look into herself. …I can assure you, however… your sister and family are safe in the Spirit World.”

“They… are?” Jack felt a sense of relief.

“But your attempts to rescue her will not go unnoticed… I have a proposition for you. I will give back your Ice Chi and allow you to roam the Mortal World as an Ice Spirit. To protect children in danger from the evils of winter. But you must stay away from Elsa. Her power far exceeds yours as a spirit.”

Jack looked at his friend. Her lovely vocals echoed for miles beyond the mountains. As a ghost, her lungs would never grow tired, singing that song for ages. “…Sigh, okay.”

So Polaris touched a finger to Jack, a blue light shining for a few brief seconds before it faded. Jack opened his palm as a snowflake softly floated. “For you, also.” Polaris gave Jack a wooden cane, the same as he used in the last moments of his life. “Do not leave your soul tethered to her. See that other children… can have free spirits.” And with that, Polaris dispersed into snow.

Jack spared one final look at Elsa. Trapped in her ghostly limbo, she drew farther away as Jack soared to the heavens. He would return to her.

Present time
After all these years… he may finally have a chance. With Suki, her unbreakable spirit… maybe she was all he needed to save Elsa from her despair. It had to be… and he was going to save her… no matter what.

Base of the mountains; Chilly Depths

Swarms of Hollows were gathering at the foot of these mountains. Some small, walking on all fours like animals. Some as high as skyscrapers, pitch-black like moving trees. In a dark, dead cave was a Hollow like no other, a human-like one on two legs, dark cloak with red and white designs and spiky edges, and the grim Hollow mask. Four more Hollows who bared similar designs appeared in the cave out of black smoke, gathering before their leader. “The spirit is moving up the mountains. Children are within the mountains as well, but we’ve lost sight of the ghost kids.” One of them spoke in a grim voice, only his eyes exposed above his mask.

Member of the Arendelle Arrancar Gang
Former BOE member
LEGION

“AH HAHahahahahaha!” cackled a witch with pitch-black hair, black lips, and a black cloak with skeletal designs, the top-right of her mask broken off. “He’s tryin’ to save ELSA after all this time! What a itty, bitty, baby.”

Member of Arendelle Arrancar Gang
Former Death Eater
BELLATRIX LESTRANGE

“His chances are futile. But at least we’ll be able to collect a few extra souls.” spoke a white-haired woman with wrinkly skin and blood-red designs all over her cloak.

Former BOE member
Avatar Realms denizen
Bloodbender HAMA

“Those monsters, and their sorcery and witchcraft which goes against God,” spoke the last member with deep hatred, bright blue flames burning on the shoulders of his cape, “dare to pollute the world He hath created. My duty, as God has given me, is to drag them into the fiery pit from whence they came.”

Former Judge and gypsy hunter of Cité des Cloches
CLAUDE FROLLO

“How DARE you call us monsters… FILTHY MUGGLE!” screamed Bellatrix.

“He is as his God made him.” Hama said.

“Well, the storm has finally calmed.” Legion followed. “Shall we move up?”

“…Begin moving. We take the castle tonight.”

“As you command: Lord Hans.” they chorused.

The leader’s mask opened, revealing the visage of the once-handsome prince, his green eyes soulless. “About 320 years behind schedule. But better late than never.”

“NEEEEEEEEIIIIIGH!” His dark ghost-horse Sitron cried an otherworldly neigh, pitch-black with exposed bones and flaming blue eyes and hair.

So really, the flashback wasn’t THAT major to the whole grand scheme, I just didn’t feel comfortable summarizing it in dialogue. I mean, imagine if I did it that way, then look at this version, wouldn’t you agree? Next time will be the conclusion of the Frozen Saga. So stay tuned.
Welcome back to the story! I promise not to make it boring. A boss here is what we’ll fight. It’s time for Wendy to test her might!

Chapter B-5: Unveiled

Orchid Bay; Jasmine’s House

Wendy and June regrouped with Carla and Monroe before running to Ah-Mah’s house, where Facilier and the Ice Climbers were already waiting. “You guys! There’s something big coming!” June yelled.

“We’re already aware.” Jasmine replied. “Over there.”

They were all led to a clearer area of forest, seeing the imposing tower in the distance. “That’s got to be what my Seismic Sensor was feeling.” Monroe said.

“We still don’t SEE!” the Ice Climbers chorused.

“Ugh.” Monroe sighed, reaching into his satchel for two necklaces with tiki designs. “Put these on, you two.” He gave them to the twins, and when they put them on, everything became visible.

The twins gasped with terror: “A FLYING CAT!!”

Carla glared at them. “Is there any particular reason you’re even with us?”

“NOPE.”

“How is that tower moving?” Wendy asked.

“I’d be less concerned about the tower and more about that cannon.” Carla pointed out.

“Hold on…” Facilier looked through binoculars. “I recognize that place. It’s Cauldron Keep. It belonged to Gruntilda’s sisters!”

“Gruntilda?” Jasmine questioned. “You mean she got that engineering degree after all?”

“Well, her sisters did, she does tend to steal their work. That cannon is bad news, though. It can drain all the life energy from a targeted landscape!”

“Orchid Bay is filled with magic and life.” Carla said simply. “We must stop that tower before it gets within range!”

“Right.” June fist-palmed. “Wendy, let’s get on it!”
“Okay!” (Play the Eggman Boss Theme from Sonic Unleashed!)

Boss fight: Cauldron Keep

Wendy dashed across the forest with sonic speed while Juniper kept up with a series of terrific leaps across trees. It was only before when they were hurrying through the city Wendy noticed such athletic ability. She didn’t need to worry about leaving her behind. When they were merely yards from the mechanical tower, June was ready to land on one of its legs, and Wendy up the side. “WAAAAH!” They both were bounced off by an invisible forcefield.

“Nuisances, I’m sorry to say,” Gruntilda began, “that you won’t be getting in that way. My shield is endlessly flowing. So off with you, I must get going!”

“June, watch out!” Wendy ran by and pulled her friend to safety before a metal claw crushed her. She carried June and ran all the way back to the others. “It has a shield around it!”

“We saw.” Carla said worriedly. “And we’ll never be able to order an evacuation from something the town can’t see.”

“I’m going to try.” Facilier aimed his cane. “Reducto! Reducto!” He fired several Destructive Spells, seeing the barrier flash on, but left unpenetrated. “Expelliarmus! Disablo!” More spells, the barrier stayed. “Darn!”

“One silly cane isn’t going to work!” Ah-Mah stated. “You’d need a wand that can penetrate a shield like that. I believe the store sells a Lamia Scale, but you can’t just-”

“M-Miss Ah-Mah!” Wendy spoke eagerly, raising the wand from her shorts. “You mean this Lamia Scale?”

“Harry Potter’s Hairnet, how long did ya have that?” Monroe asked with surprise.

“Let me see.” Ah-Mah took the pink wand and studied it. “Ah-ha... made of rose quartz, scale from Lamia for a core. Great with support-type magic, as well as breaking defenses. Or so I’ve heard.” She returned it to Wendy. “Where did you get this?”

“From the store you mentioned. It just…” Wendy glanced at it, wondering how to phrase it, “felt right with me, I guess.”

“Wendy, can you do a Disabling Charm?” Facilier asked. “Just jab your wand and say, ‘Disablo.’”

“I’ll try!” With a confident look, Wendy raced toward the tower again, leaping atop a tree. “DISABLO!” She shot the spell, a tiny hole briefly appeared in the barrier, but refilled in less than a second.

“These pesky worms are annoying me!” Grunty yelled. “I’ll send my minions to get rid of thee!”

Gruntydactyls and Uggers were dropped out of hatches in the tower, phasing through the forcefield. Uggers – short green monsters with big mouths and strong fists – performed terrific leaps in attempt to smash Wendy, but she raced back to the others. “What is it THIS time?” Carla asked.

Wendy panted for breath. “I almost broke through, but it repairs itself. I could only make a little hole.”
“How little, exactly?” Monroe asked.

“I dunno. About maybe this big.” She held her hands partly away from her body.

“Carla, if you could fly the two of us in there, we could stop the tower from the inside.”

“Well, I can’t think of any other options.” the cat figured.

“Could you really stop it by yourselves?” Wendy asked.

“We could at least find a way to stop the barrier so you and June could get in. But there’s also a matter of keeping it open long enough.”

“Wait, the Lamia Scale is strong with support magic.” Monroe recalled. “Perhaps Wendy can increase June’s strength to weaken the shield.”

“Can she do that?” June asked.

“Course she can, she’s mah girl!” Facilier patted Wendy’s back, the girl blushing worriedly. “I may have to give her a jumpstart lesson, though. Sonny, Donna, try to slow down that tower!!”

“WE’RE ON IT!” The Ice Climbers skied through the forest on ice paths, evasively dodging every tree en route to the tower. They shot ice beams at Gruntydactyls and dodged Uggers’ smashes, bashing the big-mouths with their hammers. The twins reunited a few yards from the tower and clapped hands together. “Now we’ll show you-!” Sonny began as they channeled their combined Ice Chi.

“-that the twin conquerors of ice-!” Donna continued, a circle of frost forming on the ground.

“-CONTROL THE VERY LANDSCAPE!” And from the ground, an iceberg sprouted up, stretching half as tall as the tower. The Cauldron Keep stopped as Grunty looked confused.

“Strange occurrences are taking place. They aren’t slowing down my race. Mortar cannons, make my day. Cease these delays and clear the way!” Hatches opened on the tower, blasting mortar cannons at the iceberg. Sonny and Donna sprouted another one a few yards further, another on Grunty’s left, then the right.

“Do you got it, Wendy?” Facilier asked, after instructing her.

“Um…” Wendy looked nervously at June, “Maybe you should do it, Mr. Facilier.”

“I like to give children gifts, but my cane ain’t ‘supportive.’ You heard what Jasmine said, just do it like this!” He performed the wand movement.

“Come on, Wendy, you can do it!” June declared with a pumped-up expression, balling her fists.

“Okay.” Wendy focused on June, waved her wand in a circle above herself, then “ARMS!” she zapped a spell on June’s arms, then again on her legs.

June stared as both body parts glowed, and she felt power course within her. “Huhu, THIS is what I’m talkin’ about!” She smirked eagerly. “Let’s TRASH this tower, Wendy!” Both girls bolted through the forest. Uggers punched the bases of trees and caused them to topple in their path, but June used her enhanced strength to punch the trees away, and Wendy ran off a slanted ramp-like rock to go into the air and kick off the swarm of Gruntydactyls. They arrived at one of the Ice Climbers’ icebergs, ran up, and flew to the tower as June readied a punch, and Wendy called,
“DISABLO!”

A larger hole was broken open, but the girls still hit the barrier and were blown back over the iceberg. They ran away before Gruntilda destroyed the ice. Sonny and Donna quickly froze the ground around the tower, hoping to make its legs slip. “Huff, huff. This is too much work for us.” The twins chorused. “Especially in summer.”

“Wendy, try to do that again!” Carla yelled, flying while carrying Monroe.

“Okay! You ready, June?”

“Ready!” The Chinese girl leapt for a mighty kick against the barrier, Wendy shot a Disabling Charm, with narrow maneuvering, Carla flew herself and Monroe through the barrier —“AAAAH!” They were blown back and out.

“Good gravy!” Monroe grunted, rubbing his sore back after landing. “The barrier repels anything that’s a few inches inside! We’ll have to get inside the tower BEFORE it fixes itself!”

“But I don’t see any openings!” Wendy yelled. “Except maybe up by that cannon.”

“Let’s run back to Dr. Facilier!” June said, so the girls returned through the forest, carrying their respective pets. They found the witch-doctor again, “Mr. Facilier, me and Wendy need to break an opening—”

“Monroe, is it safe for him to be doing that?” Facilier asked, gesturing with his thumb. June and Monroe gaped: Ray Ray was slowly guiding a Racatan by dropping chips on the ground.

The giant brown rat had a mellow expression as it sniffed each treat and munched. “I’ll have to keep you a secret from June and Monroe for a while, but they’ll be comfortable in time, so don’t worry—”

“RAY RAY!” The boy flinched at Monroe’s shout. “What in Dumbledore’s name are ya DOING, Lad?! The town is in danger and you’re trying to tame a feral BEAST!”

“He’s not feral! Marvin’s a good monster, aren’t you?” He gently petted Racatan’s head.

“Wendy, what’s up with the barrier now?” Facilier asked.

“Um, we need to break an opening in the tower, too, otherwise they can’t get in.”

Raising a brow, Facilier looked at the Racatan. “Say no more!” He smirked. “Uncle Facilier’s got this!” Fearlessly, the witch-doctor ran up to the creature, jumped high, and landed atop the Racatan’s head, planting his long shoes against its sides. He clutched his cane in his teeth, hands folded above his head, and he began to sway his head.

A fast, mystical music started playing, a banjo-like strumming one would hear down the bayou. The Racatan’s eyes turned colorful and spinning, bright colorful, sharply-drawn designs spiraled around him: the Racatan was hypnotized. “RAAAAHH!” He stood on his hind-legs and roared, then began jigging his hip to the tune. On all fours, Racatan started dashing to the tower. “Wendy, cast that charm on his head!” he yelled quickly, then resumed jigging to control the creature.

Quickly, Wendy ran to keep ahead of him, watching Racatan tear through puny Uggers and trees. “Arms!” Wendy got in front, shot the spell at its head, and moved aside. June caught up with her, holding Carla and Monroe, releasing the animals before hurrying to Facilier. It was then they noticed an oddly-designed part of the tower’s front—a sealed drawbridge, and the Racatan was going for it. June leapt, punched that part of barrier, Wendy shot Disablo, and Facilier jumped off the enhanced Racatan, who broke a larger hole, rammed the drawbridge with its horns, and it fell open before the rat flew out.

Wendy and June pierced the barrier again, Carla and Monroe flew in, past the drawbridge, and weren’t forced back out. They caught their breath after landing on the metal floor. Giant gears and up/down pumps were inside. “Well, we’re in.” Carla said. “Do you have any plans? We are only animals after all.”

“And yet, you’re a catch. Ay may look like a filthy mongrel to you, but I can do magic.” Monroe pulled a brown stick wand with a blue gem at its top out of his satchel. “Reducto!” He blasted at a gear, but it went undamaged. “What?! Is this place magically protected from the inside?”

“HIEEEE!” Guvnors spotted them, pink-skinned Gruntlings wearing yellow plumber jumpsuits, wielding large wrenches. Carla Torpedo Spun and knocked them away, and some tried to whack her in the air, leaving Monroe to stun them with spells. The cat regrouped with the dog and said, “We at least have to stop this thing from moving. These pumps obviously control the legs, judging by their movement.”

“You just saw, Lass, my spells bounce off this machinery!” Monroe reminded.

“We have to try, come on!” Carla carried Monroe over to a pump. She watched the device shift up and down. “Is there a spell to loosen bolts or something?”

“What good would that do?”

“It’s basic engineering, nuts and bolts keep machines together. What, does your magic not teach you that?”

“Fine, ya brain the size of a gopher! Spinneroo!” Monroe held his wand forward, whirled it in a close circle quickly, and zapped a screw, it spun rapidly and came out. “It worked!”

“Keep it up!” Carla smiled eagerly. Monroe repeated the spell and spun each screw and bolt from its latch. The tower shook and tilted, so the animals moved on to the next pump, then the others.

Wendy, June, and the others gaped with joy when the tower’s mechanical claws faltered. The structure threatened to topple over any second. “I knew those legs were no good!” Gruntilda declared. “That’s why I had THESE under the hood!” And to everyone’s shock and horror, bulldozer-like tracks appeared from its bottom sides. It continued its drive to Orchid Bay.

“BLAST IT ALL!” Monroe swore. “Ugh, we have to find the barrier generator!”

“What’s that area up there?” Carla asked, pointing at a small opening on the ceiling.

“Let’s check it out.” Monroe put his wand away and allowed Carla to fly them into the hatch. He grabbed his wand and blasted the Guvnors senseless, and they felt an invisible force through the air as they made it to a central chamber. A gigantic magnet was strapped to a machine, whose large mechanical pipes transmitted energy from it through the walls. “Gryffindor’s Ghost! She must be using the magnet’s repellant energy to make the barrier.”

“Do you know any fire-type spells? You can spin the magnet’s electrons out of control and-”

“Ay at least know how a MAGNET works, Bookworm! Sigh, Ay just hope this works.” Monroe whirled his wand and yelled, “Ventus Tria Incendio!” A huge, flaming whirlwind sprouted from the wand and set fire to the magnet. The machine sparked and began to falter.
The girls watched from outside when the barrier flashed and disappeared completely. “Now’s our chance, Wendy!” June exclaimed as they both ran up the track-wheels and leapt into the drawbridge entrance. The girls threw spells and punches at each Gruntling on their way up the tower. Going up stairs was no problem for Wendy’s speed and June’s athletic jumping. In no time, the girls made it into a chamber with a giant machine, attached to a laser cannon that aimed out of the window. “This must be it. You ready to make scrap of this thing, Wendy?” June spoke readily.

“I sure am!” Wendy clutched her wand tight. “Just name a spot and we’ll-”

A glass capsule suddenly encased the girls. June punched and kicked it, but left nary a crack. “What the heck?!” A crane lifted their capsule up through the ceiling, and they soon found their selves on the roof.

“Surprise, surprise, what have we here?” They both gasped: Gruntilda was seated in the cockpit of a digger with a giant drill. “Two beautiful little dears! I’ll save and keep you nice and fresh. When I’m revived, I’ll have your beauty and flesh!” Gruntilda locked onto the girls, intending to hit their capsule with a missile (if they get too damaged, she can repair their bodies later).

June frantically bashed the glass. “Know any good spells, Wendy?!”

“No, but I have an idea.” Wendy lifted her shirt and grabbed her Chi Stabilizers. “I’m sorry in advance if I hurt you. Please, hold onto these.” She peeled the stickers off and passed them to her friend. Wendy huffed and blew a powerful gust of wind, pushing June against the glass, it became harder to breathe the more Wendy blew. Unable to withstand the pressure, the glass shattered, and June was blown against the glass dome surrounding the roof while Wendy dodged the missile.

Gruntilda grunted in anger, but then began to feel the tower sway. “Meeeh? The wind has picked up outside. The unsteady ground makes this an unsafe ride. Right here is where I’ll park. When B.O.B. finishes charging, this land will go dark!”

With that, Cauldron keep stopped and parked tight on the current ground. The wind continued to shift the rotatable tower as the cannon charged a sickly green laser. The whole of Orchid Bay was targeted, save for having to move toward the center over and over because of the wind.

“Crud! We’ll never be able to stop that cannon in time!” June yelled. Grunty’s Hag 1 drill was currently spinning in place, forcing the girls to jump its extracted lasers.

Wendy felt a rising ill feeling in her stomach. She felt the tower turning left-and-right. “No, but if I can get outside, I could make it fire someplace else.” With that, Wendy boosted and began running along the side of the dome in circles. “Try to get me up here, Bonehead! …If that’s some kind of physical condition of yours, I’m sorry for offending, I’m not good at taunting.”

“Way to scare her, Wendy.” June remarked sarcastically, lazily dodging lasers.

“At least I don’t have a gut!” Grunty shook with anger. “I’ll shoot you down, you little mutt!” She loaded another missile, trying to lock the speeding girl in her sights. Grunting, she fired, and a hole was broken in the glass.

Thinking quickly, Wendy ran out the hole, shifted her sideways body the opposite way, and ran on the side of the dome before stopping at the top. “Please let this work!” Holding her arms forward and open, Wendy spun in place, channeling the wind to follow her. A light tornado was forming around the top of the tower, the cannon couldn’t focus itself on the town. Facilier, Ray Ray, and the twins watched from afar, feeling anxious as the green light grew brighter on the cannon’s tip. But as the wind kept blowing, the direction was averted away from the town at a near 88 degrees.
The Big-O-Blaster fired, and a large area of forest was turned black and lifeless. The laser ceased after all of it was extinguished.

“ALL RIIIIIGHT!” Facilier cheered, Ray Ray leaped, the twins high-fived. “THAT’S mah girl!”

Wendy stopped spinning, feeling both relieved and dizzy. Before she could contemplate if she hit any animals or travelers, she lost balance and fell over the dome. “I got you!” Carla caught the child under her arms in her paws.

“Thanks, Carla.” Wendy smiled weakly, with a desire to throw up. The kitten flew her back inside the dome.

“NO NO no!” Gruntilda cried. “My target missed! You girls have gotten me really pissed! I’ll charge again and have your town gone! Just as soon as I HAVE WON!” The witch whirled her arms, conjuring a pink and powerful sphere of energy above her. She focused on June and BKKOOM, a sudden pink bolt of lightning shot every second, the Te Xuan Ze evasively avoided.

“Carla… h-help June…” Wendy spoke dizzily.

“How do you expect me to…?” Carla focused on Gruntilda, observing her spell: the energy ball started small, increased in size, fired a lightning bolt, then repeated from small size. Carla let Wendy lean against the dome, and with careful timing, the winged cat Torpedo Spun and bonked the witch.

“ACK!” Gruntilda stumbled, looking angrily at Carla, but- “DAAAAAH! The spell! I dropped it!” She panicked when the energy sphere hit the floor of her cockpit, still increasing in size. “Bears, birds, cats, dogs, I HATE TALKING ANIMAAAAALS!”

June leapt, grabbed Carla, grabbed Wendy over her shoulder, and leaped out of the dome’s hole, dropping toward the drawbridge where Monroe stood. She landed, the dog hopped on her back, and June made terrific leaps across the forest as the tower trembled. They regrouped with their friends near Ah-Mah’s house, and witnessed Cauldron Keep’s final moments. The top of the tower vanished in a pink explosion.

“EEEEH-EEEEH-EEEEH-EEEEEEHHH!” Gruntilda’s chubby figure flew across the sky toward town like a shooting star, leaving a trail of smoke. Somewhere in the city, they don’t know where, she crashed. What remained of Cauldron Keep fell to its side thanks to the wind. (End song.)

“WE DID IT, WE DID IT!” Sonny and Donna jumped and belly-bumped.

“THAT WAS SO AWESOME!” Ray Ray ’fived the twins as well. “We saved the day! And it’s all thanks to me and Marvin!” He looked at his tamed Racatan, who was still woozy in the head.

“Aye, but we would have been toast if not for that whirlwind.” Monroe said. “That’s some crazy airbending you have, girl.”

“I know, it kicked BUTT!” June hugged Wendy—her still-enhanced fists crushed her back.

“Whoops. Sorry.”

“It’s okay.” She replied with a forced, dizzy smile. Facilier cast a spell to turn off June’s fists. “Oh, and you might want these back.” June remembered, handing Wendy her Stabilizers. She stuck them back onto her waist.

That’s when Ah-Mah ran to them in a hurry. “Grandma, you MISSED it!” Ray Ray exclaimed.
“That tower had a shield, but Marvin ran up to it like DONG, then the cannon was gonna fire, but the whirlwind went bwoo bwoo bwoo bwoo, and then it—”

“Which way did that cannon fire?!” Ah-Mah yelled with anger.

Wendy’s heart started, recovering from her dizziness. “I-It shot that way.” She pointed, though they couldn’t see the ruined region through the trees. “I wanted to aim it away from town, s-so I picked a part of forest.”

“Ah-Mah, what’s wrong?” June asked.

The elder sighed, pinching between her eyes. “No, it wasn’t your fault, dear, you had no other option.”

“W-What wasn’t my fault?” Wendy asked, feeling her pride shift to sadness.

“I just watched the news. There’s a widespread panic from monsters appearing around town. None of you could have known, but… the place where that cannon fired had one of the Veil’s power stones stationed there!”

Wendy gasped loudly. “S-So that means…?”

The screaming reached their ears in seconds. Everyone bolted toward town. Humans were running and screaming from the clear-as-day monsters, and monsters were running from humans that tried to kill them. People jumped out of windows, wrecked cars, Orchid Bay had never seen this much chaos. GUN jeeps and copters swarmed in, furiously blasting machineguns at the demons while trying to round the humans into safety.

“This is awful!” Wendy cried. “What have I done?!”

“Don’t blame yourself, Child, you saved the town!” Carla stated.

“But look what’s happening! This town’ll end up destroying itself!”

“That’s not gonna be our problem now.” Facilier informed. “If we don’t get outta here, we may have more than GUN troops to deal with.”

“I’m going into town to try to get things under control.” Ah-Mah declared, running off. “June, Monroe, come with me.” They ran to join her-

“JUNE, wait!” Wendy grabbed the girl’s shoulder.

“What is it?”

“June, the Veil’s down! This means you can go!” At this, June put on a look of realization. “You can come with us if you want! You can help work at Facilier’s shop, and we can go on adventures together!”

June actually contemplated for a moment. Wendy looked really eager for her decision. June turned back to Ray, Monroe, and Ah-Mah, all looking expectant. …June shook her head. “Wendy, I can’t go now. These people need a Te Xuan Ze more than ever!”

“But… But you’ve always wanted to be free. Didn’t you?”

“Of course I do.” June smiled comfortably, touching her friend’s shoulder. “But it just can’t be. This… This is my responsibility. But it’s alright, because I still have friends and family here.
Maybe not during summer, but…”

Wendy looked down sadly. “I understand. But… could I come visit you again?”

“Let’s hope so!” June punched her chest. “But if you do, be able to take a punch!” Wendy smiled and chuckled.

“Everyone in the Apparizone, kids!” Facilier yelled, hugging the twins, Carla, and Wendy to him. “We’re goin’!” In a flash, they were gone from the Lees’ view. Wendy felt her stomach compress, the world spinning in this Apparition.

She landed on her front on the alleyway ground. They were in front of Facilier’s shop. The witch-doctor unlocked the door as Wendy stood, holding her cramped and twisted stomach. “M-Mr. Facilier? C-Could I have another Troia Charm?”

Facilier sighed. “A Troia Charm loses its appeal on the same person if used too much. Just tough it out, Wendy, we’ll save them when it’s important.”

Carla helped escort Wendy into the shop as the child held her tummy. She seized the chance to sit down at the table, awaiting the barf that would never come. “You never even had breakfast.” Facilier chuckled. “I’ll cook you something to eat.” He patted her back. “You deserve it, girl.”

She gave a weak smile, hunched over and holding her stomach. Carla stood in front and smiled proudly. “You did an amazing job today, Wendy. That town would’ve been doomed without you.”

“It’s kind of doomed thanks to me, too.” the girl reminded.

“It isn’t your fault that those hooligans can’t control their selves.” Carla stated with a disapproving scowl for Orchid Bay’s citizens. “You should be very proud of yourself.”

Wendy reflected on their trip. Carla was right. Wendy made a new friend, and helped her save the town, using her own skills. For the first time, she felt like she helped people. A real accomplishment. She was very proud. “…Hey, Carla? I’m really sorry about what I said.” She frowned.

“You’re still holding on to that? I’m not upset, Wendy.”

“But I shouldn’t have said that. You’re one of the only friends I have, Carla, and you’re in the same boat as me. I don’t want things to be weird between us.”

“I forgive you, Child. And, I’m sorry… if I looked at you strangely.” Carla frowned and turned away. “I don’t know what about your eyes scares me. Perhaps it is because they make you look like a monster.” She looked up at Wendy, “So if I show distaste in your eyes for any reason, it is because you are not actually a monster, you are a very kind girl who never deserved any curse or treatment as if you were one. Those red eyes of yours are very misleading for what’s inside. Is that alright with you, Wendy?”

“Heheh. It is, Carla.” Wendy reached under her shorts and picked up her Lamia Scale. “My first wand… I hope my parents are proud of me.”

Facilier brought Wendy some tea to settle her stomach, giving some to Carla, too. He set steak and mashed potatoes on the table for the three kids to eat, and a cooked fish for Carla (she felt oddly repulsed while eating it), revitalizing after an exhausting day. “Mister Facilier?” Wendy spoke, after her sickness died down. “Um… I really wanted to thank you for…for helping me today. You were an excellent teacher.”
“Mah pleasure, Wendy.” The witch-doctor smiled, reorganizing items on the shelves. “You’re an excellent student.”

“Thanks.” She smiled back, not lifting her head up. “…Sniff.”

Carla saw her red eyes trembling. “What’s the matter, Wendy?” At this, Facilier and the Climbers looked over as well.

“N-Nothing.” Wendy tried to repress her tears. “I-It’s just… ever since I began working here, I’ve never felt more happy. I was all alone for my whole life. When I hurt Lee Andrew by mistake, I thought I would never make another friend. But then Mister and Mrs. Facilier came, a-and then I found Carla… sniff.”

“We all know the story, Wendy.” Facilier chuckled lightly. “You don’t have to keep refreshing it.”

“But if I hadn’t met you, I…I would be all alone.” A sniffle. “And I just don’t think… I could’ve survived on my own. S-So it’s really nice to know that… I matter to someone.” Her tears were falling. “Mister Facilier… thank you for giving me a home. I’m sorry if I’m whining too much, or if I give you a hard time, or if I’m-”

The witch-doctor got to his knees and hugged the child close. He was so tall that his head was still inches over the seated girl. “Not at all, Wendy. If I wasn’t under your daddy’s orders, I would’ve adopted you. No child deserves to go through what you did.”

Another sniffle. “I really wanna believe that… my parents had a good reason for leaving me. After all of this, if my parents don’t want me back… will you let me stay here?”

“Of course, Wendy, everyone needs a home to come back to.”

“Do you promise?” Wendy asked with a sniffle. “’C-Cause, I don’t wanna make things hard for you, I-I just don’t wanna be abandoned again. Before I met you, I always thought my parents left me ‘cause I was a burden, a-and I didn’t matter to them at all.”

“Wendy, don’t say such a thing.” Carla stated. “If anything, your parents should have kept you to begin with. You’re a delightful child.”

“Hah hah, no she isn’t!” Facilier had to laugh at that comment. “You’re an imperfect child, Wendy. That’s why you’re perfect.”

“CONTRADICTORY!” Sonny and Donna exclaimed, clamping Wendy’s shoulders from the sides.

“I can’t disagree with you, Harvey.” Carla shrugged, hugging Wendy’s legs. “But you really need to stop crying, Child.”

She calmed down. Wendy felt a warmth in her heart. Mr. Facilier, Sonny, Donna, Carla… she always wondered what having friends or family would feel like. …It was the greatest feeling ever. “Sniff… thanks, guys.” Facilier used a napkin to wipe her tears off. She forced a smile and chuckle, “I’m sorry for making this too dramatic. I’ll try to control myself, I promise.”

“I know you will, Child.” Facilier sat up, patting her shoulder. “How ‘bout you take a nap after supper? I think all of us need a rest after all that.”

So after their bellies were full, they climbed the ladder to the bedroom. Sonny and Donna threw off their coats and settled comfortably, and Wendy took off her shoes before getting under the covers.
Carla laid on Wendy’s chest. “Carla… Mr. Facilier keeps mentioning my dad, but… what do you think my mom was like?”

Carla thought for a minute as she was getting comfortable. “In my personal opinion, she should’ve been the proudest mother in the world.”

Orchid Bay

Humans and demons were screaming and running everywhere. June, Ray Ray, and Monroe stood in the middle of the chaos, looking around frantically. “Monroe, can’t we use one of those wide-range Memory Staffs?!” June yelled.

“You know we can’t use that without affecting the whole world!” Monroe replied. “Besides, it won’t be long now. Any moment, the Magic Council will-”

Storm clouds appeared in the sky. At first, June thought of Wendy’s wind curse. However, a cyan light shone through the clouds. A bright ray of light burst through the center and struck the ground. Everybody turned and stared with awe and worry.

A troupe of fairy soldiers appeared, and their commander, a huge, muscular fairy with a green sleeveless shirt and camouflage pants. “CITIZENS OF ORCHID BAY!” his thick German voice echoed. “This town is under restricted protection by the Avalaran Magic Council! I am Jorgen von Strangle, toughest fairy in the universe, and until this city is repaired to working order, you all will be sealed within a Fairy Sphere. Furthermore, we will wipe everyone’s memories of these events.” He held up a small, pink bar with a light. “But first, the culprits who destroyed the Veil must be punished. No one is to move or leave town until we find them!”

Two fairies with strict expressions carried Gruntilda to him, dropping her on the ground. Jorgen towered over the witch imposingly. “I was involved, I will admit!” she spoke defensively. “But the whole punishment, I should not get!” She looked around, then grabbed a fallen wanted poster, showing it to him. “This girl with hair as blue as sea! She blew up my tower and destroyed the Veil, not me!”

Jorgen picked up the poster and glared at it. A girl with deep blue hair and red eyes, passing a brief glance at her photographer. He heard her name before.

“Ollivander, for the last time,” Jorgen told the shop owner not too long ago, “the only leetle girl who can hold the Fairy’s Tail is the Fairy Princess herself! You tell this ‘Windy Marvel’ that if she wants a wand, she will have to settle with a Pony’s Tail, or perhaps twin Pig’s Tails,” he smirked witfully, “for puny leetle girls like her. Ha! Ha ha ha! Ha!”

Jorgen squeezed the poster angrily. “BINKY!”

“Yes, Jorgen!” A very short fairy with purple garb, pointy ears, and a bald head saluted frightfully.

“Report this girl to Princess Mavis.” He gave Binky the crumpled poster. “Tell her to add extra security around the Fairy’s Tail. This girl must be aiming to retrieve it by any means necessary. GO NOW!!” The earth shook.

“YES SIR!” Binky poofed away.

With that, Jorgen clutched his giant King Wand in both hands, raising it skyward. “Until the Veil has returned, you are all under my protection. I now initiate: FAIRY SPHERE!” A golden beam of light blasted to the heavens, stopped high above the city, and swallowed the whole bay inside of a golden ball. The waves washed furiously, the entire sphere shone brighter and brighter. Then…
Orchid Bay disappeared. The seaside road led nowhere but an empty enclosing within the landscape.

Miles away from the city, miles above the air, the red-eyed stranger in the blowing black cloak smirked. “Well done… Wendy. You served this town well. Do not feel discouraged. Orchid Bay will yet have its freedom. And once the Fairy’s Tail is in your possession… we will be rid of the walls between worlds.” He became the wind and blew away.

Negaverse; EiznekCm Household

Nerehc landed in the front yard of his house with Egroeg and AlyakAm in tow. “I sent a text message to my girlfriend.” He told the siblings. “So expect a sudden Apparition. 3… 2… 1…”

“DISRESPECT!” Neither of the three were startled by the witch’s sudden appearance. “What can I do for my boy toy today?” Sipa asked with a bright smile.

“These two wanna meet their Positives.” Nerehc replied, gesturing the gloomy-faced duo. “I’m not sure if Cheren’s in his room, so I need you to open a portal if he isn’t.”

“Okay, sure.” Sipa shrugged. “Think I’ll chat up my own Positive while we’re there. Tell her that I’m a changed person!” She raised her arms happily.

“The other day, you magically switched a person’s face with their butt.” Nerehc reminded as they entered the house. He heard a pot boiling in the kitchen, so assumed his mother was there.

“For poetic justice reasons.” His girlfriend contradicted. They made it to Nerehc’s room and faced his mirror. Sipa jiggled her wand and called, “Dimentio Flippow.”

The mirror became a portal to the Posiverse. “Now remember guys, you’re allowed to cause mayhem in their world, just let people know who you really are after a while.” Nerehc instructed.

“Of course.” AlyakAm replied. “We’ll take it to our hearts like Numbness Serum.”

“Now, I’m not sure if Cheren’s people are still uncomfortable with the Apocalypse, so just-” Nerehc and Sipa were stabbed in the hips by syringes. They both collapsed on the floor, unconscious.

“I must say, it is quite fun drugging people.” Egroeg said as he and his sister entered the vortex.

“Do not try anything to me.” AlyakAm told him. “I’ve memorized all techniques and can drug you during your breath.”

Somewhere dark (Play “Old Doll” from Mad Father.)

“Nnnnmm…” Nerehc still felt numb in every part of his body as he woke up. It was pitch-black in here, so he took off his sunglasses to see. “Where am I… Hello? Sipa? Egroeg? AlyakAm?”

The padding of sandaled footsteps against the floor rang across the space. Nerehc saw the girl emerge. Aquamarine hair, a dress depicting a shadowed graveyard under a night sky with yellow moon, and a wide mouth and purple eyes that gave Nerehc the chills. Her face was in stitches, and had a dark-pink coat with a burned crown attached to the lowered hood. She held a doll of himself. “Hello, Nerehc!”

The boy raised a brow. “Um… hi?”
“It’s nice to meet you!” Her peppy attitude was clearly forced. “My name is Ragus. This is you. Isn’t you pretty?” She grinned and held his doll by both arms.

“Are you a fan of me?”

“Not me, in particular. But my master is! She’s an exceptional fan of yours. Her name is Medusa!”

“Oh. You mean like the Positive Asudem?”

“Well, Asudem is a myth. Medusa is real. Lots of things are real, actually. Like the end of the world.”

“You mean the Apocalypse.”

“Yes. You must know the story. The Goddess of Light, Palutena, is responsible for finding the Seven Lights. Medusa, Goddess of Darkness, however… must seek the Darknesses.”

“Yeah, what’s your point?”

She glided closer to him, not moving her legs. Her wide, creepy face was inches from his. “Medusa needs people to find the Darknesses. She can’t physically do it herself. Gods cannot interfere with mortal affairs, even under doomsday. That’s why… she’s asking you.”

“But Sanula told me the Positives were going to find all the Keys.”

“That’s not true. All the Keys are Positives… but only you Negatives can help us find some of them. Because since the beginning, your kind has bathed in darkness. It should therefore be up to you to seek the Darknesses.”

“Things have changed, Ragus. I’m changing the Negaverse into one with light. You can tell Medusa that.”

“She very well knows. But Nerehc… surely you all want to survive. Lady Medusa wishes to find the Darknesses. She wishes to help you. I can take you to her. But only if you promise to do everything she says.”

“And what if I don’t? What if I don’t go with you?”

She stayed silent for a second, her head slanted sideways. “Then… your world is doomed. You can try to figure everything out… but not without a goddess’s hand.”

Nerehc looked at her thoughtfully. “…She would really help? Help save everybody?”

“Of course. Medusa loves mortals.”

Nerehc wasn’t sure what to say. …Clearly, this was some kind of dream, he and Sipa were just knocked out. Still, it could also be a vision. Just how far was Cheren in finding the Lights—they only had a month until summer really began, could they locate twenty people in time? “…Alright.” Nerehc decided. “I’ll see what she has to offer. But I expect her to help us make progress.”

Ragus grinned wide. “Thank you, Nerehc! Lady Medusa appreciates it!”

She took Nerehc’s right (dominant) hand and plopped her doll onto it. She closed her eyes and glowed blue with energy, much to Nerehc’s fright. “…Wh-Wh-WHOOOOOOOAAAAA!” Nerehc shone brightly, Ragus’s grin looked more vicious in the light. A soul-sweeping sensation overcame him. The darkness turned white.
The moment it all disappeared, Nerehc fell. Ragus looked down at him with her grin. …He slowly stood up. Never had Nerehc been more calm. …He opened his sharp, snakelike green eyes, smiling wickedly. “Thank you… Ragus.”

“My pleasure… Lady Medusa.” The Nerehc doll dangled lifeless and motionlessly from Ragus’s hand.

These Side Stories chapters actually are pretty short sometimes. It’s only three story arcs to focus on, depending if I wanna show certain arcs in which chapters. Besides, I won’t be able to work on this as much anyway, college started for me again, so I’ll be doing lots of art stuff. Well, next time in the Side Stories, some Negaverse and Augustus, then 3,000 words of Wendy napping, nah I’m just kidding. X) Give the little Cry Mage a break. Later.
Chapter Summary

Sector IC make it to Arendelle Castle and meet Queen Elsa.

What better fitting chapter for it to happen than the 10th?

Chapter 10: Let It Go

Midway Peak

7pm was finally here, and the Excess Express finally arrived at Midway Gala, taking place upon a balcony on a mountain that towered miles above the ocean below; so high one could almost see where the Earth curved round. The Corporate Presidents and their children all stepped off to join. Many rich types in powdery wigs and uniforms sat at curtained tables and socialized. Mom was the last one to step off, walking awkwardly. The other presidents passed this off as the result of her injury, but that wasn’t the case. “Nnn! Keep up, you little brat!” she hissed under her breath.

Cheren squatted low and walked with Mom under her dress, feeling very awkward about his position. He took a very light peek through the front, glancing up as the mountain seemed to go forever. “Mom? Where are we, exactly?” he whispered.

Mom glanced around to see no one was close enough. “This is just one floor of the Holy Ground, Mt. Mariejoa. It’s the tallest mountain in the world, and the World Government’s ultimate headquarters. At the very base of this mountain is Enies Lobby, the base of the Teen Ninjas and the secret assassin group, CP10.”

“Enies Lobby, I’ve heard of that. The Sea Train from Water 7 goes there.”

“The government specially ordered their skilled carpenters to build the track there a long time ago. But they’re just small time. We’re at the Midway Peak, which is the Corporate Presidents’ main base, and where the Head President lives. And the very top of the mountain rests the World Leaders’ castle. The mountain was modeled after the Sky and Spear Pillars, and it’s said this used to belong to the Light Goddess, Palutena. I dunno how the World Leaders could’ve occupied it.”

Cheren glanced around further, and took notice of a familiar, puffy-haired blonde girl in a green dress, standing by her lonesome. “Carol!”

“What?” Mom asked.

“Huh? Oh, not you, it’s someone my friends know.”

“Hmph.” She glanced at the girl. “Small world.”

Mom stepped over to a table as Cheren crept under its curtain. “Now just stay out of sight until the Head President appears. And when she does, kill her.” She spoke with a grim look. She walked away casually as Cheren remained in place. Killing the top head in front of so many rich, powerful types… this was Cheren’s hardest mission, yet. But… he would see it through.
Cheren glanced under the curtain and found Doflamingo’s daughter, Sugar standing by the railing and viewing the horizon. The gentle wind breezed past her hair and coat as she played a calm, peaceful tune on a small leaf. It eased Cheren’s mind from the mission… until Sugar stopped after 30 seconds.

Hendry Middle School

Hendry Middle School. A fortress that’s been through many trials throughout the years. Even though it was destroyed almost 21 years ago, and newly rebuilt 15 years ago. It was the perfect hideout for Teen Ninjas. They posed as “Hall Monitors” to the teachers, in just really fancy outfits, but any kid outside the school would know their true purpose. “Hey Slider, you got a date for the Summer Dance, yet?” a ninja patrolling the roof asked.

“Nah, but I’m thinkin’ of asking Nya, she’s got a nice bod. Only other guy she likes is her cousin. Whadda ‘bout you?”

“That Tracy girl is cute, I think her dad was even-”

“Snot-nosed twerps off the southern gate! Repeat, SNOTTY kids approaching the south gate!”

The duo scrambled to get some binoculars and view the small sea of bikes and trikes zooming to their school. “READY the Fountain Cannons! Load the Footbombs and NEXT PERSON THAT TOUCHES MY IPOD’S GETTIN’ THEIR HEAD RUN THROUGH!”

High-tech Teen bikes came zooming out of the school as the child bikes started blasting tennisballs against the Teens’ wheels, and banana peels at their windshields, causing them to swerve away and crash. The bikes in the back rows dropped streams of marbles that caused any Teen attempting to turn back to crash as well. “Look out! Here come the Jets!” cried the Second Grade President, Richard Teague in his nasally voice, as a storm of football-players with jetshoes flew overhead, wielding deadly Footbombs. “Soooper Spitballers, FIRRRRE!” He and a team of kids grabbed straws and began shooting a barrage of spitballs. Despite their small and feeble-looking appearance, they destroyed each Footbomb in one hit upon impact. “Hah hah! Hasta la vista, Dum-Dums!”

“Yeah, but what’re we gonna do about the Sumo Squad?” asked Third Grade President, Leon Anderson Sobs, the miserable goth leader. Ahead were rows of chubby teenagers in nothing but underwear, “HUR, HUR, HUR.” stomping forward and erecting great stone walls from the street.

“Those cowardly earthbenders!” yelled Richard. “Well, we’ll stomp ‘em! GET ‘EM, Bull-Blockers!” Here came a team of huge bulldozers made entirely of blocks, for those children studied from Joey Beatles to perfect them to near-realistic. They tore down the earth walls like actual machinery, letting the trikes charge forward and ram the sumos’ toes.

Hurriedly following behind the army of kids, Berry Bean and Lilac Farley rushed on all fours with their passengers onboard. “Why are we breaking into this school again?” Berry asked Rupert, who was in her right cat-ear.

“Cause they think they kidnapped Shelly and Jessie so we gotta look for them first. If they aren’t there, we have to warn ‘em somehow.”

“Kay, but we gotta take you back home after this.”

“Ulp… I’d really not rather my dad see me like this.”

“Well moms are scarier, and they’re on your side. You won’t need to worry.”
The werecats rushed to the right of the school as Berry pounced and slashed an air duct clean open, quickly crawling through as a quartet of clangs echoed from her hands and boots banging the metal. She slashed open another duct and dropped in, hearing Lilac following after. “See them anywhere?” asked Berry.

“Uhhhh.” Rupert saw them, all right. They had broken in the school’s swimming pool, where dozens of teen girls in swimsuits roamed about or splashed in the sparkly water. There were dudes there too, but he didn’t care.

“Rupert!”

The boy blinked, “Oh! Uhhh well we could ask around.”

“All of the slim and muscular girls and boys fixed their gazes on them, eyes turning grim. “… Someone lose their drawers?” asked Ruppy.

Streams of water gushes came flying at the cats, the two flexibly avoiding and making their dash out of the room. “Didn’t expect ‘em to be waterbenders!” Timmy shouted.

“Come on, search the lockers!” yelled Ruppy.

“A locker containing a shrine of a girl’s crush. “HeeeeeEEEEEYYYYYYYYY.” Whirling like a tornado, she slashed open every single locker in the hopes of finding someone (they cared about). “Huff, huff… WHOA!” The Fountain Cannons began blasting at her, Berry leaping about and running forward again. As she was approaching a second-floor walkway, several spikes emerged from the floor, so Berry pounced onto the trophy case, to a wall spear which she gripped in her teeth and whirled around, and flung to the walkway’s railing which she grabbed and hauled herself over, racing through the 2nd-floor hall.

Lilac was joyfully running the first floor as the elementary-schoolers had broken in, penetrating the defenses with the random werecat’s slashes. “Must be another magic experiment the kindergarteners did.” thought one second-grader.

In the computer lab, a certain goateed teenager in sunglasses stood up from his seat. “O-kay, this is getting old. Let’s see if these twerps can match this.” Gage started typing on his laptop, summoning four Flash-made teenagers armed with guns. They headed out to the hall and began launching missiles at any kids riding down, blowing them away.

“They’re just solid holograms!” cried Richard. “Keep spitting!” His Spitballers kept shooting, but the Programs only fizzed a little bit before one whipped out nun-chucks and whipped the kids off their bikes.

“Let’s see how you deal with more bandwidth!” a 3rd-grader exclaimed, pulling out his iPod to download two movies. The computers in the lab were lagging horribly, and Gage’s Programs were glitching.

Many kids were able to zip by, watched spitefully by Susanne Suave in a classroom. “That’s it!” She stomped out to the hall. “Time to give those kids the SLIP!” Her thick clothing came flying off, unveiling the red bikini underneath.

“MISS SUAVE, clothe yourself right NOW. We are NOT at the SWIMMING pool!” yelled a teacher.

“THERE IS NOTHING SHAMEFUL ABOUT THE FEMALE FORM!!” Then squirting lotion all over her body, she slid into the hallway and left a trail of the slippery substance, causing the bikes to immediately slide out of control upon crossing it. “Ah ha ha ha! I knew you kids would fall to my, smoothness!” She flexed backward after slowing to a stop.

“We don’t like girls yet, you ugly HAG!” a boy yelled.

“UGH!” She whipped out her lotion and shot a glob directly into the kid’s eyes.

“AAAAAH! MY EEEEEEYES!”

“Well you CLEARLY weren’t using them, anyway. Wha?” She looked across the hall as an animal appeared to be running on all fours.

“Raa-hoooww!” She was half-right, for it was Lilac Farley. “Scratchy cushionnn!” She pounced straight at Susanne’s chest, grabbed tight, and began clawing away.

“AAAAAAHH! MY SKIN, GET OFF ME, GET OFF ME!” She punched several times until Lilac flew off, staring at the many bloody lines. “Uck!! My perfect skin! Oh I am gonna KILL you you stupid cat!” She stomped forward with impending rage. “NO ONE MESSES UP MY SKIN EXCEPT-” But a powerful, pungent odor suddenly invaded her nose. “Oooohhh.” She collapsed onto her back.

“Heheh.” laughed Timmy, who along with Hikari took land on the floor following Lilac’s fall. “Thankfully I had some Wings carry White Pikmin into your nostrils. THAT’LL last ya a few days.”

“Good girl, Lilac!” Hikari beamed as the werecat crouched before her, tongue out in excitement. “Good kitty!” Lilac gently licked her in gratitude. “Hee haha ha ha!”

Berry continued to race every which way, having sliced every locker she passed and ransacked every classroom. “This is gettin’ really repetitive, Rupert.” Berry stated.

“I guess they aren’t here after all.” Rupert concluded once they made it to a steampipe room. “We have to get to the leaders and tell them-”

“REOOOOWW!” Berry leaped back when a hammer almost smashed her.

“I don’t like cats.” said recent KND traitor, Alexei Abramovici. “I don’t like brats. Mixing the two together, a sin that should never come to be.”

“You wanna see another sin? My mom taught me THIS one.” Berry held up a rather unpleasant finger.

“Then it’s time you faced justice.” He started lashing his hammer and his cane as Berry flipped back, beginning to pounce and kick around the pipes before getting behind and tackling Alex.
“Hrrrruph.” He shot up and swung, making Berry pounce back.

“Is that all you got, those silly sticks?” smirked Berry cockily. “I’ve battled dogs that were tougher than that!”

“Good afternoon, Team Hendry.” spoke a deep, smooth voice through the PA. “There’s a couple of tykes runnin’ around today. So it’s time to ease their wild minds with the stylin’ tunes of Ramblin’ Rodrigo.”

“Oyy. Buenos días, los niños.” said the thick, Spanish accent into the speakers. The most charming, soothing, mystical tune they would ever hear began sounding throughout the halls.

Those mystical vocals easily reached Berry and Lilac’s sensitive ears. “Uhhh… Lily?” said Timmy when the werecat fainted.

“B-Berry- HEEEY!” Rupert screamed when Berry finally fell down.

“Ohhhhh- don’t listen to it.” a 4th-grade officer tried to yell, their heads swaying, hands planted on their ears, while others already fell. “Think about drinking soda, and playing videogames aaaaall night, until you get really…really… sleepy. …”

“Hmph.” scoffed Alexei at the snoozing Berry (not seeing Rupert). “You kittens are all the same. Soft and simple when it comes down to it. Good-bye.” He raised his hammer to smash the cat. A dart immediately whipped down and stuck his neck. “Mmph!” He collapsed on the floor.

“UUUH!” Rodrigo screamed, so they assumed he was struck too, his music stopping.

“Huh?!” exclaimed Nya LaMar when several more Teen Ninjas were darted. “What’s going on?!”

“The Kindergarteners!” cried a ninja when many shorter kids in Indian outfits with crayon makeup began to fall from the vents. “Grab the runts we can and let’s split!”

“RETREEEEEEAAAAT!” The Gallaghers hurriedly scrambled to get away, rescuing any snoozing kid they could, but some were unfortunately kidnapped.

Rupert looked when a brown-skinned Kindergartener with orange makeup and a gruff face came down from the dark of the pipes. “You. Cat Creature.” He nudged Berry’s body. “Awaken. Must get out now.”

Berry startled awake, and seeing the child retreat, she glanced at Rupert on her head before making a dash for the exit. She reunited with Lilac in the hall, running side-by-side as Rupert viewed over to Tim and Hikar. “Did you find them??”

“No, they weren’t anywhere.” Timmy shouted. “But it looks like Joey brought the Kindergarten Tribes.”

“Well, it’s no use staying. Let’s get outta this nuthouse.”

Berry and Lil were soon dashing out of the middle school alongside dozens of remaining bikers. Rupert turned back astonished when the tremendous fortress started to move away.

Later…
The kids regrouped a few miles from the school, where Fifth Grade Leader, David Keith, spoke with the Kindergarten Chief. “Joey tell us, your presidents in big-heap trouble. We come help, ‘fore bad things happen.”

“Well, bad things happened.” said David. “They got Third Grade Leader now, too. And no sign of First or Fourth.”

“You rush in, without thinking. Middle-schoolers big. And smart. But also stupid. But not stupid enough. You should know better.”

“Well I TOLD YOU we should’ve thought up a PLAAAAN! Ow- HEEEEEY!” Richard whined when someone threw a Whisbee at him.

“Well up ‘til now, we all agreed Fourth Grade would be the primary leading grade.” David said. “But under the circumstances, I think I should take over until we can find them. Let’s head back to school and finish our day for now. Principal Rachel can only allow extended recess for so long…”

“Friend Hikari missing, too.” said the chief. “Hope they come up soon.” So with that, the graders rode to school on their bikes while the Kindergarteners followed on wooden horses on wheels.

“Oh, man. Things just went from bad to worse.” Rupert frowned. “If only we knew where Shelly was, ‘cause then we could find Sappo and Gibli, too.”

“Well, we could at least help you guys, first.” Berry told him. “We’re taking you back home so your parents can find you. Then we can all look for those guys. Okay?”

Rupert still hated the idea of his dad seeing him this way… but the more people aware of their existence, the better, he supposed. At least his mom would be there, too. “Okay.” So the long, tireless race to Ashland, West Virginia began.

Miracle City

Sector V would never understand how a monster of that fortitude smashed them with such force, they were merely knocked out in a hole in the ground. They awoke to find their selves in a dank, cave-like dungeon, with just enough light to see that. “Ohhhh… guys, this town… blows. …” moaned Aurora.

“Tell me about it.” Dillon replied, looking at his sick shadow. “Some help Mario became… and Sheila’s totally out again.” Indeed, their adventurer was snoring away.

Chris flicked his fingers, sparking a small flame. “And the place is chi-blocked. Sigh… waking up early to skip school, just for this. The heck are we supposed to do now?”

“That’s no reason to feel so dead.” A strange voice echoed.

“Look!” Haylee noticed the short, shadowed person in the hole above the cave shaft. He dropped and landed on his dark brown boots, head slanted so they saw only the top of his reddish-black cowboy hat. He shot his head up- “Boo!”

AIIIIIEEEEEEEE! They winced at Kirie’s silent scream. It was a skeleton boy with glowing red pupils and a ragged red bandanna, and huge boney claws.

“Hahahahahaha!” he laughed calmly. “That never gets old.”

They exchanged frightened glances. “Who… Who are you?” asked Aurora.
“My name is Django. Django de los Muertos. That’s, ‘of the Dead’ if you are of the English tongue.” He paced about the cave. “You may have overheard my grandmother speaking with the pipsqueak a half-hour ago. The thing is, I’ve been spyin’ you since you came to town. Friends of those Brotherhood guys, are we?” He folded his arms.

“You know them?”

“My grandma is the boss of all the baddies in this city. Those weirdoes showed up last year and started makin’ this place home too, and that little bean shrimp’s been talkin’ her into joining them. And do I get a say? No, because this is a matter of grown-ups.”

“So what’s your point?” Chris asked.

“My point is if grandma joins those freaks, we won’t be the top dogs anymore, just sharing it with that… shrimp. So if I don’t get to show him the door, I might as well just… find something better. And then you came.”

“Care to elaborate?”

“Simple.” Django’s boney teeth smirked. “I wanna join your group.”

“You mean… a Kids Next Door?” Dillon asked.

“Yes! I mean, a bunch of kids just running around with no adult supervision, going into lawless towns and beating the crap out of everyone! You kids have the LIFE! AND I WANT IN.” His dark eyes narrowed.

“Uhhhh hate to break it to you, but someone else is already joining, so we just don’t have room to accommodate a, creepy skeleton—”

Django shot up to Artie’s whimpering face, teeth gritted. “…Now listen.” He stepped away. “I happen to know a few things about what the Brotherhood is planning. This Mystic Guitar,” Django grabbed a reddish-black guitar off his back, “allows me to command the dead at will, and grants me dark powers of the Underworld. I’m your only chance of getting out of this dump, but ONLY if I can join your crew!”

“The Kids Next Door is a group that fights evil adults and protects kids from tyranny!” Aurora stated. “Why would YOU want anything to do with—”

“Fighting adults, going against their laws, that’s fine with me. And I want to destroy these Brotherhood guys before they steal my city. But I can only do so with YOUR help.”

The kids thought long and hard. This kid didn’t really have the right light as a KND operative… plus he was dead. But they had to get out of here… and he did have info. “To be fair, that shrimp guy is our great-grandfather.” Haruka noted. “So I guess we owe it to you…”

“Sigh, okay, Django.” Aurora stood up and approached him. “You got a deal for now.” And the two shook hands.

Django de los Muertos joined your party! With his Mystic Guitar, the Dark Arts are his to command!

“Excellent!” Django grinned. “LET ‘ER RIP!” He whipped out his guitar and strummed, blowing a passage into the wall. “Just this way!” He eagerly ran in first as they followed, Mason and Chris carrying Sheila. Inside was a much larger cave with a long, skeleton train. “Behold my grandma’s secret Ghost Train. Can go anywhere, anytime. Er, except day. Luckily, we’ll be traveling underground, we’ll be long out of the city before they even realize.”

“Wait, someone else was taken!” Dillon shouted. “Our friend, Midna!”

“Yes, I know. You won’t be rescuing her so easily, they have her guarded tight. Just stick with me and I promise we’ll save her later.”

“And now he’s makin’ promises. Alright, let’s go.”

The kids boarded the eerie train of blue flames as its front-most face unleashed a deafening screech. The vessel was soon rolling down the tunnels and out of the city.

Glacia; Arendelle Mountains

“Whoa… the blizzard stopped!” Lola said with surprise.

“Unbelievable.” George gaped, still holding Miyuki. “The sky was packed with clouds, but now it’s like it never even happened. What in the world could’ve stopped it?”

“Well, whatever it was, I feel the spiritual energy stronger than ever now.” MaKayla replied. “And the singing… it’s coming from there!” She pointed to the center, tallest mountain of this range. Beneath the aurora borealis that had appeared lay a sparkling castle of ice, and an emotional echo shouting from it. “Let it gooooo, let it go! And I’ll rise like the brink of daaaawn! HERE I stand… and HERE I STAAAAY! Let the-…”

“Wonder what her deal is.” Terry remarked.

“I dunno, but at least there’s civilization. Let’s go up and see if she’s seen Suki.” George decided as he marched forward.

When his friends were beginning to follow, a growling hit MaKayla’s ears as she stopped and searched around. “Kay-Kay, what’s wrong?” Lola asked.

A skull-faced monster with shadowy black skin, gaping chest hole, and on all fours like an ape glared at her ravenously. “You all, get back.”

“What?” Terry asked.

“Get back!” She leapt forward and began swiftly kicking and punching the beast, performing agile flips with her flexible body and evading its claws.

It was clear to them MaKayla had lost it. The cold cold air was so unbearable to her, she was attacking it. “Well uh, our first stop at GKNId is officially the hospital wing.” Terry knew.

“MaKayla, yooou… are you okay?” asked George.

“Hnnn!” Somehow, MaKayla had remained in midair with her legs spread out, as if on a horse, and was grabbing the air around its “neck”. “Lola, quick! Throw a Spank Hand!”

“Uhhh… huh?”

She was struggling to keep her grip. “Q-Quick! Throw a Spank Hand! Right where my arms are!”

“Uhh… okay.” Lola stretched her hands behind her and charged dark-pink energy as energy hands grew. She thrusted forward and flew the hands, MaKayla leaping just when they struck the spot.
The timebender landed beside her friends. “Sigh. Nice work, Lol.”

“’kay, but, whaddid I do?”

“That was a Hollow. My mom told me about ‘em and it matched the description. I wonder what it’s doing here.”

“I wonder, what the heck you’re talking about.” stated Terry.

“Right, you guys can’t see them. Just don’t worry about it, let’s find Suki and I’ll keep an eye out for ‘em.” The three exchanged curious glances as Kayla walked ahead. “And I don’t think that was the only one… we better watch out.” (Play “Shiver Mountain” from Paper Mario.)

Stage 17: Arendelle Ruins

Mission: Get to the mountaintop castle.

Under the starry indigo sky that was just created, Arendelle looked far more beautiful. Their eyes directed up the sparkling snowy mountain, to the even more glamorous glittering castle up top. There shouldn’t be any getting lost with that great blue borealis floating over the castle, and the sounds of the Ice Queen’s distant voice. To get there, Sector IC first had to journey down a very steep slope, which became difficult for George when carrying Miyuki’s body. White Wolfos leapt out from the snows for their prey, Lola throwing Spank Hands around to send them falling down the mountain while Terry also blinded them with Shadow Breath. They reached the mountain’s bottom, but a chasm separated them and the following one. They split up as MaKayla and Lola followed a left path, crossing a bridge through a large icy stalagmite that brought them to a wide, slippery field where Chilfos were playing hockey using Mini-Freezards.

The girls nodded to each other and grabbed two spare hockey-sticks, skiing out as MaKayla stole the Freezard from two Chilfos. Angered, the monsters chased her, but MaKayla hit the puck over to Lola, who skied along the edge and kept balance as the path curved right. Two Chilfos were coming at her from ahead, but seeing MaKayla behind them, Lola sent the puck with a forceful hit past the Chilfos like a bullet, while the timebender slowed it down to catch. Four more Chilfos guarded the Big Freezard ahead, so with a mighty swing, and a Fast-Forward, the puck zipped to the statue and shattered him. This allowed part of the wall behind to open, so Kayla slid in with Lola joining, the latter becoming a bat to flap up the following shaft. After evading native Ice Keese, she got to a platform and pulled an ice-lever, causing half a bridge of icy planks to fall in place to the middle mountain.

Meanwhile, George and Terry (and I guess Miyuki) took the right path, going inside of a dark cave that got blacker as they climbed down. George alit his hands with Time Chi to see, but Terry panickingly indicated the flock of Ice Keese asleep on the ceiling. The two carefully crossed a slippery, narrow ice bridge with several holes, and Terry flinched whenever an icicle fell down and smashed part of the path. They reached a platform where a gang of Ice Chuchu ambushed them, George hurriedly freezing the monsters before they made too much noise. Afterwards, they pushed them down the bottomless chasm, then focused their sights on the group of ice-blocks, and the large pool of frosty water that protected an ice-lever.

The two had to slide an ice-block across a bridge and navigate it around the rocks without sliding it in the chasm. They reached a round platform with more stop-rocks and navigated it around so the block was in position to slide across a very narrow bridge its width. From there, they pushed it into the pool and created a frozen path as it melted, but while it couldn’t reach the lever, Terry could get close enough to Shadow Glide. He flipped the lever and heard quakes, resulting in the swarm of Keese waking up. Terry freaked and hurriedly glided back to the ice path, and George plopped Miyuki down, thrust his arms up, and Stopped a bunch of Keese. They kept this up as they made their way out of the cavern.

The team reunited at the sparkling ice-bridge that led to a cave at the base of this new mountain. It was very large and hollow inside, and the glittering blue ice provided the light. No creatures were lurking, except in MaKayla’s eyes, dozens of Hollows were visible. ‘I’ll take care of ‘em.” she offered, much to the confusion of her team. Several Hollows blasted dark beams at her, but MaKayla leapt, kicked off a few of their heads, and shot Chrono Beams to scatter their dark bodies. A Hollow grabbed her by the leg, bashed her against the ground, then tossed her several meters, and when another performed a mighty leap, she slowed it down and escaped. She leapt to and kicked off another one, then flipped to another to grab around its head as it tried to charge a beam. She forced it to barf a beam at several other Hollows, then flipped off this one to shoot a Chrono Beam at it.

“You put up a brilliant show, Sis.” George smiled sarcastically, once Kayla finished her acrobatics. A floating ice staircase floated over them 2 stories above, but no way to it. However, there were four switches in a far corner which each member could press, making a group of ice platforms rise up to the stairs’ base. But when they stepped off, it sunk back down. Having an idea, Kayla had them all get on a switch while she activated a Time Recordance, then ran to the sinking platforms to throw a Time Brake, slowing it down as it was already fairly low. But restarting, she stayed to hold down her switch while her Time Clone ran to slow down the platforms, so the team could run off and hop to the stairway when they sank slower.

Ice Chuchu dropped onto the wide stairs, but Lola shot Spank Hands at them as the team progressed up without delay. The stairs led them outside the cave to a walkway on the side of the mountain. A large gap separated them and the continuing path, but Terry could Veil into the wall and slither to the foothold, pressing a switch to make a platform float over, allow his team on, then step off so the platform could bring them back. The path ended once again and the next one was too high to reach, with only dead platforms attached to chains that looked like they were meant to whirl like Ferris wheels. A chain-switch dangled above the middle of the platforms, so Lola became a bat and flapped up, grabbed it in her teeth, and changed back as her weight pulled it down. The platforms whirled to life and began their endless loops, Lola keeping the switch pulled so her team could get up, afterwards getting to the path as a bat while the platforms stopped again.

“Anyone else feel weird about carryin’ our friend’s dead body around?” Lola asked, noting Miyuki’s body in George’s arms.

“She feels like a sack of potatoes.” George mentioned. “Like some wizard just Avada Kedavra’d her on the spot.”

The walkway brought them to a wider foothold where there were again no monsters, except for the Hollow Chuchu MaKayla could clearly see, little black blobs with skull masks. Confusing her friends once more with her madness, she rolled forward and started Chrono-blasting them all, ‘til they were all just black puddles of glop. The only way to go was across a trio of thin ice rails, lined as though a cart were supposed to be on them. “Guess we have to grind across.” MaKayla thought.

“They look kinda slippery.” Terry observed.

“Well, check ‘em out then.” George nudged.

“Ugh.” So very worriedly, and with much focus, Terry moved his right foot over the rails and stepped on, then very carefully moved his left onto it. “WAH-WAH-WAH-WAAAAAH!” Indeed it was too slippery, and in a split second, slipped horizontally, bashed his head on the rail, then went falling down the chasm where a stalagmite pierced him right through the chest, and he hung dead, the stalagmite’s point red with blood.

“OH MY GOD, TERRY!!” MaKayla almost lost her breath at the sight.

“B-Bro!” Tears were quickly welling in Lola’s eyes. “GEORGE, YOU KILLED HIM!!”

“H-Hold on!” George aimed his hands down, focused energy, and Rewinded Terry as he flew back onto the rails, to their foothold.

“Ugh.” Terry annoyedly complied to George’s request and prepared to step on.

“No!” George yanked him back. “Uhhh better safe than sorry.”

And then something very strange happened. Before their eyes (except Terry’s), black puddles of goo appeared, and reformed into Hollow Chuchu. “Whoa, where did THOSE come from?” Lola questioned.

“You can see them now?” Kayla asked.

“See what?” Terry followed.

“N-Never mind, just hold ‘em back!” So the other three began to fight the Hollows off, but still had no idea how to get across the rails.

With Suki

At this time, Jack Frost had guided Suki to a dead-end wall, which went up at least 5 stories. “Suki… you know what to do.”

The child nodded, throwing her arms upward as a sparkly ice ladder stretched to the top. Jack glided to the top while Suki happily danced up its bars. They had an excellent view of the mountain range, and the glittering castle that sat miles above them. Suki slid down a left path that sloped down a little and curved right, stopping at a trio of ice rails. Feeling a sense of joy and freedom, Suki glided across the rails on her bare feet, attaining perfect balance as the chilly wind blew past her. “WHEEEE!” cheered Suki, zipping down a slope and up another, all the while feeling her body numbing. But she looked down and saw a lower cliff, where five familiar people (3 at least) were battling black blobs. “Hey, fwieeeeends!”

MaKayla looked up. “Hey, it’s Suki! Can you give us a hand??”

“I’ll give you this!” Shooting double ice-beams down, she created a minecart at the base of their rails.

Kayla hopped in first, “Guys, let’s go!” The others hurriedly got in (George throwing Miyuki’s body upside-down) and began zooming ‘cross the rails on their frosty cart. It curved right as it flew around a mountain, the kids panickingly trying to list it right as it threatened to fly off the left, then the track became straight as it flew down a slope, up another, and off a dead end as it quaked forcefully on the next, lower track, Suki sliding under them on her own rail. The team was coming to a very huge, unjumpable gap, screaming as they flew off the rails, but Suki grinded near them as she froze some rails for them to land on, connecting with the following path. It was about to fly off another dead end, but Suki froze a track that led up vertically, the cart still making it up and onto a higher track.
From there, the cart flew down a slope, off the track, and shattered against the wall over a safe foothold on a new mountain. They Wall Jumped two close walls onto a higher path, which they followed to a zipline that led to another mountain. MaKayla grabbed it first and flew to the distant, low foothold, then had to Rewind the line several times for her friends to take turns (it was extra hard for George holding the hook with one hand and Miyuki’s body in the other). The best part was they had to do this again for another zipline, taking land on a much wider field under some mountains. The three friends stared up with widened eyes, while Terry questioned such expressions. “Uhhhh you guys all right?”

But towering around the field like huge trees were Menos Grande, pitch-black Hollows that almost rivaled the shape and structure of the mountains, with skull masks with pointed noses. “Let’s go.” George told them, trying not to show fear as they hurried across the field. There still wasn’t anywhere to go, but a cave was stationed high up on a wall beside a Menos. The team Wall Jumped between the wall and the Menos, but Terry merely slithered up with Shadow Veil, since he couldn’t touch them. Inside this cave, four tall icicles hung from the ceiling before dropping a few milliseconds apart. A stairway was there, but ended too low to reach the path above. George and Kayla Rewinded the icicles and, seeing they looked like a staircase as they fell, kept the icicles slowed so they can hop up; but Kayla had to make a few Time Clones to do this successfully.

They found the cave’s exit was at level with the Menos’ heads, which permitted them to hop across like platforms. They made it to a stairway that led up around a mountain, to a platform with another zipline. They took turns and slid down to the base of the castle’s mountain, a very steep stairway all they needed to trek to reach there.

Meanwhile, after reaching the end of her rail track, Suki landed at the base of another mountain and entered a cave. It was very wide and sparkly inside, and a pack of White Wolfos attacked her while she fought back with giant ice-newspapers. There was no way to get onto the higher platforms, so Suki created a snowcannon and hopped in, blasting straight up. She crashed headfirst on the nearest ledge and got buried in snow, shaking it off like a puppy. The next high ledge was too far, so Suki created an ice stairway to skip up. Ice Keese were flapping down to attack her, but still easy to fight back with quick snowballs. She skipped up another already-created stairway that was guarded by a Freezard up top, but when it blasted its Ice Breath, Suki blocked and mended it into a huge iceball, then crushed him with it.

Suki came to a rectangle ice door that was locked by a keyhole, so all she had to do was create an Ice Key and unlock it. She exited to a small, empty ledge, facing up at a tall, distant platform. She created an ice seesaw, then grabbed the large ball she used to crush the Freezard, stood on the low end of the seesaw, and smashed the high end with the ball, “WHEEEEEE!” flying herself up to the platform. From there, she jumped onto a black platform that began swaying, and looking over its front, she saw it was a Hollow. Smiling innocently, she created a giant ice feather, using it to tickle its little nose. “Aaa-aaa-AACHOOO.” Jumping in front of its nose, she was blown far over the chasm.

She landed on a foothold at the base of a new mountain, pine trees growing here, as she gazed up the incredibly tall mountain the borealis hung over. Focusing her Ice Chi precisely, a spiral of ice rails appeared around and around the mountain, and Suki hopped on as she began gliding to the top. Several Hollows were trying to climb up the mountain, but Suki took down every one she could. Nothing would stop them from reaching the castle, and nothing would stop Jack from talking to this girl. She doesn’t know why, but if Jack wanted to speak to her, she would help him all the way. And once they finally landed before the castle gates, that time would come now.

“LET IT goo000, LET IT GO000, can’t turn back aaaanymo000ore!” the Ice Queen sang atop her balcony. “Let it goo000 ("Elsa.") LET IT GO000 ("Elsa!") that perfect girl’s no mo00000ore!”
“ELSA!”

The queen gasped, and for the first time in 300 years, stopped singing. “Hey!” Jack waved at her from the courtyard, sporting a casual grin.

“Jack…” The queen calmly floated down to him and Suki. “Y-You’re alive… who’s-” “Heeheeheehee!” Suki showed her snow-white teeth. “I’m his frieeeend. Go on, Jackie, ask her out!”

“Heheh, she helped me get up here.” Jack blushed. “I… I’ve been wanting to talk to you for ages.”

“Oh…” Elsa frowned guiltily, “You did?”

“Yeah… I wanted to tell you… you don’t have to feel upset anymore. Everyone we knew and loved, they’re all in a better place now. Including your sister.” They looked at the frozen statue of Anna. Noticing her as well, Suki wore a curious face.

“Ooooooo! Who’s sheee?” Suki slid over to her. “Awwww. She’s pretty! But why’s she so saaaaad?”

“Huff, Suki!” They turned to the front gates, seeing MaKayla and Sector IC nearly out of breath as they made it up the stairs. “W-We found you!” Kayla gasped, George plopping Miyuki on the ground. “How’s it been?”

“Fwieeeends, fwieeeends, FWIEEEEENDS!” She danced in place. “You made it! This is Jackie, and his GIRLFRIEEEEND!”

“I only see Ghost Girl.” Terry said.

Elsa shook back to attention, “Look, Jack, I appreciate the sentiment, but I got over this ages ago!” she told him with a sure smile. “Anna’s gone, my kingdom’s gone, and I went with it, there’s nothing I can do about that now. But I’ve been feeling really good ever since! I’m finally free of all my worries, and I can finally let my icebending blow free, too.”

“You know as well as I do that’s not true.” They all looked up, when Rukia and Sector SOUL glided down. “For 300 years, your soul has been tormented by your guilt. You cannot pass on…”

“Hey, Miyuki!” George beamed.

“Huh? Where?” Terry searched around. “I only see those three creeps. Wait, you’re Jack Skellington!”

“Hello, children!” Jack S. beamed.

“Creeps?” Coraline and Norman glared.

“Listen, I told them all what happened with you,” explained Jack to Elsa, “and the reason you’re still here is because you haven’t let it go. But only because you’ve been alone for 300 years and never had anyone to share your feelings with. But we’re all here now, Elsa.” He took her hands. “And we’re going to help you get through this.”

Elsa’s blue eyes met Jack’s, and both knew what the other were thinking. Jack could feel that guilt in her soul, the guilt that’s been growing and growing for over 3 centuries. And Elsa felt that trust in Jack’s eyes, the trust that only a real friend would possess. It was time to open her heart to him.
“How sentimental.” A dark voice spoke.

Everywhere, the Hollows were appearing, snarling with hunger at all the fresh, juicy souls. And four Hollows unlike the others, humanoid in dark, decorative cloaks, surrounded them. “…What’s goin’ on?” Terry asked, still having no idea what was happening.

MaKayla gaped when one Hollow raised a magic wand, psychotic eyes set on the boy. “TERRY, WATCH OUT!”

“AVADA KEDAVRA!” A blinding green light flew from the wand and struck Kayla as she pushed Terry away, and she flipped over dead.

“KAYLA!!” Terry screamed with tears in his eyes. George hurriedly used his bending to Rewind Kayla back to life, but the very sight made everything clear to Terry. “…Where did all THOSE things come from??”

“Terry, these’re all Hollows.” Kayla recapped. “They’re dark spirits that feed off of other souls, and you can only see them by witnessing death. Same for normal spirits, too.”

“Well, aren’t you a smart little girl?” Bellatrix swayed. “You deserve an A!!”

“Man, you guys are totally whack.” Lola said. “But your costumes are awesome, where can I get me some of those?”

“Only vermin like you would enjoy garb such as these.” Frollo replied grimly. “Those who follow the ways of the Devil.” His blue embers flared. “And all who wear it, deserve nothing but death!”

“You will have that glory before long.” They turned as one more Hollow marched into the front gates. “It’s been a while… Elsa. And you too, Jack. Those 300 years seemed to just fly by. But would’ve been so much better if they didn’t exist. All of that time wasted. But at least it’s led us to something new…”

“I… Do I know you?” Jack asked with a tone of familiarity.

“You know as well as I do how it feels to lose that which belongs to you. You know how it feels to be so happy, and in the blink of an eye, it’s all ripped away from you. You know… how to pine over something, for ages and ages… and never let go.”

And his mask unraveled, revealing that once-handsome face underneath, and those soulless green eyes. Jack knew him all too well. “Hans… you’re alive?”

“Of course I’m not, are you blind? I’ve become one of them, these… creatures.”

“But…But what’re you doing here?”

“Ever since I arrived at Arendelle, I have been planning to marry Anna, kill Elsa, and seize the throne through marriage. I commissioned the scum from the Chilly Depths to invade the coronation while I fought them off like a hero, but Elsa would be slain in the confusion. Once I had become King, I would allow those vermin a piece of land and place in our kingdom, as a sign of ‘peace’ and good faith. But I have drastically underestimated Elsa’s icebending. Not only I, but ALL of Arendelle was destroyed. And my soul could go nowhere near Elsa without her supernatural snow freezing even me.”

“You mean… my sister died because of you?” Jack spoke with rising anger.
“I intended no one to get hurt but Elsa. And maybe a few guards to make it convincing. I was so close, but at that moment, ended up so far. That very idea, that the throne was taken from me, made me so angry. My soul could never rest in peace… for so long, I had desperately continued to crave the throne that was now empty. I became so angry… until I ended up a shadow of my former self.”

“But how are you still able to speak?” Rukia asked. “Most Hollows I’ve seen don’t possess your humanoid forms. . .”

“That’s where I exceeded. As much as the creatures wanted to feed off my sorrow, I kept resisting and resisting their pull. Eventually I had become a more advanced form of Hollow. I had become… Arrancar. And I and my associates wasted the last 300 years, collecting hundreds of Hollows. With our combined strength, we would one day march into the storm and take Arendelle’s throne. But thanks to your little friend, we will waste no more time.”

“But why would you still want Arendelle’s throne?!” Jack demanded. “The kingdom’s destroyed, there’s nothing left!”

“I just believed I needed a more comfortable abode than those dingy old caves. Once I have claimed my throne, I planned to expand my empire. Seeking the Hearts of all Worlds and destroying them, until darkness engulfs the whole universe. Forever extending my army, as I became the King of all Souls. Of course… a simple castle isn’t all I wanted. What I truly came here for… WAS ELSA.”

“AAAAAHHH!” No faster had Hans thrust his sword through Elsa’s chest.

“ELSA!” screamed Jack.

“For ages, and AGES, the death of Anna has tormented her. That raging, ENDLESS storm that came from her soul, sealing this mountain. She resisted transforming into a Hollow this long, but NO MORE. For the first time in forever… she will know true sorrow, AS HER HEART IS HOLLOWED.” (Play “The Encounter” from Kingdom Hearts 2!)

“AAAAAHHHH.” Dark clouds shrouded the starry sky as Elsa’s green aura turned a blackish-purple. Her ice-blue eyes turned yellow and soulless, and her teeth sharp as a boney mask appeared over her face. A great column of darkness burst from her form, turning the whole area black. When it vanished, Elsa was nothing more than a tremendous winged demon, an endless black vortex in her mouth, bladed bone-like ice wings, and a great wide purple and black dress brimming with darkness. But her snow-blonde hair stayed the same, blowing in the unbearably cold wind.

Hearing a hiss behind them, Sector IC whipped around. “Miyuki!” George gasped when two Hollow Horsemen took Miyuki’s lifeless body, and galloped into the air.

“We feel unique energy emitting from that body.” Hans said as he hopped onto Elsa’s head. “We plan to harness it for what it’s worth.”

Miyuki’s spirit and Rukia exchanged nods before flying after them, and a SOUL member each grabbed an IC member to chase as well. “AHHHH HAHAHAHA!” Bellatrix shot a spell to send Terry and Norman falling, while the other Arrancar each chased a pair to separate directions. It was just Suki and Jack Frost left, facing up at the ice demon.

But Suki wasn’t afraid of it at all. All she knew was it was now colder than ever, and light or dark, the snow would always be her friend. Closing her now-furrowed eyes, she waved her arms and whirled the snow around her. A bird of snow was formed right under her feet, raising her to the air as Jack Frost floated after. They leveled directly with the demon’s face, and atop its head stood Prince Hans. But to Jack… he was no longer the man he once knew. All that was was hollow. “Jackie…” spoke Suki with her tone never more serious, “I PROMISE I’LL SAVE HER FOR YOOOOOOU!”

Boss fight: Dark Hans

Elsa made a screech like that of a banshee, unleashing beams of ice that Suki and Jack avoided by shifting left, the 7-year-old whirling a circle of ice around her and shooting five icicles at Elsa. She winced a little bit, but screeched as icicles appeared in the air every direction, launching directly at Suki as her snowbird was quick to dodge. Suki created sharp, icy talons on her bird’s feet, shooting like a comet at the monster and stabbing Elsa’s face. She screeched and blew them off, but Suki hopped off her bird and slid under Elsa on an ice-path, coming back up behind the monster as Hans turned to face her. She slid at the prince as Hans lashed his blade, making Suki jump back and slide circles around him. Hans’ head was suddenly frozen by Jack Frost from behind, allowing Suki to shoot up and get him. “NEEEEEEEIGH.” The dark horse, Sitron thwarted her attempt, galloping in the air before Suki and swinging his front legs, making her lose focus as she fell. The snowbird caught her as they dodged Elsa’s ice blast just in time, and Hans broke the ice cube and whipped around, missing Jack with his sword.

“AAAAAAAAA HAHAHAHAHAHAHA!” Bellatrix Lestrange cackled the night away, flying circles as Terry hopelessly tried to hit her with a normal and shadow G.U.M.Z.O.O.K.A.. The witch threw a spell that jellified his legs, Terry gritting his teeth as he tried to chase her with a Shadow Glide. “III KILLED SIRIUS BLACK, IIII KILLED SIRIUS BLACK, AY heeeheeheeeheee—WHOOOOA!” An Ecto Beam suddenly knocked her away.

Terry took land as strength returned to his legs, Norman appearing beside him. “She kind of has the advantage over you in a place like this.”

“What’m I supposed to DIE?”

“Uhhhhhh no. Here, lemme help you. I’ll fly you in close and you do what you do.”

“Okay.” So Norman grabbed Terry onto his back and flew after the witch.

Lola threw several Spank Hands at incoming Hollows before turning to face the Arrancar, Claude Frollo. “Because of my death, those filthy gypsies were free to ruin my perfect world. If my fate is to live as a cursed demon, then I will rid the world of all OTHER abominations. Starting with you, you filthy HALF-BREED!” He threw blue flames that melted the patches of snow they hit in seconds, Lola dodging as she threw Spank Hands that Frollo slashed with his blade. He created several swordsmen out of his flames as they ran at Lola, but huge ragdolls caught them in their stuffing and seemed to dissolve them.

“You’re not such a sight yourself.” Coraline remarked, landing beside Lola. “Hey, whaddya say we fight him together?”

“YOU got it!” Lola said confidently.

MaKayla was facing the white-haired woman in the black robe. “I recognize you.” Kayla said with a slight stutter. “You’re Hama. The…”

“Yes.” The woman smirked grimly. “But I’m more accustomed to my own.” She sliced her own arm as a stream of blood came out, which she formed into a long sickle.

“I-I-I-, Is that blood?” Kayla stuttered as her pupils shrank.

“Have a closer LOOK.” She lashed the sickle as Kayla barely dodged, scraping her cheek as she froze with fear.

But before it came at her again, Jack Skellington whipped her away with his Soul Whip, a green flubbery substance. “It’s not a fair match when your fear is used against you.” he said. “Let me take care of this. Merry CHRISTMAS!” He threw a storm of present bombs at Hama.

That means George was left to face the only Arrancar remaining: none other than Legion. “Your sister is knowing Fear.” he said. “I will also teach you Fear. And then there’ll be oblivion.”

“We’ll see about that.” George smirked as he began dodging Legion’s syringes.

Elsa flew after Suki and snapped her fangs, the child flying below on her snowbird and shooting icicles up her dress. Elsa flipped and tried to snap her upside-down, but Suki flew away as Jack F. came instead, shoving an icicle down her nose. She flipped back up and tried to shake it out, Hans hanging on as Suki came for him again. She waved a storm of quick snow beams that Hans blocked with his sword, the snowbird just zipping past his right when she came. The bird flew directly skyward before coming down at Hans like a missile, Suki forming an icicle on its beak. Hans protected himself in a dark bubble when the bird made impact, unable to get through before Hans swung his sword and sent them back.

“This guy is too haaaaaaard!” Suki moaned.

Jack Frost flew beside her, “Suki, remember that thing we did on Christmas? I can enter your body and give you some of my power, but only for 1 minute.”

“Ohhhhh! That always made me feel coooooold.”

“Your point?” he quirked.

“Let’s DO IT!” Jack shot into Suki’s body as a white aura appeared around her. Her temperature dropped extremely low, feeling absolutely cold, she would be unbreakable. She left her bird and flew directly at Hans, throwing rapid ice beams that countered Hans’ dark balls. She zipped over him like a gust of wind, then was coming back like an icy rocket. Spinning into an icicle drill, she pierced Elsa’s chest and rendered her immobile, while Hans simply flew himself. Suki recomposed and glared at the prince, zipping at him like a bullet and swinging her legs which had formed icicles, clashing with his sword. Both her legs crossed like an ‘X’ as they pushed against Hans’ sword, but she began to falter when her aura flashed.

“Suki, I need to get out now.”

“But I wanna hit ‘iiiiim!” Suki arduously withstood the pain, continuing to push on Hans’ sword before she flipped and slashed him across the mask, followed by a rapid drilling through his chest before she kicked off and back on her bird, Jack flying out. Hans gripped his chest and angrily flew Elsa after them, trying to snatch her in her teeth. Suki formed an icicle and shoved it in Elsa’s mouth to hold it open, then flew behind to throw icicles at Hans, who defended as Jack Frost proceeded to attack him from behind.

The Hollow Horsemen were still galloping away with Miyuki’s body as she and Rukia gave chase. The horsemen shot blue fire arrows at the girls while Rukia slashed ice beams at them. The left one took the body as they ran separate ways, but when both girls closed in on him, he chucked the body all the way to his comrade, then shot a dark ghost-net to catch the spirits inside.

Norman and Terry were still on the chase for Bellatrix, who left a trail of Shadow Fog as she flew, from which emerged a swarm of Black Boes. Norman sent skull ghosts to swallow the Boes as they flew above, getting over Bellatrix as Terry dropped down to push her to the ground, the two rolling across the snow before Bellatrix flipped back on her feet. “Imperio!”

“Waaah!” Terry flew up to the air and began doing the chicken dance before twirling like a ballerina. “WHOA!” He was thrown at Norman, who turned intangible and flew at Bellatrix throwing Ecto Beams, but the witch dodged and- “Reducto!” blasted a spell that blew Norman to smithereens.

“NORMAN!” Terry screamed.

“Relax, he’s a ghost, his particles will reform.” Coraline yelled. “But it’ll take awhile.”

“Now just what to do with YOU!” Bellatrix yelled, casting a Cruciatius Curse on Terry.

Frollo created winged demons out of his blue flames that soared at Coraline, attempting burn her yarn and fabric, but Lola defended her with as much charged Spank Hands she could muster. “Thank you!” Coraline told her, sewing giant ragdolls as fast as she could. A two-legged, wobbling creature was created from her fabric, running at Frollo and swinging its extendable head to knock him down, followed by a swarm of giant stitch-needle spiders that jumped and latched all over him. “NNNNN!” He blew them off with a burst of flame, watching as Lola flew over him in her bat form and reverted to normal to drop, grab around, and bite his neck, but the man furiously threw her off as Coraline trapped him in a giant ragdoll, which Frollo set flame to and slashed his blade across her waist, leaving her shaking on the ground.

Jack S.’s Soul Whip clashed fast as lightning with Hama’s Blood Whip, and during which a piece of his flubber sliced off and covered Jack’s eyes, allowing Hama to slice his boney body diagonally in half, his head flying off as well. “Nn- u-u-u-u-u-u-…” MaKayla couldn’t bring herself to stand. The sight of his severed body was too much.

“I remember those days when such liquids were so important.” Hama smiled with malice. “You will soon see what a burden they are.” She lunged forward aiming to slice her in two.

Jack Skellington’s lower body grabbed her in his legs while his upper jumped up to grip her head. “No burden for me!” he proclaimed with a bright smile. “But that isn’t very nice!” The body-parts forced her around so Jack’s head could jump up and start nomming her face.

Jack Frost fused with Suki again as they flew at Hans whipping fast, bashing Elsa’s head with a giant ice cube at the end of Jack’s cane so she fell dizzy, Hans flying on his own. Suki swung the giant cube, only for Hans to break it with his sword as Suki swiftly dodged his swings. She unleashed a powerful ray of ice from both hands that froze Hans’ sword solid when he defended, then conjured a snowball her size which she blasted at him. “Suki, remember your lessons. Use Ice-Maker Style.”

Nodding seriously, Suki whirled her arms and created two long hammers, swinging them together and smashing Hans like a pancake. She followed this with a snow-spatula, catching him on, flipping him overhead, then batting him to a distant mountain. “RRRRRRAAAAAHHH-rrrrrr.” Suki turned and avoided when Elsa gnashed at her, but she was beginning to flash again as Jack flew out, letting Suki land on the snowbird.

“We’ve gotta get Elsa back to normal.” Jack told her.
“My sister-chan and her FRIENDS could probably do iiiit.”

“Yeah, but they’re a little preoccupied. Let’s worry about defeating Hans.” The prince was soaring right back at them on Sitron, his sword unfrozen as he jumped in attempt to slice Suki, whose snowbird flew back. Suki turned the bird’s head into a cannon that began blasting snowballs, which Hans easily sliced, but Suki had emerged a great column of ice from below to capture Hans, seemingly freezing him. She flinched and fell back when Elsa almost gnashed her, then began to break Hans free as he got onto her head. Hans and Elsa charged powerful energy into their sword and mouth respectively, unleashing a massive ray of darkness and ice that chased them around as they flew.

Legion was still tossing syringes at George, who kept his wry smirk as he dodged. “Don’t you got anything else?”

“No. But my CLONE does.”

And he was taken by surprise when a second Legion appeared from behind and stuck him in the arm with a syringe. George fell to his knees, the world blurring around him, as he tried to view around at all his friends. Frollo stabbed Lola through the heart, Terry fell over dead when Bellatrix struck him with a Killing Curse. Miyuki and Rukia were chewed and swallowed by the Hollows, and finally, MaKayla’s head was sliced clean off her body, rolling across the ground to George as he stared at her dead, open eyes.

“Hmhmhm…” George laughed coldly. “You’d think this would scare me… if not for the fact… I saw past this battle using my Future Sight!!” So throwing his arms upward, he froze Legion in time, escaping his reality and swiping his syringe to stick it in him. Legion unfroze as he wobbled around, trying to comprehend where he was.

“I-sa love spendin’ time wit’ you, Legy-Weeegyyyy.” Legion’s former headless body was in bed with Jar Jar Blinks.

Legion curled up on the snowy ground, unable to recover from his shocked, shuddering state. With that, George directed his attention to Terry, writhing in pain from the Torture Curse, and aimed his hand at Norman’s scattered ectoplasm to fast-forward, putting him back together. Once regaining himself, he jumped back to attention. “Don’t worry, Terry!” He shot over and rescued him, flying him across the air. “Okay, go for it!” He flew back at Bellatrix and dropped Terry, the witch leaping far away before whipping around to face him. “WAH!” She ended up glued to the ground via Terry’s stretched shadow.

“Riddikulus!” She blasted a spell that dispelled Terry to smoke, but the real Terry emerged in front of her and blew Shadow Breath all over her face. She frantically waved her hand, turned, and tried to shake it off, but by the time she did, she was staring at a gigantic Norman head. The world flashed incredibly blurry as the giant head spun, turning yellow and widening his mouth, exposing an endless dimension that bursted horribly blinding flashes at Bellatrix’s eyes.

The woman compressed and froze to solid stone, falling to her back like a toppled statue. Norman shrunk back to normal and looked at Terry with a smirk and wink.

Lola hurriedly threw Spank Hands at Frollo, who kept defending with his blue flames as he erupted a wall of them, sending it at Lola who became a bat and flapped overhead, barely avoiding. But Frollo had shot up and struck her with his blade, Lola flashing back to normal as she... bounced to and fell over a cliff, grabbing the frosty ledge tight. But she stared with terror and hopelessness as Frollo slowly stepped forward, raising his blade high as his wrinkled face, lit by his ghostly blue flames, seemed darker and more demonic than ever. “And He shall smite the wicked, and plunge them into the depths of Hell… FOREVER.”

A stitch-needle attached to a yarn string flew over and knocked the sword out of his hand, the man angrily looking to his attacker. “Haven’t you caught up with the times, yet?” Frollo gaped at the sight of Coraline: she was back on her feet, but her legs, arms, and neck were as wobbly as spaghetti, the blue flames destroying what remained of her skin and clothing. Underneath was a hideous ragdoll with skinny metal parts, which were needles, and few standing strands of black yarn served as her hair, and her googly eyes were all there were of her face. “Hey, hold him off a while longer, will you?”

Frollo turned back to Lola, who flapped back above in her bat form and reverted back as she smashed Frollo with a Spank-Smash. Coraline spread her body apart as her needles extracted, beginning to quickly sew together a spider-web-like vortex. Lola leapt and spun in the air as she dealt rapid kicks on Frollo’s face with her ballet flats, but he lashed his blade again and created strings of flame-arrows to shoot at the vampire. He sent tall flame columns that made Lola jump around, too confused to react when Frollo stabbed his blade in the ground, sent lines of blue around her, and burned a huge flaming hole miles into the ground, surprising her as she fell in. Lola flapped her bat wings and struggled to fly up, but the flames were steadily sucking her in as the walls were closing.

“Hrn hn hn hn hn hn hn hn.” laughed Frollo with a devilish grin.

“Yeah, laugh it all up.” He turned to Coraline, who had finished sewing: she had created a spiraling white vortex with spider-web outlines, and inside was an endless dimension. “I would look forward if I were you.”

Frollo faced back at the flaming chasm as darkness sprouted from it. The world turned pitch-black as Lola emerged, with huge bat wings burning with pinkish-purple, larger venomous fangs and eyes that burned with deepest lust. “You have been very BAD, Claude Frollo, and shall feel the stinging wrath of…” The aura grew around her giant wings, and massive hands formed on their tip, “LOLA VIRGINIA BELLE STOOOOORK!” She struck Frollo with the most deadly, life-scarring spank Frollo had the unfortunate fate to experience. His cloak shattering, he flew stunned and frozen into the spidery vortex and down the bottomless realm. His body unraveled like yarn and scattered ‘til there was nothing left.

Coraline closed the portal and refigured herself, smiling as Lola returned to normal. “The first time I used that was on a girl who cheated at videogames.” the vampire said. “WAAAAAY cooler than this one.”

Hama furiously shook Jack S. off of her, slicing more parts of her skin and throwing a rapid storm of bloody slashes, tearing Jack’s bones to pieces. But his bones transformed into flames that formed back together, having donned his Pumpkin King form. Spinning and throwing many Flames of Hell while Hama countered with a spiral of blood, and in the resulted glob of flames and blood, Jack shot through and kicked Hama in the face, knocking her down before turning back to skeleton. “I know it was traumatic for you, MaKayla, but you’ve got to move past this.” he said to the shuddering girl. “You must fight back now to save your friends from a similar fate.”

“Enough of this!” proclaimed Hama, recovering as she ripped off her cloak and flesh as her blood-made body took the form of many knives, spears, sickles and swords. “Tonight, your fluids become MINE.” She flew forward, sights directly set on leaving Kayla as nothing but a puddle of blood, the girl’s pupils shrinking further the closer she came.

In a single blink, MaKayla leaped, her left leg alit with blue as she sliced directly through Hama’s neck. A greater gush of dark blood came spilling out of the woman’s neck, until her very form melted into blood and faded away in the snow. Having done more than she expected in this fight, she fell down.

Miyuki and Rukia broke out of another energy net and kept chasing the horsemen as they chucked the former’s body around like a football. Miyuki caught up the right one and destroyed it with an energy blast, but a dark smoke floated from the other one and reformed it, and the same happened when Rukia tried to destroy the other. Both girls got beside each other, “Whenever we destroy one, the other just brings it back.” Miyuki said.

“Then we’ll have to destroy ‘em together. Get ready.” Once far away, the horsemen reunited and held Miyuki’s body together, running away in a straight path as the girls set their sights. “One…” the energy began charging in their close hands, “two…” they whirled their arms and- “THREE!” Two precise beams, a gray and a pale-blue, flew directly at the horsemen and destroyed them simultaneously. Miyuki’s body flew and dropped on the ground. “That’s how it’s done!”

Suki jumped off the snowbird and surfed across the air via ice-path, while Elsa quickly began destroying it with ice blasts. “Suki, let’s-” Jack was about to fuse with her again, but Hans grabbed and flew far away with him, clutching him by the neck.

“JACKIIIE!” Distracted, Elsa was able to grab Suki in her icy talon, shooting straight to the ground and slamming her hard. Still holding the injured Suki, Elsa flew over the cliff and furiously slammed her against the wall multiple times, before finally scraping her against it as she descended.

Jack desperately tried to shake Hans away, succeeding as he shot toward Suki’s direction like a rocket, but Hans tackled him from above and shoved him against the ground, raising his dark sword and ready to pierce him, but Jack shifted his head and avoided.

Suki never felt more unbelievable pain. Descending into the very depths of Glacia, helpless in Elsa’s talon against this rugged, frozen cliff. There’s… one way. She already knew. I have to… Logia. But… what if… I don’t… make it? I wanna hug… Miyuki-chan… I…I want to…

With determined eyes, Suki expanded a huge frozen heart around her, keeping Elsa back. She got outside and stood firmly on the heart, riding it back up the cliff. Elsa angrily flew after her as she skied across the snows, but Suki had emerged several snow columns from the ground and binded Elsa’s wings.

She was pulled to the ground as she then looked up, seeing Miyuki stand before her in her normal body. The girl calmly stepped closer and touched a hand to Elsa’s forehead. “Elsa… remember who you are. Remember what you used to be!”

And her entire life went flying in Elsa’s mind. Playing with her sister, discovering her icebending, the party that celebrated the discovery of her bending, where Jack got his tongue stuck to the punch, hearing of their parents’ death, the party where Elsa was made queen, seeing the hidden chamber, playing with Jack Frost, talking to Anna about Hans, the monsters’ invasion, freezing Anna solid, then singing for 300 years in what used to be Arendelle.

Jack flew away from Hans as the latter blasted a darkball and knocked him down, then leapt at the spirit again to stab. But an ice blast flew and knocked him back, Jack smiling brightly as Suki surfed his way. Hans recovered, but couldn’t keep up with Suki’s rapid blasts, his body area frozen as Suki collided with and blew him back. Hans whistled, and Sitron came galloping forth as the prince hopped on. The horse ran across the field at great speed while Hans threw many dark spheres at Suki, who leaped and continued surfing while trying to throw icicles. Not catching up, she created massive running shoes out of ice over her feet, moving even quicker as she narrowed in on the prince.

Sitron went flying into the air, miles above Suki, so she jumped out of her shoes and sprouted glittering ice wings, keeping after him. As he shrank into the dark, a forest of Menos Grande emerged from below, all aiming to gnash Suki, but she swiftly avoided and sliced them all with her spiked ice wings, determined to keep after Hans. She positioned her wings like a jet, while also forming an ice-rocket over her, flying at incredible speed after the prince. Breaking free of the rocket, Suki sliced Sitron in a perfect half with her ice wings, the horse dispersing into darkness.

Hans flew himself and clashed his sword against Suki’s powerful wings. They locked in a draw and shoved against the other, but Hans began to falter when Suki added more power to her wings. “GRAAAH!” Suki proved to be the more powerful when Hans plummeted to the earth, just outside Arendelle Castle. He aching helped himself to stand and glared with malice at the flying icebender, who returned the spiteful look. When Hans studied closely, Suki bore close resemblance to Anna, just like her sister with Elsa. Just outside the castle gates, Hans looked and saw Anna standing there, still frozen. If only Anna hadn’t been frozen, this never would’ve happened. The very memory angered him terribly.

“If I’m to be struck down today, I will take Anna with me!” So brimming with dark aura, Hans lunged at Anna, ready to destroy the princess for good.

“NOOOOO!” Suki cried with despair. (End song.)

CHING!…

Queen Elsa, back to her former ghostly self, whipped in Hans’ path, and with a mighty swipe of her icy arm, shattered his sword, and the left half of his mask, to pieces, exposing his stunned green eye. Elsa had a new look in her eyes. Fury…rage…passion… and deep, burning love. “…No!” She fell to her knees and wrapped arms around her frozen sister, and for a moment, they coulda sworn those ghostly eyes spilled tears. “I won’t… let you touch her!”

Everyone stood still and watched. Even Hans seemed taken aback by Elsa’s sudden action. The only sounds were those of raging winds, and Elsa’s sobs. “I never felt more… bad about anything! … than what I did. My sister… my kingdom… I kept trying to tell myself… I was dead… THEY were dead… and there was NOTHING I could do about it. It was my own loss of control… it already happened… and I NEVER stopped loving her… wishing I could join her… so WHY couldn’t I move ON?! I’m sorry I robbed you of your life, Anna… sorry I destroyed everyone. Is it really my punishment to stay bound to this guilt forever… don’t you understand how I feel, Anna?! Why won’t you let me join you in that other world? How long are you going to make me suffer? Anna…”

The snows were beginning to calm now. Only a gentle wind breezed. And it felt so much warmer. Along with the gorgeous light that brimmed into being.

The frozen statue of Anna glowed a blinding white, like a mini sun as Elsa backed away in shock. Her cape, dress, strawberry hair, lovely blue eyes, cute freckled face. All of her color returned into being, and all of her life. She slumped to her knees, shuddering those last ounces of cold, then looked up at her sister. “Elsa…”

“Anna…” The older couldn’t believe her eyes. Now her ghostly eyes wanted to weep more than ever.
“Wh-… What is?..”

Elsa only smiled. The weight of all her passed citizens still weighed on her soul… but for the first time in forever, she felt lighter than air. “Everything is… going to be okay.”

Seeing Anna alive… put a warm feeling in Hans’ empty chest. …What an odd sensation. “-UUH!” The prince was immediately stabbed through the stomach by Rukia, falling to his knees.

The SOUL Leader stabbed her sword in the ground and whirled her arms. A spiral of snow circled around and around Hans and Elsa, glowing gold as it did. Starting at their feet, their ghostly bodies turned gold for 2 seconds before scattering into tiny stars. “E-Elsa…” stuttered Anna. “Wh… Where are you…”

The last of Elsa’s warm, smiling face was beginning to scatter. “I enjoyed every minute with you… Anna… live… happily.”

And what remained of Hans and Elsa’s souls became particles of light. Flying up to the heavens, where the dark clouds had blown away, to take their place among the stars. The hilt of Hans’ dark sword clanged onto the ground, as Suki picked it up with her curious young eyes.

Coraline approached Anna with a warm smile, spindling a sweater together to put over her form. “You probably have some questions. Well… I did, too.”

“Suki.” The child turned to the handsome white-haired teen. “I… can’t thank you enough. Ever since I died, my deepest regret was that I couldn’t bring Elsa to the Spirit World. If Polaris weren’t looking after me, I might’ve ended up a Hollow, too. I’m sorry I… dragged you all into this.”

“How ‘bout you promise to only bug Suki when she isn’t with us?” Terry inquired.

“Heheh. I’ll think about it. But Suki, I… There’s another reason I brought you here. I wanted to test a theory. …Come with me.”

And Jack soared into the castle, Suki curiously chasing. The others of Sector IC quickly followed suit. “Watch over Anna.” Rukia told her team, going to join the humans. (Play “The First Mask” from Rayman 2!)

Jack Frost guided Suki down a spiraling staircase to a deep underground chamber, almost nothing but a dark chasm, with a single, cylindrical platform in the center. A path was all that led up to the foothold, starting flat on their end, but turning vertical as it swirled up and around it. Jack and Suki exchanged nods as the child skied forward first, gliding around and around the spiral pathway at great speed on an icy path. She came to a perfect stop at the top, standing before a strange, stone cube with ancient writing.

Rukia instead created an icy stairway to allow Sector IC onto the platform, as Suki’s vibrant eyes were wide with wonder. They watched as the seven-year-old approached the ruin, entranced by its echoing call that only she could hear. When she stood just a few feet from it, she stopped and presented Hans’ sword, which brimmed blue and floated up to sink inside the ruin. The entire stone glowed blue before that light instantly flew into Suki. Everyone stared at her with wonder, glowing for 10 seconds before the light faded. Suki studied her hands and feet for anything strange, but she didn’t look different. But it felt as though a part inside of her was just awakened. …And it felt great.

Suki awakened herself as the SECOND LIGHT! Only 5 more to go!

Feeling the need to smile greatly, she did so and jumped joyously in place. It was then the text on the stone glowed, and it became all too clear to Suki’s mind. “Here lies our fabled Gibberish Rock, made to baffle royals for eons. To anyone who’s able to translate it, congratulations, you must be the Chosen One. You are one of the ones who will open the door, and the power you possess will be of great importance in some point in time. There are 6 others like this, and in time, they will find them. Just don’t keep us waiting too long. –Ichigo Kurosaki’.”

“Just when you think she couldn’t get any weirder.” Terry remarked.

“Is that really what it says, Suki?” MaKayla asked.

“Well, yeah. Can’t you READ it?”

“If it was written by little kids, then no.” Terry said.

“Ichigo...” spoke Rukia under her breath.

“Is something wrong, Rukia?” Jack asked.

“Um… nothing. Let’s go.” Everyone else went first exiting the chamber, but Rukia stayed behind and stared at the ruin. The transparent image of an orange-haired teenager with a white shirt and khaki pants seemed to sport her a smile, with slanted eyes. Rukia shook this off and zipped away. She wondered if she would see him for real… (End song.)

Outside

After 3 centuries of darkness and blizzards, the morning sun began to rise over the mountains of Arendelle. Sector SOUL helped IC locate the latter’s crashed S.C.A.M.P.E.R., and the timebenders easily restored it to normal. “We’re sorry about everything that’s happened, Anna.” Rukia told her.

“So… Elsa’s gone, huh.” Anna frowned. “And I’m all that’s left of Arendelle…”

“Yes, but after all these years, your sister is free of her troubles. We will ensure her peace in the Spirit World.”

“Well then… I’m glad she’s finally happy.” Anna smiled. “Maybe I should try to continue her legacy… I should try to revive Arendelle!”

“I shall call my father and his Nightmares to assist you!” Jack S. declared. “And perhaps you can work at his factory, until we fix up your kingdom.”

“Then it’s good we were around to help, too.” Miyuki noted.

“What did Hans mean by, like, the ‘Hearts of all Worlds’.” Lola thought aloud.

“The idea is that each world possesses a ‘Heart’; a core in which all of its energy is focused.” Rukia explained. “Naturally a planet would need a tremendous amount of energy to support its inhabitants, and couldn’t just rely on the gods forever. So when they created the worlds, they placed ‘Hearts’ inside of their cores, providing a continuous amount of energy. Some Hearts are evidently stronger than others, as is observed by the amount of diversity one could immediately see. And they’re the most sought-after force by Heartless and Hollows, because if the Hearts are destroyed, death and darkness is imminent.”

“I can’t imagine this world’s Heart is very strong.” Lola assumed.

“Well, certain Hearts provide the energy for certain worlds. Glacia possesses a Frozen Heart, most likely. And I think, it was from that very energy, Polaris used to give Elsa’s ancestors their powers. The Reapers are normally sent to stop these Hollows, but now it’s become the SKND’s duties to stop them, too.”

“Then it’ll probably be something we have to worry about.” Miyuki assumed.

“Maybe it will.” MaKayla agreed. “But we’ll worry about that later, we can’t stay. We’re supposed to be rescuing a friend of ours.”

“We appreciate your help, Sector IC.” Rukia nodded. “May we meet each other again one day.”

“Yeah. You know, uh, before we die.” George smiled sheepishly.

“Yo Cora, let’s play dolls sometime, wanna?” Lola perked.

“Hm hm, sure.” Coraline smirked.

“…Eh. Why not.”

“See you later, you guys!” George waved as they returned to their S.C.A.M.P.E.R. “And thanks for watching Suki and Miyuki.”

“Good-BYYYYYYEE!” Suki exclaimed with joy as they took off for the clear heavens.

“Take care!” Rukia called as her team waved.

Midway Peak

The TV was not working right today. Monkeys…monkeys…more monkeys… this was quality programming today… much to the dislike of one, dissatisfied viewer. Benjamin. The shadowed woman said. “Didn’t I tell you to fix the satellite?”

“I-I-I checked it this morning, Mizz, clearly there is some kind of interference.”

“…Well.” The woman held an arm out and, when the remote floated to her hand, turned off the tele. “I guess I won’t be entertaining myself tonight.” She stood up. “It’s time to go to my meeting.” And very slowly, she walked to the exit, the clacking of her boots echoing within the darkness.

So ‘tis our honored guest. Next time, Cheren arrives at the climax of his mission. He will meet… his target. Stay tuned.
Chapter Summary

Cheren Uno finally meets the Leader of the Corporate Presidents.

I hope you enjoyed the Frozen adventure, ‘cause things will be getting real very soon. Starting by meeting someone familiar.

Chapter 11: That Which Should Not Be Named

Django’s Train

Django relaxed back on his seat, feasting on a variety of grotesque food, tasty only on a skeleton’s tongue, a sandwich of dead worms, rotted cooked baboon spleen, and various cooked lower body parts of animals. “You sure you guys don’t want some?” he asked Sector V.

They felt like they would throw up their very intestines just watching him. “No thanks.” Aurora answered, eyes weeping in hunger.

“You guys and your weak stomachs, this is luxury suite.” He smirked as he slurped down caterpillar juice.

“….So uh, Django, you said you had… info on the Brotherhood?” asked Aurora, trying to ease her weeping.

Django spent the next 10 seconds chugging his juice, then released a tired, lazy sigh. “I dunno.” They all collapsed in a second.

“HEY, THE ONLY REASON WE LET YOU JOIN US IS SO YOU’LL TELL US WHAT YOU KNOW!” screamed Haruka. “We coulda EASILY broke outta there on our own!”

“All I know is that they’re looking for these yo-yo things so they can awaken this, creature, and somethin’ somethin’ somethin’, using a Firstborn to stop the Apocalypse.”

“You are truly the most knowledgeable of all of us.” remarked Haylee.

“Well, what Firstborn would HAVE the potential to stop the Apocalypse?” Haruka asked. “If THAT were the case, why wouldn’t Arceus do anything about it?”

“I probably know one.” Chris mentioned, kicked back on his seat and not facing them. “The Firstborn I know best of all: Jirachi.”

“Of course!” Haylee smacked her forehead. “Just wish for the Apocalypse to not happen!”

“I thought his wishing powers were extinguished.” Harry inquired. “Unless only Dimentia can make wishes for him, so maybe they tryin’ to get ‘er.”

“They did use Jirachi to make that Regeneration Potion for Brain, right?” Artie asked.
“Well, assuming Dimentia still had Jirachi, it feels a little too easy for something we’re making a big deal over.” Dillon followed.

“In all fairness, the Brotherhood was never really smart.” Aurora said doubtfully. “It probably won’t work.”

“Look, we still have to save Midna.” Dillon told Django. “Can’t we turn back for her?”

“Relax, I already got some guys on that.” the skeleton told them surely. “I’ll beam ‘em my location once they call. Oh, and they might wanna join, too.”

“Okay, we’re gonna have to set up a sector in Miracle City, ‘cause Sector V can’t take anymore members.” Aurora stated. “And how do we know you aren’t going to give us away?”

“Cause I’m a skeleton with a badass guitar, there’s no one else you can trust.”

“Sigh, sure. Let’s head back home and see if Cheren’s back yet, he’ll want to know all this.”

“Great, I can let the boss himself know I’m coming.” Django grinned casually.

“Yes, he’ll definitely need his heads-up.” remarked Dillon.

Dream Realm; Hall of Doors

Sheila jumped out of the portal to Miracle City – represented by a Spanish chef searching through a cabinet, and the portal in Waking Water to signify it was in the real world – then rushed to the next portal labeled Land of Toads, represented by a bunch of huge dangling branches that looked alive. Sheila dove inside for the venture. (Play “Toad Story” from Rayman Legends.)

Stage 18: Land of Toads

Mission: Find the Chief Toad.

The scent of thousands of droplets of mist hit Sheila’s nose, and her very skin steadily became cooler and wetter in this foggy, misty air. The most gigantic swamp Sheila had ever seen, with tremendous yellow-green vines, the most soggy plant ground, surrounded by sludgy green water. It was a very different air… very strange… unbearably peaceful. Every direction, Sheila’s raccoon ears picked up every sound, croaks and fribbits and the buzzing of flies, the flies being snatched in whip-like tongues, the cawing of exotic birds, dozens more sounds Sheila couldn’t name. Everything was in harmony in this swamp… everything at peace… and now… Sheila was at peace, too. She didn’t want to walk anymore… she wanted to fall down… and sleep.

“WAIT A MINUTE, WHAT’M I SAYING?” Her outburst disturbed all the peace in the swamp. “I’M NOT SLOWING DOWN FOR ANYTHING YOU STUPID SWAMP, YOU HEAR ME?!?” And so, she marched forward while Murfy blabbered away.

“Ahhh, the Land of Toads. Lot of action goin’ on HERE, huh? So this is where the Chief Toad is, and he’s gonna tell us where the Firstborn are. Which, if you wanna heads-up-”

“Murfy?”

“Yeah?”

“Shut up.”
Sheila walked up to the first huge, soggy tree and climbed a vinewall up and around to a huge branch. The branch swayed back and forth, but when it was leftward, it was beside a dangling vine which Sheila grabbed onto, climbed and swung to another, and then onto another huge branch. But her raccoon ears picked up a very faint “He...p...m..c”, and looking back down, through the very mist into the green water, tiny little bubbles were popping on the surface. Sheila dove back down and splashed in the liquid, her vision totally blinded by the murky sludge. She alit her fist with light for a much better view, and saw the cage full of drowning Electoons. She punched it open, and the creatures happily swam to freedom.

She made her way back onto the high branch and from there entered its tree through a hole. She jumped up a few small platforms as Piranha Plants attempted to snack her from the walls, but with a single Light Punch, they retreated into their holes. She came out another hole onto a branch above a very breezy chasm, the wind softly blowing skyward. Whirling her tail, Sheila calmly floated up with the breeze, while Hoodlums on parachutes tried to shoot her down, but one quick punch was all they needed to fall. The breeze ended at level with the top of a cliff, but behind her was another hole in the tree which she entered, and found a vine enclosing with a cage at the other end. She tried to shoot Light Spheres, but the vines whipped in the way and blocked her, and they bound her feet if she tried to go farther.

Sheila decided to head out of there to find a solution. But it seemed a few more Hoodlums were slowly descending on parachutes, making a stairway to behind the tree, so Sheila used their ‘chutes like platforms and floated to the top of the vine cage. She got above where the cage was, Ground Pounded, and burst through to break it open. The vines didn’t bother stopping her as she left, and proceeded to the land beyond the cliffside. It was a hot springs-like area with many round, murky pools emitting steam, the “CROAKS” louder than ever as giant toads lay in place, and could easily be mistaken as yellow, puffing boulders with little black warts on their skin.

“So in your next level, you’re gonna face your first boss,” Murfy’s voice said beyond the mist, “and it’s that cloud thing from Yoshi’s Story, as babyish as that was. I really don’t understand the tone o’ this story, we have all these kid-friendly happy-fun levels, then we got Freddy’s later where Sandman gets his head ripped off, this story really doesn’t have a specific target audience, just any shlomo willing to read. Well, I’m not the one putting the price tag on, so who to complain.”

There were also regular green frogs with wide smiles on their faces and half-closed eyes, as if they were buddies just relaxing in a hot tub, drinking martinis. There were also fat frogs on inflatable rafts, which served as excellent bounceable platforms to propel Sheila higher. She could also splash in the hot springs to soothe her weary skin, but the frogs didn’t mind. She explored the area to grab the Yellow Lums laying around before making her way up the springs, and she couldn’t quite relax with a Hoodboom chucking grenades at her from the mist. How did these toads relax through that?

She finally found the small ledge where the bombs were coming from, in which the bomber chucked it through the hole of a sturdy wooden wall. While bouncing on a fat frog – the only way to get at level with the ledge, she grabbed a grenade, tossed it back through, and destroyed the Hoodlum. A red can flew out of the fence, and when Sheila touched it, a light erupted from its lid as red garb appeared on her body, with strong metal fists. “Wa-hey, you found the Strong Suit! Those fists can beat anything, so don’t expect ‘em to last long.” explained Murfy. So using her stronger fists, Sheila broke down the fence and entered the path.

It was very narrow and between seaweed-like stalks, until Sheila arrived at a large pond of piranhas and had to jump a few platforms, using her Strong Fist to break a wooden door down. Her power wore off as she reached a small cliff, where several slopes zigzagged left and right ‘til at the top. A wooden wall was up there, and with no Strong Suit, Sheila had to carry a discarded powder keg up the slopes. Small rocks were rolled down the slopes, so at regular intervals, Sheila tossed her keg to the air, jumped, and avoided the rocks as she grabbed it again. She chucked the keg to blow open the wall once she made it, heading up the narrow slope where the rocks were still coming from.

Sheila climbed a short rock wall onto a path at the very base of a towering mountain, drums beating in the distance. “AaaaAAAAH!” A Toad Warrior came falling down the mountain, recovering and raising its sword as he charged at Sheila, who kicked him over the edge. “Whoa, seems they’re havin’ a fight.” Murfy figured. “They don’t like intruders when they’re angry. Better watch out.”

Two more Toad Warriors fell over a large gap in the path and whipped open their parachutes, which Sheila used as platforms to jump to a higher ledge. She then entered a large enclosing within the mountain where Toads were battling Hoodlums, in which Hoodmonger Officers easily wiped them out with their three-bullet guns. Before a Hoodmonger could finish a weakened Toad, Sheila ran in and swung her foot to misdirect it, the leg and the rifle pushing against the other before the Hoodlum whipped it back to aim at her, but Sheila performed a quick spin and knocked him away. Two more officers ran at her, but Sheila flipped back and spun double Light Fists, jumping their bullets and blasting her fists to wipe them out instantly. Hoodloons were taking turns flapping down then, but one Light Sphere was still enough to defeat them until the last one dropped a Power Can.

She destroyed a few boulders holding down floating platforms with her Strong Fists, then was able to hurry up a tall slope and jump the gaps using the platforms, then destroyed the wooden door leading to the next area. She spun her tail and floated over a wide windy chasm where Lavomatrix – two metal tanks floating with helicopters, hovered on either side of her and began blasting. She slumped a little when one of the tanks grazed her tail, but regained herself as she spun a Strong Fist and destroyed one’s cannon. But her power wore off then, so Sheila narrowly avoided their shots as she spun her left fist,whirling a Light Sphere around one and damaging from behind. She winced when the other one’s bullet struck her rear, gritting her teeth in annoyance as she whirled several Light Spheres around it ‘til it was down. As for the last one, she flipped upside-down so its bullet zipped between her legs, then sent a Light Kick around its back to destroy it as well.

A barred gate on a new ledge opened as Sheila floated in. Another wide enclosing where several walkway platforms led up to a high ledge, but the lowest one was guarded by an Armed Spinneroo, a metal-armored Hoodlum that wouldn’t let Sheila through. A Hoodmonger possessed a Power Can, but was protected by a barrier created by a Hoodoo, who only appeared when Sheila tried to attack. It was easy to lure him out and destroy him before proceeding to defeat the Monger, giving Sheila the Strong Suit. She steadily punched the Spinneroo up the platforms – Fat Frogs were there to bounce him to higher ones, ‘til the Hoodlum was knocked into a boiling spot where he was cooked into froggy stew.

Sheila made it on a pathway to an exterior of the mountain, where bands of Toad Warriors were screeching and rushing down with spears raised, still deeming Sheila the enemy as she readied to kick them, but saw more closely that Doomtoons were gnawing their heads. Sheila dealt swift kicks, knocked the Toads out, and knocked the Doomtoons off, then proceeded to punch their eyes out with Light Fists (literally). At the top of the slope, she entered the mountain again, where Fat Frogs rested on floating inflatable rafts, blown up by a strong draft below. Of course, she could easily propeller up the draft, but not when she had to carry a powder keg. Holding the heavy bomb, she could walk off the ledge onto the first frog and bounce only partway, but the draft kept her levitated enough to get to the next frog and so forth, while Heli-Doomtoons flew around to disrupt her progress.

Once close enough, she chucked the keg at the wood wall and could progress into the new enclosing. A great vine wall stretched up the mountain, many Toads falling from the top and many Hoodlum blimps patrolling around it. Sheila knocked out a few angry Toads before beginning her exciting ascent, having to avoid Hoodlums blasting cannons and making rocks above collapse and pour down rubble. Along a left side of the ladder, four Doomtoons were carefully circling around a cage, but when she climbed over, in the Hoodlums’ attempt to cannon her, they missed and blew the cage open instead, destroying the Dooms. Sheila continued to climb, avoiding screaming falling Toads that wanted to slit her during descent, and many areas of the vines were collapsing due to the Hoodlums’ constant bombing.

Her ears were already ringing by the time she made it onto a narrow path along the left. She couldn’t get away from these bomb-happy freaks fast enough, but as she rushed up a zigzag path, a blue toad-like creature, with a round flat head and standing on only two feet, came running down the slope, his mouth wide. “AAAAAAAHHH!”

“Globox?” Murfy queried, Sheila spinning around when the toad zipped by. “What’s his… AHH!” Ahead, a Hoodmonger was rushing down for attack. “Sheila, look out!” Murfy zipped up and struggled in tug-o-war over its gun. “This guy’s André, the Black Lum boss! Quick, punch him!”

Starting to attention, Sheila whirled her fist, ran to the ordinary-looking Monger, and laid a powerful punch. Like the others, a Black Lum flew out, but what made him stand out were his skinny three-claw arms, and dim-red pupils. He buzzed up to Sheila, “So YOU’RE the buzz-killer killin’ all my Hoodlums, well wait’ll Mr. Dark gets a load about this!” He spoke faster than Murfy reading the manual. “Have fun while ya can, ‘cause once we take over the Dream World, we’re turning you into Raccoon Stew! I hope there’s plenty o’ juice in ya, huehehahahahaha!” He buzzed away. (End song.)

“Andy, come baaaaack!” Globox came back, crying after the Lum. “You were still IT, I’m sorry if I ran too fast!”

“So wait, you two’re buddies?” questioned Sheila.

“Uh, he has a condition where he can’t recognize enemies as enemies, so don’t worry about comin’ off too rude.” Murfy informed.

“Oo said I was worryin’ about bein’ rude? You’re real wonked in the head, you know that??”

“Aww, it’s okay to be bashful.” Globox smiled goofily. “I’m always happy to make new friends. Hey, you’re different! Are you some kinda worm-cat, you’re not from around here, are ya?”

“Man, I’M Sheila Frantic, and Oi’m a wereraccoon. Now ah you this Chief Toad, ‘cause I’m gettin’ really sleepy here.”

“Oh no, that guy is this way. Come on, I’ll take ya!”

Globox led them further up the hill, and it seemed they were finally at the top of the mountain. A cage dangled from a tree, so Sheila punched a sphere and broke it. It wasn’t Electoons, but a green frog with slanted yellow eyelids, white bushy brows and beard, a white belly, and an open black shirt. “You have my gratitude.” spoke the frog in a deep, British-ish voice, blowing bubbles from his pipe. “I must say, I’ve met many a kind child lately. Hmmhhmmhhm.”

“Oi, ah you the Chief Toad?” asked Sheila.

“Hmmh, no. I am Don Gero. I must say, I have only been home for 6 months, as I spent the last 6,000 years trapped in the form of some demented lizard, at the hands of a demon. You go through many trials by the time you’re my age, hhmhmhmhm.”

“I hope, Mate. But where’s the Chief Toad?”

“Sage Gamamaru, you must mean. This way, if you please.” So the frog hopped away, to a village area roamed by Toads, and brought them to a rather large, wooden structure that was wide open, though dark inside. A few smaller, hippo-sized Toads were crouched around, but Sheila’s eyes directed at the one sitting in the center.

“‘EY! AH YOU the Chief TOOOAD?”

He was a a massive and fat toad, 3 stories high, old and wrinkly with dry lips, eyes only open in small slits, and pale orange-red skin. “Ooooo... am I a toad?”

“He’s got memory problems.” Murfy said. “Old people, right?”

“Ooooo... yes... You are Sheila Frantic... aren’t you.”

“Heeh.” Sheila smirked and scratched her nose. “Already famous.”

“Oooo... yes... you are one of Seven. And one of two... already awakened.”

“Two, eh. So another Light found their selves?”

“I see it... on Glacia... it has happened. Oooo... but so much more... there is to go. So many dangers... very great battles...”

“You aren’t scarin’ me with that. I’ll waste ‘em all!”

“Nooo... others will... live? No, die... There will be life, and death... croooak. But more on that later. What were those things you need... First...b..?”

“The Eight Firstborn?”

“No, there are nine. Er, ten? Eleven?... I lost count. Err, well you need them... because, there is something you need. Something very important. I forget what it’s called... oh, but they are a pair. One of them... was found.”

“Um, ‘kay? But where are the Firstborn?”

“The Firstborn... yes... they are... scattered. Across the universe. Living amongst the mortals. Croak... and they need their new Guardians... to awaken themselves, croooak.”

“Man, you’re boring.” Sheila sighed. “Can’t we speed through this? Whaddya mean they’re living with mortals, ya mean they turned human?”

“Croak... no... but they must be found soon... to open the door.”

“I don’t suppose ya’ll tell me what the door is?”

“My prophecies don’t come cheap. And my mind is... a bit foggy. Croak... but I do see something. Someone very dear to your hearts... is about to leave you.”

“You mean one of me mates is ‘bout to die??”

“Croak... he is about to be gone... facing powers he cannot comprehend. He will exist in your “Blimey.” Sheila frowned. She doesn’t think she can bear to lose one of her mates. She wondered just how long this person had. “Hope it isn’t Mason. Is anybody else going to die?”

“A few people... croak... but none more so than is necessary. I will tell you this: you must die... in order to live.”

“Well, that’ll sound right in their ears then.”

“I know it seems like a lot of blabber, but Sage Gamamaru makes very accurate prophecies.” Don Gero assured. “Why, if you heard what he predicted for me, your heads might just implode upon themselves.” He blew 3 bubbles.

“Mate, I’ve seen MANY things that made my head implode on itself... but it goes down after a day or two. But as the daughter of Golden-Fist Marine, I’ve prepared to keep my head sane against anything!”

“Let’s see... there was a bit more... A green light... I seem to see that. Surrounded by darkness... no physical form... it is very pretty. Very pretty indeed.”

“Yeah, I touched a few bug-zappers meself.” Sheila remarked.

“Ummm... and something about... a princess... bringing doom and destruction. Or did that already happen... yawn, I need a break.”

“Yaaaaawn. Me too.” said Sheila with half-closed eyes. “I wanna move on already. Aren’t we supposed to be finding this Rayman?”

“Ooo! I know where Rayman is!” Globox perked. “I saw them take him that way!” He pointed that way. “If we hurry, we could see ‘im!” He ran off.

“Well, if you’ve nothing more for me, I’m headin’ off.” And with that, Sheila followed the blue Toad.

“Croooak... that man has a marvelous purple cape.”

And as Sheila jumped in the Exit Portal after Globox, it was set in stone: that was the most boring post-stage scene ever.

Midway Peak

“At our castle, we have five pools, but it’s mostly for the servants since most of us can’t swim.” Doflamingo Jr. was saying to a pink-dressed girl with brown hair and a powdery face, who didn’t look at all interested. “‘Cause you know, gotta give them something to work for.”

“My grades were so high in first grade,” Chane was saying to a teen girl, “they let me skip to 4th, then I joined the Pop-culture Club just to see what it was like for regular people, and well, they kinda have some neat stuff, but more importantly-”

Wanting to get away from the riffraff, Carol Masterson walked to a back table where Mom’s sons were sitting. “Hey, you don’t mind if I sit here a bit, do—YAAAAAH!” Someone under the table cupped Carol’s mouth shut and pulled her under.

“Nnnnyaaaaah I knew Table Gnomes were real!” Larry panicked.
“No Berry Bunny for you.” Walt took his dessert away.

“Mmm-mm-mm!” Carol desperately tried to shake away, but-“Shhhh!” Cheren loosened his grip once she looked at him.

“Ch…Cheren?” the rich girl whispered. “What’re you doing here?”

“Long story short, I’m on a mission to kill the Head President.”

“You know, there are better ways to express your anger over not being invited.”

“I know, just help cover me while I wait, okay? These guys are already with me, and that businesslady, Mom.”

“Okay, well, do you want me to cover you when all these rich guys send the hounds at you for killing their boss??”

“I dunno what—I’m still figuring it out. I just… need to know more about these people behind the scenes. The Government. I wasn’t sure where to start in this whole Apocalypse, but this is my first and only chance. If things go wrong, I want you to contact Panini with this.” He handed her his 4DS. “I’ll be counting on you. And, good luck on your training.”

Carol had many queries racing around her head, but couldn’t put them together now, so she climbed out and left Cheren to himself. The boy kept a close eye on the party from under the curtains, and the doors at the top of the stairway. Any moment now, the Head President would appear…

Cyberspace

A tight race taking place at Sugar Rush, with Vanellope von Schweetz taking the lead, Taffyta close on her tail. The two passed devious grins to each other, but Vanellope had no intention of letting her pass. It was inevitable as Vanellope was holding the trophy at the end.

A giant cake was baked as Vanellope and Candlehead were in a race to see who could eat the most. A tickle fell on Vanellope’s nose, causing her to sneeze and blow Candlehead’s candle out, and when the girl fell into panic, Vanellope accomplished victory.

A wild time at the Candy Bar, where Vanellope and Rancis raced to see who could guzzle the most soda. Rancis had an overfizz, and Vanellope was soon standing on the table, cheering in victory and kicking other soda jugs away.

Before they knew it, Sugar Rush was under attack by XANA and his armies. The Kolossus stomped across the candy plains and crushed many of the brave tasty warriors. It punched Vanellope to the ground and raised its sword to stab her. Taffyta, Candlehead, and Rancis jumped in the way and blocked the sword together, with Taffyta sparing a smile to Vanel before their bodies derezzed. Vanellope was able to make it to XANA, dodging all of his attacks and infecting his body. With a great burst of her digital energy, XANA was sealed away.

Vanellope awoke in a pitch-black room on a small table. “Boo, hoo, hoo.” A familiar, caped figure marched out from the darkness. “Poor, poor Vanel.”

She kept a calm, cool look as XANA revealed himself, a malicious grin on his digital face. “I bet you never thought you’d see me again- &^#.” His face glitched into that of King Candy/Turbo’s before reverting.
“I’m sorry, who are you?” she asked quizzically.

“What- *^#?!” He became furious. “Whaddyou MEAN, who am I? Don’t you remember ANYthing, stupid girl? Attempted to conquer the KND mainframe, imprisoned me at the cost of your own life, revived you with a lack of memory and called you my daughter, abused and forced you to find the means to awaken me, got you to befriend a simple little boy and break his heart when he learned you betrayed him, left YOU high and dry when I no longer needed you, then you miraculously got your memory back and ultimately obliterated me?? RING A BELL?”

“Sorry man, but I dunno anything like that.” She shook her head.

“Ohh- ()*&% no matter. I’ve long forgotten the past, anyway.” He paced around. “Not when our future’s so bright! We are inside a very intriguing place, Vanel. Would you like to guess what that is?”

“Uhhhh-” Glitch, “Canada?”

“NNNNNNOOO!! This is the bridge to the world that will be! This is the very confines of… THE NEW WORLD!!” When XANA indicated outside of their dark chamber, Vanellope saw they were over some kind of lava sea, with many metal islands of giant gears. “Lord Gnik has sent me here to have everything prepared for when he is finally ready to come, and YOU will HELP ME.” He jabbed a finger at Vanel. “Not just for me, but for your friends, too, because we want nothing more than their sure-as-sugar safety. So… is it agreed?” He held a hand down, grinning slyly.

Vanellope only stared at him. This guy was a real creep. “LESSER Lord.”

“Ehh, what?” XANA turned when the Zoni appeared.

“The one you speak of… is LESSER LORD.”

“Ahh, Lesser Lord, Shmesser Lord. If you care about your little buddies back on Earth, you haven’t really a choice. So… is it a deal?” He held his hand down again.

Vanellope looked between him, the Zoni, and the lava pit below. “Well, if it’s really the only way, then… naturally, I won’t believe you!”

“Wh-Whaaaat?” She took XANA by surprise when she leapt into the pit. “Heeeeey! Come back here, you stupid girl! COME BAAAAAAAAACK- &*$%^#)(” After ragingly stomping his foot, he stopped to calm down. “Oh, I knew we shouldn’t’ve let Dr. Nefarious implant his personality into me…” (Play “Medium – Heat/Clockwork” from Homestuck.)

Stage 19: Land of Heat and Clockwork

Mission: Follow the Zoni.

All it was was an endless sea of boiling lava, and metal refineries of giant gears floating everywhere. Vanellope jumped some floating turning gears, avoiding fireballs that shot up between them as the platforms inch ed higher. They brought Vanellope to a lone metal platform of oil drums and a crane, where she met her first 3 Zoni. “We are here for you, Sire. Come, and we shall help you destroy it.” Vanellope still had no idea what “it” was, but the Zoni proceeded to take control of the crane and pull something up from beneath the magma. Stretching across a portion of the sea appeared to be an obstacle course for a 2-D side-scroller. Mario was what came to mind, except this looked totally messed up: little black Piranha Plants called Munchers were stationed on all floors, and many dangerous jumps were required to get through. “XANA has modified this world.”
the Zoni explained. “He has tampered with powers beyond his own. You must fix, or your friends may never survive.”

Vanel saw that a Red Koopa was pacing before the course’s base. She jumped on and stole its shell, and with extreme careful precision, she bounced on the shell across the Munchers, having to repeatedly grab it at the same time she jumped, to use it over and over. She kicked it above two close walls which she Wall Jumped afterward, grabbing the shell again to precisely bounce it between narrow enclosings of Munchers. At the end of the Muncher Road, Vanellope was forced to jump high, kick the shell forward so it bounced off a small floating block with a Muncher, bounce off the shell and over the Muncher when it came back, then glitched around a few more floating Munchers onto a safe floating gear.

From here was a series of small floating blocks with Firebars rotating slowly. Very far apart, Vanellope could only reach them via glitching, able to manage 3 glitches at a time with each Zoni.
She timed them carefully to avoid getting burned, but soon the blocks were much too far to reach.
However, Vanel noticed a Zoni on a higher block, able to glitch her way to it and recruit. “Zoni.”
With one extra glitch, she could zap her way to the farther blocks, having to zap up a stairway of double-Firebars before she landed on a gear. She looked down and saw an even larger gear in the lava below, taking a mighty leap and using her Glitchwarp to dodge the many streams of fire that emerged out of midair.

Taking land on the gear, a gang of XANA Creepers, Kankrelats, and Krabs spawned out of thin air, sights locked on the glitch. When they shot the first lasers, Vanellope glitched around and lightspeed-kicked several Creeps and Kanks, knocking them in the lava. She dealt a rapid storm of multiple kicks against the Krabs until they fell, and when 10 Kankrelats/Creepers surrounded her, in a single cirly blue zip, the monsters fell dead. The Zoni then flew over one part of the sea and flashed their arms, causing two parallel series of pillars with cannons to rise from the flames. They all started blasting Bullet Bills, but none too many at a time, and were fairly unclear of when they would fire, making it difficult for Vanel as she jumped and glitched across them. The Bill river curved right as Vanel kept up her careful jumps, but eventually their route came to an end.

XANA Hornets were buzzing over a vast area of the sea, so Vanellope continued her jumping spree using them as sacrifices. They were coming to be really far apart, forcing her to time her glitches carefully. To the left, she saw a lone gear with a Zoni to the distance, glitching to it when ready to recruit the creature. “Zoni.” She continued her venture over the Hornets before they eventually ended, and she went plummeting toward the sea. But when just inches from the red, a Bullet Bill shot outta nowhere and bounced her up. More Bills poofed out of thin air and kept her going, her digital heart racing as she wondered where they might appear, and she also spotted a Pswitch and spring fall out of nowhere and quickly grabbed them both before they hit the lava.

She landed on a new gear platform, and her next trial was a floating ceiling of spikes with many walls and obstructions, and leaping all around and out of the lava were happy, carefree dolphins.
Not red dolphins that would be adapted to the fire, ordinary water dolphins that survived in the lava somehow, and could go through the walls, though Vanellope wouldn’t be able to. So she hopped the swarm of jumping dolphins around the tight corners and many Munchers, keeping a tight grip on her spring and P-switch. The dolphins eventually brought her to a series of floating coins, aligned like platforms, and when she briefly pushed the P-switch—grabbing hold of the spring again immediately—the coins turned into sturdy block platforms she began rushing over, needing to fling herself to higher ones with the spring, while grabbing it again the same time she bounced.

She hurriedly raced to the end of the platforms when their time was running out, and seeing the huge gap that lay afterward, she took a running jump and leapt, throwing the spring beneath her for an extra boost, then glitched the rest of the way onto a gear in the lava. Fireballs jumping from the lava led across now, so Vanellope jumped across them via spin-jumps. She was making her way under a giant refinery, taking land on a stable platform where XANA Mags – lava centipedes with big pincers and XANA’s eye in-between, crawled out of the lava to snap Vanel between their scissor-like pincers. When they opened wide to pinch, that was her cue to zip up, kick ‘em in the eyes, and make them curl and cool.

Just like before, she managed to grab two of them like one with her glitchy prowess. But since the only way across were once again fireballs, she had to put them down, pick them up again mid-spin-jump, and begin bouncing the fireballs, ‘cause that’s how that glitch works. Every now and then, she had to kick them to the air and grab ‘em again before they uncurled, and the fireballs steadily bounced higher the farther she got. One of them eventually flew as high as the refinery’s ledge, so Vanel could hop on. As she approached the building in the center, swarms of Megatanks, Bloks, and two Scyphozoas appeared to greet her. She set the Mags down and smirked wittingly, gesturing them forward with her fingers.

They began blasting, but Vanel glitched around and started kicking the Bloks in the eyes, but had a trickier time dodging the Megatanks’ expanding barriers. But there were too many around, attacking from every direction, and soon Vanellope was knocked off her feet. That’s when the Scyphozoa wrapped its slim, clear tentacle around her, touched them to all sides of her head, and began to absorb her very data. She felt entranced by its very appearance, and didn’t want to escape it at all. Just staring mindlessly… as her very essence merged with it.

The Zoni immediately threw energy spheres and attacked the squids, freeing Vanellope from the grasp. “The powers you must show, Sire.” The Zoni presented a sphere that switched many neon colors, with a circle symbol with a ‘+’ on its down-left. "Awaken with this."

The monsters still attacking her, Vanellope zipped up and dealt an array of rapid kicks against the Smash Ball. It shattered, and her body glowed with neon aura, her eyes yellow. “Guh-Guh-Guh-GLI-I-I-I-I-I-I-I-I-…” In a blink, the pitch-black sky, rocky gray refinery, and fiery red sea all flashed an assortment of colors, their pixels showing, and the entire cyberspace glitched. After 10 seconds, the world flashed back to normal, and all of the monsters were over the chasm. In a fashion like Wile Coyote, they dropped into the lava sea. The XANA Mags were still available, and all Vanellope needed ‘em for was to hold down two switches. A huge garage door opened, so Vanellope entered the building. (End song.)

Vanellope hid behind some large crates, watching the sight unfurl. Two gangs were clearly in a squabble, a crew of pitch-black beings in gray coats and one of sickly green beings in same-colored coats. Vanellope noted how crudely designed they were. “So wat’s the deal of meetin’ us hea’, seee?” a green guy asked.

“You know why weuh heuh. You work for the You-Know-Who, see?” a black guy replied.

“Oh, enemies of the Boss, are ya?”

“Yah, you know your Boss ain’t nothin’ more than stardust, see?”

“They say that about everyone, seee, but I knows he’s-a burnin’ out there, maybe-a over there.”

“Well, if he’s-a out here, show me da proof, seee?”

There was a soft, echoey “Ooooo” and Vanellope saw it: a strange, green glimmer of light floating into a window. Well, not so much a glimmer, more of a… Shimmer.
“AAAAH! IT’S IT! IT’S IT! SHOOOOOT!” On the black guy’s cue, both sides furiously blasted the other with guns. It was only a matter of seconds before they both fell dead.

Vanellope walked out as the Shimmer hovered above the center. Its mystic green glow reflected off her big round eyes, and the Zoni hovered behind her. “It’s HEEEERE… SIRE.”

“Uhhh… hello there.” Vanel greeted.

“Oooo.” Flash.

“Um… so what’s your name?”

“OooOOo!”

“Can’t tell me, huh? Well, um… do you know how to get back to Earth?”

“OOOoooo.”

“You’ve… been there before?”

“Oooo.”

“Several Earths, huh? Well… Ah dunno, one with Dillon on it?”

“OooooOOO!”

“What? Whaddyou mean Dillon’s dead?”

“Ooo.”

“Not THAT Dillon, the one who’s… Wait… how d’you know about that Dillon?”

“Ooo…OOOO!” And on that note, the Shimmer flew out the window, shrinking beyond the sky.

“HEEEEEY! Come back.”

“He was born out of its fire, He will be its Face.” The Zoni moaned in their creepy monotone.

“Uhhhh what was that?”

“It comes to CLAIM. It comes to SIRE. THE END OF EVERY RACE.”

Orbital Auditorium

The transport vessel brought Maddy, Drake, and Team Ratchet to a tremendous space station whose huge glass dome was flashing with colors. The loads of passengers, all of whom were dressed as though they were attending a high-schooler’s party, scrambled to get off, while the five heroes slowly followed behind. The transport zipped away the moment they got off, and Maddy, still under her cloak, studied the giant lobby with interest. “Soooo what is this place?”

“My friend,” Ratchet patted her back, “you are in Electrodrome.” (Play “Electrodrome” from Mario Kart 8!)

The following room was definitely the hugest disco party Maddy or Drake had ever seen. The stars of space loomed over the great glass dome above, and hanging in its center was a disco ball the size of a house. The stadium was mostly flashing purple, but at regular intervals it flashed yellow, green, red, any color. Techno music boomed throughout the stadium as aliens of many species danced with great enthusiasm. Stage lights of various colors zoomed everywhere, and there were dozens of giant TVs that switched screens showing different dancing groups. There was a single giant stage of three layers on the farthest side where slim, male and female alien dancers danced consecutively.

A great white cloud of smoke erupted from the pipes onstage, and a small shadowed figure rose from below. When the steam cleared, she was shone to be a fairy-like imp with what they deduced as a pretty white face with big dark-blue eyes with a gradient of black. She had same-colored hair in a ponytail much like the female dancers, but little black lines up it that looked a little like a music sheet. She wore a brown dress that ended above her waist, her stubby legs white like her face, and on the right side of her head was a microphone earpiece shaped like a treble clef.

“What-UUUUUP, Electrodroooome!” Her youthful spunky voice echoed across the dome, winking her large left eye. “This be your host, Spirit-Dancer Unova! Hope you’re ready for another night o’ partying, ‘cause we got a hot new concert TONIGHT! Let’s kick it off with a round from Yours Truly! Doooooon’t party out!” And she began a song with her lovely voice.

I see you lookin’, at me, oveeeeeeere theeeeeeere. Her voice matched the rhythm of the music, letting a flock of notes fly over part of the crowd.

I see you look away, when I tuuuurn to staaaare.

I know how you feel ’bout me
But never you let me do see

If it’s you wish… then please… just LEEEET your VOICE BE FREEEE!!

And she began to fly across the dome, a musical trail in her wake. Maddy and friends stared with wonder as her trail glowed neon, and many glittering notes rained down.

(Just free your voice.)

To the STAAAARS a-BOOOOVE

(Free your voice.)

To SHOOOOOW your LOOOOVE

(Free your voice!)

...And leeeet it seeeee- She returned to stage.

What it means. (DUN!) To live. (DUN!) In PERFECT harmonyyyyyy!

The two pipes on either side of her exploded with confetti and the dancers cheered. “I would guess Kateenians don’t come here often.” Drake assumed.

“Is THAT Courtney Gears?” asked Maddy.

“That is Unova, a regular singer here.” replied Clank. “I do not know her species, but she has a spectacular voice.” He unlatched himself from Ratchet’s back, “I will head to the roof and continue signaling for Maddy’s brother. If Nefarious’s drones come, you four will be easily able to hide among the crowds. Call if either of us run into trouble. Assuming you aren’t too preoccupied with “WHAT-UP, fellaaaaas?” Qwark slid in, in a new hip black jacket, white undershirt, black pants, sunglasses, and gold rings on his fingers that read ‘DAWG’ ‘GUNNIT’. “How d’you like Qwark’s new groooove? Don’t be surprised if I bring a few ladies with me by the time we leave.”

“Yeah, but shouldn’t one of us go with Clank, make sure he handles all right?” Drake queried.

“Not me!” Maddy had already thrown her cloak off, rocking her head to the groove. “I’m already pumped! Probly some hypnotic stuff in that music ‘cause I CAN’T STOP SHAKIN’!”

Drake whispered to Ratchet, “There is somethin’ very hypnotic, ‘cause she like never acts like this. Usually she’s a, sour dog.”

“Rrrright… Well uh, I’ll keep track of Clank with my Find-My-Robot app,” Ratchet held up a cellphone, “check if he’s on the roof doin’ his duties, and we can hide from Nefarious here. Watch your backs, guys.”

Stage 20: Electrodrome

Mission: See the Courtney Gears concert! (and wait for Zach to come, I guess)

So the trio began their dance in the hip, groovy dance club, navigating around several aliens whom were swaying so fast, they might just cause them notable damage. It seemed different parts of the floor were divided by digital pink rivers, with square platforms zipping around and around them, which the crew hopped one to reach another floor. A trio of Spinneruffs were dancing to the groove, then rapidly whirling their dogs around, though it seemed this was part of their dance and not trying to attack them. Regardless, Maddy hopped above and kicked a Spinneruff away while Ratchet and Drake both caught the others with grapplers and hurled them against each other. Their defeat made some Swingshot targets appear over a longer digital river, Drake holding Maddy as they all swung to a new path through the dance studio.

Pairs of Shy Guys were holding one end of a long limbo stick on either side of the path, stepping left and right as the trio had to slide under them, because if they jumped, a random laser would blast them. Once past the Groove Guys, they had to jump a series of black pipes over a digital ground, in which Groove Plants – black Piranha Plants with flashing neon spots, came out every now and then to dance to the beat, and snack anyone who jumped by. They had to jump the pipes fast before they came out, then swung two Swingshot targets to a square platform surrounded by digital. A duo of smaller platforms circled counterclockwise around a center, and lines of colorful beams flashed over them, horizontal and vertical, having to ride them across at right timing and jump off. However, when Drake had the impulse to be stylish and ride the platforms for five consecutive loops, avoiding the beams excellently, he earned a Skill Point.

After a minor zigzaggy path, they exited an archway to a hallway with a high ceiling, and Buffbod guards marching around, muscular aliens with rock-like bodies and black shirts, pants, and boots. As they approached the first guard, it tumbled forward to flatten Maddy and Drake, but the former managed to raise him with her own strength, arms trembling, and chucked him against the guard behind him. Drake pulled himself 3-dimensional again and blasted his harpoon at the first one’s rocky face when he recovered, and with his hook still latched, Ratchet ran across the rope and slammed a grenade in his face, then flipped overhead to blast a missile at the second one.

This hall led to a dead end, where it seemed the next door was high up near the ceiling, no way to get to it. However, some colorful spotlights moved diagonally across the walls, closer to the floor at the start of the room, and the heroes were able to Wall Jump these and not the actual walls for some reason. They timed their jumps carefully to catch the lights when they came, eventually making it into the door. This whole floor was a digital sea with small floating platforms that aliens were occupying, dancing away. This room seemed to flash colors much more often, and they noticed whenever a certain color flashed, neon platforms appeared in areas over the sea. Some were in convenient positions, some were not, so they kept an eye out for a set of platforms that worked well with the order of colors.

Red, yellow, green, and blue made an order of platforms which the trio carefully jumped to get to a safe foothold. The following flashing platforms were farther apart, and appeared one color apart from each other. Only Ratchet could cross the platforms with his jetboots, having to stay hovered long enough for the platforms to appear as he navigated across. Becoming confused as where to go before long, he noticed a Swingshot target also flashed to existence when red came. He quickly swung this target and landed on a blue platform that appeared just then, but this route led him to a Gold Bolt platform otherwise hidden by four floating aliens.

After grabbing the bolt, Ratchet eventually navigated his way to a platform with a screw, turning and turning ‘til the large disco ball up top unlatched and crashed on the digital ground, the Lombax flinching. It was conveniently by Maddy and Drake, who climbed on and rolled it around. They got beside Ratchet, who climbed on as they carefully balanced around for a way out. They noticed the giant screens flashing brief screenshots of dancers showed Unova in many pretty poses and winks, and Captain Qwark grooving in the other room. They had to watch out for appearing flash-platforms that served as obstacles, but the trio eventually found an opening in the wall to a new room, still over the electric digital.

It was another narrow room with many disco balls overhead, and the three had to navigate around lasers in the digital. At the path’s end, Drake shot his harpoon to a peg above and pulled his friends to it, landing them on a higher ledge where they crossed the disco balls. They got to a platform and passed a door back to the flashing color room, now on the second floor where large record platforms hovered around. There was one beside them, but all the others were very far apart, but depending on the color flashed, arrows appeared on the records, indicating the direction they would be flung. They waited for it to point at the next record before jumping on and flinging over, and kept this cycle going until they made it to a platform in a far corner.

The black-painted hallway that followed was definitely the quietest, and they had a chance to ease their eyes from the sea of colors and lights that was this dome. Maddy felt like she would never see things in normal color again, and since she was already using contact lenses, she felt like she would go blind. The hall directed downward ‘til they found an exit, overlooking giant records on a huge DJ desk. When they dropped in, they gaped at the giant creature playing the records: a light-brown, chubby, happy-faced rock creature known as a Goron. A Big one, specifically, wearing sunglasses and a microphone headset. He was about to put his hand on the records again, but- “Ooo?” tilted his glasses up to view the visitors with his clear blue eyes. “Ooooohh, guests! What brings you to Goro-jockey’s DJs-goro?”

“Uhhhh just passing by. You know where the Courtney Gears concert is?” Ratchet asked.

“Just follow that way-goro!” He pointed to a trio of purple lightrails to his right. “And if you want to, stay to participate in the race! I hear there’s a big prize-goro.”

“We’ll think about it.” So with that, the trio crossed the records to the rails, the Goron returning to his music. The rails snaked and led them downward into the pitch-black abyss, but when they grinded through a very small opening, their eyes became uneasy again as they glided through a very wide tunnel of purple staticky walls, which shortly began flashing assortments of colors. Red, green, yellow, blue, and many scattered pieces of rails appeared in many random places whenever certain colors flashed. The trio ended up separating and kept sharp eyes out for where rails would appear and quickly jumped to them, and Drake ended up following a route that gave him a Gold Bolt, going up the walls and upside-down. But Maddy was definitely developing some sort of seizure, unable to focus on the flashing rails as she inevitably took the fall.

Drake blasted his harpoon-turned-into-a-claw down and clutched her inches above the electrical outsides, pulling her to and carrying her himself as he glided his rails with ease. “This is why I wear SUNGLASSES.” he yelled over the music. The colors became really nauseating really fast, but it was over soon when they grinded on three stable rails into an expansive black chamber. They arrived at the biggest room of the dome, where thousands of aliens screamed before a large purple stage with a huge TV over it. The rails landed them on a single platform very far from the floor and above a wide portion of digital floor, so they needed to jump some slow-moving purple light-platforms, moving back-and-forth between set areas. The last platform didn’t have anywhere else to go, so they swung a few Swingshot targets (which, by the way, are in the form of disco balls) to a platform on the massive back wall, where they grabbed hold of a very thin ledge where Snapdragons waited. As they climbed across, these Snapdragons danced to the groove while they tried to snack prey, but it didn’t stop Ratchet from whacking them with his wrench.

They arrived at and grinded down one last purple lightrail before making a stylish land into the audience. They rushed toward the front of the stadium and blended in with the thousands of aliens. (End song.)

Atop the dome

Clank continued to fiddle with his transmission radio, but all he could pick up was static. “Hmmm. I hope Maddy’s brother did not run into any danger. Judging by her description of him, he may not be the most reliable figure in this situation. I will try and contact other frequencies in the Milky Way. One of them should ultimately be her… hmm?” The sight of the familiar incoming ship made him look up.

Inside the dome

The trio made their way to the front of the crowds and settled within them. “Think this is hidden enough?” Maddy asked.

“Well, it’s not like we have a ship anymore, so they can’t determine we’re here.” Ratchet replied. “And why would we abandon to go to some crummy concert? Believe me Mads, the odds of Nefarious finding us here are a million to one.”

“Ladies and gentlemen and NUCHACHOS!” The stadium turned darker as spotlights shone on the stage, smoke fogging it. “Give an earsplitting roar for the two you all know and love: Courtney Gears and PINK MONKEEEEY!” Two slim figures emerged from the stage, one tall and one short. The silver-bodied popstar with the red top and shorts and brown metal hair – Courtney Gears, and a blonde-haired monkey in a pink T-shirt and shorts with brown shoes, and black cap with a pink roof, both posing cutely.

“What? She wasn’t on the poster.” Ratchet said.

“One of her back-up singers had an accident?” Maddy wondered. They only stood and watched as Courtney sang.

I see the future, and what do I see
Robots roamin’ crazy through the, GALAXYYYY

Look around you, nowhere to fly

Fleshies better watch out ‘cause, GONNA DIIIIE-

Pink Monkey shoved her away, the microphone falling to her hand. “Out of the way! They were applauding me.”

Siiiimple thoughts: leeeeeead us to siiiimple liiiives

Thaaaat is why: the monkey stiiiill survives. And try-ies-

Both singers were flown away when a larger, fatter woman with hands, shoes, and head separate from the body crashed on the stage. She had blonde hair in two long pigtails and a Viking hat. “The two of you are ou-u-u-utdated, now it’s MY turn!” Space Mama proclaimed in a high-pitch opera voice. She started to sing in a foreign tongue none of those aliens understood—so Pink Monkey flew up and kicked her away.

“Schedule your OWN time, I’m singing for my Specter!” she exclaimed.

“Uhhck, how LUDICROUS.” Mama was still in Song Mode. “My voice SPEEEEEKS for Dear Mr. Dark, I would like it should you not interRUPT me.”

“BOTH of you need to get lost.” Courtney Gears stomped back onstage. “Dr. Nefarious ordered ME to organize this trap. Let’s bring him on now.” She pushed a remote, and the huge TV above her projected Dr. Nefarious’ image.

“Hello, Orbital Stadium! How are you this fine day?”

“Dr. Nefarious, will you PLEASE tell these two to go back to their own masters??”

“HEY, I was sent here by Specy himself!” Pink protested. “Just ask him!” She took the remote and switched to Specter’s image.

The ape had just walked onscreen with a towel around his waist. “Tomoki, didn’t I tell you to get the banana bath salt-”

“Hi Specter!”

“WAAAAAH!” He quickly grabbed his voice-modifier and switched to his deep, cooler voice. “Ahem- Pink Monkey! Why are you calling, can’t you see I’m in the middle of something?”

“Well sorry Specter, but these MEANIES keep getting in my way! Can’t you yell at their bosses?”

“OutRAGEOUS!” Space Mama took the remote. “We w-w-will see what Mr. DARK has to SAY about THIS!” And she switched to the cloaked man’s image.

“WwwwwWHAT. Space Mama.”

“Meester Dark, PLEASE tell these HOOLIGANS that this SONG wast mine and mine alone.”

“It wasn’t NEITHER of yours!” Two Team Rocket agents, Cassidy and Butch stomped onscreen. “Giovanni sent US here to find the Music Spirit, Meloetta! Didn’t you, Giovanni?” They switched to the shadowed Team Rocket leader.
“Yes, that’s correct. Our readings detected a lot of Musical Chi in that area, so if you don’t mind.”

Specter’s screen appeared on with Giovanni’s, both smooshing the other, “Well of course there’s a lot of Music Chi, it’s a king DANCE club. And I sent Pink here to create a mega-frequency satellite in the area, so if you don’t mind—”

“Hey, THIS area was under MY territory,” Nefarious’s squished on next, “and if you don’t want your MINIONS turned into robots, I suggest you GET OUT OF HERE.”

“If I may interject,” Mr. Dark appeared, “what makes you think a Music Spirit would be in such a populated area, especially with such DEAFENING beats. Space Mama, I specifically requested you head to Symphonia, not that run-down DUMP.”

“Now excuse me, if I-”

“HETERUVERVYVBYRJVLLVWOUWEWCBBCWYWVWHACIUL-” Inevitably, all four leaders were in the incomprehensible squabble.

“The leaders were in the incomprehensible squabble.”

“SILEEEENCE!” Plankton appeared, his picture teeny. “If you’re done bickering with yourselves, you should know I captured one of the Lights successfully.”

“That’s just BEAUTIFUL, Plankton. Is he awakened?” Specter asked.

“Why yes, of course, we did the life-changing journey all in a night—OF COURSE HE’S NOT AWAKENED YET!!”

“Look, I’M done talking about this,” yelled Nefarious, “I just wanna CAPTURE the stupid Maddy girl and be on our way. She SHOULD be riiliiight-” The room’s camera zoomed around. “Where did she go?”

Nefarious Drones had broken into the dome of the main dance room, aliens screaming and scrambling to escape. “Yo, what’s goin’ on??” exclaimed one of Unova’s male dancers.

“I dunno, I dunno!” cried the imp-like singer. “Do so many people really detest the Art of Voice??”

But before the robots could begin searching, a sudden beam of lightning struck from a stagelight and destroyed them all in milliseconds, then stopped and sparked in place before the stage. Unova gasped, “Are…Are you-??”

The spark took the form of an orange round figure with a needled point on its head, oval blue eyes, and a mouth. “I’ll save you, Milady! Rotom on the scene!”

Maddy, Drake, and Ratchet raced all the way to a downstairs hangar, where ships of all designs were parked. “We gotta take one of these things and get outta here!” Ratchet yelled.

“But we don’t even have keys!” Maddy replied rushedly.

“Hang on, this one is robot-operated.” Ratchet indicated a small, two-seat ship. “If only Clank were—CLANK, it’s Ratchet, meet us in the hangar, we gotta MOVE!” he yelled in his wristwatch.

“I’m right here.” They jumped around as the short robot hurried in. “I saw Nefarious’s ship approaching and hurried to find you.”

“Couldn’t you call us first?”

“I’m here, aren’t I? Let’s go where they will not find us.”
“But what about Superman-or-whatever? Eh, Qwark?” asked Drake.

“He’s not responding.” Ratchet looked at his staticky wristwatch and sighed with doubt. “It’s not big enough for him, anyway. We’ll come back for you soon, Qwark.” So with that, the team hopped inside as Clank powered the engine, the other three smooshed close together as they took off from the dome. Clank’s round green eyes turned red.

“HYPATOOWCNRENBPIUQIVEPBPOBWUVWVYKUEWVERIUV-” Team Gnik ended up in another babble fest.

“SHILEEENCE!” XANA appeared this time. “Look, I’m having a really bad day, and you all are making it worse, so let’s just...let’s just chill out.”

“...Okay.” agreed Plankton.

“Yeah.” followed Specter.

“Mmph.” muffled Dark.

Ragaj Gnik’s image appeared in the center as a familiar jingle played.

_Here’s the story:_

_of a man named Ragaj_

_Who was leader of an evil group of baddies!_

_These guys... got into a squabble_

_When Nefarious tried to kidnap Maddy._

Said robot shrugged in his frame. Their images vanished and were replaced by Gnaa and his group, Bowser, Eggman, K. Rool, Rumpel, Brain, Ganondorf, and Gaul.

_Here’s the story:_

_of a man named Gna-aa_

_Who was leader of a similar evil crew._

_And if this group... could learn to work together_

_In his screen, Rumpel Stiltskin screamed and ran as the Grim Reaper followed._

_Then maybe Gnik’s can, too._

_It switched back to Team Gnik, exchanging mixed looks of begrudging agreement._

_In Seven Lights._

_It’s Seven Lights._

_And only one, of, us, will win the fight._

Midway Peak

The party hadn’t changed for the next hour-and-a-half. Conversation was dying down, and most of the food had been extinguished. Cheren absorbed the last of a Coco Pop Carol had given him, leaving the saliva-colored white stick on the ground. He peeked around, and the Corporate Presidents were all waiting by the stairs, including Mom. The talking was ultimately ceased when four horns were blown.

“Your ATTENTION please. Our guest of honor will now be joining us. The most successful of all of us, having earned the position of right-hand woman to World Leader, Jennifer Bush, the LEADER of the Corporate Presidents!”

The party erupted with applause, and Cheren spied more intently than ever. The doors at the top of the stairs flew open, and a small shadow, growing larger as it approached, walked casually to the entrance. Her footsteps echoed from within, and Cheren fixed his glare tighter when she stepped into the light of the balcony (it was nighttime, so lamps and stuff). A slim, serious woman in a white labcoat and blue shirt with a gray tie. She had blue jeans, brown boots, short brown hair, and hazel eyes behind blue glasses. She could’ve definitely been mistaken for Cheren’s mom.

Leader of the Corporate Presidents

MORGAN CATHERINE UNO

Morgan stood atop the stairs and viewed her many guests. She closed her eyes and sensed all of their auras. The Corporate Presidents, their children, and all the rich nobles possessed red auras. The only exceptions were Carol Masterson, with a light-blue aura, and Don Quixote Sugar, with a grayish-white aura with a few other colors mixed in. But one of the red auras looked out of place: it was a fiery orange instead of a dark-red, and originated under a table. She opened her eyes, and with a yank of her right hand, Cheren Uno came flying out. “WHOOOA!” He was placed on his feet at the stairs’ base. The balcony erupted with gasps.

“I thought I sensed a familiar aura. For a second, I thought it was my father or Cousin Nigel. Didn’t expect to see my nephew here.”

“Fufufu!” Doflamingo grinned. “My, what a shocking reunion! I guess our dear Head President isn’t without family after all.” Indeed, the other presidents noticed the distinct traits shared between Morgan and Cheren.

Cheren gripped the hilt of his sword, glare fixed on Morgan. “Aunt Morgan. Why…Why are YOU working with them?!”

She kept her calm, toneless look. “Simple. I grew up. I knew I wouldn’t get far staying in your Kids Next Door. Even though we were allowed to retain our memories… I couldn’t stay in these childish games for long. I will admit though, they were fun games while they lasted. But no person stays a child forever, Cheren.”

Sugar glanced away at this.

“In the real world, fun and games will get you nowhere. Only those with a grown-up intellect, and the knowledge to succeed in the world will place you on top.”

“Really? Is that why you dumped your siblings at Foster’s?”

“Buddy, Athena, Sophie, and Beckah are still parts of me. But not parts I can spend all my time talking to.” She fixed her slanted glasses. “They’re safe where they are at Foster’s, and I’ll summon them when I need them. But what matters now is my place in the professional field.”

“And just who got you to think like that, anyway?!”
“Well, no one in particular. I just started thinking it myself. Though I had a few shoves from my new master. But however you choose to see it, I’m happy where I am now.”

“Fufufufu.” Doflamingo marched forward. “That’s all well and good, Miss Head President.” He stopped a few feet from Cheren. “But another question arises: how did you manage to get here, Boy?” His grin was malicious.

Cheren glanced to Mom behind Doflamingo, wearing a fake surprised expression like the others, but her eyes threatened him if he blew their cover. “…It doesn’t matter how I got here. What matters is why:” he aimed his sword at Morgan. “To bring Aunt Morgan back to OUR side!”

“Fufufufu! You’re trying to do so NOW?”

“Yes. The Apocalypse is coming, and we need all operatives’ strength. And Morgan, is STILL an operative! I’ll bring her back even if I have to FORCE her!”

“Weren’t you paying attention?” Morgan asked. “You don’t know how much I’ve gone through to get this far.”

“You’re right. I don’t. And I. Don’t. CARE!” He rushed up the stairs with his sword ready to strike. (Play “Poké Floats” from Smash Bros. Melee!)

Morgan whipped out her blue lightsaber, sliced a Japanese symbol on the ground, and pressed her hand to it. “Summoning: CHOMPJAWS.”

“ROOOOAR!” In a puff of smoke, a huge, tentacled Chain Chomp-like monster emerged from the symbol. It had a pitch-black, shiny round head with red eyes and mouth, and many spiked, flexible tentacles made of various balls. Cheren was blown down the stairs, surprised at the monster’s appearance.

“It’s an Imaginary Friend!” Numbuh Sweetie-1 gasped.

“Nuuuu! I read that it takes a lot of Psychic Chi to create or summon an Imaginary Friend-daizokun.” Bison exclaimed. “But it takes even MORE chi to summon an Extremeasaur! Nuuuu her chi is really great-daizokun!”

“Fufufu.” Doflamingo grinned. “The truth is, Morgan’s level of chi is equal to that of that Mika woman. The only reason she isn’t a Logia, is because the World Leaders forbidded it!”

Chompjaws lashed a tentacle at Cheren, but he jumped away. Another was coming his way, so he swung his sword and sliced it clean off. The tentacle’s balls divided around the ground, forming lit fuses that shrunk into the balls and exploded tremendously. “OOOOOHPPP!” Many of the nobles held their dresses and wigs down, while some were blown in the air. Chompjaws grabbed Cheren and sent him flying over the balcony edge, but he whipped out his Hookshot and latched the railing to fling himself to the air. He took aim at Morgan atop the Chompjaws and launched his other Hookshot, latching her front and pulling him forward. He raised his sword as Morgan did the same, a single, forceful impact between the two until Cheren was blown back.

Morgan charged a Psycho Beam and unleashed it at Cheren, but he raised his Mirror Shield and bounced it right back, injuring the Chompjaws. “AAAAHHHH!”

“I didn’t just visit Foster’s.” Morgan grabbed three Pokéballs from her jacket pocket. “I’ve made a few regular visits to Poké.” She threw the balls into the air as their Pokémon flashed out. In order of appearance, they introduced their selves “Alakazam!”, “Metagross.”, and “TUUU!” a Xatu.
“Oh darn, I should’ve brought my Gallade,” Cheren frowned. “Oh well. Guess I’ll have to fight dirty.” He ran forward to strike, but Xatu flapped to him and made him jump, leaving him unprepared when Metagross jumped over and forcefully kicked him with its front leg. Cheren bounced and smashed against another table, gasping when Metagross leapt to pierce him with its spiked feet, but rolled away just in time. The three Pokémon used psychic to pick up tables and chuck them at Cheren, who swiftly dodge-flipped and blocked Xatu’s talons with his sword when she came. She flew back when Metagross lunged forward and swung his leg, but Cheren flipped back and pelted a M.A.R.B.L.E. in his face.

“Gwah!” Cheren was lifted into the air by Alakazam’s psychic, but he pulled enough strength to grab his bow and shoot an Ice Arrow, freezing the creature solid. Cheren landed on his feet, looking as Xatu flapped in the air, but Cheren quickly whipped out his Hookshot, pulled the bird down, and spun-slashed it across the chest as it fell back.

The Pokémon down, Morgan flew above and began to shoot half-sized Psycho Spheres, which Cheren dodged as he whipped out his Light Arrow and took aim. He launched, but Morgan simply teleported in front and engaged in a swordfight. It lasted short as Morgan thrusted her hand forward and blew Cheren against the railing with a psychic blast. Cheren stuck his sword in the ground to hold himself up. Damn it... only three minutes and she’s already got me beat. I don’t remember Viridi being this hard. ...I need to determine if she’s powerful enough for the Fierce Deity Mask. Otherwise, she might...

He got back up and raised his sword. “I’m not done, yet! Haaaaaah!” He ran forward with his sword skyward and tried to launch the beam of light, but Morgan zipped to his side and kicked him against a table. She grabbed several tables with her psychic and hurled them at him, but Cheren got up and sliced them all with his blade. Morgan shot at him in that chaos, but Cheren was quick to dodge-roll behind and leap, but Morgan whipped around and grabbed him in psychic. “YAAAH!” He was thrown forcefully against the rail.

The tentacles which Chompjaws lost suddenly grew back on his form. “RRRAAAAHH!”

“Hnnn!... That’s what I get for rushing into a fight without a plan.” Cheren grunted. Chompjaws lashed its tentacles again, but Cheren dodged and swung his blade to slice them to pieces, running away when the bombs exploded. He grabbed a bunch of bombs in his sail, swung it around, and hurled them up to Chompjaws to explode on him again, knocking him dizzy.

But Morgan zapped another symbol into the ground and summoned 3 more Friends, a giant monster with flashing colorful eyes around its round head that blasted lasers everywhere, a giant praying mantis that looked like Joker, and what appeared to be a Snow Sphinx. Cheren dodged the Membeam’s beams behind a table, and gasped when the Joking Mantis knocked it away and tried to whip him in a froglike tongue. Cheren dodged the tongue and slashed it, then flipped back when the Snow Sphinx tried to pounce him, shooting a Fire Arrow into its mouth. But it turned into a Sun Sphinx and began blasting fireballs instead, Cheren running away as they made huge explosions.

Their rampant attacks made the party-goers scream and cower behind tables, especially Carol Masterson, who looked more than worried for her future Supreme Leader. Cheren stopped running when the Membeam and Joking Mantis cornered him and prepared a double-attack, Cheren glancing behind him, noticing Sugar. He yanked his Hookshot to pull the girl toward him, and kicked her to Doflamingo just before the monsters fired energy/acid beams, just barely dodging before he was grazed. The Sun Sphinx shot a fireball before his feet that flew him onto his back, then pounced to pin him down as it hissed. It began to charge a furious beam in its lungs, Cheren struggling desperately to escape from its solid stone paw. He grew absolutely furious at his feeble strength compared to its, and within seconds, his body turned dark as flames emerged.

His body suddenly 10 times stronger, he blew the sphinx away, erupting powerful flames that he blasted at the Membeam to blind its vision, then singed the mantis’s shrieking head. Morgan lunged back at him, swinging her saber faster than ever, but Cheren grabbed the plasma in his palm and blasted her back with a powerful fireblast. Landing on her feet, Morgan touched a hand to her forehead, “Psychic Gate, open!” and her body glowed with a powerful blue aura, her eyes glowing. She shot at Cheren as fast as he did, the strong psychic bubble made from a superior mind against a flame from the depths of Hell, made from an angry 9-year-old. Which one would prevail, only time would tell. The impeccable force and friction they created crushed the ground around them, and the viewers stepped back feeling a forceful wind. The two pushed against the other for 30 seconds before a winner was decided.

“WAAAAAH!” Cheren flew against the rail again, knocked back into his regular form. He fixed his glare and rose again, seeing Morgan power down.

Twirling her saber, she burned a symbol in the ground and dissolved the former 3 monsters into smoke, pressing her hand to the symbol. “SUMMON!” And a greater puff of smoke exploded, and out came the monster.

“RAAAAAAAAHHIIHHHH!” A red dragon so terrifyingly tremendous, Cheren doesn’t think the whole thing caught in his vision. Incredibly long and snakelike, with a shiny spiky body with black belly, angry yellow eyes, and two mouths of steel sharp teeth.

“Slifer the Sky Dragon is the greatest of all monsters.” Morgan proclaimed. “It will destroy all enemies it’s called against, and any other enemies who appear. It won’t rest until all opponents are destroyed.”

And in the glow that reflected off his glasses, Cheren saw his very death: the godlike dragon was charging an unavoidable beam in its top mouth. “This is what happens when you focus solely on your goals and strengths.” Morgan stated. “Your average adult villains were still too childish to see that. But we have superior strength and intellect, and that’s why it’s our job to protect this world. Whether the threat is family, or friends. That is why our Leaders are the one, true Go-” Before she could speak, Don Quixote Sugar stepped in her way. “What?”

“Sugar!” Doflamingo’s face scrunched with anger and fear. His daughter was clear in the wake of Slifer’s wrath. “Get BACK here immediately!!”

“What’s she doing?!” Sweetie-1 panicked.

“Mmm!” Carol was even more eager.

Slifer the Sky Dragon wasn’t going to stop. As long as his enemy was living and breathing… he would remove him from the plane of existence.

“Nnnn…” Cheren glanced up, seeing the back of Sugar’s yellow coat. She turned and approached him with her blank, toneless expression. “N…Numbuh Trebol…” (End song.)

Sugar’s eyes turned darker as she pressed her hand against Cheren’s forehead. “Sorry.”

In that brief second, everything fell silent. A red Rainbow Monkey, with brown hair and glasses, appeared before her. Along with a sword, bow, and shield that seemed to just lay there. No signs of life in this soft, stuffed toy, its only expression a happy smile. Sugar lowered her hand, and her eyes never looked darker.
“…” Morgan became totally confused. Why was she standing there? Why was most of the balcony destroyed and ruined? She looked at her Chompjaws, seeing the creature was just as confused, scratching his shiny scalp with a tentacle. Her three Pokémon, Alakazam, Xatu, and Metagross, who had as much an idea as she. Why were they summoned to begin with?

And so the attention was directed to Slifer. It was summoned to destroy all enemies in the vicinity… but no such things existed. The all-powerful energy in his mouth, which can only belong to the gods, died away.

“Mmmmm?” Doflamingo frowned. “What are we all standing around for?”

“Hmm… I don’t remember.” Morgan flew back to Chompjaws and banished him in a puff of smoke. She called her Pokémon back into their balls, and flew up to banish Slifer. The incredible snake-dragon that wrapped around the mountain turned into smoke, gone like he was never there. “Let’s take this party indoors. I’ll have the night guy clean up.” And she was first to walk in, the other guests patiently following. Mom also joined, though her head felt very uneasy. She coulda sworn she was gonna enact some diabolical plan, but what that was, she couldn’t remember. Maybe it was just an impulse…

Sugar picked up the red Rainbow Monkey and pressed it to her chest as she walked. The stuffed doll felt no heartbeat from her body. It felt nothing… like all stuffed dolls feel.

Upon settling in the larger dining hall, Carol pulled out a small laptop. Her Arctic Training was going well, and she was close to perfecting her new skill. …She was just sad she wouldn’t be able to graduate, with no Supreme Leaders to approve her.

Uno House

An odd sensation fell over Rachel Uno. She felt so lightheaded for a brief moment… it was weird. She glanced at a picture above the couch, one of her raising the Master Sword with Fanny and Patton by her side, and Fi floating overhead. “Siiiigh… those were such good times. But why doesn’t Fi accept any of my kids as her wielder? …Oh well. They’re still good the way they are.” She smiled. “But it’s still weird Lehcar didn’t give any of her kids powers. …Hmm…”

McKenzie House

“Hnn-nnnnn!… … UUH!” In another attempt to keep a boulder in the air, Anthony was crushed. Angie approached and shoved the boulder off him. “Anthony, you almost had it.”

“Uuuhh…” He got up. “What’s the point, this is too hard. Why can’t I just be a kickboxer.”

“Hmmmm.” Angie rubbed her head. “If only you had someone to look up to. Someone to inspire you to keep trying. Can you think of anyone like that?”

“What, like my two cousins? They’re nothin’ special. Aunt Rachel a little but, it’s not like I see her in action.”

“I guess her husband is no one to admire, either.” Angie smiled in disbelief. “Siiigh… there has to be someone.”

Chariton Household

Suni had been feeling very uneasy lately… but now it was though something slipped her mind. But for some reason, she recalled her notion to work on Moonbase with Darcy, but as it wasn’t working out, they left that post. So now Sunni had no important use in the KND… and what inspiration had she to train with psychic anymore. Her mom could definitely help herself…

KND Moonbase

Panini manned her post with the utmost boredom. No sectors called in a while… and she had nothing to do. Just a 4DS in her pocket with no challenging Wi-Fi rivals. Oh, her life was dull…

On route to Texas

Team Emily didn’t have any available S.C.A.M.P.E.R.s in Sector N unfortunately, so they got across the country using a G.O.G.O.-G.O.R.I.L.L.A.. The journey was fairly boring as night was falling again, but Gary ceased controlling the robot when an odd sensation swept over them. “What are we… doing again?” asked Emily.

“Goin’ to Uncle Sheldon’s to stop these apes, Ah reckon.” Sarah replied.

“I know, but… whaddid these apes have to do with anything? I know they showed up outta nowhere, and have accomplices somewhere… but I just can’t recall what they might be doing.”

“Eh, yer head’s got too much blowin’ around ‘nside it, it’ll come back eventually. Although… I feel right wrong in it, too.” Sarah touched her hair. “Let’s just keep goin’.” And so the robot trudged forward.

IC’s S.C.A.M.P.E.R., Galaxia

The same odd sensation swept over the five operatives, but especially the timebenders. “George… do you feel that?” MaKayla said with weak breath.

“I know, I… Miyuki?”

Under her toneless eyes, Miyuki was very horrified. “Something…Something terrible just happened. We have to get to GKND soon.”

DunBroch, 800 years ago

Another casual day in Sector DB as Merida walked up to her treehouse. But almost instantly, she was surprised by MacGuffin, Macintosh, and Dingwall, the former two raising her by the arms. “Hey, THERE’S our leader!” They carried and dropped her on the couch.

“H-Hey, what’s the occasion?” she laughed.

“It’s the 6-month anniversary ya slew that monster fer us, Princess!” Macintosh cheered. “Them grown-up blokes may be ignorant, but WE know what ya did!”

“Hehehe, ya really didn’t need to. I still can’t believe I went through all that by myself. I barely even remember it all. …”

Across the U.S.

This crazy rumor about an Apocalypse drastically began to die down. All of the adults received the news from their kids, but even the kids had no idea where such a thing originated from. The whole thing was officially declared as just a fad, just some wild crazy thing some unknown crazy person was spreading around. In a sudden sweep, peace had returned to the U.S.. So much energy they wasted panicking over nothing. Now they could get on with their lives. There was nothing to fear…

Uno House

Rachel Uno lay on her couch in boredom. There was nothing going on to her knowledge, so it was time to be lazy. But the area within her cleavage felt a bit itchy, so reaching in, she discovered a folded piece of paper. She unwrapped and read a strange note, saying to come to Roguetown Station at 8pm, tell no one. Signed with a heart. And something else written in pen, written Send rescue party to Roguetown Station May 3, at 3:00pm ‘case Cheren don’t call. Rachel quirked a brow. When did she get this? And from who? Glancing upward while her head lay on the armrest, she spotted the upside-down picture of her kids and… someone else. She flipped right-side-up to study this strange boy with brown hair, red glasses, and her familiar chestnut-brown eyes. She didn’t remember this boy at all…

Midway Gala

Carol got bored after looking at her computer for awhile. But feeling something heavy in her pocket, she pulled out a 4DS. She doesn’t remember asking her mom to buy this. It was paused on Mario Kart 4-D apparently, with Panini Drilovsky as a contact. Why would Carol have a 4DS and have Panini as a Friend? Er, apparently… the Mii belonged to some guy named Cheren.

KND Arctic Base

The teenager inside the farthest prison cell was panicking. He never felt this mad in his life. “H-H-How could I be so stupid?!” His eyes twitched. “Not choosing a successor?! Am I really that dumb?! This organization is doomed. Doomed and it’s all my fault!!” Desperate gasps for breath.

….Hmmm… I feel like I’m supposed to be writing someone else’s story arc… must be my imagination. And that was a Brady Bunch parody you saw back there. ;I Next time will be Sandman’s next level, and a Sunni. See’s.
Lost and Looking

Chapter Summary

The Marzipan Pirates try to escape the Sour Cinnamon.

Welcome to the second story arc of the Side Stories, which I will title the Darkness Seeker Arc. To start off, we’ll have Nerehc’s first stage and Augustus’s 3rd stage. (Takes place during Chapter 12.)

Chapter B-6: Lost and Looking

Negaverse; EiznekCm House

Nerehc and Ragus came up out of the basement of the former’s house. As they headed for the front door, they were caught by Lehcar EiznekCm, who had walked in from the kitchen. “Oh, Mother!” Medusa said with Nerehc’s voice, pushing up the sunglasses to hide her snakelike green eyes. “This is my friend, Ragus. I invited her over for-”

“I’m sorry, who are you?” Lehcar asked Nerehc, cocking a brow.

Medusa’s (Nerehc’s) heart jumped, wondering if she’d been caught. “Er… I’m-”

“Because I don’t like random kids sneaking in my house and taking my stuff. NOW, GET OUT!!”

“WHOOOA!” Medusa and Ragus were flung out of the front door, which Lehcar slammed shut. The two rubbed their heads as they stood up. “That wasn’t the response I expected.” Medusa said.

“You’re telling ME!” proclaimed Thanatos’s perky voice.

The God of Death wobbled over in the very fat body that belonged to Eigaoh Nagillig. “I can’t understand how a vegetarian stays fat as an adult, yet his Positive eats meat and is skinny as a mantis!”

“Lucky for you, that body is still prettier than your own.” Pandora cooed, leaning forward and folding her arms on Nerehc’s head. “You’re so adorable.”

“Stop it, Dora!” Medusa flailed Nerehc’s arms and pushed the woman off. Ragus giggled.
“Fine. So, why are we concerned about the Demon Saints when we’re supposed to be finding the Darknesses?”

“There’s nothing we can do about the Darknesses for the moment. Not until Ragaj Gnik and Bill Cipher get done doing what they’re supposed to. However, since we’ve come to know the Darknesses across the years, especially their powers, it’s going to be Hell when all those people are suddenly together. We can use the Demon Saints to keep them all in line. And not only that… one of the Darknesses will need the power of the Demon Saints to help him.”

“Also, we’re purposely not saying the names of the Darknesses for secrecy’s sake.” Thanatos informed. “You understand, don’t you, Ragus?”

“I certainly do!” Ragus beamed.

“Then let’s get started.” Medusa clapped hands. “I propose that we search for Lucifer first. Last I heard, he was Ganondorf’s horsy, but he’s mostly been doing work in Mexico. We’ll enter there from Ocixem, since the gods don’t look in here often. Ragus, those people will not be able to bother us while they’re in their dolls, right?”

“They most certainly shouldn’t.” Ragus smiled brightly and held the three dolls of Nerehc, Eigaoh, and Ikuk. “However, Lady Medusa, I have a small query: who is Nerehc?”

“?” Medusa cocked a brow. “Nerehc is this boy. The one I’m possessing right now.”

“I assumed as much, but for some reason, I don’t seem to know who he is!”

“…Interesting. But you remember those two adults just fine?” Medusa indicated Ikuk and Eigaoh’s bodies.

“I do.”

“Hmmm… Well, we’ll ponder over it later. Although this makes me wonder what the Coincidence Factor had in store for Cheren.”

“Sorry for disturbing you, Miss EiznekCm.” a girl’s voice said inside the house.

“You’re just lucky you’re more tolerable than other kids. NOW GET OUT.” That’s when Sipa came flying through the window.

“Ow!” Sipa hit the grass outside. She shook her head and looked up at the possessed Nerehc and his group. “…Who are you weirdoes supposed to be?”

Dream World… (Play “Piano #1” from Mogeko Castle.)

Nerehc woke up with a fuzzy feeling in his head. He saw that he was wearing a purple jumpsuit with a three-swirl symbol on the chest. “Am I in… the Dream World?”

He was gazing up at a huge, grayish castle under a pure blue night sky with stars. There were statues of what looked like stuffed animals, and it seemed that many stuffed animals were happily roaming this place. “Well, I’m somewhere. I…” He held his head, and the fuzzy feeling seemed stronger than ever. “I am… Who am I? What’s my name… I can’t… remember. …” He looked up at the castle. “Maybe… someone in there will know.”
Stage B-5: Night Castle

Mission: Find out who and where you are.

Act 1

Nerehc (for now, we’ll assume that’s his name) sprouted purple flames from his shoes and skated across the stone bridge over the moat. Stuffed toys were floating carefree in the water, so he wouldn’t disturb them. He skied around some statues of the animals and followed a right route, where a blue strip of carpet led between castle walls. The road forked ahead, so Nerehc followed a right path, which led to a dead end. There were crates and barrels stacked around, so he sliced them with the glowing white sword he apparently had. He found peppers and bags of potato chips, and figured he’d take them with him.

Nerehc skied to the left route of the fork, going up some stairs that ended at a ledge over the moat. There were several towers standing around and more stuffed toys floating in the water. Nerehc could grind on a rail on his left, to a spring that propelled him to another tower. He Wall Kicked off, flew to another tower with Rocket Boost, and repeated the Wall Jumping until he set foot on a new path. He glided up some winding stairs to reach the top of this short tower. Using his weightless rockets, Nerehc leaped across a series of small pillars across the water, getting to a castle wall and gliding up some stairs.

The path reached an end before a drop, in which the castle wall on the left had a series of branches going up. Nerehc grabbed and swung around each one to propel himself higher. He landed on a new path that led to a chain, which Nerehc grinded across to reach another path, and skied along until some stairs brought him to a ground above the wall. Plushies were sitting at tables and drinking tea, all wearing bright and happy faces.

Nerehc decided to approach a pink rabbit and blue hippo plushy. “Um… Can any of you tell me where I am?”

“You’re in Night Castle.” The rabbit replied.

“The castle made by Ragus.” The hippo followed.

“Everyone’s happy here.”

“You’ll be happy, too.”

Nerehc looked at a statue of the smiling, hooded girl with a stitch face. “Ragus…” Her appearance was foggy in his mind. “Do any of you know where I came from?”

“We’re all from the other world.” Rabbit replied.

“That bad world.” Hippo said.

“Ragus helped us escape.”

“We live in this world now.”

“You’ll like living here, too.”

“Er, I’m not sure I’ll fit in… I’m not a toy like the rest of you.”

“You’ll become one once you get adapted.” Rabbit replied, sipping tea. “I wonder what you’ll be.
A monkey, maybe?"

Nerehc looked at the statue again. “Can I meet her? Maybe she can tell me who I am.”

“You can go in the castle to find her. But by the time you do, you won’t care anymore.”

“Yeah, well…” Nerehc looked to the castle entrance far across the chasm. “That’ll depend.”

Nerehc skied past the café and jumped some platforms up around a tower, then grabbed a zipline to slide to a small pillar. From there, he used his rockets to glide to a further, shorter pillar. Then, he could only glide to a platform just over the surface of the moat. The stuffed animals looked as carefree here as any of the other ones, floating in the water. But rather than swim with them, Nerehc used his rockets to glide just over the surface. He found a set of branches leading up to a foothold on the wall below the castle entrance.

Nerehc swung up these branches, but to get higher up, he had to climb a long, dangling blue drape on the left of the foothold. He reached a new ledge, which led around the wall to a path consisting of in-and-out platforms. Nerehc jumped the platforms with timing, and once at the following foothold, he viewed a stairway of gargoyle statues in which spikes sprouted on their heads every few seconds. Nerehc nimbly jumped the statues when the spikes were down, arriving at the ground before the castle entrance.

The gate was completely black inside, like when you enter a loading zone in a videogame. However, when Nerehc skied through the black entrance, he was still outside, now overlooking a long stairwell down that he didn’t see before. He glided down, and then up an even higher stairwell, before viewing the majesty of the Night Castle’s distant entrance. With nothing obstructing his path, Nerehc skated over. A yellow crescent moon hung in the stars above the castle. This world was really pretty, Nerehc thought. If all those toys had a point, he could get used to living here. Maybe he would decide if he got to view the inside of the castle. After arriving at a short flight of stairs, Nerehc skied up to and entered the castle gates. (Play “Mirror Room” from Sonic Adventure.)

Act 2

The interior walls were brick and gray like outside, with a red carpet leading down this candlelit passage. Nerehc entered a foyer room with candlelit chandeliers, skating up some stairs before turning left into a hallway. The hall seemed empty at first- “YAH HA HAAAA!” a jack-in-the-box popped out of the floor. Nerehc sliced it in half with his sword before skiing further- “YAH HA HAAA!” Two more jacks came from the wall. He beheaded them and continued. “YAH HAH-!” The next jack-in-the-box hopped over to Nerehc, so he slashed it perfectly down the middle.

The hall ended over a passage with a checkered floor, with platforms that had skinny baggy stems and waddled around on little crow feet. When Nerehc jumped down on one of these platforms (which was called a Buyoon), it shook around before flinging him back up on the starting ledge. Nerehc had to jump over these Buyoons quickly. When one was too far away, he simply tried to skate across the floor, but the Buyoon’s top was too high to jump, so it kicked him to the start. Nerehc simply Wall Jumped across that floor to reach its top.

The passage led up some tall stairs, each of which had Buyoons. Nerehc had to Wall Jump to get high enough to land on them. At the end, Nerehc could safely land on the checkered floor of a bigger room. He tried to skate to some stairs, but some of the floor panels rose up to block his path. Nerehc had to solve a maze of rising floor panels. One route led him to a box containing some bacon, but eventually, he made it to the staircase and skied up. He glided down a hall that seemed to twist rightward, so in the following room, Nerehc was standing on the wall with the checkered Nerehc couldn’t stand on the floor, only the wall he had shifted gravity on. He jumped up some cube-shaped platforms along the wall opposite the floor (the ceiling), then he glided to some further platforms to get into an opening on the other wall. There were big stuffed bats with crazy, wide-mouth faces flapping around this twisty hallway, which looped up and rightward before bringing Nerehc to the room’s ceiling. There were black holes around the ceiling in which huge, peach-colored hands reached out in attempt to grab Nerehc. He avoided these Ragus’s Hands and skated up some short stairs, into the next twisty passage. Ragus Hands reached out from every direction, but Nerehc avoided as he made it to the right-side-up checkered floor.

Nerehc saw only blackness at the end of the next passage, but by the time he was there, Ragus’s huge and frightening image appeared. In fact, there were many Ragus’; Nerehc was in a hall of huge mirrors that bore hers and his own reflection; except Ragus was nowhere in sight. When Nerehc shifted left, then right, her illusions disappeared, so only Nerehc’s reflection moved with him. The mirrors depicted holes in the floor that were otherwise unseen, so Nerehc avoided them, and also crossed the holes with invisible floors. Nerehc had to Wall Jump the mirrors over a long hidden chasm—seeing one of the mirrors was actually a spike wall in its reflection, Nerehc took care to avoid that.

The mirror hall brought him to a longer, straight passage where the mirrors depicted invisible platforms. Nerehc jumped up these platforms, having to wait for a moving one that shifted up, and from the higher platform, glided to further ones. He then had to Wall Jump some vertical invisible platforms before he made it to another corridor.

This passage appeared to grow bigger, and bigger, and bigger as Nerehc skied down, until it was so wide that he couldn’t see the walls or ceiling. Even the floor was starting to become invisible in the growing darkness. Nerehc just kept skating and skating… until he apparently reached the end of an even tinier hall. The door was smaller than his fingertip, so he couldn’t possibly enter. He bent down and cracked it open with his finger… then magically, he phased through the wall into a normal-size passage. Nerehc continued until he encountered another mirror. (End song.)

The boy inside the mirror was floating in midair, limbs drooping, asleep. The boy looked just like him… except he was wearing golden clothes, with a symbol of a “C” and a small ‘x’ between its endpoints. Nerehc slowly reached to touch his sleeping “reflection”… but the mirror disappeared the moment his fingers made contact.

Nerehc entered a living room that was behind the mirror. There was tea at a table between two couches, a painting of Ragus, and some drawers. “Mmmm, hello, Good Chum.” said a stuffed penguin wearing a top-hat and monocle, sitting on a couch.

Nerehc raised a brow. “You look like a character from a really cool Posiverse show.”

“That’s funny.” The penguin said with a British accent. “I’m actually a character from a crappy Negaverse show. Please, do have a seat.”

Nerehc shrugged and sat in the couch opposite. “So, do you know anything about this Ragus chick?”

“Oh, I met her after our studio got burned down by an angry mob because our show was so crappy. She told me she could bring me to a happier world, and lo, here I am. Few months o’ bein’ here, I turn into this old thing. Shore is better than being in that smelly world.” He was emphasizing his long “O” words. “More peaceful here, you know?”
“But how does she do it? Magic?”

“Oh, I here she’s some sort of… spiritbender, what give you. She can bend peoples’ souls outta their body and put them in her little stuffed hoodilywinks.”

“Do you mean her toys?”

“Don’t criticize my way of tolking. Then, I surmise she puts our souls into slumber like her toys, ergo we are in a dreamland. So, how did you end up being here?”

“Actually…” Nerehc touched his head, “I don’t even remember. Not a thing. Zero, zilch.”

“Well, you must have been pretty miserable, given you agreed to Ragus’s proposition. Might as well enjoy life here.”

“I don’t really feel I should without knowing who I am. Can you take me to where Ragus is?”

“Oh, if she’s awake right now, then I conjecture she is asleep here. I can take you to her bedchamber ’fore she awakens.”

“Sure. I’ll like that.”

“Let’s enjoy our tea first. You musta come a long way.”

“Not as long as your O’s, dude.” Nerehc remarked before drinking tea.

Naihcalappa Mountains

The members of the Order of Black Lotus held their hearts in sorrow: one of their most beloved members, Little Aunt, met her end at the talons of a robotic owl. Now, the coffin was descending into her grave, dug next to Oitnemid’s. “And so, we bid farewell to Little Aunt, who would always show concern for others’ well-being above her own.” The Man With the Blue Eye spoke. “At least now, she will be able to look over us from the serenity of Spirit World. Farewell… Auntie.”

After the funeral, Ydnew Llevram returned to her house, her blue eyes baring their usual scowl. “Can’t imagine what a bitch her Positive musta been.”

“Hey, Yddy. Hey, Yddy. Hey, Yddy.”

“What?” Ydnew asked through gritted teeth.

There was a red praying mantis on the back of her hair, but with the head of a bear. “I’m a Man-Bear.” Yeoj transformed into a scarf around her neck. “Hey, Yddy. Hey, Yddy. Hey, Yddy.”

“What?”

The end of that scarf was a big tongue drooping saliva on her dress. “I’m a scongue.” He transformed again. “Hey, Yddy. Hey, Yddy. Hey, Yddy.”

“What?!?”

He was over her head as a part-hat, part-lizard, and part stapler. “I don’t know, anymore! HAHAAHAHAHAHA!”

Ydnew grabbed, threw him on the ground, and stomped Yeoj forcefully. “Do you ever get tired of being a fuckin’ IDIOT?!”
He turned into red goop on her foot. “How do I get tired? I have no respiratory tracks.”

“YDNEEEEWWW!” Nil and Niyus Gnofieb dashed in, tripping on each other. “Yddy, why aren’t you come to the afterpartyyyyy!” Nil whined.

“It’s not a party, dummy!” Us yelled. “It’s a… after-funeral!”

“Dad said I could come back. He knew I was bored.” Ydnew replied. “Besides, why are you here?”

“We were bore, tooooooo.” Nil moaned. “Besides, the grown-ups are talking.”

“They said the Apocalypse is gonna happen.” Us frowned. “Is this true?”

Ydnew looked down solemn for a moment, then looked at a window to the cloudy sky. “That’s what they keep saying. But I… still don’t understand. How would it happen? And… how would we stop it.” She touched her forehead. “My head feels fuzzy for some reason…”

“Awe, I know what’ll unfuzz it.” Yeoj said, turning into a bird with a duck’s bill before flying on Ydnew’s head. “What do you get when you combine the names ‘Yeoj’ and ‘Ydnew’?”

Ydnew made an aggravating sigh. “What?”

“YDEOJ! HAAAAAAA HA HA HA haaaaaaa! Hahahahahaaaaaa!”

Ydnew warped him with spacebending, shrinking him to dot size. …He morphed bigger into a frog on her shoulder. “That doesn’t work on me. Oink.”

“Ugh. If I wasn’t worried about my Positive, I would kill myself already.”

Outside, Blue Eye was overseeing the after-funeral from a mountaintop. “The fault is mine.” Red Eye’s deep voice said, materializing from the wind. “I guided the Sector V children to Candied Island, ensuring Big Mom’s doom. I did not want your friend to die, but she could not live…”

“I was expecting something to happen when you told me of the crisis regarding Big Mom.” Blue Eye replied in his higher voice. “I was afraid to tell her… but at least now, I can focus my worry on the Apocalypse. What is it… that you plan to do, exactly?”

“Eventually, the Twenty Keys will come together and open the gate to the New World. Then, we can make a world that is to everyone’s liking. But I fear the forces that may intervene. It is my goal to make things as easy for the chosen ones as possible…”

“And that’s destroying your world’s leaders, isn’t it?”

“Yes. The World Government will be a great liability to the quest. So I must destroy all people who are affiliated with them. I personally do not want to harm the Head President, since she is a close relative of the Unos, but only time will decide her fate. At least, during the span of this month, my acquaintance will be pushing the training of my daughter.” Red Eye smirked to himself. “I want to meet her at least 15 days before the Apocalypse, halfway through this month.”

“Considering the reckless way you chose to ‘raise’ her, I’ll be surprised if your daughter turns out like you wanted.”

“Oh, I’m sure she will. In any case… I believe I will go to Oceana in my world. According to rumors, the Fairy Princess that lives there hails from the legendary Moon Planet. I really want to head there…”

“Why?”

“All in good time, my friend.” Red Eye turned around, about to leave. “…Hm hm hm.” He chuckled. “You know, if you still want to determine who raises their daughter better… I guess the Opposite Law will see to that.” He turned his exposed left eye to Blue Eye. “Because by the end of this month, I expect my daughter to be as powerful as the other kids.”

Posiverse; Sour Cinnamon (Play “Fellmuth Arena” from Spyro: Eternal Night.)

The sun singed Augustus’s body as he found himself in some sort of desert upon waking. After standing up, he flinched at the sight of the gigantic window, where Veruca Salt and her creepy grin; Violet Beauregard, and a lanky man with round sunglasses were staring at him. “You two? And… some other guy? Where am I?”

“You’re in my TV.” The paper-thin man responded. “I put you in there with my TV-TV Fruit powers. That’s what I am: Mike Teavee.”

While he couldn’t tell from outside, Augustus was stuck inside a small, old-timey TV, which used antennas and had a staticky screen. “Yes yes, it’s funny how all of you are named after your respective thing.” Augustus rolled his eyes. “Though I want to ask where Augustus Gloop is.”

“He wanted to get chocolate powers from the Chocolate Volcano.” Violet replied. “Didn’t work out.”

“Ahh.” Augustus flexed his brows, figuring out the rest. “Well anyway, where’s Lord Tyrone?”

“Lord Licorice has already been to see you.” Veruca stated. “He wanted to make sure we caught you. We did. Now he’s going to meet his acquaintance. He wants us to bring you there, too.”

“You guys can’t say one thing that isn’t secretive, huh? I guess Willy Wonka did teach a few things. Unless you’ll tell me where we’re going?”

“You’ll find out.” Veruca grinned. “For now, just be a good boy and stay in there. Come, Violet. Let’s go eat cookies.”

“Of course, Friend.” Violet flipped out of the room while Veruca walked normally. Mike Teavee laid flat on the floor like a carpet.

Stewie Griffin piloted the Ace Flyer as they soared after the fleet of Cinnamon Ships under a sunset sky. “The tracking device I had placed on Augustus isn’t responding.” Stewie said. “It shut off in that left tower, so perhaps we’ll look there.”

“Ahh dunno, man, what if Lord Licorice is on that thang?” Rallo asked worriedly. “Can’t we just wait and see where it’s going?”

“Don’t be such a Scooby, Rallo. I mean, their propellers are cinnamon rolls, I think we have the upper hand here.”

“You forget that we once worked for a company that also had candy-based technology.” Rallo said with disbelief.

“And we were utterly defeated. So let’s do this.”
Stage B-6: Sour Cinnamon

Mission: Escape the Sour Cinnamon!

Act 1

As the small plane flew closer to the Sour Cinnamon, PIE Fighters were sent to launch giant versions of said pastries at them. Stewie barrel-rolled and dodged the pies before blasting pool balls at one ship, while Maggie shot the other with a missile launcher. They kept this up with other PIE Fighters until a Cinnaucer approached them, which looked like a smaller UFO aptly shaped like a cinnamon roll. It flew vertically and blocked their path, facing its hypnotic swirly top as it released a constant stream of cinnamon. The Baby Trio avoided the substance for the sake of not getting their engines clogged, and Maggie kept pelting it with missiles until it was down.

The Ace Flyer caught up with the Sour Cinnamon and was flying over the roof of the swirly-propeller ship. Turrets emerged from the roof and blasted colorful rock candies, possibly meant to mimic lasers. Stewie and Maggie kept shooting them, nearing closer to the left watchtower Stewie mentioned. “So how do ya wanna get in?” Rallo asked. “Park by and knock on their window?”

Two Cinnaucers ambushed them on either side and swallowed their ship in cinnamon. Stewie struggled to see forward, his eyes squinted from the sticky powder, but the plane was now trembling from clogged engines. “No, it seems we’re doing like my father: drunken crash through the front door at 1am.”

Within seconds, the two-seated plane CRASHED through the tower’s window, and the babies flew out. “What the hell?!” Mike Teavee jumped to the air and on his feet, his body wobbling like paper.

“Twerps! You made it?!”

“Augustus?!” Rallo looked around for the source of the voice. “Where you at?? Are you a ghost? OH GOD, PLEASE DON’T HAUNT ME like President Lincoln now haunts Joseph!”

“I’m inside the TV, you idiots! He put me in here with a Devil Fruit power. Just destroy this TV or somethin’!”

“I don’t think that’s a good idea.” Stewie said. “If it doesn’t work, you might end up lost among the airwaves until you end up on TeenNick. Maggie, Rallo, attack him!” He pointed at Mike.

“Good idea!” Rallo perked up. “If we knock him out, his power will wear off!” He blasted music notes at the paper-thin man while Maggie shot missiles. Mike Teavee withstood the notes, then he nimbly dodged the missiles.

“Iron Body and Paper Art.” Mike said, his top part bending like a cane. “Can’t hit me, can’t touch me. What, you thought a guy who’s skinnier than paper wouldn’t learn some kind of self-defense? Even an idiot coulda guessed that.”

“Could that idiot also have guessed Rallo and Maggie would distract you while I saved our idiot captain?” Mike turned his paper head left, gasping when he saw Stewie on the table beside the small TV.

“Who you calling an idiot, Stew?!” Augustus yelled.
“Don’t even THINK it!” Mike’s goggles turned into TV static as he shot a static beam at Stewie. The baby whipped out a satellite gun and blasted a blue ray, which turned the static blue as it struck the TV. Augustus popped out of the gray screen like 3-D before plopping on the floor.

“A Metahuman Neutralizer.” Stewie smirked and held his weapon proudly. “Even an imbecile could have guessed I would have one.”

“Nice going, Brat.” Augustus grabbed Stewie under his left arm, then dodged over to grab Maggie and Rallo. “Later, TV!” Augustus ran for the broken window to jump out.

They landed on a walkway as Augustus nearly fell over the edge with the momentum, but he regained balance and set the babies down. “Man, why ain’t we beat that guy and get on the plane??” Rallo complained.

“I saw it clogged with cinnamon, and I wasn’t gonna waste time with that loser.” Augustus said. “We’ll just steal one of their ships.”

There was an open hatch on the tower’s side, puffing a Growth Gum. Augustus took a piece and used it to bounce down the mini cinnamon roll propellers, the Baby Trio following. They landed on a walkway, but before letting the gum pop, Augustus bounced to a cinnamon roll platform above its left, retrieving a Gold Wonka Bar. The Marzipans traveled along the path and encountered three Blackberry Guards. They shot guns with jawbreaker bullets, but Augustus countered by chucking his Gobstopper to hit their guns away.

“Maggie, you know where to shoot!” Augustus grabbed the spike-haired baby and threw her over his shoulders, running from the Blackberries when they drew swords. Maggie used her sniper to shoot the Blackberries in their unarmored faces. The pirates searched the Blackberries’ fallen forms (“She clearly killed them, yet we can’t say it.” Stewie said) and found Licoropes. “Cool! We can use these!”

Augustus was first to throw his Licorope onto a candycane propeller that was over the railing. He whirled around and around before letting himself fly to another propeller and roping it. “Yyyyeah…” Rather than mimic his actions, Stewie decided to launch his grappling gun to the railing of the walkway they would eventually get to, pulling Rallo and Maggie with him. Indeed, Augustus arrived at this walkway after clearing the propellers, and was very dizzy afterward. “Uuuuhh… how you twerps get here ’fore iiiii…” Augustus moaned.

“Shall I fetch The Little Brain Cell That Could?” Stewie remarked. After August recovered, the four entered the doorway of a building this walkway was set around. They were on a circular walkway over a lower floor, and Blackberries were quick to charge around from the opposite side. Augustus left the babies to deal with them while he dropped to the floor below, which had three large boxes. Broccoli Trolls popped out of these boxes, and their horrid stench reached Augustus’s nose. He could understand why the Blackberries don’t come down here: these guys were poison to any candy lover.

Augustus held his nose shut and sliced the broccoli with his Candycane Cutlass, but this merely increased the strength of the stench. Augustus had to squint his eyes because the green gas was making them water. He looked up the stairs that led back to the walkway and noticed the switch on the wall, labeled FANS. “Guys, hit that button!”

After Rallo finished beating a Blackberry, he jumped off its fallen body and reached the switch to flip it. Ceiling fans activated and sucked the poison gas out of the room. “Way to go.” Augustus smiled with praise. “Come on, kids, let’s blow this place.” The three babies joined him as they followed a passage that sloped down. They stood on a grated floor above a chasm, using their Licoropes to swing a candycane ceiling fan. Their weight pulled it down, so they swung to the following floor quickly. Augustus noticed another floor below this one, so he held onto the fan to descend and land on it.

He found a Fudgepuffsicle down here, eating it to inflate and float up like a balloon. He shifted his body to avoid hitting the spikes under the higher floor, and Maggie jumped on his bloated body to ride. Turrets on the next floor blasted candy corn, so Maggie shot those turrets to protect her captain. Over this next floor, Augustus could float up a ceiling shaft, where Maggie grabbed a floating Gold Wonka Bar. Augustus deflated and landed on the floor, and Stewie and Rallo came over with the grappling gun.

Since nothing would help them cross the pit to the next floor, Augustus grabbed the three babies in his arms to make a great leap over. He set them down as they climbed a ladder down a shaft. They ended up at the bottom of the Sour Cinnamon, standing on a walkway hanging precariously over the great drop. It appeared that they were flying over a jungle. “Augh. The sun’s almost setting.” Augustus noticed. “We better steal a ship and get outta here before it’s your bedtime.”

“Yo, quit treating us like children!” Rallo yelled. “We’re over 20 years old, you know!”

“Well, I’m 15 and I’m hunting candies.” Augustus bit his current lollipop and lowered his sunglasses to show his cool stare. “Your argument means nothing.”

The Marzipans followed the walkway down before it came to a stop. There was a turning device with cinnamon rolls attached to the end of its two poles. The rolls passed by their platform, so they used the Corn-Clamber Boots to step on them and ride along. The Deadly Babies were terrified at hanging directly over the thousand-foot drop, relying only on the sturdiness of their candy boots and some overgrown cinnamon roll. They were about to pass a part of the underside that looked like chocolate chip cookie, and Augustus was able to stamp his boots into it.

The babies joined him, but being completely upside-down over the drop wasn’t a good feeling. Turrets popped out and tried to shoot them, but Maggie reacted quickly by shooting back. They kept firm on the cookie path until they were above a new walkway. They jumped off the cookie and switched to their regular shoes. Blackberries tried to shoot them from other paths, but Augustus threw his Gobstopper to bonk their heads forcefully and make them fall into the jungle. “Man, this thing is awesome!” he said happily once the Gobstopper returned.

They came to a series of sealed steam pipes on the ship’s underside. They used their Licoropes to swing across, popping the pipes open as a result (sugar came out instead of steam). They set foot on a new walkway and hurried to the ladder at the end.

Unfortunately, Veruca Salt climbed down that ladder, approaching with a malicious grin and rotting body. The pirates readied their selves, but they saw Violet Beauregard crawl along the underside and land behind them. “I knew Mike couldn’t guard you.” Veruca said. “That’s why I wanted to. Why couldn’t I?”

Augustus chucked Gobstoppers at her, Maggie shot Violet with bullets, but both of them used Iron Body to defend. “So all you guys use Rokushiki like Black John Licorice?” Augustus asked.

“Well, yeah.” Violet was chewing some gum. “If he knew it, why wouldn’t Lord Licorice know? FYI though, the martial art was invented by the government assassins, CP10.”

“So there’s nowhere to run.” Veruca stepped forward slowly. “Lord Licorice wants you to fight in the arena. I want to help him. I want to catch you.”
Augustus clutched his cutlass in both hands. “Huuzzzzzz!” He gripped it tight, trying to focus his very willpower into it.

“Not the best time to be constipated.” Stewie remarked.

“I’m trying to focus my Haki! Just… a little…!”

“You can’t use Haki?” Violet asked, popping her gum.

“Nnnnn… aaaaaahhh!” Augustus slashed his sword and cut one of the beams holding up this path. “Huh… It’s Licorope. Kids, better hang on!”

“W-Wait! What’re you doin’?” Rallo asked. (“Mw-mw?” Maggie followed.)

“Sorry to drop on your summer, but fall is coming early!” Augustus slashed the other three Licoropes, and this section of the walkway plummeted to the forest as the pirates hung on. (Play “Piranha Creeper Creek” from Mario 3-D World!)

Act 2: Cinnamon Jungle

“WAAAAH!” The walkway bounced down some big gelatin leaves before crashing on the jungle floor. “You tryin’ to kill us, Cap’n?!” Rallo yelled.

“You’re still young, but I thought you would know the difference between staying there and where we are now.”

“True, but this defeats our plan of stealing a transport.” Stewie noted.

“There’s bound to be civilization somewhere. Let’s just get away before they come down.”

The sun had gone below the horizon, so the sky was turning indigo. They followed a path through the woods, turning left and stopping to view a route where giant apple-headed Piranha Plants stretched out of holes in their walls to munch on trees oozing with cinnamon. “This reminds me of a cereal no one eats.” Rallo said.

“You mean Apple Jacks?” Augustus asked. “This is where everybody harvests cinnamon for their food. The Apple Piranhas here love them. That’s where they got the idea for those commercials.”

Augustus threw Gobstoppers at the piranhas’ heads, making them retreat into their holes so the pirates could get through. Once past the road, they arrived at a small lake of cinnamon, where a large cinnamon roll platform was floating. They jumped on it, and another platform floated up. The sequence repeated, but Apple Piranhas were coming up, munching their mouths as they moved in zigzaggy fashions to eventually eat the rolls. Augustus and Maggie attacked them before they could come. Piranhas ambushed from behind, so Maggie handled those ones while Augustus faced front. Eventually, the cinnamon rolls led them to a shore on the other side.

They used their Corn-Clamber Boots to go up a short wall made of rock and cinnamon. At the top, they overlooked a very steep hill, but thought it best not to take off their boots given the unsteady ground. Apple Piranhas peeped out of holes and spat cinnaballs at them. They managed to avoid them despite the slower speed of their boots, and Augustus hit them with Gobstoppers. At the bottom of this slope, the path shifted left, but the cinnamon ground was still slanted and threatened to drop them in ooze below.

The slanted path became more wide, but Apple Piranha heads were rolling out of holes on their left, threatening to shove them off. There was a Gold Wonka Bar perched in front of one of the holes, and being the gutsy fool he was, Augustus stomped up to grab it. Eventually, the path brought them to stable, grassy ground, so they could take off their clamber boots. They entered another route through the jungle, where Augustus used his cutlass to slice the M. Bushes he expected to ambush them. Spear Guys swung overhead on vines and dropped their favored weapons, moving too fast for August or Maggie to hit.

They hurried through this path and reached another cinnamon cliff. Augustus tried to march up first, but he ended up falling when he stomped a spot that was less stable. Rallo used his boombox powers to shake that cliff, making the outer crust come off. This way, they could easily step up. They viewed a steep, grass hill, but they could see Spear Guys swinging from afar, throwing their spears with whipping speed. Maggie locked on with her sniper rifle and shot every Spear Guy in her vision.

Augustus lifted Maggie over his shoulders so she could keep shooting them while he marched up the slope with his clamber boots. They made it to the top of the hill, then took a right path to find a river of oozing cinnamon, which had a solid path that threatened to crumble under their weight. There was a bushel of Ringtrots, so they each took one and began sucking on it. The super sour taste gave them the energy to run across the would-be crumbling path with great speed. The cinnamon creek became wider, and they had to make run-and-jumps over gaps in the path. Rallo ended up taking a left route where the footholds were smaller, but he survived and successfully grabbed a Wonka Bar.

Rallo rejoined his friends before they dashed up a path up the wall, shifting rightward and dodging the many Apple Piranhas that came out to munch them. The path was coming to the wall’s edge, but instead of fly off, they shifted angles as the wall turned. The path led them parallel with another wall, where they had to jump back-and-forth when Piranha Plants tried to block their way. This segment concluded when a string of piranhas rose out of the opposite wall, failing to bite the pirates before they landed on the safe ground. The Marzipans gasped for breath before marching further into the jungle. (End song.)

They stepped up a hill and looked at the Sour Cinnamon in the distance. “’Guess they lost us.” Augustus panted, still tired. “Let’s hope they stay lost.”

Stewie’s eyelids were drooping, and the baby was trying to keep himself standing. …Inevitably, the football-head ended up tumbling down the hill. “Stewie!” Augustus and co. ran down to help him.

“Uuu… I’m okay.” Stewie said groggily.

“I knew you kids would get tired. Let’s rest here. They shouldn’t be able to find us in the dark.”

The four pirates settled under a grouping of trees. Augustus pulled the wrapping off one of their Gold Wonka Bars, giving a small piece to each of them. “I know it isn’t good bedtime food, but it’s all we got without our airplane. I’ll let you kids have extra servings ’soon as we’re out of here.” The captain proceeded to eat the rest of the Wonka Bar.

“I ain’t sure I’ll be able to sleep, on account o’ the monsters.” Rallo shuddered.

“Mw-mw-mw.” Maggie said with worry.

“Fine. You two can be night watch.” August smirked.

“Sure…” Rallo’s eyes grew heavy. “We’ll just… eat some cinnamon and…” He and Maggie both fell into slumber.
“Ahh, the minds of the less intelligent.” Stewie said. “I suppose you’ll be falling asleep before long.”

“I have more sugar in my veins than you.” Augustus bit his candybar. “I still don’t get something, though. Why’d you twerps save me, anyway? I don’t think I’d be able to blackmail you if Lord Licorice had me.”

“You probably would’ve escaped, anyway.” Stewie sighed. “Besides, our lives are too dull without the Big Mom Pirates. When your family’s frozen in age, nothing ever changes. It’s always the same routine, week after week. We joined those pirates to begin with to get away from those routines. But now that they’re gone, you’re all we have left. And, I guess part of me kind of liked what we did.”

“Hmm. I think that’s part of the reason I didn’t wanna stay home with my parents.” Augustus smiled. “Aside from the adventure and new experiences, I feel more at home out here. Chatting with the Gumdrop Pirates and… well, people who can understand me.”

“Perhaps, but, Augustus… do you ever wonder if it’s wrong to seek life away from your family?” Stewie looked away reflectively. “If you think you’re bound for so much more because you’re ashamed of where you come from?”

“I’m not ashamed.” Augustus started a new lollipop. “The blood of candy hunters courses through my veins. Seeking adventure, thrills, whether you have a reason or not… I know for sure that this is what I was meant to do.”

“That’s something to admire about you.” Stewie smiled. “But you know, you never did tell us why you wanted to search for the Lost Candies. Judging by your response to that Ricardo fellow, it sounds like a deep reason.”

“Actually, I—…” Augustus blushed, thinking how cheesy this sounded. “A few months back, I… promised this sick boy I would find the candies. He wanted to… taste the cake that they created before he dies. I felt bad because… I was more interested in finding Candied Planet.”

“Oh…” Stewie remembered hearing the truth behind that plan. “…I suppose if this adventuring thing doesn’t work out, you wouldn’t fail as a babysitter.”

“Hwhat are you talking about?” Augustus chuckled.

“Oh, I don’t know. It’s just a thought. …Achoo!” Stewie sneezed. “I don’t mean to suggest anything, but babies aren’t used to sleeping outside without… blankets.”

“Sad that you don’t have Mommy or Daddy to sleep with?”

“Oh, shut your lollipop hole.”

“Alright, fine. But just for tonight.” Augustus lied down and held his arm open, allowing Stewie to crawl up and rest his misshapen head on it.

Augustus felt something on his right and saw that Maggie was hugging him, laying her weary head on his chest. Rallo also cuddled up beside Maggie, warming her with his afro. Augustus didn’t know why, but… he felt warm. These children, even though they were frozen in age, were adorable. Sometimes, Augustus wondered what it would be like to have siblings. Little brothers or sisters who look up to him. Of course, he had Haylee for that. And they would all be his pirate crew. “Hmm… But as far as siblings go, these three are downright weird.”
The next morning…

The Marzipan Pirates were still asleep, cuddled close together. Engines roared in the sky, and the kids were waken up when small bits of cinnamon sprinkled on them. Feeling the sticky stuff on their face, they shook awake and got to their feet. The Sour Cinnamon was passing overhead. “Uh-oh. Looks like they found us.” Augustus said.

They stood and watched as the Cinnamon continued flying. “That’s odd, they aren’t dropping any soldiers.” Stewie noticed.

The vessel appeared to be heading to a giant mountain that was round like a stadium. “Didn’t Veruca say that… they were taking us to an arena?”

Roars and chants echoed through the jungle. As the Marzipans approached the stadium cautiously, they grew louder.

The Night Castle was based off Mogeko Castle from the game of the same name.
Chapter Summary

Crystal Wickens infiltrates Warbucks Mansion. Sunni explores Wonderland once more.

Sigh… my mind is still foggy from the last chapter. So many things goin’ on, I just can’t think straight. Ho well… this chapter is really nothing special, I was going to put a lot more here, but then I felt like that stuff’s best saved for other chapters, I just wanna get back to posting. Anyhoo, let’s begin.

Chapter 12: Where Madness Grows

New York City

Sandman, Yuki, and Wiccan landed atop a skyscraper after dropping out of the Sandmobile. “Alright, the Warbucks Mansion is just on the outskirts of the city, east side.” Sandman explained, viewing his map. “We just need to sneak in and talk to the Yipper.”

“Ahhh, adults breaking into a young girl’s home.” Crystal sighed. “Many misunderstandings.”

“Let’s just get it over with. My head’s starting to feel real fuzzy all of a sudden…”

Stage 21: Warbucks Mansion

Mission: Speak with the Yipperman Plus about Freddy’s Pizzeria.

Act 1

Of course, before they actually went to the mansion, the three heroes began their flight across the city, wind chilling their flesh as a feeling of freedom filled their hearts, a kind of freedom one can only find in open-world videogames. “Quick question I wanna ask, didn’t you say the mansion’s got heavy security?” Yuki asked.

“I know, that’s why we didn’t go the other night. I called in a favor to get codes and blueprints for the place.”

“To who?” Crystal asked.

“An acquaintance. Hopefully she didn’t make too big a mess getting them. Still have her communicator linked, she’s just this way…”

The honking of horns rang below as they glided over street after street, the city alit by building, car, and streetlights to keep everyone awake. The heroes made their way to a dark, more empty backstreet area where Sandman led the team down a darker alleyway with fallen trashcans and puddles of slop. Nolan stopped just before the path turned black. “Who walks in the shrouded path?” a woman’s French accent spoke.
“One who seeks the unshrouded.” Nolan replied.

“We meet again, Sandman.” The slender woman in the black coat, long hair, and ruby-red lips blowing a cigarette, stepped out.

“Madame Rouge. No trouble getting the codes?”

The woman slipped a small disk from under her sleeve. “Not as much as I vished.” She tossed it to Sandman. “Revan vould be proud, his apprentice robbing a rich type.”

“He sure would. How’s the husband?”

“Good. Ve have recently taken a girl called Wendy under our ving. You-Know-Who’s orders. And they’ve just been all over the place vith each other, eet’s very annoying. I don’t suppose you’ve heard of a vinged cat?”

“I don’t doubt such a thing exists.” Nolan said with a hint of ‘that was so random.’

“Didn’t think so. Vell, enjoy your break-in.” She walked past him out of the alley. “I vill be hitting the town.” She morphed into a raven and took flight.

Nolan slipped the disk into his terminal and had the blueprints studied. “Perfect: guard schedules, searchlights and everything, these rich guys have class. Interestingly, they have aerial sensor alarms to keep an eye out for non-bird flying objects. No gliding or hovering, then. We’re not trying to make ourselves as enemies, so don’t get caught or attack anyone. If everyone starts panicking, they’ll seal the place and we’ll never talk to that Yipper. Time to move.”

They flew back to the buildings and soared to the east, where Warbucks Mansion was marked on Nolan’s map. They could’ve taken the time to explore the city and look for Riddler Trophies or sidequests, but figured the readers would forgive them for making this journey a little bit shorter. There came to be less buildings and more trees as they journeyed down a road through a small forest. They made it to some tall barred gates, viewing the huge front yard of a heavily-guarded mansion, where searchlights and guards roamed the many square crossroads. “I guess we’ll be jumping the fence, then.” Wiccan said.

“Actually, Iiii was thinking you could do this yourself.” Sandman replied.

“Come again?”

“Well, we’re not trying to cause a panic, and it’d be harder for three costumed adults to run around unseen. Since I’m in a heavy-ass wheelchair, and you’re um, more coordinated than Yuki, you could sneak in the mansion, disable the alarms, and we could sneak in through a safe window. I’ll beam you any codes you’ll need, but we’ll rush in if you get in trouble. If this goes wrong, we’ll need another plan.”

“If I’m so required, I won’t fail. …No hovering, huh?” So with that, Crystal climbed a tree, got over the fence, and landed behind some trashcans. “It’s like Coach Wittenberg always said, ‘You may not like gym now, but when it’s time to break into a young girl’s home, you’ll wish you took more classes.’ And I said, ‘Well I’m not the one teaching class through a TV in jail, am I?”’

Since the yard was so open and exposed, Crystal crawled between two rows of bushes, where a watchtower was stationed a few feet away with two searchlights lazily rotating around. Two guards were also patrolling, one in Crystal’s aisle, and another on the left aisle beside the fence. She thought it best to crawl through this one since the lights were going counterclockwise, waiting for the guard to walk forward before she crawled. She then quietly stepped over the left bushes, got down, and crawled away before either could notice. “Hey, Johnny. How d’you feel about nightshifts?”

“It’s the hard-knock life. For me.”

“It’s a hard-knock life. For me.”

Though mildly humored at their chat, Crystal continued. She arrived at a small area of yard littered with twigs, where a dog was fast asleep in her house up ahead, labeled Sandy (not to be confused with many others). Using the balance and coordination Nolan praised her for, she began hopping to the little patches of open ground, one foot standing while the other stretched away, having to leap precisely in following patches of land lest she lose balance and scared the dog awake. The next jump was to a tree, but since her staff’s rocket function was too much of an alarm, she leaped and grabbed it in a hug that looked rather awkward from another’s perspective.

She climbed to and then crawled across a branch, going above a tall wooden fence with very spiked tops. A few plank tops were flat, so those became Crystal’s stepping points when balancing across. If she fell off either end, she would hit the lines of trashcans, certainly setting people off. A searchlight glided over an area of the fence partway through, forcing Crystal to remain steady while it went by, then continued past it. She made it to a corner of the mansion, grabbing hold of a vine ladder that grew on the wall and climbing to the roof. She crouched and crawled to stay just under the searchlights’ starting place, keeping along the edge as best her balance could. She turned a corner and reached the back side of the mansion, overlooking a yard of five pools.

Crystal was able to rest on a small balcony before the window of a storeroom. She sat down to catch her breath. “Okay, Nolan, how do I get in? I assume this window’s alarmed.”

“Yep, and the door below has guards on the other end. But see that pumphouse across the pool?” Crystal viewed the little house on the farther end. “There’s a passage inside that connects to the basement, no guards. I’ll tell you the code to get in.”

“There’s quite the handy bit of guards AROUND the pools, you know.”

“Those middle ones, though... they each have one set moment where the guards look and walk away from them. You can freeze the pools and slide across.”

“That’ll look subtle. Sigh... I’ll try, anyway.” Crystal carefully hopped down using the roofs of the windows below, landing on the top of the stairs where the back door was perched. With careful timing, when the guards were turned away on Nolan’s cue, Crystal rushed down to the pool, “Glacius.” and blew a gentle ice cloud that froze it solid. Backing up, she ran, fell on her front, and glided across like a penguin, quickly ducking under the umbrella table once across, and “Incendio.” using fire to melt the pool.

“So why didn’t Warbucks take Annie to the party?” a passing guard asked.

“He didn’t like how all the rich types think. Didn’t want Annie to pick up some bad habits, or worse. If it were me, I’d have mixed feelings about riding a train halfway up the stratosphere.”

“Charlie thinks Warbucks is goin’ up there to learn somethin’, of what, I don’t know. You know what I heard about that Mariejoa once? Anyone that goes up there never makes it back down. The joke is they’re ‘uplifted to Heaven.’”

Crystal repeated her actions once the guards weren’t looking, freezing this new pool, but since it was heated, her ice melted into shrinking chunks, having to quickly and quietly jump these chunks to make it. She hid beneath a smaller table afterwards, but the third pool had a guard sitting in an inner-tube in the middle, slowly rotating while sipping juice. The right side had a rope floating with thick bobbers, so when the guard rotated away and all others were not looking, Crystal quickly and carefully walked across each bobber before she tumbled over.

Once at the pumphouse, she typed the code ‘Leapin Lizards’ in a terminal and got inside. The tiny cramped room reeked of rusty wet pipes, and a strange gas emitted from one of them that made her cough. The gas did nothing else while she searched around, eventually finding a small hatch with a pitch-black passage. She climbed down, frantically shook cobwebs off her, and hit a floor. “Lumos.” She emitted a light from her staff to see down the dusty passage.

She walked through at a quick pace, hearing only the rhythm of her gasps. On her right, she thought she caught a glimpse of a skeleton in a ragged icy cloak, but passed this off. Finally, she got to a ladder and climbed, but one of the planks gave way under her foot and she slipped. “Gotcha!” A hand grabbed her arm, helping her to safety.

“Oh, thank you, Tra-..” Crystal nearly froze. A handsome boy with dark-purple spiky hair and yellow eyes smiled at her. Crystal’s brother. “Travis…”

“UAAH!” The boy was stabbed from behind, and Crystal gaped as he morphed into a ghoul, collapsed, and dispersed into dust. A scarecrow-like being with glowing eyes vanished into the dark. Crystal kept still and breathed heavily. What in the world was this? Her staff light having gone out, she merely walked forward and through a door.

“N-No! Stop! Pleeeeaase!” A man was crying down the hall on Crystal’s left “Take whatever you want, just don’t hurt anyone!” a maid cried.

“I want to hear you scream… I want to see your fear.” A being’s shadow raised a long syringe over the shadows of the pleading couple. “I’m more than just a nightmare… I’m Affright.” The shadows shrunk away when the syringe came down and they screamed. The mansion was an eerie gray color as Crystal ran down, seeing the man and woman shaking ceaselessly after turning the corner. Crystal kept going, entering a large chamber with a stairway, chandeliers overhead, and mansion guards walking like zombies.

“Uhhhhh, Nolan, something very odd is going on here.” Crystal spoke into her communicator. A heavy breathing was on the other end, right into Crystal’s ear, mixed with exhaustion and anger. “Nolan?”

“DAMMIT, Crystal, stop calling me!” A high-pitched ringing rang from the phone, and it morphed into a bat and flapped away. The zombified guards all faced her and morphed into ghouls. Crystal held her staff and started batting them around when they ran at her, kicking them when they managed to grab hold, and watching as they dispersed into dust. “Hey!” she yelped when the bat-phone flapped down and took her staff away in its talons. She ran up the stairs to give chase, but giant green tentacles burst out of the walls and floors, wishing to claim Crystal for whatever monster they belonged to.

A chandelier fell down beside her level, so she leaped to it. It shook and clanged its jewels furiously, attempting to raise Crystal to the spiked ceiling, but she jumped to another one in time. This one tried to drop into the floor-turned-lava-pit, but Crystal jumped to the floor where the stairs would’ve led her. Her staff was dangling from the phone-bat’s talons, chasing it through a hallway of paintings and artifacts. When the bat seemed to poof through a door, Crystal chased it in.

The room was packed with statue heads, paintings, and old weapons. Crystal suspected the bat was hiding among the junk, so she searched around. It wasn’t anywhere totally visible, not behind any statues or anything. She looked around the paintings to see if it was camouflaged, but in the few black areas, there were no bat-shaped lumps. The paintings themselves weren’t of anything original, Mona Lisa, a fancy heavy-clothed couple holding hands, Eskimos crossing a blizzarding plain.

She combed the room a few more times just to make sure, moved a few objects around, but no sign that the bat was in there. She skimmed the paintings again… the Mona Lisa was replaced with Crystal herself, same pose and style. The Eskimos were replaced by Yuki leading skeletons, and the couple was replaced by Nolan and… Affright? The latter grabbed and pulled Nolan in for a kiss that made Crystal want to vomit. Affright then faced her with new puffy ruby lips. “Num-Nums is good inside my tum-tums. HAAAEEEE!”

“AHH!” The scarecrow lunged at Crystal, its whole lips surrounding and encasing her inside a dark dimension. She couldn’t go left, she couldn’t go right. She could only move forward like a 2-D side-scroller. Okay, I guess that’s right. A distant, echoing beep sounded, becoming louder as she went on. Through the eyes of someone watching, she was a purple body surrounded by black, and after each beep, she shrunk a few inches. She started to look more like a purple dot within darkness. After the final beep, Crystal just… vanished.

A single strike of lightning brought Crystal back to what could be less reality. She was at the base of an obstacle course, floating miles above the ground in the center of a tornado, designed from torn walls, floors, and debris from the mansion. She ducked behind the wall when Affright’s gigantic form appeared over, sniffing for Crystal. Finding no one, he returned.

Crystal quietly crept along the floating path, peering around the wall’s edge to see the giant Affright rotating in the center of the course, searchlight eyes skimming for his prey. Before he came around to her, Crystal quickly jumped the midair bobbers like from the pool, of course it was far more terrifying inside a tornado. She got across and ducked under the short wall when Affright looped around. “There’s nowhere to run.” However, the giant began skimming that particular area, going left to right as Crystal stayed hidden. There were broken gaps in the wall he could see through, so she waited ‘til he wasn’t looking before quickly crawling forward.

She was able to stand behind a tall wall and recompose. She gasped when a thick wooden stick dangled before her face, looking up as the phonebat flapped away tauntingly. “Hey-!” She clapped her mouth shut, not wanting to attract Affright. The bat flapped its way over the course, so when Affright looked away, she quickly chased, having to jump the recurring spike traps and flamethrowers. She would’ve caught the bat, but he was too far in exposed space when Affright came back, so she hid behind a wall. She seized the moment when his sight passed, running as quick as she could. Despite the bat’s desperateness to escape, Crystal jumped and grabbed her staff back, then bumped into a wall. She had to use her rocket function to propel up to the ledge, ducking when Affright came around.

She found another dead end between two walls whose space between was the length of her staff, each baring holes parallel with each other. With the rocket boost, she shot partway up and stuck both ends of her staff inside the first pair of holes, conveniently behind a sub-wall to avoid Affright’s vision. “You’ll only climb to oblivion.” He began skimming up-and-down that particular area. To climb higher, Crystal had to stand and balance on the staff, jump while yanking it off, and sticking in the following holes. The catch was she couldn’t stay behind the wall while standing, and much of the following holes didn’t have walls, so she had to move quickly.

Once up top, Crystal was behind another wall while Affright continued the left-to-right routine. Hovering just over Crystal’s side of the path were huge floating diamonds that, when hit by Affright’s lights, would emit a huge light that would have Crystal caught if she stood in it. He could view these diamonds through gaps or windows, but there were smaller walls on Crystal’s side she could hide behind and avoid the expanded gaze. She made it out of the diamond zone, and the rest of the course appeared to be a balance beam, with the only walls to hide behind being below. When Affright looped around, she would have to drop, grip, and hang behind the wall; unfortunately, parts of the beam steadily began to collapse. She climbed up, balanced further, and hung behind the wall when Affright looped, immediately continuing before the beam fell.

Finally, she was on a platform where a path led directly at Affright’s face. Almost instinctively, the giant caught her in its gaze, the entire realm flashing yellow. “Your path ends. Your soul is mine.” His groady scarecrow mouth ripped open, unveiling the endless vortex of death that would inhale Crystal’s soul. She felt frozen with fear, her life and existence about to end. She looked desperately for anything to help, but everything was yellow. The tornado and scattered mansion faded; on the wall beside, the couple’s painting was placed, baring the image of Nolan and Danika. That image was the only thing burned in her mind that moment.

“EXPECTO PATRONUM!” She lashed her staff at Affright as a great, silver hawk flew forth. It dug its talons into Affright’s form, and the whole realm was swallowed in light.

“Wuh?” Crystal gasped awake. She was plopped on the floor of the art junk room. Two blurry figures stood over her, and they bore the painted image of Nolan and Danika. The figures morphed when her vision cleared, and Sandman and Yuki stood.

“There you are, Crystal!” Sandman yelled. “You wouldn’t respond, so we thought something happened. We saw the guards run back into the mansion and followed them in—before we knew it, they started acting…”

“Affright.” Crystal gasped, helping herself up. “It was Affright. He was in here, he was…”

“I thought there was somethin’ familiar about those spasms.” Yuki commented. “So’d you chase him off?”

“I… imagine.”

“Affright doesn’t tend to stay in one place too long.” Sandman said. “Likes to save seconds for later. I’ve already called the cops—but let’s see if we can find that Yipper ’fore they come.”

With the guards unconscious, navigating the mansion became much easier. Recalling Buzz Lightyear’s story, if a rich girl bought her, they’d have to find a girl’s room, and before long they found a door labeled Annie’s Room. “That reminds me, ’wonder what Annie Wilconson’s up to.” Nolan thought aloud. “’Wonder if she and You-Know-Who got married.”

“You’ll have to fill us in, Nolan.” Wiccan noted.

“She’s some fangirl we used to hang out with—let’s just go in.” Yuki said impatiently.

They quietly creaked open the door. The room was filled with toys, pictures of friends from an orphanage, Annie with her baldheaded adoptive father Oliver Warbucks, and one with her dog Sandy. Annie was fast asleep on her bed, like Affright hadn’t touched her at all. She was clutching a teddybear, so they viewed the toys around the floor ’til they spotted a Yipper wearing a red cape and emblem—snoozing like any human. Knowing this was the one, Sandman rolled over, picked it up, and poked its chest. “Hello? Yipper?”

“Yaaa-aaawn…” Its beady black eyes blinked away. “W…WAH!” He frantically cowered behind a leg under Annie’s bed, fearing he would be ripped in two. “Intruders! Robbers! Don’t take me, I have too much to live for, take Ms. Beany-Baby over there!”

“It’s okay. My name is Sandman and we’re only here to talk.” Nolan spoke quietly enough so as not to wake Annie.

“About what?”

“…I need you to tell us everything you know about the animatronics at Freddy’s Pizzeria.”

“FREDDY’S PIZZERIA?! NO!! I DON’T WANNA GO BACK THERE, I DON’T KNOW ANYTHING!” He tried to bolt to the door, but Yuki jumped in his path and grabbed him.

“WE’RE NOT taking you there,” Nolan stated, “we just need you to-"

“NOOOOO NO I DON’T WANT TO, DON’T TAKE MEEEEE!” Yuki struggled to hold onto the toy, possessing the strength of a furious child.

“STOP!” Crystal smashed the toy to the floor with her staff, which seemed to silence him dizzy. Yuki rubbed his sore hand.

“Listen to me, I’m trying to change all of you back into humans, and I’m going to do something about those animatronics. The only way I’ll be able to get past them is if you tell us what you know. Please…” Sandman uncovered his mask to unveil the sincerity in his eyes.

The toy looked at him more admiringly. “I know that face… Are you… Nolan York? The legendary 2030 of the Kids Next Door?”

“Yes, yooou… were one of them?”

“Back in your time, yeah! I was McGillicutty.”

“…Never heard of you.”

“I once helped Numbuh 2 against Jimmy and his Bus Walkers. Remember?”

“I heard that story, don’t remember you in it.”

“Oh, forget it. Okay… I first came to Freddy’s when my kid-owner brought me. He dropped me to look at the robots, and… disappeared. And, between you and me… he was my little brother. Anyway, the robots are programmed to sing and dance in a room with lots of people, but in a room with one or few people, or at night in general, I’m not sure why, but they automatically assume any human is a robot out of costume and force him into a spare animatronic. That’s why you can’t get caught. The thing is though, the robots are also camera-shy, if an active camera is looking at them, they’ll stop moving. Also, if you shine a flashlight or something on a few of them enough, they’ll get confused and go away. Now Freddy himself, he doesn’t get off stage much, unless it’s really dark, so that really depends if it’s cloudy outside or not, and if it is, he’ll be pretty active.”

“Okay.” Nolan jotted all this down. “And, how would we go about interrogating them for information?”

This seemed to surprise Yipper, with worry. “Oh… Well, if that’s what you’re doing, your primary problem is The Puppet.”

“Puppet?”
“A creepy marionette that hangs in the back room. I still don’t know why, but it seems like The Puppet commands all the robots, like a sort of hive mind. It’s kinda confusing, but the robots act and look like zombies when night comes, but they have more personality during the day, in spite of their programming. The reason is that this music is always playing during daytime, and I think it puts The Puppet asleep, because the nightguard played it during his shift and the robots seemed to be more attentive, but they were still kind of in a trance. That isn’t the creepiest part… somehow, I think The Puppet just knows if anyone’s in the building. The music stopped playing one night, and he was gone so fast, no one saw. The Puppet froze in the guard’s room just when the sun came up; guess he was still bound by his contract. If there was a three-second delay, the story would’ve ended differently. If you’re going to take out that marionette, it’s imperative you keep that music playing, or that thing will be on you like a guy who passes you on the street and swipes your brain.”

“That.. would be a little difficult not to notice.” Crystal commented.

“In a pitch-black store?”

“Anything else I should know?” Sandman asked.

“Yeah, just a few things, there’s this one with balloons…”

After a few minutes of explanation, Sandman had all the notes in his digi-watch. “Well-p, our next stop is Freddy’s Pizzeria.” He announced as they headed out of the mansion. “I hope this is well worth the effort.”

“For the record, I want the next stage after Freddy’s.” replied Yuki.

“Noted. Time to head back to Civic. Let’s go.” And the vigilantes were gone as police and ambulance sirens sounded in the air.

Midway Gala

Compared to what the balcony outside looked like now, the inside of the peak was far more beautiful. Floors and walls with beige and bronze patterns, beautifully polished floors with many curtained tables, while the Corporate Presidents took their place at a rectangular table before a center stairwell. Gold chandeliers hung from what was essentially the ceiling, but it seemed as though this room was exposed to the indigo starry sky above. Everybody watched as Head President Morgan walked to the top of the center stairs. “Good evening.” her British accent echoed. “PAHAAAA!” Peter Griffin laughed, getting the joke.

“The caterers will be bringing food out shortly. I hope you like our model of the night sky above you, had a few magic friends create it their selves. There are a few words I’d like to say to all of you, by order of the World Leaders. The Leaders have hereby declared the Kids Next Door as our enemy, for they have disrupted the peace of our world by announcing a ridiculous phenomenon called ‘the Apocalypse.’ How they concocted such a rumor, we don’t know, nor do we know who was the first to start it. But the Leaders believe they aim to challenge us for world power, because knowing their morals, every adult with notable power is considered a threat, and while we would like to avoid such a conflict, they may give us no choice. If any of the children present are affiliated with the organization, the time is now for you to decide which side you’re on, and report any viable information to the World Government. Now if the other presidents would join me in the meeting room, the party may begin.”
As Morgan and the presidents were clearing up the stairs, groups of wizards and witches brewing cauldrons on the higher walkways waved their wands and let the show begin. Animals and creatures of silvery-white, angels, mermen, centaurs, dragons, soared about the party. From the cauldrons came beautiful, colorful bubbles that combined and formed many shapes, but saw that their liquid would magically return to the pots if they were popped and not ruin the food. Just as well, the chefs made their appearance with hundreds of plates of fabulous edibles, sure to satisfy the bellies of all richmen.

“My, the Head President truly knows how to put up a show.” Babs smiled with admiration.

“Thanks to her, wizards and magic folk don’t need to hide as much as they used to,” a high-pitched British man with a long gray mustache said. “The Anti-Lower-Class Charm I bought from them goes excellently with my outdoor pool!”

Helping herself to a Fruity Cake (and packing up a Couple’s Cake for someone special), Carol Masterson was back on her laptop when Doflamingo Jr. came over with a cool smile, his sister beside him with her Rainbow Monkey. “You hear THAT Carol, no feelings of treachery. I see you’re spending quite the time on their website.”

“Well, I’m STILL in training, regardless.”

“I’m aware of that. It won’t do you any good, you know. The last Supreme Leader never decided a successor, the KND is leaderless. Even with perfect marks, you can’t legally get in.”

“I’m still going to try. I don’t have to be in the KND to be able to help them.”

“Fufufufufu. Go ahead and help them if you intend to. The World Government’s power is limitless, if you remain on their side, punishment will be severe. Not that I’d want anything to happen to a lovely girl like you.” Carol rolled her eyes. “Come, Sugar. I’m sure your favorite grapes are somewhere.” He walked away. “Careful of the Tatababasco ones.”

Sugar looked at Carol for a few seconds before walking away with her Rainbow Monkey.

Chariton Household

Sunni was outright bored… again. Laying just where her mom would lay: on the couch. She spent so much time here, maybe Sunni would absorb some of her essence here and be a better psychicbender. She had no other ideas to try at this moment. If all else failed, she might as well just pay a scientist to extract her brain from her body.

But it seemed that was already done. When Sunni looked ’round to their fireplace mirror, her reflection was smiling and waving. Now what did her Negative want? She got up and walked to the mirror half-awake, her reflection grinning. When she retreated inside, Sunni climbed onto the fireplace and peered where she went. “…WAAAAAAH!” She tumbled forward into the shiny liquid glass. (Play “Welcome to Wonderland” from Kingdom Hearts: Chain of Memories.)

Stage 13: Wonderland

Mission: Follow your reflection.

Act 2: The Looking Glass

The inside of the mirror was just how Sunni expected it to look: extremely bright, shiny, and glassy. All the walls, floor, and ceiling were bright silvery-white mirrors, yet none of them bore her reflection. Except the one just down the hall before her, whose reflection smiled and waved before skipping to the right. Sunni chased after and wound up in a perplexing maze of mirrors that all bore reflections which mimicked her movements. She thought she could interact with them, but no such luck, but particular ones smiled and waved before skipping off. When Sunni followed the direction she skipped, she discovered new paths that were steadily leading her out of the maze.

She was brought outside to a beautiful sunny field of hills and flowers, and it felt much nice already to be viewing the field at a natural size, rather than tree-size plants. She followed the brown path through the grass that sloped down and up hills, passing a picnic table by a tree, but that’s when Sunni plopped into an invisible barrier. She felt around, but all it was was glass, totally unseen, but blocking her path. Her reflection was to her left again, sporting that cheery wave before skipping away. Following on the right of her path, the way seemed to be clear, heading into just barren grass. She then looked as her reflection leapt up some invisible stairs, so no doubt Sunni had to do so and ended up standing 7 feet in midair above the ground. This was followed by jumping over random areas, which Sunni assumed were pitfalls, dropping to an invisible slide that would send her back.

Sunni then watched as her reflection jumped, rolled in midair, and dove headfirst into a well on the ground, so Sunni did the same. She winded up hitting her head on a brownish-red floor below, inside of a darker, underground chamber with designs on its walls and floors. What few floors there were, as a dark chasm lay in the center, and her reflection on the ceiling was riding some slow back-and-forth square platforms across. Sunni did like before and mimicked, though seeing the darkness just beyond her feet was a nervous feeling.

She reached a foothold on the other side and passed down a narrow stairway to a rounder room with a wider chasm. She watched the ceiling mirror as her reflection rolled on her side, around and around the walls of the room. Feeling this was ridiculous, Sunni got on her side and rolled around and around. She felt herself moving along the wall, but didn’t dare stop lest she plummet to the chasm.

It seemed her reflection had the right mind again when she made it onto the higher platform in the corner. She followed a hallway that led back to the previous room, now on the higher ledge. Her reflection had arms squeezed to her body, staying perfectly straight as she made a collection of long, precise jumps over certain areas, apparently hitting invisible platforms as she jumped them in random order. Sunni assumed she had to jump to them in that order, and once she had memorized it, she was on the parallel foothold and could go down another stairwell. Then she kept going down…and down…and down…and down… Okay, her legs were getting tired. Stairs couldn’t possibly be this long.

Then after the 10th or maybe 15th loop down, she saw a mirror on her right where it looked like her reflection was mimicking her, but actually shifted a little to the left. Sunni shifted the same, and winded up slurped through a very narrow gap down a tight stairwell. It went on and on like before, until when Sunni glanced at the ceiling mirror where her reflection jumped just past the mirror. Sunni jumped then too, and expecting to collide with her image, ended up walking up an alternate stairwell that was camouflaged. The mirror was on the floor this time, her reflection diving left, so Sunni did the same and ended up going down a slide on her belly, ooooon and ooooon and ooooon. On her left, the reflection in the mirror zipped left, so so did Sunni, and THUMP! slammed headfirst into a wall.

She annoyedly recovered, finding herself on a flat floor and continuing down a passage. She appeared in another chasm room atop a foothold, her next path on the other side, and the entire wall on her left a mirror. Her reflection dropped off the front of the foothold and ran across a set, zigzag path over the chasm, Wall Jumped an area to start running at level with the footholds, jumped some areas, then one last Wall Jump onto the following area. After examining closely, Sunni memorized and followed this set route, or else she’d fall, reaching the next stairwell successfully.

The stairs sloped up this time, bringing Sunni to another outside meadow of giant chess pieces and teapots. Her reflection merrily skipped across the fields, and Sunni’s instincts told her to mimic as she hopped along, though with a much less joyous expression. She arrived at a white-curtained table where a black-clothed man in a top-hat poured tea into many cups. When he turned, she was staring at the handsome face and gorgeous eyes of Harry Gilligan, who smiled coolly.

Sunni felt her heart uplift, flushing at the sight of Harry. She had a real schoolgirl crush on the boy, and despite a few flaws Sunni didn’t agree with, he was totally cute and cool, and had an awesomely cool voice. She knew she had to be dreaming, ’cause why else would he be doing this, looking so… awesome? And looking at their reflections, Sunni’s furiously grabbed Harry’s and sucked powerfully on his lips, probably trying to swallow him whole. Shrugging agreeingly, a big grin on her face, Sunni grabbed Harry and embraced for kiss. She went flying into his mouth like a vacuum and down a surprisingly deep tunnel.

She landed on her head again and shook to… semi-reality. Well, that was totally trollish. With a disappointed aura, she followed another hallway to a large, dim-lit fireplace room. Her reflection was there to greet her. (End song.)

She kept her bright, vibrant smile, waving happily. With a very baffled, tad-resentful expression, Sunni waved back. It was so odd she just kept that smile, her eyes wide like they didn’t have lids. Her head turned full rotation and slanted just then, making little cracking sounds. Sunni became totally weirded when the reflection’s body swelled in different areas, growing taller and taller while the head stayed mini. Its legs stretched very long and muscular, as though Sunni did a looooot of running, and her arms old, wrinkly, and frail. Her rear and chest area swelled like balloons, the sight making Sunni wish she were blind, and her head, still smiling, stretched its eyes and let ’em hang loose. …Sunni would never want to engage in such madness. (Play “Shrouding Dark Cloud” from Kingdom Hearts.)

Boss fight: La Huüfla

This oddly-named creature started to walk about the room in an odd fashion, its head and droopy eyes swaying as it shook its hip to the music. Its arms were flapping mindlessly as fast as fans, and the right arm smacked Sunni and smashes her against the wall. Angered, Sunni whipped out her lightsaber and ran to strike its muscular legs, but they were much too thick as Huüfla kicked her forcefully against the wall again. Sunni ran up and dodged its legs before Wall Jumping between and throwing a strike at that offensively large bottom. Huüfla leapt and hopped around before falling on its rear and swaying back-and-forth. Sunni was then able to get on its body and strike the chest, making the creature fly around like a balloon.

It landed back on its feet and created Psycho Spheres around it, throwing at Sunni, who jumped away. She tried to create her own Psycho Sphere, but- “Whuh?” nothing appeared, leaving her to be blown away by one of Huüfla’s spheres’ explosions. “Where’s my bending now?” She quickly flipped back up and dodged the creature’s spheres, running around and behind it as she was about to draw her lightsaber and bat the spheres back at it. Just one problem- “Yuh-oh-” she seemed to have dropped her lightsaber when she was blown away moments ago.

She rolled forward and between Huüfla’s legs, running up to grab her saber and switch it on (since she couldn’t call it back with psychic either). When more spheres came, she batted one back with her saber and struck the monster in the face, and as it stumbled back, Sunni ran to the wall, jumped and kicked off, and struck the monster’s head. The head shook rapidly like a bobble head that was punched, and Sunni watched with disgust as its eyes drooped out even more and began slithering around the floor like snakes. Sunni frightfully tried to back away, keeping her saber ready to slice. But the eyes shot at her like bullets and wrapped her eyes and stomach area, attempting to pull her to the Huüfla.

Sunni shook more desperately than ever because of how gross this was, and managing to flip on her lightsaber, slashed the eye binding her waist, then slashed the one over her eyes. She felt near to barfing when they molted on the spot, but two more extra eyes spawned from the Huüfla. She started lashing them at Sunni as she jumped back, managing to grab both the eyes in her left hand and yank, the monster stumbling forward. Sunni let go and jumped forward to slice between the knees, the Huüfla wincing as it sunk slightly so Sunni could jump and strike its rear.

Huüfla jumped up again with a start, becoming angered though its face didn’t show it, and desperately began stomping around to hopefully smash Sunni, throwing Psycho Spheres at her as well. With a leap and vertical spin, Sunni batted a sphere back and struck the face, the creature wobbling only on one leg now. Sunni ran underneath with a quick slice at its right leg, and when it fell back, Sunni threw her sword up to stab the inflated rear. (End song.)

A high-pitched “WEEEEEEeee” squeaked out of its rear as Huüfla blew around and around the room like a balloon with a leak. Many snaky swirls through the air, growing flatter the more it flew. Finally, it came to a halt as it slid along the floor, expelling the last ounces of air. Sunni was filled with the greatest disgust at seeing herself this way. She took far too many blows to the head.

“I hereby decree you on the highest level of madness.” Sunni whipped around, spotting the Cheshire Cat atop the fireplace. “Only someone truly insane would beat themself up.”

“Pfft, that thing wasn’t me, it was just… some fucked-up metaphor someone’s trying to show me.”

“Well, then it’s no different from anything else. Because everything else here is a metaphor. Unless someone makes it a simile. Like this, for one: have you even the slightest idea why a raven is like a writing desk?”

“Because in a fucked-up world like this, either of them could become a surfer.”

“That’s true. It’s the same way a surfboard is like a pair of scissors: both are very good accountants. Ever decide on what your career should be? This fireplace here makes over 7 billion dollars a minute.”

“Siiiigh.” Sunni sat cross-legged in defeat. “Look man, I just don’t care anymore. I just wanna learn psychicbending and go save my damn mom. Unless you got any books-for-dummies, just show me to the nearest glass so I may look back through it.”

“Well, it might be a tad difficult to learn it since you just beat it up.”

“What’re you talking about, this bloated balloon?”

“That ‘balloon’ happens to be your shadow.”

“Oh, I’m a shadowbender now?”

“Everyone has a shadow. Even me. See?” The cat waved at his shadow, who flailed an arm happily before settling down. “Fun little fellow. Don’t judge them just because they don’t speak.
All shadows have a personality. Shadowbenders’ shadows are just more open. Other shadows are shy. A shame, really, because they can work so much better together if they speak up more.”

“Right… So are psychicbenders’ shadows normally like that?”

“Shadows can look like anything. They’re meant to represent the bender’s hidden self. It seems you were hiding you from yourself from too long. Now it wants to speak.”

The fallen body that was Sunni’s “shadow” turned blue before flipping to the air and shrinking into a light. Sunni stared with wonder when it became a faded blue silhouette of herself.

“You know, if you had a problem with me, you coulda SAID so.”

“…YOU… are my psychicbending?” questioned Sunni.

“That’s right, and I don’t appreciate having my bottom cut up.” Hands on her hips. “This MAH body, sistuh, you got NO right cuttin’ me up.” She swayed her hips and spoke in a sassy fashion.

“Well, you were kinda freaking me out, so uh…”

“Uh-uh! If YOU got such a problem with me, maybe Ah shouldn’t be IN you at all!”

Sunni shook, “Come on, I NEED psychicbending, and where’re you gonna go without me??”

“Ah go in some caterpillar, be right-down better than YOUR smelly bod!”

“JUST get back inside me so we can go save Mom!”

“Bitch, you like HER freakin’ psychic better than ME, y’all can drop in a DITCH for all I care, leave you beggin’ and moanin’ me to floatcha out, but I ain’t care, I just eat me some popcorn ‘let you decay.”

“Well, it’s not like you ever listen to me ANYWAY, if you did anything I told you, we wouldn’t be HAVING this problem.”

“Grl, I been doin’ EVERYTHING you tol’ me, you were all ‘Bitch, do that’ and ‘Bitch, do this’, bitch I doin’ everything, why you gettin’ all up in my face, and like I ain’t takin’ this shit, you wanna shrink so bad bitch, well eat THIS.” And with a snap of the fingers, Sunni was the size of a beetle.

“HEY, what’s the big idea?!” she squeaked.

“Nuh-uh, I TIRED of puttin’ up with you, I better be seein’ some respect or you c’n just kiss up to yo’ mommy’s psychic.”

“I don’t need to respect ANYTHING, you’re my psychic and I command you to biggify me!”

“Oh WHAT, I don’t gotta put up with you, you wanna bitch me around some more, you better be a little less bitchy.”

“Siiiiigh.” Sunni was utterly thankful no one else was there to see her get bitched at by her own psychic. “Okay, you have my word that I won’t boss you around so much. Which I don’t see how we’ll get much progress done if I don’t.”

“Wh’evr. Take what I can get.” So with that, the body of psychic compressed itself into Sunni’s tiny body. Once inside, Sunni stretched back to normal.

“…What in the world just happened?”

“Curious thing, shadows. They help store Element Chi.” Cheshire explained. “Chi that’s been stuffed away by a bender’s personality, which was also stuffed away. When it turns a little too overbearing, sometimes the shadow has to speak up. It doesn’t like being treated this way.”

“But when I was following my reflection here, it looked like my Negative; I met her a couple months ago. But aren’t they the same thing, shadows?”

“Shadows are the bridge. They help Positives look at Negatives, but in manifested form, shadows appear like the Negatives, because they’re containing the personality the Positive has stored away. Typically, you are mad, but deep inside, you are mad in the other sense. The shadow has helped you realize it. Maybe now, you’ll be better at psychic bending.”

“Well, what’m I supposed to do? Give my psychic extra pay?”

“Use your imagination.” Cheshire’s body was vanishing, and only the head swayed in place. “All mimsy were the borogoves, And the mome raths outgrabe…” Whiteness engulfed the world, and Sunni was awake, Shooting up on the couch inside her house. The mirror hung above the fireplace, ordinary as always. Sunni plopped her head onto the couch’s pillow again. She would take awhile to clear the idea of that dream out of her head.

Midway Gala

The party drew on, and after awhile, the magical displays lost their appeal. Sector DR was sitting at a table and guzzling snacks. Sugar ate grapes from a basket while the Rainbow Monkey sat patiently in her lap, its smile unchanging. “Fufufufu. Look at Warbucks trying to put moves on Mom.” Doffy Jr. snickered. “Poor old man can’t get anyone else, so he’s trying to score an even older woman. How hopeless.”

“He can get her if he wants to!” Sweetie-1 flushed. “He don’t have to be as rich.”

“Rack up 10 million dollars and tell me that, Sweetie.” Doffy flicked her nose. “Now run off and find me some pretzels. Mmmm, wouldn’t mind something salty.”

Sweetie flushed further and smiled, “Well if you really need me to, Prince Doffy, I’ll see what I can do.” So she ran off.

“Nnnnn. I’m confused though-daizokun.” Bison said. “This whole meeting happened ’cause of people hearing about the Apocalypse, but the only ones who knew shoulda been the Government. Who coulda told people-daizokun?”

“Probably those Revolutionaries Dad’s always talking about.” Doffy replied. “Starting rumors about it, that’s why a lot of people are confused. Still a little overreaction on the Leaders’ part—I mean, how much chaos can a leaderless Kids Next Door create?”

The party was calm and casual. Regular conversations between rich types, everyone enjoying the elegant food. No one suspected that anger and hatred of unparalleled depth was brewing. Within the very heart of Sugar’s Rainbow Monkey, under that frozen smile, its fluffy stuffing. It didn’t know why, it didn’t know what… but for some unexplainable reason, that Rainbow Monkey was angry. Where am I? Hff. … Why can’t I move?! Hfff… Its limbs were soft, stiff, and lifeless. Its only sense of form was the anger brewing inside. In its mind, in its heart, the only person that appeared… was Sugar. Sitting politely, a casual face, chewing on grapes. I have to move. . I have to do something. We’re all going to die. . . unless I move! Why...WHY... But it plainly knew. It knew nothing else, it felt nothing else. The toy wanted to kill Sugar… strangle her… let her guts fall out… make her wish she had never been born.

Meeting room

The six Corporate Presidents all took a seat around the round table, with Morgan at the end nearest the wall TV. “I’m glad you all could make it.” Morgan began. “The World Leaders would like a word with us. If you would turn to the screen behind me.”

Not the little TV on the wall, of course. It rised and sunk into the ceiling as that very wall opened, a much greater TV buzzing to life as the six World Leaders appeared, seated in their throne room. Around the table, Henry Churchill, Daphne Anderson, Felius Umbridge, Lucas Stonebuddy, and Jennifer Bush. Atop the high throne behind them, the most powerful man in the world, The King of the World, and above him, the staring eye in the upside-down pyramid.

“Greetings, Corporate Presidents. I’m delighted you all arrived.” said The King.

“Yoo-hoooooo, Morgan Deeeeeeaaaar! Hellooooooooon!” waved Jennifer Bush with joy.

“Hello, Master.” Morgan bowed.

“So it seems the majority of the U.S. has abandoned the Apocalypse notion.” Lucas recapped. “Peace among them has been restored for now. We are sad to say, the cataclysm is not a total lie. It is bound to happen, according to our Eye of Order.”

“Intel states that a means of stopping such a catastrophe lie in the hands of twenty key individuals, Seven Lights and Thirteen Darknesses.” Felius explained. “We cannot allow such kinfolks to come together. We sense only danger arriving should they interact, and think it best to prevent the comingling of them. –Suggests Felius Umbridge, World Leader.”

“Yes, except there’s one problem we haven’t quite taken into account.” Henry replied in his quiet British accent, eyes focused on his book. “Some nasty chaps appear to have caught wind of these ‘Twenty Keys’ and are attempting to find them. They’ve caused quite a bit of chaos around the world in the short time news of the Apocalypse escaped. Much like that Negatar fellow and his ruffians, we must have them dealt with momentarily.”

“Sigh, but the Kids Next Door will get in our way, too.” Daphne sighed, plucking a rose petal. “And Lord knows the White Lotus won’t stand aside. Siiiiigh. So many people are going to die.”

“It won’t matter at all in the end.” followed The King. “By the end of this month, we shall all be uplifted to the Spirit World. Our Spirit World. Where no person will ever have to fear ever again.”

“Until then, we would like you to keep things organized.” Lucas told them. “Our special assassin group is going to collect the Minish Princess, a key component to our plan. Until our operations are finished, you must see that the Twenty Keys are never found and prevent any further progress the KND or this ‘Team Gnik’ makes. Is that understood?”

“Yes.” Morgan bowed, the other presidents mimicking. “We’ll stop them at any cost.”

“Very well. This concludes our meeting.” King said. “We will speak to you in-”

“WAIT, I didn’t get to say anything!!” Jennifer shouted.
“Shoot.”

“…Uhhhh… PANCAKES!” The screen blanked out.

I wouldn’t mind some myself. ;) Nor any of those delicious delicacies they’re serving at that place. All those foods are Paper Mario recipes, by the way. Next time, Sandman will go to Freddy’s Pizzeria. 13 is a good number to do that. Hope you aren’t scared. ;
Hey, guess what, guys! I might get a job at Kroger! I mean, first they gotta make sure I’m not an international criminal from Venezuela, but once they do, I can finally start working! ’Course, that means less time to write, so be forewarned.

Chapter B-7: Davy Back Fight

Cinnamon Jungle; stadium (Play “Smells Like Teen Spirit” from Pan.)

The Marzipan Pirates quietly crept into a tunnel of the gigantic rock mass. The chants and roars were growing louder as they progressed. “Whaddyou think that is?” Rallo asked. “Some kinda Satanic ritual?”

“Maybe it’s the arena that Veruca mentioned.” Augustus said. “But who would set one up all the way out here? Who would come?”

Hello, hello, hello
How low?
Hello, hello, hello
HOW LOW?
“I think we’re about to find out.” Stewie said as they reached the tunnel’s end.

Hundreds of thousands of seats were filled around the tremendous stadium. Their song echoed to the heavens and beyond. All of them were waving flags with Jolly Rogers: they were all pirates. There were demon pirates, robot pirates, human pirates, even the Kremlings.

With the LIGHTS out
IT’S LESS DANGEROUS
Here we are now
ENTERTAIN US!
I feel stupid
AND CONTAGIOUS
Here we are now
ENTERTAIN US!
When the first verse was repeating, the Marzipans stared with awe at the three gigantic ships hovering in the sky. There were four figures standing on platforms on the ships’ sides: Cindy Cortix from the Boogey Pirates, the two Rusty Petes from the Slag Pirates, and a short old man with a white beard – Mr. Smee.

“And I forget… just WHY I taste.” Lord Licorice fixed on his black and red armor, his hat, and loaded his shiny gun. “Oh yeah, I guess, it makes me smile.” He sung quietly to himself as he marched up the wooden stairs. “I found it hard, it’s hard to find. Oh well… whatever… never mind.”

The “hello, hello” was repeating once more, and Licorice was mumbling as he walked up on the deck of the Boogey Bay. He passed a polite smile and nod to Captain Mandy, who stared with uninterest as she drank booze. Captain Slag, Captain Hook, and Baron K. Roolenstein were there as well, bowing their heads at Licorice briefly. The Candy Lord marched up more stairs and across a walkway with railing. He jumped, planted both feet on either railing, and raised his arms for all pirates to see.

With the LIGHTS out

IT’S LESS DANGEROUS

Here we are now

ENTERTAIN US!

I feel stupid

AND CONTAGIOUS

Here we are now

ENTERTAIN US!

The song stopped as all pirates roared, and Licorice stood back on the walkway. His voice was heard across the stadium. “Friends… I am Lord Tyrone Licorice. You know me very well… as the apprentice of the King of the World himself!”

“BOOOOOOOOOOOO!” The pirates were roaring in protest.

“But! …Unlike those law-abiding bigheads, you’ll find that I’m a very kind sir indeed! I believe there is beauty in you pirates that the World Government does not see! Ay, it is because of those powder-wigs that you are not allowed to participate in Glitzville’s games. But it is no worry, because my ancestors so GRACIOUSLY carved out this stadium for swashbucklers of every kind, to host the Davy Back Fight Brawl every YEAR!”

“YAAAAAAARRRRRRHHHH!”

“Lady and man pirates, we have a spectacular show planned for you! Sponsoring our event is none other than two, yes TWO, Pirate Emperors! First, meet the Empress of Fear herself, Captain of the Boogey Pirates, the Grim Stare Mandy!” Said empress gave a half-hearted wave before chugging another drink of rum, only to find her bottle was empty. “Unfortunately, our second Emperor, King Kroctus Rool, King of the Kremling Krew, chose not to be here in person. In his stead, his second brother, Baron K. Roolenstein. We also have the honor of being in the audience of two noble Pirate Lords! May I present Captain James Hook and Captain Romulus Slag!”
“Oh, the honor is my own, Master Licorice!” Captain Slag bowed. “One of me many pleasures in visiting this planet is ta bear witness to its quality entertainment! Plus, Ay could really use me a breather, considering all of the hard-drive-ache Ay’ve suffered these past months.”

“I think we all need to relieve ourselves of pain.” Licorice twisted his left mustache, grinning slyly. “I believe our fair Empress was humiliated before her crew by a young junior pirate. The ‘Sunny-Fist’ Sheila, according to His Majesty’s records.”

“I THREW the fight, mmmm,” Mandy yelled drunkily, “BEEELCH, Lardrich!”

“Now, Captain Hook, I understand that you had a special prize you wished to wager in this contest?”

“I most certainly do!” The red-cladded captain marched up onto the walkway and raised his sword. “PIRATES! I, Captain James Hook, have invaded and traversed the Forest Planet, and discovered its Realm of Fairies! I struck the land when it was most vulnerable: three hours AFTER the Kids Next Door’s defeat of Nature Goddess, Viridi! The fairies were helpless in repairing the forest of ruin, and the prize I took from them, I have been eagerly waiting to show somebody. Behold… the FAIRY PRINCESS! AISLING KELLS!”

On this cue, Mr. Smee scrambled to pull out and push a remote. A hatch opened from the bottom of the Jolly Roger, and from it, a net made of steel strings lowered. Augustus, the Deadly Babies, and all the pirates gazed with awe: there was a girl of ghostly white skin and hair, wearing only a gray dress. Her green eyes looked vicious as she tried to bite through the strings with sharp teeth.

“Yes, the Forest Fairy Princess, Aisling Kells!” Hook announced. “One of three Fairy Princesses described in an ancient Avalaran fairytale. The story reads that these fairies contain terrific amounts of magical energy. The Forest Fairy, in particular, possesses the power to grant and extend life, and stop death. Any pirate… would be a fool not to fight over her.”

“YAAAAAAAARRRRRRRRR!” The stadium roared with cheers, as every crew craved the fairy’s supposed power. Lord Licorice narrowed his eyes evily as he studied the trapped fairy.

“Is that girl really a Fairy Princess?” Augustus asked.

“Don’t be an eediot,” Stewie said, “it’s probably just a sham.”

“Even if it is, they’re still abusing the hell out of her for a profit. It’s kinda sickening.”

“Well, what the hell are you going to do about it, sign up for the competition?”

“Now, everyone!” Lord Licorice announced. “I have another treat for this tournament! As we all know, the notorious crew known as the Big Mom Pirates have been causing us grief for the past 20 years. Just days ago, the Pirate Empress herself has met an unfortunate end. And I, Lord Tyrone Licorice, have captured her grandson, and will force him to compete in the arena against his own will, so that you all may know sweet revenge! As soon as my associates arrive with him, they’re certainly taking a while,” he mumbled through gritted teeth, “we can get started with-”

His cellphone rang. “Excuse me a sec.” Lord Licorice answered. “Ahh, Violet. You know, you’re taking an awfully long time to bring him down, I wouldn’t imagine… w-what?!” He looked at the Pirate Lords panickingly, then knelt down and whispered, “You’ve been looking all night and couldn’t find him? Grrr- These people are expecting some revenge, so unless he turns up, one of you will have to dress up like him and-”

“HEY, STINKTEETH!” A Hispanic voice shouted across the stadium. Lord Licorice gasped and looked over the railing. Everyone’s vision directed at one of many entrances. “YOU GOT A PROBLEM WITH THE BIG MOMS, YOU CHOKE IT UP WITH ME!”

“AUGUSTUS, what the hell are you doing?!” Stewie shouted.

“AHA!” Licorice pointed giddily. “There he is, just like I said! Augustus von Fizzuras, the grandson of Big Mom, is here to fight in the competition!”

“Damn right I am!” Augustus yanked his lollipop out and threw it on the ground. “It’s one thing to let a defenseless girl hang in a net like a manatee, but if people got problems with me, I wanna hear it up front before they cower inside a giant mountain like a bunch of wimps!”

“YER DAMN RIGHT we have problems with you!” a Hook Pirate shouted. “BIG MOM replaced me gums with GUM!”

“Fat Jack crushed me brother and got him reprogrammed to be a McDonald’s security camera!” a Slag Pirate yelled.

“Th-Th-That Lala girl saw into my memory,” a Kremling shuddered, “a-a-and reminded me of the petting zoo. S-S-So many kids and ice cream! . .”

“Those rotty Kids Next Door may’ve taken ’em all out,” a Boogey Pirate aimed his sword, “but ’long as YOU’RE still around, we get a piece o’ the cake, too!”

“YEEEEEAAAHH!”

“Fine, so my grandma and her crewmates beat the living snot and internal liquids out of all you.” Augustus retorted. “Do you pirates have nothing better to do with yourselves than gang up on some kid who had nothing to DO with those things? I, for one, had different ideals that Big Mom didn’t share. I THOUGHT she shared them, but she was a monster in the end. MY philosophy is about ADVENTURE. And if I’M the only pirate in this ring that GETS that, then I’ll swab the deck with every one of you!”

“You think you know better than US, ye scurvy brat?!” Captain Hook aimed the prosthetic he was named after.

“I’m not the guy from a land that never grows up!”

“FRIENDS, we have a game!” Licorice announced. “All competitors, gear up for battle, because once I finish explaining the rules, it’s anyone’s game. The competing pirate crews have already submitted their wagered doubloons—or whatever currency your kind uses—into the stadium’s moat, where it will flow out into the sea and to Davy Jones’ Locker, so that the Cursed Captain himself may bear witness to these events. Any pirate crew who is to break the clear established rules of the contest will be sent to Davy Jones’ Locker.

“Your crewmen will engage in a variety of contests. Only the crewmen chosen by their captains for the specific contest are allowed to compete. The pirate crew who comes in first for each contest is allowed to pick a member from the crew who comes in last. They may pick any crewmember, including the captain, and that person must switch their loyalties without quarrel.” Licorice grinned devilishly. “Sadly, since I am not a pirate, I cannot pick nor be chosen. The victorious pirate crew may also choose to steal the losing crew’s Jolly Roger. (Er, their pirate flag, not Hook’s ship.) And speaking of Hook, we will consider Princess Aisling to be a member of his crew, therefore she may be won over in a contest. But since she is special, only the crew who wins first place in the end will be allowed to choose her.
“Now, it seems the Big Mom Pirates, however limited their numbers may be,” Licorice grinned again, “are choosing to compete. We will see how long they last, but the first pirate crew to lay waste to Augustus von Fizzuras will score extra points for their crew. These are the rules, is everyone clear?”

“JUST A SECOND.” Augustus yelled. “The Big Mom Pirates are NOT competing! We are the Marzipan Pirates, and the four founding members are your opponents!” Augustus threw five Chocolate Coins into the moat.

“HE MEANS US, TOO!?” The Deadly Babies panicked. (“Mw-mw!”)

“Our mistake: The Marzipan Pirates will compete, and abide by our rules. Pirate crews, pick your member: the first match of the competition will be a dogfight. We will drop a bunch of scattered parts onto the field: you must construct a plane, go to the sky, and wait for your enemies to come up and dish away at you. You may not disrupt the other crewmen’s construction, and you can only fight once you have craft in the sky. You have two minutes, so hurry up and choose!”

Augustus stomped forward, “A dogfight is my kinda game! I’m takin’ this one, guys.”

“Are you even listening to us!?” Stewie shouted. “We’re going to get CREAMED in this fight! (And that was without trying to make a candy pun!) Why the hell do you care about some damn ‘fairy’?!”

“It isn’t just the fairy I wanna rescue.” Augustus stated, starting a new lollipop. “If I’m serious about our pirate crew, we have to show all the others what we’re made of. They’re already talking down on us ’cause we’re the washed-up Big Mom Pirates, so we have to show them we ain’t tied to those bozos! Also, that fairy might be able to restore my Haki. But even if she can’t, it wouldn’t hurt to toughen you kids up, too.”

“Competing in this tournament,” Licorice announced, “our crews have chosen: from the Marzipan Pirates, Augustus Fizzuras! From the Slag Pirates, the Silver Bullet! From the Hook Pirates, Mr. Smee! From the Kremling Krew, Snide the Weasel! And from the Boogey Pirates, Aragon. Pilots: CONSTRUCT!” He shot the gun skyward.

The five chosen pirates claimed a pile of scrap and began to shuffle around for parts. “Let’s see, rusty propeller,” Augustus mumbled, tossing a piece aside, “made of wood, this engine doesn’t look bad…”

“The Silver Bullet is ready and UP in the air!” Lord Licorice declared, startling Augustus into looking up. “Now he must wait for his opponents! Oh, did I mention that the first crew who finishes their craft can choose a member from the last crew who finishes? It’s a double-contest, how fun!”

“Hurry and get up here, you Slowbros!” Silver Bullet yelled with a faulty voice program. He appeared to be a robot of shiny, silver metal, with a single glowing red eye.

“Damn, he’s fast!” Augustus exclaimed. “I better hurry!”

Minutes had passed: Aragon, who was an Aeralfos, attached propellers to his wings, along with laser turrets, and took off next. Snide completed a hovercraft that was a man-size version of the Flying Krock. “YES!” Augustus created a cheaper version of the Ace Flyer and flew off, leaving Smee on the ground.

“SMEEEEEEE! HURRY!” Captain Hook roared.
“I’m sorry, Captain! I’m missing one propeller blade!” Smee was hunched over and searching around the ground like a dog. “Oh, blast it, where is it?”

Captain Hook moaned, clearly seeing the blade in the back of Smee’s pants.

“Sigh, that could’ve been bad.” Augustus sighed in relief. “I better take out these guys before they-WHOA!” Lasers shot at his left wing, so he barrel-rolled away. “-cut off my sentence!”

“That’s one new crewmate for the Slag Pirates!” the Silver Bullet declared, chasing Augustus. “And once you’re gone, I’ll be happy to claim your Jolly Roger.”

Augustus dove downward while constantly barrel-rolling, then he flew back up to rapidly shoot the Bullet. The robot’s superb plane withstood the attacks and kept flying forward, so Augustus dodged upward, then flew horizontal again. He saw Snide flying behind him, locking onto the shabby plane before launching two missiles. Augustus saw Aragon several meters away, and the Aeralfos retreated when the Marzipan gave chase. Aragon turned around to cough fireballs, but Augustus evaded. He stomped the gas pedal to catch up to, then zip past Aragon, and the missiles now locked on the demon. Aragon blasted his laser turrets to shoot the missiles down.

Augustus whipped the plane around to shoot at Aragon, destroying his left turret. The Silver Bullet began shooting at Augustus from the left, so the teen flew down and under the robotic pilot. He did a U-turn to get behind the robot, rapidly blasting laser bullets, but Silver Bullet switched on a bubble barrier to protect himself. “AUGH, you rusty smartass!”

“Thank you! I take pride in my intelligent rumpus.” The robot remarked.

“Heh! That bubble won’t be very convenient if you can’t see through it.” Augustus boosted forth and got above the hi-tech plane. He pushed a button that opened a hatch under his plane, dropping oil on the bubble. “What the-?!”

“Say ¡Enciéndelos!” Augustus slowed down, blasted the oil, and set the bubble aflame.

“AAAAAAAAHHHH!”

“Sorry, Bullet, but I’m taking from YOUR crew-”

The bottom of Augustus’s plane was rammed by another at whipping speed. He hacked out his lollipop as his plane fell to pieces. As he fell, he looked at his assaulter. “SMEEEEEEE!” Captain Hook jumped with joy. “WELL done!”

“I knew my lucky fan blade would come in handy!” Smee said.

Stewie Griffin rushed onto the field and blasted his anti-gravity gun to break Augustus’s fall, setting him gently on the ground. “Augustus, are you okay?” Stewie asked.

“Yeah…” He scratched his head. “Talk about a cheap shot.”

“This means they gonna take one of us, don’t it?!” Rallo exclaimed.

“Afraid so… We might as well watch the rest of the show.”

The four remaining pirates continued to battle. Smee was wiped out by Aragon, Snide was defeated by the Silver Bullet, and he was shot down by Aragon. “The winner of the dogfight is ARAGON of the BOOGEY PIRATES! And since the Marzipan Pirates were shot down first, Captain Mandy may take a member from their cr-”
“HOLD UP.” Mandy spoke up. “Why would I wanna take a member from that petty little crew? I’d sooner take somebody who’s more worth my time. I choose to take from the Kremling Krew… K. LUMSY!”

“Are you DAFT?!” K. Roolenstein exclaimed. “That is a violation of the rules! You were only supposed to take from the last-place crew, not-”

Mandy shot a Scare Stare at the Kremling. “The Grim Reaper fears my gaze! Am I to be afraid of Davy Jones?”

“Gulp!” The Kremling’s spine tingled. “K-K. Lumsy! Over heeeere!”

The stadium began to shake under the rhythm of footsteps. Everybody looked to the north side of the stadium as two massive green claws gripped the roof. A Kremling of incredible size, with a large yellow belly, emerged. “Uuuurr… do you want meeee?”

“Guess what, you oversized reptilian: you’re now a member of the Boogey Pirates!” Mandy shouted. “You will abandon your allegiance to the Kremlings and swear loyalty to me!”

“Why do you even want him?” Baron asked. “Despite his colossal size, he hasn’t the guts to dismember a fly!”

“Fear can do a lot of things to a mortal.”

“And since the Slag Pirates completed their craft first,” Licorice reminded, “they may take a member from the Hook Pirates.”

“Marvelous!” Slag beamed. “Which member of yer crew can play the accordion?”

“I can!” a random pirate from the audience yelled.

“Ay will take him!”

“Phew… we got lucky there.” Augustus sighed.

“Mw-mw?! Mw-mw-mw-mw-mw-mw-mw-mw-mw!” Maggie flailed her arms in anger. (“Lucky?! You’ll be lucky if they don’t order me to shoot you if they win me over!”)

“Don’t worry, Maggie, I’m working on a plan. Even if we don’t score 1st place, we might still be able to save the fairy and get outta here. For now, you’ll all have to pull your weight in this thing.”

“That’s not what she said, but, we’ll let you believe that.” Stewie replied.

“Our next bout is what I call the Search and Shoot!” Lord Licorice began. “We will shroud the ring in darkness while your choice crewmen wander a maze and shoot the others with classic laser lights! However, our fair audience will be able to monitor your actions via the TV screens, from the perspective of Nightvision cameras. If a player is shot three times, they lose. Keep in mind that you are not allowed to shoot your opponents with REAL guns, or you will be disqualified. Choose your pirates and we will begin!”

“Maggie, it’s up to you!” Augustus told the youngest baby. “You were Big Mom’s best sniper, so it’s time to remind ‘em that!”

“Mw-mw-mw-mw!” Maggie flailed her arms and pointed at her eyes.

“She said her vision is still weak, and I left her goggles on the plane!” Stewie shouted.
“Ugh- Well, how weak is it still, can’t you try?”

“Mw-mw…” Maggie tried to Zoom in to the distant audience, but her eye twitched with soreness, so she retracted her vision.

“Sigh, well you’re going to have to tough it out. I have a plan…”

“The five crews have chosen their players!” Licorice announced once more. “But I will not announce them for the sake of secrecy. Please, enter the tent!” The chosen contestants entered a huge dark tent that lowered over the field. A maze had also risen from the floor, and it was nearly pitch-black inside. Maggie noticed the glow coming from the Nightvision cameras. “Shooters… hunt!”

Maggie clutched her laser gun tight and moved about the maze carefully. “It’s all up to you, Maggie.” Augustus’s words rang in her mind. “Not only do you gotta win, you have to find the Boogey Pirate member and take him out first. I know you can do it, Mags. You were the most feared sniper on the Seven Seas, so it’s time to prove it.”

He was right… Maggie was the greatest sniper in the Big Mom Pirates. Her name was known across the sea, she was feared by all. She killed Charles Burns, one of the Corporate Presidents. Even though she was a child, she earned a bounty of $56,000 (as well as the equivalents in all respective countries). She had to follow her captain’s plan… only she could—

“The contestant of the Slag Pirates, Killbot 4625, is the first to fall! That means whoever wins may claim from their crew.”

“Defeated by Army Dillo, no less.” Baron K. Rool stroked his own chin. “As an animal, his senses are heightened, and we have trained him to recognize any scent. The exhaust from robots, the rum-soaked breath of a swabbie, the Hell-rotten stench from demons, or even an infant’s baby powder. As our top gunman, no prey escapes his nose!”

“Darn it!” Augustus stomped his foot. “Just focus on winning, Maggie!!”

Hearing his voice, Maggie flinched and whipped out her real gun. She began shooting the tent’s ceiling rapidly, poking holes everywhere. “Red flag! RED FLAG!” Captain Hook cried. “She’s not supposed to USE a real gun!”

“OBJECTION!” Augustus yelled up at him. “The contestants aren’t allowed to shoot their OPPONENTS with real guns! Didn’t say they couldn’t bring them in for other uses!”

“Captain Fizzuras makes a fair point!” Licorice agreed. “Miss Maggie did not strike her enemies with her bullets. But I see little purpose in making the maze slightly brighter.”

“It isn’t just brighter.” Augustus smirked. “Come on, Mags, you can do it.”

Maggie withstood the soreness and used her Zoom-Zoom power to zero in on the tent’s holes. She eventually found some that gave her a good view of the large TVs, showing her the positions of enemy snipers. A Bulblin Archer, who was likely the Boogey Pirate, was about to catch her from around the corner, so Maggie swiftly ducked behind a nearby rock. Maggie drew out one of her other guns to shoot floating mirrors, creating a path to the Bulblin so she could shoot her laser three times, reflect around the mirrors, and defeat him.

“The Boogey Pirate contestant, Bobbleton, is defeated! What a clever means of working around the rules!”
“Yes!” Augustus fist-pumped. “Too bad we didn’t get him first, but at least now they won’t get as many points.”

Just then, Maggie was hit by a laser from behind, so she quickly dodged behind the rock, then bolted when the Army Dillo was coming. “Wyee hah hah hah!” The armadillo laughed. “You all thought I was killed when I got struck by lightning in the ocean! …Actually, I was, but I was revived by Ganondorf’s dumping of the Sanzu River! I won’t be made a fool of again!” Using his real bullets, Army shot down Maggie’s floating mirrors and began sniffing along the ground for her.

Maggie shot more mirrors into the air, and kept track of Army by where his bullets came from. Maggie didn’t bother to stop and look through the tent holes, instead she kept maneuvering around the maze. After turning a corner, she saw the Hook Pirates’ marksman across a path, dodging his lasers to go down a right path. The pirate attempted to chase the baby, but Army Dillo caught up to where they were, and Maggie heard him successfully land a hit on the Hook Pirate. The two were in a shooting squabble, during which Army was hit, so Maggie made her way around the maze to get behind them.

She followed a good path using her mirrors, and got behind Army before landing a harmless laser blow. The Hook marksman got away, so Army whipped around to chase Maggie. The child unfortunately got to a dead end, and Army snickered once he had her cornered. Maggie evasively dodged his lasers left and right, then shot a mirror into the air. The same time Army successfully hit Maggie, the girl bounced her own laser off the mirror to hit Army. “Army Dillo of the Kremling Krew is out! Now it’s down to these two crews.”

“SHE’S OVER HERE!” Army Dillo yelled before leaving the maze. Maggie glared with anger, running around the maze before she and the Hook marksman cornered each other. He was a tall and skinny pirate with a five-o’clock shadow and blue-and-white-striped shirt. He nimbly dodged Maggie’s lasers before he struck the baby with his own. “THE WINNERS ARE THE HOOK PIRATES! And since the Slag Pirates lost first, they may take a member from their crew.”

“I’ll just be taking my accordion player back, Slag Old Boy.” Captain Hook told the robot captain. “Do you even know what my name is?” the audience pirate yelled.

“SILENCE!”

“Our next contest will be the Dread Race!” Lord Licorice announced. “Captain Slag took the courtesy of setting up this lovely Gravity Track, and programmed this set of karts to roll up it freely. Choose the most fitting pirate for the job, and let them choose a kart. The other crewmen cannot interfere with the race, but the competing pirates can use whatever means necessary to win. The first place pirate crew can choose a member from last place. You will have five minutes to pick a kart!”

“Hokay.” Augustus clapped hands. “Which one o’ you is great at racing games?”

“Oo-oo!” Rallo jumped, raising his hand. “I am! I want that car that looks like a boombox!” He pointed to a kart that was designed like a large boombox, with a stereo on the front and back.

The Marzipans went over to observe its controls. “Wow, it is like a boombox.” Stewie said. “But how can you tell what the buttons do?”

“Easy! Turnin’ up the volume speeds you up, turnin’ it down is brakes, and flippin’ up and down channels turns you left or right.”
“You would know better than us, Monty.” Augustus said. “You’re up.”

“You should know better than to use that name again.”

“Our crews have chosen! From the Marzipan Pirates, Rallo Tubbs, on the Boomboxer! From the Boogey Pirates, Skeeter the Bomskit, on the Treadmill Trekker! From the Kremling Krew, Kass, on the Rocket Barrel! From the Hook Pirates, Sir Big-Legs-and-Small-Body Samuel, on the Convenient-Bike-To-Match-Such-Traits! And lastly, from the Slag Pirates, Hyrule Rusty Pete on the Lever Device!”

“Knock ‘em dead, Hyrule Pete!” Termina Pete yelled.

“Ay sure will, Termina Pete (hiccup)!”

“Racers, at the ready!” The five pirates were parked at the starting line, their engines revving. Skeeter’s kart was designed like a treadmill, and would move as the speedy demon ran across it. Rusty Pete’s kart was like that of a minecart that goes as you move the lever up and down. Sir Big-Legs rode a very tall bicycle, where the pedals were low enough for his long legs to reach. “On your marks! Geeeeeeet set… You want me to say the ‘G’ word, don’t you? But how long will I make you—”

“JUST GO, YOU IDIOTS!” Mandy shouted.

Licorice shot his gun, and the pirates boosted—with the exception of Rallo, who was otherwise in the middle of the racers. Almost instinctively, the other racers forced their cars into a center, having intended to crush the 5-year-old. “WOAH! Good thinking, Tubbs!” Augustus praised. “But get going, they won’t wanna fight each other for long!”

“You got it!” Rallo began to race up a track that went up like a wall, for his kart’s wheels were programmed to meld with the altered gravity. The track would go up a loop-di-loop high above the stadium, then would lead over the stadium’s roof and out into the jungle. When he rammed through some ? Blocks at the loop’s top, his item select landed on Place Swap, which were a green and red arrow making a circle. “I ain’t ever see this in Mario Kart. I wonder what it does?” Rallo pushed the activate button, and the icon was launched along the track, spinning and glowing. It missed Rusty Pete in 4th place and caught Kass, who was in 3rd place. Rallo found the icon appeared around him, and he and Kass switched positions.

“BOO YEAH!” Rallo cheered. “Now I just-wh-whoaa, WHOOOA!” Since he was now in Cinnamon Jungle, he accidentally rammed the spiked stalk of an outstretched Apple Piranha. Rusty Pete got past him, so Rallo quickly backed up with the Rewind button and got around the Piranha Plant. Rallo drove through more jungle before going up a left vertical gravity track over a cinnamon creek. Kass caught up and shoved Rallo from the right, forcing him to go a left path with several upcoming gaps. “OH, CRAP! Wait! What if I plug this into MY boombox?” Rallo grabbed the plugs in the cockpit and stuck them in the sockets in the back of his afro. He was able to channel his musicbending through and make the car bounce via his booms.

He managed to jump the gaps and go across a series of Boost Pads, which sent him up a ramp as his kart’s glider activated. He soared ahead of Kass and Pete, and nabbed a single ? Block before the ramp. He landed on a Power Star and became invincible, driving through the field of Apple Piranhas without trouble. He was catching up to Sir Big-Legs and knocked him aside, claiming 2nd place, but Skeeter was still keeping ahead. Rallo’s Star Power wore off by the time the gravity track led them up and around the huge stadium’s side. Skeeter had three banana peels in his reserve, so he dropped them on the track and caused Rallo to hit one, making his Boomboxer spin out of control before hitting the side. Big-Legs zipped past him, dropping a Bob-omb that Rallo didn’t notice before crashing into it.

Kass got past him, so Rallo got back on track and kept moving before Pete could do the same. The track led back into the stadium, going down a slope before crossing the finish line – completing the first lap. They went up the vertical track to the loop-di-loop again, and when Big-Legs (now in 3rd place) got three Red Shells, he sent them all back to hit Rallo, who narrowly dodged, so Pete got hit instead. “I say, isn’t that turtle abuse?” he asked.

“I would say so!” Termina Pete yelled.

Rallo hit the ? Blocks and landed on Blooper, so he sent the aerial squid out to ink all the other racers. Big-Legs lost traction and drove into the cinnamon creek, letting Rallo get past and go up the gravity track over said creek. He chose to take the left shortcut again, using his boombox to bounce the gaps, but it seemed Skeeter took this route, too. The Bomskit purposely slowed down, then grabbed the ? Block before going up the glider ramp, so that the block didn’t respawn in time before Rallo could get it. They soared across the cinnamon swamp, and Rallo remained in 2nd place as he chased Skeeter through the Piranha Plant garden. He gasped and dodged left when a piranha almost bit him, going up the gravity track around the stadium.

“WAAAAH!” Rallo was blown aside by a huge Bullet Bill – which was actually Rusty Pete’s kart, transformed after collecting said item from a ? Block. It wore off before Skeeter could be hit, and Rallo finished the 2nd lap in 3rd place. Their karts flew up the loop-di-loop, and Rallo collected a ? Block that landed on three Red Shells. He blasted at Rusty Pete and got past him, then quickly blasted forward to hit Skeeter. The Bomskit withstood each shot with three Green Shells, and as Rallo chased him across the shortcut path, he growled with rage when the monster claimed the ? Block first.

“WHOA!” Lightning struck the racers, cast by 5th place Kass, shrinking all except her. Since Rallo was going up the glider ramp at the time, his glider didn’t activate and he fell onto the normal track. However, Skeeter, who was already flying over the swamp, ended up falling in and trapped. “RALLO, musicbending gets rid of ailments!” Augustus yelled.

Rallo quickly blasted music and stretched himself to normal. He kept racing, and made it to first place. He didn’t hesitate or look back as he maneuvered the Apple Piranha garden, and when he made it up and around the stadium path, it looked like first place belonged to him. “Ladies and gentlemen, Montclair Tubbs is goin’ for the goal!” Rallo announced as he zeroed in on the finish. “He kicks the ball, and…!”

Skeeter blasted past him with Star Power he had conveniently collected in the swamp, along with a Gold Shroom in the piranha garden. “NOOOO!” Augustus and the babies screamed. Rallo regained himself and crossed the finish, still winning 2nd place.

“THE BOOGEY PIRATES WIN AGAIN!” Licorice announced with apparent delight. “Since Sir Big-Legs didn’t move his legs fast enough, Captain Mandy may take from Hook’s crew.”

“The Fairy Princess is MINE, you Han Solo wannabe!” Mandy pointed at Hook.

“I told you never to mention that topic to me.” Hook stated through gritted teeth. “And you can’t claim her unless you’ve won the whole thing!”

“Very well.” Mandy marched up to Lord Licorice and took his mike. “LISTEN UP, you sweaty post-college frat boys: the Fairy Princess is hereby reserved to me, myself, and I! Should any of you be lucky enough to come in first place, I will challenge your entire crew myself. To the victor will go the spoils. Do we have an understanding?”
“AAAAAARRRRRRHHHHHHHH!”

“‘Arrrrrr’ yourself.”

“Yes, well, thank you for making that point, Miss Mandy.” Licorice took his mike back. “Which brings us to our next challenge: the Combat Brawl. Simply beat up your opponents with good old martial arts. Your other crewmen may not aid you. Crews, choose your strongest combatants, and we will begin.”

“Well, we’re boned.” Stewie slumped in defeat. “Unless you truly expect to pull your Haki back out of your arse again.”

“Not quite yet, Stew.” Augustus started a new lollipop. “I’m pickin’ you for this one.”

“What- Me?! How do you expect ME to do this?”

“Don’t you still have your Devil Fruit powers?”

“Well, I…I haven’t really tried since that battle. But I can’t unless I become angry.”

“You were angry at me for signing us up for this, right?”

“That isn’t the point!”

“Stewie, just go for it! And make sure you take out the Mandy Crew’s guy out first, you got it?”

“Ugh. This is becoming rinse and repeat. Very well… I’ll give it my all.”

“From the Boogey Pirates,” Licorice began, “they have chosen their newest member, K. Lumsy! From the Slag Pirates, Sprocket! From the Kremling Krew, their Division Commander, Lord Fredrik! From the Hook Pirates, Popeye! And the Marzipans have gladly offered up… Stewie Griffin?!?”

Indeed, the football-headed baby looked very small compared to all those muscular combatants. Popeye was a sailor with a pipe in his mouth, and the ends of his arms were larger than his skinnier base ends. Lord Fredrik was a very large walrus with a Viking helmet, and his eyes were monstrous. Sprocket was a large robot with an oven for a stomach, but the biggest brute there was definitely K. Lumsy.

“But New Captain Mandy, I don’t wanda fight.” The giant Kremling said in a simple-minded tone. “Dat baby and dat walrus and dat guy who looks like a doll are cuuuute.”

“Awww… I’m sorry, Klumsy.” Mandy spoke with a warm, loving voice, getting level with K. Lumsy’s head using a floating boat. “Was my order not clear?” She gently patted Klumsy’s head. He glanced at the smaller woman, tears dripping from his eyes. “Perhaps you need to… look me in the EYE!” Her dark eyes shone with fear.

“BOOOOUUUUUURRRRR!” That one little glance threw the giant crocodile into nightmares.

K. Lumsy was chained to the ground by human people, who were whipping him and cutting him with swords. All the giant croc did was cry, his moans echoed as he begged for mercy, but they passed it off as ‘crocodile tears’ and continued to torture. Then the K. Rool Brothers marched into town, Kapitain Kruppers shot all the people to death. Kroctus cut the chains binding the giant. “You are a perfect specimen for the Kremling Krew. Come with me, and we will put your strength to good use.”
Then, Kroctus ordered him to squish an island full of monkeys. Those monkeys were so cute, K. Lumsy couldn’t bear to do it... but then, the giant found the remains of dead Kongs squished under his feet. He had crushed the entire jungle into ruin. No matter what he tried to do, he was a giant, and a monster.

“OOOUUUUURRRR!” The fear drove K. Lumsy mad, the giant Kremling charged into the field and stomped his foot down on Lord Fredrik. The Snowmad Boss kept his foot up with his great strength and pushed the giant away. Popeye pulled out some spinach and chucked it in his mouth: his arms puffed bigger as he ran at Sprocket to throw punches, and the larger robot countered with equal strength.

“Stewie, hurry up and go Hulk!” Augustus yelled.

“I’m trying, I’m trying!” Stewie yelled, trying to channel his frustration. “Nnnnnnggggh!” The baby succeeded in puffing his right arm, albeit still peach-colored, and threw a punch at an incoming Lord Fredrik. K. Lumsy roared as he charged to Sprocket and Popeye, swinging his tail to knock them away. Stewie pushed the ground with his huge arm and bounced over, grabbing onto Klumsy’s right ankle. “RRRRRRRR!” The giant angrily shook his leg and flung Stewie away, then made a great leap to flatten the infant under his behind.

“Cough, uah!” Stewie coughed after Klumsy got off. “That’s worse than my father!”

“Come on, Stewie!” Augustus cheered. “Remember all that oppression you had to endure in your family! Your dad comin’ in drunk and passing out in your bedroom, your mom ignoring your intelligence, your sister using your hands as floss, and not to mention that dog stealing the script you wrote! Big Mom knew you were the perfect body for the Hulk-Hulk Fruit, and that was why! The most misunderstood person in his family needs to unleash his anger!”

“Grrrr!” Stewie tried to channel more anger, but only his left leg grew to Hulk size. He began to walk with his right arm and left leg, grabbing Sprocket and throwing him at Fredrik, but Popeye leapt and punched the baby to the ground.

“Oh for GOD’S sake, Stewie!” his captain yelled again. “You have a DOLL of Popeye! Just pretend he’s that doll and kick him-”

“Ngh, will you JUST SHUT UP SO I CAN CONCENTRATE!” Stewie’s eyes flashed yellow, and within seconds, he had morphed into his full Hulk form. K. Lumsy grabbed the monster and punched him with his other hand before throwing Stewie on the ground. K. Lumsy fell forward to crush the Hulk, but Stewie lifted him up by the belly and twirled the giant around. He tossed Klumsy to push Sprocket and Fredrik away, then grabbed the giant by the tail before swinging him around to knock down his opponents.

Stewie hurled K. Lumsy straight at the Jolly Roger, destroying a huge chunk of the ship. K. Lumsy crashed back on the stadium floor, and everyone looked as the net holding Princess Aisling was dangling by its metal rope. “Stewie, now’s your chance!” Augustus said eagerly. “Go for it!”

The infuriated Hulk spared a glance at the teenage captain, then looked up at the dangling metal net. Stewie squatted, and used the strength of his Hulk legs to make the incredible leap to the ship that was 40 meters in the air. Aisling gasped and backed away when the monster grabbed hold of her net. Stewie roared loudly as he began shaking and tugging the net. Inevitably, the device that was holding the net came off, and they both plummeted to the stadium floor. However, they landed on Klumsy’s large belly, and the giant released a large “HACK!”

All of the pirates roared with protest when Stewie forced the top of the net open, reached inside, and grabbed the ghostly-white fairy forcefully. The other three combatants were charging to attack him, so Stewie leapt, squished Popeye to the ground, used his free hand to grab Fredrik’s head, then shoved him into Sprocket’s oven chest. The walrus screamed with his head on fire, laying a furious beatdown on the robot once he was out. With another amazing leap, Stewie went over the stadium’s roof and escaped into the jungle with Aisling in his arm.

“AFTER THEM!” Lord Licorice pointed furiously in Stewie’s direction. “Send all available crewmen to catch that monster and BRING BACK the fairy! And send some people to apprehend the Marzipan Pirates for…” He looked down at the field. “What? Where are they?!”

Augustus, Rallo, and Maggie seized the chance to run up to the defeated K. Lumsy. “Psst, hey Klumsy! Can you hear me?”

“Sniff… noooooo!” The giant Kremling was crying. A puddle of tears had already formed around his head. “I don’t wanda fight anymore! I wanda run away! I wanda run where no one will find me! Where no oned will be mean to me!”

“Well, not to sound self-centered, but we’re kind of in the same boat as you.” Augustus was telling him rushedly. “Our pirate crew is really tiny, but all these guys have been doing is ganging up on us! Help us escape, and you can join our crew!”

“No!” K. Lumsy shook his arms and legs like a baby. “I don’t wanda! You gonna make me fight! Dat’s what K. Rool bade me do! Dat’s what New Captain Mandy bade me do! Don’t bake be fight, too!”

“I won’t make you fight, I promise! Just get us outta here, you’re the only chance we got at escape!”

“There they are, let’s get ‘em!” A swarm of Slag and Hook Pirates were entering the ring. K. Lumsy sniffled. “You won’t bake be fight?”

“No, I won’t bake bou fight- I bean, make you- JUST HELP US, PLEASE!”

“Mw-mw!” Maggie whipped out her guns to shoot the Hook Pirates while Rallo shot sonic waves at the Slag Pirates. Unfortunately, some of the pirates got through and grabbed hold of the helpless children.

K. Lumsy’s eyes widened at the cruel pirates’ actions (upside-down in his position). “LEAVE DOESE KIDS ALONE!” The giant Kremling jumped to his feet and reached down to grab the two babies. Afterwards, he grabbed Augustus and rushed to one of the stadium’s corners. The audience members screamed and cowered away when K. Lumsy climbed over them, then leapt over the roof to run across the jungle.

“This Davy Back Fight is suspended!” Lord Licorice announced. “All pirates are ordered to return to their ships and pursue the traitors! Take back the Fairy Princess at all costs!”

“A WORD about that, if you will.” Mandy grabbed Licorice’s arm and dragged him down into her ship.

“AAAH!” Lord Licorice was thrown into Mandy’s cabin. The woman shut the door as she entered. “What are you getting angry at me for?! I didn’t order them to take her!”

“But it was YOUR idea to capture Augustus and force him to compete! You said your plan to walk out of here with the fairy was foolproof.”
“With YOU in these games, how couldn’t it have been foolproof?! I let you be the scary, intimidating empress you are and ignore the technical rules so you could win the Fairy Princess. But I still had to make myself look good in front of these salty demons by bringing the grandson of the most despised pirate; not to mention, Mr. Augustus is still wanted by the Government. Perhaps if YOU hadn’t taken K. Klutzy and ordered him to fight, they wouldn’t have gotten away! I mean, sure we couldn’t have anticipated that Unbelievable Hulk trick, but even less reason I shouldn’t.”

Mandy kicked the Candy Lord in the face and knocked him against her throne. “You know what happens if you say ‘couldn’t’, ‘wouldn’t’, or ‘shouldn’t’ to me. Our deal was that you would help me take the Fairy Princess from Hook’s crew, and I would lend my demons to you to find and destroy the Lost Candies. Unless you would rather hunt for and destroy them yourself.”

“And I would just love to do that, if half of those candies weren’t so well-protected! His Majesty has tasked me with nothing more than to destroy those atrocities, but my candy-based resources are, shall we say… lacking in power. But I wouldn’t like His Majesty to know that. Just help me out, keep it a secret that I’m working with pirates, and no one else has to know you have the Fairy Princess. Besides, it’s not like we weren’t going to pursue and burn any crew that tried to steal her, don’t you agree?”

“Sigh… very well. But your story about the princess better have meaning behind it. Or you’ll regret it.” Mandy left the cabin on that note.

Lord Licorice helped himself up, fixed his hat, and straightened his bowtie. His eyes were shadowed under his hat. Working with pirates… the very idea is disgraceful. Just like when Big Brother John chose to leave the family and go pirating. Sure, I’m posing as their friend now… but I’ll have them dealt with soon enough.

Enclosed bay; two hours later…

The four pirate crews followed the trail of smashed trees to a cliffside looking over a large bay. There was no other sign as to where the giant Kremling could have gone. Dark gray clouds were appearing in the sky, and the heavy wind told them it would rain. “HUUFF!” Mr. Smee emerged from the sea below. “I’m sorry, Cap’n, but the sea is too murky! I can’t see them anywhere.”

“Ohgh… Climb back up the ladder, Mr. Smee.” Captain Hook sighed. “It’s obvious that those scurvy brats have swum away with that overgrown reptile. We’ll never be able to find them in the storm. Let’s all hurry back and fix the Jolly Roger. Slag, you better call your men back, too.”

“Arrrr… he be right, old Hooky.” Slag sighed. “Mates, let’s go! Or we will rust.”

“Pardon me, Captain,” the Silver Bullet spoke, “but normally, crocodiles cannot swim very well in the ocean. And I highly doubt a reptile of his stature would get very far, let alone in this type of weather. They could still be in the bay. I could send my aqua drones to track them down.”

“Could ye now? Orright, then… Ay’ll leave it to you. But return to base when yer done.” Slag and his two Petes marched away.

The Silver Bullet grabbed his head and pulled it off… Underneath her helmet, she was a mouse girl with purple fur, who shook her long orange hair free. “Man, that thing is stuffy. Hokay then, time to find us some runaways…”

Seaside cave

After diving into the ocean, K. Lumsy swam around the bay and into a large cave. He climbed onto a shore and hacked the four Marzipans, plus Princess Aisling, out of his mouth. “Hooff, hoof…”
The giant Kremling sat in the back of the cave to catch his breath. “I storry, guys. I didn’t know what to do…”

“Cough… It’s okay, big guy.” Augustus gasped. “At least we got away from them. …” He looked at Princess Aisling, whose white hair was wet with saliva, drooping over her face. When she sat up, Augustus gently moved her hair away to see her young, pretty face. “Are you okay?”

“Okay?!?” Aisling smacked his hands away and stood up angrily. “I have been trapped in that smelly old ship for almost seven, months. Then this large brute of a mutant baby takes me away, and now I was chucked into the mouth of a similar creature. Of course I am not okay.” She folded her arms and turned away. “In fact, I have never been disrespected in such a manner for all my life. You’re lucky I had the right state of mind to calm your friend down.”

“Huff…huff…” Stewie was panting on the ground, his clothes ripped from using his Hulk form.

“I could feel that child’s pain inside his heart. Perhaps he was suffering in that form. It must be hazardous for him.”

“Um… Thanks.” Augustus said. “So, Fairy Princess… are you really a-”

“Yes, I am really the Forest Fairy Princess. You may call me Aisling. And I assume you wanted me for the same purpose as those other brutes.” She whipped around and shot her face into his, Startling the teen boy. “Well, let me tell you.” She was glaring scoldingly. “My lifebending powers are unavailable at the moment. I have transferred the extent of my powers to somebody else.” She folded arms and turned away in a smug fashion. “You wasted your time.”

Augustus shook his head, “Er- Wait a second… does that mean you couldn’t restore my Haki?”

“HAKI?” Aisling shot back in his face again with a sarcastic shocked look. “Why would I be able to give you HAKI? Haki is something you learn, and no magic can make you master of something so wondrous as a martial art.”

“But I already WAS a master of Haki! I just lost it because of the Candy Virus!”

“Oh, yes, the infamous virus that plagued that dreadful Linlin Family. I’ve never seen anything so disgusting and unnatural. Even worse when I tried to study it. But your situation makes sense, because you still have fragments of the virus inside you.”

“Wait, I do?!”

“Of course you do. It’s not enough to cause too much damage, though. But don’t expect me to get it out for you. Such unnatural poison is beyond my power.”

“Oh…” Augustus looked away. Maybe I can find that girl again to get it out of me. But I’m not sure where she lives…”

“But I guess I do owe you for saving me.” Aisling said. “So I will tell you who could remove it for you.”

“You could? Who?”

Aisling stood on her tippy-toes to get up in his face with wide eyes. “The Princess of Sugar Fairies.”
“. . . Why do you do that?”

“It’s better than what you do.” She backed away.

“But, Sugar Fairies… don’t those things hang out in the Cotton Clouds?”

“Well, they’re actually pretty sociable, especially in candy places. But I bet you don’t know where their homeland is.”

“Actually, I do.” Augustus began a new lollipop. “I’m just not sure how to find it.”

“Then I will help you. But we won’t be able to escape if those monsters are out there.”

“So, what’s your idea?”

Aisling tapped her chin in thought. She looked up at K. Lumsy, who had his arms wrapped around his legs. “I believe this creature can make do.”

Facilier’s Voodoo Emporium

“Here, Gerald, this Hair-Strengthener should do the trick!” Facilier said as he tossed a small spray bottle to one of his customers. His shop was overcrowded with excited kids. “Even a lightsaber couldn’t cut it! Jennifer, this Portable Portal Pill can let you eat a ocean of sugar puffs, you won’t gain a shred of weight! Wears off after a day, so watch out. Come on, kids, one at a time, take it easy!”

After everyone else had finally gone, the brown-haired girl with a gray jacket, Samantha, walked in. “Hey, Mr. Facilier. Did I come at a bad time?”

“Eh, I’ve had busier days.” he said coolly, straightening his hat back on. “Course, you wouldn’t know about a renegade witch fairy who goes around planting curses.”

“Uhhh… I guess not.” She blushed confusedly. “So, anyway, you remember when I said my brother’s in the KND? Well, he told me that the KND is actually leaderless… Like, he never mentioned it before, and now he’s really worried about it… So, he’s wondering what happened to the last leader. Do you think your… crystal ball could show me?”

“That’s a bit much for the crystal ball, considering you aren’t affiliated with them. Perhaps the spirits may tell me something. Give me a sec.” Facilier closed his eyes and touched fingers to his forehead.

Under the table, his shadow was looking at a 4x4 laptop, checking the KND’s files. After viewing information about some guy named ‘Cheren’, Shadow spoke telepathically to his master. Samantha could read the confused looks Facilier was making, as if someone invisible was talking to him. He opened his eyes and said, “The spirits tell me that the KND’s current leader is… ‘Cheren Uno.’ But I must say, I ain’t ever heard of such a boy. Did your brother ever mention him?”

“I… I don’t remember.”

“Well, one thing’s for certain, there is a mysterious air floating about. My head’s been a little foggy. I’m sorry if you wanted to hear more.”

“I guess it doesn’t matter.” Samantha stood up. “I’ll ask my brother about Cheren, I guess. I’ll see you later.” She left the shop.
“Hmmm…” Facilier stroked his forehead with his fingers, still contemplating this ‘Cheren’ character. “Well, whatev.” He used magic to lock the shop door. “WENDY!”

The ceiling hatch opened as Wendy climbed down, followed by Carla and the Ice Climbers. “Is the shop closed, Mr. Facilier?”

“Yes! Now pull up a chair and let’s begin!”

Wendy, dressed in her emerald pattern dress, politely sat on the chair across the table. “First, Wendy, explain Gamp’s Law of Elemental Transfiguration.”

“Uhhhhh…” Wendy pressed her forehead in thought. “It’s like… you can’t make food appear… but you can multiply it, and warp it from somewhere else… and you can make it bigger.”

“Explain the science behind it, Child.” Carla told her with narrowed cat eyes.

“W-Well… the food multiplies because… uh-I dunno! I didn’t think magic HAD science!” She pressed her head harder and was on the verge of crying.

“HA ha ha!” Facilier laughed. “Well, while the food may appear to multiply, the individual ones have a sufficient drop in calories and quality, and it continues to drop the more it’s multiplied. When it’s enlarged, it’s just manipulating space to enlarge its dimensions. But moving on, what can an Armos Spirit and Tektite Shell be combined to make?”

“Um… they make explosives! I think…”

“Super big explosives, of course. Now tell me… what the Sun Chi Lantern can do!”

“Oh!” Wendy perked. “It can draw in the chi from nearby benders and give the user control of those elements!”

“Why is that one so interesting to you?” Carla asked.

“Well, because it only works with benders you have close bonds with.” Wendy touched her heart. “It’s like having a part of your friends inside of you. It sounds like a warm feeling…”

“But taking their chi would only make the friends weaker.” Carla noted. “Sounds a little selfish if you ask me…”

“It isn’t really.” Facilier said. “There are worse ways to take someone’s energy, like the Parasitus Curse, darknessbending, or energybending… This way, it’s more like borrowing. And it’s stronger because of those good morals and all that. But anyway, I hope you’re finally cooled down from those events in Orchid Bay.”

“Oh. Yeah, I’m feeling fine now.” Wendy blushed, scratching her head. “I’m sorry about… when I cried…”

“Oh, water under the bridge. …Hehe. Get it?” Wendy made a sheepish laugh at this pun. “But if you are, that means you’re ready for a brand new quest!”

“All right!!” Wendy jumped in the air. “Where are we going? A field of unicorns? A planet of floating islands? Or maybe a place where people wear shirts for pants and vice-versa!”

“We’re goin’…” Facilier wore an eager smirk, standing and raising a brochure. His attempt at suspense made Wendy excited. “…to the magical city of GLITZVILLE!” He slapped the brochure on the table before Wendy.

“GLITZVILLE?! OH, WOW! . . . What’s Glitzville?”

“It’s a popular vacation area mostly known for its combat arena, the Glitz Pit. All the greatest fighters like to gather there to let off steam. They don’t just have martial artists, they bring in all kinds of rare and unique creatures, including magic ones! I figure it would be a great study assignment for you.” He pulled a notebook from out of nowhere.

“Oh. So it’s one of those fun field trips, but with homework.” Wendy blushed. “Well, it still sounds fun! Do you think I’ll learn a lot?”

“Sure you will!” Harvey said perkily. “There’s just… one itty-bitty dilemma: it’s under Government protection.”

“Government protection?” Carla questioned. “Then won’t Wendy be in danger?”

“Relax, relax! I have the perfect disguise…”

Leaving it off there because the Davy Back Fight lasted longer than I expected. (In fact, it was going to be longer, but I figured…) Captain Hook comes from Peter Pan, Popeye is from his titular series, Aisling is from Secret of Kells, and the Kremlings are from Donkey Kong. K. Lumsy is from Donkey Kong 64, and I sort of gave him a personality quirk where he talks like a baby. Next time, I plan to have more Negaverse action.
The Place To Be Tomorrow

Chapter Summary

Sandman infiltrates Freddy's Pizzeria. Then, Team Rupert infiltrates his own home.

At first I felt like I didn’t give the Freddy level much emphasis, but I think it lasted a fair amount of time.

Chapter 13: The Place To Be Tomorrow

Outside Uno Home

The neighborhood was quiet and peaceful in this most average of towns. It wasn’t so late where people were in bed, as many lights were still on and children were playing. The earth nearly shook when a flaming skeletal train exploded from and screeched to a halt along the street, its blue flames lighting for blocks. Django stepped off with a cool, casual smile while Sector V followed tiredly. “Did we have to stop at Dos Bros’ Tacos?” Aurora asked.

“What? They make good tacos.” Django replied.

“You can’t even taste, dude.” Chris said.

“Doesn’t mean I can’t savor.”

“Yes it do-”

“Dude, forget it.” Dillon cut off. “What about Midna, is your group gonna save her or what??”

“Not right now, it’s late at night, you know how mortals get. So uh, this thing about you being a leaderless Kids Next Door, you guys uh… need a leader then, don’t you?” Django smirked.

“Well, you can’t be leader, aside from being dead, you’re not even an operative.” Haruka told him.

“I’m not I’m not, I’m just saying. Nice treehouse, though, we crashing here tonight?”

“You’re not, but the rest of us are crashing at our own houses, don’t want our parents getting worried.” Mason said.

“Who’s Django staying with, anyway?” Dillon asked—the others flinched to attention and put their index on their noses. “Since he can’t just stay in the treehouse and he…. DAMMIT!”

Sheila’s finger was twisted up her nose when she realized. “Oh, I thought you all just decided ta pick your noses.”

“Fine, I’ll take him to my place.” Dillon admitted defeat. “He can help explain to Mom about Midna’s situation. See you all tomorrow?”

“SEE YA.” So all 10 members disbanded to their own houses, while Dillon and Django boarded the latter’s train again to take to Quahog.
“Mom, Dad, we’re hooooome.” Aurora called once she and Chris entered their house.

“Hi, kids.” Rachel greeted in the living room. “Listen, there’s somethin’ I wanna ask you. Do you… remember anybody like this?”

She showed them a family photo, Nigel, Rachel, Chris, Aurora, and… a brown-haired boy with red glasses. The siblings stared confused. “I… don’t remember anybody like that.” Aurora said.

“I know. And I also found this.” She showed them the note to send backup to Roguetown Station, in case ‘Cheren’ didn’t call.

“Is that his name—was that for you or us?”

“I don’t know. But… isn’t it kind of weird?”

“It is…” Chris held his forehead. “Until a while ago, I’ve… actually been feeling kinda woozy. Just like when I fought that Sir Knightly guy. Hmm… I need to lie down.”

Their father watched from the kitchen as Chris walked upstairs. Nigel followed him shortly after, finding Chris on his bed with his hand still over his head. “Need any medicine, son?”

“No Dad, I’m alright, just… tired.”

Nigel approached and sat beside him. “Tell me again how… the fight with Sir Knightly went?”

“I was whalin’ on him, not leaving a dent… then I lost him… and when I was trying to find him, a… boulder hit me.”

“And you didn’t have any bruises.” Nigel recalled.

“No… that’s the weird part. Like, I remember so clearly getting hit by a boulder, but I didn’t feel any pain, and it doesn’t feel like something that… happened. …What’s wrong with me, Dad?”

“…” Nigel pat his son’s head. “Nothing’s wrong, Chris. Just go to sleep if you want to. Everything will be better, soon.”

“Yah… okay.”

Nigel left his son to himself and proceeded down the hall. He passed by a room labeled ‘Cheren’s Room’ and flinched. He peeked inside. It was Nigel’s old room, British flag blanket, under a slanted ceiling, Numbuh Zero’s treehouse in the corner. Pictures of that same boy were on the walls, with Panini, Melody, Chris and Aurora, Nebula… he was clearly well-acquainted with all of them, he apparently lived here… so why in the world didn’t Nigel remember. …Nigel knew, though… knew the reason… he connected the dots… “You’ve gone too far this time, King.”

Civic City

Team Sandman returned to Rhode Island via the Sandmobile and sat perched atop a building overlooking the pizza restaurant, a giant waving Freddy statue giving the place attention. For the last half hour, Nolan’s been going over and memorizing the Yipper’s notes. “Read all sorts of nasty rumors about this place online, but I guess they’re true. And look, chi-blocked just for our entertainment.” He noticed the symbols on the sides. “I wanna get through this place as quick as possible. Let’s go down.” His friends followed him to the roof of the restaurant. When the Freddy statue seemed to glance at them, they already felt chills down their spine.
On the roof, Nolan ripped open a hatch exposing wires, linking them to his wristwatch. “I’m downloading a wireless link with the camera system. Yipper said he made good use of the cameras, so they’ll help me big time. Since it’s robots we’re dealing with, I won’t see ‘em with Detective Vision. Meanwhile, you two stay out here and keep rewinding this.” He pulled out a CD-like device and hooked it to another cord. “I linked it to the speaker system so you can keep rewinding the music that puts The Puppet to sleep. I’ll just need to sneak by the other animatronics to take it out.”

“Are you sure you don’t want us going in with you?” Crystal asked.

“These aren’t the modern guards we’re used to dealing with. I’ve survived worse, so don’t worry.”

“But isn’t this a bit too much trouble for info on Doflamingo?” Yuki asked. “We already know he lives in Dressrosa, can’t we just work from there?”

“Maybe, but this restaurant’s sounding too dangerous to just let stand. I’ll be able to kill two birds by doing something about it. Not gonna sugarcoat this place, though. I’ll signal you if I need the music rewound, you probably won’t hear it out here. Wish me luck.” With no more else to say, Sandman glided to the front and approached the entrance. He entered the code ‘It’s Me’ in the terminal before going in.

Stage 22: Freddy’s Pizzeria

Mission: Find out who turned everyone into toys.

Curtained tables with party favors covered the checkered floor of this dark restaurant. The gentle tune of “My Grandfather’s Clock” rang throughout the store. Nolan looked at the camera system. Many corridors, a Prize Corner, Game Room, an old office with an oscillating fan. In the far back was a wide circular room with a closed black jack-in-the-box, where The Puppet was asleep. In a room outside of that, Chica, Bonnie, and Freddy were standing still. Any moment, they would start moving.

“HELLO?” Nolan jumped. He didn’t even notice the happy child by the waiting line holding balloons. Apparently Balloon Boy was a harmless animatronic, but he was real clingy and got in the way a lot. Nolan threw a boomerang and popped his balloons, so the child went to a closet to collect more. Sandman seized the moment to roll through the main room, going left of the stage where the animatronics would be singing at daytime and into a door. As he entered a hall, he checked the camera of the room with the robots. Bonnie was missing.

The notes said that he usually roamed around the west of the restaurant, where Nolan now lurked. He kept his flashlight ready, peeking down each corridor before making a turn. The music was reaching its end, so he signaled a ring tone to his friends to start it again. From here, he could either head north or enter an alternate hall that also led north, but on the east side. If he chose the former, he would roll by the Pirate Cove where Foxy waited, so he chose the other route. He checked the cameras and saw Chica left the room. She was headed his way, so he dove into another hall that led to the Game Room.

There was a mini merry-go-round and various game machines, but nothing too important. He saw that Chica was still wandering the northern area, close to an air duct that connected to one in this Game Room. He pressed a switch by the merry-go-round and activated it as a jingle played. There was an instant thundering through the air duct, so Sandman escaped that room before Chica would come. He pressed a switch outside that sealed the room and would keep her inside. He checked the cameras, finding nothing else in Chica’s former vicinity and rolled forward, looking back to—

Foxy was standing right in the doorway from the previous hallway, staring at him with one eye (he wore an eyepatch) and an open mouth—thinking fast, remembering his notes, he aimed his wristwatch flashlight and flashed it on-and-off on-and-off repeatedly. Foxy stood there mindlessly before finally turning and going back. Sandman sighed, signaled his friends to rewind the music, and kept rolling. The hallway turned left, so he could either go back to the west side or further north, to the sealed room where The Puppet waits. He reckoned Freddy was the only animatronic in the next-door room, but Puppet’s room was closed with a garage door with an electrical switch above it. He needed something to activate it.

He checked the cameras and saw Bonnie lurking a little southwest, so Sandman followed the hallway to the farthest west region. His map revealed a back corridor into Foxy’s room, and when he checked the camera of that room, it seemed a key was twinkling on the table—Foxy stood at the very end of this hall staring at him, so Sandman frantically flashed his light until the fox wandered back mindlessly. Sandman signaled his friends to restart the music and continued to the narrow, mazey west side-

“Ha ha ha!” When he approached the fork, Balloon Boy jumped out from the left and grabbed him in a hug, laughing like a child who was joyous to see his daddy. Nolan aggressively tried to shake him off, and with his arms free, he sliced the balloons and forced the child to retreat. He checked the cameras and saw Bonnie was coming his way, attracted by the child’s laughter, and maneuvered his way around the maze. He checked the cameras to confirm Bonnie was trying to find him, and forced the rabbit to follow him deep enough before he made the dash back to the back corridor. Foxy waited for him at one of the turns again, so Nolan flashed him away. He let Foxy go a fair distance before following him, through the back corridor into the Pirate Cove.

Foxy was stationed on his stage, and would in-time make his round again. Nolan threw his boomerang to a button that closed a curtain around the stage. “Dududumdumdum didlydo didlydo, dududumdumdumdum, diddly dumdumdum…” Preoccupied with a little song, Sandman took this time to swipe the key and leave out the room’s front door. Sandman signaled his friends, then returned to the first room of the restaurant where he could unlock the sealed door on the right of the stage. He was about to go in, but sensed a disturbance, checking his camera to confirm Chica was in the hall beyond, having gone through another vent from the Game Room. Sandman was about to retreat to the west, but it seemed Bonnie was on his way, too. Looking left-and-right panickingly, he ultimately slid underneath a curtained table and pulled his wheelchair under, too.

He lay totally still. Still as a statue. Both doors creaked open. Bonnie and Chica’s feet were visible under the curtain, their footsteps the only sound. They were stepping around the tables. As if they sensed a presence. Nolan didn’t turn to determine their location, didn’t look at the camera. All he knew was that they didn’t return through the doors. They were still roaming.

“ . . . ooooooh, oooohh, ohhh…” Bonnie moaned like a weary old ghoul.

“ . . . oooohhhh…” Chica returned the sentiment. And with that, both robots returned to their respective corridors. Sandman climbed out and studied the cameras, seeing Chica return through the vent. He signaled his friends to restart the music and headed into the eastern door. With Chica gone, it was fairly straightforward as he reached a closed door and casually opened. He found the abandoned office, where the oscillator was still alive and blowing. Leaned against the wall was a large gun with an electric antenna. He picked it up and examined.

Sandman got the Shock Rod! This device can shoot electric beams that stun enemies and power electrical devices! Maybe it’ll work on the animatronics?

“Hello? Ultear, is that you?”

“Y-Yes, I’m-a Ultear.” Why am I using the accent? “Who is this-a?”

“It’s Diamante. The boss is coming back to Dressrosa tomorrow morning and he wants to know how the place is holding up.”

“Is-a holding up beautifully, robots are-a behaving.”

“Good. The Leaders want those freaks for some kind of experiment and they’re counting on Doflamingo to keep them under control. I don’t care about these ‘rumors’ your boys keep making up, just keep them inside the store. Report tomorrow.” Hung up.

Sandman sighed in relief, signaling a music rewind, and checking the cameras to see Chica lurking in the Game Room. He returned to the front room—“HI (hi hi)...” popped BB’s balloons again, then returned to the west hall. Bonnie was there to ambush him right away, so Sandman blasted the Shock Rod and caused the robot to twitch furiously, Nolan punching him aside with an Armament fist to go forward. Foxy stood yards away, having escaped from his curtain, so Sandman flashed his light to make him go back.

“Nnn HNN HNN, hnn HNN HNN, hn...” A deep, distant laugh that belonged to a demon echoed through the restaurant. Sandman hurried into the hall that crossed to east side and checked his camera, finding Freddy finally left his room. He reached the east end, but saw Chica roaming up north. He could use the Shock Rod on Chica, he just wasn’t sure where Freddy was. He approached Chica and blasted the rod, putting her in a similar state as Bonnie. “Uur hur hur hur hur hur...” After pushing Chica aside, Nolan was soon facing down the corridor to Puppet’s room. His cameras read that no one was in the starting room beside, so Nolan braved the risk. He shot the electrical device above the garage door with his Shock Rod, rolling forward when it slowly began to open. As soon as he was inside, he would shut it, keep all the other animals out.

“AAAAAAAAHHHHH!” He whipped around—there came Freddy in all his fury—Nolan blasted and trapped the titular mascot in a shock-stun, just a second from reaching the hero, but was still trying to step forward determined. The door finally opened, so Nolan wheeled inside, grabbed the handle on its side and slowly winded.

All... around... the mulberry bush...

Oh geez, Nolan thought, hearing that song in his head though the wind only jingled. Oh well.

The mon...key chased... the wea...sel...

Nolan sighed. He’ll just have to get this over with.

The mon...key thought it was all in fun

....Pop... goes... the wea...sel...

The lights blacked out. The music stopped. He turned on his flashlight and viewed his wristwatch, unable to access the cameras. “Crystal, Yuki, you read me??”
“Urgh, the wires sort of blew a fuse—they looked pretty faulty to begin with. I’m not sure how old this place is.”

“Ugh… try to fix them, I can’t… !!!!”

“AAAAHHH!” Sandman forcefully tugged his wheelchair and dodged aside, narrowly avoiding The Puppet’s arms. It hovered before him, stretching its full length: a skinny, boneless humanoid figure with a pitch-black body, white-striped arms and legs, and a white joyous face with empty eyes and mouth, purple vertical lines across his eyes. The lights flickered, and the cameras appeared more staticky. There were five cameras stationed around the walls of this room. They would have to make do.

Boss fight: The Puppet

He quickly logged back into the system and managed to get the view from each of these cameras. “AAAAH!” He couldn’t look for long, dodging fast when The Puppet took another swing. He looked around but couldn’t find him as the lights kept flickering; this creature really was fast. “AAAAH!” He dodged once more and checked the cameras, flipping through each one in hopes The Puppet was there. His smiling face stared directly into CAM03, but a flicker of light made him vanish. He tried to find him on another- “AAAAH!” dodged when he swooped, then flipped through the cameras again to see his face. Nolan immediately turned to that camera, shot his grapper, yanked The Puppet down, and slammed him to the floor with his fist. He delivered a round of punches, The Puppet trying to stretch its arms around his neck, but Nolan wrestled the creature, grabbed the high and low ends of its body, and threw it against the floor. Before it recovered, Nolan blasted the Shock Rod at its head and dealt immeasurable pain.

“UUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUU...
Sandman looked up, found BB coming, and hit the switch to block him. “AAAAH!” Dodged The Puppet’s strike and returned to the cameras. CAM02, bottom dark, flicker, CAM04, cranium, flicker, CAM03, glowing eyes in darkness, CAM05, he was standing right behind Sandman and bent over his head.

Puppet grabbed Sandman’s head the same time Nolan grabbed his, hauling over his body, falling forward out of his chair, and smashing Puppet’s cranium against the floor. Puppet gripped Sand’s head firmly, the two rolling and wrestling on the floor. The Puppet had no bones, no muscles, so its hold and tugging force was unusual. It was trying to snap Sandman’s neck, but the human wouldn’t have that. His gloves turning Armament, Sandman grabbed The Puppet tight and pinned him on his back. Punch, punch, punch, punch, Armament punch against Puppet’s head ‘til its arms let go. Nolan flipped onto his rear, wrapped arms around Puppet’s waist, grabbed its head in both hands, twisted as hard as he could, and the head came loose. Its shadowy rubber body plopped on the floor before Nolan tossed and bounced the head away. A faint, pinkish aura rose from the head. A child’s ghost formed, yellow hair, green shirt, blue shorts, white skin, dark baggy eyes. “He, hehe, he!…” A soft, happy giggle, and the ghost was gone.

Nolan caught his breath. He grabbed the arms of his wheelchair and helped himself back on. “AAAAAHHHH!” He was too stunned with surprise to defend when Freddy lunged at him—the animatronic was immediately frozen in ice. Sandman looked around, seeing Yuki aiming his pack and Wiccan her staff. “Lucky we decided to come check on you.” The latter said.

“Phew… owe you guys.” Nolan breathed. At his signal, Wiccan aimed and released a flame spell near Freddy’s head, melting it free.

“AAAAAHHHH! LEMME GO! LEMME OUT! I WANNA KILL YOU! AAAAHHHHH-!” The robot was frantically trying to escape.

Nolan socked him in the jaw with Armament. “Even free from mind control, you guys are messed up. Did you even have human hearts to begin with?”

“Big deal, we stopped being human the minute we died!” Freddy kept struggling. “We’re Hollows!”

“Hollows?”

“I read about them.” Wiccan replied. “They’re spirits who turned into monsters because they were consumed with darkness.”

“Spirits? Then how were they turned into…”

“FEEEEEEE feh feh feh!” They turned to the entrance, weapons ready. Foxy walked in casually. “You won’t-a be getting any info outta Freddy, but I’ll be-a happy to oblige.”

“You, Foxy?” inquired Sandman.

“Feh feh. The kids here know me as Foxy the Pirate Fox, but back in my day, I was renowned as the Silver Fox Foxy, pirate captain of over 500 men!”

“Can’t say I ever heard of him.” Yuki replied.

“Well of COURSE-a you haven’t, that’s-a because of the curse that’s-a been placed upon us. If you imply to know of our position, ya should know-a we all used to be physical flesh creatures, but everyone who ever knew us forgets us the moment we became toys. Freddy there was a pretty “But Freddy just said you were spirits.” Sand replied.

“We ARE-a spirits, but, strangest-a thing, some melancholy scientist used some sort-a thingamajig to pull us from the Spirit World and seal us into these robotic husks. I don’t-a remember his name, but he was a bald man with a white coat and glasses. Poor fool couldn’t control us, so we were brought-a to a man called Doflamingo, who showed us to a twerp with greenish-hair that had the nerve to touch us, and POOF! As if these-a stupid bodies weren’t bad enough, we are TOYS now!”

“Twerp with green hair…” Sandman typed Doflamingo into his computer and pulled up images. One of them was of Doflamingo grinning, his hands on the shoulders of his son and a girl with aquamarine hair. “Is this the kid you mean?” He showed it to Foxy.

“Oh-ho yes-a. Looks-a the very same.”

Nolan pulled up Doflamingo’s online bio. “Doflamingo, accredited toy-maker, President of Doflamingo Incorporated, known for making interactive talking toys. Lives on Dressrosa with his son, Junior, and daughter, Sugar—Sugar?”

“So Sugar is the toy-maker, then?” Crystal deduced. “She’s the one we need to go after?”

Nolan rubbed his head. “Everyone turned into a toy is forgotten by everyone… those people like Holiday, Fanatic, or Tornado… they were turned into toys, that’s why we don’t remember ‘em.”

“You mean Doflamingo got ahold of enemies of ours and made us forget them?” Yuki questioned. “As long as they’re out of the way, good idea if you ask me.”

“Yuki, that’s a terrible idea!” Nolan argued. “With a power like that… what if Sugar turned someone REALLY important into a toy, imagine what would happen if everyone forgot them! Just how far do these powers go, what else could they do? I hate to beat up a little kid, but to change everyone back to normal, we have no choice. We fly to Dressrosa at dawn.”

“Nolan, you’re… sounding a little touchy about this subject.” Wiccan noted.

“… … Sorry.” Nolan released his head. “I mean… a power to remove someone from existence. No one remembers you… even your loved ones. Imagine if you or anyone you know got affected.”

Crystal couldn’t imagine herself having a dramatic effect if she were removed from existence, but Nolan though… she couldn’t imagine what she’d do if she just forgot him. “But what about The Puppet?” Nolan asked Foxy. “How is it he controlled all of you?”

“Oh-a, de Puppet… I don’t even know. Never saw him in Dressrosa, don’t-a know where he came from. He was-a… something, though. Had quite the mind, compared to these bozos.”

“He just got a kick out of this deal, then.” Wiccan replied.

“Well… thanks for the info.” Sandman told Foxy simply. “Sorry you had to sing in a restaurant against your will, but once I’m through with Doflamingo, I’ll have this place condemned.”

“And what makes-a you think I’mma let you?” Foxy proclaimed with a grim look. Bonnie, Chica, and Balloon Boy crept up behind him with ravenous eyes. “Annoying singing aside, the little children make healthy morsels when we get ’em all alone in a back corner. And now that that Puppet is gone, maybe we’ll-a be able to free-roam better and snack on ’em some more. If we’re-a bound to live in Hell, what a Hell this will be-a for us. We’re staying and YOU’LL be our-a late-night dinner. BOYS (and Chica): attack-a.”

The animatronics were ready to lunge. Freddy shook and shook and broke free of his ice, going to join his comrades. The heroes had no way to defend their selves from all of them. They were cornered.

Suddenly, a ghost flew in through the wall and shoved Freddy against the wall. They all stared surprised. This ghost had an orange body and tail, white arms, and flaming orange hair. “. . . Wheeeeee’s my BABYYYYY?!” She turned at them with demonic bloodshot eyes on a white face. The lower jaws of the robots dropped, as did the humans’.

“E-Emily?!” Nolan gasped.

“Teeeell meeeeee NOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOWWWW.” The restaurant shook from her unbearable, unblockable Ghostly Wail. The animatronics tried to shut their ears as best as they could, but her wail had the heart-stopping capability of a million jumpscare. Bonnie’s face caught fire, Chica’s limbs stretched, BB’s eyes melted, Foxy sizzled and sparked, and Freddy’s head popped clean off. Emily finally ceased. The animatronics lay there, bodies sparking, smoke coming out of several areas, dead. Freddy’s head landed in Wiccan’s arms, the woman screamed and dropped him quickly.

The ghost woman caught her breath, hovering lazily in midair. She looked at Nolan with baggy eyes. “Hello, Nolan. Ghost trouble?”

“T-Taken care of.” He replied, his friends holding each other.

“Good. Say hi to Danika.” She left through the floor.

“Glad that’s taken care of.” Sandman rolled up to Foxy’s sparking corpse, its outer skin dissolved in areas, revealing the endoskeleton. “Back in Toys 4 Grab, Sheriff Woody didn’t have any internal metal parts, only stuffing. Foxy said they were sealed inside robots, THEN turned into toys, so why are they still robots inside? Unless Sugar’s power can only partly work on robots; maybe her role was to control the robots better. But why… why spirits? They could just as easily forced humans to entertain at the restaurant, why did Doflamingo go to this much trouble? What kind of experiment do the ‘Leaders’…”

“Experiment?” questioned Wiccan.

“Never mind, time to go.” He began the roll out. “I’ll need to start making plans on how we’re gonna infiltrate. Here’s to my night, guys.”

The animatronics lay for the rest of the night, dead. The eyes in The Puppet’s head, however, still emitted an eerie glow.

Somewhere far away

A weak, staticky image displayed on screen, depicting the whole fight and conversation afterwards. A bald man in a thick coat and glasses watched in the darkness. “So, the Sandman is interfering with Government operations. Mmm…” He shook his head in disappointment. “My master was right about when children read too many comic books…”

York Household

This little community in Quahog was the next to be shaken up by the appearance of a ghost train. “I hope you have a way to park that.” Dillon stated as he and Django stepped off.

“Yeah yeah, just gimme a strum.” So with that, Django strummed his guitar, and the train vanished in flames.

Danika walked out from the kitchen to see her son enter the home. “Hi Mom, this is Django, a dead kid we found in Mexico that I had the lucky honor of watching tonight.”

Django sniffed (he had no nose?). “Smells like booze mixed with week-old formula. Nice crib, Mrs. Y.” He smirked at Danika.

“Hmmhm, nice to meet you too, Django.” Danika smiled. “Are we adopting him?”

“NO.” Dillon shouted defensively. “Er, but Mom, I’m not sure how to tell you this… Midna got captured by the Brotherhood for who-knows-what, and we’re trusting her fate in whatever cracked-up crew this guy has.”

“At least my crew knows when to leave more cracks where they belong. Sniff sniff, is that dead Century Fish in the fridge, I CALL DIBS!” He zipped into the kitchen.

“Mom, I promise we’ll track down the Brotherhood again and save Midna; they caught us off guard, but we can totally take ‘em-

“Settle down, Dillon, I’m not upset.” Danika patted his messy hair. “Midna’s always been a tough girl, and there’re honestly worse people than the Brotherhood nowadays. I’m only glad you arrived earlier than your father. Come and have dinner.”

While Django was stuffing himself with meat that looks like it’s been in the fridge for decades, Dillon helped himself to peas, steak, and mashed potatoes on the table. “I don’t even remember why we wanted to go to the Brotherhood. I think Midna wanted to catch Zant, and we kinda agreed we could catch Hannibal… it just felt like outta nowhere, though. Why now.”

“…” Danika turned away. There were a few things she didn’t understand herself. Why weren’t they allowed to tell their kids about it. Let them discover for their selves, he said, but it’s only one month away. They have to know sooner or later and they can’t wait forever. …They deserved to know. “Dillon, there’s something I need to tell you, too. Back in our teenage years, some friends and I visited The Chronicler again, and he… told us something. At the end of this month, something will-”

“Hey hey, sorry to be tardy to the party.” The man of the house just rolled in, throwing his trenchcoat and mask onto the coat-hanger.

“Where’ve you been this time?” asked Danika with exhaustion in her voice.

“Condemning a restaurant to the afterlife. Hold dinner for me, Danika, I’m flying to Dressrosa first thing tomorrow, so I-” He rolled into the kitchen for a drink, but stopped to stare curiously at Django, who mirrored his stare with a Century Fish halfway down his throat. Django slurped it all the way, belching a horrid gas that made Nolan wish he kept his mask on. “…I’ll leave you and Dillon to whatever you’re doing together.” Django stepped aside to let Nolan retrieve a water from the fridge before he headed for the Sandcave.

“What’s in Dressrosa, Dad?” Dillon asked.

“Really messed up. You know the Corporate President Doflamingo, who makes all the talking toys? Apparently his daughter, Sugar turns people into toys with some weird power, and makes everybody forget who those people were. I’d explain more, but I really need ta get started if I wanna work sleep in tonight.” So he proceeded to his Sandcave.

Dillon stared mindlessly at his dinner, twirling his fork that had a pea stuck to one end of it. “Sugar…Doflamingo… where’ve I heard…. !!!”

The image was faint, but it was there. A graduation ceremony on Moonbase. Back in March. Many operatives were graduating. A girl from Dressrosa, with aquamarine hair…

“If the Kids Next Door hasn’t had a leader for a whole year, how did those kids like Mocha graduate?! No one was approving them, yet we had a graduation, so how come.”

Mocha’s booger was too big, Dillon remembered, so how did it get in the Code Module, unless someone took a piece off and stuck it in. Sugar was up next, she was from Dressrosa, became Numbuh Trebol, in Sector DR, when she put her booger in, she shook hands with—

Dillon frantically tapped his wristwatch. “Aurora, are you there?”

Her tired, baggy-eyed image appeared on the tiny screen. “What is it, Dillon?”

“Aurora, I…I think we should go to Dressrosa tomorrow.”

“You mean Sector DR? Why?”

“Because I…I don’t know.. what it is, entirely, but I feel… Dressrosa is the place to be tomorrow.”

“Okay, Harry Potter, I’ll tell the others in the morning, can we go to bed first?”

“Y-Yeah… sorry.” He hung up. Almost instantly, a furious toilet flush occurred upstairs.

“Hoo, huff…” Django came storming down. “Sorry, Dillon, but tonight you’re gonna be using el Aseo de los Muertos.”

Ashland Outskirts

The sun had just gone down over the horizon. Lilac and Berry scampered all the way back to Ashland on all fours, and Rupert, Timmy, and Hikari kept hold on them the whole way. The kittens were exhausted, but they could stop and rest once they made it to Rupert’s house. “Huuuff… made it.” Berry gasped. “And looks like your dad’s still home.” She noticed the car in the driveway.

“W-What about Mom?” Rupert asked worriedly.

“Ms. Ghostie told him to go home and wait for you.” Lilac answered. “She’s probly still looking with our moms.”

“But don’t worry, we’ll bite him if he bees mean.” Berry smirked.

“Haha… thanks.” Rupert blushed. “I gotta admit, Berry, you’re really scary sometimes, but when you’re on my side-” “WAZZAT?” The werecat whipped her head around, Rupert flying onto the sidewalk to his house. A little brown puppy was roaming innocently, about to urinate on a hydrant. Anger and lust burned in her eyes. Her humanity was gone. “ROOOOWWWW!” She was filled with power again as she dashed forward, and the puppy immediately started running.

“PUPPYYYY! Brrrrrrrrrr.” Lilac excitedly shook her head and chased like a kitty.

“Waaaaah-!” Timmy and Hikari went flying off from the shake, onto the path with Rupert. As they moaned and recovered, their seven Pikmin Onions landed down with them.

“Aw, GREAT!” Rupert whined.

“Think they’re comin’ back?” Timmy asked.

Rupert listened. The echoing rows and ruffs faded into the distance. “Not anytime soon. Sigh… at least we’re here. We’ll just have to go in on our own. …” The trio gazed at the gigantic house, towering miles over the trees of the thick jungle before them. They felt totally inferior at its size, knowing just what it was like to be ants in the yard. They knew there was a monster of utmost terror inside that fortress, and its name was Rupert’s father.

“Rupert? You think our Pikmin can protect us from your dad after he spots us?” Timmy whimpered.

“They helped us up ‘til now… this will be their ultimate battle. …I hope Mom comes home soon.”

(Play “Fungi Forest Night” from Donkey Kong 64.)

Stage 23: The King’s Den

Mission: Get inside Rupert’s house.

Act 1: Rulers’ Grounds

The friends called 10 Wing Pikmin, 5 Purples, 5 Whites, 10 Reds, 11 Rocks, 9 Yellows, and 11 Blues, 61 total. The sidewalk to the front door seemed pretty simple, but they wouldn’t be able to get up those stairs. They decided to follow a path through the right half of the jungle, finding a small field where Bulborbs were awake and lively, searching intently for nighttime prey. The kids quickly snuck up on the closest one from behind and chucked Rock and Purple Pikmin at it to take him down. But two more spotted and stomped over to snack them, unfortunately losing 2 Reds and 3 Yellows. They ended up sacrificing 2 Whites to poison the Bulborbs and defeat them, and allowed the Yellows, Reds, and Whites to take them back.

They retrieved 5 of each of them from the Onion. They pressed forward and reached a similar yard with yellow Bulborbs with golden, glowing spots. They tried to throw Rock Pikmin on them, but they ended up getting shocked while the Bulborbs ate 5 of them, so they quickly sent the Yellows to attack them, and briefly used the Purples to stun them. They let the Yellows take them back and had Hikari stay with them while Rupert and Timmy continued. The yard started to become a lot brighter, the two looking up as the sun shone bright in the sky. But it felt awfully closer to Earth, and no blue sky to support it. …That’s because it wasn’t the sun, but rather the lamp post in Rupert’s front yard.

Rupert and Timmy made it to the pole’s base, where it seemed a green flower bud was curled and shrinking in the light. “Hmmm…” Rupert padded the bud, but it stayed shut. “It looks like one of those Candypop Buds. Wonder what its problem is?”

“I would be too if I was planted under a ginormous light.” Timmy commented.

Rupert noticed the convenient path spiraling up the pole. “Then let’s do something about it.” The two made the long journey up the hundred-story tower with as many Pikmin in tow as they could.
Gnats fluttered around the light up top, so they sent the Wing Pikmin to take them down. The bulb was shielded by the surrounding glass, so they tossed Rock Pikmin at it repeatedly until it smashed open. The lightbulb truly was like a giant sun up close, and they feared they’d go blind of they looked at it for a second. “HEY, HIKARI, HURRY UP WITH THOSE YELLOWS!” Hikari heard Rupert’s voice above the tower, so she rushed up with 16 Yellow Pikmin.

“GEE, Ruppy, couldn’t ya pick a vacation with a little less sun??” she yelled.

“Let’s just take this light out!”

“Okie-dokey, Karaoke!” With that, she sent all her Yellows inside the chamber as they crept into small slots and safely disabled the electric wiring. The black night returned in a flash, and the kids’ eyes never felt more at peace. ‘Course, those weird little shapes were floating in front of them, but they would be gone soon.

Once they made it down the tower, the green Candypop Bud bloomed to life. With curious shrugs, Rupert tossed a Red Pikmin into the flower, sprouting a Pikmin seed. The boy plucked and revealed the strange Green Pikmin. “…What does this one do?”

“Beats me.” Tim said.

“Maybe he cleans noses!” Hikari grinned.

“He does look like a booger.”

“Well, anyway, let’s make more.” Rupert said as he tossed 4 more Reds in the Candypop, so when the flower wilted, they had 5 of the strange Green Pikmin. They couldn’t find anyplace else to go, but there was a misplaced cup upside-down in a gap in the trees. It was made of plastic, so the Rock Pikmin couldn’t break, and was too slippery for the Wings. They decided to send their Green Pikmin at the cup, but they couldn’t do anything. They decided to leave this field and found another narrow path that led closer to Rupert’s house. They made it to the garden around the border of Rupert’s house, protected by a great stone wall (5 inches tall, but fairly large to them).

A couple Skutterchucks patrolled the outer wall, so the kids first took them out with Rock Pikmin. There was a particular area of the wall that slanted forward, while another spot slanted back, and that was where the kids could walk up and drop into the garden. They immediately took notice of the odd-looking stone creatures with unsymmetrical bodies and long arms that they used to slam seeds in the ground. “Hey, I know what those are, they’re Mamutas.” Rupert whispered. “They’re things that help plant flowers or somethin’, …My mom got some.”

One of the Mamutas took notice of the group with their Pikmin and marched over to start smashing them. “H-HEY!” They quickly tossed Pikmin to take it out, but soon realized their Pikmin were merely planted again, their flowers fully bloomed. “Oh… heh, not bad!”

They plucked their newly bloomed Pikmin, including the five green ones. But the kids filled with worry as a strange stomping sound grew closer, and marching over the slanted border wall was the vicious Spotty Bulbear, a black Bulborb with red spots, leading several Dwarf Bulbears behind him. The kids made a run for it, but the Bulbear stayed on their tail. Three Purple Pikmin, 4 Rocks, and 3 of the Green Pikmin were devoured. “So much for them…” Rupert sighed.

But before they realized, the Bulbear was attacked by the Green Pikmin their selves, their bodies glowing green and faded, and ghostly tails had replaced their legs. Indeed, the Green Pikmin had become ghosts.
Rupert discovered Ghost Pikmin! This rare breed can only be found in Limegreen Candypop Buds! While born as ordinary Pikmin, their spirits live on after death! These ghostly bodies can phase through anything, and lift anything! Just keep them out of bright areas and you’ll be fine!

Unable to be killed, the Ghost Pikmin defeated the Bulbear by their lonesome. With that, the kids quickly took out the Dwarf Bulbears, letting some Rocks, Yellows, and Whites take them back. “Holy cow, they’re ghosts!!” Timmy beamed.

“Heheh, just like my mom!” Rupert perked. “Wonder if she has anything to do with this?”

“I hope they aren’t gonna haunt me.” Hikari shuddered.

“Relax, they’re too small. Plus, they probably don’t like light, better watch out.”

The three split up as Timmy accompanied the Pikmin to the Onion, Hikari took their other Pikmin around the garden, and Rupert brought the Ghost Pikmin to the plastic cup covering the treasure. They could phase under the cup and push it up and away, revealing the treasure underneath, a Cheato Page from Banjo-Tooie. He had the Ghost Pikmin carry the Cheato Page (Guide to Wimpness) to the Onions, and like the Wing Pikmin, they could easily fly over the yard to bring it faster. Rupert then joined Timmy to the left side of the yard, where the end of a giant hose was lain down. They were unable to climb onto the hose, but it seemed some of Hikari’s Pikmin were bringing mulch all the way from the garden to make a hill at level with the hose’s top. They had to hand it to these guys, they were smart.

Hikari’s Pikmin returned to her while Rupert and Tim led theirs across the snake-like hose. There were enclosings in the grass along the sides (with dirt hills for them to get back on the hose) that contained nectar eggs, deciding to let the Greens and Whites feast some. However, only the two living Greens could eat them, the Ghost ones were stuck with their leaf phases. In another enclosing was a Limegreen Candypop, so they sacrificed 5 Yellows to produce more Greens, 10 total. They found more nectar to feed those Greens before they made it to the garden wall, in which the hose sloped over it to let them across, then turned vertical as it led up, and wrapped around the faucet.

Before they explored the garden, they looked up at the faucet handle, which had a metal container sealing it. Curious, they sent their three Ghost Pikmin up and through the container, and when they didn’t come out, they suspected they were trying to turn the faucet. Rupert led the living Greens into the garden, and a strange flower with eyes emerged from the ground when they approached. Rupert allowed the Creeping Chrysanthemum to flatten his Greens, letting them become ghosts as they proceeded to beat the monster. With that, he sent the Ghosts up to the faucet as well, successfully turning it.

A light stream of water resulted as a DK Barrel (Ape Savior) popped out of the end. The kids returned and, since it was drenched in water, they used 7 Blue Pikmin to carry it back. “Oh hey, my DK Barrel toy!” Rupert remembered. “Dad made me water the garden one day, so I, shoved it inside. Eh hehn hehn.” ^^;

They took the Blue Pikmin back once they were done and returned to the garden. They led them around the corner of the house to a dead-end area, with a large rock that contained Bomb Rocks. Surrounding this rock were small eggs, and while they thought them to be nectar eggs, Morphs popped out of them when they got close, spiked, black, one-eyed round creatures that latched onto Rupert and Timmy. They didn’t hurt, but sure slowed them down, so they hurriedly shook them off and ordered the Pikmin to swarm them. Each Pikmin could take a Morph back, but it felt too tedious, and they called their Pikmin back when they were already doing so. With the Morphs dealt with, 10 Ghost Pikmin each grabbed a Bomb Rock, then ventured to the very middle of the garden where the house’s stairs went over. The stairs were wooden, held up by diagonal wooden bars with holes in-between. They entered the dark of their underside, encountering a stone wall.

“Ruppyyyyyyy? TIIIIimmyyyyyyyy. Where ARE youooouuu??” Hikari called from the other side.

“THERE you are! You two left me all alone, I’ve been waiting here worried SICK! I found this weird wall.”

“Yeah, so did we. Stand back.” Hikari did so while the Ghosts placed three Bomb Rocks beside the wall, blowing it up. Hikari hurried in to join them. “So did you find anything else?”

“Nuttin’ but dirt. Where do we go now?”

Some Pikmin were making “Nneyah” noises, and saw some Whites digging parts of the ground in this pitch-dark. They were trying to uncover a blue chain necklace, joined by other Pikmin once they were close enough. Once the chain was dug up, the kids let the Ghost and Wings take hold of it, as they floated up to the porch on the right side, latched one end of the chain to a thin, dangling rope, while the other end was left hanging near the ground. “Hall riight! Thanks, guys!” Rupert cheered. “Before we go up, let’s get our other Pikmin, first.”

They returned to the Onions, rearranged, and concluded with 14 Reds, 15 Yellows, 16 Blues, 15 Wings, 10 Purples, 10 Whites, 10 Rocks, and 10 Ghosts, 100 total. The kids returned to climb their way up the chain while their Pikmin followed. Considering their sizes, it was several stories until the porch. Hikari had an easier time jumping between each hoop with her agility, Timmy was also a proficient climber, but Rupert was using every ounce of strength in his arms to hang tight and climb up. It was like trying to climb the poles at gym, and Arceus knows he wasn’t good at that. He stopped a quarter way up to sit in a hoop and catch his breath, sweating. “MmmMMMP!” A Purple Pikmin grabbed and put Rupert on his back, the boy holding on with wonder as he was carried the rest of the way. Finally, they were level with the porch, jumping off as Rupert climbed off the Pikmin.

“Heheh! Thank you!” If only strong little ants would help him in gym. The floor of this porch was mostly massive and barren, so they focused their sights on the front door to Rupert’s house that towered a hundred stories. Even the bottom of the door was closed pretty tight, not even for ants to get in. They could send some Wings up and hit the doorbell, but probably wouldn’t be strong, and Rupert’s father might not even notice in the dark. Thankfully, the bottom walls around the door were cracked, with one of them big enough to fit inside.

Finally, they were inside of Rupert’s house. Timmy and Hikari never came over before, and what a heck of a first visit this would be. In an enclosing to the right of the entrance was exercise equipment. “Dad makes me use that stuff for 2 hours a day.” Rupert informed. “Hope he won’t make me use ‘em now.” They ventured across the great carpeted plain to the living room, where Dweevils roamed about the ground. They used their Purples to smoosh the spiders in one throw, but chose not to let their Pikmin collect to avoid the horribly long way back to regather them. It took a fairly long time to get beyond the couch and to the kitchen, where they hoped there would be some food crumbs lying around. The Ghost Pikmin didn’t follow because of the light.

“I didn’t even eat breakfast. Or lunch.” Timmy moaned. “Please tell me you got somethin’, Rupert.”
“Timmy, look! There’s food!” Hikari pointed at some bread crumbs and Cheerios lain on some giant tape pieces near the wall by the doorway. “Let’s go eat-!”

“No!” Rupert grabbed her before she ran over. “Those’re sticky traps my mom set up to trap bugs. We shouldn’t risk it.”

“Sigh, that stupid pet.” The kids jumped when the floor started to shake. They ran away from the doorway as fast as they could when a pair of massive socked feet stomped across the flat kitchen plain. Chad Dickson was bigger and far more terrifying than the kids would’ve imagined, and the strict, surly man looked too stressed for confrontation. “‘Make sure you feed Zuri,’ she says, ‘make yourself a LITTLE bit useful.’ Well if the stupid little bat’s gonna be a pest about it, he isn’t getting a scrap.” He poured himself a bowl of cereal and started munching aggressively.

“There he is, Rupert, now’s our chance!” Timmy jumped.

“Y…Yeah…” His tiny heart was racing in fear.

“What’s wrong, Ruppy? You don’t think your dad would really SQUISH you, do you?”

“W-Well, we do kinda look like ants, I, I just don’t think…”

“Quit being a baby.” Timmy told him. “I know he’s mean, but I’m sure he’d at least help when you’re like THIS. How’s his son gonna be big and strong when he’s tiny, huh?”

Rupert couldn’t really believe that… he imagined too many things going wrong. Aside from mistaking them for bugs and crushing them, Chad might just keep Rupert like this, hidden from his mother as he puts Rupert through even more painful and inescapable exercise. Or he would tell Rupert to find his own way out of this mess, then act totally ignorant and uncaring that his son and his friends are the size of bugs. No… Rupert shouldn’t think that, Chad is his dad, he used to fight for kids’ rights, despite being an aggressive trainer, of course he would help Rupert when he really needed—

The kitchen door flew open just then as Emily Dickson walked in. “Hi, Chad.” She spoke in a dreary, depressed tone. “Is Rupert home?”

“No.” Chad twirled his spoon in the cereal. “No calls from the werecats, either.”

“MOOOOOOOOOOOOOOM!” Suddenly full of adrenaline, Rupert began screaming. “MOOOOOOOOOOOOM!”

“Nope, not Dad.” His friends chorused. (“La la.” sang the Pikmin.)

“Honey, you’ve searched for two days straight, you need to rest.” Chad told her.

“Oh, SURE!!” The bags under her colorless eyes were very dark. “I’ll just REST while my SON is being RAPED by MOUNTAIN FOLK!”

“Emily, you’re overreacting, I’m sure Rupert’s just—”

“DON’T YOU DARE TAKE THAT CALM TONE WITH ME!” The kids and Pikmin shut their ears to no avail. Emily looked murderous. “YOU’RE THE ONE WHO DUMPED HIM OUT IN THE WOODS AND LET HIM GET KIDNAPPED BY REDNECKS. OUR LITTLE BOY WILL BE SCARRED FOR THE REST OF HIS LIFE BECAUSE YOU WANTED HIM TO HAVE PREMATURE MUSCLES!!”
“Look, you’re just delirious because you haven’t slept or eaten since—”

“HOW ABOUT I EAT THAT USELESS MOUND OF SHIT YOU CALL A BRAIN AND SLEEP ON YOUR CORPSE, AND THE UNGODLY SMELL OF YOUR DECAY WILL REACH RUPERT’S NOSE AND LEAD HIM HOME, WHERE HE’LL HAVE A MILLION PARTIES NOW THAT YOU’RE FINALLY-!!”

“Emily… …you need to go to sleep. You need, I dunno, 15 hours hopefully, eat a nice healthy meal when you awake, take a hot warm shower, then you’ll be nice and semi-alive again.”

Emily panted heavily. The kids never felt more afraid, closing their eyes as they expected blood to fly out of Chad’s neck any moment. Rupert’s mom was the Devil, there was no other explanation. Rupert never thought, for a split second, how much safer he’d be in his father’s hands when his mom was like this. “…You’re right.” Her head sunk, and the bags below her eyes seemed to droop.

“I’ll take you upstairs.” Chad smiled and took Emily’s arm around his neck, calmly leading her up.

“Zuri!” The aforementioned pet skittered downstairs panting excitedly, but frowned when Emily passed him by. “Not now, Zuri, go play with Ruppy, oh wait. . .”

“Zurrrr.” The Pokémon’s ears drooped, sad. “…Zuri?” A strange whiff fell on his nose. It looked at the kitchen, seeing three tiny figures and an army of colorful things behind them.

Team Rupert stood still and fearful. Zuri crept up to them on all fours, little batty eyes narrowed on Rupert. Noticing this, Timmy and Hikari zipped behind the wall; they were alright with him being eaten first. Zuri loomed close and sniffed. Rupert strongly felt the gusts of wind going in his tiny nose. “H-H-H-H-H. . . Hi, Zuri.”

His giant ears made a slight twitch, but seemed extremely noticeable from Rupert’s viewpoint. “ZUUUUURIIIIIIIIIIII!” Why the kids weren’t deaf at this point, they never knew. Zuri leaped and smashed Rupert beneath his round yellow belly.

“Hmmp-hmmp-hmmm-mmmm-mm-mm!” Still smiling, Zuri rolled on his back. Rupert pushed his face free of his belly and revitalized his lungs. “HUUFF… thanks, Zuri.”

“Aaaaaawwwww! He’s so cuuuuuute!” Hikari beamed adoringly.

“So you having a weird alien bat for a pet just… never came up in conversation?” Timmy asked.

Zuri perked. It flipped onto its feet, let Rupert fall, and leaped forward, startling the siblings as Zuri stared close and sniffed. “ZURI!!!” Another screech that could’ve been fatal to their ears.

“Zri!” Zuri pinned Rupert under the tip of his paw and playfully sniffed him.

“Zuri! Take me to Mommy, boy! Wanna take me to Mommy, Zuri??”

“Zuu!” Zuri stepped off and put his nose on the floor to let little Ruppy climb up. He also lowered his tail for Tim, Hikar, and the hundred Pikmin to squeeze and hold on tight while the Pokémon scampered up the stairs.

He slipped through the cracked-open door to the parents’ room. Zuri hid by the side of the bed and stared while Chad lay his wife down and pulled her shoes off. “Even if ghosts never get tired, you’re still alive. It’ll be alright, Honey.” Chad patted her shoulder softly. “I know it sounds like I don’t care, but… well, you should have faith in Rupert, too. Wherever he is, I’m sure he’s holdin’ up fine. If he’s tough as me or scary as you… okay, he’s neither, but…” He looked at Emily. Her eyes were closed as color was returning to her face. He rubbed her hair. “You’re still a kid at heart.
I’mma head downstairs and, sweep up the spiders. Been gettin’ a lot o’ them for some reason.” So he left, leaving the door open a little crack to allow hall light.

“Zri?” Zuri leapt onto the bed, lowering his head so the tinies could climb off. The surface of the blanket plain sloped downward to the weight of the woman’s body. Her head was lain on the bed, not the pillow, and when Rupert finally made it to her sideways face, her dark-green eyes were open a tiny crack.

“Uh… Mom?”

“Nnnnnn….”

The moan was loud and eerie to their ears. Timmy and Hikari were honestly afraid, considering her earlier anger and her being a half-ghost. They watched as Rupert approached her left eye, closest to the bed. “It’s OK, Mom… I’m all right. I’m holdin’ up just fine… Timmy and Hikari are here, too, they’re helping me. And look! Those are the Pikmin! They’re extremely big help. Even though they’re all really tiny.”

“Уппиии… Ruурееееерт.” Her eye appeared to roll to face Rupert. Its pupil looked dull and dead.

“I’m sorry I’m making you worry, Mom. You’re really nice and I’m glad you protect me from Dad as much as you do. But I don’t want you to be so… scary. You deserve to take a nap, Mom. Take a nap and don’t worry. When you get up, take a hot, warm shower. You sing really pretty in the shower. Your hair looks silly when it’s wet, too. Your little Ruppy’s gonna be OK… he’s right here, just to tell you that. I…I love you, Mom.”

He stretched his arms and lay himself against her flesh, the pupil seeming to sink down to see him.
Emily was mindless, blind from her own madness… and yet, she could feel him hugging her.
Those teeny little arms… felt like they were holding her whole body. She was warm… her mind was repairing… she had no idea he was actually there, no idea those words came from his mouth… she only deemed it as visions created by her wasteland of a mind. But what warm visions they were… giving her peace… promising her… her baby was right beside her.

Her eyelid slowly closed. The bags began to shrink away into natural color. She was asleep. Rupert walked away to view the whole of his mother’s face. She looked so beautiful. “Not that I don’t like a cheesy emotional moment once in a while, which I don’t, but I woulda said something along the lines of, ‘Hey Mom, we’re right here, we braved the dangers of the tiny world to get your attention, please help us get back to normal so we can all live happily ever after.’” Timmy drew on.

“SNOOOOOORE… shooooo… SNOOOOOORE.”

Rupert smiled as her snores blew them like brief, though strong gusts of wind. “Dad’s right, she needs to sleep. I wanna be back to normal, but I don’t like seeing her so angry… I’ll risk Dad helping us. Zuri, you’ll protect us if he gets mean, right?”

“Zuri!”

“Fine, then let’s do it so we can get food.” Timmy said impatiently, and with that, they climbed onto the animal’s head. Zuri crawled out of the doorway and readied to head downstairs to Chad, until a curious sight caught their eyes: a group of bugs were soaring down the hall miles overhead.
Timmy zoomed in his goggles and saw they were Minish flying with Wing Pikmin. “Rupert! They’re Minish!”

“Minish? HEY, COME BACK! Zuri, go after them!”

“Zri!” The Pokémon excitedly scampered down. The five Minish had flown into the keyhole of a closed door, which Zuri failed to get open in all his head-bashes. “Zuri! Zuri! …ZuuuuuRI!” It burst open with an Iron Tail and he crept into the bathroom. “It’s too dark, where did they go?” asked Rupert.

Timmy turned on his goggle flashlight and looked around. The Minish flew over the sink before going down. “On the sink.” (“Zuri.”) The Pokémon followed Timmy’s direction and hopped on. Timmy focused his flashlight on the sink’s drain. “What would they be going down there, for?”

“Minish are weird. Darn, I was hoping we could ask ‘em for help.” Rupert said. “Guess it’s back to Dad.”

Almost on cue, Chad walked in with a dustpan and turned on the light. “I don’t understand why Emily wants ‘em flushed down the toilet ‘stead of the trash. Oh right, ‘cause they attract MORE spiders otherwise, yet she’s the one-”

“UUUAAAAAAAH!” The Ghost Pikmin went into a seizure. The light was unbearable.

“Oh no!” Rupert gasped.

“ZURI!” Unable to handle those screams so close to his ears, the animal shook furiously and sent the lot of them flying, with Team Rupert and some Pikmin going straight for the toilet.

“Huh? Zuri, get offa there.” Chad approached and shoved the Pokémon off the sink. Under Chad’s shade, the Ghosts were saved from fate, but they thought fast and sunk beneath the floor. “I hope we don’t have to get the door fixed because you…” He noticed the toilet.

Team Rupert struggled to keep balance on the thick liquid surface, but their Pikmin were panicking and flailing their arms. The kids were panicking, seeing no way out of this with their Pikmin alive. Their problems would grow worse when Chad towered over the toilet bowl with a baffled expression. “Wow… guess the toilet thing actually works. Well, more for the ride.” He tilted his dustpan and let the dead Dweevil bodies land and float beside them. “Down you go.” The children got the image of death when Chad pushed the handle.

“WAAAAAAAAAAAAHHHHHHHHH. . . . .”

The abandoned Wing Pikmin flew all the way back to the Onions and entered. The seven vessels lifted off and flew into the house, gathering all the other abandoned Pikmin before diving beneath the steadily-rising toilet water.

“. . . . . . . .” Emily was so sleepy, she was dead. She never realized how great it felt to lie here, lost in Dreamland. Rupert was there… what a fun little adventure he was having. Living among bugs, leading an army of cute, colorful ants. Their reckless voyage would carry ‘em down the maelstrom of an ordinary toilet. …Wait a second.

“AAAAAAAAAAHHHH!” She shot up with bloodshot eyes. “MY BABY’S GOING DOWN THE TOILET!” At demon speed, she was in the bathroom, kneeled over, grabbing the edges, and screaming into the bowl. “RUPERT JUST GOT FLUSHED! RUPERT, DON’T WORRY, MOMMY’S COMIIIIIIIN’!” She submerged her head into the toilet, gurgling and bubbling.
Chad walked back in and freaked, “Gaaaah! Emily, what are ya doin’?!” He quickly pulled her back to her feet.

“My BABY… RUPERT just went down the TOILET!”

“Ha hah, come on, we stopped worrying about that when he turned two, he still falls in, but not enough to sink. You can’t keep treating him like a helpless ant, remember Emily?”

“B-But he DID! After he came in with his ant army, and he said!…he said!…”

“He saaaaaiid…?”

“…He said…” Emily smiled, “He’ll be all right. I should take a shower.” Her aura far more calm than it had been in days, she undressed.

In minutes, she was standing in the tub, soaking her skin with the steaming water as her soul healed. “Hm… Rupert leading an ant army down the toilet… I thought Mika had messed-up dreams. Siiiigh…” She hung her head under the faucet so her hair drooped. “Rupert… I’m sorry I yelled… wherever you are, wherever you go… I’ll always be beside you… remember that. I know you’ll find your way back to us…”

Act 2: Cavern of Discarded

“WAAAAaaaahhhh!” The children went whipping across a rapid stream after flushing down the drain.

“LOOK OUT FOR THAT WATERFALL!” Timmy screamed, pointing ahead.

“HOLD ON!” Rupert grabbed a nearby stairway ledge, his other hand holding Timmy’s, who held Hikari, who formed a long string of their Pikmin grabbed one-another that extended down the waterfall. The Ghost Pikmin appeared and helped Rupert on the stairs, and with all his strength he pulled his friends and Pikmin to safety.

“Sigh… that was close.” Timmy sighed.

“Good thing Dad didn’t actually use it, right? Ha ha.” Rupert chuckled.

The whirling of propellers was heard as their seven Onions came fluttering down the drain pipe, taking land on this piece of land they stood on. “Well, I guess we’re not going back up.”

“I hope no ‘back up’ comes down anytime soon.” Timmy moaned.

“Then let’s get moving. Hopefully we’ll find a way out.” (Play “Jellyfloat Pool” from Pikmin 2.)

They expected the pipelines below Rupert’s house to be filled with decades of dung and guge, rusty pipes with absolutely no hint to their former silvery self, their noses shriveling at the scent of too many compounds of dead matter. But it was beautiful and very spacious. There was an odor and pipes were rusty and accumulating dirt. But there was solid ground to stand on, floors and walls of large blue tiles that were eroding away and exposing the earth behind. The way this structure was intricately carved, as if by men, or Minish… it was a whole other floor of this house Rupert never knew about. One he wouldn’t mind visiting again, if the circumstances for coming and going here weren’t so risky.

Rupert summoned his Red Pikmin and went to take out some grazing Bulborbs, bringing them back to retrieve 16 new Reds. They rearranged and took the same amount as last time, except 15
Reds and 15 Blues, still making the perfect 100. They followed a corridor carved from a rusted pipe that sloped down into a new room where Jellyfloats floated about the air. They were alien-like in their blended yellow/blue color, spots around their bulb, and glowing yellow antennas. They tried to slurp up their Pikmin, but they didn’t immediately die, just floated mindlessly within the jelly. The kids quickly chucked Rock Pikmin to destroy the Jellyfloats and save their comrades. They were then facing a rapid river that surfed further down, but looked too wild for them to survive in. A Waddlepus clung onto the wall beside the next path, blowing bubbles over the river between the two footholds.

The kids tossed Yellow Pikmin up into the bubbles, causing them to sink. Quickly, the trio jumped across the bubbles while their Pikmin mimicked, and the Ghost and Wing types pushed the bubbles over the foothold as well so the Pikmin would pop safely. They then overlooked a great, carved pipe-pathway where it looked like a river should flow, but was almost dry, with just a few dead leaves. But another distant whooshing wave mixed with the sounds of this previous river, sounding from up the hill of the barren one. A beautiful voice that belonged to a passionate woman echoed from beyond the pipes as the water came rushing. “Here we aaaaare, racing down the street again, wonderin’ if this is how we’re meant to be-e-e-e-e, fast as Lightning makin’ a scene again, wonderin’…”

Rupert’s eyes lit with love and delight. “It’s…It’s my mom! She sounds so… happy.”

“Great, so we probly shouldn’t tell her her baby got flushed down the toilet.” Timmy remarked. “Which wouldn’t have happened if, you know.”

“Fast as Lightning givin’ you a heavy load, fast as lightning wondering if this is how we’re meant to be, ‘cause it’s just you and me now…” His mom sounded so happy. Rupert wondered if she actually saw him in her half-dead state, knew her son’s current position. Or a part of her told her Rupert was just fine, and he would come back soon. No matter how long it takes, he would keep the sound of that voice in his head, encourage himself to keep going. A leaf floated close by, so the friends and the Pikmin jumped to it. It threatened to sink before long, so they jumped to another, and repeated this pattern before jumping off at a safe ledge on the right.

They were stranded at this point, as the leaves would eventually sink against a grated waterway, and the parallel ledge was too high. The kids climbed atop each other so Hikari could see and confirm there were bridge tiles up there, with Water Dumples guarding them, and tall glowing mushrooms grew there, too. The kids sent their Ghost Pikmin to battle the Dumples with nary a scratch, but the bridge tiles were in range of the Glowcaps, and when the Ghosts began to falter, the kids called them back. They instead sent the Wing Pikmin to collect and create the bridge, so they could get up. Sticking out of the wall and lain on the floor was a pipe closed by a hatch, in which they had their Pikmin turn the wheel and open it, revealing a shortcut up to the area beside the first river.

They let their Purples, Rocks, and Reds take the 3 Water Dumples to the Onions via the shortcut, and Hikari went with them. Their next route would take them across a gas pipe, with several holes where gas geysers were spewing out. They would never be able to guide all their Pikmin, so only the Whites and Ghosts. Rupert and Tim held their breath and navigated around the geysers, careful of their footing on this slippery pipe over the river, ’til it led safely into a tunnel. There were still geysers, but an enclosing on their right led to an open, dirt-filled room. They walked around until their Whites started digging a spot, and then had their Ghosts on it as they revealed a faucet beneath the soil. Rup and Tim got on and started running the direction of the arrow, turning the faucet and disabling the gas flow.

They returned for their other Pikmin as well as Hikari, able to cross the whole of the pipe and reaching a new corridor of bathroom tiles. The source of the shower flow drew further away, the sounds of Emily’s voice fading, but a faint bit was heard. They wandered a maze where Wollywogs leapt out to crush them, succeeding in destroying 3 Blues and 3 Yellows. They had the Ghosts and Rocks destroy the Wogs, but let the bodies be for now. Dweevils dropped down in random parts of the ceiling, the kids destroying them before too much damage was done, and they eventually found a dead-end area with a water pool. There was a F.L.U.D.D. head (Assistance Legend) down there, but the Blues couldn’t swim and carry it. So they sent the Ghosts in, unable to drown since they’re already dead, to carry the F.L.U.D.D. together. They had the Blues take back a Wollywog, and Yellows, Whites, and Purples take Dweevils.

Rupert offered to see them back while Tim and Hikari progressed forward. Rupert never actually accompanied them going back much, so seeing them carry prey in perfect alignment and unison was entertaining. The Ghosts couldn’t carry the F.L.U.D.D. through walls or through the shortcut because of the glowy mushrooms, instead floated slowly and softly over and up the shower river. Rupert smiled, admired the Pikmin’s cleverness at times, knowing which paths were impassable and which they could safely take. Except when they were following him, straying just a little bit and walking into something dangerous. They were such fun, silly, and unique creatures. Rupert was glad he got to meet them.

Meanwhile, Tim and Hikari made it to a long, shallow puddle that a plug was touching, making it flash with electricity. The puddle was thin enough for Pikmin to cross, but any one of them would die the moment they touched it. Hence, the Yellow Pikmin gladly lifted the kids and some Pikmin and carried them across. Their hearts were racing, praying above prayer the Pikmin wouldn’t trip and drop to their demise. The puddle stretched a while, they were more afraid they would fall and zap to death, until they finally reached a sandgate with poison patches. The Yellows chucked their carried Whites onto the gate to begin breaking, Timmy and Hikari wishing they would hurry up so they can get off this puddle. It took forever with 6 Whites, but the gate collapsed, and the poison pouches followed as the Pikmin carried them to dry land.

Here, they found a huge lever, designed like a lightswitch, only they were tiny. The Pikmin shoved and flipped it, disabling the electric. Rupert and his Pikmin were able to cross, and Timmy demanded 30 dollars because of that endeavor. Oh, the allowances he’d have to save. By this point, Emily’s singing was gone from their ears, but the Pikmin memorized the rhythm of the song and were humming it to keep their spirits up. “La la la, la la, la la la, lalala la LA la la, la la la la-a-a-a, la la LA la, lalala la, lalala la la la la, la la la-a-a-a-a...”

They made it to a large room where Shiny Bulborbs roamed, two Jellyfloats, and a Great Jellyfloat, which was larger, dark-blue, and had dark-pink spots. They kept their Ghosts at bay (no way they were losing them) and marched forward to chuck their Rocks and Purples at the jellies. Meanwhile, Rupert bravely approached the two Bulborbs with 15 Yellows, letting the brawl take place. 3 Yellows were eaten, then 2, so Rupert called them back and tried to run, totally outmatched. Rupert called some Purples over and risked their health for serious damage on the Bulborbs. 2 Purples were eaten, but the Bulborbs were defeated in time. All monsters were fallen as Rupert let the Purples take one Bulborb while the Reds took another. There were several enclosings with nectar eggs or Iridescent Flint Beetles, but only one path was true. They decided to go together, trusting their other Pikmin to get back okay.

This path grew darker and made several turns. Finally they were in a huge, dark room lit with Glowcaps. They stepped forward and felt their feet sink in shallow water, but deep enough for their Pikmin to drown, so only Blues, Wings, and Ghosts they took. They wandered around, but the room was empty. “AAAAHH!” Suddenly a pair of buggy legs, as thick as logs, hit the ground, giant beady pink eyes staring and two glowing antennas standing straight and diagonal as TV antennas. The Radio Beetle moved its legs fast despite its size, turning to face the Pikmin at the shore and unleashing an intangible shockwave. The sound was minor in the kids’ ears, but the Pikmin reacted crazily, feeling the same attraction as their Pikmin Whistles. The beetle summoned them, tricked them into hitting the water, so the kids frantically tried to whistle them back to land.

Timmy handled that part, while an angered Rupert and Hikar went for the beetle. It attracted their Ghost Pikmin too, tricking them into flying by the Glowcaps to extinguish them. The kids summoned them back quickly, trying their best to throw Pikmin onto the beetle’s eyes, but it shook them off in spite of damages. It became an annoying pattern, throwing their Pikmin over and over again for a little damage, quickly summoning them from the beetle’s control, chasing it, throwing for damage, shook off, then again. As the bug was skittering around, it sent Hikari flying with a whipping-fast kick. Rupert grew more angered, tirelessly calling his Pikmin back, chasing the bug, and throwing them on. As long, arduous, and boring as it was, the beetle saw its last moments of standing, and collapsed before Rupert’s Pikmin.

His frail arms, which could never lift a box of old toys, felt so tired. So much throwing and throwing, he didn’t wanna do it anymore, he wanted to rest. The Pikmin he had used for this noble battle walked/flew up to him, patting his arms and shoulders. They were glad he kept his strength ‘til the very end, and were honored to be in his command. That’s what he wanted to believe, and he did. In the beetle’s remains, they found a curious device. It was a radio made of wood, clearly Minish-crafted. Rupert picked it up and fiddled with its controls.

“Nah nah!” His Pikmin excitedly ran around him, and the ones at shore tried going to him, ‘til Timmy called them back from the water. “Whaddyou think this is?” Rupert asked.

For minutes they played around with it. In time, they realized the Reds and Purples they sent back suddenly found their way to them. “Hey… you think this radio lets Pikmin know where we are?” Timmy asked.

“Heh, maybe it does! We’re definitely keepin’ this. …Uhhh, but they probably made Pikmin rooted in the ground. Let’s go back ‘n’ get them.”

So they made the long journey back to pluck the new Purple and Red Pikmin. Then they came aaaall the way back, finding nothing else in the beetle’s room but a hole leading deeper in. The kids nodded and bravely made the jump in. (Play “Rest Area” from Pikmin 2.)

The kids landed in a soft patch of soil, and found the Onions flew to them and came down as well. This cavern had a light not far away, so they followed it (keeping their Ghosts at a distance). The end of the cavern had a populace garden of Pellet Posies, nectar eggs, and Pikmin just waiting to be plucked. Their eyes glowed with wonder as colorful Spectralids fluttered over the garden, the light from the ceiling making their wings shine. “Whoa… it’s beautiful.” Timmy said quietly.

They looked as some Pikmin walked in with buckets of water, pouring them in the garden to make more Posies grow. “Looks like they’re growing more.” Rupert observed. “Hope they won’t mind us takin’ some.”

He was about to pluck some of the rooted Pikmin, when- “GET YER OWN GRUB, YOU ROTTEN KIDS!”

“AAAH!” Rupert backed away in fright when a gruff old Minish with a lantern stomped out. He had a short white beard and wore withered leaf clothing, his beady black eyes narrowed at Rupert. He raised his lantern for a better look at the trio.
“Well Ah’ll be chlorophyll… you runts’re human.” He spoke more calmly. “I haven’t seen a human in over 30 years. …Yer smaller ‘an I remember.”

“HIIIII Mr. Old Chipmunk Guuuuy!” Hikari greeted with a sunny smile. “Why do you live under Ruppy’s hooooouse?”

“Ruppy?”

“Hehe… that’s me.” Rupert blushed. “We sorta got flushed down my toilet and we ended up here.”

“You sound like you have a wild story to tell… Why don’t we get you kids some dinner.” He snapped his fingers as some Pikmin came over with some berries and bread crumbs. Timmy and Hikari were more than excited to finally have food, so the kids sat and proceeded to feast as Rupert explained his story.

“So my dad just ditched me in the woods, then, well, out of nowhere, this random tree stump shrunk me. Then I saw some Minish playing with these Pikmin, and I guess I… wanted to get into it, too.”

“Then outta nowhere, he drags us into it, too.” Timmy informs. “Then we figured we might as well protect him since Rupert’s a wimp.”

“I could beat YOU up.”

“Pikmin are odd creatures, ain’t they?” The old man asked. “Even humans ‘come fascinated with ‘em. Back in the day, I was all about these creatures… have you ever heard the story of Malarko?”

“Malar-who?” Hikari asked.

“Malarko… ‘e was a legendary Minish and one of the earliest recorded to ever use Pikmin. He was the first to find and use every type of Pikmin… and became the most feared Minish of them all. He made an army of over one thousand Pikmin… 100 Reds, 100 Yellows, 100 Blues, 100 Wings, Purples, Whites, Rock, bunch of colors I don’t remember… and with them, overpowered a band of humans that tried to tear down the Tree of Beginning. Then, he started the Minish Kids Next Door.”

“Were YOU a Minish operative?” Timmy asked.

“Yeah, I was… it’s a story that almost all of ‘em know. Some call it a bunch of malarkey… ‘cause that was his name. Some think the legend is true. But if it were… somewhere on this Earth, his Army of a Thousand Pikmin, and the Onions that contain ‘em, rest, waiting to be called again.”

“Did you try to find them?” Rupert asked.

“Even if I could… only members of Malarko’s family could use them, as well as the relatives of the friends he lent ‘em to. But I tried to create my own army. I flew everywhere searchin’ for all kinds, takin’ all sorts of prey to make my army huge… but too many of ‘em got smooshed, too many eaten, and I ain’t even find that many colors. …So I decided to settle down, hollowed this underground cave out with my earthbending, and using some Sun Plants I gathered, I planted ‘em here so they would grow to the ground and channel all the sunlight gathered from the day to grow my garden. I also set this place up close to some water pipes, get a… mildly fresh water source from the filth of you humans. The lady of the house is takin’ a shower now.”

“Hehe… I’ll pass your thanks to my mom.” Rupert blushed.
“Hear all sorts of things in that house up there. ‘Parently all the ladies get freaky powers and the men are usually wimps. …Is that accurate?”

“Matter of speaking… yes.”

“So what’re you doing with these Pikmin anyway, Kid? Some crazy dream you wantin’ to follow? …”

“To be honest… I never really thought about it. I’m always getting beat up by my dad… I guess I just wanted to get away from him. And these Pikmin looked so happy, I just… wanted to hang out with ‘em. It’s just so much peaceful down here. ‘Course, my mom is worried sick about me… she’s stressing so much over where I am, and we tried to get their attention but got flushed down here.”

“Need I remind you you had the PERFECT opportunity to- ow!” Rupert slapped Timmy.

“That reminds me, did you see any Minish kids come by here? We saw some go down my sink drain.”

“Oh yeh… some twerps walked by.” The elder replied. “Wanted some food ‘cause they were goin’ on some crazy mission to that there Dressrosa.”

“Dressrosa?”

“Is some island or… somethin’. Told me a lot of unusual activity was goin’ on; some factory is genetically modifying all the fruit there. That’s no good.”

“Could you tell us which way they went? We wanna ask them to help us.”

“That little hatch over thar.” He pointed to a pipe that burrowed beneath the ground, sealed with a lid with a turnwheel. “Goes to the sewer. Makes me wonder how those brats plan on makin’ it to Dressrosa.”

Rupert exchanged glances with his friends. It might’ve been the only shot they had, so they would take it. “Well, thanks for the food, Mr.…”

“Call me Barry.” The old Minish replied. “I wish you safe travels now, ‘Ruppy’. And tell your mom my Pikmin like her singing.”

“Ha ha ha! I do, too. See you later, Mr. Barry!” The trio hurried over to turn open the hatch, proceeding to climb a ladder down the endless shaft. Barry watched as their seven Onions shortly followed suit.

“Haaah… sure is different from when I was an operative. ‘Don’t let humans see you, stay out of sight,’ now they’re letting twerps like them into Minish World. Heh… next thing you know, they’ll actually join the KND.” (End song.)

In time, Team Rupert finally made it to the bottom, a stronger and louder rushing of water in their ears. After crossing a short plain, they found their selves atop a towering cliff over a river that looked like a huge, filthy ocean. The pipe-filled walls stretched to a ceiling as high as the sky, and by that horrid faint scent, they knew they were in the sewer. A few meters to their right were some stairs that led to a pier, and Minish kids were getting onboard a them-size sailboat. The friends bolted to and down the stairs as fast as they could.

“Darn it, Oak’s team said they’d be here hours ago.” a Minish boy, Acro said impatiently. “If they aren’t here in 5 minutes, we’re shippin’ off—"

“Huff, WAAIT!” Team Rupert made it down with desperate need for breath.

“What the… HUMANS?!”

“Yeah I know, it’s a long story, but we need you guys to biggify us.” Rupert told them quickly.

“We don’t have time for that, we’re on a mission to Dressrosa!” a girl, Pine stated.

“You can take us with you and do it THERE.” Timmy retorted. “You know what it’s like eating nothing but crumbs?” They stared at him weirdly. “…Okay, maybe you do.”

“Hold on… you guys use Pikmin?” Acro noticed the creatures behind them.

“Y-Yeah, Sappo and Gibli—” Rupert began.

“-and Rupert shrunk us.” Timmy interrupted.

“Good enough.” Acro concluded. “Another group was supposed to be down here, but if they’re not gonna show, congratulations, you’re the first human operatives to go on a Minish KND mission.”

“But we’re not—” Hikari tried to say.

“Time to go, gotta catch the liner, LET’S MOVE!” Acro forcibly pulled them onto the boat while the Pikmin, already sensing the journey, excitedly returned to their Onions. The boat was untied from the dock and the Onions fluttered after while the insect-size vessel swayed up and down to the giant rushing waves.

“Ruuuupeeeer?” moaned Timothy.

“Yeeeeeees?”

“I get motion sickneeeeeeess.”

“Me toooooooo.”

“WHEEEEEE�!” cheered Hikari as the wind breezed her hair.

Since they didn’t have watches, they easily lost track of time as the boat kept sailing. In time, the river surged out of an expansive pipe out of the sewer, down a humongous waterfall that turned the ship diagonal as they screamed to the heavens, then were finally horizontal after a forceful BUMP, sailing under a starry night sky. “A think it’s past my bedtime…” Rupert said woozily.

“Take a nap on the boat, we’re almost there.” Acro retorted.

“But we ARE on the boat.” Timmy whined.

“He means THAT boat!” yelled another Minish.

They didn’t immediately see it through the darkness of night, believing those lights were oddly-bright stars… but soon, the humans realized their teeny boat was sailing to a tremendous steamboat, its foghorn roaring miles and nautical miles from where they sat. “Whoa…” Rupert was too tired to gape in awe.

Astonished as they were, the Minish boat made it before the country-like vessel shipped off. They were so uncomfortably close to the ship, the humans were afraid they would crash. Some of the Minish’s Wing Pikmin got between both vessels to push and prevent impact. “Quick, grab our Brown Pikmin.” The Minish kids planted either hand on a Brown Pikmin, which then began climbing the side of the vessel with super-sticky bodies. Rupert’s team held onto their own Brown Pikmin, though while this would normally be a heart-racing endeavor for the tinies, they were far too tired. Now Rupert felt just like his mom. Eventually, they entered a tiny cracked opening into the ship’s storage. A team of tiny ants, their floating flower things, hidden in darkness amongst towers of crates. It was here, in this darkness, Team Rupert and the Minish could rest safely. Enjoy the ride to Dressrosa.

Midway Peak

The party was over. The guests were going home, using whatever means they had of coming there. The Corporate Presidents and their children were boarding the Excess Express. Don Quixote Doflamingo kept his cool smile as he joined. He stopped, feeling his phone vibrate. A text message from Diamante. Freddy’s ransacked.

His face scrunched to reveal veins. What a way to ruin a good party. When his kids were about to pass, he grabbed his daughter’s arm. “Sugar.” She was midway in eating a grape, looking up. Her father’s head kept straight. “I’m going to lock you in your room when we get home. I need to keep you safe.”

“…Okay.” She complied simply. They boarded the train. Sector DR went to their room and settled on their mats, and Jr. and Sugar their bunks. Sugar kept in the dark of the low bunk. Her basket of grapes, crown, and eyepatch on the nightstand, her sandals and coat on the floor. She got under the covers and lay asleep, holding her new Rainbow Monkey close as the train’s regular shakes rocked them to sleep.

So hence starts my unofficial summer vacation. Maybe I’ll update more, but no promise. I don’t know if Emily’s song has any particular origin, but me and her were talking one day and she told me she made it, I was gonna make a one-shot for it back in 2011, but it never came ‘round, but I guess I got to include it after all. X) I miss RBH. Next time begins the new day of this adventure, and we’ll officially begin Shelly’s story. See you then.
Wendy and co. explore the floating town of Glitzville! (OPTIONAL CHAPTER.)

This chapter is somewhat of a cool-down from the Davy Back Fight, but it does set up for other things.

Chapter B-8: Fake Happiness

_Facilier’s Voodoo Emporium_

“Perfect!” Facilier proclaimed after finishing his disguise. “I hereby dub thee… Wendell Berry!”

He had dyed Wendy’s hair purple and tied it in a ponytail. She wore a large white scarf, a white jacket over a black T-shirt, blue shorts over black skin-tight pants, and white boots. “So, how do I look?” Wendy asked, posing with her fists touching her hips.

“You look like Mulan Ping.” Carla said with disbelief.

“Almost, you gotta sound like a boy.” Facilier said.

“Like this?” Wendy said with a rougher voice.

“The sex change was a success!” Sonny jumped.

“I can’t even tell the difference!” Donna cheered.

They both wore devilish looks, holding their hammers ready. “_There’s just one final test!”_

“Ahhhh!” Wendy yelped, covering her pelvic area.

“We ain’t doin’ THAT much!” Facilier laughed. “True, there is a spell that can change yo’ gender, but I don’t think Wendy wants that, does she?”

“This all seems a tad excessive.” Carla said. “If the Government makes money off of Glitzville’s fights, wouldn’t they broadcast it on TV?”

“Of course they would! But how’ll you be convinced without seein’ it in real life? We goin’ to Glitzville, and ’long as Wendell stays in disguise, no one’ll ever suspect.”

“It’s not so bad.” Wendy twisted her body to view her sides. “It feels kinda comfy.”

“You don’t actually _like_ dressing as a boy, do you?” Carla asked.

“No, of course not!” She flushed.

“HALRIGHT!” Facilier stretched and crackled his fingers. “Who’s ready to APPARATE?”

“Not me!!” Wendy wept.
“Then it’s GOOD that we ain’t doing that! Sadly, Glitzville never stays in one zone, so no one can ever Apparate to it perfectly. Luckily, I have mah own way of goin’ ’ere.”

“Not another Knight Bus…” Carla dreaded the idea.

“Let’s go up to the kiddies’ room, it’s in there.” Facilier climbed the ladder to the ceiling hatch as the others followed. They crossed the narrow passage between the beds, then Facilier unveiled a secret door in the opposite wall. In this dark, secret room, the witch-doctor climbed into a roundish container-like thing, with room for Wendy, the Ice Climbers, and the small kitten.

“Mr. Facilier, what is this?” Wendy asked.

“Are we in a magic cauldron?” Sonny inquired.

“Will we be baked with carrots and onions?” Donna followed.

“For some reason, our game has fresh vegetables on snowy tundras.” Both twins chorused.

“Everybody buckled in?” Facilier began. “Then awaaaay WE GO!”

The daylight shone on them when the ceiling opened, and the thing they were in uplifted to the air. They came out of a hatch on a building roof, riding a giant black hat with Facilier’s crossbones on it. A balloon that looked like an inflatable Facilier, with a creepy grinning face and googly eyes, emerged from the hat and allowed them to float above the clouds. “WHOOOOOA!” Sonny and Donna gaped.

“W…We’re flying!” Wendy exclaimed with purest delight. “We’re actually flying!!”

“If you consider this ‘flying.’” Carla remarked. “What is that unsightly balloon?”

“Oh, one of my customers made that.” Facilier noted. “She’s, uh… She’s an odd one, all right. Ahem, excuse the late introductions. Kids, thank you for choosing Facilier Airlines as your method of travel. Please keep all hands inside the hat, and as faithful passengers, it is your job to keep watch for any birds that threaten our balloon in any way.”

“Ha ha ha!” Wendy looked over the edge and viewed the amazing landscape that stretched for miles. Carla sat on her head to look with her. “This view is so wonderful! It’s so much better than riding one of those scary ships.”

“Yes, you mentioned you piloted one of the KND’s aircrafts once.” Carla recalled. “How on Earth would you know how?”

“I… kinda didn’t.” Wendy blushed. “Just decided to wing it. This must be nothing to you though, Carla. You get to fly all the time.”

“Not so much with your heavy body.”

“Hey, I’m not that heavy!! I mean… I would think I lose a lot of weight with all the running I do…”

“Perhaps, but I’m still much smaller than you are.”

Wendy felt a light tinge of guilt in her heart. She brought up the question. “Carla… do you ever want to fly away and… look for your family?”

“What do you mean?”
“W-Well… I feel like we’re just keeping you with us when… you seem like you can fly perfectly. You could… look for your home yourself.”

“Maybe. But I already told you I’m not too concerned about finding my home. I’m perfectly happy with helping you, Child.”

“Heheh… Still, if you wanted to fly on your own, now would be a good chance. And since you’re a cat, you can protect us from birds!”

“Hm, it all works perfectly, doesn’t it?” Carla smirked. “Although I’ve never had a craving for birds or fish. But perhaps-”

“Actually, y’all might wanna buckle in now.” Facilier said as he put on pilot’s goggles. “We won’t catch up to Glitzville at this rate. Entering JET Mode!” The doctor pulled a lever, retracting the balloon and transforming the hat into a black jet. Its engines revved up, and ZOOOOM.

“AAAAAAHHHHH!” Wendy felt her flesh pull away from her face when the plane flew at a thousand miles per hour.

“WHEEEEEEEMEETEEE!” The Ice Climbers were no doubt enjoying it.

“MISTER FACILIER, IS THIS REALLY A BETTER ALTERNATIVE TO A KNIGHT BUS?” Carla cried, clutching Wendy’s ponytail.

“WE ALMOST THERE!” Facilier shouted, checking a compass inside a glass sphere that was labeled Glitzville. There were holographic mile numbers counting down. “Give it five minutes… three… 10 seconds… REVERT!”

He hit the lever, and the jet stopped and transformed to a balloon so suddenly, they felt their flesh fly frontwards instead of back. Carla was blown forward, but she flapped her wings and recomposed herself. “Errrrgh!” She shook her disheveled fur. “I swear, your actions will be the death of us, and when that time comes, I…” Carla gaped at the floating mass before them. Wendy and the Climbers shared the expression.

It was a bright and lively city on an island hovering in the sky using four rockets on its bottom. The buildings were small and consisted of mostly shops and restaurants. There was a hotel, and close to it, on the island’s center, was a huge building that was designed in a Chinese style, and the label over the entrance read GLITZ PIT.

The hot-air balloon landed in a parking lot of other such balloons, which bore fun designs like a star with beady eyes, a banana, and the Pokémon Meowth. “Kids, welcome to Glitzville!” Facilier announced. “I hope my secrecy wasn’t too much, but you have to admit, it was a fun-”

“BUUUEEEEEEH!” Wendy threw up over the city’s railing.

“Oh, right…” Facilier sweatdropped.

“Bleh…” Wendy’s barfing receded, but her face was still green. “If this city keeps moving… I don’t think I…”

“Sigh… Well, hopefully this can help ya get adjusted. Troia!” Facilier cast the spell on Wendy’s stomach. The twisted feeling vanished and her face returned to peach color.

“Phew… thanks. Alright, then.” Wendy brushed the loose end of her scarf behind her and looked stalwartly. “It’s time for Wendell Berry’s adventure in Glitzville!”
Somewhere else in town

“AH HA HA hahahahaha!” The trio of Jessie, James, and Meowth came out of a clothing store named Glitz Gear. “This town is truly the most wonderful place over Planet Earth!” Jessie proclaimed cheerfully, clothed in gorgeous pink garb, a sun hat, and reddish-pink sunglasses. “It was so nice of the boss to give us extra money for capturing that Mika woman!”

“Sure, but I was hopin’ we’d blow it off on more grub.” Meowth said as he and James were carrying bags of many clothes. “Not these useless rags. Besides, shouldn’t we be tryin’ to hunt the Firstborn like da boss wanted?”

“We will, of course.” Jessie replied perkily. “We’ll make great disguises out of these clothes. I even bought outfits for the Twilight Town the boss told us about. But who’s to say we can’t enjoy a little off time and watch some gladiator fights?”

“If the Glitz Pit has any rare Pokémon, it might be worth our while to nab some after they’re exhausted from battle.” James smirked. “We could dress like backstage guards and make our move then.”

“Holy smokes!” Meowth exclaimed, pointing forward. “Look at dat!”

There was a trim witch-doctor in dark skinny clothes, walking with a purple-haired boy with a ponytail, who was walking beside a white cat with wings, walking on her hind legs and wearing a dress with a tie. “Oh, my. That wasn’t in the brochure.” Jessie said with interest. “What is that?”

“She’s da most beautiful mammal I ever set my eyes on.” Meowth proclaimed with hearts for eyes.

“But what kind of creature is she? A Pokémon?” James asked.

“This world has a lot of creatures that look like Pokémon, but really aren’t.” Jessie replied. “Even so, she looks especially different. I think she’s worth stealing just because.”

“Poifect!” Meowth smirked. “Let’s make use o’ dese disguises and follow ’em! We’ll swipe dat cat when they’s least suspecting!”

“I’m going ahead to check out the arena.” Dr. Facilier told the children and cat. “Feel free to look around, but meet me at the arena in an hour, kids. And don’t forget to watch yourselves.” The doctor walked ahead and vanished in the crowds.

“So, where do you want to go first, Carla?” Wendy asked with her disguised voice. “That candy shop looks tasty.”

“Dear, must you talk like that to me?” Carla asked.

“What? He said to watch ourselves. I sound enough like a boy, don’t I? Wait wait, let me just… ahem.” She cleared her throat. “Testosterone.”

“…” Carla stared in disbelief. “Charming.”

“Wendy, Wendy!” Sonny bounced over. “I mean, Wendell, Wendell! There’s a picture of you, I mean her-you!”

Wendy and Carla walked over to a board of wanted posters. There were ones of Augustus Fizzuras, King K. Rool, Marine the Raccoon, Mandy McKenzie, and Wendy herself. “As citizens of our fair world, it is everyone’s duty to report any sightings of these criminals.” The nearby speaker spoke.
“Any help in capturing these dangerous felons is greatly appreciated, and your lives will be less worrisome. Simply reporting the criminals will earn you rewards; we know you humans of average strength will never last one second against such monsters.”

“If he’s talking about me, too, I guess I should feel honored.” Wendy said.

“However, the girl with the red eyes is more annoying than she is monstrous. There is a difference.”

“Well, that’s discouraging.” Wendy drooped.

“You’re not planning to hunt any of these guys, are you?” a boy’s voice asked.

“GYAH!” Wendy leapt and whipped around. A familiar boy with dark purple hair and an open vest was behind her. “Romeo- I mean… Boy I’ve Never Seen!”

“Uh…” Romeo stared at her weirdly. “Have we met?”

“N-No… I…I’m new in town.” She said in her guy voice.

“Me too.” he replied with a grin. “My school organized a sort of study trip, and I always wanted to come here, so…”

“I’m here to study, too. I heard the arena has magical creatures. Is that true?”

“Not so much as ‘magic’ creatures, but creatures that… normal humans wouldn’t see on a day-to-day basis. Hehe, I just wanna see ‘em beat each other up!” Romeo snickered. “Um… Say, you do look kind of familiar. You sure we haven’t met?”

“N-No, I…I’ve never seen you anywhere.”

“Oh, well maybe it’s just me. I’m Romeo.”

“I’m Wend…Wendell Berry. Y-Yeah. There isn’t anyone in the world with that name, hehe. Uh, did you wanna look at these?” She stepped away from the posters.

“Oh, I was just a little curious.” Romeo approached and skimmed the posters. “It’s not like I plan to hunt…” One poster caught his attention. He took down Wendy’s. “Hold on, I know this girl. Didn’t I meet her…”

“S-Sorry, I gotta be someplace.” Wendy said quickly. “See you later!” She walked away, and Romeo stared after her curiously.

“Sigh… I hate being wanted.” The girl sighed sadly. “Er, I mean, I hate being wanted this way… Wait, Carla? W-Where’d you…”

“I’m over here.” The kitten was behind the trashcan near the candy shop. “I figured that boy would recognize you if I were around.”

“Good point. Well, let’s check out this shop.”

The shelves inside the colorful store were lined with yummy chocolates, lollipops, and candies Wendy has never seen. The glass shelves at the counter had cupcakes and pies that made her eyes light up. “Oooooohhh…” She pressed her face to a glass case on the counter, her mouth watering. It had a cupcake twice as large, which was sky blue with golden icing. “So tastyyyy…”
“Do you even have money?” Carla asked.

“Mr. Facilier lends me his daily profits. I save a lot. Excuse me;” She looked over the empty counter, “does anyone run this store?”

“I do, of course!” A small fairy flew up on the counter, with blue hair, a blue tuxedo, and adorable red eyes. “My name’s Sally, the Salesman Sugar Fairy!”

“A Sugar Fairy?” Wendy asked, adored by her cute appearance. “You really own this store?”

“I do, of course! I may be small, but I do business! That’s why I wear a suit. I need to make big money, so I can live in this big big world!”

“You’re so cute!” Wendy flushed and folded her hands. “I’ll be happy to give you my money! How much is this cupcake?”

“Two million moneys!”

“Ehh…” Wendy felt her relatively empty pockets.

“Tee hee hee! That’s why I mostly use it to attract customers. ’Course, if you wanted to buy it, now is your time. We’re shipping it somewhere else!”

“I’m sorry… I don’t have enough. Does your store sell ice cream?”

“Why, of course! Would you like Flutternut, Burpleberry, or Sunny ’Light?”

“They all sound so adorable! I’ll take them all!”

“I think I should handle the money.” Carla said. “Perhaps just Sunny ’Light.”

The duo exited the restaurant, both licking orange ice cream that lit in the sun and gave them a delightful sensation. “For a city that’s government-protected, it doesn’t actually seem that scary.” Wendy commented.

“I agree. Although, in spite of the fact they’re hunting you, I can’t specifically name anything that would make them ‘scary.’ Even a worldwide government with secret intentions would want to keep its citizens happy. Just look at all of them. Families and friends, buying and eating treats… In my best opinion, if a government wanted to have supreme order and rule, the best way to do that would be to allow its people to live happily and with no apparent turmoil.”

“So, even if this city looks happy, there’s actually a hidden sadness… Is that what you’re trying to say?”

“Mmm hm… Of course, my knowledge is only based on cheap science-fiction. If a town like this had anything that could be interpreted as remotely sad, what do you think it would be?”

“Mmmm… uhhh…” Wendy looked around the lively and colorful city. She felt that Carla was implying the answer was obvious. After a few seconds, her eyes focused on one building. “The Glitz Pit? Y-Yeah, that would make sense.” Wendy quickly formed the pieces in her mind. “People come here to watch people and creatures fight. Do you think some of those fighters feel good about this? Like, if they’re forced to fight?”

“Very good. Now our good doctor is trying to get us seats.” Carla turned to face the arena. “Don’t you find any of this a bit suspicious?"

“What’re you talking about?”

“I mean Mister Facilier. First, he took us to Orchid Bay, a town in which half of the population was shrouded under a Veil. The citizens were blindly living happy lives, unaware that monsters walked alongside them. In the end, just look at what happened.”

“But Carla, that was all an accident.” Wendy stated, still feeling guilty about the events. “And plus, most of those monsters weren’t evil. They were just afraid of being judged.”

“My point is, Wendy, if our theory about the arena is correct, then this town has its own shroud of fake happiness. So I find it suspicious that Facilier would want to take us to these places. I have a feeling that what happened in Orchid Bay wasn’t completely an accident.”

“Are you saying he planned for all that? But Carla, that’s crazy!” Wendy flailed her arms to imply her logic, causing a few droplets to fall from her ice cream. “You would have to suggest Facilier knew Gruntilda was going to show up, and she’s the reason the Veil tore down!”

“I know, it all sounds weird to me too, but what if at the end of this day, Glitzville goes falling from the sky?”

“You’re being ridiculous!” She stomped her foot. “Mister Facilier is nice to me, and he would never trick me into doing something like that! I don’t think he had any idea what would’ve happened in Orchid Bay, as much as I did!”

“How could you not be even a little suspicious of him, Child? Apparently, he let you run around aimlessly for 11 years, but decided to ‘adopt’ you out of the blue. If I were him, I would’ve taken you in my home instantly.”

“I know that, but…but he told me it was part of my dad’s plan! And if it all went well, I would get to meet him, and my mom, too!”

“I wouldn’t give 10 whiskers about some plan, because I would be a bit more furious at them for putting me through all that!”

“Ngh…” Wendy bit her lower lip. She looked away. “I don’t wanna talk about this. I trust Mr. Facilier…”

“Hey Wendell, hey Carl!” Sonny and Donna skipped over. “(We gave you a name too, Car!) We bought these hotdogs with super-spicy hotsauce!” Sonny held both delicacies.

“I got balloons and a Rawk Hawk mask!” Donna was wearing a mask of a yellow bird man, with big golden hair.

“This town’s so happy and awesome, we don’t ever wanna leave!”

“And when we see people beat each other up, we’ll love it even more!”

“WHAT COULD GO WRONG?” both twins chorused.

“What, indeed.” Carla made a sweatdrop. “We still have 40 minutes to kill until we need to go meet Facilier. What do you kids want to do?”

“I know! Let’s have some Alan Rickman Rickflakes!” Donna held up a cereal box, depicting the dark-faced actor with a bowl of gray cereal. “Part of a healthy, though yucky breakfast!”

Commercial

Alan Rickman sat on a table beside his self-named cereal. His expression was grim, as was his tone. “Buy my new… Alan Rickman Rickflakes. They will fill your mornings with grain, and morbid delight. …Professor Snape…” There was an eerie pause in his voice, “commands… it…”

Glitz Pit

Dr. Facilier was sitting in the stadium’s lobby. Crowds of people were piling in, excited to watch the brawls, there were guards in tuxedos patrolling, and cameramen snapping pictures of fighters who were on break. With all this activity, nobody paid mind to the suspicious witch-doctor who appeared to be grasping his knees in an impatient fashion. A brown-haired woman with black goggles and mechanical pants appeared and sat beside him.

“There you are.” The doctor said. “Now, before I go through with this, he said you wanted to run the plan with me real quick.”

“That’s right.” The woman nodded. “Here.” She gave him a blank paper.

Facilier tapped his wand to the paper and said, “Aparecium.” Words appeared on the paper. Facilier quickly skimmed the instructions. “How’d y’all manage to figure all this out?”

“Inside connections.” The woman stood up. “Just sign her up for the contest, and the rest will work itself out.”

“Whoa whoa whoa.” Facilier stood up and gestured a wait. “Couple things I ain’t see… One, how you expect her to win, and two, you honestly see NOTHIN’ going wrong with this?”

“I trust his intuition.” The woman walked away. “He’s never been wrong before.”

“…Sigh…” Facilier released a breath through his nose. “This comin’ from the girl who got tricked by him on numerous occasions.”

Negaverse

“Haaaaaaaaahhh!” Sipa’s eyes sparkled with purest delight. “I… I never thought… that I would have the honor of standing before one of the Six Demon Saints!” The Satanist bowed before Medusa, who still inhabited Nerehc’s body. “Lady Medusa, if you desired a vessel, my body would’ve been all but yours!”

“It’s all right, this one felt more available.” Medusa smiled passively. “His head’s a little empty right now. It’s a pleasure to meet you, Sipa. Any person who follows the dark arts is a good friend to me.”

“Oh, the pleasure is all mine.” Sipa blushed, standing back up. “But I feel I don’t deserve it, considering… Well, I’ve kinda been slumping a lot.”

“Slumping, you say?” Medusa cocked a brow.

“Well, I... A while back, my Devil’s Wand was stolen from me by this other wizard. He showed me visions of… some things I did with it. For some reason, I was really afraid, because… dooming my soul to eternal damnation… didn’t look as great as I thought it would. I... I didn’t know what I expected it to look like. All I ever thought about was serving Satan and torching my own soul… I “Don’t understand why I began to feel differently.”

“Hmm…” Medusa looked at the body she was possessing. Whatever force was causing everyone to forget Nerehc was affecting his girlfriend, too. Medusa needed to seize the chance. “A Devil’s Wand… It’s a rare sight for a child to wield such an item. How did a weapon with so dark a core choose you?”

“I got it for my -5th birthday. It was after my grandfather conducted a dark ritual where… he took a small piece of my soul and gave it to a demon called Lucifer. Then, Lucifer gave me a piece of him in return. That’s how my magic abilities developed.”

“So, you are acquainted with Lucifer.” Medusa said with a perceptive tone. “Then it was convenient that we found you. Hm… Old Black Feathers always loved children. He found their souls to be most delicious, especially when consumed with despair. You see, we are actually trying to locate Lucifer. If you share his essence, then perhaps you can help us find him in Posiverse Mexico.”

“The Posiverse? Well, I would be happy to serve you, Lady Medusa!” Sipa smiled brightly. “But why do you wish to find him?”

This question brought another one to Medusa’s mind. “Sipa… do you know what’s going to happen this month?”

“Uh… Something’s going to happen?”

She doesn’t remember that, either. Perhaps because Nerehc told everyone… “Never mind. We’ll get into the details as soon as we locate Lucy.”

“Yaaaaaawn.” Ragus made a yawn, but her tone and expression maintained that quiet, still vibrance. “I apologize, Lady Medusa, but I feel weary. I wish to rest and visit my toys in the Dream World.”

“You’re dismissed, Ragus. Thanatos, carry her.”

“Why am I her piggy ride?” the fat god asked as Ragus lay on her back and closed her eyes, still smiling.

“Because you are a pig.” Pandora remarked emotionlessly. “That’s the end of the sentence.”

“Oh, fine.” Thanatos picked the child up off the ground and put her over his back. “If I was in my normal form, I could just become a luxury train.”

“We’ll take Nerehc’s DNK ship he used to fly here.” Medusa decided. “I don’t think his Dark Portal could cross to the Posiverse. Sipa, we’ll rely on you for that once we make it to Ocixem.”

Night Castle

Nerehc’s new penguin friend didn’t remember his own name, so Nerehc decided to call him Pennington. Still, he remembered a lot more than Nerehc did; the boy wasn’t sure of his own name, nor anything else. He hoped Ragus would have answers for him.

Pennington led him to the castle’s grand bedroom, where a girl was asleep on a bed with green curtains. The blanket was a night sky with stars, complimenting for Ragus’s dress. “That’s her.” Nerehc knew on instinct. “Can we wake her up?”
“Not like this. She must sleep in the real world.”

Nerehc approached and moved the curtain aside to have a better view of her. Ragus’s purple eyes came open, and she sat up at a 90° angle. “Hello, visitors!”

Nerehc jumped back, startled by her sudden waking. “Ragus?”

“Oh, my new toy! You’re the one Lady Medusa describes.” Ragus kicked off her bed, her bare feet hitting the checkered floor. She approached him with her creepy smile. “Nerehc…”

“Nerehc? Is that my name?”

“That’s what Lady Medusa calls you. But I have no idea who you are, ‘Nerehc.’”

“You don’t know who I am? Do you know anything about me?”

“No, I do not. Which is funny, because I knew plenty about my toys before I decided to make them what they are. After a short time being here, they begin to forget who they are themselves. Like Mr. Penguin.” Ragus gestured at the stuffed British bird. “I have no idea who he is. It doesn’t matter to me, though. As long as they’re soft and snuggly enough to hug to sleep every night!” She hugged herself and swayed happily. “You’re especially peculiar, because I forgot you right away. I can only guess something happened to your Positive.”

“My Positive? What do you mean by that?”

“Hmm… I don’t remember that, either. I lose track of things when I have fun.”

Nerehc looked at Pennington, then back to Ragus. “Why do you do this to people, anyway?”

“It happened 12 years ago… Our house got set on fire and burned me to death. Father was so upset that he made a lifeless doll out of my remains. He pleaded the gods to give his baby girl back. Only Lady Medusa listened. She collected my soul and put me back in this unaging body. Then I became a spiritbender. I’m not sad, anymore. I don’t feel pain. I thought other people would like this feeling, too. Do you like being happy, Nerehc?” Her head slanted.

“I’m not happy, I’m confused! I don’t know who I am, where I come from, what I do…”

“Then… do you need… to know these things?” Ragus approached him slowly. “Nerehc… do you know what being ‘confused’ means?”

“I…” Nerehc touched his forehead. He remembered nothing about himself… In fact, he wasn’t sure what anything was. He never noticed… how soft his head felt. He didn’t know what the word ‘soft’ meant, the word just came up.

“Whoever you were… Nerehc… then forget about… Nerehc…” Ragus stood two inches from him. His mind only focused on her soft voice. His eyes were turning dull. “Living without sadness or conflict… is bliss… The only way to forget it all… is to forget yourself. Let your mind… and body… gray…”

Nerehc’s body morphed into a wooden stick puppet that collapsed on the floor. Ragus picked it up by the arms to look at the head’s two holes. “Aww… I expected something… fluffier. I guess… he really remembers… nothing. I could always sew a body on him. I wonder what he should be? A monkey? A platypus? Maybe I’ll… improvise.”

Bay cave near Cinnamon Jungle
“Ugh…” Stewie finally woke up, but the pain from using his Hulk form was still apparent. He noticed the small lake of ocean water that was shaking from the storm outside. They were inside a cave, very damp and dark. He then looked to the back of the cave: Augustus was rubbing a giant crocodile’s tummy, Rallo was cleaning his toes, and Maggie was scrubbing his teeth. “We’re sex slaves now, aren’t we?”

While the other three were performing these chores, Princess Aisling was standing on a platform and smiling at their progress. “Errrrgh! You said you had a plan to get us outta here with this guy!” Augustus yelled impatiently. “Why are we suddenly his servants?!”

“Honestly, humans are so selfish.” Aisling folded her arms. “This poor animal has endured horrible trauma in the past. Being forced to do things he never wanted to, I could feel all that anguish in his heart! You just made him a part of your crew. If you want to attempt to be a decent captain, you need to grow close with your crew. Mold your hearts and dreams into one. Understand them.”

Augustus looked at Stewie, remembering their conversation in the jungle. He remembered snuggling with the three children like a big brother protecting them from nightmares. “My whole crew is a babysitting service.” He sighed with exhaust. “So, Kuh…Lumsy.” He wasn’t sure which way to pronounce his name. “Are you feeling better?”

“Yeah ‘kay okay okay.” Augustus didn’t wanna hear it out loud. “What did K. Rool make you do, anyway? You seemed pretty upset about working for them.”

“I was big giant croc from big giant land. I go down to little people land and make friends. They’re so cuuuute. But den dey got scared of me, and be’d mean to me, and dey hurt me, and den, sniff, boo hoo hoo hooooooo!”

K. Lumsy put hands over his sobbing eyes, and his shaking caused Augustus to lose balance and fall on his back on the giant’s belly. “(Honestly, I wanna feel sympathy for this guy, but it’s hard to.)” Augustus said to himself.

K. Lumsy sniffled before speaking again. “Den K. Rool came and said I could join his Krew. I dought he wanted to make friends, but he dust wanted be to be mean. I didn’t want to be mean, so he be’d mean to me. Why is everybody so meeeaaan?”

Why do YOU have a particular choice in letters? Augustus thought to himself. The captain got on his hands and knees to feel more stable on the croc’s belly. “Klumsy, I can tell you’re a big softy who doesn’t really like violence or hurting people. I said that I wouldn’t make you fight, and even though I was in kind of a rush, I don’t wanna go back on that. But I need my crew to be at their very best. I need you to be strong, not just to fight for us, but to protect us.”

“Bud I…I scared! I don’t like people being mean to me. I don’t wike being mean to people…”

“Sigh, I don’t know what to tell you, Big Guy.” Augustus took out his dried lollipop and threw it away. “But here’s how I look at it: if people push you around, sometimes you gotta push back. You might live by that moral with ‘Sticks and Stones’, and something about words, you might be proud of who you are and choose to show restraint… but sooner or later, you need to fight. If it’s to defend yourself or to defend your friends, you aren’t a bad guy for choosing to fight. Pacifists may act like they’re pure of heart, but often times, they get their selves killed for being what they are. You don’t have to like fighting, but it doesn’t mean you can avoid it.”
“But... But dou said.”

“I said that I wouldn’t make you fight, and I won’t. You have to choose to fight yourself. The best thing I can do for you as captain is let you choose.”

“Bud I... I awaid to fight... If I don’t fight... will you be mean to be?”

I would hate to see your dialogue written out. Augustus thought. “No, I’m not going to be mean to you. I might yell orders or get mad at you, but I ain’t gonna be cruel like those K. Rool fools. So are you willing to fight to protect your new friends?”

“New... fwiends...” K. Lumsy sat his head up to face the little captain on his belly. “I wike... new fwiends...”

Augustus pulled out a lollipop, unwrapped it, and held it out to K. Lumsy. “New friends get lollipops. You want one?”

The giant reptile stared adorably at the little sweet. Augustus figured a big baby like him would love these things. He tossed the candy, which Klumsy gomped into his mouth.

They heard small splashing sounds, and Stewie was the first to see the robotic fish leaping out of the water. “Guys, we have trouble!” Stewie whipped out a ray gun and began shooting.

“Crud, they musta found us.” Augustus jumped off Klumsy and began chucking his Gobstopper at the robots, while Rallo boomed his stereos. “Fairy Brat, now would be a great time to do this plan o’ yours!”

Aisling jumped onto K. Lumsy’s belly and faced the croc. “I’m a little weak on magic as I am, Mr. Lumsy, so in order for this to work, I need your word that you will protect us with all of your willpower.”

“By new friends are nice to be... K. Lumsy won’t let meanies hurt them...”

“Wonderful.” Aisling reached behind her and grabbed a book that was stuck to her back, and otherwise hidden by her long white hair. Aisling sat on the giant’s belly and read a passage from Kells’ Book of Spells. “The young cub hides... in his cave from the dark... When the sun comes, the li...on... roars...” Aisling shone with an energy that flowed into K. Lumsy. The giant felt power coursing through his veins. “Though the Earth’s rage doth burn, all the land, green, and bark... The waves can’t... push... yon... is...land’s... shore...”

Outside, the Silver Bullet was standing on the cliff of the bay, withstand the storm. “Captain.” She spoke to her communicator. “My Aqua Drones found them inside a secret cave, just around the northern point.”

“Excellent work, me wee Penny. By the time this storm clears, we’ll be the first crew ter nab them!”

“If we could get the sub ready, I’ll be happy to catch them myself. They don’t seem to have any... Wait.” She looked at the screen on her wristwatch, taken from one of the Aqua Drones. “It looks like they’re doing something. What kind of...”

Silver Bullet looked at the side of the bay where they were hidden. Suddenly, something burst out of the sea and began speeding across the surface like a speedboat, against the storms. K. Lumsy had gained a sudden boost in strength, and his arms moved like propellers as he swam. The four Marzipans held tight to his back, while Aisling squatted on the back of his head and faced forward. with an excited smile. Her long white hair blew like a cape behind her. “Against the raging sea and unforgiving winds, find your true strength, noble beast!” the fairy declared.

“I have to admit, this is pretty awesome!” Augustus pushed up on all fours for a better view of the stormy horizon. The lightning glinted off his sunglasses. “You really think we can make it like this?”

“It will not be far, now!” Aisling yelled confidently. “Soon, we will reach the home of the Sugar Fairies! The Sugar Fairy Kingdom, where the Sugar Fairy Princess dwells! The Sugar Deserts!”

Through a hole in the clouds above, their movements were seen by an Aeralfos. This Aeralfos was perched on one of many giant, metal blimps in the sky. The winged monster flew into the captain’s quarters. “Your Highness, the Marzipan Pirates have begun to move. Should we signal Captain Mandy?”

“No.” The woman said. She was clad in black armor, had long and messy black hair, and wore a nightmarish smirk. “I like my prey when it’s good and warm. We’ll chase them ourselves. And wherever they plan to hide, we’ll burn it to the ground.”

Captain of the Boogey Pirates’ Flame Division
Mandy’s spiritual sister
“The Blue Demolisher” AZULA

Glitzville

After the hour had passed, Wendy, Carla, and the Ice Climbers were on their way to the Glitz Pit. They merged with the crowds coming and going, and Jessie, James, and Meowth kept their sights on the purple-haired “boy” who was with the winged cat, clad in fashionable disguises.

“Today’s battles in the Glitz Pit are brought to you by Fegan Floop, the host of popular children’s show, Floop’s Fooglies!” There was a screen that depicted a colorful, dizzying dimension where creatures of odd appearances were dancing on flying balls. The camera zoomed up to the show’s host, a man with standing brown hair, wearing a patterned shirt under a red robe. The edges of the robe were yellow with red leaf designs. “Saturday mornings on Cartoon Network Real, from 9am to 12pm!”

“Mister Facilier!” Wendy spotted the tall doctor in the hat and ran over. Facilier turned and greeted the girl happily.

“Wendell! There’s my gir- uh, boy! I’m glad you could make it, ’cause have I got a surprise for you!”

“Really? What is it?” Wendy was excited.

“Well, you know I told y’all we would be watching the fights to study the magic creatures, right?”

“Uh…” Wendy glanced at Carla briefly, “Yeah?”

“Well, I mighta left out a little bitty detail.” Facilier grinned, as though eager to deliver this news. “You will not only study them, but you will do so up close and personal. You see-”

“Is DIS the boy named Wendell Berry?” A security guard marched up and asked.

“Yes, Sir, this is the Wendell Berry I mentioned.”
“Great. Then follow me, Kid.” The guard gestured back with his thumb. “Once you’re set up in da locker room, we’ll getchor first match set up.”

“SAY WHAT?!” Wendy panicked. (“Beg your pardon?!” followed Carla.)

“You’re a professional fighter now!” Facilier cheered. “Congratulations!”

“We’ll bet everything on the other guy!” the twins chorused.

A dirty building in Miracle City

In a hotel that was as run-down as this, you would be surprised even a single mirror was still in one piece. This very mirror was used as the portal for Sipa, Medusa, and her cohorts to climb into the Posiverse. Thanatos had trouble squeezing his fat body through, then he reached in to grab the still-slumbering Ragus.

“It took forever to find an active mirror in Disaster City.” Sipa moaned. “Which is ironically one of the most beautiful cities in the Negaverse. Are you sure the gods wouldn’t notice us like this?”

“There’s a reason this city is called ‘God’s Blind Spot.’” Medusa remarked. “There’s too much negative energy here. Alright, Sipa… help us locate Lucifer.”

Sipa held her Devil’s Wand with both hands and took a breath. “Point Me Lucifer.” Instantly, the wand thrust to her right.

The group left the building and followed the wand’s direction out of the city. The sky was red as the burning sun set. They walked for miles across the desert sand, sweating under the heat. Thanatos tugged on Eigaoh’s clothes, which felt stuck to his skin. “I bet now you expect me to make some ‘spatula’ joke.”

“Yes, but since you’re inhabiting the Negative, I expect you to actually make it good.” Pandora remarked. “Medusa, are you really sure about trusting this little twerp?”

“She has a Devil’s Wand.” Medusa reminded. “It was crafted by demons and only listens to wizards who made connections with demons. I know only one other person who possesses one and is still alive. But he probably won’t be willing to help us. Sipa, however, she’s very cooperative. Isn’t she?”

“I sure am, Lady Medusa!” Sipa turned to them with a big smile. After facing forward, she frowned, feeling more nervous as they drew closer.

After the sun went down, they went from hot to chilly. The clothes soaked from sweat didn’t contribute to this. The gods didn’t like being human at all. Eventually, the Devil’s Wand led them to a cave inside a huge rock that looked like a small mountain. It was dark, but Sipa didn’t bother lighting it with her magic. Instead, the girl got to her knees, placed the wand horizontally on the ground before her, and folded her hands. “O Angel of the Black Wing, the one banished by God… I beseech thee, allow us to speak to you.”

The cave turned so black, even the entrance was invisible. A pair of red eyes appeared on a black mass, whose body was only implied by purple streaks. Lucifer spoke in a dark voice. “You better not be here to make fun of me, Medusa.”

Someone’s sensitive. :P So if anyone hasn’t heard the news, Alan Rickman died last week.
That little bit was a tribute to him (you’ll notice cameos of other late actors in this story). I was fond of him in Harry Potter. He died of cancer like my dad did, so I guess I kind of relate… Anyway, you remember Azula from Avatar: Last Airbender; who isn’t surprised she would make friends with Mandy? Glitzville is from Paper Mario TTYD, and the main story will have a lot of places from that game. Next time, the Glitz Pit.
Chapter Summary

Wendy meets a new friend in the Glitz Pit. (OPTIONAL CHAPTER.)

I kinda keep forgetting to say which Main Story chapters these Side Stories go by. Oh well, it doesn’t matter unless you’re just now reading this series. In which case, I advise new readers to read these on deviantART, because all the chapters are posted in the exact order. This one’s by Chapter 14. :P

Chapter B-9: The Sky Sisters

Lucifer’s cave

“You’re one for pleasant greetings, Lucy.” Medusa remarked. “Still feeling sour about You-Know-Who?”

“I was not pleased to be cast into your shadow, Medusa.” The black mass that was Lucifer spoke with malice. “When Malladus, that wretched usurper, scolded me for my failure… I felt utter disrespect. I felt less than demon. I wanted to crush him. I wanted to crush Uncle Malladus in my own two hands. Why did he find love and I could not?!”

Lucifer began panting. The three gods could feel the emotion in his voice. “I can’t get over it. I still want her. I still love her. I still love… ELLEN WICKENS! I am a disgrace to my kind to love a mortal! But I cannot abandon these feelings. I cannot stomach mortals who feel love for other mortals. I want a mortal to love me! If I were loved like Malladus was loved… I could become more fierce.”

Sipa was still bowing on the floor. Medusa surmised that, being in the presence of such a great demon, she was in no position to speak. She would be on the floor like the lowly human she is, and let the two Demon Saints speak. Medusa walked closer to the evil spirit. “But Lucy, you did crush Malladus. If it wasn’t for your rambling about Ellen, Malladus never would’ve chosen to fall in love with a mortal. Malladus doomed himself when he transferred his own life force to his descendants. It is because of you the Uno Family exists!”

“That doesn’t please me! It is only Malladus, scattered into tiny pieces. But I do not care for him. He is not the one…”

“We know that. We know who the one is. Because we want him too, Lucy.”

Lucifer looked at the possessed boy with inquiry and hatred. Medusa smirked and stepped closer. “We need the Six Demon Saints to rescue him from the Sanzu River. He’s one of the Thirteen Darknesses. You know who I’m talking about, don’t you? The Devil Reincarnate himself. Ganondorf Dragmire!”

There was a reaction in his eyes. “Ganondorf… I’ve spent many a year with that man’s crotch on my back. The only reason I served him was because I felt my father’s presence inside him. I thought, if I served him, I would get to see my father, Lord Satan, again. And the only reason I wanted to see him… was so I could DESTROY him! I, Lucifer, the King of Black Magic, would be Emperor of Hell.”

“But Grim Reaper is the king now.” Pandora mentioned. “Why don’t you crush him?”

“Because… he is stronger than me. He destroys my kind... Hollows and Arrancar. Even now, I struggle to hide from the Spirit Kids Next Door. The only one who could destroy him… is Satan. Yes, I do wish to rescue Ganondorf. But I wish to destroy him after. I cannot do that in this state… I need to appear stronger before him. I want love… I want to be... MARRIED.”

The statement took Medusa by surprise. She looked at the girl who was still bowing. “Married? Then… Sipa will do.”

Sipa gasped, her head flying back up as her eyes showed terrific shock. “L-Lady Medusa…”

“Yes, she is a perfect match. And a very devout Satanist. You would love to be wed to one of the Royal Demon Saints. You even have part of each other’s soul.”

“Huuur, yes… She does…” Sipa felt a chill in her spine when Lucifer touched a single, sharp finger to her gently. “A soul... so dismantled and poisoned... Perhaps it is what I needed... all along... Feelings of hatred... and LOVE...”

“W-Well, it… does sound wonderful.” Sipa stuttered, forcing a smile. “But my love is for Satan! I couldn’t betray…”

“The only way you will be able to see Satan…” Sipa looked up at Medusa, “would be to do what he says. Besides, a kind of two-sided love like this is what our Bad Lord would want.”

“Yes… I cannot possess a human vessel, unless we are joined in unholy matrimony. Allow yourself to be mine… Give your love to me, Sipa… and we will both get to see Lord Satan again. Isn’t this... what you wanted?”

Sipa felt the darkness around her grow. She was swallowed in despair… and didn’t know why. I was raised to love… no one but Lord Satan. I burned my soul and many others... all for his sake. I loved nobody else. So why... do I feel this way? Why am I so afraid to speak his name? Why am I afraid... to be near these people? These... demons?

“Sipa…” A hand touched her shoulder. Sipa looked up into the eyes of that boy. Those snake green eyes… of the boy whom Medusa was possessing. “Marry Lucifer for us… For everything that is the Demon Realm… you will want to do this.”

Maybe these feelings were what Sipa was seeking. Her mind a haze, fear shrouding her heart… these were what she gained from serving Satan. This was the path she wanted. She should follow it… to the end. “Yes. I do…” She looked up at the black demon. “I will marry you, Lucifer.”

“I get to design the bridal dress!” Thanatos raised his hand eagerly. “I don’t know if you know, but I make beautiful bridal dresses.”

“The wedding shall take place tomorrow at negative noon.” Medusa said. “And as for a location…” She looked at Nerehe’s right hand. “I believe this amnesia epidemic can work to our advantage.”

Glitzville; Glitz Pit

“So here’s how it’s gonna go down.” The security guard said to Wendy in a filthy locker room.
“Youse gonna wait for dem to call you, den you gonna go out in da ring, and beat ’em up. Youse got that?”

“NO we don’t got it!” Carla shouted insistently. “We never signed up for this thing!”

“Looks, I don’t makes da rules. I don’t got control over who signs up whom. But youse name gots put on da paper, so someone has ta fight. It’s no sweats, ’cause you can use whatever methods ya like. Well, you’re probably gettin’ tired of my typical tough guy talk, though I should let you know my vocabulary is above average. Before I goes, Mr. Fancy-Hat gives me this card for you.” He handed Wendy a folded paper. “Catches ya later, Pally.” The guard left.

Wendy unfolded the paper to find a list. “‘Good offensive spells: Reducto (explosions)… Stupefy (stuns)… Titillandooooo’…” Wendy moaned unconventionally and wept. “Why did Mister Facilier sign me up for this?”

“Now do you see what I mean?” the kitten asked. “This man is beyond trustful! Entering you in a fighting contest behind your back. You could barely stand your ground against Juniper Lee!”

“I know! But…” Wendy took out her Lamia Scale wand. “I did learn a few new tricks. Maybe he’s trying to teach me more. But I dunno what any of these people are like!” Wendy slouched on her knees in a frightful manner. “Oh, I’m going to get clobbered!”

“You don’t have to fight. Just stay in this room and you’ll forfeit.”

Wendy was on the verge of doing that… but then she remembered June. She remembered locking fists with the strong opponent. She remembered combining her airbending, magic, and her strength. “…I won’t.”

“There’s no shame behind that, Child.” Carla said agreeably. “You didn’t sign up for this, so you should choose.”

“No. I meant I won’t forfeit.”

“You… What?” The kitten was taken aback.

Wendy grasped the rose quartz wand and looked proudly. “I want to try. Mr. Facilier signed me up for this… and I trust him.”

The arena

The arena’s interior was a mix of beige and orange, and the outer walls were designed in a brick style. Hundreds were gathered around the rectangular stage. There were spotlights shining on it and three huge televisions around the chamber. Dr. Facilier and the Ice Climbers had a great view from the top seats, and Romeo chose to see the fights up close. Jessie, James, and Meowth sat suspiciously close to the side doors where the fighters would enter.

“Ladies and gentlemen!” A hatch opened up on the stage’s center. “The host of today’s events! Bringing you this top-quality family entertainment, famous star of children’s television show, Floop’s Fooglies… Fegaaaaan FLOOP!”

The man with standing brown hair, wearing a shiny leather red robe over a patterned shirt, emerged from the stage on a floating pink ball with a smiley face. He had a frantic expression, flailing his arms as his feet tried to stay balanced on the ball. It floated halfway up the chamber before he finally took the plummet, smashing facefirst against the stadium floor. His body flattened as he bounced back on his feet. He puffed himself up by kissing his thumb and blowing air back into himself. “Boy, that was a Floop!”

“HAHAHAHAHAHAHA!” The stadium roared with laughter, except from the more mature audience members.

“Thank you, thank you all for coming!” Floop began energetically. “So wonderful to have so many people in my WONDERFUL arena! Oh, what a wonderful show we have today, we’ve got so many competitors, I think you’ll LOVE ’em! And I know they’re so EXCITED to battle, so is EVERYONE READY?”

“YEEEEAAAHH!”

“Our contestants will score big money for their performance in the contest. The farther they get, the wealthier they will be. And we have a special prize for the person to win the top place: an all expense paid trip to MY domain, where ALL the magic happens, Foogly Palace! Now, let’s introduce our first combatants!

“ENTERING from the red door!” Floop pointed with gusto. “He packs a wallop, he IS a wallop, he’s Wally the Wallmaster!” The red door opened, and a giant brown hand with pointy fingers walked in on said fingers. “AGAINST the King of Arm-Wrestling, he takes ambidextrous to a whole new level, it’s Lefty ‘The Righty’ Left-Right!” The person entering the blue door was a yellow-skinned man, bald with a gray mustache, and wearing a black tank-top over his muscles. “LET’S get READY to RUMBLLLLLE!” Floop whipped out a mechanical rod that extracted a propeller, then hovered away.

The Wallmaster turned green and flew at the arm-wrestler, who used both his left and right hands to push back. The hand monster’s defense lowered, so Lefty flipped it on its back, then crushed the Wallmaster under his left elbow. Wally managed to flick Lefty off before leaping to the ceiling. Lefty couldn’t see him with the spotlights shining in his eyes, but he looked at the hand-shaped shadow on the floor. When it grew bigger, Lefty dodged Wally’s drop attack. He grabbed the hand monster and wrestled with him.

In their locker room, Wendy and Carla watched the fight display on their own TV screen. “Would Mr. Facilier want me to take notes now?” the girl asked.

“Yes, the sight before my eyes is very educative.” the kitten said with sarcasm.

“So, Wallmasters can harden their skin…” Wendy scribbled on a notepad, her eyes directing at the screen every few seconds. “And they specialize in ceiling drops… Wow, I am learning a lot!”

A guard barged in. “Hey, Wendells. Youse is up next up, Ponytail. Looks likes Lefty’s gonna be your square.”

“Oh, boy. Ahem, wish me luck, Carla.” she said in her guy voice.

Lefty “The Righty” succeeded in defeating the right-handed hand monster. Wally left the arena mopingly while Lefty was cheering. “That was a beautiful display of hands-to-hand combat!” Floop said spiritedly. “But let’s hope Lefty still has arm power to spare! Because his next match is up against…” Floop looked at his list. His expression turned to confusion. “Someone a little last-minute… he’s apparently a young wizard, and I do not recall anyone with his name ever existing anywhere… WENDELL BERRY!”

Murmurs of confusion rang throughout the stadium when the purple-haired, ponytailed boy ran in from the red door. Facilier and the twins were the only ones cheering, and the Team Rocket trio grinned deviously. “It’s that guy…” Romeo said quietly. “He was a fighter all along?”

Wendy eagerly jogged up the two steps leading onto the ring—“Ahhh!” her foot hit the final step as she fell facefirst on the ring.

“What a Floop!” The audience burst into laughter. Facilier and the twins winced at the embarrassing act.

Wendy scrambled to her feet, clutching her wand and fixing her scarf. She looked around blushingly at the laughing fans. “Uh… What a Floop!” She shrugged with a grin.

“HAHAHAHAHAHA!” The audience, including Facilier’s team, laughed insanely, and Floop himself was holding his chest, almost falling off of his floating platform. With the tension out of the air, Wendy faced her opponent. Lefty Left-Right held a Hulk glove in his left hand, a Thing glove in his right, and crushed them both as he growled at the child.

“Heheh…” Wendy flushed and scratched the back of her head. She spoke with her guy voice, “I know I made a show there, but I’m not necessarily here to fight. I only came here to study the fighters. So, with that said, could you go a bit easy on me?”

The baldheaded arm-wrestler stood more poised and held out his right hand. Wendy grinned, happily approaching him to shake his hand. Immediately, The Righty squeezed her extended hand and—“UH! UH! AH!” slammed Wendell back and forth on the floor. He then tossed the purple-haired to the other side of the ring.

Wendy got up on all fours and faced Lefty, who brushed both hands. Wendy took breaths to relieve the slight pain. What am I thinking… I’m doing this fight for you too, June. As long as you’re trapped in that city… I’ll do my best for both of us.

Lefty approached her slowly, so Wendy rolled forward and thrust her hands at him, pushing The Righty back with a gust of air. The wrestler fell out of the ring, and the audience shouted “OHHH!”

“Uhhh… I’m sorry!” Wendy flushed and scratched her head again. “I was told I can use any methods I liked.”

“Oh no, you can!” Floop nodded, smiling at the performance. “It’s just, getting knocked out of the ring isn’t a loss, you have to knock your opponent out.”

“Kn-Knock him out?” Lefty climbed back into the ring, snarling at the airbender before dashing forth. Wendell made a terrific weightless jump over the wrestler, and when Lefty whipped around, his left arm was extended. On instinct, Wendy threw her own left hand into it, but the wrestler used little strength in flipping her over and sliding her away. Wendell got on her fours, grabbing her wand and casting “Arms!” on her right arm. She jumped to her feet and glared fearlessly at the wrestler with that arm held up. Lefty accepted her challenge and grabbed it, and was surprised to see they were pushing with equal strength.

Wendy leaped, still clutching his hand, pulling it up with her as she flew over and caused him to punch himself in the face. Lefty tried to push himself up, but Wendy brought a burst of wind down on him and smashed him against the floor again. She kept her guard raised, expecting Lefty to get up, but he didn’t. “The winner is WENDELL BERRY!” Floop announced.

“YEEEEEAAAHH!” Team Facilier cheered.

“Ah ha ha… I just took a shot.” Wendell shrugged, making a sweatdrop.
“Our young adolescent has grabbed our attention, but will he keep it? His next battle, an Irken invader who conquered five planets in the Florae Galaxy, he’s lean, he’s mean, Invader Gagules!” A teenage Irken wearing magenta armor, accompanied by four small SIR Units flying with rockets, entered the arena.

“I wish us a good match!” Wendy told him assuredly.

“You are now Number 57 on my ‘Kill’ list.” Gagules stated.

The bell dinged, and Gagules’ first act was to form a bubble barrier around himself, using the SIRbots as generators. “Stupefy!” Wendy shot stun spells at the bubble, but it remained sturdy as the Irken pulled out a gun. “Protego!” Wendy whipped up a pink shield, which withstood against the electrical net the gun fired. “I thought a Lamia Scale could break defenses. What if I hit the robots…”

Wendell dropped her own shield and ran right around the Irken. As his body turned to her direction, the four SIRbots floated in a diagonal fashion around his body, so that Wendy could not directly face one. Wendy skidded to stop, then ran the opposite way, and she merely repeated this maneuver to try and get in front of a robot. However, she had to keep dodging his net, and Gagules was too close to the edge for Wendy to run fully around him.

When Wendy hesitated, Gagules shot the net, and Wendy gasped, barely dodging backward as she nearly lost balance on her heels. As she caught her breath, Wendy glanced up at the overhead spotlights. One of them was above Gagules, so Wendy aimed her wand and cast, “Spinneroo!” The screws of the spotlight detached as it fell on Gagules’ bubble, blinding him with the flash of electricity. Wendy got to one diagonal side of him and yelled, “Reducto!” to shoot a spell and destroy one of the SIRbots. The barrier disabled, so Gagules positioned his robots in a triangle fashion as they tried to shoot the girl. Wendy dodged them and- “Titillando!” blasted the Tickle Spell.

“HAHAHA, HAH HAHA, HAHAAHAHA!” The ex-invader fell on the floor cackling, drawing baffled looks from his robots. Wendy blew the robots away with her bending and knocked the Irken out with Stupefy.

“THE WINNER IS Wendell!” Floop announced; he was wearing a hat that had a miniature amusement park with a merry-go-round, roller coaster, and the like. “I see this boy has more under his scarf than we saw at first! For these next matches, we’re going to do some SLIGHT redecorating at the request of some of our next combatants. Entering from the blue door, they put rubber and fire to the road, give it up for the Rolly Bowlies!” The ones to enter were three Wheelies (Nightmares who were red-armored tires with exhaust pipes) and a GUN Rhino Metal, which was a short rectangular tank.

After Floop pulled a switch, the edges of the ring curved up into ramps, which led up narrow tracks that looped directly overhead. When the bell dinged, the Wheelies began to zoom up and around these loops, while the Rhino Metal rammed Wendy and knocked her down. Wendy cast a Protego to protect herself when it tried to ram again, and the shield also blocked the bullets the Wheelies were shooting from above. “Reducto!” Wendy’s blasting spell had no effect on the Rhino, so she decided to run and avoid it.

Tired of the Wheelies’ bullets, Wendy boosted to run up the loops herself, but the Wheelies managed to knock her off with their countered momentum. Wendy dodged the Rhino and recomposed, boosting up the loops again and performing a quick spin-kick on each Wheelie to take them out. Wendy took firm land on the floor and projected a shield before quickly skimming her cheat sheet. One of the spells was used to summon Tetramites, and though she didn’t know what those were, she decided to try it. “Tetrortia!” A swarm of ravenous little bugs came out of her wand and piled up on the Rhino, munching the metal tank until it was nothing. When the Tetramites turned their attention on Wendy, she quickly shot the counter-charm, “Tetranesca!” making all Tetramites poof into smoke.

“Up next, the masters of bounce, with possible relations to slinkies and rubber balls, the Boinkers make their appearance!” The loops around the arena retracted, and springs appeared around the ring’s edges, as well as midair. The enemies to appear were two Burts (small round, yellow creatures with red noses and blue shorts), three Sproing-Oings (neon-colored spring creatures with eyes), and two Spoinks (gray pig Pokémon with spring tails and pink orbs on their heads).

The Burts were bouncing around the side springs, the Sproing-Oings took the aerial springs, and the Spoinks chose to attack Wendy with Psybeams. Wendy whirled air around her right hand and cast “Repiti!” to keep a constant whirlwind going. She swung her Cyclone Fist to knock both Spoinks unconscious. She tried to shoot Stun Spells at the Burts, but the bouncing boys proved too evasive. Wendy decided to hop on the springs and bounce in the opposite direction they were going. When a Burt was mindlessly approaching her, Wendy thrust a foot down when it was underneath, knocking the Burt out with a stomp. She did the same to the other Burt.

With that, Wendy bounced up to the midair springs and tried to chase the Sproing-Oings. She had to maneuver her momentum so she could land against certain springs, and when she would fly to a Sproing-Oing, she had to react quick and throw a kick. The tedious objective and loud springy sounds rang in her ears for almost three minutes before she finally knocked them all out.

“Hoo, that one dragged on a little!” Floop spoke in his spritely manner; he was sitting on his own big bouncy ball. “But I think this junior wizard needs more of a challenge. Let’s bring in our next contestant, a never-before-seen creature who was discovered deep beneath the surface of Planet Avalar. His speech is limited, but please give a round of applause for the beast we have dubbed as ‘Jasper’!” Two guards were escorting a huge, orange creature with big whiter orange hair. It crawled on all fours like a gorilla, had a very messy and distorted appearance, and a broken jasper gem for a nose.

The guards carefully released and backed away from Jasper, and a cage was set up around the ring. The Jasper cocked a brow at the purple-haired girl, who backed up in fear as it crawled over. Wendy closed her eyes when Jasper chose to sniff her, examining her slim body. Without warning, the creature brushed his tongue up against her face. “EWWW!” Wendy frantically shook the spit off. “I’m not a tasty treat, so can you please not do that!”

Jasper’s eyes widened at the sight of her hair. When he licked the front of the purple hair, the dye came off and revealed the blueness underneath. “BLUE!” Wendy shot her eyes open at this shout. Jasper grabbed Wendy’s ponytail and held her up higher, grinning with pure madness. “Meeee likes… BLUE! Meeeee wants it!”

“AAAAHHHH! No no no no!” Wendy flailed her arms and legs, but her premature thrashings didn’t harm the orange Neanderthal. “I’m not interested in a relationship, let me go, let me go, let me gooooo!”

“Me likes blue! Jasper wants Blue and Jasper together!” The creature took Wendy’s right arm and began to dance, forcing her to twirl around.

“AAAAAAAAHHH! Reducto!” Wendy whipped up her wand and destroyed the monster with an explosion, blowing herself away with the force. When the smoke cleared, she saw all that remained of the monster was its cracked gem nose. She was horrified at the sight.
“WOW, what a show-stopping performance!” Floop beamed as the cage opened. “Let’s give our rising champion a break, eh? He’ll need to wash up after that biz! We’ll give everyone 10 minutes to use the restroom or fill up on snacks. When we return, we’ll have our Golden Champ, Rawk Hawk, vs. the kids who know how to shine, the Bulb Boxers!”

As soon as Wendy returned to her locker room, she collapsed on the dirty mattress. “My word, I couldn’t believe the nerve of that monster!” Carla yelled as she climbed onto Wendy’s chest. “That must’ve been traumatizing. Are you okay?”

“I’m fine. But Carla… I just killed that thing.”

“Better it than you, I would think.”

“Carla, I KILLED something! And it was a never-before-seen creature! What if it was kidnapped from its family—what if I made the population go extinct! I feel so awful about it!” Wendy pulled off her contacts and covered her tearing eyes with her hands. “I was just trying to study and practice my fighting, I didn’t wanna… sniff, sniff!”

“Hey, buddies.” The security guard came in. “Floop says if you wants the washroom, it’s yours’s.”

“I don’t wanna fight, anymore.” Wendy rolled on her side and wept. “I just killed a mindless, innocent creature, sniff sniff.”

“Oh noes, that thing goes ‘poof’ all da time. It always comes right back, it does.”

“Sniff…” Wendy rolled over to face him, “It comes back?”

“Yeah, it comes outta da pretty rock on its nose. Da boss says it’s somethin’ to do with solid photon particles. It’ll be locked up in its cage if ya’s wants to see it again. Anyways, later pallies.” He left.

Wendy sat up on the bed, feeling a huge weight lift off her heart. “So it isn’t dead… I’m so relieved.”

“That’s certainly worth noting down.” Carla wrote on the notepad. “I took the liberty of writing about the creatures you battled. You may want to review them at some point.”

“I know…”

“So, are you going to drop out now? Are you tired?”

“…No. I’ll keep fighting.” She stared at her wand. “I just have to be more careful which spells I use.”

Floop’s office

Floop happily bounced into his office on the sit-n-bounce ball before tossing it into a corner amongst other toys. He fell back onto his chair that rolled over to his desk. “Dat-do-doooo, dop-dop-do-doooo…” He hummed to himself while checking his computer. He reviewed the screenshots taken during the fights from different angles, namely those featuring the new boy, Wendell. He smiled, showing interest in this boy’s skills. “…Hmmm.” He noticed a screenshot when Wendell was flailing his arms in Jasper’s grasp. The front of his hair was blue instead of purple. “…I wonder…” The show host looked up the World Government database.

DNK Moonbase
The DNK has been leaderless for almost a year, but given their uncaring natures, it didn’t feel very different from how things normally were. Annaira, Atnort, Beewv, and Avakam had no idea why they were here on Moonbase. Ininap and Sicnarf remembered bringing them here, but had no idea why they would ever want to, given their actions in the past. “S-Sicnarf!” Ininap stuttered, pointing at the balcony window. “Th-There’s a ship coming!”

“What?” Indeed, a S.U.B.L.O.O.C. was flying full speed at the glass wall. All of the operatives ducked out of the way before it smashed through, sending shards of glass flying everywhere.

The three to step off the vehicle were Medusa, Thanatos, and Pandora in their human vessels. “Since this is the Negaverse, we land ships through the window, right?” the Goddess of Darkness inquired rhetorically.

“Isn’t that Eirik’s mom?” Sicnarf asked. “What’re they doing here? And who’s that boy?”

“You don’t need to know the story behind this child.” Medusa said. “Just that he is the vessel I specially chose for my operations. Destructively Nefarious Kids, I am the Goddess of Darkness, Medusa!”

“Medusa?” Atnort questioned. “Is that s’posed to be the Positive Asudem?”

“Yes, and NO! Asudem was only a myth, but I’m the genuine creator of Darkness. My associates and I need these human bodies to hide from the gods. Not that the gods often look here, I suppose. Now, you must be wondering why I decided to show myself in this weathered old treehouse. The answer is simple: I am taking over the DNK as Supreme Leader!”

“SAYS WHO!?” Beewv shouted. “If you’re a goddess, you must be WAY under -13!”

“Actually, even though I’m my sister’s ‘Negative’, I still go by Positive numbers, which means I am far over -13.” Medusa smirked. “And even if I wasn’t, this body is still within age requirements. Besides, it’s not like your organization has any real order. Ask yourselves this… what outstanding things has the DNK accomplished in the past years?”

The base fell silent for a moment, thinking. “Um…” Ininap stuttered, “Ah-I seem to recall, we made friends with… the Nimbi DNK.”

“And we… beat up those DNKG.” Yddam remembered.

“Whoever said you were friends with anyone? And who was it that ultimately destroyed DNKG’s leader?” Medusa asked.

They fell silent again. True, no one in their leaderless group officially made a friendship pact with any other DNK, and they had no idea how DNKG leader, Aluben ended up destroying herself. “Their leader destroyed herself of her own accord.” Medusa finally stated. “And in time, the same will happen to the lot of you. Because this realm is and always has been a world of darkness! The Negatars were the embodiments of this dimension’s very darkness! That’s why the gods look away from this world, and why I, the Goddess of Darkness, choose to walk among you. Destructively Nefarious Kids… help me locate the Thirteen Darknesses. With them, we will establish dominion over the universes, and shun the gods in the way that they have shunned us!”

“Whoa whoa whoa!” Hcaz spoke up. “What’s this about Thirteen Darknesses?”

“Oh, right, they don’t remember that, either.” Medusa said to herself. “All will be revealed in good time, my friends. I wish for you to elect me your leader. If you do, I have a marvelous proposal: I have drawn up, and will sign the official Demon-Negative Alliance Treaty!” Medusa whipped out a contract with dark symbols.

“Demon-Negative pardon me??” Sicnarf questioned.

“The demons are the ‘Negatives’ of the spirits, therefore it is in our best interests to sign a pact with them. Their powers combined with ours will make us formidable.”

“B-B-But why w-w-would the demons c-c-cooperate with us?” Ininap shuddered at the idea.

“This is all ridiculous!” Sicnarf shouted. “You expect even a leaderless organization like us to follow the ideals of a dark spirit like you??”

“Don’t you understand anything?” Medusa spoke. “The one to destroy DNKG leader Aluben was the overabundance of darkness that consumed her. It was ME! The one who manipulated those two brats,” she indicated Ininap and Sicnarf, “into bringing the former DNKG operatives here, regardless of their misdeeds, was my dark essence manipulating them! I am the Supreme Leader you were always missing, but was always here, and I am the one who will make your Negative kind rise! And besides, I am not the only one who favors the Demon-Negative Alliance. Sipa, Lucifer, come out.”

The young Satanist that many of them knew and feared stepped out of the ship with a forced smile. The operatives raised their weapons when a vicious wolf with red eyes followed her. “Don’t you irksome worms point those weapons at me. I am Lucifer of the Six Demon Saints. I possessed this wolf I found in the desert, but I am not to be underestimated. And this child has agreed to become my bride.”

“As part of the Demon-Negative Alliance, a marriage between a Negative and a demon will be established.” Medusa explained. “And Lucifer, as a Demon Saint, can establish the alliance by signing the treaty. That’s only if I become your leader. However, Lucy plans to marry Sipa, anyway. If the Negatives and demons are not aligned, he will have every position and power to destroy you if he pleases. Because once Sipa is his bride, their powers will become one! Now, wouldn’t you want someone like that on your side?”

“Y-You’re… blackmailing us….” Inap stuttered.

“Goddess of Darkness.” Medusa shrugged. “I like everything black. Still, let’s assume that I keep Lucy under control… the benefits to my leadership weigh heavily in your favor. It’s a very easy decision to make, I would say.”

The operatives were all looking at each other. The DNKG kids didn’t seem to care what happened to this organization they didn’t like. But Sicnarf, suspecting Medusa to play unfairly, made the decision for them. “We’ll let you be our leader… for now.”

“That’s a smart decision. We will have this place clean and have the wedding here by tomorrow at negative noon. Or would that be midnight?” Medusa thought aloud. “Sigh, I never understood the differences between time in these worlds.”

Glitz Pit

“OOOOH.” The audience winced after the Rawk Hawk smashed a Machoke’s head against the arena floor. Since the Machamp was knocked out beforehand, all that remained was the Machop. The smaller fighter fainted on his back and held up a white flag.

“THAT’S RIGHT, baby! HAWKSTER is the KING!” Rawk Hawk roared to the screaming fans. He was a golden Mobian hawk, with big blonde hair, wearing orange shorts, yellow shoes, and yellow wristbands. “The Hawk doesn’t care who you are or WHERE you’re from, ’cause if you ain’t expecting to get Rawked, then STAY out of my arena! YOU GOT THAT, Four-Arms?!” He stomped on the Machamp’s chest.

“Machamp, Machamp!” it said frightfully. (“I got it! Please don’t hurt me!”)

“WAS THAT A THREAT?!” Rawk Hawk picked him up, whirlered around like a tornado, and sent the Machamp flying. He broke through the stadium’s wall and shrunk into the sky. Twinkle.

“When we get back, get ready for a 10-minute lecture on AERO DYNAMICS!” The Hawk Rawked.

“That Rawk Hawk has quite the large head on his shoulders.” Carla remarked, watching the show on their locker room TV. “Perhaps if he could afford a decent haircut, his head wouldn’t feel as full…”

“I know, but at least he feels confident.” Wendy said, washing her face in the (filthy) sink. “I kind of wish I were more like that.”

“Hey dere, Wendells.” The security guard came back. “Afters Rawk’s next match, youse is gonna be fighting again in the next couple of thousand milliseconds.”

“Yuh-oh! Now’s my last chance to use the little multi-gender’s room.” Wendy jogged into the small one-toilet restroom.

“I’m going to use the lobby restroom.” Carla called to her as the guard left. “Make sure to put your contacts back on if I don’t return on time.”

“Okay, I will!”

Carla left the locker room and carefully trekked the dim-lit hallway, passing a security guard with short blue hair. When she passed, that guard stopped and looked at her with a twinkle in his shaded eye. “MMMM-mmmm!” Carla was instantly stuffed into a bag as she squirmed helplessly.

“Who’s NEXT to feel the Rawk?!” The Mobian bird hacked spit as he shouted. “Huh? YOU?!” He glared at his next opponent. “I was set to beat up a little boy, but I guess a puny girl would make a good warm-up. When I get done Rawkin’ you, you gonna wish you were at your daddy’s gettin’-”

A gust of black wind struck the Hawk harder than a wrecking ball.

After Wendy came out of the restroom, she put her contact lens back to make her red eyes into brown. She noticed her kitten was still not in sight and assumed she was still using the restroom. “Hee hee hee! Kitty’s gotta go, too!” She giggled. She eagerly jogged back to the arena and found somebody beaten and battered. When she came up to view the Rawk Hawk’s latest victim- “Hu!” She gasped at seeing it was the Rawk Hawk himself, his beak dented and eyes darkened.

“Huaff…” The Mobian helped himself up and looked at Wendy. “You’ve been spared the Rawk’s thrashings… but you’re going to wish it was me by the time you face her.” He limped away, leaving Wendy awestruck and terrified. She was already afraid of facing him herself, but apparently there was a stronger fighter in the stadium. She wished she stuck around to see this person…

“Wendell Berry’s making his comeback, ladies and germs!” Floop announced—now he was swinging on the ceiling, as though he were an acrobat in the circus. “He’s up against the hard hitters, the swift swingers (and I don’t mean yours truly), the Chucksters!”
There were five snow-covered platforms where Sir Slushes were stationed – angry snowmen with top-hats that had red X’s. Three more platforms, which were set on the stadium walls parallel to the ring edges, had Chargin’ Chucks that threw baseballs. When the bell dinged, the baseballs and snowballs whipped in her direction, so Wendy thought fast and evaded. “Protego!” She decided to protect herself with a pink bubble so she could think. Wendy thought shooting the snowmen with fire spells was the best option… but the act of killing them would be awful, even if they were just common field enemies.

The baseballs were landing on the floor after hitting her shield, so Wendy decided to grab them herself. Dodging the other balls, Wendy chucked them up at the Sir Slushes’ hats, and the snowmen fell apart once their weak spots were hit. One of the Slushes was on a platform directly above the ring and out of Wendy’s view. She saw one of the other snow platforms, currently vacant, and it was short enough for her to jump and air-boost to. She had view of the remaining Slush, and caught a baseball to chuck up at his hat. With that, Wendy jumped back to the ring and shot fire spells to knock out the Chucks.

“Next up against Wendell, banned from fancy restaurants international, they’re the Ear Killers!”

Three Boomboxers landed on individual platforms around the ring, and a Merenguy in the center—the purple demon with slug-like eyes and a hypnotic face began dancing wildly, forcing Wendy to look directly at it. The Boomboxers – yellow humanoids with boombox heads – seized the chance to shoot soundwaves at her. Wendy avoided the waves and hurriedly shot spells at the Merenguy. The monster dispersed into darkness like any demon, and once free of its spell, Wendy was able to shoot down the Boomboxers with Silencio spells.

“Wendell’s next match is the Kamikaze Squad whodemandaninstantstart.” DING!

With no time to prepare, Wendy was surrounded by four Voltorbs, four Bob-ombs, and one Electrode. “AHHH! PROTEGO!” Wendy whipped the shield over herself when the explosives lit, shrouding the entire ring in smoke and soot. When it cleared, Wendy’s shield stayed sturdy. The bomb creatures were knocked out.

“Well, I probably speak the obvious when I say, Wendell’s performance has been EXPLOSIVE this whole tournament!” Floop grinned at his audience, floating his platform close to the ring. “It’s clear to me that this young man is a HUGE fan of my show and wants the honor of touring my castle.”

“Ah-I… guess I am… heh heh.” Wendell blushed at the recognition; and still had no other idea why Facilier would sign her up for this.

“If he wins this next match, he just may have the glorious honor! But it won’t be easy to best the maiden who conquered Rawk Hawk.”

Wendy’s heart almost stopped—she didn’t expect to face Rawk Hawk’s superior so quickly. Well, at least she didn’t exhaust much energy against these last enemies.

“She had to wash her face and fix her hair braids, but now she’s revved and ready to go!” The blue doors opened, and Wendy heard the opponent running in. On the opposite side of the ring, she couldn’t quite see her, but Wendy kept her Lamia Scale raised in case of a surprise attack. “Known as the ‘Sky Dancer’ by many, she LOVES to dazzle her fans!” Wendy felt her heart racing with anxiety; in the next second, she would view her adversary. “CHELIA BLEN-”

“AAAAH!” The girl in question hit the final step onto the ring with her foot, causing herself to fall on her face. She had reddish-magenta hair tied in two spiky pigtails by orange bows. She wore a pink shirt whose sleeves were detached from the body, going into white gloves. The shirt had a dark blue center, and she wore a sky-blue skirt. She had long black socks that went into white legwarmers, and black sneakers with pink tongues and soles. “Uh… hehe.” She looked up and sported a nervous grin. She had pretty blue eyes. “That totally Flooped.”

The audience burst into as much laughter as they had with Wendell before. “NO FAIR!” Donna shouted. “THAT GIRL’S stealing Wendy’s ACT!”

“Let’s gather a mob and WHALE on her!” Sonny readied his hammer.

“PUBLIC MURDER!” both cried.

“KEEP IT DOWN!” Facilier smacked the twins. “Ugh… Although, they are uncannily similar…”

“Yes, it’s almost fate that two magic airbenders would go one-on-one in the same tournament.”
Floop said. “So I think these star-crossed fighters deserve an atmosphere more fitting.” He pressed a switch, and the stadium’s very roof came open, exposing the vibrant blue sky. The ring began to rise, and the girls felt the chill and strength of the wind once it brought them outside.

“Ahh-!” Wendy stumbled under the force of the wind, but maintained composure. Her scarf flew off, and she watched it fall into the stadium. “Uh-oh…” She sank to her knees and held her stomach, feeling a twist. “Mr. Facilier’s charm is wearing off… I hope I don’t…”

“Ooo, what a pretty wand!” Chelia raced over and swiped Wendy’s wand off the ground.

“HEY, that’s mine!” the purple-haired shouted, standing up. “Please give it back!”

“Wait a minute…” Chelia moved the rose quartz wand and studied every inch. “You have a Lamia Scale, too!” With that, she pulled out her own.

“Oh!” Wendy gaped. “You have the same…”

“I bought it from a store in Orchid Bay a few years ago.” Chelia crossed both pink wands. “The lady said not many wizards have one.”

“Orchid Bay…” Wendy thought back to her visit at Orchid Bay Mall. The words of Tasha were,
“Some chick with pink hair. I think she’s like, a dancer.”

“I heard that they only work for wizards with pure-hearted souls. I didn’t think that was me, but…”
Chelia chuckled at the thought. “Well, here you go!” She tossed the wand back to Wendy, who was caught by surprise and stumbled in trying to grab it. “You make sure to hold onto that.”

“Uh… thanks.” Wendy said, finding this pleasant interaction a bit odd.

“Oh, I forgot to introduce myself! My name’s Chelia Blendy.” She held a hand out. “What’s yours?”

Even her name’s similar… “I’m Wendell Berry.”

“Wendell Berry? Like the American novelist?”

“Who?”

“Ten seconds!” Floop announced.

Chelia jogged back to her side of the ring and stood poised. “Well, I wish you the best of luck!”
Wendy turned serious and poised herself. “Yeah. You, too.”

The bell dinged, and Chelia was first to spin her arms and blast twin gusts of black wind at Wendell, who dodged to her right with a start. “Why is your wind black?!” Wendy shouted, almost forgetting to use her boy voice.

“Because I’m using Haki with my airbending!” Chelia held up both arms, which were turned black like iron. “Not many benders know you can do that.” She punched more air gusts, so Wendy projected a bubble shield, but Chelia shot spells from her own Lamia Scale to make it crack. She flew over for a mighty kick that shattered the shield, but Wendy was already set to dash left and run around, sending an air-slice with her leg. Chelia countered, then dashed up to Wendy’s right so swiftly, the momentum caused Wendy to fall on her rear. “And that’s not the only thing I can do! I also have God Chi.”

“God Chi? What is that?”

“Tell ya later.” She shot a Stun Spell, but Wendy rolled away and hopped back to her feet, whipping Disarming Spells at her opponent that Chelia was quick to block. The Sky Dancer did a breakdance and sent a black wind shockwave along the floor, but Wendy jumped, blasting twin air blasts to push Chelia across the ring. Chelia jumped to her feet and yelled, “Infatua!”

A string of large hearts flew out of her wand, phasing through Wendy’s head as the atmosphere flashed red, and her expression was dumbfounded. After the spell finished, Wendy shook back to reality. “What was that?”

“HUH? But that usually makes boys go head-over-heels for me!”

“Guess I don’t find you attractive.” Wendy blushed and shrugged. Chelia growled and punched another black wind blast, which Wendy evaded and began to whirl a cyclone around her left hand. “Repiti!” She cast the spell to keep it spinning, then she cast an endless cyclone over her right hand. She dashed at Chelia, dodging her spells, then threw an uppercut that sent her spiraling into the air via the Cyclone Fist. Chelia recomposed, kicking one foot down as she spun around and conjured black wind around it. Wendy dodged, gaping at how Chelia dented a crater in the floor from the impact.

Chelia began to spin at an incredibly rapid pace. Wendy stood her ground when the air was being pulled in to her, and clouds began to appear above them. Chelia stopped spinning and was clearly dizzy, but she cast her own “Troia!” and ridded the effect. Chelia took a great breath that inhaled the clouds above, so thinking fast, Wendy inhaled and sucked in some clouds herself. When their lungs were full and clogged, they stopped inhaling and aimed at each other.

“Sky Dragon-”

“Sky God-”

“ROOOOAAAAR!” A white cyclone spun against a black cyclone, and it felt like the impact made Glitzville sway in the air. They could barely breathe in the furious wind, and the mix of white and black was blinding. “Hu!” Chelia gasped when Wendy leapt through the wind, eyes squinted, and punched the Sky Dancer with a Cyclone Fist. She slid across the ring as the wind cleared away. The girls could breathe and catch their breath.

Chelia was staring awestruck at Wendy as she helped herself up. While keeping her wand raised, Wendy was confused as to why she was getting this look. …Wendy felt over her eyes and realized the contacts were missing. She grabbed the end of her ponytail and pulled it in front of her. It was blue.

She gasped and tried to cover her hair with her hands. Panic was clear in her red eyes. The floating cameras recording their fight depicted the revelation on the arena screens, and everyone was murmuring. Facilier and the twins felt great concern, and Romeo felt at a loss for words. Floop stroked his chin and bore an insightful stare, his suspicion having been confirmed.

“You…” Chelia pointed at her. “You’re the girl on the wanted posters. The… ‘Sky Dragon.’”

Wendy could feel the audience gazing at her with fear, knowing a wanted criminal was in their city. She was on the verge of tearing at the idea. “I…I’m…”

“WENDY, HELP!”

“That voice!” Wendy gasped, looking up at a hot-air balloon designed like Meowth. A man with blue hair and a woman with red hair were holding a net, in which a winged white kitten was squirming. “CARLA!”

“Prepare for trouble, your show has been cancelled!” the woman started.

“And make it double, like Gretel and Hansel.” the man followed.

“To protect the world from family-friendly fights!”

“To unite all people within our spotlights.”

“To denounce the evils of airheaded girls!”

“To extend our reach across the worlds!”

“JESSIE!”

“James.”

“Team Rocket is taking all the glitz and glory today!”

“Give up now, or we’ll have our way!”

“Meeeeeowth: Let’s play!” (“Wooobuffet.”)

“What’re you people doing?! Let my friend go!” Wendy demanded.

“Tough break, toots!” Meowth retorted. “But if ya wants, we can send ya an invitation to the wedding! If you be good, we might even let you in the photo! Catch ya later!” The balloon drifted across town quickly.

“COME BACK!” Wendy leapt off the ring and down the building’s roof.

As the stadium goers were rushedly clearing out, Wendy’s scarf ended up landing in Romeo’s hands. …The boy put it around his neck and said with a deeper voice, “Testosterone!”

…

“Grrrr! Who do you people think you are?!” Carla squirmed helplessly in the net. “A couple of poachers?!”
“We’re more than just poachers, Miss!” Meowth declared. “We’re Team Rocket, the greatest of Pokémon hunters! And I’m Meowth, the smartest and most admired cat in the entire crew!”

“Let me out of this thing right now! I’m not a Pokémon!”

“We’ll see about that!” Jessie declared, ready to throw. “GO, Pokéball!”

The red and white device struck Carla in the head. She morphed into red energy and was sucked into the ball through the net. Team Rocket gaped… Their question has been answered so easily. Now they had to wait for the ball to stop beeping. Sadly, the ball popped open, and Carla escaped capture.

The kitten shook her fur until it was untangled. “Mr. Facilier once showed us a book that described Pokéballs. They convert creatures or objects into energy and trap them inside a subspace-like dimension. They can work on anything, except for humans. However, the Pokéballs are only designed to create holographic spaces for any registered Pokémon, which allows said Pokémon to grow more friendly with their trainers. Sadly, I do not have the attributes a Pokémon possesses, and even then, I would not fall for such brainwashing.”

“That’s a shame.” Jessie said. “But I’m sure someone will be willing to fetch a hefty price for you somewhere.”

“Wait a second!” Meowth shouted. “We ain’t gonna sell her anywhere! ’Cause she’s joining with us.” Meowth took Carla’s paws. The love in his eyes and the red on his face was in plain view of the winged kitten. “Dis crew always felt so incomplete without another talking animal of the opposite gender. Now look at who we found! A beautiful goil, with bee-yootiful wings like an angel!”

Carla felt herself redden when Meowth twirled her around, and she fell back into his arms. “Oh, Carl. Beautiful angel, Carl. Won’t you be my bride? Together, we’ll have wonderful kids. Wonderful half-angel kids. Whaddya say, Carl? Let’s get married here and now. Mwwwww…” He puckered his lips and moved closer.

“SHYAH!” Carla threw a furious smack and slapped him off. “Are you INSANE?! Marry YOU? AUCK! I wouldn’t marry a tomcat like you if we were the only two sentient animals on the planet! If you insist on going nude wherever you walk, I can imagine we wouldn’t get invited to dinner parties. What, you think because you have a golden charm on your head, that makes up for it? Plus, you smell horrible, your mouth reeks of fish. I bet you spent the last 15 years trying to capture a single mouse.”

From a perspective, Meowth was walking down a dirt road, into the orange sunset. “Good-bye… friends…”

Jessie’s head appeared over the picture, looking unimpressed. “Just paint yourself blue already.” she remarked.

“Carlaaaaa!” The Rocket Agents looked over the balloon’s basket to see Wendy and Chelia chasing them across a town road, stopping at the city’s railing which Team Rocket had passed over.

“WENDY!” Carla stretched her wings and flew down to the two girls.
“Carla!” Wendy grabbed the kitten in her arms and hugged her. “Thank goodness you’re safe!”

“Hey, Wendy, let’s teach these kidnappers a lesson!” Chelia said excitedly.

“I agree.” Both girls stood together and took big breaths. “Sky Dragon/God ROOOOAAAAR!” The white and black cyclones merged together to blow the balloon away.

“Looks like Team Rocket’s vaca’ is blowing awaaaaay!” (“-buffet!”) Twinkle.

“That was unhumorously unproductive.” Carla sighed.

“THERE you two ladies are!” The girls turned around to see Floop, alongside several cameramen and stadium goers. The host calmly approached them with his friendly smile. Once between the two girls, he grabbed their arms and raised them high. “Ladies and gentlemen, we have a tie! Throwing the competition and working together to save something they both hold dear! These girls are the SISTERS of Sky! And they have BOTH won the honor of touring MY castle on Foogly Mountain!”

“YAAAAAAAAYYY!”

Wendy and Chelia exchanged flushed grins. This host kind of misunderstood, but as long as it made the people excited, there was no reason to speak up. “I’ll get the blimp all set up for both of you!” Floop walked away and gave thumbs-ups to both girls. “Join me when you’re ready and bring whatever guests you like. Wonderful show, girls, wonderful!”

The girls saw him go in the direction of a blimp whose design was fitting for his whacky personality. “Hwow, a trip to Foogly Palace!” Chelia jumped joyfully. “We’re really lucky girls, Wendy!”

“Y-Yeah! I guess we are!” Wendy grinned.

“I’ll see you there!” Chelia waved as she jogged backwards. “Can’t wait to talk- AAH!” She tripped when she tried to turn forward. “Uh, hehe!” She blushed and kept jogging.

“WEN-dyyyyyyy!” Facilier surprised his student with a hug from behind. “Y’all made the fans go WILD! I knew everyone’d love you, who of us ain’t surprised?”

“WE AREN’T!” the twins cheered.

“I’m really glad I tried.” Wendy blushed. “But is this why you signed me up for this, Mister Facilier? Are we going to Floop’s castle to learn something?”

Facilier’s grin shrank into a nervous frown. “Weeell… I ain’t comin’ with you. I’ll let these tykes come along and watch your back, but… Sigh, just look at this paper.” He gave Wendy a paper that was completely blank. “Aparecium.” Facilier tapped his cane to it, and words appeared.

Wendy and Carla skimmed it. They gasped. “No way! Mister Facilier, where did you…”

“It’s from yo’ daddy. Accordin’ to him, Floop is an apprentice to one of the World Leaders. And… he wants you to destroy his castle.”

Glitzville Candy Shop

The store was currently empty with almost all the town inside the Glitz Pit. When Sally the Salesman Sugar Fairy viewed a camera monitor that depicted the nearest edge of town, Blackberry Guards were stepping off of Cinnamon Ships. “Oh well. This town was fun while it lasted!”

The adorable fairy opened the case containing the blue cupcake with golden icing. She pulled it out and held it up with only her teeny right hand. She reached her left hand into a back pocket and pulled out a giant (normal size) detonator, which she placed into the glass case. “Bye bye, delectable goodies!”

The time it took for the bomb to count down was the same time it took for the teeny fairy to carry the cupcake down a long escape tunnel. The further she got down the zigzaggy passage, the faster the bomb was beeping. She got to a secret hangar where she chucked the cupcake onto a teeny ship and drove off. The Blackberry Guards entered the shop on its last few beeps. Beebeeebeebeeeeeeep!

The candy shop exploded and destroyed everything inside in a fiery blaze. The Sugar Fairy was presumed dead. The very idea made everyone in Glitzville cry.

_Floop comes from Spy Kids, Chelia is from Fairy Tail, Lefty Left-Right is from Simpsons, and Jasper is from Steven Universe (it’s not the same Jasper, however we have seen this particular one before). I think next time, we’ll switch back to Augustus, just because I want Floop’s Castle to happen… a bit later as far as in-story time. Kids, don’t burn down stores._
Chapter Summary

Team Emily meets Dr. Sheldon Cooper. Meanwhile, Shelly and Gonshiri traverse the Sand Kingdom.

Sorry I took so long with this, but I developed an unhealthy interest in horror RPGs. It's not that they’re scary, they’re just... tear-jerking. Anyway.

Chapter 14: Master and Servant

Sand Kingdom

Things were quiet in the castle of sand. At this time of night, one would expect every living soul to be asleep. ...Well, not quite.

King Sandy quietly creaked open the door to his daughter’s room. “Sheeeellyyy.” The princess seemed bundled up comfily under her blanket. “Shelly?” Sandy crept a bit closer. “I need to borrow Gonshiri for a bit, so if it would please you…” He noticed the part-open drawer and gently pulled it all the way.

A swarm of tiny, frantic Pikmin hopped out and began scampering all around the floor by his feet. With a gasp, Sandy threw open his daughter’s covers. All there was of her was a snoozing sand sculpture. “SHELLY!!”

The beach princess was high-tailing down the halls as alarms blared. Several Round Towel Knights appeared to block Shelly’s way, “Princess, what is-” but she stomped the ground and sunk them in sinkholes before escaping. When knights were charging at her from both directions, Shelly dove out a window and thrusted her arms forward to make part of the sand wall stick out and catch her, then carefully lowered herself down. Knights on the outer wall fired beachball bombs from catapults, which Shelly dropped down and dodged, landed on the wall and hopped off, then faced the castle as she stomped the ground with all her force, sending a quake through the wall.

“UUWAAAAAAHHHH!” A chunk of the castle came falling down as Sandy plummeted with it. In the confusion, Shelly spun a hole open in the ground and hopped in.

Five minutes passed before Sandy finally helped himself out of the rubble. But while trying to fix his crown on, he jumped when seven dark figures appeared behind him. “Had a little accident, did we?” asked the slim, middle man in a dark voice.

“Heheh… no accounting for sand-tidal waves.”

“Where is the princess?”

“Ummmm… funny story, she was with my daughter a few hours ago, and then um, well they, sort of, elop-” In a blink, the hooded man zipped up and took him by the shirt.

“We were told the Minish would be in YOUR possession when we arrived... were we misled?”
“It—It was just a small—HPP!” The man thrusted two fingers into Sandy’s waist, piercing perfectly.

“You used up your last request.” He removed his fingers and threw Sandy to the ground. “We wasted our time here. But since we’re close to Azultown anyway, there’s one more meat we can find.” And so they vanished in a blink.

The seven figures were flying through the night sky, the shortest one spotting a cloud of dust progressing across the surface. “Hold your stars ‘n’ garters! Somethin’s moving down there.”

“It’s probably just a sandworm. There’re thousands of them here. CP10... let’s move out!” One at a time, the assassins vanished.

That trail of smoke eventually came to a stop, ‘til Shelly popped out of the ground, knocking sand from her ears. She then pulled her nose up, and let Gonshiri drop to her finger from her right nostril. “Uck! I pray for ANY sentient being my size to borrow your living quarters.”

“Hey it was the best place I could think of without swinging you out, at least we’re AWAY from them.”

“I don’t understand... why do YOU wanna protect me? Whaddyou have to...” Shelly was silent for a minute. She didn’t understand why she cared for Gonshiri’s safety. …There was only one possible reason: “You’re MY servant. And no one is taking you without MY say-so.”

“...” Gonshiri said nothing either. That was all she was in Shelly’s eyes. And how far she was willing to go. “HMPH!” She jumped to the sand, facing up at Shelly with furious eyes. “Unacceptable!! If I wanted you to protect me, I would’ve asked you, but I DON’T need your protection and I’m NOT gonna let you fight my battles for me!! SO GOOD-BYE!” The Minish raced across the sand away from Shelly, leaving a tiny trail of dust.

Despite her apparent speed, her road was soon blocked by a giant foot, the quake forcing Shiri onto her bottom. “BE that as it MAY, you are still my SERVANT, and I haven’t DISMISSED you YET.”

Shiri got back up and faced her with more rage. “I WAS CAPTURED TO BE THE SERVANT OF A PRINCESS, but now that you are clearly defecting from your home, YOU’RE JUST A HUMONGOUS SMELLY LUG WHO’S AS GOOD AS FILTHY, TRAITOROUS TRASH TO YOUR KINGDOM!”

Shelly bent down with her witty, snarky grin. “And outside your kingdom, what more are you than one of billions of grains of sand in this desert? I might be a piece of trash, but I’m still the right amount of force to flatten YOU.”

“AAAAAAAAUUUUUUGH!!!” Refusing to tolerate this, Gonshiri ran at Shelly’s foot and unleashed her most furious and unforgiving of thrashings. “YOU ARE THE WORST PERSON I EVER MET, I NEVER WANNA SEE YOU AGAIN AS LONG AS I LIVE, YOU STUPID WORTHLESS PATHETIC DISGUSTING PIECE OF OVERGROWN HALF-DIGESTED SLOOOOOOP!”

Her fists finally grew tired after 2 minutes, the princess in desperate need of breath after showing Shelly her true wrath. There were no dents in the larger girl’s thick skin, and to Shelly, it felt like a measly ant punching her foot with its stubby little legs. “…HAAAAA hahahahahahahahaha!” They always knew how to make each other laugh.
With that, Shelly held her pinky down for Shiri, the latter happily climbing onto her nail. She placed Shiri inside her right ear and said, “Let’s go.” before starting her arduous quest across the desert.

Farmland in Texas

Morning had come on the third day of Team Emily’s travels by the time they arrived at a rural farmland. “Yaaaawn… well, we’re in Texas.” Emily yawned, rubbing her weary eyes before putting her glasses back on. “Where did you say Uncle Sheldon lived again?”

“Oh Galveston Island, we still have a few miles to go.” Sarah replied.

“Where we’ll probably need to sneak onto a boat to sail over.” Gary followed.

“I wonder if Sector T is still active, we c’n get supplies from them. After about… 5 minutes or 20.” And with that, Emily tumbled out of the G.O.R.I.L.L.A.’s cockpit headfirst and hit the ground. “Ow.”

She lay unconscious for who knows how long, but it was still morning. Her glasses fell off, so as she blinked awake, a dark blurry figure was standing over her, upside-down. It stuck something white in its mouth and blew smoke out; a cigarette. Emily rolled onto her front, observing this creature to be a capuchin monkey, a Pipo Helmet on its head. It pulled out a pair of huge square glasses and put them on. “Hey… those are mine.”

“AA-AAACK!” The monkey chucked the cigarette at her head before hopping away. Emily scrambled to her feet, squinting her eyes in a hopeless attempt to see the farmland around her. There were blue and red flashing lights atop dark figures that she knew were monkeys. Gary and Sarah dropped down beside her. “There’re monkeys here, too. You alright, Em?” Sarah asked.

“Hey, where’s your glasses?” Gary asked.

“A monkey stole ‘em.”

“We better get ‘em back. Yer eyes are smaller than peas on a stove. Ah reckon we look like some child’s smeared fingerpaint.” Sarah said.

“It isn’t that bad,” Emily walked forward, “I can see just- OW!” She tripped on a cockroach.

“And that’s why a good friend carries around a spare set.” Gary smiled casually and held an identical pair of glasses to Emily.

She took them, put them on, and stood. “Thanks.”

“Now where’re those spare braces you promised me?”

“On my model lightspeed train set?”

“Figured.”

“There’s too many varmints here for there to be normal.” Sarah noticed. “Ah reckon we should see what they’re up to.”

“Good idea. And not only that, sniff sniff.” Emily closed her eyes and whiffed. “There’s science in the air…” (Play the Mermalair Theme from Spongebob: BFBB.)
Stage 24: Cooper Works

Mission: Catch 15 monkeys and meet Dr. Sheldon Cooper.

The kids abandoned their G.O.G.O.-G.O.R.I.L.L.A. and hurried down the country road, abandoned barns and grassland to the side as the morning drew on. Galloping sounded across the distance and Pipo Monkeys were riding horses from the horizon, spanking the poor animals forcefully as the apes shot Western guns at one-another. Gary and Sarah whirled their Super Hoops and ran at the horses, leaping, batting the monkeys off, and netting them. “t’s alright, li’l pardner.” Sarah patted a horse happily. They explored the farmlands and found a 4x4 piece inside a barn, another in a tree, and inside another barn, they climbed a stack of hay, floated up with Sky Flyers, and got onto the walkway just under a roof where a Pipo Monkey began running around. Emily and Sarah ran separate ways and cornered the monkey before Emily caught it.

Otherwise, the farmland appeared fairly empty, even though apes were running everywhere moments ago. However, they saw a capuchin monkey jump out from a bush and hop its way over a decaying wooden fence, up a hill into a large barn. The sign on the fence read, Warning: Do not enter these premises. There is a wild man-eating rooster inside who was tested for rabies. Do not enter, or risk the chickenpox.

“Already had them.” Emily retorted, leaping over as her friends joined. Two capuchins were standing guard at the entrance, smoking, but when they saw the kids, they drew out lighters, held them by their rears, and farted powerful flames that forced the kids to dodge. Emily was on her front as she whipped out her slingshot and blasted homing pellets, flinging the lighters away before the apes retreated inside. Emily jumped up and ran inside, but it seems the apes were gone.

“Where’d they go?”

“Ah dunno, but there’s that man-eating rabies rooster.” Sarah pointed at the stiff, mindless creature on a nest.

Emily approached and studied it curiously, tapping its beak. “This isn’t a rooster, it’s metal.” That’s when the eyes lit red and scanned the three of them.

“Brain scan reads I.Q. levels at: Two-hundred-and-fifty-three, one-hundred-forty-six, and two-hundred-and-one. Results: one Acceptable, two Passable, deemed as 'Guests'. Recommended entry: the Robbers' Road.”

And before either of them could question, a man-size vacuum appeared from the ground and sucked them down at whipping speeds. “WHOOOOOAAAA.” Emily hit the metal floor first, then Sarah, then Gary. Emily pushed them off and fixed on her glasses. The scent of filtered air reached her nose as she gazed in awe.

It was something like a Batcave, a vast underground with strong steel structures, dozens of vents, TV screens, and complex wiring that filled Emily with an extreme sense of sciency wonder. A huge light-up sign on a distant wall across the chasm read Cooper Works. “Whooooa! What kind of place is this??”

“‘Cooper Works’?” Sarah read. “Did Uncle Sheldon build this place? When did ‘e get around to it?”

“Who cares!! Only someone of a truly brilliant mind would have the time and patience!” Emily was red, heart racing like a girl in love. “But… the apes. How would they know about this? Somethin’ funny’s goin’ on and we better stop it!”
The trio moved forward (a 4x4 was behind a sparking terminal) and leapt across a series of round platforms kept aloft by helicopters, seeing a monkey clinging the bottom bar of one of them. Emily and Sarah had the honor of jumping on one side of that platform to make it turn vertical, letting Gary net the ape while the girls helicoptered back to safety. The platforms shifted left into a passage within the wall, coming out in another expansive cave above a chasm where hovering devices, Heli-Gliders, floated above their ledge. “For unauthorized trespassing into my Fortress of Solitude, the culprits are hereby granted one strike. Any further vandalism to this rule shall result in your undergarments being thrown onto the highest telephone wire.”

They stuck each of their Sky Flyers to the Heli-Gliders, and continued spinning their gadgets to make the devices fly over the chasm in a straight, direct line. They forcibly stopped over a platform, where some Shelbots – small robots designed like Sheldon’s head, awakened, sounding alarms, and blasted mini missiles. The kids batted them away with their Stun Clubs and bashed the robots over the edge. The Heli-Glider beside them would float to a walkway along a cylindrical wall, but a walkway leading down and around this current pillar brought them to a Heli-Glider that would go to a floating 4x4, which Gary proceeded to claim himself, then return. They took turns using the Heli-Glider to the new walkway, really a stairway of long metal planks where certain ones drooped for a second at certain intervals.

They kept sharp eyes on when they would droop and jumped to avoid falling in the abyss. They made it up the stairs and to a wall where many little bars were sticking in-and-out in a similar fashion, so the crew jumped and grabbed their way across the bars, hovering with Sky Flyer before some would retract. They made it to a new set of Heli-Gliders and flew them to a series of floating propeller platforms. Said platforms shifted left and right, respective ones turning over to expose the bladed fan side, so it required more careful maneuvering with Sky Flyer as they jumped and landed on safe ones. A capuchin was using makeshift wings to float over an area, so in the midst of a jump, Sarah managed to net the monkey, then resumed coptering to a safe hold. The end of the platforms had a new Heli-Glider set that flew them to empty space.

However, this empty space had many other sets of Heli-Gliders, forcing the trio to jump to each one and propel their Flyer into them as they solved a maze of Heli-Gliders. One route brought them to a floating 4x4, and along the right route was another flying capuchin that Emily netted while going by. The gliders eventually brought them to an opening in the same wall as where they started, going through to enter a stairway just across the chasm from the first area. The stairs wound around a wall as boulders of dirty laundry were bouncing to them, easy to dodge however. They made it to a flat, straight walkway and saw the cannon blasting the laundryballs on the other side. The kids used Super Hoops to run across faster, picked up a 4x4, and netted the ape controlling the cannon.

Behind the cannon was a sealed door with a speaker. The voice on the other end said, “You can’t see me, but I am everywhere. I create all, ensure life for all beings. Make me angry, and I might just split and destroy all in a fiery wrath. What am I?”

Sarah and Gary tapped their chins. But the answer was clear to Emily. “An atom!”

“Answer was: ‘Atom’. Result: apparently not a Christian. Further observation: at least a middle school graduate. Verdict: Acceptable.” And so, the door opened to allow them entry. “Welcome to Area 2 of Dr. Sheldon Cooper’s Fortress of Solitude. …Here’s an interesting fact about automatic PA systems: Doctor Wormenheimer designed the first recorded system as a Halloween prank to scare his colleagues. …Hahahah!” Sheldon’s laugh was quick, hoarse, and sounded like a puppy panting. This new room had a wide, round floor with lighting floor tiles, dancing Shelbots who were life-size figures of His Truly, and apes mimicking their movements. Before going to catch the 3 apes, they explored the room, went up a short staircase to a sealed door, and found a movie camera. They pressed the switch and recorded the apes’ dance.

One of them dressed like an Ewok, another a Ferengi, and the third dressed like Bender from Futurama. They laughed at us, but we own the future, the text read. With that, Emily caught the Ewok, Sarah the robot, and Gary the Ferengi. The Shelbots appeared harmless, but with the door sealed, it was clear the kids had to mimic their dance. A bulletin board had a diagram depicting the blue squares = Star Wars, yellow squares = Star Trek, and green squares = robots. The nerds shortly realized they had to do the Ewok dance, Ferengi dance, and The Robot on those respective color tiles. They called dances, so Emily got robot, Sarah got Ewok, and Gary got Ferengi, which he unfortunately knew was a mating ritual. Hehe.

The robots bowed in approval when they finished, and the door opened. They collected two 4x4’s before heading into a long hallway covered entirely by a carpet. “Please, keep your muddy shoes off my new antique rug. The welcoming mats are better suited for that footwear.” The whole carpet was light-brown colored, but various, small square parts of it had a different texture, the hardness of welcome mats within the newly-vacuumed fluffy carpet. Emily carefully observed the different-texture areas and guided her friends in coptering to them, since only one could fit at a time. Partway through, they had to hover to and climb across a rugged area of the right wall. Once again, a monkey floated over the floor, so Sarah jumped off, netted him, and quickly coptered back to safety. When little gravel bits broke off the wall onto the carpet, they got to see the fate of those who dared to soil it: a giant fan from across the hall blew a powerful gust, the kids grabbing the wall tight to avoid blowing with the dust.

“Did you know that the first house fan originated as a prototype for a device designed to better expel dust particles to a single location, making it far easier to vacuum up afterwards? Quite honestly, that’s why I’ve always been against such fans, but I am happy to revive its original use.” The kids eventually made it to the end and grabbed a 4x4 as they entered the new room. Lasers skimming horizontally or vertically between the walls, it appeared as though these monkeys were swimming around the air. But the moment the kids stepped beyond the blue line’s boundaries, the weight of the world left their bodies, for gravity was nonexistent here.

It wasn’t much different than swimming, the Water Net worked here just as well, except they drifted a little forward whenever they wanted to stop, putting them in danger of hitting lasers. The monkeys proved agile in non-gravity, but the kids had them both netted in time. Floating against the ceiling was their 10th 4x4, which “Let me handle this one.” Sarah began to construct their next invention.

Kids Next Door: M.A.G.N.E.B.O.O.T.S.
Magnetically Armored Gear Niftily Enables Bweaver Over Opposable Titanium Surfaces

“Dr. Cooper’s got just enough metal for boots yer size.” Sarah said, giving them to Emily.

“Holy cow!” Emily exclaimed, pulling off her own shoes to exchange for the (oddly light) metal ones. “But how will you guys follow me?”

“Oh, we already have some.” Gary and Sarah presented their own boots. “Our cousins are in GKNF, but they didn’t have any your size.”

“Oh. Hehe.” She blushed. The following corridor was all an electric floor, so they used the boots to grind across the smooth surface of a nearby rail. It threatened to run off, so they jumped to a rail along the left wall, the magnets pulling them to it excellently as they grinded sideways. This came to an end, and they saw no visible rail, so they kicked off on an impulse, saved by a rail just on the corner of the wall and electric floor. The next rail was a little above them, but since they could only jump up from where the rail top faced (in this case diagonal), they had to forcibly pull their feet up off of this rail so they would fly and stick onto the new one, then repeat this maneuver for the next, on the way catching a monkey clutching the end of the previous, then jump off onto a new center rail. It reached its end and let the kids fly off onto safe ground—“OOF!” Emily just then realized how heavy the metal boots were.

“Probly ain’t a good idea to wear ‘em all the time.” Sarah figured as they stuffed them in the Infi-Cube.

“We can’t all be Links.” Emily blushed. This new room had floating magnetic cubes that shifted back-and-forth in midair, certain sides lit up to signify which were magnified. There was a red switch on the wall under a sign that read ‘Repel/Attract’, the arrow pointed at the former as it seemed energy beams flowed away from the cubes. The kids got under the first beam as Emily hit the sign with the slingshot, then put on their boots to fly feet-first onto the cube. From here, it was another maze of walking to a certain side of the cubes, hitting the switch to attract to the next one, until they found the right route of connected cubes to get onto the high ledge. Naturally they managed to find a monkey in all this gravity-shifting dizziness before they made it. They reached another door with a computer lodged in.

“Solve this query: the Justice League is to the Avengers, as Aquaman is to . . . ?”

Emily thought for a second. “…Ant-Man.”

“Answer was: ‘Ant-Man’. Status update: Still acceptable. You may proceed.” With that, the door opened again as the kids entered. “For making it this far, it’s safe to decree you high school graduates at best. Heh, don’t pat yourself on the back, from my position I can hardly distinguish a difference between any lower level.”

“Hehehe, did you hear that guys, I’m already at high school level even though I never finished elementary!” Emily scratched her reacting skin cells.

“We helped, too.” Her friends chorused. They were exposed to another vast room over a dark chasm, requiring the use of their M.A.G.N.E.B.O.O.T.S. as a sideways metal path rotated like a planet. When a part of the path rotated past them, they quickly stepped on and felt the dizziness kick in as the sideways world whirled over them. They stomped along to the path’s top, and right above was another rotating device of four bars with magnetic platforms on the ends. They pulled their legs up to attract the boots to the panels, then waited for them to rotate beside a panel on a following device, then another, until they dropped down on a complex of rotating pathways that they inevitably had to follow. There were electric bars suspended in midair on various sides of the complex, so the kids had to avoid touching them whenever they flew by.

The many alternate paths were annoying to cross considering how slow they moved in their boots, as well as the fact they couldn’t jump incoming electric bars, just wait for them to go by before moving quickly. A monkey was clutching a bar on the exposed interior of an area, but two consecutive electric bars glided over that spot. Just when the second passed, Emily quickly stomped to the edge closest the monkey and swung him in her net, then returned to her friends in the safe spot just before the first bar zapped her. Eventually they located a lever within an interior bar, flipped it with the Stun Club, and activated a Heli-Glider at the top. They were forced to make their way to the top of the structure, avoiding bars that came behind them now, and took turns flying the glider to the safe foothold against the wall.
They found a new Heli-Glider facing an over-chasm of electric walls with gaps in-between, and giant fans along the sides, overhead, and below. A lever beside them would activate the fans and turn them off, so only one could go at a time. Since Emily was the bigshot smarty, she… told Gary to go first, and Sarah shrugged in agreement XD. She stuck his Flyer in the device, twirled, and floated forward. Emily flipped the lever before Gary hit the electric wall, the fan blowing him rightward so he could enter the gap, followed by a fan on his right that blew left so he could enter this gap, then stopped twirling and yelled Emily to stop so he could recompose. The next gap was above a short distance, but considering the momentum, he told Emily to activate, inched forward, then immediately yelled her to stop the moment he breezed upward, so he could be level and enter the gap, then told her to reactivate so the next fan could blow him higher above the electric.

A new fan on his left blew Gary rightward—he yelled Emily to stop before an overhead fan, which would blow him down into an electric tunnel using momentum. He yelled Emily to activate, glided forward quickly, and breezed into the slanted tunnel, not hesitating to keep his momentum, and landed on the floor with a great need for breath. Finally, he flipped a switch to disable all the electric walls, watching the Heli-Glider return to his friends so they could take turns coming over. They entered a new, more expansive hallway where they stood atop a ledge, at level with the head of a robot the size of a house, designed like Spock’s head.

Emily eagerly hopped into the cockpit and rode it down, smashing and bashing the tanks and smaller robots that tried to hold her back. She could blast mini missiles from Spock’s eyes, and his long ears could thrust forward and punch like fists. At the very end of the passage stood a Specterbot, controlled by the same smoking capuchin that stole Emily’s glasses. The Specterbot swung its fists and pushed Spockbot onto its back, but Emily helped it back up with a ready expression and flew forward, head-butting the Specter against the wall. She tried to force the robo Spock head to smash the monkey, but Specterbot countered its force and shoved off, leaping atop the cranium, and aggressively punching down as Emily ducked in the cockpit. Emily rapidly whooshed the steering wheel and spun Spock around and around, the Specterbot falling on its rear. Emily lay the Spockbot on top and pushed the self-destruct. She hurriedly jumped off to let both robots explode.

The monkey lay dizzily defeated as Emily swiped back her old glasses and netted the shifty monkey—whom was named Ricky. The face of Spockbot landed beside Emily, a tear leaking from its eye. Emily sniffled and began to cry, making the Vulcan Salute. “Good-bye, Leonard Nimoy! Sniff!”

They had more than the required monkeys and were able to enter the final door. “Dr. Sheldon Lee Cooper welcomes you into his private domain. Again, don’t feel so proud of yourselves, I once let a Master’s Degree in here. I am, however, obligated to offer you a hot beverage, so please, stay out of my spot on the couch and enjoy.” (End song.)

This room was smaller and much less security-heavy. There were two floors, comic books and videogames lined the shelves, a brown couch with three spots sat before a TV, and on the second floor, they saw piles of books stacked around a computer desk, as well as the tops of what seemed like whiteboards. “Hum. Guy has a nice place.” Gary said.

“I wouldn’t mind living here!” Emily beamed, happily going to plop onto the left cushion of the couch. “AAAAH!” A punching bag in the backrest punched her away.

“That’s my spot.” The siblings looked at the stairs to the second floor. The renowned scientist, owner of this laboratory, Dr. Sheldon Cooper came down. He was a man in his 30s, with dark-brown hair on an ovoidal head. His slim, stretchy body made him look like a praying mantis, and his eyebrows curved in a way that would make him look like Joker if he were smiling. He wore a red shirt with The Flash’s symbol, dark-blue jeans, and brown shoes.

Sarah and Gary helped Emily up as she straightened her hair and fixed her glasses. “Are you Uncle Sheldon?”

“Oh Lord, my sister didn’t have another child without my supervision, did she?” he asked.

“Er, no, she’s our friend, Emily, we told ‘er about you and she wanted to see.” Sarah explained.

“See what?”

“See you.”

“See me and then what?”

“She wanted to MEET you.” Gary yelled.

“You couldn’t’ve said that from the start, honestly you kids need to work on your wording if you plan to follow my footsteps.”

“He’s got a point, Sar.” Em said, earning a glare from her friend. She then approached the tall, lanky man, her sweatglands and skin cells reacting. “M-M-Mr. Cooper, my name’s Emily Garley, and-and uh, you have a really awesome lab, I can just tell you’re a really smart guy, I-I-uh, hehehehe.”

“Pfft, ‘SMART’, it’s so silly, the things children say when they know so little.” Sheldon stifled laughs, going into the room’s kitchen. “Though I commend your prowess in making it in here, it took Wolowitz 3 hours by himself.” He poured 3 cups of cocoa for his guests. “For your first time, Ms. Garley, you deserve something special.” So after bringing their cocoa, he went to a desk, pulled out a sticker, and stuck it on Emily’s labcoat. “For you.”

She glanced down at the (upside-down) sticker of a cat saying ‘Me-Wow!’. “Lovely. …Um, Dr. Cooper, why are there a bunch of monkeys in your lab?”

“Oh, one of my colleagues paid a visit and needed a place to put them. I let them out in the farmland, all of a sudden they come back wearing these flashing helmets, tearing up the place. They started building a satellite outside, now when I try to watch the new Green Lantern cartoon on my television, all I get is some crummy knockoff called Cyan Flashlight. Makes the Green Lantern film look badass.”

“Well, Dr. Cooper, we might actually know the cause of these happenings.” Emily scratched her head. “Actually, they originated from my grandfather’s lab in Adams Tech Co..”

“Your grandfather works for Adams Tech?” he asked with fascination.

“Her grandfather IS Allister Adams!” Gary proclaimed.

“My word! If Stephen Hawking hadn’t already occupied the seat (no pun intended), Professor Adams might almost be up there as my intellectual equal.”

“You see what I mean with this guy?” Gary whispered to Em.

“Oh, you’re a fan of my grandfather?”

“I respect him for climbing up there, but really he should be a ‘fan’ of me.”
“I… see.” Emily stared indifferently. “Dr. Cooper, we came because we were wondering if you could help in capturing all of these monkeys, because, um, they’re setting up a bunch of TV stations around the world and ruining all of our favorite shows. You’ll help us, won’t you, ‘cause you can’t possibly allow such atrocities to go unpunished??”

“Hmmm… well, if it was a choice between this and, what other nonsense passes for TV nowadays,
I suppose… but where exactly did it say I would allow a group of children the use of my, dare I say, HOLY technology and possessions?”

“Dare I say, this particular child has more intelligence than atoms in an eraser! I clearly reached ‘Master’s Degree’ level when I’m still technically in elementary school.”

“Kmm, I was just finishing high school at your age. I just wish puberty didn’t hit during my college graduation. If you want to so much as touch my remote control, PROVE you are worthy of the patience of the mind of Sheldon Cooper.”

“All right, Dr. Cooper… if that’s your game, I challenge you to a battle! A battle of wits!”

“Hahahah!” The scientist laughed like a puppy.

“Something funny?”

“A battle of wits, goodness you’d think I’m in kindergarten.”

“So Mr. Smartest-ass-in-kindergarten is afraid of being smarted by a brat like me?”

“I have grown eons beyond the idea of fear and intimidation, your meager ‘taunts’ mean nothing-”

“Chicken Maaaan, Dr. Sheldon in the Chicken Cooperrrr, bawky-snort, baaaawwwwk!”

“Oh, hardly-”

“Lay any eggs Dr. Cooper, we can make a great Sheldomelet!”

Sheldon was twitching. “Hu- all right, then. As annoying and as better off they would be as tests for new vaccinations, I suppose children are the future, and what’ll our future be without the ability to learn. However very limited in knowledge. Name your game, Ms. Girley.”

“Garley.” She fixed her glasses. “I’ll base my game from something I read in a manga: the Liars’ Game. I don’t suppose you have a lie detector?”

“Do I have, I am gonna make you weep.” Sheldon walked away and returned with the mechanical device with twin helmets.

“Convenient. Let’s put these on.” Emily took one helmet while Sheldon placed on the other. “Now the game: The two of us thoroughly examine each other and, based on anything we’ve determined, we have to say a quality that applies to the other person in the form of a sentence, as if we outright know that quality and are speaking the truth. The first person to speak an incorrect quality about the other is deemed a liar. Of course, if we’re lying about our accusation, the detector will detect it.
Shall we test it?”

“Alright. …You wear rounded square glasses.”

“You look like a praying mantis.”

“Ah- I do not! Gzzzzzzz!” The detector immediately shocked Sheldon.
“Hu hu hu- snort!” Emily laughed, already won. “But here are the rules: you can’t say anything about what we look like (i.e. I have blonde hair and large feet), but you can state other things that relate to them, nor can you say anything you have in common with the other person. You may also provide reasons or evidence for your judgments should the need befit you. Do I make myself clear?”

“Clear as snow when it’s scorchin’. …As my mother would say.”

“You may go first, Dr. Cooper.”

“You have gone first, Ms. Garley.”

“Very spot-on.” Emily was calm and steady, with a look behind her glasses that stated she was focused. “But in future instances, you may go first. Back to me… judging by the quality of this ‘Fortress of Solitude’, and your relative age, it’s no doubt you attained a doctorate at an unusually young age, in your teens at the very least.”

“…That is true.” Sheldon nodded. “Now I surmise you have a skin condition, although minor, as your regular scratching in various areas is very eye-catching.”

“…True.” In fact, Emily had been scratching itchy areas nearly the whole time they were talking, and had just scratched the side of her neck. She closed her eyes and thought intently, trying to feel the very atmosphere of this interior. “By the feel of the intriguingly warm, still air via your ventilation system as well as the presence of Flagrance Delight, it’s clear as carbon dating that you’re a germaphobe.”

Sheldon wanted to protest, but remembered his position. “…I am something of a germaphobe, yes. You clearly have a fascination with microbiology, for aside from your persona of a scientist, young girls tend to have the adoration for subjects of miniature size, and no doubt you were teased a lot for being a relative of the infamous nonexistent monster of the large soles, you imagined being of superior size and crushing them.”

“…Also true.” Emily was sweating slightly. “At some point in your life, you found the concept of love or emotion to be inane.”

“Khm, and you have not.” He scoffed.

“You’re right.” Emily stated proudly. “I won’t deny having a schoolgirl crush and I’m proud to have feelings for the cutest boy ever. You were raised under strict authority of a devoted Christian mother, ergo your recurring remarks of the deity that doth not exist.”

“Hmph.” Sheldon’s way of confirming this truth without confirming. “I’m given to understand we’ve seen our fair amount of science fiction, judging by your so-called inventions of a makeshift lightsaber, transportation net, and radar from a certain game series, your cube containing a sub-dimension from a classic television show, as well as your magnetic boots from another game, you have little to no originality in the basis of your inventions.”

“… … … Yes.” She became more angry at Sheldon’s smug smile, clearly enjoying displaying his knowledge in such a way. “You enjoy getting brain scans.”

“Almost as much as I enjoy Boggle with Stephen Hawking.” He spoke dreamily. “You have quite the oversized ego, for you most rudimentarily deemed yourself better than your peers in school that you’ve developed the idiotic sensation you can best a being of intelligence who far exceeds the modern-day mammal.”
“I’m proud to say it: I’m the smartest girl where I live while everyone else is dumb as a sack of rocks. But THAT’S no different from where YOU’RE from, ergo you’ve broken the rule of saying something you’ve in common with the other person.”

“. . . . .” Sheldon began to twitch again. He moved his mouth as if implying to want to say something, but no words came out.

“YES!! I WIN, I WIN!” Emily pulled the helmet off.

“Oh PLEASE, I threw you that game out of respect and-GZZZZZT!” Shocked.

“Hu hu hu- snort! But if it matters any, I would like to play again with you. Only this time, we have to say facts that we both have in common.” She put her helmet back on.

“Well, then I wish you the best of luck, because asides from my and your ‘superiority’ to my and your peers, we’ll hardly find anything that we share.”

“Oh, I disagree strongly, Dr. Cooper.” Emily smirked. “And if I may begin, I will say… we both love comic books and manga.”

“Correct. …We both have deep admiration for science, regardless of whose intelligence is superior.”

“We both find the traditions of religions intriguing, but a waste of time.”

“We both tried to develop our own artificial intelligence into a self-designed robot.”

“If the aptitude of our brains corresponded with the hotness of supermodels, ours would always be on the cover!” Emily flushed and wiggled.

“Both of us dreamed of being the sole savior of the planet in a sci-fi fantasy!”

“Both of us SOOOOO wanted to hold a real lightsaber!”

“Both of us deceived our neighbor into thinking he won a sweepstakes trip to Tatooine, hah! hah! hah! How would any Earth organization get in touch with a thug-riddled desert planet?!”

Gary and Sarah lounged on the couch (not Sheldon’s spot) guzzling chips, waiting for what seemed like hours for their game to be done. “We both weren’t surprised when our first laser gun worked.” continued Emily.

“We both love to listen to lectures of lesser scientists, just for a good laugh.”

“We both have a specific barber we set our eyes on to get our hair just right, no one else.”

“We both…. uhhh, we both… uhhh, what is your middle name?”

“Adams.”

“HUUUU, both of our full names have 16 letters!!”

“OH MY NAMELESS DEITY, both of ours so do!! Is that a model trainset, do we both find the mechanics of trains to be fascinating-?”

“YES WE DO!!”
Sarah and Gary had plugged their ears shut. Emily and Sheldon threw their helmets off as they touched each other’s shoulder, the latter bent down for Emily. They both had giddy faces. “Well, Miss Garley, I have clearly misjudged you! When I look at you, I can only make the distinction my sister had a daughter who turned up a Junior Shelly!”

“Hu hu hu snort! I am getting 101% in math. Ask me any question about math and I’ll answer!”

“All right. …How many screws make up this hideout?”

“Let’s see. Hmmmm…” Emily closed her eyes and thought. She must estimate the size of this laboratory and its complexity to the best of her ability. “I would guess… about…. Seventy-thousand-four-hundred-and-twenty-two.”

“. . . . . . .” Sheldon’s jaw almost dropped.

“Give or… take a few?” Emily blushed.

“Astonishing. I think I finally found my successor.”

“What’ve we done, Gare.” Sarah frowned.

“The unspeakable, Sar.”

“Alright, Ms. Garley, I will consider allowing you the use of my supplies for your noble mission. Um, if I may, however, could I scan your brain?”

“Holy cow, I would LOVE a brainscan!!”

“You said you two didn’t have that in common.” the friends chorused.

“No, I just never had a brainscan before, ergo had no established opinion of getting them, but I would’ve LOOOOVED to get one!” Emily flushed.

“Then please, step into my private quarters!” Sheldon directed her to a doorway in the back. “Goodness, I’m getting the jeebies just thinking about the amount of sparks that occur per second!”

“Me too, huhuhu!” Emily jumped and excitedly trotted to the back room. She had entered and shut the door while Sheldon was still following, but he first looked back to his niece and nephew on the couch.

“Eh; point of interest you should know, at first glance you might assume I got the idea of a secret underground laboratory from the Batcave, but when I was constructing it, I was thinking of Mermalair from Spongebob. Even the part about the couch that tilts you into the slide!” Less than interested, Gary and Sarah munched away their chips. Sheldon pressed a remote, a trapdoor opened behind the couch, which flew back and sent the siblings sliding down. “WHOOOOooooaaa!”

Sheldon pushed the button and closed the trapdoor before going to the back room. “I wonder if Specter could brainwash viewers with Spongebob as it is, that show’s got enough garbage.”

Sand Kingdom

Half an hour passed as wind blew furiously, freezing under the dark of knight, Shelly keeping a hand raised to shield herself from the sand, while her other hand was cupped on her ear to shield
Gonshiri, no matter how much she wanted to hug herself and warm her freezing skin. “If you were going to attempt some harebrained rescue mission, you could have prepared a more pleasant abode.” The Minish stated, lying in a pile of earwax. “Such as cleaning your ear out for instance, it’s FILTHY!”

“Yeah, I’m regretting it too, hearing your loud-mouth complaints so close. Next time, I’ll stuff you where I can’t hear you.”

“The typical response of a devolved Neanderthal, it’s uncanny how much earwax one accumulates in such a time.”

“Well, I was expecting you to clean it out anyway, you ARE a servant.”

“Hmph. You clearly underestimate the fortitude of my stomach.”

“If I hear any puking, you’re going in the back…”

They lost track of time since Shelly started walking, with still plenty of desert to go. Finally, Shelly sat against a tree and shuddered for warmth, clutching her arms tight while her bare legs remained frigid. “This is why I question your desire to wear nothing but that filthy swimwear.” Gonshiri stated.

“Just sh-shut up and get in my hair.” Shelly told her, pulling her crown off.

“A step up from earwax, I suppose.” The tiny Minish hopped from her ear to Shelly’s thick forest of black hair. Using her bending, Shelly made a small crater of sand to lie in, pulling her towel cape off and using it for a blanket. “Good news is… it’s nice and hot tomorrow.” Shelly lay her head on the sandy ground and shortly drifted to sleep, keeping both of them warm for the night.

As Shelly predicted, it was hot and sunny the next day, but with no wind and sandstorm to impede their progress, Shelly could walk forward effortlessly with only a scorching sun to make her sweat. Gonshiri still kept cool inside her ear. “I hope you don’t expect me to bathe in that filth you excrete on an hourly basis.”

“I wouldn’t want some ant polluting it. You don’t think I wouldn’t want a bath myse-” But at that instant, her stomach growled.

“Ugh, and there’s no greater annoyance than the empty stomach of a beast.”

“Well, I’d ask you to fill that stomach, but your pitiful size wouldn’t help much. Sigh, don’t these barren deserts have at least SOME kind of oasis?”

“Only by the will of foolish Minish travelers who go into the desert.”

Shelly stopped and squinted her eyes, holding a hand above her eyes as she searched. “…What’s that?” A green, tropical area lay in the distance.

“Oh, it’s probably just an illusion.” Shiri eye-rolled.

“You aren’t even looking, Bug. It LOOKS pretty real.”

“Because simple, stupid brutes can’t even make good use of their own eyes. I guarantee the moment you get there, it’ll be all desert.”

There…
“Aaaaaahhhhh…” Shelly lied back in relaxation and rested her feet in the cool, clear oasis pool, her face shaded by a palm tree’s leaves.

“Okay… perhaps I misjudged your vision, Brute.” Shiri admitted.

“A common mistake, Ant.” Shelly smiled, picking her nose and wiping boogers in the grass. “Those who doubt the queen are sure to face humili- Ow!” An apple fell from the tree and hit her face.

“At least I’ll be able to silence that rumbling.” Shiri stated, standing on the fruit after cutting it down.

Shelly grabbed the apple and sat up with a smirk. “No kidding!”

“Aaaah!” Shiri jumped off quickly before Shelly munched her giant teeth in the fruit. She lied back on the grass while Shiri lay on Shelly’s belly, the latter placing the fruit beside her so the Minish could eat.

“Lemme ashk you shomething though, Bug Queen.” Shelly spoke through chews, swallowing. “Why did they want to take you?”

“How in the world should I know that. What Minish understands the mind of any brute?”

“Far harder for us brutes to read such tiny, tiny brains. How do I know you aren’t hiding something from me?”

“But, why ever would I hide something from my dear master?” she bowed sarcastically. “’Tis my duty to report anything, lest I meet a terrible fate.”

“Well, why do you think they wanted to take you?” Another munch of the apple.

“Well, as a Minish, I can’t imagine being of use to ANY human besides as a slave. …Well, I suppose my plantbending.”

Swallow. “Plantbending?”

“Sigh, I was born with unusually large Plantbending Chi. They made me study all sorts of forms with it, and in doing so, I also studied earthbending. ‘Tis part of a Minish’s natural heritage after all.”

“How good is it?”

“To an extent, I guess it’s worth a few thousand blurpleberries.”

“Can you show me?”

“Ohhh… if I must.” Shiri hopped into the grass as Shelly got to her knees. The Minish princess closed her eyes and waved her hands smoothly as grass and flowers began to grow rapidly around the oasis. Shelly gaped as she was suddenly risen into the air by strings of vines, taking her about 40 feet as a throne formed for her to sit on. Her arms rested on two rests as all kinds of flowers bloomed around her, some taking the form of a hand as it poured water into a cup-like flower, and poured it down Shelly’s throat. Some vines began to rub her shoulders and feet while the human princess lied back in both relaxation and astonishment.

A vine then stretched over for Gonshiri to stand before Shelly’s face. “What- …You can really do “Well, I suppose any decent plantbender can, but I’m supposed to be able to do more… or something.”

“Well, why didn’t you do this to escape?!”

“Obviously, because I can only bend plants where plants exist. I was born with the power to grow and manipulate the life force of any plant, including extinct ones. I can bring any dead plant back to life. At least… that’s what the elders told me.”

“So is that why my dad had you kidnapped?"

“If I could assume, but I still don’t know why. I wouldn’t begin to attempt to understand your dimwitted family.” And with a snap of her fingers, the plant tower and throne shrunk back to the ground.

“WAAAAAHH- UUH!” Causing Shelly to fall on her face.

Gonshiri lightly came down with a flower umbrella and landed on her shoulder. “Thus is my crazy superpower. A little something to show as we’re indefinitely on the run.”

“Yeah yeah, I’ll think of something.” She bit her apple again. “I don’t suppose you have any particular retreats we can go to at the top of your head?”

“Well… there is one. My mom said that if I ever became lost, I should go to the Boggly Woods and see the Punies.”

“Punies, ah? Sound like fun people to bully. Where is it?”

“Around the northern edge of Kochi, Japan.”

Shelly instantly collapsed. “Well, that’s an awful long way to retreat, isn’t it?”

“At least I had the brains to think of something…”

“Sigh, whatever. Let’s look for a town or something and maybe hitch a ride to the nearest harbor. …’t’s gonna take a lot of swindling to get enough change.” After grabbing some fruit from the oasis, the royals continued their walk across the desert. (Play “Gerudo Desert” from Zelda: Twilight Princess.)

Stage 25: Sand Kingdom

Mission: Attempt to find a means of getting to Japan.

Act 1: Dusty Desert

And so began Princess Shelly’s grand walk across the desert. Not like it hadn’t begun last night. Being a princess on the run really was a joy. And what a poor choice of clothing, not that she’d admit it to Gonshiri. Like the start of any desert level, naturally Shelly was attacked by Moldorms jumping out at her, easy to blast away with gushes of sand she blew out of the ground. She trekked over a hill and down the other side, coming to a gorge area with a few platforms she couldn’t jump to from here. But it wasn’t a deep pit, so she dropped onto the ground below where a shallow, thin river flowed. There was a patch of soil at the base of a platform, but they weren’t sure if a seed was in there. “Then why don’t you use Seismic Sense, Master Earthbender.” Gonshiri remarked. “Search the ground for any possible seeds.”

Rolling her eyes, Shelly closed her eyes and felt the earth closely. She wasn’t that good at sensing around the sand yet, but nothing was in the soil. She walked around the gorge floor and sensed a few tiny objects beneath. She thrust up a gush of sand at one spot, and only got a pebble. She thrust up at another, and when the beetle tried to nip her toe, she smooshed it. Then finally, a spot of sand had a seed underneath, which Shelly placed into the soil. “Water it a little.” Shiri told her. “I may be able to revive dead plants, but I haven’t yet perfected the skill, help me out.”

Sighing again, Shelly scooped up some water and dropped it onto the soil. Shiri jumped down beside the soil and waved her arms until the seed grew into a skimpy beanstalk, which was very skinny for Shelly’s huge hands, and very weakly supported her weight as she climbed up, with Shiri back on her shoulder.

Shelly jumped the few platforms, although the last one was too far from the following path, so with a quick and precise stomp, Shelly flung the foothold off its perch and against the cliff, but went stumbling forward due to her near-miss aiming. Shiri didn’t much appreciate the sudden stumbling of her giant vessel, and scolded Shelly as they recovered. They followed a route carved between some sand mounds before arriving at a distant lake of quicksand. Shelly wouldn’t dream of attempting to cross such unstable sand, but there were a few tall pillars with cacti atop them leading to a small isle. Shiri could use her exceedingly light weight to run across the sand and get to the first pillar, hopping her way up to stretch long vines from under the cacti.

Using this, she wrapped vines around Shelly’s arms to hold her up as she stomped across the quicksand, sinking a quarter way. She was getting too far for the vines to reach, so she kept those vines holding her while she rushed to the following pillar, using that cacti’s vines to keep Shelly up further. The human eventually made it to the safe isle as Gonshiri skipped over to join her. They had no way of getting across the further sea, but a soil patch was stationed at the edge. She didn’t find anything under this ground, but saw a taller isle a few meters from this one. “Just make platforms appear out of the sand.” Shiri told her. Shelly sensed the earth under the sand to the isle and stomped the ground to make some unstable platforms come out. “I hoped for better results than that.”

Shelly rolled her eyes and proceeded to jump the platforms, nearly losing balance as they shook, but regained herself and got onto the isle before they fell. There was dead grass planted, and when Shelly felt around the isle, she forced up a few small coins and a seed. But with the platforms fallen, Shelly had to thrust a piece of this isle over to the other one, collapsing on the sudden, forceful impact. She planted the seed- “Water!” “Uuuuugh!” and after searching this isle again, there was an odd cavern of water below, so she thrust up and yanked the stream out of the ground like oil, the fountain sprinkling onto the soil so Shiri could stretch a sail-vine across part of the sand. Its slippery surface made grinding easy, though gave Shelly a foot-cram while trying to keep balance, but Shiri couldn’t keep stretching the vine before they got too far and Shelly’s weight started to sink it. She unfortunately fell in the sand and frantically tried raising it when she began to sink. An Ampilus was conveniently nearby, and when the crustacean rolled at her in its shell, a thrust of her arms to the left forced the crab on its side with a gush of sand.

Shelly dropped to and safely stood on the snail, though with the very weak flow, it would surely sink before long. However, they noticed they were close to a tiny isle with a little hook-like sprout, and when Shiri used her bending to make it grow, a Peahat emerged. Shiri called it over as Shelly grabbed tight to its roots, dirt falling onto her face as Shiri made it fly them to the shore. It was growing very weak from Shelly’s forceful grip, but were close enough to shore to drop off and get on. They followed a slope downward to another wide, but not deep gorge, with only a single small platform in its center, and soil at the edge where she stood. Shelly dropped down and viewed the gorge bottom, which had another shallow river, and headed for the cliff on the other side. “Dare I ask why not prepare a ledge for yourself?”

While Shelly wished to avoid another snarky remark, she’d get one anyway. “OW!” In attempting to yank a ledge out, she was flung away by its sudden, though very unstable, appearance. “I see.” said Shiri. So with an annoyed sigh, Shelly began to search the earth for seeds. She sprouted up a few Leevers and Cheep-Cheeps, but when she searched around a crack in the wall, she punched it open to reveal a secret cave. “At least a Neanderthal knows how to break things.” Inside this cave was a chasm where rock piles appeared to be clogging holes in the walls, and when Shelly used bending to force them out, sandfalls poured. With very careful timing, Shelly jumped to each consecutive fall, made a brief, though weak sand-foothold, and made it to the following ledge. She sensed and forced a seed out of the ground, then had to jump across again to safety.

To get back onto the ledge, there were little sand patches with platforms of varying height underneath, which Shelly had to stomp up and use as stairs before they sank. She planted the seed, but then had to go down and scoop water in her hands. It was a little more tricky to stomp and jump the platforms while keeping her hands steady, but managed this as she splashed the water onto the soil. Shiri whirled her arms to make it grow and- “WHOA!” both leaped back when a long vine with a yellow plunger foot popped out. It further emerged, revealing a round, orange, yellow-spotted head with white pupils inside black oval-eyes, and a frowny face. The rest of it emerged, the other long plunger-leg, as the leg sticking up fell toward the gorge and latched on the middle platform.

From here, its other leg was about to lift up from the ledge and bend to the other one, so Shelly grabbed hold of it and flew over with it. The Bramball kept repeating this across the following road, but Shelly could run ahead. They arrived at another sand sea with many little isles scattered about below. Shelly could stomp the closest one to make it level with her ledge, but too far to jump. The Bramball was catching up, and they watched as one of its flexible legs flipped over to the foothold. They realized they needed to guide the Bramball around a maze of liftable platforms, so Shelly grinded to this current one and kept it standing while Shiri dropped into the quicksand and skittered around to examine the maze. It became a tiring chore for Shiri’s tiny legs, since that sand sea was many miles at her perspective, so studying the order of the huge islands was hard to keep track of. Pokeys were also roaming the quicksand, but Shiri was far too tiny to be seen by them. Eventually, she returned to Shelly’s platform and reported the order.

She continuously raised whichever platform they wanted the Bramball to stretch to, until they achieved the right order. But it seemed the area before the new path had no platform, but as a Pokey was in the vicinity, they waited for it to move between the platform and the cliff so the Bramball could step off it, to the path, and let them cross. But if they followed an alternate route, they could get to a strange floating sock in midair (needing a Pokey to reach it), but since it looked too small for Shelly, she had no interest. The Bramball was still going, following a downward slope as they made it to a small lake of crystal-clear water. The ledge on the other side was too high to climb to, and the Bramball wouldn’t get in the water. “I suppose you don’t know how to swim.” Gonshiri implied.

“Pfft, better than YOU, Centiworm.”

“Yes, unfortunately you may need my assistance down there, so a worthwhile container is necessary.” Sighing once again at her naggingness, Shelly threw off her towel-cape and bucket and dove into the cool water. She swam a little bit and was fairly decent, but never really dove this deep or held her breath this long. Even worse when she had to keep her hands planted on the ground, keep herself from pushing away, and just as well focus on holding her breath AND sense around for useful stuff. She survived by breathing air bubbles that puffed out of gaps, and after much keeping-her-hands-on-ground, she forced a small jar out from under the sand. She gasped for breath at the surface, and held her jar down for Gonshiri to get in. But as there was no lid, Shelly had to plant a hand over the top to hold the air in as she dove under again; putting full attention in keeping her hand over lest Shiri drown in a millisecond.

She swam to odd-looking seaweeds which Shiri could sprout with her bending – despite the glass barrier in her way, and make lilipads rise to the surface. The pads were large, but too light to support Shelly’s weight. But once they were aligned between both ledges, the Bramball began crossing, so Shelly hurriedly got on to ride its longlegs. She let Shiri onto her shoulder and raced down the slope to the open desert. There wasn’t anything to stop her from reaching the town miles ahead, so she went for it. Although, she looked left and noticed a secret area where far-apart platforms aligned like stairs in a pool onto a highest platform, where another weird sock floated.
They likely had to wait for the Bramball to come all the way there so it can take them up the stairs, but Shelly still bore no interest and proceeded to town.

“It’s astonishing, really, you’ve been using your earthbending for 5 months to humiliate a first-grader, but when it comes to using it in a natural environment, you can’t even fling a decent boulder.” Shiri mentioned on the way. “Have you really been neglecting earthbending training the entire time you were away?”

“Well, you aren’t really the best PLANTbender either, puttin’ up a decent show in that oasis, I expected you to turn a dead seed into a forest.”

“Look, my guardians TOLD me I had that power, but a lot of the training was forced on me, and frankly it was annoying, and plantbenders are supposed to have good ‘bonds with nature’, which I’ve had less than an interest for. You, on the other hand, possess the recurring dimwittedness earthbenders bring, you should’ve been more than excellent at the skill.”

“Well, it’s hard to practice openly with so many LESS-graders running around. Plus, I had duties to eye over my school and my kingdom, so I didn’t have time to train.”

“Yes. Your tiny, tiny kingdom.”

Finally, they arrived at the old rundown desert town, populated by people in Arabian robes or very raggedy clothing, small buildings with cracked walls and wooden windows, and goats and chickens roaming freely while kids chased them. “I must ask you, Sandshrew, do any of these subjects know you’re their queen?”

“Well, we’re… kind of a secretive monarchy. Like on Beauty and the Beast.”

“Ahh, the dramatic truth, your egotism and high opinion over your twerps is making the inner turmoil, you have nothing.”

“Yeah, well how many of your subjects care about YOU, Dumbbutt?” Shelly snapped as she entered the city street. “I don’t even NEED followers, I kick my own butt, but none of YOUR friends’ve ever come to rescue you, yet.”

“Perhaps, but I’m still more highly respected and regarded than you’ll ever be.”

“Siiigh.”

They passed a small cage of chickens to a small, shaded alley, where Shelly sat against a wall while Shiri dropped to the ground to rest. “Just how in the world did you plan to get to Japan?”

“Even if I were able to continue my training with the elders, I didn’t have any care for going there at first, and assumed they would provide me with transportation. How’m I to expect when Neanderthals trudge out of nowhere and snatch me for their tweezers?”

“Well, you won’t find any cash stuck to my feet, unless particular grains of sand serve as some form of currency.” She brushed her feet of any sand. “How are we gonna scrounge up enough dough to pay for a plane to Kochi?”

“Don’t know.” Shiri was scraping off what little dirt she acquired off her toes. “But I’m sure your hare brain will concoct another harebrained scheme.”

“…” Shelly glanced left and continued down the alley, finding a back area with piles of old bricks and scraps. Shelly picked a single brick up and shook it. “You up for playing dumb?”

Much later

“STEP RIGHT UP, see the moderately intelligent flea!” Shelly announced as customers chucked coins into her bucket crown and entered the alley. “Never saw one like it before it found its way out of my hair, step right up and SEE the flea’s mind work!”

This backyard had an obstacle fortress created out of blocks, and in one corner was an odd-looking flea sniffing about for food in her little enclosing. When Shelly gave the thumbs-up, Shiri grabbed the tiny cardboard’s string in her teeth and pulled it down, skittering into a maze and navigating through it in seconds. She then had to swing a group of strings hanging from twigs attached with tape, then appeared in a passage with floors of super-sticky tape with little pebbles around it. Shiri leaped to each pebble with careful precision, before arriving at the next passage where she had to roll a pebble (boulder at her size) up a slope and across a narrow, zigzag path. She pushed it off onto a small seesaw that flung a marble against a domino blocking an archway, knocking the array of other dominos down.

After running across the dominos, the flea came to a giant apple piece blocking her path, hurriedly munching and digging a tunnel through to the other side. She ran onto an open field at the ground floor, where two chickens roamed mindlessly, but very gigantic monsters at Shiri’s size. She swiftly evaded their giant beaks as they shot down to smash, but she also had to grab a twig from a pile in her teeth, run to a long, narrow gap, and with great precision, chucked it straight onto the top of a long, standing thin board, causing the weight to shift toward her and fall onto the gap to make a bridge. From here, it was a straight shot to the outside, where she leaped onto Shelly’s foot, to her slanted knee, her naval, her shoulder, and safely to Shelly’s forest of hair.

“She always knows how to find her way home!” Shelly announced as the crowd murmured with interest, chucking extra cash into her bucket.

The girls lied and relaxed in the alley after a few more shows. “Uuugh, you canNOT expect me to keep this up much longer.” Shiri exclaimed with pure numbness in her legs. “Tiny legs are not for acrobatics.”

“Yeah, but at least we made a little over a few bucks. Er… assuming this country’s money complies with American money. Maybe we can also sell you for service, quick clean out my nose and ears and we’ll time you.”

“I am NOT selling myself to that, it’s bad enough scouring ONE mountain of dung, I can’t IMAGINE what these filth bring.”

“You never had to scour my dung.”
“I was referring to your being.”

“Hello there.” The girls’ hearts skipped a beat at the sight of an elderly man in a yellow robe with withered dark skin, white beard, and strange narrowed black eyes.

“Uhhh you here for the show?” Shelly asked.

“I hears you havin’ some money issues.” He spoke in a dark, gruff voice.

“Where’d you hear that?”

“You runnin’ a flea show and gots only a swimsuit.”

“….Your point?”

“I know a place you can get some money. This map shows you to a temple, jus’ northeast of here.” He handed Shelly some parchment, which had a wrinkled map of town and the desert around it, with a northeast area circled. “Plenty o’ treasure in there.”

Shiri hopped onto Shelly’s shoulder as they viewed the map with interest. “Hmmm… but what’s your catch? Why show it to us, intending to ‘share’ some of the money with us? …” When the girls looked up, the man was already gone. “Yello?”

“Well, let’s just see where it leads us.” Gonshiri said. “Better than what we have.”

So Shelly kept her eyes on the map as they left town and trekked several miles across the desert. She followed the general direction of what it said best she could, but didn’t see any sign of a temple nearby. But after walking up a hill, the sand became more straight, and Shelly soon felt flat ground under her feet. “Hm?” Glancing away from the map for a brief moment, she noticed her foot was just inches from a hole broken into some golden-brown surface. Shelly got on all fours and peeped her eye into the hole, seeing what seemed to be a floor below. “Hm. This looks kinda weird.” She got back up and attempted to stomp the ground open. “I can’t break it.”

“It must be chi-protected. Let me look.” Gonshiri leapt off Shelly’s shoulder and studied the hole. “Wait… I know what this is. It’s a Minish Portal!”

“A what?”

“An artificial one, at least. This looks like an ancient temple dug underground by Minish.” Shiri jumped into the hole. “And there’s still Minish Dust! Shelly, stand over the hole.”

Shrugging, the princess planted her feet on either side of the hole. She watched as a swirl of green dust came up and circled her form. In a puff of green smoke, “WHOOOOOOOOO!” she went falling into the hole, hitting a floor below. She shook to her senses and got back up, Shiri walking beside her at precisely her height.

“Well, it’s nice we finally get to see eye to eye.” she remarked.

It was a weird sight for both of them, really, the two being exactly the same height. Looking Shelly in the eyes directly, Gonshiri couldn’t believe those were the same mountain-size feet, the same thick forest of hair, and the ears and navel that had been Shiri’s resting quarters, belonging to the same ape of incomprehensible size and unbelievably low intelligence. And Shelly couldn’t believe how that microscopic termite drastically increased in size in the span of a second, or rather, how incredibly small Shelly had become in that time. It was so weird looking at Shiri this way, she was totally used to her being 1/4th the size of her pinky toe. Not that her new size would alter her attitude in any way. “SHUT UP, Termite, I can kick your can anyday. What is this?”

“I don’t know, but it’s clearly an old Minish temple. I’m not sure why it’s here, but it won’t hurt to find any treasures the man may’ve mentioned. Let’s begin excavating. And please, if walking becomes too much a chore for these itty-bitty legs, don’t feel ashamed about crawling.” She smiled smugly before walking forward.

Shelly followed the Minish with spite. “I really hope I don’t turn out to be a lesbian and fall in love with you.” (Play “Fire/Sand Temples” from Zelda: Spirit Tracks.)

Act 2: Buried Temple

The two princesses followed a corridor around some huge piles of sand; which were essentially small rocks at their size. The door out of this corridor was locked, and Shelly’s earthbending wouldn’t bust it. But she could search the piles of sand, feeling around for any hint of a key with Seismic Sense. Her sense felt stronger somehow, for she found the key buried near the top of a pile and fished it out. She opened the door into a wide room with a low ceiling, where they stood on a safe foothold over a pool of quicksand, waves surfing from the right wall to the left. “Astonishing, the architects of this temple have broken grains of sand into much smaller grains as equivalent to humans. Be careful not to fall in it.” Shiri said.

“I figured that out from the start, Dumbo. Let’s just sandbend across.”

“I figured out that your bending is faulty regardless of chi-blocks, and that some mechanism is constantly stirring the sand to make waves, sure to wash away whatever platforms you make. Hmmm…” On the right wall appeared to be some yellow, decayed vines where a boat-size leaf was rusted and hanging. Gonshiri stood on the edge, stretched her hands forward, and focused her energy in hopes of bringing it. “Nnnnnnn!” The leaf weakly twitched until it snapped from its rusty stem, landing on a passing sandwave as the girls hopped on, surfed like a board, and jumped off on a safe platform while the leaf hit the wall and crumbled. They entered a short, dead-end hallway with cracked structure and a stone lever on the wall. Halfway through, a swarm of Mulldozers, blue and red spotted bugs that moved at frantic speed, dropped in and ran in circles. Shelly and Shiri were knocked down and shoved around with no chance at getting up, it reminded Shelly of the time she told her knights to kick this boy who stole her-

Before she finished that thought, Shelly punched the ground and flipped them all upside-down with a quake, then she pierced all their gooey underbellies with her wooden sword. With that, she flipped the ancient stone lever with her bending, since she couldn’t reach that high, causing the sandwaves outside to shift direction. They now surfed to the right side of the room. Gonshiri plucked down another rusted leaf-boat from their wall, put it on a forming wave, and surfed over. There wasn’t anywhere to go from the new platform, but Minish statues lined the wall to the foothold on the northern side. Shelly punched the wall and made the statues fall horizontal with her bending, the girls jumping across before they crumbled.

The ceiling of the new hallway stretched higher as it went, and yellow blue-striped slugs called Sluggula covered the parallel walls. The entirety of the floor was spikes with Minish skeletons, so Shelly and Gonshiri knew they had to climb the sticky slugs. They climbed along the left wall and couldn’t hold the slugs for too long, lest they detach from the weight. This slug wall reached a dead end before a wilted root, so Gonshiri concentrated her bending to stretch it to the opposite slug wall. They climbed across and climbed up these slugs, making it onto the safe foothold. They stopped and flinched before this new room: an ordinary Aracha slumbered, but was the size of a two-story house and roughly 20 feet long. A key sparkled under its one snoozing eye, and they wouldn’t be reaching for it easy.
They searched the room and found what Shiri recognized as the antenna leaves of 5 Pikmin, which she plucked herself. She guided the creatures to the front and ordered them to pull out the key while the princesses hid behind the doorway. Their little “Hup-to” chants echoed softly, growing fainter in the girls’ ears before the sound of the lock unclicking rang. The girls ducked when the Aracha screeched, sprang to life, and shook the ground by stabbing its tail behind him, followed by the eerie moans of departed Pikmin souls. The Aracha burrowed beneath the ground and was gone, so the princesses seized the moment to run into the door.

They faced a narrow, long hallway where sandwaves surfed down from the other end. On the next-door left wall was a stone lever which Shelly flipped with her bending, making the waves move the opposite way. Gonshiri plucked a dead leaf-boat off the wall so the kids could surf. Though the boat remained steady, it was level with a bar connecting both walls and would likely crash, but seeing a lever on the right, Shelly quickly flipped it with bending, causing the wave to sink and for a new one to flow the other way. Shelly flipped it again, so the wave would lift them, head the intended direction, but allow them to slide beneath the bar while the wave was still rising.

They were about to hit a high ledge, so Gonshiri grabbed Shelly’s hand and leapt to grab a root dangling from the ceiling. The leaf crumbled against the ledge, and after the wave was gone, the girls swung onto the base stair against the wall and climbed onto the foothold. The sandriver on the second half washed their direction, but no leaf-boats were around for their aid. Minish statues lined the left wall, and they saw they led to a row of dangling roots, so Shelly toppled the statues over to serve as platforms. From there, the girls swung the roots, but that’s when they spotted (giant) Sand Tadpolis riding along the waves, attempting to jump and snack on the swinging morsels, so the girls made sure to keep between them while hanging from the roots. The root-vines made a zigzaggy path, but they eventually took land on a left platform.

“There’s the door.” Gonshiri pointed, for the end of the hall was only a short distance. “Know how we can cross the rest of this river?”

“I’m gonna chance it.” Shelly said. “Time for some sandbending!” So after the next wave passed, Shelly quickly pulled a sand pillar up and pulled Shiri on with her, rapidly waving her arms to move it to the doorway, and the moment the sandwave came to wash it down, the girls jumped. “Sigh… there may be hope for you.” Shiri said. The girls entered a small room where the entire floor was sand, but not quicksand at first step. When they stepped onto the center, their body weight was detected by the temple, and the floor began to sink as a whirlpool formed under their feet.

They threatened to sink, but large stones flowed down from the walls to the center, the girls hopping to and around them while the whirlpool itself shifted down like an elevator. Mulldozers fell on the sand and rushed around and around destroying boulder platforms. Shelly grabbed bundles of sand in her bending and splashed it over the bugs to push them to the center and sink them. Fewer boulders appeared to stand on, so Shelly created sand platforms between distant boulders so both girls could cross over. Scissors Beetles were the next enemies to appear, grabbing boulders in their huge pinchers and chucking at the princesses. Shelly threw the boulders back, but more beetles came, so for the rest of the sink, it was hopping to higher boulders and defending from flying boulders.

Finally, their current boulders hit safe ground, the last of the sand swirled into the tiny hole, and Shelly squished the remaining beetles with boulders. They entered a narrow, empty hallway alit with ember rocks that served as Minish torches. (End song.)

“So you bending dead plants… is that like a once-in-a-lifetime skill?” Shelly asked.
“There are plantbenders who can only bend living plants and some who can bend dead plant matter. Those are the rare ones, but no plantbender but myself can control both. Some have called it lifebending.”

“That’s just creepy.”

“It’d be creepier if I could bend flesh beings. Honestly, I never saw this power being special. So I could revive plants, big deal, plants die every day and new ones grow, if I brought the old ones back, I’d be cluttering space. A useless power, it’s all it is.”

The end of the hall led to what seemed like a carved tunnel, sloping up on their left and down on their right. Shelly knelt down, closed her eyes, and put a hand on the floor. “Well, it’s really complex. Can’t see any good direction. I… What’s that?”

The tunnel started quaking, and Shelly felt the source, rising a few meters to their left. “AAAAAEEEERRR!” The girls dodged back to let the giant, pinchered centipede they knew as a Moldorm slither down the tunnel.

“Crap, I never seen one THAT big!!” Shelly exclaimed.

“Yes… but you’ve never seen me so big, either.” (Play the Lizalfos Theme from Zelda: Skyward Sword.)

Boss fight: Moldorm

The girls hurried into the rugged tunnels in search of a way out, finding the area ahead barren. But the caves shook and Shelly felt the Moldorm’s presence looming just below them. “Run!” Shelly grabbed her friend’s hand and dashed forward just when the centipede sprouted up. Its body took the width of the tunnel, the girls running desperately as its pinchers inched closer. “This way!” Shiri ducked into a hole in the wall with Shelly, barely missing the Moldorm. They peeked out and saw its glowing red behind turn a rightward corner. “Let’s go.” Shelly kept running with her Minish friend behind. The tunnels were mazey and they saw no sign of an exit. The earth shook as the Moldorm was stampeding down the road behind them. Seeing no holes nearby, Gonshiri pointed at the roots dangling from a ceiling enclosing, concentrating chi with all her force, and stretched the roots down for both to grab hold and pull up. The Moldorm stampeded away, seeing nothing, and the girls safely dropped down.

“We’re gonna have ta deal with that thing if we wanna go on.” Shelly panted. “But my feet ain’t big enough ta smoosh it now.”

“And this is why Minish study the natural weakness of all bugs.” Gonshiri said calmly. “First, you need eyes to see its glowing red behind.”

“I know how ta recognize a weak behind, but how’re we supposed to damage it?”

“You’re the earthbender. Get behind and send a rock-spear.”

The Moldorm was coming from below, so Shelly pulled Shiri down the opposite cave. Its head popped up, but they only saw the backside as it curiously searched for its prey. It begun to crawl out straight ahead, so Shelly steadied herself, felt the earth, and waited for the opening. The moment the bulbous behind showed, Shelly stomped the rock chunk forward, striking the unfortunate critter. The caves shook harder as it skittered about angrily. Boulders fell from the ceiling and threatened to crush them, but they took cover in a hole to avoid some and evade the Moldorm when it skittered by. “Look out!” Shelly pulled Shiri out before their safe spot itself crumbled in on itself. The shaking hadn’t subsided, for the Moldorm was coming right back around, so the girls bolted.

The Moldorm was quickly catching up, the girls looking desperately for a hole, but no such thing, and the Moldorm would eat them in seconds. “NOW OR NEVER!” Shelly leaped forward, put great force in her feet, and smashed a man-size hole in the ground, the Moldorm just barely scraping her crown by its belly before it passed. “Aaaaah!” She climbed up when Gonshiri screamed, and Shelly realized her friend was still on the run. “GONSHIRI, where are you!”

“On the corner of life and pincheeerrrrs!” Her friend had run back past the crossroads, the Moldorm hot on her tail. Shelly ran out and tried to fling a boulder at its behind; except a steel shell protected the weak spot. “CRUD! It’s got a shield, what should I do!”

“Moldorms ordinarily lower their defense when their underbelly is flipped up!” Gonshiri echoed. Shelly took a minute to calm down, hoping Shiri’s feet moved as fast as they did from bird’s-eye. Shelly focused only on the earth, and when her connection was set, she nimbly spun, swung her arms, and sliced perfect parallel lines into the earth. Gonshiri was heading her way, so Shelly readied, seeing the Moldorm close behind. Quickly, she burrowed beneath a hole, yanked Gonshiri down by her ankles, punched the wall of her hole, and thrusted up the wall she divided from the ground. The cave shook massively as the Moldorm tripped, sliding along its back to a halt. The red rear was exposed, so Shelly stomped and stabbed a rock-spear into it. The Moldorm screamed and burrowed underground again.

Not long after did the ground quake beneath them, and the girls dodged forward before its massive pinchers popped up like a mousetrap. They sank back down, and four consecutive times did it snap up to try and eat them. On the fifth try, it burrowed directly up and through the ceiling. The girls ran when it came down from the ceiling above, through the ground, and kept this pattern repeating.

“You know what you have to do, right?” Shiri asked. (“Uh-huh.”) Shelly nodded as both girls ran separate directions, though the insect went for Shelly again. She dodged anyway, waited, and rock-speared the red rumpus when it passed by. A chunk of the ceiling that was its length collapsed as he fell through. Ravenous and angry, it chased Shelly solely through the tunnels, Gonshiri dodging an alternate way.

“Anytime you wanna help, Princess, it’s fine by me!” Shelly cried.

Gonshiri looked at the broken ceiling and saw wilted roots and leaves dangling. She gripped the rugged wall, climbed, and stretched a root her way to grab onto. “Bring him back!” Shelly did so and lured the Moldorm back through the cave. “Throw me your sword!” Thinking fast, Shelly tossed the wood blade directly upward, the Minish catching it as she dropped onto the Moldorm’s armored back. She kept balance and hurried to the rear, standing over its exposed weak point. This wood sword, flora that’s been dead for who knows how long, what decent weapon could she make out of this. She struggled to focus the chi she apparently had, channel all of her power in this dead wood. To her astonishment, a sakura petal sprouted, she didn’t know why, maybe this sword came from a cherry blossom tree. Like any Minish knew, the sakura petal was sharp and deadly, so this would be her victor.

“AAAAAEEEERRRR!” Gonshiri impaled the petal into the monster’s rump, Shelly clapping her ears shut as she watched it flail about. Within seconds, the beast exploded, releasing yellow goo that Shelly shielded from with a rock wall. With that, she located and reunited with Gonshiri, wiping herself clean. Both girls filthy, sweaty from victory, they exchanged a proud smirk and bumped fists. (End song.)
A few more minutes of exploring the tunnel finally brought the girls to a large, round chamber with normal-size sand. “As fun as that was, I still ain’t seein’ any treasure.” Shelly said.

“You might want to look in front of you.” Gonshiri said, pointing at a pedestal in the center where a small, hand-size scepter rested. Shelly walked over to pick it up. Its handle was brown, with a gold bottom ring and top horns enclosing upon a central white diamond. “I’ve seen that before… in a book.” Shiri stared with awe. “It’s the Sand Wand!”

“Sand What?”

“It’s a wand that’s imbued with Sand Chi, to help with sandbending. 4000 years ago, the Minish mages constructed it specifically for the Quartzite Family, whom were renowned sandbenders.”

“Quartzite? That’s my middle name!”

“It is, is it? Then you’re part of the Four Earthbender Families.”

“Never heard of those.”

“Well, the Four Families were friends with the Minish, I believe among the first earthbenders seen on Earth. Each studied and mastered a particular style of earthbending: the Granites studied normal earthbending on its own, the Quartzites studied sandbending, the Sovites learned lavabending, and the Hornfels knew metalbending. There were also implications of a family that could bend crystals, but no direct mention. The families have long since scattered, so not many know where the current descendants lie.”

“So this thing can help with sandbending. Mmmm…” So with that, Shelly whooshed her wand, and a pillar of sand rose a few meters away. “Hwhoa!” She jiggled and wiggled the wand, making sand gushes dance in the form of a lava lamp. “Ha ha! All right!” She aimed at her feet and rose herself into the air, happily skipping and surfing across the sand platforms she controlled. “Shooting staaaaar!” She landed and flew a stream of sand overhead. “Pop pop POP!” She made a row of sand geysers like landmines going off. “Aaaaaaaaand-” Sand swirled and whirled in the air above the girl, “FREESTYLE!” creating several sandpeople that tap-danced giddily. “Now let’s squash ‘em.” She dispersed them into tiny sandpeople, happily squishing them.

Shelly acquired the Sand Wand! With this, her sandbending will be more superb than ever! Just aim it at a spot of sand and control it with ease! Desert travel never seemed funner. ;)

“Could this be the treasure the old man spoke of?”

“Heh, if it is, I ain’t sellin’ it, it’s wicked!”

“I suppose you do need it. Well, how do we go about getting out of here?”

“…” Shelly noticed the doorway up high on the opposite wall. “This way!” She took Shiri’s hand, raised the sand, and scurried inside.

A small room just like the first one where sunlight poked through the hole in the ceiling. “At least we’ve a shortcut.” Gonshiri gathered the purple Growth Dust with her bending. “Get under and we’ll re-expand you.”

“Can that work for the wand, too?”

“If it was hit with Minish Dust thousands of years ago, let’s hope.”
“Okay.” So Shelly stood under the hole as Gonshiri encased her with purple dust, and uplifted her outside.

Quickly as she shrunk, Shelly stretched back to full, royal size, then picked up her friend when Shiri jumped out of the temple. “I see you found it.”

“AAH!” They jumped, finding the old man who had sent them to the temple behind them.

“I knew you could.” He pulled off his hood, exposing his white shaggy hair and long ears on his bark-colored skin.

Gonshiri gasped. “You’re a Minish!”

“Indeed I am, Princess.” He kept his deep, mysterious tone. “I had a feeling the owner of that castle was descended from the Quartzites. My family guarded this temple for generations. May that help you on your travels.”

“Well, our travels won’t be going far if we can’t scrounge enough money for a ride to Kochi.” Shelly replied.

The man plopped a sack of gold and jewels before her as he walked past. “That should cover.” And slowly, he was going beyond the desert winds. “Protect the princess. Find the other Earthbender Families. Unite your chi under the Tree of Beginning.”

Shelly and Shiri stared at him questionably. They wondered what was under the Tree of Beginning, but Shelly was more focused on the huge sack of dough he just dropped. “WE’RE RICH, baby!!”

“Remember our mission, Shelly.”

“Right, right.” Shelly wrapped the sack and slung it over her shoulder. “Let’s go!” She aimed the wand forward, glowing gold as they soared across the sea on a sandwave.

Uno Household

Nigel couldn’t stop staring at them. Photos of that mysterious boy with their family, the one they called ‘Cheren.’ Nobody remembered him. No one had a clue. It was almost as foggy as…

decommissioning.

“Funny thing, decommissioning.” The Chronicler told them, 15 years ago when they visited his isle again. “It appeared in the 2nd Age of KND. The Earthlings found a means of harnessing Time Chi from a powerful source. They used this chi to power their machines to completely drain the memories of would-be operatives.”

“…” Nigel turned to Dimentia, “I thought you said you had a hand in decommissioning?”

“I gave all other KNDs the idea of decommissioning, but the only one I had trouble getting close to was Earth. 4000 years ago, when I returned to your planet to find a decent recruit, a group of people kept me back. The Illuminati, they called their selves. They…”

“-are who are currently referred as the World Government.” Chronicler confirmed. “I do not know the source by which the old KND drew their Time Chi, and few of my texts point to any possible lead. Except… many other instances where people have faced severe loss in memory all point directly up Mt. Mariejoa. It is speculation, but I believe the World Government has gotten ahold of this source. For 4000 years, they possessed it. Powerful Time Chi, unlike Dialga’s. In the palm of their hand.”
“…” Nigel then looked at Jagar, turned away. The purple cape that belonged to Clockwork dangled by his back, and he held his former master’s Chrono Staff. His head was down. “Jagar… you’ve been… awfully quiet since we came.”

“…Just have a lot on my mind.”

“Nigel, please don’t go!” Rachel pleaded her husband as he was already approaching the door.

“We’ve been over this, Rachel. You came with us to Chronicler, too, you know what he told us. This boy… is definitely our son. And I think… I really think… he did something… to make the government upset. They used their… power… to erase him… from all of our memories. I have to take action.”

“But Vaati said that-”

“Vaati is an idiot!” he shouted. “Leave our children up to this, he said, well we DID, and now we… ugh.” He gripped his head. “This was too much to put on their shoulders. We need answers, and I’m going to get them. From the source.”

“But Nigel… what if they’re too powerful for you? Even if Chris preferred Fanny training him, our kids need us, they need our guidance to…”

“They need an easier time. If this is their duty, we need to help them. I… I’m going to Mariejoa. I’ll make the World Government talk. And I’ll… cripple them if I can.”

“…Nothing I say will change your mind. You never listened to me… did you?”

“…No.” Then he felt his wife’s arms wrap around from behind.

“…I… I’ve been having the same feelings… I can’t find Fi anywhere… I know she was here 3 days ago. I really believe… that boy is our son. …Promise you’ll come back, Nigel. Promise you’ll… bring our son back.”

“…I will.” The man smirked. He fixed on his brown jacket and was out the door. His shadow stretched miles beyond the rising sun. After all… I saved the universe… I defeated my great-grandfather… didn’t I, gramps?

“Don’t push your luck with me, Boy.”

I’m slating this saga to end on Chapter 20, and from then on, I might just follow the 10-chapter pattern, I see that workin’. Hopefully I’ll be able to focus more on this story. Next time… Nigel will meet God.
Chapter Summary

Nigel Uno goes up to confront the World Leaders.

Warning: This chapter contains religious material that may be offensive to some viewers. Gameverse Studios does not encourage the bashing of religions, it just makes great symbolism. Read at your own risk.

Chapter 15: Legacy

Mariejoa

The peak of Mt. Mariejoa. It was beautiful. Almost all the buildings, all the roads, paved in white, glistening pearl, with lush green yards, clear blue rivers and fountains, and a bright sun in a great blue sky that made everything glitter. There could be no darkness here, no evil or negativitiy. This was God’s Domain. The Holy Land.

A charming, frail old man in a black tuxedo, long gray mustache, and skinny black top-hat stood with his hunchbacked wife, who wore a pink dress and stood with a cane, by a river. “Ahhh… do you hear that, Joness?”

“Mmmmm yeeees…”

“Dear Jennifer is out and about again…”

“Isn’t she nice…”

“WHEEEEEE hahahahaha!” A young woman in her 20s, shiny brown hair in many curls, and flowing pink dress that sparkled, skipped across the pure blue river in pink high-heels, splashing the couple, though they paid no mind. Of all the high-class chaps on this peak, Jennifer Bush’s soul was the most pure. Some said a sun took the place of her heart, and this could be true, for her powerful lightbending created the sun that hung over their mountain, the light that brought eternal day to all of Mariejoa.

Inside of a quiet little study, mountains of books were piled. Henry Churchill, in his charming blue-patterned tuxedo, indigo jeans, shiny brown hair and gorgeous blue eyes, peered within the pages of a book. “My, that’s fascinating… an enjoyable read.” He spoke very softly. “Just what game is this fellow playing. Surely the main character has an astonishing secret. He won’t even tell his comrades. The suspense burns me. I cannot bring myself to-”

“WHEEEEE!” Jennifer bursted in, mountains of papers toppling down as she glomped her elder Leader from behind. “Heeeeloooolooooo, Henryyyyyyyyy.”

“Please, Miss Bush… I had not even moved my bookmark.”

“Ohhhhh you’re always reading, come outside Henry, it’s a BEAUTIFUL day, BEAUTIFUL day, WAH HAH HEEEEEEE!” And she was scampering out again.
Daphne Anderson sat alone in the darkest corner of Mariejoa. Plucking petal after petal from her inky black rose, the stem was as white and cold as the ghostly woman’s flesh. “Loves me not….loves me less….loves me fewer….loves me… never.”

“WHEEEEEE!” Daphne’s gray shadow singed on the appearance of sunlight. “Daphneeee, Daphneeee, come outiiiide, get some suuuuuun.”

“What is sun… what is life… there is only one way… to see one’s true path… and that is… without sun blocking their vision.”

“Fine, stay here in the dark, I’mma go see Lucy is doing!” She slammed the door on the way out happily.

Dozens of gray statues filled the floor of Lucas Stonebuddy’s room. Staring intently on his tiny stone model of the mountaintop, his brown hair shaggy, keeping warm under his heavy black sweater, his cold gray eyes peered over Mini Mariejoa. He quickly moved the little Jennifer statue across the landscape. “Yes, Miss Bush… run free. Like a child. So much personality you have. So much soul. That’s why we love you. So our forefathers claim. No… a child must not have so much soul. Beings must be kept confined to themselves… limited. Yes, Jennifer… just run. Laugh. You are great where you are… a person should not go any further than they need to.”

He turned around. Four statues stood above him, three ferocious men and one woman, all without shoes, with some kind of stone representing them. “The Four Earth Families. Granite, Quartzite, Sovite, and Hornfels. Not Stonebuddy… no.” The upper half of a fifth statue was broken. “The Stonebuddies… had their own way. We limited ourselves… we did not desire ultimate power. That’s why we were excommunicated from history. Why we wanted not the power of gods. It was unreal… to us. So history… ignored us. Now let history… see its error.”

Somewhere else in Mariejoa, a baldheaded scientist was examining a woman lain on a dental chair, but it was unclear if she was alive or dead. She was beautiful with whitish-blonde hair and patterned green dress, her eyes closed in apparent slumber. “Could I have a revision on the research, Dr. Strange?” an elderly woman in a sleek purple gown and white hair in large loops asked as she walked in.

“The research is still underway, Master Umbridge. I must say, these manners of witchcraft and wizardry amaze me. Calling souls back from the dead, their bodies back to full working form… Why, may I ask, does this ‘Grand Inferius’ fascinate you?”

“It is not I that desires to initiate it, it is His Royal Highness. Truly, is he so paranoid and overestimate on the White Lotus’s armies? A waste of resources and being, Felius Umbridge expresses.”

“Forgive me. I had only assumed, since your sister was born a mage and you a Muggle, you sought to use a means of magic.”

“I may not have been born with such inhuman qualities as Dear Dolores, but I am still able to accomplish my goals with only words. All she exemplifies is people such as her will only misuse their power and land in incarceration. Yet, there are still so many, benders, wizards, super-powered ‘beings.’ I want like His Highness wants, a world without them.”

“But His Highness possesses such inhuman powers, as do your colleagues. Are they to be extracted from this equation?”

“No… I have grown a connection with them, I will confess. They are not so flamboyant, we have common wisdom and ambitions. His Highness promises to return us to the True World. Oh, the joy I’ll feel when that time comes. …If he believes the Grand Inferius will aid us, please Dr. Strange, I implore your assistance.”

Dr. Hugo Strange gave a calm smile and bowed. “I will not fail you, Master. I want what you want… to destroy this world’s evils. This concept of ‘Light’ and ‘ Darkness’ shall be within the past.”

And here sat the final Leader upon his throne, the ruler of them all: The King. Four towering flames on his sides, clad in silver armor, spiked gold crown, his head under a frying pan with a scratched-out number. Clearly, this guy was immune to heat. Hovering over his throne, the glimmering eye within the upside-down pyramid peering at him. “Something to show me?” The King asked. The pyramid lowered as The King stood up and reached into its iris. He casually pulled out the item which made the eye glow, its true form and core: a Magic 8-Ball flashed a wide assortment of colors, greenblueyellowredpurpleorangegeenyellowblue, a new color every millisecond, and around and around again. Immense, incredible, unparalleled power spun inside this little ball the size of his armored hand. The longer he held it, the more every inch of his armor vibrated. He took off his helmet and, in the dimness of this room despite the tall flames, he seemed to squish the 8-ball into where his right eye would be.

The powerful sphere flashed on his face. The King could see the Earth in its very center, and zooming down, down to a microscopic coordinate on the little planet, the side of Mariejoa, where a huge, ferocious dragon was steadily grabbing its way up.

Doooooong.....dooooooong....

Everybody looked up. The old rich types, their children, Jennifer running around the fountains, the World Leaders from their homes. “Look. It’s The King. The King is here.” A man announced calmly.

“His Imperial Highness!” a high-pitched woman said.

“The man chosen by God!”

“Praise be His Majesty!”

The whole of Mariejoa cheered. The King stepped out from the entrance to his great marble castle. He stood atop the towering stairway and basked in the admiration of his subjects. “People of Mariejoa: our realm is in danger. It will not stay long, but those who are not willing to die a horrible death must evacuate to the lower levels. Have no fear… your God will protect you.”

With humble agreement, the hundreds of citizens began to calmly scramble into passageways leading down within the mountain. The World Leaders came out of their homes and headed for the castle, Jennifer joyfully skipping up the polished stairs.

A quaking force carefully made its way up the mountainside. It grew stronger as it came higher. After one more reach, its arm grabbed the very edge. Then the quaking stopped, for Nigel Uno’s frail human arms couldn’t cause such tremors. He stood and beheld Mariejoa. A beautiful landscape of white buildings and gentle rivers, totally devoid of all human presence. “Not going to use me anymore, are you?”

“I’ll save you for when it matters.” Nigel said. “I’ll go old natural until then. Don’t worry, it doesn’t mean I don’t trust you.”
“Heh heh heh heh!” laughed Malladus. “You have nothing to fear. Your Fulbright friend may be a Logia, but the Unos will always have ME in their bloodline. Like Arceus exists in the Avatar, or Kyogre inside of Eva, Malladus is immortal. And to destroy these pitiful mortals who dare declare themselves your rulers... helping you is my pleasure.”

“I guess no matter what we become... we're still family.” (Play “Dark Hyrule Castle” from Zelda: Minish Cap.)

Stage 26: God’s Domain

Mission: Defeat the World Leaders.

Nigel approached the first pearl gateway across a road between hedge-made statues of animals, and using his L.U.N.C.H.B.O.C.K.S., he hacked into the gate’s terminal and decrypted the code ‘Hallelujah’. The gates slid open with an eerie, echoing creak as Nigel entered the first mansion. Ancient statues, vases and fancy interior designs decorated these marble halls, kept alit only by the windows allowing the endless sun inside. The Secret Police, government agents in tuxedos and sunglasses, wielding guns, stepped out around a corridor and tried blasting the intruder, but Nigel swiftly dodge-rolled to the side, whipped out a S.P.I.C.E.R., and blasted the henchmen down. Nigel proceeded and turned a right hall to what was clearly a cathedral, a statue of Jesus standing between stain-glass windows upon the altar.

His hands were held out, palms faced up, so Nigel shot his G.R.A.P.P.L.U.H. at Jesus’s right hand to haul himself on top. Curious, he threw a piece of candy onto the left palm, the stone fingers immediately snapping shut and would’ve splattered Nigel had he chosen to grapple to it. From there, Nigel grappled a nearby balcony and swung a row of gold chandeliers to another balcony with a door. He exited and found himself over a gorgeous courtyard where Secret Police roamed. Nigel dropped down and whipped out his G.U.M.Z.O.O.K.A. to begin blasting them, the henchmen countering with guns and spiked Crosses they threw like kunai. One of the Crosses flung his G.U.M.Z.O.O.K.A. away, but Nigel ran forward, lit his feet with flames, and kicked them across the head. Seven agents ran at him from all sides, but Nigel breakdanced and kicked them all down, then punched a Flame Fist at a man ready to stab with his Cross.

Nigel crossed a small bridge over a gentle river to a scaled replica of Notre Dame. A proud statue of Claude Frollo stood before it, the ancient plaque read CLAUDE FROLLO: Misunderstood by Millions. Nigel entered the gates to Notre Dame and encountered the archdeacon. He raised two Holy Crosses and lit the statues’ glaring eyes with light, firing lasers at Nigel that made him take cover behind a stone pillar. These lasers were made of light, not fire, so Nigel couldn’t grab them. He smirked and pulled out one of his favorite weapons: a small white envelope that he threw like a boomerang and hit the Crosses out of the deacon’s hands. He jumped out and blasted the S.C.A.M.P.P. and S.P.I.C.E.R. together, knocking the man on his back. Nigel grabbed a key from his pocket and opened a door along the left wall.

He made his way up wooden stairs and was ambushed by living stone gargoyles. His flames made no dent in their lifeless flesh, but their horns were painful as they were jabbing him, so Nigel leapt and grabbed a higher scaffold before blasting the S.C.A.M.P.P. and breaking their heads off. They still flew up to hit him, but Nigel dodged to the floor and destroyed each one with a respective number of shots. Nigel then climbed a rope up to the bell tower, using forceful punches and kicks to ring each bell until a bridge connected the walkway to a cliff with a new courtyard.

This yard was divided in grass squares between paved roads, a replica of Reims Cathedral across from Nigel. But the doors were sealed and would open when four statues were moved into the correct position. In different corners of the yard were a statue of Mary swaying her rippled robes, one of Mary bowing her head, a statue of Elizabeth, and one of the archangel Gabriel. Nigel never paid attention in history well, assuming this was reference to something, so he only pushed the statues next to ones that looked logical beside each other. From left to right in the empty spaces were Gabriel, bowing Mary, swaying Mary, and Elizabeth, and the gates opened.

The interior was smaller and had a similar puzzle, requiring three different paintings of Mary and her Child Enthroned to be hung in the correct order of date – like Nigel had any idea which went where. So he just hung them up in various orders 'til one worked, which was Cimabue’s maestà, Giotto’s, then Duccio, whoever the hell these people were. The middle, Giotto’s portrait opened to reveal a passage, leading outside before a wide river with a statue of Noah on the other end. Nigel latched his G.R.A.P.P.L.U.H. to Noah’s nose, pulled, and toppled the statue forward. His head smashed on Nigel’s side, creating a bridge across the river. In this courtyard were many tall statues of wise old men and women, creepy in Nigel’s view. From behind the statues came Angels of Justice, whom were clearly Nimbi adults that, for some crazy reason, sided with the World Government.

They wielded golden bows and arrows and launched all around trying to hit Nigel. He ducked behind a statue, but they simply flew around to lock their sights, so he blasted juice cartons from his B.A.J.O.O.K.A. and wetted their feathers, making them sink slightly. With that, Nigel blasted flames and set fire to the wings, running while any remaining ones rained arrows upon him. He made it to a new church with statues of no one Nigel saw as religious. On the left side, Lucas Stonebuddy and Henry Churchill, on the right, Felius Umbridge, Daphne Anderson, and Jennifer Bush. A mural of God was painted on the wall above the altar, along with Jesus in the center of His robe, arms open, and a great statue of The King before him, his glory emphasized by the Lord. Above The King sat a golden pyramid, upside-down with an eye that seemed to peer into Nigel’s soul, the more he stared.

All these statues were unsettling, he knew they were watching him, they definitely knew he was here. But Nigel was too great to go unnoticed for long, that’s why he failed every spy mission. Everyone had it out for him, the greatest operative that ever lived, everyone, these World Leaders, feared him. So Nigel had the advantage, he wouldn’t stop now. He approached the doorway behind the statue and hacked the terminal with his L.U.N.C.H.B.O.C.K.S.. He inputted the code ‘New Savior’ before the door opened. A single marble road led directly to the center of Mariejoa, the grand castle where His Highness slept. Nigel walked forward fearlessly, absorbed in its glory the closer he got, he could just imagine Numbuh 3 squealing over how pretty it was. Those stairs were so steep, he could just imagine Numbuh 2 sweating, slumping as he tried to climb up without railing. He could see Numbuh 5 thinkin’ of living in such a home, maybe put in some pool tables, ice cream and soda bar, the stuff. He could see Numbuh 4 exhausted from coming this far, whining for some food, not admiring the beauty of it all. Well, Nigel would tell them about it… when he returned. (End song.)

“Nigel Old Bean,” Malladus echoed inside him, “thinking about your friends now? You should have brought them along if you were gonna get melancholy.”

“This isn’t really their battle. Besides… I don’t want them to get hurt.”

“I never pegged you as the one to… doubt their strength.”

“This is on a whole different level of strength. Even if they could… someone needs to…”

Malladus was quiet. He could sense it in his mind… his great-grandson’s doubt. Intuition of what the future holds for him. “Don’t forget who we are, Boy.”
Nigel walked up the steep stone steps. The castle’s gate drew closer... the gates to God’s home. He would not have to walk far. Because they were already here.

The lively sunny sky that watched over this realm was blocked by gray clouds, a cold wind touching Nigel’s skin. A presence that would almost make his hair grow back, and stand on end. “You, being, who has brought the unthinkable into a realm as bright as ours.” Nigel glanced to his left: the shadow of a statue turned liquid gray as a pale, ghostly white woman emerged from it. “The people of my land have fallen endlessly, to the power you bear.” He looked right as a stream of papers blew with the wind, swirling and bunching into one spot, before a handsome, brown-haired man in a blue patterned shirt appeared. “Power which, for generations, has been slowly destroying our world.” Before him, an elderly woman in a purple gown and closed eyes stepped down in high heels, and behind him, a disheveled man in a dark cloak. “But now, at long last... will save it.” And at the very top of the stairs, the mighty king in the silver armor, gold crown, purple cape, and pan over his head.

“AH HAHAAHAHAHAHA!” But one more person popped up from under the stairs, scaring Lucas Stonebuddy, the pink-dressed girl with shiny brown hair. “You tell him, King, tell ‘im to butt OUT!” cheered Jennifer Bush.

“You look awfully familiar.” Nigel said to His Highness. “Yes, I remember... you’re the Sir Knightly person my son told me about. I never would have guessed a man like you would be The King.”

“But did you need to guess. ...”

“No... they’re always choosing harebrained lunatics to run things.”

“In more ways than you understand... you are right. It took me a time to understand, the only way to counter senseless, was to become senseless. So that one day, my true touch, would remake this world anew. A kind of world, where you, of all people, used to dream about. ...What’s become of you... Mr. Uno?”

“I just had other priorities!” Nigel thrusted his hands upward and shot flames at the old woman, Felius Umbridge.

“UAAAAAAH!” She hurriedly shook them off her gown. “What FARCICAL behavior! I won’t tolerate this! TUT-TUAAAAAT!” And she stormed up the stairs, walked past The King, and entered the castle.

“You always were a stickler for breaking the rules.” said His Highness. “It can only be fate that led you this far. But fate has other plans now. Your duty is done.”

“Nnmpf!” Nigel suddenly felt something grab him. He looked down, seeing a gray shadow around his feet, stretching to the left and coming from Daphne Anderson.

She whirled her dry, cold hands and created a pitch-black rose with a white stem. “People like you, always trying to bother us. I wish you’d just give up... go cry in a corner.” She was ready to pluck the first petal.

“Hm hm hm hm...” A witty smirk appeared on Nigel’s face. “You seem to think I’m as weak as cocky Numbuh 86. But you’re forgetting something. I’m not 86. I am... Numbuh One.” His eyes shot open and burned a fiery yellow, as his entire body shrouded in a black silhouette with red outlines. “HRAAAAAAHHHHH!” The mountain began to shake. Immense, immeasurable power was building up inside of him. “RAAAAAAHAHHHHH!” Nigel started to swell and grow.
His hands and feet transformed into claws, wings grew on his back, and his rising, flaming mouth formed sharp fangs as his eyes burned with rage. He was a dragon.

Daphne could no longer maintain her Shadow Possession, the dragon’s humongous form too strong to hold. The dragon faced her and blew a ferocious breath, Daphne releasing her shadow and sliding away as the flames scorched her platform. Nigel turned right at Henry Churchill and whooshed his bladed wing, slicing the charming man in two. “Oh my, a papercut.” Henry said as he dispersed into paper.

Nigel glanced behind, seeing Lucas and Jennifer at the stairs’ bottom, raising his long tail to smash down. “EEEEEEEK!” Jennifer skittered away as the tail smashed Lucas, his body shattering like stone. Nigel turned fully around to observe the rubble with interest, until Jennifer ran back up to him. “WHAT are you trying to DO, KILL MEEEE?!? Well I’ll teach YOU a lesson, you JERK!” She threw her arms in the air and cried, “HOLY SUN, SHINE ON ALL-” But just when a bright, bulbous sphere began to appear above her, Nigel snapped the younger Leader in his teeth and furiously swung her around like a dog’s chew toy. He didn’t stop, just swung her around with all his fury. Once finished, he sent her flying to a distant building, where her bloody body crashed and plopped on the ground. She lay dead and awestruck.

Smoke escaped his snarling teeth as his great lizard head turned around. The King was floating just inches from his dragon face, right hand positioned to flick. The force of his fingers sent the dragon flying all the way across the town. Nigel landed, scraped the ground, destroying many buildings. He became firm again and faced His Highness with royal malice as the silver man hovered in the sky.

Dr. Strange’s lab

Hugo Strange quietly observed a series of monitors, based on his newest amount of data. “Miss Umbridge… you will not be aiding your colleagues?”

“Alas, I needed a reminder on why I despise such cretins. A man morphing into a dragon. Demons… tut!”

“Yes, it is a pity… I do root for your team in this battle. If we are able to execute the Inferius, Mr. Uno will make a perfect specimen. Actually… a demon’s soul is what we need. The Shadow Chi I have extracted from Daphne’s sister here has had an astounding effect on the corpses. I see why a healthy portion of chi is needed to make the spell work.”

“Your manner of treating deceased vessels is intriguing to me, Dr. Strange. Where, asks Felius Umbridge, did you study such practices?”

“I discovered some ancient books written by one Alfred Drevis, whom researched ways of manipulating dead by magical means, even though he was a Muggle scientist. Terrific tomes… I believe his daughter, Aya is a renowned surgeon in Germany. Family members truly are connected, aren’t they Miss Umbridge?”

“Yes… even if Daphne’s niece is aligned with those White Lotus… her sister is here. Willingly aiding us for the fate of the world. I would pity her if she were not among their kind.”

“You do not have to feel sorry for anyone, Milady. Ohhh, Isabelle… does she even know… she’s alive?”

The lovely woman named Isabelle lay on the dental chair with a mesmerized smile, half-open emerald eyes. “Across… the distant clouds… dusk and sadness falls… Like withered autumn... leaves…”

Outside

The King remained afloat, calm and cool, while Nigel gazed. The dragon looked left when Henry Churchill reformed out of his swarm of papers. “A writer’s guide to creating compelling characters, never make things too easy.”

“A Logia, huh?” Nigel snarled. “Are the rest of you?”

Daphne Anderson appeared atop a building from a liquidy gray shadow. “Why wouldn’t we be. Someone has to. The world of worms will always need humans to protect it. Or crush it. When willpower and freedom means little.”

“HEEEEEY!” Nigel whipped around again. Jennifer Bush stood on a distant roof, red with fury. “YOU JERRRRRK! I CAN’T BELIEVE YOU KILLED ME!”

“I can’t believe you’re still whining about it. Or that they let little girls run the world.” Nigel said.

“Oh, Miss Bush is one of our, eh, ‘special needs kids’ as it were.” Henry said cunningly. “Tragic story, but convenient for us. Her family was a group of devoted Catholics who died in a fire when she was five. In the Spirit World, the Goddess Palutena gave her lightbending, and Jennifer mastered her power to fine extent. Obeying an ancient order written by the gods, she challenged Palutena, both for her God Chi and another chance at life. How humiliating did Palutena lose… now Jennifer inhabits a young adult Gigai and possesses Palutena’s Holy Sun inside her. That was 4,000 years ago. You can kill her as many times as you like, but the Holy Sun will always shine on her.”

“My power comes from ABOOOOVE!” sang Jennifer. “God has chosen me, deemed worthy to spread the Good Word! I am His daughter, the new Christ, and I will live as the woman without sin!”

“A pure soul is always a wonderful thing.” The King said. “One only a child could have. So tell me… why did you come here?”

“You know damn well.” snarled Nigel. “My wife and I… had another son, didn’t we? We don’t remember him… and my oldest son, Chris mentions his fight with ‘Knightly’ being foggy. It couldn’t be more obvious. Your damn memory powers played a factor. So tell me… WHERE IS HE?!”

The King was silent. “…Memories are precious, aren’t they. I treasure them very dearly. I try my best to preserve them.”

“Do ya now? Well, why don’t you… get some of your own!!” Nigel flapped his wings and soared at The King, spinning to whip him away with his tail before landing back on the ground. Henry, Daphne, and Jennifer surrounded him like a triangle, so Nigel spun in place and unleashed a breath of fire around him, surrounding himself in a ring as the Leaders backed away. The King flew inside and sent the dragon flying back with a powerful punch, then Nigel jumped aside when he came for him again. Nigel built up flames in his mouth and spat huge, swift fireballs that exploded many yards around them upon crashing, blasting a storm at The King and destroying several buildings as he dodged. Nigel had The King surrounded in a flaming circle, taking him by surprise as the dragon shot in and pinned him under his claws, glaring directly at his face as he charged another furious fire.
“AAAAARRR!” A huge building that looked like a gray White House made of stone came down and smashed the dragon from behind, allowing The King to fly out.

Safely inside their castle, Lucas Stonebuddy overviewed a tiny, board game replica of Mariejoa, having placed the Gray House over where Nigel was. “To achieve victory means to thoroughly develop your strategy, down to the last inch of movement. …Mmmmm a few more inches wouldn’t hurt.” he said as he slid the Gray House back and forth.

Nigel screeched with pain as the building scraped repeatedly against his wings, but finally built enough strength to thrust it off. He looked curious as a swarm of papers started to flutter around and above him, forming into Henry Churchill. “I say, I have always wanted a dragon. I would much enjoy the feel of those scales.” The dragon thrusted upward and broke the man into papers as he only reformed in midair before his face. “Chapter 4 of getting rid of a monster that doesn’t belong: erase.”

Nigel tried to shake free when his papers began to stick on and encase him, forcibly pulled to the ground. Daphne’s shadow then stretched over and took hold of the beast, the ghostly woman pulling out her black rose. “Remember those days when you pined for your crush, never knowing her path? Allow me to reinstate those memories.” So very lightly, she plucked the first petal from the rose.

An image flashed in Nigel’s mind of his first date with Lizzie. Whatever this was, it didn’t seem good at all, so he set his body afire and burned the papers before blasting a flame at Daphne, forcing her to break off. Jennifer appeared and raised her shiny flawless arms, creating a holy sun that made the dragon shut his eyes. “Holy Sun, shine upon the sinner, deliver thy justice.” In a flash, Nigel was blind, no matter how hard he shut his eyes, the blinding white claimed his vision. “HAAA!!” The spike of Jennifer’s heel jabbed him from beneath the chin, followed by an onslaught of kicks surprisingly strong against the dragon. Anger and annoyance growing, Nigel raised his head and smashed it down on the woman, then one more time, until she was dead and the light was gone. “Oooooooooohhhhh…” A radiant light shone on her from the heavens, and she was alive.

Nigel viewed around as streams of gray shadows flowed out from around buildings. He flapped his wings and flew to the sky as the shadows emerged from the earth and chased him. He turned his head and unleashed flames to burn them away, but they rose like beanstalks in front of him as Daphne appeared in one. “My Gray Shades connect to your deepest emotions… and allow me to pluck them. One… by one…” She held her black rose and looked so eager to pluck the rest of the petals. “You will take the grief so quickly, your heart stops. Death is a beautiful art.”

“But you’re a bad artist.” Nigel snarled, unleashing another stream of flames that barely wounded the beanstalks even as they lit the sky. Nigel flew away again when two towering gray walls closed in from either side, shaking the earth when they collided but Nigel escaped, and kept flying when more pairs of walls tried to smash him. At the very end, a great statue of Lucas Stonebuddy rose, Nigel dodging just before its cold hands clapped. A whirlwind of papers blew around and around, chasing Nigel like a swarm of bees, or at least hummingbirds when the papers took that form. They were in perfect synchronization as they chased, no matter how much Nigel hit them with flames, more papers came.

Just when he thought he lost them, two stone rings, divided in four parts each, captured him, the dragon barely able to stay airborne. He watched as Henry Churchill materialized in midair out of papers. “Have you gotten to observe our talents, yet?” he asked softly. “Mister Stonebuddy does not come out much, but he is an excellent stonebender in his own right.”
“You mean earthbender?”

“He prefers to call it stonebending to distinguish himself, he doesn’t want to sound great. Humble fellow, like me. I am a paperbender, Logia, but I’m hardly talented. I just need enough to make everything right.”

“You guys need to live more. I don’t mind being a little hotheaded, ‘cause I can do stuff like this.” Nigel closed his eyes and inhaled a great amount of air through his nostrils. A light shone on his forehead, building with energy, and the world flashed when it was let loose, a slim, straight line of combusted heat, the light gleaming in Henry’s beautiful eyes before the explosion found him.

Nigel plummeted to the ground, close enough to the explosion to be scorched, but also destroy the rings binding him. Let’s see… Nigel thought to himself. I’m fighting a hiding earthbender… Logia paper… immortal lightbender… emo shadowbender… don’t know where that old lady went… and King… I came here to begin with to find out how he’s doing it all. He’s strong, but what’s his game. What is ALL of this for in the end? Hrrrm…

Nigel Uno quaked across the burning rubble on his massive dragon claws. His Highness hovered meters above, only his cape blowing in the air. Nigel flashed and was immediately standing on a roof, in his smaller, less-imposing human adult form. Jennifer was still uninjured within some burning rubble. Henry’s blackened papers were recomposing, Daphne rose from some melted gray shadow. Nigel stared only at The King, and sensed his stare returned through that helmet. “Don’t you ever get hot under that thing? I want to see my enemy’s face.”

The King was unfazed. “I don’t need to see yours. I see much more… I see the truth… our very existence is only a game… to self-believed gods above us.”

“That’s a very deep way of thinking.” Nigel spoke smugly.

“Tell me… you know of the Dimensional Fusion, do you not?”

Nigel raised a brow. “Theee… force that combined our world with a bunch of other worlds?”

“Yes, an accursed cataclysm that merged other universes with ours, bringing forth the ‘gods’ in our universe, bringing forth bending,” there was disgust in his voice, “and most notably, bringing forth the Apocalypse. The so-called ‘gods’ from before our creation thought it would be FUNNY to squeeze a bunch of people in one place, see how they would interact, become friends, and FIGHT each other. But because of so many universes squeezing together, the energy became horribly unstable, so unstable that these universes were bound to implode in upon themselves! And WHO are the ones to suffer, not the gods who caused this, but us! Their simple little test subjects. Our ancestors foresaw such a cataclysm… and moved to this planet, 4,000 years ago, to find the solution. To this day, we hold the piece that told us everything. The Octogan.” The King turned away, lifted the front of his helmet, and Nigel heard a gooey squishing sound as it seemed he was pulling his right eye out.

He lowered his helmet back and held the Magic 8-Ball above. It flashed its array of colors as it seemed the ‘8’ was staring at Nigel like an eye. He felt incomparable power spinning in its sphere. “Octagon?”

“Octogan, with the ‘o’ and ‘a’ switched, dunno. It is an ancient, and powerful gem of the spirits, that allows us to view the very timestream, and beyond. We don’t know where its origins lie, but its power is unparalleled by all throughout the universe. And with its power… we have seen EVERYthing…”
Nigel’s brow quirked higher. He wasn’t liking the look of this, not one bit. “This Octogon has powers you could never have imagined. Powers to let us view into the DEEPEST secrets of the universe, ALL universes beyond it, and the SPIRIT WORLD above! It’s a relic that challenges the Chronicler’s knowledge, and can alter the very mind itself! This power is what will help us SAVE the universe… will help us deliver peace to all beings of this planet!”

“What are you planning to do?”

“Since the day we’ve acquired this relic, we have been steadily gathering the luscious energy of the Spirit World… because with this energy, we plan to grant the world everlasting peace. There is nothing that can stop the Apocalypse… so all beings will inevitably die. But this relic… will send everyone to the world that is supposed to be! We will seal their spirits in an everlasting paradise, one that is absolutely FREE of this Dimensional Fusion, and anything that gives evidence to it! We will create a Spirit World of OUR design, so that while our bodies die, our souls will be safe inside the Octogon. And WE, the sole rulers of this world, will organize everything, keep everyone into place, and see that they live their makeshift existence in peace. For that has been our duty since our ancestors came here. Since this WORLD became ours! For we… are the one, true, GOD.”

“Hm hm hm…” Nigel looked smug. “One true God… no wonder I never took part in this religious stuff. You six are God? I never felt more proud to be a demon. You people… are INSULTS to mortals!”

“And you… Numbuh One. Were you really not loyal to your virtues?”

“I was more loyal to the Kids Next Door than anyone I knew. That’s why I know… they don’t want a smelly adult like me working with them. Our children are the future. I know they will surpass us. But as their father, I won’t be ashamed in helping them. I… will defeat you, King.”

“Nigel? The Demon Prince? Galaxia’s hero? Do you, the planet’s ‘best’ operative… really believe you can defeat God?”

Nigel closed his eyes. “I think I said I’m not a fan of your religion.” And his body was encased in blackish-red shadow. Incredible energy burned, his body was growing, even larger than his dragon form, for he was no dragon: horns on his head, shaggy hair and beard, tremendous abs, and a devil’s tail. Roughly 50 feet tall… he was the Demon King that lived inside him. He was Malladus.

“Brilliant, Boy… you tamed my God Form all those years ago… and after 2 decades, I can finally stretch my bones again.”

“Only when I say, Great-Grandfather.” Nigel spoke with Malladus’s mouth, for he was still the one in control. “And I say… we feed on the souls that dare call us their creations. I will show them… to their maker.”

The King was unfazed, as were his allies. “This is what you are then… Uno.” He squished the Octogon back into his eye socket. “Then let me show you… God’s power.” (Play “Hail to the King” by Avenged Sevenfold.)

Boss fight: The King

He channeled the energy inside him, and the mountain began to shake. The clouds above turned blood-red, dust flowed into the air. A fiery orange aura surrounded The King, growing steadily. He balled his hands together, charged, and unleashed a powerful sphere at Uno, who dodged before King started flying all directions around him, punching and kicking, but Malladus defended until the last kick sent him sliding across the ground, his feet toppling several mansions. Uno inhaled through his nose and blasted a red combustion beam, swallowing a huge region in an expanding bubble. The bubble shrunk immediately into The King’s palms, and Uno ran.

The King flew into the sky and unleashed a fearsome beam from his palms, a beam that rivaled the gods during their most bloodthirsty, chasing the towering demon with it, and never did Malladus or Nigel look so desperate to escape something. They caught their breath when the beam died away, but King shot down, punched repeatedly across the face, and sent the demon sliding against his back. Uno jumped high into the heavens, a blinding lightning flash in the red clouds before the Devil came down with a ferocious shockwave, swallowing Mariejoa in walls of the Fires of Hell. Seeing him floating before him like a silver fly, Uno bashed The King to the scorching ground.

The heat was unbearable, the ground was as hot as the floor of Hell, The King was sweating under his armor. Malladus’s mighty fist came like a meteor and squished The King in a crater. But His Majesty wasn’t finished, his armor barely scratched as he soared into the air again. Uno swirled a bundle of hellfire around his arms and blasted them at The King, who flew around like a superhero with his cape blowing behind. He took to the sky, like a bird like a plane, flew directly at Malladus’s stomach and pierced straight through with his spiked crown, blood gushing out the back hole. Uno spun and created a tornado of hellfire, sucking every ounce of oxygen into a realm which would leave it dry, and if King couldn’t fight it, he would drown in this hell. No, he would not, for he was the one savior of this world, and he would burn the flames.

He soared into the vortex’s core, his sweat having nowhere to evaporate under that armor. He swallowed himself in all the energy the Octogan gave him, countered the Fires of Hell, absorbed them. Nigel and Malladus gaped when their cyclone became part of King’s great protective sphere, shining in the sky as a greater sun than Jennifer’s. It felt as though Mariejoa would melt as it fell to the top like a meteor, and Uno was frantic where to go. He ran to the nearest edge and jumped off, gripping the side with his fingernails and scraping down. The world turned white when the sun collided, and the top of Mariejoa burned.

When the light was gone, Uno climbed back up. God’s Domain was destroyed. All of the beautiful marble buildings, pure rivers, lush greens, statues of God, Jesus, the holy castle, gone. And, Nigel thought despicably as The King hovered by his lonesome, the five World Leaders. How pitiful he would destroy his own team, his own domain, just to hopelessly defeat the Demon King. No… oh?

The World Leaders were safe, protected inside fiery-orange barriers made by His Truly. Henry, Daphne, Lucas, Felius, Jennifer, unscathed. Uno wouldn’t be phased, rushing forth to continue his clash. The massive fists flew swiftly, but King was lightning-fast, going beneath Malladus and rocketing up between the legs, sending the demon skyward. Zip-zap-zoom, from every direction he flashed and slashed, leaving gaping cuts in Malladus where blood flew. Then he slammed Uno into the rugged ground of the new mountaintop, followed by a series of constant Ground Pounds.

Furious, Malladus jumped up and clutched the doll-size King in his fist. He kneeled and bash bash bashed the armored man against the earth, leapt over the side, and scraped his silver against the side as they went down. Malladus clutched the mountain and leapt back up, grinding and twisting his limbs. Malladus stuck him in his sharp teeth and failed to munch through the armor, so he threw him against the ground and smashed. Seeing him lying there like a life-size action figure handled roughly by mean boys, Uno would land the final blow: a fire of unrivaled heat built in Uno’s forehead, and its combustion would obliterate King’s mortal body, so his soul had nowhere to go but the fiery pit.

The Five Leaders blocked the combustion completely with their power, protecting their ruler with determined faces. The King groggily stood, astonished by their loyalty. “My... subjects.”

“You’re why I haven’t killed myself, yet.” Daphne said.

“You’re a marvelous fellow, I’d say.” Henry smiled.

“Our ruler until the end!” declared Felius.

“Hahahahaha, he won’t stand a chance if we take ‘im together!” laughed Jennifer.

“Yes, so please let us be quick.” spoke Lucas.

“. . . . . My Leaders. You are truly loyal... to our cause. Our world... only has one path. Yes... you know that.” Then, The King stood up straight. “It is time he knows his maker.” They all locked hands and hovered into the heavens.

Nigel stared agape. He had never seen greater teamwork since his team. The Leaders were truly one when they worked together. Their way was righteous. With his earthbending, Lucas summoned a great golden Cross from Mariejoa, kept it firm. Felius uttered an assortment of words, inscribing them on the gold. Jennifer stood at the top, the clouds breaking away as the holy sun shone. Henry grew into a paper colossus of a gigantic Bible, meters bigger than Malladus as its pages opened for all to view its holy contents. Daphne stretched the Cross’s shadow and binded the demon. And The King lay in the center where the Cross meets. “SPAWN OF DEMONS: IN THE NAME OF THINE RULER: WE CRUCIFY THEE.”

Six points pierced across Malladus’s center, creating a circle. Uno cried to the heavens, his power fading. The King of Demons began to shrink. In the end, he was nothing… a devil before God. A stray from the righteous path.

He was Nigel Uno again… frail old Nigel. A washed-out has-been. He wanted to stand… more than anything did he want to win this battle. But a gray shadow connected him to Daphne Anderson. One by one, the woman plucked the petals.

Nigel met Numbuh 5 in CND Training.

“Must…”

Numbuh 5 changed his scores so he could get in.

“stop…”

He lost his hair to the Delightful Children.

“them…”

He was Leader of Sector V.

“and…”

His father was Numbuh Zero.

“save…”

He was invited to the Galactic Kids Next Door.

“my…”
He saved the entire universe. He kissed Rachel, his true love. He defeated Malladus. They found the Eight Firstborn. He tamed Malladus’s soul inside him.

“…son…” (End song.)

Daphne’s ghostly fingers touched the last petal… and plucked.

Underworld

The Grim Reaper sat on his throne. Thinking quietly to himself after so many hard days. Then he felt it. The last grain of sand in the hourglass dropping. He touched his nonexistent heart. In all his eternity, he had never known grief for a mortal. No… that wasn’t true.

Mariejoa

The pain was gone. It was so relaxing… to be removed from all your turmoil. In a single stroke. Nigel would be whisked along by the Grim Reaper, after all this time. …No… it can’t end, yet. “No… I… have to…”

“It’s over, Boy.”

Nigel looked inside him. Malladus’s soul was calm. “But that’s alright... you’ve awakened the Uno blood inside you. With this body uninhabitable, I can move to your descendants. I will inform them of your—HUUUU!” He was struck stiff.

“M-Malladus, what-?!”

Malladus looked up, swallowed with fear. A foreign hand reached into the confines of Nigel’s subconscious, clutching Malladus in its fingers. “NO! …He’s... energybending... me!... Nigel… save!…”

Nigel tried to. He stretched his arm, his only priority right now to grab his great-grandfather’s hand and keep Malladus bound to him. But it was too late. The demon’s soul was pulled from the confines of Nigel’s body. The dying man watched as he was slurped into the Magic 8-Ball. Nigel glared at the helmetless King. His brown hair a mess, his beard in its first phase. A deep blue eye stared down at Nigel, next to an empty socket. “Augh… you…” It was his last breath.

Ahhhh... I guess you were right... Fanny... I am just a... stoopid boy. Like to see what you could do, though. Ahh... Rachel... you finally happy now... I was wrong? No... none of us could have. Our kids... yes...

They were all in his mind. Those two beautiful children. Chris... Aurora, and... you. That third one with the red glasses. You, boy. No... Cheren. That’s your name. You are our son. And you did something to make the Government scared of you. Keep at it, Sport. This old man… can’t do it, anymore. You... finish my job. Destroy them. Stop the Apocalypse. Save our... universe. I’m... proud of you... Son...

The King bowed his head in respect. A soft wind blew across the mountaintop. Nigel Uno… Numbuh One… he would never forget. He put his helmet on and said, “Time to erase the wounds of our conflict.” Raising the Octogon high, its godly power shone. In seconds, Mariejoa was back. The blue sky that reflected its rivers, posh white homes, the greenery and citizens, everyone that died was brought to life. Even Hugo Strange seemed to notice nothing, continuing his research. But Nigel…Nigel was no more. An operative legend saw his final days.
And people thought Negatar Gnaa was overpowered. So uh, yeah, this battle was kind of a mirror image of a battle that happens... around the end. Except someone else will be in Nigel’s place, as it were. Um... yes. So expect that. Good-bye.
Chapter Summary

The Marzipan Pirates go to meet the Sugar Fairy Princess. (OPTIONAL CHAPTER.)

This chapter would come after Chapter 15.

Chapter B-10: Sugar Princess

Africa; Sugar Deserts

An indigo sky filled with stars hung over the Sugar Deserts. K. Lumsy finally arrived at the shore, panting in exhaust as the Marzipans plus Fairy Princess climbed off. “You did well, Mr. Lumsy.” Aisling told him softly, patting his snout. “You may rest.”

“I’m not sure out in the open is a good thing.” Augustus said. “He’s a real attention-attractor.”

“I agree, he’s very attractive- OW!” Stewie said, before Rallo smacked him.

“So why’re we here again?” Rallo asked.

“When I was little, my mom told me a story about the Sugar Fairy Kingdom in Sugar Deserts.” Augustus took out his lollipop, which was shriveled and close to completion. “It’s the same desert where the Candegyptians lived 5,000 years ago. Word is that the Sugar Fairies taught them their magic.”

“Of course, the legend of Sugar Fairy Kingdom was passed off as a fairytale.” Aisling followed, wiggling her toes in the sugary sand. “But I can assure you it is real. The Fairy Princess is a friend of mine.”

“Thanks for confirming that before I made the assumption ‘All Fairy Princesses know each other.’” Augustus put the lolli back in his mouth.

“Actually, she isn’t completely my friend. Our leader, Mavis adores her, but I find her very rude. And that’s beside all of this unnatural sugar! Uck, I can’t…” Aisling’s toes twitched in the sand, “STAND this substance! A desert must be composed of billions of tiny rocks, it is supposed to feel warm on your feet, but THIS sand is filled with SUGAR! UGH, it’ll take forever to wash it off!”

“It ain’t supposed to feel warm, it’s nighttime!” Augustus yelled, tossing the barren lolli stick away. “Although…” He got down and pressed the back of his hand to the sand. “It does feel a bit warm for night.”

“The Sugar Fairy Princess is a firebender.” Aisling explained. “Her chi flows into the sugar and creates an effect that invigorates those who consume it. In Sugar Kingdom, a river of the warmest cocoa flows and fills all the fairies with sugary delight. The warmth of that river touches the desert sand from below. It is underground.”

“The Fairy Kingdom is underground? So, do we dig there?”
“Only a Sugar Fairy can open the gate. But ordinarily, there’s one or two out getting a snack…”

The four Marzipans followed Aisling over a large dune, viewing a huge bar of chocolate lodged in the sand on the other side. They heard a weak, squeaky grunting sound as they approached the chocolate. They saw the shadow of something little trying to lift it.

“Mmm!... Mmm!...” A Sugar Fairy wearing a white robe was trying to lift the huge candy. She heard the patter of large footsteps behind her and turned around. Aisling squatted for a closer look at the Sugar Fairy. “Oh! Big People! Hello, Big People. I was trying to take this candy to my friends, but I’m much too teeny to lift it. Perhaps your big arms could suffice.”

“Yeeeah… I’m no Superman, sorry.” Augustus scratched his head. “Listen, can you take us to the Sugar Fairy Kingdom?”

“Always to the point with you, isn’t it?” Aisling glared reprovingly at him. “Sigh, I suppose I’m the only one who knows and practices the word ‘kindness.’” She turned back to the fairy with a polite smile. “Hello, Miss. My name is Aisling, the Forest Fairy Princess. I am acquainted with the Sugar Fairy Princess and request an audience with her. I would like to enter your homeland and bring these guests.”

“Ooo! I know you! The princess described you, Princess Forest Fairy. She said you were weird, and stinky, and ate your own fleas!”

“SHE SAID WHAT ABOUT ME?!” Aisling growled with venomous fangs.

“Eeeek!” The fairy zipped and hid behind Augustus’s boot. “Please protect me, Mr. Giant! I don’t want my head yanked off!”

“You know, things might be babyish, but boy, do I wanna eat ’em.” Augustus said with adoration.

Aisling calmed down and stood up straight. “Lucky for you, sugar is toxic to me. Now, would you show us the entrance to your hometown or won’t you?”

“I want to, People. I really do.” The fairy’s adorable expression turned sad. “But it’s really, really bad. Monsters broke into our home. They want to eat all Sugar Fairies for lunch, breakfast, AND dinner!”

“That’s not even the correct order!!” Rallo cried and pressed his face against Augustus’s pants leg. “PLEASE let’s help them, Captain!”

“Easy, Monty! ’Course we’re going to help. I have a few favors to ask the Sugar Princess, anyway. Take us to your homeland and we’ll sweep the floor with all them monsters.” Augustus started a new lollipop.

“We would appreciate thatberry much, Big Person. A big and strong man like you is sure to beat hundreds of ’em! My name is Holly, the Helpful Sugar Fairy. I’ll let all of you into my home. Everybody stand together, and keep all hands and feets inside the circle.” The Sugar Fairy pulled a larger-than-her candycane out of her pocket as she skipped away. She hummed a little, “Dee dee dee dee...” as she began to draw a great wide circle into the sand around them.

“Man, if we about to shrink right now, I bet I be supeeeeerrr cute.” Rallo said.

“More like super inconvenient,” Augustus remarked. “Hey Forest Fairy, you ever been to the Sugar Fairy Kingdom? What’s gonna happen?”
“No, I’ve never been, I was just told you needed a Sugar Fairy to go there.” Aisling replied. “Truthfully, I would never want to come here even for your sake, but I have a few things to speak with the princess about as well.”

“Well, aren’t you lucky we came along.”

“Okay, Big People! The circly’s finished!” Holly said. “Get ready to fall.”

Almost instantly, the sand within the circle transformed into quicksand that they quickly sank into. They began rapidly sliding through a tunnel, unable to stand or balance on the slippery sand slope. Already, they thought this to be an odd choice of environment for adorable creatures like the Sugar Fairies. Living under the surface of a desert like scorpion-mole people, they couldn’t even imagine their kingdom looking cute.

They slid down for several minutes before they landed on a sandy bottom. They weren’t sure what to expect the area to look like… perhaps large, or even small teapots or gingerbread houses, stationed about an underground landscape and whose only source of lights were candles. …When they opened their eyes, the sight left them awestruck. (Play “Duplicitous Delve” from Yoshi’s Woolly World!)

The landscape was a chocolaty brown, there was a river of cocoa, and large teapots stationed around small gingerbread houses. But what really stood out was the sky. A purple sky with darker purple clouds hovered above them, and a white sun peeked over the horizon. “Tee hee hee! Don’t be fooled!” laughed Holly. “Or a fly might fly into your gawking mouths. We use magic to make an underground sky. The sun shines on everything! Isn’t it beauteous?”

“I’ll say!” Augustus beamed. “I can’t believe no one ever found this!”

Aisling sniffed, her expression dark. “Someone has. Demons. My least favorite scent.”

“We’ll wipe them out!” Augustus twirled his Candycane Cutlass, eager to explore. “Come on, brats, let’s march!”

Stage B-7: Sugar Kingdom

Mission: Meet the Sugar Fairy Princess.

Augustus jumped across a trio of platforms before stopping at a larger one, in which Leevers emerged from. The captain chopped the creatures with his sword. “That was beautiful swordplay, Big Person!” Holly said admiringly. “Allow me to help you now!” She danced over to a large cup of sugar on the right side of the foothold, scooping some in her tiny teaspoon and sprinkling it on Augustus’ Gobstopper. “Do you see those floating cubes in the air? You can fill them with sugar by hitting them with your ball thingy!”

Augustus saw a row of floating outlines that shaped like cubes leading to a path on the left. The captain tossed his sugar-coated Gobstopper to bounce around the cubes, making them white and dense. The pirates could bounce across, but the sugary platforms dissolved as soon as they stepped on them, so they moved quickly. On this new path, rows of Pokeys popped out of the ground, with one of them in each row being taller. Augustus tossed his Gobstopper against the short ones’ heads while Maggie shot the heads off the tall ones.
The path turned left and would lead to a tall, climbable cliff. Nejirons popped out of the ground, so Maggie shot bullets to destroy the flammable monsters before they got close. They watched as Aisling used her nimble, animal-like reflexes to hop onto the wall that their path was between, sprinting up to the cliff and making terrific leaps to get up above. The Forest Fairy clearly didn’t need to wait for the slow humans and could bypass the whole stage if she wanted.

The cliffside was too sturdy for their Corn-Clambers to pierce into, so the safest option was to simply climb it with hands and feet. The babies held onto Augustus while he did the climbing, but when Red Bubbles (winged skulls encased in fire) flew down from over the top, Maggie shot directly up to destroy them. Thanks to her, they made it to the top of the cliff without trouble.

Three Lizalfos with wrecking ball tails ambushed them. They swung their so-called appendages at the pirates, while the babies dropped off Augustus so the captain could roll left and avoid. Augustus jumped and stomped down on a Lizalfos’s tail when it swung, then stabbed the Candycane Cutlass several times into its chest. The second Lizalfos tried to sink its teeth into Rallo’s afro, but the creature ended up biting a boombox unexpectedly, which then blasted loud notes to send the creature falling off the cliff. The third Lizalfos had its tail positioned to block Maggie’s gun, but the sniper simply shot a bullet to bounce off the ball’s bottom, then pierce the creature’s stomach.

The triplet demons dispersed into darkness. Augustus noticed pirate flags were stationed and blowing in a weak breeze. They bore the image of a frowning skull with yellow hair. “Wait a second, this is Mandy’s Jolly Roger!” Augustus realized. “Don’t tell me the Boogey Pirates got here before we did?!”

“I dunno the answer, Big Person.” Holly frowned. “They been here since yesterday. I dunno why.”

The four Marzipans progressed down a narrow, winding path down a hill. They were brought to the Cocoa River, where Holly waited by a tiny boat. “To cross the Cocoa River, we have to take my tiny boat! Eat a Shrink Sweet to become as tiny as me.”

Augustus picked out four Shrink Sweets from a close-by patch, and the four pirates each ate one. Their bodies contracted to Holly’s adorable size, so they could board her boat, which she rowed down the river using her teaspoon. She had to shift the boat left to avoid a mini waterfall of sugar from a teapot, then moved the boat right to avoid another one. Aisling was sitting on the left cliff and watching the boat’s progress, swinging her feet back-and-forth above them.

Holly carefully turned the boat around corners of a narrow part of river. This part let out in a region of breathmint-bergs, which Holly maneuvered around. Fly Guys were swooping down to scoop cocoa into bowls, so Holly predicted their position and took care to avoid them, too – lest they be caught and dumped into a mini volcano. They were steadily being pulled into whirlpools, so Holly abandoned the boat and hopped across some large Life Savers that were floating and twirling in the river. The Marzipans followed her before the boat sank.

They made it onto a safe platform with Growth Gum, allowing the humans to grow back to normal. A Fly Guy floated down, holding a bowl of sugar as he used a spoon to fling it at them. Augustus KO’ed the Shy Guy with his Gobstopper, and Holly floated and caught the bowl. She sprinkled sugar on Augustus’s Gobstopper, then he chucked it at the Sugar Cubes floating in the cocoa. The group jumped the cubes to a land with a jellybean garden. “Aaaaahhh!” A Sugar Fairy with green garden clothes, which had tiny colorful jellybeans, was flailing her arms. “Mean rats stole my Magic Jellybeans! Help me, Oversized People!”

They saw a rat scampering around the small, nearby field, and surprisingly it was too quick for Maggie’s bullets to blast. In each corner, there were four mouse holes that warped to other holes, but the mouse would just run around the center if they were all guarding one. Rallo decided to stick his head into the ground and shake the earth with boombox, forcing a mini maze to sprout up on the field. With less directions to go, the rat ended up cornered by Rallo, who took the Magic Jellybean.

They followed a back road that sloped down into a narrow trench, where numerous rats were crawling around a maze of tunnels within the right wall. When Augustus threw his Gobstopper at one rat, they all panicked, moved quickly in disorganized fashion, and then slowed down. Augustus saw one rat toss a jellybean to another rat, so he struck that one with the Gobstopper. Another rat grabbed it, and they scattered around again. Augustus had to track the correct rat, then do one more round, before the Magic Jellybean was thrown down to him.

On the east side from the center field, there was a rat riding a mini skateboard around a looping track. Maggie hopped on a bigger, available skateboard to chase. She went up a ramp and performed a midair pose, landing on a platform which led her down a slope to gain speed. She turned a tight left corner, rolling on a path with long vertical gaps she could maneuver around. Maggie jumped a few platforms, seeing the next turn coming, where she had to go up a corner ramp, shift left, and gain more speed upon sliding down. Just when she would pass the starting line again, she caught the rat and took his jellybean.

When the Marzipans returned to bring the beans back to the gardener fairy (whose name was Lila Green), Aisling was there to meet them. Lila took the beans and put them in the soil. “So if you’re the Forest Fairy, can you make them grow?” Augustus asked.

“Candy beans, that’s a stretch.” Aisling huffed.

“Don’t worries.” Lila said. “To show my graciousness, I’ll create a path!” She watered the beans with soda, and a long beanstalk stretched across part of the Cocoa River. Large, standable beans grew on the stalk, but they were too far apart to jump normally. Thankfully, Lila lent them some Bounce Gum she had planted, and they used the extra bouncepower to get across the leaves (though Aisling had no qualms running across the stalk on all fours).

They landed on a foothold before a long trench, in which several huge teapots were lodged in and pouring sugar. Aisling nimbly Wall Jumped down the trench, but the humans were forced to bite a Fudgepuffsicle from a bushel. They slowly floated down the trench in their inflated forms, having to go through the sugar downpours to shift lower. If they missed the sugar, they would float into stationary Eye-Cones (eyeball monsters with ice cream cone spikes), though some sugar-pours would push them into Eye-Cones if they sunk too low.

Their bodies deflated once they made it to safe ground. They trekked a dry path between sugar-covered ground, which looked more like snow. They smiled at the Sugar Fairies who were shoveling sugar into their teapot carriages, making sugar snowmen, and other adorable snow-related activities. In an open area, three Fatblin were standing guard, with one of them using a metal shield. Augustus dashed up to the left one and chopped up its wood shield with his cutlass. He expertly dodged his and the metal shield’s spears, then chopped the wood shield of the right one.

“Hey Ralls, time for a science lesson!” Augustus grabbed the afro child, who extracted his stereos as the teen shoved them against the Fatblins’ bellies. Rallo boomed his stereos, and the powerful soundwaves jiggled the fat to the point that the monsters hacked junk, then exploded. As for the Metal Shield Fatblin, Augustus leapt up and over its choice defense, shoving his Gobstopper down its throat. The demon choked and fell over dead. When his body disappeared, the captain could “Up there is the Sugar Palace where Princess Sugar Fairy lives.” Holly pointed at a giant teapot perched above a large canyon. “We just have to climb this gihugic rock!”

There were Moblin patrolling in the pass between the trench, wielding spears that had Mandy’s pirate flag. Maggie shot them each in their big pig noses, and one bullet was all it took to take them out. The pirates used their Licoropes to rope candycane branches sticking out of the left trench wall, swinging up to a higher ledge that had a tunnel in the wall. They followed it to the opposite side of this trench wall, which overlooked a chasm of cocoa. Partway across the chasm, on a tall pillar, a Sugar Fairy was shooting the side of a cliff on their left with soda. “That’s Calcy, the Cannon Fairy. She’ll help you swing across!” Holly said.

A jellybean vine wall stretched across that part of cliff, with drooping branches that stretched when Calcy hit them with soda. The pirates swung the stretched branches with their Licoropes, keeping an eye for which ones were stretched, and swinging off the ones that were about to droop. Orange Soda Chuchu appeared on some areas, so Augustus sliced them with his cutlass. Snapdragons also popped out of holes to eat a few branches, forcing the pirates to make greater swings to further branches. Aisling was casually laying a small ledge above the vine wall, swaying her head and foot to the music.

Eventually, the vines brought them to a safe ledge, where they went up a short staircase to get atop the left trench wall. Eenos were roaming within the sugary snow, hurdling sugarballs at the explorers, but Augustus’s Gobstopper proved stronger in knocking them out. Conveniently, his Gobstopper got drenched in the sugar, so he could throw them at the Sugar Cubes leading across to the top of the right trench wall. Suddenly, Aisling leaped across from the left wall and raced toward the Sugar Palace, making a great leap to the top of the teapot. There were Sir Sugars (Sir Slushes made of sugar) guarding the stairs to the Sugar Palace. Again, it took one hit from the Gobstopper on their top-hat weak points to defeat the monsters. The adventurers went up the stairs to the Sugar Palace.

“Oopsie!” Holly perked up. “The door is too tiny for Big People! You have to go from up above!” She skipped around to behind the teapot, where a ladder was hanging. The sign read For Big People, so the four climbed it to the top of the pot… which they just realized those two words were the same, backwards. Aisling was squatted on the pot, looking down into it with a curious smile. The Forest Fairy dove inside, Holly lightly jumped after, then Augustus grabbed his crew and took the dive next.

For some reason, they expected to hit a ground inside the two-story teapot, but instead, they plummeted down a surprisingly long shaft. There were numerous floors around the sides and stairs that kept spiraling down, with Sugar Fairies walking on them. They watched Aisling maneuver around the air as she fell ahead, avoiding the Eye-Cones that floated in the drop. Mothulas attempted to gnash the pirates, but Augustus was quick to chop them with his cutlass. He shifted left of a diagonal Eye-Cone row that closed the space between him and the side, but he grabbed a Gold Wonka Bar after getting through. He shifted to the center, where the space between the Eye-Cones grew tighter, but when Augustus got through, he felt his boots hit the floor. He set the babies down as they followed Holly and Aisling through a human-size doorway. (End song.)

“Welcome to Sugar Fairy Palace!” Holly announced to the humans. The palace interior was mostly white with a few chocolate-colored pillars and tiles. Augustus reached up and touched the ceiling while Aisling brushed her feet on the floor. It felt like fine china, except harder and sturdier. Naturally, the palace felt small and cramped to the big humans, as Sugar Fairies were roaming the low floor and a second floor which they had view of.

“Look, everybody! Big People!”

“Oh, Em, Gee! They’re so silly and fun-looking!”

“That one looks like a football! Will he go spin if I throw him?”

“I wanna snuggle and cuddle in that chocolate one’s fluffy black hair!”

“I wanna get mad at you for calling me that, but I just wanna eats you more!” Rallo exclaimed in adoration.

“The white one smells stinky!”

“Can we give that baby milk?”

“All of them were equally tiny, equally cute, and equally squeaky. The humans’ hearts were melting; these fairies were just too adorable for words. They wondered if they were actually feeling this way or if this was some hypnotic spell. “Ahem... Good evening, Sugar Fairies.” Aisling bowed (slightly lower than she already was). “We would like to speak to your princess. It would be very kind of you to take us to her.”

“EWWWWW! HER BREATH IS STINKY!!” All of their teeny eyes shut tight, and their teeny noses were covered.

“SO CUUUUUTE!” the humans screamed.

Aisling’s eyes narrowed with anger. “Just show us.” she said through gritted teeth.

“This way, my new chummy-wummies!” Holly skipped forward. “The princess will be scrumptious to see you!”

The giants crawled through another human-size door and went up stairs to an even larger, cave-like room. There was a big teapot on a central pillar, and sugar was pouring into it from the ceiling. The tip of the pot’s spout glowed white. There was a gentle pop, and a sugary white light came out and floated to them. The light decreased and revealed the Sugar Fairy Princess. She had brownish-black hair in two pigtails, and an orange dress with chibi white boots. Her adorable slanted purple eyes were complimented by a grumpy-looking frown.

Princess of Sugar Fairies

ZEIRA

The teeny fairy skipped across the air toward the pirates, carrying her big ladle. She floated before Augustus’s face, who was smiling delightfully at the creature. She whacked him on the head with the spoon. “What’re you, dum? Bow to me!” she yelled in a cute, but hotheaded tone.

“Ow!” Augustus rubbed the sore spot. “What gives?”

“You’re bigger than me! I don’t like that. Bow to me so you appear smaller.”

“You’re delightful as always, Princess Zeira.” Aisling remarked.

“P.U.! I thought I smelled something stinky!” Zeira waved a chibi hand by her chibi nose.
“What’re you doing here, Aisling? Did you bring these humans?”

“Yah, she did.” Augustus replied rudely. “Feel free to thank us for chasing the monsters off. I’ll name ya a few ways you can reward us. One, I had this Candy Virus for a short time, and it—”

A burst of fire emerged from Zeira’s head and sides, startling the five. Despite the fairy’s size, the spouts were huge and very hot. “You’ll show respect in my presence.” The fires vanished. “And for your information, I already know who you are, Augustus. The Big Mom Pirates are very infamous in the Sugar Fairy community. My people were berry much terrified of them.”

“I’m berry much tired of your attempt at being cute by using cute words that normal people wouldn’t use in the current CONTEXT!” Augustus folded his arms. “Listen, the Big Mom Pirates are gone. We’re the Marzipan Pirates and we’re different. Our number one goal is to have adventure, and adventure calls us to find the Lost Candies.”

“What? Why do you want to find the Lost Candies?”

“To see if they exist.” Augustus pulled out his barren lollipop stick and threw it away.

“The Lost Candies are ancient and sacred relics. They aren’t meant to be found or used by anyone.”

“Neither were the Sugary Wonders, but that didn’t stop my whole ancestry from finding them countless times throughout history.”

“The Sugary Wonders were originally created to reward the Kids Next Door. But we Sugar Fairies are protectors of the Lost Candies, and our job is more than difficult.”

“That explains it, ’cause you don’t do it well.” Augustus retorted, starting a new lollipop. “The Sun Cream up on Buttermilk Building was destroyed by Lord Licorice.”

“W-What?!” Zeira was taken aback. “That’s impossible! How could anyone—”

“AAAAAAAAHHHHHHH!” Adorable, high-pitch screams rang from the palace foyer, and sapphire flames burned into the chamber. A Sugar Fairy rushed in, looking frantic. “Princess, Princess! Big mean Big Monsters are- EYAAAH!” She ran when a blue flame was thrown at her.

“It doesn’t even feel satisfying to trample over your land.” A woman with black armor and messy black hair marched in with Flare Dancers at her beckon. “No defenses, no military… it’s amazing how long you’ve gone without anybody conquering you.”

Zeira floated between the Marzipans and the woman. “Who are you?” she asked with an angry chibi glare. “Are you with these Big Lugs or the monsters outside?”

“No way!” Augustus pushed the fairy aside for a better look. “You’re one of Mandy’s pirates! The Princess Azula from the Avatar Realms! You have a bounty of 76,000 gold pieces!”

Zeira gasped. “Of course! I once saw a wanted poster of her. She has a reputation for burning any town or landscape she walks upon. Azula the Blue Demolisher.”

“The princess has heard of me, I’m flattered.”

“Don’t be. You look a lot uglier than on the poster, and fatter, too.” Zeira snapped.

“WHAT?!”
“I don’t like you. I want you out of my house RIGHT NOW!” Zeira blasted a massive breath of fire, but Azula sucked it right down her throat. When the fire stopped, she wiped her lips of imaginary crumbs.

“I’ve mastered Dragon Style bending.” Azula smirked. “The ability to eat outside sources of my element and strengthen my chi. I’ve always been the strongest firebender in the Fire Nation, and my title stands to this day! But no matter how much I train, how strong I become, I can’t achieve Logia.” Blue flames burst from her arms when she shouted. “I don’t understand what I’m doing wrong.” She burst again. “I know Dragon Style, and my chi evolved to Sapphire when I turned 11, so why after 20 years, I still can’t make Logia!” Fire burst from her mouth.

“Maybe that’s because you suck.” Zeira said.

Angered, Azula Rocket Boosted over and snatched the fairy, startling the others with her speed. “I bet you’re just burning with chi, you little fire ant!”

“Hey, let me go!” Zeira shook adorably. Her chibi arms were fragile and powerless like that of a doll’s. “Stop holding me!”

“I bet swallowing you is just the kind of burst I need to finally make Logia. Happy landings!” She moved the helpless fairy to her open mouth.

Augustus SLICED Azula’s wrist and forced her to let go. The former princess jumped away and growled at the teen. “Hey, perra. Don’t you know cannibalism is wrong?”

“I used to cook and eat the turtle-ducks that swam around in my castle’s pond.” Azula said viciously. “I’ll eat what I want! And a queen of my status deserves the highest quality dessert.”

“Why don’t you get a taste of me?” Augustus cocked a brow. “I’ve been eating dessert all my life, I bet I’m just sensuous.”

“Hn hyou’re gonna challenge me?” Azula chuckled. “You may have worked for the Big Mom Pirates, but you’re still a child. Even the Avatar had more resolve than you.”

“You still couldn’t beat ’im. And you ain’t beating me, either!”

“We’ll see. Flare Dancers!” The four graceful flame demons leapt beside their master. “Let’s DANCE!” (Play “Here Comes the Grizz” from Sly Cooper: Thieves in Time.)

Boss fight: Azula

The Flare Dancers skated circles around Azula to create a ring of fire, and when Azula jumped through the fire, she pulled it along with her as she skated to Augustus. The teen ducked the left giant fire whip, then jumped her right one, but as Azula turned, she kicked a foot back and sent Augustus several meters. The boy recovered and rolled aside when Azula tossed flames at him, attempting to swing his cutlass at her, but Azula smacked the weapon away and kicked Augustus the opposite way. Grinning maniacally, the woman drew a knife, skating to Augustus while he was recovering. “Auuuh!” The lollipop flew out of his mouth when he choked. Azula forced the knife against his neck and pushed him away.

“CAPTAIN!” the Baby Trio screamed. (“Mw-mw!”)

Augustus grunted and helped himself up. “Wh…” He felt the part on his neck where she cut. “I’m “You’re welcome.” They all looked over at Aisling, who was sitting cross-legged and positioning her hands to face Augustus. Her book was open beside her.

“What are you doing?”

“We Forest Fairies provide special defense to human children. I can make it so your body doesn’t get ruptured from attacks that would cut or burn you. You’ll still feel pain, but these attacks won’t be fatal.”

“Fine, I’ll take. But for the record, I’m no child, I’m a teenager.”

“The Baby Trio is older than you. There’s no more difference.”

“DON’T interfere!” Azula skated over to burn the fairy, but Zeira exploded a flame wall to block her.

“Don’t ignore me!” Augustus dashed up and punched Azula in the face, but she back-flipped, crouched, and did a breakdance fire shockwave. Augustus jumped and ran at Azula to swing more punches across her face, then the woman kicked on her rockets and flew away. The Flare Dancers surrounded Augustus and began to close in as they skated. The captain bounced his Gobstopper in his hand before hurling it at one of the dancers’ heads. Their formation broke when its flame body disabled, leaving the roundish imp that was its real body.

The imp ran away when Augustus ran over, but the teen bypassed to grab his fallen cutlass. He then chased the Flareless Dancer and stabbed it multiple times before its body exploded. Augustus was hurt from the explosion, but no injuries were present thanks to Aisling’s spell. The other three Flare Dancers glided over to kick him, but Augustus dodged aside, then raised his cutlass to defend from Azula’s knife. She kicked her left foot up, but the teen boy jumped away from the flaming limb, then successfully struck the woman’s face with his Gobstopper.

Azula skated away, lighting her whole body with sapphire flames as she sent wave after wave at her opponent. Augustus jumped them all, and Azula steadily maneuvered closer. The room turned dark when the firebender charged lightning in her hands. She waved her arms to channel her flow of chi, then was ready to strike her adversary. With fearless determination, Augustus dashed at the lady pirate, ready to slice her, but Azula jabbed her fingers at his chest and induced him with lightning.

“AAAAAHH!” In his weak moment, Azula punched him away. His body was still twitching from the shock.

“How long’s that magic gonna last?” Rallo questioned.

“It won’t hold up if he takes too many attacks.” Aisling answered, still focusing her power despite Zeira’s flame wall barrier. “He needs to be more careful.”

“I feel so worried!” Holly yelled with adorable sad eyes. “I wish I could help, but I’m so teeny!”

“And he doesn’t have Haki.” Stewie said. “I’m not sure if he can beat her…”

Azula leaped, flipped in the air, and brought a flaming foot down on Augustus, but he grabbed the pirate’s leg and swung her forward, slamming facefirst on the ground. Augustus recovered and ran when Azula got up and growled angrily. She thrustred flames out of her feet and hands and flew at him, ramming Augustus headfirst and smashing him against the wall. She jumped away and tossed fireballs, so Augustus ran leftward from her direction. The Flare Dancers skied at him from ahead, brimming emerald, and Augustus felt the light singe when he dove between two of them. When they circled and came back, Augustus ran to stab his cutlass into one of them. He jumped away before the dancer exploded.

The remaining two Flare Dancers morphed their embers to sapphire. “They can’t do much with only two.” Azula said. “Get over here, one of you.” A Flare Dancer obeyed and skated over. Azula puckered her lips and sluuuuuurped its fiery body down her lungs. The imp that remained skittered away as blue flames leaked out of the cracks in Azula’s armor.

“Wait a second, aren’t those creatures made of Underworld flames?” Augustus asked. “That’s dangerous for normal firebenders!”

“It is!” Azula spoke devilishly. “But I LOVE hellfire! It’s DELICIOUS!” A rocket burst from her back as she launched at Augustus, who raised his hands and grabbed hers. Azula kept flying and pushing him along, dodging her head when he punched his left fist, then head-butting him. Azula grabbed the dizzy teen by the legs and swung him around before hurling him away. Augustus got up to see Azula rocketing to him again, eyes full of madness, so he chucked his Gobstopper at whipping speed and struck her in the teeth. He then dodged aside to let her crash into a wall.

The teen captain ran at her from behind to furiously punch the back of her head. He then grabbed his cutlass and swung to cut, but the Fire Princess grabbed the candycane blade and melted it in her hand. She turned to him, and through the black bangs blocking her eyes, Augustus could see the undying fury. She punched him with Flame Fist, flying the boy back. She flew above him and pelted rapid fireballs, with Augustus withstanding the first few before rolling away. He grabbed his Gobstopper, flipping back when Azula punched down, then slamming the small hard sphere against her teeth. Augustus kicked her leg to knock her down, then threw the Gobstopper at her face again.

“THAT’S IT!” Azula snarled like a wild beast. “I’ll burn EVERY shred of matter on your form so nothing remains!” She looked at the remaining Flare Dancer, whose body morphed into violet flames. She inhaled with as powerful a gust as Kirby, sucking the purple fire in.

“A Sapphire Firebender shouldn’t even be able to use violet flames!” Augustus yelled.

“I will become LOGIA!” Purple flames leaked out of Azula’s armor now. She punched bigger, hotter flames, so the best Augustus could do was dodge. “Nn, nn!” Augustus took a few hits, then Azula punched a greater flame from both fists to blow him back. “AAAAH!”

“Ahhh!” Aisling grunted and fell on her side.

“What happened?” Zeira asked, dropping the flame wall.

“My magic’s worn off. His body is vulnerable now.”

“Oh…” Holly looked at the human boy with worry.

Azula stomped toward the captain with her arms drooped. “Cough, huh…” Her legs faltered, feeling overwhelmed by the violet fires.

“Heh… Feeling a bit sweaty?” Augustus smirked from his spot on the ground.

“I’ll show you SWEATY!” Azula drew her knife and wobbled over to end her enemy. Augustus tried to stand- “Nnnn!” but he felt the pain catch up to him.
Azula bore a devilish smile. She would take sweet pride in slaying the Davy Back Fight deserter, Big Mom’s grandson, and get basked in the glory from her fellow pirates. The viewers were horrified at the thought of Azula’s victory, but Holly especially couldn’t bear to let the human die. “Big Person!!”

“Holly, wait!” Zeira yelled when the tiny fairy danced over to Augustus. Azula swung her knife at the boy’s neck, but Holly jumped in the way just in time. (End song.)

The upper half of the Sugar Fairy’s body flew up into the air. Blood flew out of her. The entire event was so sudden and shocking, time appeared to slow down. When Holly’s body hit the ground, she was faced upward. A smile was still on her face, and her eyes, though lifeless, were still big and adorable.

“. . .” Azula stared at the dead fairy. Her yellow eyes, still brimming with madness, were twitching. “Huff-huff…” The tears formed almost against her will. All of a sudden, her emotions were beyond her control. “SNIFF.” Azula fell to her knees. She couldn’t keep from crying, pouring out her emotions. She couldn’t comprehend the severity and cruelty of her actions. She was utterly helpless to her own feelings.

Augustus, the babies, Zeira, and Aisling were crying. It was a horrible thing to happen. She was such a small creature… a small and innocent person… Holly, a kind and friendly fairy who helped total strangers like them across the kingdom. They were so grateful for her aid. They would’ve wished for anything better than this. Sugar Fairies were happy beings that filled peoples’ hearts with glee. They reminded people that there was joy and meaning in life. So seeing one on the ground, dead… her expression gone unchanged… it opened their hearts and minds to everything.

Aisling felt a tiny tap on her shoulder. She turned to see Zeira, tears leaking from her tiny purple eyes. Zeira held her arms open, so Aisling took her in both hands and brought her to her chest. Aisling hugged her little friend with warmth. They remembered how much they loved each other, even if they fought. The kind of love that Princess Mavis wanted all creatures to share.

After 10 more minutes, they were mostly calmed down. Aisling released Zeira as she floated to Augustus. “Sniff… I almost forgot to… th-thank you… for saving me.”

“It was no trouble.” Augustus choked on his breath. “I’m sorry for… what happened…” They all looked at Azula. She was bowed on her hands and knees, creating a puddle with her tears. “I didn’t think… someone like her would cry over this…”

“Everyone cries… when a Sugar Fairy dies.” Zeira sniffled. “She killed her… so she’ll cry for a week… if not longer. Sniff…” She faced Augustus again. “Listen… I decided that I’ll help you. Is it true that you’re looking for the Lost Candies?”

“We are… sniff.” Augustus wiped the last tears away. “I’m trying to find them… for a friend.”

“Well, whoever Luviro’s abuela is, she knew about them.”

“Lu…vio?” The name sounded familiar to Zeira. She shook her head and spoke again. “Augustus… Have you ever heard of the Avalaran story called ‘Fairy Sisters’? The story talks about three Fairy Princesses, who are Aisling and her two friends, but there’s an extra chapter that talks about a fourth sister, me. The only reference to the Lost Candies is that chapter, but when the Illuminati appeared roughly 4,000 years ago, they tore out those pages. I think I know the reason.
Augustus, do you know what’s going to happen at the end of this month?”

“This month? At the end of this month, Luviro’s gonna die. He’s terminally ill, and he wants to see the Lost Candies before it happens.”

“…I see…” Zeira was clearly suspicious of his reason, though Augustus couldn’t imagine why. “Listen, Augustus, I want you to find the Lost Candies. There are six of them. They were created by Giants from a world called Termina. One of the candies happens to be my teapot home.” She gestured up at the giant teapot she came out of. “It contains a limitless storage of the purest sugar, and that sugar is what you’ll need. I’ll give it to you after you manage to find the other five candies.”

“This sugar is what Luviro called the Sugar Fuel?” Augustus recalled from Luviro’s story.

“Yes, it is. Now, I can’t tell you everything, and I can’t leave my homeland during this crisis. But as the Sugar Fairy Princess, I will be happy to grant you three wishes.”

“Nice try, girl,” Rallo said, “we know you aren’t a genie-”

“GOOD.” Augustus shouted with relief. “My first wish is to get these Candy Virus fragments out of my body!”

“I thought I sensed something weird in your bloodstream. Very well.” Zeira put her spoon inside a pot of purple sugar, then waved it around as it glittered. “For the big, rude man, your wish is my command!” She whooshed the sugar over Augustus, who coughed.

The teen stared at both sides of his hands. He balled his fists and tried to channel his willpower. “It didn’t work, I still can’t use Haki!”

“It DID work, I’m not sensing the candied cells in your blood, anymore.” Zeira stated. “Your stomach, though…”

“Perhaps the Haki needs to return to you naturally.” Aisling said. “You may have to learn it all over again…”

“My ass, I have to. Whatever, Wish Number 2: There’s a really big guy outside. He’s a giant crocodile, but he’s a total softy. I’d like to take him with us, but… sigh, it would just be really difficult. Do you think you guys can give him a home here, so we know where to find him ’case we need him?”

“I guess I’ll make room. Okay, you have one wish left. What is it?”

Augustus smirked. “I wish my Ace Flyer plane would materialize beside me.”

Zeira whirled her purple sugar and threw it into a POOF, and a hideous, broken-down two-person plane appeared. “Uhhhh…” Augustus tried to find the words. “Not the greatest teleport spell…”

“For your information, my teleporting’s spot-on!” Zeira flushed. “…Mostly. Anyway, your plane was probably already like this. Where did you last park it, on a freeway?”

“…On Licorice’s ship.” Augustus sighed. “I guess they would go kinda agro on it. Too bad I can’t wish it fixed.”

“Zeira, I also came here because I wanted to ask you a few things.” Aisling spoke up. “The Lost Candies happened to be one of them. You were planning to bring them together… weren’t you?”
“I tried, but Lord Licorice’s men have been securing most of them, and now they have the Sun Cream, too. They’re making certain that we can’t collect them.”

“I feared as much… Well, are you still planning to come to Mavis’s tea party?”

“Sure I am!!” Zeira flailed her chibi arms happily. “Mavis makes the yummiest tea! But Aisling, I want you to help these humans for a little longer. Humans, I’ll do you one more favor. I’ll warp you to the location of one of the Lost Candies. Specifically, the Rock Nut.”

“Rock Nut?!” Augustus jumped. “According to Luviro’s story, that was the first candy ever created on Earth! It’s old as time itself.”

“That would be accurate. That’s why I’ll send you all to the only place you can find it. I’ll also send Aisling along so she can help bring you back.”

“Why would we need her for that, exactly?”

“You’ll see.” Zeira waved her ladle of purple sugar. “Thanks for fighting the monsters for us. We should be able to take care of Azula while she’s like this, so don’t worry. Happy travels.” She threw the sugar over the Marzipans, Aisling, and the airplane.

When the sugar cleared away from their vision, they found their selves on a solid ground between two large stone mounds. “…Um… She said she’d send us to the location.” Rallo said as they all shared his baffled expression. “But did she say when?”

Raptors raced across the near-barren landscape, pterodactyls soared in the sky, and a T-rex managed to snatch an unsuspecting raptor in its teeth. “You think there’s a chance we can hitch a ride on Dinosaur Train?” Augustus asked.

Negaverse; Sector -W7 Treehouse (-8:00ma)

The news about Sipa and Lucifer’s supposed wedding spread quickly, and everyone was feeling either excited or worried. When Nega-Sector W7 heard the news, Asia, the black-winged Nimbi obsessed with cleanliness, offered to help Sipa prepare. “Okay, Sipa, I’m done putting it on.” Asia said to her friend. “You like it?”

Sipa stared at herself in a mirror: she was clothed in a black wedding gown, in which the collar had devil horns attached. Sipa turned and stared at all sides of her. “I look like a real Demon Princess! Oh, Asia, I’m so happy my dreams are coming true! Marrying a real Demon Saint, I’ll have a position of power in the Underworld! Maybe one day, I can shed this mortal skin and become a true demon!”

“Sipa, you were always kind of messed up in the past, but… is this really what you want? Giving up your entire free will to some monster? Do you even love Lucifer?”

“HA ha ha! Are-Har you kidding, Asia?” Sipa chuckled, sporting a forced cheerful grin. “Of course I love Lucifer! A disciple; nay, a son, of Lord Satan himself. I could just feel the evil radiating from his soul! I can only imagine what he’ll do to me. How my soul is going to look after he’s finished sucking it. Maybe I’ll change into a dementor, and lose all my feelings, and—”

“Are you even LISTENING to yourself?!” Asia’s shout startled Sipa, but the latter still bore a vibrant expression. “I sewed a dress and helped you get it on, but I can NOT understand how a girl is so okay with DESTROYING herself! Do you really value Satanism more than your own existence?! Do you honestly want to do this? Sipa, look at me and say, with utmost truth, you want to marry Lucifer.”
Sipa looked at her, her eyes still wide and her mouth a grin. Asia saw the bags under her eyes. The aching feeling at the corners of her forced smile, the deep fear and doubt in her dark eyes. Asia, a person who didn’t tend to notice things well, sensed these things clearly. “…I don’t.” Sipa frowned, and Asia felt the truth in her voice. “I’m afraid… Asia… I really don’t think… I want to do this.”

“So why are you? Is that Medusa lady forcing you to?”

“No… Er… I mean… I don’t know!” Sipa fell to her knees. “I thought I could help the Demon Saints by doing this. I thought… this fear in my heart was what I was seeking. I’ve… I’ve been afraid of the Underworld for weeks. I don’t know why I began feeling this way, but I hate this feeling! I really hate…” Tears began to form. “Isn’t this despair, and this hate… what our world is made from? Shouldn’t I… wish to feel this way?”

“Sipa… I think you’re completely confused. Your grandpa forced you to worship Satan, so you grew up thinking it was the correct path. I think that, deep down… you really don’t want to do any of it, anymore. You’re afraid of disappearing. You don’t want this.”

Sipa clasped Asia’s baggy pants and pulled herself to them, soaking the clothing with her tears. “I’m really scared, Asia. I want to back out of it, but I dunno…”

“No, no, it’s okay.” Asia smiled and patted Sipa’s hair. “It hasn’t begun, yet. You don’t have to do it. You don’t have to do anything they say.”

“Then… sniff.” She looked up at Asia’s eyes. “Whaddo I do?”

“We’ll go up there… and tell them to call this off. We’ll send the memo to every other DNK sector, and get them all to protect you if those monsters try anything.”

“Why would the other sectors wanna help me? Why would they… care?”

“…” Asia thought for a minute. “I don’t know. I just… feel like they will.”

Night Castle

Ragus fed her new toy a plastic bottle of milk. Ragus couldn’t decide what animal skin to sew on the lifeless puppet… In the end, she chose to make him a platy-pony-cardinal-lion-iguana-froad. The result was too hideous and too hard to remember to want to describe. Ragus already forgot the original name of this person… so now its name was Nosrednug.

“…It was my father’s fault that our house burned down. He lit up too many Christmas decorations. It’s his fault I died. Even though he tried to save me… I’m still angry at him. But it doesn’t bother me. Because Lady Medusa said she would kill him after this wedding. I can’t wait for that. …” Ragus looked at the ceiling. “It’s sure to begin soon. Whatever force is causing everyone to forget you… I hope it lasts for just a few more hours. …I guess I’ll go back up there.”

---

*Zeira is from Fairy Tail, and her appearance in this story is a setup for a possible Fairy Sisters sequel. See you for the wedding.*
Not Even An Ant

Chapter Summary

Team Sandman sneaks into Dressrosa, at the same time as Team Rupert. Can they unveil Doflamingo's secret?

You all know how, in One Piece, the Dressrosa Arc was 100+ chapters long? I'm gonna shorten it to 2 chapters here. Hehe.

Chapter 16: Not Even An Ant

Dressrosa

Doflamingo’s family returned to Dressrosa very late at night. The whole town was long since in their homes, as per curfew. Dressrosa was empty, quiet. Doflamingo kept his daughter close as he led her across town. Eventually, they climbed to their castle set high on a stone fortress. Sugar was brought to her room, full of toys, color, and fun activities, no windows. “Stay here, Sugar.” her father told her grimly. “We may put toy production on hiatus until we can confirm it’s safe. Don’t make too much noise. Good night.” He shut her door and locked it.

Sugar walked to her bed and settled under the covers, just like hours ago on the train. She held the brown-haired Rainbow Monkey and fell into slumber.

The next day

Dressrosa was one of the liveliest towns you’ll ever visit. Half the population was humans, half the population was living, walking toys, created by the very company which protected this island. As they engaged with children for as long as the sun was out, happiness and joy was all anyone felt, the terrific lack of darkness and gloom rivaled Mariejoa. Guards roamed the street, ensuring there was no conflict among their happy citizens.

The Corrida Colosseum was the most populace place this day, watching warriors duke it out like ravenous animals. The prime attraction was Azure, a small, floating, silver-bodied creature with a blue steel helmet. It wielded swords in its twin tails and slew every man that came at it.

Downtown, our heroes waited in a dark alley as Nolan overviewed a digital map. “Why aren’t we in costume again?” Crystal asked.

“Well, this is a day mission, for our day clothes, and three masked/hooded adults flying under the sun would draw a bit much attention. Anyway, the plan: we break into Doflamingo’s castle, find his daughter, punch her senseless, everyone turns back to normal.”

“What makes you think that?”

“Call it a hunch. Anyway, Yuki wanted the honor of infiltration, he shall have it. Your first test will be stealing a guard and taking his costume.”

“No prob.” Yuki smirked.
A casual guard in a pink-feathered coat and sunglasses whistled as he strolled into the alley. Yuki jumped out, beat the crap out of him, and dragged him to the darkness. Nolan and Wiccan watched as he came out strapped in the guard’s clothing; he barely looked like himself except for frosty skin. “Perfect. And, through know-how of my own, I hacked the company’s website last night, found the guards’ shifts and where they keep stuff. Apparently they use a password system that changes on a daily basis, I’ll radio you today’s passwords if you get in any trouble.” Nolan briefed.

“Right…” The feathers were already making Yuki itch. “Where exactly am I going?”

“The Toy House, just around the western side of that fortress. Sugar’s gotta be in there. I reckon the city will fall into a panic if everyone turns back, we’ll seize that time to break into the castle and attack Doflamingo. From there, maybe we can find Caesar. Let’s get to it. Good luck, Yuki.”

Stage 27: Dressrosa

Mission: Stop Doflamingo’s operations.

Act 1

Yuki fixed his sunglasses on and marched the first city street in a casual fashion. “You there!” He flinched, spotted by another guard. “What is the password to the casino?” he asked with an Italian accent.

“Uhhhhhh-”

“Casino, ‘t’s right here.” Nolan said. “It’s-”

“Pica Pica Trebol Dia.” Yuki answered.

“Okay, that checks out. What’s-a Doflamingo adding these extra security measures for, he don’t-a trust us?”

“Er—is that rhetorical or…”

“Sigh… gotta watch out for that.” Yuki sighed.

“No kidding, you call that an Italian accent? Sound more realistic.” Nolan stated.

“Dude, I’m from France.”

“I thought you were Japanese.”

“Yet he moved to Iceland.” Wiccan followed.

“Screw it, I’ll talk Italian. Hopefully all the guards I encounter will be English.”

Yuki progressed, trying to avoid as many people and walking toys in this bazaar. A little boy was happily playing with a springy dog on his right. It was strange how happy everyone seemed, Yuki had to remember that none of these toys were in their own will, nor anyone in the right mind. “Oi!” Another guard stopped him. “What was yesterday’s password for the Toy House?”
“Cora Pica Monet Monet.”

“Okay-a. Next time you get a haircut, I know a good barber.” The guard left as Yuki made his way down a dark alley leading west, but more guards were passing. “What’s the password for the colosseum?”

“Dia Dia Senor Cora.”

“What was last week’s order of executive seats?”

“Dia Pica Trebol Cora.”

“What will be tomorrow’s castle password?”

“Cora Cora Pica Trebol?”

“That’s right-a. Your haircut’s-a scary though.”

“So I’ve been told-a.” Yuki made it out of the alley and to another active street. “Getting sick of people criticizing my haircut.”

“Play it cool, just get to the Toy House.”

After coding his way past at least four more guards, Yuki arrived at the Toy House, which seemed built into the wall of the fortress and designed like stacks of colorful presents with fun designs. A fat, tan-skinned man in sunglasses guarded outside. He wore a purple shirt with ‘Let’s Baby’ written, too small as his blubbery tummy was exposed, tight yellow underwear, and sucked on a pacifier. “Mw-mw.” He sucked a few times and narrowed his vision on Yuki. “Mauricio. It is time for your shift already?” His accent was more Hispanic than Italian.

“Yes it is, a…”

“Señor Pink, that’s this guy’s name.”

“Señor-a.”

“Then give me today’s password.”

“Pica Pica Cora Pica.”

Señor’s sunglasses twinkled. “Bueno… but what is the name of the woman I got with last night?”

“I, uh… I did not hear-a that, I meant to ask the other guy.”

Señor seemed to furrow. “What other guy? Is Gladius trying to steal my woman again? I will visit him at the casino later and give him a taste of… Pink.”

“I’ll-a pass him your message, do not-a worry.” Yuki turned and walked away, casually disappearing behind some citizens to be out of eyesight from him. “Dammit, he won’t let me in. Maybe I’ll try my luck with this Gladius.”

“The casino’s just down this road, down some stairs on your right to an alley.” Yuki kept forward and noticed another alleyway along the right. The stairs led to an empty enclosing with a ‘Restaurant’. “Well, the map says this is it.”

“Way to hide it.” Yuki approached the entrance and knocked. A little slot opened, revealing dark eyes. “Identificare il nome e la zuppa preferita.”

“Oh, crap. Uh, Google Translate, don’t fail me now. Lessee, ‘identicare,’ uhhhh, your name and favorite soup. Now, ‘My name is…’”

“Il mio nome è Mauricio, che mi piace di patate arrosto.”

“Bene. Ora la password?”

“Pica Pica Trebol Dia.”

“Bene. Si accomodi.” He opened the door.

It was probably the smallest casino Yuki ever saw, nothing very flashy, a bar in the far left corner, slot machine, card game at one table, and a roulette wheel. A large man in a big yellow coat was using the slot machine, and a kid that looked like his son was beside him. “Nuuiii Dad, why did Doffy’s dad lock Sugar in her room again-daizokun?”

“I told you-dasoyun, he thinks someone’s trying to get her. I dunno why, but when Diamante called and said Freddy’s got ransacked, he got worried. He’s having Trebol guard the door to her room, and if he catches anyone try to sneak in there, he’ll bind them up and have her turn ‘em into toys. I think Young Master Doffy’s getting a little paranoid-dasoyun. He’s been making toys for 12 years, how could anyone find out now.”

“Nuuiii. Well, I’m going back to the treehouse-daizokun. I’ll tell Mom you were gambling again.” Bison began to waddle to the exit.

“Niiii. Okay.”

Yuki stepped aside and let the child leave. “You said his name was Buffalo?” he whispered.

“Yeah. Gladius should be wearing a mask and have spiky hair like yours. See him?”

“Ahhh…” Yuki searched and found a spike-haired man at the roulette. “Yeah. ‘kay, wish me luck.” He calmly approached the masked man watching the roulette spin. “Ahem, uh, Gladius-a.”

“Oh, Mauricio. Very interesting… haircut.” He spoke with a calm aura.

“What, you got-a nice hair, thought about shapin’ like it.”

“Mmmh… what is the password to the trade port?”

“Dia Dia Pica Tre. ‘ey, can you help-a me out, I’m supposed to be in the Toy Factory, but I don’t-a know the lady Señor slept with last night.”

“Ugh, this is why progress is slow with Señor… Her name was Natasha. Don’t ask how I know that.”

“Course not-a.” Yuki casually left the restaurant (‘cause casual is the key to stealth) and returned to the Toy House. “You did-a Natasha, didn’t you.”

“Mw.” Señor’s right shade twinkled. “Sí. Now tell your hero Gladius, she is mine.”

“Señor, I just want to go to my shift-a.”

“Mw. This is not over, Mauricio.” His cold stare remained on Yuki as he walked away. Yuki sighed in annoyance before entering the colorful house.

It was just as colorful and decorative inside, though very small at first glance. Toys roamed around mindlessly and guards stood firm, keeping order. “The boss says we should watch out for intruders. But what else are we doing?” one remarked.

“Who’s he expect to show up, Rubberband Man? Ay ay… hey you!” He pointed at Yuki. “What code makes the heli-toy fly?!”

“Coming right up!”

“Uno uno dos tres.”

Immediately, a small helicopter toy panicked as it hovered into the air, flew directly forward, and crashed into a wall. The guards laughed ecstatically. “Ay, Gladius, you are such a… ‘ey wait, you are-a Mauricio. Way to-a really ‘stick out’!” They laughed away as Yuki bypassed and headed into a door in the back.

This room was much larger, where Yuki’s floor had an overview of a lower area where toys were carrying crates from Point A to B, commanded by guards. This round upper floor was protected by a fence-wall, so Yuki proceeded rightward, finding a doorway blocked by an energy barrier. “Yo Nol, what’s the coe?”

“Uhhhh barrier door in Toy House, not finding that. Uhhh maybe search around?”

Yuki headed back the opposite way, to a dead-end area encased within the fence where several crates lay. Old papers were stacked inside them, but nothing that gave any hint to the door. “‘ey, why did Doflamingo not tell anyone the code to the barrier, I had to ask like four guys.” Yuki listened intently to a talking guard below.

“He wants as few people in the house as possible, too afraid of spies.”

“He has like a hundred guards, why ya gotta keep ‘ocho nueve cero cuatro’ a secret?”

Yuki quickly rushed to the barrier, typed in the number—oh wait, he didn’t know their English versions. He asked Nolan and confirmed it was ‘8904’, entering. Beyond the fence of a parallel wall was an elevator shaft, the door of which was on the lower floor, so Yuki quickly headed to the staircase—“YOU THERE, factory password, go.”

“Cora Trebol Trebol Pica.”

“Okay. GDV, ah?” Yuki exchanged a laugh for who-knows-what with him before they crossed paths. Yuki went down the stairs to the lower floor, and ignoring all the guards whipping toys, he approached the elevator. “Halt.” A guard stopped him. “Elevator password.”

“Dos cinco seis nueve.”

“All yours. Oh, it’s just coming down.”

Indeed, the elevator was slowly lowering to stop at their floor. Yuki eagerly waited directly in front, and when the green light dinged, it opened. Two guards stood on either side of a red-caped, open-shirt, slender man with painted red lines down his eyes and a big mouth. The guards all saluted behind Yuki. “Heads up, Yu, that’s Diamante, one of the bosses!”

“Ha-heeeeey, Diamante, what’s uuuup!” Yuki cheered.
“You’re awfully cheery today, Gladius.”

“I am Mauricio.”

“My mistake. Are you on duty down below?”

“Well ah, I was looking for uh, Trebol. You-a know where he is?”

“Trebol’s on an important assignment. No one’s allowed to disturb him.”

“What, he’s-a guarding the girl’s room, isn’t ‘e?”

“…?” Diamante froze. “How do you know what he’s guarding? None of the guards were informed.”

“Oh-uh, Buffalo told me, he-a wanted me to go ‘n’ ask him for something, somethin’ about extra money, you know for the casino.”

“Damn Buffalo, can’t he keep a secret. Look, no guards are allowed upstairs, if you still wanna be useful, go down and help in the trade port.”

“Oh, what are we trading, spaghetti and meatballs?”

“The illegal kind, probably. I’m going to the colosseum. That Azure creature… she’s quite a catch. If she wins this year, I’m thinking of…” With a devious grin, Diamante went upstairs with the guards. Yuki sighed and pushed a lower-floor button, quietly enjoying the ride down.

“No guards allowed upstairs, huh? Okay, let’s think this through… can you icebend in there?”

Yuki looked around for an elevator camera, seeing one in the corner, so he made a tiny ice glow in his hand, hidden from its vision. “Apparently. So I should go mano a mano with Trebol? How tough can he be?”

“Siiiigh… I would like to hope he’s by himself and can’t put up a fight… but if Sugar is that important, and Flamingo’s trusting Trebol to guard her, I dunno. Just walk around the trade port, maybe you’ll find something.”

Before long, the elevator stopped and let Yuki onto the floor. “Whoa…” Indeed, it was an underground harbor, massive and atmospheric. A steamboat was parked at the docks as toys carried crates off and brought them to a huge, distant factory. “What’s something like that doing—SMILEs Factory?”

“‘SMILEs’… that’s the alias Caesar gave his Devil Fruits.” Nolan recounted their trip to Punk Hazard. “Is that where Caesar is working?”

“Hold on, there’s some people there! They look like… Teen Ninjas!” Black-armored teenagers were in fact standing near the factory entrance. “I’m gonna try and get closer.” Yuki did a fast-walk on the way to the factory, hoping to not draw too much suspicion from passing guards and toys. None of them were asking for passwords, apparently too focused on work and boredom. Yuki went behind a nearby stack of crates, pretending to inspect them while he increased the range of his earpiece to overhear the Teens.

A large, buff teen with a neck-brace opened a box brought out to him by guards. Eldwin pulled out two Devil Fruits, an orange and a strawberry. “Another mighty fine haul. These will make good rewards for CP10. Whenever they get a non-wild goose chase assignment. King Sandy really drove them crazy. Now for your payment: we found a couple of snot-nosed twerps lost at sea, they belong to the Kids Next Door. According to reports, they’re the grandkids of Kyogre the Sea God. If that’s not worth a Yipper 50 and 572, I dunno what is. Just help us get these goodies loaded and we’ll send ‘em down.”

The guards carried the Devil Fruits to the ship, and Yuki kept behind them casually. He pretended to patrol the general area and watched them go up the plank. Minutes later, guards were escorting two handcuffed kids, Melody and Danny Jackson, down from the vessel. Yuki walked a good distance away, watching the guards leading the children toward the factory. Thinking fast, Yuki grabbed his Mauricio nametag and stuffed it away, quickly approaching the guards. “Ahem, I’ll take them from here, gentlemen.”

“And you are-a?”

“Gladius. Thought about going casual today.”

“Eh, no one else has that hairdo. Why do you need these kids?”

“I’ve been told these were Kids Next Door operatives, I think we need someone more reliable to watch them.”

“If you say so. Hope they don’t make you pop.” The guards tossed Yuki the keys and left the children in his care.

Melody and Danny followed Yuki patiently, a smug face on the former. “I just want you to know, this is child abuse.” Melody argued. “Your company can be sued for millions, not just for irrationally kidnapping us, but underground trade ports are illegal in this part of the sea, you know. My mom’s an international reporter, she’ll bust your ass.”

“Pipe down.”

“Oh, you do not tell ME what to do, I don’t need waterbending to freeze YOUR nuts.”

“Someone already beat you to the punch.” Yuki hid behind a row of drums away from guards, kneeled, and took off his glasses. “Kids, my name is Yuki.”

“Mr. Crystal? What are you doing here?”

“Undercover. Hey, maybe you kids can help, I need to take someone out upstairs and she has a guard protecting her, but I have a plan. Assuming my ‘Gladius’ disguise holds up, we’re gonna ride up to his floor and I’ll tell him you operatives know Sugar’s ‘secret.’ Now—I’ll explain on the way—I’ll suggest we make you into toys, so hopefully they’ll let Sugar—that’s the toymaker—out, then I’ll take a swing at her.”

“Okay, ummm… and how do we know you aren’t tricking us?” Melody asked, and had zillions other questions spinning in her head.

“Just trust me on this, oh and pretend you’re beaten-up so I can drag you on the floor, can’t make it too suspicious.”

“I better get an interview for this.”

“Deal.” Yuki led the kids to the elevator, pushed the button, and waited for it to lower. “Get down now, there’s a camera.” Melody and Danny fell to their sides, looking injured. Yuki dragged them in and pushed the button to Floor 4, hoping that to be the right one. Yuki kept still and avoided looking at the camera, feeling tense from the quiet. Just when the elevator was half past Floor 3, it shook and stopped.

There was a bong. “Hello, elevator passengers, this is your humble host, Don Quixote Doflamingo. We apologize for the inconvenience, but the elevator seems to have a little heavy… luggage. We are sending guards to rectify this dilemma. Until then, enjoy your nap. Fufufufufufufufufu!”

“Yuki? Yuki, what’s going on?” Nolan called. Gas began to fill the elevator, Yuki and the kids growing weary. “Yuki, it’s all staticky on my end, what’s up? Yuki—”

They all passed out. The gas eventually faded away and the elevator door opened. Within minutes, the guards would come climbing and claim their intruders.

Outside

“Yuki! Yuki, where are you?” Nolan shouted in his wristwatch. “Dammit. Why did I lose transmission?!?”

“Radio waves are a little iffy in this area.” He and Crystal whipped around. Diamante grinned maliciously, a sword over his shoulder and many guards behind him. “We don’t like expensive phone bills. If it isn’t the famous Sandman and his protégé. Even without your costumes, you fit Caesar’s description to a ‘T’.”

“You couldn’t possibly know we were in town.” Nolan said.

“What, you thought you’d glide onto one of our arriving ferries early in the morning and make yourself out as a tourist? All of Dressrosa’s ferries have security cameras that allow us to view all incoming passengers before they arrive. You can never be too sure a trio of heroes won’t try to sneak in undetected. Now that we have your ice man, there’s no one to stop us from cutting you—”

Nolan boosted forward and threw his fist at the officer, but Diamante whooshed his cape in front like a shield, damaging Nolan’s fist when it made contact. “Ahhhh! Slag!”

“Uhahahahaha! My cape is made of steel, but with my Ripple-Ripple Fruit, it flaps like a flag! An Armament user, aren’t you, Sandman? Let’s see how it works against real hardness.”

Nolan held his sore knuckles and backed up beside Crystal, the guards locking their guns on the duo. They heard an engine roar and turned, seeing a C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. incoming, inching steadily to the ground. Nolan grabbed Crystal’s arm and used his other hand to shoot his grappling hook, propelling them both to the aircraft. “FIRE!” Diamante shouted, the guards failing to blast the intruders.

The heroes flew a few feet over the bus and landed on the roof, crouching and holding tight. “Dad! Miss Wickens!” Dillon exclaimed, sticking his head out the window.

“Dillon? Shouldn’t you be in school??”

“Field trip, Dad, that’s why we’re on a bus.”

“Dillon wanted us to come here for some reason.” Aurora yelled through the wind. “Something about Sugar and toys.”

“’Guess I should be glad you’re here.” Nolan said. “I need to get into the castle, fly me-”

One of the bus’s legs was sliced off by a string. “Sector VEEEE, how nice of you to VISIT us!”
exclaimed Doflamingo Jr., he and Aeral sitting in the mouth of helicopter Bison. “Dressrosa’s got all kinds of neat sights! I for one enjoy the AIR SHOW!” Flicking his fingers like guns, the aircraft swiftly evaded the onslaught of strings. Sweetie-1 morphed her arms into cannons, locked on, and blasted bombshells that nearly caught the sector in its range.

“Dillon, I don’t suppose your reason for coming here can be connected with why Sector DR’s attacking us?” Aurora questioned.

“All of the toys in this town were actually people made into what they are by Doflamingo’s daughter, Sugar. He knows we found out, so he’s keeping her protected in the castle.” Nolan yelled to explain while keeping hold on the swerving school bus.

“His daughter makes all the toys?” Chris shouted. “Can’t they tell anyone?”

“I’ll try to explain later, for now I need to get in that castle, help Yuki, and take Sugar down.”

“That’s gonna be a little hard with Sector DR on our tail.” Haylee yelled, her expert maneuvering being what’s preventing them from being sliced by strings this very moment.

Mason was holding his stomach, unable to take this much speed and shifting angles. “We could sure use a miracle right now.”

Elevator

The intruders were still asleep. They were dreaming a pleasant dream… a dream about a flying glass elevator… they saw a little boy with his grandpa and a man with a top-hat… they had a glass elevator too, except the former had missiles that kicked their ass. Awesome.

From the safety of Melody’s back pockets, they were safe from the gas: Team Rupert and the Minish KND stretched their micro bones upon landing on the vast floor, whistling for their Pikmin Onions to fly out from Danny’s pockets. “Lucky these humans were captured, or sneakin’ in woulda been way worse.” Acro said.

“But the SMILE Factory was down there, it’ll take us ages!” Pine said.

“Never mind that, did you hear what this guy was sayin’?” Rupert asked. “He’s trying to take out some girl called Sugar.”

“Why do you care?” Acro asked.

“I’m just curious. Oh well… let’s just get outta here before anyone comes.”

“We’ll escape through those open wire slots.” Cone said, pointing beyond the edge of the open door. “You humans take the left, we’ll go right, stay in contact with these.” They tossed the humans wooden communicators.

The tinies reached the wide trench between the elevator and open wall, Team Rupert’s hearts racing as Wing Pikmin carried them, their feet dangling above the infinite blackness. To their relief, they made it to the slots. “Wish us both luck. ‘specially you guys.” Acro said before his team vanished in the darkness.

Rupert took a deep sigh and marched first into the dark hallway, emitting light sparks. “I sure wouldn’t mind Mom’s hot chocolate by now.” (Play “Snagret Hole” from Pikmin 2.)

Act 2: Fun Fun Castle
There were too many sparks down this hallway for comfort, so Team Rupert summoned 20 Yellow Pikmin and marched down. Within the opening slots were broken wires generating the sparks, so they sent a Yellow inside each one, touching both ends of the broken wires as their bodies glowed with electricity. By hall’s end, 10 Yellows were filling a broken slot, ’til they were able to come out so an electric beam connected both ends of all wires. They wouldn’t spark anymore, so the friends returned to reorganize their Pikmin. 15 Reds, 15 Yellows, 10 Blues, 15 Wings, 10 Whites, 10 Purples, 15 Rocks, and 10 Ghosts, 100 total.

It was very dark when they got into the larger area of the inner-wiring, but a Shiny Bulborb was seen a few meters off. Beebs were running around, little robotic purple spheres with four legs and an antenna. Timmy used the Purple Pikmin to damage and destroy the weak robots while Rupert and Hikari led the Rocks and Yellows to the Shiny Bulborb. With the combined efforts of both types, they pummeled and defeated the creature with nary a loss. “I wonder, do robots even count as prey?” Timmy asked. To answer this question, he had the Purples begin hauling some Beebs back. “’Guess we’ll find out.”

Rupert made the Yellows carry the Bulborb back before the kids explored this somewhat-large room. A fallen cog, very huge to them, was lain on the floor with a wooden plank leading from it onto a high foothold. Leaned against a corner wall was a similar plank, which the Wing Pikmin happily carried to lean onto the cog so the kids could get up. A bead-made bridge led across the gap to another foothold, where something large and pink was lodged into the floor. It was connected via cords to a pump machine with two heavy switches, the left pressed while the right stuck up. None of their Pikmin could press the switch, so using their new Pikmin Tuner, they summoned the Purples back to them. Rupert tossed one Purple onto the switch, pressing and forcing the other one up, so Timmy tossed a Purple onto that, causing a sequence where one Pikmin flew up from the rising switch, came down and pressed it, bounced the other Pikmin up, and over and over.

There was sort of a rhythm as energy flowed along the wires into the pink thing, but nothing happened. It seemed the wires also connected to a gold bell on the lower floor, and the kids soon found their Rock Pikmin could make it ring. Five Rocks were set around the bell, and as if on instinct, they each hit the bell at different intervals, creating another rhythm. The wires also connected to a bar-like device with split wire ends, needing 10 Yellows to connect them. When the Pikmin flashed, certain Yellows were lighting at different intervals and making a brief “woooo” sound. In time, they realized each of these rhythms went in sync with the level’s music—or at least the players should notice that. :P The last of these devices was a flute hanging high on the wall, 10 holes for 10 Wings. No, the Wings couldn’t do anything, except carry 10 Whites up into the flute so they could fart gas out of each hole and make a little note.

With all four items in sync, the energy fully flowed into the pink thing. With a sudden trumpet and fanfare, the Onion fluttered from the floor and stood on three legs. It wasn’t ‘pink’, more magenta, and a seed dropped onto that patch of earth. The kids had too many, so they sent 5 Rocks, 5 Wings, and 5 Reds back. Rupert had the honor of going up and plucking their first Magenta Pikmin. It was chubby like the Purple, but a black note with neon edges sat where its antenna should be, the leaf on its tip. It sang with a long note, its voice majestic in Pikmin terms.

Rupert discovered Magenta Pikmin! These guys carry the music in their soul! Get enough of them together on a stage, they’ll sing a marvelous performance! So marvelous that fantastic things might happen.

So the kids began to collect the nearby Magenta Pellet Posies and build up their concerto, until 20 Musics existed, with only 15 on the field. Already the room was ringing with their vocalization of the level’s music, the other Pikmin mimicking in spirit. It really did add energy to the mission, made the kids happy, they were inspired to keep going. But what could they do to help, that was the question. Near the middle of the farthest wall was a small stage. They set 14 Musics in different spots while a single Music stood on the conductor’s platform. It waved an imaginary wand as they burst into song, mimicking the Underground theme of Super Mario Bros.. The kids nodded to the tune before it came to a short end. A huge doorway opened up along the wall, exposing them to a stairway of rounded pipes. They quickly jumped aside when a large saxophone (Song of Tears) haphazardly slid down. A group of 30 Pikmin carried it back before the kids set off to the new floor.

The Pikmin had a hard time trotting up the slippery pipes, but they made it in time and stood upon a platform overlooking a vast room. The floor below was filled with small parts of broken toys, and it seemed the only way to progress is across the other platforms. A hill connected the left of the starting platform to the cluttered floor in case they fell down. The nearest platform was protected by a tall rounded fence, so the kids sent their Ghost Pikmin through to try and pluck the poles from their loose hinges. The Ghosts succeeded as the fence toppled down and made a wide, slight-curled bridge for them all to cross. Unfortunately, a Gatling Groink wandered onto that platform, a large orange fish with mechanical legs and a cannon mouth.

They wanted to use the Ghost Pikmin to wipe it out, but it shone a light on its back to scare them off (as if this enemy couldn’t be more annoying). They kept their Musics at a safe distance, but 4 Reds and 5 Whites were destroyed by its cannons, while other Pikmin lost their bloomed flowers. They had Purples and Rocks attack from either exposed side and soon brought the Groink down. However, it slowly restored its health, so they let the Musics carry it back. Hikari joined them and offered to recollect more Pikmin. Rupert and Timmy crossed a beaded bridge to the next platform, where dice and dominoes were lain around. These toys grew limbs and sprouted to life, angrily charging for the children.

They didn’t crush their Pikmin, rather batted them to the side with their fists, sending them to the cluttered low floor. Timmy dropped down and regathered the Yellows and Whites that fell down, while Rupert struggled to chuck Purples to stun the blocks, then knock them out. Timmy would soon learn why the lower floor is dangerous, when Bombardier Beebs rose from the clutter and readied to explode. Timmy hurriedly made his Pikmin run, getting far enough to avoid their chain-reaction, but a Yellow was lost. Timmy led his Pikmin to the hill to the first platform, then proceeded to explore this low floor with only one White.

The presence of that White lured more Bombardiers out, so Timmy attracted them all until they were all exploded. He safely called his other Pikmin down and explored until the Whites found a diggable spot, in which they only threw small scraps to the side since this wasn’t soil. He had to call Rupert down to help, for several areas were diggable, and each contained severed limbs of the teddybear from Witch’s House. They had groups of Pikmin carry the teddybear (First Nightmare) to the Onions and decided to join them, and also collected the fallen dice and dominoes.

They regrouped with Hikari and reorganized their Pikmin: 10 Reds, 10 Yellows, 10 Blues, 15 Wings, 10 Whites, 10 Purples, 10 Rocks, 10 Ghosts, 10 Music. They returned to the platform with the dominoes and dice and noticed the stage, where they had their Magentas gather. They sung a reimagining of “Frantic Factory” from Donkey Kong 64, which caused a row of colorful toy chains to dangle from the ceiling to the next ledge. Not only that, all of the flowers bloomed on their Leaf Pikmin. They didn’t notice this the first time, but it seemed the Magentas’ performance would bloom any nearby Pikmin. The kids jumped, grabbed the chain ends, and swung across, and all of the Pikmin mimicked their style. From here, they entered a round tunnel that sloped up like a slide at the playground. It was amazingly easy to walk up, then they found their selves in an even bigger room with a toy racetrack.
The track was made of many segments and slopes, kept aloft from the distant ground by support beams. With a mini toy elevator, the kids could squeeze all of their Pikmin on and ride to the floor. Small, flat cogs filled the floor and revealed to be Skitter Cogs, whom were like their Skitter Leaf counterparts except they were, well, cogs, and could mainly be damaged by Purple Pikmin. In a far corner of the room, a racecar sat, very huge at Minish size and likely to hold all their ground Pikmin. Just as they approached it, a King Beeb dropped onto the floor, curled in a ball, and rolled around, squishing 6 Purples and 5 Musics when the kids tried to avoid.

Anger consumed them from this ambush, but the kids recomposed as Rupert took two Whites and tricked the Beeb into chasing him. Timmy and Hikari sent their Wings and Ghosts to carry the racecar all the way up to the start of the track. When they confirmed they were good, Rupert focused on escaping the King Beeb and returning to the elevator. Although they could recover a treasure from the robot, the loss of those Music Pikmin irked them too much. They rode the elevator to the top of the track and all squeezed onto the car. The Pikmin could stick their antennas into the keyhole, and each type could enter and make their element shield protect the car.

The toy car whooshed down the first slope, up the next, and when they saw two flamethrowers blowing fire over the track, the Red Pikmin made a flame shield that protected them. Next was an electric beam, so the Yellows had this task. Next they were speeding to a ramp with a long jump, the Wing Pikmin fluttering across and dropping the car back on track. It sped to a glass wall, so the Rocks made a crystal shield and smashed through. Now some sprinklers, the Blue Pikmin shielding from safety. The car then had to go up a steep hill, but would slide down any moment, so the Purple Pikmin dropped off the back and used their strength to keep pushing and pushing. They made it to the flat ground up top and celebrated in victory.

The next room was more like a hallway, smaller in width but tall in height. A short stairway led them onto the lowest of many round, metal platforms, steam emitting from their stems. On the walls on either side of each platform were trumpet-like devices with the mouth-ends near the floor. A Magenta Pikmin was sent to each one, blowing forcefully into the trumpets to make the platforms rise to the air. One trumpet made its platform lower, one made it rise, so they had to choose the correct one, otherwise they’d lose a Magenta, and would have to restart the puzzle if they had to climb down and regather them.

The final platform didn’t need to be altered, but if they chose to lower, they could enter a secret room with a crystal encasing a Treble Clef from Banjo-Tooie. They chose to go after this, having brought Rock Pikmin anyway, and let the Ghost and Wing Pikmin take the clef (Decline of Difficulty) back. With all their Magenta Pikmin dropped, they had to restart the trumpet puzzle, and eventually made it to a ladder leading up a shaft. Team Rupert exchanged shrugs before climbing up with their Pikmin. (End song.)

The shaft stretched up quite a ways, but found the other end eventually. They were behind a set of tremendous letter blocks on a wooden floor, and the sky design up above told them this was a child’s room. Their theory was confirmed when they walked around the blocks, finding a gigantic girl, about 10 years old with aquamarine hair, polka-dot dress under a yellow coat, and gold crown, playing with a Barbie and Bratz doll. Her colorful room was filled with many toys and crayons, such as a red Rainbow Monkey with brown hair and glasses sitting on a toddler’s chair.

“Oooooo! I don’t have that one, yet!” Hikari beamed.

“Guess we ended up in somebody’s house.” Rupert said. “I wonder if she can help us.”

“She’s kinda weird-lookin’.” Timmy said.

“How? She’s just playing.”
A sudden ringing sound nearly split their eardrums. “Sugar? Sugar, dear? This is Daddy. Fufufu. How’s my princess doing?”

“Trebol’s still outside my room, Father. Kill him for me, please?”

“Fufu, I’d love to, but someone needs to guard your room. Things are becoming hectic outside. Your brother has encountered some Kids Next Door operatives.”

“So what?”

“I fear that too many people may be on to our secret than I let on. It won’t do to toyify them; I may have to execute them altogether. Stay in your room, don’t come out. I’m putting this castle under so much protection, even an ant won’t be able to wriggle its way in here. If any creature has entered the upper floors without my approval, they are to be killed on the spot. Understood, Trebol?”

“Beeegeh way ahead of you, Doffy!” a weird voice sounded outside the room’s door. “I saw a fly earlier, hit it with one shot of my Sticky Gun! No one’s getting in her room Doffy, bееееееhh!”

“Sugar… is that the girl that man was trying to get to?” Rupert asked.

“She sounds really important.” Timmy said. “Why though, she looks kinda ordinary. Whaddyou think, Hikar…Hikari?”

“Yooooohooooooo. Miss Sugaaaaaaarrrrr!” The boys panicked: Hikari was already miles ahead of them, excitedly approaching the mindless child. “Miss Sugaaaaaarrrr! Where did you get that Rainbow Monkey?

“I have one just like that’s a samurai, but the hairdo is slightly off kilter,” Sugar heard a very faint sound and turned, seeing a very tiny, bluish bug. “and the red glasses kinda blend too much with the coat and the fur, if you want, I can help you research some cute blue glasses, also what’s with the pink monocle, it’s cute on you, but kinda stands out too…”

Sugar eyed her vision a little upward and saw the tiny colorful squadron of Pikmin marching toward her, led by two more bugs who were Rupert and Timmy. “Hi, Miss!” Rupert’s faint voice didn’t reach her ears. “I know you must have a lot-a questions, but maybe you can help us with, I dunno, getting back to normal? Uh, we’re humans, so we’re not normally small like this, it’s just been… ONE crazy thing after another, before we knew it, we…”

All Sugar did was stand up from her spot, walk over to slip on her brown sandals, and come back. Her figure was a lot more imposing as she stood over the tinies, one foot held over Hikari. “Kill any unapproved creature in the castle… I’m stuck in my room with nothing to do… I can make due when one and one work together.”

“HIKARI, WATCH OUT!” Timmy snapped fingers, sent the Wing Pikmin to whoosh to his sister, and pull her out of the way before the sandal slammed down.

“HEY GIRL, WAIT UP, WE’RE NOT BUGS, WE’RE KIDS!” Rupert screamed, flailing his arms.

“Maybe if I squash and grind them hard enough, their insides will fade from existence and I won’t have to clean. I’d just make Trebol do it, anyway.” She took another step forward, the kids ducking and expecting death to come.

“HUUUU!” The four Purple Pikmin raised their arms and kept her foot from hitting the floor, so the kids seized the moment and ran out, calling their other Pikmin over. Confused and annoyed, Sugar added more pressure and killed the Purples.

“Your sacrifice won’t be forgotten!” Timmy saluted. “At least for the next 10 seconds until she stomps us again.”

“Timmy, look!” Hikari pointed to the passage between the giant blocks they were just behind. The eight Onions took land on the floor, ready to serve their masters.

“I still don’t know why anyone’d want to attack this girl, but we’re bug-splat if we don’t!” Rupert exclaimed. “Split up!” (Play the Boss Theme from Pikmin 3)

Boss fight: Sugar

Hikari dashed all the way back to the Onions, retrieved 15 Musics and 15 Purples, giving them a hundred (the Ghost Pikmin couldn’t appear in this bright room). Rupert led the Reds, Wings, and Whites away to Sugar’s left while Timmy took the Rocks, Yellows, and Blues to her right. She was confused by their gestures, but Sugar decided to chase the slower leader (Timmy), merely walking to make the game more enjoyable. Timmy ordered the Pikmin to duck and roll before her foot smashed the ones in back. “Take this, you Girlzilla!” Timmy grabbed his Rocks and quickly chucked them at Sugar’s slim, smooth toenails, cracking them a bit, then tossed the other Pikmin at her toes. He didn’t expect the tiny creatures to damage her, but her toes grew red from soreness, and she shook her foot to knock them off.

Rupert watched the battle from his distant side of the room, trying to think of a way to help. He looked around and found a Minish-size spring pad at the base of a stack of blocks. He led his Pikmin onto and bounced to the next level, where they hit another spring, and kept bouncing up until they found a huge basket of grapes at the top. “I guess she likes eating these. I wonder if we can use ‘em.” With that, Rupert ordered his Wing Pikmin to fly up and each take a grape down.

“Mii miiii!” a Red Pikmin jumped when the grapes were placed beside them. It excitedly burrowed its way into the grape like an ant, and when the Pikmin puffed, the purple grape burned red for a second.

“Oh, I get it. I hate to lose Pikmin, but if it can stop her. All o’ you in a grape!” The Reds obeyed and dug into a grape to make it spicy, then the Whites proceeded to lift and carry them to the floor below. Their little bodies were hidden under the giant spheres as Rupert watched them seem to float quickly to the angry giant.

Hikari made it back with her Purples and Magentas, but left the latter behind in worry of losing too much. Timmy’s Pikmin finished pounding on Sugar’s right toes, the giant slumping on that knee, so Hikari threw the Purples onto the left toes. They bruised the flesh much faster, and before she knew it, Sugar fell to her knees and hands. Her astonishment for these creatures’ strength was masked under her toneless face, so she crawled toward Hikari and swiped her left hand, catching 5 Purples. She squeezed the life out of them with her fingers before planting her hand back down and chasing the tinies. Rupert arrived and ordered the Wing Pikmin to fly into her unprotected right eye, distracting her as she tried to swat them with her right hand. The ground Pikmin were sent to charge the fingers of her left, making bruises appear on them until her hand gave and she fell.

Sugar’s head now lay on its side, her right eye twitching as she tried to see through the pink monocle of her left. The White Pikmin arrived with the grapes in hand as the closest one rushed to Sugar’s panting mouth and threw a grape inside. On instinct, Sugar began to munch and chew the grape, but its spicy flavor made her face turn red. She sat up on her knees and coughed, frantically running to a glass of water and washing it down. “Bleh! I thought I told Trebol not to put the spicy kind in there? ! As soon as I kill these ants, I’m having him executed!”

Now back on her feet, Team Rupert scurried away expecting Sugar to stomp after them. Sugar snapped her fingers, and from the piles of toys came a swarm of Mr. Dice and Sir Dominoes. The kids swarmed their Pikmin against the toys, but Sugar was now stomping back to begin squishing some Pikmin in this confusion. 4 Yellows and 5 Wings were lost when Team Rupert tried to call them back, but Sugar’s forceful stomps smashed the toys out of commission. She viewed the grapes that were dropped after the White Pikmin were called back, and with the Red Pikmin called out of the grapes as well, the kids could watch without regret as Sugar kicked the grapes away.

“Hmph.” Sugar calmly approached the basket of grapes and placed its lid over it. “They’re the only relief I have in this dump, so you ants aren’t taking them. Now die.” Sugar grabbed some blocks from the stack and chucked them at the Pikmin, smashing 6 Reds and 4 Wings. Rupert and Hikari took their remaining Pikmin and split up, maneuvering behind the many giant blocks to confuse Sugar, while Timmy scurried to the Onions to recover 5 Purples, 9 Wings, 7 Reds, and 4 Yellows. He then decided to explore behind the blocks in search of anything that would help; and inside a fallen plastic bucket were some Bomb Rocks. He made the Wings carry some and quickly ran to the stack of blocks where the grapes sat.

Meanwhile, Sugar became a bit more serious while chasing Rupert and Hikari, the two unable to get close enough to her feet before she stomped furiously or swung them to and fro to knock Pikmin down. Rupert encouraged Hikari to keep running, until they eventually found a Magenta Pikmin stage. They gathered their 15 musicians on before they sang a dramatic reiteration of Old King Coal’s boss theme from Banjo-Tooie. Sugar seemed entranced by their squeaky notes, ceasing her stomping spree to watch the little ants. In the background, they saw the bottom of the grape basket explode, the grapes spilling and rolling on the floor.

At the same time, Timmy sent some of his Bomb Rock-holding Pikmin over to his friends, so Rupert and Hikari each took one and threw it onto either foot. The bombs exploded and sunk Sugar to her hands and knees like that. She annoyedly brushed the music stage away and knocked those Pikmin out, focusing her sights on the tinies before simply moving her hands around and squishing the Pikmin under her fingers, one by one. 2 Reds, 3 Yellows, and 2 Blues were lost. “GO, Wings!” The Wing Pikmin not holding bombs flew up to Sugar’s eye to attack her, but she closed her eye and smashed them against her face, crushing the 6 of them.

“That’s it, time to stop playing around!” Sugar brushed her right hand across the floor and knocked the Pikmin and kids off their feet. They felt groggy from the force and felt the shadow of Sugar’s hand loom over them, ready to smash down. “HURR!” The Purple Pikmin were to the rescue, keeping her hand aloft again. Before they were smashed, Timmy rushed out and grabbed a Wing Pikmin holding a bomb. “Squish someone your own size!” He threw the bomb onto the hand and exploded.

“Yowch!” Sugar was up on her knees again, shaking her hand from pain and observing the bleeding cut it made. Sugar angrily narrowed her eyes on Timmy, and before the boy could run, she planted her palm firm on the floor against him.

“Ohhhhh…” She raised her hand to find Timmy groaning and nearly flattened, his Wing Pikmin dispersing to spirit. He felt his senseless body grabbed between Sugar’s fingers, lifted off the floor, and held before her great purple eye.

“I’d like to forget that you did that. So if you don’t mind.” And within seconds, Timmy’s body took the form of a tiny, seaweed-green toy soldier. She flicked the toy away, flying several yards across the floor and haphazardly landing on its front.

“Darn, she’s still standing. Er, sorta.” Rupert said, aching as he and Hikari got up. “Sure wish we had a third person to help us. Why didn’t we bring those Minish kids along?”

“What should we do, Ruppy?”

“We have one more Bomb Rock. I’m gonna try and choke her with another grape, see if you can knock her down until I get it.” He took a single White and Red Pikmin and trusted Hikari with the others. The child swiftly dodged when Sugar slammed her hand down over and over, blowing a whistle to sic the Pikmin on it when she wouldn’t raise. They dealt a few bruises to the fingers, but she shook them off. Meanwhile, she sent the Bomb Rock Pikmin to Sugar’s left knee and blew it up without suspecting, the giant falling fully on her front.

However, she wasn’t leaving herself vulnerable, planting her left hand against the floor, pulling to force her own body around, and saw Rupert heading for a grape. Said boy made his White Pikmin pick the grape up. “Okay, now the Red guy will go inside like before and we’ll… huh?”

Something was off, though. His Red Pikmin had fallen behind halfway to the fruit. “How could you get lost on a straight path like this?! What is this, Cyberchase? GAAH!” The floor shook, for Sugar had a sudden recollection of strength and was crawling toward them with a rage, smashing the Red Pikmin. His White one nearly lost balance with the grape- “Hold on!” until he got under with it to counter with his own force. “We’re gonna have to-” Then, his feet left the floor while his hands gripped tight onto the squishy grape.

Rupert panicked as the floor drew further away, but his worry would increase when he found Sugar’s round purple eye almost peer into his soul. “My grapes aren’t for you.”

“RUUUUPPPYYYYY!” Hikari raced to the giant as fast as her little legs could. She slowed to a stop when it appeared fruitless, as Sugar returned to her feet.

“After all, I’m the only one being treated like an insect.” Sugar stated coldly. “Trapped in my room like a jar. Why should I let you come and go as you please? Take my food while I starve?”

“Nnnnn!” Rupert’s grip was slipping. “Miss, I’m not a bug, I’m a person! Please, help!”

“It feels pointless to toyify you. Who would buy you, who would remember you? Maybe in your last few seconds of life, you’ll have learned a lesson. Into my belly you go.”

For these next few seconds, Rupert struggled with the choice between letting go or holding on. Even if his small body was lighter, would it survive the equivalent of a thousand-foot drop? ‘Course, if he didn’t let go, he would surely perish in the bowels of Sugar’s stomach. He was too frozen with fear to think, the great gaping mouth drawing closer, and he was too late to make his decision when her fingers released the grape and let it fly inside.

He couldn’t stand on the slippery mushy tongue, especially when the space between floor and ceiling compressed and stretched, the jaws on either end munching the grape into juice. Saliva and purple ooze mixed together, Rupert had no more bearings on his surroundings, he tried to grip the tongue with all his strength to keep from flapping any further. The purple goo clogging his vision, he barely saw the White Pikmin bouncing and flailing ahead of him. Rupert held tighter when the position of the floor turned vertical; Sugar’s head tilted back. The Pikmin fell, so Rupert grabbed by the antenna in his left hand, but his right wouldn’t last long. He remembered a similar scenario with Berry, the reason he didn’t want the White one to fall, but to save his own life, he had no choice. He let the Pikmin fall into the impending darkness, down the throat.
Hikari almost lost breath the moment she saw Sugar swallow. The giant stood still, no emotion on her face. “...! UUEEEEEECK!” Sugar grabbed her neck, feeling an unbearable compressing, what felt like a painfully thick gas clog the width of her throat. She stumbled on her feet, her senses failing, unable to choke another breath. Her purple eyes closed, and Hikari braced for impact when the giantess tumbled backwards, landing with a force that could shake the continent. Sugar was down and out. (End song.)

BANG BANG BANG. “Suuugaaaaar? I heard a crash.” The door flew open; in stepped a tremendous, droopy, blob-like man with sunglasses, a gooey green cape, and long boogers from his nose. “You better not be- BEEEEH!” Trebol almost hardened at the sight.

“SUUUGAAAAARR!” He shook the floor as he stomped forward, grabbing the child by the shoulders and shaking. “SUGAR, WAKE UP! YOU DIDN’T CHOKE ON A GRAPE, DID YOU?! I TOLD YOU NOT TO EAT TOO MUCH! Pleeease!”

No matter how rashly he shook, Sugar’s head remained limp. “BEEEEEH!” He dropped her. “Oh God, Doffy’s gonna kill me! I gotta leave town! Oh- maybe they won’t start turning back right aw-”

But then he saw the shaking red Rainbow Monkey on the chair. With a POOF, the doll was gone. Cheren Uno fell to the floor. “Owww… what?”

“BEEEEEH! It’s happening!” screamed Trebol. “Gotta get to the phone! D-DOFFY-SAMAAAA!” He stormed out and slammed the door.

While masked in confusion, Hikari heard another ‘poof’ and saw Timmy appear behind her. “Timmy!” She ran over.

“Ohhh… was I just turned into a toy?”

“I dunno. Were you?”

They heard a loud, eerie groan and turned. A giant brown-haired boy with glasses held his head. Timmy gasped. “I know that boy, he’s the Kids Next Door Supreme Leader! Numbuh 3621, Cheren Uno!!”

Everywhere

Like a sudden, terrific wave, it all came back. Everyone on Moonbase stood agape. Panini whipped out her 4DS and looked at the Mii in her Friends list. Tears nearly dripped from her eyes.

Rachel Uno gasped. She grabbed the family portrait and stared speechless. Her son, her heir… but, did that mean-?

At the Chariton Home, Sunni shot awake from her bed. A promise she made 6 months ago came back in a flash.

800 years ago, memories flew back to Merida, King Fergus and Elinor. “’ey, I just remembered somethin’!” the king exclaimed. “Whatever ‘appened to that Cherry fellow? I was hopin’ he’d come for the Horseback Games!”

“He might come around, Dad, ya never know.” Merida smiled hopefully.
Everyone in Termina, Booster remembered the boy who saved his park, the wolves remembered the one who united their packs, the pirates remembered their dear old Captain Slag, the ninjas remembered the one who defeated the Puppet Clan, and Alternate Sector V remembered their dear friend from another dimension.

The Galactic Council remembered the boy who ended the Viridi War, made Flora a safe place to visit. Nebula D. Winkiebottom nearly fell off her throne, feeling the biggest headache of her life.

Just when Sector IC was nearing GKND H.Q., it hit them like baseball bats. “Whoa! Cheren, did… did we just forget him??” questioned MaKayla.

“Something is really wrong.” Miyuki said. “I…I wanna go back to Earth ’soon as we check in.”

And on Mt. Mariejoa, memories washed over Morgan. She hadn’t had this feeling since the Scattered Realms 20 years ago. How a huge piece of her mind and heart could be lost, then come back. She held her head… then, remembered the aura that had just climbed Mariejoa this morning. Her cousin, Nigel. Why could she no longer sense his presence up there?

Everywhere around the world, everywhere talking toys had been sold, they were turning back.

“LEAPIN’ LIZARDS!” Annie cried when her Yipper had morphed into a man. The customers of Toys 4 Grab panicked when the shelves became occupied with men, women, and kids. The Drophyds on Aquaria remembered their leader, their reasons for siding with Tachyon. The police at Quahog remembered Fanatic, Holiday, all those mysterious villains.

Dressrosa

“OOOOUHH!” It came back to Sector V, Nolan, and Crystal like that. “I JUST REMEMBERED! A cataclysm is gonna destroy the universe and we told Cheren we’d help stop it!!” Aurora exclaimed.

“Huh?!” Doffy Jr. gasped. “What’s happening?!” They looked over the town, screams roaring everywhere.

“The toys are turning back!” Aeral screamed. “Does that mean Sugar-”

ZZHHHHOOOOM. The C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. zipped past them.

“But they’re heading for your dad!” Bison exclaimed.

“No!”

Doflamingo’s Throne

When memories washed over the king’s head, his heart almost stopped. He jumped to the window, roars crying all over town, citizens panicking. His phone rang, so he quickly answered. “Trebol?!”

“BEEDDEEH, Doffy! Sugar choked on a grape, she’s dead!”

“What?!”

“I’m sorry, Doffy, I shoulda checked on her, please don’t kill me!”

“DAMMIT! If the Corporate Presidents catch wind of this, I’M the one who’s DEAD!”

“Whaddo we do, Doffy?! The town’s in an uproar! They’re comin’ to get us!”

“Grrrr, I’m not done, yet. Tell Pica to raise my castle to the sky and rearrange the whole island so they can’t get to me!”

“Beeeeehh! You gave Pica a 3-week vacation after he had voice-modification surgery!”

“Oh, that’s right.” Doffy slumped. “Okay then, Plan B! Using my String-String powers, I’ll trap the entire island in a giant birdcage, control everyone like puppets, and make them kill each other or-”

But before that thought could reach conclusion, the Sandman swooped in and punched Doflamingo with his Armament fist. Pearly teeth flew out along with blood, he went sliding across the floor. The president couldn’t process what happened as he helped himself up and glared at Nolan through his slanted shades. “Before we waste 30 chapters of endless fighting, I’m gonna kick your ass here and now.”

Similar to One Piece, the stages are getting longer, which means less can fit in a chapter. =/
Oh man, this’ll last for years. Next time, our very first battle with a Corporate President. (Well, second ‘cause of Mom, also if you count Morgan, but…) Until then, try to guess which heroes will fight which Don Quixote Family members. See you later!
Like a Videogame

Chapter Summary

Sector V and Team Sandman battle Doflamingo and his officers! Then, Cheren learns a terrible truth.

What is existence to you.

Chapter 17: Like a Videogame

Doflamingo’s Throne

“Fu fu fu.” Doflamingo grinned, standing back up and wiping blood off his mouth. “The legendary Sandman graces me with his presence in my own home. Without his mask, no less. Should I be honored? To be trusted with your true identity? Or did you hope to savor the fury on my face after my corporation falls?”

“I’ve always thought criminals couldn’t get any lower than killing… but after seeing what you do, I actually would’ve settled with.” Nolan said. “Because at least they still would’ve been remembered by everyone they loved! You were literally trying to wipe their existence from the Earth. I can’t imagine how many lives you ruined with your plans! Being forgotten from everyone they knew… it’s a fate worse than death!”

“Fufufufufu! Worse than death? How simple you are, Sandman. What I’ve done to these people is NO different from dying! True, people are still remembered by their friends after they die… but eventually, those people will die, and their kids will die, and in time, their existence will be forgotten entirely. I was merely trying to speed up that process. At least the toys would’ve had a longer life force, regardless if everyone forgot them. Can you honestly say there’s no one you’ve met you wished you could forget?”

“To tell the truth… yes. Darth Genious and Madame Rouge were some of the worst people I could’ve met… and I’ve always wished I could forget them. But then I realize… if it wasn’t for them, I wouldn’t have gotten where I am. I wouldn’t have met Danika, and… I definitely wouldn’t’ve had Dillon. The point is, whether they’re friends or enemies, everyone has a major importance in someone’s life. But even if you wipe our memories of them, everyone leaves some kind of legacy behind. Holiday and those guys’ criminal record, my son… those are the things you can’t erase. And I didn’t notice it until now, but Nigel’s son was one of your victims. I didn’t know they had another son until a few minutes ago! Can you imagine how many people you HURT by making them forget him?!”

“HU HU hu! Looking back, my daughter actually SAVED the Cheren boy! Had she not intervened, President Morgan would have killed him!”

“Morgan Uno? You’re lying, why would she kill her nephew?!”

“Did Benedict not try to kill his nephew a number of times? President Morgan carries on his legacy, I see that now. And what legacy are you, Sandman? The legendary 2030, defender of morality and justice. Let me ask you… what is ‘justice’ to you?”
Nolan pulled up his laptop and looked up Wikipedia. “Justice includes both the attainment of that which is just and the philosophical—”

“I WAS ASKING YOUR OPINION!!”

“Alright, alright.” He put his laptop down. “But isn’t that all it is, just a matter of opinion? What difference would it make if I told you mine. Your sense of justice is erasing the world of its evils. Keep your citizens in bliss ignorance. Isn’t it?”

“And your idea of justice is to punish wrongdoers, yet hold on to the philosophy there’s redemption for them as your reason for not killing. Which even then you’re a hypocrite, assuming Caesar’s story of what happened to one of his most loyal customers is true.”

“Yeah, I killed Revan, I admit it. But; it’s funny saying it out loud… I want to honor his memory. I visit his grave every year. Friends or enemies, I guess I let everyone have a place in my heart. After I take you down, I might have a place for you, too.”

Doflamingo furrowed so hard, Nolan could see the veins on his face. “A place in your heart… peh! How could any person bear such respect for their enemies? Erasing them, forgetting they were ever around to annoy you… the World Leaders can agree, that’s where true peace lies.”

“Well, I always was against the idea of decommissioning. And the Kids Next Door can agree, some memories are important to hang on to. The stories of the trials of their parents help kids learn. That’s why the Next Generation’s gonna bring your Leaders down.”

“Snot-nosed urchins against God… that’s beyond laughable. Just because your friends were arguably great in the day, Sandman, you set your hopes too high. Your children will be destroyed.”

“Then it’s only fair us evil adults take the fall first. Don’t you agree?”

“Fufufu. That’s your death wish, then? Alright… show me your faith for the Next Generation. If your will to teach them further is strong, fight me with all you have!” (Play “Majestic Wings” from Kingdom Hearts: Dream Drop Distance!)

Nolan dodged swiftly when Doffy’s strings lashed forward and stuck into the wall, and fast as lightning, the puppet master created lines of strings left-to-right, up-to-down and diagonally, ‘til the entire throne was covered in what looked like spider webs. Doflamingo stretched two more strings to the ceiling and pulled up, hanging upside-down as he grinned and licked his teeth. “You may be a Batman-wannabe… but call me Joker. Fu fu fu!”

“You look more like Venom.”

Boss fight: Don Quixote Doflamingo, Sr.

Nolan whipped out and shot his grappling hook, but Doflamingo nimbly leaped to another gathering of strings and shot some down like bullets, Nolan dodging. He rapidly tossed boomerangs to cut the strings and make Doffy drop, but the president shot four strings from either hand to the ceiling and swung forward, kicking Sandman with force that flew him out of his chair. Doflamingo landed and buried his fingers in the ground, making strings pop up everywhere, so Nolan used the strength in his arms to flip around since his legs were less-than-worthy. “Fufufu! Give up, Sandman, there’s no force on this world that can cut my strings!”

But as a quick reminder, Sandman threw an onslaught of boomerangs that chopped up incoming strings. Doffy appeared confused, so Nolan seized the moment and shot his grappler to some strings behind the master, latching and hauling himself over as he PUNCHED the president square in the jaw, his fist pulling Flamingo along to slam him against the strings, which didn’t break or damage their own creator. “What kind of gadgets are those?!?”

“Not of this world.” Nolan shrugged. He pushed the ground with his hands and flung into the air, his wheelchair rolling under him to catch. Doflamingo lashed another group of strings, but Nolan grabbed them in an Armament fist, held on as he flailed his arm forcefully, and slammed Doffy into a string wall twice. “The strings don’t affect you, huh?”

Doffy snapped off the strings Nolan was holding. “No, but your toys won’t be singing for long.” He shot strings into the wall behind Nolan, positioned like a slingshot, and flew forward, but Nolan ducked and shot a grappler, which Doffy dodged by flying to the ceiling. Doffy threw his fists and sent strings raining down on Nolan, the hero dodging again while trying to shoot shock beams at his enemy. They made contact with the strings and vanished instantly, so even electric had little effect. In Nolan’s tiredness, Doffy shot down with an Armament fist ready, but Nolan hardened his own and made contact, the collision making every atom in their being vibrate.

The battle outside was just heating up, Sector V’s C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. swerving to avoid DR’s bombshells and strings. “If it wasn’t for Flamingo, I could totally take those other two!” Haylee exclaimed.

“Get us close, I’ll bring ‘im down!” Dillon declared.

The aircraft did a U-turn and flew right for DR, Haylee just barely dodging the strings with her skill. “Nuiiii! They’re on a crash-course-daizokun!” Bison cried.

Doffy Jr. focused intently, seeing Dillon clutching the roof of the bus. The shadowbender inhaled a huge breath and released Shadow Fog all around. The summer sun was powerless in this cloud. “Gah!” Junior angrily tried to see through the fog, but Dillon jumped out like a predator on prey and caught the flamingo, plummeting to the ground with him. “Not without your FRIENDS!” Doffy Jr. lashed his strings and sliced the C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. into pieces. The 8 kids screamed as they fell.

“Crud!” Haylee exclaimed, piloting the very front portion of the bus while Artie clutched the severed edge.

“Still hanging on?” Sweetie-1 taunted, locking her cannon. “One more blast should do it!”

“Shows what you know!” Artie climbed back on. “Thankfully I’ve installed something for just this occasion! Press it, Hayl!”

Haylee pushed a button that read ‘TRANSFORM’, and that little front portion of bus morphed into a robot. The remaining two engines kept it aloft at the bottom, its two remaining plunger-legs balled into fists, and the bulldozer on the front popped off, divided, and became spikes on said fists. “Remember how to do this, Hayl?” Artie asked, his hands and feet planted on levers in the bottom cockpit.

“I’ll handle flying, you handle fighting?”

“You got it!”

Dillon and Doffy Jr. hit the ground as the latter leapt off and whipped strings at his opponent, but Dillon sunk in a Veil and slithered away. He came up and blasted S.P.I.C.E.R.s at the prince, but Junior divided the sauce beams with his strings and easily avoided, stretching the strings like slim claws between his fingers, grinning as he stepped closer and swiped furiously. Dillon looked at how well they cut the ground, so he hid in a shadow and slithered at Junior, only for the puppeteer to send his strings into two distant buildings at either side and propel himself to the air. Dillon emerged and glared at him, then dodged when Junior shot strings down from his feet.

The other Sector V members watched this from afar. “We gotta help him!” Mason said. “Everybody—” The ground wobbled like liquid beneath his feet, and Señor Pink popped up from the ground with a forceful uppercut. Mason flew and bounced back, recovering and glaring as Señor was fully emerged, beside Gladius and Dellinger. “Doflamingo’s crack-job crew?”

“That’s some mouth on you, hombre. Perhaps you need a taste of Pink.” said Señor.

“Uh-huh. Leave Baby New Year to me.” offered Mason.

Accepting his challenge, Señor submerged beneath the ground and swam away, chased by Mason. “KAAAAAH!” screamed Dellinger, the 16-year boy with slim bare legs on high-heels and a white cap with bull horns. “Señor’s gonna fight him! Your friend is deeeeeaaaaad!”

“Tell that to the last guy that fought Mason!” Aurora proclaimed.

“KAAAAAAH! You’re arguing with me?? YOU must wanna die, too!”

“I’ll be happy ta-” But Kirie stepped in front and blocked Aurora’s view. The mute’s eyes were closed as she passed Aurora a quiet assurance. “…Well… okay, Kirie.”

“KAAAAAH you wanna fight me?? Good luck, ‘cause I’m Dellinger! Half-human, half-Fishman! SPOILERS!” he yelled at the readers. “Time for me to KILL you, pretty lady! DAAAAAH I’m gonna rip out your bones, eat your flesh!”

That’s gross!

“TAAAAAH what can YOU do? I’mma eat you, now! BOY, am I gonna eat you! Haaaa-aaaaa-AAAUMP!” Fangs grew in his mouth, he lashed at Kirie, who leaped and kicked him across the face. She jumped away happily while Dellinger stormed after like a bull.

“Hm… then who do I get?” Gladius asked.

“Me.” Django raised his hand and stepped in front. “But I don’t fight fair.” He brushed his Mystic Guitar and blasted the spike-haired away with a sonic wave.

“Hm…” Gladius’s head inflated. “That makes me angry.”

The others watched as Django went after him. “Well, while those blokes’re busy,” Sheila said, “I say we explore this-” And just out of nowhere, she and Harry were hit by a gooey white substance. No matter how much they struggled, they couldn’t burst free. “Bleeeeh! Whose overgrown boogers are these?”

“Beeeeeh! They would be mine!” Standing yards behind them was Trebol, digging his finger up his big nose. “I shamed the family by letting Sugar choke on a grape. I can still make it up to Doffy by squashing you kids!”

Chris chuckled and ignited his fist. “I’ve been having the worst few days, but now it looks like I have something to take my anger out on. Sucks to be you.”
“BEEEHH! Keep that fire away from me! My Stick-Stick Fruit makes me a Logia Glue Man, but my glue is flammable!”

“You just told me your weakness.”

“Beeeeeex! You disrespectful brat, get away!” To their amazement, Trebol leapt meters into the air, to a distant building. Chris kicked on his rocket shoes and boosted after.

Aurora used his icewing to freeze Harry and Sheila’s stick-traps and broke them free. “I’m breaking into the fortress, see if I can find something.” Aurora announced. “Anyone wanna join?”

“Fortress shmortress, I’m seein’ the town!” Sheila declared before running off.

“I ain’t no powerhouse.” Harry shrugged before leaving.

“A’ight… Haruka?”

“Sure.” The poisonbender shrugged, joining her leader as they rampaged to the fortress.

Inside the Toy House, Diamante furiously mashed the elevator button. “Dammit! I have to get upstairs and see if Doffy’s-”

A sudden ice blast flew Dia against the opposite wall. Yuki, Melody, and Danny appeared out of the shaft. “Ahhhh.” Yuki cracked his neck. “What a nap. By the way, I’m going on strike.”

“Hnn.” Diamante gritted his teeth. “You lost your chance for a raise.” He slammed the floor and made it wobble like a cape, but Yuki froze the floor and slid across the still-waving substance, swinging his foot to kick Dia, who raised his steel cape and bounced him back. Diamante turned flat and flew to the ceiling, Yuki giving chase with Ice Rocket.

After flying off Sector V’s bus, she entered and was running around the castle halls. “Where’s the elevator? I hope Yuki isn’t-” She was blown away when the wall beside her exploded. She looked up and gasped: Monet Sinclaire, the giant venomous harpy she now was, snarled at the witch, and Vergo, who was in a body-cast, held onto her back. “You two again?!”

“Too bad. I was hoping for Yuki.” Vergo said. Monet gave an ear-splitting roar before swiping her wings at Crystal, who frantically dodged while blasting fireballs at her face. Monet hissed and froze a wide line of ice up the floor and wall, so Crystal got up and ran while the harpy coughed ice chunks. Crystal flew to the ceiling with her staff, switched the mode to Ground Quake, then came down on Monet’s head, but Vergo Armament-punched her away before the attack could land. Crystal raised her staff in defense when Monet gnashed her fangs, taking the staff and throwing away, so Crystal got up and bolted again.

Doflamingo was back on the ceiling and making walls of strings slide at Nolan, who quickly threw boomerangs to cut open gaps and evade, and the first chance he had, Nolan shot his grappler up and pulled the flamingo from his web. Nolan socked him upside the jaw, watching Doflamingo’s head fly off and disperse into strings. His body followed suit, then Nolan was punched in the back of the head by his opponent, flying out of his chair and very near the strings. “Fufufufufufufu!” Nolan pushed himself up and glared at the grinning devil. “String Clones. They’re a handful, huh?” Groups of strings raveled behind him and became Doffy replicas. The clones charged at Sandman, who stood on his aching legs and threw punches at every one, dispersing into strings upon defeat. He expectantly waited for the real one to shoot up afterward, but that Flamingo became strings as well while the real one fell from above and smashed Sandman on his front.

The flamingo hopped off to let his adversary stand, but not for long before he whipped a string at the floor and knocked Nolan down. He whipped again, wrapped the string around Nolan, then hurled him into a string-wall, scratching his backside as blood seeped out. Thinking fast when Doflamingo prepared to lunge, he whipped his wheelchair over with his grappler, got in, then shot his grappler at a string-wall to pull himself away. Doflamingo crashed into the previous strings and bounced off like rubber rope around a ring, coming for Nolan, who blasted the Shock Rod and stunned him in place. Nolan swung his fist against Doflamingo’s jaw, but the president recovered and lashed strings, while Nolan grabbed in his Armament fist.

Doflamingo launched other strings to the ceiling to pull himself away, attempting to “fly” with his shoulder-attached strings, but Nolan kept his grip on the previous ones and pulled like tug-o-war. In Doflamingo’s distraction, Nolan grabbed the Line Launcher and shot one end at Flamingo, the other at a string-wall behind, so when Flamingo pulled toward him, Nolan flew his fist and slammed him to the ground. Nolan fell off his chair, pinned Doflamingo with his knees, and laid a barrage of punches against his head, before helping himself back on his chair, picking Flamingo up by the neck, and punching the side of his head before throwing him aside.

Haylee’s piloting skills were pro in dodging Sarah’s missiles, and while she got close to the helicopter-Bison, the metahuman sprouted more propellers as a shield. “Nuuuu! You no getting her-daizokun!”

Artie controlled the C.O.O.L.-B.O.T.’s fists and grabbed two propellers, but he couldn’t hold them still when Bison spun faster and forced Artie to release. He then made his propellers bladed and chased the robot, so Haylee maneuvered them away. Bison was faster, but when Haylee got far enough, he lowered his defense so Sarah could lock on with more missiles, which Haylee again dodged. “Too bad we couldn’t squeeze missiles in this thing!” Haylee said. “We’ll have to get close with their defenses down!” She let the craft sink, then stomped the boost to fly toward the bottom of Bison, during which Artie had his spiked sink ready and successfully gutted him.

“AAAAH! Keep it steady!” Sarah cried.

Kirie kept running, but Dellinger moved whipping fast, warped to either side, then kicked Kirie powerfully from the left. “KAIIIIAAAH!” screamed the bull-fish. “What’s wrong, Little Girl?? Aren’t you gonna scream??” He zipped up and kicked Kirie across face while she was still grounded. “Come on! Scream! Can’t you talk? Are you deaf? Deafo! Scream! SCREEEAAM!”

Blood flew out her mouth at each kick, he just wouldn’t stop. But Kirie’s voice was not unknown to her faithful spirits, the Rainbow Monkeys, so three of the colored creatures appeared and punched Dellinger away. “KOOOUUCH!” He flipped back up and frowned. “What was that? Who got me?”

Kirie smirked and yelled for the monkeys to attack him. Although he couldn’t see, he knew they were there, so Dellinger swiftly avoided the monkeys and kicked them with the spike of his high-heel. “KAIIIIAAAH I see! Invisible friends? Well, I’m a predator, so that don’t work on me! You might join them soon!” He revealed his fangs and lunged at Kirie, bite bite biting, the girl frightfully dodging. When Dellinger gnashed at her chest, Kirie jumped and kicked him across the head, the force stumbling him forward, but to no avail. “Kaaaaah! I like little girls ‘cause they taste yum! Perhaps you have a silent surprise, HAHA!”

Django caught up to Gladius and blasted another sonic wave, blowing him further. “I don’t like music. It makes my head pop. Like this!” He aimed his arms at the skeleton, puffed them round, and exploded flames that Django dodged. “With the Pop-Pop Fruit, everything goes. Like this!” Django looked down, realizing bulges of ground inflated, and ran away before they all exploded. Django fell to his front, but kept his guitar above him, then he recovered without regret.
“But what goes ‘pop’ must revive.” Django strummed the guitar and summoned a squadron of skeletons. Gladius nimbly avoided their grabs, touched each one, and caused its head to inflate and pop. Django tried to strum again, but Gladius inflated his lower body and blasted to him, headbutting and knocking Django down. Gladius clutched the child’s skull and inflated, but Harry Gilligan jumped from behind and punched the officer away. “Hey, you came to save me!” Django remarked.

“Us operatives stick together. But for the record, I’m the sector’s musician, find somewhere else.”

“Yeah yeah.” Django strummed an energy beam at Gladius, who dodged, clutched the ground, and inflated a path between the boys that blew them apart. Gladius flew at Harry and punched him away, then inflated a large patch of ground with Django in range and exploded, but Django shielded himself in skeleton soldiers before blasting another wave at the Pop Man.

Mason lost sight of Señor Pink, but the baby-man popped out of some liquefied ground and uppercutted Mason to the air. “Mi Devil Fruit amigos cannot swim, but with my Swim-Swim Fruta, the earth is my sea.”

Mason rubbed his jaw, “It’s not nice to keep other kids out of your pool. I can totally outswim you.”

“Outswim me in my pool, mw? Come on in, Man. Don’t blame me if you get Pinkeye.” Señor submerged again, then Mason dove after him. It was the weirdest feeling swimming in solid ground, especially in the dimension underneath, he couldn’t see when Señor grabbed him around the hip, shot up above the surface like a dolphin, and slammed Mason headfirst against the ground. He submerged, and Mason was determined to beat him, guzzling Silver Flurp before diving. Full of adrenaline, Mason blasted an endless fart that moved him around the liquid like a torpedo. Through the thick gray, he saw a faint fat shadow swinging its arms, so Mason chased the swimming man, spun, and head-butted Señor in the gut.

Señor grabbed Mason and pushed him off, swimming forward to punch him in the head, flipping Mason upside-down before he farted downward. “That’s some bad tacos, Hombre.” Señor tried to avoid the gassy current and chased Mason, who swerved about aimlessly. Mason’s gas was running out, so he slowed to a stop, ending up caught by Señor and punched around the face. His yelps of pain were drowned in the liquid ground.

Chris Uno was amazed by Trebol’s great leaps, but he kept after the Sticky Man until he stopped to rest on a building. “HAHA!” Chris landed behind him. “You’re mine n-” He tried to raise his foot, but found it glued. “WHAT?” The sticky substance was everywhere on the roof, Chris couldn’t move his feet.

“Beheheheheheh!” Trebol turned around, the goo flowing from his nose as he held a lighter. “You fell for my trap, beeeeh! Time for YOU to get burned! Bon voyaaaage!” He dropped the lighter and jumped to the next building.

“AAAAAAAH!” The explosion claimed Chris.

“Beheheheheh—beh?” Trebol stared confused. The expanding flames compressed and sucked into Chris’s mouth like a vacuum.

“Fire Dragon’s Breath! Credits to Nigel Montgomery Uno!” Chris’s skin was red and steaming, he blasted the powerful breath at Trebol who jumped to another building. Chris flew after with jetboots and coughed fireballs, but Trebol kept a far distance and pelted Sticky Bullets, binding Chris’s fists with two shots. He kept true and flew headfirst at Trebol, who pinched one nostril. close and shot a booger, covering Chris’s face—save for the headband area. The Uno fell to the ground and desperately tried to pull it off.

“Beh! Beh beh beh!” Trebol landed before Chris. “I heard firebenders are ticklish in the ribs! I’ll tickle you now! Beh! Beheheh!” Without mercy, he started wiggling his fingers on Chris’s abs, the boy muffling laughs. Chris ignited his fists, and Trebol jumped away before the glue exploded.

“You see anywhere to go?” Aurora asked, still tearing through guards with Haruka. The Toy House nearby exploded with ice, a kite figure flying out, chased by Yuki. The friends then saw two familiar kids come out. “Melody! Danny!”

“Aurora? Haru?” Both pairs hurried beside each other. “What’re you doing here?”

“Random chance, I guess. What’s in there?”

“Some underground port; and I think a factory.”

“Factory? Let’s check it out.” Haruka said, so the teammates charged in.

“Have fun with that.” Melody said. “Danny, let’s find a phone and call Mom.” They ran into town.

Yuki flew to the air on an ice path after the Diamante-turned-kite, and all of Yuki’s icicles were blasted by Dia’s pistol. Yuki got high enough to grab Diamante’s tip, but he wasn’t strong enough to pull the steel down and took the fall himself. Yuki shot ice at the ground to break his fall, looking up as Diamante fluttered a few feet above. “Uahahahaha! In my day, I was the champion Kite Fighter. I really made the kids’ skin tremble!” He puffed to normal form and hit the ground, making it wave and ripple like a cape.

“Whoa!” Yuki fell back when the ground contracted, then was pushed away when it stretched.
Diamante pulled a chunk of earth up like a blanket – without actually ripping the earth, and threw it over Yuki to roll him in a blanket. Diamante was about to impale his sword in the roll, but the ground suddenly froze and shattered as Yuki escaped. “I’m sending you back to retail.”

Wiccan ran circles around the hall, but Monet-Z stayed on her tail, more of the hall becoming frozen. “It’s not normal for a predator to lose its prey.” Vergo said calmly.

“I’ll like to disprove your theorem with science.” Crystal reached in her back satchel, got a ball of powder, and threw it to the floor to cloud the hall. Vergo coughed while Monet hissed, the harpy crawling about crazily and slamming the walls over and over. “Calm down, you fool!” Vergo yelled, grabbing Monet by the shoulders and easing her. “Wait until the fog is gone.”

Crystal had slipped under the predator and returned the opposite direction. Following the trail of ice, she saw her staff from afar and was about to run to it. “RAAAAH!” Monet tackled her onto her front, about to snap its fangs, but Crystal pushed her wristwatch and summoned the staff to her. She swung it up and bashed Monet’s head, escaping then aiming her staff at Vergo to shoot fire in his face. “Ahh!” Vergo frantically shook and lit his head with Armament to disperse it, but Monet went crazy again and started snapping about aimlessly. Crystal dodged and watched her storm down the hall. “Hmmm.” She had an idea.

Doflamingo Jr. linked several surrounding buildings with his strings and pulled them in to crush Dillon. The earth quaked upon impact, but Dillon slid out of a crack with Shadow Veil. He immediately dodged Junior’s strings, Veiled over to blow Shadow Breath, but Junior flew back and lashed long strings, Dillon barely dodging between them. Junior flew over to swing his fist, but Dillon grabbed and engaged him in Arm Wrestle. “Enjoy this while it lasts!” Doffy proclaimed.
“But when my dad takes your dad out, you’re toast!”

“You wish! My dad kicks WAY more ass than your dad!”

“Feh! My dad could slice a meteor! And pull an island!”

“My dad could rip a boulder in half barehanded!”

“Uuuaaaaahh! Will you guys PLEASE stop talking about your DADS!” a nearby Knaaren from Rayman 3 yelled.

Junior looked to the sky. His shades twinkled. “If you wanna know whose dad is better, mine is at work!”

Dillon looked at the top of the castle: what appeared to be Doflamingo Sr. was unraveling into string going to the sky. They stopped at a point in the sky where they glowed, and strings stretched to all ends of the island.

“Fufufufufufufu.” Doflamingo Sr. got back up, laughing maniacally. “You fight well, Sandman. It’s time I take this upstairs. Did you know that, by attaching my strings to clouds, I can fly around the air?”

“There’s no clouds in the sky today.”

“I know, just felt like telling you. But I don’t need clouds today. You see, I sent one of my String Clones outside to make the Birdcage, anyway. Come join me, mueheheheheheheheheh!” Doflamingo burst through one of the walls and flew up, so Sandman whipped his chair toward the hole, fell out, and shot his grappler to a higher tower- “Whoa!”

The entire island was encased inside a giant birdcage of strings. Linking to all sides, connecting at a perfect center, there was no escape without severing one’s body. “Byeheheheheheheh!” A complex of strings stretched from one end of the cage to the other high in the sky, where Doflamingo sat. Nolan shot his grappler all the way up and flew to him. “Be careful, Sandman! You’ll be CUT!” He blasted a Bullet String, and Sandman watched with regret as his wheelchair plummeted. “Fufufufufufufu!” Nolan shot above the point where his hook latched and landed on the strings. “HEHEHEHEH… eh?”

Nolan wasn’t dead yet, much to Doffy’s chagrin. His head was kept up off the strings while his body was solid Armament. “’Guess the scene’s… still rollin’.”

Doflamingo furrowed, blasting strings crazily, but Nolan pushed himself away, landed on his Armament back against the wobbling strings, and blasted the grappler to catch Doffy and yank him to him. Nolan got to his feet while balancing the string, grabbed Doffy’s head, and slammed it against the string, but Doffy slipped off while hanging by a new stretched string, blasting up at Nolan. The vigilante fell and grabbed the string in Armament hands, sliding down to kick Doflamingo off, but Dressrosa’s king shot a string to a higher one and pulled up. Nolan shot his grappler up as well to chase, but Flamingo cut that string and had Nolan fall. Nolan grabbed that end of string and held on, but grew worried as he was swinging toward the cage wall.

Django ran as Gladius chased with his Pop Rocket, the skeleton strumming his guitar to make a giant skeleton rise, but Gladius grabbed its legs and made the whole body explode. Through the smoke, he blasted Django with Pop Flames, and his guitar was flown into the air. Gladius caught it. “Music makes my head pop. I’ll pop it as well. Go back where you came from.” Django grew worried when his Mystic Guitar inflated.
“Nnn!” Harry pounced on Gladius’s head and, astonishingly, squeezed his own hat over the man’s spiky hair. Harry jumped off and pushed his wristwatch, making headphones extract from the hat over Gladius’s masked ears. “What’s this?” Harry pushed again—Gladius started flailing his head with no control, for the headphones sounded an unbearable, nonsensical rock-and-roll soundtrack. “Aaah!” He threw the guitar away, and Django caught it.

The headphones puffed up and exploded, Harry’s hat flying off Gladius’s head. “Uhn?” The area turned a reddish-dark. Django was turning the dials on his guitar.

Gladius faced the gravestone in front of him. It read Gladius. “Sueño es el cielo. Buenos noches.”

Gladius felt his own heart inflating. The officer was spherical, he looked less like a human than before. And then…. POP (POP POP. . . .)

Django twirled his guitar and put it at his back. “I coulda did that all along, ya know.”

Kirie summoned rounds of Rainbow Monkeys after Dellinger, but with pure precision, he swung his heels and stabbed them all. “TAAAAAH it’s boring to kill opponents you can’t see! I won’t be able to deduce their nutrients, so I’ll eat you instead!”

Kirie panicked when Dellinger eyed her. She sent more monkeys, but all were kicked, and the bull-fish boy succeeded in tackling her, his fangs drooling on her face and his eyes mad. “Taaaah I’m gonna eat you now! I’ll chew your organs one-by-one and digest them! You’re gonna be devoured and excreted! What will you do now!”

Kirie fixed her glare. A shadow would be looming over them, if it was visible: the spirit of Rainbow Monkey Kong towered over them, anger and fury burning for Kirie’s assaulter. “KAAAAAAAH water you LOOKING at! Ah? Ahhhh? …” Dellinger turned up. His mad pupils shrunk, his open mouth was wide. He never saw the humongous fist come.

Kirie got up and dodged, watching the crater smash into the ground. Dellinger was smashed flat, his perfect legs bent. “Thank you, Mister Monkey Kong!” Kirie proclaimed with her lovely mute voice.

“Ooo-hoooo!” The King Kong blushed.

Mason resurfaced above the ground for air. Señor Pink came up and pulled him back under, throwing a punch to send Mason further. “You no have the legs to outswim me, Niño. Drown in the earth you walk on.” Mason turned when Señor swam at him and farted a huge bubble, catching Señor’s head. “Ay! Apesta!”

Mason could finally resurface, take out his Green Flurp, and drink. The bubbles in his tummy rumbled, so he dove back under to keep Señor from waiting. “You’re right, this isn’t my kind of water. ‘Cause I prefer a little more H2O!” He planted his rear firm against Señor, channeled all the gaseous energy to it, and farted. Señor Pink choked, flailed his arms, his liquefied environment was intoxicated. The Spanish man fainted and floated to the surface. Mason Torpedo Spun, shot above the ground, and landed perfectly. “Besides, it’s full of crap.” And he walked away from the man partway in solid ground.

Yuki froze the ground in attempt to make Diamante slip, but he kept firm and made the earth wave again. “Both our powers control the land. I wonder which will dominate?” Diamante smirked.
“Mine, Shlomo.” Yuki skied at the enemy with icicles on his knuckles, but Diamante ducked, stuck his leg out and tripped Yuki, then grabbed him by the shoulders.

“Not really. However, you’d make a nice new cape.” And so, Yuki was flat and bendable as a towel. “Aaaaaaahhh.” Diamante used him to wipe the back of his head. “So refreshing, I get goosebumps.”

“That’s a clone, man.” Diamante froze, eyes widened at the real Yuki to his left. The clone turned back into blue ice as Yuki bent the towel-like substance around Diamante’s head. Yuki froze his boots in solid ice, skied over, and kicked him in the crotch. The scream was muffled in the ice, but it broke after Dia fell over, writhing in pain. Yuki ripped a strip of the wavy ice-ground and rolled it over Dia. “Told ya.” Yuki kicked Diamante and watched him roll up like an icy rug.

“Huff, huuu, huff, huuu…” Chris can’t believe he survived that, but he focused his chi to push the flames away just when the glue exploded, leaving only a few burn marks on him. This area of town was set to flames from their battle. Chris ignited his shoes and blasted at Trebol with his fists on fire, but his fists sunk into his blobby body.

“Beheheheheheh!” That laugh was getting on his nerves. “You survived, did ya, little snot.” Trebol picked his nose. “You thought you had me, you thought you could set me on fire and blow me up. You need way more flames than that to make ME go boom!” Trebol puffed, blowing Chris away, at the same time he ignited his fist and exploded the glue blotch stuck to him. “Beheheheh! You’re a tough kid, ya, but you ain’t strong enough to defeat the Don Quixote Family!”

“Not strong enough? Heh. Unfortunately for you, I’ve been holding back all this time.”

“Beh?”

“Heh heh…” Chris chuckled maliciously. “I’ve waited a long time to find an opponent to show this to. I shoulda used it on someone else awhile ago, but another cackling idiot will suffice.”

“What’re you talking about, you tweeerrrp?”

“…” Chris clutched the back of his headband. “This birthmark is really embarrassing… you won’t tell anyone, will you? Nah…”

It was 11 years ago, when Rachel was in the final hours of her first pregnancy. After pain and struggles, Nigel and Rachel’s first son was born. “It’s a boy!” the nurse beamed. “A—- What is this?”

Nigel looked over her shoulder. “…Whoa…”

“It’s not an unnatural thing, but it is weird.” another doctor told them. “At a young age, it can be dangerous to control.”

“But what can we do about it?” Rachel asked, her baby wrapped in a blanket.

“I recommend he wear this.” He presented a light-red headband. “The chi-block inside will prevent any accidental uses, but his normal firebending will be faulty. If he learned Fire Kung-Fu, he’ll be able to make up for until he’s able to control it.”

Nigel and Rachel exchanged glances. “I guess it’ll have to do.” The former complied.

“Whooooa!” 5-year-old Aurora and 4-year Cheren gaped.
“I know, but you can’t tell anyone.” Chris stated. “My parents say it’s dangerous to use, especially if I’m hit in the head.”

“Well, we won’t tell anyone. Will we Cheren?” Aurora smiled.

“Yeah… but it would be cool, though!”

For the first time in public, Chris’s headband flew off. The horror on Trebol’s face was clear as what lay underneath.

A slim, vertical, hexagonal eye was exposed on his forehead. The very sight of it made Trebol speechless… and we would soon know why.

Chris’s head lit like a boiler as he sniffed a huge breath into his nose, and once he was fully charged, his third eye flashed, sending a string of small fireworks toward Trebol.

“........ Spark ....... Spark ....... Spark. ....... BOOM.”

A tremendous explosion engulfed Trebol and his flammable body. The area was set to flames as sticky gooey drops flew everywhere, Trebol’s head landing and melting. Chris breathed the fresh, flaming air, giving his forehead the breath it deserved.

Bison sent a stream of bladed propellers at Artie and Haylee, the two evading. “Come on, Aeral, can’t you hit me?” the latter taunted.

“Errrgh, screw this crud! Time for double-team, Brother!” Aeral exclaimed.

“You said it, Sister!”

“THEY’RE RELATED?” exclaimed the Gilligans.

With her Weapon-Weapon powers, Sweetie-1 transformed Bison, missiles and machineguns appearing all over his body. They blasted the C.O.O.L.-B.O.T. with full force, the Gilligans evading quicker than ever. “Now or never, Artie!”

“Augh. Ready when you are.” He flinched.

Through the smoke created by the explosions, the C.O.O.L.-B.O.T. lunged at the metahumans, so on pure impulse, Aeral blasted a missile and destroyed it. “Ha HAAAA! Got ‘em, Bro!”

“Sorry!” The two panicked, for Artie and Haylee were above them, the former in a flysuit and Haylee with jetpack. “But the Gilligans rule the sky!” Haylee turned up her pack’s engine, burned it against one of Bison’s missiles, and exploded the DR operatives.

“WAAAIAAAAAAH!” Sweetie-1 and Numbuh Spade took the fall to the castle grounds.

Monet-Z sniffed about the castle halls, searching for her prey. “You’ll dine soon, Monet, she cannot be far.”

“Over here!” They whipped to a right hall, finding Crystal smiling innocently. Vergo sicked Monet at her, but the witch faded into air. “No, this way!” Monet charged another way, but that Crystal dispersed. “Huuuhh-!” Crystal charged at her from another hall, Monet slashed, Crystal dispersed. “Huuuuuh-!” Another came, she slashed, it dispersed. “HUUUUUH!” Then a whole platoon of Crystals leapt, ready to slam Vergo.

“Hm. The most obvious trick. Neither of them are-”
The real Crystal among them all batted Vergo off his steed. “You can’t beat the classics!”

“Uhhhh-” Crystal shot sleeping gas that knocked Vergo out. Monet roared and screeched, in reality blind to her senses. Crystal rode her like a bull while she slammed walls left-to-right, left-to-right, before finally passing out. Crystal climbed off and proceeded. “What animals.”

Doflamingo Jr. whirled around and around, his strings stretching for blocks and slicing buildings. Dillon came out of the ground, expecting Flamingo’s whip and ducked. “Fufufufufu.” The feather-boy grinned, seeing the sweat on Dillon’s face. “You can hide, but I’ll catch you! Just give up and admit-!” He froze. Junior had no more control of his body. “Wh-What the-?”

“Shadow Possession. Thank your dad for the strings.” Indeed, Mario had stretched into and across the tiny shadow of one of the string lines from the Birdcage, the other end touching Junior’s shadow. “Doesn’t matter how small it is, as long as it’s shadow, it’s-.” But Dillon’s hold faltered. Mario released and retracted, panting beside his master. “What the-?!?”

“Fufufufufufu!” Doffy chuckled. “You wore your shadow out, he’s out of breath! And soon, you’ll be, too-”

A distant explosion caught his attention. Doffy Jr. looked up. “Hey… where did my teammates go. Did those two… !” Now angered, Doffy Jr. launched his strings to the top of the fortress and flew up.

“Hey, wait! What about our battle? Ugh.” Dillon kicked the ground.

Aurora and Haruka were making a mess of things downstairs, and the moment they saw the factory underground, their target was set. Haruka blasted gas at the sealed steel doors, Aurora blasted flames, the combo exploded and blew the entrance. The factory appeared natural inside, trees and grass growing, but the rivers flowed with toxic waste, the fruits were oddly-colored, mutated. “This is a Devil Fruit factory!” Haruka exclaimed. “Not if WE have anything to say about it!”

“Nuuiiii! You aren’t allowed in here-dasoyun!” Buffalo exclaimed, propelling at them. “I’ll turn you into-”

Aurora shot above him, kicking down his face with an icy heel, and knocked Buffalo to the ground like that. “Hooray, I defeated their weakest member! Okay Haruka, you take this half, I take this?”

“Okay.” So the duo split up and started wrecking the place.

In the sky, Nolan hung onto the string and swung ceaselessly toward the cage’s wall, but he covered himself in Armament and protected. He grabbed the string bars and climbed, seeing Doflamingo up above and crawling toward with a venomous grin. Nolan shot his grappler, Doflamingo dodged, Nolan propelled to the higher point, yanked the hook off partway, and lunged at Flamingo to grab him. He held tight and didn’t let go, so both men took the plunge. Doflamingo shot some strings to the center and pulled them both up. He angrily kicked Nolan’s face, but Nolan pulled up, got his head level with Doflamingo’s, and began punching the side. Doflamingo swung back-and-forth on the string, trying to shake Nolan off like a sticky bug on his hand, but he wouldn’t let go, his fist socked Doffy in the nose over and over.

His string retracted so much, Doffy and Nolan ended up at the very top of the Birdcage. Flamingo caught Nolan between his legs, hauled him above and tried to push him backfirst against the connected strings, but his Armament back saved him. Nolan got his boomerang, and with an evil grin, cut the center, and they both took the great fall. The wind pressed against their bodies, the castle roof was drawing closer, Nolan and Flamingo swung punches and kicks in midair. Finally they both held each other, braced for impact, and smashed through the roof.

Nolan used his grappler to catch the edge of the hole and break his fall. After the smoke cleared, Doflamingo was still standing, though dizzily. Nolan landed and dealt the last round of punches. He turned Doffy around, bent his arm behind, and punched him to the ground. His pink feathery coat faced the air as he lay defeated. The strings in the room, the slowly-descending strings of the Birdcage all dispersed into energy. Corporate President, Don Quixote Doflamingo, was down. (End song.)

Sugar’s Room

Knock knock knock. Crystal slowly creaked open the door. “Hello?”

She saw the aquamarine-haired child on the floor, along with grapes. She calmly approached. “Did she slip on a grape? No, choked on one is more likely. Shame… works in our favor, I suppose. …!” She heard groaning to her left. Cheren Uno was on his knees. “Hey! You’re that Cheren boy.” She knelt before him and held him up. “Were you one of her victims, too?”

“Nnnn… Ms. Wickens? Where am I?”

“So Crystal explained everything, how they deduced Sugar was making people toys, how everyone forgot them. “W-Wait, so… she made me a toy… no one remembered me? She erased me?!”

“Well, it… wasn’t her fault, I reckon. Her father was making her do it all. He’s mad, really.”

Pain and rage had been building in Cheren all this time. It was time to let it loose.

Throne Room

Nolan panted. He looked at the hole in the roof. His wheelchair, which had landed there, rolled to the edge and fell in. He seated himself, spared a look at his unconscious adversary, and began to roll out.

A string caught his chair from behind and whirled him into the throne. Doflamingo was back on his feet, cracking his neck. “Hnnhnnhnhn.” He grinned. “You just… don’t know your place. This is my kingdom, Sandman. The world I have created. Heroes like you don’t belong here. I… am-”

The entrance to the chamber creaked open. Doflamingo frowned and turned, feeling a strange heat wave. A dark boy glared at him with chestnut eyes full of malice. A flame engulfed his form. “My, my! If it isn’t the Head President’s nephew. Cheren Uno, I believe. That’s a hot new look for you.”

“…” Cheren stared.

“Oh, that’s right… Sugar turned you into a toy, didn’t she? Heh, everyone forgot you. Forgot everything you said about that Apocalypse. It was so much nicer, having nothing to worry about. Why did you torture them like that?”

“…”
“Fufufu… how you tried to beat President Morgan… an apprentice of the Leaders, the most powerful person under them. You, boy… you’re a joke.”

“…”

“Hnn… you’re a nuisance to us, regardless. What will the KND be without its leader? Time to make the example… with their pride.” Doflamingo’s string flew like a bullet, but Cheren grabbed the tiny thing in his right hand. “Nnn?”

The string caught fire and turned to soot. Fast as lightning, Cheren zipped to Doflamingo and socked him with a Hellfire Fist, flying him against Nolan York in the throne. Both men grunted, Nolan keeping Flamingo upright, surprised when Cheren zipped up, kicked him in the head, and flew Flamingo against the wall. Doflamingo growled and stood, Cheren warped before him, dealt an array of punches that scorched and darkened his face, then threw Doflamingo to the center. Doflamingo lashed another string, but Cheren grabbed it in a blink, zipped around the president, then forced it deep into the floor. “Uuck!” Flamingo grunted. Cheren punched that area of floor, melted it, then solidified, the end of that string lodged within. Sandman zoomed in his binoculars, horrified to see the string wrapped around Flamingo’s throat.

“Cheren!” Nolan called as the boy dodged another onslaught of strings, then pelted giant fireballs at Doflamingo, pushing him back. Faster and faster did Flamingo’s strings come, but no closer he was to winning than Cheren’s flames inching him to the hole in the wall Doflamingo made earlier. Doflamingo was now touching the edge, his head throbbing in extreme aggravation. “CHEREN, NO!”

Doflamingo threw two huge spinning strings, but Cheren dodged forward and blasted his final two flames. “AAAAAAAAAAAAAAaaaaaa…”

Faster than Nolan ever acted, he threw the boomerang at the string still lodged in the floor.

Creak.

It missed by an inch, and Nolan knew, the moment it stretched perfectly straight… he almost lost his breath. Turning very weakly, he saw Cheren standing at the edge of the hole, looking down the strong, sturdy string to where it ended. His flames never looked darker.

Thousands of townspeople gathered before the castle. Gasps and murmurs echoed all around. A pink, feathery coat, and the pair of legs below it, could be seen hanging from the castle. Very slowly, it swayed and spun in the air. His large mouth forced open, his tongue hanging out. His gorgeous blue eyes lost all life inside them.

The slanted red shades that defined him fell all the way to the courtyard, at Junior’s feet. His own shades fell beside them as his eyes widened. He, Sweetie-1, and Bison almost choked at the sight.

And within that hole stood the culprit. Alit by his mighty red flame. The citizens of Dressrosa knew… the Devil had come to claim its prize. “…DOFLAMINGO IS DEAD! DRESSROSA GIVE PRAISE TO OUR SAVIOR!”

“YAAAAAAAAAHHHH!!!”

Chris and Sector V were frozen. At the front of the crowds, they saw the flame clearest of all. “Cheren…” Chris uttered.

And if no one else did, Melody and Danny could see him. The anchorgirl lost any sense of feeling. “I…” She was on her knees, “I’m done with reporting.”
Not that Cheren heard or saw anything anymore. He was feeling… increasingly dizzy. “It’s natural, you know.”

The entire world turned dark. In his half-awake state, he saw his shadow stretch across the ground before him. It stood up, took form, and standing there was a very dark, grim form of himself. “This anger of yours.”

“Who’re you.”

“I’m what just won the battle. Your inner demon… the Demon State.”

“You look like… Nerehc.”

“A single person is composed of 3 entities: the Positive…Negative… and the Shadow. I… am your shadow. The one that separates your light and dark. The vessel that contains all of your anger, your rage… when you aren’t using it. Your inability to keep me under control, led me to take control.”

“So you’re… you’re the one that’s been doing it.”

“Not true. I’m only a part of you, Cheren. I act based on your orders. And I hear your mental orders… better than your oral ones. You want something destroyed, I’ll destroy it. You wanna deal pain, I’ll deliver it. When you want someone killed… the blood will be on my hands. And all my strength… comes from your self-turmoil.”

“I’m not in turmoil.”

“Of course you are. Because of Sugar’s power, everyone forgot you. Forgot your virtues and words. The Apocalypse. You were nothing… for that time. If it weren’t for a bunch of insects, you would’ve been gone.”

Cheren didn’t understand… he was tired… dizzy… With no sense of self anymore, he fell forward —Nolan grabbed him by the shirt-collar. “You’ve done enough, Cheren. Let’s… Let’s go down.” He set the boy on his lap and rolled.

SMILEs Factory

Caesar saw it on his TV. Doflamingo hung by the neck by his own string. The scientist choked. “Thought I’d find you here.”

He turned. Haruka Dimalanta faced him from the doorway of his dark room. “Shurororororo. Haruka…” Caesar smiled slyly. “Paying your dear old uncle a visit?”

“You still have a trial to go to. One or another, you’re coming.”

“Nnnn… I suppose I’ve no choice. There’s chi-blocking cuffs in that drawer over there.” He pointed.

“Hm… someone’s melancholy.”

“Doflamingo’s dead.” Haruka was shocked slightly. “See for yourself.”

Haruka approached the TV. The hanging man and the fire above it. “I…I don’t.”

“Ever since we were kids, this has been our dream.” Caesar spoke with regret. “To follow a goal that combined my genetic knowledge with his need to build a peaceful world. In everything that’s happened, our friendship… was always what surpassed.”
“I… I feel kinda bad.”

“You should.” Caesar glared at her. “True, Doflamingo was crazy, but you would be, too. His father was a World Leader, a very kind Leader who wanted to live among commoners. The people hated them for what they were: self-believed ‘Gods.’ Well, his father didn’t think that. He tried his darnedest to be friends with the people. Then… they killed his wife. Killed her when Doffy was only 8. Then when he was 9, he killed his father. I was the only friend he had, a gassy poisonbender who did stuff to animals for fun. No one wanted us around, so… we were all we had.”

Haruka looked at the screen again. The repeating image… it ached her every time to see.

“Somehow, I knew it would go too far.” Caesar went to the drawer and picked up the chi-cuffs. “Something like this would happen. If I could, I’d… do it all again. Talk Doffy out of this deal. Hn, no, he wouldn’t listen, shuroro. Silly, stubborn Doffy… siiigh…”

Haruka looked between him and the screen. …She was sometimes too kind for her own good.

Sugar’s Room

The aquamarine girl still lay on the floor, senseless. Timmy and Hikari slowly approached on the side of her left ear, climbing the head that was roughly 3 stories. They approached the gaping hole of her mouth and peered inside. “Hellooooo? Rupert?” Timmy called.

“Timmy, Hikari! I’m still on the tongue, heeeelp!” Timmy viewed into the dark with his goggle light. Rupert clung to the mushy substance with all his strength. “I can’t hang onto a gym pole for long, so it’s amazing how much the threat of a pit of acid changes that, help me!”

The kids sent their Wing Pikmin down the chasm to bring their friend back to safety. “Phew… thanks. …Is she dead?”

“Looks like it.” Timmy replied.

“Awwww. She’s pretty.” Hikari frowned. “When she’s not trying to kill us.”

“I feel kinda bad.” Rupert replied. “It was only self-defense, after all.”

“Mi-miiii!” The Magenta Pikmin began jumping, running around the face. Clearly they were overjoyed about being on her.

“What’s with them?” Timmy asked.

“I think they’re in loooove!” Hikari beamed.

“…” Rupert was curious, looking at their glowing note-antennas. They got this way around those music stages, what would get them so riled up. He whistled the Pikmin to attention, so once they were organized, Rupert led them around. He instructed a Magenta onto Sugar’s nose, one between her eyes and one on the left and right sides, two on each cheek, four along the forehead, and one in each ear. The one on the nose swayed an imaginary wand like a conductor as they all began to sing.

“Ringalaringaling! Ringalaringaling! Ringalaringaling!” Some music from an invisible source before their notes flowed. “Yoooga haboooon… waga la wigginother: yooga labon he noooothеееееііі…” Sugar’s eyes cracked open partway. Her purple irises looked pretty up close. “Yoooga haboooon… waga le wigginother… yoode widon he no theііііі…”
Her pupils shifted left and right to view the little creatures. Her eyelids were still half open, so the kids wondered if she was aware of her surroundings. Rupert stood before the left eye as it looked at him. He smiled kindly. “Sorry about poisoning you, but you did try to eat me. You seem kinda lonely up here, so… you know. You like the Song Pikmin? They seem to like you, for some reason. Don’t they sound fun?”

“…”

“We can’t stay long, but I’ll let you keep these guys. They can sing you lullabies or somethin’. Well, um… see you later.” So with that, Team Rupert and the rest of their Pikmin climbed down, scampering across the vast floor.

Then the doors to the room burst open, the tinies’ hearts almost stopping with fright. A troupe of G.U.N soldiers charged in and shocked Sugar into submission with rods. “I don’t know what happened, but she’s NOT getting away! Call Headquarters and have this company tried once and for all!”

Within the next half-hour, the G.U.N. and KND officials showed up. Doflamingo’s body was carted away on a stretcher, his officers sulked in depression as they were collected in their incapacitated states. Trebol’s body was still scattered goo, separated in several containers that were carried into GUN’s crafts. “Astonishing!” Brett Gunkan exclaimed. “For 12 years, Doflamingo has been kidnapping victims and using his daughter to turn ‘em into toys! During that time, we’ve sent GUN spies to investigate the story behind these toys, but all were transformed so no one remembered. What kind of witchcraft does she possess?!?”

“I dunno…” replied Vice-Commander Rourke, “but we have her in custody.” He looked at the child in question, her hands encased inside huge mechanical cuffs. “We’ll entrust the Kids Next Door with her friends’ custody, but we’ve singled her out as the prime threat.”

“Still… arresting a child. This hardly feels ethical. Perhaps some questioning will-”

“The hell with questioning.” They turned and saw Nolan and Cheren. The latter had a strong hint of darkness in his baggy-eyed state. “Lock her away and let her rot to death. Best she deserves.”

“Cheren…” Nolan spoke under his breath.

“And who was the one that brought about Doflamingo’s demise?” asked Gunkan.

“That… I did.” Nolan said. Hopefully not many townspeople saw the culprit too clearly.

“It was you, Sandman?”

“What can I say. I got carried away. Believe me, it’s not the worst that coulda happened.”

“Hm… considering the circumstances, perhaps this can be overlooked. But I don’t believe the Corporate Presidents will take this manner of respect to one of their own so lightly. I implore you to watch yourself, Sandman.”

“Will do, Sir.”

So with that, Sugar was loaded onto the aircraft before they returned to the sky, and the criminals of Dressrosa were carried away. The people of Dressrosa were still in an uproar, people scrambling to find the loved ones they hadn’t known for 12 years as Nolan escorted Cheren around. Sandman couldn’t really be bothered to settle this conflict, hopefully some new, more noble ruler would come along and tell everybody to quiet. For now was a matter of bringing Cheren back to his loved ones. “I still don’t understand…” Nolan thought aloud quietly. “If these toys’ve been around for 12 years, then Sugar would have to’ve been alive that long, unless she was given her Devil Fruit after birth, but she still… Cheren, do you remember her giving her age?”

“I just want her to die and burn in Hell.”

“Man, you’re taking this a little rough. How long were you a toy, exactly?”

“CHEREN!” Through the crowds, Nolan saw Yuki with Sector V. Aurora and Chris bolted over as the former grabbed her brother in a hug. Tears dripped from her eyes. “Bro, I don’t even know what happened, but I just forgot you and this whole Apocalypse, I can’t even explain, I… what happened to us?!”

“Cheren, weren’t you in Sugar’s room, what happened to her?” asked Nolan.

“She was trying to squish some ants and she swallowed one that choked her. Too bad she didn’t die.”

“He’s still a little… traumatized, as it were.”

“Yeah, we saw. It was his Demon State.” Chris noted. “Ever since he was born, it’s always been more ‘active’ with him than us. Aurora’s able to absorb his flames and cool him down—which I guess is her icbending at work—so Mom and Dad want her to be around often ‘case Cheren’s fire gets too… big?’

“Lord knows I’m no comforting hand.” Nolan admitted, stretching his aching fingers. “I’ll let you take care of him. See you at home, Son.”

“’kay, Dad.” The kids watched as Sandman and his team took flight over the crowds.

“Same here, man.” Chris patted his shoulder. “Just glad you’re back.”

“I should get up to Moonbase, everyone’s probably in chaos. …I suppose I should tell you guys how I ended up getting transformed. A couple days ago, me and—”

His cellphone rang. Cheren answered his mother. “Cheren, are you there? Where’ve you been, for some reason we just… forgot you.”

“Mom, I’m fine, I’m with Sector V.”

“Cheren, you need to come home, Chris and Aurora, too. We… We have to tell you something.”

“Oh…okay. Love you, Mom.” They hung up. “Huh… She sounds really upset.”

“Wonder what’s up.” said Aurora.

Uno Household

A cold, gray sky hung over Virginia this afternoon. They expected rain soon. The sectormates landed; Melody and Danny were still with them. Convenient, considering who waited outside. “Mom!” The siblings ran up to Eva Jackson in the yard. “We tried to call you from Dressrosa, but the phone was dead!”
“You were in Dressrosa?”

“Long story, I… what’s everyone doing here?”

There was a lot of people. Lizzie MayHence with her head down, Dimentia looking at the gray sky, Dr. Facilier petting his downtrodden shadow, Harvey holding Angie’s hand. Anthony and Michelle looked at Cheren and waved. Cheren exchanged worried looks with his siblings and friends. He slowly approached his front door and entered.

There was a huge crowd in his house, too. The Gilligan parents, Beatles, Drilovskys, all turned to him the moment he stepped in. The grieving looks on their faces were unsettling. “Wh…What’s going on?”

“About time you came.” The Grim Reaper squeezed out from the crowd. His presence here made the air feel colder.

“Grim…” Cheren actually wanted to speak with him about these Keys, but… “What are you doing here?”

His mother walked out around Grim, just as upset. “Kids… there’s no easy way to say this. Your father’s dead.”

The room fell silent. It was almost like time was frozen. Especially Cheren, who didn’t even feel his heart beating. “What?”

“Yes. 9:35a.m. today. Killed at the top of Mt. Mariejoa.” Grim explained, reading a paper. “Got in a fight wit’ de King of de World and his cohorts. He didn’t stand a chance.”

Everyone waited impatiently for Cheren to make a move. He just stood there with the same blank, frozen expression. “…So bring him back.”

“What?”

“You heard me, bring him back to life!” he shouted aggressively.

“You know I can’t do that.”

“WHY NOT, you’re the Grim Reaper!”

“It’s against my rules!”

“RULES, SHMULES, you brought Uncle FACILIER back to life!” He stomped up and tugged forcefully on Grim’s cloak.

“Well DON’T you t’ink I’m in too deep ALREADY?!”

“So you brought ONE lousy mortal back to life, BIG DEAL! You honestly wouldn’t do the same for my DAD?! The one who made you KING?! Any REAL friend in your position would TOTALLY—”

“I’ve been risking my position bringing you and YOUR crummy friends back to life THIS ENTIRE TIME, you little SNOT!”

Cheren felt himself freeze again. “What?”

“EVER since you joined Kids Next Door, I’ve been WATCHING you and watching you, getting involved on these crazy adventures and dying EVERY step of the way!"

“…How…How is that possible.”

“The reason you don’t remember is because, upon bringing you back to life, I set you a few moments in time before you die, wipe your memory of your death, but leave a small shred of knowledge that allows you to sense what kills you, so you can avoid it. A few minutes later, however, you die again, and the cycle continues, for 8 months now I’ve been DOING this. Keeping a sharp eye on you so the other Reapers wouldn’t, and bringing you to life so I wouldn’t be caught. Wasting my time doing so, so the children of my friends can have a longer chance at life and continue to learn from their flops. If you really don’t believe me, SEE for yourself!”

And at the whoosh of Grim’s scythe, everything was clear to Cheren.

Anthony McKenzie, at one inch tall, hurriedly dodged Cragalanche’s massive fists, until one unlucky slip caused him to be smashed flat.

Cheren clashed furiously with Captain Slag’s sword, until the captain came victorious and stabbed him in the heart.

It was difficult maneuvering underwater to dodge the Eelion monster, and the upper half of Cheren’s body was munched clean off. A second time when Cheren was trapped in its bubble, and a third in the larger room, when it swooped in and out of the walls.

The battle against Garo Master, Cheren and Merida were sliced in perfect diagonal halves by his flaming swords. Both friends were then pierced by the Stalgod’s massive swords.

In his climactic battle against Majora, the Masked Demon caught him in his whips, and swung him around until he was dead.

Dillon, Zach, and Maddy ran from the Bang Gas-Z as fast as they could, but a wrong turn led them to be swallowed in the gas, overcome with mutantism, and eventually dying.

In Nebula and Mocha’s battle against Geoffrey Giant, the massive Neanderthal chucked a huge boulder that squished Nebula’s blood out.

Vweeb hurriedly jumped around in the crowded and violent bloodfest of Glomourians vs. Kateenians, but the tiny alien was squished beneath a Glomourian’s foot like a bug.

Nebula and MaKayla fought Dimentio with the power of gods, but when the superior being caught the girls in a black hole, he distorted their matter and destroyed them.

While the Raccoon Pirates were hopping marshmallows over a chocolate river, Mason slipped and fell in the ooze.

When Carol Masterson began her battle with Nickel Joe, the sly man succeeded in shooting a coin inside her mouth, blowing her head clean off.

Sheila Frantic hurriedly dodged Big Mom’s acid globs, until one particular glob struck her face and melted it off, allowing the massive woman to crush her like a pancake.

“And there’s something else I want to clarify.” Grim said. “Earlier, your timebender friends tried to revive their teammates. However, while timebending can restore a broken body, it cannot call souls back from death. I secretly aided them as well. Even 20 years ago, Clockwork merely gave Dimentia a Gigai, and it was I that revived her once the quest was over, same with the Cheren was blind to everything. His mind was open. In a single stroke… he saw the truth. “Our lives are… just repeating.” He spoke quietly. “Like a videogame… some twisted god killing us like playthings in a game… we’re nothing… I see that now.”

“Cheren-” Rachel reached for him.

“OUR LIVES MEAN NOTHING!!” And he was gone upstairs to his room in seconds.

His jacket, shoes, and glasses were off haphazardly on the floor. His face lay smothered in his pillow as he cried. Rachel, Chris, and Aurora came with sympathetic looks as his mom walked up. “Cheren?”

“All this time, we were being helped by someone, because we were too weak to survive on our own.” He choked on almost every word. “If my dad couldn’t beat the, World Leaders, how are we supposed to find the 20 Keys?! He was one of the best there was, and he STILL couldn’t win! We’ll never find the Keys in time…”

“Cheren, I’m upset, too, but we gotta remember what Nigel taught us. What he taught you. You have to keep trying. You can’t give up—”

“WE’RE NOT AS GREAT AS YOU! Okay?! YOU weren’t dying over and over, WERE YOU?! You guys got the easy stuff… but this…this is really huge! If my dad couldn’t survive it… we don’t have a chance! Zanifr was right all along! I can’t beat Aunt Morgan… I can’t find the 20 Keys… I CAN’T stop the Apocalypse! NO ONE can! We’re all going to die and there’s nothing ANYONE can do! So let’s just… let’s just wait for it to happen! Sniff!”

They weren’t sure what to say. It was pretty mind-blowing to the others, too. Cheren never looked so drowned in depression. They had nothing to encourage him. Chris, Aurora, and Rachel left his room and shut the door. Cheren was alone, sobbing on his bed. There was no more reason to try… no more reason to fight. Their fates were set in stone. They were powerless to the world, to the gods. The Apocalypse would take them all; the Grim Reaper couldn’t hide that. He would wait patiently for his true death to come.
Broken Soul

Chapter Summary

It's time for the wedding of Sipa and Lucifer.

My step-grandpa died a few nights ago. May he rest in peace. …Anyway, this comes after Chapter 17, so if you’re confused by this chapter’s events, skim through that as a reminder.

Chapter B-11: Broken Soul

Boogey Bay

Two Moblins carried Azula by the arms and brought her into Mandy’s dark cabin. The Fire Princess was still sniffling and crying; she had run out of tears, and her yellow eyes looked dehydrated. “Azula, what in Hell’s name has gotten into you?” Mandy asked.

“She accidentally killed a Sugar Fairy when she aimed for Augustus.” one of the impish Flare Dancers replied in its high, hoarse voice. “I guess that legend about them is true. They really do force you to cry!”

“Hmmm…” Mandy reached under Azula’s chin to make her face up. She studied her drying eyes. “Some kind of post-mortem spell, huh? Well, maybe this will cure it.” Her eyes lit with fear, and Azula reacted to the Scare Stare.

A seven-year-old Azula stood before her towering father, flames burning behind him. He smacked Azula for failing her lessons. Mai and Ty Lee betrayed her because they loved Zuko more. Her servants and soldiers betrayed her. She was renowned as the worst Fire Lord…

Azula was now shivering from imaginary cold, her eyes remained forced open wide. “Take off her armor, and bring her something to drink.” Mandy ordered.

The Moblins sat Azula on a bed and tore off her black armor. She only had a black bra and underpants underneath. There were scars around her body. “You took more than your current body heat would allow.” Mandy deduced as she poured some wine down Azula’s throat. “One of your biggest fears was imperfection… so you desperately seek to become Logia, a perfect firebender. That’s one of the things I liked best about you.” Mandy gestured with her hand for the other demons to leave. They obeyed and shut the door, making the cabin darker.

She had Azula lie down on the bed, rolled away from the captain as she quivered. “Your actions were reckless, but necessary, of course. Becoming a Logia means risking your life in your own element. If you’d digested just a bit more violet flames, you might have made it. Or… maybe you wouldn’t have. Perhaps we’ll find out in time.” Mandy shrugged.

“Are you about through wasting our time?” Lord Licorice questioned, walking out of the darkness.

“Well, for a minute, I was wondering if you were actually helping.” Mandy turned to him while drinking some rum.
“The Sugar Fairy Kingdom is just within our grasp! We can easily overpower those puny and pathetic creatures, destroy the core of their sugar, and secure both the Forest and Sugar Fairy Princesses.”

“The Flare Dancers told me that the Sugar Fairy warped the Forest Fairy and the Marzipans away. Storming their kingdom won’t do me any favors.”

“I said, we could destroy, their SUGAR Fuel!” Lord Licorice spoke insistently, stomping closer to Mandy with each emphasized word.

“You SAID you would give me the FOREST Fairy!” Mandy said with a deadly glare, inches from Licorice’s face. “You said that with Princess Aisling’s powers over life, I could become my own Grim Reaper! I could bring to life all the world’s evil pirates and force them to my whim! So unless your promises hold true to their word, I could care less about demolishing a silly fairytale kingdom!”

Lord Licorice gritted his teeth, drawing his gun to aim it at Mandy. “I… am The King’s apprentice. I, the most humble and generous Lord Licorice, am allowing you pirates to have fun. I can apprehend you now and haul you to Mariejoa… but I’m not. And all I’m asking of you… is to burn those wretched Sugar Fairies to ash.”

Mandy moved her glaring eyes closer to Licorice, who calmly backed up in fear. “The Grim Reaper told me… who The King is… and I have to wonder… Are you really not arresting me out of generosity? Or is it because… I’m a McKenzie?”

A sweatdrop trickled down Licorice’s face. The gun trembled in his hand as he took small steps back. “The ultimate flaw…” Mandy spoke again, “with rulers and officials alike… is that they always show bias… for the ones they hold dear.”

“…” Licorice sighed and regained his composure. He put his gun away and prepared to leave the cabin. As he stood in the doorway, he turned to Mandy and said, “His Majesty may have that flaw… but you’re only alive because I allow it. Consider that my gift… as your best friend.” He shut the door and was gone.

Posiverse Earth; about 195 million years ago

“Holy Mother of Monkey Milk!” Augustus gaped at the prehistoric sight before them. “Mother freaking Jurassic Park!”

“WHATCHU GAWKIN’ AT?!” Rallo shouted with fear. “That big thing just ate that little thing! We don’t watch our asses, we’ll get our things ate, too!”

“I’m astonished that Zeira can use time-travel magic.” Aisling said. “So these were the creatures that roamed Earth in ancient times.”

“How the hell are we supposed to find the Rock Nut in this mess?!” Stewie asked angrily. “Lick every rock until we find one that’s-”

“STEWIE, STEWIE.” Augustus interrupted. “I am not… even gonna let you finish that sentence. I just… saw where you were goin’, and I am like NO. You need to level down with those jokes.”

“Aaaahhh-AAAAAAAAaaaahhhhh!”

“Whuh was that?” Rallo asked.
“Over there!” Aisling pointed.

Not far away, a group of raptors were chasing something small across the plain.

“AAAAAAAAHHHHH!” This creature, running on all fours, was a cavegirl, with messy cyan hair and big hazel eyes, wearing a green loincloth dress and a cracked skull mask on her head. She also had a reddish-purple line painted horizontally across her face.

“Hold on, kid!” Augustus grabbed his Gobstopper and rushed over, the Baby Trio joining.

“Wait, we’re in the past!” Aisling yelled after. “We shouldn’t interfere… Oh, who am I kidding. GROWL!” She bared her fangs and pranced on all fours.

The little cavegirl looked back at the raptors with fear in her adorable hazel eyes. She stopped and stared when something small and spherical struck a raptor’s jaws. It had been thrown by a taller Neanderthal, whose clothes didn’t look like any she recognized. Rallo blasted his boombox to blow another raptor away, and Stewie fired a net gun to catch another and shock it. Aisling tackled the fourth raptor and sank her teeth into its flesh. When the first raptor tried to help its friends, Augustus tackled and began to wrestle it.

“Tell this to all your amigos, the future belongs to HOMO sapiens!” the Spanish-German declared.

“NOOOOO!” The cavegirl pounced on Augustus’s back and began pounding his head like an angry child. “Get off of Nel’s frieeeeeends!”

“Wha-… Friends?” Augustus looked at the raptor confusedly.

“Nel and dinos were playing ‘Catch Nel’! You ruined Nel and dinos’ game! Go awaaaaaay!” She cried and continued pounding the teen boy.

“Are you really her friends?” Aisling asked the raptor she was biting.

Yes. And you're a weird-looking baby jaguar. The raptor replied telepathically.

Aisling calmly climbed off the creature, and the other ones recovered and showed no signs of vengeance. “Uh… Sorry.” Augustus said to the cavegirl clutching his shoulders. “We’re not familiar with… old timey games.”

The girl jumped off. “Nel invents game herself. Other cavepeople think Nel crazy, but Nel think… oh?” She stared at him. “Why does caveman know Nel’s language?”

Aisling gasped. “You can speak English?”

“English? English is Nel’s language!” she shouted. “Only Nel speak English. Nel know English well, because only Nel know English. So why other cavemen know English?”

“Because we’re from the future!” Augustus yelled.

“Hold on, if she can speak English, perhaps she may be able to help us.” Stewie said as he approached the cave child, who was nearly his height. “Miss, do you know anything about a Rock Nut?”

“What weird caveman is this?” Nel touched either side of Stewie’s football head. “His head funny. Hee hee hee hee!” She rocked the head back and forth. “Look like funny rock!”
“Shyeah, but you should see Rallo without his afro!” Augustus laughed.

“NO, DON’T!” Rallo cried. “You tell this girl, she gonna tell everyone, then all o’ HISTORY’S gonna be laughin’ at me!”

“Nel like new cavepeople.” Nel clapped happily. “Nel think people funny. People be friends with Nel?”

“Eh, why not?” August shrugged. “I’m opening a babysitting service after this.”

“Yaaay!” She clapped. “New friends for Nel! New friends come to Nel’s cave?”

“Sure, we wouldn’t mind a place to rest! (Even though we kinda just got out of a cave.) Hey, can your raptor friends help us pull our plane?”

“You want pull plain?”

“Y-Yeah—I mean… just come see.”

The group led Nel and her raptors to the broken-down Ace Flyer. “This plain?” Nel began to climb it. “This smallest plain Nel ever see. It look like hard rock. Whoa!” She fell headfirst into the pilot’s seat, with her dirty feet flailing in the air.

“It’s not a plain like a field.” Augustus said as he grabbed Nel’s feet and pulled her up. “It’s like… a magic stone that we have and lets us fly.”

“It stone? It shaped like pterodactyl. Can Nel fly stone plane?”

“Heh heh… It’s not in best shape right now. Just help us pull it to your cave.”

They traveled a few miles across the field before they arrived at Nel’s cave. She had a few clothes hanging on the wall, so Augustus threw one of them over the biplane. “Here, Nel friends.” Nel carried two armfuls of rocks over to them. “Nel bring rocks. Nel hopes friends like.” She dropped them all. …Nel felt pain course through her. “YAAAAAAAH!” She grabbed the stubbed toes and hopped around.

“Calm down.” Aisling crouched down and softly rubbed the sore toes. “You should be more careful.”

“Can you actually eat these rocks?” Augustus asked curiously.

“Huh? Cavepeople always eat rocks. Well, rocks too big for Nel. She break into pebbles.” Nel stood up and picked up one of the heavy rocks. “Mmm, mmm,” she hopped to a wall, “MMM!” and chucked the rock to break it to pieces. “Pebbles yummy! Mmmmmm!” Nel picked some up and began chewing.

“Yeah… I don’t eat those.” Augustus replied with disgust. “See if you like this.” He pulled out a Gold Wonka Bar and handed it to the girl.

Nel stared at the chocolate as though it was the weirdest thing ever. Nel put her teeth around the bar and bit a piece. It was so much softer than pebbles, it felt like her teeth were munching nothing. She swallowed. “Mmmmmm…” Nel bore the expression of someone in Caveperson Heaven. “Nel feels a happy feeling on her toooooongue. Why is Nel tongue happy? Bllllll?” She stuck her tongue out.
“That, my soil-footed friend…” Augustus bent down with a knowledgeable smile, “was called taste.”

“Taste?” Nel grabbed her tongue and tried to pull it up in front of her eyes. “Nel don’t thee it.”

“It isn’t something you see. It’s something you feel.” The captain started a new lollipop. “It’s a mouthwatering feeling that outright says: if you eat this, your belly will be happy. The ability to taste was God’s greatest gift to man. If something tastes good, you swallow it.”

“You are setting, a very bad example in this case.” Aisling said.

“Nel like ‘taste.’ Nel never taste before. Except pretty rock on Terry mountain. Haaaa-omp.” She bit another piece of chocolate.

“A pretty rock?” This caught the teen’s attention. “What rock?”

Nel swallowed, and she spoke with chocolate around her mouth. “Nel climb to top of Terry mountain and find pretty rock. Nel try to break, but it don’t. Nel tried to eat, but too big. But when Nel tongue touch it, tongue feel happy. Nel think this ‘taste.’”

“It must be the Rock Nut!” Aisling beamed.

“Nel, can you take us to Terry Mountain?” Augustus asked.

“Mmmm…” Nel frowned. “Terry mountain belong to Terry. Nel climb when Terry gone because Nel wanted to see what up there. Does Nel friends want Terry’s tasty rock?”

“If it’s what we think it is, it’s imperative that we collect it.” Aisling said.

“But Terry scary!” Nel exclaimed. “Terry eat Nel friends! Nel don’t want friends to die!”

“I assume this ‘Terry’ is a pterodactyl.” Aisling replied. “An animal all the same. If I got close to her, I can communicate and reason with her.”

“Hee hee hee! Terry not her. Terry a male.”

“My mistake.”

“And even if she can’t, we can take him.” Augustus fist-palmed. “Listen, Nel, we really need that Rock Candy, not for us, but for a friend of mine. He’s a, uh… caveman who can’t leave his cave, and he’s gonna die soon. All he really wants is to taste that rock. So, will you take us?”

“Sniff…” Nel’s adorable eyes began watering. “Th-That saddest story… Nel ever hear! WAAAAAAAHHH!” She made a waterfall of tears that the others looked at with disbelief. She calmed down and spoke with a stutter, “N-Nel h-help friends find r-rock. J-Just promise Nel f-friends will be careful.”

“You got nothin’ to worry about!” Augustus lifted the cavegirl up over his shoulders. “Just point us the way!”

“Ha ha ha ha!” Nel swung her feet happily. “Nel gets to ride funny caveman!” She smacked his head and pointed vigorously, “RIDE, AUGHSUCKS!”

The captain’s motivation sunk at that name. “It’s… Augustus.”

“Nel said Aughsucks! Go, Aughsucks!”
Negaverse; DNK Moonbase

It was -11:55ma. Every DNK sector had gathered in the audience chamber, viewing the stage where Medusa, Ragus, and Lucifer stood. The massive chamber was filled with a dead silence, and everyone was impatiently waiting for the bride to make her appearance. “She’s just gonna turn it down, right?” Yllas whispered to her teammates.

“Shhh!” Ynohtna hushed her.

“Lady Medusa, my father will be killed after this, right?” Ragus asked her mistress.

“Sooner than you think.” Medusa smirked. “I sent Pandora and Thanatos down to Asorsserd to do the deed. Hope that gives you something to look forward to.”

“It does, My Lady. …Oh! The bride is coming.”

The right stage door opened as Sipa walked in with Asia at her side. She looked both pretty and scary in her black dress, holding a bouquet of dead grey flowers. They stopped three feet from Lucifer, who still possessed a black desert wolf. Sipa’s expression was morbid. “My bride…” The demon hissed. “You look beautiful…”

“A girl needs time to prepare, even in this world…” Medusa commented. “But better late than never. In three more minutes, I will join you two in eternal matrimony. If either of you have vows, you had better speak now.”

“I have a few things to say…” Sipa spoke lowly. “Ever since I was little… my deepest dream was to burn my mortal soul and become a small piece of the Underworld’s darkness. And with every sin I commit… I felt my soul steadily decaying away.” It was -11:59. Everybody’s hearts were racing from the tension. “And now… when I’m only a couple words away… from losing myself completely… to a demon as renowned and… feared as you…”

Lucifer hissed through his grinning, drooling fangs. Sipa’s lovely dark form reflected in his glowing red pupils. She looked so… delicious…

“…I realize…” Sipa resumed, “…that all I really want, more than anything… is…”

Ragus let the lifeless doll dangle in her hand. The soul which this doll was inhabiting was asleep. The person inside was no longer what he used to be, but a hideous amalgamation of Ragus’s creation.

. . . . The motionless toy shone, and its distorted body began to wobble. The froad and cat legs transformed into human legs in purple pants, the fish fin and octopus tentacle became human arms and hands, and the platypus nose retracted. Whatever this creature was, it became a brown-haired boy with sunglasses and dark-yellow eyes.

The minute the clock struck -12, it felt as though a light went off in everyone’s minds. Suddenly, they had weird memories of an alliance with the Nimbi DNK, how their acronym stood for the “Daring New Kids”, and some hogwash about a “happier” Negaverse where everyone’s nice to each other. And all these ideas were because of one boy whom they clearly remembered as their Supreme Leader.

“NEREHC!!” Sipa screeched after her moment of awestruck silence.
“What?!” Lucifer shouted.

“Ragus, what’s going on?!” Medusa shouted.

“I’m as confused as you are, Lady Medusa!” Ragus replied with her still smile and tone. “Out of the blue, I seem to have memory of Nosrednug’s real identity!”

“AVADA KEDAVRA!” Sipa whipped out her Devil’s Wand and struck Lucifer.

“UOOOH!” The black wolf died, and the dark energy left its body.

“YOU!” Sipa aimed the wand at Medusa’s possessed body. “LET NEREHC GO!”

“Better do what she says!” Sicnarf ordered as a troupe of guards trained their weapons on the goddess.

Before Medusa knew it, the whole of the DNK audience were scurrying down the stairs and jumping on stage, surrounding her and Ragus from every direction. “Grrr. This isn’t what was supposed to happen!” Medusa growled. “If it’d just been another minute, I would’ve had everything I needed to…”

“LOOK!” Ikuyim pointed excitedly. “That girl’s holding a Nerehc doll! I bet the real Nerehc’s trapped inside it!”

“Accio DOLL!” Sipa aimed her wand, and the Nerehc doll flew into her hand. “NEREHC!” She shook it frantically. “Are you in there?! PLEASE WAKE UP!”

Night Castle

“Damn it! I have to get out of this place!” Nerehc stated impatiently, trying to stomp Ragus’s sleeping body. However, his foot phased through her like she were a ghost. “How do I wake this chick up?!”

“I’m not sure if it will work,” Mr. Penguin said, “but since we’re in a Dream Realm, you might wake up if you die.”

“Hey, you’re right!” Nerehc drew his sword and aimed it at his chest. …He hesitated for a second. “Sure hope this works!” He shut his eyes and slowly moved the sword’s tip to poke his chest. …Poke.

Moonbase

“YAH!” The doll jumped out of Sipa’s hand and on the stage floor.

“YEEK!” Ininap and Yddam were startled and grabbed each other. The operatives backed away in fear when the doll pushed itself up on its feet.

The doll’s beady yellow eyes looked around at all the familiar faces. “Sipa! Sicnarf! Ydolem!” Nerehc’s voice spoke happily. “You guys…” He skimmed their bodies up and down. He was only as high as their feet. “…are really tall.”

“N-N-Nerehc…” Ininap crouched on all fours and crawled to her master like a curious puppy. “Y-You’re a… doll?”

Nerehc looked at his stubby hands and the knees he had trouble balancing on. “Huh… So I am.
Anybody have any idea how I got this way?"

“They’re getting away!” Yddam yelled when Medusa opened a dark portal.

“Until next time, you fools!” Medusa pulled Ragus in with her.

“STOP!” Sipa grabbed the Nerehc doll and dove after them.

“AAAAH!” She, Ragus, and Medusa tumbled onto the floor of the first bridge, close to the hangar.

“ENOUGH!” The Dark Goddess kicked Sipa off and got onto Nerehc’s feet, drawing his sword and holding it to his neck. “Back away or I’ll cut this boy’s neck! I’m curious to see where Demise’s spirit will go if he dies, anyway.”

“Sipa, throw me on the sword!” Nerehc’s doll yelled.

“Huh? Okay. NNNN!” Sipa hurled the little doll across the air, and his stubby arms wrapped around the Devil Sword’s white blade.

“Huh?” Medusa stared confusedly at the doll. The way he hugged the sword was adorable…

“GHIRAHIM!” Nerehc called. The white sword flashed, and the diamond-skin Demon Lord leapt out.

“Yaaaaaaawn.” Ghirahim stretched his trim body. “It’s about time I was called out. I was getting a little tired of everyone saying ‘Who’s Nerehc’ all the time.” He turned to said boy with a devious smile. “Still, my master… you have seen better days.”

“You listen to ME, you hopeless servant.” Medusa aimed the sword at him while the Nerehc doll was still hugging it. “The body I’m possessing is the one that houses Demise’s soul. I am the one you answer to, not Nerehc!”

“Hmmm…” Ghirahim held a hand over his eyes, still smiling. “And so I’m faced with the conundrum… who do I listen to. It’s true that the body Medusa is inhabiting is the one that bears Demise’s energy… However, the body truly and officially belongs to Nerehc. The true one that has conquered both Devils and taken their power. Tell me, Medusa… could you defeat them?”

“You know this bitch couldn’t!” the Nerehc doll yelled. “Just kick her ass so I can get my body back!”

“Don’t even think about it!” Medusa smacked the doll off and held the sword to the body’s neck. “It’s true that I need Demise’s powers to revive Ganondorf, but if they retreated inside Lehcar or one of her children, I can easily persuade them to work for me!”

Ghirahim zipped up to her, kneeling to her face level as he licked his lips. “But will I… work for you?”

“Ouch! Ghirahim, you’re standing on me!” The Nerehc doll squirmed under the demon’s foot.

“There they are, they’ve over here!” Sicnarf and the operatives scurried onto the bridge to surround the villains.

“You’re not going to get away!” Hcaz stated firmly. “You’re overstepping your boundaries as a god. Ininap is praying to the other gods as we speak; they’ll be here pretty soon and see what you’re doing.”
“Hm hm hm hm.” Medusa chuckled, keeping the sword by Nerehc’s neck. “You ‘Daring New Kids’ think you’re so strong because of your loyalty and dedication to your leader. Nerehc may be leading you Negatives to a path of light… but this very path will destroy you! The Apocalypse will come at the end of this month, and your kind will never survive without MY assistance!”

“You…” Yddam’s fists trembled, and a nervous sweatdrop trickled down her face. She was wearing her Fishman Karate gloves. “J-Just… what do you want?”

Medusa’s snake green eyes looked at her, making Yddam step back in fright. “My child… don’t you know who I am? I am Medusa. The Seeker of the Thirteen Darknesses. The one who is destined to unite the Darknesses, and help the Negatives to find and awaken them! Only I know the identities and locations of each of the Darknesses. The universe will only be saved if they, along with the Seven Lights, are awakened. And the only way you can see for that to happen, is if you listen to me.”

The Negatives stood silent with hesitation. Medusa could read their mixed expressions of anger and contemplation. They wanted to attack her for stealing Nerehc’s body… but they also thought she could be right. They knew little about the Twenty Keys… so helping Medusa achieve her selfish gain may be their only chance of learning this knowledge.

The operatives looked at the smooshed Nerehc doll, who was back on his feet after Ghirahim got off. He slouched on one knee, but he faced up at Medusa. Even though his beady eyes showed no expression, Medusa could feel him glaring. “A god like you wouldn’t even care about us… if the Apocalypse didn’t affect you!!”

The operatives exchanged quiet murmurs. Medusa narrowed her eyes. “A Goddess of Evil would relish in our destruction!” Nerehc shouted. “The despair of trillions of souls, feeding her with power! The power to create her own era of darkness. The Apocalypse would be a buffet to you, but it’s not! Because the gods are in danger of dying, too! This Apocalypse is more than just the destruction of all life. It’s the destruction of anything and EVERYTHING we ever cared about! Isn’t it?”

Medusa bit her (Nerehc’s) teeth. If Ragus could make any other expression, it would be a quizzical frown. “That includes our existence.” Nerehc spoke further through everyone’s astonished murmurs. “Our souls, the gods.” Even the former DNKG felt anxiety from this knowledge. “The best we know is that only a handful will survive if it happens. This ‘Will of Sixes’ that Cheren mentioned. But even those people won’t understand a thing, even they won’t know if they’ll survive. …And you don’t either. That’s why you need us… don’t you?”

All eyes were on Medusa, including Ragus’s. The goddess looked at the floor with anger in her eyes. She stuck the sword into the floor and knelt down. “…I’m really not sure what’s going to happen. I was told… that Palutena and I would clash at the end… and the winner would decide if the New World is controlled by Light or Darkness. It may be her influence getting to me… but I wonder… if this very prophecy is true. Can I really trust this… Bill Cipher.”

The Negatives looked confused. They haven’t heard that name before. And it was during this moment of confusion that the dark spirit lurking above seized his chance. Medusa glanced up and smirked, seeing him closing in.

“AAAAHH!” A dark energy seeped into Sipa’s body, and the girl began squirming.

“Sipa, what’s wrong?!” Nerehc ran up to his girlfriend.

“Given the horrid state your soul is in, I may not NEED to marry you to take over your body!”
Lucifer’s monstrous voice sounded.

“NO! STOP! Get out of me! Get out of my head!!”

“I’ll help!” Ragus skipped up to Sipa and aimed her hand. “Sleep!”

Instantly, Sipa’s eyes turned dull and shut as she fell on her back. “Sipa!” Nerehc jumped up on her chest to study her face. “Whaddid you do?!” he yelled at Ragus.

“I have the power to control souls.” Ragus said with her creepy smile. “Even lay souls to rest. My powers may be limited to contracts… but dark or weak souls like Sipa or Lucifer’s are within my limits. At this moment, they are fighting in Sipa’s dreamscape. The winner will become the new owner of the body.”

“Are you kidding?! Sipa, wake up!” The doll smacked his girlfriend’s cheek, but dealt no pain. “Don’t let him control you, just wake up!”

“Even if she could hear you… Lucifer could easily overpower her, anyway.” Ragus said. “If you were in there to help, the outcome may be different. I can use my power to transport your soul into Sipa’s body, Nerehc. If you are able to save her, I will allow you back into your real body while Medusa leaves. However…” Her smile seemed to stretch wider. “If you are successful, then you must follow Lady Medusa’s instructions from now on. You must listen to what she has to say.”

“Mmmmmn… mmmmmm…” In her sleep, Sipa was biting her lip and sweating. Her body lightly shook from the struggle taking place inside her. Nerehc couldn’t bear to see his girlfriend this way. He couldn’t imagine how she may have been suffering. “We will.” he said firmly.

“You can’t be serious!” Ynohtna yelled. “Even if your reasonings are true, trusting someone as evil as Medusa is-”

“But.” Nerehc spoke louder to make him silence. “You must only give us instructions, if those instructions will help us find the Thirteen Darknesses, and ONLY the Darknesses! If any of your instructions are irrelevant to the cause, whether it’s burning a town or saving a puppy, the contract is off. Got it?”

“…It’s a deal.” Medusa smirked.

“Good. Now send me in.”

“As you wish… Prince Nerehc.” Ragus approached and used her power to remove Nerehc’s soul from the doll. She placed him inside Sipa’s head, and put him to sleep as well.

“I wish I could be a doll,” Nosam Atalnamid spoke with heart-shaped eyes, “then my lovely Lorac will cuddle with me as she sleeps, as I keep her safe from nightmares. Miss Ragus, could you perhaps do me such an honor?”

“I kinda hope Sipa’s head explodes from all this.” Akurah remarked.

“Three souls fighting inside one body, something like that would happen.” Asia said. (Play “Hazardous Highway” from Kingdom Hearts II!)
Mission: Stop Lucifer from taking Sipa’s soul.

Nerehc immediately found himself skating down a red, vertical road, whipping past black buildings on either side. The road curved up at the bottom, so Nerehc’s rockets began to skate across a flat ground, and he gaped at the view of the horrific dimension. It was a black city suspended above a blood-red sky. There were giant gravestones with deathly skulls, and giant whitish-blue, ghostly flames. “THIS is Sipa’s dreamscape?!” he questioned. “More like a nightmare-scape!”

Nerehc skied across the road that swooped down, up like a hill, then down again as his speed increased. At the bottom, Nerehc zipped up a ramp that flew him to a Spring Pad on a floating piece of rubble, which bounced him around a series of Spring Pads before he finally landed on a path within a part of the dark city. Piles of bones rose up and became Stalfos, which charged over to attack Nerehc. When one Stalfos jabbed its blade, Nerehc leapt overhead, swung his sword, and beheaded that Stalfos and the one behind it. He then stabbed them both from behind, and dodged the remaining one’s sword. When the third Stalfos swung its blade down, Nerehc bashed it upward with his own sword before slicing the Stalfos across the chest.

Nerehc ran out of the alley and to the city square, where bone piles lay around a fountain of red water (to level down on grossness, he called it water). Each of these Stalfos sprouted to life, but Nerehc wouldn’t bother fighting them. Instead, he jumped into the fountain’s center, which propelled him up so he could collect a Fire Soul. Nerehc ran further down the street until some springs bounced him on top of the roofs. Fire Keese swooped around, but Nerehc cut each of them with one slice. He had view of the fountain square from this rooftop route, which would lead him to a grind rail. However, a gravestone blocked the rail’s base, sending Phantom Embers (green flames with yellow eyes) at Nerehc. Nerehc cut through each Ember as he approached the grave, then cut it to pieces.

Nerehc boosted across the rail as it swirled down, then turned straight as it led him between floating buildings. He had to jump between two rails as parts of buildings blocked parts of them, but once out of the midair alley, the rail swerved around numerous floating structures. It dropped Nerehc on another red highway, and the boy skied ceaselessly when a gigantic spiked tire with rockets began chasing him. A spring bounced Nerehc to a parallel road, where he had view of the skull on the wheel’s side. Another spring bounced him back on the road, so he kept running from the tire.

The Death Tire launched rockets that forced Nerehc to dodge left or right, and when he saw a bump coming up on the road, he had to jump. The tire was steadily catching up, but when Nerehc saw a smaller road that curved left, he seized the chance to take it while the wheel kept rolling the bigger road. Nerehc’s road zipped up a hill, with springs that launched him to a series of floating platforms. Nerehc cut away the Red Bubbles that were mindlessly bouncing around, and at the end of these platforms, he used his rockets to glide over to another city area.

Redeads were positioned around the ground, and their high-pitched screams froze Nerehc in place. One of the zombies quickly limped over to begin choking the Demon Prince, who stabbed its head with his sword to get it off. Another Redead limped over, but Nerehc set his sword aflame and chopped it. There was a Fire Soul in a right corner past some Redeads, but not wanting to waste time with the zombies, he stayed close to the left wall to avoid them and go down a city street. Nerehc jumped up some boxes, then Wall Kicked his way across the parallel buildings to avoid the Redeads down below. Once past the zombies, the road turned left, leading to a wide dead-end alley with a well. Nerehc bypassed the Redeads before they could turn to face him, and jumped down the well.

He was suddenly grinding across another rail, inside a pitch-black interior where he couldn’t see the way. Another rail appeared beside him, and when a gravestone popped up on his current rail, he jumped to the other, then switched back-and-forth when gravestones kept trying to surprise him. The rails brought him to a bigger underground graveyard, where Nerehc hopped across numerous rails, avoiding the stones popping up and the routes that would lead him into a death pit. He noticed a Fire Soul above a rail far to his right, having missed the route it led to. The last rail brought Nerehc through a tunnel, leading him outside as he skied across a lake of red water. He saw another Death Tire whoosh across a highway overhead. At the end of this lake, Nerehc bounced on some springs that would land him on a downward highway—just after the Death Tire sped down.

Nerehc was chasing the tire this time, and it made great distance ahead of him. The tire was dropping mines on the ground, but Nerehc could whip the bombs with his sword and fling them against the tire. At the bottom of this slope, Nerehc began to chase the tire across a wider road with many holes. Nerehc avoided the holes, but made sure to keep in position with the bombs so he could hit them against the tire. Once the tire sustained enough damage, it sped out of control and drove off the edge. Nerehc could now run through a city street at the end of the path—the entrance would’ve been blocked by the Death Tire if it were still active.

The city path was mostly straightforward except for a few crates Nerehc had to dodge. Once he was through, he arrived at a chasm area with giant skull torches that sprouted fire every few seconds. They were scattered around, so Nerehc jumped to the ones that were closer. The torches continued across the chasm as the path shifted left. Nerehc chopped down Red Bubbles that bounced over and threatened to ignite his torches. He made it to a wide area and jumped the torches to a far left corner so he could collect a Fire Soul. Afterwards, he jumped back and landed on a path on the left of the chasm.

The path directed up and around the wall above the giant torches. At every step, a gravestone releasing Phantom Embers blocked his way, so Nerehc chopped up each one. At the walkway’s end, Nerehc skied into a tunnel, which brought him to a steep narrow slope. A spring bounced him to another highway, where he was chased by the first Death Tire again. He dodged two missiles and jumped three bumps before a spring bounced him to the other road, where he was behind the second Death Tire. It dropped bombs that Nerehc whacked with his sword, exploding them on the tire three times before it spun out of control. Nerehc ran onto a wider path, going around the spinning tire and running ahead of both. Nerehc looked back, and gaped when an enormous Ghost Rider flew down from the sky on a motorcycle. The cycle attached itself to both Death Tires and chased Nerehc.

Strips on the front tire caught fire and burned a trail toward Nerehc, so he dodged to a segment of road that wasn’t burning. After a few easy dodges and jumping road bumps, the Ghost Rider’s motorcycle boosted, the bike tilting back as the front wheel was uplifted. It smashed back down, but Nerehc was now underneath the bike, between both wheels. The bike was moving faster, threatening to smash Nerehc with the back wheel. Since the front was dropping bombs, he batted the bombs into the front to do damage. However, he allowed some bombs to pass and hit the back wheel, and soon, the rear wheel popped off its hinge. The slanted backside dragged along the ground and would burn Nerehc if it caught up. Nerehc hit more bombs into the front wheel until it blew off.

The Ghost Rider activated the bike’s rockets and chased Nerehc from the air. He released rows of fireballs that singed spots on the road, forcing Nerehc to maneuver between the diagonal rows. Nerehc boosted to get away from the Rider, going into a city, and when the giant skeleton tried to maneuver down, his craft bumped along the buildings and exploded. His flaming skull flew off, munching loudly as it chased Nerehc, but the boy sped through a tunnel that the skull wouldn’t fit into. The tongue was chasing Nerehc like a snake, so with a look of disbelief, Nerehc jumped back and pierced his sword through the limb. With that, he kept running through the city until he overlooked a near-vacant, floating field. (End song.)

Nerehc saw the back of a girl wearing a black dress, with dirty blonde hair. “Sipa!” he called, recognizing her. “Sipa, can you hear me?!”

“I’m afraid she can’t…” Nerehc looked up at the source of the dark voice. His body was skinny and black, with bony feet and sharp claws. He had a cracked skull mask that looked like a demon’s, with horns, and he slowly flapped down with black feathered wings. “Her soul has gone past its limit…”

Nerehc gasped. “Are you… Lucifer?”

“Yes. I am the Royal Demon Saint, who ate a piece of Sipa’s soul long ago. And now… I will devour the rest and claim her body. Perhaps in a physical form… I can attain love…”

Nerehc clenched his teeth with malice. “SIPA, SNAP OUT OF IT! Don’t let him take you, run away!”

“…” Sipa slowly turned around. …The second her milky eyes faced Nerehc, broken areas with blood appeared on her body. Her left hand was missing, the front of her right foot was missing, the top left of her head… She looked less like a living, human being. “Sipa…”

“Has destroyed her soul with all of the sins she committed.” Lucifer knelt down and softly grasped both of Sipa’s arms. “Any human with moderate intelligence can protect their soul from me… but she is more than susceptible. There is no saving a soul like hers… not unless she becomes one with a demon like me.”

“DON’T TOUCH HER!” Nerehc blasted a jolt of lightning that struck Lucifer’s head and knocked him back. Nerehc skied up to his girlfriend. “Sipa, he’s wrong! It’s not too late to save your soul!
You asked me to repair it, didn’t you? Well, I will! You just have to trust me!”

“It isn’t a matter of trust!” Lucifer hissed. “No amount of regret or repent can save this girl! She could not survive in Heaven OR Hell! She is doomed to fade away into nothing!”

“Sipa… please talk to me.” Nerehc grabbed the girl’s right hand, staring directly at her eyes as his own leaked tears. “Say something! Anything!”

“Haaaaaa ha ha ha ha ha ha!”

Nerehc kept his eyes sharply opened, hoping to witness some response from Sipa. But his tears made this impossible. He sniffled and let his head sink. …Nerehc felt something wet and gooey touch his right hand. It was the bloody stub on Sipa’s left arm. He looked up agape when Sipa leaned forward and put her head against his chest. “N…N…Nerehc…” Bloody tears leaked out of her eyes. “Please… save… me…”

“Sipa…” Nerehc put his finger under her chin and lifted her head up gently. He pressed his lips against hers. Sipa closed her eyes and allowed the embrace to transpire. The pain she was feeling in her soul felt weaker. The feeling she had lost when Nerehc went missing… she remembered what it was… the most beautiful feeling ever…

“What a horrible touching moment.” Malladus Uno’s thundering voice spoke as the Demon King’s torn-in-half spirit poked out of Nerehc’s back. “Why don’t I spare us all this display and heal her myself? I can bandage her soul, but the ‘good deed’ business will be up to her. It shouldn’t be as hard as curing my wife’s Candy Virus.”
"YOU!" Lucifer shouted. "Uncle... Malladus?!

"Oh, Lucifer!" Malladus looked up with a casual smile. "I almost forgot you were here. Now I told you not to sneak out of the house, didn’t I?"

"Don’t tell me... Is Father in there, too?!

"Oh, he’s asleep right now. I’m afraid you’ll have to talk to him another time."

"NOOOO! Father, COME OOOUUUT!" The Black Demon lunged at them. (Play “Vs. Malladus Part 2” from Zelda: Spirit Tracks.)

Nerehc slashed his blade lit with violet flames and blew Lucifer back. “Keep him busy while I treat this girl.” Malladus said, sprinkling Sipa with a dark energy from his hand. Nerehc nodded and faced Lucifer with determination.

Boss fight: Lucifer

The Demon Saint crawled up to Nerehc on arms and legs, and when the boy suspected him to attack, Lucifer rolled to Nerehc’s right and SWIPED his claw, scratching the human’s face and knocking him back. Lucifer coughed Dark Balls at the Malladus soul, but Nerehc batted them away with his sword. The Demon Saint flew overhead and coughed a rainbow of Dark Balls, which Nerehc bonked away with a vertical spin attack. Lucifer flew far away along the ground, circled around them, and coughed Dark Balls, but Nerehc stylishly batted each one away. Angered, Lucifer shot up at whipping speed and slashed his claw, but Nerehc ducked before stabbing Lucifer in the skull.

He pulled the sword out as Lucifer flapped away. He swung his wings and launched bladed black feathers, which Nerehc blocked. Lucifer spun vertically with his wings sticking up, flying at Nerehc to smash the boy to the ground with them. Bullet-speed, he zipped to the opposite side from Sipa, but Nerehc shot a jolt of lightning that pushed him back. Nerehc got to that side and rapidly swung his blade when Lucifer unleashed a storm of furious claw-swipes. When it stopped, Lucifer suddenly tornado-spun and whipped Nerehc away with his devil tail. The demon focused his sights on Sipa, but Nerehc kicked on his rockets and flew at him, pushing Lucifer away.

"Grrrr!" Lucifer grabbed Nerehc and smashed him to the ground, applying more pressure in the hopes of splattering him. Nerehc lit his sword on fire and cut the monster’s arms, scaring him off so Nerehc could stand. Nerehc got up and swung his flaming sword to send fire waves, which Lucifer blocked with his wings. The wings caught fire so Lucy could launch the feather spears with extra power. Nerehc spun his sword to block some, but he got scratched and scorched, and his weak moment allowed Lucifer to fly up and grab him in his claw. "I’ll bite off every last ounce of flesh until I see my father again!"

"Expelliarmus!" A spell blasted forth and sent the Demon Saint whirling away. Nerehc turned and gaped at the spell’s caster: “SIPA!”

His girlfriend wore a proud smile as she aimed her wand, black bandages around the severed parts of her body. “Didn’t take much time at all.” Malladus said coolly. “You should’ve seen Amy’s Candy Virus.”

“Nerehc, let’s kick this bastard out of here!”

“You got it!” The boy and girl stood side-by-side with their weapons ready. The Demon Saint spun around and released feather arrows in every direction, which rounded like missiles and closed in on the kids. “Protego!” Sipa projected a shield to protect them, while Nerehc whipped other feathers away with his sword. Lucifer landed, and with his wings in a straight horizontal position, Nerehc grabbed Sipa and flew skyward—the Demon Saint zipped across with bullet-speed, and would’ve skewered them with a successful attack had they not dodged. Nerehc spun like a drill and shot down to pierce Lucifer’s back.

Nerehc and Sipa landed on the ground and readied for Lucifer’s next attack. The Demon Saint stabbed his claws in the ground and sent a scratchy trail to his opponents. While it did nothing at first, a sudden energy shot out of the cracks and scratched them. Lucifer flew up, gripped both kids by the neck, and flipped upside-down as he hurled them back. When the Demon Saint flew at them again, whipping around to slice his devil tail across them, Sipa called, “SECTUMSEMPRA!”

A white slash whipped across the air and sliced Lucifer’s tail clean off. Nerehc seized this chance to fly up and chop off Lucifer’s right wing. With his left wing standing up, Lucifer took cover on a higher one next to the kids’. Feather arrows shot down to them from every direction, and they only had a few seconds to block them. Nerehc jumped up to view his enemy, but quickly ducked when Lucifer slashed his wing.

Nerehc looked at his girlfriend and nodded. He lifted her up so she could aim her wand in Lucifer’s direction and yell, “Reucto!” An explosion burst from the ground, so Nerehc grabbed his friend and flew up, hoping Lucifer was distracted by the blast. Suddenly, the Demon Saint zipped up above them and kicked them down, but Nerehc regained composure and set Sipa on the ground before flying up. Lucifer smirked and vanished in a blink, appearing below Nerehc and flying down to Sipa like a hawk. Sipa readied herself, but Nerehc merely warped in a Dark Portal beside his girlfriend. He thrusted his sword up and stabbed Lucifer’s skull. (End song.)

Lucifer stopped completely, and the kids’ hearts raced with anticipation. The demonic skull slowly cracked... it would crumble any second. “…Heh heh heh. Killing me... is something that could only happen in dreams.”

The kids gasped when the skull broke, and the demon’s dark soul began to ascend. “Oh, well. Perhaps I’ll find a different wife. I know we’ll meet again soon. After all, Sipa still has my soul in her. It is with that soul that she can command a Devil’s Wand. So she will be grateful. …Prince Nerehc…” The boy narrowed his eyes at his own name. “Medusa has already interacted with the Darknesses in the past. According to her, they come from the Original Worlds. I do not know what she wants your people to do... but I look forward to watching.”

DNK Moonbase

“Uuuuhhh…” Sipa moaned awake with a sickening feeling in her head. “Hehee... I guess I need to visit... the Soul Doctor, huh, Nerehc?” She grinned weakly and picked up the Nerehc doll on her chest. “...Nerehe?” She shook the doll lightly. “Nerehc, are you in there?”

“No. I’m over here.” The Negatives directed their attention at the human boy. He had yellow eyes behind his sunglasses once again. “I guess Ragus switched me back after all?”

“Nah, Medusa ditched your body and left with her.” Hcaz explained. “You fell like an old rag doll.”

“She didn’t even wait to see if I would save her? That sucks.”

“To be fair, it was a -10% chance that you would.” Arorua figured.
“Hey, I’m the Negative Fi here.” Ghirahim remarked.

“So do we just wait around and wait for Medusa to give us instructions?” Atnort asked.

“That’s the best I can think of. Wait, whaddo you mean ‘we’?” Nerehc cocked his brow at the alien.

“Look, we were a little skeptical at first,” Beewv said, “…but you’re kinda starting to sell us with this Apocalypse business.”

“And we figure we don’t wanna be wiped off the plane of existence…” Avakam followed.

“Plus, we’re surrounded by a bunch of people who like you anyway, so…” Atnort shrugged.

“We will consider ourselves your allies.” Annaira sighed. “But I want the right to bloodbend someone every few hours!” The operatives glared at her. “…Once every day.”

“So is Lucifer gone?” Asia asked.

“For now, it looks like. Hey, do any of you guys know what an Original World is?”

“Hey, look out there!” Ynohtna pointed at the glass wall.

The moon was glowing a mystic white. A small light rose out of its surface and floated close to the window. A beautiful, majestic white bird, with wings and a head shaped like crescent moons, materialized. “Oh, look! She received my call!” Ininap beamed.

“It’s the Moon Goddess, Cresselia!” Ikuyim gaped.

“Sorry I’m late, Dialga and Palkia were arguing over trading cards… Did you children need something?” The crescent bird asked.

Nerehc gasped with realization. “Actually… you CAN tell us a few things!”

So I finally began my job working for Kroger. That means I’ll have less time to update. With that in mind, enjoy every chapter I post from now on. Cresselia is from Pokémon and Nel is from Bleach. Little fun fact, Terry was my grandpa’s name, but the Terry in this story is from somewhere else. Total coincidence. XP Next time, we’ll finish Wendy’s mini-arc, and the Darkness Seeker Arc will be reaching its conclusion shortly. Later.
One Day This Month

Chapter Summary

Cheren’s friends try to help him feel better.

I love character development. X) But yeah, there’s no real action in this chapter, but we will introduce a few story arcs. This is really to give the readers, and myself, a breather.

Chapter 18: One Day This Month

New GKND H.Q.

Noontime at GKND H.Q., assuming space had a time. The alien operatives were enjoying their lunch break, with Makava, Tronta, and Arianna sharing a table. Makava slurped a bowl of squid pudding, Ari had some lovely Floran Carrots, and Tronta had some lime-jelly and toast. “So where d’you think S’prime Leader w’nt off to?” Tronta asked through chews.

“To meet Cheren, I would think.” Arianna replied. “He’s the only one who knew about this ‘Apocalypse.’”

“She has to let ‘im have it, eventually, after keeping it a secret.” Makava figured.

“We gonna be seein’ a shrunken Cheren serving her again?” Tron snickered.

“I hope, ‘cause my mom really liked it when-”

“What up, Fellaaaaaas?” exclaimed the excited tiny alien, Vweeb as he leaped onto their table.

“HEEEEEY, VWEEEEEB.” They waved half-ecstatically.

“What up, Fellaaaaaas?” exclaimed the excited tiny alien, Vweeb as he leaped onto their table.

“HEEEEEEY, VWEEEEEB.” They waved half-ecstatically.

“Wazzat?? You wonderin’ wah Ah look so DIFFEREEEEENT? Well, CHECK IT!” He flexed his right arm. “Vweeby’s been BULGIN’ muscles!”

“Awwwwww!” Makava cooed. “It’s so TEENY and squeezabllllle!”

“Oh, ha ha. But the fact is, this teeny Kateeny’s been workin’ out and the results are noticeable. Or could I not do THIS!” He leaped to the edge of Arianna’s seat, what little room there was, and squeezed his way under her rear.

“Oh! V-Vweeb…” Her purple cheeks flushed red. This was feeling awfully awkward…

But just then, Arianna was lifted an inch over her seat, for Vweeb held her up with both hands as he leaped to the floor. “WHADDYA MAKE OF THAT?!”

“Ooooooohh!” The watching kids gaped in astonishment as applause rang.

“Great goin’, Vweeb!” Makava cheered.
“Little shrimp’s been hittin’ the weights!” a blue cat alien said.

Arianna remained curled and with an awkward expression as Vweeb kept her raised. “And check THIS!”

“Waaa-a-a-a-a-ah-h-h!” Arianna grew dizzy as Vweeb twirled her like a basketball.

“’Round and ’round she goes, when she stops, when I get bored!” And just like that, he stopped her and tossed her high directly above. He leaped, grabbed her right heel with one hand, and flipped her in a loop before setting her down on both feet. “Voila!” The lunchroom erupted with applause. “Wait until Anthony’s big feet get a LOAD of these, and that goes DOUBLE for Kimaya’s bum! Pretty soon, my mom won’t be scolding little Vweeby ever again!” He then leaped onto Ari’s shoulder and told her quietly with a smooth smirk, “Sorry to throw ya around, but keep it between us, I c’n only lift up light weights.”

“Uh… okay.”

He then leaped back to his table, “SO WHO WANTS A PIECE O’ THE VWEEBY, BRING IT ON AND I’LL CRUSH ALL YOU BIGHEADS!”

After lunch, Tron was casually walking down the hall with hands in his pockets. Vweeb and Makava went to go ask Jerome for missions, so he was wandering around, looking for something to do. He looked as Arianna hurried up to him, panting. “Hey, Tronta!”

“Huh?”

“Ummm, huff, huff… Would you help me train?”

“…”

Gym Room

Both siblings were later in the training room, barefoot and fists raised. “Just keep an eye on your opponent and don’t let down your guard.” Tron explained. “Basic fighting techniques. You learn as you go. Ready?”

“Mm…” She gave a very light nod.

“’kay… let’s go!” Tron began jabbing his fists as Arianna dodged, but quickly took some punches to the abs. “Come on, gotta move quicker.”

“O-Okay.” Arianna side-stepped to avoid and threw punches back, but slow and soft, easy for Tron to block as he crouched, spun, and kicked Arianna off her feet.

“You have to be quicker than THAT.” Tron said, still eager to fight.

She got up shakily, “Mm- I’m trying.” She still hesitated to dodge as she took quick jabs to her chest, and Tron soon kept her from raising her arms. “AAAAUGH!” With more spirit and fierceness, she flew her fist at Tron’s nose and pushed him back. She looked nervously as Tron regained himself and rubbed his nose. …He wasn’t bleeding. But Ari, on the other hand, felt an odd feeling course through her knuckles. “…Oooooowww!”

“Alright, enough with fists. Try with kicks.” He approached her again and began jabbing kicks at her stomach, Arianna too slow to raise her legs to block those kicks.
“MMM!” Finally, Arianna threw a forceful kick at his stomach, but barely backed him far at all.

“Your feet feel like they can’t even squish a water bug.” He threw a forceful kick and-“GAAAAAH!” Knocked her on her back.

“I can crush a Stone Buzzy. …Would recommend wearing shoes first.”

Arianna stood up, her face swamped with hopelessness, “Oh, what’s the point?! I could never fight to save my life, let alone be any stronger than a plant.” She turned away.

Tron lowered his guard and walked closer. “What’s wrong, Arianna? Why do you wanna fight so bad all of a sudden?”

“It’s…It’s Vweeb.” She turned back. “He’s improved so much… so much that… he doesn’t need me anymore. Back then…”

“My name’s Vweeb!!” exclaimed the bite-size alien to all the kids on the playground. “I may be small, but I’m gonna stomp every ONE of ya!!”

“Ahhhh! Hey-hey, lemme go!” Shortly after, he was snatched by a blue cat alien and scratched against his backside with his teeth, while other kids watched and laughed.

“Sorry, Shrimp, but my claws feel a little dull today, you’ll have to do.”

“Hey, leave him alone!” Arianna yelled, stomping toward him.

“Or what, Purply? You’ll shoot your deathglare? Well, take him!”

“Aaaaahhh!” He tossed Vweeb several meters over her head.

“Vweeb!” She ran to catch him.

On one of their regular visits to Earth, Vweeb’s head was drenched in snot from Anthony’s nose. “I tell ya, Vweeb, I’m glad you drop by ‘cause no one gets them boogers out like you.”

“Leave him ALONE, Anthony!” Arianna snatched him away, glaring hatefully.

“Awww wook at Vweeby’s girlfriend coming to save hiieeeem.”

With a light blush, Arianna summoned a swarm of hornets from a nearby hive to teach Anthony a lesson. “W-W-Wait, I-I was just kidding, I- GYAAAAAAHHH!” He was then running for his life.

“Phew… thank you, Arianna.”

“It’s always my pleasure, Vweeb.” She smiled warmly.

“Grrrrrrr, rrrrrrr!” Vweeb was trapped under Kimaya’s finger, much too small and weak to push it off.

“Awwwww come on, Little Dude, i’s just one itty-bitty finger, you ain’t gonna let it smoosh ya, are ya?” She smirked witfully.

“Nnnnnn in your dreams, Bobble Head!”

Arianna wore a look of worry when she found them. “Vweeb! Do you need some help?”
“Nah, ‘t’s okay, Arianna, I just need another minute or two to show this brat what for. THIS ALL you can do, Kimaya, my MOM stomps harder!” He smirked with great enthusiasm.

“Yo’ mom ain’t got jip over my ma, and if she ain’t never move, I stayin’ put.”

“Your mom ain’t got the brains to KNOW how ta move, so GIMME your best!” Arianna simply walked away, surprised at Vweeb’s sudden increase in attitude.

Weeks later, she was watching Vweeb and Minksman train with Makava and Liaziana. The yellow-skinned Glomourian had Vweeb pinned under her foot, but he pushed her straight off with his own strength. And that was shortly after Vweeb told Ari what he did.

“I was wondering… if… you and I could do something together. Just the two of us. Like… a restaurant.” Arianna became more red with each word.

“Heheh, I know what you’re trying to say. And… to tell the truth, I kinda felt the same way.”

“Hehe…”

“But… the thing is… I might’ve only felt that way because you were pretty. No offense, but… you’re kind of weak-willed.”

“Oh?…” She frowned.

“I mean, I still like you the way you are, just… as a friend. But, I think, my ideal girl is… someone with more tenacity. You know?”

“Well… I can see why you’d like a girl like that. But… who did you have in mind?”

“Oh, no one in particular. But, see you at Wisp!” And he went to hop on Nebula’s shoulder.

That was just it, wasn’t it. Vweeb changed so much… and she, so little. Just like that, he seemed to grow hundreds of times his size… and she remained small and feeble. It felt so long since she saw Vweeb held against his will. While Ari was under the control of a goddess of plants. She couldn’t defend herself then… but Vweeb supported himself just fine. While he became strong and sturdy like the little caterpillar to a butterfly, enduring the hardships of it all, she remained the little flower, trapped to the ground and watching everything happen, while she could only move as the wind blew her. …She hadn’t the strength to move far at all.

“The truth is… I’ve always admired Vweeb for his courage. He was so small and… so weak… but he always acted so strong. In a way… I saw myself in him. I loved him… for his fighting spirit. And the truth is… I thought he would love me, too. Because both of us were so weak in different ways. That’s why I thought… he would never get any stronger than he was then.”

Tron’s eyes widened in surprise.

“At his size, he looked far weaker than I am. When we first met… it was nice to know someone else had a lack in strength. And I thought he would see it that way, too… and we would be together because we had that in common. But… he got so much stronger. In what feels so short a time. His size doesn’t seem relevant to his fighting skill anymore. He’s gotten so strong that…that I’m the weak one. Even in his eyes. And it made him realize…” her eyes began to bawl, “that he deserves better than me! That I’m just not strong enough to be next to him! That I…” She buried her eyes in her hands, “Why am I so weak?!” The sobs that followed were painful for her brother to hear.

“Hey hey, don’t feel that way, Arianna.” He took her hands and tried to move them away. “Why do you care what Vweeb thinks, anyway? You should like you for you, be happy you have what you have.”

“But I just can’t. Sniff. It isn’t just about Vweeb, it’s everyone. Nebula commanding the Nexus, the way Cheren took down Viridi… everyone’s getting so much stronger, and I… sniff.” She wiped some tears, “I’m still the same Arianna. Even you modified those discs of yours.”

“Sigh…” Tron put a hand on her shoulder. “I dunno what to tell you, Ari. But maybe being insanely powerful… just isn’t meant for some people. And if everyone had a strong upper-body, this whole universe would be a lame Kung-Fu movie. Vweeb just had the fighter inside him, aside from his snotty Kateenian attitude, he was half-Glomourian, and Arceus knows they only eat the manliest grub out there. But we’re… hmm… well, I guess I don’t know much about Pumparian or Harhitan culture. Or what the exact difference is between us. Just don’t worry about matching up with Vweeb’s level and work on what you can do. Talking to animals and stuff. And um, Vweeb also challenged me to a few rounds in the Flight Simulator, like now, so… You gonna be okay?”

“Mm-hm.” She nodded.

“Great!” Patted her back (she stumbled forward then). “Later!” And he ran off eagerly.

Arianna wiped the last of her tears and stood there for a few minutes. “I…I will.” A new passion suddenly burned in her eyes, “I won’t rest until Vweeb respects me again!!”

Hangar

“Hey Numbuh 250 Trillion, there’s a ship requesting permission to land.” A glowing green fishlike alien with an angler’s antenna called. “Says they’re Sector IC of Planet Earth.”

“Granted.” Jerome approved.

skied onto the gray metal floor and froze a trail, tripping all aliens that used legs. A big pink slug alien came by and mocked, “Ha ha hah,” before slithering over the ice and freezing on contact.
“Uh-oh.”

“SOMEBODY catch that girl.” Jerome called, floating to land before the five operatives. “Sector IC, welcome to our headquarters. We did not receive an announcement you would be coming, nor that you were… bringing a friend.”

“Wheeeeee!” Some Wisps were chasing Suki, who was skiing across the wall.

“I don’t wanna stay too long, something weird is happening on Earth, I think it has to do with Cheren.” Miyuki told them.

“I thought something was happening.” Jerome said. “Just a few hours ago, I suddenly remembered him again.”

“Come to think of it, me too.” Terry replied, rubbing his head. “And like, I didn’t remember him before.”

“That isn’t why we came here to begin with.” George said. “One of our operatives was kidnapped; where’s your sister?”

“Numbuh Eternal was called home by our mother some time ago, she promised to return as soon as possible. Let us adjourn to the mess hall while you explain your dilemma, you must be weary from “Hell yeah, we are.” Lola agreed as the five followed him. “Ah’ll take anything what you aliens pass for grub.”

“We appease to the planetary opinion. But please, bring a crate if you can’t control her.”

“Come and GET meeeeee!” Suki swiftly dodged between two Wisps, who consequently crashed into each other.

Sector W7 Treehouse

It was probably an overstatement to say Sector W7 was worried about the Apocalypse. Well, they weren’t. Ever since hearing about it, they were all kind of laid back like they always were. It’s not like they knew anything about Seven Lights or Darknesses. They would just wait for something to happen.

The five girls and rabbit were one member short, but April Goldenweek showed up through the balcony door, just when Chimney brought up a query. “’ey, any of you girls just think about Cheren-chan outta nowhere?”

“Kind of. This morning, I had the weird feeling we were a leaderless Kids Next Door, but I got in for some reason.” Mocha rubbed her head. “But it was Cheren that approved me, right?”

“Well, let’s go down and meet her!” Aeincha beamed, braiding Chimney’s hair at the time. “It’ll be great to have a new friend!”
“Aye, it would! ‘Long as she ain’t crazy like you on’nanokos.” Chimney said. (“Gyom, gyom.”)

Blue Station

The Puffing Tom was returning to the station, the children of Sector W7 waiting eagerly. When it came to a screeching halt, the doors opened and passengers stepped out. April looked around for her expected guest, but wasn’t immediately visible among the crowds. When almost everyone had cleared away, she was there in the doorway before them: a beautiful girl of about nine, golden unkempt hair and pretty blue eyes. She wore a long dark-green dress that ended below her knees, a white collar and blue neckerchief on its middle. She wore green slip-on school shoes and long black socks, and held a suitcase in her hands that were folded on her lap.

She smiled casually and walked forward, stopping a few feet before April. She was a few inches taller than Chimney, Aisa, or Apis, but shorter than April. She and April stared at each other, a smile and frown respectively, until the latter spoke, “Hello, Mary.”

“Cousin April—!” Mary threw her arms open to hug, dropping the suitcase on her toes. “OW!”

“Deeeeh.” The seven friends stared and sweatdropped.

Mary was sitting on the ground, weeping and rubbing her shoes. “Ow ow ow. I just finished coloring my nails, now they’re gonna be ruined.”

“Hhmhm.” April smiled, holding a hand down to her. “You haven’t changed, Mary.”

Mary beamed, springing up to embrace her cousin, who hugged back. “April, I missed you so much! I thought I would never see you again, why did you leave, I thought you would stay with me forever!!”

“Mary, you’re overreacting.” April would blush if her cheeks weren’t already in that position. “My family had to move, so it’s been a real difficult time scheduling a visit. I’m glad you finally came, though, I wanna show you to my friends.”

“Ohhh!” Mary looked around April, finally seeing the five other girls and rabbit. “So these are the ‘friends’ you wrote me about! Hi, April’s friends, I’m Mary, and April’s my cousin!” She squeezed April tighter, earning weird looks from them.

“Heheh, we were informed.” Aisa grinned.

“I’m Maaaaary, she’s Aaaaapril, we’re cousins, but we’re kinda like sisters!”

“Yeah, ‘cause April’s a month, and it’s before May, which your name kinda sounds like.” Apis noticed.

“I’m Mary, she’s April, we’re sister-cousins, and we love to color!”

“April, you sure this girl ain’t spend the last couple years in Loony Asylum?” questioned Chimney. (“Gyom gyom.” agreed Gonbe.)

Mary perked, looking at Chimney. “WOW!” She zipped over, poking the standing pigtails. “Your hair is yellow, just like mine!” she tugged her hair. “My name is Goldenweek, too. I like yellow, but I really like blue, it’s very pretty, like the sea. Do you guys live by the sea all the time?”

“Yes, pretty much.” Aeinchcha replied. “You should try crossing it on a little boat.”
Mary just now noticed the tiny on Apis’s head. She gasped, “A dolly!” and she grabbed Aeincha and hugged her to her cheek. “Oh, I love dolls! I have lots of dolls, we should play dolls sometime.”

“I’m not a doll, I’m a Lilliputian!!” Aeincha shook.

“Wow, you talk! My dolls talk, too. I talk with them all the time. I love your blue coat, I love blue things.” She looked at Apis. “Your dress is yellow! Like my hair, only darker. And those are weird circles.”

“Hehe, it’s the fashion.” Apis grinned. “Hey Mary, have you ever read the Bible?” She presented said book.

“Oh, Apis, don’t get someone hooked on-” Chimney began.

“I’ve seen this book in a museum!” Mary took the book and flipped pages. “There were also pretty paintings about God and Jesus. Jesus’s mother’s name was Mary. My name is Mary!”

“I know, it’s a pretty name!” Apis replied.

“That was sad when Jesus died for our sins. Why did He do that?”

“So that we could be forgiven for our sins.”

“But His friends will never see Him again, why would He do that?”

“That isn’t true.” Apis smiled. “Jesus exists in all our hearts, and when we die, we’ll get to be with Him again as angels in Heaven.”

“'Course in my case, I’m an angel on Earth.” Aisa joked.

Mary stared at her next. “Wow… you have beautiful…” Aisa turned to give Mary a better view of her angel wings, but the girl’s eyes directed down, “feet!”

“BLEEEH!” Chimney mimicked barfing.

“Why, thank you!” Aisa beamed. “I’m trying to spread the faction of barefoot pride, and I think it’s working.”

“Do you wanna see my feet? I paint my nails and they’re pretty! I can paint your nails, too.”

“I would love that!”

Chimney inched up to April, scowling, “April-chan, your cousin is acting way too clingy to us. She loves all the things that’s wrong with these on’nanokos.”

“Except for your big mouth.” April noticed.

Mary’s gaze then flew up to Mocha. “Whooooaa!” She stood directly under Mocha’s face, her own head tilted back 90 degrees. “You’re really big! I bet your boogers are the size of boulders!”

“I get that.” Mocha sweatdropped. “Although that is an idea.”

“Here’s an idea! You can make wax sculptures with your boogers! You would have plenty to use.”

“I don’t know.”
Last but not least, she looked at Gonbe. “Oooohhh! This rabbit is blue!” (“Gyom gyom?”) Mary came over to pick him up. “I love blue things! Did you all know that?”

“YES.” they chorused.

“Mary, do you want to see our treehouse?” April asked. “I’ll show you all the paintings I created.”

“I made paintings, too! Crayon paintings. A lot of them are at my home, though.”

“We’ll visit your place sometime, too. Come, we’ll lead you.” April began the walk back.

“Mary, I’ll let you ride on my head if you want.” Mocha offered, placing her hands palms-up on the ground.

“April, do you want to ride with me?” Mary beamed.

“Um… okay.” Figuring she’ll do with a rest of her legs, she stepped on and let Mocha put them on her bushy hair.

“And Dolly, you can ride on me!” Mary put Aeincha on her own messy golden hair. “Now it’s like I’m giant, but I’m really normal size, except on this girl’s head, it’s like we’re the tiny dolls.”

“Um, thank you. But I’m not a doll, just to clarify that.” Aein reasoned, the group swaying on Mocha’s head while she walked.

“How long are you staying, Mary?” Mocha asked.

“Only a few days, but I hope I stay forever, and we can all be friends forever!”

“Take it from me, ‘forever’ with these girls is a long time.” Chimney sighed. (“Gyoooom gyom.”)

Uno Household

“AAAAAAHHH! Whooooaaa MAN!” Sheila screamed with utmost shock; the only one of her frozen-faced friends kind enough to point it out.

Chris stood with disbelief and annoyance, his forehead exposed for all. “Is it really so unnatural?”

“Like holy fuck, Man, you’re a combustionbender and you never told us?” Dillon asked. “D’you know how many times that coulda been useful?”

“My dad said it was dangerous, and it kind of is. If I was hit in the head…”

“Still, dude. If Maddy thought you were a freak before…” Mason said.

“I’m going to show her too, but it ain’t gonna look good in public. ‘Oh hey, I have a flammable eyeball on my forehead, stay clear o’ me.’ My headband has a chi-blocker in it so I don’t use it accidentally.”

Melody and Danny walked out of the kitchen eating sea-cucumbers; as they were coming behind Chris, Artie jumped to cup his hands over his forehead, “No-Chris-doesn’t-have-a-combustion-eye, what’re-you-talking-about?”

“It’s okay, I knew about it a long time ago.” Melody said, sitting on the couch.

“YOU DID??” all but Chris screamed, even Danny.
“When I was five, but Mom ordered me not to tell anyone. She said some things are better left unreported. ‘You can tell people about Chris’s Rainbow Monkey underwear, but not something that will make him a social pariah.’”

“Chris wears what now??” Aurora perked.

“No, Cheren does. Sigh, but I guess it’s not funny anymore.” Melody lied down and flipped the TV on.

Very little activity went on here; all of the guests were in negative moods, especially Sector V, who were upset for Cheren and his siblings. Panini and Francis later arrived after their mother told them the news, and the Uno kids told them about Cheren and the Toy Curse. Panini felt terrible for her friend, so she went upstairs to do what she could. Grim and Rachel were talking a few feet from his room. “…De Octogan isn’t mentioned in very many texts, if any at all. Only Clockwork knew about it, but he was afraid to think or speak of it, because he could barely see it even with his power. He confided in me to see if I could sense death befalling because of it. It’s baffled me as well. Even Dialga is afraid when I bring it up.”

“But this Octogan isn’t what happened to Cheren at all.” Rachel realized. “It was that girl’s weird power. Nigel…Nigel thought differently and went up there to fight it. He…He risked his life for nothing.”

“But truthfully, I know now the Octogan exists because of his sacrifice. The Reapers keep track of everyone’s death and the events that led to it. I, of course, stole and burned all the kids’ records, but Nigel’s record left very large chunks missing. One of the Octogan’s many special powers is to hide itself from history.”

“But if the World Government has such a thing, how can anyone beat them??”

“I don’t know. Anyway… I went halfway up Mariejoa to find de Sacred Casket Cheren dropped.” He snapped his fingers and made his Trunk appear, reaching in to pull out the larger casket. “I was afraid to go to the top because of that Octogan… but to recover Nigel’s body, I’ll try.”

“Thank you, Grim.” The reaper turned to go downstairs. Rachel looked at Panini as she followed. “He’s in his room.”

Cheren still lay there, sobbing. There were plenty of hours left in the day, the gray clouds were making room for sunlight, but he had no reason to look or get up. “Um… Chereeen?” sang a familiar Irish voice from his doorway. “It’s Nini! But, um, Ay guess yer use to me by now.” She spoke with a quiet, but spirited tone.

Cheren didn’t look up.

“Um, Ay’m not sure what ta say ta get yer blood pumped—after hearin’ news like that, Ay’m not sure Ay would like to get up either. But it doesn’t hurt ta try, ya know. So why don’t we get our DS’s and rack up those Pokémon points! A’iiight?”

“No. It doesn’t matter, Panini, don’t you get it, NONE of it matters! Our silly rivalries, playing videogames, doing ANYTHING, none of it will protect us from the Apocalypse and nothing will help us STOP it. I kept saying, OVER and over, we were gonna stop it!, but I was lying to myself, we’re all just too weak, and we’ll never get stronger in time to even have a CHANCE at stopping it. We were all just simple fools, WASTING our time, even if I announced the Apocalypse on the day of our births, we STILL wouldn’t be strong enough to stop it! There’s just not enough time, Panini… there couldn’t be. There was never anything we can do…”
“Yah, but… when ye think about it, Dimentia was hours from destroying the universe before yer dad suspected, but he still won in the end. Then Malladus showed up outta nowhere, the Brotherhood almost froze everybody… but our parents had tons of friends, they beat the Brotherhood, they beat Gnaa and Arceus… ya went Fierce Deity and wasted Majora and Viridi. Yer bein’ too hard on yerself, Cheren, you have your power, and people like Sheila, Nebula, or Yours Truly, on yer side. Pit the three of us against Aunt Morgan, we’ll wipe the floor with her.”

“But Dad had experience. I heard what they were saying about that ‘Octogan’… there’s no way we can beat something like that. I’d rather not waste all of our lives trying to fight it. It’s pointless. Plus, they had a problem with me mentioning the Apocalypse. They don’t want us to find the Keys, I bet. They’ll try to stop us from doing it, and I bet they’ll win. Just forget about it.”

Panini sighed. If she knew Cheren… he made up his mind when he did. She turned and was about to close the door, but first spoke. “Remember all those kids that lined up to get yer autograph? My mom’s always sayin’ our Kids Next Door’s different from hers. But we never forgot what we were really about: defending kids everywhere from adult tyranny. …It’s only lately we learned what real adult tyranny is, huh?” Then she left.

Cheren closed his eyes. Wanting to sleep, wanting to drown in eternal silence. Panini didn’t understand… they really didn’t have the strength or knowledge to pull through, not with Grim reviving them over and over again. He didn’t understand if he was already dead, if the Apocalypse came 10 times already and Grim was restarting them, to try and fail, over and over, to learn new skills and stop it. Cheren’s goals were fruitless, Zanifr was laughing at him now, laughing at the utter true fact he was right. If Cheren could start that laughbox up again in Zanifr’s toneless voice, at least he woulda done something.

A familiar, otherworldly jingle sounded. His room darkened as Fi floated in his room. “Master Cheren: I regret to inform you that your image in my memory banks was foggy for a small time. After Master Rachel and Grim informed me of the dilemma, I sincerely apologize for not being there to aid you.”

“Don’ worry, Fi… I don’t need anymore help.”

“After observing your current emotional state, I calculate you in 97% need of comfort. Recommended actions are speaking of your emotional troubles with friends or family, holding someone’s hand for an indefinite time period, or perhaps less morally acceptable, the promise that the ones who caused your sadness are deceased, or asking a timebender to see into the future to confirm what fate lies for you.”

“I think all I need is to be alone for now. I’ll work on my emotional state on my own.”

“If that is your request, Master, I highly recommend you take Panini’s words into your memory. I await the time you draw your sword again.” She vanished.

G.U.N. H.Q.

Sugar sat by herself in a small, ventilated cell, her hands still concealed inside huge cuffs. She no longer desired the nourishing flavor of grapes on her tongue. She had had enough. She looked up when the cell door opened and a GUN agent walked in. “We apologize for our measures, but considering the crimes you took part in, we can’t take chances. As evidenced by numerous missing soldiers over the years, and our responses from the Doflamingo Inc. employees, we are given to understand you are a metahuman with the ability to, not only turn people into toys, but erase the memories of all who knew your victims.”
“Yep.” Sugar replied simply.

“Were you doing this under your own free will or based on Doflamingo, aka your father’s orders?”

“Orders. Sometimes free will.”

“Is this power initiated upon contact of your hands to the victim?”

“I touch them and turn ‘em, yep.”

“Is it only your hands or are there other ways to transform them?”

“Nope, just my hands.”

“Can your power affect inanimate objects?”

“If it could, I’d be out of these cuffs. Except as per the Devil Fruit, clothes they’re wearing can be transformed.”

“So primarily living creatures?”

“Yep.”

“Do you automatically transform them on touch or can you choose not to?”

“Anyone I touch immediately transforms, no control.”

“But you can choose to change them back, or if you’re knocked unconscious.”

“No, only unconscious. Since the toys become inanimate objects, I couldn’t affect them again.”

“If we were to release you, would you continue to transform people?”

“Unless I had these cuffs on all the time, I probly would. Unless I go my whole life without touching anyone.”

The soldier scribbled the answers on a notepad. “Since you’re only a child, the commander would like me to ask… what course of action would you recommend for yourself?”

“Cut off my hands.”

“Excuse me?”

“If you cut off my hands and replace them with prosthetic ones, I could go without transforming people. Better than wearing these heavy cuffs or staying in a cell forever.”

“…I’ll… speak to the commander.” He closed her cell and returned to the commander, informing him of the responses.

“Cut off her hands?” Gunkan said, baffled. “That’s insane! She’s only a child…”

“But our Metahuman Antidote hasn’t been shown to work on Caesar’s Devil Fruits, and it might take years of research until we find a way. Not that I’m for the idea, but we can easily give her prosthetic hands with our technology.”

“Sigh.” Gunkan pinched his nasal bridge. “Amputating a child. The whole idea is… barbaric.”
“Her power is dangerous, regardless. Of course, we could keep her here, but…”

Which would ruin a childhood more, Gunkan thought. Being locked in a military prison for who-knows-how-long, or being robbed of their hands for artificial ones. She may be branded a freak… but Gunkan himself was long beyond that ideology. And Sugar’s powers, the power to wipe people from memory, could drastically affect anyone. She wondered why Sugar herself suggested this, unless she wanted to be rid of her powers, live a normal life regardless of a minor handicap. “…Very well then. If she’s truly sure of herself, we’ll cut off her hands.”

Midway Peak

Morgan Uno stood in the dark of her office. Her back was facing him. She couldn’t bear to look at him right now. “You’re awfully distracted, it seems.”

“He was still my cousin, you know. My family. You didn’t have to…”

“I regret it, too.” The King walked in slowly, his armor clanking. “I never would have. But he attacked us. I had no choice. It was for his son that he did so, it did not feel just to take his memories.” He touched Morgan’s shoulder. “I know you will forgive me. You admitted that, for our cause, the less annoyances, the better.”

“…You’re right.” Morgan bowed her head. “But I went too far with my nephew last night. I forgot that they… just don’t understand. The world is doomed, and a bunch of children don’t have the brains to stop it. …We’re the only hope this world has.”

“Yes. But you will be able to see your cousin again. At the end of this month, all of our souls will be lifted to someplace better. We will erase the atrocities caused by the Fusion and live happily with our loved ones. You will also have everything you desired, Morgan. For all you have done for us, you will earn the respect and admiration you deserve.”

“…”

“You do not still have mixed feelings for harming the Kids Next Door, your old friends’ legacy, do you?”

She shook her head, “No. I’m still upset about Doflamingo. It only shows that they’ve gone too far.”

“Indeed they have. I regret what they are now, too… and I never wished to make them enemies. This is a matter of justice and righteousness, however. We will make the world right again.” His cape fluttered as he turned and walked out the door. “Forgive my incursion as well. I felt liable to tell you. I knew him better than you did. The pain is wholly my own.”

Dressrosa; Sugar’s room

Team Rupert remained in the deserted room with no real idea where to go. When the soldiers barged in and shocked Sugar, the Music Pikmin were scared off of her, so they were back in Team Rupert’s possession. “It’ll take us years to get home.” Timmy sighed hopelessly.

“I don’t even remember why we came with those Minish.” Rupert said. “I wish we could ask them.”

“Why don’t we use our communicators!” Hikari held the wooden device up. “Hellooooo? Mr. Chipmuuuununk? Where are you guuuuuys?”
“Hikari, those things are wood, they won’t-” Rupert began.

“Hello? Is this the humans?” Cone’s voice responded.

“You forget that these’re Kids Next Door!” Timmy retorted.

“Hello?” Rupert called into it. “Hey, we’re in some kinda toy room. Can you come get us?”

“Gonna need clearer instructions, man.”

Within the next half hour, thankfully, the Minish found their way back to where they split up, followed the route Team Rupert took, and found them in the toy room. “Coulda took longer.” Acro said. “Boy, this mission could NOT have worked better. All of the guards got scrambled when the toys suddenly turned into humans or animals, next thing we know, a firebender and poisonbender human broke into the factory we were gonna investigate and totally wrecked the place! I wonder if Hundred Acres will still reward us for this?”

“He oughta. The toys only turned back ‘cause we choked that girl earlier.” Rupert replied sheepishly. “It was sort of an accident, but it happened. Ah ha hah.”

“Say what now?” Acro asked. Team Rupert proceeded to explain the ordeal.

“Then THAT’S where all the living toys came from.” Pine realized. “Then this totally busted Doflamingo’s company; his kids LOVED to capture Minish and abuse them.”

“We sure are glad we brought you along.” Acro said. “For humans, you sound like you really know your Pikmin antenna-to-toe. …You wouldn’t make bad operatives.”

“I was kinda thinkin’ of joinin’ the Kids Next Door,” Timmy replied, “but my dad always said-”

“Well, I mean the Minish Kids Next Door. Not gonna lie, we never considered having humans join, but that’s ‘cause they’re too big for any Minish traditions. …But since you guys, aren’t, big… Like, you could alternate sizes with some Minish Dust we’d give you, just come on down when… y-you don’t have to, it’d be too complicated, saying it out loud.”

“Nah, I already get picked on by big kids, it’s just worse when they’re bigger.” Timmy said.

“And I want my Jessie to be able to HUG me without squeezing me to death.” Hikari proclaimed dreamily.

“…” Timmy saw Rupert’s thoughtful face and suspected his answer. “Well, it wouldn’t be bad to go through training.”

“Rupert, I just wanna go back to normal size and go HOME.” Timmy whined.

“But come on, guys, think about it. We totally took out that girl, even if we almost died. I bet with some decent training, we could beat up other big kids, too! Not just with Pikmin, but when we’re normal size, this could really help us. You guys could help Jessie beat Shelly, and totally whale on her! Right?”

“Siiiigh.” Timmy was stumped this time. He really did want to help Jessie out, teach the big kids a lesson. He certainly wouldn’t fight them at this teeny size, but the general evasive and planning measures were… “Well, I guess we’ll try it.”

“Me too! For Jessie, I will!” cheered Hikari.
“Then it’s settled!” Rupert beamed excitedly. “Sign us up for MCND Training!”

GKND H.Q.

“Sooo to recap:” Jerome spoke, eating toast with an alien butter none of the humans wanted to ask about. “One of your operatives, Maddy Murphy was kidnapped by a ‘Dr. Nefarious’ for undisclosed reasons, but on your way to get our assistance, you got sidetracked to Planet Glacia where you helped a crying ghost princess unfreeze her sister and end a blizzard. Also that Suki has dyslexia as she read a magic glowing rock. Well, minor details aside, the GKND hasn’t detected any unidentified vessels. There is a chance Maddy’s kidnappers have gone to another galaxy. We will work our hardest to track her down and I will inform Nebula when she returns, but we have been terribly busy with other matters, so we cannot guarantee an early rescue.”

“May I have everyone’s attention, please.” Everyone jumped to attention when the Supreme Leader herself appeared on all screens. “This is Numbuh Eternal with breaking news. I have received a call from my mother, who is now on a visit to Earth: Nigel Uno, Numbuh One, the legendary Earth operative of the original GKND… has passed away today.”

There were quiet murmurs from everyone, but Sector IC, Miyuki especially, were awestruck. “I have not received all the details, but he was slain by the leaders of that world. Cheren Uno, Earth KND’s current leader and a member of my council, is in deep grief for his loss. Let us all share a moment of silence and remember Numbuh One’s accomplishments, for kidkind and for our universe. …” She shut her eyes.

“Cheren’s father… died?” Miyuki spoke hoarsely.

“Isn’t he friends with the Grim Reaper?” Terry asked. “Why don’t he bring him back?”

“That goes against the balance,” MaKayla replied.

“If I followed that moral, you and Terry would be dead.” George reminded.

“I… I have to go to Earth.” Miyuki stood. “I have to comfort Cheren. If he’s really hurt, then… he needs me.”

MaKayla stood, “I’ll go, too. George?”

“Can’t.” He shook his head. “I vowed I would bring Maddy back for Chris. …Unless Terry’s willing to die for me.”

“I’ll hang out here, too, to kill George.” Terry snarled.

“I will warp you two if you wish.” Jerome replied. “I will return for you if your teammates desire you.”

“Okay. Get us there now.” Miyuki nodded. Jerome snapped his fingers, and they were-

Uno Household

-in the Unos’ front yard in a second. The adults outside were startled by their entrance. The clouds had blown away, the sky slowly fading to pink as the sun was about to touch the earth. After Sector V recapped the story to the two girls, Miyuki told MaKayla, “Let me go talk to him.”

Cheren wasn’t asleep, but he sure felt dead. He felt nothing in his limbs, no inspiration to move them. It was almost bliss to not have to move, not have to fight, get injured, nearly break his legs.
while running. A slower, easier way to await demise.

“Cheren? Hello?” He glanced to the doorway. His visitor was shaded, but he recognized that hoarse voice. “It’s me.” Miyuki Crystal walked in. “They told me what happened. How upset you are. You look a lot like I did.”

“…” His eyes were half open. They read that he would hear Miyuki’s words, but take little attention.

“Remember when you tried to make me happy? You were doing it the wrong way. And it didn’t work. I sort of learned on my own, how to treasure life. What it means to live for your friends. But I’m a timebender. I can see death approaching. And you, Cheren… are going to die.”

He sat up a little with furrowed, curious eyes.

“One day, this month, you are going to die. Maybe it’s by the Apocalypse, maybe you’re killed trying to stop the Apocalypse. My question for you is… how would you like to go out.”

He sat and listened.

“Would you rather sulk here in depression, and wait for the Apocalypse, or would you rather do your best to try and stop it, then die. My timebending does not make it clear, how exactly you will die. Nor does it say if your death will have an effect on anything. It’s up to you, how you wish to die, and how you wish to find out. But I’ll say this… if you don’t take a chance, if you don’t try to stop it, your soul can never pass on to the Spirit World. You will be tethered to the Earth forever, eternally wondering how things could’ve gone if you fought, and that without your strength, the world truly won’t have a chance. True… you did keep dying and dying, and only by Grim’s power did you proceed. Maybe this will happen again. If you had so many chances at life, it’s only better that you learn from these chances. Take all of that experience you gathered… and try your very hardest… never to die again.”

Cheren stared blankly. The tears had dried by now, but his pillow was still damp. He took his glasses, his jacket, slipped on his shoes, and slowly walked past Miyuki out the door.

Rachel stood beside Grim outside, their other friends on the sidewalk as they stared at the horizon. They turned when the door creaked open, and Cheren Uno stepped out. “Grim.” He calmly approached the reaper. Grim turned fully around as Cheren stretched his left hand. “I want you to make… an Unbreakable Vow.”

“…” Grim clutched Cheren’s left hand with his own, and planted a magic spark with his scythe that made energy chains connect them.

“Do you swear you will NOT watch over my friends and I during our adventures, anymore?”

“…I do.”

“Do you promise to never bring us back from the dead again?”

“…I promise.”

“And… will you… go to everyone you’ve watched over, inform them of your assistance, and get their honest word that they will keep fighting, learn from all their experience, and promise Cheren Uno they will continue to try and stop the Apocalypse, with everything they have.”

“… … … ..I will.”
“Then I consider this contract…” they released, “established.”

And so with that, Grim whooshed his staff, and warped off to fulfill his duty. “Cheren…” With a proud, teary smile, Rachel bent down and hugged her son. “After all this… you make both of us proud.”

Cheren pushed her off. “I’m not doing this for you, OR dad. He’s done his part. This is OUR time now. OUR time to hog the spotlight, go on crazy adventures, with CRAZY powers, fighting CRAZIER enemies, until everything is EXACTLY the way I want it be. I’m going up to Moonbase to tell everyone… the Kids Next Door is at WAR with the World Government. Whatever their beef is, we’ll stop them, we’ll destroy ANYONE who tries to keep us from finding the 20 Keys! And you parents… stay home and have dinner ready for us.” He winked.

Rachel wiped the tears away and stood. Her son had nothing more he could learn from her. “And who are YA to give us ORDERS, STOOPID BOY?!” screamed Fanny Drilovsky, her face still streaming with tears. “IF YOU THINK yer gonna be like that stoopid boy, givin’ ME orders, WELL I DIDN’T LISTEN TO HIM EITHER! Hogging ALL O’ the spotlight like he OWNS the place, WELL AY’M STILL GONNA HELP YA, JUST LIKE I HELPED HIM, ‘CAUSE HE WOULDA DIED IF I WASN’T AROUND!!!” She couldn’t keep herself from crying, so Patton was there to smirk and pat her shoulder.

“She is right, Cheren.” Rachel informed. “We are all still going to help. But all the teaching stuff is done, the rest is up to you.” She winked. “And if I see you shrunken again, you better not look ridiculous.”

“Heheheha.” Cheren blushed goofily. It was impossible not to. “…And I know the very first thing I’m gonna do.” With a confident, serious look, Cheren marched off.

Seeing him like this, feeling the power to do anything, made Miyuki happy they had someone like him. She was not even lying about her prediction. It was so strange… she saw Cheren dying, one day this month… and she saw him become more powerful than they could possibly imagine.

Crying is weakness. But when the crying is done, there’s no more weakness. Or some crap. Well, only two more chapters ‘til we conclude the Song Saga. Next time, we learn why this is called the Song Saga. XD Later.
This chapter is the last one of the Darkness Seeker Arc. I sort of regret putting this Wendy level after the Lucifer fight, because I consider Lucifer the main boss of this arc, it’s just it makes more sense for Wendy’s level to come after considering the story. (Takes place before Chapter 19.)

Chapter B-12: For the Second Time

Floop’s blimp

Floop’s blimp was designed like a green dinosaur head, whose eyes were wide and mouth shaped like an ‘o’. There were fins on the sides that looked like the paws of cartoon dogs, and skinny metal legs with shoes hung from the bottom and ran in midair. The guestroom where Chelia, Wendy, the Ice Climbers, and Carla were staying had a round couch with cushions designed like hands. Wendy was nervous at the thought of them dragging her to a cold Underworld. The drinks in the refrigerator were set inside gaping mouths, and the planted palm trees had tongues for leaves. Wendy had never seen anything weirder than this man’s mind.

“WOOOOOW!” Chelia gaped in adoration. “This is the weirdest thing I’ve ever SEEN!” She was holding Carla high. “You look like a kitty, but those wings make you look like a Nimbi! Are they actually real??” She tugged the wings.

“Ow! Yes, please, stop it!” Carla shook out of her grasp and fell to the floor.

“And you talk, too! Wendy, where did you find a thing like that?”

“I just found her egg washed up on a beach.” Wendy answered. “I was pretty surprised, too. You’ve really never seen anything like her, Chelia?”

“No. Why, are there a lot of them where you come from?”

“N-…” Wendy processed that sentence. She never asked Facilier where she was actually born.

“No. But…” She looked up at Chelia, “I kind of thought you would know. You just feel… really similar to me.”

“We do have a few things in common, don’t we?” Chelia sat beside Wendy on the couch. “That reminds me, that was impressive airbending! I thought I had the tournament in the bag before you came along. And you weren’t even using Haki or God Chi!”

“Chelia, what is Haki and God Chi, anyway?”

“Hmhm, you probably wanna know the second one first.” Chelia held her right hand open and spun a mini whirlwind. “It’s called God Chi because it belongs to a god.”
“But doesn’t everyone get bending from a god?”

“Yes, but the gods actually have two forms of their own chi: a weaker, undeveloped form that they give to mortals for them to develop their selves… and a stronger form that the gods keep and allows them to maintain the balance in their own realm. The God of Airbending is Rayquaza.”

“But how did you manage to get ahold of Rayquaza’s chi?”

“And he actually agreed?” Carla inquired.

“Sure! …Well, it was more like this.”

Chelia was 11 years old when she approached Sky Pillar on a terribly blustery day. She wore a pair of hiking boots and thick clothes, and had a mirror shield on her back. Through the raging dust-filled wind, she saw a giant, green armored snake flying above. “E-EXCUSE me! I’ve come to see the Sky God, Rayquaza.” Chelia yelled at the snake.

“I am he.”

“My name’s Chelia; Chelia Blendy. I’m an airbender—you probably know that, and I was reading an old book, and I read… If a bender can defeat the god in a one-on-one fair battle of their strength, the god has to give the bender a portion of their chi. I don’t mean to sound conceded, but I’m a pretty great airbender, and I would love to become stronger.”

“You read correctly. If you can best me, you will earn a portion of my God Chi. If you lose, I take your bending away. The deal has been the same since the decision to grant benders their power. Do you accept?”

“Yes, yes I do.” Inside, Chelia’s heart was racing nervously.

“Very well then… en garde!”

Rayquaza lived up to his name, for his method of bending was unparalleled. The field became an endless hurricane as Chelia struggled to push against it using her supposed great bending, flown into the air when Rayquaza swooped down with momentum. Whirling around like a piece of paper in the wind, Chelia tried to compose and shield in an airball, until Rayquaza zoomed around her in his snakelike body and spun her dizzy. Chelia collided on the ground, not giving up, getting to her feet to throw gust after mighty gust. Rayquaza felt some slight breeze on his armor, but nothing more. He snaked around in the clouds to bunch them together, lightning striking the ground. Chelia frantically dodged these strikes, running in rapid circles to spin tornadoes to suck Rayquaza down, but the god flew down on his own and shot past Chelia fast enough to roll her on her back. Rayquaza was back for the rebound, before she could stand up, he blasted a solid air blast that sent her away farther, landing on her front.

Rayquaza ceased his onslaught and floated calmly before the struggling girl. She faced him with tears streaming her face. “Okay, you won, but PLEASE don’t take my bending away! The kids where I live were teasing and saying I’d never be a good bender, so I wanted to become stronger to prove them otherwise, I’d never be able to show my face again if I go back without bending, PLEASE DON’T!” She bowed with deepest respect, tears hitting the ground.

“You should know better than to make bets beyond your knowledge. I’m hoping this lesson will teach you that.”
“No! NOOOOOO!” Chelia was utterly helpless, lost for strength or for hope as Rayquaza touched fingers to her head and chest, a white light shining. Chelia’s eyes popped open, and grinning maniacally, “REVERSING MIRROR!”

The shield on her back shone, Rayquaza knocked back as his energy suddenly dropped. Chelia stood up filled with pride and power, for an incredible wind blew inside. “Sky God’s ROOOOAAAAAR!” She unleashed a powerful storm of wind from her lungs, solid as stone as Rayquaza was struck, injured, and sent flying back.

He collapsed onto the ground, unable to get up. “Heheh... I found this Reversing Mirror.” Chelia blushed. “It rebounds or reverses the affects of any power. I challenged you to battle and lost so you’d try to take my chi, then I could take YOUR chi instead! Part of my strength is my keen intellect, eh he he.”

“Nnnn... you have deceived me, Child. Very... clever. You have earned the rights to... my God Chi.”

“All right! Great!” Chelia jumped with joy. “Thank you so much! This is the happiest day of my life!”

“Then a few years later, I mastered Armament Haki.” Chelia turned her right hand to an iron black, and the whirlwind turned the same color. “It’s a martial art that’s pretty common. It has to do with channeling your inner strength, but I won’t bore you with a lesson.”

“...Chelia... it sounds like you kind of stole it from him.” Wendy said.

“Just what did you do with powers like that?” Carla asked with a reproving look. “Become a school bully? Tear down a village?”

“N-No, no, nothing like that!” Chelia said in a frantic fashion. “I really don’t know why I wanted Rayquaza’s power! I guess I just felt like challenging him... and I won.”

“You cheated.”

“I won with my brain.” Chelia argued. “But since I got the power, I’ve been feeling really great. I almost never get exhausted because I never run out of breath. I enter contests at my school like the Triwizard Tournament or the Dragon Dances... I hate to gloat, but I’m a really good dancer.” She smiled. “They even put me in some magazines. ...But I never do anything bad with my powers, honest.”

“Yeah, but you sound like you’re pretty competitive.” Wendy said. “Just how many people have god powers to help them win things? It sounds kind of unfair...”

“Well, if I hadn’t been in the picture, I’m sure you would’ve come around!” Chelia laughed. “You smoked everybody in that tournament. You would’ve been the best in any physical contest you entered.”

Wendy blushed at this praise. “Thanks for saying that... but I’m not really that competitive. I get so nervous all the time and I just started learning magic recently.”

“Well yeah, you’re still young. ...But now that I think about it, how come you’re on the wanted posters?”

“I think it’s because my dad is a wanted criminal. They probably think I’m just like him, or they wanna use me to catch him. And even worse, I have this curse that makes wind blow around wherever I am. It’s better now because of these Chi Stabilizers, but I was homeless for years.”

“That’s really sad.” Chelia frowned. “You really don’t seem like a bad person, Wendy.”

“Thanks. Neither do you. …” Wendy stared at her Lamia Scale wand reflectively. She then reached in her pocket and pulled out a blank piece of paper. She didn’t need to read it to memorize what it said.

Observation: Floop has numerous children acting on his television program. These children are named and credited, but they are not known to act on any other show. The show’s website does not provide information on their origins, and no person anywhere that recognizes their names has been found, nor are they known.

Conclusion: The World Government has accordings with unknown orphanages, who deliver children to Floop to work against their will.

Mission: Rescue the children and destroy Floop’s castle.

“You can’t possibly expect Wendy to do all that herself!” Carla said angrily.

“I don’t!” Facilier argued in a low voice, so none of the townspeople would hear. “Her daddy did, I told him it was too risky, but he insisted!”

“Well, do you have anything to help us?”

“Yes…” Facilier reached under his jacket. “Assuming he’s right and Floop is keeping children hostage, you can rescue them with this.” He pulled out a small satchel, reached in, and extracted a blue treasure chest with a star.

“What’s that?” Wendy asked as the box was handed to her.

“This box is connected to a bigger box in my sister’s basement. Use the Shrink Spell, Reducio, to minimize the kids and put them in here. They’ll warp to that other box at normal size. You can use it to get away yourself, too.”

“What about destroying the castle?”

The doctor sighed. “Honestly… I really don’t know if you’re up for that. If all else fails, just come home.”

“Hey, Chelia?” Wendy turned to the older girl. “Do you watch Floop’s show? What’s it about?”

“Oh, it’s just a silly kids’ show about random kids talking to random monsters (guys in costumes), and they get into random situations.” Chelia explained while brushing the air with her hand. She clearly wasn’t speaking highly about it. “There’s not really a continuity and character development is little kid quality.”

“How come you wanted to visit his castle?”

“Some of the fillers have a fancy stage where kids dance.” Chelia spoke with a more positive tone. “I thought if Floop saw how I danced, he’d let me on the show and I would be a star!!” Her blue eyes became stars. She then gasped, “OOO, we should do a dance together, Wendy! He might let both of us on!”

“What about the children who already work for him?” Carla inquired. “Do you know how he picks them off?”

“Uhhh… not really. Well, maybe he’ll tell us if we ask!” Chelia grinned.

“Wendy, look!” Sonny and Donna bounced over and opened their coats: dynamites and guns were strapped on the inside.

“We stuffed our coats full of things that go boom!” Donna cheered.

“We looked up demolition websites and know exactly where to plant them!” Sonny followed.

“We’re gonna make Floop a REAL star!” The twins’ devilish eyes became stars.

“You guys, shhhhh!” Wendy jumped over and gestured them to hush. “We’re supposed to keep it a secret!”

“Wendy, is something wrong?” Chelia asked.

“Eek!” Wendy flinched and turned around, sweating with anxiety. “Hehehehe, they’re just kidding, we’re not planning anything, hahahaha!”

“You guys, shhhhh!” Wendy jumped over and gestured them to hush. “We’re supposed to keep it a secret!”

“The twins’ devilish eyes became stars.

“Wendy, is something wrong?” Chelia asked.

“Eek!” Wendy flinched and turned around, sweating with anxiety. “Hehehehe, they’re just kidding, we’re not planning anything, hahahaha!”

“Hm hm hm! Who are those kids, anyway, your cousins?”

“No, they’re… Well, I dunno what they’re for.”

“Comic relief.” They chorused.

Negaverse; DNK Moonbase

“Is this true?” the majestic moon bird, Cresselia asked with an echoing voice. “Medusa was causing chaos in this world? Using your body as a disguise?”

“My cousin feels terribly violated!” Ynohtna shouted. “He’s going to need therapy, stitches, and all that stuff that’s awesome in this universe! Ahh!” Nerehc kicked him away.

“Listen, Moon Chick, you know about the Apocalypse that’s coming up this month, right?” Nerehc asked the spirit rudely.

“Oh… You are aware.”

“Yeah, I have a couple questions: first, when did you gods plan to tell us about something like this?”

“Hmmmm… It was our intention, but we didn’t know the correct time. The Apocalypse is beyond the gods’ control. We did not know when, or even if, the Twenty Keys Prophecy would be unveiled by some other means. Even Dialga did not know… and it resulted in many fights between him and Palkia. And guess who had to work THOSE out. Me. Perhaps we were mistaken, keeping the secret. With only a month until it is time, we wonder if the prophecy will still transpire.”

“I was told about the prophecy from a person called Sanula. Said he comes from the First Dimension. He said that the Apocalypse would happen when the Space Gate crumbles apart in someplace called the Netherverse, and then the moons would explode. Would the Moon Goddess know anything about that?”

“Yes. She would. I created the moons as the primary locks and gateways leading into the Netherverse. I regulate the supernatural energy projected by the moons. But Palkia’s powers are stronger than mine, so if his Space Gate explodes, my moons will not withhold. Children, I’m sorry
I do not have more knowledge to divulge unto you regarding this matter. But I promise to inform the other gods of Medusa’s-”

“Before you do,” Nerehc intervened, “know that we’ve already accepted her help. She seems very knowledgeable on the Thirteen Darknesses, so we have no choice but to rely on her guidance.”

“Do not let her deceive you. True, Medusa has this knowledge, but she-”

“Feels like the only god who hangs with us more than any other god in this world. I hate to say it, but in the Negaverse, rules are a little backwards. Medusa might get in trouble for messing with people in the Posiverse, but in here, she can do whatever she wants. …Not that we would let her, of course. Only until we find the Darknesses.”

“…The tides are truly changing. In a time like this, even I’m not sure if ancient rules still matter.
Perhaps this was part of the prophecy. But I strongly caution you, children.”

“Got it. One last question, Moon Chick: what are the Original Worlds?”

“The Original Worlds are dimensions that are said to have been created long before this one. Even we have never seen them, for they were designed by other gods. We have always believed that Arceus – or perhaps a different deity entirely – designed this world based on fragments from those Original ones. We called this phenomenon the Dimensional Fusion. People, locations, energies in this world have an original parallel from those worlds.”

“Did they come before the ‘First Dimension’? Or after?”

“The First Dimension is so named because Arceus created it before this world, or any of the others under his eye. However, even we do not know when the Original Worlds were born. We do not know if Arceus was the ultimate creator or not.”

“Even the gods don’t know…” Nerehc mumbled softly. “…Do you know if there’s any way to get to those worlds?”

“30 years ago… one man has. Dialga and Palkia sensed it through a series of tremendous rips through the Dimensional Byway. His name was Stanford Pines. I did not ask them how he did this.”

“A Positive, huh? …Well, thanks. You don’t have to stay, anymore.”

“The Tides of Time are changing, my children. Make sure your boat remains steady… or you will be destroyed.” The goddess flew into a glowing white portal and vanished.

“…Do all these gods leave with a metaphor?” Nollid asked.

“So what are we going to do now, Master Nerehc?” Ininap asked.

“Hold on!” Sipa spoke up. “Before all this happened, weren’t we bringing Egroeg and AlyakAm to the Posiverse?”

“Oh, yeah. I totally forgot about them. Are they even here?”

“We haven’t seen them all since yesterday!” Alol answered in her perky attitude. “Probably blew us off like a couple-a airheads!”
“I wonder if they’re meeting their Positives right now?” Nerehc said. “I guess we should go check on them.”

“Maybe you should rest.” Nollid suggested. “What with Medusa turning you into a toy and violating your body…”

“Huhuhu.” Nerehc shuddered. “I wanna lie down just to get that idea out of my head.”

“Sorry. I’ll just fly to Dnaleci and make a portal to its Posiverse to look for them. Any of you guys wanna come?”

“Meeee!” Ikuyim jumped over to him. “I’d love to visit my Positive!”

“Alright, you guys go ahead and do that.” Nerehc figured. “As for the rest of us… I guess there isn’t much to do but wait for Medusa.”

Posiverse; Foogly Mountain

“Wendy, look! There it is!” Chelia pointed excitedly.

“Huh?” The red-eyed girl and her friends raced up to the window.

The blimp was flying over a steep, mountainous region, approaching a castle that was perched precariously on the side of a mountain. From far away, it looked like a group of stone needles, for its pale brown color matched that of the mountain. “It doesn’t look luxurious.” Carla said.

“I agree, it’s a weird place to film a TV show.” Chelia said. “Why do you think he set up here?”

“Duh, because he’s an evil mastermind- OOMP!” Donna said, before Carla snapped her mouth shut.

A large hatch opened on the side of the castle’s base, ready to allow the blimp inside. “Hold on, is the balloon even gonna fit in there?!” Wendy asked with worry.

Sonny gasped, “We’ve fallen for his trap!! SAY YOUR PRAYERS!”

“NO, I DON’T WANNA DIE!” Wendy cried.

“Wait, Wendy! Look!” Chelia yelled.

A platform extracted from the hatch and allowed the blimp to land. The balloon and bottom legs retracted into the vessel before the platform pulled it inside the hatch. Everything turned darker as they felt their room pulling in further. Then, with a loud CLANK, they stopped.

A faint light shone on the kids so they were able to see each other. They looked around in the darkness until Wendy spotted someone else under a spotlight. “It’s Mr. Floop!” she exclaimed. They faced the backside of the man wearing the red velvet coat, sitting in the blimp’s pilot seat. “Mr. Floop!” Wendy jogged over to him. “Is this part of your castle?”

The chair swerved around—Floop’s eyes were bulging, his whole body puffed like a balloon, and POPPED. A small, mechanical device remained. “YEEEEEK!” Wendy nearly fainted from shock. “Whaddid-I-do, whaddid-I-do!!”

“So it was a balloon all along?” Carla asked as she approached the device. It had blow holes on its top and sides, and long thin metal sticks. “Astounding… Was it actually a balloon during the Glitz Pit, too? If it was, how was he able to animate it so realistically?”
“Maybe Mr. Floop is magic!” Wendy guessed.

“Are you children tired of the world outside?” a man’s voice spoke from nowhere. “Tired of the parents yelling, the bullies pushing, and the teachers assigning homework? The critics critique, the dogs bark, and that apartment above yours keeps playing loud music while you’re trying to sleep? Then you don’t have to be. Not anymore. Welcome... to my home.”

Lights came on—before the kids knew it, they were standing in an orange sky. There was a spinning platform designed like a tornado, floating several meters above. Fegan Floop stood on the platform—actually, he floated a few inches above it. His back was facing them, but his arms were crossed, and they could see his gloved hands. Each hand stuck up its index finger, which had a white smiley face drawn on it.

It’s a cruel cruel world
And all you little boys and girls
His thumbs stuck out.
And some mean, nasty people
Want to have you for their supper
He stuck a new finger up after every few words, then he whipped around and shouted,
BUT if you follow me
You can all be free...free...
You can all be free
As a bird on a big TV
If you dream... my... DREAM!

The kids were uplifted on giant eyeballs that rose from below. Wendy and Chelia flailed their arms and legs, unable to balance on the spinning balls, but the balls positioned so they wouldn’t fall over. Strange, humanoid creatures with misshapen, miscolored faces and clothing that clowns would wear were balancing on small, flying planets. As Floop danced and directed his arms and legs, the flying spheres spun and zigzagged around the air. Attached to Floop’s platform were bikes that were being pedaled by children, spinning circles around their host.

It’s a cruel cruel world
Full of little boys and girls
And the selfish mean, nasty people
Nasty nasty nasty NASTY
BUT there’s a way
You can make your day
You can laugh, you can smile
Sonny and Donna began cartwheeling in midair above their eyeballs, and Wendy was going to barf if this spinning kept up. They moved faster and faster around the center, the orange sky turned brighter, and Floop’s smile grew bigger.

You can dream my dream
You can have it all with me!
You can dream MY dream!
You can dream MY dream!

DREAM… MY… DREEEEEAAAAAAM!

The brightness increased at the raise of his voice until white completely swallowed the area. Floop clapped hands—the momentum immediately stopped as the kids plummeted to the floor of what they assumed was the hangar. “Of course, that’s just the beginning.” Floop said with a grin, viewing the guests from his floating hand platform. “Wendy Marvell and Chelia Blendy, I am delighted to welcome you and your guests to Fegan Floop’s Whackatorium! This is the place where all of the wondrous magic happens!”

“So you really ARE magic, Mr. Floop??” Wendy said with admiration.

“Uh-hove course I am, my dear!” Floop chuckled, showing his bright grin. “How else do you think a man can FLOAT so perfectly?!” He leapt and performed a splits while floating in midair.

“Perhaps those strings that are attached to you have something to do with it.” Carla pointed out.

Floop looked at the ceiling, where the strings that were clearly holding his body originated from. “Oh, those? No no no, those are just…?” A question rose in Floop’s head. “Who said that?”

“I did.” Carla said firmly.

The host cocked a brow at the talking kitten. Floop flew down using his strings and set foot before the visitors. He bent down, picked Carla up, and raised her high. “A cat… with wings… who speaks… English… By far the weirdest creature I’ve ever seen.”

“I am about tired of everyone saying that about me. Just look at all of these so-called ‘actors.’” She glanced at the misshapen humanoid creatures, who were speaking in squeaky and squiggly voices. “Weirdest costumes I’ve ever seen.”

“Yes, but ‘guys in costumes’ can only sell so well.” Floop shrugged. “But this cat is a real flesh-and-blood creature! Isn’t she?”

“She’s been that way ever since she hatched from her egg.” Wendy replied.

“An EGG! HAH! Well, then it’s settled, this fluffy creature will be the newest addition to my show!”

“Can me and Wendy be on the show, too??” Chelia asked brightly. “We would be perfect dancers! Er, I would at least, I haven’t seen how she dances. I mean, I could train her either way.”

“I really don’t want to be on your show.” Carla said. “Now please, put me down.”
“But I HAVE to study you!” Floop swung Carla around, his face shining. “I have to do X-rays, know where you’re from, know your lifespan, then I’ll make tons of CLONES of you!”

“ABSOLUTELY not!” Carla jumped away and got beside Wendy. “What kind of man are you to treat creatures like pieces of machines that you can study? Is that what you’re doing to the poor, innocent children here?”

“Carla!” Wendy silenced.

Floop seemed to flinch at that accusation. “Ho ho, you’ve got it all wrong!” he said more spiritedly. “The children here love it in Floop’s Whackatorium! You, Rodrick, come here!” He gestured a tall brown-haired boy in casual attire to come over. “Don’t you love it here in my castle?”

“Hyeah I do!” Rodrick replied with enthusiasm. “Floop’s Whackatorium is the best! I don’t ever wanna leave!”

“And what do you like most about it?”

“What I like most is… uh…” Rodrick was lost for words. “I like… I… uh-oh… I can’t remember my line!” The boy was starting to panic. “Don’t remember! Whaddo I say! Ohhh- eeeett!” Wendy and Chelia stepped back when he began twitching.

“THUMB-THUMBS!” Floop snapped his fingers. Two humanoid creatures, whose head, arms, and legs were all thumbs, wearing red shirts, marched in to grab and take the boy away. The Thumbs bumped into the wall beside the door, but resumed carrying him. Floop turned to the kids with a bright smile. “Thumb-Thumbs! Very reliable, despite being all thumbs.”

The kids were a little horror-struck by what just happened. They didn’t say anything about it. “Mr. Floop, where do all these children come from?” Wendy decided to ask.

“The children come from here, of course! They live here, they eat here, they love it here, so nothing else matters! The outside world is cruel, but here, the children are safe! They play together without a care in the world! And best of all, I can film all their crazy antics and make one heck of a popular show! (Which, naturally, pays the bills.)”

“But the children do have parents, don’t they? People to teach them right from wrong?”

“Heh heh, don’t you watch my show? The Fooglies do that! See?”

A black-haired boy was holding a bat ready as a blonde girl hurled a baseball. “Weegily-de!” A purple Foogly with a stretched mouth jumped in the way. The ball got lodged in its stretched mouth, then the boy swung his bat and struck the right side of the mouth. This forced the left side to stretch longer, causing the Foogly to fall in that direction. The floor pressed the extended side, forcing the right to grow longer, and for the ball to fly out. It fell into a coffee cup, which was drunk by a Foogly with a big mouth. When the ball got stuck, another Foogly performed the Heimlich maneuver and shot it out like a bullet. It bounced around aimlessly before breaking through a window.

“Now, kids, this is why you don’t play ball in the house.” Floop spoke informatively.

“We’re sorry, Mr. Floop.” The kids bowed.

“I’ve heard of cartoons that make kids seem more competent than adults, but this is just uncharacteristic.” Carla said reprovingly.
“HAH ha ha! Come on, Carla, it’s funny!” Chelia laughed. “Maybe we’re a bit more mature, but it would be fun to explore it a little! Plus, we can make a few extra bucks.”

“Well, since you’re excited about it,” Floop said, “I’ll look and see if I have some room to squeeze you. I’ll just be a moment, so wait here until I get back!” The man threw his arms up, and flew away with his strings- “OW!” He bumped his head on the floating platform. “Oh, Floop!” he swore as the strings pulled him into a wall hatch. “Children, take five!”

The children fast-walked in a weird fashion and piled out of the room, leaving the Fooglies to watch the kids.

“Wendy.” Carla whispered. Wendy bent down to her level. “I hate to say it, but there seems to be a little truth to Mr. Facilier’s writing. They took that Rodrick boy away like he were a broken machine.”

“You’re right, Carla.” Wendy whispered back. “I wonder if Mr. Floop is using magic to brainwash these kids.”

“Well, Rodrick forgot his lines, so it looks more like child slavery. Also, I haven’t seen one ounce of real magic in this Phonatorium. I’ll be surprised if little kids even buy this crud.”

“That guy was totally flying!!” Sonny and Donna exclaimed.

“Hey, Donna, if we pull our eyes out, will they fly and spin and dance, too??”

“That’s something worth checking out, Sonny!” Donna drew out a screwdriver.

“Stop!” Chelia got between them to hold them back. “That’s not a good idea, guys!”

“Wendy, we should look around for any of the kids and try and get answers out of them.” Carla suggested.

“You’re right.” Wendy and her cat approached a door on their right, but two Thumb-Thumb guards stepped in the way. “Uh, would it be all right if I went to the bathroom?”

“I would like to go, too!” Chelia yelled, happily jogging over.

“Me three!” Donna joined them.

“Me!…” Sonny was about to come over… but his expression sunk. “Wait… I just realized something.”

“What’s that?” Chelia asked.

“Without Mister Facilier… I’M THE ONLY BOY IN THIS GROUP!!” The male Ice Climber gripped his head and rolled around on the floor. “I’m gonna turn into a girly boy and want girl things and want to hang out with girls! QUICK, BRING ME A FOOTBALL!”

One of the Fooglies casually tossed him a football. “Get ahold of yourself.” Carla stated. “At least you still have a separate bathroom. Come on, let’s go.”

A Thumb-Thumb walked from the front, and another from behind as they escorted the kids to the restrooms. The parallel restroom doors had a “?” and an upside-down “¿” respectively. The girls decided to enter the latter, while Sonny took the “?” bathroom.

The toilets inside the stalls were designed like tornadoes of different color. “…I sure hope we don’t get sucked in!” Chelia said perkily.

“Me, too…” Given their suspicions about Floop, Wendy and Carla felt like they would be.

“Hey, is your kitty potty trained? I’d love to see that!”

“I’m curious as to whether or not you were trained.” Carla retorted. “Privacy, please.”

Chelia took the far right stall, Donna had the middle, and Wendy and Carla the left.

“Wendy, up there.” Carla whispered, pointing her paw upward. There was an air vent on the ceiling. “You can turn small with the Reducio spell and I’ll carry you up and through that. Then we can search around the castle.”

“Good idea.” Wendy said softly. “But how will you open it without Chelia noticing?”

“Wendy, if Floop is the madman we think he is, Chelia may be in danger, too. Perhaps now is the time to tell her the truth.”

“What? Carla, I can’t! What if she doesn’t believe me, or thinks I really am a criminal?”

“But Chelia’s powers can benefit us. Plus, it’s only fair to warn her so that she can keep her guard up.”

There was a knock on their stall door. “Wendy, is that you two whispering?” Chelia asked. “What’re you talking about?”

“N-Nothing!” Wendy said panickingly.

“Wendy, just tell her!” Carla insisted.

“I…I can’t! I’m just getting to know her and she seems really sweet, but if I tell her what I’m trying to do, I…”

“You want to tell me something? Wendy, what’s going on?” Chelia asked again. “Are you having trouble with the toilet?”

“SHEESH, Wendy, when’d you become a big girl all of a sudden?” Donna remarked jokingly.

“N-NO!” The statement made Wendy flush, and her anxiety grew. “Uh-I-I, uh, I… REDUCIO!”

“Wendy, what’s-…” Chelia barged and Donna peeked from behind. A tiny Wendy and Carla were on the toilet’s edge.

“O-kay, maybe not.” Donna followed.

“DARN IT, Child, you shrunk me, too!”

“Sorry, Carla!” Wendy tried to balance. “I was feeling a little claustrophobic and- AAAAAHHH!” She grabbed her cat and fell back in the toilet.

“WENDY!” Chelia ran in and tried to grab her, but the tornado-like toilet slurped them down impossibly fast.

“WAAAAAAAH!!” Wendy and Carla swirled around and around as though the pipes were purposely designed like a spiraling waterslide. “IS THIS WHAT ALL OUR POOP GOES “THROUGH?”

“A LADY SHOULD NEVER ASK THAT, WENDY!” Carla cried.

“WHOOOA!” They flew out the pipe and into a sewer river that washed them along.

“HANG ON!” Carla grabbed the red-eyed girl and forcefully flapped her wings to pull them both out. She managed to fly up and set Wendy on the sidewalk before she quickly tired out.

“Phew… Thank you, Carla.” Wendy breathed to ease her racing heart.

“My pleasure, huff…” Carla gasped for air. “Now change us back to normal.”

“Right.” Wendy grabbed her wand. “Re…” She realized something. “Wait a second… I DON’T REMEMBER THE COUNTER-SPELL!! AAAAAH what’re we gonna do, Carla!! We’re gonna be stuck small and get eaten by one of Floop’s crazy-looking sewer rats, waaaahhhh!”

“ENGORGIO!” Carla shouted. “I remember the doctor using it on a pebble during one of his demonstrations.

“Oh… phew.” Wendy’s anxiety faded again. “Engorgio.” She stretched them both to normal size.

“Sigh. That could’ve gone worse. Now let’s get back upstairs and search this loony museum.”

Floop’s Throne Room

“Mister Minion!” Floop spoke spritely to the man in white clothing, black hair, and glasses. “Fashionably still here, as usual!”

“Mr. Floop, fashionably late.” Mr. Minion bowed. “I’ve been observing the cameras, and I see you brought quite the party with you. The Sky Dragon Wendy Marvell.” He gestured to the small screens that were around Floop’s hand throne. One had an image of Wendy’s curious expression.

“The daughter of Red Eye that former Corporate President, Norman Osborn reported all those years ago. The portal to Mariejoa is functioning perfectly. What are your plans for detaining the child?”

“Actually, I don’t think I want to do that just yet.” Floop clamped his hands and spoke in a sure and professional manner. “Wanted felon though she may be, that hair and those eyes are WAY too beautiful to throw away! They pack a kind of weirdness that Floop Industries admires. She and that pink-haired girl, Chelia, would become the most popular characters on my show! And a talking cat with wings, HAH! MARVELOUS! Those little coat twins seem like a fun bunch, too! Mr. Minion, withhold telling the World Leaders until I make actors out of these kids.”

“Mr. Floop, you can’t be that demented.” Minion said seriously. “This girl is the daughter of a dangerous revolutionary. For all you know, she could be in here on her father’s orders, you could be in danger!”

“Mr. Minion, can I ask, when this ‘daughter’ of Red Eye’s was reported 11 years ago, did President Osborn provide us any physical description?”

“N…No.”

“Mr. Minion, I’ve heard of numerous people, girls even, who have red eyes, so what singles this one out? I mean, Red Eye doesn’t even have blue hair!”
“She is an airbender, clearly possesses magical abilities, and her speed is rivaled only by the legendary Mobian, Sonic the Hedgehog!”

“So maybe she’s Sonic’s daughter! She does have pointy ears. I heard he fell in love with a human princess called Elise, maybe they had a daughter. Plus, didn’t Sonic’s Super Form have red eyes?”

“MR. FLOOP, it doesn’t even matter whose daughter she is!” Minion shouted. “We are under orders to capture her and turn her in to the Government! It is because of this girl that Master Churchill’s first apprentice, Norman Osborn, was killed! If you aim to fill his shoes, then Master will respect you greatly if you capture the child that caused him grief!”

“She was a BABY!” Floop yelled. “SHE could not have been old enough to kill him! It was RED EYE that killed President Osborn! And my castle is meant to be a world of fun and dreams. I will not treat my guests rashly.”

“Mr. Floop! The Sky Dragon is in the castle sewer!” a man from the PA reported.

“What?” Floop ran to his throne and saw one of the monitors depicted Wendy and Carla running down a sewer passage. “How in the world did she get down there?”

“This is exactly what I was talking about!” Minion stated. “We have to catch her before she starts causing damage! We have to call the Leaders.”

“No.” Floop raised a hand, gesturing ‘stop.’ “I can handle this girl. Mr. Lisp, activate the defensive holograms! Even if I have to trap her, I want to speak to this girl myself.” (Play “Labyrinth of Deceit” from Kid Icarus: Uprising!)

Stage B-9: Labyrinth of Weirdness

Mission: Find out Floop’s intentions.

The sewer passage was lit with wall torches, and seemed to stretch on for miles as Wendy dashed through. She sidestepped to avoid the Foogly-designed Lockjaws, then a Dash Panel redirected Wendy down a left hall. “The castle really does not seem that large from the outside, how is there this much sewer underneath?” Carla questioned.

“I told you, Carla, magic!”

“And I told you I don’t believe it.” Wendy eventually ran up a river that sloped at 90 degrees, and the passage after that swerved up and over like a loop. She ran into a Spring Pad that rapidly bounced her around several springs across a bright passage. The last spring shot her into a polished hallway with a red floor designed like jigsaw puzzles, and white walls. “Phew, we made it back.” Wendy sighed as she kept running. “Let’s look for the children- AAAAAH!” The floor ahead of her crumbled away, exposing a deep chasm—Wendy took a tremendous leap, Carla grabbed her and tried to carry her over… “AAAAH!” The cat lost her grip and dropped Wendy.

“AAAAH- uuh!” Wendy hit solid floor. She sat up and stared confused; the endless pit was just an illusion. “…Sigh. That’s my third jumpscare today.” She got back on her feet and turned a left corridor. The hall was growing wider, and as her speed increased, the dimension stretched, turned blurry, and white. “WAAAAH!” She suddenly ran off an edge—she was in a dimension where the sky was one of those stretchy, abstract paintings. Wendy collided onto a floating red platform designed like the floor of the actual castle. There was a group of Flyer Fooglies (with round centers that had propeller blades) making a path, so Wendy bounced across them to a new platform.
There was a lone Flyer Foogly beside this platform, and the next path seemed to be higher above. Wendy began spin-jumping on this Foogly, and her airbending conjured a whirlwind that propelled him upward. She noticed one of the other Fooglies in the row had a Fire Soul above him, so Wendy decided to do the same maneuver to collect it. She returned to the previous Foogly and used it to float up to the new path—she needed a moment to let her sick stomach settle. This road had huge, rectangular blocks on either side (the top of the left ones seemed to have collectables), and the central path was guarded by Thumb-Thumbs. Wendy boosted straight through, arms outstretched to either side as she unleashed wind beams to knock them down.

At the path’s end, Wendy began grinding across an ever-extending tongue coming from a screaming Floop face. Ignoring how disgusting this was, the tongue spiraled downward and directed into a dark-red twister statue. Wendy ran around and around down the twister as it brought her into a new hallway. “This man just enjoys toying with our minds,” Carla said. “I think finding an exit should be our main priority.”

“We can’t leave the others behind. Let’s just keep looking.” The hall seemed to go straight, Wendy ran along and dodged left and right to avoid the opening trapdoors. She dodged some giant Floop heads that swung down from the ceiling, then had to perform a drift when the hall swerved left and downward. “Look, Carla! It’s the Children’s Quarters!” There was a huge label over said door in the distance. “Pretty soon, we’ll know if—OOF!” She collided with the wall painting of the hall leading to the Children’s Quarters. “Owwww… okay… Wait, there it is!” Wendy saw another Children’s Quarters on her left, so she ran the distance, sidestepping the floor panels that popped up on the way.

“We, DON’T!” Carla was quick to catch up and pull Wendy to a halt. She stopped just before colliding with the wall painting. “Honestly, dear…”

“Sorry.” Wendy turned a right route, which had bars over the floor that she had to jump—she saw the glares of glass over some of the bars, so with those, she had to crouch and slide under. When the hall turned left, it seemed straight and empty, but the floor sunk partway, it sunk again, and inch-inch-inched a bit lower as Wendy kept running. Finally, the jigsaw ground broke away, and she ran across a dark, metal passage that swerved right. She halted before a chasm where rows of waterfalls poured out of pipes. “Glacius!” Wendy cast a freezing spell on the falls so she could Wall Jump across them. Once across, she entered a tunnel that sloped down, and the bright sky of outside hit her eyes.

“Whooooooa!” The sight was amazing in Wendy’s eyes. She was now sprinting across a beach, viewing the beautiful sunrise in the distance. “We made it outside, Carla! And it’s so amazing!”

“Ooooooooodd…” A whale leapt out of the ocean, and its four tails flapped up in the air as it slowly splashed back in. A majestic golden eagle screeched in the heavens, creating a strong breeze with the flapping of its wings. Wendy basked in the extraordinary atmosphere, running with no desire to stop. She felt so free in this beautiful world. No one or nothing could ever-

“OW!” She crashed into a wall when the world literally turned black. The area blinked, and the two appeared in a big, but ordinary castle room. “The holographic simulator in Wing 32 is faulty. Any available staff are requested to fix it.”

“So is everything in this nuthouse holographic?” Carla asked. “As I suspected, there isn’t a shred of magic behind this.”

Thumb-Thumbs dropped in from the ceiling, and Wendy breakdanced to kick two of them off their, well, thumbs. “Sky Dragon WING ATTACK!” She spun her arms to extend twin cyclones and blew the other Thumbs down. Carla lifted her owner onto a taller platform, and from there, Wendy followed a hall that turned right and led to another ‘Children’s Quarters.’ “Another one?” Wendy questioned.

Carla flew over to the door and tried to jiggle the knob. “It’s locked, but it seems real this time.”

“Oh, what is that spell Mr. Facilier said that opened things? Uhh… Alohomora?” A small light came from her wand and opened the door. The two girls entered a room where dozens of children seemed to be playing freely. A boy and girl were throwing a ball back-and-forth, a circle of kids played Duck Duck Goose, and two more kids were touching each other’s shoulders and repeating, “You’re it.” All of the children bore blank expressions.

“They don’t look too upset.” Wendy observed.

“Well, let’s go up and talk to one.”

“Okay.” Wendy approached one of the boys playing stand-still Tag. She tapped his shoulder, “Excuse me, could you tell me why everyone-”

“ERROR. ERROR.” The boy shouted. “Tag Mode only scheduled for F0625! Default detected! ERROR.”

All of the children directed their attention at Wendy, and their eyes sparked. The children began to make stylish Kung-Fu moves, rolling at Wendy and throwing punches and kicks. Wendy dodged the kids and tried to run away, but they kicked on rocket shoes and flew at her. “Protego!” Wendy conjured a pink bubble that the kids haphazardly crashed into. One of them weakly got up, and his head twitched as there were sparking sounds.

“Wait… Wendy, use a fire spell on one of them.” Carla requested.

“Why?”

“Because I don’t think these children are real!”

“Er, okay… Incendio!” Wendy singed the recovered boy with fire. His fake skin melted off and exposed the robotic skeleton. “They’re robots!”

“I’ve had enough of this man’s tomfoolery! Wendy, just blast them all!” Wendy cast Reducto curses to explode many of the robot children, then she boosted out of the room through an opposite door. She was suddenly running across a treadmill, which was moving the opposite direction and making her slow down. She jumped the robot children that were being carried across, and Carla observed the rest of the room. Kids’ heads were opening like lids while metal claws placed small, mechanical brains inside. “I have to commend his engineering, at least.”

Wendy jumped to grab a metal claw above the treadmill, and it carried her above a chute and dropped her down. She dashed down a round passage, drifting right and left when it snaked. They saw orange light shining ahead, and found their selves running across a cloud-covered ground under a twilight sky. “Is this a hologram, too?” Wendy asked.

“It would appear so. Do not be deceived- AAAAH!” Carla screamed.

“Carla, what-” Wendy looked up, “AAAAAAH!” (End song.)

“Hi there!” Floop greeted them with his charming smile. He was 50 feet tall, but the lower half of his body was below the clouds. “Things are beautiful up here, aren’t they?”
“HE’S A GIANT!” Wendy panicked.

“It’s not real, Wendy, it’s not real!” Carla’s fur was tingling.

“Can you really say what’s real and what isn’t real? How do you know the sun isn’t a gigantic spotlight? Or if the sky isn’t a projection?”

“Stop acting like you own a whacky chocolate factory and start being straight with us! We already discovered the secret behind your so-called ‘children’! They’re about as real as anything else in this place! I wonder if the World Government uses your crummy show to brainwash kids.”

Floop raised a brow. “Brainwash?”

“Carla!” Wendy shouted.

The cat clamped paws over her mouth. “Oh, my… Were we still undercover?”

“It’s true that I have connections to the World Government… but why on Earth would you insinuate that mind-control is my goal?”

“We didn’t!” Wendy shouted. “We just… W-W-We… sigh, Mr. Floop, can you please tell me what you do up here?”

The giant smiled and held a hand down to the child. “Allow me… to show you…”

With clear concern on her face, and wondering if this was still a hologram, Wendy stepped on the hand. It slowly lifted her and Carla up to Floop’s eye level. “Look…” He turned to face the horizon. The sun slowly set under an endless ocean, whose waves brushed the shore. Millions of stars slowly formed in the sky. A cold breeze touched their faces.

“This is the world I created.” Wendy’s heart jumped when a normal size Floop appeared beside her, and they were standing on a tall rock. “Inspired by many, like Walt Disney or Willy Wonka… I’ve always believed in imagination. Imagination… gave me happiness as a child. And all I wanted to do was create a show with my own artistic talents… Sigh, but the studios weren’t fond of my ideas. And for a while, my talents went unappreciated. Until I met… Henry Churchill.”

“He’s one of the World Leaders.” Carla remembered from Facilier’s paper.

“He isn’t just a Leader. Master Churchill is a very brilliant author. Of course, he was unappreciated, before he attained his position. He told me he was fond of my creativity. So he had this castle designed. He gave me the technology to build robot children, and I purchased the Fooglies from a company called Nightmare Enterprises. My show was on the air… and it was a dream come true…” His expression was bright as the artificial sun, lost in memories. “…And then Master Churchill wanted to use my robots for the Government’s army. I had to make them… violent…” His smile faded. “And since then, I felt… a strange tear in my heart…”

Wendy and Carla looked at each other, feeling his change in tone. Floop turned to them. “Ms. Marvell… you seem like a marvelous girl. Would you and Ms. Blendy really like to be on my show?”

“I-I’d love to-” Wendy returned to her ditzy, sheepish self, “but I’m really not great at acting, y’see-”

“Oh, Mr. Floop! I see you’ve found our little straggler. Would you bring her to the throne room? Her friends seem awfully worried about her.”
“I will; thanks, Mr. Minion!” Floop called. His smile faltered again as he turned away. He looked a bit nervous. “Ahem… This way, if you will.” Floop clapped his hands and switched off the hologram, revealing the true appearance of this green room. After the platform they were standing on sunk down, Floop led them down the castle corridors.

After turning a corner that had a statue of a green, headless giraffe, they were greeted by Chelia. “Wendy, THERE you are!” the dancer shouted. “What was that business in the bathroom all about? Did the toilet decide to shrink you and suck you down??”

“U-Uh, I-”

“Mr. Floop, there you are!” They were approached by Minion. “Would you join us in the room please, we have a guest.” He returned the way he came.

“W- Wait- Guest?” Floop rushed after, and the girls joined as they made it to the throne room. “I wasn’t expecting any other guests, who’s visiting?”

“Chapter 3 of Introducing Characters:” Floop stopped and stared at the throne with a mix of fear and surprise. There was a man in blue jeans and a blue patterned shirt reading a book. He clamped the book shut to show his charming blue eyes and shiny brown hair. “Dramatic Entrances.” Henry Churchill concluded.

“W- I- Wai-” Floop was lost on words, looking at Wendy, then Henry. “M-Master Churchill!!”

“Master Churchill?!” Wendy said, horrified.

“The World Leader?” Carla whispered with the same amount of horror.

“I came as soon as your minion called and told me the exemplary news!” Henry walked toward them with his arms open. “The Sky Dragon… ensnared like a bear in a venus flytrap. I knew you were more clever than people perceive you.”

“Mr. Minion, I didn’t order you to-”

“Yes, and you wouldn’t have.” Minion stated. “I called Master Churchill on my own accord because, unlike you, I was not concerned for the ratings of your petty kids’ show. The World Government hired me to work for you, but I only serve the Government. And any loyal citizen would bring a criminal like her to justice.”

“Hold on a second!” Chelia shouted. “Wendy isn’t a criminal, and I don’t think it’s right for you to judge her just because she’s related to one!”

“She signed up for the Glitz Pit tournament, in disguise, to win a trip to your castle, then she somehow sneaks into the sewer during a ‘bathroom break.’” Minion summarized. “This girl is clearly aligned with the Revolutionaries!”

“NO, she is NOT!” Carla argued. “She is a wizard in training and she only entered the tournament to study!”

“Whether she is or she isn’t affiliated with them, I do not care.” Churchill said in his soft, calm voice. “That isn’t why her wanted poster was created.”

“W-…” Floop looked surprised at that statement, as was Wendy. “Whaddo you mean?”

“True, I marked that as the reason for her bounty, but only to hide the existence of our secret…”
item.” Henry smirked. “You see, we World Leaders have the ability to see the past and future. We knew, the minute this girl’s identity was learned, she would be a danger to us. According to that which the Octogan has shown us… this very girl, Wendy Marvell… is going to kill me.”

“K-Kill you?!” Wendy responded.

“The Octogan does not lie to us. Your father killed my first apprentice… then, you humiliated my temporary apprentice, Bob… I was so afraid that Mr. Floop would meet a terrible end… but instead, he delivers you directly to me. Perhaps three… is a charm. Thank you, my apprentice.” Henry’s body began to break into papers that blew around the air. “I will take the Sky Dragon to Mariejoa… to be executed.”

“EXECUTED/EXCUSE ME/SAY WHAT?!?” Everyone yelled a reaction. Wendy gripped her neck, feeling a sudden, but imaginary tinge.

“Master Churchill, I thought you wanted to use her to capture Red Eye!” Floop argued.

“And I’m sure Red Eye will be horribly traumatized for the child’s death. His darkness will destroy him inside. We won’t need to do a thing.” Henry’s papers scattered about, then began to wrap around Wendy like a mummy. The girl’s arms were binded, she desperately shook while the others tried to pull the papers off.

“INCENDIO!” Chelia cast a fire spell to burn the papers. Henry Churchill reformed into a human, shaking frantically to get the fire off.

“Hothothothothothothothot!”

Minion pulled out two Tasers and “Y-ZZ-ZZ-ZZ-ZZT!” shocked Chelia and Wendy.

“Mr. Minion, I order you to stop-” Floop began.

“I don’t think you’ll be in anymore position after this.” Minion smirked. “From now on, I will be Master Minion, and you will be-”

A giant snowball blasted in and smashed both Henry and Minion against the jigsaw windows. “The comic relief twins are here to save the day!” Sonny and Donna popped out of the snowball.

“Deus ex-machina for the home stretch!” Donna cheered.

“If only it were that simple.” The snowball suddenly melted, and the twins fell. There were red papers floating around Henry. “But paper is made from all sorts of trees and plants. Even Sun Trees retain their natural heat after death.”

“Wendy, we have to escape!” Carla shouted. “Shrink us down so we can get in the box!”

“The robot children are coming!” Floop yelled when the human-like kids with sparking eyes were marching from down the hall.

“WENDY, WATCH OUT!” Chelia lashed her arm and blew Henry’s papers away with black wind. “I’ll distract him, you just do whatever you said with the box!”

“I have it right here!” Carla threw the small treasure chest on the floor and opened it. Wendy grabbed her wand and cast “Reducio!” on Carla, the Ice Climbers, then Floop before putting them each in the box.
“It worked, Wendy, it's safe!”

“Chelia, hold still!” Wendy readied to zap her. Chelia turned around- “AAAAAH!” The papers quickly overcame her.

“CHELIA!”

“NNN!” She tried to rip some off with Haki, but they latched back on just as quickly. “Wendy, I’ll be okay! You just go!”

“What?! I don’t wanna leave you!”

“It’s okay, I know how to handle myself! Plus, even if I came, they could always chase you inside the box. You jump in and I’ll destroy it from this side!”

“But Chelia, what if they kill you?!”

“I told you, I can handle myself! And I’m certainly not gonna let them kill you! Just GO, Wendy!”

“But why are you even doing this?! We just met, we barely know each other! You don’t even know if I AM a real criminal!”

“Yeah, well… even if you are…” Chelia grunted, trying to fight the papers and grab the wand on the side of her skirt. “You’re the only one who… lasted longer than one minute against me… so if I’m still alive… I wanna challenge you… to a rematch… eh…” She finally grabbed her wand and yelled, “REDUCIO!”

Wendy was zapped down to size, and she fell into the little box, which closed shut. “Reducto!” Chelia blew the chest to smithereens.

“Whooa!” After Wendy fell in, the gravity shifted upwards, and she landed on the floor of a dark basement, facing a bigger version of the chest. After Floop helped her stand, Wendy opened the chest in a panic. The inside of it was totally plain. “Ch…Chelia…”

“At least her sacrifice wasn’t in vain, Child.” Carla said. “Now they can’t follow us.”

“True, but… couldn’t they have just destroyed this box?” Floop questioned.

“Oh… Perhaps…”

“Died in vain.” Sonny said cluelessly.

“Pointless gesture.” Donna followed.

“Life is cruel.”

Wendy began to cry over the empty box. For the second time this week, she was forced to abandon a friend.

“Man, it has been Hell for me this past week. The only solace I can find is writing this story. Sigh… Anyway, I considered squeezing a boss in this chapter, but I decided against it for space. Feels like Wendy’s not getting many stages compared to August, which is kinda funny. Well, next time, we’ll begin the Original Worlds Arc, which starts with an Augustus level.
The Ninth Firstborn

Chapter Summary

Cheren Uno tries to help Sugar feel better.

Insert.

Chapter 19: The Ninth Firstborn

G.U.N. H.Q.

The soldiers brought Sugar to a round room with many security cameras. They carefully unlocked Sugar’s cuffs and let them drop, the child keeping her arms stationary while soldiers were careful to stay void of her hands. Her arms were stretched straight forward as she lay her hands on a center pedestal. A soldier held a darksaber and looked with very mixed feelings. “Are you certain this is what you want?” Gunkan asked.

“Mm-hm. I’m sure I can live through it.” Sugar replied with no detectable emotion. “It shouldn’t even be painful with the numbing medicine, right?”

“No. …We’ll fix the prosthetics on quickly, we promise.”

The soldier released a sigh and raised the energy blade behind him. He would swing forward in a second and rid Sugar of her curse once and for all. She closed her eyes and awaited peace.

“STOP!” The dark blade was instantly blocked by Cheren’s Master Sword. His eyes burned with passion and desperation, and that was poured into blocking this blade. He turned to face Sugar, and was struck speechless: in the brief second the sword would’ve taken to come down, she had ducked her head onto the stand so that the sword would’ve sliced her neck. “Sugar? …What’re you-..”

For the first time, there was emotion on her face. Her purple eyes were almost melting with tears. “I just wanna di-i-ie…”

Cheren walked around and softly touched her left hand. “Sugar-”

“DON’T TOUCH ME!!” She jumped away and ran against the wall, the soldiers nearby backing away.

“Huh? He didn’t transform.” one noticed.

“I thought it was automatic.” another followed.

Sugar planted her hands against the wall, shut her eyes tight, and started bashing her forehead against it. “I wanna DIE, I wanna DIE, I wanna DIE, I wanna-”

“Get a GRIP on yourself!” Cheren grabbed the neck of her hood and swung her around. “I’m sorry about your father, but I’m not-”

“I don’t CARE, I just wanna die and FORGET everything, I can’t go on knowing-!” A soldier stuck her in the neck with a syringe, and Sugar fainted.

“So that’s why… she persuaded us with this ‘hand’ thing to kill herself. Well, we can’t very much release her if she’s suicidal.” Gunkan said.

“No, let me take her out of here.” Cheren told him. “I think… it’s kinda my fault she was driven to this.”

“How is it your fault? Sandman was the one who…”

Indeed, Nolan took the credit for Doflamingo’s death. “Yeah, but I was really angry at her. I just… I’m really sure I can help her, just let me.”

“Very well. Her mind should be calm when she awakens.”

They waited half an hour before Sugar awakened. She was on a bed in a quiet room. Cheren was standing near her. “You calmed down, yet?”

“…Mm-hm.”

“Then I would like to say… I forgive you.”

Cleveland; Nugget River

“The truth is, I’m actually 22 years old.” Sugar began as she and Cheren walked parallel to the river. The land glowed golden in the sunset. “Born around when your parents were in action. My dad was trying to establish his company, but he was already rich, so Caesar’s Bang Gas business was set thanks to his money. By the time I was 10, Caesar created the Devil Fruit that would bring his friend’s company to life: the Hobby-Hobby Fruit. Dad gave it to me so I could make his dream a reality, and with the extra benefit of giving me eternal youth, I would never grow old and keep the company alive forever. But if something were to happen to me, it would all be over. Dad kept me on tight guard at all times. Only very few occasions would he trust me with someone else. He knew I would be useful in going to rescue Caesar, that’s why he wanted me to join KND. And also, for the chance that an operative would’ve discovered the Apocalypse… I could dispose of him, and no one would remember. That was his role in the Corporate Presidents. It was… my role.”

“And it wasn’t your choice to make.” Cheren deduced.

“Not at first… the pain grew on me over the years. Everyone else forgot those people… except me. But I tried to conceal that pain. Tried to be like my father. Cruel and heartless, showing no care for my victims. I took delight in removing their existence… took delight in removing innocent souls from the face of the earth. That way, I could keep living, happily, as an innocent little girl who eats grapes, and plays with toys.”

“But after all that, you were lying to yourself.” They stopped walking as Cheren stepped into the river to pick up some nuggets. “Even if you weren’t an adult inside, you’d never be able to embrace this pain.” He came back to give her a nugget.

“I really couldn’t. Then I choked on that grape… and everything went wrong. I actually hoped Dad would kill me… but after that failed, I had to think of some other way… I could finally be done with it all. My soul severed from my body, as it leaves my severed head. My heart and brain, containing all the burdens of ages… finally dead.” She ate the nugget.

“Sometimes… it would seem like the perfect escape… but it’s just too hard. But the pain you caused everyone is over, they all remember now. So yours can be over, too. It’s finally your chance
“Another thing about the curse… take a look.” She pulled back her hood, exposing the hair that ended at her neck. “To test if the fruit would work, my dad cut my hair this short to see if it’d grow back. It didn’t. And also,” she held her hands and feet to Cheren, “my finger and toenails stopped growing, too. Never had to cut ’em.” Cheren observed the pink spots on her fingers and toes and how impossibly short the nails were. “Not having to worry about styling hair and smoothing nails would give me more time to make toys. But I heard the growing of your hair and nails symbolizes your own growth, and when they’re eventually cut, new growth can commence, so so can yours.”

“And you’d like it if yours can grow again…”

“Mm…” She nodded.

“…I… really wish I could help you out.”

Sugar turned back to the river to soak her feet. They stared quietly at the sparkling ripples.

“You know… you actually saved me back there.”

“Mmm?” Sugar queried, eating another nugget.

“Aunt Morgan would’ve smoked me if you hadn’t intervened. She’s gotten so powerful… since my parents’ stories. I’ve never seen anything like it. And… hearing what the Government did to my dad… there’s still so much I have to do. And there’s so little time to do it…”

Sugar bit the nugget and savored its taste once more. “So what will you do?”

“…Sugar: you did me a favor. Me wanting to save Aunt Morgan was on an impulse. And I jumped into a battle too soon with someone who was way over my league. You saved me… from a terrible fate. The fact that I got outta there alive… means that I have to keep trying. I have to get stronger… and keep working to save everyone. I’m gonna keep my promise to Zanifr and stop this Apocalypse!”

She swallowed the last of that nugget. “But what does the future have for me?”

“I dunno. I guess we’ll just… have to try and grow as we move.”

“…” Even as an eternal child, Sugar knew she could grow inside… it was just hard to.

“It’s funny… you’re an eternal child that wants to grow… but do you know what I wish?”

“Hm?”

“…” The sun grew low enough to make his face seem incredibly dark, his eyes invisible, only a bright sparkle in his glasses. “To feel like an actual kid.”

“…” She listened patiently.

“To only pretend that… all of this chaos is going on, not actually have to worry about it, to go on make-believe adventures with friends and have fun because it’s not actually real. Not feel burdened by the weight of the world, not needing to worry about impending doom. I want… I want for all my friends to have that kind of normal life. We go to school, do some homework, play with each other, then become teenagers, look for dates, try to get married, get a job, start a family, and let our kids enjoy the cycle… without having to worry about all of this chaos and destruction. But you know what… that’s the life we chose. This Kids Next Door… it isn’t about stopping adults from feeding kids broccoli, brushing their teeth, or sending them to bed early… it’s about giving kids, and everybody, peace of mind. Trying to protect them from all of this chaos, so that they can live average, normal, happy lives. So that their responsibilities… are only so minor… that they can live in peace. I’d like… to have that kind of life, too. But if I don’t protect the lives that everyone wishes to live… then I can’t live in peace. It’s a duty that… I need to carry… or no one else will.”

“Hmmm…” Swallowed a piece. “That’s a very heavy burden to carry… and a great sacrifice…”

He didn’t say anything.

“…But you can still find happiness in what you do.”

“I know, I do. Sheila taught me that. To just… live in the moment, and act like this is some giant pretend game. And then we could do… anything. We’d always win. And we’d always feel free.”

He looked up to let what little light remain warm his face.

“Mm…” A thin smile. “I wish I could feel that way.” Sugar looked back at the river.

Cheren turned to her and gave a warm smile. “I’ll help you.” He stood up, “Come on, let’s hit the town. River nuggets get boring. I hear there’s this-” He was about to take her hand.

“Nnnn!” She hurriedly got up and backed away. “I-I don’t… feel well about touching.”

“Oh… well, we don’t need to. Otherwise it’ll look like we’re dating, heh he. Let’s go.” Cheren began the walk to the city as the sun was gone, and the sky glittered with stars. Sugar stared at her hands with worry before following him, slipping her hood back on.

Downtown Cleveland

The streets were bustling with people and the building and streetlights seemed awfully brighter. Blending in with hundreds of people going to hundreds of destinations, they were no different. No one would look in that crowd and point out that they had so much more going on. It seemed like a carnival was taking place downtown, for what, they didn’t know, they didn’t care. Lights of all colors filled the streets, everyone had a peculiar tone, no one their natural color. Cheren paid for a game where Sugar had to shoot targets moving along the wall. After getting enough decent shots, she got to keep a teddybear.

Cheren got her some cotton candy, strawberry, tasty. Still, the carnival was too crowded, Sugar kept freaking whenever somebody bumped into her, Cheren calmed her down and led her out. They decided to go to the Fancy Cuisine restaurant, got the special discount for kids, and the first decent meal Sugar got all day.

With their bellies full, they returned to wandering mindlessly, though reflectively, through town. They passed a bar where it sounded like someone was singing inside. Sugar peeked into the window to see a couple singing a duet.

Don’t go breakin’ mah heart!

_Couldn’t if IIII tried._

Oh HONEY, you-

“Oh, that reminds me, you probably read Ella Enchanted, huh?” Cheren guessed.
“I did. Saw the movie. Hated it. I wished the producers would die.”

“They wouldn’t be the only ones… Sugar, I know you aren’t proud of what you did, but you shouldn’t just think about dying all the time. Now that you’re free, isn’t there something you’ve always wanted to do?”

“Actually… there is one thing. I’ve always been in love with… music.”

“Music? …Well yeah, I mean everyone has their own type, I guess.”

“Well, part of me; if I could, wanted to become a singer when I got older. Just hearing… notes and pretty sounds in perfect rhythm… I dunno why, I just do.”

“…” Cheren saw the couple was almost finished singing, “Wanna give it a go?”

“Hm?”

“Just this once.” Cheren smirked.

Sugar blushed. “No, no, I couldn’t, I…”

Minutes later

The bar was ringing with a Bollywood soundtrack and shining rainbow spotlights as Cheren and Sugar danced on either end. “Like the wild elephant, I am trumpeting my love for youoou!” Cheren sang with a charming deep voice, twirling, sinking to one knee, and holding his arms open at Sugar.

“Like a hidden flower, my sweet fragrance comes intoooo view!” Sugar twirled on the tip of her toes, grinned, and winked at Cheren perkily.

They did an Egyptian moon-walk toward each other, then moved away. Cheren caught a rose in his teeth someone threw from the audience.

“MY heart burns for YOU like the sun at noon.” Cheren gestured toward himself, then at Sugar.

“My desert welcomes YOU, like the rainy moooonsoon!” She perkily tapped her finger to her cheek, then at Cheren.

“You are myyyyy heaaaart (hey!).” Cheren pulled off his jacket and rubbed it against his back like a towel, wiggling forward.

“MY univeeeerrrse!” Sugar spun, bent forward, and winked.

“You are myyyyy HEART.” Cheren rolled forward and held his arms open with more fire in his eyes.

“MY univeeeeeerse!” Sugar joyfully approached him with open arms.

“MY UNIVEEEEERRSE!” They almost linked—Sugar whipped her arms behind her, flinching, their voices cracked, confusing the audience. They recomposed and started dancing in circles with flexible fashions and complex animation.

“You are my HEART! MYYYY UNIVEEEEERSE, you are my HEART. MYYYY univeeeeeerse, MYYYY UNIVERRRRRRSE.” They stood upright on tiptoes, their faces inches from touching.
“Ahhh, that was fun.” Cheren sighed, hands folded behind his head as he and Sugar continued downtown.

“Yeah, that was!” Sugar smiled. “It’s weird, singing like that, I felt… a strange energy in my throat. A beautiful energy, but really weird!”

“Maybe your heart is telling you that this is what you wanna do.”

“It’s better than making toys, but…but I can’t. Not as long as… the Apocalypse is coming. There has to be something more…”

Cheren stopped before an alley, looking in. A torchlight brimmed around the corner. “I have an idea where we could look.”

Dr. Facilier’s Voodoo Emporium

“So with that, Sugar took three cards, as did Cheren. Facilier took Sugar’s first card, “You dear child, born in the golden ages!” His eyes alit with wonder, showing a picture of 2-year-old Sugar. “In those days when all mah favorite kids were still kids! Heheheh. In those days, you were a simple young’un, loved to play with them toys and eat them grapes.” The card became a flipbook, slowly showing Sugar grow older, a smile on her face ‘til she became a 10-year-old. “But alas, you don’t get much taller than this.” The pages kept flipping, but she grew no taller and her smile became a frown. “And ‘tis when the present, just ain’t go away.” The second card was of Sugar holding her hand to a transformed toy. “Naw, but that ain’t the life you chose, and you ain’t wantin’ ta keep all them feelings bottled up in there, naw what you wanted was to be free, let your voice be heard and give your soul that everlasting peace you so desperately craved for. ‘Short, all you wanna do… is sing…”

And Sugar stared with wonder as Facilier raised the third card. An image of her singing her heart out, mouth open, curved in a smile, eyes closed, as notes flew everywhere. Above her was a strange childlike being with a slim brown body, and long green hair like a note sheet. “IT’S THE SING, IT’S THE SING, IT’S THE SINGING YOU NEEEEED! And lookin’ to your future, it’s the singing I see.”

He then turned to Cheren and took his first card, “And you Little Man, I ain’t wasting much time. You look up to your mother, ‘came Supreme Leader, got shrunk a few times, NOW you freakin’ overpowered.’ The image was of young Cheren, his face serious, thrusting a wooden sword up and down. “And comin’ to the present here, you a wimpy little crybaby after gettin’ beat by yo’ aunt.” The next card was of Cheren crying on the ground, and Morgan’s fist stretched out. “Course that ain’t the end of you, Little Man, where yo’ daddy failed, you still got a shot, and yo’ destiny has yet to be carved in stone. But all’s Ah can give of yo’ destiny, is drawn on this little card, this little card that-” Facilier raised the third card-

8888888888

Cheren could only catch the brief image of two flashing 8’s before he was forced to shut his eyes from intense brightness. “WHOA! …Hehe… you got a lot goin’ on in yo’ life, Kid.” Facilier tucked the card away.

Cheren got back on his seat, brushing his disheveled hair. “Hey, Uncle Facilier… can you… Do you think you can do something about Sugar’s curse?"

“Hmmm, that’s a big thang to ask me, Kid. But them Devil Fruits, they made of both natural and Underworld energy, magic can’t work miracles, Kid. But what mortals can’t do, that’s why we have gods. ‘sumin’ they want to help. All I’m sayin’ is, just keep an open mind, and yo’ troubles may be dealt with, yet.”

“…Well then… how do I know where to go next?”

“Hmmm that’s a good question. And for all good questions, we must look deep into the soul. And nothin’ peers into the soul more like crystal balls.” He reached under the table and grabbed a crystal ball, placing in the center. “Now please… take my hands.” He rested his hands on the ball.

Sugar looked hesitantly. Her fear of touching people. “Come on, Girl. Won’t you take… a poor sinner’s hands?”

“Not the way you say it.” Cheren remarked.

“Just touch ‘em, Girl.”

She stared for a few more seconds, then looked at her own hands. Very slowly, she raised them and reached to touch Facilier’s. Her hands just inches from his, the two wondered if she would even make it. Finally, they made contact.

Sugar’s body became swallowed with gooey magic energy before she transformed into a puppet of herself. “Hhhhhahahahahahahahaha!” Facilier cracked up. “Boy, that always gets ‘em!” He cast a spell to change her back, her pupils shrunken as she shuddered.

“Why’d you do that?!” Cheren yelled.

“Kid, Kid,” he raised hands in defense, “these hands be clean, I ain’t do that! But see, ol’ Sugy ain’t gonna be able to see her future without first being free of her past. She needs to acknowledge what happened, happened, and’s gotta learn to move on with it. And there ain’t no harm with touchin’ people, right? …”

Cheren turned to her with a smile, “Take my hands, Sugar.” She looked nervously at his open hands. “Come on… you can hold a close friend’s hands.”

That warm smile, his assuring eyes… she’s never seen it on him before. It was funny how he could offer his hands… as if what happened before, didn’t happen. He wasn’t afraid… so maybe she shouldn’t be. She slowly reached her hands over… and lay them on his.

Their fingers locked, thumbs curled around the other’s. Sugar never placed her hands on another’s for so long. She never knew… how warm it was. How their very hearts could connect. How all the worry in their minds could slowly sink away…

Sugar pulled her hands away and moved them to Facilier’s. Her mind now clear, their eyes closed, they saw into the crystal orb. (Play “Dreams” from Spyro: The Eternal Night.)

Dream Realm

Sugar was awash in fog, which cleared up in seconds to find herself on an asteroid within a vast, peaceful space, where many blue asteroids drifted. “Huh. …Where am I?”

"Don Quixote Sugar… So nice to have company."
“Whuh? Who said that?”

“Child… I am… The Chronicler. Spirit who watches peoples’ dreams.”

“You sound like a stalker. Go away.”

“Ah... how I missed that. Please... step into the light.” A bunch of asteroids lined up to make a path. Sugar rushed across it, coat blowing behind her as she made it to an altar with a glowing white circle, tiny faint music notes in its light. She calmly stepped inside, and found herself in a mystical, colorful dimension of dancing notes.

“So many years... has the music in your soul been contained. But now, it is ready to be released. Music... is the Element of Voice. When someone is in deep tune with their emotions... their sorrows... their soul... and wish to let them out... they can control the very flow of that sound. And can bend... Music."

“So I’m a musicbender?"

“Yes... and after 22 years, your chi can finally take form. Your voice... will know light.”

Sugar closed her eyes and opened only her mouth, letting the sounds come out. “Ooooaaaaaaaaaa...” With a rise of her own voice, the notes blew away.

She was taken back to the space realm as the gate opened, letting her progress to a huge glass wall. “There will be barriers that shield your voice. Let those barriers... know it first.”

So with a strong inhale, “OOOO-oo-oo-oo-oo-AAAAA-AAAAAAAAAAAAAA!” the glass came tumbling to pieces. The shards crunched beneath her sandals as she continued, stopping at a vast chasm. “When physical bodies are unavailable, let the music guide your way. Sing a song, and flow along with the rhythm.”

Flow with the rhythm... there was a song Sugar always liked dancing to. And it may work in this case. “SPREAD your tiny wings and fly awaaaaay...” Singing “Snowbird” by Gene MacLellan, a vertical, colorful trail in the form of note lines stretched to the other side. “If I could, you know that I would fly away with yoouuu.” Sugar surfed across this path and hit the notes as she went with the rhythm, alternating levels to do so. However, the next path was higher than this Note Road, so- “Aa-aa-aa-aa-aaaaaa!” She sang a stairway to slide up and make it. “Away with yooollllllouu!”

She landed on a small field with giant horns on the other side. “Some sound, to put it simply, gets annoying, and no work gets done. Put a stopper to it.”

“I don’t hear any-”

BBBBBBBBUUUUUUEEEEEEERRRRRRRRRR

The horns blasted music too painful and annoying, Sugar couldn’t go any further. She couldn’t clamp her ears tight enough, so she thrust her hands toward the horns—a blurry, semi-visible barrier appeared that muted the sound entirely. She kept this barrier up and progressed into a larger field where dozens of Stone Demons stood guard. “The evil ones wish to silence your voice. Show the-”

RIIIIIIINNNNNNG!

“S-Sorry, my speaker is- dammit-”
“Ugh, just fight them.”

The Stone Demons ran at Sugar, who unleashed streams of notes from her lungs and cracked their heads into pieces. She danced and nimbly avoided their grabs, her movements generating colorful notesheets that flew around and made the monsters dizzy, so Sugar could send soundwaves to knock them down. Sugar began to clap her hands forcefully, increasing the volume of the claps to make the ground crack, the Stone Demons following suit. It wasn’t long before hundreds more began rising from the gravel.

Hundreds of sounds were generated from the crumbling of stone. Sugar could hear them all. “When your soul is at its purest... your voice speaks the loudest.”

“Sorry, I didn’t catch that, say again?”

“I said, when your soul is at its-”

“STILL can’t hear you, speak a LITTLE loud-”

“I SAID, WHEN YOUR SOUL IS-” RRRRRREEEEEEEE “DAH, GOD BLAST IT, I CALLED THE COMPANY FOR A NEW SPEAKER, BUT THEY COULDN’T COME BECAUSE MY LOCATION WAS TOO INCONVENIENT, WELL I-!!”

“OOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOO...!” Sugar’s high-pitch wail was the only sound that could enter anybody’s ears. The heads popped on all the stone men, until Sugar was the only one standing.

“Huuuurr... very good. My throat hurts a little, but... at least you understand. But remember the rhythm and volume of your voice. Control it, lest those nearest you hear no more. Especially your neighbors.”

“You still creep me out. Go away.”

“It still brings a tear to my eye. Step into the light.”

A stairway brought Sugar to a floating temple, where she passed a colorful gate of notes. “Wow, I only learned about musicbending 5 minutes ago, and I actually have a pretty good grasp.” She smiled.

“It’s easier when you have a creepy spirit being, whose realm flows with mystical spirit energy, to teach you. With your voice now awakened, your destiny calls. At last, she can finally have a Guardian.”

“Who?”

“Look inside the pool.”

Sugar stood over the small, round, golden pool in the center. She dove her face inside. (End song.)

In a galaxy far far away, a great dome station floated within the stars. Hundreds of aliens partied, the flashy lights, music, and fun was endless. On a stage, aliens in black suits danced, mimicking the rhythm of a short fairy-like imp with blue-and-black hair. They cried when robot sentries burst in and started shooting everywhere. “In the Solana Galaxy, the Music Spirit, Meloetta hides undercover. Go to the Electrodroome and save her.”
Facilier’s Emporium

Sugar gasped awake, her drool on the table curtain. “That can sometimes happen.” Facilier said. “Getting so bored, you fall asleep. So did ya learn anything, Sugar?”

She wiped her mouth. “I’m a musicbender.” Cheren’s mouth dropped like an anvil.

“I thought as much. Then do ya know where ya need to go?”

“. . . I need to go to the Solana Galaxy to save Meloetta, the Music Spirit.”

“Wow, Facilier. Why isn’t this a bustling business?” Cheren asked.

“Oh, I ring in more customers than you think. I may just relocate shop if I weren’t so close to mah customers.”

Just then, the front door flew open, and a familiar blue-haired child rushed in with a winged white cat by her side. “Mr. Facilier! I’m back from-!” She immediately halted upon the sight of the visitors. “Oh... I didn’t realize you had company over, I’m sorry.”

Cheren gasped. “Hey, you’re that girl I saw while I was driving!”

“Oh!” She sparked in remembrance. “I didn’t expect to see you again! My name’s Wendy.” She held a hand out.

“Nice to meet ya again, Wendy!” He shook. “I’m Cheren, this is my friend, Sugar.”

“Hi, Sugar.” Wendy held a hand to her. “You have pretty hair.”

“. . . Um. . .” Sugar stared at her hand nervously.

“Suuugaaaaar. Whaddid I teach you about manners?” Cheren asked scoldingly.

“Thanks. She’s my friend, Carla. We’re trying to-”

“GREAT, y’all are crossover buddies, and I’m sure you’d love to fill each other of your respective story arcs, but we gotta get movin’!” Facilier hurriedly gestured Cheren and Sugar out of the shop. “Good luck, kids! Bring home the good news!” Slammed the door.

“. . .” Huh. Extremely curious.” said Cheren.

“Indeed.”

“So, the Solana Galaxy. Where in cosmos could that be. Did Chronicler tell you?”

“How did you know-”

“Suspected.”

“No, he didn’t.”

“Well, that stinks. There must be someone who... oh? Fi.” The spirit jumped out of his sword.

“Master, I possess information that may be of service. The Solana Galaxy is a region of space named by the Sun God, Solaris. It is a region of great significance as it holds the planet which serves as the Realm of Music, Symphonia, meant to be Music Spirit, Meloetta’s home. According to legend, the planet itself is invisible to the eyes of mortals, and can only be found with Meloetta’s guidance.”

“Then do you know where Solana is?”

“I would be happy to guide a path, Master. Whenever you are ready, please, let us find the most available ship and take flight.”

Cheren didn’t need to think long. “No other sector is closer.”

Sector V Treehouse

“WHADDYOU MEAN YOU GUYS ARE TIRED?!”

Sector V was lazily lounging around the living room. “No offense, Cheren, but we had a hard day.” Aurora said, laying on the couch. “We’re just not up for any missions right now.”

“But you guys barely did anything since this quest began, and don’t you agree we gotta get as much done as we can??”

“First of all, I have mixed feelings about traveling with her.” Chris pointed at Sugar. “Even if she is reformed, it still doesn’t get past it. And second, when exactly did the quest ‘begin’, we haven’t found any of the Lights or Darkesses, or any hints. Third, ask Sector W or W7 how much THEY accomplished in this quest.”

“Plus, if we’re going to another galaxy, we have a query:” Haylee informed nonchalantly. “Our C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. that had a Warpdrive Key was destroyed by Tachyon way back when, and we neglected to get another one while we were sailing the Seven Seas. We only got back to Earth on Sector W7’s train.”

“Alright, then we’re asking Sector W7.” Cheren shrugged. “Maybe they’ll enjoy saving Meloetta from killer robots.”

“Hold on, whadabout robots?” Dillon asked.

“I dunno, Sugar saw ’em.”

“In my vision, Meloetta was attacked by robots.” She explained. “They had green glass domes, no feet, and electric claws.”

“They sound like the robots who kidnapped Maddy.”

“Say what?!” Chris jumped. “Then we have to go! If that’s where they took her.”

“Chris, when are you gonna suck Maddy’s face and start dating, already.” Haruka remarked.

“Soon as you smooch Lee.”

“Are you gonna come or what?” Cheren asked.

“I guess we should.” Aurora sighed, getting up. “But we’re sleeping on their train.”

“With Chimney driving, good luck.” Mason noted as everyone else followed suit.

“Glad we could convince you.” Cheren replied. “Hey, wasn’t there a skeleton with you?”
“Django went back home to check with his crew.” Dillon said. “Hopefully they’ll bring Midna back, but I doubt it. Honestly, our sector’s gonna explode if we welcome anymore members.”

Sector W7 Treehouse

“Hnnnnnnn-nnnnn.” Chimney scanned the Sector V members and Sugar curiously while they gathered before the R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. in the hangar. Her teeth clenched the lower lip of her big mouth. “So you ferōzu think you’re worthy to ride the Rocket-san, ah? On what grounds does this bold claim lie?”

“We rode it before, you dumb beaver.” Chris stated.

“When lives were on the line and you begged and pleaded me!! But it’s nighttime, so the on’nankanokos are a wee bit sleepy after playin’ with our new, uh, ‘guest.’”

“Heh, you have a wannabe operative, too?” Dillon chuckled.

“Oh God, don’t put the idea in ‘er head. She’s a nutcase!” In the background, April walked in and was watching them. “She colored Aisa’s toenails with crayon and she’s drawing Jesus all over the walls! UGH, what I wouldn’t give ta… ‘ey, if we go into space, can we chuck her out the airlock??”

“I would hold you liable.” Cheren told her.

“Chimney, I think it would be great if we went and took Mary with us.” April smiled, walking over. “If she saw the kind of missions we go on, she could become an operative; not in our sector maybe, it’d just be cool if she joined.”

“Okay, fine, for the Kids Next Door’s dignity, and my desire to show off my awesome train, we’ll go to Solala or whatever you call it. ‘EEEEYYY ON’NANKOOOOS, getchor asses down here, we’re goin’ to spaaaaace!!”

“Good luck, Sugar.” Cheren was about to walk away.

“Wait! Why aren’t you coming?”

“I’ve been away from my operatives one day too many. I have to keep them organized. And I have to find a way to get stronger so I can save Aunt Morgan and beat the World Government.”

“Okay… I understand. …Can you promise me something, then?”

“Mm?”

Sugar smiled and held a pinky out. “Let me have a swing at the Government, too. As soon as I master my musicbending, I wanna put it to good use.”

Cheren locked his pinky with hers. “The more, the merrier.” He then drew his sword and said, “Fi, you’ll show them the way, right?”

Fi came out. “As you request, I will indicate the direction Sectors V and W7 must take to Solana Galaxy. I hope that you will fair well without my guidance for this period.”

“I’ll survive.” He nodded.

“April, what’s going on?” Mary asked when the other W7 members arrived.
“We’re going on a mission, Mary.” April replied brightly. “Wanna come with? It’ll be really fun.”

“A…A mission? A Kids Next Door mission? Won’t that be dangerous?”

“The most dangerous part is Chimney driving, but we always survive that. Plus, we…we promised Cheren we would all help him as best as we could. You don’t have to.”

“No, I’ll go! I don’t wanna be left alone here. I wanna spend this vacation with you, April!”

“Hm hm hm, okay then!” They headed for the train. “If you join Kids Next Door, you’d be able to see us a lot more—”

“NOOOOO!” screamed Chimney.

Everyone was onboard and the train was roaring to life. They were forced back against their seats when the craft zipped off to the stars. Once out of Earth’s atmosphere, Fi appeared in front of the windshield. She floated to their left, so Chimney turned the train to face her. “The Solana Galaxy is 5 million light-years this direction. I advise you on Cheren’s behalf to exercise caution.”

“5 MILLION LIGHT-YEARS WE GOOOOO!” Chimney stomped a pedal, activated the Warpdrive function, their target set, and zipped into infinity.

Solana Galaxy

“You cannot look at that girl and tell me with a straight face, she fuckin’ looks like Carol??” Dillon stated, pointing in Mary’s direction aggressively.

“Dillon, I told you if you kept hanging out with her, you’d go crazy.” Mason said with a trolling smile. “Now you see every girl like her.”

“BUT SHE DOES LOOK LIKE CAROL, blonde hair, blue eyes, green dress, and she’s nuts!”

“The apple of your eye, I see. If anything, she looks like Alice from Wonderland.”

“GHHHHHHHHHHH!”

April and Mary were one seat over from them, looking weirdly. “What are they talking about, April?”

“Boy stuff, Mary. Boys are stupid.”

“I’ll say.” Sugar was eating grapes in the seat in front of them.

“So you were in Sector DR, right?” Mocha asked, taking the whole of the seat behind the cousins. “You were in training with me!”

“Oh, yeah. You almost stepped on me. I wanted you to die.”

Mocha shrunk (as much as she could) in her seat. “I’m sorry.”

“And you’re a musicbender, too? You and I could make great friends, Sugar!” April said. “Music’s a kind of art, after all.”

“Yeah, I guess we could.”

“‘ey, V-chans, what exactly are we lookin’ for in this dead space??” yelled Chimney. “We been “flyin’ for hours!”

“A space station-dome of some sorts.” Sugar walked up to the pilot’s deck. “That was where Meloetta was said to be.”

“Nnn? Is that a place?”

Chimney pointed at a huge, dome-topped structure floating just a few miles away, many ships going to and from it. “Yes, that’s it.” Sugar confirmed. “Let’s land.”

“There ain’t any train stations.” Chimney said.

“Park right here, we’ll make it.”

Chimney did so, and the operatives assumed they would be floating to the barrier entrance, which couldn’t even be entered by people alone. They put on space helmets, and Sugar stood at the edge of the train door. She sang majestic vocals that created a colorful Song Road, in which all V and W7 members surfed up and around the station. “Guard the ship, Mochan!” Chimney told the giant, who sadly didn’t have a helmet her size, and Aeincha was stuffed into Chimney’s helmet. They alternated lines as Sugar did to hit the notes, stay with the rhythm, until the toymaker found a sealed hatch for electricians to climb in and out. Sugar stopped the road so they could float beside it, and Chris burned the keyhole with a blowtorch finger. All operatives climbed inside, the last one, Kirie closing the hatch, and crawled through the stuffy tunnel until they found the other end and entered the Electrodrome.

They were hit with flashing colorful lights and techno music that would make little conversation possible. Aliens of all types were dancing on the beeping tiles. “Naaaaaahh! I can’t imagine anything more loud!” Chimney whined. (“Gyom-gyom!”)

“Still hear you just fine.” April said. “Stay close, Mary, it’ll be easy to get lost… Mary?”

“Ha ha ha ha! LOOK, April!” The 13-year-old’s eyes widened. Mary was in-between some slug aliens with sunglasses, wiggling in a vertical spineless fashion like them. “It’s like my bones are made of jelly! The music is really hypnotizing! Wanna do it with me?”

“Get a grip on yourself,” Apis said, “we have to find this Meloetta spirit- oh?”

April and Mary now joined some skinny stick aliens, positioning their straight arms at many angles and shifting their feet left-and-right, then crossed their arms like an ‘X’ and jumping. “Now is NOT the time!!” Chris shouted.

“I remember seeing Meloetta on a stage with some dancers.” Sugar said. “Maybe we’ll ask around; I’m sure at least somebody knows her.”

“Malllilies and femalllllilites!” Steam erupted from a stage across this dance floor as the slim, fembot popstar, Courtney Gears rose up. “Everybody CLEAR the dance floor, ‘cause we’re having a special competition: a race around Electrodrome to win the honor of meeting our very own fairy legend, Unovaaaaa!” The large screens projected the smiling, winking blue-haired fairy from Sugar’s vision. “The winner of the race will not only meet her, but have the glory of dancing on the same stage as Unova! So pick up a kart and the Electrodrome Raceway will be open!”

“A kart race inside a dancing studio?” Chris questioned.

“Unova looks like Meloetta.” Sugar noticed. “He did say she was undercover. …I’m going to enter this race.”
“You know how to drive?” Harry asked.

“When I was little, my dad let me drive our Junior Raceway. Shouldn’t be much different, right?”

Sub-game: Electrodrome Raceway

Coincidentally, the station had a Kiddie Wagon in stock, a colorful car with parts designed like toys, but were still efficient. Sugar was in 5th place in this race of 8 racers as Courtney Gears floated on a platform to wave the flags. Three… two… one… Gooo! (Play “Electrodrome” from Mario Kart 8!)

The cars took off at the same time, Sugar already passing 4th and 3rd place after getting a good start-boost. They raced past a doorway and around the clear track of the following room, the pink posh road reflecting the many lights, string-like black lines going along it in perfect parallel form. The cars made careful use of drifts while sliding around this zigzaggy road, where Sugar lost control and bumped into a corner, watching other cars zip by while she regained herself. She kept going in 7th place, passing the first row of ? Blocks that gave her a Boost Shroom. She waited ‘til they were clear of this zigzag, so upon entering the next room, where the road sloped down over an electric pool and would go up, curve left, and turn vertical along a wall. Sugar slid down the slope, increasing her own speed, and before going up the hill, she hit the boost and shot up, bumping 6th place and quickly drifting to go vertical.

She was thankful the gravity shifted, but Sugar was careful to maneuver around the obstacles on the road, passing 5th place on the way. They turned horizontal again and drove around a right corner, racing across a road of scattered roads over the room where the race started. A left, middle, or right door they could take, so Sugar chose middle. The hallway was barely wide as the width of her kart, a sudden increase in speed when Sugar zipped down the steep slope, catching a ? Block before she entered a great, vast chamber that was black with sparkles in every direction. The other roads were above her at different levels, she saw the racers, she was 4th place for the time being. She picked up a Power Star from that block and switched it on, becoming neon and invincible.

It presented a fast-pace jingle, so Sugar hummed along with the jingle and created a Song Road just partway down this track, driving up in her kart to get onto one of the higher roads. This surprised the racer in front of her, so she rammed him with her rainbow kart and scored 3rd place. Just when the Power Star wore off, KZZZZZHIIHH, the racers were struck by lightning and shrunk to toy size. 4th place restored and passed her while she was mini, but she grew back and kept going. They had passed a new hallway and entered another giant room, pink and bubbly flashes along the exteriors with the road mimicking this design. The roads circled around pipes of Disco Piranhas that threatened to snap them should they drive near, and 3rd place was so fortunate as Sugar passed him.

The end of this room had the road curve straight up the wall, got a ? Block, loop upside-down, and when Sugar drove off the end, she flipped right-side-up and extracted her kart’s glider. She soared over the roads she just crossed, flew to the right of the sloped road that brought her down there, and into a passage within the wall over the energy pool. She drove through a barren hall that brought her to the starting room, where 2nd place was about to cross the finish line. Sugar blasted the Red Shell she acquired and crossed first, starting Lap 2. She followed the zigzag path again, keeping careful with the drifts and narrowing in on 1st. She grabbed the ? Block and landed Green Shell, then released in a desperate attempt to hit 1st. But the shell missed, and bouncing around the zigzag road, Sugar was hit.

3rd, 4th, and 5th passed her by the time Sugar was at normal speed. They whooshed down the ‘U’ path and up the other end, turning vertical and racing to the 2nd floor of the starting room. Sugar was hit by a Green Shell, so 6th and 7th place passed her, but 8th was still behind. After maneuvering the scattered road road, she entered the right hallway, which didn’t slope, kept flat, only curved zigzag, and grabbed the ? Block before entering the vast, sparkly room. She was on the highest route, so Sugar deduced she took what would’ve been the left route via that Song Road.
She got a Boomerang and shot it to 5th and 6th, hitting them both and stealing the places. She drifted around the curving road before entering the hall that sloped up. She threw the boomerang behind her when she saw the two racers catching up.

The resulting room was almost blinding, where the vertical track would bring them onto the gigantic disco ball. Sugar shut her right eye, for her left was protected by the pink glass eyepatch.
She drove along the ball in the direction it rotated, ? Blocks scattered and spinning with it, but with Sugar’s superior speed, she got one. It landed on Bullet Bill, let her kart take the shape, and zipped around the planet-like disco before a ray of light shone directly down from its bottom. Sugar flew in, flew down, flew across the flat road into the starting room, and rammed 4th place aside before reverting to normal and crossing the line.

Lap 3 began, so Sugar was determined to catch up. She drifted the zigzag path, grabbed the ?
Block, and activated her Power Star. She hit 3rd place and stole it, and when she began the ‘U’ track, she hummed the tune, created a Song Road on her right, which looped upside-down, back to normal, and passed the vertical road entirely to land Sugar on the scattered floor, in 2nd place. She barely caught up to 1st before the star wore off, and she chased him into the middle hall. She slid doooown, and followed this lower path all the way until the end sent them directly down into the sparkly sea. As Sugar predicted, it was more blinding, pink, and bright, for this room had electricity surging everywhere.

This road was a matter of driving around electrical generators, while evading electric waves that surfed over the road between them. Sugar had to slow down a lot, afraid of being struck, but 1st place only got farther. Despite her caution, Sugar was hit by an electric wave and shrunk to toy size —but another racer used a Lightning Bolt, so with Sugar already mini, the effects were not only counteracted, but she grew to twice her normal size. This gave her an enhance in speed, she easily captured up to 1st place and crushed him.

She shrunk to normal by the time she entered a doorway, where gravity shifted and she drove straight up. She shifted back to normal and crossed the finish line before anymore racers appeared.
The studio flashed furiously as her cheering, waving image appeared onscreen. (End song.)

The other racers were zooming up, so Sugar braced for possible revenge-impact. But they haphazardly crashed into the wall or beacons, their karts squished. The robots and helmeted apes flew out, dizzy. Sugar stared with utter confusion, as did Sector V when they came. “You were racing against monkeys and robots?” Chris asked.

“Made me think, though.” Sugar said. “I hope they die.”

“Congratulations!” Courtney Gears walked up, swaying her hips. “For a twerp in kiddie gear, you know the way of the road. And I’m guessing these are all your friends. Well, we’ll see if Unova has time for extra autographs. This way, kids.”

The operatives shrugged and followed Courtney across the room, on stage, and into a small room with a smaller stage. “Hear she is, Goddess of Music, Meloetta!” The kids gasped, for the fairy spirit they had sought was trapped within an electric cage. She was lain down, but she cracked an eye open and tried to stand to see her visitors. “Eeeh-!” Her leg touched a bar, zapping her.

When all sectormates were inside, the room sealed, and robots and apes locked on with guns from their points on walkways atop the walls. “Gotchaaaaa!” sang Pink Monkey, appearing onstage.
"Bet you didn’t expect an ambush."

"What’s going on here?!" Aurora said.

"After much soul-searching thought, me and Courtney have finally come to an agreement, and I consider her my musical equal!" Pink Monkey happily hugged the robo woman’s legs. "For now."

"That’s not what we were wondering." Mason said.

"Our boss thought you kids would be after the Firstborn, so when we confirmed ‘Unova’ here to be Meloetta, well it was our best shot.” explained Courtney. “Now wouldn’t you know it, we have one of the Lights he described for us.”

The 11 kids froze and viewed each other in total wonder and confusion. Sugar shook back to reality, “What do you have against us?”

“We’re not ‘against’ you, it just so happens you’re in our way, and you probly won’t listen to us, so we have to keep you kiddies in line. Now as you see, the Music Spirit is in our custody. Be good little twerps and surrender quietly, or her pretty little voice is gonna go soft.”

“Uuuh!” Meloetta was shocked again. The robots and apes had weapons locked on the operatives, but they were afraid to fight back, worried for Meloetta’s fate.

“Rotom on the scene!” A sudden electrical current traveled along the chain to the cage, blowing it open as Meloetta fell out.

“Milady!” Humanoid dancers with blue, green, or yellow skin, with black hair, sunglasses, and clothes, burst in, with a muscular male one catching Meloetta. The others agilely flipped onto the walkways to break the robot’s domes and bash the monkeys unconscious. The male dancer jumped offstage beside the kids as the others joined. “She’s okay.”

“My dancers!” Meloetta perked up. “You’re here to save me?”

“We knew you were Meloetta all along.” a female said. “You’re a goddess to all singers, that’s why we wanted to protect you.”

“’Kept it quiet, ‘cause you don’t know how many’re out there.” A male said with a deep voice.

“You guys!” Meloetta began tearing. “You really are my friends! I’m so glad I have you! Wah ha haaaah!”

“What a drama queen.” Artie remarked.

“Go on and take care of her.” Sugar told them, facing Courtney and Pink determinedly. “I’ll give payback to these two.”

“Not without me, you won’t.” Harry walked up beside her. “A duet’s no good without a second.”

“You’re a musicbender, too?”

“No. But you don’t need to be to control Music Chi.”

“Don’t worry, Milady, we’ll protect you!” Rotom appeared over the weakened spirit.

“Yeah. Give ‘em heck for us, you two.” Dillon told them before they all escaped.
“You kids have a lot of nerve to go against Dr. Nefarious.” Courtney scolded, a catchy techno tune playing. “If you’re here looking for that Maddy girl, too bad she already escaped us.”

“So you kidnapped her.” Harry said firmly. “After we wipe the dancefloor with you, we’ll pass the message to Nefarious.”

“Oh, no you won’t!” Pink swayed. “Because he has Specy on his side, and no one can beat him. Anyhoo, Courtney and I have a concert later, so this really bites into our time. But hey, we’ll be delighted to give you a taste of our teamwork.”

Sugar flinched when Harry gripped her small hand in his larger one. “Kids Next Door put ‘teamwork’ in the dictionary. We’re just a small taste. Aren’t we, Sug’?”

“…Um… yeah.” Sugar put her fears aside and faced the enemies with passionate eyes. “Let’s do it!”

“Hm hm hm!” Pink laughed. “They asked for it, Courtney, we warned them. There’s no escape!”

(Play Courtney Gears’ Theme from Ratchet: Up Your Arsenal.)

Boss fight: Courtney Gears and Pink Monkey

“We see the future, and what do we seeee?” sang Courtney.

“‘bots and apes rulin’, the galaxyyyyy!” sang Pink.

“So much destruction, such little time.”

“But soon, the day when we taste, clementiitiine!”

The spotlights flew up-and-down in the background as the ladies shook their hips and performed cartwheels that mirrored the other. They spun back beside each other as Courtney sang:

“We have seen a world far beyond our OWN, wow!”

“Now we wish to go there, and we won’t be ALONE, now!”

“We have many friends, great guys in high places!”

“A certain special one has the prettiest of faces!” Pink winked, thinking of Specter.

The music did some rapid-fast notes, the lights flashing furiously as the girls shook their bodies, swayed their shoulders, shook, clapped hands over and swayed their heads, then shook again. “My Nefarious wants us metal husks to have power!”

“My Sweet Specter wants no more apes to cower!” Pink’s eyes sparkled.

“Many others, though, want to have this world, however.”

“I know a special place, though, where one never could say never!”

“Do you mean?” “I do, girl!” “IT’S A: a New Worlllld!” They locked arms and twirled.

“Where we can aaaaaalways sing!” cheered Courtney.
“A New Worrrrrld-” They broke away and tap-danced back.

“Do that ba-NAAAA-na thing!”

“A New World! Where we all can be happy!” They took hands and spun again. “So come down everybody! Don’t go be sappy!”

And with another invigorating twirl, the ladies unleashed a stream of musical notes and pummeled Harry and Sugar. “Ah! They really sing well.”

“Don’t lose your cool.” Harry threw on his sunglasses. “We have a song, too.”

“You wanna take the world and run it all da way you like? Well, you gonna learn the hard way girls, life just ain’t an easy hike- tell ‘em, Sug’!”

Sugar stood upright and jumped left-and-right with the rhythm, performing a twirl and sinking to a squat with both hands on the floor. “My world is my home, you better be prepared.” Harry grabbed the wrist of Sugar’s right arm and swung her around. “Like it, I can spin around, faster than you ever dared!”

And Sugar was thrown above the enemies as she fired a beam of notes from her lungs, blasting them apart. She landed as Harry joined her on stage. “Sexy ‘bot and slutty monkey, going up a tree.” Sugar continued, mimicking movements with Harry. “Falling down and up and down, until they had to pee.”

The remark angered Courtney and Pink, so both ran back up to head-bash the brats, only for them to jump off and trick the ape and ‘bot into ramming each other. They recomposed and growled at the synchronized Harry and Sugar. “You got your thing too, well: well, do we got ours. A big, blue world, granted by the powers.”

“It’s not perfect, it’s not great.” Sugar smiled and sang fast. “There’s plenty things we love to hate.”

“But you see.” “That’s just it.” “IT’S... OUR OLD WORRRRLD-”

“(Old World!)” Harry and Sugar locked both hands and shifted their feet left-and-right in mirrored fashion. “It’s got the Seeeeeven Seas-” sang Sugar.

“(Old World!) It’s got bacon and peas!”

“(OLD World!) It’s ALL for weee- SO YOU.” stomped toward Court and Pink, “WILL. NOT TAKE IT FROM MEEEE.” They spun, threw their arms open at the ladies, and washed a wave of notes over them.

The duo recovered once more with teeth clenched tight. “You kids are REALLY annoying!” Courtney yelled.

“Hah! Our voiceboxes are still fresh!” Harry taunted.

“Not for long! I’ve been singing baby-talk ‘til now!” Pink proclaimed. “Let’s teach them, Court!”

“WE! WILL. Spend-the-rest-of-our-lives, fighting-with-you!” Their fast singing blasted notes like bullets at the kids. “We. Will. Spend-the-rest-of-our-days, toying with you! YOU. WILL. Go down like hives, STABBED WITH KNIVES!” A string of knives flew at them outta nowhere, the kids narrowly dodging. “You’ll know pain for the REST OF YOUR LIVES, right
Spikes popped up from the floor, knives rained, Harry and Sugar bolted everywhere to avoid every one that came. “Where are these coming from?!”

“Music Chi can create illusions based on what the bender sings.” Harry informed, panting. “‘Course, we can do it, too. Get ready!”

Sugar slid to a halt, threw her arm back, and sent a wave of chi to blow the bladed illusions away. She and Harry began to dance again. “Wanna try ta crush us, with a spike and knife monsoon? We’ll go all ape on you: like a hammerhead cartoon.”

When Harry sang, his head transformed into a giant hammer, Courtney and Pink running frantically, but Harry smashed them both flat. He changed back as Sugar sang. “My passion burns just like the sun. Let’s see it now and have some fun!” She threw her arms up and became a burning sun that blinded the villains. Harry rolled forward (protected by his sunglasses), grabbed Pink, and chucked her at Courtney.

The sun faded, and the two were up again. “You guys have no class, no, you kids just don’t see.” sang Courtney.

“We will be the LAST: standing, on our very knees!”

“We all have a dream, you know, it will come on TO show.”

“Mine for now is to crush you. I hope you scream it when I do.” Pink winked.

“You can crush our bones, yeah, you ain’t crush our soul.” countered Harry. “In the end, I think one of us, just may get our goal.”

Courtney: ‘Goal is that?

Harry: You know, you prat.

Sugar: Should we say?

Pink: Only way.

“IT’S. UH. New Worrrrld-”

“For sweet Specyyyy!” winked Pink.

“New Worrrrrrld-”

“For OUR Cherryyyy!” sang Sugar.

“New Worrrrrld-”

“Can’t you two see?” Harry asked.

“OUR FAITH, LIES WITH, HEEEEEEE!” Another stream of notes flew from Harry and Sugar, knocking Court and Pink down.

“Grrrrrrr THAT’S IT!!” Pink’s eyes were demonic when she recovered. The room turned dark as she hovered in midair.
“Pink! Nooo!” cried Courtney.

“I have had ENOUGH of you! It’s time to DIIIIEEEEEE!” Notes flew everywhere aimlessly, Harry and Sugar taking hits, Courtney couldn’t even stand when her partner was this mad. “YOU SCUM. YOU JERKS! I AM THE QUEEN OF THIS STAGE! I won’t lose my spotlights to a COUPLE OF RUNTS!”

I can spend the rest-of-my-life

I can spend an eternity CRYING!

Sugar listened to the rhythm, fast and uncontrollable it was, she swiftly memorized and evaded, steadily dancing her way to Pink.

I can spend the rest-of-my-life

Making you spend the rest of your life LYING!

So I’ll spend the rest-of-my-life

I will spend my ENTIRE LIFE chasing YOOOOOOOUUUU!

A soundwave that could expand for light-years erupted from her lungs. Sugar blocked the sound with all of her might, kept the space around her mute while she shoved toward Pink, but the shield was cracking, little voice-cracks popped through, they were annoying. The entire station was shaking from Pink’s voice, it might just explode any time. Through sheer force of will, Sugar made it to Pink and enclosed the Silence Shield over her. The shaking stopped, only the music sounded, nothing to threaten their eardrums. Her shield was easily giving in—within seconds, it exploded.

Harry helped Sugar up as both faced the crazy monkey. Pink Monkey was senseless, her throat extremely numb, worn. She fell on top of Courtney, who already had smoke leaking out of her. Harry and Sugar never needed a greater catch of breath, but with the song finally over, they could drink water and rest their lungs. (End song.)

The rest of Sector V came in with sore ears. “There goes my hearing for a month.” Chris said. Kirie happily plucked the plugs out of her ears.

“Yo, yo, those were some hot moves.” sang a male Unova Dancer, returning with the others.

“You said it!” Meloetta glided overhead and landed before Sugar and Harry. “I’m eternally in your debt! You probably know this already, but my name’s Meloetta. The Firstborn Spirit of Music!”

“Wait… Firstborn?” Chris was baffled. “You aren’t one of the Eight Firstborn.”

“Nope! I’m one of the Nine Firstborn!”

“NINE?!”

“Uh-huh! I used to be in the Eight Firstborn, until Manaphy was born and we became nine. Music wasn’t part of the Avatar/Negatar Cycle, so I didn’t need to be added to revive Arceus.”

“But THAT doesn’t make sense,” Artie argued, “the idea was that the Firstborn possessed the greatest amounts of Arceus’s power, and Manaphy wasn’t even created by Arceus, so why-”

“I dunno, the point is, there were Eight Firstborn when the universe began, so eight was enough. You wouldn’t guess it from looking, but I’m actually really powerful. Sound exists in all places, you know, so I have to keep track of it all. It’s a really hard job, you know!! Uh huh haaaaaaaah!” She started bawling.

“You sure you aren’t Mesprit?” Chris remarked.

“Lady Meloetta DOES have a hard job!” Rotom sparked. “That’s why she likes to let loose steam and party!”

“Kinda would be defeating the purpose.” Haylee said.

“It’s true, I do love music, and I love sound, it comes in so many pretty forms!” Meloetta beamed. “Forms I created, of course, but you make so much, you forget sometimes, so it’s like I’m still learning.”

“So if you’re a Firstborn, does that mean Sugar’s your Guardian?” Haruka asked.

“Uh-huh! I’ve been keeping her Spirit Ball all this time. Haha!” She took a tiny hairpin off her, pushed the little ball, and made it grow to hand-size. “Here!” She tossed it to Sugar.

The moment she caught it, they were still very flabbergasted. After all the emphasis that was put on ‘Eight’ Firstborn in the former gen’s story, the idea that a ninth one just came outta nowhere… Whatever the case, if Sugar was the Guardian, at least she was here to catch it. “Hahaha, just kidding!” Sugar froze just when she was about to throw the ball. “You still have to awaken yourself a little more. And what better way to do that than attending La Melody Extravaganza at Symphonia tomorrow!”

“Strewth!” Sheila fist-pumped. “A whole new adventure to a whole new planet! I call first on their burping-music soda!”

“Actually, it does have that.” Meloetta noted.

“Should we go with you, Milady?” asked a male dancer.

“Noooo! I’m in safe hands with these kids! Stay here and defend the dome from more music-hating freaks!”

“Will do!” they all saluted.

“Milady, when will I see you again??” Rotom sparked.

“Very soon, Tommy-tom! You need to stay here and keep the Electrodrome floating. The song of destiny calls!”

“The only sound I like is the trumpet of adventure!” declared Sheila.

Before anymore enemies could show up, the R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. took off with all operatives onboard. “Who is that Rotom, anyway?” Sugar asked.

“A Pokémon I met when I came to Electrodrome. I taught him English and he was happy! I’m gonna miss him, though. Okay, fly a little lower from here, we’re close to Symphonia.”

“Nnn? I no see any Symphony-whatever!” Chimney shouted, viewing around.

“We’re flying right to a matter storm!” Haylee said. A tremendous mass of darkness and lightning took up the space before them. “We have to fly around!”
“Hmhmhm, that would be what drives mortals away.” Meloetta smiled. “I’ll take care of it.” She flew onto the control deck and stepped on the speaker button. She cleared her throat and let her voice be heard.

The darkness and despair faded away. The matter storm, black, blind, a wasteland of death, became a great, colorful planet of rich landscapes, fluffy clouds, and giant notes and lines surfing across the atmosphere. “Kids Next Door operatives, welcome to Symphonia. The capital country, Fantasia’s sure to be filled with intergalactic visitors for the festival.”

“But Fi said you’re the only one that can find Symphonia.” Mason pointed out.

“That’s just a lie we spread around. Symphonia reveals itself to any person that sings to the storm. I mighta let it slip to some people, though.” She flushed. “Remember that if you ever wanna visit. Fantasia is that big continent right there. Let’s go!”

Not too far away, a spacecraft designed like the Pokémon Raticate watched the train fly into Symphonia’s atmosphere. “So that’s where it was all along, huh?” Butch smirked.

“We’re lucky those twerps stopped by.” Cassidy said. “Now we can capture both Meloetta and her Guardian. Then we’re only nine Firstborn away. When Giovanni has them all, Team Rocket will be pulling the strings of this New World.”

“So-leeet uuus hurrryyyy!” Space Mama popped up from behind and hugged them in her armless hands. “I saw-a her there, one of thee Lights Meester Dark described, I must capture heeeerrrrr for heem.”

The duo’s heads were throbbing. “GET OFF OUR SHIP!”

“OOOOOOOOaaaaaaaaahhh!” Space Mama was blasting off again. Twinkle.

But wow, Sugar’s gonna set the record for how fast it takes to catch a Firstborn after realizing herself as a Guardian. X) But not how long it took to realize, considering she’s 22. X) You know where we’re going next time, so feel free to recap this chapter in a nutshell. X) A’ight, see ya.
Sectors V and W7 arrive at the Music Planet, Symphonia!

Time to conclude the Song Saga with a crossover world of the worst Disney movie ever! X) Nah, it was probably good; compared to sequel films. XP

Chapter 20: Symphonia

Symphonia; approaching Fantasia

The R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. zoomed into the atmosphere of the musical planet, music lines and notes flying by their side as they pierced the fluffy clouds. “’ey, get away, ya crazy song-sans! I tryin’ ta focus, go find some birdies!”

Haruka Dimalanta lied on her front on her train bench, her long raven hair unraveled while Aeincha brushed it smooth. The Lilliputian stood on Haru’s right arm and held the comb in both of hers, its teeth watered as Aein exerted much strength in holding and brushing. “Arigato, Aeinchan.” Haru smiled. “I didn’t find time to comb after Dressrosa. It’s not too hard for you, is it?”

“Nope! Your hair is really soft and pretty, Haru-chan.” Aein beamed. “Your rose is really pretty, too. I don’t see purple roses often.”

“It’s very pretty!” Mary grinned, twirling said rose in her fingers. “Purple is fun, it’s close to blue, which I really like! You ever play ‘Loves Me, Loves Me Not’?”

“Not if it means destroying a rose.” Haruka said. “Besides, the outcome doesn’t set in stone the person’s feelings towards you.”

“There’s a trick to winning it: you can pluck off the stem petals, too.”

“Well, a close friend gave it to me, so I wouldn’t kill it. …Are you done, Aeincha?”

“After I tie the pigtails and rose on. Unless you wanna keep it long.”

“Hmmm… not yet. Pigtails make me look youthful.”

“Heehee, okay!”

“You’re very great at what you do!” Meloetta grinned, floating above them. The spirit’s hair was now light-green and hanging long, her eyes matching the color. “I love hair almost as much as music! We should do each other’s one day!”

“That’d be great! Your hair looks amazing, Meloetta-san, I’m excited to style it.”

Sugar looked at them a few seats away, frowning. She pulled back her hood and felt the edge of her short hair. Same as always. She stood at the nails of her fingers and toes. Very short. “Something wrong?” Chris asked. He was sitting next to her.
“My hair and nails don’t grow anymore. At first, I liked that about my curse since it was time-consuming to cut them. But the idea of cutting them on a regular basis... it gives you a feeling of growth. Well, that’s what I wanna think. I’ve seen the way girls dye their hair or change their shape... they know that life changes every day and they embrace it. I want that feeling.”

“If you ask me, you got it. You were making toys yesterday, now you’re going to a music planet with some kids who used to hate you.”

“Used to?”

“I mean, I still don’t like you. But if Cheren thinks you’re alright, well I won’t argue. But we’re concerned for his tendency to date so many girls at once.”

Sugar chuckled, sporting a smile. “Don’t worry, Sugar!” Meloetta floated beside her and rubbed Sugar’s hair. “Me and Aeincha will style your hair one day, too!”

“And your nails!” Aeincha was by Sugar’s feet and observing the nails. “Promise to let me know when they start growing. I wanna be the first to give you a pedicure!”

“Hm hm hm! I won’t forget!” Sugar giggled.

“Good evening, passenger-sans, this be your captain, the greatest train ever is taking land on a weird-ass planet of music and colors. Get off and no throwing up!!” Chimney screamed. (“Gyom-gyom!”) (Play “Harmony” from Rayman.)

The operatives all stepped outside to admire the wonderful landscape. Massive trumpets stood upon the bright green hills, blasting notes that were heard across the planet. The paved roads were piano keys that brought delight to everyone with each step. Giant flutes looped under and over the surface like those futuristic transport tubes, with notes spouting at the holes when the passengers flew past, and the mountains were drums that struck fear into the denizens with their thunderous booms. “Ugh. No one can possibly sleep here.” Chimney said.

“Not without our nightly Lullaby Series, nope!” Meloetta replied.

“Ahhhhh, strewth! Listen to all the music, mates! It’s just screamin’ adventure!” Sheila exclaimed with both fists raised. “Giant instruments that play music forever, it leaves so many questions, so many unanswered wonders for our universe! WHO WOULDN’T WANNA EXPLORE THIS PLACE??!”

“You’ve been asleep 60% of this quest, you’ve no right to yell that.” Mason said disbelieved.

“Just over the Bongo Hills is Harpsion, the town where La Melody Extravaganza’s taking place!” Meloetta sang. “Well, part of it, at least. Hehe, it’s a worldwide thing! Come on, Sugar, take part in it and meet all the famous singers! It’s time your voice is heard to the world!”

“I WANNA SING, too!” Sheila proclaimed. “I inherited me mum’s voice, and she won the award for Best Pirate Singer!”

Haruka informed with a smart, though disbelieved face, “Because Marine the Raccoon was the first person to sing, she deafened all the judges, audience, and other singers so they couldn’t be heard, ergo she won by default.”

“All of you are free to join, music is meant for everybody!” sang Meloetta. “Make your little footsteps go ’clop! clop! clop!’ Tell a little joke and go ‘Hah hah haaaa!’ Breathe in the oxygen and ‘Huff. huff. huuuuuff.’ Every sound makes music, so every person’s a musicbender!”
Mason wrapped an arm around Dillon and said, “Watch the movie Annie and go, ‘Ouch! Ouch! OOOUUUCH!’” The boys all laughed.

Sugar rolled her eyes and giggled. “Symphonia is a place of happiness, to follow your dreams, to let your soul be free!” sang Meloetta. “Come on, Sugar. Is your soul free?”

“Yeah… it is.” She nodded.

“I didn’t hear you, gotta sing it!”

Sugar sucked in a breath, “Myyy soul is freeeeeeeeeee!” The topographical instruments all reacted to her magical voice.

“That’s the spirit!” Meloetta twirled. “Now come, and let all of Symphonia know your voice! The Song of Destiny awaits!”

Stage 28: Symphonia

Mission: Attend La Melody Extravaganza!

Act I: Bongo Hills

Sugar raced forward and bounced up a stairway of drums to get onto a piano pathway. She surfed across the up-and-down road skiing on ice, her arms outstretched behind her as she blew a gust of notes. Each piano key flashed when she passed it, sending colorful notes forward that formed a trail, and Sugar shifted left-and-right during her skiing to catch every single note. The notes started appearing in midair, forcing Sugar to jump with perfect timing, but she kept the rhythm flowing by the time the path led up a hill and let Sugar off onto a giant drum over a plain below. For catching all the notes, a colorful barrier surrounding an Electoon cage was open. Sugar broke the cage and set the creatures free.

To get onto the higher drums, Sugar had to carefully slide up a very narrow, floating ice road, which in reality was part of a giant note, as many such ice-notes floated around the sky. What lay before Sugar at this moment were a series of trumpets, all facing skyward and connected to a single pipe, the reed of which stuck up beside Sugar’s platform. She inhaled and blew a forceful wind into it, causing all of the trumpets to blast forth; even though Sugar didn’t release nearly that much air. Regardless, the strong gusts kept her skyward, having to avoid flying Doomtoons that tried to knock her down, lest she fall to the plain below. The farthest horn blew her even higher, at level with the end of an ice-note, and she kept balance as she slid down swiftly, looping around a tall stack of drums and landing at their base.

A stairway of normal-size bongos led up to the next foothold, so Sugar ran up them quickly as each one fell upon her steps. She ran up another set, which shifted backwards halfway up, but Sugar didn’t stumble and made it onto the next platform. A trumpet was blowing flying winged notes that drifted higher up the tower, so Sugar grabbed one’s base, but when it faltered and threatened to fall, she swung to another, and kept this routine until she could swing off on a giant floating cymbals. The cymbals bounced her to the top of the drum stack, but empty sky lay out from here. So with that, Sugar hummed the stage’s theme and created a Song Road.

“La la laaaaa, la la laaaaa. La la laaaaa, la la laaaaaaa.” She hummed the beginning of the theme and could easily follow the soft note pattern. “DADA daaaa, da da DA DA DA DAAAAA.” This next part of the road shifted down-and-up suddenly at these next few notes, until the last pair stooped directly down and landed Sugar on a giant violin. As she grinded across the strings like rails, a giant bow strummed the strings, going further along as Sugar went, and created another note path for her to follow. Just as well, a different tone sounded depending on the string Sugar was grinding on. Xylophones stretched parallel to the violin on either side, and when giant sticks beat the keys, electric spheres were flung onto the strings, which Sugar expertly dodged. The strings were meeting their end at the very top of the instrument, where she flew off onto the first of many floating drums. Giant disembodied hands banged the drums with sticks, creating thunderous booms that sent any passengers into the air.

For collecting all the notes, Sugar could break another cage holding Electoons. She couldn’t have a moment to catch her breath, for the drumsticks kept on poundin’, keeping her and the Wrong Notes aloft – average-size purple notes with scary, monstrous faces. When the Wrong Notes saw her, they tried to shift toward Sugar to bite her while bouncing, and she couldn’t wave her own notes to push them back. Thankfully, the pounding drums ended shortly when Sugar made it to a xylophone stairway. She happily skipped her way down and made a note at each step, but the stairs shortly ended at a clear, sparkly river. Since Sugar couldn’t swim, she would have troubles crossing, but this was why she could blow a reed next to her, which channeled underground and blew several trumpets under the water. Several bubbles with oranges notes inside them rose into the air.

The notes were smiling and dancing to the music, but like everything else, Sugar would have to bounce these bubbles in the order they came out. Since they were disordered, this made it difficult, each bubble popped upon bounce, but if she hit the wrong one, they would all pop. She memorized the order and bounced across the river safely, making a perfect rhythm with the right order. The bubbles ended above a waterfall, where the top of a vertical ice-note stood. She flew up over the opposite side of this note, fell down, and landed on the sudden curve at the bottom which sent her sliding up a slope at sudden speed. She kept her feet still, let only the ice guide her, she went up a loop that shifted direction leftward, between an enclosing of steep hills over a narrow part of river.

The road curved right, where Sugar had to shift her feet along an ice-note wall on the left, then shift back onto the main road to keep sliding. Piranha-notes leapt up to snack her over this lake, this ice-road coming to end, so Sugar leaped far with the momentum and slid across the next one. She slid over another narrow river where the road shifted left, but the intersection went directly up vertical, Sugar shot up, into the air, looked carefully, and positioned her feet to land on the opposite side, then slide across the new path. This ice-road ended, the following area had distant, scattered ice-road platforms, Sugar leaped and cartwheeled left, right, a shorter right, then left, and surfed a straight road that was approaching a downward hill, where the ice-road looped into a great spiral.

“OOWAAAH!” A living Trumpetling with eyes on Sugar’s right blew forcefully, shifting Sugar’s momentum to begin sliding around and around the great ice-spiral. Wrong Notes glided on the path and tried to bite her, so she had to leap them. Once again, ground-trumpets blew Rainbow Notes onto the road that Sugar collected on the way, a simple task. Sugar looped and looped until the spiral brought her to the center. The center was a circle the length of both legs, so Sugar stretched her legs to either side and whirled around until she sunk to a splits. “Hehe.” A trumpet down below blew her into the sky, where she was sucked into the hole of a flute-tube and whisked across the earth.

The flute spat her out on a piano path, where she could break an Electoon cage for collecting all notes. “YAAAAAAH-haaaaaa!” Sheila glided across the path and stopped beside Sugar. “Blimey, they really do have Song Sodas! Check it out, behlp, burp, beep beep beep BEP! Buurp.” She burped bubbles with the rhythm, and those bubbles made music.

“Dat. Dat. Daaah, dalala-LALA, I wanna sing-song all day!” Aeincha sang, swaying left and right while Haruka carried her.

“It’s nice and all,” Haru smiled humorously, “but doesn’t anybody get any rest?”

“It’s haaaard to rest, hard to rest, with La Melody Extravaganza as the test!” Meloetta sang, dancing above them. “Come this way, it’s Harpsion, to see the show, come and play!” (End song.)

They followed the piano path into a bustling town where all the buildings were giant instruments or instrument cases—they better not be real instruments, thought some of the members who were getting a headache. A stage was standing in the town square, flashing colorful lights as steam erupted. The person that appeared, whom everybody cheered loudly for, was a most unusual girl. A tall, slim 16-year-old with cyan hair of a neon texture, in two pigtails that flowed almost the length of her body. She wore a white sleeveless shirt with a black skirt, and a tie that matched her cyan hair. She wore very high black boots that ended just under her waist, and appeared mechanical like the sleeves over her arms (which weren’t connected to the shirt). Her eyes also matched the hair’s cyan color, and her voice bore a futuristic feel.

Sharing the WOR-R-R-R- world!

Sharing the WOR-R-R-R- world!

I can see this FUTURE is right now!

‘Cause my voice is always going aaroooooound!

Tell me how, you feel like these days

Tell me why... you DON’T wanna saaay it

Tell me now what is on your mind

I’m still gonna listen to yoooouu!

Sugar didn’t know how to describe it… she was in love with that girl’s voice. Those lyrics described Sugar perfectly… like this singer was talking directly to her. The vocals touched and warmed Sugar’s soul… oh, how she strongly resisted the desire to run up and sing with her. “Impressed?” Meloetta startled Sugar out of her thoughts. “She’s Symphonia’s Pop Queen, Hatsune Miku!”

“She’s Hatsune Miku?!” Haruka’s jaw dropped.

“Huuuuuu, her hair is so pretty!!” Stars glittered Aeincha’s eyes. “I feel like I could slide down those pigtails like water! Ohhhhh her barber is the luckiest person in the universe!”

“She does her own hair!” Meloetta said.

“EEEEEEEEEEAAAAAAAAAAAAIII!” Aeincha was in love.

“You’re sure she’s not the same Miku from Shrink High, right?” Artie asked.

“You actually played that?” Harry stared.

“(Vweeb said it was good.)”

“Huh?” Haylee looked around. “Hey, there’s Sugar!”
“If there is something on your MIND that- makes- you- stay, I will free your sou-ul- ul!” Then, Hatsune gasped when Sugar ran up on stage.

“You will free my so-ul-oul-oo-ooouul!”

The music stopped. Everyone was looking at Sugar next to Miku. The child, realizing what she did, froze in shock. Hundreds of people staring at her. She slowly glanced up-right and saw that Miku was doing the same. “Who… are you?”

Sugar flushed, scratching the back of her head as she faced the taller girl with a nervous grin. “I’m, um… Sugar.”

“I can’t heeeeaaaaaaar!”

As if on impulse, Sugar looked up and cried, “MY NAME IS Suuuugaaaaaarrrrrrr!”

“Thank you, Sugar, for sharing your sound!” Miku took Sugar’s hands and swayed them forward and backward, joyfully dancing in place while Sugar remained speechless and stationary. “Now we’re connecting our feeliiii-ii-iii-iiings!” Hatsune danced behind Sugar and twirled the child around by her right arm. “Everyone has found that we’ve owned this hymn. Now we have found that’s all, so we join iiiiiin.”

Meloetta landed on the middle-front of the stage, her hair matching Miku’s cyan color and tied in pigtails. “I’m the Goddess of Music, and Hatsune Miku is my idol! Helloooooo, Fantasia! Do you love Hatsune and her new friend, Sugaaaaaar?”

“YAAAAAAAYYY!”

“Are their voices not the most majestic you’ve heard all day?”

“NAAAAAAAYYY!”

“RIGHT! I mean, WRONG- wait…” The audience exchanged baffled murmurs at the spirit. “Double negatives. Ahem, what I mean to say is, YOUR voice is majestic!” She pointed at a random person, “And YOUR voice, and YOURS! On Planet Symphonia, where music is life, everybody has a beautiful voice! Your voice is your soul! Every voice is beautiful!”

“Everybody has a beautiful dream!” sang Aeincha.

Haruka rocked the tiny in her arms and sang, “Everybody has a beautiful thing!”

“All this singing makes beautiful vomit!” Mason sang, dancing with Dillon.

“So pretty, we just shouldn’t, dag gonnit!” Dillon sang, earning glares from all the girls except Chimney.

“Every THING’s a work of art!” April presented a painting of Miku and Sugar dancing.

“Every line, shape, and color!” Mary held up a crayon version of April’s painting.

“Everybody here has a voice! So let it be heard! And you wiiillll siiiiiiiiiiing!” Meloetta’s final note reached the ears of millions. “People of Symphonia and intergalactic visitors alike, welcome to La Melody Extravaganza! We’re so happy to have so many voices!”

“We’re happy to introduce those singing for our festival!” Miku proclaimed. “Sunny Bridges, if you would like to do our first?”
“Thank you, Shawty.”

Harry Gilligan spit out a soda he was drinking. His dark eyes fell wide. “No WAY that is Sunny Bridges! Nobody’s seen ‘im in, er, ages!”

“Now who’s a dreamy fanboy?” Haylee stared.

Sunny Bridges, a very slim, rubber-like man with a purple shirt, blue jeans, and a straw hat walked on stage in a moonwalk fashion. “Ahem. All the way from Dimension Termina, a ninja from a distant mountain, proud to introduce Killer Bee!”

A cloud of smoke puffed on the stage behind them. A muscular dark-skinned man with yellow hair, a goatee, and sunglasses walked up, jabbing his fingers as a rap tune played. “Yaw-yaw. I’m Kil-l er Bee, so you should know, Ah’m the head of this show, fools, ya fools.”

“Great, hehehe!” Miku grinned. “Hailing from Galaxia, a skeleton whose soul lives, Nightmare Prince Jack Skellington!”

“Thank you, thank you!” The round-headed skeleton in the black-gray tux waved to all his fans. “I am always delighted to sing to the people of Symphonia!”

“Now, our final, and most recent contestant,” Meloetta began, “from the Milky Way Galaxy, the Princess of Dressrosa, Don Quixote Sugar!”

Sugar panicked when the spotlights shone on her. “Wait, I didn’t even register, I just got here! !” She waved her hands in defense.

“Then you HAVE registered!” Meloetta sang. “The rules for La Melody Extravaganza are the same as every year. Across the country in our three High Lands, our singers must make their way and perform a musical feat with the land’s guardian. The one whose moves are most graceful, whose voice is most majestic—not that it’s different from anyone else—will be this year’s Queen of Sing! So leeeet’s beeegiiii-”

“HEY, I wanna enter, TOO!” Sheila screamed, running onstage. “I have me mum’s voice and she was the best! Ahem… MAAAAARY HAD A LITTLE LAMB, LITTLE LAMB, LITTLE LAMB-”

“My name’s Mary, I wanna sing!!” Mary ran up beside Sheila and sang in unsynchronized form. “III HAD A LITTLE LAMB, LITTLE LAMB, LITTLE LAMB, MY NAME’S MARY AND I HAD A LITTLE.” Two long hooks flew up onstage and pulled them both away.

“I would love to hear you sing later!” Meloetta cheered.

“Uuummmm they need work.” Sunny said. “So all singers, head to the High Lands, good luck, and sing beautiful! …” He looked to his right and found Harry Gilligan standing inches away, viewing Sunny with wide sparkly eyes. “Who’re you, Shawty?”

“I need your autograph.” Harry held up pencil and paper.

“For the record dude, you can’t be in love with Sunni just ‘cause she’s named after your favorite singer.” Artie said, grabbing Harry’s ear and dragging him away like a stone-cold statue.

Sugar saw a bunch of citizens jumping into Transport Flutes to ‘Genie Road’, and Killer Bee was among them. “Wish me luck, guys!” Sugar told her friends before approaching a flute’s hole, and was sucked in and whisked across the earth like a vacuum. She must’ve flown for miles, but Sugar felt herself land on her feet in minutes. Time to explore this new region. (Play the “Genie’s Stage” theme from the Aladdin Game.)

Act 2: Genie Road

“OOOWAAAH!” A Trumpetling immediately blew Sugar up an icy slope, where she leaped and grabbed Rainbow Notes. “OOOWAAAH!” Another Trumpet, Sugar jumped Wrong Notes on the slide up. “OOOWAAAH!” She jumped Wrong Notes, crouched to slide under spikes, then plopped against a wall that stopped her at the top. The Genie Road took place above the clouds of Symphonia, where Sugar viewed the tops of pink, Arabian towers. Marble white platforms and footholds made up the “ground”, and designs of a grinning blue genie were everywhere. Just as well, floating trumpets and instruments were performing the classic song, keeping Sugar’s spirits up as she battled across. To start off, she could blow into a trumpet and cause several Genie heads above to let their tongues droop, which Sugar used to swing across a cloudy chasm.

She landed on the first of many small Genie platforms and jumped across before they fell, easily avoiding the flying Doomtoons before stopping to rest on a larger foothold. The next chasm had giant pungi flying her way – flutes that snake-charmers use, so with careful timing and precision, Sugar danced across the slender footholds, but didn’t have to for long until the Genie flew by and let Sugar grab onto his tail. He soared up up and away and let Sugar drop on the palm of a giant Genie hand, the arm of which stretched up from below the clouds. Up next was another segment of giant drums, with big blue Genie balls bouncing around to cause the thunderous booms. Large Genie hoolihoops were also fluttering in-between drums, spinning incredibly fast as the balls bounced through them.

Sugar jumped onto and commandeered the nearest ball, keeping an excellent balance as she bounced toward the first hoop and made it through. The second drum had Doomtoons flying back-and-forth, and the hoolihoop floated along a firewall with only one clear opening, but Sugar stayed clear of the ‘toons and dodged through the opening. The third hoop had electric beams that sparked to life at certain intervals, so when they were off, Sugar passed through. The fourth and last drum had nothing on it, a trumpet on the opposite side was blowing skyward. It was the width of Sugar’s ball, and when the girl bounced inside, the music immediately silenced as the horn tried to blow. It puffed wider the longer it was clogged, until finally, it POOOOFED!

Sugar shot across the sky like a comet on her ball, the rubber bouncing forcefully between towers until it flew straight at a giant point and POPPED confetti everywhere. Sugar fell onto a trampoline that bounced her to a safe floor, plopping on her back. A pungi was lain down next to her, along with a basket the snake would come out of. Sugar grabbed the instrument and stood atop the snake’s lid, performing notes that went with the stage rhythm, each correct note making the skinny green snake rise higher, Sugar with him. When it was level with the floating Genie balloons, she proceeded to jump them, their pops propelling her into the air to give her the time to bounce the next one. The final balloon, she grabbed the hoop on its bottom, a hole on its back opening and releasing helium as it glided around like a rocket.

Sugar directed it to fly to a structure’s side where a long tongue stuck out of a Genie face. The tongue began to retract, so Sugar leapt to another and gracefully began jumping from tongue to tongue between this sky-high alleyway. She spotted an Electoon cage and burst it open on the way, performing a twirl on her toes upon landing the next tongue, and jumping to the next. When the tongues reached their end, and empty sky laid between her and the next ground, she created a Song Road and soared. “Pride ourselves on serviiiiice, you’re the boss, king, bishop!” Sugar sang, moving along the right notes while also avoiding Wrong Notes on her road. “Say what you wish,” inched up, “yours true dish,” inched far down, “how ‘bout a little more Baklavaaaaa?” Inched way way up, then landed on a straight, marble road.
Statues depicting our favorite Aladdin characters stood on either side as Sugar ran down without fear. She stood before the final statue at the end, depicting none other than Robin Williams. Sugar paid him a salute before going around, beyond the columns of a palace. The judges, Sunny, Miku, and Meloetta were there, the latter now colored purple with her hair tied in a cone. A shiny brown lamp stood upon a pedestal, so Sugar walked up and rubbed it. The genie whom the road was named for appeared in a cloud of blue smoke.

“Eeeeeee-YAAAAAAAAH!” He stretched his sky-blue form with much relief and enthusiasm. “Feels so good to be OUTTA there! Hey there, happy to meet you Kid, welcome to La Melody Extravaganza, please tell us your name!”

“I-It’s, uh, Sugar.” The girl blushed.

“Sugar, hmm, well maybe I’ll call you Su, no how ‘bout Gar, or perhaps UGA!” He morphed into a caveman.

“Kee, ha ha ha ha!” She laughed joyfully.

“Well, Sugar, thank you for participating, I suppose you know what’s next, right?”

“We have to sing!”

“I’ve been goin’ on for 10,000 years, and I’ve got 10,000 more, so let us show this crowd some MAGIC!”

“Well, Ali Baba had them 40 thieves, Scheherazade had a thousand tales.” Genie snapped his fingers and made 40 thieves surround Sugar.

Sugar sang, “Well that’s okay, ’cause up my sleeves, this kind o’ magic never fails!” She whirled her arms and blew them all away with songwaves.

“You got some POWER in yo’ corner now-” Genie lit two fireworks and flew them at Sugar.

“Ammunition in my camp.” She clapped hands, sent a soundwave, and popped the rockets like confetti.

“You got punch, PIZZAZZ, yahoo and how, See all you gotta do is rub that lamp, And I’LL say-”

They both sang and danced in unison, “MISTRESS Sugar, Sir (I’m a girl), what will your pleasure be?”

“I’d like to win this contest, please!”

“Ain’t no problem with a friend like-!”

“HOLD IT RIGHT THERE!” A cloud of smoke exploded behind them. A rap tune played as Killer Bee danced out. “Fools, ya fools, Ah got here, too, so move aside, that cool?”

“Oh, actually-” Genie tried to say.

“WEEEELL,” Bee snapped his fingers in rhythm as he sang, “Ah’ll take som’ that in Column A, gimme all dat in Column B.” A tray of meat appeared in his right hand when he snapped, and fruit in his left. “Good luck gettin’ me, ’cause then you’ll see, I’ll-have-ya-all-wiped-down one-two, threeee.” Three ninjas appeared behind him, so he cut them with his sword.

“Get back down, masa baka, or Ah’ll show ya how we do it downtown!” Sugar rapped.
“I’ll bet.”

“I will!”

“WELL, gimme a thrill!” both sang. “All I gotta ask is one thang!”

Bee leapt and stood on the tip of a tall needle, hands folded as he stood with perfect balance.

“Mistress Sugar, ya fool, what will yo’ pleasure be?”

“I’ll take ya down with all my strength, you’ve never known one- no, NEVER known one like, meeeeee!” Sugar unleashed a soundwave at Killer Bee, but he easily jumped a few yards behind her.

“Haha! You got moves, you got grooves, but lemme ask ya, Sugar, ‘bout your hometown. Can your friends do this?” Bee formed a hand symbol, poofing a new set of Shadow Clones at each strum of the trumpet.

“Not to my knowledge, no.” Sugar said.

“Aha! Can yo’ buddies do this?” Another hand symbol, and eight purple tentacles sprouted from his back.

“Ooooo, that’s pretty good.” Genie said.

“Can they pull THIS!” He jabbed his fingers to the sky and shot lightning bolts at each strum. “Not even they’re little hat, I bet.”

“Not so fast!” Sugar threw a top-hat at him, exploding into smoke. For some reason, Killer Bee expected dancing women, but what he got were crocodiles blowing horns. “What the-?!”

“Ha ha!” Sugar laughed. “Can your friends go razza-matasma, haba-cadaza, so many I don’t even haaaave? It’s a minor, thing, nothing good, but it kicks more butt than you.”

“OH!” The audience gaped.

“You wanna get down, well you’ll be amazed, after askin’ me that little phrase-” Bee sang.

“Oh YOU mean—Mister Killer Bee-san, would you like a wish or two or three? I’d choose those moony toons of yours, take it from a gal like me!”

“Hold on now! You’d diss mah toons with all your goons, fools ya foolin’ like fools no mo’. Ah’m on the clock, go on, TICK TOCK, apologize right now on the dooooot!”

“You wanna hear ‘sorry’, Kill’ Bee, YOU say sorry to meeeeee! Go on and cry, but YOU know WHY? I’m the best damn singer aroooouuund!” She spun like a tornado, a giant Genie hand with eyes appeared beside her.

“WAH WAH wah?”

“Nuuuuuh-uh!” Sugar wagged her finger.

“WAH WAH wah?”

“HEEEEELL no!”

“WAH WAH wah!”
“Badap—ba! I gots the POW-wuh!” She snapped her fingers and they popped. “Yeah, you’re good Bee, I’ll admit that. But I got a few more things to ask you: Can you do this?” She surfed a songwave and performed the Egyptian walk.

“Can y’all do THIS?” He was on his cranium, spinning around and around.

“Can you do THIS?” Sugar stood straight and stiff, arms clamped to her sides. Her eyes looked left, right, left, right, clicking her tongue like a clock. “Click, clock, click, clock, click- or would ya rather, rather, RATHER face your DOOM.” An explosion of smoke—missiles, soldiers with machineguns, and flamethrowers surrounded Bee. The rapstar scurried away when all hell was loose. “Abracadabra, Alakazam, bippity-boppity-BAM!”

“COME ON, MAAAAAN! Slow yourself!” Notes flew everywhere, Killer Bee narrowly dodging each one, then Sugar popped up before him, performed quick fist-jabs, “It-gets-hard-to-keep-with-this-BEAT!” The world flashed at each jab, ‘til Bee was knocked dizzy. “I’ll keep this up allll day long now, gonna send ya packin’ ALL WAY HOOOOOME!” He flew several meters with her kick. Sugar danced onto a stage as the notes strummed louder. “Mis-ter Kil-ler Bee, Sir, should I kick the head or knee? I’ll kick you down, in a wed-ding gown,” she wore a wedding dress for a brief second before smacking him, “You ain’t NEVER known one, never no, ain’t never never known, never known.” She danced and flailed her arms and legs every which way, the notes dancing crazily, “Yooou’ve NEVER! (shing!) EVER! (cling!) OOOONE LIIIIKE MEEEEE!”

A great fireworks display colored the heavens, and Bee was among the rockets propelled.

“Oh, it’s so BEAUTIFUL!” Genie cried.

“I know! I can’t stop looking!” Meloetta raised two poster-boards, depicting the scores of both contestants, “10 out of 10!”

“She gives that score to everyone.” Sunny said disbelieved, writing his own scores. “It’s mostly just us two, 8 for Bee and 8.5 for Sugar.”

“8.5 for Bee and 9 for Sugar!” Miku cheered.

Sugar’s eyes sparkled at the judges, especially Miku. She felt a whole new warmth inside her. “Look at my score. Isn’t it neat? Wouldn’t you say this contest is complete? Wouldn’t you think I’m the girl. The girl who’s won… everything!”

“Nawwwww! No no!” Bee cried, pounding the ground. “Fools, ya fools! I just got schooled!”

“Yes, and it was coolly-cool!” Sugar rapped.

“NOW IT’S OUR TURN!” Mary zipped up onstage, pushed Sugar away, and Sheila joined her.

“Ladies and gentlemates, Sheila and Mary’s GRAND SONATAAAA!”

“That’s me, I’m Mary, she’s Sheila!”

“NOW LET’S SING! Uuuuudatatiiiiiiiiiii. Nuiiii, yodo yotooooo (You sure this is Japanese?)”

“(Yeah!) NONI TIDO DOOOOO ya doooo-”

Killer Bee and Sugar slid up behind both girls and sent them skyward with powerful kicks. “Some of us prefer to hear, the REST of the contest.” Bee sang.

“Awesome!” Meloetta sang with delight. “10/10!”
“You’re very unbiased.” Sunny and Miku sighed.

“Great singing with you, Bee.” Sugar shook her rival’s hand.

“You too, Sugar, now I have a new reason, to get groovier.”

“Excellent job, marvelous performance!” Genie applauded. “Since you were such a great act, I’ll give you one wish!”

“I wish to go to the next contest area!”

“Comiiiing riiiight up!” Genie snapped his fingers, and Sugar poofed to the next area. (Play “Orchestral Chaos” from Rayman Legends.)

Act 3: Hip-Hop Pond

Sugar ran forth, jumped a crocodile, ducked under a thorny branch, leaped with both legs outstretched over another croc, jumped up two Toad Soldiers, landed and ran, bent back at 90 degrees to dodge another’s axe, jumped, swung a vine, bounced down two Toads. She fell, slid under a thorn, leapt and flipped two Toads before surfing a songwave, dodged left, dodged a right Toad, jumped and kicked one in the crotch. Several lilipads propelled into the air with water spouts, so she gracefully jumped each one before surfing a Song Road through a thorny passage.

The road curved directly up in a steep, precise staircase—then went down in the very same fashion—steeped back up. She remained precise, then leapt right off and flipped off some Toads’ heads. She tap-danced on her tippy-toes across some lilipads, nimbly leapt some piranhas jumping to snatch her, limbo-ducked some horizontal sticks, jumped, placed her hands on a totem, flipped, kicked a piranha in midair, and began grinding on some giant violin strings. She jumped left, right, avoiding spiked parts, jumped a whole section, kicked a midair Toad, landed back on the strings, hearing the last of their sad notes before landing on the next ground.

Sugar swung her fists fast and punched Toads, ducked an axe, jumped a kick, dove between two close branches, Wall Jumped over a narrow chasm, tap-danced across Toads’ heads, then fell down a deep chasm, faster and faster, she would splat any minute, but a blubbery Toad’s belly at the bottom bounced her back on her feet. She kept steady, tap-danced a pond of lilipads, jumped and ducked piranhas, surfed a songwave in rainbowy waves, landed on her belly, slid under thorns, jumped, kicked off a piranha’s head, off a Toad’s head, swung a vine, then landed perfectly before a great big pond with many lilipads, both up close and in the background where a Frog Choir sat. Sugar took a bow as they applauded.

“Splendid, well done.” said the Frog Conductor, Don Gero, blowing his bubble pipe.

“That was marvelous footwork.” Jack Skellington applauded.

“Hey, aren’t you Darkrai’s son?” Dillon asked, the Sector V operatives arriving. “Why are you participating?”

“While it may not look like it, Father created me as a musicbender. And I must say, I’m quite proud of my voice.”

“Yes, but we will be doing little singing here.” Don Gero said. “This will be a test of movement. These lilipads are feeble and don’t support average weight. Musicbending allows one to move gracefully, light as sound, and you have already demonstrated this feat on your way here. I had waited for the second contestant to arrive so I may test you together. If you would, on the pads.”
Sugar and Jack bowed to each other before leaping on parallel sides of the lilipads, keeping their feet light as the lilipads supported them. “Now as I conduct my wand… you dance.”

“Heehehee, good luuuuck!” sang Meloetta – who was now yellowish-green with her hair short and wide.

Don Gero tapped his wand and prepared to conduct. A strict, gentle song played as Sugar and Jack, in mirrored fashion, stepped sideways along their lilipads. When at their farthest point, Gero directed them to come back, but stop halfway. They bent backwards into a rainbow bridge, the act hurting Jack less than Sugar, their hands planted on pads behind them. As directed, they were off their feet, totally upside-down on their hands. Blood rushed to Sugar’s head, but she ignored it, focused the light chi to her arms to stay standing. Then on a forceful note, they both jumped and turned to face the shore, still on their hands. They squatted their arms, pushed with all their light force, flipped upright, and landed on both feet.

Sugar and Jack stretched one leg backward, touched a pad, squatted their other leg, and placed their hands on two front pads. They faced directly up, took a deep breath, and bent the leg that was stretched back. Then they jumped backward, placed hands against pads, flipped further, landed—Sugar’s left foot forced a lilipad under the water, her heart skipping, but she kept her cool and stayed balanced on the other pad while placing her foot on another. Don Gero smiled charmingly and twirled his wand. Sugar and Jack spun toward each other and locked: she gripped his left arm by the elbow, reached up to hold his right waist, while Jack’s long-fingered arm reached down to hold her left.

They danced and swayed each other in a graceful, romantic fashion. Two lovers, under a moonlit night, even though it was daylight and very misty. They couldn’t look at where their legs moved, just had to know where the lilipads were. On a sudden note, Jack swung Sugar around, bent back and facing up inches from his bony face. Then she grabbed his shoulders, hauled herself overhead, landed on the lilipads behind, and bent Jack back as well. She released, they both hopped across several lilies and landed like frogs. Sugar turned sideways and bent like a rainbow bridge while Jack positioned like a spider.

“Laaaaaa la- la- la: laaaaaa. Laaaaaa la laaaaaa.” Sugar returned upright, waved an arm, and sang.

“Laaaaaaa la LAAAA. Laaaaa lalala LAAAAAA.” Jack mirrored this movement with his own notes.

“Laaaaaa la la laaaaa.” Sugar inched forward.

“Laaaaaaaa lalala laaaaaa.” Jack came closer.

“Laaa-aa-aa-a laaaaa.”

“Looooooaaaa laaaaaa.” Dramatic notes, the swamp turned darker, Jack wore a monstrous face. “LAAAA.” Sugar’s eyes became psychotic, “Laaaaaa.”

“LAAAAAAA.”

. . . Both faced the conductor and took a bow, the audience clapping.

“Beautiful.” Artie yawned, half-awake.

“Excellent! 10/10!” Meloetta cheered.
“7 for Sugar, 8 for Jack.” Sunny scored.

“7 for Sugar, 7.5 for Jack!” Miku beamed.

“Huff... well, not bad.” Sugar smiled.

“I had fun dancing with you, Sugar.” Jack said. “And congratulations for conquering your fear.” He reached an arm.

“Hmhm.” Sugar shook his hand. “Thanks.”

That very instant, eight parts of two metal hoops came and trapped Meloetta, pulling her skyward. “WHAT the-?!” Miku gasped. Everyone’s jaws dropped; a Raticate ship was hovering above them, and the perpetrators, a woman with blonde hair in two angled braids, and a man with cyan hair, both in black suits with red “R” symbols, stood on the roof.

“Prepare for trouble!” Cassidy announced.

“And make it double.” Butch continued.

“To infect the world with devastation!”

“To blight all people in every nation.”

“To denounce the goodness of truth and love!”

“To extend our wrath to the stars above.”

“Cassidy!”

“Butch.”

“We’re Team Rocket, circling the cosmos all day and night!”

“Surrender now, or you will surely lose the fight.”

Raticate popped out, “Raticate!”

“What the fuck?” Chris said.

“Who are they?” Hatsune asked.

“It’s Team Rocket!!” Aurora pointed panickingly. “They’re bad guys who try to steal peoples’ Pokémon!! Hehe, I always wanted to say that.” She grinned.

“Do you work for Dr. Nefarious, too?” Sugar yelled.

“HEH heh heh! Little twerp thinks Nefarious is the big shot in all this!” Butch laughed.

“In truth, Nefarious is smalltime, compared to Giovanni.” Cassidy said.

“Even if Lord Gnik thinks he’s running the scenes, Team Rocket will be the ones in charge by the end of this month.”

“Urr! Please, let me go!” Meloetta shook. “Please, we have to finish the festival!”

“I’m afraid this performance must end a little short.” Cassidy smirked. “Don’t even try to persuade us. We’re well aware of the legend of Chernabog.”

“Chernabog?” Sugar asked.

“The demon that lives on Bald Mountain, the third High Land of this contest. The reason this festival is held every year is because the seal on Chernabog falters at this time. The seal requires an enormous amount of Music Chi on Meloetta’s part, so La Melody Extravaganza is her only means of recharging.”

“But there’s another part to the legend.” Butch continued. “Millions of years ago, it’s said that the Devil himself created Chernabog out of Meloetta’s negative energy. Chernabog is a musical demon that Meloetta can control. But with Meloetta under our control…”

“You can’t force Meloetta to do what you want!” Sugar yelled.

“No, but you’d be surprised what a little hypnosis does.”

“The weakness of gods that choose to live among mortals is they become much more susceptible to mortal ailments.” Cassidy said.

“See you at Bald Mountain, twerps. This is the year Team Rocket plays the final key.”

“Rrrrraticate!” The airship returned to the heavens and flew away.

“I feel like I’ve heard of Chernabog.” Haylee said. “Isn’t he a demon from some religion?”

“Father told me about him once.” Jack replied. “Chernabog was one of the Six Demon Saints. There are others like Medusa, the Queen of Darkness; Lucifer, who granted magic to mortals in exchange for souls; Hannibal Bean, the Yin-Yang Spirit; even the Masked Demon, Majora was considered one. Not all of them were on grounds with Satan himself; some of the saints wanted to control the universe on their own.”

“Then we can’t let Team Rocket awaken him! Let’s get to Bald Mountain!” Sugar declared.

“This Transport Flute goes there!” Miku directed at a midnight-blue flute nearby.

“Thanks!” Sugar dove in first and whooshed across the world, her many friends joining.

Bald Mountain

The northwest region of Fantasia was cold, cloudy, and trapped under eternal night. A small town with citizens stood miles from the terrifying, oddly-shaped mountain where lightning surged. Surrounding the land, three towers with golden bells rang their holy tolls, majestic sounds that kept evil at rest.

Team Rocket’s airship hovered at a close, safe distance from the mountaintop. “Oh, the bells of the Three Goddesses.” Cassidy observed. “They are beautiful. Powered by your Music Chi, aren’t they?”

“Nnnnn!” Meloetta was zapped trying to shake free of her binds.

“Too tight for you? We’ll make it stop. Drowzee, use Hypnosis!” She tossed open her Pokéball, and the yellow elephant-trunk Pokémon came out.

“Drow. Drow.” The creature waved his arms at Meloetta’s face. Her vibrant emerald eyes turned milky and lifeless.
“Sableye, Charizard, Fearow, destroy them!” ordered Cassidy. At this point, her three Pokémon flew around to each of their targeted bell towers and destroyed them with a Shadow Ball, Flamethrower, and Drill Run respectively.

With that, Butch took out a small book and held a page to Meloetta’s face. “Now Meloetta, sing this.”

The spirit was not in her right state of mind, but her eyes read the words and something in her head told her to sing it. As she read the lines over and over, they were clear enough in her head for her to sing. Her mouth and tongue moved beyond her control, letting her voice flow in the form of foreign incantations. The vocals traveled to the top of Bald Mountain – and entered the pair of ears.

Sugar finally arrived with Sectors V and W7, feeling the ground tremble. “What? Already?!” Aurora yelled.

Mixed with Meloetta’s vocals, a catchy song began to play from the airship’s stereos. Cassidy and Butch appeared on the roof with a stagelight and microphone. “Oh, geez. What’re they doing now.” Chris sighed.

“We are Team Rocket and we fight for what is wrong. You already know our motto, so now you’ll hear our song!”

“Cassidy!”

“And Butch.”

“You little INGRATES, we’ll EDUCATE!”

Their Raticate appeared. “Rrraaaatiaaaate!”

The lights flashed as they both made fancy poses. Then, smoke covered the duo before they emerged from the shadows in very charming forms.

“I aaaaammm the haaaandsome ooooone.” Butch sang.

Guitar strum. “I’m the GORGEOUS oooooone!”

A stronger strum. “Deep inside our hearts, there are oceans of love! To extend our reign to the stars abooooooove!”

More flashing poses – Sheila was the only one enjoying the spectacle, the others just prayed for it to be over.

“We’re gonna find the Firstborn, so don’t cause too much friction. And when we do, we’ll be the NEW—” Another strum, they froze in a new pose. “Stars. . . of this, Fan, FICTIOOOOOON! (Dum. Dum DUM.)”

“Raticate!”

“That was beautiful symmetry.” Artie said. (“Gyom-gyom.”)

“Yeah, and it sure delayed you twerps, ‘cause LOOK!” Butch declared. (Play “Night on Bald Mountain” from Fantasia.)

The tremors grew stronger, and Meloetta’s incantation rang through the air. The top of Bald Mountain, they shortly realized, was not part of the mountain. Enormous bat-like wings stretched to life, and the being they were enclosing was rising to full height. A colossal demon whose blackish-blue color contrasted with the night above. Rounded horns sat atop his bald head, slit glowing eyes peered at all of them with ravenous intent. Air escaped from his nostrils and through the fangs of his mouth, his first breath in probably centuries. A distant orchestra began to play, the source of which was invisible, but probably the vengeful spirits that heard Chernabog’s awakening cry.

The demon observed his surroundings before waving his arms and singing his song. Dark, monstrous notes soared into the atmosphere, his graceful movements directed their path. All across Symphonia they would soar, and already darkness was swallowing the land. “Yes! It’s working, Cass!” Butch laughed. “Alright, Meloetta, tell that lunk to waste these twerps and we’ll bring him to the Boss! …Eh?”

Meloetta had already flown out of the vessel, staring at them with milky glowing eyes. Chernabog snarled at the duo, pulled his mighty right arm back, and flew a godlike punch at the tiny ship. “WE’RE BLASTING OFF AGAAAAIIIIIIN!” Twinkle.

Meloetta flew meters in front of Chernabog’s face. She stared blank and mesmerized still into his shining, lustful eyes. His mouth opened wide, and snapped the spirit inside, the operatives gasping in horror. Chernabog swallowed, and he felt his power rejuvenating. He roared to the heavens, he was heard all across the planet, the children shielded their ears as the cry tingled their souls. Dark mist appeared on Chernabog’s form, and from it emerged ghostly demons that flew everywhere, to all corners of Symphonia, to absorb its wonderful voices.

“We have to stop it!” Chris yelled, throwing off his headband and aiming his Combustion Eye. He inhaled and blasted the sparking beam, but Chernabog swung his fist and destroyed it partway, snarling venomously at the children. “Didn’t even scratch him.”

Chernabog inhaled and unleashed a Song Beam of dark notes, which would surely deafen their souls for all time. Sugar inhaled and unleashed a white Song Beam that contrasted his dark, defending her friends successfully. Both beams stopped as Sugar caught her breath. Aurora unlocked Ice and Flame Gates, Sheila spun her Light Fists, Chris blasted more combustion, but neither attack made a dent in Chernabog. But Sugar was dancing gracefully, listening to the orchestra however dark it may be, and created a beautiful rainbow Song Road. She soared up and around the winged demon and blasted a Song Beam, hurting the side of his head, before he furiously blew her away. “Is musicbending the only thing that hurts him?” Apis asked.

Sugar regained herself and stood straight on her midair Song Road. “Then a battle of song it is.”

Boss fight: Chernabog

Chernabog unleashed a wave of dark notes, which Sugar dodged and surfed to the demon’s left. She waved up and down to evade his arms, stretching her note trail longer as she wrapped around his head. Chernabog furiously tried to pry the notes off of him, then succeeded in swatting Sugar away with his powerful arm. “Uwah!” She flew for miles, but she recomposed and created her Song Road, flying against the winds to the towering demon again. He unleashed a deafening roar that summoned magma from the planet’s core in the form of geysers, Sugar dodging around them hurriedly, but a magma wall erupted before her that startled her out of her notes. She plummeted to the earth, seeing the ground ready to burst with lava, but she regained herself, waved her arms to the music, and created another road to fly away just when the string of geysers erupted.
Once away from the pillars of magma, Chernabog took a deep breath, and blasted a beam of dark notes that Sugar countered with her own. White against black-blue, their energies shoved against the other, before both beams vanished and Sugar caught her breath while flying. Chernabog whooshed his arms and sent gusts of wind that turned into demonic notes, Sugar riding the wind as she evaded, moving toward Chernabog again. The demon opened its mouth wide and GNASHED, but Sugar soared directly skyward, so the angered demon leaped up to clutch her. He missed again, her Song Road zipping an aimless colorful trail as she blew around, fell facefirst toward the demon, and unleashed a powerful Song Beam.

Her white beam struck the demon’s face, increasing his anger as he searched for the child. Sugar was lower than eye-level and much farther away, but within seconds, she zipped up and scratched his left eye, turning to face him while floating in place several meters in the air. Chernabog covered his eye and snarled at her, but Sugar smiled wittily and noted the glass patch covering her own eye. Dark mist appeared on his body and became dementors, cloaked phantoms that fed on souls. Sugar flew away, the air turned colder with the power of rhythm. She whooshed back into the air, aiming to turn toward Chernabog, but a dementor ambushed her from below. Its empty face glared inches from her as its vortex mouth opened, Sugar’s beautiful voice flowing into it from her own mouth. She felt her very being fade, the world blurring around her, in seconds her soul would be lost.

Lightning struck the dementor from below and pushed him off, but Sugar had already fallen. Her arm was grabbed by another force, and looking up, she found Hatsune Miku riding a neon cyan Song Road. “Don’t lose your voice, yet! The song isn’t over!”

“Damn, these ghosties, are a little too chilly for my lightning bolts’ roasting, fools, ya fools.” Killer Bee rapped, blasting lightning bolts at the dementors.

“Just don’t let ‘em get too close and we’ll be cool.” Sunny said, blowing Note Beams out of his saxophone.

“Sugar, let’s attack him together!” Miku sang, releasing the child as she created her own Song Road and both flew around opposite sides. They both released soundwaves that did little damage, but confused the demon, he flailed his arms and erupted magma from the earth, Hatsune blew a soundwave that pierced a geyser so Sugar could fly through and blow a Song Beam into Chernabog’s face. Chernabog let out a roar and fist-palmed, the impact causing a wind that blew Sugar and Miku miles away. The demon sang and waved his arms, creating stream after stream of Demon Notes that flew at either girl. Miku cried a soundwave into her microphone, increasing its volume as Chernabog clamped his ears shut, leaving Sugar to fly at him with a huge, shining, bladed note in her hands, which she slashed across the demon’s face while passing by.

The demon roared to the heavens and erupted a great flaming column around his form. He unleashed fire breath that turned into horseback demons, all running at Sugar and Miku as they jabbed fiery spears, the girls gracefully dodging before Sugar blasted a Song Beam at a final one, though the sides of her clothing were scorched. “You said he was a Song Demon, right? He has a lot of powers.” Sugar gasped.

“Musicbending can become anything, remember?” Miku replied. “Anything his soul desires.”

Chernabog roared again, creating Demon Notes that snapped their teeth on their way to Sugar, who barrel-rolled and dodged. “Then we’ll need to create things, too. From my soul… ooooooooooaaaaaaaaaa.” Beautiful notes flowed out from Sugar’s lungs, their bases morphing into grapes. The grapes bounced and danced around Chernabog’s head, exploding and covering him with juice. Sugar put rage in her next vocal, sending a Tatababasco Grape-note whose expression was furious. By the time Chernabog wiped the juice off his face, the spicy note made it and exploded, burning the demon with lava-like juice. Sugar and Miku surfed around him, wrapping his body in their notesheets. He tugged and tried his best to tear them off, but the girls soared up behind him, over his head, and shot down, forcing his head over and smashing against the mountain.

The singers released and watched him slowly rise up again. More hate and rage burned on his features, white dementors appeared this time, with a more chilly aura that almost froze their skin.
Killer Bee tried to shoot them with lightning from below, but barely laid a scratch. “Damn. If only we had a lightbender to be our defender.”

Sheila perked. “’ey, I’m a lightbender!”

“Y- What?! Fools, ya fools, help me stop them!”

“Okay, sheesh!” Sheila whirled her fists and sent Light Spheres at the white phantoms, making them sink.

“We can use illusions to stop them, too!” Jack Skellington created glowing note-made bats from his vocals, snapping the dementors in their teeth to scare them off. Sugar created glowing utcrackers while Hatsune made cute cyan dolls of herself, all singing happily to scare the phantoms away.

“We aren’t any close to defeating him, though. We have to get Meloetta out of him.” Sugar said.

“His exterior is very powerful, but if one of us managed to get inside him…”

“I’ll do it. Give me an opening and I’ll go in.” Sugar said determinedly.

With a concerned look, Hatsune nodded and flew circles toward Chernabog again. The demon coughed notes in any direction she went, Hatsune nimbly dodging and shooting skyward just before he blew an air gust inches from her. Hatsune was miles in the sky before she turned, becoming still, silent, and shutting her eyes as her cyan road vanished and she fell. The demon channeled power in his fist and readied to punch upward, but “AAAAAAAAHHHHHH!” A fearsome soundwave from Sugar’s lungs drew his attention, but the moment he looked, Hatsune was gone from her point in the sky, having rode the soundwaves and was down at Chernabog’s crotch in a split second. She conjured a shining note on the heel of her boot and kicked the demon, resulting in a bloodhurdling screech that might be heard for light-years. “Now, Sugar!”

Zigzagging around the air, Sugar went straight for the demon’s gaping mouth, muted his screams with a Silence Shield, and dove inside. It was pitch-black inside and very cold; the inside of a demon’s body was much larger than any other creature’s. Dementors were still coming at her, she sang musical nutcrackers and grapes to bite or blow them away. She felt she was getting nowhere flying around this dimension, but eventually, she found a swarm of dementors surrounding and absorbing the energy from Meloetta’s body. “Hey, leave her alone!” Sugar flew forward and sang Song Beams to push the phantoms off. “Meloetta, wake up! Meloetta, please!”

“Ooooooo…” The spirit’s majestic voice came out faintly.

The dementors recovered and lunged at Sugar, who shot down and escaped before turning to unleash notes. She struck one dementor while the others rounded on her, she shot up in attempt to escape, but their skeletal claws took hold and chilled her flesh. She struggled to shake free, but a dementor turned her head toward him and began to suck out her precious soul. She tried with all her power to fight, but the world was turning cold, dark.
When she was younger, growing up in Fun Fun Castle, playing with all her favorite toys. Her mother and father were too busy, the castle’s maid, Monet Sinclaire played with her lots. On her tenth birthday, she grew no more, was given a Devil Fruit that ceased her aging. She followed her father’s orders and turned people into toys, nobody remembered them, but Sugar remembered it all, all the loved ones she removed. She masked all her pain and was mean to everyone, even Monet, and then she watched as she got a new little brother, growing up like normal, ’til he matched Sugar’s 10 years, and within a few more, he would be the older sibling.

Those painful memories were what made her Don Quixote Sugar. An innocent, growing child made into a tool. She wanted it all to end… until she met him.

Cadet Next Door Graduation was here, Sugar stuck her booger in the module and shook Cheren Uno’s hand. On Mariejoa, Cheren saved her from one of the monster’s attacks. Moments later, President Morgan was going to slay him, so Sugar turned Cheren into a toy and saved his life. He hated her for what she did. Then, he forgave her, convinced Sugar to live, reminded her of her love for music, gave her the moment to sing, realize her true voice. That boy whom everyone loved, was their Supreme Leader, the boy who would stop the Apocalypse and save everyone. Everyone followed his orders because they believed in him, so Sugar would, too.

A mystic glow covered Sugar’s body, searing and scaring the dementors. Her long aquamarine hair breezed behind her as her body stretched. Taking breaths, recomposing herself, Sugar sang. “My soul is mine, it’s not for yooo-ooou. My voice is mine, I’ll SING it TOOO-oooo-oo-oo. If there’s one guy… I’ll give my soul to, I, will, give it to hiitiitiim.” (End song.)

Sugar soared past the dementors on her rainbow road, scaring them away from Meloetta and encasing the notes around her. “My heart is always growing ever-y daaaay. Two-thousand-ten, to this MONTH of Maaa-aa-aay. Now you will… come hear me say: we, really, need you agaaaaaiitiiin.”

Her voice reached Meloetta, touched her soul. The Song Goddess awoke, her emerald eyes beautiful again. The inside of Chernabog’s body shined with a new warmth.

The demon felt this, and it was awful. He grabbed his stomach desperately, wishing to expel it all. He hacked, coughed, and Sugar and Meloetta came flying out. Miku beamed at their appearance, as did Jack, Bee, and Sunny below. “Thank you, Sugar, for showing me your voice! Now I am free, of my OWN choice! Lend me your power, one… more tiitime. It’s TIME to send him AWAAA-YAY-YAAAAAY!”

“What should I doooo, just teeeell me no-ow.”

“Siising yooour sooooon with meeeeee!”

The duo dodged a dark Song Beam and created a beautiful rainbow trail, flying to each of the three bell towers. “These towers here, what doooo we do-oo?”

“We have to sing, yes, meeee and yoo-oo-ou. They’re made of chiili, soooo you seeee-ee: my magic will wiitiin the daaaaaaay.” And so they circled around and around the towers, giving them life and light with their rainbow chi. “Do it with me, Sugar. Focus your love and soul with all your strength!” Sugar and Meloetta closed their eyes and folded their hands in prayer. Chernabog was going to punch them, but light shone in each corner of his eyes. The Three Bells were returning to being.

“God, save us all. Destroyyyyyy the darkness.” sang Sugar.
“O Holy Gods, reTURN the suuuu-uuuun.”

“Show us the light. The hap-py daaa-aaays.”

“We still wanna haaaave some fuuuuuun!”

BOOOOONG. . . . BONG. . . . . BONG. . . .

Those golden bells had an otherworldly sound. A beautiful light that gave hope to Symphonia. … Chernabog was afraid of it. He raised his arms, shielded his face from the terror of holy tolls. Very slowly, the demon sank into the mountain, closed his wings over his form. The dark spirits faded away from Symphonia. Bald Mountain was once again in slumber, the holy bells ensuring a beautiful year.

The operatives weakly awakened. The surface of the planet was clouded in mist. They were slowly warming from the dementors’ chills, happy to see each other okay. They wondered where they were and the result of the battle. Light footsteps were slowly coming closer.

A person’s shadow was seen within the mist. A girl of average height and long hair was coming. They knew who it was, they just couldn’t believe it. But soon, Sugar was present in full color, dirty battered clothes, longer hair, and several inches taller than before. She panted for breath, holding her chest and smiling. Her friends returned the smile… they would probably feel the same way if their heart aged a few years in seconds. “Everyone…” Sugar gasped. She waited a few moments to catch more breath. Then, she spoke with the biggest, most excited smile they’ve seen on her, “I HAVE BOOBS!!!”

They lost any warmhearted feelings and wore blank expressions. Sugar was pressing her chest with both hands. “I’m 13 years old and they’re already bulging!! After all these years, I’m finally close to having a big, blossoming pair! I can’t wait until I’m older, I’m gonna be so hot and sexy, all of the guys will fall for me! Aaaaaaaaaahhh!” Her eyes were filled with stars as she just couldn’t look away from her chest.

“. . .” They had no other comment on that. “Hnhm, amazed?” Meloetta winked. “Musicbending has the power to remove any supernatural ailments. Even Time Stasis. Within a few short years, Sugar will be back to her proper age.”

“Only a few short years of being short!” Sugar swayed, hugging her chest. “I can’t wait until I’m all grown up! I hope I find a dress big enough-”

“QUIT IT, ALREADY!” The girls screamed. (“Gyom-gyom!!”)

At the R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N.

The friends relaxed and enjoyed their final moments on Symphonia. Sugar’s hair and nails were growing at a steady, though unusual pace, but she kept her promise to let Aeincha be the first to give her a pedicure. “Huff, you’re really, making me work.” the Lilliputian panted, brushing the large comb across Sugar’s hair quickly. “You grow, way too fast, huff…”

“My hair’s becoming a bit much than you hoped, huh?”

“Haha, nope! I wanna get better at what I do, too!” she proclaimed determinedly. “You make, excellent practice, huff?” Then once Sugar’s aquamarine hair was smooth and shiny, Aeincha grabbed a nearby larger-than-her braid, got it around the end of Sugar’s hair, pulled it to the base, and made it into a ponytail with as much speed and strength as she could.
Sugar got up off the table they had laid out as Aeincha held up a hand mirror with both arms. Sugar stared at her 13-year-old self and swung her ponytail. “Outstanding work.” She stared at her fingernails, the free margins finally grown to a snow white, looked down and wiggled her toes, which have grown longer with her feet. “Guess I’ll need some new shoes. And a new dress, before I break out of this one.”

“Your growing should subside for a little while.” Meloetta told her. “But we’ll be happy to give you a treatment if it acts up again.”

“Not that there’s anything wrong with longer hair!” Hatsune Miku beamed. Sugar turned with surprise to see the contest judges and other contestants arrive.

“Oh yeah, the contest, who...who won?” Sugar asked.

“YOU’RE ALL winners!” Meloetta sang, raising up the ‘10’ posts.

“Right, right...” Sunny nodded with disbelief. “Still, I think the vote’s unanimous.”

“I hate to say it, but my beats, don’t match up to yo’ feats, fools, ya fools.” Killer Bee rapped.

“Only a true musicbender could take out a monster like that.” Jack followed.

“I hope you sing a song with me someday!” Hatsune winked, forming a heart with her fingers.

Sugar blushed, “Really, I didn’t think I was that great. Well, maybe a little, but only through a few unexpected advantages.”

“One way or the other, you’ve awakened yourself as a musicbender, and so your growing can commence.” Meloetta said. “I happily accept you as my Guardian.”

Sugar took out and expanded her Spirit Ball. “If you say so, then...” She threw the ball, hit Meloetta, and watched her turn into energy before flying inside. The ball fell on the ground, shook, and beeped. When the catch was sealed, the ball hovered into the air and flashed. The top half shone green while the bottom was brown. The ball lowered into Sugar’s hand.

Sugar captured a FIRSTBORN! Only 8 more to go! ...I think.

“...!” Sheila flinched and yelled suddenly, “AHH! I just remembered something, mates! Apparently, I’M one of these Seven Lights!”

And the friends were awestruck again. “Yeah, we figured that, Sheila, but um, how did you confirm it?” Aurora asked.

“Well, when I’ve been snoozin’, I’ve been goin’ to the Dream World, and I learned this from a giant talking frog. He also said another Light was awakened, too, didn’t say who. I remembered ‘cause that Don Gero bloke was in the Dream World.”

“So then, two Lights, Sheila and someone else, were awakened,” Mason counted his fingers, “so we got five Lights, and 13 Darknesses, to go.”

“Yeh, but they said we also need the Firstborn, and ‘far as I know, Suguh’s the only Guardian so fah.” Sheila informed.

“So with 8 Firstborn, 5 Lights, 13 Darknesses... sigh, I feel like we barely accomplished anything.” Haruka sighed.
“Then we just need to work hahdah!!” Sheila fist-pumped. “Let’s go around and find every one of these Firstborn and Dark-Lights!!”

“It’s too easy when you say it out loud.” Chris sweatdropped. “But... yeah. It’s time to stop being lazy and start working on this quest. The first person we should go after is Dr. Nefarious. If those guys were working for him, they gotta know something about all this.”

“Okay.” Aurora nodded seriously. “Let’s get to it, pack up your things and everyone on the train.”

“Not me.” Sugar told them. “I wanna stay here and perfect my musicbending. I wanna become stronger so I can repay Cheren for...for helping me. We’re gonna destroy the World Leaders together.”

“Okay, Sugar.” Haruka nodded. “But don’t be too long. We only have one month. ...I have to ask, though... how did Caesar make a Devil Fruit that stops your age?”

“I’m not sure. But I heard my dad say he got the material from the Government. ...That’s one of the reasons I wanna beat them.”

The Sector V friends exchanged understanding nods. “Alright. Good luck, Sugar.” Chris said as they began boarding the train. “Come back soon.” Within minutes, the airborne train roared to life and blasted out of the atmosphere.

The blue sky morphed into stars and blackness in the cockpit’s windshield as Fi appeared before the kids. “Fi, go back to Earth and tell everything that happened to Cheren. Word-for-word.” Aurora ordered.

“Do Master Cheren’s friends not need assistance in returning to Milky Way?”

“We might stay in this galaxy for a while, but it’s important he knows this, first. Tell him we’ll be fine.”

“Very well. I wish you the best on Master Cheren’s behalf. Should he request, I will return to you soon.” Fi morphed into a ball of light and soared across the galaxy like a comet.

“AFTER all, it’s a hefty bit of progress than we expected.” Aurora shrugged. “Just how fast can one month go?”

Mariejoa

Things were quiet in The King’s throne. He enjoyed the serenity that gave him time to contemplate today’s events. A green portal spawned on the opposite end, the Grim Reaper appearing. “I’m not here for any trouble.” he told The King. “But I’m not afraid to get messy. Hand over the body. Now.”

“...It’s over there.” The King pointed to Grim’s right. “You may have it. Let his children pay their respects.”

Grim calmly approached the brown solid coffin. His dear friend, Nigel Uno, the Demon King for only one minute. He was peaceful in eternal slumber. Grim levitated the coffin with magic. “Thank you.” It floated behind him as he returned to the portal. He stopped just before entering, and wore a grave face that he didn’t show to King. “...You may have disrupted your Sands of Time with that Octogan, but I still see your death. ...He is going to come here.”

The King was not moved. On his throne, he appeared like a statue. “One day this month... that boy will find you... and he will destroy you. Then you, like thousands of mortals before you will learn... never to mess with the Uno Royal Family. Okay... Andrew?” Grim and the coffin entered the portal, which vanished.
The First Expedition

Chapter Summary

The Marzipan Pirates venture off to find the Rock Nut.

So this is the start of the Original Worlds Arc in the Side Stories… kinda. Well, this Wendy scene happens during Chapter 19, but the chapter is meant to be read after 20. This arc is actually meant to be pretty long, too.

Chapter B-13: The First Expedition

Unknown basement

“Come on, how does this thing work!” Wendy demanded as she felt around the chest’s bottom. “Do I need a spell or something?!”

“Chelia probably already destroyed the other one like she said.” Carla stated. “Quit wasting your strength trying to make it work, she wanted you to escape!”

“But I could’ve helped her!”

“As a matter of fact, why did you save THIS lunatic?!” Carla pointed accusingly at Floop—he was curiously searching a dusty cardboard box, then flinched at the mention of himself. “You brought Wendy to your castle in the first place to hand her to your master.”

“Look, it’s true that my master put Wendy on the wanted list,” Floop said, “but I had no intention of handing her over immediately. Granted, I found it curious that she would want a tour of my castle, but I planned to have Wendy and Chelia on my show! You think it’s easy to make robotic children behave like REAL children? I wanted real child actors from the start, but no reasonable child would want to climb up that secluded mountain every day. A couple of airbenders wouldn’t have had trouble with that, however. Besides, you children are a riot!” he yelled excitedly. “Almost summer and those two are STILL wearing parkas!”

“It’s not summer in all places.” Sonny said with a glare.

“You dunno where we’re from.” Donna followed.

“We need to find out where we are.” Carla said. “Come on, Wendy, let’s go.”

“Sigh… All right.” Wendy shut the chest and followed her friends.

Once the group found some stairs up, they appeared in a living room of an average house. “W-bobble-gibble now who the heck are YOU kids?” an old African-American man asked them with an… odd way of talking. “What’re you doing in our basement, with the dust and the poor lighting and the- d’aww, you know what Ah’m talkin’ about, be-babbly goo.”

“It’s Bill Cosby!” Sonny exclaimed.

“No, it’s Kevin Michael Richardson!” Donna contradicted.
“Oh, zey must be ze people my brother said vould pop out of that old box in ze basement!” his wife said with a French accent.

“Brother? Miss, are you talking about Dr. Facilier?” Wendy asked.

“Yes, I am Harvey’s sister, Clarice. He and I used to play with zose boxes all ze time, with ze magic and ze poofy smoke and ze, aww you know what je parle de!”

“It’s nice to meet you.” Wendy smiled. “I’m your brother’s student, Wendy. This is Carla, Sonny, Donna, and—”

“Fegan Floop, nice to meet you!” The show host shook Clarice’s hand.

“Say, haven’t we seen you on the tele?” Dr. Lincoln asked. “You had the Fooglies and the Booglies and the Oompa-Loompas…?”

“His show has hit a snag in production.” Carla mentioned. “We’d love to stay and tell you about it, but we must be going.”

“We’re sorry for disturbing you.” Wendy bowed as they headed out. “We’ll tell your brother you said ‘hi’!” They shut the door as they left.

“…Garret, did zat cat just talk?” Clarice asked.

“Mum-bum, Clarice, our children have gihugic 50-foot treehouses on the moon.” Garret replied while reading his newspaper (the tagline read Chaos in Dressrosa). “I think it’s best not to question things and be the oblivious adults we’ve always been.”

The edge of the horizon was orange while the rest of the sky was indigo with stars. The four humans and cat walked out into the middle of the neighborhood street. “Wendy, I really must thank you for getting me out of that place.” Floop said. “The only reason I took the job as Churchill’s apprentice was to have the resources and freedom to build my show. I wanted my show to inspire fun and freedom to the world’s kids… but for some bizarre reason… it didn’t have enough heart behind it. I was missing something… and I didn’t know what. Then I brought you and Chelia… and I think I knew.”

“What were you missing?” Wendy asked.

Floop put a hand on his head and turned away. He spoke musingly. “Is it even possible… for two girls to know each other for less than a day… and bond in so short a time that… one sacrifices for the other?”

Wendy felt a tug in her heart. The events transpired just moments ago, and she still felt bad. Floop turned to them with a humorous smile. “It’s just weird! I don’t know human relations to develop so quickly! It’s the kind of thing you would only see on TV. And the best part about it is… you were actually human. Kids would find you so relatable. …Maybe that’s why I wanted you on my show.”

Wendy looked down, silent for a second. “…Mr. Floop? What’re they gonna do to Chelia?”

Floop’s smile faltered, thinking about his own response with remorse. “…Since Chelia is a magic user, they’ll probably lock her up in Azkaban.”

“Azkaban?!” Wendy shouted.

“Isn’t that the wizards’ prison?” Carla asked.
“The one where the phantoms eat your soul?” the Ice Climbers quivered.

“Actually, ever since the Government became friends with the magical community, it’s become their main prison.” Floop said. “Of course, that’ll be the nicest thing to happen to her. She’s fighting a World Leader. A World Leader is powerful enough to take on a whole country. And Master Churchill was going to kill you, so…”

Wendy clamped a hand over her mouth to hold a scream. She began to cry. “…Maybe I should go.” Floop figured. “The Government will probably be after me for treachery, so…”

“You don’t think we’re going to let you wander freely, do you?” Carla stated. “You could still be in league with Churchill.”

“Heh, please, Charlie, give me a little slack!” Floop grinned.

“The name is Carla.”

“Well, at least I’m not the only one full of hot air.” Floop puffed up and POPPED.

“HE EXPLODED!” Wendy panicked.

“It’s okay, I’m over here!” Floop appeared from behind a bush.

“IT’S ANOTHER TRICK!” Donna leapt forth, hammer ready.

“LET’S POP IT!” Sonny drew his own hammer.

“BOOOOF!” They smashed Floop’s head from either side and knocked him out cold. “…Or maybe it wasn’t.” Donna said as the man lay with his tongue hanging out.

“Oh, Floop.”

“You kids take him somewhere hidden.” Carla told them. “We shouldn’t let him into Dr. Facilier’s hideout. I’ll take Wendy back.”

“No prob, Bob!” The twins saluted before dragging Floop along the ground. (“Get it, ’cause you’re a cat!” said Donna.)

Facilier’s Voodoo Emporium

After dashing into the city, Wendy found the alleyway and opened the emporium entrance. “Mr. Facilier! I’m back from-!” She immediately halted upon the sight of two visitors: a girl with aquamarine hair and a brown-haired boy in a red jacket. “Oh… I didn’t realize you had company over, I’m sorry.”

The boy gasped. “Hey, you’re that girl I saw while I was driving!”

“Oh!” She sparked in remembrance. “I didn’t expect to see you again! My name’s Wendy.” She held a hand out.

“Nice to meet ya again, Wendy!” He shook. “I’m Cheren, this is my friend, Sugar.”

“Hi, Sugar.” Wendy held a hand to her. “You have pretty hair.”

“. . . Um. . .” Sugar stared at her hand nervously.
“Suuugaaaaar. Whaddid I teach you about manners?” Cheren asked scoldingly.

“Thanks. She’s my friend, Carla. We’re trying to-

“GREAT, y’all are crossover buddies, and I’m sure you’d love to fill each other of your respective story arcs, but we gotta get movin’!” Facilier hurriedly gestured Cheren and Sugar out of the shop. “Good luck, kids! Bring home the good news!” He slammed the door. The witch-doctor immediately jumped back into his chair. “WENDY, you’re back!” He spoke with his usual energetic grin. “So how was the mission?”

Carla shot up to his face and shouted, “YOU HAVE A LOT OF NERVE to send Wendy on a dangerous mission and ask that question so casually!”

“Mister Facilier, did you really think I could’ve pulled that mission off?” Wendy asked with hurt in her voice. “I mean, the info was totally wrong, and worse than that-

“Wendy, Ah’m sorry I tricked you into that!” Facilier interrupted. “And to be honest, I really didn’t think you were ready for somethin’ like that!”

“Then why did you let Wendy do it?” asked Carla. “And please don’t say it is because her father wanted her to.”

“He-… ugh…” Facilier had no other answer. “Wendy, it’s…it’s only because yo’ daddy has faith in you.”

“Then why doesn’t he come up to me and say that?”

“Because he’s an international criminal! The only person who’s worth more than him on the posters is some bozo called Ragaj Gnık! I dunno who that guy is, but they gotta give SOME kinda reason for makin’ him worth two billion dollars.”

“Mister Facilier, when’m I gonna be allowed to see my parents?”

“I… don’t… know! Sigh…” The doctor looked at Wendy’s downtrodden look with regret. “Look, y’all are probably hungry. I brought some food with me back from Glitzville, so how ‘bout we eat and… just tell me what happened.”

“…Okay.” Wendy said. “Just let me change out of these ‘Wendell’ clothes.”

Wendy changed back into her emerald dress with diamond patterns, eating dinner as she explained the story to Facilier. “So the whole time, Floop wa’n’t even a bad guy.” The doctor recollected. “Really does seem like a waste, don’t it.” He sipped some coffee. “Ah’m really sorry about Chelia.”

“Don’t be. It was my fault it happened.” Wendy replied depressedly.

“Don’t say that, Child.” Carla said. “You told Chelia to come along, but she insisted…”

“No, it was my fault! Something bad has happened to almost every person I met! I hurt Lee Andrew, I ruined Orchid Bay for June, now there’s Chelia, and even Mr. Floop could be in trouble with the Government now… I thought wearing these Chi Stabilizers would help me make friends better, but they haven’t! It’s like the universe is really saying I’m not allowed to make friends. Carla, what if something bad happens to you or Dr. Facilier, or the twins? I couldn’t bear it if…”
“WENDY!” Facilier smacked the table with his cane and scared her upright. “Now, girl, a teacher can only give you so much sympathy before it starts to sound like pity. I don’t want you to feel upset, but I ain’t gonna be able to provide ya comfort all the time. Now I agree that these are a series of unfortunate coincidences, but when it comes down to it, these people made their own decisions in the end. Only you can decide if you’re a walking bad luck train, otherwise you just gotta suck it up and be glad the universe is still letting you run around.”

“. . .” Wendy didn’t respond, and she didn’t feel like shedding another tear. She resumed eating the peas and mashed potatoes the doctor laid out for her. “So, um… do you know those two people?” she asked.

“Oh, well, that Sugar girl was goin’ through her own problems. But that boy…” Facilier smiled and spoke with high regard, “That boy was Cheren Uno. Supreme Leader of the Kids Next Door. His daddy was one of the best people alive back then, and his mama is one of the best people alive… and let me tell you, that boy did some pretty amazing stuff. Wendy, if you had that boy as your friend, then you would have nothing to worry about.”

“Why do you think that?”

Facilier smiled thoughtfully, stirring his coffee with a teaspoon. “Well, from what I heard… he’s everybody’s best friend.” He took a sip.

Prehistoric Earth

Nel had guided the Marzipan Pirates and Aisling to a valley, where they saw a mountain with a gigantic nest in the distance. “That Terry mountain.” The cavegirl said, still riding Augustus’s shoulders. “It look like Terry not home. Can Aughsucks cross valley?”

“IT’S AUGUSTUS!” the boy shouted. “And watch me! The Marzipans are about to become the first explorers of Planet Earth!” (Play “Terrydactyland” from Banjo-Tooie!)

Stage B-10: Primordial Rock

Mission: Find the Rock Nut.

The pirates followed a passage within a small, narrow trench. They encountered a Bargasaurus, a burgundy-colored stegosaur-like dino with green eyes and spikes along its back, guarding a ledge. The Bargasaur charged at Augustus and pushed the captain back a few feet. “Grrrr.” He drew out his Gobstopper to throw at the dino’s face, but the angered Bargasaur withstood the attack and rammed him again. However, the Baby Trio, Nel, and Aisling seized the chance to run around it and make it up onto the ledge. “Ain’tchu guys gonna help me??” Augustus yelled when the dino returned to its position.

“Ain’tchor Haki come back, yet?” Rallo asked.

“Ha ha ha! Aughsucks can’t beat small Bargasaur!” Nel clapped.

“Ugh. I’m wedging you brats when this is over.” Augustus got up and held his arms open when the Bargasaur charged again. He pushed against the dino and stayed firm on his feet as he tried to channel Haki to his arms. While his arms didn’t color black, he showed an enhance in strength, and was able to throw the dino aside. The captain quickly ran up to and jumped on the ledge with his allies, and Nel climbed back up on his shoulders.

The explorers crossed a wider area, avoiding the Bargasaurs that were roaming around. They watched as Aisling sprinted across the plain and the following platforms, once again intending to bypass the stage and watch the humans endure the ordeals. The kids jumped up some tall, natural stairs, which became narrow platforms over the thin trench below. Soarasaurs, which were greenish-yellow pteranodons, attempted to push the crew off, but a quick whack with the Gobstopper could knock them senseless. At the end of the platforms, they faced a greater plain of Dodongos, which were huge green lizard-like reptiles. However, they looked into the trench and saw a Gold Wonka Bar being guarded by a caveman, who was covered in thick green armor and wielding a spiked club.

“That member of Rocknut Tribe.” Nel said. “They big bully cavemen. Only weak spot is their butt, but need hit really hard.”

“Stewie, do you still have your missile launcher?” Augustus asked.

“It’s out of ammo.” Stewie replied.

Just then, a large Life Saver candy hit the ground near the edge of the plain. “What’s that?” Rallo asked as they hopped over. The Life Projector projected a hologram of Princess Zeira.

“I thought you guys would need help getting through. So I’m warping Magic Candies to points around your area. You can use this Pop Gum to attack some enemies.”

An orange bubblegum bounced out of the projector.

“You just have to chew it up and spit it out.”

“You chicas really come in handy sometimes.” Augustus smiled.

The hologram bashed him with her ladle. “Don’t call me chica! I still want you to bow to me.”

“Screw you!” The hologram vanished. “I just have one problem, guys: I cannot spit well…” the captain said with embarrassment.

“You throw a jawbreaker with perfect aim, pilot a plane, and suck on lollipops all day, but spitting’s out of the question…” Stewie configured.

“What pretty pebble?” Nel picked up the orange gum. “Nel taste.” The cavegirl tossed it into her mouth and began chewing. “Ulp!” Her cheeks puffed with the burning sensation.

“Hang on, Nel!” Augustus picked up the child, holding her horizontally with his arms around her belly. He decided to approach the first Dodongo in the field, and when the dino opened its mouth to breathe fire, Augustus squeezed Nel and shot the gum out of her mouth like a bullet. It went down the Dodongo’s throat, exploded, and knocked the creature out. “Guess what, Nel, you’re the world’s first projectile weapon!” He stuffed more Pop Gum into Nel’s mouth to shoot into the other two Dodongos. He then decided to return to the edge of the plain, aim down at the Rocknut caveman’s exposed rear, and shoot a Pop Gum at it to knock him out in one blast. The captain jumped down to retrieve the Wonka Bar and could bypass the caveman safely before jumping the platforms to get back up.

“Wait a sec, if they’re called the Rocknut Tribe, do they have something to do with the Rock Nut?” Augustus asked.

“Nel don’t know. But Rocknuts maybe not tell us.”

The path to follow from the Dodongo plain was along the left, on a narrow walkway over a chasm.
There was a Rocknut patrolling back and forth along the cliff, so when it was turned away, Augustus used his “Nel Launcher” to shoot the caveman’s rear and send him falling. After crossing the walkway, the crew entered a dark cave that was lit by a fire deep inside. There was a short caveman with black hair and a large beard, wearing a red loincloth.

“It’s Oogle Boogle!” Nel pointed. She jumped off Augustus’s shoulders and said to it, “Oogle Boogle! Oog oonga, ooga booga, boongu nuguh?”

“Oog. Ooga looga booga boo.”

“Why little caveboy insult Oogle Boogle’s mother?” Nel asked.

“THAT WHAT I SAID?!” Rallo screamed. “Tell ’im I didn’t mean it!!”

“Oogle Boogle said he hungry. He want food that make him fat.”

There was a tunnel up on a ledge behind the caveman, so Augustus climbed into it first, with Nel on his shoulders again. Torches lit this passage, and they could see the narrow bridge over the dark chasm. A Bargasaurus was guarding a bushel of Fudgepuffsicles, and when the dino charged at Augustus, he pushed back and channeled what he could of his Haki. He shoved the dino over the side into the pit, then grabbed a fudgesicle. He brought the inflating ice cream back to the Oogle Boogle, who happily took a bite. The caveman puffed up like a balloon and floated over a nearby spiked floor. He deflated over a platform with a switch, which he held down to make some areas on the spikes flip over to flat ground.

The Oogle waved at them in thanks as they jumped across the flat spaces. They made it to a pool of water, where Aisling was waiting. Since the Baby Trio plus Nel couldn’t swim, Aisling and Augustus helped carry them underwater. After swimming through a tunnel, they got to a wider area where electric eels (called Frazzles) were swimming around, lighting the dark with their sparking bodies. The tunnel ahead was patrolled by Frazzles, so they deemed it too dangerous to enter. The crew was able to resurface, and Augustus saw a rugged wall that he could climb around to reach a high ledge. The captain swam to and climbed around this wall, and when Snapdragons obstructed his path, Maggie grabbed Nel and used her as a weapon to smash them.

After making it to the cliff, they found a pack of Pop Gum. Augustus poured them all into Nel’s mouth as the child began chewing. “I’m guessing this stuff will work underwater.” He held Nel in his arms while Maggie held his neck as he dove back underwater. He aimed Nel at the Frazzles and shot slow-coming Pop Gums that were effective enough to knock the eels out. There was an alternate left route, guarded by a Frazzle which Augustus shot with their last Pop Gum. On the surface above this tunnel was a Gold Wonka Bar. With that, they resumed the main path and surfaced in a new tunnel.

Aisling released Stewie and Rallo before running ahead once again. There was a huge dinosaur egg that Augustus could lift in his arms. He decided to take it with them as they exited the tunnel to a large area enclosed within walls. There was water in the chasm below, and a narrow stone bridge led to a sealed barred door. There was a switch by the door that the egg could hold down. When Augustus was about to carry it across- “NNNNRNRRRREEEEE!” a dinosaur with a very long neck, brown backside and yellow underside, and ravenous green eyes, emerged from the water and unleashed a deafening roar. The captain backed up into the cave when the Chompasaurus attempted to snack on the egg.
“Dafaq is that thing?!” Augustus yelled.

“Chompasaurus like food that crosses their water.” Nel said.

“I can’t get this thing across with them sniffin’ around. Maggie, is the powder in your gun dry, yet?”

“Mw-mw!” Maggie saluted. The crew peeked out into the gorge and saw a small ledge high up on their right. Maggie launched her grappling hook to the ledge and pulled herself up. Augustus carried the egg in both arms and began to balance across the bridge. The first Chompasaurus emerged from the water, giving its loud roar. Maggie aimed at its eye and shot, and the long-necked dino sank back down. Maggie kept defending her captain from other Chompasaurus until he made it to the other side. He set the egg on a switch as the gate opened.

His teammates caught up with him as they wandered onto a rugged plain with Lightfoots, which were yellow raptors that hopped around like rabbits. One jumped Augustus and took his glasses, another jumped Maggie and took her pacifier. The baby started bawling on the ground, and the sun hurt the captain’s eyes. Since Nel confirmed these ones weren’t her friends, she helped Augustus direct his vision to the Lightfoots so he could hit them with his Gobstopper. After recovering their stolen items, the pirates hopped up some natural stairs leading to a walkway along the wall over the field. A few Soarasaurs obstructed their progress, but the path led them to a cave guarded by a caveman wearing a purple loincloth and wielding a huge stone Q-tip.

“That Unga Bunga!” Nel pointed, crawling over to the caveman. “Ung dunga bunga?”

“Bug, bugga bugga, Unga Bunga!” He pointed at the future humans.

“Bug bugga?” Nel asked.

“Bug bugga.”

Nel crawled back to her friends. “Unga said no can bring silly foot things in cave.”

“You mean we can’t even take ’em off and carry them?” Augustus questioned. “I don’t even do sandals! Let’s just go that way.”

The cliffside walkway went farther, leading to a ladder where a Rocknut caveman guarded the top. They returned to the plain below, finding a crater in a corner where a Bargasaurus guarded a cave. Augustus dropped down and wrestled with the dinosaur, but there wasn’t room in the crater to shove it aside. However, Stewie quickly ran into the cave to swipe the Pop Gum, then they escaped the crater. They returned to the ladder, but to expose the Rocknut’s rear side, Rallo stuck his boombox in the wall and caused a tremor. The Rocknut fell headfirst over the ladder’s edge and landed upside-down. Augustus used Nel to shoot his exposed rear and K.O. the caveman.

At the top of the ladder, they found Shrink Sweets placed on a rock. “Hey, if the four of us ate these, Nel could sneak us in the cave herself.” the captain said.

“How can Nel help?” she asked.

“Watch this!” The four Marzipans each ate a piece of the candy and contracted down to jellybean size.

“Whoa!” Nel stared at them with awe. “Why is Aughsucks small now?”

“Will you stop calling me that!!” he squeaked angrily.
“Hee hee! Aughsucks sound like baby dactyl. But Nel thinks this work.” She lifted the four mini humans and hid them in the empty sockets of the skull mask on her head. She climbed down the ladder and approached the Unga Bunga.

“You ditch weird cavemen?” His Cavetalk was clear in Nel’s ears. “Okay. You good.” He stepped aside so Nel could enter the torch-lit cave. There were Unga Bungas sitting at tables and coercing, some were playing poker using rocks with various symbols.

“Unga Bunga, Unga Bunga!” The next passage had parallel rows of the cavemen, holding large flat stones as they charged into and rammed their rocks into their counterparts’ rocks, resulting in a booming collision. They wobbled back as the process repeated over and over. “Is this some weird caveman game?” Augustus asked.

“Unga Bunga play Unga Bunga.” Nel answered. “They smash bedrocks into each other until one falls. Nel will be careful.” Nel waited for each group of cavemen to ram each other before moving forward. There were a few close shaves that made Nel’s heart bounce, but she made it. She followed a new tunnel that led to a cave where the ground was covered with red sticks. There was an Unga Bunga asleep on the other side, holding a whip. Above him, an Oogle Boogle was trapped in a round bone cage.

If Nel stepped on the sticks, the Unga would wake and attack her with his whip. There were torches set around the red sticks, and Nel could grab the thin core on their pillars. She climbed around so her back faced the next torch, then she kicked off, whipped around, and clutched the pillar. She repeated the process until she was near the Oogle Boogle. “Me need food to regain strength. Find good rock.” he said. Nel proceeded to jump the rest of the torches, and the last one that was close to the wall was next to a Ringtrot. Nel picked the Ringtrot out of the wall and jumped her way back to the Oogle. She handed the caged caveman the Ringtrot, so he began to suck it.

Filled with adrenaline, the Oogle Boogle ran around and around the round cage, spinning it as it flopped about in the air. The Unga Bunga awoke to the commotion, and he screamed when a chunk of the ceiling where the cage hung from collapsed and crushed him. The bone cage rolled and smashed a bone gate blocking a new tunnel on the left of the room. With the Unga defeated, Nel was free to walk around the red sticks. She could cross to and enter this cave, finding that it sloped upward. However, the only jumpable platforms were big torches. Nel felt the heat strongly as she was forced to balance along the sides of those torches, and her heart raced with being so close to these flames. When she jumped to a higher torch, she whirled her arms and stood on her tippy-toes in trying to stay balanced. “Don’t lose your cool, Nel, you can do it.” Augustus told her.

Nel didn’t know what that phrase meant, but she kept her steady posture and made it across the tunnel. She heard a creature jittering the bones of a large corpse at the end, and saw the back end of that grayish-white creature sticking out. When Nel got to it, the creature turned out to be Aisling, who looked up at her with a start before scampering out of the tunnel like a frightened kitty. Nel made it outside, and to her left was some Growth Gum on a rock. She put her tiny friends beside it so they could eat and stretch back to normal. “Thanks for the lift, Nel.” Aughsucks patted her mask. “Have one of my lollipops.”

He unwrapped a green lolli and gave it to Nel. …The cavegirl shoved it up her nose and pulled out a long string of snot. “And now I don’t want any more,” the captain said. “Too grossed out. My defining character trait, ruined.”

He let the cavegirl ride his shoulders as they climbed up some natural stairs. They were at the base of Terry’s mountain and could begin the climb up its precarious path. “Uug-OOOOOOG!”
was shouting coming from the plains around the mountain, and they saw Rocknut Tribe members hauling catapults loaded with boulders. The cavemen began launching the boulders in attempt to hit the pirates, so they moved quickly and avoided them. Stewie put on a set of goggles that projected markings where the boulders would crash, and let his friends know where they were. Some stalagmites blocked their path, so they had to trick the Rocknuts into launching boulders into them. They reached a dead end with some Bounce Gum. Augustus saw a crack in the wall above them, so he bounced level with that crack so the Rocknuts would try to hit him, and smash the wall open. The five explorers bounced up into this opening, where they could climb a rugged wall. There were holes in the parallel wall, which the Rocknuts flung their boulders through in further attempt to smash them.

There was an exit back onto the mountain path up top, and a Bargasaurus was guarding a route between the wall and a shorter wall. The shorter wall prevented Augustus from shoving it off the edge, so the captain pushed it all the way back against the protective barricade of the next turn. There was an opening in the other barricade, and the Bargasaur was struck by the Rocknuts’ boulder. The explorers found Aisling by the entrance of a tunnel into the mountain, but before entering, Augustus sidled across a thin ledge past the entrance. A boulder crashed into a cracked part and exposed a Gold Wonka Bar, so the captain collected it before accompanying his friends into the tunnel. (End song.)

“Thanks once again for helpin’ us through all that, Lazy Fairy.” Augustus told Aisling with sarcasm.

“I helped those two swim, didn’t I?” Aisling replied angrily.

“This cave take us to mountaintop.” Nel said as the tunnel sloped upward. “Maybe we get rock before Terry come home.”

“I still don’t understand why Nel is the only caveperson that knows English.” Aisling said. “It’s so… unnatural!”

“But it’s still the least unnatural thing I can think of.” Augustus said.

At the end of the cave, they were at the top of the mountain, just below the giant bird nest. They found an entrance to the nest, seeing four huge eggs lain inside. “Nel found rock in middle of nest.” She pointed. Augustus approached and moved the sticks aside, finding a round, flattish stone with an empty core. “That it!”

“This is the Rock Nut?” Augustus asked, picking up the heavy sweet.

“Mw mw!” Maggie beamed.

“You’re right, it looks like a doughnut!” Stewie realized.

“So the first candy was a doughnut? …Well, this is going in the Adventure Databook!” Augustus licked the rock. “It really is tasty!!”

“REEEEEEEK!” They were almost deafened by the screech of a massive, light-brown pterodactyl with green eyes. The reptile suddenly snatched the Rock Nut in its long and pointy mouth, swallowing it.

“YOU STUPID PERRA DE AVES! GIVE THAT BACK!” Augustus yelled.

“Raaaaaaaat! RAAAAAET!” Terry shouted.
“He’s calling us Rocknuts!” Aisling yelled. “He thinks we’re with the Rocknut Tribe!”

“Tell him we’re not!”

“All right! Ah-ACK, ACK, AAAAHH!”

“RAAAAAACK!”

“He won’t listen; he thinks we’re trying to hurt his babies!”

“Watch out!” Augustus yelled. (Play Terry’s Theme from Banjo-Tooie.)

Boss fight: Terry

The prehistoric avian hacked giant globs of spit that would leave the humans sticky and immobile if they were struck. Maggie’s bullets didn’t have effect on the reptile, and Augustus’s Gobstopper bounced right back. However, after spitting seven globs, the pterodactyl had to catch his breath. Augustus chucked the Gobstopper up his throat, causing Terry to choke. He managed to cough the jawbreaker out, along with a Life Projector that released some Pop Gum. Augustus smirked, filling Nel with the spicy sweets and helping her chew. He aimed the Nel Launcher up at Terry, squeezed her, and damaged the reptile with the explosive candy.

The dinosaur decided to fly below the mountain and come back up with three Bargasours. He trusted the dinos to fight them while he returned down for a drink of water. Aisling turned into a Bargasaur herself and wrestled with one, Rallo attacked the other with his boombox, leaving Augustus to shove against the third one. “Agh!” The dinosaur knocked him off his feet, and when it tried to bite the captain, he tricked it into biting the Gobstopper. In the Bargasaur’s weakened moment, Augustus threw punches against its side, trying to force the Haki to present itself. The dino was knocked out anyway, just in time for Terry to return.

The pterodactyl was carrying a giant boulder, and the kids avoided when it dropped down and shattered. Terry hacked more big globs of spit, but he still had no luck in trapping any of the pirates. Terry flew directly above Augustus, faced down, and spun around in attempt to pierce the human like a drill. Augustus dodged, watching Terry drill the spot for a sec, then the dactyl tried again. Augustus got beside one of his eggs, so when Terry drilled down, he immediately halted and flapped upright.

Since he was low enough, Augustus was able to jump up and grab his talons. The reptile tried to shake him off, soaring around the sky. Augustus climbed up to Terry’s head, and the avian failed to shake him as the captain punched the point of his head four times. Augustus clutched the head’s point and steered Terry like a plane, ramming him against the mountainside. The dactyl recovered and floated back up while Augustus dropped to the path above the nest’s side. Terry barfed a stream of drool into his nest, rendering the Baby Trio incapacitated in the thick liquid.

Augustus kept standing on the edge with Nel on his shoulders. The avian kept changing position and flapping his wings rapidly to blow his enemies off. He stopped, and while Augustus was trying to recompose, the dinosaur swooped across the edge and caught Augustus on his long nose. The captain punched the pterodactyl several times in the eyes, and when Nel hacked her own stream of spit over his eyes, Terry spun around and drilled downward. He cut a hole into the nest’s floor, draining his pool of drool and rescuing the Baby Trio.

Augustus hopped back on the nest floor and noticed one last Pop Gum through the twigs. He fed it to Nel, then faced her up when Terry hovered above. The dactyl opened his mouth wide and swooped down to gulp, but August shot the gum up his throat. The gum popped, and Terry fell on his back. Augustus set Nel down and climbed back onto the nest’s side. He balled his fists together, leapt high above, and cried, “Double Iron KNUCKLE!” His fists turned Armament as he smashed down on Terry’s belly. (End song.)

The Rock Nut flew out of the bird’s mouth. Augustus picked up and held the stone sweet in victory. They heard cracking sounds and looked to see the eggs finally hatching. Adorable, pink baby pterodactyls peeped out and began chirping. “Eeeerrrk…” Terry grunted.

“He said, ‘Don’t hurt my babies. Please don’t hurt them.’” Aisling translated.

“We’re not here to hurt your babies.” Augustus replied. “We just wanted this rock. Is it that important to you?”

“I took that rock from the Rocknut Tribe because they used its strange power to enhance their armor. They used it to kill my wife. I won’t let them use it to hurt my babies.”

“That’s why…” Augustus stared at the stone doughnut. A strange power…?

“Ug! Ug, uug!” They looked at the nest’s entrance: a trio of Rocknuts had appeared.

“So you guys’ve been using this nut to bully people?!” the captain yelled.

“(Many thanks beat Terry for us.)” a Rocknut said with a smirk (Nel translated). “(We take Rock Nut now. Rocknut Tribe rule world.)”

Augustus dropped the rock and marched toward them. “Like Hell you will.”

“Aughsucks, no!” Nel cried.

“(Aughsucks, you strong. Maybe you join us.)”

Augustus balled his right fist and turned it Armament. “Sorry, but you’re a hundred million years too soon!” He PUNCHED the caveman through his armor, shattering the stone garb as he went flying off the mountain.

“UUUUUH!” The Rocknuts gaped.

“Remember my name throughout history! I am Augustus, the Stone Fist!” Hope you don’t mind, I drew inspiration from you, Sheila. I could never punch as hard as you, though.

The Rocknuts panicked and ran all the way down the mountain. Augustus went back to pick up the Rock Nut, smiling at Terry. “You take care of your kids now. And if those lugs ever come back, I’ll club ’em for ya.”

“Eeeek…” Terry smiled. (“Thanks…”)

Nel’s cave

The explorers made the tedious journey back to Nel’s cave, where they pulled the Ace Flyer back outside. “We couldn’t have found it without you, Nel. Consider yourself the first member in history to be a Marzipan Pirate.”

“Nel so happy!” She clapped. “Nel always be Aughsucks friend.”
“Y…yeah.” Augustus blushed. “Can we go now?”

“I’ll help with that.” Aisling sat on the ground and opened her book. “I know a bit of Time Magic, too, thanks to Celebi. I can return us to the present. Ahem… Father… take us home… Father… take us home…” A magic circle began to encase them. Clock hands spun around it. “Send us… to the place… we belong….”

Aisling repeated the verse in her angelic voice. The circle shone brighter, and in a loud WHIIIIIRRRRR, the whiteness engulfed them.

Neighborhood street

They reappeared on the street of an unknown neighborhood. The morning sun was rising. “Finally.” Augustus said, holding the Rock Nut up to bask in the light. “The first Lost Candy. What would Luviro think…”

Aisling stretched her arms and flexed her fingers. “At any rate, it seems my strength has recovered. It was a pleasure traveling with you, humans. But now I must bid adieu.”

“Well, Forest Fairy… thanks for all the help you’ve given us.” Augustus said. “But why were you suddenly so interested in helping us find the Rock Nut?”

“For a number of reasons that I think it’s too dangerous to explain to you now. But rest assured, you will learn everything later. Just promise us you will find the rest of the Lost Candies before this month ends.”

“You can count on that.” Augustus nodded assuredly.

“Good. Anyway… Princess Mavis will be hosting her tea party soon, so I must get back to Galaxia.” Aisling sprouted a huge pair of bug-like wings. She lifted off the ground when they began flapping. “Before I go, perhaps I can give you a hint. One of my friends resides in the sea kingdom of Oceana. She may be able to help you if you spoke to her. Good-bye, Captain Augustus. May the winds of fate blow in your favor.” She flew into the sky.

“Auf Wiedersehen, smelly fairy!” Augustus waved. “Sigh, well she was fun.” (“Aaaaahhh-” a distant scream was rising.) “Where did she warp us, anyw-”

“-AAAAAAAAHHHHH!” A furious German woman KICKED Augustus like a ball and sent him flying against a street sign that read Drury. “AUGUSTUS, YOU STUPID POPEL!” Henrietta grabbed her dizzy son by the vest and shook him violently. “Do you have any idea how worried I’ve been about you, you little TRASH COMPACTOR?!”

“Is Augustus making that look because he’s hurt, or he’s thrilled?” Stewie questioned.

“Still ain’t as scary as my mama.” Rallo said.

“Mw-mw.” Maggie was tired of their childish responses.

Henrietta whipped her head toward them, scaring the babies. “And VHY are you hanging around Big Mam’s Triplet Trio?!” She then looked at the biplane. “And VHAT did you do to your fazzer’s PLANE?! Take it through ze KESSEL RUN?” Henrietta let the teen drop on the street before approaching the damaged plane. “I don’t vant to imagine where to begin-” She lightly knocked the plane with her knuckle, and the back compartment opened as a small, soot-covered creature with big hazel eyes tumbled out. “Cough!” Nel coughed.
“Aaaaaaack…” The four pirates gaped.

The cavegirl sniffed Henrietta’s boots, looking up the woman’s body. “Big cavewoman smell like Aughsucks. Is woman Aughsucks’ mate?”

“Who the heck is this?” Heinie asked.

“Uhhh… cavegirl we brought back from the past.” Augustus replied with a nervous grin.

“. . . . . I am going zo execute you.”

“Hehe. What can you do?” Augustus grinned and began another lollipop.

“Why is Aughsucks eating snot stick?” Nel asked.

“BLEEEEEHHHH!” He puked.

Boogey Bay

Cindy Cortix, the orange-haired daughter of Captain Mandy, was peeling the skin off stuffed dolls in her cabin. “Stupid Mom… won’t let me hunt for Augustus. Doesn’t think I can catch prey as well as Azula… thinks I’m too unstable. Why does she THINK that?” She ripped a doll’s head off. Cindy sighed and walked up to her dresser mirror, staring at her reflection with a sad look. “I can kill enemies, too. I can create evil and mayhem. But Mom doesn’t think that. Why doesn’t she believe in me? Isn’t there anything I can do?”

She stared at her reflection as though expecting an answer. She looked into her own upset eyes and sought pity. …The mirror began to wobble, and a perky, smiling girl replaced her reflection. Cindy stared with the utmost weirdness. She wasn’t prepared when a snake came out of the mirror and pulled her inside.

That whole level was Banjo-Tooie inspired, ’cause that’s where Terry and all those cavemen come from. The next chapter will be a big one, so stay tuned. Kids, don’t stare at mirrors too long.
Chapter B-14: Dark Triumphs Light

Negaverse; Ydnic’s House

“AAAAH!” Cindy Cortix fell out of a dresser mirror. When the redheaded girl recovered, she viewed around and saw she was in a bright and cheerful room, full of stuffed ponies, elf dolls, teacups, and a bed with a rainbow backside. “Hi there!” said a perky voice that sounded like Cindy’s. She looked at the owner of this atrocious room: a girl with shiny, smooth orange hair, no nose, a pink dress, white leggings, and pink strap-on shoes. Her smile was creepily big. “You must be my Positive.”

“Y- You’re whuh…?” Cindy stared closer at the girl. No nose, dark eyes, she did kind of look like… “N-No no, that’s crazy.” Cindy shook the thought off. “There’s only one me, and even if there were more of me, they would be more like me, not some…some…” She looked sickeningly at the Negative, gesturing with her hands, “whatever THIS is!”

“Hee hee hee!” Ydnic giggled. “You’re really silly! I bet we’re going to get along great!”

“What am I even doing here?” Cindy asked, helping herself up. “Did you tell that giant snake to pull me in here?”

“No she didn’t. I did.” Both girls turned to the room’s entrance. Medusa entered, possessing her human body. “For a while, I was afraid that it would take some extra work to locate Ydnic’s Positive. How convenient she was looking at the same dresser.”

“Who’s this creepy lady?” Cindy asked.

“She’s Lady Medusa!” Ydnic introduced brightly. “She wanted us to be together during an important plan of hers.”

“And who said I wanted to be part of some plan?”

“Because, you ignorant brat, I’m about to give you a place in Pirate History!” Medusa declared.

“What do you mean?”

“Weren’t you complaining, just moments ago, about how your own mother has doubt in your relentlessness and fortitude? I want to give you the chance to make her see differently. And this will be how: You know about Davy Jones, correct?”

“Davy Jones? Of course I know him. My mom saw Davy Jones himself. She wasn’t afraid of him, so I’m not, either.”
“Oh, your mom saw Davy Jones, how nice.” Medusa feigned interest in her voice. “But how would you like to take it one step further? How would you like to be with Davy Jones…” her eyes narrowed viciously, “as he falls into depravity!”

“What?”

“Cindy, you own your own ship in the Boogey Fleet, correct?” Cindy nodded. “Take your Negative with you back to the Posiverse and follow these coordinates.” Medusa gave the girl a map. “I’ll meet you there.” The goddess vanished in a Dark Portal. Cindy stared at the map, which had an “X” marked in the Indian Ocean.

Posiverse; south of Indian Ocean

“Oh, Em, Gee!” Ydnic Xitroc stood on the keel of Cindy’s ship, which was aptly called the Boogey Pool, much smaller than Mandy’s flagship. A gentle breeze was blowing the Negative’s hair, and faint sunlight poked through the cloudy sky. “The Posiverse is so wonderful! I never thought air could smell this nice, especially on the sea! Hey, but won’t your mom be mad at you for taking one of her ships?”

“This is MY ship!” Cindy snarled; her spiteful expression and dark armor made her greatly contrast with Ydnic. “Not my mom’s! And no one’s gonna rat me out because the only pirates on this boat are dead animals. YOU!” She shot a Scare Stare toward the undead black licorice hyenas. “Make the boat go faster!” Shenzi, Banzai, and Ed quickly scampered off to follow their order.

“You like animals, too??” Ydnic gazed at her with bulbous eyes. “You and me have soooo much in common!”

“DON’T be silly! Animals are slobbery… icky… messy… THINGS!” As Cindy said this, a little skeleton dog trotted over, panting happily at her master. “Even if you don’t make saliva anymore, Saliva. Go hang out on the sails with Milkshakes.”

A pink skeleton cat was frightfully clutching the top board of the mast sail. “Mew.”

“Well, in case you’re interested, I’m a member of DNK Sector -W.” Ydnic said. “I actually joined a month ago, it was a little after the DNKG thing. One of my cousin’s team members turned traitor, and I wanted to fill her shoes! Ha ha ha!”

“Hmph. My cousins all work for the KND. But I don’t really care. I don’t work well in teams. It’s easier just to order people to do everything with fear. My mom always said fear was the strongest element.”

“Sure, it’s easy to make people afraid of you.” Ydnic frowned for a bit. “But the better solution is to make them do what you say with LOOOOOVE.” She folded her hands and swayed her hip, making a goofy smile.

Cindy puked over the railing. “Please… never do that again.”

The ship made it to the island that Medusa had marked. It was a deserted, jungle island, and a set of arrow signs directed the girls to a hatch in the ground. They entered this underground chamber and saw Medusa standing next to a chamber machine. “So glad you girls could make it.” she said. “You’re probably wondering what this is. Well, this is a time machine used by the Big Mom Pirates not so long ago. And I set its coordinates to take you back 300 years. Before Davy Jones lost his humanity.”

“Yeah, so what?” Cindy asked.
Medusa smirked. “You lovely young ladies will be the deciders of his fate! Cindy’s dark soul and fearbending contrasting with Ydnic’s bright and ironically-positive outlook is a perfect conflict between Light and Darkness! I want Davy Jones to be swallowed in the middle. The side that is most influential will decide the fate for him, and all of his hapless future victims!”

Ydnic gasped loudly. “You want us to alter the TIMELINE?! Medusa, is this part of the deal you promised Nerehe?”

“Davy Jones is one of the Thirteen Darknesses. In order to awaken himself, he must be deserving of the title. His Dark Side must prevail. And to ensure that it does, I must prove that Darkness conquers Light. You two are the perfect candidates for doing that.”

“Fine!” Ydnic declared with passion. “Not only will I show you that good triumphs over evil, I’ll teach Ms. Sour Face here that, too!”

“Hmph. We’ll see about that.” Cindy scoffed.

“So you both accept my challenge, terrific. Step into the time machine, if you will.” Medusa stepped aside.

The two counterparts entered the chamber, and one of Medusa’s snakes activated the device. In a surge of blue light, the girls were transported.

Somewhere on the sea; 340 years ago…

A battle was taking place at high noon. The ship’s cannons boomed incessantly, rounds after rounds of gunfire striking the monsters that threatened their vessel. One of these demons – a seaweed-colored seasnake with a skull mask – wrapped its body around the ship and screeched loudly. One of the crewmen – a man with a squished flat nose and slit narrow eyes, wearing a hat that looked like a hammer – leapt up and headbutted the snake’s skull mask with enough force to break it. The creature dispersed into dark particles.

First mate of the Flying Dutchman
MACCUS the Hammerhead

Maccus looked to the portside and saw a massive two-headed barracuda, both with skull masks, speeding toward them. “CAP’N, we ‘ave two on the port! Er, one! Er, maybe it’s one-and-a-ha-”

The captain jumped at the railing, whooshed his arms right, and sliced a huge line of ocean water to cut both the monster’s heads and destroy it. The captain turned back to his mate with a smirk. He had eyes blue as the sea, pale blonde hair, and wore a brown jacket. “Spend less time counting and more time smashing, Maccus-ah! Hah ha ha ha!” He spoke with a Scottish accent.

Captain of the Flying Dutchman
“Heart of the Sea”
DAVY JONES

A crewman with bloated cheeks lashed twin spike whips to slash away skull-faced swordfish that leapt at the deck. “Captain, they’re beginning to swim away.”

Navigator of the Flying Dutchman
“Puffy Cheeks” KOLENIKO

“Do not be fooled, Mistah Koleniko.” Jones said. “Direct your eyes beyond the bow.”
The week of monstrous dark fish were molding into a dark glob. A single, gigantic skull mask faced the little ship with eerie blank eye sockets, and black tentacles emerged. “I’ll load the triple guns!” Ogilvey, a man with a grey beard and mustache, and red neckerchief, shouted.

“Not necessary, Mr. Ogilvey.” Jones replied. “They have fallen for my trap.”

The ship sailed a little closer as the captain jumped onto the keel. Waving his arms in circles, two columns of water began to rise under his bending. He directed the columns to tie around the dark octopus. His hands glowed, and the water turned gold. The octopus screeched as its body dispersed into particles of light. The particles floated to the sky and vanished in the sunlight.

Davy Jones jumped back on the deck as his crewmates approached him with praise and admiration. “Ay’ve never seen that before, Captain!” Clanker exclaimed. “Where would you learn a fancy lightshow like that?”

“The Fairy Princess taught it to me.” Jones replied, smiling nonchalantly.

“The blue lass? She’s the one who taught it?” Koleniko asked.

“Well, she gave it to me.” Jones stared at his right hand. “It’s called spiritbending. It’s an advanced form of the healing powers she grants to waterbenders. It scatters dark spirits into light so they may be reborn anew in the Spirit World-ah.”

“Sounds a right fair deal.” Morey the Eel said. He was a long-necked human, from the Bermuda Triangle’s Snakeneck Tribe. “With all the Hollows that’ve been appearing lately, we need a new way to trim them down.”

“’ey Captain, isn’t tomorrow the ten-year mark?” one of Two Head’s two heads asked. “Where we going to make land?”

“I am thankful you asked, Mistah Sack.” Jones said as he pulled out and opened a chart. “I remember seeing an uncharted island in this quadrant.” There was an “X” marked on a spot a little southeast from Iceland. “We will see what its land has to offer.”

“That little piece of land?” Maccus asked. “Wouldn’t you rather hit a town, Captain? Fetch a decent meal and drink with your mates in a pub? You’d get as much shrub from that jungle as seaweed on the seafloor!”

“In an eternity of sailing, there is only so much land you can see in all the worlds. Had we limited our choices, we would not have discovered Mr. Morey’s home now, would we?” He looked at the Snakeneck human. “We will mount an expedition over this island in search of what riches it may bare. Besides, Lord Kyogre is looking for good places to hide his Ocean Talismans, in case he would need to.”

At the designated island; the next morning

The Flying Dutchman docked at the cliff shore of what would one day become Bully Island. The plank was dropped to serve as a bridge. Davy Jones crossed the plank, and set foot on the island. The sailors ventured into the jungle, which seemed to grow darker the further they got. The ground and trees were almost covered with fungi that emitted a visible, bluish-pink gas. “What do you suppose that is, Cap’n?” Maccus asked.

“How not get too close to it, boys.” Jones threw water over one of the mushrooms and pulled it over while encasing it in ice. “Only one is needed for careful observation-ah. Spread out and search the rest of the island.”
Davy Jones trekked up a hill in his thick black boots. The frozen fungus was stashed in a pocket under his coat. The path was hard to see through all the flora and the dark shroud that seemed to be covering this land. Then, with a few more meters of hill in his sight, a faint red light touched him. He saw an odd shape in the center of the light. The jungle’s shroud made it indiscernible, but with a closer look, it appeared to be… a woman.

Davy Jones marched up and saw her up close. She was a woman with purple hair drooped over her eyes, a purple dress, and bare feet hanging over the edge of a murky pool. Davy Jones slowly reached his right hand over to move her hair aside. She had a smooth and flawless face, except for a black design around her left eye. Her eyes were sharp, green, and snakelike, and she had sensual purple lips. Davy Jones stared at her longingly… he saw himself reflected in those shiny dark pupils. He had never seen a human so… lovely.

“If you were looking for the perfect place to molest somebody, I’d say you’ve found it.” The woman told him softly.

“Oh!” Jones blushed and backed away. “I’m… sorry… My name is Davy Jones. Servant of Lord Kyogre and Ferrier of Souls. I chose to explore this island on my once-a-decade expedition. I did not expect to find anyone here, much less a…” He couldn’t decide between ‘woman,’ ‘angel,’ or ‘goddess.’ “Who are you?”

“Something… Nothing…” The woman looked away. “A being that was…”

That mysterious response was sexy, Jones thought. “Wh… Where are you from?”

“Somewhere… Nowhere… The darkest reaches of the cosmos…”

“. . .” Jones didn’t understand why he heated up at such a vague response. “Then can ya tell me why… you’re here?”

The woman remained silent and looked up at him. Jones felt himself lost in her gaze. “Have you ever looked in your own reflection,” the woman said, “…and saw something awful?”

When Jones blinked, the reflection in her pupils was all wiggly, slimy tentacles. He shook his head, and this reflection vanished. “I do not understand.” Jones said. “If you are referring to yourself, I do not see what you see. You are… a beautiful woman…”

“Are you certain?” she asked. “Come… let me show you something…”

The woman led him to a cliff that overlooked another region of jungle, and the sea beyond it. The sky and sea were purple, lit up only by the white sun. Davy Jones was drawn by this change in color, and the woman sensed this. “The mushrooms on this island emit a noxious gas that misleads the senses. Deep down… I have always pictured myself as beautiful… And this island, this… horrible rotting island… In its midst, I can see that beauty in me. It’s so… grotesque.” She turned to him. “Davy Jones… Have you come here because… you sought beauty?”

“N-No, I… I’ve already found beauty.” Jones smiled. “It is the sea. It is…” The captain reached an arm toward the purple horizon, “an absolute freedom. To sail the waters, over and under… for eternity. I collect souls who are lost and guide them to the next world. I meet a great many people in my adventures. All of them were troubled souls… up until the moment they drowned. No matter who they were or what they had done… it brings me joy… to offer them an escape… To offer them freedom…”
“Freedom?” the woman questioned. “Then let me ask you… what is freedom, in your eyes? Is it being untethered? Sailing a ship across worlds for all eternity? Is it… not being bound to anyone or anything? Do you… have that sort of freedom?”

Jones couldn’t think of a response. True, he was working under Kyogre, collecting souls that were lost at sea, cleansing them before they became Hollows. “Because I do.” The woman said. “I have nobody… I have nothing… Only myself in eternal solitude… And every day, I feel my soul greying… Freedom… is lonely…”

Jones gripped her arm in his left hand, as hard as a crab claw (obvious foreshadowing :P). He looked at her firmly in the eyes. “Freedom is more than that. It is not being unbound and untethered… it is the happiness I feel in sailing. All of the time in the world to do what I love, forever. If you came with me, I could show you.”

“…” The woman stared at him, as though touched by the passion in his words. There was an inviting aura about him… She wanted to take his offer… “No.” She turned away, tears streaming her face. “I…I mustn’t!” She jumped off the cliff.

“Wait-ah!” Davy Jones jumped after, grabbing a jagged rock with water tentacles to slow his fall. The sailor chased the woman through the thick shrubs, able to see only part of her in this darkness. He heard a splash up ahead, and when Davy Jones arrived at a coast, his instinct was to jump into the sea. He swam like a merman, skimming the underwater for a trace of that maiden. There wasn’t a trail of bubbles or waves on the surface, so Jones swam aimlessly in his attempts to find her.

Davy Jones finally resurfaced. The ocean was very foggy, he had no idea how far he swam. He lost any hope of finding the maiden, began to think she was just an illusion.

Upon one summer’s morning, I carelessly did stray

Down by the Walls of Wapping, where I met a sailor gay

Then he heard her soft voice. He saw where it was coming from. A figure’s shadow, sitting on a lone rock.

Conversing with a bouncing lass, who seemed to be in pain,

Saying, William, when you go, I fear you will ne'er return again.

Davy Jones swam closer. It was the very same maiden, swaying her trim, flawless legs in the water. The captain could have assumed she was a siren… for he swam closer at the luring sound of her voice.

My heart is pierced by Cupid… I disdain all glittering gold…

The woman stared down at the man in the water.

There is nothing… can console me…

Jones gazed up at her lovely figure.

...but my jolly… sailor… bold.

Jones lightly clasped her legs… He pulled himself up… clasped her arms… put his foot on the side of the rock-“AAAAAUUUUHHH!” Searing pain coursed through him as he fell in the sea. He shook to recompose himself and resurface. The woman bore slight shock on her features. “My… is that the limit of your freedom?” she whispered.

“Please!” Jones propped his feet on the ground under the water, so his upper half was visible. “Tell me… what are you…”

The woman fell in the sea and floated away on her back, her arms outstretched. “Like I said… I’m something… I’m nothing… I can’t define what I am…”

“You are a lingering soul!” Jones trudged across the water and stood over her. “I can feel it… the energy in your body… but you are… different… There is a different presence about you…”

The woman stood and moved her face close to his. “Tell me… what that presence is…”

“I…I do not know…”

The woman became sad. She hugged her chest and turned away. “Oh… forgive me… I just thought… someone would actually know the answer…”

“I… I want to know the answer!” Jones reached his left arm to her. “It’s there… on the palm of my hand… but I cannot…”

She turned to him with a smile. “I believe you… And if you’re able to come up with the answer… I want to meet you again…” Then she drifted away beyond the mist.

Davy Jones stared at the blank gray where she had gone. The mist started to clear, and the captain felt something make waves behind him. “OIII! CAPTAIN!” Jones turned around and looked up at his Flying Dutchman. “What in blazes got into you?! Jumping off the island, whaddid you trip or something? You know you only get ONE shot at land every 10 years! What sort of spirit possessed you to waste it like that?”

My heart is pierced by Cupid… I disdain all glittering gold…

Jones looked at the horizon.

There is nothing… can console me…

…but my jolly… sailor… bold.

“Captain?” Maccus noticed his blank expression. What in the world was wrong with him…

Although the crewmen couldn’t hear it, Davy Jones sailed the ship in the direction of the voice. They came upon the shore of a dark, dead swamp, where the woman’s notes echoed from beyond the mist. “Captain…” Maccus spoke once more.

Jones reached his left hand and clutched the air. “Wait for me…”

9 years and 360 days later…

Cindy Cortix and Ydnic Xitroc finally materialized from the time warp. “Cindy?” Ydnic looked down.

“Yeah?” The Positive cocked a brow.

“Do time machines give us the ability to float?”
“That’s the most ridiculous idea ever.”

“I was afraid of that.”

“AAAAHHH!” The standing-in-midair girls took the fall into the sea. After resurfacing, they felt a shadow fall over them, cast by a great ship with a mouth of sharp teeth on the keel.

“’ey, there’s some wee lasses over the starboard!” Morey yelled.

“Pull them up!” Clanker ordered.

A rope was thrown down for the girls to grab onto, and the sailors hoisted them onto the deck. “What’s all this?” the captain’s sturdy black boots clanked the wood as he stomped past his crewmen to view the salvaged girls. Still lying down, Cindy and Ydnic gazed up at the captain’s imposing, authoritative figure. The sun hung directly above and highlighted the Scottish man.

Cindy jumped to her feet and drew her sword. “Don’t try anything! I’ll cut every one of you up, I swear!”

The sailors exchanged laughter. “Oi, wee lass thinks she’s a pirate!” Koleniko exclaimed.

“Maybe she’s one of those Linlin blokes!” Jimmy Legs cackled.

“I MEAN IT!” Cindy shouted. “Just who the heck are you drunken idiots?!”

“I should be asking you that, children adrift in the middle of the sea.” The captain smirked. “You stand before the crew of the Flying Dutchman-ah. I am Captain Davy Jones, the Ferrier of Souls.”

“Davy… Davy Jones?” Cindy wouldn’t have recognized the sailor’s human appearance.

“Are you guys pirates, too?” Ydnic questioned. Her cheeks puffed as she said, “I HATE pirates. They’re always being so mean, attacking villages just to steal beer or money or… vegetables.”

“Then why are you still hanging around me?”

“Because you’re my Positive, silly!” Ydnic pinched Cindy’s cheek. “Even though you act more negative.”

“We are not pirates-ah.” Jones answered. “Under orders of Ocean King Kyogre, we sail the waters and ferry lost souls to the Underworld.”

“Otherwise, we’re just your typical guys who like sailing.” Jimmy shrugged.

“So who are you two kids?” Maccus asked. “You look a little too lively to be lost souls.”

“I am Cindy Cortix, a feared member of the world-infamous Boogey Pirates!” the girl announced. “This is some girl who thinks she’s my twin.”

“Boogey Pirates? Well, I’ve never heard of them.” Jones shrugged. “And I’d certainly never expect a couple of children to pose as pirates.”

“Well, I AM a pirate! And I’ll make you fear me! LIKE THIS!” Cindy unleashed a deafening Fear Scream, the sailors stumbling back and clamping their ears shut.

Once she stopped, Jones looked at her with interest. “You’re a fearbender?”
“Oh, NOW ya’ve gone and done it.” Koleniko remarked.

“This is perfect!” Jones said excitedly. “The universe really is seeing in my favor-ah!”

“What do you mean?” asked Ydnic.

“Well, ten years ago, the captain thinks he saw this fair wench.” Maccus explained. “’e said ’e heard her singing from the Haunted Marshes. He’s been waiting ten years to be able to scour that land.”

“It’s said that swamp is flowing with Fear Chi.” Koleniko said. “More than a man can handle. You would need to have a fearbender with you to cross it.”

“We ain’t gonna bring you kids on such a silly expedition. You probably wanna get back home to your mommy.” Morey followed.

“HEY!” Cindy yelled. “‘Mommies’! Plural!”

“Hold on, why does he need to cross the marshes again?” Ydnic asked.

The crewmen looked at Davy Jones, expecting to once-again hear his crazy story. The captain approached the starboard railing and stared out at the horizon. “In my whole life, I have never imagined anything more beautiful than the sea. I loved the sea…and I thought, if I were one with the sea, if the sea was all I had, then I would be free and happy forever. And yet…” Jones put a hand to his heart, “ever since I met that woman… I cannot stop yearning for her. Never had I encountered a soul so… clouded inside. Our meeting… my thoughts… I feel as though we are bound by fate. …I want to meet her again…”

“That’s sooooooo romanticiiiiic!” Ydnic sang. “A lonely sailor goes to meet his beloved after teeeeen loooong yeeeaaars of seasickness! Cindy, we HAVE to help him!”

“Hmph…” Cindy could care less, but this was probably part of the experiment Medusa had in mind. “All right. I’ll use my fearbending to help you.”

“I’ll get you ALL spick and span for your big date!” Ydnic said cheerily. “Just pick up that toothbrush, hop in that bathtub, get a good night’s rest on your bed, and your lady won’t WAIT to kiss you!”

“What’s a toothbrush?” Maccus asked.

“What’s a bathtub?” Clanker asked.

“What’s a bed?” Two Head asked.

“Captain, are you sure you want to try to find this woman?” Koleniko asked. “Even if she’s real, why would she still be hanging around that filthy swamp?”

“There must be a reason we were fortunate enough to sail upon these children.” Jones replied. “It was fated that I should meet her again. Mastah Legs, chart a course for the Haunted Marshes. I expect to be there within five days. Young ladies, do make yourselves comfortable.”

Two nights later…

The twin girls were treated friendly by the would-be Dutchman Pirates, and their bright spirits greatly contrasted with the tales Cindy has heard. The girls were told a first-hand iteration of how their captain came to have his position: when sailing in a region they had dubbed the “Haunted Cove,” his ship was wrecked and destroyed, and Jones became a spirit. His soul was rescued by Ocean King Kyogre, who took pity and gave the sailor a chance to sail forever:

Jones was given a Gigai, an artificial human body that had the same attributes as a normal body, but it wouldn’t age. Complete with the Water Chi he had once possessed, Jones was free to sail the seas, and in return would ferry other fallen souls to the Underworld. The crewmen on his vessel were other souls who had desired to sail forever, so they were given their own Gigai. The only limits placed on Davy Jones’ eternity were that he couldn’t step on dry land but once every 10 years. Otherwise, a searing but non-fatal pain would course through him.

“If ya ask me, I always thought Lord Kyogre was jealous of the Light Goddess, Palutena.” Maccus remarked to Ydnic, who sat at a cabin table with some crewmen. “She has her own Nimbi servant, so he wanted one. And rumor has it mermen are real sour with Nimbi!” The mates cackled.

“It’s not just a rumor, it’s real!” Ydnic spoke up. “They’re always so mean to each other! All the Nimbis’ waste falls in the ocean, then the merpeople fly up in their ships and start bombing the Nimbi, it’s so awful!”

“What kind of twisted tales does your mommy read to you??” Koleniko questioned.

“Social studies textbooks!” Ydnic replied more perkily.

“In my opinion, Kyogre’s got loneliness issues.” Morey said. “He’s got, like, no friends besides the captain and that Ocean Fairy. I walked in on ’em when we visited the palace once, and he was practically begging her to dance for the guards’ kids. Hah, it was silly.”

“He’s so desperate for friends, he’ll trust anyone!” Two Head’s heads said at once.

“That’s not really a bad thing.” Ydnic replied. “It’s important to be able to trust people. When you’re trusting, you’re more open, and you can make more friends that’ll help you when you need them. Even if I was a king like Kyogre, I wouldn’t wanna lose any of my friends. Because sooner or later, I would want someone to hold my hand and say, ‘I’m here for you.’” She cupped both hands over her heart.

“That was…” Two Head’s right head, Sack asked.

“-beautiful…” The left head, Flour was tearing.

“Mates, this girl is delightful!” Clanker plopped a hand on Ydnic’s hair. “I say we keep her in our crew!”

“Don’t be silly, we’re only takin’ ’em with us so the captain can find that girl.” Maccus replied. “Where is the captain, anyway?”

“Last I saw, he’s takin’ a smoke on the deck.” Clanker said.

The sky had a few clouds, which were highlighted by the stars and crescent moon. Davy Jones stood on the bow of the ship, holding the Grand Compass that pointed directly ahead. The magic compass that would lead him to what he most desired. He put the compass in his pocket and took out a pipe, which he lit up before smoking. The breeze blew the smoke behind his left. He turned in its direction and saw Cindy sitting at the railing, her legs hanging over the side.

Davy Jones approached the frizzy-haired child, who was a little green in the face. “You look seasick for a self-proclaimed pirate-ah.”
“I can feel my ‘twin’s’ happy radiance.” Cindy said. “It’s sickening.”

“You share your own spiritual bond with someone.”

“Yeah, right…” Cindy looked up to face him. “So, Captain Jones… have you really only been thinking about one person for 10 years? A random woman you met only once?”

“She was not just some ‘woman.’ And, for a long time, I was not sure what to call her. I did not know the answer. But now… I am ready to tell her.”

“Hmph… And you think she would wait for you to tell her some ‘answer’ after 10 years, in which time she could’ve easily found out herself? My mom only knew about her fearbending for three years before she made Logia.”

“I would love to meet your mother in the future.” Jones said. (A hunchbacked crewmate made a drumroll.) “And part of me feels… she does already know. …But I want her to hear it from me.”

“Yeah, well… Be prepared for disappointment.”

“Oh, don’t listen to her!” Ydnic stated, having come out of the cabin. She clutched Jones’ hand and looked up at the captain. “You should follow your heart, Captain Jones! I may be a Negative, but I’m positive this woman will be glad to see you again! Whether or not you have the right answer!”

“BLUUUEEEEH!” Cindy threw up over hearing that pun.

“Yes… you are right.” Jones said, feeling his spirit lift. He touched his heart. “I know she is waiting for me… and I will tell her my answer…”

The captain returned to his cabin to rest. Ydnic came to sit by Cindy, grabbing the rail while her feet hung over the side. “See, Cindy, positive words lead to positive feelings, and positive feelings lead to brighter and stronger spirits!”

“I don’t even care, Ydnic. I already know how this story’s going to end. Every pirate in my universe knows. You can’t change the past, even if you go back in time. If it’s already happened in the future, all we’re doing is helping instigate it.”

“But maybe those time-travelers just haven’t tried hard enough to make a difference. If a person is strong enough, they can beat fate, and make the future brighter.”

“Even if you could change Jones’ fate, it would hurt the future for other people. Like that Ocean Princess would never marry that human boy. Not that I would care. Either way, Jones’ fate will be the same, and I won’t have to do a thing.”

Ydnic stood up and told her firmly, “We’ll see about that!” She marched back into the cabin.

That night, Davy Jones slept while holding the Grand Compass to his chest. The needle was spiraling rampantly.

A misty coast, three days later

The day of Davy Jones’ ten-year mark had come. The Grand Compass led him to this dark and eerie shore. He jumped down and marched up onto the shore. Cindy and Ydnic joined after him. The purple mist made the sky appear dark. They stood before a graveyard with dead trees. “So how long are you allowed to stand on land, exactly?” Cindy asked.
“Twenty-four hours. But if I step in any water, I cannot climb back on.”

“Wow…” Ydnic spoke sadly. “That-”

“Sucks, I know.”

“Can you at least jump?” Cindy asked.

“Yes, because technically, I’m still bound to the land’s gravity.”

“That’s good!” Ydnic beamed.

“The compass will lead us to her.” Jones said, holding the item up. “I trust you ladies to do your duties.”

“Just don’t leave us to do all the fighting.” Cindy said. (Play “The Swamp” from Zelda: Four Swords Adventures.)

Stage B-11: Haunted Marshes

Mission: Find the woman Davy Jones longs for.

There were lanterns floating midair around the graveyard, and they seemed to throw their selves at the girls when they approached. Cindy furiously slashed her sword at one of the lanterns, but it easily dodged and punched her in the face. “You silly, violence doesn’t always win battles.” Ydnic said. “Sometimes, you have to have fun!” She threw powder puffs over the lanterns, exposing the Poes that were holding them. Cindy and Davy Jones used their blades to slice the ghosts’ bodies, so their lanterns fell, broke, and exposed the purple flames which were their souls. Davy Jones decided to catch the souls in some bottles. “Poe Souls are excellent beverages to spirits.” he said.

A small moat divided the graveyard into two halves, so Jones jumped over it. A deeper moat separated them from a forest path, and was too wide to jump. Thankfully, a tall stone slab was propped up on their end, so Cindy rolled against it to knock it down and create a bridge across. On this forest path, there were giant pine cones, and when the trio approached, Morphs jumped out (one-eyed black balls with spikes) and latched onto them. The explorers were weighed down, so Keese seized the chance to flap down and attack them. Cindy shot a Fear Scream to scare the bats away and make the Morphs scatter, then she proceeded to slice the Morphs in half.

The path led them above a short cliff overlooking a purple gooey river, which stretched down several meters to their left. “You know, can’t you just bend that water away?” Cindy asked.

“The water is poisonous.” Jones said. “It conflicts with my waterbending-ah.”

“Terror of the seas, my ass. Well, how do you plan to get across?”

“The wall looks rugged enough for me to climb across.”

“And me and Cindy will float down the river with my Plainford the Small Blue Cat inflatable!” Ydnic pulled out a blue deflated balloon. “Which is ironically bigger than his name would imply.”

Ydnic puffed the floatie to a large size, and it withstood the poisonous water as it floated the girls across. Davy Jones (who would’ve been too heavy to ride it) climbed across the cliff on their left. An eyeball connected to a purple oozing stem came out of the swamp, staring at the girls, but one look with Cindy’s Scare Stare forced it to retreat. Keese flapped in Jones’ direction overhead, so Cindy coughed up Fear Spheres to take them down. Ydnic warned her of anymore Swamp Lurkers coming up, so Cindy could scare them before focusing back on Jones. Two Poes appeared in the girls’ path, so Ydnic threw powder to expose the ghosts, Cindy cut them, then she shot down more bats coming for Jones.

At the end of the river, Jones could step onto safe ground, and the twins could disembark, with Ydnic deflating her giant floatie, cleaning the swamp water off (“Hurry up, already.” Cindy told her), then stuffing it away. They accompanied Davy Jones down a new path, where a Pols Voice ambushed them. It was a large, yellow, blob-like thing with rabbit ears. Cindy’s Fear Scream was enough to stun it senseless, then she cut it up.

They came to a field where pairs of two logs were lain around to create a maze. They questioned if it was safe for Jones to touch them since ships were made of wood… he figured if this wood had soil on it, it wouldn’t be leaving land. There were Dark Chuchu around the maze, and since they couldn’t be cut and Cindy’s screaming jiggled them, Davy Jones splashed water over the blobs and froze them. At the end of this maze was a pool of poison water. To cross it, they had to throw the frozen Dark Chus inside and make ice platforms. Since they couldn’t throw the frozen Chus on the ground without them shattering, they were forced to maneuver around the maze to get to the pool before the blobs unfroze.

With enough platforms, the girls crossed the ice—Davy Jones couldn’t, since ice is water. (Sigh, this curse was nothing but inconvenient.) There was a stone ring with teeth inside it, and when Cindy screamed, it reacted to her bending and spun around, making a narrow stone bridge rise up for Jones to cross the pool. In the graveyard that followed, Stalfos wielding spiked clubs rose from the soil. Jones used his waterbending to slice their bones, but through a supernatural force, the Stalfos’ bones floated up and reformed their body.

“AAAAAAAAAAAAAAHHHH!” Cindy blasted a stronger Fear Scream in the hopes of weakening the skeletons, but the bones had no nerves to tingle, and Jones took the blast. “Stop it!” Ydnic clamped Cindy’s mouth shut. “The real way to beat sleep-depraved skeletons is with warm milk.” Ydnic pulled out a glass of milk and poured it on the soil where the Stalfos came from. The skeletons seemed to calm, for they returned to their graves and sunk beneath the soil.

Ydnic approached Davy Jones, who was holding his aching head as he stood back up. “Are you okay, Captain?”

“I am… fine…” Jones panted.

The crew went up a flight of stairs to a new forest path above a cliff. Mothulas floated down from the trees – giant black moths with green-and-yellow wings, one eye, and pinchers. When Cindy used Scare Stare on them, the Mothulas retaliated by shooting Morphs from their tails. When the spikeballs latched onto them, the Mothulas swooped down to attack the humans. Cindy scared the Morphs off with Fear Scream, cut them up, then angrily sliced the wings off the Mothulas. She panted heavily after the creatures were dealt with. “Oops, did I hit you?” she asked when she saw Jones and Ydnic holding their ears shut.

The path turned left and brought them above a pool down in a rectangular pit. Cindy used a Licorope on a branch hanging over the pit to swing herself and Ydnic across. There was a stone block on the other side, which Cindy pushed into the pool. Davy Jones made a leap down onto the block, then leapt up to grab the ledge, with the girls pulling him up by the arms. They came to a field with several patches of swamp water. Hardhat Beetles (blue beetles with bulbous tops) wandered around the patches, and would use their bouncy bodies to push them into the water.
Cindy coughed Fear Spheres while Jones threw Water Slices before the creatures got too close. However, more beetles were coming out of small caves. There was a stone door sealed on the other side, and a slot where something would go beside it. On the right of the swamp, there was a small gargoyle statue. It was too heavy to lift, but Cindy could make it move by screaming. Jones and Ydnic distracted the beetles so Cindy could maneuver it around the swamp patches, finally directing it into the slot as it settled in place.

The entrance to what seemed like a ruined church opened. Vines were growing through the walls and floor panels, and the building was long since abandoned. They arrived at a round chasm, looking down to find a fallen statue of Darkrai the First partway in swamp ooze. “Weren’t the Nightmare Wars ending around this time?” Cindy asked.

“Lord Kyogre mentioned the Galaxians having progress against the Nightmares.” Jones replied. “What do you mean by ‘this time’?”

“Don’t worry about it.” Cindy screamed into a Scream Ring, causing stone platforms to emerge from the left wall. They were unstable, so Davy Jones carried Ydnic and jumped across them quickly to make it across. As for Cindy, she grabbed a thin ledge along the right to climb across. Naturally, there were Snapdragons waiting in holes above the ledge. When Cindy got close, they popped out—they caused the unstable wall to crumble as they fell into the ooze below, creating a gap in the ledge. Cindy had to make a tricky swing-jump to grab the next ledge part.

She made it to her group as they followed the passage and exited the church. They faced a lake of swamp ooze, and the only way across was with a stone platform that moved using a Scream Ring. The other two had to endure Cindy’s screaming while she used her power to move it. Mines emerged from the swamp, so Cindy had to constantly maneuver around. She used Scare Stare on Swamp Lurkers, and Ydnic threw powder puffs over Poes. Eventually, they made it to the other side of the lake. From this shore, they viewed a wide stone stairway across another swamp pool.

A giant three-headed Piranha Plant emerged from the pool, a hideous Diababa with teeth oozing with poison. The two side heads tried to gnash down at them, but Jones froze their mouths with waterbending. The center head, whose mouth had four sides, unleashed a deafening roar as its single eye wiggled on the stem. Cindy withstood the scream and glared at the eye, scaring the piranha as its eye stem dangled over the ground. Cindy leapt and chopped the eye clean off. The Diababa fell dead against their foothold.

The girls crossed the dead plant monster like a bridge while Jones climbed the wall along the left. Jones’ Grand Compass pointed up the stairs, so he followed the girls up. Suddenly, the right head of Diababa recovered, smashing the ice on its mouth as it whipped around and grabbed Jones’ right leg. “AHH!” The captain stuck his sword in the stairs to keep himself from being dragged down. The girls turned around and gasped—Ydnic ran down and began trying to pull him free. “Cindy, do something!”

Cindy tried to cut the Diababa’s stem, but it was too sturdy, and it had no eyes or ears for her bending to work. The monster’s teeth sunk further into Jones’ leg, so with no other option, Cindy chopped the leg clean off. “AAAAAHH!” The plant’s head flew back into the swamp with the leg to dine on.

“CINDY!” Ydnic screamed. “Why did you DO that?!”

“If we dragged that out, the poison would’ve seeped into the rest of his body!”

“It is no loss… augh!…” Jones used the sword as a prop to push himself onto his left foot. “We are almost there… just a little farther… huff…”
Cindy and Ydnic helped him up the stairs, and once at the top, they viewed the ground of some ruins, with vine-covered pillars. Jones followed the compass forward, until it led him to a stone pyramid. (End song.)

The pyramid had foreign writing inscribed on it, and an eye on its top. Jones limped around the pyramid… but the compass remain fixed on it. “I do not understand-ah.” The captain panted, continuing to limp around the structure. “Why did the compass bring me here? Where…Where is she?!”

“Maybe she’s hiding inside it!” Ydnic said hopefully, knocking on the rock. “Helloooo? Anyone in there?”

“Don’t you get it?” Cindy spoke logically. “She was never here. She was probably never real. All you saw and heard was a hallucination, and your compass was probably attracted by a magnetic field generated by this pyramid.”

“Nooo!” Ydnic yelled in denial. “She has to be here! She…She’s waiting for him!”

“And what evidence do you have to support that?” Cindy asked.

“Because…Because Davy Jones waited 10 years to come here and find her! He crossed a dangerous swamp, lost a leg, so he has to meet his true love! A romantic story can’t end without—”

“This isn’t some fairytale! In your Negaverse, you might be able to live under the delusion that life has happy endings, but it doesn’t. Jones was fooling himself into believing some woman was waiting for him. He wasted his time—”

The captain lost balance on his sword and fell on his front. “No…” Jones pushed up. His face had become filthy after this journey. “If she is not real… then why…why do I feel so…” He looked up at the pyramid’s writing. For some reason… the words were so clear.

Your life has been but a lie. Your free will is an illusion. Your choices are not your own. Everything is decided.

Seeing those words made him furious. Out of nowhere… immeasurable anger overcame him. “I…had… the answer…ah…” He pushed himself to his foot and sword. “I was going… to tell you… tell you… what you really are…ah…” He fell to his knees. “You were… MY SOOOOOOUUUUUUL!”

His voice was louder than any of Cindy’s screams. Cindy refrained from saying how dumb and cliché that line sounded. (Of course, this was the past, so a line like that is still original.) Davy Jones gasped for breath. “And YOU…” He glared at the girls. “You children… are DEMONS… taunting me! Leave… go away… GET OUT OF MY SIGHT, NOW!” With unmatched fury, Jones slashed wave after wave of water at the kids. Cindy grabbed Ydnic and ran away, but Jones’ water continued to fly at them.

“This trip is over!” Cindy activated the Return Pad and warped the two back to the present.

Davy Jones stopped himself once the “demons” were gone. He gasped, despair overcoming him. Why did his heart ache so much? Why did he feel so much pain? …The pyramid lit with a dark flame. He heard the flame brimming and looked at it. The flames flew into his body completely. He felt them lodge into his heart.

Davy Jones awakened as a DARKNESS. Only 11 more to go. (Wait, who was the first one?)
Davy Jones’s tears could have flooded the sea. The only solace he could find was from the ocean. As he served Kyogre for 10 more years, ferrying souls to the next life, freeing them of their despair… he saw no point in it. His soul, even if he were to die, would drown in despair deeper than the ocean. The only way to conquer it… would be to conquer the ocean. Conquer all oceans if he had to. He had to rule it all… but to keep the pain in his heart from slowing him, Jones had to be rid of it. Lock it away where no one could find it and remind him of his despair.

Present; time machine cave

“And that was how it was done back then.” Medusa said to her cohorts after watching the show on the time machine’s screen.

“Boy, Medusa, you really knew how to flirt with men.” Pandora smiled admirably. “All that ‘Can you tell me what I am’ crap was an excellent touch.”

“Yes, but a hint of Dark Chi never fails to attract.” As she said this, Cindy and Ydnic came out of the machine. “Girls, you’re back! That was an excellent performance in there!”

“Why did you make us do that?” Cindy asked. “Ydnic sure didn’t influence him. All we did was lead him far enough into the swamp until he realized it was hopeless.”

“Actually, you did play a part, Cindy. Your fearbending was enhanced in that swamp, and it spread to Jones considerably. He developed a fear that he would be wrong and I wouldn’t be there. He will continue to remember that fear and shower it upon his future victims. Thanks to you, the terror that was the Dutchman Pirates has made history. A fun fact, that spiritbending of his was used to turn fish into monsters and his crew into those zombie fish forms.”

“But what did I have to do with it?” Ydnic asked.

“You’re too bright for my tastes, Ydnic. I wanted you to witness firsthand as Darkness triumphs Light. I hope the other Negatives learn that, too.”

“…Well, I don’t buy it.” Ydnic said firmly. “I believe Light can and will triumph in the end. I think Jones’s soul could be saved. I think… even you could learn that.”

Medusa frowned and stared at her. Ydnic turned and marched out of the cave. “I’m going home. It was nice to meet you, Cindy.”

“…Hmph.” Cindy sheathed her blade. “All love does is destroy people. I don’t see why my mom could like it.” She began to leave the cave. “…Even if it did make me.”

The three gods waited until she was gone. “So, this is how you plan to find the Darknesses, is it?” Pandora asked. “Did you make your picks for the other ones?”

“They were already decided, Dora.” Medusa smirked. “Because the Darknesses already met them.”

About time, right? So yeah, the classic Dutchman Pirates from Pirates of the Caribbean. I gave them funny human designs that would eventually match their Fishman designs, and even their epithets. And we finally got to see how Jones fell into depravity! Next time, we’ll have Wendy do a stage. Kids, don’t do mushrooms.
Chapter Summary

Arianna heads into the Bramble Forest to train. Meanwhile, Fybi Fulbright has an unexpected meeting.

Okay, time to get back in the fray. By which I mean doing several stages in one chapter. Let’s make that our goal, people.

Chapter 21: Flowers and Brambles

Mom’s Hideout

Mom sat alone in her dark office. Calming herself after last night’s party—her anger for the Head President. It was only hours ago did she remember, her plan that failed humiliatingly. Cheren didn’t last a chance against her. Now what was she to do. “President Carol.” Her TV flashed on, startling Mom out of her thoughts. “Am I interrupting?”

“More than usual?”

“I’m calling because I was wondering if you had any information regarding Cheren.”

“Why would I care about your crap-ass nephew and what he did to crap-ass Doflamingo?”

“I was wondering if you had any idea how he infiltrated my party in the first place?”

“What are you implying?”

“I am inferring that he only could have gotten to Mariejoa through the party attendants, otherwise how would he have known.”

“And you think I snuck him in? In case you hadn’t noticed, there were plenty of snot-nosed twerps there (and a thousand ways of shrinking), so how d’you know one of his operatives didn’t sneak him in? How do you know Doflamingo himself didn’t do it just so his daughter could wipe Cheren from existence and claim the credit?”

“I wasn’t suggesting it was you, but I’m taking extra precautions. With Doflamingo’s death, the Corporate Presidents have shown weakness. Further weakness.”

“Fuh. Why are you so afraid of them, you know they can’t beat the Leaders.”

“Our orders are to prevent the 20 Keys from coming together. The Leaders gave us a list.”

“Yes, and we aren’t even allowed to talk about or show ourselves to them, just keep a damn eye!”

“Unless, of course, they find out, and they may. For the time being, most of them are unaware. Just stay focused, and if you learn anything on the Cheren dilemma, report it.” Transmission ended.

“You must excuse her.” A voice said from the doorway. “She interrogated me, earlier.”
“Whaddyou want, Ted?”

Ted Wassanasong, the baldheaded Laotian-American president, entered the room. “I would like to request something of you, Mom, and I believe only someone with your political power can help me do it.”

“Spit it out.”

“I would like you to take me to the Florae Galaxy, and help me create the greatest golf course in the cosmos.”

Harnita; Dunfree Household

Nova shut her eyes and relished in the scent of her garden. For so many years, she populated it with as many alien plants she could collect; their house was practically a jungle. Flowers that looked like the caps of jellyfish, rows of pots with flowers of polygon shapes, some plants were in multiple dimensions. Whichever plant grew under her care, they all danced under the swaying of her arms. “Mother?” Arianna, who knew every passage of this garden and could find her way effortlessly, approached the sakura-colored woman.

“Hello, dear.” Nova’s mind was lost in daydreams.

“Um… if you’re busy, I can come back later.” Arianna said softly.

“No, dear, I’m never too busy for you.”

“Um…” Arianna shifted her foot on the grass. “I was wondering if… I could learn more about my heritage.”

The plants stopped swaying when Nova did, turning to her daughter. “How come?”

“Just so I can learn more about myself. If I can become strong like…like..”

Nova smiled, not needing to know the end of that sentence, and kneeled to her daughter’s level. “There isn’t much you need to know. Harnita is a planet of pacifists like us who believe in tranquility and try not to dirty their soul with conflict. Pumparia is close by, they believe in taking action rather than bliss. In truth, their philosophy is probably better. Though depending on the conflict, I guess both of us have pros and cons.”

“Was our species not meant to fight?”

“The choice to fight and learn how to fight is up to the person. If you want to become stronger, there’s nothing holding you back. Most adults on our planet raise kids to be pacifists, then we do a lot of things we don’t want to without question. That’s sort of how the Harnitan Kids Next Door was founded. Our planet has conflict after all.”

“And you were the best of the planet.”

“By Old GKND standards, yes. I was still soft, in reality, and I passed that on to you. Even though I didn’t want to.”

“I’m sorry, Mother.”

“Don’t be. I’ll be happy to teach you plantbending, either way.”

“I’m a plantbender?”
“Hm-hm, how do you think my garden’s so lovely? Why we can talk to animals? It’s actually a simple skill. Hm hm, I actually thought you knew by now.”

“Heheh.” She flushed.

“Arianna, you know the Bramble Forest that’s outside of town, right?”

“Of course.”

“If you want to get stronger, you can go there and try controlling them. They’re harder for most plantbenders because they require strong willpower. Unless you would like to do garden exercises with me.”

“No… I’ll try the brambles. Vweeb won’t respect me unless I try hard. I’ll see you later, Mother.”

“Good luck, Arianna.” Nova returned to her swaying.

A few miles outside of town was a forest of giant brambles, more like a giant bush that stretched miles to the sky. When only yards away from it, a mystical fluttering of wings hit her antennae, and a familiar celery-colored fairy soared down. “Celebi!”

“Rebi-rebiii!” The Forest Spirit faced Arianna with a wondrous smile.

“Ha ha ha ha! It’s great to see you, too! Will you help me with plantbending?”

“Rebiiii?” She flew into the brambles. “Biitii!”

“Oh kay. W-Wait for me!” (Play “Bramble Blast” from Donkey Kong Country 2.)

Stage 29: Bramble Perplexion

Mission: Follow Celebi.

Arianna was amazed how much sunlight entered the brambles. The prickly thorns grew on stems of an elegant green tone that, along with the sun, complimented their sharpness. Arianna reached and tried to bend a few, but none budged under her psychic grab. She saw Celebi quite a ways ahead and ran forward, jumping up wooden planks that served a stairway up some thorns. At the top, she overlooked a vast chasm of thorns, looking around for where to go. A very thin vine dangled a few meters away, so Arianna took a breath and lightly gestured it over. Her plantbending was proven true, for it lightly swayed to her call, coming a little closer each time until she could jump and grab it. She gripped tight, almost expecting it to snap and give her a spiky death, but it stayed strong. She saw a foothold within close range to her right and shifted momentum until the vine was close enough.

She jumped off and walked up a stairway of planks sticking out of the brambles. They led to a small foothold with a tunnel cluttered with brambles. She couldn’t even crawl under them, so she focused every ounce of plantbending to move them aside. They were as heavy as Mom gave credit, but just when Arianna thought she might sprain herself, they shifted slightly. She had enough space to crawl, keeping extremely low to avoid getting pricked. “Ah!” A thorn scratched her right arm, she kept crawling and withstood the pain. Just as she made it out, her grass-green hair got stuck in some thorns, requiring forceful tugging until she pulled it out. In this new, open room, Beedrill fluttered from the ceiling and readied to stab their intruder. Arianna tried to communicate, but her thoughts didn’t reach, she ran around and hastily avoided their drills.
She ended up cornered against a bramble wall, and when a Beedrill came stinger-first, she dodged and got it stuck. She nimbly dodged when more stabbed at her, then when she tripped, on impulse, she swung her hand up and yanked down, pulling a thornless vine to whip the bees away. They recovered, but she controlled the vine and tied them, throwing against the brambles where their stingers got stuck. She looked at one of the corners to see a cluttering of Buttercoons, large butterflies where only the wings shed from their cocoons. She saw a nearby brambly tunnel sloping upward, but with no footholds, she summoned the winged beauties to land on different points of the tunnel and make a staircase. Their hard shells protected them as she stepped up, she apologized after she made it to the top.

Two handheld flower propellers were lodged in the brambles, and Arianna knew she’d need them to cross this narrow chasm of close brambles. She plucked them out, jumped, and let the flowers glide her. She moved and shifted momentum softly, trying to keep in the exact center to avoid being pricked. She flitted her way back to the vast area, where she could now float into a narrow tunnel, bending her legs up to be able to fit. She carefully landed on a safe plank below and followed the path to a smaller chasm area, where Vine Slimes, blue gooey slugs, slithered on vines, multiple ones on each vine. Arianna jumped to grab the nearest vine, keeping between the slugs. She swung to the next vine, and could climb to a higher level of it before a slug blocked her. She swung to another vine whose lower part was blocked by a slug, swung to one that was slightly farther, but could safely grab the bottom.

She climbed up and swung to a level of another vine above its slug. She swung to a point of the next vine between two very-close slugs. The next and last vine had a green slug high above, and the moment she grabbed it, the slug slid down quickly, so she instantly had to release to swing onto the wood stairway. Small bramble balls rolled down on either the left or right sides, forcing Ari to dodge to the other, spiking her rear in the process. She made it up top and went around the Bramble Blaster, finding herself facing another prickly chasm. A grappable ledge stretched across the bramble wall on her left, so she clutched tight and climbed across. A Snapdragon startled and almost made her fingers lose grip, so she politely told it to go back in. It did so, but tried to snap her an inch away from fully getting past, Arianna taking land on a safe floor.

A pink flower whose petals balled into a sealed sphere dangled from a fishing rod-like vine in the brambles. When Arianna held it by the rod, she felt water contained inside the flower, seeing a small, squat flower on the bramble floor below. She hurled the water flower at the smaller and caused a great long vine to twirl up into a tunnel in the ceiling corner. She grinded up this vine, or rather used her plantbending to stretch it further and carry her. The tunnel led into a wide passage with brambles below, and as the longer vine began slumping under her weight, Arianna shifted it left and right or hauled it higher as she went.

She used this maneuvering to avoid Beedrills that innocently buzzed by, as well as big bramble vines that suddenly stretched down. She was unable to keep her vine going any longer, steadily slumping toward the floor, until she realized a Butterplane, a huge butterfly with violet wings with patterns that appeared like a mural, was resting on the wall. She told it to come down, so she could gently jump onto its back. It flapped its wings fast, soaring into a great wide tunnel. Giant spider webs, patrolled by Ariados, blocked their way, so on Arianna’s command, the Butterplane blasted bullet-like pinchers. When the large spiders were defeated, the webs crumbled so they could pass, but it became harder to aim when Ariados were on far corners of the webs, almost hidden.

The Butterplane ended up caught in a web, so when the Ariados came to snack, Arianna told it to whirl its wings and slice it up. This became more frequent on following webs with two spiders, and the final web with three, until the Butterplane could finally rest on a safe ledge. Arianna smiled and patted the creature on the head in thanks before continuing. She went down a wooden stairway where Whiplashes popped out of walls to get her, she hurriedly ran down before they appeared, but got scratched by a few. She was back in the first, vast area, overlooking the starting point from high above. A hanging bramble wall had wooden planks she could jump across and grab a hanging vine. This was the very same vine she grabbed at the beginning, but a Vine Slime blocked this higher route, and would’ve prevented her from climbing up at the beginning. But now she could climb up through the vertical tunnel, shifting position on the vine when Beedrill buzzed down. Before long, she could set foot on safe ground and enter the great, open room. (End song.)

Arianna caught her breath after the arduous journey and approached Celebi, who floated in the center. “Huff… I finally made it. And I got my share of cuts on the way.”

“Biii?” Celebi noticed the cuts of blue blood leaking from her purple skin. The spirit gently touched the cuts and they healed.

“Oh! Thank you, Celebi.”

“Bi, BIII!”

“So, um… will you teach me how to bend brambles?”

“Bi… biii.” Celebi focused her chi and had several brambles extend from the ceiling.

Arianna reached toward and tried to bend one. She squinted, clutched her fingers, felt it in her psychic grip, but the thorns wouldn’t budge. “Huff.” She slumped, feeling exhausted. “It’s no use… I’m just too soft, Celebi. I just now realized I have plantbending… but I really want to be stronger. How can I do that?”

“Biii…” Celebi thought to herself. “Bi?” She had an idea.

“…! AAAH!” Arianna hurriedly dodged when Celebi lashed a bramble, destroying that part of floor. Celebi had several under her control, sending them all to the alien, Arianna ran around the field and narrowly dodged them. She whipped around and clapped her hands, hoping to grab one, but they wouldn’t budge in her power. Celebi lashed another right in front and knocked Arianna to her rear, the girl backing away as a string of brambles stabbed through the floor. One of those popped out of the floor on her left, scratching her, she scrambled to her feet and tried running for the exit, but Celebi sealed it.

Arianna faced the spirit, whom showed no resent in her huge eyes. Arianna wiped some sweat off and stared firmly, ready to dodge another onslaught of brambles.

Philippines; Roxas Beach

Sunni stared at the horizon, small waves whooshing over the surface. The open sea made the world seem so empty. The sunny sky made it seem like there was nothing to worry about. But Sunni knew that better, if nothing else. Even the sad little display to her right. “Come on, Mister Fishyyy.” A little girl sat with a fishbowl between her legs. The little creature inside appeared very frail. “Eat iiiitt.” She dropped a single pellet in. It fell softly past the fish’s face, but in its attempt to show life-force and try to eat it, it missed. The fish was motionless again. “Come oooon.”

Sunni only stared with half-closed eyes. Half-conscious eyes. She stared at the motionless fish… the more she looked, her vision zoomed closer like binoculars. She saw its beady black eyes, lower-lip hanging open, the speck-size pellet among the pebbles. Every ounce of her sight, from her irises to the center of her pupils, narrowed on that pellet. Every ounce of sight shifted upward… and the pellet with it. It glowed with blue aura, floated softly. Just inches from the old fish’s mouth, it snapped, and ate. “Hahaha! Good, Mr. Fishy!”
Sunni smiled, happy to see her smile. She looked at the sea again. Its openness. If only her mind can be so open. If only she could be carefree. Just like her mom. …Just like her mom.

Sunni turned everything off in her mind. All her frustration, her anxiety. Let her mind wander. Light as air. Then… she was flying, flying miles away from Roxas’s shore, over the sea. Let herself be free, her imagination was in control now. She could do anything. “WHOA!” A sudden beam whooshed before her, and she fell into the sea. She resurfaced and angrily viewed her oppressors.

“This is her. The psychic woman’s daughter.” A squadron of agents in dark-gray suits with big red “R”s hovered with jetpacks. The beam came from one’s Gyarados. “The boss wanted her captured too, right? She shouldn’t be too hard.”

Sunni furrowed—but remembered herself. She must abandon her frustration and use imagination. So: she reached her right arm and pulled herself onto the faint blue step of psychic energy. The Team Rocket agents were baffled, Sunni smiled and waved her hands. She would keep her promise, treat her psychicbending with better respect, and it would give her its full power. “WHOOOOAA!” The agents and Gyarados were blown away—an entire harbor of psychic energy appeared in the middle of the sea. Buildings, platforms, barrels, cranes, her Psychic Chi took the shape of all of them. As she saw a fleet of Team Rocket helicopters coming her way, it was time to have fun. (Play Super Sonic’s theme from Sonic 3 & Knuckles.)

Stage 30: Makeshift Harbor

Mission: Just go crazy.

Sunni ran into an open wharf and Wall Jumped between two buildings, landing on the roof of the shorter one. Three agents flew down and tried to hit her with shock rods, so she blasted a Psycho Sphere and sent them flying, crossing the roof and swinging a dangling hook to another building. The parallel side had an opening above the wall, and to cross, Sunni raised some of the psychic-made drums below and formed a staircase, excitedly crossing. A swarm of Fearow swooped down to prey on Sunni’s face, but a simple psycho grasp could throw them away, then she glided over the sea between her and the next wharf. Rocket Agents tossed Pokéballs that released Blastoise and Golducks, the former of which curled in their shells and spun at Sunni, knocking her off her feet before they retreated. The Golducks hurried over and used Psyshock to stun her senseless, but when the Blastoise readied to blast her with Water Gun, Sunni, in her dizzied state, protected herself with a shield, warped behind the turtles, and slammed their heads against one-another with psychic.

Sunni whipped out her lightsaber, swiftly dodged the Golducks’ attacks, and sliced them before proceeding to the next wharf. No stairs led up to the opening, but a psychic rail and its wall went up and around. She found a psychic skateboard in one of the corners, skated about the wharf stylishly, jumped under the lowest rail point, and stylishly grinded up. She shifted direction on corners with no problem, and after leaping through the passage, she grinded and jumped a series of floating psychic rails, evading the Gyarados who blasted Hyper Beams. Sunni flipped off her skateboard and let it fall to the sea, resting on a small platform that overlooked a region of cranes.

Sunni used psychic to turn the closest crane towards her, and when she grabbed onto its hook, she made it whirl around and around, and it was up to her where she released and flew to. She flew to a platform that was farther from the others, drawing her lightsaber to defend from Skarmories’ Air Slashes. While blocking the other two, the third lunged at Sunni for a peck, but she bashed it against the head with her saber, leapt, and slammed it to the floor. The other two attacked her together, she flipped up and hit one with a vertical spin-attack, then forcefully slashed the other’s head. Even though her laser sword didn’t pierce their steel bodies, it still hurt. Nothing else really over there but to beat those guys and increase her score. With that, she grabbed onto a nearby crane and swung back to the first one, from there swinging to a larger platform that was the intended route.

A crane was raising a huge rectangular platform with stacks of psychic-crates up and down into the water. When it was at Sunni’s level, she ran on and quickly climbed a tall stack to be safe when the platform submerged. She repeated this routine until she made it to the next lifted platform, which twirled around and around in its place. Sunni waited until she saw a trio of psychic-made pillars rise out of the water, jumping to the center. A psychic wall rose up with a gap on the left side, her current platforms threatened to sink, so she flew through the gap onto the next one. Four spiked platforms came up, but the farthest right one was flat, so Sunni floated to it. A single, ordinary platform appeared, a line of Rocket Agents flew in her path, Sunni blasted them away with psychic before floating over. A parallel set of snaky walls with spikes on either end emerged, so Sunni had to glide between them, maintaining a steady balance and staying clear of the spikes before setting foot on the platform. She could easily fly to the next pathway, but a Gyarados popped up out of the water and startled her out of this thought.

It was going to destroy Sunni’s platform in one blast, but as its mouth remained wide-open for a Hyper Beam, Sunni chucked a Psycho Sphere, clogged its throat, and watched both energies explode inside as the seasnake fell unconscious. She floated onto the new, long, straight walkway, with nothing to interfere except a herd of Tauros. Line after line of the bull Pokémon charged at Sunni, but she whipped a Psycho Shield in front of her to fling them away when they were inches from reaching. She kept this routine on her journey down this road, not one of the bulls struck the fast-thinking child. Once she was through, she arrived at a giant psychic-made ring-shaped floor surrounded by walls, a few platforms laying about, and a pool of ocean in the center. She expectantly waited for the obvious boss to show itself. (End song.)

And not a second too long did something emerge from a huge splash: Sunni thought it was a Tentacruel at first, except it was metallic with two figures inside the red domes on top. “Prepare for trouble, this stage is going too fast.”

“And make it double, I’m afraid it won’t last.”

“To protect the world from devastation.”

“To unite all peoples within our nation.”

“To denounce the evils of artificial wharfs.”

“To destroy it easily as little dwarfs.”

The red-haired woman emerged from her cockpit. “Jessie!”

Followed by the blue-haired man in the other. “James.”

“Team Rocket blasts off at the speed of sound.”

“Surrender now, or we’ll be sticking around.”

Meowth appeared from the small, center dome. “Meowth, that’s right!” (“Wooobuffet.”)

“That last one didn’t rhyme.” Sunni said, picking her nose. “You fail.”
“Get smart all you want, you twerp, it doesn’t change how we’ll capture you.” Jessie stated.

“Oh yeah, you guys captured my mom.” Sunni replied nonchalantly. “You wanna take me too, huh?”

“That’s right, so if youse wanna SEE her again, I suggest you play along.” Meowth said. (“Wooobbu-wah.”)

“Eh, she can take care of herself. But I don’t mind beating the crap outta you for fun.” :3

“We’ll see about dat! Get a load of our Tentabot!” Meowth switched on the mech’s stereos and the battle commenced. (Play “Double Trouble” from Pokémon.)

Boss fight: Tentabot

The robot swung its tentacles at the psychic girl, but Sunni easily dodged and batted them away with her lightsaber. She charged a Psycho Sphere and chucked it at Jessie’s cockpit, but it bounced off toward the sky like a rubber ball. “Did we forget to mention this robot’s armor bounces any and all psychic attacks?” Jessie asked. “Because that’s kind of important.” The robot opened its mouth and blasted acidic sludge that Sunni dodged, though it didn’t burn through the psychic floor, it made those spaces unstandable. Sunni ran around the ringed pathway and hid behind tall psychic-crates to shield from acid, but a swing of their tentacles sent the crates flying. Sunni dodged a tentacle and kept running, grabbing and throwing psychic-drums at the glass shields, but they bounced away as well.

Bounces psychic, huh? Sunni thought. What if it couldn’t bounce? She tried to grab the tentacles with psychic, but the chi dispersed upon touching. Sunni dodged another smash before focusing energy, spawning the first end of a huge psychic ring above her. She hastily dodged the tentacles, running around the path to create more of her ring. She blocked a tentacle with her saber before the loop was complete, the ring perfectly round and symmetrical, but she couldn’t call it complete before forming a vertical ring that intersected with both sides. The Tentabot was in the center of both rings, the agents looking confused. Sunni began to compress the rings, and the tightly-woven chi didn’t bounce off upon touching the robot. Team Rocket tried to shake it off, but the rings became so tight they couldn’t, and the robot’s head ended up falling against the floor. Sunni grabbed her saber, her joyous psychotic grin contrasting with the agents’ panicked faces, as she ran up to slice the glass protecting Jessie’s cockpit, afterwards knocking the woman dizzy.

The robot recovered and broke through part of the wall as it flew across the sea. A psychic-skateboard flew out among the debris, and when Sunni saw the (convenient) floating rails, she boarded on and began grinding and jumping each one. The Tentabot drew farther from Sunni and fired a stream of water in attempt to blow her off the rails, but Sunni could jump high and land perfectly on a rail, despite how scattered they were, as if she imagined this whole harbor and knows it front-to-left. In fact, she does, so there was no hassle in getting close to the Tentabot.

“Weezing, Smokescreen!” James summoned his Pokémon.

“Weez.” The area was shrouded with smog before Sunni had a chance at striking the robot. However, she felt the Tentabot surfing away with Weezing with it, so Sunni stayed within the cloud, searched for the glowing blue rails in the gas, and skated to them. She sensed the robot growing closer, and when her gut instinct told her, she leapt and landed on its head, startling James as she cut open his glass and had him stunned senseless. The robot suddenly shook her off to a safe platform on the surface, the Smokescreen going away.
“Smarmy little twerp, we’ll handle you ourselves!” Meowth declared. (“Wooobbuffet.”) He controlled the robot himself and slammed a tentacle at Sunni’s platform, but she jumped to another and saw several small bits of floating psychic-debris on the water. The Tentabot maneuvered away and blasted Water Guns as Sunni jumped the artificial junk to get closer. After jumping a group of drums, she used psychic to make all the debris fly and chuck it rampantly at the Tentabot. They all bounced away, but so much debris confused Meowth before long, and- “Daaah!” he was surprised when Sunni warped right before his cockpit. He pulled a lever and lashed a tentacle, but Sunni warped and broke Meowth’s own glass. “Darn it!"

“I’m down here!” Sunni cheered, warping to the robot’s bottom. Meowth directed the tentacle to strike there, but Sunni warped and the tentacle pierced a hole. “No, up!” She was on the very top, a tentacle swung, she warped, pierced a hole. “Gotchor back!” On the robot’s backside, another easy trick as the tentacle broke a hole. Sunni warped a few meters behind and said, “Who wants to see some fireworks!” Sunni formed a little tiny Psycho Sphere in her fingertips and flicked it into the back hole. Once it was far inside, she smirked and stretched her fingers apart, expanding the sphere.

“Uuuuh… is it morning already?” Jessie moaned, she and James recovering.

“Meowth, did we catch her?” the blue-haired asked.

“No, but you’re just in time for that part of the episode.” Meowth said with disbelief.

“Woooobbuffet!”

The Tentabot was sparking as the Psycho Sphere grew larger, and when Sunni had enough build-up, she clamped her hands and let the structure explode. “Looks like Team Rocket’s blasting off ag-!” Unfortunately, the trio was saved in Sunni’s psychic grasp before they could live up to their name.

“Yeah, heeeeeey, sorry about that.” Sunni lied on her front on a floating psychic platform, her feet up in the air as she smiled innocently. “I’ll let you get back to that, couple-a things I wanna ask you. 1) Who’s your boss, 2) what’s your deal with me and my mom, and also, what are the Twenty Keys?” (End song.)

Harnita; Dunfree House

A pretty white flower danced a silly jiggle under rain from Nova’s watering can. She thought it before, she’ll think it again how plants can have so much personality. How they could dance when they’re happy, or get flat-out violent when they’re mad. “Hello, Mother.”

“Huuuu!” Nova spoke too soon. Her daughter had come home with cuts and thorns all over her body.

“I’m back from the Bramble Forest.” she said with a casual smile. “I brought some seeds.” She held bramble seeds in her hands, some of them already sprouts. “Celebi was an excellent teacher.”

“Biii, BIII!”

Arianna knelt down, dug open a small hole with her fingers, and put seeds inside. “I’ll carry some of them with me. They might help.”

“Y-Yes… let’s get some medicine.”

After a long, arduous process of plucking the thorns out of her skin, rubbing her wounds with medicine, and changed her clothes, Arianna and Nova went to the living room where Cosmo was watching TV. “Mother, I did it, though… I bent the brambles!” she spoke excitedly. “I actually feel… a little stronger now. I feel like I can do anything I set my mind to!”

“That’s very great, Dear.”

“Hey Nova, check out who’s on TV.” Cosmo said.

A commercial was playing, and both girls recognized the old woman with bluish-white hair. “Hello, dearies. This is Mom, from Mom’s Friendly Robot Company.” She spoke with her warmhearted tone. “Do excuse any rumors you may have heard about my acquaintanceship with Emperor Tachyon. I come to you today with a very special guest. I’d like everyone to meet my colleague, Ted Wassanasong of Planet Earth. Knock ‘em dead, Ted.” She said with her smug tone before walking offscreen.

“Thank you, Mom. Ahem, female and male aliens, do not be deterred because I am a man from a distant galaxy. I am much like you, a simple, erm, sentient being whom cares for wholesome family fun. And what bonds a family better than golfing? At Ted’s Golfing Galaxy, we work tirelessly to make golfing both a fun and exciting experience.” The TV depicted images of a golf course through a volcano, where kids ran screaming after fireballs hit their rear; a course through an aquarium, underwater as sharks chased the customers; and a course through a maze, where some yellow creature ate the ball, made him super-charged, and allowed him to eat a bunch of ghosts. “But today, we bring you a course like no other, one that will be, to put it simply, out of your respective worlds. Behold.”

The TV showed an image of a glowing purple celestial body. “Hey, that’s the Violet Dwarf Star.” Arianna pointed. “Up in—”

“The Violet Dwarf System has been selected as the perfect sight for our newest attraction, ‘Golfing in the Stars.’ The only problem is that this star, along with many annoying asteroids, clutter this system. We plan to have it all blown away to make room to design our course, but such an action is not cheap. Please: support Ted’s Golfing Galaxy by calling 1-800, um, whatever these weird alien numbers are, and donating cash; which I also do not know the pronunciation, to; to help us afford ammunition and building supplies! Ahem, now back to your regularly scheduled program.”

“They’re going to blow up the Violet Dwarf System? No, they can’t do that!” Arianna cried. “Those asteroids have so many natural habitats. It’s a wonderful place!”

“It is majestic.” Nova spoke regretfully. “We’ve been there a few times… it’s like being in a dream world. What will you do.”

Arianna exchanged a glance with Celebi. She looked at the ceiling with a passionate aura, “I’m going to confront Ted and ask him to stop this. And if he says ‘no’, then I’ll… MAKE him stop this. I’m not going stand around like a helpless flower anymore. I’m a Harnitan-Pumparian and it’s time I started acting like one.”

“Biii, biiii!” Celebi shared her fighting spirit.

“Hm hm hm!” Nova laughed. “Just don’t turn into Viridi, Arianna.”

“Hmmhmhm! I want to be hard-shelled, not end up in the nuthouse.”

Texas; Cooper Works

She was on a stage with a blue curtain, raising a golden trophy as thousands cheered for her.
had won the award for Biggest Brain in the Universe. Greater than Einstein, Copernicus, Gerald Robotnik, and every scientist before her. She would lead the future of science, the next generation. “Huhuhu! I would like to thank the academies for combining together since not one school can teach me! I’d like to thank the unintelligent people for giving us a reason for existence, and I am glad to increase sales of big square glasses everywhere! And best of all… I’m thankful of being the first female scientist… to land the hottest guy on the planet!! I’n’t that right, Mike?”

“Sure is, Em.” Mike Strongarm ran up onstage and took his friend’s hands. “I’ll be happy to perform the reproductive cycle with you as soon as I’m legally able to.” And so, their lips locked in a heartfelt kiss.

“Hu-u-u-u-u-u-u.” Emily was strapped to a metal bed, wearing a headband with small wires. Her face was red, in deepest fantasy. “Hu-hu-hu-hu-hu-hu-hu-hu.”

Mojo Jojo viewed Emily through a window in the next room, observing her brainwaves on a monitor. Sheldon Cooper walked in with a tray of two cups of cocoa. “I have returned with your hot beverages,” he said with a casual smile, “one Criollo and Forastero-type; I couldn’t decide which of the three main types of beans to use, I had considered Trinitario, which is a hybrid between the previous two, but I surmised, if you’re only partial to one type, you may choose.”

“NO.” Mojo refuted. “My brain is developing by the day, I must only eat healthy organic matter, cocoa is a form of chocolate, which decreases brain cells while increasing body fat, so I will not take part in the consumption of such—”

“I’ll just leave it over here.” Sheldon carried the other cup to a table where he placed it in a small metal box. “So what’s the status on Ms. Garley’s brainwaves, I must say I’m anxious. I’d rest better knowing my scanner found a decent challenge—even though it’s already scanned me without conflict.”

“Oh, her mind is very expansive. And what remarkable patterns. This is the very kind Specter desires for his Pipo Helmets. After we download the data from these waves to the helmets, our apes will be unstoppable, because Emily’s mind is so expansive, which is what is desired for the Pipo Helmets! It’s unfortunate that Specter is away in Solana Galaxy, but once he returns, he’ll be delighted to hear that we have found the desired brainwaves for the Pipo Helmets, of which Specter is the—”

“Yes, yes. Ehm, point of inquiry,” Sheldon said while putting on a gas mask, “what is your favorite form of toxic gas?”

“Everyone knows that tungsten hexafluoride is the most deadly and volatile form of gas, because it kills slowly, and lets victims SUFFER along the way.”

“That’s nice.” Sheldon grabbed the box containing cocoa and opened a hatch in the wall, revealing a red button. “I’m more fond of sleeping gas, all the fun of gassing without leaving a big mess. …” Mojo was merely fixated on the brainwaves. Sheldon slammed the button without hesitating and quickly bolted into Emily’s room.

A soft pink gas slowly began to surround Mojo. “Sniff sniff. Is this fresh spring flower scent?” Mojo asked, looking up curiously. “This is not a gas I am familiar with. …” He fell into a deep slumber.

Sheldon hurriedly unlatched Emily and pulled off the headband. “Come on Emily, time to wake up!” he said quickly, shaking her.
“Mmmmnn, but all the bearded scientists didn’t kiss my brain.”

“Those things are infested with fleas anyway, time to go!” After Emily was sort of awake, Sheldon kicked open a secret passage and pulled her down a metal slide. “WHEEEeeeee- sorry, my Mario 64 urges were acting up.”

Emily finally returned to her senses and realized she was on a most peculiar platform with several floors, dangling by a support attached to a rail on the ceiling. It was one of many such platforms connected together with a great, snaking tunnel that stretched who-knows-where; like these were giant seats of an upside-down roller-coaster. Sheldon was hastily typing into a terminal. “Mr. Cooper, what is this?”

“A little something called the Velocity Coaster, uh, made for quick getaways, you see. Once it’s activated, it’ll carry us straight to the ocean down this tunnel. Our own velocity should increase along with it, but I wouldn’t recommend jumping too often. And 3, 2, 1.” Sheldon pulled a lever. (Play “Terminal Velocity” from Sonic Colors.)

Despite the platforms’ structure and size, they began to build up speed as they progressed along the tunnel. “Eh, a small concern, I had only designed for the front car to make it to the end while the others detach – a safety measure, if you will, we had better move quickly. Hu- haaaah!” He frightfully scampered up the stairs of this platform. After her delirious mind grasped the situation, she followed.

Stage 24: Cooper Works, Act 2

Mission: Escape the laboratory.

Emily rushed up the thin stairs that altered back-and-forth – hold on, her R.A.D.A.R. detected a monkey below, she found it hiding in a box behind the stairs and quickly netted it, then returned up the stairs, climbed a pole to the platform’s top, and found Dr. Cooper jumping impatiently. Emily saw a switch on the next platform, hitting it with her slingshot to make a bridge connect, and Sheldon ran across first. Capuchin monkeys flew on jetpacks alongside this car, at a speed that matched the whooshing coaster, blasting laser guns that Emily dodged as she jumped over the edge, netted one, and returned with her Sky Flyer; amazing how she still kept the momentum to do so. The other ape was over the platform, so she could safely jump and net it before jumping down into the car after Sheldon, landing on a floor and watching him clamber across a zigzaggy balance beam. Emily clambered after him, several parts of the beam collapsed as she went, and the previous car was disconnected as she set foot on the next.

This car had a short shaft going up, which Sheldon used dual Sky Flyers to go and exit an opening. Emily’s didn’t go that high, so she switched for M.A.G.N.E.B.O.O.T.S. and stomped up a metal path, which looped out the exit and twisted along the left of the next car. She fought the wind against her face and stomped closer, finding monkeys clutching tight to the car’s side, and netted them before they blew off. The path led to the front of the car where it shifted toward the roof, Emily watching Sheldon get into a catapult and propel himself to the next. Emily scrambled in the device, flung over the gap, bounced a trampoline on the next car’s roof, over the next gap (caught a monkey clinging onto the ceiling rail), and landed on a path leading into the following car.

Shelbots fired mini missiles that Emily easily batted away. The girl found a turnable cog in the entrance of the next car and used her Stun Club to spin it quickly until it stopped. It begun to turn back, so she threw on the Super Hoop and ran up the sloped path that led out of an opening, down another slope within the gap, and before the door on the left side of the new car closed, Emily crouched and slid underneath. Sheldon waited expectantly again, for the path was closed by 3 switches, which immediately switched back if Emily hit them with her slingshot. So Emily used three homing pellets and struck all three, letting the hatch fall open.

They both hurried forward, and Emily was forced to use M.A.G.N.E.B.O.O.T.S. on a metal path that twisted upside-down and traveled along the bottom of the car. The act was heart-racing, seeing the tunnel’s floor whooshing above her vision, and kept a tight hold on her glasses and her shoes in fear of her skull cracking open and scraping a long trail of blood should she fall. She was thankful to be right-side-up in the next and let her blood recalibrate. She saw Sheldon put on a scuba suit and dive into a pipe, so Emily followed him using the Water Net to swim. They followed a pipe maze of sorts where monkeys also swam, so Emily encountered them on the way to net, then hurriedly maneuvered to the end before the pipes disconnected from the previous car.

They landed on a straight path to the front and final car, but as they scurried along, panels were flying off, leaving only the beams underneath to connect the cars. Sheldon was already ahead, but Emily used her Sky Flyer to go across, then Super Hooped quickly as panels flew off by the second. Sheldon frantically gestured her into the car, rectangular-shaped, larger and more sturdy than the others, and when the girl finally dashed in, Sheldon slammed the door and let it disconnect from the second-to-last car. (End song.)

They waited for 3 seconds until- “WHEEEEEE!” the car flew off the rail’s end, out into open sky before it splashed into the sea. The cube submerged as propellers appeared on its back corners, headlights in the front, and began swimming through the ocean. “Well, not the swiftest getaway I could’ve performed, but it’s not a contest, so… who’s judging.”

Emily adjusted her glasses and took much-needed breaths. “Mr. Cooper, can I ask what the heck that was all about?”

“Of course you can, and ignoring your grammatical error, you may as well. The truth is, Specter invaded my laboratory some weeks ago, wishing to use my equipment to host more crude and hypnotic television programs. Hm, but they won’t be able to now, because I input the program to shut down every piece of technology in my lab, and the only way to turn it back on again is to enter a password only I know.” Sheldon wore a giddy smile that clearly said he was proud of himself.

“Is it ‘Getyourhandsoffmystuffyoudamndirtyapes’? No spaces?”

Sheldon’s smile faltered. “…Maybe. Moving on, Specter instructed me to capture the Garley child if she came by, and I had considered doing it, before I found her brainwaves to be far too precious and important to, entrust in the hands of simple primates. Plus, you were traveling with my niece and nephew, and Mother always said that ‘family comes before haggling with amphibians.’”

“But where are Gary and Sarah?”

“We’re up here.” Gary’s voice called from an upper floor. He and Sarah were watching a nature channel on a small TV. “After we fell in the trapdoor, we ended up in this hallway where a Sheldon recording guided us to this train.”

“His instructions were both informative and unnecessarily detailed.” Sarah sighed.

“Hey, mis-instruct the color for one door and you end up down the garbage chute.” Sheldon informed. “Sigh… I normally wouldn’t let my lab be taken so easily, but… before confronting me, Specter’s crew captured a very dear friend of mine. Dr. Amy Farah Fowler.” Sheldon showed Emily the screensaver on his laptop. It had an image of a black-haired woman with glasses and a knitted blue sweater, grinning ecstatically with a silly posture. She wasn’t slim or, “sexy” in a matter of speaking.

“Awww. She’s your girlfriend?” Em asked.

“No, she’s my friend who is also a girl.”

“True, but I recall during our game, I stated that at some point in your life, you found the idea of love to be inane. I wasn’t saying you still did.” Emily smirked.

“I admit that I find her a very fascinating creature, much like I find you fascinating, but in a different sense that relates to our respective ages.”

“Right, because you wanna have intercourse with this one.”

“Kn- nn- I-…”

“Hu hu hu!” Emily took delight in seeing the egomaniac falter. “Don’t worry, Dr. Cooper, I’ll help you save her. Maybe they took her to Specter’s hideout.”

“I had concluded that, the problem is locating it. However, if we work to round up all of these apes, I am positive we can uncover some leads. Until then, we must make the best of our time inside this sub, and it so happens I have a perfect way to use our time. Are you familiar with the three forms of Haki?”

“Sure I am! There’s Observation Haki, Armament, and Conqueror’s!” Emily counted 3 fingers.

“Yes, and while the physical and mental necessities for the latter two are before me, the art of Observation is within my level. Miss Garley, during our undersea voyage, I would like to teach you such a Haki.”

“Hmmmm. It does sound like something I could do. Yeah, it would totally be helpful! Okay, Dr. Cooper, teach me Observation! I’ll see everything clearer than a microscope!”

“Brilliant! …But if you will excuse me, my natural seasickness is acting up. I’m going to vomit.” He dashed into the bathroom.

“…Hulp!” Emily’s cheeks puffed. “Me, too!” She ran into the other.

Solana Galaxy

After the R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. soared out of Symphonia’s atmosphere, the wondrous colorful planet was shrouded in the matter storm. “So every time you go to sleep, you end up in the Dream World where some bug creature tells you all about this whole quest?” Aurora recapped.

“Yeh, and it’s gettin’ annoying.” Sheila said angrily. “He’s got a silly book that’s ruinin’ all the good stuff for me. I have a boss in me next level, but now I won’t even be surprised.”

“If that book says everything, we could just get all the answers we need right from him.” Mason informed.

“Mate, I ain’t gonna disrespect this series with cruddy Wikia spoilers, I’m seein’ this adventure the way I’m supposed ta.”

“If that’s how the gods wanted it. But if it helps our quest, maybe you should go to sleep more.”
“NO WAY, man! I’m in SPACE, I gotta see what beauties the stars have! Hey, I wonder if Chimney will let me drive the train.” She curiously ran to the front.

Aeincha was seated on April’s shoulder as the latter faced a window and painted on a canvas. She wasn’t painting blackness and stars, but Don Quixote Sugar standing proudly on a stage, colorful notes flying overhead, Chernabog’s despairing form in the background, La Melody contestants below her, and Goddess Meloetta in the sky above. “It’s beautiful, April.” Aein smiled. “I’m sad Sugar didn’t wanna come with us, but I’m glad she’s happy.”

“She’s in her natural habitat.” April smiled. “I would feel the same if there was some kind of art-themed planet. Wouldn’t you, Mary? …”

Her cousin was on the seat on her left, staring out the window. April noticed her reflection bore a sad look. “April… we almost died in that place.”

“What? Because of Chernabog?”

“Yes, because of Chernabog. April, why do you go on these missions?” Mary faced her cousin. “Aren’t you afraid of being killed by things like that?”

“That wasn’t really as bad as having our particles destroyed from existence.” Chris commented.

“Or being converted to chlorophyll.” Artie followed.

“Try shrinking to my size and not be scared of dying.” Aeincha grinned.

“Then why do you do all these things?!”

“Because then we would’ve been turned to chlorophyll, our particles would’ve been obliterated, and the whole planet would’ve turned into candy.” Dillon replied, laying in the seat across from her. “That’s what being an operative’s all about, Mary. No matter who they are or what it is, there’s gonna be stupid adults doing stupid things, and it’s our job to stop them. Thanks to operatives like your cousin, kids like you still have a place to draw with crayon and be happy.”

“It’s not really as dangerous as you’d think, either.” April informed. “If you underwent training, Mary, you could be just like-”

“OIIII! May I remind our new Ryokaku-chan to STAY OUTTA our sector if she ever joins!” Chimney screamed via PA. (“Gyom-gyom!”) “Blimey, you sound like Dillon when ‘e didn’t want Carol.” Sheila remarked, in the cockpit with Chimney.

“’ey, I love my on’nanokos, but she tops annoying. So you wanna pilot the Rocket-san, huh?” She raised a brow. “She is glamorous, ain’t she?”

“Yeh, she’s right fine, alright.” Sheila rubbed her chin and viewed under the controls. “Really the tops, eh?”

“Oh, she’s MORE than just ‘tops’, she’s top of the UNIVERSE!” Chimney declared. “I challenge you to find any train that REMOTELY challenges this baby!”

Sheila peeped through the windshield and indeed tried to find something that matched Chimney’s description. Her eyes stretched wide and wondrous at the terrific mass that shadowed their train. “Whadabout THAT?”
Chimney looked up—her soul was crushed—the other operatives felt the shadow and fell speechless when they looked up. One starship flew overhead, then another, until they realized they were all linked like a train. The biggest train to ever sail the stars, aptly named the ‘Star Train’ on its side. The front cart’s face was designed like a giant robot’s head with a gaping mouth, glowing red eyes, and a towering green dome with skyscrapers. “That’s a big train,” said Harry.

A fire burned in Chimney’s eyes. Her throne was threatened. She could not have that. “My train rules the railway.”

McKenzie Household

Angie McKenzie lay solemnly on the couch, basking in the breeze of the air conditioner. She was a woman of nature and all, but not so much to torture her family with scorching summer air. “Mom?” Her seven-year-old son, Anthony approached her. “I gotta ask you something.”

“Sure, Anthony. Anything.” She smiled.

“Um… I…” Anthony spoke passionately, “I wanna become the greatest earthbender ASAP!”

“You’ve been following through with Chiri’s lessons, right?”

“Yeah, I got Seismic Sense down, but I wanna do more. Cheren’s counting on us, so I wanna help him, too! I wanna new way to train, and um, could you please not tell Michelle?” he whispered.

“Are you really up for it? No matter how hard it may be?”

“Yeah, I’m up! ‘Cause the Apocalypse is just gonna be even harder, right?”

“Well, it just so happens that one of my former operative colleagues is an earthbender, too. Numbuh 30c from Sector H. I found out after my friends and I visited Groudon Volcano back then. He and his son, Tom are lavabenders.”

“Lavabenders? Can I learn lavabending, Mom??”

“Hmhmhm, you’re much too gentle for that, son.” She said happily. “But it would be pretty fun if you and Tom trained together. He’s a lot older than you, but you know teachers learn more from their students!”

“Alright, then. I’ll go down to Sector H and see what this Tom kid’s about!”

“I’ll call Kenny and let him know you’re coming.” Angie said, reaching for a phone. “But if he gets too hard on you, there’s no shame in coming back.”

“Peh. I’ll take a lavabender over Michelle, any day!” Anthony eagerly headed up to the treehouse.

The sky

Fybi had long awaited summer, when the golden sun was at its brightest. Flying above the clouds in this hot summer air, she felt even closer to home. Skypia. There were days she dreamed of returning home, the kingdom uplifted from the earth, drifting the endless breeze, freedom. But she’s grown far too attached to earthly tethers, where Anthony and her friends walked. But she was always free to spread her wings in the sky whenever she wanted to.

Fybi glided to a nearby cliff and set foot. The same cliff she brought Anthony on their first flight together. She pulled out a bottle of Conache Pumpkin Juice and drank, tranquilly fluttering toward the forest, letting her mind wander unfocused while she went forward. She put her juice away and readied to take flight again. “Hello, ANGEL.”

Fybi gasped and fell to the ground out of fright. Phosphora, the lightning woman that was Viridi’s servant, leaned against a tree with her arms folded, psychotically glaring at Fybi. “I escaped from prison and thought I’d pay you a visit.” she said with a twisted grin. “Wanted to pay you back for humiliating me. Say good-bye to your WINGS.”

She approached Fybi slowly with her fingers clenched. Fybi couldn’t feel the sense to uplift her body from the ground, her heart heavy with fear, her skin tingling from the Lightning Chi this woman possessed. She felt herself backed against a tree, shutting her eyes from the lady’s revenge.

“…Kidding.”

Fybi opened her eyes. Phosphora stared at her with a halfhearted smile. She slowly turned around and walked away from the angel. She stopped a few meters off and said without facing her, “Please forgive me. I got carried away.” She kept walking, and Fybi watched until she was gone beyond the bushes.

… “Ring, ring.” Her wristwatch beeped, Anthony’s face on it. “Hey Fybi, we got a mission, come on!” Fybi looked once more to the empty space between the trees and took flight.

Sheldon is no traitor. ;3 Pretty good start here, should be able to cover a few story arcs. Ted Wassanasong is from King of the Hill. So here’s the beginning of Lightning Saga, stay tuned for more. La’ers.

You know, as far as chapter count, sagas in this story are shorter than in Firstborn, but longer by word length. Like, each saga in this story is 100,000 words long, about. So yeah, this one’s longer. :P

Chapter 22: Fallen Angel

Hawaii

Fybi piloted the S.C.A.M.P.E.R. as the team of five were closing in on the volcano island, seeing Sector H’s treehouse atop a small hut. “I heard my cousin say how Tom Taylor was ‘hot’, but I didn’t think he meant he was a lavabender.” Aranea commented.

“No wonder the teenagers wanted him so badly.” Sally followed.

“Okay, someone tell me why I’m just hearing of this Tom guy?” Anthony said angrily.

“Well, Tom was one of the Kids Next Door’s strongest operatives when he was active, and most popular. He removed his booger from the Code Module before turning 13, but he was good enough to get thrown in the books. Hmhm, our cousin Marcus told us.” Sally smiled sheepishly.

“Yeah, bu’ we didn’t know much about ‘im, except the KNN girl had a crush.” Harvey said. “He should be about 14 now.”

“Ah, man. I just accepted lessons from a teenager?”

“Tough break, man.” Nea remarked. “Hey Fybi, I forgot to ask, where were you before you came back?”

“Ay, nowhere grand. Embracing the wonder of yonder sun and sky.” Fybi said half-truthfully. “Sector H’s home draws nearer. The ground doth await us.”

The S.C.A.M.P.E.R. landed a few meters away from the hut, where the kids met a very red-skinned man in a palmtree shirt, brown fur-boots, a pointed hat with a fluff ball on its tip, and goggles. “Hey-hey, if it isn’t a group of rad youngsters in one of their flying machines.” The former 30c greeted. “You must be Angie’s kid, welcome to the Taylor Zone.”

“Hello, Mr. Taylor.” Sally bowed. “Are you really a lavabender?”

“Yeah, took me awhile to figure out, didn’t tell too many buds at the time since benders were, uh, ‘unreal’ back in the day, but it’s all cool now, we’re the hottest dudes on the island. Apparently our whole family line was lavabenders, datin’ back to the Sovites way back when, ‘course all we have are history books to tell us that. Anyway, ‘f you’re lookin’ for my son, he’s up in the jungle, in his little zone, just follow the heat waves and you’ll find ‘im.”

“Alert! Clouds of red and dark doth drift from jungle depths!” Fybi flew several meters above and pointed across the jungle. “Methinks the son he speaks of be this way.” She flew ahead.

The air grew hotter the closer they journeyed up the jungle hill, and became barely breathable when they arrived at an area where only blackened remains of trees and shrubs were existent. A tan-skinned boy of 14, wearing a blue shirt with mini volcano designs, panted heavily on a small platform in the middle of a pool of lava. “Umm… Tom Tayl-AAAAH!” The minute Anthony spoke, Tom punched the ground and forced all the lava to blast up like a geyser, directing to the center where he stood. His form was hidden behind the lava, which spun like a tornado around his center, the kids holding their hearts for fear of his life.

Several long streams of lava flew around the sides of the field, solidifying into stone pillars. Tom was unveiled as he thrusted his fists toward each pillar, breaking stone tiki designs into them. With that, he stomped lightly, emerged a stone lounge chair, and relaxed, drinking juice from a small coconut. “Really breaks a sweat, huh kids?”

The five exchanged glances and approached him across the soft, sooted ground. “Are you, um… Mr. Taylor’s son?” Anthony asked. “Who used to be an operative?”

“Yeah, that’s me.” The tan teen replied, kicking back with one leg over the other. The undersides of his feet were scorched red as though they’ve stood in the sun 24/7. “Name’s Tom, Tom Taylor. People say I’m the best earthbender around these parts, and yeah, I’m pretty great, but I owe it all to my trainer.”

“Was it your dad?” Sally asked.

“HELL NO!” screamed an unfamiliar, unseen voice. “He learned it from ME!”

And they saw him: a Minish man with a very muscular build, huge pointed ears, and black stone armor, looked mighty enough to rip a diamond in half with his bare hands.

He looked like such an adorable, tiny dot to the young ones’ eyes. “THAT GUY’S your trainer?” Anthony proclaimed. “What a SHRIMP!”

“Hey, DON’T call the G-Man a shrimp!” thundered Taylor, sitting up. “Gedra’s got bigger bones than ANY o’ you wimps, and thanks to him my bones are in tip-top-” He couldn’t finish that statement as Taylor was forced off his seat, onto his front.

“DID I SAY you could lounge back you lazy sloth?” the tiny thunder-voiced Minish proclaimed. “GIVE ME TWO-HUNDRED!” He stomped the ground and propelled three round rocks onto Taylor’s back.

“YES SIR!” So the teen began pushing up and down, sweat quickly populating his fiery skin.

Gedra decided to hop up and relax on Taylor’s neck. “So what can we do you runts for?”

The kids exchanged glances before Anthony spoke up. “Well, uh… My name’s Anthony, and I wanna work on my earthbending, so my mom told me to come here.”

“Awwww cute kid, still listens to his mommy.” scoffed Gedra.

Anthony shook, “Look, are you gonna TRAIN me or not?”
“Hey, I deal with rocks, not giant brat droppings.”

“NOT THAT KINDA TRAINING!!” His friends laughed at his outburst.

“Look kid, love to help, but training this big twerp’s become enough of a chore.” He gestured his thumb at Taylor’s head. “And he still can’t even chew a pebble without getting toothache. … Maybe he can teach you, you’d probably relate.” He smirked.

“Yeah, I’ll teach the runt.” Taylor agreed. “Just lemme finish these ‘ups.”

143 push-ups later…

“Now I’m all fired up.” Taylor stood up and stretched. “Alright kid, let’s get started. Chuck the hardest rock you can at me.”

His friends stepped back as Anthony fixed his feet firmly in the soil. With a forceful stomp, a rock came out, which Anthony kicked at Taylor, but it smashed on his chest and didn’t budge him. “Is that all?! Man, you must have CRYSTAL for bones!”

“Well MAYBE if we were training on ground that DIDN’T just evolve from lava!”

“Hey, the quality of the rock don’t matter, it’s the man, or kid, who breaks it. What you gotta understand about bending, is that the bender OWNS their element. SHAPES it. A waterbender can turn liquid into ice or steam, a firebender can make fire into air or lightning, a spacebender can make us into pixels or strings. So why can’t we, earthbenders, make our rocks as hot or cold as we want!” He picked up a hand-size rock, hovered it, and morphed it into lava, which he threw at the ground before Anthony, who jumped back in fright. “I don’t expect you to lavabend, but if you plan to succeed, you gotta learn to take heat. The lavabending is just an advanced form of that analogy, that’s why MY family’s able to do it.” With a whoosh of his arms, the lava solidified.

Anthony sighed and walked onto that spot, feeling a minor sizzle under his feet. “Alright, then. Give me the hottest heat you got. Ah’ll send you rocks so solid, you’ll think they’re diamonds.”

“Hur hur he. The day I meet an earthbender who can bend diamonds… I’ll worship his ground.” Gedra snickered.

“Lucky Gedra ain’t the one training you, kid.” Tom smirked. “Then you’ll be dead.” He thrusted his hand at the ground, squeezed, and twisted, morphing the entire field into lava again. Anthony frightfully scrambled back, but he ended up on a platform that sank into a magma whirlpool, in which Tom’s lounge rested on the center pillar several feet above him. “Your first test will be to shift that platform back to the top, while avoiding the geysers I’ll squirt out to you. Good luck, brat.”

His rock slowly drifting toward the center, Anthony stood as firmly as he could and thrust his arms forward, pouring all his strength in making the foothold float up the sloped magma. His feet were burning from the transferred heat, his clothes grew sticky from the sweat. But for the sake of helping Cheren save the world, using his power to help everyone, he would fight the heat.

The Sector W team stared with hopeless disbelief. “Well, it was nice knowing him.” Sally said.

“Might as well go to the snackbar.” Nea said, heading off.

“Sweet!” agreed Harvey, joining.

“Ay, I canst not wait for Hawaii’s exotic burgers to reach mine tongue!” proclaimed Fybi with joy.
Solana; Star Train

The greatest and largest train in the universe soared across Solana this very moment. It was here where the masterminds who will create the New Universe have gathered, to discuss only a small portion of their ultimate plan. The interaction was enticing.

“What do you think you’re doing?” Nefarious yelled at the Program in the monitor.

“What’re you doing?!” XANA yelled back, his face glitching to King Candy, then back to his own.

“No, what ARE ya doin’?!”

“What are you doing?!”

“NO, what AAAARE ya doin’?!”

“WHAT ARE YOU DOING!!”

“If I may ask,” Lawrence spoke up, “what are you two doing?”

XANA and Nefarious exchanged glances and replied, “We’ve always wanted to do that.” Lawrence sweatdropped.

“Stop acting like fools, the both of you.” Giovanni ordered, petting his Persian. “You wouldn’t have lost those twerps if you acted a little more competent. Lesser Lord Gnik orders us to collaborate if we’re to have any hope of finding the Lights or the Firstborn.”

“Lord Gnik’s orders make little sense.” Specter replied with his (modified) calm voice. “He told us specifically that the Lights could only awaken after finding their Poneglyphs, which can only result from a certain ‘journey’ they must take. If it’s really destiny, wouldn’t holding them captive defeat the purpose?”

“Perhaps it was destiny that we come to capture them.” Mr. Dark conjectured, rubbing the Protoon with his finger. “In his defense, our efforts were not fruitless. One of the prisoners I have captured in the Dream World talks about one of the children that have gone to Symphonia. Even though we know who the Lights are, the specific ‘quests’ they must take are unclear to us. This way, we are steadily finding out.”

“Then it’s up to us to work Phase 2, right?” Plankton asked from his little fishbowl. “Turning them to evil so as to manipulate them to create the New World in our design!”

“Yes, and it will be a glorious New World!” proclaimed Nefarious. “Where good will never triumph over evil! Our own real live Dream World! We will never have a chance like this, so we must seize it or die trying!”

“Yes, perhaps. But don’t you believe it’s a little too… simple?” Giovanni queried.

“What do you mean?” Specter asked.

“Yes, this Ragaj man saved us, he promised us glory for this mission. Yet, we know little about him. He never even shows us his face. But out of nowhere, he tells us some inevitable cataclysm is coming, but it can easily be avoided if we find these twenty ‘people’ to open an alternate universe, where we can design the very world we wanted? Don’t you find it a little straightforward?”
“The cataclysm is real.” XANA reminded. “The Zoni in this world confirm that. I still don’t see why Ragaj wanted me to watch this Vanellope girl. What possible thing could SHE do in this Cyberspace?”

“We’ve confirmed something else, too.” Mr. Dark informed. “That Sheila girl running around in the Dream World is no doubt searching for the other Lights. Each mortal in this world has an alternate vessel in the Dream World, which only becomes active and tangible when the mortal falls asleep. But when the mortal awakens, their dreamself transports back to the Start Bed, intangible again. In other words, there are as many areas in the Dream World as there are mortals. However, Sheila is specifically traveling to certain ones, the Suki child’s dream for instance. By guiding them through their dream, they are guided to their destiny. I believe my duty should be to let this happen.”

“So what, you won’t try to stop Sheila, anymore?” Nefarious asked.

“Of course, I still have a stronghold in my world to keep up, and I can’t have that child destroy it. Perhaps I can work things to my favor. In fact, I expect her to be going to sleep soon. …I’ve a feeling where she’ll come next.” He whooshed his cloaked, and Dark swirled into the Protoon like a vortex before it vanished.

“Look, there is a reason I want to capture the Firstborn.” Giovanni continued. “So I have something to use against Ragaj in case he betrays us. If you were smart, you’d think about siding with me.”

“Yes, yes, we all want the top spot in this New World,” Plankton eye-rolled, “if the going gets tough, we’ll think about it.”

“I don’t really intend to listen to him after this. But for now, perhaps I’ll check on my troops.” XANA’s screen switched off.

“Yes… that is a good idea.” Specter turned to a monitor. “Tomoki, Mojo, have you captured the Garley child, yet? Tomoki?”

A capuchin greeted Specter when the staticky screen came on. He stepped aside, revealing Mojo and Tomoki. Both were sound asleep on the ground, arms around the other, beautiful dreams. “…” Specter turned the screen off before the scene would escalate.

Cyberspace

The Zoni splorped Vanellope to a new land, where she felt her boots sink into a white substance. She thought it was snow at first, but it bore a different texture, and wasn’t cold. A dark-yellow sky was overhead, mountains towered everywhere. Aton their peaks sat giant teacups with silhouetted black cat designs. “Yo boy. Is this the Crazy Old Cat Lady’s dream?”

“This is LOLCAT: Land of Little Cubes and Tea. The one who shares its origins is trapped here.”

Vanellope walked to the top of a nearby hill and viewed a field. XANAbots were progressing toward a mountain. “Well, no one likes being trapped. Alright, I’ll help them. But when’ll I get to see Dillon again?”

“You will have your wish, if you accomplish this. Now: must go.”

“Alright then. I’ll hold you to it.” (Play the Snow World’s theme from Yume Nikki.)
Stage 31: Land of Little Cubes and Tea

Mission: Find the Shimmer.

Vanellope trudged down the cube-covered hill, glitchwarping to the various XANA Tarantulas and kicking them senseless. Kankrelats emerged from the cubes one at a time and blasted lasers at Vanel, and once the girl was finished defeating them all, her three Zoni were ready to make work at a nearby kitten teapot. “Heat.” After flashing their lights, water came flowing out of the pot, dispersing into liquid cubes that stayed aloft throughout the air, with cube-shaped cores of steaming tea. Vanellope dove into the closest floating cube, keeping on the surface lest she sink into the tea and be scorched like lava. She had to swim-jump to each consecutive cube, but reduce momentum upon landing before she sank too far. Volcano Lotuses rested on small cube platforms and sent small fireballs into the air above the Tea Cubes, so Vanellope had to avoid when the fireballs fluttered down.

For the following part, Vanellope had to spin-jump out of the water and across a series of Volcano Lotus, going between their fireballs in the process, but the next Water Cube was far above, so Vanel glitchwarped three times to get up. She barely touched the edge, but couldn’t swim higher lest she touch tea, keeping perfectly stable in this thin current of safe water. The current went straight, then shifted directly upward—three Bullets Bills blasted from the tea, and Vanellope was thankful to be in a safe spot. She made it up, swam along another straight current, but a Bullet Bill blasted from behind, so Vanel quickly swam to and down a vertical current, barely avoiding. The next part of the current went diagonal like stairs, so Vanel kept her body wormlike as she swam, feeling the hotness of the tea touching her hair.

Vanellope was released onto safe ground at the current’s end, crossing a passage to a village of giant teapots and cubes. She explored and casually patted each cube, but one that was of slightly different texture came to life. Other Bloks that were camouflaged as cubes followed, their eyes lighting blue as they blasted freeze rays. Vanellope glitched to dodge them, but couldn’t kick them without risk of being frozen. “Use the pots.” The Zoni said. “Cubes will help.” Vanellope told them each to take a cube, told one to throw theirs into a teapot, and a stream of acid-like tea flew out, burned a puddle on the ground, and melted the two Bloks within range. She lured the Bloks near other teapots and told the Zoni to chuck cubes in until all the robots were extinguished.

Their defeat signaled another Zoni to appear, so with four in tow, Vanel sent them to a smaller teapot (about her own height) next to a ledge. A string of little cubes came out, and Vanel jumped on as it began flying over the chasm. They zigzagged either left, right, or vertical like pixels, and when they slithered under a large block of floating tea, Vanellope jumped and glitchwarped to keep safe until the cubes came out on the right side, carefully positioning the fourth warp to land back on. The cubes went up, shifted left, backward, down, then straight like a loop-di-loop, Vanellope glitchwarping onto the flat parts. The cubes then went straight up, parallel to a row of separate, stationary cubes that had Munchers on them, so Vanel had to Wall Jump between the Cube Path and the still ones until the path shifted horizontal again.

The cubes were coming to a row of floating, square Tea Cubes with openings in the center, the width of the Cube Path. Vanellope had to glitchwarp over them and land carefully in the gaps, warp again before the cubes passed completely, but maintain focus and land on the path, not away. The path went up vertically through three more Tea Cubes, so Vanellope performed a consecutive four glitchwarps and barely landed on the path before it became horizontal again. It shifted directly down before a cliff, so Vanellope jumped off. She crossed a narrow passage between hills and came to an ocean of Munchers. Vanellope turned to find a XANA Kone, which was like a Kankrelat, but cone-shaped, walk out from over a hill and begin crossing the Munchers. Vanellope spin-jumped onto the cone’s tip, so as per the mechanic, she could bounce on it endlessly.
The Zoni wanted Vanellope to go to a left platform, which had a floating coin trail leading to it from the Kone’s path, so Vanellope glitchwarped over. A P-switch was on the platform to turn the coins into cubes so she could return, but first, a key was lain on the Munchers a few yards off the platform. Vanellope jumped to it, and picked it up while simultaneously jumping to get back. “Zoni.” The creatures were active to use their powers, so Vanellope accepted, and the Munchers ahead of the Kone’s path rose into a stairway. Vanellope hit the P-switch and carefully jumped the coins-turned-cubes while carrying the key. The Kone was about to completely pass, so Vanellope carefully set the key down on the last cube, spin-jumped while picking it up, over to the Kone to continue bouncing. It walked up each Muncher stair as Bob-ombs descended on parachutes from above. Vanellope propelled herself higher to get above and smash the mobile bombs before they could destroy the Kone, then returned to her unknowing host while maintaining her constant spin-jump.

At the very top stair, a Caped Koopa was in the process of swooping down, so Vanellope chucked the key into the air, glitchwarped above to bounce off the Koopa, grab the key in midair, then jump a following string of Caped Koopa to a Donut Cube, which consequently began to fall. In its last half-second of floating, Vanellope panicked over what to do, so instinctively spin-jumped, when a stairway of Bullet Bill popped out of nowhere, Vanellope crushed each one descending down and created a rhythm of pops, the stairway taking her down between parallel strings of diagonal Munchers. She thought to herself, had she jumped normally on the first Bill, she wouldn’t be able to follow the pattern and get down in time.

The Bills ended right under a cliff, while the Muncher rows zigzagged upward, so Vanellope used four glitchwarps wisely and could land on the cliff. But then she panicked, for the key dropped on her first glitch, but she realized it landed on a tiny treadmill that would carry it into a pipe, and come out on Vanellope’s ground. “Zoni.” The creatures activated the treadmill so Vanellope could collect it, then proceeded to a huge enclosing under a mountain. A huge, barrier cage was protected by Big Bloks, blackish-gray Bloks that were roughly two stories high. They made an eerie robotic whir as they leapt and CRASHED, forcing piping-hot cubes to rain down from the giant teapot above. “Cool.” She could command the Zoni to cool the cubes down after landing. “Lift.” Afterwards, she told them to carry the cubes back up into the pot.

The Bloks knocked Vanellope down upon their jumps, and she immediately had to recover and dodge the other one’s massive laser, then she hurriedly glitched about to dodge falling cubes. All during intervals where she waited for the Zoni to come back down so she could command them to take the next cube. She glitched around and behind the Bloks in the hopes of distracting them while she waited, but had to recharge when she landed close to the left Blok, and was blown away when it jumped. She was burned by a falling cube, glitching around to avoid others, then had to catch her breath. “We’re ready.” After 30 cubes were gathered, the Zoni flew to all sides of the pot and flashed. The teapot boiled red and shook, and Vanellope glitched a great distance before the waterfall of tea poured down, melting the Big Bloks. Vanellope grabbed the key she’d lain down a safe distance and threw it onto a Blok’s top, glitched to it afterwards, then threw the key into the cage’s keyhole. She glitched around the teafall to get inside, finding the faint green spirit laying down. (End song.)

“Ooo…ooO…” The spirit gave weak little shimmers as it floated. It faced Vanellope.

“Nice to meet you again,” she said. “You kinda left me hangin’ back there. Now how did you know about Dillon? Th-The dead one?”

“Ooo…”

“…Wait… you’re a different one, aren’t you. You sound..”
“Thank you for saving me.” It spoke in a light, feminine voice. “I must go. I have to stop him!” It flew to the sky and slowly dispersed.

Vanellope stared curiously. “That one was sure more chatty, though. What’s with these things?”

“It is a memory. Everything here is.”

“Memory?”

“The world that was lost, was not forgotten. Its inhabitants live and exist. ...Now, as we promised. To let you see your chosen one.” The Zoni flew around her, flashed their hands, and gave Vanellope a staticky vision.

Dillon York spun to life in her mind. “He must return.” Then Maddy Murphy spun into being. “She must stay. Find the Disbanded.” A tall, shadowed being appeared.

Vanellope shook her head after the trance. “…Huhu… do it again.” The Zoni zapped her, Dillon appeared, then Maddy, shadowed man. “Hah hah, again!” Zapped her, her eyes were static, shook back to normal. “Again!” Zapped, trance. “Again!” Vision, normal. “Hahah, that feels so weeeeeeird!”

“YOU MUST FIND AND TELL THEM!” they shouted impatiently.

“Okay, okay. How do we find them?”

Solana; R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N.

“NOOOOOO! I wanna squash that train for thinkin’ it’s the big galuna around these parts!” Chimney cried, ferociously trying to shake away from Chris and Harry. (“Gyom-gyom!”) Kirie held Gonbe back.

“Chimney, we don’t even know what that thing is.” Haylee stated. “Or even if it’s an enemy. I say we just watch it and see where it goes.”

“Nnnn… fine. But the second it honks its horns, I’m tail-ending it.”

The Star Train had gotten several miles ahead of their tiny vehicle, and everyone was curious of its destination. A strange green planet was coming into view, so perhaps they would have their answer. “I wonder if any KND organizations are in this galaxy?” Mason thought aloud. “They could help us out.”

“Uuuuuhh…” He turned and found that Sheila was nodding her head, half-weary eyes. He smiled quizzically. “You, uh… getting sleepy, Sheila?”

“Naaaaah nah, mate… I’m still hyper as… snoooore.” She conked out.

Mason rolled his eyes, and had the funniest notion, someone else in the universe had conked out as well.

Hall of Doors

Sheila flew out of a Waking Water portal labeled Symphonia. Sugar was waving happily on the other side of the river. “Yeah, this was considered one of your stages.” Murfy noted. “Even though she did all the work. Anyway, let’s move on.” They moved to the next portal, labeled Fly High.
Tower, represented by a round platform, tilted diagonal and fluttering up via a green propeller on its bottom. Globox was also on the other side. “Yo Globox, you sure this is where they went?”

“Uh-huh, pretty sure! I saw Hoodlums carry Rayman to a really high tower. I’m scared of heights, so I didn’t go save him.”

“Well, I’ve grown beyond heights, so I’ll save Rayman for ya!” Sheila declared.

“I still wanna help, too!” Globox vowed. “Rayman’s my buddy, and we need him to beat Mr. Dark!”

“Okay. You first, Globo!” Globox did a cannonball into the portal, and Sheila vigorously dove in after. (Play “Yoshis in the Wind” from Yoshi’s Story.)

Stage 32: Fly High Tower

Mission: Rescue Rayman.

A gentle breeze touched Sheila after coming out of the portal. A tall tower of whitish-yellow stretched miles into a cloudy sky. Although the tower was greatly highlighted, Sheila saw an indigo sky through the clouds, implying it was nighttime, and not even sunrays pierced the gaps. The clouds were deep gray and constantly circling the tower at an average pace. They bore a form and shape that was equivalent to steam lines from a train, except they didn’t have the texture of smoke. Their constant, gentle motion, along with the peaceful breeze made Sheila drowsy. She still wouldn’t let it get to her, though. “Fly High Tower, what a convenient place!” Murfy spoke. “I kinda already know Rayman is here, but one of-”

“Next word outta your mouth is costin’ you your teeth.” Sheila informed.

“Don’t worry, Sheila, I’ll climb up there and save Rayman!” Globox declared, his limbs outstretched as he plopped against one side of the huge tower. His belly scraped against it as he struggled to climb. “Be up… in a jiffy…”

Sheila rolled her eyes, knowing this month will be over before he makes it. The open field around the tower was empty except for wandering Shy Guys, Red Lums, and those same propeller platforms which Sheila couldn’t use. Nothing worthwhile except for Teehee Fairies fluttering in a line toward a ledge on the side of the tower. The fairies were bulbous with tiny antennas and wings, and alternated from pink to blue. According to Murfy, the blue ones would damage Sheila if she bounced on them, so when they became pink, Sheila bounced on the nearby Spring Pad and bounced the line to get onto the small balcony. Over the left edge was a tiny ledge for Sheila’s fingers to clutch and climb around the tower’s side. This ledge reached its end, the next one above her, so Sheila pulled up fast and forcefully to go up a few feet, then whirled her arms around to grab her fingers over this one. She climbed across, but a Snapdragon protected the gap between this one’s end and the next. When it popped out to snap that gap, Sheila flipped back and upward, smashed it with her foot, then hauled up. She grabbed the new ledge and progressed further, the next gap protected by two Snapdragons that snapped the same spot, so she flipped up, stomped with both feet, and jumped to the ledge, which brought her to another balcony.

A small bed with light-green blanket sat there, and a beautiful redheaded beauty on it. When Sheila stepped closer, Fybi Fulbright softly floated up out of the covers, clothed in a green nightgown. She was still in slumber, only her wings flapped as she peacefully flipped backward a full 360-degrees. Her emerald eyes peeped open as she stretched her arms. “But soft, what light through yonder clouds break? Is it the sun?"

“No sun but here.” Sheila lit her fist. “Hey, help me get to the top of this tower, Fybi.”

“Mmm… I dreameth of aiding mine fellow operative? Thou art not my sectormate, but we operatives doth not show bias. I shall help thee, Sheila. Oh.” She somersaulted, her nightgown poofing to her normal clothes. “Better.”

Sheila jumped off the balcony and spun her tail to land softly on the floor. Sheila jumped on one of many Propeller Pads, and Fybi used a whirlwind to make it spin. It slowly began to hover skyward.
Sheila had to keep her arms outstretched to keep the platform steady, but shifted her head toward different directions to signal Fybi to breeze that way. “Yuck. I tried one of those Fly Pies from Toad Land, the taste is still in my mouth. Wonder if this tower has any plume juice.” Murfy complained. Fly Guys slowly fluttered down to push the raccoon off the platform, but since she couldn’t spin her fists, she gestured Fybi which direction to maneuver. The Fly Guys were easy to avoid as they didn’t come back for a rebound, but partway up the tower, blimps floated overhead as Hoodlums blasted shotguns. Fybi shifted them between the blimps, and it was only now Sheila realized how slow Hoodlum bullets were. “Help me.” Sheila saw an Electoon cage between two tightly-close blimps, so she told Fybi to maneuver that way, their platform just barely scratching the side of the blimps, and Sheila thrust her fist up, broke the cage open, and returned to balance before they made it through.

The platform couldn’t go any higher than a specific balcony of the tower, which was just before a spiraling of clouds, so Sheila jumped off. The next part of the tower was much thinner than the section below it, and a path of spiked patches spiraled up along the tower. A small, round vent was on the floor, and when Fybi blew an unending gust into it, Sheila watched as the spike patches were blown away from the tower, for they were covering a grate that spiraled up. However, the spikes were attached via chains, so Fybi had to keep blowing so they wouldn’t fall back. Sheila held the grate tight while she climbed, for the wind affected her too, so she had to make sure not to jump off. Vine Slimes crawled around a wide part of grating, still too slow in thwarting Sheila’s progress—the spikes almost crushed her when Fybi stopped blowing, but the angel regained herself and resumed.

Sheila reached a narrow part of grate where panels of wall slid back-and-forth over it, which would force Sheila off and render her unable to grab back on due to the wind, so she waited for the panels to pass before progressing. At the top of this part, the grate directed right and set Sheila off on a safe foothold. She yelled for Fybi, who flew up to reunite. The next portion of tower was massive, and shifted more to certain directions than others, unsymmetrical with the overall structure, but clearly this took no part in the stability, ’cause it was magic. The duo passed a wooden doorway inside the tower. The air was average inside, it was mostly quiet and dark, and their footsteps and voices echoed.

Purple Lums fluttered about, and Stumblebooms, Hoodbooms on tall stilts, chucked grenades from their high stations. Sheila spun and sent Light Fists, but they were swift on their skinny stilts to avoid her, but not when Fybi spun whirlwinds, spun the stilts around, and caused them to collapse.
Sheila could then wipe them out with Light Fists, but none of them gave her a Swing Suit. Fybi flew around the ceiling and found a Hoodlum hiding in an enclosing, so she pulled him back with an air gust and let him smash on the floor, dropping the blue Power Can. Sheila retrieved the Swing Suit and swung her way up the Purple Lums, lowest to highest, until they brought her into a narrow hallway with high ceiling.

Spiked bars connected the walls at certain parts, and large fans were over the chasm below, facing up with Purple Lums on them. Fybi blew into another small vent, activating the fans to blow the Lums higher so Sheila could swing them. Depending on their height in accordance with spike bars, Fybi had to cease blowing so the Lums would sink lower than them, but blow to raise them skyward again when Sheila so required. She landed on safe ground before the power wore off. Fybi joined her as they faced a seemingly-barren hallway, where they needed a Propeller Pad to float to a high ledge on the other side. Fybi first blew into a vent, forcing giant blades to pop out of random parts of the walls, floor, and ceiling. They retracted when she stopped, but when Sheila curiously stuck her hand over where one of them came out, it did so, she quickly pulled back.

They had to memorize the location of each blade, since Fybi couldn’t keep them exposed while floating Sheila’s platform. They inched slowly higher to avoid the first three floor-blades, had to sink to dodge some wall-blades, then float directly up when a long wall of wall-blades blocked them, but couldn’t go too high in fear of a ceiling-blade. They shifted down to avoid a left wall-blade, up to avoid a right one, down to dodge a ceiling-blade’s tip, and quickly inch high-high-high-high to barely dodge a very tall floor-blade. They couldn’t abandon their platform yet, for above this ledge was a great, wide shaft of giant fans. A ventilation-like breeze touched them as Fybi blew them higher. The fan-blades spun slowly, so they waited until one passed before inching higher. Hoodmongers slowly descended with balloons and blasted slow-bullet shotguns, and while they were easy to dodge, it was fun to watch the Hoodlums get cut by the fans below.

The shaft eventually ended at a barren ceiling, where the two could drop off on a platform with a door to outside. They couldn’t see ground or sky, just soft spiraling gray clouds around them. There was nowhere to go from this tiny balcony, and Fybi had mixed feelings about flying into those clouds. But after about 10 seconds, a Hoodmonger slowly appeared from the clouds, holding a balloon, so Sheila proceeded to send him falling with a Light Fist. At first, they thought a Power Can was dropped on their platform, but it was actually a floating green sandal like Sheila’s. She reached to touch with the tip of her finger- “Nnn-z-z-z-z-z!” Both girls were suddenly zapped and shrunk down to three inches.

They fell onto one of their sandals that was abandoned on the floor, while the other sandal grew a pair of wings and flew away. Their current sandals grew wings, so they rode them to the sky and chased, using the straps to steer. Their vision became foggy when they soared through the clouds, but Sheila’s other sandal whooshed in front of her, so she turned in that direction. Fybi’s empty sandal flew overhead, and that was when she and Sheila rammed each other like bumper-cars. They recomposed and flew aimless in the clouds, eventually finding their way to the very top of the tower, above the clouds. The Crazy Sandals were seen above as well, so the girls could chase them easier. The shoes submerged under the clouds when they sensed them coming. Sheila gestured Fybi to fly a little further ahead before going under herself.

Sheila used her raccoon ears to hear the sandals’ flapping wings, following the sound’s direction to narrow on hers. She tricked it to flying where Fybi was, so the angel ambushed and rammed Sheila’s sandal. Sheila then heard Fybi’s sandal nearby, which moved faster considering who it belonged to, so Sheila took a shortcut to catch up, and also flew down to make the sandal go above the clouds. It thought it was escaping Sheila, but Sheila’s Crazy Sandal came up from below and hit it, so both flew together while the girls chased. Fybi reached to Sheila and took her hand, gesturing her to fly down under the clouds. The angel poured her Nimbi speed into her sandal and helped Sheila move faster too, so both could get in front of the Crazy Shoes via a shortcut. The shoes wouldn’t change direction, decided to ram their owners head-on, and Sheila and Fybi wore devious smirks as they increased speed. But as we all know, human- er, hybrid, beats clothing, so both shoes took the fall to the tower’s top. The girls stretched back to normal and slipped their sandals on, exchanging victorious nods. They turned toward the single floating cage in the center. (End song.)

Sheila recognized the creature inside the cage. Gloved hands, yellow shoes, body, and a head separate from each other. It had orange hair, a big nose, and wore a purple shirt and red neckerchief. “Well, well, Ms. Frantic. I am impressed.” Both girls looked up. A man in a dark-blue cloak drifted down from the sky. He tapped his fingers gently on the electrical pink sphere. “Your friends have no knowledge of the Lights or where to journey on this quest. Yet, you know who they are like the front of your palm. Or, I suppose your insect friend does.”

“Hu! Sheila, that’s him!” Murfy cowered behind the raccoon. “Mr. Dark, the one who’s taking over Dream Land. And he’s got the Protoon! He can obliterate us in a single second!”

“He doesn’t look that scary.” Sheila said.

“Alas, is he only the scary monster, which be only a coat, inside my wardrobe?” Fybi asked.

“My dears… I really don’t want this kind of relationship.” Mr. Dark said calmly. “Protagonist and antagonist… isn’t it kind of cliché? We want the same thing: to find the Twenty Keys and open the New World. We want you children to succeed. To find the Lights. So please, can we not work together?”

“Could ya tell yer minions that, ’cause I don’t think they got the memo.”

“I still have a position of power in this world, you know. It did not have to go far. But the people of Dream Land have doubted my power. The only way to persuade them was to steal the Protoon. Now I will have the power to structure the New World.”

“This dream doth be demonstrating reality too much.” Fybi said. “Or hast the summer heat prevented my mind from telling real and unreal?”

“Look, man,” Sheila held her hand open, “just gimme the Protoon and we can find the Lights a whole lot easier.”

“Hm hm hm. It’s a shame we must be at each other’s business.” Dark chuckled, holding the sphere closely. “However, I cannot let you free this creature. My most heinous enemy is ever-so more peaceful in ignorance. It’s time you two have awakened. My servant will see to that. Cloudjin, if you will.” He snapped his fingers before throwing his cape and swirling into the Protoon.

Some of the spiraling clouds merged together in the sky above. A giant, hazy white genie-like creature, with a swirly tail and muscular build, materialized, his arms folded. He spoke with a mighty, echoing voice. “My flaming breath is very hot. These spiky balls are surely not.” (Play the Boss Theme from Yoshi’s Story.)

Boss fight: Cloudjin

The genie chortled haughtily as it flew around the sky, his tail shining with lightning which tried to strike the kids. From random parts of the sky, spikeballs fell down and rolled across the floor before falling over the edge. When it was done chortling, Cloudjin flew down, turned solid yellow, and puffed a breath of fire at the girls, but Fybi defended with a Wind Shield while Sheila spun her arm and shot a fist, forcing Cloudjin around as he blew a line of fire behind, lighting a large torch. It didn’t seem to effect anything, but they noticed a lightning rod on the other side of the field. When Cloudjin began striking lightning again, Fybi soared to the rod and tricked him into striking toward her, successfully giving the rod energy. Several hatches opened on the floor exposing large fans, along with a smaller, central vent. As spikeballs continued dropping on the field, Fybi knew the solution: she blew into the central vent, caused all the fans to blow, and send the spikeballs skyward to hit Cloudjin. However, the genie was intangible, so no avail.

Cloudjin came down to puff fire at the kids, but during his solid state, Sheila spun a Light Fist and chucked at his mouth, forcing the flames to stay inside. He returned to the sky, bloated and solid, so when spikes came down, Fybi blew them around to certain fans, then blew the fans when Cloudjin was in range to be struck by a ball. Fybi blew the fans two more times to hit Cloudjin with that number of balls, until the genie finally exploded with flames. He wasn’t dead, and puffed with anger before lighting his tail with lightning. He flew around like usual before swooping over the floor in attempt to hit the girls with his tail, but they evasively dodged. “Um… Sheila? Murfy?”

They heard a familiar voice on one edge of the tower. A big, blue balloon was making its presence known, little arms and feet at its sides, and it was only when its body turned did Sheila recognize. “Globox?”

“I got thirsty climbing the tower, and I saw Murfy drinking plum juice in one of the rooms, so I…”

“Ay-ay-ay.” Murfy shook. “I keep telling him he’s allergic to plum juice, but does he ever listen? No. Stick to flies, Toadboy!”

Sheila and Fybi dodged Cloudjin’s tail again, and after looking at Globox’s juice-filled form, they had an idea. Fybi flew above and blew Globox down to Sheila, who wrapped arms around him and aimed at the floor. Purple juice came squirting out of his mouth when he squeezed, and Sheila stood in the puddle so when Cloudjin flew down, his electric tail touched the liquid and lit up his whole body. Cloudjin was solid again, but didn’t bother swooping down again while he chortled about the air. Spikeballs were falling again, but Cloudjin was flying around the sides of the tower instead of above, blowing forceful wind at the girls.

Sheila almost slid off the edge, but Fybi grabbed her so she could recompose herself, Sheila fighting the wind and stomping back toward the center. Fybi countered Cloudjin’s wind with her airbending, in the process blowing spikeballs a great distance over the edge, so it became Fybi’s goal to fly them at Cloudjin. She dealt three blows against him before the genie exploded again. Cloudjin returned to the sky, puffed his breath, and coughed meteor-like fireballs. Fybi blasted powerful air gusts to disperse them. “Hast thou ideas?”

“Yeh, I do.” Sheila jumped onto the bloated Globox’s back. “Murfy, you ‘elp, too.”

“Okay.” Both he and Fybi squeezed under Globox’s belly and raised him to the air despite Sheila’s weight. They dodged Cloudjin’s fireballs and narrowed in, Sheila clutching the toad’s bloated, balloon-like flesh tight. When they were meters away from Cloudjin, the genie began charging a powerful burst of flamebreath. “Now!” Sheila kicked Globox down as she leapt. Fybi and Murfy flying a few meters down so he was a good distance between them both. Then Sheila shot down fists-first while Fybi came up foot-first at whipping speed, so when both forces collided, a strong stream of juice popped out of Globox’s mouth and connected with Cloudjin’s fire.

Amazingly, the juice was stronger, dispersing the fire before flowing into Cloudjin’s mouth. Globox grew skinnier while Cloudjin grew fatter, but the genie never changed his haughty visage. The genie was perfectly round before Globox went flat, and within seconds exploded into dust. Sheila and Fybi landed on their feet and high-fived. Globox drifted to the floor like a feather, so Murfy blew into the toad’s mouth to restore his 3rd dimension. (End song.)

Sheila punched a Light Sphere and destroyed the cage, Rayman’s limbs falling to the floor. The Dream World hero awakened, its head staring at Sheila with awe while it lay fallen. His limbs helped their selves up to their respective positions, he and Sheila shared the same astonished expressions. Sheila’s natural reaction to a creature so unique, and Rayman’s… well, weird stuff
Fybi’s look was quizzical. “…If thou art querying my response to thine earlier request, I do forgive thee.”

“Oh… that’s nice.” She smiled halfheartedly – masking deeper gratitude, and bit her banana.

Fybi plucked another banana from the tree and ate as well. “I canst not feel too great anger, knowing mine wings made a miraculous recovery in the midst of our battle. To this day, I know not the reason behind it.”

“Oh, I do. Viridi told me Palutena had something to do with it. The Light Goddess. She can heal almost any physical injury. We’re kinda alike, Fybi. Fallen angels whom the gods frowned upon and sought to help us.”

Fybi raised a brow. “Thou call thyself an angel? I see no wings on thine backside.”

Phosphora stood, turned, and pulled up her top to expose her bare back. “I lost my wings a long time ago.”

Fybi stared in shock. Two parallel scorch lines were burned on Phosphora’s back. “…Thou art… flightless Nimbi? But no pure Nimbi canst survive without wings.”

“Well, I’m from a particular breed of Nimbi.” She lowered her shirt and faced up at Fybi. “I’m a Birkan. From the stormiest region of Skypia where lightningbenders dwell. We had very particular chi-paths that connected to our back bones and could manifest in the form of wings. But an accident ruined my chi-paths and rendered me wingless. I can’t lightningbend without a good source. I couldn’t live on a stormy isle as I was, so I had to come to Earth. Then Viridi found and offered me a Lightning Scarf if I joined her crew in return. I got to feel… free again.”

“I am sorry for thine loss. But I will not say the same for Viridi’s fate.”

“I know. Why do you live on Earth, anyway? Hang out with these humans?”

“I was born on Skypia, verily, to absorb the atmosphere of my culture, but alas, mine parents believed I would make true friends on Earth. I am now tethered to them, and I doth prefer it that way. However, I do wish for the day I canst return to my homeland, show them wondrous Skypia. Yon supreme beauty.”

“Prettier than Birka, I’m sure.”

Fybi flinched, suddenly remembering her dream. “…Phosphora… my mind doth be processing strangely… but I bear the irksome desire to see thine homeland. Shouldst I wish to go, wouldst thou guide us thither?”

