Apis and Aisa exchanged baffled glances. Chimney’s head was foggy from her experience just now, but she had the strangest notion she knew about this from somewhere. Mary stared at her blankly. No doubt, she would have the hardest time understanding if she didn’t remember. …She smiled. “April, don’t be silly. We’re people, and we’re from Germany! My mom and dad are Rosa and Alvin, you’re dad is Galdino, and you used to live in Germany, but you moved to-”

“Mary, it’s true. We’re Imaginary Beings, and we erased two real people from existence. I know it’s hard to understand, but we have to stay here.”
“But… But why?”

“Because Ib and Garry are suffering here. They don’t belong here. But we do, and as long as we have each other, it won’t be so bad.”

“Mary, please try to remember.” Ib pleaded. “I still remember how upset you were back then. I really wanted to help you… but you tried to hurt Garry, and I…I-”

“I know.” Mary pulled away from April and turned away. Her expression was solemn. “I…I think I’ve always known. Ever since I started having those nightmares. I don’t think April knew it as well because she was a doll… but I tried to ignore it. I didn’t want to give up my freedom…”

“If you remember, then you know what we have to do, Mary.” April said, reaching to put a hand on her shoulder. “We have to stay here so they can be free. It isn’t right to keep them here, you know that.”

“But what about your friends, April? Won’t you miss them?”

“Of course I will, I really don’t wanna do this either. But we have to do the right thing, Mary. They belong in the real world. Not us.”

“…” Tears were welling up in Mary’s eyes. She ran around the halls, tears flying behind her, and they heard her sobs echo.

“Mary…” Ib reached in her direction.

“I don’t understand any of this.” Apis said, baring the same look as Aisa. “Both of you came from this place? And you need to stay?”

“That’s what Ib told us.” Aeincha replied. “But Mary, though… I know what she did was wrong, but I can’t help but feel sorry for her. I wouldn’t wanna come back, either.”

“Come on, let’s go find her.” April said. “The least we can do is promise we’ll always remember her, and promise we’ll always be her friend. Even if she- er, we have to stay here, at least this way she won’t feel completely alone.”

“But what if we forget like you did after we leave?” Aeincha asked.

“We’ll have to make some kind of note. One we’ll always hold on to.” The seven kids marched forward to find their friend.

Mary was sitting on her knees, facing a corner at the top of the stairs to the Brown Area. She had a minute to think to herself. She was able to reach a decision. “Alright, then… I know what I need to do now.” Her expression dark, she reached into her pocket to grab the palette knife. “I need to finish the job.” She got to her feet and shot a deadly glare down the hall. “I’ll kill Garry once and for all… so I never have to come back.”

Mermaid Swamp; Hideout Helm

Lapis heard the entrance to her cell open, and Melody walked in again, her hair and clothes a mess. “You’re back?”

“Yep.” She still looked exhausted. “And don’t worry, I asked them to close the window. They’re watching football, now.”
“GO! GO! GO! GO! GO! GO!” The Kremlings were hooting and hollering at the screen: Charlie Brown went several yards back, he dashed forward with high hopes, and just when the cartoon boy was about to kick the football… Lucy pulled it away, causing Charlie to fling himself into the air. “NOOOOOOOOOOOOO!” The Kremlings went in a temper tantrum at this.

“Did you bring Manaphy?” Lapis asked.

“No, I did not. But I did get these.” Melody pointed at her cuts, and the bandage wrapped around her severed finger.

“Oh, my!” Lapis gasped.

“Yes. And you know, Lapis, I don’t really care if we’re friends or not, but if the day should come that I finally save Manaphy from himself, using him to trade bodies with you will be the least of my interests.”

“No no, I get it, I get it.” Lapis gestured with her hands to ‘calm down,’ standing up and approaching Mel to look at her finger. “Will it stay on?”

“Yes, thankfully I managed to heal it in time. No offense.”

“Right…” Lapis looked down regretfully, scratching her head. “I’m… I’m sorry for my attitude before. I’ve just been trapped in here for so long, I can’t really distinguish between friend and enemy…”

“At least now you have someone to sympathize with.”

“Yeah…” Lapis looked away, contemplating. Her mirror eyes faced Melody again, “I still wanna trade bodies with you.”

“Well, it’s NOT gonna happen anytime soon!”

“No, I mean, we don’t actually need Manaphy to do it!”

“What’re you talking about?”

“Because I…” Lapis looked both ways. She whispered in Melody’s ear, “I can still use magic in here.”

“Huh?”

“I think there are a few cuts in the net strings. I’ve been able to use faint forms of magic, even though none of them are strong enough to get me out of here. And I… There’s a spell we can use to switch bodies.”

“What’s it called?” Melody raised a brow.

“We have to hold each other, look in each other’s eyes, and say, ‘I trust you with my life.’ ‘Course, we have to actually mean it, otherwise it won’t work. I used to do it with my friend, Mavis a lot.”

“What makes you think we could do it?”

“Well, despite what’s happened… I think you really are honest about wanting to help me. And this way, I think we can sympathize with each other. So…” Lapis softly took Melody’s hands in hers, “I trust you with my life. Do you trust me?”
Melody wasn’t sure. She had only just met Lapis… but she would still like to be friends with her. Melody was horribly stressed out over trying to pacify Manaphy, and even Lapis wasn’t covered in wounds, however the fairy was suffering in a different way. It would be a fun experience to try, feeling each other’s pain this way. Melody looked into her mirror eyes. “I trust you with my life.”

Lapis closed her eyes and channeled her faint magic energy. A light appeared in both their hearts, traveling along the arms to the other’s body. “Whoooa…” Melody wobbled backward. She felt so… weird. Her vision was smeary and… she felt extremely lightweight. She looked at her hands and her bare feet past her dress, all of a blue tone. She was in Lapis’s body.

Lapis felt very heavy; her skin was peach-colored, was made of flesh, and she felt pain in several areas. “It…It worked.” Lapis said with Melody’s voice. “I’m in your body.”

“Whoooa!…” Melody wobbled, unbalanced in her light-made body. “And I’m clearly in yours. … Lapis, this feels weeeiiiiird…”

“Hm hm, don’t worry.” Lapis chuckled. “You get used to it over time. I’ll even help you with it.” Swiftly, she grabbed water from Melody’s bottles, sliced it across the waist of her former body, and watched it poof into smoke. She picked up the cracked Lazuli Gem that remained, staring at it. “Sorry, Melody. I really did think we could be friends. If only you weren’t Kyogre’s granddaughter.”

Using her bending, Lapis broke out of the cell, surprising the Kremlings in K. Rool’s throne as she slashed water and knocked out all of them. She bolted down the hall, throwing Water Fists at each Kremling. Currently, Klubba was bouncing Danny up-and-down with his club, having inflated the male Jackson with 10 gallons of water. “Melody!” Danny spat the water in the opposite direction to fly after his sister, afterwards running on the ground beside Eric. “Where’re you going?!?”

“I’m done being everyone’s PRISONER!” Lapis slashed water and froze the boys in ice. Eventually, the possessed human made it outside, viewing Mermaid Swamp from the base’s balcony. “If I can’t leave this planet… I’ll make ALL of you my PRISONERS!” She kicked on Melody’s Water Fury and dove into the swamp.

Sounds like a familiar story, doesn’t it? Next time, we will conclude the Mermaid Swamp Arc, and see the next part of Guertena Gallery. Kids, don’t wrestle swamp piranhas.

Chapter 50: Plot Hole

Mermaid Swamp

Bowser used his fire breath to melt the ice off of Danny and Eric, with the rest of Team Gnaa behind them. “What the heck is wrong with your friend?!” the Koopa King questioned.

“We don’t know!” Danny yelled. “It caught us by surprise!”

“Empty, the Princess Lapis cell is!” Grunty informed. “The child must have done the biz.”

“I conjecture that Lapis’s body retreated into her gem.” Eggman spoke. “I’ve been studying her, and she has a most peculiar anatomy. The only true physical part of her body is her gem.”

“So you think Melody’s keeping her in her pocket?” Eric asked.

“That doesn’t explain why she up and attacked us!” Danny said, exasperated.

“If Lapis has done something, we must apprehend her.” Kroctus said. “If Lapis still holds on to her hatred, Oceana may-” They nearly lost balance when the base wobbled.

“Your Excellency!” A Kritter and a Kop hurried up to them from down the passage. “A pillar of water just rised up from around the fortress! It’s being frozen in ice!”

“Summon Dogadon to melt the ice!” Kroctus commanded. “You all, follow me to the hangar. We are taking the Flying Krock!” The king charged back the way they came.

They followed the Kremling King all the way to the top of the base where the Flying Krock was parked. Kroctus hurriedly activated the ship after they all boarded, flying through the encasing water before the top froze. The wind from the plane’s propellers blew some of the swamp’s fog away, and through it, they could see a light-blue glowing force. When the plane hovered closer, they could make out the figure in the center of the glow. “It’s Melody!” Danny pointed.

Said girl was whirling her arms and spinning the swamp’s murky water around her. The ship hovered higher as the body of water continued growing, forming a sickly green colossus, with a hint of blue from its controller, that shaped Melody’s body. “What?! THIS again?” Eggman asked, remembering back when Eva became a water giantess.

However, the form of Melody morphed into a watery body of Lapis Lazuli, whose green form, pupil-less eyes, and angry scowl made her a terrifying sight. “NO ONE has power over ME, “anymore!” the giantess declared with Melody’s voice. “I’ll destroy everyone that TORMENTED me on this planet!” The giant slashed sudden beams of water at the ship, and K. Rool evasively dodged them as he fired missiles, but the engines cooled after entering the water body before ‘Melody’ tossed them back. The Krock was bounced around by the explosions, then the giantess sent a massive Water Fist to send the ship spiraling toward the sky.

Mermaids were getting pulled up into the water body via the current, so Lapis relentlessly spat them out onto the land. “Mana Mana!” When she realized Manaphy was being pulled up against his will, the possessed child decided to encase him inside ice. In her water colossus, Lapis surfed through the murky fog and away from the swamp, soon to find shore under an open atmosphere, but cloudy sky.

Lapis turned off Melody’s Fury and settled on shore, laying the frozen Manaphy beside her. Lapis tried to catch Melody’s breath. “If this girl has Kyogre’s God Chi, it should be greater than mine. The problem is, she’s mortal, not to mention these wounds still hurt. Using too much power too quickly will exhaust her body. Not like my own…” Lapis reached into Melody’s pocket and pulled out her cracked gem. “I’m guessing she doesn’t know how to rematerialize my body. I won’t be able to switch back if she can’t figure it out. So it’s a good thing I brought him along.”

Lapis unfroze Manaphy, who shook his head and snarled viciously at her, still missing teeth. When he lunged, Lapis dodged aside and swiftly trapped Manaphy inside a spinning water bubble, raising him in midair. “If this girl is your Guardian, then she should be able to control you. That is, if she has your Spirit Ball. I wonder where…” Lapis felt around Melody’s clothes – her hand felt a tiny dangling ball from the earring on her right ear. Curious, Lapis picked it off—she pushed it, and the blue Pokéball grew to hand size. “Of course. I wonder if she even knew what this was. Ahem:

Lapis chucked the ball into the air and called, “Manaphy, RETURN!” She threw it at the Firstborn, watched Manaphy turn into light, and go inside. The ball shook and beeped on the ground for a few seconds. It popped open—“AAAAH!” Manaphy lunged at Lapis and bit her waist, the fairy retaliating by yanking Manaphy off and stomping him on the ground. “Fine! Then my only other plan is to spiritbend you. I doubt Melody learned how to do that, but since she has my healing, I should be able to pull it off. However…” Lapis stared out into the open sea. “Not before I use the Ocean King’s own power to destroy his precious kingdom!” The human froze Manaphy in ice and dove into the sea, using Melody’s superb bending to swim across the miles in no time.

The Subconscious...

Everywhere around Melody’s vision was millions of glittery dots, flying across miles of wavy blue light. All of this light should be hurting her eyes, but she felt no need to blink. Melody couldn’t feel her wounds… or any other part of her body. She held what she was certain were her hands in front of her… but they didn’t look normal. She had no weight or form about her. “Where in the world… am I…” Melody looked around. There were giant bubbles across this scape, each depicting images. Melody was apparently standing on a glowing watery path suspended in the air.

“Am I… inside Lapis’s mind?…” She moved her hands to feel her body, but only mystical mist was present. “She did say that was why she wanted to switch bodies, but… this is really weird.” Melody viewed around the odd realm. The images seen inside the millions of bubbles. “I guess I better get to work, then. She left a lot of memories for me to look at.” (Play “Mural World” from Yume Nikki.)
Mission: Collect Lapis’s memories.

Melody jogged across the liquid path, looking left and right at the memory bubbles floating over the abyss. One depicted Lapis with a blonde girl and a ghostly-white girl, one showed her sitting on a hill and staring at two moons, and one showed a blue-skinned man with a blue mustache. Melody reached the end of the midair road, where three short water columns of different height were sat. The next road was a few feet above and over the abyss. Using her bending, Melody could push the columns to float over, but their water began to pour into the chasm bottoms-first. Melody barely had enough time to jump across their tops and successfully make it onto the foothold.

Melody viewed an endless water road where two blue legs stood at the beginning. They moved in very graceful and elegant poses, dancing for a few feet, but then returning to start. Melody watched their movements closely, then started to dance down the road in the same fashion. The legs kept going, apparently trying to evade her grasp. On the sides, there were bubbles depicting Lapis doing these dances and mermen staring at her. Melody continued dancing until she finally caught up with Lapis’s legs, whose holographic appearance latched onto her own particle legs.

The road showed an end, with a Memory Bubble floating over it. Melody decided to jump inside.

Lapis was performing a dance on an outside stage in Oceana. Her gem glowed as beautiful and intricate water patterns formed above, thanks to her bending. Melody felt a little jealous at her skill. There was no sound, and the memory showed in clips, until Lapis was standing before Kyogre. “Princess Lapis… may I be the first to say it was an honor to have you in our home. Our spirits were uplifted by your charm…”

“Oh, it was nothing…” Lapis grinned blushingly, scratching her head.

“It was much more than that. Which is why, Lapis, I would like to make a request: I would love for you to remain in Oceana. To highlight the glooming spirits of our people, and to defend our world with your power.”

“I… I can’t, really.” Lapis spoke regretfully. “It’s just, I’m more used to Avalar’s ocean, ya know? And I don’t wanna get…”

“Oh, but you must!” Kyogre’s deep, calm, echoing voice sounded insistent. “I fear the demons will not stay below for very long. We need your majestic aura to keep our oceans at peace, and to heal our wounded. Please… Lapis…”

Lapis frowned, looking at the floor before gazing at the sky. It was nighttime, and the stars were blurry beyond the surface. “I guess I could stay… a little while.”

Bubbles floated up from the abyss between Melody and the next path, but the water of those bubbles poured down in droplets as they shrunk and disappeared, then reappeared. The cycle repeated, so Melody had to quickly dive and swim through them, dolphin-jumping to each bubble before landing on the foothold. Melody viewed a small ocean of floating water blocks, none of which were positioned straight, some at random diagonal positions. Melody jumped around the maze of blocks, growing quickly lost and unable to remember the paths she came. She saw a platform high overhead, so she kept maneuvering around the blocks, finding ones that led her higher, until she successfully landed on the platform.

Lapis’s arms were floating around midair and making a pattern of waterbending movements. In the space around the foothold, small water droplets floated. When Melody mimicked the arms’ movements, she was bending the droplets and molding them together. She had to move her hands in a spherical fashion, the gesture of molding something into a ball, and those droplets became a “Look, Your Majesty,” Lapis said to Kyogre, “I think I’ve overstayed my welcome. By, like… a lot. I wanna go back to Avalar and see my friends, again; I missed, like, 520 of Mavis’s annual Fairy Tea Parties.”

“But you cannot leave, now! The Festival of the Moon is approaching. Our citizens will be eager to see you dance at your greatest.”

Lapis sighed with aggravation. “Fine… If I must.”

But that’s when Malladus made his return, Melody remembered, so Lapis had to stay longer. … Wait, how did Melody remember that? Either way, it pissed her off. A straightforward path appeared before her, but random areas lost balance and sank into holes; likely a result of Lapis’s cracked gem. Melody watched out for these holes, then she viewed a more wide water-made field of square tiles. Half were a lighter blue, others a darker, but Melody took note of the more wavy ones next to stiller ones. Melody walked and jumped around the still tiles, as the wavy ones would collapse, then made it to the other side.

Melody arrived at a large, cube fortress whose interior was made up of similar tiles. Melody expected some kind of maze where the right paths were hidden inside the fake walls; actually, the wall tile directly across from her had Lapis’s mirror eyes. Melody peered through them like binoculars; they showed a reflection of this room, and a left wall panel was glowing. Melody approached and was able to climb through it into the next room. She found the mirror eyes on the floor, and they showed a glowing ceiling panel, in which Melody could use her bending to make the water rise and lift her into it. This room had several risen tiles, in which Melody had to solve a maze of them before finding the eyes in a high wall tile near the tallest risen panel. Melody could barely detect the glowing panel behind a short risen panel, but she did nonetheless.

The next room had more of those wavy tiles that would collapse. Melody maneuvered around them and found the eyes on the left wall. It showed the glowing panel on the floor on the other side of the room, so Melody had to make tricky jumps over loose panels to get there. That very glowing panel was wavy, and when she jumped through, she felt herself land on a narrow path just under the fortress, over the abyss. She walked forward and walked through the midair mirror eyes, latching them over her own. Melody entered another Memory Bubble.

“Lapis: I would like you to meet my new friend. Davy Jones.” Kyogre showed her to a gray-haired sailor in mostly brown leather clothing, and a large captain’s hat. “I have appointed him as the Ferrier of Souls whom were lost within the sea.”

“Cool! Nice to meet you.” Lapis smiled casually. “Is he going to be taking over my job, or… something?”

“No. Do not worry, Lapis.” Kyogre made a small humorous smile. “I would like you to show him the realm, and teach him of our customs. Perhaps you may be able to aid him in his job.”

“Oh! Well, that sounds great.” Lapis’s eyes narrowed, and her smile appeared forced.

“I will leave you to it. Farewell, for now.” The Ocean King swam away.

“So, you are a fairy…” Davy Jones said with interest, his Scottish accent thick. “You are beings of magic, are you not?”

behind her sarcastic tone.

“What sort of magic do you know?”

“Well, one time I read how a human can cut out their heart without dying. Interested?”

Melody proceeded to a garden of Memory Bubbles. One showed Lapis and a younger version of that blonde girl sleeping on the same mat. Another showed those two dancing. There was a memory of Lapis touching her fingers to Baby Melody’s forehead, the child asleep in a bundle. Another memory had Lapis performing some kind of waterbending, in which the water glowed as it spiraled around some black monsters with skull faces. Melody decided to go around and collect all these memories—it was crazy how one could see a person’s entire history through this… crazy means. Melody collected a memory of Lapis swimming, which was coincidentally above a river that Melody had to swim through. She saw memories of Lapis bathing with her two friends, of them dancing in the rain, and of Lapis laying in slumber on the ocean’s surface.

When Melody resurfaced, she climbed onto a foothold where Lapis’s cracked gem floated. A Memory Bubble was behind it, depicting Lapis trapped in Spongebob’s net. As the gem connected with Melody’s back, she viewed into the memory.

Lapis was dancing at an outdoor diner, and all eyes were on her. Lapis’s smile was calm as always, but Melody could feel the bottled-up aggravation. Then suddenly, the merpeople panicked and swam away: Spongebob’s annoying laughter rang throughout the air; he was trying to catch a large jellyfish inside an equally large net. Lapis stopped to stare at him with confusion. The fairy screamed when Spongebob captured her in a missed swing. “Oh, yeah?” Spongebob narrowed his eyes at the jelly. “Well, how about THIS!”

“WAAAAH!” Lapis was swung with the net, smashing a table.

“Then THIS!” Spongebob swung again and smashed another table with Lapis. “Fine! Then I’ll just do THIS!!” Spongebob leaped, swung harder, and SLAMMED Lapis gem-first against the ground. The net ripped in the process, and Spongebob realized what he did. “Oops.”

“AAAAAAAAUUUUUGH!” Lapis’s pupil-less eyes were furious. “THAT’S IT!! I’ve HAD IT with this planet! When I get through with this place, you’re all gonna WISH it was Malladus or Jones instead of MEEEE!!”

Parts of the bubble over the kingdom ruptured, buildings were collapsing when water pierced through them, the people of Oceana had never seen a greater storm of Waterbending Fury. “Huuum… hum huuum… HUUUM… hum HUUUM…” Then the storm subsided. Manaphy’s soft, beautiful voice eased Lapis’s soul. And only as Manaphy kept singing did Lapis stay calm. For three years, as they searched for a healer, Manaphy didn’t stop singing. (End song.)

Oceana

“Sire! Your Majesty!” Sebastian scuttled into Kyogre’s throne in a frantic fashion. “There is a cyclone! A very large cyclone heading toward Oceana!”

“A cyclone? That cannot be…”

“I know. De Kids Next Door are being sent to investigate and subdue the cause. But our soldiers have seen de top of it, and it is…”

The cyclone drew in millions of fish in its wake, and above the surface it connected to was Lapis Lazuli’s water colossus. Lapis, still in Melody’s body, stopped when swarms of merkids emerged above the surface. “This is the Oceanic Kids Next Door!” Numbuh 10,000 Leagues, Kaima shouted through a conch-shell megaphone. “You are conjuring a cyclone below the surface that is about to pass over Oceana!”

“Tell her what she already knows!” a male merkid remarked.

Kaima glared at him. “You are hereby ordered to stop what you’re doing and turn yourself in!”

Lapis slashed her giant arm across the surface and wiped a chunk of merkids away with a mighty wave. “I am ALREADY ‘turned in’ if I can’t leave this useless planet! I’ll make every one of you REGRET making me stay here! I’ll turn this ocean into your own PRISON!” With a surge of power, dozens of water columns sprouted into the air around her.

After the Flying Krock escaped the swamp, they flew across the sea in search for Melody. “Uhhh… Is that her?” Eric pointed at the water giantess a few miles ahead.

“She’s even less discreet than I am.” Eggman remarked.

“But why the heck is she making that Lapis statue?!” Bowser shouted.

“Melody told us that Lapis wanted to switch bodies with her.” Danny mentioned. “But if she didn’t have Manaphy, how could they’ve done that?”

“I told you once, I told you so!” Gruntilda scolded Eggman. “To check the status of the net’s sew! A hint of magic, Lapis still possessed. She fooled Melody, that little pest!”

“Then we’ll have to catch Lapis and force her to switch them back!”

“Are you kidding me??” Eric proclaimed. “Danny, you’re Kyogre’s grandson, too, but you ain’t as tough as Mel!”

“Perhaps.” Kroctus said. “But do not forget, we are the commanders of Team Gnaa.” He set the ship on autopilot. “We will subdue her!”

Bowser flew out in his Koopa Clown Car, Eggman on his Egg Mobile, Grunty on her broomstick, and Lehcar used Rocket Boost to fly out of the aircraft, while K. Rool dove into the sea. The Kremling King swam underneath the water pillars; which took the form of cyclones underneath. Inflated Pufftups spiraled around the cyclones and flew at Kroctus, who used his great strength to punch them away, despite their spikes. Kroctus found the largest cyclone and let himself be sucked inside so he could swim up the colossus’s body.

Lapis looked down and gasped when she saw the Kremling King swim up, and Kroctus took notice of the Sea Prince trapped in ice. Lapis spun around and caused her colossus to do the same, whirling the muscular crocodile inside the twister to prevent him from catching up. Kroctus maintained composure, swam up, and swiped his claw at Melody’s body, but the possessed girl dodged and punched him upside the chin, with a burst of water blowing the Kremling out of the water body. “OOOOWWW!” Lapis cried, having punched the Kremling with Melody’s injured hand. She felt her control faltering, so she recomposed herself quickly.

Kroctus blew through several water columns, and Lehcar barely dodged him before he crashed in the sea. The king resurfaced and told her, “She has Manaphy trapped inside. But considering Melody’s injuries, this act must be consuming a lot of power.”

“In that case, we can defeat her easy.” Lehcar said, pressing two fingers together. “Especially if I lightning her.”
“No! We do not want to fatally wound the Firstborn Guardian. We can weaken her just by forcing her to fight.”

Gruntilda waved her wand around the air and froze a number of water columns with magic, then Bowser Jr. rammed his Koopa Clown Car against them and made them topple toward Lapis. The water giantess slashed her arms and destroyed the columns, but Dr. Eggman seized the chance to fly through and blast fire from his Egg Pod, alongside Bowser Jr.. A huge cloud of steam appeared when the fire made contact, and as Lapis was trying to blow it away, her other water columns disabled. She looked down and realized a swarm of poison mermaids, directed by Ineptune, were swimming around her cyclone below and leaving gas in their wake. “That’s right, ladies!” the large merwoman proclaimed. “Remind this hag why we weren’t allowed to leave our swamp!”

“Hey!” Lapis shouted when her water body began to turn green, absorbing their poisons. “Stop that! Get out of me, get out!” She spun around to shake the greenness out—as the mermaids caught and threw the poison globs back with their bending, Bowser Jr. blew fire at the water body and ignited the poison with flames. “AAAAHH!” Lapis was blown away by the explosion, splashing in a distant part of the sea. Manaphy’s ice prison was destroyed as the monstrous Sea Prince landed in the water.

The Oceana Kids Next Door swam to and surrounded the area where the princess splashed. They held their tridents ready to apprehend Lapis, but what they saw was… “Wait… she isn’t Lapis.” Kaima observed. “She’s…”

“Melody!” Sebastian exclaimed with horror, having come to observe this battle up close.

Indeed, the dark-haired human princess, her bandages and clothing ripped, was unconscious as she softly descended under the sea. The cracked teardrop gem had slipped out of her pocket and was sinking farther into the black abyss. …Lapis gasped awake, choking with so much water inside her lungs, and hurriedly swam back to the surface. “Huuu-cough, cough!” Lapis desperately tried to cough the water out of Melody’s throat. She never knew how it felt to drown. She looked around when the merkids surfaced around her.

“Aren’t you the Ocean Princess?” Kaima questioned. “Kyogre’s granddaughter? Why are you attacking us? And why did you shape that statue like…”

“SHE IS NOT THE OCEAN PRINCESS.” Some merkids swam away when a figure emerged out of the water, perched on a water column of her conjuring. “I am!”

“GET HER!” Kaima roared, and all of their waterbending and trident attacks were directed at the fairy.

Melody, in Lapis’s body, spun around and created a cyclone to protect herself, but when the cyclone dispersed, the fairy was no longer there. “AAAHH!” Lapis screamed when her former body emerged behind her and grabbed Melody’s neck in her arms. Melody used Lapis’s bending to make a water spire lift them high into the cloudy sky. The merkids swam up in attempt to catch them, but Melody forced the spire to freeze, trapping all of their pursuers.

Melody let Lapis break away and fall forward, gasping for breath with her human lungs. “You…” Lapis glared up at her former body. “You figured out how to materialize? But how?”

“I was inside your mind. I was able to see your memories. Isn’t that what you wanted?”
Lapis breathed for a few seconds. She was too busy trying to attack Oceana, she never tapped into Melody’s memories. The Flying Krock hovered close by. “Lapis? Melody? What are you two doing?” Danny’s voice was heard.

“Danny, it’s me!” Lapis’s body yelled. “I’M Melody! Me and Lapis switched bodies!”

“But how? Did Manaphy do it?”

“I’ll explain later. But first…” Melody turned down to Lapis.

“I guess you want me to switch us back?” Lapis asked rhetorically. “I can’t really do that in this body, only you can. But the ‘Trust’ agreement still has to be done. And I doubt you wanna trust me after this.”

“Well, you can’t expect me to not be mad about you tricking me.” Melody stated. “And I know that if we switch back, you’re still gonna wanna get revenge. But you know, Lapis? I’m gonna let you.”

“What are you talking about?”

“You were right, Lapis. I saw your memories, I felt your feelings. Kyogre didn’t even bother to ask how you felt. Did he even care about you at all?”

“That…That’s exactly what I’m wondering.” Lapis replied reflectively. “Did he even admire and respect me, or was I just some cheap entertainment and magical healthcare? Why didn’t he beg his own daughter to stay in Oceana, why was she allowed to stay on Earth and I couldn’t even go visit my friends? Heck, I can just teleport with my fairy powers and be back in a flash, was it really so important that I stay?! Of course, my gem is broken now, so I can’t even DO that…”

“I’m still mad at you for tricking me this way, but if we hadn’t switched bodies, I guess I wouldn’t know how you were feeling, so that was the only way you could escape. But I think we both know my body’s in a rough shape right now. Lapis, switch back with me. You can get revenge to your heart’s content.”

“Are you sure? You’d want me to get revenge on your own grandfather?”

“Well, my mom didn’t want me to call him ‘Grandpa’ for a reason. Come on, Lapis.” She held a hand down to her. “Let’s do it.”

Lapis stared at her own blue hand, looking up at her own serious mirror eyes. The human stood and took the alien’s hand.

“Mana Mana. Mana.” Manaphy was swimming in circles around an area, trying to catch an innocent yellow guppy with blue stripes. The guppy looked elsewhere, cowered, and swam away.

“Mana?” Manaphy looked to where it did, seeing the large force speeding up.

“AAAAAH!” The two princesses screamed when their ice pillar shook suddenly and collapsed. As Lapis and Melody resurfaced, a Gyarados shot out of the water, soared overhead, and captured the fairy inside its mouth as it splashed back in. “MELODY/LAPIS!” Danny and Eric screamed.

“Wait/Which one is it/are they again?” they both said at the same time.

“Hnnn?! What is that Gyarados’s problem?” Eggman asked, surprised.

“Wait! It is no Gyarados!” Kroctus proclaimed, closely observing the robotic animal under the water.
“Prepare for trouble, I’m afraid you’ve misjudged.” The woman’s voice echoed.

“And make it double, we pack the ***.”

“I told you not to use that line!”

“You set me up for it, I thought it was time!”

“Oh, never mind! To protect the world from devastation.”

“To unite all peoples within our nation.”

“To denounce the evils of free-roaming fairies.”

“To extract from them their magical dairies!”

“Okay, that line is also weird. Ahem, JESSIE!” The woman made a pretty pose in a swimsuit.

“James.” So did he.

The camera flashed pictures of them against an ocean wave background. “Team Rocket, surfing away across the sea!”

“Surrender now, you can take it from me!”

“Meeewwwwth: It’s us three!”

“Woooobuffet!”

“Chiiiiime…”

“What’s going on down there?!” Danny exclaimed.

“Hm hm hm, it’s our first catch of the day,” Jessie giggled, “and it’s a pretty good one, I say.”

“We were able to snag both Manaphy and the Fairy Princess da boss talked about, in one go!” Meowth said.

“But are you certain all it takes is a net to hold them?” James asked with concern, looking at the two struggling inside the fish net.

“Relax, I read that fairies are powerless under nets, and with that one chi-blocked, Manaphy can’t do much neither.”

“Then I guess it’s time to hit the hay.” Jessie decided, pulling a lever. “Bon voyage, twerps!” Their Gyarados submarine sailed away. (Play “Double Trouble” from Pokémon)

“I’m going down there!” Danny yelled, diving out of the aircraft.

“Wait!” Eric cried. “Don’t leave me with…” He felt a shadow loom over him, looking terrified at Klubba’s imposing form. “Oh boy.”

Danny submerged and immediately began swimming after the submarine with ‘Melody’ by his side. “Melody.” he said with an air bubble over his mouth. “Is that you?”

“No, I’m Lapis! They took my body before we could switch!”
“What would they want with you, anyway?”

“At this point, I don’t care anymore. I’m sick of being IMPRISONED!” She spun like a torpedo and sped after them.

“No, you’re still injured!” Danny shouted. “Oh, forget it!” Danny inhaled a large breath of water, puffing himself round, and farted a stream of bubbles to move as fast as a speedboat. Seeing them pursuing, James threw a Pokéball outside and summoned a real Gyarados, who zipped by and knocked Lapis out of the water with his tail. Danny kept going, tailing directly behind Danny, who was quickly deflating with constant farting. The male Jackson had to resurface and catch breath, and Gyarados towered over him, ready to gnash down. Danny quickly dove, dodging its mouth, and inhaled more water before blasting after the sub again.

When Gyarados tried to pursue again, the bubbles from Danny’s rear hit his face. The scent was awful, so Gyarados was forced to stop. Danny evasively dodged the torpedoes from Team Rocket’s sub, but when he had to catch breath and puff up again, the sub appeared too far out of reach.

“James, your Gyarados is falling behind.” Jessie pointed out.

“Don’t worry. He’ll catch up by the time that boy runs out of oxygen.”

“Let me out of here!” Melody squirmed, kicking the net’s strings with Lapis’s feet. “What’s your guys’ deal?!?”

Meowth jumped before her and pointed a claw up, “Listen, Toots, you’re gonna show us how ta get to Lunaria, or youse gonna be very sorry!”

“Lunaria? I don’t know how to get there!”

“What? But aren’t you a Lunarian? So you should know the way around the Lunar Field like da Boss said!”

“Manaaa! Manaaa!” Meowth looked around and saw the struggling green creature behind ‘Lapis.’ The cat walked around and said, “And just what’re you doing- YAH?!”

The sharp-toothed Firstborn had enough remaining teeth to bite through the string. “AAAAAH! I don’t remember Manaphy havin’ such big teeth! Or lookin’ that way, for that matter!”

“That doesn’t make sense!” Jessie yelled. “Our energy readings for that creature match Midna’s and Mew’s, and the physical shape matches, so it has to be Manaphy!”

“MAAAAN!” Manaphy successfully snapped through, much to their horror. The Rocket Agents froze fearfully as the creature jumped out and snarled at them. Melody squeezed Lapis’s skinny self through the hole and bent water out of her gem. “This party’s over- AAHH!” Manaphy chose to bite the alien’s leg instead. “Get off, you crappy little-!” Manaphy was flung off against a window, cracking it as water began to leak in.

“GYAAAAH! I knew I forgot to do maintenance!” Meowth panicked.

“I knew we meant to get you a brainscan!” Jessie retorted.

“Scan each other later, we’ve gotta get!” James panicked.

The three agents hurried to the emergency escape sub, sighing with relief after they escaped. “Phew… HUH?!”
A giant, round mass with a face was glaring at their little sub. Danny Jackson had inflated to a radius of 40 feet. The boy slowly rotated 180 degrees, so now his bottom was facing the terrified Rocket Agents. With one last puff, Danny farted a powerful beam of bubbles that propelled Team Rocket to the surface and beyond. “Looks like Team Rocket is blasting away under the moon!” (“Wobbuffet!”) Their forms twinkled in the moonlit sky. (End song.)

The clouds had gone away, and while the edge of the horizon remained orange, a crescent moon and stars lit up the indigo sky. Melody resurfaced in Lapis’s body, later to be joined by Lapis in her own body. “What was that all about?” Lapis asked.

“Don’t ask me.” Melody replied. “Anyway… Where were we?”

The two girls stayed afloat as they locked hands. “I trust you with my life.” Lapis stated calmly.

“I trust you with my life.” Melody repeated, closing her eyes. She tried to channel Lapis’s magic energy, tried to switch their souls. …Their hearts glowed, they- “OOOW!” Melody was bit in the leg by Manaphy, and she angrily kicked him underwater to shake him off. Manaphy jumped out of the water and tried to gnash the fairy. “AUGH!” Melody grabbed the prince tightly. “When I get through with you, you stupid…”

“Mana Mana! Mana…PHEEEE!” His green antennas glowed red and connected both princesses. When it died down, Melody felt exhausted and heavy in her injured body, while Lapis’s lightweight self returned to her. Manaphy swam away.

“Oh! We’re back.” Lapis observed.

“Yeah. ‘Guess we are.” Melody followed, staring at her hands.

Lapis was silent for a second in thought. She then said, “So, is our deal still in effect? I still want revenge on Oceana.”

“Hm… You’re too kind.” Lapis smiled, her eyes narrowed quizzically. She turned around-

“Wait.” She stopped when Melody spoke. “I believe I also made you promise not to mess up my body. Now I have soot marks and my bandages are ripped. And if my memories that I don’t remember serve me correctly, you attacked my friends after you escaped. I don’t appreciate being used that way.”

“Y-Yes, but-…” Lapis stopped. Through her blurry vision, she saw Melody’s accusing look. She could read her mind still. “Oh… I see.”

“Loopholes are fun, aren’t they?”

“…All right, then. If that’s how you wanna play it.” Lapis’s gem glowed as the chunk of the ocean they were in sank into a large liquid crater. The fairy encased herself inside a rising water pillar that projected her angered visage. (Play “Mirror Match” from Steven Universe.)

Boss fight: Lapis Lazuli

Globs of water rose out of the solid liquid ground and turned into Melody clones. They swung their arms and slashed water at her in the same fashion that she would, so Melody expertly dodged and slashed water back at them. Melody still felt weak in her hand, and the clones seized the chance to gang up on her. Melody pushed them away with her bending, then stretched her arms to go into Water Fury. She pulled five streams of water from the wall behind her and washed them over the clones, then she surfed across an ice road to Lapis’s pillar. The face spat a powerful Water Beam, and Melody leaped to surf across it as well. She froze the beam with her bending, and once she made it to Lapis, she jumped and broke the ice off, swinging it forcefully into the pillar.

She hit Lapis like a baseball and knocked her out as the pillar collapsed. Melody turned off her Fury to conserve power, running up to Lapis to throw Water Fists at her. She socked Lapis across the jaw twice before sending her flying back, but the fairy recovered and splashed a sudden wave that Melody dodged. Lapis called more Water Clones of Melody, who ran away as they bundled together into a bigger clone. Melody launched icicles at its head, only distorting it a short while before the clone clamped Melody in its hands. The clone whirled her balled hands around and slammed Melody under the water. She weakly recovered and saw where Lapis was standing.

Melody Torpedo Spun up and headbutted Lapis, knocking her on her back. Still in the air, Melody formed twin Water Fists and smashed down on Lapis, but the fairy recovered fast and splashed water at her. Melody called two tentacles up on either side of Lapis, having them bend down to catch the fairy, but Lapis bended their water into a bubble shield and ran Melody over with it.
Melody got up and extracted a water pillar to raise her up, then jumped behind as she froze it. She punched individual ice chunks at Lapis, who rolled around and evaded in her bubble shield.

Melody dashed forward, slashed tentacles at the shield, and ripped it open.

Melody jumped inside the bubble and wrestled with Lapis, clawing at each other’s faces. Lapis pushed her out and created another rising pillar, and Melody sunk into the water as she was sucked inside. Unable to escape from it, Melody evaded the fist-shaped currents hidden within the liquid, but took a few hits across the face as air flew out of her lungs. Melody tried to regain her senses, but another fist punched her and knocked Melody out of the pillar. She splashed in the water below, rather than its steady form, and tried to swim away from the pillar to catch her breath.

Melody turned toward the spire and determinedly swam back. She avoided the Water Fists that flew out like meteors, taking a deep breath and going inside. She made her own current shield and defended from the attacks within, withstanding and keeping her breath as she zeroed in on Lapis at the top. The fairy ordered her spire to sink, trying to push Melody down with the current, so Melody pushed harder and made it to her. She grabbed Lapis as she shot out of the spire, punching the alien’s eyes before they splashed in the sea. Melody resurfaced, and she looked around for where Lapis went.

She whipped around at hearing a massive splash, and a Lapis water colossus emerged. Melody uplifted herself with a cyclone, flying headfirst at the colossus while Lapis, inside its head, did the same. Both of them bore agro faces, gritting teeth, and triangle-shaped noses. The impact these two would make would shake the sea.

And when they were inches from touching, a red beam connected both girls, and they switched bodies in an instant. Melody, in Lapis’s body, lost control of her bending, and the ocean crater rose up and became completely flat again. (End song.)

“HUUUU!” Lapis needed to catch Melody’s breath, swimming to the surface quickly, and Melody joined her up there. Both girls stared at each other weirdly. How did this happen. “Oh… I just remembered.” Melody spoke. “Manaphy’s power only lasts a short time. The bodies switch back automatically.”

“Oh…” Lapis blushed. “Then I guess… it wouldn’t have mattered if you had Manaphy do it
“…” An awkward silence fell between them. Both girls burst into joyous laughter. “Well, I guess we better switch back for real!” Melody shrugged.

“Yeah, I guess we should.” Lapis took her hands and said, “I trust you with my life.”

“I trust you with my life.” Melody repeated. For the second time, she channeled Lapis’s magic energy. The light appeared in their hearts, going across their arms, and into the other’s chest. The girls were back in their original bodies for good.

“And it is still really painful.” Melody grunted, still exhausted. “Halright, Lapis, ready to pick up where we left off?”

“…You know…” Lapis looked away in thought. “I don’t think I want to, anymore.”

“Don’t want to what? Get revenge?”

“No… I don’t know why, but I’m kind of over it, now. I’m still mad at them, but… maybe this was all I needed.” The fairy smiled. “Just letting off steam. …” She faced her new friend, “Thanks for helping me, Melody. Sorry about… Manaphy.”

“Oh, it’s no big deal. Now that he’s out of the swamp, he can- OW!” Manaphy bit Melody’s leg underwater. She punched and forced the prince to get off. “God, I HATE that little…”

“You know, I was thinking of a way to heal him.” Lapis mentioned. “Ever heard of spiritbending?”

“I think I saw you doing that in one of your memories.”

“Ah! Then you must know what it does. It scatters spirits into fragments so they can be reborn anew in the Spirit World. I don’t know how it would work on a god, though…”

“I’m going to try it out. Let’s see if I can remember…”

Manaphy was swimming in circles, his antennas sticking out of the water like a shark’s fin. Melody softly waved her arms and spiraled two streams of water around and above the prince. Manaphy stopped and looked confusedly as the streams began glowing. Melody focused her energy steadily, and the mystic glow reflected off Lapis’s mirror eyes. Manaphy’s sickly green body turned gold. His eyelashes became circles instead of triangles, his antennas became perfectly smooth, his red gem was fixed. Manaphy was the happy blue Sea Prince he was five years ago.

“Mana?…”

Melody opened her eyes, gazing in surprise. “Manaphy?”

“Man…Mana…” Manaphy stared longingly at Melody. She looked a lot different, and yet, so similar. …She was Eva’s daughter. “Eva Eva! Eva!”

“No, Manaphy, I’m Melody! Eva’s daughter!”

“Evaaaa!” Melody giggled as Manaphy leapt into her arms.

“Manaphyyyyyyyy! I still need to go to the hospital, but I’m so GLAD you aren’t a jerk, anymooore!”

“Mana?” Manaphy looked up and noticed Lapis. The fairy smiled and waved lightly at him. “Hey there. Nice to see you, sort of.”
“Lapyyyy!” Manaphy jumped into Lapis’s arms and began nuzzling her. Lapis giggled and hugged Manaphy softly, and the Firstborn put his stubby arms around her neck. Tears dripped from Manaphy’s eyes, down Lapis’s back, and into the cracks of her gem.

Lapis gasped, feeling a sudden chill on her back. The gem glowed, and the cracks vanished completely. As she looked up, Lapis could clearly see the moon and stars above. Melody stared agape when Lapis’s blue tones turned lighter, and pupils appeared in her eyes. The Fairy Princess stared at her hands. “I’m… I’m healed. How did he…”

“Looks like someone just discovered a new power!” Melody cooed Manaphy. “Do you have magic healing tears, you little angel, yooouuuu?”

“Man-Mana!”

“I don’t believe it!” Lapis chuckled. “Manaphy was my healer all this time! We just had to make him cry.” She shook her head in disbelief.

“So, what are you going to do now?”

“Whaddyou think?! Gettin’ the hell OFF this planet, that’s what!” She sprouted Water Wings from her back and took off for the stars. “See you later, Melody! Tell Kyogre I said, ‘FUCK YOU’!”

“I will!” Melody waved. “Tell your friends I said, ‘Hi’!”

“Will do! Take caaaaaare!…”

Melody and Manaphy watched until she was gone. Danny, completely out of breath, swam to them. “I think I developed that disease you get from too much swimming, pant… huff… What happened to Lapis?”

“She’s gone. But Manaphy’s back!”

“Mana Mana!”

Melody took the Spirit Ball out of her pocket. “I honestly had no idea what this was until Lapis found it. But I guess I finally get to use it. Ready, Manaphy!”

“MANAAAAAAAA!” The Firstborn leapt toward the Pokéball when Melody tossed it, and was sucked in. It floated in the water and beeped. Boop… The catch sealed, the ball floated and brimmed in the air, and a golden “II” appeared over its lock.

Melody captured a FIRSTBORN! Only 5 more to go!

Melody and Danny lay flat on the floor of Flying Krock, having no more breath. The Team Gnaa members returned and were about to take off. “So, those people desired Lapis to take them to Lunaria.” Kroctus recollected. “This fits well with the reports from our spies. And, the mystery of the ‘Ten’ Firstborn.”

“I swam more than every Olympic in history today.” Melody gasped.

“This is my exercise for the year.” Danny breathed.

“You’re telling me.” Eggman agreed, eating a Footlong Sandwich. “Don’t you kids want to explain this story to Kyogre?”

“Something tells me I should let my mom do it…” Melody replied.
A couple days have passed since Lapis’s surprise attack. Even though she was long gone, Kyogre was still angry. To think their beloved Fairy Princess would show treachery, even after the merpeople’s hospitality. Even if it was Spongebob’s fault to begin with, Lapis had no reason to-

The doors to his throne room opened, and none other than Eva Jackson marched inside, clutching the Phantom Sword. “Ah, Eva… My dearest daughter. I am certain your daughter has informed you what transpired just days ago. I cannot believe how…”

With her Logia bending, Eva leaped toward Kyogre with extended water legs, flying at him with sudden speed. “AAAAAAHHHH!” The Phantom Sword pierced through the whale god’s head perfectly. “AAAAHHH! IT HURTS! OH MY GOD, DOES THAT HURT? AAAAHHHH!”

“I warned you.” Eva glared at him. “Didn’t I?”

“You don’t tell me what to do. You aren’t my father and you never will be! You have no right to decide my fate!” Eva kicked Oshus to the ground and aimed her sword at his neck. “So, let me tell you something: If you even think about deciding my future for me, I’ll ram this sword so hard through your head, you’ll be begging for Jones to come and end you after I get done. I’m Eva Roberts! Numbuh 10 of the Kids Next Door! Nothing more, nothing less. Understand?”

“Except this was for Lapis.” Eva stated. “I guess I just expected you to follow the same rules.”

Eva withdrew the sword from the king’s head and left him writhing in pain. “Oh, God! Medic! I need a medic! Lapis, where are you! Where the hell are you when I NEED you! Ahhhhhgg!”

_Guertena Gallery_

“Maaaryyyyyyy?” Ib called as they trekked down a seemingly endless stairway. “MARY, are you DOWN THERE?”

“I coulda sworn I sensed her run this way.” Aisa replied. “Where does this even lead?”

“When me and Garry came down here, the stairs turned sideways and dropped us into a room.” Ib remembered. “Mary’s picture was in there. I guess this is where this leads.”

The pink stairs led them into what seemed like outer space. They stared in awe when a white, crayon comet soared overhead. A blue comet soared over next, and the stairs finally ended at a pink path that looked like… crayon?

Colorful constellations appeared in the stars. A purple rose, yellow moon, orange sun, a brown six-fingered hand… This sudden change of atmosphere confused them terrifically. They merely pressed on, wondering how odd this hand-drawn world would get. They dodged a meteor that fell from the sky, then a large axe. The word _Sketchbook_ was labeled in blue crayon. (Play “No One in Sight” from _Ib_.)

They viewed a village of crayon houses, crayon flowers, crayon trees, that were all completely flat and looked like they were drawn by a Kindergartener. Aisa brushed her foot along the ground. “Is everything in this place crayon?”

“That’s impossible.” Apis approached one of the flat, poorly-drawn houses and was able to turn the yellow knob. She peeked inside (apparently, it did have an interior): there was a clock, a bookshelf, and a painting of some…thing. “Is this part of the gallery, too?”
“Maybe Guertena drew all this in his childhood.” Aeincha assumed.

The friends separated and explored this mysterious landscape. There was a Butterfly Park, and the butterflies were the most realistic creatures here. There was a blue crayon pond with darker blue fish, and when Aisa chose to dip her rose in the water, it wilted slightly. April entered a house with Aeincha and Mocha, and they noticed the end of a fishing pole sticking out from above a shelf. April threw the two tinnies up there to push it down to her. When Aisa mentioned the pond to them, they went over to dip the hook into it. They successfully fished out… a crayon bottle of toothpaste. That explained the sign nearby, which said, Don’t litter.

In one of the other houses, Ib found a crayon toothbrush. They looked around for a place to use these… and Chimney pointed out the giant lips with teeth several feet over the dark abyss. They did a ‘Not it’ game, and Chimney was the last to touch her nose. Begrudgingly, she squirted toothpaste on the brush, and crossed an invisible path to the giant teeth. She scrubbed a single dirty tooth to cleanliness. The teeth spat a blue crayon key at her head.

The only locked doors in this world were a house with flowers around it, a central pink building, and a larger building labeled ‘Gallery.’ The key opened the Gallery; there was a large, crayon drawing of Ib holding Garry’s hand on the right side of the room. On the left side, a drawing of Mary appeared to be waving her arms and calling for them, while a zombie doll held her yellow rose. There was a box in the center of the floor labeled ‘Pandora’s Box.’ “Let’s see what’s inside.” Chimney approached it.

“Chimney, do you know what Pandora’s Box is?” Apis asked.

“We’ll find Pandora and give it back to her.” Chimney unhesitantly opened the box—eight symbols flashed out of the box and flew away.

“What were those?” Mocha exclaimed.

“Sheesh, Pandora has a weird diet.” Chimney said, rubbing her eye. “…Hey, there’s a mirror in here!” She pulled out a hand-size mirror. When her friends looked over her shoulder, they saw that their reflections were crayon forms of their selves. The girls went back outside to look for a place to use—SHINGSHINGSHINGSHINGSHING! A buzzsaw flew across the path from out of nowhere, their hearts jumping as they avoided it.

In the northwest quadrant, they realized that an orange crayon sun appeared in the dark sky. They stood and embraced in its warmth; it felt surprisingly like a real sun. Chimney was staring curiously at a light-blue door that looked like it was frozen; she was unknowingly aiming the mirror at it, which bounced the sun’s crayon rays to melt the door. “Wow! Good thinking, Chimney.” April complimented as they all entered this crayon building. Chimney shrugged.

They heard a distant ticking sound in this room, even though there was no clock. There were eight pedestals seated around the room in a square alignment, and eight symbols drawn on the wall: Heart, Star, Moon, Sun, Question Mark, the six-fingered hand, Snake, and a Ghost. “Those look like the symbols that flew out of Pandora’s Box just now.” Aisa noticed.

“So do we need to find them?” Ib asked.

“Let’s go get the box, maybe we need to catch them.” April figured. They returned to the Gallery and took Pandora’s Box, then searched the Sketchbook for these symbols. They already knew the Sun was in the northwest quadrant, so they used the mirror to direct its ray inside the box. Eventually, the light was completely sucked in. When Aeincha looked in the sky above the Butterfly Park, she gazed beautifully at the yellow star twinkling above it. They carried her there and set her on one of the butterflies. The creature lifted her and fluttered up, then Aeincha jumped to grab the star, dropping back for her friends to catch her. They put the star in the box.

One of the flowers around the house in the north quadrant was pink and heart-shaped. They put it in the box. When April came back to the pond, she noticed that the crescent moon’s beautiful image was reflected. She launched her fishing rod, and was able to catch and reel the reflection in. She put it in the box. In the east quadrant, Apis discovered that a great number of trees with fruit blossomed within the area. One of those trees had a white stick man hanging by the neck. The red noose, in question, looked like a question mark, so Apis cut it down and took it to put in the box. In the south quadrant, Aisa noticed a purple snake was peeped out from behind the green grass. She caught and put it in the box.

Ib entered the first house they encountered in the southeast. She examined the poorly-drawn crayon books. A brown book had a six-fingered hand marked on it. She peeled it off and put it in the box. Finally, Chimney spotted the ghost fluttering above the southwest quadrant. Chimney jumped up and down and up and down, but the ghost eluded her height. When Apis walked by, she suggested Chimney jump in the large mouth so it could spit her up to the ghost. Chimney shook her head frantically, but Apis pushed her toward the mouth, commenting it isn’t as big as hers, so she’ll be fine. Chimney huffed and climbed into the large mouth whose teeth she brushed beforehand. The mouth spat her up toward the ghost, which she caught.

With all eight things in the box, they returned to the room and released them onto the pedestals. A yellow key magically appeared in the center. They took it to the house in the north quadrant and entered it. (End song.)

They found their selves inside a pitch-black room with dark-pink corners and floor-to-wall borders, and blue crayon roses growing on green thorns around a staircase. “Down there is where Mary’s ‘Toy Box’ was.” Ib pointed at a left staircase leading down. “And up there was where her painting was.” She pointed at the stairs ahead.

“I sense her with someone else.” Aisa said. “Let’s go!”

As soon as they were up the short staircase, they gasped at the horrifying sight. “AAAAUGH! AAAAAH!” Mary was mercilessly slashing her palette knife across Garry’s chest. Blood didn’t fly out, but rather the gooey paint that made up his colors. “Hehehehehehehehehehe…” The dark-clothed man merely cackled, embracing the pain.

“DIE! DIE ALREADY!” The look in her eyes was demonic. “I would’ve finished this a long time ago if I could have!”

“MARY, STOP!” April yelled.

“April!” Mary turned to her in surprise.

“How would YOU know, you used to be a DOLL! It was thanks to you I was able to kill him the first time! So help me kill him ag-”

Garry swung a kick that sent Mary flying into a pile of junk against the wall. He kept cackling maniacally as Mary tried to stand up, shoving the random items aside. It was then she discovered the lighter: the lighter Ib was going to use to burn her painting, until April knocked it out of her hand. Mary looked at Garry’s empty portrait on the wall, a few fabric blue roses hanging from it. She looked at Garry, who was grinning like a devil and swaying in place. She looked at the lighter, and knew how to finish this permanently. “There’s no other option.” She flicked it on. “Good-bye, Garry.”

“MARY, DON’T!!” Ib cried. She could only watch hopelessly, too far away to stop her, as Mary dashed up to the canvas with the lit flame ready…

Somebody socked Mary in the nose and slammed her against the wall, dropping the lighter. Mary grabbed her bloody nose and looked at the one responsible: Chimney was glaring at her furiously, with drops of Mary’s blood on her knuckles. “April-chan told you not to.”

“Get out of my way, Chimney. None of this is your problem.”

“I been havin’ this problem with you for a long time! I knew there was something about you I didn’t like!”

“Out of my way! I need to kill Garry so he’ll finally stop bothering me!” Mary stood and stomped her foot firmly.

“KND operatives don’t kill adults, Mary! We just beat them until they’re covered with bruises. And you don’t meet the requirements!”

“Out of my WAY, out of MY WAY!!” The room shook under her rage.

“Mary…” Chimney remained stern.

“NOOOOOOWWWW!!” (Play “Sinister Shadows” from Kingdom Hearts II.)

Boss fight: Mary

Mary dashed up and stabbed her knife at Chimney, who dodged and performed a spin-kick to knock Mary off her feet. Mary swiftly got up and flipped away, grabbing her blue crayons to slash lines along the floor, so when Chimney ran at her, she slipped on the ice and fell. Mary scribbled yellow crayon on Chimney’s back, so the Sector Leader jittered from the electricity. Mary ran to grab the lighter, then up to Garry’s painting to burn it, but Chimney suddenly zipped in her path and knocked her away, moving with whipping speed now that the electricity was added.

Mary thought fast and avoided her attacks, grabbing her gray crayon to mark on Chimney’s arms. Chimney slumped, feeling her arms weighed down by the heavy color. Mary threw punches across Chimney’s face, but the Sector Leader managed to raise her arms up above Mary’s head, letting them weigh down and cause Mary to fall forward. Chimney threw punches at the back of Mary’s head with her weighed arms, and Mary withstood as she drew white crayon on either side between Chimney’s legs. Mary rolled out and poked her knife in Chimney’s right leg, and when the girl fell down, the two white lines touched together, getting Chimney’s legs glued.

Mary ran to grab the lighter again, but Chimney flipped up to her hands, pushed off the floor, and flew to stamp Mary in the head with both feet. Chimney hopped with her legs still glued, and when Mary recovered, Chimney grabbed her by the collar, threw her up in the air, then leaped to kick off the wall and stamp Mary in the chest. Still in midair, Chimney ripped her legs apart from each other, landed on both, then ran over to swing a spin-kick at Mary’s head. The Goldenweek was knocked away again, but she recovered and ran to slash green crayon under Chimney’s nose. Chimney was used to such stench (thanks to a certain Nimbi), so she punched Mary away again.

Garry kept laughing like a hyena, no doubt enjoying this conflict. Mary growled hatefully at him.
from her position on the floor. The lighter was still in her hand, but the canvas was several feet away. “GRRRRR!” Mary dashed up to the man himself, who gasped perkily when her knife was drawn. The W7 members gasped: Chimney grabbed firmly onto the knife before Mary could make it, the former’s hand bleeding. Chimney smacked the knife to the ground, and when Garry cheered ecstatically, Chimney flipped a kick up to his face to knock him out clean. Still holding Mary’s hand, Chimney flipped over her, pulled her around, then punched Mary forcefully to the floor. (End song.)

Mary calmly gasped for breath, but they could sense the bottled rage within her pants. She stood up as she felt the blood drip from her nose. She never had blood as a painting. When she became real, she was able to bleed. At least, when she bled… she was reminded that she was still real. She turned around and faced Chimney with malice in her eyes. Chimney faced her unflinchingly. She was ready for Mary to attack again. The Goldenweek raised her knife toward her. She glanced right at the other girls. All of them bore either worried or strict looks that wanted her to stop. Mary saw this clearly in Ib’s pleading red eyes.

Mary dropped her knife, her eyes going from anger to sadness as she looked at her hands. With a forceful sniffle, she spun around and fell to her knees. “I don’t wanna stay, I don’t wanna stay, I DON’T WANNA STAY!” She repeatedly pounded the floor in a tantrum. Jagged red crayon lines appeared there in the form of cracks, and the room seemed to vibrate. “I hate this place, I don’t wanna stay here!”

“Mary…” Ib calmly approached the girl from behind.

Mary started forcing out sobs, tears hitting the black floor. “I wanna be free… I wanna keep living in the real world. I wanna keep seeing the blue ocean in the sky, and the one on the ground… I wanna see the night sun, and the day moon… I wanna go back to space and look at all the stars… I wanna dance on the music planet again…”

“Mary…” Ib sat down and put her hands on Mary’s shoulders.

“There’s so many things I wanted to do…” Mary sniffled. “Walk on the ocean floor… sleep on a bed on the moon… perform in the circus… and make way more friends… I don’t wanna stay… I don’t-”

Ib hugged Mary, leaning her head on her shoulder. “I’m sorry, Mary.” Tears dripped from Ib’s pretty red eyes. “I want you to do all those things, too. I really wish there was a way we could all leave. I really wish…”

“Ib…” Mary’s tears softened as she glanced at her. Someone else got down and hugged Mary from the front. “April…”

“At least you won’t be alone now, Mary.” Her cousin smiled. “You gave me a soul. Even when I turn back into a doll again, I’ll still be more than just… your Imaginary Friend.”

Aeincha and Mocha climbed up Ib’s shirt to get to Mary’s shoulders, hugging her neck. “I know how it feels to be trapped in one place for too long.” Mocha said. “Even if you did have people with you.”

“We’ll always remember you, Mary.” Aeincha promised. “And when we’re able to, we’ll come visit you and April. We’ll bring souvenirs from the real world and tell you all about them!”

“And don’t forget, it doesn’t matter if you’re real or Imaginary.” Apis said, hugging her from one side. “As long as you have a heart, God will be inside it.”
“We’ll tell all the Kids Next Door about you, too.” Aisa hugged from the other side. “We’ll make it our mission to find you a way out. But Mary, try taking off your shoes once in a while. That usually makes me happy!”

Mary’s tears faded away. She felt so strange, in the center of all their hugs. She was being hugged… by friends. Six friends were hugging her. Even during her time as a real person… Mary never felt more whole until now. For the first time, her heart felt like the farthest thing from fabricated. If she were to go back to what she once was… she really hoped this feeling would last. …Father… is this what you wanted for me? I hope that I… made you happy…

Ib reached into her pocket and pulled out her red rose. She held it above Mary. April pulled out hers, Aeincha’s and Mocha’s, and Aisa and Apis held theirs up as well. A harmony of colors.

Realizing something, Aeincha looked over at Chimney. Her arms were folded, turned away from them. “Chimney, stop acting like that. Come over here and comfort Mary.”

“Oh, screw that, Mary belongs here!” Chimney claimed, turning to them. “She’s as freaky as any of these monster paintings! But April-chan, I’ll be DAMNED TO HECK if I let one of my pallies stay in this ghost house! You comin’ back to W7, like it or not!”

“Chimney, the only way I would be able to is as a lifeless doll.” April reminded. “Even if you hate this worse than the rest of us, it doesn’t change the fact that Ib and Garry have to be set free. That’s the Kids Next Door’s job, isn’t it?”

“Garry’s a freaking adult, let him stay here so you and Ib be free!”

“I couldn’t leave Garry with Mary when he’s like this.” Ib stated. “I don’t see how he got so crazy to begin with. Is it because his rose got plucked? We should look for it and heal it.”

“You can’t.” Mary said. “If a rose dies, and a painting takes that person’s place, it disappears. Then the person becomes…” She felt her heart skip a beat. She looked up. Her friends were holding their roses above her. Including Ib. “Ib… You still have your rose.”

“Oh?” Ib brought her red rose back down. “Yeah. April healed it for me.”

“But… that’s impossible. Your rose should’ve disappeared after me and April stole your place. Unless… you never actually died.”

“Um… I guess I didn’t.” Ib stared at her rose with confusion.

“I thought she stole your place when you chose to stay here.” Aisa mentioned.

“No, a painting can only become real if a real person dies in this world.” Mary explained. “And a person only dies when their rose completely wilts. …S-So then…” Mary looked at her yellow rose. Her pupils shrunk, feeling horrified and confused. “How did me and April BOTH become real?!”

“Siiiigh. Okay, now I’m really confused.” Chimney sighed. “But normally, this is where somebody provides a totally random, complicated, though somewhat logical explanation that solves all of our problems. Aaaaaaand NOW.” There was silence. “And NOW. …NOW. …NOW.”

“Mary, did you forget to tell us anything?” Ib asked.

“Um… I don’t know.” Mary looked down, sad and confused.
“GARRY!” Aisa said suddenly, pointing when the man jumped to his feet. The group broke apart the hug and readied their selves for him.

“HEHEHEHEHEHehehehehehehehehe!” Garry’s grinning expression was still hysterical and terrifying. “I’m Gaaarryyyy, I’m Gaaaaarryyyyy, HEHEHEHEHEHEEEE! Come down below, let’s play, let’s PLAY!” He bolted out of the room.

“Garry, come back!” Ib chased him.

“Ib, wait!” The others followed suit.

Garry rushed into a pink, crayon-drawn house, and Ib dashed inside first. The pink room inside was of the gallery’s normal decorating, and as they hurried down a flight of stairs, the interior was turning black. Ib and Mary remembered this as the way back to the main gallery, or rather a duplicate of the main gallery that existed at the very bottom of this cursed building. When they burst through the double-doors at the bottom, there they were in the lobby with the abandoned reception desk.

“Which way did Garry go?!?” April yelled, looking around.

“Maybe he’s going for the exit!” Ib exclaimed.

“No! He went down those stairs!” Aisa sensed with her Mantra, pointing at the thin stairwell near the reception desk.

The eight girls gathered in front and stared down the passage. The stairs led into darkness not far down. “I…I don’t even remember this being here.” Mary mentioned. “I thought this was the bottom of the gallery.”

“A whole new area of the Guertena Gallery that Mary didn’t know about…” Aeincha stared with awe and wonder.

“What kind of surprises can we expect from this?” Apis asked.

Ib looked again at her red rose, then Mary’s and April’s. “If Garry’s down there, we have to find out.”

“You’re right.” April nodded. “Come on, guys. We’re all together now, so we can get through this place. Let’s go.” She marched down first, followed by Ib, Mary, and the rest of W7. Chimney stood behind for a few seconds, sighing with annoyance. But she complied and followed her team downstairs. Blue writing poofed on the wall beside the stairs. It said, Drown in the abyss.

Chapter Summary

Sector W7, Ib, and Mary explore the gallery's secret dungeon.

The final level of Ib is the finale of the Art Saga. Let’s dive into the Abyss.

Chapter 51: Forgotten and Remembered

Guertena Gallery

They reached the bottom of the dark stairs, even though it seemed to go down for ages. They found a small room with an empty vase; it reminded Ib of the room where the Blue Lady was plucking Garry’s rose. When they entered the door, this very passage looked the very same as the Red Area, near where she met him. The Lady in Blue was hanging on the wall, immobile. This area was quiet; and as Aisa sensed no danger, it was peaceful. Chimney and Mary healed their roses inside an Eternal Blessing; the wounds from their previous battle were healed. The other kids healed their roses. With that, they entered the door to the Orange Area. (Play “Noise” from Ib.)

Act 3: The Dungeon

There was a painting of someone taking a red rose titled Déjà Vu, and a painting of a hand reaching from behind an orange curtain, Concealed Secret. The next door brought them to the main hall of the Orange Area. The left route was blocked by a giant, green sleeping snake, and the left route further ahead had a gap within the floor. They could step over this gap- “HAH!” if not for the claws down below. Ib noticed a small white dot roaming around the floor. “Look, guys! There’s an ant!”

“Oh, an ant?” Apis asked, crouching down to look at it. “I bet I can talk to it.” She held her finger down for the ant to crawl on.

“hello. i’m a white ant. i miss my home. can you take me home?”

“Wait… You can understand it, April?” Apis asked.

“I can, too.” Ib mentioned. The others nodded.

“Oh… So much for Animal Telepathy. Mr. Ant, did you see a man run by here?”

“i saw him. maybe he was looking for his home. i’m looking for my home…”

“We’ll take you to look for it.”

“no, i’ll keep looking here. maybe it’ll turn up…”

She set the ant down as they entered a different door. There were many paintings around this dead-end hall, small and medium-size. None of them were labeled; there was a painting of red balls, a painting of a shark, a painting of a chair, a nail pinned into a red wall and stretching a shadow… There was a painting of a book that said, Everything changes at night. There was a painting of a teacup, in which they could smell the steam. “Mmmm… smells yummy.” Mary smiled happily. “Wish it was real, though…” She frowned.

“Aha!” Aisa perked. She pulled an anthill painting off the wall. They brought it back as she placed the painting over the gap like a bridge (remembering a similar case from the Brown Area).

“oh. It’s my home. thank you.” The white ant crawled inside the painting. The picture felt like natural dirt under their feet when they crossed it.

They found two giant, dancing tulips, a blue one and dark-pink one called Stubborn Twins, guarding a door. Aisa cautioned her friends not to go near them. A painting called Hard-to-Wake Man showed a man sleeping under a blanket at daytime. A Place Out of Reach depicted a white object with black hearts under it. Light Within the Canvas was a candle—except without the flame. Mary and Ib entered a door on their right—there was a living sculpture of a newspaper delivery boy rapidly pedaling his bike. He was giant, but he didn’t appear to go anywhere as he was suspended on a treadmill. “I wonder if Mocha could ride a bike that big!” Mary grinned.

“You mean the doll girl?” Ib asked.

“Oh, right… You don’t know, yet.” Mary winked.

The giant delivery boy was titled ??? Young Man (they couldn’t read the word ‘Dogged’). In the corner behind him was a glass case containing unique, colorful bugs; it was labeled Spirits of Nature. The bugs were made of a certain element: a water spider, lightning beetle, a gas fly… the ‘Fire Butterfly’ was missing. “Mary, did Guertena like to catch bugs?” Ib asked.

“Ohm… I dunno. But I know he liked to paint ’em a lot!” she beamed.

April and the tinies walked by a—“YAAA!” the tinies screamed. There was a painting of a dark-red silhouette with a smeary pink heart, raising a knife. It was titled Stirred Up. Aisa confirmed that it wasn’t planning to attack, so they bypassed it with this in mind. They made the full loop around the hallway, once again finding the giant snake block their path. There were two doors on the wall, so Aisa and Apis entered the left one: it was a completely pitch-black room. “Aisa, can you lead us through?” the latter requested.

“It isn’t? Well, then let’s come back later.” Both girls backed out of the room.

The others focused their gaze on the large, painted clock that hung on the wall, labeled Truant Seconds Hand. The “clock” in question actually had a big hole where it should be. April, Aein, and Mocha walked into the right door, finding crates lain around the narrow paths of this room, another of those Mistake paintings, and the tail of the sleeping snake. One of the corners was protected by box walls on all ends. April set Aeincha onto a gap in this wall, allowing the tiny to peep in. The white ant was in there, viewing a painting of himself. There was a small, her-size tunnel under it and between some bookshelves. “I wonder what’s in there?”

“Can you go see?” April asked.

“No… There’s spikes down there.” Indeed, there was a spike patch below her gap. “Whoever made this fort thought ahead.”
April picked her back up as they explored the passage further. Needles were blasting at them from the ceiling, so April ducked, protected the tinies, and hurried quickly, though she was stabbed by a few of them. At the end of the passage, she stepped on a black rose—and the needles stopped. This hall had a dead end, but there was a painting of sky and clouds titled Beyond Halcyon Skies, and what seemed like an orange butterfly nailed to the wall. Imprisoned Flame, it was labeled. “Poor butterfly.” Aeincha frowned.

“Pick the nails free!” Mocha yelled. April did so and picked them out. The butterfly’s majestic wings literally brimmed like fire as it fluttered away. The girls exchanged wondrous smiles as April chased it. She reached to gently touch the butterfly—“Ow!” it burned her hand, she shook the pain off. Figuring they couldn’t yet touch it, April went to leave the room—the Mistake broke out of its frame, so they exited fast. The girls gasped when the Mistake chased them… but it simply began to wander about the hallway.

“I think it can’t see.” Aisa mentioned.

“We encountered those earlier.” April remembered. “Just stay away from it.”

“Nnn? April-chan, you’re bleeding!” Chimney pointed. Indeed, blood was leaking fast out of the parts where the needles stabbed her.

“There’s a vase over there, use that!” Aeincha pointed at a vase across the sleeping snake. April nodded, quickly going to step over the snake (why hadn’t they thought of that) and put her rose in the vase. The bleeding stopped. April then returned to the others.

“Sigh. ‘Ju find anything in that one room?” Chimney asked.

“There was a butterfly made of fire!” Aeincha smiled. “Super pretty! But we couldn’t catch it.”

“I think I saw a net in that one room.” Apis recalled. “I’ll go check.” She jumped over the sleeping snake and returned to the dead-end hall with the unnamed paintings. Indeed, there was a light-purple canvas with a net. She could reach in and take it. She went into the room April mentioned and found the fiery butterfly. She caught it with the net, which wasn’t affected by the flames at all.

When Ib and Mary told them about the bug case, Apis was going to bring the butterfly there—the butterfly escaped from the net before she could and flew into the candle painting. It seemed the butterfly actually served as the lit candle. Forming an idea, Aisa took the painting off the wall and brought it to the dark room: the candle painting served as their light. She and Chimney explored the room together, having to navigate a maze of boxes. When Chimney was looking elsewhere—CRASH! “YAAAAAAAAAAAH!!”

“What?” Aisa jumped at Chimney’s sudden shout. It appears she had bumped into a cat vase and knocked it on the floor, broken. “Oh… Don’t scare me like that, Chimney.”

There was a painting of grapes, and Aisa knew the translated title as Prelude to Wine. “I don’t get it.” Chimney said.

“They use grapes to make wine.” Aisa said.

“I’ll just use grapes for grapes, since I’m hungry.” Chimney reached to pick one-

“Don’t!” Aisa smacked her hand. “Just… stay with me.” They found a lever on the wall, labeled Alarm for the Clock. Aisa flipped it. Nothing seemed to happen. With a shrug, they explored the maze further, and found a label Malice’s True Form. “I wonder what…” Aisa held her candle up to see the painting: it appeared to be a mutant, bloody human head, sticking partway out of its canvas.
“…Mir-RI-ROO-ROO-roo-roo…!”

The girls shuddered at the terrifying sound the painting made, which also moved. They walked away to examine the rest of the maze. They noticed a bunch of canvases - Plop. “Mir-RI-ROO-ROO-roo-roo…!” …Although it was too dark to see, it sounded like the Malice’s Form painting fell off its canvas... and was wandering around the room. ...They decided to ignore it, hoping it wouldn’t come at them. The canvases around the maze had various colored numbers: a red 7, blue 2, yellow 3, purple 9, and a green 1. They memorized these numbers and headed outside.

“This clock has hands now.” April noted at the Truant Seconds Hand. “But we need a five-digit code.”

“We found some numbers in that room.” Aisa mentioned. “But we don’t know the order.”

The girls split up to explore the area again. When Ib viewed around the room of unnamed paintings, she noticed they each had a certain color and varying heights. She deduced that the order was from shortest to highest: the ball painting was red (7), book painting was blue (2), shark was yellow (3), tea was purple (9)… but there wasn’t a green painting to serve as the next in height. That’s when Apis remembered the anthill painting they took down before; it was green, making the fifth number “1”.

They inputted this code in the giant fancy clock. The hands, which were pointing at a sun design, spun around and pointed at a moon. The hallway’s lights dimmed: it was nighttime. The butterfly flew out of the candle painting and started fluttering around the hall. The kids looked over at the Mistake painting wandering around: glowing red eyes appeared over its scribbled face. “EEEEEEE!” The girls shuddered. “It can see now!” Aeincha panicked.

“Not for long!” Chimney jumped over and threw heavy punches at the Mistake before it knocked out. “Yaaawn…” Hearing a yawning sound, they whipped around to see the giant snake was finally waking up.

“Quick, in here!” Aisa said as they ran into the room where the Mistake originally hung. They saw the snake’s tail flapping about on this side.

“Oi, let’s attack it from here!” Chimney ran to the tail. “CHIMNEY, NO!” her friends screamed, not that it mattered.

Chimney stomped the tail forcefully, and they heard the snake hiss as it turned around to enter this room via the painting. The snake spotted them and threatened to feast—the girls bolted out of the room and slammed the door. Aisa pressed her ear against it. “It’s looking around for us. As long as it doesn’t come out here, we can be safe. I’ll stay here and warn you guys if he comes.”

In the room with the unnamed paintings, the steaming tea had cooled, the nail no longer cast a shadow (since it was night), and the chair had a purple-haired girl in a red dress and red hair ribbon sitting in it. The book was closed, but they remembered its text: Everything changes at night. And it seemed things did. The “Hard-to-Wake Man” became the “Night-Owl Man.” The Stubborn Twins had stopped dancing—but they couldn’t enter their door because it was locked. When Mary checked the giant biker’s room, she discovered snow was covering the floor, and the delivery boy was off his bike, shivering on the floor.

The others noticed the white ant wandering around his anthill. Apis asked it, “Excuse me, do you know where we can find a key to that door?”

“i have a key. it’s in my house.”
“Could we have it?”

“i’m hungry. give me food and you can.”

“Anything in particular?” April asked.

“i like stars. they’re sweet and sugary things from the sky.”

“Candy stars?” Ib asked.

“I knew it!” Mary cheered. “I knew stars were candy!”

“Well… we’ll bring you some, then.” Apis shrugged.

For the moment, the kids didn’t know where to look for candy stars; they couldn’t shake out the ones the Night-Owl Man had in his painting. They couldn’t enter the snake’s room with it slithering around—“AAAH!” Ib jumped and dodged when the Stirred Up painting tried to stab her.

That must’ve been his night change. When April went back to the first room of this place, she and the tinies realized the Concealed Secret had changed into Revealed Secret: the hand was holding a frog by its leg. April took the large frog and went near the snake’s room. Aisa confirmed the creature was still in there. April opened the door quick, threw the frog toward the left, and slammed shut. Aisa confirmed the giant snake was eating.

April entered the room and walked quickly before the snake caught on. She hurried to the end of the hall where Beyond Halecyon Skies hung—instead of clouds, it was stars, and titled Overfilled Night Sky. She was able to shake the frame and let a piece of Stardust fall out. She scooped it in her hand and returned to the white ant, setting the star on the floor. “yay. food. thank you. you can go in my house now.” The tiny creature began to eat the delectable.

The kids exchanged shrugs. “I guess I’ll go in there.” Aeincha offered. April set her on the floor, and Aeincha was able to squeeze herself into the anthill.

She popped out of a hole in the ant’s box fort; safely past the spikes above the gap. She glanced at the white ant painting briefly before crawling into the mini tunnel. Due to the nighttime, it was very hard to see. In the faint light, this appeared to be a maze of tunnels, but it didn’t drag on too long as she felt herself touch a giant key. “Perfect!” Aeincha grabbed it around both arms and started to crawl back. “Mir-RI-ROO-ROO-ROO-ROO-ROO—!” Her tiny heart almost stopped. Aeincha frightfully turned back. A glowing white eye against a blood-red mass was staring at her. It must’ve been the Malice’s True Form that Aisa mentioned. Aeincha crawled faster.

“Mir-RI-ROO-ROO-ROO— Mir-RI-ROO-ROO-ROO—” The creature kept repeating this scary sound. Aeincha kept crawling; she had trouble remembering the route she came, plus carrying the key made crawling difficult. She wouldn’t look back, knowing that monster was probably right behind her. Finally, she saw what she recognized as the entrance, so Aeincha crawled faster to make it out. She dropped the key in the little hole and jumped in afterward.

She reunited with her friends as April grabbed the key and went to open the door. They found a painting titled Queen of High Society, depicting a fancy woman in a blue dress, surrounded by townspeople. The halls on either side of the painting simply made a loop around the central wall, which had numerous vacant sidewalk paintings, except for one paperboy painting. Ib and Mary remembered the shivering giant paperboy in his room.

Since the crew still had their net, they caught the butterfly floating around the hall. They brought the fiery creature to the glass cage and set it inside. Its light shone from the glass, and the paperboy felt warm. He climbed onto his bike and rode vigorously across the treadmill-sidewalk. He threw a newspaper onto the floor, so April picked it up. She brought it to the Queen of High Society and tossed it into the painting. The queen caught it—unseen applause sounded as stairways rose up in either hallway. The kids could walk to the top of this tall room, finding another stairwell that led into this central wall. They journeyed down as the orange interior became cyan. (Play “Dungeon 5” from Ib.)

Act 4: The Abyss

At the bottom of the stairs, they found a purple sculpture of a woman bent up like a rainbow bridge, titled Annulated Woman. There was a message on the wall in cyan paint. As you walk into the abyss, do not forget the works you hold dear.

They entered the main room of this floor; the girls gazed with awe and wonder: the ceiling depicted an illusion of stars. There was a giant sculpture of a skeleton king and a Lady in Red hugging each other, in which both stuck out of a giant frame. Tryst After Death, it was titled. There was a sculpture of a giant, slanted wine glass with an indigo cloud of stars and planets, which was attached to said glass via a pole, making it seem like the night cloud was flowing out of it. Drinking in the Night. On the left, there was a giant yellowish stone called Flexible Stone.

April walked over to pick up a square panel with a strange design. The second she touched it, it poofed, reappearing on a blank canvas on the wall. Considering the amount of space left, April deduced that 12 pieces should go there. “It’s just like those Balls of Paint. I wonder what that picture’s going to make.”

“Guess we should split up and look around.” Aeincha shrugged. So that’s just what they did. Aisa entered a room to the very west side: she nearly became blinded by the walls of red, blue, and yellow abstract colors. The poster read, Cycloptic Smile: Focus your eyes and find where she hides. A true test of her sight abilities. Aisa examined every inch of the abstract walls closely. None of it displayed any specific pattern. She actually spent quite a while searching for… whatever she was searching for. Then: she noticed part of a curved red line move. She observed the area around it, realizing that the abstract designs created a body, somewhat, with a single large eye over the smile. The eye looked at Aisa, and another painting piece fell out of it. Aisa touched and watched the square vanish.

Aisa entered another door in the room. It was completely empty. She walked around and examined the floor tiles, but nothing seemed out of place… then when she leaned on the opposite wall—“Whoooa!” she stumbled through like it was never there. In this next room, there were painting pieces lain everywhere, but every one was holographic to Aisa’s touch. She wondered how she could find the real one… and when she returned through the fake wall, there it was, lain in the center of the floor. Aisa touched the piece as it vanished.

Chimney entered a southeast room. The poster read, Swimming Pool: An experiment in water color. Beware the anemones. The floor was completely covered with blue-painted paper—and Chimney was able to submerge in it like real water. Walls of sea anemones formed a path, so Chimney made sure to maneuver around them. She followed a zigzaggy path—she also didn’t realize that a cloud of splotched paint colors were floating after her from over the surface. Chimney followed a left route that led to a dead end. She resurfaced for air, and luckily discovered the painting piece floating in that spot. She touched it and made it vanish.

Still not noticing the pursuing color splotches, she dove underneath and continued through the anemone path. The floor was sloping downward, so Chimney shifted herself down. On the very lowest point, Chimney touched another painting piece, which vanished. There was also a black rose. Chimney reached to pick it off its perch: the black petals scattered and floated up, and the color splatters poofed into nothing. Chimney resurfaced for breath, then dove back under to swim back to the start. She then noticed a blank white canvas… it was titled Mayhem of Color, but Chimney couldn’t read the German at all. “Ahh, I should’ve brought that dictionary with me. Meh… doesn’t look very interesting.”

When Chimney returned to the main room, the same time as Aisa, both of them noticed the indigo-blue liquid dried onto the floor. It looked like it was flowing from the Drinking in the Night.

April took the tiniest with her into a southwest room, where little black stick figures perked at the sight of them. They zipped away from their sight, hiding around the room. There were black lines scribbled everywhere. The sign on the wall said, Avoid red, chase black. There were red stick men walking around, trying to harm them, but they were small enough for April to step over. They noticed the black stick men blending in with the scribbles on the floor, walls, and ceiling, so April picked them off one at a time and stuffed them in her pockets.

There was a painting of pale flowers called Flowers Without Color. At Mocha’s request, April set the mini giant inside the painting. Mocha walked around the flower vase and caught a stick man. There was a painting of a blue coffin with a white Cross, called Insomnia Coffin. They couldn’t interact with it, at the moment. There was a painting of a boy in a white shirt, but his head and feet were unseen over the frame’s edges… except for the head and feet of the black stick man filling his place. In the space where a nameplate should be, Complete Youth was written. On the other side of the room, April picked up the fallen nameplate that saidIncomplete Youth and went to stick it back on. The stick man jumped out, leaving April to catch him.

There was a table of teapots that one of the sticks were hiding in. There was a row of cat statues, and April pulled the head off a loose one to catch another stick man. There was a glass, neon-colored bird squirming on the floor when a stick man was trying to ride it, so April pulled it off while Aeincha comforted the bird. There was a black and white painting titled Texture Maze, where April saw a stick man make a subtle movement, exposing himself. After the last few sticks were found among the scribbles, April shoved them all into a Croquis Book in the room’s corner. She heard something hit the floor on the other side of the room, discovering that a painting piece fell out of the Insomnia Coffin.

“Look, April!” Aeincha called. The Lilliputian was happily riding the glass neon bird. “He’s friendly, now. Isn’t he cute?”

April giggled. “He is, isn’t he? …Now that I think about it, where’s Gonbe?”

“That’s a good question.” Mocha realized. “He should’ve been with Aisa, but… she doesn’t even have her bag.”

“Well, let’s go ask her.” Aeincha rode her bird outside the room while April carried Mocha.

After finding Aisa in the central room, April asked her, “Aisa, weren’t you carrying Gonbe in your bag?”

“I set the bag beside the basement door before we came to look for you guys. It wasn’t there when we came back…”

“How COULD YOU LEAVE MY PRECIOUS KITTY ALONE?” Chimney screamed.

“I didn’t know this would happen! Besides, maybe it’s good that Gonbe didn’t get mixed up in this. We’ll meet him as soon as we’re out of here.”
“Tweet tweet.” The bird said.

“What’s that, Birdie?” Aeincha asked. “Do you want something?”

“He said he wants to go home.” Apis said. “…HEY, I understood him! Even though he’s not a real bird…”

“I keep getting more confused.” Aisa said.

“This is making my brain hurt. Maybe he’ll show me again.” Aeincha walked out of the room and came back. The bird awaited her and showed… a different path. Just great.

So after about 10 tries, Aeincha finally followed the correct path. The glass bird jumped into a painting at the end of the hallway. He was with his mate in a bird nest. They dropped a painting piece for Aeincha to collect. “Hmhmhm! I’m glad you’re happy!” she told the bird.

Ib and Mary had gone up a very long stairwell, their young legs tired after doing so. They passed a narrow hallway and gaped at the terrific sculpture: it was a planetarium of celestial bodies that neither of them knew what planets they were. It was titled Birth of the Copernicus Revolution. “Wooooow! It’s outer space!” Mary beamed. “Did Dad- I mean, Guertena go to outer space, too?”

“I don’t know… but Mary, look!” Ib pointed at part of the device. “There’s a piece!”

“But how do we get up there?” Mary frowned. The girls searched around the room for a possible switch to turn it on. Ib found a cyan key beside a Mistake painting. The minute she picked it up, the painting came to life, so she and Mary hurried out of the room. They returned down the stairs and opened a locked door at the bottom. There was a glass jewel box labeled Jewel Box of Temptation. Mary’s eyes sparkled at all the lovely gems it contained. She was about to reach and try to open it…

“Want me treasure?” the box asked. The girls flinched. Ib and Mary exchanged curious and worried glances. “Solve me riddle, then we talk. Mess up, me bite. Which of me treasures weren’t there?” He displayed sharp teeth.

The girls gulped frightfully. They studied his treasures of various colors and textures, however they didn’t understand the riddle. Which treasures weren’t there? …They ran all the way back up to—the Mistake painting came tumbling down the stairs, so they avoided him first. When said painting started to wander the main room, the girls headed up to look at the planetarium. Indeed, the planets matched the colors and designs of the jewels. They rushed downstairs and observed the jewels again. After a few more checks (boy, their legs were tired), they pointed out the orange sun jewel and emerald jewel. “…You smart. Okay. Me treasure yours.” The jewel box munch-munch-munched before spitting out a painting piece. It vanished on their touch. “Me so bored… play game with me sometime.”

Ib and Mary went back up to the planetarium, but it still wasn’t moving. It was then Mary discovered the switch inside the Mistake’s canvas, now visible with the painting absent. She flipped the switch, and the spectacular spherical device began moving. When the painting piece rotated at its lowest point, Ib grabbed it. They returned downstairs to see the floor grew more covered with Drinking in the Night’s substance.

In the northwest corner of the main room, there was a round canvas beside a door. A single pink flower was drawn against white space in this Beauty of Blanc. “Hm… an experiment in white space, I’m guessing?” April said.

“Feels kind of lazy.” Mocha said. “But that glass looks breakable. Hold me closer.” April did so, and Mocha used her strength to punch the glass open and grab the flower.

“What can we use it for?”

Mocha looked around for an answer, then her eyes directed up the giant skeleton in the “Tryst After Death” sculpture. “Let me climb up that skeleton!” April carried the mini giant to the skeleton so she could climb up its red king’s robe. Mocha clutched the flower tight in her teeth, using every ounce of strength to climb ceaselessly. I sure miss being giant. Finally, she slipped the flower in the skeleton’s teeth. A painting piece came out that April grabbed.

“Sigh, I need to rest now.” Mocha panted after climbing down.

“You can rest here.” April placed Mocha on the Flexible Stone, which was actually softer than it looked. “Hmm… I wouldn’t mind resting someplace, too.” She thought aloud as she entered the northwest room.

In this room, Apis was skimming the books of a library. “Did you find anything in here?” April asked Apis, who turned to her.

“Not yet, but I’m trying.”

“I’m going to take a short nap.” April said as she sat against a wall beside a blue curtain. “My feet hurt. Wake me up if something happens.”

Apis found a book titled Nobodies, which had a bookmarked page. If a real person trades realities with someone Imaginary, an empty shell will be all that exists of that person. These “Nobodies” are one without true feelings. They have forgotten everything that they once loved. However, that does not mean that what was forgotten is no longer there.

“I wonder if that means… Garry?” Apis thought aloud. She found some old newspaper clippings that said, Eccentric Artists Ahead of Their Time: Who Was Weiss Guertena? “Huh?” Apis gasped when the room’s lights started flickering green, pink, and blue. Her heart racing, she ran up to April and shook her. “April, wake up! April!” The 13-year-old was fast asleep. Apis jumped back with a start when the blue curtain fell off the wall, revealing a painting of a guy with an axe.

Apis observed the painting closely. There was a German word in the lower-right that she didn’t know. There was also a 3-minute counter above the painting… and its sights were set on April.
Rather than try to wake April up again, Apis hurriedly checked the books. A book that was sticking out was titled Entering the Secret Room. She immediately pulled it open. First, look under the stool. She ran to the stool near the door, finding a note stuck to its bottom. Look in the Cubism book. Apis remembered seeing that in the left bookshelves, so she opened it. On the painting’s axe.
Gulping, Apis went to look at the man’s axe. Canvas, it had written. Apis checked the blank canvas in the room’s corner—it had something written now. Close your eyes and count to 3.
Apis knew this would be trouble. She sighed and mentally counted, seeing only darkness in her eyelids. One... two... three...

A cord dangled from the ceiling, surprising her. Apis quickly pulled it—she poofed to a new room in the blink of an eye. There was a painting that was constantly scrolling leftward. It depicted a swamp setting, including frogs, fireflies, crows, fish... it was titled Four XXX and XXX Lights, in which the X’s were green and yellow respectively. The only green things in the painting were frogs, so Apis typed that code in the panel under the green ball. The “lights” must have been the fireflies, so Apis counted seven different ones before the painting looped. She inputted ‘7’, and she got a painting piece.

But how to exit this room? There were four switches in the corner walls. Tempting fate, Apis pushed a random one... and she was back in the library. “Apis!” April exclaimed, finally awake. The painting’s counter had stopped. “Where did you come from?”

“A... secret room?” Apis wasn’t sure of herself.

“Really? Must’ve been really secret....” She looked at the axeman painting and went to read the word in the corner. ‘Peep.’ Hmm...” The two left the room to meet the others. “I wonder how—AAAAAAH!” They fell into a dark abyss the minute they walked out the door. “OW!” They landed on an asteroid of some kind. They found that they were surrounded by endless space, with stars and planets.

“Apriiiiiil!” Mary called from the distance. The team members had landed on individual asteroids.

“What happened in here?!” April yelled.

“The Drinking Night thing filled the whole room!” Ib called. “How do we get up?!”

A stairway of stars floated up to a central platform from each of their asteroids. “I guess this is it.” The girls all hurried up their stars and reunited in the center, where the “Tryst After Death” also stood. “Wait, where’s Mocha?!”

“She’s still on that rock!” Aeincha pointed to the Flexible Stone on a lower platform. It seemed the center of that stone had sunk into a hole, and Mocha was in there.

“I’ll save you, Mochan!” Chimney unhesitantly jumped down and smashed on the soft stone. “WHOOOA!” Immediately, the stone puffed and propelled her and Mocha back up with the others. The final painting piece came up with them, so April touched it.

“That was the last one!” Aisa pointed excitedly. “Look!”

A stairway led up to the painting on the center of the wall. The twelve pieces formed the left side of a white-coated figure holding a paintbrush with green paint. The girls jogged up, and April read the nameplate. “Guertena’?”

“Really?” Apis gaped. “THAT’S Guertena?”

“But I heard he didn’t make self-portraits.” April said. “When did he make this?”

“Father...” Mary spoke lowly.

The room shook, and a staircase led directly up into the painting itself. Their undying curiosity only grew. They stepped up into the painting.
A wide, black stairwell led up into a large, quiet room of the same dark color. It brought them to a diamond bed that April and Ib recognized. “This is where I found Ib…” April said. On the other side of the fence, they could read the nameplate: Final Stage.

The room trembled just then. The black bed moved to the right, unveiling another staircase. Blue shoeprints were facing it. The girls exchanged wondrous expressions and marched down. The passage was very dark, but it was short before they reached a door. April turned the knob and entered first. This room had canvases, stools, mannequin statues, and slanted paintings hanging around the walls. “Hehehehehehe…” They turned left. Garry was giggling giddily, scratching a rabbit’s tummy with his finger. “Who’s a happy kitty, who’s a happy kittyyyyy…”

“Gyyyyyyyyoooooom…” Gonbe felt like he was in Heaven.

“GONBE-CHAN!” Chimney dashed over and punched the man away, grabbing her rabbit. “WHO SAID YOU COULD TOUCH MY PRECIOUS NEKO?!?”

“Is that Japanese for ‘bunny’?” Mary asked.

“No, Mary, she…” April was too lost in thought to explain to her. “Aisa, look! Your bag!” She pointed at a satchel a few feet away. A cyan rose was sticking out of it, likely Gonbe’s.

“Ahh… So nice to have guests in my humble home.”

They whipped their attention to the center. They were facing the back of a man with lavender hair (lighter and smoother than Garry’s), and a white coat, painting a canvas with his left hand. “Nnn? Who are you?” Chimney asked quizzically.

“It… can’t be…” April stared in awe and wonder. The painting they had just entered…

“April… Mary… It’s me.” The man turned around on his stool. He had narrowed golden eyes on his sharp face. “It’s…”

“Father…” Mary’s blue eyes welled with tears.

“Mary…” He held his arms open. “Hello, Dear.”

She immediately ran up and grabbed her father in a hug. Her tears soaked his leather white coat. He softly patted her back with his left hand. The W7 members found it both heartwarming and amazing… The artist they had never heard of, the one who made everything here… was in the flesh. And he looked so young…

Mary pulled her face away and looked up at him with a smile. “Father… I thought you were gone. And… I wondered… where you were… I thought you forgot about me…”

“Mary… I never forgot about you. Those lasts years of my life were dedicated to you… and your creation. I wanted nothing more… than to set you free… Allow you to live and breathe… like a real person… So I did.”

“You did?”

“I was ill, Mary. I was old and feeble. My greatest regret was that I could not watch you live the life that I wanted for you. I feared the life I wanted for you could not come into place. Just after I had finished painting you… I had a heart-attack. The doctors were able to heal me, but I knew I was not long. I told them that I wanted to live my last days inside my treasured gallery, where they had already framed and placed your portrait. I entered my Fabricated World and plucked the petals off of my own rose. I sacrificed my reality... for you, Mary.

“Do you mean... I could’ve left whenever I wanted...” The idea was unbelievably shocking to Mary.

“Mary...” Ib spoke softly, thinking back on all the drama Mary had been through, and what she put them through. To think that none of it mattered... Mary must’ve felt so guilty...

“I’m sorry, Mary.” Guertena bowed, still smiling. “I had assumed the other creations would have told you. I guess they could not bear to let their Mary go.”

“So when Mary killed Garry... that meant two people were sacrificed.” April looked at her hand. “I stole Garry’s reality... and Mary took-”

“Wait a second!” Aisa spoke up. “April was thrown outside the painting first, so SHE took Guertena’s reality, and Mary took Garry’s!”

“That doesn’t make sense, either.” Apis said, “because how come Ib’s life was replaced by Mary —in fact, why wasn’t Guertena forgotten?!?”

The artist in question chuckled. “I have created a very complex world, haven’t I? My children, I am a Worldbuilder. While average people can only create a single Imaginary Friend, those with once-in-a-million talent and vision can create an entire fictional realm. Such a realm is bound by the rules the artist creates. Anyone who is trapped here is forgotten by the outside, except myself. This way... I could know immortality. Imaginary or deceased, Weiss Guertena would live forever.”

“But, Father... wouldn’t that mean I would’ve been forgotten, too?” Mary asked with hurt in her voice.

“I know, Mary... An artist always has his flaws. But you escaped. You and April knew freedom. It was only six years ago when this Nobody of mine materialized. The creations lay my body to sleep on my deathbed, awaiting the day it would arise as one of their own. Hm, how unfortunate that Miss Ib chose to sleep on it, just after I arose from slumber.”

Ib clenched her fists and bit her lip. The memories of her pain on that dark bed haunted her.

“I have enjoyed Garry’s company very much. He’s very delightful. And what a riveting bunch you girls have been, ever since arriving here. What marvelous paintings you will make.”

“Excuse me?” Aeincha perked up.

“Father, what are you saying?” Mary asked.

“True, I originally wanted Mary to have freedom... but as I sit here, continuing my art, for hours without end... I have never known greater solace. Surrounded by all things that I love, forever. My own personal Spirit World, with nothing to concern me. Deeply have I missed Mary’s company. But that no longer matters... because I knew she would return to me, with more new subjects like Master Garry and Miss Ib.”

“You mean you’re planning to trap us here?!” Mocha shouted.

‘Trap’? My dears, you’ll feel like home here. Look at yourselves, you’re walking pieces of art already! A large-mouthed human, two talking dolls, a life-size animated doll, a winged human, and... an oddly-dressed priestess…” The girls each narrowed their eyes at their remark. “Visitors will be lining up all over to see you.”

“If you want, you can use the nicknames I gave ‘em all.” Chimney noted.

“But I thought we couldn’t become paintings unless other paintings took our place.” Aisa stated.

“Precisely. Which is why these ladies are lining up to seize the chance.”

The girls realized they were surrounded by Canvas Ladies and headless statues. Their venomous looks were the same. “They will enter the real world and bring more visitors to my gallery. Children will wander in my world, and the ones that are distinguishably ‘special’ in appearance will be trapped here. Reality will become art, and my art will become reality! The legend of Guertena will be one that never vanishes!”

“But… Father…” Mary’s eyes trembled. “Those people don’t belong here… they belong in the real world. They have friends… and family… and they…” She turned around. Ib was staring at her with the same look in her red eyes. “…They don’t deserve to live here… This place is… dark and… scary… And we shouldn’t let what happened to Garry happen to anyone else.”

“Is that so… Mary?” Guertena smirked. “You had no qualms about that before… Will you really sacrifice what you have in that world… to return here?”

“…” Mary clutched her heart. Her real heart, that contained a real soul. A soul that was not fabricated. “Yes… I would. Garry… deserves to be free.”

“Mary…” Ib spoke.

“Hm… I see.” The artist’s eyes narrowed. “Then I must become rash.” The room suddenly shook as he stood. “I must make you realize the power of art… to its full potential.” (Play “The Encounter” from Kingdom Hearts II!)

They felt the floor sink downwards and the walls and ceiling move away. They gazed up in the crayon-drawn, starry sky, with the sun, the moon, all the crayon designs from Pandora’s Box. Weiss Guertena’s self-portrait hung in the sky, just above the artist’s floating platform. The artist happily drew on a canvas, and more headless statues, Canvas Ladies, and mannequin heads appeared. A swarm of zombie dolls came down, and a familiar blank canvas floated above them: the Red Eyes climbed out as the giant, hideous doll snarled at its prey.

April clutched her paintbrush and palette, showing no fear. “You’re a century out of date, Guertena. You’re dealing with a new generation of artists. Right, Mary?”

Mary narrowed her eyes, grabbing her crayons. “Yeah…”

Boss fight: Weiss Guertena

When Guertena drew a black line on his canvas, a black line stretched across the battlefield, and claws reached out of them as they attempted to grab the girls. They jumped back as Chimney used her rapid kicking to fight them, but the claws clasped her legs and tried to scratch. April saw a canvas nearby, so she dipped her brush in pink paint and swiped a line across the paper, making a pink paint strip cut through part of the claws. “Hey, it works!”

“Good!” Chimney escaped and began to punch away the Canvas Ladies. “Draw fire over all these freaks and burn them!"

“It won’t work if he’s doing it, too. I’ll go up there to stop him, you guys focus on these monsters. Mary, can you draw on these, too?”

“Uh-huh!” Mary danced over to a canvas and swiped yellow crayons across, making yellow strips appear over the field to shock the statues and Canvas Ladies that were on them. April rushed across the field, nimbly evading the red stick figures and slashing red paint on the floor for them to attack. “Hhehehehehehehehe!” She found Garry in her path, raising a palette knife. “Don’t go over there, stay here! I wanna play with you… AAAAAH!” Ib jumped from the side and grabbed her arms and legs around him.

“Go on, April! I’ll hold back Garry!”

April nodded and ran around them. Still cackling, Garry grabbed and threw Ib on the floor. “Garry, snap out of it! Don’t you remember anything?”

“HHEEHEEHEEHEE!” Garry stabbed down, but Ib rolled out of the way and got to her feet.

“Garry, I know you’re in there somewhere! I know you’re not REALLY trying to hurt me!”

“Garry, who’s Garry?, you’re Garry, I’M Garry!” he cheered perkily. “Would you like some dairy?” :3 He held a glass of milk up.

“Uh… sure?”

Garry was smiling kindly—then he made that angry anime face where his teeth turn sharp. “WELL THAT’S GOOD, ‘CAUSE MY DAIRY WOULD LIKE SOME O’ YOU!” He smashed the milk on the floor, letting a puddle of white spread out. Ib fell in the white and grabbed hold of the ledge that still remained. Garry was grinning devilishly as he began to stomp and grind his shoes on Ib’s fingers.

Chimney kicked away Canvas Ladies while Mocha was punching the zombie dolls, thankful to be the right size to beat them. “Hey, Gonbe, is all our stuff still in that bag?” Aisa asked.

“Gyooom-gyom!” He saluted.

“Great! We can give Mocha a red apple and make her giant again!”

“Sounds like a plan,” Mocha panted, punching the dolls one at a time, “because I’m tired of Tiny Style!”

“At least you’re nicer to the ears.” Aeincha stared at her.

Apis ran to try and grab the satchel- “HAH!” A Canvas Lady popped up from the abyss and took it. She was taller than the others, with a pink dress, pretty blue eyes, and orange hair. “It’s my Big Big Sis!” Mary gasped. “Elizabeth!”

“WHOA!” Apis dodged when Elizabeth slashed a lizard tongue at her. “Mary, you have a weird family!” She kept dodging, and Elizabeth held the satchel beyond her reach.

April used the nearby canvases to draw red spots so that Guertena was forced to connect his black lines to them. April stopped at a central canvas close to Guertena’s platform. She combined black paint and white paint to make gray, drawing a spring on the canvas. “Here goes!” April jumped—a spring propelled her high into the sky, and she landed behind Guertena on his platform.
“April… so nice of you to join me.” He smiled at her. “Isn’t art simply grand? Why don’t you join me here? You can draw with me forever.”

“The atmosphere isn’t right for me. Afraid I’ll have to decline.”

“But now that you know the truth behind your existence, do you plan to leave Mary here? Because it’s plainly obvious I don’t intend to go.”

“I do plan to leave with my friends… but I won’t abandon Mary. We WILL find a way for her to leave, too! For now, we can only make sure she doesn’t have to deal with you!” She ran to throw a punch, but Guertena whipped his paintbrush in front of her and blocked with a blue paint shield.

“I am the artist here. What I create becomes reality in this world. No matter if I am real or Imaginary.” He drew a downpour of small rocks, and April dodged when said downpour appeared over her.

“My art still kicks more butt than yours.” April dipped blue paint on her right fist, using her enhanced strength to punch Guertena’s shield. She was able to break through, grab the artist by the neck collar, and hurl him overhead to slam him on the floor. Guertena jumped away, swiftly painted a punching glove into being, and sent her flying off the platform and over the chasm.

“AAAAHH!”

“APRIL!” Mary danced over to a canvas and swiped some diagonal blue crayon, making an ice slide appear to bring April back to the battlefield. “Thanks, Mary! …Oh no, Ib!”

“AAAAH!” Ib poured all her willpower into holding the ledge, despite the weight of Garry’s shoes on her fingers.

“When do the bones break, tell me that, I wanna hear them crack, hehehehehe!” Garry giggled.

“IB!” Mary slashed her gray crayons and knocked Garry away with their force. She and April helped Ib back up onto the ground.

“That just hurt, it was from a squirt!” Garry sang. “Squirt just hurt! Hurt and squirt.”

Ib ran up to him again. “Come on, Garry, come to your senses! Stop acting stupid! What’s wrong with you?”

“I…I’m sorry.” Garry spoke and looked guiltily. “…No’mnot! HEEHHEEHEEHEEEE! TAKE THIS!” He chucked a mannequin head that grabbed Ib’s hair in its teeth. Mary came to punch it off, but Garry threw more heads that bit them all around.

“NNNYY!” Chimney flew over and powerfully punched and kicked the heads, letting them all shatter. “I’m used to smashing these things. Give me all ya got!”

Garry snapped his fingers, and a swarm of mannequins floated from under the edge. “Oh no.” They were all sent at Chimney, who used her rapid speed to break every single one.

Mocha was still punching zombie dolls with single punches, their red paint flying everywhere. The giant was growing more tired, so Aisa picked her up to kick dolls away herself. “YAAAAAH!” Aeincha was riding Gonbe as the headless statues chased her, and once they were far enough away, Gonbe ran back to jump, kick Aeincha in the air, and the Lilliputian threw her grappling hook into a red one’s head hole. She swung around and kicked off the chest of a green one, flying around the red one’s back and flying up in the air.

She landed in the red statue’s head hole, ducking inside to dodge its hands. “You know, how is it that you have better sight than the Mistake guys?” She ducked another grab. “Doesn’t matter, you’re still clueless, I guess.” The other statues were “glaring” at her, so Aeincha jumped to the yellow one, and when the blue tried to grab, he stumbled and knocked both of them down, then Aeincha jumped off Blue’s head to land on Green. Red whirled its fist, ready to punch, Green gestured ‘No!’ , but Red punched and knocked her out, and Aeincha jumped over to Red.

April was going to make another spring on the middle canvas, but Guertena drew claws under it as they pulled the board into their darkness. Weiss drew more claws at her, but April dodged to another canvas to cancel them with pink paint. She dipped her brush in blue paint and painted a stairway that winded right, creating some stairs that led up to Guertena. The artist created a giant axe to chop the end of the stairs—April thought fast and jumped the gap to land on his platform. She painted blue on her fist again and ran to punch him, but- “Huh?” the man broke into papers.

“Paper Art.” Guertena was perched on a higher platform, folding paper into birds and painting brown feathers and yellow beaks on them. April slashed white paint on them to disable the papers, and using the canvas on this platform, she drew a spring pad. It propelled her skyward, and she landed on Guertena’s platform, stomping the paper dolls with knives that he created. She threw her blue-painted fist at him, but Guertena dodged so she would punch his canvas.

“AAAAH!” Her friends below screamed when a crater exploded in the ground.

Before April could recompose, Guertena painted a black hole under her feet. “WHOA!” She fell in and grabbed the edges.

“Don’t bother.” Guertena created a weight that smashed on April’s face, forcing her down the hole and on the lower battlefield.

“APRIL!” (“Gyom-gyom!”) Her friends screamed.

“OOOOOW… agh!” Blood was drastically spilling out of April’s nose and other cuts on her face. “It hurts… OW… aaah!…” The petals of her rose were quickly falling.

“April has hemophilia!” Mary yelled. “We gotta do something!”

“Hemo-whaty-what? What’s that mean?” Chimney asked.

“It means that she bleeds easy.” Apis answered. “We gotta find a vase somewhere!”

Chimney saw a gray vase not far from her position. “I’ll save her!” Chimney kicked the mannequin heads and dodged over to April to grab her pink rose. She stylishly jumped over to the vase to put it in. The petals reappeared and April’s bleeding stopped.

“Mmm? AAH!” The Red Eyes was standing over Chimney, hissing at her with glowing eyes and mouth of the same color.

Apis dodged Elizabeth’s right hand while she held the satchel up with her left. “Apis!” She looked over, gasping when a red headless statue charged over to the large Canvas Lady like a football player. However, the red statue had Aeincha’s tiny head on its top, the Lilliputian controlling it. The statue leaped and grabbed the large lady’s face, Elizabeth shaking and flailing her arms. Apis seized the chance to jump and grab the satchel. She dug around in it and grabbed a red apple.
“MOCHA, CATCH!” She threw it.

Aisa caught the apple, put Mocha on the floor, and gave her the fruit. The black-haired girl happily munched it: she grew slightly bigger, allowing her to take more bites, and before long she was her powerful giant size. The Red Eyes was trying to drain the soul out of Chimney, but the demonic doll was no threat from the giant’s perspective. “Hey, Ugly!” Red Eyes turned with a hiss, gasping in surprise. Mocha balled her right fist and turned it Armament. “Pick on someone your own size!” She swung her fist, and blood flew out of Red Eyes’ nostrils as the giant zombie fell into the abyss.

“AAAAH!” Elizabeth grabbed Mocha from behind and began to choke the giant. “Let me go! Stop it! AAAAH!”

“Hang on, Mocha!” Apis hurried over and jumped to grab Elizabeth’s hair. The monstrous lady shook her head and swung her long hair, but the Christian kept a firm grip.

“Keep that up, Apis!” Aisa ran over and pulled a Dial out of her satchel. “She’s about to get a bad hair day!” She aimed the conch-shell and blasted fire from it in the same fashion as a S.P.I.C.E.R.. When Apis swung back to her, the fire burned off Elizabeth’s hair as Apis landed safely on the field. “UUUUAABBBBBBBBBBBBBBB!” Elizabeth released Mocha and crawled around helplessly, making an earsplitting screech. When she began rolling on the floor, Aisa hurried up, aimed an Impact Dial, and BLASTED the canvas in the face. Elizabeth’s fabricated face was dented like a crater, and the Canvas Lady fell dead.

“HAHA!” Apis and Aisa high-fived.

Guertena chuckled softly. “Water Color.” He dipped his brush in water and painted from the bottom of his canvas. The girls screamed when the battlefield suddenly flooded, in which the girls except for Chimney were unable to swim. Said girl quickly swam up to Guertena’s platform to do a Torpedo Spin, but Guertena created a shield to protect himself from her rage. He then painted two sharks to chase the part-mermaid.

Still holding her breath, April grabbed a paintbrush and tried to draw on a floating canvas, but her paint was floating everywhere like mist. “It is forbidden to damage the displays in my gallery.” Guertena stated. “And I do not appreciate my art being tarnished. You ladies are going to learn the hard way, the power of the one and only Guertena.”

A thought sparked in April’s head. Wait! If I stole Guertena’s reality... then that means I took his place in the real world. Er, doesn’t it? I mean, I ended up being Galdino’s daughter, but...but I wonder if I can... She grabbed her brush and whirled it in a circle over her, creating an air bubble. “I CAN!”

“What?!” Guertena gasped. April mixed gray paint together and drew a drain on the floor. The water flowed away, allowing her friends to breathe.

April raised her brush proudly. “I am the reincarnation of Weiss Guertena!” She painted jetpacks on her back and joyfully flew skyward to land on the artist’s platform. Guertena drew a black archway on his canvas, making a dark portal appear overhead as claws reached out to grab April. April painted firecrackers and lit them with painted fire, making them fly and explore on the hands. Guertena swung a painted wrecking ball from his hand, hitting April in the chest and knocking her back over the edge. Mocha caught her friend before she hit the ground, but they looked and realized painted spikes were appearing around them. Mocha winced from the pain in her feet, but April painted wings on herself to fly. She swooped across the field to paint a midair extra floor for all of them to jump on.
“HEEEEEE!” Garry jumped onto this extra floor, as did Ib and Mary. The latter drew orange crayon on Garry’s coat, but the man embraced the heat and began to swing his flaming coat around the air. Ib dodged when Garry swung it at her, going behind the man to kick his legs and knock him down. Mary painted ice-blue crayon on his T-shirt, so to soothe the coldness, Garry put his flaming coat back on. He spun like a top with his knife outstretched, attempting to slice the girls. Mary raised her own knife in defense, but it was flung out of her hand, falling to the abyss. Garry stopped, grinning hysterically before punching Mary to the floor.

He raised his knife to stab the girl, but Ib jumped and grabbed his arm from behind. “Garry, please stop! Please! I’m trying to help you! I want you to come home with me!”

“HA HAAAAA!” Garry whirled and threw her off. “Garry’s gone, Garry’s GOOOOONE!” He stabbed down, but Ib dodged back and stood up.

“No he’s not! I know he’s still in there! You tried to protect me, Garry, you wouldn’t let me get hurt.”

“Nope!” He spoke perkily. “No Garry! Never ever! Garry died, you cried, no one cares if you survive! Speaking of which, I prefer if you DON’T!”

Ib gritted her teeth in anger. She looked at the edge of the starry abyss, then faced him seriously, “Yes you do. You DO care if I survive. And I’ll prove it!”

“IB, NO!” Mary cried when the brown-haired Goldenweek girl ran and jumped into the abyss.

“IB!” Garry cried frowning—wait a minute. Garry’s head was burning with thoughts… That can’t be right, Garry hadn’t thought in six years. As a matter of fact, he wasn’t Garry! Who was Garry? There was no Garry. No… he… Garry… Ib… Mary… Garry… Mary… Ib… Garry… Garry… … Yes… he remembered… he was Garry Lincoln… (Pause song.)

His father was an African-French man named Avery, and his mom was a German woman named Gabriele. They had him when they were 18 years old. His 11-year-old aunt, Abby got him to join the Kids Next Door when he was six. Numbuh 362 approved his admission, but after her resignation, he served under Numbuh 363. On his 13th birthday, he became a TND spy. When Abby had her first son, Hoagie III, Garry heard that he joined the Kids Next Door. Then when Garry was on a break from spying, he visited the Guertena Gallery in his hometown. He got trapped in the cursed gallery, and that’s where he met…

“IIIIIIB!” Garry jumped over the edge, trying to force himself to fall faster and catch the child. Seeing him falling after her, like the Garry she knew and loved, tears flew out of Ib’s eyes, reaching up for him.

“Mind if I lend a hand?” April swooped down with her painted wings and grabbed Ib, shooting straight up and grabbing Garry on the way. She set both of them on the floor, where Mary ran up to them.

“Ib…” Garry got up on his knees and faced down at the red-eyed girl.

“Ib…” Garry was still tearing.

“Ib… What on Earth were you doing? And… where am I…” He looked around.

“GARRYYYY!” She grabbed him in the tightest hug she ever gave somebody.

“M-My… Ib… Did something happen? What have I… been doing all this time…”
Ib was crying, pressing her face to his shirt. “You... weren’t doing anything, Garry! You were just... having a nightmare...”

“...Ib...” Garry smiled and softly touched Ib’s back. What had this child been through during his absence... He was so glad to see her again.

“...Garry, you’re hurt!” She noticed the cut across his shirt that Mary cut earlier.

“Oh... hehe, it doesn’t feel painful.” Garry blushed. “I’m not even... bleeding... Huh?”

Ib smiled and held her lace handkerchief up. “Use this.”

“Ib, I told you, I’m not-...” He couldn’t resist a favor with that adorable smile. “But... I’ll hold onto it.” Garry took the handkerchief.

April smiled at their beautiful moment, floating with her wings. “AAAH!” (Resume song.) A bladed whip lashed down and sliced her wings.

“So what if you snapped him back to normal!” Guertena proclaimed, flying with dark demonic wings. “You’ll become just as mad as he did when I’m through!” He flew at them like a rocket, but April painted a hole in their new ground and caused him to smash headfirst against the spikes below. She painted blue paint over her arms, increasing her strength tenfold as she threw furious punches at him. She grabbed his wings and yanked them off, but Guertena was still on his feet, spinning around and painting dark circles on the floor. Whirlpools spawned in those areas to suck them all inside.

April mixed orange paint on her soles to make rocket shoes, flying up and drawing a giant vacuum to suck all her friends into safety. She flew up, set the vacuum on the high platform, then painted a crossbow to shoot at Guertena. The artist drew two mirrors to bounce her arrows back and knock the bow out of her hand, then he leaped, grabbed April’s leg, and spun midair to throw her to the field. He painted himself a slide to slide back onto the field and shove April toward the edge. She regained her balance and slashed red paint around the floor to distract him. She ran away to catch her breath, exhausted from the blue paint she used.

“Ib, Mary, just what is going on here, anyway?” Garry asked as they watched the fight transpire.

“It turns out, Guertena made himself a painting, too.” Aisa explained. “And after Mary killed you, she and her doll, April took both of your places... Er, technically Mary took Ib’s place—I really don’t understand how this works...”

“Wait... so that girl is the doll that Mary had?”

“She is...” Mary replied. “I think that’s why she bleeds easily, ‘cause I stuffed my dolls with red paint that falls out a lot.”

“That explains why April don’t wanna fight me.” Chimney realized.

“But don’t you think we should help her?” Mocha asked.

“Nah. They’re both artists. It’s fate or something.”

Guertena began to paint bombs around the field, blowing off individual parts. April painted wings on her back again to fly, but Guertena did the same with his black painted wings. He slashed gray paint droplets from his brush, which morphed into axes that April frightfully dodged. Guertena rammed her with a headbutt, but April recomposed and painted blue on her legs and wings. She flew faster, zipping above Guertena to land a powerful kick, and the artist hurled painted spears that slashed the top edges of her wings. April winced and panted as she looked up... Guertena’s painting was floating in the sky.

“Just what are you thinking about?” Guertena asked, flying at her again, but April dodged and flew to her friends.

“Mary, did you bring the lighter?!”

“Oh!” She shuffled around her pocket and got it out. “Here!” She tossed it to April.

“What are you doing?!” Guertena panicked.

April faced him with a cold stare, flicking the candle on. “Your art’s about to light up the night sky.”

“NOOOOOO!”

April soared to the painting with increasing speed, set on nothing more than to burn it where it floats. With pure gusto, she swung the lighter at the painting... it phased through. “Huh?!”

“HA HA HA HA HAAAAAA!” Guertena laughed. “Did you forget?! I created this world! It runs by my rules! And according to my rules, MY PAINTING can’t be burned!”

“That’s unfair!” Chimney shouted. (“Gyom-gyom!”)

“But I can’t say the same for your friends!” Guertena created orange paint meteors that were falling to the girls’ platform.

April sparked with an idea. “But I know a painting that can be...” She soared down, shoving Guertena away, and created a barrier to block all the meteors. “Everybody, in the vacuum!” She used the giant paint vacuum to suck them all in again. With that, she carried them all up and flew into Guertena’s painting.

“Where are you going now?!?” Guertena chased her.

They were back in the Black Area, and April released her friends before they all dashed up the stairs. Guertena chased them all the way up, and seeing him coming, Mary drew blue crayon on the floor to make him slip. Guertena gasped when Garry ran and tackled him all the way back down. With a force of power, Guertena blew him off and rushed up even faster. “RUN, IB!” Garry called.

“Let’s go!” Mary grabbed her friend and ran after the others.

The stairs finally brought them back to the main gallery—or rather, the replica of the main gallery. Guertena chased the kids up to the second floor, past “Death of the Individual” and “Reserved Seat,” before finally catching them beside the Fabricated World mural. “Think you girls are going to escape- HUH?!”

April was holding the lit lighter to the giant mural. “One more step and I’ll destroy this entire world. The legacy of Guertena will be gone forever.”

April smirked, not taking her hand away. “At least no one’ll be sad about us.”
“AAAUGH!” With cheetah-like speed, Guertena dashed at April, tackling her as the lighter was flown away, off.

April grinned deviously. “Caught ya.”

The artist realized her arms were painted blue, and with her enhanced strength, she forced him to the floor and threw punches at his face. Guertena smacked her off. April backed toward the mural, then grabbed the man’s wrists when he lunged at her.

Ib and Mary watched as the canvas around the mural vanished: the portal to the real world was open. The two exchanged serious nods. April looked around Guertena at them, giving a wink. Ib and Mary ran and grabbed his legs, April fell and kicked her foot up at his stomach, and once the man was propelled, the two shoved him inside the mural. Guertena recovered with surprise, but April jumped in the mural and punched him in the face, sending him all the way back into the portal. (End song.)

April climbed down to her friends to catch her breath. “I shouldn’t be using so much blue paint…”

“He’s gonna come back, isn’t he?!” Mocha balled her fists. “Move, we gotta be ready!”

“No…” Mary spoke grimly, staring at the mural. “I think it’s over…”

Real world

Guertena tumbled out of the painting. He got back up on his feet, rubbing his head. “Where... am I...” He hadn’t seen the other side in so long. It was completely foreign to him. And yet, it felt so... familiar. It felt so... marvelous. “Hn hn hn... I’m back.” He spoke softly. “The real world... after so many years. I wonder how things have changed.”

Guertena looked around. Almost all his paintings, sculptures, at display in this gallery. The gallery dedicated to him... the legendary artist. “Imagine when they see... the true Guertena. I’ll bring so many customers... more will fall into the Fabricated World. They’ll be part of my... genius.” He excitedly explored the gallery. But something wasn’t right. “Where is everyone? It can’t be closed now, can it? Hm, no matter.” He chuckled softly. “Outside, there’s sure to be...”

He headed for the front door. For the first time in over a century, fresh air, city streets, sky and clouds. People... He giddily walked over to the front door, grabbed its handles, turned... It wouldn’t open. “What?” He twisted and pushed, but the doors wouldn’t budge. “That’s strange.” He walked over to the twin windows. The moment he tried to view out into darkness, red paint leaked out from the top. “What?”

Writing appeared on the wall. Father, come back. In the distance of the vacant halls, footsteps sounded. Must be his imagination. However, he grew slightly nervous and decided to roam the halls for another way. The lights dimmed so the white halls became a dark-gray. You don’t belong here. “Hello?” He looked every direction as he roamed. The paintings and sculptures hung where they always have. He returned to the room with the Fabricated World mural. Blue paint leaked from it. It’s too late.

Its glass frame kept it sealed, so Guertena searched and searched. The lights were growing darker by the minute, it got harder to see. “Whoever you are, come out!” He stated, whipping out a palette knife.

Your heart is fabricated. You are one of us. Guertena’s heart was racing. Blue paint filled the floor, dropping from who-knows-where. He ran back downstairs, finding the “Abyss of the Deep” smeared. The painting “A Well-Meaning Hell” had turned into “Tones of the Dark Gallery.” He ran into the room where stood the Embodiment of Spirit: the huge red rose was black, the petals dropping. Panting frightfully, the distant footsteps growing louder, he returned to the lobby. A poster of his body hung above the desk. He looked in the pamphlet, it read Bad man, bad man. You know what you are.

He was afraid, the lights were nearly black, he wanted to escape. He rushed to the door, seeing with whatever vision remained, desperately trying to pry it open. No escape. Jiggle jiggle jiggle, that’s all he did to the doorknob, and he bash bash bashed the door. It wouldn’t open, it was glued. Come back to us. He started crying, pouring his emotion to his strength, trying to open the door, it paid no contribution. Stay forever. With your children. The gallery was pitch-black, the footsteps grew closer, faster, fiercer. He sank to his knees, and his wails and the footsteps were the only sound. The only existence. There was no color, there was no light, there was no life. He was alone…alone in eternal darkness, infinity. “Sniff… no… no!… huff, huff… no…” No one would ever hear his pleas or pat his shoulders. He was nothing.

ENDING: The End of a Legend

Fabricated World

Sector W7, Ib, Mary, and Garry stared at the Fabricated World painting. “So is he… in the real world now?” Apis asked.

“No… at least, not for long.” Mary replied. “When my dad made himself a painting, he became bound by the rules of his own world. If nobody from the real world was sacrificed in here, then he couldn’t exist in their world. He was bound to fade away minutes after stepping out.”

“So he’s gone, huh…” Ib said solemnly.

“But… I still can’t believe Father was like that.” Mary said sadly. “I thought he was… so nice… Why was he…”

“I read a book about ‘Nobodies’ back there.” Apis mentioned. “It’s what happens to a person after they lose their reality. They forget what they really loved. …Of course, Guertena loved art, so… who’s to really say that wasn’t how he was like. …Not like Garry.”

Mary looked at the man in question, who had caught up to them. She frowned regretfully, her head hanging down. “Ib, Garry… I’m sorry. All I wanted was to know what it felt like to be real. I wanted to escape into the real world, see the beautiful sky, the sea, make real friends… but I was wrong to.” Tears dripped from her eyes. “Your existence gets replaced entirely when we take your place. All the friends you had forget you, they get replaced with a phony person and phony memories. But it isn’t right. I don’t deserve to steal someone else’s life. Ib and Garry… you’re the real humans. You belong in that world. I hope that, sniff… I hope that you can forgive me!” She sank to her knees and wiped her sleeve over her eyes.

Ib smiled warmly and touched Mary’s shoulder. “It’s alright, Mary… I understand. I felt so miserable the whole time I was here. I got lost, I didn’t have Garry or my parents… Despite everything that’s happened, I’m glad you got the chance to leave. You and April deserved to be free.”

“No…” Mary stood up, “I don’t. April deserves to be free. She has tons of friends who love her. She’s a million times more happy with them than she is with me. Since she already took Dad’s reality, she needs to go back. But Ib… you and Garry were our first friends from the outside. You were the best I ever had. I don’t think I could live with myself, knowing you were still trapped here.
Since Ib still has her rose, she can leave. And Garry…” Mary held up her yellow rose, “you can escape, too. I’ll sacrifice my life so you can become real again. Your friends, family… Everyone that cared about you will remember you again.”

“Mary… you would really do that for me?” Garry asked.

“Of course I would.” Mary forced a grin. “You’re my friend, Garry. All of you are. You deserve to have loads of friends who love you. I don’t deserve it. I’ve always been the bad sister… the crazy one… I never really paid attention to those books about friendship… but now I realize you should always think about their well-being… know what they really need. Ib… Garry… you need to go back. Take back the lives that…that’s yours.”

“I won’t do that, Mary.” Ib stated determinedly. “I’ll stay here with you. I’ll find another way for us to leave together.”

“Hm hm… you were always so nice to me. I wish I could’ve developed a real soul like April did… but I guess we can’t always have everything. Ib… Garry… April…” she turned to the others, “Chimney… Thanks for being friends with someone like me. I’ll always miss you.” As tears fell past the curves of her smile, Mary grabbed the petals of her rose.

“MARY, NO!” Ib tried to stop her, but Mary jumped away and decapitated the rose. Mary gave a final breath and fell. Ib kneeled beside her, tears leaking. Garry and Sector W7 held their tears. Chimney couldn’t believe it. After all her jokes about wanting Mary to die… she was dead before her. And Chimney didn’t want it. As annoying as Mary was… she never deserved a fate like this. A part of her wished they could’ve played with her more.

Ib’s tears soaked the green of Mary’s dress. “Good-bye, Mary… sniff…”

April sniffled and cried, looking at Mary’s body. Mary, the one who literally gave her life. The one who brought April to the real world, where she met all her friends. “Mary… I’ll never forget you.”

After Apis made a prayer to God for Mary’s soul, she turned to face the Fabricated World. “Well… I guess it’s time to go back.”

“Do you need a hand, Ib?” Garry asked the child politely.

Ib smiled. “Okay, Garry.” The 20-year-old lifted her and jumped into the mural, finally free to breathe the real world.

“Well… let’s go, too.” Mocha said, stepping in simply.

“You got it.” Chimney carried Aeincha in, then she helped up Apis, who helped Aisa, who helped Gonbe. “April, come on! Whatchu waiting for??”

April stared at Mary’s fallen body. Her face bore its usual tonelessness. “April, what’re you doing?” Apis yelled.

April reached into Mary’s pocket and took out her crayons and sketchbook. She quickly scribbled Mary’s image onto a page, and labeled Mary’s name in yellow. “Just making a note. Okay, I’m coming.”

She grabbed Chimney’s hand and was helped into the mural. She turned to stare at Mary’s body for the last few seconds. She passed her cousin and sister a smile before the mural warped them.

Real world
April couldn’t remember what she was doing. They had just entered the Guertena Gallery… and Apis thinks there might be a Gibberish Rock in the basement. She looked at her wristwatch. 12:42pm. Not even an hour had passed since they entered. She turned and walked toward the Reserved Seat sculpture. The Yu-Gi-Oh card the boy had dropped earlier was still there. April reached down to pick it up. It was the Dark Magician.

April decided to put it in her pocket—she felt something else. She pulled out a small sketchbook. It had a crayon drawing of a yellow-haired girl with blue eyes and a green dress, labeled MARY. “Mary?…” she spoke confusedly.

April’s wristwatch rang, and Apis spoke. “April, where are you? Aeincha got the door open, so we’re all gonna look inside. Wanna join us?”

“Oh. Okay.” April headed downstairs and found her friends beside a hallway corner. Aeincha and the shrunken Mocha were held in Ib Goldenweek’s hands, April’s cousin whom they came with. The lot of them looked down the dark stairwell. April went down first.

The basement had many paintings and sculptures down below, most of which were likely gathering dust. April’s vision fell on one painting on the wall: it depicted the very same girl April had a drawing of: MARY. She gasped—images of dark hallways, living paintings, mannequin heads, all flashed in her mind. “MARY!” April shouted, about to reach up and touch… She stopped herself. She looked back at her friends, wondering if they remembered. …They were gazing longingly at it as well. “Do you guys… remember?”

“…We do.” Ib said, her expression solemn. The other girls nodded.

April faced the painting again. Mary was depicted with tears, passing the curves of her smile. April softly touched the frame. The image forced her to cry as well. “Mary… I’m sorry.” April wiped her tears away. “We will find a way… We will…” (Play “The First Mask” from Rayman 2!)

However, touching the painting loosened it from its perch—April quickly grabbed it before it fell, then leaned it against the wall. …They looked up at where it was hung: a secret door was there. April turned the nob and climbed inside, her friends following.

They discovered a secret chamber filled with dust. It was relatively small, but tall enough to fit an altar with a short stairway. Atop this altar sat a Gibberish Rock. April stared transfixed at the stone. She walked up slowly and stood before it. The Dark Magician card in her hand glowed before floating into April. The feeling inside her was so mysterious, she wondered if she could capture it in a painting.

April awakened herself as the FIFTH LIGHT! Only 2 more to go!

The garbled writing on the monument glowed. To April’s eyes, it was no longer gibberish. “‘The end of your journey is growing closer with each day that passes. Make sure you are using your time well. No matter what happens, always stay true to your heart, for yourself and for your friends. –Yugi Muto’.”

“You just made that up.” Chimney said. (“Gyom-yom.” Gonbe agreed.)

“Is that what it says?” Ib asked. “I don’t know any of those words.”

“Hm… I guess I’ll have to ask Sheila.” April smiled. “Let’s go back upstairs. Our parents won’t be happy about us sneaking down here.” So the seven kids and rabbit left the basement, reorganizing things to make it seem like they were never there. The spirit of a boy with narrowed purple eyes, and blonde and purple spiky hair, smirked at the group from the Gibberish Rock’s chamber. (End song.)

The teammates went back up to the gallery, closing the basement door. They wandered around in search of Ib’s parents. …They were seen next to the Embodiment of Spirit sculpture, talking to Garry. They looked over as the kids approached them. “Oh, there she is! Ib!” Rosa called.

“Mom? Dad?” Ib spoke curiously. “Who is this man…”

“This man’s name is Garry.” Rosa said. “He seems to have found something… you misplaced.”

Garry blushed. “I seem to have… had this in my possession.” Garry pulled out a lace handkerchief. “It had the word ‘Ib’ on it… so I searched around to see if anybody lost it. Honestly, I have no idea how it turned up in my pocket, but…”

“Normally, Ib is very careful with items. I can’t imagine how this happened, either.” Rosa chuckled. “At least this man was kind enough to return it. …Although, it’s… a little dirty.”

“Forgive me.” Garry blushed further. “I wish I had noticed it sooner. Of course, it can easily be washed.”

“That’s good. Well…” Garry approached the red-eyed girl and gave her the handkerchief. “It was nice to meet you. …Ib.” His exposed right eye winked. Ib gasped softly and smiled. She winked.

“But, my… I certainly am late for a report.” Garry said. “I wonder who the Supreme Leader is now. I probably missed my share of Christmas dinners. I wonder if Hoagie joined the TND, too… Hm hm, excuse my rambling.” He blushed at the kids. “Ignore me. …Farewell, you all.” And with that, Garry walked away. He went to leave this gallery, once and for all.

“I guess we should leave, too.” Aisa said. “We pretty much combed the whole gallery. There’s nothing left to see.”

“…” April smirked. “No. We’re not done, yet.”

Two days later…

“BREAKING NEWS: The Guertena Art Gallery has witnessed its first break-in in the history since it was founded in 1923! According to reports, a group of five kids, and one rabbit, broke into the gallery’s basement and made off with one of the paintings! One of these kids was described to be a ‘giant girl,’ leaving police baffled. Higher authorities are being reported about the break-in, and some are suspecting the Kids Next Door of treachery. As Düssenheim citizens are in an uproar over these events, we can only ask: what painting did they take, and WHY??”

Foster’s Home For Imaginary Friends

Mary climbed out of her painting and fell on the polished floor. Her senses slowly returned to her… She was confused as to where she was. She looked up, feeling presences over her: a tall, skinny, red creature with a broken eye, a huge purple furry monster, and some kind of chicken that looked like a palm-tree and airplane. “Hi, there!” Wilt greeted. “My name’s Wilt, this is Eduardo and Coco. This is Foster’s Home For Imaginary Friends!”

“Foster’s Home… whuh…”
“Maybe she doesn’t know English.” Eduardo mentioned.

“Well, she is from Germany. Can you understand us?” Wilt asked. “No offense, if you’re just confused, we just…”

“Cococococococococo!”

Mary perked. “A home where abandoned Imaginary Friends can come and live and play with other Imaginary Friends?”

“Wow, Coco, she understands you!” Wilt beamed.

“COCOCOCOCOCO!”

“MARY!”

The painting gasped: April, Ib, and Sector W7 were standing not far away. Mary’s memory was foggy… she processed their appearance… “A…Ape…! ! APRIL!” Mary whipped over and grabbed her in a twirling hug. Ib, Aisa, and Apis hugged her, and Mocha picked them up in her giant arms and squeezed them all.

The giant set them all down as Mary viewed around the house’s foyer. Friends of all kinds of whacky design were flying and running everywhere. “Now you can play with tons of new friends.” April said happily. “You can talk to them, and they can talk to you!”

“And we’ll always come over to visit you!” Ib said brightly.

“The downside is you have to rely on Psychic Chi, so you’re still trapped here.” Apis shrugged. “But it’s much more colorful than the gallery.”

Mary felt a beautiful warmth in her heart. She was an Imaginary person… but here she was, standing in the real world. Real friends… “Thank you, April.”

“Great, so can we go now??” Chimney insisted.

“I’m so glad I get to talk to you again!” Mary cheered. “And don’t worry, April. One day, I’m gonna join the Kids Next Door and go on more adventures with you! I’ll be the first Imaginary Friend to ever do it!”

“Technically, second.” April blushed. “Although you would be the first normal Imaginary Friend.”

“And I’ll join the Kids Next Door, too!” Ib declared. “I’ll be expecting to see you there, Mary!”

“I will, Ib!” Mary nodded. “You can count on it!”

“We’ll see you later, Mary!” April waved as they began to leave. “We’ll make sure Cheren lets all the Kids Next Door know you’re coming!”

“He’s gonna be really mad about that burglary, though.” Mocha blushed.

“Bye, Maryyyyyyy!” (“Gyom, gyoooooom!”)

“I still don’t get why Mary was able to come outta there.” Chimney said to her friends. “I mean, yeah, she’s in Foster’s now, but she was still stuck in the gallery, right?”

“Yes,” April smiled intuitively, “but Mary still lives by the rules of any Imaginary Friend. As long as she lives where there’s Psychic Chi, she’ll survive. But once enough people get to know her, she won’t have to worry about that, anymore.”

“I don’t understand why Guertena would fade away, in that sense.” Aisa mentioned. “Everybody still knew who he was…”

“Maybe… but he’s from the past.” April reminded. “Sure, a lot of people still admire him, but nobody in this time knows or really loves him. Especially since he tried to kill us.”

“Mary tried to kill us, too.” Ib said with a laugh. “But she’s different…”

“I hope Mary will be happy there.” Aeincha said. “It makes me wonder how the other paintings feel about this.”

“It won’t really matter in the end.” April said. “This is for the best for Mary: a place where she’s truly happy. And one way or another, she belongs…”

Guertena Gallery

Astonishingly, on the same day that Mary was stolen, another painting was discovered. One that no one had even known existed before this. The Lady in Red in the middle, blue dolls at the bottom, headless statues standing over in the background, and mannequin heads to the side, were all smiling and waving at the viewers. No one understood the title… but then again, Guertena was mysterious like that. It was so unusual, it was hung in the gallery immediately. Dozens of viewers came to observe it with interest. Good-bye, Mary.

And that’s the end of the Art Saga. So yeah, longest stage in the entire story. A lot of it was the same from Ib, but fans will notice I threw in my own puzzles, and I must say, it was a very fun level to type. X) Next time, we will continue to the Lazarus Saga. Of course… that may not be for a while. I’m planning to continue Fairy Sisters, but the next few months will likely be dedicated to the Side Stories. Shyeah, we are falling behind on that! So when that time comes, I will see you when the longest story ever continues!

A Mary Time in Foster’s

Chapter Summary

Mary gets adjusted to her new home at Foster’s.

Here is a one-shot that takes place after the Art Saga in Legend of the Seven Lights. So before reading this, read that story, or there will be spoilers and confusion. :P But if you have, enjoy!

Chapter 51.5: A Mary Time in Foster’s

KND Moonbase

After Cheren returned from one of his adventures, he was back in Moonbase to relieve the exhaust with paperwork. He heard a bling! on his computer, and saw that he had email. “Ah, it’s from April!” Cheren clicked the message and began to read to himself.

“. . . Wow… That’s quite a story. But I’d be happy to get Mary and Ib into CND Training. . . .” That name sounded weird in his head. “Who names their kid ‘Ib’? Also…” The other name sounded weird, too. “Mary… I feel like I should know someone named Mary… but this is the first time I’m hearing about her. Or… is it? . . .” He looked over April’s story again. “Hm… Knowing me though, she’s probably a friend.”

Foster’s Home For Imaginary Friends

Mary slept beside the window in her room. When the sun came up every morning, it would shine through and light up her head of golden hair. When she felt the warmth touch her face, she got up on her knees to open the window and breathe the fresh morning air. She would then reach a hand up toward the sun and try to clasp it in her fingers, even though it was up in the sky. She was just glad to see it came up.

She had been brought to Foster’s yesterday, welcomed by the friendly Friends who lived here. When Mary went to sleep that night, she was afraid it would all be a dream and she’d wake up in that gallery. She was afraid of waking up all alone in darkness. The sun came up and reminded her that she was in a new home.

Her empty portrait hung on the wall in her bedroom. Mary approached the portrait and placed a hand against it. The hand became flat and part of the portrait. She pulled it off, and her hand regained 3-D shape. She looked at both hands and flexed her fingers. She looked at her feet and wiggled her toes. She felt the smooth green nightgown she was given to wear. She looked like a human girl… but she was not really human. It felt so weird… being real and not real at the same time.

Mary dressed up in her dark green dress with a blue neckerchief, black socks, and green shoes. The same clothes she was drawn with, and the ones she kept during her years at Goldenweek Manor. Mary wondered if she should still call herself a Goldenweek, now that she was no longer tied to them. Well, maybe she would, because she would always be April’s sister.
When Mary exited her room, she heard the squeaky sound of gym shoes hitting the floor. She looked left and saw Wilt approaching. He was a red-skinned Friend with tall legs, one left arm, and a broken eye. “Oh, hello, Mary!” Wilt greeted happily. “I hope you slept well! That room hasn’t been occupied in a while, but I clean it up every other day, since we could get a Friend any time, you know? I know it’s not a great room, but if there’s something wrong with it, just let me know, alright? I wanna help you feel welcome here.”

“Oh, it’s fine.” Mary smiled. “It’s a fine room. My room! It’s fine. And mine. Hey, so, Mr. Tall Guy? Why is your arm so tiny?”

“You mean this arm?” He waved his right stub. “Heheh, it’s a long story. My arm got crushed and, well, the doctors weren’t sure how to fix it since I didn’t have bones. They decided it was easier to cut it off. It’s okay, because Imaginary Friends don’t have blood. …I’m sorry if that’s disturbing.”

“Blood…” Mary lightly pinched the back of her left hand. She felt the tingle, but she didn’t think she had blood, anymore.

“MAKE WAY, MAKE WAY! Best Imaginary Friend ever COMING through!” Wilt stepped aside when a short blob of a pure blue color wobbled over. Mary’s mouth became a small ‘o’ when the blob narrowed his eyes and looked at her closely. “So, you’re the new Friend, hm?” He poked her belly. “Well, you’ll fit in at Foster’s after some touching up. The name’s Blooregard Q. Kazoo, but you can call me Bloo. I don’t usually reserve that honor for many people.”

“Um, I’m sorry Bloo, but, doesn’t everyone call you Bloo?” Wilt asked.

“Shhh, I’m trying to introduce myself here!” Bloo whisper-shouted.

“Wooooow!” Mary gazed with delight at the short blob. “You’re bluuuuue! Blue is my favorite color ever! I like it better than pink and yellow!” She knelt down and softly rubbed Bloo’s round top.

“Hey, hey, hey!” Bloo flailed his stubby arms to shake hers off. “Don’t do that, I just combed my hair.”

“Uh… Hair?”

“Listen, little lady, I know you’re new here, so I’ll just be direct: I’m the best Imaginary Friend this house has, and probably the whole world. Blue is the best color, as you know, that’s why God made the sky and ocean blue. There isn’t one place in the house where the Friends don’t know my name,” he put his arm around Mary, “so if you’re friends with me, you’re friends with everyone. And you want that, don’t you?” He nudged her with his elbow.

“Oh, yes! I wanna make lots of friends!”

“Great! Just do exactly as I do and you’ll make friends in no time! TO THE DINING ROOM!” Bloo grabbed Mary’s arm and zipped off. He came back and said to Wilt, “Oh, and Wilt, here: for your troubles.” He tossed a quarter up to him and ran off again. Wilt looked at the simple coin with confusion.

Dining Room

“The first thing you need to know is I start my days with a well-balanced breakfast.” Bloo explained as he walked Mary down the extremely long table. The girl’s mouth was drooling at the variety of delicious foods. “Of course, I won’t be able to eat the amount I need if I share with you, but that’s the type of generous Friend I am.” The two made it to and sat at an area with all sweets, like cakes and ice cream. “But you can look forward to the daily breakfast-dessert every morning! Let’s DIG IN!” Bloo began to guzzle up a whole bowl of vanilla ice cream with chocolate syrup and bananas.

“Ugh, Bloo, you’re supposed to start with the cereal and eggs, THEN come and grab dessert.” Frankie Foster, the 42-year-old caretaker of Foster’s, stated. “Mary, if you want, I can get you some-”

The Goldenweek girl began gobbling large slices of cake, and squirting syrup into her mouth.

Frankie’s Office

“Whenooohhh, whooohhh, whoooaaa…” Bloo and Mary, with their bellies round and full, wobbled into the main office. Bloo sat at the desk while Mary stood beside him. “So, that lady was Frankie, the maid. She took over management after Mr. Herriman died, but she’s still lame. Anyway, now that the food is settling, it’s time for our next part of the day: what I like to call the Burping Hour! First, drink this soda.” He handed Mary a soda can, and he drank his own can while Mary drank hers. “Now do this!” He grabbed the microphone and pushed the PA button. “…BUUURP.”

“BUUURP.” Mary repeated.

“BUUURP.”

“BUUUURP.”

“BUUURP. “BUUURP. “BUUURP. “BUUURP.” The belches were heard in every room of the house. The Friends still in bed were putting their heads under their pillows. Friends roaming the halls were twitching their eyes. Eduardo was taking cover in the cardboard box fortress he had built for this purpose, wearing a cooking pot helmet and wielding a broom.

“Ahhhh…” Bloo and Mary sighed after letting the gas loose.

“BLOOOO!” Frankie swung the door open and stomped in.

“MARY, GRAB ON!” He clutched Mary’s hand. “EYUH!” With his other hand, he threw a ball of powder on the floor, which exploded into a thick white cloud. The cloud cleared as the entire office was covered in powder. Frankie glared at Bloo and Mary, who were also covered.

“Awww.” Bloo moaned. “I thought these things teleport you. They do in the movies.” He took Mary and jumped out the window. He came back and, “For your troubles.” tossed Frankie a quarter, then jumped back.

Arcade

“This is the house’s arcade, which has every videogame ever imagined.” Bloo explained, showing Mary around the room that was lit only by the game screens. “Now, I don’t mean to discourage you, but I have the highest score of every game in here, and they’re pretty tough to beat. I could teach you what I know, but you’d be lucky if you get the 2nd highest score.”

“Nnn! Nnn! Nnn! Nnn!” They heard a faint grunting sound when they got close to a Jetpac console. They looked down to see Peas, the tiny Friend who was a pea, trying to climb the console’s corner.

“Hey, fellas! Mind lending me a hand?”

“Oh, wow!” Mary beamed, lightly picking up the little pea. “You look like the food that my old parents used to make me! I didn’t know you things talk! Why don’t you ever say anything when I...
“DON’T EVEN THINK ABOUT IT!!” Peas shook. “I’m trying to get up to that game so I can play it. I’m going for the high score!”

“HA HA HA HA haaaaa!” Bloo cackled. “The high score, YOU? You couldn’t even get ONE point!”

“For your information, I’ve been watching OTHER people play and I wanna try out some tricks! I just… need someone to help me. Like you!” He pointed at Mary. “How would YOU like to help me, little girl?”

“Little girl?” Mary looked around the floor. “Where?”

“Oh, very funny. Just put me in your ear and I’ll tell you how the game works.”

“Pfft, this is gonna be funnier than watching Eduardo play.” Bloo said, pulling a quarter out of his “pocket.” “Fine, Peas. Do your best.” He put the coin in the game.

Mary placed Peas in her right ear as he spoke, “Okay, grab the stick. That makes the little man move. The red button shoots his gun, and the blue button makes him float.”

“But how does he know I’m pushing those buttons?”

“He-… I dunno, it’s just how videogames work. Just do what I say, I’ll tell you what to push.”

“This will take two seconds.” Bloo rolled his eyes.

22 minutes later

“WWWWWWWHHHHHAT?!” Bloo gaped when the blinking score was posted above the one beside his name.

“Ooo, look! Those numbers are blinking! What does that mean?” Mary asked.

“It means you got the high score! Come on, Mary, enter my name!” Peas said eagerly.

“WAIT A SECOND! You didn’t get that score, MARY did!” Bloo shouted. “SHE should type her name, NOT YOURS!”

“But, Bloo… I thought you had all the high scores?” Mary asked, confused.

“BUT I- YOU- HE- IT-; EYAAAAAGGGH!” Bloo swung a kick at the console and ran away. He came back, threw a quarter at the machine, and left again.

Upstairs; Coco’s room

The floor of Coco’s room was covered with many colorful eggs she had lain herself. The bird-palmtree-airplane creature’s happy mindless expression didn’t change as she trotted about and laid more eggs. “Oooooo!” Mary gazed at all the eggs when Bloo cracked the door open.

“This is Coco. She has her own room now. She wanted more space to lay her eggs.”

“What’s in these eggs?” Mary picked a blue one up. “Baby birdies? Or maybe bunnies! I heard there was a bunny that laid eggs on Christmas.”
“Actually,” Bloo took the plastic egg and pulled it open, “they contain prizes.” A lottery ticket came out.

“Prizes? Where does she get them?”

“Who knows. But somewhere among these dozens of eggs lie the keys to someone’s racecar.” He smirked eagerly. “And we’re going to find it! So Mary, I’ll get Coco to lay more eggs, and you just keep poppin’ these bad boys open, got it?” Mary nodded. “Good. Ahem…

“AAAAAHHH!” Bloo made a terrific leap and latched onto Coco’s airplane back. “RIDE ‘EM, COWGIRL! Mary, now’s your chance!”

“COCOCOCOCOCOCOCOCOCOCOCOCO!” Coco ran around rampantly, dropping more eggs. Mary hurriedly began pulling each and every egg open. She found a pencil, some whipped cream, a fork, some cigarettes, ChapStick, an accordion, Abu from Aladdin, the Holy Grail, but nothing that looked like car keys. As Bloo kept riding Coco, the room became more and more flooded with eggs.

“BLOOOO? MARYYYYY?” Frankie roamed about the halls in search of the two. “I swear, if one of these halls has gelatin stuck to the ceiling, I’m gonna…?” She found the door to Coco’s room was trembling. When Frankie pulled it open- “WAAAAAAAHHH!” She was buried under a mountain of eggs.

Coco popped up above the eggs, looking dizzy. “VICTORY!” Bloo cheered, popping up with a set of keys in his hand. Mary climbed out and shook her messy hair. “Come on, Mary! TO THE AUTO STOOOOORE!” He grabbed the girl’s hand and ran off. He came back, tossed a quarter at Coco’s palmtree, and resumed.

Mark’s Auto Shop

“Whaddyou mean they don’t go to a racecaaaaarrrrr?” Bloo whined at the man named Mark.

“Look, kid, we don’t even sell racecars. I dunno where they come from, but they ain’t from here. Besides, we don’t really sell to Imaginary Friends. ’less they got a driver’s license, y’know?”

“That’s discriminatory! Ripoff artist!”

“OW!” Bloo kicked the man in the shin.

“Come on, Mary, there’s gotta be some place that sells a good racecar.” Bloo said angrily as he walked away from the man. “…Mary?” He looked around the parking lot. The girl was nowhere to be seen. “Hmm.” Bloo shrugged and continued walking. He came back to Mark, who was still holding his shin, and chucked a quarter at him.

Foster’s

Mary stood in the open double-doorway of the large house with a blank expression. She looked down, seeing the toe-ends of her shoes were inches from passing the door’s boundary.

“GOTCHA!” Mary flinched when Frankie grabbed her right arm from behind. The woman had parts of Coco’s eggs stuck to her body. “Didn’t think you and your little blue mastermind were gonna evade me for long, did ya? …Hey… where is Bloo?” Frankie looked around.

“I think he was taking me to a car store.” Mary replied.

“Why didn’t you go with him?”
“…” She looked outside with a sad expression. “If I leave the house, won’t I disappear?”

“Oh, that’s only for Friends with dead creators. But didn’t your creator drop you off here yesterday? Or, who were those kids?”

“Um…”

Mary tried to explain her story as best as she could.

“Wow… That’s pretty amazing. And kind of confusing. But if I understood that last part… then you should be able to leave if April’s still around, right?”

“Um… I guess so. April loves me lots.” Mary smiled.

“But Mary, you shouldn’t get yourself involved with Bloo. No matter what he might’ve told you, he gets himself in more trouble than Benedict Arnold and Darth Vader having a street race. I mean, you didn’t actually like doing those things, did you?”

“Well… Bloo told me that if I did what he did, I would make lots of friends. I wanna have more friends.”

“Well, it’ll be hard to make some doing what Bloo does, trust me. If you want more friends, just go around and talk to people. Foster’s is full of Friends, that’s what we’re all about!”

“I know that… it’s just…” Mary looked around to see a few Imaginaries pass by: a giant monster of pale blue fur, a huge gummy bear, and a pair of scissors with legs and eyes. “All of them look like… monsters. It’s just like at the gallery. I feel… different… here…”

“Mary,” Frankie knelt beside her, “these guys are different from those guys at the gallery. They’re all really kind and sweet. …Most of them. No one will care if you look like a human, as long as you’re a Friend at heart. …Of course, every now and then, some humans show up disguised as Friends to get free food… in fact, we even get a few Nimbi and Minish doing the same, that’s why we had to get the X-ray and… ugh, I’m just rambling.” She shook her head. “Look, Mary, if you’re too nervous to talk to these people, I’ll hang out with you. I was going to go out shopping anyway, so if you wanted to come to the mall or something…”

“Oooooo, I love malls! They’re really big and have a lot of floors and stairs that move!”

“Well, hop in the Foster’s Bus and I’ll let you ride them when we get there!”

“YAAAAAY!” Mary ran outside with her arms in the air. “Does your bus have rockets and fly in space?? I once rode a train that did that!”

“Heh heh heh, well if you could imagine…”

The Mall

“WHEEEEEE!” Mary cheered at the top of her lungs when the escalator lifted her to the second floor. The other riders shut their ears in annoyance. “I don’t have to move my feet and the stairs take me up! But when I go down,” Mary skipped down some steps, “I’m still kind of going up! Frankie, these stairs are so weird!”

“Ha ha ha!” Frankie laughed, delighted by her carefree antics. “Well, we’re almost at the top, Mary, so get ready to step off.”
“I’ll walk down backwards!” Mary was stepping back, “But when I look forward, it still feels like I’m going up. I wonder if I walk up backwards,” she about-faced, “will that-” She tripped on the slot where the stairs vanished into, falling on her back.

“That’s why you gotta pay attention.” Frankie blushed, helping Mary to her feet. “Come on, Mary, there’s a clothing store over there! Since you’ll be wearing them, you probably want a few pairs to change into.”

Mary grabbed a bunch of clothes that looked pretty… which was nearly all of them. In the dressing rooms, she tried on a green two-piece swimsuit, a very fat blue coat, pants, and hat that only showed her eyes, a pink sparkly prom gown with high-heel sandals, and a brown jacket over a black T-shirt, with baggy pants and untied sneakers. “Next!” she yelled, holding a hand out to Frankie.

“Mary, I’m not buying ALL of these clothes.” Frankie chuckled. “I’ll get the ones that look nicest on you. …Hey, try these on!”

Mary was later walking out of the mall with a new green shirt that showed her belly, a green and white skirt, and white running shoes. “Frankie, Frankie!” She jumped. “I feel like a new Mary! But I’m the same Mary, aren’t I? Is this what they call a ‘same difference’?”

“You know, it kind of is! Hmm, but your hair kinda clashes with the outfit. It looks messy. But I know just the place!”

Salon De Sisse

“Frankie? Why is our hair getting sucked up into a vacuum?” Mary asked as they both lay back on chairs.

“They’re not vacuums, Mary, they’re hair-dryers!” Frankie laughed. “They just washed our hair, now it needs drying."

“Just like laundry? Are laundry rooms salons for clothes?”

“I never thought of them that way, but, I guess they are! You know, you’re pretty insightful, Mary.”

“Insightful… yeah.” Mary never heard that word before. “Hey, Frankie, mud is dirty, right?”

“Yeeaaah… “

“So why do people bathe in it?”

“Hmm… I’m not sure. I tried it a few times, and it works, though. I don’t think we should, since we’re just getting our hair clean.”

“Okay. …Hey, Frankie, if people put pickles over their eyes, would the pickles taste like eyes?”

“Ha ha ha ha ha!” Frankie laughed more. Even though she lived in the real world, these questions never arose to Frankie.

Park

Mary’s hair was wrapped in a pretty ponytail. Her yellow hair was no longer messy, but smooth, and went perfectly with her new outfit. She ran around the park, full of life and energy. “You know, Mary, I think I was right about before. We’ve been out for hours and… you’re still here.”

“Oh?” Mary stopped running, looking at each side of her hands. “I…I’m still here.”

“You sure are.”

“…Is this why I feel so happy?”

“Why else would you feel happy?”

“I don’t know… I thought it was because of the new clothes!”

“That must be why, too! You have a lot of reasons to feel happy, Mary. You have new clothes, a new house, tons of new friends… and since Imaginary Friends don’t age, you’ll always be this way!”

That statement tugged one of her heartstrings. Mary looked downtrodden. “What’s wrong, Mary?”

“Nothing… Just… When I became real, I was a little girl… and then I grew up. I wanted to be an adult and be tall and smart. Now I won’t ever grow big. April and all my friends will grow old and die… and I won’t ever see them again.”

“…” Frankie frowned at this realization. Being young forever did have its downsides. “Well… even if that’s true, Mary… you’re a wonderful person. You can make more friends. You’ll make lots of people happy just being who you are. And you’ll be able to see lots of new things. Like… Like that rock!” Frankie pointed at a tall rock in the center of the park. “They say whoever climbs that rock becomes King or Queen of the Park.”

“How do they decide which is which?”

“I dunno! Find out.”

“Okay!” Mary excitedly ran over and climbed the tall stone. Once up top, she sat on and kicked her feet in the air. “HOORAAAAAY! I’m the King or Queen of the Park! Now everyone will bring me lots of presents!”

“Don’t get ahead of yourself, Mary!” Frankie called. “That’s the kind of thing that starts a revolution!”

“What’s a revolution? Is that like a party?”

“No, it’s a-” Her phone started ringing. “Hold on, Mary.” She answered, “Hello? Uh… I’m sorry, what? BLOO? You’re WHERE?? Ugh! I’ll be there in a minute.” She hung up. “Mary, come on, we have to go to the police station.” She walked away in anger. “Bloob tried to break into the police station to see if they keep stolen racecars. Honestly, I don’t know where he gets these ideas!” Mary kicked off the rock and raced after her.

Police Station

“When we get home, I’m cooking ‘IT’ for you tonight.” Frankie told the frustrated blob as he wobbled outside. “Now get in the bus!”

“Mmm-myow, racecar, mmm-mmnn.” Bloob mumbled.

“Thanks for calling, Officer.” Frankie said to the cop. “I hope he didn’t cause too much trouble.”
“No, not too much. All he did was kick me in the shin and throw a quarter at my face, for some reason.”

“I’ll make sure he doesn’t do… MARY!” She spotted the girl pick up and study a gun from the cop’s desk. “PUT THAT DOWN! It’s dangerous!”

“Dangerous? Why?”

“Because it KILLS people!”

“Kills people?” Mary looked at the weapon again. “It looks like… the thing those bad guys were using.”

“What bad guys- Never mind, just put it down!”

Foster’s

After they returned to Foster’s, Frankie sent Bloo up to his room. She turned around and noticed Mary slowly following with her head down. “Mary, what’s wrong this time?”

“You said… that thing kills people.”

“Oh… Mary, I didn’t mean to worry you. It’s not going to get you.”

“Do bad people use those things? Do they use those things to… kill people?”

“I…I’m afraid they do.”

Mary walked over to a window and looked up at the sun. The big light in the sky that made everything look pretty. “Mary, just don’t think about stuff like that. The world’s a wonderful place, and somebody with a bright spirit like yours only makes it-”

“But it isn’t.” Mary said. “The world has lots of bad things. Like the gallery. April and her friends are fighting lots of bad people. The bad people… killed Cheren’s dad. Cheren was April’s friend. That means… he’s my friend. They’re in the Kids Next Door. The Kids Next Door stops bad people.”

Frankie stared at her, wondering what she was talking to herself about.

Mary turned around and showed Frankie her bright smile. “That’s why I wanna join the Kids Next Door! I wanna stop the bad people, too! So then the world can look even prettier!”

“Hm hm!” Frankie smiled. “See, Mary? You’re already a grown-up. And a smart one, too. You’ll fit in perfectly at Foster’s.”

Almost immediately, they heard what sounded like an explosion outside. Mary, Frankie, and some other Friends rushed out to see smoke coming from the Extremeasaur cage. The small door into the cage opened, and Sunni Chariton stumbled out, battered and covered in soot. She leaned on the door as she gasped for breath. She looked up at them with a dizzy expression. “Guess what, huff… I just made a new friend.” She fell and fainted.

Following the Art Saga’s events, nobody else remembers Mary right away, that’s why Cheren’s mind is foggy. And no better way to end a one-shot than with a foreshadow. Guess who Sunni’s new friend is! Hint, he appeared earlier in Seven Lights! Well, I’ll see you when we continue this saga. XP
Chapter Summary

The Marzipan Pirates return to Buttermilk Building to get the Sun Key.

This chapter comes after Chapter 51 (so I guess it’s first in the Lazarus Saga). We’re gonna jump right to an Augustus stage, then go to some good stuff. Also, in-chapter Number Cipher.

Chapter B-25: Parley

Top of Buttermilk Building

The Marzipan Pirates ventured up Buttermilk for the second time. This time, with Augustus’s crewmen able to join him, they approached the pool of rotten Sun Cream. Nel climbed off Augustus and approached the dry brown pool. “Mud usually look good… This mud don’t.”

“Hopefully, it won’t stay that way. Stewie, go for it.” Augustus ordered.

The boy genius pulled out his Metahuman Neutralizer and blasted at the cream. To their astonishment, it was slowly morphing back into its whitish-gold color, and the pleasant smell Augustus was familiar with began to reach their noses. “I can’t believe it, it’s working!” Stewie beamed.

“Impressive. But who knows how long it will stay that way?” a robotic voice spoke.

The five gasped and looked up. A Cinnamon Ship was descending, and the red-eyed robot known as the Silver Bullet was manning it. The silver mecha parked the ship and stepped off, the children readying their guard. Nel jumped in front and yelled, “Don’t touch Aughsucks or Nel eat you, Rock Man!”

“That’s okay, Nel.” Augustus stepped around the cave child. He pulled out his lolli stick and flicked it off the mountain, eyes narrowed on the mech. “I already know you’re a chica under that suit. Take it off and let me see your pretty face.” He smirked.

“You’re straight to the point, Captain. I never have enough time to get there. But since you’re cute, I’ll let it go.” She gripped her helmet. “My name is Penelope.” She pulled it off, revealing her light lavender mouse head and big round ears, shaking her long orange hair free, which had a red bandanna over it. “Penelope Mousse.” she said with a nasally voice.

Augustus’s jaw dropped and he felt his heart shatter. For some reason, he was picturing a beautiful sexy girl who liked to dress like a robot. Instead, he got… “Una chica de ratón?!"

“Oh, what were you expecting, Terminator?!” Penelope retorted. “I’m a Mobian, GET OVER IT! Of course, you wouldn’t expect me to be, given my species. Mobian mice are born small and they lead small lives. But I wasn’t gonna live off little SCRAPs that the big animals throw away. I swiped an Everlasting Growth Potion from a Minish shop and went on to bigger and better things.”
“What an engaging story. Does Captain Slag know about it?” The captain cocked a brow.

“Yes, he knows. The Slag Pirates may be an ‘all-robot crew’, but that doesn’t mean they aren’t open-minded. I’ve actually come here on behalf of my crew, Captain Aughsucks.”

“Grrrr!” Augustus flushed at the nickname.

Penelope’s suit opened as she stepped forward, wearing an orange top and blue shorts, and held her right hand to Augustus. “I’m here to call a parley.”

“…Well, at least you’re not a kid.” He decided to shake her hand. “Very well. You have the floor.”

“So, here’s how it’s goin’ down, you know all those crews you pissed off at the Davy Back Fight? Well, Lord Licorice got all of them to not only help hunt you down, but to hunt the Lost Candies, too. Except the Kremling Krew, we dunno what those guys are doin’. We know you’ve been gettin’ all the candies, and Captain Slag is starting to become curious about them. So here’s what he was thinkin’: we help you find the Lost Candies and split the difference with whatever they’ll do in the end. Maybe sell them to the highest bidder, we’ll be set for life, know what I’m sayin’?”

“No deal. I’m collecting the Lost Candies for somebody else, not for any reward.”

“Who? And for what?”

“Somebody’s dying wish! I couldn’t turn THAT down!”

“Well, after this person gets their ‘dying wish’, then what? You have six magical candies just sitting around in…” she looked around, “where are you keeping them exactly?”

“Nonya Business.”

“Oh, I’ve been to that island before.” Penelope smirked. “But listen, Captain Augustus, Lord Licorice may be making himself out as the pirates’ friend, I know that he sees us as a means to an end. It’s Piracy 101. How do you know this special someone isn’t using you for the same reason?”

“How do I know that you aren’t?”

“Touché, Captain. But the fact that Captain Slag sent me here to begin with is ‘cause he’s impressed with your skill. I call it luck, but hey, no arguin’ with the grog factory. What he was really thinkin’ is we become allies—so you can still be your own ragtag crew. You might object to it, but I don’t think you’ll be collecting the Lost Candies without my help.”

“I got most of ’em already, and the Sun Cream is right here.”

“So it may seem.” Penelope approached the pool of cream and bent over to scoop some in her hand. “But this splendid serving of sun is in actuality-” She drank it- “GLUCH, PLOO, PLEEEEH!” She desperately hacked the taste off her tongue, gripping her neck. “Oh God, that is terrible! I think I preferred the trash, gluk, gleeeh!”

Stewie grabbed a soda from his Infi-Cube and tossed it to her. Penelope guzzled it up and sighed with great relief. “My point is, it’s not the real one.”

“Then where is the real one?”

“The real one happens to be underneath. Quite a ways, in fact. We picked up this little tidbit from Licorice’s henchgirl, Veruca. Said she wasn’t sure if her Devil Fruit could affect the real Sun Cream, of course she couldn’t go down there, given she can’t swim.”

“So how do we go down there?”

“Thankfully, I designed special Cinnamon Swimsuits for such an occasion. You can dive deep beneath the stickilicious cream and come back with your gravely old skin still intact. (But you’ll reek of cinnamon, at least.)” Penelope went to her ship and pulled out a large diving suit with a cinnamon roll design, and a small one. “I brought one your size and three for the tykes. But I forgot about the rodent.” Nel glared at her.

“That’s alright. Rallo can stay up here and watch you. Provided you two are able to communicate with us.”

“They have communication gear, though I wonder if they’ll work through the gluck. Only one way to find out. So, do we have a deal or not?” She held a hand out.

Augustus stared at it, contemplating for a minute. It would help him get the Sun Cream, and with Stewie coming with, the Lost Candies in the Infi-Cube would be safe from her grasp. He did feel treachery afoot, but he supposed one way or another, he would have to deal with Slag’s crew. So he shook her hand. “Deal.”

With that, Penelope helped fix the Cinnamon Swimsuits on Augustus, Stewie (his helmet was football-shaped), Maggie, and Nel, who fussed a little as she disapproved of her help. Penelope couldn’t help but giggle at their silly brown armor with black swirly stripes. “I’m sorry, but I can never get used to this whole candy thing! So ridiculous!”

“Just hope I won’t have to Gobstop your pretty face later.” Augustus winked. He and his choice three crewmen jumped into the cream pool and slowly descended beneath its gooey substance.

“This is Silver Bullet to Candy Hunter. Do ya read me?”

“Yeah, I can hear you.” Augustus responded. “But it’s ‘Stone Fist’ now.”

“Stone Fist? That’s a crappy name.”

“Like yours is any better. Are bullets even your thing?”

“If you say so, darling. But I’ve never been a fan of aliases. Either you let the world know your name or don’t become a pirate.”

“Alright, alright, keep your glasses on. You’re almost 50 feet down, I’m picking up a tunnel. It seems the cream is more clear down here, you’ll be able to see.”

The four set foot on the bottom. Indeed, the way forward was clearer, but still blurry with white cream. “It’s definitely not as shiny as it was on top. I wonder how bright the real cream is.”

“Do you think it’ll blind us like the Crystal Marshmallow?” Stewie asked.

“I hope not. Good thing I’m wearing sunglasses. But if I had to make a wild guess, the Sun Cream will look like something that goes to a machine.”

“What kind of wild guess is that?” asked Penelope.

“Tell ya when we’re finished.” (Play “Funky Waters” from Donkey Kong: Tropical Freeze!)
Stage B-4: Buttermilk Building, Act 2: The Deep Cream

Mission: Find the real Sun Cream.

The pirates avoided Gum Cheeps as they swam through the tunnel – they were big gumballs with lips, eyes, and fins. The tunnel turned left, and a current was pushing the group back. Thankfully, the suits were built with small propellers that allowed them to boost, not too fast, but strong enough to push through the current. They had to avoid puffer fish that blew in the current (naturally the fish had gum bodies), but their boost had a limit before it needed to recharge. When this happened, they could hide behind jagged rocks on the floor. Augustus caught glimpse of a Gold Wonka Bar in the upper left corner, and proceeded to catch it before they made it to the end.

There was an area they could resurface and a floor they could climb on and take off their helmets. “Bleck, cinnamon right up your nose is the worst. These suits are really helpful, though.”

“And even though Maggie and I have Devil Fruit powers,” Stewie said, “it seems the water doesn’t affect us when it doesn’t touch our skin.”

“Mw-mw.” Maggie replied.

“Cream has milk, which has water, it’s the same difference.”

The light from the cream lit up the cavern. There were temple-like images on the walls. One of them depicted six giant figures standing over a small horned being. Augustus carried Nel as he, Stewie, and Maggie used their Corn-Clamber Boots to go across a path over a cream pool. Large creamy globs dropped from the ceiling and threatened to push them down. They also slid down the wall slowly and forced the crew to wait.

At the end of this path, they could set foot on stable ground and enter a greater, wider room with two towers connecting the floor and ceiling. There were creamy White Chuchus lurking around with Chocolate Coins in their blobby bellies. “I heard that people who come up here liked to toss coins into the Sun Cream and make wishes.” Penelope said.

“A few extra bucks for me.” Augustus cut the Chus up and took the coins. There was a path that spiraled up and around one of the towers, but it was too creamy and slippery to walk on even with Corn-Clamber Boots. Farther across the room was a Rock Candy bushel, but it was trapped inside a huge Cream Chu. Cutting with the Lemon Cutlass didn’t cut it, but when Augustus punched the blob with Armament fists, it took damage like a solid being and eventually shrunk into a flat puddle. They each took a piece of crystal and encased their selves in a Rock Candy sphere. But it still wasn’t enough to go up the slippery path.

In another corner of the huge room was a garden of candy corn. The candy corn stuck through their spheres and their spikier undersides were outside. With greater sturdiness in their Rock Candy, they could roll up the path without sliding off. Cream Chus wearing candy corn helmets sprouted up, and Augustus had to give his sphere an extra push to crush the Chus’ defenses. At the top of the path, a large spring in the tower pushed them across a bridge to the next tower, where they quickly rolled down another spiraled path that ended at a ramp, which flew them to a new tunnel.

The tunnel sloped down before they instantly crashed against a wall and their spheres broke. They had to put on their suits again and dive into a new cream pool. “Better hold hands. I can’t see a thing down here.” Augustus suggested. It was incredibly murky, and he led the kids carefully as they linked like a chain. The captain stopped just before touching a yellow light, which he realized was a jellyfish.

“Mw-mw-mw!” Maggie called for their attention.

“You can use your Zoom-In to see the jellyfish’s light through all this?” Stewie asked through his suit.

“Glad we brought ya, Mags.” Augustus smirked. “Fine, you lead the way.” They reorganized their chain as Maggie began to lead them through the darkness. The jellyfish light was faint in her Zoom-In vision, but it helped them greatly in finding their way out. Eventually, they encountered a gummy anglerfish and had to keep up as it guided them in the murk. They were finally in more clear water (er, cream) as they swam through a tunnel, which had temple depictions of an ark sailing under a storm. They thought it was Noah’s Ark.

When they tried to swim over a pit, ceiling propellers activated and pushed them down into it. Their suits’ boost function couldn’t even push up against the current, but there were Pop Gums lain around the ground. “We need Nel to eat these and shoot them. But how can we with this cream in the way?”

“Relax, those suits were designed to flush out cream, too. Just have her quickly open her helmet to eat and shoot them.” Penelope responded. When Nel finished eating all the Pop Gums, Augustus used her as a gun to shoot and destroy the propellers. They could swim out of the pit, and Augustus used Nel to shoot three more propellers that kept them from advancing. They could swim to a surface and climb onto a floor in a vast room with a chasm.

There were more fans stationed around parts of the room, with one of them on their ledge. There was a huge image on the cave wall depicting who they knew was Princess Zeira, surrounded by six stars. When Stewie held down a floor switch, all the fans activated at once, but when he stepped off, they stopped. There was also a Fudgepuffsicle bushel, so Augustus knew what this puzzle entailed. “I think I’ll go it alone here.” he said, taking the ice cream. “It’d be less complicated. You kids will guide me across, right?”

“Any time, Captain.” Stewie smiled.

“Heh he. That’s my seaman.” Without fear, Augustus bit the popsicle and inflated. Stewie pressed the switch so the floor fan would blow him up diagonal toward a ceiling fan. Stewie got off the switch before Augustus hit the fan, and he was able to float under the ceiling fan, allowing it to blow him downward. A fan that was on a pillar blew him across the darkness, toward a sharp stalagmite, but under a stalactite. Stewie stopped the fans when the captain passed the stalactite, so Augustus would float up in front of a fan on said stalactite, which would blow him further and over the stalagmite.

The next fan blew Augustus alongside the wall with the image of Zeira. This close, he could see a line of symbols, and Penelope caught these symbols through the camera on August’s suit. A fan threatened to blow him into spikes, so Stewie stepped off the switch to prevent this. Augustus floated slightly up and got in front of a new fan that pushed him toward a foothold. He deflated and finally made land.

“Interesting.” Penelope said. “I think those symbols you just passed represent numbers from, like, a really long time ago. If I were to guess, the numbers have to be… 14, 15, 1, 8, 19, 1, 18, 11, 8, 1, 4, 12, 15, 20, 19, 15, 6, 19, 16, 1, 3, 5. I wonder what it means?”

“It means that Mouse People must have built this place if you could decipher that.” Augustus remarked.
“Very funny. Just keep going. This cave has to end sooner or later.”

Augustus crossed a short bridge to a ledge with a tunnel. He spared a look at the designs in the creamy cave before he made it to the final room. Using his Corn-Clambers, he stomped up the creamy stairs of an altar. At the top, he gazed at the shining, sunny treasure he had sought in this dungeon. (End song.)

He gaped at the luscious candy, its sunny light glinting off his shades. “…There was… never a Sun Cream.”

“What do you mean?” Penelope asked.

The Lost Candy was a huge, white key with an orange sun design for a head. Augustus reached up and pulled it from the pedestal it was lodged into. “The Rock Nut… Cupcake Core… the Gear Heart… Sugar Fuel… and now this. The Lost Candies… clearly, they are parts to a machine.”

“Are you serious?”

“I am.” Augustus clutched the key tight. “The only question is… what kind of machine does it make?”

The temple trembled suddenly. The abandoned pedestal shook and POPPED out of its station, a geyser of cream gushing out. Augustus held an arm up to defend from droplets and jumped down. The place began flooding. “Yeah, I kind of expected that.” (Play “Sawmill Thrill” from Tropical Freeze!)

Augustus bolted through the tunnel he just passed through, which erupted cream spouts in random areas, forcing him to run around or use his Corn-Clambers to go up a wall and get around them. When he was back in the fan room, he ate a Puffsicle and signaled Stewie to switch on the fans, as one would blow him back to the babies’ platform. He ordered the trio to put their suits back on as they jumped into the cream and quickly swam through the waterway. Fans appeared on either wall and blew them left or right, but it didn’t hold up their progress in escaping the huge glob of thick cream behind them.

They got to the dark passage, and as a result of the avalanche, the area was spinning in whirlpools as the anglerfish and jellyfish were blowing around. The kids were caught in these whirlpools, so they had to maneuver their selves to the corresponding ones, avoiding the jellyfish, but using them as guides to the exit. They resurfaced and had to head up the steep tunnel, but as expected, it was too slippery for their Corn-Clamber Boots. “Nel, I’m tossing you up there! Find something that can help!” Augustus grabbed the cave child and chucked her up the tunnel.

Nel was about to slide, but she thought fast and leapt to a safe floor with a Rock Candy bushel. She grabbed three pieces and slid back down, giving each one to her friends and sharing a crystal sphere with Augustus. However, they quickly rolled their spheres into the nearby candy corn spikes, enabling them to go up the slope just before the flood filled in. The twin pillars room was in the process of flooding, but Augustus saw several Big Cream Chus floating below. “Nel, I’m tossing you up there! Find something that can help!” Augustus grabbed the cave child and chucked her up the tunnel.

Their rock spheres broke against the entrance to the hall where they had to cross a cream pit with Corn-Clambers. The cream pool was mixing with thick cream, so they needed to cross the wall again. They did so one at a time, for the cream droplets fell down faster. Finally, they put on their Cinnamon Suits and swam through the first, final passage. The current helped push them along, but they had to avoid boulders that fell from the ceiling. They could turn right in the passage with all the Gum Cheeps, but thick cream spewed out of the walls and threatened to flood them in.

The crew managed to maneuver around the cream, and from there it was straight up through the shaft that was under the original pool of Sun Cream. “Mmmmm!” Nel lost her grip on Augustus due to his forceful swimming. He looked down in shock, seeing her fall into the rising thick cream. Almost instinctively, he swam down to grab the cavegirl, but the cream caught them as Augustus tried to shake free. “Just go, you two! Leave this to me!”

Almost hesitantly, Stewie and Maggie used their boost functions to escape from the pool and climb on shore. “There you are! Where’s Augustus?!” Penelope shouted.

They looked as the pool began to bubble, and before their eyes, Augustus and Nel came flying out when it erupted into a fountain. The clouds cleared away and allowed the sun to highlight the delectable wonder. Teams of Shy Guy came climbing up the mountain, yelling joyfully as they jumped into the sunny fountain, relishing in its everlasting cream. The others stared amazed for a second before Augustus and Nel crashed on the ground.

“WOOHOOOO!” The captain cheered, raising the Sun Key skyward. “That was DEEEEELICIOUS!”

“The key was plugging the fountain all this time!” Stewie beamed. “Astonishing!”

“I gotta hand it to ya, Captain.” Penelope said, licking some cream off her nose. “You know how to go out with a bang. Now, um, about our deal…”

“I think we should take this parley up with Captain Slag, don’t you agree?”

“Just what I was thinkin’. The captain’s a few miles off on their flagship. If you wanna go and get your plane, I’ll meet ya there.”

“He doesn’t happen to have any showers, does he?”

“Oh, you probably don’t want their shower. Robots keep it kinda hot.” (End song.)

Grayson Household, May 13; night time

“So there’s a hell of a lot of dust under the refrigerator,” Ashley said as the family and their guests were having dinner, “I mean HELL of a lot, and I think there was a banana peel.”

Wendy glanced at Lee beside her, who was sunk below the table in embarrassment. Ashley continued, “So then Lee, the little sweetie, tried to make a self-cleaning service robot from some old 4x4 tech… It went crazy and tried to lead an uprising at his school!!”

Wendy and the family (minus Lee of course) laughed at the hilarious story. “It killed the pet hamster Nibbles and he got a war funeral!” Leanne exclaimed.

“Oh, Mom? Dad?” Lee spoke weakly. “Can we please not tell embarrassing stories about me to Wendy?”

“You’re right, Lee.” Leanne said kindly. “It’s up to your girlfriend to discover these things on her own.”

“I DO NOT like her!” Lee shouted, cheeks red. He glanced at Wendy, who looked taken aback. “I mean, not romantically.”
“I don’t mean to sound rude, but if Lee doesn’t want to talk about these stories, I don’t think you should.” Wendy spoke politely.

“Okay, we’ll stop.” Leanne ate a piece of her steak. “So Carla, any funny stories you wanna share about Wendy?”

“Well, while she has been improving in recent days, it is stark contrast compared to how she was.” Carla was sitting in a high chair and given a roasted fish. (At first, she considered it offensive.) “Dr. Facilier once tasked her with turning a pencil into a foot-long sandwich by utilizing four different potions in a combination.”

“Please don’t tell that one!” Wendy clasped her forehead in embarrassment.

“Details aside, she ended up creating a sentient sandwich that was shaped like a skunk, spoke French, and wanted to marry her.”

“You’re telling it.” Wendy pulled her shirt up over her head.

“Oh, don’t be so hard on yourself, Child. Every mistake you make means you learned something new.”

“SEE, Leanne??” Lee retorted.

“That’s just what people say to make their selves feel better.” Leanne replied. “It doesn’t change the fact that Lord Vacuumus left emotional scars on all of our classmates.”

“Not as much as Lee when he found out Pretty Princess Sparklecrown wasn’t real.” David said.

“I know her!” Wendy beamed – Lee’s face was planted against the table. “We used to watch that cartoon in my orphanage.”

“Yeah, Lee and Leanne used to watch it, too. Lee was in love with the princess and wanted to buy all her merchandise.” David smiled humorously at the memory. “He ended up having way more girl toys than Leanne-”

“You-know-what, I’m-not-hungry.” Lee stood up and stomped out of the room. “I’ll be outside, hoping I get eaten by a werewolf.”

“Fine, but tell Diwata to get off the roof if she’s out there.” Leanne told him.

“Um… I would also like to be excused if that’s okay.” Wendy said.

“Sure it is.” Ashley smiled. “You probably won’t be up for our boring grown-up stories. Okay, so I was playing Hero’s Duty online, one of my jackass ‘teammates’ made a bargain with the enemy and TOTALLY LED ME TO A BOMB TRAP! I ripped my headset in half and-…”

While Ashley continued her “boring” story, Wendy went outside and found Lee lying on the grass, gazing at the stars. “Lee… I’m sorry if I’m ruining your dinner. This probably wasn’t how you were hoping it would go.”

“Sigh, it isn’t your fault, Wendy. They tell stories about me all the time. When we have guests, when they’re on the phone, or when they’re chatting online. I should’ve told them to lay off me tonight, but… I guess I hoped they wouldn’t. What about you? Do Carla and Facilier make fun of you a lot?”
“Of course not.” Wendy lay beside him. “They’re really nice and they love me a lot. I’m sure your family loves you, too, Lee. That’s why they love to talk about you.”

“Yeah, they love to talk about my screw-ups.” Lee rolled on his side. “I bet Cheren’s family never makes fun of him. Or Sheila’s, or Nebula’s. They did things that make WAY more exciting stories. I bet it’s all their parents talk about with other people.”

“I wouldn’t know anything about them… but I doubt they’re perfect. They’re human just like we are.”

“Actually, they’re half-human.”

“Oh.” Well, she did say she didn’t know much about them. Cheren looked human, last she checked.

“But I get what you’re saying, Wendy.” Lee returned on his back. “It’s just, I’d like the chance to do something memorable. Something that people can be grateful for.”

“You already did do something like that, Lee. You rescued me from Professor Bob; you became my friend.”

“Oh… I guess I did.”

“Were you hoping for someone else’s approval?”

“N-No, that’s not what I meant!” he yelled panickingly. “I’m glad I rescued you, Wendy. But compared to what those other people do, it just feels… small.”

“That doesn’t matter. Small, nice gestures are still nice. I’m really grateful that you saved me… oh.” Wendy retraced her words.

“What?” Lee cocked a brow.

“For some reason, I feel like I said that before somewhere.” Wendy smiled and blushed. “The small gesture thing.”

“Where?”

“…I have no idea.” She laughed sheepishly.

“You’re weird, Wendy.” Lee poked her nose.

“Heh heh heh heh!”

“He he he!” He was delighted by her laugh. They layed back down for a minute. Lee lifted his head up and looked right. “Oh, yep, there she is.”

“Who?” Wendy sat up.

“Diwata.” He indicated the blonde girl laying on the roof of the next-door house. Her eyes were fixed on the half moon. “Hey, Diwata! Are you gonna turn into a half-wolf??”

“SHHHHH!” Dee-Dee hissed. “Be quiet, Leeee! I’m trying to hear the voices of the mooooon.”

“Dee, you sound like a song from a Disney movie. Leanne says get off the roof.”
“But it’s sooooooo hiiiiigh. Lee, can we go up to the moon?”

“Lee, I thought the Kids Next Door had a Moonbase?” Wendy inquired.

“Yes, Wendy, we do. Diwata, we go to the moon all the time, why don’t we visit it in the morning?”

“BOOOOOO! Dee-Dee wanna go up NOW!”

“Then ask Lulu or somebody to take you because Lee-Lee is tired. Sigh, honestly, I’m not sure what her problem is.” Lee said to Wendy.

“And she does this every night?”

“Just about. Well, you wanna go back inside? If we’re lucky, we’ll be in time for the story of how I was Baby New Year.”

“Heh heh, you were?” Wendy laughed as they got up to go in.

“I probably was, for all we know.”

Diwata huffed at them in annoyance and continued staring at the moon. “Huh?” A tiny star twinkled across the sky. It glittered blue and was unlike any other star. But Dee could see it for what it was.

It was a girl with blue skin and a beautiful pair of glowing wings. They shaped like a butterfly’s and were made of water, drawing power from the moon.

The ‘star’ whisked under the moon and soared beyond the sky. “Will you take me to the moon… Pretty Star?”

Negaverse

The Man With the Red Eye sat with legs crossed, meditating in the gentle night breeze. He was floating 10,000 feet in the sky, but any fear of falling was meaningless to him. … The rapid pounding of a chopper’s propeller broke the silence, and Red Eye opened his eye to see his Negaverse counterpart using a helicopter to fly level with him. The wind from the propeller nearly blew Red Eye away. “YOU REALLY DON’T LIKE KEEPING IT SUBTLE.” he yelled.

“YOU’RE THE ONE WHO WANTED TO MEET UP HERE!” Blue Eye shouted. “YOU KNOW I CAN’T FLY!”

“NO MATTER. OUR MEETING WILL COMMENCE AS SCHEDULED. SILENCIO.” Red Eye cast a spell to mute the helicopter entirely. He remained afloat outside as he spoke to his Negative. “Sigh… now then: The date in which I had planned to meet my daughter is merely days away. And the dreadful Apocalypse we have long been preparing for is scheduled in half a month. It is almost terrifying how quickly time has passed.”

“My sentiments exactly.” Blue Eye agreed. His voice was a higher pitch of Red Eye’s deep voice. “And your plan is to stage this meeting on a planet called Lunaria, correct?”

“That is true. After we have at long last become acquainted, I will teach Wendy everything I know, and she will join our cause. I plan for her to meet your daughter once again as well.”

“I am sure Ydnew will be delighted to hear this… yet, I am concerned that it won’t be the reunion you anticipate. Would your daughter accept your violent tendencies? What if she doesn’t share your perspective? If she were to fear you?”

“I am positive she will understand my plight. I would not put it past her to feel resent for me, given my method in ‘raising’ her. But she will not hate me for long.”

“So you say. I just advise you to be careful what you wish for. Since we are on the topic… when did you plan to attack the World Government?”

“I do not wish to create more panic while the Quest for Seven Lights is still taking place. And yet, I cannot expect the Leaders will sit idly by for much longer. Set a date for May 25. Or -25 Yam in your case.”

“I will do just that. But next time… could we please meet on the ground?”

“Hm hm, very well.” Red Eye smiled. The deafening chopper pounding returned when he dispelled the Silencio, watching as his Negative flew back to the earth. “Perhaps now would be a good time to speak to Dr. Facilier. I should get Arlon to prepare.”

Slag’s Fleet

The Marzipan Pirates met back with Penelope in the sky, a few miles from Buttermilk Building. With her permission, the biplane was allowed to make land on the captain’s flagship. She led the five through a bar of loud, drunken robot pirates, who spoke in the typical pirate turn-of-phrase and engaged in mindless brawls. “It be MOI turn to play with the Princess Barbie Rainbow Set!”

“Don’t gawk at me in such a tone, ye rapticious rapscallion! Er Ay will haul this cutlass up yer artificial spine and see ye capsize!”

“They certainly embrace the piratey tradition.” Augustus said.

“More along the lines that they’re men.” Penelope replied. “So where did you say that cavegirl was from?”

“The Land Before Time, where do you think?”

“You mean to tell me you actually traveled through time?”

“Wouldn’t you like to know.” He smirked, starting a new lollipop.

“Just make sure you watch out for her. I hear that people who travel through time and stay in a different time era too long get killed.”

“Killed?”

“Yeah, because the universe demands it or something. It upsets the balance of things, ruins the Space-Time Continuum, you know all that fun stuff.”

“But when you think about it, aren’t we all traveling through a river of time?”

“Nice poetry, Captain. But taking shortcuts through that river is another thing.”

They arrived at Captain Slag’s cabin, where the Rusty Pete twins were playing Tug-o-War over Termina Slag’s Mask. “Oi’m pretty sure that I’M the Termina Pete!”

“My backup hard-drive you’re Termina Pete! You just want the mask ALL to yourself!”
“Your backup hard-drive is nothing but cheap adult films on the Internet! Gimme back me captain’s mask!”

“STOW IT!” Captain Slag bonked them both on the head. “Why fight over that dumb old mask when the REAL Slag be right before yer eyes? You love and respect the same grog-chugging captain… SO LEARN TA SHARE!”

“WE WILL, CAPTAIN!”

“Ahhh, Penelope!” Slag marched up to the visitors. “Ay see you’ve returned with Lolly-Licking Augustus.”

“Iron beats stone.” Slag raised his own fist. “It make no difference to me. Seeing that you are here, ye must have agreed to the terms of my parley.”

“‘Agreed’ is a strong word, Slaggy. Let’s talk business. First off, how do I know you aren’t working for Lord Licorice?”

“An understandable concern. Boys?”

Some pirates stepped out from behind a curtain, holding four Blackberry Troops bound and gagged. “Took a little effort, shakin’ down laddies with the most info. And if that ain’t proof enough, maybe this will convince ya. Kill that one.” One of the pirates raised his sword to cut a guard’s neck-

“NO NO NO!” Augustus stopped him. “It’s fine, I believe you!”

“Beautiful.” Slag signaled the pirates to take the guards to the brig. Another crewmate brought him a gallon of grog, which the captain chugged down. “So, ye want to talk business then? First matter regarding, what of the Lost Candies? How many you have?”

“On hand… four. One of them is being looked after by someone else.”

“May I see them?”

“Will you steal them?”

“’ey now, Ay called a parley. I may be made of iron, but Ay’m a man of my word. You’ve nothing to fear.”

“Sigh… Let him see them, Stewie.”

The baby took out his Infi-Cube and shot the four Lost Candies onto Slag’s desk. He observed the legendary sweets with interest. “Most fascinating. And what did ye say the candies were used for, again?”

“He thinks that they’re parts to a machine.” Penelope answered.

“What makes you think it’s most foul?” Augustus raised a brow.
“Har har har.” Slag put the cupcake down. “I have a proposal for ya, Captain August. It’s plainly obvious that the World Government fears the existence of these delicacies. Or Lord Licorice would not have been sent to secure them, perhaps destroy them. If it truly be a machine that these sweets conceive, then such a device may be devastating beyond compare. Even more than the horrors of the Eight Sugary Wonders. To seek the Lost Candies would be to seek to create this machine. So here is my plan, Augustus: we construct this machine together, and destroy the World Government.”

“Destroy… the Government?”

“You see, Lad, the quota for a space pirate to become Emperor isn’t just a handful of islands: ’tis a handful of planets. And fer thousands of years, no space pirate could conquer this lonely world because of the Government’s power. Some pirates had the bolts to challenge them, such as Golden Fist Marine or Big Mom herself. But the Lost Candies may provide us with the key. If Captain Slag would be the man to destroy Earth’s mighty Government, Ay will be recognized as Space Pirate Emperor!”

“Time out, Captain!” Penelope spoke up. “I thought we were just gonna sell the candies and give Augustus part of the profit! Taking down the World Government… isn’t that kind of much?”

“If having your name known across galaxies be too much for ye, then by all means, walk the plank and lose the opportunity. And you, Augustus, will forever be known as the man who helped make it all possible. If lubbers were to mess with ye, they will tremble, knowing they will have to tango with Emperor Slag. I acknowledge yer skill, boy. It is rare that I say such a thing. And Ay’m sure that the feeling’s mutual.”

“Hm hm hm, you wish!” Augustus held the dry lolli stick between his fingers. “The pirate I respect most of all is Sunny Fist Sheila Frantic.” He flicked the stick into Slag’s cup.

The captain remembered the half-raccoon lass that kicked him beyond Galaxia like a football. “Grrrrrrrr!” He boiled so hotly that his grog caught fire. Rusty Pete put it out with an extinguisher. “Well, we all be entitled to our opinion… wretch. What is your response to my proposal?”

“I was never planning to destroy anyone. I’m collecting the Lost Candies for a friend. But to tell the truth… even I’m wondering what he intends to use them for.” Or what the fairies planned to do with them.

“Then why don’t we call this decision a stalemate? How ’bout, instead, we aid you in locating the sixth and final candy? I’m sure ye already know where it lie?”

The four kids and Penelope looked at Augustus. They were eager to hear the location of the last Lost Candy. “Actually… Luviro never told me where the last candy was found. I only knew the five of them.”

“Then you need to ask Luviro where it is.” Penelope affirmed.

“I will, but I don’t want you guys following me. And when I find out, I can’t promise I won’t try to get it myself.”

“A fair trade, but when Lord Licorice comes a hollerin’ and shootin’ his pistol, ye’ll beg for Captain Slag. But whether you hunt it first or not, ye’d best return to me soon. Do we have an accord?” He reached his hand out.

“Hmm… Accord.” Augustus shook it.
“Excellent. Now, Penelope will escort you back to your vessel.”

“No thanks, we can find our way.” The teen winked, recollecting the four Lost Candies before he led his crew away.

“Augustus, you can’t really mean you trust them.” Stewie said.

“I’m not stupid, Stewie. I’m not even up for destroying the Government. But either way, we’ll have to fight with Slag or Licorice over the candies. We’ll accept his bargain for now and cross it when the time comes. I just hope Luviro is still alive…”

Climbers House; night of May 14

Carla showed Wendy a card of a seaweed-like plant with roots that looked like rat tails. “Gillyweed! Found in the Mediterranean.” Wendy answered. Carla nodded and picked another card from the deck. This one showed a golden leaf. “A Twileaf, found in Twilight Town, Pennsylvania.” Carla nodded and got a card with a yellow plant that curved like a worm, and grew from twin leaves. “That’s a Heart Plant!”

Carla shook her head. She pointed at the tip of one of its leaves. It looped and crossed over itself. “Ohhhh. A Hurt Plant.”

“Very good, Child.” Carla smiled approvingly. “You know your Herbology well.”

“I do my best.” She shrugged.

“WENDY, WENDY!” Sonny and Donna bounced into her room. “Dr. Facilier has a visitor, come down and see!” Donna yelled.

“He’s all blue, like you!” Sonny said excitedly. “We think he’s your dad!”

“REALLY?!” Wendy immediately jumped off the bed and raced to the basement.

“Wendy’s father is here? Is this true?” Carla asked, feeling this was too sudden.

Wendy tripped in going down to the basement and broke through the door, but she quickly got to her feet. “DAD, is it really… you?”

The man standing above her had blue skin, a long white mustache, and a black suit. “You must be Miss Wendy, I presume?” He held a gloved hand down. “We are well met. My name is Arlon, and I hail from the Moon Planet, Lunaria.”

“BLUE MAN GROUP!” The Ice Climbers slid down the stairs and jumped on Wendy’s back, shaking his hand.

“Are you gonna dance for us?” Sonny asked quickly.

“Are you an alien??” followed Donna.

“Is Wendy an alien disguised as a human?”

“Are you gonna turn US blue?”

“Answer before we submit you to torture!”

“PLEASE get off of her.” Carla ordered. The twins complied as Wendy got up. “Sir, are you really “Wendy’s father?”

“Heh heh heh, no.” Facilier laughed. “They got the wrong idea. This gentleman is Arlon, and he was sent here by Wendy’s father.”

“My father sent you?” Wendy asked. “But why?”

Arlon cleared his throat and spoke professionally, “It is at the humble request of Master ‘Man With the Red Eye’ that I assume the role of escort to Miss Marvell, Dr. Facilier, and these two delinquents, and ensure a safe and pleasant travel to my humble homeworld, wherein you shall—”

“He’s going to take us to meet yo’ dad!” Facilier exclaimed.

“REALLY?!?” Wendy’s face never looked brighter.

“THE KING OF BLUE MEN!” the twins cheered.

“YEP, this kind old servant is taking us to Lunaria!” The doctor patted Arlon’s shoulder. “According to him, your dad’s already up there, and he ain’t leavin’ until you come!”

“I DON’T BELIEVE THIS!” Wendy grabbed both men in a hug. “THANK YOU, this is the happiest day of my life, I’ve always wanted to meet my parents, you have no idea how grateful I feel right now!”

“Yes, well, be that as it may, I must lay down a few ground rules!” Arlon stated. Wendy pulled away from them. “First and foremost, Lunaria is a very peaceful and sacred place. I want no roughhousing up there of any sort, understand? Secondly—”

DING DONG. The doorbell rang. Thinking it was a customer, Facilier approached the portal-door and peeped through the eye hole. “Some kids… Wait a minute. Ain’t that Sector RZ?”

“Lemme see.” Wendy came over and stood on her tippy-toes. Indeed, Lee Andrew and his friends were out there. “It is!” She opened the door quickly.

“Wendy, hey!” Lee and his three friends stepped in right away.

“Wow, Doc, you really changed up the shop.” Lulu said, studying the change in décor and size.

“We are a little busy at the moment.” Carla said strictly. “Can we help you?”

“We haven’t seen Diwata since last night!” Lee shouted.

“I TOLD you to tell her to get off the roof.” Leanne scolded.

“SHUT UP. Sigh, we looked in town and on Moonbase, but we couldn’t find her. We were wondering if the doctor could see her with his crystal ball.”

“We have some hair from Dee’s brush!” Leanne held up three blonde hair strands.

“I’ll see what I can do.” Facilier went to his table and took out a small bottle of liquid, placing the hair inside it. Some yellow smoke floated out as the doctor waved it around the crystal ball. Clouds swirled around inside the ball before they cleared to reveal a full moon. “Are you sure she ain’t on Moonbase? ’Cause that’s all I can guess.”

“Well, she wasn’t.” Denny Whitby argued. “We checked the rest of the moon in case you ask.”
Arlon stared at the image more closely. “Wait a moment… that is not Earth’s moon. It is… Lunaria.”

“Lunaria?” Lee asked.

“He said it was his home planet.” Wendy replied.

“Yes, but the planet is untraceable to anyone who does not know where it is.” Arlon said. “She would need the guidance of someone from Lunaria to go there.”

“You don’t think she was kidnapped, do you?” Leanne asked.

“Why would anyone kidnap Dee and take her to some moon planet?” Lee replied.

“It does seem ludicrous.” Arlon agreed. “Or… is it?”

“Why wouldn’t it be?”

“Hmmm… I did not plan to take so many children to Lunaria… but I suspect you will join us to Lunaria with the intention of finding your friend. Let it be known that once you arrive… you will be sworn to secrecy.”

Penelope is from Sly Cooper – good old master of disguises. :P Sorry to cut this short, but I must go. Next time, we head to Lunaria. Kids, don’t swim in cream.

“PEOPLE OF EARTH, YOUR DAYS ARE NUMBERED.” A tiny robot with vacuum hands stared at the readers with evil red eyes. “Lord Vacuumus will return! The Dust Bunny Empire will rise and filthify everything! Ha ha ha! Ha ha ha! Ha ha-”

“Is zat a lovely dear I hear?” A sandwich shaped like a skunk appeared and spoke in a French accent. “Oh hohn, c’mere, my delectable fillie.” He felt attracted to Vacuumus.

“Aaaah! Desist! Desist!” The robot fled.

“I will hug you, und kiss you, and we will be wed in ze spiciest of sauces.”

“Nooooooooo!”
Okay, everyone, it’s time to begin the sixth saga of the story, the Lazarus Saga! There’s only three sagas to go in this story, so the plot progresses ever so suddenly! I’d also like to give a shout-out to my new reader(s), IDA Official. Glad you like Zach, ’cause boy do I have plans for him. ;)

Chapter 52: Why Wait Later

Washington; White House

“As President of the United States,” Jessie announced from his desk, wearing his white cowboy hat proudly, “I hereby call this first meeting of the Seven Lights to order!” Sheila Frantic, Fybi Fulbright, Suki Crystal, and April Goldenweek were in the room. Suki and Sheila were sitting on chairs, the former swinging her feet happily, Fybi was floating, and April was painting a picture of their meeting.

“Only five, but still a good number.” April said.

“So, will you kind ladies please explain this fkin’ quest to me one more time?” the president asked.

“I don’t even know it, either.” Sheila replied, leaning her head on her fist. “But every time I go to sleep, I end up walkin’ through a dream world and helpin’ some bloke get to some place… and by the looks of it, you blokes are Seven Lights.”

“And so, my mind doth wonder, wherefore do we stand?” Fybi did a twirl in the air. “Wherefore hath we been chosen? Hast the grand writers saw fortune in our souls or our abilities? Art we meant to stand together as one?”

“I am Groot!” Suki joked bubbly, having no idea why she was brought here.

“According to Polokus,” Jessie explained, “the person who wrote the Twenty Keys Prophecy is Calliope, and it was intended to stop Bill Cipher’s master, ___. And I still can’t say his king NAME!”

“Still, that’s the closest we are to figuring out the mystery behind this whole quest.” April said. “But why did Calliope choose us? Especially me, considering…”

“Mayhap once all Lights are hither, the answers will be known.” Fybi replied.

“Oi, April, when were you gonna make that brain for Rayman?” Sheila inquired.

“Oh. I kind of got sidetracked with the gallery adventure. But I’ll whip it up as soon as I go to sleep again.”
“HEEEEELP!” The man in the green jacket, Exposition Guy, ran into the office. “There’s an army of robots outside of the police station!”

“No they’re not!” Richard Teague ran in after him. “The robots are outside of the WHITE HOUSE!”

“The White House? You mean this isn’t the police station?”

“ Probably isn’t.” Jessie remarked.

“Oh. Well, hi, Mr. President!” He smiled and waved. “YAAAAH!” Then he ran flailing his arms.

The five Lights headed outside to find the White House’s courtyard swarming with Plankton robots. A massive, robotic crab stomped toward the palace as a huge screen projected the green, one-eyed microorganism. “Attention, chosen ones of the Seven Lights Prophecy: this is Sheldon J. Plankton, founder and CEO of Chum Bucket Industries, here to congratulate you on your past endeavors. We at Team Gnik were happy to play a role in your awakening.”

“Hardly!” April shouted. “You guys attacked Mocha and shrunk Chimney!”

“And you captured me and my sister!” Jessie followed.

“Oh, water under the bridge, it worked out for everyone, didn’t it? But I’m sure by now, you kids understand this quest perfectly! ...Do you?”

“Just spill it, ya dumb jellybean!” Sheila yelled. “What do you want from us?”

“I want you to come over to our side. The side of Lesser Lord Ragaj Gnik! We plan to unite the Twenty Keys, anyway. And this way, you’ll be safe from the World Government!”

“And why should we trust you?” Jessie asked suspiciously.

“Spongebob!”

“And it isn’t just him. I captured the angel’s little friends, too!” The screen showed Sector W locked in a cage.

“I have doubts that one as small as thee could capture Anthony!” Fybi argued.

“That’s why I had Dennis teach them a lesson.” The five looked down at the Fishman bounty hunter with sunglasses and a cowboy uniform. He cracked his knuckles. “Don’t worry, I won’t hurt them too badly. I just want you five to come in so we can have a little chat! I’m sure you want to know more about this little quest…” Plankton smirked connivingly.

The five Lights suspected if they didn’t play along, Plankton would make their friends pay the price. Still, if he could get this far, why not try to kidnap them, too? Was it because the Lights were too strong? Certainly, Sheila, Fybi, and Suki were. “Very well. We’ll play along.” President Jessie decided.

“Wot? We can take them!” Sheila fist-palmed.

“Later, Sheila. We don’t want our friends hurt.”
“Excellent. Lead them in, Dennis.”

The Fishman escorted the kids up into a hatch under the crab ship. When they were safely onboard, the hatch closed, and the ship took off.

Midway Peak

“Head President Morgan,” Benjamin yelled in anger and fright, “when I accepted the position as your butler, there was NOTHING in the job description about-”

The tiny butler fell backward when Morgan stomped her foot next to him. “The job description said you would care to my needs.” Morgan said, sitting on the couch in the dark room while the TV provided the only light. “Including if I needed a little bit of entertainment. Now, get to work.”

“Ohhhhh!” The butler picked up the (giant) brush, dipped it in the jar of indigo paint, and began coloring the Head President’s toenails. Morgan used her psychic to grab a jug of butterbeer from the lamp desk, then began to drink. “If I knew I was up for this, I would have signed up to work for Lady Daphne’s apprentice.”

“Sadly, Amy Fowler was captured by our adversaries, Team Gnik.” Morgan paused in her drinking. There was a fizzy mustache over her lips. “At least I’m paying you a hefty wage. Would you like some butterbeer?”

“No thank you, Mizz. I predict you will put me in the glass if I say ‘yes.’”

Suddenly, the door to the room burst open, and General Shy Guy ran in. “HOLY COWBOYS astronaut pirates and old people stalkin’ the Jew shop! We got BIG TROUBLE, President Morgan!”

“Can it with the expositions. We already have a ponytail guy in a green jacket doing that. What is it?”

“We’ve been keepin’ tabs on the American White House ever since that snot-nosed PUNK got elected as president! Team Gnik’s robots showed up out of nowhere and knocked out our troops! Then those five Seven Lights stepped onto their ship like a bunch of surrendering pansies!”

“Team Gnik captured five of the Lights?!” Morgan shouted, subconsciously sliding her feet forward and knocking Benjamin down.

“Miss Head President, you made me get some on your toe!”

“I betcha ALL the money in your bank that they’ll snatch the other Lights ’soon as they wake up!”

“Only two left that need to find their Gibberish Rocks… we’re running out of time.” Morgan bit her lower lip as she tried to think.

“The last two Gibberish Rocks are still in the possession of our cohorts!” General Guy shouted, his militant tone unchanging. “They won’t let them Lights get them!”

“That’s what we were told regarding President Jimmy’s rock under the White House. Yet, look what happened. If Team Gnik has five of them in their custody, then we need to snatch the other two.”

“But we don’t got no clue where those two at!”
“On the contrary, I happen to know one of them. She is the daughter of one of my childhood friends. President Carter is already alerted to her.”

“WILL DO, Miss Pres.!” The Shy Guy dashed out of the room.

“Although at this point… I really question the Government’s budget.” Morgan said to herself. “Even Azkaban couldn’t hold its prisoners. Sigh… Oh, sorry, Benjamin.”

She released the butler from her toe-grip, and he fell on the floor, looking much slimmer. “Honestly, you psychicbenders leave no reason for exercise.”

Cleveland Park

“YO, YO!” Beat sang, making a rockstar sign with his fingers. “We are The Gang and we got the goods!”

“We’re rough and we’re tough and we got neat hoods!” Rhyme followed.

“The Knights of Virginia, we ah the winnuh!” Kimaya sang.

“AND THERE AIN’T NO ONE BIGGUH!” Kaleo Anderson screamed, shaking the ground when the giant jumped behind them.

“WORD!” The four chorused.

Don Quixote Sugar sat on a picnic table as she watched them sing. “Um, that was…” She said with a repulsed and nervous grin.

“BEAUTIFUL!” Meloetta cheered. “Ten out of ten!”

“So, we got the goods?” Kimaya asked, crossing her arms and making rockstar signs. “We can raise the roof of yo’ music planet?”

“To be honest, it was only four sentences and one word… which was literally ‘word.’” Sugar answered. “I may not be a fan of rap, but real songs have more flesh and soul to it. Besides, it… just doesn’t sound pleasant to the ears.” She sweated a little, having never criticized anyone else’s music before.

“Yo, we takin’ this from an alien girl with her pet fairy??” Beat questioned.

“You hang out with a giant and a skeleton boy, and you question Sugar’s advice?” Cheren Uno remarked as he approached from behind his friend.

“Screw her!” Beat retorted. “We just jazzin’ over he-yuh and she comes to us all curious and whatnot!”

“I’m a little thirsty, anyway.” Sugar said as she got up. “Excuse me a moment.”

The 14-year-old-and-growing girl walked over to the park drinking fountains. She used to be short enough to drink from the little kids’ fountain, but was tall enough to drink from the big kids’ fountain. After refreshing her throat, she sang with a beautiful tone, “Ooo-OOO-ooaa-OOAAA.”

“Glad to see you’re settling back okay.” Cheren said to her.

“Yeah, but I still wanna get better at musicbending.” Sugar replied. “I think the more I sing, the faster this Age Stasis will wear off. Then I’ll be at my peak. But since my feet keep growing, I don’t bother wearing shoes.”

“I think people sing better when they’re barefoot!” Meloetta twirled. “An open voice needs to come from an open body!”

“I still get sores.” Sugar blushed. “So, Cheren, how’s the quest been coming? With the Twenty Keys and all?”

“Hmm…” Cheren switched to a serious aura. “Well, counting April from Sector W7, that makes five. And Nereh tells me that his friends have been finding the Darknesses. In fact, we’re letting them use the Multiverse Portal we found in Gravity Falls. Apparently, this is what Bill Cipher had in mind for it. But another concern is the Eight- er, Nine Firstborn. They seem to play a part in this quest. Meloetta, do you know anything?”

“About the Twenty Keys Prophecy? Not a clue.” The Music Goddess shook her head.

“That brings up another question, do you know where Arceus is?”

“I don’t know that, either. Even though I was in a distant galaxy, I did feel Arceus’s energy after his return. Then one day, it seemed to just… vanish. Over a year ago, in fact.”

“You felt Arceus vanish over a year ago?” Cheren cocked a brow. “That seems awfully recent. I’m definitely sure someone in the universe would’ve noticed him.”

“But still, even if we don’t know all the answers yet, we’re making tons of progress in this quest.” Sugar smiled, eating a grape from her basket. “Five Lights, four Firstborn, and it sounds like you all are getting stronger with your bending.”

“We have.” Cheren stared at his left hand with a proud smile. “I still can’t believe Sector V defeated one of the World Leaders. It would be real nice if we could pick them off one at a time. Still… we can’t underestimate them. Between the World Leaders, Corporate Presidents, and that Team Gnik… our work’s more than cut out for us.”

“Chereeeeeeen!” They looked over and saw Carol Masterson jog over with her laptop. Her puffy blonde hair was still in buns and she wore her new schoolgirl uniform.

“And it looks like you got more.” Sugar remarked.

“What’s up, Carol?” Cheren asked after she made it over, catching her breath.

“Well, yesterday, I flew to New York and met with a man called Oliver Warbucks. He attended the party at Midway Peak to discover any secrets the Corporate Presidents are keeping. Apparently, he’s against them, too. After I convinced him we were on the same page, he told me something pretty interesting: the Corporate Presidents located and captured the Firstborn Spirits, Azelf, Mesprit, and Uxie!”
“What?!” Cheren jumped at the surprising news. Meloetta shared his look of shock. “The last time I saw Azelf was before I went to Arctic Training 3 years ago!”

“That’s what he told me. He doesn’t know how, but he heard from his friend, Richard, who’s friends with one of Midway’s caterers, whose child goes to Edgar’s School For Servants, and is a teacher’s pet to Mrs. Glassclean, who regularly web-chats with her sister, who is a guard on Mariejoa… when Giovanni worked for the Corporate Presidents, he was able to track down the three Firstborn and contain them. He kept Mesprit for himself, but when Giovanni defected and joined Team Gnik, he took the Firstborn with him. Azelf was given to Doflamingo, and Uxie was entrusted to Head President Morgan.”

“So, Aunt Morgan has Uxie. But, wait… Doflamingo was keeping Azelf in custody? Sugar, did you know about this?”

“Not really. Dad never let us in on his black market deals.”

“Why don’t we go back to Dressrosa and look around?” Carol suggested.

“I’m sure she could’ve escaped on her own by now. In fact, I’m surprised Doflamingo could even hold the Goddess of Willpower. Something’s weird about this. But you’re right, let’s go check it out.”

“Hopefully Dressrosa isn’t too much in shambles after all that.” Sugar said.

During their talk, Kimaya Heartly walked over to Django de los Muertos sitting in the shade of a park tree. He was playing a gentle tune on his guitar, the only pleasant sound in the park besides The Gang’s rapping. “For the record, I thought it sounded alright.” He said charmingly.

“-…” Django felt the urge to answer that truthfully. “Well, I’ve just been buds with Sector V lately. They’ve been a fun bunch. Never woulda guessed Kaleo’s cousin was Dillon.”

“I considered joining the Kids Next Door, but they’re more lawful than I expected ’em to be. Still pretty badass, though.” He made a dramatic strum of his guitar.

“I hope you don’t.” Kimaya rested her hands behind her head. “We don’t see you much and you fun to have. Freakin’ DEAD GUY, walkin’ the street like no one’s biz! You’re too great.”

“Hmph.” He chuckled. “How many kids could come across a walking corpse and want him in their club? You’re really weird, Kim. You don’t even know how I died or where I came from…”

“Not like you ever told us. ’sides, I don’t need to know. ’Cause you a kid that got a bad past, and you ain’t treated right. I mean, ’cause you a dead kid, I’m assuming.”

“Heh heh heh! Yeah, it’s kinda obvious. Hey, wanna hear my new song?”

“Heh heh, okay. Ahem…” Django tuned his guitar, closed his eyes, and began to play softly. “Iiii have long… forsaken… my feelings. I’ve never… beeeeen afraaaaiiiid. The desert that burns…”

His hypnotic notes drew Kimaya into sleep. “The mountains are chiilily. I feel… no…”
“Then somewhere inside... I don’t un-der-stand. This hollow... shell... of miine.” Kimaya felt her body grow numb. “I heard a strange thump... I felt my chest bump... And my eyes began... to shine...?” Django stopped. Kimaya fell asleep, leaning on his shoulder.

Django put his guitar down and stared at her. The three spiked strands of yellow hair sticking out of the hole in her backwards cap. Her round nose, the sleeveless shirt that exposed her little naval. Even in sleep, her face still bore a scowl. Django softly put his left hand over her right, clasping his boney claws over the flesh. Kimaya’s hand was so tiny. He rubbed the back of it with his thumb. I can’t feel anything... I wonder if humans are really warm.

His red eyes stared wistfully at Kimaya’s face. She looked more beautiful. I love her... I loved her for a while. That’s why... I don’t want to ask her. It’s none of their business. And besides... I’m already dead...

Django fell asleep and leaned on Kimaya. Their hands remained intertwined.

Plankton’s Crab Craft

Plankton invited the five Lights to sit at a round table, lined with Krabby Patties, French fries, and Kelp Shakes, which Karen was pouring into cups with straws using her mobile body. “Chum Bucket Industries proudly introduces new fat-free Kelp Shakes!” Plankton said happily, standing on the table. “Now without the toxic waste.”

Sheila slurped from her drink. “Blech. Tastes worse than diet Flurp.”

“I only want the ice!” Suki took the ice out of her shake and ate it.

“Did you drug him or something?” Jessie asked.

“He’s been like that since he brought us here,” Aranea said from Sector W’s cell.

“He’s probably lolling about the Dream Realm.” Plankton said. “Mr. Dark sees him every now and then. Perhaps looking for other Bubble Dreamers.”

“We don’t plan to loll around here too long, either.” April stated, biting a fry. “If you have information to share with us, speak.”

“Oh, fine. Karen?”

They directed their eyes at his Computer W.I.F.E. when she rolled to the side of the table where no one was sitting (there were two empty seats, making seven total). Her screen buzzed as she projected Sheila’s image.

“Sheila Frantic: The Awakener.” Sheila’s image shrunk into the top-left corner with her title written beside it. Suki’s image appeared. “Suki Crystal: The Believer.” The image shrunk under Sheila’s, and the process repeated for these next ones. “Fybi Fulbright: The Seeker. Jessie Sidney: The Dreamer. April Goldenweek: The Creator. These are the titles that were given to you, the Seven Lights. Of the two Lights who have yet to awaken, one of them is ‘The Keeper.’” A silhouette image appeared and shrunk under April’s. “And finally, the Seventh Light, whom Dr. Nefarious has been trying to capture, Maddy Murphy: The Conqueror.” The decommissioner’s image... appeared last.

“The Creator?” April repeated herself. “But who gave us these titles, and why?”

“From what Plankton’s boys were saying, they have something to do with you.” Dennis commented.

“It’s true.” Plankton affirmed. “Sheila is The Awakener because she’s been visiting the Lights in your dreamscapes. Jessie is obviously a Bubble Dreamer, and April’s an artist.”

“Not only that,” April weighed in, “but I switched realities with Guertena, who created the world me and Mary lived in. Judging by my battle with him, maybe I inherited a little more than existence.”

“I, AM, GROOT!” Suki yelled angrily, having been the least informed on this whole prophecy.

“Didst fair Suki hath strong belief in Jack Frost?” Fybi inquired. “And mine given title… mayhap it is my desire to always fly and ‘seek’ yon horizon. But whom wouldst give us such titles?”

“Calliope.” Jessie said simply.

“Right you are, my boy,” Plankton jumped on the edge of his Kelp Shake. “These are the things that Lesser Lord Gnik told us. He didn’t tell me what these titles had to do with the prophecy. The only one I understand is Sheila’s.”

“Do not forget Jessie.” Karen reminded.

“True, there are other Bubble Dreamers, but he was the only one given the knowledge of the prophecy’s writers.”

“Do you people know who Calliope is?” Jessie asked.

“Lord Gnik told us about her.” Plankton answered. “He explained the story after Jessie awakened himself. She is the one whom the prophecy was created to destroy.”

“No it is not!” Jessie jumped to his feet and argued. “Polokus told me she made the prophecy to stop ___! DAMMIT!”

“Lord Gnik said that two people created the prophecy: Calliope, and her friend that Gnik referred to as the Lord of Time.” Karen’s screen depicted an image of two green, hooded figures made of shimmering, mist bodies. “These same two people were the ultimate entities that designed the universe before even Arceus appeared. They are who made the Dimensional Fusion.”

“Are you serious?” April asked, awestruck.

“Gnik’s story doesn’t end there. Those two beings created the Octogan, which produced and stored the energy that would become the pre-universe.” Karen’s screen showed two balls of green light that floated into the two Shimmers’ hands. “The rest of the work was left to Arceus. But then Calliope went rogue. Consumed with the power they possessed, she let it run rampant, distorting the plane of the First Dimension. She tried to do the same to the new universe the gods were making, this one, but the Lord of Time sacrificed himself to destroy her.”

“You’ve got it fking backwards!” Jessie argued. “Calliope created Polokus while Bill Cipher was likely made by this ‘Lord of Time.’ So explain why Bill Cipher tried to KILL US!”

“BECAUSE YOU WERE ON THE WRONG SIDE!” Plankton cried. “When those two gods were destroyed, the Lord of Time’s will was reborn into twenty vessels. Seven of them embodied his thoughts, while thirteen embodied his power. When they come together, they can revive the Lord of Time and stop the rogue Calliope. However, Calliope’s putting up a fight: the Octogan that she created continues to do her work for her, using the World Government. The reason Bill Cipher pretended to work for the Government was to keep an eye on her. And Polokus—"

Sheila jumped over and SMASHED Plankton and the shake he was on between her hands. The green liquid leaked everywhere as Sheila released, viewing the flattened Plankton. “First off, you’re giving me a headache. And second, YOU’RE A freaking liar! If you blokes are supposed to be the good guys, WHY IS IT you’re so bad?!”

Plankton stretched back to 3-D. “We are bad guys! Doesn’t mean we want the universe to be destroyed. And Lord Gnik said once all this was over, the Lord of Time would grant our deepest desires!”

“Well, I don’t believe a BIT of it! If Lord Gnik thought he was so great, then he shouldn’t try ta HIDE it!”

“He knew the World Government would try to get to you and persuade you—”

“BLADDY BLADDY BLAAAAAH! All I know is you drongos are bad guys, and maybe the Government’s bad guys, too, I DON’T KNOW! But I don’t wanna help either ONE of you out!”

“YOU KIDS KNOW LESS THAN US!” Plankton roared. “You don’t know who’s good and who’s BAD, so your only option is to trust us!”

“No it isn’t!” Jessie pounded the table. “Because there’s somebody else we can trust: Calliope.”

“Calliope is DOOMING the universe!”

“You guys and Bill Cipher have done WAY more doom in half a month than Calliope did in a king billion YEARS!”

“He’s right, you guys hurt our friends, so you’re not our friends!” April joined, standing up. “We’ll unite the Twenty Keys and discover the answers on our own! But we don’t mind crushing you on the way!”

“Oh yeah?! Well, what’ll you do if ‘finding your own way’ ends up destroying the universe?!”

“Then stupid us.” Sheila shrugged passively. “I sure as hell rather go down a free sheila than workin’ for blokes I hate.”

“I AM GROOT!” Suki cheered in agreement.

“So if you don’t mind,” Sheila marched over to Sector W’s cage, cracking her knuckles, “I’m gonna bust these wusses out and probably tear this ship a new one.” Karen zipped in front of her, sprayed Sheila with pink gas, and put her to sleep.

“You kids aren’t going ANYWHERE!” Plankton puffed to his muscular adult-size body. “One way or another, you’re my prisoners, and I WILL get you over to our side! Be good kids and cooperate OR ELSE!” On his cue, Karen remotely electrified Sector W’s cage as they screamed in pain.

“Thou art very hospitable.” Fybi glared at him. “I am believing thy story more and more.”

“You can keep us here as long as you want.” Jessie crossed his arms. “We’ll keep believing in Calliope.”

“Oh, yeah? Well, I don’t see Calliope rebutting Lord Gnik’s story!”

“If your trump card is to threaten us, HI don’t really think she needs to rebut!” April choked a chuckle, spreading laughter to her friends.

Hall of Doors

“Bluh!” Sheila startled awake on the side of the river that reflected the night stars. “Crikey… that computer got the jump on me!” She helped herself up. “Grrr… I should wake up and help the mates. …Or maybe…” She looked at the river and saw she was still beside Picture City. She looked further down on her left. The next portal was labeled Olden West.

“Plankton may be a liar… but I think I am an Awakener. So I guess I should do my job then.” She jogged over to the portal and dove inside. (Play “Go West, Young Raccoon” from Sly Cooper: Thieves in Time)

Stage 58: Olden West

Mission: Meet the Sixth Light.

Sheila spun out of a portal set on a large rock. She was standing atop a stone pillar towering over a deep canyon. Her skin quickly adapted to the hot, desert air, the morning sun shining from beyond the canyon walls. There was a skeleton laying dead next to a wooden sign that had the level’s name written in black letters. In the distance behind the sign was a Western village set on a cliff.

Sheila first walked across a broken minecart track hanging over the edge of her pillar. From here, she faced a series of rock pillars, and could jump to grab the rugged side of the closest one. She climbed around the pillar to get in position to jump to the next one, doing so quickly before this pillar tumbled into the canyon. Sheila clutched a thin ledge to climb around the next pillar, dodging the Snapdragon that popped out of the roof above her, then she jumped to the next pillar before that one fell. This pillar was divided in two with a narrow gap between both halves, so while in midjump, Sheila planted her hands and feet against either half and wall-walked across.

Before the pillar fell, Sheila jumped out the other end and landed on a flat rock perched on a stone needle. She hopped across a series of these rocks as they were quickly sliding off into the chasm—an Electoon cage was revealed under one of the rocks, so Sheila shattered it with a Light Sphere. After the last unbalanced rock, Sheila landed on a stable ground and saw somebody asleep on a robotic bull, like one would see in bars.

The person was laying on their front, letting their limbs dangle off the bull. They were about Sheila’s height, but shorter, wearing a black cowboy hat, pants and boots, and a sleeveless shirt loaded with ammo. “Yaaaawn…” Kimaya Heartly yawned and stretched awake. After scratching her sore butt, she hopped off the bull. “Dang, I was ridin’ that thing so fast, it flew outta the bar and straight to here. …Who are you?” She noticed Sheila.

“Is this your dream?” the raccoon asked.

“It better be. Raccoon people ain’t real, are they?”

“I’m as real as they come!” she yelled offended. “Mah name’s Sheila.”
“Name’s Kimaya. Ah’m wanted around these parts, so I wouldn’t associate with me.”

“Well, I’m a scurvy pirate that sails the seas.”

“Oh, you and I are from totally different climates.”

“Don’t matter what climate I’m in, because I’ll explore it all!” Sheila smirked.

The two hopped into a minecart and rode it on a track hanging dangerously over the chasm. The track zipped down and back up suddenly before becoming straight. It steadily curved leftward as wooden targets began popping up, and Kimaya used her cowgirl guns to shoot them expertly. Hitting the targets earned points, but when the track threatened to drive them off, she had to quickly shoot a green switch to turn it on the right path. The track zoomed down again, Kimaya hurriedly shooting the targets on the right, then they suddenly traveled a left curve as the targets passed by faster, but Kimaya had each one blasted.

The track went up a ramp and flew them across a huge gap, landing bumpyly on the next track. Kimaya shot the targets that were more far away on either side. Eventually, the track led upward and came to stop on the cliff before the village. A wooden cage opened and allowed them to break open an Electoon cage for shooting all targets. “Dang varmints put ’em in a cage in a cage? That ain’t straight.” Kimaya said.

When they passed the gate to what the sign read as ‘Yold Town’, Hoodlums stood on the houses’ balconies and burst out of the doors, shooting wildly like the cowboys they were dressed as. Kimaya pulled Sheila behind a rock, standing up and dealing quick shots to her enemies before ducking back. “These guys-a been showin’ their selves a lot. You good with a gun? Y’all c’n help.”

“Ah only need my fists!” Sheila fist-palmed. She ran out and swiftly dodged the gun-slinging Hoodlums, sending Light Spheres to knock them out cold. The girls covered the whole town and shot down each Hoodlum. That’s when a Heckler, a large armored Hoodlum with a shoulder cannon, came out of the saloon. Not only was Sheila unable to punch him, but when she tried, a Hoodoo protected him with a barrier. The Hoodoo was seen on the building roofs, so while Sheila was throwing punches and forcing him to make barriers, Kimaya shot her twin pistols and destroyed the exposed Hoodoo.

Afterwards, Sheila charged her Super Light Sphere and destroyed the Heckler in one punch. “Hoooo-WEE!” Kimaya cheered, walking up as she blew her guns free of smoke. “That packed more punch than a gorilla in a boxing ring!”

“Man, I can punch WAY harder than that! …Plus some!”

Sheila grabbed a blue Swing Can that was left by the Heckler. They hurried to the north side of town, jumping up some barrels onto a house’s roof, and from there, Sheila swung a series of Purple Lums leading up to a cliff, bringing Kimaya with her. From the cliff, the girls viewed out into the open desert, and had naught but a brown horse to be their steed. “This pardner’s Exodus.” Kimaya said. “Don’t ask why. Hop awwn on!” Kimaya perched herself on the horse while Sheila chose to stand on it.

Kimaya kicked the horse’s sides as Exodus raced across the desert winds, grains of sand blowing everywhere. Hoodlum Horsemen rode their own ugly stallions; Sheila and Kimaya shot their choice projectiles to send them hitting the sand. The desert was extremely vast with no specific direction to go. The horse galloped and galloped, and more Hoodlums rode in to attack them. “Sigh, these things are more repetitive than recycled clichés.” Kim said. Eventually, they discovered a Hoodmonger hiding among some boulders on the east side. Sheila KO’ed him, earning herself a red Power Can.

They rode the horse around the desert some more, desperate to find where the Strong Fists can be used. Around the middle of the desert, they found a long boulder with a sealed wooden door camouflaged in it. Sheila punched it open with her stronger fists and rescued the Electoons inside. They kept exploring the desert and found a gorge on the west side, with a high cliff on the other side and two rock needles that had wooden platforms. Sheila jumped down into the gorge and found a green Power Can. She then jumped up some platforms leading back to the starting ledge and used the Spin Fists to make the wood platform (which had a propeller on it) float up.

However, they couldn’t jump on it when it was aloft, so they waited for the platform to come back down before jumping to it. Then Sheila made it float up, allowing them to jump to the next platform, and making it float up to the high cliff. “Hoo, finally.” Kimaya said afterwards. “That section was more annoying than-”

“-Western similes.” Sheila interrupted.

The duo viewed a train track that sloped down on their right. “Don’t worry, there ain’t been a train in ages.” Kimaya said. “I just have it to do this.” Kimaya hopped on and began to grind the right rail, so Sheila did the left. Targets sprouted up on either side, tempting the girls to make use of their sharpshooting. The track ended, so they jumped to a set of two unbalanced rocks placed on needles that fell over quickly. They resumed grinding on the next track, shooting more targets as the track curved left and passed over another Western village, in which targets were hidden in the alleys and on rooftops. The tracks ended at a massive rock fissure. It seems they shot all the targets, for they were given an Electoon cage.

Within the huge rock fissure, the girls began going down a steep, wide slide. Wood targets hung on the cliffsides and floated above via propellers, so they once again shot them down as they slid. Sheila took a secret narrow path on the left, quick-punching a row of three targets overhead. She got back on the main path as she and Kimaya drifted around corners of a snaky part of the slide, shooting targets that surprised them from behind the corners. They were brought out of the fissures, and the girls had to slow down to avoid falling over the long drop on either side.

They jumped a huge gap, shooting three targets set on ledges on their left and right, and landed on the next slide as it swerved left. The slide turned steep, the change of speed was sudden, and they rapidly shot targets on their whipping ride down. They were given another Electoon cage for their excellent shooting. They now faced a short, straight path between old board fences, leading to a small shack. Chuck Norris appeared to be awaiting them. “Awe, this guy’s fun. You’ll never guess where he keeps his gun.”

Smirking, Kimaya Heartly slowly stepped forward. She softly stroked the handle of her gun, ready to whip it out when the time came. The metal on her boots clanked with each soft step. Her eyes were narrowed on Chuck Norris, who was fearless and unmoving. There was no visible gun on his belt, so would he be ready? Then, when the tip of Kimaya’s boot crossed the halfway mark—an arm popped out of Norris’s beard and shot a gun, Kimaya dodged her head right, flicked her gun at, and shot him in the head. She blew the smoke from her gun in victory. “That’s how ya do it.”

She and Sheila stepped over Chuck’s body and went through the shack that actually had nothing more than its front. They were in a garden with some boulders. A white key the size of a large sword was stuck in the ground. (End song.)
Kimaya clutched the key’s handle in her right hand and pulled it out. The border around the handle had angel wings, there was a keychain with a pink five-point star, and the teeth were designed like a blue star with yellow and white tips. “Say, this looks like the big key my mom has.”

“Strewth, that’s a Keyblade, ain’t it?” Sheila asked.

“I reckon it is. Always thought it looked cool.” Kimaya swung it around.

Wait... Does this mean this girl’s a Light? Sheila thought. Which would make her The Keeper! The Keeper of what, though? “Why do ya think it’s here?”

“Ah dunno. Always wanted one, maybe?”

“Hmm.” The raccoon shrugged. Maybe I’m wrong. …Sheila turned around and saw the portal pedestal perched on a short rock. “Well-p, there’s the exit portal!” she pointed. “I’ll just do a little jig and be out of this place.” She confidently marched toward the portal, absolutely certain that much would happen.

But then a pink energy ball shot down and destroyed the pedestal. Sheila blocked her eyes from the dust of the explosion before staring at it in shock, as did Kimaya. “Going somewhere?” They looked up when Mr. Dark floated down.

“YOU!” Sheila grit her teeth.

“I hope Plankton has you all trapped well, because your dream self isn’t leaving this world anytime soon. Without the exit portal or a Bubble Dreamer, you are trapped here. Oh, and I took the liberty of destroying the portal at the start of this level, too.”

“Are you bloody stupid?” Sheila folded her arms. “Jessie’s trapped with me, too. I’ll wake up and tell him to save me!”

“I will not make it easy for him. The Hoodlums are patrolling the Hall of Doors this very moment. But don’t worry, we still need you to find the Seventh Light. We just need… a bit of time.” Mr. Dark spun his cloak like a vortex and vanished.

“Bloody drongo.” Sheila cursed. “I’ll see ya later, Kimaya.” She yanked her own tail, and her body turned to mist when she startled herself awake.

“Hm... That was weird.” Kimaya said passively, studying her Keyblade. “This thing ain’t half bad... I wonder where I could find this...!”

An image flashed in her mind of a mountain of rubble where dozens of coal trucks roamed. She saw a poor, dying town and a factory. Then she saw a white stone cube with foreign writing.

Cleveland Park

Kimaya woke with a slight start. She noticed Django was leaning on her with his hand over hers. “Hey, Django! Ever heard o’ personal space??” Kimaya shook the skeleton into waking up.

“You looked so adorable!” Rhyme laughed as she, Beat, and Kaleo approached.

“That Fairy Girl just left with those two nerds!” Beat jigged. “Now we got no one to listen to our beats.”
“Ugh, now my back’s sore.” Kimaya stood up and stretched. “What you guys wanna do? We can’t go to our houses without makin’ room for Leo.”

“Hey, I am very sensitive about my weight!” Leo shouted, not knowing that a girl in a ninja suit was dashing up to him. “My mom keeps feeding me veggies, and I’ve been starving like-”

The ninja girl leaped and kicked the giant in the head, toppling him down. The Gang gaped at the ninja, who landed on her feet in a fighting pose. Without bothering to speak, the black-haired ninja flew to and fro, knocked Beat out, knocked Rhyme out, and stomped Django so hard in the face, it was surprising his skull didn’t break. Kimaya tried to fart gas at her, but the ninja seemed unphased as she dodged behind, grabbed Kimaya’s arms, and pinned her to the ground.

Struggling to look up in this position, Kimaya saw G.U.N. helicopters swarming into the area. Soldiers dropped down with ropes and surrounded them. Stan Smith, a man with a blue tuxedo, black hair, and big chin, marched toward Kimaya. “Why wait to do later what we can just do right now? That’s what I always say.” He smiled proudly.

Dream Realm; Mado no Nikki

“La, la la, la la…” Spongebob hummed a merry tune as he was exploring a forest of pine trees, with a gigantic Mayan-like image floating in the sky. “Exploring the Dream Realm is so much fun! I don’t know what this place is, but there are so many cool creatures here! Some of them would actually make great faces! Ahem… BLUUUURRGH.” He transformed into a sperm-like creature spewing ooze. He changed back and, “WEEEAAACK!” turned into an elephant with a humanoid skull and huge jaw. “And also… irk…” He scrunched his face with his hands. “GLUUAACK-!” He morphed into a multi-armed creature oozing blood.

Magician’s House; same dreamscape

“Sniff… sniff…” Murfy fluttered out of the guestroom in The Magician’s house, crying. “My Manual… oh, what’ll I do without my Manual…” He floated into the kitchen and saw the Magician was not here. “Sigh, maybe I’m just hungry… I need a snack. Hey, Mado, got anything to eat?” he asked the dreamscape’s owner, Madotsuki when she walked by.

The brown-haired girl looked at him with tired, closed eyes. Saying nothing, she pinched her cheek, and her body dispersed into bubbles, returning to its Start Bed. “Okay, screw you.” Murfy remarked. “Sigh, where is that Magician?” He floated to the purple curtains, which hid a stairwell leading down. Curious, Murfy slowly flew down and into the open door.

In this new corridor, Murfy peeked into a room where Bubbled monsters lay adrift around the ceiling. The monsters in these bubbles looked like… Lums. Red and yellow ones. Some were sprouting arms or legs in disproportionate areas, some were oozing slop of various colors. The Magician, Ales Mansay, appeared to be stretching one of the bubbles, along with the leg of the Lum inside it. “What is he doing…” Murfy narrowed his eyes at him. He gasped- “Wait a minute!” and hid behind the doorway.

“I remember reading something in the Manual…” he thought aloud quietly. “Something’s supposed to happen around this part… and it’s because of-!” He gasped again. “That kid is in danger! I need to go find Sheila and-!” He hurriedly flew back up to the kitchen—a team of Hoodlums blocked his path to the exit portal and the house’s exit.

Murfy in his fly-like body.

“Yes, ‘Smiles.’” Murfy whipped around and found Ales Mansay smirking at him. “Stick around. The party’s just beginning!”

Normally, we do the Firstborn Arc at the same time as the Light Arc, but this time, we’re just going to jump into one, then do the other. Next time, we will start the Madotsuki Arc, the Firstborn Arc of this saga! Here’s a Caesar Cryptogram.

The Morning

Chapter Summary

Harvey Harper enters the dreamscape of Madotsuki in pursuit of Mr. Dark! But what does the shady figure want with this little girl?

Here, we will start the Madotsuki Arc, which is a crossover with the game, Yume Nikki.

Chapter 53: The Morning

Apartment in Karakura, Japan

The morning sun peered over the horizon at 6:00a.m.. In an apartment on the 45th floor, the room’s occupant awoke. She was a 12-year-old girl with brown hair in pigtails. She wore a dark pink sweater with a window design on the chest, a purple skirt, and warm red socks. The girl sat herself up, but she didn’t open her eyes.

Madotsuki weakly pulled off her blanket and stepped out of bed. She crossed the red carpet that bore a pattern of tiki faces, and opened the glass door that led out onto her balcony. Madotsuki rested her elbows on the railing, listening to the echoes of honking cars throughout the city as the morning sun lightly shone through her eyelids. She looked right. There was a small set of movable stairs next to the balcony’s edge. Madotsuki could walk up them, and walk off. If she wanted to.

Madotsuki reentered her apartment. All she had was the tiki carpet, her bed, a desk with her diary and a chair with wheels, a bookshelf, and a TV with an old Famicom hooked up. Madotsuki walked up and turned the TV on. …It displayed a test card, but this was the only channel she had. Madotsuki sat down and decided to play her Famicom. The only game she had was NASU, where she played as a little red creature that caught eggplants falling from the sky. The background was black, and the ground was a green bar that displayed her score.

The game started. A 3-note 8-bit music played. Madotsuki moved the character right to jump and catch an eggplant. …She missed by an inch, and when the eggplant hit the ground, the Game Over screen displayed for seven seconds. She started again. She caught the first eggplant close by. She hurried left to catch the second. She missed… Game Over for seven seconds. She started another round. She caught the first eggplant… then the second… the third… fourth… She missed the fifth. Game Over.

Madotsuki turned the game off and stood up. She faced the door to her room. She approached and reached for the handle… she shook her head ‘no.’ She had not in a long time… and she will not. Not now, not ever.

Madotsuki went to sit at her desk. She opened her diary, where her records were written in Japanese letters. She wrote another passage.

Dear Diary… Tomorrow is my 13th birthday. I wonder if that means a new door will appear.
new one always seems to appear on my birthday. But I still haven’t finished exploring the other ones. There’s so many rooms. I get so lost. But I have been making some friends. Maybe I’ll find more. Until later, Diary.

She closed the book. Then, with nothing else to do, she swerved her chair around to face her bed. She got up, walked over, and climbed under the covers. 3… 2… 1…

She woke up, opening her red eyes. The Famicom was gone. When she went to turn on her TV, an eyeball displayed. Madotsuki went out onto her balcony. Karakura’s bustling streets were gone, replaced by an empty sunrise void. Madotsuki went back inside, and faced the door to her room. She approached, and slipped her feet into a pair of red boots. She turned the knob on the door and opened.

She was in the Nexus, the room in which 12 different doors would lead her to regions of the dreamscape. The ground and sky were black with Aztec floor designs. “Where should I go today…” Madotsuki thought to herself. “Maybe I’ll go in that one.” She approached a purple door with a block-shaped hourglass design.

She entered a world where the floor was covered with colorful graffiti designs that looked like amoebas and cells. There was a gigantic image of a cell floating in the sky that looked like a mitochondria. Not that Madotsuki knew which cells were which; however, two areas on the cell looked like eyes that were glaring at her. Madotsuki walked around the graffiti tiles. Each one made its own sound under her steps. Madotsuki decided to hop and skip around the tiles and make herself a little song. But there was no certain rhythm, and she would probably never remember it.

A path of graffiti markings led Madotsuki to a lone bicycle. “Oh, here’s where I left it.” She said as she touched the bike. Her hand glowed upon touch, and when she moved it away, a bike icon floated in a small hand-size bubble. Madotsuki made a real bike materialize from that bubble. She climbed on and began to pedal across the Graffiti World, making more fast-paced notes on the tiles. Madotsuki wasn’t a fast walker, so the bike was very helpful.

“Where to go next…” Madotsuki pedaled out of the world, back to the Nexus. “How about that one?” She entered a door with dark-red blocks and green lines in-between. She was in the Forest World, a maze of pine trees and a red Aztec monkey floating in the sky. The only sound was the hypnotic dong of a clock. There were pink ghosts that oozed magenta drool, and purple ghosts that oozed green drool. “Hey, get off me.” Madotsuki said when these ghosts latched their drool onto her head.

“Ribbit. Ribbit.” A little frog hopped over to her.

“Oh. Hey, Froggy.” Madotsuki touched the creature. Another bubble appeared with the frog’s icon. She popped it on her head, transforming into a frog with a human body. “Ribbit. Ribbit.” She started to hop about happily.

Magician’s House

Ales Mansay and André watched Madotsuki on a small computer screen, from an overhead perspective like it were an RPG. The girl hopped around the forest with her frog head. “…This… is… so… BORING!” the Black Lum shouted. “Why are we watching some crummy little girl goof around?! Don’t we have a job to do?”

“We can’t rush these things.” Mansay replied. “First, we must remind her why she longs for the Dream Realm. And that… will not take much longer.” He smirked.
“Well, whaddo we do about that sponge kid snoopin’ around?”

“Hmm, good point. We can’t risk him ruining this. Take your Hoodlums and take care of him. But make sure Madotsuki doesn’t see any of you.”

Plankton’s Crab Craft

Aranea had picked off a strand of her hair and was using it to pick the lock of Sector W’s cell. “Sigh, how long is this gonna be, Aranea?” Anthony asked, pacing back and forth.

“Hey, I’m doing my best. You think using hair as a key is easy?”

“I thought you girls would at least carry around one of those knife thingies for your nails.”

“You mean a file? And I did, but it’s on that desk with the rest of our weapons. Gah!” Dennis suddenly grabbed Nea’s hand.

“Nice hair.” The hunter said as he took the light-blonde strand and held it by his sunglasses. “Feels a shame to waste it.” He snapped the strand in half with little strength. He then pulled up a chair and sat in front of them. “But I’ll be keeping an eye on you kids ’case you try anything.”

“Uuuuugh.” Anthony leaned his hands against the cell bars and let his head droop. “Maybe if I focus really hard, my metalbending will awaken like Toph.”

“Anthony, you can barely gembend, how do you expect to bend metal?” Sally questioned.

“Hey, you never know, it could happen.” Harvey shrugged. “That’d be sweeeet.”

“Bluh!” Sheila Frantic jumped awake. She turned to the other Lights and yelled, “Oi, Jessie, help me out! Mr. Dark got me dreamself stuck in some Western dream, and I need me a Bubble Dreamer!”

“You’re trapped in a dream? Well, alright, I’ll-” Jessie pulled out his Sleepytime Suds.

“You’ll stay put!” Plankton grabbed Jessie by the arm in his muscular form, lifting the boy and throwing the pink soap bubble aside. “We need to keep you here for our plan!”

“What plan?” April asked with a scowl.

“Ah, there he is now!” Plankton perked up when Mr. Dark materialized from a self-made vortex.

“Ah, April Goldenweek. I was hoping you’d be here.” Mr. Dark zapped purple lightning at April, blowing her against the wall.

“THOU BODILESS BEAST!” Fybi yelled, drawing her B.O.W. to aim at the Dream Spirit.

“DON’T EVEN!” Dennis grabbed Anthony through the cell bars and pulled him against them, holding a knife up. Fybi was forced to lower her guard.

“So, April…” Mr. Dark approached the singed girl. “Do you remember what you are now? Do you remember that you and Mary are Imaginary Friends? Even I would not have known if I hadn’t come across that Ib child. I must say, the illusion was convincing.”

“Why were you so interested in us?” April asked.

“Because, April, I want to know how. I am certain that Weiss Guertena knew the secret to making the imaginary reality. And I am certain you know now, too. So… how did you and Mary become real?”

“Like I would tell you!”

Mr. Dark snapped his fingers. Dennis raised Anthony higher and held the knife to his ankle. “A foot as large as this would look nice on my mantle.”

“Okay, gross.” Aranea said.

“TELL ME the secret!” Dark demanded.

April clenched her teeth. “Grr… In the Guertena Gallery, we fell into a sub-dimension created by Guertena. We became real by killing Ib and Garry and switching realities with them.” She wouldn’t bother to explain the real story behind that.

Mr. Dark’s yellow eyes widened with sudden realization. “Of course!” He smacked the forehead of his hat. “Why didn’t I think of it before?!” He began to pace. “To steal the existence of a real person… that person must die in the Dream World! Which can only happen if their real body is in the Dream World itself!”

“What?”

“Listen, April, it wasn’t just a sub-dimension that was in that gallery… but Guertena, that brilliant man, actually created a portal into his own dreamscape, from the real world! But because Guertena was a Worldbuilder, one who can create their own fictional world and establish laws, his dreamscape could not be entered from anywhere else! It is no different than the Wonderland created by Alice… It is like a dreamscape that exists in the real world, and yet, it is still bound to dreams…” He pressed the Protoon to the chest of his cloak in a loving fashion.

“And now, April,” Dark turned to her with evil eyes, “I know how to become real. I simply must bring a human into the Dream World and slay them. But first, I must-”

“EUH!” Sheila ran at Dennis and kicked him in the crotch. He threw his knife up in the air, and Sheila punched him away before he could grab it. Sheila spun both fists and bashed Sector W’s cell open. “I praise thee, Sheila!” Fybi cheered.

“Ugh! I’ve no time!” Mr. Dark spun his vortex and began to warp.

“HEY!” Harvey grabbed his and Sally’s yo-yos from the desk and threw them at the cloaked man. The yo-yos ended up sucked into the vortex, and Harvey spiraled in with them “Whooooaa!”

“HARVEY!” His friends cried when the portal shrunk and vanished.

Hall of Doors

“AAAHH!” Harvey hit the grass ground when they rematerialized, and Mr. Dark shook the yo-yo strings off. “What are you doing?” He glared at the boy.

Harvey scrambled to his feet and looked around the strange jungle. “Where are we?!”

“This is the Hall of Doors of the Dream Realm. When you grabbed hold of me, you warped with me into the Subconscious Plane.”

“The…The Dream Realm?!” Harvey filled with fear, remembering what Mr. Dark just confirmed.
“Yes…” The Dream Spirit hovered over the boy threateningly. Harvey backed up, afraid of becoming his sacrifice. “And the only way back is through my Protoon. How easy it would be to destroy you… and take your reality.”

“W-Wait! I don’t wanna be a dream person!” Harvey waved his hands in defense. “What if I dream I’m naked in school, but I’ll never wake up?!”

“You’ll find, boy, that even in reality, there are nightmares you can never wake up from.” Mr. Dark raised a hand lit with purple lightning. “And your nightmare is JUST-”

“AAAAAAAAAH!” Harvey screamed at the top of his lungs when Mr. Dark blasted a powerful bolt of lightning through his chest. The smoke cleared and… Harvey was still in one piece.

“What?!?” Mr. Dark yelped, looking at his hand. “Am I not able to hurt humans that come into the Dream World?”

“Heh! I guess your plan’s a bust!” Harvey retorted. “But I wonder if I can hurt YOU! HEEEE-YAH!” He leapt to kick him in the eyes.

Mr. Dark popped a pink shield into being with his Protoon and bounced Harvey back. “No, I am able to touch you.” He observed. “However… perhaps I cannot wound you. This could complicate things…” He stroked his scarf (his imaginary “chin”). “Urgh, I can’t waste time with you. It doesn’t matter to me if you die, but you’re not the one I want to kill.” With that, Mr. Dark flew a short way down and splashed into a portal on the starry river. Harvey hurried in that direction and saw the portal was labeled Mado no Nikki.

“If he’s the only way back… then I have to follow him. Here goes!” With a determined look, Harvey dove into the portal.

Dimalanta Household

Nolan York, Yuki Crystal, and Crystal Wickens dressed in their casual attire since it was broad daylight, though their Sandmobile wasn’t parked far down. Nolan rolled up to the front door of the house and knocked.

“MY TURN THIS TIME!” Inside the house, Mason and his mother, Yin, bolted up to the door and rammed each other, falling down dizzily. Yin reached an arm up, twisted the knob, and let it slide open.

“Are we… interrupting something?” Crystal asked regarding their position.

“Nah, it’s just their routine.” Nolan said. “Usually, Haru and Matt do it. Hello, Yin, Mason.”

“Good to hear. But we’re actually here to see Haruka.”

“Haru’s down in the basement.” Yin replied, standing up. “We set it up to be her own personal laboratory. She spends a lot of time down there when she’s home lately.”

“It may work in our favor.” Nolan rolled in first; he had a few milk bottles on his lap. “We should only be a minute.”

“So, how’s the quest going?” Yuki asked as they followed.
“It’s going well so far.” Mason answered.

“After working so hard, he needs to stop by home once in a while!” Yin happily pinched her son’s cheek. “Saving the world like the strong little man he is!”

“Moomoom! You said not when we have people over!”

“Oh, relax, son, we’re adults, we see this thing all the time!” Crystal giggled, twiddling her fingers at him.

The basement had tables and shelves lined with glasses one would see in science labs, filled with various liquids. Haruka wore a pair of goggles and rubber gloves as she lifted a tiny vial of blue, fizzing liquid by her face. “Hmmm…” She observed it closely.

“Set up your own secret meth lab?” She flinched at a semi-familiar voice, hearing thumping down the stairs when three people (and a wheelchair) were stomping down.

“Ho, Mr. York.” Haruka pulled up her goggles. “No, I’m not making anything like that. Since I’ve become more adapt with my parasite powers, I figured it was safe for me to experiment with real chemicals. I’m getting a real jump start ahead of all the other college students!” She winked.

“Very impressive.” Crystal said, viewing the bottles of potions. “But don’t you also need a labcoat to work with this stuff?”

“No, if my antibodies can eat Fear Toxin or Candy Virus, they can survive… most of this.”

“Haruka, I have something I need you to look at.” Nolan set the milk bottles on an empty table and gave one to Haruka.

“To see if your milk expired?”

“It’s not milk. We robbed those from some trucks and they contained a substance I don’t recognize.”

Haruka set a small rectangular glass on the table, opened the bottle, and used her bending to make a small drop of the milk float out. It had a greenish shade to the white. “Well, it definitely isn’t real milk. …” Haruka put the drop on her tongue and pulled it back.

“Don’t do that!!” Yuki shouted. “Even Nolan said a taste test was a bad idea!”

Haruka held up a finger, implying ‘wait.’ She let the drop dissolve on her tongue, the taste spread. “It tastes… not bad. I’ll make my antibodies eat it in case there are damaging effects.”

“These bottles were being shipped to local stores before we stole them.” Nolan explained. “Clearly, they were meant to be drunk by people. But if it were to poison or kill them right away, I’m sure news would get out and prevent anymore customers.”

“And yet, it’s definitely toxic enough for me to poisonbend.” Haruka bent another drop out and put it on the small glass. “The question is, what’s inside it?” Haruka slid the glass under a microscope and began to observe its cellular structure. “Hmmm…”

“Could you tell us what’s in it?” Crystal asked.

“I dunno, you might not understand me. Are you a doctor or an engineer?”

“Er… They can be one in the same!” The witch flushed.
“No they cannot.” Haruka remarked, still focused tight on the substance. “But it does contain milk’s properties like casein… but I’m seeing other molecules that… I don’t recognize.” Haruka went to grab a book on compounds. “It’s in here somewhere, I’m sure of it.” She began to skim pages.

“Well, if you don’t mind, we need to go out and patrol.” Nolan said. “Call us if you find out.”

As they were coming out of the basement, they saw Matthew Dimalanta in the midst of a phone call. “What?! You’re kidding!” He whipped around in panic and noticed Team Sandman. “Nolan, good, you’re here! Jeremiah’s daughter’s been kidnapped by GUN!”

“Kidnapped?!?”

“Not just her, but her friends, too. Kami saw it all happen at the park.”

“Tell them we’re on our way over!” The heroes rushed out of the house.

“Jeremiah, Nolan said they’re going to the park to help.” Matt said into the phone. “No, he didn’t say if he knew anything—I don’t know what this is about either.”

“MATTHEW!” Yin raced in from the kitchen. “Marine just called from Washington—Sheila and her friends were kidnapped by a giant crab!”

“SHEILA?!” Mason exclaimed.

“What’s all the yelling about up there?!” Haruka called.

“WE’RE BEING INVADED BY ALIEN CRABS!” Mason screamed. “We gotta go to the treehouse!”

“I can’t right now, I’m doing something! Just get the others and go!”

“A-Alright! Later, Mom and Dad!” Mason raced out of the house.

“Ugh… This is stressing me out.” Haruka sighed, placing a hand on her forehead. “How do I know what I’m looking for in this book… Who would know… ugh…”

Mado no Nikki

Harvey came out the other side of the portal, finding himself in a pine tree forest. “Where did he go…” Harvey asked himself as he began to wander around. There was a red Aztec monkey in the sky and a distant donging of a bell. Harvey explored the forest for several minutes, seeing many pink and purple drooling ghosts. He had never been in the Dream World before, but from what he could make of it, it was really weird and creepy.

“Hehn hehn hehn…” came a weak laugh from a familiar high voice. Harvey looked left and gasped at seeing Spongebob, with two of those drooling ghosts attached to his head. “You guys feel like balloons made of squishy tarter sauce…”

“Spongebob!” Harvey raced up to him. He used his bladed yo-yos to chop the drool of the ghosts, scaring them into fleeing. Spongebob shook the drool off himself.

“Now, that wasn’t very nice!” Spongebob said.

“Spongebob, we’ve all been captured by Plankton! Your real body is aboard his ship, and he’s got Jessie and the Lights, too.”
“Oh, no! Wait, who are you again?”

“My name’s Harvey, from Sector W. I tried to grab onto Mr. Dark, but I got sucked into the Dream World with him. I need to find Mr. Dark and make him take me back.”

“Well, then I’ll help you!” the sponge proclaimed happily.

“No, you should wake up and help the others.”

“But who will be here to help you? If you’re stuck in the Dream World, then you’re more trapped than they are.”

“M-Maybe, but…but I’m worried about them.”

“Spongebob NEVER leaves a friend alone! I’m not going back without you! I’m sure your friends will be fine, as long as they have each other.”

“I guess if they have Sheila…” Harvey looked away for a moment. “Augh, alright, you can help me. You are a Bubble Dreamer… whatever that is. W—WAIT A SEC! Spongebob, Sheila’s trapped in a Western dreamscape! She needs a Bubble Dreamer to escape, but they’re keeping Jessie from saving her!”

“One of Jessie’s friends is trapped? Then I’ll go save her first!” Spongebob raised his bubble wand proudly. “I’ll be back for you soon!”

“YOU’RE NOT going anywhere, Squarebob!” André flew down as a band of Hoodlums surrounded the two, guns aimed.

“Who’s the talking fly?” Harvey asked.

“The name’s André Black! I’m the boss of these Hoodlums, see? And by the order of Mr. Dark, you twerps are under arrest!”

“You know Mr. Dark? Where is he? I need him for something.”

“You won’t get the chance! Shoot him, Marvin!”

One of the Hoodmongers from behind Harvey shot him in the back. The bullet phased through and left no wound. “What the-?!?” André yelped.

“I’m from the real world!” Harvey retorted, stomping up to the fly. “You can’t hurt me!” He smacked André.

The Black Lum rubbed the sore spot… then, out of curiosity, he lightly poked Harvey in the nose. “No, but we can touch you normally.” He smirked. “Hoodlums, GRAB THEM!”

Spongebob blew some Bubble Torpedoes to knock out some Hoodlums. “Let’s get outta here!” He grabbed Harvey’s arm and stormed through the other Hoodlums, getting away from the crowd. They saw two green polygonal rectangles standing next to each other and ran between them, warping to a room where purple and cyan carpets were lain around the floor, designed like African masks. The field was also within a ring of spikes.

“Hurry up, we have to lock them up someplace!” The Hoodlums were appearing from the gate they just passed through.

“Crud, where do we go?” Harvey asked panickingly.
“Let’s ask that red block for advice!” Spongebob pointed at a spinning red block with a hole in its center. He pulled Harvey with him as they ran to the block, and warped upon touching it.

“WHOAI!” Harvey flinched at the event. They ended up in a bright red maze with walls that had wobbling black dot designs, under a red sky. Harvey’s eyes were already burning from the sight. “Where are we now?”

“I dunno, but we can lose ‘em in here!” The two kept running, turning several maze corners and getting their selves lost among the redness. They heard the Hoodlums shouting in the distance, likely getting lost in their search for them.

“Darn it, we’ll never find Mr. Dark at this rate.” Harvey said, still squinting his eyes. “Spongebob, don’t you know if there’s another way for me to leave the Dream World?”

“Mmm, I don’t know, Harvey. I didn’t even think it was possible for someone to physically enter the Dream World. But don’t worry, I’ll find a way for you, yet! Ooo, maybe that bird lady knows!” He saw a humanoid woman with a bird’s face, brown hair in pigtails, casual clothes, and crazy purple eyes.

“Spongebob, don’t!” Harvey tried to stop him, but Spongebob raced up to the Toriningen excitedly.

“AAAAH!” The bird lady sprouted wings and talons, grabbed Spongebob in said salons, and soared away. “HAAARVEEEEY!”

“SPONGEBOB!” Harvey threw both his yo-yos to wrap around Spongebob and be carried up with him. He tugged the strings and tried to yank Spongebob free, but the latter ended up dropping his wand and bubble bottle. “AAAAAHH-!” The yo-yos loosened and caused Harvey to plummet without his friend. Within the maze, there was a large red, one-eyed monster that looked like a toilet (it had a big mouth on its ‘seat’). He fell toward this monster, who opened its mouth and swallowed Harvey inside.

“OW!” Harvey landed on a footprint path within a black space. More of these toilet, seat-mouth monsters were sitting around, and they had different colors. They looked dimwitted and stood still. Harvey brushed his shorts off and ran across the footprints. “Darn it… now I’m all sorts of lost. Who the heck would dream a world like this, anyway?”

Snow World

Madotsuki entered a purple door in the Nexus. It led to a beautiful snowy plain, populated with coniferous trees and igloos. It was Madotsuki’s favorite of the 12 worlds she dreamed about. She was only a little cold, but it was pleasant. Her boots left prints in the snow, but they would always get filled up by the endless falling flakes. And yet, the snow never grew deeper than it normally was.

Most of the igloos were empty, and were only small enough for her to crawl into. She wandered the tundra in the hopes of finding company. Then, she encountered a Toriningen. But unlike the lunatic Toriningen that carried her away to an inescapable, isolated island, this one was friendly. The smiling, kind-looking bird woman led Madotsuki another direction across the snowfield, past some trees to another igloo.

Madotsuki crawled in this igloo. There was a girl with short brown hair, a gray shirt, black pants, and blue shoes. She was sitting and fast asleep. Madotsuki didn’t recognize her, so she called her Kamakurako (Igloo Child). All she did was sleep in this igloo. Although, there was something about her Madotsuki thought was… familiar.

Madotsuki wandered the snows some more. She came across a rather short woman of white skin, dark blue hair, and a pale blue kimono. With her sleeved hand over her mouth and nose, and her frigid appearance, there wasn’t an ounce of heat about her. She was the Yuki-onna, a snow woman from Japanese folklore, which Madotsuki took an interest in. And when Madotsuki touched her, she donned this frigid appearance. She was very cold, and the snow fell like a blizzard. She wandered the wilderness, desperate to find a means of warming herself. Then, as if by good fortune, she found a bed in the middle of some trees. She climbed under the covers to warm up.

Madotsuki woke up on a stairway leading deep into the abyss, surrounded by a forest of ghostly hands that rose up from nowhere. Madotsuki walked down this stairwell, not knowing where it would go. The stairs seemed to descend into infinity… but they eventually brought Madotsuki into a furnace. A huge burning flame was bursting from the door ahead. Using the power of her Yuki-onna, Madotsuki unleashed a blizzard that dispersed the flame. Madotsuki took off the Yuki-onna and entered a sewer library. There was a blob monster made of poop, and had a large mouth. When she touched the monster, her very hair transformed into poo.

“DAAAH!” A sewer hatch on the ceiling suddenly burst open. A boy with green eyes and wearing a black ushanka fell in and looked up at her. He looked about 7 years old. As Harvey Harper helped himself up, he whiffed the awful smell. “EEEWWWW! Is your hair made of POOP?! That is so GROSS!”

“…” Madotsuki opened the window on her shirt, pulled out a bubble with a cat icon, and slapped it over herself to become a neko. The poop icon was stored in her window. “Meow meow.” She waved her paw at Harvey before turning to leave.

“Huh? W-Wait, come back.” When Harvey tried to follow, Madotsuki equipped her bike and pedaled away faster. He chased her through a seemingly endless sewer corridor. His legs were still tired from running around that maze. “Huff… I wonder if she… knows her way around here…”

Madotsuki climbed a ladder out of the sewer, to an island in the center of a vast, Pink Ocean. There were colorful balloons adrift about the sea. To cross this ocean, Madotsuki transformed into a frog. She dove in and began to swim. Harvey witnessed this when he made it out of the sewer. This girl appeared more odd by the minute. However, there was a strange energy he felt about her… he had to follow her. Harvey jumped in the Pink Sea and swam after, but he proved to be less proficient in the act.

Madotsuki resurfaced on an island of colorful tipis, which looked like giant party hats. After taking off her Frog Effect, she approached a house designed like three tipis. She turned the doorknob and entered. Inside was a very pretty, pink room with a green carpet, a desk, a bookshelf, and a bed. The house’s resident was a girl with blonde hair in a ponytail, a green shirt, brown skirt, and red shoes. She was half turned away from Mado, with narrowed blue eyes. The girl didn’t speak and Mado didn’t know her name. So she called her Poniko, or “Ponytail Girl.”

When Madotsuki approached, Poniko walked the opposite way. Mado got on her right, but Poniko turned the other way. She always acted like this when Madotsuki visited. But Mado thought she looked pretty, and an ideal friend she could have. She wanted to get the girl to acknowledge her. Madotsuki donned a Long Hair Effect. She got in front of Poniko and brushed her new long hair with her hand, smiling. Poniko turned away. Madotsuki changed into blonde hair and tried to show it off. Poniko turned again.

Madotsuki became a cat. “Meow meow.” She said. Poniko still ignored. The ponytail girl heard Mado transform again. Then, three Mini Mados climbed up her body, resting on her shoulders and head. Two of them sat on Poniko’s feet, another swung on her ponytail… but she still didn’t acknowledge them. The Mini Mados jumped off and reformed as she changed into a frog. “Ribbit…ribbit…” She began to hop circles around Poniko.

Magician’s House

Ales Mansay propped his head on his hand in boredom. Madotsuki hopped around Poniko as a frog, turned her body boneless and jellied as she wobbled, then made herself faceless. “Yaaaawn… Come on, we don’t have all day. We still need more Lums…”

Poniko’s House

Madotsuki put on a blindfold while standing in front of Poniko. And when she took it off, she was once again facing the ponytailed’s backside. Harvey watched all of this through the house’s window. “Boy, she must really want her attention…”

Madotsuki frowned and stopped using Effects. She approached the room’s lightswitch and turned it off. The room turned black with neon lines appearing on the edges of all the objects. Mado turned the light back on, restoring the normal pink colors. Turned it off, switched to night mode. Turned it on, back to day. Turned off, turned on. Madotsuki gave up trying to get her attention. She pinched her cheek and dispersed into bubbles, waking up.

Harvey decided to enter the house. “Excuse me, are you a real girl? Like, someone who’s dreaming? Because I need help getting back to the real world; I’m actually a real person who… got trapped here.”

From an outside perspective, that made no sense, Harvey thought. Poniko looked at him from sideways vision and turned away. “Hey, I’m talking to you. Is something wrong? And what was with that other girl just now? Hey.” Harvey turned the lights off, turned on, lights off, lights on, lights—

A FLASH, Poniko transformed into a black blob with a white, ghostly oozing face. Eyes appeared on the pictures, the wardrobe, the window, and the carpet, and the room was trembling. Harvey gazed at the monster with fear in his emerald eyes. Uboa’s face swirled like a portal and sucked Harvey inside.

The child felt his feet sink into a white, marsh-like liquid. He was stranded in an ocean of white ooze, the sky pitch-black. And in the distance, the size of a mountain, a creature more hideous than anything Harvey had ever seen. It was black like the sky, but the only indication of a body were its eyes, tongue, and hair, all the color of blood. It had multiple arms that were each gripping a hill.

Harvey couldn’t bring himself to move or to think. He didn’t understand anything about this, but it was all so hideous, he didn’t want to. A portal materialized above him, and Mr. Dark appeared. “YOU! How DARE you try to interfere—and wander in HERE of all places!” The cloaked mage grabbed Harvey, pulled him in another vortex, and reappeared over a lone barren space within a forest. He dropped Harvey there. “BOTH of you will stay put!” He warped again.

“Harvey!” The boy jumped at the familiar voice and turned around.

“Spongebob?”

“Thank goodness you’re okay. What happened to you? You look like you’ve seen a million ghosts.”
“N-No, it’s… It was something really disturbing.”

“I’m sorry to hear that. But Harvey, I don’t think we’re going anywhere. I lost my bubbles, and these trees are too thick to squeeze through or climb over. But if I wake up, maybe I’ll appear in my own Dream World if I fall back—”

“No, don’t! Plankton’s not letting Jessie go to sleep, and if he knows what you’re up to, he won’t let you, either. He’s probably only letting you sleep now ‘cause he doesn’t know.”

“But what if Mr. Dark tells him?”

“Yeah, he might. …Hang on, when Mr. Dark brought me here, he tried to kill me so he could steal my reality. But when he couldn’t do that, he said something about wanting to kill someone else. Then he flew into this world.”

“That could only mean he’s targeting the owner of this dreamscape. But who could that be?”

Harvey thought for a second. “A few minutes ago, I was following this girl around to ask if she could help. But she pinched her cheek and vanished. I guess she woke up.”

“But if she’s the dreamer of this world, we need to save her!”

“I know. But first we need to get out of here…”

Dressrosa

Cheren, Carol Masterson, and Sugar flew a S.C.A.M.P.E.R. to the island and parked on the royal palace’s courtyard. “The town looks like it’s calmed down.” Cheren noted. “This place seems pretty empty, too.”

“No it isn’t.” Carol informed, indicating another ship a few yards away. Three men who were guarding the ship decided to approach them. They wore dark gray uniforms.

“Wait, I know them! They’re Mom’s sons!”

“Your older brothers?” Sugar asked.

“No, I mean—Carol’s sons.”

“Do I look old enough to be their mom?” Carol remarked.

“No I mean—AUGH!”

“Hm hm, chill, Cheren, we know who you mean!” Sugar said as Carol giggled.

“Look, Walt! It’s Cheren!” Larry pointed. “We shared a bed with him! Ow!” Walt smacked him.

“Pleasure to meet you again, Mr. Uno.” The eldest son spoke in a sinister tone. “Can we inquire as to why you chose to revisit this castle?”

“We found out Doflamingo had something that belongs to us, and I’m here to reclaim it.” Cheren said with a glare. “Is your mom here, by any chance?”

“Yes.” Igner smiled dimwittedly. “Miss Morgan asked Mommy to get something from Flamingo’s office.”
“What if it’s Azelf… or better yet, her Spirit Ball?”

“I’ll take you to his office!” Sugar yelled, running ahead while the two followed.

Doflamingo’s office was large and hollow, except for the desk placed before a great window where the sun shone in. Above the entrance, a massive painting of the flamingo-feathered president hung, his grin big and bright like the original. The doors creaked open as Mom walked in. She got to her knees and searched the drawers of the desk, which faced the window.

“You would think something like a ‘Spirit Ball’ would stand out.” She thought aloud. Mom was unaware that another being snuck into the office before the doors closed on their own. “Come on, where did the feathery bastard keep the damn thing?” The shadowed being was getting closer. “Unless he hid it someplace else… or if Morgan decided to send me on a wild goose—AAAAH!”

Mom was stabbed in the hip by an Anti Guy. The black Shy Guy had an adorable, blank expression common among his kinfolk. He extracted the knife as Mom gripped the wound, forced to keep her body propped with the other hand. The Shy Guy also stabbed through the cast she was given on account of her snapped back. “Something is ‘wild’ all right, but it isn’t a goose.” The familiar voice spoke. Mom looked at the ceiling, glaring at President Morgan’s staticky image. “I’m afraid it was you all along, Carol.”

“Morgan! What the devil are you—cough!” She winced from pain.

“You shouldn’t have thought you could keep the secret from me. Bringing Cheren to do your dirty work. Your faith was in the wrong person, anyway. But now… I’m returning the favor.”

The Anti Guy raised his knife for the final blow on the 142-year-old president.

Mado no Nikki; Dense Woods

Harvey whirled both bladed yo-yos around while Spongebob stayed ducked, but they made no progress in chopping the trees that encased them. “Grrrr! If these stupid yo-yos could chop up an Ice Titan, then why can’t they do it to a bunch of TREEEEEEEEEES!” He mindlessly flailed the yo-yos about… Spongebob’s limbs were cut off. “Er… oops.”

“It’s okay, Harvey. I regenerate!” The sponge sprouted new arms and legs. “Still, I don’t think there’s any way to get out of here.”

Harvey sighed, calming his anger. “I might have… one more idea. Can you keep a secret?”

“Ooooo!” Spongebob made a creepy curious expression. “A seeeeeeecreeeeeet?”

“So, you’re keeping it secret, but I figured my friends would find out eventually, so… Just stand behind me.” Harvey stood silent for a while and remembered the horrible monster he saw moments ago. He never felt more afraid of anything, the mere memory haunted him. However, Harvey’s fear of the horror was stronger than that anyone else would feel. He concealed the emotions… but now he would let them burst. He would unleash them in the form of… a mega laser.

“AAAAAAHHH!” A powerful beam burst from his lungs, and he swept it across the trees to burn them down. Harvey stopped himself, already burnt out after using his powers for the first time in ages. “Huff…huff… I’m an emotionbender.”

Spongebob stared awestruck at him. “Wow… that’s a nice secret.”
“Yah, we’re pretty rare. Now’s our chance, let’s run!” They raced over the steaming tree stumps and found their way to a street road that seemed to cut through the forest. There were lamp posts giving indication to the road. The duo took the left route of the street, hoping it could lead to a town where they could ask for help. It was beginning to rain. The kids came to a stop before a road block. There was a bloodied corpse lain before the block. It had green skin, black hair, a brown shirt, and blue pants.

Harvey and Spongebob needed a moment to mourn the stranger. Harvey took off his hat and bowed his head. He may not know this man, but there was still reason to be sad. “You really enjoy poking your nose into other peoples’ dreams, don’t you.” They flinched and whipped around. Mr. Dark glared at them, his form made more terrifying by the night and rainfall.

“Spongebob, it’s him!” Harvey yelled.

“Mister Dark,” Spongebob made a karate pose, “prepare to feel the power of the Sponginator.” Mr. Dark zapped the sponge with purple lightning, scorching him with soot. “Ow.” He gasped hoarsely.

“Impudent child. If you want me to take you out of the Dream Realm, I will gladly do it.”

“Not so fast!” Harvey declared. “I know what you’re up to, Dark! You’re trying to hurt that girl! The one who made this dream world! And I bet you’re the one crudding it up, too!”

“What are you implying?” His yellow eyes narrowed.

“That ugly monster, the blonde girl turning into a blob, and what about this guy?! You killed him, didn’t you!”

Mr. Dark flashed lightning, scaring Harvey. “How DARE you… For your information, I have no intention of ruining this place more than it already is. That unsightly monster, this person lying dead… these things have been around the moment Madotsuki dreamt them.”

“Madotsuki? Is that her name?”

“Yes. And sad as it is, her dreams are her only escape. It is her means of escaping her fears… but it has failed. Let me ask you, have you ever read those stories where the author inserts their self into the story, as an actual character?”

“What about ’em?”

“You see, a story is like the author’s sort of dreamscape, and their means to ‘insert’ their selves in the story is their way of envisioning their selves as… someone better. They imagine their selves in a better world and portray their selves in a positive light, regardless of a few minor flaws they may give their selves. But it is the major flaws they choose to ignore, the parts about themselves that they wish to forget. Madotsuki uses her dreams for similar purposes. However, no matter how much she dreams, her fears continue to torment her. She wanders endlessly, only to find no escape. Even though she is a Bubble Dreamer, the Exit Portals will not welcome her. She is trapped.”

“Well, even if she is, what’s the point of trying to hurt her? You’re only making her dreams scarier.”

“There is no harm I can do to her that is worse than anything that has been done to her already. As a matter of fact, I am trying to SAVE that girl!”

“BULL crud! It looks to me like you and your bugs are here causing trouble! What do you know about this girl, anyway?! How is any of this YOUR business?!”

“DON’T TAKE that tone with me!” The dark man thundered. “I have known Madotsuki since she was little. I bore firsthand to her suffering. She created me when she was three years old! I am her Imaginary Friend!”

Okay, regarding that analogy just now, that is sort of my opinion on self-insert OCs. :P Except Mr. Dark was a bit more negative about it. I know that I have a few self-inserts from other authors, but there’s a reason they don’t have major roles compared to the Nextgen kids. :P And I myself do not count as one because I insert myself for comedy purposes, not as an actual character. ;P Anyway, yeah, most of this arc is derived from Yume Nikki, except with an actual story. And next time, we will learn the backstory of Mr. Dark and Madotsuki. It’s Number Cipher time.

Chapter Summary

Mr. Dark reminisces about Madotsuki’s past. Harvey Harper learns a terrible secret about the girl.

As hinted in the last chapter, the cryptogram is meant to be conjoined with the one in this, and the next chapter. (I’ll just tell you it’s a neat little reference, given what happens. ;P) Now, this chapter is supposed to be… a bit disturbing. So just be warned.

Chapter 54: After Noon

Madotsuki’s Room; 10 years ago

The night before Madotsuki’s 3rd birthday. She was a very small child who slept on a small bed, and had small toys in her room. Her parents left the window open that night. It was rather windy out, the trees rustled in an eerie fashion. Madotsuki hid deep under the covers. Clamp…clamp…

The breeze was making her closet door bang against the arch, open, close, open, close… In the brief moments she could look through the gap, she could see a dark, indigo cloak breezing. She didn’t know what was inside that dark, spooky closet, but she was afraid to go over and shut the door, for a monster might ambush her.

When the door was about to clamp again, it stopped. It stopped as though something grabbed it from the other side. Madotsuki climbed out of the blanket and set her little socked feet on the floor. Walking past all her toys, she approached the door and opened it.

A cloak as dark blue as the night hung in the closet, probably put their by her parents because they didn’t have room in their closet. There were blue pointed shoes that were too big for young Mado, and a hat with a purplish-red stripe hung above the robe, two jingle bells on its side. There were two yellow lights seen between the robe and the hat. When Madotsuki looked closer, they looked like… eyes. There were also gloves hanging by the cloak, but they were attached to nothing.

“That was getting on my nerves.” A British voice said. The clothes did seem to make an invisible body. And it was staring at her. And speaking. “You should return to bed.”

Madotsuki turned around. She felt a force—the floating glove—gently nudge her back to her bed. Madotsuki climbed in. The gloves pulled the blanket over her. “I do not like the wind.” The clothes reached over and shut the window. The wind outside became faint and less eerie. The clothes returned to the closet and shut their selves inside.

The next morning, Madotsuki opened her closet. Those same clothes were still hanging there, but they had no eyes and showed no conscience. Madotsuki went off to enjoy her birthday. Last night was probably only a dream. But she wished to have that dream again.

That night, Madotsuki opened her closet again. The clothes still hung… and the yellow eyes were present. “Do you need somebody to tuck you in?”

“Why ah you in dere?…” The child spoke adorably.
“Mmm… no idea. I guess you thought I was in here… so I am.”

“Am I dreaming?”

“Hmm… no idea.”

“What’s your name?”

…I guess I don’t have one.”

“You’re dark…”

“Is that the name you give me?”

Mado shook her head shyly. “What do you wanna name?”

“It isn’t customary for someone other than the creator to name her creation.”

Mado stood confusedly. She didn’t know many words, being so young. “…Though the name ‘Thaddeus’ does have a ring to it.”

“Daddy-us?”

“Y-…Yes.” He would blush if he had cheeks. “I’ll be… Thaddeus Dark. You can call me ‘Dark-san.’”

“Dark…san.”

“Madot-suki.” He replied. He guided the child back to her bed and put the covers over her. “…Madotsuki… that’s Japanese for ‘Window.’”

“Win…dow?”

“Why would your parents give you an odd name like that?”

…I dun’ no.”

Mr. Dark saw the window design on Madotsuki’s sweater. He reached down and felt it. “…It’s very pretty. Do you mind if I… open it?”

…”’kay.”

Mr. Dark opened the window on her shirt, shrunk down, and jumped inside.

An Imaginary Friend is created by a human as an ideal Friend of their design. A Dream Spirit is created by subconscious thinking. I am a being of both types. I can enter and exit the Dream World through Madotsuki’s window. So she always wore a shirt with a window.

One night, it rained. But the next morning, it was partly cloudy. Puddles still filled the streets. Madotsuki stood over one and viewed her reflection. Then a frog jumped in the puddle and rippled it. It happily hopped along. Madotsuki crouched like a frog and hopped in the puddle. “What are you doing, Child?” Mr. Dark asked behind her.

“I’m a frog.”

“Hmm…” Mr. Dark zapped a magic spell from his finger. Madotsuki turned into a frog. “If you wish to be.”

“Ribbit. Ribbit.” Madotsuki hopped around the park. She jumped in all the puddles. She seemed to jump further each time. “Ribbit…” She saw a blonde-haired girl with a ponytail sitting behind a tree. “Ribbit.” She looked rather lonely, so Madotsuki hopped over to her. She hopped on the lap of the girl’s skirt. She merely stared at the frog with narrowed blue eyes. Mado hopped off. The girl stood up and walked away without a word.

One day, Madotsuki was at home, playing with her toys. She stacked blocks like buildings beside her doll house. She noticed how small the toys were compared to normal things. She wondered what it was like. “I wanna be small.”

“As you wish.” Mr. Dark cast a spell and shrunk Madotsuki. She entered her dollhouse and explored it, interacting with each plastic item. She climbed her blocks and viewed the expanse of her room from the top. She always wanted to climb Karakura’s big buildings, but this seemed just as fun.

“I wanna be a cat.” Mado said after seeing a cat pass by her house. Mr. Dark turned her into a pink little kitten. “Meow meow.” She began to repeat as she wandered around on all fours. The ponytailed girl, who Mado nicknamed Poniko, was walking on the sidewalk. The kitten trotted beside her, going “Meow meow.” Poniko ignored her.

One day, she saw a birthday party taking place in a backyard. Some kids that were in her class were there. She wasn’t given an invitation. “I wanna be invisible.” she requested. Mr. Dark turned her invisible, except to his eyes. Madotsuki approached the fence and watched the party from here. They had balloons and cake. It looked very tasty, and fun.

“Dark-san, will you read me a story?” a five-year-old Madotsuki asked while in bed.

Thaddeus pulled up a chair beside her bed, sat down, and opened a book. “‘Once upon a time, there was a little girl who lived alone in the woods. She was a witch, born with magical powers.’

“‘People feared her for her magic.’” Madotsuki dreamed she was flying on a broom, dressed in a witch’s cloak and hat. “‘So she was all alone. Then, a girl came to her house.’” Mado stopped flying and saw Poniko walking by down below. “‘A cute girl with golden braids.’” Poniko seemed to glance up at the witch, but turned around and ignored her.

“‘Once upon a time, there was a demon that ruled the world.’” Mr. Dark read the next night. “‘He enslaved all humans, and darkness shrouded everything.’” Madotsuki dreamed she was a demon, like one she saw in a videogame once.

“‘Once upon a time, there was an entire planet, where all the mountains, buildings, and fields were made of musical instruments. Music played every day.’ Ooo, this story has a demon, too.”

“Will you play me a song?” Madotsuki asked.

“You wish me to play you something?”

“Yes, please.”

“…Very well.”

Current time; Dense Woods

“Awwww… That story was adorable.” Spongebob said.
“Okay, well, what about all this ‘suffering’ you were talking about?” Harvey asked. “When does that start?”

“I am only telling you that much!” Mr. Dark stated. “You have no business in this child’s dreams and therefore it is not your concern!”

“Yes it is! You’re planning to hurt this girl, and as a Kids Next Door operative, it’s my job to stop you!”

“None of your pitiful Kids Next Door could HOPE to understand Madotsuki’s suffering!”

“You’re wrong! Bad things happen to us all the time! Like when Anthony got that shrinking curse, or Fybi lost her wings, or when Dillon lost Vanellope… You wouldn’t believe it, but I felt that sadness and distraught stronger than anyone else.”

“That’s right!” Spongebob exclaimed, remembering what he learned minutes ago. “Harvey’s an emotionbender! But don’t tell anyone.”

Harvey shot a look at him, then back on Mr. Dark. “Bad things happen to people all the time. But they all got past it, and I know Madotsuki can, too. We could even help her if you just tell us what’s wrong.”

“I will do no such thing! Emotionbender or not, you are stepping into territory you have no place getting yourself involved in. You will leave this realm at once!”

“Listen, buddy,” Harvey pointed a finger, “it’s your own fault for bringing me here in the first place, so YOU better…?” Harvey turned around to see the green-skinned corpse. “Hey… does this body have something to do with it?”

“I said DON’T interfere!” Thaddeus roared.

Harvey ignored the warning and approached the body. Although it was disgusting, he bent down and touched it.

On a rainy night, a car shot down the road and ran over a man crossing the street.

Tears appeared in Harvey’s eyes, his face struck with horror. “Harvey, what’s the matter??” Spongebob exclaimed.

“H-Huh?” Harvey backed away from the body. He wiped the tears off and tried to let his nerves calm. “I-I musta… saw one of Madotsuki’s memories. Sh-She felt… really upset a-and…”

Mr. Dark narrowed his eyes, angered at their nosiness. Harvey stared at the hand that touched the corpse. “Wait a minute… this is Madotsuki’s dream world. That means everything here is made from her thoughts and… her feelings. If I go around and touch everything I can, I wonder if I’ll be able to understand what she’s feeling?”

“You will NOT!” Mr. Dark ignited a flame in his hand and threw it, but Spongebob grabbed Harvey and ran down a forest path.

“I think you’re on to something though, Harv!” Spongebob told him. “Squidward never wants me involved in his life. But when I do, boy do things work out!”

“The first thing we should do is find Madotsuki herself.” Harvey panted. “I need to warn her what Mr. Dark is up to.”
“You know, Harvey, I need to ask, why were you keeping your powers a secret? Don’t they look like they woulda helped you guys a few times?”

“My mom said it was a rare and dangerous power, and she didn’t want me using them until I was older. She told me to always keep my emotions under control and not express them too much. But that’s STUPID, ’cause she started using HER powers when she was seven! Why is she so afraid of ME-!”

A few of the surrounding trees blew down from an unseen force. Harvey stopped and stared in shock. “I don’t know.” Spongebob replied honestly.

“There they are, I SEE ’em!” André declared as Hoodlums were giving pursuit.

“Uh-oh! Let’s go this way, Harvey!”

Dressrosa; Doflamingo’s office

The Anti Guy raised the knife to end the 142-year-old president’s life. Mom shut her eyes from her fate. Then an Ice Arrow flew into the room and froze the assassin solid. A Song Beam fired and struck the frozen Shy Guy, blasting him against the wall.

Before Mom or Morgan could understand what happened, Cheren, Sugar, and Carol ran into the room. “That’s an AWFUL dirty trick, Aunt Morgan!”

“Cheren, is it? I see Carol has you at her beck and call. And who might you be? Don Quixote Sugar? I was counting on your toy curse to rid the world of Spongebob Squarepants... but it seems it has failed.”

“I never wanted to use my powers to begin with!” Sugar yelled. “And I won’t use them anymore, especially not for you!”

“Aunt Morgan, why did you try to kill one of your associates?!” Cheren aimed his sword at the screen.

“Sunni Chariton tipped me off that it was Carol who snuck you into Mariejoa, is this not true?”

“Not me, it was her!” Carol pointed at Mom frantically.

“You know, Aunt Morgan, I may get mad at operatives for disobeying my orders, but I sure as hell don’t have them EXECUTED! Heck, the worst I did was throw Kodama in prison, but she kind of…”

“This woman intended for you to slay me. Would you not retaliate in the same manner?”

“ Heck, no. I woulda asked what their problem is with me, and KICK their ass if I wanted to! And FYI, Morgan, I never planned to kill you. But it’s great timing that you’re here: where are you keeping the Firstborn Uxie?”

“So, you learned that secret? Unfortunately, I have given Uxie to someone else. We planned to use her for something important, so don’t think we’ll let you come up and take her.”

“Guess again, Lady!” Cheren slashed his sword at the air. “Because I’m coming up there! And I’m gonna mop the FLOOR with you!” Sugar and Carol gaped at his declaration.

“I already ’mopped the floor’ with you 13 days ago. And I did not even use my full strength. What “I’ve gotten stronger, Aunt Morgan. And I didn’t even have a chance to go full throttle. I’ll beat the snot out of you and make you come back to our side.”

“Even if you get lucky and beat me, it will not change a thing. But very well, I’ll accept your challenge. I expect to see you by May 20. Five days from now. I haven’t got all month, you know. But I have one little condition, just to make it fun: you must climb up Mariejoa through Enies Lobby. CP10 should be a pretty decent warm-up for you.” The TV switched off.

“You wish.” Cheren remarked in spite. He turned to face Mom as the old woman was gasping, clutching her wound. “Mom, are you okay?”

“I’m just fine, you nosey snot. Why… did you bother saving me, anyway?”

“I have an unhealthy fondness for ladies.” He said with a cocked brow. “Come on, let’s get you back to your sons.”

Sugar and Meloetta helped the woman to walk as they navigated out of the castle. “So, you came here searching for Azelf, too?” Mom inquired. “I thought that was a trick.”

“Well, based on my info, Doflamingo was keeping Azelf hostage.” Carol Masterson replied. “But given how much time passed, she’s probably gone by now. Either escaped or taken by the other presidents.”

“Or I could be just hanging around here, waiting for something fun to happen!”

“Yeah, I guess so.” Meloetta replied. “Azelf is the kinda person to- Oh?”

They all turned and faced up. There was a silver-bodied creature wearing a silver helmet, holding swords in its two tails. “Wait!” Sugar exclaimed. “That’s Azure! The greatest fighter we have in our colosseum!”

“That’s right!” Azure nodded. “The people of Dressrosa know me as Azure, when in actuality, I am…!” He pulled off her helmet, exposing her blue head with golden eyes and red gem on her forehead.

“A-Azelf! It’s really you!” Cheren beamed with delight.

“What’ve you been doing here?” Carol asked. “Did Doflamingo actually have you trapped?”

“Well, Doflamingo told me he would persuade the other Corporate Presidents not to hurt my sisters if I fought in the Corrida Colosseum. Even if I didn’t believe him, it sure got me some work! I don’t know where he got all those warriors, but they were the best workouts ever! I couldn’t be too worried for my sisters, ‘cause we’re Firstborn, we know how to pull through. So, what’ve you been up to?”

“Story time!” Carol exclaimed.

Half an hour of recaps later: “Yikes… I missed a lot.” Azelf said. “But wow, Cheren, taking on the Demon Saint Majora and Goddess of Nature Viridi? You kick SERIOUS ass! Hehe, I remember when you were five and playing with that toy sword! When I analyzed his Power Level, it was just a itty-bitty teeny-tiny 3!” She held her small hands very close to each other.

“Heh heh, hey, I was young.” Cheren blushed.
“What do you mean by his Power Level?” Sugar asked.

“Well, Azelf here is able to scan a person’s overall strength.” Cheren explained. “But only if that person attacks her. She didn’t actually discover this power until Arceus removed her curse.”

“That’s why I liked to go around and make ALL the strong guys attack me!” Azelf proclaimed, doing a flip and pointing her tails at her head.

“When she scanned my mom, it was 3,127.”

“Hm. I expect nothing less from the famous Rachel.” Mom noted.

“Aright, s’let’s see how strong YOU got!” Azelf said perkily. “Come on, Cheren, hit me! Hit me with your strongest shot!”

“We- I-”

“I didn’t ask for a stutter, take out that sword and slice me down the middle!” She inched closer each time she insisted, “Go on! Do it! Hit me! Cut me! Do it, Cheren! Cut me into little pieces!”

“UGH!” Cheren burned into his Demon State, raised the Master Sword, and SLICED Azelf perfectly down the middle. Sugar and Carol were speechless at the fact he would slice a Firstborn with no hesitation. Azelf flew back and hit against the wall. The Goddess of Willpower only had a minor scratch on her.

Azelf touched her tails to her head as her red emblems glowed. “Analyzation complete. The speed of your attack, the strength of your cut, plus the current level of chi… You have a Power Level of 4,104.”

“WHOA!” Sugar and Carol jumped.

“Don’t ‘Whoa’ yet, let’s see the rest of you, hit me!”

Sugar sucked in a breath and blasted a Song Beam against Azelf with her highest note. Azelf recovered and analyzed. “Don Quixote Sugar, your Power Level is: 1,210.”

“Not bad!”

“My turn! Heeeyyy-YAH!” Carol rushed up, her fist balled tight, and punched Azelf in the face. She budged a little bit, but the Firstborn analyzed quickly.

“Carol Masterson, your Power Level is: 10.”

“D’OH.” The rich girl collapsed.

“Hah hah ha!” Cheren laughed. “Still, 4,104. I really didn’t expect that!” He stared at his hand proudly. “I may be able to defeat Aunt Morgan after all!”

“Don’t get too hasty.” Azelf stated. “Morgan visited Dressrosa five months ago just so I can scan her. After a somewhat painful Psycho Beam to the face, I determined her Power Level is 5,892.”

“Ache-!” Cheren winced. “That’s… pretty high.”

“I also know The King’s Power Level.”

The three kids and adult stared at her with amazement and terror in their eyes. They wondered if it was safe to ask. “W…When did you scan him?” Cheren asked.

“Back in March. He visited Dressrosa in some silly disguise called ‘Sir Knightly.’ He didn’t look at all intimidating when I faced him. And then…”

Azelf lashed her swords at every corner of the pots-and-pans knight. She had never seen armor this indestructible, and yet knocking him around was so simple. But just when it seemed the knight was lying dead, he screamed, jumped to his feet, ran at Azelf like an escaped lunatic, and punched her so hard, her helmet broke and she went flying out of the colosseum.

“His Power Level, at the time, was over nine thousand.”

“Nine… thousand…” Cheren felt his spirits decrease.

Dun dun duuuun! The screen cut to Goku, who had a shock-ridden, gaping expression.

“Wait a second, what about Firstborn Guardians?” Sugar asked. “Don’t our Firstborn make us stronger?”

“Of course they do! Firstborn can triple your powers!”

Cheren’s spirits fired up again, and he said excitedly, “Then I need to claim you as my Firstborn! Does Mom still have your Spirit Ball?”

“I never found it, dumbass!” Mom shouted.

“I MEANT MY MOM!”

“Yes, she does.” Azelf answered. “But you’re not ready to claim me, yet.”

“Whaddyou mean I’m not ready?! I saved the world TWICE! I took on Majora and Viridi singlehandedly! Even my mom needed Lehcar and Mandy’s help to beat Ganon! Do I need to unite the Triforce myself now?”

“Oh, screw the Triforce, that thing’s nothin’ but trouble. Look, I’ll tell ya when you’re ready to capture me, just trust me on this.”

“Sigh, fine. It’s at least good to have you back, Azelf.”

“Um, excuse me, but,” Meloetta interrupted, “don’t we have a woman bleeding to death here?”

They now remembered the wound in Mom’s hip. “Right.” Cheren said. “We’ll bring you up to Moonbase and have Melody heal you.”

“You’re bringing a Corporate President up to Moonbase?” Carol questioned.

“Keep your diapers on, brat, it won’t do me any favors to try a sneak attack.” Mom said. “Now that President Priss has stopped trusting me.”

“We’ll keep guards trained on her just in case. Let’s go.”

Madotsuki’s Room

Madotsuki climbed out of bed after waking. She walked out onto her balcony. The sun hovered in the partly cloudy sky. It was about 2:10pm. The town looked pretty and lively. But this was as much Madotsuki would see of it. Madotsuki went back in to write in her Yume Nikki (her Dream Diary.

Dear Diary… Poniko ignored me again. I wonder why she won’t talk to me? I also saw a boy with a winter hat. He made fun of my hair, then he chased me. What was really weird is that he talked. I didn’t understand him, but… I wonder what he wanted? Will I see him again? Probably a 1/78 chance, though.

Madotsuki had nothing else to do. She would not go outside her room… she made no progress in NASU… so she climbed under the covers and went to sleep.

Neon World

The Neon World was the brightest and most colorful place in Madotsuki’s dreamscape. She came here after going to sleep. There were living pinball machines, jiggling worms, one-eyed things with pinchers, all flashing neon colors and dancing about the neon halls while techno music played.

Madotsuki could not blend with the colorful, carefree creatures. She was just too single-colored. But then she came upon a neon parrot. When she touched the parrot, her body turned neon. She happily danced alongside the creatures. She was neon like them, and she made the party even flashier.

Madotsuki found an empty doorway whose black interior contrasted with the neon colors. Madotsuki turned off her neon form and entered. She was in a black dimension with a path composed of purple and red, flashing tiles, which made sounds under her steps. The area was quieter than the Neon World, and no one was around. However, Madotsuki saw two red Lums, little energy balls with wings. The Lums appeared lost, and afraid. They heard the tiles make sounds behind them—Madotsuki was coming.

The Lums tried to flee, but Mado opened her shirt window, took out a bubble with a stoplight design, and changed into a Stop & Go light. She flashed the red light, forcing the Lums to freeze in place. Mado approached the Lums and pulled bubbles out of her head, trapping them inside. The Lums shivered from the horrific thoughts contained in these bubbles, but they could not escape. They were about to float up into the Sea of Bubbles, but two Black Lums flew by and carried the bubbles away.

“Nice catch there, Mad!” Ales Mansay’s voice rang from an unseen speaker. “Listen, I managed to catch some myself, they’re at the house. Hurry up, I made some food for ya, too! You know grub’s always best in Dream Land! Also, somebody’s here waiting for ya, too. An old friend of yours.”

Still feeling half awake, Madotsuki made her way to the house.

Somewhere outside Dense Woods

Harvey and Spongebob rested under some trees to catch their breath. “The Hoodlums couldn’t-a followed us this far.” Harvey said. “How big can one person’s dream world be?”

“I think Mr. Dark said Maddy was a Bubble Dreamer, too.”

“Okay. Anyway, my own Dream World has all my friends’ dreams connected to one-another. I think Jessie’s are, too.”

“So Madotsuki’s is made of other peoples’… like that ponytail girl. Sigh, let’s keep looking. She has to be around here somewhere.”

“Wait, do you hear a bike?”

The two peeked out from some bushes. The 12-year-old girl in question, Madotsuki was pedaling up from down the road, bypassing them on her way to a house with a big magician’s hat. Harvey and Spongebob pursued her, keeping hidden within the trees. They gasped when Mr. Dark materialized before the house. Madotsuki Bubbled her bike and put it in her window.

“Madotsuki… it’s good to see you again.” The cloaked nightmare knelt down and put his hands to her back (if he had arms, it would be hugging). “Do you remember? It’s me, Madotsuki. Dark-san…”

“Dark-san…” Her eyes were half closed.

“Yes… Dark-san…” The man gently stroked her hair. “Sigh… Madotsuki… I feel terrible for letting that happen to you… For six years, you never had someone to comfort you… Those wretched Kids Next Door were so obsessed with stopping parents from feeding their kids broccoli or from giving kids triple homework… ignorant to your plight… But I will be rid of them soon… and I will save you…” Mr. Dark stood up and took Mado’s hand. “Let’s go inside.” He led her into the Magician’s House.

“What’s he planning to do to her?!?” Harvey whispered angrily. “He shouldn’t be able to kill her, right?”

“I have an idea! I’ll send in one of my Minibobs!” Spongebob ripped off a square piece of his body. It morphed into a mini Spongebob, said “I’m ready!” and ran to the house.

“Spongebob, you got a weird body, but it’s handy.”

“In more ways than one.” Spongebob smirked, extracting more arms from his body.

Inside the house

“KYAAAAAAH!” Ales Mansay screamed like a little girl meeting her favorite boy band. “MR. DARK-SAAAAAAN! Mr. Dark-senpai! Senpai Dark! DAAAARK-senpai! It’s so good to see you again! And of course, the girl who dreamified this magnificent man!” Mansay got beside Mado and rubbed her cheek. “Madotsuki! The honor belongs to you, hah ha!” He glanced up at Mr. Dark, who was giving a spiteful glare. “…Uh, hehe.” Nervous, Mansay slipped away. “Food’s in the kitchen. Please, help yourself, Mado.”

The 12-year-old walked away, her red boots making their usual squeak sound. The Minibob squeezed under the door and saw her. He went to hide when André buzzed in between Dark and Mansay. “Well, we got about 1,056 Mutant Lums ready to bust some heads. So, what’s the plan, how’re we gonna kill that girl?”

“We cannot kill her.” Dark replied. “When I attempted to kill that boy, my attacks phased through him. We cannot kill real humans in the Dream World.”

“Well, that’s no big deal!” Mansay shrugged. “We’ll convince Mado to kill herself! It shouldn’t be very hard at all! I mean, every kid her age feels like killin’ their self. Especially if she was freaking ra-”

Mr. Dark squeezed The Magician by the neck and raised him to his eyes. Mansay’s head puffed and was turning darker blue. “Listen, you prepubescent fanboy.” He spoke with pure malice. His yellow eyes bore into the Teensie’s soul. “I did not appreciate you sniffing around my background. The only reason I do not twist your neck is because you have technology that is useful to me. But you are NEVER to speak of that. You have no place to. Do you understand me?”

“Ack! . . Crystal. . clear. .” Mr. Dark dropped him. Mansay gasped and puffed his neck back to normal. “Uff… But, it should be pretty easy, right?”

“Sure, I’m a pro at instigating suicide!” André said proudly. “But what about that other thing? You know, with that thing we got in the basement?”

The Minibob perked at this hint. “We should have enough power to fire the cannon.” Mansay replied as Minibob ran for the purple curtains. “We’ll collect a bit more chi in case…”

The Minibob dropped down a flight of stairs behind the curtains. He squeezed under another door, to a room full of Mr. Dark T-shirts, fan letters, and merchandise. There was also a bubble that contained a silver being with a pink head and two tails. “Spongebob! Is that you?”

Minibob looked at the right wall: Murfy was glued to a large piece of bug tape.

“I’m Minibob!”

“Eh, close enough. Spongebob, see that thing in the bubble? That’s Mesprit, the Goddess of Emotion. Mansay’s usin’ her for something evil! And what’s more, that Madotsuki girl is in danger!”

“TIME TO REPORT BACK TO BIGBOB!” Minibob pinched himself and popped.

Spongebob’s missing piece reformed. “Hu! Harvey, somebody named Mesprit is trapped in there!”

“Mesprit?! She’s here??”

“Do you know her?”

“She’s the one who gave me emotionbending. Spongebob, listen, I’ll run in there and drag Madotsuki out. If those guys chase me, that’s your chance to run in and get Mesprit. You saw where she was, so you’ll have a better chance.”

“Ooo-hoo, I love distractions!”

“Okay, on three: One… two… three! AAAAH!” Harvey ran for the house.

“Wait- I wasn’t ready! I thought you would say ‘go’!”

“HANDS UP IN THE AIR!” Harvey burst into the house and raised his yo-yos. The three villains flinched and did so.

“Like we just don’t care??” André joked.

“WAIT A SECOND!” Mr. Dark blasted fire, but dealt no harm to Harvey as the boy threw his yo-yos at Madotsuki, caught her, and pulled her back. “AFTER HIM!” The three villains began to chase Harvey as expected. He unwrapped his yo-yos and held Madotsuki’s hand as the taller girl ran with him.

“Come on, we have to get away from them! I’ll explain later!”

After Harvey led them far enough from the house, Spongebob quickly ran inside. He went down the basement, to the room where Murfy and Mesprit were trapped. “Spongebob, get me down from here! I’ll help you save Mesprit—we need to get Rayman outta here, too!”

“You got it!” Spongebob faced Mesprit’s bubble determinedly. “No bubble lasts forever!” He whipped out a camera and snapped a blinding picture.

FC World

Mr. Dark, Mansay, and André chased Harvey and Mado through a warp gate that brought them to the pixelated FC World. They must’ve gone in that house! Mansay’s textbox read. They burst into the ordinary house that had dozens of floors inside.

However, Harvey and Madotsuki were hiding behind the house. “Sigh… let’s hope that keeps them busy. My name’s Harvey. We kinda met a little while ago. I’m… sorry I made fun of your hair.”

Madotsuki stared at him and said nothing. “Your name’s Madotsuki, right? I… Ugh, this videogame world’s hurting my eyes. Do you know someplace else we can talk?”

Madotsuki reached into her window and took out a bubble that had a hand with an eye. When she donned the Medamaude Effect, Harvey felt his vision zoom into the eye. They warped back to the Nexus. Madotsuki took the Effect off as Harvey shook back to his senses. “Um… ’guess you do.”

“…” Madotsuki turned to leave.

“Wait!” Harvey ran in front of her. “I’m here to help you. Those people are planning to kill you—Mr. Dark. Is he your Imaginary Friend?”

“…” Mado looked away, frowning like always. “There are lots of people here. Dark-san is one of them.”

“So you… did make him?”

“…Dark-san is the only one who talks. No one else talks. …But you.”

“Heh.” Harvey blushed. “I’m not really from this world. I’m a real person. Like you.”

“…Real…”

“Yeah, real. I’m a human.”

“Hey!” Harvey followed her again. “Look, I don’t know anything about you, but… I can tell you’re upset. And I really want to help you.”

Madotsuki spared a glance at him. She said nothing and entered the block door. Harvey followed her into a realm composed of gigantic blocks with varying shapes. They only came in purple, pink, and white colors. Harvey brushed his hand along some blocks as he followed Mado around them. “Do you like to play with blocks?” he asked with a smile. Harvey felt a happy energy radiating from these blocks. He remembered the part in Mr. Dark’s story, when Madotsuki turned small and climbed on her blocks. “I play with blocks, too. It’s like building your own little city, isn’t it?”

After minutes of wandering around the blocks, they found a hat and scarf that were floating in midair. They moved as though an invisible person were wearing them. “Mafurako.” Madotsuki introduced.
“Er, I don’t see anyone.” Harvey said.

Madotsuki put on a triangle kerchief. She turned invisible. The hat-and-scarf girl became visible; she wore a blue shirt and purple pants, and her brown hair hid her eyes. Harvey approached and touched the girl. There was a soulless, empty feeling about her. As though she were isolated in her own dimension.

Suddenly, he and Madotsuki were teleported atop one of the block structures. Mafurako was far away in the distance. Harvey felt a desire for the girl to be far away from them. Madotsuki turned visible and entered a black, polygonal door that was on this block. Harvey went with her, going up a stairwell behind the door.

“Is that how you feel most of the time? Invisible and lonely? I could get if it’s because of some trauma, but even if it is, you don’t have to feel that way. The Kids Next Door can help you. The KND helps everyone, and the best part is, you never feel lonely. We can help you forget your past, and you’ll never have to think about it. . . .”

At the end of the stairs, they appeared in a vast, white marshland. The memories of that horrible monster returned to Harvey. There it was, the mountain-sized beast gripping the hills in its many hands, its tongue oozing with red. There were walls that had large cow utters hanging limp. There was a monochrome girl with pigtails and bare feet. Harvey approached the girl to possibly ask who she was. Then she turned around: multiple arms sprouted out of her body like bones, the pupil of her left eye drooped out. She looked like a disfigured zombie.

Madotsuki was crossing the street with a man, a woman, and another girl, who Madotsuki considered a friend. It was nighttime and it was raining. A renegade car ignored the stoplight and ran them over, only missing Mado since she skipped ahead. Their bodies lay dead on the street. Bones were squished out of the girl’s body. Her mother, at the time, was pregnant-

Harvey whipped around, shutting his eyes, squeezing his head. He didn’t want to picture such an awful thing. The horror he was feeling. The horror Madotsuki felt. Harvey stomped away, but the image wouldn’t leave his mind. It gave him the vision of a girl sleeping in an igloo. Harvey tripped, falling into the white marsh. This unnamed liquid filled him with even more dread.

Madotsuki was forced to walk home by herself. She was lost downtown. She didn’t know where to go. She thought she would never see home again. . . .She felt someone staring at her from the alley. Mado kept wandering, ignoring this feeling. She heard footsteps behind her. She ignored them and ran. She was in a filthy backstreet where no soul roamed. She was lost in the dark and in the rain. She sulked, having lost all hope in finding home. And in her moment of weakness, that’s when he grabbed her.

He muffled Madotsuki’s mouth. Nobody heard her scream, nobody saw her squirm. He carried her all the way to his 45th floor apartment without a hitch. He shoved the helpless 7-year-old on the bed and-

“NO MORE!” Harvey yelped. He was on the floor, crying and hugging his legs. He felt her emotions on that night. He felt them like it actually happened to him. “No… more… sniff…”

Harvey was not in the marsh, he was on a floor now. Mr. Dark stood over him, more angry at the boy than ever. “Are you happy now…?”

Unable to get up from his fetal position, Harvey twisted his head to look at him. “How. . . h-how could anyone do that to a child? . . .”
“Imagine how I felt… watching her from her window… helpless to do anything…”

“W-Why didn’t you do anything?! You were her friend, right?”

“Only in her dreams! I could not step out into the real world unless she were thinking of me. But she was in so much pain that she could not. And from that night forward, all she had were nightmares. And I felt nothing but anger and rage.”

Mr. Dark turned away, remembering what happened next. “The horrid transformation of Madotsuki’s dreamscape did not go unnoticed by the Council of Teensies. But did they do something? No… they were ignorant! They took me away from this nightmarish world and dropped me in the Candy Chateau! Where everything is sweet and delicious! WELL, IT IS NOT!” He burst flames for a second. “They only enjoy a Dream Realm where everything is happy! That’s why I stole the Protoon, to harness its power and turn it into darkness! But then Rayman, the realm’s acclaimed hero, defeated me and took it back! Even HE would not hear my plight! Well, NO MORE! I stole the Protoon again and destroyed Rayman’s brain! I will ensure that ALL beings know the pain and darkness that Madotsuki lived through!

“Let me ask you something, Harvey!” He turned to the crying boy. “Where were your Kids Next Door when Madotsuki was being raped?! Where was Sector JP? Sector V? WHERE WAS ANYONE?!”

“W-W-We didn’t know! . .” Harvey sniffled.

“Oh, that’s right! You were saving some boys from the Mega Detention Center! Or you needed to cure a chickenpox epidemic, or defeat the tyrannical Homework Lord. But such a thing is TOO MUCH for your puny child organization! When REAL evil adults are oppressing kids in the most REAL way possible, you shirk away! It wasn’t what you signed up for, was it?!”

“I WOULD’VE SAVED HER!!”

“BULL!” Mr. Dark slapped him. “Even if you manage to whisk her away from that apartment, you will never be able to make her forget. Her dreams will forever haunt her. Can you honestly say you would not rather DIE than go on living with this pain?!”

“Sniff…” Harvey managed to put himself on his feet and stand up. “Bad things… happen to everyone…” He choked through his sobs. “But things always… get better… We can help Madotsuki forget… We’ll be the friends she never had!”

Thaddeus closed his eyes. He turned to a huge, silver piano that was gaining dust. The vacant room echoed with his footsteps. He slowly approached the piano and took his seat. “The burden is mine to bear… I am the one at fault. I read Madotsuki to sleep every night, with stories that all ended happily. Ugh… when I look back… on all those wretched novels… I remember…”

Years ago…

“Will you play me a song?” Madotsuki asked while in bed.

“You wish me to play you something?"

“Yes, please.”

“…Very well.” Mr. Dark stood up, and walked over to a piano. He sat down and began to play. (Play “14th Song” from D.Gray-Man.)
He played a soft and gentle melody. The notes rang in her head like a lullaby… it was beautiful. Madotsuki felt herself grow lighter… she felt like floating… sleeping forever… in dreams…

On the windy night of her 3rd birthday, Madotsuki opened her closet and found a set of dark clothes with scary yellow eyes. She named it Dark-san.

Mr. Dark held Mado’s hand as she skipped across the wet ground, splashing in every puddle. She saw the ponytail girl sitting by a tree. Mado turned into a frog… but the girl ignored her. She turned into a cat… but she ignored her. Madotsuki turned invisible and watched a party she wasn’t invited to.

Her father, pregnant mother, and “friend” were run over by a car. She was kidnapped and taken to an apartment she would never leave. Then, when the kidnapper wasn’t looking… she took a knife and stabbed him.

“Sniff…sniff…” The song was so wonderful in Harvey’s ears… he couldn’t stop crying…

“Once upon a time… there was a witch who lived in the woods.”

Ellen gouged out her eyes… then she cut off her legs…

“Once upon a time, there was a little girl who was trapped in an art gallery…”

Weiss Guertena finished painting Mary before he died. Mary waited in the gallery for decades, but her father never returned. She was alone in the darkness.

“Once upon a time, there was a princess who could control snow. She lived on a world completely covered with snow.”

Queen Elsa froze her sister, Anna. And in her despair, she froze the entire kingdom. Everyone on Arendelle died, and her spirit was left to suffer.

“Once upon a time, there was a child who could grant wishes…”

Jirachi was suffering. There were so many planets who wished for their loved ones back. Dimentia told him not to… they were not ready to know of the GKND.

“There was a boy who could control the elements…”

Negatar Gnaa was feared and shunned for his power. His shadow came to life and spoke to him…

“Once upon a time, there was an island of lightning…”

Phosphora bowed before God Thor. But Thor, who was actually the deceitful Loki, bashed the child in the head with his staff, and dropped her from the sky.

“But no matter how much they suffered. ” Mr. Dark spoke, pure anger and malice in his eyes as he stared at the open book.

Ellen dragged her bleeding, dying body across the ground, reaching for Viola, wishing for her aid. Elsa sung “Let It Go” for 300 years to erase her grief. Mary tore the petals of several fake roses.

“No matter what sins they may have committed. ” Mr. Dark could not bear to hold the book any longer. He felt more hatred the more he stared at it.

Young Mavis Vermillion screamed and unleashed a black cloud that killed her parents. Phosphora battled Fybi Fulbright in the sky and struck a bolt of lightning that burned her wings. Mary decapitated Garry’s rose and let the man die. Sugar turned Cheren into a toy, and everyone forgot him.

The next sentence made Mr. Dark so angry, he would die trying to utter it. “They all lived. . .”

April, Ib, and Sector W7 all hugged Mary. Dr. Facilier, Carla, and the Ice Climbers hugged Wendy. Elsa cried as she hugged Anna’s frozen body... She began to unfreeze from her sister’s love.

“. . . happily. . .”

Avatar Aang and Negatar Gnaa joined together to save the universe. Nigel Uno reunited with his friends on Earth. Phosphora was happily living with Palutena.

“...EVER...”

Mavis, Lapis, and Aisling became the Fairy Princesses. Nerehc Onu made a better Negaverse for his people. King Sandy returned to live with his half-Minish family. Viola lifted Ellen over her shoulders and carried her to be healed. Everyone, everywhere, in this wonderful universe... their bad times had all passed.

“. . .AFTER!!”

The book exploded as Mr. Dark combusted into flames. The flames were his hatred, which grew ceaselessly. Tears leaked from his eyes, wetting the ground, wetting his cloak, and the flames would not dry them. He could feel nothing from those stories. Because Madotsuki was still suffering. She was still in her room, haunted by memories that would never be gone, haunted by dreams she could not escape from. And no matter what they did, no matter how much she pretended to be something else – a witch, a cat, a videogame character – she could never escape. So why, then, should Mr. Dark enjoy such stories... when Madotsuki could never achieve a happy ending.

“SHE CAN!” Harvey screamed through his unending tears. “SHE CAN have a happy ending! We’ll give it to her! We’ll save her from her nightmares and be her friends!”

“IMPUDENT CHILD!” Dark roared. “You would never say such things if you were in her shoes! If you knew an OUNCE of what she felt!”

“I AM FEELING IT! RIGHT NOW! And it’s... sniff... it’s awful... I never wanna feel this way ever again. But maybe that’s good. Maybe it’s good that I can feel Madotsuki’s emotions. Because now I can reach out and hug her... and tell her it’s all right...” He wiped the tears away. “I couldn’t stand to hold in my emotions all this time... If my mom’s afraid of my chi going crazy, then screw her! Everybody needs somebody else to cry with... so I’m going to cry with Madotsuki. You’ll see...” He marched out of the room, feeling strong belief in his own words. Mr. Dark continued playing his piano.

Magician’s House

“Dammit! I can’t believe that snotty brat tricked me and made off with Mesprit!” Ales Mansay grumbled while typing on a massive keyboard. “Well, the joke’s on them! By using Mesprit as a power source, we managed to absorb 50,000 joules of Emotion Chi from Madotsuki! Mixed with the fear from the bubble we had her trap Mesprit in, this baby is READY for fireworks!”
The hat on the top of the house opened to reveal a cannon. It aimed directly at the starry sky. The stars above Dream Land were in truth the Sea of Bubbles. Hundreds of thousands of nightmares that were Bubbled by every Bubble Dreamer throughout history. All were in eternal slumber. “Chi Cannon firing sequence initiate!” Mansay announced as the cannon shone with a bright pink energy. “Lock all targets within firing range! Number of targets estimated at: 988,000! You may fire when ready! Aaaaaand… FIRE!!”

The dreamscape trembled under the cannon’s power. A blinding beam shot up into the sky and pierced the stars. The explosion was as bright as a close sun. The thousands of stars were popping. Every monster that they contained, every being that terrorized the peaceful dreams, were free. A maniacal laugh echoed beyond the flash.

It was kind of hard to write this without going in too much detail. I was originally going to include the Emotions from Inside Out… but I totally forgot when I began writing this arc. XP Which irrefutably means the idea has been scrapped, and I got something better planned. ;P Next time, the Madotsuki Arc will conclude. This Atbash Cipher continues last one’s cryptogram.

Harvey tries to thwart Mr. Dark's plan to sacrifice Madotsuki!

This chapter is also called “Happy Ending.”

Chapter 55: Midnight

Plankton’s Crab Craft

“Uck, these Kelp Shakes are the worst.” Anthony stated, throwing another cup of the substance away. “How long are you gonna keep us on this dumb thing?”

“Until you’re convinced to get on our side and stay there.” Plankton replied, filling a cup with chocolate substance from a machine. “But if you’re tired of kelp, you can try a chocolate chumshake for only a dollar and ten cents.”

The ship rumbled, causing Plankton to drop the shake. “Plankton, we’ve got company.” Karen reported.

“AAAH!” The group yelped when two sets of metal blades gripped the edge of the hatch and yanked it open. Artie and Haylee were seen flying in their C.O.O.L.-B.O.T.

“Someone call for a rescue party?” Artie remarked. “No? Must’ve been a wrong number. All aboard the Freedom Train!” They flew away as the R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. appeared.

“JUMP IN, April-chan!” Chimney shouted.

“OUCH!” Plankton was struck by Fybi’s B.O.W.. The kids jumped into the open doors on the sideways train, with Fybi carrying Spongebob’s snoozing body.

As they were fleeing the Crab Craft, Jessie found a bottle of Sleepytime Suds in Spongebob’s pocket. “Good thing Spongebob has a spare. Sheila, I’ll go into the Dream World and find a way to rescue you.”

“Okay!” Sheila fist-palmed. “I think the place Ah’m in is Olden West.”

“Put me to sleep, too.” April said. “I should finish painting that brain for Rayman.”

“Sigh, this will be one hell of a slumber party.” Jessie blew pink bubbles at Sheila and April, then rubbed the Sleepytime on his own eyes. They fainted on the spot.

Madotsuki’s Room

Madotsuki woke up for the third time today. She stepped onto the balcony to check the time of day. It was night. About 9:50pm. Madotsuki looked at the stairs leading over the railing. They looked really good about now. She was actually thinking about it. Mado returned inside and sat at her desk. She wrote in the Yume Nikki.
Dear Diary... I saw that boy again. He talked to me. He seemed nice at first... but then he started going crazy. It's like how I felt before my family died. I think it means happiness doesn’t last. … Diary… I might just do it tonight. I wanna kill myself. I’m just too afraid to leave this house. I’m afraid of the world now. I’m afraid people will hate me for killing someone. …I’m going to sleep one more time. If I don’t find a different answer… I will do it. I will kill myself. Good-bye… Diary.

Madotsuki put the pen down and climbed in her bed. She let her mind drift like bubbles. 3... 2...

Mado no Nikki

Harvey ended up in a sewer after leaving the piano room. The only sewer hatch he could find led him into a world with Aztec murals painted on large, blue and red blocks. “There he is!” Spongebob’s voice yelled. “Hey, Harvey!”

“Spongebob!” The boy looked and saw Spongebob run over, carrying Mesprit’s body in his arms. He was joined by a green, bug-like creature with a big grin, whom was walking a doglike thing with separate body parts. “Who’re you?”

“Name’s Murfy, wise guy. This is Rayman. And I’m guessing you’re the kid that’s tryin’ to save Mado.”

“I dunno.” Spongebob said. “She’s been moving like this ever since we rescued her.”

Harvey took Mesprit in his arms. The Firstborn was squirming and moaning lightly, as though from a nightmare. Harvey put a hand over her forehead gem. He saw visions of flying heads, the spinning four-armed girl, a flashing FACE, and the mountain-size behemoth gripping white hills. “Nnn!” Harvey pulled his hand back. “She’s seeing all this weird stuff, too!”

“She was sleeping in a bubble all this time.” Murfy said. “I’m guessing it was a bubble Madotsuki created. Sleep Bubbles are made of the feelings Bubble Dreamers have at the time. And Mesprit wasn’t the only one she Bubbled.”

“How MANY times you gonna say the word ‘Bubble’, Smiley?” André remarked from above. “’Cause I ain’t the only one getting sick of it! Friends and acquaintances, say hello to… THE NIGHTMARES!” He threw his arms up, directing at the sky when legions of horrible abominations rained onto Dream Land’s surface.

A swarm of Darktoons landed in the Land of Toads and began munching the behinds of the amphibians. An icicle monster with a face and giant mustache landed in the Olden West and started making a trail of ice over the desert. A sun monster with sunglasses flew around the Christmas Dream and blew fire everywhere. A monster with a stick body, consisting of an enormous mouth and eyes, started making a “GACK GACK GACK GACK GACK GACK!” sound, ruining the serenity of Fly High Tower.

“I knew it!” Murfy panicked. “Mansay’s been using Mesprit to absorb the emotional energy from Madotsuki’s dreamscape! He condensed the energy into a mega cannon so he could use it to destroy the Sea of Bubbles!”

“CORRECT you are!” André declared. “Bubble Dreamer bubbles ain’t easy to pop, at least without hurting the monsters inside. Emotion Chi does the job beautifully! And best of all, all these monsters are infected with Madotsuki’s fears, so good luck Bubbling them again! And they ain’t the only ones you need ta deal with. MUTANT LUMS!” From the distance, a cloud of bugs was swarming in, red and yellow Lums that had white legs, arms, and faces growing from their bodies in awkward places. “I’d love to stick around, but the night’s getting old. In a few hours, the real world will be welcoming a NEW ruler! HEH HEH HEH haaaaa!” The Black Lum flew away.

Spongebob made bubbles from his head and Bubbled the head of a spider with tap-dance shoes, a flying nose with eyes in its nostrils, and a math textbook with teeth. The monsters grew sleepy and floated to the sky. “It’ll take forever to catch all these things!” Murfy exclaimed. “We have no choice. We have to get Rayman a new brain!”

“Whaddyou mean a new brain?” Harvey questioned as Rayman was scratching his ear with his shoe like a dog.

“He’s got issues, okay? Look, I’m going to Picture City to find him one, you kids stay here and try to handle the mess. Augh, come on, boy!” Murfy impatiently tugged Rayman’s leash to lead him along. “Come on, I’ll give ya a Ray Snack! No, TWO Ray Snacks! A HUNDRED Ray Snacks, just PLEASE hurry up!!”

Sky Altar

“MONSTERS OF DREAM WORLD!” Mr. Dark’s voice echoed from the top of a towering altar in the desert. He held the Protoon high as it shone a purple beacon and flickered lightning. “I AM THADDEUS DARK! I hold the Great Protoon! I am the most powerful of ALL Dream Spirits! GO FORTH! Destroy ALL dreams, and terrorize the mortals who are so ignorant to the plights of others! No one will EVER want to sleep again! Let them ALL know the pain my creator has felt, and let them TREMBLLLLE!”

“Hee hee hee heeeeee!” Ales Mansay waved two glow sticks to direct the Mutant Lums. “FLY, my prettiiieees! BRING ME the ruby slippperrrs!” A Lum with a long white tongue licked him as it flew by. “WOHA! Huhuhu, that…that kinda made me uncomfortable.”

Globox exited the mall in Mado no Nikki, watching a team of Evil Instruments charge by. “Ooo, a parade! I want in!” He excitedly followed them, beating his belly like a drum.

Nexus

Harvey and Spongebob located the Nexus, which was currently empty of any monsters and a good chance for them to rest. “I won’t be able to fight these monsters without my bubble wand.” The sponge said. “Although I can still grab them from the air…” He waved his arms around and formed a bubble spatula.

Harvey was knelt on the ground with a hand over Mesprit’s head. “I don’t know enough emotionbending to fix her… Sigh, what’m I gonna do, Spongebob? Anthony and Fybi got so much better at their powers, why didn’t I practice?! He spoke with a mix of anger and sadness.

“This reminds me of the episode where my alarm clock didn’t go off until 10 minutes later and I started doing everything 10 minutes after I should.”

“WORST 10 minutes of my life.” Harvey stated. He heard a door open and saw Madotsuki enter the Nexus. “Madotsuki!” He ran up to her. “Madotsuki, look!” He held Mesprit up. “This is Mesprit, the Emotion Goddess! She’s the funnest person you could ever meet! I remember when I was four years old, Mesprit made us laugh all day. She can make you laugh too, Mado!”
Mesprit was still moaning and shaking. Madotsuki stared with a blank expression. “Okay, maybe not at the moment. But she was trapped in your bubble, she was seeing all your fears. She knows how you’re feeling, Madotsuki, and so do I! But I promise we can help you get through it. The Kids Next Door will help you!”

They heard another door BURST open; a Nightmare broke out of it. It was a skull-headed monster wearing a red shirt with a star, had two orange horns, a purple ponytail, and a bear nose. “…That is literally the funniest thing I’ve seen in a while.” Spongebob said.

“Madotsuki, get behind me!” Harvey whipped out his bladed yo-yos and tossed them at the Nightmare. They phased straight through. “What?! You mean I can’t hurt Dream People, either?”

The monster screeched and charged at its assaulter. Madotsuki reached in her window and grabbed a knife. When the monster was at her, Mado stabbed it in the chest, and it screamed before dispersing into bubbles. Madotsuki held the knife down as Harvey looked impressed. He touched the knife.

_Madotsuki repeatedly stabbed the man who kidnapped her, pure fear burning in her eyes._

Harvey let go, staring at his empty hand as though he were the one that did it. His fear subsided as Mado headed to a door. “Madotsuki, don’t listen to Mr. Dark! He’s going to convince you to kill yourself.”

Mado turned to him. “Dark-san wants me to kill myself?”

“Yes, but you can’t. It won’t solve anything, it’ll just make a lot of people upset.”

“…Who?”

“Well… I’ll be upset. Mesprit will be upset when she hears what happened.”

“I don’t know you.”

“No, but I know you. I really do. I know what happened to you, and I wanna help. And there’s a lot of other people who’ll help, too. Madotsuki?”

The girl was staring at empty space. Dark-san wants her to die… this boy wants her to live… but they were figments of her dream. They were embodiments of her conflicting thoughts. She should… she shouldn’t…

“I want to see Dark-san.” Madotsuki de-Bubbled her bike and pedaled off.

“MADOTSUKI!” Harvey carried Mesprit and chased her across the dreamscape. Madotsuki used her knife to kill more large Nightmares on the way. Harvey had to commend her, she was good at using it.

_Hall of Doors_

“There’s Picture City!” Murfy said quickly, getting ready to push Rayman into the portal. “I really hope Sheila got a brain started…” He looked further down. “Wait! You’re Jessie!” He dropped Rayman’s leash and flew over to the Indian boy.

“What the fk are you?” Jessie asked.

“Stick a soap bar in it! Jessie, you’re a Bubble Dreamer, aren’t ya? We need your help, what the
“This raccoon girl wants me to save her from that Olden West.” Jessie pointed at the label floating over the empty spot of river. “But how the hell do I go there if there isn’t a portal?!"

“Oh, I think that’s one of your powers! Just stir your wand in the water and it’ll make one!”

“Thanks for the tip, bug with giant denchers.” Jessie bent over the river and stirred it with his wand. That area of water morphed blue and yellow, and began to glow as a portal appeared.

“YEEEEHH!” Sheila immediately flew out, scaring Jessie. “BLIMEY, I get tired of the same dream for too long.”

“Sheila, did you get a brain ready for Rayman?” Murfy asked hurriedly.

“Yeh, I told April to get on it.”

“Great, but you two gotta get over to Mado no Nikki. Spongebob and Harvey are there, they’ll tell you what’s up. Hurry, or Mr. Dark will be able to enter the real world!”

“Over my numb fists!” Sheila fist-palmed before running to jump in the portal to Mado’s world, followed by Jessie.

Rayman was licking the underside of his belly at the time. “Uck, do that in your house!” Murfy scolded before shoving Rayman in the Picture City portal, then going in himself.

Mado Nikki

Minutes after arriving, Sheila and Jessie were ambushed by Nightmares left and right, but the expert dreamscapers fought back with no trouble. “Where the hell are we supposed to find them?” Jessie asked.

Sheila saw a purple beacon in the distant sky. “That beauty’s worth checking out.”

“Then get on.” Jessie created a bubble boat, which the two leapt onto. “We can sightsee from the air.”

Harvey and Spongebob chased Madotsuki to a desert region with swirly vine plants. The girl killed more Nightmares in her wake, and Spongebob Bubbled as many as he could, but the Nightmares kept breaking free of his bubbles. Harvey was still immune to their attacks, but he still dodged them in case Mesprit could be injured. “Mesprit, please wake up!” He waved his hand over her face, switching focuses between her and Madotsuki. “I could really use a brief emotionbending lesson. I mean, if Anthony got better after one lavabending and gembending class, it shouldn’t be that hard. A Firstborn power boost wouldn’t hurt either- AAH!” He tripped on a small vine.

Harvey looked up at the sky while recovering. There was an extremely tall, Mayan stone altar with an equally tall stairway. A purple beacon shone from the top of it, created by Mr. Dark. Madotsuki was pedaling toward the stairway in her mission to confront him. “Well, it should take her a while to get up those stairs.” Harvey said. “I have time to catch up.”

But instead of get off her bike like Harvey expected, Madotsuki pedaled up the sky-high stairway, as though it were flat ground and no gravity weighed on her. “WOW, I wish I had a bike like that!” Harvey held Mesprit tight and sprinted toward the stairway. Madotsuki got very far ahead, but when Harvey tried to run up the stairs, his young legs were already exhausted. “Huff… Madotsuki… come back… huff… I feel like Kung-Fu Panda…”
Madotsuki made it to the top of the stairs in a minute. From below, one would expect the altar to look as Mayan on top as the rest of it did. However, the top of the altar was designed like a city park, with grass, benches, and lamp posts. Madotsuki approached the opposite side of the park. A group of green-skinned humans were overlooking a city, and a star was flying around the night sky (now clear of other stars).

“You saw a shooting star and thought it was a UFO.” Mr. Dark said, floating down onto the ground behind her. “Perhaps it was a UFO. A child’s imagination is beautiful like that.”

Madotsuki turned to him. “Dark-san… do you want me to die?”

Mr. Dark knelt to her eye level and put a hand on her shoulder. “Madotsuki… it is the only way. The only way to be free of your pain, free of your nightmares. It is the most peaceful slumber.”

“But what if I don’t like death? If I never wake up… I’ll have nightmares forever.”

“You do not have to worry… because I will stand by you as you sleep. I will play your lullaby all day… I will put all your favorite things beside you… I will remorse, but as long as you do not have to live in the darkness of reality… I will be at ease. Madotsuki… you must set yourself free-”

“Waaaaiiiit!…” a weak cry was heard. They looked to the entrance of the park. Harvey Harper made it up… He was panting, hunched over, and his tongue dangled out. He struggled to hold Mesprit in his arms, which felt like sticks. “HUFF… Stairs… So many stairs…” He limped over to a bench. “I’m just gonna… lay Mesprit here.” He lay Mesprit on one side. “And maybe lay down myself.” He climbed on the other side. His knees bent up and with his hands folded like a pillow, he closed his eyes. “Wake me up in five.” And with that, Harvey began to snore.

Mr. Dark, Madotsuki, and André stared with confusion. “Snooooore…” Harvey slept like a baby.

“He can’t fall asleep in the Dream World.” André said. “Won’t that, like, destroy the Space-Time Continuum or something?”

“It would certainly be inconvenient if his dreamself were here.” With that, Mr. Dark shot lightning at Harvey.

“YAAAH!” He startled awake and fell off the bench. “Madotsuki, they’re using you! If you die in the Dream World, Mr. Dark will enter the real world and destroy everyone! You can’t let that happen!”

“This boy is nothing more than another cursed nightmare!” Mr. Dark argued.

“What, you mean all the Nightmares you just woke up?! Mr. Dark, you’re as bad as any other bad guy out there! Just because bad things happened to Madotsuki, you don’t have to ruin everyone ELSE’S lives!”

“The fools of this universe need to understand that happiness doesn’t last! They are so ignorant to the misfortunes of others! You Kids Next Door, and the Council of Teensies, ignored Madotsuki’s plight, ignore the idea of adults who would do things that young children would not imagine! I will erase that cold fact by flooding both worlds with misery!”

“You’re right, the Kids Next Door didn’t help Mado when they should have. Maybe they were busy stopping an alien overlord from destroying the cosmos! The Kids Next Door CAN’T save every kid who screams, because there’s so many! But it’s NOT too late to help Madotsuki NOW. Mado, we helped tons of people with their troubles, we made them all feel better. We’ll help you, too!”
“And WHO’S going to help YOU?!” Mr. Dark announced, spinning his cloak into a vortex. “I’ll suck you back to the real world and drop you over a volcano!”

“AAAAHH!” Harvey clutched the bench when the vacuum began sucking.

“HUUUAAAH!” Sheila Frantic flew up and PUNCHED Thaddeus with a golden fist, sending him flying against a lamp post. The raccoon set foot on the ground and flexed her fingers. “That ain’t a fair way to fight! …” She glanced at Madotsuki. “Who’re you, Window Sheila?”

“Sheila, that’s Madotsuki!” Spongebob shouted, standing with Jessie at the stairs. “The one I told you about!”

“André, stop them!” Dark ordered.

“On it!” The Black Lum buzzed over and used both hands to rapidly poke Jessie and Spongebob’s faces. “Ow-ow-ow-ow-ow-ow!” they yelped. André enlarged his hands and SMACKED the two over the stairs, watching them continue their yelps as they bounced a great distance down.

“HOODLUMS, ASSEMBLE!” André called a swarm of his kind to chase them.

“Strewth, what the hell is that thing??” Sheila pointed at Mesprit. “Blimey, hanging out with Jessie gets ya in some bad habits.”

“’ey, my mom helped me with that once! Like this!” Sheila punched a Light Sphere at Mesprit’s head.

“YAAAAAAAAH!” Mesprit jumped awake and began zipping around the air. “DON’T TAKE MY HEAD, My Queen! I’m sorry I missed the tea party! I saw this cat standing on its head, so I tried to do it myself—DAH, that’s defeating the purpose of my words!!”

“WOW, you actually did it!” Harvey beamed.

“Of course, Mate! Lighbending kills nightmares.” Sheila smiled proudly.

“Hey… Sheila, use your lighbending on Madotsuki!”

“NO!” Mr. Dark flew over and kicked Mado away. He created a cup shape with his hands and aimed them at Sheila, sucking her in like a vacuum.

“Whoooooaaa!” The half-Mobian shrunk and was slurped into the suction. Sheila found herself trapped inside a crystal ball, tapping the glass confusedly.

“Hah hah hah hah!” Thaddeus laughed, holding her like a mini hamster in its ball. “That glass is impenetrable, Rodent!”

“TELL THAT TO THE BLOKES IN ZORDOOM! AAAAAAAAAH!” Sheila ran up and around the ball, loop after loop, but it was perfectly sealed.

“Now I shall-” However, Mr. Dark was hit by some Bubble Bowls. “WHAT?!” He whipped to face Spongebob.

“Jessie can handle those bugs! He learned by watching the episode where I become a nematode exterminator and gas the Krusty Krab! Speaking of which, order UP!” Spongebob used his bubble wand (a new one Jessie created for him) to create a cannon that blasted buns, lettuce, patties, and other burger segments at the cloaked nightmare. Mr. Dark stumbled and nearly dropped Sheila’s ball, but recomposed and projected a barrier around himself.

“Wait a sec… HARVEY?!” Mesprit beamed. “HARVEEEEY!” She gripped the boy in a hug and spun them around as she flew up. “It’s been such a long time! Look how much you’ve GROWN, you strong little man!” She dropped Harvey from six feet above the ground. “So whatcha been doin’, going on adventures, fighting baddies, huh huh huh??”

“Mesprit, don’t you remember what you’ve been doing?”

“Uh, I think so! I’ve been real hazy ever since…” She examined her surroundings, noticed the fight between Spongebob and Thaddeus, then Madotsuki. “THAT GIRL!”

“That girl is in danger!” Harvey stated. “Mesprit, I need to stop Mr. Dark! I need to learn more emotionbending so I can fight better!”

“Well, how much have you trained since we last met?”

“NOT VERY MUCH!”

“Wееееell, that’s gonna be a problem. It’ll take me at least a month to teach you even the basics of combat-based emotionbending!”

“IS THERE A CHEAT SHEET?!” Harvey screamed while Mr. Dark struck Spongebob with lightning.

“Well, if we were in the Dream World, I could probably maybe do something.” Mesprit said with her silly smile. “Me and Uxie are two of the creators of the Dream World. Our chi make up its bubbles. Hehe, I dunno what we were thinking, we just wanted to make the Dream World outta bubbles! So fun.”

“But THIS is the Dream World!”

“It is? Oh, I thought it felt familiar. You don’t notice these things right away after such a good sleep! But Harvey, it seems like you’re still awake. I’ll only be able to give you a good power boost to your dreamself.”

“Fair enough. I can’t hurt him like this, anyway.”

“All right! Sweet dreams, Harvey!” Mesprit flashed the gems on her tails and put him to sleep.

Mr. Dark whipped twin fire-whips at Spongebob, which he defended from by blowing quick huge bubbles. He had to catch his breath after Thaddeus stopped. “Mr. Dark!” Ales Mansay flew above on a winged carriage-bike. “Dark-senpai! How may I be of service to you?”

“Take this brat far away!” Thaddeus threw Sheila’s crystal ball up to him.

Mansay caught it. “Will do, Future Lord of Dream Land!” He stuffed Sheila’s ball under his hat before pedaling away.

“SHEILA!” Spongebob tried to chase.

Mr. Dark sent magic ropes to bind Sponge’s limbs. “The less nuisances, the better!”

“TOO BAD! You just got one more!” An energy blast struck Mr. Dark from behind. It came from Harvey Harper, who was shining a faint pink. Mesprit was behind him, making a heart shape with her tails. Harvey’s true body was asleep on the ground.

“I linked my chi with yours, Harvey.” Mesprit told him quietly. “You work on dodging and making moves, and I’ll send the bending attacks from your body. This wouldn’t be a safe move for your waking body, and you won’t wanna sleep for a while. Try to defeat him quick.”

Harvey nodded, eyes locked on his enemy. “Mister Dark… you’re done messing with Madotsuki’s mind. I’ll destroy you so you’ll never be able to take over the real world! And once you’re out of the way, I’ll take out the rest of her nightmares!”

“Very well! Then before I liberate your world, I will show you the full power of the Great Protoon!” He had the Protoon levitate above him. The electrical sphere shined with power, fueling its master. Mr. Dark made a bar-shaped flash, spawning an instrument in his hands. It was a blue guitar with an electric piano, some light drums on the underside, and it was also a saxophone: the reed on top, and the horn at the bottom. (Play Mr. Dark’s Theme from Rayman)

Boss fight: Thaddeus Dark

He started the battle by pounding the drums. They seemed to do nothing, so Harvey ran to lay the first blow, but with a sudden strum of the guitar, Thaddeus blew Harvey back with a fire spire that exploded from the ground. The boy recovered and shot smiley faces from his hands, only for Thaddeus to block with another fire, then he wiggled his fingers to send tiny energy balls to pelt Harvey from all sides. Harvey lashed a yo-yo at Thaddeus, but he dodged, then he blew in his saxophone with a slow but sudden rhythm, which sent a spotlight to Harvey that would electrify him should he not avoid. He sent a wave of energy fists with some faster horns, then Thaddeus danced up to Harvey while doing a guitar solo.

The guitar solo made flames sprout behind Thaddeus, and the final note exploded a wall of fire that Harvey jumped back to avoid. Thaddeus tried to slam Harvey with the guitar, but he dodged, tried again, still dodged, then Mr. Dark slashed the instrument like a sword before slamming the ground and knocking Harvey back with a shockwave. The Dream Spirit did another solo, rocketing skyward with the final note as a ring of fire sprouted around Harvey.

Mr. Dark tapped the piano keys as the ring slowly closed in on his enemy. Harvey looked around frantically, but there was no escape from the inferno. “Harvey!” Mesprit called. “Your emotions! Hate is fire! But what is water?”

Harvey felt very bad for Madotsuki. He let this feeling climb to the top of his emotions and cried. His body turned blue, and the fire turned into steam when it touched him. Mr. Dark grunted when the steam clouded his vision. Harvey spat upward, sending giant tear-shaped droplets that sent Mr. Dark away. He landed several feet, looking up to see Harvey run at him with large tear-whips. He dodged the whips and sprouted fire to destroy them, then sent the fire walls along the ground while Harvey dodged.

“S-So I can bend any ele-ment th-that matches my emotion?” Harvey stuttered, still saddened.

“No, your chi is just taking forms. But they still conflict with each other the same way!”

“What a ridiculous way to fight!” Mr. Dark blew his horn and surrounded Harvey with spotlights. The Protoon glowed as purple lightning appeared in the lights, which circled around Harvey as some of them crossed the circle in attempt to shock him. Harvey nimbly dodged, but took zaps from a few of the lights. They blinked away—Thaddeus shot over with a sudden strum with a fire trail burned, but Harvey dodged in that split second and threw a bladed yo-yo to cut Dark’s cloak.

“Graaah!” Mr. Dark flew away and played his piano, making the Protoon shine brighter and electrify. He then strummed his guitar to send sudden shockwaves through the air, blowing Harvey several yards back.

“Harvey, use your anger to gain power.” Mesprit instructed. “Or else he’ll take you to a dark place. After all, his name IS Mister Dark.”

The anger sparked in Harvey’s mind. “I DON’T LIKE THE DARK!” He turned red, his teeth sharp, and his eyes demonic. Harvey moved so fast, he dodged the shockwaves, zipped behind Thaddeus, and kicked him into a park tree. Before he could recover, Harvey zipped up and laid a storm of punches on his eyes, but Thaddeus popped a bubble shield and bounced Harvey back. The hate-filled boy threw his yo-yos the moment the shield dropped, catching and swinging Mr. Dark around before slamming him on the ground.

“Don’t stay angry too long, you’ll get tired more quickly! Wait, can we even get tired in the Dream Realm?” Mesprit queried. “My own rules stump me, silly Mesprit.”

“Then I’ll act CHEERY!” Harvey turned yellow and put on a bubbly expression. He hummed a little “La la la!” as he danced up to swing his glowing fists on Thaddeus, but the nightmare strummed up a fire wall that knocked him away. Harvey landed on a long, wavy piano path, Thaddeus playing the instrument to wave the path up and down.

“You cannot possibly have reason to be happy!” Dark retorted. “You did not beat me and Madotsuki will still kill herself! The Nightmares will ransack her dreamscape and our violent battle will be a final spectacle.” He tapped the piano keys faster, Harvey screaming as the path furiously waved up and down with him stuck on it. The piano path rolled up and caught Harvey in its loop, spinning around and ’round so the boy would get dizzy.

“BLAAAAAAAAAAHHHHH!” Harvey broke free by screaming and blasting an Emotion Beam, striking Mr. Dark in the chest. Madotsuki looked up when he flew overhead and off the edge of the Sky Garden.

“Harvey, that was a really dangerous move!” Mesprit yelled in worry. “You could already do that on your own!”

“Yeah, and your Firstborn power boost kinda hurts my throat- ack.” Harvey gagged. “That shoulda knocked him out clean.”

“Guess again.” They looked as Mr. Dark rose up in the distance beyond the ledge.

Dark flipped his instrument over and enlarged the drums on the bottom. “The Protoon’s power will not be crushed so easily! But it will pound you into rubble!” He spawned two drumsticks and began a wild drum solo. The beat of the drums caused giant round boulders to fall from the sky and bowl over the garden from every direction. Harvey had to keep eyes out for all of them and think fast while dodging. Every boulder missed by an inch, they were so fast, and they just kept coming. Harvey felt a jump in his heart each time, he grew more and more nervous, and this nervousness transformed into fear.

With each successful dodge, the jolt in his heart spat out a Fear Sphere, which would home in and strike Mr. Dark. The fifth sphere hit him from the bottom and bounced him up, losing the rhythm as the boulders stopped coming. “Try to beat this beat!” Mr. Dark sliced an electric blade across the Protoon, and all the lamp posts grew into electric towers. Thaddeus meteored down at Harvey
Harvey began bouncing around the towers. Upon each impact, the respective tower flashed and made its own booming note. Harvey bounced between them like a pinball machine. Whenever he went astray, Mr. Dark would block and bat him back. He made a catchy rhythm from the towers. And of course, Harvey took a zap when he hit them. He made faster notes for a few seconds, and Mr. Dark ended the song by flying above and bashing Harvey against the ground with his guitar. (End song.)

“Oooooh…” Harvey lay on his back, dizzy after the endeavor.

“You would not even be standing right now if you did not have a Firstborn giving you power.” Thaddeus landed on the ground near Harvey. “I could end this battle easily by attacking Mesprit. However, I was curious. How does a child think he can fight me as though he were a master bender? You’re still in first grade, how do you expect to fight well?”

“Hey, Anthony and Fybi kick butt!”

“True, but they are different. Anthony, Sheila, Cheren, that Maddy child based on Nefarious’s videos; they are admittedly strong children. But you, Harvard, I never saw that type of spark in you. Even though you have unveiled your emotionbending and have a Firstborn’s aid, I am stronger than you. Why do you try to fight me?”

He rolled onto his front. “Because I’m on a MISSION!” he yelled with tears pouring down. “I’m not gonna let you do this! I can’t believe you would want to! Madotsuki gave you life, she’s like your mom! Why would you kill the person that made you?”

“What if your mother had an incurable cancer, and she were suffering for days gone into weeks? Seeing her in such a horrid, unsightly state, would you not wish the sweet release of death?”

“NO! I mean… I DON’T KNOW! That’s different! That’s an illness, but what Madotsuki has is emotional. She can get over it.”

“THERE IS NO DIFFERENCE! Whether the condition is physical or mental, no life is worth living through such pain! The only way Madotsuki will be rid of her pain is DEATH!”

“NO IT ISN’T!” Harvey jumped to his feet. “I would never want my mom to die, NO PERSON SHOULD! You call yourself Madotsuki’s friend?! You should be trying to help her! You should be hugging her and telling her it’s okay! Even if you hate everyone else in the world, you should always stick by her side!”

“I refuse to let Madotsuki live in a world of cruel beings! I will admit to myself being an evil person, so my decent act will be to liberate her! Do you understand, Madotsuki?!” He turned to his creator. “This world is cruel, and happy times will not last! You have no choice but to free yourself. Let death’s sweet embrace TAKE YOU!” He struck Madotsuki with lightning. She gasped, and her body dispersed into bubbles, for she started awake.

“But if she kills herself in the real world, your plan won’t even work!” Harvey shouted.

“Correct! Which is why I transported her real body HERE!” Mr. Dark directed up to his left. Harvey gasped: over the edge of the Sky Garden was a building he hadn’t noticed before. It was an apartment building.

Madotsuki gasped awake in her bed. That was the most frightening nightmare, yet. She saw herself stabbing those monsters, and again remembered the dead man in the house’s kitchen. She got out of bed. She looked at the balcony. She heard their two voices yelling inside her head. Her emotions were greatly conflicting. She didn’t know how to make it stop or what to do. …Only one way to find out.

“I’m going up there!” Mesprit declared, flying to the nearest balcony of the building. “AAAAAAAH!” An invisible barrier electrocuted her and bounced her forcefully to the Sky Garden.

“MESPRIT!” Harvey yelped, his power boost vanishing.

“I created that barrier to block out all beings.” Mr. Dark explained. “The inside of the barrier projects an illusion of Madotsuki’s city, and blocks us from her view. Now no one will interfere-” An energy ball hit him in the back of the head. “Ugh, I am about SICK OF THAT… hu!” He gasped when he turned and saw his assaulter. “It can’t be…”

The hero of the Dream Realm, Rayman smirked as his fists shone gold. “Long time, no see, Thaddeus.”

“RAYMAN?!!”

“Looks like I finished his brain just in time.” April Goldenweek said, standing by Murfy. “Murfy told us what’s been going on.”

“And we’re here to put a stop to it.” Rayman fist-palmed. “I beat you before, Mr. Dark, and I’ll beat you again.”

“You idiotic excuse for a HERO!” Dark shouted. “You and all those Teensie scum ignored this dream! You ignored my creator’s pain!”

“I didn’t know why they didn’t want me coming here!” Rayman argued. “But you’re terrorizing the Dream Realm, that’s why I need to stop you. And we won’t let you hurt this girl!”

“You’re too late! There she is now!” They looked up at the balcony. Madotsuki looked over the railing, but all she saw was Karakura under the dead of midnight. She looked at the small, movable stairs. She would finally do it. She walked to stand on the first step.

“WE GOTTA SAVE HER!” Murfy was about to fly up.

“NO, there’s a barrier, remember?!” April shouted.

“Wait!” Harvey perked. “If people can’t be hurt in the Dream Realm…” Harvey bit his finger, and the shock turned his body into bubbles as his real body awoke. Harvey ran for the edge, twirled his yo-yos, and tossed them through the barrier to wrap around the railing on the balcony. Harvey swung off and planted his feet against the building’s side. “It worked!”

“Hurry Harvey, you’re the only chance we got!” Murfy yelled.

“Let’s settle this, Mr. Dark!” Rayman balled his fists. “Once and for all!”

“I will GLADLY!” Thaddeus dodged Rayman’s Gold Fists and lit his cloak aflame, spinning like a fiery tornado in attempt to burn his adversary.

Down below

“What’s wrong, Spongebreath?!” Mansay taunted as he continued to evade Spongebob’s grasp.
“Your show hit a bump in the road? A really BIG bump? ’Cause you aren’t catching me with the speed you’re going! HEH HEH HEH HEEEEH! Boy, this is too much fun! And hey, this raccoon sheila’s kinda cute!” He reached up his hat, fishing around for the crystal ball. “I wouldn’t mind keeping her as a pet- What the-?” The ball he retrieved was bright gold and shining. “I don’t remember having this. …Ow-ow-ow, it’s a little hot.” He bounced it around in his hands. “Really hot, REALLY hot, ouch-ouch-ouch, I—WHOOOOAA!”

Mansay crashed his bike into a red monkey statue and dropped the crystal ball. It shattered on the ground as Sheila grew back to normal. “HOO-WEE!” Sheila flexed her legs. “Who says you can’t lightspeed-run a jillion miles in a hamster ball? Me legs feel strong enough to kick ten Gorons at once! Would ya like ta see?” She smirked devilishly at Mansay, spinning her left leg rapidly.

“N-No no, th-that’s okay.” Mansay stuttered in fear. “I was just kidding about the whole pet thing, and did I mention I’m a real big fan of yours?, if you want, I can be your-”

“YUH!!!” Sheila hit Mansay with a kick that could crack a mountain. The Teensie Magician flew high, high, high into the sky. Sheila watched to see how high he would go. “…Oi, I think he landed on Mars.”

Sky Garden

Madotsuki put both feet on one step at a time. Every step led her closer to her demise. The very thought that she was going to commit suicide gave her chills. If she wanted to live… she would be too afraid and back out. And if she wanted to die… she would walk off and take the fall. Now she was on the final step. Her toes hung over the edge of the hundred-foot drop. The only way was down. Falling down to her death. Her dreams and nightmares would be over. At 13 years old, her miserable life, over. No one would miss her. She had no friends, no family, nowhere else to go. All she had to do was fall-

“MADOTSUKI!” She turned around with a start. Harvey had climbed up the building’s side using the little string of his yo-yos. He made it to the balcony and was tired. He limped up to the stairs and sank to his knees. Mr. Dark and Rayman ceased their fight to watch. April, Murfy, Mesprit, and even Jessie and André arrived just in time to view the climax.

“I’m sorry!” Harvey cried once again. “I’m sorry for what happened to you! I’m sorry the Kids Next Door didn’t help you, I’m sorry for not being born back then so I could help you! But this isn’t the only way! Me and all my friends can help you, we really can! This isn’t just a dream anymore, Madotsuki. You’re real… and I’m real… and no matter what happens, everyone deserves to live. Everyone deserves to be happy. But I won’t be happy if you’re gone. And when I tell the Kids Next Door about you, they’ll be upset, too. Madotsuki…”

She said nothing. She remained on the final step for several minutes. She had waken up… but the boy from her dreams was here. Was any of it a dream? Was she still dreaming? …Or was it real. Maybe she was having second thoughts. Maybe… he was right. Madotsuki lifted her foot over the second-to-last step.

Seeing this, Mr. Dark snapped his fingers. The final step slanted back. Madotsuki lost her balance and flailed her arms.

All of the viewers gaped in horror. Harvey jumped up to grab her hand… Missed by inches. Madotsuki fell. Harvey saw the despair and regret in her eyes. He left his yo-yos tied to the fence. She fell… and fell… quickly shrinking in his vision.

Madotsuki felt the wind brush her, falling faster and faster. She turned to look down. Before long, she would hit the ground. Death was here. It would claim her. It was the end. “…I guess we’ll see what happens.” She closed her eyes one final time. She would accept her fate. Perhaps it was meant to be. It was nice, at least… to think there was someone that cared about her.

Her body broke like a glass of milk on the kitchen floor. Blood splattered in a puddle. Her limbs lay scattered. Madotsuki was dead.

Mr. Dark turned off the barrier. Everyone made it down to see her remains. They couldn’t find the words. Madotsuki was dead before their eyes. A girl they didn’t know existed until yesterday. A girl who no one bothered to help, a girl left forgotten. Now she would only exist in their memory.

Mr. Dark approached his creator’s remains. Tears flowed down his cloak, thinking of how much she suffered… Now, she would suffer no more. The dead remains glowed a faint blue. A small spire of light rose up from it. It was a portal into the real world. “Finally…” The light glinted in his eyes. “I… will enter reality… and take my revenge.”

A laser pierced Mr. Dark from the side, taking everyone by surprise. A searing pain coursed through his clothing. A little sapphire fire brimmed in the holes. Mr. Dark fell and dropped the Protoon. The pain was too great for him to move.

“Ha ha ha ha ha ha ha…” A laugh echoed from the sky. A giddy and maniacal laugh that sent chills down their spines. “HAH HA HA HA ha ha ha ha ha ha!…” He appeared before the column of light. Everybody gaped, horrified in his presence. The madness and excitement burned in Bill Cipher’s eye, and there was so much joy in his laughter. “HAH HAH HAH HA ha ha hahahahaha!” He turned around and faced the spire.

“At LAST! At LONG, LONG LAST! After ONE TRILLION years, SWEET FREEDOM IS FINALLY MINE!!” He flew into the spire, and the Dream World trembled from the power. A kind of power that would only result from transcending dimensions. “Physical form?! HELL YEAH!!”

“What’S HAPPENING?!” Harvey screamed.

“It. . can’t be. .” Murfy gazed at the rising light. “It’s… the end…”

Madotsuki’s Room

A ball of light filled the space where Madotsuki was pulled into the Dream World. It morphed into various blob-like shapes. “Hahahahahaha, HAHAHAHAHAHAHA!” Madotsuki’s form was seen within the light. Bill’s maniacal laughter rang from it. Mado’s body was swallowed by a golden glob, which grew bigger. “HAHAHAHAHAHAHAHA!”

Two young arms in gold sleeves burst from the light. Two legs in black pants and curl-toed shoes. The body wore a black bowtie, a thin top-hat with a triangle eye. Finally, Bill’s head popped into being: he had smooth blonde hair, demonic yellow eyes surrounded by black sclera, and sharp teeth that shone brightly as he grinned. “HAH HAH HAH HAH HA HA HA HA!”

The Human Bill, whose body looked seven years old, flew around the room. “I don’t believe it! FINALLY, I have a real body! And what a SIGHT! Two EYES??” He put a hand over each individual eye. “How deluxe! MAN, Ah’m lovin’ this! I feel like KILLING someone!” He burst out of the balcony door and faced the apartment that gave Madotsuki grief. “MAYBE I’ll just blow this up!” He pointed his little finger and pierced a little laser through the building. The skyscraper exploded on the spot.
“AAAAAAH HA HA HA HA HA!” Bill flew all around Karakura Town, shooting lasers and destroying many buildings. “HEY, SUPERMAN, wanna go for a race?!” Bill flew circles around the planet, about a hundred times in one minute. “YOU CAN’T MATCH THIS!”

Bill flew down to Washington and stared at the Sidney Monument. “WOW, Jessie, that’s pretty big! HOW ABOUT THIS?!” He blasted heat vision at the tip of the brown tower, melting it to the base. He flew to the Lincoln Memorial. “Say, I could use a new throne!” He blew up Lincoln and sat himself on the huge stone chair. “Ahhhh… roomy!” He POOFED, leaving a scorch mark with a triangle eye.

Mado no Nikki

“W-What’s happening now?!” Harvey and everyone wobbled in place under a powerful earthquake. The sky above Madotsuki’s dreamscape turned a brownish orange, storm clouds creating lightning. A black pyramid with an eye, four arms with flames, and two of its segments spinning opposite ways, spoke with a voice that all of Dream Land heard.

“Oh, I’m sorry. Did I forget to mention that I needed to switch places with a Bubble Dreamer to attain supreme power in the Dream World and Waking World? Must’ve slipped my mind. HA HA ha haaa! I will NO LONGER be bound by the laws of your worlds! As of this day, Bill Cipher is the SUPREME being!

“Mister Dark!” Said man glared at the demon. “I could not have done this without you. You have fulfilled your duty as a member of Team Gnik! And thus, I shall grant your reward: LIBERATION!!” Bill snapped one of his fingers, and his eye shot a golden beam that burned Mr. Dark where he lay. “AHH HAHAAHAHAHA HA HA!”

Moonbase

Bill reappeared before Moonbase just when Cheren and Mom’s ships were flying back. “Hey, who’s that??” Carol asked in shock.

“SO, Kids Next Door! An all-kid organization bent on saving the world? MAYBE I CAN JOIN!” Bill threw both hands open, blasting a devastating beam that destroyed many areas of Moonbase, shaking and slanting it as all the operatives screamed. His grinning face whipped toward Cheren’s ship—Bill zipped behind and KICKED the shabby camper into the Moonbase. Cheren, Sugar, and Carol felt dizzy from the impact. When Azelf flew out, Bill came up, slapped the Firstborn, and cackled as he flew away.

“And if you think I’m fun to be around, WAIT’LL you see my master!! As soon as he gets back, we’ll throw the ultimate party, the likes of which the universe has never seen! THE APOCALYPSE IS FIFTEEN DAYS AWAY! SAY YOUR FINAL FAREWELLS! AH HAHAAHAHAHA, HAHAAHAHAHA!” Bill flew beyond the stars, faster than light, his cackle heard for light-years.

Azelf touched her tails to her head and analyzed. “His Power Level is… one million.”

Dun dun duuuun! The screen cap of gaping Goku displayed again.

“Stop that, Carol!” Cheren scolded.

“Sorry.”

In Moonbase’s destruction, the Gray Shadow, Shaydes escaped from her T.H.E.R.M.O.S. prison.
She flew down to Earth.

KND Arctic Base

Shaydes flew through Arctic Base fast as the wind. She sensed her master’s location, found her cell, and reunited with Daphne Anderson. “Oh. Hello, Shaydes.” She spoke in her downtrodden tone. “I almost forgot about you. Sigh… well, time to escape, I guess.” She uttered some words under her breath. The chi-cuffs that were locking her arms lost their keen touch. She Veiled out of the cuffs and escaped the cell.

With her superior bending, she controlled all the shadows in the prison. She broke the cells containing Li’l Gideon and the Teen Ninjas, and they hurried off to free Sector DR as she ordered. Meanwhile, the ghost-skinned World Leader headed to the farthest cell in the darkest wing of the prison. “It’s time to come back home, Abram.”

“NO! I’ll never come back! I’ll never let him use me!” The teenager squirmed on his seat.

“Your faith is misplaced, Child. You must understand that there is nothing you can do, and nothing they can do. I am taking you home to your father now.” She stretched her shadows to grab him.

“No! NOOOOO!”

Dream Realm

Mr. Dark was black with soot, his yellow eyes twitching. He lay next to Madotsuki’s remains. The dark sky filled them with dread. “What’s gonna happen now?” asked Harvey.

“…I don’t know.” Murfy replied glumly.

Mesprit was sad. Mansay was sad. Everyone was sad. They gained nothing from this venture. Madotsuki was dead. Her happy ending was lost. Stolen by Bill Cipher. And Nightmares ran about the Dream Realm, free to rampage. Their problems would only increase from here.

“Ah, well.” Sheila shrugged casually. She smirked and cracked her knuckles. “We’ll just beat the snot out of Billy in the real world.”

“…Hm.” Mesprit smiled. “You’ve always been one of the people I admired most, Sheila. I just feel so bad for… Madotsuki.”

“But she couldn’t be dead.” April mentioned. “She should be revived as a Dream Spirit now. Just like Mary was.”

“But she’s in one hell of a mess.” Murfy noted. “Gonna take a lot of duct tape.”

“So we can still save her?!” Harvey exclaimed.

“Well yeah, we can put ’er back together, but she’ll be stuck in the Dream World! Unless she switches realities with someone else. …Any volunteers?”

They were silent for a moment before April spoke. “Bill’s the one who took her existence, so we need to make him give it back.”

“How are we going to do that?” Rayman asked.

“Like Sheila said.” Jessie replied. “We’ll kick Bill’s ass.”
“But now Madotsuki doesn’t have to be alone.” April said. “We’ll help her recover.”

Harvey looked at the girl’s dead body. Her remains glowed as the bubbles were slowly reattaching her. “Yeah… we will.”

Two red jellyfish from Mado’s dreamscape floated beside her. They made gentle ringing sounds and played a familiar tune. (Play “14th Song” from D.Gray-Man.)

Great Clock; Chamber of 20 Keys

The chamber was empty. The chamber was dark. The twenty thrones had yet to welcome the chosen ones. The Time Gate was still sealed. Below the chamber, there was a golden piano. Bill Cipher was playing a song that echoed throughout the station. It was a very big piano, so Bill had magic hands reaching the distant keys. The notes were calming his mind. He felt at ease playing them.

“No wonder why she liked to hear this song.” Bill spoke. “It’s the same one I used to play for you. Hm hm hm… And this was the only music you would listen to. Sigh… What else is this chapter missing? Ah, of course: and Bill Cipher lived happily ever after…”

Bill played the piano for hours without end. He passed the time with the song. He awaited the day they would open the door… and he would get to see his face again.

So I… hope you weren’t expecting the same basic arc conclusion. :P This Caesar Cipher will conclude the 3-chapter cryptogram.

Today, we will meet a couple characters we haven’t seen in ages.

Chapter 56: Hybrid Theory

Dream Realm; Hall of Doors

Jessie and Spongebob used Bubble Balloons, attached to their wands, to carry Mr. Dark’s and Madotsuki’s bodies. Murfy led them to a portal that was in a dead-end part of the river in the Hall of Doors. The portal was huge and in a circular enclosing, surrounded by blue pillars that had a faint night light. Blue butterflies also fluttered around it, and there were glass walls with intricate designs of magical creatures. The portal’s label was Fairy Glade.

“Who needs a portal this big?” Jessie questioned.

“It belongs to a beautiful Fairy Princess called Mavis.” Mesprit replied with an admiring smile. “It’s full of so many fairies and magic and… cookies!”

“And she let the Teensies rent out a building to serve as their headquarters,” Murfy followed. “They’re the main law enforcers around Dream Land. I’m sure by now, they caught on to Bill’s message and the monsters running around. We’ll need their help if we’re going to fix this mess. Follow me, fellas.” He flew in first, and the others jumped in after.

Fairy Glade

The Fairy Glade’s sky contrasted between orange sunset and indigo night with stars. It was likely in the midst of transition, but this type of contrast was still unrealistic. They crossed a great, long bridge to a humongous castle-like building – all of which was suspended above a bottomless waterfall chasm. Shiny blue fairies fluttered around. In the distance, there was a forest where green fairies (in the form of lights) roamed, and some of the stars were moving yellow lights, possibly fairies also.

“I’ve been to the council once before.” Rayman mentioned. “It was after I beat Mr. Dark the first time. One of my friends, Ly the Fairy works here.”

“I’m surprised you remember that, given your brain is all mush.” Sheila remarked.

“I made it the best I could, given my limited time and instructions.” April replied. “But it looks like it’s suiting you well.”

“Yeah, but my head feels a bit gooey.” Rayman shook his head lightly.

“Here we are, folks.” Murfy announced as they arrived at a dark yellow gate that was 20 stories high. “The gates to Teensonius: the Council of Teensies.” The big-mouthed bug flew a few meters up and knocked the door with a little tap. There is no way anyone inside would’ve heard that, the kids thought.

A slot opened, revealing eyes against darkness. “You got an appointment or some ID?”

“We have a dead girl and a pair of burnt clothes?” Murfy responded in more of a questioning tone than a direct one.

“Mesprit here.” The Firstborn shot up in front of Murfy and put her narrowed eyes at the slot. “Goddess of Emotion. We want in. You can tell because the seriousness in my voice is stronger than any mortal’s.”

“Ooo. Well, do excuse me, Your Godness.” The slot closed. The area rumbled when the great gates slid open outward, forcing the group to back up. Murfy and Mesprit came back beside them as a troupe of waffle guards marched out of the gate, led by a human-like woman with big green lips, purple hair, a purple dress, and purple tattoos on her tan skin. Her legs were cross-legged as she was floating.

“Rayman...” She spoke with a soft, echoing voice.

“Ly!” Rayman beamed. “It’s been months! Maybe even longer since I had my brain stolen…”

“Terrible things have befallen our world, Rayman... The Nightmares once imprisoned by the Bubble Dreamers have escaped, and the demon Bill Cipher has…”

“We already know that, Creepy Voice!” Sheila retorted. “But look! We have the Protoon back!” She grinned and presented the electrical sphere. “AND we caught that bloody Mr. Dark!”

“That is most fortunate... We must bring the Protoon inside. Come into the Council Chamber and we will discuss these matters.”

Council Chamber

The Protoon was placed in a protection chamber where some Electoons levitated around it, as was Madotsuki’s body. The scorched Mr. Dark was bound by energy balls linked into chains, seated on the defendant’s chair while the others sat with the jury. The members of the Council of Teensies – whom were actually an assortment of creatures from different lands of the Dream World – were at their stands. The center, highest stand, awaited its occupant. And there he was, the King of Teensies himself: he was child-size like all Teensies and wore a green and purple robe. The tall, thin crown rested on his big-nosed blue head.

“As the King of the Teensies, I hereby call this meeting of the Council of Teensies to order!” As he spoke, another Teensie snuck up behind him, wearing the same garb. “We will begin by-”

The Teensie swiped the crown and put it on himself. “Don’t listen to him! I’M the King of the Teensies!”

“Oh boy, not again.” Murfy face-palmed.

Another Teensie took the crown. “Not true! I’m the King of the Teensies!”

Another took it. “No, me!”

“Me.”
“No, me!”

“Me.”

“Give it back-!”

“PICK A KING ALREADY!!” the kids shouted.

“Hahahahahahahaha!” Mesprit laughed, sitting in a VIP chair.

“Look, let’s just take turns like last time.” The current “king” suggested. His cohorts complied and sunk below the stand. “Alright, before we get started, let’s do role call and make sure everyone’s present.”

“Gumsi, King of the Knaaren Tribe, present!” a short, purple-skinned creature with a stone crown and scepter spoke.

“You sound like an old lady!” Sheila snapped.

“SIIIIIIIIILEEEEEEEN-”

Gumsi’s voice actor broke his microphone while recording this line. Sorry about that.

“Sharkboy, King of the Ocean, present.” A teenage boy in a shark suit followed.

“King of his ocean, in case you’re confused.” Murfy whispered to his friends.

“What’s up, Brozacks?” a tan-skinned, muscular teenage boy with blonde hair greeted cheerily. “My name’s Xyler! This is my bro, Craz.”

“The law is AWESOME, dude!” Craz exclaimed. They high-fived.

“We’re still missing one more person.” King Teensie indicated the empty seat. “It’s… Ah, he’s over there!”

The council members all faced the jury. Their eyes seemed to direct at Murfy. The humans looked at Murfy. Everyone was now facing Murfy. The big-teethed bug looked confused. “…OH, that’s right!” He grinned. “I’m in the Council of Teensies!”

“That’s new!” the kids yelped.

“Hey, when I’m not helpin’ Sheila, I pretty much get hammered.” Murfy said as he flew up to his chair. “Can’t expect me to keep track of everything.”

“Now that everyone’s present, I will call this meeting to order.” King Teensie banged the gavel, then stepped down as the next Teensie took the crown.

“Thaddeus Dark, for the second time, has stolen the Great Protoon and has wrought terror over the Dream Realm, with the assistance of notorious Black Lum, André.”

“It wasn’t just them.” Murfy said. “The Magician, Ales Mansay was in league with them all along.
He’s been using a Bubble Dreamer’s powers to mutate Lums.”

“But wasn’t Mansay one of Rayman’s friends?” Sharkboy inquired. “He helped Rayman beat Mr. Dark the first time. Why is he suddenly Dark’s accomplice?”

“I’m not sure why, all I know is he had a ton of Mr. Dark merchandise in his room. You don’t believe me, ask Mesprit.”

“NO, don’t ask me, I don’t remember anything! !” Mesprit panicked like a girl who didn’t do her homework.

“They used Mesprit’s power to fuel an energy cannon, which Mansay used to destroy the Sea of Bubbles.” Murfy explained. “He freed Bill Cipher in the process. Then, Mr. Dark tricked the Bubble Dreamer, Madotsuki into killing herself in the Dream World. Bill Cipher stole her reality and is now running rampant in the real world.”

“That is some cold ice, Bromeo.” Xyler said.

“Whooooaa!” Craz gaped. “Ice IS cold, man!”

“That’s how I emphasize the severity of these events.”

“So, is Bill the one that burned Dark into a crisp right here?” Sharkboy asked.

“That is also an ironic play on words!” Craz beamed.

“I hate the idea of Bill doing our work for us.” King Teensie said. “How else could we punish him?”

“BURN HIM ON A STAKE!” Gumsi roared.

“HEY!!” Harvey shot a hand up and stood. “Do you guys even know why Mr. Dark did all this?!”

“You’re going to defend him?” the king asked before another Teensie succeeded him.

“No. I agree that everything he did was bad, but it was only because nobody helped his creator, Madotsuki.”

“We are aware of this.” Ly spoke. “The majority vote was to ignore the dark and distorted dreamscape. I disagreed.”

“We only became members a few months ago, so someone needs to fill us in.” said Xyler.

“I mean, we definitely woulda helped a little girl if she was in danger.” Craz reasoned. “You hear me, ladies??”

“We love you, Craaaaaz!” The girls in the audience screamed.

“That’s right! You’re ALL my Dream Girls!”

“...” The girls fell silent. They all put on vicious expressions and cried, “There can only be OOOONE!” Then they began to tear each other apart.

“This is a fun council!” Spongebob smiled.

“ENOOOOUGH!” King Teensie banged his gavel furiously. “We have more pressing concerns than Mr. Dark’s punishment! How we’re going to round up all the monsters, and what we’re going to do about Bill Cipher.”

“Excuse me.” April Goldenweek stood and raised her hand. “Regarding the Bill Cipher problem, we need to bring him back to the Dream World so we can get Madotsuki’s reality back.”

“That’s right!” Sheila stood and fist-palmed. “We’ll beat the snot outta him and drag him on back here!”

“Bill Cipher is too dangerous to be kept alive.” King Teensie argued. “If the opportunity to kill him were to present itself, I would take it. One human’s existence is worth sacrificing.”

“DON’T SAY THAT!” Harvey shouted. “Madotsuki doesn’t deserve ANY of this! People’ve been using her in the worst ways you can imagine and nobody helped her! We need to get back the life that Bill TOOK from her!”

“What life?!” Gumsi snapped. “According to our real-world records, that child had a CRAPPY life! She had nothing to live for, and getting back her reality in exchange for Bill returning HERE, she will STILL have nothing to live for!”

“Did you not hear Bill’s message?” Ly asked. “By switching realities with a Bubble Dreamer, he can have power in both worlds. At least if Bill were to regain his Imaginary existence, he would have limits.”

“But we can’t KILL Bill in this world!” Sharkboy argued. “Maybe in the real world, they can actually get rid of him!”

“I never noticed those words rhyme!” Craz said. “Brony, remind me to never give my kid a name that rhymes with a negative word.”

“Well said, Broniack.”

“I love making up synonyms for ‘brother’!”

“REALLY? I do, too! Are we even brothers?”

“Our parents mighta switched us at birth!”

“AWESOOOOME!”

“SHUT YOUR MOUTHS or I’ll make up a bunch of synonyms for JAWBREAKER!” Sharkboy balled his fist and bared his jaws.

“We cannot give the mortals the burden of slaying Bill.” King Teensie said before his crown was seized.

“Don’t underestimate us.” Sheila said. “We’re pretty bloody strong.”

“But we can’t kill him in the real world.” Harvey followed. “We need to bring him back here so we can get Madotsuki’s reality back.”

“No.” Mesprit stated. The Firstborn floated down to the center of the room. “What we should do first… is ask Madotsuki what she wants. We must ask her if she prefers the life of a Dream Spirit, or if she would like a new life in the real world with new potential friends. We could associate with her either way. Then, depending on her answer, we will decide the method in which to defeat Bill.”
They hadn’t thought of that. Everyone was murmuring conversations. “Yes. That is a good idea.” April said, remembering a similar situation. “We will ask Madotsuki’s opinion.”

“…Yeah.” Harvey smiled.

“Very well. All in favor for leaving the decision regarding which means we shall deal with Bill—as well as the ultimate fate of Thaddeus Dark—to Madotsuki?” King Teensie asked. He, Murfy, Ly, Craz, and Xyler raised their hands. “All opposed?” Sharkboy and Gumsi raised theirs. “Motion carried.” He banged the gavel.

“OH, phooey.” Gumsi cursed.

“Before we continue, is there anything Mr. Dark would like to say and is able to say?”

“Cough…” Mr. Dark’s glaring yellow eyes were the only highlighted feature on his blackened body. “You fools are still… ignorant.”

“Noted.” King Teensie the Fifth nodded. “Have him ironically taken to the cage for now.”

Two Electoons flew in with helicopter hair, smirking as they began to carry Mr. Dark to the Cage of Irony. “Now, what of André and Ales Mansay? Where are they now?”

“André got away after the Bill Cipher bit.” Murfy answered.

“And I just kicked Mansay up to the stars.” Sheila said casually.

“I won’t mind helping track them down.” Rayman offered. “I still need to find Globox, too.”

“I’ll send my Knaaren out to fight the Nightmares!” Gumsi announced. “But we won’t make very much progress without any Bubble Dreamers.”

“That sponge kid and that Indian boy over there are Bubble Dreamers.” Murfy pointed.

“We know. They’re the ones who caught Bill Cipher days ago.” King Teensie affirmed. “No doubt, they are powerful. But they alone cannot capture them all.”

“My Creator’s a Bubble Dreamer, too.” Sharkboy said. “But he doesn’t need a cheesy bubble wand to make stuff.”

“Given the likelihood we would unite them together, I have called for another Bubble Dreamer.” Ly echoed. “And I sense his arrival now.”

The doors opened at the entrance of the center aisle. The audience looked in his direction. A pair of small, green flipper feet flopped across the floor. It was an old frog with a white beard and yellow eyes with bushy brows. He was walking with a cane and had a pipe in his mouth. “Excuse my late arrival.” He blew bubbles from the pipe.

“‘ey, I know him!” Sheila pointed. “He’s the old frog from the Toad World!”

“Yes, I am Don Gero.” He blew bubbles. “I remember you as well, Miss Frantic. I am a subject to Toad Sage Gamamaru. And yes, I am a Bubble Dreamer.”

“Madotsuki’s Bubble Dreamer powers may still be usable to her, despite being a Dream Spirit.” King Teensie predicted. “We must repair her body soon. Ly, you will explain to Don Gero our dilemma, and Sharkboy, you will call for your Creator. Council, dismissed.” He banged the gavel once more.
“Eh… I don’t know about those guys.” Harvey said as the council and audience began to clear out. “What if Madotsuki wants her reality back, but they won’t let her?”

“Yes, says we ’ave to do what they say?” Sheila smirked. “We’re still gonna beat Bill and make him give it back, anyway.”

“But how do we fight Bill in the real world, anyway?” April asked. “Do Bubble Dreamer powers work there?”

“No.” said Jessie.

“Did you forget who we are, April?” asked Sheila. “Me mates are the toughest blokes you could ever see. We’ll all gang up on Bill!”

“Did you forget what we’ve been doing all month, Sheila? We’ve been fighting enough enemies already. This Seven Lights Quest gives us too much on our plate. Sure, until now, we’ve been coming through okay, but there are too many enemies for all of us to just focus on one. We don’t know how powerful Bill is, and by the time we beat him, we’ll be so exhausted, the other enemies can attack us. Heck, Bill might even be attacking our friends right-”

“’ey.” Sheila put a finger over April’s lips. “Take a few examples from Chimney why don’tcha. She’s the only one of your sector I respect. She kicks more arse than all of ya, and wouldn’t say things like that. …Mocha’s pretty strewth, too, but not as much as me.”

“…You’re right.” April smiled. “I guess we should stay positive. Plus, we can’t forget about the GKNDS either. We have loads of planet KNDs as our allies. So in the event we all get reduced to bones and ashes, they’ll jump in next.”

“That’s… better?”

“Oh, but now we have to get Harvey to the real world, right?” Spongebob remembered. “How do we do that?”

“Oh, I can do that!” Mesprit smiled. “As a creator of the Dream Realm, I have the ability to warp between worlds. I can take people with me.”

“So is this your real body?” Harvey asked.

“It is. I’ll take ya back if you like.” She winked.

“Um… I’m worried about Madotsuki.”

“Don’t worry, I’ll take care of her.” Murfy assured with his big grin. “I got plenty of duct tape upstairs just for this occasion.”

“But even if I come back, I won’t be able to make you my Firstborn, Mesprit. I didn’t save Mado and I’m not even good at emotionbending.”

“Oh, blah blah. Your mom didn’t know any more than shooting a laser, but she caught me easy. I thought your performance was top notch!” Mesprit grinned. “I say you’re ready for me.”

“Heh… really?” He smiled sheepishly.

“Yeah, just be thankful I’m not Azelf. She is like, SUPER critical! Making her Guardian slay a powerful demon before catching her?? Sheesh! Then there’s Uxie with the whole brainiac quiz
“But I’m gonna need to learn more emotionbending before I can be any help. Will you teach me?”

“Aww, I’d be happy to, Harvey. But Emotion’s a tricky element to master. You can’t be great at it in just a few weeks.”

“Maybe… but I don’t feel like I deserve to be your Guardian until…”

“Until you can kick a bit more butt, am I right?” Sheila asked with a grin. “Gettin’ stronger is always better when ya have something to work toward! I gotta admit, I admire ya for doin’.”

“On second thought, screw it, I chased a girl around her disturbing dream world, which is more than my mom ever did, so I’m gonna capture you the second we get home!” Harvey decided.

“Fair enough!” Mesprit beamed.

“Oh, lame!” Sheila scoffed.

“You know what else I was thinking we’d do?” April asked. “Bring our friends here to meet Madotsuki. We’ll find their dream worlds.”

“Actually, maybe we should bring people that Madotsuki can… relate to.” Harvey suggested. “People that’ve had bad pasts. Like Phosphora.”

“Or Mary. Yeah, I think that would be best.”

“Oi, should we go back to the real world and tell our mates about what’s happened?” Sheila asked.

“Yeah, we should.” Harvey agreed. “I wonder if Bill Cipher made himself popular, yet.”

KND Moonbase

DOIIINNNG! Sector V, W7, and many others gaped at the horrible state Moonbase was now in. “I’m guessing Bill Cipher said ‘hi.’” Jessie remarked.

“Yes, he did.” Cheren sighed.

“AZZIIIIEEEE!” Mesprit flew up and hugged her sister, twirling in the air.

“MESSIIIIEEEE!” Azelf hugged back.

“I missed you so much!”

“I missed you, too!! Let me examine your Power Level!”

“No, we’ll overwhelm the kids!”

“Who cares, we’re Firstborn, they expect us to be powerful!”

“Cheren!” Panini and Francis ran up to the Supreme Leader, holding an empty T.H.E.R.M.O.S.. “The Weapons Storage was broken open, and the shadow we were holding in this T.H.E.R.M.O.S. escaped!”

“Marcus called from the Arctic Base,” Francis began, “and the World Leader escaped! She freed the Teen Ninjas, Gideon, Sector DR, AND the old Supreme Leader!”
“ABRAM JOHNSON ESCAPED?!” Cheren screamed.

“NO FREAKING WAY!” Sheila panicked.

“This is terrible!” April followed.

 “…Um… Can someone tell me who that is?” Mocha asked.

Cheren bit his teeth, remembering his former commander very well.

3 years ago

When 6-year-old Cheren was admitted to the KND, he was given the honor of Supreme Leader’s assistant. He was so proud, and operatives like Karin and Sunni were jealous.

“I do solemnly swear to do everything you say!” Cheren saluted in a way that was adorable for a child. A single loose tooth hung from his mouth. “No ifs, ands, butts, or any negative or unexciting remarks!”

He mostly organized the office, carried papers and food, and got a status report on his operatives. But every once and a while, an operative came to Abram to request him something. One day, Dipper Pines, who was 3 years older than Cheren, came to the office.

“So like, my great-uncle owns this Mystery Shack in Gravity Falls, Oregon, which is kinda close to Sector O, and well, to get to the point, I was thinking of starting my own independent sector where we like, solve mysteries that could be beneficiary to the KND.”

“No, it’s a waste of space. We don’t need a sector like that.”

“But I wrote a five-page proposal on how a mystery-based sector could be helpful-”

“You’ll go back to your treehouse and go on missions like any other sector. Any more talk on your ‘proposal’ will fall on deaf ears.”

“Howdeh, Supreme LEADUH!” Numbuh 2=1 from Sector E greeted with enthusiasm. “S’listen, the fellas at my treehouse… don’t have a good opinion on my… preferences. So, I was wondering if I could change sectors.”

“If you don’t like how they treat you, don’t be gay. I don’t believe that ‘it’s not a choice’ crud.”

“Heh, well I can’t just CHANGE how I am. I mean, boys are handsome, don’tcha agree?”

“Even if I do give you a different sector, they’ll just mock you, too, it’s not a common thing.”

“Well, maybe we can build a treehouse in my homeland and invite OTHER gay operatives to join! We’ll have fun and no one can judge us! It’s perfect!”

“I’m not wasting resources on that, so scram. Either deal with your sector or just quit.”

“Greetings, Earthling Child Commander!” Nebula D. Winkiebottom, at 8 years old, greeted with a happy, though nervous smile. She spoke in a way that Cheren thought she wasn’t sure what she was doing. “Do not be alarmed, but I am an alien from a distant galaxy. I have recently established an all-kid organization known as the New Galactic Kids Next Door. Unlike the GKND you might have heard in stories, our goal is to establish peace in the universe for kids and adults everywhere. I am currently looking for KNDs to form alliances with, so that all kids may aid and support each other if the need should arise. My organization is founded on friendship. I would very much like you to be a part of it.”

“It sounds cool!” Cheren perked. “Do it, Sir, do it!”

“No.” Abram said firmly.

“I implore you to read the treaty I specially designed for this.” Nebula said, pulling a paper out of her tux. “If we become allies, we will provide your organization with new technology, protect your planet from foreign invaders, and-”

“You alien scum tried to destroy the universe, get lost.”

“Oh…” Nebula frowned. “If that is your wish. I will return in the future to see if you changed your mind.” She warped on the spot.

“OI!” Chimney shouted at the Supreme Leader during a graduation ceremony. “What you mean Aeincha can’t join?! She KILLED in the Spy Course!”

“A child that small will never survive. If she is meant to serve as a treehouse hamster or a pet, she doesn’t need to enter her DNA.”

“Chimney, it’s okay.” Young and tiny Aeincha said. “As long as I can still be with you guys-”

“NO!” Chimney leapt and gripped her hands and feet onto Abram’s shirt. “Aeincha can walk and talk like any person, and I want her to be treated like ANY operative!”

“The Code Module won’t even be able to recognize-”

“DNA accepted.” The supercomputer spoke. Abram gasped, seeing Aisa holding Aeincha, and her finger in the Code Module. She shot a taunting grin at Abram. “Please, choose your codename and sector.”

“I choose Numbuh 76.2 and Sector W7!” Aeincha proclaimed.

“TAKE YOUR BOOGER OUT OF THAT!” Abram stomped over and snatched the Lilliputian, squeezing her tightly.

“Ow! Okay, I will, please stop it! AAAAHH!”

“HEY, what’s the big idea?!” Paula Doublefinger of Sector GD shouted. “She’s only a little girl! Er, no pun intended.”

“YEAH, Mr. Macho!” Jinta Hanakari stomped up, looking furious. “If you’re gonna ban someone for being little, why not Ururu?!”

“P-Please don’t reference me, Jinta-kun.” Ururu blushed.

“I thought the KND was about protecting kids, NOT hurting ’em!” Dillon yelled.

“Maybe we should get a new leader!” Chris shouted.
Nearly the entire audience began shouting protests as some operatives climbed on stage, approaching Abram with fists raised. “GIVE AEINCHA BACK!” Chimney leapt from behind, grabbed Aeincha, and ran away.

“You PATHETIC-!” Abram whipped around, swinging his fist to punch Chimney—he socked Cheren in the eye and broke his glasses, knocking the younger child back.

“BRO!” Chris and Aurora yelped.

“You FUCKING PRICK!” Panini pounced on the tall, muscular leader, furiously pounding his head, but Abram grabbed her shirt and held her away.

“A PRICK, huh?! How about I throw all you twerps in Arctic Prison with nothing but your underwear?!” As the leader spoke, Cheren was on the ground, holding a hand over his left eye. There were small bits of glass punched inside of it. “That oughta straighten up you whiny-…” Cheren’s sadness, hate, and anger molded into one, burning in his right eye. He glared at his Supreme Leader, for whom these feelings burned for.

“AAAAHH!” Cheren flew up and PUNCHED the boy across the chamber, smashing some audience chairs. Everyone gaped at Cheren. He was on fire, and his body was darker. The left eye that had been injured was a fiery yellow. The adorable boy who was loyal to his leader looked like a demon.

Abram recovered and growled at his traitorous assistant. He stormed up to deal punishment—Cheren zipped behind, grabbed Abram’s neck, and started dragging Abram all around the auditorium, scraping his face on the floor and carving a trail. Cheren moved faster than anyone ever saw him. When Cheren was finished, he leapt up to the ceiling, faced Abram at the Code Module’s pedestal as they rocketed down, and SMASHED his head through it.

Abraham didn’t show motion and didn’t speak. Having let his anger out, Cheren’s flames poofed, his color returned, and he fell over exhausted. …His loose tooth fell out.

Hospital

“Are you okay, Cheren?” Aurora asked her brother as he lay in a bed.

“Yeah… I don’t remember anything. …W-What happened to Abram?”

“You went Dark Super Sonic on him. He’s okay, but… we’re thinking of putting him in Arctic Prison. We’d kinda like a new leader.”

“Maybe you’re right… Who were you thinking?”

“Find out yourself.” Aurora threw open the room’s curtain—they were actually on the stage in the center of the Sooper Convention Center. When Cheren peeked out, everybody was cheering him, raising banners that read CHEREN, flags with his face, and flags with an “X” over Abram’s face. “While you were out, we had an election. It lasted for… an hour. There were other votes for like Doflamingo and Mabel, but the majority is, well… you.”

“But why do they want me?? I dunno how to be leader!”

“Yes, you do! Cheren, you think we don’t hear you talking to yourself every day after you come home? ‘I think a friendship with GKNF would be cool’ and ‘What’s wrong with an all-gay sector or a mystery sector?’ Cheren, you might not have experience, but you sound to me like you’d make a way better leader than Abram! Just try it out. I’ll help you get started if you want.”
The operatives were cheering outside, eagerly expecting their new leader to walk out and acknowledge them. “Well, I did have a few ideas… Fine, I’ll give it a shot.”

Current time

“…Wow… They made you leader just because you went Demon Mode on a bully?” Anthony said, astonished. “Rock on, Cuz!”

“Why would you say that, YOU’RE a bully!” Aranea remarked.

“Well, Vweeb didn’t stand up to me, he just got all you guys to gang up on me!”

“And then Abram joined the Teen Ninjas.” Cheren continued. “He broke out of prison and attacked us a few times before we caught him again. Sigh… but I guess he’s free again.”

“His last name was Johnson?” Jessie asked. “Is he related to Shelly?”

“I just noticed that, actually. Is Abram Shelly’s cousin, do you know?”

“I could ask her.”

“Sigh, I’m not sure it would matter much, though. Man, Moonbase is a mess…”

“I would be willing to repair it for you.” Everyone turned to face Mom, whose three sons were standing in a line like soldiers.

“What’s the catch?” Cheren cocked a brow.

“The catch is that I need a place to lay low. And I still want you to kill Morgan.”

“I’m not going to kill Aunt Morgan. Just maybe, really hurt her… real bad. We’ll accept your help, Mom, but you’ll be monitored. We’ll also lock you in a cell after we finish repairing.”

“You’re not very trusting, are you?” Mom remarked.

“Is that a deal-breaker?”

“No, I’ll still help. But it won’t be long until you’ll desire my assistance again.” The woman smirked.

“And why would we? Dare I ask?” Carol retorted.

Mom’s face wrinkled and showed her teeth in her smirk. “Let’s just say you’ll want a ride to the Great Clock.”

Planet Poké; Giovanni’s Mansion

Giovanni’s mansion was built in the middle of a forest. It was a massive whitish-yellow building with a red roof, four castle-like towers, and had the security one would expect from a military fortress. Team Rocket Agents patrolled inside and outside the electric fences and around the ground turrets. Darcy Chariton and Lucario slightly lowered their camouflage cloaks as they were backed against a tree, studying the mansion.

“So is this the place they got my mom trapped?” Darcy asked.

“I do not feel your mother’s aura.” Lucario spoke telepathically. “However, I am sensing two different, very powerful auras. And one of them… belongs to Mew.”

“Mew is in here? Really?”

“Yes. Now is your chance to put your new skills to the test, Darcy.” Lucario showed faith and strictness in his narrowed left eye, the only one visible to Darcy from this sideways perspective. “I have toured you around Poké’s regions to teach you the ways of Elemental Martial Arts so you will have the strength to save Mew from this prison. Once we have succeeded, we may return to Earth. You and Sunni will be able to show each other your newfound strength with proud faces.”

“But what about saving my mom?”

“We will rescue Mikaela in time. I am sure she will love to see her two daughters again, and how far they progressed.”

“All right, then…” Darcy narrowed her eyes at the base. “Time to show them what I’m made of.”

(Play “Baron’s Palace” from Daxter!)

Stage 59: Pokémon Palace

Mission: Rescue Mew.

A group of agents outside the fence marched left, while a group inside marched right. When both groups passed, Darcy squatted down, channeled strength inside her legs, and performed an Air Jump. She landed over the fence, but quickly hid in her Camouflage Cloak before the agents turned and came back. Two Magnemites were floating over the next fence, but when neither they or the agents were looking, she Air Jumped over the fence and camouflaged again.

From here, Darcy was in view of the stairs to the front entrance. Darcy wouldn’t be able to creep up the stairs under camouflage, so she snuck to the left side of the stairs to do a weaker Air Jump. She landed on the spot before the entrance and quickly cloaked to hide from the agent coming up the stairs. He slipped a card key through the slot, and when the door allowed him entry, Darcy crept in without his knowing.

The Rocket Agent headed to a door on their right. Darcy was inside the palace foyer, which was brightly lit by sunlight through the windows. “Intruder in the palace foyer. Activate security defenses.” The alarms started blaring, and Darcy saw holes open up on the floor. Spikes rose—Darcy had already Air Jumped and landed on a small platform on the side of the wall. Three Magnemites came out and blasted electric balls, which Darcy blocked with a psychic shield before psychically grabbing the Pokémon and throwing them against each other.

The spikes wouldn’t allow Darcy to access any ground floors, so she would have to take the route above the foyer stairs. Darcy Air Jumped, used psychic to float atop the ceiling chandelier, and from there jump to the top of the stairs. (Since she wasn’t a master of psychic, she couldn’t float for too long.) The door was sealed to keep her out, so Darcy would use what is probably her least favorite Element Style: she channeled strength to her head, making it hard as rock as she bashed it against the door. She did it three times until it was dented enough for her to pull open with psychic. She would always need a moment to let the dizzy feeling settle.

The next hallway was gold-colored, lined with vases with Pokémon designs, a red carpet, and security lasers skimming in any direction. There was a Bronzong hovering near the ceiling, shooting Psycho Spheres that Darcy threw back. The Bronzong fell to the ground in defeat. A short
A wall of lasers blocked her path, but when Darcy tried to jump over, they changed position to keep her blocked. Darcy grabbed the Bronzong in psychic and discovered that his steel body was immune to the lasers. She used him as a shield to get past them, then held the steel bell above her to protect from ceiling lasers. A single laser locked on Darcy and followed her, so she kept the Bronzong in an appropriate position to block it.

Darcy turned left at the end and came to a large room set over a pool of water. Darcy dropped the Bronzong, having served its purpose, and jumped a set of platforms with Goldeen jumping in between, to poke intruders with their spikes. Darcy landed on a walkway where a trio of Totodile all blasted Water Guns at her. Darcy swung her arms and legs nimbly, catching their water with her Fishman Karate and knocking the Pokémon off the edge by sending it back. She would have to cross a large gap with three fire columns blocking her way. Thankfully, Tentacools were spitting water up at her, so Darcy redirected it with quick hand thrusts and put out the fire.

She Air Jumped across the gap to land on the platform, then had to use Fishman Karate on another fire spire a few feet to her right. She Air Jumped across, but instead of a flat foothold, she had to kick off a rectangular sideways platform, using Air Jump to go higher, and Wall Jump her way up several sideways platforms before she landed on a new floor at the top. There was a fountain in the center, and several Rocket Agents flying with jetpacks.

The agents summoned Gardevoirs to create shields that would bounce away projectile attacks, so the Quilavas inside the shields could shoot fire at Darcy without hassle. Darcy dodged the flames and jumped through each Gardevoir’s shield to knock the psychics unconscious. She then used Fishman Karate to grab water from the fountain and knock the Quilavas out. The Rocket Agents sent Geodudes next, but Darcy could defeat the Rock-types with water as well, then tossed Psycho Spheres to blow the agents out of the air. Darcy headed for an elevator and rode it one floor down. She exited into a room with many plants and flowers, providing a lovely fragrance.

Some of these plants were actually camouflaged Victreebels, who seized the chance to snatch Darcy in their mouths when she came close. She was caught by one of the hungry bell-plants, squirming furiously until it spat her out. Angered, Darcy balled her fists and channeled enough power to them until they were red with flames. She punched the Plant-types out of submission, then tried to get a handle on her whereabouts. Half of the room was blocked off by a pool of poison sludge. She could climb up a vine wall on the opposite side from the sludge, avoiding the Spinaraks crawling on it.

She climbed to a platform with two small handles on the wall. Darcy faced the room, grabbed the handles, jumped, and pulled the handles while planting her feet against the wall. The handles allowed her to keep a firm stance on the wall, building momentum in her squat legs. When ready, Darcy Air Jumped and flew across the room, over the poison river and to the other side. There was a walkway that sloped up along the wall, leading to a door, but thick brambles were grown over parts of the walkway from the ground. There were weak stems that Darcy could break with Fire Kung-Fu—but she chose to destroy the one closest to the door and simply Air Jump above the path.

A Donphan rolled out of the doorway and pushed her back to the lower ground. She couldn’t get close enough or have good view of the elephant Pokémon without it rolling out and pushing her. Darcy decided to Flame Punch and destroy the other brambles, but when she set foot on the path, the Donphan rolled out and knocked her away again, and it was too strong for her to grab in psychic. When Darcy looked around, she found a Rattata wandering in the grass of the flora-filled floor. She caught the rat and took it with her up the path. The Donphan rolled out—it freaked at the sight of the rat and jumped off the path. Darcy giggled, throwing the Rattata to chase the elephant while she proceeded.
She entered a library corridor with lights on the orange ceiling, and some books were dropped on the green-tiled floor. “This place looks kinda nice.” Darcy smiled, walking forward as she viewed the books. “Would Giovanni mind if I-”

When she stepped on a dropped book, a laser shot it—she jumped back with a start, heart racing rapidly. “Okay, I guess not! Gee, how much security does this guy need? Talk about freaking paranoid.” A wall of lasers blocked a wide archway, but there was a big gap at the top, so Darcy could Air Jump and float through it. More lasers blocked access further down, but the right hall was open, except for floor lasers. Darcy Air Jumped and swung the ceiling lights across the floor, setting foot on the other side where it was safe.

She could then turn down a left passage—a Rocket Agent commanded a Pidgeotto to use Gust and keep Darcy from crossing the hall. Darcy put her Earth Style to use and stomped through the strong wind with sheer force. When she was close enough, she blew the bird away with psychic and knocked the agent out. Darcy turned left and was now behind the laser wall that blocked her previously. The next hall had books lain everywhere around the floor, and bookless areas on the wall shelves. Given what happened before, lasers would shoot Darcy if she touched the books. She leapt to the first bookless area, kicked to the next one with Air Jump, and repeated until she landed before the elevator.

Darcy rode further down and came to a basement level. “I’m actually feeling Mew’s presence, too. He can’t be too far away.” Darcy cloaked herself when the elevator opened in case anyone was waiting for her. Indeed, a Noctowl was peering at the elevator with glowing red eyes, looking very eerie in the dark hallway. The owl was confused as to why no one was in there, so it looked right. Darcy crawled out during this time, hiding under its perch. Several Noctowl were skimming the hall with searchlight eyes, so Darcy kept under her cloak and crawled through. She had to stop when their eyes directed at her, for they would notice the ripple of her cloak.

At the end of the passage, she could stand up and walk down a dimly lit stairwell of grated steps. At the bottom, she passed through a hallway with cages of rare and unique Pokémon, like pink Rhyhorn, Butterfree with faces on their wings, a four-headed Dodrio, a tiny Golem, and many others. There was a doorway at the end of the hall. She hid behind it and peeked into the room.

A thin bridge with no railing led to a machine with a three-computer keyboard. There was a glass capsule above it. The man inside the capsule had tan skin and long, spiky white hair. He had blue dragon tattoos, wore a necklace of dragon fangs, black pants, and his muscular body was shirtless. There were also several huge areas of burned flesh, and he was missing his right arm. There was a smaller glass case stationed above him: it contained none other than the Firstborn, Mew. Cords were transferring Mew’s pink energy into the sleeping man’s capsule.

The person operating the controls appeared to be a man-size robot, which had a wooden board for a head, inside a glass helmet. “The project is nearing completion, Master Giovanni.” The scientist spoke in a British accent. “This is a most fascinating body you found… Where did you say you discovered him, again?”

“I found him from the remains of the Lunar Sanctum. Lesser Lord Gnik told me he was there.” Giovanni’s silhouette spoke on a screen. “He ordered me to use Mew’s power to revitalize his energy. Apparently, even though his body is a corpse, this man kept his soul bound to it and kept his flesh from decaying too quickly. Lord Gnik wants him to destroy the Moon Planet, Lunaria. It works in our favor, since we have a need to find Lunaria as well. Make sure you finish soon, Dr. 20x40.” The screen went off.
“Will do, Sir. I am most interested in what this man’s power can do for us. …You can come out of hiding now, girl. My assistant has ears like a squirrel.”

“Yeep!” Darcy flinched. She sighed and walked out of the doorway, crossing the bridge that led to the machine. She stopped halfway and asked, “Why didn’t you tell Giovanni someone was spying on you?”

“He did not need anymore concerns. Besides, you do not look like someone worth having concern for. Don’t you agree, Johnny?” The cyborg turned around. Johnny 20x40 had a psychotic and maniacal grin on his face, which was the only human part of his robotic body. His friend of superior intelligence, Plank 20x40, was set on top, though his wood was slightly withered and his left eye was smeared red.

“Oooooh!” Darcy gaped and pointed. “I know you! You’re that Plank guy that was in the first part of the Firstborn Story, but you were like, so lame!”

“Yes… I had assumed conquering the world with an army of living mutant planks would be easy.” Plank recollected, staring at his left cyborg hand. “Apparently, not. Poor little Johnny here became a victim of a horrible car crash. Team Rocket found us and created this convenient new body for us. Now we work for them.”

“Well, if that doesn’t put you two closer. So, what is this machine? What’re you using Mew for?”

“This device is the R System, created for the purpose of reviving the fallen through means of a super powerful life support. Have you ever read the book on Hybrid Theory? Well, part of it reads that Mew is the original hybrid, as he possesses the DNA of all creatures and can become anything. By using his power, a hybrid is able to unlock the full potential of one or all of his genes, and become a formidable force.”

“So that guy is a hybrid? Of what?”

“You do not need to know that. In any case, we have big plans for this subject, and we will not let you disrupt them. It is time to demolish you.” Plank pressed a switch on the terminal, and the bridge dropped Darcy down to a wide floor below. Darcy looked up as the cyborg hovered with jetshoes.

“HWAH hwah hwah!” Johnny laughed. “HWOW, Pwank! Do we make awesome traps or HWWHAT?!”

“Yes yes, settle down, dear John. Ah, it is ever so nice to be in control of both the brains and the brawn. I wonder how efficient this psychokinetic is in either world? We shall soon find out.” (Play Megahammer’s Theme from Mario Galaxy 2!)

Boss fight: John-Plank 20x40

John-Plank aimed their right arm at Darcy, which became a cannon that shot bombshells at the floor, creating electrical shockwaves that Darcy jumped with careful timing. The cyborg flew circles around her, shooting more bombshells as Darcy rapidly jumped them. John-Plank flew down to start swinging punches, but Darcy was swift to avoid, ducking and kicking them off their left leg, then punching Johnny in the face. “Ow!” She shook her hand from the pain.

“I would not do that.” Plank smirked. “He is more bulk than blood nowadays.” He activated the jetshoes, flipped up in the air, and slammed his feet down at Darcy, but she dodged once more, focusing power to her fists, lighting them with fire, and dealing a storm of fast heated punches. “Just pray you don’t overheat!”

The cyborg felt its temperature rise and Plank’s marker face drip a little. When his defense was down, Darcy leapt and kicked Plank’s capsule off the body. Johnny seemed to wobble dizzily and hunch forward mindlessly, so Darcy seized the chance to attack Plank. However, Johnny’s eyes suddenly burned red, crying a “YODELY YODELY YOO!” as he charged at Darcy, flailing his arms, and punched her with enough force to fling her several yards. She got up and saw the cyborg charge at her again, so she squatted her legs and jumped high into the air, then she spun like a drill and dove at him headfirst with her body on fire.

She smashed the cyborg against the floor, jumped to her feet, then tossed a Psycho Sphere to knock Johnny a short distance. She saw Plank’s castle floating with mini rockets, so she Air Jumped up and kicked him, cracking his glass. Johnny caught Plank and reattached him to his body, his red eyes returning to their normal craziness. “Johnny can’t bear to be separated from me. He goes a tad wild, you see. Now we need a recharge, do excuse us.” The robot grabbed some Pokéballs from slots in their body and threw them open.

A Blastoise and a Venusaur shot Water Gun and Vine Whip, to which Darcy used Fishman Karate to redirect the water and cut the vines. She saw two Magnemites channeling a gentle electric charge into John-Plank’s body, so Darcy kicked a water strip up and caused the cyborg to electrocute. “NOWEEEE!” Johnny screeched. “NANIIII!” His jetboots malfunctioned and began to fly him around the room. “Neenonee-NY-NOOOOO!” He crashed into Mew’s cage on the R System, cracking the glass.

Darcy grabbed the Venusaur with psychic and slammed him against the Blastoise, then readied herself when the cyborg flew down again. John-Plank shot two bombs from his hands to land on Darcy’s left and right—they POPPED a blinding flash that made Darcy dizzy, giving the cyborg the chance to punch her several meters away. “HWAH HWAH! We got that psycho freak GOOD, huh Pwank?!!”

“Okay, psychicbenders are a normal thing now, so that slur lost its touch.” Darcy said as she rubbed her head. “And you don’t even deserve to use it, you Cyfreak!” She threw a Psycho Sphere, but John-Plank dodged and rocketed at her. She dodged right, and when the cyborg turned around, Darcy was gone.

“HEHN?! Where she GWO, Pwank?!!”

“Keep your ears open, Johnny. She cannot hide from you for long.” The cyborg began pacing around the room, listening intently for the sneaky psychic. Darcy was crouched on the ground with the Camouflage Cloak over herself. She quietly sidestepped left when John-Plank was about to pass close by. When Darcy had a good view of his back, she Air Kicked at and grabbed hold. “DAH! Johnny, on our back!”

“I’m more annoying than a monkey, aren’t I?” Darcy used Psycho Stun on his back and caused him to short-circuit again. John-Plank flew around with rocket shoes in attempt to blow her off, but Darcy held on and maneuvered his flight path. She flew them up and around the R System, and crashed the cyborg into Mew’s capsule again. Darcy fell back to the floor while John-Plank hovered above her.

“Perhaps THIS chap will give you a shock!” John-Plank released an Electabuzz from a Pokéball. Darcy made a psychic shield to block its Thunder Shock, then threw a Psycho Sphere at the Electric-type. John-Plank grabbed her from behind by the shirt, rocketing upward, spinning around, and hurling Darcy headfirst at the ground. She was quick to raise her arms up, plant her hands on the floor upon landing, and bounce herself to the ceiling with an Air Jump. During which, her legs bent against the ceiling, giving strength for another Air Jump toward John-Plank, spinning in a Flame Drill and ramming Johnny in the face.

The cyborg crashed on the floor as Plank fell off of him. Johnny’s eyes turned red, but he turned around to retrieve his master. However, Darcy used psychic to pull Plank over to her. “Come catch me if you want ’im!” Darcy squat her legs and Air Jumped up to the second floor bridge, facing the R System. Johnny rocketed up, then dove at Darcy, but she fell flat on her back and avoided him by inches.

“You missed, you fool!” Plank shouted. Johnny shot a bombshell that popped an electric shockwave, which Darcy Air Jumped, but while she was in midair, Johnny flew at her for a punch. Darcy smirked, having lit a Fire Fist to punch him in the humanoid face. Johnny got dizzy and crashed in the wall beside the machine. “Get ahold of yourself, Johnny!” The cyborg recovered and blasted lasers that Darcy dodged. He dove at the psychic, who Air Jumped again, kicked backward, and grabbed hold of Mew’s case. Johnny locked on and readied to shoot a missile. “NO, JOHNNY!”

The mindless mecha shot the missile, and Darcy jumped away so it would crash and shatter Mew’s glass case. “Darcy shoots, SHE SCORES!” Still in midair, Darcy used psychic to slam Plank’s capsule against Johnny, breaking it. The martial artist spun vertically with her feet lit aflame, going faster like a flaming wheel, until she SMASHED Johnny’s head and popped several nuts and bolts out of his body. The cyborg short-circuited and fell on his back, his eyes turning off, but his mad smile was still stretched. (End song.)

“Mew…” The catlike Firstborn softly landed on the floor, his blue eyes weary.

“Mew!” Darcy ran up and lifted him in her arms. “Are you alright? It’s me, Darcy. I dressed up as you for Halloween and got turned into you. And then Sunni almost got killed by Lucario. Hehe, remember?” She grinned.

Alarms started blaring as the base flashed red. Team Rocket Agents swarmed in, commanding Magnemuses, Mismagius, and Inkays. “HRAH!” Lucario landed before Darcy and cast an Aura Beam at the agents blocking the entrance. “Let’s go, Darcy, HURRY!” He dashed through the base’s halls, throwing Aura Spheres at all incoming agents while Darcy kept behind with Mew in her arms.

“LUCARIO EX-MACHINA!” Darcy cheered.

Plank got up off the floor and saw the unnamed man’s capsule sinking into the wall, due to the security program. The living piece of wood quickly hopped inside before that wall closed.

Outside

Agents scattered about the woods in search of the escaped intruders. When a group of five passed by, Darcy and Lucario took off their Camouflage Cloak. They were knelt on the ground as Mew lay in Darcy’s arms. “It seems they drained much of his energy already.” Lucario observed. “But it should recover with the proper treatment.”

“Just what were they doing with him? Who was that man in the R System?”

“I am unsure… and yet… I seem to recognize him from somewhere.” Lucario closed his eyes. “Although his body was dead, I felt a strong aura within him. Was he a zombie, perhaps? Or was he…”
Darcy stared at him, anticipating another theory. “…Oh, well.” Lucario said. “The point is that we saved Mew. I will teleport us back to Earth.”

“Finally. Only Arceus knows how much we missed…”

Inside

“That girl was more clever than I anticipated.” Plank said as he typed on a keyboard with his little branch hands. “No matter… They may have rescued Mew, but we transferred enough of his energy to proceed with our plan. I’m sure some Moon’s Tears shall quench what remains of your thirst.”

The man was lain on a bed connected to two machines with shining blue, tear-shaped stones. Their light was transferred through cords into the man. Plank approached him with a malicious smirk.

“Isn’t that right, my dear Logia?”

Soooo yeah. The first time Darcy actually does something worth mentioning. I kinda wanted to include a scene in Chapter 12 where she begins her training… but I never got the motivation to make it. But maybe I will after I finish more of the story. Ly and Gumsi are from Rayman, Sharkboy’s from Sharkboy and Lavagirl, and Craz and Xyler are Mabel’s Imaginary Friends from Gravity Falls. And we all remember Johnny and Plank, right? No?

Makes sense. Next time, we’ll do an Emily stage. Here’s an Atbash Cipher to keep you intrigued.

Chapter Summary

Team Wendy and Sector RZ go to Lunaria, the Moon Planet! There, Wendy meets someone special.

This chapter comes after Chapter 56, and this Lunaria Mini-Arc will all be before Chapter 57. Some events in Chapter 56 will connect to these Side Stories, so refresh your memory if you need to. If not, then let us take flight.

Chapter B-26: Father

Lunaria

After thousands of years, she has returned home. She remembered the way, and was delighted to set her feet on the planet’s soft blue soil. Lapis Lazuli breathed Lunaria’s rich scent. After so many years, she feared the smell of salt water would never leave her nose. There were people and children around, and they looked at her. They had blue skin like her own, some had blue hair, some purple, but the elders had white. Lapis stood out with her pair of glowing, watery butterfly wings. She was just the same as the ice-blue, glittering statue of herself in the town park, posing with one leg bent back as fountain water poured from her gem.

“I should’ve told them how weird that looked.” Lapis blushed.

“Look!” A round-headed boy with white hair pointed. “It’s the Fairy Princess! It’s Princess Lapis!”

“Princess Lapiiiiis!” A girl with a yellow dress, long blue hair, and no shoes leapt over gently, the planet’s low gravity making her light.

“Ha ha ha! Hello, everyone!” Lapis grinned brightly. “It’s great to be back!”

“Where did you go, Princess Lapis?” asked a smaller girl with purple hair curved up in points.

“I was on an… extended vacation to Oceana, Earth. So here is some advice regarding that: DO NOT GO TO EARTH.”

“Is Earth bad?” the round boy asked.

“YES, and it’s UNBEARABLE! Full of annoying sentient sponges, nagging whale gods, and adorable babies that only LOOK sweet and innocent, but turn out to be MONSTERS! Ugh, I NEVER wanna see another Earthling for as long as I-” A ship crashed behind them. Lapis whipped around in fright, as did the other park-goers.

It was a KND S.C.A.M.P.E.R., damaged only slightly from crashing in low-G, and a blonde girl with chocolate-brown eyes stumbled out. “I made iiiiiit, moooon…” She collapsed.

Cleveland Rooftops

Sector RZ and Wendy’s group left the basement emporium through the portal door and exited to the alley where the original emporium was located. Arlon’s ship which he had stolen from Zordoom and Sector RZ’s C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. were parked on the city roofs. “I have been under your father’s service for roughly two months.” Arlon said to Wendy. “He freed me from my cell in Zordoom for the purpose that I would bring you to Lunaria.”

“Oh, that’s right, you were one of Viridi’s thugs.” Lee Andrew remembered. “How do we know you aren’t out for revenge?”

“Mistress Viridi has already been foiled. Honestly, even if I lusted for vengeance, I do not have the resources to seek it. I suppose it is rare for you children to encounter such a competent villain of my stature.”

“More like a fraidy villain.” Leanne retorted.

“Yeah, why did you even agree to help us?” Lee asked.

“For the same reason you will be sworn to secrecy should we arrive there. But I was only requested to serve as escort to Miss Wendy’s party. It is your duty to attempt to keep up on that shabby camper.”

“A shabby mode of transportation all the same. Now, if we are all prepared, we must make flight for Lunaria.”

“Dr. Facilier?” Wendy spoke politely. “Would it be alright if I rode with Lee’s friends?”

“I cannot agree to this, Child.” Carla said. “It just… looks like a school bus with rockets attached to it. How would it even get beyond the atmosphere?”

“Hey, don’t underestimate our 4x4 technology!” Lulu exclaimed. “They’re even better than they used to be thanks to GKNF’s tech. We even have a Warpdrive Key to zip us through hyperspace!”

“Yeah, Carla. And besides, it wouldn’t be the first time I rode in one of their ships.” Wendy blushed. “At least this time, I won’t be piloting it.”

“Why must children insist on making matters complicated?” Arlon sighed. “Very well. But I should hope your piloting skills are of the highest quality.”

After both ships took off from the atmosphere, Arlon set his to warp through hyperspace. Sector RZ entered the warp gate after him.

Florae Galaxy

They reappeared in a region of space that was unrealistically blue. Everywhere looked like a night sky—the C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. dodged right and barely hit a small moon. “The moon shrunk, the moon shrunk!” Donna shouted.

“Or maybe… we’re gigantic??” Sonny questioned.

“We’re going to step on everybody.” They both said with devious smiles.
“On the contrary, children, we are at the edge of the Lunar Field.” Arlon said to them through the transmit. “It is a vast field of moons that surround and protect Lunaria.”

“How does Galaxia have room for all these planets?” Lee asked.

“This is not Galaxia.” Arlon said in aggravation. “The Florae Galaxy is close to Galaxia’s borders, however, and it is here where Lunaria floats. Stay close to me or you shall be lost among the Maze of Moons.”

“A Maze of Moons?” Denny repeated. “This would be the most amazing thing in the universe if I wasn’t so darned confused! Why in the world would Diwata think to come here? And how would she even know how to solve this maze?”

“It’s just a bunch of moons.” Lee said doubtingly. “We’re basically looking for the most gihugic one out here, right?”

“Unless Lunaria is super-duper tiny.” Leanne replied.

“Squash it.” The Climbers hit their hammers together.

“Yes, it may seem like a simple maze to navigate,” Arlon said contrarily, “but there is a spell in effect, wherein you must navigate a specific path, lest you be lost forever. We Lunarians instinctively know the correct path, and the illusion of being lost does not work for us.”

“Wendy, are you sure you wouldn’t rather ride in the other ship?” Carla asked.

“Carla, there’s nothing to worry about. Mr. Arlon will guide us across.” Wendy smiled with faith. “We’ll find Diwata… and we’ll find my dad, too.” (Play “Rainbow Road” from Mario Kart 7!)

Stage B-22: Lunaria

Mission: Get to Lunaria (even though it’s the stage name :P).

Act 1: The Lunar Field

The ships flew over a large moon and under two smaller moons before Arlon listed slightly to the left, then right, passing two more big moons. They entered a field where moons moved around and bumped into each other like pool balls. Arlon turned his ship sideways and slipped between two moons on a collision course, and Sector RZ quickly boosted their ship to squeeze between them. “Apologies, children, some moons are rather impatient!” Arlon yelled.

“You’re leading us through here to try and kill us!” Lee shouted.

Arlon was flying close to the bottom of a large moon, and the kids watched as he performed a somersault all the way around the moon before flying straight up. The operatives mimicked the action and entered a greater sea of moons, where they had to quickly turn left, diagonal right, do an overhead loop around a small moon, and then boost through five pairs of moons that would bounce against each other. The next region had three columns of moons, the other two drifting up while the center one’s moons moved down. Following Arlon’s example, the C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. slowed down through the first column, boosted through the second, and swerved left around the third.

They entered a cluster of moons, where they had to turn their ships sideways to go through a canyon, upside-down when the canyon became horizontal, turned further clockwise through another vertical canyon, and when they could revert to rightside-up, they flew upward. “Even if space did have directions, it certainly doesn’t in this mess.” Leanne said.

“What if each of these moons had its own gravity?” Denny asked. “I’m gonna be sick.”

“Uuuuuuh… awwwwww…” Wendy’s face was unnaturally blue.

“WENDY!” Lee exclaimed. “YOU’RE a Lunarian?!”

“I don’t believe that is the case…” Carla said.

Arlon’s ship was flying toward a bigger moon that was raining little comets at them. He performed numerous barrel-rolls to bounce the comets away, so when the C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. was forced to mimic, Wendy’s sickness only increased. “Child, this spacecraft has a stationary gravity.” Carla told her. “If it’s the sights that are dizzying you, please close your eyes.”

“No, Carla… it’s pretty.”

“Just remember who’s gonna have to clean up.” Lee stated.

They flew through a ring of small moons before reaching the big moon, and they had to speed around it three times, still avoiding its comets before they rocketed further skyward. They were soaring over the Sea of Moons, an endless field of glimmering blue. The stars sparkled in the indigo sky, creating many a constellation – a five-point star, a flower, a fish, a waving hand, the Triforce. “Oh, no, those aren’t stars creating the constellations. They are moons.” Arlon said. “We must fly into that one there.”

The constellation in question was a smiling crescent moon. Arlon turned his ship diagonal to fly through the group of small moons, and when the C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. flew through, a gigantic blue moon seemed to materialize several miles away. “Well, children, I am almost surprised you were able to follow my directions. You have technically won the right to land upon my home planet: Lunaria.”

They were minutes from entering the atmosphere of the great blue orb, and it was getting close surprisingly fast, given its size and distance… wait a minute. “Just kidding.” Arlon flew around the ordinary moon, so the kids followed. “THAT is my home planet, Lunaria.” The real planet was, unmistakably, a greater distance away, and had various tones of blue that represented land, sea, and mountains. “You wouldn’t believe how many hapless visitors crashed on that other one.”

“It’s one way to single them out…” Lee commented. They closed in on the planet with very transfixed expressions, and could only imagine what beauty lay on the actual surface. Their ships did not even burn upon entering the atmosphere, nor did the sky change any different from how it looked in space. It was like they were simply landing on a huge rock in space. (End song.)

Both ships landed in an open space within some hills. “BLEEEEEEHHH!” Wendy finally puked after stepping off the C.O.O.L.-B.U.S..

“AHHH!” Arlon freaked. “We’ve been here for merely two seconds and you’ve already defiled my planet’s soil!”

“Oh, get a grip on yourself!” Lee shouted. “Don’t act like no one on Lunaria gets sick!”

“THEY DON’T!”

Facilier helped wipe Wendy’s mouth. “I’m sorry…” she said humbly.
“At least you didn’t soil my ship.” Leanne patted her back. “I’m proud of you, Wendy.”

“Sigh, let’s just move on, shall we?” Arlon sighed. “The village where Master Red Eye promised to meet us is up ahead.”

Lee was first to follow him- “Whooooaaa!” he felt his feet lift off the ground, floating for a second before plopping on his front.

“Yes, the gravity is a little… lacking, compared to how you are familiar with it on Earth. You may need some time to adjust.”

“Wheeeeee!” Lulu leapt several feet high. “I jump higher than Weegeeeee!”

“Weegee?” The Luigi mutant peeped from behind a rock.

“No, Weegee, back in your hole.”

“Weegee?” He came out more.

“No, Weegee.”

“Weegee!”

“I SAID NO!”

“Weeeeegeeeeee.” Weegee sunk down in depression.

“He was in Firstborn, by the way.” Donna told the readers.

Lulu, Denny, and the Climbers embraced in the low gravity by jumping carelessly, while the others tried to keep their selves steady while following Arlon. The butler guided them to a cliff over a great river of blue, still water. Across the river were a series of tall islands that all formed a village. There were houses with gardens of blue, pretty grass, lamp posts shaped like moon phases, and some people were laying on lawn chairs and getting “moontans.”

Arlon waved his hands and seemed to catch the mystic blue light, forming stairwell platforms. “Watch your step, if you please.” He leapt up the stairs gracefully. His guests followed, but kept their eyes down to see the floating see-through steps. “On Lunaria, we practice the art of moonbending. To outsiders, it may sound like our powers are merely limited to the surface of the moon, but in actuality, a moon is more than just a spherical rock above a planet’s atmosphere. An ethereal energy flows from the moon, touches all that it shines upon. The moonbenders are able to harness and control that energy.”

“An ethereal energy that shines on all…” Wendy spoke lowly. “Mr. Arlon… are you talking about magic?”

“A most educated presumption. You see, the moons are the primary gateways to a realm called the Netherverse, which is concentrated with powerful Space Chi. The moons regulate that chi, keep it from leaking too destructively. And the output that has resulted is what we call Moon Chi. From Moon Chi, we are able to construct shapes, manipulate gravity… We have thought as moonbending as a sub-form of spacebending, a supernatural sub-form at that. And over centuries, other cultures have developed the form called ‘magic.’ The moons were a primary source of magic energy, the stars even. However, Moon Chi and magic… are used in very different ways.”

“Ohhhhh I’m confuuuuused.” Wendy held her head.
Their pathway took them over the village and provided a lovely view of it. Lunarian children were pointing and looking up at the strangers. Like Arlon, they were blue-skinned humanoids, but with various colors of hair, like purple and blue. Wendy stroked a few strands of her hair. Perhaps… she was Lunarian? “Mr. Arlon… how did you say my father got here?”

“He had his methods… As a reminder, you children must be sworn to secrecy.”

“Secrecy to what?!” Lee exclaimed. “How to get here? Because I won’t remember that specific path!”

“Patience, young man. You will learn momentarily.”

They set foot on an island with no houses, and a pointed hill that was more like a small mountain. A figure was floating above the point, turned away in a position they assumed was cross-legged. The being had silver hair and a flowing black cape. A breeze that they hadn’t felt before began to blow gently.

The kids slowly stepped up the hill, with Wendy and Carla going first. The breeze seemed to pick up. The others stayed behind and watched Wendy go on her own. She stopped a few steps from the tip of the peak. The man sensed her presence behind him. His white hand reached into a pocket and came out with a purple locket.

“This planet is a wonderful place… isn’t it.” He spoke with a deep voice. “It’s so wonderful that you wonder why it must be secluded from the outside. It was a decision of this planet’s founders, so many ages ago. To protect it from the evils of outside. The people and children play and live happily… and yet, their freedom cannot be shared with the outside. But that does not matter… The air of this planet is too fragrant for words. Why not embrace in its beauty? I knew it was the place for us to meet.”

The floating man turned around. The right half of his white face was concealed by a mask, only showing his left red eye. He set his sandaled feet on the ground. He clicked open the locket. Inside was a picture of a sleeping, adorable baby with blue hair. “I missed you… my child.”

A storm of emotions flowed through Wendy’s mind. She just couldn’t comprehend, couldn’t understand this being true. His face and hair bared no resemblance to Wendy, but his red eye and pointed ears looked strikingly similar, and his smile was warm and inviting. Carla looked between him and her master—the silence was tense for all of them.

“…Dad…” Tears flowing from her eyes, Wendy ran up and grabbed him in a hug, which he returned. Red Eye held the child close, filled with joy over his daughter’s happiness. They had both been awaiting this for a long time. Dr. Facilier, Sector RZ, and the Ice Climbers felt a warmth in their hearts. Wendy has finally met the father she never knew and always wanted to know.

Lee examined the dark-cloaked man. There was something familiar about him. “WAIT A SECOND, I know you, you’re that… GUY! That GUY that… worked for Ganondorf! Wh-What’s his name—VAATI!!”

Wendy pulled away and stared at him. “Vaati? I’ve heard of you. Mr. Ezlo talked about you.”

“So, you met my old master? Then… you must know a great deal about me already.”

“I think lots of people do.” Carla stepped forward and told him. “Your alias appears frequently on the wanted posters. And the Government has drawn connections between you and Wendy.”

Vaati was a tad startled by her voice—he looked around and saw that it belonged to a winged cat.
“Oh-ho, excuse me.” He blushed. “I did not see you there. You…?”

“Carla. And according to Wendy, I’m an ‘Exceed’ or something.”

“That would be the first time I’ve heard of that. But you are correct. I made myself an enemy of the world for following my philosophy. It is a fate I chose. But never one that I desired for you, Wendy.” He put a hand on her shoulder. “I left you at that orphanage so that your fate would not be bound by your parents’. You would know freedom. But it seems those fools at the World Government sought to detain you, anyway. I have endangered you, Child.”

“I don’t care about that!” Wendy embraced him again. “All I wanted was a family! Somewhere to call home, where I would be accepted.”

“And now you do.” Vaati hugged her. “Now that you are here, I want to teach you everything I know.”

“Everything?”

“Yes. Airbending, magic, how to battle, and my dreams. I entrusted Dr. Facilier with teaching you only a small portion, so that you would be prepared. I would love you… to be my student. Will you?”

“Yes, of course!” Wendy said excitedly. “I want to learn EVERYTHING from you! I waited for you for so long, I don’t wanna disappoint you!”

“Excuse me.” Both turned to Carla. She bore a very inquiring glare. “But if you’re Wendy’s father… perhaps you may tell us who her mother is?”

“Yeah, yeah! Who IS Wendy’s mom?” Lee exclaimed. “Someone we know too, I bet!”

“Well, Mr. Vaati?” repeated Carla.

“Hmph…” Vaati smirked, his eye closed. “Your mother’s name… is Annie Wilconson.”

“CALLED IT!!!” Denny screamed.

“Wonderful woman. Delightful. Heheh, she really had that fangirl about her back in the day.” Vaati chuckled at the memory. “They made a show about the Kids Next Door’s exploits, and boy was your mother obsessed with it. Even wrote fanfictions.”

“Master Vaati.” Arlon spoke seriously. “As heartwarming as this reunion is, we had another matter to discuss. Where is Master Crest?”

“Oh!” Vaati’s white cheeks reddened. “Yes, well, it seems Crest grew a little antsy when we arrived. So I… took him to a diner.”

New Moon Dining

“NOM NOM GOBBLE GLOP, GLOOP!” There were tall stacks of bowls and plates standing on one table, where a blue fat impish creature with a crescent-shaped head gobbled up a bowl of large blueberries. “OHH, they only grow ’em right here! HEY LADY, WHERE’S MY MOON PIE?!”

“Almost ready, Master Crest!” a chubby yellow-haired waitress said frantically.
“NOOO, what have you done?!" Arlon shouted, running to lift the moonberries out of Crest’s grasp. “The Young Lord’s appetite is RUINED! If he weren’t able to change his own body shape, this would be a DISASTER! Master, just how much have you eaten?”

“Bleventy…hundred… and one.” Crest moaned sickly. He perked when he realized: “Wait a minute… that doesn’t end in zero. It’s not perfectly round! NOOOOOOO!” The creature cried and rolled around the restaurant floor on his chubby belly. “Why why why whyyyyy…”

“So… what is this again?” Lee Andrew asked.

Arlon caught the Young Lord and lifted him for the tourists to see. “Ahem, may I introduce you to Lord Crest. The Firstborn of Moon.”

“Whoa-whoa-whoa-whoa! FIRSTBORN??”

“The Tenth Firstborn, as a matter of fact.”

“TENTH FIRSTBORN?!” the operatives screamed.

“All right, this is COMPLETELY messed up!” Leanne shouted. “We grew up knowing there were Eight Firstborn. EIGHT… FREAKING… FIRSTBORN! Then Sector V tells us about a random MUSIC Firstborn, NOW WE HAVE THIS RANDOM MOON THING?! I mean… WHERE did he come from?!”

“It happened two years ago.” Vaati explained. “One of my subordinates, Mikaela Chariton, had to take her daughter to the hospital on Mother’s Day. Her daughter had attempted to show her proficiency in psychicbending by creating an Imaginary Friend. When Mika returned to the hospital room… she found Crest and brought him to me, thinking he spawned from Sunni’s Imagination. It was a while before I realized… his powers and anatomy matched that of a Firstborn. And I was astonished to think that an undeveloped psychicbender’s powers could create such a creature.”

“After Sir Vaati freed me from my prison, I declined his request to take his daughter to Lunaria.” Arlon followed. “But then he showed me to Master Crest… so I was forced to obey.”

“I had no intention of harming Crest, and I followed Arlon’s wishes to protect him. A Firstborn is not born in the universe every other week. If word got out that a new one just appeared, the universe would descend into chaos, people will jump at the chance to seize him, research him, harness his power! Just like Dimentia once did to Jirachi. The Firstborn are the most powerful beings in the universe.”

“And you let him just casually come to a diner and casually eat food like… a fat rich person.” Lee commented.

“BUUUUURRRP.” Crest deflated like a balloon, returning to a slimmer stature.

“If only I could do that.” Lulu frowned at her chubby body.

“Oh, I can help you!” Crest floated over and touched Lulu with a blue twinkle on his finger, and she went from round to slender in seconds.

“AAAAAAAHH! I’m so tiny!!”

“You’re just skinny, silly!” Lee laughed.
“YOU’RE A SAINT, Lord Crest!!” Lulu grabbed and hugged the Firstborn. “No more exercising or gym for me!”

“As impressive as that is, that can’t be all he can do.” Leanne said. “I mean… he’s a Firstborn! He must have phenomenal cosmic… moonbending or something!”

“Indeed, Master Crest is brimming with potential.” Arlon replied. “But a Firstborn must not use its power rashly. We must wait for Crest’s Guardian, whoever he or she may be.”

“A bender must not conceal itself.” Vaati said. “A bender must be free to exert its power, express itself. I kept Crest a secret for this long, but you must allow him freedom on his own planet.”

“I will decide when he is ready for that.” Arlon picked Crest back up. “He is not my child, but he is certainly not yours. Why don’t you attend to your own daughter?”

“Yes… perhaps I shall.” Vaati said with slight resentment for him. He turned to Wendy with a welcoming smile, “Shall we go someplace to talk in private?”

“I would love to! But, Dad, one of Lee’s friends went missing and we think she came to this planet. So, I wanted to help them-”

Facilier touched her shoulder. “You leave finding Diwata to me, sweetie. Y’all just spend time with yo’ dad. I know you’ve both been looking forward to this.”

“Yeah, Wendy, don’t worry about us.” Lee grinned. “Go bond with daddy!”

“Hehe… Well, if you say so.” Wendy grinned.

They went outside the restaurant as Vaati helped Wendy onto his shoulders. “Hold on tight.” Fast as the wind, Vaati dashed across the indigo fields, dodging rock after rock, cliff after cliff, over the mountains, and was gone. The joy and energy Wendy felt was unparalleled.

Dr. Facilier held up his cane and called, “Point Me Diwata Uno!” The stick whipped in a certain direction. “This way, kids!” He led the way for Sector RZ.

Before Arlon had a chance to follow them, the restaurant waitress cornered him, smiling bubbly. “And will you be paying for Master Crest’s meal?”

“Uh-…” Arlon looked behind the waitress. DUN DUN DUUUUUN! A huge Lunarian with giant arms punched his palm, glaring murderously at Arlon. His shirt read Lunarian Resources. “Y… Yes. Let me fetch my checkbook.”

On a moonlit hill

From here, one could see the ocean as it stretched for miles, reflecting the light of the planet’s hundreds of moons. Vaati marched up the hill with Wendy still clinging to his back. “I know I sound too excited, Dad, but I just have so many questions to ask you!”

“Ask me anything, Dear.” Vaati chuckled.

“Okay well first, what about my hair, why is my hair blue, I know I have your red eyes, but your hair isn’t blue, is my mom’s hair blue, or did your hair turn white from old age, not that being old is bad, but-?”

“Calm yourself, Child! Neither me or Annie have blue hair. Before we found out she was pregnant,
I treated her to a wine called Ocean’s Marvel. It was very intoxicating.” He chuckled. “We think it resulted in your hair turning blue. It’s a beautiful color, isn’t it? It goes great with this landscape.”

“It does, I agree.” Wendy stroked her hair. “So, Mr. Vaat- I mean… Dad.” Wendy would have to get used to that word. “There’s so much I want to ask. Like… where do you come from; who were your parents?”

“A very good question. My parents abandoned me too, Wendy. Left me in the care of my master, Ezlo.”

“I’m sorry.”

“Don’t be. I do not know their reason; Ezlo claimed to have found me on his doorstep, but because they left me, I had taken the first step to knowing freedom. True, Ezlo became a father figure of sorts. Taught me much of what I know about magic. As to where I come from, like many Minish, I was born and raised in the Tree of Beginning. In time, I would convert to a human size to better pursue my goals, and even Ezlo came to do so.”

“A Minish? That means… I’m half-Minish.” Wendy figured. “And I’m also half-”

“Nimbi—I mean, human, yes. Keh, sorry.” He flushed red. “My mind races around so much, my tongue begins to jump, it’s really an odd habit.”

“Ha ha ha! I get that way, too! We really have a lot in common, Dad.”

“I know, and I’m very proud of how you’ve grown, Wendy. I have clearly missed my chance to give you a piggyback ride…”

Wendy just remembered she had been riding him all this time. “Dad, if I’m too heavy for you, I can walk on my own.”

“I wish I could disagree, but…” Vaati was shaking, “you weigh a lot more than I anticipated.” Wendy blushed. “I feel like I might fall apart! Heh-!” He fell over and broke into dust.

“DAD!!” Wendy panicked.

But then the dust swirled into a center, recreating Vaati’s body in the form of wind. “Logia airbending.” He leaped over his daughter, reforming his physical body. “It’s very handy.”

Vaati shot to the sky as fast as wind, and Wendy gaped as his body dispersed into such. As a long gust of wind, he soared around and around, far across the field and coming back to breeze past Wendy. She whipped around as he soared miles over the cliff, that gust splitting into three, forming cool shapes, before coming back together. Wendy smiled admiringly as Vaati’s upper half reformed above her, his lower half remaining a whirlwind. “When you’re a Logia, Wendy, you know all the greatest power your element brings. For us airbenders, it truly means knowing breath.” He reformed his feet and landed before her. “I bet you’re a great airbender. I hope you will join me on the wind in a few years.”

That brought up another question in Wendy’s mind. “Mr. V-Dad, who was the first Logia? I mean, I read his name’s Acnologia, and he was a mage, but I still don’t…”

“Hm hm. So full of questions, as expected of you. Acnologia was a moonbender.”

“A moonbender? So he was Lunarian?”
“No, according to ancient scripts, Acnologia was human. In fact, he was not even a bender. He was a wizard who loved magic, desired to learn all he could on magic, and moonbending became a very favored subject of his. He found Lunaria and, using ancient magic only known in his time, he detached his soul from his body, absorbed the spiritual energies of this world, and in time his very soul would be one with Moon Chi. He strengthened his own soul, transferred it to his physical body, and applied it to his magic. With this much power in his veins, he was not only the first mortal to gain bending of his own accord, but the first to actually take the form of his element. One with the essence of nature and the universe, he was a legend to the gods.”

“Woooow!” Wendy’s red eyes were shining. “That sounds so amazing! So did other Logia benders learn from him?”

“Hm hm, he sure inspired me. It would sound like Acnologia became a role-model for all benders… but he was dangerous.”

“Dangerous?”

“He was absorbed in Dark Arts and absorbed in power. He destroyed many, many landscapes with his unmatched power. In the end, he was still mortal, so the gods had to destroy him, sever his ultimate energy. Eventually, mortals discovered ways of achieving this level, having been deemed as ‘Mortal Gods’, but later to be called Logias when compared to the first one. The gods grew concerned having given the mortals more power than they imagined, but passed this off. It showed how generations could pass and things develop.

“As destructive as he was, Acnologia was one of my idols. I think he loved magic as much as I do, and all he desired was the freedom to grow with his power. Tell me, Wendy, when you first laid your hands on your wand and began summoning spells to your whim, how did you feel?”

Wendy pulled out her Lamia Scale. “It felt amazing! It felt like my heart was closed, but it finally opened up to a whole new world! I was beginning to learn who I was!”

“That’s how I always feel as I practice and research magic. It is a wonderful power, and I would like others to view it the way I do. But much of Earth’s society fears magic, and magic communities are forced to hide. If those rules did not exist and mages could express their selves freely, there would be no fear. Don’t you agree, Wendy?”

“Of course I do.” Wendy smiled. “I mean, it’s one thing if wizards use their magic to bully people, but they shouldn’t be persecuted just for being wizards.”

“Exactly! Throughout history, it was shown that rules create limitations and create havoc because of these limitations.” Vaati paced back and forth as he stressed his argument. “Atrocities like slavery, events like World War II, have all happened because of power-hungry world leaders who were ignorant to the ideals of freedom. Growing up, I read more than my share of stories, detailing the exploits of these leaders. They disgusted me to no end.” Vaati gritted his teeth. A darkness loomed in his red eye. “It makes me wonder what the world would be like… if we just didn’t have them.”

“Father?”

“…” Vaati turned to her, smiling. “Sorry, I kind of just started rambling. But the truth is, Wendy, that I wanted you to know freedom, too. I did not just abandon you to protect you… I wanted you to grow up without the binds of parentage, without you feeling burdened or indebted to your parents. I know that life has been hard for you… but I only desired the best for you, Dear.”
“But, Dad… all I wanted was to know you. I didn’t care about having freedom or feeling burdened… and for a long time, I thought that you didn’t want to bother with me. I don’t think I ever felt free… I just felt like a waste. I felt like nothing I did mattered and no one would ever care about me.”

“Wendy… you were more important to me than anything else. I never felt more happy… than the day you were born. You were never a waste… and I’m sorry that I made you feel that way.”

“I don’t care about that, anymore.” Tears welled up in her eyes again. “I’m just glad you’re here now… I love you, Dad.”

“I love you too, Wendy.”

They hugged warmly. The father and daughter that have been apart for so long… Wendy felt like nothing could go wrong and she would be happy from this moment forward. Why wouldn’t she feel this way… At long last, she had her father.

“…Wait a minute!” Wendy spoke up. “How did I weigh you down in this low gravity?”

“You must be heavier than you think!” Vaati laughed.

“Daaaaaad!” Wendy turned red and wiggled embarrassingly. But then the two engaged in laughter.

Twinkle Park

Dr. Facilier’s Point Me spell led the kids to a town park. In its center was an ice-blue fountain statue of a girl with butterfly wings, pouring water from its back. “Master Crest, as the Firstborn of Moon, you must learn to take responsibility!” Arlon told him scoldingly. “In the future, you cannot rely on your caretakers to pay your food bills, and you certainly cannot eat like a farm animal for the rest of your life.”

“Man, and I thought being a baby god would be more fun and games.” Lee said.

“It’s fun for me!” Lulu did a twirl. “I feel so skinny, I can stand still and hide in plain sight, just like a paper!” And just then, she inflated to her chubby self. “WHAT THE HECK?!?”

“Ohhhhhh yeah, forgot to mention, that wears off.” Crest noted. “So uh, no hiding for you!”

“AWWWWW!”

“It should go without saying you must not abuse your power for senseless purposes.” Arlon said.

As they trekked up a hill, a Lunarian with watery butterfly wings emerged from the other side. She gasped at seeing Arlon. “DAD!”

“Lapis!” Arlon exclaimed.

The fairy girl swooped down and grabbed her father in a hug, twirling him. “I missed you so much! I would’ve come back sooner, but Kyogre made me stay in Oceana, and this stupid sponge thing came and… Wait…” She noticed the creature in Arlon’s arm. “Is that…’
“The Firstborn, Crest.”

“You mean he’s finally come?!”

“Hey, who’re you?” Lee asked rudely. “You look like that statue over there.”

Lapis turned to them. “Oh… some more humans.” She said with resent. “By any chance, you wouldn’t be acquainted with the one who arrived earlier?”

“What do you mean?” Leanne asked.

“After I finally made it home, this ship crash-landed in the park and a human girl came out of it. She had blonde hair and a green shirt.”

“DIWATA!”

“KIDS, OVER HERE!” Facilier called from atop the hill. “I think I just found her!”

The operatives ran up beside him and saw the backside of a familiar blonde girl sitting in a shimmering, moon-shaped pool. “It’s really her!” Lee beamed. “Diwata!”

The four kids rushed down to greet her. She turned around, “HEY, guys!” showing her deep blue face with round, white eyes.

“AAAAAAAH!” They screamed with the biggest shock they have ever experienced, so big their hearts almost jumped out. “D-D-Diwata?” Denny stuttered. “Are you stuck in mid-throw-up?”

“No, silly!” She shook her head. “I’m a Lunarian!”

“You…You are?!” Leanne couldn’t process this quick enough.

“Um, I wanna say half-Lunarian, but my mom is half-Lunarian, which I guess makes me half of half-Lunarian! What? Didn’t you guys know? Like, I turn blue every time we go swim at the pool! Well, I turn partly blue, but only because we never go night-swimmin’, hee hee hee! Hey… are you guys okay? You look like Time just halted to a standstill. …Hello?”

The amount of plot twists they experienced tonight froze them speechless. Lulu fell and rolled into the water.

Gravity Falls; Portal Chamber

Mabel, Grenda, and Candy had fallen asleep after hours of Dimension Fishing. Dipper, being the night owl he was, had to be drugged with a dose of harmless Death Chi. With the four operatives out, Medusa and Thanatos could make their selves known. “You like to get in, get out without a trace, don’t you?” Nerehc queried.

“It’s not like I wanted to be scarce, it’s just this dimension is more heavily watched.” The goddess shrugged. “Except this room, for some reason. I brought the next two candidates for our mission.”

Atnort and Annaira Eerfnud came behind her. Medusa approached one of the connecting devices, which contained the blue glowing cube known as the Tesseract. “So, this is the device Bill Cipher used to help power the portal. But it isn’t from this world, either.” She took the Tesseract out of its station and held it before the scanner.

“Original counterpart detected. Changing destination to: Dimension Marvel-199999.” The arrow pointed at a symbol of a slanted “A” with a circle around it.
Under Medusa’s instruction, Nerehe played the Ocarina of Time, and Fi set it to transport seven years in the past. Atnort and Annaira stood before the spiraling portal as it shone blue. “In this universe, you will be searching for one of the most powerful Darknesses. A born conqueror, a true challenger of the gods… the Mad Titan, Thanos.”

Outside Lunaria’s atmosphere

A fleet of ships had cleared the Lunar Field and were closing in on the Moon Planet. These ships were marked with a huge red “R”. “We will arrive on Lunaria’s surface in twenty minutes, Master Giovanni.” Butch reported.

“It is even more marvelous up close.” Giovanni smirked. “A planet rich with supernatural chi. A terrific source of power, and hiding place of the Tenth Firstborn.”

“Those Lunarian dweebs have no idea that WE knew about the Tenth Firstborn all along!” Meowth announced. “And now Team Rocket’s gonna be da first bunch o’ baddies to capture him!”

“It is a shame that Mew was taken by that wretched girl.” Plank 20x40 spoke. The face of his cyborg body, Johnny, made his most frightening grin. “But the amount of power this Newborn Firstborn will grant us will make us unstoppable! Especially with you on our side…” the cyborg turned around, “Acnologia.”

The shirtless man with long, spiky white hair, and tan, torn-up skin with blue tattoos, was knelt on a platform. He tried to rush forward- “OOOOOAAAAARRRGGH!” He was bound to the platform and encased inside a force field. Furthermore, John-Plank had a remote control to zap him into submission.

“You’d best behave yourself in my presence, Mr. Logia.” said Giovanni. “I did not rescue you from that burning sanctum so you would run rampant like the beast you were. I will seize the Ten Firstborn and rule the universe. I brought you back from the dead so you would guide me to Lunaria… but if you mind your manners, I will be happy to grant you a place in my army.”

“OOOAAAAARRRGGH!” He was shocked again in his attempt to resist.

Jessie and James were holding each other and shuddering. “You know, maybe you should be a little nicer to him.” Jessie said.

“After all, a Logia moonbender is practically an endangered species.” James followed.

“The microbots I had planted inside him will keep him under control.” Plank assured. “He will be a valuable asset to us.”

“And his power will be nothing to that which Crest can give us.” Giovanni said, facing the approaching planet. “The first target I will set my eyes on is Gozaburo Kaiba. His precious Duel Monsters will be wiped out in one fell swoop!”

Acnologia fell to his hand and knees. He looked up, snarling like a beast as he bared his fangs. The glow of Lunaria glinted off his blue eyes, his pupils shrinking.

I got this chapter done in two days… at least. SUPER FAST! I guess it’s easy when I already had some dialogue pre-written. So yeah, Crest actually first appeared in my “Mother’s Day” one-shot if anyone remembers that. We all know Vaati, he’s from Zelda and he was an an-again off-again villain in Firstborn. Next time, another Darkness hunt. Here’s a short and simple Caesar Cipher.

Chapter B-27: Sibling Rivalry

Marvel-199999; Sanctuary (Play “Hau’oli Hau’oli” from Kingdom Hearts: Birth By Sleep!)

“The Chitauri grow restless.”

“Let them gird themselves. I will lead them into glorious battle.”

“Battle? Against the meager might of Earth?”

“Glorious, not lengthy. If your force is as formidable as you claim.”

He was donned with golden armor, entrusted with a scepter with a powerful blue gem as its core. We know this black-haired gentleman as Loki. Of course, these events were a little before the chaos on Birka. “You will have your war, Asgardian.” An ancient, hooded being who sounded like Emperor Palpatine stated. “If you fail… if the Tesseract is kept from us, there will be no realm, no barren moon, no crevice where he can’t find you. You think you know pain? He will make you long for something as sweet as death.”

“I shall not fail.” Loki assured. “With the power of this scepter, even the most vile, hulking figure cannot crush me.”

Earth

“Achoo!” Bruce Banner sneezed.

“Bless you, Dr. Banner.” Nick Fury said.

“Thank you.”

Sanctuary

“See that you don’t.” The Other said as a bright light flashed in the starry sky. “Once the Tesseract is in your possession, you are to-”

“AAAAAHH- UH!” Two beings crashed on the ground between The Other and Loki. A girl with purple skin and green hair, and a boy with green skin and magenta hair.

“They couldn’t have programmed the Multiverse Portal to drop us closer to the ground?!” Atnort complained.
“YOU’RE the one who wanted to jump in without a second’s thought!” Annaira argued.

“IMPUDENT VERMIN!” The Other’s elderly voice thundered.

“How DARE you little heathens intrude upon Lord Thanos’ sacred ground with naught a hint of repentance!”

“What are you talking about?” Atnort asked, looking around. “I don’t see anybody but some old ghoul with bad breath!”

“Enough.” A deep, commanding voice echoed. They faced the giant throne that was hovered above their asteroid. It turned, revealing the giant with purple skin, golden armor, and a muscular build. He had bright blue eyes. “When children come idly shrieking into my domain… they must bow before he whom they have intruded upon… or be given severe discipline.”

“Talk like a normal person, why don’t ya.”

“Shall I cut off your tongue?!” Other shouted.

“Wait!” Anna yelped. “Are you… Thanos?”

“You have nerve to question my name, without providing your own. State your names and where you hail from.” Thanos ordered.

The siblings exchanged glances. “I’m Annaira Eerfnud. This is my brother, Atnort Eerfnud. We’re from the Negaverse—the Earolf Galaxy.”

“Negaverse… Earolf… These places are unfamiliar to me. And your species… Is it Zehoberei?”

“We’re Zehoberei if you want us to be.” Atnort joked.

Thanos smirked, showing his large teeth. “Congratulations, Atnort and Annaira. You are now children of Thanos!”

“Since when?!”

“Since you were born. You will serve me from this moment forward. Within the next few years, I will train you to become world-conquering machines, matched only by your fellow assassins. Gamora… Nebula… come to Papa.”

The kids heard footsteps and turned. A woman with black hair, green skin, and black attire, along with a blue-skinned woman with a bald head and cybernetic features approached them. “These two are Atnort and Annaira. They are your little siblings. So, as their big sisters, you two must set the example.”

“Might we inquire as to how they were bred?” Gamora asked acerbically.

“The same as you, I would be certain.” Thanos smirked maliciously. “Well… Now that the family is all here, why don’t we play a game? There is an ancient Asgardian temple five parsecs from here. Inside is an item that I want. A special gauntlet, if you will. Heavily fortified… with monsters so ferocious, the Asgardians dare not venture into its depths. My girls, you will lead your new siblings into the temple. Brave the traps and return to me with the gauntlet. Gamora… you will take Atnort. And Nebula, you will take Annaira. Your squads will compete against each other, and the one to retrieve the gauntlet... will earn Daddy’s praise.”

“And the one who does not?” Nebula asked with a voice that sounded like Medusa (Cree Summer).

“It would seem I have been too lenient with them. Do I make myself clear? Then take your brethren and prepare yourselves.”

“We didn’t come here to play some game!” Atnort yelled. “We came here to find you! You’re one of the Thirteen Darknesses, so you have to—”

“SILENCE! I will not tolerate insolence. Forget who you were and where you came from... because from this moment forward, you are children of Thanos. Do as I say and bring me the gauntlet! Or you will know true pain...”

Gamora grabbed Atnort’s arm. “Come.” She led the younger green-skinned alien away.

As Nebula guided Annaira in the opposite direction, the latter reflected on her name... literally. “Nebula... Aluben...”

“Do not mumble, speak up!” Nebula ordered.

“Oh, of course!” Anna gasped to attention. “You’d like that, wouldn’t you...”

Watching his children leave, Thanos sighed and relaxed on his throne. “Do you really believe these offspring will bring the Infinity Gauntlet without strife?” The Other questioned.

“No... Of course there will be strife. But that’s why... I love them...” Thanos smiled.

His phone rang. Frowning, Thanos grabbed it from his pocket. He clicked the holo-projection to show Ronan the Accuser’s face. “THANOS! This verminous Xandarian couple is talking over the movie! SEND your minions to DESTROY Nova Cinema 199999 at once!” He hung up.

“Ugh... Speaking of pouty children.” Thanos sighed.

Gamora’s ship, moments later

“The Asgardian temple has two entrances that we know of.” Gamora explained as she piloted the craft. There were robotic aliens called Chitauri operating the controls. “I planned to take the bottom entrance. I also have Chitauri spies planted on Nebula’s ship to slow them down. Of course, I didn’t plan on a little brat slowing me down.”

“Hang on a minute!” Atnort spoke up. “I may be a lightningbender, but this is going too fast even for me! First off, I didn’t agree to sign up for this treasure hunt, and second, if we’re both after the same thing for the same guy, then why are we fighting the other guys?!”

“Because Thanos enjoys it when his children fight for his affection. I’d advise you to get used to it.”

“Pfft, yeah right. As soon as that portal calls us back, I’m jumping in faster than a Lightning Comet.”

“You have quite the mouth for an offspring.” Gamora remarked. “What do you have to contribute?”

“I’m a lightningbender.” He pointed at his electrified antenna. “My chi paths got a little messy a few months ago, so I’ve been forced to take baby steps... If you wanna let the jokes fly in.”
“Do you mean to say you possess the power of lightning? Perhaps you will be useful.”

Nebula’s ship

“You’re able to control lifeforms via the blood in their veins?” Nebula replied to Annaira’s description on her powers. “With power like that, we can easily crush Gamora and your brother.”

“If it were that easy, I would’ve crushed him already.” Anna said. “So… Nebula… what kind of man is Thanos?”

“What kind of man is Thanos? I thought you would’ve at least known he isn’t a human before you appeared in Sanctuary. Honestly, what creature in the universe doesn’t know who Thanos is?”

“A creature not from the universe!” Anna chortled.

“Save your humor for after we’ve won. There’s the temple.” They were approaching a massive, dark structure in the middle of space. Giant asteroids surrounded the region and made it impossible for stars to be seen. Nebula glanced down and noticed the ship floating under the asteroids to the bottom of the temple. “Right on cue. It’s time to give my sister a little surprise.”

“What do you mean?”

“I had my Chitauri plant a bomb in their ship. With a push of the button,” Nebula held her finger above a red button on the control deck, “it’ll stop them before she even has a chance!”

“RAAAH!” Two Chitauri jumped over and lashed blades at Nebula, but she was quick to flip over them and shoot them through the heads with a ray gun. Other Chitauri were clashing with each other, and when one of them shot its gun at Nebula, she ducked, causing the laser to destroy the detonator. “So, my sister hired a bunch of double-crossers to get the jump on me first?! Well, the joke’s on her, because now the bomb is set to explode in 30 seconds!”

Gamora’s ship

Beep…beep…

Atnort’s antenna picked up a sound. “Do you hear that?”

“What?” Gamora asked.

Atnort bent over a hatch on the floor and zapped lightning around the edges to detach it. There was a bomb with a timer. “It’s a bomb!”

“A bomb?!” Gamora whipped around. She set the ship to autopilot and tried to pick the device off its place. “It’s attached to the ship, we need to get off!”

“No we don’t—it’s gonna blow when it hits zero, right? So we just need to stop the timer!” Atnort zapped a gentle ray of lightning from his antenna, sending a charge through the explosive until its timer blacked out. “I dealt with these all the time back in DNKG.”

“I should’ve known Nebula would try something so shifty. Hmph… we must be on our guard. Put on your helmet. It’s time to enter the temple. Chitauri Squadron A, stay here and try to get that bomb off. Squadron B, sabotage Nebula’s ship.”

“How do they tell each other apart?” Atnort asked.
“How should I know, they’re just robot lizards.”

Stage B-23: Dark Space

Mission: Get the Infinity Gauntlet!

Atnort leapt up a series of asteroid platforms, following Gamora’s example as they made their way to the temple’s bottom entrance. On one asteroid, they planned to jump and kick off a vertical asteroid to reach a higher one, but Asteroks (or Space Octoroks) coughed rocks at them to prevent this feat. Atnort could shoot lightning at the space squids, allowing them to accomplish their low-G Wall Jump. “I may need your powers here, too.” Gamora cautioned as they faced a swarm of slow, small incoming asteroids. They made a great leap to a distant asteroid, during which Atnort shot lightning bolts at the small ones that threatened to bash their skulls. After making land, the two Wall Jumped up a series of far-apart asteroids that led straight into the temple entrance.

They had to keep Wall Jumping up a shaft before they could reach the floor of the temple hallway, the gravity still low. They faced a pit where meteors were constantly raining downward, so Atnort did the honors and performed a Zip Dash around them and crossed the pit. He pressed a switch that stopped the asteroids and allowed Gamora to leap across.

“So, do you and Annaira try to kill each other a lot?” Gamora asked while they proceeded.

“Is it that obvious?”

“Call it a hunch.”

“Well yeah, we use each other to ‘vent’ a lot. If you came from a planet that had twice the population that it should have, it would make you pretty stressed out, too.”

“I should be so lucky…”

They reached a ledge with a pad with a hammer icon, and the rest of this passage was set over a pit. Atnort used lightning to ignite the pad, and Gamora quickly hopped on a platform that rose up on their left. Other such platforms poked out of the walls and ceiling. Two of them blocked her path, so she told Atnort to stop powering. The pillars retracted, including hers, but she made the low-G leap off the platform, past the barricading pillars, then told Atnort to reactivate them so she could land on a new extracted pillar. The hall turned left, and the ledge she had to reach was blocked by ceiling pillars. When Atnort deactivated, Gamora made the jump—wall pillars from either side would’ve come out and crushed her had she delayed, but she made it. She pressed a switch that lowered a stairway of electric spheres within mechanical devices, and Atnort could Zip Dash up these spheres to get to her.

In fact, the next room was huge and full of Zip Dash Spheres. Many of them only pointed in certain directions, creating a complex maze for the lightningbender. So complex that I’m sure you wouldn’t remember the path even if I wrote it down. It took Atnort 20 minutes to solve the maze, and during this time Gamora was playing Angry Space Birds on her holo-phone. Eventually, Atnort made it across and stepped on a switch that would extend a bridge for Gamora. “Why am I doing all the work here?” Atnort commented.

With Nebula and Annaira
A Fatblin guarded the entrance to the temple, but when the overweight monster stabbed its spear, Nebula leapt above and kicked the spearhead off, afterwards kicking its weapon and shield away. Annaira used bloodbending to roll it into a Fatblin-size hole, which triggered the massive gate to open. They entered a room with several fountains spewing from the floor. There was a stone tablet with text in front of the next sealed door. Nebula’s scanner translated the Asgardian text and read aloud, “The chamber shall open to a dry floor.”

“I guess we’re allowed to keep the air wet.” Anna used her waterbending to lift all the water off the floor and project a psychic barrier that would keep all the other water in the air. Holding so much water was a strain on herself, but she withstood it until the door opened. Nebula quickly ran in, and Anna let the water splash down before diving in the doorway herself.

“Annaira, look at this.” Nebula was viewing a magic-projected screen on the wall. It showed Atnort and Gamora in a different passage.

“So I guess this is a security camera.” Anna figured.

“Yes…” Nebula smirked at the square switch below the screen. “And this must be SECURITY!” She pressed it. (Play “Deep Space Battle” from Birth By Sleep!)

The door behind Atnort and Gamora sealed, and their hallway rumbled. “I think we tripped the wire!” The hall began to turn red with heat, and the aliens sweated. The two green-skins rushed down the hall, dodging the parts of floor that burst into flame. Gamora Wall Jumped across a lava river while Atnort used Zip Dash Spheres, falling tired after he did so. Gamora picked him up and jumped up a set of platforms over a lava pit, making it through a new door that sealed off the burning corridor.

“Phew… I guess you can’t expect these traps to be as dumb as Anaidni Senoj.” Atnort gasped for breath.

Gamora found a holo-screen that showed Nebula and Annaira viewing a similar screen. “And you can’t expect your sister to play fairly!” She pressed the switch under that screen.

Anna and Nebula’s hallway began to flood. Anna tried to bend it, but the water was unusually thick. “I’m not cleaning this floor.” The two raced up the hall, dodging the waterfalls that poured in. A Bokoblin tried to attack them, but Anna grabbed it in bloodbending and brought it with her, then snatched a second Bokoblin. She stuck the two monsters into holes on either wall, twisting them like keys to open the gate. They had to cross a balance beam over rising thick water. Nebula ran across it with grace, but when she saw Annaira doing it in a slow, careful fashion, the assassin was forced to run back, pick up, and carry Anna to the exit.

They pressed another switch, dropping the floor in their rivals’ next hallway. A storm of Zip Dash Spheres were flying at Atnort and Gamora. The latter dodged them expertly while Atnort used them to zip to the opposite side and press a switch, shutting them off and repairing the floor. Unfortunately, the ceiling began to close down, so Gamora was forced to dash, sliding under the last few inches of space and escaping through the door.

Gamora pressed a switch, turning her sister’s hallway into a mirage zone. The hall consisted of numerous forks, where one of them appeared normal, but would lead them into a pit of lava. Annaira was about to run into a pit—“GET BACK!” Nebula grabbed her before she did. “My scanner can see through the mirage! Follow me!” The right directions were left, right, right, and left.

Nebula found another monitor—Gamora found another monitor. Gamora was seen getting ready to trigger another trap—Nebula was going to set another trap. They both raised fingers to press the buttons—

Annaira sliced theirs with a Water Slice and Atnort destroyed theirs with lightning. “ARE YOU INSANE?!” Nebula bellowed. “Do you WANT them to get the upper hand?!”

“I thought we were here to get a gauntlet, not try to kill each other! We’re not making any progress.”

“They were about to trap us!”

Anna and Nebula looked around and waited a moment. “…Or perhaps not.” (End song.)

With Atnort

“Hm… I guess she feels the same.” Atnort observed.

“Fine, I’ll stop.” Gamora complied. “But for the record, we made faster progress running from their traps.”

The two proceeded up a flight of stairs, with tiny lines in the wall providing light. “I’ve been in this galaxy for almost an hour, and it’s just as crazy as my homeworld! How do you live with a father that MAKES his kids fight each other?!” Atnort questioned.

“Thanos is NOT our father.” Gamora affirmed. “To him, ‘children’ is another word for weapons. He is a murderer and a monster. He killed every last member of my species, he killed my parents in front of me. Whether it’s women, elders, children, infants… Thanos will slaughter anyone he desires in order to achieve dominion.”

Atnort needed a moment to process that shocking response. “…Yeah, I didn’t think any woman would be brave enough to get in bed with him. Did the same thing happen to Nebula?”

“I think her family was killed, but I don’t know more than that. It doesn’t matter. Thanos doesn’t love us, nor do we love each other. We’re weapons now. It won’t be long before you and Annaira will be hating each other.”

“We’re not staying. We’re jumping ship the second we have a chance to.”

“And how do you plan to do that? Because Thanos will find you. He’ll kill millions to ensure you are captured and punished.”

“Trust me, we’re going to escape.” I really hope that portal calls us back now.

“Hm. If your words held meaning, I would like to come with you.”

Atnort bit his lip. “I… don’t think you can do that.”

“Why not?”

“Because we-” Atnort tripped on a slanted force and fell on it before pushing off and standing straight. “Huh?” A huge stone pyramid towered over them, and a golden gauntlet was floating above it.

Annaira and Nebula gazed at the massive ruin from across the great vacant chamber. The pyramid only seemed to grow as they stepped forward. Based on the stories from Nerehc’s friends, this Pyrameglyph was a lot bigger than the other ones. Annaira saw Nebula using her scanner on the alien writing. “It won’t translate.” Anna knew.

“My scanner is programmed with eight billion different languages, even a simple ruin like this… is unknown.” The scanner failed. “Hm… Well, what does it matter. That must be the gauntlet Father desires. Let’s get it down before Gamora arrives.”

“Too late, Sister.” Gamora and Atnor walked out from behind the pyramid.

“Yeah, we found the gauntlet first!” Atnor asserted.

“You two took a lousy shortcut!” Anna argued.

“Shortcut my ass! I was stuck in that shock sphere room for 20 minutes! WE get the giant gauntlet!”

“Will both of you shut up and think for a second?” Gamora cut in. “How are we expected to carry such a large item to Father? We will never be able to bring it to either of our ships if we are at war with each other.”

“Don’t play the Moral Game with me, Sister.” Nebula hissed. “You have always been Father’s favorite child, and you crave his praise! But I will not let you have it, you parentless whore!”

“SOULLESS WITCH!” Gamora punched Nebula in the jaw—the sister flipped behind and grabbed Gamora by the neck, choking her until Gamora grabbed a knife from her pocket and cut Nebula’s waist. They swung swift kicks at the other before Gamora rolled behind, grabbed Nebula, and kicked her against the Pyrameglyph. She was dizzied by the impact, but she extracted long metal claws and swiped them at Gamora, who dodged and grabbed both Nebula’s wrists, only for the latter to kick up at her face.

Atnor and Annaira exchanged looks. “So if this is an Original World, is this where the Negaverse gets it?” the former asked.

The ceiling of the temple blew open, interrupting the fight. A squad of Chitauri flew in, accompanied by Thanos on his throne. “It’s so wonderful to see my children playing.” Thanos smiled with malice. “Oh, don’t let me intervene. I merely wanted to observe my girls bonding. After all… the game is not over.” He looked up at the gauntlet. “The Infinity Gauntlet is right there. Which child will be the first to bring it to me? Nebula? …Gamora? …Or, how about you two?” He faced down at Atnor and Anna. “New children of Thanos… FIGHT, and prove which one is superior!”

Atnor looked at his sister, then to Gamora, before facing up at Thanos. He grit his teeth. “I’d rather fight the lazy fat guy in the floating CHAIR!” He shot a beam of lightning from his antenna. It was small and merely tickled the nose of Thanos. When it stopped, the lord’s nose twitched. Atnor shot lightning from his hands, but it came in weak doses. He kept trying until- “Ow!” He fell to his knees. “My chi paths hurt… I had to use the Zip Dash too much.”

Thanos dropped out of his throne, shaking the floor. He was three times taller than a human adult and very intimidating. He approached Atnor, but Annaira jumped in front, aimed her open hands, bent the fingers, and twisted the wrists different ways. She seemed to be clutching hard at an invisible force. Thanos cocked a brow. “What are you doing?”

approached the pyramid. “I’ll do it myself.”

The Mad Titan climbed the pyramid and claimed the golden gauntlet. It fit perfectly over his left hand. He balled his fist and viewed the knuckles, noting its empty spaces. “It feels… empty. But not for long… Soon, the Infinity Stones will be mine, and I will control reality!” He raised his fist above the tip of the pyramid and SMASHED!!

The impact of the Infinity Gauntlet to the unbreakable stone created a powerful shockwave that shook the entire temple. The others could barely keep on their feet and the temple started to crumble. Anna helped Atnort dodge the falling rock chunks, and when Thanos’ daughters tried to do the same, a huge chunk crushed Nebula’s left arm.

“ACK!” Nebula struggled to push the boulder off. “Father! I am trapped!”

“Nebula!” Gamora rushed to her.

“NO, Gamora!” Thanos roared. “Do not pity the weak!”

Gamora faced Nebula, trapped in a moral dilemma. However, the blue-skinned sister raised her knife and chopped the pinned arm off. “AAAAAAAA!”

A bright light flashed in the sky, and a ray struck the floor of the already-crumbling temple. Annaira hesitated, for Thanos had not read the Pyrameglyph, yet. But she looked at her weakened brother once more, and when the floor was seeing its last moments, Anna lifted Atnort up and jumped into the portal, returning to their universe’s Posiverse.

After the temple was gone and the sisters escaped, Thanos stood on the one remaining platform before the Pyrameglyph.

O Supreme Being of the Universe… Seek the power that you long for… Become invincible… Become a god.

Thanos smirked at the very inspiring message. A dark aura flew from the pyramid into his mighty body. He was ready to seek the Infinity Stones.

Thanos awakened as a DARKNESS. Only 5 more to go.

The Mad Titan looked up at the sky, pondering over the beam of light that took his new children away. “Hmm… Even the boundaries of dimensions… are nothing to the power of Thanos. I will find you again, my children… and destroy all that you cherish.”

Somewhere sometime in Danny Phantom’s world

The Infinity Gauntlet, reduced to a lesser size, lay abandoned on the ground. A wandering ringleader happened to come by it. Baldhead, white skin, and red eyes were his features. He fixed the gauntlet perfectly over his hand. “Saaaaay! That’s not a bad fit!”

The Infinity Gauntlet was known as the Reality Gauntlet, having been found and used by numerous people in this dimension’s history. It was last seen at Final Brain, during the battle with the Brotherhood.

Sam and Tucker ran about, happily sucking ghost villains into their Thermoses, such as Kitty, Hotep-Ra, and Lydia, then suddenly noticed Freakshow. The ghost-wannabe looked angrily at them before using his Reality Gauntlet to turn giant, and the kids gasped and ran before he could stomp on them. Danny and Emily saw this and nodded to each other. Both Halfas flew up toward Freakshow’s face and combined their Ecto Rays, firing directly at the clown’s face and knocking him over. Freakshow growled in anger and used the Reality Gauntlet to transform himself into a hideously, terrifying ghost. However, Danny only looked with disbelief before simply sucking him inside the Fenton Thermos. He then picked up the dropped Reality Gauntlet and tossed it in the air, and Emily fired an Ecto Ray to destroy it.

The Infinity Stones were at a sufficient loss of power because they did not belong in this world. The gauntlet never looked more feeble.

Twenty years later, with the frozen villains free and long gone, the broken pieces of the gauntlet began to move to each other like magnets.

But they knew their original master would return. They would have power again.

Portal Chamber

“You know, there was something about Thanos’ name that struck me as familiar.” Thanatos said. “Do you know what that could be, Medusa?”

“Oh, Thannypoo.” Medusa scratched the snake’s chin. “Do you ever get tired of being a jokester?”

Nerehc, Fi, and the gods looked as Annaira fell out of the portal with Atnort’s arm around her head. “Did you do it?” Nerehc asked.

“We… kinda left before we saw him read it.” Atnort replied.

“Rest assured, he did read it.” Medusa assured. “You did a fine job, you two.”

“How? We didn’t even guide him to it, and his daughters would’ve found the pyramid, anyway.” Annaira reasoned.

“I just wanted to give you a preview.” Medusa smirked. “Thanos is, without a doubt, the most powerful being in that universe. And when the Infinity Stones fall into his grasp… well, by God, even I am afraid!”

“She won’t even get in bed with him!” Thanatos remarked.

Medusa glared and gripped his neck. “Anyway, I’ll come back later with your next mission. Rest up, kiddies. You know what you’re up against.” She vanished in a Dark Portal.

“Hm… Was Thanos really as powerful as she says?” Nerehc asked.

“He really just sat on a chair most of the time.” Atnort said. “But he’s got a hell of a way raising kids. Speaking of which… why did you save me, Anna?”

“Stupid Atnort. You’re my brother, aren’t you? Someone needs to make sure you don’t lightningbend irrepressibly.”

“Yeah, well… you have weird-looking boogers.”

“At least all I have to do is one swift motion of the hand and waterbend them out. Yours just sticks with static electricity.”

“You just be careful what you touch when we get home.” The two giggled.

“Awww.” Nerehc smiled. “They really do love each other.”
Ghirahim smiled at the readers and winked.

“Still… do you think we should’ve brought those two with us?” Atnort asked.

“Why the hell would we? Those two were insane!”

“So are we, Anna! Don’t you think they would’ve behaved a bit differently if we… got them away from Thanos?”

“I doubt it.” Annaira looked away with a frown. “After all… I still want Aluben back.”

“…I do, too… but compared to Thanos, Aluben is alright to be around.”

Lunaria; Twinkle Park

“Oooooooo!” Diwata waved her hands and moaned in a ghostly fashion. “I’m bluuuuuuuuue! So bluuuuuuuuue!”

Her Sector RZ friends stared at her with disbelief. “We see that. You aren’t dead.” Lee said.

“WE WANT A BLUE MAN GROUP!” Donna shouted angrily.

“Either we see dancing blue people or we’re bashing heads!” Sonny threatened.

“I can’t believe I didn’t see that girl following me.” Lapis sighed. “She should’ve definitely gotten lost in the Lunar Field.”

“But the fact is she is Lunarian.” Arlon reminded, still holding Crest. “Not that anyone else has noticed. When a Lunarian mates with a different species, their descendants inherit the skin color of that species. But when exposed to water, the element with the greatest connection to Moon Chi, their blueness shows. Age rates can vary among hybrids.”

“Well, we knew Dee-Dee since we were little.” Lulu replied. “Age isn’t a factor.”

“If I may ask, who are Miss Diwata’s relatives?”

“Her mom’s name is Flordeluna.” Leanne answered. “A name that is… a dead giveaway when you think about it. But this part’s weird, her dad’s name is Bruce Uno—and he looks exactly like this other man called Bruce Farley! Even Uncle Nigel wasn’t sure if he was related to him.”

“Our theory is that Bruce Uno is from a parallel universe, transported to ours due to Arceus’s temporal distortion 20 years ago.” Denny explained.

“The temporal distortion?” Lapis asked, stupefied. “A man from a parallel universe?”

“Indeed, Lapis.” Arlon agreed. “As outlandish as their story sounds… there may yet be truth to it.”

“Oh derp, did we accidentally confirm a prophecy?” Leanne asked.

“Our Lunarians have always anticipated the birth and arrival of the Tenth Firstborn, Crest of the Moon. But a Firstborn is not whole without its Mortal Guardian. And it was told that Crest’s Firstborn Guardian would be one born of Lunarian blood, shared with the blood of one who hails beyond space’s boundaries. I believe this translates to dimensional boundaries.”

“So you’re saying Diwata is the Firstborn Guardian?!” Lee exclaimed.
“The timing behind this could not be more random.” Denny commented.

“Random or not, her duty is imperative.” Arlon continued. “Moon Chi is a very powerful energy, and the amount Crest possesses is so great, it’s devastating. His Guardian must teach him to use it wisely, and make wise use of her powers.”

“But Diwata has firebending, not moonbending!” Lee argued.

“Actuallyyyyy not really.” Diwata lit her hands with sapphire flames. “Moon Fire is kinda different from fire fire. It’s only red as a disguise. It represents the anger or ‘hotheadedness’ of my Moon Chi.”

“Just how good are you at moonbending?” Leanne asked.

“Uhhh, almost decent… could be better.” she said quietly with a white blush.

“If she is the Guardian, she needs to claim Crest soon.” Lapis stated. “The Apocalypse is coming, and Lunaria will be the first to go.”

“What do you mean?” asked Denny.

“The Apocalypse will happen when the moons fail to contain the Netherverse’s energy and explode, destroying all in their range. But with Crest’s power, maybe we have a chance. He can keep the moons from exploding.”

“You mean there might be a way to stop the Apocalypse?!” Leanne exclaimed. “What about the Twenty Keys?”

“It is only a presumption, children!” Arlon stressed. “Regardless, I am certain Master Crest’s role in the universe is a great one. And to think our meeting transpires during such a time… it must be fate.”

“Then I’ll do it!” Diwata proclaimed. “I’ll become Crest’s Guardian, and together, we’ll save the universe from-!”

“DAAAAAH I can’t stand this grown-up stuff anymore! !” Crest leapt out of Arlon’s grasp and flew away.

“Master Crest! Please come back!” Arlon cried.

“I’ll catch him!” Lapis flew after.

“What got into him?” Lee asked.

“Sigh… Master Crest is still a newborn of the Firstborn. His mind has yet to process and mature.”

“At least he knows more than Manaphy.” Leanne mentioned. “And he had 20 years.”

Crest didn’t go far, only hiding behind the short mount where a park tree was planted. Lapis stood on the edge of the mount and looked down at him. He was blending with the crescent moon rocks.

“You didn’t go far.”

“Go away, I’m sulking!”

Lapis sat in front of him. “Is it the Apocalypse that has you so worried?”
“NO! I mean, YES! It’s just, I didn’t ask to be a Firstborn! I just wanted to fly around and eat food! But NOOOO! Red Eye Guy’s holding me captive because guys will KIDNAP me, Big Mustache Guy says I need to mind my MANNERS, because I’m a MOON PRINCE, and I’m two freaking Earth years old!”

“Believe me, I understand! I know what it’s like to be forced doing something you don’t wanna do. And I think what some people seem to forget is… you may be a god, but you have a soul, too. You’re only a child. Like, when people think of the Firstborn, they think of the most powerful beings in the universe, a source of unlimited power, they think of you as just… objects. But…” Lapis felt the urge to reach back and touch her gem, “you’re not objects, and you’re not just gods, either. You’re people who have feelings and… know how to learn.”

“I always wondered what the other Firstborn were like. You ever met them?”

“I only met one. And he, heh heh heh!” Lapis grinned, but then looked sheepishly, “he was somethin’.”

“I’LL tell ya what Crest needs!” Diwata jumped up on the mount. “To just JUMP AROUND the moon and have FUUUUUN!” She leaped very high and slowly came down. “Come on, Crest, let’s play! Put aside that boring god stuff for a day and be a kid!”

“AWESOME!”

“YEEEEAAAHH!” Dee-Dee grabbed Crest and leapt away.

A seaside cliff (Play “Twilight Terror Intro” from Donkey Kong: Tropical Freeze! (Don’t let the name fool you, it’s gorgeous.))

“Tell me, Wendy.” Vaati spoke as he and his daughter stared at the moonlit ocean’s horizon. “When you are running across endless fields under endless skies… do you not long to see if that horizon has an end? To keep running as the air always flows through your lungs?”

“I never really thought about it before… but I guess I would like to find out.”

“Don’t you think everyone should be allowed to view this marvel? But when oceans block our way, people are forced to rent boats. And this beautiful planet is hidden from the universe. If more people could be free to breathe this planet’s air, set foot on this soil…! That reminds me!” Vaati faced her. “When I arrived, I got this outfit for you to wear.” He waved his wand, casting magic glitter over Wendy. Her yellow- and blue-striped dress morphed into an indigo dress with stars, a yellow crescent moon on the chest, and a half-moon pattern around the bottom edge. Her shoes were gone, leaving only the winged bracelets around her ankles.

Wendy twirled gracefully, smiling at her pretty new dress. She jumped very high, and as the low gravity slowed her descent, she spun around in the air like a fairy ballerina. She landed twirling on the toes of one foot. She came to a stop and said with a great smile, “I love it! I feel so happy right now, Dad!”

“I knew you would be. The feeling in your heart you are experiencing right now… it is freedom. It is the most wonderful feeling in the universe. When you feel like you are able to do anything… and with magic, you can. That’s why I fell in love with, not just magic, but the universe, sought to learn everything I could. I know that you feel the same. Dr. Facilier writes to me about how excited you get when you learn something new.”

“I really do!” Wendy grinned. “And I do want to learn a lot! I wonder if I’ll ever know as much as “It will take some time… but trying to teach you all I know on magic is only a small part. There is more. There are many things I believe in, Wendy. Freedom is one, but I also have strong faith in reincarnation. Do you know what that is?”

“Y-Yes, it’s… being reborn as somebody else?”

“Correct. The idea that you and I were completely different people in a past life. But I’m not talking about who we were a thousand years ago… I am talking about who we were in another dimension.”

“Another dimension?”

“Very old texts depict the idea that our very universe is the center of a Dimensional Fusion, the molding of many alternate universes and their people. Just about every person in this realm could have existed in another universe, with entirely different lives, including you and me.”

“Does that mean… you and I aren’t related?”

“In this universe and its timeline, we are father and daughter, but I’m saying there are versions of us who existed in other universes, and the gods of old have taken those people, and made them denizens of this one. No one knows what our original selves were like—perhaps I could have still been a wind mage, but you and I have no connection at all; I may not exist in your universe, I might have had a completely different personality. But I believe that our lives in those other worlds play a key effect with our lives here. I may not have been a revolutionary in that other world…” Vaati stared at his hand, “but perhaps I had revolutionary qualities. It leaves so much to wonder.”

“How do you know all of this?”

“In the Spirit World, there is a deity called the Chronicler. He lives on an island where, to speak with him, one of each main bender type, plus Time and Space, must work together. His trials were primarily set for the Avatar & Negatar; apparently either one gets Time and Space every few generations. Anyway, I and some friends of mine braved those trials and spoke with him. He possessed a very ancient text describing this Fusion, and knowledge beyond. Would you like to hear something amazing, Wendy?” He spoke this last part with concealed enthusiasm.

“S-Sure!”

Vaati walked forward, knelt to her eye-level, and placed hands on her shoulders. There was great excitement and desire in his voice. “There is a legend that tells of Twenty Keys: Seven Lights and Thirteen Darknesses. These keys can open a door to a dimension that existed before our own. It was from that dimension, the foundation of this one was formed, by ordinary mortals.”

“I think I know about that! Dr. Facilier and Lee talk about the quest.”

“Then you must also know about the Apocalypse destined to destroy this universe.”

“Y…Yes?…” Wendy was saddened.

“I understand your remorse. This universe is doomed, Wendy, but if this door were opened, we can go to that world, and design a brand new universe! Do you know what that means?”

“We can save everyone?!” she exclaimed with bright eyes.
“Better! It means we can design a brand new world to our liking! Create a balance even the gods never knew! We’re the gods, Wendy! That power, greater than Logia, is in our hand! Creating a world… a world of wind.”

“Wind?…” That sounded like a very odd desire.

“I mean, yes, all elements are equally important, but I always believed that wind… succeeded. What I want, what I always desired, for you, Wendy… is freedom. I want to create a world without the annoyance of governments, rules, borders; gods even. Every soul, every being in the universe will possess absolute freedom, like a Spirit World on Earth. I want this, not just for you, but for your friends, ALL the future generations! I abandoned you at that orphanage to give you freedom from parentage, let you see what it means to roam free, but now that you’re with me, I want you to help me realize that dream! Won’t you?”

His eye was trembling with excitement. Wendy was frightened a little. “But… true freedom… how will that work? I like running around and all, but… If we didn’t have rules, bad people would be free to do bad things, no one would stop anyone from fighting. U-Unless you mean to establish a morality system with creating it.”

“No, that’s the thing! We’ll create the universe, place the people inside, but from there it’s on them. I want every person to live with absolute freedom, feeling no pressuring ties with gods who might be watching. Any life that they decide should be their decision, not a king’s, not even parents. I will create a world where everyone knows the freedom that I—that YOU knew. You will never be hunted anymore, Wendy, the World Government will have no say. Join me in destroying them, so we may accomplish that dream.”

“D-Destroy them? But what do THEY have to do with this?”

“They are trying to interfere with us, they only want a world of law and rule. THEIR law. To find true freedom, we must sacrifice, and since they try to rob us of freedom, we must destroy them. Then, in death, they will understand. Wendy, why wouldn’t you want this? They, who’ve been trying to take your freedom, capture you.”

“I know, and I’m angry at them for it! But I never wanted to have freedom… at least, not exactly. I wanted a family—I wouldn’t have cared if they set up some rules as long as they loved me. Running around everywhere, seeing the world… It really is a lot of fun, but seeing all those children with friends and families… made me feel empty. I really don’t like fighting or hurting people, but I don’t agree with you OR the Government. I…I think there needs to be a balance.”

“Indeed, it was the gods that designed the original Balance of Light vs. Darkness. But if we were the gods, we could establish our own Balance. A wise airbender named Guru Laghima once said ‘New growth cannot commence without the destruction of the old.’ I believe the Apocalypse represents this belief. The Apocalypse will destroy the universe, giving us the chance to recreate it anew. Recreate it… better.”

“But the Apocalypse will kill everyone we love. I don’t want that to happen.”

“It will not kill everyone… If nothing else, we will rescue the young generations, and I will teach them what true freedom means. They will help me in creating this free universe, and they will have you to guide them also.”

“I just don’t know, Dad. There’s going to be bad people that will abuse their freedom, abuse it by hurting people.”
“And with nothing to hold them down, those people will fight back!”

“So everyone’s fighting each other! I don’t want a world like that!”

“You need not fear, Wendy, because in a world of true freedom, there will be no need for conflict. Everybody will be happy, and it will be thanks to us.”

“You sound very ascertained.” They turned around as Carla walked out from behind her stalagmite. “But for someone who boasts about freedom and detaching children from their parentage, you have an awful lot of expectations for your daughter.”

“Carla!” Wendy said in slight surprise. “How did you find us?”

“I ran after you… Not easy for someone without wings.”

“Well, regrettably, I have my own limitations in my teachings.” Vaati blushed. “I want my daughter to act freely and not feel burdened by me… but I want to avow my philosophy to everyone. Once I do, everybody will desire to pursue their dreams, feeling no fear in doing so. I truly believe it is the right way, and Wendy can understand as well.”

“Well, that is a brighter way of looking at it…” Wendy smiled. “I guess everyone deserves to be who they wanna be… It’s just…”

“It’s just there has to be some limitations.” Carla said with paws on her hip. “Parents, for instance, have a responsibility to raise and protect their children.”

“A house pet wouldn’t know anything about freedom, I suppose.” Vaati shrugged. “But perhaps you can learn a few things, too.”

“Maybe we should just not talk about it.” Wendy suggested. “I was having a good time… I wanna just enjoy the planet.”

“You’re right, Dear.” Vaati smiled. “I’m sorry for jumping into this so quickly. Perhaps we should look for Dr. Facilier and your friends. Would you like to race?”

“Heh heh, sure!” Wendy beamed. “Hold on tight, Carla!” She picked her kitten up and joined her father on the imaginary start line. …A shadow fell over them. They looked up, seeing a fleet of ships with red “R”s painted on their hulls. “What’re those?”

“Not of this world.” Vaati glared. “In fact… I feel a disturbing power.”

Twinkle Park

Arlon treated the kids to Blue Moon Ice Cream, which packed a taste like blueberries that were plucked from the sky… according to Diwata’s first reaction. Lulu and Leanne were sitting on a park bench and watching the others play. Lee Andrew and Denny were playing Dodge Moon with the local Lunarian kids, and Diwata, Crest, and Lapis were playing with the Ice Climbers in the snow, which was conjured by the latter. “Well, Crest came out of that fast.” Leanne noticed.

“Well, he’s like the moon.” Lulu figured. “He changes a lot! Mood swings and all.”

“I guess so.” Leanne laughed. “You know… I think I understand why Arceus made the Firstborn kids.”

“Why?”
“To show us that the gods aren’t much different from us.” The Ice Climbers dressed Crest up like a snowman, and Diwata tried to eat him like a snowcone. They laughed. “I mean, when you take away the part about them being supremely powerful beings who created the universe, the gods are… basically human…ish.”

“Not very.” Lulu said. The girls laughed. “But still, do you really think Crest could stop the Apocalypse?”

“Not really… If he could, then there would be no point to this Twenty Keys thing. But it will be nice to have another Firstborn on our side.”

“You know, our parents say Jirachi was the original Kids Next Door operative. If he is, then maybe the Firstborn were the… original KND sector. Sector First!”

“You might be right! And after all these years, they’re still part of the team!”

“And now Crest can join that team!”

Dr. Facilier lay under a nearby tree, growing drowsy and smiling from the noise of the carefree children. He looked at the stars and could only see Wendy’s vibrant smile. I’m sure you’re happy right now, too. Finally found yo’ dad. …I guess you won’t want me for a teacher, anymore. Oh well… Have to learn to let go, I guess.

Sonny and Donna gave Crest their Blue Moons, and the Firstborn stuffed both ice cream chunks in his mouth, earning laughs from his friends. He might have been a Firstborn… but he was a person all the same. He wondered if his Firstborn brethren felt the same, if they casually interacted with mortal children because they were the same. They were carefree children in a carefree world, and even if they were mortal, he was glad to be among them. (End song. :()

It wasn’t long before the peace was ruined by the roaring engines of ships surrounding the park. “Prepare for trouble, you know peace doesn’t last!”

“Make it double, it goes away fast!”

“All the way across the galaxy!”

“It’s time we realize our destiny!”

The roof of the flagship opened, and out came Jessie, James, Cassidy, and Butch in gorgeous indigo dresswear that made them blend in with the night. “Oh, but what is it that I see?” sang Jessie. “Little twerps, and I think they might pee!”

“I smell a fragrant scent in the air.” James whiffed his rose. “Perhaps the new parfume in my hair.”

“Maybe we’ll give them a pretty song.” Cassidy smirked. “I don’t see what could go wrong.”

“I think that you’re right.” Butch followed. “We’ll sing with all our love and might!”

Meowth jumped in front. “But we’ll save it for next chapter! Gooooood NIGHT!”

“WOOOOB-buffet!”

“Chiitiitiiime!”
So yeah, shout out to my anonymous wiki commenter who wanted to see some Atnort/Annaira bonding. ’Course, they thought it would be during Yellow Diamond, but that ended up not happening, but then I remembered Thanos! XD Two Darknesses are alien invaders, two Darknesses are pirates… you connecting the dots? XD Specifically, this Thanos comes from the Marvel Cinematic Universe. Also, lazy author uses Zelda monsters in a Marvel universe. XP And may I just say, Tropical Freeze music tears at my heartstrings. 3X Next time, Team Rocket rocks the moon with the Logia of Logias! ;D Later!

Chapter Summary

In order to use the Lunar Magic, Diwata Uno must make a sacrifice.

Last time, Team Rocket showed up. And I think they were gonna sing for us. Let’s watch!

Chapter B-28: Change

Lunaria; Twinkle Park

We hail from Team Rocket

We have come to join the fight!

The universe is darkness

But we will make it light!

“James!”

“Cassidy!”

“Butch!”

“This is random.” Lee said.

Meowth made a pose alongside Sonny and Donna, who crossed their hammers. “Meooowwth, that’s riitiitght—WHO THE HECK ARE YOU TWO?!”

“We want in, too!” they sang.

“We’re screeeewwwwed!”

Both twins crashed at different times, contributing to the rhythm. Jessie sang the next line.

Love is justice, which is evil

A common trick, a con!

We’re the stars, don’t you see?

Today’s our day of Pokémon!

James sang with a charming voice:
If you think your dreams are real
Then reality will be nightmare
Soon, we will have command

Here! Watch me open a flower!

James waved his fingers over a closed red flower and made it bloom.

Spotlights hit the hatch behind them. A muscular cyborg was the one to rise, John-Plank 20x40. The cyborg turned as Plank sang in his magnificent British accent.

Does my voice… not make you swooooon? (Ooooo!)

A chorus of female Planks sang to him.

Do you wish to seek solace from foreseeable dooooom? (Ooooooo!)

Well, we are here to put an end to your gloom!

Take shelter, under my fragrant parfuuuuuume!

Plank made sexy poses and sprayed himself with Marker Perfume, which made him smell like different-colored markers. He bent Johnny’s robot arms behind him and shook his hip to further boaster his sexy appeal. With that, all the Rocket Agents sang together.

TEAM ROCKET’S ROCKIN’

Talkin’ trouble, walkin’ trouble

BIG trouble’s gonna foooollow you!

TEAM ROCKET’S (‘Rockin’!’ sang Jessie.)

Prepare for trouble, make it double

’Cause BIG trouble’s gonna fooooolow you!

Without warning, John-Plank shot his extendo arms, snatched Crest, and pulled him away from the kids’ grasp. Lapis Lazuli flew up to take him back, but John-Plank made a terrific leap into the low-gravity air.

“We’re gonna catch the Firrrrstborn, toooooooo.” The cyborg flipped in midair during descent, and surprised Lapis with an electric net when he came back around. The Fairy Princess lay powerless and trapped in the painful net as John-Plank made land on their flagship.

“IT’S TEAM ROCKET!” Leanne exclaimed. “They’re bad guys who try to steal other peoples’ Pokémon! HA! Now I got to say it, too. Beat THAT, Aurora!”

“Who ARE YOU unruly rapscallions?!” Arlon demanded.

“Your new rulers!” Giovanni’s throne lowered from a bottom hatch, his loyal Persian by his side. “I was the first person to see Crest after Sunni Chariton created him. I had been watching the girl for some time, curious on the extent of her psychic power. The fact she was even able to conjure a Firstborn… it seemed unreal to me. But his anatomy was so much like one… so I thought, if anyone knew, it would be the Lunarians.”

“What traitorous Lunarian would tell you anything about Master Crest?”

“YOU, Mr. Arlon.” Giovanni smirked. “Did you think your Lunar Sanctum crashing to the earth would go unnoticed? It was clearly Lunarian technology, so I scoured its ruins. Not only did I find old tomes that told of the arrival of Crest… I was able to come by the person who guided me here today!”

Arlon gasped, horrified. “You can’t mean…”

Jessie and James performed a drumroll, while Cassidy and Butch waved Pompoms. “Making his FIRST public appearance in over 8,000 years,” Meowth announced, “we are PROUD to introduce the living legend! The one… the only… ACNOLOGIA!”

Another hatch opened on the bottom of the ship, dropping a figure to the indigo ground. It was a man with long, spiky white hair and black pants. Dr. Facilier gazed at him with great curiosity. Lee and Leanne exchanged glances and were about to approach- “Keep away, children!” Arlon cautioned. “This man is beyond your years. …But then again, so is he…”

John-Plank stuffed Crest inside a glass capsule before extracting a controller. Under his control, Acnologia pushed himself up with his single left arm. The kids braced their guard when he was up on his feet. His muscular tan skin was burned in several places and he had blue dragon tattoos. His sharp blue eyes shot to Arlon, who flinched. “Let them rip.” Giovanni commanded.

“RAAAAAH!” Acnologia tackled Arlon, snapping one of his arms off with his teeth and yanking the other arm off with his hand.

“DAD!!” Lapis cried.

Logia kicked Arlon away, and Dr. Facilier cast quick spells from his Devil’s Wand. The shots didn’t phase Logia’s Logia body. The moonbender leapt and kicked Facilier 50 yards away. Lee Andrew blasted him with his G.U.M.Z.O.O.K.A., accompanied by his shadow’s… even Sonny and Donna weren’’t amused by the simple gumballs. Acnologia snarled and stomped toward the boy. Lee gulped, fearing he would disintegrate by the simple touch.

Vaati appeared faster than the wind and threw Lee away, then dodged Logia’s attack with the same speed. “Lee, I got you!” Wendy jumped and caught her friend.

“Thanks, Wendy! And love the new outfit!”

“Ha ha!”

“I wish her father would give her shoes back.” Carla stated.

“CAAAARLAAAAA!” Smitten with love at the female kitten, Meowth jumped off the ship and sprinted toward her. “Fate has brought us together ag-!”

Carla KICKED him in the face. “Brought my foot to your face, more like!”

“So hard-boiled!” He fell over, flushing madly.

“I can’t believe it!” Vaati stared wide at the man before him. “The living legend… Is it really you, Acnologia?”
Sonny and Donna froze Lapis’s electric net and broke her free. “Back when my friends and I formed the Fairy Sisters, Acnologia was revived as a zombie by Zeref.” Lapis explained. “But I thought he was destroyed with the other ones?”

“I was astonished when I conducted my autopsy on him.” Plank explained. “His body still contained life force, and it was not as decayed as it should have been, given the ages. And so we sought to revive him… and control him at that. Like a Frankenweenie, hm hm hm.” Acnologia growled at the cyborg. “The way he pounces and snarls, you wouldn’t think he was ever-”

Acnologia threatened to blast him with a Lunar Beam—“OOOAAAARRRGGH!” Plank shocked him with the microbots.

“To keep your soul bound to your body for thousands of years… you were a wizard like no other, Mr. Logia.” Giovanni said. “But while you may have been the ruler of your era, THIS era belongs to Team Rocket!”

“It belongs to NO ONE!” Vaati roared. “How DARE you steal the freedom of this passed soul! You vile scum!”

“Ack! It’s da Man Wit’ the Red Eye!” Meowth panicked.

“The Revolutionary!” Giovanni realized. “I haven’t seen him in person since he killed President Osborn. Acnologia, destroy him!”

John-Plank controlled the Logia and made him slash his claw at Vaati, but the wind mage took to the air and faced Team Rocket. The agents yelped and braced each other when Vaati lunged at them, but John-Plank shot a ball that projected an electric barrier with a chi-block, zapping Vaati and blowing him back. “I never like to use my Chi Shield in a fair fight, but against a powerful opponent like yourself, I will make exceptions.”

Acnologia jumped, grabbed Vaati’s leg, and slammed him to the ground. Logia raised his arm and charged energy, but Vaati turned into a tornado and spun him around. “ROOAAAR!” The tornado dispersed due to Logia’s bellow. Seeing all the children surrounding him, Acnologia clutched the ground and increased the gravity, forcing everyone to lay flat. The pressure only grew, and they thought they would pop like grapes in seconds. “AAAAAHH!” Logia was shocked by Plank.

“You will have your fun in time, Acnologia.” Giovanni promised. “But we have other items on our agenda. Take us to the Night Palace where the Lunar Magic rests. Then, you may destroy Lunaria as you see fit.”

Acnologia sprouted a pair of massive, black dragon wings. He shot a murderous glare to Team Rocket before taking off in the desired direction. “We’ll drop our Pokémon off in case those kids follow us!” Butch suggested as the ships followed Logia’s direction.

“Teddiursa, keep them busy for a while!” Cassidy tossed her teddybear-size Pokémon out of its ball.

“Urrrrse?” The adorable creature touched a finger to its chin.

“Awww, aren’t you a cutie!” Denny approached Teddiursa. “I dunno if they planned to distract us with adorableness, but it almost-” “URSA!” It grabbed Denny and slammed him back and forth. “URS! (“Ow!”) Urs! (“Ah!”) URS! (“YOW!”) URSAAAA!” The bear spun around and hurled Denny yards away. “Ursa?” It faced the others curiously.

“Dad!” Lapis grabbed her father’s arms and stuck them to their appropriate places. She used waterbending to heal the cracks. “Dad, are you okay?”

“I will be fine, Lapis… cough! Leave me be! You must rescue Master Crest!”

“But how will I fight Acnologia?”

“I will help you.” Vaati avowed. “I am a Logia and I use Haki. It will be my speed against his strength. Would you join me, Wendy?”

“Against that monster?!” Carla exclaimed. “Absolutely not!”

“I did not ask you, Cat!”

“But Dad, I can’t fight a wizard as powerful as Acnologia!” Wendy said doubtfully. “Isn’t there something we can do?”

“Dad, how was Acnologia defeated the first time?” Lapis asked.

“In exchange for my loyalty to Viridi, she persuaded Celebi to fight the monster. I fear we may need the aid of a Firstborn in this fight. But Crest is the only one available. If Miss Diwata truly is the Firstborn Guardian, then she must retrieve the Spirit Ball in Crescent Canyon.”

“(For a planet as big as this, they can only have so many locations with moon names.)” Lee commented.

“But doesn’t Dee have to learn some kind of important moral to awaken as a Guardian?” Lulu questioned. “Or at least complete a trial?”

“We don’t have TIME for TRIAAAALS!” Diwata whined, shaking her arms. “We gotta get the ball and beat up Acneloogy!”

“Cough!” Arlon hacked. “I do not know if certain requirements must be met… For now, you must venture across Crescent Canyon and collect the Spirit Ball. Perhaps then you will be recognized as the Guardian.”

“But I don’t know where that is!”

“Use this!” Vaati handed her a golden compass with a round glass case over the needle. “You must focus your desire to find the Spirit Ball into this Grand Compass. It will point you in the right direction.”

“Okay. Mmmmm…!” Diwata narrowed her eyes at the compass and repeated the phrase in her mind, I want to find the Spirit Ball, gimme the Spirit Ball! Eventually, the needle was set in a specific direction.

“Do you need me to run and carry you there?” Wendy asked.

“Meanwhile, you have a date with Daddy!” Donna winked.

“Incest is a sin!” both chorused. “And we go!” They grabbed Dee-Dee and surfed across the landscape on an ice path.

“Are you sure you don’t need my help, Dad?” Lapis asked with worry.
“Yes, Lapis, I assure you my injuries are the least of my concerns! Just go save Crest! Hurry!”

Lapis growled; she hated to have to leave her father again, after being away for thousands of years. But for the sake of saving her world from a terrible fate, she stretched her wings and flew to the Night Palace.

“Wendy, will you come?” Vaati held a hand to her. “Will you save this world with me?”

“Do you really think I’m… ready to fight by you, Dad?”

Vaati smiled. “I do.”

“…Then I will!” Wendy grabbed her father’s hand. Vaati tossed her up on his back and flew across the moonlit valleys.

“CHILD, YOU FORGOT ME AGAIN!” Carla shouted furiously. “Just because you found someone NEW to carry you, I think I deserve a ride on YOUR back!”

“I was left behind too, Carla!” Meowth put his arm around her. “Let’s be abandoned together!” Carla glared at him.

Next second, Meowth’s arms were pulled behind him as Carla pressed him against the ground. “Just what are your criminal friends after?!”

“Aaaaack, they’re after the Lunar Magic! It’s this planet’s power source, da boss was gonna use it to catch all the other Firstborn!”

“Well, we can’t just stand here, we need to help Wendy, too!” Lee shouted.

“After Diwata gets the Spirit Ball, she’ll need a lift to where they are!” Leanne reasoned. “Let’s go to the C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. and be ready to get her.”

“Good idea. I really hope Crest can beat him…”

As soon as the kids had left, Dr. Facilier cast magic strings to link Arlon’s arms back to his body. “That should hold you for a while.” The doctor said as he lifted him to his feet.

“I have dreaded the possibility Acnologia could return…” Arlon reflected. “I confined his slow-decaying body in my Lunar Sanctum for 8,000 years. I hoped his body was lost in the sanctum’s destruction… What a fool I was.”

“Have these operatives faced a monster like Acnologia? I would be hopeful if the chap who defeated Viridi were here, but he is not. What does this entourage have to its name? What of your student?”

“You just have to have faith. We’re going to save Lunaria and those kids are gonna help. Don’t forget who it was that defeated you last time.”

“I was beaten by a clown.”

Act 2: Crescent Canyon

Diwata and the Ice Climbers made a moon leap to a tall pillar over the canyon abyss, leapt to another one that was under a cliff, then leapt to that cliff. However, there was a Moon Medal floating in the trench between the two footholds, so Diwata dropped down to grab it, Wall Jumped out of the trench, then moon leaped to the cliff. Hooligans – green worms made of separate, outline block segments – bounced around the small field. Sonny and Donna had fun and knocked their individual segments off. The path continued above a taller cliff, so the twins each held one end of a rope as Sonny jumped, pulled it, and allowed Donna to fly higher. The female Climber pushed an average-size boulder down for both Dee and Sonny to leap and use the slow-falling rock as a boost to make it up.

The trio had to go up a narrow path where small rocks lit with Moon Fire were bouncing down in perfect rows. They came in stacks of three that bounced on each other at various heights, and when Sonny and Donna attempted to freeze the rocks, their ice proved ineffective. “You silly, icebending doesn’t work on Moon Fire!” Diwata grinned. “You’re just gonna have ta jump!” The three had to study the heights of the moon rocks and make accurate judgments on how high to moon-jump. They didn’t get through without a few bumps to the head, but Diwata was quick to bend the Moon Fire off herself or the twins.

At the end of the path, they had to go between a trench with Longators standing on small ledges – white rectangular creatures who could stretch their necks. The three jumped together, and each of their long necks provided a boost for all three. Naturally, the Longators were far apart and required careful moon jumps. They landed on a path that led down to a field occupied by Lunatones. The crescent-shaped Pokémon used psychic and chucked rocks at the intruders. The kids couldn’t progress due to a large barrier composed of Moon Chi, and there were boulders with crescent-shaped holes.

Sonny and Donna cast ice beams to freeze two Lunatones and have them drop, then they smashed them out of the ice. Dee-Dee shot fireballs at the third Lunatone, and during its stunned moment, she leapt and kicked it to the ground... though when the low-G force didn’t weaken it, the Ice Climbers bashed it with their hammers. The kids stuck the Lunatones into their slots and dropped the barrier. There wasn’t anywhere to jump over the abyss, but a string of Warpids began to materialize. The kids quickly jumped the living energy particles before they would disappear, and with their assistance, the explorers set foot on a cliffside. “Master Floop has taught us well in the ways of animal abuse.” Sonny bowed.

“And since it’s a videogame, it’s both fun AND non-endangering!” Donna beamed. The cliffside path sloped down at a steep angle and would curve up at a ramp, meant to fly them across a long jump to a path. The Ice Climbers froze the path, but since the low gravity wouldn’t allow for enough momentum, Diwata sat down, and Sonny hit her like a hockey puck, sliding her down with enough force for her to fly up to the path. The Climbers blasted ice behind them to boost down and fly up, too. They had to fight past some Lunatones before coming to a row of water spouts leading across the chasm.

Sonny and Donna froze the tops of the spouts into a path, but mini flame comets were raining down and steadily melting the ice. The group hurriedly jumped across, taking some hits from the comets, and Dee was able to grab a Moon Medal and make it to the end before the ice completely melted. The next challenge involved several small platforms that were frozen in red ice. Diwata’s personal Moon Fire couldn’t melt them, but the flames from the nearby torches could suffice.
After jumping the small platforms, they arrived at a field frozen in spiky red ice, with some Moon Torches placed. Diwata bent the fire to burn a path through the ice, but she was forced to go in the directions of other Moon Torches. There were creatures called Brr Bits – small floating red ice volcanoes – that kept refreezing the path, so Diwata had to shoot Moon Fire to melt them. They eventually made it to a safe foothold, overlooking another red ice field, but this time larger flame comets were raining down and burning spaces for them to jump. They did so before Brr Bits could freeze the spots, and the road would bring them to a towering wall of red ice.

Diwata used her bending to catch the meteorites and chuck them at the barrier, the ice steaming as chunks of it began to collapse. After fifteen strikes, the red ice wall crumbled completely, exposing the altar within the mountain. The trio moon leaped over the chasm and set foot on the base before stylishly leaping up the thin stairs. The top of the altar was surrounded by pillars with busts depicting phases of the moon. Under the bust of the full moon, which was glowing, sat a Pokéball that was whitish-blue and had crater markings. (End song.)

“Dat dada daaaahhh!” Diwata raised the Pokéball in victory. “I got a Pokébaaaaall!”

“Your journey as an eternal 10-year-old starts now!” The twins cheered.

A white glow appeared in the sky. Diwata, Sonny, and Donna gazed at the majestic light as the Moon Goddess, Cresselia appeared in all her beauty. “Firstborn Guardian of the Moon… you are mere moments from learning your destiny. To claim the Firstborn and mark yourself as the Guardian… you must master the Lunar Magic that powers this world. But as the moon is a body of change… only one who knows great change can possess the Power of Moon.” She ascended to the sky and the light was gone.

There was a roaring of an engine, and a C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. now occupied the space above. “There you are, Dee-Dee! We tracked your communicator!” Leanne yelled. “Did you find the Spirit Ball?”

“Cool, then let’s get going to the Night Palace!” Lee declared. “Acnologia’s not destroying ANY planets tonight!”

“ALL RIIIIIGHT! LET’S GO!”

Night Palace

The Night Palace was a huge Arabian-style palace of shiny blue color, suspended above a deep crater. The Team Rocket fleet had arrived, flying over the top tower. “HAAA!” Lapis Lazuli slashed large blades of water and destroyed a few ships, but when Giovanni’s crew saw her sights locked on them, John-Plank commanded Acnologia to fly over and kick her out of the sky. She landed on a palace walkway, quickly recovering and shooting up as a water drill, but Logia easily batted her away with his wings. Rocket Agents sent Nidoqueen and Nidoking to grab the Fairy Princess.

Wendy and Vaati made it to the edge of the crater and saw the conflict from below. “Wendy, I’m going to challenge Acnologia! Find the Lunar Magic and protect it, and attack any Rocket Agent you see!”

“I WILL, Father!” Wendy declared with pure confidence. “I’ll do everything I can to STOP them!”

“You’ve come so far, Wendy. I can’t wait to join you even further!” The wind mage shot up to Acnologia and laid a storm of fast Haki kicks. Wendy leapt down to the bridge to Night Palace and raced forth. (Play “Unawakening Float” from Sonic and the Secret Rings!)

Act 3: Night Palace

Wendy sidestepped the Thunder Shocks cast by Rocket Agents’ Magnemites, and at the end of the bridge, the mage had to jump across a series of Magnemites to a platform. Wendy ran across a glass walkway whose various segments were being shattered by Skarmory shooting up from below, but after dodging their holes, Wendy ran up a stairway that winded left. On this new path, giant spears flew out of portals from afar in attempt to pierce Wendy, but she jumped on them, ran up, and jumped to the next until she could make the moon leap into a palace entrance.

Absols stood on pillars and lashed crescent beams at Wendy, who dodged and cast the Leg-Locker Spell to bring them off their feet. She cast stun spells at the two Rocket Agents on jetpacks before going up some stairs to a new hall. The floor vanished, but Wendy quickly jumped on an energy rail to grind across, setting foot on the opposite floor as she ran through a doorway. This room provided an illusion of a dimension of moons, and when the path ended, Wendy jumped to a moon and ran loops over it, able to do so using the mini moon’s gravity. She had to jump to a higher moon, then a moon on the right, then Wendy could jump to a stable platform.

Quilavas shot fire at her from the stairs, but Wendy cast Aguamenti to defeat the Fire-types. The stairs curved left and led Wendy to a path of floating, vertically-turning pillars. The pillars had rails on each side for Wendy to grind on, and had to jump pillars before she either rolled off or the pillars turned too high for her to land on them. After clearing this section, a doorway brought her outside the normal palace, where Wendy ran up some stairs before hitting a spring, which bounced her to two other springs that would land her on a round palace roof.

Wendy ran three laps around the roof before a magic blue path appeared to take her higher up the palace. Wendy was set on a platform, and using moon leaps, she jumped to other such platforms that were all distant. A group of Gulpins tried to gulp her on one of them, but she kept their hunger satisfied by casting Avis, sending birds in their mouths. The next platform was further, but two Magnemites were available for her to bounce on. Wendy stunned two Rocket Agents, then she had to leap and Air Boost to a new foothold and go up stairs into the palace.

A narrow stairway winded up the massive vacant tower, and Wendy jumped the Donphans rolling down. The tower’s space seemed to stretch before her eyes, and the stairs shifted in angle when Wendy was suddenly running up the tower’s wall. Rocket Agents were screaming and falling due to a change in their own perspective, and Wendy decided to stun each one she passed by. The space stretched up as Wendy ran on the ceiling, but only for a few seconds before she ran into a warp. She was outside and running across a bridge to the highest tower of the palace, and inside was another winding stairwell. A column of blue energy was in the center of the tower, and as Wendy neared to the top, she believed she would see its core. (End song.)

Vaati kicked Acnologia three times across the face with Armament Haki, flew away when he slashed his claw, then returned with a Screw Kick that sent Logia into a palace tower. A Lunar Beam shot out of the wreckage, Vaati swiftly dodged, then Logia shot up to slash him in the chest three times before punching Vaati to the sky. Vaati rocketed back down, so Logia lit his fist aflame and swung a punch, but Vaati dodged underneath, then to Logia’s side, before blowing a sudden gust of wind that slammed Logia against the top of the largest tower.

Vaati flew up and stood on the roof of that tower as Logia got up to face him. Their desire to abolish the other was strong. Acnologia inhaled a great portion of Moon Chi in the atmosphere, while Vaati inhaled the air. The wind mage spun into a tornado that darkened from Armament Haki, but Acnologia morphed into a body of Moon Fire and flew at Vaati like a comet. The two forces collided, Vaati’s tornado setting aflame and Logia withstanding the shredding force of the Armament tornado.

Giovanni, Jessie, James, Cassidy, and Butch had entered the tower’s chamber. A giant yellow crescent moon with a smiling face sat atop a platform, which seemed to channel a great flow of energy up from the planet’s core, for the flow stretched far down into the crater. “So, this is the Lunar Magic… How marvelous.” Giovanni grinned evilly.

“Boss, what is the Lunar Magic, anyway?” Jessie queried.

“One trillion years ago, God Arceus created the moons to seal the Netherverse’s powerful Space Chi. But the Netherverse can be accessed from any point in the universe’s matter, given the appropriate Space-Time Rifts. The truth is, it is not Space Chi alone that is contained in that dimension… but a great outpour of the force we call magic. This magic leaks into the universe at substantial rates, but to keep it from disrupting Time-Space, Arceus created the moons. And Lunaria, the greatest moon of all, contains the very core of that power. This Lunar Magic that the ancient Lunarians, with the help of Cresselia, designed this temple to regulate.

“This magic energy was closely intertwined with the Netherverse’s Space Chi, resulting in the force called Moon Chi. It is from Moon Chi that other beings used to create magic. It started with simple rituals that utilized harnessed magic, but in time, the magic infected their bodies, became part of their bodies, in a manner that was unlike Element Chi. Thus, wizarding societies were established, and with the gods’ help, people created laws regarding these magics. But Moon Chi combines nature and supernatural, and those who use it can be stronger than any wizard or bender. At least… this is what Ragaj Gnik told me.”

“But if Moon Chi has the power of nature and magic…” Cassidy looked at the capsule encasing Crest they were carrying. “How did a psychic twerp create a Firstborn that could control it?”

“Even I have my doubts that Sunni’s powerful psychicbending alone could create a god of this magnitude. Maybe His Lesser Lordship will tell me the rest. For now, Young Master Crest will harness this Lunar Magic. And Crest will be under the control of this Dark Ball!” He raised a black Pokéball. “Created from the Dark Chi on Mt. Gnaa, it corrupts any Pokémon and increases their abilities tenfold!”

“But would that even work on a Firstborn?!” James exclaimed.

“Let’s find out! Release him!”

The agents opened the capsule. “NOOO!” Crest immediately tried to fly away, but James’ Victreebel stretched vines up to grab him. Giovanni tossed the Dark Ball.

“HYAH!” Wendy Marvell jumped and kicked it away with perfect timing, flipping in midair before softly landing on the floor.

“HEY, we didn’t invite any twerps to this party!” James yelled. “Weezing, use Sludge Attack!”

“Lickitung, use Lick!” Jessie freed her Pokémon as well.

“Weez!” The Siamese gas balls spewed a stream of sludge that Wendy blocked with a wind shield. Lickitung jumped behind her and stretched its long tongue. “AAAAHH!” Wendy shuddered crazily. “My new dress is drenched in slob, now I need to take a bath and wash it, oh but what if it gets ruined?!?"

“That’s it, Lickitung!” Jessie encouraged. “Keep licking!”
“Licki-Licki-Licki-Licki…” Wendy was squirming on the floor as the giant tongue wiggled and tickled her.

“Stop it, stop it, stop it, you’re getting me all sticky- oh please don’t get my feet- why didn’t I spray myself with—…” She continued squirming and whining.

“Do you think 4Kids would cut this scene?” James asked.

“We’re Team Rocket, Cass, obviously I stole it back. But thanks for acknowledging our show’s continuity.”

“Woooobbuffet!” The blob popped out.

A few miles away, the C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. was en route to the palace. “That must be it!” Lulu exclaimed. “And I see Team Rocket’s ships, too!”

“You twoips are clawin’ up the wrong tree!” Meowth declared, still being stood on by Carla. “With Acnologia on our side, there’s no WAY you can-!” Lee aimed his G.U.M.Z.O.O.K.A. at him.

“You know all it takes is a single Powuh Shot to send you blasting off again! We watch the anime!”

“Acnologia’s fighting with Wendy’s dad!” Lulu reported. “What should we do?”

“Like the football-players and Numbuh One do!” Denny smirked confidently. “Ram him!”

“That sounds like something I would do!” Lee argued.

“But it sounds crazy enough to work.” Leanne said. “Turn on the shield and smash him through the roof?”

“You got it!” Denny switched on the shield, boosted, and spun the ship as they rocketed to Acnologia. The dragon bender saw them coming. “The field is open! And iiiiIIIIIT’S…!”

Acnologia stopped the ship with his one hand and pushed back with great strength. “…Touchdown?”

Logia shot a Lunar Beam to blow the C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. away. Vaati kicked the back of his head, but Logia leaped up, charged power to his fist, and smashed down, missing Vaati and breaking through the roof. Vaati jumped in after, and Sector RZ landed their ship on the roof before jumping in. “Wendy!” Lee aimed his G.U.M.Z.O.O.K.A. at Lickitung. “Lick on this, you slobbery weirdo.”

“Lick-Lick-Lick-Lick-Lick-Lick-Lick-Lick-…” Lickitung caught several rounds of gumballs down his throat, and Wendy was able to get away. She saw John-Plank at the top of some stairs to a window, controlling Acnologia to attack her father. Wendy raced up the stairs and spun a whirlwind around her fist. “Sky Dragon CLAW!”

John-Plank faced her—Wendy’s fist collided at Johnny’s face. “Yodel-yodel yo-LAY-hoo!” The dimwit’s head spun like a screw.

Plank grabbed her fist with their cyborg hand and threw Wendy off the stairs. He jumped down after and punched Wendy to the floor.
“Crest, I’ll help you!” Diwata shot fire.

“Beeeel!” Victreebel screamed when its vines burned.

“Now’s my chance!” Diwata tossed the Spirit Ball. “GO, Spirit Ball!”

“It can’t be!” Giovanni exclaimed.

The Pokéball struck Crest and caught him inside. It softly rotated and descended in the air as it beeped. The ball popped open and released him. “It didn’t work!” Lee yelled.

“Didn’t that moon bird say you needed the Lunar Magic?” Donna asked.

“But I don’t know what that is!” Dee yelled back. “Unless… it’s that big moon thing?” She noticed the crescent moon with a face on the central platform.

“Wendy!” Carla rushed over to her fallen master. “Did he hurt you too badly!!”

“I’m fine, Carla.” Wendy got back up. “It doesn’t hurt so much in low gravity.”

Johnny, Plan Beta!” Plank ordered.

“You got it, buddy!” The cyborg leapt to Acnologia, took Plank’s capsule off, and stuck it to the half-dragon’s back. Acnologia bellowed when Plank’s vines bore into his flesh.

“I am now one with your flesh and bone, Dear Logia! It’s time for me to have the upper hand on this planet! No pun intended.” With Plank controlling him, Acnologia charged at Wendy with the intention of tearing her with his flaming (single) left hand, but Vaati flew in front and dealt an Armament air slash.

“Acnologia! Don’t let these fools control you! You have always been my Number 3 role model! Just behind Nolan York and Laghima, but still! You are a powerful wizard, I know you can fight this!”

“No creature commands ME!” Acnologia slashed his wings and scratched Vaati’s chest, then punched the airbender to the wall. “I am Acnologia… the most powerful wizard! And I will become stronger…” His eyes were drawn to the Lunar Magic as Diwata carried Crest up the stairs to it.

“Crest, you have to help me control the Lunar Magic!” Dee yelled.

“I don’t even know how to control it!”

“The Lunar Magic doesn’t belong to children like you!” Logia flew up onto the walkway. “Out of my way or I will BURN you- AAAAAHH!” Plank’s vines tugged on his insides.

“Unfortunately, we do not want you to possess the Lunar Magic, either.” The British board said. “Team Rocket will command it as soon as-”

Vaati blew Logia off the walkway, then zipped above and kicked him to the ground. “Well, Crest, should we just draw it in with our moonbending or something?” Diwata questioned.

“Beats any of my ideas.” Crest shrugged. They both held their hands to it and tried to channel the Moon Chi. The Firstborn was easily able to absorb it, but Diwata was having a harder time. “Let me lend you some.” Crest channeled the Lunar Magic to her body.
“AAAAAH!” Dee winced in pain from the power. “Okay, this is gonna take some work!”

Vaati shot at Acnologia with swift kicks, flying ten feet away after each kick and back to him in seconds flat, and after Vaati dealt a combo of three kicks, he attempted to swing his fist. Acnologia caught the fist, and when Vaati applied the other arm, his strength was roughly equal to Logia’s single arm. The ancient wizard flipped and stomped Vaati to the ground, then Acnologia forced Vaati’s head down with his hand and began squeezing it.

“Oh, isn’t this a surprising state of affairs?” Plank smiles wryly. Vaati was unable to pull Acnologia’s hand away. “It must be an honor to be destroyed by your hero. Aren’t you thankful that I restored his fallen body? Who would have thought that the great Plank would be the one who defeats the Man With the Red Eye.”

“Dad!” Wendy dashed up to Logia, but he kicked back and hit her stomach, sending Wendy against the wall. The half-dragon faced up at Diwata trying to control the Lunar Magic. He threw Vaati away, but before he could fly up, an unseen force caught him. It was a shadow originating from Lee Andrew.

“Shadow Possession, you undead abomination!”

“Now it’s OUR turn!” Sonny and Donna blasted ice beams at Logia, but he countered with Moon Fire breath and shot beams to blow the twins away.

“Hey, you’re supposed to listen to me!” Lee yelled, trying to maintain the hold. Acnologia blue fire at his shadow, Damien screaming as it dispersed. Acnologia snarled at Lee and lunged at him.

“LEE!” Leanne sent her shadow to grab her brother and lift him out of harm’s way. Acnologia snarled having lost his prey, and set his sights on the one responsible: Leanne Grayson. He rushed at Leanne, whose eyes saw the image of death in his form.

MASTER! Ash dropped Lee and flew back to her—Lee grabbed his G.U.M.Z.O.O.K.A. to shoot Acnologia, but the pellets flew through his intangible body. “LEANNE!!”

“AAAAAAH! . . .” Acnologia’s sharp, murderous eyes were the last she saw.

He blasted a gaping hole in her chest. The universe seemed to mute and it all was slow motion. The three operatives couldn’t bring their selves to move. Sonny and Donna didn’t feel like smiling or laughing. Vaati choked on his breath. Even Team Rocket was stunned by the act. Wendy wanted to break down and cry.

The scene reflected off Diwata’s eyes. Her eyes that were round and white as the moon… The girl that was so energetic and carefree felt that side of her slipping away.

“Only one who knows great change can possess the Power of Moon.”

A wave of dark fell over Dee’s eyes, starting from the right, like the moon going from full to half to crescent to… nothing. Acnologia felt a rise in power and faced Diwata. He was unsatisfied with the meager kill just now, but the yellow-haired Lunarian felt oddly intimidating. His reflection was clear in her dark eyes…

The next second, Acnologia was blown out of the palace, crashing into the ground around the crater. “Ack!” Plank grunted. “Impossible! Get up, you daft fool! Are you going to let her humiliate you like some…?”

A blue fire burned on Acnologia’s chest. Growling, the Logia stood, and the flame blossomed from his rage. “AAAAAAAAUUUUUUUUUUUUHHHHHH!” His body set aflame.

“AH HA HA HA, OUCH OUCH OUCH!” Plank squirmed frantically—his face was melting from the fire. “STAH STAH STAH STAH, IT-SA SAH SAH SAH, SAAAAAOOOOOOW!”

Plank fell off, and before his melted eye, Acnologia transformed into a great black dragon with brimming blue markings. The dragon glared at the parasite that had been controlling him, his mouth open and fangs exposed. “Vile cretin, how DARE you burn your handler!” Plank scolded. “You will place me on your back and OBEY me! Or…” A blue light was rising from Logia’s lungs, “Or…!” Plank could only feel fear in this moment. “Gulp! Oh, poppy seeds!” his voice squeaked.

Acnologia’s fire breath reduced Plank to a lesser existence than ash. The dragon returned his attention to the palace. Diwata Uno flew out of the tower like a blue comet, encased in a bright aura. She hovered over the chasm, eyes black with white lines around them, like a Solar Eclipse. Acnologia hissed. “For 8,000 years, I slept in my own decaying body… awaiting the day I could rise again. I knew it was my destiny to become the most powerful man in the universe… ever since I lay my hands on that gem: the Octogan. It told me I was bound to reign supreme… but the Octogan haunted me. The Shimmers would not leave my dreams. And they continued to haunt my descendants for thousands of years…

“And here I am… looking at a child who controls the Lunar Magic. Is this the universe’s way of deceiving me? To make children who possess the power of the gods? Just… what type of era is this?”

Diwata narrowed her eyes. “The era… of the Kids Next Door.” (Play “Gaul 2” from Spyro: The Eternal Night!)

Boss fight: Acnologia

Acnologia charged a Lunar Beam and unleashed it at Diwata as she flew around the dragon. Dee-Dee grasped the ground in her hands, sprouting crystals up under Logia’s feet. The dragon stormed forward and gnashed its fangs at Diwata, who pushed a hand and foot to Logia’s mouth and kept it open. She flew away, then rammed into Logia’s chest to shove him over the cliff, but he recovered with his dragon wings and spat giant fireballs at his opponent. Diwata sprouted blocks made of Moon Chi, serving as a perfect shield. She then conjured a warp pipe, jumped inside, and came out behind Acnologia as she spewed a beam at the dragon’s wings.

Acnologia whipped around and smacked Diwata and her warp pipe out of the air. Diwata recovered and centered the gravity around Acnologia, bringing a storm of moon meteors to strike him. Logia easily whacked the moons away with his wings and tail, but wasn’t prepared when Diwata stabbed a large moonlight-made scythe into his chest. Logia grabbed Diwata and slammed her against the ground several times before leaving her in a crater. He charged a Lunar Beam and fired, but Diwata countered with her own power and withstood his terrific power. She was left exhausted afterward.

Arlon and Dr. Facilier were examining the battle from the former’s ship. “Is Miss Diwata… clashing with Acnologia?” Arlon fixed his monocle.

“Told ya not to underestimate these kids.”

Two water arms wrapped around Acnologia’s neck and froze. Lapis Lazuli struggled to pull the dragon back. “Hurry, get up! I got him distracted!” The dragon broke free and snapped his teeth at the fairy, but Lapis dodged and threw a storm of droplets that became icicles – which merely phased through his body. Logia screamed when a pair of moon-made teeth bit his tail, conjured by Diwata. The Lunarian flew upward and spawned more comets, but Logia blocked with his wing. The tattoos on his wings came to life and flew at Dee in the form of snake-dragons, but she was quick to dodge their teeth. Acnologia flew up and batted her away with his tail.

Acnologia opened a portal above Diwata and dropped a Lunar Onix on her – a Pokémon Onix made of blue moon rocks. Diwata threw him off, but Acnologia seized the chance to smash Dee under his hand. A giant water sphere encased him, controlled by Lapis, who attempted to freeze the dragon. Logia’s eyes flashed, and the area was shrouded in blackness. Lapis saw the dragon’s ravenous blue eyes in the darkness, and when she felt his mouth shoot up to eat her, she performed a spinning water wheel and went through his intangible mouth.

Light returned to the area, but it was a horribly bright saturation that made everything almost white. Diwata commanded the chi that created this brightness to fly at Logia’s head, and the dragon tried to break the bright blasts with his Lunar Beam. He just missed Lapis, who flew to throw a water slice, but the dragon swatted her away like a fly. The fairy bounced on the ground a few miles away before stopping on her front, looking up. “Sigh… I can’t hurt him, anyway. Just have to leave it to her.”

Acnologia spawned dark crystals in the air around Diwata, and when she flew away, he spawned another crystal patch to stick her. Diwata fell to the ground, then Acnologia increased the surface’s gravity to steadily crush his opponent. With one more sudden thrust of gravity, Diwata was too weak to move. Acnologia landed and picked her up.

“Oh, no! She’s too tired, she’s going to be eaten!” Lulu yelled.

“No…” Wendy struggled to restrain her tears. Lee was still crying over Leanne, and his friends’ words only festered the wound.

Without waiting, Acnologia threw Diwata into his mouth and swallowed her whole. “Finally… after 8,000 years, the Lunar Magic is mine to control. I am the most powerful wizard in all of existence… and for the rest of eternity, I shall.” There was a rumbling in his stomach. “What…?” He fell to his knees. The dragon felt a powerful buildup in his bowels. “No… How is this happening?! I am the King of Dragons! Moon Chi is my nourishment… I will not be sickened by a simple crumb-!”

Acnologia exploded, his parts blowing everywhere. Some fell into the abyss, and a gooey puddle was left where he stood. The dragon’s head hit the ground and shrunk to Acnologia’s gaping human form. Diwata was left standing in the puddle, brimming with the Lunar Magic’s energy. (End song.)

“Ohhhh…” Diwata dropped to her knees. The energy flew back to the Night Palace to reunite with the Lunar Magic. Lapis returned to her aid, as did Arlon and Facilier after they landed.

“She really used up a lot of energy.” Lapis said, moving her Healing Touch around Dee’s body.

“Did that girl truly command the Lunar Magic?” Arlon asked. “Even us Moon Sages cannot accomplish such a feat. How could she…?”

Giovanni saw the battle from a palace bridge. With Acnologia gone, he had lost his advantage, so he sought to find the nearest Team Rocket ship. He turned—Vaati was floating over him. “Red Eye!”
Vaati kicked the man upside the chin, and he stumbled forward. “Giovanni… The leader of Team Rocket. Former Corporate President and a Pokémon hunter. What a horrid man you are.”

Giovanni grabbed a gun and shot Vaati, but the bullets passed through his Logia wind body as Vaati blew the gun out of his hand. He shot a gust at Giovanni and knocked him on his back. “Dad, there you are!” Wendy was running across the bridge with Carla.

Giovanni held his aching head. “Uuu-u-uck!” His eyes swelled red when his very breath rose out of his mouth.

“DAD, what’re you doing?!” Wendy exclaimed in horror.

“A man like you has no right to rob the freedom of any creature. Freedom is as vital as air. To steal it… would be to steal the air they breathe.” Giovanni was rasping.

“Dad, please stop!”

“And one who disrespects the value of freedom does not respect breath. You will be rid of your breath. You will be set free.”

“DAD, STOP IT, STOP!!” Wendy jumped and grabbed her father’s arms.

“HUUUU!” The breath slurped back into Giovanni’s lungs and he was saved.

“Wendy, what’s wrong with you?! Because of this man, your friend has been killed, robbed of her freedom to live!”

“THAT DOESN’T MEAN I WANT HIM TO DIE!” Tears spilled down her face.

“Men like him will only continue to rob others of their freedom! We must grant him freedom as a spirit, it’s the only way!”

“I DON’T WANNA SEE ANYONE ELSE DIE!” Wendy fell to her knees and cried. “Dad, I’m really angry at this man for what he did, I really am… but I don’t want to kill him. Please don’t, Dad…”

It hurt Vaati to see his daughter upset… He didn’t know what to do next.

A metal hand reached down and grabbed Giovanni, pulling him to a Meowth ship piloted by the Meowth Trio, plus Cassidy and Butch. “Let’s blow this joint and get OUTTA here!” Meowth shouted.

“Sorry to jet, Lunaria, but we’re in a hurry!” Cassidy yelled.

“We’ll send you a postcard!” James followed.

“Team Rocket’s cowering away agaaaaaiiin!” They took off like a twinkle in the sky. Twinkle.

Vaati pulled his daughter to her feet as she cried still. “I’m sorry you had to see that… but you must understand, Wendy. The path to true freedom is not easy. When there are evil people who will kill innocent people… sometimes, we must kill the evil ones. You may not believe in true freedom now… but if you do not learn to kill, the greater battles will become arduous.”

Wendy sobbed a little. “…Let us return to your friends.” her father said. He calmly led Wendy back to the central chamber. Carla followed, glaring at Vaati with utmost suspicion.
Lapis was unable to heal the gaping wound in Leanne’s chest. Their Sector Leader was gone before the mission could see completion. “So that is why…” Arlon observed. “As the moon is a body that changes… only one who could experience great change can control the Lunar Magic. But the change was so sudden to Diwata’s eyes.” The girl in question was hanging over Denny’s shoulders, panting. “She abruptly took control of the magic and fought Acnologia. And when Acnologia swallowed her, the Lunar Magic was too much for even his body to digest. He destroyed himself in the end…”

“And for what?” Lee sniffled. “Leanne’s dead! She’s dead and it’s all my fault!”

“But it isn’t your fault, Lee.” Wendy said.

“No, it is! I wanted to have an adventure that people could remember… Whether I was the Chosen One or Dee, I wanted to do something that our parents and friends would talk about with everyone. And now… sniff!”

“But it wasn’t for nothing.” Vaati said. “As tragic as it was… Diwata was able to command the Lunar Magic. Perhaps now…”

He didn’t need to finish, as Diwata had enough strength to stand on her own. Crest floated down to her. “Dee… Are you alright?” he asked.

“…No. I’m upset. I’ve… never felt this upset. I thought we were going to save the day like always – and I would make a joke that we saved the night, because it’s always night here. I thought we would go home… and nothing would change except for learning some new powers. …Not this.”

“…” Crest turned to Arlon. “When I was born… I didn’t know where I was or who I was. I just wanted to eat and have fun. I didn’t want to be thought of as a ‘Firstborn.’ But I am… and I have a duty to the universe, don’t I?”

“Fun and games are not a crime, Master Crest.” Arlon spoke. “But you must remember… we all have duties we must abide by. We must never forget our duties. Or bad things will happen…”

“Bad things will happen…” Crest turned to Leanne. “…I don’t know how to be a Firstborn. But… you said there were nine others. If I talked to them… maybe they could help me.” Then to Diwata. “Will you help me, too, Dee-Dee?”

She raised the Spirit Ball and smiled. “Sure I will.” She tossed the ball and caught Crest again. It beeped as it slowly rotated during its descent. The moment it touched the floor was when it booped. The moon-like ball shone with a brighter color, and it felt warm in Diwata’s hand.

Diwata captured a FIRSTBORN! NOW there should be 5 left! …Right?

“Children…” Arlon spoke. “In light of the circumstances… on behalf of Lunaria, I would like to thank you. Our planet was saved from a terrible fate. I would be pleased to reward you.”

“Thanks, but… I don’t know if I want anything.” Wendy replied.

“Yeah, I’m not even up for a victory party.” Denny said. “Sigh… Cheren is gonna fall apart.”

“We might as well get back to Earth ASAP.” Lulu said. “Give them the bad news.”

“Do take good care of Crest.” Arlon said. “You know how precious a Firstborn is… But perhaps it would be best if he interact with his own kind.”

“We will.” Dee smiled. “Hopefully, things aren’t TOO bad on Earth right now.”

Wendy and Vaati returned outside and gazed at the sky. “In truth… another reason I came to Lunaria was to dispel the protection around it.” Vaati said. “I wanted it to be free for the universe to see.”

“Dad… I really don’t think this ‘freedom’ route is... the right way.”

“…” His eye glanced at her. “I will return to Earth and meet with you again. Only half a month is left until the Apocalypse. I suspect the chaos will only grow and the battles more arduous. Make sure you’re ready, Wendy.” And he flew away.

I got the Night Palace from Sonic and the Secret Rings, and Acnologia is from Fairy Tail. Enjoy a Caesar Cipher.

The Disbanded

Chapter Summary

Maddy Murphy finally meets "The Disbanded."

This upcoming stage takes place on May 15, during the Madotsuki Arc, but the other scenes are after. Yeah, I’m gettin’ the times all confused for ya! ;D This chapter is also pretty short.

Chapter 57: The Disbanded

Road to KND Central Bike Hub

Emily Garley pedaled ceaselessly en route to the Central Bike Hub, zipping past all the trees in Virginian Forest and snatching all the wandering monkeys. Easy when she had a self-pedaling bike. Meanwhile, Sarah and Gary were following on natural bikes, but Sarah had a harder time seeing with the adult passenger sitting in her basket. “AAAAAAAH!” Sheldon Cooper cried – he couldn’t drive a car, and he was certainly not a bike person. “WATCH OUT FOR THAT ROCK!” Sarah bumped over a rock, but kept going. “AAAAAAAHHH!”

“Told you we shoulda bought the crate.” Sarah remarked.

“I see it, guys!” Emily pointed. “Let’s stop here and rest!”

They parked their bikes when the Bike Hub treehouse was in view, along with the dozens of colorful, swervy roads connecting to it. “I haven’t seen Mike since I left for Germany.” Emily said. “And when he finally calls me, his treehouse is getting ransacked by a ‘Red Monkey.’”

“One of Specter’s Freaky Monkey Five, I’m guessing.” Gary deduced.

“But think about it!” Emily counted fingers. “We stopped White Monkey at Sector N, Sector V said they beat Pink Monkey up in space, we caught Blue Monkey at Sector JP, visited Sector KB and caught Yellow Monkey… That makes Red Monkey the last of Specter’s officers!”

“Eh- hang on, now, ‘defeated’ does not mean the same as ‘captured.’” Sheldon noted. “Did Sector V capture Pink Monkey?”

“Er, no… but I’m sure it was still an amazing battle!”

“Furthermore, you are forgetting Mojo Jojo.”

“Always on top of things.” Emily shot him a look. “Still, this is the last of Specter’s field officers! If we catch him, it’ll strike a major blow against the Pipo Army! Soon, we’ll be able to take the fight to Specter!”

“Now you got me rarin’ to go!” Sarah smirked, readying her net. “Let’s go for it, Em Girl!”

“Before we actually capture him, we should interrogate Red Monkey as to the whereabouts of Specter’s location.” Sheldon suggested.
“Excellent idea as always, Dr. Cooper. Maybe we’ll even find your girlfriend, too.” Emily smirked, feeling Sheldon’s nasty look at the fact she used ‘girlfriend.’ (Play “Excitebike Arena” from Mario Kart 8)

Stage 60: Central Bike Hub

Mission: Collect 20 monkeys and capture Red Monkey!

The three kids rode their bikes down a hill, then made quick turns around a snaky path through a forest. They came to a straight path with some large rumps, with two monkeys riding over them with bikes from the other side—Emily snatched the left one as she passed it, and Gary caught the right one. They made a wide right turn when the path curved that direction, then had to shift left for just as much—Sarah snatched a monkey behind the corner turn, visible for just a brief second.

They stopped their bikes at a large step and stuffed them inside the Infi-Cube. They climbed the step to a playground setting, seeing two Phanpy Pokémon inside a spherical cage that was hanging by a chain. The Phanpy looked like sky-blue wheels as they were rolling around the cage. There was also a tall pole with a U-shaped ramp at the top, and two Biker Pipos riding up and down it. Sarah climbed the pole, then used the Sky Flyer to get level with the ramp’s base, snatching the apes in her net when they swooped down.

Meanwhile, Emily flew her S.P.E.C.S. up the Phanpy cage and unhooked the door with the glasses’ handle. The Phanpys rolled out, rolled rampantly around the park, and one of them hit a tall tree at the edge of a long pit. When the tree was in diagonal position mid-fall, the other Phanpy rolled up, off, and grabbed the branch of a tree on the other side. The tree fell over with its weight, connecting the tips of both trees as they formed a bridge.

The four crossed the chasm to a road that sloped and curved up left, and sloped down right. They went right, but saw it led to a ramp over another pit. They would have to use their bikes, so they went up the left hill and got to the highest part. They released their bikes from the Infi-Cube, rode them down the slope, and used the acquired momentum to go up the ramp and over the pit. Two Pipos rode in from the sides and began to race them across the track.

The track brought them to an open field with mounds and Dash Panels. They had to avoid the mounds and use the panels to catch up to the monkeys. Emily maneuvered leftward, following a zigzaggy path between rows of rocks. She was rewarded with a Dash Panel that shot her up to catch one of the monkeys. Once past the field, they rode up a path constructed by 4x4, going over a loop-di-loop—Sheldon fell out of Sarah’s basket at the loop’s top, but landed back in when she rolled down.

The Pipo Monkey jumped bumps in the road, so the kids mimicked the action – and every jump choked a “Hee-hee!”, a “HWOO!” or a “Hwuh-oh!” out of Sheldon. They made tight and careful drifts when the narrow, no-railing road turned, but then the treehouse was in their view as they were driving straight to it. The road would zigzag right and back left, but Emily chose to jump her bike across scattered platforms on the left, landing on a road of Dash Panels that shot her back on the main road, catching the monkey just before he could escape inside a small garage.

The bike path ended as the team hopped up some platforms on the side of the treehouse. There was a large gap that required a Heli-Glider to get across – the same device from Cooper Works. Before using it, Gary detected a hidden monkey on a platform behind them. He floated onto it with Sky Flyer and discovered the monkey behind a square patch on the tree. After catching it, the group used the Sky Flyers to make the Heli-Gliders float them across the gap (Sheldon was forced to get in the Infi-Cube since he didn’t have a Flyer). “Okay, why ain’t we do that durin’ the biking??” Sarah questioned.

“Because he’s like an adorable baby brother!” Emily said with a flush. The trio put on their M.A.G.N.E.B.O.O.T.S. to walk up a metal strip leading into a house on the tree, via a trapdoor. The inside of the house had some controls, computers, and half-eaten pizza. Emily sniffed the pizza. “Pepperoni and liver. This is definitely Mike’s.”

“Won’t even ask how you know that.” Sarah remarked.

The three walked up some stairs through the treehouse hallway. There was a door to a room that consisted of a large, glass-protected table. Under the glass was a design based off the Excitebike game, an oval-shaped racetrack with bumps and boosts, and three spidermonkeys riding motorbikes. “Good Lord.” Sheldon swore. “Excitebike. The bane of my NES days.”

“How did you escape the Infi-Cube?” Emily asked.

“Please, that thing has as much security and complexity as a Rubik’s Cube. Sigh, but I suppose the task of seizing these monkeys is up to me. Excuse me.” Sheldon took out the C.A.M.-C.A.R. and drove it into a hole at the table’s bottom. From up here, it looked like playing a 2-D NES, driving the toy car around the miniature track. Once again, Sheldon had to avoid bumps and hit boosts to go faster, then shoot the car’s net to catch each individual spidermonkey.

After catching the three monkeys, they continued up the stairs to a massive room of the treehouse with many bike-related devices. Emily stuck her bike into a device on the floor, hurriedly pedaling as the wheels activated it. A huge bike tire rose up from the chasm, spinning quickly. Sarah and Gary had to use their Super Hoops to run across the tire, since it was spinning the opposite direction from the next path. They jumped to the foothold on the other side and used Gary’s bike to power another device, spinning the tire the other way so Emily and Sheldon could get across.

“Hey, check it out, guys!” Emily ran up to some tables with spare bike parts. She picked up some wheels that had a snake-shaped dent around the center of the tires. “These are special tires designed to remain steady on poles or rails! I’ll bet we can use ’em to get new places.”

“Alright, but I reject any backtracking until we have all the known abilities.” Sheldon noted.

Already, they saw a yellow curvy rail go across part of the chasm. The kids used their upgraded bikes to ride and balance on the rail perfectly. They jumped parts of the rail that were electrified and were about to land on a new floor. However, Emily jumped to an alternate rail on the left, which would swirl down like a whirlpool with a suction tube at the bottom. Two monkey saucers were flying around the whirlpool, so Emily had to keep jumping parts of the rail to chase them, jumping to hit with her Stun Club, and when the saucers were destroyed, the monkeys would fall into the suction tube. Emily jumped in the tube and was sucked up to the floor where her friends were. They already captured the Pipo Monkeys.

The kids rode their bikes again through a narrow hallway, leaving the big room. The hall turned left, bringing the bikers outside as the track was on the treehouse’s side. They jumped a low branch and ducked a higher branch. Another low branch came, Em and Sarah jumped over – Gary bounced his bike on the branch, to another one, and caught a Pipo Monkey climbing the tree. The track dropped them on a rail that went straight up vertical. “Don’t stop, guys!” Emily shouted as they were moving slowly and weakly. “Just pedaaaaall!”

“Screw yooooouuu!” Sarah shouted at the fact Emily’s was self-pedaling. They got parallel with another vertical rail. When an Amp traveled down their rail, they jumped their bikes, whipped around, and landed them on the other rail, fighting their exhaust to keep slowly pedaling. An Amp came down this rail, they jumped to the other—an Amp instantly came down, they jumped again. Finally, this rail became flat and stable, allowing them to catch their breath. They took it slow for a few seconds, and immediately sped down a sloped part, which would curve up and fling them to the air with momentum.

They turned their bikes about-face and landed on a new rail that stretched away from and sloped down around the treehouse. They passed one final look at the annoying vertical rails before riding into an opening. They jumped and ducked two Amps and landed on a huge bike wheel. It wasn’t actually a bike wheel, rather a rotatable platform with the 2-D design of one. The kids used the Super Hoops and ran in one direction to make the platform turn and float upwards.

When it stopped floating, they entered an exercise room that only consisted of bikes (and not the moving kind, obviously). Three monkeys were using the bikes, and there was a video camera on a platform by the ceiling. Emily jumped up some stacked mats to the platform and recorded the monkeys with the camera. From this view, the apes appeared very devout in their exercise and were building up quite a sweat.

_All we think of is crack! Like, all the time!_ The caption read. The kids proceeded to net the monkeys simultaneously before they could start jumping around the room.

In the next room, there was a Pipo Monkey balancing on a unicycle on a mini circus set behind a glass case. Sheldon had to drive the C.A.M.-C.A.R. into the tiny entrance and make its way to a switch at the top of the set. The car drove over some small balls floating in the pool at the bottom, and they each shifted left and right, requiring careful timing when crossing them. The car drove up mini stairs and got level with some platform swings. It got on the first one, swung over, crossed to the next, and repeated until it was at the other side. It went up more mini-stairs, then had to bounce over some mini trampolines. They would lead to the switch that would cut the monkey’s rope, causing him to fall and break out of the glass. Emily caught him in her net.

“Two more monkeys, guys!” the scientist cheered. “I am in fuuuuuull Excitement Mode now!” They went outside to a massive rooftop swimming pool, but to fit with the bike theme, they had to ride waterbikes. A Pipo Monkey was driving his own bike in circles, splashing waves that would knock the others off their bikes. When this happened to Emily, she tried to swim under in attempt to resurface in the center of the circle, but water mines prevented this act. However, Gary shot the ape with the slingshot to knock him off his bike, then Emily netted him with Water Net.

They rode their waterbikes around a snaky river, jumping waves surfing from the opposite way. They had to jump the bikes onto individual pipes of water, grind across, and jump to higher pipes. Emily saw a cog switch, quickly jumping to bat it with her Stun Club, turning the device and forcing a spout of water to shoot up from ahead. The spout bounced them up to a higher part of river. They had to jump and hit other cogs to activate more water spouts to propel them over barricades. Just after the second barricade, Emily hit another cog, activating a spout that shot her up to a monkey on the wall, and catching this 20th monkey. The river ended in a docking room, so the kids climbed off the waterbikes and proceeded through a corridor. (End song.)

“MIIIKE?” Emily’s voice echoed as the treehouse began to grow darker. “HELLOOOOO?”

“May I insinuate that Mike is Emily’s quote ‘boyfriend’ unquote?” Sheldon asked.

“It ain’t even something to laugh at.” Sarah said. “One time, she shrunk him and kept him in a jar.”

“And we will treasure those 28 hours for the rest of our lives.” Emily replied, on the verge of crying at the memory. “OH, MIKEY, please be safe!!”
Green and red spotlights came on and moved around the room as a voice echoed. “LADIEEEEES and GENTLEMEN! The act you’ve all been waiting for, the exciting conclusion of our show! Starring the fantabulous, the extraordinary, the exemplary, the incomparably talented, the-”

“THE REDUNDANT!” Sheldon shouted.

“I dunno what that means, but I’ll take it! For I am RED MONKEY!” A purple spotlight shone on a muscular ape wearing a red ringleader’s uniform, goggles, and a Pipo Helmet. “Now you might be asking, who is the guest of honor? WHO, besides Red Monkey, could be so heavily emphasized so as to deserve a mention?! Well, folks, you will have your answer. I give you… MIKINLEY!” Pink spotlights aimed at the top of a ramp.

“AAAAH!” Emily and co. gaped with utmost horror.

Mike Strongarm was wearing a pink dress, a fruit bowl hat, red lipstick, and blue eyeliner while balancing on a unicycle. “Well: this is all manner of humiliating.”

“LOOK AT THIS GUY!” Red Monkey yelled in his microphone. “Is it a guy… OR A GIRL? ! I can’t tell! Yellow Monkey confuses me enough with his/her gender, but now my head just freaking aches! So I’m just going to beat the snot out of this guy, and squash his head like the fruit he’s carrying!”

“MIKE, DON’T WORRY!” Emily yelled, setting her T.E.L.A.-N.E.T. to warp to a hamster cage. “I’ll use this net to transport you out of here!”

“DON’T LISTEN TO HER!” Sarah and Gary tackled her.

“No no, please, guys, I-hi really need to do this!” Emily chuckled, trying to shake them off.

“That’s okay, Em! His one mistake was putting me on a unicycle. It may be half of a whole bike, but half is all I need!” Mike smirked with confidence.

“You’ll need a bigger wheel than that to crush MY wheels!” Red Monkey jumped onto a four-wheel bike—with monster truck tires. “Come down from your tower, Princess! Let’s dance!” He rammed the side of the ramp and caused Mike to roll off. (Play Mr. Patch’s Theme from Banjo-Toodie!)

Boss fight: Red Monkey

Mike hurriedly pedaled around the circus grounds to escape from Red Monkey’s Big Wheel. Even though he only had a unicycle, Mike was skilled enough to keep a safe distance from the oversized bike. Mike dodged the Orange Grenades Red was throwing, but this gave the boy an idea: he grabbed a banana off his hat and threw it behind him, causing Red’s four-wheel to swerve out of control. Mike seized the chance to roll up to a towering “U” ramp, rolling up one side, down, up the other, and got higher each time until he was ready to fly off and soar to the approaching Red Monkey. He landed the unicycle on Red’s head and knocked him dizzy.

“You won’t mind if I tinker around a bit?” Mike took out a wrench and proceeded to detach the huge tires from the four-wheeler. He jumped off as Red Monkey crashed to the floor, but the Freaky Monkey recovered and leapt to a large tricycle that automatically came over. The trike’s wheels rotated around the center, but still gave Mike a good pursuit. When Mike threw another banana, the wheels avoided slipping on it.
A laser shot from the bottom of Red Monkey’s tricycle and propelled him up like a rocket. Mike pedaled faster as the ape intended to burn him with the laser, but he was steadily catching up. Mike saw a gong high up on the wall, at level with Red Monkey, so he pedaled toward it and tricked the ape into smashing against it. The tricycle plummeted to the ground, its legs stretching for a brief moment so Mike could jump on. He bashed Red with the wrench before unhooking the trike’s legs.

Red Monkey smacked Mike off and called over a bicycle with big wheels (big bike wheels, not monster truck wheels). The ringleader pedaled up a tightrope going up a pole, so Mike chased him. Red Monkey threw his own banana peels back on the rope, but Mike jumped them and made it to the top. Red Monkey pedaled across another tightrope, weighing it down and causing Mike to speed down faster with the shift in angle. He bumped into Red’s back wheel and nearly lost balance, but was able to recompose and keep chasing the monkey.

“HE’S GOING TO ESCAPE!” Emily cried, for the final tightrope would lead out of a window and onto a ship.

Red saw the other end of the ramp coming and pedaled faster, aiming to fly up and land on the tightrope again. Mike landed on the ramp and chased him, having gained a boost by landing on the curve appropriately. “I’m going to make it! I’m going to make it!” Red was having trouble balancing on the broken bike, but his acquired speed launched him sufficiently high off the ramp. He saw himself landing on the tightrope. “I’m GOING to… huh?”

“Whatever, Carny.” Mike had already launched off ahead of him, so fast that none of them saw. Having gone higher than Red Monkey, he jumped off and KICKED the ape off his bike.

“AAAAHH!” Red’s boots hit the top of the ramp, getting stuck and causing his face to smash against the side. His body scraped down the ramp and made a squeaking sound before stopping at the bottom. Emily came up and kicked him to his back, seeing his cracked goggles. Emily set her net to the Adams Tech containment and caught Red Monkey. (End song.)

“ALL RIIIGHT!” Emily jumped and swung her net around. “WE CAUGHT ALL THE FREAKY MONKEY FIVE!”

“Emily!” Mike hurried up to his friend, throwing off his outfit and wiping the makeup off.

“Mikeey!” Emily jumped over and hugged her crush. “I have had oooone heck of a trip! I expected to find a career in science when I arrived at Adams Tech, not a career in animal control!!”

“Believe me, you aren’t the only one, Em. These apes show up outta nowhere and start making a circus out of my treehouse! And it looked like they were freaking recording it.”

“Yeah, they’ve been turning all our treehouses into TV studios, ruining all the wonderful educational programming. But now that his officers are in our custody, Specter’s brain-rotting days are numbered!” Emily smirked and raised a fist.

“Yes.” Sheldon spoke with sarcasm. “And now we will never know where Specter is hiding.”

“D’AAH!” Emily flinched and began crying. “I forgot we were supposed to interrogate Ree-eeeed!”

“Wasn’t Red trying to escape on that ship?” Gary pointed.
At this, they all used their bikes to grind up the tightropes, jumping into the ship through the window their selves. Sheldon came out of the Infi-Cube and approached the control panel. “It’s on autopilot. Set for G.U.N. Area Delta.”

“GUN Area Delta?” Mike repeated.

“Is Specter hiding in a GUN facility?” Emily asked herself.

“I say it’s worth checking out.” Sarah nodded.

“Agreed! You up for a trip, Mike?”

“Hey, these guys messed up my treehouse. If you know where their boss is hiding, I wanna administer some payback!” Mike fist-palmed.

“I’ve been waiting all month for a moment like that, I would be glad to share it with you.” So with that, Emily pressed the Activate. The small GUN ship roared its engines and set off for the destination.

Solana Galaxy; Pokitaru

The last thing they remember was a flashing 8, then an explosion. The rest was all a haze.

Maddy woke up to sun hitting her face. Her eyes were blurry – she lost her contact lenses – but the ground was sand, and she could make out a straw roof on the side of a cliff and clothes hanging from a clothesline. Ratchet, Zach, Drake, and Shade were asleep under that roof. Maddy felt a shadow come over her. She looked up and saw a man looking down, darkened by the sun behind him and his round glasses shining white. “Thirsty?”

Maddy tiredly sat up as he held a coconut cup of juice to her. She took it, looking as the man approached the others. He had greying hair to his neck, wore a white coat, sandals, and sunburnt tan skin. “Um… Where are we?”

“You’re on Pokitaru; it’s a beach planet.” He said as he lightly kicked Ratchet’s body. “Don’t ask me how you got here. One minute, the sky was glowing, and the next you all fall on my beach.” He kicked Shade’s body. “It was all one hour ago. But the Zoni said you had time-traveled. Er-?” Zach was still snoozing, but he gripped the man’s leg and crawled up like a worm. He climbed to the man’s head and smooched his cheek. The man pushed him off.

“CELESTABELLEBETHABELLE!” Zach yelped, startling everyone awake. “W-Whuh?”

“What happened?” Ratchet asked, rubbing his eyes. “Wait… This is Pokitaru!”

“Pokitaru?” Shade repeated with familiarity.

“Don’t be alarmed, I’m not your enemy.” The man said. “I was just telling Maddy here. My name… is Silvers Rayleigh.” He turned to show his face to Maddy (not that she could see it well). He had a small grey beard.

Shade gaped. “YOU’RE the Disbanded, aren’t you?!?”

“Heh heh, that’s what the Zoni keep calling me!” He chuckled.

“So you’re the one I was supposed to find?” Maddy asked.
“And you’re the girl I was told to wait for, it seems. So I guess you’re right.” Rayleigh paced around the beach as he spoke. “I’ve been on this island for 20 years. I was really surprised to learn that I was on another planet—in an entirely different dimension! Apparently something happened in this world that caused me to be sucked from my world. I wouldn’t have had any idea if it wasn’t for the Zoni.”

“Who are the Zoni?”

“They’re small black aliens that’ve been keeping me company. They seemed like very wise creatures. They told me to stay here and wait for ‘The Conqueror.’ I didn’t know who that was, but I figured I had nothing else to do. So I waited. Heh, doesn’t feel any different from my home!” He chugged a bottle of rum.

“‘The Conqueror’? Maddy questioned. “Who’s that?”

“It’s the name you were given in the prophecy.” Shade said, approaching her. “I tried to tell you before. You have Conqueror’s Haki. You used it on Nya’s Teen Ninjas way back when.”

“That Haki stuff again?”

“You have Conqueror’s Haki?” Rayleigh raised a brow. “So it’s true… the power does exist in this world.”

“Hold on, tell me what Haki is again?” Drake Puncture cut in.

“Armament Haki, which hardens the body.” Shade raised a fist. “Observation Haki, to predict attacks and determine numbers. Those are two powers that all beings can use, but there’s a third form called Conqueror’s Haki. For eons, people have called it the ‘Color of The King.’ It is a symbol of true strength and authority, and very few beings are born with it.”

“Right you are.” Rayleigh said, sensing a huge creature burrow from under the sand. “But the meaning of ‘King’ is different in your world. It was given to-”

He jumped away when the hideous sandworm emerged from the ground. It hissed at Rayleigh and lunged at him—there was a tingling sensation in the air, and the sandworm went down like that.

“This will be your lunch. I’ll start the fire in a moment.”

Ratchet blinked, wondering what just happened. He shook back to reality and said, “Wait a minute, we were being attacked by Dr. Nefarious! There was an explosion caused by… caused by…?” He touched his head, trying to remember.

Rayleigh frowned. “Maddy… would you like to see something? It’s a little grotesque, but…”

“M-Maybe I shouldn’t.”

“No, I think you should. This way…”

Rayleigh calmly led Maddy and her group inside a cave within a mountainside. They heard a sound of energy surging, and saw faint blinking lights around corners in the dark tunnel. The group gasped horrifically. “AAAAAAAAHHHHHHH!” Eight Zoni were floating and surrounding a pale-skinned boy, whose veins were showing and eyes were bulging. They channeled their energy to holding him in a sphere. He looked like he was in pain more horrendous than they could imagine.
“Is that… GEORGE?!” Maddy exclaimed.

“Yes.” Rayleigh nodded. “Apparently, this young man had an Octogan implanted inside him.”

“An Octogan?” Maddy remembered Shade talk about it.

“It’s an extremely powerful relic that gives the user control over time and reality. These creatures here, the Zoni, are trying to subdue its uncontrollable power. Maddy, do you know about the World Government that rules Planet Earth?”

“My friend, Chris mentioned them to me…”

“Every King that the World Government has had could use Conqueror’s Haki. They used that Haki to withstand and control the Octogan. That’s why Conqueror’s Haki is known as the ‘Color of The King.’ But if what they say is true, you possess it, Miss Murphy.”

“But does that mean me and Zach are related to The King?”

“Oh, no. Numerous people, albeit few, possess the power, including myself, but I’m not from this world. And my knowledge is only based on what the Zoni have told me. I don’t really understand much about this world, but I’m sure there’s a reason I was brought here. And it is to teach you Haki.”

“So if I mastered Haki, that means I could overpower the Octogan? And maybe help George?”

“That’s a stretch. In my homeworld, it took me 2 years to teach a student Haki. An inexperienced child like you would take much longer to be able to hold an Octogan without gravely injuring yourself.”

“But I’m a fast learner!” Maddy yelled impatiently. “I was able to master Tiny Style in a few hours, I bet I can do this, too!”

“I don’t doubt that you could,” Rayleigh smiled at her willingness, “but as far as the matter of George here, we have only the Zoni to rely on. However, I promise to protect him myself, in case they fail. For now, my child, I will teach you the ways of-”

“The Force!” Zach shouted. The five people shot disbelieved glares at him. “…Well, he set me up for it.”

“Whatever, let’s get started right now.” Maddy stated. “The Apocalypse can happen at any time, so I won’t go back to Earth until I’m a master at Haki.”

“Very well. First, I’ll teach you the most offensive form, the Color of Arms. Let’s go outside.”

As Rayleigh led them out of the cave, Maddy turned back to George. He really did look grotesque; she could feel the power surging through his veins, the unbearable energy coming from the ‘8’ on his forehead.

“All the doctors know, Melody found out, George—I mean…” Chris stopped himself.

“Who’s George?”

“Did Chris actually know about that?” Maddy asked herself. “And he kept it secret? …Just what are these people?”
“I’m a freak among firebenders.” Chris concluded.

“Then I guess he’s a freak among timebenders…” Maddy mumbled in worry. She couldn’t imagine what sort of ‘advanced powers’ a timebender could have.

“Even more than that.” Shade replied; Maddy flinched when she realized she was beside her. “Maddy, I’m beginning to understand why Nefarious was hunting you. The Octogan are the most powerful objects in the universe. If those with The King’s Haki can control them, their strength can be phenomenal. Nefarious must want that kind of power.”

“I wouldn’t put it past him.” Ratchet noted. “But, Nefarious was destroyed in that explosion, wasn’t he?”

“If we survived, there’s a chance he could have survived, too. It feels unreal for a child to become a Full Haki Master in less than a month. But if mastering Haki is Maddy’s job in the prophecy, then maybe she can. But it won’t be easy.”

“I lost my wristwatch communicator.” Ratchet said. “Drake, will you help me look for it? I need it to call Aphelion if we’re gonna have any hope of getting off this planet.”

“Aren’t you still worried about Clank?”

“Yeah, but I can’t do anything about it now, can I? But if Dr. Nefarious shows his face again, I’ll make him tell me where he took Clank.”

On a different island

“AHH, MY FACE!” Dr. Nefarious shouted. “I can’t tell where my face is!” His head was dropped on the ground and covered by a blanket. “LAWRENCE! Where are you?!”

His butler was collecting other parts of his master’s body and putting them back together. “I thought the blanket was supposed to project the illusion of nighttime and put one to sleep. Hmm, perhaps I misread that article on birds.” When he attached the left arm, it smacked the butler before the body marched over to pick up the head.

Nefarious screwed his head back on. “Finally. Now, what planet is this?”

“Pokitaru, Sir. The vacation resort. We somehow winded up here after yet another failed attempt to detain Madeline Murphy.”

“Ugh, I am officially SICK of chasing that girl around all the time. Lawrence, signal Lord Vorselon to come get us off this watery wasteland.” The robot mastermind marched around some trees to a cliff overlooking some islands. “We don’t have much time to discover Maddy’s ability before the Apocalypse arrives. I want to harness that power in case…?” From the cliff, Nefarious had view of a beach campsite on a close island. He zoomed in his vision to see the people coming from around the hill. “Ahhhh… She’s HERE!”

“Ooo, how lucky.” Lawrence said in his emotionless voice. “If we time it correctly, perhaps we can seize Madeline while no one else is looking and teleport to ship when Vorselon arrives.”

“Wait, Lawrence… Let us sit and observe.” Nefarious tuned his eye-binoculars. “Perhaps the child believes she is a safe distance from us. Maybe now she will be willing to show us her ‘secret power.’ And once I know what it is… I will see what I can do with it before I feel like telling Ragaj.”
Since Mom was too weak to work herself, and was still being treated in the infirmary, she called some workbots to help the operatives repair their treehouse. Mom was currently sipping tea while laying on a hospital bed, having been healed by Melody beforehand. Dillon York approached her with a serious expression. “Mom, I need to ask you something.”

She opened one eye to view her visitor while in mid-sip. She put her cup down and said in her smug tone, “Why, if it isn’t the little snot who liked to skip around with that candy chick. Where is your little robo-doll, anyway?”

“Vanellope’s missing, and last I heard, she was at the Great Clock. You said we would have to go to the Great Clock. Why?”

“My, aren’t we persistent.” Mom said in her soft, sweet tone. “Little boys need to be patient while Mom is busy. As soon as your Moonbase is fixed, I’ll take you to the Clock, dearie.”

“Tell me what’s happening at Great Clock!!” he yelled in anger.

“Augh, fine. I’m sure by now, you must know that the World Leaders don’t look too highly at the Twenty Keys Prophecy. They want to do everything they can to stop it from happening. Well, they know that the Great Clock is a key item in the prophecy. And at this very moment, one of our Corporate Presidents has been sent to handle the situation.”

“Who?”

“He is known as the ‘Full-time Gamer.’ President of KaibaCorp., Gozaburo Kaiba.”

Meanwhile, three workbots were fixing the entrance to the Weapons Storage safe. Several Moonbase guards were stationed to watch them, while Cheren, Panini, and Francis had a checklist for all the safe’s items. “It doesn’t seem like anything was destroyed in the attack.” Cheren said with relief, checking off Father’s piano. “But when I think about it, if Kodama hadn’t stolen the Shell 297… it could’ve actually blown up in here. …Holy fuck.” The very idea was mind-blowing to Cheren: Kodama saved the Moonbase by disobeying him. …He was actually stunned for a few minutes.

“Wait a minute, the Yin Yo-yo that Sector JP brought us seven months ago!” Francis realized. “Is that on our checklist? Where is it?” He looked around frantically.

“Er- I’m sure it’s here somewhere. Look around, it might be under something.”

While the three were hopelessly crawling in search of the small yo-yo, an even smaller thief was already tiptoeing away behind the guards’ boots. “Ha ha hee heeeeee!” Jack Spicer laughed, having minimized the Yin Yo-yo with the Changing Chopsticks. “Twenty years later, these kids are still morons!” He made his escape before anyone would see.

Great Clock’s Cyberspace

This chamber was nearly pitch-black, except for the lights of a control panel, which faced an enormous stream of light that was ceaselessly flowing right, its waves and texture whirling around as it did so. XANA and Peridot’s footsteps echoed in the dark, quiet chamber. “Well, Peridot, in spite of a few bumps in the road, your work has been… satisfactory. Our job will not be complete until we have flushed out those verminous Zoni. But for now, there is one other thing you must repair. Lesser Lord Gnik says that it is the most important of all.”
Peridot approached the controls, gazing at the stream of light. From a close perspective, the light was both blinding and hypnotic. She stared transfixed at it for a few minutes. “I… I recognize this wavelength.” Peridot used her computer-fingers to activate the controls. Holographic screens appeared, showing gray-skinned humanoids with orange horns, beautiful angels, green mist, a distorted space, and a tall yellow empress whose scowling face was turned away. Peridot gasped.

“Peridot… I want you to infiltrate the trolls’ fortress. Learn what you can about the machine. Any threats or weakness it might possess. But do not let them see you.”

“I hope you die! Hee hee hee!” Pearl laughed.

“According to Ragaj, this wavelength dwells in the bodies of the Zoni.” XANA said. “They use it to warp between the First Dimension and the New Universe in mere milliseconds. This stream is none other than the First Byway. It is the Dimensional Byway that links the universe with the First Dimension. Sealed behind the Gate of Time. Peridot… if you hope to see your Diamond again, then it must be fixed.”

“Yellow… Diamond…”

The area rumbled suddenly. “What was that?” Peridot gasped.

Outside

The Zoni had splorped Vanellope to an outside area of the same Cybersite. She was still carrying an unconscious Clank in her arms. “THIS IS THE PLACE. WHEN WE BRING ORVUS TO OUR SUPER COMPUTER, HE CAN TELL YOU PART OF WHAT YOU NEED TO KNOW.” The gray-eyed Zoni (Karkat) said.

“Mewww! I can’t wait until we get to m33t you all!” Nepeta’s Zoni said.

“1 SM3LL TR34CH3RY! SN1FF SN1FF!” Terezi hissed. “W3 4R3 NOT 4LON3.”

The site rumbled. “Is it XANA?” Vanellope asked.

Great Clock

The Human Bill Cipher walked by a window. He peered outside at the incoming fleet of ships. “Ooooo! Looks like this place is in for a party!”

The flagship was commanded by Gozaburo Kaiba. “Even if the Twenty Keys come together, we will not allow them to do anything here. We will condemn this place for the Government and keep the Gate of Time sealed.”

Rayleigh is from One Piece, Kaiba is from Yu-Gi-Oh. Although some stages may appear minor, they are all still important. This one had a subtle foreshadow! ;P I wanted to include a Vanellope stage here, but I think we can do it later. Anyway, while we are still a long way from the end of the story, the individual character arcs are nearing their conclusion. We only have a few Emily, Maddy, Rupert, and other character levels to go. Decipher this Number Cipher (which also has a letter for a number).
Project Daycare

Chapter Summary

Team Sandman and Kami go to rescue Kimaya from GUN H.Q.. A terrible secret is revealed.

These next few chapters will be focusing on the Sixth Light. This also takes place on May 15.

Chapter 58: Project Daycare

Cleveland Park

Team Sandman hurried to the park after leaving the Dimalanta House. The normally peaceful park had trashcans and picnic tables fallen over. Kami Heartly was the only person in the park, pacing back-and-forth in a frantic fashion. She saw the three approaching. “Nolan, thank God!” She jogged up to them. “Did you hear what happened?”

“Yeah, Jeremiah called Matt. Your daughter got kidnapped by GUN agents?!” Nolan was still baffled by the idea.

“Yes, they just showed up out of nowhere! First, this ninja girl appears and knocks out her friends, then a bunch of helicopters… Sigh, I tried to ask what they were doing, but they said they were under strict orders. God, it’s just like 20 years ago.”

“Haha, you got kidnapped a lot back then!” Yuki laughed.

“I don’t understand what’s going on, but they’re probably being taken to GUN H.Q..” Nolan figured. “I know where the base is, so we’ll fly there and rescue them.”

“I’m coming, too, you know!” Kami insisted. “If my daughter’s being thrown in detention, I have a right to know why so I can scold her later!”

“Eh, can’t argue with that. I’m friends with the GUN Commander, so maybe I can ask him what this is about and make sure the kids get off easy.”

“Maybe. But just in case you can’t,” Kami raised her right hand as the Jungle King Keyblade materialized, “I may have to get aggressive.”

“Holy mackerel!” Crystal gaped. “What kind of weapon is that?”

“It’s a Keyblade.” Nolan said. “I used one in my battle with Revan. I’m not sure what they are.”

“I just think it’s a really weird sword.” Kami replied.

G.U.N. H.Q.

Kimaya, Beat, and Rhyme were thrown into a cell protected by a blue force field, handcuffed by chi-cuffs. Kaleo was herded somewhere else, being forced to crawl due to his size, wearing a shock collar around his giant neck. “Aroooo! Aroooo!” the giant roared like a moose, having taken way too many jolts to still be thinking right. They shocked him with the collar again. “Aroooo…”

“MAN, you can’t lock us in here!” Beat shouted, banging on the force field. “This validates our constitutional rights! Our rights to not be beat up by a ninja and taken to a military facility without a permit!”

“Oh, but we do.” Agent Stan Smith replied. Two agents beside him had Django inside a glass case, and his Mystic Guitar in the other. “This skeleton has been on our wanted posters for quite some time. You were seen associating with him, and therefore harboring him. Under the orders of Carter Pewterschmidt, we are to study this guitar for its supernatural properties and determine if it can be any use to us.”

Hearing this sparked a reaction from Django. He gritted his teeth. “Your giant friend looks worth studying, too. Don’t worry, we’ll set you kids free as soon as you answer our interrogations.” The agents left, taking Django and Leo with them.

Stan Smith told the agents to take them to the designated rooms. As he was joined by his ninja daughter, Hayley, he looked at a TV in the ceiling corner. It showed Team Sandman and Kami entering the facility from the front. “Hmmm…” Stan rubbed his chin and looked at Hayley. “I was going to deactivate you… but I may need you for just a little bit. As a matter of fact…” He looked at the TV again. Stan seemed to recognize the blonde woman with the large key. (Er, except the large key.)

Entrance

“Commander Gunkan.” Nolan acknowledged as they approached the GUN Commander in the lobby. “Right on time.”

“Mr. York.” Brett’s hands were folded behind him. “Yes, we were expecting to have visitors regarding, eh… some new prisoners. Thanks again for your help exposing the secret in Dressrosa.”

“You jerks kidnapped my daughter!!” Kami shouted. “What the crap?!”

“It wasn’t our decision, and I tried to speak against it.” Gunkan said. “But we were ordered by the Corporate President, Carter Pewterschmidt.”

“And under President Pewterschmidt’s orders, you’ll keep silent on the matter.” They looked as Stan Smith marched into the lobby. “After all, you can’t betray the one who funded your little organization to begin with. A shame you don’t hunt metahumans anymore like you were originally paid for.”

“YOU arrested my daughter!” Kami stomped up with her fist balled near Stan’s chin. “Where is she?!”

“Heh, please, please.” Stan smiled and gestured her to calm down. “I’ll let you see your daughter momentarily. Come with me and we’ll talk.” He casually turned to walk down a hall, and Kami followed, keeping a firm grip on her Keyblade.

“Should one of us go with her?” Wiccan asked.

“Kami can handle herself.” Nolan assured. “We don’t need to make a scene here, yet. Brett, maybe you can help us with a different matter. Ever heard of Hugo Strange?”

“Sigh… yes, I have.” Brett looked away as he collected his thoughts. “He used to be a scientist here at GUN… He was a paranormal specialist who tried to find ways to harness the forces we did not understand. By which I mean the spiritual forces of life and death. He wanted to find ways to revive the dead and control them."

"Why on Earth would he?" asked Crystal with repulse.

"I assume because of some past trauma. This was 14 years ago, and as you would expect, it was too freaky for our tastes. We were going to send him away, but that’s when a group of High Agents from Mariejoa came down. Apparently, the World Leaders have spies working under our ranks, making sure we’re being good. Those spies told the Leaders about Strange, so they sent some people down to take him away. Now he’s the apprentice to Felius Umbridge."

“What does he do for her?” Yuki asked.

“I don’t know. But…” Gunkan stepped closer and spoke in a whisper, “I heard he has a secret lab in Saudi Arabia. When he came to our base one day on a helicopter, I overheard the pilots talk about it. It’s stationed in a town called Magnostadt."

“Magnostadt?” Crystal cocked a brow.

“I’ve never seen it, and it’s not on any maps. It’s a secluded city of wizards and mages.”

“Yes, I’ve read about it. Apparently, there’s a magic school there. I never believed it existed.”

“But you know Hogwarts exists.” Yuki contradicted.

“I’m sure there’s a science behind it all."

“If it’s not on any maps, how do we find it?” Nolan asked.

“I don’t know. …Anyway, Nolan, it’s probably not best to stay here. ‘Sandman’ is wanted. I’ll make sure nothing bad happens to Kami.” Brett assured.

“Very well. We’ll just wait outside for her.” The three heroes exited the base.

“Well, I’m usually up for visiting a magic city.” Crystal began with enthusiasm. “But if we’re going to Arabia, I guess I’ll have to hide my face and stick with you men.” She said with repulse.

“Eh, they’re gonna be hunting all of us, so it won’t matter. We’ll still have to be stealthy. Our only concern now is how to-” Nolan’s wristwatch beeped. It depicted a green “?” on its screen. He answered the call.

“Was it a bat I saw? Oh ho, just kidding. I’ve been spending too much time with my cousin, Palindrome. IT’S ME, your long-time friend, The Riddler! And I would be SOOO happy to give my Sandy a helping hand in finding Magnostadt! But first, I require an itsy bitsy request. What kind of trophy asks questions?”

“Riddler Trophies.” The three chorused, rolling their eyes.

“That’s right! Go out and collect some more. After all, intelligence is more important in a hero than strength. And I just don’t think you got what it takes. As soon as you complete more of my challenges, I’ll tell you how to find Magnostadt.” He hung up.

“Fine. As soon as Kami’s all done in there. But knowing her, there’s going to be drama.”

Inside
“Tell me why you arrested my daughter.” Kami demanded after leaving Nolan’s group. Stan Smith approached the coffee maker in a robot laboratory and poured a cup.

“Can I ask you something, Mrs. Heartly?” he asked.

“W-… How do you know my last name?”

“Your daughter is named Kimaya Heartly, so that made it obvious.”

“Oh… But-” She was about to question him on that.

“I also know your first name, Kami.” She felt her heart jump at that statement. “I recognize you.” When he turned back to face her, there were a few tiny holographic screens by his eyes. “Want some coffee?” Stan smiled and handed her the cup.

“…Um… thank you?” She took a sip of the coffee, looking confused.

“We know you were the one who defeated the Pirate Emperor, King K. Rool. Very impressive.”

“Really? I didn’t think that would make me famous.”

“Oh, the Government notices these things. But while battling a notorious crime lord comes easy, raising a child isn’t, it seems.”

Kami choked when she took another sip. “Whaddyou… mean?”

Stan snapped his fingers. Hayley Smith flipped over in a stylish ninja fashion before standing firm, her expression serious. “Kami, this is my daughter, Hayley. Pretty, ain’t she? She’s strong, she’s fast, and more importantly, she’s under my control.”

“What?”

“Come this way, please.”

Stan led Kami to a nearby room that was designed like a kindergarten classroom. There were young children sitting at desks and coloring pictures. It was a diverse class with Caucasians, Asians, African-Americans, and even some Lilliputians. They all wore neck collars. “This is a secret program we started 18 years ago, called Project Daycare. We raise children to become Sleeper Agents for the World Government. Heh, when the CIA submitted this proposal, you wouldn’t believe how many countries protested it. Even Japan. Boy, won’t they be pissed. But that’s why we have America, the freest country in the world.”

One of the girls colored outside the line on her picture. Her collar started beeping, and some agents rushed in to grab her and take her to a back room. Kami could only gape in horror. “If that new child president knew about this, we would be ruined. The other countries would go crazy and everything would fall to chaos. Much like your relationship with your daughter, if she found out.”

Kami bit her lip. From Stan’s view, she appeared to be restraining some feelings. “Yes, Kami, we know you considered this. When your daughter was two, you among several other parents brought your kids here after you received our ‘secret’ invitation. Before you completely agreed to it, we made you believe it was a simple government-organized daycare meant to teach your children obedience. You actually let Kimaya take a few classes. A few months of classes, in fact. Her collar went off a lot. But by that time, we were ready to trust you with the activation code.”

“I pulled Kimaya out of this place for a reason!” Kami stated. “I couldn’t believe you were trying to control kids, it’s wrong!”

“Then why did you let her stay here this long? Why have you never told anyone?”

“…Because… I was ashamed. When she was growing up, I even considered taking her back. Then that Arlon person showed up and gave me the same offer. I finally gave in and took it, and I… She just wasn’t the same. I still feel terrible.”

“Your daughter is a disobedient little rebel. And if she found out, she would just ignore the word ‘law’ altogether. Her own mother tried to destroy her free will. Isn’t that the worst thing you would ever wanna hear?”

Kami sighed, bowing her head in shame. “Now, we promise not to hurt your daughter while she’s here. You just walk away and forget what you saw… and we promise not to tell her this cold truth.”

“I let her take those classes because I wanted Kimaya to be good. I wanted her to be a girl everyone could love.”

“See, we all have our poisons.”

“…But if you’re just going to arrest her for no reason, the word ‘law’ lost its meaning already. HYAH!” She swung the Keyblade and scratched Stan’s cheek, knocking him back. “My daughter might not trust me again, but I won’t let you get away with this! It’s time I do what I should’ve done years ago!” She started slicing the collars off the kids, and attacking the agents that tried to subdue her. Stan grabbed Kami by the neck and threw her back up the stairs to the laboratory.

Kami got up and gasped when Stan flew in with jetshoes. His left eye was red, and his right arm was a cannon. “You see, Kami, at the same time I signed Hayley up for Project Daycare, the CIA made me a deal I couldn’t refuse: they turned my real body into a CYBORG!” He ripped off his suit, exposing the blue robotic body, which had a yellow belt with an American Flag buckle. “It even comes with a language library!” He turned a dial a few times. “Español! Nihongo. Français! British, old chap! And some dead language.” He turned once more. “Latinae.”

“Figures. Only a heartless robot would turn his daughter into a weapon.”

“Before I remark your hypocrisy, let me show you what these Sleepers can do. Hayley, I command you to-” The alarms blared. They looked at the ceiling TV, which displayed The Gang escaping their cell. “They’re escaping?! Hayley, go stop them! Don’t let them free the subjects! But do it quick!”

“Understood.” The ninja flipped away.

Prison wing; a few minutes ago

“Dammit, I wish they let us keep our iPhone!” Beat shouted, kicking the barrier. “I never gone this long without music! I need mah DJ Gappa, I need mah Poop Dog!”

“I wish Vweeb was here.” Rhyme said. “He’s so small, he could go right under this wall. Hee hee, so fun, so fun! Hey, whatchu doing, Kim?”

Kimaya was sitting against the wall, her legs arched up and her eyes closed. Keeper… Awaken… Keeper… Awaken…

“Who the hell are you?” Kimaya asked.
In Pueblo de Niebla lies the key.

“Puebla de Whuuuh?”

“Kimayaaaa… You startin’ to creep me out by talkin’ to yourself!” Beat exclaimed. Rhyme curiously crawled up to her.

You hold the key… In Pueblo de Niebla lies your destiny.

“Ooo, what’s this?” Rhyme saw a keychain sticking out of Kimaya’s pocket and pulled it out.

“Huh?” Kimaya looked up and saw the small, white key hanging from the chain in Rhyme’s hand.

“Hey, this is pretty!” Rhyme grinned. “Where’d you get it?”

“I… I ain’t remember havin’ this.” Kimaya took it in her right hand, looking at it strangely.

“Wait… I remember it, though. It was in a dream I had.” She let the key rest on her palm. “It was a—” The keychain FLASHED, and suddenly grew the size of a sword. The Keyblade was white, had a blue star with yellow points, and angel wings around the hilt.

“HOLY SHIZ!” Beat literally jumped out of his loose pants, and Rhyme flew back in shock.

Oathkeeper…

“Son of a frick!!” Kimaya stood up and waved the weapon around. “H-How the hell this even…?!?”

“What kinda lock NEEDS a key that big?!” Beat asked.

“…Ah dunno… But lemme see what it does.” She smirked and lashed the blade at Beat.

“YAAAAH!” He shut his eyes. “…Huh?” Kimaya chopped off his chi-cuffs.

Kimaya then cut Rhyme’s cuffs, and Rhyme took the Keyblade and cut Kim’s. “That’s mah jam.” Kimaya took the key back. “Gang, this is our exit card.” With that, she aimed the key at the cell’s lock and fired a small beam. The barrier vanished.

“GIRL, HOW LONG YOU FUCKIN’ HAVE THAT?!” Beat yelled.

“HEY, THIS just appeared in mah pocket, I dunno WHO put it there or when!”

“Then why you ackin’ like you know how to use it?!”

“I DUNNO! There’s this freaky-ass voice in mah head, tellin’ me to do this shit, and I’m like, whatevuh.”

The alarms started blaring as the hall flashed red. “Fine, whatevuh, let’s ditch!” Beat yelled.

“First we gotta get Leo and Django! They took ’em this way!”

“’kay, but the second Leo turns green and ’is shirt rips, he’s on his own!” The group rushed down the hall.

Testing Room

“MMMMM!” Kaleo was given a giant plate with four dozen bacon sandwiches, which he gobbled up like small pieces of candy. “This is tasty! And Mom always tells me not to end up in prison!”
He then proceeded to lick milk out of a giant bowl like a dog. The scientist watching him wrote notes down about the ‘Mammoth Toddler.’

“KALEO, DON’T!” Django yelled from his glass cage. “They put Tatababasco in those sandwiches, it’s an illegal spice!”

The Mystic Guitar was placed inside a large machine, which made a thorough scan. The guitar was depicted on a screen, with blocks of writing that indicated certain parts of it. “No doubt, these wavelengths aren’t normal.” One scientist said. “I don’t recognize it.”

“You don’t suppose it’s… magic, do you?” another asked.

They all chuckled for a second. “Still, this must definitely be an item of the supernatural. Perhaps we should inform President Pewterschmidt.”

“DON’T EVEN THINK IT!” Django yelled. “That jackass took enough from me already! I’ll tear all the skin off your bones if you-”

Beat and Rhyme blew the door down with a synchronized Song Beam. “AH RIGHT, G-Dogs!” Beat sang. ‘Here’s how it’s goin’ down! We gonna take back our buds, and Y’ALL are gonna sit down at your little desks and whine about it, ya dig? OOMP!’ He and Rhyme were kicked forward by Hayley. The Sleeper ninja drew out a knife and twirled it around.

“NOT COOL, man!” Kimaya came behind Hayley and knocked her away with the Keyblade. “Yo, I’ll beat this ninja chick, y’all take out these nerds!”

“WORD!” The Bitos sang.

Kimaya blocked Hayley’s knife and bat the weapon away, then leapt over the ninja while bashing her in the head with the Keyblade. Kimaya swung her blade at Hayley’s sides, but she blocked with her arms and kicked Kimaya away. She fell on her back, raising her Keyblade to block Hayley’s kick, then she kicked the ninja’s ankle to knock her down. Hayley grabbed Kimaya and tossed her skyward as she jumped back to her feet. When Kimaya came back down, Hayley jumped and kicked her toward Kaleo, but Kimaya planted her feet against the giant’s leg and kicked off, flying back to Hayley and sending her flying back with a Keyblade swing.

Upstairs

Stan flew at Kami and soared around the room, continuously shoving her before aiming to crash into a wall. Kami knocked Stan’s arm away with the Keyblade and fell, causing him to crash himself. Stan recovered and shot a round of lasers, Kami twirling the Keyblade to block them. Stan aimed his left fist and blasted it, knocking Kami across the room and through a few tables. Stan flew above and attempted to stomp his boot down, but Kami rolled aside and got back on her feet. She swung her blade at Stan, but he grabbed it and shoved against her with equal force.

During this stalemate, Stan looked at a timer on his left arm. 1:50 was left. “Damn. I guess I lost track of time.” His rockets kicked on as he shoved Kami to the wall. He flew away and spoke in his wristwatch, a satellite extracting on his head. “Hayley, it’s Stan. I’m Getting Fed Up With-”

Kami chopped the satellite off his head and bashed him in the chin. “Wait! I need to deactivate!” Stan tried to speak, but Kami dealt another blow and bounced him back. She jumped over and slashed an ‘X’ on his chest, then bat him away again.

“Nice try, but I won’t let you use your daughter like this!”
“UGH!” Stan shot his fist again, but Kami leaped over and ran at Stan. The cyborg tried to fly away, but Kami tossed the Keyblade and struck the right jet, causing Stan to fly out of control and crash into a large robot with an empty cockpit.

Downstairs

Hayley lifted Kimaya by the shirt and started punching the girl in the face. Hayley tossed Kim into Leo’s large milk bowl, the boy perking in surprise. Hayley jumped in the milk bowl after her, and the girls fought and splashed around like they were in a pool. “This is like when my hamster, Chitters jumped in my cereal!” Kaleo grinned. “Then he took a nap and floated there while I ate.”

Beat and Rhyme finished knocking out the scientists before the former punched Django’s case and broke the glass. “Hurry and get my guitar back!”

The Bito siblings fired a twin Song Beam at the scanner machine, but it did nothing. “Darn it, it’s some kinda ‘reinforced’ metal! Yo, Kimaya, save Leo and have him bust this open!” he called.

“DO NOT LET PRISONERS ESCAPE!” Hayley jumped out of the bowl and flipped over to kick Beat and Rhyme down, then kicked one of Django’s legs off before attempting to stomp him in his skull head. Kimaya jumped and grabbed Hayley from behind, but the ninja pinned Django down and grabbed Kim by the neck, choking her. She grabbed Kim’s Keyblade and tossed it away.

“KIMAYA!” the Bitos cried. Rhyme ran to grab the fallen Keyblade and aimed it at Hayley. “… Grrr, how do you shoot the laser?!” She shook it.

“RRR!” Beat leapt to punch Hayley, but she punched him back.

“What?” The Keyblade vanished in Rhyme’s hand and reappeared in Kimaya’s. She slashed Hayley down the chest and got free.

Upstairs

Kami grabbed onto Stan from behind, and while he was able to balance in the air with a single jetshoe, he struggled to shake her off. After he finally dropped Kami on the floor, he aimed his cannon at her. “I can’t waste time with you. Good-bye-…” Stan glanced at his watch, which read 00:00. “No!…” He gasped.

Downstairs, Hayley was surrounded by the three Gang members, readying herself. Suddenly, she stretched upright, eyes wide for a second. With a calm aura and narrowed eyes, Hayley walked over to pick up her knife. She left the room, leaving The Gang confused.

“Maybe there’s still time to-” Stan tried to fly away, but Kami tossed her blade at his other jet and made him drop down. She caught her Keyblade and leapt to stab it through his cannon.

“Wow, this key’s stronger than it looks.” Kami smirked.

“You don’t understand! If I don’t deactivate my daughter, she’s going to-” A door broke down, and Hayley was standing in the entrance.

“Hello… Father.” The ninja glared at her father.

“I’m Getting Fed Up With This Orgasm!” Stan yelled.

Hayley gripped the knife. “So am I.” Kami jumped away when Hayley charged at them, stabbing the knife at Stan’s face, but he smacked it away as the two swung punches at each other.
“So, is your control broken?” Kami asked.

“No, worse! If a Sleeper Agent remains active for seven straight days, she kills her handler!”

“What?!”

“It’s a glitch in the program we never got around to fixing!” Stan locked hands with his daughter as they pushed each other. “Don’t just stand there, do something!”

“And why should I? You’re the one that had her brainwashed in the first place!”

“PLEASE, just do it! If you help me, I’ll get rid of the Sleeper in your daughter!”

“What do you mean, I pulled Kimaya out of this!”

“Yes, but we were able to implant the Sleeper inside of her! She may not’ve been heavily trained, but someone could still use her. For example, Carter Pewterschmidt.”

“ENOUGH OF THIS!” Hayley’s hands turned Armament Haki, allowing her to squeeze and crush Stan’s robot hands.

“AAAAH!” the cyborg screamed. Hayley flipped behind, wrapped her Haki arms around his neck, and squeezed until the head snapped off his body. Stan’s expression was left agape as his red eye turned off.

“Uh…” Hayley fainted alongside her robot father. Kami panted, watching in case either of them would get up again. She then looked at the ceiling screens, seeing Kimaya’s group coming back.

Downstairs

“RRRUH! NNNN!” After Kaleo was freed, the giant furiously banged his head on the containment chamber, steadily creating a dent. “Don’t worry, Django, I’ll have that guitar outta there in a jiffy! AAAAAH!” He continued head-bashing.

“Just break the glass, you idiot!” Django yelled.

Kaleo noticed the window on the machine. “That’s probly easier.” He kicked the window and broke it easily.

“Well, nothin’ lost, at least.” Kimaya shrugged.

Django retrieved his guitar from the scanner. “‘Guess not. So Kimaya, where’d you get the giant key?”

“I dunno, it was just in mah pocket. Don’t ask me how Ah got so badass with it—some reason, it feels like I always had it.” She viewed the Keyblade from all sides. “There was this weird voice in my head about ‘Pueblo de Niebla.’”

Django gasped. “Pueblo de Niebla?”

“Can we get outta here first??” Beat insisted.

“Right! All aboard the Leo!”

Kaleo crouched down like a dog as his friends climbed on his back. GUN agents swarmed in, but the giant smacked them away like dominoes as he trotted down the prison wing and up the stairs.
Kaleo smashed down the archway of the door Hayley broke open earlier. “Kimaya!” Kami yelled.

“MOM! Man, I swear if you put that chip in mah hat again!” Kimaya took off her hat and brushed her hair.

“Kimaya, let’s go, my friends are waiting outside.”

Commander Gunkan didn’t bother to try and stop the escaping kids – the fact that one of them was giant would probably result in futile efforts. Kaleo stopped beside Nolan’s Sandmobile outside as the kids climbed off. “You don’t expect me to fit HIM on this, do you?” Nolan questioned.

“No worries.” Django tuned the dials on his guitar before aiming it at Leo and strumming a sonic wave. The giant boy shrunk down to normal size. “Problem solved.”

“YOU COULDA DID THAT ALL ALONG?!” The Gang and Kami screamed.

“Hwhat, hyou didn’t ask!” Django chortled.

“There still isn’t enough room for all of you.” Crystal noted.

“So we’ll make some.” With that, Django strummed the guitar and shrunk Wiccan, Yuki, and Kami.

“Problem solved agin!” Kimaya grinned, picking up her mini mother.

“Solution to everything, I suppose.” Kami sighed.

“Well, if it ain’t broke.” Nolan shrugged. “Pick them up and climb in.”

With Beat and Rhyme holding Yuki and Wiccan, the kids climbed into the Sandmobile and took off from the base. Commander Gunkan watched them with a proud smile. “Hm hm… What is it about kids that make them so hard to contain?”

“Sir!” A GUN agent hurried out. “We’re unable to contact Area Delta! For some reason, our satellite image picked up some cartoon about monkeys.”

“Monkeys?”

Cleveland; Gallagher Neighborhood

When they returned to Sector V’s neighborhood, Django restored the adults to normal size. Nolan received a call from Haruka and headed for her house with his friends. Kimaya showed her mom the Oathkeeper and explained how it mysteriously appeared in her possession. “So your Keyblade appeared outta nowhere too, Mom?” Kimaya asked after Kami told her own story.

“Yes, it did. But then K. Rool brought it back to me several months ago in the form of a keychain. I never understood these 20 years ago, I don’t understand them now. Kimaya, there’s something I need to tell y-”

“Kimaya, you said something about Pueblo de Niebla.” Django brought up. “Something about a voice?”

“I ’unno, i’ was jus’ some voice. Why you so hooked on it?”

“…” Django looked away and answered, “Pueblo de Niebla’s my hometown.”
“Wait, I thought’chu were from Miracle City?” Beat asked.

“No, that’s where I moved. I was born in Pueblo de Niebla.”

“Is that Spanish for something?” Rhyme asked.

“Yes, it means Village of Fog. It’s called that because of its toxic air. Not a good place to live unless you’re dead. …Heheh.”

“If it’s where you’re from, you think… You think we can visit it?” Kimaya asked.

“Kimaya, he just said the place STANKS!” Beat retorted.

“Ah know, but…” She looked at her Keyblade. “‘Some reason, I feel like I’m supposed to go there. Like my instinct or something. So Django, maybe you wanna take us?”

Django looked hesitant. “Um, I…”

“ROAD TRIP!” Beat and Rhyme double high-fived. “C’mon, Rhyme, let’s go home and git our skateboards.”

“I wanna skate, too!” Kaleo yelled, running after them.

“MAN, you fall on your face each time!”

“Ah’m runnin’ home, too!” Kimaya announced. “Later, Mom!”

“Your daughter’s growin’ up fast.” Django smirked.

“Not fast enough. When’re you gonna take off that skeleton costume?”

“Screw you. I’m gonna see what Dillon’s dad’s doing.” Django headed for the Dimalanta House.

Dimalanta House

“Haruka!” Nolan, Yuki, and Wiccan came down the stairs to the basement lab. “Did you find out what that chemical is?”

“Yes, but I had to call in some help.” Haruka replied, holding up her cellphone. “After I bent a sample of the chemical away from the milk, I took a picture and sent it…"

“TO ME!” A maniacal voice spoke from the phone. "Her FAVORITE uncle!"

“Wait a second… Is that Caesar Clown?!“ Nolan exclaimed.

“Right you are! And that dull old voice must belong to Sandman! Pleasure to see you again, old chum.”

“I knew sweet little Haruka wouldn’t resist the urge to call me, to seek my expertise! And my, look at the work she has been doing. The minute I learned she was my niece, I knew she had the potential I had always desired in an apprentice.”

“Not interested! I just wanted to ask if you knew what this was!”
“Of course I do! It is a very rare and powerful chemical I had only heard in legends. It’s called Lazarus.”

“Lazarus?” repeated Nolan.

“Based on stories, Lazarus has the ability to preserve life and heal wounds. Any sickness a person may have, physical disability, can be GONE! by just taking a dip in Lazarus.”

“Isn’t that kinda like the Fountain of Youth or the Fountain of Dreams?” Haruka asked.

“Yes, but Lazarus is far superior! Those measly fountains only have temporary effects, but Lazarus can last for very long periods! Oh, how I longed to get my hands on the substance; just imagine all the experiments I can do with it.”

“But why would Hugo Strange want people to drink Lazarus in their milk?” Nolan said.

“What did you just say?!” Django asked loudly. He was standing at the basement stairs.

“Django, what’re you doing here?” asked Haruka.

“Never mind that, whaddid you say about Lazarus?”

“Um, it’s this chemical Mr. York found in these milk bottles. They said that they were being shipped to stores.”

Django was shaking with anger, as though his skull would explode. He bolted up the stairs and out of the house. “Was that boy a skeleton? Holy CRAP, I need to do an autopsy on him!” Caesar beamed.

Outside

“Huh- Django?” Kami looked confused when the skeleton ran past her.

Django met up with Beat, Rhyme, and Leo on the street, whom all had skateboards. “Well, since you guys asked, I would be happy to take you to my hometown.”

“YEAH, MAN!” Beat gestured shooting guns in the air. “Gonna get all Mexican, in Mexico Land! Yo, where’s Kimaya, she be trippin’!”

“Raht here, pardner.” The four turned around and gaped. Kimaya wore a black cowboy hat, black boots that clanked with each step, and a belt with a skull buckle. Her boombox was playing a Western whistle. She made the gesture of cocking her Keyblade like a gun. She tipped up her hat to show her eyes. “Y’all fellers ready to get Southern?”

Django strummed his guitar and summoned the Ghost Train, blazing onto the road. “More ready than I have in 40 years.”

Pokitaru

“Maddy, let me ask you something.” Rayleigh said as he led her and Shade into a part of the jungle. “Do you know what chi is?”

“Yeah, it’s what benders use to control elements with.”

“Yes, and no.” Rayleigh stopped walking and turned to them. “Chi is a force that exists in all beings. We have Personal Chi, or Willpower Chi. Benders are able to manipulate elements by using the particular Willpower Chi given to them by their god. But ordinary humans are able to utilize Willpower Chi in their own way.”

“Hold on.” Shade spoke. “How would you know this, exactly? I was told you hail from an Original World. Are element benders and chi discussed in your world as well?”

“The Zoni gave me the knowledge of benders and chi when I arrived here. They must have thought it would be easier to train you under your terms. However, the matters of Haki and ‘element bending’ work under similar circumstances in my world. Perhaps in time, I will tell you. But do you understand what I’m saying?”

“Yeah, I think. So how do we use this Willpower Chi?” Maddy asked.

“Well, starting with Armament Haki.” Rayleigh stretched his left arm as it turned black and iron. “This comes from the Willpower Chi found in our strength. In reality, the level of strength our body seems to automatically possess is an illusion. The body contains tremendous amounts of strength stored in our chi. It’s true that normal exercises heighten our strength, but by harnessing our very will, our strength can exceed to greater levels. When a great quantity of chi is applied to our strength, it will take form on the outside of our body. The power of Will is the strongest ability any person could have. It is strong enough to break the defenses used by Logias.”

“This is starting to sound like some sort of bending.”

“All advanced martial arts apply concepts used in bending.” Shade said. “Because they all revolve around harnessing our inner chi.”

“Observation Haki is a bit harder.” Rayleigh continued. “You harness the Willpower Chi that lies in your senses. By enhancing your very eyes, ears, touch, even taste or smell, you can see and hear everything around you. You can detect a person’s thoughts by the sparkling of their brainwaves and predict their next move. You can determine where every living thing within your radius is, even the tiniest flea. Sometimes, your very instinct will take over, and 90% of the time, it is right.”

Maddy remembered when they escaped from Vorselon’s ship. She sensed Captain Qwark’s aura and convinced her friends to jump out the airlock. Was that Haki?

“The final form is Conqueror’s Haki. This isn’t a power that can be mastered through simple training. A person has to be born with it. It is when the Willpower Chi exists in your very heart. It is bred by sheer resolve, courage, and authority. The chi heightens the courage to the point that every small-willed person around you will feel intimidated, and pass out as they are unable to comprehend it. It can make people acknowledge you as their leader. Their ruler.”

“Maddy, do you know how some kings and queens possess a ‘divine right to rule’?” Shade asked. “How their right to rule was given by God? These words hold truth. The Goddess of Emotion, Mesprit is the one who grants Conqueror’s Haki. By studying a person’s character, even at birth, she can tell what people possess the authority that a king would have.”

“And she actually picked me? I’m not even leader of the Decommissioning Squad.”

“Yet, the power is yours nonetheless. The gods cannot be mistaken.”

“Now it’s time for you to try it yourself.” said Rayleigh. “Harness the strength in your body until your arm can be as hard as iron.”

Maddy balled her right fist and held it out. “Hmmmmmmrrrr!” She channeled pressure into her arm, but felt no enhance in strength. “Hnnnnnn!”
“I don’t think you’re doing it right—” said Shade.

“Probly not!” Maddy cut in. “It doesn’t make sense, how do you just… magically force your body to get stronger.”

“Benders master their abilities by training in their natural environment. Perhaps combat is what you need to enable the Haki to emerge.”

“Then we shall.” Rayleigh smirked. “Keep attacking me until you’re able to hurt me, even a little.”

“Okay. …Boy, I never thought I’d ever have to learn how to fight the way a bender does.”

‘’Guess so. …WAIT A SEC, how often do you watch me?!”

“Eh heh heh…” Shade grinned sheepishly.

A different island

“Augh, how long have we been watching her, Lawrence?” Nefarious said, viewing the training via binoculars. He was lain on his front with his feet propped up. “I wanted to see some juicy secrets, not a training montage! Get to the goods, girl!”

“Sir, you must understand that there are so many things wrong with what you’re doing.” The butler sighed. “So many implications.”

“If you’re not gonna watch this girl exercise with me, then be quiet.”

“…You’re doing it on purpose. You have to be. I see no other alternative. …Sir, it seems that he is simply teaching her Haki. Even Conqueror’s Haki is not an uncommon art.”

“That’s just it, Lawrence. Ragaj told me to watch this girl because she possessed a secret power that even he couldn’t determine what it was. And he’s usually on top of things. He knew Jessie was a Bubble Dreamer, knew April was a doll, he knew the one gives them all keys, so he definitely should’ve known Maddy possessed a simple power like Haki. There must be something missing here. And I’m going to find out what it is.”

Dimalanta House

Kami stared at her cellphone with worry. Kimaya texted her in saying they were going to Django’s hometown, “Peblo de Nebla.” She saw Team Sandman and Haruka exit the Dimalanta House.

“Sigh, apparently they’re going to Mexico. Honestly, that girl…”

“Hey, what a coincidence!” Haruka beamed. “We’re going to Mexico, too!”

“Why?”

“We were researching a chemical called Lazarus. Based on Haruka’s, um, ‘source’, this Lazarus comes from a place called Pueblo de Niebla.” Kami made a slight reaction, looking at the text again. “The person who mines it is…”

Kami gasped after hearing his name.
Carter Pewterschmidt saw the group of kids coming through his security cameras. They crossed the border to Mexico on their magic train and were headed to the village. Carter turned. Behind the desk in his dark, smelly office, was a solid white stone cube with unknown writing. Near the base of this cube was a keyhole. And Carter knew the person that would come here in search of this cube. She was coming. He reached into a desk and pulled out a file on Kimaya Heartly. Agent 6767 was her codename. Somehow, Carter found that funny.

“We can’t let them get here.” Carter stated, facing forward again. “We’ll stop them from seeing this thing at any cost. Understand?”

“Darn right, Sir.” Hank Hill responded. He and his three friends had dark purple, mutated bodies, with black heart designs on their chests. “We’ll kick their asses ’til their hearts can’t take it no more, I tell you what.”

“I wonder if their hearts taste sweet and sugary.” Bill Dauterive said, hugging himself. “Like a little child’s dreams.”

“Ah’ll smoke ’em into oblivion.” Dale Gribble blew black smoke from a cigarette.

“Sure you will, sure. Just take these monsters and go.” Carter ordered.

Heartless Shadows, Soldiers, and Song Bells appeared out of darkness. They headed out to hunt the one that held the key.

“When I was working for Doflamingo, he picked up a juicy little tip!” Caesar spoke giddily. “One of the Corporate Presidents, Carter Pewterschmidt, found a whole butt load of Lazarus, in a Mexican village called Pueblo de Niebla.”

I never wanted the GUN H.Q. escape scene to be very long, since we have enough jailbreak scenes. Stan and Hayley are from American Dad, as was the Project Daycare concept. Next time, we go to Django’s homeland. Byuh.

Chapter Summary

The Gang makes it to Pueblo de Niebla, where Django reveals his past.

I predict this saga should end on Chapter 61.

Chapter 59: The Land the Gods Forgot

Sandmobile

“Whoa whoa whoa, say that again.” Nolan responded as he piloted the airborne Sandmobile. “Your daughter’s a Sleeper Agent?”

“Yes.” Kami answered with frustration. She sat next to Wiccan in the backseat. “And that cyborg guy said Carter Pewterschmidt knew her activation code. I don’t know what possessed Kimaya to go to Mexico, but if Carter’s in the same place, I’m afraid he’ll try to use her.”

“I feel like I heard of ‘Sleeper Agents’ before.” Yuki said. “Do you have to say some kind of funny sentence to activate her? Like a sentence you wouldn’t say in normal conversation?”

“That’s right.”

“What’s Kimaya’s, Hi’m just curious!” Yuki chortled.

“I’m not telling you! Sigh, I was always afraid of Kimaya finding out and never trusting me again. What if she runs away from home, or starts acting paranoid because I know the code?”

“At least you’re doing the honest thing now.” Haruka reasoned, having to sit on the floor while the adults occupied the seats. “As soon as we see what this Carter guy is up to, we’ll tell the Kids Next Door about Project Daycare and put a stop to it.”

“Why is she here again?” asked Yuki.

“Poison- and chemical-based villains are her specialty.” Nolan remarked.

“Darn straight!” Haru cheered.

“Nolan, look out there!” Crystal pointed left outside the ship. “There’s some boy with four children in an airplane!”

They all looked left to see this. Indeed, there was a boy with sunglasses piloting a biplane. In the backseat was a football-headed baby, a spike-haired baby, a boy with an afro, and a girl with a skull mask. The pilot gave a grin and wink at the Sandmobile before flying down. “Was that Ace?” Kami asked. “What’s his deal?”

Miners’ Mountain

Django’s Ghost Train screeched to a halt in the desert. The sun was nearly set beyond the horizon, but they could not see it because of the towering mountain. The Gang members stepped off the train as Django gaped in horror. “I don’t remember this being here!”

“This dern mountain?” Kimaya asked, her boots clanking as she stepped beside him.

“Take a closer look! It’s a freaking coal mountain!”

Leo, Beat, and Rhyme came to observe. It was a mountain of rubble that smelled like burning sulfur, or some chemical they didn’t know, with coal trucks driving along it. Django approached a pile of rocks that were glowing green and picked one up. He scratched some gravel off. “So, he’s been mining for more all this time.”

“Who you talkin’ about?” Kimaya asked.

“No one…” Django crushed the rock in his hand. “Pueblo de Niebla’s somewhere on the other side. I can’t imagine how it looks now… Must be horrible.”

“Yo man, I thinkin’ about backin’ outta this trip!” Beat said, pinching his nose. “This smells WORSE than skunks makin’ a poop mountain! It smells like… DEATH makin’ one!”

“Yeah, Kimaya!” Kaleo pinched his nose shut. “Even I think it smells bad. Let’s just go home.”

Kimaya held the Keyblade and aimed it up at the mountain. She felt an odd magnet-like force pulling it. “I gotta see what this is. This magic key’s puttin’ off some weird mojo.”

“I say just shove that magic key up a wizard’s magic nose and forget it!” Beat shouted. “This is the kind of stuff you see in a nature documentary. And when those things don’t bore me to death, they freakin’ scare me!”

“Then stay behind, you scared-ass pussy. Ah wanna see where Django’s from. Is it a city of dead people, too?”

“It probably is by now. Sigh… Let’s get moving.” Django approached the slope.

Kimaya followed him, and then Leo. Beat and Rhyme exchanged worried glances as the former said, “Stay close to me, Rhyme. That ain’t the only weird smell Ah smell here.” (Play “Canadian Wilderness” from Sly 2!)

Stage 61: Pueblo de Niebla

Mission: Get to the Fogged Village.

Act 1: Miners’ Mountain

The slope was too slippery to step up normally, so The Gang jumped up some flat parts until they reached the top of the gravel hill. They had view of part of the mountain range, looking down into a gorge where a machine appeared to be mining from a glowing green pit. The Gang tried to travel along a right path, but a coal truck was coming and would run them over carelessly. They saw a truck drive by on a low path on their left, so they decided to jump down and ride it a short way. It was coming to a tunnel, so the kids jumped to the ledge above it, back on the previous path, which was past the point where the coal trucks came out on this path.

They followed a snaky road between some large coal mounds, then came to a small field where some filthy-looking miners were grilling burgers and drinking beer, engaged in laughter. Beat and Rhyme withheld from barfing when their soot-covered gloves picked up the burgers to begin eating. “I wouldn’t mind a bite.” said Django. “Let’s kick their asses!” He ran out to strum a sonic wave at one of the miners. They grabbed guns and tried to shoot the kids, so The Gang scattered, with the Bitos riding their skateboards. The siblings circled around the miners while Kimaya bent a stream of gas through the grill, using the resulted flame to scorch the miners’ butts. In their effort to put the fire out, Beat and Rhyme blast Song Beams to knock them out.

Django proceeded to eat the remaining burgers before pushing the propane-powered grill toward a large stone wall. “Mmm, not bad. Leo, see if you can blow this up.” Kaleo nodded and farted a Gas Bomb at the grill, exploding in the fire, which in turn blew up the propane tank and blasted an opening in the wall. They peeked inside the cave, seeing bits of gravel dripping from the ceiling. “A cave through a rubble mountain?” Beat questioned.

“I know, it isn’t stable.” Django said, strumming a black skateboard with a skull design into existence. “We better be quick if we wanna get through!” With that, The Gang members hopped on their skateboards and rode through the cave, Django using his eyes as red flashlights. They dodged boulders and dripping gravel that would follow with boulders, then reached a left curve where they skated up the wall before shifting direction. They jumped a gap and grinded across minecart tracks, having to jump between tracks before they collapsed. They jumped back on a road, jumping all the small bumps as the ceiling began to cave in behind them. They made a tight turn to the rock before coming out of the cave.

Their momentum increased as they skated down a hill, and had a nice view of the sunset in the distance. They skated down to a field and got off their boards. There was a Sombrero Shy Guy in the middle of the field, playing the level’s music. His notes summoned Red Nocturne, Blue Rhapsody, Green Requiem, and Yellow Opera Heartless. The floating bells cast their respective elements, but when The Gang tried to hit them, the Heartless dodged swiftly, being powered by the Sombrero Guy’s song. Kaleo was able to fart a Gas Bomb to explode against several Heartless, but the Green Requiems healed their comrades.

The Sombrero Guy danced away from the action, keeping the Heartless empowered. “Hey, buddy! I know a song you can play!” Django summoned four skeletons around the Shy Guy and had them gang up. “It’s called ‘Your Funeral!’” With the music spell gone, the Heartless were weakened. Kimaya flipped around and stylishly cut them with her Keyblade, and when some flew too high, she blasted laser bullets. For each Heartless defeated, a captive heart flew out of it.

“You got some weird-ass animals in your hometown, Django.” Kimaya said.

“No we don’t. I dunno what those things were. But I got a bad feeling.”

The Gang progressed down the path, coming to a wide area with a chasm and minecart tracks over it. The carts were simply rolling back and forth, and had piles of coal in them. The kids jumped on the first when it came over, then to a cart on a track that went right, one more that went forward, and jumped to the next ledge. They followed another path to a very expansive field with lots of short hills, which all made a wavy formation. A sudden gust of wind brushed across the field, The Gang shielding their eyes as gravel blew. “This isn’t normal, either!” Django yelled. “What…”

They saw someone soar in from the sky. He was a thin man in a purple jumpsuit, a black heart symbol with red outline on his chest, and a tan face. He rode a flying surfboard with the same symbol. “‘ey, yo-yo, why-don’t-you; yo, why-don’t-you-kiddies-get-on-outta-here, man?” Boomhauer requested.

“Is he speaking Spanish, because I can’t understand him.” Rhyme said.
“No, it’s not Spanish. And he’s probably one of Carter’s dogs.” Django glared at him.

Boomhauer scanned the kids before setting his sights on Kimaya. “‘ey, yo… You there. Uh, dang-ol’ admin, he-he’s-pretty-reasonable, man.”

“?? ??” The Gang exchanged baffled looks.

“Uh, dang-dang-old-admin. D-Dang-old-admin, he-; admin is reasonable, man!” Boomhauer insisted.

“I’ll just say he’s sayin’ it’s Surfer Season!” Kimaya shot laser bullets from her Keyblade like a gun.

“Ahh!” Boomhauer barely dodged, soaring behind them as he used dark airbending to blow the gravel. The Gang got on their skateboards to flee when a sandstorm of gravel washed after them. Smaller waves brushed at them from the parent wave, forcing them to dodge to the sides. A pit was coming, the skaters went up a curve along the right wall, back on the path once across, then up a left curve to avoid another pit. They were skating to tall rocks blocking the path, but when larger sub-waves began to surf up from the parent, they would lift the Gang members up, giving them the chance to jump the top of the rocks.

“This is what we trained for, Raimu! Are you ready?” Beat fist-palmed.

“Yeah, Bito! Let’s rock their world! Hehe, get it, rocks!”

The rapstar siblings projected a Song Road, which they all used to glide up the hill, bouncing between lines and hitting the notes to keep the song flowing. “Brothers in the hood and-” “sisters in the jeans!” Beat and Rhyme took turns. “Boys doin’ good and-” “girls being mean!” “And when they meet up right downtown, they’ll-” “TEAR EACH OTHER all year rooo-ound!”

They got to the top of the hill, safe from the sandstorm. “You Americans have weird music.” Django remarked. He frowned as he looked down at the sandstorm. “Hmm… looks like we lost that guy. I wonder what else he has in store.” The Gang continued along a path that steadily sloped down. Air Soldier Heartless appeared, bat-like Heartless with pilot hats. Kimaya shot them with laser bullets while Django and the Bitos knocked them down with Song Beams.

“Django, you keep talking about this Carter dude.” Kimaya said. “What’s your beef with him, he done you wrong or something?”

“I’ll explain as soon as we get there. I want the entire town to hear it. Assuming there’s anybody actually left…”

At the edge of the hill was a canyon of gravel, where they had to sidle along a thin ledge on the left wall. Since it was a weak gravel ground, the ledge was crumbling under their weight, so they sidled quick to outrun the crumbling part. They were coming to the end of the ledge, but a coal truck was driving by, so they jumped down onto its load. Some of the rocks were colored with the bright green substance. The truck drove between a trench, where The Gang had to duck or jump metal scaffolds that were sticking out of the sides. When the truck drove into a tunnel, the kids jumped to a path above it.

The Gang crossed another road between large mounds of coal. Fat Bandit Heartless were stationed atop the mounds, breathing fire to ignite propane tanks, which they chucked down to explode. The Gang bolted to avoid the line of explosions, and the escape would lead them to a field of propane tanks. A single Fat Bandit coughed a fireball at one of the tanks, turning them all into a mine field. The Gang saw the exit, having to run around large holes in the ground to outrun the explosions, but they were able to get to another path within a trench.

“Hold up, pards.” Kimaya stopped them, facing forward. “Big black bulgin’ blob at 10:00.”

“But my watch says it’s seven!” Kaleo whined.

“It is, and it’s not a blob.” Django pointed. “Take a look!”

The black mass at the end of the path was a huge cloud of black smoke. The source of the smoke was a bug sprayer, which Dale Gribble was using to fly. He had the Heartless Emblem on his chest and hat, and his suit was a preying mantis skin. He blew smoke from his cigarette. “Ah could use the activation code on her… But I have a strong feeling I am also a Sleeper Agent. I probably have some weird code like… ‘Quit raping that cow’ or ‘No, I wouldn’t mind a budget cut.’ I lie awake every night in fear. I can’t turn on a fellow Sleeper. Best to just put you outta your misery.”

He sent the black cloud to sweep over the path, and with the previous field still burning from explosions, The Gang was ensnared. Kimaya and Leo stepped in front and threw their hands up, using poisonbending to create an invisible shield. The black gas was strong, and they felt their selves getting overwhelmed. There was something unnatural about it.

The Sandmobile was gliding over the artificial mountains, seeing the black cloud and the person creating it. “What is that thing?” Haruka questioned.

“Let’s fly down and ask it.” Nolan said assertively. However, Boomhauer flew in front and used dark wind to blow their aircraft away. When the Sandmobile recomposed, the surfer flew up and bashed the ship with his board, sending it crashing on the ground.

“COUGH, kuoh!” Beat coughed. “Man, I don’t wanna die like no bug! Can’t you DO somethin’, Django?”

“I can’t see through this smoke!” Django yelled, blasting rays from his guitar. “I’d like to hit him, but…”

The Keyblade flashed in Kimaya’s hand. The odd magnetic pull was aiming it upward. She aimed the blade that direction as a laser shot, striking Dale perfectly in the chest as his black cloud dispersed. “Oof!” The exterminator gripped his chest. “Some kind of newfangled laser-key-gun technology… The future’s coming for us all.” He retreated.

The ground was spray-painted black as a result. They turned left at the end of the path, coming to a field of pumpjacks. The ground was covered in oil, and if they stepped too close to the holes where the jacks were mining, they would slip and slide in. They used some flat rock platforms on their left to cross the first oil slope. Kimaya and Leo held onto their friends and used Poison Whip to rope the back end of the pumpjack, swing to another, rope it, and swing to a platform. The Gang jumped to a coal-filled minecart, which started to move along its rails that would lead it into the pit. Before it did, they jumped to another cart, and when this one rolled toward a pit, they jumped another—then immediately jumped once more as that one slid in a pit instantly.

“They clearly set ’em up like that just to troll us.” Django figured. They were almost at the end of the field, but the slope before it was angled like a triangle. They used their skateboards to shred across this angle, keeping perfect balance, or else they would zip into the oily pit on either side. They made it to the edge of the slick field, setting their feet on dry ground. They passed through a short trench and discovered a lone coal truck, its headlights on, but its driver absent.
“Alright, we can use this to drive to the village!” Django hopped in the driver’s seat with an eager grin.

“You got a driver’s license?” Beat asked suspiciously.

“Hey, if I can drive a train, a truck will be no problem.”

“That logic’s more convincing than Gingerbread running from a fox.” Kimaya said as she rode shotgun. “Let’s hit town with this gas horse, fellers!”

“Seriously, Kim, the cowgirl talk isn’t for you.” Beat said as the other three climbed onto the coal pile.

The area was growing darker by the minute, and soon night would be completely upon them. They used the truck’s headlights to see the path, avoiding usual hazards like pitfalls and rocks. The small propane tanks were more difficult to see, and when Django hit one of them, the truck took damage from the explosion. “YO, watch it, DJ!” Beat shouted. Heartless Bandits, who wore white turbans and blue suits, climbed up to attack the rooftop riders with their swords, forcing Beat, Rhyme, and Leo to fight back and push them off.

Django hit the boost to drive the truck up a slope and over a chasm, resulting in an uncomfortable bumpy landing. Afterwards, a large metal wall was opening and closing sideways. Django hit the brake to avoid crashing, then sped forward when the wall opened. He had to repeat the actions for more opening walls, during which Red Nocturnes shot fireballs at the truck. The Bito kids blasted Song Beams to defeat them. They came to a row of five walls that opened and closed sequentially. Django waited for the first to open, hit the gas, and sped through the doors as they were opening, then drove up and over a chasm, followed by a forceful land.

“Django, some idgit’s standing in the road!” Kimaya pointed up ahead. There was a bloated purple fat man wearing only briefs, stretching his arms in a blocking position. He had a Heartless Emblem.

“Then I guess tonight’s the night fatheads die.” Django kept driving, showing no concern for the man.

The minute the truck made contact, it was slowing to a halt. “Hnnnnrrrrrr!” Bill Dauterive kept as firm as he could, pouring every ounce of strength into pushing the truck. “You think you getting past me? Ah once kept a 200 pound leg press … hmmm, for two days straight!”

“MOVE ASIDE, gramps!” Django stomped the gas and applied more pressure.

“HOOOO-WEEEE!” Bill felt his legs slipping. With an extra thrust from the truck, it bumped his legs—he fell back as his legs were bent up. “SOOO! I think my rectum just… went through my spine.” The truck forced itself over and squished his bones. “SQUEEEOoooo…” The kids heard a SPLAT as the truck kept driving.

“That must be the entrance to the village!” Django pointed at the huge, upcoming gate. “I’ll ram this baby through it!”

“YOU CRAZY, D?!?” Kimaya shouted. “You ain’t worried about squishing little kids on the street?!”

“Not one bit!” Django narrowed his eyes.

“Well FRAP this! ABORT, FELLERS!” She jumped out the door.
“COWBOYS DON’T SAY ABORT!” Beat jumped off.

“No, they say GIT OFF!” Rhyme jumped off, then Kaleo.

They watched from a safe distance as Django smashed through the gate. They didn’t want to imagine how many people were smashed on the other side, and they were even thinking of turning around and heading back. But they guessed they had to see if Django wasn’t more dead. (End song.)

After the smoke cleared, they saw the truck crashed against a fountain in the center of town. The fountain wasn’t leaking anything, and it looked like it had been dry for ages. Django fell out of the truck, then got up as he limped toward The Gang. “Well... Welcome to my home.” He said with no enthusiasm.

Pueblo de Niebla was a withered village of wooden houses, filthy streets, and putrid air. The only thing to compliment it were the streetlights that came on when night fell. “This place is...” Kimaya began.

“Really depressing...” Rhyme finished.

They saw people peeking out of windows. Kids stepped out of the houses. They all had pale brown skin and were coughing. Their clothing was ragged and only a few of them wore shoes. “Es que un esqueleto?” a boy asked. (“Is that a skeleton?”)

“Es Parca? (Is it Grim Reaper?)” a girl asked.

Django climbed on top of the coal truck. “People of Pueblo de Niebla!” he announced in Spanish. “I am Django de los Muertos. Yes, I just drove a truck through your door, but I had no reason not to. For you see, I was a citizen of your town! But now, I am dead! I am dead because of the man who calls himself your protector! 30 years ago, you called me an unholy demon. You ran me out of town. By this time, I am certain that everyone I knew back then is dead. You’re a new generation of suffering victims. Well, I’m back. Now I will tell you all the story. The citizens and my new friends.” He gestured at The Gang.

Django muttered, “And since my friends won’t understand jack shit of what I’m saying, here’s a language converter.” He tuned his guitar and shot a calm sonic wave at The Gang. The soundwaves of Spanish words would reform into English words. “Perfect. Ahem, now then...”

33 years ago...

It was a time when the village was slightly more peaceful than it is now. A time when the fountain was running, but it was unwise to drink from it. Django sat on the edge of the fountain and played a gentle tune on his guitar. His music was the life of the village, made them forget their sorrows. Kids were always seen around him, sitting politely with smiles on their faces. Django himself looked like the most healthy person in town, with no pale features on his brown skin, black hair with a curve at the front, and wore a black jacket, red bandana, brown pants and brown shoes.

“Thank you, thank you.” Django said with a cool smile. “I’m Django Diaz! Here all day, every day, 24/7!” Yes, that is my last name.

“I don’t think ‘Django’ is your first name.” Kimaya said.

“Shut up!”

A little girl was about to throw a coin into his cowboy hat. “Oh, there’s no need for that.” Django picked up and put his hat on. “Today’s free of charge. Now this next song is about my grandma. She lives in Miracle City, and she’s now... among her ancestors.”

“Awwww.” The kids frowned.

“This song is an ode to her memory! Ahem... Here’s the story... of Sartana. Sartana D-”

“Look, everyone!” A woman pointed to the town entrance. “The government is here!”

Django’s audience excitedly got up to gather by the entrance. “Darn it! Better remember to copyright that song.” he mumbled.

I didn’t know how long our people had been sick. But apparently, government agents were sent here to study this land, and they discovered a dangerous chemical underground. It polluted the water and even the soil, causing an epidemic. But instead of moving, the government ordered us to remain secluded, fearing that our diseases would spread. They brought fresh water, food, and medicine every week, but they didn’t stay long. However, there was something odd about their arrival...

Instead of food or medicine trucks, flatbed trucks carrying machines were parking outside the town. A black helicopter with the label Pewterschmidt Industries landed at the gates. A man in a black tuxedo, brown hair and small mustache, and a large triangle-shaped nose stepped out and greeted the town (with an agent to translate his words).

“People of Pueblo de Spanish Word: by the authority and permission of the World Government, this property is under the control of Pewterschmidt Industries. I’m Carter Pewterschmidt, and from this day forward, you can call me your second mayor.”

“We don’t have a mayor!” a woman yelled.

“Ah, perfect, I don’t have to share my pool with anyone. Anyway, the government has granted me permission to mine the land around this village for the source of the poison. My company is going to study this chemical, and from it develop a cure for your gross-looking town. Your salvation is UNDERWAY or some crap from the Bible or... something. Ahem, but my generosity doesn’t come cheap. There’s going to be a tax increase. Thankfully, we have plenty of new openings in our new mining operations. Sign-up sheets are over there.”

“None of us know how to write!” a girl shouted.

“Man, this town is boring! Fine, everyone just raise your hand if you wanna volunteer.”

The announcement caught everyone off guard, and everyone engaged in frantic, muddled discussion. Django picked up his guitar and cut through the crowds as he made his way to the east side of town. There was a rugged hill that led up to a lone house. It looked like it had been here for centuries, more decayed than any other house in town. The slightest tap against the siding may topple the whole structure.

Django creaked open the crooked front door. He tiptoed into the house, moving the cobwebs aside and stepping over the broken floorboards. There was a bed near the empty fireplace. The blanket was in a lump—someone was laying in it. The occupant was coughing as Django approached him. “You still hanging in there, Luviro?”

“Cough!” The boy gave Django a weak smile. His head was wrapped up in a blanket, and his skin was a pale white. He definitely was the most sick person in town, for he never got out of his bed. His eyes were green with yellow sclera. “I’m just fine... Amigo Django.”
He was my best friend. I visit him almost every day to bring him medicine or tell him what’s going down. It was a year beforehand when I first discovered his house.

“The town’s coming under new management, it seems.” Django told him. “Some bigwig American guy. He’s going to start mining our town for the chemical. The townspeople don’t know how to feel about this, and neither do I. I mean… won’t it just harm our town more if it were more exposed?”

“But why does he… want to… Cough!”

“He says that he wants to make a cure. Sigh…” Django smiled with humor. “I would never think the word ‘cure’ held meaning here. I thought sickness was our very existence. What do you think?”

“Cough. Cure… it’s funny. I only dreamed about days when I… wasn’t coughing. When I can walk and… breathe normally. I think the only reason I’m still alive… is ’cause I can imagine a day like that coming.”

“Hmm… The idea of a cure does sound like a dream. I’d like to imagine it, too…” He closed his eyes.

He looked at Luviro. “Do you wanna hear the2 song about that legend you told me about?”

“Yes… I like that song.”

“Okay.” Django sat on an old chair and played his guitar, singing softly.

Six magic gems… from a faraway land

Six you must find… Find them if you can

End-less fire… eeeendless poooower

The key that which lies… at the top of the tooower

Just follow your heart… to a suuuunny toomooorrow

You will find the core… of your love and your sorrow

With unmatched strength… harder… than stone

With friendship… you’ll never be… alone…

_I was the only person in town born with magic. Maybe that’s why I’m not as ill. The other townspeople wouldn’t look at that too well. They would think I’m a demon. And I guess they’re right. Luviro was the only one who knew. My music eased his soul; namely when I played this song his grandma used to sing him. His grandma passed away, too. It makes me wonder…_

Three years later

Pewterschmidt Industries dug several mines and brought more mining equipment. Taxes increased, forcing more people to volunteer as miners, even children. Dozens perished. A factory was being constructed on the north edge of town, and what that had of it became the primary mine site. For Django, life went on like normal. His music kept the hearts of the children at ease, kept their faces smiling, hoping there would be a brighter tomorrow.
Special volunteers wanted, the posters read in Spanish. Speak to President Pewterschmidt. Django pulled one of these papers down, looking at it with a raised brow. He headed to the factory.

Mining operations were in progress under the factory’s basement. They had found a flowing river of the chemical, which was a pinkish-red color. A crane was lowered down into the river. Carter Pewterschmidt watched as a boulder was raised from its depths. The crane dropped the stone beside Carter.

“President Pewterschmidt.” Carter turned to face an agent, who was standing by a Mexican boy with a guitar. “This child wanted to speak to you regarding the ‘special volunteers’ posting.”

“Really?” Carter smoked a cigarette. “And what’s our young volunteer’s name? …Cough.”

“Django Diaz.” The boy replied. He played a musical spell that would allow him to understand and speak English.

“Ooo, badass!” Carter perked. He spoke more formally, “Ahem, well, Django, when I say ‘special volunteers,’ I don’t mean just anyone.” Carter said as he walked slowly around him, hands folded at his back. “Little boys your age believe in magic and wizards, don’t you?”

Django raised a brow. “Yes?”

“Well, those little stories aren’t just fantasies. There are forces in this universe that are hard for people to understand. And we believe that if we were to understand them, extraordinary things could happen… Cough.”

“But what does that have to do with saving my hometown?”

“Because, boy, the chemical we are researching is one that we only heard in legends. And this river you see here,” Carter waved an arm at the river as Django looked down at it, “is just how it was drawn in the books. It’s called Lazarus. And the legends read that Lazarus is a powerful substance that can cure any illness. Unfortunately, if the source of the Lazarus was tainted in any way, it would create the opposite effect. Cough!”

“So the reason everybody in Niebla is sick is because this ‘Lazarus’ is tainted?”

“Yes. If we were to purify it, we could develop a cure to heal not just your village, but all the sick people in the world.”

“What’s the answer to purifying it? The reason for your ‘special volunteer’?”

“The answer is over here. This way…”

Carter led Django up the river’s trench, through a small tunnel. They got to a room with a pit that glowed a faint red. They looked into the pit. A huge cube was sitting in the river, with only the top sticking out. It cast a square shadow on the ceiling above, while the area around it reflected dim red light. “We believe this is the source of the Lazarus. It’s being clogged by that stone. We built that giant crane to lift it.” Carter pointed at the crane on the ceiling, “but it wouldn’t budge. Then we brought in some agents who knew earthing. Even they couldn’t lift it. Clearly, this stone is not natural. The special volunteers I’m looking for are anyone who know how to get that stone out of this hole. Hm, but maybe asking this town was the wrong idea. Cough, cuah!”

Django looked at the guitar in his hands. He faced up at Carter, “Why do you care about our town, anyway? If you had someone who could lift it, why should they?”
“Django… I have a secret to tell you.” He faced the boy more closely. “I may look like a man in the prime of my youth… but I am not. I have cancer. Cough! I feel so awful every day I wake up.
And it makes me think about the plight of others… It makes me think of all the poor, innocent people who are suffering. Django… I really do want to help you. But as long as that rock is clogging up the source, we may never find a cure.”

“…Don’t give up just yet.” Django turned the tuners on his guitar. “You may have just found your special guy.” He closed his eyes and remembered the levitation song his grandma taught him. He played it softly. “Rise… to the sky… Rise… to the sky… Riiiiise, oooohhh riiiiise… very hiiiiigh…”

Carter was confused as to what he was doing. But when he looked at the cube again, it began to twitch. “Riiiiise… oooohhh riiiiise… Riiiiise… uuuup hiiiiigh… But the ceiling… works, tooooo… Will you dooooo it… Won’t youooouu…”

The cube began to rise. It rose slowly out of the pit, dripping with the red Lazarus. Carter moved back when Django floated the cube over the ledge. He set it down and stopped his song. Carter didn’t recognize the symbols on the stone, and Django said it wasn’t Spanish. There was a keyhole below the writing.

Regardless, they both viewed down into the unclogged pit. The Lazarus bubbled and began to rise.
The river flowed faster. “It worked, Django!” Carter exclaimed. “How the hell did you do that?!”

“I may have been born with… magic powers.” He smiled proudly.

“Magic? You mean like… a wizard?”

“I guess so. Except instead of using a wand, I play this guitar.” He strummed a few notes.

“Well, that just… works in my favor entirely.” Carter grabbed the boy and threw him into the pit.

“AAAAAAAAHHH!” A searing pain burned Django’s body. His clothes dissolved, his hat dissolved, he flailed his arms and legs desperately as his skin turned red. “WHAT ARE YOU DOING?! GET ME OUT OF HERE, AAAAAHHH!”

“There was one more page of the book I forgot to mention. The Lazarus’s healing properties will only be revealed with a live sacrifice. My agents always wondered why you were the only healthy brat in this God-forsaken town. Now you come to me with the straight-up truth that you have magic. Just what the Lazarus needed: a healthy body of magic energy. You served me well, Django. Now you’ll be able to curse your gods in person.”

“AAAAAAAAHHH! AAAAAAAAAHH… AAAAAAA…”

His flesh burned off… his eyes melted… and soon, he knew, his skeleton would be lost, too. But it wasn’t.

Django thought he would feel relief when the pain was gone. But he found himself in a realm of darkness. His bones gazed up at the black mass with red eyes, which spoke with a deep voice that sent a chill down his bare spine. “Your death has come sooner than I expected… Oh well. I still have a debt, I suppose. Django Diaz… I am Lucifer. A close friend of your grandmother, Sartana.
Sartana of the Dead, as you already know her.

“It was her request that I grant you magic abilities. And it was her request… that I let you share her fate. Now, I shall revive you, Django… You will be of the Dead… but you shall walk among the earth and seek your revenge…”
A dark mist shrouded Django’s body. He was given a black shirt, black leather pants with boots, and a brownish-black cowboy hat that had a curve like his hair, and a skull and crossbones. His boney claws stuck out of his dark-brown gloves, swirly lines appeared on his skull, and his eyes glowed red. He raised his hand. A black guitar burned into being from blue flames. He brushed the other hand across the strings and made a strum.

The Lazarus turned a bright green thanks to Django’s “sacrifice.” Carter slowly climbed down, dipping only his legs into the Lazarus. He sniffed the toxic air and breathed a sigh of relief. He never felt so purified… his throat so clear… He climbed out of the pool. “But how long does it last… that’s the question. We’ll keep mining the land around this village for more bodies of Lazarus. Make sure the townspeople don’t find out about this.” Carter told his men before walking away from the pit.

He whipped around at the sound of a BURST, seeing a bright blue flame rise from the pit. A person flew out of it, landing firmly on the ground. It was a skeleton with large claws, wearing a bandana like Django’s and holding a guitar at his back. He looked up at Carter with brimming red eyes. “Well? Aren’t you gonna help the town?”

“Well? What?”

“You said you wanted to cure the town… You gonna keep your word?”

“You’re a… You’re a demon!”

“I’m not the only demon… Are you gonna help the town?”

“SEND IN THE RANCOR!”

At Carter’s command, a large cage was opened. A hideous brown monster with a rock-like body and misshapen mouth stomped out, roaring ravenously. The monster saw the skeleton child and felt a lust to crunch him to pieces. The Rancor charged over and swiped an arm at Django, who dodged and ran. The Rancor blasted a sound wave that Django countered with his guitar. Django ran and slid under the monster’s legs, then climbed up its back, to the head.

Django gouged his claws into the Rancor’s eyes, the monster screeching with agony. The Rancor stormed through the mine, knocking down all machines and people in its wake. Django kept his fingers in its eyes, wanting it to suffer until it felt like dropping dead.

The Rancor ended up bursting out of the factory, furiously shaking its head until Django flew off. The skeleton landed in the center of town. He looked around at the surrounding citizens. They were terrified of the living corpse, backing away and muttering prayers. The children who enjoyed Django’s songs didn’t recognize him. They only saw a cursed being.

“EVERYBODY IN YOUR HOUSES!” Carter shouted through a megaphone. “This demon appeared in my factory and summoned this monster! Get inside, we’ll take care of it!”

Everybody scrambled to their houses like a swarm of bats fluttering out of a cave. Agents surrounded Django and aimed shotguns. Django glared murderously at Carter when he marched up between the soldiers. “I helped you!” Django growled. “Why are you betraying me? Why are you betraying these people?”

“You may be a demon, but you’re still a child.” Carter said. “So I wouldn’t expect you to understand. This is a world of business and profit. The people who rule this world are people who know how to make money. Those are the only people worth saving. And if everybody had access to a medicine that can cure all, then we would be out of business. I need to keep people hoping for cures and miracles. And these people won’t be hopeful with some unholy bone child walking their streets. You don’t belong here. Now, leave.”

Django stared at the men with their guns trained. He stared at the people peeking from the windows. He felt their fear. He felt Carter’s desire. These dark feelings… He could feel them like the toxic air. “Fine.” Django turned to the town entrance. His new boots clanking their metal at each step, he marched out.

He marched out to the dry, dry desert. He couldn’t feel the sand in the breeze, nor the warmth of the sun as it set behind his home. His legs never felt weary from the long walk.

From that day on… I hated the world. People are cruel… adults especially. I began to ignore law and meaning.

Present time

“I went to Miracle City to live with my grandma.” The people were still listening to his story. “I almost forgot the plight of my people. I gave up on them. Then one day, Grandma took me to Cleveland to meet the witch-doctor. I wandered off on my own… and met the first group of people I could call my friends.”

Django jumped off the truck, beside The Gang. “What was it you told me, Kimaya? It was understood that we have rough backgrounds. It couldn’t get any worse than being dead like me. You let me into your crew without question. And I paid regular visits, hung out with you guys… because deep down, a part of me sought coldblooded revenge. You said The Gang looks out for each other… If there was something I wanted from you, I shouldn’t hesitate to ask. Well… can you understand what I’m asking you, and why?” He spun and indicated the pale, dire townspeople.

“Oh, I understand perfectly.” They whipped in the direction of the factory. Carter Pewterschmidt marched up, the citizens limping aside to let him and the Heartless Hank Hill through. His hair and mustache were grey from old age, and he wore blue business attire. “Well, the translator did, but I understood… the translation. After all this time, you finally came back. I figured a demon like you would leave his people to die.”

“Don’t you people see?!” Django yelled. “This man is a fraud, he’s been using you all along! He doesn’t care about your health!”

“Go ahead and tell them. They’re too sick and weak to do anything. Why do you think this place is the Land Forsaken By God? Because these people have always been hopeless, not even worth saving. They may sell everything they own just to buy medicine from me, but they’re better off waiting for death.”

“Wow, man…” Kimaya said with disgust. “You have got to be the sickest son of a bitch I know.”

“Oh, I’m far from it.” Carter smirked at the girl in the Western hat. “That Male Administrator Is The Most Reasonable Man I Know.”

A spark flashed in Kimaya’s brain—she stood upright and saluted. “Agent 6767 activated. What are your orders?”

“What the fuck?!” Beat gaped.

“So, you really were a Sleeper.” Carter said. “This couldn’t be any easier. Agent Double-67: destroy that skeleton!”
“Understood.” She lashed her Keyblade at Django.

“HEY!” Django swung his guitar to counter her attacks, then jumped away to strum a sonic wave, which Kim avoided. The townspeople retreated back indoors.

“Kimaya, what are you doing?!” Rhyme cried.

“It must be some kind of mind control!” Django dodged Kimaya’s swift swings and slashed his claws at her face. “Rhyme, Beat, you two are musicbenders, see if you can cure it!”

“Man, the mood ain’t right!” Beat shouted. “There’s way too much pressure in the air, why don’t you use your magic notes?”

“I’m not getting a good vibe myself!” Django said as he countered more of her slashes.

“Alright, alright. Lemme find a good beat,” the rapper put his boombox down and tapped the song select, “okay! Rhyme, on three! One, two, ahem: Doooon’t start unbelieeeeving. Never don’t not know- AAH!” Beat was shot in the stomach by Hank Hill.

“BEAT!” Rhyme and Leo cried. The sister knelt beside her brother.

“Ahh… Rhyme!…” he choked.

“Yer outta time, Mister.” Hank said before shooting him once more. Beat fell on his back, dead.

“BITOOOOO!” Rhyme ran up and knelt over his face. Her big brother showed no signs of life or motion. Rhyme’s pretty blue eyes were overflowing with tears. “Beat… Beat… BEEEAT…”

“Rhyme?” Leo spoke, traumatized by the sight himself. He never saw the younger girl look so upset. In fact, he couldn’t remember a time when Beat and Rhyme were ever apart. He approached carefully.

“BEEEAT. BEEEAT. BEEEAT.” Leo hesitated as Rhyme’s voice grew. “BEEEEAAAAT!” Her body fell dead atop her brother’s as a dark mass came out of her. The black-purple creature had the same shape and size as Rhyme, but it had a hole in its chest, and when it turned around, Leo saw its frightening skull mask. “AAAAHH!”

“BUAAH, GET OFF ME!” Rhyme lunged at Hank, biting and tearing his arm. “Got damn little devil, I swear-!”

A gust of wind created by Boomhauer blew the dark creature off. As Rhyme snarled at him, Heartless Soldiers appeared. Rhyme blasted dark music notes to attack them. “Rhyme…” Leo looked between Rhyme’s body and the creature, growing more confused.

“LEO, BEHIND YOU!” Django screamed.

The earth shook as Bill Dauterive stomped into town. His body was not splat, his bones were not misplaced, and he towered over the village at 40 feet. “I’m a BIIIIG man! And I need a BIIIIIG bowl of cereal!”

“AAAAAAHHH!” Kaleo bolted to the east side of town.

“WHERE YA GOIN’, Puny?!” Bill charged after him, knocking over streetlights and squishing many of the lesser Heartless. “Don’tchu wanna goooo in my mooouuuth?”

“Well, I have nothing to worry about.” Carter said assuringly. “I don’t know how you boys turned into mutants, but as long as these brats get squashed, I don’t really care.”

“We aim to please ya, Mr. Pewterschmidt.” Hank nodded. “But what’re you gonna do about that there Kimaya girl? Ain’t she the one you’re s’posed to stop?”

“She’s a Sleeper Agent, don’t you see? As soon as she gets rid of that walking corpse, I’ll tell her to kill herself. Then no more Twenty Keys!”

In the sky above

This group of kids had a hawk’s-eye view of the coal mountain, and all the verminous Heartless. The conflict taking place at the village caught their attention. “The situation’s worse than we thought.” said a girl wielding a large scythe. She had sandy-blond hair in two long bangs, green eyes, wore a black tux that flowed like a cape, and a red patterned skirt underneath.

Spirit KND Sector SCYTHE Leader

MAKA ALBARN

“I’m not afraid!” A boy with spiky blue hair smirked, whirling his kusarigama. He wore a black sleeveless shirt, large white pants, and a star marked on his right shoulder, gloves, and shoes. “I’ll chop every last one of them to pieces!”

Spy of Sector SCYTHE

BLACK ☆STAR

“These aren’t Hollows we’re dealing with.” A girl with purple hair, golden eyes, and a red dress said. She had a skull mask on her head. “They’re Heartless. In fact, I read that they and Hollows were enemies.”

Mage of Sector SCYTHE

ELLEN WICKENS

“It doesn’t matter.” Maka said. “It’s time we put an end to them. Sector SCYTHE, Battle Stations!”

Yeah, this is kind of plot twist palooza coming up. :P I didn’t think I would write Django’s backstory this early, but I did. Lol I think turning the Hill Gang into Heartless is one of my funniest ideas, yet. XD Ahh, the Hill Gang’s from King of the Hill, Heartless are from Kingdom Hearts, Carter is from Family Guy, and Sector SCYTHE is from Soul Eater—except for Ellen Wickens from Witch’s House. I got the Lazarus from Batman.

Chapter 60: The Keeper of the Keys

Pueblo de Niebla

“COME BACK, LITTLE MAN!” Bill Dauterive was hot on Kaleo’s tail, reaching both arms and drooling like a child. “I just wanna plaaaay!”

“THIS REMINDS ME OF THAT SCARY ANIME WITH THE GIANT PERVERTS!” Kaleo screamed, growing more sweaty by the minute.

A chain-sickle swooped in and SLASHED off Bill’s left leg. “OOOOOOOG!” He fell over with unbalanced weight.

Kaleo turned in shock at the sight, taking the moment to catch his breath. “HEEEEE-YAH!” The chain-sickle sliced off Bill’s right arm, and Leo gaped when its wielder flipped over the giant. “You call yourself a Titan?! You’re a BUG compared to the godly might of Black Star!” the boy with spiky blue hair taunted.

“WOW! THAT WAS SO AWESOME!” Leo cheered.

“Thank you!” Black Star spoke with pride. “The great god acknowledges your-!” He perked when he realized: “WAIT A SEC, how do you see me?!” He pointed at Leo frantically. “I’m in spirit form, mortals can’t see me, which means you aren’t normal!”

“YAAAAAH!” Leo gripped his head and rolled around. “I’M A FREEAAK!”

“Black Star, wait!” A woman’s voice came from the chain-sickle. “I’m not sensing anything unusual, he’s a normal human!”

“Are you sure, Tsubaki?” Black Star looked at the crying Leo weirdly. “Looks pretty weird to me.”

“He certainly seems… odd. But he is a normal human.”

“But he’s still seeing me. I’m gonna see what’s up.”

“Ahh-ha-ha-haaaa!” Leo still cried as Black Star approached him. “WAAAH-ha-haaaa! WAH ha-”

“HEY, BIGMOUTH!” Black Star kicked him in the face. “CEASE your wailing and bow before Black Star!”

“YES, MY LORD!” Leo bowed down quickly. But then he looked up in confusion. “Wait, who are you?”
“Who am I?! I am the Supreme God of the Universe! My power outranks that of Arceus, of Dialga, of ALL gods combined!” He made many epic poses as he spoke. “The very stuttering of my name will cause mortals to faint! Brace yourself, lesser being, for I am Black Star!”

“Snoooore…” Leo fell asleep.

“PAY ATTENTION TO ME!” Black Star kicked him.

“DAAAAH!” He fell back. He got up with an excited grin, “Hey, my name’s Kaleo! I get Dandy grades in school and take a bath every month, give or take!”

“Oooooaaaaaa…” They both turned to Bill Dauterive, whose amputated arm and leg turned into dark mist, and reformed on his body. When Bill got back up, he grew a few more feet tall.

“IMPOSSIBLE!” Black Star shouted. “No one recovers from Black Star’s reign of terror! I’ll cut you as many times as it takes! AAAHHH!” He lashed his sickles and chopped all four limbs off. They reformed on Bill again, and he grew some more.

“Black Star, I feel his energy level increasing!” Tsubaki yelled. “Just take this human to a safe place!”

“How are we supposed to hide from him?!”

“I know how we can lose him!” Kaleo announced, grabbing a can of Green Flurp. He guzzled it up, got in a sitting position, and Fart Rocketed up to Bill’s face. “SMELL YA LATER!” He turned around and Gas Bombed him up close, the blast blowing Leo forward as Black Star ran after.

“AAAAAA! It smells worse than I did on all my first dates!” Bill waved his hand by his nose in a desperate attempt to be rid of the smell. He opened his eyes and saw his prey had gone. “And they ran… just like all my first dates.” Bill drooped his head in sadness. “Siiigh… Look how fat I am. I’m never gonna meet a woman like this. Well, I guess I still have a shot at Brittney Spears.” He stomped away to search for the kids.

He bypassed a rocky enclosing, where Leo and Black Star were hiding. “That was an impressive maneuver.” The spirit said.

“Thanks, it’s Flurp!” Leo held up the green can. “Wanna taste?”

“Sure! It should quench my godly thirst!” Black Star took the can, put one hand to his hip, and poured it down his godly throat. “Eh?” The Flurp came through his pelvis like green pee. The can fell out of his ghostly hand and spilled on the ground.

“Kee hee hee heeeeee!” Leo’s grin stretched wide like The Joker.

“Deceitful little urchin.” Star folded his arms and scowled. “Are you a member of the Human Kids Next Door?”

“Uh-uh.” Leo shook ‘no.’ “I’m with The Gang. The Cleveland City Street Gang. Well, we’re just ‘The Gang,’ but some people get confused by…”

“Then what’s your deal?”

“Er, I came here with my friends because Kimaya’s magic key told her to. But then Kimaya turned evil and attacked our singing skeleton, and Beat…” Leo gasped. “BEAT’S DEAD! BEEEEAAAAT!”
“Kaleo, stop.”

“Oh, Beeeaat!” Kaleo pounded his fist on the ground. “I forgive you for all the times you wedged me! I know that’s your spirit trying to apologize!”

“I ain’t apologizing, you dumbass! I’m tellin’ you to look up!”

“Ahh?” He looked up. Beat was floating there with an intangible body. “HE’S A GHOOOOST! YAAAAAAAH!” Leo bolted across the field again.

“Beat?” Black Star looked up at him with a cocked brow. “Wait, you mean this is the kid you’ve been hanging around?”

“Yeah, yeah. Look, Ah never told ’em I was already dead until now, a’ight? I was afraid Django would find out, but he never said anything. Just go catch him, I need to help my sister.” Beat flew back to town.

“Ugh. And you think I’m a troublemaker, Tsubaki.” Black Star remarked before chasing Leo.

Lazarus Plant

“HA ha ha ha!” Carter chuckled as he entered his private quarters, where his wife was sitting on a chair and drinking tea. “Babs, you will not believe my luck! Ever since the Leaders told me one of the Seven Lights would come for that Gibberish Rock, I’ve been worried as hell! And it TURNS out that the person that was going to look for it is a SLEEPER Agent! And to think that little boney demon brought her! I mean, look at this!”

He turned on the TV, displaying Kimaya and Django locked in battle, Keyblade against Mystic Guitar. “Not only can I finally get rid of Django, but once Kimaya is finished, I’ll order her to kill herself. The Twenty Keys that the Leaders kept whining about GONE,” snapped fingers, “just like that!”

“You’re very diabolical, Carter.” Babs said nonchalantly when a cute little Shadow Heartless brushed by her legs. “When are you going to call someone to get rid of these rodents?”

“Those things just showed up outta nowhere. I duno what they are, but they just started doing what I say, and I say ‘Why not?’ YOU, Fatty, bring me a coffee in my Star Wars Collectors’ Glass!” he ordered a Large Body. The Heartless saluted and marched off. “At least I’m getting service from somebody.”

“Oh, buck off, Carter. You’re so fat.”

“And you’re an old bat. HAH! Don’t set me up for rhyme if you can’t do the time!” Carter’s phone rang. He answered, “Hello? ’EY, Director Bullock, mah man! Hey, I have a funny story!”

“President Pewterschmidt, we’ve received a notice that the Sleeper Agent 6767, aka Kimaya Heartly, has been activated! She was heading to your location, was she not?”

“Yeah, I activated her! Like, super convenient! You guys said she wasn’t ready, but she’s kicking ass!”

“Carter, you have to deactivate her right now!”

“W-What? I don’t understand.”
“She was programmed as Agent 6767, but we never had the chance to perfect her! Instead of turning on you in seven days, she’ll turn on you in one hour!”

“AN HOUR?!”

“Deactivate her now! If she really is the Light, you can’t risk it!”

“Grrr!” The fight was still continuing on the TV. He looked at his watch, which read 8:05. “It’s only been 10 minutes since I activated her. If she doesn’t kill that skeleton in time, I’ll tell her to kill herself through the PA. Babs, I’ll be in my office.” He marched away. “If things go south, I may have to phone in CP10.”

“Yes, you enjoy your Star Wars, dear.”

Miners’ Mountain

With its flight engines busted, Nolan drove the Sandmobile recklessly across the coal mountain. He was now speeding through the road with the opening/closing walls. “Nolan, when did you say you got your license?!” Kami exclaimed.

“I just assumed ex-KND ops and vigilantes were exempt from needing a license.”

“You drive your son to school in this thing!” Crystal shouted. “For God’s sake, no wonder you have parent/child drama!”

“That must be the village! Let’s park here!” Nolan stomped the brake and stopped the car, the passengers lunging forward.

“I’m glad I don’t read comic books.” Kami sighed as the five got out of the car and ran to the village.

“Holy crap!” Yuki gaped at the sight of the rampaging Heartless. On the rooftops, there was a sandy-blonde girl slashing at Heartless with a scythe, her swings precise and her heart furious.

“I’d like to say that girl has it covered.” Nolan said. “Cause I wouldn’t wanna be in her way.”

“What girl?” asked Kami.

“Yes, I don’t see anyone.” Crystal agreed.

“Are you kidding, she’s right there.” Haru pointed.

“Wait a minute.” Nolan scanned the girl with his goggles. “She’s doesn’t have any bio readings. In fact, I… can’t seem to scan her at all.”

“DAAAHH!” They looked right and saw Django be blown out of an alley, raising his guitar to block Kimaya’s jump-slice. The Mystic Guitar was shining red due to a defense spell.

“That’s Django!” Haru exclaimed.

“And Kimaya!” Kami followed.

While the two headed over, Nolan used Detective Vision on Kimaya. Now viewing her skeleton, a red circle was marked around part of her brain. “There’s some kind of micro chip inside her. That must be the Sleeper!”
“WATCH YOUR BACK!” Yuki grabbed Nolan and ducked aside, dodging the black lawnmower with buzzsaw teeth and fiery demon eyes. Hank Hill turned the mower about-face.

“Ah might look like a regular Old Joe, but I’m pretty dang handy with machinery, I tell you what.” Hank rolled at Nolan again, but Sandman launched his grappler to the top of the gate, pulling him up and out of Hank’s way. Hank grabbed a hammer, and the ordinary tool morphed into a larger, dark-purple shape thanks to the Heartless’s chi. He bashed the town gate and caused it to vibrate. Unable to stay balanced on it, Nolan glided off and across town. Hank chased on his dark-powered lawnmower and chucked a burning propane tank, which flew surprisingly high and exploded near Sandman, forcing him to redirect leftward and crash somewhere in the village.

Kimaya had Django pinned as the latter pushed his guitar up against her Keyblade. He looked left and saw the two girls come over. “Oh hey, it’s you guys! Nice of you to join us!”

“Kimaya, what are you doing?” Kami yelled.

“Carter said some weird phrase and brainwashed her!”

Kami gasped. “He activated her?!”

“Whaddyou mean ‘activate’?”

“Kimaya’s a Sleeper Agent.” Haruka answered. “Kami told us about it. Django, what did Carter say?”

“I think it was… That Male Administrator Is The Most Reasonable Man I Know.”

“RRRR!” Kimaya slashed sideways and cut Django’s waist. Kami grabbed her daughter from behind and tried to pull back.

“It didn’t work.” Kami grunted. “You two hide someplace, I’ll try to knock some sense into her.”

Haruka helped Django up and ran away. Kimaya broke free of her mother and tried to chase, but Kami leapt in front and slashed her Keyblade. “Kimaya, I am your mother! If you don’t stop what you’re doing, no more music!”

Kim flipped and slashed down, her mom stumbling back. “As your parental figure, I ORDER you-” Kim right-slashed and up-slashed, knocking Kami on the ground. “Or maybe we’ll just sit down and-” She blocked some quick strikes from Kimaya, before the Sleeper flipped behind and knocked her forward. Kami flipped and blocked another swing, jumping to her feet as she clashed with her daughter.

Haruka and Django hid in an alley a few blocks off. “Django, what’s going on here?” Haru panted.

“This is my hometown. I brought my friends here to… Ugh, I just got done telling them!”

“I missed the backstory?”

“Yes. Look, all you need to know is the town’s being run by Carter Pewterschmidt. He’s keeping this chemical called Lazarus all to himself—it’s supposed to cure any disease, and he’s not letting the town have it! They’re suffering because of him!”

“I would say he’s doing them a favor.”

“That doesn’t mean-… Wait, who said that?”
“Clown here!” Haruka held up her cellphone. “I already briefed her on the properties of Lazarus. I don’t know how much reading Mr. Pewterschmidt did, but my knowledge is far superior. It’s true that Lazarus can keep one alive to the point of being immortal. However, it is terribly addicting. You just feel so ENERGIZED every time you step in it! It really is like the Fountain of Youth in some ways: go too long without it, you’ll start to look really, really ugly. You’ll even go downright mad if you have no access to it. I must say, Carter keeps a very convincing demeanor.”

“Are you saying that he’s trying to get people addicted to it?” Django asked. “Why he’s shipping it to stores?”

“Don’t ask me. I’m not the vigilante.”

“Mr. York said that Hugo Strange had them taken to stores.” Haru corrected. “But that still leaves a lot of questions.”

“I smell a rat hiding in my floor.” They looked up when Dale Gribble hovered over, spreading a black cloud of gas. “What they failed to have realized was that I traded my day vision for night vision. …And my lungs for gills.”

“Run!” Haru grabbed Django and ran down the street as the cloud was chasing. “YOU run, I’m already dead!” Django retorted.

“Hey-Dale, ten-ten-ten-o’clock, ten-o’clock, man!” Dale looked up when Boomhauer spun in for a crash-landing, his wind blowing the gas away. Rhyme was grabbing Boomhauer in her dark form, the surfer punching her until she came off. Boomhauer flew up and did a vertical air-slice, missing Rhyme and chopping a house in half.

“HEY, take the fight somewhere else!” Django strummed a sonic wave to blast Boomhauer back. Dale shot a black gas stream at the kids, but Haruka aimed both hands forward and made an invisible shield. She tried to withstand it, but the poison was overwhelming her. Thankfully, purple energy ropes appeared to bind Dale’s arms from behind. They were cast by Ellen, who was flying above Dale.

“I’m not sure who those people are.” Django said. Haruka ran into the broken house. “Hey, where you goin’?”

“To see if these people are all right, of course! Why, where do you wanna go?”

“Fine, you do that. I’ll check the rest of town.” Django ran further down the street.

Inside the house, Haru found two sick boys lain on either side of a bed. They looked at her with despairing, pale sick faces. “It’s okay.” she told them with a kind smile. “I’m gonna get you guys treated.”

“Good plan! I’ll mail you the recipe for NHC10.”

“We are not making them into giants!” she argued.

“Come on!” Caesar was sitting in a McDonald’s, awaiting his food. He wore a top-hat, a scarf, sunglasses, and a mustache disguise. “A village of giants would be way cooler than those sick little bastards.”

“Sir, please don’t cuss near my son.” said a mother from the next table, sitting by a 6-year-old boy.

“YOUR SON’S a little bastard! Hey kid, ever heard of gigantism?” The disgusted mother took her son elsewhere. Caesar spoke back to his phone, “Haru, just use your parasite powers to bend the poison out of their systems. Then bend it out of yourself so we can study it.”

“Okay. Hopefully, my lab equipment didn’t get damaged by Mr. York’s careless driving.” Haruka stuck her fingers into the boys and sapped out their poison.

Elsewhere

Maka sliced Gargoyle Heartless that took turns swooping at her, and when they were gone, Search Ghosts and Trick Ghosts appeared around her. Icicles were launched from below, striking the ghosts as Yuki Crystal came up beside Maka. “Hey there. Should I ask who you are, or you wanna beat these things first?” the icebender asked.

“Maka, this guy’s a normal human!” her scythe said with a male voice. “He can see us!”

“I’m on official duty.” Maka answered. “What’s your business, Human?”

“Harsh.” When a Trick Ghost spat fire, Yuki blocked with ice and froze the Heartless.

“Jump.” Maka ordered. Yuki jumped as she slashed a spin attack, killing the rest of the surrounding Heartless. But that’s when a Grand Ghost appeared, a larger Search Ghost with white and yellow skin and a red shirt. Maka and Yuki used their scythe and bending, but no damage was being done.

Crystal Wickens saw Boomhauer spinning a dark tornado against the ground at one spot. Rhyme was pinned against the ground by it, screaming from pain, but Wiccan couldn’t see her. But the wind was getting on her nerves. “My, you’re a blowhard.” Crystal used her staff to float up to the surfer, spinning and whacking Boomhauer in the face. Before he could recompose and view his attacker, Crystal flew above, turned the staff dial to Ground Quake, and SMASHED Boomhauer to the ground with strong force. She hopped off and examined the defeated Heartless, showing disgust at his purple jumpsuit. “And people say I dress weird.”

Rhyme recovered behind her. The skull-faced being snarled at Crystal, unable to distinguish between friend or foe. Before Rhyme could attack, Beat dropped in and grabbed his sister in a headlock. “I’ll hold her down. You get outta here, Lady.”

“BITO-NII!” Rhyme cried, clamping her ears shut at the sound of the gunfire. “Bito-nii, it’s so loud!”

“C’mon, Rhyme, I’mma getchu outta here!” Beat hugged his sister and stayed down as he tried to maneuver through the fire. “AAAH!” A stray bullet got him from behind.

“BITOOOO!”

“Bito...” The dark creature calmed down. Her aura began to fade, and through the black-purple skin, Rhyme’s normal body was seen. “Beat...” The skull mask disappeared, revealing her tired visage. The hole in her chest was sewing itself back.

“Raimu...” Beat smiled warmly.
“RAAAAH!” Beat looked back and saw Maka and Yuki dodging Grand Ghost’s attacks, unable to damage the Heartless. “I’ll just be a second, Rhyme!” Beat turned fully and sucked in breath, roaring a Song Beam that blasted the large ghost away. “You just like to nose around, don’tchu, Maka?”

“Beat, what are you doing here?” Maka asked hotly. “You better be here with your sector!”

“’Fraid not. We’ll talk later, I need to help my buds.” He took Rhyme and flew off.

“What buds?! BEAT, YOU GET BACK HERE!” Maka swung her scythe in a childish fashion.

“Did I show up in time for an awkward reunion?” Yuki asked. Before receiving an answer, Maka chased after him.

Kimaya shot laser bullets that Kami deflected with her Keyblade, then jumped back when Kim performed a jump strike. Kimaya threw more forceful swings, Kami keeping her blade horizontal to block them, only for her weapon to be flown out of her hand by an upward strike. Kimaya aimed the Keyblade at her mother, who raised her hands.

“Look, Kimaya, I didn’t know what they were going to do to you, I didn’t mean for it to happen. I guess I thought that school would… discipline you better and you wouldn’t grow up like a troublemaker. Which you… sort of did.” Kimaya swung at her legs, Kami jumped back. “But maybe that was my fault for not trying to understand you better. I mean, I would have, but I can’t stand that rap, I don’t see how you would—”

Kimaya rolled to Kami’s left and kicked her off her feet, aiming the Keyblade close to her face.

“Okay, okay! The truth is, deep down… I would’ve liked to have a daughter that was more like me. I wanted a daughter that I could really bond with, talking about the same shoes, the same shows, and about… boys that we may have crushed on. Let’s be honest, you’ve made some pretty bad mistakes yourself, but… Sigh, I guess I’m no different. I should’ve told you about the daycare, but I just didn’t wanna worry you.”

Kami’s Keyblade poofed back to her hand. She blocked when Kimaya struck down, pushing with equal force. “Dammit, what the hell are you doing, Double-67?!” Carter shouted from the PA. “I ordered you to kill the skeleton, forget about that woman!”

“Kimaya, if there’s one thing you took from me – besides some magic key with no explanation,” Kami continued, “it’s your stubbornness. Don’t let that man control you with some magic words. You disobeysed me for all these years, why don’t you put that to good use!”

“Eh…eh…” Kimaya’s strength faltered, and her eyes looked tired. She hunched over and started panting.

Kami heard a bursting sound, looking right to see Nolan roll out of an alleyway, avoiding a wall of purple fire. Hank Hill used a flamethrower to rocket at Nolan. The Sandman turned his fist Armament, pulled it, and dealt an uppercut to Hank’s stomach with perfect timing. “BWAAAH!” Hank hacked as he was propelled up into the air. “Now I have a narrow colon!” He crashed a few houses over.

“What a pain. Kami, you doing okay over there?” Nolan turned and asked her.

“I think so.” Kami smiled, getting back on her feet. “I guess all Kim needed to fight the control was a heartfelt speech.”

Nolan scanned Kimaya with Detective Vision. “Or maybe her faulty microchip needed to malfunction because it hasn’t been perfected.”

“I still say the heartfelt speech played a role.”

“Ugh, I don’t have time for this! Agent 6767, stab yourself with that key and just DIE!”

Kimaya flinched, jumped away, and aimed the Keyblade at her chest. “KIMAYA, DON’T-!!” Kami ran to stop her—but Kimaya stabbed the key through herself.

A light poked out of her chest. Kami and Nolan stared with both horror and wonder. Kimaya fell back, gasping as she held the key in place. Kami pulled the weapon out, but the light still leaked as Kimaya held her chest. She kept gasping, feeling like her heart would burst. Her chest flashed, the light vanished, and Kimaya woke up agape. “Ahh… Man! It feels like I jus’… gave myself surgery!”

“Kim…aya?…” Kami said lowly.

“The chip just wore out.” Nolan observed.

“Mah?” Kim sat up. “What you doing here? And why am I on the ground?”

“Don’t you remember anything, Kimaya?”

“I feel like some old bat was naggin’ at me. …Was it you?” Kami glared.

“Kimaya!” Django yelled from behind them. “We gotta go to the east field, Leo’s in trouble!”

“Dang Leo! Well, later, Mom!” She jumped up and ran with Django.

“KIMAYA-!” Kami called after, but to no avail. “…Grrrrr, I GIVE A HEARTFELT SPEECH AND YOU STILL DON’T LISTEN!!”

East field

“YAAAAAAA!” Kaleo’s mouth stretched open as he screamed and ran from Bill Dauterive. “HEEEELP! GIANT PERVERT!” He stopped when he encountered a chicken. “AAAAAH! MUTANT BIRD!” He ran the other way. He stopped at an old wood sign with Spanish words. “AAAAH! ALIENES!” Ran the other way. Stopped at an animal’s skull with horns. “AAAAH! NICOLAS CAGE!”

A large shuriken flew around and chopped off Bill’s arms, legs, neck, and some parts around his body. The shuriken returned to Black Star’s hand, but Bill’s body merely reformed and grew larger. “My godly patience is wearing thin by this giant’s unwillingness to die! How can we make this fool fall before me?”

“Try to make him fall off that cliff!” Tsubaki said. “The ground is so loose and slippery that he might not be able to climb up. It’ll be nice to knock him out of the way for a while.”

“I suppose you’re right.” Black Star glanced at the cliff behind him. “Now to lure him over here. HEY, FATASS! I can’t tell where your head begins on that gross excuse for a body!”

“Do you mean meeeee?” Bill looked over with a downtrodden expression. “I’m not FAT, I’m HUSKY!” He started sobbing. “I’m just husky, Lenore… Just husky… sniff…”

“Are you kidding me?! You look like your real belly exploded, so they had to replace it with a whale!”
“YER GETTIN’ ON MAH NERVES, you little snot mouth!”

“Better than what YOUR mouth is probly full of! NYEEEAH, NYEEEAH!” Star stuck his tongue out and spanked his bottom.

“ROOOAAAAAH!” Bill charged and shook the earth harder under his stomps. Black Star threw his chain-sickle around Bill’s ankles and ran between them, causing Bill to lose balance. The giant Heartless flailed his arms and fell over the cliff, shaking the world so great that it was surprising the mountain didn’t crumble. Black Star looked down and saw him miles below. The giant failed to climb the soft soil cliff without slipping and falling.

“MWAH HA HA! In the end, you are FAR beneath my powers and talents! It’s like this cool catchphrase I just invented: the more humongous they are, the more humiliatingly they plummet!”

“I think you got that from somewhere.” Tsubaki said sheepishly.

“Black Star, here you are.” Ellen said from behind. Black Star turned to find her and Maka, along with The Gang members.

Kimaya, Leo, and Django looked up at Beat and Rhyme—awestruck at the fact they were ghosts. The Bitos looked between them and the KND, who looked between both groups, as did the former three. “Alright, we clearly have a lot of questions,” Ellen said, “so why don’t we find a place to sit down and discuss?”

With that, Django led them to a tall hill of rugged rocks, where a very withered house was stationed. It was the house that belonged to Django’s old friend, Luviro. They hid behind the side of this hill and sat in a circle.

“We’re operatives of the Spirit Kids Next Door, Sector SCYTHE.” Maka explained. “I’m Numbuh Pair, Maka Albarn, and this is my scythe, Soul. He’s Black Star, Numbuh Star, and she’s Ellen, Numbuh Aged.”

“Which sounds like ‘Nevuh Aged.’” Ellen chuckled. “Which is funny if… you know.”

“Beat and Rhyme are KND operatives, too.” Soul said. “They’re part of Sector REAP. Care to explain?”

The Gang looked at the Bito siblings with suspicion. With a darkened Rhyme sitting and hugging her legs, sadness on her features, Beat spoke. “Look, the thing is, me and Rhyme has been dead for like, five years.”

“That don’t sit right!” Kimaya stood up. “Me and Leo ha’ known you for three years!”

“We been using Gigai!”

“Giga?”

“No, it’s Sigh…” Beat calmed himself. “Lemme start from the beginning. Me and Rhyme are from Shibuya, Japan. Our big dumbass brother had ta babysit us, and he took us with him downtown to hang with this bad crowd. His gang got in a shooting with this other gang. Rhyme started crying, and when I tried to get her out, I got shot. And then Rhyme started crying over me, but there were Reapers already there to take the dead people. They already took me to the Underworld before Rhyme got shot.

“When she became a ghost, she flew around looking for my ghost. And when she couldn’t find me, she started to cry again, and she turned into a Hollow. I told the Reapers to take me back there after they made me a spirit. They told me what happened, and they wanted to do an exorcism or something. But I told ’em ‘no.’ I tried to talk to Rhyme, I sang her favorite hip-hop song, and she started to calm down. And then…”

“Then they hugged each other.” Maka said with a warm tone. “It was a real touching sight, looking back…”

“We let them join the Spirit Kids Next Door.” Ellen followed. “We were able to call the Music Spirit, Meloetta to give them their bending back. It was a rare sight for someone to be able to change a spirit back from a Hollow. Rhyme was only happy when she was around Beat, but if they were apart…”

“When they didn’t go on missions, their sector said that they took Gigai to hang out in the Mortal World.” Black Star said with a smug look. “I guess they’ve been hanging out with you.”

“Normally, humans can’t see us unless they witness someone die.” Maka mentioned. “Kaleo saw Beat die, but even though it was a Gigai, it was still the same as watching a real body die.”

“But Kimaya was brainwashed at the time, how is she seeing you?” Django asked.

“We don’t know.”

“So wait,” Kimaya said, “the reason we never see you at school or come to your house is ’cause y’all were ghost people?”

“Yeah, we didn’t think we was gonna hang out with you very much.” Beat said. “We just walkin’ ’round town and we fall into your hideout, and you say ‘Join the Gang.’ We didn’t think we was gonna go that long without you askin’ who we were. But ya never did, and we just sorta… started hanging out with you when we had time. Jus’ like with Django.”

Kimaya bit her lip and looked down. Yeah… she just let Beat and Rhyme hang with them, and they did… even though they weren’t around as much as Leo. One year later, Django fell into their hideout. Freakin’ dead kid.

“Look, man, Ah don’t care if you’re a spooky skeleton dude.” Kim told him. “See, the reason we’re a Gang is ’cause our home lives ain’t too good. We got too much drama goin’ on, that’s why we need a place to hang out and socialize. I don’t know WHY you a dead kid, but you prob’ have WAY more drama than any of us do. Why don’tchu hang with us?”

She never asked Django about his background… She never inquired Beat and Rhyme about their ‘troubled background.’ …She really didn’t know much about her Gang at all.

“…Ha ha ha ha ha.” Django started laughing. “HA HA ha ha ha! HA HA HA HA HA ha ha ha! All—Ah-hall this time—I-hi thought I… was the one with the traumatic past! AND LOOK! You two were dead, too! AH HA HA HA HA HA HA! And all this time, I wanted you guys to help me get revenge on Carter! But I was afraid you would say no, and you wouldn’t want me around anymore, HA HA HA HA ha ha ha! And I was only afraid because…” Even though his grin was permanent as a skeleton, it seemed wider than ever, “I really like hanging out with you guy-uy-uy-uy-uyys! Sigh, but now I feel like a drama queen!”

“…” Kimaya stood and spoke strongly, “This Gang needs a real makeover. We dunno jack shit about each other. Like, why are the Kids Next Door so tight? Why do all them sectors like hangin’ with each other?”
“Well, I don’t know about you humans,” Maka said, “…but we Spirit Kids Next Door are connected by our souls and our hearts. We resonate with each other, because we have the same goals. We…”

“We understand each other because we love each other.” Ellen smiled. “Even though our quirks are different.” She winked at Star.

“HEY, whaddoes that mean?!” the spike-haired panicked.

“Then maybe we should do the same.” Kim said. “We gotta be a Gang that loves chillin’ with each other. Not just for chillin’, but ’cause we feel… chill around them. Know what I’m saying?”

“Be that as it may,” Maka said, “there are other issues to attend to.”

“Yeah, like teachin’ Carter a lesson!” Beat fist-palmed.

“NO! The Spirit Kids Next Door is not allowed to harm mortals, no matter how evil they are. We can only hunt evil spirits, which includes Heartless. However, it is also forbidden for us to interact with humans unless they’re in danger or if they see us. Not only that, but if other humans find out they can come back to the Mortal World using a Gigai, it’ll discourage people from living their life to the fullest. Beat, Rhyme, I’m sorry to say this, but you can’t hang out with these people now that they know who you are.”

“Hold up!” Beat refuted. “You just said the KND resonates with each other. Yeah, I resonate with my sector, but I also do it with these buds! We ain’t have any friends when we was alive, hangin’ out with this Gang is like a second chance for lost opportunities! We don’t get ‘em involved with our biz.”

“Beat, it’s a’ight.” Kimaya said. “You never had to tell us, and we won’t tell anyone else. And if you really gotta, you can leave. But before you do, we gonna do what we came to do.” She turned and stepped toward the factory. “If y’all can’t hurt Carter, then I will. I’m calling him out.”

“Kimaya, wait!” Django grabbed her arm. She turned to him with a surprised look. He was silent for a minute.

Django remembered lifting the stone cube out of the Lazarus pool. It had strange writing. Django remembered Sector V talk about the Gibberish Rocks. The Seven Lights were meant to find them. “…Don’t ask me why, but I think Carter wants to keep you out of that factory. I think, the voice in your head that told you to come here… I think it wants you to find it. It wants you to find the cube that I lifted out of the Lazarus.”

“How would you know that?”

“Because that cube had a keyhole. You have a giant key. That’s a connection if I saw one. Kim, you have to get in the factory and find it.”

“Okay, but… what about Carter?”

“We’ll lure Carter out here and distract him. If we’re lucky, we can beat him ourselves. The important thing is that you find that cube.”

“But if he’s trying to keep out Kimaya, he’ll stay in and make sure she stays out!” Black Star argued.

“I’ve got a plan! You spirits just fight the Heartless, and we’ll lure Carter out like this:” Django strummed his guitar and spawned a kid-size skeleton. With a few more notes, strings flew out of his instrument and wrapped around the corpse, forming Kimaya’s skin and clothes.

“…That looks… so wrong.” Kim said.

“This doppelganger will distract Carter, while the real Kim,” Django played and sent magic notes around Kimaya that turned her invisible, “will walk in undetected! The spell only lasts a short time, so make it count.”

“This feels weird, but… Let’s go for it!”

“Sweet!” Django smirked. “…Hey, now that I think about it, if Beat and Rhyme are dead, what about their Negatives?”

Negaverse

The powder-faced kids of The Club sat at their table, drinking tea. “Flow and I are in actuality ghosts.” Pat said tonelessly.

“We were aware, but it made little inference.” Ayamik said with the same disinterest.

“Accurately.” Flow affirmed.

Lazarus Plant

Carter paced around his office, feeling more anxious about the chaos taking place outside. He spared one look at the Gibberish Rock behind his desk. The PA rang. “President Pewterschmidt! The guards outside have been knocked out, and the Hill Gang is preoccupied! That Kimaya child is about to enter the factory!”

“It can’t be!” One of the monitors depicted Django, Kim, and Kaleo standing outside the front gate. Carter stormed over to the window and pushed it open to view the three kids from his ten-story office.

“This can go one of two ways, Pooperschmidt!” Django shouted. “Either you come down, or we’ll come up! Either way, we’re kicking your ass!”

“I came up with that insult myself!” Kaleo cheered.

“I had a different one, but they said it was too gross!” Django rejoined.

Carter glanced once more at the cube. “Well, if that’s how you wanna play, I’m coming down!”

With that, the president jumped out the window.

“I didn’t think you would that way!”

“UURAAAAHH!” Carter spun like a torpedo and built momentum before crashing on the ground and blowing the three kids back. Django recovered and gasped: an invisible energy blew around Carter. His sleeves were ripped, as well as the middle of his shirt, exposing the muscular arms and abs, and he was taller. “I… didn’t think you would do that either.” Django said.

The spirit operatives saw this from above. “Yow! Carter’s been takin’ steroids!” Beat exclaimed.

“It looks like Old Man Fist!” Maka observed. “It’s a martial art where the user conserves their Personal Chi at a young age, and makes it available to them at an old age.”
“What does that even mean?” Black Star asked.

“I think it requires them to harness their chi as they’re growing up, but not to use it too much.”

“The Lazarus could’ve helped Carter with it, too.” Ellen figured. “Come, we need to focus on the Heartless. Let’s just hope they know what they’re doing.” Sector SCYTHE flew back to the village. Beat and Rhyme stayed to watch their friends before joining the spirits.

Carter lunged to attack Kimaya, but Django sprung up three skeletons to grab him. Carter spun and threw them off, but wasn’t prepared to block the Gas Bomb Leo shot at his face.

The real Kimaya used her Keyblade to unlock the factory entrance and slip in while Carter was dizzied by the gas. Kim’s invisibility wore off. “Ah’m just lookin’ for a cube with Gobbledegook on it? If you say so, Django.” (Play “Modern Chemical Plant” from Sonic Generations!)

Stage 61: Pueblo de Niebla

Mission: Find the Poneglyph!

Act 2: Lazarus Plant

Kimaya hopped on her skateboard and rolled to grind on a minecart track, jumping carts of Lazarus that sped up at quick speeds. The track angled up and right, and the decreased momentum kept her from jumping high enough over the carts. She had to switch to a small rail on her right to avoid a cart, jump back when it passed, jump to a left rail to avoid a cart as well as a gap behind it, then back on. The rail ended at a walkway, where Kimaya had view of all the machines and Lazarus tanks in this vast factory room.

Three Black Fungus Heartless (kid-size humanoids with blue robes and purple shroom caps) impeded her progress by puffing purple gas clouds into being. Kimaya channeled her poisonbending through her Keyblade (apparently she can do that) and moved it aside, then quickly struck the shroom-capped Heartless. She simply batted them over the edge before turning to face a dead end of the walkway. Kimaya could jump and grab a pole sticking from the wall, then waited for a Lazarus waterfall to disappear before swinging to the next pole. The third pole retracted and extracted, so Kim had to wait for the poisonfall to stop, jump to the extracted pole, and quickly jump again before it retracted.

Kimaya kicked off a vertical platform, and began to Wall Jump between that and another one. At the top, she could jump over the left wall and grab another horizontal pole that stretched over the previous area. She climbed across quickly when Amps chased her along the pole. She stopped to wait for a couple poisonfalls to pass, bending the toxic off the pole to crawl further, and she eventually made it to a platform.

Kimaya entered a new room of the factory, which had towering tanks of Lazarus, with hatches on the sides that would open and release gas. Since these hatches lined up like stairs, with the lids facing up, Kimaya could jump up them when they opened. Kimaya struck the thermometer on the first tank to make all the hatches along the right spurt open. She ran up them and could jump to hit the thermometer on the second tank. One of the hatches shot out gas above the main line-up, so Kim used her bending to stuff it back inside and progress. For the third tank, Kimaya shot laser bullets to hit the thermometer that was too high, then she jumped hatches that were further apart.

Kimaya set foot on the ledge at the other side, entering a door into a hollow, tall cylindrical chamber. It was the inside of a factory chimney. There was a Rare Truffle, a kid-size Heartless with a blue robe and yellow shroom cap. It was raising its arms and jumping, so Kimaya batted him up and flew him several feet high. Kimaya smiled at its carefree spirit, and felt like taking it with her. She hit the Heartless up some high grated platforms, which she could access by jumping herself. However, a cloud of gas burst up from below, so Kim quickly hit the Heartless into a dent in the wall, jumping in herself to avoid the huge geyser.

Kimaya pushed the Heartless out when the gas stopped, then knocked him up to a platform that was scrolling up and down. She couldn’t jump high enough to grab the platform, but a ladder was available to her. She could jump to the platform from it, and the foothold protected them from the gas geyser. Kimaya then had to hit the Truffle up a slope with barrels rolling down. She could jump on the barrels to get a boost and hit the Truffle to an enclosing, grabbing a ladder to climb up with it and hide from the geyser. After the barrels, Kimaya hit the Truffle across two platforms that turned vertical and horizontal. On the final foothold, she let the Heartless hold down a switch to open a door to the next room.

There were Lazarus waterfalls spilling everywhere, giving the room a bright green glow. Kimaya picked up a propane tank that was sitting by itself, figuring she’d need it. She carried the container through a maze of poisonfalls, and when Red Nocturnes ambushed her, she quickly put the propane down to attack the fire Heartless. A Fat Bandit coughed fireballs at her from afar; Kimaya hit the fire away as she ran at the Heartless and sliced it in the head. Eventually, she brought the tank to a barred gate, standing back and shooting it with laser bullets to blow the gate open.

In this room, Kimaya jumped up some round grated platforms where Lazarus spouts shot up from. Kim got to a platform with an Ice Cannon Heartless, dodging its blast, which in turn froze one of the spouts. She decided to grab the cannon and shoot the other spouts. Her foothold was high enough for her to jump atop the first one, then she jumped the other ice pillars to reach a ladder. She climbed up to a platform with another Ice Cannon, using it to freeze a stairway of poisonfalls lined up on a wall.

She made it to a walkway with three gas geysers sprouting out of pipes. The middle one was pointing up at a ceiling pipe that was pouring a poisonfall over a door on the opposite side. Kimaya bent the gas of the left and right pipes back in and sealed the lids, creating a stronger output from the middle pipe. There was an Icy Cube Heartless lollygagging around, and Kimaya threw it into the geyser to blow up and smash against the ceiling pipe. The pipe froze, creating blockage that stopped the poisonfall and let her enter the door.

Kimaya entered a room with disorganized Lazarus rivers, seeing a pool of Lazarus covering the way to the next door. “Okay, why is every room in this factory some sorta puzzle?” Kimaya questioned. She could jump over the thin rivers, which were spread around like abstract strokes of paint. There was an Icy Cube in the center of some rivers, and knowing she had to use the Heartless to cross the pool, Kimaya started kicking it around the rivers. If it touched the rivers, the ice cube would freeze a path and shrink slightly, giving Kim less to work with for the pool.

Kimaya defended the Icy Cube from Fat Bandits’ fireballs, then jumped over to slay them – these enemies didn’t make the puzzles challenging, but more tedious, thought Kimaya. When Kim made it to the pool, she whacked the Heartless across to the doorway, freezing a path. It was too thin for Kimaya to step on, but she could skateboard across and make the jump to the entrance. Kimaya faced up a long stairway in a narrow hall. It seemed like a simple journey up, but that was before a stream of Lazarus washed down.

Kimaya Wall Jumped her way up the hall to avoid the stream. Partway up, the walls started pouring poisonfalls, so Kimaya switched to a skateboard to grind up a center rail. Two-thirds of the Kimaya swung more poles on the walls, each of which had an Amp that would slither up to shock her, but she quickly timed her jumps and successfully landed on the platform where the door was. She entered Carter’s private quarters, where Babs was still drinking tea. “Don’t mind me, Dear.” The triangle-nosed woman said. “Carter makes me go through all those puzzles, too.”

Kimaya offered her condolences before heading to the office. There were Star Wars figurines on shelves. The window Carter jumped out of was still open, and she saw him locked in battle with Django and Leo. Behind Carter’s desk was the rock that Django described. (End song.)

Kimaya chopped the desk in half and moved both halves aside. She could see the front of the cube in its entirety, from the foreign writing to the keyhole below. It certainly looked like her key could be used for this. But why did Django think she needed to find it, what use did she have for this rock? She was a cowgirl/gangster, not an archaeologist. She would rather be down there helping her friends. Oh well, might as well check this out.

Kimaya aimed the key at the lock. It shone with a light, shot a laser, and an aura appeared around the stone. The letters and the keyhole glowed. Kimaya could read them perfectly. “If you’re reading this, you are the Keeper of the Keys in this dimension. So, congratulations! You’re gonna be real important! Deliver these keys to the others, but keep one to yourself.” –Sora.

The entire cube shined white, leaving only the letters dark. The stone turned into light and vanished. The letters turned into floating black things with single eyes, all shaped like the letters. “Unown, Unown, Unown, Unown!” The letters circled around Kimaya before flying out the window. She didn’t know what they were, but she saw something floating where the cube was previously standing.

It was a key ring with seven keys on it. Kimaya held and stared at each key. One was light-brown with a sun for teeth, and a keychain of a Jolly Roger with a straw hat. One was light-blue with icicle teeth and a whitish-blue flame keychain. One was dark-gray with a tornado tooth, and a keychain of a swirly leaf. One was dark-pink with bubble teeth, its handle looked like a bubble wand, and the keychain was a purple top-hat. Another was striped and colorful with a paintbrush tooth, a hilt ring shaped like a palette, and a frame keychain. Another was silver, had a king’s crown for teeth, and a throne keychain.

But Kimaya was more into the black key with the black star keychain. In fact, she felt a bond with it. She smirked.

Outside

Nolan tossed boomerangs to chop the Air Soldiers’ wings off, and when two Large Bodies charged at him from behind, Maka sliced them. They heard the whir of an engine and looked up, seeing Hank Hill piloting a darkened Sandmobile. “I’m not much into this newfangled technology, but as long as it kicks your ass. Heh heh.”

Haruka set up her lab equipment on the ground to analyze a sample of the poison she collected from the sick kids. She snapped photos with the microscope, transferred them to her phone, and mailed Caesar. “Well, does it look familiar?”

“DAMMIT, woman, I told you not to give me the peanut butter sauce! I’m allergic to this stuff, do you want a lawsuit?!”

“Caesar?”

“Sorry, I had a problem with this dumb waitress.” Caesar munched his burger on the other end.
“Hmm, those are interesting samples. I’ll need a quick peek at my handbook.”

Haruka found herself surrounded by a whirlwind of black gas. “Ah know you.” Dale said. “Yer one of them science people that like to experiment with my brain. Well, you wouldn’t like it if I injected your brain with DEATH stuff.”

Black Star finished killing the Defender Heartless in the east field. The ground shook when two massive purple hands grabbed the cliff behind him. Black Star looked in disgust when Bill Dauterive hauled himself up, bigger and uglier than ever. “I gave those comments of yours some thought, and they only hurt more. Now I wanna hurt you. A lot…”

Django summoned a row of skeletons to attack Carter, but the businessman swung a kick that sent an air wave to cut them and knock Django and Leo over. The fake Kimaya attempted to sneak in the factory, but Carter lunged over and punched her away, knocking her clean out. Django tried to get up, but the skeleton was pinned down by Carter’s foot.

“Pathetic demon. Did you really think a gang of street rats were going to help you? Thirty years and that was the best help you can find? You belong with those urchins; you belong with them and ALL these hopeless people. Living off the scraps that the kings are generous enough to throw you. We are the gods of you demons.”

A comet shot out of the factory window and swatted Carter away when it crashed down. Carter landed against a coal pile, recomposing to see his assaulter. Django gaped at his savior, and Leo’s mouth was in an ‘o’. (Play “Number One” from Bleach!)

Kimaya Heartly crossed her keys over her shoulders, her hat tipped over her eyes. She slashed both keys at the air before looking up to smirk at Carter. “Kimaya…” Django said in awe.

“I dunno either.” She told him. “All I know is I got two keys now. Oathkeeper,” she noted the white one, “and Oblivion.” Then the black one. She spun both keys like propellers before holding them forth. “And as far as I care, these’re my pistols. Now I’m really gettin’ Western.”

“Does this mean you found the cube?”

“…” Django smiled and faced the sky. “You owe me one, guys.”

Kimaya awakened herself as-

“HOLD ON, little fanfare!” Kimaya stopped. “We ain’t done, yet! I still need to whoop this guy’s ass!”

Carter recovered and growled at the dual-keyed child. “This town ain’t big enough fer a bigwig like you, Carter.” Kimaya crossed both keys in an ‘X’. “I’m calling you out. You done this town wrong, and it’s time you were busted. Django wanted me to git back at you… and mah response is ‘hell yeah.’”

Django felt a sense of relief and excitement. Kim glanced back at him and Leo. “Y’all git back in town and round up them bulls. It only takes two to tango.” The boys grinned and headed back for the village.

Bill Dauterive towered over Black Star, who showed no fear at the titan. Boomhauer soared over Beat and Rhyme. The sister was still downtrodden, but when Beat patted her shoulder and sported a smile, Rhyme smiled back. Wiccan was confused by what Boomhauer was looking at, just empty space. Haruka readied herself against Dale, and when Ellen appeared beside her, she passed the spirit a friendly smile. Kami saw her daughter with that extra key, and she was soooo confused.

“Huff, huff, huff!” Black Star looked left when Kaleo ran up. “Huff… huff…” The boy sweated like he just ran a marathon. He probably used the last of his energy just getting there. “I need a minute.” He fell on his back. “Let’s just do it next chapter.”

“A’ight.” Kimaya winked at the readers. “Next chapter then.”

Augustus and his crew were flying over the village in their biplane. “Whoo.” The captain whistled. “I think we’re just in time for a show.”

Deviating from tradition a little bit. ;) Next time, we’ll conclude the Lazarus Saga. For now, Mr. Caesarian has a word.

Kimaya Heartly battles Carter Pewterschmidt! Afterwards, a secret is learned about the Heartless!

Let’s conclude this saga for now!

Chapter 61: The Other One

Pueblo de- crap, it’s already starting! (Play “The Encounter” from Kingdom Hearts II!)

Boss fight: Carter Pewterschmidt

Kimaya rushed up to swing both Keyblades at the Corporate President, but Carter grabbed them in his hands and kicked Kimaya away. He leapt overhead, spun like a drill, and stomped down at her, only for Kimaya to dodge behind and strike him in the back. Carter about-faced and threw punches that Kim countered with her keys, until both opponents jumped away from each other. Carter bashed his knuckles together and sent an aerial shockwave that Kimaya blocked with the Keyblades, but didn’t recover in time when Carter kicked over, threw a combo of punches, and flung Kimaya to his left.

Kimaya bounced back on her feet and shot double laser bullets from her blades, which Carter avoided by Air Jumping to her left, then flying at her. Kimaya jumped and ran to attack Carter with another combo, then leapt to knock him against the ground. Carter kicked Kimaya’s chest and pushed her back, then when he charged to grab the child, Kimaya crossed her keys in an ‘X’ to block and push back. She slashed the keys and made him stumble back, then leapt, spun, and bashed both keys against his head to bat him away.

“Come on, Carter, I don’t feel right beatin’ an old man.” Kimaya said coolly. “Why don’t you just give up and git yo’ ass outta this town?”

“Huuh…huuh…huuh…” Carter was rasping on the ground, his skin turning dry and pale. Kimaya was appalled, but Carter gave her a murderous look. A Wyvern Heartless swooped down to carry Carter across the valley. Kimaya hopped on her skateboard and engaged pursuit, going down a hill into a gorge within mounds of rubble. She grinded on a track and jumped a few minecarts, then skated on a ledge along the left side of a pit.

At the bottom of the slope, Kimaya jumped and grabbed an overhead rail in her crossed keys, swinging left or right to avoid dangling hooks as she ziplined across. She landed and resumed skateboarding on a new path, which took her across three parallel minecart tracks. Carter blasted parts of the track with a shotgun, forcing Kim to jump between them, but they eventually made it to a wide, circular area with round Lazarus rivers.

Carter dropped into a Lazarus pit in the center, and Kimaya stopped skating as she watched. The Corporate President emerged from the pit, showing light-green veins in his body and shining green eyes. Heartless appeared around the crater, and Kimaya sliced them while dodging Carter’s energy blasts. “I guess not.” She sighed.
With the others

Black Star roped Bill Dauterive’s arm with his chain-sickle and propelled himself above the giant’s body. “Tsubaki, Katana Form!” he commanded, transforming his weapon into a sword before stabbing the top of Bill’s head. He descended and carved a long strip down the middle of Bill’s back before landing on the ground. When Black Star faced up, the cut sewed itself back together as Bill grew larger. “I don’t understand! How are you fixing yourself?!”

“You think a little pain is gonna make me whine and cry?” Bill looked down and asked him. “Well, I’m done letting pain get in my way. My power comes from pain. I make it part of me. I share it with others. And after I squash you, I wanna share it with Lenore.” He raised his foot, and Black Star jumped back when he stomped down, denting a crater.

“I did an analysis of him.” Tsubaki said. “The pain he feels from your attacks is an unstable chi that he bends to his will. He uses the Pain Chi to reform his body and increase in size and strength.”

“So, pain is his ally, huh? But a man can only take so much from the godly Black Star.” He noticed Kaleo still laying on the ground. “Hey, if you’re not gonna help, then get outta the way!”

Kaleo sat up, nearly done catching his breath. “I’m so glad I didn’t do a stage with Kimaya. …” He felt a shadow over him. “AAAAAH!” Bill’s fist was coming down, but Leo dodged just in time. Kaleo ran behind the giant Heartless and faced up fearlessly. “I’m not gonna run away from you! Kimaya’s busy fighting that jerk man, so I’m gonna do my part, too! I want her to finish her battle without any fear of—”

Bill snatched Kaleo in his hand and began to squeeze him. “GAAAAH I CHANGE MY MIND!” Kaleo cried from unbearable pain. “I DON’T WANNA HAVE CHARACTER GROWTH, I wanna be the funny guy that makes quirky remarks!”

Black Star sliced off Bill’s arm with the katana, saving Leo. The arm grew back and Bill grew slightly taller. “If he grows any more, he can crush the whole village.” Black Star said. “Kaleo, I think we’re gonna have to use our brains on this one.”

Kaleo stuttered at the very idea. “M-m-m-my b-b-b-b-brain?”

“I know. It hurts me, too. Thankfully, we have Tsubaki!” He grinned. “Always glad to help, Master.” The sword blushed.

Sandman and Maka bolted out of the village from the west end as Hank Hill shot twin lasers from the Sandmobile. “Better to fight him outside of town so no one gets hurt.” Nolan panted.

“I agree.” Maka whipped around and deflected the laser with her scythe, striking the bottom of the aircraft. “But you shouldn’t get involved either, Human. We can handle this.”

“I’ll have you know that’s my ride! I’m already involved!”

“Yeah, Maka, didn’t Sector SOUL get help from those human operatives?” Soul asked.

“How about some clean-burning?” Hank opened the cockpit and threw two burning propane tanks down, only to be shot with ice and frozen.

“I like clean-freezing!” Yuki surfed in front and blasted an ice beam to freeze the Sandmobile. It fell to the ground, but Hank shook it until the ice broke. Yuki grabbed Nolan and sped away on an ice path as the vehicle chased them. “Isn’t this just like that Teen Titans episode where Cyborg fell in love with his car?”

“Kind of.” Nolan pulled out a remote. “I’m in love with the Eject feature.” He pressed it.

“BWUUUH!” Hank was sprung into the air, and the darkened Sandmobile changed back to normal. Maka shot up to the airborne Hank and kicked him in the crotch, rocketing him against the ground. “Bwuh… Dang… A narrow bladder!”

Dale Gribble’s Black Tornado was enclosing on Haruka and Ellen. The witch lit her hands purple and sprouted a magic cylinder to protect them. “Are you a poisonbender?” Ellen asked. Haruka nodded. “This Heartless is using Dark Poison. Elements infected with Dark Chi are hard for normal benders to control.”

“Do you know how we can beat him?”

“I should be able to do it myself. But I-”

A sonic wave hit Dale and knocked him up, his gas cloud fading. “No thanks are necessary, ladies!” Django said proudly. “But a kiss will do.”

“Let me check on the townspeople first.” Haruka stated. “Are you sure you don’t need my help with him?”

“We’ll be just fine.” Ellen smiled politely.

When Haruka was about to enter a house, she looked to the east field, where Bill was trying to stomp Star and Kaleo. “They look like they could use some help.”

“Who?” Caesar asked from the phone.

“They.” She aimed the phone to face the battle. “Feels like one of your giant kids would come in handy. In fact, how did Kaleo get small again?”

“He ate the Giant-Giant Fruit, of course.”

“The what?”

“It’s a Devil Fruit that allows one to grow giant, or return to normal size. He ate it when you all came to Punk Hazard.”

“But I thought he got giant with the NHC10!”

“I thought that at first, but when I returned to Punk Hazard’s ruins, the Giant Fruit was missing, too. I should’ve known, because why else would his clothes grow with him? I don’t understand why he isn’t using that power to kick that monster’s ass.”

“Maybe he doesn’t know… I think we should tell him. Sigh, as soon as I check on these people.” She entered the house.

Beat held onto Rhyme as Boomhauer blew an endless gust of wind. The siblings couldn’t blow a Song Beam without inhaling the dark wind in the process. “What is with you and attacking empty space?!” Wiccan announced as she flew behind and bashed Boomhauer in the head with her staff. Boomhauer about-faced and shot a cyclone at Crystal, which pushed her skyward, looped, and smashed her to the ground. Beat and Rhyme’s combined Song Beam struck him from behind.
“He may be wind, but we be sound!” Beat rapped. “We travel fast as wind, maybe faster!”

“At the end, we’ll be the masters!” Rhyme sang.

“‘ey yo yo yo!” Boomhauer recomposed and performed several graceful aerial movements. They felt the wind blowing forward, until a tidal wave of condensed, dusty air appeared and washed toward them. “RAIMU, LET’S MOVE!” Beat grabbed his sister and tried to outfly the wave, but he saw the standing Crystal Wickens get swept up. “Dammit, that lady! I wish she could hear us!”

“Beat, watch out!”

“GAAAAH!” A whirlwind sprouted up and blew the siblings apart.

With Kimaya

After destroying the Heartless, Kimaya continued to dodge Carter’s green energy blasts. Kimaya saw Lazarus being poured out of a pipe and into the river. “Is he concentrating it all to one place so he c’n use its power?” Kimaya thought aloud. “Or I don’t understand this stuff. Maybe I’ll just clog up these pipes.” Kimaya channeled her poisonbending through her Keyblades and was able to shove the flow back into the pipe. The pipe puffed, Lazarus leaked, and also began to spurt out of the ground via an underground pipe.

Kimaya hopped on her board and skated along the path, grinding a rail to a platform with another pipe, which she proceeded to block up. Carter boiled with rage, and this seemed to cause a storm of toxic droplets to fly up and hit the path. Kimaya spun her Keyblades to block the droplets and direct them away from herself. While skating, she spun around and used her bending to swirl the Lazarus away from her path. She made it to the final pipe and clogged it up.

Carter shot up without warning—Kimaya swiftly swung her Keyblades, blocked his attacks, then dodged behind to strike him in the back. Carter reached behind, clutched Kimaya’s hair through her hat, and hurled her across the Lazarus rivers. She landed on a relatively soft mount of dark sand, quickly getting up and dodging when Carter flew over. “Man, you look ugly!” Kimaya squinted her eyes when she viewed his glowing veins up close. “I don’t think this stuff’s doin’ you any favors.”

“And what do you know?!” Carter punched the ground, Kimaya dodged, and evaded the next ones as he talked. “You’re a street rat! You were born a street rat, you’ll die a street rat! And only your fleas—”

“Fleas will mourn me, dude, you startin’ to sound really weird. Maybe we should stop fighting and find you a medic?”

“I DON’T NEED ONE! I’m Carter Pewterschmidt! I’m immortal! I’m powerful! YOU PEOPLE ARE VERMIN TO ME!” His body flashed green, thrusting his arms forward to blow Kimaya several yards away. Kimaya got up and saw Carter dash at her again, so she shot bullets from both Keyblades. Carter withstood the shots and jumped to do a spin-kick, but Kimaya ducked left and farted a Gas Bomb. Carter was stunned by the blow, allowing Kimaya to deal a triple combo with both Keyblades.

The others

After Beat landed between some houses, he flew up to search for his sister. “OW- AH!” Boomhauer pelted him with air puffs before surfing around the rapper and encasing him in a spiraling air bubble.
“Yo-man, I’mma-suffocate-you, gonna-gonna-be-all uek, uek, ueeehhk.” Boomhauer made the gesture of choking.

“Dude, I’m a spirit. I don’t suffocate!”

“Yeah-well-we’ll-see, givin’-that-dang-old-darkness-man.”

“Cough, cough…” The wind sphere was turning purple, and Beat found himself unable to breathe when the darkness began to swallow him.

“AHHH!” Crystal flew up behind the Heartless yet again and choked him with her staff. “I’m getting tired of you ignoring me! You think empty space is a better opponent than I am?”

“Whatchu-talkin’-about-I’m-tryin’-to-fight-these-dang-old-kids-with-the-hip-hop-and-snoopy-poopy, get-the--off!” Boomhauer talked quickly as he tried to shake her off.

The witch let go and flew in front of Boomhauer, landing on his board. “Well, I bet you didn’t expect this!” She switched the dial on her staff, aimed the open end at Boomhauer, and shot a sudden burst of air that blew him a few miles over. “I sucked in the air from your tidal wave attack! Still don’t think I’m a good match?”

The air sphere wore off on Beat, but he sunk to the ground. The Dark Chi was overwhelming him. “Nnn… Rhyme…”

When Sandman, Yuki, and Maka surrounded Hank Hill against a wall, the Heartless grabbed a shovel lodged in the rubble and imbued it with darkness. When he stabbed the shovel through the cliff, the huge chunks that he hurled at them were dark-imbued as well. Hank tore away at the cliff until he uncovered a pumpjack. Yuki was quick to shoot a powerful beam of ice that froze the pumpjack inside an iceberg, but Hank had thought ahead, appearing behind Yuki to swipe his ice pack. He used the upgraded pack to freeze the ground with dark ice, which was a bright purple and too slippery for even Nolan’s wheelchair to stay balanced.

Maka flew skyward and lunged down at Hank, who dodged her swings and shot a Dark Ice blast to freeze her feet and her scythe against the ground. Nolan shot his grappling hook to catch the ice pack, but Hank reacted by grabbing the hook. He yanked Nolan over, successfully swiping his utility belt before kicking the hero away. Hank put the belt on himself, igniting it with darkness as a swarm of dark boomerangs appeared in the air. “Heh heh heh. Wow, there’s more on this belt than Mega-Lo Mart’s entire store.”

Black Star used his chain-sickles to rope his way up Bill’s body, but the giant unleashed a “BUUUURP” that pushed the spirit back to the ground. He and Kaleo were mostly running around the dimwitted Heartless in search of a weak point. They didn’t want to risk enlarging him any more. “KALEO!” They saw Haruka run over with her phone raised. “Kaleo, weren’t you still a giant before? How did you get small again?”

“Django’s magic guitar did it.” Leo panted for breath. Black Star cut Bill’s leg and distracted him so they could talk.

“Leo, when we went to Punk Hazard and you got separated from us, did you eat a strange fruit? Namely one that tastes bad?”

“I eat bad things all the time, I’mma need more detail.” Kaleo stuck his pinky in his ear.

“If I’m correct, you should be able to shift to your giant size at will!” Caesar yelled. “Just stretch your arms and say ‘I’m a big boy now!’”
“Is that really how it works?” Haru asked.

“Beats me. I just wanna see it in action!”

“Then I will!” Kaleo faced up at Bill and stretched his arms, determination on his features. “I’m a BIG boy now! I’m a big boy now!” He shut his eyes and tried to force himself to grow. “I’m a big boy… NOOOOW!” Haruka was knocked back when Kaleo blew up like a balloon. He was half of Bill’s height.

“Ouch… At least it worked.” Haru grunted.

“AW, MAN!” Black Star whined. “Why is everyone turning big but ME?! I’m a god! I deserve a more godly size!”

“Great job, Leo! Are you feeling okay?”

“Nuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuhhh.” Drool dripped out of Kaleo’s hanging mouth. He wobbled in an unbalanced fashion, like his brain forgot to grow, too.

“Whoopsie!” said Caesar giddily. “The Devil Fruit has a couple flaws: while stretching one’s own dimensions makes you stronger and heavier, it has a nasty effect on the brain. The bigger you are, the stupider you are! You also move incredibly slow. After all, a nimble and intelligent giant is a ticking time bomb.”

Bill swung his foot and kicked Leo in the jaw, sending him crashing against a cliff. The giant charged to crush Leo’s skull, but Black Star flew up and sliced Bill’s eyes with the katana. With the giant stunned, Star changed his sword to a shuriken and chopped a circle around Bill’s Heartless Emblem. There was a blue beating heart inside it. “That must be the weak spot!” He tossed the shuriken at the heart, but a purple force field blocked it. The chest hole repaired itself as Bill grew.

“Sorry, buddy! But ‘long as one meter of mah belly is intact, this heart is staying nice and’ cozy.” Bill slapped his hand at Black Star, only to have it sliced off.

The spirit looked down when the giant Kaleo shrunk back to normal size, as a result of his lightheadedness. “I didn’t think I would ever say this…” Kaleo said to himself with a dizzy grin, “but I think I got an idea…”

Dale Gribble shrouded the village area in black gas, making it impossible for Django and Ellen to see. The witch decided to fly out of the gas and project a barrier around herself, and when she saw red lasers from Django’s guitar shoot out of an area, she sent a magic chain down to retrieve him. They were safely out of the gas for a second before Dale had it fly up into their undead throats. The two mages choked on the gas before dropping on the ground. “Doe’n’t matter to me if you’re alive or dead.” Dale said, blowing a smoke. “The Black Gas snuffs out everything.”

“KUEH, kueh!” Django hacked. “Any plans?”

“Just this.” Ellen grabbed the skull mask on her head and pulled it over her face. Her eyes shone red, her bare legs became skeletal, as did her left hand and part of her head. Ellen flashed green and blew the surrounding gas away, then aimed her hands up to shoot a magic beam at Dale.

“YIKES!” Django gaped. “You’re a skeleton, too?!”

“It’s Hollowfication. I’ll tell you about it later.” Ellen stretched her arms up as they morphed into magic and pulled Dale down. He coughed smoke from his cigarette to burn the hands off, but Django ran up and slashed him in the face with his claws. Ellen shot dark magic at Dale’s right leg, but the exterminator withstood it and rocketed upward, swallowing the area in a gas tornado.

“Uh-oh.” Haruka said as she viewed the tornado from outside. Several village houses were caught in the fog. “Sigh… Here goes.” Determined to help them, she dove inside, and already began coughing.

Kimaya

Two Wyvern swooped in to carry Carter away again, so Kimaya pursued on her skateboard. She swerved left and right to avoid Lazarus puddles on her path, then slid up ramped walls to avoid pits. Carter blasted green energy balls at the ground ahead of Kim, resulting in sandy shockwaves that she could use to propel over the pits. Kimaya stopped before a tall machine with a Lazarus tanker that Carter was dropped into. From below, it seemed like the tank was boiling and giving him more power, while also sending large droplets out to hit her. Kimaya decided to climb up and stop him.

She crossed a walkway on the left of the machine, using bending to stuff gas leaks back in their pipes. The path turned right, leading to a small fenced area where a Lazarus spout was risen at level with a higher path. Kimaya saw an Ice Cannon Heartless and used it to freeze the spout, then she pushed a box over to use as a boost to get on the frozen pillar, and reach the walkway. Kimaya swung bars on the side of the structure to cross a gap in the walkway, and they would bring her to two close Wall Jump walls. She raced across another walkway where Lazarus burst out of the sides, then made it atop the tank where Carter was bathing.

Kimaya used her skateboard to grind across the edge of the tank, circling it in a counterclockwise fashion while she held her Keyblades over the tank. She used her poisonbending to make the Lazarus swirl around, jumping and ducking Carter’s energy attacks. Eventually, Kimaya was able to make the structure wobble from all the stirring. When her psychic grip was strong enough, Kimaya jumped off the machine, swung her blades left, and caused the machine to topple over entirely.

Unsurprisingly, Carter popped out of the spilled Lazarus and zipped at Kimaya for swift punches and kicks. He moved faster, giving Kimaya less time to react and take a few hits. Carter’s skin shone a faint red, contrasted by his lime-green veins. “Dude, just look at yo’ self in a mirror. Do you really wanna look this way?”

“And what the hell would you do if you had cancer?! Just lay there and DIE?!”

“Hey, nobody wants to die, but if I had to look like that, I might have second thoughts.” she replied as she quickly dodged his attacks, trying to find an opening.

“Well I’m NOT gonna die! I’m the one and only heir to Pewterschmidt Industries! I’ll rule the company forever! I’ll have everything and you’ll have NOTHING!”

“At least before you sounded like a smart villain. Now you sound like some loon in a crazy house.”

“Sponges get them Jews from my undergarments and I’ll BLOW YOUR PENCIL UP!”

“And now you ain’t talking in real sentences. ’Guess we won’t be exchanging witty banter. Halright, let’s hurry this up.” Kimaya ducked another punch and stabbed her blades up at Carter, seizing the chance to deal a fast combo before jumping, doing a vertical spin, and batting him upward. Carter recovered in the air and stomped down at Kimaya before kicking her away. He flexed his muscles as Kimaya felt an invisible force around him. Carter did a vertical spin-kick and... sliced a dent across the ground with his green energy. Kimaya dodged further attacks like this as she made her way to Carter—he zipped up with both hands raised before he hammered them at the ground, bursting a shockwave around his area. Kimaya was able to dodge behind and shoot twin lasers from her Keyblades to hurt him.

And the others

Ellen charged a dark magic spell and shot it at Dale, who dodged before throwing a spire of black gas up to hit her. “Cough!” Ellen choked. “I don’t wanna stay in this form too long… I might get infected with darkness, too.”

“Haruka!” Django used sonic waves to blow the gas away and find Haruka kneeling on the ground. “Haru, you alright?” He ran up to her.

“I think so…” Haruka showed her arms, which had faint black lines. “I’m trying to adapt to the gas with my antibodies, but it… cough!”

“I can help!” Ellen flew down, her Hollow powers turned off as she projected a barrier from Dale’s gas. “Django, distract him!” The skeleton nodded and shot a soundwave at Dale, then summoned a skeleton totem pole to lift him up so he could claw at the Heartless.

Ellen pulled out a syringe of reddish-pink potion and injected it in Haruka. “HUUUU!” She almost felt like exploding from the sensation it gave her.

“Don’t panic! It’s a potion I made to vaccinate mortals from dark infections. I never tried it on a Heartless before, so I don’t know if it would work on him…”

“Wait… I think this can work.” Haruka smiled weakly, still commanding her antibodies. “Can you lure him down here while I get ready?”

“Er… Okay.” Confused, Ellen flew up and punched an energy fist at Dale, then Django sprouted another skeleton totem to grab and pull him down. Ellen lunged at and kicked Dale across the jaw, but he shot her away with gas. Django jumped, ripped down his mantis coat, and threw the man backward. “HYUH!” Haruka jumped behind and stuck her fingers into Dale’s neck.

“UAAAAAH!” Dale swung her off and clasped his neck when his skin began to turn a reddish-pink. “Oh God, what’s happening?! Is this the government’s Anti-rebellion Serum?!”

“No, it’s MY serum!” Haruka declared with pride. “I used my antibodies to mix Ellen’s medicine with the particles from your gas to create an antidote!”

“No, this can’t be!” Dale fell to his knees and gasped. “My precious fumes, used against me! I can’t die without having… one last smoke!” He fished around in his pocket, got a lighter, and lit his cigarette for one final smoke. “HUUUU, oh God, it tastes like burning cherry! You were right, Octavio! You were RIIIIIGHT!” Dale’s body faded into dark mist, his blue heart floating up and disappearing.

“Cough!” Haruka fell over. “But making an antidote with my body… Not my safest move! I need a minute… keh. Kids, don’t do this at home.”

“Beat!” Rhyme was able to find her brother in an alley. “Phew, I thought I lost you! Beat, what’s wrong?”

“Cough, he kind of got me!” Beat choked as his body turned more dark. “I think I sucked in his Dark Wind with mah… ghost lungs or somethin’.”
“AH! OW!” They looked up and saw Wiccan be pelted with air puffs from Boomhauer, then the surfer flew up and bashed her to the ground with one more puff. He spotted Beat and Rhyme and spun a cyclone to blow the siblings apart again. “Man-three—three-on-one-isn’t-fair-man, gonna-get-it-done; take-take-him-out-first.” He blew a ceaseless gust of wind at Beat, preventing him from standing.

“BITO!” Rhyme jumped in the gust and was pressed against her brother.

“Rhyme, get the fuck outta here!” Beat grabbed his sister and struggled to throw her off. “Just ’cause I gotta choke on his breath don’t mean you do!”

“But if you die, I might become a Hollow again, and I don’t want to!” Rhyme cried. “You died trying to protect me, Big Brother… I’ll die for you, too.”

“Nnn… Raimu…”

“Is there something wrong with your head?” Crystal remarked as she sucked the gust into her staff. “Instead of wasting your strength on imaginary ghosts, you should focus on me!” The witch rocketed up and started whacking his head like a golfball stuck on a tee. “A woman does not like it when you IGNORE her! ESPECIALLY during a fight!” She flew above and shot him to the ground with a bit of the condensed air. Crystal landed on him and stuck her staff in his mouth. “Perhaps I need to inflate your brain a tad!”

“MMMM!” She shot the full force of the gust inside Boomhauer, puffed him like a balloon, and POPPED him, his heart flying out. “But that’ll just inflate your ego. WHOO!” Wiccan twirled her staff and made a pose. “I beat him ALL by myself!”

Beat and Rhyme floated behind her with irritated stares. They picked boogers out of their noses and wiped them on her robe. “Hee hee hee hee!” The spirits giggled before flying up.

Black Star stabbed his sword in Bill’s foot, resulting in a grunt from the giant. The spirit kid jumped up Bill’s body and continuously pierced him in places, so Bill wouldn’t have the readiness to retaliate when Star stabbed the top of his head and pulled it back. Kaleo climbed out from under Bill’s armpit and jumped down his gaping throat. Black Star released and watched as Bill grew bigger. “I really hope this works.” Star said quietly.

“You know, in spite of all this pain I’m feeling, it’s probly nothin’ compared to those poor villagers.” Bill turned to face Niebla. “They’re so sick, I bet they wouldn’t even feel me crushing them to the ground. Well, I guess I’ll put them outta their misery.” The giant began to stomp to the village. At his size, he would get there in 30 seconds.

“Come on, Leo! Hurry up!”

Before Bill could reach the first house, he felt something press against the inside of his chest. “Urk! Oh, man! I’m having a heart attack! D’oh, why can’t I find that blasted heart under all this fat? Why am I so fat?! Hick—D’OOOH!” Kaleo expanded to a size even larger than Bill. His massive heart was forced out, and the giant was unable to reform with Leo occupying his original space.

“Tsubaki: SHADOW STAR!” Black Star’s weapon transformed into a small black sword. “God’s Divine Judgment Will Bring You Justice!” He flew at the heart and stabbed it through the center. The shell around the heart was destroyed as it disappeared.
“NOOOOO!” Bill’s head was still falling from the air. His body parts dispersed into darkness. “Lenore…” He whimpered as his head faded, too.

Maka was hurriedly swinging her scythe to fight off the swarm of dark boomerangs. The dark Grapple-Cam had a pair of teeth and was swinging itself around Yuki as it kept trying to bite him in various areas. “Eh HEH HEH heh heh!” Hank electrified the ground around him with the Shock Gun; he never had a wider smile. “Hwow, these gizmos are really fun! I feel like putting on a cape and beating up burglars! Heh, a cape! Wait’ll Bobby sees this! Eh HEH heh! LOOK OUT, streets of Arlen! Propane Man’s fighting crime with clean-burning—”

Nolan pressed his remote and caused the utility belt to electrify, shocking Hank until he fell on his back. The dark gadgets fainted. Nolan rolled over and picked Hank up by the shirt. “You need to ask before you play with someone’s toys.” He jabbed Hank in the eyes.

“Okay, this stopped being funny.” Maka said as she casually stabbed Hank in the back. “I just wanna go home and take a spirit-bath.”

“Make sure to use spirit-soap and a spirit-sponge, and wash your spirit-hair.” Nolan said, earning a laugh from Yuki.

“NOT FUNNY!” Hank’s body faded and the heart vanished.

Now Kimaya

Carter hopped in a car Heartless called a Hot Rod, driving across another dirt road while Kimaya chased on her skateboard. The Hot Rod simply dropped bombs that Kimaya had to evade, and she saw they were returning to the Lazarus Plant. They rolled down into a dark tunnel going under the factory, and the only light within the depths was a humongous pool of Lazarus. Kimaya didn’t see where Carter went (though it was obvious), so she skated down the path and stopped on the only safe foothold by the edge of the pool.

“AAAHH!!” Carter shot out of the pool like a bullet and slammed Kim against the wall. The elder’s skin had the reddish-pink tone of a painful sunburn, and his green veins were bulging. “So, you like that Django boy? Then you can JOIN him!” He punched a beam that broke a gaping crack in the wall, Kimaya dodging by a beat. “You can die in the same place that he died! I’m getting SICK of the Leaders nagging me about the Seven Lights!”

Kimaya stumbled over when she dodged on Carter’s left. As she grabbed her dropped Oathkeeper, she glanced down at her stomach and had a wild impulse. She ran back up the winding skateboard path, dodging all of Carter’s blasts that made the path crumble. “Why would you give a damn about anybody else when you can have everything? I’m the president of a multi-million corporation! I’m the only person worth saving! And the second this godforsaken town finally dies, no one will ever remember or CARE about—”

“I am getting SICK of yo’ FACE!” Kimaya pierced both Keyblades into her stomach, unlocking her Poison Fury. She dove headfirst into the Lazarus, much to Carter’s utter shock. Faster than a bullet, Kimaya shot out and banged him against the wall. Her body shone with the Lazarus’s bright green light, using her Keyblades to bend a stream of Lazarus and press him on the wall. “You like Lazarus?! Well, have a GALLON! Or a DRUM! OR A FERRY!!”
“Gluck gluck gluck, cough, gouk!” Kimaya continuously shoved Lazarus down his throat. When she stopped, Carter fell dizzy. Kimaya spun at whipping speed and pulled a spire of Lazarus up to surround herself. She was still energized with the Lazarus mixed with Fury Mode, and before she would let it go to waste, she flew all around the factory and destroyed every last machine that had a thing to do with Lazarus. Her Keyblades allowed her to control the powerful toxic, shooting beams that destroyed every container and pipe.

Finally, Kimaya drilled back down to the basement, bent all of the Lazarus around her Keyblades, and sent a devastating beam down to the center of the pool. But Carter Pewterschmidt blocked it with a beam of his own, and now it was a matter of which force was stronger. Carter fought through Kimaya’s beam and grabbed her crossed Keyblades, pushing with the full power of the Lazarus he absorbed for 30 years.

“I am Carter Pewterschmidt… a Corporate President! If you destroy me, you will regret it! Cipher Pol 10 will come… Cipher Pol 10 will kill every last one of you brats! The Seven Lights will regret the day they EVER stood against the-”

“BUUURP!” Kimaya’s Gas Bomb faltered Carter, and one final burst of power was enough to blow him into the Lazarus Pit. “Like Ah give a shit.” The energy beam burrowed through the ground, and for the next few minutes, Kimaya watched as- “WAIT, are we forgetting something?”

Harper House

“Here’s the Spirit Ball, Harvey!” Sonya gave her son the ball.

“Thanks, Mom!” Harvey through the Pokéball and caught Mesprit. The ball wiggled and beeped on the floor before confirming capture. The Spirit Ball flashed its pink and silver colors, and a ‘II’ appeared on the forehead. Harvey picked it up. “Yaaaaay!”

It doesn’t feel climactic, but Harvey caught a Firstborn! Just 4 left!

“Phew, okay.” sighed Kimaya. She watched every last ounce of Lazarus swirl into the depths like a toilet. She set foot on the ground to let her Fury wear off. (End song.)

Kimaya panted and felt no energy left to even walk. The cave was so much darker; only a few droplets of Lazarus gave light, and echoed upon dropping. A small blue light floated out of the pit. Kimaya stared at the blue heart before it disappeared into darkness. “So, he was one of them, too… or something.” She gasped.

Outside

Everyone else gathered outside the factory entrance as Kimaya limped out, using her Keyblades as walking sticks. “Kimaya!” Kami and The Gang yelled as she and Django helped her stand.

“Cough!” She spat some droplets out. “Damn… Lazarus tastes like old man spit.”

“You fell in the Lazarus Pit?!” Django yelled.

“Not so much that, more like… Tried to control it with Fury Mode and got carried away.”

“Where did you learn to do Fury Mode?” Kami asked.

“Dad taught me about it. He said I needed to get better at bending, but since Keyblades can open anything, I thought I’d… KUEH!”
“We need to get her to a hospital!” Haruka yelled. “I’m calling Moonbase!”

“Kimaya, just… hang in there!” Django was the last one to speak before Kimaya fainted.

Moonbase

She awoke to a soft, peaceful tune. A hospital light hung right above her. Kimaya was wrapped like a mummy, but her signature three front strands of hair stuck out of the bandages. Django was on her right, playing the tune in question. He opened his eyes a tad to stare at her coolly. Kimaya returned the smile. “I’ll take the fanfare now.”

“…Okay.” He smiled.

Now? Okay. NOW Kimaya awakened as the Sixth Light! Just ONE more! No, Mom, I’m writing stories. I know, I’ll do that in a minute. No, I haven’t seen—CRAP, wrong place!!

“You sure know how to make a show, young lady.” Kami entered the room with The Gang and the (invisible to her) Sector SCYTHE.

“After you beat Carter, the rest of the Heartless just disappeared.” Maka said with a grateful smile.

“I think they were intimidated by my godly godliness.” Black Star smirked.

“If only.” Ellen giggled, earning a glare from him.

“Hey, Kimaya!” Kaleo grinned. “I grew so big that I forgot how to speak! But a talking football shot me with a ray gun and made me little again!”

“Uuaaaah.” Django lay beside her. “Me, too.”

“No you ain’t, you a dead kid. You ain’t evuh get tired.”

“Oh, shut up. My bones feel rickety.”

“I wanna be Beat, too!” Kaleo lay with them.

“Well, you can’t!” Beat rapped. “’Cause I’M Beat!”

The Gang and Sector SCYTHE laughed for a second. Kami gave a small chuckle and sat on a chair. When they calmed down, Kimaya frowned and brought up the question: “So Ah guess Beat and Rhyme have ta leave now?”

The two siblings frowned and looked away. “I thought we would have to eventually.” Rhyme said. “But I’m still gonna miss you guys.”

“Well… we could bring it up with the Supreme Leader.” Ellen smiled. “If he was okay with it, and if they didn’t tell anyone else, he might let you visit them…”

“Uuuuugh.” Django rolled on his side. “Why are Beat and Rhyme getting the sympathy treatment? I’m the one with the sad backstory, my town is sick and dying!”

“No offense,” Rhyme smiled, “but for Spirit KND, sad backstories are as everyday as messy clothes.”
Kimaya put a hand on his shoulder. “Cheer up, Django. At least your town won’t go cuckoo like Carter.”

“Good point… All I wanted was payback at Carter. Whether he gave them the Lazarus or not, in the end it wouldn’t have mattered. I’m starting to think it’s Niebla’s fate to be sick. I guess I’m just the lucky one. But what can you do about it?”

“I can understand the pain your town must be in.” Ellen said. “It would be a shame to leave things as they are, without trying to help them.”

“I think Haru was trying to do something.” Django said. “Maybe we’ll go back after Kimaya’s better.”

“What I can’t quite understand is why the Heartless suddenly decided to show up here.” Maka noted. “In the past, the only times the Heartless decide to show up… are when the Negatar was around.”

“Where do the Heartless come from, anyway?” Black Star asked.

“I’m not sure… but maybe we can find a clue in the Lazarus Plant. We’ll check it out after Kimaya’s better. Let’s give her some space for now.” The spirits left.

The Gang kids were silent, lain on Kim’s bed. “Kids, get off of that. You might catch her disease.” Kami told them.

“Relax, it was only a little Lazarus.” Kimaya said.

“Sigh…”

“So Mom, how come you ain’t seeing those spirit kids? Didn’t you kill K. Rool?”

“I didn’t really care about that. Maybe that’s why.”

Django whistled. “You’re cold, Mrs. Heartly.”

“He came back to life, anyway.”

“Sure he did. …Hey, Kim. Wanna hear about the Twenty Keys Quest?”

“Is that important?”

“I think so…”

Pueblo de Niebla; two days later

It was sunnier in the afternoon, and the sky clear with the factory shut down. Townspeople were out of their homes for fresh air, but they were still too ill to do anything. Kimaya was healthy enough to walk around, but she still had bandages. She stared at the key ring with the six strange keys dangling in her hand. “Twenty Keys, huh.” she said to herself, sitting on a rock. “Seven Lights, Thirteen Darks. You know anything about this, Mom?”

“Not a clue,” Kami said, lain on her front on the ground. Her head was propped on her hands and her legs rocking to and fro in the air.

“…I’m still mad at you for not telling I’m a Sleeper.”
“I said I was sorryyyyy.” Kami droned.

“I need a better heartfelt speech.”

“Sigh. Humility hurts.”

“How long are we going to stay in this place?” Wiccan asked. “Eventually, the Government will be aware of our actions here.”

“Until Haruka feels like leaving.” Sandman shrugged.

“Thank God the Sandmobile has Sand-Sleeping Bags.” Yuki noted.

“May I have EVERYBODY’S attention!” Haruka announced from the top of the coal truck (still crashed on the fountain). “After a careful analysis of the samples extracted from my patients, my uncle has come up with a conclusion.” She held up her cellphone, turning the volume up so all could hear—and Django cast a translation spell.

“GOOD AFTERNOON, Sick People Country!” Caesar’s maniacal voice spoke. “After I finished studying the bacteria sample, I now know the reason behind your illness. It is something I read about, but had never seen for myself. It even took some looking up on Mexico’s history to finally learn the truth. Pueblo de Niebla is a village of poisonbenders!”

“Poisonbenders?” The others were murmuring confusion, but the citizens were too tired to do the same.

“Two hundred years ago, numerous Mexican families were banished from their hometowns for having one or more smelly poisonbenders. It was a cold era where we could not be the free bees we are now. Those people pleaded to the gods for a place they can call home. So the God of Poisons, Hexxus appeared and brought them to a land rich with Poison Chi! Houses were built, a whole village where the benders could be their delightful smelly selves!”

“So how did they all get sick?” Django yelled.

“Well, as you now know, the reason for this abundant chi was the Lazarus. The impure, tainted Lazarus created fumes that were too much for the benders to handle – it messed with their minds, you know. A couple generations later, the people forgot their poisonbending. They developed a disease known as Chi Disuse. It happens when a bender goes far too long without using their chi, while living in an area heavy with that chi. For poisonbenders, it is most likely to happen. The samples I studied were, in actuality, a tainted Poison Chi as a result of Disuse.”

“Then the reason I was the only healthy child…” Django spoke, “is because I’m not a poisonbender?”

“Did your family come from this town originally?” Nolan asked.

“No. My grandma was a dark witch, and she brought my dad here from Miracle City to protect him from persecution. They thought he might have magic, too. He married a woman from this village and had me. But when I turned three, Mom got really sick and she died. When Dad went out to the desert to hunt, he never came back. That night, when I was in bed… Grandma appeared as a skeleton. She told me what she was and said that I inherited her magic.”

“But if your mother hailed from this village, then you should have inherited a little of her familial traits. The fact you were perfectly healthy is outstanding, even for a mage.”
“So what do these people have to do to get better?” Yuki asked. “Use their repressed poisonbending?”

“That would be the first step.” Haru figured. “But I think we also need to get them out of this dump. Pueblo de Niebla’s too toxic for any person to live on. We need to get everyone treated and find them new homes. Just like we did for all of Caesar’s victims!”

“Exactly! HEY, wait a sec!”

“I already told Cheren and everyone else everything that’s happened here. We’ll also be able to get Project Daycare out of the way, too.”

“I… I want to be. But it’s too hard to believe. I gave up hope this town could be saved… I wanted to use you to achieve my selfish desire to destroy Carter. I kept my feelings and ambitions a secret… How could it all be resolved so easily?”

Kimaya knuckled his skull. “Quit actin’ so dead and ask for things more.”

“…Hn hn hn.” Django grinned and chuckled.

“If all of you are finished,” Maka’s voice called, “someone else is here to speak!”

The heroes made their way north of the town square. Sector SCYTHE was standing with three other figures. Team Sandman instantly recognized the Nightmare King, Darkrai II, and Jack Skellington. They were accompanied by their new employee, Anna of Arendelle.

“Cough! Blech!” Anna choked. “Earth’s air is worse than Glacia’s blizzard!”

“I kind of like it.” Jack smiled, his bone lungs immune to the fumes.

Darkrai floated up to Kimaya Heartly. He reached down by her belt and took the key ring, studying the six attached keys. “Kimaya… What did the stone cube call you?”

Kimaya questioned how he knew about that, but maybe Sector SCYTHE told him. “Um… ‘The Keeper of the Keys’?”

“Darkrai, what’s going on?” asked Nolan.

The king gave the keys back to Kim. “These spirits came to Nightmare Land through the NME Transporter inside Carter’s factory. Mr. Pewterschmidt is a customer of my products, but I was surprised to hear what creatures showed up in his control. I have a story to tell you all. The Heartless come from Nightmare Land.”

“You mean they’re Nightmares?” Haruka asked.

“Not quite. I believe the date was 1500 years ago.”

That long ago

It was a time when my father was having creator’s block in Nightmare production. They pictured the Holy Nightmare, towering and terrifying, clutching his head as he panicked from lack of ideas. It was really funny. Definitely.
Then one night, a man was reported strolling through the city. A human man. And he came to the factory. He wore a brown robe with a hood. He approached my father with his head bowed. He introduced himself as…

The man pulled off his hood. He was brown-skinned, baldheaded, had a grey goatee, and scary yellow eyes. “I am Xehanort.”

He raised his hand and materialized what we now know as a Keyblade. It was the same Keyblade Negatar Gnaa would one day use: the blade that unlocks hearts and minds. Xehanort used it on my father, and his creativity lit like a dark sun.

Darkrai I scratched his chin as he scribbled formulas on a holographic screen. Xehanort shook ‘no’ and wrote his own formulas with the Keyblade. Darkrai smiled deviously. He was an ingenious man, like he had been doing this his whole life. He brought with him a potion called ‘Heart.’ Xehanort held up a vial of pink, brimming liquid with tiny hearts. According to him, it was emotions in condensed form. My father beamed at his intellect.

When Darkrai II flew by, he noticed the key ring attached to Xehanort’s coat. It had twelve keys on it.

Across the factory treadmills came Soldier Heartless, Icy Cubes, Nocturnes, Search Ghosts, and Large Bodies which hilariously smashed the pile of Heartless at the end. A whole new line of Nightmares called “Heartless” were made. They were made using the Heart and Evil Crystals we collected. Father honored Xehanort and gave him the Nobel Fear Prize. We had never seen a one like him… but then one day:

The Heartless revolted! Xehanort commanded them to attack the Nightmares! It was a disaster! During the invasion, a ship landed in the Town Square. Xehanort went up to greet its driver. It was none other than the Negatar Navi!

“Navi from Ocarina of Time is a NEGATAR?!” Kaleo screamed.

It’s just “Ivan” spelled backwards! …But that is funny. Anyway, it turned out Xehanort was in league with Lord Navi. And Navi’s Dark Chi was used to create more Heartless; before we knew it, Heartless appeared in nearly every populace setting. The Reapers and spirits were sent to control the situation. We didn’t produce that many Heartless in Nightmare Land, so we assumed they were making more elsewhere.

Eventually, the Grim Reaper, Jorgen von Strangle, and Fairy Princess Mavis were called to fight him. I still remember how he fought. He was very powerful! He also kept using Healing spells, and THAT’S always fun. The fight lasted for AGES…

We won.

“Awwwww.”

But it wasn’t easy. And even as Xehanort lay defeated, he spoke his last words proudly.

“I am Xehanort. I am the Keeper of the Keys! You can never imprison me. No lock can hold me!”

So we used all manner of Lock Spells, magic locks, and injected him with a toxin that makes his body still. Then we placed him in the lowest floor of Underworld Prison.
Currently

“There were still so many things we didn’t know about Xehanort.” Darkrai continued. “But over the next generations, more Heartless appeared under control of the Negatars. Mortals also began to gain Keyblades and used them to fight the Heartless. I was so confused that I decided to seek the knowledge of the Chronicler. Grim accompanied me. The Chronicler coined the Dimensional Fusion as the cause.”

Darkrai faced down at Kimaya. “Disregarding all those details, I think I understand. It seems that you, Kimaya, are a chosen one of the Seven Lights. You are the Keeper of the Keys. I believe Xehanort has the same duty as you do. He is the Keeper for the Thirteen Darknesses.”

“Really?!” Haruka exclaimed.

“Yes. And it seems the two of you will give those other keys to the respective chosen ones. I do not understand the entire prophecy myself, so it may not do to ask me. But I think we can be sure that Xehanort will return. Just be on your guard…”

Kimaya looked away, not sure what to think. Anna also looked a bit downtrodden; the mention of the prophecy and the Poneglyphs was a sensitive topic, given what happened. “Anyway, we will happily take the people of this town to Nightmare Land and have them treated.” Darkrai said. “Do not misjudge. Our medical care is very excellent, and Anna has shown to have great doctoring skills.”

“Jar Jar gets a looooot of booboos.” Anna grinned sheepishly.

“I could help treat them.” Haruka said.

“That’s very kind of you, but you children must have more important things on your plate.” Darkrai said. “You can trust them in our care.”

“Heh…” Django grinned. “One skeleton to another?”

“You bet!” Jack perked. “We’ll go back home and bring a few ships to take them back with us!”

The three returned to the factory. “We need to go, too.” Maka said, standing with her spirit operatives. “Thanks for all your help.”

“Catch ya later, Kim and Lo!” Beat rapped.

“Catch ya on the flipsiiiide!” Rhyme sang.

“It was great seeing you, Haruka!” Ellen waved. “Tell Cheren I said ‘hi’!"

“Haha, okay! Wait, how do you know Cheren?”

“I don’t personally, but he’s my sister’s descendant!”

“Your sister’s-?”

“Time to go!” Maka yelped when a ray of light shone on them from Heaven. “Byyyyye!” The spirits warped.

Django returned to the east field and climbed the hill to Luviro’s house. It was as old as he had last seen it, and its only inhabitant was long dead. “Sigh… I promised that I would be with you when you died. I guess… I forgot that, too. Sigh…”
A pair of boots stomped up the rugged path. Django felt their owner stand beside him without looking up. “Well, you aren’t something I see every day.”

Django looked up. He was a teen boy with sunglasses, a brown vest, and a lollipop in his mouth. “Neither are you. What’re you doing here?”

“Here to see Luviro.” Augustus walked toward the house with his crew of four babies.

Django was confused. “How do you know Luviro?”

“I met him a few months ago.” The captain entered the old house.

Django gaped, pondering the teen’s words. “Luviro’s… alive? …” Feeling too curious, he joined the crew in the house.

Mariejoa; God’s Castle

“YOUR MAJESTIES!” An agent in a black tux dashed through the shiny marble halls. “Honorable World Leaders!” He entered the open throne room and bowed before the six Leaders. “CP10 returned from Mexico! President Carter Pewterschmidt was killed, and the Sixth Light found the Poneglyph he was protecting!”

“Poor Carrrrrrrr, poor Carrrrrrrrrr.” Jennifer Bush swayed to and fro. “Rrrrr, rrrrr, rrrrrrr.”

“Time is running out!” King Andrew thundered. “Is the Poneglyph in Enies Lobby still in place?”

“Y-Yes! Eldwin reported that it was still secure!”

“See to it that it stays secure! For hundreds of years, the World Government has searched for the Poneglyphs, to hide them from the chosen ones! The Poneglyph in Enies Lobby will no doubt go to the Seventh Light. The Octogan showed us her identity. CP10 is ordered to protect it from her at all costs. The one named Madeline Murphy must not come to Enies Lobby!”

“Yes, My Lord!” The agent ran.

“Our time is running short.” Lucas Stonebuddy spoke with hands over his mouth. “Hugo Strange is nearly complete with his end. There is still one crucial key to create the Inferius: the God Fruit.”

“There is no worry.” His Majesty said. “It will be delivered to our hands soon enough.” The Octogan showed a furious King Zing and his swarm of Zingers, and Team Rupert bringing a giant pot of honey to Lenari.

Lazarus Plant

Babs Pewterschmidt stared at the ruins of her husband’s factory. She shook her head in a reproving fashion. “Little children can be such demons. I hope you people are worth the money we’re paying.” She turned to face them. “Do whatever you can to avenge Carter.”

The seven masked figures in black coats said nothing. The gentle breeze blew their coats.

I was a tad pressed for time, but… it all worked out. A few scenes I wanted to have happen, but couldn’t work in. Well, with Lazarus Saga concluded, we will now move to the seventh, long-awaited, semi-final CP10 Saga… RIGHT AFTER I write the Tenth Firstborn Arc of the Side Stories! XD Yeah, I debated it, and I wanna get this Side Stories arc out of the way! So I will see you for that!

Chapter B-29: Freedom

Pueblo de Niebla

Let’s recap for a second: following their parley with Captain Slag, the Marzipan Pirates flew to Pueblo de Niebla to ask Luviro about the sixth Lost Candy. They flew by Team Sandman’s aircraft, and before confronting the sick child, the crew decided to bare witness to the exciting conflict that took place in the village. A group of kids whom the pirates were pretty sure were Kids Next Door operatives fought a band of dark creatures. One of these kids grew exponentially gigantic and seemed to have no clue on his surroundings. Before he could cause too much damage, Stewie blasted this boy with his Metahuman Neutralizer. This seemed to work as the boy shrank back to a normal size.

When Augustus was finally ready to see Luviro again, he led his crew up the path to his house. He cocked a brow: there was a skeleton boy in black clothes and a Western hat. “Well, you aren’t something I see every day.” Augustus said to the undead boy.

The skeleton looked up. He had glowing red eyes in his sockets. “Neither are you. What’re you doing here?”

“Here to see Luviro.” Augustus walked toward the house with his crew following.

Django was confused. “How do you know Luviro?”

“I met him a few months ago.” The captain entered the old house.

Django gaped, pondering the teen’s words. “Luviro’s… alive? …” Feeling too curious, he joined the crew in the house.

The home was as fallen apart and poorly managed as either Django or Augustus had last seen. They all approached the bed by the dead fireplace. The lump that belonged to its occupant was still there. Django only watched as Augustus put his hand on the lump. “Luviro… are you awake?”

Django gasped upon hearing the faint, agonizing moan. “Au…gus…tus…”

“LUVIRO!” Django was quick to climb on the bed. The pale, dying face of his old friend opened his yellowish eyes. “Luviro… is that really you?”

“…Hm.” Django smirked. “Compared to you, I’m a sight. But… this isn’t possible. You shouldn’t even be alive… let alone look the same as you did 30 years ago!”

“Thirty years ago?!” Stewie asked baffled.

“Mw-mw?!” Maggie shared his confusion.

“You three are one to talk.” Augustus noted. “Luviro, look! We have four of the Lost Candies!” He took the Infi-Cube and released the Rock Nut, Cupcake Core, Gear Heart, and Sun Key on his bed.

Luviro gazed at the treasures and made a faint hiss that sounded like a long gasp. “Los Caramelos Perdidos… You really found them for me?”

“I did!” Augustus said happily. “Just like I said I would! And I’m about to find the other ones, too! But I need to know where the sixth one is. Can you tell me?”

He coughed. “Augustus… I’ve never been more happy… I’m so thankful that you… are finding them. …I have a secret to tell you. Uncover my head, Augustus… Please.”

Augustus viewed the blanket that covered his head. It seemed awfully thick for what he assumed was little space underneath. But he felt something hard underneath when he grabbed the blanket. Augustus pulled it off… He, Django, and the babies gaped.

Luviro had graying black hair and pale orange horns. The twin horns curved into swirls like a lizard’s tail. “My name is… Luviro Lizaro. I am from a world called Alternia. Augustus… do you know about the Apocalypse that will happen at the end of this month?”

“The Apocalypse…” Augustus was still trying to process this strange appearance, so this new knowledge didn’t reach him right away. “No…”

“The Apocalypse will destroy everything… He will destroy everything… But there is a way to save everyone. When the Lost Candies are brought together… they will create the ship to the New World… and it will sail for three years… I was sent to this universe thousands of years ago… to help the Sugar Fairies hide the Lost Candies…”

“Thousands of years…” Augustus whispered to himself, trying to process it all. “So… the Lost Candies create a ship?”

“Sí… It is the most powerful ship in the entire multiverse… created by Termina’s Giants. If it isn’t complete… nobody will survive… The universe is doomed… Augustus, please… You need to complete the ship. Save… everybody…”

“But none of this makes sense! An Apocalypse is gonna destroy the universe, who else knew about this?!?”

“The Kids Next Door.” Django answered. “What? You seriously weren’t aware of this Seven Lights Quest that’s been happening all month?! Hwow, you need to catch up!”

“Luviro, if all this is true, why couldn’t you have told me earlier? I would’ve spent more time looking for them!”

“I had to be sure I could trust you… If you were really willing to find the Lost Candies… then I could. Augustus… I have Universe Cancer… My body absorbed too much of the energy from my peoples’ Transportifier… and after I landed in this universe, my lifespan became bound to it… I can feel it… It’s going to happen soon… cough. Augustus… please find the last candies… please… cough!”

“But where is it? Where’s the sixth candy?”

“The final candy… we hid under an island… that looks like a squished gumdrop.”

“Gumdrop Cove!” Stewie said with realization.

“Augustus… I’m sorry I lied to you before…” Luviro spoke hoarsely. “I’m sorry that I… gave you this difficult mission… But I loved this universe… I loved every moment I spent here… It’s so much nicer than Alternia… I just wish… it didn’t have to go… cough. Augustus… go find the last candy, quickly… I may not get to see you again… so I want you to know… I’m really grateful… you came to see me…” He fell asleep.

“Luviro…” Augustus put a hand on his head. Django felt for Luviro’s heart, but his boney hand had no feeling.

“Luviro… why…” Django would be crying tears if he could. “Why didn’t you tell me… I would’ve done it for you! I was DEAD for 30 years, I had nothing else to do! LUVIRO!”

“Calm down, he’s still breathing!” Augustus yelled. “He isn’t dead, yet. Still… is his lifespan really bound to this universe? And the Apocalypse… could that be what the fairies were talking about?”

“Augustus, do you know what’s going to happen at the end of this month?” Zeira asked.

“This month? At the end of this month, Luviro’s gonna die. He’s terminally ill, and he wants to see the Lost Candies before it happens.”

“…I see…” Zeira was clearly suspicious of his reason, though Augustus couldn’t imagine why.

“She did know…” Augustus thought back to that conversation. “She knew all along… Kids, we have to go. We need to search Gumdrop Cove for the Lost Candy.” He recollected the four candies and began to walk out. “What are you gonna do, Skeleton?”

Django glanced at them, still kneeled on Luviro’s bed. “I’m gonna stay here… I promised Luviro I would be with him when he died… I thought I missed my chance, but now… I can keep my promise.”

“…” Augustus took out a lollipop and tossed it to Django. “If he wakes up, give that to him.”

Django stared at the green candy, hearing the footsteps of the crew fade out of the house. “I doubt either of us could taste it now…” Django chuckled.

“Augustus, are we going to tell Captain Slag about Gumdrop?” Stewie asked on their way to the Ace Flyer.

“Not yet. I wanna get my hands on it before Slag or Licorice have a chance to find out. If Licorice knew where it was, his boys would’ve been swarming Gumdrop already. We have a shot.”

“But he didn’t even tell us what the candy looked like!” Rallo shouted.

“Yes he did, Rallo. The Lost Candies are parts to a ship. We have four of the parts, the fairies have the fuel… so all that leaves is the ship itself.”

KND Moonbase

Sector RZ parted ways with Wendy and her group once they left Lunaria’s atmosphere. The team of four returned to a shabby-looking Moonbase, parking their C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. in the hangar. Lulu, Denny, and Diwata headed for the Supreme Leader’s office while Lee remained with his sister, who was lain on one of the bus’s seats.

When Dillon saw the team come onto the bridge, he gestured Carol to follow as he jogged up to them. “Sector RZ! Where’ve you… Is that Diwata?” he questioned the blue-skinned girl with round white eyes.

“Yes, it’s me.” Dee confirmed. “Before we start explaining, let’s get Cheren.”

They knocked on the leader’s door before entering the office. Cheren looked up with a quizzical expression. “Lulu, Denny? And…”

“Diwata.” She rolled her eyes. “Cheren, we gotta show you something.”

They led Cheren, Dillon, and Carol back down to the hangar and entered the C.O.O.L.-B.U.S.. Lee stepped aside to give them a look at his sister… The three gasped at the sight of the hole in Leanne’s chest. They nearly died of shock. “Wh…What the hell happened?!” Cheren choked out.

“Leanne’s dead.” Lee said solemnly. “It happened on a mission to Lunaria.”

“Lunaria?! I didn’t give you any mission!”

“We sorta got it on our own.” Lulu replied. “To sum it up…”

The next few minutes were spent recapping the adventure. Dillon couldn’t bring himself to ask questions… Leanne was a close friend. He comforted her when her prank against Francis backfired, they played videogames together… Dillon wasn’t particularly in love with her, but a recent conversation suggested differently about her.

“So Dillon, I notice you’ve been spending an awful lot of time with Carol.”

“Well, she is tryin’ out to be a new member of the team. I’m just helping her out.”

“Ah. It’s only fair, I guess, with Vanellope gone… no offense.”

“What does that mean?”

“Come on, Dillon, you’re totally hitting it up with that rich girl. And she knows computers now just like Vanellope!”

“That doesn’t mean I LIKE her!” Dillon flushed. “And I wasn’t in love with Vanellope either, she was my sister!”

“Adopted sister.”

“Fine, but I’m still gonna tell you that money doesn’t buy happiness.”

“I KNOW that! Besides, Carol’s in love with Mason. I don’t wanna steal her because I couldn’t tease Mason then.”

“Well, Mason still has Sheila, so you and her still have a shot, I guess.” Leanne shrugged.

“Yeah, you’re probably right… I MEAN, NO YOU’RE NOT!”

“Dillon, are you okay?” Carol asked comfortingly, putting a hand on his shoulder.
Dillon glanced at her and sported a light smile. “For a while, I sort of had the feeling… Leanne had a crush on me. I don’t know if she did or… she was just poking fun. …I guess I’ll never find out now.”

“Sigh… We better go tell Mom and Dad so we can start preparing the funeral.” Lee said.

“We don’t have time for another funeral.” Cheren replied.

“What?!” Lee whipped at him, and Damien bared fangs and hissed, sharing his master’s anger.
“We had a funeral for your dad, but you don’t wanna have one for my SISTER?! I thought you were a nice guy that tried to be too nice, but you’re really a selfish PRICK, aren’t you?!”

“The Apocalypse is 15 days away!” Cheren yelled. “I’m as upset as you are and I wanna have a funeral, but we don’t have time! We need to focus our energy on finding the Lights and saving the universe! If all of us are dead, there’ll be no one to mourn her! But if we’re successful… then we’ll give her a funeral.”

“…Hmph. I wonder if you would say that if Anthony died, or Aurora, or just about anyone from a higher-up sector.”

“Calm down, Lee.” Lulu appeased.

“Uh-uh. I don’t get why Cheren is allowed to have a bedridden ‘my life is over’ moment and I shouldn’t.”

“I’m not berating you for being upset,” Cheren argued, “I just want you to be sure you don’t lose sight of the mission at hand.”

“Oh, well sorry for not trying to find the Seven Lights that we don’t know who they are. Sorry that no one in my sector fell asleep and received a destiny dream, EXCEPT maybe Diwata, because she’s a flippin’ Firstborn Guardian now! And NO ONE stopped Dillon or Melody from going to get THEIR Firstborn! In fact, if you didn’t make that deal with Grim, she could just come back to life right now!”

“But if she did come back, it would kind of ruin the meaning behind Diwata’s awakening.” Denny reasoned. He was met with Lee’s angry stare, plus silent stares from the others. “…Or something.”

“Sigh… Lee, I’m really sorry about Leanne, and I’ll even bump you guys higher than Sector L if you want.” Cheren consoled. “But I just don’t think another funeral is necessary. Anyway, since Leanne died on a mission, we’ll put her in an official KND casket and keep her in the infirmary, but first you can take her down to show your parents. …We should also probably cover up her wound… it’s hard to look at.”

“Do whatever you want.” Lee sat in the seat opposite of Leanne’s. “I don’t care anymore.”

Midna rose out of Dillon’s shadow. “As saddened as I am about losing a fellow shadowbender, is no one going to ask about this accredited TENTH Firstborn?”

“Oh, sorry.” Diwata pulled out her Spirit Ball. “Midna, meet Crest.” She popped it open and released the indigo crescent-head. “Crest, meet Midna, your fellow Firstborn.”

“HOLY FLAP, YOU’RE PRETTY!” Crest shouted at Midna with wide eyes. His chest moon shaped like a heart.

“GYUH!” Midna flinched, and red filled up her dark cheeks.

“You’re so beautiful!” Crest got up in her face. “I don’t wanna be that guy with cheap pickup lines, but I think I found the missing piece of my moon.”

“Uhhh… byebye!” Midna zipped into Dillon’s shadow.

Climbers Household

“Thank you for preparing this dinner, Mrs. Climber.” Wendy said with a kind smile as she and the twins ate steamed carrots with mashed potatoes and melted cheese. “Um, that is your surname, right?”

“Ah, you don’t have to worry about that.” Nana smiled. “Just enjoy the meal! Traveling to the moon and back has to make a kid hungry.”

“I wonder when my dad plans to meet me again.” Wendy said to herself. “Or where.”

“Wendy, I don’t believe you should interact with that man, anymore.” Carla stated.

“What? But Carla, he’s my dad. You know how long I waited to meet him.”

“I know that, Child, but there is something… off about him. Something that makes my fur tingle. Even you were detested when he attempted to-”

“I know.” Wendy didn’t want to hear the end of that sentence. “I agree… there’s a few things that are… wrong with him. But he’s still my father. I want to spend more time with him…”

_Knock knock knock_, came a sound from the wooden door. Popo went up to answer it, only to find nothing but snow under the night. The Eskimo peeked outside, wondering what fool would journey all the way up this mountain just for a ding-dong ditch. There was a sudden gust of wind that blew snow around, forcing Popo to slam the door.

Wendy and Carla exchanged a knowing look. “Well, um… I’m going to go for a walk. May I be excused?” Wendy asked.

“I call dibs!” Donna swiped her food.

“At least put on a coat, Child.” Carla said.

Wendy donned a purple coat with thick black pants, purple boots, a white scarf, and purple mittens. She stepped out into the night cold, covering her mouth and nose to protect them from the chilly breeze. She looked up a hill and saw a floating shadow against the indigo sky. Wendy trudged up the snow and would soon discover the shadow was her father. Vaati was floating cross-legged a few inches above a floating carpet.

“Father…”
“Wendy.” The Man With the Red Eye smiled, finding her outfit and posture adorable. “It’s very chilly tonight.”

“It sure is.” Wendy uncovered her mouth to speak. “My nose always gets drippy.”

“…I… hope you’re not still angry at me for my actions.”

“Um… I don’t want to be… It just concerns me. I don’t like fighting or violence… but when there is, I don’t wanna see… death. Father… how often do you kill people?”

Vaati closed his eye. “More often than I’d like to admit.” He reopened it. “I cringe at the sight of death, too, Wendy. I believe all beings deserve a freedom to live. And yet… there is a freedom in death as well. Beings become spirits, their souls no longer tethered by the weight of the world. When there are evil people who enjoy taking freedom, do not see the beauty in freedom, the only solace is death.”

“Dad… I don’t know if I like this freedom philosophy. I know that everyone deserves free will, and bad people have to be stopped… but I… I just don’t know.”

“The fault is mine on that. As you said, while my goal was to teach you freedom by abandoning you, let you be free to run around the world, I made you feel as though you were nothing. You were not able to look at the world as I have, Wendy. So I invite you to come see it with me.”

“R… Really?” She stared at the carpet.

“This is a magic carpet I purchased from a town called Magnostadt. I never had a need to use it, since I can already fly.” He blushed. “In fact, I used to have a black sky bison, but… he was a little too violent even for me. So, will you come?”

“Uh… Of course.” Wendy smiled and climbed on the carpet. “Is this gonna be like Aladdin?”

“The very same.” Vaati chuckled.

“Whole new world, same old song.” Wendy beamed.

“Ha ha ha! However, I would like it if you take off your coat. It’s so hard to embrace the air with such heavy clothing. Toss them in here.” He held his hat out.

“Um… Okay, Father.” After removing her coat, pants, and boots, Wendy was left with her emerald dress.

“You should take off those nasty chi-blocks, too.”

“You mean my Stabilizers?”

“Yes. Do not fear your wind curse. We shall be constantly flying.”

“If you say so…” Wendy reached under her dress to pull off the stickers on her waist. The wind began to build up as snow blew.

“There… Now just enjoy the breeze.” (Play “Whole New World” (instrumental) from Aladdin!)

Vaati took off into the sky and the magic carpet followed. Wendy lay on her front and gripped the edge of the fabric, peering over to see the mountains shrink away from her vision. Soon, they were soaring over the clouds and over the endless sea. The view was already so majestic, and Wendy enjoyed the feeling of freedom in her soul. Her father flew around the carpet, performing barrel-rolls and gliding upside-down, smiling as he embraced the breeze. His one eye opened to stare at his daughter. Wendy smiled. “Are you going to sing, Dad?”

Vaati blushed. “Well, uh, I always considered ‘Whole New World’ more of a romantic song.”

Wendy flushed. “Oh – right – how silly of me, that would just be weird!”

“Oh, no harm done.” Vaati patted her cheek. “I remember when I brought your mother on a similar adventure.”

“Will you take me to meet Mom?”

“Soon, Wendy.”

Miles away from Iceland, they soared over the Mountain of Flavors, snowing with vanilla ice cream. They floated calmly between the mountains, mouths open as they caught snow on their tongues. “I can’t believe ice cream actually falls from the sky. And this is natural?”

“You use magic and have been to many amazing lands, yet you question the existence of an ice cream mountain?”

“I just can’t believe it’s so delicious!”

“Save your appetite, Dear.”

They flew through the Amazon rainforest during a gentle shower, and Wendy let her soaking blue hair hang over the carpet, creating a small waterfall. She smiled when a string of fireflies flew around her, glinting in her red eyes. She rolled on her front to watch them fly off. She then realized:

“Dad, won’t this rain hurt the carpet?”

“I cast a dryness spell on it just in case.” Vaati assured.

“Oh! Hm hm, way to think ahead, Dad!”

Their adventure brought them to a sea of fluffy clouds. Wendy felt herself growing weary, her head lain on her crossed arms. The carpet began to feel like a bed, flying through an imaginary world. The clouds looked like sheep that Wendy counted. One, two, three, four…

“Are you getting bored, Child?” Vaati asked.

“Hm?” Her eyes cracked open. “Sorry… Clouds make me sleepy. And I keep forgetting I’m awake… Whenever I’m running around on my own, I’m always trying to focus on the path and avoid obstacles… I could never look around very much.”

“It must feel good to rest your legs. It’s a wonder you’re so trim with all the exercise you’ve been garnering. Don’t fall asleep yet, though. Or you will miss my most favorite of worlds.”

Past the fluffy clouds, Wendy gazed in awe as they soared through a city placed atop the clouds. The people were angels, and there were giant colorful birds. “Dr. Facilier told me about this place… This is Skypia.”

“The home of the Nimbi and the home of airbending. Embrace in it, Wendy. Relish. Because aside from the Minish culture, this is our heritage. The Land of Air.”

“Father… can I lay down on a cloud?”
“Of course you can, Wendy. Of course…”

They found a lone, small cloud that was solid enough for Wendy to lay on. She found herself unable to find a comfortable position, because the cloud was just too fluffy, she wanted to hug it and cuddle it, rub her feet around it, let every part of her feel the wonder. This was greater than any dream. She was so glad to be with her father, have so many friends, and get to live in a marvelous world… She wanted to be grateful about everything.

“Dad… I never thought I could be this happy… I’ve been upset and afraid all my life… I can’t believe this is real…”

“It is like the Air Nomads used to preach… If you look for the light, you will find it. But if you look for the dark, that is all you will ever see. You must allow yourself to know happiness… If you can believe it is real, then it will become real. That’s what being an airbender, and even having magic is truly about.”

Wendy opened her eyes and sat upright, facing her father. “Dad… Is everything really going to be destroyed at the end of this month? If we can do anything we believe… then could we stop it if we wanted to?”

“The only way is to find the Twenty Keys and venture to the New World, as I have said. I will miss this world deeply… but the next world will be one of our design. We will make it our ideal world… No boundaries, no conflict, no evil… Just freedom. But the World Government does not desire such a world. That is why we must fight them first. Will you join my team and fight the Government with me, Wendy? Join the White Lotus Revolutionaries?”

“The Revolutionaries… Will I be able to visit Dr. Facilier and Lee?”

“Of course, Dear. You will be able to visit whomever.”

“…Will there be a lot of fighting?”

Vaati frowned, feeling her concern. “Whether you choose to join me or not… you will have to face battles greater than you can imagine. Those battles are not far off. I can ensure that you are ready. You just have to trust me.” He held his right hand out.

Wendy stared at it for a moment. Vaati’s hand was more pale than his white face, with long fingernails. Her father wasn’t much for personal hygiene, it seemed. But if he was right… Wendy wanted to be ready. She didn’t want to lose any more friends like Juniper, Chelia, or Leanne. She wanted to have the strength to protect them. She stood and took her father’s hand. “I will, Father. I’ll do whatever you think is best.” (End song.)

Gravity Falls; Portal Chamber

The Multiverse Portal was firing up, ready to transport its user to a set time and place. The arrow aimed at a symbol of a skull-and-crossbones with a straw hat. The one chosen to carry out the mission allowed the portal to suck her inside. “And so, another Negative is off to fulfill her duty.” Medusa said lazily, focused on her card game with her acquaintance. “Are you sure that was the right one, Teach? She really didn’t seem… all that up to it. Her Positive better fits the description.”

“Oh, she was the one all right.” Teach smirked, munching his cherry pie. “She might not have the lovable personality I do, but there’s one thing me and her have in common: our devilish streak!”

Baltigo, Grand Line; 30 years ago
On her way through the Sea of Worlds, there were bubbles depicting a man with a crescent white mustache, a guy with a long nose, a curly-brow blonde man, and a blue-haired woman with a ponytail. In a final explosion of light, the portal released her in the Original World labeled “Grand Line.”

And when the ray vanished, she was revealed to be Aliehs Citnarf. As Sheila Frantic’s Negative, her brown skin was grayish, and went with her gray shirt, black shorts, and gray sandals. Her raccoon ears and tail were dull, as was her expression. She detested the sunny landscape, lighting up the desert of whitish-brown soil, which blew in the wind. There were tall and rugged peaks several miles behind her. Aliehs also saw the shadow of a village through the sandy wind.

Aliehs approached the village to find it was composed of old houses, with doors opening and shutting against their hinges due to the wind. “This place is boring,” Aliehs said.

Her ears perked when she heard a sound come from a house. She entered the house and saw a rotund creature digging through a pantry. The creature had white pants and a black jacket that showed his belly area. It must’ve been a human. “Aha!” The boy plucked himself out of the pantry, holding a cherry up in victory. “Look what I found!” He ate it. The boy had black hair and a tooth missing.

“Are you a werepig?” Aliehs asked.

“WAAAAH!” The fat boy fell on his back and tilted to and fro on his blubbery body before getting back on his feet. He turned to Aliehs. “Hey, who’re you?! I thought there was no one left in this dump!”

“I’m Aliehs. You live here or something? I suddenly see more in my own life.”

“I don’t live here! This is an old village, I’m from the one down in the canyon. You know, Georgetown. Just looking for a bite is all. The name’s Teach.”

“If a centuries-old cherry doesn’t give you diarrhea, I don’t believe you’re human.”

“You’re one to talk. What’s up with those ears, are you a Mink?”

“Sure. If you want me to be.”

“Whatever. So where’d you come from?” Teach asked as he began to leave the house.

“Far away.” Aliehs answered, following him.

“How far? Across the desert, across the sea?”

“I crossed a sea to get here. Sounds logical.”

“Well, if you are a Mink, you’re a gutsy one. It’s the Grand Line, unless you’re on a Marine ship, you ain’t gonna last.”

“What about an Eniram ship?”

“The hell is an Eniram?”

“Never mind. You have anything fun to do around here?”

“Nothing but hunt for treasures and steal food. What do you do for fun?”
“Tie this firecracker to my back and light it up.” Aliehs was suddenly holding a blue firework with a red tip, nearly as long as her body.

“WHERE ON YOUR PERSON DID YOU HIDE THAT?!” Teach screamed.

“Infi-Cube.” Aliehs took the small cube out of her pocket. “Infinite space for infinite things. I think you’re too big for it, though.”

“What the hell do you know?!” he yelled offended.

“Hey, what’s up in those mountains?” Aliehs pointed to the towering rugged peaks. “Think there’s a pyramid up there?”

“Why in the world would you think THAT??”

“I dunno, I came here looking for a pyramid.”

“Then you should’ve gone to Alabasta! Besides, that mountain is way too dangerous to climb. Even if I wanted to see what’s up there, my body, eh…” He looked down at his belly. “It’s not in shape.”

“I can probably fly us up there.” Aliehs strapped the firework to her back and drew a match. “I’ll push you from behind and you tell me where to steer.”

“WHO SAID I AGREED TO THIS?!”

“Don’t knock it ’til you try it.” Aliehs lit the fuse on the firework and rocketed to the sky. She did a U-turn and dove back at the ground, quickly curving 90 degrees and shooting straight at Teach. The rotund boy bolted the opposite direction, but at such an inferior speed, he was inevitably bound to the front of the missile and used as a flabby windshield. “Where’s the mountain?”

With Aliehs’ vision aimed down the whole time, the half-raccoon spotted a flat ground at the top of a thin mount. “We should land before we explode.” Aliehs whipped up, performed a loop, and blasted toward the foothold Teach-first. She spun quickly in order to shake him off, dropping him safely and dodging left just in time. She flew up, detached herself from the rocket, and landed with him, watching the firework explode in the sky.

“THAT WAS INSANE!!” Teach bellowed after recomposing himself. “Are you TRYING to kill yourself?!”

“I used to be suicidal. Until I found a thrill with dodging death.”

“I take that to mean you SWAM to this island boatless?”

“No, I surfed. I don’t swim.”

“Great, we have something in common! Go kill yourself by yourself, I’m climbing down— AAAAAAH!” When Teach looked over the edge of their very steep mount, he shortly realized how impeccably and precariously high they were.
“I was going to suggest this way.” Aliehs indicated a rickety bridge that crossed to a path up the side of a mountain. “But don’t let me discourage your need for danger.”

“I don’t have a need for danger! But I have a craving for cherries like you wouldn’t believe.”

“Then maybe you should stick with me. Trust me, I know what I’m doing.” Aliehs walked across the rickety bridge with no speck of fear. Teach sighed, cursing the devil that sent this monster to his island. (Play “Rockface Rumble” from Donkey Kong Country 3!)

Stage B-24: Baliigo Peak

Mission: Find the Pyrameglyph.

Teach couldn’t bring himself to cross the bridge, as it could easily snap under his weight. Aliehs decided to return and kick him across like an exercise ball. Teach pushed himself back up as he joined Aliehs up the mountain path—giant boulders bounced down the path, quaking the ground powerfully, so Teach clutched Aliehs’ back in the hopes she knew where to step. Aliehs kicked the boy back and jumped forward before a boulder bounced in the spot where they were formerly standing. Teach scrambled to catch up to her, and the path ended at a tall flat rock perched on the ledge.

“Let me see…” Aliehs looked around the rock and studied the area behind it. “Yeah, this could work. Hold still.” She got behind Teach, shoved him against the rock, and caused them to topple over the edge. The rock landed on a U-shaped slope, and Aliehs hopped to the end of it as they rode it like a sled. Teach’s cries echoed across the mountains when the sled flew off the ramp and bounced across some jagged mountain tips. It landed on a path that winded down around a mountain before launching them up a ramp.

The sled was stabbed and perched atop the tip of a needle, rocking to and fro by their weight. There was a series of tilting platforms ahead, so Aliehs used her strong feet to kick Teach to each one. She had to quickly jump and use her propeller tail to float to the platforms and kick Teach to the next before he would roll off the current one. After the last tilting platform, Teach was kicked into an opening within a mountain. The only path to follow was a shaft ascending directly upward. A rope seemed to stretch up along the wall of the shaft and would set off dynamites latched to the ceiling.

“I take it you plan to kick me up here.” Teach deduced. “At least whoever set those dynamites never set ’em off.”

“I’ll fix that.” Aliehs lit the fuse with her match.

“I DIDN’T SUGGEST YOU SHOULD DO IT!”

“Too bad.” Aliehs kicked Teach in the rear to propel him up the shaft. She used the close walls to Wall Jump up, kick him again, and repeat as they steadily progressed. At the top of the shaft, Teach was kicked onto a ledge outside. Aliehs kicked him down a stairway of aligned flat-top needles, running after the organic stage device before the dynamites exploded behind her.

“Huff…huff…” Teach groggily pushed himself up again, feeling the need to hurl. “Why did you even come to this island, anyway? Why are you dragging me on this adventure?”

“I’m trying to find a pyramid. The sooner we find it, the sooner I’ll leave you alone.”
“Who even told you there’s a pyramid up here?”

“You did.”

“Come again?”

“Don’t ignore me!”

The two cut through a narrow path within a mountain and arrived at a lava pit. Two rows of stalagmites led to a ground across the lava, so without changing the routine, Aliehs kicked Teach and bounced him between the stalagmites for him to make it across. Aliehs Wall Jumped the stalagmites to cross herself, helping the roly boy up as they followed a path between a small trench. They came to a straight path that was scorching hot, with lava leaking up from its cracks. The other side was too far to kick Teach across.

“’Guess we’ll have to use this.” Aliehs shot a giant ice cube out of her Infi-Cube, setting it on the scorched path and kicking Teach on it belly-first. The ice began to melt, so Aliehs kicked and slid it partway across. She had to Wall Jump the close canyon walls and kick the ice further, using her tail to stay afloat long enough to do so. When the ice bumped against the end of the scorched path, Teach was flung onto the safe foothold. He and Aliehs followed a narrow path out of the enclosed canyon and back to open mountains. They were at the top of a thin, steep hill miles above ground.

“Hey, will you do me a favor and eat this?” Aliehs asked, holding a red mushroom with white spots to Teach.

“A mushroom? Well, I am pretty…” Teach took the fungus and was about to eat. “…What’ll it do to me?”

“When has it been convenient? You could’ve climbed up here a lot easier if you didn’t have me to kick around.”

“Kicking you was the best part about climbing up here. It’s a ‘thank you’ snack.”

“Hmmm… Well, who am I to turn down free food?” Teach ate the large mushroom in two bites. “HUUUULP!” He inflated to the roundness of a perfect sphere, save for his hands and feet.

“This is why plumber food is disgusting. Okay, time to serve your worth.” Aliehs hopped on the Teach Ball and began rolling. (Play “Star Ball 2” from Mario Galaxy!)

The steep slope curved right and would lead them onto a wider slope with large boulders. Aliehs avoided the boulders and maneuvered left to roll into a large steam geyser. The geyser blew them up to a tunnel that cut through a mountain, and Aliehs dodged the flame spouts that would burn Teach’s blubber. The tunnel dropped them on a flat tilting rock, and as gravity tried to weigh against them, Aliehs hurriedly rolled Teach up the opposite end of the rock. They rolled onto a corresponding tilt-rock and repeated the process for two more rocks until they could roll down a mountain path.

They arrived at a lava river with large flat rocks floating to the right. Teach rolled onto one of the rocks and remained steady under Aliehs’ command. She rolled Teach onto a lone platform that was pushed up by a flame geyser every few seconds. They sat on the platform for a minute, wondering where to go from here. Then Aliehs noticed a crater that appeared to be corked by a trembling stone. When their platform was aloft, Aliehs rolled Teach off to smash the cork in. The lava buildup increased and they were blasted into the air, flying over several needle mounts before landing on a new hill.

Aliehs kept her balance as they rolled down with little control, maneuvering to cross the platforms over lava pits. They had a chance to rest at the bottom of the slope, but Aliehs wanted to keep the momentum flowing. She guided Teach over a very thin path above a lava pit, and the feeble stone supports were steadily cracking from the weight. Aliehs was able to get them across, rolling into a tunnel that sloped down and dropped them in a cave. Behind them was a cork in the wall, clogging some lava that urged to burst free. Aliehs rolled a good distance, came back with building momentum, and rammed Teach against the cork. She performed the act three times before the cork BURST, blowing them out of the cave and over the mountains, miles over the earth. (End song.)

When Teach’s spherical exterior smashed against the ground, a strong BUUURP was forced from his lungs and he deflated back to his regular rotund form. As Aliehs was casually fixing her sandals, her expression dull as when they started, Teach stomped up to her in a rage. “I don’t know who you are or where you came from, but YOU are OFFICIALLY, the CRAZIEST humanoid girl that has EVER set foot on this desert! My life flashed before my eyes, I came close to crapping myself, and YOU act like it was another day in the life!”

“It was.”

“Well, you know what I have to say?!” His eyes widened with vigor, and he flexed his hands to express: “Best. Day. EVER! ZEEE HA HA HA!” He raised a fist and posed proudly. “I felt like I was rolling down from Heaven, to be reborn anew on Planet Earth! I still feel my blood churning! I want some more, I wanna do it again! Aliehs, let’s race up the mountain and run down so fast, we become wind!”

“You have come so far, my student.” Aliehs said with approval.

“ZE ha ha!” Teach waddled as he ran around the path. “I wonder if pirates do this? Always out on that dangerous sea, they gotta be…?”

His eyes fell on a stone pyramid with an eye on its tip. Just like Aliehs said… but what kind of pyramid was it? Teach approached the stone, and at first, the only letter he could read was the huge D on the bottom. And yet, when the letters glowed, the writing became clear.

The world is full of freedom and full of adventure. It lies stretched out before your eyes. If the endless dream guides your restless spirit, seize it! Let nothing stand in your way!

The “D” on the stone filled with a dark aura that floated before Teach’s eyes. The “D” flew into Teach’s chest, and he felt his heart THUMP.

Marshall D. Teach awakened as a DARKNESS. Only 4 more to go.

“Hmmm…” Teach wasn’t sure what had happened, but his need for excitement grew stronger. He turned to Aliehs and asked, “So, what made you into such a crazy psycho? Somebody use you for a balance ball?”

“Not that in particular, but it was this girl.” Aliehs took out a small photo of her Positive, Sheila. She was smiling and holding two fingers up.

“She looks a lot like you… She your sister?”
“Well, we were born on the same day.”

There was a FLASH in the sky, and the earth trembled when a ray of light burned the ground behind Aliehs. “What the… Aliehs, behind you!!” Teach panicked.

“This is my ride home.” Aliehs turned to walk into it. “See ya later, Teach. Oh, and when they offer you a part in Pan, say no.” The light sucked Aliehs to the sky, leaving a scorched spot where it shone.

Seconds after, Teach felt his stomach rumble. But to his good fortune, he noticed three large berries growing from a dead tree. The berries were black with red swirls. His face beaming, Teach punched the tree and caught the dropped berries. He took the first bite of the first berry. “Blech! How awful! …” He continued eating.

Portal Chamber

“Boy, I was fat back then.” Teach frowned. “But who would’ve thought I was talking to an interdimensional traveler. Destiny is a funny thing.”

“It really is, Teach.” Medusa played a card. “Still, I feel bad for the Negatives. None of them are Lights, none of them are Darknesses, none of them are Firstborn Guardians. They’re just pawns doing my dirty work. What a pitiful bunch.”

“I can hear you loud and clear.” Nerehc said from the darkness. “And I don’t like you talking about my operatives that way.”

“Loosen up, boy. Even you have to see that you’re the only Negative worth anything. The new Demon King Nerehc.”

“Then why don’t you send me to find the Darknesses?”

“Because these Negatives possess a certain charm that… relates to them better. Thanos likes bickering siblings, Yellow Diamond’s a fan of rocks… and Teach, deep down, is a danger seeker.”

“But if Teach is here right now, where are the other Darknesses?”

“They’re on the lowest floor of Underworld Prison. I broke in there last year and tried to rescue them, but Teach was all I could recover. Rest assured, I have a plan.”

The Multiverse Portal spat Aliehs out before returning to its normal neon colors. “Well, look who’s back.” Blackbeard approached the half-raccoon and patted her head. “To think just seconds ago, I was a fatty little brat. Amazing how much a man grows, huh? Ze ha ha ha!”

“You look less grown up than before.” Aliehs said.

“Ahh, say whatever you want. I’m just glad I was picked to be the Darkness instead of Kaido.”

“Based on your stories, Teach, I say any one from that world could’ve been a Darkness.” Medusa said. “Anyhoo, I believe we’re done here, time to pack up. You might want to let those kids go.” Medusa formed a Dark Portal and entered. Blackbeard used his Logia darknessbending to spit Sector GF out of his body, afterwards sucking the card table in. He followed Medusa as the portal vanished.

“Oh my gosh, what just happened?!?” Dipper panicked. The color was sapped from the four operatives’ faces. “W-W-We were trapped in a black hole that smelled like rotting cherries!”
“I guess it’s true.” Mabel rocked back and forth, hugging her legs. “Anime characters really do have endless bowels.”

“Never-To-Be-As-Good-As-Master Nerehc, regarding your accord with Goddess Medusa, I suspect a 91% chance of treachery on her end.” Fi said.

“REALLY, Fi?” Nerehc’s eyes widened into a fake look of realization. “That DIDN’T occur to me!”

“Please take heed that any misfortune that should befall you may have drastic consequences for Master Cheren.”

“I might be your master’s Negative, but I won’t let her get the best of me. I’ll fight to protect my operatives no matter what. And as long as Cheren does the same, I have nothing to worry about.”

Pokémon Palace

Giovanni returned to his private quarters, feeling anger and humiliation. He sat at his desk and linked the security camera feed with his computer. He viewed a cell in the dungeons… completely empty with a pair of cuffs on the floor, and a note. Giovanni zoomed the camera in on the note.

Got bored. Felt like leaving. Better luck catching me next time! –M.C.

Giovanni was too exhausted to feel more irritated. His Persian meowed and gestured at the ovular mirror, which wobbled like liquid. Giovanni viewed the unchanging scowl of his reflection as he and Persian entered the mirror.

Now he was in the dark basement where Team Gnik held their meetings. There was a table with a Krabby Patty, Fourth Flavor ice cream, and a hot bowl of Gold Ink Soup. Giovanni sat in the available chair and ate the Krabby Patty first. “Plankton has outstanding culinary skill.” The dull, mysterious voice spoke. Team Gnik’s leader was in the darkness across the room.

Giovanni swallowed. “Lesser Lord Gnik. Are you going to punish me for my failure?”

“Trying to control a monster like Acnologia was bound for failure. There is a reason he was the first vessel my master chose. The ancestor of the Pines Family… Acnologia.” He stepped forward into the light.

Giovanni nearly choked on his patty. “Is that really your face? How…How do you live that way?”

“I am not to leave this home until the appointed day…” Ragaj said as the camera faced his chest to troll the readers. “It is why I had to gather minions to serve my master’s cause. I promised to take them to the New World… yet, I did not sense that many of them would make it. Mr. Dark has already served his purpose… and XANA and Nefarious are about to serve theirs. However, you, Giovanni… I may require your services just a bit longer.”

He put a glass on the table and held up a bottle, pouring a blue liquid into it. He pushed the glass up to Giovanni. “You will not be on par with the Thirteen Darknesses… but you will be a formidable force. You will get everything you wanted.”

 “…” Giovanni reached for the glass.

“Oh, it’s not for you. It is meant for the Persian.”

Giovanni quirked a brow. He picked up the glass and held it to his Pokémon. The Persian licked it up. “MROOOW!” A shocking sensation coursed through it.

“PERSIAN!”

“Wait.” Ragaj raised a hand.

Persian rolled on the floor, his fur spiking and his forehead gem glowing. A red light burst from the gem and swallowed the feline. It shrunk back and revealed Mega Persian, with its shining large ruby gem, sharper fangs, long claws, and tiger stripes across its back. “It’s a… Mega Evolution.”

“A permanent Mega Evolution. Thanks to my specially ordered Perma-Mega Potion. I have vast quantities of it… I would grant them to you and more. With the power of your Dark Balls, I can give you an army of Mega Pokémon to use at your disposal. And if you remain by his side… the Firstborn will be yours.”

Giovanni smirked. “Well, I guess it’s worth a try.”

The funny thing is Pokémon doesn’t have a Mega Persian. XD Blackbeard comes from One Piece, and I think we have the least information on his background compared to the other Darknesses, regarding his respective series. Him living in Baltigo is just a wild swing on my part, but I expect to be wrong. :P Also, lately I’ve been having this Aladdin obsession, don’t know why. A’ight, enjoy a Caesar Cipher.

Chapter 62: In a Thousand Nights

KND Moonbase

Two days after Bill Cipher’s sudden attack, reconstruction of Moonbase was running smoothly. Cheren had stacks of paperwork to fill, but the only reason he was bothering with it was to clear his mind. He had far more important things to do, so he would be done with this stuff early, finished or not.

He heard a vwoom and looked up. A green-eyed girl with a long black tux and sandy-blonde hair, holding a huge scythe, appeared in her office. “…Can I help you?” Cheren asked weirdly.

“Apologies, Human KND Leader. My name is Maka Albarn, Numbuh Pair of the Spirit Kids Next Door. My teammates have been recently sent on a mission in Puebla de Niebla, Mexico, and it seems a few of your operatives were involved in the conflict that took place. On behalf of the Spirit Kids Next Door, I would like to apologize for any harm that might’ve befallen your operatives.”

“It’s cool.” Cheren smiled modestly. “Haruka said everyone came out okay. Just like that other spirit operative – what was her name—Rukia?”

“I’m glad to hear it.” Maka smiled. “Our Supreme Leader sends his regards. He also says your operatives have been very big help in our missions.”

“Don’t underestimate the living.” He winked.

“Hm-hm, of course not. Until next time, Numbuh 3621.” Maka twirled her scythe and vanished on the spot.

“Hmm… Those guys look pretty cool, actually.” Cheren said to himself. “I wonder if Nebula would wanna make an alliance with them.”

“Hey, Cheren.” Dillon York barged in and said with an assertive tone.

“Hey, Dillon.” Cheren retorted in sarcasm. “You need me to get the cereal off the shelf?”

“No, I need Mom to take me to the Great Clock.”

“Since when?”

“Since she told me that one of the Corporate Presidents was sent there to do something. I know Vanellope is on the Great Clock, and she could be in danger. I know we’re in the middle of fixing Moonbase, but I need her to take me there so I can help Vanellope.”
“Hmm… Dillon, I’m not sure if it’s a good idea. If one of the presidents is a trillion light-years away, then he’s not here on Earth to bother us. Kimaya’s gang just offed another president, and they’re not even operatives – but it’s only a matter of time until they retaliate.”

“But the Great Clock is important—it’s where all the Twenty Keys are gonna meet! We HAVE to go there to stop what they’re doing, anyway!”

“Sigh, you’re right. But it sounds more like a problem the GKNĐ can handle. We can just call Nebula.”

“The Global Tactical Station is still busted. Cheren, just let me go up there, please!”

“I CAN’T just let you go alone!”

“He’s NOT going alone.” Carol Masterson marched in, her computer in hand. “I’m coming, too.” She said confidently. “And so are these guys.”

“Yo!” Kodama of Sector JP appeared behind her. “I owe Vanellope for helping me get the Shell 297, so I’ll be happy to join!”

“And we’re taking the NEW IMPROVED Rocket-san!” Chimney shouted. (“Gyom-gyom!” said Gonbe.)

“Wow… you put this team together quick.” Cheren said in quiet astonishment.

“I’m also going.” A girl’s voice said.

“Who said that?”

“I did.” The group stepped aside to reveal Miyuki behind them. “If the Great Clock is the core of the prophecy… I want to see if I can learn anything there.”

“Your whole teams aren’t going, are they? I don’t wanna send all our best operatives away from the planet.”

“Well, Sector Q is coming along, but only because they hope they’ll find Drake.” Dillon answered.

“Besides, April’s takin’ Mary to the Dream World to see that Window-suki girl.” Chimney mentioned. “So they’re gonna be sleeping all day. Boring.”

Cheren sighed. “I guess I can approve this mission… but we need Mom to finish fixing Moonbase.”

“No worries!” Carol said perkily. “We already asked her and worked it out.”

Ten minutes ago

“Mom, we need you to take us to the Great Clock now.” Dillon told the woman on the hospital bed.

“Why, of course, Deary.” Mom replied with a kind smile. “Walt, Larry, Igner, would you come here?”

“Yes, Mother?” The three sons lined up in a straight row beside Mom’s bed.

Mom smacked them all. “TAKE THIS BRAT AND HIS BRATTY FRIENDS to the Great Clock!”
Mommy’s too sick. And DON’T screw up!"

Dream Realm; Teensie Council Medical Wing

Madotsuki opened her eyes to a ceiling lit by yellowish-white light. This “hospital room” had pretty, temple-like designs on the ceiling and walls. Madotsuki sat up and studied herself. There were multiple cracks around her body that seemed to be linked with small bubbles. This was so strange… a minute ago, she was sure she killed herself. Maybe that was a dream… This was probably a dream, too… And like any dream, she might as well explore it. She turned right-

“HI, Friend!” A blonde girl’s face was up in hers.

“YAAH!” Mado fell back.

“My name’s Mary!” The girl said brightly. “I’m an Imaginary girl! I look like a real girl, but I’m not real! But I can talk to real people.”

“I think you’re being a little too sudden.” Another blonde woman in a white gown and sandals walked in. Phosphora was almost unrecognizable with longer, smooth hair, but it was curved up at the end.

“Yeah, but that’s Mary for ya.” April Goldenweek said with a smile.

“W…What’s going on…” Madotsuki said with weakness.

“I can tell ya that!” Murfy said quickly. “See, Mr. Dark staged it so you would kill yourself, then he planned to steal your reality, but when he did, Bill Cipher came and-”

“I don’t think-!” April silenced him. “…we need your help here.” She approached Madotsuki calmly. “Madotsuki, you’re in the Dream World. I don’t mean that you’re asleep. You’re literally part of the Dream World.”

“…I am…”

“Yes. Also… we know what happened to you. When you were younger.”

“…” Madotsuki didn’t show any reaction.

“We know it’s haunted you your whole life. That’s why my friends and I wanted to help you recover from it. The people we brought are people who’ve had something bad happen to them. We think they’ll be able to connect with you better. That is… if you would like to speak with them.”

“…” Mado stared at her fractured parts attached by bubbles. “Am I… dead?…”

“Um… More like reincarnated.” April blushed, feeling it’d be best not to confuse her with an explanation. “But it’s a second chance for you. We want to help put your past behind you. We want to give you back the childhood you lost.”

Madotsuki faced away, contemplating. “But if you need time to think, we’ll come back later.” April, Mary, and Phosphora left the room and shut the door.

They joined Jack Frost and Django in the waiting room. “This is ridiculous.” Django said impatiently. “If she isn’t even ready yet, why did you all waste time collecting us from our dream worlds?”

“I couldn’t have said all that and NO ONE was waiting for us!” April laughed.
“I don’t see what the big fuss is about.” Jack Frost said, floating upside-down with his legs propped up on the wall. “My entire kingdom was wiped out and I got back up on my feet just fine.”

“Well, not everyone gets up the same way.” April told him. “Be a little more considerate.”

“We’ll try, but I’m sympathizing with Snow Hair there.” Django replied. “And Lightning Chick for getting dissed by her town’s savior, wasn’t it?”

“Technically, Thor was our god, but it wasn’t actually… him.” Phosphora said awkwardly.

“You religious nuts.” He chuckled. “See, I told you that stuff don’t get you nowhere. So, what’s Cheerleader’s story, again?”

“I was stuck a really long time in a scary art gallery!” Mary said cheerily. “But now I’m freeeee!”

“Eh, Elsa thought she was free, too.” Jack noted. “Boy, did she go nuts.”

“But I’m Mary!”

“I think we can agree that we all had traumatic backgrounds.” April consolidated. “But we all moved on from them, so-”

“Whaddyou know, your past wasn’t traumatic.” Django remarked.

“I came from the art gallery same as Mary!”

“But she didn’t really know until she found out, but it all worked out okay!” said Mary.

“You know, I object to that!” Django argued once more. “Like, NONE of the KND operatives have tragic backgrounds, yet they’re always the heroes!”

“Yeah, you’re right.” Phosphora agreed. “I mean, sure a few of them learn important lessons, like Anthony learned not to be a bully and Miyuki learned to enjoy life… I destroyed Fybi’s wings once, but then they got healed by God Magic, so no tragedy there.”

“Y’know, we shoulda brought that Nolan guy.” Jack suggested, flipping right-side-up and sitting on his staff. “He’s got a ton of dead people. Some of them are actually in Spirit KND.”

“I just remembered those three spirit kids that came back to life 20 years ago.” Django mentioned. “Y’know, those are totally dick moves, just because they’re friends with the Grim Reaper, they can come back to life. Why can’t this be like anime where EVERY important person has a dead relative?”

“Why are you complaining, you’re a living skeleton.” Jack remarked.

“I’m a cursed child. The powers of darkness are within my bones. I should never make friends.” He spoke mysteriously. “I can not.”

“And ya mysteriously.”

“Wait, am I the only person here that hasn’t died once?” Phosphora asked. “Man, I don’t even feel like I deserve to be here.”

“What happened to the philosophy where ‘being immortal is bad’?” Jack asked.

“Can I live forever, April?” Mary asked.
“Guys, just settle down!” April shouted. “Sigh… The point is, all of you experienced something traumatic and you all made bad decisions. The fact you’re able to talk about this stuff so casually… If you guys could put your pasts behind you, then so can Madotsuki. She just needs a little help… like you guys did.”

“I’ll help her!” Mary grinned. “I love to make new friends! And she looks like Ib!”

“She looks like Mabel Pines.” Jack chuckled.

“How do you know Mabel?” asked April.

“I hang with Craz and Xyler.”

“What’s up, Jackerie?” Craz poked his head in the room.

“HE is, Crazikai!” Xyler pointed.

“That’s MIND-BLOWING, Manaji!”

“Nicknaaaames!”

Thaddeus Dark was in a secluded room of the hospital, steadily receiving treatment for his burned body. He had time to think. Lord Gnik… you said that you would help me spread terror to the Waking World… Are we merely tools to you? Just… what are you really?

Great Clock

The R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. zipped out of hyperspace, having followed the coordinates provided by Mom. The ragtag team of operatives were closing in on the tremendous structure that was the Great Clock. There was a fleet of ships surrounding the station. “Kaiba’s fleet has already arrived.” Walt said in his dark tone. “Kaiba is a master of strategy and deceit. Be prepared for anything.”

“We’re already prepared!” Chimney cheered. “The R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. 2.0 is the most fearsome of all aircraft! You loaded the baby with the hot new ammo, didn’t ya, Kodama??”

“You bet I did, Chimney!” Kodama smirked. “My new fireworks will rip those government guys a new one! COME AT US, AMATEURS!”

The train slowly moved closer. The ships made no motion or sign of defense. “Uhh… Any time now?”

“They’re not doing anything.” Dillon said suspiciously. “Just what are they planning?”

Midna came out of his shadow. “They might be preparing to ambush us inside. Don’t lose your cool.”

“Attention, Flying Train!” a high, nervous voice sounded from the Clock’s PA. “You are t-trespassing on p-private property! P-Please state your name and purpose, o-or go away! Ugh, as if these computer viruses weren’t trouble enough—ACK, you didn’t hear that!!”

Midna pushed the train’s PA. “My name is Midna, Firstborn of Shadow. I’m sure we gods have clearance, correct?”

“Midna? Lessee lessee lessee lessee- here we are. Um, Twilight Princess Midna? Just scanning your ship to be sure… Oh, Princess Midna! A pleasure to have you here in our humble Clock. Um, you aren’t being held against your will, are you?”
“No, we’re on official business. Just let us in, whoever you are.”

“Yes, yes. Enter the hangar on your left.”

A huge doorway opened and the R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. was able to squeeze through. They landed as all the passengers began to step off. “Man, that was lame.” Chimney complained. “No ambush, no defense, I was hoping for a dogfight!”

The interior of the station was mostly dark except for the blue light of some energy flowing through pipes. “That’s Chrono Energy.” Miyuki said as they went up some stairs. “This place is filled to the brim with it. I can feel it everywhere.”

“Midna, have you ever been here?” Dillon asked.

“Oh-uh.” She shook ‘no.’ “But it was designed by the gods. It’s the most powerful and indestructible fortress in the universe. Maybe even the multiverse. It keeps time in this dimension and all other dimensions linked to ours.”

“MaKayla’s dad works here in Great Clock.” Miyuki said. “If he were here, he could do something about Kaiba. He could stop him.”

They entered what looked like a living room with a gold piano, a table, refrigerator, and a couch with a TV. “I sure wouldn’t mind making a pad here.” Dillon commented. “But where in the world is Kaiba?”

“I dunno, maybe he stayed up so late playing games that he died!” They whipped their heads up at the sound of the perky voice. He was a blonde boy with a thin hat and a cane. “That’s all ya need to kill a dork. Remember that when they rise up in 300 years!”

“IT’S BILL!” Dill and Carol screamed.

Bill landed in front of them. “Welcome to my crib!” He stood on one foot and spread his arms. “It’s the deluxe suite, am I right?”

“Why are you here, Bill?” Dillon asked, all the operatives glaring at the demon. “Shouldn’t you be destroying the universe?”

“Normally, I would be, but I don’t have time for that right now. See, I’m in the middle of planning the new universe.” He projected a giant image of blueprints, which had marks like ‘Galaxy A here’ and ‘Model of Bill here.’ “I had a lot of fun in this universe, but the new Bill needs new pizzazz. I wanna give this New World a multidimensional makeover.” The blueprints morphed 3-D and changed into many shapes and sizes.

“Tough luck, because this universe isn’t gonna go anywhere!” Dillon assured. “We’re going to save everyone, you’ll see!”

“Ohhhhhhh Dillon.” Bill shook his head and approached the boy. “Always idealistic, just like your father. How is old Nolan doing, anyway?” He was smirking in Dillon’s face. “Lose anymore friends? Did his wife die, yet?”

An angered Dillon punched Bill in the face. “Oh ho ho, real strong fist!” Bill taunted. “Did you train all year just to punch that good? Face it, Kid, I have a Power Level of one million. What’s YOUR Power Level, a lousy hundred?”

“I bet you never fought a Firstborn.” Midna smirked.
“Oooo, Firstborn Midna, how ferocious.” Bill swayed and wiggled his fingers at her. “What’re you gonna do, take control of my shadow?” His shadow stretched on the wall behind. “I’ll just make another,” the shadow doubled, “and maybe more!” They divided in ten shadows.

“I’m more powerful than I look, you know!”

“Alright, I believe you.” Bill’s shadows retracted. He frowned as he recollected, “But you know, I wasn’t always this powerful. Imagine life as an Imaginary Friend. You’re nothing more than a projection of one’s thoughts, forced to drift along an ocean of abandoned dreams. I sought to escape my miserable existence.”

Bill whirled his hands and held them together, projecting a tiny city on the open palms. “And look what happened!” His giant devilish smile would look frightening from the city’s perspective. “Now I can hold planets and galaxies in the palm of my hands!” The holographic citizens went about happily, unaware of the looming terror. “People will look up at the sky and see their salvation!” Bill blew on the city, turning it all into dust that hit Dillon’s face.

Bill appeared behind Kodama, touching her shoulder. “Miss Fireworks knows what I mean, don’t ya?”

“Not the way YOU have in mind!” she yelled.

“Bill, are you one of the Thirteen Darknesses?” Dillon asked. “Is that why you’re hanging around here?”

“No, not me. I was created before we came up with the whole Twenty Keys thing. But I was there to watch the magic happen. I know all the answers and I would be happy to tell them to you. Maybe if you sign over to my side, y’know join the winning team. I might even throw in your own galaxy, design however you want!”

“We’ll look for the answers ourselves, thank you. Now where’s Kaiba, where’s Vanellope? There’s a whole fleet of ships out there, where’s all the pilots?”

“Those clowns have already virtualized their selves into the Great Clock’s cyberspace. They’ve been here a while, trying to take control of it. But it seems like XANA’s been putting up hell of a fight. But don’t worry, I’m sure your Vanellope’s somewhere in the mix.”

“How do we enter the cyberspace?!” Dillon demanded.

“Sheesh, a yelly type, ain’tcha? Ever think about calling Tech Support? Here, I’ll do it for ya. SIGGY, GET DOWN HERE!”

“GaaaaaaaAAAAAAHHH!” A robot came storming into the room. He was a red, levitating robot, shabby-looking and inside a ring with a computer. “Apologies, Master Cipher, but I’m very busy with- who are these guys?”

“Who are you?” Carol asked.

“Sigma 0426A, Junior Caretaker of the Great Clock, if you are here to see Master Jagar, I’m afraid he is busy, and quite frankly, so am I, all these computers just started glitching and…” He rapidly tapped his keyboard.

“Sigmund,” Bill began, “these guys need help with something, could you take them away so they stop bothering me?”
“Yes Sir, Master Bill. This way, all of you, don’t dilly-dally.” The robot floated through the next door. The operatives all decided to follow, shooting dirty looks at Bill.

“Oh, you wanna look at me? I’ll give ya something to look at!” Bill lifted his shirt over his head and shook his belly. “Mmph, yeah yeah! Sexy boy is sexy! You pervy readers would like some of this. Too bad all you see is words, it ain’t nothin’ like the real thing. Mmph, oh yeah.”

“Master Bill?” Dillon questioned Sigmund for using that title.

“Yes, Bill Cipher is a VIP.” Sig said quickly. “His name is in the one-trillion-year-old files, not an easy spot to take.”

“Why is Bill so important, he’s dangerous!”

“It’s not my place to question it, it’s to follow orders! Now, what is it that you wanted?”

“We want to go into the cyberspace and drive out Kaiba!” Carol answered. “Didn’t you see a bunch of men storm in here?”

“No, I didn’t see any men at all! Just a bunch of ships that all decided to park outside. All of a sudden, viruses everywhere, I can’t log into the network! We have Virtualization Chambers that allow one to access the network directly, but those aren’t working either. Besides, I couldn’t allow you to use them without Mr. King’s approval.”

“Maybe I can fix them!” Carol exclaimed.

“Don’t fool yourself, this technology is beyond your understanding. I worked here for 10,000 years, and even I can’t-”

“I just logged into this place’s Wi-Fi!” she beamed, staring at her laptop.

“What?!” Sigmund whipped around. “But-But the Great Clock’s Wi-Fi has the most complex password in the known universe!”

“It’s just ‘PopDancerSigma’ 15 times. Ha ha ha, check out this video!” She showed them all a video of Sigmund singing on a stage of colorful lights.

“That was on my personal computer!” The robot was flustered. “How in the WORLD did you-”

“Mr. Game-and-Watch did it!” The 2-D program was dancing on the stage beside Sigmund.

“Still don’t think Carol has the moves?” Dill smirked.

“Fine.” Sig glared. “You wanna try and fix the virtualizers, by all means go for it!”

Without delay, the caretaker took them to the Virtualization Chamber. There were five gold capsules and computers beside them. “We won’t be able to take everyone with us.” Dillon observed. “At least not all of Sector Q.”

“I VOLUNTEER!” Quill Ramsey quickly threw his hand up.

“I’m certainly coming!” Kodama declared.

“Not me, I don’t do in this stuff.” Chimney declined. “My legs going all stiff.”
“I’m staying behind, too.” Miyuki said. “I want to look around.”

“Could me and Midna share a chamber?” Dillon asked.

“I don’t recommend it.” Sigmund shook. “Jagar and Misty once shared a chamber. Their bodies got switched.”

“Then I guess me, Dill, and Midna will take the other three chambers.” Carol decided, hooking her computer up in the wall. “Okay, Mr. Game-and-Watch, look for the bug and kill it!”

She was given a screen of Game-and-Watch in a blank blue background. A huge Blue Eyes White Dragon appeared and started coughing fireballs. Carol commanded G&W to shoot his flamethrower. “That’s a big bug.”

“Oi, I played games like this before. Move over.” Chimney pushed Carol aside. She tapped the buttons excellently, jumping Blue Eyes’ attacks and countering with Game-and-Watch’s. The operatives excitedly watched her gameplay at work. The dragon was destroyed.

“WOOHOO!” They cheered. “Go, Chimney!” Quill slapped her back.

“Unbelievable!” Sigmund yelled. “The chambers are up and running again!”

“Now’s our chance, gang!” Dill announced. “Pick one and let’s go virtual!”

He, Carol, Midna, Quill, and Kodama picked a chamber. Sigmund hurriedly programmed each of them, sealing the kids inside. Each chamber made a growing whiiirrrRRR sound, and they shut their eyes as a blinding light swallowed them.

Cyberspace

The five kids were dropped onto a crystalline landscape. For a cyberspace, the clear blue crystal was beautiful, as were the stars above. Midna turned around, immediately focused on the sight. “Might wanna turn around.” So they did.

An army of robots vs. an army of monsters, it was the kind of videogame setting one would expect from Cyberspace. An Abaki smashed a XANA Krab with its spiked club, a Neon Night sliced a Megatank in half, and Dark Magician annihilated a Scyphozoa. “Wow, it’s like… Nerdvana.” Kodama said.

“It’s not just that… These are Duel Monsters!” Dillon exclaimed. “Now I remember! Gozaburo Kaiba is the President of KaibaCorp! They made this game! I play it with Mason all the time.”

“Isn’t this the dorky game where you make up your own rules and strategy,” Midna asked, “so you can ALWAYS turn the game in your favor?”

“Yes, and… no.” The kids ducked laser fire from some robots.

“DUEL MONSTERS, DESTROY ALL ENEMIES!” A giant hologram of a teal-haired boy hovered over the landscape. “We will TAKE the Great Clock in the name of my father!”

A platform with a railing hovered above the kids, and a robot with a computer head and blue cape was on it. “These cursed Card Monsters are ruining my plan! I hope Peridot is keeping her ground up there.”

“XANA!” Dillon yelled in surprise.
XANA looked down. “Eeeeaah!” He cowered on his platform. “DARN IT! You clods are the LAST thing I need right now! Make yourselves fodder and stay out of my way!” He steered the platform to float skyward.

“I forgot how much I hated that guy’s voice.”

“Incoming!” Kodama yelled when a Megatank steered over to them. When it opened its core, Kodama bent down and launched a firework on her back, exploding the spherical robot. She glanced at her back when the firework respawned. “My stuff RESPAWNS in this world?! INFINITE AMMO, BABY!”

“Each of your weapons and powers were scanned upon virtualization.” Sigmund’s voice echoed from the sky. “And I inputted the infinite ammo cheat code. Just hurry up and find a way to fix this mess.”

They flinched when a bomb exploded close to them. “Run for it!” The five charged across the battlefield—Kodama shot missiles at any XANAbot and Duel Monster in her range and Quill blasted behind him using his Elbow Cannons.

“There’s Mr. Game-and-Watch!” Carol pointed at a black 2-D rocketship a few yards ahead. The little Program waved at his friends and lowered an anchor. The four humans grabbed the 2-D chain while Midna flew up into the ship. They were reeled inside before the craft took off.

The ship was thankfully bigger on the inside. “Where do we begin looking for Vanellope in all this mess?” Quill asked.

“Game-and-Watch still remembers her code.” Carol said. “We might be able to trace her with his help.”

“As much as I’d like to,” Dillon followed, “I think our first priority is to clean this mess up. Let’s look for Kaiba and take care of him. We should definitely see Vanellope on the way.”

Pokitaru, Solana Galaxy

Shade faced Maddy from 10 yards away, shurikens in hand. She tossed one at the blindfolded girl, Maddy dodged her head right, another one came, she dodged left. Two shurikens came, a high and low one, so she dove in the space between, dodged a third one with the beat of her heart—the shuriken came back and she kicked it away.

“Well, it seems you do pick up quickly.” Silvers Rayleigh sat on a rock and drank a bottle of rum. “Even alternating between the forms doesn’t confuse you too much. But you’re a ways from becoming a full Haki master.”

“I could’ve sworn three days of training would pay off by now.” Maddy said with sarcasm, lifting her blindfold and catching breath.

“Indeed, but you are only human.” Shade said as she approached her. “You should expect weakness.”

“Did you have to throw real shurikens at me, though?”

“In the battlefield, you must expect the danger to be real. Training can help you get accustomed to it. As the Chosen One, you must not show weakness.”

“And besides, I set those throwing stars to ‘stun’, not ‘kill.’” Ratchet commented from the
“I get that.” Maddy said. “It’s just, when I was tiny, they just shot darts at me, and they still helped me learn.”

“Yes, Tiny Style is both a silly and effective form,” Shade stated, “but that alone will not help you for the real challenge to come.”

“That’s what they tell Link every Zelda game, but he always beats Ganon just by pressing ‘B’.”

“Unfortunately, THIS ISN’T a videogame! …For the most part! And shouldn’t YOU two be looking for Ratchet’s communicator?” she yelled at Ratchet and Drake.

“Take it easy, we found that yesterday.” Ratchet said, laughing slightly at her outburst. “I’m in the middle of fixing it, but once we do, we can set a direct course for Maddy’s planet.”

“Sigh, I can’t wait to go back home,” Maddy fell on her back in exhaust, “and breathe the fresh air of my human brethren again.”

“CoughshemeansChris’sair.” Zach coughed.

“But your training is not yet complete.” Shade stated. “You have grasped the basics of Armament and Observation, but you must become better. Otherwise, the prophecy may not be fulfilled.”

“All you keep talking about is this ‘prophecy’ garbage, lighten up.”

“How can I lighten up when you’re lying on your back as though dead?!”

“Heh, ladiiiees, please… settle down.” Rayleigh chuckled. “I think she’s doing exemplary.”

“I’ve seen better. You’re being too lenient.” Shade told him.

“If you think you know better, why don’t you be the teacher?” He smirked.

“You were supposed to be the only capable teacher. You don’t seem to be understanding the importance of Maddy learning Haki.”

“And what IS the importance?” Rayleigh laughed. “To become the ‘Seventh Light’, to control the Octogan? I already told you, even if she could become a master in a few days, that would be beyond her skill. A person is not the same as a shed, I can’t force it to be complete as soon as possible. I may not understand the full severity of the Seven Lights Prophecy… but perhaps you do?”

“Nn…no!” Shade flushed. “I just know… it’s important! It’s what’s supposed to happen, so…”

“You know, sometimes destiny is something that we decide for ourselves.” Rayleigh drank from his bottle. “In my world, no one ever said I had to become a pirate, a Haki master, or a Haki teacher. Of course, that was before I was involuntarily sucked into this world and those aliens told me to wait here and be your Haki teacher. True, there is an illusion of what can be called fate, but our lives aren’t decided by any ‘destiny’ that someone ‘plans’ for us.”

“Perhaps… but if I had not followed the orders given to me, Maddy would not know to come here.”

“You didn’t even bring her here, did you? You all just warped here.”
“Grrr!” Shade growled, like a nerve was touched at that point.

“Perhaps we should have our first test. The training course that I designed is over there.” Rayleigh pointed at a path through the jungle. “Why don’t the two of you do it together and test your current skills?”

“I’m years ahead of her. It wouldn’t be a fair game.”

“Then you should be kind enough to help her if the need requires. Clear the course, kids. You must get a ‘B’ Rank or higher.”

“Very well. Come, Maddy.” Shade sighed and walked ahead.

Maddy got back up and chased after. “You sound different all of a sudden.”

“Nonsense, I sound the same as I always have.”

“I mean you sound… more pushy than usual.”

“I have to be. It won’t be long until the Apocalypse arrives, and if the Twenty Keys aren’t united, something terrible could happen. If you’re the Seventh Light, the responsibility falls unto you, too.”

“But why do I need to know Haki, exactly?”

“I assume it has to do with the Octogan, but the exact reason doesn’t matter at the moment. Mastering Haki is your duty and I must see that you do.”

“Didn’t you say it was the Octogan that gave your people the prophecy? How do you know it isn’t lying?”

“It is the most powerful and most knowledgeable of Seeing devices. With it, my elders saw that you must master Haki, so you will.”

“But you don’t know if something bad will happen.”

Shade stopped and turned to face her. “It is the only thing we know to do. So we will do it. No matter what happens. We don’t know if something bad will happen if we do… but if we don’t, we can be assured that something bad will happen regardless. So what path do you choose?”

“…Sigh, follow the destiny path, I guess.”

“Good.” Shade faced the obstacle course. “Our destinies may be something we decide… but that doesn’t mean the choice won’t have consequence. And what I choose to do… is complete the mission I was assigned.” (Play “Dragonfly Falls” from Spyro: A Hero’s Tail.)

Stage 62: Pokitaru Falls

Mission: Clear the course by using Haki.

Act 1: Haki Training Course

Maddy and Shade were in a small gorge with two wooden towers on either side. They climbed a rugged wall to get onto the middle of the right tower, which had a line of small catapults that would fling apples to the opposite platform. On said platform, there were targets that would set off their respective catapult. “Observation test.” Shade said. “One of these targets will help you, the others will hurt you. Use your Haki to determine the harmful ones.”

None of the opposite catapults looked different from one-another. She cut the rope of the first catapult, flung the apple to hit the target, which in turn caused the parallel catapult to fling a barrel of bananas to hit her. Maddy dodged the trap and took time to examine them. It wasn’t like a living thing whose movements you could determine from thought patterns. But after a few minutes, she noticed one of the catapults wasn’t trembling as much from too much weight. She flung an apple at that one, and in turn, a rope ladder-bridge unraveled as it flew over. Shade tied the rope ends to their platform. “Good work.” The echidna merely glided across while Maddy had to climb across the bridge.

On this platform, there was a line of springs that would shoot them up through hatches on the top platform. Maddy didn’t need Shade to tell her that only one was correct (and Shade was already climbing the cliff out of there, so she wouldn’t tell). One of the hatches had tiny sun rays poking through, so she bounced up through that one. The other hatches had boxes over them. She could then jump to the cliff where Shade waited by a huge boulder. “Use Armament Haki to move this rock.”

“Oh, boy.” Maddy pushed her hands against the rock and mustered the Haki by exerting strength. “Huuuurr…!” She felt the arms growing in strength, but the rock budged just a little. “Wanna help, Shade?”

“Very well.” Shade pushed the boulder, and although it looked like she struggled, she moved it with ease compared to how Maddy did. “You need to learn to summon the Arms without already exerting strength. Otherwise, it lessens the full effect.”

They entered a relatively open area of jungle, though shrubs and trees still covered the ground. “Another Observation lesson: get through here and be wary of the enemies.” Maddy could already sense the Piranha Plants lurking in the shrubs. They lunged at her one after another when she stepped forward, but she was quick to grab and yank off their stems. The only feasible path was forward, so she decapitated every living plant on the way there. After clearing that field, they had to cross a trench with waterfalls on either side, roaring loudly as they poured into a pool below.

“Spouts of water will spew up in certain areas.” Shade explained. “Determine where they’ll be and use them to get across.”

“Shade, did you already do this course?”

“Yes, a few times. I wanted to be sure it was befitting for Haki. I could’ve asked for better, but for amateurs, I suppose it’s decent.”

“Do you think you can carry me for this one? I’m not good in water.”

“You wouldn’t have to swim if you mess up!”

“Come on, just let me sit on your shoulder!” Without waiting for a reply, Maddy went behind and climbed to sit on the echidna’s shoulders.

“OH, for the love of… Fine, but you need to tell me where to jump. This is humiliating beyond belief.”

“Then you should’ve been a giant puppy or a giant girl. Now juuuum…” she needed a moment to study the water, “there!” Shade leapt to the pointed spot, and a spout came up to catch her. She made accurate guesses for the other hidden spouts, and Shade withstood the pressure around her neck while jumping. Their Observation was able to sense the bubbling parts in the water through the roaring falls, so it seemed to Shade that Maddy was getting better at the art.

Shade set her on the ground when they were successfully across, and they turned left on the path before encountering a big watery blob with beady eyes. “This Water Chu is composed of water similar to a Logia. You know what you have to do here.”

Maddy sighed. She stretched her left fist and felt the Haki surge into it. She then ran up to the blob and started punching it as though it were a solid creature. She laid a good combo of punches, until the Haki involuntarily wore off and her hand went through. She frantically shook to pull it out, but the blob kept a thick grip. Maddy was able to make her hand Armament and yank it out, ripping the blob in the process as it deflated into a flat puddle of water. The girls crossed and arrived at a coast side, with a great view of the sparkly ocean.

There was a short cliff far to their right, and they could climb the rugged side. A wooden gateway blocked the path up the mountain, and three locks kept it shut. “The three keys are hidden around this coast. Since you aren’t a swimmer, you can tell me where they are and I’ll see if you’re right.”

“Okay, ummm…” Maddy studied the tall pillar-islands and ledges around the sea. “I think there’s one on that tallest island, one all the way over on that cliff, aaaaand… one probably underwater somewhere.”

“Well, they wouldn’t be just out in the open.” Shade sighed. “Alright, I’ll be right back.” She leapt off the ledge and glided a great distance over the ocean. Her first destination was the shortest island platform. From there, she glided to a soft soil path going up the medium platform. Piranha Plants ambushed her on top, but she tore them up easy. She then glided to the tallest platform, grabbing its soil path that went up and around. She punched the Snapdragons that she knew would jump out and made it to the top, claiming the gate key.

Shade glided across the sea to the cliff on the coast’s left. She climbed another soil path and dodged the bundles of dirt that monkeys threw at her from above. At the top, Shade would have to make her way around a zigzaggy soil path, with monkeys still throwing dirt at her from the sides. Shade could set foot on the intended ledge, which had several boxes she could feel free to smash. Neither of them had a key, but one of them had an arrow underneath that pointed across the coast. Shade glided in that direction, and she claimed the key that was kept afloat by a propeller.

With that, she dove into the ocean and swam in search of the last key, putting her ninja mask over her mouth. She swam beneath a hill and into a tunnel. At the end of this tunnel was a clam, who opened its shell and let her take the key. There were other underwater clams that had other treasures, but Shade wasn’t concerned. She returned to Maddy and opened the triple-locked gate. There were tall jagged rocks that blocked parts of the hill path. Maddy punched the stones and left cracks with her Armament Haki, but Shade was easily punching and breaking rocks. “Don’t sprain yourself.” Shade said.

They got to a big enclosing within the jungle where a wood board swing was facing a tall cliff. Maddy sat on the swing, kicked back, forward, back, forward, back; she kept gaining momentum and swinging higher. Finally, she was able to leap up to the ledge, which Shade had already climbed to. They faced a chasm with three more swings to go across. Maddy jumped to the first one, built momentum, leapt to the next, more momentum, swung to the third, and swung to the next path. They headed up some wooden stairs to a platform.

“AAAACK!” A colorful bird the size of a horse was tied down by its legs. It was mostly magenta, but its tail and the ends of its feathers were yellow, green, and blue. It flapped its wings and screched, desperate to get free.

“Rayleigh told me he found that bird earlier.” Shade said. “It’s a Loftwing named Fluzzard. I think he intended this to be your Conqueror’s Haki test. Conqueror’s Haki is able to tame animals to your will.”

“Kind of mean to just tie it up like that.”

“They don’t tend to listen to people easily. Most Loftwing just answer to one person, any person they deem worthy. This is the end of the training course, so let’s go back.”

“I don’t think so.” Maddy ran and jumped on Fluzzard’s back.

“Maddy, what’re you doing?!”

“AAAAA! AAAAAA!” The Loftwing frantically tried to shake her off, but Maddy held tight, and it seemed the struggle only made it stronger. Before they knew it, the ropes snapped, and the Loftwing WHOOSHED into the sky. Shade gaped at how high they were going, not taking her eye off as Fluzzard soared around. “AAAAAaaa!” Fluzzard stopped in place and flapped its wings, but Maddy stayed on like it were a horse. Its wings spread, the Fluzzard swooped down to the platform and had Shade in its sights.

“Hey, don’t even think it, Bird Brain!” Shade yelled flustered. “I’m a Mobian, you aren’t taking me like some common—AAAAHH!” Her arms were caught in Fluzzard’s talons.

“Shade, you aren’t scared of birds, are you?” Maddy chuckled.

“OF COURSE I’M NOT, PUT ME DOWN,” she kicked her feet, “tell this thing to let GOOOOO!” They sped up.

“Hold on, we’re going for a ride!” (Play “Fleet Glide Galaxy” from Mario Galaxy 2!)

Act 2: Fluzzard’s Flight

Fluzzard made wild turns around the needle-like mountains, and after the third turn, a group of Skytails ambushed them, but Maddy had the Loftwing dive down and dodge. “WATCH OUT!”
Shade cried—the Loftwing flapped up before hitting the sharp rocks. They soared through a canyon with waterfalls on either side, and Nefarious Drones were launching buzzsaw shurikens from platforms. Water geysers sprouted up from below, so Maddy swerved Fluzzard right and left to avoid. There was a wall at the end of the canyon, but Maddy sensed a narrow path directly down, and commanded Fluzzard to dive, then shift up to fly into a cave. Shade kept her legs bent up to not bump the cliff.

Taking Shade’s well-being into account, Maddy avoided the stalagmites on the cave ground, as well as the dropping stalactites. They entered a wider region of cave, where Nefarious Drones blew up the base of pillars that would topple down and crush the colored bird. Fluzzard swiftly avoided, and seeing the light at the end of the tunnel, Maddy pulled Fluzzard’s feathers and made it fly up and out. They splashed through a waterfall upon exit, and had a wonderful view of Pokitaru’s mountains and sea.

They glided left and through a narrow jungle pass, and Shade was quick to dodge her legs away from the Piranha Plants that popped out every which way. They flew into an open part of the jungle shaded by leaves, and monkeys were swinging on swings and chucking bananas at them.
They then went through a narrow canyon with boulders swinging to and fro on ropes, and the space between the boulders was wide as Fluzzard’s wings. The Loftwing glided up a hill, towards the light at the end of the jungle. They were outside once again, swooping past a rainbow under a waterfall, and flying up and around a mountain with the wind blowing through their hair.

“Okay, I think we can land now.” Maddy had the Loftwing fly down into a low area of jungle. Fluzzard dropped Shade on the ground, then made land before Maddy jumped off. (End song.)

“Aaaa!” The bird folded its wings.

“Good boy, Fluzzy!” Maddy patted its beak. “Way to hang ten! Or however you birds phrase it.” She went over to Shade as she was helping herself up. “Look at that, Shade, I used Conqueror’s Haki!”

“No you didn’t! You just jumped on his back and got lucky. Surprised it didn’t take us to his nest.” Shade walked the other way and turned around a wall.

Fluzzard came beside Maddy and seemed to share her confusion. “What’s her problem?” she asked him.

“Eeeaaaah!” Fluzzard flapped his wings.

Shade sat beside a river, pulling off her boots to rest her feet. She splashed water on her face as Maddy came to sit by her. “If you were afraid of birds, you coulda just told me.”

“I am NOT afraid of birds! I was simply concerned for your… avian-taming ability, is all.”

Maddy rolled her eyes, feeling the lie in her voice. “So… you’re like a master of Haki, too, aren’t you? How come you couldn’t teach me yourself? Even Rayleigh said you couldn’t just ‘master’ Conqueror’s Haki, so it didn’t matter if…”

“Actually, I’m only proficient in Observation Haki. I could never master Armament.”

“Really? But he said it’s easier than Observation—and back there, you were breaking boulders!”

“Mobian Echidnas are naturally strong, alright?” Shade stated rashly. “I never found a need to master Armament. But I was naturally great at Observation.”

“Well, you don’t have to get all angry! I was just confused.”

Shade sighed and faced forward again. “I know. But Maddy… you don’t know what life has been like for me. When you’re a child prodigy… everyone expects more from you than anyone else. We Mobians are natural-born fighters, we know combat from sheer instinct… but I really stood out. I knocked out all my teachers when I was four years old, I could grasp Observation when I was five. They had already decided that I was the most capable one to…” Shade bent her head between her knees and clasped it, “carry out this ‘destiny.’” “Shade…” Maddy sat beside her and touched the echidna’s shoulder. She wanted to ask about her stress, but Shade had already sensed this and looked up.

“Maddy, I can see you’re working very hard at your training, and you’re beginning to grasp the basics of Haki. But I can’t stop worrying. I can’t stop wondering if… you really are the Chosen One.”

“What do you mean?”
“My job – my mission, when I was sent to this universe, was to wait for you. To find you. To watch you. To guide you when the ‘time’ would come, because you are the Seventh Light. You have no idea how long I waited for you. My entire life’s purpose was thrust upon me at five years old: to wait for Maddy Murphy and guide her to her destiny. I knew when and where you would be born and I watched you. I saw when you fell into the ocean and started fearing water, I know that you wear contacts, I know you sing to yourself in the bathroom, and that you still carry your Simba doll to school.”

“I feel really violated right now!”

“I KNOW!” Shade outburst. “I know it was creepy, but it was my job! And after all that, here we are, where you’re finally learning Haki from the man that I was supposed to bring you to. You’re merely days away from when you have to realize your destiny, and I’m still worried if the prophecy was right!”

“Why would you think it wasn’t?”

“Sigh…” Shade faced down. “I don’t know… Maybe because, after watching you grow up… you never looked like ‘Chosen One’ material. I guess what I was expecting was… someone like me. A child prodigy who had no time for fun and games and always had to train. You may be strong, but I know you struggle and you cry sometimes… That’s why I was afraid you weren’t the one.”

“Everyone struggles with things. Everyone gets upset…”

“But I never did. Whether I pride myself about it or not… I had talent. I know that people work hard to achieve their goals. People exert blood, sweat, and tears to become great at martial arts, to become strong. But I never believed in hard work, I always believed you had to be born with the talent, the sheer instinct that you could do something. If it was what you were meant to do, you could just do it, even if a little training was required. That’s why I think Observation Haki came so easy to me. That’s why I wonder… if you really have the spirit that Conqueror’s Haki requires.”

“I used it before… didn’t I?”

“By accident. It was undeveloped, so you affected your teammates, too. Simply having the power doesn’t matter.”

“Well, it isn’t very easy for me either, Shade. I didn’t want to be a Chosen One, I didn’t ask to have to go through all this training, and the only reason I’m doing it now is because… I feel like I have to. I don’t know anything about Seven Lights or this Apocalypse Cheren brought up out of nowhere, so I feel like if I don’t do this… a lot of people are going to be hurt.”

“…I guess… it was a duty that was forced upon you…”

“Yeah, and now the ONLY person who seems to know what’s going on, besides Dr. Nuts-and-Bolts, even after she’s stalked me all these years, doesn’t even BELIEVE in me! And I’m supposed to think this isn’t all a waste?!”

“…I’m sorry!” The echidna fell on her front and started to cry.

“Shade!” Maddy didn’t expect to offend her.

“My whole life has been about the mission I was given! I waited so long… I was afraid if I was gonna mess up or do a bad job. All you had to do was join the Seven Lights and my life would be complete. I had nothing else to look forward to and nowhere to go.”
“Shade, you didn’t have to dedicate your whole life to me.” Maddy pulled her upright. Shade had already cried a stream of tears that soaked her jumpsuit.

“The only reward I could’ve waited for… was you telling me I did a good job. If I really was a big help to you, I wanted to know it. But now I just let my stress get to me. I failed as a guide…”

“No, Shade, you didn’t. I’m stressed too, but I wasn’t gonna give up. I’m still gonna become the Seventh Light.”

Shade sniffled as the last batch of tears spilled. Maybe it was because of how sudden it was. All the years of waiting for the Chosen One were suddenly behind her.

18 years ago…

_Go to Quahog… Wait for Maddy Murphy… She is the Conqueror… The Seventh Light… When the Quest for Twenty Keys begins, take her to The Disbanded._

Those were the instructions. And so, she was here, on Planet Earth. A five-year-old echidna on her own. The prophecy would not take place for 18 years. So she waited… and waited…

It was nighttime when she appeared on Earth. She found a lone rock in a grass meadow outside of a forest. She sat on it and gazed at the stars. There were millions of them. They all sparkled around the full moon.

_Well, here I am. Far away from home_

_Growing up all alone, I’m on my own_

Shade lay upside-down on the grass with her legs propped up on the rock.

_I’m on a mission. I need to wait_

_No going back… I’m bound to fate_

... _Just a thousand nights to go_

The sun rose, then set, then rose, then set. The moon was different each time.

_Just ten thousand nights to go_

Shade went into the forest to eat fruit. At night, she returned to watch the stars. Some nights, it rained. Some nights, there were shooting stars. Shade got bored of this area. She began to walk the great field.

_No matter where I go… the sky stays above me_

_I feel so small… like I’m in a cage_

_My fate is watching… It is all that I can see._

_And yet, after all… it’s like I don’t even age_

... _Just a thousand nights to go…_

Shade found a beautiful, clear river, and skipped across it with grace. It gave her the illusion of being free.
And then a thousand more, too…

Humming this song was the only thing that kept her sane.

I don’t know where to go. I don’t know where I am.

I just know when, I just know why

Shade came to a pond and jumped out. She stared at her rippling reflection and sang out loud.

And when she comes… would we even be friends?

When we’re done… where do I go then?

Am I just her escort? Am I just a guide?

...What if I fail? Should I hide? Or should I-...

Before she finished that line, a star whizzed across the sky’s reflection. She looked up and gazed at the crescent moon.

Am I just a piece… of something that’s greater?

I want to love her… but what if I hate her?

What if she herself… is only a fragment?

In the grand scheme… is she as small as I am?

...Can this piece be more… than what it was designed for?

Or is my life… bound for nothing more?

...In a thousand more nights, we’ll know.

Now

“Shade…” Maddy spoke calmly. “I wouldn’t have asked you to wait that long for me. But if you did… I wish you would’ve told me… so we could be friends.”

“Given your spite for non-humans at the time, we probably couldn’t. The only way I was able to study you up close was through the Teen Ninjas.”

“Maybe… but that’s all in the past now. After this is over… you can do whatever you want. I’ll even help you find something you like to do.”

“…Maddy…” She looked up again.

“Yeah, Shade?”

“…Promise me… you’ll become the Chosen One I waited for. Promise me you will… so I can be happy, knowing I did a good job.”

“…I will. If I don’t do it for anyone else… I’ll do it for you, Shade. You already did a good job.”

She closed her eyes and smiled. “Hmm… I don’t remember the last time I cried to anything… how foolish of me.”
“Zach still has first place.”

“Heh… How fortunate. Maddy… promise me nothing bad will happen… Promise me I made the right choice to help you…”

“You worry way too much. Nothing bad is gonna happen, Shade.” She smiled. “The Kids Next Door will make sure of that.”

Great Clock

Sigmund brought Miyuki Crystal to the entrance of the center of Great Clock. A great door sealed the entrance, and the lock was a tiny hole down by Miyuki’s feet. “Only the Chrono Staff is able to unlock this door.” Sigmund said. “Mr. King must still be inside.”

“Can we call him out?”

“I don’t think he’d listen. He’s usually in here to meditate.”

Miyuki approached the door and put a hand on it. She focused her energy to see the Great Clock’s history.

For a trillion years, it has existed. She saw MaKayla using it to travel through time—it shook from the energy of Arceus’s rage—twenty thrones around a center before a gate—a blood-hurdling roar—hands clasping the gate—

8888888888888888

“HUUUU!” Miyuki gasped for breath and fell on the floor, trying to clear the bright light from her vision. She helped herself up, but still felt unbalanced. “The…The Gate of Time…”

“Miss Miyuki?” Sigmund asked with concern.

“If… the Gate of Time… opens… is something going to… come out…?”

Sigmund twiddled his fingers. “I-It’s… hard to say… Mr. King spends hours in there… trying to see what may exist beyond the Time Gate. He wants to know, if the solution to stopping the Apocalypse really is behind that gate. But the more he meditates… he comes out, looking more afraid.” The robot turned away and left the area. “On the Day of Apocalypse… the Space Gate will fall, and the powerful Space Chi of the Netherverse will destroy everything. Sometimes, Mr. King says… that would be the safest way to go.”

Jagar King was knelt before the Time Gate. He exiled himself from the world around him to seek the unheard voices. Where are you… Please respond… Tell me more… Tell me what will happen… Please, tell me where you are…

...Calliope.

Remember Sigmund? He was in Operation: NECSUS, though he came from Ratchet & Clank. Fluzzard is from Mario Galaxy 2. Seven Lights is steadily approaching its final stages. But don’t fear, because there is plenty more to go. The Caesar should keep your fancies tickled.

“Mmph, yeah yeah!” Bill danced across the screen. “Shake that thang! Uh! Oh, yeah! Illuminuti!”
Chapter Summary

Hcaz Yhprum is sent to awaken Czar Baldy Bald III in the World Without Law. This world proves to be a nightmare for the poor guy.

This is one of my favorite chapters in the Side Stories. I laughed while writing it. XD Well, not this first part, the first part’s kinda depressing. (Also, if you aren’t caught up with Fairy Tail, beware of spoilers.)

Chapter B-30: The World Without Law

Alakitasia, Fiore Dimension; 410 years ago

Nollid Kroy was sent through the Multiverse Portal and landed on a grass ground. “Yeesh… that was crazier than Apparating.” he said. Nollid was in a forest, and the sky had a hint of yellow, implying that the sun was setting. He walked forward. “I wonder where the Darkness-” He stepped on a cliff and stopped before losing balance. A few grains of dirt fell off from his step, falling below the clouds. Nollid gasped, taking in the view before him. “Wow…” (Play “Floating Islands” from Spyro: Dawn of the Dragon.)

A light breeze whisked across the country of floating islands. At first, Nollid thought it was Skypia, but the islands were made of dirt and soil. Masses of land ripped from the earth and left to drift in the clouds. Nollid looked up toward the right, where the cliff sloped up and led to a thin strip of ground hanging over the abyss. A boy of seven years old stood on that strip, staring down at the passing clouds. He had smooth black hair and black clothes.

Nollid stepped up the hill and approached the kid from behind. “You should be careful. You might fall off.”

The kid looked up and turned, staring with surprised black eyes, though his expression was dull. The stranger wore a black hoodie with black pants and shoes. Nollid had a purple strip through his black hair. The kid noticed the wand in Nollid’s right hand. “Are you a wizard?”

“Hm? Oh, yeah. I am.” Nollid answered, now confirmed that wizards do exist in this world.

“I’ve never seen you. Do you go to my school?”

“Er, no, I don’t. I’m not from around here. My name’s Nollid.”

“Hi, Nollid. I’m Zeref.”

Yep, this is the one I’m looking for. “Nice to meet you, Zeref.” Nollid smiled. “Can you tell me about this place? I didn’t exactly read a travel guide, so…”

“This is Alakitasia. The Floating Land. I don’t know very much about it… but I think a long time ago, some wizards made the land float to be closer to the gods.”
“A country-wide Levitation Spell? That’s pretty amazing!”

“Yah… but it’s dangerous. Dragons fly up here. They kill people. They killed my parents and my little brother. …If you’re magic, can you do something for me?” Zeref asked with hopeful eyes.

“What do you need?”

“Can you bring people back to life?”

Nollid hesitated to answer. “Um… not particularly. But I recently learned to use Inferio.”

“What’s Inferio?”

“Inferius? Well… can you bring my brother back?”

“Why your brother? Why not him and your parents?”

“My parents were eaten by the dragons. We don’t have their bodies. My brother is buried at the cemetery. Could you wake him up?”

“Wake up his corpse? Well, sure. But you know this is dark magic, right? I only practiced it because my mom made me. It feels creepy when I actually… do it.”

“I just wanna see my brother again. Is that bad?”

“If it’s that important to you, I guess I could… for a few minutes. Will you take me to him?”

“We have to go up there.” Zeref pointed at an island a few feet off the edge, whose ground was higher than theirs. “Can you fly?”

“No, but we can make it. Watch a wizard at work.” Nollid winked.

Stage B-25: Floating Lands

Mission: Awaken Zeref’s brother.

There was a tree with vines standing on the edge of the island. “Accio Vine.” Nollid aimed his wand and called the end of a vine over. He put away the wand and told Zeref to hang on his shoulders. Nollid grabbed the vine and held tight as they swung under the bottom edge of the island. When the vine swung back and became straight, the wizard climbed it. Nollid and Zeref set foot on the island, which was composed of yellow brick ruins. Stone gargoyles were perched on pedestals and ruins, but these statues revealed to be alive as they swooped in to claw at the two. Nollid was quick to cast Reducto and explode the gargoyles, protecting himself and Zeref.

According to Zeref, the next destined island was several meters above. Nollid’s Ascendio wouldn’t get them that high, so he decided to use Wingardium Leviosa to uplift Zeref. The child felt odd floating like a feather, and feared falling from such an already unsettling altitude. Thankfully, Nollid kept his focus and set Zeref on the small island. “Is there anything up there?!” Nollid called up.

“Push it down here, I can use it!” Nollid stepped back when the pedestal fell, using magic to slow its descent. Afterwards, Nollid stood on the stone and used magic to levitate himself up. He rejoined Zeref and used another Levitation Spell to float him to a longer island ten feet off. Zeref stepped on a stone switch that stretched a bridge for Nollid. The duo crossed the long island and were attacked by Clefts that were disguised as rocks. Nollid used Flipperoo to flip the Clefts upside-down and stomp their weak bottoms.

“No offense, Zeref, but your homeland is kinda dull.” Nollid said honestly.

“This isn’t my home. I’m from a town past the forest. I come out here to look at clouds.”

“It sure seems like the cemetery is pretty out of the way.”

“These are sacred grounds. No one comes out here because they’re afraid of being cursed.”

“Cursed? Doesn’t that make you afraid?”

“No.”

They jumped some small gaps in-between islands before climbing stairs to an ancient town. They cut through the center street and found a sealed gate that depicted four symbols in compass directions. The north depicted a swirl, east pointed at a snowflake, south aimed at a raindrop, and west at a flame. Nollid looked above the gate and noticed the dark orb. He cast Ventus up at the orb and watched it glow white. “We probably have to activate all the orbs to open this gate. I bet they’re located in the compass directions.”

He and Zeref followed a small road to the east side, but since the path was blocked by rubble, they entered a building. They couldn’t go far due to the stone clutter, but Zeref was small enough to crawl through a tight space between the rubble. The boy jumped stacks of stone bricks that led to a window. Vines were growing on the outside of the window, allowing Zeref to climb to the ruin’s roof. Zeref found a stone block slightly taller than himself and could push it over the edge of the roof, landing it on the center road. He called Nollid to come back outside, and using the block as a boost, Nollid could use Ascendio and make it onto the roof. The next-door building had an orb, and since this was east, Nollid cast Glacius as according to the gate’s compass. The orb turned blue.

To the left of the sealed gate was a path leading to a broken part in the wall around the ruins. When Nollid peeked through it, he saw an orb hanging on the side of the wall. This was probably west, so Nollid cast Incendio to light it red like fire. Lastly, they needed to find the south orb. They returned to the beginning of town, searching the area around the entrance stairs. Zeref found a vine wall under the island’s edge, so Nollid climbed down and found himself clinging across vines along the island’s underside. They brought him to the fourth orb, which required the water spell, Aguamenti.

Nollid heard a rumbling and suspected the gate has opened. He regrouped with Zeref as they proceeded past the town, arriving at an ancient church. “This must be the old Church of Ankhseram.” Zeref said.

“What’s Ankhseram?”

“He’s the God of Death. The people in my town worship him.”

“Where I’m from, our God of Death is Thanatos.”

“Your people have a different god? We probably shouldn’t talk about it here.”

“Heh heh, yeah.” Nollid blushed. “I think I see a way over there.” He and Zeref went to the right of the church, where Nollid used magic to stack three large rocks against the back wall. He levitated Zeref up to an opening high up in the wall, then Nollid stood on the stack to be high enough to Ascendio up to the opening. The next island had a tree with bees swarming around a hive. Nollid cast Avis to send a flock of birds to devour the bees, making it safe to cross over. But how to go about doing that? Nollid saw a plank connecting that island to the next, so he called “Accio Plank” to slide the plank over to connect it with their ledge.

“Nollid, where did you say you were from?” Zeref asked as they carefully crossed the long board.

“I’m from a town called Gohauq. It’s pretty far away.”

“Why did you come to Alakitasia?”

“ Mostly to travel. So, are we almost at the graveyard?”

“Yeah, we just gotta get across. I wish they wouldn’t put it so far away.”

They made it to the island with the hive, and Nollid moved the plank again to cross to the following island. The next island required a short jump to cross, but it was upside-down as they viewed its rugged underside. Nollid cast Flipperoo to flip it up correctly. However, the land they had to reach was too far. “How do we get there now?” Zeref asked.

“I have an idea. But just so you’ll be safe.” Nollid used Leviosa to float Zeref over to the base of the cemetery. With a courageous breath, Nollid used Flipperoo on the small platform again, spinning it with himself on it and flinging himself across the gap with the momentum. Zeref gasped, fearing he wouldn’t make it, but his worry for those two seconds were subsided when Nollid landed beside him. “Heh heh. Worry not, Zeref, I’m a pro at this.”

“Great! Let’s look for my brother’s grave.” Nollid followed Zeref as the latter read the names on the tombstones, which were written in foreign letters Nollid couldn’t read. Speaking of foreign letters, Nollid looked across the cemetery and spotted a grave in front of a stone pyramid.

“Zeref, do you think it might be that one?” he pointed. Zeref looked to the strange pyramid near the edge of the island. He jogged up and read the name on the stone.

Nollid came beside Zeref and held his wand ready. “Alright, here it goes. Inferio.” Nollid cast the spell into the soil.

Zeref gasped when two small, boney arms sprouted from the ground. A child’s zombie emerged, moaning. “Whoa… you did it.” Zeref gaped. “Natsu… is it really you?”

“He can’t talk.” Nollid said. “He doesn’t have a will or his own state of mind. Inferio reanimates a corpse, but it doesn’t do anything besides act as a puppet.”

Zeref waved a hand by Natsu’s lifeless face. “Do you know a spell that… can bring people back to life?”

“No, I don’t. But my friend, Sipa told me about a stronger version of Inferio. It’s called Grand Inferius. It’s able to revive people to perfect fighting condition. I don’t know how to use it, though.”

Zeref caught Natsu when the corpse fell over. “If you can wake up a corpse… maybe I can bring back the dead.” Zeref spoke lowly. “If I learned magic… I wonder if I could…”
"It looks like I just dug this kid’s grave. Nollid thought. No pun intended. I guess it couldn’t be avoided. Still… “Zeref, I already told you these were dark arts. I don’t know what you’re thinking, but… don’t get in over your head.”

“I know. …Hey, Nollid? How long does this spell last? Do you think Natsu could… stay awake forever?”

“I’m not sure. There’s a chance the spell will wear off if I leave. But I guess… I’ll leave it active just to see. I wouldn’t let the town see him, though.”

“I’ll keep him secret.” Zeref smiled at the older boy. His attention then fell to the pyramid behind the grave. Zeref approached the ancient stone, and Nollid knew what was to happen next. Zeref read the glowing text.

New growth cannot commence without destroying the old. If you wish to make change, only chaos is the answer.

A dark aura appeared around the pyramid, and the eye on the tip channeled it into Zeref’s body. Zeref awakened as a DARKNESS. Only 3 more to go.

“…What was that, Nollid?”

“I honestly have no idea.” Nollid answered. “Let’s get you back to where I found you. It’ll be dangerous crossing that path on your own.”

Nollid led Zeref and Natsu across the floating islands and returned to the forest area where the former first landed. “If you don’t have parents, do you have a home to go back to?”

Nollid felt repulsed at the thought of this little boy living with a corpse. Whether Natsu died again or remained animated after he left, it was a creepy thought. He didn’t have long to think about it when the ray of light burst from the higher heavens, burning the ground. “Good-bye, Zeref!” Nollid yelled, giving Zeref no time to comment on this. “And good luck to you.” He jumped into the vacuum and was sucked back to his home dimension.

Zeref looked at Natsu when he moaned. Despite Nollid’s sudden vanishing, his brother remained active. “Inferius…” Zeref would remember that term.

Portal Chamber

“Zeref was a complicated fellow to work with back in those days.” Medusa commented. “It will be good to have him back, though.”

“Don’t we have to do something about Zeref’s little… predicament?” Thanatos asked.

“Don’t worry, Thanny. In time, we shall enlist the help of the Firstborn.”

“How many more times will we have to use this portal?” Nerehc asked.

“Only two more times.” Medusa answered. “Say, Nerehc, when we send your friends to the Original Worlds, have you noticed that nothing actually happens to the Positives?”

“I… didn’t think of it.”
“The reason is simple. The Original Worlds do not abide by the same laws as this universe. Some of them may not have a Negaverse. It only proves how distant they are, and raises more questions on why these people were chosen to be Darknesses.”

“Another thing that you don’t understand?”

“Don’t flatter yourself. But speaking of different laws, I fear for our next victim. The world he’s diving into is called the World Without Law. It will be a miracle if he finds the Darkness and keeps his sanity…”

The arrow was marked on a symbol of a wig. Along the Dimensional Byway to this world, the bubbles displayed a man of blue jelly, an orange sun-like creature, a girl with pink hair, and a guy in a white sheet flashing up his skirt. It was probably the most dangerous of the Original Worlds.

Chrome Dome Empire; 150 years and 1,064,271 milliseconds ago

In the year 150x, war waged between the Hair Kingdom and the Chrome Dome Empire. Chrome Dome was once a peaceful nation, content with their shiny domes. The country never had to buy combs, so they could save extra money to buy gas and fast food. Unfortunately, hats and sunscreen were scarce in this age, so thousands of the Chrome Dome residents acquired unbearable sunburns. Their domes were so scorching, their neighboring country Hair Kingdom crossed their borders and began to cook pancakes and bacon on their heads. The sad part was that they cooked faster than ordinary stoves.

“And that was why they went to war, right?” our lucky victim asked.

No, of course not. What really ticked them off was that they didn’t use butter.

“Okay – that’s it, time out, time out!” Hcaz Yhprum spoke up. “Why the hell did I have to get picked to do this dumb world?! The stupidest person we got is Ylime, don’t you think this place would make her feel smart?”

Oh, pardon me, Hcaz, but this isn’t the Negaverse where you can just sing a pretty song and your dreams magically come true. In this world, you need 200 points of store credit, so ya better hop to it if you wanna finish the mission.

“I don’t understand how anybody from this world could qualify as a Darkness! The last two towns I went to were all made up of tofu that judged each other based on the way they hold their pencils!”

PAH HAH HAH HAAAA! I can so relate to that! Don’t worry, Hcaz, you’re almost close to where you need to be. Luckily, fourth wall rules don’t matter in this world, so I get to help you out. Anyway, back to the story. Our hero, Hcaz was strolling through a peaceful neighborhood with average cartoony houses and little kids with dotty eyes swinging swings on trees. He traveled this dark, nightmarish landscape in search of one of the Thirteen Darknesses: Tsuru Tsurulina III, or as he is known in America, Czar Baldy Bald III. (In 3-D!)

“So I’m guessing I’ll stumble upon an innocent-looking child who couldn’t possibly grow up to be a monster.” Hcaz figured as he marched up a narrow zigzaggy hill above a perilous chasm. An eerie-looking house sat at the top. “That’s how it was for everyone else.”

And right Hcaz was. For when he stepped into the house, there sat a pedestal with… a tiny baby inside an embryo. “ARE YOU SERIOUS?!” Hcaz shouted. “He was never even properly BORN!”

Indeed he wasn’t. That’s why it falls to you, Hcaz, to carry Tsuru on his journey of personal growth. You must undergo trials of unspeakable tribulation, and it will be trifling. But don’t worry, just pat yourself on the back and have fun with it.

“Sigh...” Hcaz picked the unborn czar up in his hand. “So far, Thanos was the only Darkness that looked terrifying.” (Play “Aban” from Bobobo-bo Bo-bobo)

Stage B-26: World Without Law

Mission: Go get ’em, tiger!

Hcaz carried the embryo across a series of floating square platforms over a chasm. He jumped a platform that flipped slowly, a platform that rotated around a center, and one that went to and fro. One last stable platform would bring Hcaz to a cliff—the platform rapidly flipped when he set foot, throwing Hcaz to the ledge and speaking furiously, “NO! You know, I am TIRED of you Mario wannabes jumpin’ around on us like we’re a bunch of floating lifeless mounts for you to stand on! It’s time for us platforms to speak our minds and YOU’RE gonna help us!”

Armies of platforms and non-platform supporters began to protest all videogame companies and characters for unfair treatment. Gamers grew angry at the fact they could no longer get past Level 1, and many were forced to hack their games to make an anti-gravity code. Protestors were arrested and forced to resume their platform duties in chains, but this didn’t stop them from super-gluing their tops and getting Mario and Rayman stuck. Eventually, the designers gave in to the protests. Hcaz reasoned that the platforms would return to their duties, provided they get double pay, be allowed to attend after-parties, and could be chosen as playable characters.

So with that, Hcaz made it past the first obstacle of this stage. He came to a chasm with a target floating several meters over. With nothing else to chuck at the target, he was forced to throw Tsuru’s embryo, hit it, and catch the unborn baby when it bounced back. “In Aliehs’ level, you abused a fat kid to progress.” Hcaz mentioned as he crossed the bridge that appeared. “Are we that low on level ideas?”

The bridge led Hcaz to a great red door built within a brick castle wall. There were three keys lain down, but only one keyhole. Take your pick, Hcaz. “Whatever.” Hcaz got a key that looked like Jelly Jiggler. He stuck it in and tried to turn the lock, but failed, and when he pulled the key out, it shaped like a paperclip. He tried the Don Patch key next, but it was fruitless, except when Hcaz pulled it out and saw it became a banana. He then used the Bo-bobo key, but would pull it out to realize it was a lace handkerchief. “GRRRR! Nothing in this world makes SENSE!”

With that, Hcaz set off on a three-month long journey to the Himalayas to find the correct key. After buying hot cookies from a snow monster so he could hit the lottery, Hcaz located the key inside a cave: it was a doll of Abraham Lincoln. “Brilliant.” Hcaz said with sarcasm. He stuck the hat side of Lincoln in the lock and opened the gates to the first important destination of the level. A prestigious institution that resembled a castle, he arrived at Beacon Academy. “WHAT?!” Hcaz screamed. “I thought this was Bobobo, not RWBY!”

“Indeed it is, Mr. Yhprum.” A portly man with a burgundy suit and big grey mustache marched up. “I am Professor Peter Port, and I’m here to encourage the growth of Young Czar Tsuru. And nothing helps a child grow than a ravishing story of his teacher’s days of youth.”

“I don’t have time to hear a story!”

“YOU WILL LISTEN TO MY STORY AND YOU WILL LIKE IT!” Professor Port beat the snot out of Hcaz. “Very well, let’s begin.” He ceased and cleared his throat. “I was born with the biggest mustache in the hospital. My infant mustache was so enormous, I was put on the cover of Children’s Magazine five weeks in a row…”

64 hours later…

“So in the end, we decided to throw the Hershey bar away.” Port concluded. Hcaz was beyond bored at this time. “Well, that concludes my ravishing tales. Let’s take a look at Tsuru’s growth.”

The embryo shone and turned white, floating in the air. Like a Pokémon during Evolution, it grew to a toddler’s size. The light vanished, revealing five-year-old Tsuru with a bald head, blue T-shirt, and black pants. “For the next leg of your journey, you may ride Zwei.” Professor Port showed them a little black and white puppy. “You are one step closer to becoming the third czar, Tsuru.”

“I don’t wanna be Czar!” Tsuru whined. “I wanna be a physician!”

“YOU’LL BE CZAR AND YOU WILL LIKE IT!” Port set the two on the puppy’s back before taking out his blunderbuss and whacking it. The puppy shot across the sky like a comet, Hcaz and Tsuru holding for dear life. They crashed through a few UFOs and Cats in Hats, but eventually they crash-landed along a beach setting. Zwei scampered off to join the circus, leaving Hcaz and five-year-old Baldy to cross the beach of sexy teen girls.

“This place is so gross!” Tsuru whined, repulsed at the fine-looking ladies in bikinis as he ducked for cover. “All these girls are naked! I can’t go another step!”

In order to rectify the situation, Hcaz had to platform across the ocean using giant beach balls, where he could land on an island laboratory and borrow the local weather machine. With some quick finagling, the weather machine cast a blizzard over the land. The girls could no longer embrace the sun and the heat, forced to don coats. “Aaaaahh!…” Tsuru’s head shot up, taking in the sight of the babes in their lovely thick coats. “I think I’m undergoing character growth!”

“Not under this rating.” Hcaz led Tsuru across the beach-turned-blizzard, and they would soon come upon a beautiful summer forest. Monkeys were happily hopping around the trees and throwing carrots down, due to some trade agreement with the bunnies. It was in this forest where Tsuru would complete his next step toward adulthood: picking up a musket and shooting the shifty apes down. The five-year-old felt powerful with the gun in hand, smirking up at the monkeys and letting fire. BANG! BANG! BANG! BANG! BANG! BANG! BANG! BANG!

When he’s finished killing monkeys-

BANG! BANG! BANG! BANG!

When he’s finished killing monkeys-

BANG! BANG! BANG! BANG!

When he’s finished-

BANG! BANG!

STOP IT! So with that, Tsuru’s body lit up and grew a few feet taller. When the light vanished, Tsuru had become a Charmeleon. Or as we’ll call him, Czarmeleon. “YOU GOTTA BE KIDDING!” Hcaz shouted.

Thankfully, since the monkeys were all dead, there was nothing to stop the construction crew from tearing down the forest and building a Pokémon stadium. Hcaz would have to rely on his trusty Charmeleon to defeat his rival trainer, Turquoise, whom was an ordinary human boy in a turquoise hat and shirt. “I choose you, Stone Crocodile Head!” Turquoise tossed his Pokéball, and as was expected, the creature to pop out was a Koopa Troopa.

“It’s not worth my energy to scream at these things anymore.” Hcaz sighed. “Charmeleon, use Flamethrower!”

“Chaaarrr!” Tsuru blew fire at the two-legged tortoise and swallowed him in embers. The attack was useless, because Koopa Troopa was a rock guitarist with spiky pink hair and tattoos on every part of his tissue. “You’re just throwing up whatever crap you think of!” Hcaz argued.

It was then that Hcaz realized that his normal routine wouldn’t cut it in this world. He would have to step up his game and be a little more creative. (On you, Hcazzy.) “Oh, I’ll show you creative! Charmeleon, use The Finger!”

Czarmeleon flashed his finger at the Koopa. The turtle stared at it silently. He then cut off Czarmeleon’s nail and rode away with it on a caravan, wedding bells ringing from afar. “…I will hate myself forever.” Hcaz remarked.

“I summon my next Pokémon!” Turquoise threw a ball that popped open. “A Team of Sushi Chefs!” Ten sushi chefs came out of it.

“WE ARE SUSHI!” they chorused.

“Sushi Team, attack them with Ziploc Bags on a Stick!” Turquoise ordered.

“WE SHA’!” The sushi chefs charged at Tsuru wielding Ziploc bags on pencils.

“Charmeleon, drop Canada on their heads!” Hcaz commanded.

“Repeated naaame!” Czarmeleon raised the country high and smashed the chefs underneath.

“WE SHARPEN OUR PENCILS!” The sushi chefs used Canada’s Silver Sharpener to make their pencils sharpen their swords.

“Unfortunately for you, the sharpener spins so fast, you were sucked inside and grinded into bedsprings!” Hcaz counterattacked.

“THAT, HAS GUT, TO HU’T!” the chefs cried, having been grinded into such.

“DANG IT, Turquoise!” Turquoise’s mother began scolding the shameful boy. “I told you to eat more brussel sprouts and wash your underwear! Now, go sit with the rest of your brothers!”

“Yes, Mom.” The defeated trainer sadly went to sit in a room with his dozens of colored clones, like Magenta, Beige, or Light-Caramel, all of whom had their heads drooped in shame.

“The winner of the tournament is Hcaz Yhprum and his Czarmeleon!” the announcer announced. “Do you know what he wins?! A most-expenses paid trip to New Jersey!”

“I hope it’s better than Old Yesrej.” Hcaz replied. But wrong he was, for while he expected clear skies and mansions with luxurious pools, here he was in a town of smoggy skies, factories, and police sirens. “Any person or place that is in this level, you are basically just effing them.”

Be that as it may, Tsuru’s next step to manhood was in this town. Somewhere in the magical land of New Jersey was a bar called “Old Meter Maids.” Oh, there it is! Inside this dark dank bar were tough-looking thugs smoking and playing pool or poker. If our young Czarmeleon was going to evolve, he would have to play the part. “By playing both pool AND poker?” Hcaz asked.

No! By catching the fish swimming in the electrical circuits. Why else do you think this place is so dark? “Makes as much sense as anything else.”

Tsuru Czarmeleon held the fishing pole firmly while the hook was up in the wiring. He wore a morbid expression and smoked a cigar. The thugs were staring at him, awestruck by his cool demeanor. Czarmeleon blew a smoke, then tapped his cigar to drop a few specs of soot on the floor. He felt a tug and began reeling the rod. “The bait I used must really be working!”

The ceiling collapsed when the fish was completely reeled, for the bait used was none other than Big the Fat Purple Cat. “WHY WOULD A FISH BE LURED TO THAT?!” Hcaz screamed.

The Evolution process resumed once again, turning Tsuru Tsurulina from an adolescent Czarmeleon into a teenage Japanese knight on a black stallion. “Whoa, that’s quite the change!”

“HARK, it is TIME TO RIDE!” Tsuru kicked his steed, and Hcaz hopped on as they rode under the night. “The Summer Solstice is almost upon us! We have nary a second to waste!”

“Why?! Where are we going?” Hcaz asked impatiently.

“We must journey to the beach!” Before long, they arrived at a sunny beach that was completely different from the one they froze earlier. “It is time to enjoy summer… in bathing suits!” Tsuru threw off his armor and exposed his two-piece American Flag swimsuit, the sun glinting off his chrome dome.

“You were repulsed by all those girls at the other beach, but I don’t think you looked in the mirror!”

“If you keep staring at me, you have to pay riyals.” Tsuru stated. “Now let’s round up the boys and play FOOTBALL!” The future Czar started playing soccer with a team of churros.

“JUST PICK A COUNTRY!”

The football match between Samurai Tsuru and the Churro Burros lasted for three fortnights. That was before Marco kicked the ball into the window of a British piano musician, who won the rights to the team in a lawsuit. Five years later, they became Ubisoft. “Sweet, so let’s play Rayman and get on with our day.” Hcaz stated.

The next phase of Tsuru’s development was working in a boring business burrow. In one of many dark offices lit only by a candle, he was typing on a tiny calculator and signing papers, growing envious of all those colorful Rayman characters and their platforming adventures. “Wait, wasn’t Rayman suffering as a result of the Platform Revolution?!” Hcaz realized. “How could he already exist if we just invented Ubisoft?!”

So Tsuru decided to stage a coup, rounding up his old churro buddies and luring the top officials into box traps using Reese’s Pieces. Tsuru became the new President of Ubisoft. The Rayman franchise was taken over by Rabbids, which would torment the Dream World for centuries. “Nothing in this stage can be canon.”

Hcaz, everything I write is canon. Everything I unwrite is uncanon. Even if I write out a cannon. (R.I.P. Gilbert)

“Who’s Gilbert?”
My pet cannon. But with that, Tsuru’s next phase of Evolution commenced. He grew as his light silhouette shaped like a proud adult—which shrunk down into a tiny white dot with a wiggly tail. “HE REVERTED BACK INTO A SPERM!!” Hcaz’s eyes popped out of his glasses.

The Underground music from Super Mario Bros. played. In his sperm form, Tsuru would have to navigate a maze of mall-goers, in order to buy a pair of Size Ones. This would evolve him back into a baby, and then the Evolution process could begin again. “Time for Part 2 of my story!” Professor Port said.

“NO WAY, ABSOLUTELY NOT!” Hcaz decided to seize the sperm and declared, “If anything goes in this world, I’m ending this stage early! Say hello to my Time Machine Microwave!”

He tossed Tsuru into the microwave and set it for fifty years. “MWAH HAAAA!” The future czar popped out as a full-grown adult with a blue jacket with red shoulder pads, a phoenix symbol on his forehead, and a shining bald head. Hcaz may have taken the easy way through this level, but real life ain’t so easy. “Like anything in this level translates to real life!” Hcaz shouted.

In order for Tsurulina to complete his journey, he would have to face his greatest challenge, yet. “That would be me, of course.”

Hcaz and Tsuru gasped, whipping around in the direction of the voice. A powerful and formidable titan towered above them, his body shadowed except for the smirk on his face. “It’s him!” Tsuru exclaimed. “The current ruler of the Chrome Dome Empire! Czar Baldy Bald II!”

“That’s right, Baldy Bald III. If you plan to claim the Sacred Wig of the Czar, you must battle with me. But be forewarned… I am a Master in—” The lights switched on—the towering shadow was actually an average-size cup of frappé with fruits and vegetables. “The Maracas Jamba Music, Mon!” He shook two maracas around.

“I CAN’T TELL WHAT KIND OF DRINK YOU ARE!” Hcaz shouted with a wide rectangular mouth.

“Be careful, Hcaz!” Tsuru III cautioned. “If he touches you with his maracas, you’ll develop an interest in the first telephone!”

“Don’t be so sad, old phones are da bombshell, Mon!” Tsuru II exclaimed. “Here I cooooome!” (Play “Love In My Tummy” by Arthur Resnick and Joey Levine!)

Boss fight: Baldy Bald II

Hcaz and Tsuru III made a run down a castle hall, the two deciding to split different ways. Tsuru II spilled part of his liquid out and had it chase Hcaz. Tsuru III panicked when he saw the czar chasing him, and would have to take cover in an upcoming door to hide. The future czar dove in, but the current czar followed suit. The room in question had a long curtained table with tea and cakes. Tsuru II checked each little teapot to see if his opponent was hiding, and saw that one of the pots had Not Fake written on it. Tsuru II smirked and opened the pot—a mousetrap flipped out and snapped him in the head.

Hcaz was caught in a dead end by the Fruitling Tsuru sent after him. The Fruitling raised a maraca and ran to strike him. Hcaz took a breath and mentally cursed himself before using the Lochness Monster Attack, wherein the lake monster popped out of the floor and ate the Fruitling. Hcaz ran around it to search for the others. He found Tsuru III clutching a chandelier in fear while Tsuru II was jumping and trying to hit him with maracas. Hcaz tossed the future Darkness a banana and told him it could become a rapier. Tsuru III caught the fruit and dropped to strike the frappé czar.

Suddenly, the Bunny Police arrived to arrest Hcaz, and a lawsuit was filed for making creative use of the trademarked fruit they had traded with the apes. “Oh, NOW there’s continuity?!” Hcaz expressed.

The courtroom was instantly torn down when Tsuru III swung a wrecking ball through in his attempt to hit Tsuru II. The frappé czar continued dodging as Tsuru III tore down an arcade, Gruntilda’s Lair, and Bowser’s Castle. He gaped when the wrecking ball swung in his direction and smashed him out of the truck’s cockpit, slamming Tsuru back-and-forth between a boulder and A Soft Place, which was a store that sold soft items like wool beds and paper doors. “Shouldn’t the wrecking ball destroy that place?” Hcaz questioned.

Having pointed out the anomaly present, a space-time rift was created, tearing the universe asunder. “I DIDN’T MEAN TO DO THAT!”

“Oh ho ho!” Tsuru II made use of the chaos by throwing UFOs at his enemies. “Even the destruction of a universe does not cease my jazzing, Mon!”

“That may be so!” Tsuru III countered. “But you’ve yet to see the new universe that will create!”

They swirled into a cosmic cyclone and landed in the new world. Hcaz, Tsuru II, and Tsuru III were working on a Dorito farm. “It’s 100% unnatural like everything ELSE in this dump!” the former shouted.

“Look, Pa!” Tsuru III picked out a Dorito with a green stain. “This one still has a bit of green! I say we keep it.”

“Oh ho ho, you’re so silly, Son!” Tsuru II laughed. “NO ONE WANTS A STAINED DORITO!” He furiously threw it to the sky.

“NOOOO!” Tsuru III cried.

“You big JERK!” Hcaz yelled passionately. “He just wanted a pet Dorito! All he has in his life is a messed-up development system! After everything he’s been through, you won’t let him have a Dorito with a green stain?! WELL, NO SIR!” He swung his foot and blasted Chuck Norris out of his shoe, dealing a painful blow to the frappé.

“Listen to me, Czar Milkshake!” Hcaz grabbed Doritos from the farm and tossed them like shurikens. “I don’t know who you are or how you came to be alive, but you’re messing with the wrong kid with anger issues!” Hcaz reached into the soil and grabbed Augustus and Wendy by the ankles. He dug his head in the ground and grabbed Nerehc in his teeth. “I don’t know what you may’ve heard, but I’m more important than I look!” He attacked Tsuru II with Three-Character Style, swinging the three characters like swords.

“No!” Tsuru II struggled to withstand the strikes. “I am the juiciest cup of frappé there’s even been, Mon! I am too much for a character as minor as yourself!”

“Well, NEWSFLASH, buddy!” Hcaz threw the three protagonists away and surged with power. “I am better than ANY of those three nerds!” He exploded the ground with his powerful energy. “I AM THE STAR… OF THIS STORY!!!” The entire country was ravaged, and Tsuru II was blasting off with Augustus, Wendy, and Nerehc.

“AAAAH!” From the stars of space, Tsuru II could gaze at the marvel he created. “He…He changed the Earth into… ICE CREAM SUNDAE!” The sight was so bright and magnificent, the czar melted into nothing. “I feel like a bird, Mon…”

“No.” stated a man in a tuxedo and bird mask. “I… am Birdman.” (End song.)

Hcaz gasped after realizing what he did. He stared at his hand. Having discovered his Bo-bobo Kempo, Hcaz was ready to follow his destiny: to bring peace to the Land of Paper Planes by sending love letters between nations. “Wait, that wasn’t in the script!!” Medusa shouted. “You can’t just drop a random destiny on some minor character! We don’t have time to prepare, it won’t look good when we get it out!”

Hey, I worked in Bill Cipher. Now that Czar Baldy Bald II has been defeated, Czar Baldy Bald III was ready to take his place among anime characters with funny English names. He stepped into the throne to Chrome Dome Empire, but behind that throne was a certain stone. Hcaz joined him in approaching it, knowing it was the stone they were looking for: a trapezoid with a nose at the top, and gibberish letters that all looked like B, L, A, or H. “IT’S A TRAPEGLYPH?!” Hcaz gaped.

Baldy Bald read the writing to unlock his destiny (to play as in Smash Bros. Brawl):
Congratulations, Baldy, you won the contest! You can choose one of two prizes: A) A membership in the Thirteen Darknesses, or B) your own story in the One Thousand and One Nights.

“I’ll take Thousand and One Nights!” Tsuru beamed.

“What?!”? Hcaz yelled infuriated.

Tsuru Tsurulina III awakened as the First Night! Only One Thousand to go! And it was up to Hcaz to-

“I’M NOT SPENDING ANOTHER SECOND IN THIS WORLD!!” Hcaz held a peanut up to Tsuru. “Become a Darkness or I’ll test your immune system.”

“Gyaaah! Okay!” The czar panicked. “I’ll become a Darkness! (Provided I get a free pen.)”

The Trapeglyph sneezed a cloud of dust on Tsuru. Red hair grew on his bald head, the Royal Wig.

Okay, Tsuru III became a Darkness. Only 2 more to go. (Lame.)

Portal Chamber

The Multiverse Portal called Hcaz back eventually. However, the ray of light got stuck in traffic on the 405 Freeway, so Hcaz’s stay in Bo-bobo Land was prolonged. He landed before Nerehc with torn clothes and a manic face. “Hey, Hcaz. How was the mission?” Nerehc asked.

Hcaz pointed at him threateningly. “Never. Again.” And he stomped away.

Medusa shuddered, feeling a sudden chill down her spine. “What’s wrong, Medusa?” asked Thanatos.

“I’m just remembering… our first meeting with Tsurulina. His powers were unlike any other’s… I think he is the only Darkness I dread meeting again.”

The 1700s

It was a dark era in history where much of the population had gone without hair. Baldness was an epidemic. There were no beauty pageants and barbers were out of business. Japan was especially targeted for its rather peculiar hairstyles. (“Did we even have those things back then?” Medusa asked.)

Czar Baldy Bald III absorbed all the power from their shaven heads, absorbing the luscious Hair Chi into his veins. “Yes! YES! BWAH HA HA!” The czar brimmed with power as his red hair grew like vines. “Supreme power is at my behest! There is nothing you can do to stop me, Mew!”

“Mewww!” The Ancestral Firstborn spawned eight pink Psycho Spheres and cast them at Tsuru, exploding against him. When the smoke cleared, the czar was protected inside a giant bottle of sunscreen. “It’s hopeless! My Hair Hunt powers have reached the maximum level!”

“How does THIS translate to Hair Hunt power?!” Medusa exclaimed.

“Now I will use Special Attack Number 53! The Age of Children and Pie!” The world flashed, creating a sunny landscape where children gobbled up blueberry pie.

“What is THAT supposed to do?!”

“Mister? Would you like some pie?” an adorable little boy asked Tsuru.

“Don’t mind if I do!” Tsuru took the pie and ate it. He paused: “WAIT! This pie! It’s… BLACKBERRY!” He was blown into the sky.

“Does that cancel out your attack?” asked Medusa.

“No! But a blackberry stole my wallet once and I was in the middle of looking for him! Sorry, Mew, maybe some other time!” The czar zipped off, leaving a trail of dust. Medusa sighed in disbelief.

_The gods decided that Mew was the only spirit capable of defeating the mad czar. But even Tsuru’s antics tested the Firstborn’s imagination. The battle lasted for five days. It ended when Mew caught Tsuru in the School Trap, forcing him to undergo 300 years of remedial English._

“I just wanted to be a physiciaaaaan!” Tsuru cried.

And before you ask... no. Hcaz is not. :P I think before I do more Side Stories, I’ll cover some ground in the Main Story, because the Side Stories won’t have much to go after this. We have nearly all the Darknesses, and Wendy and Augustus’s stories are near to finishing. Atbash Cipher today, short but with a subtle meaning. :P

Chapter Summary

Dillon’s team goes to retrieve Vanellope!

I really did not feel like looking up the names of Duel Monsters. XO Evidence of that is clear in this chapter. There’s like so many, and the lists are confusing. XP I already have to do that with Pokémon.

Chapter 63: Orvus

Cyberspace; Byway Core

XANA landed his hoverpad on the floor of the vast, dark chamber and approached the great spire of energy that flowed upward. He saw his assistant hard at work in fixing the machine where the spire came from. “PERIDOT!”

“YIPE!” The lime-green Program bumped her head and came out of the compartment she was fixing. “I told you that any sort of surprise or disruption halts my work progress by 5%! You said you wanted this junk heap fixed as soon as possible, so unless you took your own regular interruptions into the equation, it is statistically impossible-”

“SILENCE! That cursed Corporate President is ruining all of our work, so as long as he’s still around, we’ll NEVER get done! I want you to finish the upgrade you’ve been installing into me. I will use it to destroy Gozaburo once and for all!”

“Very well.” Peridot stood up. “I was hoping to avoid having to tinker in your chest for a while longer, but I’m being paid either way.”

XANA went to lay down on a bed as Peridot opened his chest and began working. “I’ve never seen this type of code before. However, it seems like a type of virus. Where did you say you collected this code?”

“It was part of Vanellope’s code, when I studied her. I was able to duplicate it, but installing it within myself has proven difficult. But if it works, I may very well unlock the secret of virtual immortality! And Gozaburo will be sacrificed in order to do so. SO HURRY UP!”

“GAH! Why don’t I fix your voice chip in the process… What the heck is this?!” Peridot picked a cookie out of his chest.

“Oh, I was wondering where that was! Gimme!” XANA took and ate the cookie. Peridot glared and picked it out of his chest again.

Stage 63: First Byway

Mission: Restore the Final Byway.
Act 1

Vanellope ventured across a wasteland under a green sky that was lit by the spire of energy from the building miles away. Clank was tied to her like a backpack, and the Karkat, Terezi, and Nepeta Zoni were guiding her. Vanellope was forced to jump over a cliff, and when she was about to land in a pit of green lava, a row of slanted block platforms rose out to save her. The series of footholds began to appear and move in the fashion of a giant wheel. Vanellope jumped through a gap in a bar of Munchers, bounced off a Koopa before landing on its platform, and she had to hold the discarded shell while standing on the platform, waiting for the next wall to rotate. Once it was vertical enough, Vanellope kicked the shell through a tunnel of Piranha Plants.

Vanel glitchwarped into the cleared tunnel and raced through as a wheel of fire bars rotated after her. At the end, she could jump out and grab a gray P-switch on a new platform. Spinies occupied the following set of platforms, so Vanel tossed the switch up, spin-jumped, and grabbed it again as she could bounce on the spiked creatures. A ceiling of Munchers rotated overhead, and the fireballs that jumped out of the lava threatened to catch Vanellope mid-spin-jump and knock her up to the Munchers. Vanel avoided them and landed on a platform before a stack of Thwimps, and she hit the P-switch to turn the stack into coins.

A string of flames whooshed up along the rotating course, so Vanellope spin-jumped across them, and the Thwimp wall no longer impeded her progress. She landed on another platform, facing three upcoming Muncher walls with gaps, requiring her to make three successful glitchwarps to pass them and land on a safe foothold. A tower of cannons rotated up and fired a line of Bullet Bills, so Vanel had to hurriedly bounce up them to get over the cannon tower. Afterwards, she had to rely on a team of Missile Bills that blasted out of nowhere, keeping her aloft above the pit. She had to avoid the ball-n-chains that flew up as well, but once this trial was passed, Vanellope could set foot on a cliff.

It was then an invisible force began to push her from behind—from a certain point of view, it would be like an auto-scroll in a 2-D game. The auto-scroll increased in speed, forcing Vanellope into a sprint. She was running to a river of green lava—she spin-jumped over a series of fireballs, landed on a long walkway where she had to slide under small gaps, then spin-jumped up a stairway of Bullet Bills. She landed on solid ground, getting closer to the spire thanks to this forced sprint. Volcano Lotuses spat mini fire puffs that rained around the ground, forcing Vanellope to jump and dodge them.

Vanellope was forced over a cliff—she glitchwarped up to get into a tunnel within the opposite cliff. She dodged the XANA Hornets that flew out, glitchwarped through the gaps of incoming barriers, and raced along a path in the center of a lava river where fireballs jumped out alongside her, resulting in an epic entrance. A Warp Pipe was coming and would crush Vanellope against the screen-scroll, unless she performed the pipe-entering mechanic—and she did!

Vanellope came out on a ledge over a green lava pit, facing up at a higher ledge. With the power of the Zoni, pillars began to sprout for Vanel to jump on. The first two were normal, then she had to spin-jump off a Volcano Lotus, followed by a Spiny platform where two Baseball Chucks chucked balls at her from the left and right. Vanel then landed on a platform where a Jumping Chuck jumped up between two pillars, and had to slide under it and the pillars when the Chuck jumped. She Wall Jumped up to a higher platform, then bounced up some Bullet Bills that were fired from cannons aiming diagonal from her view. Vanellope made it onto the ledge and approached a small machine. (End song.)

There was a glass compartment in the machine that was fit for Clank’s size. “TH1S 1S WH3R3 H3 MUST GO.” Terezi hissed. “PL4C3 ORVUS 1NTO TH3 M4CH1N3.”
Vanellope put Clank inside, and a surge of power began to flow through the machine. A large holographic projection appeared, depicting a Zoni with a dark pink face and bulbous turquoise-colored eyes. “Oh my goodness, I didn’t expect to be asleep for this long! Ahh, and look! My dear sweet children, I’m so happy to see you again.”

“CUT THE CRAP, ORVUS.” KARKAT SHOUTED- whoops, sorry. “WE BUILT YOU, AND YOU TOLD US NOT TO WAKE YOU UP UNTIL IT WAS TIME TO OPEN THE GATE. WELL, GUESS WHAT? WAKEY WAKEY!”

“Hm hm hm, your calculations are a bit off, my dear Cancer. We are roughly 14 days early. And it seems the Cyberspace is still in quite a rough shape.”

“Hey, bigheaded guy!” Vanellope yelled. “Are you the boss of these annoying little robots?”

Orvus looked down at her. “Ah... So, this is the one you’ve chosen, is she?”

“Chosen for what?”

“I apologize for the ordeals my children may have put you through... I’m sure by now, you know this Cyberspace exists within the Great Clock, and it contains the collected data of the First Dimension’s worlds. But this space is more than a collection of data... They are, in fact, the very remains of the First Dimension, after its horrible destruction by the power of Arceus. They have been left in a state of ruin for some time now, and our mission is to restore these worlds to their original, peaceful stature. If this is not accomplished before the Gate of Time opens, the Chosen Ones will be destroyed, and all will be lost. But fixing the sites using simple means is impossible. It is a task that can only be completed by a god. That is where you come in.”

“Me?” Vanellope questioned.

“Yes, my child. For you have in your possession The Source of Cyberspace.”

Vanellope gasped. She reached into her sweater pocket and picked out the teeny tiny pixel XANA had once sought. The pixel XANA tricked Dillon into finding, and the one that gave Vanellope’s memories back. “The Zoni knew you were the most ideal host for The Source, that which brought to life the Great Clock’s Cyberspace and all that came after it. For eons, it was hidden in the depths of low-quality virtual reality, protected by the Game-and-Watch Tribe. With it, you can become the God of Cyberspace.”

“The God of Cyberspace...” Vanellope stared at the very small source of power between her fingers. “But... why me?”

“Because you are friends with the Chosen Ones.” Karkat responded. “The God of Cyberspace needs to be a reliable being who will guide the Chosen Ones safely. Obviously, you don’t wanna see them die, so of course you’ll do it. And look! I’m speaking in low caps! You happy?”

“But what’ll that be like?” Vanellope glitched.

“Naturally, that atrocious glitch will be removed.” Orvus answered. “And you must remain here and protect the Cyberspace until the Chosen Ones have arrived. Eventually, the data in this space will become reality, and this realm will all become darkness. Unfortunately, on the Day of Apocalypse... you will be lost with it.”

“...Yeah, I’m not gonna do it.”

“WEREN’T YOU LISTENING?!?!” Karkat screamed. “YOU’RE THE ONLY ONE WE CAN TRUST...”
TO FIX OUR UNIVERSE, SO IF YOU DON’T, THEN YOUR FRIENDS WILL—"

“Yah, I HEARD all that, Banshee Breath! But I wanna see if it’s alright with him first.”

“Alright with whom?” Orvus asked.

“Dillon, of course! He is my brother—I think he would want a say in me becoming a god or not. So maybe we should find him and ask him real quick.”

“ABSOLUTELY NOT! WE ARE NOT GOING OUT OF OUR WAY TO FIND YOUR CRAPPY FRIEND AND—”

“Karkitty! Vriska’s clawing, she says a group of humans are coming!” =33 Nepeta yelled.

“Let’s see who it is.” Orvus projected a large screen, showing a two-dimensional black rocketship. Vanellope instantly recognized that type of design—and the black-haired boy in its window. “IT’S DILLON!”

Outside First Byway (Play “Blizzard on the Star Express” from Captain Toad!)

The Gamen Rocket was approaching a greenish planet in the depths of Cyberspace. Quill Ramsey was blasting XANA Mantas with the ice setting of his Elementor Guns, and Kodama used Flashworks to blind the Duel Monsters whose names she couldn’t remember. “Is Vanellope really on that planet, Mr. Game-and-Watch?” Carol asked.

Beep. BOP! Boop!

“Can you establish a connection with Vanellope?” Dillon asked, catching some XANA Hornets in a spherical Shadow Shockwave before sending Mario to tear them to shreds.

Midna grabbed a gargoyle Duel Monster in her Hair Hand and chucked it at a Megarocket (a Megatank with rockets). “It doesn’t look like they want us in there. There’s too many.”

“Then use your Firstborn magic to blow them all away!” Dillon yelled, raising his Spirit Ball. “As your Guardian, I command you!”

“What am I, a genie?! And legally, I’m not allowed to go all out, I’m only as strong as my Guardian.”

“Oh, screw that, we’re in Cyberspace using Infinite Ammo cheats, what’s holding you back??”

“If you were a genie, I wish for a quick and efficient way to get through this mess!” Quill shouted.

“OI, NAKAMA! It’s Chimney-chan! Can you hear me?? I just found out this baby has a Cyber Train! I’m bringing it to ya, hop aboard!”

Fast as a shooting star, a black train with bright yellow outlines zipped up from behind. “Fast and deadly, that’s my ride!” Kodama joyfully jumped on.

“I’m calling shotgun!” Quill jumped on.

“The bill for food is on me!” Carol jumped on. “Cover us in your ship, Game-and-Watch!”
Dillon jumped on and called Midna over. “Let’s make our way to the FRONT!” He cheered.

Act 2: Cyber Train

Megatanks rolled up along the first car, and when they opened their shells, Kodama was quick to shoot missiles at their cores. The next car was blocked by a barrier, and XANA Ninjas were tossing shurikens from behind it. There was a terminal atop a platform on this car, so Carol had to sidle across a thin ledge on the side of it, get to a ladder, and climb onto the platform. She could hack the terminal and disable the barrier. The next car had totem poles that the ninjas were jumping around, but Dillon caught them in a spherical Shadow Shockwave and sent Mario on all three of them.

The route to the next car consisted of these totem poles. Quill flipped and shot a grappling hook from his heel to latch to a pole, but that’s when ninjas poofed out of smoke. He swiftly dodged their shurikens and kicked his Grapple Heels at them, resulting in the ninjas jumping platforms. Quill could kick his grappling to the free totems and fly further across. XANA Mantas swooped across, forcing Quill to jump, but then he could grapple to the next car and press a switch. The totem poles sunk, along with the ninjas, pulling the previous car over for his friends to join.

Some stairs led up to a platform with a cannon, and they saw a swarm of XANA Missiles launching from the further cars. “Leave this to me!” Kodama stuck her fireworks into the cannon and shot them at the missiles with keen aiming.

“Midna, use your extendo hand thingy to pull the car over!” Dillon ordered.

“As you wish, Master.” Midna stretched her Hair Hand across and grabbed the hook on the edge of the next car. She struggled to pull it over while Kodama protected them from the missiles. It took about a minute until Midna successfully latched the car with their own. The missiles ceased, so Kodama jumped down to join the team across. They climbed a ladder onto the roof of the car and had to navigate a maze of floating searchlight robots. Their lights would catch them in a magnetic pull and chuck them over the side, so Dillon ventured the maze alone.

He used Shadow Veil to hide from the searchlights, and after he was through the maze, he jumped off the roof and entered the car. Amps moved left and right between the seats, so Dillon avoided the shock balls until he got to the back and unlocked the door. His team climbed down the ladder and entered, avoiding the Amps as they returned to the front entrance and headed for the edge. There was no way to cross to the next car, but the Gamen Rocket swooped by from the right and left several times, leaving a suspended series of 2-D monkey bars.

The kids climbed across the bars, and Quill kicked his Grapple Heels at the Bullet Bills that were sent to shoot them down. They made land on the very front car and had to go across a walkway on the right side. The door into the car was sealed, so Dillon had Midna fly over to the other side. “There’s another computer over here!”

Scyphozoa climbed up onto the walkway, but Kodama was quick to shoot their domes with fireworks. “I’m going for it!” Carol ducked under the squids and offered to sidle on the thin ledge around the front of the car.

“Wouldn’t you rather let Midna carry you over?!” Dillon called.

“You only learn with experience!” she yelled back. Carol hugged the car and kept her feet perfectly sideways, feeling wind push against her when she sidled around the front. She was able to set foot on safer ground, then she jumped some platforms before reaching the terminal. After one quick hacking session, the door into the car opened. “Uh-oh!” A security mechanism activated—the platforms supporting her dropped. She whipped open her parasol—“AAAAAHH!” and blew away with the sheer force—Midna shot her Hair Hand up to pull her back to safety.

“And my experience stems from saving Dillon’s father from several death pits.” Midna remarked. The kids entered the train and took out the XANA Creepers at the control station.

“Now it’s just a straight shot to the planet!” Kodama smirked.

“Vanellope, here we come.” Dillon said eagerly. (End song.)

The Cyber Train came to a slow and steady halt inside a docking bay. The kids stepped off and viewed around the dark chamber. “Wow, I never knew you for the easy landings, Chimney.” Kodama said.

“That’s because she didn’t land you, I did.” Sigmund responded. “That large-mouthed nutbrain was about to crash you.”

“Nuh-uh, I was gonna land them in that lava pit!”

Beep BOP boop! Mr. Game-and-Watch pointed and stepped in that direction.

“He’s feeling Vanellope’s signature even stronger!” Carol beamed.

They followed the little Program down a quiet passage. Midna stopped before a door labeled God Production. As the others kept walking, Dillon turned back and saw her. “What’s the matter, Midna?” The others stopped to notice this.

“God Production… I have to see what this is.” The Firstborn entered the room. The others exchanged glances and went in after her.

There was some kind of pipe machine and shelves lined with colorful, large, baby-size eggs. The kids examined the eggs curiously… Midna was especially engaged in the room. There was a screen that read Eggs Hatched. There were eleven eggs on the screen: a light-green/dark-green one; a blue one; a white one with a yellow star; a pinkish-white one; a black-and-white with cyan lines; three silver ones with red emblems in a blue, pink, and yellow space respectively; a green one with notes; an egg designed like a moon; and a brown egg with pink diamond parts.

Midna stared at the egg with cyan lines… It was designed just like her. All those eggs’ designs were familiar… She looked around the eggs in the room. She put her hand to a black egg with red lines… A powerful energy was growing inside it. She felt it from all the eggs. She looked again at the ‘Eggs Hatched’, and her mind started racing, for it was too much to process—

“Huff!” A little gasp escaped her throat. This was too strange to believe… impossible, even…

“These are… Firstborn.”

“What?” The word escaped Dillon like a gasp. What could she mean? All these eggs…

Midna stared around the room, her eye struck wide. “Why…Why does this place… feel so familiar…”

“I don’t get it.” Quill said, looking at a yellow and orange egg. “Are you saying this place is… producing Firstborn?”

“Producing gods…” Dillon remembered the sign outside. “But… that’s impossible. Midna… I thought the gods were created by Arceus. Even the Firstborn…”
Kodama picked up a dark-purple/dark-red egg in both arms, putting her ear to it. “Whoa- wah-wah!” She stumbled on her own feet, and her sandals curved, causing her to fall back. She tossed the egg up in the air, but caught it in her hands. “Phew.”

The egg cracked slightly. The kids gasped, horrified that something resembling a Firstborn could come out of that. They heard a faint sound: “Hoopa?”

“HATCH ALERT! HATCH ALERT!” A Zoni flew into the room. It quickly snatched the egg in a psychic grasp and worked to repair it. “Premature hatching averted!” It placed the egg back on the shelf and flew out.

“That was one of the things that took Vanellope!” Dillon exclaimed. “After it!” The kids abandoned the room and chased the robot. Midna spared one more look, feeling a strong urge to study this room further… but she chose to go with her Guardian for now.

Repair Room

Peridot finished inputting the code in XANA’s computer and closed his chest. “The virus has been implanted.”

“Excellent.” XANA sat up. “Now then… continue to repair this fortress. I will go to face Gozaburo Kaiba myself.” There was an alarm. “Hmm… Seems we have some visitors. Is it Kaiba… or those children? I will have them all derezzed either way.” XANA began to leave the room. “Attack anyone you encounter, Peridot. We must be rid of any setbacks if we are to finish in time.”

Downstairs

The four operatives and Midna entered a vast, dark chamber. They saw a single ray of light several yards away and ran to it. Dillon slowed to a stop, gazing when he saw who was in the light. “Is that…” Kodama whispered.

Dillon stepped forward calmly. Vanellope looked like she was in a trance, arms hanging out and eyes frozen wide, staring at the source of light. Worry coursed through Dillon. Had she been experimented on, stripped of her memory? Was this some sort of weird upgrade? She seemed to have no idea of her surroundings… Dillon wished he’d come sooner.

“…BLAGABLAHG!” Vanellope wagged her tongue.

“BAAAAH!” Dillon fell back and his heart almost jumped out.

“HA HA HA HAAAA!” Vanellope hugged her chest and cracked up. “OH MAN, I’ve been saving that trick all month, you-hoo-hoo totally PEED yourself!” She wiped a tear and kept laughing. “Ha ha ha, you’re a puss, Dillon!”

“. . .” Dillon smiled and felt tears rolling down his face. “Vanellope!”

He got up and shared a hug with his sister. Their friends smiled at the warmhearted moment. Vanellope glitched once, but that didn’t disrupt the hug. They let go. “I missed you so much.” Dillon said.

“I missed you too, Dill! So, who are these weirdoes? I recognize the little Gremlin.” She remarked at Midna, who glared. “And… hey, Kodama!”

“What’s up, Vanellope?” Kodama gave a thumbs-up and wink. “Thanks again for the assist!”
“Hey, don’t forget to introduce me!” Carol walked up in peppy spirits.

“Oh, Vanellope, this is Carol!” Dillon said. “She’s… uhhh…” He didn’t know how to phrase it.

“She isn’t as great as you were!” Dillon defended.

“That’s YOUR opinion.” Carol retorted.

“AHEM.” Karkat and his Zoni floated up. “IF WE’RE DONE REUNITING, HURRY UP AND TELL HIM!”

“Tell me what?”

“Oh, well,” Vanellope began, “see, these guys sort of want me to become a god and restore the virtual world, because if I don’t, you’re all gonna die, so-”

“UGH, I GUESS I’LL HAVE TO EXPLAIN IT AGAIN.”

Karkat recapped the story in two minutes. “So wait, if you do this, you’re gonna disappear?” Dillon asked.

“That’s why I wanted to ask you if I should do this, Dill.”

“No, of course I don’t want you to do it!” Dillon yelled.

“Whoa, time out, man!” Quill intervened. “What about that stuff about us being destroyed? I mean, I don’t get this prophecy stuff, but it sounds important.”

“I’m not gonna let Vanellope sacrifice herself! Why can’t you Zoni things do it?”

“W3 N33D TH3 ZON1 4L1V3 UNT1L YOU ARR1V3.” \[::< Terezi stated.

“Dill, I know Vanellope’s important to you, but think about-” Carol tried to reason.

“Forget it! I waited too long to find Vanellope! I wanted to take her back home with us, so she could live in the Human World like she always wanted!”

“To be fair, she had plenty of time in the Human World.” Kodama said. “And it’s not like she could… grow up with us.”

“What are you guys saying?! That we should let her kill herself, one of our friends?!”

“Well, maybe ask what SHE wants to do!” Carol yelled.

“Fine! What do you want to do, Vanellope?”

Vanellope was silent for a moment, shifting her feet and twiddling her hands. “I dunno… Whatever you want, I guess.”

“When we met, you said you wanted to live in the Human World, like a real girl. That’s why we downloaded you, a solid hologram. You had to jump back in a computer every now and then, but we made it work.”
“I know, and I’m really glad that you did. I had a lot of fun on our missions. …But…”

“What?”

“. . .I know you care about me, Dillon, but. . .I’m a Program. I’m artificial.” She glitched. “Part of me felt like… I didn’t belong with you. She’s right, I couldn’t grow up with you… I couldn’t mature or develop, and most of the time, I did feel kinda… broken.”

“Vanellope, don’t say things like that! You were one of our teammates, you were as important to us as Mason or Sheila or anybody! We wouldn’t have cared if you couldn’t grow up… And besides, you aren’t the only one! Wait’ll you hear about this Mary girl-”

“IF SHE DOESN’T BECOME THE GOD OF CYBERSPACE, ALL OF YOU WILL DIE.” Karkat stated. “YOUR WHINING IS MEANINGLESS!”

“Vanellope, I never thought of you as a Program or artificial. I thought of you like… any kid who wants to have fun and have friends. In the Kids Next Door, it doesn’t matter who you are or where you’re from… because we accept all kids. . . Even god kids.” He looked at Midna, who quirked a brow. “Heck, the Firstborn are supposed to be mega powerful, but they hang with us like any kid does. You don’t have to feel different, Vanellope, and I’m sorry if we did make you feel that way. I really want you to come back with us. But… if you really have to stay here so… so you can help us… I don’t know. Just give us your honest answer. What do you want to do?”

“…” Vanellope smiled. “I wanna come back to Earth and go on missions with you.”

“OH, WELL THAT’S FAN-FUCKING-TASTIC!” Karkat exclaimed. “THEN COULD YOU PLEASE TELL ME WHERE WE’LL FIND ANOTHER AVAILABLE CANDIDATE TO BE ‘GOD’ BEFORE THE APOCALYPSE?”

“Aaaaaa AAAAAAAH- UUH!” Something green crashed on the floor a few feet away, along with green robot parts. The head of the creature looked like a chip they couldn’t name right away. It shook its head and got up. “Oh, I KNEW I should’ve repaired that bolt!” Peridot shook her fist and glared up. “When I get back up there, it will RUE the day it…” She looked at her bare fist. She noticed Vanellope and the people with her. Peridot looked around at her fallen parts. “My limb-enhancers!”

“AWWWW!” Vanellope came over and squeezed the pipsqueak in a hug. “You’re so CUUUUUTE! You’re like a tiny little cuddly alieeenn!”

“RELEASE ME! Your feeble death squeeze will not destroy the great Peridot!”

“Ooo, what are these?” Midna used her powers to make the limb-enhancers levitate.

“GIVE THOSE BACK!” Peridot reached a hand up. “Those are mine!”

“Come and get them!” Midna giggled, keeping them out of arm’s reach.

“What is this thing, anyway?” Kodama picked Peridot up by the arm. She was the size of a toddler to them. “Some kind of puppy?”

“LET ME GO! RUFF RUFF RUFF RUFF!” She kicked her feet.

“She’s some kind of repairbot XANA hired to clean up his mess.” Vanellope answered.

“Why not let her be the Cyber God?” Dillon asked.
“SHE CANNOT BE TRUSTED! SHE IS A SERVANT OF YELLOW DIAMOND!” Karkat shouted.

Peridot’s eyes widened. “Wait… I RECOGNIZE that voice!” She pointed at the Zoni. “You’re the trolls! You were the ones stealing our Ether, the ones building that machine! Yellow Diamond ordered me to spy on you, and you threw me in your machine like…like some common Pearl! WHERE IS YELLOW DIAMOND?! I know you clods know, so TELL ME!”

“YELLOW DIAMOND WAS BANNISHED TO THAT WORLD. SHE IS ONE OF THE THIRTEEN DARKNESSES.” Terezi hissed.

“What do you mean the Thirteen Darkneses? Why is My Diamond associating with them?”

“YOUR DIAMOND HAS BEEN CHOSEN FOR THE GREAT PROPHET. IT WAS THAT THAT BANNED HER.”

“But back to the point, she can’t become Cyber God. She isn’t even a real Program.”

“Actually, she is.” Orvus projected himself. “When Peridot was transferred to this dimension, her gem was destroyed, but her data was recorded in this Cyberspace. She was reborn as a Program, along with her instincts as a repairwoman.”

“WHO THE CRAP CARES, SHE’S STILL OUR ENEMY!” Karkat yelled.

“In the past, perhaps. But I believe we can persuade her to work in our favor. If she is truly loyal to Yellow Diamond.”

“What are you saying?!” Peridot screamed. “If you have information concerning My Diamond, I request that you SHARE IT!!”

“Yellow Diamond, along with the other Thirteen Darkneses, will be returning to the dimension you came from. The dimension you stand in now. But in the horrible state of array it’s in, we can only expect tragedy to befall them. Perhaps you do not care for these humans… but I am certain you will restore this world for your Diamond’s sake.”

“I see through your trick!” She smirked and pointed. “The Diamonds are unbreakable! Thousands of Gems can be destroyed in one blow, but Yellow Diamond will stand strong!”

“YEAH?! WELL, TAKE A LOOK AT THIS!” Karkat projected a recording dated thousands of years ago: a golden-haired fairy unleashed a powerful beam of magic at a diamond-bodied beauty. Yellow Diamond absorbed every ounce of the power directed at her. Her body flashed brighter and faster. She expected a few beams to redirect and hit the fairy. But such didn’t appear to be happening. The spell lasted for minutes without end. Then… the light faded.

...... CRACK!

Peridot frowned. The entity poofed and left only the cracked diamond. “…But… nothing can crack a diamond…”

“WELL, THIS ONE DID! AND IF THIS PLACE ISN’T FIXED, SHE’S GOING TO BE MORE THAN CRACKED. SHE AND ALL YOUR PRECIOUS GEMS ARE GONNA DIE!”

“But My Diamond… Where is she?”

“Yellow Diamond will return, that you can be sure.” Orvus said. “You may not be able to see her again afterward... but this duty will be the last great deed you do for her.”

“HELL NO! VANELLOPE’S THE ONLY ONE WE CAN TRUST. WE WASTED ALL THIS TIME PREPARING HER!”

“All beings, physical or cybernetic, have a choice. Vanellope can choose to be with her friends, and she can if Peridot is willing to take her place. But someone must... this much is true.”

“Pleeeeaaase, Peridot?” Vanellope said adorably.

“I am not doing what YOU say!” Peridot argued. “It’s irksome enough to listen to that nasally voiced XANA, but I won’t take orders from YOU gigantic clods!”

“Then would you rather let XANA become the Cyber God?” Dillon questioned. “He might download Yellow Diamond to this world and make her a plaything.”

Her face shrunk at the idea. “Well-if-it-is-for-My-Diamond-perhaps-I-shall.”

“Nice one, Bud.” Quill patted Dillon’s back.

“Hands where I can see them, all of you!” A teal-haired boy in a white suit hovered above them on a platform, Duel Monsters by his side. “This building is now under the jurisdiction of KaibaCorp! As heir to the Kaiba fortune, I – Noah Kaiba – am placing you under arrest!”

“Arrest THIS!” Kodama blasted a magenta firework up that exploded and covered Noah with same-colored powder.

“AAH! MY EYES! I virtual-peed myself! WAIT, why did I say that?!”

“You’ve just been hit by my Truthwork! You have to answer any question I ask you! Now, where is your father hiding?”

“He’s on the roof, trying to shut down that energy spire! And I think XANA was up there, too!”

“We can take them both down!” Dillon fist-palmed. “Are you ready, Vanellope?”

“You BET I am! But first;” Vanellope held the tiny pixel up to Peridot’s face. “Peridot: Are you willing to betray XANA and team up with us for the sake of aiding Yellow Diamond in her super important destiny?”

“You want me to betray my annoying and unreasonable employer and help a team of somewhat-threatening strangers whom I’ve only known for five minutes?”

“That’s the gist, yeah.”

“Meh, sounds logical enough.” Peridot shrugged.

“Great, then I present to you the Pixel of Destiny!” She dropped The Source in Peri’s small green hand. “You’re the God of Cyberspace now, enjoy!” She glitched ahead of her friends. “TO THE ROOF!” And she continued glitching as the team hurried after her.

“WHAT ABOUT MY LIMB-ENHANCERS?!” Peridot screamed. Midna abruptly dropped them on the ground. “Uh… Thank you.” She then stared at The Source. “What am I supposed to do, eat it?”

“It’s a suppository.” Orvus said.
“What does that mean?”

Roof

The roof of the tower was round and ring-like, and the energy current spouted out of the center to flow forever to the sky. Gozaburo Kaiba held up a small computer pad that projected the current’s wavelength. “So, is this what you’ve been working on all the way out here?”

“Why, whatever do you mean?” XANA asked mockingly, approaching Kaiba from behind.

“Don’t play the fool with me.” Kaiba turned around. “I know you’re an accomplice of Ragaj Gnik, the being who seeks the Twenty Keys. Any project you are working on is considered threatening by the World Leaders.”

“Well, I don’t particularly enjoy this line of work… No pay and I can’t even tell who my boss is because he stays in the dark.” XANA approached him calmly, a devious smirk displayed on his screen. “I’ve been dying to meet one of you Government dogs… Now that you’re here, I want to tell you something.”

“And what would that be?”

“…” XANA fell to his knees and bowed to him. “PLEASE put me out of my misery! I can’t take it, anymore! I’ve been trapped in this space for so long, fixing all these wretched sites that only seem to get more broken, working with incompetent minions and trying to catch some pipsqueak candy child!” He looked up, showing the mini waterfalls pouring from his digital eyes. “I don’t care about Lord Gnik, the prophecy, or ANY of this stupid crud! I just wish someone would derez me. But if I go out by any petty means, it will tarnish my memory. That’s why I want a Corporate President to destroy me, so it will seem like I died in great battle against a worthy opponent!”

“You’re bluffing. Even you cannot be so pathetic!”

“But I’m kneeling before you and I’m powerless. You have my word, I will not try to destroy you.”

“Hm hm hm.” Kaiba drew a sword and held it at XANA’s neck. “You are a failure as a man, XANA. But it is not like you ever were one.” He raised the sword. “Enjoy Digital Nothingness!”

Dillon’s group stepped off the elevator, just in time to watch XANA get beheaded and his body disperse into pixels. “XANA!”

“Well, if it isn’t more annoying guests.” Kaiba turned to face them. “Are you viruses or mere children playing on controllers?”

“Wait, if we’re using the only five virtualizers, then how are you in here?” Carol questioned.

“Probably some other virtualizers Sigmund didn’t tell us about.” Quill figured.

“Afraid not. The body you are looking at is my own.” Kaiba stated. “My son, Noah and I were diagnosed with a fatal illness three years ago. But while our bodies lay their final rest, my company’s technology transferred our minds to our supercomputer. We have continued to live as Programs, and walk about the real world as solid holograms.”

“Just like Vanellope…” Dillon said.
“But do not drop your guard. You may be using uncreative avatars in this virtual world, but I can still destroy your real bodies from here. This blade I am wielding is equipped with a virus that can infect the source of any Program, so by impaling it through you, I can send a shock to your virtualizers and-” Kaiba’s body began glitching in red pixels. “ACK! What in the… Why is my body-?!"

“You’re not the only one implanted with a virus!” XANA’s cackly voice said. “You’ve fallen for my trap, Gozaburo! Now your pixels will become mine!”

“NO! This can’t be! AAAAAAHHH…!” Kaiba’s body fully became pixels as they morphed into XANA’s shape. Computer head, pointy fingers, and blue cape with 0’s and 1’s, XANA was back.

“Well, Vanellope, this virus of yours proved to be more useful than I could’ve hoped! Now, I shall never be destroyed, by the Kids Next Door or—!” XANA’s body started glitching. “What?! What’s happening now?! GYAAAAH!” His body morphed into that of Gozaburo.

“That IS a helpful virus, XANA! Did you really not think I had the same one?! Now then, back to business.”

“NO YOU DON’T!” Kaiba’s right arm morphed into XANA’s and started punching him in the face.

“Our Take Over Viruses are conflicting with one-another! Our bodies are molding!” XANA’s high voice spoke in an eerie echo.

“CURSES! I can’t tell which pixels are mine!”

“ULP! Everything’s looking… shpoingy broingy.”

“NEE-RHWIRE! LEVISHTAN!”

“Artificial intelligence failing… Artificial sapience… Licknar.”

“NOOOoooo!”

XANA and Gozaburo Kaiba transformed into a giant monster with green bug wings and a dragon’s tail. Their body was mostly red except for XANA’s closed keyboard chest, and Kaiba’s head was on top. It glitched and morphed into XANA’s head. “I feel as though this scenario was in my memory files somewhere.” Kaiba’s head. “Does your memory files tell how to undo this??” XANA’s head. “They tell that I liked it!” Kaiba’s head. “Well, I do not!” The heads glitched back and forth and argued.

Vanellope gasped: at some moments when XANA’s head glitched, his screen depicted the faces of King Candy and Turbo. “I DO remember something like this happening! It was before I was transferred to the KND’s computer… The virus that tried to destroy my game. XANA has Cy-Bug code!”

“Oh, but how does that help us?” Dillon asked.

Vanellope looked at the light spire. “I wanna see if there’s a way to make this thing brighter. If I hack into the machine and increase this light’s wavelength, we might be able to beat ’em.”

“If it’s a hack job, I want in, too!” Carol cheered.

“Yeah, sorry sweetie, but this is a job for the professionals.” Vanellope smirked.

“I have just as much experience as YOU do, smarty pants!”

“Care to put it to a wager?” Vanel flicked her nose.

“Look, you girls are BOTH qualified computer experts,” Dillon said with annoyance, “so just work together on this! Vanellope, take Carol with you.”

“Fine, but if she gets in my way, I’m giving her a time out. Let’s go, Puffy Hair!” Vanellope ran to the elevator.

“At least I WASH my hair!” Carol ran after. Mr. Game-and-Watch beeped and booped and joined them.

“Let’s see if we can tear these two apart before they get done!” Dillon smirked.

“Uh-oh! They’re going to attack us, Gozaburo!” XANA said.

“Then quit standing there and fight back!” Kaiba argued.

“Fine! Then I take over for both of us!”

“Like hell you will!” Both heads switched back and forth before they shouted-

“ENOUGH!” (Play “Gigabyte Mantis” from Kingdom Hearts: Dream Drop Distance!)

Boss fight: XANAIBA

Quill shot fire from his Elementors at Kaiba’s head, but the amalgamation retaliated by whipping the three away with his tail. XANA’s head took over as the beast took flight, launching energy blades from its wings. Kodama sent fireworks up to damage the creature, then XANAIBA circled over the field to spew pixelated vomit. From that vomit came monsters that were hybrids of XANAbots and Duel Monsters. Quill shot ice from his Elementors and froze the pixelated ground along with some monsters, which Kodama then destroyed with fireworks. Dillon drew other monsters into a Shadow Shockwave and had Mario tear them up.

With that, Midna stretched her Hair Hand and grabbed XANAIBA by the leg, slamming him against the roof of the tower. Dillon hopped on the monster’s back and did a Shadow Shockwave on the beast’s wings, followed by Kodama’s Tongue Twister firework into Kaiba’s mouth. “AAAA! Thlat’s a accuralately named filawork!” he said with a twisted tongue.

Computer Room

Vanellope and Carol located the main computer terminal, set directly in front of the spire of light. “The Zoni told me this thing was called the ‘First Byway’ or something.” Vanellope said. “It’s made of the same wavelength used to create them.”

“So can we ask them to help light it up?”
“Don’t need to. I’m gonna try and turn up the frequency from inside. You stay and help me from out here.”

“Whatever you’re trying, I won’t let you!” Noah Kaiba floated up on his platform. “I’m going to derez you both- HEY!” He was trapped inside a green diamond, whose points were connected by green finger-like bars.

“I won’t let you hurt the people who are trying to help My Diamond!” Peridot yelled from below. “As of this day, they are allies of the Gem Empire!” She pulled Noah back down to her.

“It doesn’t take much to convince her.” Carol said. “Alright, my laptop’s set up. Get in!”

Vanellope glitched into it.

Immediately, the Program was put through a bullet hell screen, rapidly dodging the sea of deadly dots. “CAROL, I’m getting Undertaled here!” Vanel shouted.

“Hold your horses, Candy Hair.” Carol controlled the cursor and clicked as many bullets as she could. The way was clear for Vanellope to swiftly glitch around them, but the bullets kept flying.

Roof

Quill Ramsey kicked his Grapple Heel at XANAIBA’s leg, pulling him up to the airborne creature and launching above his head. Quill landed, stuck his Elementors in Kaiba’s nose, and shot gas. “AAAHHH-!” He glitched into XANA’s head, so Quill jumped over the front, grappled up to his keyboard chest, and opened it as he began typing. “Okay, you abomination, let’s see how you like ‘Two Girls and a-’”

“DON’T EVEN THINK ABOUT PLAYING THAT!” The kids shouted.

“Okay, okay! Then we’ll watch the Spongebob episode where Spongebob helps his grandma use the toilet.” He typed in the video and played it.

“BYAAAAAAAAAHRRRRR!” XANA shook frantically, his face completely replaced by the atrocious episode. “GET THIS GLECH OUT OF MY FAAAAACE!” He flew rampant, swooped down across the roof, and crashed into the energy spire. The mutant was shocked and blown back, his body glitching as XANA’s face appeared sideways, upside-down, and oversized. “Ho, what a nightmare. You’re gonna pay for that, little twit!”

Computer Room

After Vanellope was past the bullet hell, she ended up in a stream of powerful waves. “Carol, I think I found the wavelength!”

“You did! Vanellope, be careful in there or you’ll drown!” Carol clicked her teammate and lifted her above the waves.

“I am being careful, let me go, Carol!” Vanel shook.

“I’m just trying to keep you safe! How do you plan to brighten this thing, anyway?”

“I’ll use my Lightspeed Kick attack! Move me around so I can build up speed! That is, if your finger’s as fast as you’re worth as a replacement.”

“Oh, I’ll show YOU fast finger-swiping!” Her finger pressed firmly on the Track Pad, Carol whooshed Vanellope all around the wavy screen, her body made of pixelly light that seemed to move the waves around.

“Stop that!” Noah Kaiba tried to smack Peridot’s floating fingers away.

“Nyea!” The Gem Program flew a few feet in front with helicopter fingers as she poked him in the eyes.

“I said quit it!”

“This is what you get when you’re dubbed by 4Kids, you clod! Nyeaaaa ha ha ha ha!” Peridot evaded him.

“Real epic battle you’re having over there.” Carol remarked.

Roof

XANAIBA flew miles away and returned in attempt to ram the tower, but Midna blocked him with her giant hand, pushing against his face. Kodama launched Cheeseworks to stick his wings in place, but before the monster would take the fall, it grabbed the side of the tower and climbed up. XANAIBA raised its Virus Sword and slashed it across the ground – Quill dodged by flying up with the Elementors’ fire, Kodama used Jetpack Works, and Dillon hid in Shadow Veil.

“WOOOOOOOOO!” Kodama flew around and around and around. “INFINITE FUEL ROOOOOOCKS!”

“HELL YEEEEEAAAAH!” Quill cheered.

“YOU GUYS, we’re in the middle of a boss fight!” Dillon shouted.

XANAIBA flew level with the carefree operatives. “Oh, I completely forgot!” Kodama grinned at Quill.

“I guess we just made this a dogfight!” Quill beamed. The two rocketed at XANAIBA as Kodama about-faced and burned his human face with her rockets. “You’re looking a little gassy, Kaiba!” Quill switched the Elementors to gas and shot them at his burning head, creating an explosion. “OR MAYBE THAT WAS ME!” Quill screamed as he fell, quickly switching back to fire so he could rocket up.

“Come on, Dillon, sprout some wings and join us!” Kodama exclaimed.

“Ugh! Midna, lift me!” Dillon ordered.

“Say the magic words!”

“PLEASE!”

“My, so rude.” Midna grabbed Dillon in her giant hand and flew up to the mutant Program. Dillon kicked XANA’s face and cracked it as it glitched between King Candy, Turbo, or his own face.

“Useless outdated computer with a fat back!” Kaiba’s still-scorched head took over. “You’re hopeless!”

“And you’re blind!” Dillon blew Shadow Breath over his face. Kodama shot fireworks at his wings and Quill flew by his keyboard and looked up some cat entertainment.

“I AM THROUGH PLAYING GAMES!” XANAIBA spun around and whipped all the kids back to the tower. “As soon as I destroy you worms, I am splitting up from this piece of junk!”

Computer Room

“As you sure this isn’t hurting you?!” Carol yelled, continuously swiping her finger around the Track Pad as Vanellope’s light increased.

“This is nothing! Keep going, we’re almost there!” The wavelengths onscreen were growing more frantic with Vanellope’s speed.

Several pairs of Peridot’s fingers connected via energy links, which she used to chop Noah’s hoverpad to pieces. The boy landed on the computer’s floor and ran to stop Carol, but Peridot’s fingers tied him up. Both of them watched as her computer screen glowed brighter—“Aah!” Carol was forced to release her Track Pad when it got too hot. Vanellope continued glitchwarping, and she felt completely filled with power. “Super Duper Uber Mega Ultra Lickety Split KICK!!”

And before their eyes, the energy column shone blindingly and shook the world as it blasted to the sky. “Agh!” Vanellope zipped out of the computer, and her body was distorted, zigzaggy, and sparking.

“Vanellope, are you okay?!” Carol yelled.

“Yeah, don’t wor—ry—bout it! PERIDOT, SH—T ME!” She ran at Peridot.

“GYAH!” Peridot shot a laser and destroyed the freaky Program.

“VANELLOPE!” Carol screamed.

Noah started shaking as his pixels turned blue and morphed. “What’s happening?! AAAH! DAAAAAAAAD…” His body compressed and his pixels formed Vanellope’s shape, along with her color.

“Ahh, much better!” Vanellope smiled at her well-designed, non-ugly body, making a smirk. “Don’tcha think?”

Carol giggled and Game-and-Watch waved ‘1’ flags. (End song.)

Roof

The energy burst from the tower at full power, lighting up the sky. The kids shut their eyes from being this close to it, but the light was especially beautiful to XANA’s eyes. “The light! It’s so… so…” His screen flashed King Candy- Turbo- Cy-Bug- Kaiba- “OOOOO HOO HOO HOOOO!” His own face turned red with hearts, for the powerful beam was a fountain of candy in his dysfunctional vision. He happily skipped toward the candy as happy music played.

La la la la la la!

La la la candy time!

“What ARE YOU DOING?!” Kaiba’s head took over—exposing the deadly beam for what it was. He tried to fly away, but XANA took over and was still entranced.

*La la la la la! “OOO hoo hoo hoo, CANDYYYY!” La la la, candy-

“GET AWAY FROM THAT!” Kaiba fought to get away-
La la la-

“Are you INSANE?!”

La LA LA la la la! XANA was seconds away from having a taste. “Caaaandyyyyy-”

“NOOOOO!”

The monster exploded into thousands of tiny pixels. They rained everywhere and the kids were awed at how beautiful they were. The XANAbots fell dead on the spot, the Duel Monsters derezzed, for both of their masters have been destroyed.

Inside

The Zoni hacked the computer and immediately decreased the force of the wavelengths. The spire returned to its original form. Karkat was outraged. “THAT WAS COMPLETELY RECKLESS! DO YOU HAVE ANY IDEA HOW MUCH DAMAGE THAT COULD’VE CAUSED? YOU KNOW WHAT, I’M GLAD YOU AREN’T BECOMING CYBER GOD! I DON’T KNOW WHAT WE WERE THINKING IN GIVING A STUPID CANDY GIRL SUPREME POWER! I WOULD SOONER MAKE SIRI THE CYBER GOD, BECAUSE AT LEAST SHE KNOWS WHAT RESTAURANTS WE LIKE. I SWEAR IF I-”

“Karkat, would you do me a favor and SH8T 8P!!” A new Zoni with seven pupils in its left eye yelled. “Honestly, there is no way to please you sometimes! And I H8 when I’m this close to you on one of your tantrums. Keyword H88888888!!” >::: (

“What, 8ecause I decided to lend Majora a hand?” Vriska asked, propping her head on her hand in boredom. She had long black hair, orange horns, and a gray jacket. Her left eye had seven pupils. “Well, it would 8e a little sour if I didn’t, like we did sort of seal him in a mask for hundreds of sweeps.”

“AND NOW MAJORA IS ROTTING IN A DEMON PRISON. MUST BE A DREAM COME TRUE FOR THE LITTLE SH. DON’T PULL ANYMORE CRAP LIKE THAT, SPIDER, OR YOU’LL BE NEXT.”

“Ooo, I’m so fr8ghtened. I’m gonna go sulk in my room.” Vriska broke her Zoni connection. “Siiiigh. Well, sulking done. 8ut speaking of Majy.” Vriska smirked and brought up an image of Cheren on her computer. “He planned on killing that 8oy soon… I 8etter get ready.” :::; )

First Byway

Peridot stared at the pixel in her hand, confused. “I still don’t understand how something so small… could give me so much power.”

“Big things come in small packages.” Orvus chuckled. “You shall soon see… if you are truly willing to do this.”

“A Peridot becoming a god is quite laughable.” Peri laughed. “Still… it will be an honor to die for My Diamond. I just wish… I could see her before I do.”
“You will have the chance. For now, we must begin the process of fusing you with The Source.”

“Man, I am glaaaaaaad I’m coming home with you.” Vanellope said to Dillon. “I liked those things better when they were a hive mind, now they’re just… annoying.”

“Tell me about it.” Dillon rubbed his ears. “Who would ever wanna become a god, anyway? …” He and Midna exchanged glances. “Speaking of which.” They approached the Zoni.

“I want to know the purpose of that God Production chamber.” Midna demanded. “Are you breeding gods? How is that possible? And why was my egg—a-and the other Firstborns’—…”

“I understand you are confused, Midna.” Orvus consoled. “But you must be patient. The answers will come in time. However, I will tell you this: when all of the Firstborn Guardians have awakened, they must bring them back to this planet. It is crucial that you do.”

“Just like what Malevolous told me…” Dillon remembered.

“Now then… With those two nuisances out of the way, it’s time to move on to other matters.” Orvus smiled. “It is time to awaken the Seventh Light.”

Uno Household

Cheren Uno entered his house and haphazardly chucked his Three Sacred Treasures on the floor. “Hey, Cherry.” His mother greeted him from the couch. “Long day at work?” she commented on the aforementioned action.

“Too long, in fact.” Cheren went into the kitchen and got a soda from the fridge. “I’m not staying too long, I just need to rest my mind a little.” He drank the soda.

“I heard what happened with Leanne. That’s horrible.”

“You have no idea.” Cheren said with slight aggression. “You and your friends always had Grim bringing you back to life.”

“Well, you had Grim, too. Why not just break the vow you made him take?”

“I couldn’t do that. I want us to feel like we’re strong enough to survive without help. I want it to seem like the universe actually wants us to win.”

“But maybe Grim kept protecting all of you because the universe does want you to win. The universe wants to give you as many chances to live full, natural lives.”

“Well, we can’t.” Cheren reentered the living room. “Our lives have never been natural. Not just because we have superhuman powers… but because it’s our job to save everyone from the evil and supernatural alike. And this Apocalypse… I don’t know if there’s anything natural about it… But I don’t want Grim’s help. If I want a shred of realism in our lives… then I want us all to have one chance at all our battles. If the universe really wants us to win… then we won’t die. Not all of us, at least. …Then, by the time we do die… everyone else can live happily.”

“Cheren…” Rachel felt bad for her child. Even she doesn’t remember it being this hard… If only she could look at herself back then, remember what burden she had… if it would be any different.

Cheren’s phone rang. He read the Caller ID and answered it. “Aurora?”

“Cheren, I’m at Hendry Middle School! Get down here, quickly! There’s something you need to Hendry Middle School

Police cars and teenagers surrounded part of the building, and as Cheren fought his way through the crowds, he caught loud remarks like “WHAT THE FUCK IS THIS-” and “BRUH, DUDE, MAN!” as well as “FREAKIN’ SHIT!” Cheren made it to the front where the Gilligan Triplets and Aurora were standing. He gasped horrified at the sight everyone was yelling about.

Wendy Corduroy, Hoagie Gilligan III, and Garry Lincoln were chained to the wall, bruised and bloody. Underneath them, in black and red graffiti, was the word TREACHERY. And underneath that were seven symbols: a lion’s paw, a hammer, a pen, a whoopee cushion, a jug, a chicken, and a kangaroo. They were marked around the name of the group responsible:

Chapter 64: CP10

KND Moonbase

Wendy Corduroy, Hoagie, and Garry were at rest in the Moonbase Hospital as Melody used waterbending to treat their wounds. Haruka carefully wrapped them in bandages and had hospital gowns fitted over them. “I can’t believe this happened…” Cheren said with remorse.

“At least they aren’t dead.” Haylee replied. “Still… I wonder if other TND operatives were discovered.”

“WENDY!” Dipper Pines ran up to the copper-haired teen and stood over her bruised face. “I came as soon as I heard what happened! Wendy, speak to me!”

“Ooooooohh…” The girl moaned hoarsely.

“Man, this is terrible.” Dipper looked down in depression.

“I know.” Mabel replied. “That black eye, now no one’ll ask her to the prom.”

“I had it all planned out!” Dipper took out a notepad. “August 31st, we turn 13, get promoted to Teens Next Door, and I go on a bunch of super dangerous missions with Wendy, our bond becomes stronger over time, eventually I save her from some samurai in motorcycle gear, then we finally confess our true feelings! But now… sigh, I would just tell her right now if I knew she could hear me.”

“This looks like the room.” A voice that belonged to April Goldenweek said, leading her cousins Ib and Mary inside.

“April, who are these two?” Cheren asked.

“They’re Ib and Mary, the ones I told you about.” April answered. “I thought you knew Mary.”

“I… did?” Cheren’s mind felt foggy at that statement.

“Garry!” Ib ran up to the older man that protected her in the cursed gallery, Mary by her side.

“Uh… Ib…?” Garry’s right eye peeped open (the only eye not covered by his hair).

“Who would do something like this…” Harry whispered solemnly.
“CP10.” Corporate President Mom stated.

“Who?”

“That’s the name you said was painted on the wall, wasn’t it?!” she shouted. “I knew the Government would send those clowns after you the minute you killed Carter.”

“Tell us about them, what are they like?” Cheren ordered.

“The World Government has special units called Cipher Pols who each specialize in certain tasks, i.e. science or strategy… CP10’s specialty is assassination. None of the members’ identities are known to anyone except the World Leaders. They’re trained to master a martial art called Rokushiki.”

“I remember that!” Aurora exclaimed. “When I fought Wolf on Coruscant, he used Rokushiki and mentioned CP10. Same with Black John. …But Wolf is an alien.”

“So am I.” Mom reminded. “Coruscant has connections with Earth’s Government, that’s how outsiders like me or Giovanni can work for them. Sometimes, information about our Government leaks to Coruscant’s streets… through me.” She smirked. “If you’ve seen Rokushiki, you’ve seen only a small example of what CP10 is capable of. They have mastered all Six Powers of the art:”

“Iron Body, which makes them nearly invincible.” They pictured a shadow person standing perfectly still while another person lays punches that don’t affect. “Paper Art, making them as flexible as paper.” The shadow swiftly dodged the other shadow’s punches. “Finger Pistol, where their fingers pierce flesh like a bullet.” They pictured the first shadow person piercing his assaulter in the neck. “Moon Walk, the art of jumping in the air.” The shadow kicked his legs several times and floated higher. “Shave, to move at lightspeed.” The shadow zipped place to place in milliseconds. “And Tempest Kick, to cut the very air with your legs.” The shadow spun his leg, sent a shockwave through the air, and chopped down some buildings.

“Ordinarily, they’re only called to handle special, secret assignments.” Mom continued. “However, the Leaders didn’t want to send them against the KND and create a disturbance. Judging by what happened, it seems that order is out the window. You’re too far in the Twenty Keys Quest AND you killed two Corporate Presidents. If CP10 left their signature, they must be trying to warn you. Or challenge you.”

“I’m glad they didn’t, but why didn’t CP10 just… kill them?” Cheren asked with a tinge in his heart.

“CP10 doesn’t like easy prey… nor do they like a person’s death to be fast and painless. Unless they were specifically ordered to kill, they’ll take their time.”

“The bottom line is that they’re twisted.” Aurora stated. “And it sounds like we’ll really need to fight them.”

“They can’t be all they’re hyped to be.” Cheren said. “They can’t be as strong as the World Leaders, or Viridi, or Majora.”

“Well, none of US fought battles like you, Sheila, or Nebula!”

“My point is, while we shouldn’t underestimate them, we shouldn’t talk them up, either. Our experiences are different from theirs. We have an advantage!” Cheren grinned confidently. “Even their 10 members can’t fight the entire Kids Next Door!”
“They have seven members.” Mom corrected. “You might have an advantage in numbers, but they can easily pick you off a few at a time. They wouldn’t just show up and fight you in broad daylight.”

“Then we need to caution all operatives to stay together and be on their guards. There’s no telling who they’ll aim for next. …Now that we’re talking about it, Mom, how come Aunt Morgan didn’t send CP10 after you?”

“Because she wasn’t ‘special’ enough for them.” Artie remarked.

“Don’t act like you’re worth a challenge either!” Mom shouted.

Azultown, Brazil; night

“Ahh, all finished!” Marine brushed the sweat off her forehead after putting the final touches on the hovering speedboat she was constructing. “’ere’s your water-air bike, Mr. Guy!” She presented the bike to the man in the green jacket, known as Exposition Guy. “Complete with GPS, warning lights, and immune to rust!”

“Gee, thanks, Marine!” The guy beamed as he climbed on the craft. “I run around so much, I end up in the most random places! This bike is gonna help a ton. See you on down the road!” He sped off.

“Anytime, mate!” Marine raised her wrench proudly. “Well, Lucci, I’m closin’ up for the night.” She called to her hammer-wielding coworker. “Put that hammer back when yer done playing with it!”

“Aye-aye, Captain! Coo-kachoo!” Lucci’s pigeon, Hattori cawed.

Marine walked the Azultown streets alone. Her house was located all the way across town from the seaside shipyard, but Marine always enjoyed a good venture. When Marine felt her shorts pocket—something was missing. “Uh-oh! I left me wallet at the shipyard! I hope Lucci doesn’t take it and go out clubbing.”

So she raced back to the shipyard and saw Hattori flying above in circles, going “Coo-kachoo! Coo-kachoo!”

“Good, he hasn’t left yet.” Marine walked around the piles of junk to the area where Hattori was circling. “’ey, Lucci, you seen my…?”

Her employee’s legs were arched over a pile, and when Marine looked over to see the rest of his body, she gasped horrified. “Lucci! What in the devil’s name…”

“It was to call you back here.” A dark, quiet voice said from behind.

“Eh??” Marine turned around. Hattori fled the area as the raccoon stood face-to-face with a man in a dark cloak and lion’s mask.

“Golden-Fist Marine.” The man raised the bounty poster. “International criminal worth 8 million. We’ve been waiting for the green light to hunt you down.”

“Ain’t it just annoying when them red lights never change?” Marine smirked. “That’s why I took a life at sea. No red lights, no stop signs, I’m just free!”

“Freedom has a price.” Another person stood on a tall pile of junk. She had a woman’s voice and was wearing a blue Rainbow Monkey mask. "There is a law that must be followed. And as far as the Government is concerned, you are guilty."

"Guilty of what? My ships are the best, AND I give people correct change!"

"It’s not enough to clean up your mess!" A shorter man in a scarecrow mask with a pointy nose landed behind her and spoke with a peppy voice. "You’re a pirate, Miss Raccoon! I hate to bop someone of your craftsmanship, but rules and regulations are important!"

"Yeah, but those same rules said you had to keep your gloves on in a boxing match." Marine pulled off her work gloves. "We’re in my town, so I make the rules around here. HEYEAH!" She shot a sudden Light Fist at the short man, turned her legs golden, and zipped behind the lion-masked man to throw a Light Kick. (Play “Dark Clouds” from Naruto: Shippuden!)

Marine made a break for the town and yelled back, “But if you don’t mind, I wanna take this to the roofs! Catch me if ya can!” She spun her tail like a helicopter and made a terrific leap to the sky, aiming to set foot on one of the skyscrapers. “Heh!” she breathed after doing so—her foot stepped on a wire. “What?!" A series of catapults from her left and right launched barrels with chi-block symbols. “Oi, foul play!” Marine lit her legs golden and jumped with lightspeed, landing on a higher roof—“AAAH!” her foot was snatched in a lasso that whipped down and bashed her against the side of the building, letting Marine hang.

“We were prepared in case you would try and run.” Another girl wearing a bunny mask said, standing on the edge of the roof. “We have traps set up all over the city.” The agent leapt off and kicked both feet down to send Marine plummeting to the ground.

“Grrrr!” Marine spun her tail to soften her landing, glaring up at Rabbit Mask and punching two Light Fists up. She destroyed the edge she was on, but Rabbit Mask jumped and seemed to fly in the air.

“CAAAAW!” Marine saw an eagle flying in her direction, ready to stab with its talons, but she easily punched the bird away with a Light Fist. The eagle turned into another hooded figure upon hitting the ground, but when it got up, he was revealed to have a kangaroo mask. Marine’s ears perked, hearing a faint sound behind her. She turned and saw a small black object flinging from across town. Marine realized it was Scarecrow Mask and jumped high before he could kick her—Kangaroo Mask zipped up and punched her from behind, flying Marine across several blocks.

The raccoon recovered and was surrounded by Lion Mask, Monkey Mask, and Rabbit Mask.
“Sigh, ’guess a gal won’t be getting her sleep tonight.” Marine lit her fists gold and did a fist-palm, shining with more power as she forced columns of light to sprout up around her. “But I’m more than just a Golden Fist, you know!” She directed the light at the agents, but they each dodged with Shave, and Lion Mask appeared behind to stab a Finger Pistol. Marine swiftly dodged and kicked up at his mask, knocking the man a few feet.

That’s when a new agent with a hamster mask flew overhead and swung a Tempest Kick, but Marine blocked it with a Light Slice from her leg. She punched Light Spheres, but the agent evaded with timed Moon Walks. Kangaroo Mask became an actual kangaroo, hopping in front of Marine and throwing quick punches. Marine swiftly evaded and kicked at his stomach, but the kangaroo jumped and kicked her in the face. Marine bounced back on her feet, then heard rapid footsteps behind her. She turned to see another hooded figure with large chicken feet dash to her.
“BAGAAAAWK!”

Marine ducked the Tempest Kick, then Chicken Mask punched its yellow-feathered fists to attack her. Marine dodged to its side and punched, but the chicken used Iron Body and only budge a few inches. He flapped his wings and leapt back as Marine was surrounded by all seven agents. “I see you fellas have a thing for animals. Except Scarecrow Mask there. He must hate birds. But you forget that I already am an animal! I’m prime, pureblood Mobian.” She kicked off her sandals. “And I reckon it’s time to go Primal on your arses.”

Marine got on all fours, her fur stood on end, and invisible energy burned around her. Her pupils retracted and her fangs bared. Fast as light—she zipped behind Monkey Mask and bit her in the hip—she bit Scarecrow in the arm—then she went for Rabbit Mask’s leg, but she bit something metal through the cloak that resulted in gas to Marine’s mouth. “Always keep a spare rodent repellent strapped to your leg.” Rabbit lifted her cloak to show the small metal container on her leg. During Marine’s coughing fit, she kicked the raccoon two blocks down. “Especially when you hang around these rodents.”

“ROWWWL!” Marine was back on all fours, scowling like a beast with rabies as she pranced toward her prey.

“CP10, Seven Stars Combo Attack!” Lion Mask commanded.

“Iron Body, BAGAWK!” Chicken Mask got in front to be the first of Marine’s dinner, but her fangs were dented when trying to punch the Iron Body. Chicken Mask jumped away and-“SHAVE!” Rabbit Mask zipped around Marine from every direction, the Primal Raccoon whipping every which way in attempt to spot her, but the act only made the overgrown rodent dizzy.

“Paper Art.” Hamster Mask glided under Marine like a magic carpet, and without warning kicked upside the chin to propel her upward.

“Moon Walk!” Scarecrow Mask jumped around the air like an Italian plumber, and once above Marine, he kicked her to the ground diagonally.

“Finger Pistol!” Kangaroo Mask pierced her in the stomach.

“Tempest Kick!” Monkey Mask slashed airwaves at a nearby building, cutting a square segment off that toppled down and crushed Marine.

“RAAAAH!” Marine burst out of the trap and zipped around to kick the six assassins, who only winced a little from the blows, then Marine returned to the center, conjured six Light Spheres that orbited her like a planet, and blasted them in the faces of each masked member. The assassins fell down, so Marine turned her ravenous eyes toward the Lion Mask.

“You make yourself out to be a predator... but your natural instincts have long been soiled by the piles of rum bottles you continuously consume. You are less of a predator than the filthy members of your family who rummage around the trash. You don’t have what it takes to face a real predator... A predator like me!” Lion Mask was on all fours, and his hands morphed into large sharp claws that scratched the street.

The lion snarled and pounced on Marine, the two rolling across the ground before the raccoon kicked him off. They were back on their paws as they darted at each other, the lion slicing his claws at her face while Marine rapidly punched him in the chest. Eventually, both animals grabbed each other’s arms, Marine’s narrowed blue eyes peering at the sharp green eyes behind the lion mask. The lion’s claws pierced the raccoon’s arms, forcing Marine to release.

“Now to complete the combination.” Lion planted both fists against Marine’s chest. “By combining all the force points for the Six Powers, I release the Six King Gun!” A powerful beam of energy burst from his fists and pierced Marine’s chest. No gaping hole was left in the spot where it pierced, but the blow rendered Marine weak. Her Primal features and the energy around her vanished as the former pirate captain fell on her back, defeated.

Lion Mask’s features reverted into their human form as the seven assassins approached Marine. “That will be all tonight. Number 4, carry Marine to the base and have her in chi-blocks. It won’t be long until the Kids Next Door will want to come after us... and the Seven Lights by their side. The rest of us will return to our posts until the next assignment.”

Kangaroo Mask turned into a pterodactyl, grabbed Marine in his talons, and soared across the ocean. The other six agents scattered. Elijah Frantic had been watching from a bar close by. “Oh no… I better call Sheila.” (End song.)

Azultown, the next morning

Sector V received the call from Sheila’s father the next morning and flew to her hometown as soon as possible. They landed in the shipyard where Marine had constructed the Sunny Day. The pirate ship that had sailed them around the world was still docked where they left it. “Coo-kachoo, coo-kachoo!” A pigeon was circling over an area.

“MUUUM?” Sheila yelled as they stepped over the piles of junk. “’EY, MUM! You didn’t pass out in the spilled wine again, did ya?”

“Oh yeah, it’s the mute guy that works with Marine.” Chris recognized. “Wasn’t his name Lucy?”

“LUCY, WAKE UP!” Sheila PUNCHED him in the stomach and startled the man awake. His right eye shot open, but his left ached too much to do the same.

“Probably not the alarm he was expecting.” Chris said sheepishly.

Mr. Pigeon Man, what happened? Kirie signed.

“Coo-oo! Last night, I was ambushed by some strange men in masks!” Hattori answered for his master. “They bopped me out clean and went after Marine.”

That’s mean!

“Do you remember what these men looked like?” Haruka asked.

“I know one wore a lion mask, another had a scarecrow, and one with a Rainbow Monkey mask. Other than that, they dressed in black coats. I didn’t see any part of their bodies, coo-kachoo.”

“It’s gotta be CP10.” Chris glared. “They must’ve went after Marine because they knew her daughter is a Light.”

“Well, that’s dirty fighting if I ever saw it!” Sheila fist-palmed.

“Yeah, this is a new low even for the Government.” Harry stated. “Attacking innocent people just to scare us, they’re pathetic.”
“Wait, look at this.” Haylee picked up a wanted poster of Marine off the ground.

“Ahhh. Me mum in her glory days.” Sheila smiled proudly.

“I know, but think about it: your mom was a notorious pirate who fought with the Government, and she’s still wanted. Maybe CP10 used that as an excuse to capture her.”

“So they’re using just cause to go after people.” Artie figured. “Like Hoagie, Wendy, and Garry being TND spies.”

“Just cause doesn’t matter.” Chris said. “They’ll want to attack the Seven Lights eventually. Why don’t they just leave these people alone and fight us already?”

“They’re probably trying to bait us this way.” Harry reasoned. “So unless something else happens, we can assume they’re only targeting spies or people on their wanted list.”

“But both Cheren and Kimaya killed a Corporate President.” Aurora argued. “Obviously, they’ll be after them, too.”

“Dillon’s dad is on the wanted list, too!” Mason remembered. “What if he gets attacked?”

“We’ll have to expect the worst. Let’s go back to the treehouse and think up a plan.”

Kirie skipped up to Lucci and handed him a green Rainbow Monkey. If you put Hugged For Comfort After Being Beat By A Bully Rainbow Monkey over your eye, it softens the wound. I thought you would like it because he’s the same color as your eyes! You can keep him. Bye-bye, Mr. Lucy! She waved and skipped away. Lucci stared at the stuffed green toy.

Great Clock

“Aww, I can’t believe we’re already leaving.” Eddy Flores of Sector Q complained as the operatives boarded the R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N.. “We didn’t get to fight or nothing!”

“At least Vanellope is coming home with us.” Dillon said. “And we got rid of a Corporate President and one of Gnik’s guys.”

“Do not return home just yet, children.” Orvus told them. “You must find the Seventh Light and bring her back to Earth. My Zoni will guide you.”

“So, what’re we gonna do when we get home?” Bill asked perkily. “Hit the soda bar? I can drink five cans of Silver Flurp at once!”

“Heh heh, try and beat Mason.” Dillon chuckled. His eyes widened. They all glanced at him.

“YOU’RE NOT COMING WITH US!!” They screamed at the humanoid demon.

“Awww, whyyyyy? What happened to accepting all kids no matter who they are?”

“Yeah, Dillon, what’s your deal with this kid?” Vanellope asked.

“He attacked Moonbase and killed an innocent girl! This guy isn’t a kid, he’s nuts!”

“Wow, I’ve been called a Dorito, but nuts?” He transformed into Mr. Peanut (which didn’t look much different from his triangle form).

“Vanellope, let’s go. I’ll tell you about our adventures on the way.”
Miyuki was the last one to enter the train, but stood back when Bill spoke to her. “Disappointed we didn’t learn anything, did we? Wanted to see what’s behind that door?” Miyuki was silent. “I’ll tell you one thing… it’s not good. You won’t survive. I don’t think anyone will. I wouldn’t survive either if I wasn’t on the winning team. But I could protect you.” Bill smiled and put a hand on his shoulder. “I could protect all your friends… All you have to do is submit loyalty to me. I’d lend you my trading cards, let you in my bedroom… and tell you all the deepest secrets of the universe.”

“…You’d tell me anything… You know everything…”

“I do.” He nodded. “And I really would.”

“…You don’t know jack compared to The Chronicler.” Miyuki walked forward and entered the R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N.. With the Zoni leading the spacecraft, Bill watched as they took off.

“…” Bill felt a tinge in his heart at that remark. He turned away and had a smug scowl. “Screw you.” He reentered the Great Clock.

Cleveland Milk Bar

Around noon on the same day, the team of Nolan, Yuki, and Crystal paid a visit to the Milk Bar, where they occupied a table. “Well, friends,” Nolan raised his jug of chocolate milk, “here’s to a night’s work collecting 50 Riddler Trophies.”

“May we never have to backtrack again,” Yuki raised his jug, “and continue our adventure tonight.” He drank.

“So Doctor Strange is in a magic city called Magnostadt.” Crystal recalled. “What do you suppose he’s doing there?”

“Whatever it is, it’s top secret.” Nolan said as he looked at his laptop. “He has a profile on the Government’s website, but it doesn’t tell anything on his background or the work he’s doing. And all Dr. Riddles was able to send us was a map of the city and how to find where he’s hiding. Still, we might be walking into something big, so we’ll have to walk in with our A-game on.”

“Well, if it isn’t Nolan and the Night Trio!” They were approached by a large red-haired man in a teal shirt and white apron. “I haven’t seen you in a while.”

“Hey, Lime Rickey.” Nolan waved. “Yeah, it’s been a real rough month. Don’t you miss the days when all our friends could come to your bar, chill, and drown ourselves in sodium?”

“Those were the times.” Rickey looked up reflectively. “But that’s why I opened a Milk Bar… It isn’t kiddy like soda, and it’s enjoyable for adults who don’t wanna poison their selves with alcohol, ya know?”

“Come to think of it, shouldn’t this milk be contaminated with Lazarus?!” Crystal realized.

“I thought they were only poisoning people in Kentucky?” Yuki said.

“We retrieved all the shipments, anyway.” Nolan reminded. “Besides, my scanners aren’t picking up any foreign ingredients in this milk.”

“That’s the beauty of owning a family farm.” Rickey smiled. “You can sell your own milk and don’t have to let people trash it. What’re you three planning, anyway?”

“Top secret infiltration mission, as always.”
“Sticking it to the man, you know how it is.” Yuki winked.

“Okay, don’t get arrested.” Rickey laughed before going to another table.

The three heroes took a sip of their milk. Crystal stared at her half-empty glass and swished it.

“You ever wonder what the Government’s deal is?”

“I dunno.” Yuki shrugged. “What deal does any corrupt bastard have?”

“Well, it can’t be just a matter of being power-hungry. Why are they against the Kids Next Door, why did they kill Nigel?”

“It’s not the Kids Next Door they hate, it’s the Twenty Keys Prophecy.” Nolan replied. “I keep updated with the KND’s news and that’s what’s up.”

“Well, knowing my daughter is one of the Lights, I wanna hear their story.” Yuki stated. “If finding the Keys is supposed to stop the Apocalypse, why are they trying to stop them?”

“It may not be long ’til we find out. After Kimaya, there’s only one Light left. Whoever that person is… after they’re found, anything could happen.”

Pokitaru

“HAKUNA MATATA!” Ratchet, Drake, and Zach raised coconut cups. “Whaaaat a wonderful phraaaaase!”

“Philosophyyyy!” Drake followed.

“It means no worries!” Maddy joined. “For the rest of your daaaayys! …” She looked at Shade, who was silent.

“I don’t wanna.” She blushed.

“You stalked me all these years, you should know how it goes!”

“Sigh, fine. I found my aroma lacked a certain appeal, I could clear the savannah after every—I don’t wanna sing this part!”

“Do iiiiit.” Zach stated.

“Ugh! I was ashamed, wanted to change my name, because I farted a lot—oh God!”

“Shade, it happens to everyone.” Maddy said—everybody burst into laughter.

“I did not!” Shade flushed horrendously. “Ergh! Alright, time to get back to training. Rayleigh?”

“AAAAH HA HA HA!” The elder cracked up and spilled some rum. “I’m glad this universe appreciates humor the same way mine does!”

“Not that my sense of humor isn’t tops, but we’re a little pressed for time.” Shade stated. “By my calculations, it’s May 18th on Planet Earth. The Apocalypse is nearly two weeks away.”

“And Maddy has made substantial progress in the time she’s been here.”
“Yeah, Shade!” Maddy turned her fist Armament without effort. “It’s as easy as a waterbender splashing in a kids’ pool.”

“You weren’t saying that two days ago. And you’re still pretty rusty in Observation Haki. We really need to start pushing you.”

“Okay, okay. But after one more verse!”

“Hakuna Matata!” the group sang, much to Shade’s dismay. “What a wonderful phraaaase!”

“HAKUNA MATATA!” Dr. Nefarious jumped out of the bushes. “It’s a WONDERFUL daaaaaay!”

They were all gaping and looked as if their hearts jumped out of their bodies. “What? Did I say it wrong? Oh wait, it’s ‘Hakuna Matataaaaa! Ain’t no action phraaaase-’ or something, I dunno.” Lawrence was behind him, shaking his head in disbelief. “So what are we all talking about; games, boys? Maddy, I saw you write in your diary how you wanted to sleep on Chris’s chest again. He musta had real comfy abs, right?” She blushed at the statement. “No?” He looked around at the glaring group.

“Excuse me.” Rayleigh approached him from the side. “We’re having a training session. Can I help you?”

“Oh, don’t let me interrupt your campsite musical.” Nefarious walked away casually. “I was just wondering if-!!” He whipped around and SHOT Rayleigh in the head with a laser.

The teacher flew back and hit the ground. “RAYLEIGH!” Maddy and Shade ran over. Where there should’ve been a wound in his head, there was a crack. And instead of blood, his body sparked, and then transformed into a Zoni that sparked from the wound. “Buzzzzzz!”

“He was a Zoni all along?!” Shade exclaimed.

“I never would’ve guessed!” Nefarious shot Maddy with an anti-gravity gun, then activated his rocket shoes as he carried her off. “BRING IT AROUND!”

“Bwah hah ha ha!” A giant saucer with four spider-like legs came up from over a mountain. “Lord Vorselon has returned, at the very moment you least expected!”

“Don’t worry, Maddy, we’ll resume your training aboard our vessel.” Nefarious smirked. “So, that old human was a robot in disguise. This story’s starting to have more twists than even Shyamalan can take a swing at.”

“You don’t know the half of it!” Maddy gripped her neck and pulled the mask off. “It’s actually me, Zach!”

“What?!! If you’re not Maddy, then Maddy is…!”

He looked back down to see Zach yank off his mask and reveal to be Maddy. “But that’s still in my room! AH, forget it! Lock this boy in the brig, YOU’RE next!” Nefarious had the gravity bubble float into the saucer before shooting down to Maddy.

Ratchet chucked grenades at the robot while Maddy dodged, made a whistle, and jumped onto Fluzzard. “I’m coming, Zach, just hang in there!” She swooped down and caught Shade in Fluzzard’s talons. “Shade, you just-”

“Hang on here, got it!”

Nefarious tried to shoot them, but Ratchet bashed the gun out of his hand with his OmniWrench, then hit Nefarious in the head. “No! CATCH her, Vorselon!”

“Maddy, I sense the cockpit in the top middle!” Shade yelled.

“That’s better than the bottom middle! Here we go!” (Play “Boss A” from Star Fox 64!)

Boss fight: Saucer Vorselon

The saucer blasted lasers from satellites on its bottom, but Fluzzard dodged them with barrel rolls as they flew closer. Ships were sent at the colorful bird, so Shade broke out of Fluzzard’s talons, got on his back and threw punches at the ships that swooped by, her strong fists causing them to drive unstably for a minute. Fluzzard flapped above the ship’s roof, where they had view of the pointed tower that was the… control center.

“Enemy shields analyzed!” Maddy yelled.

“You can analyze his shields?” Shade asked.

“No, but if we’re doing Star Fox, you gotta add the reference.”

Satellites on the roof blasted lasers at them, so the girls decided to hop off and let Fluzzard fly to safety. Maddy and Shade withstood the wind and kept firm on the roof, and the satellites ceased fire on them. However, mini turrets opened on the roof to shoot them, but Shade quickly dodged to and broke each turret with one punch. “Maddy, let’s get rid of the satellites!” The two split up in different directions to go after the laser satellites, using Observation Haki to sense where turrets would appear.

“Lord Vorselon uses his Spinning Disk Attack!” Vorselon quickly spun the saucer in attempt to shake them off, forcing the girls to grab the roof. The saucer stopped when Vorselon became dizzy, so they resumed running to the satellites, climbing them, and using their strong fists to break the antennas. “Graaah! Lord Vorselon deems this unacceptable! I will trap you in my shock dome!” A huge glass dome covered the roof, and several small antennas emerged and connected via shock beams.

“AAAAAAHH!” Maddy and Shade were binded in place. The electricity wasn’t too painful, but they couldn’t muster the strength to move.

“We have to get up there and save them somehow!” Ratchet yelled.

“My harpoon doesn’t reach that high!” Drake replied.

Ratchet’s wristwatch started blinking. He looked up to his right with a shining grin. “No, but she does! APHELION!”
“Ratchet!” The Lombax’s shiny blue spacecraft soared in from the sky. “Oh, I’m terribly sorry! I would have gotten here sooner, but Mom’s Ship Garage was having a sale and I couldn’t pass up the opportunity to float around and find something I want.”

“All in the past, Aphelion.” Ratchet hopped onto his ship while Drake took the roof. “Let’s shoot down those satellites!” They boosted up to the underside of the saucer, evading the lasers as Drake shot his harpoon through the windshields of enemy ships. Ratchet rapidly blasted Aphelion’s lasers and destroyed the four bottom satellites one by one. “Now we need to find a way in.”

“I see a hatch over there!” Drake shot his harpoon at a square segment with a handle on it, yanking the hatch off. Ratchet flew underneath so the human could jump in there. Drake made his way through a narrow tunnel where he had to duck or jump horizontal lasers. He stabbed his harpoon into any wire socket he came across, then eventually found a room containing glass electrical pipes. Drake reached into his pocket and got some M.A.R.B.L.E.s. “I really should start using these more.” He chucked the bombs in and made a break for it when the explosions resulted.

The electrical binds disabled, freeing Maddy and Shade. They saw Fluzzard flying around outside, looking for a way through the dome. The two ran up to it, but Shade’s strength and Maddy’s Armament couldn’t pierce the glass. Ratchet and Drake flew up to see the girls trapped. “WATCH OUT!” Ratchet yelled before shooting a bomb at the dome and creating a huge crack.

“HUH!” Shade punched it open as she and Maddy dropped down to Fluzzard.

“NOOO! I just had that cleaned! Lord Vorselon will make you pay!” The saucer continued blasting them with smaller turrets and sent missiles. Fluzzard maneuvered expertly and dove toward the cockpit.

Maddy and Shade jumped off to grab the side of the glass, seeing Vorselon inside the small chamber as they punched the glass repeatedly. “Don’t you wanna fight us with your own strength?!” Maddy shouted.

“Lord Vorselon is a one-eyed fish in a robot suit! He could not use his own strength if he wanted to!” Vorselon spun the saucer around in attempt to throw the girls off, but they held tight.

“Ratchet, I have analyzed the fortress, and it seems to be a collection of parts linked together.”
Aphelion reported. “The structure would come apart if the bolts were loosened.”

“Aphelion, I’m putting you on autopilot. Drake, cover me from the air!” Ratchet jumped out of the ship and dove toward the saucer’s roof, maneuvering around the missiles in midair. Ratchet made land and ran to each large bolt to unscrew it with his OmniWrench. Drake used his harpoon to shoot missiles aimed at him, and when Ratchet finished unscrewing a set of bolts, he had to jump to the stable ground before that part of the ship collapsed. Little by little, the central tower was becoming more exposed. The minute Ratchet detached the last bolt, the remainder of the outer circle fell. The Lombax returned to his ship and the girls on Fluzzard.

“Initiate Coward Maneuver 57B!” Vorselon’s rocket swerved around and to the ground. The cockpit launched itself to part of the fallen saucer, where a giant humanoid robot sprouted up and captured the cockpit on the head. “Catch me if you can, little girl! Or your brother’s gonna become my Gingerbread Man!” The robot was wearing a glass backpack containing Zach.

Fluzzard dove down as the robot ran through the jungle, launching missiles at its pursuers. The Loftwing kept behind the robot, dodging the jungle trees that fell as well as the endless missiles.
Maddy and Shade drew steadily closer to the backpack, and once they were there, Fluzzard flew up and clutched the top of the pack in his talons. The bird forcefully flapped up, pulled, and Zach’s prison popped off, Fluzzard dropping it and breaking the glass.

The robot skidded to a halt and about-faced. “Lord Vorselon is not through with you, yet! You may have saved your brother, but Lord Vorselon will continue to fight! Lord Vorselon is forever! Lord Vorselon is-!” A silver train flew down from the sky and shattered the cockpit before crashing haphazardly in the jungle. (End song.)

Lord Vorselon’s robot was destroyed, along with his suit. His green one-eyed fish head flopped on the ground next to the crashed train. “Hrm… Lord Vorselon did not see this coming. Lord Vorselon will condemn this train as Lord Vorselon sees fit. Lord Vorselon, Lord Vorselon-!” Dillon hopped out and squished the fish like a bug.

“Ew! Well, that ruins these shoes…” He looked up. “Maddy, is that you?!”

“Dillon?” Maddy called, riding Fluzzard.

“Well, look who decided to join us!” Drake exclaimed from Aphelion.

“DRAAAAAAKE!” Sector Q trampled Dillon.

“GUUUUUUUYYS!” Drake jumped to the ground and embraced in his teammates’ hugs.

“WHERE WERE YOOUUUU!” Quill cried.

“ABDUC TED BY ALIEEEEENS!” Drake cried back. And all five boys cried to the sky.

“Dillon, how did you all find us?” Maddy asked after landing Fluzzard.

“Those Zoni things brought us. It was all after we went on a mission to save Vanellope.”

“HEY, you’re the girl with the round head!” Vanellope glitched over. “So, did Dillon give you my message? Did you find The Disbanded?”

“Yes, and I was delayed my return to Earth, thanks a lot.” Maddy glared.

“Well, you did learn Haki.” Shade reminded.

“Who’re you?” Dillon asked.

“Shade the Echidna. I’m from the Netherverse.”

“She tried to kill me once.” said Maddy.

“That was an act.”

“Okay, that aside, the Zoni wanted us to bring you home.” Dillon stated. “They said you were the Seventh Light. Are you?”

“I better be, otherwise what was the point of all this? But Dillon, there’s something I wanna show you.”

George’s cave

“AAAAAAAAAAHHHHHHH!” George King was still consumed with unimaginable pain, his veins bulging from the Octogan on his forehead.

“GEORGE?!” Miyuki was horrified at the sight.

“He saved us from Nefarious awhile ago and had that thing on his forehead.” Maddy replied.

“They said it’s an Octogan.”

“An Octogan?” Dillon was familiar with that term.

“Actually, it’s only the pupil of an Octogan.” A man’s voice said. They whipped around as a caped man with a scepter entered the cave.

“Mr. King?”

Jagar approached his son, but didn’t seem the slightest bit mortified at George’s current state. “When George was three years old, I journeyed to the Negaverse and found one of the two Octogan. Its power was too much even for me… so I cut off its pupil. I attached it to George because I thought his developing body would allow it to adapt with him. If we could use the Octogan’s power… we might have a chance.”

“Why would you put your son through this?!” Ratchet yelled. “Look at what’s happening to him!”

“I thought my chi-blocking headband could contain the Octogan’s power and let it get comfortable with George. I thought it was working. Even with the chi-blocks on, George was excellent at Future Sight. Since I can’t see the Octogan in my own Vision, I also thought George could help me break that block.”

“Well, he’s in pain!” Dillon stated. “You have to cut that thing off him!”

“I will.” Jagar raised his Chrono Staff. “But perhaps it’s best you forget what you saw here.” With a sudden blinding FLASH, Jagar, George, and the Zoni were all gone.

The kids rubbed their eyes. “Why are we in this cave?” Dillon asked.

“I dunno…” Maddy replied. “If you’re taking me back to Earth, why are we waiting around?!”

“I thought you forgot your makeup or something.” Ratchet said. “Come to think of it, we lost sight of Nefarious after that battle.”

“I say we get goin’ before he comes back.” Drake suggested.

“No trading my baby!!” Chimney yelped.

“Love you too, Ratchet.” remarked Aphelion.

“Wait, we never found Ratchet’s friend, did we?” Maddy asked.

“It’s okay, Maddy.” Ratchet assured. “You can head home if you want. I’ll get Clank back from Nefarious somehow.”

“His name’s Clank?” Vanellope questioned.

“Yeah. Small robot, kinda looks like a backpack… Here’s a picture.” Ratchet projected a hologram from his wristwatch of the robot.

Vanellope gaped. “That’s Orvus!”

“Who?”

“It’s the robot I found in Cyberspace, the Zoni wanted me to carry him!”

“YOU KNOW WHERE CLANK IS?!”

“Y-Yeah, yeah! Up in the Great Clock!” She pointed upward.

“Ratchet, the Great Clock is located around Galactic Coordinate 000.” Aphelion said. “It is in the center of the universe… give or take 50 feet.”

“If he’s really at the Great Clock, I’m heading there now.” Ratchet hopped in his ship. “I’ll see you guys later. It was fun traveling with you three.”

“Good-bye, Ratchet.” Maddy waved. “Thanks for the lift!”

Ratchet smiled and waved as his ship lifted high off the ground and took off for the stars. “Well… our next stop is home.” Dillon said. “Shall we?”

“Definitely.” Maddy approved.

After the R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. left the planet’s atmosphere, Dr. Nefarious’s Star Train deactivated its cloaking function. “Are we not going to pursue them, Sir?” Lawrence asked.

“We don’t need to catch her just yet. If they are taking Maddy home, it is only a matter of time until she will find her Poneglyph. Very soon, her secret will be revealed to us.” He rubbed his hands evilly. “And we’re going to seize her the moment she does!” He pressed a button.

At the Murphy House, Sparky was fast asleep in his towel basket. The puppy’s eyes sparked to life upon his creator’s signal, and a satellite extracted on his head as he searched for Maddy’s location.

KND Moonbase

The R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. parked outside the hangar as the many passengers disembarked. “HOLAAAA!” Chimney called to her teammates waiting on the bridge. “Team Rescue Vanel-chan has RETURNED, nakama!”

Vanellope glitched in. “Vanellope von Schweetz is BACK in town!”

“You guys made it back!” Cheren beamed. “Vanellope!”

“She’s not the only one.” Dillon said excitedly. “Presenting the newly-rescued Maddy, Zachary, Drake, and… some red hedgehog!”

“Echidna.” Shade glared.

“MADDY!” Mocha ran up to greet her friend, shaking the floor with her giant steps. “You’re finally back from space!”

“MOCHA!” Maddy fist-pumped. “What’s up, my bestest gigantis?”

“You know the answer to that! Low five!” Mocha held her hand down. Maddy dealt the high five with an Armament hand. “Yow! I actually kinda felt that…”

“Armament Haki!” Maddy hardened both fists. “You won’t be beating me now!”

“Uh, guess again.” Mocha turned her fists Armament. “I learned it from the Amazons two months ago!”

“And you never told me?!”

“I didn’t want you to feel behind.” Mocha blushed.

“So, did anything exciting happen while we were gone?” Dillon asked Cheren with slight sarcasm, given the last surprises in the past couple days.

“Um… unfortunately, yes.”

Cheren brought them to the medical room, where Dipper was still by Wendy’s side and Ib and Mary by Garry’s side. “CP10?” Dillon repeated.

“They’re top assassins who work for the Government. And last night, we think they attacked Sheila’s mom. They went down there this morning and Marine was gone.”

“They also think that, with the Seven Lights Quest almost finished,” April followed, “the Government is trying to scare us.”

“But CP10 shouldn’t be allowed to attack somebody without just cause.” Cheren mentioned. “At least… that’s what we hope. Who knows how long that’ll last.”

“Well, we can’t stand around and let them hurt people.” Dillon stated. “We need to get down to Earth and be ready to stop them if they show up.”

“That’s what Sector V and the others are doing right now. You should probably go down there and join ‘em. Given these last two scenarios, they could attack at any time…”

Rainbows Factory (and 3, 2, 1…)

Production was flowing peacefully at the colorful factory and business was successful. Leslie Meijer, the company president’s secretary, smiled as she filled a cup of coffee. She wore her usual red attire and her blonde hair was as shiny as her positive mood. “Hello, Miss Leslie!” The orange-haired scientist, Dan greeted perkily, his puffy mustache flapping with his mouth. “Wonderful weather today, eh?”

“Yes, I agree.” Leslie sipped her coffee. “Any new inventions in the works, you two?”

“Ve are developing ein human-to-toy mind-reader!” Stan, Dan’s black-haired partner, held up a small helmet with antennas taped. “So children can see what ze toys are thinking! Look!” He put the little helmet on his head and held up a dark-blue Rainbow Monkey with a mustache. “Hello, Rainbow Monkey! My name is Stan!”

“I am not a Rainbow Monkey, I’m Mr. Mogul!” The talking toy shook. “Now put me back in my real body!”

“Well, good luck to you two.” Leslie chuckled. “I’m going to bring President Sanban her coffee.”

The assistant carried a cup to the president’s office, knocking on the door softly. “Miss Sanban? Kuki? I brought you your-” She entered the office and saw her boss passed out on the desk. “…
Miss Sanban?” Leslie approached. There was a spilled cup of coffee. Leslie reached down and felt Kuki’s neck… and she dropped her own cup as it shattered.

Outside

The factory was surrounded by police cars and GUN helicopters. Sector V, Wally, and Joey were there as well, after Kirie’s father received the call. Leslie was being escorted out of the building, breathing in and out of a paper bag and her hair a mess. “I was just bringing her some coffee—decaf and three spoonfuls of sugar—like she likes it—but now—I can’t believe it—PRESIDENT SANBAN IS DEAD!”

“Calm down, Miss! We’ll check all the cameras, do a thorough investigation…”

“Mrs. Beatles is dead?!” Haylee exclaimed.

“Kuki…” Wally was about to cry. Kirie already had her eyes buried in her sleeves, and if she weren’t mute, she’d be sobbing like her brother.

“Kirie, I’m so sorry…” Aurora held her friend close.

NOOOO! Kirie ran up and started pounding on the police. LET ME IN! I WANNA SEE MY MOM! I WANNA-!

“Kirie, settle down!” Wally pulled her back. “I’ll tell them to let us in, just be patient!”

Haylee Gilligan decided to stray away from the commotion, her head drooped down. Her older brother, her cousin, Sheila’s mom, and now Kirie’s… This was happening so fast. Everything was. They hardly had any time to rest since this adventure began. She wanted to go to a place where she could meditate. And the place she had in mind was the nearby construction site.

The manager of the site, Bob the Builder was on a coffee break, wearing a spry expression as he drank. The short man in overalls saw Haylee and greeted happily, “Boy, if it isn’t my favorite protégé! Ha ha, just kidding, it wouldn’t be right to pick favorites. You’re just the ONLY protégé! Howdy, Haylee!”

“How do you do, Bob!” Haylee smiled. “Sorry I haven’t visited in awhile. I have been swamped… with like so much work. I wanted to get my mind off it. Anything you need done around here?”

“Well, another day, another dollar! If you’re up for it, you can cut those boards. I need ’em down to seven inches.”

“Hm hm, sure.” Haylee put on a worker’s helmet. “Even though I’m really tired of the number 7 at this point.” She put the first plank over the table and began sawing it.

“Wow, that’s a lot-a commotion goin’ on over there! It sounds like somebody robbed a bank.”

“WAA-AA-AAAAH!” Bob jumped and his head leapt off his body for a second. “Cut the camera, I don’t want murder on my show!”

“Sorry I brought it up.” Haylee blushed. “That’s why I came over here, Bob. I…I don’t know what to do.” She frowned. “My friends and family are being attacked left and right. None of us see it coming. We’re trying to stick together so we can protect each other… but I’ve been thinking about splitting up from them.”
“Why would you say that?”

“I mean, I usually handle just fine in a fight, even if I’m not a monster like… some of my other friends… but this is starting to feel like a different league. I feel like… I should stay away from them. I couldn’t protect them, and I would just be in the way… that’s why.”

“Haylee, you should be ashamed for saying that!” Bob stood across the table and looked reprovingly. “Didn’t you learn anything from working in my yard? A building can’t be built by one person alone! We need people to lift the boards, hammer the nails, sit precariously on the scaffolds to eat lunch… and sentient vehicles with eyes and mouths!”

“Hi, Bob!” A red bulldozer/dump truck rolled up. “Your break’s over in two minutes! Get ready to get back on the grind!”

“You know I will, Muck! Say, have you met my student, Haylee?”

“WOW, a living dump truck!” Haylee beamed. “How did you build that?”

“I can build anything, Haylee! I am, after all, a Legoan!” Bob plucked his hand off.

“AAAAAHH!” she screamed. “W-Wait… Legoan? Like from Legola?”

“So you’ve heard of it!” Bob picked his head off. “Legola’s full of Master Builders like me!”

“I know! We flew there and met Lord Business one time.”

“President Business?” Bob put his head back, frowning. “How was he?”

“He’s a pretty sweet guy. He helped us a ton!”

“Well, it’s always good to see the big bosses lending a hand to the little ones!”

“Hee hee, yep! But… back to what we were talking about. I don’t particularly want to abandon my team… but in a situation like this, I wonder if it will matter or not.”

“I may not know what you’re dealing with, but if your team could depend on you before, they’ll be depending on you now. So don’t abandon them, Hayl!”

“Yeah… you’re right. I don’t know what I was thinking.” She smiled. “I should get back to them soon.”

“Rightio! Well-p, break time over. I’m gonna flip on the radio and see what’s jammin’ before I get back to whammin’! …With my hammer.” Bob hopped in a Mario fashion over to a small radio, tuning its dials.

“Whirrrrrrrrr, whrrrrr…”

“What the armadillo?” Bob queried.

A mysterious voice came from the radio. “Hello. This is an anonymous message… from Eldwin. Excuse me for interrupting this evening’s performance of ‘Barbie Girl’, but I have something to say to the Kids Next Door.” Haylee looked over.

“I’m sure by now, you’ve received the gifts left by my… associates.” Sector V listened on the police’s radios. “By this point, President Kuki Beatles should have had her final coffee break.” Wally growled, for he sounded like a certain bully from his childhood. “The thing is, she was a little rude to the Inspectors For Children’s Safety five months ago, and we were waiting for an excuse to make her pay.”

Cheren, Dillon, Maddy, and the people on KND Moonbase stared at the static Global Communication screen. Mom recognized the voice. “You’ve been busting the Government’s buttons too long, Kids Next Door. Killing two of our presidents, invading Washington, and seeking the Twenty Keys? These gifts are gonna keep comin’. However, I happen to have your raccoon in my captivity. She’s alive, but who’s to say how long? I’m gonna make these instructions clear to you:

“Bring us the Seventh Light, or I’ll turn this raccoon into a fur coat and wear her like a cape! Bring us the Seventh Light, or I’ll tell them to kill some more! I may not be allowed to give orders without an excuse… but boy, am I good at making up excuses. So, what’s it gonna be, KNDorks?! You better decide quick, ’cause the next one’s coming tonight, 7:30! You gonna hand over the Light? We know who she is… and hopefully, you guys know, too. Until next time, from the hijacked radio airwaves. …This was Eldwin.” The message ended.

Outside Sector V Treehouse

The operatives were sitting on the sidewalk, watching the sky as the first hint of orange began to fill the blueness. It was 6:45. “Tonight, huh?” Aurora said. “What are we going to do?”

“Beat the SNOT out of them, of course!” Sheila got up and fist-palmed. “Those heartless blokes are gettin’ the walloping of their lives!”

“But we don’t know where they’ll show up OR who the Seventh Light is!” Chris emphasized. “And unless we find out in the next 45 minutes, they’ll…” They heard a ship’s engine and saw a C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. coming down for landing. Dillon, Carol, and Sector Q stepped off, along with some surprising others.

“Dillon!” Mason beamed. “Vanellope!”

“Maddy!” Chris ran up.

“Chris!” The two embraced in a hug. Chris looked up and saw Shade. “Who’s she?”

“I’m Shade.” she replied. “I helped the Teen Ninjas shrink Maddy.”

“Oh, I remember you!” Chris PUNCHED Shade in the nose.

“I saw that coming.” she noted, holding her bloody nose. “I let you have the honors because you couldn’t hit me last time.”

“Did you guys hear that message?” Mason asked. “CP10 wants the Seventh Light or they’ll keep killing people!”

“We heard.” Drake replied, arms folded. “And… Maddy’s the Seventh Light.”

“Maddy?!” Chris exclaimed.

“I say we hand her over and put a stop to this.” Quill Ramsey said.

“We’re not letting them have her! We’re gonna confront CP10 and stop them once and for all!”

“But we don’t know where they’re gonna show up!” Dillon argued.
“I have an idea.” Harry replied. “They said they knew who the Seventh Light was… so if it is Maddy, then let’s assume they know she lives in Quahog. CP10 is targeting people who the Government has a beef with. Who else lives in Quahog that they have a beef with?”

Dillon gasped. “My dad!”

“So they’re targeting Mr. York.” Chris deduced. “Then that’s where we’ll meet ’em. …But what about Maddy?”

They looked at the girl in question. Maddy looked away thoughtfully. “If they want me… then let’s let them have me.” She fist-palmed.

Quahog; close to York House

Yuki and Crystal entered Nolan’s home, prepared to make the flight to Arabia. Hamster Mask watched them a few houses away. He looked at the treehouse that belonged to Sector Q. At 7:30 on the dot, Hamster Mask swung a Tempest Kick and cut the treehouse’s stem. Creakaaaak, the giant tree slowly toppled in the direction of the York House. It squished the house flat, along with any unfortunate home in its range.

The tree was lifted by a giant shadow, conjured by Danika York as she recovered from the rubble, grunting from the strain. “I always knew these… gigantic, precariously planted trees would… backfire on us!” She hurled the tree away and retracted her shadow. “Who the hell chopped it down anyw-”

Rabbit Mask rapid-punched her with chi-blocks from behind. She kicked Danika to the ground and kept her fists raised. A hatch in the road opened as the Sandmobile drove out—Sandman immediately stopped the vehicle and turned off the Batman theme when he saw the destruction. “What the-?!”

Chicken Mask landed on the windshield and stomped it open, grabbed Yuki and Wiccan and throwing them out. He tried to kick Sandman, but he grabbed the chicken’s foot and twisted before pushing him off. Monkey Mask landed behind Crystal, who turned to be met with a punch to the face, and Scarecrow Mask hopped up behind Yuki and started choking him. Sandman tried to climb out of the Sandmobile, but Hamster Mask got behind and kicked him to the road.

Hamster Mask pinned Nolan on his back and raised his Finger Pistol. “You shoulda kept a more secret identity, Marvel Hero.”

“I’m DC!”

“No, they actually keep theirs secret. Say good-bye-” He was knocked off by a Light Fist. An ice blast hit Scarecrow and saved Yuki while Vanellope zipped down and kicked Monkey Mask off of Wiccan. When the glitch girl landed, she winked at her adoptive father. Sandman’s surprise at seeing her was masked. Their saviors were Sector V in a C.O.O.L.-B.U.S..

“Orright,” Sheila spoke with spite, “which of you animals wants to get made into a fur coat?”

“We Mobians consider that offensive.” Shade said.

“I’m half-Mobian.”

“Oh. Then I guess it’s okay.”
The plot twists are only just beginning, my friends. Next time, we will fight CP10. Let’s go Atbashing!

Chapter Summary

Sector V, Zach, and Maddy battle CP10!

Last time, CP10 tried to kill Team Sandman, but then Sector V stopped them! Let’s watch the development!

Chapter 65: Unmasked

Quahog, Rhode Island

Vanellope was standing guard in front of Sandman as Yuki and Wiccan helped him back on his wheelchair. The masked assassins stared up at the C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. as Aurora stood on the roof. “CP10, you’ve attacked our relatives for the last time!” the leader shouted. “You wanted us to bring you the Seventh Light, right?”

“Well, here I am!” A S.C.A.M.P.E.R. with a “Q” painted on it hovered over their area, and Maddy Murphy was waving from the window.

“It’s her!” Monkey Mask exclaimed. “The Light!”

Sector Q gasped when a cloaked man in a lion mask landed on the roof of their S.C.A.M.P.E.R.. “You were wise to comply with our request, Kids Next Door. We will take the Light into our custody.”

“You misunderstood!” Chris flew at Lion Mask from above to swing a flame punch. “We never said we’d let you have her!”

“Iron Body!” Lion Mask defended himself, grabbed Chris by the head, and threw him down—Sector Q performed a barrel-roll and flung the agent off the S.C.A.M.P.E.R..

“If you want her, come and GET her!” Drake yelled before the S.C.A.M.P.E.R. flew off toward Quahog. (Play “Lightning Speed” from Naruto: Shippuden)

“After them!” Lion exclaimed. The agents leapt in the air and began pursuit with Moon Walks.

“Haylee, let’s move!” Aurora yelled.

“Right!” Haylee turned the C.O.O.L.-B.U.S., and after Vanellope glitched back into the ship, they sped after the agents.

“Should we help them?” Crystal asked.

“I’d like to, but… we have a mission to be on.” Sandman said regrettably. “We shouldn’t doubt them, we’ve already seen them handle worse situations.”

As CP10 was flying toward the city, Hamster Mask looked back. “Those kids is chasin’ us!”
“CP10, divide and conquer! I’ll seek out the Light! I doubt she would flee so easily.” Under Lion Mask’s command, the six agents divided. There was a tiny beetle on Rabbit Mask’s back.

Haylee landed the C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. on the edge of the city as Aurora yelled, “Team, split up in groups, but be careful! Try and find where Sector Q landed.”

“Screw that, I’m thrashin’ the blokes that thrashed me mom!” Sheila ran down the street and cried, “AAAAAH!”

“Sheila, WAIT!”

Sheila stepped on a string that caught her in a net hanging from a streetlight. “AAAAAAH!” It zapped her.

“Boy, and I thought animals were smarter than boobs!” Rabbit Mask laughed before hopping away.

“THERE’S ONE!” Mason and Haruka gave chase. Aurora froze Sheila’s net with ice as the half-raccoon broke it and followed them. The operatives split up in their own groups.

Dillon, Kirie, and Vanellope searched the backstreets and saw Monkey Mask jumping across fire escapes. “It’s the one that hurt Miss Wickens! Mario, get her!” Dillon sent his shadow, and due to it being sunset, Mario was able to increase in size and snatch the female assassin in his hands.

Mario tried to squeeze her, but Monkey Mask broke free with a Tempest Kick, landing on the street to see the three kids run at her.

Vanellope glitched around the air before zipping above Monkey for a Rapid Kick, but the assassin dodged the blows with Paper Art before kicking up at Vanellope. The Program glitched and flew a few feet before Mario swooped by and caught her. “Vanellope, stay back there!” Dillon ordered.

Mario returned to him as Dillon stretched and divided his shadow in multiple directions, attempting to catch Monkey in Shadow Possession. The assassin Moon Walked and evasively dodged, but that’s when two Rainbow Monkeys dropped and smashed her to the ground, invisible to her vision. TEAR HER UP! That lady should be ashamed to wear a Rainbow Monkey mask! Kirie signed with anger in her gestures. Monkey Mask pushed the invisible forces off, but Dillon’s Shadow Possession caught her.

“Finger Pistol was one of the moves, right?” Dillon smirked, positioning his middle and index as the assassin was forced to mimic him. “Then how would you like a taste of your own medicine?” He jabbed the fingers in his waist. Monkey’s fingers didn’t pierce, so he kept trying. “Why isn’t it working?”

“I’ll tell you why.” Monkey replied with a smirk behind her mask. “You can’t make me do what you CAN’T do.”

“But I can still do this!” Vanellope glitched behind for another Rapid Kick, but Monkey did a Shave and zipped behind her. “What?”

“Vanellope!” Mario grabbed Vanel just in time and pulled her back to Dillon, who blew a great cloud of Shadow Fog over the area. “Vanellope, you have to hide!” he yelled as he ran and pulled his sister along.

“What, no!” Vanel pulled her hand free. “Dillon, why did you bring me home if you weren’t gonna let me fight?”
“These guys are on a whole different level, they’re too dangerous for you to fight.”

“So was Dimentio, but I totally clogged HIS brain! Besides, I’ll just possess the nearest technology and come back if I die.”

“I don’t wanna chance that in this place, just stay back.” He gasped, “She’s coming!” and quickly blew another Shadow Breath, fogging the whole backstreet.

Monkey Mask had a hard time seeing, giving Kirie the chance to jump her from behind and catch her head in a leg lock. Kirie tried to pull the mask off, but the agent threw her arms up and bashed either side of her head. She threw Kirie off, then Dillon caught her in a Shadow Veil for a round of punches, only for Monkey to grip his neck and choke. They came out of the Veil, and Vanellope kicked the assassin off, tempting Monkey to stab a Finger Pistol, only for Mario to pull the Program away and bring her to safety.

The Shadow Fog cleared as two Rainbow Monkeys grabbed the assassin’s arms, only to be kicked away again. “Dillon, I can fight just as well as you, why don’t you let me?!” Vanellope yelled.

“Vanellope, I don’t know what you’ve been doing in that Cyber World, but we’ve gotten stronger!”

“Well, I wanna get stronger too, y’know!”

“Vanellope, you’re surviving off other Programs’ pixels for crud’s sake!”

“W…” She glitched, feeling a little offended. “What do you mean by that?”

_Maria pulled them both in Shadow Veil to dodge Monkey Mask’s kick, bringing them over a few blocks to hide in an alley._

“Come on, Vanel, you remember that virus Sollyx implanted you with.” Dillon replied.

“I know THAT, but you sounded like I couldn’t get better at fighting if I wanted to.”

“Well, you might be able to learn, but… improve?”

“…” Vanellope showed hurt in her eyes. She fearlessly zipped out and started glitching around the masked woman as a pixelly circling stream of light.

“Vanellope!”

“Lickety Split Circly KICK!” The circle closed in, and Monkey Mask felt herself whirling from the speedy force—she grabbed Vanellope’s foot.

“You’re so predictable.” The assassin slammed Vanellope back-and-forth on the street before letting her lie. She attempted to stomp the Program beneath her high-heel foot, only for Dillon to pull her to safety again.

_Another street_

Mason, Haruka, and Sheila were still after Rabbit Mask, who looked back and saw the raccoon gaining closer with very fast feet. The beetle on her back leapt off, attached itself to Sheila’s leg, and grew pinchers that sunk into her flesh. “YOWCH!” Sheila stopped to punch the bug—which defended by morphing into a turtle, then turned into a bear to punch Sheila away. Mason and Haruka aimed their rears at the bear and farted a noxious gas. The bear cringed from the scent, giving the twins a chance to blow him back with Gas Bomb.
The bear turned into a cheetah and tackled the two with swift speed, only to be kicked away by Sheila’s Light Kick. The raccoon growled at the animal, her legs shining golden. She dodged the cheetah’s swipes with greater speed than it could match, kicking it from any angle she could find. When the cheetah was on the ground, Sheila ran up to smash him with a Light Fist, but the mammal morphed into a fly, flew to Sheila’s raccoon ear, then became an ant to crawl in.

“Oh God, He’s going for me brain!” She shook frantically.

“We’ll save you, Sheila!” Mason and Haruka shot gas into her ears.

“Duuuhh…” Sheila became dizzy, then the twins held her upside-down by the legs to shake the ant out. He morphed into a cloaked man with a kangaroo mask, and did a breakdance to kick the kids away. He morphed into an eagle to fly off, but Sheila recovered, chased, and leapt high in the air with her raccoon tail to grab his talons. The agent turned into a hippo to squish her to the ground, and when Mason and Haruka ran at him, he turned into a mammoth and swung his giant trunk to bat the two away.

Rabbit Mask hid behind a building corner to see her cohort prevailing. “Guess he doesn’t need me. Now, where did the Light go…” She turned and looked around. “Ooo, a Pet Store! I’ll look for her there… and see if they have bunnies!” She happily jogged up to the store and barged in. “What the-?!” (Pause song.)

In this rather peculiar store, men were laying on beds and letting women pet them softly. The shelves were lined with hands positioned in a way so as to pet. “Velcome, gudentag!” A man with a black mustache who looked a lot like Zach Murphy approached Rabbit Mask. “Are vu here for ein good petting, ja-ja?”

“This… wasn’t what I was expecting for a pet store.” Rabbit said.

“NONSENSE, we make ze best pettings, ja!” Zach pushed her over to a bed, laying her on her front. “Now, which woudl you like: ze gentle mother, ze happy little girl, ze evil mastermind, or ze rich girl?”

“I… don’t know? What’s rich girl like?”

“RICH GIRL!!”

“BUNNYYYYY!” Carol Masterson dashed in, wearing her green dress and puffy hair long. She hugged Rabbit Mask tight and scratched her with her long nails. “Bunnyyyyy!”

“OW!” Rabbit yelped.

“Bunnyyyy!”

“Ow!”

“BUNNYYYYY—OOOOOWWW!” Carol was shocked. (Resume song.)

“Joke’s on you, I had barbed wire under a layer of this cloak!” The assassin kicked Carol away, got to her feet, and attempted to jump on Zach—his head shot up like a spring and sent Rabbit flying through the ceiling. She recovered to see Zach spring up with her.

“Joke’s on YOU, my mom was a bed! My father is Sheriff Woody!”

“That’s right.” Rabbit Mask turned and saw a giant Sheriff Woody and a bed with eyes, a mouth, and a star blanket. “And we don’t appreciate you attacking our Zachykins!” The bed and Woody jumped on her, but Rabbit Mask did a Shave and let the two fall through a trapdoor, landing in a spike pit.

“You don’t think I’m one step ahead of you?” Rabbit smirked. “I see through all your little tricks. For example,” she pulled out a bomb shaped like a Trix Yogurt container, “why do you think I’m in a rabbit mask?!” She threw the bomb at Zach, exploding him in colorful mist instead of yogurt, which Rabbit Mask jumped through feet first and kicked Zach off the roof. He splashed in a puddle, quickly dodged when Rabbit stomped down—the assassin splashed in the deep puddle. She struggled to swim and slowly sank, but was saved when Jar Jar Blinks shot up from below and kicked her out and to the air, landing a storm of kicks before kicking Rabbit to the street.

“Have I introduced you to Jar Jar?” Zach asked. “He’s my long-lost older brother!”

“That can’t be possible!” Rabbit yelled.

“IS NOT!!” Jar Jar screamed. He grabbed Zach and cried against his shirt, “PLEASE don’t cut me from the story, Zachypoo! I-sa sorry about spilling the monkeys in de auditorium, I-sa gonna mop them up, I’ll mop up ALL de monkeys!”

“Jar Jar, it’s okay, I forgive you—AAAAH!” The two were split up by Rabbit’s Tempest Kick. Scarecrow Mask ran from Chris and Aurora toward a towering skyscraper before making a great leap all the way to the top of said skyscraper. “Ha ha!” he laughed and looked down at them. “They’ll never have a pair of legs as spry as mine! What?” He heard an engine behind him and turned to see Haylee and Artie in their C.O.O.L.-B.O.T..

“And you’ll never make a ship as spry as this one!” Haylee retorted before the robot punched down at the short assassin. Scarecrow Mask jumped and hopped in midair, easily dodging their punches before launching himself against Haylee’s windshield. The window cracked, but Haylee withstood before spinning the robot around to shake him off. Artie grabbed the agent in the robot’s fists and rocketed toward the street, smashing him into a crater. However, Scarecrow switched to Iron Body to lessen the pain of the collision, then he quickly swung Tempest Kick to cut the robot in half, separating both cockpits.

Chris and Aurora made it to Quahog Town Square, which had a giant statue of a clam. “Where the hell are they?!” Chris angrily asked with his hands aflame.

“The others are already fighting agents, but Maddy’s still safe.” Aurora reported.

“I wish these CP Punks would stop acting like cowards, get out here and fight!” Chris was then kicked from the side and flown several feet. He got up, wiping the twin cuts on his cheek and seeing the chicken-masked assassin. He narrowed his eyes at the killer, and Chicken narrowed his eyes behind his mask. Chris charged up and threw flaming punches that Chicken blocked, flipping behind the boy to kick him down. Chris rolled on his back—grabbing Chicken’s foot when he stomped down, and the boy kicked on his jetshoes and flew down the street, carrying the assassin by the foot and letting his face bash against streetlights.

“I guess that leaves you to me.” Aurora turned to face Hamster Mask. “Or maybe you can tells me where the Light is real quick.”

“We have two Lights in our party, you’ll have to be more specific.” She smirked.

“Just the one will do.”
“No deal.” Aurora blasted ice from her left hand, but the agent dodged with Shave, zipped up to her, and threw a punch that Aurora ducked before punching her flaming right hand at his gut. Hamster Mask flew back, then Aurora leapt above and stomped down with her ice-imbued leg. Hamster recovered and swung several Tempest Kicks that Aurora dodged by flying with Rocket Boost, resulting in the clam statue being torn up.

Aurora landed and stomped her foot to open the Ice Gate, her body swallowed in the coldest ice. She froze the ground of the park, and when Hamster Mask flew up with Moon Walk, Aurora shot rounds of ice. He was able to dodge until a blast froze his right arm, then Aurora fired twin beams that sent him flying. Hamster landed in the street, so Aurora skied up to the frozen opponent. The assassin broke free, Shaved behind her, and jabbed his fingers in Aurora’s- “OH, not again!” she yelped.

“Finger Pistol: 200 Extra Years!” The icebender was launched upward, but she didn’t fly far. Hamster Mask was ready to Shave underneath and punch her away. Aurora’s Ice Fury wore off, but she ignored her exhaust and dodged a Tempest Kick, doing a Fire Cartwheel at the agent, but Hamster Mask dodged in front of her and kicked her stomach.

“Ah!” Aurora grunted after landing on her front. “You know, why do you Rokushiki creeps get a kick out of poking my butt?”

“Oh, touchy area?” Hamster raised his hands. “Sorry about that. How ’bout I get you in the head instead.” He zipped up to stab Finger Pistol at her head, but Aurora jumped up and spin-kicked him in the head. (End song.)

Across the city

Sector Q landed on the other side of the city, close to the pier. The five members, plus Maddy and Shade, were off the ship and looking around. “Maddy, I fear for your safety.” Shade said. “Your training is still incomplete, you haven’t mastered Observation Haki.”

“If I’m not here in the city, CP10 might retreat and kill someone else. They’ll stay as long as I do, and that’ll give us a chance to beat them here and now.”

“For now, it’s best to keep her hidden, otherwise they’ll all be on her.” Drake said. “If the situation gets messy, we’ll join the fray.”

“We might have to join a little early.” Maddy said, pointing up at a building. Lion Mask was staring down at them, his cloak blowing in the wind.

The assassin rocketed down—the operatives braced their selves, but the assassin zipped beside each one with Shave and punched them unconscious. After taking Drake down last, he turned to Maddy—she ran up and dealt an Armament uppercut that knocked him back. The lion landed on his feet. “You’re foolish to try and fight me. I defeated your bodyguards in one fell swoop.”

“And I punched you. I scored the first hit and you’re threatening me?”

“A lucky maneuver on your part. It will be your last. CP10 was ordered to kill you, Maddy Murphy. You are the Seventh Light… the last one before the accursed prophecy sees completion. By killing you, it will never come to be. This town will be your grave.”

“Can my scary killer at least take off his mask?”

“I could… but I want to see if you can earn the right to see my face!” He Shaved. (Play “I Think You Should Do As He Says” from Batman: Arkham City!)
“MADDY!” Shade grabbed her friend and jumped away, dodging Lion’s Finger Pistol. “Maddy, we should call one of the others to help us!”

“Fair enough. Guys, Sector Q got knocked out!” she yelled into her communicator. “There’s an agent chasing us, anyone wanna help out?!”

“We’re having problems of our own!” Dillon yelled, attempting to hit Monkey Mask with a Shadow Shockwave, but the woman stabbed his stomach with a Finger Pistol. Kirie tossed flower shurikens, but Monkey defended with Iron Body, and when Vanellope zipped above, the agent stabbed her with Finger Pistol and threw the Program away. “Vanellope!” Dillon tried to approach his glitching sister, but faltered due to the wound in his stomach.

Sheila spun twin Light Fists and shot them at Kangaroo Mask, but he dodged by morphing into a puppy, lunging at Sheila, and becoming a tiger to bite her in the waist. Mason blasted the animal with a S.P.I.C.E.R., then the agent flew up to him as a bat and started nipping his face. Mason punched the bat off—it turned into a jellyfish, landed on Haruka, and zapped her in the face. Haruka threw the fish on the ground, and before Sheila’s eyes, it morphed into a naked Marine the Raccoon.

Mason and Haru shut their eyes, but Sheila showed anger and rage in her eyes. Sheila shot Light Fists at the four-legged beast, but Kangaroo Mask dodged and slashed her in the face, going behind to bite her tail. “I think I can beat him with this Gold Flurp!” Mason declared, pulling the gold soda can out.

“No Mason, you know that stuff hurts your kidneys!” Haruka yelled.

“I have you to get it out of me!”

“I can’t usually get it all out! Besides, we have six agents after this, just hold onto it!”

Chris dropped Chicken Mask in an alley, landed, and tried to punch the agent, but Chicken grabbed and twisted his fist before shoving Chris in a trashcan. He kicked the trashcan out in the street to be hit by cars, and after Chris was bounced out, Chicken Mask leapt over to swing a bent pipe at him. Chris grabbed a sewer lid to use as a shield, and their scuffle caused several cars to swerve away and crash. Chicken Mask kicked the shield away, grabbed Chris in his talon, and spun before chucking the boy through a building window.

Chris landed in someone’s living room, scaring away the kids watching TV. Chicken Mask jumped in as they resumed their fight, wherein they knocked down a shelf and spilled a jar of Minish Dust over their selves. The two shrank down and fought their way behind the TV. They ended up displayed on the screen, and this happened to be the scene in Willy Wonka where Charlie pulls the candybar out of the TV. The fighters were pulled out with it, growing to normal size as they punched Charlie, Mike Teavee, and Willy Wonka unconscious.

They smashed out of the house’s TV as a repairman came. Chicken Mask knocked him out and stole his hammer while Chris swiped a wrench. Chicken swung the hammer down at him, but Chris caught it with the wrench and tossed away. Chicken knocked Chris up through the ceiling with an uppercut, and he was in a bathroom occupied by Cleveland Brown. Chicken Mask came up, and when trying to kick Chris, he kicked Cleveland’s tub through the wall and let him crash on the street. The shower was still there—Chicken Mask grabbed it, turned it up full blast, and burned Chris in the eyes.

Maddy and Shade ran into a building and dashed up several floors, scaring the people in offices. “We’ll need to formulate a battle plan!” Shade panted. “Hopefully, he won’t find us in—” The ceiling caved in and Lion Mask dropped in. The agent swung Tempest Kick, the girls dodged as Maddy ran to kick him in the leg, knocking him off his feet with the Armament blow. She punched down, but the agent flipped up and aimed to stomp down, but Shade saved Maddy again. “Grab onto my back!”

Maddy did so, and Shade punched a window open to jump out and grab another building. She hurriedly climbed up, but both girls sensed Lion Mask pursuing them with Moon Walks. Shade climbed higher than the opposite building’s roof, so she jumped to it and jumped the following buildings with Maddy on her back. Lion Mask caught up with multiple Shaves, forcing Shade to stop and defend from his attack. Lion Mask zipped beside—Shade punched, but he dodged with Paper Art, kicking Shade like a kickball across several rooftops. Maddy threw a punch, but Lion Mask zipped above and swung both legs like an ‘X’.

Maddy dodged the crossed Tempest Kicks, which destroyed the roof and caused her to fall in. The businessmen in this room screamed and ran, and Maddy recovered in time to see Lion Mask land in with her.

The assassin stood quietly and stared at her. Maddy fearlessly ran up to throw a punch, which Lion Mask dodged before punching her against the wall. “Your friends were always amusing to me, Maddy.” The lion said. “To challenge Pirate Emperors, gods, and World Government officials alike, in an endless game of pretend where the world belongs to them. How utterly pathetic. I’ve read tales on their endeavors for the past twenty years. While they have been helpful in detaining such criminals, they have let their success get to them.”

“And who are you to say that? Just take off your mask!”

“You have quite the mouth on you, brat. Giving orders to your killer.”

“I’m assuming you have a mouth, too. That’s where I wanna hit you!”

“Very well... If that is the only way to invoke your fear.”

Aurora dodged Hamster Mask’s Finger Pistols, got behind, and swung a flaming kick at his rear. He dropped and rolled to put the fire out, and the clothing underneath seemed to be khakis. Hamster faced back at Aurora and said, “Door.” opening the ground like a door and dropping in. A confused Aurora felt her ankles be grabbed, looking down to see two hands sticking out of holes in the ground. Her feet were pulled in, and Hamster Mask hopped out the ground-door a few feet away.

He charged over to stomp Aurora, but she slipped off her shoes and used Rocket Boost to fly out of her trap. She arched over him and blasted ice down, freezing his mask, and after landing, she kicked a flame up and burned the Hamster Mask off. “Alright,” she smirked, “let’s see who you REALLY are!”

The perpetrator decided to look up after his mask melted. Aurora gasped at the red-haired man with a round nose and freckles. “You’re…

Bartender of Cleveland’s Milk Bar
LIME RICKEY

“Oopsie!” Rickey shrugged, slashing a Tempest Kick that forced Aurora to jump. A streetlight was chopped, and it fell over to crush her. Rickey spoke in his walky-talky, “This is Number 6, I’ve been unmasked. Ready to kill the witness. Over.” He zipped up to stab Aurora in the face, but she dodged her head and froze the ground. Rickey stumbled slightly, and Aurora was able to squeeze out of the streetlight and ski around the frozen ground on her socks. Rickey Moon Walked to chase her, but Aurora activated Fire Fury, bursting into a fire spire when he flew above her. Rickey hit the ground and used Paper Art to evade her flames.

“RAAAAH!” Zach Murphy chased Rabbit Mask down a street—stepping on a rake she had lain, which flipped up and bashed Zach in the face. “YAAAAAI-!” Jar Jar charged, he stepped on a puddle of puke. “Uh-oh. WAAAAH!” A hidden crab snapped his toe, he ran around trying to shake it.

Rabbit Mask zipped up and kicked Zach’s head off—it flew around like an untied balloon, and then a squad of Balloon Police began chasing Rabbit, along with barking balloon dogs. The assassin smirked and popped each cop with a simple Finger Pistol, but Zach’s headless body became a cannon that blasted a swarm of rubber ducks. Rabbit Mask dodged with Shave, and when Jar Jar ran up to shove roasted lobster in her face, she jumped above and kicked him away.

“Hmph!” Rabbit chortled. A bundle of dollars landed beside her, and a family of rabbits hopped up to fondle it lovingly. “Awwww, bunnies!” She knelt down to pet the adorable animals. “You wanna be rich bunnies, huh you little Money Bunnies?”

Carol Masterson grabbed her mask from behind. “Guess Cash Combat still has some worth!” She pulled it off. Rabbit Mask was a black-haired girl of 17 years old. “Gasp! You’re iCarly!”

MIRANDA COSG-

“I’M MEGAN PARKER!!” She abruptly shouted. “NOT MIRANDA! NOT CARLY! I’M MEGAN!!”

“I’m sorry!” Carol yelped. “That was your Drake & Josh character, I like her!”

“Unbelievable!” Zach gaped. “A Nickelodeon actress by day,” he imagined Megan singing a song on a flashy stage, “and hit assassin by night.” He imagined Megan smirking as three people lay dead behind her.

“That’s not all I do.” Megan smiled mischievously. “I’m called Megan the Prankster. You got something on your nose.” She pointed at Zach.

“I do-?” He raised his hand to his face—he unknowingly lifted a syringe that poked and gave him pimples.

“Hm hm hm!” Megan giggled. “I swallowed the Prank-Prank Fruit, so I can spawn a trap anywhere at anytime. Like the infinite whoopee cushion in your skirt.” She pointed at Carol.

Poooooooooooooooot…

Carol panicked. “AAAAH! NO, I’M NOT DOING THAT, GET IT OUT OF ME!” She ran around in a panic.

Kirie Beatles swiftly dodged Monkey Mask’s kicks, doing a twirl as she leapt and tried to kick her mask off. The woman grabbed the girl’s foot and tossed her away, but the assassin was then grabbed by a giant orange hand. The hand originated from Midna’s ponytail. “Don’t mind me, just an all-powerful Firstborn you keep stuffed under your sweater. By the way, Dillon, deodorant, use it much?”
“Keep her steady, Midna! Mario, get that mask!” His shadow flew over and clutched the blue monkey mask. She shook her head to keep Mario from pulling it off, but Midna yanked the assassin and chucked her one block down, and Mario was holding the mask. The female assassin recovered and showed the kids her blonde hair and blue eyes.

LESLIE MEIJER

Kirie stared at Leslie with a look of terrific betrayal. My mom’s assistant…

“Well, I guess the secret’s out.” Leslie put her glasses back on. “I’m sorry about your mom, Kirie.”

Dillon glared. “You’re the one that killed Mrs. Beatles.”

“No, it wasn’t me. Number 4 was the one who was supposed to sneak in and poison her coffee as she was getting it. A pretty tricky murder to get away with, but you can always count on him for that.”

“You’re responsible either way, you heartless scumbag!” Dillon expanded a massive Shadow Shockwave and sent Mario to furiously maul her, but Leslie escaped with Shave. Vanellope was zipping around behind her for another Lickety Split attack, but Leslie again used Paper Art to avoid the following kicks.

Leslie was grabbed by an invisible Rainbow Monkey, and already Kirie had summoned an army of Rainbow Monkeys to attack the traitor. “I knew Miss Sanban had the ability to sense and speak to Rainbow Monkey spirits.” Leslie said. “It seems you have that power, too. I might not be able to see them, but I’ve come prepared.” She pulled her arm free, reached in her pocket, and pulled out a whistle designed like the Demon Apes from Mt. Gnaa.

When she blew in the whistle, the Rainbow Monkeys turned dark with red eyes, growling venomously. “Bye.” Leslie used Shaves and Moon Walks to get away from the action, and when the Dark Apes tried to attack the kids, Midna quickly tossed Twilight Balls to destroy them. Vanellope glitched up the building, glaring at Leslie once she was on the same roof. “Vanellope!” Dillon used Shadow Glide to fly up. When Vanel was building up a Lightspeed Kick, Leslie readied to stab with Finger Pistol—Mario carried Vanellope away as Dillon tried to shove his S.C.A.M.P.P. in Leslie’s throat, but the woman smacked it away before stabbing Dillon in both shoulders.

Kirie stayed behind Midna while the Firstborn struck the Dark Apes with Hair Tentacles. She looked up and saw a familiar pigeon fly overhead.

Artie and Haylee chased Scarecrow Mask to a construction site, trying to shoot the jumpy assassin with Diffusion Rifles. Their misses resulted in several planks being disintegrated, and the terrified carpenters immediately fled the field. “That’s not how you treat 2x4’s!” Scarecrow yelled before touching a few planks. They formed faces and came to life, jumping toward the kids to bite them.

Scarecrow swung precise Tempest Kicks to slice the rifles. After Haylee kicked the planks off, she grabbed her extendo wrench and tried to hit him with it. The assassin blocked her blows with his arms, but Haylee determinedly kept swinging. “You hurt our friends and family just to get to us,” she said with hate. “If you wanted to fight us so badly, why not a friendly invitation?!”

“You wouldn’t have felt like responding, of course!”

“UGH!” Haylee swung stronger blows, forcing Scarecrow to block faster. He threw a punch at Haylee’s head. “AAAAH!” She spun and swung her wrench with greater vigor, batting the assassin’s head clean off. The mask popped off when it hit the ground, but his body quickly ran up to screw him back on.

Haylee was horrified when she saw his beady-eye face and yellow worker’s hat. “Ah, nuts.” Bob said.

“Bob… it can’t be.”

“If it’s any consolation Haylee, you really were a great student.” Bob hopped over to a concrete mixer. “But now I can show you my secret! I ate the Life-Life Fruit, so anything I touch comes to life! Like so.” He touched the mixer, and it formed a face.

“Hi, Bob! Wonderful night for an assassination!”

“Wonderful as they come! Say, could you shoot those kids with cement?”

“With pleasure!” The living mixer blasted cement globs at Haylee and Artie.

Chris Uno took the shower from Chicken Mask, wrapped it around his head, and tried to choke him, but the chicken escaped with Shave and stabbed Chris in the back with Finger Pistol. Chris jumped away, kicked on his rockets, and pushed Chicken out via the hole in the wall. He flew all the way to the sky with the chicken in tow, bursting through the bottom of an airplane. Alarms blared and passengers screamed, but this didn’t stop their fight.

When the airbags lowered, Chicken Mask shoved one in Chris’s mouth, trying to overdose him with oxygen. Chris countered by grabbing some discarded airline food and shoving it through the mask’s beak. Chicken choked and backed away, then Chris jumped and kicked him to a seat between two fat people. Chicken Mask struggled to escape and was suffocating, and Chris kept punching during his weak moment. The chicken broke free and did a cartwheel Tempest Kick, slicing the plane in two, passengers screaming as they took the fall. Chris spun like a torpedo and rocketed down at the chicken, his body burning like a meteor as he shoved the chicken toward the earth.

Peter Griffin was walking by casually, but when he saw the meteor, he ran away before it crashed. Chris climbed out of the crater, horribly beaten and tattered. When he and Peter looked, the mask had come off. The assassin stood, and with his cloak burned, he revealed to be a yellow-feathered man-size chicken.

Ernie narrowed his eyes at both Chris and Peter, both of his hated enemies. Chris and Peter exchanged glances and nodded. Both guys ran up to throw punches at the chicken, but Ernie was quick to defend, leaping upside-down to attack both with a spin-kick. Ernie lifted Peter to squash the downed Chris, but Chris punched Peter up, twirled the fat man like a basketball, and set him aflame to kick Peter at Ernie like a meteor.

Kangaroo Mask was still in the form of Marine, punching Sheila repeatedly across the face before she was flown back. Mason and Haruka ran up, but the animal kicked both legs and knocked them back. Sheila recovered, and the beast that was impersonating her mother was snarling monstrously. The more Sheila looked at the beast, the more angry she became. “You’re… not… my… MUM!!” Sheila’s entire body turned gold, and in a split second, she zipped 5 meters behind the agent.

The attack was delayed, but in time the lightspeed blow struck and launched the agent across the city. With lightspeed, Sheila caught up and kicked him all the way back. Mason and Haruka watched as he collided and his mask came off. Sheila landed, still brimming gold as she waited for the assassin to stand. When he did, the three gaped at his blonde, bowl-cut hair, and 5-o’clock shadow. “Mr. Beatles?!” Mason exclaimed.

“Who the hell is that?” The man asked with a gruff Australian accent. Sheila bypassed her shock—the man used Paper Art, but Sheila’s lightspeed was able to strike and blow him skyward. The agent morphed into a mammoth and crashed back on the ground, and even Sheila’s lightspeed attacks couldn’t budge him.

“I wonder if that’s a Devil Fruit power?” Haruka dialed her phone. “I’m calling Caesar to see if he knows!” (End song.)

Elsewhere

After Shade recovered from the kick, she saw a pigeon fly toward the building where Maddy was. The man slowly pulled off his lion mask. Maddy looked up when a pigeon flew in and landed on his shoulder. Once the mask was off, Rob Lucci shook his long black hair free and opened his green eyes. The left one was blackened. “It was getting a bit stuffy.”

Number One of CP10

Marine’s assistant carpenter

ROB LUCCI

“The life of an assassin spy is not easy.” he said with his dark, whispery voice, wiping the black paint off his left eye. “Nor is pretending to be a mute shipwright for two years straight. Relying on some dimwitted bird to get my words out.”

“Screw you, man! Coo-kachoo!” Hattori cawed.

“We members of CP10 assume the identities of everyday people to acquire information or spy on targets. I would have liked to kill Marine much earlier… but I suppose, if I hadn’t helped construct the Sunny Day, the Kids Next Door wouldn’t have been able to destroy Big Mom. Evidently, either party could have been destroyed.” Lucci smirked. “And either death would have worked in our favor.

“It’s regrettable we didn’t have the chance to kill Nolan York before you arrived.” Lucci continued. “Ironic… I met him roughly 14 years ago when he visited GUN H.Q., when he wanted to establish a town for those strays from the Mushroom Kingdom. If I’d have known he was going to become a criminal… I would’ve slain him then and there.”

“Is that all you think about is killing people?” Maddy questioned.

“It’s become a habit of mine. A tasty one.” He licked his teeth. “Ever since I was young, people said I was an animal. But I never thought slaying children would be in my job description. Never did I think… children could do so much.”

“If you know what we can do, why don’t you all leave us alone? You must know how this is
“You are mistaken. We are unlike your past opponents... We have a special power on our side.”

“Tell me that when you’re laying on the floor. AAAH-!” She ran at him with an Armament fist.

“Iron Body!” Lucci hardened himself, but the Armament punch to the gut forced him to hack out saliva and fall backwards. Hattori flew out of the room.

“You’re really not as tough as I thought you’d be.”

Perhaps my mistake was underestimating you. I’ll rectify that.” Lucci jumped back up and stabbed Finger Pistols, but Maddy used Observation to dodge each blow and swing a kick—Lucci blocked with his own kick and shot his fingers at her head, but Maddy grabbed them in an Armament hand and blocked. She jumped and punched Lucci in the face, knocking him on his back.

Shade watched from the hole in the roof as Lucci got back up. This isn’t the potential I was expecting from CP10... He must be holding back.

“So, Haki is what you study... that should make you a worthy opponent. Rokushiki is a rival form of Haki designed a few centuries ago. Knowing Haki was a means of molding one’s own Personal Chi, martial artists believed there were other ways of doing so. And all kinds of advanced martial arts were created. In those days, the Cipher Pols were the only ones deserving of the ways of Rokushiki.” An invisible force brimmed around Lucci’s body. “We agents who could master the six ways of molding our chi were superior to any Haki user. In this era, that glory belongs to me.”

He planted both fists together. “Six King Gun!” Maddy ran when Lucci unleashed a beam of concentrated chi. It cut a path in the room’s wall, but he stopped shortly after. Maddy ran to attack, but Lucci Shaved behind to kick—Maddy dodged to the left while Lucci jumped away.

“But since people have referred to me as an animal for so long, I began to think humanity was not my style.” Lucci took off his robe and exposed his muscular shirtless body. “I wanted to change my appearance... and the Devil Fruit I was given helped greatly.” He hunched over and groaned as claws grew from his fingers, and brown fur grew on his body. “ROOOAR!” He roared like a lion as his teeth became fangs, his black hair shaped like a lion’s mane, and before long he had the complete form of a lion. But not just any lion. “The Lion-Lion Fruit... Scar Model.”

“...Cool! I like Lion King, too!” Maddy said spritely.

“ROOOAR!” He was on all fours and growled with hunger.

“...But you probably don’t wanna talk about it.”

With another hiss, Lucci pounced and swiped his claw, but Maddy dodged and punched his face, only for Lucci to grab and throw her across the room. The lion pounced up and punched her to the right, and when Maddy ran up to punch twin Armaments, Lucci Shaved behind, snatched her hair in his teeth, and swung her like a ragdoll before slamming her against the wall. (Play “Torn Apart” from Bleach!)

Maddy got up and ran to punch again, but Lucci bit her fist in his teeth, forcing her to pull back as blood leaked. Lucci zipped behind her to deal a Finger Pistol—Maddy whipped around and raised a hand, but the lion’s claw pierced the Armament. “OW!” Maddy grabbed her bleeding palm—Lucci scratched her across the face, punched her, then kicked her away. Maddy recovered, feeling woozy from the loss of blood. Lucci was on all fours, snarling like the hungry lion he was... Lucci pranced forward and threw a combo of scratches across her face, smacking her away again. Maddy jumped up to punch him in the stomach, but bruised her fist against his Iron Body. Lucci grabbed her shoulder in his teeth and threw her across the room.

Lucci calmly approached her on his paws, crawling around his fallen prey. “Do you know what the true power in this universe is?” he snarled in her ear. “It isn’t bending… or magic… It’s not even willpower. The true power in this universe is law. And he who defines law controls the universe. And the law does not want you to live…”

Maddy gasped for breath, making a small puddle from her blood. “Why…Why are you doing this… Do you want the Apocalypse… to destroy everything?”

“It’s not what I want… it’s what the Government wants. The Government does not want the Twenty Keys to come together… it is the law that they should not. It is the ultimate order. I care not if the cosmos is destroyed… I only do as the Government demands. Tell me… why should the fate of anything be left to feeble children like you? You, who have struggled only to find your way to my fangs. You are nothing… You are powerless to defeat us… Nigel Uno was powerless to The King… You are powerless before the law.”

“MADDY!” Shade pounced at Lucci—the lion spun and smacked her across the room. Shade held her blackened eye and stared terrified as the lion crept up with hunger. “I’ve got no choice… I’m going Primal!” Shade’s pupils retracted, her fur became spiky and messy, and she was on all fours snarling back. With faster reflexes, she dodged Lucci’s swipes and pounced on his back, trying to tear his ear off in her fangs, but Lucci grabbed her off, threw her on the floor, and began furiously clawing Shade’s suit off.

Lucci felt something grab his tail. He turned and saw a tired Maddy, barely keeping herself on foot. Lucci spun and flew her against the wall. Shade pounced on him again, but Lucci grabbed and bashed her around the floor before throwing the exhausted echidna beside Maddy. “You can die alongside your pet.” The lion crept up again. “This world was never meant to be yours, Child… nor did it ever belong to your childish empire.” He planted his claw against her. “Go to the Underworld and tell that to all the operatives who have died before you. Tell them… Long live the adults… Long live the law… and long live… The King.”

“Why don’t you say that to my face?!” Lucci’s ears perked. He looked up, and none other than Cheren Uno was standing over the hole. “Because I’M THE KING OF THE WORLD!!” His sword aimed down, Cheren jumped in, but Lucci dodged.

Throughout the city, the CP10 agents looked up as KND ships began to fill the skies. Sector W7 landed in the town square to face Lime Rickey, and Mocha cracked the knuckles of her giant fists. Sector W landed in the construction site, where Anthony used his earthbending to free Haylee and Artie from their concrete traps.

Sector JP surrounded the man who looked like Mr. Beatles, and even Jinta found it hard to believe his idol would be involved in this.

Sector IC faced Leslie on the rooftops, but Miyuki was looking at the building where Cheren landed.

Chris and Peter Griffin (er, Chris Uno in case you’re confused) were still locked in their fight against Ernie the Chicken, who managed to grab both opponents and toss them back. Water slapped him from behind, and Ernie turned and growled at Melody, Danny, and Eric. While the waterbenders looked fierce, Eric was hiding behind Mel like a coward.
Finally, after Megan Parker had Zach and Jar Jar trying to tug open a pickle jar, she turned and saw Sunni, Panini, Francis, and Marcus. “Now you have to fight ALL of us!” Francis declared.

“We’ll never let you hurt our friends again!” Anthony yelled.

“And you’ll never knock us off our feet!” Aisa followed.

“Your time is up.” Miyuki finished.

“…” Bob the Builder smiled. “CP10, I think it’s time to regroup.” In a flash—he was gone. All the agents vanished with Shave.

Rob Lucci growled and lunged at Cheren, who clashed his sword against the lion’s claws. When Lucci stabbed a Finger Pistol, the Mirror Shield bounced it back. Cheren slashed the lion in the chest—“TEMPEST KICK!” Cheren was struck from behind and knocked on his front. He turned to find Leslie, Bob, and Megan behind him. He faced front to see Lucci getting up, but when he did, someone stuck him in the rear.

“FINGER PISTOL!” Ernie the Chicken shouted. “1200 Years of DEATH!”

“AAAAAHHH!” The blast knocked Cheren unconscious. Lucci turned and saw that Maddy and Shade were gone. He approached the open window and saw no sign of them from this twenty-story height. He morphed back into a human and saw their seventh member floating outside as a Sky Whale. He turned to the others as Ernie lifted Cheren over his shoulder. “Let us return to base. The children will be helpless without their leader.”

Now attacking the KND ships were Teen Ninja ships, and some of these Teens were Nimbi, catching the aircraft in tornadoes. From the ground, the operatives saw CP10 riding the Sky Whale’s back, flying away from the city. The Three Sacred Treasures hit the ground near Aurora, so she immediately knew. “CHEREN!”

“Leader.” Rob Lucci spoke into his communicator. “We retrieved the Supreme Leader and are bringing him back to base.”

“Excellent job, Lucci! President Morgan’s gonna be super happy to see her nephew again! And what of the Seventh Light?”

“I could not confirm her death before the operatives arrived… but she was heavily wounded.”

“It don’t matter. If they even think of comin’ to Enies Lobby, we got more than a few surprises in store!”

“All in all, I say this was a job well done, team!” Bob cheered.

“Drinks are on me when we get back!” Rickey offered.

“I wouldn’t mind a Paw-bagawket right now!” Ernie said.

“That’s right, brats, we have your leader!” Nya LaMar shouted. “And if any of you think of following, I’ll tell them to kill him right now! See ya later, KN-Losers!” And the Teens joined CP10, leaving Quahog and flying into the sunset. (End song.)

Shade dragged an unconscious Maddy by the shirt with her teeth, still half-naked and in Primal Mode. She saw Aurora and Sector W7 at town square, so once she arrived, the echidna dropped her friend and fell tired. “Maddy!” Mocha jogged up and scooped her bleeding little friend in her hands. “We need to take her to Melody quickly!”

“I’ll call her over!” Aurora switched on her wristwatch.

Haruka had already phoned Caesar and allowed her uncle to watch the last few moments of the attack. Caesar was awestruck after what he saw. Tears were streaming down his pale white face, and he spoke in whimpers. “My Mammal Fruit…”

I wasn’t expecting to drag the fight throughout the whole chapter… but Ah did. ;P I’ve been planning CP10 since 2013, I hinted three of the members in Chapter 4 of Operation: RECLAIM. Obviously, they’re based off CP9 from One Piece, except they are crossover characters. Next time, Maddy dies from blood loss—I’m just kidding, we’re gonna do an Emily stage. So uh, yeah, need to cool down from that action. Until next time.
Team Emily infiltrates GUN Area Delta, where Emily learns an amazing secret!

So, my cat Berry died today, June 4, 2016. Naturally, I’m a little bummed out… There’s a Number Cipher in the upcoming stage.

Chapter 66: Metal

Quahog, Rhode Island

All of the operatives regrouped in the town square after the battle. Maddy awoke with aching pains, confused when she saw the various sectors. She was wrapped up in bandages, and so was Chris – the only other person who took sufficient damage. Melody Jackson healed them all with waterbending, and at 9:00pm, the sky had a faint amount of orange left.

“Oh, Maddy. You’re awake.” Mocha sighed with relief. Maddy looked left to find the giant on her knees.

“Mocha? What’s going on? Did we win?”

“CP10 retreated and kidnapped Cheren.” Mocha frowned. “That animal dragged you back to us.”

Maddy saw Shade asleep on the ground in her torn jumpsuit, her fur still messy. “Wait… they took Cheren?”

“They did.” Francis said regretfully.

The operatives heard tires screeching in the distance and saw a taxi speeding up. It screeched to a halt as a familiar gas-bodied scientist flew out. “COME BAAAAACK!” Caesar reached to the sky in despair.

“Oh, look. It’s Caesar.” Haruka said casually.

“THAT BOY!” Caesar cried. “That was my… Th-That was… MY MAMMAL-MAMMAL FRUUUUUIT!”

“Your Mammal-Mammal Fruit?” Aurora repeated.

Caesar sniffled and wiped a tear. “The Mammal-Mammal Fruit was literally the fruit of my research! Fifteen years ago, I created it… the ultimate Zoan Fruit that could change the user into any animal! The perfect wereanimal who could become them all and have no weaknesses! They could even become aquatic creatures and swim in water. GAAAH, I WAS GONNA MAKE MILLIONS FROM IT! But then he stole it… That sneaky little brat stole my prize! I’ll never forget him… JOEY BEATLES!”

Sector V gasped. “So that man that looked like Mr. Beatles…” Mason realized. “That was the Uncle Joey Kirie’s parents told us about?”
“The one they said went missing?” Dillon recalled. “Five years after the Firstborn Quest.”

“But when we fought him, he acted like he didn’t know who he was.” Mason followed. “I wonder what could’ve happened to him…”

“If I had the chance to touch him, I could see his past.” Miyuki mentioned. “Then I could tell you.”

“Or maybe Caesar can.” Haruka said suspiciously.

Caesar turned to them and said angrily, “Joey was one of the boys I kidnapped 15 years ago, for the same reason I kidnapped you and that fatheaded brat over there.” Mocha growled at the scientist. “It was around the same time I finished my Mammal Fruit. Then one day, my precious fruit was gone! And Joey was gone, too! Coincidence? NOT REALLY! But I didn’t think he was in CP10. CP10 was one of my customers; I would assume the lot of them have Devil Fruits.”

“And you created all the Devil Fruits.” Aurora noted. “Maybe you can tell us how they work so we’ll be able to fight them!”

“Shuroro, of course I could!” Caesar grinned. “The question is, COULD you fight them? Devil Fruits aside, CP10 was formidable before they got them. I mean, just look at what they did to you!”

“That’s why we’re all going to gang up on them!” Karin Kurosaki declared.

“My sector was able to defeat a World Leader by working together!” Aurora reminded. “I know we can all do the same with CP10!”

“Really?” Caesar raised a brow. “How did that go?”

“Well… she…”

“We locked her in Arctic Prison,” Marcus said, “but she escaped with a bunch of prisoners. Including Abram.”

“And it didn’t occur to you this Leader let herself get captured in order to bust some people out?” Caesar inquired. Sector V exchanged awkward glances. “In reality, a single World Leader could conquer an entire nation. Then again, I suppose you kids could, too. The point is, if a World Leader wanted to be serious in a fight with you, you would be dead!”

“So that Rockhead I fought in Washington was just trolling me?!” Anthony asked angrily.

“He sure was, Big Brother!” Michelle jumped him from behind.

“GYAH! Michelle, how many times you gonna sneak on our ship?!”

“You never spend time with me, anymore! I miss my Ant-ony!”

“I’m not an ant.”

“And I am FROSTY!” Suki Crystal rolled out, encased in a snowball.

“Suki!” Miyuki’s eyes widened. “You, too?”

“I miss playing with you too, Sister-chan!”

“Hello!” Michelle greeted. “I’m Michelle!”
“I’m Suki! You have pretty feets!”

“Thank you! So do you!”

“BEEEEEST FRIENDS!” They hugged.

“I wanna die again.”

“Guys, focus!” Aurora yelled. “We need to come up with a plan to fight CP10 and save Cheren!”

“I’m really not… in the right shape at the moment.” Maddy grunted.

“Yeah, and… we don’t even know where CP10’s base is.” Chris grunted.

“They make their base in Enies Lobby,” Caesar explained, “which is on the base of Mt. Mariejoa and is also home to the Teen Ninjas. That place is loaded with heavily-trained fighters, or so I heard. They aren’t all on CP10’s level, but you’ll have a rough time breaking in.”

“Sigh…” Francis sighed. “We should be thankful Maddy survived… but if she becomes the Seventh Light, they might kill Cheren. That’s why I have to wonder… would Cheren want that?”

“In other words, it’s him… or the universe.” Miyuki replied.

“What are ye two saying?!” Panini shouted. “We can’t let Cheren die!”

“But Maddy needs to become the Seventh Light!” Francis argued. “And the Apocalypse is roughly 13 days away! Do we really have time and energy to use on these assassins?”

“The two goals are the same.” MaKayla said, her eyes closed. “I’m remembering something… A vision I saw in Great Clock. The Poneglyph that Maddy must read in order to awaken is in Enies Lobby.”

“You are extremely convenient.” Lola remarked.

“So for Maddy to awaken… we really have to beat CP10.” Chris construed.

Maddy lay on her back and stared at the darkening sky. She didn’t have the strength or the motivation to challenge them again… not in this state. With less than half a month to go, she feared if she could regain her strength. Even then, it wouldn’t be enough. “Woof-woof-woof-woof!” She heard a familiar barking, and before she knew it, a little brown puppy had pranced up to lick her face.

“Sparky! I missed you!” She petted him.

“Oh, right… I was wondering why space was so relaxing.” Zach sighed.

“Let’s all go up to the Moonbase.” Aurora said with a smile. “We’re probably attracting too much attention.”

Star Train

“Yikes, what happened to her?” Nefarious asked as they viewed the screen from Sparky’s view. “She’s a mess.”
It must have been one walloping of a welcome-home party.” Lawrence replied.

“Well, whatever it was, they have to find the Poneglyph soon. If she waits until the Apocalypse arrives, they wouldn’t get to the Clock in time. But when she does, we’ll catch her!”

“Sir, I am concerned about your plans in… detaining her. I am aware that Sparky is meant to catch her in a chi-blocked net and fly back to our headquarters… but we haven’t the slightest clue in what is meant to happen. What if this power Lord Gnik talks about is something on a god’s level?”

“A human becoming a god, don’t be silly, Lawrence. Besides, even if catching her fails, don’t forget I have other methods. If she does not comply with my demands afterwards, I have loads of atomic bombs ready to TURN this planet into metal!”

G.U.N. Area Delta

When we last saw Team Emily, they had reunited with Mike Strongarm and boarded a Pipo Monkey ship that was set for a GUN base. The base was built within a towering cliffside, where the ship landed on a platform. The group had a lovely view of the sun setting over the forest. “The R.A.D.A.R.’s picking up oodles of monkeys.” Emily reported. “I dunno what they’re doing here, but no need to change the pattern.”

“So, this is all you’ve been doing all month?” Mike asked with a wry smirk.

“I know, and I barely got to explore an ounce of Adams Tech.” Emily wept. “I really hate Specter for ruining my vacation. When I get my hands on him, I’m gonna…?” Sarah tapped her shoulder and indicated the wandering Dr. Cooper.

Sheldon was slightly bent over, looking around as his nose twitched. “There is a familiar scent about.” He walked up to the cliff wall and sniffed up it. “Sniiiiiff. It’s lavender… mixed with lemon-flavored foot cream. And is that, sniiiiiff… hair shampoo that smells like pet spray!” He turned around with a beaming face, “She’s here! Amy Farrah Fowler is here!”

“Then you have served your purpose just to tell us that.” Gary remarked.

“Perfect!” Emily raised her net confidently. “We’ll wrangle up these primates and rescue Sheldon’s lady of the evening! Maybe we’ll even go on a double date.” She moved up to Mike, who blushed.

“Eh he… As much as I would love to, we should report to Moonbase after this, see how everyone’s doing.”

“You’re right. Looking back, I originally wanted to find Specter to see if he has anything to do with the Apocalypse. Sector V said he’s allied with Team Gnik… It’s now or never if we wanna get information from him.” (Play “Air Fleet” from Shadow the Hedgehog)

Stage 64: GUN Area Delta

Mission: Catch 20 monkeys and rescue Amy Farrah Fowler!

Addendum: Emily’s 7th stage, expect something good to happen.

To start the stage, Emily had to put on her M.A.G.N.E.B.O.O.T.S. and walk across a metal path on the cliffside, over a line of cannons that launched missiles. Emily had to be wary and avoid the missiles, which would then explode like fireworks in the sky. “Well, it’s nice to know my tax is going to wasted ammunition.” Sheldon said. Once Emily was across, she could turn a gear and make a walkway emerge from the wall above the cannons. Unfortunately, the missiles destroyed the walkway whenever they launched, but Emily could keep turning the wheel so it’d come out again. The kids had to use their Super Hoops to cross. Since Sheldon didn’t have one, he hopped on Mike’s shoulders while the boy rode his bike across.

Team Emily encountered the first two Pipo Monkeys, using jetpacks to fly over the edge of the platform. The main trio was easily able to shoot them down with homing slingshot pellets—however, the monkeys took the fall down to the forest. They reactivated their jetpacks and resumed flying, safe from their range. Mike was opening the crates that were placed around the platform, and discovered a small metal object the size of a pellet. “Emily, what do you think this is?”

Emily took the strange pellet and decided to launch it at one of the monkeys. It morphed into a hand, grabbed the ape, and returned to its master, allowing Emily to net the ape. “A Returning Grabber Pellet! You’re the best, Mike!” She used it to catch the other ape. Afterwards, the team climbed to a higher platform using a pipe on the cliffside – which had an electric hole in its middle. They set foot on the upper platform and had view of a distant platform on their left. There was a chain device, and Emily launched the Return Pellet over to grab the chain’s end and pull it to them. She could hold the pellet in place while Sarah and Gary use their Balance Bikes to ride across the chain. They pressed a switch that stretched a bridge for the others to cross.

The canyon wall turned a corner from which a bridge crossed to a platform. A Pipo Monkey controlled a GUN Hot Shot, a large robot with only two legs and twin missile launchers. It blasted missiles all around the bridge, so the group hid behind the corner while Sheldon controlled the C.A.M.-C.A.R. across the bridge. He avoided the missiles and found an opening behind the robot’s foot, driving the car in to finagle with its insides. The Hot Shot fell defeated and the monkey jumped around in panic, only to be caught in Emily’s net. The team saw a metal ladder above, leading atop the cliff. Emily flew her S.P.E.C.S. up there to hack into a control panel, making the ladder lower.

They climbed up and had a greater view of more of the base. This area had more room as it wasn’t stationed on the cliff’s side. Laser Hunter robots were shooting them, and the GUN symbols on their bodies were replaced with Specter’s face. Sarah bounced between the robots with the Super Hoop and took them out, and Gary shot down the above GUN Beetles with his slingshot. There was nothing else on this platform except for boxes of provisions, as well as a switch on the edge of the cliff, overlooking a distant area of the base. Emily hit the switch, and a swarm of GUN Beetles flew out of that base’s garage, pairs of two connected via solid energy beams. “Swing Test Level 2 initiated.”

“Well, if Level 2 makes the jump to ‘hanging precariously over a thousand feet’, what does Level 1 require?” Sheldon asked with fear of heights.

“You two can hide in the Infi-Cube until we’re across.” Emily said, holding out the small box.

“Don’t drop us, Em.” Mike winked, jumping in before Sheldon.

“I now have Mike trapped in a box!” Emily’s eyes brimmed with fantasy and desire.

“And you made the jump from ‘schoolgirl crush’ to ‘obsessed.’” Sarah remarked. The trio used their Sky Flyers while jumping the solid beams. Some Beetle pairs flew up and down, and one pair floated to and fro. Gary noticed a monkey casually seated on a Beetle and proceeded to catch it. At the end of the course, they could land on a platform on the cliffside. From there, they used Sky Flyer to go up two more platforms, and the third one had a Spring Rhino. They used the spring to bounce up over the cliff, releasing Sheldon and Mike as they viewed the garage entrance.
Opening the garage required the capture of two monkeys, and one of the monkeys available was controlling a GUN Flying Dog. Sarah and Gary took the liberty of dodging its missiles and shooting it with explosive pellets, while Emily noticed another Pipo throwing grenades from the garage roof. She climbed a flagpole to get to the roof and catch the ape, and she had a lovely view as the Flying Dog crashed and Sarah caught its primate pilot. The garage opened, and a road that looked like a plane’s airway led into it. “I say we do like we did Viridi’s!” Mike exclaimed.

“On bikes!” Emily popped their bikes out of the Infi-Cube. Sheldon once again sat in the basket of Sarah’s bike as they sped into the tunnel, using headlights to see. Mini warplanes were being launched from the dark, forcing the bikers to jump. At the end of the tunnel, a red stoplight turned green, and a glass capsule containing a Pipo opened. They made it through without taking damage, so they could catch the monkey for their reward. They entered a door in the back, and were instantly bombarded with gunfire by Laser Hunters.

The team bypassed the robots and ran to a ledge over an electric pool. Another Beetle Bar pair was across the pool, and Emily could pull them over with the Return Pellet. When she released, the Beetles would float across, taking the kids with them when they clutched on. (“I am not a kid.” Sheldon informed me thusly.) They faced another electric river, in which Emily had to launch the Return Pellet to pull over a model plane, which hung by strings on the ceiling. They hopped on and rode the plane across, but it tilted left or right by their weight. Their team stood on either end to balance the weight, but there were shifts when they had to jump lasers or catch two floating Pipo Monkeys. (Why the lasers didn’t cut the strings was beyond Sheldon.)

They could jump off on a ledge with a door that brought them outside. They were on a low point on a cliff, and they could use their Balance Bikes to ride across a rail, having to jump lasers shooting from the wall. They stopped on a platform with a turret, which they would have to use to shoot down remote-control GUN Jets. While Mike took this liberty, Sheldon used the C.A.M.-C.A.R. to drive along a very thin ledge on the cliff. The thin bridge stretched away from the cliff and became zigzaggy and snaky, but Sheldon was careful in guiding the toy car across. The car pressed a switch, and a solid energy path was spawned from the thin bridge.

They raced across and each took turns grabbing a hook that would reel them above the cliff. Emily noticed another hook above where that one originated, using Sky Flyer to reach it as it lifted her to a monkey hiding in a floating metal crate. She netted the ape and dropped back to her friends. The area above this cliff had a forest area, and the R.A.D.A.R. picked up a monkey hiding in a tree. Gary bashed the tree with the Stun Club, the ape fell out, and what happened next was obvious. A steep ramp sloped down and would fly them up to a cliff with another garage, and their bikes were the only means of gaining momentum to do this.

They entered a vast room with a tall platform that had multiple computers on it. On their left were three GUN soldiers tied to wooden pegs and a monkey that threatened to shoot them. They chose not to get close in case the monkey would shoot them, so they trekked the spiral path that led up to the platform. There were two monkeys wearing labcoats. One was wasting time on Bananabook and another was looking up female chimps. (It seems Tiny Kong made the cover on Darn Pretty Mammals again.)

The team netted the monkeys, and from here there was a zipline that led down to the gunner monkey. First, they curiously examined the large computers, which each changed screens when they were hit by the Stun Clubs. One of the computers displayed a code: E / 23-9-12-12 / 13-1-11-5 / 1 / 4-9-1-13-15-14-4. The computer facing the gunner monkey switched to Camera Mode, and recorded the monkey threatening the agents.

If I believe in Ape Jesus hard enough, they will die. The caption for the monkey read. The caption for the gun said, If I believe in Gun Jesus hard enough, all of them will die.

Mike grabbed the zipline, flew down, and kicked the ape in the head, holding him down until Sarah ran up and netted the gunner. They cut the GUN agents free afterwards. “Oh, thank you!” one agent saluted. “Those apes showed up on the 5th and we’ve been fighting them ever since. It was going well until a black monkey in a cape showed up.”

“That sounds like Specter’s henchman, Mojo!” Emily remembered.

“Given that he kept repeating his name, that sounds about right.” The second agent replied. “In fact, on the same day he took over the base, his apes brought in a woman with black hair.”

“Do you know where they could be keeping her now?” Sheldon asked.

“The prison wing is further down that hall.” The first agent pointed. “After that, you need to cross a bridge outside. We use impenetrable glass cages. But I can’t guess why they would need to lock her up.”

“We’ll tell you if we find out.” Emily promised, though she didn’t mean it. The five proceeded to the designated hall, which sloped down as GUN Rhinos drove up. Gary ran at them with the Super Hoop and bounced between them like a pinball, destroying each Rhino in one strike of the hoop’s charge. The slope stopped at a corner and would resume down a right hall. In that corner, an electric pipe led up to the ceiling where a Pipo Monkey was tampering with a wire socket. Emily used her auto-pedaling Balance Bike to ride up the pipe. Given the vertical angle and no prior momentum acquired, it took a minute and a half to actually get high enough and net the ape.

In the second hall, a GUN Hornet locked on from the end and launched homing missiles. Sheldon went in front so all the missiles locked onto him, using his Observation Haki to dodge each of them. This left the Hornet helpless, so Sarah shot it down with the slingshot. A door led them outside to an enclosed canyon, where a long bridge stretched to the opposite end. Two Hot Shots were already set to begin blasting them, but Emily and Mike each hid under a Hot Shot so the robots would strike each other with their own missiles. They could catch the monkeys that came out.

They came to a set of platforms that were electrified. There was a tunnel that cut through the electric, fit for the C.A.M.-C.A.R. to drive into. Sheldon parked the car on a little switch on the other side and turned the electric off. When they crossed the platforms, they noticed a spidermonkey hidden inside one of them. A mini path would lead off the main path and into an opening of the platform, so Sheldon drove the toy car in there and caught the mini monkey.

Further down the bridge, GUN Beetles shot at them from overhead. To their right over the chasm, there was a series of harmless Beetles that led to one that a monkey was hanging from. Emily carefully jumped the Beetles like platforms, but since the ape’s Beetle was higher, she thought catching it would require a quick switch to the Sky Flyer. However, a Gold Beetle appeared beneath it, serving as a platform for Emily to stand on after catching the ape, but she quickly jumped back before the Gold Beetle vanished.

She returned to her friends, and the team had to ride their bikes across four rails that electrified at different intervals. They jumped between rails that weren’t electrified and made it across. The bridge ended almost eight feet before a door that had a large key in the center. There was a drawing above the door depicting three circles inside each other, with numbers on one corner of each one. Emily launched the Return Pellet to grab the key. Going by the diagram, she controlled the hand to turn the key northeast, and when she pulled, the center circle popped out. A ‘2’ was on the west side of the middle circle, so Emily turned it that way before pulling. She had to rotate to southeast for the third circle, pulling that segment out as the door opened.

A bridge stretched over for them to enter, and a sign on the hall’s ceiling read Prison Wing. Unfortunately, they were one monkey shy of completing the stage… Thankfully, a frightened ape was clutching the back of the sign. They shot it down with the slingshot and had him netted. (End song.)

The five turned a few corners in the quiet, vacant hall, glancing in the rooms that either had nothing or some unknown prisoner asleep behind a glass wall. When Mike peeked in one room, he called, “Guys, look over here!” They came to enter the room and saw a slightly pudgy woman with long black hair and glasses asleep on a vertically-standing bed, cuffed by her wrists and ankles. She was wearing a blue- and black-striped shirt with a black skirt, black stockings, and black shoes.

“Yes… it’s Amy.” Sheldon approached her.

“Now I’m wondering how you could smell her if she’s locked in there.” Sarah said.

“I have very keen senses, and Amy’s scent is… one of the heavier ones I remember.”

“Where’d you find this guy again?” Mike asked.

“In a bat cave,” said Emily. “Yalright, fellers, time to free this princess from the horrible demon that doth have her trapped! And hope we don’t have to go to another castle.”

“You are mistaken, because you see, YOU are the ones who are trapped!”

A trapdoor opened, dropping all five kids (plus adult) down a chute. They screamed upon descent and grunted after splashing in a puddle of filth. “Good Lord!” Sheldon said with disgust, shaking off a pizza slice. “We’re in a garbage chute!”

“Alright, who’s the Star Wars fanboy behind this insidious trap?!” Mike yelled.

A TV came on, depicting a black-furred monkey with a green face, blue suit, and striped dome helmet. “I am not a fan, nor a boy, and I do not know this Star Wars of which you speak. I am Mojo Jojo, the last of Specter’s simian officers, excluding the foolish human with abnormally round hair, and I have lured you here with the knowledge of Dr. Cooper’s trapped friend with the intention of executing you, and then I – Mojo Jojo – will return to Specter with a satisfactory report of your demise, because without your nuisance, we may begin the next step of our plan, which can only go smoothly with your destruction, for if you were to live, you would be a liability in our accomplishing of the-”

“LET US OUTTA HERE!” Emily kicked the wall.

“Ha ha! You are short on luck, because the trash compactors are now set to compact, as is their function, and the door will not open until the compacting is complete! You will be left as nothing more than discarded pancakes, never to be discovered before your remains are incinerated. START THE PROCESS!”

Alarms blared as the parallel walls began to close in. The trash was being shoved into piles as the five struggled to push the walls. “It’s no use, these walls are too strong! We have to escape with our nets!” Gary yelled.

“NO!” Emily yelled determinedly, hands pressed firmly against the moving crusher. “We’re so close to saving Amy, we have to find a way out!"

“I’m not seeing any exits!” Sheldon yelled.

“Come on, Emily, you’re smart! What are we going to do?!” Mike shouted.

Emily stopped pushing to catch her breath. The walls were ten seconds from closing, and only small space was left for them. The longer she kept her hands pressed on her wall, though she couldn’t explain it, she felt the strongest instinct that she could push it. Now there was only space for her friends to shove both walls with their hands and feet. Fearlessness flowing through her, Emily took a breath and gave one final push. “HAAAAAAH!”

In a sudden burst, the wall dented and shot back to its starting point. The other wall stopped. Sarah, Gary, Sheldon, and Mike gaped. Emily’s square-shaped eyes grew wide as she stared at her hand. She decided to approach the other wall, push it, and dented it as well. They had no words and no understanding. Emily formulated theories… It couldn’t be that she had superhuman strength because her one attempt to stop a rolling garbage boulder backfired. So that left the other theory:

“HOLY COW, I’M A METALBENDER!”

“A METALBENDER?!” Sarah and Gary screamed.

“This is insanity!” Emily stared at her open hand, her fingers twitching. “I can’t be a bender, I’ve never bent an element before in my life! Well, except when the Undersea Lab let me play with the photon particle tubes—but this would make me an earthbender, and that’s illogical, because my feet are too flimsy to adapt to the earth! Oooo, but is that a chi flow I see in my hand?” she asked sadly. “No no no!” She shook. “I’m a microbiologist, so if I’m an earthbender, I’d have to become a geologist—and geology’s not even a real science!! WHAT IS HAPPENING TO ME?!”

“Emily, it’s okay!” Mike hugged her. “You saved our lives, that’s all that matters!”

“Look, the door’s open!” Sarah indicated, standing in the exit. “Let’s get outta here!”

“I’m sensing a conscious presence up this hallway!” Sheldon yelled, running ahead. “It might be Mojo!”

Control room

“No! This is impossible!” Mojo yelled, watching the five escape on his camera. “They could not have escaped, because the trash compactor is inescapable. If it were that easy, all the trash could escape, which it has not, ergo the likelihood of their escape-”

“Is as likely as the length of your SENTENCES!” Emily burst into the room.

“AAAAH!” Mojo whipped out a laser gun, which Emily bashed away before whacking Mojo with the Stun Club. Sarah and Gary scored some hits until the ape was left unconscious. “Back to the zoo with you!” Emily caught Mojo in her net and watched him teleport.

Sheldon searched through the terminals and noticed Amy’s room. “I can open her cell from here!” He pushed the button under her screen.

The glass cage opened and the Sleep Gas was sucked away. Team Emily relocated the room as the latter broke the cuffs with her club. Sarah and Gary caught Amy before she fell. “Yikes, this girl’s heavy!” Gary yelped.
“Be careful with her!” Sheldon cautioned. “Her arms aren’t meant to bend back at a full 90 degrees!”

“Then why don’t YOU help lift her!” Sarah argued.

“Of course not, I don’t know how long she’s been in here, what if they never bathed her?”

“Wh-Whuh… Who’s bathing?” Amy moaned softly. She regained control of her limbs as they helped her stand upright. Her eyes opened, and the blurry image formed into the mantis-like face of her friend. “Sheldon…”

“Amy…” Sheldon smiled.

“Awww, this is so romantic!” Emily hugged herself. “Hug and kiss, do whatever you gotta do!”

“Oh, I’d love to,” Sheldon said, “but we only engage in physical contact the third Tuesday of every month.”

“It’s necessary.” Amy agreed. “My mother believes too much physical contact would cause my hormones to overdevelop and result in mood swings. But Sheldon, what’s going on here? Am I still in the GUN base? W-Where’s Specter?”

“We believe Specter is elsewhere. I still don’t understand why Specter sought to kidnap you.
Judging from Dr. Tomoki’s dialogue, there was a greater goal in mind than wishing to enter my laboratory.”

“Yeah, Amy, why did Specter kidnap you?” Emily asked.

“I know why…” Amy said with regret in her voice. “It’s because I’m a World Leader’s apprentice.”

“A World Leader?” Mike repeated in shock.

“She means a World Government Leader.” Sheldon noted. “I understand the term ‘World Leader’ is unspecific as it could refer to any person who is a leader in our world. You confided in me that you were offered a position by Daphne Anderson, correct?”

“You’re right.” confirmed Amy.

“But the World Government’s security is supposed to be impregnable for their important officers.
Were you not considered valuable?”

“Oh, I was. But I let myself get captured on purpose.”

“Why?” asked Mike.

Amy needed a minute to collect her thoughts, but her expression was morbid. “I met Master Anderson four years ago when I traveled to Saudi Arabia to collect research funds. I’m engaged to a Saudi prince, you see, and it works in my favor.”

“Something we plan to work out in the future.” Sheldon noted.

“I told Master Anderson about my work in neurobiology. At the time, I was studying ways to manipulate the brain’s structure, alter its thoughts, which would ergo change a person’s emotions.”

“That sounds really dark.” Mike said.
“I was only limiting the tests to animals. But Daphne took interest in the research and offered to let me work for her. She gave me funding and new materials like Psychic Crystals. But… after a few years, I realized what the Government planned to do with my research. They were capturing powerful benders and wanted me to brainwash them into thinking the World Leaders were their friends. They planned to use a device called the ‘Sun Chi Lantern’ to steal their bending and add it to their own.”

“That’s horrible!” Emily gasped.

“I know… and I was looking for a means of escape for a long time. Still, it wasn’t too bad. I did get to meet a new friend… Oh, that reminds me! Hey, you can come out!” Amy shouted to no one. The five exchanged glances. “Hello? Are you awake in there? Hang on.” Amy bashed the right side of her head. “I feel ya— Outta there— Nnn! Nn!” She kept slapping herself. With one stronger blow, a small thing shot out of her left ear and hit the floor.

The creature stirred, awoke, and stretched back to its normal baby size. It was a silver-bodied being with a gold head and two tails. “Mmmmmm!” She yawned. “Too much earwax!”

“UXIE!” Emily screamed.

The Firstborn of Knowledge opened her golden eyes. “EMILY! IT’S YOU!” Her eyes widened and sparkled.

“DON’T LOOK HER IN THE EYE!” Sarah and Gary shut theirs.

“I don’t have that curse, anymore!” Uxie floated up and faced Amy. “By the way, real smart thinking! Pretending you had skin termites to give yourself an excuse to go outside and get captured by the apes? Ingenious!”

“I learn from the best, bestie!” Amy grinned.

“Wait, how do you two know each other?” Mike asked.

“My sisters and I were captured by the Government three years ago.” Uxie explained. “I ended up in the possession of this big-brained gal! You see, ever since your father set me free, I developed an addiction to… shrinking myself and going in peoples’ brains to examine their IQ. And Amy’s is one of the brightest brains I’ve seen!”

“Your standards must not be very high.” Sheldon laughed like a panting puppy. “If I let you in my brain, you would be overwhelmed, and probably die. So I can’t allow you entry. It’d be tricky to disinfect without bruising anything.”

“Hey Uxie, I just learned I’m a metalbender!” Emily beamed.

“Really, you just learned now?” Uxie cocked a brow. “I knew the minute you were born. I thought someone smart as you would’ve guessed sooner.”

“Uh… of course I did.” She blushed, shifting her feet. “I just wondered if… you did.”

“No offense, but it seems like a lot of work to hire you to brainwash people.” Sarah commented. “Can’t the Government just fire up a machine or a magic spell to do it just like that?”

“My research would’ve resulted in a permanent mind-manipulation.” Amy replied. “Mind-control using swirling pictures or fancy words never lasts. Even Sleeper Agents need to be deactivated after sometime.”
“You know, if we’re gonna talk about disturbing science experiments,” Mike intervened, “I wanna do it in the comfort of our Moonbase, so can we please go?”

“Huhu, okay.” Emily changed the setting for her T.E.L.A.-N.E.T.. “I’ll warp us to the museum where we’ll take a ship up to Moonbase. You first, Uxie!” She caught the Firstborn in the teleporting net, and one-by-one warped the others.

Enies Lobby

Corks popped out of soda bottles as their contents came out in fizz. “CP10, let’s have a drink!” Eldwin spoke joyfully in his thuggish bully voice. He was a chubby teenager wearing Battle Ready Armor, and had a cast around his neck. “We scared those KNDorks so hard, they peed blood!”

“Hold a nail-hammerin’ second there!” Bob contradicted. “You didn’t do a thing!”

“I’m the mastermind running things from the shadows!” Eldwin set the soda bottles on the table in the center of the couches where the assassins were seated. The tall windows behind Eldwin’s desk provided natural light in this white marble chamber. “Your fearless leader, Eldwin Savinsky! And I couldn’t be more proud of you. My subordinates deserve the rarest and tastiest sodas known only to Nimbi and merpeople!”

“I don’t wanna drink this kid stuff!” Ernie complained. “What about beer, don’t we have any beer, bawk bagawk?”

“Alcohol kills the immune system, Chick.” Rickey said, wiping his soda bottle. “But you can always trust soda to keep ya energized.” He drank.

“Supreme Leader Eldwin.” Nya LaMar and her friend, Tracy entered the room. “You have a visitor. Fukuro from CP9.”

“Chapapa!” A large, yellow, egg-shaped man with a big zipper mouth and green hair, wearing a black tux, rolled in. “On behalf of CP9, the Statistics Cipher Pol, I am here for a progress report on your training.”

“Analyzing our Power Levels again.” Leslie said embarrassed.

“Hey, not many people have that ability, you should count yourself lucky!” Eldwin yelled.

“But my Power Level is always so tiny.” She flushed.

“I will now analyze.” Fukuro bundled up. “You first, chapapa!” He rolled at Leslie, who was quick to jump and stomp him hard as she could with her high-heel foot. “Leslie Meijer, your Doriki is: 1200.”

“Not bad.” Rickey smiled and patted her.

“I’ve seen better.” She still blushed.

“You next.” Fukuro rolled at Rickey, who punched him back. “Lime Rickey, your Level is: 3000.”

“Nice!”

Fukuro approached Megan, whose hand was outreached. Fukuro shook it—resulting in a painful shock from the hand zapper. He was soot-covered afterwards. “Miranda Cosgrove, your Power Level is: 2000.”
“MY NAME IS MEGAN!!”

“THAT’S what I mean, bawk-bagawk!” Ernie smirked.

Number 4 transformed into a giant bee and stung Fukuro. “CP10 Number 4, you are currently: 3500.” Fukuro rolled at Bob, who jumped and kicked both feet like a Mario Brother. “Bob the Builder, your Power Level is: 1700.”

“Can’t win ’em all!” Bob smiled and shrugged.

“Eldwin, your turn.” The Teen Leader approached the egg man and dealt a weak punch. “Your Doriki is a whopping: 9. How sad, chapapa.”

“My power is BRAIN power!” Eldwin argued.

“And lastly, I need Rob Lucci’s-”

The man had already become a lion, grabbed Fukuro in his teeth, and swung him around before throwing him against the wall. He reverted to human as the egg man weakly got up. “As expected… Rob Lucci’s Power Level is… 5500.”

“5500?!” Ernie freaked out. “That’s almost as powerful as President Morgan, BAGAWK!”

“This concludes the progress report. I’ll be leaving now.” With that, Fukuro jumped out the window and flew to the sky, giving one final note:

CHAPAPA, PA PA PA!

“Eldwin, now that we’re here, can I ask you something?” Nya asked.

“You just did, Nya.” Eldwin retorted as he filled a glass with soda. “What’s to stop you from asking again?”

“Since we brought Cheren to Mariejoa, don’t you think the brats will be after him? So what if Maddy comes here and finds the Gibberish Rock? Even Lucci couldn’t kill her!”

“If I recall, you had a perfect chance to kill her yourself once.” Lucci narrowed his eyes at her. “It would have saved us a lot of trouble.”

“She would’ve been dead if it wasn’t for Hoagie!” Nya yelled in his face. “You’re the hit assassin, so I expected more from y-”

Lucci punched her to the floor. He then pinned her neck under his foot as she failed to push him off. “You fail to notice spies in your midst… You Teen Ninjas are an incompetent force. Why the Government trusts a bunch of delinquents is beyond me. Your existence merely encourages the Kids Next Door into thinking they’re in charge. We should be rid of you.”

“Hey hey, easy, Lucci!” Eldwin tugged the man’s arm. “We’re all on the same team here!”

“Nya, you okay?” Tracy helped her friend to her feet.

Nya clasped her neck and caught her breath. “I’m fine. Let’s just go, Tracy.” Nya glanced at Lucci with spite as they left.
“What a bitch, coo-kachoo!” Hattori flapped his wings.

“Anyhoo, I’m not worried.” Eldwin said. “Even if the Kids Next Door show up, we got more than enough firepower to smash them. But Leslie, just so you won’t feel upset about your Power Level, I got a present for ya.” He went to his desk and pulled out a magenta lemon with swirly lines.

“Voila! A Devil Fruit I’ve been saving up! What it does, I dunno. But if you want, you can find out.”

“Wouldn’t you rather eat it yourself?” Number 4 asked.

“Hey, I’m a boy with very little. I at least wanna be able to swim. So Leslie, wanna give it a taste? If not, I’ll give it to Ernie.”

“I don’t need a crappy metahuman power, bawk-bagawk.”

“Well, I don’t want this to go stale, so maybe I’ll give it to one of my Teens-”

“Give it to me!” Leslie jumped over and snatched the lemon. She took forceful bites out of the sour fruit and made sure to swallow all of it. “OHH!” A strong sensation coursed inside her.

“Uuuuur…” She clenched her stomach and trembled. “UUUUAH!…” The agents were anticipating the first use of her power any minute. “…I have to use the bathroom.” They collapsed anime style.

“Yeah, those things is nasty, aren’t they?” Rickey blushed.

“Definitely!” Leslie bolted.

“If she’s going to waste time trying to adjust to a new power, she’ll never be prepared to face our enemies when they come.” Lucci said.

“The Kids Next Door wouldn’t come too soon after that performance.” Eldwin figured, pouring another soda glass. “We have plenty of time to prepare ourselves. And plenty of prisoners to kill if things go bad.”

Mariejoa; Midway Peak

Two Shy Guys carried an unconscious Cheren into a dark room. They dropped the boy as he moaned and awakened. “Where am I…”

“Well, this isn’t The Chronicler’s den, unfortunately.” A familiar woman’s voice said from a table, where she was playing chess with the General Guy.

“Aunt Morgan!” Cheren jumped to his feet. “You brought me here?!”

“Somewhat… I instructed CP10 to retrieve you while they were planning their assassinations. And before you ask, I didn’t know whom they would be assassinating, let alone Kuki. How unlucky… Because all of your operatives showed up, they had to hold off on killing the Light, but they were able to retrieve you ahead of schedule.” She knocked one of General’s pieces down. “Pity. If she had just died, no more of my old friends would have to meet a fate.”

Anger fueling him, Cheren reached for his sword—but it was gone. “My sword! Where are my weapons?!”

“It would seem they brought you unarmed. On May 15th, you challenged me to a duel. I agreed to fight you in five days. The day after tomorrow will be the appointed day. Just wanted to make sure you showed up in time. I can show you to the gymnasium where you may train until then. You probably didn’t expect to have to use your own strength.”

Cheren glared. “How can you talk about Kuki’s death so casually? Why did you stop caring about them? Your old friends, don’t they mean anything to you?”

“Of course they did.” Morgan said seriously. “Even after I began training under a World Leader, Nigel, Kuki, Kami, and all those people still held a place in my heart. I was distraught when The King killed my cousin… I was angry at him. But I repressed my feelings because I knew… it’s all for a greater good. The King plans to save everyone… humans and spirits. He plans to save us from the Apocalypse and give us the peaceful world we longed for. I wish to go to that world… and never have to live with these feelings.”

“You want to let everybody and everything be destroyed just to escape your own sorrow? You’re no different from Dimentia or Gnaa.”

“You’re wrong. Dimentia’s fear was growing up, and Gnaa only desired darkness. They were both petty ambitions. But His Highness… King Andrew knows that the Kids Next Door will fail. He knows what power is destroying this universe, what’s causing the Apocalypse. He will take us to a world where that power will never be a burden to us.” Morgan stared at her hand. “You would think we psychicbenders have a free spirit because our powers are centered around Imagination. But at some point… Reality breaks the Imaginary.”

“…” Cheren kept glaring. “Well, won’t it be hell for you when King Andrew’s ambitions only make things worse. And wouldn’t it be downright embarrassing if I mopped the floor with him, too.”

“Don’t even make such a joke.”

“Oh, I’m not joking.” Cheren turned and walked away. “See you in two days.”

As he walked slowly, Cheren bowed his head and closed his eyes. Sunnī… I dunno if you can hear me, but I’m in Mariejoa. I’m gonna have to fight Morgan in a couple days. Bring the Sacred Treasures if you can. If I’m being honest, I may need a little help defeating her.

KND Moonbase

Sunnī’s eyes shot open. She took off her telepathic enhancement helmet and ran out to the bridge where the many sectors gathered. “Guys! I just heard Cheren, he’s at Mariejoa, in Aunt Morgan’s place!”

“So that’s where they took him!” Sugar exclaimed. “He challenged Morgan to a fight and she accepted.”

“If she planned to fight Cheren, then CP10 wouldn’t kill him if you attacked their base.” Azelf deduced.

“But what about Sheila’s mom?” Mason asked. “They still have her as their trump card.”

“Oh, my mom is tough, she wouldn’t let ’erself be skinned by some big-nosed British blokes.” Sheila said with a scowl.

“If only Jasper and Horace were behind this.” Mason chuckled.

“Look, we got more than enough operatives to gang up on CP10 and a Teen Ninja army.” Lee Andrew reasoned. “We’ll ambush them and save Marine before they even have a chance!”

“Don’t you kids ever listen to me?” Caesar Clown questioned. “Enies Lobby is a powerful stronghold that has long been prepared for such an invasion! Speaking of strong holds, could you loosen these chi-blocking cuffs?” He was in cuffs, as well as a leash that Mocha was holding.

“Down boy.” said Mocha.

“Frankly, a large-scale invasion is all I can think of.” Francis replied. “At least with all our strongest sectors. Hopefully, Sector SA can finish the mission they took up so they can join.”

“We’re talking too much brute force.” Carol inferred. “What happened to brains winning battles?”

“We are usin’ brains!” Anthony yelled. “We’re thinkin’ how to ATTACK them!”

“Anthony’s plan is to charge on in like a bull.” Aranea smirked. “Earthbender style.”

“Oh, please. How many earthbenders run in and scream every place they burst into?”

“EVERYBODY EVERYBODY EVERYBODY!” Emily Garley burst into the bridge and started running around. Her initial outburst startled some operatives. “Guys guys guys! I just learned I’m a metalbender! Check it out!” Emily pulled out some nickels and made them levitate in the air. “Da dana daaaa! And that’s not even the best part, we broke into a GUN base, saved this nerd woman, and look who she had with her!”

“UXIIIIIEEE!” Azelf and Mesprit screamed.

“SISSIIIIIEES!” Uxie flew up and embraced the two in hugs as they twirled around and around.

“Emily’s a metalbender?” Anthony asked with interest.

“Anthony, she could be the Hornfels descendant!” Aranea said logically. “We should take her to someone who might know.”

“Sigh.” Sunni relieved the shock from the scare. “I’m really not up for anymore surprises today.”

“I’M HOOOOOOME!” Darcy Chariton burst in, scaring her sister.

Sunnim whipped around. “DARCY!” The two ran up and embraced in hugs. “WHERE HAVE YOU BEEN?!”

“ON A POKÉMON JOURNEY!”

“How many’d you catch?!”

“ZERO! It was just a training journey.” Darcy blushed. “SUPER BORIIING! But now I know five different Elemental Martial Arts!”

“However, we didn’t come back empty-handed.” Lucario stepped in, holding a long-tailed white cat in his arms. “We have recovered Mew.”

Sunnim and other operatives hurried over to see. The Firstborn looked pale and was moaning weakly. “Mewwww…”

“Team Rocket has been sapping his energy all this time.” Lucario said. “Using him to restore a strange corpse.”
“What corpse?” Lee Andrew asked.

“What corpse?” Lee Andrew asked. “Some guy with white hair and dragon tattoos.” Darcy recalled. “I wanted to call that chapter ‘The Guy With the Dragon Tattoos.’”

Sector RZ gasped, for they happened to know one man who fit the description. Lee Andrew glanced toward the infirmary where his fallen sister lay. It was then realization struck. “I just thought of something… Leaving Mew out,” he pointed at each Firstborn/Guardian, “we have Uxie, Mesprit, Azelf, Manaphy, Midna, Crest, and… whatever yours is.” He pointed at Sugar last. “So that makes seven all-powerful Firstborn free for our use… So, uh, WHY DON’T WE USE THEM?!”

“We’re not allowed to harm mortals.” The Lake Trio chorused.

“And even under our Guardians’ orders, we can’t go too heavy.” Midna followed.

“I never realized how useless the Firstborn were.” Artie commented.

“Look, if our enemy is a god of supreme power, give us a call.” Azelf remarked.

“Until then, I would be happy to offer some education.” Uxie said proudly. “Uxie, the goddess who knows 20,000 things.”

“Adults know at least 20,000 words by the time they’re older, among other things.” Michelle said with a smirk. “Why ask you when I can ask my parents?”

Uxie floated over and glared directly in the five-year-old’s face. “Smarty-pants…” Uxie sniffed Michelle. “You smell… weird.”

“IT WASN’T ME!” Michelle pushed her away. “It was Anthony!”

“It was Anthony WHAT?!” her brother yelled with a blush.

“…” Uxie floated away, eying Michelle with suspicion.

“Hey, what about GKND?” Harvey asked. “You think they’d want in on this?”

“Unfortunately,” Panini reported from the Global Tactical Station, “even though our intergalactic coms should be functional again, the GKND STILL isn’t responding!” The screen was static. “Ugh, just what is going on up there?”

“Hey Darcy, we could take Mew in the medical wing so me and Manaphy could heal him.” Melody offered.

“We appreciate your aid.” Lucario bowed. “But I fear it will not be enough.”

“Mew probably wants to lay down, at least.” Darcy said.

Maddy was currently at rest in the infirmary, and Zach had fallen asleep while watching her. She looked right to see Shade on the next-door bed. The echidna had finally woken up and was scratching her fur. “I hope I didn’t attract fleas…” She glanced over. “Oh, Maddy. I’m glad you’re okay.”

“You, too… What did you do back there, Shade?”

“I used Primal Mode. It’s a power that Mobians have. We revert to our primal instincts in order to prevail in battle. Using it too much would drain our humanity. I didn’t think I could beat him with it, but I thought I could save you.”

“Well, thanks. …The others are saying the Poneglyph is in Enies Lobby. That means we’ll have to beat CP10 to get to it. But if that’s where it is… wouldn’t that mean I have to beat them?”

“It’s the ultimate Chosen One cliché. But given your current state, I don’t think it’s possible. The rest of us will have to fight and bring you to the Poneglyph.”

“I can’t let them do that, Shade. I think…I think I should go on my own.” She weakly climbed off her bed.

“Why in the world would you?”

“You spent your life waiting for me because you knew I was the Light… and CP10’s hurting everyone because they know I’m the Light.” Maddy limped toward the exit. “Either I die or… I read that Gibberish Rock. Everybody’s getting involved because of me… but I’m not gonna let that happen, anymore. I’m going to them to get it over with.”

“You’ll kill yourself.” Shade got up to grab her arm. “If the World Government fears the prophecy… they’ll do everything they can to stop you. You need us.”

“I thought you wanted me to be the Chosen One you waited for? If I let you all fight for me, how can I be?”

“I…I don’t know.” Shade let her hand droop. She looked down, melancholy. “It was supposed to be your destiny… but was destiny wrong? Just what is meant to be… What is meant to happen to us…”

The two remained and reflected her words for minutes without end. Neither of them could think of an answer. The only sound in the room were Zach’s loud snores.

I’ve been thinking about changing the name from “CP10 Saga” to “Plot Twist Saga”! Then just throwing M. Night Shyamalan in to say “What a twist!” XD Next time, we will do a Sandman stage. Amy Farrah Fowler is from Big Bang Theory and Fukuro comes from One Piece’s original CP9.
Let’s Be Monsters

Chapter Summary

The Kids Next Door must train for the upcoming battle!

Alright, we’re about to do a Sandman stage, and it should be his second-to-last stage in this story. We’ll also introduce a new crossover sector that only had small appearances before.

Chapter 67: Let’s Be Monsters

Desert in Saudi Arabia

After taking a moment to repair the Sandmobile’s windshield, the Sandman Trio arrived near the designated area marked on the map with Riddler’s coordinates. Sandman landed the aircraft in the open desert as they climbed out under the star-filled night sky. “Hey, Nolan?” said Yuki. “Thanks for playing ‘Arabian Nights’ in the Sandmobile.”

“It was only fitting.” Nolan smiled.

“Nothing helps you get adjusted to a culture like an American song about said culture.” Wiccan replied. “Which makes just as much sense as a magical city in the middle of an empty flippin’ desert.”

“The Riddler said it was under an invisibility spell. You need a passport to get in. So it should be no coincidence that, after our trophy hunt, this was in my mailbox.” He pulled out a passport that had a picture of Man With the Red Eye.

“Okay, we’re using someone’s stolen identity. To whom do we show it, exactly?” Crystal asked, showing further doubt in the magic city’s existence.

Nolan looked around before pointing, “That rock has a slot we can put it in. That reminds me, Yuki, there’s a disguise in the trunk, you may wanna don it.”

Yuki opened the trunk and found a black coat, mask that went over his right eye, a silver wig, and a contact lens that turned his left eye red. “You look just like him!” Crystal beamed. “Your white face really does him justice.”

“I aim to please.” Yuki took the passport. “Now watch a master at work.” He stuck the ID into the thin slot within the tall rock.

A snake popped out of the sand and gazed at Yuki with glowing yellow eyes. “Passport identity: Man With the Red Eye. Last visited: June 8, 2024. Please provide password to verify identity.”

“Remember it?” Nolan whispered.

“Sun Sun Lamp Moon.” Yuki stated.

“Password accepted. Enter.” The snake sunk down, and before their eyes, a line of light-pink light shaped into a doorway. The three exchanged curious glances and entered. They passed through a narrow hall lined with torches, and by the time they reached the end, their jaws were dropped. (Play “India” from Sly 2. (I know we’re in Arabia, but it fits. :P))

The city of Magnostadt was enormous, composed of towers and buildings designed like Arabian palaces and walkways connecting them. The city appeared to have several floors worth of streets, as there were shops on the ground and on the building walkways – at least according to Sandman’s map. There were pillars with colorful glowing orbs that served as streetlights, people using magic carpets to get around the city, and patrolling guards that were wearing black vests, white pants, and turbans (like the guards from Aladdin).

“Attention people of Magnostadt.” A British accent echoed from a PA. “It appears a rather nasty visitor has entered the city. All guards are to be on high alert, and all residents are to return to their homes.”

“Riiight, because Red Eye is kind of the most wanted man in the world.” Yuki hurriedly took off his disguise.

“That was him.” Sandman said seriously. “Dr. Strange. Time to start looking for his hideout. There’s bound to be a few guards that know.”

Stage 65: Magnostadt

Mission: Find Hugo Strange’s hideout.

Act 1

The entrance was set on a walkway above twin sets of stairs. The heroes glided to the city’s ground, composed of various yards and paved sidewalks in-between. A muscular guard was crossing a small bridge over a river. Sandman rolled up quietly, jumped to grab the large guard around his chest and mouth, and ducked sideways to bash his head against the ground, knocking him unconscious. “If he’s walking around a yard, he’s probably a low-level guard.” Nolan reasoned.

The way out of this garden was blocked by a magical barrier between two buildings, and a glowing keyhole beside it. “You know, it dawns on me,” Crystal began, “in a city of gravity-defying carpets, I have a staff that does that!” With that, she sat on her staff and floated up. “I’ll get a bird’s-eye view of the area.”

She was nearly shot at from above, and three guards hovered overhead on carpets, aiming magic wands. “Carpets are the only permitted flying materials in Magnostadt!”

“Okay, okay!” Crystal lowered to the floor and stepped off her staff. “Sigh… At least it’s not for being a woman with free will.”

“Hey, if Kami still had her Keyblade, why don’t you have yours, Nolan?” Yuki questioned.

“Left it on the bus.” Nolan answered sarcastically. There was a purple- and yellow-striped magic carpet floating in front of a monkey statue within the wall. The statue had a fire symbol above it, so Crystal stood on the carpet as she shot fire into the ape’s open mouth. The statue chewed it and said, “THAAANK YOOOOOU.” The magic carpet floated up so Crystal could jump onto a walkway. From there, a bridge led over to a roofed platform where a slender, dual-sword guard was stationed. When Crystal tried to cross the bridge, the guard tossed one of his swords like a boomerang to push her back. Another carpet floated under the bridge and around to the back of the platform, so Crystal glided onto it. Once behind the platform, she bashed the back of the guard’s head and swiped the large key on his belt.

She dropped back to the ground and used the key to open the magic barrier. Team Sandman entered the town square, which had a beautiful fountain to compliment the scenery, and a suspended walkway overhead. The heroes chose to sneak past the guards and go up the wide stairs past the fountain. A wide street led toward a humongous, three-tower building that was labeled Magnostadt Academy. Nolan viewed his wheelchair computer and said, “According to Wikipedia, this is Arabia’s magic school.”

“If Dr. Strange is up to something diabolical, it wouldn’t be in such a public place.”

“Oh, and how many diabolical secrets did Hogwarts have?”

“Grab onto me, we’ll get a better view from that tower.” The two held onto Sandman as he grappled up to a building on their right, and from there launched to a tower with a round roof and crescent moon flag. Sandman zoomed his mask-binoculars- “Whooaaal!” He almost rolled off the slanted roof before Yuki and Wiccan grabbed him.

“Easy there, Hercules.” said Yuki.

“Hercules?” Crystal questioned.

“’Cause he’s on a roll!”

“Stick with Aladdin references.”

“HEEEEEELLLLP!”

“What was that?” Sandman activated Detective Vision and located the source of the sound. He detected the skeletons of a band of men, and two of them were holding a smaller body by the arms. “This way.” They glided to the ground and hid behind a building. They viewed a small park where a team of guards were dragging a child in a white priestess robe toward a street.

“I just wanted some apples, let me GOOO!” The child jumped and swung her feet, but remained bound by the guards.

“Enough! We know what that watch is, Master Strange told us to be on lookout for brats like you! Now behave or we’ll cut off your hands along with that robe.”

Sandman scanned the guards, and two of them were marked pink. “Those two have magic wands, but the rest have swords. Be careful when you charge them. Hey, you boys ever consider Juvy?!” Nolan was quick to speed at the guards, who whipped to face him. The wizards in question cast streams of fire, Nolan dodging left and tossing boomerangs to hit their wands and disarm. The child used the distraction to bite the hands of both her captors, running behind a bush to watch the battle.

The wizards recovered their wands, and when Yuki charged at them, they zapped a spell that flipped and landed him on his back. The other wizard shot fire at Crystal, who sucked it into her staff and backfired at the guard, afterwards bashing him unconscious. A dual-sword guard lashed his blades at Yuki, cutting his coat with his nimble moves, until Yuki froze his feet to the ground, jumped, and kicked the trapped guard in the head. The two muscular guards that held the girl captive grabbed Sandman from both sides, but he pulled his arms free, briefly punched them, grabbed their heads, and slammed them to the ground. The remaining wizard cast a whirlwind spell, which Wiccan again sucked into her staff, batted the wizard upward, then shot the wind at him to send him flying.

Only one swordsman remained, but Yuki was quick to wrap arms around his neck from behind. “Hey, guy! Tell us where Master Strange lives?”

“Master Strange is underground! You will never find him!”

“Tell us how to get underground?”

“NEVER! I will DIE before I reveal the secrets! Or rather because I do not know the entrance.”

“Well, thanks anyway.” Yuki fell forward and squished the guard underneath to knock him out.

Sandman detected the girl still behind the bush and rolled over. His friends joined as the girl peeked up and stared at them with pretty green eyes. She looked nine years old, with bluish-white hair, clothed in a white priestess uniform with golden edges, and she had light-peach skin. “You’re not Arabian… Who are you?”

“I’m Index! Will you feed me?” she asked with a loud, high voice.

“You’re British.” Crystal noticed. “Are you a nun or something?”

“Yah. So you gonna feed me or what?”

“What?” Nolan asked.

“I’m hungry! Give me food!” She shook her arms angrily.

“I didn’t bring any food! I would lend you money, but my American dollars probably won’t work here. Speaking of, what are you doing in this country?”

“I’m starving…” She laid on the ground, making a fake morbid expression. “Why do you want me to die…”

“Sigh, I don’t have time for this. Just get somewhere safe, we’re busy.” Sandman turned to roll away.

The girl jumped over his shoulder. “Where you going?”

“Hey!” Sandman grabbed her arm and held her up. “If you need help getting home, just tell us…” Her sleeve drooped in this position, and Nolan spotted the small watch on her arm. “Wait, that’s a KND communicator! Are you an operative?”

“HAOMP!” She bit his arm through the coat.

“YOW!” He released.

“What kind of name is Index?” Crystal questioned.

“It’s a codename! Numbuh Index. Now give me food!”

“Why should we?!?” Yuki argued.

“Because I know where the underground hideout is!”
“Y…You do?” asked Sandman.

“Yeah, and I’ll tell you! But only when you bring me food.”

“You can’t be serious.”

“I’m gonna die…” Index laid on the ground again.

“Ugh… If you’re a KND operative, you might be telling the truth. Fine, we’ll look for food.”

“EXCELLENT!” She jumped back up. “Oh, you can borrow this as thanks for saving me.” She gave Sandman a flute. “I got it from a friend, so bring it back.”

Sandman got the Snake Charmer! Snakes can’t resist the sound of this flute! Play it and they’ll help you!

“I’m not leaving ’til my tummy is full!” Index was ready with a knife and fork. “Bring me a buffet!”

Mission Update: Bring food to this brat.

“I HEARD that!”

Sandman typed ‘Provisions’ into his digital map and marked three key areas in Magnostadt. They made their way to an area nearby, where a large quantity of food was located at the top of a tower. The tower was across a large pool and the walkway was too far and high to grapple to. However, there was a wood pot on the edge of the pool, and a snake peeped out of it. “Hmm… Crystal, stand on that.” Nolan instructed. The witch stood on the lid of the pot while Sandman played the Snake Charmer. Crystal felt the lid bob up and down before the 10-foot-long snake POPPED out like a spring, flying Crystal up toward the tower walkway.

The path led around part of the tower, but the witch would have to jump across open window shutters next. She jumped the shutters quickly as they would close in an instant. Crystal could climb a ladder to the next floor of the tower, standing on a safe platform as she watched a guard float over window shutters on a magic carpet, a searchlight aimed down. When the guard floated away, she jumped the shutters and hid within a large keyhole-shaped hole in the wall. The guard passed without knowing, letting Crystal make it across.

The witch stuck her staff into a hole in the wall, leapt on her horizontal staff, and quickly jumped and pulled it out to stick into another hole. She could jump to a new walkway that looped around to an open doorway. “Why are we doing what Mr. Strange says?” Crystal hid behind the door with a start, peeping in to see two guards guarding a watermelon pile. “He’s a nobody from Germany.”

“The World Leaders favor the man to great extent.” The other guard said. Crystal used a tiny ledge under the walkway to sneak under their vision, balancing carefully while crouching. “I don’t know what project he is working on, but I hear lots of rich nobles are helping fund it. He even got magic dust from Schnee Inc..”

“What if he is milking our land for its magic? Are we supposed to stand by and let him?”

“What choice do we have? The World Leaders are his shield.”

Crystal climbed a rope to a ledge around the roof of the tower. There was an open window behind the guards and over the watermelons. Crystal set her staff to float inside while she hung onto it with her feet, grabbing a single heavy watermelon upside-down. This should be more than enough to fill that girl’s stomach. She flipped back up with the melon in both arms. To get down quicker, she let herself fall off the tower, then told her staff to float before hitting the ground.

Team Sandman returned to Index as the former cut the melon in half with his boomerang. “Here you go.” Sandman said. “Enjoy it.”

“NOM NOM NOM NOM NOM!” Index gobbled and swallowed both halves in seconds. “STILL hungry!”

“YOU CAN’T BE SERIOUS!” Wiccan screamed.

“GIVE ME MORE!”

“UGH! Let’s go somewhere else.” Sandman huffed in aggravation.

They headed toward the east side of Magnostadt, crossing a roofed bridge that arched up over a river. Wizard guards used magic to bring columns of water up to strike the heroes, but Yuki froze the water in icebending while Sandman rolled up to pounce the wizards and punch them senseless. After the bridge, the heroes grappled to some house roofs and bypassed the guards on the streets.

The area where the food was located was over another pool with vultures hovering over.

There was a shaking box with a picture of a spring. Sandman played the Snake Charmer, and a green rattlesnake with a big nose popped out, curled and bouncing like a spring. “This’ll be a change of pace.” Nolan hopped on the rattlesnake. He played quick notes on his flute that tempted the snake to charge energy, and when he stopped playing, the snake flew high and was able to bounce over the vultures. Sandman bounced the snake over a road with spike traps and sword guards that tried to slice them.

Wizards were perched on pillars and shot Blasting Spells, and would only be KO’ed when Rattly performs a Super Bounce on their heads. A brick wall blocked the way, but was still nothing to a Super Bounce. The last obstacle between Sandman and some food was a long pool with visible tiles underneath. Sandman played the Snake Charmer, and several snakes pushed those tiles up. Rattly could use the tiles as platforms and bring Sandman across. They found an abandoned truck with boxes of raw meat, so Sandman decided to take a few hotdogs.

He returned to his friends and sadly abandoned Rattly to get back on his wheelchair. However, he chucked one of the hotdogs into his mouth as a reward. “Crystal, you mind cooking these?” Nolan asked. “It’s probably a deal-breaker if the food’s bad.”

“Right away, boss.” Crystal blew a light fire from her staff to cook the dogs. Despite not having ketchup or buns, they brought the small meat strips to Index.

She slurped them down her throat in pairs of two. “So gooood! Now I want dessert! Give me ice cream!”

Yuki formed an icicle and held it to her. “Close enough, right??”

“BLEH!” Index smacked it away. “I don’t want it if it tastes like old man!”

“DARN IT!” Yuki cursed. “No matter how many times I wash it, I can’t get his smell off!”

“Fine, we’ll bring you ice cream.” Sandman complied. “The map says there’s some in the southwest.”

Team Sandman hurried past the town square, but it seems the area they needed to be was on a higher level. They headed east of the square and went up some stairs, bringing them to the bridge that crossed over the square. Sandman chucked boomerangs to stun the guards before punching them off the bridge (a short fall wasn’t fatal to them). The bridge led them to a shopping district of town. There was a stand run by a blue-robed peddler called “Discount Genie Lamps,” with shelves lined with the alleged lamps. Not responsible for unsatisfactory wishes, the sign said.

They grappled to the roofs to find an ice cream carriage driving aimlessly around the streets. It was a magic-run carriage as no horse was pulling it. “So, we gonna knock him out and take some?” Yuki asked.

“Come on, that’s mean.” Nolan said. “Just use your bending and pull one out of the back.”

“Sounds easy enough to work. But can we stop him first? I’d rather get behind and see what I’m bending, and it won’t be easy if he’s moving.”

“No problem.” Sandman sent the Grapple-Cam to pursue the carriage as Yuki followed it. The Grapple-Cam landed on the street where the carriage would drive. DEAD KID ON THE ROAD!

The carriage driver stopped the vehicle, startled by the voice with no source. Yuki got behind the carriage and peeked through the back curtain. There was a magic spell that kept the inside cold. Several ice cream containers were frozen together, so Yuki used his bending to detach the ice and retrieve a vanilla and chocolate. He slipped out while the driver was still distracted by the Grapple-Cam. “Heh heh heh. Watch that girl explode like the rat from Conker’s Bad Fur Day.” Yuki snickered.

When the trio returned to Index, the nun grabbed a spoon and dealt away with both buckets in one minute. “Ahhhh… I’m full now.” She fell on her back.

“Great, now tell us how to get underground!” Sandman demanded.

“Sure, sure… The entrance is in Town Square, but you need a password… Could you carry me?”

“On you, Yuki.”

“What a drag.” Yuki lifted the child over his shoulder. They made their way to Town Square, where four guards were still circling the fountain.

“It’s the fountain, isn’t it? That’s why they’re so busy here. Yuki, put her down, we’ll ambush three and jump the fourth one together.” The three heroes picked a guard to sneak up on, and simultaneously knocked them out with a Stealth Attack. The fourth guard whipped out his sword to retaliate- “BZZZZ!” He was KO’ed by a shock rod wielded by Index.

“Ta-daaaa!” The girl cheered. “4x4 tech at its best!”

“Didn’t take long for that food to settle.” Yuki remarked.

“Well, as thanks for the food, I’ll open the hideout for you.” With that, Numbuh Index walked to the front of the fountain.

“Let me guess, it’s ‘Open Sesame.’”

Index spoke to the fountain with a smile: “The password is… Fath alttariq ‘iilaa qudri wayabead kl sharr.”

“YOU REMEMBER THAT?!” The heroes screamed.
The fountain deactivated and turned counterclockwise, lifting a few inches as that chunk of the ground slid aside. A stairwell led underground. “And there you go!” Index said cheerily. “If you find any food down there, bring it to me!” She skipped off.

“Odd one, isn’t she?” Crystal raised a brow.

“I really should ask how she knew it.” Nolan said. “Hmm… Well, now or never. Let’s go in.” (End song.)

Act 2

Sandman used a flashlight to see down the dark stairs, which ended in a tunnel with dusty pots and rolled-up carpets. The cave turned left, and red magic orbs served as light. The heroes gathered on a large carpet on the edge of a long pit. There was another monkey statue with a fire symbol on their left, and when Crystal shot fire at it, the magic carpet floated across the pit. “THAAAANK YOOOOU!” It stopped between two statues with ice symbols. “Shoot them at the same time!” Nolan yelled. Crystal and Yuki both hit a statue with ice to keep the carpet floating. The next statues required lightning and wind, in other words Sandman’s Shock Rod and Crystal’s gust function. The last statues wanted gas and light, Sandman used the gas gun and Crystal cast Lumos Solem.

They could disembark the carpet and enter a vast room with a bottomless pit and several wide pillars. There was a big hole facing their cliff from the nearest pillar. When Sandman played the Snake Charmer, a long snake tongue stretched out and touched their ledge. Crystal stepped on it, and a huge green snake followed suit and tried to snap her. Crystal jumped back and let the snake crash against the cliff, and the heroes could cross him like a bridge while he was stunned.

They made it atop the pillar it came from, and they repeated the process with a snake in the next pillar. The pillar didn’t have a top, so they had to call another snake from a left pillar. They could rest on that pillar, then they could call a snake from the next one. There was another hole above that snake’s hole, and playing the Snake Charmer caused a tongue to stick out as well. Crystal jumped on the tongue, dodged the snake’s bite, and Sandman quickly grappled onto the snake before the one they were on retracted. They got onto the platform and could glide down to a tunnel.

At the end of the tunnel, they stopped to view a vast room with posh blue walls and floors, golden columns and railing, and chandeliers. A great gold statue of Dr. Strange took up the center of the room. Sandman detected ten guards in the facinity, armed with magic guns, as well as wind shields to keep back intruders. “Attention all staff. There is a Kids Next Door ship flying in the skies above Magnostadt. I suspect it is the Arabian branch, Sector SA. I am going to activate the Sky Fortress and take Subject: Dark Heart. Deal with the intruders in the hideout.” (Play “You Should Have Listened to my Warning” from Arkham City.)

“We can’t stop these guards with those shields on.” Nolan said. “And I see snipers on those chandeliers.” The red lines of the sniper rifles formed an ‘X’ in front of the statue. “Why are they facing the…!” Nolan zoomed in on the statue’s mouth, seeing the white gem with a tornado symbol. “Is that generating the wind shields? Crystal, go for the left sniper, I got the right.” Sandman sent the Grapple-Cam up to the right chandelier, positioning behind the sniper. When Crystal flew up and KO’ed the left, the right sniper tried to shoot her, only to be bopped by the Grapple-Cam’s claw. Crystal quickly flew over and bashed him senseless.

Since the room was chi-blocked, Yuki couldn’t icebend, so he shot ice chunks from his pack to hit the statue’s mouth and break the Wind Stone. The eight remaining guards panicked when their defenses fell, and Yuki hurried up to knock out the guard closest to him. Crystal looked down and spotted a guard running around the statue, so when he least expected, Crystal dropped down and balanced on her staff, floating over and jumping on him. Sandman rolled down to the middle walkway, and a guard on his left spotted him and aimed his wand. Sandman noticed the hole under the guard, and could play the Snake Charmer to have a snake shoot up and snap his leg. Sandman rolled over to KO the guard in his weak moment.

Yuki hid behind a column and waited for a guard to come up. When he did, Yuki froze the floor with his ice pack, tripped the guard, and stomped his head. When Crystal flew around the room, she drew the attention of two guards and dodged their bullet-like spells. Sandman grappled up to one of them and knocked him out, then shot his Shock Rod to stun the other one. Crystal flew down and bashed him to sleep with her staff. Another guard charged up to Sandman, who blew gas between them and escaped. The guard looked around in a panic, but was caught from behind by his opponent.

“Protego!” The final guard projected a magic bubble around himself. “You’re not getting the better of me! Nothing breaks my bubble!”

Sandman noticed the iPhone on the guard’s belt. “We’ll see about that.” He called Mr. Game-and-Watch on his wristwatch and aimed it at the phone. The 2-D Program got into the phone, which started vibrating furiously. The guard was startled to the point that he dropped his spell, allowing Yuki to finish him off. (End song.)

“I think we got them all!” Crystal said proudly.

“Excellent job, team!” Sandman raised a fist. “But we’re not through yet. It’s time to confront Strange!”

The wall behind the statue had an elevator with a golden barred door. All Sandman had to do was decode a password ‘Fairytale’ so the door would open. Instead of travel up or down, the elevator went directly straight. Ding! After five minutes, the opposite door opened. Team Sandman entered a chamber lit with purple lights. There were huge class containers filled with shadows, much like Cheshire, except they were frowning in despair. There were jars of colorful magic dust, and the lids read Property of Schnee Inc.

The heroes entered a passage filled with capsules of black, gas-like substance. Crystal was intrigued by the substance and approached one. “I wonder what it is…” She reached a finger to it. Sandman had been scanning the substance. A bunch of XXXX’s appeared on his goggles. He gasped- “DON’T TOUCH IT!” and pulled Crystal back. “It’s some kind of Death Magic! I mean, the scanner’s comparing it to Death Magic, but it’s… unfamiliar.”

“Guys, look at that.” Yuki pointed. Their gaze fell to the center of the room, where a shining purple crystal was placed on a pedestal.

The crystal contained what appeared to be a teenage boy with black hair, a white toga, and black robe. He had black eyes, forced open wide like his mouth, and his hands were pressed against the crystal. His pupils seemed to be in their direction. “Who is that?” Crystal whispered.

Nolan scanned the crystal and its prisoner. “The crystal is made of magic energy, though I can’t get more info. The Internet’s not recognizing this guy… Wait, I do have a match! The picture looks like it was made in Medieval Days… His name is-”

“Zeref.” They whipped around to find Dr. Strange himself. The bald, dark-skinned doctor wore a black, armored uniform with small pipes flowing with colorful substance. “Or as I call him, Subject: Dark Heart.”

“Dr. Strange!” Sandman exclaimed. Before either hero had a chance to attack, they were trapped in a purple diamond barrier.

“I cannot have you disrupting this operation, Sandman.” Hugo had his right hand raised, and it was glowing purple. “We have so little time until this dreaded Apocalypse is said to arrive. The World Leaders wish to act soon. For months, they have been collecting the material and sending it to me because I am the only one capable of fulfilling the task. Imagine how difficult it was securing such a powerful subject. But I have Underworld connections, you see. Not the criminal underworld, of course. The real Underworld. And it took a great deal of persuasion for them to give him to me.”

“What are you doing with all this?! Why all the captured shadows?”

“The World Government needs absolute control for their plan, Sandman. All our enemies will be crushed and we will rid the world of evil. Once I have the remaining materials, the Grand Inferius will be complete.”

“What’s the Grand Inferius?” Yuki questioned.

“I could tell you… but I would much rather let you be part of it.” Hugo smirked.

The chamber shook. A massive area of the desert opened outside, and from the sands emerged a flying fortress with powerful sapphire engines and sturdy propellers. The underground hideout was now airborne, set to leave the desert. “The World Leaders plan to act soon.” Strange said. “If all else fails, the Grand Inferius will be their final play. Soon, we will have the final materials, and the Final War will commence!”

“Finals finals finals, what is this a test?! Yuki retorted. “It’s summer break, after all.” Hugo smiled. “But first, what do you think of my suit? We of the Strange Family have studied ways to harness and control the force known as magic. By injecting myself with small doses of concentrated magic, my body was able to adapt and control it. This suit amplifies my power, and it shall be your demise!” He clenched his hand, tightening the space inside the diamond barrier.

The three heroes were steadily squishing together, but before the doctor could see victory, a hole was blown in the ceiling. The impact caused Hugo to drop the barrier. “There he is, Mr. Gas Mask!” Index’s voice called. There was a S.C.A.M.P.E.R. III floating outside. “Morg, kick his butt!”

“I will!” Someone jumped out of the ship and quaked the floor upon landing. A 12-year-old girl with magenta hair and eyes, wearing a white robe, stood firm on her bare feet as she faced Strange. Morgiana leapt to stomp the doctor, but Strange dodged, resulting in a dent in the floor from her stomp. Strange used Levitation Magic to pick her up, only to be jumped by Sandman from behind.

The doctor blew him off with a magic pulse, but Morgiana recovered and kicked Strange with enough force to blow him against the wall. She faced the crystallized man and leapt over. “Should I try to free this person?”

“DO NOT TOUCH HIM!” Strange’s eyes glowed purple as he concentrated power into a small sphere. Gravity was centered on that sphere and was drawing the four in.

“That guy’s power levels are off the charts!” another girl’s voice yelled. “We’re getting you out of there!” The ship blasted lasers down to break Strange’s hold, then it stretched a claw down to pull the four up.

“That will do.” Strange smiled. “This will not be our last encounter, Sandman. When you see me again, I will have achieved victory.” He conjured a vortex between his hands and expanded it to encase the entire fortress. It vanished in the sky, leaving only the S.C.A.M.P.E.R. III.

Team Sandman and Morgiana recomposed and viewed around the ship. “Whaddid I tell you?” asked a pink Goomba with a blonde ponytail and archaeologist hat. “It’s Sandman, the one and only!”

“I know! It’s even cooler watching him in action!” A Japanese girl with light-blue eyes and short hair beamed. She wore a school uniform and was ten years old.

“I found him FIRST!” Index yelled.

“Index?” Crystal said. “Who are you kids?”

“Duh, we’re Sector SA!” The Goomba jumped and twirled. “Numbuh Mark, Goombella at your service!”

“Numbuh Chapter, Morgiana.” the magenta-haired said.

“Numbuh Index!” the nun introduced again. “Uh… Index!”

“That can’t be your real name.” Crystal replied.

“I’m the leader.” the Japanese girl said. “Numbuh Period, Nagisa.”

“Shouldn’t the Arab girl be leader of the Arabian sector?” Yuki questioned. “Come to think of it, why is she the only Arab?”

“We know it’s weird, we just thought it was the best fit for us.” Goombella said. “But never mind us, who’d-a thought the noble Sandman would come to visit us!” :heart: “I’m from Roguetown. But I’m sure you know THAT, Mr. York. ’Second Index told us it was you, we HAD to come rescue!”

“Heheh.” Nolan blushed. “Good thing I did that then.”

“Hey, you wanna punch me in the head?”

“What?”

“Come on, it won’t hurt, trust me!” Goombella said excitedly.

“Um… Maybe just a little.” Nolan threw a weak punch at Goombella’s helmet.

“Nolan York, your Power Level is: 2300! Nice!”

“You can scan Power Levels?”

“Yep! And it was an honor to finally scan yours.” Goombella jumped and kissed Nolan on the cheek.

“Er… yeah.” He blushed. “So, why were you in Magnostadt again?”
“A few nights ago, we were doing reconnaissance and saw that Dr. Strange man go to Magnostadt.” Nagisa explained. “Index went into Magnostadt and got close enough to hear the password. If you’re wondering how she could remember it, it’s because she has a Perfect Memory. No joke, she remembers anything she sees or hears!”

“Wouldn’t she need a passport to get in?”

“Right here!” Index raised her Magnostadt passport. “By the way, when I jumped your shoulder, I put a little camera on your hat.” At this, Sandman took off his hat and spotted the tiny camera on the black strip.

“We used it to see into the hideout from you.” Nagisa said. “Given how much trouble the World Government’s been giving us, I guess we were right to check on that man.”

“But I never would’ve guessed he was hiding Zeref.” Index said. “He was a character in a story called Fairy Sisters. I KNEW it was a real story!”

“Well, thanks for the assist, but we need to find where Dr. Strange fled!” Sandman yelled. “If he was serious, it won’t be long until he enacts his plan.”

“We’d love to help, but we’re busy with other agendas.” Nagisa replied. “The Kids Next Door are planning an attack on Enies Lobby and we want to join in.”

“You can drop us off by my Sandmobile. But if you do catch wind of Dr. Strange, we’d like you to contact us.” Sandman held his wristwatch up to Nagisa. “I’m sending my number to you.”

Nagisa pulled out her phone and saw Mr. Game-and-Watch dancing on it. “Uhhh… Sure.” She blushed.

“Don’t worry, he’s not asking for a date.” Crystal patted Nagisa’s head. “Though he seems to have a fondness for girls with odd hair.”

“… … … I’m a boy.”

Crystal’s heart shattered like glass from the utter embarrassment. “I’m terribly sorry for my mistake, Sir.”

“If you didn’t wanna confuse people, you shouldn’t make your codename ‘Numbuh Period.’” Yuki commented.

“PERVERT!!” Index shouted.

“What?! I was just saying that-”

“HAAAMMP!” The nun leapt and chewed painfully on Yuki’s head.

“YOW!!”

KND Moonbase

The treehouse had gone quiet and most of the operatives returned to their sectors. Except for the night guards, there was scarcely a soul around. Maddy was unable to sleep for several reasons – one of them being she had a few naps after the battle. Shade was asleep on the floor beside her bed. Maddy was still wrapped in bandages, but the stinging pain seems to have subsided. She climbed out of bed, careful not to wake Shade, and put on her clothes.
Walking casually past the night guards, Maddy headed for the hangar and prepared to board a S.P.R.A.Y.S.H.I.P. “Where you going.” a boy’s voice said. She turned to see Chris leaning on his sector’s C.O.O.L.-B.U.S.

“I was gonna crash into Enies Lobby and try to find the Gibberish Rock before CP10 could get me.” She answered with no energy to try and lie or argue. “If I am the Chosen One, I won’t die.”

“Oh, cool. I was about to head there and just blow them up with Combustion Beam. Why come up with a million battle plans, it’s easier to go in and get it over with.”

“Sarcasm?”

“Nope.” Chris smiled, approaching her. “You and me, that’s all. Let’s go to Enies Lobby and burn it to the ground. We’ll drive your S.P.R.A.Y.S.H.I.P. if you want.”

“You mean it? ’Cause we’re really going there, no jokes.”

“I know that, but I don’t think YOU mean it.”

“I do mean it!”

“Fine, then let’s go!”

“Fine!”

They climbed in the S.P.R.A.Y.S.H.I.P. and started the engines. “…You don’t wanna go, do you?” Maddy asked.

“Not at all. I did at first, but now the mood doesn’t seem right.”

“Right. So, where do you wanna go?”

“The Los Angeles Beach. Some other people are there, you’ll see.”

_L.A. Beach_

“Hoooh... ho huuuum...” Manaphy was floating in the sea as the six other Firstborn held hands and circled around him. “HOOOH... ho HUUUM...” The full moon reflected on the surface. Its beauty paled to the voice of the Sea Prince. It may have been Manaphy’s song that was making the water glow… Or it could be Crest’s presence.

“Hey, Midna.” Crest spoke, holding the Twilight Princess’ hand. “If couples kiss under a full moon, you think that would boost my power?” Midna switched places with Meloetta beside her.

Their Guardians sat on the beach and eased their minds by watching the spirits dance. Sunni and Darcy held Mew in the water, hoping the song would heal him. Anthony and Michelle were also here as the sister swayed to the song. “The Firstborn haven’t been reunited in 20 years.” Chris said to Maddy. “I wonder if finding all of them will bring Arceus back…”

“He would be a big help.”

“Yeah… He was the one who started all this. And it all ends with us. You know… every night since this quest began, I’ve been up for five hours training.”

“With your Combustion Eye?”
“No, just in general. We were basically getting into a Firstborn Quest equivalent, I had to be stronger. And I still got beat by a giant chicken.”

“Five hours every night, no wonder.”

“No, I use this.” He took out a black mask with red eyes. “It’s an All-Night Mask Cheren brought home from Termina. You wear it and you never get sleepy, plus no crash later. It’s like an infinite 5-hour Energy. But I still get exhausted from exercise.”

“So much for my four-day Haki training…”

“I know… The minute that chicken wiped the floor with me… It was just like Sir Knightly back at Candy Island, I couldn’t beat him either. All this training and hard work… it amounts to nothing in the end. That’s the lesson I take.”

“That can’t be true. We’ve won countless times.”

“I know. But that’s the other thing… it never ends. Even if we blew through CP10 and you became the Light… things would only get worse. Whether the Government attacks us or whatever demon is pulling the strings, let’s face it. None of us are normal kids anymore. It’d be a stretch to say if we ever were kids.”

Chris unwrapped his headband and exposed his Combustion Eye. “Look at this eye.” Chris pointed at it. “The minute I was born, I was already a monster. If I exposed this eye, everyone would’ve hated me. And I hated myself because I was a monster. Heh heh heh…” Chris laughed and made a sardonic, frightening smile. “I still remember how you kept making fun of us. Benders and non-humans, we really were an odd bunch… and I kept telling you we’re no different from you ‘normal’ humans. Now I see the real meaning behind that. We’re cursed children who live cursed lives… It doesn’t matter how human we think we are. So why is there a reason to make fun of us? That’s how funny this is.”

“Chris…” Maddy felt concern for this behavior.

“And even after coming out with this eye, I didn’t wanna do too much damage with it! But what’s that gonna do, am I right? Even if I have a human heart with human feelings, even if I resent my demon roots… what does it matter for any of us? My point is, Maddy, that I don’t see a happy ending after this. Even if we keep saving the day… I don’t see one.”

“…” Maddy looked forward. Chris followed her gaze. It was then they realized the song had stopped. The Firstborn and the kids were looking at them, and had heard every word.

“Mana Mana…” Manaphy had tears pouring from his eyes, glinting in the moonlight. The speech must have traumatized the baby.

“Manaphy?” Melody picked her uncle up to console him.

“Phyyyy…” Manaphy made his tears float and cast them at Maddy and Chris. The touch of the spirit’s tears removed their injuries completely and the pain from existence.

“Tears of Light…” Lucario said with awe. “The mournful tears of a god cures all wounds. And yet…” He glanced at Mew. “It is not enough to restore the Ancestral Spirit…”

“Making a baby cry… How could you.” Chris and Maddy turned to the source of this man’s voice.

“RAYLEIGH!” Maddy gasped. “…No.” She shook her head. “You’re not real.”
“Hm hm, you got me.” Rayleigh stepped into the moonlight, making his playful smile shine. “I am a Zoni… but my memories and characteristics of the real Rayleigh are down to the nail. Even this one piece of hair that’s still blonde!” He tugged the blonde strand. “I came back because I knew you still needed my guidance. That was quite a speech you gave us, Mr. Uno… but so what?”

He stepped forward slowly. “Who cares if you’re humans… Who cares if you’re demons… Who cares if you’re gods? You’re this universe’s only hope. You make miracles happen! And the people of this universe CHEER the Kids Next Door! Perhaps there are some like the Government who fear you… but that doesn’t matter. You kids have a goal. If you don’t realize that goal, you’ll let everybody down! No matter what your future has in store, you need to see it to the end. You can call yourselves monsters… but you’re monsters with hearts and souls. And those are your true weapons. So, what now? You were going to attack CP10, right? Where’s that pent-up energy?”

Maddy and Chris exchanged looks. The former smiled and said, “Of course we were going to. It’s just we feel like… we slumped in our training.”

“Well, then I guess you need more. Children, follow me. My fellow Zoni should have gathered the others by now.”

KND Convention Center

Everyone in Sector V, Sector W, Sector W7, Sector IC, JP, KB, and the Moonbase commanders had come. Shade was here after learning Maddy had left the base. They gathered in the field to see Silvers Rayleigh and a swarm of Zoni. “Well, I do apologize for disrupting all of your bedtimes.” Rayleigh said. “But it seems you kids need a little help going forward. Orvus?”

“Thank you, Zoni 100472.” The Zoni leader bowed and floated above. “First, I would like to thank you kids for your assistance on Great Clock. To show my thanks, I am making a proposition: We Zoni will encase this entire field inside a Time Zone. While time moves ever so slowly outside, you will be inside putting yourselves through days of training. When you all think you are finished, you may merely say so. We wish to prepare you for the battles ahead.”

“No just CP10?” Mason asked.

“No, of course not. Naturally, you will be allowed breaks and refreshments, lest you destroy yourselves. But rest assured, you need not worry for the events outside the Time Zone. You’ll be a few days older than everyone else, but that shouldn’t be a big issue.”

“Hmm… Well, I’m game.” Karin agreed.

“Alright, let’s do it!” Ruby fist-palmed. “A few days, a few hours, it’s one long haul for me!”

“Okay, we will.” Maddy confirmed with sureness. The many operatives were all in accord. “CP10 won’t expect it.”

“Don’t leave me out!” Vanellope stomped forward confidently—glitch.

“Vanellope…” Dillon wanted to speak his concern.

“Be quiet, Dillon.” she yelled. “I might be just a broken Program to you, but I’m n—not!” Glitch. “I can get stronger just as well as you, you’ll see!”

“I’m glad you all feel the same.” Orvus smiled. “Then I would like to introduce your training instructors.”
The Zoni spawned open a portal, and in stepped several familiar faces. They introduced themselves: “Caesar Clown!”

“President Business!”

“Brook! Yohohoho!”

“Fegan Floop!”

“Me, of course.” Mom said smugly.

“Grandfather.” The son of Malladus appeared last.

“Brook!” Aurora beamed. “It’s been awhile!”

“Don’t be deceived.” Rayleigh smirked. “Brook is a Zoni, too.”

“It’s true.” The skeleton buzzed and briefly showed his Zoni form. “I am based from the real Brook, but my story and even those skeletons were a lie. I still want to see your panties.”

“STILL A CREEP!!” Haruka freaked.

“Even you, Lord Business?” Haylee asked.

“What? I’m glad I get to help you kids again.” Business smiled. “Especially when I learned Bob was involved.”

“Who the heck is Floop though?” Dillon asked.

“Duh, he’s the host of Floop’s Fooglies!” Zach replied. “It’s super cool!”

“I’m glad you think so, Zeak!” Floop walked up to him with a smile. “Because I’m here to train—” he tripped on a banana, “YOOOUUUUUU!” His body slipped across the ground like the curve of a “U” and flew up feet-first before hitting the ground. “And I’ve been told you’re friends of Wendy, so I agreed to it.”

“I’ll take it!” Zach beamed. “I’m so glad to be Zeak right now!”

“Get ready to be put through Hell, boy!” Grandfather smirked.

“Bring it on, Gramps!” Chris returned.

“The rest of you may train with each other.” Orvus said. “Let fast-forward training begin!” The Zoni encased the entire treehouse in a force-field where time inside moved incredibly fast. (Play “Immortals” by Fall Out Boy! Totally fits the mood!)

“The Prank-Prank Fruit is made of Psychic Chi.” Caesar Clown pointed a stick at blueprints of the fruit. “The user can make whatever little trap they dream up. It makes them a tough nut to deal with, but like with real psychicbenders, a mind that isn’t stable is their downfall.”

Shade threw rapid punches that Maddy blocked with Armament fists, unable to punch the echidna with Shade’s keen Observation. Maddy sensed Rayleigh behind her—she dodged and punched, but he sensed this and kicked her away. Shade threw shurikens, Maddy dodged, but stepped on a switch that flung darts at her, two of them blinding her. She sensed Shade and Rayleigh and managed to dodge their blows—only for Mocha to dog-pile on Maddy. The giant stood up and blushed, seeing her friend flat on her chest.
Zoni on Vanellope’s left—she zipped, on her right, zip, up-down-left-right-thisway-thatway. Vanellope kept at it until she could catch it, moving ever so faster. All this glitching wore her out, she stopped to catch her breath and let her pixels catch up. Dillon continued staring with concern, but was instantly grabbed in Midna’s Hair Hand, the Firstborn giving a reproving head-shake. Dillon broke free and stretched Mario to snatch her, but Midna dodged and sent streams of shadows to bind him. Dillon sunk in a Veil, but Midna spawned a Shadow Vortex on the ground to suck him in anyway.

Chris Uno swiftly dodged Grandfather’s beams, launching at him like a rocket, only for Ben to punch Chris away. Chris charged and threw Fire Fists at Grandfather’s body, but the former Demon King withstood, so Chris threw faster punches. Grandfather exploded a fire spire, blowing Chris skyward, then Ben shot up to punch the boy like a comet to the audience stands.

Caesar used his bending to release a cloud of toxins from different bottles, and Haruka was left to sort the mixed gasses in the correct bottles. However, her crazy uncle compressed some into Gas Bombs and threw them at her, blowing Haruka away. Meanwhile, Lord Business dropped piles of Legos around his area, and Haylee watched as he constructed an Avengers Heli-Carrier in seconds. Using her wrench, Haylee grabbed and threw Legos together, then ran up to build whatever came to mind, which in this case was a mini hotel with a couch and palm tree awkwardly sticking out—it crumbled.

Floop put a pebble under one of three cups and quickly shuffled them to confuse Zach. The boy thought carefully and concluded: the pebble was on Mars catching a movie with a coupon. Floop nodded, but he caught wind of the All-Knowing Cotton Swab in Zach’s brain. Zach panicked and called Milk Man (Jar Jar) to fly him away, but Floop called Kitty Patrol to have Milk Man file their tax claims.

After a day, they all were exhausted. Vanellope’s pixels had trouble reforming and little candles on Chris’s body dried his sweat. But the people singing this awesome song—Sugar and Harry Gilligan—created musical notes that pumped everyone up. With extra vocals from Meloetta, the kids were ready to keep going another day.

At Enies Lobby, Ernie the Chicken tore up countless punching bags of Peter Griffin. Megan Parker filled all the Teen Ninjas’ pants with Skunk Cream and attracted French skunks to love them. Lime Rickey peeped out of trapdoors at every point on the island. Bob built anti-KND cannons around every perimeter. Number 4 rested by a window, hearing ‘Mr. Beatles’ ringing in his head. Leslie Meijer was still throwing up in the toilet. Rob Lucci stood in the back of the base, staring at the Poneglyph.

At Midway Peak, Morgan Uno calmly drank coffee as she walked the halls, glancing at her tiny butler Benjamin in her pocket. She walked by the viewing window to the gym room. Cheren was besting Anti Guys left and right with his Demon State. She looked up and gasped in horror. A wood puppet of Doflamingo was hanging by the neck, and words carved in the opposite wall read FOR THE KING. Cheren glanced up at Morgan and spared a smirk. See you tomorrow, he mouthed.

Returning to the Convention Center, Maddy charged at Mocha’s leg for a headbutt, her forehead turned Armament, and the blow was able to bring the giant slight pain. Her Observation alert, Maddy dodged Shade’s shurikens, but Rayleigh snuck up and kicked her like a ball. Maddy dodged his following kicks and tried to punch him, but the elder evaded each throw and patted her head—flinging her away with the slight force.

Maddy held her throbbing head. She noticed Sparky watching from close by, panting happily.
Maddy smiled at her puppy and ran for the next round. Even in this Time Zone, Sparky’s vision was broadcasted to Dr. Nefarious, who had never taken his eyes off once. Lawrence kept bringing him nuts-and-bolts popcorn.

Mom showed Carol Masterson a map of Enies Lobby, and the computer pro marked down areas as she formed a plan. Haruka was able to contain the gasses in their bottles, but Caesar had taken this time to test Mason’s poisonbending. Mason grew tired countering his blows, and during his moment to rest, he pulled out his Gold Flurp. Haruka bent the soda out of its can, resting it on her hands as she tried to sense the harmful components.

Haylee whipped up a giant cannon from Legos, but it was crushed by Lord Business’ Lego wrecking ball. She used some pieces to make a Lego lightsaber, throwing it to cut the ball’s chain. Business retaliated by cutting some parts from that ball to make a Lego Pac-Man, throwing it over Haylee to trap her. Brook froze his and Aurora’s area in frigid ice, but Aurora used Fire Fury to melt it and replace with heat. She then quickly switched to Ice Fury and made it cold, then back to Fire Fury—she felt a painful strain and was cooled down by Brook’s ice.

At Great Clock, Bill Cipher sat close to a giant hourglass labeled Universe. The golden sands were close to hitting the bottom of the hourglass. Bill smiled and passed the time by snapping heads off dolls of the Pines and Bubble Dreamers.

Sheila Frantic used Midas Body and ran laps around the field, so fast none of the others saw her. After completing one of her rounds, her pedometer recorded 285,771 steps. Vanellope had gotten faster, zipping around the field in blinks, but still unable to catch the Zoni. She glitched so much—there were TWO Vanellopes! Both clones glitched with equal speed, surprising the Zoni by catching from both ends. Floop was teaching Zach the Classroom Attack, where depending on where you sit, you may either graduate with a belly-cleaners’ degree, a doctorate in zooatomy, or one or two associates in getting mauled by Italian turtles.

Sunny Chariton cut up a Creative Summons symbol and whipped Peas into existence, smiling at the tiny Friend on her shoulder. Swiftly, she cut more symbols and summoned Friends, trying to picture each one in a wink to spawn them quicker. Chris used both hands to block Grandfather’s heat vision, withstanding the heat and pushing closer to the elder. Grandfather shot a tiny laser from his finger, singing Chris and dropping his guard so he’d blast away.

Maddy hardened her arm to withstand Shade’s punch, and Shade dodged Maddy’s kick. Maddy dodged Rayleigh’s behind punch, threw one at his leg, he dodged back—Maddy sensed this and kicked toward him to punch his leg. Mocha ran to dive at Maddy, but she jumped on Mocha’s head and forcefully tugged her hair with Armament hands. Mocha winced from the tugs and tried to grab her, but Maddy kept a firm grip in her attempt to tame the giant.

Their final test was landing a blow on Azelf. The Firstborn was still and let herself be struck. All their Power Levels were recorded. Sheila Frantic: 4150. Chris Uno: 4095. Aurora Uno: 3900. Dillon York: 2032. Zach Murphy: 10. Maddy Murphy: 5005. Then Carol Masterson threw a punch at Azelf to see a level update: 12. (End song.)

“ALL RIGHT!” Carol cheered. “I got stronger!”

“What?!” Jinta shouted at Karin. “I have 1500 and you have 2040?! No fair!”

“Hey, I didn’t ask for ghost powers.”

“Hey, all I have is a teeny-weeny 0.5.” Aeincha blushed. “I’m weaker than a baby. Not like Mocha who’s-”
“SIX THOUSAAAAAAND!” Mocha flexed her superior muscles. “And that’s WITHOUT growing SUPERSIIIIZE!”

“Dammit!” Sheila cursed. “I coulda been higher if I weren’t sleeping all the time!”

“I think we’re ready to invade Enies Lobby!” Carol said, studying her online blueprints. “I’m surprised you helped us this far, Mom.”

“I expect a showdown with Morgan at the end of this.” Mom smirked. “Best to help you get through and make it.”

“I’ll be the one taking care of that.” Sunni used her psychic to lift the Sacred Casket, where the Three Treasures were contained. “While you guys are fighting CP10, I’m going to help Cheren. I think I should save my psychic for Morgan.”

“You were a great student, Haruka.” Caesar wiped an imaginary tear. “One day, perhaps you’ll make a more fantastic scientist than I.”

“Back on the leash for you.” Mocha caught him with the chi-leash.

“CURSE YOU, SUBJECT!”

“You’ve worked hard, every one of you.” Rayleigh said. “It’s time to put your skills to use. Lower the barrier.”

The Zoni disabled the Time Zone and exposed them to the light of day. The sky was clear as birds flew over. Five days of arduous training, enduring pain and sweat and heat, went by in ten hours.

And speaking of tireless training, work has been exhausting lately. :P Magnostadt comes from the anime Magi, as does Morgiana. Index is from A Certain Magical Index, Goombella is from Paper Mario, and Nagisa’s from Assassination Classroom. A couple shows I watched pretty recently, but nevertheless ideas brimmed in my head. ;P I was in the midst of developing Sector SA anyway, and I plan to make a story for them in the future. The far future, but still, you can consider this a prelude. Oh, and Rattly is from Donkey Kong Country. Next time, we go to Enies Lobby. And I finally have an excuse to play RWBY music!
Chapter Summary

Kimaya Heartly is sent to awaken Xehanort as a Darkness.

Well, I put this off long enough. Ready to find two more Darknesses? I am. :P This chapter comes before Chapter 68.

Chapter B-31: When Fate is Decided

Portal Chamber

Medusa approached the scanner and presented a Keyblade with a light-blue bar and a clock design for teeth, composed of intricate designs. The Multiverse Portal targeted a dimension marked with a Heartless emblem. “Destination set for: ‘Kingdom Hearts.’”

Nerehc played the Ocarina of Time, and Fi instructed the instrument to warp back 55 years. Medusa stared at the spinning blue portal before turning to her chosen candidate. “You remember why I brought you, correct?”

“Yeah.” Kimaya Heartly answered, still wearing her cowgirl uniform. “You said you would tell me about this Seven Lights stuff and why I got these keys. You said the ‘other Keeper of Keys’ was in that portal?”

“Yes, Kimaya. One of the Thirteen Darknesses, Master Xehanort resides in that dimension. Based on his information, Kingdom Hearts is the center of a Dimensional Fusion just like ours. His role in the prophecy is similar to yours, I presume. It’s only fitting you two should learn it together.”

“A’ight, then. This portal better not stretch me all funny.” Kimaya hopped on her skateboard and surfed through the Dimensional Byway.

“After she finds the Darkness, we don’t need this portal, anymore?” Nerehc asked for clarification.

“That’s right. Granted, it would be fun to explore the Multiverse, but… I have more important matters.” Medusa answered. “We still have one more Darkness to awaken after this.”

“But counting Xehanort, we only awakened 10 Darknesses. Were some of them already awakened?”

“Yes, two of them were, and I didn’t need to interfere. However, there’s another dilemma at hand: rescuing the Darknesses from Underworld Prison. I only succeeded in rescuing Teach… saving the others will require special help. We need the Firstborn.”

Dimension “Kingdom Hearts”

Kimaya skated through a sea of bubbles, some of which depicted a blonde-haired man with a goatee, a brown-haired girl with blue eyes, and what looked like Donald Duck and Goofy. She vanished in a gateway of light shaped like a keyhole. (Play “Hollow Bastion” from Kingdom
Kimaya landed on the base of a blue gorge where water seemed to flow upward along the walls. She gazed at the towering castle in the distance – pink smoke emitted from its towers, and it was marked with the Heartless emblem. Kimaya held up her key ring, then faced the castle again. “Whoever made up this prophecy… why’d they pick me, anyway?”

Stage B-27: Radiant Garden

Mission: Find Xehanort’s Pyrameglyph.

When Kimaya stepped on the water, it was unusually solid. Kimaya jumped three platforms to a higher level of the gorge, but there was nowhere else to jump to. Kimaya entered a large bubble on the water’s surface and was carried down underneath. Kimaya struck a pile of rocks clogging a drain, erupting a water spout that blew her up to a platform. From here, she faced a series of water spouts of varying height, but since they were several feet apart, Kimaya rode her skateboard into the first one, flew up, and could fly to the next ones thanks to the momentum.

At the end of the gorge, Kimaya landed on a solid laser rail, grinding it as it carried her over the misty plain and to the great castle. “This place is like major sci-fi. Am I gonna see any floating bikes? I’mma get me one of them. Whoa!” There were electric sparks traveling along the rail, forcing Kimaya to jump them. Eventually, she could land on a walkway near the base of the castle, gazing up at its marvel.

Kimaya approached a large double-doorway at the end of the walkway. She knocked on it. “HELLOOO! ANYONE HOME?” No answer. “A big castle like this has to have SOME people. …I guess they can’t afford a gatekeeper. Oh wait, but I got this!” Kimaya drew her Oathkeeper and shot a laser at the gate. It creaked and echoed as it slid open. Kimaya entered a massive foyer with a fountain in the center of the twin stairs.

Kimaya saw a silver-haired teenager walking to a door above the stairs. He wore a gray sleeveless shirt and same-colored pants with black shoes. The boy stopped and glanced at Kimaya, his orange eyes brimming with curiousness for the cowgirl. He ignored her and entered the door. “’ey!” Kimaya ran across the room—she halted when five Darkball Heartless appeared. Kimaya slashed her Keyblade at the Heartless, but one of them zipped around a center and blocked her attack while another bit her from behind. Kimaya whipped out Oblivion and jumped away, blasting laser bullets to kill the last three Heartless.

“They in this world too, huh?” Kimaya sheathed Oblivion and ran to the stairs, afterwards entering the door the teenager went. The door led her to a library, a maze of bookshelves full of volumes Kimaya would never, ever want to read. Books like these looked so confusing to her—in fact, she was literally lost within the maze of shelves. There were rows of volumes defined by their colors, but a row of blue books appeared to be missing one. Kimaya located a similar blue book in a dead end on a fourth-row shelf, jumping to grab it and bring it back to fill the missing space. The bookshelf slid open. “This actually makes libraries better.”

Kimaya entered the new passage and found stairs leading to a second floor. The stairs were beside a row of tall, yellow windows, and underneath the stairs was a small table. The silver-haired boy was occupying it, reading a book. He looked up when Kimaya approached. “Judging by your attire, I’m assuming you’re not from around here.” he said.

“Well, this ain’t look like a Western world.” Kimaya remarked. “I’m looking for a guy named Xehanort, you know him?"

"I am Xehanort."

"Oh!" Kimaya was surprised. Recalling Darkrai’s story, apparently this was the boy who would wage a war in her universe, starting from Nightmare Land. It felt awkward meeting this young, handsome version of him.

"If I were to guess, is your name Kimaya?"

She gasped. "You know mah name?!"

"I was foretold of your arrival by myself. I was told that a Keyblade wielder in strange garb would come from a distant world and take me to my destiny."

"You were told that by yourself?"

"More or less." Xehanort closed the book. "Ha ha ha! I must sound really strange to you, don’t I?"

He smiled.

"Yeah, I kinda thought I would have to explain why I’m here without actually telling you… and I would be SUPER confused ’cause I don’t get none of this shit!"

Xehanort looked down at the Keyblade in her hand. "So, you wield the Oathkeeper. You must have made an important promise to someone."

"Oh, you recognize it! Can you tell me about any of these?" Kimaya showed him the ring of six keys.

Xehanort held up the one with king’s crown teeth as an example. "I see… These will go to the Chosen Ones. Then you are one of the Seven Lights."

"’kay, you really know a lot more than me."

"My future self didn’t tell me everything… but I was told that an ocean of brand new worlds would be open to me.” Xehanort stood and stared out the window, a wondrous smile on his face. "Worlds more vast and more amazing than any in this universe.” He raised a hand and clasped the air. "As a child, I could only dream about what worlds lie beyond my island home… Now, I want to see those worlds. I want to see and know everything."

"Well, you do that, man. Dream high, don’t let anything stop you. By the way, you seen any stone pyramids around here? I’m kinda supposed to take you to that."

"I can’t imagine where that’d be, though I haven’t seen the upper portion of this castle. Heartless lurk around up there. But no matter how much I insist I can fight them, Master Ansem forbids me from exploring."

"Well, sometimes you need to rebel if you wanna get anywhere in life. I say screw this Hansem guy and check out the upper portion."

"Hm hm. I like your spirit, Kimaya.” Xehanort grinned. “I’ll fight the Heartless alongside you.” He raised his right hand as a Keyblade spawned, the same Keyblade with a clock design Medusa had. "This Keyblade allows me to manipulate time. My future self gave it to me."

"I should ask my future self to tell me the songs I write.”
“I know a secret entrance that leads higher up the castle. It’s upstairs.”

Xehanort and Kimaya followed the stairs to the second floor of the library. One of the bookshelves had a row of green books with a sky-blue one amongst it. Kimaya removed that book and jumped down to the maze of shelves to find where it goes. She stuck the book with its other volumes, but nothing happened. She wandered around lost for several minutes, until Xehanort pointed out the book she had put back was Volume 6, and was in the place of Volume 8. Kimaya huffed and switched the volumes to their correct locations.

The bookshelf opened, revealing a crystal switch in a dead end. Kimaya ignited the switch with her Keyblade, and they heard loud WHIR sounds. Xehanort led her back upstairs, indicating the columns around the room. The columns had open slots with turnable things inside, spinning rapidly. They jumped over the bookshelves to a column in the corner. With key timing, Xehanort used his Keyblade to freeze the spinner in time, having to do so repeatedly until it would stop where he wanted. Finally, he stopped it to where they could get the green book inside, carry it back to return to its shelf, and open the secret entrance.

The passage led to the central room of the castle: an elevator room where platforms traveled along laser rails to different parts of the castle. One of the rails connected at their platform and spiraled up the room. “I guess the lift from this chamber is broken.” Xehanort said.

“We don’t need them. Can you do this?” Kimaya used her skateboard to grind up the rail, and seeing this inspired Xehanort to do the same with his Keyblade. By some force of magic, the gravity shifted in their favor while on the rail, allowing them to go up without fear of plummeting. They ducked left and right to avoid hanging, electrified rails. The rail brought them outside, but they had little time to admire the view of the misty field before spikeball Heartless appeared around the rail, forcing them to shift sideways or upside-down to dodge them.

The rail dropped them on an upper level of the outside – a courtyard with pretty flowers and numerous fountains. Wizard Heartless, purple floating witches with magic wands appeared. Kimaya crossed her Keyblades to block a lightning strike from a Wizard, then leapt for a double-slash—the Wizard dropped to the ground and melted, releasing its captive heart. “Dang, Wizard of Oz, much?”

Xehanort slashed the other Wizards, only to watch them melt on the spot. “I’ve never seen these types of Heartless before. There’s something off about them.”

With the creatures easily defeated, they searched for a way out of the courtyard (Kimaya wanted to take a “quicker” way than entering the door). She noticed two higher fountains next to a lower fountain, and she used that fountain’s spout to boost to the higher ones. The left fountain was off, so she used the right one to boost up to a pipe along the wall. Kimaya sidled across to a platform with a valve. She turned it counterclockwise, turning off the right fountain and giving power to the left.

Kimaya and Xehanort used this fountain to boost up to a fenced ledge, where a training field rested. Cannon Gun and Spiked Crawler Heartless attacked them. The cannons took one hit while the Crawlers took three hits before they melted. “Hey Xehanort, what are Heartless, anyway?” Kimaya asked over the fighting.

“They’re creatures born from the darkness in peoples’ hearts. A long time ago, they appeared when Keyblade masters were more common… but that was during an age of war. According to Master Ansem, they’re unusually common in this world.”

“Why you think that is?”
Xehanort slew a Spiked Crawler and watched it dissolve. “It may have something to do with these abominations. Real Heartless are comprised of darkness.”

The two went up stairs to an archway with a lift leading down to a lower area. Xehanort indicated the control tower on the right, wondering if they could redirect the light-rail upward. They grinded down as the rail led inside to another transmit chamber. Kimaya and Xehanort jumped sparks on the rail as they entered the vast complex of rails. The rail curved left, and when they passed a crystal switch, Kimaya hit it so the rail would redirect down, right, then curve left. They passed a rail that led into a passage behind them, but that passage was blocked by laser barriers.

Kim and Xehanort kept gliding on the beam before jumping to one on the left, which would lead into a spiral with a switch in the center. Kim jumped the sparks and hit the switch, the rail redirecting up slightly. They would pass another switch and hit it, resulting in the laser barriers moving at odd angles. They maneuvered to the rail that would carry them through the passage, but realized how fast the lasers were moving and leaving little time to pass their openings. Xehanort jumped over Kimaya and grinded in front to freeze the lasers in time when the openings were present. Kimaya was impressed with his quick reactions—she barely noticed the crystal switch on her right, flicking it just in time to change the course right.

The rail shifted up and dropped them in the control chamber, where they had view of the rail that led them into the complex to begin with. They flicked a switch and watched that rail change course up into a taller tower, starting from their tower’s window. With it, they glided up to the tallest tower of the castle. They glanced at the label Secret Projects before setting foot in a dim passage. Kimaya went ahead and entered a door, then accidentally bumped into a man in a labcoat and fell down. (End song.)

“Whoops! Sorry, didn’t realize anybody else took this route.” The man bent down and helped Kimaya up. He had dark-grey hair and a big round nose, as well as a 5-o’clock shadow. “Name’s Ford, how do ya do?” He shook Kim’s hand.

Kimaya noticed the six fingers on his hand. “EUH!” She pulled hers away. “What up with the extra finger?”

“Ah, that.” Ford raised both hands. “Just a birth defect, I’m not an alien or anything. ’Course in this world, I sort of am.” He glanced down to see Kimaya get up and brush off her cowboy hat. “Speaking of which, you look pretty different yourself.”

“Yeah yeah, going cowgirl was the wrong choice here.” Kim remarked.

“It’s not that.” Ford got down on his knees and used measuring tape to measure Kim’s eyes, head, etc.. “Head disproportionately large… eyes unusually beady… your arms are relative size; ten fingers. Take off your boots and let me see your feet.”

“Hey, back off, weirdo!” Kim smacked his hand and put her hat on. “Everyone in mah world look this way! (Most of ’em.)”

“Your world?” As they were talking, Xehanort decided to walk around them. “How did you get here, exactly?”

“Some kind of portal.”

“A portal?! Was it a triangular portal, inside a bunker?”

“Yeh, it was…” Kimaya was intrigued by his familiarity with the subject.
A look of surprise and horror crossed Ford’s features. “No… but that can only mean… he fixed it.”

“Who fixed it?”

“Bill fixed it.” Ford stood and turned. “Which means… the prophecy must be happening.”

“You know about the Seven Lights Prophecy, too?”

Ford turned halfway and stared at her with one eye. “You seem confused. Tell me… what is your business here, anyway?”

“Well, people are telling me I’m one o’ the Seven Lights, Xehanort’s a Darkness, and both of us are ‘Keepers of Keys.’ I came here to help him find a pyramid.”

“A pyramid?!” Ford gasped. “Where is Xehanort now?”

“He…” Kimaya turned. “Where did he go?”

Xehanort approached a slightly open doorway with a blue light seeping out of it. He peeked in and saw Master Ansem, a young scientist with blonde hair, as well as his assistants, gathered around a machine. Above the machine was a huge bubble with hearts floating about. “You want to cancel the project now?” a blue-haired scientist asked. “But they’re almost stable! With just a few adjustments…”

“We cannot.” Ansem stated. “The new Heartless infestation has forced many of the castle’s occupants to flee to town. I fear these experiments are only attracting them. It’s true that I hoped to control the Heartless by means of our own artificial creations… but we must consider the well-being of the other worlds. Radiant Garden is a Core World that links to the other worlds. If too many Heartless roam free… there could be disaster.”

Xehanort bypassed them and found a larger room, where a red carpet led to an altar, in-between six light-blue crystal chambers. Xehanort walked up the altar to find an incomplete machine, and a stone pyramid rested before it. The pyramid had a keyhole in its base. Xehanort drew his blade and shot a beam at the keyhole. The act caused the pyramid’s writing to glow.

“Master Ansem!” Ford burst into the laboratory. “Ansem, there’s something…”

Ansem and the two scientists were stiff as statues. Kimaya poked a silver-haired one’s leg, but got no response. “Is this some kind of seizure?”

“Xehanort’s Keyblade can timebend!”

“Then let’s go!” Ford led her further down the hall.

Keeper of the Keys, you are the key component to the Thirteen Darknesses. Bring these keys to the Chosen Ones to see brand new worlds.

Xehanort read his Pyrameglyph aloud, and a dark aura flew inside him. The pyramid opened like a triangular box, the letters coming off in the form of Unown. “Unown! Unown! Unown!” The creatures fled from the castle. In place of the pyramid was a floating ring of twelve keys. Xehanort took the ring and studied the keys. One was white and shiny with crystal teeth and a yellow diamond keychain. One was black with a white flame-design hilt, skull keychain, and flame teeth. One had six colored gems around its hilt, finger-like teeth, and a gauntlet keychain.
“Xehanort!” He turned to find Kimaya and Ford. “Xehanort, listen to me, you don’t know what you’re getting into!” the latter said.

“He kind of does.” Kim mentioned. “He talked to his future self or something. He knew I was coming, knew about the prophecy…”

“No, you don’t understand, both of you.” Ford looked at Kim. “Kimaya, I was the one who created the Multiverse Portal. I created it to visit the Original Worlds and study the comparisons between them and our world. Bill helped me realize my dream… but one night, I received a dream from an ancient spirit called The Chronicler.”

“The Original Worlds were never meant to be accessed from your world.” The Chronicler’s voice echoed in the vast, empty space where Ford floated. “Doing so would cause hazardous effects to the Space-Time Continuum. My knowledge on the Worlds is limited… but it is possible that prolonged use of the portal would cause them to leak into one-another. Doctor Pines… perhaps you should learn more on Bill’s chaotic history.”

“I realized Bill was a demon who craved destruction.” Ford continued. “I surmised he tried to spread his chaos to the Original Worlds. I was going to destroy the portal completely… but The Chronicler advised against it. He told me about the Twenty Keys Prophecy and how it could save the universe. I didn’t know what to do, but I feared Bill would abuse the portal. So without his knowing, I changed the portal’s programming and used it to escape to this world so he could never find me. (This world is a personal favorite of mine.)”

“That’s a very intriguing story.” Xehanort said. “But my destiny is already decided. Isn’t that right, Xehanort?”

“Indeed.” The two whipped around. A man in a light-brown cloak came onto the altar and removed his hood. He had a bald head, a small white beard, and orange eyes and brown skin that matched his younger self.

“You’re… the Future Xehanort.” Kimaya observed.

“I didn’t want this encounter to be interrupted, so I froze the other scientists.” Future Xehanort said with a smirk. “Kimaya Heartly… the Keeper of Keys for the Seven Lights. What is your middle name?”

Kimaya raised a brow, confused. “It’s Kamilla. After my mom.”

“Seven letters in ‘Heartly.’ Six letters in ‘Kimaya’, makes 13… seven letters in ‘Kamilla’, makes 20. You really are the Key to the prophecy. Even the word ‘heart’ is in your name, too.”

“What do you mean ‘too’?”

Xehanort used the Keyblade to write his name in the air. Removing the “X”, he rearranged the letters to make No Heart. “I came here, Kimaya, because I wanted you to know, a person’s fate is decided from the beginning. We were born to wield the Keyblades. We were born to complete our destinies. Also… I wanted to test your abilities!” Xehanort lunged forth and slashed his Keyblade.

Kimaya blocked with both her blades and leapt above to strike him—Xehanort dodged the simple attack and whacked Kim away, then flipped over for a round of swings that Kim struggled to counter. With one hand behind his back, Xehanort was faster with his one Keyblade than Kimaya with both of hers. Kimaya took a breath and farted a huge gas cloud, forcing Ford to hold his breath, but Xehanort simply jumped through the gas, threw more swings, and knocked Kimaya off
“I’m not impressed.” Xehanort said. “But why should I be? All you managed to slay were a few meager Heartless.”

“For yo’ information, I took out a crazy guy that shot lasers!”

“The Corporate President, you mean. Like I said, a few meager Heartless. Ford was right, Kim, you’ve no idea what you’re getting into. On the Day of Apocalypse, you will-” The castle began to tremble.

A powerful beam burst through the ceiling and burned into the ground. Ford pushed Xehanort out of the way and yelled, “Kimaya, you have to return home and shut down the portal!”

“Why don’t you come with me?!”

“I’m the only one who will know how to rebuild the portal, so I can’t risk coming. I’m not sure how this prophecy will play out, but I think it’s in our best interests the portal is taken down. Go home, please. But, if I could ask a favor, I would like you to find my son and give him this.” Ford gave Kimaya a small key – a Keyblade in its pre-summoned form. It had a clock-design handle and clock hands for teeth. “His name is Jagar King. I don’t know how old he is in your time, but he should live in Iceland. Tell him his dad is doing okay. Go!”

Kimaya clasped the key, nodded, and dove into the light. It vanished from existence shortly after.

“Hur hur hm hrm.” Xehanort chuckled. “You simple man, Ford… don’t you realize why I’m here? Your worst fear has already been realized.”

Xehanort awakened as a DARKNESS. There’s only 1 more…

Portal Chamber

Kimaya skated out of the portal and skid to a halt, picking her board up. “Did you find him?” Nerehc asked her.

“Yeah, I found Xehanort. BOTH Xehanorts!” Kimaya exclaimed. “There was a young one and an old one who… kinda looked and sounded like Spock from Star Trek.”

“Well, did either of them find the pyramid?”

“Yeah, the young Xehanort had a key ring, so I guess he read it. …Where’d that snake lady go?”

“Medusa already left. She trusted you would find Xehanort and said once you did, we didn’t need this portal anymore.”

“When I was in there, I also met the guy who created this portal. He said we need to destroy it or…” The chamber began trembling. “You feel that?”

“Is it an earthquake?” Nerehc asked himself. “The portal creates a lot of gravity anomalies in this town. Maybe it’s—AAAAAHH!” A blinding pink light swallowed the chamber, the silhouettes of their bodies waving. When it vanished, Nerehc and Kimaya waited for their vision to return. The room had grown darker, so Nerehc held two violet flames in his hands. “W…What?”

Dipper and Mabel reentered the chamber from the secret passage, the former holding a flashlight. “Nerehc, we saw a bright light. Is everything—WHAT HAPPENED TO THE PORTAL?!”
“How should I know?!" Nerehc exclaimed. Almost every piece of equipment in the cave had vanished, including the Master Emerald, the Tesseract, and the triangular portal burning with energy. “Fi, did you see what happened?”

“Hilariously-Confused Nerehc, I am unable to determine a source for the anomaly that has occurred. However, I took measures to recover the Ocarina of Time when the quakes began.” Fi took the ocarina out of her cape and returned it to Nerehc.

“Thanks.” Nerehc looked around, still confused. “I wonder if Medusa had something to do with it. I guess we can’t use it anymore if we wanted to. I think your job is done, Fi. You can go back to your boss.”

“Affirmative. Not Master Nerehc, it was a pleasure working with you.” Fi turned into a ball of light and flew up through the ceiling.

“Hey, can you two take this girl back to her place?” Nerehc asked the Pines.

“Hold on, Cheren told us you were one of the Seven Lights.” Dipper said to Kimaya. “Maybe we can take you to meet the other ones. It’s probably safer—if the Government knows who you are, they’ll send their assassins after you.”

“Well, I did kinda kill a CEO. Okay, I’ll go with you… but hey, do you guys know anyone named Jagar King?” Kimaya raised the clock Keyblade.

Somewhere outside the atmosphere

The Multiverse Portal reappeared on an asteroid, its equipment and pieces scattered about. A man with a black-and-white face chuckled maliciously. “Hm hm hm hm. The Multiverse… is ours now.”

Termina Dimension; Sector V

It was the 8th sleepless night Truman Kirman has had. He’s had insomnia troubles before, but ever since his trip to Egypt with AlyakAm, it has been worse. It was 7:00 in the morning when Melissa Gilligan entered his room. She was upset to see the redness in his bright blue eyes, the bags forming like an adult who passed out drinking. “Truman, you couldn’t sleep again? Not even after that cocoa I gave you?”

“I didn’t have trouble sleeping.” Truman lied. “I’m just trying to wake up.”

“Truman, this is starting to worry me. I think we should take you to a doctor.” She grabbed his arm to pull him up-

“I SAID I’M FINE!! Can you go ONE night without BOTHERING me?!”

Melissa jumped back, startled by his outburst. “I’m… sorry! I’ll go make you breakfast, you can take your time.”

Truman was once Delightfulized by Father like his parents, Eric and Ashley. His parents were broken from the spell, but they often sleepwalked, reverted to their Delightful states. Truman’s spell was not as strong as theirs, but he still had nightmares of being under Father’s control. The nightmares became worse when Truman’s soul was trapped in his own glasses by Majora, and his Delightful self took over again. Melissa has been trying to help Truman forget his past; she helps him with homework and other matters, acting as his big sister. And Truman loved her like a sister. He never yelled at her like this.
Melissa poured a bowl of Rainbow Munchies and made toast for her friend. It was a happy breakfast any normal kid enjoyed, nothing fancy or yucky like Delightfuls would like. Truman lazily chewed his cereal, holding the golden ring with five dangling points and a pyramid with an eye in its center. A strange item he had collected from the tomb in Egypt. “What is that thing you found in the pyramid, anyway?” Melissa asked. “Basing my knowledge off of movies, maybe that has to do with your insomnia. Maybe it’s… cursed.”

“The only thing cursed is this cereal, it’s DISGUSTING!” Truman smacked the bowl off the table, drenching the floor in milk and colorful treats. …Truman shook his head. “I’m sorry, Melissa, I’m sorry! I’ll clean it up!” Truman ran to get a roll of paper towels.

“No, it’s okay, I’ll do it.” Melissa took the roll and cleaned the spill herself. While she was doing so, Truman stood over her, his brows slanted over his dull eyes. The look gave her an unsettling feeling. “…Truman, are you sure you don’t wanna see a doctor? I don’t think your nightmares bothered you this much before.”

“I keep hearing this noise in my head. It’s like… an evil laugh. It goes like…”

“Hah hah hah ha, AHH hahahahahaha!”

Melissa knew only one person to laugh like that. “Truman, we won’t let anyone like Father get to you ever again. I’m sorry we couldn’t protect you from Majora, but we’ll do better next time. We won’t let anyone hurt you.”

“Like good, faithful servants.” Truman smirked darkly.

“What?”

“Hah hah. Hah hah. When I see you on the floor like that, it’s like you’re bowing before me. Like I were a king, and you were my… man-chair.”

“O-kay, now I have to say that’s a no-no. I don’t know what you learned in Egypt, but we don’t do that, anymore.”

“But it sounds fun, we should try it!” Truman hopped on Melissa’s back like a horse.

“HEY, GET OFF!”

“What the heck are you doing?!” Celeste Stork yelled. The other four members of Sector V had walked in to witness the disturbing position.

“Hello, guys!” Truman climbed off. “Did everyone sleep well?”

“Not well enough, apparently!”

“Truman, you’re too young to act like the Adult Playtime Rainbow Monkey!” Kellie stated.

Melissa stood up and said, “Truman’s been acting weird this morning. And he never lets go of that ring.”

“That ring from Egypt?” Harry Uno approached and reached for it. “Let me see-”

“DON’T TOUCH MY RING!” Truman smacked him.

“Ow! Alright, Truman, what’s really going on here? Did that girl hit you with some kind of spell? Are you being possessed by a demon again?”
“DON’T talk to ME that way!” Truman snarled. “You’ve got no power over me and I am NOT your PUPPET!”

“I never said you were a puppet!”

Truman panted, anger still fuming in his eyes. “…Ahh…” He touched his head. “Where did that… come from?”

“Truman, we already stopped Father.” Harry stated. “You already broke free of his control. Why are you acting like he’s still got a hold on you? You’re a person with free will, Truman, so act like it!”

“Huff…huff…” Truman eased his rage. “I…I’m going to lie down.” He returned to his room.

Shortly after settling on his bed, he heard someone enter his room. Kellie Beatles placed a pink Rainbow Monkey in a star-decorated night cap and sweater over him. “Happy Sleepytime Rainbow Monkey will remove the soreness from your eyes.” She turned and left.

Truman hugged the monkey to his chest and tried to sleep. But peaceful rest wouldn’t come. The laughter still cackled in his mind. He thought it was Father, trying to possess him again. And yet, part of him knew… it was something else. It called to him… and he couldn’t ignore it. He knew his friends would be upset. Truman did care for his team. He had a close bond with each of them. Sparring with Harry and Thomas, laughing at Kellie’s jokes, hanging out with Melissa… but Truman had to remember, they were only mortal.

One of the points on his golden ring stood up. It was pointing at the window. He knew, then, it was time to follow it.

One hour later, Melissa came to check on him. “Truman? You feeling better?” She saw the blanket was pulled up over him and came to uncover it. “You shouldn’t cover yourself like that, you’ll have trouble breathing—!” She gasped, realizing the lump was the Rainbow Monkey and pillow. She noticed the window was open. “GUYS, TRUMAN’S GONE!”

Her teammates rushed in and viewed out the window. “Did he kill himself?!?!” Thomas exclaimed.

“He would be laying on the ground if he did!” Celeste reasoned.

“He must’ve gone somewhere, but where?!” Melissa followed.

“I have an idea. Come on!” Harry ordered.

Delightful Mansion

Truman returned to the place where it all happened. He activated the Dimension Transportifier connecting to Hyrule, gazing at the pink vortex. “TRUMAN!” He turned, seeing his friends. “Truman, why are you going to Cheren’s world?!” Harry asked.

“The Ring led me here!” Truman held up the golden trinket. “My destiny is there! I’m going and I don’t want you to follow!”

“What destiny?!” Celeste shouted. “Where’s this all coming from?!”

“I should have realized it before! I was never afraid of being Delightfulized… all this time, I was denying my fate. My Delightful self was my true self all along. And my true self belongs in that world!”
“Your TRUE self belongs with US!” Melissa stated, marching up to him. “And we’re taking you back.”

Truman threw his open hand at her, the ring glowing—there was a FLASH, and Melissa was turned into a card that drifted to the floor. The back of the card was brown with a black oval. The kids were struck speechless. Truman stared at his hand, then the ring. “I…I have to go. I’m sorry it has to be this way, guys… The least I can do is keep you from following. Good-bye.” Truman pulled out a sack of M.A.R.B.L.E.s and threw them up before diving into the vortex.

“TRUMAN!!” The tiny explosives destroyed the Transportifier, but Truman was already gone to the parallel dimension.

Moments later, Melissa changed back to normal. “What was Truman… talking about?”

“I don’t know, but we’re getting him back!” Harry decided. “Let’s start fixing this portal now!”

“We don’t know how to FIX something like this!” Celeste argued. “Look, Cheren lives in that world, and he found a way to get here before. Maybe he’ll bring Truman back to us.”

“We can’t wait around and hope Truman will fall from the sky like he did! There’s gotta be another way…”

Melissa recalled their adventure with Cheren in attempt to find a clue. Unfortunately, the image of her kissing Cheren when they and Nerehc were drunk was still burned in her mind. …Her eyes widened: “If Truman went to Cheren’s world, what about Truman’s Negative?!”

Hyrule Dimension

Truman fell out of the opposite end of the portal before it vanished. He walked out of the mansion, under a dark, cloudy night. “Hah ha ha ha ha. Ahh ha ha ha ha.” Truman looked up: a blonde-haired boy with sharp teeth and black eyes floated down. The eye-triangle on his hat matched Truman’s gold ring. “Ha ha ha ha ha! Did ya miss me?”

“I…I know you.” Truman glared. “Don’t I?”

“Vividly.” Bill Cipher smirked, pacing around him. “You existed in Termina’s Egypt thousands of years ago. I manifested my image into the Egyptians’ minds. They honored me like a god and created seven magical items based on my appearance. The Millennium Ring you hold is one of them. Those seven items were created to destroy YOU, the God of Darkness. Your power is on par with Demon King Demise. When you were destroyed, part of your soul was locked in the Millennium Ring… while another part was reincarnated over the ages. Your newest incarnation is Truman Kirman, and your soul was awakened when Father ‘Delightfulized’ you, and again when Majora took away the human soul. But deep down, you know who you are…” Bill wrapped an arm around him. “And I know, too… Zorc Necrophades.”

A lightning struck in Truman’s mind. A tidal wave of memories washed over him. His eyes turned malicious, and he smirked devilishly. He shared the look with Bill Cipher, his fellow demon. … Zorc punched Bill in the jaw. “You ruined my plans, you phony god!”

“It was all part of my plan!” Bill raised hands in defense. “I couldn’t let you destroy the world before WE had a chance to! Don’t think of it as me robbing you of your victory… but instead, think of it as me giving you a shot at a greater goal! At the end of this month, my master will return and the Thirteen Darknesses will be his allies! You can join us and have your own number of universes to rule! Doesn’t that sound better?”
“Hmm… Very well. I will accept your proposal, Cipher. I suppose I owe it to Medusa, after all.”

The Goddess of Darkness materialized from a portal. “Oh, Zorc! How nice to see you again. You appear smaller than before.”

“Troubles in bed.” Thanatos mentioned to the readers.

“Your sense of humor is delightful as always. I’ll take it from here, Bill.” Medusa said.

“Until the D-Day!” Bill saluted before flying away.

“So, how much is there to do before the prophecy will be realized?” Zorc asked.

“All we have to do is wait for the Seventh Light to awaken, rescue the Darknesses from Underworld Prison… and of course, awaken the 13th and Final Darkness, Ganondorf Dragmire.”

“Do you have a plan?”

“Hmm, HAH ha ha ha!” Medusa cackled. “My plan is so brilliant, I can’t contain myself! We just need to ask for a little help… Sigh, I don’t think Nerehc is going to like it at all.”

With the revelation of Zorc, we officially know the identities of each of the Thirteen Darknesses. Zorc is from Yu-Gi-Oh, and yes, his appearance in Operation: MASKED was unknown until now. :P Xehanort and Radiant Garden are from Kingdom Hearts, and… you probably know who Ford is.

I don’t know if this was obvious or not, but as implied by Xehanort, we will eventually FIGHT the Thirteen Darknesses. Like with previous antagonist groups in this series, until we get there, it’s up to you to guess which heroes will fight which Darknesses! (Naturally, the fights won’t be limited to the Seven Lights.) If you’re following with the Main Story, the Battle of Enies Lobby is up next… Otherwise, the Side Stories will continue with Wendy family drama. See you then.
Chapter Summary

The battle of Enies Lobby begins!!

First, I congratulate IDA Official for being the 100th review of this story! Today is the day, we are invading Enies Lobby and starting the battle with CP10! Just to clarify, the KND waited one extra day before invading, just to rest and plan their attack. Now we’re here. ;P

Chapter 68: Blood-Stained Past

Enies Lobby

The noon of May 20 was crisp and clear today on Enies Lobby. Nobody felt threatened because they had defenses everywhere. The perimeter cannons had faces given by Bob, serious-looking as they were bound to shoot down any intruder. The Teen Ninjas were so confident in their safety, a lot of them were goofing off in the restaurants and hangouts built on the island, listening to music or spraying graffiti. The town composed only of skilled Teens was set before the two-sided drawbridge that would connect to Enies Lobby’s main building, the Tower of Justice. And not far behind said building was the Mountain of Mariejoa, whose top vanished beyond the sky. Did I mention the island was placed on a giant whirlpool?

Eldwin Savinsky stood on the balcony to enjoy the day, happily eating a pie. He closed his eyes for a few seconds while chewing a piece. “Hmm?” He heard something and looked up.

Pshhooooooo…

A firework launched from the clear sky, no source whatsoever. The projectile was small and it exploded a few yards from the balcony, making the word Hi!

A piece from the cracker flew into Eldwin’s mouth. “Ulp, uck, eck!” He choked. “Paper in my throat! Lucci, paper alert!” The top assassin nonchalantly approached, picked Eldwin up, and squeezed his belly to shoot the confetti out. “Alright, WHO’S THE WISE GUY?!?” Eldwin’s voice roared across the island.

No one responded. They were as confused as he was. Then the sounds of engines became distinguishable. Karin Uzumaki aimed to the south in a panic. “THEY’RE HERE!!”

A small fleet of KND ships arrived at the front of the island without detection, for their fronts were painted blue and white like the sky and clouds. “True artistry is supreme!” April Goldenweek held her blue paintbrush with pride in her work. “Now’s our chance to jump them!”

“They’re shooting at us!” Aurora yelled. “Remember the plan! Kids Next Door, BATTLE STATIONS! Meloetta, give us music!”

“Aye, Sir!” Meloetta was dark-red and styled her hair like Ruby Rose. “Cuatro, tres, dos, HIT IT!” (Play “This Will Be the Day” from RWBY)

Stage 66: Enies Lobby
Mission: Defeat CP10 and find the Poneglyph!

Act I

Cannons fired at the ships, but Kodama launched storms of fireworks to counter their fire as the operatives landed on the base of the island. Teen Ninjas sped out on bikes and flew with rockets. Anthony stomped rock barriers to make the bikes crash while Fybi created clouds in the sky to strike lightning at the airborne teens. “WHAT?!” Eldwin screamed while a pie piece was still in his mouth. “These snotty-nosed punks are attacking us already?!”

“You want us to dispose of them, Leader?” Rob Lucci asked.

“Easy, Lucci. We’re more than prepared to handle this many terrors. And if not, I’m ready to start dropping a few prisoners! For now,” Eldwin grabbed a megaphone, “ATTENTION ALL TROOPS! Hold back the Kids Next Door at all costs!

“If you see Maddy Murphy or ANY of the Seven Lights, kill them on the spot!”

“Oh, you are just BEGGING for me!” Sheila punched her palms.

“Not yet, Sheila!” Carol yelled, checking her blueprints. “Our priority is getting Maddy to the Poneglyph. We need to breach their defenses before sending either of you out there. The first major obstacle is the Gates of Protection!”

“I see it!” Anthony was pushing his rock wall along to clear away enemies in their path. The operatives were storming toward a tremendous doorway and were shot at from Teen Ninja snipers.

“I’ll beat ya there, Anthony!” Michelle happily ran ahead.

“MICHELLE, I TOLD YOU TO STAY HOME!”

“SHADOW POSSESSION!” Terry Stork, Dillon York, and Lee Andrew caught three Anti Guys, and while the Shy Guys were able to break free, Chris, Aurora, and Diwata crushed their heads with flaming fists! “Midna, go big!” Dillon set his Firstborn free. The Twilight Princess divided her Hair Hand into three giant arms and pushed them against the Gates of Protection. Teen Ninjas flew in and unleashed raining lasers at the Firstborn, but Sapphire projected a psychic barrier to protect her. Within seconds, Midna was able to push the gates completely open.

“I told you, it’s in my CODE!” The next second, Vanellope was speeding a racecar across the field, with Carol in the backseat. The candy girl evasively dodged the Teen bikes, and their fellow operatives stepped aside to let them go.

“We’re crossing the Bridge of Despair!” Carol reported. Indeed, they were racing over a bridge, and the sounds of the swirling maelstrom flowed in the air. “Soon, we’ll be at the Gates of Power. They sure like their names, don’t they?”

“I can relate.” Vanellope said with hair blowing in the wind. “I see them coming up! And there’re the guards.”
The two teens guarding the gates were giants, wearing tattered clothes, awful odors, and goofy evil smirks. “Look at the wittle puny wuny babies!” one of them taunted.

“Let’s take them home and make them kiss each other! Hu, hu, gay.”

“Somebody say GAY?!” Bon Clay Jr. flew overhead on a Swan Glider, dropping down to kick the giant in the eye. The other tried to grab him, but missed and clenched his ally’s face, while Clay ran across the arm and blasted his face with a Lipstick Gun.

“Have a mouthful of THIS!” Vanellope pressed a button that extracted fireworks from her car, launching them to cover the giants with colorful mist. One of the fireworks missed the giants and flew over the gates.

“Ururu, get to the tower as fast as possible and rescue Marine.” Carol ordered. “It’s not too far for you, is it?”

“I’ll be fine.” Ururu was riding the aforementioned firework, unseen at fly size. The Tiny Devil abandoned the projectile and flew across the vast city toward the white tower, as fast as her tiny wings could. “Five days made me stronger, too!”

“Can their oh-so great defenses spot a fly?” Jinta smirked, batting ninjas away as he surfed on an anti-gravity skateboard.

“They’ll have bigger problems on hand.” Aisa grinned, flying with Jet Dials and shooting ninjas down with arrows. “Mocha, do the honors.”

The giant had been charging across the Bridge of Despair like a football player, smacking away all the little Teens like dolls. “Hey, that brat is bigger than the others.” One of the giant teens pointed.

“Still puny! We’ll squish her!” the other one punched his palms.

“But who will be squishing WHOM!” Mocha got a red Skypian apple from her pocket and tossed it down her throat. Mocha grew 50 feet tall, her size rivaled the tower as she drew attention from all their enemies.

“IT’S THAT KID AGAIN!” Nya screamed.

“HOLY LUG NUTS!” the giant teens panicked.

“RAAAAAH!” Mocha stomped the two mini giants into craters, then squished the Gates of Power into rubble. “I AM THE SUPREME CHILD!” The giant felt a rush of energy, stomping into Enies Town and squishing all the tiny buildings like a toy set in her room. Teen Ninjas swarmed around her like flies, but Mocha either smacked them away or clapped them between her hands. “Squishy squish! Flatty flat! Under my feet, you’re like a mat!” She was having more fun than ever before.

“I think this is too easy now.” Karin Kurosaki said with a sweatdrop.

“SHE’S COMING THIS WAY!” Eldwin cried.

“Still got it under control?” Lucci asked.

“Grrrrr! CP10, KILL THE GIANT BRAT!!”

The seven agents launched off the balcony, crossing the chasm with Moon Walk. Ten Teen Ninjas were flying at Mocha’s face, but the giant spat a huge glob of spit that crushed them to the ground.
“I’m not afraid of anything!”

“AREN’T you?!” Mocha looked to see the CP10 agents coming. The giant smirked and clapped her hands to send a shockwave, but the agents Shaved and flew all around Mocha. Ernie and Leslie sliced their talons and high-heel across Mocha’s neck while Lucci and Number 4 impaled Finger Pistols into her arms. Mocha swatted them all off, but all seven agents surrounded Mocha’s knees.

“TEMPEST CIRCLE!” With their simultaneous Tempest Kick, Mocha’s legs could not escape the circle of airwaves. Her knees were cut deep as blood spilled.

“AAAAAAAAHHH!” The giant lost her balance and threatened to fall on her back, but she quickly turned to collapse on her front. She couldn’t stand due to the searing pain, her giant blood making a large puddle in the ruined town.

“MOCHA!” Aisa quickly flew down to give her a blue apple.

“Cut her neck!” Lucci ordered. The agents flew down at Mocha’s neck, only to be thwarted by laser fire from above.

“Are we too late for the party?!” Nagisa shouted from Sector SA’s S.C.A.M.P.E.R. III. “Morgiana, kick ’em down!”

The magenta-haired Arab launched out of the ship and landed a blow against Leslie Meijer, blasting her away before landing on Mocha’s back. Aisa landed and threw the blue apple into Mocha’s mouth, shrinking her to her previous height. “Morgiana, glad you could make it!” Aisa flashed the Arab a grin. “Wanna show these teens a little barefoot pride?”

“I’m ready when you are.” Morgi smiled. When Teen Ninjas charged up at them, both girls stomped the ground and kicked toward them like rockets. Their soles were scorching red and burning the ninjas with their mighty kicks.

“In case you viewers don’t know, they’re using Red-Foot Style.” Goombella said to us with an open book. “It involves the usage of Personal Chi that is built up in the feet after long periods of going barefoot. It was first developed by the Fanalis, the tribe Morgiana hails from. As you can see, she gave Aisa a few pointers.”

“Who are you talking to?” Nagisa asked.

“They say imaginary audiences are good practice!”

“You jerks better keep your hands off!” Chris Uno flew at CP10 with fists on fire, blasting fire beams that the agents simply avoided.

“CP10, return to base.” Lucci commanded. “Let them play with the runts.” With that, the assassins flew away.

Melody and Danny came up to Mocha as the former used bloodbending to make some of the blood return to the giant’s cut legs. Melody then began healing Mocha while Danny defended her. “At least we made a mess of their base.” Melody said. “But I wish we coulda hurt them a bit more before we made it.”

Maddy and Sheila peeped out of the top of Mocha’s dress. “Are you alright, Mocha?”

“Just fine.” She smiled weakly. “At least they didn’t notice you.”
“Don’t come out, yet.” Shade ordered. “We need to lower the drawbridge.”

“It is now 12:10.” Miyuki Crystal reported, charging into the ruined town with her team. “At 12:20, we are scheduled to breach the Gates of Justice and lower the bridge.”

“That’s some SCHEDULE!” Strings lashed the ground before the operatives, forcing Sector IC to stop. Doflamingo Jr. and his two traitorous friends appeared. “Did you have one when you guys killed my father?!”

“We didn’t kill him!” MaKayla yelled.

“PAH!” Doffy lashed at them, but they dodged. “As far as I care, you’re ALL guilty! Don’t forget Sector DR was Number 2 of the Top 10, you’re no match for me!”

“Then it’s only fair I fight you!” Doffy Jr. dodged the Song Beam, cast by none other than: “SUGAR?!”

“Hey, Little Bro.” The 14-year-old girl said. “I guess we girls DO mature faster, huh?”

“You teamed up with them? And you’re a MUSICBENDER?!”

“Hey, it’s not the craziest twist we had lately.” Sugar surfed a Song Road across Aeral and Bison, knocking them away, and she stylishly dodged Doffy’s strings and surfed at her brother. She jumped and tried to stomp him, only for Doffy to dodge. Sugarwhirled her arms and channeled the Song Chi from Meloetta’s vocals, sending them to try and tie her brother, but the flamingo spun in a String Tornado and lashed String Whips at Sugar, who barely dodged.

Aeral Sarah made her arms into guns and shot at MaKayla, who evaded the bullets and ran to punch Sarah in the chin. “You know, I haven’t forgiven you for the boxing tournament!” Kayla yelled.

“I thought timebenders knew how to keep things in the past?” Sarah remarked.

“Except the fact you haven’t changed.” Kayla leapt to kick, but Sarah’s face became a cannon and shot her away. Lola Stork was chasing a cowardly Bison Oxford and slapping Spanking Hands at his butt.

“YOU!” cried Nya LaMar, flying at Shade with a punch, only to miss. “Shade! Why the hell are YOU with these brats?! You were a spy?!”

“Yes, I was.” Shade answered. “Not on you, I was spying on Maddy. I waited my whole life to bring her here and I’m not about to stop now!”

“I’LL KILL YOU!” Nya landed and swung furious punches at the echidna, missing each time until Shade punched her in the jaw. Nya whipped around to shoot Shade—her laser was directed at a red paint spot on the ground. “WHAT?!”

“I’m here, too!” April Goldenweek said to her. “Didn’t forget me, did you?”

“Oh, you were on my list, too.” Nya glared. “To think I planned to trap you if you agreed to come with us.”

“What?”

“We didn’t know why, but Eldwin planned to capture and have you killed before the World Leaders. Now that we know you’re a Light, too, I understand.” Nya smirked. “Speaking of which, your friends are up ahead. They’re dying to see you!”

“…!” April hurriedly ran ahead. Shade punched Nya from behind, but the teen was quick to flip back up and kick both feet against the Mobian.

“There’s the Gates of Justice!” Carol yelled as Vanellope sped them across the ruined town. “Chris, you have to blow them open with your Combustion Eye! Once we get inside, we can lower the drawbridge!”

“Wait, don’t!” Nagisa yelled from SA’s ship. “We see some people attached to the drawbridge!”

“You do?” April questioned. “Chris, fly to my location and carry me above the gates!”

“I’m on my way!” Chris saw April’s mark on his watch’s map and kicked on his rocket boots. He swooped by and grabbed April’s hand, flying for the Gates of Justice at full speed. Bypassing the Teen Ninjas, the two were able to set foot on the roof of the gates. April gasped with horror. (End song.)

Dazun Sclice, Trenton Boom, Paula Doublefinger, and Selina Valentine were chained to the underside of the second half of the drawbridge. April’s former teammates of Sector GD were bloody and hanging to dry. “HAAAA hah hah ha ha!” They looked up at the balcony where Eldwin was laughing cockily. The seven CP10 members were lined up along the edge. “You little snorts got through faster than I woulda hoped. So go ahead, lower the drawbridge! Because these traitors will be the ones taking the plunge!”

A body of water rose up from the maelstrom below, shaping into Suigetsu Hozuki. “The plunge down my stomach!” The Logia Fishkid swiped his arm across the gates’ roof and smacked Chris and April away.

“None of us are going to Davy Jones today!” Melody pulled herself up onto the roof with a water tentacle. “Tell him, Manaphy!” She tossed the Spirit Ball and freed her Firstborn.

“MANAAA!” Manaphy summoned several streams of water to form over Melody, who activated her Water Fury and matched Suigetsu’s size with her own liquid body. Both water giants began splashing each other, and Manaphy’s added power was able to detain the Logia and drag him below the surface.

“Guys, it’s Ururu.” The soft voice came from their communicators. “I’m having trouble finding Marine, and a bunch of teens are chasing me.”

“Just come outside, Ururu.” Karin ordered. “We need you for something else.”

“We can’t lower the bridge with Sector GD hanging there!” April yelled.

“You guys must think you’re real hot stuff, treating our friends that way!” Chris shouted at CP10. “It only proves you’re afraid of us!”

“Eh, sticks and stones.” Eldwin shrugged. “I mean, I have full confidence CP10 can beat up all you nerds, but it’s good to have a few extra cards in the deck. If you got a problem with it, come up here and punch me! ’Course I’ll just hide behind Leslie.” He did that.

“BLEEEEHHH!” Leslie threw up over the edge, still sick.

“Er… Behind Ernie.” He did that. Ernie rolled his eyes.
Chris grinned with malice. “I got a better idea. I’ll blow through ALL of you!” He yanked off his headband and took a big whiff. He charged the Combustion Eye and fired straight at the agents. Spark spark spark-

The seven agents made quick movements with their hands and held them out and open. “Reflect no Jutsu!” The Combustion Beam hit an invisible barrier, bounced toward the sky, and exploded. Chris gaped in utter shock.

“Just a little FYI,” Eldwin smirked, “we’re Teen Ninjas, so don’t think we haven’t read our share of Ninjutsu. Sadly, most of them would rather watch Rock Zefron than Naruto. Ernie, poke that eye out!”

The giant chicken launched down at Chris, who jumped back to avoid his Finger Pistol, then shot fire to block the bladed feathers Ernie threw. Chris jumped off the roof, only for Ernie to pursue. With that, April Goldenweek was left on the gates’ roof. “We-hell, there’s one of the Seven right there!” Eldwin laughed. “Wanna do the honors, Lucci?”

“With all due respect, Sir, her blood smells unappetizing.”

“It smells like paint, coo-kachoo!” Hattori cawed.

“Suit yourself. Rickey, you do it.” Lime Rickey obeyed and kicked off the balcony, eyes set on April while the artist braced herself.

A wall of flames burst up in Rickey’s way, for April was saved by Aurora Uno. “Just a second, Mr. Bartender. I ordered another round!”

“Well, well, it’s Young Miss Uno again.” Rickey landed on the edge of the roof. “You really do resemble your mom, did I tell you that?”

“I would like to say I’m my own person either way. But what the hell happened to you, Rickey? Why become an assassin?”

“Well, I guess it all started when your parents beat the Brotherhood of Evil. They froze Mr. Fizz with the other villains, so with no Soda Control Board, nobody had a reason to visit my speakeasy. All the kids began freely drinking soda wherever, whenever. There was also the fact I began gettin’ too old to run a bar like that… But boy, my mom was not happy.

“I never told anyone this, but everything in that bar, all the soda and tables and cleaning supplies—I PAID for all of that! Not just from my allowance, I stole from my mom. Hey, there was an adult tyranny war going on, it was cool, right? But that age is long gone. My mom kicked me outta the house at 14 years old, told me not to come back until I paid her back in full. So I wandered the streets like a hobo, and middle-middle-middle, now I’m a member of CP10. Pays a hefty amount, I tell you what. But since I didn’t need my old house anymore, I used the money to open my Milk Bar in Cleveland. Got to chat with the old gang just like 20 years ago.”

“You stole from your mom?! Just to buy soda for a bunch of kids you didn’t even know?!?”

“I was glad to do it! Everyone was happy and I thought they were all my friends! But in the end, I guess they didn’t need me, either. Tore me up inside. And if I wanted to sound vengeful, I would blame your parents.”

“You brought it on yourself, you know.”

“I know.” Rickey smiled. “So, nothing personal, toots, but I’ll have to kill you, anyway.”
“Not at all.” Aurora smiled back. “But before I lay the beatdown on you, on behalf of our parents, we thank you for all the soda.”

“That do bring warmth to my heart, Miss.” (Play “Boss Medley 1” from Kid Icarus: Uprising!)

Boss fight: Lime Rickey

Rickey Shaved up to Aurora and used Finger Pistol, Aurora swiftly dodged all his blows and blasted twin flames, sending Rickey over the edge of the chasm. The bartender recovered using Moon Walks and sliced a Tempest Kick across the field, but Aurora dodged and rocketed behind Lime Rickey. She came back while performing a Fire Drill, but the assassin Shaved so she would hit the roof. Rickey zipped behind and punched Aurora away, but she pushed the floor with her hand and flipped back on her feet. Aurora stomped and entered Ice Fury, unleashing storms of icicles, but Rickey avoided them all using Paper Art.

“Door!” Rickey jumped into a trapdoor on the roof and popped up under Aurora, punching her skyward. Aurora spun and released icy waves, only for Rickey to dodge with Shaves and get behind her again. He aimed the Finger Pistol at her rear—Aurora sensed this and grabbed his hand, freezing the assassin solid. With that, she switched to Fire Fury and threw a powerful flame that broke the ice and flung him across the field.

“Am I a little tougher than you were hoping?!” Aurora taunted.

“That’s some nice moves, kid! But I got some of my own.” Rickey opened a hole in the air like a door and stuck his Finger Pistol inside. Aurora flinched when she felt it you-know-where. “Finger Pistol: Ten Years Community Service!” It was a weak blast that slid her forward a few feet. “I ate the Door-Door Fruit. I can open doors in anything, including space! I can only travel a few miles at a time, but it’ll do here.”

“That’s not a bad power. But it won’t help you against me!” Aurora dashed at him with her right fist on fire and her left fist in ice. Rickey threw open a door behind him and slipped inside, resulting in Aurora punching empty air.

“This power also gives me access to the Pocket Dimension!” Rickey emerged behind her. “And I picked up some pretty nifty items!” He pulled his hands out, clutching the Hero’s Crest Keyblade and Road to Dawn Keyblade.

“KEYBLADES?!” Aurora gaped.

“Yeah, these giant keys are just floating around waiting to be picked up. Figured ‘Hey, I’ll give ’em their two cents.’” Rickey Shaved beside Aurora and slashed the Keyblades with swift speed, Aurora ducking the strikes by hair’s end (as the ends of her hair were cut off). Aurora punched a Flame Fist at his belly, but Rickey defended with Iron Body before batting Aurora away with the keys.

Aurora went into Fire Fury, and Rickey rapidly Shaved circles around her, forcing Aurora to erupt a fire spire. Rickey spun the Keyblades to pierce through the fire and stab down at Aurora, but the girl ran away and kicked fireballs that Rickey batted with the keys. He Shaved up and furiously swung the blades at his opponent, but Aurora kept dodging before spreading fires around the field. Rickey used Paper Art to float among the smoke, aiming to get above Aurora and strike down, but the environment switched to frigid cold as she threw up an ice shield to block him. “I knew firebenders could manipulate heat, but sap it out of the air completely?!” Rickey questioned.

“Door!” Rickey jumped into a trapdoor on the roof and popped up under Aurora, punching her skyward. Aurora spun and released icy waves, only for Rickey to dodge with Shaves and get behind her again. He aimed the Finger Pistol at her rear—Aurora sensed this and grabbed his hand, freezing the assassin solid. With that, she switched to Fire Fury and threw a powerful flame that broke the ice and flung him across the field.
“I’m a double-bender, genius!” Aurora blew the Ice Shell up and knocked Rickey skyward. He recovered in time to dodge Aurora’s Ice Beam, Shaving down and to her left to slice the Keyblades, but Aurora slid back across the ice.

“Oh, so you’re using two different Fury Modes. That’s not good for your health.” Lime Rickey swung consecutive Tempest Kicks, Aurora dodging, but she wasn’t prepared when Rickey slipped into a trapdoor in which the opposite end opened above her. Rickey stomped Aurora to the ground, leapt off, and batted her away with the Keyblades. Aurora’s Ice Fury wore off, leaving her exhausted in her regular form. “Just as I thought. A bender’s full power is in their Fury Form. Unfortunately, that takes power, too. You’re forced to go all out on me, Sweet Cheeks!”

Aurora got up and forced a smile. “I am reckless that way.” Aurora threw on Fire Fury again, using Rocket Boost to fly around the rooftop and steadily create a flame tornado. Rickey stood as the enclosed area increased in heat, but the bartender made a shrug before choosing to hide in the Pocket Dimension. He remained there for a few seconds, but the rising heat began to reach him here, too. He exited the dimension gasping for breath, giving Aurora the chance to strike him with a Twin Flame Drill.

Rickey dropped the Keyblades as he bounced across the field, the flame tornado gone and the Keyblades poofed out of thin air. Aurora let her Fury dissolve, needing to catch her breath and hoping he was down for the count. Unfortunately, the bartender was up and standing again. “You pushed me farther than I thought you would, Doll Face! It’s time to bring out my secret weapon!” Rickey reached into the Pocket Dimension and whipped out a golden sword with a spiked blade, flashing like lightning.

“THE GALAXIA SWORD!”

“Left abandoned by its late owner. How sad.” Rickey Shaved up and slashed the sword faster than Aurora could see, cutting up the front of her shirt before kicking her away. Rickey zipped up to stab her, but Aurora rolled aside with the beat of her heart, jumping up to kick flames that Rickey blocked.

“Well, with no other options, I’ll have to use Double Fury!” Aurora punched her chest and stomped a foot, encasing herself in a body that was Fire and Ice. She hurled comets of both elements, but Rickey continued swiftly evading before dropping in a door that opened up behind her. Aurora dodged an inch from Galaxia’s tip, freezing the roof with her foot to make Rickey slip, then stomping his head with a flame foot.

Rickey endured the throbbing pain and Shaved over to slice at Aurora, who formed an ice sword to block Galaxia. The superior golden blade cut the ice, as well as the firewalls Aurora sprouted afterwards. Aurora spun in a Fire-Ice Tornado, spiraling toward Rickey, only for the assassin to constantly Shave out of her range. Aurora slowed to a halt and began panting. “Huff! Crap, my Fury’s wearing off!”

“Music to my ears!” Rickey went in a door and jumped out behind her.

“GOT YA!” Aurora kicked back and hit Rickey in the crotch, shot an icicle to knock the sword out of his hand, then kicked up at his face to knock him on his back. Aurora shot up into the air and performed the Fiery Icicle, taking the shape of a drill with fire and ice spirals.

“Iron Body!” Rickey made himself completely still and endured every second of the piercing attack against his stomach. Aurora kept drilling for ten seconds, but seemed to make no dent on Rickey’s body. Aurora leapt off as her Fury Mode vanished. After catching up on her breath, the Uno girl fell. (End song.)
“What’s going on with Aurora?!” Haruka exclaimed.

“Let me get a look!” Midna flew high enough to see the roof of the gates, joined by Lola and Fybi. “Aurora and Lime Rickey… they’re both lying down. Wait!”

Lime Rickey got up, panting. The bartender smirked at his fallen opponent. “No way… Aurora got beat.” Lola said.

“Aurora?! No way!” Haylee shouted.

“YEEEEEEEEEHAAAAAAA!” Eldwin jumped about like a giddy little girl. “Rickey Rickey, he’s the man! He’ll knock you down and kick your can! HA HAAA! Which twerp is up NEXT?!”

“This is terrible!” Shade said. “If after all that, Aurora couldn’t beat one… how are we going to-”

“Hold on.” Sapphire cut in.

Eldwin stared confusedly. Rickey was still gasping, and the strength of his breaths puffed higher. He wasn’t smiling, and with each breath he bowed forward. “Huff…Huff…HUFF…HUFF…BLUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUH…” And a waterfall of vomit spewed from his throat. For several seconds, the barf was unending, and the resulted puddle covered a large portion of roof. When his stomach was finally empty, the assassin fell flat on his front, left to lay in the filth. Eldwin and the operatives gaped at the sight.

“She…SHE BEAT HIM!” Midna cheered. “AURORA WON!”

“YAAAAAAAAYYY!” The operatives cheered to the sky.

“DAMMIT! PICK UP THE PACE, YOU IDIOTS!” Eldwin thundered. “You’ll need to put double the effort to make up for Rickey!”

“’Guess it’s time for my second verse!’” Meloetta turned yellow and styled her hair like Yang Xiao Long for the next song. (Play “I Burn” from RWBY)

Doflamingo Jr. flew overhead and caught Sugar in a birdcage of strings, closing it together to crush the older sister. Diwata appeared from a portal behind Doffy and kicked him down to Sugar, who blew a Song Beam up to propel him away. Sheila and Maddy were still hiding under Mocha’s dress as the former asked, “When are you blokes gonna lower the drawbridge?”

“We can’t lower it if Sector GD is stuck to one end!” April yelled back in her communicator.

“I foresaw this scenario happening.” Sapphire replied, running with Ruby and Jinta toward the Gates of Justice. “But we have a backup plan. With Chris distracting an agent and another one defeated, we only have the five to protect from. Are you ready, Ururu?”

The fly-size girl had returned from the tower and was on Jinta’s shoulder. “I’m a little nervous… but I’ll do my best. When you’re ready, Jinta-kun.”

“I’m hitting the home run!” Jinta threw his baseball to the air as Ururu flew and landed on it. “HE SHOOTS, HE SCORES!” He swung his giant bat powerfully, and the ball flew toward the gates like a comet.

“Aurora, better move!” Vanellope glitched up on the roof and grabbed her sleeping friend, zipping off after. Ururu was seconds from hitting the gates on the baseball, so at that moment, she turned a dial up on her suit’s belt and pressed the Grow button.
Ururu exploded into a gigantic size, falling forward and crushing the Gates of Justice, along with the building and first half of the drawbridge. “ANOTHER GIANT?!” Eldwin screamed. “WHERE THE HELL ARE THEY HIDING?!”

“AAAAAH!” Aeincha screamed. “Tiny Devil is Big Devil!”

“Huu!” Ururu gasped from the sudden change. Her soft, adorable voice echoed across the island, and her blush was clearly visible. “Um... This is my first time being giant. I’m not squishing anyone, am I? Is anyone looking up my skirt?”

“No one worth mentioning, Ururu.” Jinta climbed up on his friend’s shoulder, batting off Teens that swarmed at her. “Quick, save those guys!”

“Okay!” Ururu reached over and grabbed the four GD members in her hand, ripping their chains off and setting them on the ground on her right.

“CP10, stop her!” Eldwin commanded. Minus Lucci, four of the agents launched down.

“The HELL you will!” Ruby leapt off Ururu and punched her rocket gloves at Bob the Builder.

“Hit someone your OWN size!” Grenda of Sector GF leapt and punched at Number 4, who morphed into a gorilla to absorb the blow, grab the strong girl, and chuck her back over Ururu.

“GIVE ME FOOOOD!” Index dropped from Sector SA’s ship and grabbed Leslie Meijer’s head in her mouth. The secretary kept using Moon Walk as she struggled to shake her off.

Megan Parker was still going- “What?” The person flying at her was a sock puppet of Edward Scissorhands. Her confusion caused Megan to falter—Zach Murphy popped out of the puppet with big red lips, which kissed Megan and blasted her into the tower.

“UGH! LUCCI, WHAT’S THE MATTER?!” Eldwin shouted.

“I liked the other giant better.”

“YOU LAZY ASS!”

“All of us are here!” Carol cheered. “Ururu, make the bridge!”

“Aye-aye!” Ururu reached an arm over and burst open the opposite drawbridge. Bands of operatives began to cross the giantess’s arm and infiltrate the Tower of Justice.

Miyuki Crystal found Rickey’s body in the rubble of the Justice Gates. She touched it and saw into his past. Everything was as he said, from his mother kicking him out, being found by GUN agents, trained in martial arts, gave his mother a poison soda—

Miyuki gasped and stopped the vision. “He killed his own mom!”

“You serious?!” Terry shouted. “That twisted f!”

“Come on, Miyuki, you need to see what happened to Mr. Beatles!” Lola reminded, flying ahead.

“Sounds like our cue!” Sheila climbed out of Mocha’s dress. “Ready, Mads?”

Maddy lit her fist iron. “Ready!” Sheila lit her fist gold as they raced across the ruined town, throwing punches at any remaining Teens in their path. “You know, maybe I should call myself ‘Black-Fist Maddy’!”
“I will tear your fists off if you rip off my nickname!” Sheila threatened. “Fact, when this is over, I’m challenging you for the highest Power Level!”

“Deal!”

“Woof, woof!” Sparky was hiding in Maddy’s shirt.

“They’re inside the tower!” Eldwin shouted. “CP10, get back inside and man your posts! Team CRDL, mow them down!”

When the operatives broke into the tower, they were facing a band of Anti Guys and four Teen Ninjas in knight’s armor. “It’s about time.” Cardin said as he drew his black mace, with wide flanges and a red crystal in their center.

“Everybody split up and comb the tower!” MaKayla ordered. “We’ll leave as few obstructions for Maddy as possible!” The operatives scattered, forcing Team CRDL and the Shy Guys to do the same.

Dillon, Kirie, and Vanellope took a hallway on the right, where dozens of Teens charged up and started shooting. Vanellope glitchwarped across the hall in milliseconds, kicking the ninjas too fast to see. Kirie turned—quickly pushing Dillon down and dodging Russel Thrush’s dagger – a Team CRDL member with a light-green mohawk and green armor. He swung black twin daggers that had colored jewels on their hilts, but Kirie nimbly dodged him before flipping above and kicking the back of his head.

Russel tossed both daggers and stuck Dillon and Kirie to the wall by their sweaters, then pressed a button on his wrist to spray gas from the jewels on the daggers, making Dillon and Kirie dizzy. Midna smashed the teen under her Hair Hand, and when he tried to recover, the Firstborn grabbed him in the Hair Hand and smashed him back-and-forth against the floor and walls. “They’re right, I do make it too easy.” Midna said boredly.

“Guys, I’m gonna run ahead!” Vanellope yelled, glitching around the corner.

“Vanellope, wait!” Dillon yelled, using Veil to escape the dagger.

Sector W went upstairs and were running across a walkway above a lower room. They encountered three female Teen Ninjas, so Harvey summoned Mesprit and ordered, “Mesprit, use Post-Prom Trauma!” The Firstborn flashed her emblems at the girls, who all began bawling and crying “He hates me, my life is over!” and “Why did I have to spill the punch?!”

“Quit crying and get out of my way!” Leslie kicked the Teens aside and faced Sector W. Sally and Harvey tossed bladed yo-yos at the woman, but Leslie flashed an invisible power from her hand and made the blades of the yo-yos into cubes, dealing no damage on her. Before the kids could process what happened, Leslie sent a Tempest Kick to scrape along the bridge, forcing Anthony to stomp a hole in the bridge for them to collapse to the lower floor.

However, Fybi had swooped under the bridge and emerged on Leslie’s right, intending to shoot from her B.O.W.. Leslie heard this and stylishly flipped back to dodge the light arrows, aiming her hand at the weapon as the bow’s handle formed an ‘L’ shape, making it arduous for Fybi to aim now. Leslie seized the chance to Shave behind and stomp Fybi in the wings, with her high heels adding to the pain. Fybi crashed onto the bridge as Leslie pinned a foot on her. “You’re one of the Lights, too. But no more.”

“Hey, what’s going on in here?!” Vanellope ran into the lower room and found Sector W on a pile of rubble.

“Vanellope, Fybi’s in danger!” Aranea pointed. The Program looked up at the bridge and glitchwarped up. The second she saw Leslie’s heel about to stab Fybi, Vanellope zipped and kicked her in the head.

Vanellope landed and helped Fybi up. “She’s one of the agents, don’t let her get you. Just take your friends and go.” Fybi nodded and flew down to her team. Vanellope glared at Leslie- glitch.

(End song.)

“You were Mrs. Beatles’ boss.” she said. “But you were an assassin… Were you planning to kill her for a while?”

“I never planned for it. It was just an undercover, though I did enjoy President Sanban’s company. My old boss was always so… irritating. Mr. Big was his name. He sought to become a Corporate President, to the point it drove him mad. He worked us to the bone and I was always the target of his tirades.”

“Mr. Big, you’ve been up for 15 hours, I highly advise you-”

“I want FIVE THOUSAND SALES by the end of the WEEK, Leslie! I will make people learn the value of The Thing, SO HELP ME!!”

“Sir, the reason our sales are so poor is because our commercials are so vague! The Thing is just a white cube, it literally doesn’t do anything-!”

“You either devote yourself to this fad or you can file reports on the STREETS, woman!”

“Eventually, we were bested by a rival company that created The Object.” Leslie explained. “A purple hexagon that does… something. Mr. Big only got worse… and without even thinking, I…”

Leslie took a pen and stabbed Mr. Big in the back over and over and over. Recalling the distraught look on her face, Leslie’s memory was red like blood.

“I couldn’t escape the pain in my heart.” Leslie concluded. “So I became an assassin… to help me accept it.”

“You guys really are twisted.” Vanellope glitched.

“Not as much as you, it would seem.” Leslie aimed at Vanellope and whirled her glowing purple hands.

“WAAAAAH!” Vanellope’s body twisted like a knot. “HEY, what’d you do to me?!”

“Until recently, I swallowed the Shape-Shape Fruit. I can reshape inorganic forces to my whim. Even if they are sentient bodies of energy.” She fixed her glasses. “I’m still pretty new at the power, but… I’m a fast learner.”

Vanellope glitched and reformed. “Don’t you dare touch my pixels! Or I’ll reshape YOU, dirty traitor.”

“Try as you may, but my Power Level stands at 1200. At least before I got this power. What is your Power Level?”

_Vanellope did a Lickety Split Kick against Azelf, flying the Firstborn several yards. “Data invalid.”_
Azelf reported. “I can't record the Power Levels for robots or machines.”

“…” Vanellope looked down awkwardly and mumbled, “I don’t have one…”

“Well, that puts me at ease.” Leslie smiled.

Vanellope glared. “I’m STILL gonna kick your butt!”

“You may have the mouth of a normal little girl, but like the dozens of equipment in the Rainbow Monkey Factory, you’re a machine. Solid holograms are impressive, true, but in the business world, man beats machine.”

“That may be true for most cases,” Vanel glitched, “but in this one, Hologram beats Hag! Which is why I’m playing this ugly witch music.” Vanellope pressed her tape-recorder and played “Begoniax Battle” from Rayman 3.

Boss fight: Leslie Meijer

Vanellope zipped around Leslie to do a Lickety Split Circle, going so fast that she only appeared as a blue pixelly whirlpool. Leslie threw her arms up and erected needles from the floor, disrupting the circle as Vanellope bumped against one. Leslie swung Tempest Kick at her, but Vanellope glitched above and stomped down—Leslie Shaved behind the needle circle and escaped down a hall. Vanellope glitchwarped to chase after, but Leslie waved her arms around to erect more needles and obstruct her path.

Vanellope glitched around the needles with expert precision, but was going too fast to see Leslie kick her high-heel and jab her in the face. Vanellope fell against the needles, then glitched to dodge Leslie’s Tempest Kick—kicked the woman in the leg—the left waist- zipped up- left- right —Vanellope PUNCHED her in the face when Leslie was confused. Leslie bounced a few feet, then grabbed the floor to flap it like a blanket. Vanellope was flown up, but glitchwarped to evade Leslie's kick.

Vanellope glitched behind to do a Rapid Kick attack, but Leslie’s Paper Art nimbly avoided. The woman kicked up and knocked Vanel to the hall’s intersection, where a blonde Teen Ninja ran by. The teen stopped with confusion. Vanellope was caught in Leslie’s power as the woman compressed her into the shape of a frog. Leslie swiped the Teen’s spear and shaped it into a fork, grinning with malice as she attempted to stab the frog. A terrified Vanel-frog hurriedly hopped in the opposite direction, narrowly dodging the fork’s jabs. Every few seconds, Vanellope glitched and she partly reshaped. After four glitches, she was back to normal, so she ran on her feet as she was coming to a left turn.

Vanellope glitched around the corner, and when Leslie whipped her fork around, Vanellope was nowhere in sight. Suddenly the Program was behind and KICKED her in the butt, Leslie retaliated by swinging her fork, but Vanel glitched behind for another butt kick. An angered Leslie performed a Cartwheel Tempest Kick, which Vanellope avoided, but they fell through the collapsed floor. They landed in the tower’s kitchen—the short French chef known as Skinner yelped and fled the room.

Leslie flipped to the drawers and grabbed several knives and forks, growling murderously at Vanellope. “Yuh-oh.” Vanel said. Leslie tossed the bladed utensils like a ninja, they kept coming and coming, and Leslie could shape them into boomerangs to redirect at her again. Vanellope continued making use of her glitches, though this tight quarters resulted in a few strands of hair getting derezzed. Vanellope decided to glitch and throw a kick, which missed, but when she noticed the boiling pot on the stove, Vanel decided to kick it at Leslie.

The secretary was horribly burned, and in her rage she pulled the soup off with her power and compressed it into a ball. She was able to keep it compressed as she kicked it at Vanel, then forced the floor and walls to burst like springs and bounce the piping hot ball around. Vanellope glitched to keep dodging, but it was at this point a few of her pixels faltered in keeping up. The kitchen door opened—“I FOUND THE KITCHEN!” Index exclaimed. The soup ball was coming her direction, so without questioning what it was, Index caught it in her mouth. “SPICY!”

Leslie jumped over, grabbed the girl, and chucked her at Vanellope. Vanellope grabbed and set Index down before chasing the assassin, coming to a room of the tower with couches around a fountain. Leslie made her high-heels into springs and started bouncing off the walls and upper walkways. Vanellope mimicked the action using her glitches, and their battle was disrupting the romantic make-out session between two teens on a couch. “Ugh, these people make everything a battlefield.” The girl said.

Vanellope and Leslie launched at each other with forceful kicks, but Leslie’s was stronger on the impact. Vanellope bounced away, holding her aching leg, but had to glitch away when Leslie reshaped the fountain to shoot water at her. “Hate to play dirty, but I’m switching to 2-player!”
Vanellope declared, rapidly glitching left-and-right to divide herself in two. The twin Vanellops rushed in between the two Vanellopes, Leslie blocked the one above her, but the second Vanellope kicked her upside the chin. When Leslie was airborne, the first Vanel kicked her in the side, but Leslie recovered and swung Tempest Kick between them.

The twin Vanellopes joined back together, but her body blinked for a few seconds as a result of the power. “I hear solid holograms are hard to piece together in the real world.” Leslie said. “It seems whatever technology brought you here isn’t perfect. You blink so much, you might blink out of existence.”

“Not until I blink that look off your face!” She glitched.

“There may be some punch behind your kicks, but I see your body falling apart. When all’s said and done, you’re a pile of tiny photons. Any moment, you’ll-”

Vanellope glitched behind for a Rapid Kick- glitched below- glitched to the left, then Leslie was surrounded by a Lickety Split Circle. The secretary again sprouted needles around her, Vanellope zipped above and continued the circle, so Leslie bent the needles to shield her from above.
Vanellope glitched through a gap behind Leslie and kicked her leg, and rapidly glitched around the enclosed space to dizzy Leslie with the light and deal more hits against her.

Leslie broke the needle shield and escaped using Shaves. “Time to bend YOU out of shape!” Leslie focused her power on Vanel and made her pixels into pyramids. Vanellope panicked at the sight of her spiky body, which then became bulgy when Leslie made the pixels spherical. Leslie made them hexagons, decagons, half-circles—eventually Vanellope’s body broke apart altogether.
“There! That should’ve even have been a challenge. WHAT?!!”

Several pixels reformed into bigger block pixels, which would take the shape of doll-size Vanellopes. The two dozen dolls zipped around the floor as little sparks, and Leslie tried to stomp them with her heels. Carol Masterson found her way into the room and gasped. “Vanellope! Why are there so many of you?!”

“Just send Game-and-Watch!” a Vanel squeaked.
“Yeah, Gamen, Gamen!” another zipped by.

“You got it.” Carol had Mr. Game-and-Watch form from a holo-light on her computer.

“Huh.” Leslie cockily huffed and shaped Gamen into a 3-D box. Carol summoned another Game-and-Watch, then another, Leslie made them all into boxes that merely shook on the spot. “You girls need to focus more on dolls instead of games.”

“Don’t count us out, yet!” The Vanellopes started latching onto Leslie’s body and chewing her, but the woman shook the dolls off and furiously stomped them all. She smirked at her victory over the Program, but to her dismay, the Game-and-Watch boxes began reforming and recoloring into Vanellope clones. “Because we have plenty of extra lives to spare!”

“IMPOSSIBLE!” Leslie stretched a leg out, charged power to it, and began zooming around the room in a Tempest Spin. She chased the Vanellopes, aiming to chop them down, and she was able to derez a few. “You were divided into pixels, your pixels couldn’t have resized that easy!”

“It wasn’t easy!” Indeed the Vanellope clones had distinct black splotches on their bodies, remains of Game-and-Watch’s code. “But I only need to hold these clones together a few seconds!” With that, the Glitch Clones all began their own Lickety Circle, doing so at different heights so it became a Lickety Tornado. Vanellope’s eyes were burning from the light, and her glasses had broken. The secretary fell to her knees before collapsing on her front. (End song.)

“GAME OVER, HAG!” The Vanellopes echoed simultaneously. “Lickety Split PLANET KICK!!” They shot at Leslie from every direction, all unleashing Rapid Kicks, it was a hailstorm of pixelly boots. Carol uncovered her eyes when the tornado stopped. The Vanellope clones derezzed and formed back into a singularity, catching her breath as her body was sparking and disproportioned in various places. Leslie’s eyes were burning from the light, and her glasses had broken. The secretary fell to her knees before collapsing on her front. (End song.)

“Carol, where’s Vanellope?!” Dillon and Kirie ran in. “Where’s…!” The Program was gasping for breath and staring at her fallen opponent.

“I was programmed to be a racer.” Vanellope panted. “I was designed to be a princess. Nothing more, nothing less. Then, I was reprogrammed to be an MCP. But I wanted to come to the real world… to be more. I wanted to live like real humans do. You guys say I don’t have Power Levels… you say I can’t get stronger or develop… but I was never programmed to be a glitch. I took control of my defection… I learned new ways to use it… so in the end, are you still gonna call me a broken Program?”

“…” Dillon smiled. “I never doubted you for a second, Vanellope. I’m glad to have you back in the real world.”

“Heh… That’s what I thought.” She smiled wryly and weakly. “Nowwww… I need a beauty nap.” She fell on her back and went to sleep. Carol giggled and sat in front of her, catching Vanellope’s image on her computer’s Window Mode and using the cursor to reshape her body.

“This is Dillon to everyone.” The boy spoke to his wristwatch. “Vanellope took down another assassin!”

“Vanellope did?!” Apis exclaimed. “That’s amazing!”

“That means we only have five more to go!” MaKayla said cheerily.

“It’s 12:30 now.” Miyuki reported. “If we keep up our pace, we should have the others beaten at 12:40. By 12:45, Maddy may be able to find the Poneglyph… then hopefully, she’ll be able to read it by 1:00.”

This ends the first part of Enies Lobby. Next time, we’ll fight three more assassins. Team CRDL comes from RWBY, and Russel Thrush in particular is the star of :iconDepthcharge2030:’s story Darkling Thrush. Here’s a Caesar Cipher and- wait, I forgot something!

Zach Murphy was running through a different hall of the tower, pursued by a team of Anti Guys. Sky Lark, a blue-haired member of CRDL ambushed him, and without hesitating, swung his halberd to slice Zach down the middle.

His skin tore like paper, exposing the bones underneath. Zach’s skin fell off like a paper suit. No blood, no organs, just the skeleton. “Nnss-nnss-nnss-nnss-nnss!” The skeleton started jigging. “Everything is awesome!”

Everything is awesome! Colorful spotlights shone around as the Shy Guys danced with the skeleton. Everything is cool when you’re part of the team! Sky Lark took a liking to the song and started dancing to it. Everything is awesoooomee! When you’re livin’ the dream!

Cardin Winchester watched him from across the hall. He rolled his eyes in frustration. “Undeveloped characters.” he cursed before walking away.

The battle continues as the KND face more members of CP10!

I manage to cover three assassin fights in this chapter!

Chapter 69: Imagineers

Enies Lobby

Ernie the Chicken grabbed large debris from the ruined town and chucked them at Chris, who kept a safe distance and blew up the debris with combustion. Through the smoke, Ernie jumped to surprise Chris with Finger Pistol, but the boy dodged his strikes before grabbing the chicken’s fingers in his hand. He set fire to the feathers, Ernie yelped before kicking Chris away. Ernie’s hand was still aflame, so he Shaved behind Chris and singed his hair, and Chris screamed before spinning a flame shockwave.

Ernie jumped the flames and swung a Tempest Kick, missing Chris as the boy shot his Combustion Beam up. Ernie Shaved beside Chris and landed another punch, then chucked feather kunai at his forehead eye. Chris burned the feathers, then used Rocket Boost to jump over the incoming assassin and land on the ground. “You don’t talk much, do you?” Chris asked. Ernie shook ‘no’ and resumed throwing punches, Chris dodging as he kicked flames at his cloak.

Don Quixote Sugar surfed the sky on a Song Road and evaded her little brother’s String Bullets. She bellowed a Sonic Wave to crack the ground around him, then Doffy Jr. flew up and landed a kick against Sugar’s gut. After she fell, Doffy saw that Maddy and Sheila were about to enter the Tower of Justice, using the giantess Ururu’s arm as a bridge. Doflamingo shot ten strings over to stab Ururu in the back.

“HUU!” The giantess gasped and threw her arm up just as Maddy and Sheila were crossing it. Sheila thankfully landed inside the tower, but Maddy was taking the fall into the maelstrom. “I GOT YOU!” Mabel Pines swung by on her grappling hook and caught Maddy, bringing her back up to the safe ledge.

Ururu was being pulled back by Doflamingo’s strings, so Sugar sent a swarm of Bad Notes to chop them. Sugar ran up to throw punches at her brother, but Doffy dodged and impaled his strings through the ground, yanking them up to cut a strip of ground, but Sugar flipped aside and spewed another Song Beam. Doflamingo rapidly shot strings that all missed Sugar, but his brows cocked when he noticed something. “You seem to cover your chest a lot. Are you holding onto something?” Doffy grinned mischievously.

Sugar looked down and answered, “I’m developing breasts. For 12 years, I couldn’t know what it means to grow. I couldn’t cut my hair, I couldn’t clip my nails... but now I’m finally changing. My breasts are a symbol of my growth.”

“That’s very poetic! NOW I know where to hit!” Doflamingo resumed his endless array of strings.
“Ow… My back hurts…” Ururu grunted. “I think I should shrink down… before my suit takes too much damage.”

“Can that grappling hook get me across?” Maddy asked.

“It doesn’t reach far enough, we need something that can fly or something!” Dipper said.

“On it!” Grenda put Maddy over her back and ran several yards away from the edge. “This is for DESTINYYYY!” Grenda ran, leaped over the abyss, and flapped her arms.

A rendition of “Bicycle Built For Two” was heard from somewhere. Grenda was flying over the roaring abyss using the strength of her arms. Maddy held tight onto her, terrified at the thousand-foot drop and utterly amazed Grenda was flying. Dipper, Mabel, and Candy gaped, and the Teen Ninja witnesses nearly choked on their saliva. From Sparky’s vision, Nefarious was royally baffled.

But you'll look sweet! Upon the seat! On a bicycle built… for two! The song ended at this line when Grenda landed in the Tower of Justice entrance. “My dad taught me how to do that!” Grenda said. “Now GO, Maddy!” she stated seriously. “Find the Gibberish Rock for all of us!”

“O-Okay!” Maddy headed inside, leaving Grenda to fly her other friends across.

The Gilligan Triplets were charging through a hallway of Teen Bikes with faces, shooting the operatives with no pilots commanding them. “They must’ve been given life by Bob’s Devil Fruit power.” Haylee deduced, smashing the bikes’ windshields with her wrench. “He’s close, I can feel it.”

“You ain’t thinking of fighting him, are ya?” Harry questioned as he and Artie shot the enemies with Diffusion Rifles. “We shoulda brought better weapons if we were taking on a CP10 member!”

“I already have what I need!” Haylee said confidently, clutching her wrench. “Bob may commit murders, but he’s an honorable carpenter. He’ll fight in his own way, especially against me.”

“Sounds a bit too optimistic-” Harry said—he was punched in the face by Artie. “I WAS MAKING A POINT, what’s your deal?!”

“I’m sorry, Harry!” Artie started dancing. “Something’s come over me! Or else I wouldn’t be caught dead shakin’ my booty.”

“Krr!” Harry was dancing to the sound of a Spanish guitar. “It must be musicbending! But who…”

“¡Hola niños!” Rodrigo Añorga was in a left passage, strumming his guitar. “Glad you can be in time for my concert… OF DEATH!”

Haylee leapt forth and BASHED the boy in the head with her wrench. “’EY, what gives, man?!”

“Earplugs!” Haylee pointed at her ears. “A carpenter’s best friend! Now tell me where Bob is!” She aimed her wrench at his neck.

“Uah! Señor Bob is down the hall! Please don’t hurt my neck, I need it to sing!”

“Good sport.” Haylee whacked him in the stomach. “I’ll leave him to you. Be back in a jiffy!” She ran ahead.

When Sheila made it into Enies Lobby, she was joined by Mason and Haruka, leading them up the stairs and across a third-floor hall. “Sheila, what makes you think your mom is in this direction?” Haru asked.

“I have a very keen nose, mate. If that ain’t the smell of beer-covered fur, then I need me nostrils checked.”

Sheila was several feet ahead of them with her Mobian speed- “UUH!” Her feet sunk into a liquid part of floor—she ditched her sandals and jumped back to solid land. “What the bloody hell is this?!”

Haruka bent over and stuck her finger in the goop, which was green and in square parts like the floor tiles. “It’s some kind of tar… but from a distance, you couldn’t tell. This could trap anyone.”

“Courtesy of Megan the Prankster.” They looked across the pool and saw Ashei Winters. “Be wary of what lies underneath.” She blew her horn and summoned a tentacled beast from the tar pit. The beast slamming a tentacle at Sheila, who jumped on and ran across, punching the creature in the eye before jumping over to Ashei.

“Well, I run better without shoes!” Sheila gripped the teen’s coat. “Now tell me where Mum is or I’ll clock ya in the teeth!”

“The raccoon woman will be down a hall on your left. Good luck trying to rescue her.”

“I’ll bring her back and we’ll clock you together!” Sheila pushed her and ran forward.

“Sigh, I guess we have to fight this thing ourselves now.” Mason said.

“At least Sheila’s fast, she’ll be back soon.” Haru replied.

“Hm… I wouldn’t count on it.” Ashei smirked.

Haylee Gilligan made it to the end of her hallway, reaching to grab the doorknob. The door sprouted a face and shouted, “HUAH HAH HA HA! THAT TICKLES! I’m alive, by the way.” Haylee bashed the door senseless and kicked it open. “BOB!”

She was in a construction room with scaled-down building scaffolds, steamrollers, and bulldozers that all had faces. “Oh ho ho! I wasn’t expecting to see you so soon, Haylee!” Bob said perkily as always. “You know, it’s impolite to barge in on someone during a project. One missed nail is one less eye!”

“I just hope you had your morning cup of coffee.”

Bob gasped loudly. “! You…”

“Yes, Bob. I heard from President Business what you did. Why you were banished from Legola…”

During training, Lord Business showed Haylee a black-and-white security footage. In the silent video, a building inspector was scolding Bob, and was refusing a bribe Bob held out. When the inspector wasn’t looking, Bob hit him with his hammer and knocked him out. He covered the inspector with cement and flattened him with a steamroller. Bob built a Lego house over the cement and acted casual.

“It’s not even easy to kill a Legoan.” Haylee said. “You’re crazy without your coffee.”

“Ready to kill! You don’t honestly think you can whack me with that little wrench, do you?”

“Oh contraire.” Haylee pressed a button that expanded the width of her long wrench. Seeing a bunch of scattered wood around, Haylee zipped about, threw some pieces in a pile with her wrench, got some nails from the table, and began rapidly hammering them in to keep the mini hotel steady. “I’ve been training with Lord Business! You’ve been keeping me at a snail’s pace, but now I have the swift reflexes of a Legoan!”

“Howdy do!” Bob gaped. “Well, I say I’m in for a challenge! But this room falls a bit short. How about we move to a bigger playground?”

“What’d you have in mind?”

“Take a look at my Dimension Transporter!” Bob indicated the circular Lego device. “Although it was made from the lifeless Lego Dimensions set, my Life-Life Fruit powers made it the real thing! Inside is a dimension I constructed all on my own, and I would be honored if you could see it.”

“Sure thing!” Haylee raised her wrench. “I’ll beat you in your own playground!”

“Watch your mouth, Haylee! You might chip off your tongue.” Bob hopped over and activated the purple, blocky portal. “Ready when you are.”

“I’m ready!” Haylee ran up the mini stairs. She and Bob jumped in the vortex together, warping to a land where the ground and sky were Legos. (Play “Kirby Boss Theme Medley” from Smash Bros. Brawl!)

Boss fight: Bob the Builder

Haylee landed on a yellow Lego platform and watched Bob plummet over the edge. The carpenter rose from the depths in a Lego robot with wrecking ball fists. “Huhuhuhu!” The wrecking balls had laughing faces. “I’m gonna squish ya! Huhuhuhu! Guts and whatnot!” Haylee evaded the Ballbot frightfully, for she didn’t want their faces to be the last thing she sees upon death. It didn’t help that the materials around the field had sentience and were jumping around as well. Haylee had to clock them on the head with her wrench to knock them out. Still avoiding the wrecking balls, she collected some thin metal bars, rainbow-shaped Legos with big teeth, along with ropes and nails.

Haylee fixed the Legos into large bear traps, which she stood on as the wrecking balls came to her. When they swung down, she jumped off, pulled the rope, and trapped the wrecking balls in the teeth. Bob was unable to pull them free since the traps were hammered down, giving Haylee the chance to run across a ball’s chain and start bashing their base with her wrench. Haylee destroyed the left arm link, then hopped over and broke the right before jumping back to the platform. Bob’s robot leapt onto the platform to begin chasing Haylee with bulldozer wheels.

It was then the player’s camera started scrolling and revealed more of the platform, as it was time for Haylee to run. There was a giant face between the vehicle’s wheels, spitting Banzai Bills that Haylee ducked left or right. The path reached its end, forcing Haylee to start jumping floating brick platforms like a Mario level. Bob’s robot grew propellers to float and chase her, and cannons shot Bullet Bills at Haylee. Haylee could bat the projectiles with her wrench up to Bob’s propellers. She had to be mindful of his Banzai Bills, because they would destroy a line of platforms at her current level. Thankfully, after seven Bullet Bills to the propellers, the Lego robot plummeted down the abyss.
Bob jumped out of the cockpit and used Moon Walks to bypass the platform course, and Haylee kept moving to outrun him. Eventually, she could set foot on a stable ledge and watch Bob fall below. Almost instantly he emerged on the top of a cannon totem. The totem moved left and right depending on Haylee’s position, and the materials available to her were blocks and cannons. Haylee had to again hit the living objects with her wrench, then she could stack her own cannon towers. She couldn’t stop anything atop the cannons, so she had to set the cannons at levels equal to Bob’s cannons. She would have to lure Bob’s totem in front of her own and avoid getting hit while her cannon shoots one of his.

After all five of Bob’s cannons were destroyed, his totem was a barren cylinder. But he quickly reconfigured it with spikes, turned it horizontal, and rolled it toward Haylee. The young carpenter grabbed two pickaxes and began climbing the wall behind her, and Bob’s spiked roller gave chase. There were faces on the wall that Haylee had to maneuver around, lest they spit her. Eventually, Haylee made it to the ceiling and had to use her pickaxes to climb across it. Bob’s spiked roller was still able to cling to the ceiling, and Haylee maneuvered around hanging pipes that tried to munch her.

Haylee got above a slide and dropped onto it, sliding to an outside region of the Lego dimension, where Haylee ran along a thin path surrounded by ocean. Bob slid down and was caught by a monster truck with a scary face. It sent small toy cars at Haylee, who batted them away while also bashing upside-down traffic cones to their normal position. The spiked traffic cones punctured Bob’s tires, and once they were gone, Bob reshaped his car into a boat and sped along the sea. He collected materials out at sea to forge cannons and start shooting Haylee’s foothold.

“When destruct!” Bob pushed a button on his boat and used Moon Walk to escape. In the five seconds she had, Haylee cut off the boat’s engines, made a jetpack out of them, and flew away before the craft exploded. Her jetpacks were faster than Bob, but there were already Missile Bills in the area to provide him backup. Haylee battered the Bills away, but Bob doubled the strength of his Moon Walks to outrun her. Haylee was now soaring over the Lego clouds in her search for him. She slowed down before hitting a King Bill that launched up from below, then sped up when a King Bill appeared directly above.

That’s when a gigantic blimp emerged with Bob the Builder in the cockpit, and a giant devilish face on the balloon. Its dozens of cannons unleashed swarms of Missile Bills, but Haylee was quick in batting them away. She set foot on the deck underneath the floating fortress, running around to hit cowering materials. She formed the parts into a robot suit and used it to break down the walls in her way, as well as attack the Gun Guys shooting at her. Haylee got under a hatch and jumped up through it. Once inside the blimp’s balloon, she used her suit to jump to several platforms and destroy the power generators.

The fortress trembled before exploding into thousands of Legos. Haylee’s robot shattered with it, and as she was taking the rapid plummet from the sky, she grabbed a spring in her wrench, put it under herself, and softened the impact of the landing. She bounced high into the air, and seeing materials falling everywhere, she grabbed some and whipped them up into a racecar. She landed in the car, and realized she was on a train track. CHOOOOOOO! Haylee looked back in panic, seeing none other than Thomas the Tank Engine speeding to destroy her, having been given its face by Bob’s power.

Haylee stomped the gas pedal and zoomed her racecar across the track, pressing the jump function to dodge boulders. “OUCH! AHH!” Thomas’s face was taking the blow of the boulders. “Bob, how could you give a TRAIN a FACE?!”

“No one likes a whiner, Tom!” Bob said cheerily. “Now speed up and decimate her!”

The train increased in speed, so Haylee pushed more gas out of her car as she sped up a steep hill. Haylee gasped, seeing a sign that said DEAD END. The minute her car shot up over the hill, she jumped out and let it explode against a wall that was camouflaged like the sky. She looked down and saw Thomas was struggling to get up the hill. “I THINK I can… I THINK I can…”

“Come on, Tom, you can do it!” Bob cheered, blowing the whistle. “FULL THROTTLE!”

An idea sparked in Haylee’s head: using the available materials, she began to whip up another portal machine. Bob was ten seconds from making it up even at full speed, but Haylee’s quickened handiwork constructed the portal in time. “I, think, I—CAAAAAAHHHH!” The train zoomed into the purple vortex without realizing.

“I knew you would.” Haylee smirked.

Outside, the living train BURST out of the portal and through the wall of the construction room. Outside the Tower of Justice it went, and down he goes into the maelstrom. Bob managed to jump out of the craft, but the haphazard act left the carpenter in pieces. “AAAH!” Haylee stomped her foot beside his severed head.

“It’s only fitting for a student to surpass her teacher.” Haylee said as she picked the head up.

“Just a second there, Kiddo!” Bob said perkily. “I didn’t recommend those private tutoring lessons!”

“Yeah, Business taught me a lot… but in the end, you guided me for most of the way.” Haylee took the Legoan’s hat and put it on herself. “Did I do it?” She winked.

Bob smiled. “Yes you did.”

“Heehee! Now byebye!” With that, Haylee kicked the severed head and sent him falling into the maelstrom. The scattered body parts scrambled over to the hole and dropped down after him. She said to her wristwatch, “This is Haylee. I defeated Bob. Getting ready to thrash more Teens.” (End song.)

In the first floor foyer of the tower, Aisa was nimbly dodging Karin Uzumaki’s punches, and when the Nimbi attempted to kick her in the chest, Karin dodged right and kicked Aisa off her feet. That’s when Morgiana flew in from above Karin’s right, denting the floor with her feet after missing the red-haired girl, but Morgiana kicked off and rocketed to shove Karin against a pillar.

Thirty Anti Guys surrounded Maddy in a passage, all diving at her, but using her Observation, she dodged each one without getting scratched. She got outside their circle and punched twin Armament fists to blow the crowd down. “The infamous Light, huh?” Maddy turned to face Cardin Winchester, wielding his black mace. “Knocking down a horde of Anti Guys like they’re jokes, I guess you are worth the effort. But you’re alone now…” Cardin approached with his mace raised. “So I’m walking home with the prize!”

Maddy easily dodged the swings from his weapon, and when Cardin shot fire from the crystal in the mace, Maddy punched an Armament fist forward and blocked. Cardin whipped the mace at her, but Maddy clasped it in the armored hand and squeezed ’til it broke. “Why you-!” Cardin threw a punch-

An unsettling feeling in the air knocked the teen unconscious. “You’re not worth the effort.” Maddy remarked.

“Maddy, there you are!” Carol and Dillon ran up from behind Cardin. “Come on, we know where the Gibberish Rock is located. The blueprints say there’s a secret passage, let’s go!” Maddy nodded, running over Cardin’s body as she followed.

After Zach distracted Sky Lark with his Skeleton Clone, the boy made it to the third floor of the tower. “That was a risky move on my part.” He panted. “Thankfully, I remembered the Skeleton Clone only works on Fridays for five extra cents. Now I must help Maddy find the Gibberish Rock. Only when she reads it will she be able to exempt herself from all her future English classes.” I can also copy off her answer and exempt myself, too! It’s the perfect plan.

Zach noticed a bunny in the hallway, twitching its nose like an innocent little animal. “Ooo, a bunny! You know, I’m pretty sure bunnies eat dogs.” He scratched his chin in thought. “Or do I have it backwards? Eh, let’s try it! C’mere, little critter.” Zach chased the bunny and followed it into a cracked-open door. “Oh?”

“Hee hee hee! I missed you too, Nummy-Nums!” Megan Parker lay on a bed and nuzzled one of her dozen bunnies. “I missed youuuu. Huh?” She looked up. “Oh, it’s you again. Whaddyou want, Boob?”

“I’m not a boob! I’m a fool!”

“That’s a synonym.”

“No, this is.” Zach held a pack of cinnamon.

“Whatever. But you’re the Light’s brother, aren’t you?” Megan sat up. “I wonder if she would turn herself over if I threatened to kill you?”

“Oh yeah?” Zach stepped forward. “We’ll see if I- AAAAH!” He slipped on a banana peel and fell back. “OAF!”

“The oldest trap in the book was lying right there and you didn’t see it.” Megan climbed off her bed. “How are you going to beat a prankmaster like-” She stepped on a pencil.

“WATCH IT, LADY!” The pencil jumped to its feet and rapidly punched her in the face. “Can’t you see I’m tryin’ to nap here?!” Megan was knocked back on her bed.

“Oh, I saw that banana! I just needed to get close enough to give Pencilton his milk.”

Mr. Pencilton sipped a milk glass. “Thank ye, Zach!”

Megan recovered. “That’s Bo-bobo Kempo, isn’t it? I know General Guy uses it… Always looked stupid to me.”

“Well, pardon me, but I find you too boring! Heh, that’s 2 for me, 1 for you. But don’t think I’m stopping there!” Zach made a fighting pose. “Get ready for Rock, Paper, Scissors!” (Cue miscellaneous Bo-bobo music. :P)
Boss fight: Megan Parker

This is it, Zach. The moment you trained ten hours for. Zach thought with determination. The key to defeating your enemy is to lay the first strike! That’s how 60% of battles are won. 30% are won through filling the enemy’s pants with salami while 10% are won through buying them Cheetos. … I got a plan!

“Temperature Teddies, ATTACK!” Zach stood with a squadron of teddybears wielding thermometers. “AAAAHH!” They dashed stalwartly at Megan—there were strings attached to their butts, and they pulled a stretched spring off the wall as it retracted and stuck them all together.

“You spent all that time thinking, you didn’t see me set all that up?” Megan laughed. “Face it, Dweeb, nobody escapes from my traps- huh?”

Zach and the bears donned hula girl outfits, rotating as they danced with their behinds still latched together. There was a teddybear being roasted on the stake in the center. “You turned this into a ritual?!” Megan questioned.

“Senator Beary has shamed his nation by distributing mittens to our neighbors. WE’RE SO COOOOOLD!” Zach and the bears shuddered in their grass skirts.

“YOU’RE SURROUNDING A BURNING BEAR!” Megan shouted at their ‘logic.’ “If you’re STILL cold, PUT ON A SWEATER!”

“Our sweaters are going to more important tasks! The WAR against Short Skirts!”

“YAAAAAAAAARRRR!” An army of sweaters charged forth across a desolate landscape.

“WHEEEEEE!” An army of skirts frolicked across colorful flowers.

The two respective areas were Megan’s belly and armpits. “THEY’RE USING ME AS A BATTLEFIELD?!”

“I’M TIRED O’ THIS WAR!” Zach readied a cannon. “Time to NUKE these fellas!” The bomb launched, destroying both armies and blowing Megan sky high.

“Grrrr!” Megan recomposed and threw Tempest Kicks, cutting the floor around Zach so he would drop into the lower room. “Have fun in my killer whale tank!” But when she looked in to watch the spectacle, she saw Zach and the killer whale sitting on chairs, smoking pipes, and reading newspapers. “ORCY, WHAT ARE YOU DOING?!”

“Oh, look, Lady Gaga is traveling to Saudi Arabia.” The whale said.

“Boy, won’t she give Prince Ali a run for his money.” Zach remarked.

“Mm-hm. Mm-hm.” The whale nodded in uninterest. Then he started crying, “I WANNA BE A PRINCE SO BAD!”

“DAMMIT, ORCY, TEAR HIM TO PIECES!” Megan stomped her feet impatiently.
“CAN’T YOU SEE THEY’RE HAVING A MOMENT?!” Spongebob Squarepants KICKED Megan into the whale tank, landing her in Orcy’s mouth. The whale viciously swung her around before chucking back into her room. Zach leaped after and stood beside Spongebob.

“Spongebob! Late to the party, as usual.”

“Don’t mind me if I’m a showstopper.” Sponge shrugged. “But I’m ready!”

“So, he’s your friend, too?!” Megan shouted. “Ugh! Look, you can throw all the random crap you want at me. I’m the trained assassin here, I’ll defeat you with my eyes closed! But first… Anyone up for cheese and nachos?” She smiled brightly and held up two packs of the tasty snacks.

“Ooo, yum!” Zach and Sponge began munching them.

Megan smirked. “HAH! You just ate my Super Sticky Cheese! Pretty soon, your throats will clog up, and your last breaths will be gooey and cheesy!”

“Oh, that’s what YOU think!” Zach countered. “But we foresaw this trap and had the nachos replaced with lizard pee!”

“OH, GROSS! …Wait, then why did you eat it, anyway?”

“. . .” Realization dawned on the two. “BLEEEEEHHH!” They started rolling around and puking.

“I THINK I NEED A THROAT TRANSFER!” Zach cried.

“Krusty Krab doesn’t provide health insurance!” Spongebob wept.

“Now’s my chance!” Megan Shaved all around the room, confusing the still-gagging fools. She moved so fast that they didn’t notice the eggs she had chucked from each direction, and the eggs all splatted and covered them in the yolks. “The egg yolks of snow birds quickly harden and freeze, trapping anything inside! By the time it breaks for you, you’ll be at the bottom of the maelstrom.”

“Excuse me, Miss, you’re standin’ in my way.”

“W-What?” Megan looked down and saw a tiny Spongebob and Sector GF, in which Spongebob was wearing a mustache and business uniform.

“As you can see,” Spongebob said to the four operatives, “our Yolk Dome is coated in a 10-inch-thick shell that protects it from missiles and magical forces.” He led the kids through the tiny door into the yolk. “Fifteen floors, complete with 10 swimming pools and gaming stations. In fact, it’s so full of cool stuff, we could only afford one bed. That’s not a problem for you, right?”

“Mabel, what are we doing here?” Dipper whispered.

“I don’t know. But he gave us popsicles.” Mabel held up four popsicles.

“Well, uh, it looks good!” Dipper played along. “I think we’ll take it.”

“Excellent! Just sign here.”

The kids signed a paper on a clipboard. Zach peaked into the tiny window, nodding with approval. “That’s what I call fine penmanship.”

Zach picked up the Yolk Dome and chucked it off Enies Lobby, the inhabitants screaming as they plunged into the maelstrom. Zach turned to Megan wearing a fox costume. “It’s called a hustle, “I think you missed the point somewhere.” Megan said.

“GRAAAAH!” Zach burned with rage. “MEGAN, you’re going to PAY for chucking my friends off like that!”

“EXCUSE ME?!”

“I’m not holding back!” Zach formed quick hand signals. “Dad’s Television no Jutsu!”

Megan was crushed under a couch that a fat dad was sitting on while watching TV in his underwear. “Aaaaaaahhh!” Megan fell into a dark abyss and hit a cushiony floor. Spotlights flashed on, revealing the Couch Daves and their giant dust bunnies.

“For a trillion football seasons, our bellies rumbled with the unending lust for the golden provisions!” Emperor Dave announced. “Many have tried, but alas, we cannot journey far from our land. Only YOU may cleanse our lust!” Megan gasped when she was dressed in a toga. “The legendary Huus Weef!”

“Housewife? . . .” Megan felt utter embarrassment right now. “And you want popcorn. (Golden provisions.) Go buy your own snacks, you dumb boobs.”

“BOOOOOOOOBS!!” Suddenly the Daves were riled up, piling on Megan desiringly.

“What are you doing, let me go! AAAAAHH!”

Now Megan was dressed in a cozy wool coat. “We don’t want your nipples to have nippers.” Dave said. The other Daves blushed goofily.

“You people are freaks!”

“Speaking of freaks, have a GUN pop!” Zach swung a giant lollipop with GUN’s logo and batted Megan away.

The assassin recovered in midair and began Moon Walking. “That’s it! Time to use my electric floor trap!” She pressed a button on the wall. Zach gasped when the floor electrified except for his spot. “Now everywhere in this room is a death trap! Good luck finding a way out of this!”

Megan gasped. “JUNIPER!”

“If you want your bunny to be saved, you have no choice but to disable this death trap!”

“You… You wouldn’t!”

But Zach said nothing more. He looked grim as his finger was glued to the trigger. It would burn the bunny’s rope and end its life. Juniper looked so sad. Zach struggled with the inner conflict, risking this bunny’s life for the sake of his own. He couldn’t take it. Zach put the gun away and stepped off his spot. The electric floor burned him into soot.

Megan turned it off and set foot on the floor. “He… gave his own life?”
“Oh, ZAAAACH!” Juniper escaped from her cage, hopping over to cry over his remains. She spoke in a squeaky voice, “Zachary! I knew I wasn’t a hostage worth expending. I told you to threaten Carrot, that tramp has it coming. Sniff… at least… you left me in your will. What did you give me?” She took a document out of Zach’s remains. “HOLY SMOKES, MY OWN WARPLANE?! ‘I’M HITTIN’ RUSSIA!’ The rabbit immediately hopped on her warplane and soared away from the tower. “So long, suckers!”

The echo of the maelstrom roared peacefully in her bunny ears. “HUUUURRRR!” However, that’s when an angry Sector GF rocketed out of the depths and STRUCK the plane, destroying it as Juniper fell into the sea. “ZAAAAACH!” They shot back into Megan’s room, blowing the assassin against the wall. Grenda grabbed a defibrillator, rubbed the two pads together, and zapped the pile of soot so it would reform into Zach.

“Guys, you saved me!” Zach beamed. “For a second, I thought I was actually—”

“YOU TOSSED US INTO A WHIRLPOOL!” they shouted together.

“I GAVE YOU POPSICLES!”

“STOP YELLING!” Megan shouted.

“Hey, this is an adult conversation!” Zach kicked Sector GF into a ball that rolled at Megan, who kicked back and sent them falling out of the tower again.

“This is insane! You countered every prank I threw at you, even when I had them all planned out! But you… No normal person fights like you do!”

“That’s your fatal flaw, Miss Cosgrove.” Zach said, folding his arms. “Even the most careful planning is useless to someone as unpredictable as I am. You rely on some metahuman power to generate pranks, but real pranksters get by with natural talent. And that’s not all, you give pranksters a bad name. I concoct every whacky attack with pride in knowing that I’m giving someone somewhere a laugh. You only play with dirty pranks and want dirty results. Tell me something, when was the last time somebody besides you laughed at your tricks?”

“Are you joking? You can’t tell me that all of those stunts you pulled were some ‘natural talent.’ AND MY NAME IS NOT MIRANDA!!”

“Then tell me, Not Miranda: if you’re really the best prankster the World Government has to offer, hit me with your best trap.”

“You asked for it!” Megan pressed a button, sprouting a spiked fence up around Zach, closed by a flaming lid from the ceiling. Megan followed this with a shrink ray to zap it down to size, and a crocodile to come and swallow it whole. “Ha! Enjoy yourself in there!”

“Beg pardon?” Megan gasped and whipped her head up. She narrowed her vision to make out the tiny speck on the ceiling. It was Zach encased in an Easter Egg.

The egg biggified and landed on the crocodile. “Just when the lid was coming down, I noticed one of the embers had a form that said he was two days from retirement. I deduced he was mentally checked out and saw that as my window to escape. The shrinking eggshell armor was optional. Face it, Megan. Your pranks are nothing to me. And to think a gal like you could’ve been the funniest in the chuckle hut, if you had a bit more spark to your snares.”

Megan growled. She couldn’t let herself be outsmarted by this fool. After all, none could get more foolish than Drake & Josh.

When working on the show, Miranda enjoyed her role as Megan Parker, designing her own whacky traps to snare the brothers on a weekly basis. She developed a habit of pranking the other actors, like when she left a present for Jonathan Goldstein to find, with a note that said it was from Nancy. Jonathan found a pretty necklace in the small box, but when he put it around his neck, he suddenly found it was too tight. No matter how much he tugged on it, it kept getting tighter. Eventually, he stopped breathing.

“I’m Megan Parker…” Miranda said with a distraught face. “It’s what I do.”

“I am Megan Parker…” The assassin grit her teeth. “I’ve always been Megan Parker…” She stomped up to Zach, “And I won’t be humiliated by the likes of-” She stepped on the banana peel still on the floor. Her foot slipped up and she flew back toward one of the points on the corner of her bed. “Dammit.”

The back of her head BUMPED against the brown peg, then she hit the floor. When Zach came to examine her, Megan’s expression was dim, and drool leaked from her mouth. “Hmm… Maybe it was for the best.” Zach said. “She was already cuckoo.”

The Easter Egg hatched, revealing a yellow bird with a sign. “Buy one, get 10% off Kroger-brand lemonade!”

Behind Enies Lobby

Carol led Dillon and Maddy to a back shore of Enies Lobby, where they had view of the bottom of Mt. Mariejoa across a few yards of sea. Carol stepped on a spot of ground. “This is a secret trapdoor. According to the blueprints, you’ll go through an underwater passage and get to the room where the rock is. If you want clarification, it’s directly behind that part of the mountain.” Carol pointed.

Dillon called Midna to yank the secret hatch open with her Hair Hand. Maddy looked nervously at the ocean, then down the dark shaft. “It’s better going under than over, I guess.”

“Good luck, Maddy.” Dillon bowed. “Bring us home the gold.”

Maddy climbed slightly down the shaft ladder. She stopped, still pondering Chris’s words the other night. “…So, what do you guys think will happen after I read the Gibberish Rock?”

“Are we really gonna talk about this now?” Midna asked.

“Ruff ruff ruff!” Sparky was impatient.

“I’m just nervous is all. After everything I’ve been through, I’m about to realize some important destiny. What if I come out of there… and I’m a completely different person?”

Dillon looked away, remembering a similar dilemma with Vanellope a few days ago. Even now, he feared if that was the right move, if Peridot would serve as a worthy replacement. “…Nobody knows what’s gonna happen.” Dillon said. “All I know… is we came all this way and poured all our effort into getting you here. You have to see it to the end, for Mocha, Aurora, and everyone else. Just go! Hurry before any of the agents come.”

“Right… It’s now or never. Just let Chris know where I am.” She sunk into the shaft and closed it.

Returning to the ruined town, Shade was absorbing Nya’s punches in her palms, then grabbed the teen’s fists to whirl and toss her away. Shade closed her eyes, sensing Maddy’s location all the way across the island. Shade smiled. “You’re wasting your time, Nya. In a few minutes, all your efforts will be in vain.”

“What does that mean?!” Nya shot at Shade, but the echidna easily dodged the lasers and leapt to kick her in the face.

“Nya, it would be more worth your time to join our side. The Twenty Keys Prophecy will come true, no matter how much the Government tries to stop it. What do you have to gain from them?”

“A world of no more Kids Next Door!” Nya threw a flash bomb at the ground and blurred Shade’s vision, allowing the teen to punch her.

Chris was incredibly sweaty after 10 minutes fighting Ernie. The chicken was still in top condition and was willing to go some more. Chris looked at his watch when the message was sent. “Heh… It’s not over, yet. I can’t let Maddy see me all beaten up when she comes back. I’m taking you out, Chicken! HERE I COME!” (Play “Chicken Fight” from Family Guy!)

Boss fight: Ernie the Chicken

Power Levels: Chris – 4095. Ernie – 4500

Chris charged at Ernie with twin flaming fists, but the chicken withstood the heat and grabbed them, spinning and swinging Chris around as he slammed the boy against some rubble. He released Chris, who shot at Ernie as a Flame Torpedo and drilled against his chest. Ernie used Iron Body to defend, then swiped his talon at Chris when he stopped, but the boy jumped and punched fireballs at Ernie’s face. Ernie shook the fire off and tried to punch his Combustion Eye, but Chris slid under Ernie’s cloak and kicked up at his crotch. “BAGAWK!”

Chris got back up and countered Ernie’s punches. He saw a Teen Ninja speeding up on a bike, so with quick reaction, Chris jumped on the bike, slipped inside, and kicked the ninja out. Chris zoomed the bike toward Ernie and caught the chicken on the windshield. Ernie punched through the glass and grabbed Chris’s neck, the boy swerving the bike uncontrollably before driving it into the maelstrom. As they whirled around the current, Chris was pulled out of the bike and punched by Ernie, but they both held their breath and kept fighting.

Melody saw them about to swirl into the whirlpool, but the water giant couldn’t save them with Suigetsu holding her back. Chris and Ernie flushed down the maelstrom, down into a spiraling undersea cave that would take them who-knows-where. Eventually, they resurfaced inside a sewer, and Chris tossed a box of magazines to distract Ernie before shooting his Combustion Beam. The beam missed the evasive chicken, caving in the sewer ahead and giving the water nowhere to flow. It built up, and before long they were blown out of a hole, viewing Hollywood in all its glory.

Chris and Ernie landed outside a studio made to look like an airport, for this is where they were shooting Captain America: Civil War. Both opponents hopped up, Chris on the side of Captain America and Ernie with Iron Man. “Action!” Both teams of Avengers charged each other. Winter Soldier began his epic clash with Black Panther and Black Widow got flipped by Ant-Man. Chris and Ernie blended in perfectly and exchanged fists, the cameramen getting on every side to catch every detail of their motion.

Captain America ambushed Ernie and punched the back of his head, and Spider-Man yanked Chris over in a web trap. Chris burned the webbing and kicked Spider-Man in the head, and Ernie zipped behind Cap to Finger Pistol is back, swiping his vibranium shield. Chris shot a Combustion Beam, but the unbreakable shield blocked it, then Ernie tossed it like a Frisbee to hit Chris in the head. “AAAAH!” He gripped his Combustion Eye.

Ernie smirked maliciously, but Chris fixed his headband back on. Ernie dropped the shield and ran to exchange more blows, enduring all Chris’s Fire Fists. They fought their way into the airplane on the set and started it up. The Avengers watched as they took off for the sky. “Oh, guys, can I PLEASE be in Infinity War, pretty pleeeeeeaaaase?” Spider-Man begged.

The airplane tilted left, giving Ernie an advantage over Chris, then right, getting Chris on top of him. Ernie kicked, but missed and hit a lever that caused the plane to shoot down. It crashed close to a warzone island, the two flying out in the explosion and landing amongst the troops in green garb. Chris and Ernie donned green helmets and began shooting each other with machineguns. They laid nary a strike and decided to clash against each other’s guns. The scuffle moved into the army base, where they both fell into a metal barrel that sealed. “Self-destruct in 3... 2... 1...”

The base exploded, sending the barrel flying across the world. The extreme speed and spinning didn’t cease their fight, even when the barrel bumped against the top of a mountain and shot them out, they still exchanged punches across the sky. Eventually, they crashed through the window of a Japanese classroom, where students were hard at work completing a test. “YOU!” The teacher stopped their fight. “YOU LATE FOR CLASS! Sit down and take your test!”

Chris and Ernie exchanged dirty looks and sat beside each other. They determinedly filled in the answers as fast as they could, pencils continuously scratching along the paper, and every few minutes they glanced at the other. Ernie finished his test and went to plop it on the teacher’s desk, and Chris was next to do so. While the teacher was grading, they began clashing with their pencils, wherein Chris scored some pokes in Ernie’s feathers, then Ernie scratched above Chris’s mouth. They locked fists for a minute before Teacher finished grading.

“You both fail! You know nothing of Japanese culture! You base everything off anime! Not everyone in Japan is 10-year-old girl or monster! GO BACK TO E-CLASS!” Ernie punched the teacher unconscious, then Chris shot twin fire beams to send him out the window. Chris jumped out and crushed Ernie under flaming feet, then their battle resumed as they knocked out several kids in the schoolyard.

It seems a Japanese girl left her magic wand by a tree, and a boy left his Power Rangers uniform under a bench. Chris seized the wand and transformed into a magical girl, and Ernie became the Red Ranger and raised his sword. Ernie blocked Chris’s magic spells with the sword and slashed across the air. Chris used magic to fly, and Ernie activated Red Ranger’s holo-wings to pursue Chris up into space. The stars were sparkly in this anime battle, for Chris summoned the stars to rain down upon the Chicken Ranger. Chris channeled full power to his wand and used the Kame Game Whatever. The powerful laser struck Ernie directly and sent him down to the Earth like a comet.

The Giant Chicken crashed into Enies Lobby, back where they started. Chris landed close by, panting after exhausting that much energy. “Gyah!” He remembered he was wearing a pink dress and blonde ponytail wig, so he threw the guise off. Unfortunately, Ernie was back on his feet.

“I didn’t think I would have to do this, but you asked for it! I’m going PRIMAL!” Ernie’s feathers sharpened and his eyes turned blood-red. With lightning speed, he Shaved around Chris and scratched him with his talons. Chris endured the pain, and when Ernie zipped to his front, he jumped and stomped in his face with Rocket Boost, burning the chicken and escaping his range. (Play “Diable Jambe” from One Piece!)
“Then I guess I’ll have to do it, too!” Chris ripped off his headband. He punched the Combustion Eye and his body burst into flame. “AAAAAAAAHHHHH!” The eye shone like a mini sun, Chris’s skin burned red, his teeth grew sharp, and the ground melted around him. “I can go for some POULTRY!”

Ernie glared and zipped up, but Chris dodged without him noticing and KICKED Ernie from behind. The chicken blew through several ruined buildings, looking up as Chris rocketed above and blasted twin flaming cyclones. Ernie Shaved to dodge, swinging five Tempest Kicks that Chris dodged with Rocket Thrusts. He zipped down, grabbed Ernie by the neck, and shoved him against the ground while burning the poultry.

“Why did the chicken get burned in the fire?” Chris rocketed skyward. “TO GET TO THE OTHER SIDE! Say your prayers, you overgrown fowl!” With a tremendous charge to his Combustion Eye, a beam of supreme power was unleashed upon the chicken.

“BAGAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAWWWWWWWWWWWWW!”

Chris’s forehead was smoking when his Fury Mode ended. He approached the black mass he had created. Ernie was now an overcooked Thanksgiving dinner, no feathers, just a black steaming body of meat. Chris took a piece off and ate it. “Blech. Undercooked.” He continued eating as he walked toward the Tower of Justice, leaving his victory to speak for itself.

In a sudden strum of the orchestra, Ernie’s eyes shot open to Chris’s direction. (End song.)

Inside the tower

Sheila Frantic burst down a door to a room with a glass cage. “MUM!” She saw the raccoon woman lying down. “’ang in there, Mom, I’m bustin’ ya free!” She spun her arm into a Light Fist and shattered the thick glass. “Mum!…” Sheila ran into the cage in bright spirits. “…?”

Marine startled awake, crouched on all fours like a predator. She faced her daughter, snarling with drooling fangs and murderous eyes. “…Mum?”

“AAAAH!” Marine tackled her daughter and bit Sheila in the shoulder. Sheila screamed and punched her mom in the head to scare her off. Sheila clutched her bleeding shoulder, still on her back as she looked up at the upside-down assassin with bowl-shaped hair. “Joey…”

The assassin knelt over her. “Tell me who that is…”

Underwater passage

Maddy walked the dark tunnel calmly, able to see the way forward with Observation Haki. She grew more nervous the further she ventured in the eerie quiet. All she had was her happy, innocent puppy to keep her consoled. At the end of this passage, she would read the stone that would establish her destiny. And what happened next was up to the universe.

Maddy stopped before a great steel door that blocked her way. She took a breath: “Sniiiiff… Sigh. This is it, Sparky. This is the kind of door they would hide a Destiny Rock behind. You ready?”

“Ruff!” Sparky panted excitedly.

“Alright… Then you’re the first one who gets to see my secret power.”

“AROO??” The puppy’s ears shot up.
“Yep. I wanted to keep it secret from the others, even Shade doesn’t know. But I might need to use it to break down this door. I’ll turn it off soon as I do. And… here we go!” Sparky watched with extreme close attention when his master performed the act.

The steel door snapped off its hinges and fell forward. Maddy stepped through the smoke, flexing her arms after the minor exhaust of energy. “Still needs some getting used to… Alright, now where is that…?” She gaped.

Maddy was standing atop a mountain over a great, wide savannah. The giant golden sun was halfway below the horizon, creating a red sky. Maddy stood on the edge of the rock to savor the twilight.

“I specially requested Eldwin to install the hologram projectors.” The dark voice said. “I thought it… to be a fitting scenery.”

Maddy turned. The Poneglyph was there, atop a platform. And Rob Lucci stood before it. “Can you imagine a more beautiful place… to devour your prey.”

We’re about to wrap this up sooner than I thought. Next time, we will have the final two battles against CP10. …Oh, and Eldwin. :P Followed by a twist that will shake the whole world. Atbash’s turn.

Chapter Summary

Maddy Murphy finally faces Rob Lucci.

Probably the shortest chapter, yet. I didn’t know how to stretch the fights too much, but I think it’ll suffice.

Chapter 70: All For Nothing

Enies Lobby

“You called me Joey just now.” Number 4 of CP10 said to Sheila. “Who is that?”

“Don’t change the subject, Drongo!” Sheila retorted, still holding her bitten shoulder. “What did you do to my mom?!”

“I gave her this.” Joey held three blueberries between his fingers. “It’s a plant called Night Howler. Very toxic and can bring the true beast out of animals. Even Mobians lose control and stay Primal indefinitely. I wonder how it would affect a half-Mobian like you.”

Sheila jumped up and sent a Light Kick at Joey, knocking him out of the room. She said to her wristwatch, “Mates, I found Joey! He made my mom into a savage!”

“I got your location, I’m coming up there!” Miyuki yelled.

“RAARRR!” Marine bit Sheila’s tail, forcing the daughter to spin a Light Fist and punch her off. “I’m only focusing on you!” Sheila said to Joey. “Ain’t none of the animals you can turn into can match against me!”

“Or perhaps they can!” Joey transformed into Sheila herself. (Play “Metal Mario Fight” from Super Smash Bros.!)

Boss fight: Joey Beatles

Sheila threw punches and kicks at her double, but Joey countered with the same moves before Shaving behind Sheila and kicking the back of her head. Sheila lit her feet golden and ran around Joey at lightspeed, kicking him across the hall, but when she zipped up for another attack, Joey turned into a giant turtle and protected himself in the shell. “Being me aint as easy as you THOUGHT, huh?!” Sheila retorted. Joey spun in the turtle shell and shot to her, but Sheila jumped and punched Light Spheres to ricochet the shell around the hall.

Joey turned into a cheetah and performed faster Shaves, confusing Sheila before pouncing her from behind. Joey turned into an eagle and picked her up in his talons, flying back around the halls and breaking through a window. “SHEILA!” Sector IC saw her, but they were unable to pursue. The kids heard a growl, and MaKayla fought back when Primal Marine attacked them. “Miyuki, try to look for Sheila, you need to examine Uncle Joey.” Kayla ordered.
Joey dropped Sheila on the top of the Tower of Justice, then morphed into a gorilla to try and crush her, but Sheila jumped away and punched a Light Sphere at his face. Joey turned human and evaded Sheila’s Light Spheres using Paper Art. “Tell me who Joey Beatles is!” he demanded.

“I don’t even know!” Sheila jumped a Tempest Kick. “My friends told me he was Kirie’s missing uncle, and that scientist guy said that he stole the Mammal Fruit. How else are you turning into all these animals?”

“I don’t know.” Joey lunged at her as a snake, but Sheila leapt and grabbed the back of his tail, only for Joey to become a chimp, flip back, and kick her off. “All I remember is fighting, killing, and being ordered to fight and kill.” Joey became a rhino and charged at Sheila, who grabbed the horn and pushed him into halting using her Light Fists. Joey became an ant and skittered up to her foot, but when Sheila stomped, he became a crocodile and snapped her leg in his mouth. Sheila shook her Light Foot and swung him off as Joey changed back to human. “But if you know anything more, I want you to tell me!” He Shaved up and jabbed Finger Pistols.

“You know, I’d have an easier time tellin’ you if you weren’t trying to kill me!”

“I still have a mission. You’re one of the Seven Lights, so I can’t let you live!”

Sheila leapt above and swung a light strip from her tail, but Joey evaded. Sheila landed and said, “Well, I don’t remember you appearing much in the Firstborn story, anyway.” Sheila lit both fists gold and charged at Joey, but he became a hippo and used Iron Body to withstand the attacks. Joey turned into a kangaroo and threw rapid-punches at Sheila, then spun to whack her across the roof with his tail. Sheila used Light Feet to zip around the roof, but Joey became a fly to make her surprise attack fruitless.

When Sheila stopped to look for him, Joey landed on her head and attempted to crawl in her ear, forcing Sheila to desperately pound her head.

This power always made assassination easy! Joey thought with malice. Crawl in the enemy’s ear, expand, explode. I usually prefer less messy ways, but as long as I-“Rewind!” Joey was caught in an unseen force and crawled out of Sheila’s ear, reverting to a fly. Miyuki released her Rewind as Lola Stork flew up to snatch the fly in her batty mouth, spitting Joey out as he morphed back into human. “STOP!” Miyuki and Kayla combined their powers to freeze him in place.

“I hate to score such a cheap knock-out.” Sheila spun twin Light Fists and leapt to smash Joey in the frozen head. “But we’re busy.” (End song.)

When the Stop wore off, the force of Sheila’s attacks smashed Joey down two floors. The assassin lay defeated as Terry carried Miyuki down with Shadow Glide. “Let’s see what happened to you.” Miyuki touched Joey’s head.

Five-year-old Joey was brought onto a boat by men in yellow protection suits. He was greeted by Caesar Clown on Punk Hazard. While sneaking around the facility, he found a green fruit and decided to eat it. He snuck around the base in the form of a spider, and when he learned of Caesar’s true intentions, he became a bird and flew away.

Joey unwillingly changed back into a human partway over the sea. He struggled to swim and would drown, but a GUN vessel passed by and rescued him. “Where did you come from?” a soldier asked.

“I, um... I don’t know!” Joey started crying. The soldiers gasped when he turned into a fish.
flopping on deck, then a lizard.

“He’s some kind of metahuman…”

“Let’s take him to base, maybe the doctors can find out what he is.”

Miyuki fast-forwarded the vision, and from Joey’s eyes a bald-headed brown-skinned doctor was studying him. “It is quite an interesting specimen…” his British voice said. “Perhaps we can use him for our benefit.”

Miyuki quickly skimmed the memories as Joey was doing martial arts in a class of students wearing shock collars. “This one will be Agent 401.” Dr. Strange said. “His code: ‘I Cannot Wait To Get Home To My 50 Pound Mother.’”

Joey was put in the care of a government agent who assigned assassination missions. “Please let me gooo! I wanna go hoooome!” the child of seven years old pleaded.

“Pipe down or I’ll leave you activated! Is that what you want, kid?! To lose your free will?!”

“I MISS MY BROTHER! I WANT WALLY, I WANT WALLY, WAAAAAAH!”

“THAT’S IT! I Cannot Wait To Get Home To My 50 Pound Mother! FOREVER!”

Joey was activated for seven days straight, completing his assassinations without fail using his powers. Unfortunately, his next target, assigned by his own uncontrollable urge, was his handler. So he snuck into the man’s office as a snake and bit him in the neck. Joey turned back and got a powerful headache. He was no longer under anyone’s control, yet he couldn’t remember a time when he was in control. The Sleeper in his brain fried, and he was left for the other government agents to deal with. Soon, Joey was in a Rokushiki class, later to join his fellow assassins.

“So that’s what happened.” Miyuki deduced. “He was a Sleeper Agent that wasn’t deactivated in time.”

“Sheila!” The kids turned to find Mason and Haruka, alongside a familiar raccoon woman.

“MUM!” Sheila beamed. “Strewth, you don’t look savage anymore!”

“There was some kind of poison inside her, so I used my poisonbending to extract it.” Haruka explained.

“I wish those blokes bothered to bathe me.” Marine said, sniffing her armpit. “Where are we, anyway?”

“We have to secure Joey and take him back to Moonbase.” MaKayla said. “We might be able to use his powers to save Mew.”

“What makes ya think that?” Sheila asked.

“It’s just a theory. Mew contains the DNA of all animals and Joey can change into any animal… which Mew can do also. Let’s store Joey inside an Infi-Cube.” Kayla pulled out said cube and sucked Joey inside.

“Everybody, this is Haruka.” she said in her communicator. “We’ve captured Uncle Joey.”

“Nice job!” Aisa replied with a smirk. “We’re just wrapping up here!” Morgiana caught Karin Uzumaki’s head in a leg-lock, and Aisa proceeded to stomp her in the face and knock the teen out.
“We knocked out everyone in the tower!” Harry reported, standing on Rodrigo’s body.

Shade grabbed Nya’s arms and slammed the teen on her back, punching her until her armor broke under her strong fists. Nya angrily threw the shattered pieces off, charging Shade again, but the echidna jumped to kick her in the face, again knocking her unconscious. “The rest is up to Maddy.” She looked to see Diwata and Crest holding Sector DR within a midair gravity field, which she compressed into a center before having it explode. Sugar slid by to punch her brother unconscious.

“It’s not over, yet.” Sapphire said. “There’s still one more… Well, I guess two.”

Poneglyph Chamber

Rob Lucci gazed at the setting sun beyond the holographic savannah. Hattori was fluttering in circles, cooing as his master spoke. “I’ve always pondered the force known as fate. Like the sun is destined to set beyond the west, I wonder if we are all bound by the fates the universe set for us. If it were true… I wondered if there was a way to break our fate.”

Lucci pressed a remote, changing the hologram to that of a preschool yard. A young boy in a white shirt, blue shorts, and black hair was sitting under a tree eating his crackers. A bird flapped down and claimed one of his crackers. Lucci caught the bird and strangled it to death. “THAT BOY JUST KILLED A BIRD!” A blonde girl pointed.

“Stay away, he’s a monster!” a fat boy shouted. The yard cleared of the screaming children in seconds. The boy scowled as he resumed eating.

“So from then, my fate was set.” the adult Lucci said. “At the time, it seemed like I was a petty outcast… The children feared me and kept calling me a monster. I found myself… unable to argue… because deep down, I liked it when they did. I wanted to hear it some more. That girl who first pointed at me… I followed her to her house and killed her cat. My parents sent me to a private school… I followed all my classmates home and killed their pets. Eventually, I wound up in military school. I excelled in hand-to-hand. They realized their teaching methods were too small for me. So they brought me to him.”

The hologram projected a dojo where a 12-year-old Lucci stood before a yellow alien with a round head, crescent grin, and tentacles. “Who the heck is that?” Maddy asked.

“Korosensei.” Lucci answered. “I didn’t know what he was or where he came from… but he was the greatest master of Rokushiki. Even greater than I to this day.” They watched as Korosensei Shaved all around the room in milliseconds. When Young Lucci swung his blade at him, it snapped against the alien’s Iron Body. “He trained me to become a perfect assassin. I served the Government in CP10, killing anyone on their behest. So I learned my true fate as a murderous predator… was to do just that.

“But how little I knew that my destiny was intertwined with many others. How many times has the perfect chance slipped.” The projection showed Rob Lucci walk by Nolan York in the GUN base. It cut to Lucci training Sleeper Agents in martial arts, Kimaya among them. It then showed him and Marine building the Sunny Day. “Knowing today, they were people I would have to kill… I can’t help but wonder if all people I met are guilty. But who isn’t guilty of something? That was the question that made me wonder if what I did was just. So I turned to a higher power. And he had this to say.”

The hologram showed Lucci standing before the throne of The King, surrounded by fire. “It is true that all life is sacred… but some individual lives can be a horrible factor for those around them. Only I can determine which lives those are. Trust in my words, Lucci… Do not kill mindlessly…"
"Kill only those who are truly guilty."

“And there were no beings more guilty than the Twenty Keys, he said.” The illusion turned back to a sunset savannah. “When I learned that this rock was in Mariejoa, I knew that destiny would one day lure you here. I swear within God’s mountain… I will not let you read this Poneglyph.”

“You just wanted a reason to kill people.” Maddy stated. “People berated you for it, yet you enjoyed it… You’re only loyal to The King because he made it sound like it was okay. I might not know much on destiny, but I do know that we decide it. And I choose to read the Poneglyph because I think it’ll help me save the universe. A man that chose to be a killer wouldn’t understand.”

“There is more to it than being a killer. You see… King Andrew’s wish was the same as mine.” Lucci grinned with malice. “To defy the force known as fate… To prove that destiny is void! By putting an end… to this wretched prophecy. ROOOAAAR!” Lucci morphed into a black-maned lion and got on all fours. (Play “The Encounter” from Kingdom Hearts: Birth By Sleep! (The last time we’re gonna hear this, so we’re playing the remix.))

Boss fight: Rob Lucci

Maddy ran up to Lucci and threw a punch—the lion Shaved behind, but Maddy sensed this and ducked his claw before dealing an upper-cut, knocking the lion airborne and jumping to kick him against the invisible wall. Lucci pounced off and tackled Maddy, clawing at her face before she kicked him off with Armament legs. Lucci began pouncing left and right as Maddy braced for a surprise attack—as expected, he Shaved above and stabbed Finger Pistol, Maddy dodged and punched him in the eye. She sensed a combo of swift claw swipes coming up and began jumping away to dodge them. When Lucci was in the midst of one, Maddy ducked under to throw a punch up, but the lion Shaved and punched her from the side.

Lucci ran up to Maddy and placed his hands together for the Six King Gun. Maddy gasped when she saw his posture and quickly jumped up to run around, evading the powerful beam before jumping on the lion’s back. Lucci roared and pounced around while trying to claw her off, but Maddy dodged his claws, and climbed up to punch him repeatedly in the head, her armored fist moving fast as a bullet. Lucci did a spin attack and threw her off, and when Maddy was getting up, Lucci zipped up to slash at her face numerous times, but Maddy blocked with crossed arms before doing an uppercut and kicking Lucci away.

Maddy whipped around and ran up the stairwell to the Poneglyph, its letters glowing—“ROAR!” She dodged Lucci’s swipe and hit both fists iron to rapid-punch him, but Lucci used Paper Art and avoided before grabbing Maddy’s head and chucking her toward the entrance, off the stone’s platform. Lucci Shaved to multiple areas before appearing directly in front—Maddy punched his stomach, but Iron Body protected Lucci, then he stabbed both her hips with Finger Pistols. Maddy kicked his leg and seized the chance to roll away, and when Lucci turned, Maddy unleashed her Conqueror’s Haki.

“You really think that’s going to work on me?!” Lucci swiped his claws, but Maddy dodged and countered with armored punches. “The lion that was harvested to make this Devil Fruit was a fearsome king who bowed to no one! Only the King may command me.”

Maddy locked hands with Lucci’s as they engaged in shoving, and Maddy dodged her head left and right when Lucci snapped his teeth. Maddy kicked at his stomach, and still holding his claws, she leaped overhead and hauled him up and over. When Lucci was down, Maddy dealt rapid-punches to his face, then she leapt onto his mane and wrapped arms around his mouth before slamming his head against the wall. Lucci shook Maddy off, but the girl ran up for an Armament headbutt, then she dodged Lucci’s swipes before grabbing his claw and holding it as she leapt and spun to kick his face.

“I don’t know how you managed to get this stronger in a short time.” Lucci said as he caught his breath. “But your strength will be your downfall. The easiest way to ensnare your prey is let it wear itself down. A child will exhaust herself dry.”

“By the time I’m exhausted, you’ll be ready for the vultures.”

“How long do you think those meager punches will be effective?”

“I was just warming up, but I think I’m ready now.” Maddy rolled her sleeves up. “So, congratulations, Lucci. You’ve won the honor of being the first enemy to see my secret power!”

“Growwwwl. Secret power?”

Maddy stretched her fingers and cracked her knuckles. “You’re about to wish destiny was kinder!” She stomped a foot and sent a surge of power through her veins. Hattori was knocked out by an unseen force and hit the ground. Maddy’s arms and legs covered in black iron, but they reflected red in the twilight. Her shoulders burst into black iron flames, her pupils expanded as her contacts popped out, and the Armament Haki shaped like specs around them. Finally, an iron heart appeared on her chest, encased in a circle, and the invisible force brimmed in the air.

Lucci gasped. “It can’t be! Is that… Haki Fury?!?”

“It sure is.” Maddy replied. “My teacher taught it to me in secret before our last training day ended. We made sure no one else was spying, because it makes a Conqueror Haki force-field that knocks out anyone close by. Weaker people, at least.”

“It’s impossible! Haki Fury can only be entered by someone with full mastery of the three forms! You could barely dodge me on our last encounter... How could you have learned so much in one day?!”

“We are extremely fast learners.”

Star Train

“But it’s not the power I was hoping for.” Nefarious commented. “Sigh... At least this should wrap things up quicker.”

And back

Lucci growled and Shaved behind her—Maddy zipped behind and KICKED him against the wall, then zipped over to rapid-punch his whole body for five seconds. Lucci climbed up the wall and leapt down to tackle the Haki body, but Maddy grabbed his hands and kept him above before slamming him to the ground. Maddy jumped and stomped his belly, then Lucci grabbed and slammed her on her back before stabbing Finger Pistol at her chest. “ROOOAR!” His two nails broke, unable to pierce the iron chest, then Maddy socked him across the jaw.

“Then you give me no choice!” Lucci flexed his arms and surged with power as well. “Never in all my years did I think I would go Primal on somebody!” His fur spiked and his black mane bloomed like a flower. The two broken nails respawned as his claws grew sharper.

“Primal?! But you aren’t a Mobian!”

“IRRELEVANT!” Maddy dodged his Shave attacks, but Lucci moved with double speed and scratched the Haki Body from behind. “If benders and martial artists can unlock Fury forms, why not us metahumans?! I have fully embraced and accepted my power as a predator! My bowels are the gateway to Hell!!” Lucci leaped away and began prancing around Maddy in circles, repeatedly slashing his claws and sending Tempest Swipes that she evaded with Observation. “ROAR!” Lucci shot at her like a bullet and scratched her flaming shoulder, then he resumed prancing and slashing Tempest Swipes.

Maddy chased the lion with faster speed in her Fury form, but Lucci jumped and Moon Walked around the air with bullet-speed pulses. He slashed Tempest Swipes at Maddy still, then shot down with a Torpedo Spin and bashed her against the wall. Maddy kicked off and headbutted the lion, shooting him across the room. Lucci roared and lunged at Maddy, the two locking fists and showing their strength in another shove-off. Maddy looked Lucci in the eye and released Conqueror’s Haki, but the fearsome lion stayed strong against the unsettling chill.

“ROOOAR!” Lucci’s sudden bellow blew Maddy back, then he shot up to slash, but Maddy jumped, kicked off his head, and flew up to the Poneglyph platform. The letters glowed and became legible—Lucci grabbed Maddy from behind and chucked her across the room. She crashed in the opposite wall, looking to see Lucci pounce forth, bend his arms back, and slash them in a Tempest X.

The outside of Mt. Mariejoa exploded. “Everybody, look!” Dillon called. The operatives had all gathered around the back of the island, looking from either the tower or the shore. The side of Mariejoa crumbled, exposing the inside for all to see. “IT’S MADDY! She’s fighting… Scar from Lion King?”

“No, it isn’t Scar!” Shade yelled. “It’s Lucci!”

Maddy was wobbling on the edge of the room, her Haki Fury extinguished and her body exhausted. Lucci grabbed her by the arm and raised her to his face. “Oh, my… It seems you’ve overcooked yourself. You mastered the Haki, but not the Haki Fury. As expected, you wore yourself dry. All that’s left is to eat-”

“WAAAAAH!” Suigetsu Hozuki was blown out of the water, crashing in the room as a dizzy Logia puddle. “Owwww…”

“MADDY!” Lucci jumped back when Melody Jackson appeared on a water cyclone.

“MELODY, HEAL HER!” Chris shouted.

“ROAR!” Lucci Tempest Kicked and cut the cyclone, but Melody landed in the room and threw rapid Water Whips using her Water Fury. Lucci dropped Maddy and lunged at her, but a giant Water Whip from Manaphy slammed him against the wall. The prince kept Lucci pinned while Melody ran to heal Melody’s wounds.

“Cough… I’m too exhausted to get up…”

“Mana Mana!” Manaphy dropped his hold on Lucci. “PHYYYY!” His antennas shone red and sent a beam to connect Maddy’s heart, and one other beam across the sea to connect Chris’s heart.

“Whoa! Are they trading bodies?!” Dillon exclaimed.
“It’s not Heart Swap.” Midna gaped. “It’s Health Swap! Manaphy’s switching their HP! (As it were in videogame terms.)”

“OWWW!” Chris felt pain surge through him, so he collapsed.

“Why couldn’t he do it with Lucci?!” Dillon questioned.

“Because the two people have to be close with each other.” Midna answered.

“Urg… It’s okay.” Chris forced a smile. “Chosen One takes priority, I reckon.”

“I take it back, Firstborn are useful!” Artie yelped.

By the time the Health Swap was complete, Lucci recovered to bash Melody and Manaphy over the edge. He saw Suigetsu reforming and decided to throw the Logia over as well. “ROAR?” Lucci looked up and was too late to dodge Maddy’s Haki punch, then she dodged the lion’s swipe. Currently, Sparky and the recovered Hattori were sitting on the edge of the Poneglyph platform. The puppy glanced at him. “What’re you looking at, coo-kachoo?”

Lucci slashed Tempest Swipes that Maddy evaded, and when she ran up to punch his belly, Lucci used Iron Body, then slashed, but Maddy rolled behind him and bit his tail. The lion hollered and swung his arm around, but Maddy kept behind and jumped on Lucci’s head to rapid-punch his face. Gonna wait at least 3 minutes before going Fury again. Maddy thought. Lucci shook off and Torpedo Spun, but Maddy dodged right and evaded his following swipes using keen Observation. The dodging game kept up for half a minute, at least.

“Running out of options, I see.” Lucci snarled. “You want to play keep-away so badly, then keep away from this!” Lucci Moon Walked near the ceiling and unleashed a storm of Tempest Kicks around the room. Maddy kept Observation active and dodged every one by a heartbeat. Still airborne, Lucci channeled power for a Six King Gun, burning it along the ground in Maddy’s direction as she kept away. Lucci landed and Shaved around her, but Maddy scored a kick when sensing one of his warp points.

“Goombella, can you sense their HP from here?” Nagisa asked.

“I’ll try.” Goombella narrowed her eyes on Lucci and used her Tattle. “Rob Lucci has 150 HP left. Maddy has… 95. It’s going to be a close shave.”

Maddy dodged a round of Finger Pistols and punched one away with Armament, then rolled to Lucci’s right to kick in the leg. “Has it been three minutes? Ugh, I’m going for it.” Maddy stomped and burned into Haki Fury for the second time (excluding her demonstration to Sparky). Lucci reentered Primal Fury and did a spin attack, but Maddy ducked underneath and did an uppercut. She hopped up and kicked Lucci against the wall, then ran for a round of rapid-punches around his body.

Lucci kicked Maddy away, and they both recomposed to face each other, catching breath. They both charged and locked fists again. Maddy dodged Lucci’s bites, then she bashed his teeth with her head. Lucci leapt and let Maddy slide under—she whipped around to catch him preparing a Six King Gun. Despite the power brimming in his hands, Maddy leaped forth and punched her Haki fist against the center of the energy. The concentrated chi burst everywhere, but the strain against Maddy’s fist was unbearable. Both opponents stood their ground using willpower alone, the energy was making it too bright for the others to see. Maddy felt Lucci’s hold weakening, she was determined to see it—Lucci abruptly stopped the attack and snapped Maddy in the waist. (End song.)
The light faded so everyone could see. They were distraught by the result. Lucci’s teeth lodged into Maddy’s flesh and leaked blood. Her Haki Fury gone, Lucci chucked his fallen opponent across the room. The lion rasped, relishing in the taste he worked so hard for. He saw the operatives watching from the distant shore. Lucci stood to full height and let the entire island hear him: “ROOOOOOOOOOAAAAAAAARRRR!”

The kids felt their excitement dying. Shade was on the verge of tears. Everything they worked for, all their effort, was for nothing. Lucci continued breathing so his exhaust would settle. Then he prepared to Moon Walk across the sea.

Plant. Lucci whipped around. Maddy pushed up from the floor with her own hands. She was back on her feet against all odds. “How can you still be alive after that?!” Lucci hissed. Maddy faced him, but her dull blue eyes showed no sense of conscious. “You’re… You’re not even awake. But how are… Are you being kept alive by your own Haki?!” (Play “Allen Walker” from D.Gray-Man!)

Goombella scanned the two again. “Rob Lucci’s HP is down to 15. Maddy stands at… 1.”

The sleepless Maddy burned into Haki Fury again. Lucci lunged over and swiped claws viciously, but without a waking mind, Maddy had nothing to distract her from dodging. She socked Lucci in the jaw, costing him 5 HP. She dodged his tackle and bit him in the neck, dealing 2 HP. Lucci rolled to shake her off, Shaving all around to stab Finger Pistols, but Maddy evaded with the quickest motion and kicked 3 HP out of Lucci. The lion leapt, and the two locked hands for another shove-off. Lucci tried to peer his sharp green eyes into her dull blue ones, but it was a futile effort.

!!!!

An invisible force erupted in the air and Lucci lost his senses. Maddy channeled power into her fist for the final uppercut. Everybody gaped as the lion rocketed all the way to the sky, higher and higher and higher.

Sunny Chariton was in the midst of flying up Mariejoa. She looked down and- “Whoa!” dodged the lion that mysteriously flew up.

The people on God’s Domain viewed up at the sky when the lion soared over their boundaries. There he flew to God’s Castle, and smashed through the roof with gathered momentum. King Andrew studied the fallen lion before his throne and crushed a soda can in his hand.

Maddy’s Haki Fury faded as she faced up at the Poneglyph. “YOU’RE NOT DONE, YET!” she looked to see Eldwin fly down in Teen Ninja armor, clutching a huge supersonic death ray. “I, Eldwin Savinsky, am the TRUE boss of this level! I’ll destroy you once and for all! It’s just you and me, Maddy! The match of the century!”

Boss fight: Eldwin Savinsky

The Teen Leader blasted the powerful ray gun in second-long intervals, but Maddy effortlessly dodged each blast on her way toward him. She kicked the gun into the sea, grabbed the bully’s collared neck, and punched him in the face countless times for five seconds. Then, without using Haki, she punched him in the neck and flew him across the room as his cast broke. Eldwin lay in a puddle of his own saliva. (End song.)
Chimney positioned her R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. to create a bridge between Enies Lobby’s shore and Mariejoa. Dozens of operatives, along with Shade, came up to witness the crowning moment. Melody gave Maddy one last heal, waking the girl up. She spared a smile to Shade, who looked relieved beyond compare. With that, she faced up at the Poneglyph. Sparky punched Hattori and knocked the pigeon out.

“Oh look, it’s 1:00!” Miyuki checked. “We’re right on time.” (Play “The First Mask” from Rayman 2!)

The holographic illusion of the setting sun made this moment all the more beautiful. Maddy began her walk up the stairs, to the rock that had inscribed her destiny. Enies Lobby was left in ruin. The agents of CP10 lay defeated, the Teen Ninjas had no motivation to try anymore. The ruins of the island were a symbol of the Kids Next Door’s hard work. Their passion to save the universe outweighed their pain and strife. At last, the fruits of their labor would dawn. The Seventh Light.

Sparky got the front row seat to watch his master step before the rock. Dr. Nefarious had his eyes glued to the screen. Lawrence silently prayed for his master, in more ways than you would think. Maddy stopped and faced the Gibberish Stone. Its letters glowed. It was legible to her eyes. And she read it aloud for everyone to hear.

Er… hello? This is my first time writing on one of these things, I’m not very good. This is just a practice one. In any case, there’s been a misunderstanding. Maddy’s not really the Light. It’s actually Zach. You just witnessed my Fake Prophecy Attack. Sorry if I wasted your time.

-Love Bo-bobo

It was a time for confusion and a time for dropped mouths. Enies Lobby had never known greater silence. Maddy outright collapsed on her back in defeat. Shade wanted to die. The Teen Ninjas didn’t know what life meant, anymore. The Zoni were going to explode—even they were taken by surprise. On God’s Domain, King Andrew’s eye twitched. It was at this moment, things such as theories and speculations became meaningless. There was absolutely no guessing this universe. Destiny is, and always will be, a troll.

“What a twist!” said M. Night Shyamalan.

White House

Kimaya Heartly gasped when the Keyblade Ring levitated in the air. One of the keys, which had a golden crown for teeth, glowed as it transformed. It was now a white key with a jester’s hat, and its keychain had a red clown nose.

Gnik’s Basement

Lesser Lord Gnik fell on his knees, clasping his head in agony. “I-I was wrong… but I spoke for Master… M-Master is wrong… Master is wrong! M-Master is never wrong! MASTER, WHAT IS HAPPENING?!?”

Star Train

But none of it compared to what Dr. Nefarious was feeling. He watched it all firsthand from Sparky’s vision. His robotic brain failed to process… and so, it went into meltdown. “Grrrrrr!” All the videos he had of Maddy, all the notes he took, he smashed and burned all of it, made completely and utterly certain her existence was gone from his life. “I AM SICK AND TIRED OF THIS STUPID QUEST!!!”
The doctor smashed a button with the full force of his anger. A bomb launched out of his ship, directly down to Quahog. The entire city was destroyed in a great atomic blast. One could almost hear the moans of despair from its wayward souls. Nefarious’s brain was steaming. “I am going to destroy EVERY OUNCE OF THIS WRETCHED PLANET!!”

Um… yeah. Sorry, everybody. ^^; I guess I’ll throw in some trivia, Scarlet Vargas can also go Primal. Never got around to showing it, yet. Korosensei is from Assassination Classroom and Night Howlers are from Zootopia.
Chapter Summary

Zach Murphy battles Dr. Nefarious with the full force of Bo-bobo Kempo!

I wrote this faster than I thought!

Chapter 71: He Who Defies Law

Enies Lobby

The silence continued for five minutes. Chris was the one to break it. “So… it's actually Zach. Zach Murphy. He’s the Light. It was a fake prophecy.”

“That’s how I understand it.” Melody replied.

“Sigh… Okay, I know we’ve all been asking it, but I’ll throw it out.” Chris approached the Poneglyph. “Who the hell has been WRITING all these damn ROCKS?!” He kicked the corner of it. The Poneglyph fell open like a cardboard box and exposed bundled-up anime characters.

“Uuuh…” Everyone stared. There was a guy with a golden afro, an orange-haired boy in a black robe, a kid in a straw hat – you get it. They were still and looked worried due to their exposed cover.

“Crap, they spotted us, Bo-bobo!” Ichigo mumbled.

“Don’t worry, guys, I have a plan.” The afro man stood up with a megaphone. “Ahem: ATTENTION, children! You are in violation of Chapter 64, Article A, Section 16: The right for strange characters to be hidden inside boxes! You are hereby ordered to turn away and pretend you never saw anything, or…or… AAH, I can’t think of anything!” Bo-bobo fell to his knees crying.

“Oh, for God’s sake.” Ichigo sighed.

“Um, guys?” A force pushed up from below. “Could all of you just—GET OFF OF MEEEE!” Sora jumped to his feet and blew the six off. “Why was I the one who got treated like a mat?!”

“You look more three-dimensional than we do, we thought it wouldn’t hurt.” Luffy replied.

“Well, it seems you’ve discovered us.” Yugi Muto said. “So we might as well come clean. We’re the ones who wrote on the Poneglyphs you’ve been finding. We don’t fully understand this prophecy or what’s been happening, we were only following instructions. It all started when our universes were suddenly invaded by interdimensional forces, as a result of something called a Multiverse Portal. Sound familiar?”

“The Multiverse Portal?” Dipper questioned. “The portal disappeared suddenly, but we don’t know why.”

“Well, whatever the case, all our universes are falling apart, and it all centers around this universe.”
Ichigo said. “We may’ve helped with the prophecy, but we aren’t the only ones of our group. There are others like Allen Walker, Ruby Rose, the Avengers – all people whose worlds were destroyed.”

“Now hold on a second.” Maddy Murphy woke up and stood. “Before we buy all this junk, you have explaining to do! I almost got killed by a lion because everybody said I was the Seventh Light! Do you have any idea what I’ve been through?! And it was all a TRICK?!”

“Look, Maddy, I’m honestly sorry for deceiving you.” Bo-bobo said. “But we had to! Tell you what, I’ll make it up to ya.” He gave a friendly smile. “Would you like it if I told you you were secretly related to Steven Universe?” Bo-bobo picked out Steven Universe from somewhere and set him on his feet.

“Yeah! I’d like that a lot!”

“TOO BAD, YOUR LONG-LOST COUSIN IS WENDY MARVEL!” Bo-bobo whipped out the blue-haired mage and held her by the ankles.

“THAT’S COMPLETELY RANDOM!” Maddy screamed.

“Um, I don’t know how I got here…” Wendy started crying.

“It’s called an impulse idea, AND WE LIKE IT!” With that, Bo-bobo swung Wendy like a baseball bat, hitting Steven and sending them flying to the sky. Twinkle.

“Oh, hello??” Zach emphasized. “Are you guys not realizing who is here right now?? It’s Bobobobo Bo-bobo! I’m your biggest fan!”

“That can’t be right. My biggest fan is right there!” Bo-bobo pointed at the enormous fan blowing at them from the sea.

“I saw that joke coming a mile away.” Maddy said.

“You forget something, Bo-bobo!” Zachary smirked. “I am actually the missing oscillator switch!” And with that, Zach turned into an oscillator switch and leapt up to fill the fan’s vacant hole.

“Excellent, Zachary!” Bo-bobo cheered. “With the oscillator returned, my fan can assume its true form… as an air hockey puck!” The fan poofed and turned into a tiny puck.

“Guys, I’m all out of breath, someone scream for me.” Maddy said.

“There will be plenty time for screaming after the gerbils win the sugar bowl!” Bo-bobo was playing hockey against Natsu Dragneel, with gerbils cheering in the audience.

“Grrrr!” Natsu grew furious. “I’M TIRED OF THIS GAME, I WANNA FIGHT!” With his flaming fist, he destroyed the hockey table.

“HEY, WHAT’S YOUR PROBLEM?!” Luffy shouted at Natsu, balling his fist. “There was free MEAT at the tournament!”

“I got a piece of meat RIGHT HERE!” Natsu raised his flaming fist.

Luffy entered Gear 4 and cried, “Gum-Gum KING KONG GUN!!”

“DRAGON KING BLAZING FIST!!”
“KNOCK IT OFF!!” Sora batted them both out to sea with his Keyblade.

“Help! Help! We can’t swim!” Luffy and Natsu started flailing their arms. The others stared in disbelief.

“So, anyway…” Naruto Uzumaki began. “Do you guys know someone named Negatar Gnaa?”

“Yes, we know Gnaa.” Aurora answered. “Not personally, but we know him.”

“He’s in our group, too! We’re calling ourselves the Dimensional Rebels.” He grinned. “Pretty cool, right?”

“I would’ve liked Dimensional Prospectors.” Dillon commented.

“Aren’t prospectors people who dig around in mines?” Ichigo asked.

“Yeah, who would call their selves that?” Naruto snickered.

“Guys, just tell us what’s going on!” Chris yelled. “Who put you up to this? What’s destroying your worlds, what did these forces look like?”

“ZAAAAAAAAACH!”

A familiar voice screeched in the heavens, and a familiar train appeared from hyperspace. “IT’S NEFARIOUS!” Maddy screamed.

Dr. Nefarious pressed a button. Suddenly, Sparky sprouted robotic limbs, wrapped around Zach, and rocketed up to his creator’s ship. Nefarious rained missiles down on all of them, the kids countering with their own powers. The seven Dimension Rebels were blown apart by a missile, and transformed back into Zoni. “THEY’RE Zoni, TOO?!” Shade exclaimed.

“If you kids need me, I’ll be destroying everything you hold dear! SO LONG, JERKS!” The train vanished in hyperspace.

“Everyone to the ships!” MaKayla yelled. “We have to find where they went!”

“I can see where they’re going!” Sapphire followed.

Star Train

“NNNGH!” Nefarious punched Zach to the floor. “After ALL the years I spent watching Maddy, ALL THE TIME I spent, hoping for some SECRET power I can use to rule the universe, AND IT WAS YOU ALL ALONG?!” Nefarious grabbed and repeatedly punched him across the face. “I’ve HAD IT TO HERE with your games! TELL ME WHAT YOUR POWER IS NOW!!”

“Stop it, stop! Your punching is rearranging my face! Now I look like a-” When Nefarious stopped, Zach’s faced changed into cereal, an orange, and milk on a tray.

“A balanced breakfast?” Lawrence asked.

“GRRRR!” Nefarious kicked Zach away. “I have something to SHOW you, boy! Take a look!” He pressed a button on the control panel and displayed a screen of a ruined town. “Your hometown of Quahog, reduced to a wasteland. Ah, but what of the townspeople? Behold.” The screen cut to show robots wandering the city. “My Atomic Biobliterator destroys everything else and makes organics into robots. Robots who become my slaves… but I don’t feel as merciful.” He pushed a remote. Two of the robots exploded.
“AAAH!” Zach screamed.

“I won’t stop THERE!” Nefarious continued exploding citizens.

“PLEASE, STOP!” Zach dressed in a pink dress and blonde wig, crying over Nefarious’s leg. “I’ll have no one to take to the engineering prom, please allow me to get a date!”

“NEVER!” Nefarious began stomping him. “I’ll destroy every last ounce of this planet until I learn your secret!” The screen switched to a robotic Danika York as Nefarious threatened to explode her. “Now TELL me, Mr. Murphy, what, makes, you, TICK?!”

He stomped him so much, he exposed what was inside of Zach: “YOU’RE A VIDEOTAPE?!”

“I call upon the power of videotapes throughout the land!” Nefarious looked as a fleet of tapes and cassette players flew out of the atmosphere. “With our allies, the cassettes, we will prove this advanced technology cannot dominate us! We must take back what is ours… OUR SCHOOL YEARBOOKS!!”

“NYAAAAARRRGGGH!” The Star Train took the full force of the barrage of old-timey recording devices. Before they knew it, the Star Train was plummeting to the earth, breaking and burning in the atmosphere. The train crashed into Quahog and blew all the rubble and robots for miles.

Sometime later, Maddy, Shade, and the Kids Next Door arrived at the wasteland, having quickly heard the news of the events. “Oh, man… This is terrible…” Dillon said with remorse.

“This place could really use a hero…” said Mason.

“REAAAAARRRGGGH!” Nefarious burst up from the rubble, performing Shadow Clone Jutsu and destroying all the ships with powerful lasers. As the operatives were falling, the Nefarious clones flew up and sliced them all with bladed fingers, an easy feat given they were so worn out from Enies Lobby. “Destroy-destroy-destroy-destroy-destroy! DESTROY EVERYTHINGNNNNN!” Nefarious turned red with unparalleled rage.

Maddy was dropped on the ground, horribly exhausted and helpless when Nefarious appeared before her. “What’s wrong, Maddy?! Tired from fighting Lucci?!” He stomped closer. “All these years you’ve been deceiving me… You will RUE the day YOU CROSSED DOCTOR NEFARIOUS!” Nefarious charged lasers in both hands.

Maddy cried, feeling this was the end. The first person to come to mind was…

“ZAAAAAAACH…”

The world turned white, but the fatal blow of the lasers didn’t come. It was quiet and peaceful. Maddy opened her eyes. He was there… defending her. “You rang?”

Zach was driving a Seussmobile, a whacky tacky clown car with a Dr. Seuss design. “Oh, my hero!” Maddy wept in embarrassment.

“HEY, NEFARIOUS!” Zach yanked the steering wheel off the car. “How would YOU like a turn on the wheel?!” He chucked the wheel at Nefarious—it burst into eight sexy anime girls who rapidly kicked the robot with bare feet.

“WAAAAAAAH!” Nefarious flew across the city and smashed through several fallen buildings. He landed on his feet and looked up to see Zach with the girls. “This was my Living Body Pillow Attack! Thank you, ladies.”
“Oh, Zaaaaach!”

“I’VE HAD ENOUGH OF THIS!” Nefarious blasted lasers and destroyed the girls. “I’LL PUT AN END TO YOUR TRICKERY FOREVER!”

Boss fight: Arthur Nefarious

“SO LONG, ZACH!” Nefarious flew at his enemy with rocket shoes, shooting twin lasers that blew him backwards. With Zach on his back, Nefarious flew above and rocketed down. “Where’s your power NOW, Mr. LIGHT?!” Nefarious smashed—through Zach’s paper body and landed in a classroom. “WHAT?!”

“Welcome to Arts and Crafts!” Mr. Murphy said from the teacher’s desk. “Today, you will be creating hand sanitizer! Mr. Blinks, how is your project?”

“Alls wells, Mon-shore Zarion!” Jar Jar created a clothespin. (“That isn’t hand sanitizer!” yelled Nefarious.)

“What do you think of mine?!” Spongebob beamed as he presented a ketchup bottle.

“THAT WON’T KEEP YOUR HANDS CLEAN!” screamed the doctor. “Ugh, HERE, I’ll show you hand sanitizer!” He grabbed scissors and paper and hurriedly crafted. “TA-DA! A masterpiece!” Indeed, he created a full bottle of sanitizer.

“Excellent, Arthur!” Zach praised. “You get full marks for the day!”

“I do? Great!”

“Just as soon as you use that lotion to clean my booger, Sally.” He set a giant booger on the desk.

“EW, GROSS!!”

“Dammit, Zach!” Sally jumped up and pulled Zach down by the shirt. “I need to get back to the baseball field! We’re playing against the earwax and I need to teach those sculpture-loving nerds a lesson!”

“Relax, Sally, we will! I got your bat ready for ya, right here.”

The next minute, they were on a baseball field, with Sally holding Nefarious like a baseball bat. “Wait, what?”

“And the pitcher takes the field!” An earwax man walked onto the pitcher’s platform, holding the baseball firmly. He chucks the ball—“MOOO! MOOO!” It morphs into a cow.

“AAAAAAAHHH!” Nefarious screamed, but he was swung against the flying cow and shattered into pieces. Doo-doo-doot-doot! Doo-doooot! His head flew across the field and landed in a boy’s hand.

“Mommy, look! I caught the ball!”

“Put that away, Jeremy, it has germs.”

“GERMS?! Good thing I brought hand sanitizer!” Zach grabbed the lotion Nefarious crafted earlier and started spraying the audience, who all screamed and ran. “Get 5% off every Tuesday!”
“GRRRR!” Nefarious reattached his parts and made hand signals. “Shadow Clone Jutsu!” A swarm of Shadow Clones surrounded a terrified Zach. “ATTACK HIM!” They all leaped above.

“Gaaah!” Zach ducked and shuddered.

“HAAAAH!” The clones would pile on him soon. …Zach farted. Poot.

“HORCHATAAAAA!” The ghosts of a Mexican family burst from his rear and stabbed the clones with swords. They poofed into smoke, but the real Nefarious became a rock.

“Crud, a Substitution Jutsu!” Zach yelped.

“THAT’S RIGHT!” Nefarious charged from behind. “HrrrrrrRRRRR-!” He stabbed Zach. The boy poofed and turned into a cup of cheddar. “A Substitution?!”

“They’re substituting Ms. Dairy for Chuck!” Zach charged in on a rhino and rammed Nefarious.

“Boy, when you see Zach like this,” Maddy said, “you can hardly remember a time when he couldn’t defend himself for squat.”

“He’s risen greater than all of us.” Chris agreed.

“What’s my battle score so far?!” Zach asked with confidence. A scoreboard tallied up and concluded with 5,104 points. “SWEET! You know what that means?”

“What does it mean?” asked Maddy.

“We get to blow up Jupiter!” Zach pressed a pump, and the gas giant completely exploded. That’s when flaming tacos began to rain down. “It looks like it was Taco Night up there. Better watch out!”

“AAAAAH!” His friends were screaming and dodging tacos.

Nefarious merely blasted all the tacos with lasers. “You think these bits are humoring anyone?! I have the upper hand in this fight! If you don’t surrender to me, I’ll order the rest of these townspeople to self-destruct!”

“You know what I think your problem is, Nefarious?” Zach declared. “You didn’t give your mom a good scrubbin’! Well, it’s time to rectify that. BOYS!”

Suddenly, they were on a naval ship, where a bunch of sailors sang a shanty as they washed their moms in bathtubs.

What do you do when your mom is dirty

Boyfriends got her feeling flirty

Sing her a shanty nice and purdy

Wash her in the bath tub!

The sailors scrubbed the moms vigorously.

WASH. WASH. Wash her belly

SCRUB. SCRUB. Scrub her belly
RINSE. RINSE. Rinse her belly

NEXT WE’LL DO HER TUSHY!

The other kids wanted to look away, but the sight was so atrocious that they were frozen. There was so much weirdness going on here. “Okay, Nefarious, now it’s your turn!” Zach showed him a feminine version of Nefarious in a bathtub, wearing a wig.

“That’s not remotely CLOSE to what my mother looks like!”

“True, but she’s a hell of a tub-skater!” The robo-mother’s bathtub slid and smashed Nefarious.

The robot recovered and flew up with rockets. “If you’re not going to take me seriously, I’ll have to start destroying!” With that, he flew around and shot lasers everywhere, making a greater mess of the already-ruined town. “HA HA HA HA! DIE, all of you, DIIIIEEEE!” He decimated all the Roboticized citizens, and soon there would be nothing left.

The ruined city of Quahog transformed into a gigantic six-sided die. “I made a DIE???”

“Oh, I was looking for that!” They were suddenly on a table, where Spongebob picked the die up and tossed it. It landed on ‘2’. “Darn.”

“My turn!” Zach took and shook the die, feeling lucky. It landed on a side with numerous spots. “Sweet, 57!”

“What do you get?” Maddy asked.

“We get to blow up New Zealand!” Zach pressed a pump and exploded the island country. “No one was using that land, anyway.”

This time, flaming bike tires were raining from the island’s explosion, but Nefarious was swift in shooting them all. “You’re running out of pizzazz if you’re throwing the same basic attack at me! No matter how many landmasses you destroy, I will—WAAH!” He was squished by a giant gold statue honoring Monty Python.

“And now for something completely different!” announced Zach.

Spotlights lit up a dark stage. Jar Jar Blinks wore an orange jumpsuit covered with words spelled the same forwards and back, like Ururu, Appa, Ho-oh, racecar, or repaper. The sign above the stage read Palindrome. Jar Jar spoke with a voice most soothing:

“…” Nefarious was utterly speechless. “…Wow. That… was… impressive…”

“I cannot accept praise.” Jar Jar bowed. “It was the tentacle.”

“What tentacle?”

“THIS TENTACLE, DIPWAD!” Zach swung an octopus tentacle and bat Nefarious away.

Zach then looked over to Chris and Maddy. “It stings a little at first, but it helps the wound heal.” Chris said as he put an ice bag over Maddy’s wounds.
“Well, someone learns from his cousin.” Maddy laughed.

Zach’s eyes narrowed sharply. “DON’TCU HIT ON MY SISTER!” He kicked Anthony to the sky like a football.

“It wasn’t meehee...!”

“Waaaaah!” Nefarious landed behind a stand. He got up to see the stand had a buzzer. He was between Anthony McKenzie and Terry Stork at some game show. Zach wore a host’s uniform and announced, “Welcome to another installment of:”

“YOU! CAN’T! WIIIIIN!”

“Anthony, you get to go first!”

“Don’t I have to push the buzzer?”

“Your question is: Girls’ locker room?”

“Um... Vweeb?” Anthony answered.

AAAANCK! “Sorry, Anthony, the correct answer was ‘Richard Feynman.’ Now it’s time for the Penalty Round! Your punishment will be:” A wheel spun on the wall, landing on an icon of a desert. “Fighting Sahara Desert in a boxing contest!”

Ding ding! All three contestants were in a ring, facing a giant Sahara Desert. “Haaaaah-!” They ran to throw the first punch—a swarm of scorpions jumped out of the desert and began rapidly stinging them.

“So it doesn’t matter who gets picked?” Maddy figured. “All of them will just get pummeled?”

“Terry, you’re next!” Zach resumed. “Answer Question 64!”

AAAANCK! “That’s where you’re wrong! Before, I asked Question 15. Gotta pay attention, Ter. Here’s your Penalty Game!” The wheel spun and landed on a lollipop. “Take candy from a premature baby!”

The contestants landed in the center of the Earth. There was a lollipop floating over the edge of the magma, but when Terry came to take it, a giant gremlin-like demon burst from the magma and burned them all in fire. “This particular baby happens to be Dark Gaia, whom was not scheduled for another ten million years. Up next is Dr. Nefarious!”

“Whatcha have for me, Zach?!”

“Take this sketchbook,” Zach tossed him a blank sketchbook, “and draw THIS... amoeba!” Zach pulled a napkin off a blank pedestal.

“Zach has this in the bag.” Maddy said with disbelief.

“HERE!” Nefarious presented the completed sketch of an amoeba lifting weights.

“HE DID IT!” Zach panicked. “I don’t believe it! Someone actually won! Do you know what this means?!”
“I think I do.” Maddy replied.

“We have to blow up this building!” Zach pressed a pump.

Meanwhile, Depthcharge2030 was coming back from a leisurely stroll. He was about to enter his house—when it miraculously exploded! Everyone who came to the game show blew to the sky. “You were hosting it at HIS house?!” Dillon exclaimed.

Flaming wax sculptures of the Prospector were flying with the contestants. “Part of being a robot means analyzing ways to adapt!” Nefarious grabbed statues of D. Carmine, Kayla Valera, and Josh Puncture, throwing them at Zach. “If I decide to play along with your games, I can get close enough to defeat you!”

Still in midflight, Zach defended himself with a sculpture of John Smith. “The only time I heard the word ‘adapt’ was when I failed a spelling test! Had to spell ‘adopt’, didn’t go well. I couldn’t drop my toy robot at Foster’s and he took over the Arabian Government.”

After blocking Rack and Ruin—“YOU’RE WIDE OPEN!” Nefarious shot up and STABBED Zach in the chest. “Your time is up- huh?”

Nefarious pierced a bottle of red potion. “Since you’ve punctured my Power-Up Potion, you forced me to use my special attack.” Zach’s body shone with light. “The Mario Kart 64 Train Level Attack!”

Nefarious became 64-bit and was on a Mario Kart, as were the other operatives. Zach sat before his TV and controlled Nefarious in driving through the desert level. The level’s calming music rang in the air. Zach steered off track and drove along the train tracks in the level. “AYAAAARGH!” Zach crashed him into the train. “AYAAAARGH!” Nefarious’s kart whirled up into the air when taking damage. “AYAAAARGH!”

“I don’t care about winning, I just wanna see him go uppy.” Zach said.

There were police sirens outside, and GUN agents surrounded Zach’s house. “Zachary Murphy, you are under arrest! For playing videogames too loud in the winter!”

“CRUD!” Zach cursed at his folly. “I thought I learned from Master Bo-bobo! Well, only one thing to do now. I’M GOING TO ARKANSAS!” He burst out of the house, driving a bulldozer that pushed his TV.

Nefarious and the operatives were still in Mario Kart, screaming as he was about to plow through a teddybear factory. “ZACH, WAIT!” Chris screamed. “WE’RE IN HERE, TOOOOOO...” The second they made impact, all the karters and teddybears were blown to the sky.

Adaptation process at 100%.

“YES!!” Nefarious was brimming with more power than ever. “Now that I have measured every part of your attack pattern, it’s time for my OWN performance! I will annihilate you all, in my DEATH CARNIVAL!” Out of nowhere, Nefarious spawned a black, metallic carnival with his likeness seen on all the rides.

“He’s mimicking Zach’s Bo-bobo Kempo!” Maddy exclaimed. “We’re in trouble!”

“You bet you are, child! Because you’re all going for a ride on my Roller Coaster of DOOM!” Nefarious strapped all the kids to a roller coaster, speeding along the tracks using rockets. “And guess its destination: a BUZZ BUNNY!” The coaster was going to speed in the mouth of a bunny.
statue with buzzsaws inside.

Chris, Anthony, Mason, and the others desperately tried to escape their chains, but the last three seconds of their lives were spent staring at the upcoming blades. They sped through, and Nefarious relished in the sound of the saws chopping their flesh. When they came out on the other side—they posed in the most graceful swan dresses. “THAT’S NOT WHAT WAS SUPPOSED TO HAPPEN!!” the doctor screamed.

“I feel more beautiful than a lady after she bathes!” Chris spoke beautifully.

“I feel like an angel as she brushes ’cross the sun.” Mason danced.

“Internet, this was what you were invented for.” Melody Jackson recorded the boys in their lovely light.

The swans were dancing within a whirling merry-go-round. Nefarious smirked with malice and pressed a button. The merry-go-round sealed them inside and began to spin faster. “You fools will spin so fast that you'll jellify! (And that’s actually a word.) Afterwards, I’ll spray you with ice,” four cannons shot ice spray over the machine, “and voila! You’re gelatin!” The merry-go-round uncovered and revealed a big plate of red Jell-O.

“I don’t think you know much on gelatin.” Maddy said with a sweatdrop. ^^;

“Wellp, time to eat up!” Nefarious got a spoon and began to gobble the blood-colored jelly. “Mmm, this is kinda good! I wonder what these kids had for lunch?”

When he dug up enough Jell-O, he discovered a fly among other animals. “What? Judging by the animals present… One of the children swallowed a fly. So they swallowed a spider to catch the fly; they swallowed a bird to catch the spider; they swallowed a cat to catch the bird; and in order to catch the cat, they swallowed… a mouse with Titan-hunting gear?”

Suddenly, the scenery changed to Attack on Kitten. The mouse citizens screamed high-pitch squeaks when the Colossal Kitten climbed over Wall Mario, which had an icon of a mushroom. But there came Eren Yarnball, a heroic kitty with black fur and sharp green eyes. With his ball of yarn, he swung up to the Colossal Kitten and chopped the neck with his claws of steel.

“Wah hah haaaa!” Zach cried over the hospital bed. “Grandma! Why did you swallow all those uncooked animals?! Your colon needs liquidated garbage!”

Zach’s grandma was Jar Jar Blinks in a pink gown and grey wig. “Zachy-poo… Don’t listen to what them kids say. Eatin’ living animals is a no-no. Especially de very big ones. I don’t even know why I ate the cow to catch the dog. Since when do cows catch dogs? We shoulda sent a rabbit.”

“Grandma, please live! I promise to buy you a fresh, juicy rabbit to catch that dog! Grandma!”

Nefarious stood behind and watched this weirdly. “Well, this didn’t go like I planned. But I wonder how the poor souls at the Shoot-or-Shoot are doing?”

Artie and Harry Gilligan were forced to shoot rapid-moving targets over a table, for the bridge they were on was collapsing board-by-board and would drop them into a pit of lava. “Gulp! It was nice knowing you, Harry!” The twins unfortunately took the plunge, to bathe in the molten lava. They splashed in.

“Mwah hah hah hah!” Nefarious cackled. “They’re about to come up as dead, boney…” But while he expected skeletons, Artie and Harry reemerged as a MacBook and ham radio. “WHAT AM I DOING WRONG HERE?!”

Ham Harry and Art Book floated wistfully down Melty Metal River, in search of a land they could harvest in order to produce leather shoes. The journey lasted for 3 years and they met many a friendly snowcone.

“A AAAAAGH, STOP IT, STOP IT!” Nefarious fell to all fours, his mechanical head throbbing. “I don’t understand what I’m doing wrong! I adapted my fighting style to match your foolishness! I should have you molded into Jell-O and melting in my stomach incinerator. Why can’t I defeat you?!”

“Because there’s one fatal flaw in your Death Carnival.” Zach declared with seriousness. “The humor in your carnival is too forced and longing to kill people. The trick is to nurture your humor and grow it with fresh organic taste.”

“Zach, I wouldn’t call your humor organic.” Maddy commented. ^^;

“Fine, so I use pesticides to keep those chuckle bugs away. The point is, I devote love and consideration to my humor. But you have NO sense of humor! You hardly have sense to begin with. I kid around knowing that my friends are depending on me!”

“We’re injured from your previous attacks.” The operatives were bruised and bandaged.

It was then Nefarious began to see the light. Literally and figuratively. It was a warm light. The emotional Kingdom Hearts music eased his internal reflection. “He’s…He’s right… No matter what I do… I can never match up to his brand of humor.”

“Don’t feel bad.” Nefarious looked up at Zach. In the light, he looked like a saint. “Everyone is funny in some way. Even the most dull boring business nerd in the universe. It’s just a matter of finding your own type of humor. But I would be happy to help you…” He reached a hand down.

Nefarious stared at it with feels building in his chest. “Oh… Zach…”

The boy smiled. “Join me… my brother.”

“…” Nefarious took his hand.

“Just sign here and I’ll take this Death Carnival off your hands!” Zach tried to force Nefarious’s finger to sign a contract, making a goofy expression while doing so. “Ha ha! Ha ha!”

“DARN IT, BOY, YOU TRICKED ME WITH FEELINGS!” the doctor shouted. “SCREW this, I just want you to DIE!” The robot extracted numerous lasers from his person and bombarded Zach. “Nowhere to run, nowhere to hide! This time, your hide is TOAST!” He kept up the assault until he was certainly positive Zach had been exterminated.

“… …Then it’s time to use my Ultimate Form.”

Nefarious was awestruck when the smoke cleared. The absolute marvel he was staring at. All the way from the edge of the universe, it was Bozobot. A tremendous mechanoid clown with sky-blue, star-covered pants, red and white stripes down its shirt, and a shiny bulky exterior. “Behold, Dr. Nefarious, my true form. If you thought I was a clown before… you’re about see more clown than clowns can be!”

And so, Bozobot leaped high into the sky, tilting so his bottom would smash Nefarious. “When Bozobot squashes with his butt…” Nefarious braced himself from the smash, “everybody in Kentucky gets sunflowers!”

The people of Kentucky cheered jubilantly, frolicking in the field of flowers. “For every 50 flowers you collect, you get a free steamroller! MAKE YOURSELF A PANCAKE!” Nefarious was squished by a random Kentuckian’s steamroller.

“Grrrr…” Nefarious struggled to push himself up.

“Now Bozobot will spray you with a flower!” The giant clown aimed a red flower on his shirt. “There’s nothing more refreshing than a nice sprinkle of…” A storm of ocarinas shot out and pummeled Nefarious, “videogame instruments!”

“Nyargh-gah-gah-gah-gah-gah-gah-gah-gah!” Nefarious stuttered with each hit.

“And what if Bozo should kick you with his boots?” Zach raised the robot’s long red shoe and swung it to the doctor. “Welcome to the world of Twilight!” When the boot struck, Nefarious was warped to Twilight, sitting beside Bella’s father in his car.

My father always treats me like a child. An emotionless voice in Nefarious’s head spoke. I wanted to prove that I’m not, but… he keeps giving me milk. Nefarious was sitting in a baby seat, wearing a diaper, and Bella’s father was feeding him milk.

“Mmm! This is good milk.”

“THAT’S MY MILKYYYY!” Jar Jar kicked the car to the sky and sent Nefarious and Bella’s father swirling.

“FINE!” Nefarious decided. “Then it’s time to use my own trump card! Say good-bye to the people of Quahog!” He grabbed his remote and set them all to self-destruct, from Adam West, Tom Tucker, the Griffin Family, and Danika York.

“MOM!!” Dillon cried.

“KYAH HAH HAH HAH HA!” Nefarious’s madness grew. “I can’t wait to kill EVERYONE… else?” He looked at Bozo confused.

The clown robot was crying, but it wasn’t tears, they were closed DVD cases with pictures of all the Quahog citizens. “Behold the power of Bozobot’s eyes.” Dillon came up to a DVD case with Danika’s image. He opened it and his mother popped out. “When life ends, like a DVD, just play it again!”

The operatives opened all the cases and revived the non-robotic people of Quahog. “Im… Impossible…” Nefarious’s brain was melting down again. “Bringing back from the dead… Destroying planets… Just what is this?! What is the power of the Seventh Light?”

Bozobot opened its mouth. Zach was standing in the bright light inside. “I’ll tell you… what my power is…”

He channeled energy into Bozobot’s mouth. The light was growing brighter. Nefarious couldn’t imagine the devastating blast it would bring. “The power that I possess is… The power that I possess is… TOILETRY!!” A toilet burst out of him faster than a bullet and struck Nefarious.

The robot flipped across the ground. The top of his egg-shaped dome hit the concrete, and the glass cracked. Soon, there was not a trace of Death Carnival or Bozobot. Just the ruined state Quahog... was left in. Nefarious lay, twitching with his last amounts of energy. His body sparked. “No more…” He weakly raised an arm. “No more… I… give up…” He rolled on his front. In his failing, static vision, he could see Maddy. “I…I understand now.”

Maddy stared at him. Dr. Nefarious was giving a warm smile. A relieved smile. “I think that… all I really wanted… was to find someone more mad than me. Perhaps I thought… I would find a person like that in you. But it was your brother… it was always your brother.” He sparked. “I can… rest well… knowing there are insane people like you out there. Thanks to you… I can find inner peace. And now… I am free…”

His red eyes faded. The skinny robot husk was dead. A heavenly light shone on him. The spirit of Nefarious’s green alien form rose from the metal, smiling as it ascended to Heaven. “Good-bye… Zach and Maddy. It was an honor… to spy on you. After so many years… I have what I had been searching for.” The spirit was gone into the light. The light faded as his final word echoed. “Sanity…”

Lawrence and the Nefarious Drones gathered around their master. Their heads were bowed. They were sad. Their master was gone. They would never know a one like him. Doctor Arthur Nefarious…

Lawrence turned when Zach approached him. “Lawrence… It’s time.”

“…Yes, it is.” Lawrence nodded. Before their eyes, the robot butler began to transform. His ovalish body expanded, formed six sides with eight corners, all of equal size and distance. Foreign letters appeared on the cube’s black and gray structure. Lawrence became a Poneglyph.

Zach Murphy approached the final Gibberish Cube. He read its text aloud. “Well done, you found the true Cube Thingy. With this, all Seven Lights are united. Your true test will begin soon. That is if those lazy Darknesses would get off their butts. –Bobobo-bo Bo-bobo’.”

The cube glowed and the light entered Zach’s body. He was awakened.

Zach Murphy awakened as the SEVENTH LIGHT! What’s gonna happen now…

Zach bowed his head. Maddy was behind him. “Maddy… I’m… sorry.”

“Zach?”

“I knew… all along… I knew that I was the Seventh Light… For a long time, I knew…”

“…But… how?”

“Four years ago… I was visited by an Amazonian computer… which was controlled by a robot… and that same robot was sent by a French carpet-maker. And he told me everything. …Sniff!” Zach started crying. “I wanted to tell you! But I knew… you would never have believed a story like that! And because of me, you were in danger! Can you imagine how hard it’s been for me… trying to fulfill the destiny a carpet-maker’s robot’s computer has given me?”

Tears welled up in Maddy’s eyes. “You’re right, Zach… I wouldn’t have believed you for a second!” She went up and hugged him. “But I do now! I believe you, Zach!”

“Maddyyyy!” Zach hugged back. The twins cried, and the moment was beautiful and tear-jerking. From afar, Chris, Shade, and the operatives watched.

“This will be… a hell of a story for the history books.” Chris said.
“By the way, Sparky’s a robot.” Zach noted.

“I guessed that. But since his master is gone, we might as well keep him.” Maddy replied.

“Darn it.”

“Ruff, ruff!” Sparky cuddled up with them.

. . . . . . It is time.

Zach’s eyes glowed a bright green—Sheila’s eyes glowed—Fybi’s eyes glowed—the Seven Lights were glowing. Green auras surrounded them. Maddy stepped away from Zach, gaping. Her brother closed his green eyes… and reopened them. They had a surreal, otherworldly glow. “Heroes of this universe.” Zach’s voice was low and mysterious. “The Kids Next Door.” April, Sheila, and Fybi’s voices were in monotone. “I am the author of the Twenty Keys Prophecy.” Jessie Sidney broadcasted to every TV in the world. “I am Calliope.

“The Seven Lights have been awakened.” Kimaya’s voice spoke with them. “The seven lost pieces of my being.” Suki Crystal had never looked more strange. She sounded eerie in a non-cheery voice. “All of them house a power that was mine. The Seventh Light, Zach Murphy, houses my greatest power. A power of imagination that is greater than magic or psychicbending. The Power to Defy Law. I must apologize for deceiving you with the Fake Prophecy, but it was all to prove that… his power is not absolute.

“From beyond the ends, I have watched you through my vessels. From the bottom of my heart, I thank you for finding the seven pieces of my being. I do not have long to speak… so in this time, I will tell you the true meaning of this prophecy. The one whom the prophecy was meant to destroy… The one who will destroy the universe… His name is Lord English.” (Play “Chamber of Sages” from Zelda: Ocarina of Time.)

Green beams of light burst from the Seven Lights and covered the entire sky. An illusion of space was projected as two green spirits were seen adrift. “Before there was your universe, before there was law, before there was Arceus… there was us. I and my twin brother, Caliborn.” The figures morphed into shadowed children. “We ate, we fought, and we played much like you do. But there was one thing we shared… our imagination.”

Calliope was happily stacking toy blocks, and then Caliborn came and kicked it down. “It was our dream to create a world of our own design. But we had so little to work from. Nothing but our bodies and the energy of the universe. And so we molded them into one. We took the energy and merged it with our brains, creating single bodies of limitless potential.”

Energy flowed into the two kids’ brains. Before long, they formed into flashing 8-balls, which the two kids held and raised proudly. “But where did this energy come from? It was an outflow of forces that originated from millions of universes beyond our reach. That energy was creativity. We used the scattered fragments of what had been created and made our own worlds.”

Two stars flew around the sky and left galaxies in their wake. “But what of the minds? Were those lost among the creation? No… For we created bodies to house our minds. I created Polokus.” The roundish, long-armed creature with the big purple hat appeared. “And Caliborn created Bill Cipher.” The one-eyed golden triangle appeared. “They kept our knowledge bright.” Polokus was reading to Calliope a book, and Bill was showing Caliborn complex equations on a chalkboard. The brother gripped his head in agony.

“We were happy with the worlds we created. We were proud of them. And we relished in our power to make them.” The two kids were dancing. “...But then Caliborn went mad.” The rest of the sky darkened, showing only the brother as he trembled. “The power he had developed was consuming him.” The flashing 8-ball expanded on the screen. “He wanted to expand his understanding and his power. But there was no more energy to collect. ...Except...” The screen panned away to show Calliope. With fury in his red eyes, Caliborn charged his sister and grabbed her 8-ball. Calliope struggled, the two fought greater than they ever had. The sky exploded into dust.

The dust cleared, showing only the darkness. The two 8-balls bounced across the emptiness, their clacks echoing. They lay beside each other, flashing away. Eventually, they disappeared. Polokus and Bill floated in the dark before dissolving into dust. “For millions of years, there was emptiness. The worlds we had once built became dust. But slowly, that dust formed into a new singularity.” There was a white light in the darkness. It formed into a beautiful white pony with a gold ring around its waist. “Arceus, the god who would design a new universe, with love, life, and diversity.”

They watched as planets formed within the stars. The denizens were happily interacting, the trolls, the angels, salamanders, Gems, Carapacians. “There was never a world more beautiful. Even before the other gods were born, there was peace and order. ...But the power that had lived before Arceus still existed. Slowly, it was being born again.” The two 8-balls appeared over the projection.

“The power once thought to be lost had risen again. Our quarrel continued, and our power brought chaos to the universe. Arceus was blind to the cause of these anomalies. He believed the fault was his own. So he divided his power, brought life to the other gods. He commanded the inhabitants of that world to design a new one which the gods would then make real. But to ensure that the unseen energy of that world would not destroy the new one, Arceus destroyed it.” The universe exploded in a supernova.

“But it was not so simple, because Caliborn and I continued to live. And our power was steadily seeping into that new universe.” The Great Clock was shown, connected to a stream of energy, which then scattered upon passing the Great Clock. “We knew that our strife would harm this universe as it had with the others. And I did not want this to happen. So I merged myself with my brother and divided our bodies.” The two Shimmers of energy exploded as seven balls of light rained into the universe. One struck a Poneglyph inside a candy room, one inside an ice dungeon, another Poneglyph in some underground, and so on.

“The essence of my power – of my mind – awaited the day they could find the perfect vessels. But I was forced to divide my brother’s power as well.” Thirteen dark balls rained around the space. “They were scattered to the multiverses, to await beings of divine power that would share Caliborn’s desires.” A dark ball hit a Pyrameglyph inside a forest, one atop a mountain, one in a dark swamp, and so on. “And so, the Seven Lights and Thirteen Darknesses would come together and bring us back. But which one of us, exactly? Our souls still existed, wandering the universe in pieces. Our energies had reformed into the original bodies we created. They were known as the Octogan.” The two 8-balls were shown once again. Bill Cipher and Polokus emerged from them.

“Caliborn’s Octogan was hidden in the Negaverse, discovered by a man who would come to know, and fear its power. The gods took the Octogan from him and hid it under the Tree of Ending.” The sky displayed an upside-down tree, and a door with dozens of chi-blocks. “My Octogan was hidden within a temple in the Termina Dimension. It was discovered by one Acnologia, who used its unparalleled power for his own ends. But as my brother and I were one, both of our energies were present in the Octogan. Acnologia became aware of us, and his descendants would gain strong visions of us, for traces of our power were passed along his DNA.
“For the most part, those energies were hardly visible except within dreams. It was only when Clockwork passed his power unto the newest descendant, Jagar King, that my presence inside him would spark. But this had a side-effect on Jagar’s Negative, Ragaj, whom was descended from the man who found my brother’s Octogan, Acnologia’s Negative. Caliborn’s essence spoke to him, and I spoke to Jagar. We now use their bodies as our primary vessels.

“Both of us still desired to win, so we gathered others to help us with our work. Bill Cipher told the gods about the prophecy, and the gods formed their own iteration, the ideology of Light vs. Darkness. Ragaj sought capable underlings that would become Team Gnik. I acquired the aid of the trolls, and lost denizens of other dimensions. In recent years, my Octogan came into the possession of a band of humans who desired to control the Earth. With it, this group called ‘Illuminati’ saw the end. They wanted to prevent our return and prevent the prophecy from coming to light. But the fragment of essence that belonged to my brother infected the holders of the Octogan. They developed his desire to make a world of their control. And when the Apocalypse comes, the current King will make his desire reality, even if he is unaware of the consequences.

“I’m sure, even now, the Octogan blinds King Andrew to this knowledge. Yet, it is because of him and his ancestry of powerful Conquerors that the Octogan’s power was kept under control, preventing the spread of worse havoc. However, the Octogan must be taken from him. They must return to the possession of our primary vessels, Jagar and Ragaj. On the Day of Apocalypse, they will fight. The winner of the battle will become the dominate force. The winner of the battle will be reborn. If Caliborn is the one restored, he will possess both our powers, and don the title of Lord English. He will destroy everything.”

The sky showed the two Octogan uniting in one tremendous body. This body, Lord English, unleashed a devastating “ROOOOOOOAAAAARRR!” Universes that were labeled Gameverse, Fanverse, Legends, Terminus – all shattered under his divine power. The Original Worlds – Grand Line, Hyrule, Disney, Fiore, Remnant, Mobius, Marvel – they would all crumble and kneel to the power of the supreme being. (End song.)

The illusion vanished in the sky, so the Seven Lights spoke Calliope’s last words. “I know there are still questions I haven’t yet answered, but rest assured, they will come. We must not let Lord English win. Even if the universe is to be destroyed, I must defeat him. Before I go, Kids Next Door, I would like to say… I’m sorry. You all have suffered because of me and my brother’s strife. All I want is to put an end to it. To let you all live happily. Currently, only one of the Thirteen Darknesses has not awakened. But once they are all together, the battle of the universe will come. Please… lend me your support. But do not fear. Keep each other close in your hearts.”

The glow in their eyes vanished. The Seven Lights were back to normal. Everyone was astonished… The world was left in worry and panic. From this day until May 31, there would be no peace or rest. Everybody could feel their happy times drawing to a close.

“I feared this day for a long time…” Jagar King appeared in the field. Everyone faced him. “I feared the inevitable doom that I could not see. I meditated… for hours on end inside Great Clock. Speaking to Calliope. I wanted this prophecy to stop… but if we don’t complete it… there will be no one left to stop him. Lord English… is truly the most powerful being there has ever been. I understand why Clockwork was so afraid. I… am afraid…”

“…We have nothing to fear.” Shade said. Everyone stared at her confused. “If there is anything I learned today… it’s that destiny truly is void.” She smiled. “We will save the universe and prevent Lord English’s return.”

“How optimistic.” Bill Cipher emerged from a burst of sapphire flames. “Look at all of you! Poor, poor Kids Next Door. So hopeful that everything is gonna turn out all right. The classic fairytale ending!

Anthony stomped a boulder up and chucked it, Bill dodged, Melody slashed water, everyone joined in attack, but the human demon casually evaded them all as he spoke. “How will it feel when everything you worked for comes crumbling down? Knowing you are helpless before powers beyond your own.”

Bill took to the sky. “If I wanted to, I can exterminate this entire planet. I simply enjoy the sight of you skittering around like little bugs on scorching hot concrete. Struggle and fight all you want. Lord English will return, and together, with the Thirteen Darknesses under our service, the multiverse will be the dance floor of the never-ending party! Your only hope is to join us and bow to our power. You may not get to have a throne, but hey, you’ll make decent choreboys. See you in 11 days, Kids Next Door! It’s going to be a beautiful Armageddon! AAAAAH HA HA HAAAAA! MWAAAAH HAH HAH HAH!” Bill exploded and vanished.

Midway Peak

Morgan Uno stood upon the balcony, the wind blowing her coat. The sky looked dimmer after the vision ended. “King Andrew… are you really blind to what you possess?” She looked down, sensing a body of psychic flying up the mountain. “Still… what do these kids have compared to you? It’s time to find out.” She warped before Sunni Chariton could spot her.

And this officially ends the CP10 Saga. When we come back, we will begin the 8th and final arc, the Opening Saga. Unfortunately, that may not be for a while. Not only do I have dozens of work hours coming up, but I’m gonna do more Side Stories, and I also wanna write a shrink fic for RWBY… which downright tells you I’m obsessed with that. :P There’s other stories I wanna write eventually like Fairy Sisters: Sugar Fairies, right now I’m just debating exactly when. Caliborn and Calliope are from Homestuck, like the trolls. See you when we come back for the Opening Saga.
Hello, everyone. With the Opening Saga now commencing, it won’t be long until we face the Leaders of the World Government. But before we do, I think it’s only fitting you know just who the Leaders were before they were kings. In any great series, character development is a must. Even for these guys. This chapter in particular continues from Chapter 29 of Seven Lights. (A fair warning though, this chapter has religious material that some may find sensitive. ;P)

Chapter 1: God’s Messenger

Palutena’s Temple

“Phew!” Palutena brushed the sweat off her forehead after the exciting battle she just endured. “Glad to see Jennifer is as spry as ever. But at least Sector W managed to escape!”

“Um, Lady Palutena?” Pit spoke with an awkward expression. “I think the readers were hoping for an onscreen battle between you and Jennifer.”

“Silly Pit, we need to save the budget for the battles that really matter!” The Goddess of Light grinned. “And that’s only between the main characters. Besides, my first battle with Jennifer was a lot more exciting.”

“But that was 4,000 years ago. My memory’s not that good.”

“In that case, Pit, would you be up for a little story? Not just about Jennifer, but I’ve been doing some research. The World Leaders have quite the histories.”

“Can the Chronicler tell us the story?!” Pit asked excitedly. “He always makes them interesting!”

“You wanna brave the Chronicler’s Element Trials just to hear a prequel story?”

“You made me do that for Crystal’s story!”

“Well, you should have paid attention when it was happening the first time. Now sit back and listen to your goddess! Now then, let’s start with Jennifer Bush. It was over 4,000 years ago…”

4,000 years ago

It was one thousand years after the founding of the First Kids Next Door, the heroes who saved the planet from a race of demons who had ascended from Hell. As generations passed, this army of brave children slowly dwindled in numbers, until they became no more than a legend. However, the Sacred Trees that the gods had planted for them still grew about the Earth, serving as reminders of what the Kids Next Door had done. But it also reminded the world of the dark powers that be.
The world knew that demons lived under the earth, and would rise again if the need suited them.

According to that legend, the Kids Next Door were aided by fairies, and after their victory against the demons, baby gods known as “Firstborn” rewarded the humans with a delicious cake with supernatural powers. But even in this age, people followed numerous religions, and many did not see eye-to-eye. Some were strong in the belief of one God, a God who was pure-hearted and wanted His children to follow the correct path, or He would banish them to Hell. The Catholics believed that these fairies and other so-called gods were what attracted the demons in the first place. They strayed humankind from the right path, ideas of merpeople and fairies dirtied their minds and filled the demons with hunger.

That’s why, if any of these accursed trees were seen, they were to be burned to ashes. These “Sacred Trees” were a call to the demons to feed on the organisms nearby, they had to be extinguished, so that one day those legends can be erased. In one peaceful village within the Oaklands, red embers rose to the clear night sky as a giant tree was in the process of disintegration. Everyone in the village could see it. Even the innocent family who lived on the hill in the forest far away.

“La da da da da.” Jennifer Bush was an adorable girl at five years old. Her brown hair was shiny and her skin was fair. She danced outside in tiny bare feet, her pink dress flowing as she twirled. ♪ Let it burn, let it burn.” ♪ Jenny sang. “God, please punish the heathens.” Her voice would make anyone smile. She was so sweet and pure-hearted, full of love and life. “When I die, may I be rocked to sleep in your loving arms, and may the people who planted those trees be eaten by demons.”

“Jennifer, please come inside.” A teen girl in a white blouse and long blue skirt called. Her brown hair matched her little sister’s. “It’s getting dark. You know the monsters come out at night.”

♫ “I’m not scared, not scared.” ♫ Jenny sang joyfully. “I am God’s daughter, and I will banish the demons with my holy light!” Jenny twirled, and her body began to shine. She was born a lightbender with her pure spirit, but her family and the village accepted it as a blessing from God. They believed Jenny could warm the darkened souls and lead them to the correct path with her light.

“Won’t you please share your light with your family?” Amy asked. “Your heart keeps us all warm.”

“O-kay, o-kay.” Jennifer happily skipped to her home. She hugged Amy’s skirt. “Are you warm now, Big Sister?”

Amy smiled and patted Jenny’s head. “I’m always warm around you, Little Sister.”

Inside, the Bush Family said their prayers and ate dinner by candlelight. The light from Jenny’s chi kept their food warm and pure. Jenny and Amy’s mother was Mary, and their father was Joey. (Well, he prefers Joseph, but “Joey” kept the pattern going.) They were a simple family, but happy nonetheless. “Mommy, Daddy, if the evil tree was attracting demons, how come we never saw any?” Jenny asked.

“Demons don’t always appear before our very eyes, honey.” Mary replied. “Some demons become invisible and prey on our souls from up close. But I don’t think we ever had to worry. Your light has kept them away from us.”

“Do you think the priest will let me speak for him tomorrow?”
“Will you remember what to say?” Joseph asked with a chortle.

“Sure, sure! It goes, uh, in the beginning there was darkness, so God turned on the lights… Wait, but how did He do that? He lit a candle? No wait, let me try again!”

“Ah ha ha ha!” Amy giggled. “Don’t worry, Jenny. Soon, you’ll know all the words by heart.”

“When I grow up, do you think I can be a priest, too?”

“You would be a priestess, honey.” Mary smiled. “And I think you would be a great one.”

“I hope I grow up soon so that I can be!”

“Well, remember, Jenny, big girls get lots of rest. If you go to bed early, you’ll be up to greet the sun tomorrow.”

“Okay, Mommy! But if the sun doesn’t come, I’ll wake up the village myself!” Jenny lit up.

When dinner was finished, they blew out the candles and went to sleep. Jenny had trouble keeping her eyes closed, for her young body still had energy to spare. A red glow had been steadily growing from her window. Jenny thought it was the distant flames from the burning Sacred Tree, but the level of brightness was odd given how far it was. So Jenny stood up on her bed and gazed out the window. The flames glinted off her horrified chocolate eyes.

Demons had risen from Hell and burned every acre in the forest. They were pig-like abominations, roaring and waving torches as they cried, “HAIL MALLADUS!”

“JENNIFER!” Amy ran in and pulled her sister away from the window.

“Sissy, why are there demons?!”

“I don’t know, but we have to get out of here!” They were about to run outside with their parents, only to find their home surrounded by Bulblins.

“LOOK!” a Bulblin that sounded like Seth Green shouted. “We found four more! Let’s glue their mouths together and make fun of them for kissing!”

“You dipsh,” another Bulblin smacked him, “we’re supposed to be killing everyone in sight! Just burn their house and feed off their despairing souls.”

“That idea’s better than mine!”

“GO AWAY, DEMONS!” Jennifer shouted fearlessly.

“Jenny, don’t!” Mary pulled her back as the family retreated inside. The demons set fire to the small home from all corners. The Bushes held each other close as the flames surrounded them.

“What do we do, Daddy?” Jenny asked, her adorable eyes tearing.

“We have to pray.”

They folded their hands and spent the last moments of their life praying to God. Young Jenny’s faith was the strongest of all, and her light kept the family warm and vibrant. After the flames burned their flesh, they knew their troubles would end. They would go to Heaven.
Jenny opened her eyes to a beautiful sky of fluffy clouds. She stood and felt her feet on a soft, white ground. The land before her was all clouds. Her face beamed, full of more love and life than she ever had. “I’m in HEEEEAAAVEEEEEEEEEN!” She ran and danced and skipped and pranced, for she was finally in the world of her dreams. The golden sun shone on her vibrant soul as she made cloud angels and made cloudmen. She thought of nothing else and played for countless minutes. Then, a thought occurred to her: “Wait a minute: where are my wings?”

It was then she took sight of a marble temple not far away. Jenny skipped to it and entered. There was a garden flourishing with many delicious fruits, and a woman with long emerald hair and a white gown with too many decorations to describe was picking fruit to put into a basket. She turned to Jenny with a loving smile and eyes that matched her hair. “Well, hello. It’s nice to see you’ve awakened.”

“Are you an angel?” Jenny asked.

“No, just an angel.” The woman turned fully. “I’m Palutena, the goddess who created light. I was the one who blessed you with lightbending.”

“Ha ha ha! No you’re not! God created light, and He gave me the power of light!”

“I don’t mean to trample on your religious faith. Still, that was terrible what those demons did to your family. When the four of you landed in the Underworld, all they wanted to do was eat you, ignoring any judgment laws. Your parents and your sister were attacked and infected with Dark Chi by the time I sent my Centurions. Thankfully, I was able to rescue you and have the Grim Reaper uplift you to the Spirit World. At the moment, we’re working to heal your family.”

“But why did the demons hurt us? We burned the evil tree.”

“That was a Sacred Tree. The Sacred Trees were planted around the Earth to keep Demon King Malladus sealed within the core. Because the mortals burned those trees, Malladus was able to escape. It was the courageous spirits of the Kids Next Door that gave the trees their power. Our only hope is if a new Kids Next Door arrives.”

“But why doesn’t God beat the Devil?”

“Jenny, this is a little difficult to explain…” Palutena said awkwardly. “You see… we’re kind of part of a multiverse system. Meaning other universes that intersect with ours. And this universe is primarily run by… well, a different branch of gods than the one you’re thinking of. And while the influence of the Catholic God and the other religions is still heavy in this world, I’m afraid that His power… well… It lies somewhere else.”

“I… I don’t get it…”

“Sigh, I really don’t want to hurt your faith. But, the truth is, there are multiple gods out there, and not all of them can cooperate in the same universe. A while ago, the Greek gods created fearsome and destructive Titans, so we had to… send them away. But I can assure you the God you know and love still exists.” Palutena smiled. “However, I can’t take you to Him.”

“…” Jenny looked down and frowned. Palutena felt her sorrow and approached her. The goddess tilted Jenny’s head up and said, “Until your family gets better, I promise to make your stay in the Spirit World meaningful. We’re normally not allowed to do this, but I’ve given back the lightbending that you lost. You can be as sunny as you were before!”
“Um… Thank you. But where should I go first?”

“Well, do you like to read, Jenny?”

“Sure!”

“I know a library that’s chock full of books about history, geography, fairytales, you name it. If you need a good way to pass the time, I can show you. But I should warn you, the librarian is… a tad scary.”

“What do you mean?”

Spirit Library

Palutena brought Jennifer to a tremendous stone temple whose interior possessed endless floors of endless books. “Hello. I am Wan Shi Tong.” The librarian was a giant black owl with a white face. “He Who Knows 10,000 Things and the most intelligent among spirits. Second to the Chronicler and his smartass apprentice, Kaepora, who happens to be my cousin. Regardless.”

“Hello, Wan.” Palutena greeted. “This young lady here is Jennifer. She’s new to the Spirit World and we were wondering if she could spend a little time in your library. It is eternity, after all.” ^^;

“Of course I will allow her. She looks like a bright young child, eager to learn. And just because someone is dead, doesn’t mean they can’t still gain knowledge.”

“Wonderful! Jennifer, would you like me to help you find something?”

“No, Miss Palutena. I can manage.”

“Hm hm, you sound like a smarty already! In that case, I’ll be trying to manage the demon situation. I’ll check up on you in an hour.” The goddess left the temple.

For countless hours, all Jennifer did was read. On her request, Wan Shi Tong took her to a section with books on Palutena’s branch of gods. She read how those gods gave mortals the power of elements. She detested almost every page that defied her religion, every page that could stray people from the righteous path. Eventually, she found an article about the Challenge Agreement: An element bender can challenge the god of an element to a duel. If the bender wins, the god must grant them a portion of their God Chi. If the bender loses, they must give up their bending.

“Palutena?” Jennifer asked the goddess after returning to the temple. “Will you teach me lightbending?”

“Why certainly, Jennifer.” Palutena smiled. “With me as your teacher, you’ll be a pro in no time.”

For five years, Palutena spent her free time teaching Jennifer lightbending. They meditated under clear daylight, Jennifer learned a variety of moves like Flash or Refract. When Palutena wasn’t around, Jennifer trained herself. The five-year-old spirit became skilled enough to tell Palutena, at long last:

“I challenge you to a duel!”

“Oh?” Palutena was caught off guard.

“According to the Challenge Agreement, you have to give me your God Chi if I win. Isn’t that right?”
“Jennifer… this is really out of the blue. How long have you been planning this?”

“A long time. You’re not afraid to fight me, are you?”

“I’m not, but… do you really want to risk losing your bending?”

“I’m not gonna lose. In fact, I have other wagers, too. If I win, you bring me to life as a grown-up, AND you give me one of your temples on Earth. Deal?”

Palutena hesitated. This girl was brimming with confidence, and the fact she had been planning this made Palutena suspicious. Regardless, she couldn’t turn down the challenge. It was the law. “Very well, I accept your challenge and your conditions. In fact, I know the perfect place to host our duel.” Palutena raised her staff and warped them in a flash of light.

Next second, they were at the top of an extremely high mountain, the sun shining directly overhead. Temples and statues of Palutena covered the mountaintop. “This is the Sun Pillar, the tallest mountain on Earth.” Palutena explained. “My home away from home. If you defeat me, this entire mountain will be yours. Does it sound like a fair deal?”

“It does.” Jenny smirked.

“Now, since I am a god and can therefore never get tired, your objective will be to both: knock the staff out of my hand, and knock me off my feet. When you’ve done both things at the same time, you will have won the battle. I hope you’re prepared, because I won’t hold back. This battle will utilize both of our strengths. And it begins… NOW!” (Play “Boss Theme 2” from Kid Icarus: Uprising!)

Hidden boss: Palutena

Palutena swung her staff and slid a giant light column across the ground, but Jenny dodged right, quickly blocking with Light Fists when the goddess bat her staff. Jenny kicked at Palutena’s shin before rolling behind her, but when Palutena whipped around for a counter, Jenny had zipped behind with Light Feet and blasted Palutena with a Solar Beam. The goddess was down on her front, seeing Jenny coming at her and whipping her staff behind to send a Light Slice. Jenny jumped above to stomp down at her face, but Palutena zipped off with lightspeed and spawned a wide light spire around herself.

Jenny lit her feet with light and ran from the pursuing spire. She made a wide gap between herself and Palutena, but the goddess channeled her power to make giant spires around the mountaintop. They moved around in attempt to burn Jenny, but the child kept swiftly evading. Jenny was able to find Palutena’s spire and had built enough momentum to dive straight through it, tackling the goddess and biting her arm. Palutena held her staff up to shoot light at the child, but Jenny quickly leapt to grab it. She held on and kicked Palutena in the face before successfully pulling it away.

Jenny smirked, now the holder of the staff. Palutena returned the look and lit her hands with light, waving them around the air before shooting giant Light Palms at her opponent. Jenny swung the staff like a bat to disperse them, a difficult maneuver given the child’s size compared to it. Eventually, a Light Palm was able to push her back, but Jenny escaped before it could smash her into a wall. Palutena formed hexagonal shields from which her Reflections emerged, and Jenny shot them with the staff when they flew at her. Palutena suddenly zipped behind and took the staff back, knocking the child away.
Palutena manipulated the light that bounced off their figures, so the area was flashing with neon colors. The action made Jennifer confused, so she was forced to close her eyes and sense Palutena’s movements by her energy. Jenny evaded the goddess’s light attacks, turning her own fists and feet into light as she ran circles around Palutena. The goddess tried to follow her movements and brace for a surprise attack, but then Jennifer stopped a few feet in front and FLASHED! Palutena was a tad startled, then she was kicked in the back of the head and knocked down, but the goddess threw a light spire up to knock Jennifer airborne.

Palutena made Light Spheres surround the midair Jenny from all directions, but when they closed in, Jenny pulsed her own power and bounced them away. She landed, and Palutena made Solar Beams shoot from every direction, Jenny flipped and dodged with a smile on her happy face, grabbing two beams in her hands. She threw one that Palutena blocked, but the other she had fly around her and hit from behind. With lightspeed, Jenny zipped through Palutena’s legs and knocked her down, then Jenny leapt on her back and tried to tug the staff away. Palutena’s grip was firm, and the goddess was able to blow her off with a FLASH from her staff.

(“How long does this fight go on, Palutena?” Pit asked.)

(“About 10 hours. I’m surprised I remember every detail.”)

(“Can’t we skip to the end?” Pit moaned.)

(“Oh, fine.”)

Jenny’s hands and feet were shining brighter as she zipped around and threw a hit every second, and Palutena was quick to block with her staff. Jenny zipped ten feet away and shot back with a round of punches that Palutena blocked with a Mirror Shield, but the child leapt over and stomped the goddess’s face. “You’ve become more ferocious since the start of this battle.” Palutena noticed. “Your energy seems to be increasing instead of decreasing.”

“I have the power of Faith!” Jenny threw Light Spheres around Palutena, who could only block a few with her staff. “The more I believe in God, the more power I have!”

“That much is true.” Palutena smiled proudly. “Lightbending is strengthened by belief in what you hold dear. And your faith is not just your own, but your family’s. It’s that kind of faith that makes mortals stronger than gods.”

“Oh, on the contrary.” Jenny folded her hands as her body shone with white light. “O Father, who art in Heaven, if I am victorious, I will use my power to right the wrongs of this world. O God, I beg of you, give me the strength to vanquish evil.”

A great ray of light erupted from Jenny’s body. Palutena felt her growing power and formed a barrier around herself. Jenny zipped up, but instead of attack like Palutena expected, Jenny sang a high and lovely note. “Ooooooooooooooo...” Her love and faith was poured into her vocals, and a piece of the barrier scattered into dust.

She’s lightbending with the sound of her own voice?! Palutena gaped. Her faith is really strong! I guess I didn’t trample on her religion after all.

Jenny seized the chance to zip inside, behind Palutena, and kick the back of her leg. Palutena stumbled back but kept balance—Jenny grabbed the staff and smashed down the barrier. In Palutena’s attempt to zip up and take it back, Jenny erupted a light spire that surprised her, then she whacked the goddess in the face with her staff and knocked her down. (End song.)
Jenny aimed the ball of the staff at Palutena when the goddess looked up. She smiled. “You actually defeated me. A deal’s a deal, Jennifer. I’m proud to call you my student.”

Jenny grinned, showing her adorable pearly teeth, but it was a fake smile. Palutena took the staff back and raised it, flashing a ray of light into being as a lifeless body descended from it. It had shiny brown hair in curls and a pink dress like Jenny’s. “This is a Gigai I had been constructing. It’s what you would’ve looked like at 25 years old. I thought you might want to use it to revisit the Mortal World, but… I guess this will be your vessel from now on. Just jump in and you’ll come back to life.”

Jenny jumped with joy and jumped into the body. She was now a grown-up, 25 but with the soul of a carefree child. “And as promised, I not only give you ownership of Sun Pillar, I give you a piece of my God Chi.” Palutena pulled a ball of light out of her heart and passed it to Jenny’s body. “You now possess my sunbending, which also holds my power of Resurrection. It’s a power that can heal injuries or restore life. You have a kind soul, Jenny. I have faith that you won’t misuse it.”

“I most certainly won’t! Now that it is in the right hands.” Without warning, Jenny shot a Solar Beam and blew Palutena back.

“Ahh!” The goddess landed on her feet. “Jennifer, the battle is over!”

“It’s far from over, Palutena.” Jennifer said with a conniving smirk. “You are not an angel, nor are you a goddess. You’re a demon that stole God’s precious light and claimed it as your own. You and all these other false gods continue to darken humanity’s mind. But I know that my light is from God’s love. I know that He wanted me to take His light back from you and lead humanity on the right path. I will be God in physical form and carry out His will. I will destroy all the demons that plague our world and bring light to all the misguided souls who follow you fake gods! But if I cannot… I will have to destroy them, too. ♪ Destroy, destroy, destroy…” ♪ She started dancing and singing.

“Oh! Also, I am renaming this mountain.” Jenny decided. “In the name of my mother, Mary, and my father, Joey, this land will be called Mariejoa. ♪ Marie and Joa! Marie and Joa!” ♪ She twirled.

“That is what you truly believe.” Palutena smiled. “I didn’t sense this ambition inside of you because you truly believe it is the right thing to do. …Jennifer… I won’t go back on my word… but as you carry out your goal, remember the true difference between Light and Darkness. I’ll be watching over you.” The goddess ascended back to Heaven in a ray of light.

♫ “Alive, alive, I am alive, alive.” ♫ Jenny sang. “Oh, but I don’t want to spread the word of God on my own. And I also don’t want to tear down these temples and build churches all alone. O God, thank you for this wonderful gift.” She began to pray. “Thank you for giving me the strength to follow your path. Please, if I may have nothing else, send me others who share the beliefs that I have. Let us watch and protect the world as you do. Please…”

Her faith shone on her body as light and became a beacon for the whole world, and even the worlds beyond to see.

In a wasteland that was miles away from Mariejoa, the beacon shone across the cloudy heavens. But then an odd pink light flashed in the clouds, roaring like thunder as a small but powerful meteor descended unto Earth. It was roughly three inches in size, but its velocity was great enough to dent a crater in the earth. This powerful object was a simple 8-ball, flashing an array of colors and beeping as it rampanty rolled around the crater. An explorer happened by and discovered the object. His curiosity boundless over the strange phenomena, he bent down and picked it up.
“AAAAAAAAAAAAHHHHHHH!” It felt like touching a million tiny suns at once. The tiny ball’s power was so vast, and holding it showed him things he had never seen or could imagine. A giant fortress in space, a door with twenty locks, a triangular portal and the dimensions inside, and dozens of planets melding together into one.

By the time he decided to throw the ball back on the ground, he was overcome with pain. Yet, he felt the longing desire to hold it again. He would let himself rest and keep picking it up as many times as it would take.

Starting this chapter took a bit of research on Christianity’s history… so the religion probably dates back way earlier than it should in this universe. :P This story will be six chapters long, one for each World Leader. I don’t think the chapters are going to be very long if I’m just focusing on the important parts. Remember Wan Shi Tong from Avatar? He was also in Firstborn? Nah, Kaepora’s better. Next time, we’ll look at Daphne Anderson’s past. Later.

Chapter Summary

Chapter 2 of Before They Were Kings, featuring Daphne Anderson's backstory and her history with Monty Uno/Numbuh Zero.

Today’s chapter examines the story of Daphne Anderson. This takes place about 50 years before the Nextgen Series.

Chapter 2: Gray Rose

Twilight Town

Twilight Town, Pennsylvania, was one of the most peaceful villages in the world. Bathed in eternal twilight, this village held strong connection with the Realm of Shadows. It was a poor village with wooden houses and no electricity, where pigs wallowed around in mud. The people who lived here, the Twili, were humans of unusual colors that ranged from white, blue, green, or purple. Everyone was a shadowbender, and as their shadows could freely drift and interact amongst each other, all was serene.

Daphne Anderson was a girl of five years old. She was the most quiet and most serene of all the Twili. She had the appearance of a ghost with white hair, white skin, and a white dress. She sat in the shadow of a barn, picking petals off a rose that was black like her eyes. Every day, she whittled away the hours by whittling away roses. She never knew why she enjoyed it, but it made good meditation.

“DAFFYYYY!” Daphne was tackled by a 7-year-old girl with white hair that had a hint of strawberry blonde and a green dress. She had fair peach skin like a normal human, since their father was human and their mom was Twili. Of course, enough time spent in this town would make a normal human develop Twili traits, especially if they were a shadowbender. “Tackle Hug, graaaaahh!” She rolled on her back and squeezed Daphne’s stomach.

“Ack! Bella, stop it!” Daphne gagged. “You’re choking me!”

“You’re so scarable, silly!” Isabelle dropped her sister. “Why do you always hide back here?”

“Because I like to be in the dark. It’s quiet.”

“Not anymoooordr!" Bella sang. While Daphne’s voice was soft and dull, Bella’s high voice complimented her peppy personality. "Daffy, you gotta spend more time in the sun! Mom says shadowbenders need both light AND dark, that’s why we live in Twilight Town and not Night Town. Besides, look at your poor shadow. She’s so lonely.”

“But you can’t even see her.”

“That’s the problem! If you really like picking roses, I know a garden that’s full of colorful roses! Much prettier than those creepy little black ones. Come on, I’ll show ya!” Bella grabbed Daphne’s hand and joyfully dragged her to the back of town. “Let’s use Shadow Veil and go down this cliff.”
“Bella, Mom says we aren’t allowed to leave the village.”

“Why, Daffy, I do it all the time.”

“Because there might be demons around.”

“Daffy, the Demon Wars have been goin’ on for like a thousand years, and they never came to Twilight Town. That’s ’cause the Twilight Princess is one of the Firstborn, so ya know we’re safe! Come on, Daffy, let’s go.” Bella pulled them both into Shadow Veil and slithered down the short cliff.

Bella pulled her sister along as they ran through the forest barefoot. The two sisters had always been polar opposites. Bella was full of life and excited for adventure while Daphne only wanted to sit in the dark and wait for time to pass. She didn’t think there was a point to doing anything unproductive, but her parents always told her that was a grown-up’s way of thinking, not healthy for a child.

“Look! We found the roses!” Bella exclaimed. They arrived at an area above a cliff where colorful roses grew about the soil. Bella ran to pick some blue ones and red ones and took a whiff. She looked to the right and yelled, “Look, Daffy! It’s our shadows!”

Their shadows stretched across the forest over the edge of the cliff. “Hi, shadows!” Bella waved, and her shadow Akita mirrored her enthusiasm. Meanwhile, Daphne’s shadow, Shaydes was as still as her master. “Daphne, you never talk to your shadow. You never see her when you’re sitting in the dark.”

“So what? I know she’s there. She still talks to me.”

“You should give her a present. Like flowers! Hey Shaydes, what color roses do you want?”

Akita looked at Shaydes for clarification. …I want gray.

“A gray rose?” Bella turned around. “I don’t see any like that. Maybe we could paint the roses gray!”

“That’s ridiculous.” Daphne replied.

“Daffy, just pick out some roses. We’ll put them in a cup and put them in the window, they’ll look pretty!”

Daphne sighed and decided to pick roses alongside her sister. In this dull twilight forest, this rose garden was the most peculiar thing. Bella never sees anyone else come out and tend to them, so she thought it could be the work of the shadows.

“Well, I’m done. How many did you get?” Bella asked.

“Five.” Daphne said as she was picking petals off a yellow one, and Shaydes a violet one.

“Daffy, you weren’t supposed to pick theeeem!”

“I forgot.”

“Oh, that’s okay.” Akita gathered up the scattered rose petals. “We can do something else with them!”

With their roses in hand, the girls began to return to the village. Akita scouted the way ahead, but they were shocked when the shadow flew back and yelled, Stop!

“Akita, what’s wrong?” Bella asked.

There’re monsters! Master, let’s go another-

“RAH!” Twin Moblin jumped out of bushes from their right, the girls dropping their roses. They were large and muscular Moblin with hair on their chests. “Say, look, Phineas! Two young morsels that have lost their way!”

“Indeed, Herculi. Perhaps we should educate them on the danger of strangers!”

“Sic ’em, Akita!” Bella commanded, and the Moblin were instantly mauled by the shadow. “Daffy, run!” She grabbed her sister’s arm and raced through the forest, passing by Bulblin that tried to shoot arrows at them. Bella pulled Daphne into a Shadow Veil as they slid up the cliff back to the village. The girls were horrified to see that demons have swarmed the place, putting young Twili into carriages while the adults were out cold.

“AAAH!” The girls were grabbed by Phineas and Herculi.

“These energetic youths will make excellent specimens! Let’s clock them in the head one, Phineas.”

“A bully idea, Herculi.” They dropped the sisters and punched them senseless.

“AAAAAAAAHHH…”

Daphne and Isabelle were locked in a dark, cold dungeon void of any life, except for the terrified souls of the young shadowbenders. Moans of agony rang throughout the halls. All they could do was imagine the horrible pain the children were experiencing before it was their turn. It was in this dungeon Daphne felt her first true emotion: fear.

Beside her, Isabelle was petting her shadow in her lap, holding Akita in a comforting fashion. “It’s okay…” Bella spoke with a gentle voice. “I promise we’ll go home… We’ll be alright…”

“How can you say that?” Daphne yelled. “It’s over, this is the end! We’re gonna die!” The other children in the cell began to cry.

“Daphne, stop! You’re making your shadow scared!”

“She should be scared and so should you! Why are you always so happy, don’t you see there’s no way out?! This is why picking roses was a waste of time, we could’ve been running!”

CREAK! Light shone into their cell, and the kids froze with fear. A Moblin was looking in from the ceiling hatch, the only way out of their hole. “Guess what? One of the pipsqueaks DIED! Who wants to go next?” His pig nose whiffed inside. “That white one smells good. GRAB HER!” A Wallmaster dropped in and grabbed Daphne tightly.

“AAAAAAAHHH!” The girl swung her feet desperately.

“DAFFY!” Bella held onto her ankles, but the Moblin jabbed his spear at her to knock her off. “Daf-!” They shut the hole to muffle her cries.

Daphne was slapped onto a table and chained by her wrists and feet. “What are you gonna do?!”
“You’re a shadowbender, right?” A Bulblin in a doctor’s uniform and mouth mask took out a syringe of purple liquid. “We’re just giving you a little upgrade. You don’t need to worry.”

“B-B-But I don’t want an upgrade!”

“Well, Shadow Queen Malevolous thinks you do! And she’s dead now, so, honor her dying wish and all. Detach the shadow!”

A Wallmaster pinched Shaydes with a grabber and yanked the shadow from Daphne’s body. “They say shadows are creatures of light and darkness, but King Benedict prefers them to be all darkness. Their masters have yet to survive the procedure, but perhaps you’ll be lucky.” The Bulblin injected Shaydes with the syringe, and the shadow started to squirm and growl.

“Shaydes?” Daphne said worriedly.

“Release her.” the Bulblin ordered. “Let’s see what happens.”

Daphne was unchained, and the demons stepped away as she approached her squirming shadow. “Shaydes, what’s the matter?”

HISSSSS! The shadow bared fangs and red eyes, biting Daphne in the shoulder.

“OW!” Daphne grabbed and forcefully pried her off, trying to hold the shadow down. “Shaydes, please! Please calm down! Please calm- AAAH!” She was bitten in the leg.

“The Dark Chi we injected her with causes shadows to lose their loyalty to their masters,” the doctor said. “All our other subjects were eaten by their own shadows. What a glorious fate to be eaten by a piece of your own being!”

“AAH!” Shaydes bit Daphne again. “Shaydes, please…” The child held her softly and pet the shadow. She cried tears due to the pain and wet the shadow’s head. “Everything’s gonna be okay, I promise. We’re gonna go back home… just like Bella said…”

Hiss... Shaydes wanted to bite her, but she resisted. Her mind was swimming with rage and pain, but in Daphne’s arms, she felt warmth. This girl was her master. They lived in the peaceful Twilight Town, sat under the barn shade and picked rose petals. Daphne was quiet most of the time, but she loved her shadow. And Shaydes loved her.

“Do you want me to talk to you more, Shaydes?” Daphne was still crying and blood leaked from her wounds. “Did I ignore you too much? I’m sorry that I did. When we go back home… I’ll stand in the sunlight. So that I can see you, and we can talk. We’ll go to the forest and look for gray roses. Do you think gray roses are real? If you really want one… we’ll look together.”

Shaydes shared her master’s feelings. Her fear had become rage, but this rage was not her own. Now Daphne’s sadness was conflicting with the poison inside her. Anger…sadness…anger… sadness… Love… These emotions whirled like a maelstrom. They were all too complicated… They clashed inside her soul like a battlefield. The battle was so intense that… both sides fell dead.

Master... The fangs and eyes on Shaydes’ face began to fade. I’m... sorry... Her pitch-black color began to morph into a milky gray. I don’t think we… can talk much, anymore... But I will be with you always... Daphne...

The doctors reentered the room to see the result. “That’s never happened before.” another Bulblin said. “What do you think, Marcus?”
“You idiot, don’t say my real name in front of the mortals!” the lead doctor smacked his head. “It’s Dracon. And it looks like she actually tamed it. Let’s inject her again.”

“YAAAAAH!” A band of kids burst into the room and started blasting the demons. “Your experiments are OVER, you walking bulls!” The leader of these kids, a chubby boy with brown hair, sunglasses, and a wood plate with a ‘0’ over his chest set the room on fire. “Don’t just sit there, let’s go!” The boy grabbed Daphne and ran, her shadow returning to position.

“Who are you?”

“The name’s Monty. But you can call me Numbuh Zero.” He smirked.

“Numbuh Zero, my sister and the others are still trapped.”

“No worries, we got somebody on that. Look, there he is! Hey, Daniel!”

“Hiya, Monty!” A boy with messy black hair and raggedy clothes flashed him a grin. He was standing with Isabelle while the other Twili ran. There was green gas emitting from the dungeon room. “Don’t go in there, it smells worse than a bathroom at the moment.”

“DAFFY!” Bella joyfully ran and embraced her sister in a hug. “I’m so glad you’re okay!”

“Catch up later, we’re in the middle of a revolution!” Monty yelled. “That’s all the prisoners, boys, let’s burn this place to the ground!”

It should’ve been the most momentous thing Daphne ever witnessed: the end of Benedict Uno, Sr. and the end of the demons’ reign. The kids had begun to rebuild the Sacred Trees and rebuild the world. There was light and there was peace.

One month had passed since then. Daphne and Isabelle were in a place called Cleveland, Virginia, far away from their home. They wanted to make plans about going back as soon as the KND finished building working ships. Isabelle began to spend time with Daniel, who was a poor boy that lived in a sewer and didn’t have a family or a last name. He was a poisonbender that kept the demons away with his stench.

Daphne tagged along with them for the most part, but she didn’t engage with their activities much. Shaydes, although the shadow still moved on her own, was dead quiet. With her new gray form, sometimes she was barely noticeable in broad daylight. Today, they were at a playground that was just built. They were told it was built over a mining ground. But while the children were playing carefreely, Daphne chose to hide in the shadow of a tree. Shaydes lay in her lap as she caressed her.

“Daphne!” Bella and Daniel ran over. “Danny says he knows a place where the demons kept a lot of treasure. Maybe we can take some back to Twilight Town! Wanna come?”

“Um… I don’t feel like it.”

Bella frowned. She stomped her feet and said with a grumpy expression, “Why don’t you wanna do anything?! I’m sorry about Shaydes, but you don’t have to be so sappy! I think Shaydes would want you to be happy. –Like that rhyme just now! Sappy, happy. Happy, sappy! Isn’t that funny?!”

“I can’t!” Daphne yelled. “You said it yourself, Bella. The Demon Wars have been happening for a long time. What if they come back? None of this peace and happiness is gonna matter. What happened to Shaydes… is just gonna happen with everyone else. Maybe worse.”

“…Well, I don’t wanna sit around and be upset. I think every day is a chance to be happy. So, I’m gonna go on an adventure. You can just stay here.” She and Daniel left.

Any other time, Daphne would be picking petals off a rose. However, there were no roses. But when Daphne looked up, she noticed a small pink flower with five petals blooming from the scarred ground. She sent Shaydes over to pick it out. She slowly plucked its petals.

“Oi, who’d-a thought saving the world would make me such a ladies’ man?” Monty Uno asked as he came around the tree. “Oh! I didn’t know this spot was taken.”

“I’ll go if you want me to.”

“No, it’s okay.” Monty sat across from her. “You know, you look familiar. Have I seen you before?”

“I’m Daphne. You saved me from the lab.”

“Oh, right, you’re the gray girl!” Monty lifted up his sunglasses. “Although without the glasses, you’re more white. Pretty weird, though. Did those demons do something to you?”

“I always looked like this. I’m a Twili.”

“Oh, one of those shadow people. Hey, I didn’t mean to call you weird.” Monty blushed, scratching his head awkwardly. “I’m one to talk, really. Benedict was my dad.”

“I heard.”

“Oh, but my mom was the Shadow Queen!” Monty beamed. “That means I’m like part-shadow! Or something.”

“I think you were adopted. You don’t look anything like your parents.”

“Yeah, I wish. But I am a firebender, and I don’t think Malladus would take two mortals under his roof. (I dunno why he got with a mortal in the first place.) So, what were those demons doing before I saved you?”

“They poisoned my shadow, Shaydes. She can’t talk to me, anymore.”

“Sorry to hear that. …So, what’s the deal with that flower? Playing ‘Loves Me Not’?”

“No, I’m just… picking it.” Daphne picked the last three petals quickly. “I don’t know why. What’s the point to doing anything? Bad things are gonna happen.”

“That’s a real ‘adult’ thing to say.” Monty cocked a brow. “We just defeated the demons, the bad times are over! Everyone’s happy. Why aren’t you?”

Daphne didn’t have an answer. She stared at the dull gray shadow in her lap. “…I guess because Shaydes isn’t happy. My parents say shadowbenders feel what their shadows feel. I wish I could make her happy.”

“What does your shadow like?”

“…Before we got caught, she wanted a gray rose. I wonder if she would still like one.”

“A gray rose? I’ve never seen anything like that.”

“I’ve never seen one, either. But black roses grow where I live. Maybe there are gray ones.”
“You wanna go look?”

“Huh?”

“I have a ship.” Monty smirked, standing up. “Let’s go to where you live and find a gray rose. Wanna?” He held a hand down.

Daphne stared at it. She wondered if there was a point in looking or if it even mattered. And yet, she wondered why this boy cared to try. She wanted to examine him. So she took his hand.

“Your ship is a dumpster?” Daphne said after he led her to a dumpster behind his house.

“I didn’t say it was fantastic-looking,” Monty blushed. “It’s clean though, at least. Come in.” They entered through a small door built in the side. The dumpster had controls and terminals inside. He began to activate it. “Where to?”

“Twilight Town, Pennsylvania.”

“Pennsylvania it is. Buckle up!” The dumpster shook as it lifted off the ground and shot off with engines.

Twilight Town

Daphne brought Monty to the colorful rose garden. They explored the area around, finding lone roses under trees or in bushes. “Sure are a lot of them.” Monty said. “Does somebody plant them all or something?”

“Bella thinks the shadows grow them.”

“Well, you should ask them if they plant any gray ones, ’cause I’m not seeing any. Found plenty of red ones over here.”

When Daphne was crawling by a tree, she found a bud that was in the process of blooming. When it did, it became a pretty pink rose. Daphne glanced over to Monty. She felt her cheeks redden. “Maybe we should go back. Bella might wonder where I am.”

“Yeah, I guess.” Monty stood up and stretched. “Flower picking is boring. Still, it was nice to get away from all the Supreme Leadery stuff for a few. We should hang out again sometime!” He returned first to the ship.

“Yeah…” Still blushing, Daphne followed him.

Over the next few days, Daphne, Isabelle, and Daniel have been exploring Kids Next Door Moonbase, a treehouse on the moon that had seemingly always been there. The base was dusty and disorganized, so the KND were working to repair it and establish communications with the Earth’s treehouses. “Oi, it’ll take forever to clean this dump.” Daniel said loudly. “You’d think it was made in Medieval days or something.”

“Holy smokes, there’s a treehouse in Antarctica!” Monty exclaimed after looking at some old files in an office. “Cadets come there and train to be operatives. Sounds flipping cold.”

“Monty, did you look at that computer?” his friend, Agatha Roberts pointed at the computer on a desk.

“I did, but it’s totally busted.” Monty sat at the desk and turned the device on, only to be greeted by a static screen. “I’ve been having some tech nerds fix the machines around here.”

“YO, MONTY!” a voice called from outside. “We brought that console from the arcade!”

“Let me see!” Numbuh Zero ran out to find Hoagie Gilligan and Gabe beside a pink arcade console called Sugar Rush. The side of the console had a picture of a black-haired girl with candy in her hair driving a white car.

“Why did you steal something from the arcade?” Daphne asked.

“It started glitching up one day and the owner was gonna shut it down.” Gabe replied. He was an orange-haired boy with buckteeth. “I proposed we save it because of the kids inside.”

“Kids?”

“Videogame kids.” Monty approached the console. “But who says game characters don’t have feelings? Hook it up somewhere and see what pops up.”

The characters on Sugar Rush were little pixelly children with colorful, candy designs, and sweet-sounding names. When the scientists finished repairing the computer system, they decided it would be easier to manage with artificial intelligence. So, Gabe downloaded Sugar Rush’s characters into the Moonbase computer.

After a bit of tweaking, he was able to get the candy-haired girl’s pixelly image to appear on the office computer. “What happened? Where am I?”

“Whoa, you actually got her to come up!” Monty beamed.

“Who the heck are you guys? A fat kid, a big teeth kid, and that girl looks like a ghost.” She pointed at Daphne.

“We’re the Kids Next Door. We downloaded your game into our computer network. Those blokes at the arcade were gonna shut you down.”

“Shut us down? Well, we have been a little glitchy lately. Hey, my name’s Vanellope! And not to toot my own horn, but I’m the princess of Sugar Rush. So uh, I’m a big deal.” She smirked.

“So you are!” Gabe stepped in front. “Then we have a proposition for you, Princess. As the Kids Next Door infrastructure is in need of drastic repairs, we’re in desperate need of a functional network. In regards to those circumstances, we would like to offer you the opportunity-”

The screen glitched. “My brain’s not programmed to know that many words.”

“You wanna be the boss of our network?” Monty asked. “Make sure everything works, get free digital cookies, have a good time?”

“Sure I will! I mean, as long as my friends can come, too.”

“Sure, bring the whole lot!” Gabe agreed. “In the Kids Next Door, every kid matters!”

“Then you’ve got yourself a princess!”

Later, when Monty was staring at the Earth from the glass wall, Daphne came beside him. “So, did you only save her to help fix the network?” she asked.

“Well, not specifically. It was Gabe’s idea, but I thought we should save them, anyway. Vanellope seems like a nice girl.”

“But she’s not real.”

“She talked to us, didn’t she? Take a hint from her and get a tan.” Monty smirked, poking Daphne’s arm playfully.

Daphne blushed again. “Do you… Do you like her?”

“Vanellope? She sounds nice, but I’m not in love with her if that’s what you mean.”

“Do you love Agatha?”

“Well, she… is my best friend.” Monty blushed. “Why are you asking?”

“If you’re nice to too many girls, they won’t know which one you like.”

“Heh heh, you make a valid point. But what does it matter, I’m nice to everyone. Kids at least. And just look at where that’s got us.” He opened his arms and gestured at the Earth. “If you looked at the planet when those demons were running around, you would’ve just seen a dark world that lost all its joy long ago. But thanks to us, our planet’s so peaceful that aliens would wanna land here. Hopefully not to conquer it, but actually live on it. And if the Kids Next Door keeps up the work, we can make life better for everyone. You and your sister oughta think about joining. I can find you both a nice pair of shoes. I don’t see how anyone goes that long without any.”

“I don’t know if I’m right for Kids Next Door.”

“I guess you’re younger than our other members. Wonder if I should make an age limit?”

“Monty… how many good things can you do?”

“As many as I want.”

“…Can I watch you do them?”

“I don’t see why not.”

Daniel came to live with Bella and Daphne at Twilight Town, but their parents insisted on him taking a bath in a small tub. Monty flew to Twilight Town at least every day to see if they wanna hang out. Like he promised, he brought green slip-on shoes for Bella and black shoes for Daphne. He also fitted the three with coats when they visited the reopened Arctic Base. New children that dreamed of being Kids Next Door operatives were flown here to hone their skills.

Daphne bared witness to an issue with one of the cadets, Revan Bane Sidious, who dressed like he was from outer space. He wouldn’t say where he was from, but he had telekinetic powers that made the other cadets feel concerned. Monty insisted that he should be allowed to join anyway, reminding the Drill Sergeant of his own firebending, and being friends with a poisonbender and two shadowbenders. Over the next month, Revan would make friends and become part of the Kids Next Door.

They received reports of various shores in the world getting attacked by a band of Candy Pirates called the Linlin Pirates, but with Numbuh Zero’s leadership, they were driven away before they could cause too much damage. It seemed as though Monty was truly making a better world. Daphne was filled with a sense of hope. His actions were making her believe there was meaning in life, and they could do anything if they put their mind to it. But… that was before that day.
On a starry night, Monty Uno stood gazing at a marvel unlike any other: a UFO that looked like a giant cake. On one side of the walkway stood Gabe – Numbuh 74.239, and the Jamaican diplomat, Jeremy – Numbuh Infinity. The person to come down the walkway was a girl in a purple and yellow jester’s shirt and hat, with black puffy pants and black shoes. To compliment her clown-like clothes, half her face was black and half was white.

“Greetings, Number Zero.” She spoke with an echoey voice. “I am Dimentia, Supreme Leader of the Galactic Kids Next Door. My associates, Gabe and Jeremy have been monitoring your actions and your leadership. I have decided that you are worthy to join us.”

“Join you? The Galactic Kids Next Door? How come I’ve never heard of you?”

“We are a secret society, an advanced organization that has existed longer than humankind can imagine. Our goal is to stop the dreaded disease known as adulthood, an epidemic that is continuously destroying the universe. We want you to aid us in our cause. But you must decide now. For certain reasons, we can’t stay for long.”

“The Galactic Kids Next Door…” This was so much to process. “Is… this for real? How many are there?”

“We have hundreds among us. One kid from each planet. It is a huge honor. Please, Monty… will you join as the first human operative?”

“Of course I’ll join! Just let me say good-bye to my friends.” He turned around.

“WHOA whoa whoa!” Dimentia warped in front. “The human race isn’t ready to know about us, yet. This planet is… a tad primitive, no offense. If your friends know, they will tell others, and panic could ensue if they’re aware of the existence of aliens. If you’re going to join us, we must leave now.”

“We took the liberty of packing your things, don’t worry.” Gabe assured. “The bright side is you don’t have any parents that’ll miss you! …No offense.”

“I have a little brother.” Monty reminded. “Besides, I’m the Supreme Leader! I can’t just leave without passing the job to someone else!”

“You entrusted the duties of leadership to Robert McKenzie in case anything were to happen to you.” Infinity said. “I’m positive he will be a great leader in your stead.”

“Number Zero, you brought an era of peace and good tidings to this world.” Dimentia said. “What if you could do the same with other worlds? Wouldn’t that be amazing?”

Monty contemplated. It sounded like the adventure of a lifetime. An opportunity he couldn’t pass up. But to just leave so suddenly without a sign of where he was going… Would the Kids Next Door survive? No, of course they would. Robert would be a capable leader, and they would follow the examples Monty set. Sure they would miss him, but they had nothing to fear. “All right. I’ll go.”

Nobody knew where Monty had gone. Not Daphne, not Agatha, not anyone. The pale-skinned Twili became upset, but it seemed as though things were still peaceful. Bella and Daniel agreed to join the Kids Next Door, and they brought Daphne up to Moonbase sometimes to show her how everyone was fairing. …Things began to fall apart.

The scientists designed a Program to aid in Vanellope’s MCP duties, but the Program became a virus and nearly crashed the system. It was thwarted, but Vanellope was never seen again. Daphne had not been around when Revan Bane Sidious flew into a rage and called alien robots to attack the Moonbase, but she heard from Bella that it was something having to do with his powers. However, one peaceful day in Twilight Town, decommissioning officers landed and forcefully dragged Bella and Daniel to Moonbase. A law had been established to ban anyone with supernatural powers, so the two were decommissioned. Neither of them remembered Monty or his deeds. And some months later, through unexplained means, no one else remembered Monty.

It was like it had all been a dream. Bella returned to being her usual peppy self, and though she didn’t remember Daniel, their friendship developed all over again. Daphne had not been outside Twilight Town ever since. She wondered if the world was still the same, or if all of Monty’s deeds have been erased. All his valiant efforts were for nothing. A waste.

Daphne returned to the rose garden to pick petals. She found the pink one that had blossomed before. It could have been a different one while the first one wilted, but given how odd this garden was, perhaps it didn’t. Daphne picked the pink rose and started to work on it. “It’s a nice place you live.”

Daphne looked right. A tall brown-haired boy was leaned against a tree. He had a white T-shirt and brown cargo pants. “Name’s Reggie.” He picked up a blue rose. “I just came by to visit. I’m in the Kids Next Door, too.”

“You are?”

“Well, I won’t be for long.” He began to pick petals. “I’m turning 13 soon. Thinking of wiping my data from the Code Module and going AWOL. I saw what happened with your sister and her friend. That really stunk.”

“I never thought there was a point to anything.” Daphne said sadly. “Monty showed me that there was. I was happy. …But it didn’t last.” She finished picking the pink rose.

“He was a good kid, though.”

“Do you remember him?”

“I do. And I know why everyone else forgot him, too. That’s why I came to find you.”

“Why?”

Reggie approached her with half a blue rose. “My dad is a leader of a group, too. They’re trying to change the world. They know a lot of things. They know why bad things happen in the world. The reason demons attack us, the reason Monty’s gone, it’s all because of one thing. …They want to end it. And they want you to join them.”

“But why?”

“They didn’t say. But they know what you’ve been through and they know, deep down, you want to do what Monty tried to do. If you joined them… you could actually do it. Also… you can see a gray rose.”

“A gray rose?” Daphne’s eyes lit up.

Reggie picked the last of the petals and let them drift in the wind, across the garden of roses. “Shadows feel what their masters feel, right? Then these roses represent feelings of shadowbenders. When you see black roses, it means somewhere, someone is going to die. When they die, a gray rose appears… It represents their memory.” He pulled a gray rose from his pocket.
Daphne gasped at the wonder. She looked down, seeing Shaydes reach up and take the rose. Her silent shadow sniffed it. “Will you take me to see the gray roses?”

Reggie reached his hand and smiled warmly. “Of course.”

And from that day, Daphne would continue to pick black roses and decapitate them. Because then, she could watch as a gray rose blooms in her garden.

Trivia: Mocha got a gray rose in the Guertena Gallery. XD While writing this, I noticed Daphne looks too much like Aisling, except the eyes. :P Anyway, we kind of already knew Jennifer and Daphne’s pasts, but from here on, we’re entering some new territory. Next chapter will examine Felius Umbridge.

Chapter 3 of Before They Were Kings, featuring Felius Umbridge's backstory and her past job as a police officer.

This chapter is the result of me working four days straight at Kroger with little free time. So, sorry if it’s short-handed. :P Today’s chapter features Felius Umbridge, our favorite naggy hag in the World Leaders. This is 60 years before Nextgen, 1972 to be precise.

Chapter 3: Open Mind

London

“Breaking news today! A man posing as some type of magician has robbed everything from a local pawn shop! Authorities have been called to detain the criminal, but it appears they have been... transformed into toads.”

The police cars were abandoned on the street with their lights still blinking, and toads hopped about mindlessly. “Pah! You pitiful Muggles and your powerless beating sticks.” The culprit was a man in black clothing and a long black mustache, wearing a top-hat. A sack was hunched over his shoulder and he wielded a parlor magic wand. “You are no match for... The Trickster!” He flapped his cape.

“What are YOU? Some pitiful excuse for a comic villain?” a girl’s voice shouted.

“Who dares to mock me?!” He turned around, keeping his cape over his mouth as his eyes glared at the speaker.

“I did! Officer Felius Umbridge! –Felius Umbridge announces herself firmly.” She was a 20-year-old woman with blonde hair in a ponytail, wearing an officer’s uniform and was slightly chubby. “And I am placing you under arrest, she asserts!”

“What, are you reading from a script? Get out of my way, Child! Or I’ll toadify you as well.”

Felius winced at the made-up word. “Don’t call me a child, you... inane hapless schlemiel!”

A soundwave erupted from her lungs and blew The Trickster backward. “What the devil?!” He jumped back up.

“It’s called wordbending. Or is your feeble pea brain too clouded with magic dust, you sheep con artist?”

Trickster’s wand was blown out of his hand. “You loudmouthed, fat... bitch!”

“Ouch, how dreadfully painful, Felius Umbridge retorts with sarcasm. In actuality, she is REPULSED!” Felius spat another soundwave that knocked Trickster down, dropping his sack.

The next minute, a self-pulled carriage flew down, and Aurors hopped off to bind the thief in chains. “It’s Azkaban for you, Norbert Crocksman. One of you take this sack back to the pawn shop, don’t forget to wipe the shopkeeper’s memories.”

The Aurors changed the toads back into humans and cast Obliviate to wipe the Muggles’ memories. “Many thanks for your aid in Norbert’s capture, Officer Umbridge.” The lead Auror said to her. “I trust that we can count on your continued silence?”

“Given how much your kind wreaks havoc in our world, there is hardly much silence to keep, Felius emphasizes logically.”

“Yes, well…” The Auror couldn’t argue with that. “Enjoy the rest of your evening.” The others returned to the carriage and flew off to the cloudy sky.

When Felius’s shift was over, she returned to her home at 10 Grimmauld Place, an average row house. When Felius entered, she hung up her uniform and saw her father, Orford in the dining room, sitting with her seven-year-old sister, Dolores, who had mousy brown hair. “Someone spilled Abyss Mud in the second floor corridor, nearly impossible to clean up since it sucks in almost everything.” Orford was telling a story. “The secret is to use a mop that is larger than the puddle, so I cast Engorgio on a mop. However, I didn’t realize that Billius…”

His words faded as Felius went upstairs and found her mother knitting a purple sweater in hers and Orford’s bedroom. Ellen Umbridge (née Cracknell) was an orange-haired woman in a green dress. She looked up and smiled at her eldest daughter. “Welcome home, darling! I’m making you a sweater. It’s getting a wee bit chilly out.”

“That’s the third sweater this week, Mum. And they’re always a few inches too… big. –Felius says with embarrassment.”

“Well, I can’t help that you’re always losing weight! But I guess being the youngest officer in the department will give ya exercise.”

“Well, be thankful we’re exempt from the rule.” Ellen replied. “You might be considered a Muggle, but at least you have the power to fight them.”

“I consider my wordbending a gift rather than a superhuman ability. And as soon as I make enough money, you and I are leaving those two and finding a new abode to call home.”

“Oh, Felius, you’re a grown woman. You ought to find a place of your own.”

“And leave you here with Father? Mum, he detests the two of us. You know the only reason he chose to marry you was because no witch would have him. He waited years to discover if I had magic, and all I could develop was a strong vocabulary. But no, the only words he wants to hear is whatever poppycock makes magic transpire. –Felius speaks with irritation at the irony.”

“I don’t enjoy it either, darling, but until now, he was the only one paying our bills. Magical Maintenance at the Ministry isn’t an extravagant job, but the wage is decent. Besides, I’m already pregnant with another child. If this one happens to be magic, he’ll want to keep it. I really don’t want you to feel burdened by us, Felius.”

“Mum, I became an officer because I wanted to subdue villains and thwart evil. And there’s no greater cause of evil than power. That’s why I need to stay here and make sure my father’s power does not consume him, and especially not Dolores. —Felius is confident in her decision.”

“If you’re really sure of yourself, I suppose I can’t argue. Anyhoo, I bought you a little present!” Ellen led Felius to her room.

The officer gasped with delight at the present on her bed. “DONUUUTS!” A small pink treasure chest with various donuts sat open, and Felius was quick to begin consuming them. “Felius enjoys donuts very much! :heart: Donuts are delightful!”

“You enjoy yourself, Darling!” Ellen chuckled.

(“So that’s how she got fat.” Pit commented.)

(“That’s not polite to say, Pit.” Palutena scolded.)

The next morning…

“Dolores, give back my baton!” Felius chased her sister around the house in her uniform. “Felius grows impatient!”

“Look at me, I’m a Muggle Auror!” Dolores swung the club around. “This is my magicless wand! Expelliarmus? Not today!”

“Premature primate!” Felius shot a string of words that tripped Dolores, allowing her to seize the club.

“I’m telling Dad you worded me!” Dolores yelled after getting up.

“My words alone prove more efficient than any matter your Aurors can accomplish. Perhaps they will be a good fit for you.”

“For your information, I don’t want to be an Auror. I’m working at the Ministry. And I’m getting a better job than Dad’s.”

“Then you better hit the books and develop your vocabulary. Meanwhile, I’ll be protecting the streets from rogues. —Felius Umbridge will return in the afternoon.” The officer marched out.

“At least I don’t say my name all the time like an eggo… an eager…”

“Egotist!” Felius finished. Dolores grumbled.

It was seven in the morning, but the cloudy sky made it still seem like nighttime. Felius got in her car and made the drive downtown to the police station. She was still stuffed with last night’s donuts, so she didn’t need breakfast. Still, with all that sugar in her body, it was a surprise she passed out on her bed afterward. Dolores often complained about her loud snoring, which their father would like to fix with a Silencio spell, if it weren’t for the Ministry’s magic sensors.

When Felius was driving down a backstreet (she prefers the peace and quiet), she stopped to notice a figure in a black coat sneak into an alley. She quickly accused him of being a wizard and parked her car to follow him. She crouched to hide behind a garbage can as the man knocked on a door. It opened, but the man inside didn’t come out. “Mr. Vargas, I was informed by my spy about the capture of a criminal who attempted to rob a pawn shop. That couldn’t have been your doing, could it?”

“I promised The Trickster money if he burgled the shop.” Mr. Vargas said with an Italian accent.
“A Muggle like yourself couldn’t have much to offer a wizard, even a petty thief like Norbert. You weren’t, perhaps, offering my money?”

“Mr. Malfoy, you have millions! All you wanted in the pawn shop was the Vanishing Cabinet, correct? Why do you care who I ask to help steal it?”

“Because I asked for your help. The Dark Lord is searching for every known Vanishing Cabinet in the country because he is certain his opposers are using them for secret hideaways. He suspects that traitorous wizards have the gall to hide Muggles in those cabinets. They wouldn’t expect an ordinary Muggle to betray them. Mr. Vargas, if you really want to borrow my Floo Network so you can return to your simple little home in Italy, you had better get ahold of that Vanishing Cabinet. One way or another.”

“I understand… I will try to have it tonight.”

“See that you do.” The door closed. Mr. Vargas sighed and turned to head back.

“FREEZE, illicit!” Felius jumped out.

“EAAAH!” The man fell on his back. His hood came off, revealing his messy black hair and mustache, and a developing beard.

“So, you’re the one who put Trickster up to it, are you? Felius Umbridge has it all on tape!” She held up a tape-recorder. “You are under arrest!” She pulled him off the ground and began to handcuff him.

“You do not understand! I came from Italy on a business trip one week ago, but my plane was attacked by flying men in masks! They took me prisoner, and that man, Abraxas told me that if I wanted to return home, I had to steal something from the pawn shop! Please, I’m not a criminal, I just want to see my family again!”

“Tell it to the chief, Felius states while aggressively pushing you to her car!”

“Why do you say it like that? Are you still recording?”

London Police Department

Mr. Vargas was locked in his own cell while Chief Boggum replayed the interaction between him and Malfoy on the tape-recorder. The chief was a chubby man with a long head and gray uniform. “Hrrrm… Well, if this man took part in a crime, we have the evidence to convict him. Still, it would appear the Aurors have another case on their hands.”

“Sir, do you realize what this means? The wizards are involving our people with their ploys! I think we should attempt to alert the media. –Felius Umbridge highly recommends it.”

“Slow down, Officer Umbridge. You and I might be important enough to keep our memories, but we’re sworn to keep the Magic World a secret. It’s difficult enough to keep the other officers from knowing with all these robberies.”

“How do they expect us to keep their world secret when THEY don’t seem concerned about being publicized?! Aside from robberies, there have been reports of murders under mysterious circumstances, bodies that have no external or internal injuries! The WIZARDS are responsible and the public needs to know!”

“HMPP!” Boggum slapped Felius’s mouth shut, glancing at the other cells and the guards. “Felius, if you keep up with these delusions, we’ll have to take you to an institution!” He then spoke more quietly, “We cannot risk the city falling into a panic with the knowledge of wizards or witches. People have a hard time as it is accepting element benders like yourself. Now, tonight, when everyone else has gone, I will summon Aurors to wipe Mr. Vargas’s memories of these experiences and have him safely delivered home to Italy. With magic, there’s probably no need for flight expenses, hur hrm. I will just take this recorder with me. Now, do return to your patrol.” The chief walked away.

Felius sighed with aggravation. She spared one look to Vargas before leaving. She complied with the chief’s request and patrolled town, catching two big-nosed men that were illegally trafficking Dalmatians. All Felius really wanted was an excuse to return to the office. After she had the men imprisoned, she persuaded the guards to bring Vargas to an interrogation room. As luck would have it, Chief Boggum was on a break and was absent from the office.

Mr. Vargas was sat at a table in a small room, opposite from Felius. “Alright, Mr. Vargas, let’s get straight to the point. Tell Felius Umbridge about this Vanishing Cabinet and this Malfoy person.”

“Do you plan to help, Officer Felius?”

“While I don’t approve of your criminal activity, it’s clear you were being threatened by a wizard. And I am not particularly fond of wizards.”

“All I can assume is Malfoy is working for someone else, and they suspect their enemies are hiding in these Vanishing Cabinets. I really don’t know why he chose me instead of someone else, but I can’t say ‘no’, I don’t want to die here. My wife and child must have heard about the plane’s crash, I have to let them know I’m okay.”

“You have a child?”

“A son. His name’s Mathias. Three years old. We also have a cat. Do you like cats, Felius? I just assume, by your name…”

At this, Felius imagined her name above her head, an “=” sign next to it, ending at a cat that patted her on the head. “Meow meow!”

“No I don’t!” She shook her head. “My sister does, however.”

“Anyway, Mr. Malfoy promised to let me use a Floo Network if I brought him the cabinet. He said that it’s a magic fireplace.”

“Yes, I know. My father is a wizard, and he works at the Ministry of Magic.”

Mr. Vargas processed this for a moment. “So… it is true. There really are wizards and magic.”

“Unfortunately, yes. Mr. Vargas, what did this Vanishing Cabinet look like?”

“It’s large enough to fit a person inside. It’s black and kind of triangular. When I checked last time, it was in the back of the shop. Much too large for me to attempt to steal, that’s why I had to hire a criminal who claimed to be a wizard.”

Felius thought to herself for a moment before standing up. “I think I’m going to pay the shop a visit.”

Pawn Shop
“So, you’re the nice young officer that saved my shop.” The owner of the shop was a slim man with brown hair and a jacket with a green and yellow square pattern. “My mind was so hazy that day that I can barely remember a thing. Well, you have my sincere thanks.”

“Felius Umbridge is pleased.” She smiled. “However, when we interrogated the culprit, it seems his primary target was a large cabinet you have in the back.”

“That dusty old thing? Yeah, I found that cabinet a while ago. Moved it in back because it took too much room out here.”

“Do you mind if I see it?”

“Of course.” The man led Felius to a back room that had a large black cabinet, whose doors were diagonally intersecting like a triangle. “I’ve heard of master shadow thieves that could clean a jewel shop, but I don’t see how anyone can pick up a cabinet that big and just sprint down the street.”

Felius approached and nervously knocked the cabinet with her knuckle. She decided to open the cabinet and find nothing but dust on its empty shelves. “It does look big enough to climb in…” Felius climbed onto the middle shelf.

“Hey, if you break any merchandise, you buy, Officer! Do you have 50 pounds?”

“I hope that refers to the currency. I will just be a minute.” Felius closed the cabinet from inside. She sat uncomfortably for a minute, half-expecting some sort of magic to happen. If this was just a normal cabinet, Felius would look like a fool climbing into a cabinet like a child. There was hardly any room for more than one person to fit, unless the wizards shrink their selves. “Sigh, what am I doing?” Felius opened the cabinet and climbed out—

She was inside a filthier room with junk lain about. The dim gray light of the cloudy sky shone in from the glass roof. Felius peeked out the window of the locked door. There were two guards outside that looked like giant vulture-crows. A shadow fell over Felius from the window roof. She looked up, horrified at the sight of a hooded black phantom. Her gaze was fixed on it as she stepped sideways—tripping on a silver cup and falling into other junk.

“CAW, CAW!” The guards heard this and were trying to open the door. Felius scrambled to climb back in the Vanishing Cabinet and shut it.

Felius heard them moving around outside, but slowly that sound began to fade. She kept still and silent, heart racing. “Officer, how long you gonna be in there?”

Felius creaked the door open. She was staring at the pawn shop owner, having returned to the store. “Did this cabinet… go anywhere?”

“Unless you mean Imagination Land, this cabinet didn’t leave my eyes, Miss.”

“Sir, I think I would like to buy this.”

Malfoy Manor

“Abrahas, why do you waste time entrusting a simple job to a Muggle?” A pale man in a dark robe asked with a hissing voice. “A defenseless shop with a defenseless cabinet… we do not need to go to such lengths to expose its inhabitants.”

“This is not only a matter of securing prisoners, My Lord.” Abraxas replied. “This is an opportunity to expand our rule. The Italian Ministry of Magic has sealed its Floo Network from international networks, and Aurors watch the skies constantly. The only areas left defenseless are the hearths of simple abodes. We will allow Mr. Vargas to use our Floo Network to return to his home. We will memorize the destination and send Death Eaters to infiltrate Italy from his house.”

“Hmm… Perhaps this is an opportunity to show another country our power.” The Dark Lord rubbed his Phoenix Feather wand. “Very well… but do not spend too long on this plan.” He turned to head the opposite direction. “Do you see, my student?” He spoke to a boy with an arrow tattoo on his bald head. “Amassing followers is easy… Searching for good, useful followers who are devoted… therein lies the challenge. If you rise to power one day… I hope that you will choose worthy followers.”

“I will remember to, Master.” The boy bowed.

“Good… Now, let us depart.” He opened his arms for a hug.

“Do we have to hug, Master?” The boy blushed.

“I would not want the Negatar to be splinched.” So with that, they warped into thin air.

“Well then… I had best see to our Muggle’s progress.” Abraxas said before heading to the fireplace.

That night…

There was a knock at the alley door. Abraxas answered it to find Mr. Vargas in front of the Vanishing Cabinet. “Ahh, Mr. Vargas… you have succeeded.”

“Yes, Sir, I did… There are people hiding inside.” Vargas whispered. “It connects to a basement shelter somewhere. I told them my family had been attacked, and they now believe I am going to bring food.”

“So, it has a sister cabinet? Well, won’t they be upset. Perhaps you should call and say food has arrived.”

“Will you open the Floo for me first?”

“Very well, very well…” Abraxas grabbed powder from a pot and slapped in Vargas’s hand. “Go to that fireplace. Say the name of the location you want to go and throw the powder inside. Open a network, then open this cabinet.”

Mr. Vargas calmly approached the dusty fireplace. He raised the powder over it, and Abraxas anticipated him to speak. …Mr. Vargas turned and said, “The food has arrived.”

A band of Aurors burst out of the cabinet and struck Abraxas with Stun Spells. “Abraxas Malfoy, what’s the meaning of this?!” Orford Umbridge asked, climbing out as well. “Hiring a Muggle to bring you a Vanishing Cabinet… are you really in league with the Dark Lord?”

“It’s convenient that this cabinet connects to Azkaban, because you’re being taken in for questioning!” an Auror stated.

“No, you misunderstand! I was only trying to protect the cabinet from- wait, Azkaban? I thought you told me it was-” He tried to look up at Vargas, but he was already gone through the emerald fireplace. Neither of them heard what location he warped to.
“Well, Felius, I can see you weren’t lying.” Orford said as his daughter climbed out of the cabinet. “Mr. Malfoy is a highly regarded man in the Ministry, so these actions raise suspicion. We still have no proof he is working for the Dark Lord.”

“He mentions the Dark Lord on my tape-recorder! Let’s go back to the station and ask the chief for it.”

Police Department

“So, you gentlemen succeeded in detaining Mr. Malfoy, eh?” Chief Boggum recapped their explanation. “Well, Officer Umbridge, I must say I was skeptical in this plan at first, but it seems it was wise to trust you.”

“Felius Umbridge thanks you for your trust.” The woman smiled.

“So, where has Mr. Vargas gone?”

“Back to Italy, I conjecture. He used the Floo in Malfoy’s hideout.”

“Chief, my daughter says you have a tape-recorder with important evidence.” Orford said. “May we see it?” He cocked a brow.

“Yes… of course you may. Follow me.” The chief led Orford, Felius, and the four Aurors through the prison wing and toward a back room. “Abraxas is secured in Azkaban, I take it?”

“Yes, but a sentence won’t be established unless we have something to present to the Ministry.” an Auror responded. “Malfoy’s position in the Ministry still stands.”

“Well, we can only hope that matter is taken care of soon.” Boggum said as he led them into an empty room. “It’s fortunate that Mr. Vargas could return home. He should be wary on any future business travels.”

“…” Felius realized something: “I don’t remember telling you he was on a business trip.”

“Oh… didn’t you?”

“N-No…” Felius’s gaze met with Boggum’s. His demeanor was calm against her shock-ridden expression. “…Chief, why did we come back here?”

Chief Boggum grabbed his baton as it morphed into a wand. “Stupefy!” He stunned the four Aurors and Orford senseless, then used it to seal the door.

“Chief!” Felius gaped. “What in the… I can’t even think of a word!”

“I suppose you were bound to find out eventually, Felius.” Boggum said. “I work for Abraxas Malfoy. He sent me to pose as the Muggle police chief in case we needed a few extra slaves. He also wanted me to watch the criminal activity of stray wizards. I’ve got their pictures, written their names, in case they would like the honor to one day serve us. And now that we have a Vanishing Cabinet that connects to Azkaban, we can schedule a plan to free our captured Death Eaters. First, I need to reconfigure these gentlemen’s memories, destroy this evidence,” He raised the tape-recorder and crushed it in his hand, “keep Abraxas from staying in prison… That leaves the matter of what to do with you.”

“And what do you plan to do, Felius questions?”
“Felius, you’re a very competent officer. You may not have magic, but your wordbending is a very useful power. I wonder if such a power could… increase the effectiveness of our spells?”

“I have no intention of aiding your insidious plans, you cumbersome grime!” She blasted a soundwave that Boggum blocked with a magic shield.

“That’s a real shame, Felius. Oh well… In time, perhaps I can mold your mind to my favor. But for now… OBLIVIATE!” His wand flashed.

8888888888

A hundred worlds were melding together into one. Among them was a maelstrom of magic energy. Felius saw a planet of gems collapsing as its energy was sapped into that world. The power kept growing and growing and growing, until the combined world exploded. Then, six beings in hoods collected the scattered pieces and repaired them to perfect order.

“Felius?”

She opened her eyes to see her mother. Felius looked around and saw she was in her room.

“Mum?”

“Your father said you fell asleep in your car, so he drove you home. He cast a spell, of course. You must’ve had one restless day. It’s morning now.”

“Morning…” Felius sat up, holding her head. “I don’t remember a thing from yesterday. Perhaps I will enquire the chee…” She drawled on that word. “The chi…”

“The… chief?”

“…I should go to work.” Felius got up and headed downstairs.

“Felius, don’t you want breakfast?” Ellen called.

“No thanks, Mum, I’ll buy donuts later!” She hastened to go outside.

“That means I get it!” Dolores exclaimed.

Police Department

“Chief!” Felius jogged inside. “Chief Boggum!”

“Officer Felius!” The chief greeted happily. “I see you’re ready for another day of busting hoodlums. Just don’t exhaust yourself like you did last night.”

“Chief… What did I do yesterday?”

“Well, these two ne’er-do-wells were driving a whole truck of captured Dalmatians all the way to the next city. It was quite the thrilling chase, I heard.”

“Chief, that’s the plot to One Hundred and One Dalmatians. –A sweatdrop rolls down Felius’s face to show her disbelief.”
“Well, perhaps we should hold Disney responsible and arrest them! Hur hrm!” Boggum joked.

“. . . One Hundred and One Dalmatians… is a movie…” Felius mumbled quietly.

“Didn’t it start as a book?” Boggum asked.

“…It was a movie… but it actually happened…”

“Er, I suppose it did. Disney certainly sets bad examples.”

“…It happened, but it was a movie. It happened, but it was a movie! It happened, but it was a movie! It happened, but…”

“F…Felius?” Boggum said with concern.

A hundred worlds merged into one. A boy with an arrow tattoo spoke to a Dark Lord with a bald head, then another Dark Lord in a hood. She saw a brain on a canister, a man leading an army of demons, a god destroying everything, and a complete cluster of scattered worlds.

“SHAM!” Felius blew a soundwave that knocked Boggum against the wall. He tried to grab his wand- “Fickle! Foul! FIENDISH!” The words came with strong velocity and struck the wizard unconscious.

“FREEZE!” Three cops got behind and raised batons. “Officer Umbridge, what is the meaning of this?!”

“Boggum is a wizard! He’s an evil wizard, trying to use you as slaves!”

“What proof do you have?”

“I…” Felius couldn’t determine how she remembered this.

“She needs no proof.”

The cops about-faced. A man that dressed like a knight stood in the doorway. “Not when she has... the truth.” He raised an 8-ball that flashed an array of colors. The cops’ eyes became dull at the sight of the colors, and their minds milky as they dropped their weapons. The man stepped through them and approached Felius.

“You’re a tad late for the Renaissance Fair, Sir… Felius Umbridge says with utter confusion.”

“The Octogan has sensed your presence. Last night… your mind has been opened. You saw the truth... the meaning behind our existence.”

“I…I don’t know what I saw…”

“Please, allow me to explain to you. Allow me to teach you. Allow me to tell you why you feel such hatred toward the wizards. Felius Umbridge… destiny has shone highly upon you. It is a destiny that you and I share. Come with me... and I will help you realize it.” He reached his hand.

“I…I can’t just go with you! I have a family to take care of!”

“I am aware of this. Rest assured, I will happily grant you all the wealth you could desire. I will return you to your home so you may provide for your loved ones as long as you see fit. Take your time to decide, however. I also... have donuts.”
Felius’s eyes watered. “Donuts?”

“Lots… and lots… of donuts.”

“. . . .” She made a great smile. “Sensational.”

World News

“Breaking news today, master thief Donovan Vargas is still at large! Eyewitness reports say he was seen boarding a flight to England. The airplane in question was destroyed by an unknown cause, but as if by magic, the criminal has turned up in France! What is his target, what are his secrets?! Stay tuned for further development!”

Dolores Umbridge is from Harry Potter, and Orford and Ellen were her actual parents according to the wiki. Abraxas Malfoy was Lucius Malfoy’s father. And I couldn’t help but design young Felius like the British nightguard from Secret of the Tomb. XD Also, if you remember Negatron from Operation: ANCESTOR, he was also a wordbender. Well, now that we’ve finished with the female Leaders, we can focus on the male World Leaders. Starting with Henry Churchill! See you next time!
Chapter Summary

Today’s chapter stars Henry Churchill! This takes place 30 years before Nextgen (it’s 2002, yaaaay)!

Chapter 4: Loyalty

Kingston Crossing

Kingston was a peaceful neighborhood – a mobile home park that was set on a hill in Devon, England. Lamp posts lined up along the street, set to activate when night fell. The park was clean, the people were nice, and children freely played outside even after dark. The horizon was seeing its last moments of twilight as a team of kids were on an adventure. Wielding sticks and pillows as swords and shields, the five kids crept around some houses. Fireflies fluttered about, and when one lit up beside a seven-year-old girl with orange hair, blue eyes, and no shoes, she gasped and backed against a fat boy with brown hair.

“Stay calm!” the leader said quietly. He was a 9-year-old boy with brown hair, blue eyes, a blue button-up shirt, and blue jeans with brown boots. A tooth was missing in the front of his mouth, so little whistles blew through when he talked in his soft high voice. “Thunder Dragons react to fear. Keep your wits about you and keep your eyes peeled. We’re close to the place I found the Thousand-Legs.”

Henry was a friend of the neighborhood kids even though he didn’t live in the park. In fact, they all knew Henry was a rich noble from the mansion beyond the hill. When he first came to visit them five months ago, they thought his only intention was to mock them or find some new servants. Instead, he asked them to go on a make-believe adventure to the moon and mine for Moon’s Tears to feed to the thirsty Moonflower buds, which bloomed and lit the night blue. It was all imaginary, sure, but they could picture it perfectly. So since then, they loved going on fun adventures with Henry.

“The Thousand-Legs journeys down from the mountain every night and tramples across the village.” Henry explained as they climbed the makeshift rock wall of the park’s playground. “It wakes up on the final minute of twilight. This is our chance!” They crossed the playground’s bridge. “David, don’t step there.” The fat boy gasped and stopped before stepping on an imaginary cracked board, causing the other three explorers to collide with his overweight backside.

“This is why we need to go first on these things.” A black-haired boy named Rodney commented.

“It’s here! The Thousand-Legs is on that pillar!” Henry pointed at a pole holding up a small roof. There was a tiny centipede.

“That’s all we came up here for?” Rodney asked. “I can crush it with my finger.”
“Don’t get cocky!” Henry raised his stick-sword. “It’s as big as a train and shakes the earth as it scampers! Split up so we can confuse it!”

“Oh, right!” They reignited their imaginations and divided around the cavern. The seven-year-old girl, Elizabeth, made a high leap onto the beast’s face and rapidly kicked her bare feet against its eyes, blinding it. David became round and rolled through a row of legs, making it fall on its side. A blonde, ponytail girl, Evelyn, performed a spin attack with her sword and sliced part of the beast’s belly.

“Boop!” Evelyn flicked the centipede off the pole as it fell on its back. “Crush it, Henry!”

Henry stood on the monster’s head with his sword pointed down. “You shall meet your maker, foul beast!” He would lower the stick and squish the squirming bug.

“Noooo!” A pair of little hands grabbed the centipede and took it away.

“AAAAHH!” Henry jumped and hid behind Rodney, fear clear on his features. As adventurous as Henry was, he had only one great fear. It wasn’t demons, it wasn’t witches, it wasn’t aliens… “It’s her… the Hairstress!”

Henry’s greatest fear was people with strange colored hair. And Crystal Wickens stood out among the neighbor kids with purple hair, and gold eyes that seemed to glow in the night. She was four years old and wore an indigo dress with brown sandals. “I don’t like that name!” she shouted. “Am I some kinda witch??”

“No normal people have normal hair.” Henry was shuddering, much to Rodney’s disbelief. “My parents taught me people only have these hair colors: brown, black, blonde, orange, and grey or white if you’re an old person. No purple, no blue, no green, no pink, but I see people with them! You’re not normal!” Henry had no tragic history regarding a person with colored hair, but he once had a nightmare that a witch with blue hair boiled him alive. He asked his mother, who would comfort him by saying no person has blue hair. (She proceeded to list other colors as well.)

“My brother and my dad have purple hair!” Crystal argued. “Dad said my grandpa had it! What’s so bad about it?”

“The Hairstress is protecting the Thousand-Legs!” David pointed his stick. “She must be its master!”

“I am not! I saw you picking on it like a bunch of meanies. This bug didn’t do anything to you.”

“Attack the Hairstress!” Elizabeth declared. The kids ran for attack, so Crystal turned and slipped down the slide before running across the park. Her small legs didn’t go far, so she threw the centipede off, unnoticed by the kids when they piled on her. Henry watched the assault from the playground, his fear subsided. He had turned the kids against Crystal when he first encountered her, convincing them she was a witch who fried kids in her cauldron. Neither of them knew Crystal personally, so they ganged up on her for the sake of playing along.

A laser shot the ground a few feet away. “Back off, you jerks!” They looked up, seeing an 8-year-old boy who shared the same purple hair and yellow eyes as his sister. Travis Wickens wore black clothes and a purple scarf, and held a S.C.A.M.P.P.. “Or our hair won’t be the only purple things in this park!”

The four kids got off Crystal, who happily got up and ran to her brother. “I told you not to go out by yourself at night.” Travis stated. “What were you even doing?”
“Looking for bugs to cook in a potion!” Crystal replied as the two walked home.

“I keep telling you, nothing you make is gonna turn me into a frog.”

“Bloody Travis has real weapons!” Rodney complained, throwing his stick on the ground. “Henry, you’re rich, why don’t YOU get us something like that?”

“I’m not even allowed to watch TV.” Henry replied. “Do you really think my parents would let me buy weapons?”

“They wouldn’t let you join KND, either.” David said. “But hey, what if we all signed up? Then we can go on REAL adventures!”

“I bet Henry can get us in!” Elizabeth cheered. “He’s rich!”

“Yeah, man, help us get in!” Evelyn exclaimed.

“Whoa, whoa, whoa!” Henry gestured a ‘slow down.’ “This coming from a rich kid, that’s a little unfair, isn’t it? Do you guys really want to go through the stuff they do? Training in a frigid arctic tundra, flying ships that seem like they came from a dump, fighting dangerous adult criminals who possibly have years more experience than we could? I don’t think David could endure a day of that.”

The chubby boy looked downtrodden. “But we have make-believe to give us exercise.” Henry swung his stick. “There are millions of kids who aren’t operatives and still enjoy their lives. The Kids Next Door protect us so we can play these games. Why get involved with their dangers when we have this quaint little neighborhood?”

“I guess you’re right.” Rodney figured. “Still, this comes from the guy who lives it up in a mansion. Why don’t you invite us to your place sometime?”

“Yeah, there’s probably tons of adventure we can have in there!” Evelyn agreed.

“I’ve been trying to convince my parents.” Henry blushed. “As a matter of fact, I should return home. They’ll worry for me.”

“Well, we’ll see you later, then!” Eliza waved as Henry walked away. “Let’s climb the swings like a tower next time!”

Outside the mobile home park was a gold car with clean white seats. Henry climbed in the back as his driver made the drive up the road around the park. “You’ve grown quite fond of these commoners, boy.” The driver was a brown-haired man with a blue graduate’s robe and hat. He was very skinny.

“I don’t see what’s so ‘common’ about them. They’re kids like I am.”

“Yes, but you are a noble. You must have studied the histories of noble families. They only desired slaves. The Pewterschmidts enslaved Africans, the Schnees enslaved Mobians, the Don Quixotes enslaved Minish… but you do the Churchill Family proud, son. Not a one in your bloodline has ever owned a slave. They have hired servants, but that’s besides the point.”

“Of course.” Henry smiled and bowed. “Because true loyalty is won through kindness and friendship. So if I keep being their friend, they’ll do anything I say.”

“Indeed. Still, with an imagination like yours, I’m surprised you weren’t born a psychibender. It’s good for kids like you to be so enticed in books. Television has such ill-mannered material.”

“Oh, books aren’t saints either, Teacher. I remember this one where the cover featured the protagonist making… an unpleasant gesture with his finger.”

“Oh, my! I’ll have to remove that from your library.”

“Yes, please. It’s not the gesture that makes me cringe, but the character had green hair.”

After they returned to Churchill Mansion, Henry went up to his room. There was a small bookshelf with books he took from his house’s library, either planning to read later or they were his favorites. Henry skimmed the titles, wondering which one to read. …Henry smiled and waved his hands. The books flew off the shelf and rotated in the air above him. Henry was a rare type of bender – a paperbender. It was a sub-form of plantbending and involved the control of dead matter. His tutor was also a paperbender, so he bonded the most with him.

Henry eventually fell asleep while trying to choose. The next morning, Henry had breakfast and got ready for school. He didn’t go to an official school, but he had five teachers to teach him all he needed to know.

One of them called himself Super Principal, a short man with orange hair, a blue suit, and a red cape. He made class entertaining by flying with some metahuman power and solving equations at the speed of sound. Then there was Heli-Teacher, an old woman who flew on a wooden chair with a built-in propeller and taught him English and history. His PE teacher was Mad Dad, who sparred with Henry using boxing gloves as he taught the boy combat. Then there was Midwestern Mom, his nanny, and also his cooking teacher… he guessed. Well, she liked to bake pecan pies, but she was… loud.

But as mentioned previously, his favorite was Samuel Wilson, who called himself the Terrific Tutor. He taught Henry history and helped him with any subject he had trouble with. He also taught Henry the different forms of element bending. Not many got to learn such a subject, since most benders were encouraged to keep their powers secret. Together, they were the Parent Teacher Organization of Educating Youngsters. Whenever they weren’t available, a group of substitute teachers called the Faculty 4 came to teach him. They were a group of metahumans who… He was less fond of them.

At 5:00pm, Terrific Tutor drove Henry down to Kingston Crossing, where he regrouped with his friends. “There’s a lot of fluffy clouds in the sky today. I say we make an adventure to the heavenly land of Skypia!”

“Time to see if the angel people are only legends!” Elizabeth cheers.

“Are you just going to talk to birds?” a girl retorted. The kids turned to find Crystal Wickens, glaring sharply with hands on her hips.

“Eeeek!” Henry hid behind Rodney. “The Hairstress is back to exact revenge!”

“Look, I’m going to leave. But first I wanna show you something.” She stepped aside to show a video projector.

“Blimey, we just got out of school!” Rodney complained.
“Just look!” Crystal pushed a button, and the device projected a hologram of a large knight. “Oooooo…!” The four minus Henry gazed in awe.

Crystal got a stick and stood in front of the knight. She dodged swings from its lance and swung her stick through it. “My brother fights loads of bad guys in the Kids Next Door! And he puts them all in this box and practices fighting them!” She jumped high and stuck her stick through the knight’s helmet hole. The hologram faded. Crystal held the stick over her shoulder and turned to them proudly, “It’s way better than squishing bugs.”

“Oh, silly little Hairstress and her magic box.” Henry remarked. “Her own portable television set. It’s stuff like that which ruins imagination, and imagination is great mental exercise. Friends, don’t waste your attention with this.”

“It is not!” Crystal yelled. “My brother taught me how this works, and I can make anything!” Crystal opened the back of the projector and crawled in, fiddling with it. “Like… a dragon!” A large purple dragon was projected. “And it fights like it’s here!” She got in front and dodged the dragon’s fangs, slashing her stick. “So you can make whatever you want and fight it!”

She’s five years younger than me! Henry thought. How could she understand a shred of engineering or... even fight like that?

“Can we fight the monsters from our videogames?!” David asked excitedly.

“Uh-huh!” Crystal beamed.

“I think you guys are missing the point here!” Henry shouted. “As I’ve been telling you, what strengthens our minds greater than knowledge is imagination. The more you stand here, fighting these simulations, you are discouraged to imagine for yourself. And besides, can this device simulate a moon forest, a candy mountain, or a potion that grants you wings so you can fly to Skypia?!”

“Um… no…” Crystal frowned. Her smile returned as she said, “But my brother told me a story of a mountain made of ice cream! It’s a Kids Next Door legend! And one time, he chased some bad guys in a soda temple!”

“Are you making this up, too?” Eliza asked.

“No, it’s for real! He records his missions and brings them back to show me! I still have them, want to look at them?”

The four kids exchanged thoughtful glances. “Yeh, we might as well see what’s so great about Kids Next Door.” Rodney shrugged.

“Yeah, like watching a show nobody else saw!” Evelyn said excitedly.

“Sweet!” Crystal jumped. “Oh, can one of you carry that for me?” She pointed at the projector. “It’s kind of heavy. MUUUUM, I’m bringing friends over.” She ran ahead.

“What?! Where are you guys going, what about Skypia?!” Henry yelled.

“Oh, we can do that later, Henry.” Eliza said. “Come on, let’s go visit Hairstress’s house!”

“But what if it’s a trap?!?”

“We’ll just make David crush her if it is. But if you don’t wanna come, we’ll see you later!”
Henry could only watch in defeat as they all piled into Crystal’s house (with David getting stuck in the doorway briefly).

Churchill Estate; living room

“The violet-haired sorceress stole my team!” Henry complained, pacing back-and-forth while Samuel sat on a chair and sipped tea. “Brainwashed them with that magic box! What if they decide to join Kids Next Door, imagination will be out the window! It’s maddening, I tell you.”

“With all due respect, Master, why do you not join the Kids Next Door?” Samuel asked. “Certainly, you could attain a high position of power. The Prince of the World Government works for Kids Next Door, so if we had more nobles in their ranks, we could make sure they work to our satisfaction.”

“I have no intention of being under their services. And if those guys could experience the dangers the Kids Next Door go through, they’ll ask for the sweet embrace of Imagination Land once again. Ahh! An idea strikes!” Henry beamed. “Teacher, perhaps you and your colleagues can stage a scenario. Pose as typical supervillains performing an uncoordinated attack and see how they fair.”

“Are we in some sort of comic now? We’re teachers, not clichés.”

“Oh, just do it for a few minutes, at least scare the wits out of that Hairstress! Since her brother isn’t around, we have a green light.”

“Oh, if it’s what you wish, Sir.”

“But before we proceed with this plan, perhaps we could hold a quick paperbending tutorial…”

Kingston

“Eliza, now’s our chance, let’s get her!” Evelyn declared.

“Yah!”

“I heard that!” Crystal whipped around and waved her staff. “Try to get over this lava pit!”

“Aaaah!” Elizabeth jumped back from the imaginary lava.

“Guys, I’m still in a glue trap.” David said, standing in one place.

“Too bad! I’m turning you into a centipede!” Crystal shot a spell.

“My belly’s so bouncy, it comes back!” David retorted.

“Ahhhh!” Crystal fell on her front. “I’m a buuuuuug!”

“I’m gonna squish you!” Rodney raised his foot above her. “AHH!” He was swat away by an unusually strong purse, flying against a bush in front of Crystal’s house. Crystal and co. looked over in confusion.

“You kids should be doing your HOMEWORK!! Midwestern Mom is gonna WRECK YOU!” exclaimed a fat woman wearing a blue dress that had a large “M”.

“Midwestern Mom?” Evelyn cocked a brow. “What the devil is this?”

“I’ll tell you what this is!” Super Principal flew in the sky. “We’re the Parent Teacher Organization of Eradicating Youngsters! And cursing is forbidden in my classroom, young lady!”

“Prepare for an education you’ve never experienced, young’uns.” Heli-Teacher had harmless laser cannons attached to her chair. (“I knew getting that master’s in engineering wasn’t a waste.”)

“They’re just crazy Americans.” Rodney commented.

“CRAZY?!?” They were charged at by a man in boxer shorts, a hunched back, and boxing gloves. “Mad Dad is VERY ANGRY!”

David ran against the mad father and bounced him back with stronger momentum. “Wow, that was pretty awesome!”

“Get your heads in the game, you fools!” The Terrible Tutor flew by standing on books. “Attack them!” He sent a swarm of spinning papers, Crystal ducking to avoid getting cut.

“Well, Liz, wanna see how high you can jump?” Evelyn asked.

“You bet!” Eliza ran around Heli-Teacher and swiftly dodged her lasers. Evelyn got under the teacher and positioned her hands, so when Eliza ran at her, she bounced the younger girl up to the old woman. Eliza made Heli-Teacher drive out of control and hit the ground.

Evelyn had to quickly jump and duck Midwestern Mom’s purse, before grabbing a knife from her pocket and cutting the purse’s strings when it swooped by. “Why in tarnation do you carry that thing in your pocket?!”

“Self-defense, duh.” Evelyn remarked before opening the purse to find a hammer. “Why do YOU carry THIS in your purse?”

“I like other things besides cookin’.”

Midwestern Mom was tackled by David. “Oi, this hag makes me feel skinny!”

“Come down here and fight, Stupid Headmaster!” Rodney taunted.

“I bet you can’t do anything besides fly.”

“Incorrect! I have knuckles of steel.”

“Then come down and punch me.”

“You don’t want that!”

“Yes I do.”

“You’re really asking for it.”

“Quit being a puss and punch me!”

“FINE! Eeeehhhhh-!” Principal flew down with both fists ready. Rodney ducked and kicked him in the crotch. “OIII!” The man fell on his side.

“Heh. Not everything is steel.”
“These children are more clever than I anticipated.” Terrible Tutor said as he made a whirlwind of flying books.

“Maybe YOU’RE uneducated!” Crystal had grabbed and was riding one of the books before it got above Tutor’s head. She dropped and grabbed his head, breaking his control as the teacher hit the street. Evelyn and Eliza proceeded to gang up, with the latter biting his arm.

“OUCH! Stop it! Stop it!”

“Oi, how thick can you get?” Rodney said. “You don’t suppose these were KND villains, do you?”

“They look like people they’d fight.” Crystal replied. “Except really stupid.”

“Yeah, they couldn’t find any better targets besides a trailer park?” David questioned.

“That was fun, though!” Eliza cheered. “I wish Henry could’ve seen it!”

The ground trembled under rhythm of footsteps. “Um… What the heck is that?” Rodney pointed.

A dinosaur composed of books stomped across the trailer park, glaring at the kids and roaring ravenously. His teeth were sure to give the worst papercuts imaginable. “Uhhhh, anybody have any fire?” Evelyn asked.

“I know what to do!” Crystal yelled. “Keep him busy!” She ran into her house.

“How is something like this even possible?” Eliza asked.

“It’s just a bunch of books, let’s push ’em down!” David charged stalwartly at the Thesaurus Rex’s left leg, trying to shove it down, but the Thesaurus kicked its leg and shook him off.

Elizabeth grabbed onto the tail and climbed up its back, successfully reaching the head and stomping its eyes. “I call this the Thousand-Kick Attack!” However, the dinosaur seemed to be unphased as it lightly shook the child off. The Thesaurus Rex swiped its claws and sent books to hit them, then they would fly back onto its body. The dinosaur ignored their petty attacks and continued toward Crystal’s house, threatening to tear the roof off.

“CRYSTAL, GET OUT OF THERE!” Elizabeth cried.

“You know, you have bad breath!” Crystal ran out holding a hot sauce bottle attached to a trigger. She blasted a ray of fire up into the monster’s mouth, setting it aflame. “Eat the KND’s S.P.I.C.E.R.! It’s a normal hot sauce bottle with a lighter to give it extra spice comin’ out.”

“ROOOAAAR!” The Thesaurus shook its burning mouth before collapsing on its side. “NO!” Henry climbed out of it, taking off his buttoned shirt to smack it against the fire. “I wasn’t finished reading The Thunder Island!”

“Henry?!” Evelyn exclaimed. The boy gasped and turned to face them. “So that was YOU controlling that thing?”

“You tried to destroy my house!” Crystal yelled. “Are you mad that I took your friends or something?!”

“Oh, give me a break!” Henry argued. “Wouldn’t you have done the same?! I was happily enjoying playing with them until you decided to brainwash them with your magic box! Did our adventures mean nothing to you guys? How could you leave me for the Hairstress?!”
“I was only trying to make them jealous of the Kids Next Door because you kept beating me up!”

“And most of the time, we thought she was in on these games, that’s why we attack her.” Evelyn followed. “But Henry, after what we’ve just been through, don’t you think we’d be great for Kids Next Door? It’s fun to pretend to go to awesome places and fight scary monsters, but I want to do it for real! Let’s have real fun and really help people!”

“And maybe fight real dangerous villains.” Rodney smirked at Principal, still holding his aching area.

“I set all this up to show you the dangers the world has!” Henry shouted. “It might not have been much, but would you really leave our safe and comfy village to go against who-knows-what?!”

“Stop acting like a privileged prince and join KND with us!”

“Yeah, we don’t wanna join without you.” David said. “You’d be our leader. But you have to tell us how you made that dino!”

Henry looked stunned by that. “You… won’t go without me?”

“No way, Henry!” Elizabeth said cheerily. “We need someone like you to take us on all the scary missions! You’ll be the best leader ever!”

“So come on, Henry, let’s do it!” Rodney encouraged.

“…My friends…” Henry almost felt like crying. “My loyal… friends…”

“What are you all doing here?!” Travis Wickens shouted from behind. He noticed the weird-looking teachers and the dinosaur made of books. “What in blazes… Crystal, are you all right?!”

“I am, Travis!” she replied happily. “I think these guys want to join Kids Next Door.”

“Huh? You do?”

They all stared at Henry. The boy contemplated his answer for a minute. “…Yes, we do. And as proof of our skill, we’d like to turn in these supervillains!”

“SAY WHAT?!” the teachers exclaimed.

“Then I guess I’ll call a S.P.R.A.Y.S.H.I.P.” Travis figured. “We’ll take you guys to Arctic Base tomorrow. I think Andrew’s going to like you guys.”

“This is going to be the best thing ever!” Rodney jumped.

“And when I get older, I’m gonna join, too!” Crystal declared.

Henry turned to her with a smile. “Hairstress? Could I… ask for a favor?”

“Yes, Henry?”

“…Would you…” He took out a spray bottle, “allow me to dye your hair brown?”

“AAAAAAAAHH!” Crystal ran as Henry chased her around the park. “No, I like my hair!”

“It’ll look better with a natural color! If brown doesn’t work, I’ll make it blonde, or orange!”
“Spray that stuff on yourself, I don’t want it!”

The five others merely stared in disbelief, but Henry’s actions forced laughs out of them. For a rich noble, he was a fun kid and had the potential to be a good leader. They wondered if other nobles could be kind like Henry.

An unknown town…

A building was set aflame as people roared with hatred, throwing bottles at a wall. Three people were tied and blindfolded: a man with light blonde hair and mustache, a woman, and a 12-year-old son, all with same-colored hair and white robes. “DEMONS!” a citizen shouted.

“FALSE GODS!” another roared.

“DOWN WITH THE DON QUIXOTE FAMILY!”

“Please, stop!” Don Quixote Homing cried as people whipped the three of them. “Do whatever you want with me, but leave my family be! They’re innocent! Please, just punish me!”

“Like we would ever trust you!” yelled a blonde woman. “We know you still have Minish slaves! You think it’s okay because you think people don’t see them?! You think people won’t care because they’re so small?! Well, we do!”

“They’re not slaves, we give them food and homes!” Homing cried. “Honestly, I’m not a bad man! I love all people!”

“Since when do World Leaders care about anyone but their selves?!” a teenage boy shouted. “You guys act like gods, but you’re pathetic!”

“Hey, what’s all this gas?!” a woman yelled when a cloud of pink gas swallowed them, resulting in coughs.

“DOFFY!” A boy with black hair and yellow eyes ran up to the Don Quixote son, using a knife to cut him free. “Doffy, I’ll save you! Vergo found a secret tunnel!”

“Caesar… don’t…don’t save Father!”

“But why?”

“He’s a terrible man!” Doffy ripped off his blindfold when his hands were free. “We were GODS, Father, and you threw it all away!” His eyes teared behind his sunglasses. “When I grow up, I’m never gonna be like you! I hope I forget you some day!” He took Caesar’s knife and stabbed his own father in the chest. “NOW DIE!”

“Cough!” Homing hacked. “D…Doflamingo… I’m sorry you had to have… a father like me…”

Mariejoa

“What a pity… Don Quixote Homing.” The King said as he stared at the 8-ball in his hand. “So, who will be the one… to inherit your throne?” The powerful gem displayed Henry Churchill and his aspiring team at Arctic Base.

Lots of major backstory here. And there’s more to come next chapter. Next time, we’ll look at Lucas Stonebuddy’s past.
Chapter Summary

Chapter 5 of Before They Were Kings, featuring Lucas Stonebuddy's backstory and his friendship with the Earth Children.

This chapter is kind of plot heavy and previews something important. Also, time for a history lesson!

Chapter 5: Stone Buddy

3,970 years ago, Ancient Europe

Since the destruction of numerous Sacred Trees 30 years ago, demons have ravaged the world and Demon Wars took place for the umpteenth time. A Second Age of Kids Next Door rose to being and fought the demons, turning the war for the better. But these brave little children weren’t the only warriors in this era. There is a story of five children who could control the earth, and they hailed from different regions. One day, these children met and became close friends. They each possessed a different variant of their power, and working together, they became a formidable team.

When these children grew older, they became renowned warriors. Their base was a gigantic tree that grew within a mountain range. A girl of sixteen stood before the great tree, eyes closed as her hands and feet were planted firmly on the ground. She had messy brown hair that was cut short, and she wore green armor that covered her body, except her arms and legs. Large white rings with green emeralds were around her ankles.

Granite could see across the earth for miles. The demons were coming to sap the life from the tree. Granite smiled, feeling pure confidence in her friends. “Sovite, they’re coming up the mountains from the north. They’re Nejirons posing like moving rocks. Are they silly or what?” She spoke with a childish voice for a 16-year-old girl.

“Silly? They're as dense as rocks.” Sovite smirked, his metal earpiece ringing with the message. “Denser than you!” Granite grinned playfully.

“Not for long!” Sovite stomped the mountain and turned it into a volcano. Lava erupted from the top, and Sovite willed it to flow down over the Nejirons. Sovite was a muscular boy of 18 years, wearing only a gold armor skirt on his red hot body. He had spiky brown hair and a developing beard.

“I feel some coming from underground, four miles southwest of my location!” Granite reported.

“These Ergtoroks make me irk!” Quartzite surfed over the landscape on a sandwave along a sandy trail he had created. Quartzite was seventeen with black hair to his neck, wore dark-purple armor over his chest and pelvic areas, leaving the rest of himself bare except his metal wristbands and ankle bands. He stopped over the indicated area and broke the surrounding land into sand. “I’ll stir them into stew and eat them up!” He waved his arms from his solid sand platform and stirred the sand into a whirlpool. The sand squids – Ergtoroks appeared on the surface, trying to cough rocks at him. Quartzite defended as he brought the squids to the center, intent on crushing them.

“GUYS! GUYS, HEEEHELP!”

“OUCH!” Granite cupped a hand over her earpiece. “Hornfels, you’re our information relayer, we can hear you without the yelling!”

“But they ambushed me from the sky!” Hornfels was ducking as three Kargaroks were biting him. He was a 17-year-old boy with orange hair and a skinny, frail body, wearing silver armor over his chest, pelvis, wrists, and ankles. He perched atop the stone wall around the tree. “WAAAH!” He lost balance and fell over the outside, grabbing a thin stalactite branch that Granite stomped out when she sensed this. “PLEASE HELP ME!” Four Kargaroks began to peck him.

The monster birds screeched when two large stones came and crushed them. “You’re welcome.” The fifth member said. He wore an average black robe and had brown hair. He was 16 years old and wasn’t muscular or skinny.

“Heheh… Thanks, Stone.” Hornfels blushed.

“Well, I’m not sensing any more.” Granite opened her vibrant green eyes and stood. “It seems we’re all done here!”

“I didn’t even break a sweat.” Sovite sighed.

“Like it’s even possible for you to sweat.” Hornfels remarked, still hanging on the branch. “Stone, help me get down?”

“Oh, Horny.” Stone laughed, stomping a platform up for his friend to land on.

“Please don’t call me—HEEEEEY!” The platform dropped down quickly and crashed as Hornfels plopped on his front.

Now for a little backstory: Granite came from a village outside the mountains. She was a peppy girl that loved to embrace nature and take naps outside. Quartzite came from a desert across the ocean and liked to pretend he was a king, using sandbending to construct giant castles. Sovite lived on a volcano island and was addicted to hard core exercise, placing boulders on his back and doing push-ups under a hot, scorching sun. Hornfels was more brains than brawn, and as the first known metalbender in history, his main skill was building machines out of metal. He was the one who invented the small metal pieces that fit in their ears and were sensitive to soundwaves, which he could transmit to further distances using his bending on the earpieces.

Under the instruction of Regigigas, Minish were sent around the world to find these kids and bring them to the Tree of Beginning. It was at the tree they met their fifth member, Stone, who was a quiet boy that liked to carve statues. He was apparently an orphan taken in by the Earth God, Regigigas, and while he helped his fellow earthbenders in battle, he always felt kind of distanced.

The five earthbenders regrouped with Granite as they headed toward the tree. “That was fun, so much fun!” Granite skipped like a happy rabbit. “A thousand monsters and we crushed them all!”

“They need to remember who this planet belongs to, right Horny Boy?!” Sovite punched Hornfels and made him spin unstably.

“OW! All I know is I’m getting armored shoes. You guys are lucky not to step on any sharp rocks.”
“We do step on them, they just turn to dust.” Quartzite remarked with hands folded behind his head.

“But don’t worry, Horns, we still like ya.” Sovite said. “You’re our lovable dork!”

“A pleasure.” Hornfels replied in sarcasm. “Just keep me as far from the action as you can.”

When they entered the Tree of Beginning, the local Minish in the flower forest made sure to clear away from their path. The Minish were as big as ants to the gigantic humans, but they felt no fear in the presence of their guardians. The humans approached a crystal platform where the Minish King stood. He had a white beard and un budded yellow flower crown. “Granite, Quartzite, Sovite, Hornfels, and Stone… you have defended our home once more from the savage creatures. The Minish will be forever indebted to you: the Five Children of Earth.” King Gonsho said. His small voice was heard thanks to their earpieces.

“Awe, you don’t have to do anything for us.” Granite grinned, bending forward to show the king her shiny white teeth. “We’re happy to protect you cute little things!”

“I am delighted. . . Lady Granite. . .” The king felt his gaze fall upon the top of Granite’s chest area, which was unarmored.

“Granite, you know lots of male Minish like human women, right?” Hornfels said, pulling his leader back with an awkward expression. “Same with female Minish. They’re climbing Sovite right now.”

Sovite looked down in shock to see Minish climbing his legs. “Oh, he’s so waaaarrrm!”

“Please, let me live on you!”

“Ahem, anyway, moving on.” Gonsho coughed. “We hope you will continue to defend our home. The Tree of Beginning is among the most sacred of sanctuaries, home to Earth God Regigigas.”

“Speaking of Regigigas, wouldn’t he do a better job protecting this place himself?” Quartzite asked. “Why rely on us to do it?”

“I suppose we have kept you uninformed long enough. Five Children… it is time you learned this tree’s most important secret. Come with me.”

King Gonsho led them down a flight of winding stairs, Minish guards at his side. They rode fireflies to light the darkness. “How long have we been walking for, an hour?” Hornfels sighed in exhaustion. “Why didn’t you let us rest before bringing us down here?”

“I suppose if you wanted to, you could have earthbent these stairs to carry you down faster.” Gonsho replied.

“So why didn’t we?!”

“One should always enter a new location cautiously.”

Eventually, they arrived at the bottom of the stairs, entering a shrine lit by glowing green crystals. There was a huge sealed door with a symbol of a diamond, and four pedestals before it. There were footprints in front of each pedestal and a diamond-shaped hole on top of them, both colored the same of four respective colors: green, yellow, red, and gray. “God Regigigas… you are here, I see.” The king said.
On the right of the shrine was the God of Earth himself: a massive robot with six beeping colored lights, bushes on his shoulders and feet, gold rings around his wrists and base of his arms, and a gold center with smaller lights. “I have designed this door to only open by the powers of Earth, Sand, Lava, and Metal. Will the respective children take your places on the pedestal.”

Granite planted her small feet in the prints before her pedestal, Quartzite took the yellow one, Sovite the red one, and Hornfels the gray. Stone looked confused. “Why isn’t there one for me?”

“When the seal is removed, you may use your power to open the door.”

“Sounds like a job you could do, but… okay.” Stone half-interestedly walked up to the door and put his hand to it.

“Four Children, channel your chis into the pedestals.” Gonsho instructed.

The four others put both hands over the glowing holes and focused their power. The combined powers of Granite’s earth, Quartzite’s sand, Sovite’s lava, and Hornfels’ metal all met at one core. The diamond on the door glowed, and Stone exhausted a great amount of power in pushing it open.

They all entered the chamber. Dozens of colorful crystals lined the surrounding walls—Nature Crystals that each possessed a form of nature. In the very center was a spire of solid blue gem. It grew from a shining pink crystal that appeared to have a heart inside.

“This stone is none other than the Heart of the World.” Gonsho confirmed. “Every planet has its own Heart that is heavily concentrated with a certain chi that covers the whole world. Our Planet Earth is one that’s composed of ALL chis, making this a very sacred place.”

“Is that why the demons want to destroy this place?” Granite asked.

“I fear that is why… but there is another secret even they do not know. The knowledge of this secret could very well shake the universe. So, before we divulge it unto you… will you swear to secrecy?”

“Suuuure!” Granite sang. “I can keep a secret! Can you guys?”

“I guess so.” Hornfels said with a casual grin.

“Yeah, I’m game.” Sovite shrugged.

“Me too.” said Quartzite.

“…” Stone was silent for a moment. “If this is really so important, why didn’t you ask us before we actually entered this room?”

“…” Gonsho felt a tad sheepish. “That would have been a logical approach. Oh, I trust you regardless. Up this way.”

Still riding their fireflies, the king and his guards flew up a stairway that spiraled up along the walls, the teens having to duck Nature Crystals on their ascent. “Ouch!” Hornfels bumped his head on a blue one. “Ack, so cold!”

“You’re such a stick.” Sovite touched the boy’s head to warm it up with his chi.

The stairs ended at the top of the tall spire, where a large pink diamond rested in the center. Inside was a child-size creature made of stone, wearing a pink diamond on its head. Granite was first to approach the creature, utmost curiosity overcoming her. She put her hand to the diamond. “I feel a powerful energy inside this thing… but what is it?”

“The date in my memory files was approximately 4,978,400 years ago.” Regigigas spoke. “I met a spirit of a woman with pink hair. She entrusted me with an egg and said it must be protected at all costs. The creature hatched from the egg possessed Earth Chi more powerful than mine. It knew what power it possessed and sealed itself inside this Diamond Cocoon.”

“You five are aware that Mew lives in the tree.” Gonsho said. “And you know what Mew is. Perhaps you can guess what this creature is…”

Hornfels gasped. “It… Is it really?”

“Indeed. Although there were only eight created by Arceus… Regigigas received this egg after his destruction. This being speaks to our sages with telepathy. She will only awaken by the powers of Five Children of Earth.”

“So that means… us?” Granite asked.

“No. She does not want to awaken now. But perhaps your descendants will have the honor. Still, this deity is another reason we must protect the Tree of Beginning. And we must keep her secret from the outside. If too many people know there is another Firstborn in the universe, there will be unrest. Do not discuss what you’ve seen in here. Even most of my citizens do not know what lies beneath the tree.”

“We understand.” Hornfels said. The others nodded. “But I have to ask… is it really safe for Mew to live here in this case? I mean, two Firstborn in the same area…”

“Mew does not often stay. When he leaves, he disguises himself. Furthermore, this chamber will not open without the power of your Earth Chis. Now, let us leave. You may earthbend the stairs to carry you up this time.”

“Sigh, thank you!” Hornfels expressed.

Stone stared at the Diamond Cocoon, feeling the power radiating from it. The power felt… familiar somehow.

Hot spring

“I love it when the sun appears after we destroy an army of demons!” Granite stripped herself naked and enjoyed the warming, cleansing heat of the spring. They were in a part of the Tree of Beginning where sunlight shone in, and flowers surrounded them. “It’s nice to kick back and chill with the bros!”

Hornfels, Sovite, and Quartzite shared the spring with her. “I guess there aren’t many female warriors out there.” Hornfels said with a blush. In these ancient times, gender boundaries didn’t exist.

“Yeah, all those girls are missing out! So, any of you boys wanna wash me?” She smirked.

“I will!” Quartzite’s hand splashed up.

“I’m going if you guys get physical.” Hornfels said, deciding to turn around. “Why didn’t Stone wanna join us?”

“Maybe he can’t swim.” Sovite replied casually.
“The water isn’t that deep. And besides, Quartzite’s the only one that can swim.”

“Well, you could probably float.”

Stone had returned to his quarters near the top of the tree. His room was a gallery of gray stone sculptures. They resembled gods like Dialga and the Lake Trio, one was of Fairy Princess Mavis, and a smaller statue depicted an earlier Minish King. Stone’s hand was planted against a rectangular block taller than him, using Seismic Sense to see every square inch on this stone. His chi flowing through, Stone singled out a peculiar area of space within the stone. He slapped the stone and broke away the area outside, and what remained shaped like Granite, sporting her happy grin.

“Another beautiful piece of art.” Regigigas said from the entrance. “There is a high probability Granite will enjoy what you’ve created.”

“Yes, she may.” Stone replied emotionlessly.

“Your performance in battle was excellent. You deserve recreation. Will you not join your comrades?”

“I don’t feel deserving. Although I fight on the same ground as my comrades… I am not the same.”

“That is an irrelevant factor. Do you then not view these Minish the same as any human?”

“I am not certain…” Stone turned to face the robot god. “Do these Minish wear a mask like mine?” He gripped the skin under his neck and pulled it off. His head was round and bare, dark-gray, and made of stone. “Do we come from the same planet?” He used the heel of his left foot to scrape off the peach-colored paint on the right foot, exposing its true color. “Tell me again where I’m from.”

“It is understood that your origins lie in what we gods call the First Dimension. When Supreme God Arceus destroyed said dimension, he constructed me with the memory and data of the dimension. Perhaps he suspected denizens from that world will find a way here. You are a member of the Ores, a race of beings composed of stone who possessed the original Earth Chi. Your cousins were the Gems, a race of supernatural beings who possessed the original magic. I believe you sensed what I had sensed: the one under the tree possesses energy similar to the Gems. While it is true your species is unknown to this universe, you possess a heart and soul regardless. I can guarantee strong assurance your comrades will find this knowledge irrelevant and think of you as they always have.”

“Is it really so simple? I’m a foreign contaminant, as you imply. The First Dimension was a world of chaos… that is why Arceus destroyed it. The fact that I could be here, and that… creature underneath the tree. Exactly how much control do you gods have?”

“I do not recall referring to you as a ‘foreign contaminant.’ Analysis: it is a conclusion you came to on your own accord. You are accurate in your implication that there is still much we gods do not know… but perhaps it is wise to learn from mortals like yourself. Your Earth Chi is foreign to me, Stone. Although I am still analyzing… I have reached a conclusion it is not the only in this universe.”

“What do you mean?”

“I have sensed curious chis in various areas. When I journeyed to these areas… I had discovered these were Natural Chis in the form of seven cubes, and two pyramids. According to my artificial memory, they are composed of a material from the First Dimension called Permanite. I have tried, but I could not break the stones. Furthermore, they possessed writing that I could not decipher. Permanite was native to Planet Ore, and was known as the Unbreakable Stone. The Permanent Stone. The only beings that could prove otherwise were its people.”

“In other words… my chi has the capability to break the Unbreakable Stone?”

“Perhaps… but we have determined these stones will play a critical role for a prophecy in the far future. I would advise against the action. …I will return to my resting chamber. Do carry on, my son.” The god’s quaking steps faded as he left.

“So, that’s what you really look like!” a girl’s voice said. Stone gasped and looked around for the source, but saw only his statues. “Down here.” He then looked toward the feet of Granite’s statue. There was a red-eyed Minish with a pink flower cap and white leaf dress. “I hope you don’t mind, but I’m a real big fan of your work. These idols of gods and legendary figures are detailed down to the core. But I guess in reality, an artist is what he creates! Can I take a picture?” She held up a Picto Box and snapped Stone’s likeness.

“So smooth… so perfect! It’s not enough to say you were born with talent, you were born as a masterpiece. Do you mind if I interview you? Have you always been into art, do you have an inspiration, do you admire these people in some way? (Oops, you didn’t answer the first one first.)” ^^;

“I don’t quite have the energy for a discussion.”

“Yeah, I guess you just got back from a battle. But I want to spend time with you, though! Do you want to go for a walk outside? I don’t really get out much.”

“Considering all the monsters, why would you want to?”

“Well, I want to see more of the world! This tree gets really boring, even if it’s humongous. So let’s go for a walk!”

“Very well. I need to paint my feet again first.” Stone said as he put his mask back on, with Diana jumping off his head.

Outside

“Wouldn’t you rather ride on my shoulder?” Stone asked as Diana was scampering in the grass by his left. The fluffy clouds cast shadows drifting along the earth.

“Oh, you don’t need my .5 milligrams of weight. This makes good exercise!”

“How old did you say you were?”

“Twenty-and-a-half years. Now it’s my turn to ask a question, if you’re made of stone, can you physically feel anything?”
“As odd as it is, I can. I feel the grass, I feel the wind… though perhaps flesh beings have greater sensitivity than I.”

“I don’t see why you need to hide the secret from your friends. If it was shameful to say you aren’t human, then it should be shameful to be a Minish or a Nimbi. We may look different, but we all live on the same planet and we’re all connected.”

“Maybe for the rest of you, but I’m from a universe that was consumed in chaos. I feel like my existence here is a danger on its own.”

“But what bad thing ever happened because of you? Our home is safe thanks to you and your friends.”

“I really can’t determine why I feel this way. It’s just an unsettling feeling in my chest.”

“Maybe you just feel lonely because there are no other Ores that you know about. I guess when you’re one of a kind, it’s hard to feel like you’re part of the group.”

“Perhaps that is the case. But if there are no other Ores, I have no one to call family besides my comrades. The sadness I feel is a fault of my own that I must overcome.”

“I wish I could make you feel better, but I’m not sure how to help.”

“Regigigas speaks of various pieces of Permanite that exist in the universe. If there is any possible answer to my dilemma… it would be to find one of these stones. Maybe I could ask Regigigas to bring me to one.”

“You should ask your friends to come with you, too. A family is still a family. They would love to help you.”

“I couldn’t ask them to go out of their way to come. Besides, somebody needs to protect-”

“Just WHERE are you GOING?” Granite shouted as a rock wall sprouted up in Stone’s way. He turned to find his four friends several feet behind him.

“You’ve been following me?”

“I felt you walking away from the tree. Why didn’t you invite us, Stone, we were up for a walk!”

“She just bolted after you and we figured we’d follow.” Hornfels said sheepishly. “You looked like you were talking to someone. Or was it thinking aloud?”

“Hello!” Diana sprouted a tiny rock platform up for them all to see. “I’m Diana! It’s a pleasure to meet all of you!”

“Is she your girlfriend?” Quartzite smirked.

“No, just a real big fan!” Diana beamed. “Or little fan. Do you want me to leave, Stone?”

“No, it’s quite all right. Actually… I may as well tell you four something. Let’s go back to the tree.”

Tree of Beginning

“Oooooo!” Quartzite softly rubbed Stone’s bald head. “So smooth!”
“Please stop that.”

“So you were a rock person all along, huh?” Granite asked. “I thought you felt weird when I touch you.”

“Surprised you didn’t notice, Granny.” Sovite said.

“You really do feel different.” Hornfels said while rubbing Stone’s hand. “And you have parts inside you that serve as organs. Odd…”

“I want to ask Regigigas to take me to one of the Permanites he spoke of. And if possible… I want to keep it with me. As a relic of my people…”

“If that’s the case, we’ll come with you.” Granite smiled. “I’m sure Regigigas can protect the tree from a few demons.”

“Five Children, there’s a creature approaching the tree!” A Minish came flying in using Wing Pikmin.

“Is it a demon?!” Hornfels exclaimed.

“I don’t know what it is, but it was huge and purple!”

Granite touched the ground and closed her eyes. “I do feel something coming. Let’s go see what it is!”

The beast crossing the field was a purple-skinned humanoid wearing black and gold armor and a same-colored helmet. He had a large chin and big, thick hands, and his blue eyes glimmered like the moon as he stared at the great tree. “Is this the Tree of Beginning Medusa spoke of? The place where the Heart of this World rests?” The titan opened his left hand, which was holding a tiny green glowing stone. “Very well. I will bring this planet to ruin and regain my Infinity Stones!”

The bottom of the surrounding wall opened as the Five Children of Earth charged out. “Hey ugly, we got a rule called no trespassing!” Sovite shouted. “Who the heck are you?”

“I am Thanos, you impudent worms! You have nerve to speak to me in such a tongue. Now stand aside or feel the power of my Soul Stone!”

“The only power WE’RE feeling is the power of us defeating your so-called… POWER!” Granite retorted.

“Leave the trash-talk to me, sweet cheeks.” Sovite fist-palmed. “Let’s kick his ass!” He stomped the ground and sent a river of lava toward Thanos, but the titan jumped forth to slam his fist on the ground in their center, blowing the five benders apart. Thanos tried to enter the tree’s barrier, but Hornfels threw a sword and used metalbending to bend it around his neck, trying to pull Thanos back. Granite then caught the titan in a rock trap, but Thanos broke free and grabbed a chunk of the trap to throw at Hornfels.

Quartzite jumped in the way and used sandbending to break the rock, then broke the ground around Thanos in attempt to sink the titan. Thanos raised the Soul Stone as it flashed, separating his own soul from his body. Thanos’ spirit flew inside Quartzite’s body, the boy screaming and struggling as he broke a sand pit toward his teammates. Thanos returned to his body and escaped his own trap, running to punch the distraught sandbender away. Sovite turned his sand pit into lava and threw it at Thanos, burning the titan only slightly as Thanos ran to punch him.
Sovite sprouted a large lava hand to lock with Thanos’ left fist, but the pain from the molten rock didn’t falter his strength. Hornfels jumped on Thanos’ head and attempted to crush it with the gold of his helmet, so Thanos grabbed the scrawny boy in his right hand and threw him at Sovite, disabling the lava hand. Thanos was then pelted in the head by both normal boulders and spherical gray stones, cast by Granite and Stone. Thanos aimed the Soul Stone and caught them in a state of hypnosis.

A gray stone shaped like an oval crashed on Earth. Found by Regigigas, the stone steadily crumbled and became a humanoid baby. “Foreign contaminate…” Stone’s voice said as he painted his skin peach and forged a flesh-like mask with hair. “Stone, why don’t you play Kickrock with us??” Granite asked him pushily. “Hehe… Thanks, Stone.” Hornfels blushed.

“I DIDN’T MEAN TO!” Granite screamed from her vision. “I thought that pie was for anyone! Window pie is too tasty to pass up!”

“What adorable memories.” Thanos smirked at Stone’s memories. “A simple stone finds comfort in the company of humans. And yet, you saw yourself as vermin that didn’t belong. Let everyone see you for what you are: a mindless rock.” The stone transformed Stone back into an ovular egg.

A large pink crystal shot up from the ground and stabbed Thanos’ hand, dropping the Soul Stone. “The only mindless one here is YOU!” Diana stated, riding the crystal.

“Diana!” Now free of the spell, Granite chucked boulders at Thanos’ face. Diana pulled the crystal out of his hand and used it to fly. Thanos jumped toward the Soul Stone, only to fall on his front when Sovite wrapped lava whips around his ankles. Quartzite used a sandwave to bring the Soul Stone over to him.

“I’m changing Stone back!” Quartzite declared as he grabbed the gem- “AAAAAHH!” A tremendous surge of power overcame Quartzite upon contact with the stone.

“Quartz!” Sovite rushed over and grabbed the stone as well, enduring the unbearable pain and successfully helping to throw it away. Thanos broke free of the lava and jumped to Granite and Stone, punching the former away and crushing Stone’s egg.

“STONE!!” Granite cried.

“A mere pebble to the power of Thanos!” The Mad Titan grinned with malice. “His fate will be that of your miserable planet!”

The Titan was immediately punched a great distance away by a three-fingered hand. Thanos recovered to find the one responsible was Regigigas. Although the robot’s expression wasn’t clear, his eyes blinked with vengeance. Thanos charged at the god, and both locked fists with each other. “What type of machine dares to oppose Thanos?!?”

“I am no mere machine, Mortal. I am the God of Earth. The Earth’s children are my children... and those who crush my children will know a fate worse than death.” Regigigas charged lasers in his lights and pinned Thanos to the ground with their force.

“AAAAH!” The base of Thanos’ left arm was impaled by a giant clear diamond. Diana was perched on it, feeling only spite for the titan. “Death would be too merciful for you.”

“Hm hm hm.” Thanos laughed. “The great Thanos has felt worse pain than this.”

“You may reinstate your claims after approximately one day in Underworld Prison.” Regigigas said. “If you claim to have been sent by Medusa… I conjecture you are one of the Thirteen.”
“Regigigas, we have to save Stone!” Granite cried over their friend’s shattered body. “Can you use that Soul thingy!?”

Regigigas approached the Soul Stone and picked it up. He aimed it at the dark-gray rubble in attempt to cast its power, but nothing happened. “Unable to register a response. Attempting to determine the anomaly.”

“The stone won’t listen to you because you’re not from its world.” A man’s voice said. A person with brown hair and a large beard, wearing a same-colored robe approached them.

“Where did you come from?” Sovite questioned.

The man reached under his robe and withdrew an 8-ball flashing an array of colors. “The Octogan desires the Soul Stone. I must follow its demands.” He aimed the ball at the green stone, slowly drawing it in. The Soul Stone sunk into the Octogan’s pupil.

“NO!” Thanos yelled. “Return the Soul Stone to me at-!”

The Octogan flashed and caused the titan to freeze. “See to it he is imprisoned.” The stranger said before vanishing in another flash.

“He’s gone…” Granite spoke with remorse. She fell to her knees, crying over the remains of her friend. “Stone…”

“We barely got to know him at all.” Hornfels said.

“What do you mean?” Granite asked.

“Wait… you were bending that diamond.” Sovite realized. “That’s impossible… even Regigigas can’t bend diamonds.”

“I exhausted a large portion of this mortal form’s chi in doing so.” Diana said. “I fear I can’t inhabit it for much longer.”

“This mortal form?” Quartzite repeated. “Are you…”

Diana closed her eyes and put her hand to a piece of Stone. Stone... can you hear me?

Diana... is that… you?...

Stone... I have a secret to tell you as well. The true Diana... perished during childbirth. I sensed that she was not long, so I sent my soul to inhabit her deceased body and allow it to grow and mature. I did it so... I could walk among the Mortal World.

The Mortal World? But that means you’re...

Yes, I am. I always believed death upon birth was a horrible fate... so I keep the parents from sadness and discouragement by taking the place of their child’s soul. And until my true body is freed by your friends’ descendants, I will continue to watch them in this manner. Stone... I can do the same for you as well.

What do you mean?

I will allow you to be reincarnated as a human. You will possess the chi that you had in this form.
Your friends may not find you for some time, and your memory may grow foggy over the ages… but I am certain you will reunite with their descendants. I hope to see you again one day.

Reborn as a human… Yes. If I could be born again… I would have my own family. I could be… happy.

Yes… you could. And from now on, you will not be just “Stone”… you will be Stonebuddy!

Stonebuddy?

“Stone” is such a bland name. It needs more personality! A name like Stonebuddy is sure to attract friends.

Well, alright then… I will be Stonebuddy. Farewell, Diana.

Farewell, Stonebuddy. See you in the next life!

So yeah… we finally get to meet the Four (Five) Earthbender Family ancestors, as well as major foreshadowing. The Ores concept was something Numbuh 227 came up with some time ago. The next chapter will be the final one of this short story: the true identity of King Andrew Johnson. Of course, some of you who pay attention may already know who he is. I will see you for that.
Chapter 6 of Before They Were Kings, featuring King Andrew Johnson in his childhood.

I would like to thank Numbuh 227, :iconIDAofficial:, and :iconDepthcharge2030: for the comments. This story is Gameverse History in the making and I’m glad you were here to see it. This takes place about 6 years before the First Gameverse Series.

Chapter 6: One Hundred

KND Moonbase

The Kids Next Door was his pride and joy, he was proud to be a part of it. He joined Cadet Training at five years old – a record young age for a cadet, became Leader’s Assistant after graduating, and at Age 9, he was the youngest operative to earn the position of Supreme Leader. He, Numbuh 100, Andrew Johnson. His friends were by his side, but he was nervous. Hundreds of operatives were in the auditorium, awaiting the coming of their new leader.

“Andrew, how could you keep them waiting?” asked Travis Wickens, one of his good friends. “They have better things to do than sit through a boring ceremony.”

“I still don’t feel like I deserve to be here.” Andrew replied.

“Why not?” Numbuh 82.22 asked. “Dude, we wouldn’t have stopped Numbuh 296 if it wasn’t for you. You’ll be a hundred times better than he could ever be! Come on, Andrew, stop being so hard on yourself, you got this.”

“It’s no big deal!” Koda Shrieves assured him. “Just go out there and tell them what they want to hear. That you’ll be a great leader and you won’t screw up.”

“Anyone can say that.” Andrew remarked. “Oh well… Gotta give them something to hope for.” He looked at the frying pan in his hands, which had ‘100’ painted on it in white. Andrew put the pan over his head and stepped out.

“I proudly introduce Numbuh 100, our new Supreme Leader!” Numbuh 258.55 introduced.

The Kids Next Door ceased their chattering and faced their new leader. Andrew cleared his throat: “KIDS NEXT DOOR RULEZ!”

“KIDS NEXT DOOR rulez, SIR!”

“Kids Next Door, it is with the highest honor that I accept the position of Supreme Leader. It may take some time to erase the damages Numbuh 296 has done, but I will give it my all to put this organization on the right track! And I would just like to say… thank you for giving me the opportunity to lead. The Kids Next Door holds a very special place in my heart. When I’m at home, living under the rules of strict parents, I’m glad to have a place I can be who I am and make friends. I’m sure you all feel the same to some regard.

...

“I don’t want to say my parents are evil, I don’t want to say any adult is evil. There are bad decisions and there are wrong decisions. There are things we can misinterpret as evil, but first, try to put yourselves in that other person’s shoes. The next time you’re fighting a supervillain trying to give kids extra homework, or you’re angry at your parents for feeding you vegetables… first, try to understand them. Maybe they have good intentions but are approaching it the wrong way. Maybe we just don’t accept the actions as good. What I’m trying to say is, we may be an organization bent on fighting adult tyranny… but it’s important that we know the difference between true evil and misunderstandings.”

The kids murmured to their selves. His speech was thought-provoking, but confusing. “Maybe this isn’t the type of thing ordinary kids are used to hearing.” Andrew said. “I think it’s something to think about… but I don’t want you kids to get a headache over thinking about it too much. One way or another, there are adults out there with evil plans that we need to foil. Just keep your heads in the game and do your best. And always remember, if there’s something you can’t do, you have hundreds of operatives to back you up. Promise me you’ll always stay loyal and you won’t lose faith, even if the age of 13 is creeping around the corner. Can you promise me?!”

“WE PROMISE!”

“Kids Next Door: assembly adjourned. You can stay here, go home, do whatever, but the second I call you for a mission, you better get ready. DISMISSED!”

“YEEEEAAAAAAHHH!”

“Numbuh 100!” A blonde boy named Chad Dickson, seven years old and Numbuh 274, ran up on stage. “Can I arm-wrestle with you?”

“Arm-wrestle?”

“Yeah! Pretty please?” Chad had hopeful eyes.

“Do it! Do it! Do it!”

“Eh heh… Alright, if you want to.” Andrew said sheepishly. They went to sit at a table on the stage and locked hands. Numbuh 258.55 signaled the match: “GO!”

Office

Numbuh 100 was later outside the Supreme Leader’s office as 258.55 handed him the key. “Your job begins now, Sir. And I must say, that was a fantastic match.”

“I lost.” Andrew said in misery.

“I know! I guess we know who the runner-up is.” The boy laughed. “Well, enjoy your office. I’ll be at the Tactical Station. Byeee.” He waved and walked off.

Andrew unlocked the door to his new, cleaned office. Any references to Numbuh 296 were removed, and ‘Numbuh 100’ was written on the label. He sat at the desk and took a quick look at the files, then started up his computer. “Well, if this isn’t a break from being out in the field.”
Travis said as he walked in, looking around. “You finally made it, Andy. Safe behind the front lines, telling everyone else to risk their lives.”

“I could write you up for barging in.”
“Please, Andy. If that were how you roll, I would be bowing and calling you ‘Your Highness.’”

“Told you not to mention thaaaaat.”

“No no, I get it.” Travis chuckled. “You want people to like you for who you are and not someone fancy or special. You’re just like that Churchill boy: you’re a kid like the rest of us and that’s all you want people to see you as.”

Andrew gave a light sigh. When he was still in training, he remembered missing the ship to go home and had to rely on Travis Wickens to take him back. To Travis’s surprise, he was asked by Andrew to take him to the top of a mountain called Mariejoa. The guards questioned why he was on the World Government’s headquarters, but Andrew told them he asked Travis to bring him home. They chose to let Travis go with the promise he wouldn’t speak of this. And Andrew was scolded by his father for not telling Travis to bring him to his brother, Sandy’s house, so that a private ship could come get him. When Andrew and Travis began to interact more, he was sincerely grateful that he didn’t tell more people about Andrew’s connections.

Around that time, Travis introduced Andrew to some new cadets led by a rich boy named Henry Churchill. He compared Henry to Andrew, and Henry also swore to secrecy since he already knew who he was. The World Government was mostly secret to ordinary citizens and they preferred to keep it that way, for their own sakes.

“It’s just part of me thinks I should let everyone know.” Andrew said. “I want to be someone people can trust.”

“You do your own thing with that.” Travis replied. “But it doesn’t really matter where you come from, as long as you’re a great leader that leads his operatives on the right path. So whether or not you feel it’s important for your followers to know your background… that’s up to you. Anyway, good luck. But lift some weights ’cause that was silly.” Travis shut the door and left.

Andrew felt a blush form on his cheeks. He sighed and embraced the peace and quiet. Lucky Travis… doesn’t know the whole story.

Johnson Home

Hours later, Andrew landed outside a small house in Cleveland close to the beach. “Welcome home, Andy.” His mother, Roxy greeted him with a hug and kiss. She was a young, thin woman with long brown hair and purple eyes, wearing a purple sundress, and went barefoot. “I just made dinner for the others, but I can make something for you real quick.”

“Big Bro!” Andrew’s 5-year-old brother, Sandy kicked a small rubber ball at him. He wore a towel cape and green swim shorts. He liked to hang out at the beach. “You shoulda seen the castle I built today! It was as big as our house!”

“Kicking it down was a blast!” one of their three cousins yelled from the dinner table.

“Build a bigger one next time!”

Roxy was a member of the Earthbender Family Quartzite, and Sandy inherited her powers. Their cousins were the sons of Roxy’s brother and also possessed earthbending. “I think I’ll eat at Dad’s place. He’s gonna be here soon.”

“Mom, why don’t we ever go to Dad’s?” Sandy whined.

“I miss them too, but Sandy, it’s probably best we don’t get involved with their work. Say, why don’t you and Andrew play catch in the yard before-…” They heard an engine roaring and looked out in the backyard. A small black ship landed, intending to camouflage in the night as the dark-clothed pilot awaited Andrew.

“Maybe some other time…” The older brother headed outside. “See you later, Mom. Bro.” The two stared with concern as Andrew boarded the ship.

Mariejoa; God’s Castle

Andrew quickly crossed from calm and restful night to eternal day. The land that was “ruled by God” never saw darkness. How any normal human got sleep in this town was beyond him.

“ANDYYYY, ANDYYYY!” A woman with shiny brown hair in many curls twirled on the doorstep to the castle in her pink dress. “Welcome home, my little prince!”

“Nice to see you, Lady Jennifer.” Andrew politely smiled. “Is Dad home?”

“Nuh-uh, he went out to McDonald’s. I’m just kiddiiinng! He’s where he always is, go on in, go on iiiin…” She danced while Andrew walked past her.

Andrew entered the chamber with giant flames surrounding the throne. The five Leader thrones were empty, so only His Highness was present. “Ever think about turning the heat down?” Andrew asked.

The King’s legs were arched over the armrest and his head was turned away. “Kids Next Door is wonderful, isn’t it? I remember when I was a boy… my father and I watched from this very throne as an army of ordinary children overthrew the demons. It all goes to prove who we really are, Son. Where we really belong.” He faced Andrew, showing the flashing 8-ball in his left eye.

“Dad, why do we need to do this? Why can’t we just… go live with Mom and Sandy, leave all this behind?”

“Oh, Son…” Reggie Johnson stood and slowly stepped down the stairs, his metal armor clanking. “As much as I love your mother, the only real flaw about her is her bending. Power like that… power like this… it was never meant to exist. If I don’t control it, no one else will. My entire family has lived to see the way we can make this world the way it’s supposed to. One day, you will have this duty, Andrew. You… the One Hundredth King.”

“But I don’t want to, Dad. And I don’t think there’s anything wrong with this. Even if the Dimensional Fusion is real… is it really so bad?”

“You are still a boy… I don’t expect you to understand. But… you will… in time…” Reggie gripped the Octogan and slowly pulled it out of his socket.

Andrew was repulsed by the sight and the sound. “Dad, please. I don’t want anything to do with that.”

“You need to master your Haki, Son. Only then will the Octogan accept you as its host. But the only way to learn is through training. No matter… the PAIN!” Reggie shoved it into Andrew’s hand without warning.

“AAAAAAAAHHHHH!” Andrew burned from the unfathomable sensation, and visions whipped before his eyes. Planets melding together, a gate bursting open, the universe awash in a wave of power, and five beings cleaning it up.

“Huff, huff!” Andrew was given a break, desperately catching his breath.
“What have you learned, boy?” asked Reggie. “Tell me what you remember.”

“The universe is flooding with energy.” Andrew gasped. “Chi, magic, Bang Gas, physics, Four Forces that grow stronger every day. One day, the power will tear the universe apart.”

“Correct, boy. And the ultimate cause of these powers is?”

“The Dimensional Fusion. Where numerous dimensions and its people get merged into one. But I don’t see how that can be possible.”

“Perhaps this will clarify.” Reggie put the Octogan in his hand again.

“Wait, Dad—AAAAAAHHHH!” An image flashed of a triangular portal, and Andrew was sucked into its light. He saw a boy with a straw hat, a girl with deep blue hair, a girl with white hair in a ponytail, a purple titan wearing a gauntlet with six gems, a swordsman clad in green… Then he saw the entire Kids Next Door army, standing proud while a storm of worlds rained down upon them.

Andrew was released from the pain again. “A powerful deity has made a single world using material from other worlds. He collected energy from those worlds and continues to build this one. It’s becoming too much for our universe to handle. If it falls apart, the other worlds could be destroyed.”

“And the World Government?”

“The World Government is dedicated to stopping it. The five World Leaders—the original five, are the incarnations of gods who wish to protect the other worlds. They teamed up with the first King, a denizen of our Original World, and who held the power to make this possible. All the World Leaders have been reincarnations of these gods. The Octogan has saw them, brought them all together. We continue to work to break the Dimensional Fusion.”

“And see that it stays broken. The World Government will design a New World Order: returning these worlds to their natural order, and ensuring they never cross borders again.”

“But if the worlds are broken, won’t that make chaos, too?”

“Not under our control. Trust me, Andrew, when I say this is for the good of all beings in all universes. You may not understand now, but you will. I sense death approaching. Despair in your Kids Next Door.”

“Are you threatening my organization?!” Andrew asked in a rage.

“I’m making no threats, I’m giving you a warning. Terrible things will happen in the near future. The Octogan foresees it all.”

“Not if I have anything to say about it! I’ll protect my operatives with my life! I’ll make your Magic 8 Ball look like a joke.” Andrew turned and stomped away.

“Go to sleep, Andrew. In the morning, you have school, then Haki practice. You are lucky to have people help you to prepare yourself.”

“I’ll be LUCKY if Jennifer turns the fucking SUN off!!”

Andrew’s father made him touch the Octogan every night, hoping for the day it will adapt to Andrew’s company. When Andrew tries to sleep in the darkest room possible in this sunlit town,
He tosses and turns, haunted by the Octogan’s visions. The triangular portal appears again, but this time it’s in the chest of some jester. Twenty keys unlock the huge gate, unleashing a wave of energy, followed by sounds of thousands of breaking glass.

His vision became a green mist as he saw one of his operatives, Dillon Simmons. “Huh? Who’s there?” asked Dillon.

“Dillon, it’s me! Can you hear me?” Andrew asked.

“Well who are you?! Show yourself!”

Andrew couldn’t respond in time before the green mist unveiled Koda Shrieves, who looked mad as he was surrounded in darkness. This was followed by glimpses of a brain in a glass dome and a dark silhouette with an arrow on its head.

Andrew woke up sweating and panting. It seems like no hours passed under this unchanging sky. Andrew would then have school with 13-year-old Henry Churchill and a 12-year-old boy named Lucas Nickel – but he wanted to be called Lucas Stonebuddy. Apparently, Henry inherited the “will” of late World Leader, Don Quixote Homing. After his false decommissioning, he was brought to Mariejoa. During Henry’s time in Kids Next Door, he was a leader respected by his peers. He made himself to be so friendly and inspiring that five sectors in Europe decided to merge into one under his leadership. Those sectors split apart when he left.

Lucas’s story was very odd, because he claimed to be a reincarnation of someone from 4,000 years ago. Even Lucas didn’t understand himself, he just had a feeling that he was. The strange form of earthbending Lucas possessed was inherited from that ancestor. King Reggie confirmed the story with his Octogan, and that this ancient incarnation was ashamed of himself for being a “foreign contaminate.” Reggie promised that, in time, Lucas would learn that he was right to be ashamed.

“Class, it’s time to brush up on your vocabulary!” Felius Umbridge, their English teacher announced. “Presently, Master Churchill has top marks in the class, so I highly advocate you follow his example, Felius Umbridge emboldens.”

Felius was also a World Leader, long running at 60-something years old. She first realized her identity as a “reborn god” when a wizard wiped part of her memory with a magic spell. The Obliviate spell opened her mind in that brief moment, and sensing this, the King of the World came down to take her to Mariejoa. Felius detested wizards for their absurd power. When her Muggle mother and newborn Muggle brother separated from their wizard father and sister, Felius used her World Government connections to support them.

When Henry had a break, he wanted to rest in the peace and quiet of Daphne Anderson’s indoor rose garden. While colorful roses grew outside, it was gray and dull inside. She only grew gray and black roses, but the black roses were meant for picking dead. She was a frightening shadowbender who could use her shadow to connect a person’s life with a plant’s life. She linked people to black roses, and when the rose was picked dead, the person dies. Then a gray rose would appear in her garden.

Finally, there was Jennifer Bush, the oldest World Leader at 4,000-something. She was inhabiting an immortal body that would only be Resurrected if killed. She believed it was the Will of God that brought the original Leaders together, and God wanted them to fix the universe.

Whatever, Andrew didn’t care about these people or their backstories. All he cared about was the Kids Next Door. The place where kids were free, a person’s background didn’t matter, everyone was happy, everyone had friends. Andrew ruled out death as a possibility, he thought it was beyond the morals of the typical evil adult.

A few months into the job, a supervillain named Jonah Icarus made himself known and began stirring suspicion. Andrew entrusted Travis and a team of operatives from Sectors Q and T to investigate the villain. The team returned with schematics of a machine that could age children into adults. But there was someone missing: “Where’s Travis?” Andrew asked.

“Numbuh 283… He was killed.” Mario Ramsey spoke with regret.

“What?” Andrew felt his breath escape.

“Jonah got him with a knife. We were able to get his body back. Should we… bring him to his family?”

Andrew was struck silent for a moment before he gave the approval to do so. The nightmares the Octogan gave him were proven true. One of them, at least. Andrew swore vengeance to Jonah Icarus, and saw to his capture.

(“For more detail, read Sixth Age!” Palutena recommended.)

(“You don’t remember what happened, do you?”)

(“I have a busy schedule, Pit. That’s why I need you to write summaries.”)

(“I just wanna know why me and Jonah have the same last name.”)

When Andrew returned home the night after their victory against Icarus, his father had prepared dinner for him. Andrew sat at the table before the throne and started on his steak, peas, and mashed potatoes. “The Octogan saw the horrible tragedy you just experienced.” Reggie said.

“The Octogan needs to stay out of my life.”

“Jonah Icarus is the man responsible. But there is another guilty party at work. Do you know why he came to be here? How he was able to do what he did? An aging machine requires Time Chi in order to function. Where do you believe he got ahold of such material? Let me SHOW YOU!” Reggie slapped the Octogan on Andrew’s head. (Play “Uneasy Air” from Ib.)

A guy in a motorcycle mask—two people falling through a sea of clocks—a robot with a plasma cannon—

Andrew fell out of his seat. “Don’t fucking do that to me when I’m EATING!!”

“An operative was murdered by an evil adult! A friend was taken from you! Just like a boy I admired, Numbuh Zero, was taken from me. He didn’t die, but the same phenomena is responsible: the Dimensional Fusion. It will be responsible for many other tragedies, and it’s our job to stop it!”

“That’s the dumbest thing ever!” Andrew jumped up and punched the table. “Blaming all the world’s problems on some ‘godly’ phenomena, that’s STUPID! Bad things happen because we let them happen! Travis died because of my own faulty leadership!” He started to cry. “My operatives depend on me… to help them get back up after they’ve fallen down. I’m going to keep leading them… so that I can inspire them. I’m not going to let anything stop me. Not you, God, or the Dimensional Fusion.”

Andrew continued to lead Kids Next Door for three years. He would remain loyal until the day he was decommissioned. He witnessed the arrival of many new and aspiring operatives – Nigel Uno, Nolan York, Rachel T. McKenzie… Andrew saw good things to come from these kids. Not from the Octogan’s vision, but he just knew. Maybe it was his Observation Haki that told him. Andrew had been mastering the basic forms of Haki, and he would teach Chad in his free time. The pain he felt from Travis’s death was slowly sinking, there hadn’t been any major tragedies these past few years. The worst thing that happened was a chickenpox crisis done by petty teens. There were some issues regarding cadets with bending powers; Chad banned these kids, following an old law that said benders weren’t allowed.

Despite Chad’s attitude for some respects, Andrew believed he was the most capable person to succeed him. On his 13th birthday, Andrew accepted his decommissioning proudly. “Andrew, why don’t you wanna join TND?” Chad asked. “You can still be our friend, you can still help us.”

“I just don’t think I’m right for Teens Next Door. I… couldn’t. Even if I wanted to.”

“Sigh… We’re all gonna miss you, Andrew. Good-bye… and thanks for everything.” Chad pulled the lever and sucked his teacher’s memories away with the plunger device.

Since the Second Age of Kids Next Door, their memory-erasing devices were powered by the Octogan’s energy. It lasted to this day, even in their modern devices. That’s why Andrew was immune to losing his memory. At least now, his old friends wouldn’t be concerned about him. But Andrew kept tabs on the Kids Next Door. He learned about their newest missions. Sector V, led by Nigel Uno, have become famous, Rachel McKenzie became Supreme Leader after Chad, and Nolan was making a name for himself. But bad things happened.

Dillon Simmons was killed. Koda Shrieves went rogue, killed operatives, then was killed himself. In fact, both were killed by a group called the Brotherhood of Evil. Andrew learned of it all from the Octogan’s power. When Andrew was 15, the powerful gem began to adapt with him. The pain he felt from touching it was growing smaller and smaller. It allowed him to watch the KND with a clearer vision. Things had become… much different.

Nigel Uno was accepted to GKND. His great-grandfather was a savage Demon King. Demons were enemies to God. Nigel Uno was an enemy to God—no… Nigel was a great operative. He defied his great-grandfather. In the months following, element benders made their presence known. Because of the incident with Revan Bane 30 years ago, benders had to hide their powers. They were no longer hiding. Inspired by Negatar Gnaa, they reappeared. They made friends. And then…

The universe was destroyed by God Arceus. It was put back together, but Andrew already knew, that was a taste of what was coming. In 2032, a cataclysm will destroy everything. The Scattered Realms Arceus created leaked more unstable energy into the universe. Like the Octogan predicted, it was growing. There were more benders, and they were free to do what they pleased. Benders became the superior force in the new Kids Next Door, and the dangers they would face go beyond the average evil adult.

Why was Andrew feeling so angry? Why should he be upset, knowing his organization was making proud strides and open minds, things greater than he had ever done under his leadership? Why shouldn’t he have faith that, if anything terrible were to happen, the Kids Next Door could handle it? A new generation that was descended from the heroes in the Benders’ Dawn. Why shouldn’t Andrew expect great things from them?

...Because it was organized.

Andrew gasped. There was no one in the room except for the Octogan. The Octogan his father left behind to bond with his son. “Are you… talking to me?”
You love the Kids Next Door… You save yourself the trouble of spoilers and look into the future through me. You cannot deny that the ones responsible for Travis, Koda, and Dillon’s deaths were a result of the Dimensional Fusion. And now that fusion is growing to a point where disorder is inevitable.

“But why do you say it was organized?”

The “proud strides” and “open minds” that have occurred in your Kids Next Door… have been the work of puppeteers tugging on strings. The Seven Lights and Thirteen Darknesses that you know will open the door… Everything that has happened and that will happen is all for the purpose to open that door. The ideals of development and growth are an illusion. Those things only happen because the puppeteers desire them to. They give those children a false feeling of hope and belief so they can channel it into power. You must not let such feelings overwhelm you. You have the power of Truth and Law. He who defines law controls the universe. That is why there must be World Leaders in a world where law is slowly decaying.

“I… I don’t believe you. Even if there are strings at work… the Kids Next Door can break those strings.”

Are you absolutely certain? What if Travis’s death was to tighten the strings of his younger sister? What if Dillon’s death tightened the strings on young Nolan? His betrayal of the KND, his redemption and marriage to Danika to give birth to a son, they are one move of strings after another. Nigel Uno’s return and marriage to Rachel, the fact that both Doug and Gwen could be alive, every… single… step… has been the work of a puppeteer.

“You’re LYING!”

See for yourself where the Puppet Show is going to end. See where your precious Kids Next Door will take their final BOW!

Rachel was lying dead. Nolan was lying dead. Their children despaired, they had lost. Their destruction was nigh. Cheren was dead, Dillon was dead, Miyuki, Sheila—

“ENOUGH!” Andrew cried. “It can’t happen! It can’t…”

No spoilers, is that what you want? When a puppet serves its worth, it must die. Every happy ending has been to captivate the audience until the climax. The only person that can decide a different ending is you, Andrew. And if these puppets were to defy you, even if you cherish them… you must let them burn.

King Andrew sat in silent despair. “Are my feelings… really my own? Or is the puppeteer… pulling strings on me?”

What do you believe?

Andrew didn’t feel them. He didn’t see them. But he sensed… that the strings were on him. They would make his brother marry a simple Minish. They were driving the Linlin Pirates into hunting Sugary Wonders. All of it was due to a puppeteer leading to an ultimate climax. …Andrew would not be part of it.

“I’m cancelling the show.” He stood and pulled the invisible strings off. “I’m going to save these worlds…” He picked up the frying pan that was his signature helmet. The ‘100’ had faded, but traces were still there. He put it over his head. “And my organization.”

The very next day, Reggie Johnson was overwhelmed by the Octogan and destroyed. Andrew donned his armor… as the One Hundredth King of the World. “What are your orders, Your Majesty?” Lucas Stonebuddy asked.

“…We pull the strings in our favor.”

Remember what Chad said in Seven Lights, Chapter 2? Little backshadow. So yeah… this ends Before They Were Kings. Thank you to those who read, stay tuned for other stories.

Chapter 72: Eleven Days

World Leaders’ Throne

“The Seven Lights are found, tut-tut!” Felius Umbridge shook frantically. “THE SEVEN LIGHTS ARE FOUND! The Kids Next Door have made a joke of us and it was not funny! –Felius Umbridge is not impressed!”

“The Octogan is not behaving!” King Andrew yelled as he clutched the squirming 8-ball. “It is as though it was deceived by the Fake Prophecy as well! But we will not allow these alleged writers to return to this world! The Octogan has collected more than enough souls from the Spirit World. We will conduct the Grand Inferius before long.”

“It must happen soon.” Lucas Stonebuddy followed. “With CP10 defeated, the Kids Next Door will become more rebellious than ever. I have taken the liberty of establishing bounties for all of them. Already, the ‘Sky Dragon’ Wendy Marvell stands at $7,000,000, and Augustus von Fizzuras, who insists on being called ‘Stone Fist’, is at 700,000 Chocolate Dollars. Shall we view the posters for the most notable operatives?” The Octogan projected holograms in the air of wanted posters.

“Maiden of Balance” Aurora Uno: $33,000

“Devil’s Eye” Chris Uno: $43,000

“Sunny Fist” Sheila Frantic: $77,000

“Dark Seed” Dillon York: $23,000

“Sweet Virus” Vanellope von Schweetz: 5,000 EXP

“Quick Works” Haylee Gilligan: $20x40

“Son of Earth” Anthony McKenzie: 10,000 cents

“Thunder Storm” Fybi Fulbright: 88,000 Rupees

“Snow Sparkle” Suki Crystal: 500 gingerbread cookies (or the money it would cost to buy that much)

“Bigmouth” Chimney Ukeru: 200 train tickets
“Walking Mountain” Mocha: 50 giant coins

“Reborn Artist” April Goldenweek: $57,000

“Soccer Star” Karin Kurosaki: ¥70,000

“Mad Conqueror” Maddy Murphy: 55 free punches for your bully

“King of Fools” Zach Murphy: 6,000,000 Goober Dollars

“Overactive” Sunni Chariton: 53,000 pretend dollars

“Everybody’s Friend” Cheren Uno: 10,000,000 Rupees

“You can’t expect anyone to want to seize most of those bounties.” Felius commented.

“Those are only joke prices.” Henry mentioned, turning a page in his book. “What’s life without a little humor.”

“‘Everybody’s Friend’ is a curious epithet to give him.” Lucas noted.

“But it is accurate. Like his father before him, Cheren Uno’s greatest talent is his ability to make friends.” King Andrew said. “It’ll be almost impossible to defeat a boy with as many friends as he has. But even the power of friendship does not compare to the Octogon.”

“The question is, will Morgan’s power compare to his?” Daphne Anderson asked.

“Ah ha ha!” Jennifer Bush laughed. “Don’t worry, Morgan Dear will be fine! She’ll rip that boy apart! But if she doesn’t… well, we’ll give her a worthy funeral.”

KND Moonbase

Joey Beatles was trapped inside a glass chamber, his hands bound in thick cuffs. “Shurorororo!” Caesar Clown laughed as he stared at him. “Fifteen years ago, you made off with my greatest achievement. Now here you are, trapped and under my prying eye. So, tell me, Mr. Beatles… is the Mammal-Mammal Fruit as great as I hoped it would be?”

“Mr. Clown, we didn’t bring him here to be a zoo animal.” MaKayla King stated.

“Although if he wanted to, he could be his own zoo.” Lola noted.

“Do you think we could use Joey’s DNA to heal Mew’s condition?”

“Well, of course! How do you think I created the Mammal Fruit to begin with?”

“What do you mean?”

“My good friend, Doflamingo discovered a fossil left by the Firstborn Mew twenty years ago, curiously after Arceus’s little rampage. He gave it to me, and from the traces of DNA, mixed with extra ingredients, I designed a Devil Fruit that contains Mew’s shape-shifting powers. Based on Darcy’s story, Mew lost a great portion of energy in Team Rocket’s project. Perhaps Mew can recover his lost energy through contact with Joey.”

“Wouldn’t that cost Joey his powers?” Miyuki asked.

“If I am both correct and lucky, Joey may be able to keep his powers. All Mew should need is the chi that is present in the DNA of all those animals. Lucario surmises that it was Mew’s DNA Chi that was drained in order to revive Acnologia. Acnologia is famous for being a hybrid dragon, and Mew is considered to be the Original Hybrid. That’s why his energy was perfect for restoring a hybrid and vice-versa. Joey’s DNA has already been strongly altered by the Bang Gas, so at the very least, his powers will be mostly inoperable for some time. But I shall gladly help my dearest subject to recover.”

“He isn’t your subject.” Kayla reminded. “Because Kirie’s mother was killed, her family needs someone else to support them. Joey can fill Kuki’s shoes… as soon as he’s in his right state of mind.”

“Weren’t some people already trying to help some Madotsuki girl?” Terry asked.

“I think that issue is taken care of for the most part. But we really can’t spend much time on them. We must prepare for the Apocalypse and whatever the World Government plans to do next.”

Meanwhile, on the bridge, the operatives were viewing wanted posters on the Global Tactical Station’s screen. “I’m worth 43,000?!” Chris Uno exclaimed. “That’s so cool!”

“‘Dark Seed’?” Dillon questioned. “It’s kind of badass.” He smiled sheepishly.

The base suddenly rumbled under a powerful force. “What was that?!?” Aeincha exclaimed, having felt it greater.

“Oh, that’s just Maddy and Sheila.” Mocha replied with a casual smile. “Sheila challenged Maddy for the highest Power Level, so they’re fighting in the gym.”

“Sunny Fist vs. Black Fist can’t be a good combo.” Apis said.

“Sheila didn’t want her to use that name.”

“Guys, we’re back from the White House!” Aaron Doblemitz called as he and Rhillian entered the bridge. “We brought Jessie and Kimaya like you asked.”

“Now is someone gonna tell me what the HELL was with that voodoo?!” Kimaya Heartly shouted.

“I was possessed by a spooky ghosty!” Suki shuddered. “I only want Jack Frost inside me!”

“It wasn’t an ordinary ghost.” Jessie Sidney replied. “It was Calliope, the one who wrote the prophecy. And the one we’re trying to destroy is the same one Polokus told me. Lord Calliborn English. I don’t know why I couldn’t say his name before.”

“This is bullshit, man!” Kimaya complained. “I just learned about this prophecy five days ago, now some giant green ghost thingy is gonna destroy the universe?!”

“WHAT HAVE I been telling you?!?” Jinta exclaimed. “The world ends, with giant, green, skeleton. I’m smarter than ALL OF YOU!”

“Great, Jinta.” Karin retorted. “Now you can DIE happy.”

“You know what, why did we waste time doing this stupid quest if it was gonna bring back a monster?!” Anthony asked angrily. “Why don’t we just not bring the Lights to the Gate thingy?!”

“Because the universe is doomed either way.” Everyone turned to face Jagar King.

“Where does that guy keep coming from?” Quill Ramsey asked. “Scares the crap outta me.”
“If we do nothing, the Netherverse’s energy will leak from the moons and destroy the universe.” Jagar recapped. “Arceus will leave behind survivors to design a new one, people that have six letters in either of their names. But if Lord English is reborn, not only is our universe doomed, but all parallel universes and even the Original Worlds will be in jeopardy. This is why I feared completing the prophecy. The result of opening the Time Gate is worse than letting the Apocalypse transpire.”

“No it isn’t!” Harvey Harper yelled. “If you defeat Lord Gnik, Lord English won’t come back! Don’t you think you can beat him?”

“I… I don’t know.” Jagar bowed his head. “Every time I try to see into the future—to this very point—I’m blind! The Octogan clouds my vision. I don’t know if I’ll win or lose. And even if I did, I don’t know what will happen! What if… What if Calliope can’t be trusted, either?”

“DON’T SAY THAT!” Aurora shouted. Jagar jumped and looked at her. The kids all faced Aurora curiously. “When Calliope was speaking to us just then… she sounded sincere. She sounded like she really wants to save us and she really wants our help. All this time, Calliope and Caliborn have been fighting for the fate of the universe. Caliborn got people like Team Gnik and Medusa to do his dirty work, but Calliope got those Dimension Rebels and the Zoni, and they’ve been helping us the whole way. We have to trust Calliope, and we have to believe in her. Mr. King… you’re Calliope’s vessel. You need to be strong for her and beat Ragaj.”

Jagar bowed again. “You’re right… I’ve been afraid for too long. For twenty years, the Chrono Staff gave me the answers to everything except this day. I guess I believed my future was set. I didn’t think I could change what was to happen, and the burden of having to wait and see overcame me. But I’m going to write the future.” He looked up with passion in his eyes. “I WILL defeat Ragaj and prevent Caliborn from coming back!”

“That’s the spirit, Mr. King!” Aurora cheered. “First we need to wait for Sunni to rescue Cheren. They should be back soon.”

Midway Peak

Sunni finally set foot on the balcony of Midway Peak. The place was quiet and vacant except for tables, as it was the former setting for a party. Near the start of this month, the five Corporate Presidents and rich nobles gathered here, and Head President Morgan led the gala. Now it was dead and quiet, much like most of the Corporate Presidents. The presidents had all been defeated, so that just left one.

Sunni drew a small Creative Summons symbol on a paper and tapped it, spawning Peas using her psychicbending. “Howdy do, Sunni!” The tiny Friend jumped on her shoulder. “Do ya have someone ya want me to beat up??”

“No, Peas.” Sunni giggled. “You were the first Friend I formed a Creative License with, so I want you to go in with me. I’m going to bring these Sacred Treasures back to Cheren, then we’re gonna fight President Morgan.”

“Are you sure you’re up for this, Sunni? Morgan is the most powerful psychicbender in the world.”

“No she isn’t. At least, she won’t be for long. I’ll show her what true Imaginary Friendship is about. First, I wanna bring one more!” Sunni whipped out her lightsaber and cut a symbol on the floor. Sunni planted her hand against it and puffed a cloud of smoke, summoning a new Friend.

Mary Goldenweek wore a bright smile and saluted. “Salutations! Mary Goldenweek reporting for duty, Captain Sunni!"

“Calm down, Mary.” Sunni grinned. “You’re not soldiers in the army, you’re Friends. Now, are you ready to rescue Cheren with me?”

“Are we going to fight the bad people that killed Cheren’s dad?”

“Not yet, Mary. That’ll come later.”

“Irregardless, I am ready to help my friend!” Mary held crayons between her fingers.

“Then let’s get to it!” Sunni smirked. “Mary, Peas, we’re going in!” (Play “Disco Star” from the Spongebob Movie Game!)

Stage 67: Midway Gala

Mission: Rescue Cheren and defeat President Morgan!

Act 1

Sunni and Mary walked up the stairs and entered the party room of Midway Gala. Fly Guys were sweeping the floor with vacuum-mops, making them too slippery to walk across. The girls jumped on a table, and Sunni used psychic to float them both to individual tables to get across the room. They set foot on the stairs to the second floor, having to jump a rolling red carpet. Above the stairs, three Groove Guys twirled up and dove at the intruders. Mary dodged while coloring White Crayon on her spot, causing a Groove Guy to be stuck like glue. Sunni slapped the other two with Psychic Stun before they proceeded down the hall.

The further they ventured, the passage seemed to morph into a colorful, polygonal dimension. The next minute, Sunni, Mary, and Peas were on a platform within a dimension lit by a giant disco ball in the sky. The distant space was designed like flashing floor tiles, whose colors made pixel images of Mario, Link, and Sonic – switching between forms of either character. “I’m feeling a lot of psychic energy in the air.” Sunni said. “This must be an illusory world created by Morgan.”

“Wow… Morgan must have tons more crayons than I do.” Mary said with a frown. The kids jumped across some colored tile platforms whose positions changed along with the changing background. They used Sunni’s psychic for safer landing on the tiles. Afterwards, they arrived at a straight path with Invader Guys floating over – Shy Guys in UFOs. They sent yellow beams at the floor, and when Sunni was caught in one, the UFO smashed down. Sunni recovered, and they took care to avoid the saucers while crossing.

The path had a dead end, and the next area was too far to float to with psychic (why must it have limitations in levels?). However, Sunni had the idea to toss Peas into one of the UFO lights, then she pulled the Friend out before the saucer smashed down. Sunni and Mary jumped on the UFO like a platform, facing the direction of the intended area so the Shy Guy would go that way (apparently, it was confused about its purpose now, so it helped them). The kids jumped off on a platform before a series of round, rotating platforms with alternating abstract images.

Upon setting foot on the platforms, Sunni and Mary felt the need to make graceful dancing motions. Groove Guys were dancing on floating disco balls, and if the kids got underneath, they would smash down. Sunni and Mary made the right motions to avoid them, and had to make correct motions when aligned with the next platform. Eventually, they danced to a stable platform with an empty doorway, but passing it caused the dimension to morph back into a normal hallway.
A locked door blocked the way, but they heard music coming from an open window above.

“Go for it, Peas.” Sunni threw the little Friend up there, giving Peas view of a party room where Shy Guys occupied the dance floor. Peas crossed a mini walkway to a chandelier of candles, where half the candles lit up on their respective intervals. There was always a safe spot between two lit candles, so Peas had to jump along those spaces to get across. The pea continued on a normal path, which went under a ceiling that was being swept by Broom Guys. The giant brooms swooshed left, right, left, right, and Peas had to quickly rush across before they would shove him off. The pea located a large key and mustered the strength to pick it up and carry it back through the trials.

Peas brought the key back to Sunni, who could open the locked door. The following room had another locked door and a wall of spider webs leading up to a high ceiling. Spinarak Pokémon crawled around the webs, and Mary took the liberty of climbing up with Glue Crayons. She avoided the spider Pokémon and pulled the key free at the top of the webs, dropping down for Sunni to catch her. They opened the door to a long hallway, wherein they stood on a ledge above an electrified floor.

The walls on either side had unlit candles. Mary stylishly tossed an Orange Flame Crayon across the right row, lighting the candles up perfectly, but the left row was too low for her to get a good angle. However, those candles were close enough for Peas to jump across, and they led to a small platform with a red nozzle. Peas jumped on the nozzle’s switch to shoot fireballs across the candles. When both rows were lit, the electricity vanished, allowing Sunni and Mary to cross the hall without worry.

The passage became wider as they viewed paintings on either side. They were portraits of the Corporate Presidents. The left wall had Carter Pewterschmidt, Norman Osborn, Charles Burns, Don Quixote Doflamingo, and Gozaburo Kaiba. The right wall had Morgan Uno, Mom, Ted Wassanasong, Giovanni, and an unknown president with white hair, a white mustache, and white tuxedo. “I guess he’s a new recruit?” Sunni wondered. “They have been losing a lot of members.” The group continued past a door, but the level didn’t end here. (End song.)

The path ahead was lined with giant Vikings, wielding axes and spiked pants. The only parts of their pants that weren’t spiky was the pelvic area. Sunni noticed a maestro on her left, ready to conduct, and a sign above that read Giant Nuts. No doubt this was a music level. And Sunni knew just what to do. (Play “Ode to the Nut Shot” from Robot Chicken!)

Act 2: Giant Nuts

Sunni ran forth, the first giant raised its axe, then Sunni jumped and kicked him in the groin! She ran and kicked another one, then up to another one, the giants charged from ahead, but she jumped and kicked their groin with excellent timing! Giants dropped from above with legs conveniently split, they flew back clutching their groins from Sunni’s strong kicks! A row of giants charged ahead, a giant flew from behind with a leg extended, so she ducked and allowed that giant to kick the others down like dominoes! To cross their bodies, Sunni jumped up a stairway of Fly Guys, bouncing in tune with the music.

Once up top, Sunni kicked more giants’ nuts that came with the faster beats. An upside-down giant was clogging a hole she had to jump down—Sunni had to Ground Pound his groin three times to get through. The music grew softer as the following giants tried to brace their selves, only to fail. A giant squirrel was making an acorn pile—Sunni kicked through it. A giant astronaut was slowly descending, she jumped and kicked him in the groin, watching him fly up and collide with a moon. The song ended as Sunni encountered the maestro. The man was humbly bowing to his audience, so Sunni charged one final kick to his groin. The final note strummed and Sunni completed the level. (End song.)

“If that wasn’t the weirdest thing I ever did.” Sunni remarked as they entered a gymnasium. She gasped, “CHEREN!”

The boy had just defeated another team of Anti Guys using Demon State. He whipped around. “Sunni!” The Fury Mode vanished as he ran over. “Did you actually hear my telepathy?”

“It’s not telepathy when you’re thinking something.” :P Sunni stuck her tongue out. “I just happened to hear what you’re thinking at the time.”

“Friend Cheren!” Mary jumped up and embraced him in a hug.

“Ah! Mary!” Cheren blushed. “You came all the way up here, too?”

“Well, I did the flying part.” Sunni noted. “Then I warped her and Peas up here.”

“Howdy!” The pea saluted on her shoulder.

“I think these belong to you?” Sunni reached in her pocket and pulled out the mini Sacred Casket. After she resized it, Cheren touched the magenta gem as the box flashed open, the Three Sacred Treasures appearing on his person.

Fi leapt out of the Master Sword. “Master, it is wonderful to be with you again.”

“According to Rogue Goddess Medusa, further use of the Multiverse Portal is no longer necessary. However, by some unidentified phenomena, the portal and all of the material within the laboratory has mysteriously vanished. The Ocarina of Time has gone back to Tries-To-Be-Cool-As-Master Nerehc’s hands. With his permission, I have returned to my base inside the Master Sword.”

“I’ll have to talk to Nerehc after this. I’m glad you’re here, Fi, because it’s time for our next challenge. We’re going to fight Aunt Morgan and bring her back to our side.”

“I shall happily grant advice if it is necessary.” Fi returned to the sword.

“Are you ready for this, Sunni? I don’t think I can beat her without a psychicbender’s help.”

“Oh, I’m ready.” Sunni smirked. “I got something to prove to her as well.”

“That’s the spirit, Mary.” Sunni said with a sweatdrop. ^^;

The team of four headed up some stairs outside the gym, to the chamber where Morgan was drinking tea with General Shy Guy. “You know, Cheren, I don’t recall either of us being allowed to ask for help as part of your challenge.”

“Like you weren’t going to summon Friends to fight for you.” Cheren retorted.

“Or as she probably calls them, servants.” Sunni followed.

“I think ‘weapons’ is the word you were looking for.” Morgan replied. “A servant is one who follows trivial demands. Trivial and… pleasuring.”
“And I still declare the trials to be inhumane!” her tiny butler, Benjamin yelled from her pocket.

“How cute, you also have a tiny guy to keep you smiling.” Sunni passed a grin to Peas.

“Morgan, before we settle this, tell me the truth.” Cheren demanded. “Why did you decide to work for the World Government? And leave your old friends behind?”

Morgan closed her eyes as she recounted her thoughts. “Well, first the Kids Next Door. I joined them after the Firstborn Quest and became a member of the Undersea Lab. My Imaginary siblings and I designed 2x4 weapons that could utilize bending powers. The other scientists were afraid of being outshined by someone with a superior psychic brain, so they submitted the design ideas without crediting me, and they began to shun me. They also said that my so-called ‘siblings’ weren’t contributing because they’re just part of me. I didn’t get the same appreciation as Mika or Danika got for their talents, so I decided to leave the Kids Next Door.

“In my hometown, it became public that Buddy, Athena, Sophie, and Beckah were Imaginary Friends. Even though they behaved like their own person and I loved them, nobody else accepted them as real. And in time, I would feel the same. They didn’t age alongside me. Until the secret was known, I mind-tricked everyone into thinking they had always been by my side and they were always growing. The spells wore off when everyone learned the truth, and I didn’t want to keep exhausting power in misleading them. I dropped my siblings off at Foster’s before starting high school.

“After senior year, I began traveling to different colleges to find one that I would enjoy. And during a trip to visit West Coast Tech, I met an unusually peppy woman named Jennifer Bush, who was on a casual vacation. Little did I know I was talking to a World Leader. Jennifer sensed the powerful Psychic Chi I possessed and offered me a position in the Corporate Presidents. Jennifer gave me the opportunity to design weapons for the Government, so I helped create weapons based on my old ideas for 2x4 tech. As you could expect, the Government used superior technology.

“One day, the Head Corporate President Norman Osborn was killed by the Man With the Red Eye. I was promoted to Head President only because I was Jennifer’s apprentice. That’s when I was allowed to meet The King. He showed me the Octogan and the future that was to transpire as a result of the Twenty Keys Prophecy. The prophecy that would only come to light due to the Kids Next Door’s reckless efforts. And so, I thought back to when they disrespected me, when I began to detest them. My cousin and my old friends hadn’t let go of their old habits and began to raise their children to be monstrous delinquents who think they control the world. The Kids Next Door think their actions are just, when in reality they will destroy the universe blindly following their ‘destiny.’ I swore to King Andrew that I would-”

“Shut – the – fuck – up – you – whiny – hag.” Cheren interrupted. “Is that supposed to be a reason for me to feel sorry for you? Why didn’t you talk to my mom if the scientists were being mean to you? At that point, the KND should’ve learned better. But you chose to side with some jerk in a frying pan helmet and his magic pool ball instead of trusting your friends. I think you were just blinded by your own success and thought you were above everyone you used to care about.”

“I never believed that!” Morgan argued. “All I wanted to do was help everyone, the same thing King Andrew wants! That’s why I used my political powers to give wizards and witches more rights. They were resented in the same manner I used to be, I could understand their plight. Of course, Red Eye and that Sky Dragon girl don’t help the mages’ case. I never wanted Nigel, Kuki, or anyone to die, and the only reason they are is because you chose to follow this stupid prophecy!”

“Didn’t you see that message in the sky?!” Cheren tightened the hold on his sword, infuriated by that statement. “King Andrew is the blind one here! The Octogan is controlling him, controlling the World Government through him! We have a chance to save the universe by helping Mr. King defeat his Negative!”

“Do you honestly believe that? How do you know this ‘Calliope’ isn’t the deceitful one?”

“Because SHE hasn’t tried to kill us a dozen times! Morgan, you seem to forget that your old friends beat the snot out of Supreme God Arceus while YOU were crying for Negatar Gnaa! They did the impossible and saved the universe! Do you honestly believe we can’t do the same thing, given how ‘monstrous’ we are?! I think you strayed farther from reality than you care to admit, Aunt Morgan! We’re going to bring you back, and then I’ll bring King Andrew back!”

“Over MAH dead carcass!” General Guy shouted. “This battle is 2-on-2! I’ll make the first move with my Tiny Man Attack!” He grabbed Benjamin and whirled his hand.

“Wait, Master General Guy! At such a velocity, I’m bound to- WAAAAAH!” The tiny butler was thrown at Sunni fast as a bullet, but Peas leaped forth and stopped him with a kick, letting Benjamin fall to the floor. Sunni scoffed and proceeded to kick him away.

“Actually, General, I would rather fight the two of them myself.” Morgan said. “Your Bo-bobo Kempo is very… uneducational.”

“UNEDUTAMEABLE?!?” the Shy Guy screamed. “Well, FINE! I’ll go over here and eat some square-shaped rice!” He stomped off.

“That’s fishcake.” Morgan corrected. “Now then.” She whipped out her lightsaber and cut a Japanese symbol on the floor, using her psychic to spawn Chompjaws into being. “Remember this one, Cheren? He’s been waiting for the second round, so why deny him? I wonder what will happen if he swallows you. Get grinded into waste or be converted into psychic energy? Let’s find out.” (Play “Graceful Assassin” from Kingdom Hearts: Re:Chain of Memories!)

Boss fight: Morgan Uno

Chompjaws lashed its tentacles at both kids, but Cheren and Sunni dodged to either side as the former charged a Skyward Strike to slice a tentacle off. Its individual ball parts divided and threatened to explode, so Sunni gathered them all inside a psychic bubble to contain most of the explosion. Cheren jumped on a tentacle that swung down and let it throw him up to Morgan, afterwards performing a jump attack, which the woman blocked with her lightsaber. Cheren and Morgan clashed swords on Chompjaws’ head, then Sunni flew up to aid him. Morgan swiftly defended from both attackers before flying up and shooting a giant Psycho Sphere down, missing the kids, but plowing Chompjaws into the ground.

Sunni quickly caught the sphere in her own grip and scattered its energy before it could explode, then she whipped up her lightsaber to block Morgan’s ambush. “You almost killed your Friend, didn’t you notice?!” Sunni shouted.

“A fair risk in an attempt to dispose of you.” Morgan jumped back and banished Chompjaws back to Foster’s. She teleported when Cheren jumped her from behind, appearing above and tossing five Psycho Spheres that he blocked with his Mirror Shield. Morgan binded him in place with a psychic grip before yanking Cheren up, but that’s when Peas jumped out of Cheren’s shirt and dove under Morgan’s. “UAH!” Morgan dropped her nephew and tried to grab the tiny Friend. “Dammit, get out of there you little creep! You’re as perverted as Kweeb!”
“Really, because there can’t be much under there!” Sunni grabbed Morgan’s feet in psychic and brought her to the floor.

Peas jumped out of her clothes and scampered across the floor, but in Morgan’s attempt to chase, she found her feet were glued to a white crayon splotch. “What?!”

“Hm, hm hm, hm hmm, hmmmm.” Mary hummed merrily and wagged her white Glue Crayon. Cheren and Sunni jumped the grounded president, but Morgan burst psychic and blew them back before teleporting herself free and destroying that spot with a Psycho Sphere.

Morgan warped several feet away and cut a Creative Summons symbol on the ground. “I summon Lord Perfection!” The Imaginary Friend to spawn was a purple amoeba with an angry face and jeweled crown. Lord Perfection lunged at Cheren, who sliced him in half with his sword, resulting in the amoeba dividing in two. The giant germ continued multiplying as Cheren and Sunni struggled to slice them all.

“What’s this one’s story?” Cheren asked as he sliced.

“I heard Lord Perfection was a psychicbender’s creation, designed to be some alien overlord for a make-believe game.” Morgan answered. “Sadly, he was abandoned after only a year. Goes to show how quickly Imaginary Friends lose their appeal.”

“RAAAAAH!” Cheren burned into Demon State and blew the pile of Perfection clones off. Cheren dodged to Morgan at swift speeds and threw forceful attacks with his flaming sword, which Morgan blocked with a bubble. The bubble was shattered, so the woman flew above and shot a psychic beam, but Cheren dodged and rocketed up for a flaming up-slash, only for Morgan to evade still and attempt to crush him with a psychic bubble.

The Lord Perfection clones were recovering, so Sunni summoned a giant vacuum Imaginary Friend. “Vacuumy, slurp them up!” Like a Pokémon, it obeyed its master and slurped all the amoebas into its glass capsule. Sunni saw Cheren’s situation and shot a sphere up to break Morgan’s hold, and Demon Cheren fell to the floor.

“In any other situation, what use would you have for a vacuum Friend?” Morgan questioned. “Making it clean your room like a tool?”

“For your information, I bought him cookies!” Sunni retorted.

“How sad. Let’s see how he compares to Weldar!” Morgan summoned a giant black welding torch with a snaky neck, a bulky metal body, and hissed like a snake as blue fire formed its tongue. Weldar coughed blue fireballs at Vacuumy, but Sunni defended him with a psychic shield. “Vacuumy, cough them up!” Sunni ordered, so the vacuum spat the Perfection clones at Weldar, sticking them over his body and clogging his mouth.

“Mmmmff!” Weldar burned through Perfection and spoke, “Lady Morgan, please get these off of me! I fear they are contagious!”

“You’re a giant welding torch, you can’t contact disease!” Morgan argued, but decided to comply with the request and banish Perfection back to Foster’s. “Now snuff them out!” At this, Weldar blew sapphire flames all around the room, setting the place aflame.

“WAAAAAH!” Peas ran fast as his little legs could. “SOMEBODY HELP! I don’t wanna be roasted pea!” Mary snatched the tiny Friend in her hand and drew dark-blue crayon around her area, wetting the floor and preventing the fires from burning over.
Cheren had trouble controlling the fire, so Fi told him, “Master, my analysis dictates the flames around you are partially composed of Psychic Chi. I estimate a 40% chance of commanding them to your whim.”

“Then we’ll control them together!” Sunni declared, contributing her own Psychic Chi with Cheren’s firebending. They both redirected the fire at Weldar, quickly moving it away from Peas and Mary before either of them melted.

Mary gasped at seeing Morgan with her back turned a few feet away, so with an eager smirk, the painting child ran to color Orange Flame Crayon on her. “MARY, BEHIND YOU!” Peas cried—the Morgan illusion vanished, and Mary whipped around when Morgan charged her from behind, lightsaber raised.

Mary felt herself freeze as she stared at the light sword. Time seemed to slow when Morgan jabbed the saber toward her. Life flashed before Mary’s eyes, from those endless decades inside the gallery, meeting Ib and Garry, growing furious as she tried to kill the latter, going on adventures with April’s friends, being forgiven by Ib, and hugging April after she was brought to Foster’s. She came back to reality to watch the end in the form of Morgan’s sword.

STAB!

Mary gasped and choked on her breath. Sunni warped in front of Mary and took the stab through her shoulder. “SUNNI!” Cheren cried.

“AAAAH!” Sunni blasted an astonished Morgan with psychic and fell to her knees, gripping her wounded shoulder.

“You fool!” Morgan shouted. “You took the hit for an Imaginary Friend?! They’re just bodies of psychic energy, living off your own! They aren’t worth saving!”

“YOU’RE WRONG!” Sunni whipped around. “When I formed contracts with all these Friends, I made friendships with them. I got to know them. If you knew an ounce of Mary’s background, you would know she has a real soul!”

“Hmph. Even if I wanted to believe that, you can’t possibly tell me that you share a special bond with all of them. In reality, you only formed these friendships so that you could use them as weapons!”

“For your information, I gave them the choice to fight with me if they wanted to! Not as weapons, but as actual teammates and comrades!” Sunni cut another symbol and summoned a floating roll of bandage tape. “Bandy here watched his own creator die of blood loss and regretted not being able to save him in time.” Sunni explained as Bandy proceeded to wrap up her wound. “And Vacuumy was abused by his creator, a circus carny who only made him clean elephant poop.”

“That’s a sensitive topic!” Vacuumy yelled embarrassed.

“Sorry. The point is, I took the time to understand them so that I could be friends with them.”

“Brilliant. Now maybe you can accomplish your dream of surpassing your mother.”

“Oh, screw that. I just wanna beat the snot out of you.” Sunni warped behind Morgan and swung her lightsaber, the woman whipping around to defend, only to be struck from behind by Cheren. Morgan expanded a bubble to knock them back before throwing a Psycho Sphere at Vacuumy, but Sunni warped in the way to grab the sphere and throw it elsewhere. “You can leave now, Vacuumy.” Sunni said before banishing him.
Morgan also decided to banish Weldar before making illusions of herself. The illusions scattered to attack Cheren and Sunni, who swung their swords to disperse the fakes before Cheren found himself clashing with the real Morgan. He surprised Morgan with a shield bash, leaving the woman open for a round of blows against her front. Cheren grabbed an Ice Arrow from his quiver and shot it, only for Morgan to teleport, but Sunni grabbed the projectile in psychic and threw it at Morgan when she reappeared, freezing her solid.

Mary danced over and colored the ice with orange and yellow crayon. “Fire makes ice melt! Water conducts electricity! I know science!” So the Fire Crayon melted the ice while the Shock Crayon gave a zap to her wet body.

Morgan flew above and announced, “You may be used to the Psychic Bubble by now, but how will you fair against a Psychic Diamond?” She moved her hands from top to bottom in diagonal fashions, encasing herself in a diamond-shaped barrier. Sunni shot Psycho Spheres, but they did little to penetrate, and forceful attacks from Cheren’s flaming Master Sword wouldn’t cut it. She spawned four Psycho Spheres around her and made them rotate rapidly as she sent them off, the kids keeping a safe distance when they did. She landed on the floor and threw attacks from a single standpoint. The bottom part of the barrier seemed to phase through the floor.

“Master Cheren, the Psychic Diamond appears to be of a heavier concentration of Psychic Chi. Morgan’s ability to stabilize such energy around her is further attribute to her talents.”

“Wanna give us something helpful?” Sunni asked, close to Cheren so she could hear Fi.

“In stabilizing the barrier while simultaneously using offensive attacks, she has chosen to stay grounded. However, to achieve such a feat, she has removed the bottom portion of her barrier.”

“So we have a weak spot!” Sunni cut a symbol in the ground. “I summon Ghost Dude!”

A ghost wearing a backwards cap, sunglasses, and a shirt that said ‘Spiratical’ appeared. “What up, flesh bods?”

“Ghost Dude, fly underneath and attack her!”

“No lifespan, liquid masses!” The ghost rode a skateboard, flew up, and phased through the floor. He popped up from below Morgan and propelled her upward, stopping the shield. The ghost soared around and came back for another hit, but she grabbed the spirit in psychic and threw him down to Sunni.

“Ghost Dude was abandoned for cheating at a skaters’ contest.” Sunni explained, catching the Friend. “A lot of kids didn’t like him for his creepy expressions.”

“Sunni, I know you’re trying to make a point, but I don’t think these Friends want you telling her about their sensitive backstories.” Peas informed.

“Good point.” ^^;

Morgan cut up another symbol. “I summon Lord Demoso!” A massive Extremeasaur with a black and purple, smoggy body, red eyes, and huge bull horns appeared. “ROOOOAAAAARRR!” The demon lashed its chains and caught Ghost Dude, aiming to pull him into his bowels of wailing souls.

“Ghost Dude!” Sunni grabbed him in psychic while Cheren flew up and cut the chains with his flaming sword. “You’re not becoming dinner today!” Sunni yelled before banishing the Friend.
“True lungs, smelly dungs!” Ghost Dude gave thumbs up as he vanished.

“Yeesh, his expressions are awful.” Peas said.

Demoso bellowed again and swung his chains across the floor, Mary grabbing hold of one before she was thrown up to the ceiling. Mary screamed when Demoso was about to eat her, but Sunni pulled her to safety with psychic as well. “Mary, I think we should send you back, too.” Sunni said. “This is getting a bit dangerous.”

“But I don’t wanna go back!” Mary said with a bright smile. “I don’t wanna leave without my friends!” Sunni made a sheepish smile at that statement, knowing Mary was making a reference. Mary looked determinedly at Demoso. “And if I wanna be a Kids Next Door operative, I gotta be brave!” She ran at the demon and grabbed its chain when he swung it. Mary was thrown above, seizing the chance to chuck Green Gas Crayons into his open mouth.

Sunni pulled Mary to safety as they saw Demoso gagging on the gassy sticks. Cheren pulled a Fire Arrow ready, enhancing its power with his Demon State and loosing it to explode the demon’s lungs. “Nice thinking, Mary!” Cheren cheered as Morgan banished the Extremeasaur back.

“Master Cheren, your Demon State has been active for roughly 20 minutes. I advise you revert to your regular power to avoid crucial energy loss.”

“Darn.” Cheren’s flames dispersed. “We’ve barely laid a scratch on her.”

“On the contrary, Morgan’s dependence on powerful Imaginary Friends came at great sacrifice. Her overall Power Levels, while still very vast, have reduced by 35%.”

“But I still have power to spare!” Sunni smirked. “Anything more you wanna throw at me?”

“Hmph.” Morgan readied her lightsaber and cut four symbols into the wall. “Then I guess it’s time to bring back some familiar faces. I summon The Quads!” She slapped her hand over each symbol. “Buddy! Athena! Sophie! Beckah!” Her four Imaginary siblings landed on the floor. Cheren and Sunni braced their guard. “Attack them!”

“Whoa whoa whoa, time out!” Buddy stated, turning around. “You haven’t summoned us in years and not even a ‘hello’?”

“Yeah, Morgan, what’s your deal?” Athena questioned.

“I didn’t summon you to chat, I summoned you to FIGHT! NOW!”

“Slow down for a minute, Bellatrix Lestrange.” Sophie raised hands and made the slow-down gesture. “We think this whole ‘Head President’ thing is starting to get to your head. I mean, you seriously called us to beat up some kids? Even Sirius wouldn’t approve of this.”

“And we were just in the middle of Goblet of Fire before you called us!” Beckah shouted.

“Should we stop the boss music?” Cheren asked, snickering with his friends. “It looks like you need a minute.”

“UGH! I don’t have time for this!” Morgan decided to banish all four of them. “AAAH!” Sunni grabbed her in psychic and started slamming Morgan around the walls and floor. She released the woman and unleashed a Psybeam, and Cheren joined her by shooting Light Arrows. Their combo lasted for five seconds before they decided to drop, Morgan collapsing on the floor.
“Had enough?!” Cheren slashed at the air.

Morgan gasped for breath and pushed herself up. “I’m through playing games.” Her body turned blue as she expanded a bright bubble.

“Mary, hold Peas!” Sunni tossed the tiny Friend to the former as she and Cheren were engulfed by the bubble, the world turning white as they teleported. (Play “Vector to the Heavens” from Kingdom Hearts 1.5 HD!)

Cheren Uno and Sunni Chariton were adrift miles above the vast ocean, glowing orange under the twilight. They gaped in awe at the marvel above them: the sky-blue silhouette of a giant, lovely angel. Her wings were long and flowing, her body was slender and smooth. “Oh… Why don’t you speak?” Morgan spoke in a soft, beautiful voice that would shame the angels. “Is my Fury form so powerful that… you’ve lost all your senses?”

Cheren glared. He grabbed the Fierce Deity Mask from his pocket and slapped it over his face. “EAAAAHH!” In a flash, he was a few feet taller and holding the sword with twin loops, for he assumed the form of Link’s Negative. At the same time, Sunni punched her head and opened her Psychic Gate, a strong psychic aura forming around her. This average Fury Mode didn’t compare to Morgan’s.

Boss fight: Psychic Angel, Morgana

Morgana formed a bubble shield around herself, flying away from the two as they pursued with terrific speed. Swarms of clones that looked like Mika, Danika, and Kami formed from her energy and flew to attack, but Cheren sliced them into nothing with the Deity Sword. Sunni teleported closer and grabbed the bubble, ripping it open with her own power so Cheren could rocket inside. The Fierce Deity slashed airwaves at the Psychic Angel, but could only land three blows before Morgana warped.

The Psychic Angel appeared in the sky, shining a blue aura over the world as Psycho Spheres rained everywhere. “So, this is why you’re called the Non-Logia Logia.” Sunni said as she redirected spheres back up.

“Whether she’s Logia or not,” Cheren smirked, batting bundles of spheres up, “it makes no difference to ME!” He blasted straight up and caught several spheres on the tip of his sword. He shot above Morgan and threw all the spheres down at her, sending her falling toward the surface at high velocity. Morgana blew the spheres off of her, but Cheren was quick to zip around her body and land blows wherever. Morgana launched feathers from her wings, and the psychic projectiles pursued the deity like missiles. Cheren batted them away, but he was instantly blown miles off by a pulse from Morgana.

A devastating Psybeam shot up from below and struck the angel, who looked down at Fury Sunni. Sunni flew up and made a psychic drill above her head, and Morgana spawned a bubble to protect herself. Sunni’s drill pierced it after three seconds, but Morgana warped further away and lashed psychic whips at Sunni. Sunni caught both whips and wrapped them into a psychic tornado, whirling Morgan around in the process. Sunni flew at the angel and slashed her with giant psychic blades, but Morgana recovered and warped off again.

The angel performed a graceful dance as whirlwinds appeared in the air, conjured by swirling psychic energy. Sunni made psychic walls around herself to push the wind back, but Morgana kept a safe distance from her by dancing. “RAAAHH!” Fierce Deity Cheren shot down from the sky with a surprise attack, forcing Morgan to defend with her wings, but the deity scored a few cuts to her face. The angel started to cry, and from her glittering tears came illusions of her child self on a broomstick, herself wielding a bow, herself as a swimsuit model, and herself holding a rose quartz sword.

“Master, it appears that these illusions originate from Morgan’s fantasies.” Fi said.

“Too bad I have to crush her dreams.” Fierce Deity Cheren mercilessly sliced the illusions with the Deity Sword, but the energy fragments reformed around him in attempt to bind the deity. Morgana turned to face Sunni, who held a sharp glare.

“It’s time to destroy you with my ultimate weapon.” Morgana used psychic to form a giant Creative Summons. “Slifer the Sky Dragon, destroy them all!”

“ROOOOOOOAAAAARRR!” The tremendous orange, shiny snake dragon with two mouths screeched across the heavens. Sunni stared unflinchingly as the dragon charged its powerful breath, meant to obliterate her on the spot.

Sunni formed her own midair Summons. “I summon Plasma Pal!” An orange blob was the Friend to appear, average sized and harmless. The sentient jelly took the blow of Slifer’s breath and scattered into pieces.

“How pointless. Slifer will destroy ALL opponents on the field.” Morgana echoed.

“Then he has his work cut out for him!” Sunni smirked as Plasma Pal reformed. Slifer destroyed him again, but he reformed, Slifer destroyed him, he reformed, and the dragon would not focus on his other targets until that plasma is dead.

“No! Slifer’s only weakness is respawning enemies?!”

“Take a long time to look, because he won’t stop unless you banish him! And I assume his being here puts a strain on you?”

Morgana was suddenly attacked by Fierce Cheren, so the angel formed Psycho Diamonds to bat him around. Cheren drew the Mirror Shield and blocked the diamonds, and Sunni pelted Morgana with a storm of Psycho Spheres while she was focused on him. Sunni created a circle of Creative Summons, and from them summoned Vacuummy, Ghost Dude, Wilt, Eduardo, Coco, Mary, and Peas. Psychic auras brimmed around them, for they were given the energy of Sunni’s Psychic Fury.

“Sunni, you know it’s dangerous to summon this many Friends!” Peas yelled.

“Time to bring you back to the REAL world, Morgie!” Cheren charged a Skyward Strike in his powerful blade and impaled the Psychic Angel’s stomach. Morgana wailed as her psychic energy ran rampant, the Friends got off, and her marvelous body dispersed. Sunni banished the other Friends back before warping the three humans, Mary, and Peas back to Morgan’s office. (End song.)

“Huff, huff, huff…” Now returned to human form, Morgan clutched her wounded stomach as she lay on the office floor. Cheren took off the Fierce Deity Mask and became human, too.
“You’ll have to wait a few minutes if you want me to call Bandy.” Sunni panted, holding her aching head. “Turns out, your head can hurt from thinking.”

“Lady President!” General Guy ran up in a panic. “What in the Seven Seas and 54 ways to kick in the nuts have they done to ya?!!”

“I don’t understand…” Morgan panted. “I poured every ounce of power into that form… and still lost? How can I… when I have so much more experience than you?”

“Our parents had as much experience as you.” Cheren replied. “Maybe more, given they stayed with the Kids Next Door. We were lucky to have them as teachers.”

“But I don’t wanna credit my mom for my recent training.” Sunni noted. “I had to fend for myself. I never knew how easy psychicbending was.”

“Is it?” Cheren asked.

“Well, not totally easy. I mean, there’s a lot of mental patience, you gotta remember a lot of stuff- ow, my brain hurts again!”

“AHH HA HA HAAA!” They whipped toward a screen as Jennifer Bush’s image appeared. “Why, Morgie, you look under the weather! It’s not like you to be beaten by little kids.”

“Master Bush?”

“Aw, and I thought for sure you could win, Morg. With CP10 out of the picture, you were our last hope! Well, except the Inferius, so no biggie! Oh, and also, your services to the World Government will no longer be required. King Andrew is coming to give you a going-away present! Bye, Morgs!” The screen went black.

“Which brings me to another matter!” Benjamin yelled from the doorway. The Psycho Shrink on him wore off after Morgan’s defeat. “I am officially retiring as your butler!” Benjamin pressed a button on the wall, escaping as the room barricaded in steel.

“Look on the TV!” Mary pointed. The screen showed the outside of the mountain as a man in knight’s armor and a purple cape floated in midair.

“What is he doing?” Morgan asked as a light was forming in his mouth.

King Andrew took a great breath and charged power for a Hyper Beam. He unleashed directly at Midway Peak. “AAAAAAAAAAH!!” Morgan, Sunni, Cheren, General, Peas, Mary—everyone screamed at their inevitable demise, the world flashing white as the whole of Midway Peak burst into flames, completely destroyed. King Andrew floated and stared at the flames.

“That wasn’t very nice.” a woman with a Hispanic accent said. His Highness whipped around, seeing Mikaela Chariton floating in midair. She smirked as Morgan, Sunni, General Guy, and the others appeared around her, having been warped and now floating by her powers.

“MOM!” Sunni beamed. “Y-You’re back! How did you escape Team Rocket?”

“Easy! The handcuffs weren’t even chi-blocked, I coulda warped out whenever! I just stuck around for the free food. So I guess you went and became a master psychic without my help.” Mika grinned.

Sunni blushed. “Y…Yeah.”
“King Andrew!” Morgan exclaimed. They all faced up at the armored man in the purple cape. Cheren’s eyes locked dead on The King, mouth agape. Andrew glared at him with his one blue eye, while the Octogan flashed wildly in the other.

“You…You killed my dad!” Cheren yelled.

“He did?” Mary questioned. “So, is he the bad guy?”

“Technically, Daphne Anderson laid the final blow.” Andrew corrected. “But I suppose we’re all guilty in your eyes. Nigel Uno was a great man… before we learned he was a filthy demon.”

Cheren gritted his teeth, whipped out the Fierce Deity Mask, and slapped it over his face. “AAAAAHHH!” He morphed into the godly figure and flew at Andrew with his sword ready. King Andrew lit his fists Armament and clashed them with the god sword, causing the very air to vibrate with their power. Cheren slashed airwaves that Andrew blocked, then the Fierce Deity flew in for a strike. The King smacked the sword away and grabbed Cheren’s face forcefully. Power surged as a light grew from Cheren’s form, later to flash the area white.

“Aaaaahh-!” Cheren fell and was caught in Mika’s psychic, back in his human form. They looked up as King Andrew raised the removed Fierce Deity Mask proudly. The King clenched his mighty hand and crushed the mask. A light-blue spirit drifted out of the mask.

“King Andrew, you said you wouldn’t kill me!” Morgan yelled. “I thought I meant more to you!”

“I didn’t want to kill you.” Andrew said. “But the Octogan thought it best in order to destroy those two. Just as it desired to kill Mr. Uno.”

“YOU DAMN FOOL!” General Guy shouted. “My Shy Guys were still in there!! You burned them up like tomorrow’s egg rolls!”

“The Octogan…” Morgan spoke solemnly. “So you are…”

“Let’s get out of here!” Mika decided before teleporting them all.

Cleveland

They reappeared on the street in front of Sector V Treehouse. The kids recomposed from the exciting adventure. “Morgan, just what the heck have you been doing all this time?” Mika asked with reproval. “Working for the World Government, attacking my daughter and your nephew? I thought I was the mad one!”

“Now do you understand, Aunt Morgan?” Cheren restated. “King Andrew is possessed by the Octogan! You let yourself be manipulated just like he did! You might not trust Calliope’s story, but someone as smart as you has to realize the Government are the bad ones here! Your fellow Corporate Presidents – Doflamingo wiped people from existence, Carter Pewterschmidt abused a sick town – all the Government has been doing is hurting people! But who’s always there to make things better? The Kids Next Door. And maybe we DON’T know what’s gonna happen in the end. This whole thing is just a fight between two all-powerful deities. At least it seems like one of those deities wants to help us. So which side are you gonna choose? The side of the corrupted King, or the army of snot-nosed kids that have been helping people like CRAZY these past few months?!”

Morgan said nothing for a moment. She bowed her head. “…What have I been doing? I really thought I was helping people… I thought the Government was trying to rectify the Kids Next Door’s mistakes. I was aware of the evils of Doflamingo and let him do what he did for my own selfish reasons. Just like Mom in Galaxia… the only people creating chaos was us. I… I don’t know what came over me.”

“The answer is obvious, Morgie.” Buddy said. Morgan looked up in surprise at The Quads and Beckah. “You’re just dumb.” The brother smirked.

“Buddy? How did you all find us here?”

“We came back after you banished us.” Athena said. “We’re psychicbenders too, you know. We might be your Imaginaries, but we have free will, don’t you remember that?”

“We escaped ourselves before Andrew blew up the place, and we floated close to you when Mika warped us.” Sophie followed. “Honestly, you’ve been real sour since you abandoned us. Like you left four pieces of you behind.”

“Well, of course.” Peas replied. “Imaginary Friends are a part of their creators. They’re the same heart. So when an Imaginary is away from their creator, that person is missing a piece of their heart.”

The Quads approached Morgan. “And even though you’re old and wrinkly now, we still love you, Morg.” Buddy smiled.

“Let’s live together again!” Beckah beamed. “We’ll pretend to be your children this time! And you’ll teach us about human things, which we’ll misinterpret as we set off on misadventures!”

“…Guys.” Morgan allowed the four in for a hug. “You four… really are part of me. I guess all Imaginary Friends are…”

“Not just Imaginary Friends.” Sunni smiled. “I think everyone is a part of each other in some way. …Which is either really cheesy or really crazy.”

“I like to think it’s both.” Mika nodded.

“Hm… Perhaps we are.” Morgan smiled. “Imaginary Friends… they’re as real as the people that created them. They’re proof that we… have hearts.”

Mary gave a bubbly smile at the touching moment. “Hmmm…” Cheren relished in the happiness by saying, “And just wait until everyone else sees you, Morg. They’re gonna be so happy.”

“Why is that?”

Moonbase

“YOU’RE IMPRISONING ME?!” Morgan exclaimed, trapped in a glass cage with chi-blocking cuffs.

“EVERYONE!” Cheren cheered to all on the bridge. “The Corporate Presidents have been DEFEATED!”

“YEEEEEEEEAAAAAAAAHHH!”

“As Supreme Leader, I gladly congratulate you ALL for your work! The Seven Lights have all awakened! But we aren’t finished, yet! It’s time to take the fight to the World Leaders!”

“Wait just a second!” Mom spoke up. “I wanted you to KILL her, boy!”

“And I said I wasn’t gonna!”
“It’s pointless, anyway.” Morgan said. “Chances are I’m losing my title as Head President. And if I were to guess, the Leaders are gonna elect President Schnee as the next Head. We already agreed to let him replace Carter. I certainly doubt they favor you as much, regardless.”

“Ugh.” Mom sighed. “Well, then I guess I have a new assassination to plan. WALT! LARRY! IGNER!” She smacked her three sons. “Pack your things, we’re going back to Coruscant.” Her sons followed her to the hangar. “I wanna leave this planet before the Inferius begins.”

“So, are we really going against the World Leaders?” Sugar asked.

“You bet!” Cheren declared. “King Andrew is being corrupted by the Octogan. I’m going to take him down and tear that 8-ball right out of his head!”

“How can you hope to do that?” Morgan questioned. “The Octogan gives Andrew control over time AND souls. He’s extremely powerful! He crushed your Fierce Deity form like it was nothing!”

“The Fierce Deity Mask?!” Panini exclaimed.

“Don’t worry, I can still beat him.” Cheren assured. “Because by now, I’m worthy enough to be Azelf’s Guardian!”

“Yyyyeah… Um…” Azelf drawled. “No.”

“What?!”

“Uhh, according to Fi’s report, Sunni was more active in the fight than you were. But hey, we still got one Firstborn out of the deal!”

“Mew!” A certain white kitten floated out.

“Mew!” Sunni beamed. “You’re all better!”

“Mew Mew Mew!” Mew twirled. “Mew Mew!”

“Mew located the fragments of his energy inside Joey’s body.” Lucario explained. “He did not need much in order to fully recover. A Firstborn gradually heals after a sufficient energy loss, but a god’s power is infinite regardless.”

“Feels kinda easy, doesn’t it?” Terry asked.

“Sure, but think of all the steps previous.” MaKayla replied. “There was rescuing Mew, there was securing Joey, and Sunni had to bond with all those Imaginaries and learn a moral, so… yeah. I say she’s earned a Firstborn.”

“Don’t mind if I do!” Sunni smirked. “Mom?”

“Here you go, Honey!” Mika tossed her the white Spirit Ball. Sunni threw it and caught Mew, and bippity-boppity-boop, the Firstborn was claimed. The ball flashed white and glowed, a ‘II’ forming on its forehead.

Sunni Chariton captured a FIRSTBORN! Only 3 more to go!

“So what’s next on the agenda?” Panini asked.

“First, I’m going to the Negaverse to see how Nerehc’s doing.” Cheren decided. “If there’s only one more Darkness to find, it won’t be long until he does. Also, did you guys contact GKND and tell them the news?”

“The GKND haven’t responded to our calls in forever!” Francis yelled from the static Global Tactical screen. “What the heck are they doing up there?!”

“Maybe we should find out. Does anyone volunteer to go up to Galaxia and check up on them?”

“My sector can do it!” Karin Kurosaki raised her hand. “We didn’t get to do much in Enies Lobby, anyway. Well, except Ururu.”

“Wait!” Yuzu exclaimed. “Maybe Nebula is looking for Jirachi! He’s a Firstborn too, isn’t he?”

“In that case, I hereby send Sector JP to aid in a Firstborn hunt.” Cheren declared. “Let’s try and round them all up before the Apocalypse.”

“I think Uxie took Emily to do some kinda trial.” Harvey mentioned. “She might have her caught by tomorrow.”

“Good to know she’s already getting started.” Cheren smirked. “Kids Next Door: let’s all do our very best in our final 11 days in this universe!”

“HOI!” Chimney, Sector W7, and Mary raised fists.

“YEAH!” Sector W and Michelle stomped their feet.

“You know it!” Wendy Corduroy cheered, alongside Hoagie III, Garry Lincoln, and Sector GF.

“It’ll be an Apocalypse to remember!” Miyuki said.

“I am Groot!” Suki cheered. “Seriously, Miyuki-chan, what are we talking about?”

“Someone needs to explain this quest to her.” Terry sighed.

“King Andrew done blew up my Shy Guys!” General Guy saluted. “My devotion is now to YOU, Kids Next Door!”

“Cool, we need someone to clean the restroom.” Larry MayHence gave him a plunger.

“D’oh, swag sticks!” General cursed.

Jagar King smiled at the energetic children. He closed his eyes and could hear her voice. Thank you all for your hard work, children. I promise I won't fail you.

Underworld Prison

The deepest dungeon was dark and quiet. The prisoners were still and patient.

A bald man binded by too many strong locks to count.

A brown-haired man tied to a chair like a mummy.

A spike-haired man with chained hands, feet, and a blindfold over his eyes.

A red-haired man trapped in a classroom cell as he worked on endless homework for remedial English.
A cracked yellow diamond behind a magic barrier.

A purple giant whose left arm was chopped off.

Two cells that were empty. One had a round pedestal.

They were excited, too.

Okay, the Imaginary Friends, Weldar is from Banjo-Tooie and Lord Perfection was an OC of :iconOperativeNumbuh227:’s. I was planning to make that “Giant Nuts” segment for a long time, lost track of places to put it, then figured “Eh, what the hell.” XD Next time, we will go up into space and learn what the hell GKNF has been up to since we last saw them. Also, that new Legend of Zelda: Breath of the Wild trailer took my breath away. I can’t wait for 2017.
Let Go of Fear

Chapter Summary

Jack Frost, Phosphora, Mary, and Django try to help Madotsuki recover from her trauma.

You know, I was going to make this its own one-shot, but then I thought, why not make it part of the main story? I mean, the whole Madotsuki thing was set up in the main story, it would just look weird if it went into a one-shot. This isn’t even a filler like A Mary Day at Foster’s, it’ll actually have relevance for other chapters. Well, maybe it’s not filler, more of a cool-down chapter.

Chapter 73: Let Go of Fear

Teensie Council Medical Wing

For six years, she had been a prisoner. She was trapped in the room of a man who did terrible things to her. She was trapped in her own dreams. And now, Madotsuki literally lived in a dream. A hospital for injured Dream Spirits. Not all things were free and happy in this world. These doctors repaired Madotsuki’s broken body, and now a group of people wanted to help her mentally recover. She hadn’t decided, yet. The doctors gave her a notebook to serve as a new diary. She hadn’t gotten off her hospital bed; she was used to wasting her days in a bed. Now it was pointless because a dream couldn’t dream. (Or could it?) Madotsuki climbed off her bed and wrote her first diary entry.

Dear Diary: I guess this is our first time meeting, huh? You won’t believe what’s happened to me. One minute I’m deciding between life or suicide. And in the next... I wake up in a forever dream. They said that some monster took my place in the real world. These people want to help me feel better... I haven’t had a friend in so many years. Then that boy appeared in my dreams... he was different. He sounded like he really cared. I wanted to talk to him more... Maybe these people really care, too. ...I’m going to talk to them. Maybe they can help me feel happy.

Madotsuki closed the book. She stood and stared at her cracked parts linked by bubbles. She ceased being human on that night. Madotsuki turned and walked outside.

“Timmy was an average kid, that no one understands. Mom and Dad and Vicky…”

Mary Goldenweek’s eyes were almost glued to the TV in the waiting room. Dream World TV got every channel ever, and Mary had found a very engaging show: Fairly OddParents. Jack Frost, Phosphora, and Django stared at her with disbelief. “You sure you don’t wanna watch something else?” Jack asked. “You watched four seasons already.”

“You know, there’s tons of good anime out there.” Django noted. “RWBY, Soul Eater, Bleach… Bottle Fairy. Want me to look something up?”

“But this show is so amazing!!” Mary beamed. “Most average kids don’t have magical fairies, but this boy does, and he can do anything! I wonder what he’s going to do next?! Will he wish that A.J. has hair, or Chester has a mansion, or maybe Timmy will wish to be a movie star!”

“He did, and he now goes by ‘Drake Bell.’” Phosphora remarked.

“She’ll have to stop watching eventually.” Jack said. “She’ll hurt her eyes.”

10 seasons later

“Timmy’s still an average kid. We still don’t understand. We all went on strike, but Nick didn’t take our demands.” The singers of the opening sounded so miserable and tired. Jack, Phosphora, and Django were bored to death. But Mary wouldn’t take her eyes off the show.

“I’ve taken pretty heavy notes!” Mary noted. “The Big Wand must be plugged in, it gets recharged every Friday, and the fairies’ magic is powered by crazy people who believe in fairies. I have yet to understand why Fairy World is built over Giant Bucket of Acid World since that hasn’t been brought up again. Also, do fairies have a set of two wands? I noticed when Cosmo and Wanda lose their wands sometimes, they have another wand with them, but don’t use it to unwish the wish. Did you guys catch that?”

“Please cancel them.” Jack moaned.

“Hey, party people!” Murfy greeted from the doorway. “Look who’s made a full recovery! Well, not 100%, but what’s a B+ anyway, it’s Madotsuki!” The pigtailed girl with a window shirt stepped in.

The four looked at her in a curious fashion. It was their first time actually seeing her… They wondered how she would react or behave. Murfy left them alone. “So, are you going to help me feel better?” she asked.

“Well, yeah… I mean, if you’re ready.” Phosphora said.

“…So, help me feel better.”

“Perfect!” Django grinned, typing on a laptop. “Since you’re Japanese, I have the perfect anime for us to watch: Attack on Titan!” He showed Mado the laptop as the opening theme played. Giant naked humanoids were chasing screaming humans through the village. The animation was highly detailed as they picked humans up and chomped their little bones up.

Jack closed the laptop. “We’re not watching that.”

“Madotsuki, what do you like to do?” Phosphora asked.

“Sleep.”

“Done!” Django threw arms up. “It’s like we’ve known each other forever!”

“Guys, we’re trying to reintroduce someone to society here.” Jack said. “Let’s just go outside and find something fun to do! I’m thinking ice-skating.”

“I always wanted to go ice-skating!” Mary said happily. “Ice is like a ground you don’t have to move your feet to go across!”

“How about it, Mado?” Phosphora asked. “Wanna go?”

“Mmmm… okay.” Mado replied tonelessly.
The five exited the council and headed to the forest, finding Water Fairies fluttering above a large pond. “You think these fairies will mind if I freeze their pond?” Jack asked.

“I’ll do it.” Madotsuki reached into her window and pulled out a bubble with a snow woman inside. Madotsuki donned the Yuki-onna and created a gentle blizzard. The fairies shivered and fled as the pond froze.

“Woooooohhh…” Mary gaped and held her hands open to catch flurries. “I thought snow was magic… and it showed up like magic.” She caught snowflakes on her tongue. “It’s like magic cereal that turns into water when I eat it.”

“I didn’t know you were an icebender, too.” Jack said, amazed.

Madotsuki took the Effect off. “I’m not a bender. I can put powers in my window and take them out.”

“Brrrr, it’s cold now.” Phosphora shuddered. “If this is the Dream World, can’t we dream up a coat or something to wear?”

“Only in our own dreams.” Jack replied.

“I have a hat and scarf.” Madotsuki pulled said Effect out of her window. “Do you guys want it?”

“You can keep it.” Phosphora said politely.

“Snoooow, snooooow!” Mary took off her shoes and skied around the ice on her socks. “My feet are chilly, but they don’t have to moooove!”

“Woohoooooo!” Jack skied whipping fast on the ice. “Come on, slowpokes, 10 laps around the rink!”

Django lightly dinged a string on his guitar, making blades under his boots as he skated. “Come on, Mado.” Phosphora held a hand out. Madotsuki took it and allowed the woman to ski with her.

Django played a carefree tune on his guitar as they freely skied in circles. It continued to snow, despite the clear night sky. Madotsuki wore socks while she skated, but only shifted her feet a little bit while Phosphora did most of the work. There was a Snow World in Madotsuki’s dreamscape, but she never did any fun activities like this.

“Phos, over to me!” Jack called, so Phosphora slid Mado over. Jack caught her and began to twirl her around, and she felt the chill grow stronger in this faster speed. This was a dream world, but Madotsuki felt like she was actually skating. She was actually engaged in the activity, gaining a sense of freedom as the world spun around her.

Jack released her as Mado spun away, wobbling dizzily before falling on her rear. The four skated to her. “But I guess you did just get out of a hospital.” Jack helped her up. “Was skating a good idea?”

“It was… fun.” Mado replied. “But I…I’m thinking about something.”

“What are you thinking of?” Django asked.

Madotsuki held up one end of her scarf. “There was someone in my dreams called Mafurako. She wore a hat and scarf like this. But she was always invisible. I wonder if she liked to skate…”

“Did you talk with her much?” Jack asked.

“No. …When I died, what happened to all the people in my dream world?”

“We don’t really know.” Phosphora answered. “But the Dream World is swarming with monsters. They said it was part of Mr. Dark’s plan.”

“I wonder if they’re all okay.”

“If they were from your dream world, then they have to represent parts of you.” Mary reasoned. “So maybe you think she liked to skate because you wanted to skate. And maybe if you feel better, they’ll be okay, too.”

“Yeah, but she’s part of Dream World now, too.” Jack reminded. “Would it still work if…”

“Blah blah blah, laws of the universe mumbo jumbo.” Django stated. “Let’s just do something else! Yo Mado, wanna hear the Django?” He started playing his instrument like an electric guitar. “Yeah, didn’t know I can change how it sounds, did ya?!” He played quickly and shook like an excited rockstar.

Madotsuki reached in her window and got the Flute Effect. She started to play music synchronized with Django’s guitar. “Now we’re gettin’ somewhere!” Django exclaimed, playing stronger notes. Jack, Phos, and Mary clamped their ears shut.

“I understand why my parents banned this now!” Mary exclaimed.

“Like, we have this in Birka, but it sounded better!” Phosphora yelled.

Django and Madotsuki jammed it out for half an hour. So let’s pass the time by going somewhere else.

Las Vegas (Play “Come and Get Your Love” by Redbone!)

The night was young and lively in this City of Lights. A limousine pulled up to a casino called Casinopolis. The door opened, and out stepped Bill Cipher, wearing a golden triangle necklace, sunglasses, and colored rings on his fingers. “Thanks, driver! Enjoy your new dream job!” Bill snapped his fingers, and the limo driver flew up up and away with his new Superman suit.

“HEY, PARTY PEOPLE!” Bill burst open the casino doors. “Who’s ready for some Billy C.?!”

“Those doors opened automatically!” the guard shouted.

“Nag, nag! I got paid $500 for a cameo in another story and I’m ready to THROW it all away! Who’s gonna catch it?! Huh?! Roulette wheel, I’m feeling lucky!” The child demon zipped over and slapped 500 dollars for “GREEN 66!” The wheel spun and the ball bounced along. It threatened to land on Purple 17, but with a quick flick of Bill’s wick, the ball stuck to Green 66 like a stick. “If those rhymes aren’t worth a thousand bucks, what is?!”

Bill jigged to the song as he passed by the slot machines, pulling all the levers and landing on 777’s. He started swimming in gold while women clung to him, asking if Bill had a divorced father or if he’d like to be adopted.

After making $100,000, Bill blew it on drinks and snacks—by which I meant alcohol and junk
Bill Cipher
Race: Human (current)
Age: 1,000,000,000,000
Sex: Sure! ;)

Well, ID’s don’t lie, thought the bartender, so he gave Bill all the stuff he wanted. He was later riding the shoulders of a bunny-eared woman out of the casino, chugging down three bottles of beer and stuffing his mouth full of Doritos, donuts, and Wonka Bars. The limo came back, and Bill gave the rabbit woman some bigger breasts before driving off.

Bill was taken to an amusement park, where he sat in the front seat of a roller coaster. The people screamed when he made the coaster fly like a rocket, going up to space and crashing on the moon. Bill got off, assuring himself those guys would be fine.

Then Bill visited the arcade, where kids were staying up way past their bedtime to play. He shoved one boy aside to steal his place in Donkey Kong. Using a special cheat code called ‘MAGIC’, Bill allowed Mario to float, grab a hammer, and drop it on Donkey Kong’s head. Afterwards, Bill showed the kids the secret cutscene where Mario does it with Pauline, then is beaten by an angry Princess Peach. The kids were engaged with the scene as Bill left. A dad was smoking outside, waiting for his kid, so Bill kicked him in the crotch and stole his cigar.

With that, Bill decided to go for a stroll down the street. He flashed a grin at all the passerby and used his magic to change a dog into an electric creature that infected the city, turn a ladybug giant as it kidnapped a toddler, then turned a dumpster into Lady Gaga. With that, Bill went to rest in an alley, lighting the cigar and blowing a smoke. (End song.)

“So, Mr. Cipher… I see you are embracing the human traditions.” Bill looked up at a brown owl perched on a building roof. “Would you like to hear that again?”

“Kaepora Gaebora.” Bill cocked a brow. “No thank you, I’m really into piano. Though these human songs don’t bug me like they used to.”

“Bill, as monstrous as you are, the thing you have longed for the most in your existence is to escape from your boundaries as an Imaginary being, is that correct? You are misusing a wonderful opportunity, Cipher: the chance to live like a human. Would you like me to say that again?”

“Gaebora, I’m an inter-dimensional dream demon with a Power Level of one million. The chance to live like a human went out the window a long time ago, not that I ever wanted to.” He blew a smoke. “So, why are you here? Did the Chronicler send you to put a stop to me?”

“He did not feel it was necessary at the moment. Rather, he wanted me to question your behavior. You appear to be enjoying this an awful lot. Would you like me to clarify?”

“So, you guys are watching me, are ya? I was afraid I looked too sexy, now the Chronicler’s in his stalker mode again.”

“The Chronicler suspected you are indeed in the services of someone else, and recent events have proven true. And if Lord English were to make a return, you’ll be nothing more than a tool. Enjoy your freedom while you can, Cipher. And perhaps… try to learn something.” Kaepora flapped his wings and took off, catching a glimpse of the Superman limo driver.

“Hmph.” Bill scoffed. “Deny it all you want, Gay-bore. But these people will beg me to protect them.” Bill blew another smoke. “Cough, cough! Damn human lungs.”

Dream World

After Django and Madotsuki finished jamming, the group of five went for a walk in the forest. “Thank you for ruining my good night’s sleep.” Jack remarked.

“Why should I care?” Django asked. “For the record, I’m sleeping in the same room with my dying best friend. It’s filthy and smelly. My night’s sleep’s already ruined.”

“You’re dead, why should that bother you?” Phosphora argued.

“But it looked like you were having fun, Madotsuki!” Mary beamed. “You wouldn’t stop playing! Do you like music, Madotsuki? If you do, I’m an excellent singer.”

“Yeah, I like music.” Mado replied. “I like to dance, too. One of my dreams was a world where everyone dances.”

“Oh, we were talking about your dream world.” Phosphora remembered. “Django kind of took us off topic.”

“I was saying that if Mado’s Dream Friends were her creation, then they’ll be okay as long as she’s okay.” Mary said. “An Imaginary Friend won’t die as long as there’s someone to remember them.”

“But I wasn’t really friends with any of them. None of them would even talk to me. Poniko, Mafurako… even Monoko wouldn’t talk to me. She was my friend when I was little.”

“But you think of them as friends, right? You’re worried about them. I say we go to your dream world and look for them!”

“Will the guards let us leave?” Jack asked. “Nightmares are tearing the Dream World up. The only reason we ended up here is because the Teensies are rescuing people from their dreamscapes.”

“Then they should rescue the people from Mado’s world, too!” Phosphora stated. “Let’s go ask someone from the council!”

“Good idea. You up for it, Mado?”

“Um… Sure…”

“Don’t ‘Um sure’ us, of course you want to!” Django lightly flicked her shoulder. “Let’s go!” He and Jack went ahead.

In truth, Madotsuki was still getting used to the nickname ‘Mado.’ She never had a nickname before.

Upon their return to the council building, the group found a small, dark chamber lit by glowing blue designs on the walls. Ly the Fairy was meditating. “Hey, are you with the council?” Jack asked.

“I am… You are the group tasked with aiding Madotsuki, correct?”

“Yeah, but we wanted to ask you something. You’re trying to rescue people from the dream worlds, right? What about Madotsuki’s dream world? Did you rescue anyone from there?”

Ly closed her eyes. “I am sorry… but that world has seen greater turmoil since Bill Cipher’s Nightmares run rampant as Fear Chi floods it. It is a danger to go in there. I doubt that many of its inhabitants, if any, have survived.

The five felt despaired over the information, especially Madotsuki. The peaceful, innocent people of her dream world... it was painful to think she would never see them again. She tried to understand what their existence meant, whether or not they represented part of her being, her emotions. If they were dead, it would feel like parts of her have died.

“To that end... it seems Bill Cipher’s dreamself is gathering Nightmares and building an army. While I support the decision of Madotsuki... I must urge you to decide soon. Whether we execute Bill in the real world or have him return to the Dream World, we must defeat him before something terrible happens.”

“This Bill... He’s the monster who switched places with me?” Madotsuki asked.

“Yes... Fortunately, there have been no reports of significant damage in the real world. Still, we must have a decision. Carry on, children.”

The five headed to a large guestroom inhabited by dream world denizens recovered from their worlds, including the slumbering mortals on their Start Beds. “Those people are gonna wake up and be all, ‘WTF am I dreaming?’” Django commented.

“I don’t understand... why do I have to decide what happens to Bill?” Madotsuki asked.

“It’s not just what’ll happen to Bill... but you’re deciding what life you’ll want to live.” Phosphora replied. “If you decide to live in the Dream World, then we can kill Bill in the real world. If you want to become real again, we have to lure Bill here before we kill him. But Bill will come back as a Dream Spirit if we choose the latter. That’s what they told us, at least.”

“Is that why you’re here? To make me decide?”

“We’re not trying to make you decide on one or the other.” Jack answered. “We’re only trying to help you feel better.”

“But I have to decide, right?” asked Madotsuki.

“Don’t worry about that now! Mado, I’m sorry about what happened to your Dream Friends, but we want to be your real friends.”

“You don’t understand. Those Dream Friends were a part of me. I’m not sure how, but they are. I feel like I died on the inside just hearing that.”

“But if they’re a part of you, then they can’t be gone, because you’re right here.” Mary replied with a smile. “If they like the things that you like, you just have to do the things you like, and it’ll be like they’re doing them with you! (Does that make sense?)”

“Not in the slightest, but what does, nowadays?!” Django declared. “Come on, Mado, let’s rock it out again!” He grabbed his guitar.

“LET’S do something else.” Phosphora stated assertively for the sake of their eardrums. “What else do you like?”

“I used to play games on an SNES. It’s a really old console my dad had.”

“PERFECT!” The Birkan lit with excitement. “I haven’t played a videogame in AGES! I didn’t... have any when I was a kid, but my friends let me come over and play at their place, and I ROCKED at Smash Brothers! Let’s see if these Dream People have anything.”

...

Dear Diary: These people are really nice. But I feel like they’re being too nice. I wonder if they really care or they’re being paid to. Maybe they just pity me. I try to have fun, but it’s hard to be happy. I have to decide if I want to live here or the real world. I wonder if they’ll still be my “friends” after I choose. ...I’m going to play games with them now. See you later, Diary.

“HOLY CRAP!!” Phosphora exclaimed after they started up Mario Kart XX in the Game Room.
(Dream People really do have everything!) “Twenty different cups with 80 different racetracks?! They even have a Lightning Chariot!! Why hasn’t this TV EXPLODED??”

“I was hoping you would know.” Jack chuckled. “You’re the only one besides Mado that’s ever seen a videogame.”

“Not true, Apis showed me one of her games.” Mary noted. “The people inside the TV have no free will, so we control their path.”

“I never played a game like this before.” Madotsuki said as she studied the Wii U II’s controller.
“There’s more buttons than on my SNES.”

“Screw instructions, you only learn from experience!” Phosphora picked the Galaxy Cup and chose Pit, while Mado chose Peach. The race began in the Good Egg Galaxy level. Phosphora used to play Mario Kart Wii with her friends, and the motion controls were basically the same here, giving her the advantage. Madotsuki was already in last place, for neither moving the stick nor tapping the ‘A’ button was working.

“I think you need to hold the button down.” Django instructed.

“Oh.” Mado did so, and Peach’s kart started moving. “That’s weird.”

“You sound older than me right now!” the skeleton laughed.

“Old guys don’t belong on the racetrack!” Phosphora smirked, evasively dodging a Red Shell. (It should be noted she is younger than Jack, Django, or Mary.) “You all can eat my lightning dust!”

Madotsuki was able to bypass some other racers, and she got a Bullet Bill, which could breeze her through the track. However, before she could use it, lightning struck the racers and they shrunk down. Mado was then run over by Shy Guy. “Grrrr! Slow down, let me catch up!”

“What are you gonna do if I don’t??”

“Give me it!” Madotsuki reached and fought with Phosphora over her controller.

“HEY, you already made your pick, no switching!”

“Your kart’s better, I wanna use it!”

“DARN IT, you’re making me lose, GET OFF!” Phosphora smacked Mado’s face and pushed her off.

The three froze at the action, as did Phosphora. Madotsuki looked up with an unhappy expression.
“…” Her eyes furrowed, “You were cheating!”

“I was not, it’s called skill!” Phosphora argued.

“You only picked this game because you were good at it!”

“I never played this game, so I couldn’t know, it just so happens that you stink.”

“I do not stink!”

“Then what was that poor performance?”

“UGH!” Madotsuki stomped out of the room. “I don’t wanna play, anymore.”

“…Okay, lesson learned:” Jack said. “If they grew up with old games, they should stick to old games.”

Dear Diary: I played a game with Phosphora. She was winning, and I got mad. We fought, and she pushed me. If she pitied me, she would have let me win. Maybe she doesn’t pity me. Why did I get mad? It was only a game. Do other people get mad over games? Do friends fight over things like that? I wonder if we would still be friends after that. Mom and Dad used to fight, but I thought they loved each other. Why did they stay together if they-“Hey, whatcha writing?!” Mary asked, startling Madotsuki.

“Um… I’m writing in my diary.”

“Ooo, a diary!” Mary looked over her shoulder. “I used to have a diary, too, when I was trapped in the gallery! It made me feel like there was someone actually listening to me. Even though there was no one. Except mindless dolls. Alone.”

“Except a diary can’t talk back to you. You’d wait and wait for an answer, but you get nothing.”

“I guess not. But why do you think people write in diaries? Are those people lonely, too?”

“Maybe it’s because a diary won’t fight with them. Do friends get in fights a lot?”

“Well, probably. I fought with a few of my friends. ^^; And one time, I saw these two boys, Mason and Dillon fight. They were silly! I kind of think if people were really good friends, they would fight all the time.”

“Why do you think that?”

“Hmmm… I have no idea.” Mary shrugged. “But I kind of liked seeing you get all angry like that! Up until then, you were just sad and gloomy. Now it’s like I’m getting to know you better!”

“But I… feel kinda weird about it.” Mado blushed.

“It’s alright. When I was angry at my friends, it was because I was determined and confident about something. I made some bad choices, but there’s nothing wrong with having something to hold onto. It might’ve been a silly thing to get mad about, but at least you’re opening up a bit more.”

“And there’s nothing wrong with that?”
“Of course not! And Phosphora’s not mad, I promise. She’s waiting outside with the others.”

“Right…” They weren’t exactly ones for privacy. Mado figured. She followed Mary outside, finding the other three.

“Alright, Mado, you can pick the Lightning Chariot.” Phosphora complied. “I’m still going to beat you, though.”

“So, what’d you gals talk about?” Django asked. “Boys, ponies, makeup?”

“What’s makeup?” asked Madotsuki.

“You know, when you color each other’s body parts and get yelled at by your parents.”

“Like with my crayons??” Mary beamed. “I used to do makeup with April’s friends! That sounds fun, let’s color each other!”

“But we’re supposed to use paint.” Phosphora said.

“Paint is drippy, let’s use my crayons!” Mary held up her crayon collection. “Pick one. (And don’t worry, they’re not the Power Crayons.)”

“I guess since it’s a dream world.” Phosphora shrugged. “I’ll take yellow.”

“White for me.” Jack took said crayon.

Phosphora colored Jack’s white hair with yellow crayon while he dotted her cheeks with white. Django drew black skulls on Mary’s toes, and Mary colored the underside of Mado’s eyes pink and the tops purple. “So, people color their selves with crayon all the time?” Mado asked. “Why? They’ll just have to take a bath.”

“I think it’s why some boys like playing in mud.” Mary replied. “It’s fun to be dirty!”

“But why?”

“I have no idea!”

“But hey, we were human once, so why not stick with it?” Django shrugged. “Except Phosphora. Yo Mado, why don’t you color my scalp?” He took his hat off. “I’d take a mean Kermit the Frog. You Japanese have that? Maybe you have something different.”

“…” Mado stared at the bald skull for a second. “I…I don’t know.”

“What’s wrong, Mado? Aren’t you having fun?” Mary asked.

“No.” Madotsuki turned away. “You guys are nice, but… this is going too fast for me. My Dream People are gone, I have to decide what to do about a monster… and I still don’t know if you four wanna be my friends or you just feel sorry for me.”

“Of course we want to be your friends.” Mary smiled. “I know how it feels to go a really long time without friends. I think that’s all you need.”

“Then why do I still feel upset?”

“…” Jack Frost stared at her for a moment. He should’ve realized it before: Madotsuki reminded him of an old friend of his. “It’s because you haven’t let go.”
“Let go?” Phosphora asked.

“Of your past. You’re still tormented by what happened to you. Even death doesn’t rid you of the pain. Don’t you agree?”

The others bowed their heads. Neither of them had forgotten their pasts, even if they tried to. Phosphora was happy working for Viridi, Mary loved living in the real world, and Django enjoyed being a young troublemaker in Miracle City. But their pasts still burdened them, and they would task a group of kids who had nothing to do with the matter to help them. And by the time they were finished, all the pain they felt would be a thing of the past. They would laugh at the idea.

“But how do we help Madotsuki let it go?” Phosphora asked. “Even the Kids Next Door couldn’t save her. And we couldn’t just go back in time and stop all of it from happening.”

“Don’t the KND have timebenders?” Mary asked.

“Even I know changing the past is a bad thing.” Jack mentioned. “I heard the stories.”

“I got an idea.” Django stepped up to Madotsuki and faced her directly. “Ahem… Madotsuki, you were raped.”

“Django!” Phosphora shouted; they gasped at his very direct approach.

“No, it’s what happened! You were taken against your will and raped. I was thrown into an acid pit and burned alive. Phosphora’s bending was destroyed by a fake god she idolized. Those things happened, and there’s nothing we can do about it.”

Madotsuki became very distraught. The memories of her family being run over, being taken by that stranger in the darkness, and then stabbing him with the knife out of fear and vengeance. Madotsuki sank to her knees and clasped her head. A veil of darkness began to spread from her body and consume the waiting room as the four backed away.

“ALERT! ALERT!” Alarms blared. “A large body of fear has been detected in the northern quadrant, Level 3! Evacuate the area!”

“I DIDN’T MEAN TO DO THAT!” Django panicked.

“Madotsuki, calm down!” Phosphora shouted. “Madotsuki!”

“Step away, children!” a dark voice spoke. The spread of darkness ceased, and Darkrai II emerged from a shadow. The Nightmare King steadily compressed the fear back into Madotsuki.

“Darkrai? What are you doing here?” Jack asked.

“I had my concerns when I learned of Madotsuki’s fate. A Bubble Dreamer has powers over the Dream World, which means their nightmares are stronger than average. For Madotsuki to become a Dream Spirit… her fears possess great and terrible influence to the world around her.”

Darkrai was able to channel the fear into Madotsuki’s mind. Her expression was still distraught. “This girl has seen terrifying things. Her dreams were so distorted that I forbade my Nightmares from dining off the Fear Chi that looms there. I feared that the chi would make them go mad. Every night I visit her in her sleep, I can only… pity her. But do not forget, the light side of the Fear Element is the power to conquer one’s fear. The same as you all have.”

“But how do we help Mado?” Mary asked.
“This may go against my duties as a Nightmare King… but I will help. Enter this portal.” Darkrai ripped open a dark void. “If you are willing, Madotsuki.”

“…” Madotsuki slowly entered the void. Darkrai flew after, and the rest followed.

Mado no Nikki (Play “White Desert” from Yume Nikki.)

The five stepped on a mushy white ground that their feet sunk into. “GROSS!” Jack immediately floated up, shaking the gunk off. “What is this stuff?!”

“You wouldn’t like it if I told you.” Darkrai said. “This place is Madotsuki’s dreamscape. Or rather, a disclosed area of it. Look over there.”

In the far distance, there was a horrendous creature with four legs gripping hills. It was the size of a mountain, and its body was pitch-black like the sky, made visible only by the red eyes, red slobbering tongue, and flowing red hair. Madotsuki looked utterly detested by the behemoth. It looked in her direction, smiling with wide loving eyes as it squeezed the hills.

“What in the hell is that…” Django mumbled, sharing the disgust with his group.

“It was created from Madotsuki’s fears.” Darkrai replied. “What do you suppose it is?”

“…The rapist.” Phosphora choked.

Madotsuki reached in her window, grabbed her bike, and pedaled across the mushy desert as fast as she could, away from the monster. She pedaled faster and faster… but when she found herself passing by her friends again, she realized she was no further from the creature than when she started. The desert looped endlessly, and that mountain was always in close range.

“It’s the same as with any mortal.” Darkrai said. “Running away from their fears. But fear exists inside of you. You cannot run from it, Madotsuki.”

“But it won’t do her any good to face it!” Jack yelled. “It’ll devour her!”

“Madotsuki, stop!” commanded Darkrai. She stopped pedaling. “There is no other way to go. You must go to it.”

She stared at him, terror plaguing her eyes. “Do it, Madotsuki…”

“…” Madotsuki turned and pedaled toward the monster. Only then did the mountainous beast decide to crawl forward.

“Mado, no!” Mary cried.

“Darkrai, what is this supposed to accomplish?!” Jack shouted.

“Patience…”

Madotsuki saw the corpse of a green man on her right. She looked left and saw Monoko, her demeanor zombie-like as she waved her many bone-like arms. The mountainous monster was extremely close to Madotsuki. She stopped as its dripping red hand-tongue reached down to take her.

“That’s it!” Jack conjured some ice, Mary grabbed crayons, Django readied his guitar, and Phosphora sparked lightning.
“WAIT, I have my bending back?!” she realized.

“No one’s handicapped in Dream World.” Darkrai pointed out. “You should see the hunky legs Nolan gives himself. Don’t do anything, children.” The Nightmare King floated forward.

The beast’s tongue softly grabbed Madotsuki and slowly drew her in. She closed her eyes. “Madotsuki… allow it to happen.” Darkrai spoke. “Allow your nightmare to be over. Because it has already happened. Put your fears behind you.”

Her parents and her friend were killed in a car wreck. Mom was pregnant. Their blood spilled. Monoko’s bones squished out. She was lost downtown. She was caught by a stranger. He did terrible things. Madotsuki got a knife from his kitchen, snuck behind, and took revenge. She hid herself in that room. Forever.

Madotsuki got the knife from her window. She was seconds from the monster’s face. “What happened to you was terrible… but it has already passed. Now, the only person that can decide your future is you. What life do you wish to live, Madotsuki?”

“. . .” She opened her eyes in time to see the monster’s face. She glared. “I want to be free.” Then, she raised the knife and stabbed it. (End song.)

POP! The beast exploded into confetti, and immediately she was kissed by Jar Jar Blinks. Jack, Phosphora, Mary, and Django froze with utmost disbelief. Judging by Darkrai’s expression, he didn’t see it coming either.

“Mmmmmmmmmmmm…” Jar Jar made the kiss last for several seconds. Madotsuki was completely confused. “MWAH!” The Gungan succeeded in getting the box of cookies out of her mouth. “I-sa been lookin’ for you, basha-washa. You guys weren’t playing Hide-and-Seekies, were you?”

He opened the box, which had a troupe of tiny Hershey Bars. “Apologies for our lateness, Commander Blinks!” the general who looked like General Shy Guy saluted. “We was busy preppin’ our parakeets for the amusement park.”

“Das okay. But it’s time for us to go to war: WITH THE HEADPHONES!”

The Hershey Bars grabbed weapons and charged across the barren field to clash with their enemy army of headphones. Epic vocals sounded in the background and animation costs were rising high. “It’s time to pull out our secret weapon!” General Guy exclaimed. “Hit them with… the Didgeridoo Bomb!”

A giant bombshell crashed onto the battlefield, and all the soldiers started playing didgeridoos. “Crud, we struck our own soldiers, too! If this disease spreads, it could infect the entire koala ecosystem.”

THAT’S what this war is about?!” the Flashback Characters screamed.

“It’s okay, Gener-ral!” Jar Jar announced. “I’ll destroy the disease with my LEAF BLOWER!” The giant Gungan grabbed a leaf blower and blew the armies into a tornado.

The wind was so strong, it was spreading to the koala ecosystem. “Aaaaaahhh!” Mrs. Koala screamed. “They’re sucking in all our menorahs!”

“Quick, honey! Take the gold and run!” Mr. Koala exclaimed. The koalas grabbed their pots of gold, jumped into a giant turtle’s shell, and said turtle quickly burrowed underground where its best friend, the octopus was hiding.
When Jar Jar stopped blowing the blower, they were back in the White Desert. The entire army of Hersheys and headphones rained everywhere. Madotsuki was struck speechless. In one minute, she watched a hideous behemoth transform into an annoying slug-rabbit, an army of candybars and headphones go to war with each other, and a family of Jewish koalas escape with their pots of gold inside a turtle. “. . . . .” Madotsuki was trembling. Her eyes were tearing. Her mouth was twitching. Even if she wanted to hold it in, she couldn’t. She let it all out.

“PW AH HA HA HA HA HA! PL AH HA HA HA HA HA HA!” She rolled on the mushy ground, pounded her fist, her face was red with laughter. “HUAH huah hah! Hoof hoof hoof- cough, kuoh, cack—HA hahahaha ha ha ha ha!”

“. . . Did Jar Jar just do what we couldn’t do?” Jack asked.

“Afraid so.” said Phosphora.

The dead body of Mr. Corpse faded. Monoko disappeared. The black sky began to crumble, exposing the blue to the draining white desert. Jack Frost could happily set his feet on the orange sandy ground. The world was bright like Madotsuki’s spirit now. They were happy, too.

In his lonely cell, a warm feeling crossed Mr. Dark’s heart. He felt no pain and anguish. Somehow, for some reason, for the first time in six years… Madotsuki was smiling.

Fairy Glade

“Well, I guess that’s one more problem taken care of before the Apocalypse arrives.” Jack said as they returned to the bridge to Teensie Council.

“So, Madotsuki… what do you choose?” Darkrai asked. “To live in this Dream World, or to return to the real world?”

Madotsuki frowned slightly. “I still don’t know. Would I still have friends in the real world?”

“Course you will, Mado!” Mary beamed. “The real world is a super fun place with lots of great people! There are bad people too, but it’s no big deal!”

“But the choice is yours, Mado.” Phosphora said. “We’ll be your friends in any world, so it doesn’t matter.”

“. . . Then… I want to go back to the real world.”

“THEN IT’S DECIDED!” Murfy popped up out of nowhere. “I’ll go and tell the council members so we can start planning Operation: Kill Bill. Thanks for your help, guys!” He flew off.

“You know, an idea has occurred to me.” Darkrai mentioned. “By switching realities with a Bubble Dreamer like Madotsuki, Bill is able to use Bubble Dreamer powers to make dreams in the real world, if only for a short time. I wonder if Madotsuki took some of Bill’s powers in the process?”

“You mean she can transform into a triangle?” Django asked.

“Perhaps. I still have notes my father has taken on Bill during his time. I could show them to you, and perhaps Madotsuki could experiment with these powers in the future. That reminds me… Jar Jar?”

“Oopie!” The Gungan approached Madotsuki and opened the cookie box of Hershey Bars.
“You want me to have them?” she asked.

“Lookie! Dey’s are in disguises.”

Madotsuki looked closer. The Hersheys took off their costumes one at a time. Mado gasped: “Monoko!” Her monochrome friend was in her normal, two-armed form. “Monoe!” The other monochrome girl with a smiling face. “Masada-sensei?” A monochrome man with a white face, no mouth, a black body, and eyes pointing different directions. “Mafurako.” The invisible girl with a hat and scarf. “Kamakurako.” A sleeping girl. “…Poniko, too?” The blonde, ponytailed girl.

“She looks like me!” Mary noticed.

“Jar Jar took the liberty of rescuing the people from your dream world when the rogue Nightmares laid siege.” Darkrai explained. “I don’t even know why.”

“I-sa needed somebody to take to de boat show!” Jar Jar replied. He whispered to Mado, “Don’t tell Da’ky, but I lets them use his Q-tips.”

Madotsuki smiled, happy to see her little Dream Friends. “…Did you guys… miss me?” They said nothing, as always. “I’m sure they did.” Mary said. “They are a part of you, after all.”

“…They are.” Madotsuki opened her window. “You can come back in.”

Jar Jar tipped the box and poured the tiny Dreams into her heart. She could feel her heart repairing itself. “Whoops, I gave one of them my sunshades.” Jar Jar reopened the window and reached inside. “Excuse me? Where are you going with my—GIMME MAH BOMBACK SHADES!” The Gungan dove headfirst and forced his way into Madotsuki’s shirt window. They could hear him bumping and banging inside her. “Give ’em back! I need me shades to give me lipstick!” Naturally, Madotsuki was feeling sick.

“Soooo, whaddyou wanna do now?” Django asked.

TV Room

“Super Fist of the Nose Hair: GOOFY FACE ATTACK!”

“PAH HA HA HA HA HA HA!” Madotsuki cracked up yet again. 46 episodes of Bobobo-bo Bo-bobo did little to soften her humor. Mary was hard at work taking notes, making sure not to lose track of this show’s complex continuity.

“Yes. Because we’re gonna be here awhile.” Phosphora sighed.

I could’ve set up the next arc, but I felt like we should leave it purely Madotsuki. Next time, we’ll start the next arc. Well, after some Side Stories. :P

Chapter Summary

Wendy infiltrates Casinopolis to rescue captive Star Kids, with the promise that she'll meet her mom. Cheren Uno and Nerehc Onu meet with the Spirit KND Leader.

This chapter kind of corresponds with Chapter 74, regarding some inter-connecting events.

Chapter B-32: Mother?

Climbers House; Facilier’s Emporium

Five days had passed since Wendy spoke with her father. While Vaati was attending to business with the White Lotus, Dr. Facilier resumed giving Wendy magic lessons. Holding a blue rubber ball in hand, Wendy focused her power and thoughts and cast Transfiguro on the ball. It morphed into a blue toad. “Only thing wrong is the color.” Wendy said. “Hey Carla, maybe if I get good at this, I can turn you into a human like me!”

“Heh heh.” Wendy blushed. “…Is your wing feeling better?”

Carla flapped both wings and lifted off the floor. “I think I’m alright. I suppose I owe Lapis my thanks. Still, I believe the more pressing concern was that display in the sky.”

“I’m worried about that, too. I wish my dad would come back soon.”

“Wendy, why on Earth do you want to join the Revolutionaries? You haven’t even started your first year at school, you’re far too young to be a war hero.”

“I wasn’t sure about it at first, but if my dad thinks it’s best for me, maybe I should trust him. Besides, he said that I would be helping the Kids Next Door this way.”

“I see. But I have to wonder what your father would have said if you refused?”

“If she did not, it wouldn’t change the fact she is my daughter.” Carla gasped when Vaati seemed to appear out of thin air.

“DAD!” Wendy jumped up and hugged him.

“WHERE did you come from?!” Carla shouted. “Mr. Facilier said no one could Apparate in here!”

“We Minish tend to be very stealthy.” Vaati smirked. He patted his daughter’s head and said, “Moving on, whether she is a White Lotus or not, I planned to teach Wendy what I know and help her become stronger. You may not think highly of me, Cat, but don’t forget who enrolled Wendy into Hogwarts.”

“I’ve been meaning to ask about that.” Wendy said. “Dad, if you’re a wanted criminal, how did you get them to accept me?”
“That’s one of the beautiful things about that school: they don’t care about a person’s origin, as long as a body is brimming with magical potential, they will take it. Once they see what you can provide for them, they won’t regret their decision.” Vaati smiled with confidence for his daughter. “But there is still more to prepare until that day. As a future member of the Revolutionaries, I want to give you a mission.”

“Absolutely! What’s the mission about?”

“In Las Vegas, there is a casino called Casinopolis. It’s a massive casino that draws in even the most modest of men. My spies have done recon on the facility, and have realized there is mind-control in the works. The casino lights manipulate the customers into gambling away all their savings, and it all goes to the wealthy nobles. I was never a fan of casinos, but this makes me hate them more. I would like you to find the source of the mind-control and destroy it.”

“You can count on me.” Wendy nodded seriously. “But, if it’s okay… I want to take Carla with me. It wouldn’t feel right doing a mission without her.”

“Hmm… Very well.” Vaati frowned slightly. “Then it’s a good thing I acquired two of these.” He pulled out sunglasses from his cloak. “The casino employees wear these to keep from being affected by the lights. Wear them and you’ll be safe.”

Carla took a pair and studied them, suspicious at this story. “You know, the last time you gave Wendy a mission, it turned out to be ludicrous and one of her friends was captured. Why should we trust your intel this time?”

“Because it’s true. But rest assured, I plan to make it worth your while.” Vaati smiled at Wendy. “If you complete the mission, I’ll introduce you to your mother.”

“Why do you need to REWARD her with that?! After all you put her through, you should let Wendy meet her mother NOW!”

“Carla, it’s okay!” Wendy consoled. “I can wait a little longer until I meet my mom.” She put the sunglasses on and flashed a grin. “After all, I feel lucky tonight!”

DNK Moonbase

Cheren Uno and Panini Drilovsky climbed through the mirror to Nerehc’s office. As if he were expecting them, Nerehc was standing there waiting. “Nerehc, we have some news.” Cheren said.

“Does it have anything to do with that business in the sky?” Nerehc asked.

“You saw it, too?” Panini said with surprise.

“I saw it, too. I got two people who might know something about all this.”

Nerehc led them to the prison wing, where the Gnik siblings sat patiently in their cell. “Egroeg, AlyakAm… are you finally ready to spill?”

“The cat is out of the bag, Alyak.” Egroeg said.

“Very well, we confess.” AlyakAm followed. “Yes, Nerehc. We knew about Lord English all along. Our father spoke for English, so by extension, we were his pawns as well. My father did not want anyone to speak of English until it was time, so I entrusted English’s identity to Ydolem, along with the Octogan locations.”
“In hindsight, it was a meaningless gesture.” Egroeg continued. “There is nothing that can prevent Lord English’s return.”

“We can prevent it.” Cheren assured. “If Mr. King defeats your father, we can save everyone!”

“Even if that were possible, the Apocalypse would still transpire. Without the Twenty Keys, only those under the Will of Sixes would live to see the future.”

“Then we have no time to lose. Nerehc, who’s the last Darkness? How do we find him?”

“You’re gonna love this.” Nerehc remarked. “The last Darkness is Ganondorf.”

“GANONDORF?!”

“Well Cheren, you wanted an excuse to make Azelf like ya.” Panini shrugged.

“But our moms destroyed Ganondorf! What are we supposed to do, bring him back?!”

“Don’t ask me, ask Medusa! She’s the one that’s been treating us like lapdogs all month. I don’t suppose you guys have any ideas.”

“Afraid not, Nerry.” Panini replied. “Brave little Cherry here is in the middle of planning his climactic battle against the World Government’s King.” She nudged Cheren’s arm. “He lost the Fierce Deity Mask to that monster, so he’s totally in over his head!”

“I am not! I just have to figure out the Octogan’s weakness.”

“HA!” AlyakAm laughed. “You are in over your head. The Octogan’s power is limitless. No god in this universe can challenge it.”

“Then we need a god not from this universe.” ;;;; ) a girl’s voice said. Nerehc, Cheren, and Panini turned to find a Zoni, whose left eye had seven pupils. “Hellooooo! I haven’t seen you three since Termina.”

“Termina?” Cheren raised a brow. “You were one of those Zoni?”

“Allow me to properly introduce myself: I am Vriska Serket, a mem8er of the trolls, and a special friend of Majora.” ::;;;

“I haven’t seen Majora since January… Do you know where he is?”

“Majora has 8een captured and trapped in Underworld Prison, on the same floor as most of the Thirteen Darknesses. Medusa organized his 8eing there with the hopes you would attempt to rescue him, Cherry Cakes.”

“Why would I want to rescue Zanifr?”

“8ecause Zanifr knows a way you can overpower the Octogan. If I were you, Cherry, I wouldn’t pass up the knowledge. Granted, it would be easy to tell you myself… 8ut don’t you think Majora owes it to you?”

“This sounds a little too suspicious.”

“Think what you want, 8ut you’re missing the 8ig picture here: the Thirteen Darknesses are in Underworld Prison as well, and eventually Medusa will want you to help rescue them. You might as well get started. Trust me kids, I’m on your side. I wouldn’t 8e telling you this if we didn’t know exactly what we were doing.” ;;;

“What do you think, Cheren?” Nerehc asked.

The former was silent for a moment. “…Majora’s the one who started all this. I think it’s only fair he comes to watch the end with us. I say we go to Underworld Prison and speak with him. Him
AND the Darknesses.”

“You think Grim will even let us?” Panini asked.

“He doesn’t have to. I know someone who can help.”

Las Vegas

“Call me the Gamblin’ Girl!”

Wendy Marvell wore sunglasses, a black jacket, gold “$” necklace, and black leggings that went into white shoes. Her hair was tied in a ponytail, and she made a snazzy grin. “That outfit is positively atrocious, Child.” Carla stated. “Mr. Vaati said that all you needed were the sunglasses.”

“He says it’s cute when I dress up! And if we’re going into a casino, we can’t stand out.”

“You’ll stand out by wrecking the place in search for a mind-control device.”

“Well, now I’ll do it with style.”

The city was full of flashy people with money suits, gold cars, and even colorful hair, so no attention was directed at Wendy and her winged cat. “Wendy, don’t you find it a bit insensitive that he’s making you earn the right to see your mother?”

“I like to think of it as positive reinforcement. It’s better than a crummy piece of candy.”

“There’s just no reasoning with you, Child.” Carla sighed. They stopped when they found the casino in question, labeled with big white letters. “Wendy, don’t you find it a bit insensitive that he’s making you earn the right to see your mother?”

“More ready than I’ve ever been before!” (Play “Casino Night” from Sonic 2 HD!)

Stage B-28: Casinopolis

Mission: Break the mind-control spell over the casino!

Wendy charged through the front doors and had to sidestep various aisles of slot machines. She would soon jump on a large roulette wheel over a gold coin pit, running in place on the spinning wheel as a ball was thrown onto it. Between the three different directions marked by color, the ball landed on the “green” path to the left, so a claw grabbed Wendy and threw her that way. The path was curved like a “U” on either side as Wendy had to dodge giant pinballs rolling up and down.
“Look, Carla! A giant pinball machine!” Wendy pointed with excitement.

“I have to agree with your father on one thing: this place is ridiculous! Do they think bigger is better or something?”

“I don’t think that’s what they were going for! Protego!” Wendy jumped down to the ball slot and encased herself in a bubble shield. “Carla, you push the buttons!”
“Are you insane, Wendy?! Ugh, the lessons that man has taught you.” Carla flew to the control panel and pressed the spring button to send Wendy up and into the sloped machine. Carla had to alternate between left and right buttons to make the respective flippers keep Wendy aloft, as it seemed the top of the playfield would make the stage progress. Wendy fell into a slot machine, whose icons represented Pikmin, KND, Pokéballs, 7’s, Pipo Monkeys, and 13’s. Wendy got two KNDs and a Pipo, earning her 5 coins.

Wendy tried to maneuver herself as Carla bounced her up toward the top, but with all the bumpers in the way, it was an annoying and time-consuming task. Wendy fell into the slot machine and lost 3 times before Carla managed to bounce her to the top. Unfortunately, the trial was not over as Wendy was forced to roll down a great slide. Her position was recorded on a camera for Carla to see, so when the child was about to roll into a pit, Carla pressed a flipper to fling her over it.

Now on a wider path, Wendy maneuvered her ball right to hit an intangible ‘9’. There was a ‘7’ on a narrow bridge between two long gaps, but she braved the danger and hit the number without falling. Wendy was rolling to a zigzaggy path with tight turns and no fencing, but there were flippers available for Carla to bounce Wendy onto the curved path. There was a hidden path under a left curve with a ‘5’—Carla didn’t see it in time before bouncing Wendy right. The road sloped down and swerved left as Wendy kept balance within her ball, hitting a ‘6’ on her right but missing a ‘4’ on her left.

The slope dropped Wendy on another pinball playfield, whose only purpose was to hit the 1, 2, and 3, but since she already missed the other Bingo numbers, Carla let her roll to the bottom. The kitten flew to reunite with her owner as Wendy dispelled the shield, and they found a cage holding a Fire Soul that would open if they had passed the Bingo challenge. They continued to a large, rotating roulette wheel-like floor where Groove Guys were dancing, and had a shining glass container with little star beings in the center.

“Carla, aren’t those Star Children?” Wendy recognized them from a book. “They look upset.”

Carla flew over the edge to see the electrical pipe underneath the wheel. “Perhaps the Star Children are being used as a source for the hypnotism. We ought to free them, Child.”

“Reducto!” Wendy cast the explosive curse on the capsule’s bottom, but it backfired and blew Wendy back. “OW!” The Groove Guys took action and attacked the air mage, so Wendy blew them apart with an air gust while Carla used Torpedo Spin to knock some down. Wendy leapt around and defeated the Shy Guys with Cyclone Fists and Kicks, so the only matter remaining was the Star Children.

“Smash the purple spaces to free us!” they told her. Wendy noticed purple spaces on the roulette and proceeded to stomp them. The capsule opened and the Star Children flew free.

“That’s one down.” Carla said. Beyond the wheel was a pinball tunnel, which slurped the two in, passing under the casino and releasing them back in the starting room. Wendy raced back to the roulette wheel as the ball landed on the north “blue” path, so the claw threw her in that direction. A downward path led Wendy outside to a great, Golden Sea of Coins. “Don’t fall in the coins, Child. According to your father’s notes, the coins have a magic curse that is meant to draw out a person’s greed and prevent them from wanting to leave.”

“Well, if I can tread water, coins will be no problem.” Wendy used her Sonic speed to dash over the Golden Sea. She avoided the people who had fallen victim and were swimming in the sea, as well as the Shy Guy pirate ships that were shooting pinball cannons and creating huge coin splashes. Wendy ran up a green path designed like a shuffleboard table and could rest without fearing the coins’ spell. There was another distant platform and a Fly Guy available to jump off. Wendy was propelled and whirling through the air upon doing so, but she would sink before long, tempting Carla to grab her. There was another available Fly Guy, so she dropped Wendy on it to continue her flight to the platform.

Carla caught Wendy before she would fall again and landed her on the foothold. The following path had Limbo Guys with high, low, and medium bars. Wendy ran and tried to jump a medium bar—“Ow!” she tripped, stumbled forward, and bumped her head against a high bar, causing her to fall. Wendy recomposed and resumed, jumping the low bars while sliding under the middle and high ones. At the end, she could run off a ramp that would lead her into an enclosed area within a wall. There was another Star Child container in the center of a golden fountain.

There were Fly Guys catching coins in their buckets whenever the sprinklers erupted, and the fountain was divided in two levels. Wendy noticed three purple switches around the wall, and she would have to wait for a Fly Guy to get lined with it, use the fountain to shoot her up, and kick the Fly Guy into the switch. There was a switch level with a low fountain and two level with the high fountains, but once Wendy had them pressed, the Star Children were free.

Wendy ran across the Golden Sea to get back to the main room, but on the way she noticed more intangible Bingo chips. If she found them all scattered across the sea, she would get a Fire Soul, but this wasn’t her concern at the moment. Wendy arrived in the main room and ran onto the roulette wheel once again. The ball landed on the right “red” path and the claw threw Wendy towards. She was brought outside, gaping at the marvel standing over her. “WHOA! It’s a giant house of cards!”

“Be careful running up it, Child! Too much momentum will make it lose balance.” Carla cautioned. Wendy ran up a sloped walkway onto the first floor of the house, and like the kitten said, the flimsy structure was wobbling. Wendy slowed to a fast-walk as she looked around, finding a stack of cards under a hole in the ceiling. She bounced off the stack quickly before Carla lifted her up through the hole. The second floor had Snipe Guys hiding in card forts with the beam of their guns sticking out. They were situated in a maze of card stacks, so Wendy needed to find ways around them.

At the end of the maze, Wendy ran up a card stairwell to the third floor, where she needed to make quick leaps over card fences. She ran while doing this so her momentum would carry her over the room quicker, and made gentle but effective leaps so as to avoid disturbing the house’s balance. Carla carried her up through a hole to the roof, and a bridge of tiny cards led across to the Star Child capsule. Wendy used Reducio to shrink herself and run over the cards before her small weight would overcome them. “Couldn’t you have shrunk and let me carry you up here?” Carla questioned.

“Might as well get the full experience!” Wendy resized herself once across and had to deal with three Gun Guys perched on top of card towers. Wendy cast Protego to block the bullets, got near the towers, and used Ascendio to propel herself up and Ground Pound the Shy Guys and smash their cards, hitting the purple switch underneath. The Star Children were free, and Wendy jumped to the ground around the Card Fortress to avoid toppling it.

When she ran on the roulette wheel in the main room, it was levitated upward, bringing Wendy to a new hallway. She sidestepped to avoid incoming giant pinballs, the hall sloping up until she was outside again. 40 meters over the Golden Sea, she was viewing a giant roulette wheel with a bigger shining capsule in the center. “OH YEEEEAAAH!” The casino’s master – a Goomba in a pink top-hat named Gamba – was dancing around the capsule. “Get your GAMBLE groove on! Well, Jirachi?! Are you IN the GAMBLE mood?!”
“I – am!” Jirachi the Star Child was dancing on a platform in the capsule, not knowing that his magic was being sapped at a slow pace. “I got, the, gamblin’ GOODS!”

“IN – the – gamblin’ HOOD!” Gamba sung.

“This one must be the core.” Wendy observed. “Hey, if Goombas get stomped in the head, they don’t die, do they?”

“No, they just get knocked out. Don’t get spotted, Child.”

As Wendy ran down onto the giant wheel, Gamba sang to the stage’s music. “Take me hoooome… to New Goom Cityyyyy… Where the lights are flashin’, guys are bashin’, and girls just look so dashin’. Take me tooo the laaand… where I have a haaand… as Miiister: Gaaaamblin’: Maaaaaan!”

The roulette was divided into multiple segments and had searchlights alternating between segments. Wendy ran counterclockwise around the first segment, jumping spiked tiles and halting when searchlights appeared. She stopped at a card wall that shielded her from a Snipe Guy’s vision, standing back-to-back with another Snipe Guy, and both were on a purple switch. Carla lifted Wendy above to stomp down on both of them, then pressed the switch. She kept running and jumping pinballs before a spring bounced her to the second level.

“I have millions of buckers and I’m dancing!” Gamba twirled. “I have millions of suckers and I’m dancing! I got more hoc-key puckers than Kaptain Kruckers—WHY can’t I stop DANCING?!?” On the second segment, Wendy had to jump or duck limbo sticks, because touching them would set off the alarms. Halfway through, the sticks went in and out, requiring Wendy to watch them carefully and make the right moves. A low stick retracted above a purple switch, with only two seconds for Wendy to press it, but she did so in time to dodge the stick.

“Who’s your favorite King of Shambles – Mister Gamble Man?” Gamba was unaware of the intruder running across the third segment of his wheel. “Who’s the greatest King of Scambles – MIS-TER GAMBLE MAN?” Coin fountains sprung up on certain tiles and would shoot Wendy up into Gamba’s line of sight. Fly Guys swooped down in attempt to lift Wendy up into his vision, but Carla quickly knocked them out when they were low enough. They soon located the third and final switch, smashing it.

Gamba jumped in fright when the giant capsule opened, with Jirachi still dancing. “WHAT?! Did somebody—” He turned around.

“OOOOG!” Gamba hacked spit and fell defeated. Wendy and Carla lowered their sunglasses, taking in the sights of the City of Lights from this view, and not affected by the hypnotic casino. Both girls exchanged winks. (End song.)

“Dat dah dah, gamblin’ man, BAM!” Jirachi jigged. “Huh?” He realized Gamba was knocked out, floating down to him. “Hey, what happened? Partied out?”

“You realize this person was holding you prisoner, don’t you?” Carla asked.

“He was? I was wondering why he kept me in that glass.” He scratched his star head and smiled sheepishly. “Ha ha ha! It wouldn’t be the only time I was tricked like that. But thanks for helping me, I guess.” Jirachi floated skyward. “I was heading somewhere else and got kinda sidetracked. See ya later!” He became a star and shot into space.
“So, are we done here?” Wendy asked.

“We combed the whole casino and found all the Star Children we could. We should return home before authorities arrive.”

“I’m with ya. Race ya, Carla!” Wendy ran off first.

Climbers House

“Heh heh heh heh…” When Wendy and Carla returned to the Climbers’ basement, Vaati was on the floor, laughing at papers. “My, my… they’ve really outdone their selves.”

“Is something funny?” Carla inquired.

“Oh, you’re back!” Vaati about-faced. “I was just looking at these wanted posters.” He threw a stack on the floor beside Wendy. She knelt down and founds hers among posters of other children.

“Cheren Uno? Sheila Frantic? MaKayla King? Aren’t these Kids Next Door operatives?”

“It seems the Government has grown to hate the Kids Next Door so much, they marked them as criminals. It’s really quite a humorous act on the Government’s part. They’re so close to losing, they’ll try any sort of desperate maneuver. These kids have done nothing but help people, will anyone actually believe this garbage?”

“We’re still trying to believe YOUR garbage!” Carla snapped. “You made a promise to Wendy, do you intend to keep it?”

“Right, the mission! Were you successful?”

“Yes!” Wendy beamed. “That casino was using Star Children to power their machines. But we saved them all!”

“They kidnapped Star Children? Those monsters…” Vaati glared. “Well, Wendy, a deal’s a deal. Are you ready to meet your mother?”

“I certainly am!”

“Great! Luckily, Annie has returned from a mission of her own, that’s why I couldn’t introduce her sooner. But hey, the positive reinforcement helped, didn’t it?”

“Ugh. Where is she?” Carla asked with annoyance.

Vaati approached the fireplace and called “Palace of Winds” as he threw Floo Powder inside. When the emerald flames ignited, Vaati stuck his head inside, telling someone to come out. He got back to his feet, and the person to climb out of the fireplace was a brown-haired woman with a green shirt and black hi-tech pants. “Wendy Marvell… meet Annie Wilconson.”

Wendy was at a loss for words. She couldn’t believe it was her… standing here… “Are you really my…”

“Wendy…” Annie had an emotional smile, her green eyes brimming with love for her daughter. “I haven’t seen you since you were a baby… I missed you so much.”

Wendy smiled as tears welled in her eyes. “MOM!” She and Annie grabbed each other in a hug.
After years of loneliness and running, Wendy was finally with her whole family. Carla stared at the warm moment. She should be happy Wendy found her family… it’s the only thing Wendy’s ever wanted. But Carla wasn’t happy. She only felt anger and hatred, in a form she couldn’t comprehend. Because she didn’t understand it, she couldn’t unleash it, and the anger began to grow inside. “… … Ooooh.” Carla fainted.

“Carla?” Wendy turned to her friend. She released the hug and knelt down to put a hand on the kitten’s head. “Carla, you’re burning up…”

“What happened?” Facilier came and picked Carla up, putting one hand over her head. The cat was gasping for breath.

“I don’t know… Dad, can you do something?”

“Try Reparifors. It heals ailments.”

“Ahh!” Carla shook. “Come back… come… come…”

Facilier raised a brow. “It looks like more than a headache…” He carried Carla to his table, and Shadow moved the crystal ball aside for him to lay her on it. “I’ll try to heal her.”

“Will she be okay?” Wendy asked.

“We can trust Dr. Facilier.” Vaati said assuringly, placing a hand on his daughter’s shoulder. “Come with us, Wendy… we have more to show you.”

“I think our mother/daughter time is long due!” Annie said positively.

“But I wanted Carla to share the moment, too. I would feel bad leaving her…”

“Don’t worry, Wendy.” Facilier smiled. “I promise I’ll help Carla, it probably ain’t nothin’ big. Go spend time with your family.”

“Oh… Bring her back soon, Mr. Facilier.” She was guided upstairs by her parents.

“Sigh… sigh… sigh…” Facilier laid a wet towel over Carla’s head.

“If it were any old fever, a quick spell like what Wendy just did could fix her in no time. I think Carla’s remembering somethin’. Don’t you agree, Shadow?” Shadow nodded. “This requires special help…” He got his phone and dialed a number. “Heeey, Eva! It’s Dr. Facilier. Is Melody around? I need to ask her a favor. …Yes, I’m in Iceland. YES, I know long-distance is expensive, just tell your daughter to come to my shop in Cleveland!”

Vaati, Annie, and Wendy entered the bathroom, which was steaming due to someone taking a shower. Vaati used airbending to clear the mist off the mirror and cast a spell to make it into a portal. “Where’re we going?” Wendy asked.

“A place you’ve been before.” Vaati answered, nudging his daughter inside.

After the parents followed and the portal vanished, the man in the shower – Fegan Floop – opened the curtain and peered around, wearing a pink shower cap. “You hear somethin’?” he asked his blue back-scrubber.
“Look, man, we gonna do this thing or not?” the scrubber asked.

“Alright.” Floop closed the curtain.

Underworld; Castle Hell

The demons allowed Cheren, Nerehc, and Panini to enter the royal palace. In the castle’s throne room, they saw Spider Queen Velma Green resting on her ceiling web. The Arachnimorph saw the humans and descended via a web rope. “Cheren… Welcome back. My husband is in our room… he’s been under the weather as of late. More than usual, of course, he seems more than dead. Shall I bring you to him?”

“No thanks. We’re here to see your son, actually.”

“Oh, well Death is in his office. You know the way.”

Cheren led his friends to a door designed like a coffin. “This isn’t just any office.” he explained. “It’s a Supreme Leader’s office. Death the Kid is the Spirit KND leader. …Panini, you stand in the middle.” He moved her to said place. “Nerehc, stay on her left, pose exactly like me, show the Triforce, oh and Panini, better brush your ponytails like this.” Cheren fixed her rabbit ears to bend in opposite side directions.

“Why are we doing this?” Nerehc asked.

“He likes it this way. Alright, let’s go in.”

The office had skull candles lined perfectly parallel on the walls, drawers and paper stacks in symmetrical position, and even the desk items mirrored one-another. The Spirit KND Supreme Leader, Death the Kid, was a black-haired boy with scowling yellow eyes, a black tuxedo and pants, and pale skin. White horizontal lines crossed around the left of his hair. His hands were folded on the desk as he observed the three humans. Panini was the most different, she stood in the center. Cheren and Nerehc mirrored each other. A Triforce mark on Cheren’s left hand, one on Nerehc’s right. They were…

“No, no, not perfect, not perfect at all!” Kid walked around the desk. “Look at this girl’s skirt, it’s a MESS, totally asymmetrical!” He indicated Pan’s camouflage skirt. “Cheren, your glasses are totally different from this kid, your shirts are opposite, your EYES aren’t even the same! I told you 88 times, don’t approach me if you aren’t going to appear presentable! Look at these candles, I designed these candles so the flames would sway exactly parallel to each other, I print off backwards versions of my paperwork to lay in stacks parallel with my main paperwork, tell me you have not SEEN a more perfect office!”

“Dude, who are you to talk ‘perfect’, look at those lines in your hair.” Nerehc pointed.

“HUU!” Death sat on the floor, hugged his knees, and looked depressed. “You’re right! I’m NOT perfect! I’m a disgrace!”

“Nerehc, you hurt his feelings.” Cheren said reprovingly.

“He’s a nutcase.” Panini remarked.

Cheren helped Kid to his feet. He passed the Spirit Leader a smirk, and Kid matched it as they locked same-size hands. “Hi, Kid. Sorry to come in unannounced.”

“You’re not here to ask me to join Nebula’s council, are you?”
“Nah.” Cheren chuckled. “Kid, do you have a record on the Underworld Prison inmates?”

“Yes, I’ve been keeping tabs ever since the incident last year.” Kid opened a drawer on his desk and grabbed a file. “Prison escapees are a concern for we operatives as well. Who were you thinking of finding?”

“Majora.”

“Yes…” Kid pulled up a paper. “The Masked Demon Majora, whose true name was learned to be Zanifr Mimchi. Showed up at Underworld Prison under mysterious circumstances on January 6.”

“That was the day after I talked to him!” Cheren exclaimed. “It’s… way too big of a coincidence.”

“We’re looking for others.” Nerehc mentioned. “Do you have names like Madara Uchiha, Sōsuke Aizen, Thanos, Yellow Diamond…” He named the others.

“Yes, we have papers on those names. ‘Blackbeard’ Teach was freed by Goddess Medusa, there is a man named Baldy Bald in a remedial English class… However, Voldemort was not collected, and Zeref appears to be absent. Why do these names fascinate you?”

“We have a need to break into Underworld Prison.” Cheren answered. “Those people down there are the Thirteen Darknesses. They’re vital to the prophecy. And as for Majora… We were told he has something that can help us defeat The King.”

Kid looked up in shock. “You mean The King of the World Government? He’s been taking spirits using his Octogan for the past several months, tarnishing the Spirit World…”

“Well, Majora might know a way to beat him. I don’t know if it’s true, but we have to go down there and save the other Darknesses, anyway.”

“Even so… I cannot simply allow this.” Kid set the file in the middle of his desk, perfectly aligned. “As the Reaper’s son, I have a duty to the Balance. This business with the Octogan and even my father’s actions have done much to disrupt it. Disaster would befall us if a break into Underworld Prison created too much chaos.”

“There’s enough chaos with the Apocalypse happening around the corner!” Nerehc argued. “If this is our only chance at saving the universe, we have to get in there!”

“I know!” Kid yelled, irritated. “I know that it’s important… but my father has grown ill, and if the worst should happen, it’s up to me to preserve the Spirit World balance. This sort of thing wouldn’t look good on my record.”

“You know we’re just going to break in there, anyway.” Panini inferred. “It would be a million times easier if you help us.”

“Yeah, Kid. They’d have to let YOU in.” Cheren reasoned.

“Well, yes… but they wouldn’t let you in.” Kid turned to them. “The second you’re discovered, the guards will be after you.”

“Then help us sneak in so we can find the Darknesses.”

“Sigh… check back with me in a couple days.” Kid looked away. “I want to discuss it with my operatives. Just be warned… it will be extremely dangerous.”
“Then we oughta bring our own help with us.” Cheren nodded.

“The other thing is Ganondorf.” Kid continued. “Ganondorf is in Underworld Prison, but he’s in a lower level where the Sanzu River flows. He has been completely sapped of his former power. If you intend to fish him out of the river, it will not be easy to dry him off. And frankly, I advise against it.”

Nerehc stared at the Triforce mark on his hand. He felt like he knew the solution to reviving Ganondorf… and he wouldn’t like it.

This chapter was more of a set up, but hey, baby steps until the Apocalypse, right? Next time, we’re going to jump into the endgame of Augustus’s story. Gamba is from Mario Party 4 and Death the Kid’s from Soul Eater. Until then.

Scrooge McDuck decided to visit Casinopolis. Clad in his bathing suit, he sought to take a swim in the Golden Sea of Coins. He bounced on the diving board and dove headfirst. His neck bent, he gained several bruises, and blood leaked. “AAAAHH! It’s not a liquid!! It’s a great many pieces of solid matter! That form a hard floor-like surface! EAAAAH!”
The Brotherhood of Evil have taken over the Galactic Kids Next Door! Can Sector JP stop them?!

I didn't really have the strength to make a 3-chapter arc out of this. This chapter was after a huge writer’s block. I’ll save my strength for the real action later.

Chapter 74: Galactic BOE

KND Moonbase

“So, these are supposed to be our Keyblades?” April asked as she held the colorful key designed like a paintbrush.

“These things are WAY too small.” Sheila complained, holding the light-brown key with sun teeth and a straw hat Jolly Roger keychain. “I’ll just stick with me fists.”

“Then those are seven of the Twenty Keys that will open the Gate of Time.” Jagar observed.

“Ah reckon.” Kimaya shrugged. “Oh yeh, I got one for you too, Mr. King.” Kimaya showed Jagar the key with a clock design. “Got it from some dude called Ford, said he was your dad.”

“You met my father?!”

“FORD?!” MaKayla overheard. “He was the one that wrote the journals for the Multiverse Portal!”

“The Author of the journals was your father?!” Dipper shouted at Jagar.

“Yes, Stanford Pines was my father, and your great-uncle.”

“WHY HAS NO ONE TOLD ME THIS?!”

“This is GREAT!” Mabel cheered. “Next Thanksgiving will be the best one ever!”

Jagar examined the key. “This was the Keyblade that appeared during my fight with Lucinda. Why did my father have this?”

“Forget about that crap!” yelled Jessie Sidney. “Why are all of OUR keys so puny and YOURS aren’t?!”

“I don’t know!” Kimaya retorted. “Why don’t you just wave them around and see if they-” She waved her Keyblades—the Keyblades of the Seven Lights flashed and became the size of swords in their hands.

“Much better.” Fybi held up her Keyblade with tornado teeth.

“Those Government blokes won’t stand a chance!” Sheila smirked.
“Hang on a minute, Sheila.” Cheren said. “I don’t think any of the Seven Lights should get involved in this battle. The World Leaders are gonna do anything to stop you.”

“Maybe the safest bet is to take them to Great Clock.” Dillon suggested.

“I ain’t gonna sit around in no damn clock!” Sheila protested, swinging her blade angrily. “I wanna demolish a GOVERNMENT!”

“We don’t have to go right now.” Jagar said. “I can protect them if anyone tries to attack. MaKayla, I think you should stay with them, too. I think you’re the Gatekeeper—the one who will open the Gate after they unlock it.”

“Okay, Dad. But where’s George? We haven’t seen him in weeks.”

“Your brother’s fine. In fact, he’s already on Great Clock with the caretaker, getting things prepared.”

“I’m going to the Negaverse.” Cheren informed everyone. “I’ll be back as soon as I check in with Nerehc. Stay safe.” He headed to his office.

“I’m comin’ with ya!” Panini raced after.

“Just so we’re clear,” Anthony fist-palmed, “when we fight the Leaders, I call dibs on Stonebuddy. I got a score to settle!”

“Anthony, you only survived ’cause you had ME.” Michelle remarked, poking his nose. “You won’t beat him this time.”

“What do YOU know, Dumbo?”

“More than you, Bambi. Come on, I need to show you something.” Michelle walked to the hangar.

“Where are you goin’?”

“Somewhere important!”

Galaxia

“YEEHAW!” Jinta Hanakari cheered, sticking two arms and fingers up. “Going on a galactic adventure, just like Numbuh One did! We’ll save the whole universe from the crazy child empress and be the best operatives on Earth!”

“Sit down, Jinta.” Karin told him. “We’re just going to ask them what they’ve been doing and maybe help look for Jirachi.”

“And how you know Nebula ain’t gonna abuse Jirachi for her own evil gain? I’ve had a bad feeling about that girl for a long time.”

“We’re closing in on GKND H.Q..” Kodama reported as the treehouse was in view. “Jinta, please don’t start an intergalactic war. I’m up for blowing up ships anyday, but—” Their ship was bombarded by Wisps wielding laser rifles. “NEVER MIND!” Kodama was quick to blast fireworks at the Wisps and alien ships.

“Attention trespassers, you have entered the territory of the Galactic BOE! Surrender or be blown to ashes!” Jerome Winkiebottom’s Jamaican voice said via intercom.
“Galactic BOE?!” Karin exclaimed. “What’s going on up there?!”

“YEEEAAAH!” The supervillain Control Freak flew by on a ship designed like a remote, slashing their C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. with double-lightsabers. “Galaxia belongs to the Brotherhood now, Kids Next Dumb!”

“The Brotherhood?” Yuzu questioned.

“They must’ve invaded GKND!” Karin deduced. “Kodama, get us in there!”

“They’ve sealed their hangar with an energy barrier.”

“Get us closer, I can fly in there and stop it.” Ururu said, fixing on her suit, which came with an air helmet.

“Okay, Ururu!” The bus barrel-rolled and bounced away the Wisps’ lasers, but their way to the treehouse was blocked by Common Cold’s Snot Bomber. “Have a Chicken Soup Cracker!” Kodama declared, blasting fireworks up the ship’s nose and exploding with warm, healthy soup.

“NOOOOO! You threw in the secret spi…spi…ACHOO! Secret spice that makes it yummier.”

The C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. swerved around the Snot Bomber and barrel-rolled the base’s defense turrets as they swooped by the hangar. Their enemies didn’t notice a fly-size Ururu fly out of the bus and squeeze into a tiny opening beside a turret. The Tiny Devil made her way to the inside of the base and pulled out an X-ray scanner. With it, she examined the barrier and could see the wires linking it through the walls. “There’s what I need to hit. But the openings are too small. Guys, I’m about to go micro size for a few minutes.” She said to her communicator. “I’ll lose communications for a while.”

“You sure, Ururu? Have you tested it?” Karin asked.

“Yes, I did. I’ll try to resize as soon as I can.” With that, Ururu flew for the wall and clicked the shrink button again, zipping to the size of a very tiny dot to fit into the wall. Her strength was still amplified, so she was able to slice the wires with her suit’s claws. Before long, the hangar’s barrier would disappear.

“The shield’s down! Let’s get inside!” Kodama suddenly turned the ship about-face and stomped the gas to boost into the hangar. Karin and Jinta jumped out and began to fight the alien kids while Kodama and Yuzu stayed a few feet behind them. Ururu resized on their right and ran beside them.

“Why are these operatives attacking us?!” Yuzu shouted.

“Maybe the Brotherhood took Nebula captive.” Karin said. “I’m going ahead. Don’t fall behind, Jinta.” She morphed into a ghost and phased up through the ceiling.

“Teamwork, much?!” remarked Jinta.

Karin briefly shot Ecto Beams at some of the villains on floors she bypassed, and in seconds she was at the top of the treehouse, before the Supreme Leader’s Throne. Karin switched back to human form and ran into the office/throne. “Numbuh Eternal, are you okay?!?”

Nebula D. Winkiebottom had one leg over the other as she sat on her throne, glaring at Karin with spite. “Who dares grace the presence of the High Supreme Leader in such an unruly manner?”

“Grace the… unruly?” Karin didn’t remember the Supreme Leader talking that way. “Numbuh Eternal, I’m one of Cheren’s operatives. You haven’t answered our calls, so we came to check on you.”

“My, my, my.” A black robot with horns walked from around the throne. “What grand stroke of fate brought you to me, Karin Kurosaki?”

Karin reacted to the country voice with fear and hate. “Hannibal?!”

“BOOM!” Hannibal whipped out twin yo-yos. “The Yin-Yang Yo-yos! All we had to do was break into a hapless Collector’s museum, and wait for a super-child to demolish Moonbase enough for us to sneak in. I have awakened the Chaos Kin, Karin Kurosaki! The Galactic Kids Next Door responds to ME now!”

“The yo-yos!” Karin remembered. “So, the reason you were after them was to brainwash the GKND?!”

“That’s correct! And after I save the universe, the Galactic Brotherhood of Evil will rule everything!”

“What do you mean ‘save the universe’? Do you know how to stop the Apocalypse?”

“But of course I do! I’ll stop the Apocalypse the very same way Dimentia intended to start it 20 years ago: by harnessing the power of Jirachi. Jirachi’s limitless magical power enables him to grant any wish like the universe’s destruction. Why should he not be able to save the universe all the same? Unfortunately, ever since Jirachi’s bond with the Star Rod was broken, the only people who can command Jirachi to grant wishes are his Mortal Guardians. That is, ironically, Dimentia, or her devious little daughter.” Hannibal’s robot pinched Nebula’s cheeks.

“Don’t you dare touch me that way!” Nebula stated. “You’re lucky that I share the universal throne with you.”

“Right, right, apologies! But what say you, Karin? Wanna rule the universe with Big Daddy Bean?”

“Absolutely not! I’m putting a stop to your mind-control now!” Karin returned to ghost form and flew at Nebula, overshadowing her body.

“GYAAAH!” Nebula shook and aimlessly shot Starbursts. Within seconds, she stopped shaking as Karin completely took control. “I don’t understand… I can’t feel an evil spirit, no microchip or foreign presence… It’s like Nebula really wants to rule the universe.”

“She does!” Hannibal declared as Ying-Ying penetrated her talons into Nebula’s head, leaving no wound as she pulled Karin’s spirit out. “The Chaos Kin doesn’t infect a body with Dark Chi or directly possess a soul. It changes the allegiance of the soul to however it sees fit. The Yin becomes Yang for the Chaos Kin’s victims, and that power dwells in the Yin-Yang World. It’s a force of nature that can’t be stopped!”

Karin broke away from Ying-Ying and kicked Hannibal’s robot away, then quickly dodged Nebula’s Starbursts. Nebula warped above Karin and trapped her in a Space Block, exploding it as Karin fell to the floor. Hannibal jumped back to stomp Karin under his boot. “However, if you want my advice, Karin, I woulda suggested bringing more for your little army. It don’t take a tiny team of heroes to defeat the Brotherhood.”

“Shows what YOU know! My team is the best there is!”
“Yes, Ah can see that.” Hannibal looked toward the entrance and Karin followed his gaze.

The fighting robot Atlas was holding Jinta to his chest as the boy squirmed and kicked, Jack Spicer was holding Yuzu with the Third-Arm Sash, Makava held a sword to Kodama’s neck, and Karin glanced at the floor to see Vweeb holding a defeated Ururu. “We have successfully captured the intruders, Lord Bean!” Jack saluted.

“You have my applause, Spicer. Do ya see now, Karin? With the Chaos Kin, the Brotherhood of Evil has become an unbeatable army. If you don’t want any of your lovely friends severed in half, I suggest you Go Human and go with them to the dungeons.”

“Sigh…” Karin sighed and reverted to human form, laying flat on the floor. “Alright, you got us.”

“Excellent!” Hannibal stepped off and picked Karin up by the leg. “Sleep tight, darlin’.” He slammed her head against the floor and knocked her out.

Prison wing

“Uuuuh…” Karin awoke with a searing pain in her head. She was sat against the back of the cell, wearing handcuffs, and Yuzu was crouched before her in concern.

“Karin, thank goodness! Are you feeling okay? Do you remember who I am?!”

“Y-Yeah, I’m fine… It doesn’t actually hurt as much as it should. I guess I have my ghost half to thank for that.” Karin looked at the cuffs, and when she tried to transform, they zapped her. “Anti-ecto cuffs. Great.”

“It’s the least of our problems now.” Kodama sighed, standing at the cell’s barrier. “They took Jinta’s bat and all the Infi-Cubes I had under my robe. And worse, look at Ururu!”

Jinta pointed up at his hair, where tiny Ururu was hugging a strand to keep from falling. “Vweeb ripped her suit off and left her small.” he explained. “The jerk. I wish Anthony crushed him a long time ago.”

“Speaking of wishes, where is Jirachi, anyway?” Karin asked. “We need to get ahold of him before Hannibal does.”

“We can’t do much of anything as long as we’re in here.” Kodama reminded. “Not to mention we’re completely outnumbered. I don’t think we stand a ghost of a chance. Pun intended, Karin.”

A lightbulb sparked in Karin’s mind. She reached in her pocket and grabbed her cellphone. “They didn’t take my cellphone!”

“So what?” Jinta asked. “Does it get reception a billion light-years away?”

“Let’s find out.” Karin selected Yachiru on her list of contacts, texting her to come to her. A bright light appeared in their cell, and the pink-haired spirit child Yachiru appeared.

“Hello, Karin-chan! Sector JP!” she saluted.

“Hi, Yachiru!” Kodama greeted.

Yachiru gasped. “You can see me?”

“Huh?” Jinta cocked a brow. “Oh, yeah. At least you don’t have to possess me now.”
“That’s strange. Maybe it’s because you’ve been around Karin so long, her ghost goop rubbed off on you!”

“The magic of convenience.” Karin shrugged, getting to her feet. “Yachiru, have you ever heard of the Chaos Kin? Hannibal Bean’s using it to control the GKND.”

“The Chaos Kin?!” Yachiru exclaimed. “This is terrible… Luckily, you guys have Yachiru, the smartest spirit in the afterlife, to explain to you!” She raised a finger and was brimming with knowledge. “The Chaos Kin is a monstrous spirit created thousands of years ago by Hannibal Roy Bean. He designed it with Yin-Yang Chi, that which flows in the Yin-Yang World, a sub-world of the Spirit World. Like the energy of the Yin-Yang World, the Chaos Kin is able to turn any good person completely evil, or vice-versa. But as you can expect, Hannibal prefers the former. It’s stronger than any mind-control and can’t be healed through normal means.”

“That’s what Hannibal told us.”

“Camera drone coming!” Kodama yelled. A small, hovering camera floated by and stared at their cell for a few seconds.

“BLAAAAH!” Yachiru flew up and stuck her tongue at it. “BLOO-EEEHH.” She made all sorts of faces, from stretching her nose and smooshing the sides of her eyes.

Numbuh All-Seeing, an alien girl with a green body made of eyes, stared at the monitor. Sector JP was staring at her camera, and they were doing nothing suspicious at all.

The camera couldn’t detect Yachiru’s spiritual presence, so the spirit was free to be up close and slobber on the camera. The camera continued its patrol. Yachiru phased back through the cell and continued her story. “The Chaos Kin’s abilities can even affect gods. It was sometime after the Nature Wars when Hannibal had it possess Goddess Palutena. After Palutena was rescued, the gods ordered Hannibal to lock the Chaos Kin in a dungeon using the Yin-Yang Yo-yos, then give them the yo-yos so they could hide them.”

“If the Chaos Kin can possess gods, it can possess a Firstborn like Jirachi, too!” Kodama realized.

“But then why does Hannibal wanna use Nebula to get to Jirachi?” Jinta asked.

“Hannibal said that only Jirachi’s Guardians can make wishes to him.” Karin reminded. “I wonder if Jirachi couldn’t use his full power even if he wanted to without them making a wish?”

“That is exactly right!” Yachiru declared. I don’t really know, but they don’t need to know that.

“Yachiru, how do we stop the Chaos Kin?” Karin asked.

“Well, the Chaos Kin has a few flaws: for one thing, it must remain close to its target in order to keep its control. If it’s attacked, it will lose control, and henceforth it uses invisibility. Furthermore, the Chaos Kin can only possess one person at a time.”

“Then how is it controlling the whole GKND?!” Jinta shouted, his outburst hurting Ururu’s ears.

“Hmm… That is a good question.” Yachiru rubbed her chin. “Are you sure the GKND aren’t blindly following orders? That’s what Palutena’s Centurions did when she was possessed.”

“They have Brotherhood villains working with them!” Karin emphasized. “I don’t think they would be blind enough to not notice something’s up. Are you sure you aren’t forgetting anything?”
“Don’t question my knowledge, Student!”

“Okay, gee. What do you think, Yuzu?”

“...” The younger twin was about to break into tears. “I still can’t see Yachiru.”

“Huh?” the friends chorused, looking surprised.

“I knew I wasn’t spending enough time with you!” She started weeping. “We’re growing apart, Karin-nee, waaaahh!”

“Ugh! Yuzu, snap out of it!” Karin kicked her sister in the face and knocked her out.

“Karin, why did you do that?!” Ururu squeaked.

“Wait...”

“SHYAH!” Yuzu jumped to recovery, her brown eyes dimmer. “What up, mah Ninja Clan?! Yo, did we get arrested? Hey, who’s the pink-hair chick?”

“Morning, Night Yuzu.” Karin greeted. “I think you’re best suited for this mission. Yachiru, you have to get us outta here. Take us to the Spirit World.”

“WHAT?! You know I can’t bring living humans to the Spirit World! It’s a total violation of boundary laws!”

“What’s the point of being allies with a spirit if she won’t even help?!” Jinta said angrily.

“Yachiru-san, won’t you please help us, please?” Tiny Ururu began crying. “I’m so small and so scared! We have no way to escape and we’re afraid of dying! Sniff, sniff... sniff...”

Yachiru was touched by her squeaky pleas. She couldn’t leave someone so adorable to suffer. “Well... maybe just this once... Everyone hold hands.”

“Wait, more people are coming!” Kodama yelled quietly.

Jerome D. Winkiebottom approached the cell alongside the Ghost Warden, Walker. Yachiru phased through the floor to keep from being noticed. “Karin Kurosaki, Numbuh Eternal wishes to have a word with you alone.” Jerome said. “Any attempt at resistance will result in punishment for your friends.”

“All right.” Karin complied. The cell barrier lowered, and when Karin saw Kodama raise a brow, the leader replied, “Hai.” Walker looked confused, unfamiliar with Japanese, but chose to ignore it and relock the cell.

Karin was escorted to a room with a pedestal machine connected to a computer that took up the wall. There was a device on the pedestal designed like a hi-tech Code Module. Nebula was there with Hannibal Bean on her shoulder. “Karin Kurosaki, my acquaintance informs me that you are what is classified as a Halfa: a human that can become a ghost. Is this true?” Nebula inquired.

“Yes, what of it?”

“You see, Karin, as Supreme Leader of the Galactic Kids Next Door, my dream is to create the most powerful army consisting of all kids from every race in the universe, hybrids included. Halfas are as rare as they come. So, I would like to offer you and your team the chance to join my army.
Put a piece of your Halfa DNA into the GKN\D Code Module, and invite your team to do the same.”

“What makes you think any of us would work under your crazy rule?”

“Awe, Karin, you oughta give it a try.” Hannibal invited. “’Cause if you don’t, you’ll just be wasting away your lives in a dingy old cell. Why don’t you open your mind a little and join us?”

Karin raised a brow at the way he phrased that. “Hmmm… You promise to let my friends go if I join?”

“Of course! And iff’n you don’t like it, you can always tell the Code Module to relinquish your rights as an operative. But I think you’ll want to stay.”

“Okay, I’ll do it.”

“Excellent. Unlock her cuffs, Walker. And if she tries any funny business, I got someone ready to kill your friends.”

Walker unlocked Karin’s cuffs, and the girl patiently followed Nebula toward the Code Module. Nebula typed on the available keyboard, and when the computer asked for voice-authorization, she answered, “Numbuh Eternal, Supreme Leader.”

“Hello, Numbuh Eternal. What is your request?”

A blue mist flowed out of Karin’s mouth. She looked around for the source… and could feel something invisible near the Code Module. “HANNIBAAAL!” Jack Spicer sprinted into the room in a panic. “Sector JP escaped from their cell and we can’t find them!”

“Jack, you picked a REALLY bad time to tell me that!”

Thinking fast, Karin switched to her Halfa form, shot Ecto Rays at Walker and Jerome, and possessed Nebula’s body, throwing Hannibal off. “I wish to relinquish my rights as a Galactic Kids Next Door operative!” she yelled in Nebula’s voice. “And to remove my DNA from the Code Module!”

“NOOO!” Hannibal cried.

“Understood. Transferring Supreme Leader rights to: Numbuh 250 Trillion.” A strand of hair that was black and white came out of the Code Module. Karin flew out and took it.

“Aaah!” Nebula shook to her senses after being free of Karin’s possession. “Karin, why did you do… that?” She looked at Jack, Walker, and saw Ying-Ying above them. A look of utmost shock washed over her. “Why… did I invite the Brotherhood of Evil into my base?”

“STOP THEM!” Hannibal commanded.

“Come on!” Karin grabbed Nebula and turned intangible as she phased them out of the room. She stopped in an empty hallway and called Yachiru on her phone.

The spirit child reappeared again. “Karin, I brought your friends to a spirit park!”

“Great, take us too.” Yachiru nodded and grabbed them both.

“I still wanna know what’s going—OOOOOONN!” Nebula screamed as a ray of light took them to the Spirit World. Karin reunited with her team in a peaceful park where the spirits of innocent families happily spent their afterlives.

“Yo, who dyed your hair, Sister?!” Yuzu asked Nebula. “You some kinda Dalmatian killer?!”

“Nebula, are you alright?” Karin asked, setting the Zathurian on her feet. “Do you remember anything?”

“I…I do…” Nebula said in a tone that implied she wasn’t sure of herself. “I remember the Brotherhood coming to our base, wanting to form an alliance… and I said ‘yes.’ But for some reason, he kept talking about a Chaos Kin. He forbade me from contacting Earth because he was afraid they could stop us.”

“From what we know, your operatives were being controlled by a monster.” Kodama explained.

“No, I told you, the Chaos Kin can only possess one at a time!” Yachiru raised her fists in outrage.

“But it wasn’t!” Karin informed. “I think I figured it out: the Chaos Kin wasn’t controlling them individually, it was controlling them through the Code Module. When they brought me to the Code Module, I felt a spiritual presence and got the idea. I decided to test my theory by making Nebula remove her DNA.”

“My precious Code Module is being tampered with by a monster?!” Nebula shouted. “That’s impossible! I designed it to be unhackable, just like Earth’s Code Module!”

“It’s not completely unhackable.” Ururu commented. “Remember the story of Father’s Animal Ray?”

Jinta set Ururu on the ground as Nebula used spacebending to stretch her back to normal. Ururu sighed in relief. “Anyway, the Code Module tracks the whereabouts of each operative anywhere in the universe via their DNA.” Nebula explained. “The inside of the module contains an endless space where the pieces of DNA are preserved.”

“So, if the operatives are tracked using some kind of satellite system, maybe Chaos Kin infected it with his Yin-Yang Chi. And it gave you the desire to form an army out of every race so that it could eventually control all the kids in the universe!”

“That probably includes the Firstborn, too.” Kodama figured. “Why stop with Jirachi?”

“Look, I’m gettin’ bored of all this talkin’.” Yuzu said, picking her nose. “The Chaos Kin is the bad guy, so let’s go beat the snot out of it.”

“It’s not as easy when the Chaos Kin has Hannibal and the Brotherhood protecting him.” Karin reminded. “What we need to do is find Jirachi. Do you know where he is, Nebula?”

“Not at the moment. Ever since Mom set him free, Jirachi’s been exploring the universe, going on endless vacations. We often get postcards, like when he was at the intergalactic waterslide, or when he went go-karting at Lightspeed Mania.”

“Would your mom know where he is?”

“Um… the Brotherhood kind of took control of Star Haven and threw my mom in the dungeon, too.” Nebula answered awkwardly. “Besides, she wouldn’t know. We haven’t really gotten a postcard from Jirachi in months.”
“The universe is a big place.” Ururu said. “It’ll take forever to find him.”

“Guys, I think I found Jirachi!” Yachiru called from the park’s fountain.

“You did?!?” Nebula yelled as they ran to join her. “How?”

“You just have to ask a Reflecting Pool to find someone and it does. He’s…”

“You gotta be kidding.” Karin said with disbelief as they viewed the image.

KND Moonbase

“I was flying by the Milky Way, so I decided to pay a visit to Earth,” Jirachi explained to his fellow Firstborn and the operatives who were otherwise surprised by his arrival, “and I crashed my Warp Star in this colorful city with a lot of lights. I went in this casino place and started having so much fun, I didn’t wanna leave! But then this blue-haired girl showed up… Wait, is that her there?” He pointed at Nagisa Shiota.

“. . . I’m a boy.” Nagisa corrected with total humility. He always dreamed of meeting Jirachi, the Original Operative, but he was ashamed for those to be the first words Jirachi says to him.

“Why is your head shaped like a star?” Crest asked.

“Why is your head shaped like a moon?” Jirachi asked.

“Why is Jirachi here to begin with?!” Lee Andrew yelled.

“Maybe we should go up to GKND and tell Sector JP and Nebula.” Denny suggested.

A ray of light seemed to burst from the ceiling, and the aforementioned people appeared before their eyes. “JIRACHI!” Nebula exclaimed.

“Huh? Who are you?” the Starchild asked.

“I’m Nebula. Dimentia’s daughter.”

“Ohhhhh!” Jirachi beamed. “You were a baby when we last met!”

“Why did you guys just come from the Spirit World?” MaKayla asked.

“Where’s Cheren, first of all?” Nebula looked around. “I need him to help me- mmmp!” Karin clamped her mouth shut.

“We just got a little sidetracked.” Karin said sheepishly. “Jirachi, come with us.” She led Nebula away. Jirachi and her teammates followed, confused by her actions.

“What are you doing?!” Nebula demanded after Karin uncovered her mouth.

“Look, I don’t think we should get these guys involved in this battle. We were already planning to attack the Government, that’s why we volunteered to come help you ourselves. They have enough on their plates. Besides, we don’t need them to fix this, what about all the other KNDs?”

“That’s another problem.” Nebula replied with shame. “When I was evil, I kind of demanded the other Supreme Leaders to come up there with their entire armies and put their DNA in the Code Module. When I established our alliances, part of the contract was to allow them to remain primarily loyal with their own KND, and we couldn’t order them to give us some operatives unless the operatives themselves volunteered. After all, it’s kind of insulting to make someone not be loyal to their own planet, don’t you think?”

“So, let’s tell them it was a misunderstanding. We’ll back you up.” Karin offered.

“Or you can just wish Jirachi would make the Chaos Kin go away and get your friends back.” Jinta suggested logically.

“I wish I could, but I don’t even know what you guys are talking about.” Jirachi replied.

“When I last checked, the Supreme Leaders actually gathered in Galactic Kid Council to discuss the ‘me’ problem.” Nebula blushed. “Earlier, we sent a fleet of Brotherhooders and Wisps to fight their operatives. They could still be there.”

“Then let’s borrow a C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. and go to the council!” Karin insisted.

“Actually, can we visit someone first?” Jirachi asked. “Nigel Uno lives on this planet and he’s a very good friend of mine. I haven’t seen him in years, so…”

The six kids exchanged mournful glances.

KND Graveyard

They showed Jirachi the grave where Nigel was buried. The sky was as gray as the day of the funeral. “Oh… I didn’t know.” Jirachi frowned.

“Yes. It happened earlier in the month.” Nebula said. “He was killed by the World Leaders.”

“Hmm… it feels like only yesterday when he saved me. It’s kinda funny… he never drank from my fountain like the others.”

Nebula bit her lip at the statement. She remembered the bad deeds her mom had done, using Jirachi. “…We should hurry to Planet Wisp. We have to save the Supreme Leaders.”

“You’re right.” Jirachi said. “Well… Bye, Nigel. It was good to see you again.”

Planet Wisp

A Yokian ship was fried by a team of Solaran ships, and the fiery operatives proceeded to dine on the fried chicken. When the Sweet Revenge was trying to bombard the dome-shaped council building with jawbreaker cannonballs, an airborne water tanker sent by the Ocean KND flew above the pirate ship and dumped salt water over the sugar-coated scallywags. Sector JP and co.
witnessed the battle transpire as they entered the atmosphere. “The leaders must be inside.” Nebula figured. “Jirachi, can you make the Brotherhood ships go away?”

“Not if I can’t tell them apart.” Jirachi frowned. “I won’t be able to automatically grant your wishes until you become my Guardian.”

“Always a catch.” Nebula sighed. “I’m taking you inside. Can you give help with the situation out here?”

“You got it.” Karin nodded. Nebula held onto Jirachi and splorped them both.

Inside the council

“Nebula’s gone mad with power!” argued Pluey, the Pumparian KND leader. He had cyan skin and eyes. “Having all our KNDs on her side made her cocky, we have to bring GKND down!”

“Nebula wouldn’t just betray us after everything she’s done!” yelled Mae, the Harnitan leader. She had red skin and sky-blue hair. “There has to be a reason for Nebula’s actions. It could be an imposter.”

“Then let’s go up there and beat some answers outta her!” Minksiminnian of the Kateenian KND declared.

“No, I agree with Mae.” Liaziana, the Glomourian Princess, followed. “I’ve always trusted Nebula.”

“That’s because she wants to enslave all races like YOU do!”

“I NEVER wanted to enslave you guys!”

“Mayhaps if we calm ourselves for a moment.” Jesbi, the Nimbi Leader, inferred.

“How can we be calm with all that BOOMING going on out there?!” Chrysundra the Amazon KND leader shouted.

“You Amazons would know all about THAT, wouldn’t you?!” retorted Phillord, the Terachnoid KND Leader.

“What is THAT supposed to mean, Spider Boy?!”

“We wilt NOT find yonder answer in our mindless bickering!” Jesbi shouted.

“What else are we supposed to do?!” Kaima the Mermaid Leader yelled. “Hope the answer appears out of thin air?”

Nebula and Jirachi appeared on the central platform out of thin space. The bickering silenced instantly. “Uh… hi.” Nebula waved.

“IT’S NEBULA!” Minksman pointed. “And she’s got Jirachi! Kateenians, GET HER!” His operatives revealed their selves on his platform and blasted ray guns, Nebula defending with a Space Block.

“Guys, I’m not here to fight you! I’m trying to tell you why I-”

“Jirachi, fly over to Giz!” the Irken leader called. “Giz is different from his ancestors! He will protect you!”

“Why did Ruby and Sapphire join the EARTH Kids?!” the Solaran leader, Pyler demanded, his head a tall violet flame. “Were they trying to get away from you? Or did you send them as SPIES?”

“What happened to Celebi?!” Pluey asked. “We know one of your operatives had her! Are you trying to capture the Firstborn?!”

“SILEEEEEEEEENCE!”

Everybody shut their ears under the powerful booming voice. “Mine word… could it be God?!” Jesbi asked.

“YES! I am the mighty God! Your unbearable chattering has forced me to speak! Feeeeeaarr the Almighty…”
“Bender, knock it off!” Nebula laughed. “Get down here and join us!”

“Sure!” The entire chamber turned dark and morphed as Bender’s gigantic mouth and eyes appeared on the ceiling.

“That’s the robot you were with two months ago!” Liaziana remembered. “What happened to it?”

“I hacked myself into this building’s mainframe! I can see everything and I know everything. Mostly which banks are worth robbing and what ceiling fans will fall. I can see what goes on in GKND, too. Your hatred is misplaced, my friends. For you see, Nebula and her operatives were possessed by an evil spirit called the Chaos Kin.”

“OF COURSE! Giz knew this all along!” he declared.

“No you didn’t.” Graab negated.

“Yes, this was all a ploy by Hannibal Roy Bean. Nebula meant you no disrespect.”

“I don’t trust a giant face that thinks it’s a god!” Chrysundra yelled. “Make yourself smaller, then we’ll talk.”

“Fine.” Bender rolled his eyes. The room returned to normal as he zapped down beside Nebula in his normal form, a boiling container of water inside his compartment.

“AAAH!” Jirachi screamed suddenly and started twitching.

“Jirachi, what’s wrong?!” Nebula asked.

“I feel something controlling me… it…it’s your mother’s Spirit Ball!”

Nebula’s wristwatch rang, Karin’s face appearing. “Nebula, Hannibal’s here! And he’s brought your mom!”

“Bender, protect Jirachi.” Nebula ordered. “I’m gonna see what’s up.” She warped.

Karin had assumed her ghost form as Dimentia and Hannibal floated level with her, the latter in his robot suit. Nebula saw them from where she had appeared and flew over. “Nebula, where’s Jirachi?” Dimentia asked with a scowl. “Bring him out now. Hannibal needs him.”

“Mom, why are you working with Hannibal?!”

“I ‘persuaded’ Dimentia to rejoin GKND.” Hannibal explained. “Since you ain’t gonna be a good girl, we might as well use her. Now, one of our ships picked up Jirachi’s presence in this area. Mind showin’ us where?”

“She doesn’t need to.” Dimentia raised the Spirit Ball. “Jirachi, I wish for you to come to-”

Nebula shot the ball out of her hand with a Starburst, then flew down to grab it. Karin blasted Ecto Rays at Dimentia before she could follow, resulting in Hannibal punching Karin several feet. Nebula set foot on the ground upon grabbing the ball, but Dimentia struck her with Space Lightning. “Nebula, this is our chance to start over again! With Jirachi and the Brotherhood as our allies, we can rule the universe!”

“That’s NOT you talking, Mom! You’re past that, I know!”

“I’m TIRED of living on that boring star island! I was the Child Empress, and I WILL be again!
I’ll use Jirachi to make me young again, and the two of us will rule together!”

“No we WON’T!” Nebula countered with her own lightning.

Dimentia used a Space Block to counter the lightning, then tried to catch her daughter in a Block, but Nebula warped above and struck with double Starbursts. Dimentia warped all around her daughter to confuse her, afterwards zapping Nebula with lightning and taking the Spirit Ball. Nebula centered a gravity field up above to draw Dimentia in, using her moment of imbalance to snatch the Spirit Ball back. Dimentia conjured multiple portals around herself and shot Starbursts in like bullets, but when they reappeared around Nebula, she defended herself with a Space Block.

Dimentia warped into her block to grab the ball, and Nebula warped them both out before shooting her away with a Starburst. “You fought better than this, Nebula.” Dimentia said. “Why are you holding back?”

“Because you aren’t in your right mind. The Chaos Kin is making you attack me.”

“I’m afraid you’re wrong, honey.” Hannibal Bean hovered above. “While the Chaos Kin can change a person’s thoughts or allegiance, from then on the person acts on their free will.”

“I don’t like fighting my own daughter, but you give me no choice.” Dimentia stated. “Give me the Spirit Ball!” She snapped fingers and warped the ball to her hand, then warped before Nebula could retaliate.

Hannibal grabbed Nebula and pressed her to his chest. “Ain’t it a shame when moms and daughters don’t get along? No one drives a child to the Dark Side more than bad parents.”

Karin phased through Hannibal from behind and pushed Nebula out of his grasp, letting her search for Dimentia. “You really get a kick out of ruining families, huh?!”

“Awe, is Karin still mad that I killed her mom?” Hannibal taunted. “Every punch you throw at me is out of anger and vengeance. And that’s what FUELS me!”

“But how much fuel can you TAKE?!” Karin shot twin beams that Hannibal evaded, flipping forward to kick her.

Dimentia reappeared on the ground and yelled, “Jirachi, I wish for you to come!”

A few feet away, Bender materialized out of thin air, Jirachi wrapped in his arms. “Yo, why’d you take us outside?”

“Jirachi screamed.

Dimentia snapped fingers and warped Jirachi to her, but Bender stretched an arm and punched her face before taking him back. “Bender, get him away from her!” Nebula yelled, blasting Starbursts at the ground around Dimentia. Dimentia spawned a large vortex and tried to suck her in, so Nebula warped herself higher—Dimentia quickly warped above to kick her daughter down into the vortex. Jesbi swooped by and grabbed Nebula before she could complete the fall. “Jesbi!”

“The council hast reached an understanding.” the Nimbi said. When Dimentia warped in front, Jesbi shot lightning from her rod.

“GOT IT!” Minksman swooped by on his mini hovercraft and snatched the Spirit Ball in an extendable claw. Chrysundra leapt up to grab Dimentia’s legs, dropping to slam her to the ground. “Didn’t think I could jump that high, did ya?!”
Nebula and Jesbi floated down as Giz, Liaziana, Kaima, and the remaining leaders surrounded Dimentia. “Sorry to have to gang up on you like this, Mother. Funny thing is, a lot of these KNDs still don’t think highly of you.”

“I see. It must’ve taken you a while to earn their trust.” Dimentia replied. “But you can’t deny you’re no different than how I was.”

“Oh yeah? Name the last black hole I opened to destroy the universe.”

“Your goals are different from mine, but you’re power-hungry all the same. I remember the night after you got the Amazons to join the council, you boasted about how you had the largest army in the universe.”

“What?” Chrysundra looked at Nebula curiously.

Nebula flushed. “I didn’t mean YOU guys!”

“No, she meant all of you.” Dimentia continued. “She one day hoped to make alliances with every KND in the universe, and to start a KND on each planet. It was her dream to expand the organization to all corners of the universe and be the center of it all. Isn’t that right, Nebula?”

“Dimentia, QUIT foolin’ around!” Hannibal ordered, robot hands locked with Karin’s. “The Apocalypse is just around the corner! Get Jirachi so we can wish it away!”

“YES! What, did you think I wanted a mountain of candy?!”

“Jirachi can’t stop the Apocalypse.”

“What?!"

“When we learned about it 15 years ago, I called Jirachi back and wished the Apocalypse wouldn’t happen. He said it was beyond his power, it was even beyond Arceus’s power. All he could do was choose people to survive.”

“But…But you were gonna use Jirachi to make a new world! How is that not beyond his power?”

“I was misled. Jirachi wasn’t controlling Zathura, it was my brother. It wouldn’t have succeeded.”

Karin kicked Hannibal back when his guard was lowered. “What’s wrong, Hannibal? Did things not go according to plan?”

“You smartass little twerp. Perhaps a trip to the Yin-Yang World will fix your…” The robot reached for the yo-yos in its compartments. “W-Wait a minute! Where are mah yo-yos?!"

“Snatched them when I saved Nebula earlier.” Karin smirked. “I already passed them to someone else.”

“Who?!"

GKND H.Q.

Yachiru found the room with the GKND Code Module, Yin-Yang Yo-yos in hand. She narrowed her eyes, sensing the spiritual presence. “I know you’re in here. You can’t hide from me. I’m very good at Hide-and-Seek.”
No response.

“Not here? Well, okay. I guess I better-” She turned away—whipped back around and shot twin rays above the Module, striking something invisible. The Chaos Kin hit the floor and turned visible: it had one eye and looked like a scorpion, its tail an axe, and its six legs also served as wings. “THERE you are!” Yachiru lunged forward to stab the monster, but Chaos Kin dodged and began to skitter down the hall like an insect.

“You’re not running from me!” Yachiru flew after the creature, dodging its energy balls before phasing under the floor. The frightened Chaos Kin stopped and turned to see his pursuer had vanished. “BOO!” Yachiru shot up from behind and sliced the creature in half. The Chaos Kin turned into black ash that floated in place. “Time to lock you back where you came from. Yin-Yang Yo-yo!” She spun the yo-yos and opened a portal.

Realization swept over the GKND operatives like a wave. For some reason, they were working with the Brotherhood of Evil on a quest for universal conquest. They didn’t know where this alliance spawned from, all they knew was it was over. The GKND turned against the Brotherhooders immediately and rounded up each and every one.

Planet Wisp

The Wisps snapped back to their senses and attacked the Brotherhood ships. Dimentia gasped: “Nebula, I’m so sorry! Why did I attack you?!”

“I don’t understand!” said Hannibal in shock.

“I take it the Chaos Kin is finished.” Karin deduced. “Sorry your reign didn’t last long, Hanny.”

“Villains, RETREAT!” Hannibal flew skyward. “Y’all are gonna be sorry! Mark my words, you’ll-” Liaziana sliced a sword beam up to chop the boots off the robot. Hannibal crashed on the ground, and when the bean hopped out, Yuzu caught him in a jar.

“Who’s sorry NOW, Hanni-Booger?” Yuzu retorted.

“CAWWW!” Ying-Ying swooped down in the form of an eagle and rescued her master.

“HEY, come back ya dumb bird! I was gonna eat him!”

“Just let him fly.” Nebula said. “He needs a moment to realize his plan was a bust. …Chrysundra, you can let Mom go now.”

The Amazon helped Dimentia to her feet and released her. “Sigh… I’m sorry for attacking you, Nebula.”

“It’s not your fault.” Nebula landed on the ground. “But did you say you already tried wishing Jirachi to stop the Apocalypse? Did you know about it all along?”

“Yes… All the parents did.” Dimentia said guiltily. “We learned from the Chronicler 15 years ago, but he told us not to tell any of you guys when you were born. He said to wait until Cheren told you.”

“And he took his precious time doing THAT!” Nebula retorted.

“We just awakened the Seventh Light.” Karin informed. “All we have left is the final Darkness and the last three Firstborn. The quest is almost finished.”
“Are you sure?” Pluey asked. “We all saw that message in the sky. Is opening the Gate of Time really a good idea?”

“We have faith that Jagar King can defeat Ragaj. He’ll stop Caliborn from coming back.”

“But will that stop the Apocalypse?” Mae asked.

“Er… we don’t think so. I mean, it COULD, but…”

“Opening the Gate will take us all to the New World where we can be saved.” Kodama recapped. “I think the question is how we can round up everybody in the universe before then…”

“…” Nebula looked at Jirachi. “Jirachi… if I became your Guardian and could make a wish to you… how great would the extent of your power be?”

“Uh… I would guess it’d be a lot.” Jirachi said with a confused frown.

“Do you think I’m worthy to be your Guardian?”

“I don’t know. Try the Spirit Ball and see.”

“I wasn’t asking you. I was asking… the rest of you.” She turned to all the Supreme Leaders. They all shared the confusion.

“Wait.” Kaima spoke up. “You’re asking if you are worthy to be our guardian? What does that even mean?”

“What I mean is, if the universe is going to be destroyed, do you trust me to protect every single one of your planets? Because I will admit… with all of you guys as my friends, and all your KNDs as my allies… I really do feel like I have the largest army in the universe. I take pride in being able to… unite all of you. And I feel invincible when I know I have you. I guess, in a way… I do feel like a Child Empress. But I can promise you I’m not evil. If I could have your trust, I wouldn’t abuse it. I would protect your planets with my life. So, do you think I’m worthy?”

Silence followed as everyone contemplated her words. They knew Nebula was a good leader, who led them to victory against Viridi and Dimentio. She helped stop the war between Glomour and Kateenia. But even she must know that protecting all their worlds from a cataclysm was beyond her strength. The leaders turned to Jirachi and knew… she had a plan. The Firstborn may have had limits, but his power was still vast, so Nebula must have a plan to put it to use. And they trusted her.

Minksman passed the Spirit Ball to Lia, who gave it to Kaima, then to Giz, Pluey, Mae, to Chrysundra, who held it up to Griffin Firecrystal, to Jesbi, who passed it to Nebula. Jirachi floated to her with a bright smile, for he accepted her as his Guardian. Nebula threw the ball and caught the Firstborn. The Spirit Ball glowed with Jirachi’s colors – bottom half white, top half yellow with Jirachi’s blue ribbons, and a ‘II’ appeared on the forehead. Nebula snatched the ball from the air.

Nebula captured a FIRSTBORN! Only 2 more to go!

“So, what now? Supreme Galactic Leader.” Lia asked.

“We don’t have long until the Apocalypse. Make sure every one of your planets’ denizens are safely in their atmosphere.” Nebula stared at the glowing Spirit Ball. “It’s time to put Jirachi’s power to the test.”
In some faraway land

Uxie guided Emily Garley and her friends to a land that was way off the maps, completely untraceable. The sky was pitch-black and they seemed to be going into nowhere. Uxie stopped, her face shining with excitement. “We’re here.” She flashed her emblems and lit the place up. (Play “Grunty’s Furnace Fun Entrance” from Banjo-Kazooie)

Lights switched on in the darkness, and Team Emily gaped, for they have never seen a place so amazing: it was an amusement park with Firstborn plushies, Ice Climber Ice Cream, Skypian Cotton Candy, bumper cars designed like shoes of Gameverse characters – the name of the park flashed above the entrance: GAMEVERSE LAND!

There were black “?”s decorated around the lit-up entrance, and there was an idol of Yours Truly up above, made of colorful lights, as I held a scepter with a “?” on it. “Are you ready for your Trial of Knowledge?” Uxie asked. Emily smirked and nodded confidently. Kris Hallows wore a red-and-white-striped shirt and top-hat, nodding to the guests as they approached the park. They passed the doorway lit with a red “G” and entered this wonderful world.

Do you guys remember the Trial of Knowledge from Legend of the Eight Firstborn? Well, that time has come again! Who wants to attempt the Seven Lights Gameverse Quiz?! Who thinks they know the Gameverse?! Don’t be shy! And don’t think it’ll be as easy as last time! Next time, Emily will attempt the quiz! WELCOME, one and all… to GAMEVERSE LAND! (Oh, Chaos Kin is from Kid Icarus.)
Chapter Summary

Emily Garley and her friends attempt the Gameverse Land Quiz! Afterwards, Team Rupert faces an unexpected challenge.

First, I want to thank IDA Official for trying the Gameverse Quiz! He can tell you how hard it was! ;D Play “Grunty’s Furnace Fun” from Banjo-Kazooie!

Chapter 75: It’s Quiz Time!

Stage 68: Gameverse Land

Mission: Ace the quiz!

Balloons were released to the night sky and lights flashed on the stage. The author of this story took the spotlight and announced to all his fans, “WELCOME, WELCOME! Gamen’s the name! Thank you ALL for playing this game! This park is the home I reside! I’m delighted to let you all inside! Emily Garley’s here, and she will play, to walk home with a Firstborn at the end of the day.” The lights shone on Uxie. “Sure, I could do some character development trial, but that’s been overdone a while.” I shrug. “I have here a wheel with icons galore.” The roulette wheel had pictures of a “?”, an eye, a note, a clock, and myself. “Whatever it lands on will be a question you can’t ignore. Around this park are various games, and they will feature the choices’ names. Focus your mind and hit the right choice, otherwise you’ll hear my disapproving voice.”

“What do the different icons mean??” Emily yelled.

“This question mark is a simple query, but if you don’t know, make your best theory! The eye will let you see a world, and see if you know it, smarty girl. The note, you’ll hear music or maybe a voice, answer the related question with your best choice. The clock holds a time trial – could be any character, and you have to complete it with great care. Then as for me, I’ll ask about me. How well you know, we’ll have to see. Are you ready? Then let’s begin! I’ll start this game with the first spin!”

I spun the roulette wheel as it landed on “?” “Which of these Pikmin is new to the Gameverse?” a. White Pikmin, b. Wing Pikmin, c. Ice Pikmin, d. Rock Pikmin.

“Ice Pikmin!”

“That’s right, and you have 2 points! A second guess is one point in this joint. Have fun, and don’t faint! (faint)”

“What do you want to ride first?” Sarah asked.

“Um, actually… I was thinking I could do this trial myself since… I probably know more than you.” Emily said with a blush.

“Well, fine!” Gary stated. “We’ll do the trial separately and try to get the highest score!”
“May the best smarty win!”

“When you think you’ve gotten a handy amount,” I continued, “enter the prize door to see the bout! If one is lowest, there they goes. What score do the other players have, who knows?”

Emily first decided to visit the roller coaster, which took her along a whipping fast track. The choices were spinning in the air, having not gained tangibility as the roulette was spinning. Emily readied her slingshot as a “Note” question was asked: “Listen to this music: Where in the story did I use it?” (Plays “Dream Room” from Yume Nikki.) a. Boggly Woods Act 2, b. Land of Cubes and Tea, c. Chronicler’s Domain, d. Hall of Doors.

Emily shot her slingshot at Hall of Doors. “WRONG! Does someone else want a swing?”

“CORRECT! One point for Gary, 0 for Emily!”

The music switched back to “Furnace Fun” as the coaster stopped. Emily hurried to a bumper car game and claimed a shoe designed like her own. I spun the wheel, which seemed to automatically land on an eye. “Focus and beware: match the character with correct footwear!”

A bunch of names appeared over the other bumper car shoes and began swerving around. A white shoe with a red stripe had “Nagisa”, a white shoe had “Anthony”, a sparkly light-blue shoe had “MaKayla”, and a green sandal had “Sheila.” Emily thought it was the easiest question ever and hit Sheila’s sandal. “Too easy! 2 points for Emily!”

Emily headed to a merry-go-round, and the roulette landed on ‘Clock.’ “Uh-oh, time trial time! Which character do you wanna be?” The choices rotating on the roundabout were Augustus, Rupert, Cheren, and Sheila. Emily chose Augustus.

The teen boy in question suddenly materialized in the Cinnamon Jungle, under a ceiling with lots of Apple Piranhas and pitfalls. “Get to the Goal in 2 minutes, hurry!” Augustus donned his Corn-Clambers and trekked up the wall to get on the ceiling. He quickly examined the path and tried to choose the best routes that would take him around the pitfalls. The Apple Piranhas gnashed at him, but he quickly countered with his Lemon Cutlass. There were 20 seconds left by the time he was near the Goal Ring, but three Piranhas were guarding it. Augustus hurriedly sliced the creatures and went to touch the ring.

“Emily wins! She has 4 points!”

Next up, Emily wanted to ride the Ferris wheel, and the choices were displayed above the very top. She eagerly rode the wheel as the roulette landed on a “Me” space. “All you folks should know this: what is currently my favorite fictional pairing?!” a. Romeo/Wendy, b. 10/11.0, c. Ruby/Sapphire, d. Ruby/Weiss.

Emily shot 10/11.0. “NOT ANYMORE!” I subtracted 2 points from Emily. Sarah got her slingshot and hit Romeo/Wendy. “CORRECT!”

“Darn it! Back at 2 points again.” Emily huffed. “I need to step up my game.” Emily saw a stairway leading up to a very high platform. She Super Hooped up the stairs, and by the time she was at the top, the roulette landed on the Note space.

“Listen and make note: which character has this quote?” “I don’t want to become a burden to any of you.” a. Wendy Marvell, b. Sonya Dickson, c. Sally Harper, d. Yuzu Kurosaki.
The choices appeared on four different distant platforms, forcing Emily to Sky Fly to the correct one. Though she vaguely remembered, Emily floated to Yuzu’s space. “CORRECT! Back to 4 points with Emily!”

Emily sighed at the small number, but kept a steady look as she ran to the next game with determination. She came to a small fenced baseball field, where she had to hit the ball to the correct answer with her Stun Club. The roulette stopped at “?” . “What were Ruby Rose and Weiss Schnee doing at the beginning of Shrinking Ice Violet?” a. Sparring, b. Playing a game, c. Doing homework, d. Eating cookies.

The baseball flew at Emily, so she faced the direction of- “ME FIRST!” Gary jumped in the way and hit the ball to ‘Sparring.’ “INCORRECT! Your turn, Emily.”

Emily glared at her opponent and hit the ball to ‘Playing a game’ like she intended. “Correct! She now has 5 points!”

Next, Emily went to a fenced mud farm where she had to net the correct answer. The roulette landed on Eye. “Do you recognize this place?” The screen showed a view of a coast from a wooden walkway under a night sky. a. Tortuga, b. Lunaria, c. Heron, d. Bullies’ Land. The choices ran around the field, but Emily ran up to net Tortuga. “Right again! 7 points for you!”

Emily located a mini C.A.M.-C.A.R. maze under a glass case. She would have to navigate the car in the maze and find the correct answer. The question was another Sound one. “Who is this person speaking to?” “Don’t break any bones.” a. Jinta Hanakari, b. Maddy Murphy, c. Nagisa Shiota, d. Cheren Uno. Emily navigated the maze and touched Nagisa. “Correct! 9 points!”

Emily sighed with relief, glad to be steadily building her score, but wondering how much the others had. Am I doubting my own genius? she thought to herself. The bumper shoes were open again, so Emily tried for another question there. The roulette stopped at Me. “Which of these characters wears the same colored shoes as myself?” Cheren’s name appeared over his red shoe, Fybi’s over her brown sandal, Terry’s over his gray shoe, and Dillon’s over his white shoe. Emily rammed Terry’s shoe and now had 11 points.

Emily located a pool where you had to dive and catch the answers in the Water Net. Sarah was also attempting a question here. Both girls dove as the roulette stopped at “?” . “In the story Wendy’s Mistake, who was the character Violeta based off of?” a. Vivian from Paper Mario, b. Pearl from Steven Universe, c. Viola from Witch’s House, d. Maddy from Gameverse. Sarah netted Maddy. “Wrong answer! Emily?”

The Garley swum to and caught Viola, but it was still wrong. “Guess no one’s getting this one.” Now at 10 points, Emily went to a shooting game that had stuffed plushies of Firstborn. The roulette hit a Clock. “Time Trial time! Who you wanna be?” The choices moved quick around the opposite wall – they were Emily, Rupert, Wendy, and Vanellope. Obviously Em wanted herself, but she missed and hit Rupert. “Oh, darn it!”

Rupert Dickson appeared in the gymnasium of the Iron Plains. Giant children ran about aimlessly, quaking the world with their sneakers. Rupert had 10 White Pikmin and there were two large Riddler Trophies. “Carry the trophies to the Onions in 1:30 minutes!” The trophies both required 5 Pikmin, so Rupert set them to work. He quickly called them back whenever a kid would run by and crush them, returned them to work when it looked safe—but had to constantly call them back from running kids. Thankfully, Rupert had plenty of Pikmin experience, and successfully brought both trophies to the Onions. Emily scored 2 points, making 12 total.

“Wonderful! Can I have my trophies back?” Riddler asked.
Emily explored the park further and found a platform on the edge of a chasm. Balloons with multiple different answers floated up as the roulette landed on Eye. “Here’s the picture this time, view it while I think of a rhyme.” The picture displayed a forest with white leaves and white grass. “What chapter did this stage appear?” Among the many balloons with Seven Lights chapter numbers, Emily hit the one with ‘34’. “Correct! 14 points.”

Emily jumped for joy and went to revisit the baseball cage. The roulette landed on Note. “Listen to this music!” The soundtrack “Chocolate Room” from Charlie and the Chocolate Factory played. “In what level was this music used?” a. Sweets Factory, b. Candied Island, c. Goofy Goober’s, d. Chocolate Island. Emily hit the ball to choice “B”. “Right again! 16 points.”

Emily returned to the merry-go-round and got a normal “?” . “Which of these characters has small feet?” a. Sheila Frantic, b. Cheren Uno, c. Shelly Johnson, d. Kirie Beatles. “Like you have to ask.” Emily shot choice “B” when it rotated by. She was correct and now had 18 points.

Afterwards, Emily revisited the farm as her next question was an Eye. “Look at this character.” I showed a picture of the backside of a nun with a white habit. “Catch the correct eye color!” A red eye, light-blue eye, yellow eye, and dark-green eye began to run around the farm. Gary jumped in with Emily and ran to net the blue eye. “Wroooong!”

“As it so happens, I met Index once!” Emily netted the green eye.

“Lucky you! 19 points.” Emily rerode the Ferris wheel next, deciding this would be the last question before she submitted her score. It was a Me question. “Which of these series stands as my favorite show of all time?” a. Kids Next Door, b. Fairy Tail, c. One Piece, d. RWBY. Emily shot the slingshot at One Piece. “Isn’t it obvious? 21 points!”

With that, Emily headed to the door in the back of the park, which was whitish-blue like everything else, and had black numbers decorated around it, like 2030, 6.13, 227, 321, and 1004. Emily went inside along with Sarah and Gary. It was pitch-black inside, for only their scores were visible. Sarah: 26, Emily: 21, Gary: 18. “Oh, dear! You won’t survive in the Gameverse with a score like that, Gary! Sorry, but I’m gonna have to evict you.”

“YAAAAAaahhh...”

Emily and Sarah exited the room, looking concerned. “Uh... what happened to him?” Sarah asked.

“Don’t concern yourselves with it.” Uxie winked.

“Round 2 begins with reset scores, Sarah vs. Emily! Try your best, but don’t be silly! But for this round, an extra hazard: a Death Space on the roulette leads to disaster.” An extra space with a skull appeared on the wheel. “Get this wrong and you’ll instantly die. Hope you have the extra lives to retry.”

Emily gulped and headed up the stairs to the Sky Flyer game again. The roulette spun and stopped at Clock. Emily had the choices of Sandman, Maddy, Vanellope, and Rupert. She chose to float down to Sandman’s platform.

Sandman appeared in the boss room of Freddy’s Pizzeria. “The animatronics are back again! Can you keep them away until the clock strikes ten?” Freddy Fazbear popped up, screamed, and ran at Sandman, who countered with his Shock Rod, Chica on his right, Bonnie behind him, he had to keep them away for a full minute. It was apparently 9:00, but the minutes counted up like seconds, so 10:00 would be the stopping time. The animatronics came so fast and he always stopped them a millisecond early—Foxy got a lucky bite off of him, so Nolan lost the challenge.

“Sorry, Emily. -2 points.” Emily sighed and went to the C.A.M.-C.A.R. set. The question was Sound-based. “Listen to this sound: what collectible would you have found?” The sound was a SHRIIIING! a. Riddler Trophy, b. Pipo Monkey, c. Fire Soul, d. Gold Wonka Bar. Emily maneuvered the car around the maze to touch Fire Soul, the correct answer putting her back at 0.

Emily decided to try a new attraction, a circle of colorful clams. The choices would fall into four of the eight clams and rotate around. Unfortunately, the roulette landed on Death. “How old is this character?” I showed a picture of a white-haired girl with pale eyes that looked like sunset. a. 10 years, b. 11 years, c. 12 years, d. 6,000 years. Emily saw the correct answer go into the orange clam, keeping an eye on it as it rotated, but when it stopped, she whacked answer “B”. “2 points!”

Emily went to the balloon-shooting game and got a “?” . “Which of the Thirteen Darknesses does not have an alias, epithet, or a second identity in their respective series or the Gameverse?” Thirteen balloons came up. Sarah appeared and quickly shot the one with Madara’s name. “Eh, not quite!” Emily shot Sōsuke Aizen’s name. “Yep! 3 points!”

Emily got on the roller coaster again and got a Death question. “Who was the person that killed Nigel Uno?” a. King Andrew, b. Daphne Anderson, c. Lucas Stonebuddy, d. Henry Churchill. Emily waited for the coaster to speed by Daphne and shot that answer. “You have been spared! 5 points.”

Emily returned to the shooting game and got a Note question. “Which story was this quote from?” “Yes, you called?” a. The Gang, b. Viridi’s Last Stand, c. Scorched Wings, d. Anthony Ant. Emily aimed carefully and shot choice “C” . “Right again, Em! Seven.”

Emily went to the rotating clams and got an Eye question. “Look at this story cover!” I showed a picture labeled Gamewizard2008 Presents Operation: GALACSIA, which was uncolored, had Dimentia in the center, and five of the main characters standing on Earth (including humanoid Luvbi). “Who drew this picture?” a. Gamewizard2008, b. Numbuh 227, c. Depthcharge2030, d. Numbuh 6.13. Sarah wanted in on this question, too, but she had the misfortune of choosing me as an answer. “Heh heh, unfortunately not.”

Emily smirked, having seen Depth’s name go in the green clam and proceeded to whack it. “Das right! 8 points for Emily!”

Emily stuck her tongue at Sarah and ran for the Water Net Pool, where she got a normal “?” . “Which of these universes also features Violet McCleary?” a. Legends Universe, b. Fanverse, c. IDA Multiverse, d. Out of Mind. Emily netted choice “A” . “Right again, mah man! Er, girl. 10 points!”

Emily grinned happily and raced back to the C.A.M.-C.A.R. set, eager for another question. However, she got a Time Trial and had choices between Emily, Wendy, Vanellope, and Sandman. “Hmmm… Honestly, I wanna play as Wendy.” She decided to maneuver the car through the maze and choose her. “I’m not THAT egotistic.”

Wendy Marvell appeared in one of the pinball machines of Casinopolis. “You have to score 500 coins in 2 minutes!”

“Oh, no! I stunk at this the first time.” Wendy cried.

“JUST DO IT!” Emily shouted.
“Yes, mysterious voice!!” Wendy cast a bubble shield over herself and rolled into the machine. At first, she was simply bouncing around, trying to maneuver into the slot machine and score coins. Sadly, her luck ran short as she couldn’t get good combos, but by some miracle, when the minute mark hit, she got three-in-a-row “7”s and won too many coins to count.

“Holy WOW that was awesome! 12 points and I’m glad we caught that on camera!”

Emily went back to the Net Farm, but her question was Death. “Have a look at this picture.” I displayed a hand-drawn picture of Carol Masterson in her new uniform, holding a laptop with a “$” and winking at the viewer. “Which part of this picture wasn’t in my original design for this form of Carol?” a. The dollar sign, b. The freckles, c. The puffy buns, d. The long socks. Emily ran to catch the dollar sign answer. “Bingo! Carol can only afford the best, after all!”

Emily headed for the bumper shoes and got another question relating to Me. “Choose the shoe that belongs to the character who shares my hair color!” Melody’s shoe, Nagisa’s shoe, Yuzu’s shoe, and George King’s shoe were driving around. Emily ran into George’s shoe and had 16 points.

Emily rode the Ferris wheel again and got a Sound question. “What elemental attack makes this sound?” I played what sounded like a sparking mixed with chirping birds. a. Spacebending, b. Airbending, c. Lightningbending, d. Lightbending.

“HYUH!” Sarah intervened and shot choice “D”.

“INCORRECT!” I shouted. It seemed Sarah’s mind played a trick on her, giving Emily the chance to choose “C”. “Correct! Emily now has 17 points!”

“I can go higher.” Emily declared, hopping off to run to the baseball cage. I spun the roulette and asked a Sight question.

“Where was this item found?” I showed a picture of a flower petal skirt. a. Lost Woods, b. Jungle of the Apes, c. Hidden Passe, d. Tortuga Backpass. Emily hit the baseball to Hidden Passe. “INCORRECT! Emily’s back to 15.”

Emily cursed herself and ran up the stairs to the Sky Flyer platform. The roulette stopped at “?”.

“So far, what has been the third-longest stage in the Gameverse?” a. Guertena Gallery, b. Majora’s Moonbase, c. Scattered Realms, d. Lunaria. Emily floated to choice “A”. “Right you are. 17 again.”

Emily rushed back to the balloon game. She got a Death Time Trial. “Choose your character wisely.” Balloons with various character names came up, and Emily shot Cheren’s.

Cheren Uno appeared in the Hidden Leaf Village, on the very other side from Mount Hokage. “Kill all the enemies in 10 seconds.” Cheren panicked, looking around for whatever enemy—and then he saw it… at the top of the mountain, though it looked like a dot. He smirked, aimed his arrow at the lone Bulblin, and shot it down from over 50 meters away. “Way to go, Cherry! 21 points!”

Emily sighed with relief after being spared from death. She chose to get one more question and ride the roller coaster. I spun the wheel and landed on “?”. “In what story did we see Dimentio “Sigh… okay.” Emily braced for the worst and went to submit her score. Emily: 23. Sarah: 22.

“Wow, Emily barely had enough! I guess she gets to survive, while her friends go bye-bye!”

“EYAAAAAAAH…” Sarah’s cries faded.

“Congratulations, Emily! You outsmarted your friends to nonexistence! But that doesn’t mean you’re walking away with the Firstborn. You have one more round of questions to endure. I have taken the liberty of bringing back some old friends!”

The curtains opened, and Nick and Zach appeared in wheelchairs. “WE’RE BACK, BITCHEEEEES!” the two cheered. (“B-word.” Zach said.)

“You can only win this game by defeating both of them. Don’t worry, I’m sure you’ll do great, Em. But be forewarned, for some I may ask, a follow-up question, that is your task. This time, I will let you see their score, if you are ever going to complete this chore.”

While Nick and Zach went their own separate directions, Emily returned to the Net Farm, her first question being about Me. “What used to be my average quota for chapter lengths in 2011?” a. 5,000 words, b. 1,000 words, c. 10,000 words, d. 33,000 words. Emily netted the thousand. “Yes, it was.” I bow my head in shame. “But what is the NEW average?!” Emily quickly netted the 10,000. “And THAT’S how much I improved! 3 points!”

Emily jumped happily and raced for the baseball cage. I spun the roulette and asked her a Visual question. (“Pick a synonym!” Kris shouted.) “Does this scene look familiar?” I showed a picture of a blue and white, bright wormhole. “Where was this located?” a. Index’s stomach, b. GKNH H.Q., c. Mysterious Underground, d. Library of Galaxia. Emily remembered this like she were somewhat there, and hit toward answer “A”. “But where did it lead to?” a. Newborn Universe, b. Xedni’s stomach, c. Hoopa’s Dimension, d. First Dimension. She hit toward “B”. “Ding-dong! 7 points!”

Emily raced up to the Sky Flyer Platform, but Zach Guiles was here to steal the show. They both got a Death question. “Check out these four items.” I displayed four pictures of a banana boomerang, a handheld radar, a wooden whistle, and a small sphere with a grapple claw. “Which of these items belongs to Sandman?” Zach nervously floated his wheelchair down to the radar. “Eh… no, Zach.”

“BBBBBBBBBBBBBBBB…” He was blown to smithereens.

“Correct! But where was it found?” a. A garbage can, b. Two kids were playing with it, c. A propane office, d. Sandman always had it.

“It’s ‘C’!” Emily yelled, earning 10 points. (“This score system is confusing.”) She then returned to the Water Net Pool and got a Sound question.

“Listen to this phrase and be amazed!” “I’M NOT A PSYCHICBENDER!!” “What chapter was this said?” a. Chapter 23, b. Chapter 27, c. Chapter 42, d. Chapter 65. Emily swam to answer “A”.

“I am on a ROLL!” Emily resurfaced, ran for the C.A.M.-C.A.R. track, and got a “?”.

“What was a sin in ‘Everything Wrong With Operation: GALACSIA’?” a. Sector V is useless, b. The OCs, c. The action stages, d. Violet wasn’t in it. Emily hit choice “A”. “Yes they were. 16 points.”

Emily revisited the Balloon Game and gulped when she got a Death question. “Who helped write Operation: ERASED?” The balloons listed the names of all Gameverse supporters. Remembering that story had Sunni and Darcy, Emily shot ‘6.13.’ “Nice shooting! 18 points.” Emily sighed and went to the bumper shoes. The roulette stopped at a Visual question.

“Take a look at this snowy peak!” I showed a picture of a snowy mountain, specifically a region between a trench with some cliffs going up. “Choose the footwear of the person that ventured this stage.” Emily had choices between a brown boot, a black shoe, a pale yellow bare foot, and a brown sandal. Thinking it would make a good Suki level, Emily hit the foot. “OOO, that’s wrong! Your turn, Nick.”

“BOOSH!” Nick rammed the sandal.

“Correct! Emily has 16 points while Nick has 23!”

“HU!” Emily gasped. She dashed for the Shooting Game, in desperate need of points. She got a “?” and was asked, “Which of these characters was shrunken for the shortest amount of time?” a. Nagisa Shiota, b. Jinta Hanakari, c. Cheren Uno, d. Wendy Marvell. Nick Klouse quickly rolled up in his wheelchair and hit “D”. “WRONG! Sorry, Nick, I count ALL the stories.” Emily shot Nagisa. “As it happens, I was there to do it!” she declared proudly, now at 17 points.

“Well well, I guess they’re just going to race each other.” I observed as both competitors hurried to the Rotating Clams. I spun the wheel and asked a Me question. “Which game did I play first?” a. Mad Father, b. Ib, c. Witch’s House, d. Yume Nikki. They both watched answer “B” go into a red clam, sure it was the answer as they waited for the rotation to stop. When it did, Emily kicked Nick out of the way and hit the clam. “Jingo! But which of those choices does not yet have any crossovers in this story?” Emily panicked and chose to hit the blue clam as choice “A” came out. “Very good, Em! You are now tied at Nick with 21 points!”

Emily and Nick ran for the baseball cage. They got a Death question. “Which of these characters didn’t have a monkey dress as them in Animonkey Tour?” a. Amethyst, b. Son Goku, c. Spike Spiegel, d. Aoi Yukimura. Confused, Nick Klouse shot at Amethyst. “NICK, NOOOO!” To my greatest dismay, I executed Nick on the spot.

“YAHOOOO!” Emily hit answer “B” and won by technical death.

“The winner of this game is Emily’s name! The Firstborn is yours, as well as fame! You can leave now you smartass dame, while your friends die in nonexistent shame.”

“Whoa whoa whoa!” Emily shouted. “I’m not leaving without my friends! They make me feel smart! (And chances are, I probably can’t ‘earn’ the Firstborn without choosing to save them.)”

“Very well, Emily, if that is your wish, one more round before we finish. NOW you must deal with me, over the flaming MAGMA SEA!” And so, we were both teleported onto a narrow bridge above a sea of lava, located somewhere in the park’s boundaries. Emily readied her Stun Club while I got my G-Staff. “The questions I ask have no multi-choice, you must answer with the best knowledge in your voice. One right gets you a free swing at me, but get it wrong and I will knock
YOU towards the sea.”

“Bring it on!” declared the smarty.

“Who came up with Operation: RECLAIM’s acronym?”

“227!” Emily whacked me.

“YOW!” I fell back. Nine spaces until the fall. “What’s the most recent anime I watched?”

Scientific Railgun! Another hit.

“OW! How many Nextgen operatives wear sandals, excluding DNK?”

“Uh… Eight?”

“WRONG!” I whacked her back. “What is a word Anthony never said?”

“Huh?”

“’COURSE NOT!” I hit her again. “What’s Sapphire’s element?”

“Ice?”

“NOT HERE!” Pushed her halfway. “Who’s a member of the Dimension Rebels we haven’t seen, yet?”

“ASH KETCHUM!” Emily pushed me back.

“YOW! Name a male Lilliput OC I created.”

“Avery!”

“D’oh!” I was pushed further. “Look at this picture!” The screen showed an image of the tip of an orange spiked hair curved downward.

“Shade!”

“D’arr!” I had 8 spaces left. “What’s this sound?” I played a noing noing noing noing sound.

“Throwing Rock Pikmin!”

“Ouch! Which character makes cameos in each of the towns?”

“Roger the Alien!”

“Oof! What story was a precursor to Fairy Sisters?”

“Zeiry the Fairy!”

“DAH!” 5 spaces left. “What rating did I give Fairy Tail?”

“9.5!”

“NOPE!” I hit her back. “My least-favorite Straw Hat?”

“Franky!”
“Yup!” I fell back again. “Why didn’t Sheldon Cooper come here?”

“He hates carnivals!”

“GRR!” 4 spaces left. “Did this character appear in the Gameverse?” I showed a picture of a brown-haired boy in a yellow shirt and blue pants.

“He wishes!” She hit me.

“Deak!” Three spaces. “Name the most depressing song I heard in 2015.”

“‘Undermine’ from Witch’s House!”

“NEEK!” Two spaces. “Speaking of which, who instigated the plot of Witch’s House in the Gameverse?”

“Crystal Wickens!”

“DOAF!” One space left. “Name one of my weaknesses!”

“Not good at confrontation!”

“DAH!” Zero spaces left. I was wobbling on the edge of the abyss. “And finally, what is Arceus’s Power Level?!”

“ONE BILLION!!” Emily struck the final blow.

“GYAAAAAH!” I dropped my G-Staff into the lava and wobbled on one foot, flailing my arms. “That’s it! It’s over, folks! Emily Garley has won the trivia, rescued her friends, and has earned herself a Firstborn! Thank you, thank you for playing! Don’t worry, for this park will be staying! If anyone would like to try the challenge, I’ll always be open, so don’t cringe! For now, let’s continue the story. From this point on, it shan’t be boring. See you later, as I take the fall! The Gameverse continues, thanks to Y’AAAAALL!” I plummet into the lava and take a big splash.

Emily reappeared at the central stage and claimed the Spirit Ball that materialized from thin air. She captured Uxie as the ball glowed – silver bottom, gold top, red emblem – and a ‘II’ appeared above the gem. (End song.)

Emily Garley captured a FIRSTBORN! Just 1 left!!

“YAHOOOO!” Emily tossed the Spirit Ball in the air as she left the park. “Thanks to me, all the Firstborn have been found!”

“But Cheren still ain’t catch Azelf, yet.” Sarah reminded.

“Also, Nebula didn’t find Jirachi ’til after you found Uxie.” Gary followed.

“Don’t steal this from me!!” Emily cried.

Uxie popped out of her Pokéball. “Congratulations, Emily! But we have other matters to attend to.”

“Defeating Specter, of course.”

“There’s that, but more importantly is your newfound metalbending. No doubt, you and your mother are descendants of Hornfels, one of the Noble Earthbending Families. I think you should go to the Tree of Beginning, the place where the families once gathered.”
“Why? To study metalbending? It would be cool and all, but we have monkeys to catch.”

“And that’s cooler?” Gary cocked a brow.

“It’s not just that.” Uxie replied. “For a long time, I felt… a strange, but familiar force emitting from the Tree of Beginning. I want to know what it is.”

Kris Hallows turned the camera to himself and said, “Aaaaand cut.”

Tree of Beginning

When Team Emily arrived at the Tree of Beginning, following Uxie’s lead, they saw another S.C.A.M.P.E.R. parked outside the stone wall. “I wonder who else is here…” Emily said to herself after landing. The other ship’s passengers disembarked at the same time. “Sector W!” The group of seven-year-olds (minus Fybi) were accompanied by Michelle, as well as an older boy who… Emily’s mouth dropped. “It can’t be… y-you’re Tom Taylor!”

“Hm?” The teenage Hawaiian with sunburnt skin raised a brow at her. “Yow, who’s the dork with parallelogram eyes?”

“His attempt at making knowledgeable humor is so sappy, and… HOT.” Emily started sweating.

“Good Lord.” Sarah rolled her eyes.

“What are you doing here, anyway?” Anthony asked them.

“Duh, Anthony! She’s a metalbender, isn’t she?” Michelle reminded. “She’s gotta be the Hornfels!”

“What do YOU know, Michelle?”

“Seriously?” Tom raised a brow. “You’re the Hornfels? You can bend metal?”

“Uh-huh!” Emily took out a nickel and made it levitate. “Pretty soon, I’ll be a real Magneto!”

(Apparently, she just discovered her power two days ago.” Aranea mentioned.

Mesprit popped out of Harvey’s Spirit Ball. “Uxie! Welcome!”

“Hi, Mesprit! Guess who just became my Guardian?”

“Cheren?”

“HA HA HA HA!” Both sisters laughed.

“Ahem!” a squeaky voice coughed. They looked at the base of the wall, where a Minish guard stood.

“What business do you humans have here? This isn’t a place where you can have your… big human parties!”

Tom’s Minish mentor, Gedra hopped out of his hair and landed on the ground, approaching the guard. “This boy Tom is the son of the Sovite Family. These two,” he gestured at Anthony and Michelle, “are from the Granite Family, and that big-eyed girl claims to be of the Hornfels.”

“The Earth Children descendants?!” the guard exclaimed. “Including Princess Shelly, that means… all four of the Noble Earthbenders are here! They must be taken up to God Regigigas and prove their selves. The four of them can come in as they are, but the others must either shrink or remain outside.”
“No thanks, I’m fine out here.” Aranea said in a ‘chill’ mood.

The guard signaled the earthbender Minish to open the wall. Emily grinned and waved to her friends as she entered, and the wall shut them out. Sarah and Gary rolled their eyes at her ego.

“So, how do you know Tom, Anthony?” Emily asked.

“Trained with him awhile ago. Then for some reason, Michelle wanted me to pick him up on our way here.”

“He’s the Sovite, isn’t he?” Michelle replied smugly.

Uxie then floated in front of her, staring sharply. “There is still something off about you… Do you mind if I enter and examine your brain?”

“Meep!” Michelle clamped her ears.

The four were led up to the royal quarters of the tree, where Princess Shelly was lain in a patch of flowers as Minish were feeding her berries, massaging her feet, and sending Pikmin to recover dirt. “I don’t even care if Shorts is the President of America, anymore. I’m living the life of luxury.”

“Good gracious, young lady!” Queen Lánshelly hopped onto Shelly’s nose. “If I can’t trust you not to enslave my people, I’m revoking your normal size privileges!”

“I’m not enslaving anyone. These kids are fine with it, aren’t they?”

“We sure are, Princess!” a girl Minish replied bubbly. “You’re really beautiful and tell funny stories about the human world!”

“Are we interrupting something?” Anthony asked as they approached.

“And who are you four?” the queen inquired.

“Your Highness, they claim to be the Earth Children descendants.” replied the guard. “I wanted to take them and the princess to Regigigas.”

“The Four Earth Children? Including Hornfels? I’ll take it from here—Shelly, get your butt up!” The queen summoned some Wing Pikmin to lift her.

“Ugh.” The Minish quickly climbed off as Shelly helped herself up. Her mother escorted the lot of them to the top of the tree.

The God of Earth, Regigigas, woke from his slumber, the beeping lights signaling his body rebooting. The god sensed the earthbenders’ presence and stomped forward, quaking the tree. Regi examined the earthbenders and scanned them. “Subjects identified: Anthony and Michelle McKenzie of Granite. Shelly Johnson of Quartzite. Tom Taylor of Sovite. Emily Garley of… Hornfels. Children… welcome back to my tree.”

“Welcome back?” Anthony questioned. “Have we been here before?”

“Not you. But they… have…” Regigigas linked his hands together as a ball emerged from the top of his body. The ball projected a holographic scan over the room, dividing it in four parts: a forest, a desert, a volcano, and a metal mine.

“Made of spiritual energy…” Uxie followed.

“Look!” Anthony pointed. Four figures began to form in the respective areas. In the desert was a 17-year-old boy with black hair to his neck and dark-purple armor. In the volcano was a muscular 18-year-old with spiky brown hair and red-hot skin. The mine produced an orange-haired, scrawny boy with silver armor, 17 years old. And in the forest, there came a 16-year-old girl with green armor and dirty brown hair.

“Ha ha!” The girl grinned at Anthony, her green eyes shining. “Heeey! I’m glad we finally get to talk!”

“M…Mom?”

“NO, silly! I’m not your mom, I’m your ancestor, Granite!”

“Granite? Then that means the rest of you…” Anthony looked around.

“We’re the original Earth Children, yes.” Quartzite responded. “Didn’t know you kids were so famous among the Minish community, did ya?”

“In more ways than I thought.” Shelly realized.

“Yeah, those little guys are fun, aren’t they?” Quartzite chuckled. “Don’t tell them I said this, but they do make good servants.”

“Ugh.” Lánshelly sighed. “True, the Earth Children are very renowned among the Minish, due to the fact they trained under God Regigigas. Some Minish watched over their descendants and hoped to one day train the newborns... However, Hornfels steadily drifted away from his roots.”

“Sorry.” Hornfels replied with a sheepish grin. “I never quite… ‘fit in’ with the rest of you. Like, I learned I was really good with machines, and my descendants were good with machines… Before we knew it, we stopped being about metalbending and more about-”

“Hah! Nice!” Tom nudged his ancestor. “Hey, when am I gonna get abs like yours?”

“After ten million more push-ups.” Sovite punched him.

“Damn you!” Tom threw a punch, but Sovite blocked and shoved him to the ground.

“This is the first time in eons when the Earth Children have come together here.” Regigigas said. “It was I that originally brought them together for an important purpose. The purpose… I will now show you.”

“Not yet!” Michelle yelled. “We’re still waiting for someone! I feel her coming right now.”

They all looked to the entrance, curious to who would be coming. The person to enter the holographic room was a white-haired girl in a black shirt and orange skirt. Her orange eyes held the vibrance of a rising sun. “Hello!” She waved.

“Miyuki?” Emily said confusedly.

“No, it’s Ikuyim!” Anthony recognized.

“I know this might sound weird, but I had a dream telling me to come here.” Ikuyim explained.
“It was I that summoned you under... special orders.” Regigigas said. “With the Latsyrc Family of the Negaverse... we now have five benders with different forms of Earth Chi.”

“But we’re still one short.” Quartzite mentioned. “What about Stone?”

“Oh, yeah... Stone...” Sovite moaned with remorse.

“Stone?” The name seemed familiar to Anthony.

“No, guys!” Granite perked up. “I’ve been with Stone all this time! Well, part of him, anyway.”

“Part of him?” Hornfels queried.

“I mean, it’s... kinda hard to explain. I kinda don’t get it, either.”

“I can explain.” Michelle replied, facing Anthony. “But... we should go downstairs first, shouldn’t we?”

“Michelle, what the crud are you hiding from me?” the brother glared.

“Tee hee hee! Nothing, Anthony!”

Minish KND Quarters

Ever since Team Rupert recovered the King’s Brew from the Zingers’ Hive, the Minish have been adding the golden honey to all their fruit and bread crumbs. It was extremely delicious and brought delight to everyone’s day. Supreme Leader Lenari was impressed with their work and terrifically boosted Team Rupert’s status among the Minish, not to mention gave them more food than they could ask for. Unfortunately, after 9 days, they were still asking for something else.

“Why won’t you tell us where Malarko’s Pikmin Army is?!” Rupert shouted, following Lenari through the cafeteria.

“YEAH! You guys are STILL gobbling up this honey we risked our necks to get, we deserve to know!” Timothy joined.

“I told you guys that it’s not only sacred, it’s dangerous! Sappo and Gibli weren’t allowed to tell you about the army, but if three humans like you attempt to go there, it’ll only end badly.”

“Then take us there yourself!” Rupert argued.

“I CAN’T! And besides, that shouldn’t be your top priority. You saw that message in the sky, the Apocalypse is going to happen soon. We need to rally with the Human Kids Next Door and think of a plan. Just quit... asking about it.” He walked away.

“Y’know, he has a point.” Timmy said. “After seeing that sky show, I’m not really worried about finding Malarko’s army.”

“But this is exactly why we should try to find it!” Rupert reasoned. “If it’s really going to happen, we need to have one more adventure before we... I mean, there’s a chance that we won’t...”

“I wanna find Malarko’s Pikmin, too.” Hikari replied solemnly. “But I’m scared, Rupy.”

“And what are a thousand Pikmin gonna do for us, anyway?” Timmy asked.

Rupert sighed. “I guess you’re right.”
“All operatives, report to the southern balcony and bring your Wing Pikmin!” the PA announced. “A massive swarm of bees is approaching the tree! In fact, you might wanna stop eating that honey.”

Team Rupert rushed to action and called their Onions to the south balcony with other Minish. There was a swirling cloud flying toward the great tree, buzzing loudly. Zingers composed the cloud, and leading the swarm was a giant bee whose rage spread to his swarm. “It’s King Zing!” Sappo exclaimed. “He must’ve found out where his honey pot is!”

“BUZZ-BUZZZZ…” A squad of Zingers swooped down on their king’s command.

“I can’t believe it!” Rupert said.

“I know. That’s a lot of bees…” Timothy shuddered.

“No, I can’t believe it’s almost the end of the story and we’re just now getting a second boss fight!”

“Let’s kick their buzzing butts!” Hikari jumped. (Play “Boss Bossanova” from Donkey Kong Country 2!)

Boss fight: King Zing

“Gibli, run and get some Bomb Rocks!” Sappo ordered, his sister saluting. “Rupert, help us hold them off!”

“Can do!” Team Rupert evasively commanded their Pikmin to dodge as Zingers stabbed the ground, sending Wing Pikmin to beat the bees down while the Purples smashed them. Electric Zingers flew in, but Hikari was quick to toss Yellow Pikmin to weaken them. A Commander Zinger ordered a line of Baby Bees to swoop across an area, so the humans quickly rolled out of the way. Large globs of honey dropped down and stuck Rupert and some Minish in place. “We’re stuck! Guys, hurry up!” Timmy and Hikari sent the Brown Pikmin to free Rupert, who would throw Rocks to attack the Honey Bees who were going to kidnap them.

When they defeated enough Zingers, King Zing himself flew down to the field. The Bee King was more terrifying up close, and his anger burned for the humans that stole his honey. He had a sphere of bees protecting him, so while Hikari was distracting and dodging the king’s stings, Rupert and Timmy were behind, throwing Pikmin at the bees. They tossed Brown and Ice Pikmin to stick to Zing’s body, but he was too strong to damage normally. The king shook them off and whipped around to face them.

“Sappo, I brought the Bomb Rocks!” Gibli returned in a hurry.

“I’ll take one!” Hikari gave a bomb to a Brown Pikmin and threw it up onto Zing. Although she sacrificed a Pikmin, the king suffered a great blow. “BUZZ, buzz, buzz, buzz…!”

The Bee King buzzed back to the cloud of bees and sent stingers to rain down upon them. Five Reds and six Purples were killed. “Ahh!” Rupert tripped when trying to dodge a stinger.

“Rupert!” Timmy and Hikari came to his aid—they braced for cover when a stinger threatened to crush them. A group of giant vines suddenly popped up and defended everyone.

“Is anybody hurt?!” Princess Gonshiri yelled.
“Princess!” Sappo yelled. “We lost a lot of Pikmin, but the Minish are still okay.”

“I knew it was a bad idea for you to steal that honey. Sigh, well all we can do now is drive these monsters away. We’ll have to destroy the king if we want to make them scatter. I can raise a vine and lift you closer to him.”

“He’s surrounded by a sphere of bees!” Rupert pointed. “We won’t be able to get through.”

“Yes we can.” Timmy declared. “All those bees are blocking the sunlight. Let’s send Ghost Pikmin up!” They summoned 10 Ghosts from the Onions and sent them to fly straight up through the swarm. None of the bees could attack them, and when they made it to King Zing, they freely attacked his eyes and caused him to scatter the shield.

“I’ll hold you up as long as I can!” Gonshiri lifted Team Rupert and their Pikmin up a very long beanstalk, going up through the cloud of bees and becoming horizontal as it circled around King Zing. The kids dodged his blows as Timmy threw Rock Pikmin at his stinger, damaging him, but causing the king to pop stingers in many directions, with one stabbing Timmy’s cape into the vine. He ditched the cape and tried to settle his speeding heart. Their Wing Pikmin caught up, having brought Bomb Rocks. One of them threw a bomb onto Zing’s body and damaged him.

Angered, the Bee King electrified himself and zapped the Wings out of the air. He began to drill a thunder bolt along the vine, so Team Rupert sprinted across the narrow rounding path. Several Pikmin were hit and stunned, tempting Rupert to run backwards and face them so he could recover the Pikmin with his whistle. “RUPERT!” Timothy grabbed his friend and dove over the side before the lightning could hit. Wing Pikmin swooped down and rescued their masters, lifting them back up to the vine behind the king.

King Zing was still chasing Hikari, but Rupert could give a Bomb Rock to a Yellow Pikmin and run to throw it onto Zing’s stinger. “BUZZ, buzz, buzz, buzz…!” The king flew away to let his weak point recover.

“Grrrr, I can’t hold this vine any longer!” Gonshiri yelled, her hands dropping as the beanstalk collapsed. Team Rupert called their Wing Pikmin to catch them as they each picked up a Bomb Rock.

“That’s okay! We can defeat him like this!” Rupert declared. “Let’s get him, team!” King Zing glared at the humans and shot stinger bullets as they pursued through the buzzing storm. King Zing charged and tried to ram through them, but the kids dodged in time. King Zing flew under and got in front of them again. “Hikari, go for his stinger, we’ll get the wings!”

“Um… That stinger looks scary.” Hikari said worriedly.

“I know, but you’re faster, you can dodge it.”

“Okay, Rupy…” While the boys flew up and diverted King Zing’s attention, Hikari aimed her bomb at the stinger. “BUZZ!”

“YEEP!” Hikari yelped when a smaller Zinger flew by her—King Zing whipped his vision down to see her, raising his stinger.

“HIKARI!” Timothy dropped down and BZZPKOOM! King Zing’s sting felt like taking a thousand lightning bolts at once.

“TIMMYYYYY!” Hikari cried as her brother fell to the earth.
“BUUUUUUUUUUUUUUUZZZZ!” King Zing flashed like lightning, feeling absolute pride in claiming vengeance on one of his enemies. Fueled with anger, Rupert threw his Bomb Rock at Zing’s wings with great force. “BUUUUUU, buzz!”

“YOU MEANIE BEE!” Hikari chucked hers at the stinger, and with both weak points fatally wounded, the king fell. “BUUUUUUUUuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuuu…”

The swarm grew confused and scattered, so Rupert and Hikari told their Pikmin to take them back to ground. Other Wings had rescued Timothy, and Minish gathered around the boy. He was swelling red. (End song.)

King Zing’s dead body was collected by Rupert’s Brown Pikmin, who carried him to their Onion to produce 50 more of their kind. But the humans couldn’t celebrate their victory with Timothy injured. Medical Minish injected him with a white sap. “Timmy… I…I’m sorry.” Rupert felt responsible.

“It’s not your fault, Rupy.” Hikari said. “He tried to save me. But at least the nice nurse will make him better.”

“I’m… afraid not.” Nurse Sipi said. “The medicine I used usually fixes Zinger stings… but King Zing’s was stronger. I’m afraid the medicine will only keep Timmy alive for… at least a day.”

“No!” Rupert yelled. Hikari cupped her sleeves over her mouth and broke into tears. “There’s NOTHING we can do?!”

“King Zing had the most toxic stinger of all bees.” Gonshiri spoke solemnly. “The only thing I can think of that would heal Timothy… is the God Fruit.”

“The God Fruit?”

“Princess!” Lenari shouted reprovingly. “You aren’t actually thinking of…”

“Yes, I am! I may not be pure-hearted, but I won’t let any operatives die under my watch!”

“But you know your uncle is after the God Fruit!”

“The God Fruit won’t leave its cave. We’ll carry Timothy there, heal him, and destroy what remains of the fruit. King Andrew won’t have a chance to take it.”

“Fine, then let’s go!” Rupert insisted. “Where is the God Fruit?!”

Lenari sighed. “It’s… It’s in a country called the Wistful Wild. Deep underground. The same cavern where Malarko’s army is hidden.”

Remember WAAAAAAAY back in Chapter 46? When Team Rupert stole that honey? You didn’t think that was gonna be important. But it WAS! But yeah, anyone who wants to attempt the quiz, just say the word, it’s always open! Next time, we will do Rupert’s final stage, the Wistful Wild. The hardest of all Pikmin levels.
The Marzipan Pirates search for the secret underneath Gumdrop Cove.

Are you ready to learn why this is Noah’s Arc?

Chapter B-33: The Ark

Gumdrop Cove

It was twilight when the Marzipan Pirates returned to Gumdrop. The village was more hectic than usual—some houses were on fire and pirates were beating the sugar out of each other. “Why pirates devolve into Neanderthals?” Nel asked, riding her captain’s shoulders.

“I reckon it’s to do with that business in the sky.”

“THE END IS NIGH!” cried Gelatin Gerald, standing on a pile of defeated Soda Pirates. “Brandon, Ay’ve defeated yer crew, now BUILD me a soda rocket so that I may return home- NYAR!” Augustus grabbed him off the pile.

“Gerald, where is Brandon?! I need to ask him something.”

“Where ya think he is, boy, where ’e always is! Too afraid ta face me, he is.”

The Marzipans fought through the crowds and made it to the Soda Can, which was empty except for one person. Bubbly Brandon was at the same table he was seated at the beginning of this month, staring at the same treasure Augustus brought him: the Everbubble Fizz. “Not feeling fizzy today, Brandy?”

“Not anymore, Augustus.” Brandon replied solemnly. “I’ve foreseen such a cataclysm… ’twas always in me nightmares. They called me crazy, but now Ay’m the only one sane… The end of the world.”

“Well, I have news, too.” Augustus ejected the Lost Candies from the Infi-Cube. “I found all the Lost Candies… except for one. And it’s hidden under this very island.”

“Augustus… yer still fixated on such things?”

“I have every reason to be, Brandon. The Lost Candies are supposed to create a ship. A ship that’s supposed to save everyone from the Apocalypse. I’m talking to you because you’ve been coming to this island longer than anyone. I think you have the best chance at knowing where it is.”

“That don’t mean a thing, boy. There be hundreds of sugar-salts on this rock. If there were a giant vessel under this island, it sure ain’t noticeable. Otherwise, all the pirates would be where it is.”

“I didn’t say there was a giant vessel under the island.”

“Y-…” Brandon was confused. “Sure ya did, you said the last candy is under this island.”
“Right, but did I say it was the ship?”

“Well- I… thought the implication was…”

“Bruh, you lie worse than me.” Rallo remarked.

“Brandon, I know you know where it’s hidden.” Augustus stated. “Why are you keeping it secret?”

“Because… that’s when my nightmares started happening. I found the ship you’re talking about… found it in my 20s. I wanted to eat every ounce of that candy. But I was so tired from the journey that I took a nap… I saw the planet collapsing, stars exploding, some wave of green mist… and that ship was sailing on by. I thought it was a bad omen… I left that cave and never came back. Never told anyone about it… but I feared the worst happening. ’Tis the very reason I sought to taste all the world’s sodas, and live my life the way I wanted to.”

“And where was the cave, do you remember?”

“Aye…”

Bubbly Brandon led the Marzipans to the Scarlet Licorice, where sexy female pirates came to dance. The bar was abandoned when they stepped in. “’Shame.” Brandon said. “When that Sky Show took place, the lovely lady pirates suddenly had epiphanies and wanted to spend the remainder of their lives doing something more meaningful than pleasing the opposite gender. In my youth, I found the lady pirates here so beautiful that I break into this bar after hours to, eh, nibble on their licorice bikinis.”

“Gross!” Augustus remarked.

“Man, we the ones should be saying that.” Rallo said.

“One day, I decided to play around with the poles.” They stepped onto the stage with two licorice poles. “I got two Licoropes and wrapped them around the tops of either pole to practice my… acrobats.”

“Acrobats?” Augustus chortled. “What, were you in the Circus Pirates?”

“No, but there was a pretty lass from that crew I… may have tried to impress. But when I did, the poles bent, the tops connected, and… Just try it, Augustus.”

“Stewie, gimme yours.” August requested. He roped his Licorope around the top of the left pole and roped Stewie’s around the right. Using Haki strength, the captain tugged both ropes and bent the poles to touch the tips, shaping them like an archway. He unwrapped the ropes and gave Stewie’s back as they stared confusedly. “I don’t understand what-” Augustus walked between them and vanished.

“Captain!” Rallo and the crew gasped. Augustus’s head seemed to stick out of nothingness.

Exchanging frightful looks, the four children entered the invisible portal. They were taken to a vast chamber with a giant door sealed with a keyhole and six small doors around the wall, equal to the number of keyholes. There was an image of an ark on the ceiling, similar to the design they saw in the Deep Cream. “These doors each hold a trial that uses one of the Candy Powers.” Brandon explained. “I had to complete ’em all to see the marvel that lay behind that big door there.”
“Then we know what we have to do.” Augustus began his next lollipop. “Which door you kids wanna do first?” (Play “Tower of Riddles” from Paper Mario: Thousand-Year Door.)

Stage B-29: Noah’s Shrine

Mission: Find the sixth Lost Candy.

The Marzipans first decided to enter a door with a Pop Gum floating over it. The door led to a small room with several chocolate rocks, an available Pop Gum, and a sign in the middle. Nel chose to chew the Pop Gum while her captain read the sign.

> Save the stones with taste.
> Where shall the worlds go.
> The tasteless stone must break.

Before shooting Nel’s gum, Augustus walked around and tasted each of the chocolate rocks. While all the same color, they each tasted different, from milky chocolate, nutty chocolate, dark chocolate, minty chocolate… One of the stones tasted like mud, nearly making him puke. He destroyed that rock with the Nel Launcher. “Aye, ya did it, boy!” Brandon called. “One of the keyholes be glowing!”

Indeed, one of the holes on the central door glowed, and was in the respective location of the room they completed. Next, the kids entered a door with a Bounce Gum. There was a central cyan switch and various puddles of colored Kool-Aid around the wall. The sign read:

> Colors surround us.
> But they all share one sky.
> Combine and taste their flavor.

Augustus sat on the Bounce Gum, drenched it in the blue Kool-Aid, then the green to make cyan, pushing the same-colored switch. The switch became magenta, so the captain bounced in purple and pink Kool-Aid. Afterwards, it wanted brown Kool-Aid, which Augustus got by combining yellow with orange, then red. When the switch was hit the third time, another keyhole glowed.

Next, they entered the Fudgepuffsicle room. There was a spiked floor and ceiling, and a licorice rope-lever in one corner. (Candy corn spikes, of course.)

> Believe in your friends.
>
> And the gods that protect you.
> Let them guide you.

As expected, Augustus would have to eat the Puffsicle and let Nel ride him. The bloated boy maneuvered toward the switch while Nel made light jumps to keep from sinking him in the spikes or letting him float too high. When they got to the lever, Nel kept Augustus under her while she grabbed the rope in her teeth and pulled it down with her weight. Augustus barely touched the floor spikes when the switch fully hit. They made their way to the start as August deflated. A keyhole was glowing.

“I actually cheated that one.” Brandon mentioned. “Burped me a mighty big soda bubble, I did.”

The crewmates entered the Shrink Sweet room, which had three tiny holes in the opposite wall.

> The right road to take.
Augustus held Maggie up to peep into each of the holes, and she confirmed the left one was safest. Augustus ate the sweet and shrunk as Maggie put him in her slingshot. She carefully aimed at the little hole and flung him through. Augustus bounced on a marshmallow over a dark pit and landed on a safe foothold. There, he could eat a Growth Gum to stretch back to normal and press a switch. He climbed a ladder to a walkway above the room to return to the side with his friends.

The next room utilized Rock Candy. It was a humongous room that consisted of a racetrack swirling down.

Life is an endless loop.
The universe begins and ends.
Know where it stops.

Augustus encased in the Rock Candy and began rolling down the swirling, whirling path. The four kids felt dizzy while watching him, especially when he seemed to come down from the top after going down. Indeed, Augustus was trapped in an endless loop, but the captain was probably too dizzy to realize that. There was a floating pink switch between two loops, and it was lined up with a part on the opposite side. “Augustus, jump when the pink thing is above you!” Stewie yelled. Augustus saw what he was referring to. When he was aligned, he pushed up and caused the Rock Candy to jump, hitting the switch and bouncing back to the start with a marshmallow. The sixth door they had to complete was the Fizzy Lift Soda. It took place in a breezy room over a dark pit, with a Red, Green, Blue, and Dark Chuchu bubble floating around. There was a gray Tongue One on the other side.

He who hungers for strength.
Beware the enclosing darkness.
With a heavy heart, he swallows.

None of the Chuchu matched the Tongue One’s color. However, there was a ray of light poking in from the corner near the entrance. Augustus pushed the Dark Chu to the light and turned it to stone. He quickly grabbed the round stone, which nearly weighed his floating body into the pit. He struggled to carry the stone to the Tongue One and set it in its mouth. “THAAAAANK YOOOOOOOOU.”

With the six trials completed, the great door opened, shaking the cavern in the process. “Ya did it, mates! The door is open!” Brandon called. “The ship not be far now.”

“Sweet!” Augustus dropped his lolli stick. “Let’s go, team.” The passage took them down a zigzaggy cave dripping soda from the light-brown stalactites. They came to a tall wall with a cinnamon path, making use of their Corn-Clamber Boots. At the top, they were taken to an extremely vast room of the cave, most of which was occupied by a terrific mass. The five pirates gaped.

It was a gargantuan ship designed like an ark with an orange body, some yellow stripes, blue wings, and a gold central house on the deck. It had to be as big as an island. It was impossible to believe something as enormous as this was hidden under Gumdrop. “You’ve finally made it.” A tiny, childish voice said. The kids were so busy looking up, they didn’t think to look down and see the Sugar Fairy with mean purple eyes.

“Princess Zeira….” Augustus said. “Why couldn’t you have told me about all this before? About “The Apocalypse?”

“The World Government is against the Twenty Keys Prophecy and anything that references it. If you were seeking the Lost Candies with knowledge of the Apocalypse, Lord Licorice would have been tempted to kill you more. Besides… the news of the Apocalypse has struck fear in the hearts of many. I didn’t want that fear to drive you. Instead, what you had was a desire to grant someone’s dying wish… that pure-hearted nature was what drove you.”

“Did it occur to you that I might’ve worked FASTER knowing the world was at stake?! That I could be saving billions of lives besides Luviro’s?”

“Perhaps, but sometimes faster is not better. But it doesn’t matter now. Finally, the six Lost Candies are here. We can revive the Gummi Ship, Noah.”

“The Noah? Like Noah’s Ark?”

“Exactly. The same way Noah’s Ark was to protect the animals from the floods, the Gummi Ship Noah is meant to save the universe’s population from the Apocalypse.”

“The entire universe? It’s big and all, but I don’t even think it can hold the entire world. How is it supposed to work?”

Zeira floated up to the teen’s face, glaring cutely. “How do you think, big guy?”

“Um…” August felt like he should know, yet he didn’t.

Zeira jumped away. “However, it won’t function without the powers of the Lost Candies. Bring them inside quickly. I have already placed the Sugar Fuel in its rightful place. If you’re smart, figure out where the others go.” She flew inside the ship.

“Alright.” Augustus began his next lollipop. “Let’s find a way inside.”

An invisible force appeared to be keeping the vessel propped up, giving them room to run underneath. They saw a Sugar Fairy floating near one side of the ship, and when they ran toward it, the fairy flew up into a window several feet above. “Maggie, you wanna get in there and look for somethin’?” The baby nodded and shot her grappling hook to lift her up into the window.

She was in a room with a candy corn spike floor, and across it was a lever. Maggie shot her grappling hook to the lever and flipped it. Outside, the Marzipans heard a CRASH, looking left to see an anchor drop from a hatch near the front. “MAGGIE, there’s an anchor!” Augustus called for the baby to come down. The crew rushed over to the anchor and stared up at the hatch.

“This looks much too small to actually hold a ship this massive in place.” Stewie observed.

“Yeah, it’s like they set up these puzzles on purpose. Nel, you’re small enough, climb up there and find a ladder to throw down or something.”

“Eyes, Aughsucks!” Nel responded before climbing the anchor’s chain.

The cavegirl climbed into a rather tight room of the ship, which led to a corridor with a java pit below. Nel could sidle along a horizontal pipe on her right, then jump to a left pipe when it ended. Nel set foot on the other side and up some chocolate-bar stairs. The following passage led across a java river, where Nel had to jump floating marshmallows that would sink under her weight. Nel then had to swing three hanging Licoropes that would quickly collapse before landing at the base of another stairway. They led to a hall, where the left route led further in the ship, while the right route led to a sealed door.

Nel approached the door and stepped on a switch beside it. The door opened, giving Nel view of her crew down below. A mechanical ladder also lowered from the entrance.

“AUGHSUUUUCKS!” She waved for their attention.

“Hey, great job, Nel! Time to see what this baby’s like on the inside.” The crewmates climbed into the ship as Nel took her place on her captain’s shoulders again. They followed the passage to a massive room whose floor was messy with rotten sugar piles and giant Life Savers lain around. On their right, there were two staircases leading up to a higher floor, but there was a sealed garage door between those stairs labeled Generator.

Augustus knocked on the garage door and stuck his Haki hands underneath to try and lift it. He could only lift it slightly, but Stewie took the Infi-Cube and crawled underneath. There was a machine with a glass case and a circular space in its center. Stewie got the Cupcake Core out of the cube and placed it in the space. There was a big green button on a panel on the left, and when Stewie pressed it, the chamber sparked to life and began absorbing the cupcake’s energy.

The door to that room opened, and the pirates gaped when the Life Savers floated in the air, and everything brimmed to life. From the top of the twin stairs, one of them could jump to a small Life Saver that floated to and fro. Stewie had the honors of jumping on and making leaps to the following floating Life Savers. They led to a platform hanging on a wall with several nuts and bolts. There was a large, central peg where a nut could be screwed in, and what better fit than the Rock Nut.

When Stewie twisted it in, the Rock Nut sent some kind of energy glow across the structure of the ship. The crewmates entered a door above the stairs, leading to a room with multiple gears. One of the central pegs was empty, so Augustus took the liberty of putting the Gear Heart there. The gears still weren’t spinning, but with a few tremors from Rallo’s boombox, the Gear Heart pumped to life and began endlessly spinning the system.

The following door led to a chamber of giant gears, leading to an area where the Sun Key would go. Nel bit the Sun Key in her teeth and hopped up some vertical gears, ducked to avoid being crushed by the point in an above gear, then jumped to grab a rotating chain. She dropped on a flat gear, then jumped three hollow gears with Amps floating around them. She then had to Wall Jump between two stacks of small gears, and at the top, she jumped more vertical gears that each had only one spot for her feet. With her excellent platforming, she got into the control chamber and stuck the Sun Key in the keyhole.

The Noah shook harder when all the Lost Candies were in their rightful places. A pathway stretched from the control area down to the other crewmates, allowing them to regroup with Nel.

“The ship is fully powered. Meet us up on the bridge.” Zeira’s voice said through the PA.

From the control room, the pirates crossed a hallway and passed a vacant room that had an illusion of space. After going up a few stairs, they found their selves at the deck of the ship, where Bubbly Brandon had been brought by the fairies. Augustus approached Zeira and asked, “It’s certainly big, but how is it gonna get out of here?”

“Don’t underestimate the power of the Lost Candies. BEGIN LIFT-OFF!” (End song.)

The pirates took cover inside the gold house when the ship trembled with power. It felt as if the entire earth quaked when the ship burst up through the ceiling and flooded ocean water into the cave. Everybody on Gumdrop Cove fell off their feet when the titanic vessel lifted up into the sky.

When the trembling subsided, the pirates stepped outside and looked over the railing. The view of the briny sea was astounding, and as the ship steadily ascended, they would soon see the entire planet. “Wow… Imagine the look on Mom’s face when I bring this home.” Augustus remarked.

“I’m afraid I will have to deny you the chance.”

The pirates whipped around and found Lord Licorice, Mandy McKenzie, Azula, and Blackberry Guards. “LICORICE! Where did you come from?!”

“We’ve been camouflaged in the dark sky all along, stupid boy.” Licorice said, holding his gun ready. “With all the Lost Candies, we knew it was only a matter of time before you awakened the Noah. But instead of ambushing you and taking the Lost Candies, we thought it far better to let you do what you must… so we may put this vessel to better use.”

“Oh yeah?” Augustus took out the lolli stick and dropped it over the edge. “And what better use is that?”

“Destroying Kids Next Door Moonbase, of course! King Andrew claims that those meddlesome brats are holding the Seven Lights up there, safe from their grasp. Our only chance to stop the prophecy is to destroy them in one fell swoop. Using the power of this indestructible Noah, I will be the man that ended the Twenty Keys Prophecy! Meanwhile, you five will be the sad little pirates who failed to stop me, and jumped over the edge in despair.”

“What makes you say that?”

“Because if you don’t,” replied Mandy, “we’ll feed your Sugar Fairy friend to Azula.” She revealed the butterfly net and the helpless Zeira squirming inside.

“Didn’t you learn your lesson from last time?” Augustus asked Azula.

“I remember what happened.” Azula replied with a snarl. Her eyes were still red from crying all month. “And I learned something: when I feel sad, when I cry… a new fire burns inside me. A fire that burns from pain… and I love feeling that way. I want to cry more… so I can BURN more!” She combusted with sapphire flames.

“Not now, dearest!” Licorice cautioned. “So, what will it be, Marzipans? Are you going to jump, or let your fairy die?”

Augustus glanced over the edge. He stared at his crewmates and nodded assuringly. “You win, Licorice. I guess we just weren’t good enough. Come on, kids. Together!” He picked the four kids up and leapt backward. Licorice and Mandy stared over the railing, but saw only open sea.

“I say… they fall fast.” The Candy Lord observed.

“Indeed, too fast.” Mandy agreed. “But what can you do about juniors. Speaking of which:” She kicked Licorice off his feet and pinned his chest under her foot.

“GYAH!” Licorice yelped when she tipped a sword to his neck. “What are you doing?!”

“Surprise, surprise.” Mandy said sarcastically. “I’m double-crossing you.” Behind her, Moblin and Fatblin had climbed onboard and were attacking the Blackberries. “A ship with this size and power will make the Boogie Pirates invincible. Could use a paint job, of course. I’m not sorry to say I’m putting you out of commission, Licorice.”
“N-Now now, Mandy.” Licorice said nervously. “Perhaps we can sit down and talk about this! Or better yet, you can GO down!” He sunk into the deck.

Mandy, Azula, and the demons were immediately grabbed in cocoons from the ship’s gummy deck. Azula was unable to burn it and Mandy couldn’t phase out. “What in the world is this?!”

“Myah hah hah hah ha ha!” Lord Licorice emerged in the form of a candy monster. “Marvelous! My powers work on this vessel after all! And how convenient, even a Logia’s power is useless against it.” He squeezed the demons into darkness. “Men! The collars! I’ll hand these pirates to King Andrew personally.”

The Blackberries placed chi-blocking collars over Mandy and Azula. Violet Beauregard dropped down from the Cinnamon Ships and kicked the women down. “Lord Licorice wants the Noah.” Veruca Salt smiled eerily, surrounded by her gas cloud. “He wants to destroy the Kids Next Door. He wants to be rid of all you pirates.”

“Our next stop is Kids Next Door Moonbase.” Lord Licorice faced the half-moon in the distant sky. “After this, no one will ever doubt the power of candy! King Andrew… will be pleased.” The Noah turned under his power and set course for the Moonbase.

The Marzipan Pirates landed on a small Cinnamon Ship piloted by Penelope Mousse. “You came unusually quickly.” Augustus remarked.

“I may have put a tracker on your neck and followed you from far away.” the mouse Mobian replied. “I hope that doesn’t violate our parley.”

“I’ll overlook. Speaking of which, where is Captain Stag?”

“I don’t appreciate being called that, boy!” Captain Slag flew up on a large hoverbike fit for his fat body. His twin Rusty Petes rode with him, and many other Slag Pirates had their own bikes. “So, this be the legendary treasure you journeyed far and long for. A ship o’ that size and beauty will be perfect in destroying the World Government!”

“We’ll discuss details later. We can’t let Licorice get to Moonbase!”

“Guys, I think some people are already ahead of us!” Penelope pointed. (Play “Hag 1” from Banjo-Tooie!)

Boss fight: Lord Licorice

Azula’s airships and the Hook Pirates’ flying ships were being bombarded by the Noah’s cannons. “OI! Give us back the captain!” Creeper yelled from the lead airship. “Fire Slugs, melt that behemoth!” A bottom hatch opened and dropped 500 Fire Slugs on the Noah. Veruca took cover from the monsters as they puffed flames, but Licorice simply forced points to jab out around the ship and push them off. “MWAH HAH HA! Do you fools not know what ‘indestructible’ means?!”

“What kind of weird super power is that?!” Penelope questioned.

“It has to be the Candy-Candy Fruit!” Augustus realized. “I remember Big Mom saying that she sent samples of her DNA to Caesar to make Devil Fruits out of them. I guess Lord Licorice managed to steal it, too. Big Mom was so mad, she ate the Gingerbread Village.”

“If I can get Licorice in range, perhaps I can neutralize the power.” Stewie said as he readied his Neutralizer.

“Great idea. Penelope, fly higher.” The mouse girl did so, putting Licorice’s monster form in their view. While the beast was swatting at some flying Hook Pirates, Stewie locked on and fired the Neutralizer. “BYAAAAH!” Licorice sunk into the deck, and the ship halted without his control.

“Now’s our chance, let’s land and attack them!” Augustus declared. Penelope stomped the gas and flew above the Noah’s deck, the Marzipans dropping down. They faced Veruca, Violet, and Mike Teavee with battle-ready expressions.

The three henchmen turned when the control room’s entrance opened and Lord Licorice stepped out. The Candy Lord tossed a bubblegum in his mouth, chewed, and stretched a long, whip-like gum to grab Augustus’s legs and throw him and Nel onto the control room’s roof. “Take care of the larvae.” Licorice ordered. Veruca jumped to grab Stewie, Violet caught Maggie, and Mike caught Rallo before they fell into individual trapdoors.

“Ow…” Augustus helped himself up. Nel was flattened by him from the impact, the cavegirl unconscious. “Nel, are you alright?!”

“It’s cute that you’re concerned for that outdated piece of trash.” Lord Licorice climbed onto the roof. “That’s what you’ll be soon enough.”

“You know, I kind of guessed you would betray the other pirates… but why the Kids Next Door? Why the Seven Lights? Do you want the Apocalypse to happen?!”

“I serve only King Andrew. I owe him everything. Everybody mocked my family for our candy heritage, but he believed in me. He gave me a chance to be feared and respected. I will prove his trust in me by destroying all his enemies with this beauty!”

“King Andrew is wrong, Licorice. The Sky Show made it sound like he’s being controlled by that 8-ball thingy. This ship could save everyone, Licorice, you have to realize that!”

“I won’t let a junior Candy Pirate order me! My faith is in King Andrew, and with this ship, I will be the most powerful force in his ARMY!” He lashed four Licoropes from under his armor. Augustus dodged and slashed his cutlass, but it flew out of his hand and into Licorice’s. “Your friend’s little toy weakened my control on this ship, but my Candy-Candy Fruit isn’t neutralized, yet. You stand no chance against me!” He shot two bullets that Augustus dodged, but Licorice commanded them to come back and hit the boy’s arms.

“YOWCH!” Augustus grabbed the right arm’s wound. The wind from the moving ship made him fall to his knees due to this unstable position.

“You only looked formidable next to your monstrous grandmother, boy, but you’re nothing without-”

“AYAAAAA!!” Henrietta Fizzuras rammed the Ace Flyer against Licorice’s head, knocking him down to the deck.

“MOM?!” exclaimed Augustus.

“DAMMIT, BOY, I can accept you keeping a cavegirl as your pet, but VHERE did you expect to hide THIS PIECE OF JUNK?!”

“It’s not junk, Mom, it’s important!”
“Oh, I don’t vant to hear it right now!” Henrietta landed on the deck and raised her sword at Licorice. “Nobody hurts my boy except ME, arschloch!” Licorice easily dodged her swings and willed the Candycane Cutlass up at her neck, but Henrietta used Haki to keep it away.

Augustus chucked his Gobstopper at the Candy Lord’s head, giving Heinie the chance to slice him. “Aughsucks, you’re hurt!” Nel yelled after recovering.

“Nel, go inside and look for Zeira. She can heal me.” The cavegirl nodded and pranced inside the ship on all fours. Augustus withstood the pain in his arms and bounced the Gobstopper in his hand. “Are you ready for a taste of Marzipan, Licorice?”

“Cough, cough!” Stewie Griffin was trapped in a gas cloud created by Veruca Salt. The Metahuman Neutralizer turned to rust, much to his horror.

“I want you to suffocate in here.” Veruca told him creepily. “I want you to turn into dust. My Rot-Rot Fruit allows people to age. The more they age, they ROT.”

“Cough!” Stewie studied his hands. They were still baby-like and unchanging. He smirked. “Do your powers affect chronologically frozen infants, perhaps?”

“What?!” Veruca spun a cloud around Stewie. “No! I want to turn you into dust! Why don’t you do what I want?!”

“Because my show has been rotting for years already!” Stewie stretched his Hulk arm and grabbed Veruca, slamming her back-and-forth around the floor. The rotten child was quickly knocked unconscious, her gas cloud fading away. “I’m not going anytime soon.”

Maggie Simpson blasted homing bullets at Violet Beauregard, but even the bullets that never miss could not strike the nimble target. “What’s wrong, baby? Your master eyesight can’t keep up with my flexibility?”

Maggie glared murderously and whipped out a pink bubblegum – in actuality, a Bounce Gum. Maggie shot it at Violet, who dodged as the gum exploded behind and clogged that part of the hall. Violet leapt over and punched Maggie to the floor. She recovered in time to see her escape down a left hall, so she shot a Bounce Gum to the right to clog it up.

The opposite hall turned right at the end, and Maggie saw Violet clinging to the ceiling close by. The henchgirl quickly kicked Maggie against the wall and crawled away, but the baby shot another Bounce Gum ahead to block her path. Maggie shot bullets that Violet still dodged, and when the baby got closer, Violet jumped over and ran back the way they came. Violet was forced to head into the original hall with gum blocking the other. Unfortunately, gum prevented her escape here, too, and Maggie shot another Bounce Gum to trap her in place. “HEY! Let me out of here, you little brat!!”

Maggie pulled her binky out and said, “Start chewing, bitch.”

Rallo ducked under a classroom desk to hide from a group of zombies. “Come on, man, Zombie High ain’t somethin’ a 5-year-old should watch! Please change the channel to Class of 3000.”

“We can’t leave now! This is the part where the zombies eat the little kid’s brain.” Mike’s voice echoed.

“AAAAAH!” The zombies threw aside his desk, missing Rallo as he sprinted toward the hallway. His efforts were fruitless as zombies in school uniforms surrounded him from both directions. “No, please!” Rallo ducked in fear. “I need my brain! I can’t even count to 11! My head’s as good as a-!”
He just remembered: “Duh.” Before a zombie could snack on his afro, he revealed his stereos. He turned them up to full blast and quaked the digital television world.

Outside, the stereos of the HD TV caught fire and burned the whole device. Rallo and Mike were forced out. “I don’t got time for you, Teavee!” Rallo blasted a swarm of music notes to knock Mike out. “My captain needs me!”

Nel located a storage room where Mandy and Azula were chained to pipes. “Oh, it’s Augustus’s new pet.” Mandy remarked. “Do us a favor and bite these chains off.”

“Up here!” Zeira’s butterfly net was hung on a wall. “Hurry and save me!”

“Pupils!” Nel responded, bumping the wall headfirst to make the net fall. The cavegirl tore it open with her teeth and freed Zeira. “Aughsucks need help!”

“I’m on it. And it’s ‘aye,’ by the way.”

Lord Licorice made a cloud of Pop Gums circle above before sending the explosives to rain upon Henrietta, who dodged in a tap-dance fashion. Augustus tossed his Gobstopper at him, but Licorice caught it in midair, and pelted the sphere between the mother and son’s stomachs. During one comeback, Augustus grabbed the ball and was thrown against his mother. “I’m through wasting time with you so-called pirates!” Licorice stomped his foot to sink into the vessel, then grabbed the deck in his fingers.

Augustus and Henrietta slid toward the back when the Noah shifted angle and faced the moon, shaking as energy charged in the engines. “I’ll drive this ship so fast through Moonbase, they’ll never see it coming! GAAAAH!” It shook forcefully under an unseen force. “What’s happening now?!”

“By Electro!” exclaimed Captain Slag. “It be the giant Kremling, K. Lumsy!”

“K. Lumsy?!” Augustus whipped around. The giant Kremling was flying with a pair of white, glittery wings.

“Pwetty fairies tell me friends in trouble. K. Lumsy gonna protect friends.”

“Because the power of friendship is sweeter than any sugar!” declared the Sugar Fairies that composed his wings.

“Augustus, we have to defeat him now!” Zeira flew out of the ship and used glittery bubblegum to patch the captain’s wounds.

“Not without me!” Henrietta grabbed Lord Licorice around the neck.

“Rock on, Mom!” Augustus hardened his fists like stone and repeatedly punched Lord Licorice’s face.

“NNN!” Henrietta kicked the Candy Lord to his front. “You’re not getting out of punishment, boy!”

“I’ll take that CHANCE!” Augustus stomped the lord’s head with an Armament boot and knocked him clean out. The Noah was free from his control. (End song.)

“YAHOOOO!” The Rusty Petes cheered for the Marzipans as they and Slag boarded the Gummi Ship. “Augustus-gustus, he’s the man, if he can’t do it, perhaps Slag could have!”
Oh ho ho, I admit, ’twas a festive display.” Slag laughed. “But we have a parley to complete. This ship be Ours now, Augustus!”

“What do you mean yours?!” Mandy and Azula appeared, with the latter holding Nel by the ankle. “I didn’t waste a month working with that clown to let YOU take this ship!”

“You blokes have enough in your arsenal!” Captain Hook and Mr. Smee landed on deck. “Give the Hook Pirates a fighting chance, why don’t ye?! I’ll fight ye BOTH for this delicious vessel!”

“NONE OF YA are getting the Noah!” Bubbly Brandon declared. “It belong to Captain Augustus! He’s the one who earned it. He and his crew braved all the trials to find the Lost Candies.”

“You think I’m going to let some junior pirate captain the Noah?” Mandy asked.

“You don’t get to decide that, Mandy.” Henrietta stated imposingly. “I’m his mother, so I’ll deal the necessary scolding.” She turned to her son and demanded, “Augustus, what the HELL do you plan to DO with this freaking ship?!”

“Save everyone from the Apocalypse!”

Heinie’s eyes widened. “Ze… Apocalypse?”

“This Noah has the capability to save everyone from the universe’s destruction.” Zeira reasoned. “You all know what is to come. And frankly, none of you deserve to captain the Noah.”

“And we’re to entrust the duty to him?!” Captain Hook shouted. “Big Mom’s grandson?”

“Will you stop calling me ‘Big Mom’s grandson’?!” Augustus argued. “I’m Augustus the Stone Fist! I’m not the one who did all those things to you, Big Mom did! I’m my own pirate and I have my own crew. And I went on this entire adventure for YOUR sake!”

“OUR sake?” Azula questioned.

“If this ship can save everyone from the Apocalypse, then it can save you guys, too. What’s going to happen if the world ends? No more sailing, no more competing, no more treasure, no more adventure… but with this ship, we can keep doing what we love. All I ask is that you let me lead you for just a little bit. Let me lead you to the New World… and you can skewer me later.”

Silence followed for a few minutes. In truth, they all feared the Apocalypse and none knew what to do. “Very well.” Mandy finally spoke. “I’ll let you have the glory of piloting this rust bucket. But… where do we go, exactly?”

“That… is a good question. Where do we go, Zeira?”

“First, let’s make a quick stop.” Zeira glanced at Lord Licorice.

KND Moonbase

“CHEREN!” Larry MayHence called. “You gotta see this!”

“What the-?!” Francis gaped.

“It’s… AUGUSTUS!” Panini screamed.

The tremendous Gummi Ship casually sailed by the treehouse’s glass window. Augustus waved at all the gazing operatives, slurping a new lollipop. “What’s up, kids?! I brought you a little present!” A cannon shot a tied-up Licorice, Mike, Veruca, and Violet through their window. “You might wanna lock ’em up somewhere! I’ll see you on D-Day!” The ark sailed to the stars.

“What… the heck has he been doing all month?” Cheren asked.

“I dunno.” Sheila said. “But it looks WAY cooler than what I’ve been doing.”

I’ve had the plan for Noah’s Ark a while now. Anyway, this concludes Augustus’s story arc. Next time, we will conclude Wendy’s story… as far as these Side Stories go.
Chapter Summary

The history behind Wendy Marvell's birth is revealed, along with the true identity of her mother.

This chapter is the longest in the Side Stories, for certain reasons. It’s the climax of Wendy’s story arc.

Chapter B-34: Windy Marvel

Outside Facilier’s Emporium

Melody Jackson was told by her mother to come to Dr. Facilier’s shop. On the morning of May 22, Melody arrived in Cleveland and knocked on the alleyway door. She waited 10 seconds before the doctor answered. “Glad you could make it. Come in.” he told her in a whisper.

Melody didn’t visit the shop often, but it was different from what she remembered. There was snow outside a window. “Mom said you were calling from Iceland…”

“I had to relocate. Melody, I need you to take a look at something on the table.”

Her eyes directed at the table. They brimmed with curiosity at the sight of the winged kitten, panting hoarsely. “Awww… what happened to this kitty?”

“She suddenly developed a fever. I know you have healing powers, so I was wondering if you can help her.”

“I can try, but you should’ve asked for Haruka, too.”

“I don’t think it’s something Haruka could help with. Your waterbending will do.”

“Okay…” Melody bent water over her hands and used Healing Touch on Carla’s head.

“OOOH.” Carla moaned, seemingly in pain, so Melody loosened the touch.

“Uh-oh, did it hurt!?” Melody asked.

“No, just keep at it.” the doctor instructed.

“If you say so…” Melody resumed healing despite the creature’s moans.

Carla was lost in a murky sea, the thick water blinding her sight and blocking her breath. Melody’s touch washed the murk away, and through it she could see a black figure with a red eye. The image dissolved, and blackness engulfed her. The only visible thing was a baby with deep blue hair.

“NO, DON’T!” Carla shot up, scaring Melody into releasing.
“Holy cow, it talks!” the girl exclaimed. “Boy, do I have an interview!”

“Carla, what’s wrong?!” Harvey asked.

“I…” She put a paw to her head. “I…I feel like I know who Mr. Vaati is…”

“You mean you’ve met him before?”

“I don’t know… but when I think of that man, I only feel anger… and when I think of Wendy, I feel concerned…!” She gasped. “Where are they now?!”

“Vaati and Annie took her to the Negaverse. I reckon they’re going to meet their opposites.”

Carla panted. “I wish I could remember where I’ve seen him… why I hate him so much…”

“You know, maybe I can bring one of the timebenders.” Melody suggested. “Miyuki mentioned having the power to see into the past. She can examine Carla or something.”

“Then go get her.” Facilier agreed. “We might be able to finally crack the mystery on where Carla came from.”

Negaverse; Naihcalappa Mountains

Vaati Apparated Annie and Wendy in front of a house within a mountain range. “Ulp…” Wendy clenched her stomach. “Dad, I forgot to mention this… but Apparating makes me sick.”

“Heh heh heh! It’s not for everyone.” Vaati chuckled. “Usually, I prefer flying, but we are late for a meeting.” The Minish led Wendy to the house and knocked.

“Dad, I think I recognize this place. It was from a dream.”

“You know what they say about dreams and reality.” As he spoke, the person to answer the door was a girl with blue eyes who looked like Wendy’s twin.

Both girls gasped. “Wendy!” the twin exclaimed.

“Do I… know you?”

“I’m Ydnew! We met back in Christmas, remember?!”

“EDNEW?!” Wendy gasped. “I-I thought you were a dream!”

“Ydnew here is your Negative.” Vaati explained. “She is connected to you as your ‘other half.’ Everyone in our universe has an opposite. Her father and I staged the two of you meeting.”

“I see you’ve finally made it.” Itaav came to the door. He smiled at his Positive’s daughter. “Hello, Wendy! Nice to see you again.”

“You were real all along!” Wendy grabbed Ydnew in a hug. “I’m so happy, you were REALLY watching after me all this time!”

“I’M real, too!” They looked up at a red blob with a face hanging from the ceiling above the door.

“AIE!” Wendy jumped back. “What is that?!”

“Wendy, this is Yeoj.” Ydnew sighed in aggravation. “He’s our pet… somewhat. Super useful, but super annoying.”

Yeoj turned into a slinky with muscular arms of a superhero. “And also toying.”

“MY TURN TO PLAY!” Nil Gnofieb snatched the toy.

“Nil, I told you it’s a person!” Niyus grabbed and tugged on it.

“Heh heh! We really have a lot in common.” Wendy laughed. The two reminded her of her own sidekicks.

“Red Eye, everyone is waiting downstairs.” Itaav said.

“Right. Come, Wendy, we can’t keep them waiting.” The group entered the house as Itaav led them all down a basement.

“Who are we meeting?” Wendy asked.

“Before I came, your father asked me to gather the White Lotus members and bring them down here.” Annie explained. “Of course, Vaati didn’t plan to start this meeting without you. I’m glad you can finally be part of it, Wendy.”

“I am, too. I just wish Carla and Dr. Facilier could come…”

“You’ll have time to fill them in afterward.” Vaati replied, frowning at the mention of her.

The basement was a wide, round room consisting of a table with a big, black-and-white lotus symbol. The respective members were on opposite sides. “Wendy, meet the Black Lotus.” Itaav introduced. “Raseac Atnalamid the Plant Master, Hpot Gnofieb the Shadow Master, Atteirneh the Poison Master (our newest member filling in for her late mother), Imorih Atoihs the Earth Master, Yevrah Reilicaf the Spiritual Master, and my wife, Einna.” There was a chubby woman in an orange shirt that looked like Annie. Said woman shirked at her Negative’s appearance.

“Is that Dr. Facilier’s Negative?” Wendy noticed. “He looks-”

“Very Christiany, compared to his Positive.”

“At least I ain’t one of the crazy ones!” Yevrah shouted.

“Where’s Dr. Facilier?” Eva asked. “I wanted him to tell me what was up with the late-night call.”

“He’s tending to other business. Wendy, these people are the parents of Kids Next Door operatives, and former operatives themselves. Rather exemplary ones at that.”

“So, you’re the blue-haired girl Cheren mentioned before.” Rachel recognized.

“You’re Cheren’s mother?” Wendy asked. “It’s nice to meet you!”

“Okay, let’s get this meeting underway.” Itaav said hastily. The two leaders took seats beside each other with their daughters on their other side. Both pairs mirrored each other.

“As you may know, I have called this meeting regarding the vision in the sky.” Vaati began. “It seems our worst fears have been realized. And like I suspected from the very beginning, the World Government Leaders have been acting as puppets. I have no doubts they will try to destroy the Kids Next Door and stop this prophecy. That is why we must aid the Kids Next Door and invade Mariejoa to stop them.”

“My son was planning to face The King of the World.” Rachel mentioned. “I didn’t tell him this, but I was concerned if he could pull it off. How do we stop the Octogan?”

“Do not underestimate the Kids Next Door. They have in their arsenal the Ten Firstborn, do they not?”

“You expect to ask the Kids Next Door to use the Firstborn as weapons?” Itaav questioned.

“Is that not what Rachel, Danika, and their friends did?” Vaati inquired. “Twenty years ago, they fueled their selves with the Firstborn’s power and defeated Arceus. Surely, their children can do the same and overpower the Octogan.”

“You’re betting everything on the Kids Next Door and the Firstborn?” Raseac asked. “If it were that easy, what was the point of calling us?”

“According to my spies in Minish Kingdom, the World Leaders have a trump card:” Vaati replied seriously. “The Grand Inferius. An army of powerful zombies that obey the controller’s command. And it seems they have a means of summoning it. I don’t know if they can or how close they are, but we must expect the worst. We cannot let the Kids Next Door, namely the Firstborn Guardians, waste energy fighting the Inferius. We must defend them and defend others threatened by the Government.”

“Maybe, but if my son is planning on fighting Daphne again, I want to be by his side.” Danika said. “I think we should have some type of plan in case we confront the World Leaders.”

“I agree.” Hpot replied. “We shouldn’t just charge them like a pack of wild earthbenders.”

“Pardon me?!” Angie and Imorih chorused.

“We could spend hours concocting a complex plan, but even now, the Leaders could be watching us with their All-Seeing Eye.” Vaati reasoned. “That’s why the best plan is no plan.”

“That has got to be the SHITTIEST THING I ever heard!” Einna shouted.

“It’s nothing really new to us.” Mika chuckled. “The Brotherhood of Evil, Ganondorf, Arceus, we never had a plan, we just jumped in and fought them.”

“Unless you count the plan my group had in sneaking in Final Brain.” Danika mentioned.

“Yes, but it went downhill after that.”

“We will not be unprepared, I assure you.” Vaati mentioned. “Based on collected info, we know the basic powers of each of the World Leaders, and we can determine weaknesses. My daughter here has faced a World Leader, haven’t you, Wendy?”

“Yes.” Wendy nodded. “Henry Churchill. He has paper powers, and he’s a Logia. And some of his papers can do different stuff, like fire.”

“According to Dillon, Daphne can use a Shadow Possession on people and kill them by picking petals off a rose.” Danika remembered.
“But what if the Firstborn can’t beat the Octogan?” Rachel asked.

“It’s not the Octogan we have to defeat, but King Andrew. And what we need to do… is remind him who he once was.”

Wendy and the Black Lotus looked confused. However, Rachel and Fanny exchanged remorseful, contemplative looks. “You two know, don’t you?” Vaati asked them.

“We… think we do…” Rachel answered.

Climbers House

Melody returned to Facilier’s emporium with Miyuki Crystal, who observed the winged cat curiously. Carla wasn’t panting as heavily and her eyes were open, but she still lay on the table. “Who is this?” Miyuki asked.

“Her name’s Carla, and she’s having memory troubles.” Facilier answered. “Melody thought you could help.”

“You can see something’s history, can’t you?” Melody asked. “Like you did with Joey?”

“Yes, I can.” Miyuki put a hand on Carla’s head. She focused her power and saw into the past.

_An egg fell from the sky and into the sea. It drifted along the waves for two years as Miyuki fast-forwarded time. Eventually, it washed up on a shore. A pair of feet ran up to it, arms reached down to grab it, and Miyuki saw it was Wendy. “Look, Doctor! I found this on the beach- WHOA!” Wendy tripped while bringing it to Facilier._

“EASY, girl!” The doctor caught the egg.

“Oh, man… That almost ended badly.” Wendy blushed.

“It ain’t no cookin’ egg.” Facilier put his ear to it. “I can almost feel something moving.”

“May I see?” Wendy held her arms open, and her mentor passed it to her. She gasped when the egg cracked. Both of them stared with anticipation… The head of a little kitty popped out of the egg.

“Who are you?” the cat asked.

“WOW, you can talk!?” exclaimed Wendy.

“Of course I can talk, what am I, some animal? …” The kitten observed her paws and the egg she was in. “Oh… I suppose I am.”

Miyuki sped through time to when Wendy and the kitten were in the former’s room. “I wonder if your family lost you.” Wendy said. “We should probably help you find them.”

“Perhaps… but…” Miyuki saw from the kitten’s perspective, staring up Wendy’s body like a pet to her master. “I feel… the compulsive need to stay here.”

“You mean you want to be my pet?”

“WHAT?! Where on Earth did you get that idea!?” the cat shouted.

“S-Sorry! I guess for a minute, I thought you would think I’m your mom!” Wendy flushed. “Since I was the one who hatched you.”

“You don’t look a thing like me, why would I think that?”

“Sorry. But if it’s okay… I would like you to stay. At least until we find your family.”

“Very well. But you had better not call me your pet.”

“What should I call you?”

“Hm?” She raised a brow. She put a finger to her chin. “I guess I don’t have a name…”

“I’ll call you Carla!”

“Why Carla?”

“I just thought of it. Do you like it?”

“Hm… it does have a ring to it. All right, I’m Carla the Cat.”

“Hah hah ha!” Wendy giggled.

“What should I call you? Wendy the Human?”

“If you want to!”

“I did feel a compulsive need to stay… even back then.” Carla recalled. “But I still want to know how I know Mr. Vaati.”

“I couldn’t see anything past the egg falling from the sky.” Miyuki said. “I couldn’t even see anything… laying you.”

“If you know who this Vaati is, would he know you, too?” Melody asked.

Carla’s eyes narrowed. “He would… wouldn’t he?”

Negaverse; Itaav’s House

After the meeting, Vaati, Annie, and Wendy sat on the highest roof of the house, gazing at stars and holding hands. “Normally, stargazing isn’t what families do after war meetings.” Annie laughed. “You must think we’re pretty weird, huh?”

“Not really.” Wendy grinned. “It’s weird enough having a family to stargaze with!”

“If only we can do it all the time.” Vaati said. “But as long as the World Government and the Apocalypse threaten us, the eternal dream can never come. This is exactly what I have trained you for, Wendy. And I have waited so long to share this moment with you. After we defeat the Government and Ragaj Gnik, we can build our ideal world. Everyone will be free… everyone will be happy…”

“And we can finally live together.” Wendy faced him with hopeful eyes. “Right?”

“We will, my child. We-”

Fzzoom! They heard a light explosion and faced the ground.

“Dr. Facilier!” Wendy beamed. “Carla!”
“Wendy!” The two had come with Melody and Miyuki.

“I’m so glad you could make it!” Wendy excitedly jumped down, to her father’s slight dismay.

“What is this place?” Melody asked.

“A meeting room for the White and Black Lotus.” Facilier answered. “Your mother should be here too, Melody. VAATI, come down here! We need you for something!”

Vaati exchanged a curious and concerned look with Annie. He floated down to them. “What seems to be the problem?”

Miyuki approached the cloaked mage. She spared a look at Wendy. Without warning, she grabbed both Wendy and Vaati’s hands. Miyuki focused her energy and took them down a sea of memories.

Eleven years ago…

The stars were beautiful in the indigo sky. Their light was reflected on the surface, along with the white full moon. The ocean waves brushed against the cliffside. A setting could not be more romantic. The calm and serenity was the perfect place. Tonight, he would ask her.

Two figures, a man and a woman, walked up the hill. The woman’s brown hair was braided into a ponytail. She was in her early 20s and wore casual attire, a green sweater, blue jeans, and white sneakers. The man definitely stood out more: he wore a bluish-purple cape over his blackish-blue shirt and pants, black sandals, and his silver hair blew in the breeze. He was very lean and tall at 22 years old. The moon highlighted his pale white skin, his ears were pointed and sharp, and his red eyes shone in the night.

The couple stopped atop the cliff and stared at the horizon. “That was a lovely dinner, Vaati.” the woman said.

“I’m glad you enjoyed it, Annie.” Vaati replied with a deep, charming voice. “Your smile has always delighted me. Ever since that day, 8 years ago…”

“Hm hm hm! My birthday.” Annie giggled. “That’ll always be my favorite cake.”

“Mine, too. And I am so thankful… you’ve stood by me all these years.”

“I couldn’t think about leaving you. You’ve shown me… a whole new path to follow.”

“Yes. That is why, I wish to stay with you on that path…” Vaati slowly reached into his cape pocket and pulled out a small, sapphire box. “…forever…”

Annie’s green eyes widened. “V-Vaati. Is that…?”

Vaati got down on one knee and showed her the diamond ring inside. “I love you, Annie. I wish to spend my time in this world, and the next one, with you. I also want, very deeply, to have a child of my own. Some like Mikaela have already had their first child, and others like Rachel are pregnant with theirs. I wish to have a child with you, too. …Will you marry me?”

Annie flushed. After all of their years together… she was taken off guard. Now was finally the time. “…Vaati… I can’t marry you.”

Vaati looked up with surprise. “What?” he said quietly.

“Vaati… I love you, too… and I will always be loyal and support your beliefs. But I know… you want to become a Logia. I wanted to help you, so I did research… to become an airbender Logia means to rid your heart of turmoil or earthly attachment. No Logia airbender has ever married for that reason. I know you’re going to save the world, Vaati, I know you’ll lead us to freedom. If you’re devoted to me, then you can’t realize that goal. You can’t be free. I’ll always follow you and follow your orders… but I can’t take you away from what will make you powerful. …Good-bye, Vaati.” With a halfhearted smile, Annie turned and walked down the slope.

A wave of realization swept over Vaati. A weight in his heart had flown away. His longing desire to be with Annie. He loved her, still… and was so very thankful for her loyalty. Vaati turned, faced the cliff, and backed away with a determined expression. He dropped the sapphire box and ring and ran for the edge. He jumped and dove into the awaiting waves. …

… Like a bird leaving the nest, Vaati flew. His dark cape and silver hair flapped behind him. Annie turned and smiled as his dark figure shrunk into the sky. Vaati had never known a greater feeling on his heart, light as air. He was free…

Vaati slept on a cloud that night and awoke the next morning. Then for as long as the sun was up, he flew. Where over the world he was, he didn’t know, but neither did he need to. Before long, he had flown his way to Skypia, where not surprisingly, the Nimbi citizens passed him odd looks. ‘Twas rare for one with no wings to soar across their very streets. He was definitely suspicious to some, and his carefree smile made him seem like a fantasizing child.

Vaati’s eyes were closed and he was smiling, chilling his face with the wind’s delight. He had never felt so free, his Logia body was air itself, it was a feeling he wanted to last forever. “Oof—aaaaaah!” Vaati stopped and gasped when he bumped into someone, and they screamed. He looked down, seeing a Nimbi girl of about 21 on her back on a small cloud. Her hair was as white as her wings, and her brown eyes were shiny and cat-like. She wore a black jacket with a white undershirt and black tie, which complimented her black pants and black high-heels. Her white fingernails were long and trim.

Vaati lowered down to her and said calmly, “Miss, I’m sorry. Please, let me help.” He tried to help the girl pick up her scattered books and pens, but she aggressively helped herself up and stuffed everything in, slinging the bag over her shoulder.

“Watch where you’re going next time!” she stated with a strict tone, before flapping her wings and soaring back into the sky town.

Vaati didn’t know how to describe it. He was… swooned. The red was clear on his cheeks. That girl’s temper was spicy. He soared after the Nimbi and put a hand on her shoulder. “You aren’t hurt, are you? Let me make it up to you if I—”

“Don’t touch me.” She pulled away. “Go bother someone else, I’m late for my class.”

“Class?” Vaati floated in place and watched the girl continue. She and hundreds of Nimbi in similar garb flew into a building labeled White University. A Skypian college, by the looks of it. He decided to fly around the campus, which was large and took place on many clouds on varying levels. Students were either socializing or studying. He saw a group of kids playing Frisbee with a Parabuzzy shell, hopefully empty. “Prithee, lift thine head up!” On a misfire, the shell came flying at Vaati, spinning rapidly with its wings outstretched, but the projectile flew right through Vaati’s wind-made head. “…Um… apologies?” The students stared bafflingly at what happened, and without another comment, they flew to retrieve their Frisbee.
Vaati loitered around campus for around 3 hours, hoping to see the spunky Nimbi again. Students passed the strange, cloaked figure looks; some thought he was a visiting teacher, others thought he was just some drifter. Finally, Vaati saw her, sitting on the cloud-grass against the side of a stairway. Her face was grumpy and strict as she buried her eyes in a book.

The girl felt a shadow over her, her eyes furrowing since her reading was interrupted. The cloaked stranger with the red eyes stared at her with a smile. “Hello again.”

The girl clamped her book shut. “Have you seriously been waiting out here for me? I have no interest for a cretin like you, so I’d like you to go away.” She grabbed her belongings and tried to leave, but Vaati hurried in her path.

“Please, forgive me. I’m not trying to impose anything, but I find you… a very marvelous creature.”

“Am I supposed to be aroused?”

“You feel so individualized. I have not been to Skypia often, but no Nimbi talks or dresses like you.”

“For your information, everyone in White dresses this way. The founders were surface explorers who took interest in the human garb and thought it would make good wear for our kind. As for my talk, forgive my discretion, but the Shakespearean speak gets old. This feels more proper.”

“Your tone suits you finely!” Vaati beamed, his voice remained calm and gentle. “If you’re free for the moment, I would like you to join me for a beverage. I saw a lovely café a while back.”

“I have to go to work in an hour, so I want this time to study.”

“I only want a little time. Please? Just one cup?”

The girl sighed. “If it will get you off my tail. May I ask for my stalker’s name?”

“It’s Vaati. May I have yours?”

“…” She looked away, as though pondering whether or not she should answer. “…It’s Charle.”

“Charle? That’s a wonderful name. Well, shall we be off, Charle?”

She sighed again. “I suppose.”

They flew to the outdoor café and ordered two cups of jasmine tea. Charle sipped hers with a smile. “I do love tea.” She frowned again as she asked, “So, Mr. Vaati, you call me a peculiar creature, but what kind of creature are you? Some elf from the backstreets?”

“Ha ha ha ha! No, my dear, I am a Minish.”

“Those little people from the surface?”

“Yes. You might be confused since I’m not as tall as your fingertip.”

“Yes, because if you were, I would’ve swatted you by now.”

“Hah hah hah! In truth, I am actually a mage. An airbending mage, to be specific. I gave myself a natural human size and changed the form of my face. This is my wand.” Vaati pulled out a bark-colored, pointed stick. “A Minish Acre Piece. It’s not the sturdiest material, but this wand has stuck by me thick and thin.”

“Oh, I see. That's how you fly, then.”

“Actually, I have recently become a Logia airbender. My body is made out of air, so I’m able to fly. Interesting fact, though, the very first Logia was a mage, and I believe his magic helped him accomplish that.”

“Go figure.” Charle sipped.

“You might say I’m a magic aficionado altogether. One of my hobbies is researching all sorts of spells and magical artifacts, what they can do alone and together.”

“Mm-hm.”

“I also enjoy exploring the supernatural wonders of our cosmos. Some query where magic ultimately comes from, and I know that it has effect on more than a few areas. It’s just such a wonderful thing! Heheh, some say that I’m actually the reincarnation of Lord Voldemort. He was a dark wizard in case you don’t—”

“Every creature in the freaking world knows who Lord Voldemort is!” Charle outburst.

“Right… You’re probably tired of hearing about me. Tell me about yourself. What are you studying in college?”

Charle lightly stirred her tea with a spoon. “I’m studying to become an engineer.”

“Engineer, how fascinating. I don’t know too many girls who are interested in that.”

“Well, add me.”

“Like, what sorts of engineering?”

“Basically, if a device works, how does it? I can tell you about Lightning Chariots right off the bat. True, the Thundercorns are fast, but you need a carriage of solid and symmetrical Sapphium to be able to withstand their breakneck speed. Unbreakable diamond reins are also a factor.”

“You seem very smart in the topic. It’s mostly Skypian devices, isn’t it?”

“Well, mostly. In all truthfulness, I’d like to expand my knowledge. Surface devices, Oceanic, etc..”

“The magical world has all sorts of peculiar devices.”

“You know, some people want to talk about more things than just magic.”

“I am only saying, I possess knowledge of magical items and you want to expand your knowledge on engineering! I think our two interests can commingle.”

“There probably isn’t much to it. It’s magic, you say a few funny words and stuff happens, objects can suddenly do this or that, there probably aren’t any real mechanics.”

“While using a Fire Spell, I drastically increase the speed of particles within a set area and increase heat. In creating water, I mold the H2O molecules scattered about the air into one body. By transforming a mouse into a cup, I am solidifying and bending their dimensional structure while still holding their soul and life force in pla-”
“Alright alright, your people clearly have their own style. Look, I don’t have time to talk about this, I need to get ready for work.” She stood up and grabbed her bag, about to fly off.

“Where do you work? I’d like to join you.”

“No. This ‘date’ is over, and I don’t want you to follow me.”

“But I wish for us to talk more! I won’t follow you, but I want to meet you again. Can I… see you tomorrow?”

“I don’t know. Don’t you have a home to go to, too?”

“Actually, I don’t.” Vaati smiled sheepishly. “Wherever the wind blows, that is my home.”

Charle sighed. She felt like there was no getting rid of him. “I…I don’t have classes tomorrow. We’ll meet at this café tomorrow, 10a.m., and make a plan.”

“I look forward.” Vaati nodded. With that, Charle flew away, and the mage watched her. He smiled warmly, looking forward to tomorrow.

Vaati slept on the café’s roof that night, after exploring Skypia a little. At 10a.m. the next day, Charle met him again. Vaati showed her a journal he had in his possession, pointing at a page that depicted a hi-tech key-like cylinder. “This is a Warpdrive Key, a device that allows spacecraft to travel at lightspeed. They’re imbued with photons mixed with dark matter energy, that when inserted into a ship’s engine, allows it to travel galaxies in minutes.”

“What if I told you an ordinary Earth school bus could be reprogrammed for such a task?”

“I’d say that your Minish brain clearly forgot to expand with you.”

“Ha ha ha ha ha! You’d be surprised, the things I’ve seen. Moving on,” he turned the page, revealing one with a drawing of a mechanical circular archway, “greater than the Warpdrive Key, a Dimension Transportifier. Incredible amounts of spatial and chronokinetic energy are poured into this device. They fire lasers so powerful, they rip holes and link with the Dimensional Byway, then target specific dimensions either on perpendicular or parallel existing planes. Any and all dimensions, depending on the strength of the material and energy, are within our grasp.”

“It is very fascinating technology. You seem very fixated on it, though.”

“Hm hm hm.” Vaati chuckled softly. “The truth is… I am not only fascinated with the structure of other dimensions… I am fascinated on origin.”

“Origin?”

“I have been to the Spirit World, Charle, I have met the wisest of all spirits. The Chronicler. He knows nearly everything about every dimension, including that which created us: the Dimensional Fusion. Some unnamed god has taken elements from many a universe, denizens, landscapes, and molded them all into a single cosmos. And yet, those original dimensions still maintain their structure and timeline. So I wonder to myself, why, what, and who, which denizens of this world have an original self in some faraway cosmos? I would really love… to see these worlds.”

“It sounds preposterous.”
“Hm. I’ll tell you more on it later. Moving on, Bubble Coating from Sabaody Park…”

Vaati and Charle agreed to meet two days after that. Charle shared her knowledge of the workings of devices, and admittedly took interest in Vaati’s descriptions of magical items. A Vanishing Cabinet disperses the matter of a subject inside one, and reforms it inside the other, same for other teleportation devices like Apparition and Floo Powder. Cars or trains can be enchanted to fly by decreasing the very gravity and substantial mass of its matter. In turn, Charle discussed the workings of human airplanes since Skypia has to deal with those a lot, and Vaati proceeded to tell her how a lightbulb works, to which they both giggled.

“In truth though, Charle, I always believed magic played a factor in all things. It’s more-or-less my way of describing… wonders.”

“But some wonders are more explainable than others. Sigh… I have to go now. My boss wants me to work late tonight.”

“Hmm… very well.” Vaati frowned with disappointment. “Shall I see you tomorrow?”

“Yes…” Charle smiled softly.

She flew away from him again. Vaati was still melancholy. He wanted more time with her, their meetings were so short. He chose to ease his sorrow by flying about Skypia, seeing what other wonders it had to offer. That night, a certain restaurant caught his eyes: Yonder Goddesses, the light-up sign read, between two silhouettes of slim woman angels. The interior was a bright red, and Vaati saw why it was so popular: female angels in red high-heels, either two-piece or one-piece red swimsuits, and as part of the outfit, fake cat ears and tails that matched their hair.

“A fine welcome, fair traveler.” Vaati flushed when a brown-haired Nimbi fluttered up to him. “Dost thine stomach yearn for grub? How strong is thine hunger?”

“. . .” Vaati shook his head, “I could use something to eat.” Though you’d be surprised how little you need to, being made out of air.

Vaati was led to a table in a back corner, on a comfy round seat. He tried to pull his attention away from the lovely angels and stare at the menu. Lots of types of wine, fair amount of Skypian fruit. “Hm hmm. Hast thou decided on thine-” Vaati lowered his menu—he and his waitress gaped at each other. Charle held a sexy pose, clothed in a red one-piece, high-heels, white cat ears, and a tail. She dropped her pen and notepad. “Charle-”

“Vaati!” she hissed angrily. “What are you doing here?! Did you follow me?”

“Charle? This is your work?”

“Vaati, get out of here! I can’t let any of the workers think we’re dating-”

“Charle, pray tell!” The overweight Nimbi manager landed a few feet away. “Art thou being harsh with yon customers again?” he asked gruffly.

“N-No, pray why wouldst I, Roubi?”

“Thine appeal dost not appeal to men well. Approve on thine weakness shouldst thee wish to stay hither.” He flapped away.

Sighing with aggravation, Charle sat on Vaati’s lap, smiling seductively and leaning her back against his front. Her narrowed cat-like eyes were complimented by her fake ears and tail. “Didst I
Charle glared. “I need extra money to pay tuition and bills, and this was the only job I could land. It’s degrading beyond measure, especially when men are so repulsive and demanding. I should hope you have money to pay for a meal.”

“I carry a few Rupees, sure. Do you recommend anything?”

“Nothing that suits your magical fancy.” She flapped her hair and brushed it on his face.

Vaati blushed and held the menu above his head. “Ocean’s Marvel, what’s that?”

“Oh, I wouldn’t.” Charle brushed his legs with her hands. “They import that from Oceana, the taste is kind of strong for Nimbi.”

“But I am no Nimbi.”

“Yes, but they fill it with salty mist, merpeople are used to it, but air-light beings like ourselves… oh, fine, I just wanna get off of you.”

Minutes later, Charle returned with a glass of deep blue liquid, sliding it across the table to Vaati. “Enjoy.”

“W-Wait, Charle!” She stopped and turned, folding her arms. “I would like you… to share this with me.”

“No, of course not. I wouldn’t poison my bowels with any of this garbage.”

“You work so hard, Charle, and you are such a lovely woman. I would like my first Skypian brew to be shared with you.”

Charle sighed. Why does she keep going along with him. “You taste it first.”

Vaati picked up the glass and tipped it to his mouth. “Hoo-o-o!” He shuddered. “It does tickle my tongue.”

“How do you feel?”

“I feel… lightheaded. I mean, more than before.” Vaati swayed slightly, cheeks still flushed. “Kind of, heheh… funny.”

“Hmm… well, I suppose…” Charle hesitantly reached for the drink. She tipped it into her mouth.

Hours later, Vaati and Charle wobbled out of the restaurant, one arm around the other as they laughed hysterically. “You-hoo are RIGHT, Vaati! I fee-heel LOOOAAADS better.”

“I dost be shproiggin’ my shpiggity shpoo.” said Vaati.

“Ho HOOOOO, I am a CAAAAAT and I can FLYYYYY!”

“I am some kind of chipmunk creature, m-my darling.” Vaati’s moderate charming tone was the same, but he was senseless regardless.

“Hoh HOH, I am tired. I need to liiiieee on my bed-cloud, and go sleepy-sleep.”
“Hah-hi should be going to, for sleepy-sleep, yes.”

“Nooooo you don’t have wings, hah-hi need to do flying for both of us.”

“Hee hyes, I no have wings, you must fly me.”

“Hooookay. Up we goooo. Huuuuu,” Charle took a breath, “WHEEEE-eeeee- whoopsie! Hahaha!” Charle took flight with Vaati over her shoulders, sinking or swaying left-and-right the whole way.

Charle brought him all the way back to her house, which she had to herself, lived alone. “Felp, here we aaaaaarrre.” She let go of him when they entered the door, Vaati hunched over, smiling, and swaying. “La home of Charlllllle.”

“Well, ah- I’m glad, I brought ya home.”

“What are you talking about, I brought yooooouuu.” She poked his chest.

“R-Really, w-well why’d you bring me?”

“I don’t knoowww!”

“Y-You know, I know a couple of werecats, th-they, they got nothing on you, YOU… are just sexy.”

“You have the sexiest eyes.”

“You…” He stared longingly at Charle’s brown eyes. “You…” He was getting drowsy. “… Both of them locked arms and kissed each other lovingly. They collapsed on Charle’s bed, and the rest of their night was wonderful.

By next morning, both were passed out. Charle was the first to awaken, groggily, discovering her covers a mess. “Wh-h-whuh…” She took a moment to grasp their position. Vaati was snoring loudly, his arm slung over her. She gasped horrified. Neither of them had clothes on. There were so many words building inside that just wouldn’t escape her mouth. But she was panicking, incredibly. She quickly but softly climbed out of bed, putting on a bra and underwear. She wondered if any of the neighbors witnessed them come in, heard them last night. She wanted the nerves in her body to settle before she woke Vaati up. She took hesitant steps forward and felt a paper wrinkle beneath her foot. Looking down, she was standing on Vaati’s discarded cape.

She bent down and picked up the light-brown paper. It was a wanted poster, depicting a dark figure with a gazing red eye, half-turned away from the camera. She gaped and stared in horror at his striking resemblance.

WANTED
“Red Eye”
Reward: $56,000,000

Unnamed Revolutionary that is responsible for the destruction of 137 Government facilities. Suspected in the usage and purchasing of illegal dark magic artifacts. Possesses airbending and magical abilities. Do not engage, report to officials of any sightings of Red Eye or those suspected to be affiliated.

“Yaaaaaaawn.” Charle’s heart was racing. Her face was struck with horror. She turned as Vaati began to awaken. “Hoo, that was some party. I forget, did I eat the Tinanas or save them-” “You’re a wanted CRIMINAL?!” Charle smacked the poster against his face.

“Oh… I see you saw.”

“When were you planning to tell me THIS?! Did you just escape from prison with your ‘LOGIA’ powers and fly here to hide out?! Are-Are you planning to hold me as HOSTAGE, force me to HARBOR you? Do you know how much trouble I’m gonna be in for associating with you?!”

“You worry too much. The World Government of Earth sent those posters, no one in Skypia will recognize me.”

“NIMBI work for the World Government, the God’s Angels air force, don’t you know that?! What if they track you here? I’m not going to be arrested because I slept with-” She froze, suddenly remembering. “Oh, God… what did we do last night?”

“Drank Ocean’s Marvel and had one hell of a party.”

Charle shook to her near-senses, “I… need to go to a hospital. I need to know if that drink has any… lasting effects. Stay in this house and DON’T leave! I don’t want anyone to see you until I know it’s safe.”

“Okay…” Vaati rubbed his eyes, still a little woozy. He noticed his wand on the nightstand and reached for it, sniffing it curiously. “…Disinfecto.”

St. Noah’s Hospital

Ocean’s Marvel was very long-lasting if drunk in large quantities, according to Doctor Orbi. Apparently there were accounts of Nimbis’ internal organs dyed blue, but it was still too early to confirm any permanent damage on Charle. That wasn’t the only reason she came, though. She needed to check another lasting effect besides the alcohol. After an hour or so of worriedly sitting on a hospital bed, Orbi returned.

“Lady Charle, ‘twould be crossing boundaries to query thee on thine recent activities, but thine results do not lie: thou art with child.”

Charle felt herself freeze. She might’ve wanted her heart to stop entirely. Last night, she got herself drunk out of her memory… she slept with a dangerous criminal… now her life may be ruined…

“Wouldst I be overstepping if I query the father?” Orbi asked.

Charle’s House

After Vaati dressed himself, he curiously searched Charle’s drawers. Magazines on foodstuffs, how to make cakes, teas, or even corndogs. “Perhaps she studies cooking as a hobby-”

“You BASTARD!!” Charle stomped in, startling Vaati into closing the drawer, and her fist swung through his wind-made head. “You got me PREGNANT!”

“I…” Vaati flushed. “I…”

“You what? You didn’t mean to? Well, stow it, because of all the daffy men I encountered, you are by far the worst!”

“But, Charle, you’re missing the big picture here. A child!” Vaati beamed. “Aren’t you excited what wonders-”
“I don’t WANT A CHILD!” Charle threw a slap at his head, but it was like swinging at air. “I can’t deal with a child right now! Not between college and home life!”

“But Charle, children are amazing. They can learn so much from us, and we learn so much from them. Just think, this child, our child, can be great beyond—”

“No! I will not care for the child of Earth’s most-wanted criminal! I will not let people connect its appearance to you, and me. I want you to leave me and never come back. As soon as this, mutant half-Minish half-Nimbi is born, I’m dropping it at an orphanage so I will never be traced back to you again. Now, please leave, Mr. Vaati. Ugh, when Mr. Roubi finds out, I’m going to have to look for another job. There’s NO point being flirty when I’m already taken. LEAVE!”

Vaati sighed solemnly, grabbed his cape and his belongings, and left out the front door. He took flight to the distant horizon, looking back as Charle stood there, watching until he was gone. Even from afar, he could feel her sharp brown eyes glaring.

Since she was only in the first phases of her pregnancy, Charle was able to continue her classes and her job without much grief. It wasn’t easy. Even if she didn’t want this child, she wouldn’t feel right if it wasn’t born into the world healthy. She made sure to eat the right fruits and vegetables, declined any alcohol she was offered at work, but her mood swings became more noticeable by her college friends. By the time September arrived, her belly was too bloated for her to hide anymore. She confronted her boss that evening.

“Thou jester me?! Pray, when hast this happened?!” demanded Roubi.

“Several months ago, as a drunken mistake. I’m sorry, but I’m going to have to ask for time off. The doctors told me I may be due on February 14, but I don’t plan to raise it.”

“I scoff at thine doctors!” He banged his hands on his desk. “In spite of thine swinging mood, thou hast brought forth more customers than ever with my ingenious bikini policy. Thou appeareth surprisingly attractive. Thou shalt be rid of thy child posthaste!”

“Be rid of—are you MAD?! I am not going to kill this child, and you can’t force me to!”

“A smutty angel hast no opinion against mine. Thou shalt be rid of this anchor and please my brethren when I order thee to—” The office door suddenly blew open, Charle standing her ground against the wind while Roubi smashed against the wall. The girl turned, gasping as Vaati marched in, his appearance more dark than ever.

“And who are you to decide the fate of two beings?” Vaati stood over the man, his red eyes sending a chill down Roubi’s spine.

The aggressive angel swallowed his worry and told him from his spot on the floor, “Thou hast no place to order me either, stranger! Be gone from hither, or I shalt summon the officials to take thee—u-uck…” Vaati raised his right hand and tightened the space in his fingers. Roubi began choking as he was lifted by an invisible force around his neck.

“The angels of Skypia know what freedom is, I was always sure of that. With wings to go anywhere, why should one deny others their freedom?”

“P-Pray, what power be this?! Art thou, ps…psychicbender?! A Sith of yore?!”

“Hm.” Vaati smirked. “I am more than a Sith. I am Air. I am Freedom.”

Vaati began to whirl his arms, and Charle stared with horror as a stream of breath flowed out of Roubi’s mouth. “Mr. Vaati, please stop!”

“All beings deserve freedom. To me, freedom is just as vital as air. If you deny others their freedom, you should not deserve… breath.”

“MR. VAATI, STOP RIGHT NOW!”

The wind mage closed his eyes. He ceased his whirling, and softly pushed the breath back into Roubi. The Nimbi panted helplessly on the floor, staring at his assaulter. With a powerful thrust of his arms, Vaati blew Roubi through the wall with an air blast, into a back room. Charle sighed with slight relief as Vaati turned to her. “I’m… sorry.”

Charle felt the urge to punch him, but… ceased. “What are you doing back here? Sky Islands constantly move, so unless you were very close all these months…”

“I used this Grand Compass.” Vaati held a golden compass with a glass dome in his hand. The arrow pointed to Charle. “It points to whatever the possessor most desires. I desired… my child.”

“…” Charle glanced away, still glaring. “Let’s go somewhere else.”

Vaati and Charle were later seated on a small cloud several meters above the street of their café. “Aside from magic and other dimensions, I have strongly believed in the philosophy of freedom. I dislike the idea of rulers, governments, or boundaries. I dream of a world where all beings can be to commingle in peace.”

“And for that reason, you attack innocent government officials, as well as small business owners?”

“Those officials are anything but innocent. They have harmed, tormented people, ruled corruptly. Surely you cannot speak differently for that boss of yours?”

“… Well, perhaps not.” Charle looked away. “But I can hardly believe your manner of violence..”

“I know I have done some bad things, I know I have hurt people, but all I really want is a happier world. The World Government of Earth is corrupt, and my goal is to thwart them. They will lead this world into destruction, Charle.”

“I understand your reasons, but you can’t expect me to support you. Freedom has a price.”

“But little price on your people. Ever since I was young, my dream was to be able to fly like Nimbi. I have always admired your kind, to go wherever you wish just by the flapping of your wings! I would describe to you the beauties of airbending, but I guess you already know it.”

“Not true. I’m able to fly like an average Nimbi, but I don’t have airbending.”

“You don’t?” Vaati said with a look that seemed sympathetic.

“Yes, but don’t console me for it. Many Nimbi don’t, it hasn’t bothered me once.”

“That may be, but there’s more that comes with the element than just the power: the spirituality that makes that element bendable, in this case freedom. You are so strict and devoted to your goals – not a bad thing to be sure – but all beings must know freedom.”

“And what form of freedom do you plan to teach me?”

“The simplest kind. Come with me and we shall fly. For just one night, let me show you the extent of our flight. The limitless possibility.”
Vaati stood and held a hand down. Charle remained seated and stared up at him. His charming white face, his trusting red eyes. Charle still didn’t know what, but this man was so… inviting. She took his hand and stood. Then, Vaati jumped over the edge and dove toward the earth. He angled upward, and Charle held onto him as they both flew. Across miles of forest and mountains, the endless earth felt so small. They found a city and decided to glide between its buildings. Passing glances into many a window, each resident jumped with a shock. They gracefully maneuvered around the scaffolds of a building under construction, then began to skip across the roofs of restaurants, each step for one roof as they took great, air-light leaps.

They flew to the sea and glided just over the waves, skipping their fingers along the surface. Many fish and dolphins leaped by, then the two were headed to a ferry. They flew above the vessel, Vaati saw Rainier and Mikaela Chariton, with their daughters Sunni and Darcy, and the couple waved at them happily. Then the two soared up and glided beside an airplane, finding a little boy with blond hair and sunglasses asleep on a seat. Vaati and Charle laughed, then flew away.

Eventually, the duo returned to Charle’s house, landing on the front yard. The two of them still had their smiles. “Mr. Vaati… this was a very wonderful night. After all the stress I’ve had to deal with… it felt good to stretch my wings.”

“People will always say that ‘freedom isn’t free’. But in reality, it is, if we allow ourselves to feel it.”

“I…I’m not sure on your… wh-what you do.” Charle turned away. “I thank you for the night, but you’re still a wanted felon, and I don’t wish to be associated with you. And as for this child, I…”

Vaati frowned. “I shall leave you alone if it’s your wish, but I want to be there when you have it.”

“…Yes… but when I do have it… I want you to raise it. For both of us.”

“…” Vaati smiled. “You have my word.”

February, 2021

The months had flown by so quickly, and Vaati anticipated his coming child every moment. February 14, the targeted date, was approaching. Vaati followed the direction of his Grand Compass to Charle, on flight to Skypia. He was completely prepared, for everything he had planned with his new child. His eyes intricately skimmed a book of wands. “‘The Fairy’s Tail, the greatest and most powerful of wands behind the Star Rod. Wielded a long time ago by the Fairy Princess, it is a historical relic treasured by the fairies. Only those deemed worthy by the princess are able to hold it. No man, fairy, or god has earned this honor.’ …” Vaati closed the book and looked at the compass. He focused his mind on the course and flew at greater speed.

St. Noah’s Hospital

“HURRRRRRRHHH!” The day was here, all right. Charle felt it in her gut, the baby ready to burst.

“Calm thy nerves!” a doctor told her as she was placed onto a bed. “Thine pain will be over shortly!”

“Rrrrrmnnng-gh-gh. . . where. . are you. . Mr. . . Vaat—AAAAAHHH!”

“Prithee, bringeth more painkillers, now is yon shining moment!” a doctor told his colleagues.

Under the setting sun at 7:00 that evening, Vaati flew toward the hospital at breakneck speed. He breezed past the floating and crippled Nimbi outside as a sudden gust, through the front doors, scattering many papers at the receptionist desk, across every hall and stairway until he could find the room. “Where are you? Charle!” His compass narrowed on a specific door, so Vaati barged in.

“AAAAAAAAAAHHHH!!”

“Waaaaahhh!” She was born. Her crying rang from the room. The doctors cleaned the blood off her beautiful tiny form and fetched a blue blanket to wrap her in. “Praise the goddesses, ‘tis a girl!” the doctors cheered.

Vaati was so entranced by the sight, he almost forgot about Charle. The pained woman looked at him from the bed, and smiled. “Art thou the father?” a doctor asked him.

“…Yes.” Vaati smiled calmly. “I am her father. May we… see her now?”

A nurse placed the baby in Charle’s arms. She was still crying and flailing her arms. Charle unwrapped the blanket from her head for a better view. She already had hair, which was a very deep shade of blue, and her brown eyes were shiny behind her tears. Charle’s heart melted. She couldn’t believe… this child in her arms… “My… child…” She smiled, feeling powerful emotion inside herself. “My… child!” Her own brown eyes leaked. “My darling… little angel.”

Vaati’s own heart warmed at the sight. The baby was so beautiful, he almost didn’t notice. “Her… hair.” He slowly reached his long-nailed fingers and brushed it. “It…It’s blue.”

“Oh, my… perhaps that was a result of the Ocean’s Marvel. I got pregnant just after drinking it, s-so maybe…”

“Is that really so bad? She truly is a marvel, after all.”

Charle softly rubbed the baby’s cheek. How perfectly healthy and vibrant she sounded. Her baby. “Yes… she is.”

Charle’s House

The baby was fast asleep by the time they were home. Charle sat on her wheelchair, rocking her in her arms. “Can you believe it… the first half-Minish half-Nimbi baby… yet, she looks so… human. She doesn’t even have wings. She doesn’t look a thing like us.”

“Not true. She has your eyes. You look generally human, except for your wings. That was a fault of my own traits.”

“What should we name her?”

“She is a marvel, so…”

“Why did I expect you to give her that?” Charle giggled.

“But it works so well, what other name should we give her?”

“Oooooooo…” They looked down when Wendy raised her arms and flailed softly, her mouth curved into an ‘o’ as she blew. A very tiny cyclone rose from her lips, up into the air, its little breeze chilling them both. “Hm hm. How about Windy?” Charle remarked.

“Yes… it’s perfect!” Vaati beamed. “Wendy Marvell… I’ve never heard any name more beautiful.”
“I… I agree. It’s a wonderful name. Wendy Marvell…”

Vaati closed his eyes, smiling softly. He would hate to ruin this moment… “I guess… you want me to take her now?”

“… I… I don’t.” Charle didn’t take her eyes off the baby. “I want to keep this child… I want to see her… grow into a fine young woman… She’s so… beautiful.”

Vaati stared at Wendy again. Her hair, blue as the deep sea. “In more ways than one…”

Charle kept her baby close as she slept that night, though allowed Vaati to sleep on the floor of her room. They weren’t actually married yet, so she didn’t feel comfortable sharing a bed. The issue at hand was a large one, eventually they would have to start making marital plans so they could raise this child peacefully. The real problem was Vaati’s position as an unnamed criminal, however the mage does speak of close friends in many places. As suspicious as this sounded, Charle couldn’t confront him, yet.

She entrusted Vaati with caring for the baby while she was off to a long day of school and work. She landed a new job as a grocery store clerk, and made friends with a delightful girl named Luvbi, a coworker who looked around 16 years old, though Luvbi claims she was much older. Luvbi plans to have her first child at 20, which Charle questioned why at such a young age, even despite what she’s done.

At 6:30p.m., Charle happily soared to her home, eager to see what development is taking place between Vaati and Wendy. “Mr. Vaatiiii. Wendyyyy. I’m home.” She called, entering the house. No one responded, and the house felt dead quiet. She filled with dread, dropping her belongings. “Vaati? Wendy?!” She searched all throughout the house, but the cradle was nowhere, nor was its lovely angel. “Where could they have-” Charle stepped on something round and hard. She looked down and found the Grand Compass. The moment she picked it up, the arrow whipped toward a specific direction.

She clutched the device tight and flew hastily across the sea, looking at the compass every few seconds to see she was on track. How long had she been flying, how far did Vaati take her precious angel? Or where were Vaati and her angel taken to?

She knew before long, that great colossus that towered over everything else in the world. Mount Mariejoa, the World Government’s headquarters. The compass was aimed at a specific level of the mountain, Midway Peak. Its outer balcony was trashed, the double doors atop the stairs forced open. Charle glided inside and found many rich types groaning and weak. There was a notable group by the stairs, Charle flew over and read their nametags. Carter Pewterschmidt, a man who looked sick beyond measure. Charles Burns, a yellow-skinned bald man who was very flimsy. Morgan Uno, a young woman around Charle’s age (don’t get confused between Charle and Burns), who looked frozen and stiff as though she’d been hit with a Stunning Spell. One man was still conscious, Giovanni, a brown-haired man with a shiny black suit.

She flew down to him, “Mister, what in the world happened here?”

“Are you one of the God’s Angels?” he asked. “That Red Eye creep showed up, he’s going for Head President Osborn.”

Charle gasped and flew up the stairs, down the corridors as instructed by the compass. Finally, a specific door was targeted, so she kicked it open. “MR. VAATI, WHAT’S-” Charle stared. The room was dark, except for a small circle of 8 candles. A pedestal was in the center, and Wendy rested atop it in her cradle. In one corner, a man with light-brown hair and a green armored suit was chained against the wall, struggling to shake free. “What…”

“M-Mr. Vaati… what are you doing?”

Vaati looked at her, “This child is truly a marvel, Charle, in more ways than you think. You were right, she doesn’t look a thing like us. That is why…” He looked down at Wendy with madness in his eyes, “she is proof! Proof of the Dimensional Fusion!”

“That whole thing again?”

“Exactly! Why in the world was this child born with blue hair when we have white? The Ocean’s Marvel may have seemed like the deciding factor, but it was all part of fate: this girl has an original parallel from another dimension. But were either of us connected with her in that dimension, who knows! Or maybe we were from someplace else entirely! I look so different from her, and that man over there looks so different from either of us, this is what I’ve been talking about, Charle! And yet, though we have no slated connection with each other, the gods of this universe have organized this very happening!”

“Vaati, you are absolutely crazy! Let’s assume that you’re actually RIGHT, who CARES if we have parallels from other dimensions?! We were born in THIS dimension. I want to live the life I was given HERE, and I want Wendy to do the same!”

“I know, Charle, she will!” Vaati said hastily, grinning madly. “In fact, I want her to grow up the same way that I have! I’m going to do like you once said, Charle… after this ritual is complete, I will abandon her at an orphanage.”

“What?”

“I grew up with no parents, Charle, the only person I could consider ‘father’ was my old teacher, Ezlo. He taught me the magic I grew accustomed to, but I was not obliged to obey him forever. He did not give birth to me. During my childhood, I was free, and as I grew older, I embraced that freedom. I want Wendy to grow up the same. No parental authorities to control her. Then when she comes of proper age to learn magic, I plan to meet her again. Then, we will make the most powerful team. Together, we shall seek the other dimensions of origin, and learn why in the world the gods put us together.”

“ENOUGH of this! Stop this insane ‘ritual’ and give my daughter back!”

During their conversation, Norman Osborn was able to free his right arm from its cuff. He pulled off his gag and whispered quickly into his wristwatch. “Red Eye has a daughter. Repeat, Red Eye has a daughter. Inform Henry Churchill. I will attempt to engage him, and capture her. This message is in case I fail. Good-bye… Master.”

Norman aimed his wrist at the leg cuffs, blasted them free, planted his armored feet against the wall, and kicked free of the other chains. He lunged at Vaati with bladed wrists—the wind mage whipped around and, “AVADA KEDAVRA!” with a powerful burst of green light, Osborn was dead. Vaati felt a cringe in his heart—immediately he yelled, “SEPARO!” and struck his own chest.

Charle gaped at the sight. Vaati was forced mouth agape as his very soul rose from his body. His spirit ripped in half like paper. The left half returned into his being, while the right slowly absorbed into Wendy. The child brimmed, a breeze generated that blew the candles out. Charle fearfully approached the baby after Vaati’s essence was absorbed. … Her ears grew thin and sharp, and her little eyes peeped open, going from brown to red. (Play “Madness” from Mad Father!)

Charle was horrified beyond compare. She chocked out breath, but couldn’t find the right words to display her anger. “What did you do? . . .”

“I want my daughter to grow up without parents.” Vaati helped himself up off the ground. “However, I also want to always be by her side. So… I split my soul and put half of it in her. Wendy is now my Horcrux. As long as she lives, I will never die. And my spirit will always protect her.”

“A… Horcrux?”

“It is a very curious brand of dark magic. A mage is able to split their own soul in half, and seal it inside an object. I have a necklace drawn here as an example, but a Horcrux can be anything. It can even be a person.”

“Why would anyone want to split their soul? It sounds painful.”

“Yes, but through doing so, the wizard becomes immortal. Of course, there are side-effects. The object in question becomes bound to the mage, and possesses his dark energy. I actually discovered how to successfully make one, if you-”

“No thank you. The idea of cutting your soul makes my spine tingle.”

Charle remembered seeing such a thing in Vaati’s journal. “Her… You… You monster.” The Nimbi was ready to murder. “You MONSTER!” Charle sent kick after kick at his back, but all went through like empty air. “How could you DO this to our daughter?! Have you no SHAME?!”

“What shame is there… in giving my daughter incredible power? You want her to live long and happy, don’t you?” Vaati turned to face her. Charle gasped at his grotesque visage; while his left half was mostly normal, the right of his face was gray and lifeless, and his pale right eye floated about like a rubber ball in a fish tank.

“V-Vaati. …”

Curious, the man felt his face. “Oh, my… Yes, that can sometimes happen with Horcruxes. Should be nothing a little magic can’t fix. But with the transfer of my soul to her body, her natural abilities should be drastically enhanced. Aside from airbending, I have confirmed the magic in her blood. I am so eager to see how she uses it. Why don’t we take her outside and see?”

“Vaati!” The mage took the child and flew, Charle giving chase. Outside on Midway Peak’s balcony, Vaati raised the baby overhead. When Charle made it out, she felt a powerful wind fall over the area. The curtained tables and chairs were blowing.

“I see…” Vaati smirked. “Her magic mixed with Air Chi and my soul has made her a tad unstable. This side-effect is sure to lessen as she gets older and gains more control. But I doubt her caretakers will agree. In time, they will show resent, forcing Wendy to run away. She will gain true freedom and experience, running across the earth, ALONE.”

“Vaati, you GIVE her back right now!” Charle demanded. “Are your crackpot theories about freedom and parallel universes SO important that you would curse our precious angel and let her grow up ALONE?!”

“Not alone, my soul will be with her! And I’ll have a couple friends watch over her, too! But she cannot go with guidance; not until the right time. 11 years from today, when she’s officially at the age to learn magic, after she has learned to survive without parents or guardians… her training can begin.”

“GIVE HER BACK!” Charle flew up, swiped Wendy in her arms, and flew quickly.

“CHARLE!” Vaati chased the Nimbi with greater speed, whipped in front of her, and grabbed the baby.

“VAATI, LET HER GO! I’M NOT LETTING YOU DO THIS TO HER!”

“Our world is DOOMED, Charle! I plan to save it!” Vaati struggled to pull the child away. “I want Wendy to help me, but she has to grow up THIS way! Together, we will destroy the World Leaders, and rid this planet of borders and boundaries, including dimensional boundaries! I will take Wendy to the New World, and with our powers, WE WILL LINK ALL DIMENSIONS TOGETHER!”

“YOU’RE INSANE! Give her BACK to me! Give back. . .LET GO!!” Vaati yanked Wendy away and flew off. Charle chased after him, a passionate, desperate fire in her brown eyes. Vaati looked back; for a Nimbi with no airbending, she was uncannily fast. She wouldn’t stop until her baby was in her arms. Vaati couldn’t let her get in the way, so on a quick impulse, he whipped out his wand and flicked it at her-

“SECTUMSEMPRA!” (End song.)

A whipping flash of white light whooshed across Charle’s face and chest. Gushes of blood flew out. The Nimbi lost the fire in her eyes and collapsed onto a cloud. Vaati stared at her with horror in his left eye. She achingly outreached an arm to her child. Wendy was so close… yet so very far away. Vaati knew the spell to heal these wounds… but his plans for Wendy were convolutedly planned in his head, and Charle couldn’t get in the way. He closed his eyes and performed a series of complex waves with his wand. “Resurrección.”

Charle’s particles scattered into the air. Her blood had soaked the cloud, but it would fade before long. Vaati flew away to carry out his objective. A faint white energy existed where Charle last lay.

Dr. Facilier’s Voodoo Emporium

“Whoa, Vaati, Vaati, Vaati…” Facilier raised both hands and gestured a ‘stop’. “This is all a bit much to ask of me. I mean, wouldn’t you rather raise her yourself?"

“Even if I establish no rules, Wendy must not feel burdened to obey her parent.” Vaati stated, the baby still bundled in his arms. His head was wrapped with black cloth, exposing mainly the left half. Annie stood behind him. “I instruct you and my cohorts to watch her, but do not interact. I will place her in the orphanage where Jeremiah works, but he will receive the same instructions. I will let you know when she comes of age.” Vaati turned to head out the door.

“Vaati, Vaati.” Facilier put a hand on his shoulder. “You’re my homeboy, and I know y’all want to save the world, but I must ask ya to reconsider. She’s yo’ girl! And you want her to grow up alone? Please keep her, or at least let Annie raise her, so she can grow up with all the others.”
“No, Harvey… I truly believe this is the right course for my daughter. And I know…” He looked down at Wendy’s adorable sleeping face, “that she will be of use to me… someday…”

Facilier sighed solemnly, but had no other comment. Vaati and Annie left the shop, standing in the pitch-black alleyway under the windy night. “Which reminds me… I’d prefer to keep the matter of Charle a secret from her. When the time comes, you will pretend to be Wendy’s mother.”

“I… Me?” Annie asked with a somber look.

“As delightful as Charle was, you would make an excellent mother figure. My love is still for you, Annie. Won’t you?”

“… Y-…yes.” Annie nodded. “I’ll do whatever you think is right… Lord Vaati.”

Present time

Miyuki ended the vision and released their hands. Wendy was completely speechless. Her expression was matched by Carla’s, who had been touching Miyuki’s leg.

Miyuki stepped away from the three. Facilier and Melody didn’t know what they saw, but it looked traumatizing. Wendy turned, bowing her head as she played it in her head again. Carla glared at Vaati. “You knew who I was all along… didn’t you?”

No response.

“I am… I am Wendy’s real mother… aren’t I?”

“… I never wanted to kill you, Charle.” Vaati spoke. “I thought if you could be reborn… you could learn to see things my way. That’s why I destroyed your original body with Resurrección so you would be reborn as a cat. Wendy…” His daughter was still turned. “I’m sorry I didn’t tell you you were a Horcrux. I planned to eventually. But I did it so I would always be with you. I did it because I loved you! And then you would always know… you were never alone.”

Wendy faced him. The child calmly approached her father, to Carla’s shock and horror. Vaati smiled and held his hand open. …Wendy kicked her father in the crotch. “Oof!” Even his Logia didn’t protect.

“I could forgive you for leaving me all alone… I could understand why you made me a Horcrux. But you lied to me, Father. How can I trust what you say?”

“If you knew the truth, you would have a harder time understanding.”

“Understanding what?!” Wendy cried tears. “That I’m a tool to you?! Living proof that Dimensional Fusion is real?! How do I know you haven’t been controlling my thoughts?! How do I know your soul isn’t eating away at mine?!”

“I’ve been protecting you all this time! I kept you from killing yourself! I made you stronger! I know that I’ve done dark things, but you were more important to me than anything!”

“THEN YOU SHOULD’VE KEPT ME!” Wendy pushed him. “You lied to me about my mom!” Sniffle. “And because of you… so many of my friends were hurt.”

“The incidents with June and Chelia were not my fault!” Vaati argued. “June was bound to her city against her own will, Chelia was captured by a World Leader… If we lived in a free universe, none of those things would happen. That’s what I’m planning to stop, Wendy, I want to save them much like you do! I want to make the New World with you… Don’t you understand?”

“…” Wendy calmed. “Do you know where the World Leaders are holding Chelia?”

Vaati raised a brow, pondering her intentions. “If Chelia possessed God Chi… I surmise she is somewhere on Mariejoa.”

“…Then good-bye, Father.” Wendy picked Carla up and joined Dr. Facilier.

“You aren’t going to Mariejoa now, are you?”

“Not by myself. I would like to join… the Kids Next Door.” She faced Melody and Miyuki. “Would you, perhaps, be acquainted with them?”

“Y-Yeah…” Melody said awkwardly. “We can take ya to Moonbase and meet Cheren…”

“That would be great!” Wendy grinned. “Dr. Facilier, let’s go home, please.”

“Of course, Wendy…” The doctor spared a repentant look at Vaati before Apparating the group.

“Ahem.” Vaati and Annie turned to Itaav and Ydnew in the doorway. “I don’t know what that was about… but I think it’s clear who the bad father is.”

“I will still fight the World Government with you, Vaati… but I will have my eye on you.”

Climbers House

Upon returning to the basement, Melody and Miyuki agreed to give them some alone time, going upstairs for refreshments. Wendy and Carla looked at each other in a different way. At first, they had just been a magical girl and her talking pet. In truth, they were mother and child. Carla bowed her head in shame. “I’m sorry I couldn’t protect you. Even now, I… can’t remember a thing about my past. I can’t remember… how much I adored you back then.”

Wendy picked Carla up and hugged her. “Mom… I’m really sorry for all the trouble I caused you. None of this would’ve happened… if I was never born.”

“Don’t ever say that, Child.” Carla hugged her. “I don’t think I was ever more happy… than when you appeared in my life. And I’m so proud of you… for living and making it this far. I’m glad I got to see you… become a strong young woman.”

There was a knock on the portal-door. They watched as Facilier went to answer it. When Harvey peeked through the eyehole, he saw a familiar brown-haired girl. “Samantha!” He let her in. “I know the shop looks a little different, but…” He noticed the distraught expression on the girl. “You look a little pale… You sleeping okay?”

“Dr. Facilier… did you see the sky two days ago?”

Facilier frowned. “I did… I guess it was real after all.”

“W-What’s gonna happen? My brother’s panicking—all my classmates are afraid—and I’m afraid, I couldn’t sleep for two days, and I was afraid to come HERE because…”

“Because what?” Facilier whispered, trying to sound consoling.
“Because I…I was afraid to know what’s gonna happen. But, I just want to know now… are we going to be okay?”

“Alright then, sit down. I’ll settle this.” Harvey’s assuring smile eased her worries. Samantha sat at the table while the doctor got his crystal ball. Both put their hands over the ball. Wendy and Carla anticipated his response. “I…I can’t see nothin’.”

“Nothing?!” Samantha almost broke into tears.

“Nothin’ but the Kids Next Door… doin’ what they do best.” The doctor smiled. “And that’s give people hope. Samantha… as long as we have them, we don’t have to worry. I know they gonna protect us.”

“Are…Are you sure?”

“Yes. Because the Kids Next Door… are hope. Nothing can defeat them.”

Samantha smiled. “In that case… I want to join them.” She stood up. “I want to give people hope, too. …” She noticed Wendy standing near the couch. “Hey, I recognize you… You’re the girl in the wanted posters.”

“Um…” Wendy was nervous.

“Are you in the Kids Next Door, too?” Sam asked as she approached. “A lot of other operatives have wanted posters like you do. Can you help me get in?”

“Yo, we just got a call from Moonbase.” Melody called as she and Miyuki returned. “You wanna go up or what?”

Wendy spared a look with Samantha and smiled with enthusiasm. “Yes! We’re ready!”

Fairy World

“Yes… I’d say that she is.” Princess Mavis smiled.

In the original Fairy Tail, I always pictured Wendy and Carla having a mother/daughter relationship… and their friendship always touched me to that point. I just didn’t feel right leaving them out of the main Gameverse. Anyway, I’m sad to report the next Side Stories chapter may be the last. Next time, we will conclude the Negaverse story and find the final Darkness.

“One day, this month, you are going to die. Maybe it’s by the Apocalypse, maybe you’re killed trying to stop the Apocalypse. My question for you is… how would you like to go out.”

Those were the words Miyuki told Cheren. And now, as they fly to Moonbase, Miyuki felt it greater than ever. She didn’t know how, she didn’t know why… but the death of their beloved Supreme Leader was approaching.
Chapter Summary

Cheren, Nerehc, and their friends break into Underworld Prison to free the Thirteen Darknesses.

This is the last chapter of Side Stories. Get ready, folks.

Chapter B-35: Dead

KND Moonbase

“So, you’re ready?” Cheren said into his phone. “Alright… I’ll meet you there. I just need to collect my group first. See you soon, Kid.” He hung up.

“Is it time?” Panini asked.

“Yeah… we’re going to meet him in the town square.”

“Cheren, Miyuki’s back!” Francis called. “They brought some people with them!”

Cheren exited his office to see Miyuki and Melody approach. They were accompanied by a brown-haired girl and a familiar blue-haired girl. “Wendy!”

“Hello, Cheren!” Wendy greeted happily.

“ANOTHER girlfriend?!” Panini yelled with disapproval.

“You wish! Wendy, who is this girl?”

“Name’s Samantha! I wanted to join the Kids Next Door.”

“So do I!” Wendy followed. “I heard you guys were planning to fight the World Leaders and I wanted to help.”

“Well, by all means, feel free to help. But Arctic Training is kind of suspended at the moment. This Apocalypse business is making everyone go nuts.”

“Oh… I understand. But I’ll do my very best to help out!”

“Ha ha, great!” Cheren grinned. “Anyway, Miyuki, I wanna take you on a mission. We’re going to the Underworld, so we need to get you a Life Ring. Kid said he would have some. Let’s go get Nerehc.”

Miyuki followed him and Panini with worry on her features. The Underworld… is this when it happens? “Cheren, why are we going to the Underworld?”

“We’re going to meet Majora.”

“!” Miyuki gasped. Unable to think of a follow-up question, she followed them at a quicker pace.
“Yeah, I thought you would.” Cheren smirked.

“I guess I’m gonna have to wait to join, huh?” Wendy asked her mother.

“Perhaps this is good. We need to find a way to rid you of your Horcrux curse.” Carla replied.

“I agree… but I have to admit, it has made me stronger.” Wendy stared at her hand. “It could be useful… but it feels wrong using my dad’s power. …Well, let’s go talk to some people!” she said happily. “You never know which ones we’ll be seeing every day!”

Underworld Prison

A centaur-driven chariot pulled up to the gates of Underworld Prison. The prison was surrounded by a great stone wall and the only entrance was through sapphire flame gates. The chariot parked by the gate guard, a Fatblin in black armor. “Halt. This is a restricted area. What business have you?”

“I’m the Grim Reaper’s son, you disproportioned mess of a mountain.” Death the Kid, the chariot’s passenger, stated aggressively. “I demand you let me in. I’m here to see a certain prisoner.”

“Hurrrr…” The Fatblin looked at a list of approved people: below Grim Reaper and Velma Green, Kid’s name was listed. “Okay. But I need to do a disguise test. Step out of the cart, Mr. Reaper.”

Kid climbed out of the chariot. The Fatblin raised a bucket of magic water and poured it over him. Kid was infuriated by the soaking, but nothing else happened. “Okay… In you go.” The Fatblin clapped and disabled the flames.

“Thank you.” Kid passed and headed for the entrance to the small, two-floor building. Inside was the giant desk belonging to the prison’s new warden, Magellan, a huge bat demon in a black coat and horns.

“Hmm?” Magellan looked down and saw Kid. “Your Majesty. Welcome back. Is there any word regarding the Blackbeard matter?”

“We’re closing in on the case.” Kid answered. “As a matter of fact, I’m here to visit a certain prisoner: Dimentio Z. Winkiebottom.”

“Dimentio? Mmmm, okay.” Magellan grabbed a ring of keys. “Follow me, Kid.” The demon unlocked an elevator and crouched to squeeze inside. Kid was forced to stay against the wall, but he detested the asymmetry. The elevator closed and began to move down to Hell 1.

“Uoh.” There was a squeak when the lift bumped.

“What was that?” Magellan asked.

“Me.” Kid blushed. “I have… high-pitched squeals.”

The elevator stopped and allowed them to disembark. Hell 1 of Underworld Prison was Prickly Pine Hell, where prisoners were forced to walk barefoot on a floor of blood-red pine needles. (Red from the blood of sinners, of course.) “Mm-! Mm. Mm-! Mm.”

“Are you okay, Kid?” Magellan asked, hearing the squeaky sounds.

“I have a bad gulping habit and it sounds like my squeals.” Kid blushed, annoyed by his friend’s lack of subtlety. This is what you get for not wearing shoes, Ellen.

Magellan stopped beside a cell, prompting Kid to view into it. “Dimentio…?”

The Zathurian with the jester’s uniform smiled from the back of the cell. “And so a visitor greets me like an old grandpa, dying in the hospital. To what do I owe this surprise?”

“Dimentio… my father still can’t figure out the mystery behind your extended lifespan. By any chance… are you acquainted with Lord English?”

“Is my secret out? Aha ha ha… yes. I met Lord English eons ago when I fell into a Vortex of No Return. He spoke to me as a Shimmer and granted me eternal life. After that… I found a strange stone pyramid and found myself able to read its foreign text. It said… ‘My name is English. You are the first of my Thirteen Servants. Allow me to feed you my knowledge.’ And before I knew it… I was the instigator of the Twenty Keys Prophecy. I was the one who would initiate the threat of the Apocalypse and force the prophecy to transpire.”

Kid gasped in horror. “So that business in the Netherverse—with destroying the universe’s matter… it was all part of your plan!”

“Yes!” Dimentio cheered giddily. “By tampering with the Nexus, I have weakened it! At the end of this month, it will be destroyed…”

“Grr…” Kid grit his teeth. “Then… we have to go to the New World. Sigh… Many thanks for your cooperation. Magellan, there are other prisoners I want to see. By my understanding, they’re on the 6th floor.”

“Oh, I can’t allow that, Your Highness. Hell 6 is too dangerous. The inmates down there have extremely high levels of chi and power.”

“This man also possessed incredible power. Why is he on Level 1?”

“Well, he has no power in spirit form. Besides… your father requested he be in this very cell. It was his sister’s former cell.”

“Interesting. Well, if I can’t go any lower, you can show me to the exit. Let’s leave.”

Magellan proceeded to walk him back. When they were out of sight, Ellen Wickens took off the Invisibility Cloak she “borrowed” from Grim. “Ouch, ouch!” She tingled from the prickly pines under her feet. “Climb down, quickly, watch the needles!”

A shrunken Cheren, Nerehc, Panini, Miyuki, Sipa, and Bon Clay climbed down Ellen’s legs before Sipa used magic to grow them all to normal size. “Oh! A jailbreak, is it?” Dimentio cocked a brow.

“Here’s the map Kid lent me.” Ellen unraveled a paper. “A hole connects to the 2nd floor, that way. Someone carry me!”

“I’ll carry ya, baby!” Bon Clay lifted her over his shoulders. “My, what trim, boney legs.” He softly rubbed Ellen’s half-skeletal legs. “Don’t worry, Cherry Cakes, I still enjoyed our time under her robe.” ;D

“Why did you bring him again?” Sipa asked.

“I thought his love could liven the dark of the Underworld?” Cheren shrugged.
“We’re to be at Level 6 in 30 minutes.” Miyuki reported. “Let’s get moving.”

Death the Kid watched as Magellan opened the elevator. The prince crossed both arms, clutching the guns on his belt. “Magellan…” The warden turned to him. “Open wide!” He whipped the pistols up and blasted rounds of spicy hellbeans into Magellan’s mouth, an easy task since his mouth was forced open in shock. When enough beans were in, Kid hopped on his skateboard, surfed up Magellan’s body, then stomped him in the face to push him in the elevator.

“I know you have constipation issues.” Kid said as the demon was too weak to climb out. The elevator closed on him. “Hurry to the bathroom or there’ll be a new floor of this prison. Now to get to the 6th floor.” He hopped on his skateboard and surfed across the prickly ground. (Play “Deep Into the Shadows” from Paper Mario: TTYD!)

Stage B-30: Underworld Prison

Mission: Find Majora and the Thirteen Darknesses.

Act 1: Hell's Floors

Cheren climbed onto a safe pathway above the needles, but alarms went off in the dungeon as Bulblin charged from around a corner. The darkness of the Underworld made them faster and sharper than overworld Bulblin, so Miyuki used timebending to Stop their arrows while Cheren froze the ground with Ice Arrow. Bon Clay slid along the ice and kicked the demons off their feet with his swan slippers. “Wah wah wah!” The okama almost slid off a ledge over a pit of giant needles, his top half completely bent over as he flailed his arms.

“Don’t fall here.” Nerehc pulled him back up as the path turned left, reaching a dead end over the pit. Nerehc used rockets to fly over- “AAAAH!” His flames suddenly extinguished, but Cheren caught him with the Hookshot before he fell.

“Take your own advice.”

“It’s one of the prison’s new defenses.” Death the Kid skated up. “It filters Dark and Fire Chi. The Underworld’s favorite natural elements.”

“Ya couldn’t have told us that?” Panini inquired.

“Just don’t use it too close to those vents.” He pointed at a duct above the pit.

“Say, that can be useful!” Bon Clay jumped off and kicked his slippers’ swans to stretch up and wrap around the duct. “Grab on, fellas!” He swung to and fro, so one at a time, the kids grabbed his hands and swooped over the pit, jumping off on the other side before Clay detached himself and joined them. When the path turned right, they saw a Bulblin riding a Goliath – a black Hollow mammoth with tusks. The Bulblin spotted them and commanded the mammoth to charge forth, so Ellen went into Hollowfication and pushed the beast back with a burst of black magic.

“This type of Hollow is hard to defeat with sheer force.” Kid said. “Ellen, push him under that stalactite! Cheren, climb those twin pillars and blow it off with a M.A.R.B.L.E.” The stalactite in question was a giant red needle hanging on the ceiling. Cheren Wall Jumped the indicated pillars against the wall, reaching a platform from which he could shoot a mini explosive at the needle’s base. It dropped and stabbed the Goliath along with the Bulblin, and the needle fell into the pit.

They progressed along the path and reached a field of needles, in which a certain line of needles would briefly fall down and stand up. When they were down, they looked like a square platform was whisking across the field. Only Nerehc was fast enough to stay within the square and run along with it, doing so with excellent timing before reaching the other side. He stepped on a switch that made all the needles flat so his team could get across.

They were now on a wide, rectangular floor with four square holes in-between. A Blue Bubble, Green Bubble, Red Bubble, and Ice Bubble jumped out of the respective holes (they were winged skulls in colored flames). The distant wall over the chasm had a red Eye Switch, so Cheren shot an arrow through the Red Bubble’s flame and activated it. An ice Eye Switch was on the ceiling, so Cheren lined it up with the Ice Bubble and shot it. The green switch was on the wall next to the entrance of this area, and the blue switch was down in the Blue Bubble’s very hole.

With the four switches hit, a stairwell appeared, leading down a hallway to the second hell. Kid surfed on his skateboard during descent. They arrived at the second floor, seeing dementors hovering around the ceiling. Sensing the kids’ arrival, they swooped down to dine on some souls. “Expecto Patronum!” Ellen materialized a silvery light cat from her hands, scaring the dementors.

“This is Fantastic Beast Hell.” Kid said. “Where the fierce, fantastic creatures roam. Ah, including my half-species.” They looked right as giant Skulltulas crept up hurriedly. Sipa cast shrink spells on the spiders as they charged forward and squashed them without concern.

“HIIIIS…” A hissing language echoed in their ears, coming from around a corner of cells, the same way the spiders ran from.

“TURN AROUND!” cried Kid, gesturing to do so quickly. “It’s the basilisk! One look in its eyes will kill you!”

“What if I made it look at itself?” Cheren asked, slapping the Mirror Shield on his back.

“If it were THAT easy, Harry Potter would’ve been a lot shorter, JUST RUN!” Panini sprinted forward and her friends followed. They turned down a right path and encountered Elite Wizzerds, floating white, ovular machines with antennas and four floating hands. The Wizzerds quickly surrounded the kids and began rapidly tickling them with their fast, floating hands.

“UAAAHAH HAHAHAHAHA!” Bon Clay was naturally more susceptible to the attack. “PLEASE, fellas, one at a time, hahaha!”

“Hahahaha, does tickling even work on anyone down—ha ha ha ha!” Cheren laughed.

“Miyuki’s—the only one—who’s not affected.” Sipa spoke through chuckles. “Do something—haha.”

Indeed, Miyuki was frozen in place, her body twitching as she struggled to hold it in. “HWAH HAHAHAHAHA!” She burst into tears and laughter.

“I’m so proud of you.” Cheren remarked, still in laughter.

“WIZZERDS, where are you?” a voice called. “We need you to clean the bat cage.” Their antennas sparked, and they left the group alone.

“The basilisk is still behind us!” Kid hopped on his skateboard and rode down a different path. “You keep running, I’ll take care of it!”

Kid found the basilisk’s tail and hopped on, skating to the head across the back. The basilisk felt an irritation and turned its head—Kid shut his eyes and leapt above with a flip, shooting both guns directly down to damage the eyes. He stopped to study his results: the basilisk furiously shook its head to the goop splattered over its eyes. I’ve blinded the basilisk temporarily, but it can still hear. Time to give it a distraction. He played a song on his skull phone and set it to fly away with bat wings. The basilisk hissed and gave chase, while Kid ran to find his team.

Ellen’s Patronus kept the dementors at bay, but three Gigabites (flying white munching skulls) flew overhead and swooped down in attempt to bite them. Cheren and Nerehc did little damage with their swords and Sipa’s Reducto spells couldn’t break its skull. “Gigabites have high defense.” Ellen noted. “They’re very annoying, too.”

“Not as annoying as ME!” Panini burst into emerald flames and rocketed up, bouncing between the Gigabites like a comet until they dropped on the floor in defeat. Panini landed and cooled down as their venture continued.

“A lot of these cells are pretty empty.” Miyuki noticed. “Did they all get eaten by the beasts?”

They arrived at an open area and froze at the sight. “Uh… I think we found them.” Cheren said.

“PLACE YOUR BETS!” Tallest Red declared while Purple chewed on blood-filled donuts. The Tallests were skinny and shriveled from dryness. They stood on a short platform and hosted the event. “Place your bets! One Goliath vs. a baby Big-Mouth Hippo!” The prisoners were roaring and waving as the giant Hollow elephant was pitted against a tiny hippo in the ring.

The elephant bellowed and stormed toward the hippo, intent on crushing its molecules. The hippo opened its mouth extremely wide and “GULPED” the entire elephant. “YAAAAAAAH!” Some prisoners cheered having won their bet, others were angry.

“What’s going on over here?!” Death the Kid caught up. “WHO FREED ALL YOU PRISONERS?!”

“Hey, look Red!” Purple pointed. “Some kids are here!”

“Welcome to Fantastic Beast Brawl!” Red waved. “Fine-quality free prison entertainment! (Admission is 10 Mon.)”

“Hey, those are the Almighty Tallests!” Cheren recognized.

“Well, whaddya know, they’re fans! We reprogrammed the Wizzerds, in case you’re wondering. They can even project artificial Patronuses to scare the dementors!”

“Do you mind if we can squeeze through?” Ellen asked, trying to get past two skeletons.

“Eh?” One of those skeletons appeared to be an old man with a hearing phone. “’EY!” the man yelled at Ellen hoarsely. “It’s you! I recognize you, Crystal Wick…Wicka… er, was it a soup or something?”

“You mean Wickens?”

“I KNEW IT! Well, I’ll get you this time!” The man raised his bone cane. “Feel the elderly wrath of Jonah Icarus!”

“GUYS, MAGELLAN’S COMING!” A small skeleton scampered by. “QUICK, BACK TO YOUR CELLS!”

“KIIIIIID?!?” The giant bat demon quaked the prison as he stormed forward in a rage. “WHERE ARE YOOOOUUUU?!

The prisoners screamed and scrambled everywhere. “Time to go, Purple!” The Tallests jumped on a Thrino (a giant three-horned rhino).

“Take us with you!” Cheren jumped off the platform and on the beast’s back, which had room for the others.

“Find your own monster rhino!” Purple shouted.

“I’ll persuade my father to send royal snacks down here.” Kid reasoned.

“All aboard!” Red announced, convinced. The Thrino charged down the wide corridor, kicking down Bulblins riding Bullbos. “Mind if we ask what you kids are doing?”

“We’re going to break some people out of the 6th floor.” Sipa answered.

“The 6th floor? We snuck down there once before. I got a bad vibe from those guys.”

“They liked snacks, though!” Purple said happily.

“ROOH!” The Thrino suddenly stopped as two pairs of sharp teeth sprouted up in front and back on the floor, in rectangular alignment.

“It’s a giant Snaptrap!” Kid yelled. “Quick, jump!” They leapt off the front as the Thrino was devoured whole by the beast.

“OUT OF MY WAY!” Magellan threw purple acid on the Snaptrap.

“PLEASURE HELPING!” The Tallests sprinted into a cell.

“We have to hide!” Sipa yelled. “Reducio!” She zapped them down to small size except Ellen, who picked them up and backed against a wall to hide in the Invisible Cloak.

Magellan was accompanied by two dementors as he sniffed the area. His eyes directed at the space where the kids were hidden. “Do you two sense anything?” The dementors slowly floated down.

The tiny Sipa slightly peeped out of the cloak and cast, “Expecto Patronum!” A crumb-size beetle soared out. Despite its size, the dementors were frightened, so they glided back down the hall.

“That way, huh?” Magellan assumed. “What is Kid up to, anyway?” Magellan stomped after them.

When he was out of sight, Ellen took off the cloak and Sipa restored the team. “Heh-hey, pretty clever!” Red praised. “Tell ya what, we’ll give you a hint: there’s a secret hole in our cell that leads down to the 3rd level. We programmed the Wizzerds to dig it for us.”

“We’ll take it.” Kid agreed. “It’s too risky to take the stairs that way.” The team entered the cell and one-at-a-time climbed down the hole in the corner. Sipa used Lumos to provide a light, but this became irrelevant by the time they were at the bottom. “Sigh…sigh…” Kid squinted his eyes from the scorching brightness. The humans were already sweating. “Welcome to Hell 3: Scorching Hot Hell.”

This floor was designed like a desert, where bones lay dead in the sand, which according to Kid is actually the ashes of skeletons. Not far in, a giant scorpion emerged from the sand. Bon Clay Jr. leapt forward and swiftly dodged its poisonous sting. “Lucky for you, I’m quite adapted to hot areas!” Clay smirked. He danced toward a more solid space, causing the scorpion’s stinger to be stuck when it stabbed down. Cheren charged a Skyward Strike to chop the tail in two. The beast cried before falling dead.

An army of Stalkin emerged from the sand, 3-inch tall skeletons with spears. Cheren and Nerehc swiped their swords along the ground to destroy them. “Be careful. Stalkin lurk within quicksand.” Kid cautioned. “There’s a switch somewhere that can turn it off.”

“There’s a lot of vents.” Nerehc noticed the ducts standing in the open sand ground. “I can’t fly across.”

“I guess it’s up to me.” Bon Clay spun on his slippery slippers and skated over the sand with grace. Staltroops emerged to block him, so Clay maneuvered around, sliding right, then left, slightly right, and swerved around a cell before hopping up some stairs onto the cell’s roof. Clay stretched his slippers to swing a ceiling duct to an L-shaped line of cells. Kargaroks flew up to peck him, but Clay kicked them out of the air.

The okama whipped his slippers around a high point of some twin ducts and used them to slingshot up to a fenced platform. A Moblin whipped its spear at Clay, who nimbly flipped and whipped the two demons in the face. Clay spotted a lever labeled Quicksand and flipped it down. “FELLAS, is it safe?”

Cheren ran forward. “Yeah Clay, we can move on!” Clay kicked the Moblin off the platform and rejoined his team. In the center of the room, Count Dracula was chained to a table above a garlic circle, forced to dry under the artificial sun.

“Kiiiiid?” The elevator opened as they heard Magellan’s voice. “Are you down here?”

“This is taking forever!” Panini complained. “Does the elevator go down to the bottom floor? Let’s take it and get this over with!”

“Perhaps you’re right. Let’s get under Ellen’s cloak.” Kid complied. Sipa shrunk the group once more, and Ellen carried them under the Invisible Cloak. Magellan came around the right of a wall of cells, so Ellen hurried around the opposite side. She sprinted into the elevator before it closed. The witch clicked the ‘Hell 6’ button and remained hidden during the descent. They stopped on the Forgotten Hell and resized as they disembarked. (End song.)

Most of the cells on this dark floor were gigantic, filled with what appeared to be giant humans with ravenous, grinning expressions, reaching for the little prey in hunger. “PUT SOME CLOTHES ON!” Panini shouted at them.

“I don’t think yelling at them is the best idea.” Miyuki said.

“Kid, why is this the Forgotten Hell, anyway?” Cheren asked.

“Because this floor is filled with people that history would like to forget. The prisoners here were extremely powerful, and their connection with the Dark Side makes them very influential.”

“That’s what they want you to believe.” a feminine voice said.

The group turned left. “Viridi?” Cheren recognized the childlike goddess in the cell.

“So, you’ve come to see me.” Viridi said with a quirky smirk. “Or did your pitiful species realize that the world was doomed without me and you’ve come to free me?”

“If only you were important enough.” Cheren remarked. “We’re looking for the Thirteen “Oh, are you?” a man’s voice said. It came from a cell further down the passage. It was occupied by a brown-haired man wrapped to a chair like a mummy.

“Sōsuke Aizen.” Kid spoke.

“He’s one of them, isn’t he?” Cheren recalled.

“So, the prophecy was true after all.” Aizen figured. “I was almost afraid everyone had forgotten me… but that was foolish.”

“How could they forget us?” The kids looked up at a larger cell on the wall behind Aizen’s. Inside was a purple giant in black and gold armor, the stub of his left arm completely chained.

“And you’re Thanos.” Kid glared.

“And you must be servants of Medusa.” Thanos smirked. “What adorable subjects she has at her disposal. If you release me first, I will happily make you my children.”

“Will we rule the galaxy as father and children?” Sipa joked.

“Thanos will rule all. And if you are obedient, Thanos will allow you to live.”

“Well, if he isn’t Father of the Year.” Cheren shrugged sarcastically. “We’re looking for a prisoner with gray skin and orange horns.”

“That fellow is further down.” Aizen nudged. “Is he one of the Chosen Ones?”

“Isn’t everybody?” Cheren led his group down, ignoring the giants’ moans as they studied the cells. One of them was designed like a classroom, as Czar Baldy Bald III was trapped in eternal remedial English.

“MAAAAAAAA!” A red-eyed, round giant drooled at the sight of the kids with a wide mouth of giant, venomous teeth. “PANINI!!! You’ve RETURNED to meeeee! Get in my MOOOOUUUUUTH!”

“Suck a Great White Asparagus, Big Mum!” Panini shot back.

“Are these all her relatives or something?” Cheren asked.

“No.” Kid answered. “These monsters are-

“I see him!” Ellen peeked into a dark cell. “Alohomora.” She cast a spell and unlocked the cell door. She and Kid stood watch while the humans entered.

The prisoner was in the dark of the back of the cell. Cheren raised his sword as the glow from it highlighted his form. The prisoner’s black clothes and gray skin (except for his purple cape and orange horns) helped him blend in with the darkness. “Zanifr…”

The troll heard his name and opened his red and green eyes. They reflected the glow of Cheren’s sword. “Cheren… Just when I was wondering who’d they send to execute MMe.”

“Majora!” Miyuki exclaimed. “It’s… really you.”

Zanifr’s eyes widened, highlighting slight emotion on his features. “MMiyuki… Are you angry with MMe for what I did?”
“I’m different from how I felt back then. But I think I… still understand your plight.”

“Catch up on your romance later.” Cheren stated. “Majora, the reason I came here is because a Zoni named Vriska told me you could help.”

“Vriska sent you?”

“Wait, I remember Vriska.” Miyuki mentioned. “She was the Zoni who put us to sleep on Moonbase. I never understood what that was about.”

“The purpose of that slumber was to allow MMe to achieve God Tier.” Zanifr explained.

“You mentioned that before.” Cheren remembered. “What is God Tier?”

“In MMy universe, God Tier was the original Fury MMode. Element benders like MMyself could achieve this by developing our skills. But it is far MMore powerful than your Fury MMode.”

“Seriously, stop with the M’s, we’re in a hurry.”

“It’s a habit. The reason for its power is due to Arceus’s disregard for a proper Balance, as you MMay know by now. Or should I say, it is a result of the struggle between Caliborn and Calliope. One who is able to achieve God Tier can inherit formidable chi.”

“And this chi is on par with Lord English?”

“Hmm hmm hmm. Do not be silly.” Zanifr laughed tonelessly. “If Lord English is reborn, God Tier alone is nothing. However, perhaps it would be a power to MMatch the Octogan.”

Cheren gasped. “So that means... you can defeat Andrew. The King who’s using the Octogan.”

“Unfortunately, I don’t believe I could. My element is darkness. The King of your World uses the Octogan to steal pure, holy energy. However, I believe one of similar powers could stand against him, if they possessed God Tier. I am speaking of you...”

“M-Me? But how could I use God Tier?”

“After you defeated me, Vriska curiously conducted research on you. Your great-grandmother, Shadow Queen MMalevolent, was a denizen of the First Dimension, the Black Queen of the Carapacian race, and all of her descendants inherited her blood, including you. Cheren, on your journey to destroy me, do you recall how the Zoni transported you to the Dream World?”

“Yes?”

“In truth, it was not your dreamself in the Dream World: the Zoni were taking your dreamself to regions in the First Dimension. There were places in that world where Quest Beds lay, and if a person’s dreamself had a symbol that matched the Quest Bed, that person could attain God Tier by sleeping on it. When Vriska recorded the symbol on your shirt, she searched for a Quest Bed with a similar symbol. She found one. So, MMy theory is, since your blood comes from the First Dimension, it is possible for you to achieve God Tier.”

“God Tier… but what are the side-effects?”

“On someone like you, I do not know. It MMay not even work.”

“Well, this has been a waste of time.” Panini remarked. “Let’s save the Darknesses and get out of here.”
“Hold on.” Cheren said. “What if… it did work?”

“Hmmm… Power beyond your wildest dreams. The kind of power that could protect people, save lives, defeat ultimate evil… I assume you relish in that kind.”

“You aren’t actually considering it, are ya, Cheren?” Panini questioned. “All this just to defeat King Andrew?”

“Why not? You were just mocking the fact I was no match for him. I already lost the Fierce Deity Mask and—”

“You lost the Fierce Deity Mask?” Zanifr cocked a brow. “Hmmm… Perhaps this is the best option.”

“Why can’t Mr. King battle Andrew?” Panini asked.

“Because Mr. King needs to save his strength for Ragaj. If Ragaj is planning to use an Octogan, Jagar needs one, too. If God Tier can really help me beat Andrew…”

“We can fight Andrew together!” Panini reasoned. “All your operatives—heck, the Firstborn can fight him!”

“I’m not risking anyone’s lives against that monster! Panini, I HAVE to do this! In case… In case there’s a worst case scenario.”

“But ya don’t even know what it’ll do to ya!”

“It’d make me heck of a lot stronger than you.” Cheren smirked. “Is that what you’re afraid of?”

“N-…” Panini blushed. “No, of course not!”

“I can call the Zoni to take us to the place where your Quest Bed was found.” Zanifr said. “It is your choice… Will you attempt the God Tier?”

Cheren faced Panini and Miyuki. Panini’s face pled him to say ‘no’… Miyuki looked grim. If his other friends knew, Cheren was sure they would say ‘no.’ Perhaps, for their sake… he shouldn’t.

“I think you should.” Miyuki said. The two gasped.

“Miyuki!” yelled Panini in protest.

“I think… it may be the only chance. You said yourself, Cheren… that everyone must become their strongest if we’re to stop this. This is no longer the Kids Next Door we read about… this is the present. And it will be… the future.”

“You’re really sure?”

“I am…”

“…Okay,” Cheren faced Zanifr seriously. “I’ll do it, Zanifr.”

“Very well. Lie on the bed.”

“Wait!” Panini grabbed Cheren’s shoulders. She was about to do something, but bit her lip.

“Do you… wanna kiss?” Cheren laughed.
“I thought I did, but… Ay dunno, is the setup good enough?”

“I’m about to evolve beyond my mortal form and possibly become an entirely different person for the sake of protecting mankind. That’s more than Chicken Little ever did.”

“Fair enough.” Panini pulled him in for a kiss. Cheren wrapped arms around Panini and embraced it. It lasted about a minute.

“Hurry up!” Kid demanded. “You’re not even lined up properly!”

“Like you ever kissed someone.” Ellen stated.

“OOOHHH my Cherry Boy!” Bon Clay cried. “He’s straight after all! I’m so heartbroken!”

The couple broke apart, smiling and blushing. “I’ll, um… catch you later?”

“I won’t tell the other girls.”

“I won’t, either.” ;) Cheren went to lay on the prison bed. “Well, Zanifr?”

Zanifr snapped his fingers, and three Zoni appeared out of space as though they were waiting. They shocked himself and Cheren, and slumber followed suit. The operatives gathered as Ellen asked, “What are they doing?”

“Something spiritual, most likely.” Sipa said.

“Am I interrupting your slumber party?” The group gasped and whipped around. Medusa towered over the room in her true goddess form, holding baby Chernabog. Thanatos and Pandora floated beside her, along with a familiar black demon that blended with the darkness.

“LUCIFER!” Sipa and Ellen yelled in fright.

“ELLEN! SIPA!” Lucifer beamed. “Two of my loves… This must be fate!”

“This is a little bizarre.” said Medusa. “I planned to have you break into Underworld Prison and follow you in through the chaos… but I didn’t expect you to do it so willingly.”

“ZEEEEE HA HA HA!” laughed Marshall D. Teach, who stood beside Truman Kirman. “This reminds me of a very similar jailbreak from my homeworld! The resemblance is… uncanny.”

“These filthy savages are my fellow Chosen Ones of destiny?” Truman asked. “Delightful.”

“Truman?” Panini recognized him.

“Thank you, Nerehc, for helping us get this far.” Medusa said. “It’s true that the unfortunate souls in this dungeon are the Thirteen. But do you see the humanoid giants inside? Those were all giants transformed into savage beasts thanks to demon experiments. They’re so savage, they even swallowed other demons. For that reason, they were locked down here. I think I’ll take a few with me.”

“I can’t allow that!” Kid raised his guns. “I surmised your only intention was to free the Darknesses. This is overstepping your boundaries, Medusa!”

“I was a rogue goddess from the get-go, everyone knows that. But in 9 days, it won’t even matter. Thanatos, let’s Titan things up.”
Thanatos formed a cloud of Death Chi and sent streams into the kids’ ears, except for Nerehc. “Ahh! I can’t hear!” Sipa yelled.

“What’d you say?! I can’t hear!” Ellen followed.

“Ay’ve gone deaf!” Panini cried.

“Now I’m about to go deaf!” Nerehc was tired of their shouting.

“That was my Deaf Chi.” Thanatos remarked. “Should wear off in an hour. Now, who’s up for a little song?”

Medusa raised Baby Chernabog upward. The child began to sing an eerie, echoing song that rang in Nerehc’s ears. The Titans were going mad in their cells, tugging and thrashing the bars with greater vigor. The more Chernabog sung, the more powerful they became, and soon they tore the hinges off their cells.

“ELLEN, containment protocol!” Kid declared, running to action.

“Kid, let’s contain them!” the deafened witch went Hollow Mode and fought the Titans alongside him.

“AAAHH!” Having heard the song as well, Nerehc was forced into Demon King Mode. “What’s happening?!”

“Chernabog’s Demon Song empowers those who hear it with sheer madness.” Medusa explained. “Especially useful on demons.”

“But we can’t have you over-reacting right now!” Blackbeard grabbed Nerehc, using his Dark-Dark powers to subdue Nerehc’s chi. “Lead the way, Medusa. I can’t hear a thing with this Deaf Chi.”

“Where are you taking me?!” Nerehc struggled, unable to summon fire to free himself.

“Patience, Nerehc.” Medusa led them around the cells toward a cave with a green glow. “Thanatos, Pandora, free the Darknesses and get these Titans under control.”

“Nerehc! Come back here!” Sipa chased them.

Great Clock’s Cyberspace…

Cheren and Zanifr appeared in a strange, dark room. The troll was wearing purple garb that depicted his heart symbol and Cheren wore the golden suit that depicted the “C” with an ‘x’. Cheren glanced down at it. “Is this the symbol you were talking about?”

“Yes. Beyond this realm is a Quest Bed with the same symbol. Beware: this place is a song level. Keep with the rhythm, lest you fall behind.”

“Lead the way, Zanny.” Cheren smirked.

“Hmmm… Still overconfident, I see.” Zanifr returned the smirk. “I MMust admit, I’m impressed that it has lasted this long…”

“Heh… So am I.”

“Hmmm… It would be a shame if it goes to waste. Follow quickly.” Zanifr flew ahead. (Play
Act 2: Glub-a-Glub

“LOOK ALIVE, Starshine. 413 in the sky, but the dogs won’t quit? You’re here with me: Ragaj Gnik. I’ll be your host… your savior… your server player…”

As Cheren ran into the darkness, a deep, echoing voice spoke from afar. Faint green lights flashed within the space, and he could make out Ragaj Gnik’s form. Cheren ran into nothing for 30 seconds before guitar music began to play, and was required to jump small bumps in rhythm with the notes. “Listen up! The future is murderproof! God Tier is secondary! It’s time to keep calm and hide on the veil. Team adorabloodthirsty, make some noise!”

Glub-glubba-glub glubba-glub

As this verse repeated, Cheren jumped a pit, then a pit, another pit, rolled under a gap – he grabbed his sword and sliced a zombie troll, a zombie troll, zombie troll, jumped a pit and sliced one – he Hookshot up to a wall, Hookshot up to the ceiling, then he bounced some flying trolls and – Ground Pound down a hole!

“Slime, gimme slime!” Zanifr sang as Chuchus dripped from the ceiling, forcing Cheren to jump slime pools and slice them, “I don’t eat it,” Cheren spun through a giant Chu, “but I’ll take what you got,” Cheren jumped three Chus on rising platforms, “bake a pie and I’ll keep it.” Cheren sliced a zombie troll at the top.

“Twelve trolls to the wall,” Cheren sang as he briefly ran up a wall, “kill the King, watch him fall,” he kicked off and knocked down a king’s statue, “AND WE CRAWL AND WE CRAWL AND WE CRAWL!” Cheren performed three belly-slides to go under closing doors.

Zanifr followed, “Love, gimme hate,” Cheren hit a Spring Shroom, sliced a Kargarok while flying, “gimme quadrants ’cause we need it,” he briefly stabbed down in front of a window, cut through, and jumped out the other side, “but I’ll take what I want,” Cheren jumped pits and sliced other Kargaroks, “fill your pail and I’ll keep it.” Cheren stepped in a pail, briefly rolled, and kicked it up at a standing board to knock it down and make a bridge.

“In a folder in a card,” Cheren jumped large folder platforms before they closed on him, “put an ‘X’ on the code,” he sliced a XANA copy, “GIMME MORE, I WANT MORE, GIMME MORE!” Recovery Hearts descended over lava pits, signaling where to jump. “GET DOWN AND PLAY THIS WITH ME!” He Hookshoted Zanifr down to force him to run alongside.

The Glub-a-Glubs repeated as Cheren used the sail to glide up a windy shaft. “From Land of Wind and Shade.” Zanifr sang. They then raced up a hill of flowing tea, slowing their progress for a few seconds. “To Little Cubes and Tea.” At the top, they ran for a statue of Bill Cipher. “BILL IS THE ENEMY!” They cut through it together. “He – gave – us – his – affir-mation!” Cheren knocked away mini Bills along the way.

The duo came to a zipline and glided down. “Message to him from me!” They stopped at a cliff, where Cheren shot a Light Arrow at a giant Bill. “Destroy him totally!” They continued the path—a circle of Bills exploded around them. “IT JUST KEEPS HAPPENING!” They fell into a great long pit, Cheren stabbing through Bills and matching the rhythm. “Let – us – face – humi-lation!”

They collided with stable ground as Cheren ran up a stack of Fatblins’ shields. “Let me tell you about the Demon King!” Zanny sung as Cheren jumped over the top Fatblin and grabbed onto him.
“Ugh! Majora, don’t act like royalty!” Cheren kicked down at Bokoblin stacks while Zanifr flew. A large fireball was coming, so Zanny dropped him and flew over. “Don’t forget you are a bad guy,” Cheren bounced off a troll below and grabbed Zanny again, “and such a sad guy,” they repeated the action, “and turned the moon into a creepy guy!” Cheren bounced over two Bills and Ground Stab down a stack of Chus. “YOU’RE A JERK, YOU MASKHEAD!”

The glubs resumed as they raced through a burning region of falling debris. “In this cacophony…” A giant boulder threatened to crush, but they fell through a weak floor through a dark tunnel, “where we can barely see…” They followed the light at the end, and immediately zombie trolls surrounded Cheren. “WE’RE TRYING NOT TO BE,” he spin-attacked them all and ran from falling boulders, “murdered in our civilization!”

Cheren used the sail to float up a wind gust, “Message to him from me!” then sliced down a stack of Bills with a jump attack, “Destroy him totally!” Two Bills closed in, but he spin-attacked sliced them. Four large Bills dropped and failed to stab him. “IT JUST KEEPS HAPPENING! Everyone to battle stations!” All of Cheren’s friends sprouted up by his side.

The operatives disappeared as Lord English’s likeness appeared in the heavens. “All the way back on the timeline…” Bubbles depicted Dimentia and Dimentio on Zathura, of Crystal Wickens and Figure falling in a sea of clocks. “The little wigglers raise their open, shining eyes…” The bubbles displayed Cheren, Dillon, Sheila, Nebula, Aeincha, and others in their youth, their eyes brimming with aspiration. “Like tiny candles up to Heaven, and all the paraplegics and the blind girls…” Nolan York, Toph Beifong, Aisa, and Goombella’s bubbles lit aflame as their essence flowed toward English’s open hand. “Ask the purple-blood and the crazed hero from a land of wrath and angels,” Zanifr and Zach Murphy were displayed, “who screams out, ‘WHO WILL SAVE US?!’” English clenched them all in his hand. “And the veil opened up…”

The Gate of Time materialized and opened. Cheren rushed in, seeing bubbles of Fanverse, IDA, Legends, Shadow Play, and the Original Worlds as he zoomed down two ziplines. “Everybody wants to make a world! Everybody wants to make a world, but NO ONE!” Cheren stabbed through Bill twice, “NO ONE WANTED TO DIIIIEEE!” He slid down a very steep slope, quickly ducking shutting doors to Zanifr’s rhythm, “I wanna try, wanna try, wanna try, wanna try…”

“I’LL BE YOUR SAVIOR!” Cheren jumped through the Lord English illusion. As its essence scattered, Cheren stopped to catch his breath, passing his smirk to Zanifr. Soon, the song continued with Glub-a-Glubs, wherein Cheren had to jump on a high, then a low, then a high, then low platform.

“Make no apologies!” Cheren cut a Bill, jumped, and cut another. “It’s death or victory!” Cheren jumped and sail-glided over Death Chi.

“On Cherry’s authority!” Zanny remarked.

“CRASH AND BURN, it’s US against him!” Cheren used M.A.R.B.L.E.s to blow down boulder piles, then jumped to slice down a Ragaj statue.

Cheren ran up a stairwell while Zanifr flew. “I’m tired of all this running.” sang the latter.

The top of the stairs slanted and directed down. “You’re very funny.” remarked Cheren, who reached the bottom. Both chopped through a Bill statue and chorused,

“I’D RATHER BE A GOD!”

“We won our game so WHERE’S OUR GLORY?” Cheren jumped high and low platforms.

“We all died and watched our dreams EXPLODE.” Together, they smashed down on a spring that shot them all the way into space, watching the planet they were on explode completely. Cheren and Zanifr set foot on an asteroid, where a golden bed with Cheren’s symbol lay. (End song.)

“Hoo boy… that was something else.” Cheren gasped.

“This is it.” Zanifr said. “If you believe you have become strong enough, you can sleep on this bed and achieve the God Tier.”

“I kicked your God Tier butt. Of course I’m strong enough.”

“Then lie down…”

Cheren placed his weapons beside the bed and laid on it. He closed his eyes in an attempt for slumber. “…Heh. That song’s still in my head. I don’t feel tired at the moment.”

“It MMatters not. In order for the God Tier to activate… you MMust die.”

Cheren’s heart jumped. “D-DIE?! That wasn’t part of the deal! !”

“If you knew, you would hesitate to MMake your decision… but I intend to see for MMyself.” Zanifr took the Master Sword’s sheath and drew it. “AAAAH!” The sword zapped him.

Fi jumped out. “Ignorant Zanifr, only Master Cheren may hold the Master Sword. Furthermore, the Master Sword cannot stab targets against the user’s own will.”

“So, all this was a scheme to kill me?!” Cheren shouted.

“Hmmm… I cannot deny I am vengeful. However, your life or death MMatters not to MMe. There is still a chance the God Tier could be true. It seems the choice is yours…”

“…” Cheren took the sword and stared at his reflection in the metal. “Fi… what are the chances God Tier could work?”

“I’m sorry, Master, but the laws of the First Dimension are beyond my understanding. But if you so desire, you may take the ultimate test and impale the Master Sword through your own chest. Think very carefully, Master…”

Cheren replayed this month’s events in his head. His father, who possessed the power of Malladus, died by the World Leaders’ hands. He couldn’t defeat Morgan without Sunni… and his trump card, the Fierce Deity Mask, was gone. “One day, this month, you are going to die.” Miyuki told him. Perhaps her words were true. But what if the worst should happen? If Lord English returns, he will need to be more powerful… if Mr. King is victorious, then it would be for nothing. Either way, he didn’t have the power to face King Andrew. And even so, Cheren was irrelevant to the prophecy. Perhaps it would work out on its own. As long as his operatives were alive and happy, he needed nothing more… But for now, he would die for them.

Cheren lay on the bed and stabbed the Master Sword into his chest. He lay dead with the sword standing in him like a pedestal. Zanifr bowed his head in remorse. The space felt eerily quiet.

Underworld Prison
With Blackbeard still holding Nerehc, Medusa led them to an underground cave where the Sanzu River flowed. The river appeared as deep as a black hole, an infinite abyss of ghastly green. “Let Nerehc go right now!” Sipa jumped in Teach’s way and aimed her wand.

“Stay out of this.” Zorc launched dark magic from his hand and blew Sipa aside.

“This is the deepest chasm of the Sanzu River.” Medusa said. “The spirit of Ganondorf Dragmire is down there. Nerehc… you must swim to the very bottom and collect his soul from the depths.”

“But… won’t I die?”

“Thanks to the burst of power Chernabog gave you, you should be able to survive in the river for a longer period. I would say the choice is yours, but… it’s either you or the universe. Take your pick.”

Ghirahim emerged from the Devil’s Sword. “I will be with you, Master. I will ensure your survival.”

“That’s awfully loyal, Ghirahim. What’s the catch?”

“Hm hmm…” Ghirahim smirked. “I would like to bring Ganondorf back as well, Master… I would need to help you both escape to get my wish.”

“Nerehc!” Sipa recovered and took his hand. “Nerehc, you’re not really going down there, are you?!”

“I don’t think they’ve giving me much a choice. But if Ganondorf is the last Darkness… I think it has to be me. I have his power.”

“…” She stared into his eyes with strong concern, close to tearing. She knew what was to happen, and deep down, Nerehc knew. “Please don’t die.”

He gave her his cool smile. “I promise.” The two shared a kiss for a minute. The villains moaned in disgust. “Okay…” Nerehc took a breath. “I’m ready.”

And with that, Blackbeard threw Nerehc into the river of death. Ghirahim dove in after, and Medusa watched them swim into the vortex. “Even though, as a full god, I probably could have lasted longer. But who’s complaining?” she shrugged casually.

Nerehc swam as fast as he could in his Demon King Mode. He felt the Tides of Time affecting his flesh, and the souls of the deceased felt rage for the Demon King and tried to claim him. Ghirahim sliced the spirits away—dozens swarmed them, swallowed them in a cluster of agony, Nerehc burst with violet flames and scattered them.

The tunnel grew narrow as they swam ever deeper into the depths. The green glinted rashly in Nerehc’s eyes and the horrible liquid leaked into his mouth. He never held his breath for this long, if he didn’t hurry, he would drown in the tears of a million souls. But as the swim took him deeper and deeper, the number of souls were dwindling and the light was fading. Soon, it was pure quiet, and pure darkness.

Nerehc saw a stone pyramid on the riverbed. It was the Pyrameglyph. Only one soul lurked down here, drifting around the stone like a mindless fish. Its green muscular body and flowing hair… It was Ganondorf. Nerehc swam down and grabbed the soul. Assuming he already read his destiny, Nerehc began to carry him up. “MMMMM!” He gurgled a scream when the soul grabbed him in turn. Ganondorf’s vicious demonic features faced Nerehc. His mouth opened wide as the Dark Lord tried to slurp Nerehc inside.

Medusa’s group watched in wonder as the Sanzu River bubbled. “UWAAAAHH!” A powerful figure burst from the water and crashed on the shore. As the deathly water dripped from his body, Ganondorf’s soul retained a physical appearance. He gasped for breath, for parts of his skin were still molted and boney. “Heff…heff…heff…heff…” Ganon looked up at Medusa and the demons in her company.

Medusa smirked, glancing at Lucifer and Chernabog. She raised the baby demon and declared, “Eat up, Ganny!”

“HAH!” Ganondorf raised the Devil Sword and leapt at Chernabog.

“WAAAAAH!” the baby unleashed its deafening wail in pain.

“AAAAAGH!” Lucifer was sliced afterward.

Ganondorf set foot on the ground and stabbed the blade into his chest. A shining white wound opened up… The two Demon Saints dissolved, and their essence flowed into Ganondorf’s body. His flesh repaired itself, the demon thief sporting his ecstatic evil grin. “Did you read the Pyrameglyph, Ganon?” Medusa asked. “Bill said it was down there.”

“I did.” Ganondorf snickered. “It said, ‘You will rise again, King of Demons. The world belongs to darkness.’”

Ganondorf awakened as a DARKNESS. All Twenty Keys have awakened.

“So, all this time… you only wanted the Demon Saints to revive Ganondorf?” Sipa spoke with utmost horror.

“What did you expect?” inquired Medusa. “You didn’t think THEY had anything to do with the prophecy.”

“But… w-where’s Nerehc?”

Ganondorf licked his lips and raised the Devil’s Sword. Ghirahim leapt out, bowing before Ganondorf. “Ghirahim!” cried Sipa.

“Master Nerehc is no more, Sipa.” the Demon Lord said. “I belong to Ganondorf once more.”

“!!” Tears spilling, Sipa bolted out of the cave.

“Should we stop her?” Zorc asked.

“Let her run.” Medusa said. “We’ll have plenty of time to snuff them all out.”

With the others

“Zanifr!” Panini perked up when the troll awoke. The humans were standing their ground while Kid and Ellen defended them from Titans.

“Mmmm…” Zanifr stared at Cheren’s body.

“What’s wrong with Cherry Boy? ?” Bon Clay asked. “Ya need me ta kiss him?”

Miyuki put a hand on Cheren’s chest. She waited for a pulse. …She gasped. “He’s… dead.”
“What?!” Panini ran up. She listened for a heartbeat and shook her friend. “Ch-Cheren…”

“RAAAAAHH!” Under Thanatos and Pandora’s influence, the Titans finished tearing the hinges off the Darknesses’ cells. Thanatos used his Death Chi to dissolve the chains on Madara Uchiha, along with his blindfold. Pandora used her Chaos Fire to burn Sōsuke Aizen’s mummified wrapping.

“You guys!” Sipa came charging back to them. “Nerehc is dead!”

“DEAD?!” Miyuki yelled, Panini cupping her hands over her mouth in horror. They faced Cheren’s dead body. It was true after all. God Tier failed.

Death the Kid fought to hold back a tear. “We…We must escape. It’s too late to stop all this madness. Get Cheren’s body!”

Zanifr opened a Dark Portal. “This will take you outside the prison.”

“And WHY should we trust you this time?!” Panini screamed through her tears.

Miyuki peeped into the portal. “It’s safe! Let’s go!” She jumped in.

Panini and Clay grabbed Cheren’s body, ready to enter the portal. Panini spared a remorseful glance to Zanifr before going. Sipa, Kid, and Ellen hurried in as Zanifr closed it.

The Titans were sent to rampage the rest of the prison. Medusa picked up the cracked yellow diamond from its cell. Thanos was freed from his chain, staring at the stub of his missing arm. “You have a way to fix us, I would hope.” he said.

“You can wait, Thanny. Sōsuke, Madara, carry Xehanort.”

The two approached Xehanort, who was still bound in his Multi-Lock Prison. They picked up his stiff body. “You know that some of us are still dead, Medusa.” Madara mentioned. “We will be powerless in the living world.”

“You’ll have your freedom, Madara. That is, if Zeref is still in our favor.”

“HEY, BALDY!” Thanatos yelled at the Chrome Dome Emperor in his classroom cell. “Remedial English is over, get your butt up!”

“No, I can’t!” Tsurulina III yelled, clenching his temples in aggravation as he flipped through a book. “I’ve been trying to find the origins of the word ‘Is’ for 10 years! And I was already in the middle of deciphering the meaning behind caveman songs! Does anyone know what ‘Aughsucks is the best captain’ refers to?!?” Incidentally, the book had a drawing of a cyan-haired cavegirl.

“Baldy, I think you’re a little out of date.” Pandora presented a document to him. “The government outlawed remedial English, deeming them pointless. Officially, the new way to speak now is with Internet lingo, and everyone’s good at that.”

Baldy Bald took the document and read it curiously. “BRB means ‘Be right back’, lol means laugh out loud, LMFAO my BFF…”

“Congratulations, you now speak perfect English!” Medusa stamped him with a smiley face. “You pass, Tsuru!”

“HOORAAAAAY!” Baldy kicked all his English books away. “Now that I got my degree…”
LET’S TAKE OVER THE UNIVERSE!!” His eyes burned with passion.

“Majora, aren’t you coming?” Medusa asked as they began to leave. “You deserve part of the glory for getting rid of that wannabe Hero of Time.”

“You’re not still mad at me for kicking your arse, are ya?” Blackbeard remarked.

“I am coming.” Zanifr stepped by Viridi’s cell. “Well… you must be very happy I destroyed your adversary.”

“Is Cheren really… dead?” Viridi asked with a hint of remorse.

“I do not believe you are really dead.”

“Obviously not.” The goddess smirked. “Cheren may have drained my powers, but he couldn’t totally destroy me. My molecules reassembled in the Spirit World. Unfortunately, Grim was waiting to capture me.”

“Then it would be bad for you to escape. Of course… I think we both should attend his funeral.” Zanifr used his whips to slice open the bars of Viridi’s cage. “He was a very good kid, after all.” He formed a dark portal behind him.

Viridi smiled at the opportunity. “I suppose he was… but DON’T think I’m teaming up with you.” The goddess entered the portal, and Zanifr joined her to the outside.

Outside…

The world turned gray around Miyuki. To her, it always seemed Cheren was the light of their world… and now that light has gone out. The others will be devastated when they find out… but Miyuki would have to press on. They all would. For him. “…Cheren…” Miyuki meant to tell him this before. Her final words to him: “Happy birthday.” (Play “Pay Your Respects” from Batman: Arkham City.)

Seven Lights: The Side Stories: END
So yeah… if you didn’t read the Side Stories, you would’ve been spoiled in the main story. :P I agree the Side Stories weren’t as exciting as the main story, but these arcs were still necessary all the same. We got character development for Augustus and Wendy, learned who the Darknesses are, and I think this contributes to the grand adventure over all. Anyway, Underworld Prison was based off Impel Down from One Piece (where Magellan’s from). Anyway, thanks to those who read the Side Stories, next time we will finish the main story.
Chapter Summary

Team Rupert seeks out the God Fruit to save Timothy. Then, the Earth Children discover an amazing secret.

We’re nearing the exciting parts of Opening Saga. The only thing standing in our way is Pikmin’s most dangerous land. Time for one last venture with these little guys.

Chapter 76: The God Fruit

Wistful Wild

Gonshiri led Team Rupert to a land called the Climate Plains, a plain divided in four segments with respective seasons. They landed in the Autumn Zone, where Gonshiri claimed the Wistful Wild was located. Their Onions landed in an open area without monsters. Five Wing Pikmin were carrying Timothy’s swollen body as Rupert, Hikari, and Gonshiri stepped outside. “This part is the only place where the monsters don’t roam.” Gonshiri explained. “Unfortunately, we’re rather far from the Den of Dreams where the God Fruit is.”

“Can we make it in time?” Rupert asked.

“Under 23 hours, I’m certain we can. The only things I’m afraid of are the monsters. And…”

“And what?”

“Well… the truth is, while I have been mastering my plantbending powers, the God Fruit has been extinct for centuries. It will be difficult to revive the fruit, even from where it was last grown. But I will surely try.”

“Let’s focus on getting there first. It shouldn’t be hard with your plantbending.”

“Unfortunately, this land is chi-blocked except for the cave itself. We have only our Pikmin to rely on. How many have you collected?”

“A heck of a lot!” Rupert smirked. “Don’t worry, Timmy, we’re gonna save you!” (Play “Wistful Wild” from Pikmin 2!)

Stage 69: Wistful Wild

Mission: Find the God Fruit and save Timothy!

Act 1

Team Rupert assembled 20 Wing, Purple, Rock, Blue, and Red Pikmin, 15 Music and Green Pikmin, and 10 Yellow, Brown, White, and Ice Pikmin, making 175 total (including the five carrying Timmy). Their first bounty was a Red, Orange, Black, and Light Dwarf Bulborb grazing in grass, but the kids easily defeated the small monsters to have them out of the way. They walked around a wall to a field with Skutterchucks, still very easy enemies for the Rock Pikmin to crush. The only way out of this field was a spider-web wall with three Arachnodes. The kids sent Wing Pikmin up to beat the spiders, then used their Brown Pikmin to carry them up the webs. The Browns and Wings helped the other Pikmin up as well.

The three Pikmineers overlooked a large pond with a Frosty Cannon Beetle on the opposite side. “That beast must have wandered here from the Winter Zone.” Gonshiri assumed. “I’ll swim over and defeat it.” Indeed, the Cannon Beetle was freezing a path over the pond using his giant snowballs. The humans kept their Pikmin out of harm’s way while Gonshiri swam over with the Wing Pikmin. Skeeterskates shot the Wings out of the air with keen aiming, so Rupert and Hikari called them to safety. When the princess was across, they sent the Wing Pikmin over to her to dispose of the Frosty Beetle.

The kids used Ice Pikmin to freeze a path over the pond for their comrades, but the Skeeterskates furiously tried to drown them. Rupert threw Blue Pikmin on the water spiders, then dove under the pond to get them back and bring them across the ice bridge again. Once across the pond, the trio overlooked a dangerous field of Gatling Groinks, patrolling circles around a central stage. There were eight on the field, so the kids ran to different corners and ganged up on the cyborg fish with Purple and Red Pikmin. Five Reds and seven Purples were destroyed.

“I can’t help but notice the enemies are more feisty out here.” Rupert commented. “Hikari, run back and get replacements.”

“The Wistful Wild puts all Pikmin users to the test.” Gonshiri replied. “You have to be on guard against these beasts.”

The kids assembled 15 Music Pikmin on the central stage. The Music Pikmin performed a rendition of “Clickclock Wood Autumn” from Banjo-Kazooie. Giant dandelions bloomed on the surrounding cliffs and took flight in the air. Rupert and Gonshiri could grab the stem of a close dandelion and swing up a series of the floating flowers. The Pikmin mimicked their actions exactly as they set foot on a walkway on the side of a tree. Blue dragonflies called Flitters fluttered above, rather harmless and provided nectar if they are defeated. The kids KO’ed some Flitters and let their Blue and Ice Pikmin have the rations.

“This is a Swoopy airway.” Gonshiri said, indicating the closed door under the foothold. “We need to open it with Yellow Pikmin somewhere. Perhaps up there.” She noticed the foothold and stairs high above them, a good reach for their Yellow Pikmin. The Pikmin instinctively went up the stairs, and five were needed to power a generator. The tree hole door opened, and giant red-and-white birds called Swoopies glided from there to the opposite tree. When a Swoopy was coming out, the kids and their Pikmin dropped on its back, swooped across, and jumped off on a path on the next tree.

The path led around the right of the tree, and they had to use a vine to swing over a gap. However, that vine was a Piranha Plant tongue, and would slurp in any unlucky prey. Rupert smirked and threw a White Pikmin on the tongue, sacrificing the Pikmin to poison the Piranha. The army could swing that tongue without fear of consumption. Rupert looked down at the foothold under the vine, noticing the cracked part of the trunk. “Hey, that looks like a wall we can blow up.”

“We can’t worry about that now, Timothy needs us!” Gonshiri reminded.

“Well, you said we have plenty of time, we can still look for…” Rupert fell silent under Gonshiri’s sharp glare. “Sigh, you’re right. I really would like to explore this place, though.” The duo came to a long slide that would whisk them past some trees and land on a new field. On the way down,
Rupert saw a Koopa shell (Joy of Abuse) on a platform on the left, frozen in ice. Rupert called Hikari and told her, “Hikari, are you bringing the Ice Pikmin? There’s a treasure you can get.”

“You had better pray Timothy can’t hear you in his condition.” Gonshiri said reprovingly. The field they landed in consisted of Crazee Dayzees, giant happy flowers with faces and two feet. “The Crazee Dayzees will put our Pikmin to sleep. Only the Music Pikmin are immune.” Taking Gonshiri’s hint, the duo scattered their Pikmin and took only the Magentas. They defeated the Skitter Leafs roaming the ground as the Dayzees sang beautiful melodies. Rupert and Shiri felt a tad drowsy from the singing, so they fought a few Dayzees, who would easily shake the Pikmin off and run away.

“Don’t bother, they’re hard to defeat.” Gonshiri mentioned. “I see a stage over there. Perhaps it will be of use.” They guided their 15 Music Pikmin up a small path to a platform with a stage. The Pikmin sang the sad music from Paper Mario: TTYD, and the emotional tune calmed the Dayzees’ spirits into slumber. Near the entrance to the field, there was a flower with a cluster of colorful petals. They used the White Pikmin to quickly carry the petals around the Dayzee field and stack them in a pile for the lot to climb up to a high pathway. “The Dayzees should stay asleep if we don’t disturb them.”

“Princess, look at that one!” Rupert pointed at a golden Dayzee within the crowd. “It’s gold!”

“That’s an Amazy Dayzee. It produces 200 Pikmin and is worth 10,000 points. But it’s very spry and powerful, so don’t try to catch it.”

“All right. Who’s that fairy drawing a picture of it?”

“Probably a sightseer.”

Hikari eventually regrouped with her team as they climbed the petal pile to the new path. A Fire Piranha rose up to block the way, so the kids had their Red Pikmin fight it. When the plant threatened to gnash down, they quickly called the Pikmin back, and repeated the pattern until the plant was down. They had the Red Pikmin carry the head back to repopulate. The path led them to an even more vast field with an orange Jasper gem in the center.

“Don’t touch that stone!” Gonshiri cautioned. “It may look ordinary, but it’s actually a powerful monster. I know you want to try and battle it, but let’s save our Pikmin for the job at hand.”

“Where do we go from here?” Rupert asked.

“The cave we need to go is just across.” Gonshiri led the two around the gem and toward a hole protected by a crystal. They destroyed the crystal with Rock Pikmin. “This is the Den of Dreams. It’s not actually the hardest cave in Wistful Wild; the Pit of 100 Trials has that luxury. Thousands of years ago, this cavern was a sacred temple housing the God Fruit as its most sacred relic. But because of the story of the Grand Inferius… my ancestors thought it best to let the fruit die off.”

“But couldn’t a fruit like this save the world from disease?”

“It could… I believe the Minish simply feared its power. ….Sigh, let’s get it over with. Follow me.” Gonshiri dove in first. Rupert and Hikari exchanged nods and jumped after. Their army of Pikmin followed, carrying Timothy still. Little did they know, a one-eyed organism was watching… (Play “Bulblax Kingdom” from Pikmin 2!)

Act 2: Den of Dreams

With their 175 replenished Pikmin, Team Rupert marched into the cave. Not long after entering, they came to a pit where a Putrid and Frost Piranha emerged from. The towering plants would spit their elements down to stun the Pikmin, so the kids kept their Ice and Poison types at the ready. When the Piranhas’ heads would gnash down, they threw their Pikmin on to lay the beatdown. The plants’ heads snapped off, so while those Pikmin took the prey to the Onions (situated above the hole), the kids had Wing Pikmin fly over the pit and make a bridge from the tile pile.

The army crossed the bridge and entered a corridor with Piranha Buds, who would always face nearby Pikmin and be ready to chomp in their mouths. The kids threw White Pikmin overhead, redirecting the plants’ vision while their Purple Pikmin could beat them from behind. The cave turned left and would lead to a walkway on the side of a chasm. A sticky mud floor prevented other Pikmin from crossing, so the Brown Pikmin were up to the task.

Further down the tunnel was a breakable wall that was blocking their path. There was an alternate tunnel over the pit, and below was a water geyser aimed at the tunnel. The kids bravely jumped in the geyser and blew up to the new path with their Pikmin. The tunnel led them to a wider cave where they had to remain on the side of a chasm. A geyser was available to blow them back out. The cave directed down and into water, so from here, the kids had to submerge with their Blue and Ghost Pikmin.

There were snoozing Rip Van Fish, which Gonshiri advised against waking (shaking her head ‘no’ since they were underwater). The three replenished their air by swimming through large bubbles that grew from the ground. There was a foothold accessible via a slope that was blocked by a sand gate, though it didn’t matter at the moment. There was a cluster of rocks in a corner which the Blue and Ghost Pikmin could destroy, uncovering a hole that drained all the water out. The Rip Van Fish were helplessly flopping around, easy prey for the Pikmin if they wanted.

They called the other Pikmin down to break the sand gate, allowing them to get to the higher foothold. This ground was empty except for some dirt patches, but the White Pikmin detected treasure underneath a patch. They dug it up and discovered a golden acorn (Rodent Candy). “Perhaps we can use it for something.” Gonshiri said. The way out of this room was blocked by an ice wall, so the Ice Pikmin held the honors of breaking it. A slope led up to a new room, and they would have to follow a long tunnel on the left. There was a giant hole in the side of this wide tunnel, and Rupert felt some familiarity with this.

He sent the White Pikmin to carry the gold acorn across the tunnel. A squirrel peeped out of the hole and gave chase, but it failed to match the White Pikmin’s speed. On the other side of the tunnel, they would cross a tile bridge to a platform, and the bridge would collapse under the squirrel’s weight and make it fall into the chasm. The Pikmineers followed and found themselves in a deep, vast cave. “The God Fruit is not far from here. Be careful going down.” the princess cautioned.

Fire slugs (or Pyroclasmic Slooches) were occupying an open platform ahead, but they were no match to the Red Pikmin. There were platforms over the chasm with small pools and Skeeterskates sniping them with water bombs. They were too far to throw Pikmin to, too quick for the Wing...
Pikmin, and even more annoying were the glowing mushrooms that kept away Ghost Pikmin. They were forced to avoid the nuisances and progress, although five Purple Pikmin fell over the edge when running after getting soaked.

The next path had small gaps that were sprouting water jets, and would send them to the start of the section. The Ice Pikmin froze all the jets they could, but this in turn instigated a large jet on a distant platform. That platform was connected to the one the White Pikmin holding the acorn were still on, so they used it to fling back to the path. Rupert gave them the green light to carry the gold acorn back to base. The kids proceeded past the frozen geysers and came to a field of giant Clefts.

Only the Rock Pikmin were a match for the stone monsters. The Pikmineers threw the Rocks at the Clefts’ feet until they would shatter, leaving only the Clefts’ helpless stone bodies. There was a low path under the edge, leading to the next foothold, but it was too high above that path. Rupert thought the Clefts could be thrown onto the path and serve as a bridge, but before doing so, he noticed a cracked wall at the end of that path.

“You are not going all the way back for a Bomb Rock just to blow up that wall!” Gonshiri scolded.

“Fine, Timmy comes first!” Denied from treasure once again, Rupert commanded the Pikmin to throw down the Clefts and make a bridge. The road ahead was plagued with Bulborbs large and small, from white, red, orange, to shiny. They used the Purple and Red Pikmin to gang up on the Bulborbs, while the Yellows took care of the Shiny Bulborb.

The following route was more narrow and had parallel rows of Anode Beetles standing on small platforms. In a pattern, each set of beetles connected by electric beams, threatening to destroy the Pikmin should they falter. Only the Yellow Pikmin could hurt them, but attempting to do so would make the Yellows fall to their death. The kids noticed a wall of fire geysers across the bridge, so they focused on bringing five Reds past the Anode Beetles so they could destroy the geysers. They carefully worked on guiding the other Pikmin across, but 4 Blues and 5 Browns were wasted (the Browns tripped and got stuck on the ground).

Following the fire gate was an electric gate, testing their patience not to waste Yellow Pikmin, so thankfully they had plenty to tear the gate down. The cavern ahead was filled with roaming Dweevils of all colors, but the Pikmineers bypassed them as the cave grew dark and sloped down. The five White Pikmin returned from delivering the gold acorn, so with all their remaining Pikmin, they entered the center of the cave. (End song.)

On their left in the darkness of the massive cavern was a fleet of Onions, withered as though they haven’t been touched for centuries. It included colors of Pikmin Rupert had not seen, like orange, silver, and even the Ghosts’ green. It was without doubt Malarko’s One Thousand Pikmin. In the center of the cave was a great tree, long dead. “That tree once grew the God Fruit… I can’t believe it is still standing.”

“So, can you bring it to life?” Rupert asked.

Gonshiri approached the tree slowly. The princess placed a hand on the trunk and closed her eyes. There was a faint energy radiating from it. “I…I hear them.”

“Hear what?”

“The voices of the plants… They are all over this place…”

In Gonshiri’s vision, the cavern was full of blossoming flowers, warming the cave with their mystical glow. Gonshiri turned to a couple of shrinking violets. “Hello, Princess. We’ve been “waiting for you.”

“You’ve been waiting?”

“We thought the princess would return.” a sunflower said. “A long time ago, she destroyed this place because she feared the God Fruit. She said she had a nightmare where the God Fruit brought destruction to all. But she promised she would return. I’m glad you’re back, Princess… Will you bring us back to life?”

“I… I’m not sure how to. You all have been dead for centuries. It can’t be that easy.”

“Take us with you, Princess. Back to the living world. Take our leaves and invite us home.”

“Invite you… home…” Gonshiri lightly took the shrinking violets’ hands. A light energy flowed from her hand and covered the flowers. Rupert and Hikari gazed in awe as two violets sprouted from the ground.

“Who is she talking to?” Rupert asked.

“Flower ghosties, silly!” Hikari beamed.

Gonshiri touched the sunflower and revived it. She touched a gray rose and revived it. Then, the princess looked up at the flourishing tree… the bulbous, pinkish-red God Fruit was shiny and succulent. Gonshiri smiled and climbed the tree to touch the fruit. It was humongous, so it required a longer touch and more energy. The fruit that cured all illnesses was restored.

“Sigh…” Gonshiri felt physically drained. “Quickly… Feed Timothy a piece.”

They cut the giant fruit down and brought it to Timmy. They only needed to pull off a relatively tiny portion to place into his mouth. His red skin returned to peach color and his swelling shrunk down. “Huff… huff…” Rupert helped him to his feet. He smiled at his friend, happy to have saved him. … Timmy punched Rupert in the jaw. “I want 100 bucks now!”

“Ow! Fine…”

“Now to destroy this fruit.” Gonshiri stated. “I need to restore my chi in order to kill it. Perhaps a quick bite will suffice.”

“Not gonna happen, Princess.” The four whipped around: Sheldon J. Plankton was riding a giant spider robot with four legs.

“Who the heck are you?!” Rupert exclaimed.

“The name’s Plankton, you pint-size pests. Lesser Lord Gnik knew you would be after the God Fruit and sent me to take it. Check this baby out! I tamed one of the woodland creatures and gave him a battle suit. Suits him fine, right, heh heh. Titan Dweevil, FIRE!” The giant spider blasted a flamethrower at the kids. Ten mini Pikbots raced in and grabbed the fruit, then raced out of the cave.

“COME BACK WITH IT!” Gonshiri tried to chase, but the Titan Dweevil smashed its center down and crushed her.

“PRINCESS!” the humans cried.

“You kids aren’t going anywhere.” Plankton stated. “Lesser Lord Gnik ordered me to destroy you, too. Get ready to be the first prey of my Titan Dweevil! ATTACK!” (Play Titan Dweevil’s theme from Pikmin 2!)

Boss fight: Titan Dweevil

The Titan Dweevil used a 5-ton weight on the bottom of its center to create shockwaves and knock the Pikmin army down. Team Rupert tried to stay on their feet and hurriedly blow whistles to call them back. “Ghost Pikmin, Wing Pikmin, attack him!” Rupert commanded. Five of each Pikmin flew up to Plankton, but searchlights activated on the Dweevil to weaken the Ghosts, followed by fly-swatters to smash the Wings, killing those Pikmin. “NO!”

“Your cheesy little Leafmen can’t touch me!” Plankton laughed. “The Titan Dweevil may not be a match for the big humans, but to you, it’s the most powerful beast in my arsenal! You can almost SMELL the power!” Plankton commanded the beast to use a bug spray and spread a cloud of gas along the ground. Team Rupert held their breaths and ran onto a hill above the gas. Their Pikmin were running frantically in pain, so the kids whistled for their safety, but 4 Blues, 5 Purples, and 3 Yellows were killed.

“Timothy, Hikari, take the Rocks and Purples and go behind it.” Rupert instructed. “I’ll use the Brown Pikmin to try and stick its feet to the ground.” The kids nodded and ran separate directions around the Dweevil. Plankton smirked and used shockwaves in attempt to stun them, but the quakes didn’t affect the Purple Pikmin, and the rocks that fell from the ceiling couldn’t crush the Rock Pikmin. Rupert charged from the front using Brown Pikmin, but Plankton decided to wash the creatures away by shooting giant water droplets around the room using a hose.

Rupert was crushed by a droplet, quickly catching his breath and whistling for his Pikmin’s recovery. Some of the Pikmin waiting safely in the back were drenched, but while Rupert was whistling for them, the Dweevil made shockwaves and knocked him down. Two Yellows and 3 Reds drowned in the droplets. “Come on!” Timothy whispered to Hikari. The two went under the creature with Purple Pikmin and threw it onto the 5-ton weight.

“What the-?!” Plankton saw what they were doing and used more Ground Pounds to shake them off.

“Fooled ya!” Rupert had thrown a Brown Pikmin under the weight, and when it was squished, the weight was glued to the ground. The Purple Pikmin resumed beating it, and despite Plankton’s attempts to shake it free, the Pikmin successfully detached the weight from the body. “All your Dweevil is is a big treasure hoard!” Rupert snapped at Plankton.

“The only treasures here will be your heads mounted on my wall!” Plankton smacked the fly-swatters around the ground to scare the operatives into retreating.

“I think we should hit those searchlights next.” Rupert suggested. “We can throw our Yellow Pikmin up there.”

“Don’t leave ME out of the conversation!” Plankton launched electrical spheres from a lightbulb toward the “safe” Pikmin. The spheres connected via electric beams and immediately killed all the Pikmin between.

“NO!!” the kids cried. Almost all their remaining Pikmin were extinguished.

“BLAAAAH HA HA HA!” Plankton cackled. “You humans have yet to understand the laws of predator and prey. If the prey doesn’t have the brains to survive, like Yours Truly, THEY’RE FINISHED!”

“We’re not done, yet!” Rupert threw Brown Pikmin on the Dweevil’s feet and glued them to the ground. Plankton growled and used a built-in ice machine to drop an ice bomb, freezing the surrounding Pikmin. The Dweevil stepped free of the Brown Pikmin and used the flamethrower to melt their frozen bodies. “Guys, hurry up!” Rupert called the Purples and Rocks into unfreezing, but 3 of each were melted in the flames.

“Hehehehehehe…” Plankton was almost giggling. “You’re all out of Pikmin, kids. What are you going to do, now?”

“Nnn…” Rupert grit his teeth and looked at Malarko’s Onion fleet. “It’s worth a shot.” Rupert ran for the red Onion.

“Rupert, I thought you could only use your friends’ or family’s Pikmin!” Timothy yelled.

“Well, do YOU have any spare Pikmin?!”

“No, but…but you won’t be able to take Malarko’s!”

“One way to find out.” Rupert blew his whistle at the Onion. 20 Red Pikmin came out of it. “IT WORKED!!”

“NO WAY!” Timmy exclaimed.

“Let me try the others!” Rupert summoned Pikmin from each of the Onions. Their arsenal was replenished, so without hesitating, they sent Wing Pikmin up at Plankton.

“Your flies are STILL no match for me!” Plankton furiously swatted the Wings away.

“You need to chill out!” Rupert retorted as they threw Ice Pikmin at the hose. Their frost proved superior against the water device, freezing the nozzle and snapping it off Titan Dweevil’s body.

“Not before I FIRE you!” Plankton blasted the flamethrower to destroy the Ice Pikmin.

“Barbeque is yucky!” Hikari countered by throwing Red Pikmin at the exposed flamethrower. Plankton shook them off and used the bug spray, so Hikari called the Reds away while Rupert ran in with the White Pikmin. Holding his breath, he tossed the Whites onto the bug spray, but didn’t deal enough damage until they were shaken off. Plankton used the lightbulb again and surrounded all the Pikmin with electric spheres. The trio scrambled to call them away from the link points, but 7 Purples, 6 Ice, and 3 Blues were obliterated.

“Hikari, let’s start throwing Yellows on that bulb!” Rupert declared. “Timmy, go get more Pikmin!”

“You shouldn’t say your plans out loud, fool!” Plankton remarked. “I’ll use my Ice Bomb now!” He used the bug spray to poison the Pikmin. “Just joking!”

“Yeah, so were we!” Rupert sent White Pikmin on the bug spray and succeeded in detaching it. “Hikari, now!” He called the Yellows back and resumed throwing them on the lightbulb. The Titan Dweevil used a glue stick to shoot glue around the ground, binding the kids and Pikmin in place. While the Brown Pikmin began trying to free them, Plankton used the lightbulb again. Timmy returned and tossed Rocks on the exposed bulb, zapping them slightly, but breaking the bulb off the spider in the process.
An angered Plankton smacked the twin fly-swatters at the ground to smoosh some Pikmin, but he had the misfortune of crushing Brown ones. The swatters were stuck, so the kids threw Purple Pikmin to weigh them down further, resulting in the swatters being snapped off the hinges. Plankton shot glue around the field and trapped several Pikmin, but Hikari avoided getting stuck and threw Brown Pikmin on the stick. Plankton was unable to shake them off quickly, and during his distraction, Timothy recovered and tossed Purple Pikmin on with them. They added extra damage in snapping the glue off the Dweevil.

“He’s not looking too powerful now!” Rupert remarked. “We’ll give you a chance to run away, Plankton!”

“Just BURN ALREADY!!” Plankton unleashed gas over the Pikmin and followed this with the flamethrower to create an explosion, killing the creatures instantly. Thankfully, Timmy was still in position to throw Purple Pikmin on the bug spray, doing enough damage until it snapped off.

“You little-!” Plankton launched the Ice Bomb and froze Timmy and the Purple Pikmin, but Hikari seized the chance to throw Reds on the ice and double the damage with their fiery bodies. When Plankton was trying to shake them off, Rupert ran up and threw Yellow Pikmin on the Dweevil’s searchlights. “NO FAIR!” Plankton desperately shook the Pikmin off the lights, but his ice-maker was detached.

Plankton reused the flamethrower, so the kids assembled the Reds and chucked them onto the device, followed by Hikari throwing Yellow Pikmin on the searchlights. Both of the parts were destroyed, leaving the Dweevil with only one means of defense. “Say good-bye to your eardrums, FOOLS!” Plankton put muffs over his antennas as the Dweevil played earth-quaking music from a stereo. Boulders fell from the ceiling and crushed numerous Pikmin.

“QUICK, THE MUSICS!!” Rupert and co. ran for the magenta Onion and called 20 Music Pikmin, who were not phased by the deafening sounds. Withstanding the horrid pain in their ears and dodging the boulders, Team Rupert threw Music Pikmin on the stereo. They were shaken off and had to be re-thrown several times, but eventually the music blaster was destroyed. The final pieces of Titan Dweevil’s mechanical armor came off, exposing the hideous four-legs for what it was: a light reddish-pink spider with defenseless skin.

“I knew I should’ve installed the rockets.” Plankton sighed.

“Pikmin:” Rupert pointed forth and blew the whistle. “SWAAAAAARRRRRRMMM!”

“GAAAAH!” Plankton and the Titan Dweevil were completely overpowered by the Pikmin Army. As the Dweevil’s body was ripped to shreds, the Ghost Pikmin took Plankton for their banquet. “W-Wait! I’ll tell you the secret formula! Free Krabby Patties for a year! They’re much tastier than I am! KAREN, TURN OFF THE STOVE AT THREE O’-” He was brought to the green Onion and sucked into the pod. Like any other captured prey, a Pikmin seed squirted out and planted in the ground. The top of this Pikmin’s head peeped out: it had two leaf antennas and a single eye. “Curses…”

“I think we just discovered a new species!” Rupert joked.

“Yah… You think the Pikmin would do this to us if we died?” Timothy asked.

“Hah, no, of course not! …Eh.” Rupert may have trouble sleeping tonight. (End song.)

“Ow…” Gonshiri recovered, holding her head.
“Are you alright, Princess?” Rupert asked.

“Yes… where did that creature go?”

“We beat it!” Hikari jumped. “Rupy borrowed Pikmin from Malarky’s Onions!”

“Malarky’s…?” Gonshiri faced the Onion fleet. “You took Pikmin from Malarko’s fleet?! How?”

“I don’t know.” Rupert shrugged. “I just did.”

“You can only use Pikmin that were owned by family or friends…” Gonshiri stroked her chin. “Did you… borrow Pikmin from any Minish?”

“Sappo and Gibli lent us their Pikmin before they were kidnapped by Shelly.”

“Lenari often lets those two borrow his Pikmin… If they lent them to you… perhaps you could have…”

“How does that make sense?” Timothy asked.

“Lenari is Malarko’s descendant.”

“Descendant?!?” Rupert exclaimed. “You mean Lenari could’ve used these Pikmin all along?!?”

“Of course… but for most Pikmineers, taking someone else’s Pikmin is cheap and lazy. They prefer to assemble their own army. Still, now that you have access to the One Thousand Pikmin, there’s nothing stopping you from taking them.”

Rupert stared at the Onion fleet. Green Onions for the Ghost Pikmin, Orange Onions, Silver Onions… brand new Pikmin would be all his. “You’re right… it wouldn’t be fun. I’d rather find those Pikmin myself.” He blew the whistle and sent Malarko’s Pikmin back to their Onions.

“Too bad we’re not gonna have time until the Apocalypse destroys us.” Timmy reminded.

Gonshiri gasped. “The God Fruit! Where is it?!”

The Pikbots made it out of the cave and were hurrying to the Crab Craft with the God Fruit. A black boot stomped in their path, and the fruit was swiped by Lucas Stonebuddy. “I’ll take this off your hands, if you don’t mind.” The World Leader leapt to the sky as his stone body soared away, under control of his true body’s earthbending.

Tree of Beginning

Regigigas led the earthbenders deep into the tree’s underbelly; a flight of stairs that seemed to take hours to venture down. “Are we walking to the core or somethin’?” Tom Taylor asked in exhaust. “Why don’t you just tell us what’s down here.”

“Down here is the most important secret in the entire world.” Queen Lánshelly stated. “Even Gonshiri doesn’t know.”

“WHEEEE!” Granite cheered as she flew in her spirit form. “We don’t have to walk the stairs because we’re ghostiiieees.”

“Hey Sovite, now YOUR descendant is complaining.” Hornfels snickered.

“Grrrr. Dammit, Tom, hurry up!” Sovite stated.
“Anthony, I’m beating you!” Michelle cheered as she jumped backwards down two stairs each. “I’m beating you! I’m beating you!”

“Like heck you are!” Anthony began to race down—“OW, OW, AAAH!” He quickly tripped and bounced all the way down to the bottom, which was 10 stairs away.

Michelle bounced off his back and continued on. “Lucky, nothing was injured.” Shelly remarked, stepping on his back. Tom did the same, and Ikuyim was the one to help him up.

They were brought to a great stone door with a diamond symbol. There were five pedestals planted before it. Each of them had footprints in front and diamond-shaped holes, both of which shared the same colors: one was green, one orange, one gray, one red, and another was purple. “You added another one?” Michelle asked.

“Yeah, we added one for Ikuyim’s ancestor!” Granite responded. “We met her back when we were alive. She was a great friend!”

“Positive and Negative friendships were a rarity in the olden days.” Regigigas said. “Sadly, Latysyrc’s spirit was not collected by the Reapers, so she could not be here. Descendants, channel your chi into the pedestals.”

Anthony took his place at the green one, Shelly the orange, Tom the red, Emily the gray, and Ikuyim the purple. Mimicking their spirit ancestors, they planted their feet firmly on the prints and crossed hands over the diamond holes. “…Michelle, why did you ask about the other one?”

“You’ll see, Anthony.” She winked.

The five descendants channeled their Earth Chi and sent power into the door. The diamond glowed, and Michelle used her bending to open it. There were endless, colorful crystals in this room, and at the base of the central pillar was a massive pink crystal with an illusion of a galaxy inside. “This is the Heart of the World.” Uxie observed. “The source of this planet’s life.”

“Is this the big secret?” Shelly asked.

“No.” Lánshelly answered. “Originally, the Earth Children were the human Guardians of the Heart… but there is a greater secret.”

The children were led up another stairwell to the top of the pillar. There was a baby-size rock creature inside, with a pink diamond on its chest and a pink diamond crown. “This energy…” Uxie approached the diamond. “The energy I’ve been feeling has been this… Th-This is a-!”

“DON’T SPOIL IT!” Michelle shouted.

“Children, do as you just did. Send your chi into the diamond and awaken this creature.” Regigigas instructed.

“But what is it?” Ikuyim asked.

“You will see.”

The five kids gathered around and touched the diamond. Their ancestors watched with the greatest anticipation. For 4,000 years, they waited for this moment. The diamond’s light shone blindingly as five different chiis molded into one core. Michelle and Uxie were the only ones unaffected by the light, and the Firstborn continued to stare at the child with suspicion.
The diamond cracked and shattered as the creature hit the ground. Michelle approached, smiling as she picked it up in her arms. Michelle cradled it like a baby… She closed her eyes peacefully. “I’m gonna miss this body.”

They all gaped when Michelle turned into energy. She flowed into the creature’s body as a white dress appeared over it. Its diamonds glowed and it floated upright. She opened her red eyes with purple pupils to view everyone.

“Hello, everyone!” The spirit smiled. “I’m Diancie. The Firstborn of Earth.”

“Mu…Michelle?…” Anthony was beyond confused.

“I’m sorry, Anthony.” Diancie’s voice was much sweeter and softer than Michelle’s. “But… there never was a Michelle. Your mother planned to give birth to a baby girl… but she was bound to die in childbirth. I have the power to sense when any creature is about to die. That’s why… I sent my spiritual presence to inhabit the body Michelle would have had and allowed it to grow. When I came to the Negaverse, I realized your Negative created an Imaginary sister named Ellehcim. They didn’t say it out loud, but I could feel her psychic energy. It worked in my favor. I’ve been walking in the places of mortals for 4,000 years.”

“But what are you?” Uxie asked harshly. “There was only supposed to be Eight Firstborn created by Arceus. Did Regigigas give birth to you like Kyogre gave birth to Manaphy?”

“I can only remember part of my origin… I was born as the child between Rose Quartz of the Gem race and Titan of the Ores race. My egg was given by Rose to Regigigas after crossing to this world. I had to be kept secret because the knowledge of another Firstborn in the universe would create chaos. I felt lonely… so I put myself in mortal bodies to try to learn who I was. And I met a friend who helped me understand…” She faced Anthony with a smile.

“Who…?”

Diancie floated level with him. The ancestors gathered, looking dumbfounded. Granite, however, was grinning, but their expressions filled Anthony with more confusion. “See, I told you!” Granite said.

“No way… Stone?” Sovite asked.

“So, that’s where you’ve been…” Quartzite observed.

“Stone…” Hornfels smiled.

Anthony gasped, realizing his skin had turned gray. His fellow earthbenders were royally flabbergasted. “Anthony Stone McKenzie.” Diancie said. “My Stonebuddy!”

“Stone was another one of our friends.” Granite explained. “He was an alien called an Ore, but he was killed.”

“I used my power to allow Stone to be reincarnated in the same fashion as myself.” Diancie followed. “His most recent incarnation was the World Leader. That man’s true name was Lucas Nickel, but his memories were slowly awakening. …That was before… Reggie Johnson used the Octogan to sever his memories. He still possessed Stone’s inherited chi, but the part that knew his true identity was lost in the Spirit World. I see that it found its way to you, Anthony. That’s why we were both able to counter Lucas’s stonebending before. You and I are connected as descendants
“Time out, TIME OUT!” Anthony screeched, his gray skin becoming normal. “I’m still wrapping my head around the fact my BABY SISTER was actually a... baby god diamond rock monster... THING. Like, ALL this time, you were like this?! You’re the same little sister that was better than me at everything, I train for hours because I wanted ta kick your butt one day, I tried SO HARD to be better than you... and all this time, it was POINTLESS because my sister was actually a GOD!!”

“Anthony, I’m sorry. I was only playing around, it’s part of being human.”

“YOU’RE NOT HUMAN!!”

“I KNOW!” Diancie cried. “I know I gloated a lot, but it was never easy being me! Not understanding why I had to be stuck in a diamond, why I was different from other Firstborn... I would rather be born a mortal and be like everybody else. But I don’t even have a pair of feet.” She wiggled her stone bottom. “My little toesies are gone. You don’t remember it, but Stone felt the same way. He felt like he didn’t belong here. That’s why I hoped we could reunite and... we could grow together.”

Diancie channeled energy between her hands. A Spirit Ball was created, a brown rock bottom and pink diamond top like Diancie’s body. She gave it to Anthony. “I always admired how the Earth Children learned from each other and grew together. Now that I get to see it again... I would like to be part of it. Will you let me train with you, Anthony? Will you help me learn who I am?”

“...” Anthony looked away. “This isn’t what I wanted at all. Everything is changing too fast. Everything’s gonna be different at the end of this month... won’t it?”

“I’m afraid it will be.” Diancie said. “But we can face it together, Anthony. Just remember... no matter what happens, I’m still your baby sister.” She pinched his cheek. “So you’ll just have to train even harder to beat me, Anty-Wanty!”

“...” Anthony took the Spirit Ball and smirked. “At least it’ll feel nice to carry you in a ball.” He threw the Pokéball and captured Diancie. The Spirit Ball burst into a glow.

Anthony McKenzie captured a FIRSTBORN! I wanna say there’s one left, but who knows anymore.

The earthbenders returned to the operatives waiting outside the tree. Sector W, Sarah, and Gary were awestruck after hearing the story. “So, yeah. This is Michelle.” Anthony showed them. “She was a Firstborn. All along.”

“I’m finally outside for the first time!” Diancie twirled in the air. “The sun feels so warm!”

“. . . . . That’s it. I give up.” Harvey stated. “First there was the music girl, then that Moon Firstborn comes along... I don’t get it, I JUST don’t get it: HOW MANY FIRSTBORN ARE THERE?!”

“Who knows?” Diancie shrugged. “I guess that’s another mystery we’ll have to find out.”

“Sally, you missed it! My sister was a-”

“Anthony, you’re back! Quick, we have to get up to Moonbase!” The girl was crying.
“Why, Sally?!” Aranea asked.

“It’s Cheren! H-He’s…”

Gnik’s Hideout

“So, Plankton has failed to retrieve the God Fruit.” Ragaj Gnik observed. “King Andrew can commence the Grand Inferius. ...Just as you had foreseen... Lord English.”

Yes, that was Michelle’s true identity from the beginning. It was foreshadowed a few times, like when she dressed as a Minish for Halloween or how she could effortlessly gembend... and it’s also a setup for the Newborn Era Project. That was Rupert’s final stage in the story, but don’t worry, we will have more Pikmin action in the future. Next time, the final battle will begin. The Grand Inferius is here...
Grand Inferius

Chapter Summary

The World Leaders enact the Grand Inferius. The Kids Next Door take the fight to them!

The final battle begins now. This chapter takes place after Chapter B-35 of the Side Stories, so if you didn’t read that, prepare to have it ruined. :P

Chapter 77: Grand Inferius

KND Moonbase

Cheren Uno was placed on a bed in the infirmary. Many of his loyal operatives, including Anthony, Aurora, Chris, MaKayla, and newcomer Wendy stared at his body in remorse. Diancie examined him closely, but was sad to report the news. “I can’t determine why, but… his vital signs have completely stopped. There aren’t any fatal wounds or traces of poison…”

“Was he hit with the Killing Curse?” Wendy asked in horror.

“We were with Cheren the whole time.” Miyuki replied. “The Zoni shocked him and Zanifir to sleep. But only Zanifir woke up…”

“It was all a trick to KILL HIM!” Panini stomped the floor with a flaming boot, crying tears. “He wanted ta kill Cheren the WHOLE TIME! And he put that Vriska person up to it!”

“I don’t think Zanifir meant to do it on purpose.”

“Why do ya say THAT?!” Pan stomped toward Miyuki. “Still have feelings for him?!?”

“…I…” Miyuki bowed her head shamefully.

“This isn’t the time.” MaKayla came between them. “Kid… if Cheren is dead, wouldn’t his spirit have appeared in the Underworld?”

“It was supposed to.” Kid replied, a hint of regret on his normally scowling features. “But I can’t feel his spiritual presence at all. It’s as though his soul disappeared the moment he died.”

“W-What are we supposed to do?” Wendy whimpered, leaking tears. “Elect a… new leader?”

“The next runner-up is Panini.” Francis sighed. “You were his second-in-command.”

“Well, Panini?” Maddy faced her.

Panini lay one hand on Cheren’s bed and clasped her racing heart with the other. I didn’t wanna be the one to do this… I acted like his rival, but Cheren’s always been better than me. I was ambushed by Majora like a ’90’s girl in the alley… Big Mum ate me like a sausage, and I couldn’t defend myself. I thought Cheren was gonna be the one to… lead us to the New World. I didn’t wanna have to do it… I CAN’T do it. I haven’t done anything all month. I… I’m a terrible vice-leader…
Harvey Harper could feel the inner turmoil inside her heart. He bowed his head and spoke. “I think we put too much faith in Cheren.”

“What do you mean, Harvey?” Sally asked.

“We can’t expect everything to go the way we want them to.” Harvey thought of Madotsuki as he spoke. “Bad things are going to happen. All we can do is make the best of a bad situation. We have to finish what Cheren started… and that’s this quest.”

“It’s okay, Panini.” Aurora placed a hand on her shoulder. “You don’t have to do anything. We’ll take it from here.”

Some of the operatives returned to the bridge to think over their possible plans. Shade noticed Maddy staring at the Earth from the glass wall. “I don’t need Haki to know what you’re thinking.” Shade said.

“I’m the only one that has a chance at beating King Andrew.” Maddy stated. “I have Conqueror’s Haki. I can take the Octogan from him.”

“I admit you mastered Haki faster than anyone I know… but King Andrew had years of training. He must have had plenty of time to adapt with the Octogan. It’ll be too much for you.”

“I still have a promise to keep to you, don’t I?” Maddy faced her.

“Maddy, that doesn’t matter to me, anymore. You were never the Chosen One. My clan was fooled and WE were fooled. That boy is right… not everything goes the way we expect them to.”

“That’s what it means to have an adventure.” Sheila Frantic marched forward, her Keyblade arched over her shoulder. “You don’t know what you’re gonna see… you just see it and keep goin’! We have to show the World Leaders they don’t own our world. Let’s go to Mariejoe and beat the CRUD out of them!”

“I admire your passion, Sheila.” Dillon said. “But except for Daphne, we don’t know what they’re capable of.”

“Yes we do!” Wendy spoke up. “Before coming here, my father held a meeting with all your parents. They’re planning to fight the World Leaders with you. They think you can win because… you have the Firstborn.”

“We Firstborn can enhance our Guardians’ abilities.” Midna confirmed. “But we only do so to their full potential when combating a god, not mortals. Even against very strong mortals, it’s against our virtues to make our masters too powerful.”

“But we CAN help!” Meloetta grinned. “It all comes down to how good our masters are at what they do.”

“And I don’t know about you guys, but I FOUGHT one of the World Leaders!” Anthony proclaimed. “I’m ready for him!”

“I fought one as well,” Wendy mentioned. “Henry Churchill. If it’s okay with you guys, I would like to face him first.”

“Why?” Nagisa asked.

Wendy looked at the boy curiously. Behind him was a barefoot girl with magenta hair. Her hair is blue like mine... and that girl looks like Chelia. “Because he captured one of my friends.”

“Good enough of a reason for me.” Goombella ‘shrugged.’

“But what can the other World Leaders do?” Chris asked. “We know Daphne’s a shadowbender and Stonebuddy’s an earthbender…”

“Henry is a paperbender, Jennifer Bush is a lighbender, and Felius Umbridge is a wordbender.” Wendy recapped.

“I remember Felius!” Meloetta perked. “Her vocabulary was the tops!”

“We know what they do, but fighting them won’t be easy as CP10.” Aurora figured. “And we couldn’t beat them without a few bruises.”

“We can always get Mocha and Ururu to stomp around their base.” Jinta snickered.

“Absolutely not!” Mocha stated. “My legs still hurt from when CP10 cut me!”

“I guess that was my fault.” Carol admitted. “Mocha helped level the playing field, but I didn’t expect CP10 to gang up on her.”

“I hate to say it, but we may have to rely on the Firstborn if we want to have a shot at beating them.” Dillon said. “Especially if we’re gonna take the Octogan.”

“All I need to do is get close enough to Andrew.” Maddy said.

“I’ll be behind you in case you can’t.” MaKayla followed. “I am a timebender.”

“There’s something else.” Wendy spoke. “My father said the World Leaders were going to use something called a Grand Inferius.”

“I know what that is!” Index shouted. “It was in a book called Fairy Sisters. The bad guys created an army of zombies that were indestructible.”

“How can the World Leaders do that?” Aurora asked.

“My father said he wasn’t sure if the Leaders could do it, yet.” Wendy said.

“We should probably assume that they can.” Chris inferred.

“Then what’s our plan?” Mason asked.

Silence followed. There was too much to be prepared for, and they didn’t know how much time they had. “Everyone here needs to rest.” Everyone turned to face Panini. “Return to your treehouses and be ready for tomorrow. Because tomorrow… we attack the World Government.”

“Do you think we’re ready?” Dillon asked.

“We don’t have anymore time to train. The Firstborn will have to help their Guardians fight the Leaders, the other operatives will provide support, and Maddy and Kayla... if you really think you can, take the Octogan from King Andrew.” Both girls nodded. “GOT THAT, FIRSTBORN?!” Panini screeched at the baby gods. “You better stop sitting back and do your part, because as far as I’m concerned, YOU’RE operatives, too!”

“YES, MA’AM!” they yelped. (“Mana-Mana!”) (Midna saluted with her Hair Hand.)
Dr. Strange’s Lab, the following day

Hugo Strange placed the God Fruit inside a small cauldron and squeezed the juices out of it. “Oooo-oooo-oaaaa-aaaa…” Felius Umbridge sang a song like an opera star, her notes flowing into the pot as the potion bubbled and brimmed. The Elixir of Life was created.

“Your voice is lovely, Master Umbridge.” Dr. Strange said admiringly. “I cannot believe you were never in opera.”

“It was my mother’s suggestion, but I felt my duties lied with law enforcement. –Felius Umbridge replies truthfully.”

“Jennifer dearest, please keep your hands out of the potion.” Henry Churchill told her without looking up from his book.

“But it smells so yummy.” Jennifer replied bubbly. She was beside a boiling magic cauldron with King Andrew.

Dr. Strange came to pour the Elixir of Life into the larger cauldron. “With this, the Grand Inferius can commence.” The King spoke, raising his Octogan. “Using the Soul Stone inside the Octogan, I have collected an assortment of souls from the Spirit World and hid them inside the portions of Lazarus delivered with the milk bottles. Thanks to Sandman, we have lost some, but there is still enough to make an army. With the Fire Chi taken from Malladus’s soul, this potion is the correct temperature, and the souls can be imbued with Underworld darkness. Now, all Daphne must do is command the shadows to pass through the potion and possess the bodies who have consumed the Lazarus.”

“I’ll send a shadow to find the first subject.” Using her bending, Daphne Anderson called one of the shadows inside the glass capsules. It flew through the cauldron, and traveled across the world faster than the wind.

“AAAAAAHHHH!” An innocent child playing on a farm was engulfed by the shadow, molding and transforming his body. Under Daphne’s command, the child sunk into the Underworld and rose from the floor in the laboratory.

The boy standing before them had purple hair, black clothing, and a purple scarf. His eyes were black sclera with green pupils, but Andrew knew the color they bared before the Inferius. The King knelt before the boy, staring into his eyes. “Travis?”

The boy stared wide. “Andrew? Where…” Travis looked around. “Where am I? Who are these people?”

Andrew channeled energy into his fists and smashed Travis between them, breaking the zombie into pieces. In seconds, the pieces reassembled, regenerating Travis to normal. “Andrew, what gives?!”

“An Inferius can roam with free will and controlled will.” Dr. Strange aimed a hand at Travis and used magic.

“AAAH!” The black sclera turned white in Travis’s eyes. He stood still, awaiting his next orders.

“With most of your chis imbued into the potion, My Masters can summon Inferi to their side.” Strange continued.

“That will not be necessary. Felius Umbridge needs naught more than words. This is the last time she wants anything to do with magic…”

“Start activating the rest of them.” Andrew turned to leave the room. “The Spirit World Project will be complete. I just have one last matter to tend to.”

In the central throne room, Abram Johnson was writhing in pain on the table. His father approached him and said, “The Inferius is starting now, Abram. By the end of this month, we will have everything under control. The Inferi will slay everyone, and with the power you and I possess, we can organize all the world’s denizens into a divided Spirit World. You should have finished adapting to him by now.”

“This isn’t going to work, Dad!” Abram grunted. “Cheren will… stop you!”

“Cheren is dead, son. Perhaps, if I can find his soul, I can revive him as an Inferius.”

“Do you really think… you’ll actually be able to make your own Spirit World?!?”

“Our ancestors have been building the perfect world for generations. For the rest of existence, the Dimensional Fusion will be nonexistent. Our worlds will have the undisturbed peace they originally had. There’s nothing that can stop this, Abram. The Grand Inferius starts NOW.”

“Misser King Andrew.” The Hispanic maid, Consuela approached them. “You no have no more lemon pledge in God’s Domain.”

“REALLY?!!? You’re talking to me about this NOW?! You waited RIGHT before I started the Inferius?!”

“Inferi leave a filth… I need lemon pledge.”

“Ugh…” Andrew walked off. “If anyone needs me, I’ll be in the attic!”

The shadows soared across the planet and claimed all the souls unfortunate enough to be their targets. Genki Sanban transformed into her late daughter Kuki, Monty Uno turned into Nigel Uno, Agatha Uno became Eva’s blood-mother Mamare, Inferi good and evil were rising from the graves. All were confused by their own return, but a strange and terrible impulse told them to obey the World Government.

“95,829 shadows went out.” Daphne announced. “94,123 became Inferi. I command them all… ATTACK.” (Play “Protocol 10” from Batman: Arkham City)

Los Angeles

Inferi comprising of Davy Jones and his Dutchman Pirates emerged from the streets. “What is the meaning of this-ah?!” questioned the Heartless Captain.

“Oi, Captain! I feel as spry as a young’un!” Maccus exclaimed.

“Why do ya suppose this happened?” Koleniko asked.

Davy Jones viewed Sector L’s treehouse not far away. “If I am cursed to walk upon this earth once again… I will have my REVENGE-AH!”

“YAAAAAAAHHH!!” The pirates ravaged the town, more undead than they have ever been, making up for 20 lost years.
“Holy freaking slag.” said Sandman. From Quahog’s rooftops, his trio of heroes watched as the zombies of fallen Kids Next Door operatives plagued the streets. They broke into restaurants and devoured food that couldn’t satisfy, and all the sodas in the world could not quench their thirst. “This is even worse than the Brotherhood.”

“Told the words right out of my mouth.” a voice said behind them. The trio turned, finding Dillon Simmons alongside Koda Shrieves and Corey Sanderson.

“Dillon… Corey! You, too?”

“I’d love to catch up, Nolan… but I’m not in the right spirits.” Dillon grabbed a S.C.A.M.P.P. and blasted the heroes with Corey’s assistance. Koda Shrieves rolled forward and swiped a knife at Yuki, who froze Koda’s arm with a single touch and snapped it off.

“Didn’t hurt a bit!” Koda wrapped his other arm around Yuki and jumped off the building, aiming to smash the icebender against the concrete. Yuki aimed both hands down and weakened their fall with blasts of ice.

Nolan took Dillon’s weapon and threw it elsewhere, exchanging fists with his old friend. “Why are you fighting me, Dillon?!”

“Do you know what it’s like to be plucked out of Heaven and forced to return to this hell? I do.” Dillon kicked Sandman and rolled his wheelchair back, then Corey grabbed the hero’s neck from behind.

“S-S-Sorry, Nolan. We’re u-under their c-control.” Corey stuttered. Crystal bashed the zombie off with her staff, but Dillon tackled the Sandman and fell off the building with him. Nolan struggled and punched the undead off, activating the chair’s glider to make a coordinated landing. He saw Yuki wrestling with Koda and chose to ram his wheelchair over the zombie’s head.

“I don’t even know where to begin!” Sandman yelled.

“What did you do last time?” Yuki reminded. “You said ‘Screw all these villains, I’m going for Brain.’”

Crystal Wickens glided down and asked, “But do you have any idea who the Brain is in this scenario? AAAAH!” Lightning struck from behind, causing Crystal to fall.

“I found you again, Crystal!” Jonah Icarus hovered above with lightningbending. “I won’t let you escape this time!”

“I don’t even know you!” Crystal argued.

“Then let me give you a refresher: I am—” A purple-haired boy flipped up, planted a M.A.R.B.L.E. in Icarus’ ear, and exploded him.

The boy landed on his feet as Crystal gasped, “It can’t be! Travis?!”

“Crystal.” He faced her. “You’re not gonna believe who’s behind this.”

“AAAAAH-!” Koda Shrieves charged Nolan from behind, but Yuki froze him and shattered the ice. “Will you take us to him?” Nolan wondered.
“Yes.” Travis twitched. “It’s the World Leaders on Mariejoa. Though I’m not in my free will at the moment.”

“We know the way.” Yuki froze Travis up to his head. “But we can’t just let these zombies wreck everything.”

When Icarus regenerated, another M.A.R.B.L.E. was thrown to destroy him. Sector Q appeared on the scene. “If you know where to go, get to it!” Drake Puncture ordered. “We’ll protect this city!”

“Be careful. Let’s go, team!” Sandman called his Sandmobile, the trio hopping in and taking for the sky.

“Crystal… put some sense into him.” Travis said to himself, watching from his ice trap.

“AAAIIIEEEE!” Jar Jar Blinks ran for his life. “I sorry, Legy-Wegy! I sorry I no share the tofu!”

“We’ll SKEWER YOU!” Legion’s Inferius chased with a desire for long-awaited vengeance.

GKND H.Q.

“Numbuh 250 Trillion, incoming objects heading for the cafeteria!” a Wisp reported.

“Are there signs of life?”

“It…It can’t tell.”

Five Inferi crashed through the glass wall. “YAAAAHOO!” Red and Purple cheered. “The Almighty Tallest are BACK, baby!!”

“GIVE US YOUR SNACKS!” cried Purple.

“Red and Purple?! It can’t be!” Makava exclaimed.

“TEAR THEM UP!” Tronta declared. The operatives bombarded the Tallests with a storm of lasers. Their bodies were turned into confetti, but that confetti reformed into the annoying Irken emperors.

“Still ALIIIIIIVE!”

“STOP messing around and CRUSH THEM!” the tiny Tallest Dirk ordered.

“Awwwwwww!” the twins cooed. “He’s adorable!” said Purple.

“I’m not adorable! I AM Tallest Dirk! Conqueror of 24 galaxies and 1,015 planets!”

One of the other Inferi, Revan Bane Sidious, marched down the hall. “Where are you going, my son?” Revan turned. He glared at his Inferius father, Emperor Palpatine.

“My Brotherhood of Evil is imprisoned in this base’s dungeon. I’m going to tell them the boss has returned. Why don’t you go see if your old Sith buddies are still around?”

“This is our second chance, Revan: to rule the universe as father and son.”

“NOT WITH YOU!” Revan shot a Psycho Sphere to blast Palpatine away. “As soon as I rescue my old friends… I’m coming back for NOLAN.”
The Noah; somewhere in space

“Captain!” Rallo Tubbs pointed at the sky. “There’s a big-ass meteor coming straight for us!”

“Relax, Ralls.” Augustus sucked his lollipop with a confident smirk. “Nothing can damage this—THAT’S NO METEOR!”

A big round mass crashed on the Noah’s deck, along with a smaller round mass. “NYAAAAA HA HA HA HA!” Big Mom was alive and in the artificial flesh. “AUGUSTUS… what a big piece of CANDY you found! NAAAAH!” Charlotte sunk her teeth into the Gummi Ship, but it was too strong for her teeth.

“BIG MUM!” Henrietta exclaimed. “But who is…”

“So, YOU’RE the newest sweets in my bloodline.” Sherry Linlin observed. The Linlin ancestor had strawberry hair, red swirls on her white cheeks, and wore a dress that could have been made of sweet pink gum with lollipop lace. “Or should I say a couple of them.”

“I don’t understand! How are you two alive?!” Augustus questioned, his lollipop nearly falling out from talking.

“The World Leaders revived us, Augustus…” Big Mom drooled. “They want us to EEEAT this ship… and I say, YEEEEEEEES!” Her bulging red zombie eyes swelled with hunger.

Mandy McKenzie leaped and struck the Candy Pirate with her sword. “I regret not having the chance to duel you, Big Mom.” Mandy’s body brimmed with an aura of fear. “I’m thankful for this opportunity.”

While Nel was innocently wandering the ship’s hall, she heard something crash through a hatch behind her. “Oh?” She turned to face a tall Inferius: an 18-year-old with long cyan hair, a skull mask on her head, and strong bare legs going into a green loincloth dress.

“Hi, Nel.” The Inferius glared at her. “I Nel.”

“You… Nel?” The cavegirl was royally baffled.

Mariejoa

♫ “Destroyyyy, destroyyyy, destroyyyy…!” ♫ The chaos brought joy to Jennifer’s childish heart. “The Rapture has come, and God makes the sinners fight for Him!”

“This is no time for celebration, Jennifer.” Lucas Stonebuddy spoke with one hand on the ground. “Here they come now…”

A humongous stone arm erupted from the earth of the marble town and crushed Stonebuddy and Jennifer under its palm. Lucas stomped a hole for himself and defended, but when Jennifer was crushed flat, the sun over Mariejoa vanished. The hand lifted off: the angels chorused as the Holy Light brought Jennifer to her feet once more.

The base of the stone arm opened, and out stepped the White Lotus: Red Eye Vaati, Rachel T. Uno in her samurai garb, Fanny Drilovsky, Danika York in a black leather jacket, shorts, and sneakers; Eva Jackson in her vacation wear, Angie McKenzie, Matthew Dimalanta, and Mikaela Chariton.

“This feels more natural.” Danika said regarding her clothes. She was tired of being a housewife.

Two giant statues of Jesus flew over on Stonebuddy’s control with intent on crushing them, but Angie erected a rock platform to lift her to the statues and shatter them with a single punch. She gasped when nine gray stone cubes flew in and surrounded her. When they collided on her, Angie found herself struggling to push them away with her bending. “Your Logia earthbending cannot meld with my stonebending.” Lucas observed. “You are not pure enough.”

A large gush of water reached from the river and smashed down on Lucas, who jumped away, only to be grabbed in Mikaela’s psychic. “You try raising two kids and see if you’re still pure at the end of the day.”

“I’ll save you, Lucey!” Jennifer declared, preparing to conjure a sun. “OUCHIE!” Vaati stomped down like a rocket and pinned the Leader down.

“Our White Lotus Revolutionaries are already combating the Inferius around the world. Once we dispose of you Leaders, they will be gone and your plans will fail. Hm?” Vaati cocked a brow when blank papers orbited around his light breeze.

“That’s always been the way you work, Mr. Red Eye.” Henry Churchill materialized above in a cluster of papers. “Violence solves everything, Captain America, hum di da la. Unfortunately, only the controllers of the Inferius can stop the Inferius, and we have no intent on doing so, yet.”

“Don’t forget how it was thwarted the first time.” Vaati smirked as the papers were slowly attaching to his form. “Fairy Princess Mavis inherited Zeref’s power and stopped the Inferius herself. I’m positive she will do the same… and that’s also when I plan to give my daughter the greatest gift of all.” Vaati BURST a gust of wind and scattered the papers. “And I’ll have you know Captain America is the 4th person I most admire!”

“You know the person I most admire?!” Jennifer shouted. “IT’S GOD! And GOD SAYS GET OFF ME!” She squirmed like a child under Vaati’s feet.

Vaati stomped her in the face and knocked her out. “Jennifer Bush, the woman who keeps Resurrecting.” Vaati drew the breath out of her with his bending. The angels sung, pulling the breath back inside her as Jennifer blasted Vaati off with light. “Perhaps there is only one way to end you: Resurrecci-”

“SILENCE!” ordered Felius Umbridge, taping Vaati’s mouth with the very word. “You dark mages repulse me! Have ignominy, wisen up!” Words shot at Vaati like bullets, but he swiftly dodged and used nonverbal magic to cast Reductor Curses at the hag.

Stonebuddy protected Umbridge with stone pillars, having chucked a stone block at Mika. The woman merely expanded into a pink body of psychic and punched down at him. “Huh?” She faced left when the twilight sun mysteriously appeared over the mountain’s horizon.

“There you go, Daphne! Teach ’em a couple!” yelled Jennifer.

Gray slithery shadows swerved all around the marble buildings, binding Danika, Matthew, and Rachel to the ground. Daphne Anderson rose out from the shadow of a building, three black roses in hand. “When a black rose withers… a gray rose blooms in the garden.”

Danika broke the Shadow Possession on her friends, using Veil to slither over to Daphne and grab her out of her Veil. “You’re the Daphne my mom always talked about. You’re my aunt, aren’t you?”
“So, you’re Bella’s daughter.” Daphne spoke tonelessly. “She wouldn’t stop talking about you.”

“You know where she is?! What about my dad, where’s he?”

“Before they left you, I paid a visit to your mother in secret, asking her to come to Mariejoa for a special project. She was delighted to introduce me, but I told her not to. She was happy to fulfill a request for her long-lost sister… In truth, I wanted her Shadow Chi to enhance my powers so that I could complete the Inferius. I took her chi using the Sun Chi Lantern, which only worked thanks to the bond we still shared. My second intention… was for your family to be left alone.”

“Why would you do a thing like that?!”

“To teach you a lesson I learned: if you depend too much on someone, you will face disappointment and be left in gloom. There was someone that I admired and trusted in the past… but he vanished, and the memory of him vanished. I wanted you to know that feeling. It would have made you stronger.”

“Where are my parents now?”

“Behind you.” Danika gasped and whipped around. Isabelle Anderson had wrinkled skin, but her patterned emerald dress and green high-heel sandals were the same. Her eyes were that of an Inferius.

“Mom…” Danika released Daphne and almost cried.

“I guess I didn’t know what I was getting into when Daphne called.” Bella giggled. “She killed me… and your father was sacrificed to revive me this way. It was worth it at least… You’re so grown-up, Danika.”

Bella approached and gave her daughter a warm hug. Danika said nothing and returned the hug. “Mom… I have so much to tell you. I have a husband and a son…”

“That’s wonderful, Dani! Will I get to meet them?”

“Of course! I’ll introduce you.”

Daphne made a sign with her fingers. Isabelle’s sclera turned white: she lost her love for her daughter and quietly swiped one of Danika’s daggers. The zombie raised it above her daughter’s back. Cheshire gnashed at the zombie, pulling her master away and taking the blade back. “Mom!”

The soulless Inferius showed no resent and sent her shadow, Akita to wrestle with Cheshire. An angered Danika whipped around to Daphne, but the ghost woman retreated into her Veil and fled somewhere in the town.

Vaatii cast a spell to destroy the word taping his mouth. Felius Umbridge was retreating to the castle, so the wind mage flew high and rocketed for her. “You won’t escape me-!” A beam burst from the castle and sent Vaati crashing to a building. Everyone turned as the mighty King Andrew leapt from his home and dented the street with his armored feet.

“I fear I will need to get more lemon pledge.” The King said through his helmet.

“ANDREW!” He faced Rachel Uno on his left. “Is this how you want to be remembered?!”

“If the prophecy is completed, no one will be around to remember. I have every intent on keeping the memories of you and your family young… Rachel.”
“I don’t need you for that! My children are legacy enough!”

“So, you are not aware... Your beloved Heir of Courage is dead.”

“W...What?” stuttered Rachel.

Twin rays of emerald fire blasted Andrew, who blocked with his right hand and repelled them at Fanny Drilovsky. The woman absorbed them with Logia and spat a comet from her mouth, another easy block for Andrew. “Don’t listen to him, Rachel! This stoopid boy will try anything!”

“But I was one of few you idolized, Fanny.”

“No more!” Fanny pelted rapid fireballs at Andrew, and while he was blocking, Rachel ran to slice at his cape, but His Highness sensed this with Observation Haki and dodged, punching Rachel with Armament.

“Rachel, you were not meant to wield a sword. And Fanny, you were never meant to command fire. These powers you all have inherited are steadily destroying the universe. Every day, the Dimensional Fusion continues growing... until one day, it will implode upon all of us. The only way to stop this fate is to divide us into separate worlds. With the limitless power of the Octogan, the solution is at hand!”

“Is it really your solution?” Morgan Uno softly descended and set her feet on the ground behind Andrew. “Or is it the Octogan’s plan?”

“Morgan... won’t you join me? I can finally give you the life you wanted... I can make everything your way.”

“You promised you wouldn’t hurt me, Andrew. I don’t think you would have. But it was never you in control. It was always... that thing in your eye.”

“The only puppets here are all of you. All your efforts will merely lead to Lord English’s return. You are dooming the entire multiverse. I will not let that happen! I’ll destroy anyone in my way! Including... those little nuisances you shrunk to fit under your coat.”

Morgan braced herself. “Did you really think I wouldn’t expect you to help them? Open your coat, Morgan... let me see the New Generation.”

“...If you say so.” Morgan threw off her labcoat and revealed... a miniature Helmaroc King hugging her waist. (End song.)

“What?!” Andrew gasped. That was not what he had foreseen at all.

“Quack quack.” Helmaroc sang. “Quack quack. Quack quack, quack quack quack.” The masked bird let go of Morgan and marched across the street, jigging his tail and flapping his wings to the rhythm. “Quack qua-ack! Quadda quack quack, quadda quack!” A parade of birds appeared one-by-one and followed him. “Quack quack... qua-qua, qua-qua quack quack quadda quack.” Helmaroc King slowly grew to his giant size. “QUACK quack! Qua-qua-quack quack... quadda quack.”

With that, Helmaroc folded his wings and faced The King. His body trembled... and instantly exploded into feathers as KND operatives popped out, ranging from Sector V, W, IC, SA, GF, and Global Command. “Kids Next Door, BATTLE STATIONS!” Aurora screamed.

“Everyone, spread out and find what’s causing the Inferius!” Dipper ordered. “If you encounter a World Leader, don’t engage until a Firstborn user arrives!”
King Andrew gripped his helmet when the Octogon began reacting to the trick. Several operatives sprinted past him to head into the castle. “The Octogon was deceived again?! But it was such a petty trick, how did it not see?!"

“Perhaps you should’ve studied.” Morgan tossed a Psycho Sphere that Andrew kicked skyward. “I remember this one kid that used a magic 8-ball to solve multiple choice questions. (Though it did get him past 3rd grade.)”

“Uhhhn...” Vaati had a slight headache after the blow. When he woke up from the rubble, the one standing before him was his daughter. “Wendy...”

“Hello, Father. I told the Kids Next Door all the information from the meeting. The Firstborn Guardians are going to combat the Leaders.”

“You’re brilliant, Child!” Vaati leapt to his feet. “Victory will soon be ours!”

Six Inferi sprouted up around them. They consisted of Bellatrix Lestrange, Mad-Eye Moody, Sirius Black, Dumbledore, and much to Wendy’s horror, Lord Voldemort. “Chapter 15 of Destroying Your Enemies.” Henry Churchill formed from papers in the air. “Give them no advantage. Hello, Miss Marvell. Come to kill me, have you?”

“I want you to tell me where Chelia is!” Wendy aimed her wand threateningly.

“I don’t believe you deserve to know. We have yet to sap the God Chi out of her.”

“What is the point in having more power?! Vaati questioned. “There will be no need for it assuming your precious Spirit World comes to be!”

“The World Government will need to remain at large to keep our world in balance. We haven’t overlooked any possible threats, ergo it’s wise to prepare ourselves with more power. Voldemort, eliminate them.”

“AVADA KEDAVRA!” Voldemort shot a Killing Curse, which Wendy narrowly dodged as it struck Vaati.

“DAD!” cried Wendy.

“I’m okay, Wendy!” Vaati smirked. “As long as you are my Horcrux, I will not die!”

“Horcrux?” Voldemort cocked a brow.

“That’s the one I told you of, My Lord.” Bellatrix whispered in his ear. “His soul is scattered. If we kill the girl, you can have his body.”

Vaati kicked them as fast as lightning and cast Reductor Curses at the other Inferi. He faced up at Henry and shot up with an Armament kick, but the World Leader dodged and formed a spinning circle of papers above the Minish. Vaati was unable to escape from their pull. “Vacuum Trees sap the oxygen from the nearby air and sends it under the sea to create long-lasting air bubbles.” Henry explained. “A Logia airbender will find it difficult to escape.”

Inside the castle, Don Quixote Sugar was sprinting through the posh halls on bare feet, Meloetta gliding by her side. The singer was clothed in a flowing magenta dress with a music sheet design and notes. “Are you sure we didn’t need to bring all the Firstborn?” Sugar asked.

“Too many enemies are here.” Meloetta reasoned. “Just throwing all the Firstborn in front of them is asking for trouble. But I’m positive we can win with the numbers we have!”

“I hope you’re right.” They were coming to a sealed double-door, and Sugar pushed it open with both hands.

They came to a halt inside a bright blue, cylindrical room with a stain glass ceiling. It had a flower design, and the light made the room sparkle. Sugar and Meloetta kept their faces up in wonder and awe at the beauty. “How DARE you surge into my private quarters like uncivilized frat boys! – Felius Umbridge hopes you will take my criticism to heart.” They faced down at the elderly hag, whose voice echoed in the chamber.

“You’re one of the World Leaders.” Sugar knew.

“Correct. And you are Don Quixote Sugar. The traitorous Dressrosan princess who aided her father’s dark designs for a toy empire. Your family is DISGRACEFUL!” A soundwave burst from her mouth and struck Sugar.

“I’m different now!” Sugar declared. “I realized my true passion was singing.”

“Singing? How utterly meaningless. Are you quite enjoying your Japanese pop and ‘Snoopy G’, or perhaps the dreadful rubbish in your wasteful TV games? The world has ruined the poetry that was once oper-ra.” She rolled the ‘R.’

“Maybe you’re to blame for that. I may have done bad things, but those are nothing compared to what you Leaders are doing right now. How can you call me disgraceful with those zombies attacking everyone?!”

“We World Leaders desire a perfect world with order and no evil. We wish for everyone to be in our control as the Inferi are. With we, the pure-hearted saviors, there shall be no more unrest!”

“How can you not be disgusted by your own words?! All souls in this world deserve the freedom to follow their own paths. They deserve to speak with their own voice.”

“Ludicrous! If such freedom is the true balance, perhaps you wished for your father to continue his actions. Perhaps you wish the ne’er-do-wells to roam free. But instead, you thwart their actions, like you intend to thwart me! HYPOCRITE!” Sugar’s heart cringed with the force of Felius’s voice.

“Don’t let her words affect you!” Meloetta encouraged. “You have good in your heart, Sugar! Fight with all the passion in your voice!”

Sugar smiled and stood straight. “You must have had good intentions too, Umbridge… but somewhere along the way, you lost sight of what was important. Meloetta, play me a tune!” Sugar spun with her feet sliding along the polished floor. “I will free this lady’s soooouuuul!”

Boss fight: Felius Umbridge

Power Levels: Sugar – 1900. Umbridge – 6623

“I’ve enjoyed this venture… the moment since it started.” Sugar sang the first verse with passion in her voice. Music notes soared like a whirlwind around her. “But all things must come to end, my friend. Your fa-il-ure WILL be charted!”
“CEASE your irrelevant singing, you silly slipshod!” Felius unleashed a soundwave that Sugar evaded with a graceful flip. The elder sang with vocals of an opera star, her flowing words flying at Sugar like the wind. Sugar used the sound to carry her feet across the floor, swaying her arms and making the notes fly at her opponent. “Poor! Improper!” Felius blocked with a barrier of words. “I laugh as you fall before your sorrows. TUT, TUT, TUUUUUT!” Her words shook the ground and caused Sugar to lose balance.

The princess decided to flip and continue sliding on her hands. “I already fell, I already cried! Too many of my friends have died. I’m not going to LOSE here. I’ll walk with my friends tooo neeext YEAR!” Flipping back to her feet, Sugar slid at Felius, crouching down and swinging a kick at the lady’s legs, but Felius twirled elsewhere.

“Be gone from my presence NOW. DICTIONARY STORM.” Felius took flight to the air and unleashed a cyclone of words.

“Be careful, Sugar!” Meloetta dodged the words. “If they hit you, you’ll be babbling like a soulless librarian!”

“Ooooooaaaaa……” Sugar sang a Song Road that would spiral up into Umbridge. The elder’s words turned the notes into nagging old hags, so Sugar stylishly leapt between lines on the road to continue the rhythm. “YOU – WILL – FALL!” The princess stomped Umbridge in the face, sending her falling to the floor.

Felius scowled at Sugar surfing down the Song Road. The elder sung, “I see the fears inside your heart. Your skin tingles and jingles to the bone.” Sugar felt a powerful vibration overcome her, the Song Road waving rapidly until she fell.

“AAAAH!” Sugar landed on her front, unable to stand from the vibration. As Felius marched closer, Sugar felt her very bones vibrate.

“You thought I was all talk, but you have been mistaken! Your soul will crumble as your body is shaken. TUT TUT TUUUUUT…”

“SILENCE!” Sugar sprouted a barrier that muted the sound around her. With Felius’s words blocked, the vibration stopped, so Sugar hopped up and glided away. “A silent soul is a soothed soul.” she sang calmly. “I will not fear, I will stay whole. There is much more I want to see.” She closed her eyes and touched her heart, easing the pain from earlier. “Your words will not get to me.”

“Ludicrous, how ridiculous!” Felius’s words could not penetrate the Sound Barrier.

Sugar kept her eyes closed and herself silent. She danced across the room and let her mind flow with the gentle notes. She felt free and peaceful, and imagined the beautiful peaceful world, where the Inferius was not happening and all her friends were happy. But outside this pseudo reality, the world was in chaos, her dearest friend was gone, and if they did not win, everyone would die. Sugar cried at the ideas, and the ease in her soul was gone.

“WHYYYYYYYYYYYY……” Through her pain and tears, Sugar unleashed a devastating soundwave at Umbridge.

“How could you relish in this pain?!” Sugar’s notes struck Umbridge with her very sadness. “How could you play this game?! Can’t you see all this hate and hurt?! I’ll bury you in the DIRT!” When Sugar unleashed her soundwave then, she gasped when Felius sucked it into her lungs.

“Your words are sweeeet like candy… yet, they hold no health or soul. I SPIT AT YOU!” Felius literally shot a glob of spit that hit Sugar like a baseball, smashing her nose as blood shot out. Sugar fell on her back.

“Sugar!!” Meloetta flew over her on the verge of tears.

“She attacks with the fer-r-r-rocity of a beast.” The rolling of her R’s created an extending string of the letter from Felius’s mouth. “She cannot g-r-rasp my intelligence… but it will wr-r-r-rap thee!” The R’s roped around Sugar and slammed her around the floor and walls. Felius set Sugar on her feet, keeping her tied. “Do not forget your sins… let them burn you.” Her words flowed into Sugar’s ears.

Sugar remembered the 12 years she spent turning people into toys, trapped in an unaging body. Every victim she touched would be forgotten. She touched Cheren, and everybody forgot his examples. “AAAAHH!” These memories created a feeling like fire on her skin. Sugar fell, rolling helplessly, but unable to extinguish the raging fires.

“Sugar!” Meloetta touched her Guardian’s heart. The unseen flames dissolved. Meloetta projected an unbreachable Silence Shield around her and Sugar. Meloetta’s dress turned ice-blue as her hair became a light-blonde ponytail (like Snow Queen Elsa).

“Sugar… what is this feeling I’m seeing inside your soououul…?”

Sugar was silent for a moment. “Meloetta… I am afraid. Afraid of what my future will beehooold… What sorrows will uuuunfoooold? How can we go on without him? It’s as though we lost a sun. The world is now more dim… I forgot what it means to have fun.”

“COWARDS!” Umbridge’s words rattled the shield. “You cannot hide from your fate!” She approached, intending to pass the barrier physically.

“Have you forgotten what he wanted?” Meloetta smiled warmly. “For us to live, to breathe, to sing and dance. Will you let that woman crush you? Or fight with the song of a thousand ants.”

“FAUX GOD!” Umbridge grabbed Meloetta through the shield and threw her fro. “TUUUT!” She was hit by a Song Beam from behind.

“I will fight with the song of a thousand ants!” Sugar danced.

“ERRONEOUS! Ants have no VOICE, hence they cannot SING!”

“Your ears have withered, so you cannot listen!” Sugar remembered the Music Pikmin that sung in her ear on that day. “The singing ants whose tunes I’m missin’! But I hear them like the voices of the mountain! They paint me like the colors of the wind!”

“Those lyrics are not yours! THIEF! INFERTILE!” Sugar swiftly dodged Felius’s words, skiing up to kick the woman across the face. Felius hopped back up and encased herself in a whirlwind of words, preventing Sugar from getting close. “Do you truly believe it’s productive? This meager rebellion you’re conducting? You will go as your leader has gone: his teachings FOR-GOT-TEN!”

The Word Whirlwind flew to Sugar and whirled her around. Sugar broke it and soared across the air to her notes: “What more is your leader than a puppet? I’ve seen more free will in a Muppet. Cheren will always be our King! He inspired us to do GREAT things!” The rainbow notes created along her path struck Felius simultaneously. Sugar landed and conducted the notes into the woman. “Enjoy your words as they last, because believe me, they will go fast! Your King will fall, and ALL of your, tyranny… will be for naught. Because the Kids Next Door you NEVER fought!”

“TUUUUUT!” One last Song Beam took the World Leader down for good. Felius lay with her skinny arms sprawled.

“And you’d do well to remember that.” Sugar stated firmly.

“ASTOUNDING performance!” Meloetta raised a score. “1,000 out of 10!”

“That’s as high as my score gets?” Meloetta giggled.

“Well, er, I could make it higher if you want.” The Firstborn blushed nervously.

“Nah, I’ll wait for the encore. Let’s catch up with the others.” Sugar began to leave the room, Meloetta joining. (Play “Final Boss 2” from Zelda: Tri-force Heroes!)

. . . . . . The two stopped, feeling a terrific rising in Sound Chi. They turned, seeing Felius’s body shaking as words brimmed around her in an aura. Her body became a white light as the words shot into her. With a blinding flash, Felius acquired a dress that made her seem 15 feet tall: wide and purple with a white blouse underneath, a gigantic red bow on the back, sparkling bracelets around her wrinkly arms, and a pink heart-shaped crown with a central red emblem. “TUUUAAAAT TUT TUT TUT, TUUUUUT TUT TUT TUT!” Her cackles carried the force of her power.

“So, this is her true power!” Sugar skied to avoid a powerful stream of “Ooooooo”’s conjured by her singing, but the princess’s Song Beams couldn’t bruise the Leader’s Fury Form.

“You are an inferior being!” Felius quaked the ground and knocked Sugar down, and the O’s grabbed her by the ankles and flailed her around. “Before my power, you are a hapless sack!”

“Not with MY power!” Meloetta snapped the O-rope and Sugar landed on her feet. “Sugar, let me help.” Her hair stretched into a song wave, wrapping around Sugar’s body as she brimmed with a rainbow aura.

Sugar sung a Rainbow Road that wrapped around the room like a ball, sliding all around it and leaving a trail of musical notes. “Planet Collaaaaaapse!” Sugar slammed her hands together, crushing Felius with the sphere of notes. “All things implode, all things explode!”

“Yes, but the wisest survive!” Felius survived and vibrated the very air molecules with her power. “The fools – they br-r-reak – under the crash – of reality!”

Sugar was being rattled by the molecules, covering her heart in fear it would stop. “My dreams are… reality. My reality was a nightmare. He pulled me… to safety. I will not… go back theeeere!” Sugar expanded a barrier from her heart and blocked the vibrations. She sung and danced freely. “Everything I WORKED for has been for this moment! Every day I breathed has been to see: the very thing I lived to make! A brand New World I will create.”

“A child’s boloney is unworthy to enter my ears!” Felius corked her ears with her pinkies, preventing Sugar’s notes from penetrating her thick robing.

“Am I a child cryyying at your knees? Then direct your eyes and tell me: WHAT ARE THESE?” Sugar pointed at her breasts, which made her music note dress even tighter.

“UCK! COVER THINESELF!” Felius shut her eyes.

“Sugar!” Meloetta beamed. “You’ve… grown!”

Sugar’s body had sprouted into the blossoming 22-year-old she was meant to be. Ignoring the tightness on her chest, Sugar swayed her aquamarine hair, long enough to spiral around her body.
like a ribbon. “I kept myself from growing! I kept myself from singing! But with wind on my feet, I keep going.” Sugar flipped and created three loops with her hair. “I’m off to the future, and my friends I will be bringing.”

“Tell meee… what future have thee? For it is here you will be buuuuried!”

“AAH!” Sugar was pressed to the ground by Umbridge’s condensed soundwaves.

“Will Heaven allow entry for a monster like you?” The words blasted Sugar to the ceiling. “Nay, you will fall down to Hell.” And Sugar crashed to the ground again, denting a crater. “Your soul is bound by the weight of your demons!” Sugar felt a strong compression in her chest.

“My soul has grown beyond that weight!” Sugar released a pulse that pushed the words off her. She jumped to her feet and pulled up her torn dress to cover her breasts. “No matter how much you hurt me… my soul will always be free!” She whoooshed around the room on a Song Road, conducting music notes at Umbridge’s head.

“I command you to stop!” The word ‘STOP’ flashed in Sugar’s path.

“NO!” Sugar burst through.

“CEASE!”

“NO WAY!”

“DOWN NOW!” Sugar sunk to the ground with a surge of gravity, but she placed hands and feet on the floor, continuing to slide along the song.

“I’m in control of my body! I choose to run or crawl. I can look like a hottie, or have fun or BRAWL!” Sugar slid under Umbridge’s dress and kicked her legs. The overclothed witch bobbed for balance. “Meloetta, it’s time to close this show!”

“O-kay, Sugar! This hag has got to go!” Sugar and Meloetta locked hands and soared like a comet. “Friendship, won’t you please, listen to my pleas, let’s defeat Umbridge with ease!”

“DESIST! END! CONCLUDE! DISCONTINUE!” Umbridge attacked with all the power her lungs could muster.

“Together with my friends, we will go without fuss! The New World is awaiting for us!” The notes became as colorful as Sugar’s soul.

“I will not be vanquished by mediocre LYRICS!” nagged Umbridge.

“Tiiime to close the shoooooo-oo-ooow.” Sugar pierced the Word Witch with passion and Firstborn-powered soundwaves. “The Soooong of the Raaaaainboooow!” (End song.)

“WAAAAAAaaaaaaahhh…” Like a balloon losing air, Felius’s Fury Form dissolved and vanished. The old lady lay defeated on the ground.

Sugar caught her breath, rubbing her throat after such an invigorating song. “I did it…” She smiled. “I actually DEFEATED ONE!” She jumped—her dress finally ripped off, no longer able to withstand her adult form. “. . . . .” Sugar felt a light breeze. “AAAAACK!” She covered herself. “I’m naked in the middle of a warzone!!”
“10,000/10!!” Meloetta raised a score.

“THAT’S NOT WHAT I WANTED THE SCORE FOR!! Find me some clothes quickly! Before somebody sees!”

Castle Throne Room

Sector GF burst through a double-door. “This looks like the throne room!” Dipper announced.

“Just like the caption said!” Candy pointed.

“Dipper, who’s that over there?” Mabel indicated the person squirming on the table. The four kids rushed over for a closer view.

“Nnnn-aaah! Ack-aaa…” The teenage boy grunted.

“No way… it’s Abram!” Dipper realized.

“NYAH!” Abram shot up and faced them with madness in his blue eyes. The four stepped back. “Tell me… Cheren… is he… dead?!”

“Uhhh…” Dipper stuttered, “Y-yeah… we don’t know how, but… he is.”

“!!! HOW COULD HEEEE!” Abram unleashed a powerful beam from his lungs, the kids barely dodging as Dipper lost the cover of his hat. “I trusted him to SAVE UUUUUS!!” Abram sent another beam through the roof.

Seeing this from outside, Midna gasped. “That energy… it feels like…!”

“Felius has fallen!” Andrew instinctively knew. “Jennifer, Daphne, Code White Flame!”

Before anyone could question what that meant, everybody’s shadows suddenly slipped away from under their feet. “My shadow!!” Wendy gasped.

“GOD SAVE US, EVERYONE!!” Jennifer cried. “BURN IN THE FIRE OF A THOUSAND SUNS!!” A thousand suns appeared in the sky, ensuring there was no place for shadows to hide. All the shadowless heroes combusted into white flames, for Loneliness’ Toll would take their lives.

In the few seconds it would’ve taken to destroy them, the Sandmobile WHOOSHED in from the light and crushed Jennifer flat. The suns vanished, eyesight returned, and the flames extinguished. “Did somebody call a fireman??” Sandman announced.

“DAD!” Dillon cheered.

“Why, Hairstress!” Henry Churchill formed above them. “How delightful to see YOU here!”

“Hairstress?” Crystal hasn’t been called that since, “HENRY?! YOU’RE one of the World Leaders?!”

“I’m at my limits with colorful hair at the moment. So, allow me to destroy you swiftly.” Henry swooped a swarm of Sun Papers at the heroes.

Hidden from view, Sector SA heard the conversation. “What did Henry mean by that?” asked Nagisa.

“He has a phobia of people with colorful hair.” Goombella said matter-of-factly. “It was in his data files. He used to be an operative, you know. Boy, I would hate to be you guys.”

“Hmmm…” The blue-haired boy was concocting a plan.

Moonbase

Bon Clay Jr. stood by Cheren’s bedside. With both hands cupped over Cheren’s left, Clay gazed at his leader’s face. “Cherry Pie… I know you’re in there somewhere. You aren’t one to die that easy. Perhaps I could just kiss you and wake you up… but I know you don’t love me that way.” Clay smiled softly. “I believe in you, Cheren… I always have… And if I didn’t have feelings for Alexei… I would keep chasing you.”

“I’m touched.” Clay gasped and whipped to the entrance: Alexei Abramovici stood with the Inferius of Ape King Gaul.

“Lexi… you came back!” Clay cried tears.

“We’re not staying. My master has ordered me to tie up any loose ends. Gaul…” Alexei pointed, “Destroy Cheren’s body.”

“Yes.” The Demon Ape hissed and raised his dual swords.

“PICK ON SOMEONE YOUR OWN SIZE!” Ruby socked Gaul with an armored fist and tipped him over. “No one’s getting their grubby hands on OUR leader!”

Star Haven

Nebula soaked her feet in the Fountain of Dreams, smiling as Jirachi happily floated in the magic water. Her communicator rang, and she saw her brother was calling. She answered, “Hello? … Zombies? You can’t be serious. Fine, I’ll be there in a minute.” She slipped on her shoes and ran outside. “Mom, you’re not gonna believe—hu-!” She gasped.

“Oh! My niece…” Dimentio Z. Winkiebottom smiled warmly. Behind him, Dimentia threatened to shoot him with a Starburst. “I was just telling your mother how I miraculously rose from the dead. Like a flower blooming after a cold winter.”

Nebula shot a Starburst, but it was absorbed by his Logia body. “Aha ha ha… If I wanted to, I could slurp this entire galaxy in the palm of my hand.” Dimentio clasped the air in his right hand. “But I won’t close the show before it even begins. You see, Nebula… you never would have defeated me if I didn’t let you.”

“You LET me foil your diabolical plan to destroy the universe’s matter? You know, there’s easier ways to get yourself arrested and killed.”

“That’s not to say I wasn’t trying to win… but I knew I was going to lose. I also knew he would come back for me. And he has. Lord English has come back for me.”

“Lord… English?”

“Sister.” Dimentio faced his twin. “I spent too much time with Nebula on my last visit. I want to catch up with you as well.”

Dimentia trapped Dimentio in a Space Block and exploded it. “I’ll wait until the afterlife.”

Dimentio merely regenerated. “I can’t wait that long…”
The island quaked powerfully when another force made impact: a purple alien titan with black and gold armor, missing his left arm. “Ah, but it seems you have another reunion.” Dimentio observed. “I’ll leave you to it. Ciao!” He took Dimentia and splorped.

“Mom!”

“No running, dear!” Thanatos poofed before Nebula and used deathbending to put her to sleep (not permanent).

“So, where is this Fountain of Dreams?” Thanos asked.

“In there!” Thanatos pointed at Star Sanctuary. “Say, Thanos, can I call you something else? People are going to get confused.”

Ignoring his request, Thanos stomped toward the sanctuary and tore the roof off with his right hand alone. “AAAH!” Jirachi cried. “M-M-MONSTER!”

“I’m more than that, Newborn.” Thanos held Nebula’s sleeping body. “If you don’t want your caretaker to meet a horrible end… you will do something for me.” He wiggled his stub.

Jirachi knew what he wished, but with Nebula’s life on the line, he was afraid to say no. The Firstborn channeled his magic and made the fountain glow. Thanos knelt down and dipped his stub in the water. A brand new arm grew from it like a plant, the Mad Titan flexing its purple fingers. Thanos placed Nebula down and raised his restored hand: Thanatos fixed the Infinity Gauntlet over it perfectly. The Infinity Stones shone like stars upon the knuckles.

“Thanos is REBOOOORRRRN!!!” The titan raised and flashed the powerful gauntlet. “…?” He realized there was a color missing from the index knuckle. “Wait a minute! Where is the Soul Stone?!”

“We’re on our way to collect that, don’t worry.” Thanatos assured.

The Grand Inferius is based off the Reanimation Jutsu from Naruto. Anyway, school and work are piling the workload on me, so appreciate any update that comes from now on. Next time, the war continues.
Chapter Summary

Sunni Chariton vs. Jennifer Bush and Wendy Marvell vs. Henry Churchill! This is a battle of fates!

In this part, we'll fight TWO World Leaders.

Chapter 78: The Girl With Blue Hair

Washington

“President Jessie, we’ve evacuated all the citizens to the underground shelter!” Richard Teague reported.

“Make sure they stay safe.” Jessie stood beside Kimaya, Suki, and Sheila. “I think we’re going to be here awhile.”

The four Lights were facing the Inferi of Carter Pewterschmidt, Prince Hans, and James McGarfield. “Man, I wish I was at Mariejoa with me mates.” Sheila complained. “But ’ey, it’s best not to have all the Lights where the World Leaders can grab ’em.”

McGarfield turned his fist iron and charged at Sheila, who spun her Light Fist and collided it with his. “Ouch!” Sheila jumped back, shaking her fist. “Dang Haki!”

“This beats the Lazarus by a mile!” Carter laughed as he threw punches against Kimaya’s Keyblades. “Why drown in that filthy hole when I can have an invincible zombie body?!”

“This time, I don’t intend to lose what’s mine.” Hans assured.

“NO you WON’T!” shouted Suki. “I mean… YES you will! Er, right?”

“Just fight them.” Kimaya told her.

GKND H.Q.

“HEY, GUUUUYS!” Revan announced to the prisoners in the dungeon. “Did ya miss me?!”

“Wa-ha! NO WAY!” Control Freak screamed.

“IT’S BRAIN!” Mad Mod exclaimed. “‘e’s back from the dead, he is!”

“In the sort-of-flesh!” Revan used Force Lightning to destroy the cells’ terminals and disable their barriers. The villains cheered as they escaped and gathered around their leader.

“Come on, villains! Let’s get revenge on those Kids Next Door the old Revan way!” Revan Bane captured them all in a massive teleport.
“BIIII!” Upstairs, Celebi and Team Vweeb were trapped in Tallest Dirk’s Fear Scream. Emperor Palpatine was about to strike Force Lightning, but Jerome opened a wormhole to catch it and redirect it at Dirk. Tronta tossed his bladed Light Discs to slice around the zombies’ bodies. “Someone oughta call Earth and ask them if they know anything about this.”

“I don’t know why Nebula hasn’t come, yet.” Jerome said. “I’m going to Star Haven. If you cannot kill the zombies, try to detain them.” He warped.

The Noah

“NYAAAA!” Big Mom gnashed at Mandy and Azula, who both pushed their sword and flaming foot up at the giant’s teeth and poured great strength to keeping her aloft. The lady pirates jumped away as Big Mom’s teeth loudly SNAPPED. “Using fearbending on her only makes her worse.” Mandy observed.

“Ma ma maaaa! Azula, your blue fire looks tastyyy! I want iiiiit!” Big Mom drooled poison acid on the deck. Azula set fire to make a great explosion, but Big Mom’s bulbous body was only slightly bruised before it self-healed.

Sherry Linlin had long pink nails that she swiped at Augustus and Henrietta, and they avoided in fear of catching the Candy Virus. “This is a beautiful ship you’ve found. Perhaps if you showed this to the family, they would forgive your betrayal, darlings.”

“I’m not coming back, lady.” Augustus told her. “All your family was trying to do was infect the Earth with your virus.”

“Sorry, but there were way too many creeps over there, anyway.”

On Captain Slag’s ship nearby, the Hyrule Slag was clashing swords with the Inferius of his Terminan counterpart. “Hyrule Slag… I’m sorry for not responding to your email. Ay’ve been dead, you see!”

“It’s okay, Termina Slag!” the former cried. “All is forgiven!”

The twin Rusty Petes sniffled. “That’s so beautiful!” they chorused.

Inside the Noah

“If you Nel… you… me?” Nel asked her older self.

“Augusus take Nel back home.” Older Nel replied. “Nel no know why she back… but Nel want talk to Augusus. Will Nel take Nel to him?”

“Um… Nel guess she help Nel.” replied the younger, confused cavechild.

KND Moonbase

Ruby pelted Gaul with rapid punches using her mech fists as rockets, and Sapphire caught him in psychic to throw him toward the main bridge. When Liberty Belle ran to the Ape King sword drawn, the ape slashed one of his own, but Libby jumped off it to slash Gaul in the face. “AHH!”

The ape punched Libby across the bridge, but was hit by light rays cast by Hibiki Lates.

“Why on the moon are you trying to destroy Cherry’s body?!” Bon Clay yelled as he kicked his slippers at Lexi’s hammer and cane. “Do you think he’s alive after all?!”
“I don’t understand why, but my masters ordered it!”

“SCREW your masters! How can you still work for them after knowing King Andrew’s being controlled by that Octo-thingy?”

“Because they are right! All of history’s tragedies happened because some fool was too drunk on power to control himself. It would be better to live in a world where no one could possess the kind of godly power benders can develop.”

“And you’re putting your faith in a bunch of fools who became so drunk on power, they passed out without remembering where they slept. You’re right about power-hungry fools, Lexi, but your faith is in entirely the wrong place.”

“And YOUR faith was placed in the hands of this boy! My masters know how he died, Clay: he was trying to attempt the God Tier, a transformation known only to the unstable First Dimension. He tried to do the unthinkable and shed his mortal coil. He was so hungry for power that he believed such a lie and killed himself without a second thought. Tell me why I should follow a boy so foolish?!?”

“Because Cherry did it for us! Everything he’s done has been for us! And if there’s even the slightest chance his soul’s still kicking, I’m putting every ounce of faith in him!”

“You’re disgraceful, Clay! Even if his precious transformation managed to work, he would be beyond every one of you. He would have the arrogance of a god no mortal should have, sitting high in Heaven and watching millions of mortals clash and die beneath his feet. And yet, even though his intention has failed, you still idolize him as if he WERE a god! You SICKEN ME!” With a forceful swing of his hammer, Clay was smashed on the floor.

Alexei stepped over and marched for Cheren, only for Clay to kick and wrap his slipper’s neck around Lexi’s leg, perform a flip, and slam the teenager on the floor. “Cheren was born as a mortal being, and he’ll always have the heart of a mortal! Because even if we’re different on the outside, we share the same heart. Cherry will love us forever and he will never abandon us! You hear that, Cherry Pie?!” Clay faced his leader. “Wake up as soon as you can!”

God’s Domain

Yuki Crystal found himself dodging spells cast by Rumpel Stiltskin’s Inferius while Nolan was exchanging punches with Dracula’s. The Sandman’s Armament Haki was able to bruise the vampire’s diamond skin, but it didn’t change the fact he was a regenerating zombie. “You know, a vampire zombie is plain unfair on its own.” Nolan commented.

“It matters not to me, as long as I attain vengeance.” Dracula hissed.

“My, they play together so well.” Henry Churchill floated above Crystal with papers orbiting him. The low half of his body was simply papers in the breeze. “Just like we used to, Hairstress.”

“But you were better than this, Henry.” Crystal stated. “My brother said you became the most respected Sector Leader in the Kids Next Door, so respected that all the other European sectors signed up under you.”

“That is all true, and to this day, I still cherish my memories in the Kids Next Door. That is why I couldn’t ignore King Reggie’s proclamation. The Spirit World Project will save the Kids Next Door and let their reputation continue. If your love for them is as strong as you say it is, you’ll understand.”
“I can’t understand why I should put my faith in some crazy adults who woke up a zombie army. Sorry, Henry, but this has to end.”

“I’ll say!” Vaati flew at Henry and stomped him in the face with an Armament kick, his Logia body reassembling and bouncing on the ground. “Thanks for rescuing me, Wendy!”

“Oh dear, this isn’t fair at all.” Henry patiently stood up. “You fellas need to put family first.” He made a whistle.

“Wendy, behind you!” Carla yelped when Voldemort appeared and cast the Death Curse, only for Vaati to take the blow for his daughter.

“You shan’t lay a finger on Wendy!” Vaati stated. “Horcrux or not, she is still my flesh and blood!”

“If you had a shred of love for her, you would-” Carla began.

“Carla, we can talk about that later!” Wendy said. “Dad, just keep them busy. I’ll fight Henry.”

“And Crystal, I was referring to you, too.” Churchill said as the Inferi of Travis and Ellen Wickens rose from the grave.

“Travis! And… I suppose you’re one of my ancestors as well?” Crystal inquired.

“I never had any children.” Ellen corrected, blasting magic at Crystal against her own will. Just as well, Travis leapt to kick his now-elder sister, who blocked with her staff and cast flames at Travis’s head.

Rachel Uno used Haki to strike Andrew with her sword, but His Highness needed only little pressure from his fist to defend. “Fighting me is a hopeless effort.” The King spoke. “In the past, I outmatched you. In the present, my power is beyond you.”

“What about ME?!” Chris Uno landed several feet on Andrew’s left, and Rachel jumped away when her son fired a Combustion Beam. Andrew punched the beam as his armor went undented by the explosion. “You’re that Sir Knightly guy that was with the Big Mom Pirates! I think you owe me a rematch.”

“Chris, don’t get close to him!” Rachel yelled. “I don’t want him to hurt you!”

“What, like YOU have any better shot at beating him?!”

“LISTEN TO YOUR MOTHER!” Fanny Drilovsky shot down at Andrew as a fiery drill, missing her target as The King predicted her action. “This boy may have his fancy 8-ball, but our kids ain’t worth pittin’ against him.”

“LIIIIIGHT!” Jennifer Bush created a giant sun and set all the shadowless fighters on fire again.

“AAAAAH!” Sectors SA and IC screamed.

“If we keep going without our shadows, we’ll be vulnerable to sunlight!” MaKayla cried.

“HUH?” Suddenly, the flames vanished, despite the sun was still shining bright.

“Huuuuurr…” Midna had connected numerous Shadow Possessions to all allies on the field. “I’m using my power to become everyone’s temporary shadow. It kind of hurts, so do something about that woman. Quickly!

“With pleasure!” Mika grew into a Psycho Giant and squished Jennifer flat. The sun vanished as the woman lay in a shoe-shaped crater. “Ooooodaa…” Jenny was revived by the angels’ chorus.

“Jennifer kept herself alive through Palutena’s God Chi for 4,000 years.” Diancie recapped. “No matter how many times she’s killed, she comes back to life.”

“That’s like an infinite lives cheat code.” Sunni stated. “Totally not fair.”

“I’ll tell you what’s unfair is using Firstborn to win!” Jenny argued. “That stupid Shadow Princess needs to burn-!” She tried to shoot a beam at Midna, but Morgan grabbed her former master in psychic and threw her across the town.

“Midna can’t safely release her hold as long as Jennifer is standing.” Mika said. “Sunni, wanna try and pin her down?”

“Sure thing, Mom!”

“Mew, Mew!” Mew cheered. The three psychics plus Morgan flew to where Jennifer landed. She hadn’t apparently died this time, but she held malice intent as she recovered.

“Her body may be really old, but it’s biologically younger than all the other World Leaders.” Morgan explained. “Keeping her down should be easy.”

“Ack!” Mika grunted. “I… can’t move!”

“The Crucifix Sealing binds you in place even if you’re a Logia!” Jenny smirked. “And if you try to use chi, you go STABBY!”

“I’ll just kill you and remove them myself!” Sunni drew her lightsaber.

“DON’T EVEN THINK IT!” Jenny wagged a finger. “Those Crosses are meant to stab them if I die, even though I’ll come back to life. I’m getting sick of getting killed, so this time, someone will die with me! Maybe I can’t kill the Firstborn, but I sure bet it’s gonna hurt him a lot.”

“So, you can’t fight by yourself, so you’re forced to threaten people, huh?” Sunni inquired.

“I can fight perfectly fine on my own! Especially against a bubbly little psychic like you.”

“My mom is the bubbly one here. You may be a sunbender, but I can be a real hothead, too. Why do you think they call me SUNNI?!” (Play “The Thieving Magpie” from Batman: Arkham Origins)

Boss fight: Jennifer Bush

Power Levels: Sunny – 4350. Jennifer – 7700

Sunni formed a bubble around herself, launched skyward, and dropped to Jennifer like a giant bullet, but the World Leader jumped out of her high heels and evaded. Sunni rolled her bubble to Jennifer, but the Leader called “FLASHY-FLASH!” and became a blinding sun. Sunni shut her eyes and dropped the shield, then was stamped in the face by Jenny’s foot. Sunni grabbed her lightsaber and used Aura Sense, but the light penetrated her lids too strongly and allowed Jenny to kick again without being seen.

“I thought your name was Sunni, is it too sunny? WAH HA HA HA HA HA HA HA!” The psychic listened for the cackles and slashed her saber in that direction, but she merely cut through thin air. “OOOF!” Somebody else landed a flying kick on the adult child and knocked her away.

The light faded, and Sunni’s blurry vision cleared to reveal her sister. “Darcy!”

“You’re lucky I learned Observation Haki. Let me help fight her, Sunni.”

“TWO AGAINST ONE’S NO FAIR!” Darcy barely dodged Jenny’s Sun Beam, and when the woman flipped to shoot beams from her feet, Sunni tried to bounce one back with a barrier, only for it to burn. “Ah ha ha ha! There’s nothing hotter than the sun! Your measly barriers won’t block it!” Sunni chucked Psycho Spheres that Jennifer nimbly evaded, the woman dancing like a child in a flowery meadow as she made her way to the psychic, ducked, and grabbed Sunni’s arm. Jenny whirled around and around before throwing Sunni skyward, spawning a sun that she would crash into.

“Suni!” Darcy used psychic to pull her sister to safety.

“Darcy, I appreciate the help, but I can take her alone.”

“Not without Mew’s help! And if you hit her too badly, Mom and the others are doomed.”

“But what can you do?”

“If I get close enough, I can chi-block her, and you can mind-trick her to-”

“What are ya TALKING ABOOOOUT?” Jenny erupted a sun between them, making the sisters shut their eyes and step apart, and the Leader followed this with a circle of suns around both. The suns whirled around, and despite their attempts to fly, they followed at their level. The psychics teleported out just when the suns closed in, then Sunni grabbed Jenny in psychic to throw her at Darcy. Sunni kept Jenny bound by psychic, but this didn’t stop the Leader from Flashing and blinding them with her sunlit body.

The psychic bind burned off, leaving Jenny to leap and stamp Darcy’s head to the ground. When the light dimmed slightly, Sunni ran to her sister’s aid, noting the bruise on her forehead. “Hum hum hum, hum hum… “ Jenny was innocently dancing not far away, so a furious Sunni tossed a Psycho Sphere, but it bounced off the mirror and back to its owner, Sunni quickly kicking it skyward. “Refraction makes me anywhere, even though I’m nowhere!” Jenny sung.

“Ugh!” Sunni growled at the dancing Jenny clones around the field. “And I can’t even hit too hard or else she’ll die. I… What do I do, Mom?!”

“I really don’t know, Sunni.” Mika replied. “Even if we were willing to be sacrificed, she’ll keep coming back to life.”

“BOO!” Jenny popped out and kicked Sunni from the side. She jumped on Sunni’s chest and kicked her across the face with each word: “I – don’t – like – being – ignored!” She jumped off before Sunni could retaliate.

Sunni rubbed her cheeks and stood, glaring at the dancing Jenny Refractions. “Hmmmm…” She decided to try something: “I don’t see why you’re worth my time, Jennifer. You’re just a child that doesn’t know any better. Beating some sense into you would be pointless.”

“I am NO CHILD!” The Refractions faced her angrily. However, they were all facing random directions. “As you can see, I’m 25, not 5!”

“Yeah yeah.” Sunni kept her saber raised and navigated the mirror maze. The Refractions were turning to “face” her. “That’s why you’re playing these games instead of facing me like a grown-up.”

“Not MY fault you can’t find your way around a hall!” The mirrors shot beams that Sunni swiftly deflected with her saber.

“You probably couldn’t find your way to your classrooms! It’s a wonder you haven’t grown up.”

“Well, excuse me.” Sunni noticed a reflection facing her direction. Behind her was another one.
“But how many children have a big blossoming chest like-”

Sunni chucked a Psycho Sphere at one, it bounced off, so she ducked and watched it collide with the real Jennifer. “The bigger the target, the easier.” Sunni retorted. The light faded, so Sunni grabbed the Leader in psychic and yanked her over. “Perhaps this’ll jiggle some knowledge in your brain!” Sunni held Jennifer upside-down and shook her.

“U-u-u-u-u-u-u-u…” Jenny babbled like a bobbling child.

“Hee hee hee!” Mika giggled. “You’ll make a great mother, Sunni!”

“Hey, you got her!” Darcy beamed after recovering.

“Now’s your chance, Dar. Do a mind-trick.”

“NO NO!” Jennifer Flashed again and escaped. “Try to catch me!” With light on her feet, Jennifer zipped all around God’s Domain as a white blur. “Over here!” She appeared behind Sunni—zipped when she swung the saber. “Now here!” In front of Darcy, but gave her no time to prepare a psychic grip.

“Hee hee ha ha!” Jenny ran all the way down Mariejoa and back up, and from far away it looked like a white line spiraling up and down the mountain. “Wheeeeee!” Jenny zoomed for Sunni so fast, she may just cut through her. “WAAAAAACK!” Mary Goldenweek leaped in front and KICKED Jenny in the face, zapping her with a surge of electric. “HEEEEY! You can’t do that!”

“I can, too!” Mary showed the yellow crayon colored under her shoe. “I use Shock Crayon to run super fast!”

“I run faster than you!” Jenny zipped off, so Mary pursued. A white blur raced a green-and-yellow blur from everyone’s vision, it was a race between Light Feet and Lightning Feet. The two forces began to bump into each other, with Jennifer being stronger than Mary and knocking her down.
“You don’t deserve to have my mother’s name!” snapped Jenny. “Stupid Imaginary!” She leapt forth to stamp the painting child, but Sunni pulled her away.

“You okay, Mary?”

“I am! Let me go at her again!” Mary colored Glue Crayon on her hands and zipped around again.
She and Jenny chased each other, and when they were going to collide, Mary leaped and clamped her hands onto Jenny’s eyes.
“WAAAHH! I can’t see!”

“Don’t hit something hard!” Mary grinned, directing Jenny toward a building. Jenny pierced through the marble like it were nothing. “Huh?!”

“Nothing blocks the Light of God!” Jennifer allowed Mary to control her, not stopping at any building or statue she crashed through.

When they passed by the castle, Mary glanced at King Andrew. “Let’s see for sure!” She drove Jennifer toward the bad man that killed Cheren’s dad, but Andrew easily saw their movement and dodged. Mary directed Jenny to Andrew three more times before The King used the Octogan to Stop them.

“Thank you!” Sunni hovered above and used psychic to pull them toward, flying away, and Andrew couldn’t retaliate when Chris shot a Combustion Beam at him.

Sunni dropped Jenny and Mary beside Darcy before the latter pelted Jenny with physical chi-blocks. When the Stop wore off, Mary pulled her hands off Jenny’s face, and the Leader’s body bumped in the places Darcy hit, a delayed reaction to the chi-blocks. Darcy bound Jenny with psychic as the woman-child kicked her feet. “Let me gooo!”

“You will calm down.” Sunni waved at her face.

“No I will not!”

“You will calm down…” Sunni did it more softly.

“I will… calm down…” Jenny stopped squirming.

“You will remove the seals from Mika, Morgan, and Mew.”

“I will remove the seals from Mika, Morgan, and Mew.”

Darcy released the grip, and Jennifer calmly approached the three prisoners. She raised both hands—and clasped her fingers. “AAAHH!” The three screamed when the Crosses pierced.

“HA HA HA!” Jenny laughed. “Physical chi-blocks don’t work on me, and I have God to protect my head from brainwashing! But I’m going to punish you for trying to cheat! Time to spurt blood!” Jennifer tightened the bonds.

“MOM!” the girls cried.

“Huh? Wait a minute!” Jenny noticed the pink auras on the Crosses. Mew was the one responsible. “You can’t do that! My Crosses should’ve stabbed you!”

“It looks like Mew used his psychic to keep the Crosses away from his vitals, then he focused his chi around Mom and Aunt Morgan’s.” Darcy observed with a bright smile.

“Talk about delaying the inevitable!” Mika laughed nervously.

“NOOOO it’s not fair, it’s not fair!” Jennifer stomped her feet. “No one defies God’s will, I’m gonna-” Before she could strengthen the Crosses, Sunni leapt and sliced the Leader’s head clean off.

Mika, Morgan, and Darcy gaped as her head bounced on the ground and her body fell. Mew focused his power to keep the Crosses out of their flesh. “Oooooooaaaaaa…” The Holy Light shone, bringing Jenny to her feet, levitating the head, and reattaching it with spiritual glue. Sunni grit her teeth and sliced Jennifer to pieces, but her parts reattached. “Dang, you really are unkillable!”

“MEW MEW MEW!” Mew cried as more pressure was added to the Crosses, forcing him to use stronger psychic.

“I don’t think Mew is going to hold them for much longer!” Darcy yelled.

“Ah ha ha ha! That’s what you get for messing with me!” Jenny lit her feet with light and leaped to the top of God’s Castle. “But if you wanna see someone be killed, I’ll just kill ALL OF YOU!” A massive sun appeared in the sky, raining smaller suns upon the mountaintop. While all the combatants were defending their selves, the Great Sun was slowly lowering toward the town. “I BURN! Caaaan’t hooold meeee doooowwn…”

“What’s that crazy girl doing?!” Anthony yelled as Diancie blocked the suns. “She’ll burn herself and her friends!”

“Fortunately, my Octogan has the power to undo what has been done.” The King said. “I will revive my allies and restore this mountaintop.”

“Man, you are the royal King of Trolls!” Chris remarked.

“GRRRR!” Sunni flew up to Jennifer and sliced her head off, the sun vanishing as it fell. The angels sung as the head reattached. “Not uhn!” Jennifer respawned the sun, so Sunni chopped off the arms and kicked her down to a lower roof. With another heavenly song, the arms reattached again.

“MEEEEEEEWW!” The Crosses grew stronger each time Jennifer died.

“Sunni, stop killing her!” Darcy cried.

Sunni clenched her teeth, looking between her mom and the descending sun. She couldn’t just let everyone die, but she would hate to let Mom and Morgan die. “…Wait!” Sunni flew down to them and cut a Creative Summons, calling Ghost Dude from Foster’s.

“YO! If it isn’t my favorite kidney carrier!” the cool skateboard ghost flashed a grin.

“Ghost Dude, can you make those three intangible? We need those Crosses to get through without killing them.”

“That’s gonna be tough, dude. But I’ll try!” Ghost Dude brought the three close and wrapped arms around them. He focused his ecto energy around them without touching the Crosses sticking partway in their flesh.

“EVERYONE, KEEP THE SUN BACK!” Sunni and Darcy projected a psychic shield, MaKayla and Miyuki cast Rewind on the sun, Wendy cast a pink shield at it, and Index contributed her own lightbending. After a minute, Ghost Dude managed to make the psychics intangible.

“MEW!” Mew released his psychic and the Crosses shot through without hurting them.

“IT WORKED!” Sunni shot up and STABBED Jennifer in the chest. The sun disappeared, but Jenny Resurrected.

“You little cheater! I’ll just use another Sealing!”
Sunni beheaded the Leader before flying to the pavement before the castle. “I think you need a spanking!” Sunni cut another Creative Summons. She channeled a great surge of psychic, and a tremendous red dragon with two mouths burst into being.

“SLIFER THE SKY DRAGON?!” Morgan gaped.

“Oh, didn’t you know?” Sunni cocked a brow. “I tamed him a week ago! Lucky I didn’t sic him on you.”

“Grrrr- hu!” When Jennifer recovered, she gasped at the humongous dragon. Slifer charged a mighty beam in his mouth and burned it against Jennifer’s unending body. She was in a soot-filled crater on the castle’s roof, but the light revived her again. “OOF!” Slifer struck her. She came to life. “OOF!” Slifer struck her, she came to life.

“Slifer the Sky Dragon attacks all enemies in its wake, and doesn’t leave until they’re all gone.” Sunni smirked. “Which means as long as you keep coming back, Slifer will NEVER leave you alone.”

“OOF!” Jennifer died, she came to life. “OOF!” She died again, but was brought back on her feet.

“Have a nice eternity, Jenny.” Sunni sheathed her lightsaber.

“THAT’S my little girl!” Mika cheered.

“WOO, Sunni!” Darcy followed. “I guess I wasn’t much help after all…”

Sunni placed a hand on her shoulder and smiled bright. “I missed having your help, Darcy! After this, let’s train together again!”

“He he!” Darcy blushed. She glanced up at Slifer, who now created a rhythm between his breath attacks and the angel chorus restoring Jenny. “So, we’re just going to listen to that the whole battle?”

“SILENCE!” Meloetta appeared and cast a Silence Shield over the two. “There! That should make it less annoying.”

“Works for me.” Sunni shrugged. And so, the war continued, with Jennifer trapped in an endless loop of dying and Resurrecting. (End song.)

“Huff!” Midna dropped the Shadow Hold. “I hope she stays out of the game a while. Dillon, we need to locate Daphne and get the others’ shadows back.”

“Dillon, watch out!” Danika yelled when Isabelle sent Akita to attack him, but thwarted by Mario. When Isabelle wrestled Danika for her dagger, Nolan York tackled the zombie. “Nolan!”

“Hey Dani, sorry to interrupt, but I’m dealing with an issue of my own.”

“Danika!” The woman looked up in terror to find Dracula. “My love! Fate brought us together again…”

“You led DRACULA here?!” Danika shouted.

“It wasn’t my fault!”

“Danika… are these the people you were telling me about?” Isabelle looked at Nolan and Dillon. “Are they your husband and son?”
“Yes, we are.” Nolan answered.

Bella smiled. “You’ve been taking care of my daughter all this time… Has she been happy?”

“More happy than I’ve ever been.” Danika said.

“…I’m glad to hear that.” Bella closed her eyes. “I hope I get to see the others soon.” Her body glowed with a soft light. Nolan climbed off, staring in awe as Isabelle’s spirit rose to Heaven, her green eyes beautiful and full of love for her children. The Inferius body crumbled, exposing Daniel’s corpse underneath.

“What… just happened?” Dillon stared.

“So, the Inferi DO have a weakness.” Andrew observed. “If the souls feel a great sense of joy or relief… the spell on them breaks. But it is such a minor weakness that will become irrelevant soon.”

“And what will relieve YOUR soul?” Rachel asked. “Seeing everything you used to love crumble apart by your hands?”

“Everything was ALREADY crumbling before my eyes! I am the only one who can stop it!”

“Look us in the eye and say that, Andrew. Take off your helmet and let me see you say that with your own lips.”

“Hmm…” Andrew bowed his head and placed both hands on the helmet. Chris, Aurora, and other operatives watched with great suspense. The King removed his helmet and crown: he had messy brown hair, slightly tan and dirty skin, and a single blue eye, while the left was replaced by the Octogan. His hairstyle was extremely recognizable by his biggest fans.

“I…I knew it.” Chris gasped as memories returned to him. “I kicked your helmet off… and saw your face. …Numbuh 100…”

“It really is him…” Eva whispered.

“But… why?…” whispered Aurora.

“When I was young, I resented this life.” Andrew spoke. “I was born as Prince of the World… My father chose me… Every day, he put this… THING in my hand and forced me into pain worse than any kid can imagine!” He seethed and cupped a hand over the Octogan to ease the rage. “I didn’t want to follow my father’s… insane beliefs. All I wanted… was to lead the Kids Next Door.” His right eye teared. “They… were my true family! I wanted to lead them forever. I wanted to leave Mariejoa and live with my brother and Mom in their average little house. But after my fake decommissioning, I used the Octogan and continued to watch them. I was proud of the progress they were making… but it was all for nothing!

“I watched my organization become filled with benders and nonhumans, not knowing they were slowly rising to their own destruction. I should’ve been proud the organization was becoming more respected and more diverse… but the Octogan showed me it was never meant to be that way. The Kids Next Door were not meant to evolve beyond shunning healthy food and eating candy. They were not meant to combat powerful entities or BECOME powerful entities… All this chaos was destroying the universe. That’s why… I need to undo what the ancient gods have done and separate the worlds.”

“Andrew, it was never our fault these evil powerful entities appeared.” Rachel stated. “But the only way to stop them was to become stronger than they were. We had no choice but to grow up. That’s exactly how we’re going to stop the Apocalypse. What you’re doing isn’t going to work, Andrew. Please… take the Octogan out and join us."

Andrew looked at the ground and panted, contemplating. …He scowled and faced up. “My vision is greater than all of yours. I can’t stop now.”

“Then I guess we’ll need to force you.” Matthew Dimalanta drank Purple Flurp and blasted a huge cloud of gas over Andrew. The King blew it away with a gentle outpour of energy—Maddy Murphy leaped forth in Haki Fury to seize the gem in his eye.

At that instant, Andrew vanished and was replaced by Rob Lucci, startling Maddy as the assassin punched her away. Lucci stepped toward Maddy with rage in his sharp green eyes. “You didn’t think I was dead, did you?”

“I saw that trick coming before you even conceived it.” Andrew said. “Just now, I froze time and went to bring Lucci for a rematch. And speaking of reunions,” He snapped his fingers and summoned the Inferi of Nigel Uno and Don Quixote Doflamingo, Sr..

“Fufufufufu!” Doffy grinned. “I heard the news that Cherry was dead! A student is only as good as his teacher.” He slashed strings at Rachel, who blocked with Haki in her sword.

“I’ll help ya, Lass!” Fanny stomped Doffy with a Fire Torpedo, doing little to scorch his body.

“Dad…” Chris felt emotional, facing his undead father.

“Chris… I’m sorry I couldn’t train you as well as Fanny.” Against his free will, Nigel turned into a dragon and spat flames at his son. Chris regretfully blasted Combustion Beams that wouldn’t damage the dragon’s immortal corpse.

“Ahh, reunions happening all around!” Henry beamed with glee. “I suppose you know how it feels, don’t you, Wendy?”

“You’re not planning to tell me where Chelia is, are you?” Wendy asked seriously.

“Section 6 of Not Fearing Your Foes is don’t comply with their demands. You can run all around the world and cry an ocean of tears, but still I won’t tell.”

“I’m done with crying.” Wendy said firmly. “I’m done with feeling bad or feeling pitied. I’m a wizard, and I’m going to fight you!” She raised her Lamia Scale.

“So be it. Then it’s time I be rid of my fears once and for all!” (Play “Power-Hungry Fool” from Smash Bros. Brawl!)

Boss fight: Henry Churchill

Power Levels: Wendy – 3030. Henry – 6973

Wendy ran from the swarm of papers pursuing her and cast Incendio behind her, but Henry spawned in front and cast paper shurikens to lightly cut her skin. Wendy cast an Aero shield around herself to breeze any papers away, only for Henry to sap the shield away with Vacuum Papers. “When you’re as rich as me, Wendell, you can afford all sorts of exotic papers. Who says dead trees don’t retain an ounce of life? Even poison oak.” Henry unveiled papers with purple poison tips. He shaped them into planes and sent them at Wendy, who cast Incendio to burn the planes.

“The only thing that can hurt him is fire.” Wendy figured. “I guess I’ll have to keep using Incendio.” Papers glided around and tried to latch onto her, so Wendy burst an air bubble to push them off. She ran circles around Henry to form a tornado, the paper man’s body scattering and swirling in the vortex. “Ventus Tria Incendio!” She cast a fiery tornado that was sucked into the larger one, setting fire to all papers inside.

When the flames eventually dispersed, there was a ball of soggy-looking papers floating in the center. “And they thought a paper man wouldn’t last in a world of superpowers.” Henry’s wry face peeped through the bubble. “But a paper man with fire-resistant Sea Tree paper is a different story.”

“Then I’ll try Glacius!” Wendy cast ice at Henry, but the Leader easily sent Sun Papers to counter the cold. Through the steam that resulted, Maple Papers glided down and stuck around Wendy’s body, including her face. Wendy blew a strong breath to push the paper off, then saw a paper with a Japanese symbol coming.

“CHILD, JUMP AWAY!” Carla cried.

Wendy gasped and jumped far back with an air boost before the Paper Bomb exploded. Wendy fell on her back and had a hard time getting up with the papers sticking her to the ground. “Transfiguro!” She turned the papers into mice that scampered off of her, just in time to dodge the large Paper Drill Henry dried to impale through her. “Papers are like ants.” Henry said. “One is nothing to fear, but put a bunch together, they’re simply backbreaking.” Henry shot textbooks from his body, pelting Wendy’s face three times before she cast Reditio to shoot the books back, but they merely reentered his body. “Why, make a cluster of ants big enough and they’ll crush your bones.” Henry expanded his body to terrific size as a giant textbook emerged.

Wendy and Carla gaped at the Textbook History of Textbooks, 20 feet tall. They ran 30 feet away and narrowly avoided when Henry threw it. “How many papers can you possibly HAVE in that grotesque body of yours?!” Carla shouted.

“As much as the imagination is limitless.” Henry extracted ten rolled-up Paper Bombs and threw them around Wendy, who sealed her and Carla in a Protego to block the explosion.

“WENDY!” Vaati yelled, having shattered Voldemort and Lestrange with Reducto. “Logia benders have infinite spaces inside their bodies! They’re able to contain enormous amounts of their own element! But I’m sure he has a limit. Paper isn’t as common as air.” He refocused on his fight when the two Death Eaters respawned.

“Then I just need to destroy all the papers I can!” When Henry shot rolled-up textbooks, Wendy cast Incendio on them, but the World Leader threw Sea Papers to douse the flames and reuse what remained of the books.

“I hate to treat literature in such a manner.” Henry opened a copy of Fairy Sisters at Wendy and shot each individual page to deal papercuts. “Unless they consist of colorfully-haired characters like these girls.”

Wendy cast Ventus Tria Incendio to burn all those papers in one fell swoop. “What do you mean by that, anyway?”

“When I was little, I had a terrible fear of those with colorful hair, due to a nightmare wherein a blue-haired witch boiled me alive. Now I realize that nightmare was the very prophecy the Octogon predicted. The only one I have to fear is you, Girl With Blue Hair. But I will not allow you to kill me.”

“I don’t WANT to kill you, Henry! Please, tell me where Chelia is and I’ll leave you alone.”

“If that is your promise… I will let you see her.” Henry’s body expanded as a lump emerged from his papery chest.

Wendy was horrified to see it was a slumbering Chelia. “Sh-She’s been… inside you?!”

“Sleeping like a baby.” Henry pulled Chelia back in. “We planned to have Daphne’s apprentice alter Chelia’s brain so she would consider us her friends and then take her God Chi with the Sun Chi Lantern. Sadly, we had a delay in that plan, so I chose to keep Chelia inside me and use her as my trump card. So, if you are able to strike me with a fatal blow, she may share the pain.”

“GIVE CHELIA BACK!” Wendy leapt and dove at Henry, only to go straight through and pull some papers along.

“I know what your greatest fear is, Wendell: to end up alone and be responsible for the deaths of your dearest friends. You now know what a monster your father is, the dark powers you inherited from him. But I’ll be glad to end your cursed life.” He launched Poison Papers, which Wendy burned with fire.

“Accio Chelia!” Wendy aimed her wand at Henry, but her friend wouldn’t come out.

“Child, that spell can’t summon sentient creatures to you.” Carla reminded.

Henry molded Paper Bombs into planes to send them to Wendy like missiles. She raced around Mariejoa and stayed far enough away from their individual explosions. Wendy gasped when she stepped in a patch of Paper Bombs, but Carla was quick to grab her master and pull her up to safety.

“Psst, Wendy!”

She heard a voice inside her right ear. “D-Dad?”

Carla noticed the tiny Minish in the ear. “What are you doing in there?”

“I managed to Apparate Voldemort and Bellatrix to a desert. Before they return, let me help you save Chelia. Place me inside one of Henry’s books.”

“Okay, Dad…” Wendy noticed the History of Textbooks was still on the ground. “Why hasn’t he absorbed that one, yet?”

“Perhaps because it is so large, it takes some time.” Carla assumed.

“Then I have an idea.” Wendy raced back to the massive textbook. “Just so you can’t use this one again: Reducio!” Wendy shrunk it to the size of a regular textbook. Her Minish father hid on the top of the cover while Wendy set fire to the bottom of it. “Have a gift, Henry!” She used Leviosa to throw the book back to Henry, but the paperbender wrapped Vacuum Papers over it and threw them elsewhere.

“Silly child, I was keeping my eye on that nasty rebel. Trying to infiltrate me, are you? Not today!” Henry cast more Maple Papers that Wendy burned with Incendio, only for a Paper Bomb to fly in the fire and blow Wendy several feet. Henry glided toward her, but Wendy hopped up and blew her Sky Dragon Roar to scatter his papers. Henry reformed and extracted huge thick paper folders from his person. As Wendy destroyed them with Reducto, Henry announced, “I shan’t be absorbing any more papers into my being. As long as Chelia is in my captivity, I’ll be safe from your wrath."

“Guess again, Henry.” Vaati Apparated a few feet behind Wendy, his arm around Chelia.

“WHAT?!” Henry’s paper eyes nearly popped out.

“Dad!” Wendy was surprised as well.

“After I minimized, I sent a magic clone to inform you of my plan, Wendy.” Vaati explained. “That same clone was the one you tried to send inside him. When Wendy blew that Cyclone Roar just then, I seized the chance to meld my Logia form with it and grab one of Henry’s scattered papers. I must say, the inside of a Logia’s dimension is fascinating.”

“Oh, you want fascinating, Mr. Red Eye? Then I’ll FASCINATE YOU!” Henry blew high above Mariejoa and opened his Logia dimension. His body growing round and wide, all the battle’s participants were gazing up into a vortex of Paper Bombs. “It will be nice to rid these from my insides.”

“Seriously, we just did this!” Sunni and the psychics projected a shield.

“Sirius is dead!” Morgan joked.

“No, I’m right here!” the Sirius Inferius stated.

“Oh! Well, never mind then.”

“I fear that may not be enough. Child, quick, cast Protego!” Carla pled.

“I can’t create a shield that large! Unless…” Wendy glanced down at Chelia’s skirt. “…Accio Chelia’s Lamia Scale!” She aimed her wand a random direction. The group was growing nervous and impatient at the slowly-descending Paper Bomb Collection, but to her utter surprise, another Lamia Scale flew to Wendy’s hand.

“I can’t believe that worked!” Carla exclaimed.

“Then I hope this works: PROTEGO ENGORGIO!” Wendy cast the spell with both wands, sealing God’s Domain inside a massive pink bubble. The Paper Bombs flashed and lit the mountaintop with the powerful explosion. But thanks to the unbreakable shield, they all went unscathed.

The shield dispelled as Henry descended to the ground. “You’re very clever, little Hairstress. But if you are true to your word, then you will leave me alone… won’t you?”

“…Yes.” Wendy bowed her head. “Now that my friend is safe, I have no quarrel with you.”

“Hm hm hm… but that does not mean I will leave you alone, Wendy.” Papers stood from Henry’s body and threatened to rush at her. “If there is even the slightest chance you are my killer… I will make sure to be rid of you.”

“And what is the chance… she isn’t?” a voice asked from behind him. (End song.)

Henry turned. He gasped with the greatest horror: there stood Nagisa Shiota, whose sky-blue hair was hanging down, and his blue eyes shining with murderous intent. There was a katana locked firmly in his hand. “It… can’t be…” His papers quivering, Henry turned back to Wendy. “T-T-Two… blue-haired girls?!!”

Nagisa stepped forward. “Eyah!” Henry flinched at hearing his footsteps.

“I know what your greatest fear is…” Nagisa spoke with a devilish smile. The world seemed to darken in Henry’s vision. Only Nagisa’s eyes, hair, and smile were visible on his shadowy form. “To think that you can’t escape fate… the strong possibility of death. Especially to a cold-blooded person like me.”

“No-o-o…” Henry fearfully stepped backward. “It ca-an’t be… true…” He glanced back at Wendy.

“You were so fixated on one… you didn’t even suspect another.” Nagisa was getting closer. “All your efforts to defy your fate gone to waste.” He raised the sword.

“Huff-huff, huff-f-f-f. . .” She was as terrifying as the witch from his dream.

“I bet… you taste delicious.” Nagisa licked his lips.

He threw the sword up. Henry faced it. Nagisa leaped, grabbed the hilt, and sliced down the middle of Henry’s body perfectly. Wendy was struck with horror when both halves of the body fell apart.

After light returned from the dark fantasy, Henry’s body halves were revealed to be quivering on the ground as scattered papers. “You… didn’t hurt him?” Wendy asked.

“I was eavesdropping on the fight.” Nagisa explained. “I study how to knock people out by using fear and wanted to see if I could pull it off. Normally, I only use a rubber knife.” He held the katana up. “But since he was a Logia, I knew it wouldn’t hurt. Mrs. Uno, you can have your sword back!”

“Thank you, Nagisa!” Rachel Uno ran up, reclaimed the sword, and resumed clashing with Doflamingo.

“That was… really impressive!” Wendy smiled. “You looked so brave when you did that!”

“It was nothin’. So, is that the friend you were talking about?” They looked to Vaati, who was knelt on the ground with Chelia in his arms.

Vaati removed some papers under Chelia’s clothes. “It seems Henry was numbing her senses with Powder Paper. Powder Trees make you very sleepy indeed. She should wake up soon.”

“Her hair…” Morgiana approached Chelia curiously. Their magenta hair made them very similar. When Morgiana rubbed Chelia’s legs, she confirmed, “She’s a Fanalis.”

“A Fanalis?” Wendy questioned.

“Do you know her, Morg?” asked Nagisa.

“No, but I can tell. We should bring her someplace safe until the battle is over.”

“I’m so glad she’s okay…” Wendy sighed with relief.

“I bet she’ll be glad to see you again.” Nagisa told her. “You were awesome just now! I bet you’ll make a great operative.”
“That means a lot! I sure didn’t think I’d meet another blue-haired girl, though.”

“I’m a boy, actually.”

“Ack!” Wendy blushed. “I didn’t mean to call you that!!”

“Ha ha ha! It’s no big deal.”

Morgiana stared at their playful interaction in silence. The world turned dark around her now. Only Wendy and Nagisa were highlighted. What is this… feeling in my chest? Is it… jealousy? That girl with blue hair… am I to consider her my rival?

Voldemort and Bellatrix Apparated close by. “My Lord!” The latter gasped when Voldemort fell to his knees, his artificial body decaying.

“What’s happening to him?” Wendy asked.

“I assume it’s his soul.” Vaati reasoned. “Voldemort created seven Horcruxes in his time, all of which were destroyed, leaving his soul mortally wounded. It seems even his Inferius body can’t support itself.”

“It’s a sad state of affairs, isn’t it, Tom?” Albus Dumbledore remarked. “An eternal life of pain.”

“How DARE you!” Bellatrix hissed. “Mocking my master when he is so ill!”

“Half the World Leaders are down.” Vaati declared. “Keep doing your best, Wendy, and we will defeat the others!”

“Absolutely!”

“AH ha ha ha ha ha!” Davy Jones laughed at the three children before him, namely the black-haired girl holding Water Fists and standing beside Manaphy. “So, the Ocean Princess has had a daughter-ah! What luscious fruit they have wrought! Tell me, Melody Jackson…” His beaming tentacled face became a deathly glare. “Do ya fear death?”

“You wouldn’t know. I guess my mom didn’t kill you good enough.” Melody waved twin spirals of water around Jones. The water glowed golden as she channeled spiritbending.

“Aaaaahhh…” Jones sighed and displayed an expression of eternal relief. “BAAAAH!” He pulsed and blew the water off, whipping the kids and sending Manaphy several feet. “Spiritbending will not heal MY soul!”

“Mana…” Manaphy weakly recovered. “MANA!” He was grabbed by Truman Kirman.

“Who are you?!” Melody shouted. “What’s your problem?!”

“All I need is a single tear.” Truman forcefully squeezed the Sea Prince and held a cracked yellow diamond under his tear duct. Manaphy leaked a tear and dripped it into the diamond’s crack.

The diamond glowed as the crack miraculously healed. It floated to the air; the kids and Jones gaped as a body of light grew from the diamond. Three times the size of an adult human, the humanoid shape regained solidity and quaked the ground. A giant yellow woman with high-heel boots and a diamond on the chest: Yellow Diamond. “It’s about time.”
I had the Jennifer fight planned for a while. Such a funny way to go out. X) Stay tuned for more Inferius.

Chapter 79: Beacon of Hope

Washington

Jessie Sidney blew Sleep Bubbles over the Inferi of James McGarfield and Carter Pewterschmidt, but the sleepless presidents popped them. “Don’t have any other tricks, Jessie?!” James retorted. “You ain’t nothin’ in the real world!”

“Nothing but a way better president than you were.” Shelly Johnson threw sand spheres over the two Inferi using her Fury Mode, crushing them with the Sand Coffin. “Of course, he still ain’t as tough as me.” She winked.

“Shorts?!” Shelly gasped. The Inferi broke free of the Sand Tombs and turned to attack her. That was before trees burst from the ground and encased the Inferi their selves.

“Why don’t you leave the capturing to me, Human?” a girl’s echoing voice spoke.

Shelly looked up behind her. “YIKES! Where did you come from?!”

Jessie was dropped on a field in the outskirts of town, where Sheila, Suki, and Kimaya had already been taken. “Seven Lights.” Medusa stood before them beside a man bound in several locks. “It’s amazing how close we’ve come to the climax of this prophecy.”

“Man, it’s THIS bitch again.” Kimaya said. “But that guy beside you… that’s-”

“Master Xehanort. Trapped in the most horrible locking spells known to man. Except for the Time Gate, of course.” Medusa smirked. “The power of your Keyblades should rid him of the binds effortlessly.”

“Why the hell would we do that?” Jessie questioned.

“Because he’s one of the Thirteen Darknesses. You really have no choice if you kids have any hope of surviving. So, be good little Keyblade wielders and free this bald little man.” The goddess stroked Xehanort’s head sensually.

“Sigh… Fine, then.” Kimaya raised her Keyblade as the other Lights drew theirs. They aimed them at Xehanort’s binds as beams of light connected them with the Keyblades. “I’m seriously starting to wonder if this is a good idea.”
“I’m still Groot.” Suki still didn’t understand anything going on here.

God’s Domain

Chris and Aurora Uno used their Fury Modes and sent a Mega Combustion and Fire-Ice Beam at King Andrew. The King combined Armament Haki with his Octogan’s beam to counter both forces, leaving His Majesty unscathed. “You CAN’T be serious!” Aurora exclaimed.

“Should you not be helping your friends?” Andrew pointed behind them, indicating Maddy’s rematch with Rob Lucci. The former used all the strength in her Haki Fury while Lucci was going Primal against her.

“Maddy defeated Lucci before, she’ll beat him again!” Chris assured.

“Will she now?” King Andrew flashed the Octogan, and instantly Chris, Aurora, and Maddy’s Fury Modes vanished.

“What?!” yelped Maddy. “What happened to my Haki Fury?!”

“The Octogan has altered your memories and prevented you from remembering how to enter your Fury Forms. You have even forgot most of your training.”

“Then we’ll just have to train them again!” Zach Murphy declared. “On the potties, all of you.”

The three kids were sitting on toddler-size potty-training toilets. “I DIDN’T MEAN THIS KIND OF TRAINING!” Andrew shouted.

“HEY!” Maddy beamed. “I remember how to use my Fury again!” She lit her body with Haki flames, using swift speed to resume landing blows on Lucci.

“GAAAH!” Andrew cried from the Octogan’s rage. “This is impossible! ! Why didn’t the Octogan see something so foolish?! Nigel Uno, BURN THEM!”

“Kids, behind you!” In his dragon form, Nigel blew fire breath over his children, but Eva Jackson beheaded her late cousin with a giant Water Slice.

“This fight will never end as long as the Inferi keep respawning!” Eva yelled.

“They’re powered by shadows, so maybe my lightbending can do something.” Index lit her body with white light.

“AAAAH!” This caused Wendy and Sector SA to catch on fire. “Index, don’t lightbend!” Nagisa ordered. “We need to wait until we get our shadows back.”

“Where do you think Aunt Daphne’s hiding?” Dillon asked. “She must have the shadows with her.”

“I’m feeling a ton of Shadow Chi from that direction.” Midna pointed to a distant, one-floor building that had a glass roof. “Daphne may be hiding in there.”

“Come on, Midna, let’s go bring her down!”

“I’m coming too, Dillon!” Danika stated. “I have a score to settle with Aunt Daphne.”

“So do I. Just leave it to me, Mom, stay out here and keep the Inferi busy. I got Firstborn power with me.”
“Would you be saying that if your father offered to help?”

“Honey, I’m a little preoccupied myself!” Nolan yelled, laying an Armament beatdown on Dracula. Behind him, Doflamingo tried to stab strings, only for Rachel to slice off the puppeteer’s hands and then his head, which only grew back.

“And honestly, I wouldn’t have.” Dillon winked. With that, he and Midna ran for the aforementioned building.

“Ugh! I hate being the stay-at-home mother…” Dani sighed.

Rose Garden

The chaotic fighting hadn’t spread here, yet. Daphne Anderson’s rose garden was bathed in a dim gray light, due to the ceiling window that filtered it that way, highlighting the color on the gray roses. Daphne was calmly picking the petals off a black rose, connected to a simple criminal somewhere in a distant city. Before she set her fingers on the last petal, Daphne opened her eyes and faced up. Dillon York and Midna were at the entrance. “We meet again.” she spoke softly.

“Are you the one who’s controlling all the zombies?” Dillon asked.

“All the World Leaders share control of the Inferi. However, destroying us will be a pointless effort. Only the one who developed the potion can command the Inferi to fall back into rest. Of course, if I told you where he was, you still intend to fight me, don’t you? Your hatred for me burns clearly in your eyes.”

“What you did to your sister was cruel. Zombifying her and forcing her to kill her own daughter? What happened to make you like this, Aunt Daphne?”

“It was a lesson I learned in my childhood… the world is filled with disappointment and regret. If there ever is a great beacon of hope… it will fade away and be a forgotten memory. Look at your leader: Cheren Uno died of his own and left absolutely nothing behind for his followers. Just like his father.”

“He left behind a legacy!” Dillon shouted. “He made a new Kids Next Door that was free for anyone and everyone! He inspired us to keep moving forward despite fear of death. And even now… I know he wouldn’t just leave us behind. He’ll come back… so as his fellow operatives, we plan to clear a way for him!”

“Simple boy… you know the only reason I was defeated last time was because I allowed you to win. In Arctic Prison, The King’s son, Abram Johnson was trapped. Despite his ability to single-handedly free himself, he chose to stay where he thought he would be safe. That's why The King entrusted me with going in and dragging him out.”

“What do you mean he could’ve freed himself?” Midna asked. “Does this have anything to do with that energy I felt moments ago?”

“We World Leaders have come too far to let you jeopardize our plan. I’m going to have to kill you, Dillon. This time… I won’t hold back.”

“Heh heh heh.” Dillon grinned deviously. “I’m impressed, Daphne. You actually showed a little emotion.”

“I don’t follow…”
Dillon narrowed his eyes, his smirk devilish. “Fear.” (Play “Shadow Queen 2” from Paper Mario: TTYD!)

Boss fight: Daphne Anderson

Power Levels: Dillon – 2032. Daphne – 8008

Giant gray shadow hands emerged from the walls and smashed down on Dillon, who hid in Veil and swiftly maneuvered around the garden. When he emerged in a patch of yellow roses, smaller hands sprouted up and tried to drag him down by the legs, but Midna clutched Dillon in her Hair Hand and pulled him from their grasp. They turned and gasped when Shaydes expanded into a grotesque gooey blob, moaning in despair as she tried to snatch them in her oozing mouth. Midna dropped Dillon and stabbed three tentacles from her hair into the shadow to split it apart.

“Both of you are shameful, honestly.” Daphne said as her shadow reformed. “Dillon is so weak that he’s forced to rely on a Firstborn’s power… and Midna is a god who ignores the rules set by them and battles mortals of her own element. No different from Malladus Uno or Demise – gods who overstep their boundaries are undeserving of their title.”

“At least I know how to restrain myself.” Midna reasoned. She entered Dillon’s shadow and passed a portion of her chi to him, and he spread his shadow around the room as clones emerged. The clones all dove at Daphne and swallowed her in a cluster, but the World Leader had slithered away with Veil to blow Gray Fog over them. Dillon popped up behind her and punched Daphne, but the clone became mist as the real Daphne stretched her shadowy arms from the window ceiling and grabbed Dillon.

The long paper-thin fingers wrapped around the boy and smothered him in gray, working with Mario to tear them apart and escape. Dillon gasped for breath and was already forced to run from the Dead Hands on the floor. A circle of Dead Hands surrounded him, so Dillon expanded a Shadow Shockwave with Midna’s chi and had Mario zip around and tear them up. Dillon saw Shaydes’ oozing form grow on the ceiling and sent Mario to rip her to pieces, finding Daphne at the core and gnawing her chest.

Daphne blew Mario off with Shadow Breath and landed softly on her feet thanks to her shadow’s aid. “You should watch what you eat.” Daphne said, indicating Mario’s graying body. “You should’ve known my Gray Shade was contagious.”

Not to me, Sister! I developed an immunity! Mario flew behind Daphne and bit her rear, the Leader flinching as Dillon snickered. Dillon sunk into Veil and emerged behind Daphne, who ordered Shaydes to bite, only to learn it was a Shadow Clone, as was the one that dove from her left. Daphne gasped—Dillon grabbed her ankles and was staring up her skirt. He pulled the Leader in Veil during her sheepish moment and laid punches on her, throwing her against a wall when finished.

“Emotions are a bane to any woman.” Dillon smirked. “Especially ones that aren’t used to them.”

“In that case, we should’ve brought Harvey to fight her.” Midna commented from the shadow.

“Disciplining you won’t come easy, it seems.” said Daphne. “Time to make use of the shadows who couldn’t become Inferi.” Five shadows grew up from the roses and flew into hers as Daphne grew up to the ceiling. The pale woman threw punches that would expand Shaydes’ fist and crush her adversary, Dillon dodging the hits and expanding a Shadow Shockwave so Mario would tear at...
Daphne easily blew the shadow off with Gray Breath and used her bending to expand the size of the roses’ shadows’ thorns. Dillon had to carefully slither around a thicket of shade thorns—“Ack!” he was pricked by one, then Daphne moved the thorns around to slice Dillon’s clothing further.

Midna expanded a barrier to block the shadow thorns out. “Are you okay, Dillon?”

“Midna, I’m gonna need more power to beat this lady. She’ll just get stronger if she absorbs more shadows.”

“I don’t want to overwhelm your body with God Chi. And besides, she’s right, it’s against our virtues to go all out.”

“Midna, playing by the rules isn’t gonna matter if we lose! You aren’t just a Firstborn, you’re a teammate, so you need to do your best to help us win!”

“Don’t you think I want to?! I’m just afraid of letting my power run rampant. Then I’ll be no different than King Andrew or his—”

“No taking breaks.” Daphne dealt an uppercut from the floor under their feet and blew the two apart. Afterwards, a swarm of Dead Hands rose from the floor and caught Dillon midair, about to drag him underneath before Midna sliced him free.

“That’s it!” Dillon yelped. “I can absorb my friends’ shadows and fight back! I wonder if she hid them in the roses like those other shadows. Mario, search around for them!” His shadow obeyed and glided under the rose stems, leaving Midna as his temporary shadow as he Veiled to avoid Gray Shadow Stabs, which penetrated the wall. Mario was wrestling with Daphne’s shadows in the garden, and sensing this, Midna stretched her Hair Hand into the shadows to strike the Gray Shades. Mario found the shadows of Chris, Anthony, and MaKayla, bringing them for Dillon to absorb.

“Huuurrr!” His body turned slightly dark as he grew in size.

“The strength that the shadows’ masters possess becomes yours when you absorb their shadow,” Midna recapped. “But be careful, Dillon. Too many shadows can result in Chi Overload.”

“Good thing I have you.” Dillon quickly sunk into Veil, coming around Daphne’s right, the World Leader threw a Shade Fist, but merely hit a clone while the real Dillon punched the back of her head. Dillon submerged again, and Daphne was pelted by Shade Fists from multiple directions, ending with Mario’s arms grabbing the giant woman and slamming her against the rose-covered ground. With that, Dillon cast Shadow Possession on Daphne and squeezed her to force the shadows out.

“AAAH!” Dillon was attacked by other gray shadows in Daphne’s garden, breaking his hold. Daphne expanded the size of the gray roses’ shadows and ensnared the boy in a wrapping of thorns. “If a black rose dies, a gray rose blooms in the garden.” Daphne linked Dillon with a black rose. “A black rose blooms when someone is close to death. Do you see all these black roses, Dillon? They represent you and your friends.” She picked the petals. “This means that your fate is truly inevitable.”

“It’s one thing to live in fear of fate.” Midna extended five Hair Hands to tear the thorns away from Dillon. “But it’s another thing to enforce that fate based on your fears.” When Dillon was rescued, he severed the binds between him and the rose and threw a Shade Fist at Daphne, who Veiled.
“Very well.” Numerous normal-size Daphne clones appeared around the room, picking a black rose. “Then see if you can stop someone else’s fate. I’ve linked my shadow with one of your friends.” Indeed, all the clones’ shadows connected at the exit and stretched outside, likely bound to a friend. The still-enlarged Dillon stomped each Daphne he could, but all were clones, and even worse they kept shifting position and respawning.

“Owww!” Dillon was forced to release his three friends’ shadows when he could no longer hold the power. “Darn it, if only Sheila was here! I could borrow her shadow and go White Shadow.”

“Hold on, that girl from Sector SA was a lightbender!” Midna realized. “Her shadow must be in here somewhere!”

“Yeah! Mario, hurry, find Index’s shadow!” Once again, his shadow explored under the stems while Midna punched at the Daphne clones with Hair Hand. After 10 seconds, Mario returned with four shadows that belonged to Sector SA, and with Index’s shadow in the mix, Dillon shone bright white. “YES! Time to bring light back to this garden!” Dillon blew White Shadow Breath and shunned all the clones. The real Daphne emerged from the bars of the ceiling window, giving Dillon the chance to throw a White Fist at her.

Daphne hit the floor as Dillon blew White Breath directly in her face, and in her weak moment, he expanded a White Shockwave as Mario sunk his light-imbued teeth into her body. “Light may fight the darkness, Dillon, but it cannot fight the dead.” Gray shadows flew in from the entrance and the window, absorbing into Daphne’s body as she grew beyond the ceiling window. Towering high above Mariejoa, Daphne blew Gray Breath into the dawning sky and made a dim shade thicker than clouds.

“HOLY CRAP!” Danika gaped.

Dillon used Shadow Glide to fly up Daphne’s body and pelt her with White Fists, but with her superior strength, she smacked and smashed him to the ground. Chris Uno attempted to blast a Combustion Beam, but King Andrew jumped in the line of fire and defended his ally without suffering damage. “Darn it!” Dillon panted. “She’s too much for me this time!”

Don’t give up, my son! Cheshire split from Danika’s body and entered the remains of the rose garden. She located all the kids’ and adults’ shadows, and on her command they flew into Dillon to increase his shadowy size once again.

“I’ll keep you from overheating!” Midna yelled from the core of his combined shadow. “Hurry, Dillon! All these are the shadows of your friends and supporters! They’re rooting for you, so take their feelings and attack her with light!”

Yeah man, show her Sector V Style! Shadow Chris cheered.

Do it like I taught ya, son! Shadow Nolan cheered.

Give one extra kick for my master! Shadow Morgiana encouraged.

The only one doing the kickin’ is me! Shadow Vanellope yelled.

That last one gave Dillon the motivational boost to slither up Daphne’s body, leaving a trail of light on her ghost-white dress. Now up at Daphne’s head, Dillon sunk his white teeth into her neck. “Taste the LIGHT, Aunt Daphne!”

The trail of light crushed Daphne in a White Strangle, squeezing all of the gray shadows from her body. Daphne shrunk back into the ruined rose garden while Dillon set all the shadows free, including Index’s as his White Shadow ceased. “You still have no hope at succeeding.” Daphne pushed herself off the ground. “Even if you defeat me… you cannot win. Either King Andrew will finish you or the Apocalypse. Either way… it’s hopeless.”

“It most certainly is NOT.” (End song.)

Daphne faced the entrance with an expression of shock. Monty Uno was scowling with disapproval, his former brown hair gray from age. “Monty… I thought I turned you into Nigel’s Inferius?”

“I escaped, of course!” Monty said proudly. “Don’t underestimate this jolly old body of mine. You know, Daphne, ever since I was recommissioned, I thought about you. I wondered where you were, I wondered how you were doing… and I never got to tell you… I was sorry.”

“Sorry? For what?”

“For abandoning you.” Monty approached her slowly. “My absence struck a terrible blow to everyone, but you especially. I disappointed you, Daphne. I made you lose hope. That’s why I’m here to tell you… to be hopeful again. And that I… I’ve always loved you. Truth be told, if I wasn’t decommissioned, I would’ve searched for you and wanted to marry you.” He took Daphne’s hands softly. “Let’s start over, Daphne.”

“Monty…” Their mouths moved closer. Daphne’s black lips would kiss the British man’s scruffy white mustache. Their lips made contact—Monty sparked with pixels and became Vanellope. Daphne gasped horrendously and red shone on her white cheeks. “Ha ha! Learned shape-shifting.” Vanel snickered.

Dillon leapt to grab Daphne’s shoulders from behind and bring her to the ground. “Get slagged, Daphne!” Dillon PUNCHED her head against the ground and knocked the love-struck Leader clean out.

“You’re lucky I happened to be around back then to know about those two.” Vanellope noted.

“That’s why you’re the best MCP we’ll ever have.”

The Noah

Augustus and his mother combined Armament Haki to chop off Sherry’s nails, but like every other wound they landed, the nails self-healed. “Zere is nothing ve can do to hurt zem!” Henrietta yelled. “At zis rate, ve’ll be toast long before they are.”

“Mamamamamamamamama!” Sherry cackled. “I don’t want to kill you, my sweets. Thanks to this little spell taking place, I finally have the chance to commence the Linlin Family Reunion! I’m just dying to see all my descendants, alive and undead, sitting at a great big table and eating every sweet in the universe! But, with so many alien races out in the great vast cosmos, there are jillions more for you to marry and bare beautiful hybrids! It’s going to be so… delicious.”

“AUGUSUS NO WANT YOU!” Somebody shot up like a bullet and kicked Sherry with both feet, sending her over the deck of the Noah.

Augustus gaped as the stranger stood to full height—though she wasn’t really a stranger at all. “N…Nel?”

The cavewoman’s cyan hair blew with a breeze caused by the ship’s movement. Augustus noticed the younger Nel behind him, then faced the older Nel. Her legs had become very strong and firm, her chest developed greatly, and her Inferius eyes bore strictness. “Whoa… Nel… you, uh… you’ve grown.”

“Augusus…” Teenage Nel spoke. “Nel know why she know English… Nel learn from English.”

“English?” August cocked a brow.

“Big light that appear in sky 3 days ago in this time. Lord English. English teach Nel English. Nel not remember this until Nel die.”

“Oh…” He glanced at the younger version with regret. “You die, huh?”

“It Nel fate. But Nel don’t go without fighting.” She smiled, holding up one leg. “Nel call herself Stone Foot, after great Captain Aughsucks. Nel strongest foot in all Primordial Rock… until Nel die from giving birth to child. But Nel glad to see Augusus one more time. Nel must tell Augusus to take Nel back to past. It where Nel belong.”

“Sigh… I guess she does. …It was great to see you again, Nel.”

“Augusus no need worry.” The cavewoman touched his shoulder. “Nel be with Augusus always. And Nel… always…”

“I know you do, Nel… I know.”

“…” And so, the two embraced in a deep kiss. The Baby Trio, Henrietta, Mandy, and Azula were royally appalled. Augustus deeply enjoyed the kiss with the strong, beautiful cavewoman. Nel was so happy that her Inferius body shone and crumbled, releasing her soul back to the Spirit World. “Aughsucks is best captain, Aughsucks is bravest…” The spirit sung.

“Whew.” the captain whistled. “Nothing concludes a story like a kiss from a lady!”

Again, the witnesses felt like throwing up, for they had known the 5-year-old version of that woman all this time. The young Nel, on the other hand, was infatuated with his captain greater than ever.

Mariejoa; God’s Castle

Sector GF continued exploring the castle after escaping Abram Johnson’s wrath. The castle trembled from the constant rhythm of Slifer blasting Jennifer and preventing her recovery. “Mabel, you ever wonder how the World Government went so long without being a focus for the KND?” Dipper asked. “Given that they have a castle on a mountain that reaches the stratosphere?”

“I thought we were trying to figure out why no one notices the weirdness in Gravity Falls.”

“Good point. I wonder what’s in this room?” The four kids entered a room labeled Entertainment.

“What the Heck?!” Mabel exclaimed.

“Gideon?!?”

The pudgy boy with pompous white hair was trapped in a cage, wearing a dress and tap-dance shoes. “Dipper! Mabel! Thank the stars! PLEASE get me outta this cage!”

“Why are you wearing that outfit?!” Mabel questioned.

“When that Daphne freed me from Arctic Prison, I thought she was gonna offer me a Government position, but it turns out they just wanted a dancing monkey! I’ve been doin’ tap-dances from dawn to dusk each day. I’m so tired of it like you wouldn’t believe!” The child cried. “I won’t be bad anymore, Pines! I’ll turn a new leaf, I’ll join Kids Next Door! Just let me outta this stupid cage…”

“Okay, just hang in there, Gideon.” Dipper said calmingly. “Grenda!”

“ON IT!” The muscle girl grabbed the cage door and tore it off the hinges.

“Mah gawd, my face wasn’t meant to absorb this much makeup.” Gideon wiped off the dripping black eyeliner from his tears. “Thank you, Pines Family. Since I’m feeling generous, I’ll tell you a li’l old tidbit I picked up from the Leaders!” He winked.

“A tidbit?” asked Dipper.

“Do y’all know about that Abram Johnson feller perchance?”

“Yeah, we found him in the throne room. I knew he had anger issues, but firing lasers from your mouth is the point you need to see a psychiatrist.”

“Oh ho ho, it ain’t nothin’ to do with anger issues.” Gideon smirked cutely. “In reality, our friend Abram is actually…!”

Outside

Crystal Wickens unleashed a constant beam from her staff to counter a magical blast from Ellen Wickens. Crystal remembered a similar scenario with another witch, but she wouldn’t have the same luck against the invincible Inferius. “AAAAH!” She was overpowered and fell on her back.

“…Hmmm…” Ellen felt different suddenly. “I was being forced to attack you without control… but now it feels like that control was broken.”

“Maybe the person issuing the orders was defeated.” Travis assumed.

“Ellen!” Death the Kid emerged from a portal behind her, alongside a blonde-haired Inferius with pigtails. “I brought someone to help you.”

Ellen turned and gasped: “Viola!”

“Ellen!” Viola beamed. The two girls immediately embraced in a hug. “How is this happening, Ellen?”

“I don’t know… but I’m glad you’re okay.”

“I’m glad you’re okay, too.”

Their artificial bodies glowed and decayed, freeing the victims trapped inside. The spirits of Ellen and Viola ascended to Heaven, hugging each other with warmth and love. “Um… Thanks for that, I guess.” Crystal said to Kid, not sure of the story between those two. (That blonde girl seemed familiar, though.)

After Meloetta fashioned a new dress for Sugar, the adult singer assisted Rachel in her battle with Doflamingo. “You’re not allowed to stop NOW, Inferi!” Andrew commanded. “Keep fighting!” Under his orders, the Inferi of Sirius Black and Dumbledore fought Morgan and Mika.

Lucas Stonebuddy tried to crush Anthony with two angel statues, but he burrowed underground to avoid. Lucas stomped a straight path up that revealed Anthony, trying to smash him between two squares, but Anthony punched each fist outward and broke holes open. “You do not wish to fight me?” Lucas questioned.

“I know you’re using a fake body. I wanna fight the real you, Stonedummy.”

“I see no benefit to disclosing that knowledge.”

“Then allow ME to disclose it!” Lucas was snatched in Angie’s large Logia rock arm. She stomped a foot through the ground and used Seismic Sense. “Anthony, I just felt where the control of this statue is coming from. It’s fifty feet directly below us. Do you need me to come with you?”

“I can handle it, Mom.” Anthony smirked. “Don’t know about Michelle, though. After all, she was born yesterday.”

“Five minutes before you, dummy!” Diancie giggled. Anthony jumped and pushed an ever-descending hole into the ground, his Firstborn sister flying after. Angie resumed her duel with the fake Stonebuddy.

The two earthbenders broke through the ceiling of a wide cylindrical room, composed of smooth straight stone. Statues and cubes filled the floor, and Stonebuddy was playing chess in the center. The fall lasted for three seconds in this tall room before Anthony dented a crater by landing on his feet. “Found you, Stonewimpy!”

One hand over his mouth, Lucas moved a chess piece of Jesus. “Your remarks get more creative by the hour. Well, boy, I suppose you won the honor of fighting me.”

“Honor, my foot. You’re not the real one EITHER, are you?”

“Ooo, my… your perception has improved.”

“Stonebuddy… do you remember who I am?” Diancie asked. “Do you remember who YOU are?”

“Yes… I do know you, Diana. My memories are severely scattered, so I cannot remember everything. But… I do know the reason King Reggie broke my soul. It seems that the person whom Stonebuddy reincarnated into… was the same incarnation as one of the Ancient Gods. You see, boy, we World Leaders are incarnations of ancient guardian deities who must prevent imbalances between the universes. Our order has lasted for 4,000 years, and our leader has always been the denizen of this dimension who gained control of the Octogon. The King and his descendants lived in the Original World which became the core of the Dimensional Fusion. The same Dimensional Fusion that is destroying our universe.”

“Ancient Gods?” Diancie questioned. “Where in the world did you learn this?”

“The Octogon saw this. With it, the original King saw the incarnations who had inherited the duty and sought to bring them together. For 4,000 years, this tradition repeated, so our existence would continue and we would eventually save the universe. And I proudly follow the tradition.” He moved a chess piece. “I don’t remember my life as Stone and I do not want to. The powers I possess, while artistic, are a curse. Foreign power like mine are the reason this universe is falling.”

“That’s not true.” Diancie spoke sympathetically. “Stone may have been different, but he was still a person. You’re still a person, Lucas. Not a reincarnated god.”

“And you are a god… A god hopelessly trying to live like a human, shunning your true identity.”
Diancie bowed her head in shame. “At least she’s fun to be around.” Anthony stated, stepping forward. “She’s got more heart than you do. But if you aren’t gonna show yourself, I’ll break every statue you throw at me!”

“Hm…” Lucas slid his chess table across the floor, away from them. “You can try.” (Play “Mr. Stone’s Theme” from Rayman!)

Boss fight: Lucas Stonebuddy

Power Levels: Anthony – 3001. Lucas – 8500

Stonebuddy leapt as high as the ceiling and shook the earth upon landing, dropping several stone cubes around the room. Lucas leapt behind one and kicked it to Anthony with great speed, the boy stomping the floor and punching through the cube. Lucas punched the floor and bounced a rectangle to crush Anthony, but he burrowed underground and dug toward Lucas. The Leader leapt above Anthony’s place to Ground Pound, but the boy punched a perfectly shaped cone up to stab Lucas. Anthony popped out, grabbing the cone to chuck at Lucas, who karate-chopped it.

“Wow, I never made a jab that smooth before!” Anthony beamed.

“Perhaps Stone’s memories are awakening inside you!” Diancie inferred. “Or it could be the Diamond Chi I transferred to you to give your rocks that extra smoothness.”

“I prefer the memories idea.” Anthony remarked (and referenced ;P).

Lucas stomped a platform from the wall, hopped onto it, and punched the wall to launch five giant cones. Anthony evaded the others and kicked one up to Stone, who jumped and smashed the ground before Anthony. The boy flew all the way up to the ceiling, grabbing the intersecting wall with one hand and both feet. Lucas punched the ground and dropped a spherical stone that was larger than his body. He kicked the stone as it ricocheted up the wall and would crush Anthony. The boy kicked the stone instead and shattered it, dropping to the floor to create an earthquake that would drop more stone spheres.

Lucas lifted a sphere up with one hand and threw it fast as a baseball, bashing Anthony in the face. “Ouchie!” Diancie flinched. “This may also be Stone’s memories, but my power is also protecting your body from severe injuries.”

“I’ll give you that one, Michelle.” Anthony rubbed his nose. Stonebuddy lifted another one and chucked, but Anthony jumped and grabbed the top, hanging tight as it ricocheted up the room again. Anthony directed it down with his bending, still ricocheting, and successfully landing a blow against Stonebuddy’s stone body. Lucas rapidly stomped the ground in a tap-dance fashion, rising to safety via a pillar while smaller blocks dropped from the ceiling. They fell in a Tetris pattern and shaped like L’s, U’s, etc., but Anthony jumped up the layers and avoided them.

Lucas jumped and sprouted a stairwell into being, stationed at the top with Anthony at the bottom. A Thwomp appeared behind Anthony, forcing the boy to quickly jump up the tall stairs to avoid the pursuing rock creature. When Anthony made it to the top, Lucas jumped again and stomped a sloped road into being – the Leader at the bottom with Anthony on top. A Rhomp appeared behind him – a cylindrical stone with a grinning face. Anthony dashed down the path to escape it, but gained an idea and punched a hole in the Rhomp to hide inside.

Lucas saw this, so when the Rhomp made it down, the Leader stomped himself to the top of a new path and watched it roll away again. But then Lucas noticed the hole in the path, and was instantly stabbed by a stone jab from an underground Anthony. The boy popped out and laid a beatdown on Stonebuddy’s body, breaking it into pebbles. The slope rejoined the flat ground, and Anthony turned to see another Stonebuddy.

The World Leader dropped a large cube from the ceiling, breaking it to create a sculpture of Cragalanche. Lucas made the statue move similar to the real creature, diving at Anthony with a spin attack. Anthony dodged behind and kicked a rock at Cragalanche’s rear weak point. “Stone loved to make sculptures back in his day.” Diancie remembered. “He kept them loyal to the real thing.”

“Good thing I know how to BEAT the real thing!” Anthony dodged Cragalanche’s arm smash and burrowed underground to emerge behind the creature. He stabbed a cone through its weak point and destroyed the statue, but Lucas broke through the cone tip-first and punched Anthony against the wall. The boy recovered and saw Lucas jump to the back, shooting a barrage of rectangular platforms. With precise finger-jabs, Anthony broke each platform and moved closer to Stonebuddy, stomping a rectangular slanted pillar at the Leader. Lucas leapt overhead, and during this action, ceiling pillars emerged along his path and crushed Anthony under one.

Anthony broke the pillar and decided to stomp up a stone cube of his own. He smashed it and made a… disfigured statue of Aunt Rachel, who wielded a wavy sword and charged at Lucas sloppily. “Utterly laughable!” Lucas shattered the statue effortlessly. “This is what real art is!” He stomped up a cube and broke a Sovite statue out of it. The lavabending ancestor ran at Anthony and tried to squash him with his muscular legs.

“That’s pretty awesome! Hope you don’t mind if I steal it!” Anthony punched the ground and sunk Lucas in a ditch, seizing the chance to control the statue with his own bending. Sovite flipped behind and stomped Lucas further in the ditch. Eventually, Lucas broke the statue with his power and emerged from the ground in a stone-made car with wheels, using the former ditch as a cockpit.
Lucas drove toward Anthony, but he ducked under the craft’s middle, only for it to about-face.
When it sped to Anthony again, the boy stomped twin ramps for the wheels to drive up, then he stomped a large trapezoid up to cut the car in two. “Hah! No wonder the cavemen liked trapezoid better!”

“You would know, mm hm hm hm hm!” Diancie giggled.

“And you would know THAT!”

“Touché, Anthony.”

With half his body crumbling, Lucas erected a stone maze from the surface. He strengthened the walls to prevent Anthony from punching through, so the boy maneuvered the maze and avoided the falling walls. He used Seismic Sense to see the correct path and followed to where Lucas was hiding. “I guess YOU’RE not the real one!” Anthony smirked before kicking a stone sphere to shatter the body.

“Over here.” The maze lowered as another Stonebuddy was present. “So, I made a slight miscalculation when estimating your abilities. Or should I say the abilities the Firstborn granted you—otherwise, I am spot-on. I must improvise.” Lucas stomped stone pants over his legs, a vest on his body, stone fists, and a helmet on the head. Anthony charged forward, countering his launched fists with a punch of his own. Punching the fists left them slightly cracked, but Anthony felt a slight aching in his knuckles.

Anthony stomped a rock jab to shoot himself to Stonebuddy and headbutt his vest, following this with punches and kicks to the Leader’s armor. Lucas crouched, stuck his hands underground, and drew a stone mace and club. Anthony leapt back to avoid the swings, but striking the ground allowed Lucas to bounce stone balls to his opponent. Anthony stomped a round pillar up, and with another stomp, that pillar’s body became a stone spring. With this, Anthony bounced around the room to avoid the balls Lucas batted his way, the World Leader burrowing underground when the spring tried to crush him.

From underground, Lucas sensed where the boy was bouncing and shot cones up to strike him.
Anthony sent more chi into the spring and broke holes in the ground with each bounce. He then spun the spring around and sent a spiraling earthquake across the floor, striking Lucas’s hiding spot. Lucas climbed out, still clad in armor and holding weapons. Anthony abandoned his spring and charged stalwartly at Lucas, grabbing both his weapons, flipping above, and breaking the Leader’s helmet with his feet.

Anthony took the weapons and crushed them in his palms, engaging in a fist fight with Lucas’s stone gloves. Anthony caught the fists in his palms and applied pressure to crush them, Lucas’s arms crumbling. Anthony then leapt to stomp his stone head into rubble. “Well, what’s one less.”
He whipped around to find another Stone Clone.

“GRRRR! I am getting SICK OF THIS!” Anthony used a rock jab to rocket toward Lucas with greater force, head-butting the World Leader against the wall. “Michelle, give me a bit more. I’m settling this.”

“Sure thing, Big Brother.” Diancie lent a fraction of chi to Anthony. The boy stomped the ground and sent his Seismic Sense everywhere to see beyond the walls. Countless Stone Bodies lined the interiors, so with a great burst, Anthony tore the walls into rubble, expanding the room’s width and taking all the lifeless clones down. Some of them weren’t completely painted.

“I see.” Anthony deduced. “When you’re controlling a clone, you can’t control much of anything else because you’re sending your chi to it. But I’m gonna make you come out!” He stomped two giant cones into being and stabbed each and every able-bodied lifeless clone. He then directed them at Stonebuddy, but when the Leader shattered them, Anthony seized the chance to shoot over and grab him. He used Seismic Sense again to see the origin place of the clone’s control. “Oh, just over there, huh?” He located the source in a room across the rubble. “I’ll meet you there.” He crushed the clone in his hug and raced over.

Anthony burst down a wall and uncovered the hidden room. “FOUND YA, Stone…wimpy?” He was taken off guard by the sight. (End song.)

Lucas Stonebuddy was pale and frail, sitting in a wheelchair while light cords connected to him from the walls. “So… you see me for what I am.” he moaned hoarsely. “When King Reggie split my soul… it shortened my life force… and I was placed into this coma. I was forced to use my powerful stonebending… to interact with people via statues. The natural Light Energy from this mountain keeps my body intact… no matter how great my usage of chi is.”

“Stone…” Diancie was terribly saddened by his condition. “You poor, poor man…”

“You may say Stone was a good person… but even though I don’t know him, I hate him. …I did not ask to be born as him… I did not ask to be an Ancient God reborn… and I do not want to endure this pain any longer… cough!” He kept a hand over his mouth to block the coughs. Perhaps that explained why his clones always made the gesture. “But it’s too late now… do as you wished: put me out of my misery. King Andrew is close to victory, anyway…”

“…” Anthony shook his head. “This is wrong. I can’t end our battle like this. Michelle, can’t you do anything for him?”

“I wish I could… but the reason this man is dying is because part of his soul was destroyed. That part was reborn into you. Even if I could just… put it back… I’m afraid of what’ll happen to you, Anthony.”

“Cough, cough!…” Lucas coughed.

Anthony clutched his right arm in his left. “B-But… you said you were reborn as children who were going to die, Michelle. Doesn’t that mean… Stone was, too?”

“Yes, but I didn’t sense the same fate befalling you. That part of Stone just… chose you.”

“Do you think maybe… Stone was tired of being Stone?”

“What do you mean?”

“I mean, if the same guy was being reborn with ALL his memories for thousands of years… I don’t know, I guess if I were him, I’d feel like I wasn’t making progress. It’s like when I get everything in a game, only to start a new game, and have to do the same stuff over again. (Thanks for that, Michelle.)” Anthony glared.

“I said sorry.” Diancie blushed, recalling she erased some of his games. However, looking back at that silly scenario… Diancie understood. “Maybe you’re right, Anthony. Stone was, well, Stone for so long that he wanted to be someone else. He kept his memories until he ended up ruining someone’s life because of it. …Still… if Lucas dies, what if you remember everything, Anthony? What if you become the whole Stone?”

“Maybe I would get his memories… but I still have my memories.” Anthony smiled. “And in the future… Stone can be reborn as someone else with memories, too! It’s like those games that examine data from other saved games! But I…” Anthony frowned and faced Lucas again. “I feel bad just… letting you…”

“Do you truly believe Stone would be happier… being you?” Lucas coughed. “Would I be happier… if I were you?”

“I…I do.” Anthony spoke truthfully. “…Would you be happier… if you were me?”

“… … Yes.” Lucas weakly clasped the light cords and tore them off. The action made his body weaker, but with his remaining strength, he picked them off. “I have always despised great power… because of where my foreign power has brought me. I do not know if I shared Stone’s thoughts on that matter… but if I did, perhaps you will give me new thoughts. Anthony… please… make our final moments meaningful.” Lucas passed out on his chair, his final breath leaving.

Diancie wiped the tears from her eyes and Anthony bowed his head. A gray chi flew from Lucas’s mouth into Anthony’s body. “Do you feel different… Anthony?”

“I’m not sure. …Hold on, I sense something.” Anthony looked to his left, feeling a loose spot on that wall. He went over to slide it open, finding a compartment with a large, brown lantern. “It’s… a lantern?”

Diancie gasped, “Anthony! It’s the Sun Chi Lantern!”

“The what?”
His wristwatch rang, and the person to speak was Dipper. “This is Dipper Pines calling all nearby operatives. We rescued Gideon from the castle, and you might wanna hear what he told us.”

Aboveground

“That’s impossible!” Midna exclaimed after hearing the news. “The Octogan couldn’t have done that, could it!”

“That thing is WAY too powerful!” Dillon looked King Andrew’s direction with horror. “Hey, Midna!” His Firstborn flew over to Mew and Sunni.

“Mew, I need you to use your telepathy and call the other Firstborn to us!”

“Mew can do that?” Sunni asked.

“Yes, it’s one of his special powers. Of course, calling all the Firstborn in one place is usually a bad thing. In this case, I think we should. Just to see if this is real.”

“Okay. Do it, Mew.”

“Mew…” The Ancestral Firstborn closed his eyes and sent the message.

Los Angeles

“Mana?” Manaphy perked up.

“What’s up, Uncle Manaphy?” Melody asked.

“Mana Mana! Mana!” He pointed skyward frantically.

“You want us to take you somewhere?”

“Is it safe to leave Jones like that?” Eric asked.

Davy Jones and the Dutchman Pirates had been encased in trees that sprouted up out of nowhere. “They’ve been that way for five minutes… you boys just stay in the treehouse and watch them from there. I’ll take Manaphy wherever he wants to go. Call if something bad happens.” The three rushed to the treehouse.

Blackbeard Teach appeared from a dark portal and began tearing Jones’ tree open.

Rozeland

“Who’s talkin’ to me?!” Crest panicked. “HELP! VOICES IN MY HEAD!”

“What voices, Crest?!” Diwata questioned.

“Some voice is telling me to go to Mariejoa! But they’re talking like ‘Mew Mew Mew Mew’!”

“What do you think is happening?” Denny asked.

“Maybe the others are in trouble. I guess we should go. Tie Leanne up and take her with us.”

Lee Andrew was restraining his Inferius sister with Shadow Possession, leaving the others to bind her in rope. “You’ve gotten better, Lee.” Leanne smiled.
“Glad you finally acknowledge it.” Lee remarked smugly.

His sister frowned. “I never got the chance to say… sorry for not treating you right.”

“Sigh… it’s all right. We’re still throwing your funeral before Cheren’s.”

“AAAAH!” Denny was flung out of the S.C.A.M.P.E.R.:

“URSE!” The Teddiursa posed proudly. It was still stalking Denny.

Mariejoa

Anthony and Diancie emerged from the ground with Lucas’s fallen body. “Guys, we beat Lucas Stonebuddy. Er, I mean…” Anthony wasn’t sure where to begin with the story. “Actually, he kind of killed himself. It’s a lot to explain.”

“Killed himself?” Haruka repeated with remorse.

“Wow.” Chris said. “Well, it looks like we defeated them all now. Except—AAAAAAAH!”

King Andrew encased the entire battlefield in his Octogan’s glow. When it faded, Chris began rampaging like an uncontrollable demon, mindlessly shooting Combustion Beams. Anthony began moaning “Duuuuh” like a boy with no brain, Nagisa was crying and grabbing her crotch as though she lost her privates, and Maddy’s Haki vanished as her body felt flabby, leaving Lucci to pin her under his claw. “The Octogan has trapped each of you in an alternate reality.” Andrew proclaimed. “Your physical bodies have not changed, but the ideas in your brains appear real.”

“SUGAR!” Meloetta cried when Sugar was reduced to a five-year-old form, sticking out of her grown-up dress. Sugar cried, seeing her precious breasts were all gone.

“The Octogan sees your fears.” Andrew glanced at Nagisa, who believed he had become female, and at Wendy, who was hugging herself on the ground as she believed her friends were beating the life out of her. “It shows what is hidden. It opens the shrouded parts in your minds.”

“Then it’s a good thing I don’t have a mind!” Zach Murphy was pedaling a giant gargoyle with Pluto the Dog’s head. Glittery powder rained from its tongue. “I shredded this dust from old MacBooks! This oughta save everyone.”

Andrew glared. “That would be very annoying… IF I DIDN’T SEE THAT COMING!” The Octogan flashed and turned Pluto into Big Elmo Bird Thing (just imagine that combination). It fell and crashed on the ground, leaving Zachary in the dust.

“Oaf!” Andrew pinned a foot on Zach’s neck.

“The Octogan has adjusted to your trickery, boy! Now, I will end the Twenty Keys Prophecy once and for all!”

“NUMBUH 100!” a banshee voice screeched. Andrew turned: the person to bravely oppose him was Panini Drilovsky, aiming a M.U.S.K.E.T.. It was twitching in her hands as she stood on the edge of the mountain. “You are scheduled for immediate decommissioning! As temporary Supreme Leader, I order you to come quietly!”

Andrew left Zach and approached the girl instead. He could see Panini’s heart racing without cease, her fear rising to the top of her mind. The M.U.S.K.E.T. would slip out of her sweaty hands as Andrew stood high over her. In one swipe of his great power, he could wipe Panini from existence. Instead, The King released Conqueror’s Haki and brought Panini to her knees. Her will was not totally lost, for she did not faint. “Hm… You do have your mother’s blood in you.”

“ANDREW!” The King turned once more and found Sandman. The vigilante pushed himself off his wheelchair and removed his mask and hat. “Numbuh 100… you have to stop. This has gone too far. I know for a fact you don’t want to do this. Even when you think you’re doing what’s right… it could just be the darkness blinding you.”

“There is NOTHING blinding me!” Andrew stated. “Thanks to the Octogan, I’m the only one who sees the truth! I see what all of you are blind to!”

“I may not be able to see beyond reality like you can, but at least I can see what’s right in front of me. I can see what’s around me. Look around you, Andrew! Is this what your friends wanted?!”

Andrew turned and watched as the White Lotus and KND continued to battle Inferi. They have endured many injuries and the town that belonged to God was in deep ruin. “You think you’re building a new world, but you’re just destroying the world your friends fought to protect, the world the NEW Kids Next Door are trying to protect! And now, Dillon, Travis, and the others are suffering, because you’re making them destroy everything they loved! You’re no different than the very thing you despise. The Octogan’s made you mad with power. You’re unstable. This is the very reason the Kids Next Door needed benders, to combat people like you.”

“There was NEVER meant to be benders!” Andrew seethed. “There was never meant to be people like me! You’re right, I DON’T want to do this, but there’s no other way! I need to make the world the way it’s supposed to be!”

“Don’t you understand, Andrew?! THIS IS THE WAY our world was supposed to be!!”

“?!?” Even with the Octogan, The King couldn’t find meaning in his words.

“I don’t know what world the Octogan is showing you, but it’s not the world you live in! This is the world you and your friends were born in, the world your friends loved! The world the Kids Next Door protect each and every day. And they’ll protect it FROM THE APOCALYPSE! The Kids Next Door ALWAYS have a way! And the only reason the Octogan isn’t showing you that way is because IT wants the power! It wants to destroy everything and it’s been using you all this time! But you’re not its puppet, Andrew. You’re Numbuh 100, a Kids Next Door operative. You don’t have to listen to it.”

“…” Andrew bowed his head, a tear leaking from his eye. He clutched the Octogan and tore it out of his socket. He stared at the flashing 8-ball, the gem of unlimited power and sight. “Ever since I was an operative, I dreamed of a world where all kids were free to be who they are. I never wanted to play god… I never wanted anyone to believe my father for a second.”

“It’s not too late, Andrew.” Nolan held a hand out. “You can start over… just like I did. You can be an operative again and stop the Apocalypse with them.”

“…” Andrew slowly reached to place the Octogan in his hand. The gem brimmed, and The King’s eye narrowed as its light glinted off.

“DON’T TOUCH IT!!” roared Vaati.

“AAAAAAAAAAHHHHHHHHH!!” Unbearable pain coursed through Nolan upon contact—he saw worlds colliding together, a green demon towering over galaxies, eggs flying across space like shooting stars…
“NOLAAAAAN!” Danika cried.

“Unfortunately… the Kids Next Door is inferior to my power.” Andrew placed the Octogan back in his eye socket. Nolan York was horribly burned and wounded, unable to move and close to death. “It must be me… now and forever.” Andrew punched the former operative and sent him falling over the mountain. He faced the operatives and adults, all speechless with horror and remorse. With the great 2030 gone, the same as Nigel Uno… there were only so many left.

Fast as a bolt of lightning, a golden comet burst from the sky RAMMED Andrew, blowing him several feet. “What?!” Andrew recovered to see who had landed the blow. Everyone else faced at the edge where Nolan fell. Andrew looked over, gaping with utmost shock. (Play “Open Your Heart” by Crush 40!)

The person to rescue Nolan from death was Cheren Uno. He lifted the adult with one hand, glowing like a golden sun. His clothes were gold, his jacket was longer, and a symbol of a “C” and an ‘x’ was featured on his shirt. A golden flame covered his body, bringing a pure warmth more loving than the sun. Panini cried at the holy light. Sugar, Wendy, Sunni, and all the kids stared at the golden light with pure happiness. At this moment, no one wanted to feel worried or weak. All they could feel now was hope.

Cheren set Nolan on the ground and played the Ocarina of Time. A blue sphere appeared over Nolan as the peaceful tunes from the Song of Reversed Time healed Nolan’s wounds. The adult opened his eyes to Cheren’s golden, godly form. The child made a joyous grin that could melt hearts. “Sorry Mr. York, but I don’t want you to die, yet! I’ve become too fond of you!”

“…Don’t I ever get a break.” Nolan chuckled.

Andrew gritted his teeth and charged a Hyper Beam. Sensing this—FLASH—Cheren slashed the Master Sword so blindingly fast, The King rocketed across Mariejoa, smashing through many buildings and statues before colliding with his castle. Cheren sheathed the sword and faced Panini, on her knees and crying. The child god floated over and set foot before her, tipping her chin up. “Don’t worry, Panini… I’ll take it from here. Just kick back and relax.”

“…” Panini smiled.

Moonbase

“What…What just happened?!” Alexei was agape. He and Sector KB saw it happen firsthand.

“We just watched a miracle, Lexi.” Clay smiled. “There ain’t nothing gonna stop him now. …What are you gonna do?”

“…” Lexi bowed his head.

Somewhere close by, Zanifr felt it happen. “God Tier… hmmmmm…” He smiled with humor. “This boy continues to surprise MMe.”

Mariejoa

King Andrew recovered, glaring at the child with hatred. He floated toward Cheren, facing each other at level air. “I won’t let you do as you please.” Cheren promised. “You strayed too far off your path, Numbuh 100. It’s time to show you what the Next Generation is capable of.” He drew the Master Sword and flashed lightning. “I will be the Beacon of Hope that guides the Kids Next Door to the future! YOU CAN COUNT ON THAT!”
Next time… the final battle with King Andrew Johnson. Numbuh 3621 vs. Numbuh 100.
Cheren Uno battles King Andrew at long last! But unfortunately, greater battles await our kids in the future.

Chapter 80: The Thirteen

Semifinal boss: King Andrew Johnson

Power Levels: God Cheren – 9100. Andrew – 9600

Cheren Uno and King Andrew rocketed to each other, Master Sword against Armament Fists as the atmosphere vibrated. A burst from the Octogan blew Cheren across the town, but he recovered and flew like a comet as he evaded Andrew’s energy missiles. Cheren flew in a circle around The King, and without warning shot to him with lightspeed, colliding his sword with Andrew’s fists before His Highness blew a Hyper Beam that sent Cheren 20 miles away. The King slowed time to follow him quickly, and Cheren was forced to use lightspeed to block his sped up attacks with the Mirror Shield. Eventually Andrew kicked the shield away and punched Cheren halfway down Mariejoa.

Cheren flew to recover his Mirror Shield, but Andrew grabbed the boy’s shoulders, whirled around rapidly, and hurled Cheren against the mountain. Before he could recover, Andrew flew above and stomped him with Armament. Cheren fell all the way down, but he stabbed his sword in the mountain to slow his descent and then dashed all the way up the mountainside. King Andrew blew Hyper Beams down the mountain, but Cheren sidestepped the beams, and once at the top of the mountain, Cheren leaped high above The King, charged a Skyward Strike in his blade, and sliced down his body with enough force to spill blood.

A furious Andrew flew down to clash fists with Cheren’s sword, eventually grabbing the sacred weapon and throwing it into the ruined town. Cheren and Andrew locked fists, in which His Highness would easily crush Cheren’s small hands, if the boy hadn’t bursted into golden flames and scorched The King through his armor. Cheren performed a flip and kicked Andrew into a crater in the ground, quickly blasting an Ice Arrow down before recovering the Master Sword. Andrew’s right fist was froze to the ground, so he mustered Armament Haki to pull himself free.

Using the Octogan, Andrew stopped time to attack his opponent, but Cheren immediately countered with a slice to the face. “I used the Ocarina of Time to make myself immune to any timebending!” Cheren used a Soul Surge to land four precise, deadly blows against The King’s armor, then flew 30 meters back to charge a lightspeed stab into the Octogan.

Time unfroze, making everyone confused by their change in position. “WHOA!!” Aurora exclaimed. “That was so fast, I didn’t even see!”

“Sewene is so stwong!” Five-year-old Sugar pointed.
“You think golden flames make you special, Boy?!” Andrew shouted. “Hit me all you want, but my armor will never break! It has existed nearly 4,000 years, worn by all the Kings of my family and imbued with their Haki! And with the Octogan to continue healing my wounds, it’s completely invulnerable. No weapon in the entire universe can crack it!”

“4,000 years? Holy crap, you must reek.” Cheren waved by his nose.

Andrew snarled and turned his head Armament, blasting an Iron Beam that Cheren narrowly avoided. Andrew spewed one again, so Cheren raised the Mirror Shield in defense, only to end up flying 40 meters backward. Cheren charged for a lightspeed boost, going shield-first through The King’s Iron Beam, but His Majesty’s breath proved the stronger as Cheren faltered. The King seized the chance to zip above and Iron Punch Cheren to the mountaintop.

“You may be a god, but you’re still mortal. Remember the pain of your past!” The Octogan flashed and trapped Cheren in a wave of realistic memories: his battles with Majora, Viridi, Cragalanche, and Aunt Morgan gave him painful physical wounds. The time he attacked Panini in his Demon State, he fought Sheila when he thought Panini died, his father died, he killed Doflamingo out of rage and demanded GUN lock Sugar away. His body felt the wounds, his mind felt the turmoil, and his tongue felt the nacho cheese- “What?”

“HI, ANDY!” Zach Murphy was “mooning” the Octogan to shield Cheren. “I just learned my heinie’s a natural memory filter!”

“YOU IMBECILE!” Andrew tried to demolish him with an Iron Beam, but Zach dug into a hole to avoid. “Diglett-Dig.” He peeped out as a Diglett Pokémon.

“Hahahahaha!” Cheren began giggling on the ground. “HAHAHA hahahaha!”

“YOU THINK THAT’S FUNNY?!?” Andrew fumed. “Let’s see you laugh when I BURN ALL YOUR FRIENDS!” He cast a fearsome Hyper Beam and turned Anthony, Maddy, Rachel, and others into Ash… Ketchum.

“I’m gonna be Pokémon Master!” the Ashes chorused. They were each dressed and animated like their respective series. “Huh? No, I’m gonna be Pokémon Master! Yeah, right! I bet you haven’t won ONE Pokémon League! Th-That’s not true!” They flushed. “PIKACHU, THUNDERBOLT! DWAAAAAAAH!” They lit the area yellow with lightning and wide-eye faces.

“PAH HAHHAHAHAHAHA!” Cheren clenched his chest, and the gold flames burned brighter.

The Octogan was vibrating from the deception, spreading its anger to King Andrew. “STOP LAUGHING!” The King burned an Iron Beam all the way through the core of Mariejoa. However, Cheren had already flown above to avoid the laser.

“Hyou know, you almost had me for a minute, Kingy!” Cheren grinned. “But I almost forgot my Gold Flames are lit by happiness! All it takes to defeat you is a little laughter!” With lightning speed—Cheren SLICED Andrew from his left, then went for a Skyward Jump Attack. Andrew flew away and blasted an Iron Beam, but with more light imbued to his Mirror Shield, the black beam was absorbed inside of it so Cheren could fire back. The force of the attack blew Andrew 80 miles and cracked part of his armor.

“HA HA HA HA!” Cheren kicked his legs and pointed. “You said your armor couldn’t break, but you broke it! HAH HAH HAH!”

Andrew slowed time to zip up and grab him in a choke, but seized only gold flames as Cheren flew behind. “Haha, poke!” Cheren reached around to poke his left eye.

“Stop that!” Andrew threw a smack, but missed.

“Pbbth!” Cheren blew a raspberry.

“Is that supposed to be fighting?!”

“No, it’s supposed to be mocking! What, can your Octogan not detect it?”

“My Octogan detects only the relevant stuff!”

“Well, that explains a lot. NOW, ZACH!”

“What NOW?!” Andrew whipped around.

“Not really.” Cheren became a golden comet and SMASHED him to the ground. Afterwards, Cheren unleashed an unending flaming beam into the crater where he lay, making His Majesty a golden brown. Cheren stopped the attack and sealed the deal with a Light Arrow to Andrew’s Octogan. (End song.)

Cheren softly landed on the ground and stared at his fallen opponent. His friends and their parents, even the ally Inferi, gathered around the defeated King. Andrew’s other eye was closed, but the Octogan kept flashing away. Cheren stared at the hand with the Triforce of Courage mark. With this hand, he would reach down and take the Octogan.

“DON’T TOUCH IT!!” A bright white beam blasted and nearly hit them. They looked at the castle to see Abram Johnson at the base of the stairs. “Stand back! Let ME take it!”

“It’s Abram!” Dipper screamed. “Cheren, there’s something about Abram you need to know!”

Before Cheren could respond, several KND ships landed on Mariejoa, and one GKND. “CHEREN!” Melody ran off, followed by Sector RZ, Emily Garley, Nebula & Arianna, and even Azelf showed up. “Yo, Cuz, what’s with the flashy clothes?! Or better yet, WHY ARE YOU ALIVE?!”

“Did you bring your Firstborn?!” Midna shouted.

“Yes, they’re the ones that pestered us to come!” Nebula yelled, indicating Jirachi.

“Is there an emergency?” Arianna asked, releasing Celebi.

“Yes! Over there!” Midna pointed at Abram, who was on his knees and rasping.

“I feel some kind of power from him!” Jirachi yelled. “It’s… familiar…”

“No! It couldn’t be…” Uxie followed.

“Eleven Firstborn, together!” Azelf flew first, and the others followed. All the Firstborn surrounded Abram in a circle, aiming their hands.

“Um, what are we doing, exactly?” Crest asked.

“Channel your chi into him.” Uxie replied.

“Okay, got it!” Diancie nodded.
“WAIT, DON’T!” Abram pleaded. “I need to touch the Octogan with-!”

The World Prince was trapped in the center of their combined power. Firstborn God Chi consisting of Plant, Water, Stars, Psychic, Shadow, Willpower, Emotion, Knowledge, Moon, Music, and Earth, connected with Abram’s body. There was only one other time when the Firstborn were together like this… and now, the same effect would happen.

Abram BURST with white light, and from his tiny mortal body, Supreme God Arceus flew into the dawning sky, finally free. “AaaaaaaaaAAAhHHiHHiH!” The great god stretched his limbs and back like a pony. “You have no idea how EXHAUSTING it is to spend so long inside a SIMPLE MORTAL’S BODY!”

“Arceus was… sealed inside Abram?! All this time?!” Cheren choked on his words.

“RAAAAAH!” King Andrew had recovered and struck the god with a constant beam from his Octogan.

“With the Octogan’s help, I conducted a ritual designed to seal spirits inside mortal bodies! You won’t believe how much power I exhausted to trap Arceus… With him, Abram was going to help me design and control the Spirit World Project. But now, I’ll just have to use him myself. I knew you Firstborn were going to come here and free him, so before Arceus recomposes himself, I’ll make use of his spiritual energy.”

The Octogan’s beam sucked power from Arceus’s body as Andrew glowed with a white aura. “The Octogan sees through reality… AND IT REWRITES REALITY!” (Play “Dark Gaia 1” from Sonic Unleashed!)

A blinding white light swallowed the mountaintop of Mariejoa. The energy took solid form around King Andrew, and now he was in command of the Crown Goliath: a titanic version of his armor with giant cuckoo clocks on the shoulders, a spinning dress with purple and yellow stripes, and gears inside the chest. “WUOOOOOH HOH HOH HOH HOH!” The King cackled like the Sir Knightly he once portrayed, safe in the titan’s head. “WHATCHU GONNA DO NOW, CHEREN-CHAAAAAN?”

Cheren became a comet and shot up to the cockpit, but the Goliath spun a fist and BASHED him to the ground. “Master Cheren, I sense King Andrew is trying to absorb your chi as well. Deactivating your God Tier may prevent him from becoming stronger than he currently is.”

“I trust you, Fi.” Cheren’s golden body extinguished, reverting to his normal colors. “But I can’t defeat him like this!”

“I got ya covered, Cherry!”

“Oh?” Cheren glanced at something tiny in his lenses (his glasses reappeared with his normal form). “Zach?”

“I turned your glasses into mini TVs! Let the comical stylings of Zach, Blinks, and Floop give you a chuckle! But don’t let it out until the time is right.”

“General Guy is here TOO, ya fool!”

“YOU’RE NOT IN, YET!” Zach kicked him away.

“I don’t even know how I got here!” Floop yelled.
Zach is trying to build up my God Chi for when I use it again! Cheren smiled.

“WAAAHH!” Dimentia suddenly splorped out of space and was dropped on the ground by Dimentio.

“Sister, I would like to introduce you…” Dimentio looked around, then frowned. “Oh, it seems they aren’t here, yet. Ooo, that thing has a nice dress. Um, ciao!” He warped again.

“What was that about?” asked Melody.

“Dimentia, I’m glad you’re here!” Cheren said. “Listen, I want all of you to help fight him! Fly up there, attack from below, do whatever you can to keep him busy!”

“We’re on it!” Wendy yelled determinedly. “Let’s go, Carla!” Her kitten grabbed her master and flew up to the Goliath’s head, along with Vaati, Mika, and Morgan, while others attacked parts of the body.

“While they’re doing that, I’m heading up there.” Cheren drew his sword.

“Let me help you up the legs.” Nebula cast a Gravity Path up the Goliath’s legs.

“Thanks!” Cheren began to race up, staring directly up the titan’s skirt. Slots opened up and fired Bombshell Bills, but Cheren bounced the golden missiles back with the Mirror Shield and destroyed the cannons. He couldn’t advance farther up this leg because an electric wall was coming down, so he shot his Hookshot to a target on the other leg and ran up that Grav-Path. Bombshell Bills fired from cannons on the base of the body inside the skirt, and to break an entrance open, Cheren had to bounce the Bombshells back. Cheren punctured an opening and quickly raced inside.

He landed in a dimension of hearts where millions of clones of his many girl friends were swarming on him. Cheren stabbed Panini, Miyuki, MaKayla, Sugar, Wendy, Karin, Grenda—he knew neither of them were the same girls, yet he was terrified of being buried in kisses. “KAH HAH HAH!” One of the Meridas poofed into King Andrew as he skipped across the crowds, his mouth grinning and his eyes sticking out. Cheren charged a Hurricane Spin and sawed through the crowds in order to find The King. He hit one of the Celestes and changed her into Andrew, but the spin attack made him too dizzy to attack again.

Andrew spun his arms like fans and bonked Cheren rapidly, but the boy ducked and did a Youth Roll to knock Andrew off his feet. Cheren used Soul Surge to land fearsome blows against The King, and the act warped him out of the dimension.

Cheren was now outside and on the spinning skirt, having to jump Amps that rotated with him. Different layers of Crown Goliath’s body were rotating, and one had a ledge for Cheren to grab onto. The above layer had a Snapdragon hole, so Cheren whipped his sword up to cut the creature when it passed by. Cheren then grabbed the ledge on that layer, waited once more, and kicked up to the next ledge. Two Snapdragons waited below the final ledge, so he sliced them before climbing up.

Now on a solid foothold, Cheren had to fight past some Spear Guys to advance up stairs along The King’s body. With a burst of power, Cheren was blown several feet away from the Goliath, using the Pirate Sail to stop his fall. “Hold on, Cheren!” Vaati used airbending to blow him back onto the titan. At the end of the stairs, Cheren could Hookshot up to an opening into the gears.

The inside of the machine was much bigger, full of giant gears with Hookshot targets. Cheren latched onto one, which would rotate into an Amp, so he hooked up to the underside of a horizontal gear. It would spin Cheren into a wall with a thin gap, so he lowered himself via the Hookshot’s chain, going under the wall while the chain passed the gap. He saw a target on one of the points of a vertical wheel and latched to it, the wheel taking him underneath before he would be crushed against another gear. Cheren Hookshoted to another higher gear and dropped on a flat one below it.

From here, Cheren could grab and swing across a series of chains hanging from rotating gears. Some of these chains had Shock Chus slithering down, tempting him to progress quicker. “Kehe-!” Cheren held in a chuckle. In his glasses TV, Floop was having an awkward first date with giant nail clippers. It was amazing how he could focus on his objective while watching that show at the same time.

From the final chain, Cheren had to build swinging momentum, wait for it to rotate aligned with, and then jump off to glide to a distant opening using the Pirate Sail. Bombshell Bills launched from the sides and homed in on the child, but he ignored them and kept flying. The missiles would simply explode against each other and Cheren would be out.

Cheren was now on the back of the Goliath, having to climb a grated wall where square segments would turn and shoot out “CUCKOO!” birds. They turned without warning, and Cheren was flung off by one of them, but he quickly used the sail while Vaati blew him back on. “Kyah hahahahaha!” He heard Andrew cackling madly. “What are ye gonna doooo, Cheren? Going to cut me up? Why don’t you go GOD TIER, HUH? It’s okay, don’t be shy!”

Cheren made it to the shoulders of the Goliath, using the Mirror Shield to block the cuckoo bird that shot out, then froze it with an Ice Arrow. He decided to do the same to the other one, so there was nothing to stop him from grabbing the ledge under The King’s chin where the cockpit was. He climbed around and up the side, where a ladder would take him to the titan’s crown. Again, Cheren sidled along a ledge, and was directly above the cackling King’s cockpit.

I’m putting all my faith in you, Zach. And with that, Cheren dropped down, grabbed the edge, and kicked into the mouth to swing slices at King Andrew. The King blocked with Armament and PUNCHED Cheren out—thinking fast, Cheren whipped out a Hookshot, latched it to The King, and the world moved in slow motion as Cheren was pulled to him. (MaKayla was doing this to help him.) Cheren drew his sword, charged the Skyward Strike, and just five inches from making impact, Cheren changed into God Tier. “SKYWARD COMEDY STRIKE!!”

“KUOOOOOOOHHHHH!” Cheren’s blade was imbued with a blinding golden fire ignited by the humor he felt in his heart, steadily built up by Zach’s comedic routines in his very glasses. The Octogan met the full force of the blow, but King Andrew received the pain.

The King was forced inside the Goliath, and everyone could hear a “Dook dag dah ow daik dah!” as The King was comically bouncing down the stairs of his robot. Once at the bottom of the titan, an airship popped out, and The King used it to make his escape. (End song.)

“You’re not getting away!” Cheren rocketed after the high-speed ship and tossed gold flames to damage the engines. After a few hits, the ship swerved out of control and exploded. This time, Andrew hopped on a hoverbike and kept flying, so Cheren had to move faster and throw quicker flames to damage it. The hoverbike exploded, but Andrew saved a wheel and made a unicycle to keep floating. Cheren stared with total disbelief, throwing one flame to destroy it. Andrew grabbed the wheel and kept floating on that, so Cheren destroyed it.

And now The King was left with only his legs to rapidly kick in the air and move ever so slightly with the Flutter Jump. Cheren shook his head in disapproval and casually grabbed him by the hair. PUNCH, PUNCH, PUNCH, PUNCH, Cheren made Andrew’s eye black and burned with his golden fist. He combined his Three Sacred Treasures to strike Andrew’s backside with the Three Sacred Fusion. The King’s armor shattered completely, and his muscular body fell into a crater.

“GAH!” The Octogan popped out of his eye socket and bounced along the ground. Cheren gasped and quickly flew down to grab it.

“AAAAAAAAAAAAAHHHHH...” His mind was open to the colliding worlds, the First Dimension, and the crumbling multiverses.

“CHEREEEEEEEEN!” Panini cried.

“AAAAAAAAaaaaahhhhhhd...” His body was crumbling under the Octogan’s divine power.

“It’s useless!” Andrew yelled. “Even your godly body can’t comprehend the Octogan’s power and knowledge!”

Cheren’s body was a blinding green, the unstable energy blowing a whirlwind around the mountain. “… Maddy Murphy entered Haki Fury and rushed up to grab the Octogan, too. “AAAAAAAAHHHHH!” Even her Haki couldn’t protect her from the pain of a trillion years. King Andrew smirked wickedly as their bodies decayed.

“AAAAAAAAHHH!” Chris Uno grabbed the Octogan, sharing the pain with his brother and friend.

“WAAAAAAAHHHHH!” Anthony McKenzie grabbed it, and remained firm on his feet through the pain.

“EAAAAAAAAH!” Wendy Marvell bravely joined her future teammates.

“AAAAAHH THIS IS A BAD IDEA!” Nebula cried, linking her hand with the others'.

“AAAAAAHH STICK WITH THE REFERENCE!” MaKayla used her Timebending Fury to help them.

“Aaaahhh...!” And now, the pain was gone. Their bodies were unharmed, yet they were still holding the Octogan. Cheren smiled at all his friends. Their hands linked in the same place. Their hearts were as one.

“?!?” Andrew was in complete shock. Their bodies hadn’t obliterated at all. “But... HOW?! You’re children! H-How can you possibly...?!”

“Don’t you remember, Andrew?” Cheren asked. “We... are... KIDS... NEXT... DOOR...”

“!!” Andrew jumped up and grabbed the Octogan. “KAAAAAAAAAAHHHHH!” His body was overcome with greater pain, as though the Octogan grew tired of him.

And then the Octogan’s power vanished: Jagar King trapped the gem in a steel box. “Chi Container!” he announced. “And they said we never needed one this strong!”

“...” A gaping, frozen-mouth Andrew fainted.
Andrew Johnson found himself in a grassy meadow with a gentle breeze. He looked up as his blurry vision noticed a blackish shape with a purple top. “T…Travis?”

His old friend looked very disappointed. “What happened to you, Andrew? Where did it go wrong?”

“What do you mean? I…” Andrew glanced left. Dillon Simmons was there.

“You lost it, Andrew. You spent all this time up on God Mountain… you forgot what was really important to you.”

“You don’t understand! I did it for you! I did it for all of us! The Octogan was going to show me the way… It was going to help me save everyone.”

“Andrew, if your Octogan was so all-knowing, why didn’t it stop you from getting your butt kicked?” Travis remarked.

Andrew choked on his breath. “I…"

“We understand what you were trying to do… The Octogan may have showed you the end, Andrew… but did it show you the Kids Next Door?”

“Yes! It showed me the Kids Next Door’s destruction! If they finish this prophecy… they’ll all be doomed. I’m sure of it.”

“You know, Andrew… maybe you’re right.” Dillon said. “Maybe the Kids Next Door will be destroyed. But… that’s no excuse to destroy them yourself. When Travis died, did you stop fighting? When I died, did Nolan stop fighting? Yeah, you were a bit shaken up… but you knew that if you stopped, we would’ve been upset. And your all-powerful Octogan was just beaten by the Kids Next Door. If that could surprise you… don’t you think they could surprise you again?”

“…” Andrew reached behind and took the frying pan off his back. The ‘100’ was displayed clear on it. It was true… he had forgotten who he was. He relied on the Octogan’s wisdom… but all it brought was deception. It had not seen Zach was the Seventh Light… it had not shown his own defeat… Andrew was a fool for trusting it. “Travis… Dillon… Nigel… Kuki. …I’m sorry.” The world turned into light.

“Mmmmmn…” Andrew awoke on a rugged, ruined ground, cuts and bruises all over his muscular body. In the remains of his armor was his frying pan helmet. He picked it up and pushed the broken crown off of it. “…?” He looked up. The Kids Next Door and White Lotus were holding weapons to him. Kirie Beatles smiled bubbly and had chi-cuffs ready. Arceus was floating above and watching with the Eleven Firstborn.

“Hm hm hm…” Andrew smirked and sat against a jagged rock. “If it means anything to you guys… I’m up for Lime Rickey’s.”

“Kah ha!” Cheren laughed.

Sometime later

“ON YOUR KNEES, Failed Leaders!” Mabel Pines held her grappling hook to the four World Leaders. They were chi-cuffed and on their knees. “If any of you THINKS about calling another zombie, I’ll grapple-hook you in the face! Now WHAT do you have to say for yourselves?”

“SORRY.” they complied. (“–Felius Umbridge says with humiliation.”)
“Hm hm hm.” Andrew chuckled. “Chi-blocks don’t hold well on us. The Octogon showed us the secret equation that disables them.”

“There’s a thing like that?” Dillon asked. “Is that how Daphne escaped from prison?”

“Yes. Well then… I suppose it’s time to stop the Inferius. I’ll go give Dr. Strange the news.”

“So, Dr. Strange was the one who started it?” Nolan asked.

“He’s studied ways to harness magic and use it. Quite impressive, considering the power source he used.”

Mabel started to march back-and-forth like a military trooper in front of the World Leaders. Vaati’s left eye was slanted into a glare. “Dad, why are you looking at them like that?” Wendy asked.

“Those people have done unforgivable crimes, Wendy. They put you on the wanted posters out of blind fear, they have killed innocent people… We must do more than imprison them to ensure they never harm again.”

“They’re not going to hurt anyone, anymore. Don’t you think… they wanted freedom, too?”

“Hmm… I suppose that’s true. But I still intend to continue my quest. I still believe in true freedom.”

“I think you still owe Wendy some ‘true freedom.’” Carla reminded. “Remove the curse you placed on her now.”

“I don’t know how to do that without gravely harming her. I still don’t understand how Harry Potter survived… and apparently, neither does Voldemort. I asked him.”

Team Sandman followed Andrew into the castle’s cellar, finding Dr. Strange’s laboratory. “Dr. Strange, the battle is over. Disable the Inferius—!” The doctor was laying dead on the floor. “HUGO!”

“Well, this is anticlimactic…” Crystal commented.

“The crystal’s broken!” Nolan pointed at the platform, where fragments of purple crystal lay. “Zeref must have escaped!”

“But that crystal was supposed to be unbreakable!” Andrew exclaimed. “…!” He sensed a presence outside with Observation Haki. “They’re here.”

A gargantuan vessel had risen above Mt. Mariejoa: seaweed-green and covered in coral and sea fauna, with a great mouth of sharp teeth on the keel, and five times bigger than the Flying Dutchman: it was the King Dutchman. “HAH HA HA HA HA HA HA!” Medusa towered high on the deck. “So, the Kids Next Door establish their selves as this world’s rulers! You think you’ve won this battle? Let me show you what TRUE power is. Introducing… the Thirteen DARKNESSES!” (Play “K. Rool Battle Intro” from Donkey Kong 64!)

The ship lowered and allowed them to see everyone on deck. There were some they recognized, others they didn’t… but here they were, together in one place. “Ladies and gentlemen,” Bill Cipher announced. “I’m your host, Bill Cipher, here to introduce you to the MOST POWERFUL beings in all the MULTIVERSE! Ladies first!”
The first Darkness, a yellow giantess, leapt high off the ship and shook the mountaintop upon landing in the town. “Hailing from the First Dimension, Empress of the Gem Empire, IT’S YELLOW DIAMOND!”

“Yellow Diamond?!” Anthony exclaimed. “No way! She wasn’t this big when I first saw her!”

“Hm?” Yellow Diamond glanced down, scowling. “Oh… if it isn’t Pearl’s old pet. You’ve become… smaller.”

Without warning, Thanatos appeared by Azelf, grabbed her, and warped to Yellow Diamond. “Quick, attack this creature!” Thanatos threw Azelf, and Yellow Diamond swung her massive boot and struck the Firstborn.

Azelf calculated the results. “Yellow Diamond’s Power Level is: 15453.”

The next Darkness to jump on land was someone everybody knew. “Captain of the Flying Dutchman, Ferrier of Souls, the Heartless Captain DAVY JONES!”

“Princess Eva!” Jones drew his sword. “You did not think you could hide from me again, did you?”

“YOU’RE one of the Thirteen?” Eva chortled. “I defeated you when I was an amateur waterbender!”

“Ahh, but tell me this, Eva… would you have been so lucky, had I no heart to stab?” Jones smiled wryly. “Uh huh ha ha ha hah! HAAAH!” He lashed a swift Water Ship at Azelf.

“Davy Jones’ Power Level is: 13267.”

“And Mom defeated him like THAT?!” Melody exclaimed with sheer disbelief.

“Next up, all the way from the Land of Fire, founder of Hidden Leaf Village and the Uchiha ancestor, give it up for MADARA UCHIHA!”

Madara’s Inferius eyes were in the form of Sharingan. Using the Mangekyō Sharingan’s power, Madara brought to life Susanoo, a colossal samurai composed of a sapphire body with flaming wings. Azelf gazed at the colossus in horror, but embraced for the worst as she allowed the great sword to slice her. If she were not unkillable, she would be obliterated. “Madara Uchiha’s Power Level is: 20163.”

Bill Cipher continued, “Hailing from Soul Society, master of illusions, and one HELL of a Kidō master, cry his name to the heavens, SŌSUKE AIZEN!”

“I won’t need to measure my Power Level.” Aizen said. “My example speaks for itself.”

Azelf gasped loudly—Sectors V, W, IC, the adults—EVERYONE was lying on the ground with their throats slit, blood spilled everywhere. “NOOOOO!”

In reality, the operatives were confused at what was sparking so much fear inside Azelf. “I wonder what she’s seeing?” Aizen gave a dark, yet charming smile. He had drawn his sword, Kyōka Suigetsu beforehand, and made Azelf witness the action. Without saying another word, Aizen sprouted a blackish-purple energy coffin to encase Azelf, spears piercing through it. Everyone was struck silent, but when the coffin dissolved, Azelf was still intact. To her shame, however, the Firstborn was getting bruises.
“Sōsuke Aizen’s Power Level is… 19981. Ow.”

“Please stop!” Wendy pleaded. “You’re hurting her!”

“Oh.” Aizen faced the girl. “Would you rather we demonstrate on one of you?”

“Gulp…” Wendy froze in fear, choosing not to respond.

“A Pirate Emperor who conquered treacherous seas,” Bill resumed, “he wields powers of Tremors and Darkness, the legendary Marshall D. Teach! Or should I say… BLACKBEARD!”

The large bearded pirate quaked the ground before Cheren, showing missing teeth in his big smile. “Blackbeard?!” Cheren instantly recognized the man. He was the same crazy person eating cherry pie that he met before the Viridi War.

“I’m impressed, Cheren! You came farther than I thought you would! So, did the poison work? Did you teach Viridi a lesson?”

Cheren growled and switched to God Tier, but Teach grabbed the boy and slammed his face to the ground, his gold flames extinguished. “AAAH! What happened to my God Tier?!”

“My Dark-Dark Fruit nullifies the powers of anyone I touch! I wonder if it does the same to gods?” Teach set his sights on Azelf. The pirate leapt forth and smashed the Firstborn to the ground with a punch that sent a godly tremor through the very air.

Azelf felt like she was flattened past the 2-D plane, but when she recovered, she brought the news. “Blackbeard’s Power Level is 22072.”

“Following the act, former Czar of the Chrome Dome Empire, he likes magic, shaving, and doodling in school, CZAR BALDY BALD III!”

“KAH HAH HAH!” Baldy Bald grabbed Wendy and Nagisa’s heads. “Your hair is so blue, it must taste like blueberry! Get ready to go bald, girls!”

“NO, PLEASE! I don’t wanna be bald!!” Wendy cried.

“I’m a boy!” followed Nagisa.

“Leave them out of this!” Azelf smacked Tsuru off of them.

“How dare you attack me! Red Magic Attack!” Tsuru cast a red beam and did little harm to Azelf.

“Baldy Bald’s Power Level is: 100.”

“ONE HUNDRED?!” Zach cried. “That’s so powerful!! We’re never going to win against him!” He sat on the ground and cried a stream of tears.

“It’s okay, Zach, I’ll one-punch him for ya.” Maddy patted his head.

“This Darkness came a long way from Hollow Bastian, a Keyblade Master and Seeker of Darkness, open your hearts to the wisdom of XEHANORT!”

“When I was told that children are the heroes of this universe, I was a bit humored!” Xehanort laughed as he stepped past the kids calmly. “But you children are more than what you seem… I eagerly await our future interactions.” He drew his Father Time Keyblade and froze Azelf in time, swiftly flipping around her and laying 20 hits.
Azelf unfroze and reacted to the strikes, looking like she was being beat around by someone invisible. “Xehanort’s Power Level is 21822.”

“Now, this guy decided to come here early! The darkest wizard history ever knew, leader of the Death Eaters and a Slytherin graduate, LORD VOLDEMORT!” Bill snapped his fingers and exploded the ice holding Voldemort and Bellatrix.

“AAAAH HA HA HA!” Bellatrix cackled. “Lord Voldemort is superior to ALL OF YOU! You think yourselves powerful?! My Lord can demolish you in one flick of his finger!” One second later, Voldemort’s Inferius head rolled off his body. “VOLDY!” Bella gasped and quickly put his head back. The arms fell off, so Bellatrix reattached them. “Please, My Lord, show these wretches how powerful you are.” She put his Phoenix Feather wand in his hand and helped aim at Azelf.

“Avada... Kedavra.” Voldemort shot a very small green spark at Azelf. Even if Azelf was mortal, the tiny Death Curse would only do as bad as a bloody nose. “Voldemort’s Power Level, or at least his Inferius, is... 56.”

“LIES!! MY VOLDY IS NOT THE WEAKEST!”

“It’s okay, Bella, we believe you.” Bill said awkwardly. “Let’s move on. I bet you folks didn’t see THIS comin’! A demon of Ancient Egypt in Termina, a father of dark magic, ZORC NECROPHADES! Known by modern day humans as Truman Kirman!”

“Truman?!” Cheren and Panini chorused.

“Truman is no more.” the boy stated. “I am Zorc. And soon, the universe will remember it.” Zorc spawned a card in which a Red-Eyes Black Dragon emerged. The dragon struck Azelf with its breath and vanished.

“Zorc’s Power Level is 25666.”

“Of course it’d be those numbers.” Goombella commented.

“Better show your respect, folks, because THIS Darkness will show no mercy! From Marvel-199999, he’s a powerful warlord who holds the Infinity Gauntlet, bow before Mad Titan THANOS!”

“Thanos?!” Diancie gasped. “He was the one that killed Stone!”

“You make Thanos look like a joke.” Thanos stated firmly, pushing Bill aside. “This is how you strike fear in your subjects, Child. Ahem... BOW!!” The Titan punched the ground with his Infinity Gauntlet, and with a burst of power from the Power Stone, everyone on the planet died. Thanos then used the Time Stone to rewind the events, restoring life to the planet. He proceeded to flick a horror-struck Azelf with his other hand.

“Thanos’ Power Level is 9500... but that Infinity Gauntlet is another matter. If I could, I would estimate... 1,051,788.”

“That’s a good estimate.” Emily quivered.

“A man you all know, he’s the King of Evil, ruler of demons and holder of the Triforce of Power, it’s the return of GANONDORF DRAGMIRE!”

“I never thought I would get to see you again, Rachel!” Ganondorf grinned devilishly. “How shameful that your son is... a lot more interesting to me.”
“You wanna see how ‘interesting’ I am, Ganon?!” Cheren drew his sword.

“Oh, I will… but for now… just a small demonstration will do.” Ganon faced Azelf, took a breath, and “AAAAAH!”

He blasted a soundwave that blew Azelf across the town, her ears ringing and her eyes dizzy. “Ganondorf’s Power Level is 30,000. I think that was more than a lucky win for Rachel.”

“And now, the eldest of the Darknesses, over one million years old and still looking young and sharp, it’s our FAVORITE long-lasting Zathurian, DIMENTIO Z. WINKIEBOTTOM!”

“But alas, I had already spoiled the surprise like a giddy fanboy.” Dimentio giggled. “I arrived earlier to drop off my sister. I couldn’t allow her to miss this show, I just couldn’t!”

He blasted Azelf with a Starburst. She recorded and concluded, “Dimentio’s Power Level is 36755.”

“Aren’t you glad that I held back, Dearest Niece?”

“And finally, a Darkness who was a bit late to the party, but we got that mess sorted out, he comes from the Floating Land of Alakitasia, the black wizard ZEREF!”

“How did you escape from the crystal, Zeref?!” Andrew demanded.

“During your exciting showdown, I snuck into the castle to free him.” Medusa explained. “I did it using a magical substance called Moon Drip.”

“I read about that.” Wendy mentioned. “Moon Drip is a kind of healing remedy harnessed from moonlight that can undo almost any magical spell or-!” she gasped in realization. “Or curse…”

“Yes, and Acnologia’s explosion spilled a hefty amount of Moon Drip. I guess I have Diwata’s harnessing of the Lunar Magic to thank for that as well. Zeref, honey, show us your Power Level!” Medusa spoke like a mother to her toddler.

The dark wizard attacked Azelf with a Death Sphere, and to his amazement, the Firstborn didn’t die. “Zeref’s Power Level is 4595.”

“That doesn’t sound too bad.” Mason said.

“Guess again.” Goombella was examining Zeref with Tattle. “Zeref’s HP is infinite.”

“Infinite?!” Wendy gulped.

“Every possible method to kill myself has failed.” Zeref spoke. “Such is my curse. I passed that ability onto the Inferi. That is why… I can command them.” With a wave of his hand, Bellatrix lost her free will and collected Voldemort’s remains to bring him aboard the King Dutchman.

“And my Power Level is a solid million.” Bill reminded. “But I don’t want you guys to feel bad or anything. I mean, when it comes down to, what is a Power Level, anyway?”

“CIPHER!!” Arceus’s godly voice thundered. He hadn’t looked so furious since his drive to Darkness. “How DARE YOU attack my daughter like a tattered ragdoll! If her curse were still intact, you would know pain and humiliation like no other!”

“Well, Daddy, if you didn’t want us to kick Azzie around, you should have left her curse!” Bill remarked. “But if you insist, then… DARKNESSES: attack Arceus!”
All at once, the Thirteen attacked Arceus with their fearsome power, Aizen’s Hadō 99, Madara’s Susanoo, Thanos’ Power Stone, Davy Jones’ Dark Spirit Cyclone, Ganondorf’s lightning, Tsuru’s Red and Blue Magic, and Yellow Diamond used white diamonds to absorb some energy from their attacks and amplify them. Bill Cipher joined the fray and burned Arceus with full power, the combined power would leave everything in its wake in complete oblivion. However, when it was over, Arceus was safe in his bubble barrier. (A tiny green spark floated up and popped on him like a bubble.)

“RAAAAAAH!” Arceus blew the Darknesses back onto the Dutchman with his bellow. “If your villains were not vital to the prophecy, I would deliver justice upon YOU ALL! Take heed, heathens, that my Power Level is one billion. You may believe you have the potential to conquer worlds like petty bullies, but I will always be the Principal!”

“Relax, Arcy, we’re just having some fun!” Bill said in a mock consoling fashion. “We’ll get out of your hair, okay? We just need to collect something first. Ahem… the Octogan, if you will.” He looked at Jagar King.

“What?! I’m not letting you have this!” Jagar stated.

“I wasn’t instructing you.” (End song.)

“HAH HAH HAH HAH!” The Chi Container was grabbed in psychic, floating up to Specter. The intelligent ape joined the Darknesses on the King Dutchman. “You fools were so busy with CP10 and the World Leaders, you forgot ALL ABOUT dear old Specter, didn’t you?!”

“GAAAH!” Emily panicked. “I can’t believe we forgot about Specter!! Oh, why did we waste time going to stupid Tree of Beginning?!”

“It’s simple, Emily: even as an intelligent human, you are still unevolved. This is for you, Lesser Lord!”

Specter passed the container to a man in bright green garb and a pale white head shaped like an orb. “It’s… Ragaj Gnik.” Jagar said with fear.

“His… face!” Aurora was disgusted. “…Where is his face?!”

“He doesn’t have one!” MaKayla gaped.

Indeed, Ragaj’s face was completely blank and round. “How…How does he eat?!” asked Chris.

“Kids Next Door, you have my earnest thanks for retrieving the Octogan from King Andrew. It is true that his family’s interference prevented the Octogan’s power from running unstable… but now, his use is now finished. I’ll dispose of him for you.” Ragaj aimed his hand at Specter.

“WHAT?!” Specter was suddenly lifted by an unseen force, flying to grab onto Andrew. “During one of our meetings, Specter, I froze time and implanted chronitons in your bloodstream so that I could control you. My apologies that you cannot realize your dream of an ape-ruled world, but… such is fate. Good-bye, Specter.”

Specter grabbed Andrew under the arms and flew skyward. “NO!! RAGAJ! YOU’LL RUE THE DAY YOU DECEIVED THE AMAZING SPEC-!” The ape exploded into a green light that distorted the surrounding space. No trace of him or Andrew was left behind.

“THEY EXPLODED!” Haruka screamed.
“I used my timebending to enhance the kinetic energy of Specter’s chronitons so they would explode,” Ragaj explained. “Now the Octogan is truly free of His Majesty’s control. But I’m certain you have a spare, Jagar. Bring that spare to Great Clock on May 31. There, we will have our final battle… and my master will return.”

Ragaj opened the Chi Container and took the Octogan out. He commanded the gem to release the Soul Stone from its captivity. Thanos took the green stone and stuck it in the index knuckle of his Infinity Gauntlet. “NOW Thanos is truly reborn! I will keep true to my word…” The Soul Stone shone as Thanos touched Dimentio, Madara, Davy Jones, and Voldemort. Their Inferius eyes vanished, bringing them back to life.

“Well-p, nothing left to do but bring these guys to VIP. Zeref, leave them with a little parting gift.” Bill ordered. “Fellas, turn the ship 180 degrees and let’s ditch this planet!”

The titanic King Dutchman turned and sailed to the sky. It was now that the heroes could see the vessel’s helmsmen: a red-haired woman, blue-haired man, and their Meowth smiling gleefully. “Looks like Team Rocket is sailing away with the big boys!” (“Wobbuffet!”) (“Chiiiiime…”) The ship became a twinkle in the sky.

The Inferi of Nigel, Dillon Simmons, Travis, and the others remaining lost their free will and readied to attack the heroes. Trees erected from the ground and sealed the zombies inside. “You’re welcome.” A giant 8-year-old with flowing blonde hair and a rose thorn dress emerged from the edge of the mountain.

“Viridi!” Cheren exclaimed.

“NOT HER AGAIN!” Anthony shouted. “Quick, Cheren, kill her!”

“Calm down, Anthony Ant, I’m currently on your side. Your friend, Majora freed me from prison and I persuaded him to warp me to Fairy World. With the threat that Majora would destroy the place with his power, Princess Aisling restored me to… partly my old self. I did you humans a favor and rounded up all the Inferi I could. I can’t remove the curses on them, but I can keep them contained.”

“Well, you’ve partly made up for your crimes.” Cheren said.

“Maybe this will make up: your mother forgot to bring this from home.” Viridi tossed him a little ball with a silver bottom and blue top.

Cheren smiled and faced Azelf. “Am I worthy to be your Guardian now?”

“You are a god.” She shrugged. “I don’t see how you can get more worthy than that.”

“I’d say you’re worthy of some rest after that endeavor. In you go, Azelf!” Cheren threw the ball and caught his Firstborn. The Spirit Ball brimmed and a ‘II’ appeared on the forehead.

Cheren Uno captured a FIRSTBORN!! Once again, we have them all!!

“Hello, Viridi!” Arceus greeted her happily. “How have you been?”

“Oh, shut up, Dad.” Viridi Ascended to the Spirit World and vanished.

“…Was it something I said?” asked the Supreme God.

“Well, we’re in for a fight, it seems.” Dillon said. “Poor Andrew, though…”
“Oh, I wouldn’t worry about him.” Zach smirked. “I’m sure he’s closer than we think.”

Next to him was some muscular guy in a top-hat, monocle, and fake black mustache. “Oh, you saved him.” Maddy observed in disbelief. “Good job, Zachy. But you put the monocle over the wrong eye.” Indeed, it was over the empty socket.

“All’s well that ends well. For now, anyway.” Aurora shrugged. “I think we’re late for something else.” She smirked.

“I’m way ahead of you.” Kid replied. “We will be ready by tomorrow.”

After the battle, the World Leaders and Abram Johnson were taken to Arctic Prison. The Spirit Kids Next Door helped Viridi search for and seal the remaining Inferi, but the ones that were sent beyond the planet had not been found. All in all, at this time tomorrow, the chaos created by the World Leaders had all seemed like a nightmare. Tomorrow was a beautiful sunny day…

Cleveland Playground, the day after… (Play “Apotos Day” from Sonic Unleashed!)

“Haaaappy birrrrthday toooo you.” Cheren was sitting on a table with a three-layer cake. It had white icing, cherries on top, and 10 candles. “Haaaappy birrrrthday toooo you.” All his friends were here. “Happy birrrrthdaay Chereeeen Uuuunoooo. Haaaappy birrrrrthday toooo you!”

“And you smell like one, too!” Artie finished. “Oops, wrong song. Haha!”

“No need to get antsy.” Death the Kid told everyone. “We baked 20 cakes of the exact same design, so everyone gets an equal amount. And don’t worry, we cut out any demon material from the recipe.”

The cake was baked with a similar recipe as the Delightful Children’s cake. Everyone took a slice and picked a table where they were happily chatting amongst friends. Wendy and Nagisa were getting acquainted, as were Chelia and Morgiana beside them… though Morg was mostly quiet, keeping her eye on Wendy. Index and Chimney were having a hotdog-eating contest—both girls devoured a sufficient amount.

Vweeb, Aeincha, and Ururu were sharing one slice of cake, which was so big to their size that they burrowed through the cake like moles. When those three couldn’t stomach another bite, Team Rupert sent Pikmin to recover pieces of cake and divide it amongst their Minish friends.

Arianna was speaking to Princess Gonshiri and Shelly, trying to form a friendship. Sadly, the twin sisters used her as a target for their snarky remarks, showing off their royal smugness.

Zuri, Gonbe, and Waddles were nibbling their own slices, but Sparky settled with a cup of oil. Carla was appalled by the animals’ behavior, using a fork to eat her cake like a proper lady.

Zach was on a stage doing a comedy routine with Floop, Jar Jar, and General Guy. By the end of the show, each participant had more bruises than the CP10 or World Leader battles combined.

Anthony was showing Aisa some earthbending moves, and while she couldn’t use the element herself, it may help her in combat. In return, Aisa would tell Anthony how to use Red-Foot Style.

Miyuki was leaning in the shade of a tree as April painted her. The environment in the painting was dull, gray, and captured emotion beautifully.

Ruby and Diwata Uno were arm-wrestling using their flaming fists. Sapphire was externally accepting of the friendship between Ruby and the blue-skinned Lunarian, but internally, her mind was in turmoil.

The Eleven Firstborn were on a picnic blanket, sharing delicious food and sweets. They had gotten used to Diancie quickly, since Crest appeared out of nowhere as well, but it did raise questions on if there were more Firstborn. Crest and Midna were under an umbrella, preferring the shade.

Nebula was personally requesting Death the Kid to join the Galactic Kid Council. And for the 8,000,008th time, Kid said “NO.” Sheila Frantic was furiously beating Augustus up for ripping off her epithet—Augustus didn’t know why the fairies took him back for this to begin with.

Marine Frantic and Mandy Cortix were drinking rum as the former wrapped an arm around her and swayed, singing “Binks’ Sake.” Henrietta settled with soda, giggling at them.

Ib, Mary, and Garry were sharing a table. Phosphora, Jack Frost (using a Gigai), Django (who was saving cake for Luviro), and Shade were sharing one. Suki, Sonny, and Donna were having fruity snowcones and becoming quick friends. Alexei was sitting with Sector KB, still awkwardly wondering if he was allowed to be here.

“Guys, don’t start the party without me!” Everyone turned to the direction of the voice.

“GEORGE!” MaKayla jumped up and hugged her older brother. “Where were you all this time?!”

“I… don’t really remember.” George scratched his head, which was wrapped like a mummy. “But my mom brought me back. So, who’s got cake?!”

Chris stared at George suspiciously. Now that he thought about it, the ‘8’ under his headband looked just like the Octogan. “What’s wrong, Chris?” Maddy asked him.

“Uh… nothing. Hey, whatever happened to Lucci?”

“I don’t know. I guess he got scared and ran when Cheren came!”

“Lion has become a kitty, it seems.” Chris chuckled.

There was a FLASH, and pink flames appeared in the air above the middle of the park. They assumed it to be Bill Cipher coming to ruin the party… but the one to appear was Madotsuki. “Whoa!” The girl whirled in the air, trying to balance. “How do I stop??”

“Good afternoon, everyone!” Darkrai II appeared and held Madotsuki. “Well, it seems my theory was true after all. Madotsuki borrowed some of Bill’s powers when they switched realities. Bill was able to send his energy to peoples’ dream bodies and enable them to see him in the real world. Madotsuki is now doing the same.”

“She looks just like me!” Mabel expressed. “It’s like… a twin I never had!”

“I’m your twin, Mabel.” Dipper reminded.

“I always thought you were adopted.”

“Hello, Madotsuki!” Mary waved. “I’m very glad you could join this party with us! There are so many friends we wanna introduce you to!”

“This is the best birthday I could’ve asked for.” Cheren said. “Thank you all for being here. Tomorrow, we’ll have a funeral for Leanne.”
“It’s not a big deal.” Lee Andrew complied. “We have an Apocalypse to worry about.”

“Yeah, but there’s nothing else we can do now. We found all the Keys, we got all the Firstborn... we just need to root for Mr. King when he fights Ragaj... AAH!” Cheren screamed.

“What?!” Panini shouted.

“NERECH! What happened to Nerehc when I died?!”

“Nerehc was thrown into the Sanzu River.” Kid explained. “His life force was stolen by Ganondorf’s soul, and that’s what revived the Evil King.”

“No! Nerehc...” Cheren’s happiness decayed. “But if... I’m still around, Nerehc should be...”

“Perhaps on normal terms.” Another voice spoke. Zanifr Mimchi and Viridi came out of a dark portal. “But God Tier is a law of the First Dimension. Its laws do not comply with yours.”

“Happy birthday, Cheren!” Viridi greeted joyfully. “It’s so great to see all you again!”

“What do you want now, Poison Ivy?” Anthony retorted.

“I wanted to give Cheren my best wishes, for one thing. I must admit, despite his destructive tendency, there is a charm that sets him apart from other humans. ...But now that he’s a god, I can’t help but lose respect for him a little.” Viridi frowned. “I guess it’s a matter of him letting it go to his head.”

“I am impressed that Cheren was able to achieve the God Tier.” Zanifr said. “It means he was at the right strength and the right mentality, for the most part. However, Cheren, from this point forward, you will never age again. In other words, it will be your birthday forever.”

“Wow... we’re gonna need a lot more cake.” Cheren felt slightly disheartened. “Sigh... but it was a necessary sacrifice. Now I’ll have the strength to fight whatever the New World throws at us.”

“But if Cheren doesn’t age... well...” Panini twiddled her fingers. “He can’t grow up with us. He can’t be with... anyone...”

“Don’t worry, Cheren!” Mary patted his shoulder. “I’ll be happy to spend eternal youth with you!”

“Hm hm.” Nebula chuckled. “Knowing what my mom has done, this is a tad ironic.”

“You have no idea.” Sugar remarked.

“I guess I’ll just have to watch all my ladies get old!” Cheren laughed.

“CHEREN!” Panini startled him. “How can you be okay with this?! I mean, never growing up... it goes against everything you taught us!”

“Panini, just because my body won’t age, it doesn’t mean my mind won’t. I taught you all to keep moving forward and become stronger. And that’s what I’ll keep doing, too. I may be a god, but I’ll still fight beside all of you. And when the time comes... I’ll resign as Supreme Leader and pass the duty to someone else. Are you guys okay with that?”

No, Panini wasn’t okay with it. But everything else he said was true... so she nodded. Cheren’s siblings nodded, Anthony nodded, Melody, Wendy, Bon Clay, and everyone else. “I’ll make sure to stop him if he tries anything.” Viridi mentioned. “But the other matter I came here for... WAS YOU, Wendy!” She whipped around to the blue-haired girl.

“M-ME?!” She flushed.

“When Aisling returned my powers, her friends asked me to bring you to Fairy World. They said you should feel free to bring your magic friends. We can go after the party.”

“Um… Okay.” Wendy was extremely curious, but it didn’t show on her nervous expression.

“Zanifr, are you sure Nerehc isn’t still alive?” Cheren asked.

“I have already been to the Negaverse. The DNK is terribly upset by his loss. Today, they are having Nerehc’s funeral/birthday party.”

“Sigh… I should go.” Cheren got up. “You guys don’t need to wait for me. Zanifr, can you take me to the Negaverse?”

“Very well.” The troll opened a dark portal. (End song.)

Before they could enter, however, emerald flames ignited outside the park and the Grim Reaper appeared. “Father!” Kid yelled.

“COUGH, cough!” Grim used his scythe to hold himself up. “H-Happy… birthday… Cheren. COUGH!” The reaper was a deep gray, cracks and wrinkles all over his boney body.

“Grim, you look horrible!” Cheren said. “What’s wrong?”

“Cough! Cheren… I have a confession to make. That Unbreakable Vow… dat I made with you near the start of this month… I’ve been breakin’ it every day since then.”

“W…What?!”

“I told your friends what I had been doing… but what dey didn’t know was that they were still dying… and I kept bringing dem back to life… just like I had always been doing. I’m sorry… Cheren… but I could not allow any of you to die. You had to… complete de prophecy and save de universe. All I wanted… was to do my part.”

“Grim…” Cheren didn’t know whether to feel angry or thankful.

“Father…”

“Cough! Son…” Grim faced Kid. “I dink I’ve… taken this curse as far as I can. No being can break the same Vow so many times and…and survive. It’s… over for me, Kid.” He limped toward his son. “De New Universe… is going to need a new Reaper.”

Kid shook his head. “No… I couldn’t…”

“You can. Cough.” Grim held the scythe to him. “Take de scythe, Kid… Become a better Reaper… than your old man… cough!”

“…Father…” With a heavy heart, Kid took the scythe in both hands.

Grim fell to his knees and coughed the last of his nonexistent breath. “Kid… help Cheren with the upcoming battles… I’m sure he will need it. Until I met you kids… I never thought mortals were much of anyt’ing…” He spoke to the adults as well. “But you’ve all… done amazing t’ings. I know you’ll save de universe… I’ll be watching you. Good-bye…’
The Reaper’s bones turned into ash and blew away with the breeze. His cloak dissolved into smoke and reformed over Kid’s body. The new Reaper bowed his head, holding the scythe tightly.

“…Let’s go, Zanifr.” Cheren entered the dark portal as the troll followed.

You know, after listening to “Open Your Heart,” I never realized that song foreshadowed a lot of future Sonic games. XD Well, people, this story only has two chapters left. Next time, we will do the final stage.
What is a Firstborn?

Chapter Summary

Cheren attends Nerehc Onu's funeral. Wendy Marvell is invited to a special tea party. Afterwards, God Arceus tells the KND some unique information.

This is the second-to-last chapter. Here, we will do the final stage.

Chapter 81: What is a Firstborn?

DNK Moonbase

A poster of Nerehc was placed on a stand in front of his office, surrounded by bouquets of dandelions. Cheren and Sipa stood before the poster with bowed heads. It should have been a time of remorse and grieving for the lost DNK leader. …But in the Negaverse, birthday parties were treated as funerals and funerals like birthdays, so the DNK was trying to work it both ways. Tropical island music was playing as operatives were cooking barbeque and crunching chips. Everyone was upset, truly, but Nerehc would still want them to be happy, right?

“I can’t believe we trusted that witch.” Sipa stated. “Was it really vital that we bring Ganondorf back? Was there really no other way? I still don’t understand why YOU’RE alive and he isn’t!”

“I don’t want to accept it either, Sipa.” Cheren replied. “I really want to believe Nerehc is still alive somehow. But at the same time… I don’t know what to believe, anymore. I’m a human child that has the powers of a god, there’s more than Eight Firstborn… and why was Truman with the Thirteen Darknesses?”

“You saw Truman?!”

Cheren whipped around. The question came from the familiar voice of Harry Uno. “Termina Sector V! How did you get here?!”

“It started when Truman started acting all crazy.” Melissa explained. “He destroyed the portal in Father’s mansion just as he used it to cross to your world. We were going to ask our Negatives if anything happened to their Truman, and… luckily, they were at the mirror in Harry’s room just in time to meet us, too. Basically, we used a Dimension Transporter in some jungle.”

“Perhaps we can explain the rest of the story.” another voice said.

“Oh, guess who!” Celeste jumped with a start. “Hey, Negative Sector V, this is our pal, Cheren.” The five stepped aside to reveal their Negatives, including Truman’s.

“Namurt here just decided to run off and come to THIS dimension!” Assilem Nagillig smacked him aggressively. “Wanna tell ’em what that was all about?!”

“So help me, Assilem, I…” Namurt raised a fist, which shone a gold light. “No no no, patience, patience…” He faced Cheren. “Ahem: the short story is, I am a priest in training at the Church of Acirema. I can sense when very dark forces are afoot, and have recently felt a darkness radiating from my Positive. I quickly fled to this dimension to find him... but for the most time, I had difficulty acquiring anyone’s help since I’m sort of a stranger.”

“Well, I think I found Truman.” Cheren explained. “He’s with the Thirteen Darknesses. They called him Zorc; said he was from Ancient Egypt.”

“Do you know where he is now?” Melissa asked. “Because we aren’t going back home without him.”

“I have sort of an idea... but I don’t think he’ll be able to come home anytime soon. It looks like he’s a part of the prophecy.”

“Can you take us to him, anyway? So we can see if he’s still... Truman?”

“I guess I can... But I wanna stay for this funeral first.”

“Hold on, how come Nerehc’s dead but you’re still alive?!” Celeste questioned.

“I’m going to get tired of explaining this.” Cheren smacked his forehead.

Facilier’s Voodoo Emporium

“Maaaaaan, does it feel good to be in the old emporium again!” Dr. Facilier kicked back in his chair with his feet on the table. With the World Government defeated, Wendy was no longer a wanted criminal, and the doctor could move back into his alleyway shop in Cleveland. Wendy had invited Chelia here to tell her friend about her most recent adventures. What really caught her off guard was-

“THIS LITTLE KITTY IS YOUR MOM?!” Chelia seized Carla and held her uncomfortably close to her eyes.

“OW!! That was extremely unnecessary!”

“It’s true.” Wendy replied. “My father made her that way. She’s actually a Nimbi.”

“That has got to be the CUTEST thing ever!” Chelia hugged Carla and twirled around. “It’s like that movie Nine Lives! Except... better. Now I bet you aren’t even sure which of you is the master, anymore.”

“In all fairness, Wendy was never quite the brains.”

“Moooooom!” Wendy flushed.

There was an impatient knock on the door. When you’re done ‘Moming’ in there, we have somewhere to be!” Viridi stated. And I certainly won’t violate my purity by stepping into a voodoo shop.

“Sorry!” Wendy blushed. “Would you like to come, Chelia?”

“I wouldn’t miss this for the world!”

The two girls and Carla exited the shop, joining Viridi outside. “Close your eyes, girls.” The goddess instructed. Wendy and Chelia did so. “You too, non-cat.” Carla huffed and shut her eyes. Viridi warped them to the Spirit World, and from there they made the leap to Fairy World.

Fairy World
The magical city was situated above Avalar’s atmosphere. It consisted of dozens of islands on glittery pink clouds and rainbow bridges connecting them. The fairies looked like child-size adults with big heads, wearing crowns, bug wings that helped them fly, and star-tipped magic wands that glittered like the stars above.

“I can’t believe it!” Chelia had stars in her eyes. “Fairy World is actually real! Just like the stories said! The clouds are even cotton candy!” She dove down and ripped a piece off a cloud, eating it. “!!!” Her cheeks swelled and her stomach churned. “BLEEEH!! It tastes like… fairy vomit!”

“Ha ha ha! You humans are too puny-minded to appreciate the succulent taste of sprinkled baby powder!” a thick German voice stated.

“AAAAH!” Wendy screeched. “IT’S A GIANT!”

“I’ve seen bigger.” Viridi remarked.

“So, you are the infamously Windy Marvel’ that has caught Princess Mavis’ attention.” The giant fairy had a muscular tan body and wore a light-green sleeveless shirt and camouflage pants. “I am Jorgen von Strangle, toughest fairy in the universe and King of Fairy World. VIRIDI, BE GONE!”

“Geez, you’re never gonna let that ‘Forces of Nature’ business go, are you.” Viridi turned around with a fake resentful expression. “Every person in the modern day has anger issues, I hope the New Universe is a lot nicer in that sense. Buh-bye.” Viridi warped.

“Hello, King Strangle.” Wendy bowed politely. “If I may ask, how is it you know my name?”

“We fairies have been monitoring you ever since the crisis you caused in Orchid Bay. It seems that your father has been longing to acquire the Fairy’s Tail in your namesake. And now, against my better judgment, Princess Mavis has personally requested you come to the first Fairy Princess Tea Party in 5,000 years.”

“A Fairy Princess TEA Party???” Chelia exclaimed. “Wendy, HOW did you get us INVITES to this?!?”

“SILENCE!!” Jorgen shook the world. “You are forbidden from discussing details of the party to anyone, not even yourselves, and smuggling food will result in one year of being turned into a bathroom rug. Now, with this in mind… LET US ADJOURN TO THE TEA PARTY NO ONE ELSE MAY HEAR ABOUT!!” With a great surge of power from his King Wand, Jorgen poofed the four of them.

They landed in a dining room with a long rectangular table. The girls gaped at the gigantic cake towering to the ceiling with 10 layers, each one consisting of a different fruit. The plates had succulent fruits, sweets, and teas more delicious than anyone could imagine. They were drooling and wishing they hadn’t eaten at Cheren’s birthday party. Two people were already eating – Lapis Lazuli and a ghost-white girl with green eyes and fangs. (At first, Wendy thought it was Daphne Anderson.)

“Is it yummy-looking?” a girl’s voice said. The three turned and stared up a tall throne. Fairy Princess Mavis had shining blonde hair and a smirk on her face. Her giant neon butterfly wings flapped gently, and from her pink dress, her small bare feet hung from her seat. “Wendy Marvell… I’m glad you could make it.”

“Are you the Fairy Princess?”

“Yes I am! Call me Mavis. And you must be a friend of hers!” she said to Chelia. “You know, I invited one of your other friends here, too.”

A door opened, and an 11-year-old Chinese girl that was familiar to Wendy stepped in. “Hey Princess, when we use the magic toilets, where do they…?” Her eyes fell to Wendy.

“JUNE!!” She dashed up and grabbed her in a hug faster than a bullet.

“WENDY!” Juniper Lee squeezed her back, delighted to see her again. “I didn’t think I would see you here!”

“I wanted to make it a surprise!” Mavis giggled, floating to the floor. “Well, don’t just stand there, you three! Dig in!”

The four Fairy Princesses and Wendy’s friends took places at the table and gorged on the marvelous sweets. Wendy reached for a little chocolate-topped cake- “HEY!” it turned out to be Sugar Princess Zeira. “I’m not a tasty treat!” She bashed Wendy with her ladle. “Apologize!”

“I’m sorry!” Wendy flushed.

“Good! Now, feed me grapes.”

“As you wish.” Wendy got grapes from a plate and held them for Zeiry to eat.

“The fairies helped us repair the Veil over Orchid Bay and wipe the humans’ memories.” June explained. “But after that, things pretty much went back to normal. The princess brought me here and asked me to tell them about you.”

“What did you tell them?”

“Just that you came to Orchid Bay with your teacher and your talking cat. And that you stopped that crazy witch.”

“In truth, I wanted to make sure there was nothing evil about you, Wendy.” Mavis explained. “Not that I thought there was, but Jorgen wouldn’t stop being paranoid.”

“What has you so fixated on Wendy to begin with?” Carla questioned.

“As you guys must know, the Apocalypse is coming soon. I’ve known about it for a while and wanted to help… but as Fairy Princess, it’s against my boundaries to fight mortals.”

“Hasn’t stopped me.” Lapis remarked.

“When you’re finished eating, Wendy, I want to show you something.”

“I’m not too hungry. I ate earlier today, anyway.”

Princess Mavis led Wendy and Carla to the main throne room. There was a pedestal before the throne that rested a golden wand with a blue gem on the tip and fairy wings on its sides. “The Fairy’s Tail is a wand I crafted thousands of years ago.” Mavis said. “It’s the most powerful in the universe behind the Star Rod, and it remains as our most sacred relic…” The princess drew it from the pedestal. “I want you to have it, Wendy.”

“M-ME?! Are you kidding?!”

“The most powerful wand in the universe?!” Carla shared her disbelief. “She hasn’t even gone to school, yet!”
“Well, I’m not expecting her to use it right away.” Mavis blushed awkwardly. “I just want her to hold onto it. When this universe faces destruction, I want Wendy to take it to the New World and use it to fight the evils that await her. I want her to protect her friends with it.”

“Do you… really think I’ll need it?” Wendy asked.

“I’ve seen the Thirteen Darknesses and I fought some of them. There’s a high probability you will need it. But I’m kind of hesitant because… I don’t know what it’ll do to you. I’ve never entrusted the Fairy’s Tail to any mortal before. But you’re the only mortal who’s worthy enough in my eyes to wield it. So… the choice is yours.”

“Wait, you said that you weren’t allowed to fight mortals, yet you fought the Darknesses!” Carla noticed. “Why can’t you help us now? Why place this burden on Wendy’s shoulders?”

“…” Mavis bowed her head. “Because God Arceus wishes to salvage as much of this universe as he can. To do this, we fairies are going to meld back into him. In doing so, we may cease to exist.”

“That’s horrible…” Wendy almost cried.

“I haven’t told Aisling and Lapis this because I was afraid. I don’t exactly want to do this… but it must be done. That’s the other reason I want you to have the Fairy’s Tail. With my power imbued inside it… it will be like I’m still fighting by all of you. You don’t have to use it, Wendy, but just keep it with you. Keep it and… remember me.”

This was just like hours ago when Death the Kid took his father’s place as Grim Reaper. They were the new generation… the guardians of the New World. “If you really want me to… I’ll take it.” Wendy nervously grabbed the wand. “But you have to tell the others, Mavis. They’ll be sad when you’re gone.”

“I’m going to, Wendy. …Hm. I don’t know why, but I have a very strong fondness for you.” Mavis smiled.

“Hmm… I wonder why.” Wendy smiled back. In truth, she knew Mavis from the parallel dimension, though not personally, as Fairy Tail’s first master. Perhaps the wand in her hand marked the connection.

“Oh! And I had Lapis get this for you.” Mavis raised a small vial with bright blue liquid. “This is Moon Drip.”

Wendy gasped. “The stuff that removes magical curses? …Do you know about…?”

“I knew you were a Horcrux, yes. Let’s see if this will rid you of that curse. Open wide.”

Wendy opened her mouth and allowed the princess to pour the Moon Drip inside. ! ! ! ! A searing pain overcame Wendy—she fell on the floor in a fashion like instant death.

“WENDY!” Carla rolled her on her back. “Child, speak to me! Are you okay?! Wendy, wake up, please!”

Her long ears took the shape of normal ones. Wendy opened her eyes in time for Carla to see the scarlet-red become a chocolate brown. “Carla… what just happened?”

“Your eyes! They’re… normal.”

“Normal?” Carla pulled a mirror out of her backpack to show Wendy the result. The child helped herself up and felt her ears. Deciding to truly test it, Wendy reached under her dress and pulled off the Chi Stabilizers. They didn’t feel any change in wind after a few minutes. “It’s really gone… I’m not a Horcrux, anymore!”

“No charge is necessary!” Mavis beamed.

“Thank you so much, Princess Mavis! I’m so grateful!” Wendy embraced her in a hug. “Uh… but if it’s not too much trouble, could you do the same for Carla?”

“The kitty who’s actually a Nimbi? I want to say that I can… but Resurrección is more complex than any other Transformation Spell. It’s like the target is literally born all over again in a different way, even if Carla still has her speech and some of her memories. …But I think I know a good substitute!”

King Dutchman

“GAAAAAH!” Vaati clutched his head and squirmed in his cell, ankles cuffed to a wall. It felt as though half of his very body were chopped off.

“What’s wrong, Red Eye?” Butch of Team Rocket smirked. “Is the pain too much for ya? That’ll teach ya to fight the Thirteen Darknesses single-handed.”

“Who is screaming-ah?” Davy Jones approached.

“Hey, Captain Jones. This Red Eye guy is pretty shook up. That Diamond lady did a number on him, huh?”

Davy Jones phased through the cell door, brushing his tentacles on the squirming Vaati’s face. “I am no longer feeling the severed half of his soul. Perhaps this is what Voldemort wanted-ah.”

“It can’t be!” Vaati rasped. “Has my daughter… died?!”

Cleveland Park

Cheren brought Termina Sector V to the setting of his birthday party. All his friends were still together… but there were some extra guests. “NO WAY!!” Kellie screamed in anger. “Your mom got you a gihugic pony for your birthday, and I don’t even get a DONKEY?!”

“That isn’t a pony, Kellie… It’s Arceus.”

“Ah, there he is.” God Arceus looked Cheren’s direction.

“YOU TOOK YOUR PRECIOUS TIME, CHERRY SH!” Karkat’s Zoni’s antennas sparked from his anger. “WHEN IS A GUY LATE FOR HIS OWN DAMN WRIGGLING DAY?!”

“Karkitty, he already had his purthday!” >:33 Nepeta stated.

“Can We Get Back To The Point Guys?” a green-eyed Zoni named Kanaya asked (that name sounds familiar).

“FIRST, ARCEUS, YOU JACKASS GOD OF JACKASSES, BLOWING UP OUR UNIVERSE LIKE NO JACKASS BUSINESS!” Karkat unhesitantly swore at the god who destroyed their world.

“It was a necessary evil to prevent the conflict of Caliborn and Calliope from spreading.”

“BULLS, YOU DIDN’T KNOW ABOUT THEM AND WE KNOW IT!”
“I like that one.” Jessie Sidney commented.

“I am terribly sorry, Karkat. Truly I am. It pained me to destroy something I created from my heart. I am thankful that you and your friends are still alive.”

“EH, I’LL SWEAR YOUR ASS LATER. OKAY, SO WE HAVE ALL THE LIGHTS, THE DARKNESSES, AND ALL THE FIRSTBORN, BUT THERE’S ONE THING WE HAVE TO DO BEFORE THE APOCALYPSE.”

“You people created us?!” Midna asked. “How is that possible?”

“We harnessed Arceus’s loose God Chi.” Vriska followed. “Our technology is pretty tops, you know. ;;;; ) And we divided that chi in separat8 parts and used them to 8reed the artificial gods. Artificial, 8ut years stronger than the normal gods.”

“Only Eight Of These Eggs Was Complete By The Time Arceus Was Ready To Begin The New Universe.” Kanaya continued. “We Converted The Eggs Into Psychic Energy And Implanted Them In Arceus’s Mind. Using His Own Psychicbending, He Imagined The Eight Firstborn Into Existence. He Did Not Know Of Our Part In This, Nor Did He Know About The Other Firstborn We Were Still Developing.”

“We did the same to the egg that would become Manaphy, except that appeared in a more… mature manner.” ;;;; ) Vriska implied. “When Crest’s egg was complete, we converted his into Psychic Chi and warped it to Sunni’s mind. She unknowingly gave 8irth to Crest one Mother’s Day.”

“I… Are you serious?!” Sunni remembered that day.

“And as for Diancie, that was part of a deal we had with Rose Quartz of the Gem race. She had already destroyed her commander Pink Diamond and stole her energy. She Sorrowed some of the Arceus juice we had in store and produced an egg with Titan of the Ores race. The child of that egg would possess their com8ined divine powers! There, Diancie, now you finally know what you are!”

“Why are you telling us all this now?” Anthony asked rudely.

“Because when we were creating the eggs, we also created chambers that would enhance the Firstborn’s abilities.” Karkat explained in low caps for their sake. “But we would only let them use these Egg Chambers if they were adjusted enough with their own power. The original Eight have lived for billions of years and Manaphy had his sister to help him. But Crest and Diancie are still new to the scene in their own bodies. They aren’t ready, yet.”

“What We’re Saying Is We Would Like You To Bring The Firstborn To Their Egg Chambers.” Kanaya concluded. “Their Enhanced Capabilities Can Help Design The New World And Help You In The Upcoming Battles.”

“That’s Why The Tiny Fraction Of Power They Will Give You Will Be Even Greater. But There Is A Price To This.”
“8y putting the First8orn in their Egg Cham8ers, they will be upgraded to Second Age.” Vriska explained. “Naturally, this change can’t happen over night. It may actually 8e a few years until they are ready to come out.”

“A few years?!” Midna protested. “What if potential shadowbenders or psychicbenders are born?! We’re supposed to wait years until we see any new ones?”

“How many new benders are born each year?” Karkat emphasized. “I doubt any bender will be born and be substantially useful in that time. So, can we take you to the Chambers and get it over with?”

“I don’t know… Do the Firstborn want to do it?” Cheren asked. “Do they think they can survive without us?”

“My natural curiosity peaks my brain.” Uxie said. “I would like to experience it.”

“But you never had a chance to examine my brain!” Emily cried.

“What about Arceus? How does he feel about this?” Nebula asked.

“I find all this… very difficult to believe.” Arceus echoed. “But there have always been things even I cannot understand. The choice is yours.”

“Sigh… I’ll do it.” Midna decided.

“Me, too.” Azelf nodded.

“Man…a…?” Manaphy looked worriedly at his Guardian.

“It’s okay if you’re scared.” Melody held him comfortingly. “You don’t have to.”

“…!” Manaphy yelled determinedly, “Do it!”

“So will ILL!” Meloetta sang.

“Can we wait a little first?” Nebula insisted. “At least two days? There’s stuff I need to take care of with Jirachi.”

“Sure thing, Empress.” Vriska 8-winked. “You all can have two days with your First8orn. But on May 27, we will take you to the Egg Cham8ers. Get ready to say good-8ye, kids. 8ut hey, it’s only for a few years.”

“Children… please forgive your Father for his sins.” Arceus bowed.

“We do, Father.” The Lake Trio held hands and bowed. The other Firstborn followed.

Two days later…

Cheren was standing outside his house beside Azelf, watching the sun rise. The two turned back to Rachel, smiling from the doorway. Cheren and Azelf exchanged smiles and nodded. Karkat’s Zoni appeared. “TIME TO GO, GOD BOY.” At the same time as the other Zoni, the Nine Firstborn Guardians were warped to Great Clock’s Cyberspace. (Play “Gourmet Race” from Smash Bros. Brawl!)
Stage 70: Egg Chambers

Mission: Bring the Firstborn to their Egg Chambers.

Act 1: Gourmet Rush

Sugar and Meloetta raced forward and jumped up some stairs—lights flashed on as living hotdogs charged at her. Sugar spin-punched them in rhythm with the music, then she jumped up a stairway of Apple Piranhas that tried to snap her. She grabbed a spaghetti zipline and slid down, landing and racing across a field where she ducked and jumped flying pizza shurikens. She then sung a Song Road stairway to go above some Licorice Serpents, then downward to avoid Gumball Flies. She sidestepped left-and-right to dodge chicken bone spikes, and had to punch three living cooked turkeys at the beat of three cymbals.

Sugar ran up a giant taco loop-di-loop where more bones popped up at the guitar strums. Once past it, Sugar ducked a shuriken, jumped one, then Ground Pounded a large mushroom three times to be launched into the sky. Sugar formed a Song Road and soared down under a long strum. The road became bumpy at little strums—Sugar was dropped onto a field littered with popcorn buckets, kicking them all down as she ran, punching angry hotdogs.

She ran vertically up a falling Pop-Tart and had to Wall Jump between parallel falling tarts. Still going with the music, Sugar performed the same maneuvers with high and low flying Pop-Tarts. She landed at the tip of a cereal hill and nearly lost balance racing down, unable to see the hidden bone-spikes in the falling cereal, but jumping on cue with the music. She landed on a giant ice cream ball and rolled across a field, having to jump Gumball Flies—she ducked to go inside the cream and avoid falling cones, which stuck in the cream and forced Sugar to jump when the tips rotated by her inside.

It rolled inside a toaster—giant toast shot Sugar up, and she jumped more giant toasts that appeared with the music, and ducked toast strips that were launched higher to obscure her path. Giant toasts blocked her path, forcing Sugar to Ground Pound the one she was on to sink down and run across some falling toast. Sugar was then grinding along vertical spaghetti guitar strings, having to quickly alternate levels to dodge spiky pizza, the music still serving as cues. Sugar was set on the ground, punching angry hotdogs and turkeys, then running up a giant sausage snake to the sky. The snake’s head made roundabouts and snapped at Sugar on cue with the music, but the adult singer nimbly evaded and jumped off on the cliff up top. (End song.)

“This act reminds me of the very first level in this story!” Meloetta beamed. “Good times, good times…”

She and Sugar found a giant egg with a similar design as Meloetta. In the middle of the egg was a hatch door that was the Firstborn’s size. She danced close, and it opened at her presence. “I guess this is where I have to go in. …I might not get to see you for a while, Sugar.”

“I know. I felt like I barely had time to know you.” Sugar frowned.

“Me, too. …Even though I watched you grow from 10 to 22 years old in less than a month.”

“Hm hm hm!” Sugar giggled. “…Are you ready, Meloetta?”

“I am.” Meloetta danced in the chamber. “Always keep singing, Sugar! Come back with an even prettier voice!” And the egg closed. Sugar nodded, and in moments she was taken back by the Zoni. (Play “Bramble Blast” from Donkey Kong Country 2!)
Act 2: Happy Flowers

Arianna and Celebi were in a vast, gorgeous garden in the sky. Blue skies up above, blue skies down below, the only solid ground was floating in the middle. There were giant plants everywhere, all with happy smiling faces. Arianna had to jump some small flower platforms over a bushel of giant rose thorns. The roses had lovely smiles that suggested, “We’re nice, but if you touch us, we’ll kill you.” From the last flower platform, Arianna jumped to a Windmill Flower, a blue spinning plant that sent her flying like a propeller. Arianna carefully maneuvered a giant bramble tunnel and grabbed a giant floating dandelion.

The dandelion was adrift in the endless sky, and Arianna held it tightly when a strong wind blew. A flock of dandelions blew with them, it was a calming and gorgeous sight—Arianna was about to crash in some brambles, so she jumped to a nearby dandelion and avoided the fate. The wind changed course, two dandelions on either side, Arianna hopped to the right one to miss the brambles. Again the wind blew, all three dandelions would hit the brambles, but Ari saw the extra one underneath and dropped to grab it. One more breeze carried Arianna to a giant spinning sunflower platform.

The flower was steadily floating toward a flower field of rose thorns. Giant bumblebees were coming with friendly, welcoming smiles, but their true intentions were to attempt to stab Arianna once. They were coming faster and forced Arianna to dodge half a second after the previous, but she kept up the pattern until the sunflower arrived at the lush flower field. The flowers were half as tall as Arianna’s body, and they were so lovely that she wanted to take off her shoes and frolic in them. “WHOA!”

“BII!” When she did this, Arianna fell through an unseen pit under some flowers, and Celebi rescued her before she fell into the sky. Across this vibrant field was a giant green egg designed like Celebi. Arianna saw Crazee Dayzees skipping in the flowers, likely in places where there was solid ground. The Harnitan used them as guides, but the flowers cowered at her presence and ran, falling into the chasm. Arianna still made note of the solid areas and could follow the nearest Dayzee to stay on the path.

About 20 feet from the Egg Chamber, she approached an Amazy Dayzee. The golden flower panicked and zipped around the area before the chamber in a certain pattern. Arianna was positive that pattern was the exact path she needed to follow to avoid falling. The flowers the Dayzee ran through had their petals scattered in the above air, and that served as Arianna’s indicator. The path was a zigzag fashion, but very thin, so Arianna moved carefully but quickly before the petals would float down.

Arianna succeeded, and if she wanted to, she could go past the Egg Chamber and try to catch the Amazy Dayzee for a -load of points. But she decided she’ll replay the stage later and chose to step onto the altar. The giant egg opened a small chamber for her Firstborn. “I’ll miss you, Celebi.”

“Bi…” Celebi smiled and touched Ari’s heart. She flew into the chamber.

“When we meet again… I hope I will be a lot stronger!” Ari said determinedly. She watched until the chamber sealed Celebi inside. The Harnitan turned to head back.

“I hope I will be stronger, too.” Arianna gasped and faced the egg again. It was shining from Celebi’s presence. Arianna gave a heartfelt smile and was taken away by the Zoni. (Play “Sunset Shore” from Donkey Kong Country Returns!)

Act 3: Twilight Hill
A massive orange sun peered over the horizon, making the sky a deep fiery color. The entire landscape was black like shadow, so Dillon York and Midna were only visible against the sky like in a 2-D game (except Midna’s eye, Hair Hand, and blue lines). The Shadow Dillon sprinted right as 2-D levels required, passing several harmless shadow bushes. However, one of them came to life as an M. Bush and gnashed at Dillon, so he jumped to stomp it to the ground. Dillon came to a wall of gigantic leaves with Embers (flame spirits) placed around it. He used Veil to slither up the leaves, following a path in-between the light of the fires.

Still against the leaves, Dillon’s silhouette set foot on a black bar that was a foothold. Two black rectangles with torches on them moved down and would go up, allowing Dillon to Wall Jump them. Without touching the torch, Dillon kicked over the right bar to land on a platform, from which he could swing the shadows of vines over a chasm, avoiding Embers that floated up and down. Dillon set foot on the base of a hill, using Veil to avoid the giant boulders rolling down.

At the top of the hill, Dillon had view of Midna’s Egg Chamber in the distant background, making it look the size of a real egg. It was here Dillon could ignore the 2-D rules and run in the direction of the egg. From the camera’s perspective, it looked like Dillon was just running in place while the egg was steadily growing bigger. Of course, other things were growing bigger too, such as the disguised M. Bushes, which would attack Dillon when he got aligned with them. There were also fires that he had to avoid simply by moving left or right.

There were silhouettes of signs with X-shaped holes, indicating Dillon not to walk there as it would be a pit. When the signs passed the camera, it was safe for Dillon to walk on that segment of path. Signs began to come up in parallel diagonal fashions, indicating Dillon to follow the route between them. It became confusing for the player with all the signs flying up against the screen, especially when they had to watch the ones Dillon was aligned with as they indicated where to turn. Once he was past the signs, Dillon had to swing floating shadow vines over another chasm, all the while avoiding Embers.

Soon, Dillon arrived at the torchlit altar where the Egg Chamber rested. Dillon raced up and watched the chamber open for Midna. “That sure was a mind-boggling level. Pretty, though.” Dillon said.

“Hopefully, it didn’t boggle you too much.” Midna chortled as she floated into the egg.

“Well… see you later, Midna.” Dillon smiled.

“See you later… Dill.” Midna thought of another time when she said this to someone. “Make sure your dad behaves himself.”

“I will.” With that, the chamber sealed Midna. Dillon waited for the Zoni to take him back. (Play “Water Stage” from Zelda: Tri-force Heroes!)

Act 4: The Ocean Fountain

Melody was wearing a brand new outfit: a white top that showed her belly and a blue sarong with fish designs. She and Manaphy splashed in a beautiful ocean, free of any contaminates including salt, making it the most pleasant water Melody ever soaked in. The sun was bright in the cloudless sky, complimenting the sky-colored water’s beauty. Furthermore, there were fountains everywhere, and every droplet glinted sunlight.

“Mana Mana!” Manaphy joyfully jumped in and out of the purest of waters. They would enjoy swimming through this stage. They maneuvered around the fountains that had nothing of value on them—except for a Water Medal in an opening on the white pearl wall. Melody swam to a mini waterfall that came from a river between two walls. She Torpedo Jumped above the waterfall, avoiding spiky puff-fish as she swam along. She jumped up another fall, and on this river she had to build enough momentum to jump over a spiked fence.

When they were past the walls, the river took them over a towering, suspended wall of water, pouring down in falls on either side. This marvel defied any laws of physics, but Melody couldn’t lose focus and fall over the sides. She was careful in turning the curves and staying in the very middle, but sadly the river reached a dead end. Bubbles of water floated around the chasm, so Melody would need to Torpedo Jump to each one, then slow herself before diving straight through.

After the last bubble, Melody dove into a pool at the bottom of a towering waterfall. She mustered enough strength in her waterbending to swim directly up, swerving left or right to avoid falling Cheeps. At the top of the falls, Melody overlooked a vast region of the Ocean Fountain. There were some fountains, but in the very center was a high platform with a giant egg designed like the one Manaphy once inhabited.

Unfortunately, there was no way onto the platform, so the two dove underwater in search of a solution. The floor of the ocean was tiled like a pool, but still fresh enough for fish to swim freely. Inside the opening/closing mouth of a clam was a Silver Star, and collecting it would make a fountain activate close to the platform. Melody saw four other inactivated fountains and surmised they would form a staircase.

Another Silver Star was floating a few feet away and under the edge of a very tall fountain. Melody rode the fountain to the top and swam off that ledge to grab the coin. The third Silver Star was at the bottom of a hole that kept Melody out with a strong jetstream. Melody did a constant Torpedo Spin to break through the current, grabbing the star before allowing the current to push her back. The fourth star was seen in a sphere of jellyfish, which would spread out before closing on the star every two seconds. Melody had that long to surf through and get the star before getting shocked.

There were some rock piles and Froaks swimming around them. Melody could push the bomb fish into the rocks and destroy them, discovering the fifth and last Silver Star. The stairway of fountains was complete and Manaphy was already bouncing up. Melody mimicked his action and landed on one of the only solid footholds in this world. “There it is.” Melody said as the Egg Chamber opened. “Are you scared, Uncle Manaphy?”

“Nana.” The prince shook his head and jumped in. “…Bye-bye… Melody.”

“Bye-bye… Manaphy.” She waved at him.

“Love you! Happyyyyy…!” The egg sealed. Melody missed him already. (Play “Pink Sea” from Yume Nikki.)

Act 5: Emotion Sorting

Harvey Harper and Mesprit were on an island in a peaceful pink ocean, a similar appearance to the Pink Sea in Madotsuki’s world. There were Pikmin Onions parked around and planted Pikmin around them, but the Onions were labeled with emotions: Red were Feisty, Blue were Sad, Yellow were Smart, Pink were Loving, Purple were Strong-willed, and Brown were Tomboys. There were lifeless idols of various characters lain around. Harvey would need to use the Pikmin to carry them to the proper emotions.

The Feisty Pikmin collected idols of Sheila, Sunni, Ruby, Panini, Jessie, Chimney, Jinta, and Kodama. The Sad Pikmin collected idols of Miyuki, April Goldenweek, Ururu, Sandy, Wendy Marvell, Madotsuki, and Mason (Harvey went by Mason’s old personality in that sense). The Smart Pikmin collected Artie Gilligan, Eric Horvitz, Emily Garley, Hibiki, Nolan York, Sarah-Jane, and Vanellope.

The Loving Pikmin collected Fybi, Wendy, Haruka, Kirie, Carol, MaKayla, Suki, Bon Clay, Arianna, and Aeincha. The Strong Pikmin collected Chris Uno, Maddy, Anthony, Mocha, Morgiana, and Tom Taylor. Lastly, the Tomboy Pikmin found the idols of Shelly Johnson, Kimaya, Wendy Corduroy, Makava, Aisa, and Lorac. With all the idols organized, a stairway appeared to take Harvey to a platform with the Egg Chamber. “That’s all?” Harvey asked as they went up. “I guess emotions really aren’t that much in combat.”

“That isn’t true!” Mesprit shouted. “Emotions are the very foundation to why we fight and how we do things! You wouldn’t care about saving the universe if you didn’t love it!”

“Heh heh… I guess not.” Harvey snickered.

“Promise me you’ll be a better emotionbender by the time we meet again!”

“Oh, Mesprit, I will! …Don’t cry too much when I’m gone, okay?”

“Same to you!” Mesprit winked. The Egg Chamber sealed, leaving Harvey Firstborn-less as well. (Play “Inverted Stone Tower” from Majora’s Mask!)

Act 6: Distorted Atmosphere

Sunni Chariton and Mew were in an enclosing of a stone building. They slowly approached a ledge, gasping at the sky chasm below. Above their heads was a street: they were in an upside-down city. Bits of gravel fell into the sky, yet Sunni’s hair was standing straight as it defied the altered gravity. Sunni followed a path on her left, then used psychic to float to a path on an opposite building. The path turned a corner, and a Beamos stood guard up ahead. She grabbed a small rock in psychic and hurled at the Beamos’ eye to destroy it.

A large gap separated Sunni and the next path, and her psychic wouldn’t float her there in time (it had to be limited for action stages :P). Sunni looked up and saw a streetlight pole dangling from the sidewalk. She grabbed it in psychic and tore it off its stem, laying the pole down as a bridge to cross the gap. The following path ended as Sunni saw another one along the edge of the roof below. She dropped down, but felt the atmosphere shift in a diagonal fashion, resulting in her walking on the corner of the building and path.

Dumpsters opened on the streets due to the gravity and heavy trash bags were rolling down the building slides. The bags broke parts of the path, so if Sunni didn’t hurry, she would slide off and fall. Sunni reached the corner turn of the building and had to sidle against the building’s side along a gutter. The gutter sloped down because of the position, so all Sunni had to do was watch her feet and move slowly. The gutter would turn around the next curve, but now the width side was slanted. Since the diagonal building left little space for her, she had to hang on the slippery gutter and climb across.

The gutter would end at the wall of a dead-end alley, but this wall would let Sunni stand on it, so the universe was now sideways. Sunni headed to the bottom of the alley wall where the ground was. She jumped up some garbage cans that hadn’t been affected by the gravity and made it to the street. She could sidle against the street along the curb of the sidewalk. At first, Sunni didn’t see the point as she could’ve easily walked on the side of the building below her. However, one of the sidewalk squares was loose, and Sunni’s weight caused it to fall and break a window of that building.
Sunni could then drop in and follow a zigzaggly stairwell (or at least the wall between the stairs) up to the very top of the building. She hopped out the roof door and suddenly flipped right-side-up, her hair hanging normally again. A giant white egg was on the roof, with a small opening for Mew. “Mew…” The Firstborn made a bubble around himself, curled up, and floated in.

“Good-bye, Mew! I’ll miss yew!” X3 Sunni joked.

“Mew Mew Mew Mew Mew Mew…” The cat’s giggles faded when the egg sealed him. (Play “Special Course” from Yoshi’s Woolly World)

Act 7: Great Space Coaster

Nebula and Jirachi landed on an asteroid in a vast galaxy of shooting stars. A Warp Star appeared: the two exchanged bright smiles and hopped on. The star soared across the galaxy as Nebula stood, raising arms high and her hair blowing in the wind. “ULP!” A small comet flew into her open mouth. She spat it out and surfed left and right to avoid bullet-fast comets. She couldn’t move the Warp Star any other direction, she had to rely on its chosen path. Nebula jumped and ducked bigger comets as the Warp Star made a great curve leftward. The star flew to a miniature Saturn and flew two extra rings around it before shooting to the sky.

The Warp Star was steadily sinking by their weight—“OW!!” it bumped against the tip of an asteroid, resulting in a forceful flip. Nebula and Jirachi regained balance in time to zip under an asteroid. When they would hit a low one, Nebula pulled up to make the star rise and miss. There was an upcoming high asteroid a few feet before a low one, so Nebula pulled up just when they were under the high to dodge the low.

They flew horizontally again as the Warp Star was going to make a tight drift on the right side of a row of suns. Nebula had to tilt the star right, or else it would touch the suns, then she changed to the left to avoid suns on her right. The Warp Star flew in a straight path as two black stars called Ztars pursued them. Nebula shot them with Starbursts, but had to dodge left, right, jump, or duck Ztars that shot in from either side. “Ah!” The Warp Star was hit by one, splotching a black spot, slowing the Warp Star slightly.

There was a roaring of an engine as a King Bill was chasing them, using Star Dust to fly at the speed of a comet. It was faster than the Warp Star, so Nebula hurriedly shot Starbursts to weaken it. If they were hit by more Ztars, they would go so slow and be dead by now, but hopefully one wasn’t enough to condemn them. The King Bill was inches from touching the Warp Star, but Nebula formed a Starburst with both hands and destroyed it first.

The Warp Star finally came to a halt on a flat asteroid with Jirachi’s Egg Chamber. “This is our stop. I hate for you to be trapped in an egg again, though.”

“Don’t worry, Nebula!” Jirachi beamed. “A few years is nothing to a hundred years! I can’t wait to explore the New World with you!”

“Me either, Jirachi! There’s gonna be a ton of new races in that world! Let’s meet again soon!” Nebula yelled determinedly.

“Yes, Ma’am!” Jirachi flew into the egg and sealed inside. (End song.)

Act 8: Simon Says

Emily Garley and Uxie were in a small black room. The Egg Chamber was on a high platform over a pit. Before that pit was a pedestal with a Simon game. The first three colors beeped: Red, Green,
“…?” Emily pushed Red, Green, and Blue. Yellow, Blue, Blue, Green. Emily pushed those colors in order. Yellow, Red, Green, Green, Yellow, Blue. “Are you kidding me, this is a test of my knowledge?!”

“You’re too absorbed with modern knowledge, this is classic knowledge.” Uxie remarked.

“Waaaaaahh! I want another quiz!” Emily pushed the Green first just to taunt it. Part of the floor behind them collapsed.

“Your life is still on the line. Is that fair?”

“Yes, but fine I’ll do it, anyway.” Emily restarted the game. Simon had 15 rounds, but with her keen memory, she bested the game like a boss. Stairs appeared to lift her to the Egg Chamber. The chamber opened at her presence, so Uxie could fly in.

“I still don’t accept those trolls as our creators.” Uxie stated. “Even if this science voodoo is real… Arceus is my father.”

“That’s so loyal.” Emily smiled.

“See you in approximately three years, Em. Make that brain worth the wait when I return.”

“I will, Uxie!” she saluted. When Uxie was sealed inside the egg, only one Firstborn remained.

Act 9: MELEE!

Cheren and Azelf landed in a battle-scarred field under a cloudy sky. A circle of Bokoblin appeared and closed in, but with a powerful charge to his Master Sword, Cheren destroyed them all with the Hurricane Spin. Colorful Chuchus of every form fell in like raindrops, so Cheren threw M.A.R.B.L.E.s and wildly swung his sword—“Zzzzzt!” A Shock Chu got the better of him, but he rectified his mistake and threw his Banarang at the remaining Chu, stunning them as his sword did the rest. Black Bulborbs had landed beforehand, the father gathering his babies before they homed in to feast on Cheren. Cheren flipped above the beast and sliced off its eyes, then furiously slayed the younglings.

A Cheep Cheep bounced on him and dizzied Cheren, and more Cheeps ended up flopping on the field to be consumed by a Gulpin. The Gulpin grew bigger with each devour, then it would munch toward Cheren. He back-flipped and shot two M.A.R.B.L.E.s in its mouth to destroy it. A Lakitu flew overhead and threw Spinies, but Cheren shot it with an arrow before focusing on the swarm of Goombas trying to headbonk him. Hoping none of them were related to Goombella, Cheren jumped around and squished every last Goomba.

Three Kremling Kasplats appeared in a triangle around Cheren. He threw swings at one as it defended, then did a spin attack to hit the two behind him. Three Zingers flew overhead and dropped grenades, so Cheren ignored the Kasplats for a moment to shoot the bees with arrows. He jumped a Kasplat’s shockwave and used a shield bash to stun one before slicing him up. Cheren whacked the other two with the Mirror Shield and decided to expend a Soul Surge on them.

Ten Anti Guys landed in the field, all empowered by a Sombrero Guy’s tunes. Cheren swiftly dodged the Anti Guys and made his way to the Sombrero’s platform, throwing his Bananarang to stun it, then shoot it with an arrow. Cheren used Demon State (now a weaker form of God Tier) to exterminate the 10 Anti Guys (their levels of 500 were nothing to him now).
His next opponents were Canvas Ladies and Headless Statues from the Guertena Gallery. None of his attacks could hurt them, but there were standing doors and breakable floors. The Canvas Ladies crawled fast, so Cheren ran to hide behind the doors. When the painting women tried to open the doors, they would fall and crush them. As for the Headless Statues, Cheren blew up the cracked grounds and lured them over the resulted holes. He heard the statues shatter at the bottom.

A swarm of Bell Heartless appeared with Large Bodies. Average spin attacks were easy to clear away the smaller Heartless, and the Mirror Shield stunned the Large Bodies when they charged. He then flipped above to behead the fat Heartless. A net trap appeared in the center of the field, and 10 Pipo Monkeys scattered around. Cheren had to use the Bananarang to lure them all in the net, but he was hit by a Chuck’s torpedo from the sky. Cheren noticed three of said Planktonbots and took them down with arrows. With that, he focused on the Pipos again and got all 10 on the net, hitting the switch to catch them.

Sleepytime Planktonbots appeared, along with gunmen from Sandman’s levels. The Sleepytimes’ defense lasers shot back Cheren’s arrows, so he had to tiptoe up to them and perform a Mortal Draw to slice them in two. The noise would make the gunmen look over, so he hid behind a rock. The gunmen came over to investigate, but with them all in a close space, Cheren went Demon State and flame-sliced them one at a time in seconds. He proceeded to stealth-attack the last two Sleepytimes.

An Amazy Dayzee and a Souflee danced onto the field, twirling beside each other while a Gold Beetle shone a spotlight on them. Cheren shot the Beetle first, but the dancing rare enemies split apart and moved swiftly around the field. Cheren shot arrows at the Souflee and missed—the Amazy Dayzee zipped by him—he slashed his sword and missed—he looked back-and-forth between the rare enemies until they both waved ‘bye’, showing their joyous smiles and jumping off the field.

And then the all-powerful Lord English towered high over the world, the same silhouetted form as the Sky Show. Cheren went God Tier and flew at his head like a comet. With a lightning blow from his Master Sword, Cheren STABBED the demon… which turned out to be a Duplighost. His sword was impaled in the ghost’s sheet. The Duplighost vanished, and Azelf’s Egg Chamber rose from the center of the field. Cheren flew down beside his Firstborn and disabled God Tier.

“Sigh… Nice workout. Don’t you agree?”

“I’ve had better.” Azelf flew into the chamber. “Until that day, Cheren. Keep getting stronger!”

“We’re going to win, Azelf.” Cheren pumped a fist. “You’ll see!” Azelf mimicked the gesture, and the egg sealed her. With this, Nine of the Eleven Firstborn were suspended until further notice. The universe already felt like a different place.

Next time… the ultimate climax of the story: what has been foreshadowed since Operation: RECLAIM of 2014: The Apocalypse…
The Opening

Chapter Summary

The Day of the Apocalypse has finally arrived.

Sigh… it’s time, people. Special thanks to everyone that survived. The End… is here.

Chapter 82: The Opening

Great Clock

The King Dutchman made port outside the Great Clock’s hangar. Bill Cipher used his VIP pass to make Sigmund open the entrance. He led Medusa and the Thirteen Darknesses off the vessel. Sigmund bowed and remained silent, quivering as the powerful chosen ones entered the station. Giovanni was also at the front of the crowd, having been appointed as a special officer.

Computers activated in the corridor, showing Peridot’s image. The lime-green Program gasped widely: “MY DIAMOND!!”

“Peridot?” Yellow Diamond viewed the screens with masked surprise. “Is this where you’ve been all this time?”

“I’m sorry I didn’t report in sooner, but I ended up in this strange cyber world and got stuck being some box-headed robot’s chore Gem! OH! And I’ve become the Cyber God! I have total control over this entire structure! All the worlds from our home universe are in here, even our homeworld!”

“Our homeworld is inside this fortress? Then everything they’ve been telling me is true?”

“I’m given to understand that my actions will help you return to Homeworld. I will be sacrificed in the process, but I will gladly do it for you, My Diamond. I promise you will see Emera again!”

“Loyal to the end… It’s almost heartwarming,” Bill said. “That’s why we had better get this started. Keep moving, troops.” He progressed.

“Why does this mere earthworm consider himself our commander?” Thanos questioned.

“I’m no commander, Color Knuckles, but it’s because of me you’re getting the pleasant end of the deal.”

“I suggest doing what he says. Aha ha ha!” Dimentio giggled.

Madara and Aizen were walking beside each other. “So, your occupation is ninja, is it Madara? I remember when those were all over the place in the Living World.”

“Ninjas have overstayed their welcome…” Madara spoke darkly.

“Is that self-loathing I hear? Hm… I think we’re going to get along perfectly.
Pandora poofed above Ganondorf in her sapphire flame form. “Oh, Ganondorf? I went and got you a little snack.”

She placed a small white chest in Ganon’s hands. Inside was a groaning Hannibal Bean. “Oh, mah… that stripper done did me good.”

Ganondorf grinned maliciously and picked Bean up. “Ahh… my favorite.”

“HEEEY-!” Hannibal cried flying into Ganon’s mouth. Munch, crunch, chew, swallow.

“Tastes as good as I remember it…”

“Now I feel a craving for sea-salt ice cream.” Xehanort said.

“Here you go!” Baldy Bald gave a friendly grin and held up two popsicles. “I had some in my refrigerated fanny pack!”

“That’s… oddly convenient.” Xehanort took one and bit.

The Darknesses arrived at the Chamber of Twenty Keys, which would only open by the power of the Chrono Staff. Xehanort chortled, using his Father Time Keyblade to open the door like it was nothing. “I almost forgot… these are for you.” Xehanort raised his ring of twelve keys. They glowed and became balls of light that flew to their masters.

Yellow Diamond’s Keyblade was white and shiny with crystal teeth and a yellow diamond keychain.

Sōsuke Aizen’s was black; its hilt was a white flame design, had a skull keychain, and flame teeth.

Madara’s Keyblade was dark-blue with the Hidden Leaf symbol for teeth, Sharingan design around the hilt, and a red cloud keychain.

Thanos’ Keyblade had six colored gems around the hilt (the Infinity Gems), finger-like teeth, and a gauntlet keychain.

Zeref’s Keyblade was dark-brown with a book keychain and black fairy-wing teeth.

Voldemort’s Keyblade was designed like the Elder Wand – bone-like tree bark – with snake teeth and a Deathly Hallows symbol keychain.

Ganondorf’s Keyblade was designed like his armor, with a Triforce keychain and demon horns for teeth.

Zorc’s Keyblade was gold, had a card for teeth, and a Millennium Ring keychain.

Davy Jones’ Keyblade was dark-green with tentacle teeth and had a Flying Dutchman keychain.

Blackbeard’s Keyblade was black with white crescent teeth (or a Whitebeard), and a keychain of Blackbeard’s three-headed skull.

Dimentio’s Keyblade was purple and yellow-striped, teeth designed like his jester hat, and a star keychain.

And Baldy Bald’s Keyblade was a long piece of lettuce with a price tag keychain and sweet corn teeth.
“I congratulate you, Medusa.” Ragaj said to the Goddess of Darkness. “You have fulfilled your duties admirably… as a member of Team Gnik.”

“Hmph. Don’t put me in with that pitiful little crowd of yours.” Medusa chuckled.

“I don’t see why not… You have as much value to Lord English as the rest of them.”

“…” Medusa felt a tad suspicious at that comment.

The Chamber of Twenty Keys was humongous enough to be a battlefield. The Time Gate towered on the other side, its twenty locks firmly sealed. There were thirteen thrones around the sides of the room, with giant ones for Yellow Diamond and Thanos. Ragaj Gnik waited in the center.

May 31... (Play “Inner Demon” from Batman: Arkham Knight.)

The Netherverse was in a terrible panic. The Nexus was cracking, its unstable energy spreading and striking all the planets.

The moons began trembling all over the universe. The Lunar Field surrounding Lunaria was a ticking time-bomb that would destroy Florae and likely spread to Galaxia. Everything that was prophesized was coming true. The moons were going to explode, and the universe was going to fall. It was time for the heroes to go. Every operative on Moonbase quickly boarded the Gummi Ship Noah, where Palutena and Pit Icarus were.

With deep remorse in their hearts, Cheren Uno and the Kids Next Door stared at the Moonbase. When the moon was gone, the Moonbase would be no more. They moved everything to a backup base on Earth, but it was still heartbreaking to leave their stronghold behind. Cheren looked up when his mother touched his shoulder. “It’s going to be alright, son. We’ll make another one.”

Cheren smiled.

“Easy for YOU to say!” Lehcar shouted. “Why hasn’t MY son come back, yet?! I swear if Nerehc isn’t here by the time it happens, I’ll kill you both!”

“Heheh, easy, Lehcar,” Rachel said. “I’m sure he’ll turn up somehow.”

Other operatives were on the dock of the great ship, gazing at the wonderful blue orb that was their Earth. All of their most exciting adventures, on that planet, in this galaxy. Mason looked and saw Sheila Frantic crying. He took his friend’s hand. “Don’t worry, Sheila. We’ll keep having adventures.”

Sheila sniffled and wiped a tear. “I know, mate… I just ’ad something in me eye!” She grinned.

“Ha ha! I know, Sheila! …Um…” He blushed. “Just so we’ll have no regrets?”

“Sure, mate.” Sheila and Mason shared a kiss.

Chimney was cradling Aeincha in her arms as Sector W7 gazed at the Earth. “You sure you don’t wanna be down there, Aeinchan?”

“Are you kidding, Chimney? I wouldn’t miss this for the world!”

“Yah, me too… Besides, you don’t need to be any smaller.”

In November, I became a Kids Next Door operative. Not even a year later... I would stand by my team as we sail to a brand new universe, while our old one dies. It was an honor to be a part of “Speak up, Nagisa.” Goombella remarked.

“Gah!” He blushed. “Sorry! I’m just… nervous…”

“We all are.” Morgiana said. “Don’t lose your guard.”

“I won’t. …Would you hold my hand, Morg?”

“…Of course.” She took Nagisa’s hand.

“Carla.” Wendy spoke, holding the kitten in her arms. “I mean… Mom. If we make it… do you think we could look for your old house?”

“I suppose we could, assuming no one has moved in.”

“Well, I would like us to have one. I wanna have the real mother-daughter experience!” She rocked Carla and smiled bright as she imagined it. “Have to do chores, live under curfews, brush my teeth and eat my vegetables, all the things I missed out on!”

“I’ve never known a child so eager to have such a lifestyle.” Carla giggled.

“Those kids don’t know what it’s like to NOT have one!”

Maddy and Shade were staring at the moon, pink cracks already forming. “The Netherverse will suffer a fearsome blow when the moons rupture.” the echidna spoke. “There’s a chance… I won’t see my old clan again.”

“I thought you would be kinda mad at them for banishing you.” Maddy replied.

“It’s my home… I can’t help but feel sympathetic.”

“Well, when we make the New World, we’ll get you a new home.”

“Hm…” Shade smiled. “I think I already have one.”

A gigantic stingray with a landscape on its back soared beside them: the Encyclopod. “Sheila… did you bring what I asked?”

“Yeh yeh. Kept him nice and fresh for ya.” Sheila presented the shrunken Great White Asparagus, captured last month during the Candied Adventure. The Encyclopod drew the Asparagus into its body so it would one day be repopulated.

“Children of the universe… it is time.” The Encyclopod flew in front of the Noah. Augustus Fizzuras was at the helm, ready to follow it.

“I still have a fraction of Jirachi’s power.” Nebula said as she positioned her hands in a frame with the Earth inside. “The Earth is coming with us. Don’t worry.” Nebula slowly closed the space in her frame. Her powerful Space Chi was focused around the great planet. The Earth was growing smaller and smaller. Nebula softly drew it in with gravity. Cheren, Anthony, Wendy, MaKayla, Chimney, and Aeincha stared with awe: the Earth was the size of Nebula’s palm.

Wendy held the Fairy’s Tail above the tiny planet and whispered, “Protego.” An invisible bubble protected the Earth, blocking their godlike soundwaves and any other force that could harm it.
“Hi, Mary. Hi, guys.” April smiled and waved at the Earth. “I can see you guys down there!”

From the surface of the planet, April’s tremendous face was visible in the night sky. “HI, APRIIIIIIILL!” Mary waved from Foster’s roof, alongside Ib and Garry.

“Heh heh. Talk about feeling small when you look at the sky.” Garry chuckled.

“Hey, Mom!” Nagisa said to the Earth. “Your little boy’s gonna protect you from here on out.”

Hiromi Shiota was seeing her son’s face in the sky. She giggled: how often does a mother watch her child reach such heights?

“Is that you, Shelly?” Jessie Sidney smirked at the Earth. “I didn’t recognize you from this height.”

Shelly Johnson growled at Jessie’s image. It was bad enough he went from first-grader to president… but President to God was too high. “Better hope I don’t come up there, Shorts!”

Nebula carried the Earth to the Galactic Hull inside the Noah. Hundreds of planets had been shrunken by Nebula beforehand, floating in an illusion of space, orbiting a shrunken sun. All had received the same protection from Wendy, and it would last indefinitely with the Fairy’s Tail’s magic. Nebula set the Earth in a stable orbit. She glanced at the planets that her Kid Council members inhabited. “Don’t worry… I’ll protect all of you until it’s safe to grow you back. We’ll make sure everyone gets to see the New World.”

“As you say, Supreme Leader.” Liaziana nodded. In Glomour’s sky, they could see Nebula’s face.

“Seven Lights: thank you all for making it this far.” Palutena spoke. “Let’s go… to the New World!” (End song.)

Great Clock

Jagar King and Palutena led the Kids Next Door to the Chamber of Twenty Keys. Sigmund was standing guard at the entrance, looking beyond terrified as he fiddled his hands. “W-W-Welcome back… Mr. King. Y-You have guests, Sir…”

Jagar unlocked the door with the Chrono Staff. Medusa, Ragaj, and the Thirteen Darknesses were already here. Jagar King entered first, walking to the center to stand before his Negative. “Invited yourself in, didn’t you?”

“Have you lived for 30 years without a face? Asked for a fate you couldn’t defy? Never once able to think your own thought… as you walked in the shoes of someone higher. And now, after ages of torment, I, Lesser Lord Gnik, will shed my mortal form, so that Lord English can be whole.”

“That’s not going to happen. Calliope will be the one to return. She’ll help my friends build the New World!”

“Then let us wait no longer. First, the Seven Lights: take your places.”

The Seven Lights each took one of seven thrones around the center. They had their Keyblades ready, as did the Darknesses. Medusa looked down at her sister, who stared back. “You know, I’m quite proud of the Darknesses, Palutena. They endured years of suffering… becoming stronger under Evil’s veil. What do your Lights have to their name?”

“Medusa, don’t you see this isn’t about you or me? The two of us were just pawns in a game. And no matter which side wins, it won’t benefit either of us.”
“You’re wrong, Sister. When Lord English returns… I will relish in his anger and desire. The universe will bathe in darkness.”

“In due time, My Lady!” Bill announced. “There’s one last piece of the puzzle, however: MaKayla?”

The girl cocked a brow. “What?”

“Your father told you you’re the Gatekeeper. Or should I say, the Gatekeeper of the Light Side. The Gatekeeper of the Dark Side is Yours Truly. Follow me downstairs.” Bill went down a small stairwell over the edge of the floor. Kayla followed him down to a platform with a gold piano and violin. “You play violin as a hobby, right?” Bill handed her the instrument. “Follow along with the notes I play.” He took his position at the piano.

The Twenty Keys raised their Keyblades skyward. Beacons shone at the tips, becoming beams that connected with the twenty keyholes. Giant clicking sounds were heard: the Gate was unlocking.

Ragaj Gnik opened the Chi Container and drew the Octogan, sticking it on a green Chrono Staff. “In the beginning, there were two singularities: Calliope and Caliborn. Their strife destroyed the worlds they created… and has continued to this day.”

Jagar King opened his own Chi Container and drew another Octogan. The KND were curious as to where he got it. “I am impressed, Jagar. Thanks to the Time Chi you inherited from our masters, you severed the Octogan’s pupil. But trying to force your son to adapt with it was a futile effort.”

“Wait… What?” George cocked a brow.

“Don’t you remember, George?” Chris asked.

“I say my plan worked perfectly.” Jagar stated. “It doesn’t even hurt when I touch it, anymore.” He attached the Octogan to his Chrono Staff. “I admit that I lived in fear of your existence… but I know now that it’s a fear I borrowed from Clockwork. I’m going to defeat you… for the sake of him and my children. Unlike you, I have something worth fighting for. I have a passion in my heart.”

MaKayla and Bill began playing the piano and violin. (Play “Darkness of the Unknown (Part 3)” from Kingdom Hearts II.)

“There may your passion die… with the universe.”

Final boss: Ragaj Gnik

The two Ghosts of Time crossed their staffs and jumped apart. They kept a safe distance from the Keys and the kids. With that, they both blasted a Chrono Beam, creating a powerful tremor by the connected Octogan. In the blinding light, Jagar froze time and ran to bash his Negative across the orb head, then Ragaj quickly countered by clashing his staff against King’s. Ragaj sped his own time and zipped around the room to confuse Jagar. The Positive easily foresaw himself being hit from the right, back, right, then legs, so he positioned his staff to protect those places.

“AH!” After the swing to the legs, Ragaj’s Octogan shot a laser to knock him away. When Jagar stood to recover, Gnik cast an Octogan barrier over his enemy, in which Jagar would feel horrible pain endured by people in the past, like Revan Bane having his legs severed. Jagar broke the bubble with his own Octogan and healed the invisible wounds, giving Ragaj time to freeze time and run to bash him. Thankfully, Jagar knew this would happen, so he pretended to be frozen and waited to kick Ragaj in the leg, then whack him with the head of the staff.

Ragaj jumped to his feet and raised the Octogon skyward, drawing in the energy of the Great Clock. He sent columns of chrono at Jagar, who nimbly dodged before catching one on his staff and whipping it at Ragaj. The Lesser Lord leapt the whip and flew forward with a kick to King’s chest. Jagar bounced back to recovery and Replayed the actions, so Gnik hit a Time Clone while Jagar landed a blow on the back of his head. Sadly, Gnik predicted such a maneuver, so he left a clone to take the hit and blasted a laser directly into Jagar’s back.

“We shall be together.” Gnik echoed as he kept the beam connected to Jagar using a Time Glitch. However, Jagar thought ahead, so his Time Clone ran to attack the spot Ragaj would appear, thereby breaking Ragaj’s hold with a successful prediction. Jagar Rewinded the wound to repair and slowed time to run around and shoot rapid chrono bullets at him. Suddenly, Jagar was surrounded by a team of Ragaj’s, trapped in the connected beams they would simultaneously shoot. The individual Ragaj’s warped seconds back in time to carry out the attack, leaving the sole Ragaj.

Jagar was on his knees and panting, but he defended quick when Ragaj came for more melee attacks. “Even when you were a child, you knew deep in your heart I existed. Your entire family has lived in fear of my master. But fear is a prophecy engraved in your mind, destroying your heart until the day it must be realized. The only way to end this fear... is to accept that you cannot avoid it.”

“That’s honestly cooler than any of Scarecrow’s lines.” Nolan commented. (His team wasn’t missing this, either!)

Jagar and Ragaj performed a mirrored swing of their staffs and clashed the Octogon with the pupils. A surge of energy was crackling in the air, the glass dome cracking above the chamber. The echoing creaks of the Gate of Time still rung as the door opened inch by inch. Then Jagar replayed the Time Recordance and whacked his Negative from behind while he was still shoving against the clone. Ragaj froze time and ran far away, unleashing a giant Chrono Beam that Jagar ran from. Jagar gasped when the kids were about to taste the blow, so he stuck the Octogon in the beam to direct it upward.

“Their lives will not matter in the end.” Ragaj sent an illusion of pain to Jagar’s left kneecap, bringing the man down a peg. More Paradox Clones surrounded him, but Jagar froze time with a greater surge of power, crawling away from the attack so he could Rewind the damage. Jagar then shot quick chrono bullets at four Ragaj clones, sharing the damage between each other as Ragaj fell on his front. With passion in his heart, Jagar leapt on his Negative’s back and channeled a powerful beam to burn his head off.

Ragaj froze time, grabbed Jagar, and positioned him directly in front of the Nextgen Kids. Time unfroze—the kids gasped in horror and awaited death—Jagar easily sensed this trick and whipped around to give Ragaj the full blast like he intended. “No person can decide his own destiny.” Jagar watched in worry as a thousand Time Recordance Clones appeared around and over the room.

“YOU WILL REALIZE THAT... NOW.”

Jagar stood guard in front of the kids, so when the clones began shooting their simultaneous bullets, Jagar slowed time and rapidly deflected each and every one. It seemed like millions of bullets were raining down, and the clones felt so present that he couldn’t determine which was the real Ragaj. The kids were impressed by Jagar’s speed, and angry that Ragaj was resorting to these tricks instead of fighting directly. It meant that Ragaj was afraid of losing, so if there was even the slightest chance he could lose, then it was their greatest beacon of hope.

Maddy Murphy closed her eyes and saw with only her Observation Haki. The clones all had a substantial weight about them... but just one felt a tad more present and focused than the others. “MrKingit’s that one.” she spoke quickly so he could hear her through slow-motion. “It’s that one. It’s that one.” She gave a little point.

“It’s... that... one...” Jagar heard her and looked that direction. Jagar slowed time even greater and blasted bullets to disable all the ones currently coming. He ran to bash Ragaj Gnik to the ground and impale his spherical head with the handle of the Chrono Staff. Bill and MaKayla stopped their song. (End song.)

Time returned to normal flow. The clones disappeared. Blood leaked from the moon-shaped head. The kids were both disgusted... and extremely happy. “This... This is not what I predicted.” Ragaj choked. “Lord English... you were wrong again? Why... Why did you lie to me... Master.” That was Lord Gnik’s last breath.

A smile appeared on Jagar’s face. A smile full of joy and relief. The kids and adults lost all the fear in their hearts. “It’s over.” Jagar left the staff impaled and laughed. “It’s over! I did it! I really saved the universe!”

“More like Maddy saved the universe.” Chris punched the girl’s shoulder. “Those were some damn keen eyes.”

“Maddy... thank you.” Shade felt every burden on her heart fly away.

“I have experience dealing with dumb tricks.” Maddy said proudly. “That was nothing compared to Zach’s nonsense. Huh, Bro?”

Zach was still on his throne with the Seven Lights, releasing the last fragments of power from the Keyblades. “…Bullcrud, Maddy.” Zach stated angrily.

“Um... Zach?”

“...How can you FALL FOR SOMETHING LIKE THAT?!?” Zach leapt off his throne and attacked Sōsuke Aizen with a Chapstick-in-the-box.

Ragaj Gnik’s dead body vanished. “WHAT?!?” Jagar gasped. “UOECK!” He was stabbed in the heart with the Octogan of Ragaj’s staff. It created a wound too deep and powerful to repair. Jagar fell, as did his staff. The Octogan rolled off the head.

“DAD!” George cried.

MaKayla rushed back up. “FATHER!”

“B-But... I thought...” Maddy stuttered.

“Oops!” Aizen made a fake blush. “I accidentally drew my Kyōka Suigetsu during the battle. It seems all of you saw the illusion of Ragaj losing and peace restoring the universe.”

“An illusion?!” Maddy shouted. “I would’ve seen through that!”

“Yeah, I didn’t feel anything either, what gives?!” Sunni followed.

“My Suigetsu does not create illusions: it deceives the very senses. The sight of his victory, the smell of his blood, hearing his dying words… Your senses have lied to you. Even your special senses.”

“Dad!” MaKayla ran by her father’s dying body, crying tears. “Please! It can’t be…”

“Cough! M… MaKayla… take the Chrono Staff.”

“What?”

“The staff… needs a new master. Take it, MaKayla. And whatever you do… don’t fight him. Just… run… I’m sorry… for disappointing you all…” Those were Jagar’s last words.

MaKayla fell to her knees and let the sadness flow. Her sobs were the only audible sound for so little seconds.

“Everything… is… planned…” Ragaj spoke his last words, too. (Play “Begin Intermission 2” from Homestuck.)

BOOOOOONG. . . BOOOONG. . .

The bells rang louder than anything they’d ever heard. It signaled the arrival… of unbelievable power.

It was happening. The gates were opening. The gates that had been sealed for a trillion years. Very, very slowly, it was opening, a creak that echoed for millions of light-years. A great light shone from inside, growing wider as it opened, the most fearsome wind they ever knew generated from its power. Finally, the gates stopped. A vortex brimming with energy too powerful for mortal understanding awaited their entry.

Then, the entire fortress started rumbling. Rumbling so furiously, no one had sense of direction. To think any kind of force could shake a station so big. The light shone brighter. They felt it. From the distance of that vortex, a green mist was flying to the gate. That mist—that Shimmer—stopped above Ragaj’s body. The Shimmer shot directly into his faceless moon-round head. Ragaj fell to his knees. Everyone’s hearts were racing; what could possibly be happening.

“AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAHHHHHHHHH! MOOOOOUUUUUUURRRRRRAAAAAAAAAAAAAA. . .” The immeasurable power fueled Gnik. He screamed with so much ferocity and pain that his flesh ripped like paper. Ghastly green skin was exposed underneath, with venomous teeth and red eyes. Muscles strong enough to lift continents, feet that could shake whole worlds, unimaginable power that can break whole universes.

By the time he stopped growing, he was 20 feet tall. Snarling a hoarse breath, its sound chilling everybody’s spines. He saw the two Octogan on the floor. Stomping forward with great power in his steps, he sought to retrieve his eyes. He picked both of them up, and squished them into his already-occupied eye-sockets. The Octogan projected white, torn shorts and a green jacket, whose edges were flashing neon colors. He stood to full, imperial height, and roared with a sound to be heard across universes. “I’M SO HUNGRYYYYY!”

Lord of Time and shaper of universes

L8RD ENGLISH

“Didn’t you hear me?! I said… I’m… HUNGRYYYYY!” Lord English took his first breath in a trillion years. His lungs were so mighty, the chronokinetic energy of the Great Clock flowed inside without a second thought. BONG. . . His Roar of Time sounded like the toll of a bell. It burst through the glass dome, straight to the stars above. . . . Two galaxies were destroyed.

MaKayla hugged herself, shivering on the floor. She looked unbearably cold. “Th-Th-This is. . . the most powerful being in the multiverse. . . It’s over. . . we’re all going to die! . .”

Everybody was afraid. They all felt it. The power… and evil inside this being. It was too great for words. He was too great… for them.

“Here you go, Lord English!” Bill spawned a bag of Doritos. “I packed a snack for that long trip!”

English snatched the bag and poured the chips down his godly throat. His crunches echoed for several galaxies. “NNNNN?” English saw a little gold ball in the bag.

“Oh, look! It’s a special prize!” Bill grinned devilishly. “Your weapon.”

“Weapon? What can a little gold ball do?” Cheren asked.

Lord English held the ball above his head. He channeled his power and willed the ball to become a golden sword. Medusa approached him. “Hello, Lord English! I’m Medusa, Goddess of Darkness.” She bowed humbly. “I must say, it’s an honor to meet you. I look forward to working-”

FLASH!!! Medusa was the first one to taste the power of English’s blade. Without feeling a thing or knowing what happened, the goddess dissolved into dark matter.

Ganondorf slurped Medusa’s remains down his throat like a straw. “Heh heh heh. I needed something to wash that bean down.”

The Great Lord’s flashing eyes fell to Fanny Drilovsky. He didn’t feel she deserved the green firebending she possessed. “Hnnn… You die.”

Half of Fanny’s body exploded, the other half falling dead. “MOOOOOM!!” Francis and Panini cried.

Anger overcoming him, Cheren whipped out his sword, went God Tier, and lunged at the English. “YAAAAAAAHHH!”

“CHEREN!!” Rachel Uno dashed in, sending her son flying with a Haki kick. Her eyes swerved to English and saw their last inch of life.

“No without me!!” Lehcar jumped in the way, her own sword drawn. Both women were obliterated by the power they could never hope to match. Cheren wanted to go blind. They all did.

The glass dome over the chamber shattered when the Noah pierced through. Lord English focused his sights on the titanic vessel, but Angie, Mika, and Eva struck him with massive Logia power. “ALL OF YOU NEED TO GET ON THE BOAT AND GO!!” Angie screamed with furious eyes.

“But…” A tear dropped from Anthony.

“Mom…” Sunni spoke.

Mikaela unleashed a pink beam with all her power at English’s head. The god humored her by not moving during her attack. “YAAAAH!” Then Patton dashed up, leapt, and Mika stopped as his fist flew directly through English’s teeth. His entire body was Haki-imbued, so he was expected to hurt the Logia. English crunched and snapped off Patton’s arm. Then as fast as lightning, the gold of English’s sword went through Mika.
“MOM!!” Sunni couldn’t believe anything. If Sunni’s lightsaber went through Mika’s chest, her Logia defense would protect her. The great gold sword had blood on its other end.

English scraped the woman off and let her drop. As she lay groaning, last moments of breath, Sunni rushed up to her. “MOM! Please tell me it’s a trick, TELL ME IT’S A MIND-TRICK!!”

Mikaela looked up. Her eyes were closing, but her grin was still shiny. “I guess I imagined… another impossible thing before breakfast. I imagined myself… slaying a Time God. …Don’t stop believing the impossible, Sunni…” She died.

Now at a point when Sunni no longer needed her mom’s guidance… her mom was still insane. She would honor that imagination… by running for the ship.

All children were storming for the vessel, until Dimentio splorped in the way. “My, where are you going? Don’t you want to relish in this GLORIOUS-”

Nolan York flew from the side and tackled the Zathurian using his Haki. “I’m going to relish in seeing your blood pour.” He extracted his boomerang, also Haki-imbued.

“Ah ha ha. Is the Sandman going to kill me? Is a life… really not important to you?”

“You lived long enough.” Dimentio’s throat was slit, his alien blood pouring. His psychotic smile would stay on him always. Yuki and Crystal helped Nolan onto his chair as they hurried inside the ship.

“MaKayla, get up!” Wendy shouted at the sitting girl, pulling her to her feet. “We have to get-…” She felt his presence behind her. Wendy turned. Lord English’s flashing eyes glared at her. She felt frozen… there was nothing she could do to protect herself from this god.

“CHILD, GO!” Carla screamed, flying between her and English. “I’ll try and distract him!” She glared sharply at the beast.

“MOM, NO!” Tears spilled from Wendy’s eyes.

A white energy tentacle grabbed Lord English and hurled him miles away from the Great Clock. “LORD ENGLISH!!” God Arceus was more furious than when the Negatar controlled him. “I WILL NOT ALLOW YOU TO RUIN MY UNIVERSE! Prepare to face ABSOLUTE JUSTICE!” The Supreme God charged a tremendous Hyper Beam. Mavis Vermillion, Jorgen von Strangle, and the entire Star Fairy population became lights and melded with his body. The core of the Hyper Beam was bright as a sun, and with its full power, it swallowed Lord English’s puny body.

“GRAAAAAAAAAHHHHH!!” The Lord had never known greater pain.

“YEEEEEEEEEAAAHUUH!” The Nextgen Kids cheered.

After three minutes, the Hyper Beam disappeared. The pain Lord English had never known… was nothing more than the amputation of his right leg. “He only lost a leg?!” MaKayla shouted.

“No, he lost a tooth, too!” Sheila noticed.

“HA HA HA HA!” Bill laughed. “Lord English can recover from that in a heartbeat! Whatever Lord English decides, it happens! His Logia timebending enables him to rewrite Past, Present, and Future with just a single thought! Show them again, Master.”

With a single thought, Dimentio Winkiebottom came back to life. “Aha ha ha! I have nothing to fear with my new best buddy!”

“See, I thought something like that was gonna happen.” Nolan commented.

“Future children, there is nothing we can do here.” the Encyclopod echoed, absorbing the fallen humans’ bodies into his system. “Follow me through the First Byway. The New World awaits.”

The Noah readied to sail in the vortex after the manta. Cheren bit his teeth and looked toward the clashing gods. Their battle alone would steadily tear apart the universe’s structure. “LORD ENGLISH!!”

English narrowed his Octogan and glared in his direction. The gold flames of Cheren’s God Tier burned like a star. “WE WILL DESTROY YOU ONE DAY! We will take back our universe from you! So, you better get your warm-up from Arceus because you’ve never faced kids like us. We… are… KIDS… NEXT… DOOR!”

“And with that, we make our getaway!” Augustus winked. The Noah sailed into the First Byway. The journey to the New World begins now.

Another Lord English appeared in the Chamber of Twenty Keys. His Paradox Clone was keeping Arceus busy. “Oh, my. You can create clones on a whim, too?” Aizen cocked a brow.

“Congratulations, Lord English.” Thanos smirked. “You’ve earned Thanos’ respect. I will happily… work with you.”

“He hasn’t earned mine.” Yellow Diamond stood from her throne firmly. “They said I could return to Emera! Was that a lie?!”

“SILENCE, DIAMOND BITCH!” English thundered.

“What did you say…”? Diamond hissed as she drew her sword.

“No no no, he didn’t mean it, really!” Bill nervously laughed, floating between them. “Lord English, don’t forget, these people are your new friends. You might have supreme power, but having friends is always a good thing! And we can’t rule out the itsy-bitsy little speck of a possibility the kids will find any minor weaknesses, heheh. Don’t worry, Topaz, you’ll get to see your homeworld soon. In fact, we should send Dimentio on the task now. Send him back in time to collect the Multiverse Portal.”

“What crappy Multiverse Portal?!” English scratched his skull. “Oh, that Multiverse Portal. GET TO IT, DIMENTIO!” He zapped the Zathurian and warped him back in time.

Dimentio reappeared seconds after. “I have accomplished my task, Lord English. The multiverse… is now in my stomach.” A spiraling neon portal was shining from his spatial belly. “But what are we to do about our intrepid heroes? Shall we sail after them?”

“The energy radiating from the First Byway is too powerful for us to survive.” Bill answered. “Even Lord English and Dimentio working together won’t make it without bruises. The only reason that Gummi Junkheap isn’t falling apart is because of the Giants’ Candies. It’s easier for us to let the heroes have their three years of fun and wait until the First Dimension is finished downloading from Cyberspace. Meanwhile, we’ll get started taking over the Multiverse. Everyone return to the Dutchman! We have a tight schedule to keep and infinite time in which to keep it!”
Thanks to the powers of the Lost Candies, the Noah sailed a perfect course through the Dimensional Byway, unable to suffer any damages from the powerful chi. “It will take approximately three human years until the First Dimension is finished restoring.” Karkat’s Zoni explained. “Until then, you humans are trapped in that BORING-ASS space-tunnel. But at least you have your PUNY INSECT PLANETS to go back to. (Man, I just can’t do low caps.)”

“When we get to your world, you trolls are going to help us, right?” Cheren asked. “You’re going to help us defeat him and save our universe.”

“…YES. YES WE WILL.”

“Mewtwo!” :33 Nepeta grinned.

“Well, I didn’t spend all this time in a computer room for nothing.” ;;;;; Vriska winked.

“Thank you, guys.” Cheren smiled. “You trolls were always our teammates, too. So, keep supporting us until the end.” The Supreme Leader turned to his team. “Kids Next Door, we have three years until the REAL battles begin! Let’s all work hard and become stronger than we ever imagined! We will meet the Firstborn again, we will fight the Thirteen Darkesses, and show Lord English what happens when you mess with our universe! KIDS NEXT DOOR RULEZ!”

“KIDS NEXT DOOR RULEZ, SIR!!” The people on deck and the denizens of the tiny planets saluted.

“Kids Next Door: we resume operations in three years!” (Play “Ain’t No Mountain High Enough” by Marvin Gaye & Tammi Terrell!!)

I would like to thank Numbuh 227, IDA Official, Epik, and Sarstar98 for their comments. The Gameverse has been my pride and joy, and I’m so proud of how far it’s come since Operation: GALACSIA. True, this series was originally a continuation of KND, including some crossovers, but I truly believe it’s evolved from being any mere fanfiction series. Not many people understand what a marvel the Gameverse is or the love I feel in constructing it piece by piece. This series is my treasure, and it’s an honor to have people—

“PUT A SOCK IN IT, YOU HAPLESS COMPUTER DORK!”

In the midst of typing the credits, I hear a flash behind me. I slowly turn… Lord English was towering over me in the flesh.

I was beaten to a bloody pulp and left to die under my table. Lord English took my seat and resumed typing.

I’LL GIVE THESE FAGGOTS A REAL STORY TO ENJOY. Lord English highlighted every word and paragraph in the Gameverse and deleted it. A STORY ABOUT A LITTLE FAGGOT UNIVERSE WITH LITTLE FAGGOT PEOPLE. Every planet in every galaxy was obliterated in English’s wave. AND EVERY UNIVERSE CONNECTED TO THIS PIECE OF DUNG DESERVES NO BETTER FATE. In one sweep, he shattered the KND: Universe, Fanverse, and all the parallel dimensions long abandoned by their gods. THIS IS A STORY OF A UNIVERSE THAT HAD NO CHANCE AND DESERVED NO CHANCE. I WILL WRITE THIS WORLD THE WAY I ALWAYS ENVISIONED. FROM THIS POINT FORWARD, EVERYTHING BELONGS TO ME! (Play “Divide” from RWBY)

“?” Space Dandy opened his eyes. “Qwark?”

Captain Qwark opened his eyes. “Dandy?”

They were drifting in an infinite, distorted space. “Where… are we?” asked Qwark.

“I think the universe just… forgot us or something.” Dandy assumed.

“But why?”

“Well… if I could guess, my power saved us.” Dandy stared at his hand. “Ever since I ate the Escape-Escape Fruit, me and everyone around me escaped death without a scratch. …Who’d-a thought it was this good?”

“No kidding… What are we supposed to do now?”

“…Start a new civilization?”

“Oh, fine. But I’m not getting the sex-change, buddy.”
