Phosphora frowned, a tad surprised. The opportunity to return to her homeland… could she pass it down?

A trembling caught their ears, coming from the direction of Taylor’s camp, where magma smoke was rising. His clothes completely drenched with sweat, Anthony succeeded in pulling himself out of the pit. It was amazing he still had breath. “Nicely done, shrimp.” The teenager remarked. “Ya beat Level 1. Now the Bonus Round.” He stomped his foot, waved arms, and raised five columns of lava. As they aimed at Anthony, whose eyes felt like drying, the child just wished for it to end. They all lunged, but Anthony stomped himself underground and covered the hole, protecting himself. Tom smirked, but to his surprise, that piece of ground jabbed up and flung the lava back at him, but he threw his arm, hardened the lava, and smashed it with his fist. Anthony returned aboveground, still groggy, but glared fearlessly at Tom. The teenager didn’t think he’d be having Florae; Mom’s ship

“Hello? Ah, yes, thank you. Yes, we have received it. Ah, thank you. My pleasure, Mr., um, pronounce that slowly. Your donation was accounted Mrs., um, Gargamesh. Haha, yes, I look forward myself.” Ted Wassanasong was provided a spare office inside Mom’s flagship, and was already receiving waves of phonecalls after his announcement.

“Business is blooming, I see.” Mom remarked, walking in.

“This idea was more fantastic than I ever could have hoped.” Ted confirmed brightly, still speaking with a moderate tone. “Yes, please hold. It goes to show, Carol, success can be taken anywhere. We have it, don’t worry. Before you know it, the Corporate Presidents can extend their empires across the universe. Um, I’ll get back to you on that.” He was alternating between talking to Mom and his phones.

“Why did you choose this location to build, exactly?”

“The atmosphere just feels ‘right’, to me. And I am right. Pretty soon, everyone in this galaxy will know the glory of the Corporate Presidents. It’s a shame, because there used to be more of us. Norman Osborn and Charles Burns met untimely demises; you have to admit, Lord Business had potential as well, and; what was that other fellow? The one who trained Pokémon?”

“Hey, you can’t go in there!” Guards were yelling outside.

“Uh-, no!” Two men grabbed Arianna’s arms just as she ran into the office. She had several potted plants strapped to her belt. “I need to speak with President Wassawong!”

“Sorry, Presidents, this little girl came with her mom and slipped by us. How should we dispose of her?” a guard asked.

“Um, that’s why I’m here. Mr. Washerna- um, Sir, I know you are a hard-working businessman and I understand how important this project is to you, but there are far more open locations for such a course besides the Violet Dwarf System. With that in mind, I humbly ask you not to blow it up and find a different location. You can easily save money by not buying ammunitions.”

“You seem like a very smart and mature young girl, and your concern is highlighted, but do not worry. It was specifically chosen because it is very far from any settlement, so the explosion will not harm any of the locals.”

“Th-The locals aren’t who I’m concerned for, in particular, it’s the wildlife.” She spoke more insistently. “Those asteroids have all kinds of unique, and endangered species. Destroying them would be a terrible thing, please I ask you to reconsider.”

“There are billions such asteroids that exist in the stars. No one will miss a few. But I promise, you will not feel sorry when you are having the time of your life in Golfing in the Stars.”
Just go away, you stupid girl. A sinister voice said.

Arianna gasped. “S…Stupid?”

Ted raised a brow. “I beg pardon?”

What? Did she hear me?

“.!” Arianna demanded firmly, “Who else is there?! What are you hiding?!”

“There is no one here but the two of us. If you have no other business here, I ask you to leave my office.” Ted pointed to the door.

“Not until I have your honest word you won’t blow up the system!”

“I’m afraid I cannot, but you shall not be sorry after you have experienced the first of many holes in Golfing in the Stars.” he said with his honest smile. “You, your friends, and your family will never know greater fun.”

“Siiiigh.” Arianna bowed her head. “Mr. Wassanong, I see you are very devoted to your goal, and I do not like to escalate conflict. But for the sake of all those animals, please forgive my actions.” Without warning, she threw her arms up, vines emerged from two of her pots and grabbed Ted by the wrists, raising him upward. The man struggled, flailing his legs and kicking a stapler at Ari’s face, making her lose her grip as Ted tried to run outside, but she whooshed her arm, extending a bramble’s sprout to lash Ted just under the shirt-collar.

Something small and black flew out of the shirt to a corner. Ted fell over and began rasping with pain. “M-Mr. Washanong?” Arianna spoke fearfully.

“President Ted!” A team of guards burst in and stood over the businessman. They looked at the cut across his back, and to Arianna’s bramble. On closer inspection, the skin around the cut was sickly purple. “Someone call a doctor, arrest this girl—she poisoned him!”

“N-No! I didn’t!” Arianna retracted the bramble and raised her hands, but her protests were ignored as guards took her arms and led her away. “I-I didn’t mean for this—there must be some misunderstanding—I’m sorry!”

Ted was later carried away to a medical wing. The black thing that had flown out of his shirt skittered into the dark.

Chapter 23: Strange

Planet Bebop

A beautiful sunny morning appeared over the planet. The hills and farmland were awake and lively. The animals were ready for another day of pasteurizing. Farmer Zach Murphy, clothed in blue overalls, brown boots, and a yellow sunhat, danced outside.

Well, mah sister has a demon for a boy-friend

Big dern Apocalypse is getting close at hand

On the way, I met a pardner. And he said “Oh!”

A yippy-yai yo, yippy-yo

“Howdy, Bill! Manure smells lovely this mornin’.”

“Darn tootin’! Ain’chu think, Dilberta?”

“Dang diddily, Bill!” exclaimed the mole with the prospector hat. “Just listen to them cows moo! Them likin’ that grape juice!”

The three began dancing as Zach sang.

Another day of farmin’ and another day of friends

Another day of rustling little piggies in their pens

Let’s bring others: to join the fun!

“Wah, ther’ already here!” Bill pointed.

“Let’s meet ‘em, everyone!” Zach happily named all the characters that appeared. “There’s Pumbaa, Li’l Gideon, Eduardo, Clam, Sandy Cheeks, Chester McBadbat, Corey Sanderson, and of course, Optimus Prime!”

“Let’s DANCE like little girls!” Gideon exclaimed gleefully (look him up ;P).

All of them locked hands and danced joyfully in a circle (Optimus looked especially silly doing it ;P). “A yippy-hey yo, yippy-yo yippy-yo, gama tai hai yippy-yippy-yo!”

Reality

“Maddy, is this really your brother?” Ratchet asked.

“I… think.”

He certainly had Zach’s clothes, hair, and eyes, but… at the same time. He had no arms, he was frowning and staring blankly, and his body was hunched forward a little. Maddy lightly tapped his nose, and Zach fell over like a statue. (To make it simple, he’s a Homestuck. :P) “Maddy, I think your brother’s a computer nerd.” Drake joked.

“Does this occur regularly?” Clank asked.

“It-… I dunno.” Maddy sighed. “One time, he turned into a blanket for 3 hours, then he filled with helium and blew away, a-… I dunno what to do about this.”

“But he had to’ve come on a ship, right, or at least backup?” Drake inquired.

“We would’ve seen backup by now, otherwise I think he was… his own ship.”

“This planet, Jellatonia is rich with many types of jelly.” Clank explained. “I believe a particular peach breed has properties which heal most ailments. If we cross this canyon, we may be able to find it.”

“Then let’s do it. Hopefully he’ll have some whack-job way of getting us back to Earth.”

As Ratchet walked with Clank strapped to his back, he never noticed the robot’s green eyes become red, his antenna emitting a signal. (Play “Jelly Jamboree” from Donkey Kong: Tropical Freeze.)

Stage 33: Jellatonia

Mission: Find the Peach Jelly.

The sky was a gaseous green and most of the landscape was soft and sludgy. Jellatonia was made almost entirely of gelatin, the color depending on the particular landscape, green jelly forests, blue bouncy rivers, some even said the sun was a great big yellow ball of jelly. Nutbrains. Drake carried Zach under his arm as the trio journeyed down a solid path before coming to a garden of giant purple jelly blocks, which the three had a fun time bouncing across. Jelliens flew in a circle above a block, and couldn’t be destroyed by jumping on them. Well, most enemies couldn’t, that’s why they had weapons, but Clank drew attention to the eight pipes a few feet around the block. Ratchet could grab each Jellien in his OmniWrench while they bounced and threw them onto a pipe, so they would latch and let their jelly be sucked in. The pipe stretched across the land below, and wobbly blue gelatin pillars rose out of holes along the pipe. Being so unstable, Maddy jumped across first, then Ratchet, then Drake, one at a time. When the pillars toppled the direction of the next, the person quickly jumped since they were hardly standable as they were.

The pillars led them to a part where the pipe shifted vertical and ended at an opening where blue jelly was steadily pumping up. They all jumped onto the pipe’s side since it was tilted diagonal, and faced a huge cliffside with a cave. When the jelly was at a reasonable volume, it threatened to burst, so the three hopped on as it POPPED, sending them flying across to land inside the green oozing cave. “This gelatin is molten, but sticky. Make sure it does not drop on you.” Clank cautioned.

“Mmph!” Unfortunately, Drake’s head was caught inside a glob, and after failing to tug it off, he ignited a blowtorch function in his claw to melt the jelly. “Huff! Good advice!” The team proceeded through the cave, avoiding various jelly drops, in which some manifested into Green Chuchu that tried to attack them, so Drake and Ratchet used their flamethrowers to melt them. They came to a large, open area under a tall cliff. Drake blasted his grappler to the top, but rather than latch, the device pierced the jelly-made ground and whipped right back, leaving nary a hole. “Damn gelatin.”

Ratchet noticed a small jelly cube a few feet away and grabbed it in his OmniWrench. Rested under the cliff was a similar cube, and when Ratchet stuck the smaller one into it, they formed a slight larger cube. “Let’s find more of these.”

Maddy followed a path on the left side to a narrow chasm with gelatin stalactites up above. She could grab the first one’s tip and hang on while the next stalactite was in the process of forming, continuously swinging on this current to build momentum. Once the next was low enough, she swung and grabbed before the previous one snapped under her grip, then repeated for another one, before swinging onto a steady platform with a white gelatin balloon. Maddy plucked it off its pedestal and blew more air into it, still clutching with her mouth as it floated over the chasm. She sucked air in to make it sink and avoid the stalactites, but blew air before she fell in the chasm – all the while breathing through her nose for her own sake. Jellybobs fluttered across the passage from around the corner, so Maddy shifted direction to avoid the electric jellyfish. The passage led to a small platform where Maddy collected a Jelly Cube, then floated the shortcut back to the start.

Drake followed a right passage to a very vast chasm, with skinny pillars with wobbly jelly stubs as silver and springy as springs. Drake made his grappler a lasso and roped the nearest Cata-Jell, and could make the choice where it flung him to as he tugged. He faced a ledge that was around the corner of a tall pillar, loosened his force, and went flying over. He barely landed on the foothold, and quickly stomped a group of Tumfoids; large bugs that fed on jelly, that came to munch him, since humans were kind-of-jelly. Once they were gone, Drake roped another Cata-Jell and aimed at the great wall across the chasm. All the ledges on it were too far out of range, but the farthest right one was aligned with green jelly pillars, so Drake flung that direction, bounced the gelatin, and landed on the ledge.

On the ceiling between him and the next foothold, Jelltulas (jelly spiders) waited, and next to Drake was a flower where colorful Gummy Bears bundled in the petals. Drake took one in his fingers, and felt sad seeing it squirm helplessly, but sacrifices must be made, so he threw it over the edge and watched a spider come down to snatch it. He grabbed many more tiny bears, threw them, and saw almost every Jelltula lower. Before they went back up, Drake swung their white jelly strings to land on the new ledge. The next large portion of the wall had purple, yellow, and red branches stick out at 5-second intervals, an interval for each color, so Drake swung his way across by memorizing the pattern. He landed on a ledge where he picked up a Jelly Cube, then roped a Cata-Jell to fling to a bouncy jelly on a pillar, followed by a series of bounces before he landed at
He and Maddy mixed their cubes with the one below the cliff and took turns bouncing up. They made it outside again and faced a dark-blue river of gelatin, which Maddy was reluctant to step into. “You should not submerge if you don’t remain stationary.” Clank assured. The trio marched across the river with this in mind, the jelly threatening to sink lower, so they moved quickly. There was a faint whirrrr sound, and the friends found a lump of the jelly, with big eyebrows and a grinning smirk, chasing them. Drake shot his harpoon at the Jelly Ghost, but it barely slowed down before sliding up to Maddy and grabbing her leg in its teeth. It tried to pull her down, but Ratchet bashed the ghost’s head and pulled Maddy upward, the group proceeding before the jelly sunk.

They reached a safe foothold overlooking the next portion of river, where many Jelly Ghosts were eager to drown them. The walls on either side were full of holes, and from those holes, Slither Boos came out on one side, and into a hole on the other. A Boo came out of a hole very close on their left, so they grabbed and climbed across before it retracted all the way. They climbed across a Boo sloping downward next, climbed a vertical Boo that went into a hole directly above, balanced across a straight Boo, then down a stairway Boo onto a new foothold. The next river was pinkish-red, a lot looser and would sink them upon touch. A boat was available for them to row across, so they began.

Jellybobs floated along the surface of the jelly and lit with electricity, the trio rowing around them. Currents flowed out of pipes that threatened to push them into Jellybobs, so they rowed harder to fight through. As they turned a corner, the river’s current picked up, they forcefully rowed rightward to stay away from the wall. Jellyfalls poured into parts of the river and would drown their boat, so they hurriedly rowed to whatever opposite side, adding extra effort due to the rushing current. Their boat roughly got drenched by two close jellyfalls, then the river sloped down into a cave. The area turned bright orange and a heat wave hit them. Their boat stopped before the shore of a magma cave.

Orange gelatin oozed everywhere, and they knew the moment they touched it, their flesh and bone was lost. Dark-red gelatin stalactites fell into the lava and were in the process of melting, so the trio bounced across when they had the chance. They landed on a dark-red ground of Jell-O and walked up a small slope, overlooking a long bridge across lava. The weight of just one would weigh the skinny thing into the lava, but Clank could go across with his light weight. A large brown jellyball was on the other side, which Clank rolled across. Worried that it was risky, also it stank, they held breaths and squeezed into the jelly as Clank rolled them across. Drake ignited his blowtorch to melt the ball, and the trio helped their selves up from the brown sludge and proceeded through a tunnel. The dark-red morphed into orange jelly, but it was stable and didn’t burn them. “This lava must be solidified.” Clank observed.

“It’s really bouncy, too.” Maddy said, already bouncing on the flimsy substance. Drake and Ratchet mimicked her actions, the jelly was so bouncy, it was hard to control their selves. Pits of molten lava came into view partway, so the three would have to recompose and focus their selves to avoid falling in. A river of magma followed, they Wall Bounced between the close walls to cross, then came to a room with a large lava lake, many stalagmites. Though they appeared sharp, the ‘mites were as bouncy as any hardened lava, so they jumped and flung to each one.

“BLAAAAAH!” A Blargg erupted from the magma, his mouth wide in a crazy smile, his teeny arms outstretched as though he was ready to give them a hug. After the stalagmites, they landed on a solid foothold and quickly swung stalactites that hung low, the Blargg still on their tail. They found another big brown ball, but instead of squeezing in, they all climbed on and balanced as they rolled over a shallow area of lava. They maneuvered around stalagmites and big magma droplets—a Gold Bolt was on a corner platform, so they braved the risks and grabbed it—then rolled across a river through a more narrow cave. A wall of stalagmites blocked their way, but—"BLAAAH!" the Blargg splashed a wave that propelled their ball up and over them, followed by more waves that would lift them over other ‘mites with good timing. They could step off on a solid foothold and head up a gelatin stairway, looking back to see the Blargg stopped at the shore, but that big wide smile still creeped them out.

The stairs brought the team outside to a rugged green gelatin plain. A pathway brought them to a cave that turned pink the further they went. A powerful scent that smelled like perfume caught their noses, and pink took over their vision when the cave of huge blocks of pink jelly lay before them. (End song.)

“Wow. These’re Peach Jelly?” Drake asked as they entered.

“Yuck, that smell!” Ratchet flinched, pinching his nose. “I get how it can wake Zach up, but ‘any ailment’ is stretching it.”

“If you get some in his mouth, he should be back to normal.” the robot confirmed.

“Assuming Zach’s peculiar disease isn’t foreign to these aliens.” Maddy dipped her fingers into some ooze and tried to shove it in her brother’s mouth.

Drake walked around the cave a little and found what seemed like alien skeletons lying about. “Ehh… guys, I’m starting to doubt Clank’s… nnnn.” He fainted.

Maddy and Ratchet’s eyes were heavy. “Buddy, I think you looked up the wrong…” Ratchet fell, then Maddy.

Florae; Mom’s flagship

Arianna’s pots were confiscated and she was locked inside the prison wing. She sat in the back of her dark cell, pondering her actions. Her first time being aggressive didn’t go at all how she wanted. But how it went shouldn’t have happened at all; well, not entirely. She really wanted to be out of here now.

Her antennae picked up a slight rattling in the pipe to her side. A hatch came off, and three tiny figures hurried over and stopped by her shoes. “Never fear, Arianna, your rescuers have arrived!” Vweeb proclaimed.

“Vweeb? Tronta? Makava?”

“Eeee-yep, I FINALLY fixed my shrink ray! GKND Spy Team V is back in action!”

“It better be, or it’ll take a lot of shoe-cleaning ‘fore Nebula biggifies us.” Tronta squeaked.

“You really put up a show there, Arianna.” Vweeb smirked. “I thought you’d grow a spine sooner or later, but I didn’t think you’d try to kill someone.”

“I wasn’t trying to kill him!” Arianna yelled defensively. “I lost my temper and hit him with the brambles by accident.”
“You still brought poison brambles to his office.” Makava noted.

“Maranan Brambles are not poison. I scratched him across the back, but he was probably poisoned before.”

“How d’you know he wasn’t allergic? You know how susceptible humans are.”

“I—I suppose… but I can’t believe that, yet! When I was in his office, I heard a voice. It was sounding inside my head, like…like when I use telepathy. Ted didn’t seem to hear it, so… I think something’s going on. I want to look for Ted and use telepathy around him; shrink me down and let’s look.”

“Whoa whoa whoa.” Vweeb said. “We only snuck in here to rescue you, not be caught red-handed in an assassination attempt. Your mom’s worried sick in the waiting room.”

Arianna crouched on all fours and loomed her head closer to her friends. “I’m going to save the Violet System and stop anyone responsible. If there’s someone behind the scenes, I need to find out. Please.”

The three never saw so much passion in her forest-green eyes. “Alright, fine.” Vweeb locked his shrink ray. “I’m not paying new Rebel Arianna’s bail, though.” He shot and zapped her to tiny size in seconds.

“'kay, it’s gonna be a little tight with four of us, stay close.” Tronta pulled out his dual Light Discs, and after transmitting his thoughts via a headband around his forehead, the Frisbees opened and attached to become a bigger Frisbee. The four stepped on, and Tron used his thoughts to make it fly them into and up the pipe.

They flew vent after pipe throughout the large flagship until they found the medical wing, Ted Wassanasong’s room. They stood in a vent near the ceiling with a perfect view of his bed, the Laotian man rasping. A nurse in the room observed a monitor, connected to a container with Arianna’s bramble, cut from its pot. “Hmm… this plant isn’t poison at all.”

“See?” Arianna told Vweeb, who glared.

“It could be an allergic reaction… there’s still so little we know about these aliens. Maybe I can look this up.” She left the room, leaving Ted alone.

“I don’t know of any disease these brambles could’ve given.” Arianna said.

“Yeah, but humans don’t live in this galaxy, right?” Makava asked. “We still aren’t really sure.”

“Not yet…” Arianna closed her eyes and opened her mind. To hear the unspoken thoughts of all of the animals. Animals which currently weren’t visible in the area. She had no idea what she was listening for, but she had a gut feeling it was there.

. . . Stupid brat, attempting to thwart my plan.

She gasped. “I heard it!”

“ Heard what?” asked Makava.

“The voice! It…It must be close. Look around!”

“Hey, check out his robe.” Vweeb pointed.
A lump traveled along the part of Ted’s hospital gown the blanket didn’t cover, stopping at his chest. I don’t understand how she heard me, but as long as no one else does. I need to get back on schedule. It’ll be trouble to convince the nurses without being spotted.

Ted’s rasping stopped as the man helped himself off his bed, much to the kids’ shock. He casually walked outside, and they heard the nurses gasp. “President Wassanasong, why are you out of bed?!”

“I’m feeling fine, Jenny. It was probably a temporary poison, I did not think the girl meant harm.”

“Ted, don’t you think you should rest, still?” his wife, Cindy asked. “Or stay for tests?”

“There will be time for that later. I want to have the Violet System blown by tomorrow morning, er, space-hours. We’ve garnered enough support from the local planets to pay for the Star Bomb from Nightmare Enterprises.”

“But Ted-”

“As a loyal and devoted member of the Corporate Presidents, I insist that we proceed with the operations as soon as possible. (Er, the Golfing in Stars operation, I mean.)”

“One more hospital bill I won’t pay.” Mom remarked smugly.

The operatives flew all the way to the ship’s lobby on the Light Disc, flying near the floor so as not to be seen. Nova was sitting worriedly on a chair, but when she heard a tiny whistle, she glanced down and saw the kids wave at her, before going to Vweeb’s parked hovercraft and leaving.

Nova stood and told the receptionist, “Um, if you insist on holding Arianna, I suppose I’ll return later. Please, release her soon.” And before they got too suspicious, she fast-walked out.

Makava’s Heart Star was parked on a distant asteroid, and Vweeb re-expanded the operatives after they made it back. Makava started it up and took off. “Okay, so Mr. Washing Machine gets over illness fast and has a bug on his chest.” Makava recapped. “At least we didn’t need to go through an action stage for that. You’re still convicted for attempted murder and he’s still gonna blow up the star system.”

“You’re right. I guess that the best I can do is convince the people of Florae not to support Ted. I mean, what’s so special about a golf course, anyway?”

“Says who? To the overpowered Kateenian.”

“Look, you guys don’t have to do anything else to support me, but I’m not going to let him get away with this. I’m going to the intergalactic TV studio and hosting my own commercial.”

“Siigh. I’m starting to miss the old take-no-action Arianna.” Tronta sighed. “At least I didn’t have to worry about you as much.”

“Specifically why I said you don’t have to do anything, anymore.” Arianna folded her arms and turned away. “I never expected you to.”

“It’s not that we don’t care, it’s just that we have more important things on our mind.” Makava said. “This cataclysm and... junk. And there wouldn’t be a Violet System either way if the universe gets destroyed.”

“That’s why I need to save it. To remind people that life can still flourish anywhere, to give them a sense of hope. I...I need to remind them all how precious life is.”

“Florae Galaxy doesn’t even know about the Apocalypse; except based on what Nebula told their KNDs.” Tron informed.

“That doesn’t mean I can’t use it as an example.”

Hawaii

Three rocks were stacked up on Anthony, and the boy was ordered 20 push-ups with them weighing him down. “You’re barely giving me five, kid, those rocks’d be light as feathers to real earthbenders.” Tom stated. “You don’t even need arms, just use psychic bending.”

“I’M NOT A PSYCHICBENDER!!”

“EVERY BENDER can control their element telekinetically, why do you think we never touch what we control?? Er- the actual art ‘psychicbending’ is one word, but psychically controlling our element is two words. Look, just see the rocks in your head and lift them!!”

“Tsk-tsk-tsk.” Gedra shook his head. “The little twerp is hopeless. I’m going to get me some juice. I’ll be back when he gets his next one.” The Minish surfed away from the camp on a rock-wave.

“Finally, he’s gone.” Tom said before pushing the rocks off of Anthony’s back. “Break time, kid, wash yourself off in that hot spring up ahead. Oh, and here’s some juice.” He tossed Anthony a box of apple juice, only adding to the boy’s confusion.

Regardless, Anthony didn’t miss the chance to revitalize himself in the spring just up the hill. “So what’s the deal with you and Pudra, anyway?” he asked. “You take breaks whenever he ain’t around?”

“Nah, just on occasion, I’ve gotten more used to it, but different story when you’re only seven.” Tom replied, relaxing on an earth-made lounge chair. “And that story is, kids need more free time, they’re only just developing, so if you push ‘em too hard, they’ll break. True, Gedra’s been training me since I was seven, but I was born to take heat, you weren’t.”

“Is that s’posed to be your negative prodding?”

“Yes, but it’s also true. I mean, as young as you are now, you really shouldn’t have to put up with this kind of training. All this junk is... really too much for kids to deal with. In the old Kids Next Door, you go through basic training to learn the best way of takin’ down an Ice Cream Man, that’s it. But before you know it, your world’s in danger of being blown to bits. Yeah, I heard about it too, kid, I very well know why you’re training. But it still aches me... knowing what all you have to go through.”

“I feel like if I had a big destiny, some angel woulda spoken to me from Heaven by now. For now, it looks like my only job is helping you become stronger. Though that raises the question, whaddo you plan to do with your new strength after we’re done?”

“Eh, I dunno.” Anthony casually slurped his juice. “Probly help Cousin Cheren kill one of those World Government people. They killed my uncle, so I’m pretty mad about that.”

“Way to dream high, kid. Alright then, five more minutes and I’ll start chucking magma streams at you.”

At the beach

Gedra was enjoying leisure time as well, using a Minish-size straw to slurp juice out of a banana. “It’s hard to lose your carb when there’s so much food to go around. Don’t you kids agree?”

Sally, Harvey, and Aranea only stared awkwardly at the sight. The friends were drinking milk from coconuts. “Just don’t get too full of yourself.” Nea remarked.

“Mr. Gedra, why did you start training Tom, anyway?” Sally asked. “Did he come to you, or…”

“Well, my family’s been watching his for a few generations; like any other Minish. But Tom’s is one of the Noble Earthbender Families, they were taught by Minish from the beginning, so I had to carry the tradition.”

“Anthony mentioned those families, didn’t he?” Harvey asked.

“I heard that they were the closest of friends centuries ago.” Gedra replied. “With four different powers, they were unique, too. It taught benders how far their powers could expand, not just your average rock, but anything a rock can become. You could imagine how many possibilities opened when other benders adapted that idea.”

“But wouldn’t the gods have taught them, anyway?” Aranea asked.

“The gods created mortals with the power to discover. They shaped the world, they gave us elements, they allowed anything that’s happened to be possible, but the mortals had to discover those things for their selves. So across generations, benders studied their elements, found more and more ways to control them… even Logia was an amazing discovery, it baffled the gods when mortals learned to transform the way they did. …I don’t exactly remember how they discovered it, just caught a glimpse somewhere. Then mortals invent crazy martial arts to control elements; there’s really no guessing how much the gods had in mind for people to figure out. Heck, one of you kids might be an undiscovered bender.” Gedra slurped his banana.

Sally and Harvey exchanged glances. “Well, our mom was an emotionbender.” Sally noted. “Are you saying one of us could have that?”

“Wow, that’s a rare power. It’d be amazing though.” Gedra slurped, “Dang, I’ve practically sucked this dry. Hey short girl, get me another one?”

“Call me ‘short’ one more time?” Nea remarked spitefully.

They heard footsteps crunching the sand behind them and turned. Fybi was floating overhead—which means she couldn’t’ve been making them. When they directed their vision a little down, they saw who was walking. “AAAAAAAAAIIYYYY!” Sally panicked at the sight of the yellow-haired woman. “You’re that Phosphora lady!! Fybi, get behind us, we’ll protect your wings!” They each whipped out weapons and ducked behind the logs they were sitting on.

“Thine selfless words for my safety are accounted, but I doth not believe Phosphora’s intentions are murderous.” Fybi assured. “Though she hast been following me most creepily.”

“I just wanted to apologize, geez.” Phosphora shrugged.
The trio exchanged glances that said, ‘This is out of nowhere.’ “Weren’t you put in prison?” Nea asked. “How did you get out?”

“Some weirdo in a cape busted us out. He lent me a ship, but he was more-or-less interested in Arlon. Anyway, I’ve been feeling bad about what I did to Fybi back then, so I’ve been trying to find her ever since I got back to Earth, and…”

“It would so happen that we art both wingless.” Fybi replied. “Thou seeth…”

So Fybi recounted the tale Phosphora told her. “Oh. I see.” Sally understood. “So you just wanna get back home?”

“Not particularly.” Phosphora replied. “But Fybi wanted to see my homeland. I don’t see why.”

“I wouldn’t mind visiting Skypia.” Sally said with a dreamy smile. “All the angels and pretty clouds sounds like a wonderful place.”

“Yeah, but we’re talking about an island that’s always storming. Like, 24/7.” Aranea reminded. “If Phosphora couldn’t even live there wingless, what chance would we have?”

“Actually, Skypia does have a place called Rubberband Land.” Phosphora said. “They’re really fascinated with the material for some reason, and they have suits specially designed for tourists going to Birka.”

“So why didn’t you get one?” Sally asked.

“Viridi came to me first, and I… It was just more convenient for me, okay??”

Fybi raised a brow. She had a feeling she wasn’t getting the whole story. “Alas, Anthony trains tirelessly with fair Tom. I wish not to interrupt.”

“Got it, let’s ditch him.” Nea concluded.

“I wish not that either.” Fybi stared. “Mayhap I shall oversee his progression.”

Fybi followed the heat waves to the open area of jungle that was their source. Anthony was blindfolded, standing still and listening only to the earth, and when the earth said a sudden lava geyser was going to blast him, he would dodge. Round after round of geyser came; Fybi remembered a time when Anthony tried to punch a rock, and it only punched back, now he was risking his life sensing and dodging lava effortlessly. Fybi always admired his determination and spirit, she would hate to stop him for a trip to Skypia. …Fybi remembered what Tom said earlier, too. A bender owns their element, water can become ice, earth into lava, fire into lightning. …Air came in many temperatures, hot, cold, average. Maybe she could learn something from this, too.

Arlen, Texas

(Play “Savannah Citadel Night” from Sonic Unleashed.)

So much is taking place in so many places, we’ve seen that. It’s gonna get a little confusing now, ‘cause we’re jumping back in time. The same day that Nigel Uno died, the evening after Dressrosa, the Sandman was out. The sunset was beautiful over Arlen, Texas, the scent of fresh farmland plains reached their noses. Sandman observed the town from atop the signature water tower, Yuki and Wiccan floating up to join him. “It’s nice to visit the countryside once in a while, but what are we doing here, again?” Wiccan asked.
“Ted Wassanasong is one of the Corporate Presidents. He owns the Nine Rivers Country Club in this region. His colleagues come over often for a round of golf, so maybe we can learn something about them. Usually there’s a few guards that overhear conversations. Better be careful. After Dressrosa, the other presidents are probably on to me.”

Stage 34: Nine Rivers Country

Mission: Sneak into the country club.

The heroes jumped off from the tower and soared over the neighborhoods, embracing the marvelous, endless view before landing on the roof of Tom Landry Middle School. Plenty of thugs in cowboy hats were roaming the streets, and Nolan took notice of posters on walls and telephone poles. He zoomed in his binoculars to see they were wanted posters of him, Coldman, and Wiccan. “Yep, they’re really on to us. I wonder how much the country club upped their defenses. Hmm… if we break into one of these trunks, I could get linked in with their radio waves and eavesdrop.”

“10-4, Rubber Ducky, iron bull’s comin’ up the gravel.” Yuki joked, indicating the huge truck about to pass the school.

“Hang on, we wanna do this right.” Nolan said. “Wiccan, get onto the truck, Yuki will freeze the wheels, and before the driver has a chance to call for help, that’s when she’ll knock him out. Ready? Go.”

Quickly, Wiccan glided onto the truck’s hull and crawled to the front before landing on the driver’s roof. Yuki stealthily landed behind and launched two ice-paths along the road that froze the tires as they touched. When the chubby, brown-haired driver was panicking, Crystal stuck her staff in his window and shot sleeping gas. Nolan flew over and gently pulled the driver out before climbing in. He hooked his wristwatch up with the radio and downloaded. “This is Tow-truck Charlie comin’ to you from the highway, 500 gallons a’ propane tanks safely delivered to the country club.”

“Quit the jibber-jabber and deliver them tanks! Ah’m hittin’ the strip club, an’ when I come back, I better not be hearin’ no complaints from them Laotians. Hoooooo-WEEN, if I ain’t gonna be somebody’s daddy!”

The heroes ditched the truck and flew onto a nearby restaurant’s roof—Yuki dispersed the ice on the truck tires. “So Ted likes propane and propane accessories. Well, who doesn’t.” Yuki said.

“I’ve picked up the source of that transmission.” Nolan informed. “We could fly there and try to find why Ted ordered the propane.”

“But that man sounded like he didn’t know.” Wiccan replied.

“He could’ve recounted wrongly. Let’s check it out.”
They swung and soared over buildings to avoid as many squabbles with bounty hunters as they could. “‘You hear about that tornado that took out them Buckeyes up in Ohio?’ a conversation between nearby Texans was heard on their wireless.

“That’s the 5th one this week. That storm come up here and tear up mah Longhorns, Ah’m-a shoot it in the face.”

“You illiterate, storms don’t have faces.”

“They got eyes, don’t they?”

A few short miles outside of town, they found the source of the radio transmission, Strickland Propane. The plain before it was pretty open, but the heroes were able to hide behind a huge tank as they approached, unnoticed by the workers outside. A Hispanic man, Enrique was carrying propane tanks outside while a brown-haired woman, Donna, was wiping them clean. “The door’s sealed with a terminal.” Sandman observed. “We could probably get the code off one of them.”

“Hey Donna, did Buck say how many-” Before Enrique could finish the query, Coldman ran out and knocked him out from behind, then Crystal squirted sleeping gas in Donna’s face. A group of employees came running from around the back, Sandman rolled forward and laid punches against two of them, linked them with the Line Launcher, and made ‘em slam into each other. Yuki spun around, created an ice disk, and tossed it under an employee’s feet to slide him to Crystal, who bashed him senseless, then she swung at the remaining one’s legs to knock him down as Nolan approached and grabbed him by the neck.

“Thanks.” So Nolan punched him in the face, throwing him on the ground. “It’s not mean, ‘cause now they’ll get compensated.” He typed the code into the door so the trio could get in. While Yuki and Wiccan explored the small, deserted business, Nolan entered Buck Strickland’s office. He checked the phone’s answering machine, replaying a message from yesterday, May 2: Ted Wassanasong’s moderate voice was on the other end, requesting 5,000 gallons of propane in exchange for $100,000, to be delivered to his Nine Rivers Country Club. And like Buck implied, Ted never gave any reason—

The phone suddenly rang, and Sandman scrambled to answer. “Um… hello?”

“Mr. Strickland, is that you? I was promised one more of your trucks would be arriving today. Is it on its way?”

It was Ted. Sandman cleared his throat and talked like the free-spirited man on the radio, “We’ HOWDY, Ted! Ah’m afraid Joe Jack ended up takin’ a little DETOUR, but he’ll have ‘em to you by the night! But I gots ta ask, Ted, why do ya NEED so many propaaaanes?”

“I am buying them for a colleague of mine, who wishes to make room in the local canyon. You know, the one that stretches to Mexico. It’s very near your store, in fact, and my country club, also. Though I wish he would have bought them himself, but I suppose he is quite busy with these odd storms occurring. I have my own projects to attend to, so please, make sure the truck gets here soon. Good-bye, Mr. Strickland.” Hung up.
“Nolan, take a look what we found.” Crystal said as she brought Nolan a small, mechanical ball, while Yuki showed him a handheld monitor with controls.

Curious, Nolan took the monitor and turned it on, seeing himself in the image. It was projected from the little ball in Crystal’s hand, and after pushing a button, it launched a grappler to the ceiling corner, pulled itself to, and stuck there. “Hm… Grapple-Cam.” Nolan read the label. “Why would Strickland have this?” He clicked an option to view previous recordings.

“OOOOOGGH!” They shielded their eyes from the sight. “Ugh, he’s repulsive!” Wiccan whined. “Delete!” said Nolan.

Sandman got the Grapple-Cam! Able to latch itself to any surface, it can spy on enemies from afar! It can transmit the controller’s voice to distract enemies and also self-destruct when necessary.

The heroes went outside and climbed onto the roof, seeing the canyon Ted spoke of very close by. “According to Google Map, this canyon does stretch to where Ted’s country club is located.” Sandman observed. “It might be worth a shot to sneak in this way.”

“Are you sure? I mean, we haven’t even tried the front yet.” Wiccan replied.

“Nine out of ten times, the front is the most protected after they were warned about criminals. They couldn’t expect us to go to the trouble of the canyon.”

“Twenty bucks they have guards there.” Yuki stated.

The heroes glided to and over the canyon’s edge. The breeze softened their descent and made their flight easier, turning a slight canyon corner before Nolan launched his grappler to a stable, flat ledge. His friends landed beside, then Nolan sent the Grapple-Cam to propel around the following corner, where its camera spotted a Laotian guard standing on a ledge before a cave. Without being spotted, he launched the Cam to the ceiling above the cave, seeing many armed guards patrolling the gorge ahead. There was a thin ledge high above the team’s platform, so Wiccan Rocket Boosted to it. Back to the wall, the witch sidled across the tiny foothold, around the corner, thousands of feet above the canyon ground, until she was directly above the guard. Nolan confirmed with the Grapple-Cam none of the others were looking through the cave, so Wiccan softly dropped down and gassed the guard unconscious.

Sand and Yuki could glide over and grapple to that ledge, passing the cave as they hid behind a group of tall rocks, unseen by anyone in the gorge. He had the Grapple-Cam latch around to the walls above the gorge, and the only way forward was through a passage within a wall, atop a short hill. A guard stood in the entrance, and when Sandman looked closer, a button was on the wall that would seal the passage if he spotted intruders. Sandman had the Grapple-Cam launch past the guard and up the rugged road. “Hey, you.” He spoke quietly from his end, but his voice was heard by the guard via the Cam’s microphone. The man turned and looked confusedly. The Cam went a little further down and called, “You, with the face.” A little frustrated, the guard hurried up, his gun ready. Before he had a chance to notice the little ball, “OOOOUUH!” Sandman shot its grappler at the guard’s crotch, weeping and falling on his side.

Sandman shot his own grappler to a tiny ledge on the side of a tall canyon needle, then glided into the passage before the other guards noticed. He punched the groaning guard unconscious, then returned to shoot his Shock Rod at two patrolling guards. Wiccan ran up from behind one and knocked him out, Yuki froze the head of another, punched through the ice, and he was down.
Sandman glided behind two unsuspecting guards and slammed their heads together, then yanked another one over with the grappler and socked him in the face as he flew over. Sandman explored another hill to the gorge’s side that led nowhere, but its thin crevice beside it had a Riddler Trophy he decided to collect.

The heroes followed the rocky passage that was previously guarded and made it to another enclosed gorge where more guards roamed. “Well, this is already getting repetitive.” Wiccan said.

Sandman looked up at the needle towering over the gorge, its tip bulkier than its stability should allow. He had the Grapple-Cam latch up at the feeble stem and pushed the self-destruct. The explosion was small, but it caused the huge boulder to lose balance and plummet onto the ground, not crushing any of the startled guards. Out of curiosity, they all came to observe it, but the boulder’s impact caused the ground to give way and send them all falling. “WE’RE OKAY.” they chorused in Laotian.

“Yes, but now the Grapple-Cam is gone.” Crystal reminded.

“Guess again.” Nolan smirked and pulled the metal ball from his pocket.

“… …How did you do that?”

“Facilier cast a spell so that all my equipment will return to me if they’re lost or destroyed. How do you think I never lose my boomerangs?”

“…Even Batman has no explanation for that.”

The heroes went around the hole, up the hill to the next passage. It was a narrow trench with rocky sides, and a chasm where only tall stalagmites went across. It was too narrow for Nolan to glide, and the walls appeared unstable for his grappler or Line Launcher. Thankfully, Wiccan could leap to each stalagmite’s point and balance, expertly jumping across the passage. A group of short slopes followed the ledge at the end, and a round boulder that was half Crystal’s height rested on top. She smiled as she rolled it down, crashing against the last stalagmite to create a domino effect. With all the stalagmites leaning, they were thin, but stable enough ground for her comrades to cross.

They trekked up to a ledge over another narrow chasm, in which some wooden platforms led to the left, around a corner, then along a canyon wall that overlooked the sunset sea. “WHEEEE!” A huge, block-shaped mechanical vessel flew out of the wall below and splashed into the sea.

“That was unexpected.” Coldman commented. “Any idea what that is?”

As Sandman was skimming below with his binoculars, “Any idea what THAT is?” He spotted some kind of giant figure climbing across the wall just over the sea.

“Strange. It looks familiar.” Wiccan said.

“Yeah, it does. I… recognize those kids. And that… skeleton boy, didn’t I see him… AUGH, too many distractions.” Nolan shook his head. “Let’s just focus, we’re almost there.” Sandman grappled to the next wood platform, but the following trench was all walls, no footholds, and zigzagged. He sent his Grapple-Cam through to discover there was flat, solid parts of the rugged, unstable walls, and was able to Line Launch his way across. He kept a careful eye on the flat parts’ position so he could shift direction of the zipline, slide across, then repeat the maneuver around every corner, while his friends flew/surfed an ice-path.

Finally, Sandman could land on a ledge with a cave, which stored stacks of gallons of propane. “Is this where they’re keeping it all? Hm… should destroy them, but that may cause a mess.” The heroes instead climbed the rope ladder nearby (Sandman’s wheelchair had extendo claws for the purpose), making it onto the cliff that was the edge of the vast golf course. Laotian men were innocently playing golf, but guards were around too, and Sandman sensed one coming around the trees with Detective Vision. “You know what to do, Yuki.”

When the guard was in view, Coldman pulled him aside, knocked him out, and donned the garb. Nolan hid the fallen body and stole his passcodes. “Great, just sneak into the building and look for any clues you can. Actually, take this with you, too.” Nolan passed him the Grapple-Cam. “Good luck.”

“Good point. Er… know any quickie salons?”

“Right here. Hold still, Yuki.” The witch whipped out two spray cans, spraying Yuki’s skin light-brown and his hair black—also smoothing it flat. “There. It might be offensive, but it helps.”

“Why do you have that?”

Yuki casually walked onto the golf course and passed his first guard. “YOU there! What is passcode to 3rd hole?”

“And the Oscar goes to:” began Nolan.

“OK. I don’t like your perfume.” Yuki passed this remark off and continued. A guard finished knocking a ball into a hole and asked, “YOU. What were the scores for the 2nd hole yesterday?”

“Just making sure.” Yuki crossed hill after hill, sandpit after—actually, he stayed away from those on account o’ the Chain Chomps, but another guard approached him, “You, with the weird smell. What’s the code for the bar?”

“Ho hoh! You got that right.” Yuki kept calm and was seconds away from reaching the clubhouse. One final guard was protecting it. “Want to go in, eh? Well, give me the password.”

“Very good. But I’m a little bored today. Fancy playing a round of golf before I let you pass?”

“Uhhh…”

“Yuki, now!”

“OOOH-!” The Grapple-Cam pelted the guard in the crotch, Yuki hurriedly clamped his mouth shut, knee’d him in the jaw, and knocked him out.
“Hastily thought, but we don’t have time for a mini-game. Go inside.”

As casual as before, Yuki slipped into the clubhouse, seen by all the club members and guards as one of their own; save for his spray-paint-style perfume. He solved codes for numerous guards before he located Ted Wassanasong’s office, giving a small knock, hearing no response, and going inside. The desk was barren, only the ticking of the clock made sound. A few trophies for golfing tournaments stood, pictures of Ted on the field. A small glass cage sat in one corner, with a hole that looked as if it were burned open by acid.

Yuki sat at the desk and found a stack of papers inside. “Reports from an expedition to Mars? No way this guy went to Mars.”

“Well that mean he collected some marshmallows from that ridiculous rumor?” Crystal asked.

“Apparently trying to find good ground for golf courses. While there, he was attacked by an acidic leech that he took back for—”

Transmission went dead. “Yuki? …Yuki, where’d you go?”

“Ahh! Nolan!” Two guards grabbed and held Crystal from behind, while a third guard readied his golf club.

“DO NOT MOVE!” the guard demanded. “Take off your mask! Or I…I hit her with putter!”

Of course, the other guards had guns. Nolan raised hands in defense. “Don’t hurt her-”

“Take off mask now!”

Nolan hesitantly removed his mask and his hat. “Nnn-!” A dart got him in the neck, and the world went black. (End song.)

The world was hazy when his vision returned, and all was still black except for a faint light shining on a desk with a turned chair. A deep German voice spoke. “Hello… so honored to have you here. I had a feeling you would come.”

Nolan was on his wheelchair, wondering if he was in the clubhouse, or somewhere else. “I’ve been eager to meet you… Sandman.”

“Ted… Wassanasong?”

“No. I…” The chair swerved around. The bald, dark-skinned man with the white labcoat folded his gloved fingers, the light sparkling in his round glasses, “am Hugo Strange. Apprentice to the Leaders of the World Government. Please… would you sit—er… I see you already are.”

Nolan calmly rolled to the desk as Hugo poured tea for both of them. He took a cup and lightly sipped while Strange slowly walked behind him. “My masters keep saying how you killed President Doflamingo. Yet, that is completely out of character for you. …Is this true?”

Nolan was silent. “He got a little… troublesome for me. I wanted to avoid it, but I…”

“Why do you query with the Corporate Presidents, anyhow? They did not antagonize you in the past, did they?”

“One of them was antagonizing my son, another antagonized the world. They may be famous, but they’re anything but noble. So now I don’t trust any of them. And after hearing what the Leaders did to Nigel, I have no reason.”
“But you must understand, Sandman, what we are trying to accomplish. We wish to save this world from its evils. ‘Twas a terrible thing, what Doflamingo did, so you must agree, that evil beings such as he must be abolished, to make the world peaceful?”

“I believe that evil must be contained, so those people have several chances to redeem their selves. It hasn’t failed. I can name a few people.”

“People do not change their ultimate nature. If a person is born for evil, takes delight in it, they will always be evil. Those Brotherhood hooligans are nothing but obnoxious ruffians who cause mayhem for the sake of doing so, no true ultimate goals. Peoples’ lives would be much easier if they were all destroyed. You are a man of justice, Sandman. Why should you not aid us? Bring justice to all civilians.”

“Because the World Government makes crappy decisions. Need I point out two Corporate Presidents, again?”

“The World Government only wants the best for the world. Namely the children. And the Kids Next Door, especially, will end up destroying their selves in this pointless war. The World Leaders wish to save them from themselves because they do not understand, but we are adults, Sandman, we know. If you are not aligned with the World Government, you are enemies, we do not wish that for poor simple children. So I ask you, Sandman, cease these foolish endeavors. Set the example and educate your children, put them on the right path.”

“No. If the Kids Next Door want a fight with your Leaders, it’s the Leaders who need to worry. I can’t do anything to stop them… but I’ll be damned if I sit around and let my kids do all the work. What kind of example would I set if I didn’t knock a few heads in, ah?”

Hugo released a calm sigh. “It is a pity, Sandman… that this is your path. The Kids Next Door will never defeat the World Leaders, I’m sorry to say. It hurts to know you are worse now than your days in the Brotherhood.”

“How would you know about my-”

“I know many things, Sandman. I know that you did not kill Doflamingo, but that monstrous Cheren child. I know that many of your friends are part of the rebellion called the White Lotus. And I have no intention of letting any of them proceed.”

“Why should we be afraid of you?”

Hugo smiled and walked behind his desk. “I may not be a bender or a metahuman, but I have powers, Sandman. With my knowledge and experience, I have proven myself to the Leaders. You’ve seen it yourself, on your trip to Freddy’s.”

It was then that Foxy’s words popped back into Sandman’s mind. “I don’t-a remember his name, but he was a bald man with a white coat and glasses.”

Nolan stared at Hugo. “You’re the one who… trapped those spirits inside robots?”

“Yes. But that particular bunch were prototypes. I could not control them, and my horrible blunder landed me in prison. My master, Felius Umbridge bailed me out, and I continued my research. Doflamingo’s daughter helped to rectify that previous mistake… but I improved upon it: by creating the Puppet.”

Animatronic, toy-like versions of Bonnie, Freddy, and Chica appeared from the darkness behind Hugo, Nolan readying his guard in fright. “As you might know, Sandman, children are much easier to control than adults, and child souls are no different. Hypnosis puts their innocent minds to sleep… mends them to my will. I think you will do well inside a Freddy suit, Sandman, and given enough expertise, easy to control. Farewell… Nolan York. You’ll see your son again, soon.” The hologram disappeared. “BLOOUAGH!” The animatronics seized their chance on Sandman.

Hawaii

Tom sent waves of lava that Anthony blocked with rock walls, and the hardened lava eventually molded them all together into a single 5-foot wall. Anthony jumped on top and sent it surfing to Tom, who punched a hole open to dodge through, then Anthony landed behind and stomped a rock to the back of his head. “OOF!” The teen fell forward. “Ow… heh…” He pushed himself up and turned to Anthony with a smirk. “I gotta admit, I didn’t think you’d be thinkin’ that fast.”

“I’m not stupid, durrrr. I could see a pebble comin’ a mile away, you can try, but you won’t hit me.”

Fybi knew she couldn’t let this chance slip. She flew down into the trees, got a pebble, flew back up, and put it in her B.O.W.. She locked tight onto Anthony’s eye, and flung. “Ow!” A direct hit.

“Ah ha ha ha ha ha!” The angel twirled. “A mile off may be thine claim, but within said mile, whom’s to say?”

Anthony rubbed his eye angrily. “You’re just jealous ‘cause I could take you down in a fight.”

“Mayhap so, in thine natural environment. Alas, I must speak with thee of a matter.”

“Yeah, what?”

Fybi once again explained the story. “Hold up, hold up… so that Phosphora lady appears outta nowhere and apologizes, now you wanna visit her homeland? Well, I don’t trust her, and neither should you.”

“’Tis not a matter of her trustworthiness… but mine own reasons are thither. Thou may question my soberness, but I hath seen Birka in a dream. ‘Twas very straightforward; ‘thou art going to a place called Birka’, yon fairy said. Doth not deny our knowledge of the great journey is very small, training be an excellent direction, though alone, how far will we go? I believeth Birka may hath answers. I believeth I must go thither, and I wish for mine friends to see my homeland.”

“Fine, but why should I go? Skypia doesn’t have any earth, does it? I couldn’t help you there if I wanted to.”

“Kid, I think you should go.” Tom intervened. “She’s got a point—er-, I don’t understand her very well—weird way o’ talkin’—but somethin’ about training not being everything, well, that’s true. You only really learn from experience, even if this place doesn’t have any rock. If it’s really an important mission, you should go with your sector. They need a leader, don’t they?”

“Well… I guess.”

“’Tis not like we hath not flown storm before.” Fybi noted. “To the beach, and we shalt make S.C.A.M.P.E.R. ready for liftoff.”

The others were a little disappointed to leave Hawaii so soon, but who knows, Skypia could be a top vacation paradise. Everyone settled into the S.C.A.M.P.E.R.; including Phosphora’s special reserved seat. “O-kay… why is this the guest seat, again?”
The lightning woman was squeezed inside the air vent; which looked like a tiny cage from this angle. “You’re still a convicted felon.” Anthony remarked from the captain’s seat. “And I’m only on this trip for Fybi’s sake, don’t know what’s goin’ on in HER head.”

“I doth not know the meaning behind mine dream, either. Prithee, Phosphora, are there other things peculiar about thine birthplace?”

“A-Actually…” Phosphora looked down. “I should’ve mentioned this… Birka’s currently ruled by a king… er, more-or-less a ‘god’. Part of his policy includes the banning of anyone weak, like… like a powerless Nimbi. That also includes humans; I don’t know why he hates them so much, but he loves creating storms over their settlements.”

“So did you.” Anthony remarked. Phosphora glared.

“An evil king that hates humans? Maybe woulda been worth mentioning.” Nea said.

“Mayhap that wast my reason for going thither. To end corruption of evil god, like fair Pit in his days.” Fybi spoke dreamily. “Or doth I speak in more dreams than I shouldst? Regardless, ‘twould not be foolhardy to garb Nimbi disguises whilst in Land of Rubberbands.”

“You’re already going the wrong way.” Phosphora informed. “Rubberband Land was-”

“I know yon directions. But I wisheth to return home for a moment. Thou seeth,” Fybi smiled, “I fly fairer when the air touches mine face.”

Solana; over Jellatonia

An attraction beam extended all the way down from the Star Train to the surface. Clank freely flew up in its anti-gravity pull, and Nefarious Drones had Maddy, Drake, Ratchet, and Zach asleep in their possession. “This is Dr. Nefarious to recovery team, you should be onboard the vessel in five minutes. You’ve served me well, Klunk.”

“It was my pleasure, Sir.” Klunk said with Clank’s average tone. “In the end, tricking these fleshies into breathing the toxic Sleepytime Jelly was a walk in the park.”

“If what Mr. Dark says is true, Maddy will realize her destiny inside a dream, and when that happens, we will take her to her supposed Poneglyph. The brat will have been awakened, and I’ll only need to put up with her for 3 more weeks!”

“Yes. But except for the quest part, we can merely keep her asleep for that time. Mmhmhehehe.”

Once the robots were onboard, the Star Train could sail away. “Ahhhh…” Nefarious sighed with satisfaction, relaxing on a control seat. “A job well done. Say, any of you guys up for-” There was a light shake, and alarms started sounding. “What the heck?!"

The exterior cameras picked up a smaller, silver train circling to their sides. Despite being so tiny in comparison, the pilot’s voice was loud enough for the whole Star Train to hear. “HEEEEEY you stupid FAT TRAIN! You got to da count o’ futatsu to SUBMIT TO THE ROCKET-SAN and all her glory!” (“Gyom-gyom!”)
I’ll be honest, I had qualms about making the Star Train battle this early, but now I’m glad I did! This was a pretty fun chapter to write!

Chapter 24: Power of Teamwork

Solana; Star Train

An exciting brawl was taking place within Star Train’s living room. Mario vs. Snake vs. Ike in Super Smash Bros. Universe. Because those were the characters Yellow Monkey – Specter’s chubby, net-pants officer with questionable sexuality, Dennis – Plankton’s hired bounty hunter, and Flint Vorselon (see earlier chapters) were playing as. The clash was heated and exciting, but in the end, Mario was supreme victor. “No fair! You cheated!” Dennis accused.

“Ohck, out-RAGEOUS!” Yellow replied cheekily, swaying his body and passing Dennis a flirty smile. For the moment, we’ll decide it’s a ‘he.’ “My qualities are inherited, they’re naturally given! Excuse ME if you’re a sore loser.”

“I had a shotgun, grenades, a cool helicopter, your character shouldn’t have had anything but plumbing equipment.”

“If Lord Vorselon may intervene,” said the Terraklon, “these controllers were not made suitable for one with my disability,” he held up his robot claws, “and cannot be held or maneuvered with precision by my suit without error.”

“We told you they didn’t make controllers to accommodate a one-eyed fish in a robot suit.” Dennis stated.

“True, but they did come with these pretty little rubies!” Yellow Monkey showed his pretty sparkling controller.

“Are you three playing that stupid game, again?” Dr. Nefarious scolded as he, Specter, and Plankton entered.

“It’s NOT stupid!” Vorselon whined. “You’re just saying that because I BEAT you yesterday and you know it.”

“Shape up, Dennis, or your brain’s going in the same place that guy’s head is.” Plankton ordered.

Dennis stood up and faced the microorganism with strict eyes behind his sunglasses, “Not until this cheater admits he BUMPED me with his big round bottom when I attempted the Down-B move.”

“Lord Vorselon would like to reprise his argument, and criticize the lack of adaptability regarding these-”

“ARE YOU THREE QUITE DONE?!” the three masters screamed.

The henchmen’s heads shrunk. “Yes.”

“Then get to your stations already.” Nefarious stated. “Two of the Seven Lights are on that vessel, and Mr. Dark is incredibly antsy about a certain one.”

“And Maddy is here, and I captured that boy earlier, if we captured these kids, that’ll make four of the Seven Lights in our possession!” Plankton beamed.

“You remember they still have to awaken, right?” Specter inquired.

“Yeah yeah, we’ll get to that part later. What we wanna do now is put ’em into slumber until they learn where they gotta go in their dream. We’ll wake them up every 5 hours or so to check progress, and once they learn something, we’ll help them on the journey.”

“Except that Sheila brat has to be asleep as well.” Nefarious recalled. “Anyway, just work on capturing all the brats. …I wonder though, should we outright say who the Lights are? It’s getting annoying to talk about them indirectly.”

R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. (Play “Space Battleground” from Star Fox: Assault.)

Mission: Rescue Nefarious’s prisoners!

“Can’t you drive this train any faster?” Chris yelled. “You saw them take Maddy, Drake—and what I think was Zach, on that train!”

“Chris has a point, they’re already sending ships at us.” Aurora ducked when the smaller aircraft began blasting lasers. “We need to start attacking.”

“Hey, what you think this is, your everyday track race??” Chimney scolded. “We playin’ this by the book. Graceful train-fighting, precise, fair, and sportsmanly. I’M COALING HIS WINDOWS!!” She stomped the gas.

“WHOOOOAAAA!” All of the kids whipped against the wall when the train shifted sideways. Chimney flew along the Star Train’s side, her R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N.’s chimney aimed at the exterior as it made a trail of black smog.

A Pipo Monkey in an air helmet was innocently cleaning the windows when the train shot by, blackening his whole area. A camera crew was filming him at the time. We should’ve gone with the terrorist movie. the caption read.

Laser cannons appeared on the train’s side, all firing bright green, diagonal lasers, some upward, others downward, but Chimney maneuvered her train like a worm in-between the beams. “A’ight, this guy wants to go loco a loco, Ah’ll show him loco. SUCK THESE LASERS, Säsüpäsaiizu!!” Chimney kicked over to a switch along the left of the controls and smashed, unveiling a row of cannons on the bottom corner of her train. They blasted lasers and destroyed the Star Train’s turrets, then Chimney yanked up the steering wheel, looped the R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. in a circle, and burned a hole into the side of the Star Train that exposed Space Mama naked in the shower—the woman screeching with her high opera voice before hiding behind the curtain.

When Chimney’s train became horizontal again, the operatives were on their rears, with Mason unable to hold in barf. “Chimney, you gotta think about installing seatbelts…” Haruka moaned, Aeincha facedown on her skirt.
“Nnn? I dunno what those are. Okay, get ready, ‘cause I’mma about to chop off the latch!”

“Chimney, wait!” Haylee cried. “If you cut a hole open, maybe we can use that to get in! Besides, you shouldn’t do too much damage before we rescue them.”

“Well, there is a lane-change coming.” Dillon pointed. Apparently, they were on some kind of giant-train space-road that was between energy lines, and an arrow sign indicated a shift toward the right, so the Star Train had on its turn-signal as it did so. This road was not seen for the rest of the flight.

The R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. swerved around to fly beside the opened hole again, but Space Mama had gotten a washing machine, hidden behind, and released a string of small rockets that formed a barrier over the hole. Chris lowered a window to punch fire while Sheila sent Light Spheres, but both attacks bounced off the shiny, round-ended explosives. “Can you blow open a different hole?” Chris asked.

“Hey, I got a lot-a stuff on this train, so I’m pretty limited in all o’ them, including laser juice. I wanna try to save it.” Chimney informed.

Space Mama climbed into the washing machine and came out in her astronaut outfit, dancing gracefully in airless space as she shot yellow lasers from her bazooka – which weren’t really single straight beams, but rather segmented bars of energy, packing the strength of giant bullets when they struck the silver train. Angered, Chimney pulled a lever beside her chair, opening a hatch on the back of the train that dropped a powder keg. She stomped a gas pedal and ignited her rear engines, burning the keg as Space Mama was swallowed in colorful, intricately decorated fireworks. “Ooooo!” The light reflected in Vorselon’s eye. “Is it Terraklon Midyear already?”

Chris pulled off his headband, giving the Combustion Eye breath. “Got it.”

The kids held on when the train spiraled and swerved again, so the open window was aligned with the Star Train’s side. “Ice Gate, open!” Aurora touched her head and powered with frosty Ice Chi, blasting twin rays at the train. The cold air reached the kids’ skin, the low temperature of space also complimented it, and a great circle of ice was frozen against a tiny part of the massive train. Enemies came at them, so Chimney had to boost them away, activating mini turrets on the upper corners that blasted bullets. After most of the ships were down, they swerved around and flew slowly beside the frozen patch. Chris inhaled, channeled heat into his forehead, aimed directly through the open window, and spark. spark. spark. spark. spark. BOOM. The wall was completely ruptured.

“The enemies have breached a hole in Wing 75.” A Team Rocket agent examined a monitor. “We’re sending a repair team to fix it.”

“Don’t.” Giovanni spoke calmly, petting his Persian. “Let them board. It will be easier to catch them when they’re inside. Besides, I want to see my enemies’ face.”

“Nyaaaaa.” Persian yawned.
Chimney flew them away from the Star Train, several meters upward before turning around to boost directly at the opening. “I’m gonna drop you guys off and keep blasting this tonma from the outside. Don’tchu guys blame me if I hit you too hard.” Chimney told them.

“Gyom-gyom!”

“Whuh? Can’t I stay on the train?”

“NO! She has to go, too!” Chimney yelled quickly. “F-For experience, yeah!”

“Mary, what can you do, exactly?” Haruka asked.

“I stab people with this palette knife!” Mary grinned and showed them the thin, round-edge knife.

Dillon sweatdropped. “Those can’t actually hurt people. Anyway, are we even sure this is a good idea? It might take forever to search this whole giant train for these guys.”

“You dun’ need to worry about that.” Apis said with a sly smile. “Mocha has experience rampaging through trains.”

The giant flushed and grinned. “It’s a gift.”

The R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. rammed through the hole front-first and came to a stop partway inside a hallway. “RAAAAAHHHH!” Mocha stormed off the train and was eager to begin stomping the swarms of Nefarious Drones.

“She knows how to get things done fast.” Haylee said in disbelief. After the R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. backed out of the hole, the kids readied their guard when squadrons of Rocket Agents, Plankton robots, and Pipo Monkeys came down from either corridor. “We can do our part, too.” Artie proclaimed. “Let’s look for the pilot’s station. We’ll demand whoever’s in charge to tell us where Maddy is.”

“We’ll search other parts and radio you if we find her.” Aisa informed, clutching her G.U.M.Z.O.O.K.A. Dials. “Wish us both luck.”

April held up her paintbrush and palette in a stylish fashion. “Ready to show them Goldenweek Art Style, Mary?”

Mary opened her briefcase and clutched numerous crayons between her fingers. “Let’s do it!” She used a light-blue crayon to color the bottoms of her shoes. She raised her palette knife as April whipped red paint over it, then grabbed her cousin’s arm before spinning around and sending Mary at the Nefarious Drones – the blue crayon under Mary’s shoes allowed her to glide across the floor like ice. She spread the red paint around the robots, and this Color of Bullfighting forced all the drones to shoot each other, though they aimed to shoot the girls.
“Do not aim that at-” a robot spoke before being shot.

“I’m sorry. My sensors are processing that color so vehemently.” his friend said, before being shot himself.

The W7 members followed April and Mary’s direction (Mocha could take care of herself, for the moment) while Sector V faced the corridor of Pipo Monkeys. Kirie folded her hands, prayed, and summoned the Rainbow Monkey spirits to battle through them. Chris ignited his jetboots and grabbed Mason’s arm, flying over the enemies while the latter drank Flurp and farted Gas Bombs downward. Haruka took the liberty of moving the gas aside so her friends could progress, but reformed the cloud so the monkeys could remain crying.

Team Rocket Agents summoned Rhydon and Machamp to attack Sheila, who ignited her tail with golden light and spun against the Pokémon, able to push them, but not enough to take them down. She spun her Midas Fists into being and socked the musclebods in the gut, causing them to cough spit and fall down. Hecklers stormed out next, and Sheila dodged the Hoodlums’ cannons while spinning her fists again to punch through the armor. “Mr. Dark wants the raccoon captured alive!” an Elite Hoodmonger reminded. “Don’t wound her too.” This Hoodmonger was kicked numerous times across the face by Sheila, ‘til the Black Lum flew out.

“Oooooh!” The agents panicked when Sheila jumped before them, smirking. “Naaah, you dogs ain’t worth my time.” Sheila waved off. “My mates on the other hand can use a workout.” She ran away, just when Sector V showed up.

“Shadow Possession!” Dillon stretched Mario to catch a number of Agents while Haruka defeated them with Sleeping Gas. Haylee extended her wrench and started whacking agents unconscious, and all Harry needed was a kick in the shin.

Before they could let feelings of victory get the best of them, a huge door behind the agents burst down, and out stomped Yellow Monkey in a bigger, inflated form. “Oh, I was WONDERING what was causing such a ruckus out here! What an ADORABLE bunch of cute, little kiddies!” He folded his fingers and swayed his hip.

YOU’RE a peculiar kind of Rainbow Monkey. Kirie signed with resent.

“I’d love to engage in your frilly little shenanigans, but you’re being a tad rude with all this noise, so I must beseech. Don’t make me tickle your little tootsies!”

Aurora was weirded. “Yeah… uhhh… I’ll handle this guy, even though I’m a little creeped out. I shouldn’t be too long.” She balled her fists and switched to a determined aura, her friends supporting her decision to not let them fight the weirdo and going ahead.

“You have twin elements, but I bring with me the ancient stylings of Japan! By harnessing my chakra, I have access to all the powers of the universe. I’ll give you only a meager fraction, of my NINJA ATTACK!” He pinched his breasts, sending shurikens from his nipples that were connected to thin chains.

Aurora dodged back, holding back her comments of disgust before freezing her leg in ice and flying at the ape. The heel of her foot gutted Yellow in his round, blubbery belly, but unsurprisingly bounced away. “Ooo la laaa! A frosty girl, aren’t you? You make my nipples—”

“PLEASE don’t finish that sentence!”
Four Nefarious Drones tried to shoot Mary, but she swiftly skied between them and colored their backsides using orange crayon. The robots were confused, but suddenly they felt their circuits overheating, repeating their “Not cool” remarks before exploding. “Hooraaaay!” Mary twirled on her ice-bottom shoes. “I did it, Ap—WAAAAH!” She lost balance, her feet frantically slipping, and she fell.

A swarm of saucers flew from another corridor, commanded by Pipo Monkeys. Apis focused her mind on the apes and tried to speak with them, Don’t shoot at us. Land your saucers. The monkeys considered it, but their Pipo Helmets reminded them, Obey Specter. Specter is king. Attack the humans. The W7 members dodged the saucers’ lasers, a far easier task for Aisa with her Mantra as she began blasting her G.U.M.Z.O.O.K.A.s with near-perfect precision. “Aisa, I want us to try and take the saucers to fly them. Can you hit the helmets so I can talk to them better?”

“If you say so.” Since the saucers had glass domes over them, Aisa began flying with her Jet Dials and shot the domes with gumballs, steadily cracking them before they successfully broke. Aisa then retrieved her bow, took aim, and pierced arrows through the flashing helmets. Apis once again spoke to the monkeys, and with a weaker remembrance of Specter’s orders, the apes complied and landed their craft. Apis hopped in a saucer, joined by Aeincha and Gonbe, Aisa her own, and Mary, but they had an awkward time sitting since the monkeys were much shorter than they were, ergo the saucers were small.

“Er- I- don’t- know- hooooowwwww…” Mary’s saucer shook as it uplifted, but quickly plopped down.

“Okay. Careful, you two.” Apis replied before the three of them plus Gonbe flew down the hall.

“Wait, I just realized something!” Aeincha exclaimed. “Aisa, can’t you use your powers to find Maddy’s group??”

“Oh yeah! I never thought of that!” the Nimbi replied. “It’s kind of a big place, but… I’ll try.” She slowed her saucer and closed her eyes. Hundreds of auras were made visible to her. “Lessee, monkeys… robots… Mocha’s having fun… a… what’s this?…” An aura was coming directly to her, leaping with its foot aimed.

Aisa gasped and swerved her saucer aside, avoiding Dennis and hitting the wall before she fell to the floor. “I was hoping for someone more worth my time… not a couple of little girls. Oh well… as long as I get paid.”

“I don’t have time for you!” Aisa yelled, blasting gumballs which the hunter rolled and avoided, lunged at Aisa to punch, but she dodged aside.

“Do you want us to help you?” Apis asked.

“Huff. Just fly ahead and keep looking. I’ll keep this guy busy. I’ll keep using my Mantra to look for Maddy and radio you if I find her.”

“Sigh.” Apis hated for them to be so separated like this. But since she and Aeincha might not fair well against a man of his agility, they kept onward.

Dennis whipped out throwing knives and hurled them at Aisa’s feet, but she was more nimble than he gave thought, for she gracefully dodged them, jumped and kicked off the wall, and flew foot-first at Dennis, but when the hunter grabbed her ankle, the minute Aisa shifted upside-down, she grabbed an arrow and stabbed it through his wrist. “Ooo!” He released as Aisa landed on her feet, swinging a kick up to his crotch. She smirked victoriously when he slouched and backed away. “Hmph. Wouldn’t expect that from someone with no boots. You might wanna get a load of these.” Aisa’s eyes widened when big, steel spikes appeared from the bottom of his boots. He stomped at her, Aisa dodged back and noticed how those spikes pierced the metal floor. “You’re an angel, are you? Perfect! I’m a Fishman!” Dennis pulled off his bandanna to show his blue lips and sharp teeth. “We’re natural enemies!”

“Really? Well, now I see why me and Chimney don’t get along well. It’ll be more fun kicking your butt.” Aisa smirked. She joyously dodged about while Dennis stomped his spikes, going circles around the hunter until the floor around him was filled with holes. The floor shook, and Dennis screamed as he plummeted to the lower floor. “Hm-hm, and you’re just as dimwitted, too!” She grinned.

Sheila and Chris were blowing down numerous enemies for their Sector V friends, Hoodlums were dropping like flies, then flying away like actual flies, ‘cause they kind of are. Before long, too many Black Lums were clouding the hall, the kids unable to see through the blackness. “Darn bugs. I’ll try and clear them.” Haruka puffed a gas cloud into the air, causing numerous Lums to drop, but they didn’t stay down, and the kids had mixed thoughts about crushing them.

“Any other bright ideas?” Mason asked.

“Bwah ha ha! There is nowhere you can run, you fools!” The Black Lums scattered when twin electric whips lashed across them. “Not when LORD VORSELON makes his grand debut, for the second time!”

“Lord… Vorselon?” Dillon looked up and gasped. “HE’S the one who kidnapped Maddy and Drake!”

“Bwah ha! Our Star Train is enormous! You can spend the rest of eternity, but you will never find the Maddy child, in Car 2 on the 4th floor in the central wing!”

“Can we take a guess?” Haylee raised a hand.

“You can try, but you will FAIL!”

“I think she’s in Car 2, 4th floor, around the central wing.”

“WHAT?! You couldn’t POSSIBLY know that! Lord Vorselon will thwart you before you progress any further!” He twirled his whips, stuck the hilts against the floor, and the flimsy electric beams traveled around the floor and walls as 2-D lines, shifting at numerous 90-degree angles as they got below the group’s shoes and zapped them.

Dillon jumped away from the lines and stretched his shadow to bind the cyborg, but a quick lash of the whips scared Mario off, then Vorselon turned invisible to sneak up behind Sheila and sock the back of her head. The others bolted away and Kirie pulled Sheila along before Mason and Haruka shrouded the area in gas, leaving Chris to ignite it. They dashed down the hall tirelessly, but stopped beside a directory of the train. “We just need to cross Car 3 and climb up three more floors.” Artie observed.

Medical wing
“Nuuuhhh…” Maddy moaned weakly, lain on a somewhat-soft bed while ‘Clank’ used a gas mask to fill her with pink gas.

“If more parents knew about Sleepytime Jelly, there’d be no more late nights.” The robot said casually.

“Uu… Clank… what are you…” Ratchet moaned in his half-awake state.

“I would have thought you knew by now, Ratchet.”

“No… you’re… Klunk? But I thought I destroyed you.”

“I was rebuilt by Dr. Nefarious.” Klunk’s eyes turned red. “The beauty of being a robot is extended life. You should try it sometime.”

“Whaddid you do with Clank?…” Ratchet tried to sound angry.

“He is someplace where you will never find him. Not that you will have the chance. We need to keep Madeline alive, but Dr. Nefarious has not specified orders for the rest of you. Although a few hostages will come in handy, before you make the jump to slaves for our new empire. You’ll feel more lightheaded after some sleep, Ratchet.”

“WAAAAAH!” A storm of Planktonbots and Rocket Agents scampered across the room. “Help us! She’s on a rampage!” an agent cried.

Klunk looked at the camera monitor, seeing dozens of robots crushed by the monster at large. “Here already, are you? This should be a good test of my abilities.”

Outside, Chimney was ecstatically evading all the gunfire, maneuvering ever closer to the front of the Star Train. “This one’s on YOU, Kodama!” She pulled a lever, the roof of a back car opened to unleash a swarm of fireworks. They flew in a circle around Nefarious’s giant head, lighting with sparks as they seemed to be burning through the exterior. Chimney flew directly in front of the train’s eyes and blew the train’s horn loudly. “HEY, Mr. Orokana Robotto. YOU STINK!!” She barrel-rolled her train against the massive window and flew away.

“Sir, you must remember your oil pressure.” Lawrence informed calmly. “You would not want to enter All My Circuits when you’re about to meet your enemies.”

“Yes… you’re right, Lawrence. I’LL GET YOU IN TIME, you brat! YOU HEAR MEEEEEEEEE? Sigh. Alright, let’s go.” Nefarious calmly walked away.

Chimney grinned proudly after her little move, but it seemed the fireworks burned out before burning through the head in time. Regardless, she kept her smile, looking at her wristwatch when Dillon sent a call. “Hey, we just learned Maddy is in the 2nd car. Think you can fly by and make ready for our escape? If you can’t do it yourself, we’ll tell you when we’re about to blow a hole open.”

“I might ‘ave enough juice in this baby. That is, if I ain’t exhausted thrashin’ this guy. UNLIKELY!” Chimney stomped the gas and boosted around the Star Train’s head, flying the opposite direction alongside it.

Apis had just received the call on her own watch, with Aeincha looking over her shoulder. “Second “Not-a so FAST!” sang Space Mama’s opera voice, swinging her bazooka to knock Apis’s saucer out of the air. “Meester Dark DEMANDS you all captured, so IIII weel cap-ture theeee.”

April and Mary were skiing up the hall on Mama’s left. “GO, Mary!” April threw her cousin by the arm. Mary flew at Space Mama, palette knife outstretched, and sliced her helmeted head clear off her body.

“AAAH!” Apis and Aein screeched. “You actually cut her!”

“No she didn’t.” April pointed. “Look.”

For those who don’t remember, Space Mama’s hands, shoes, and head were separate from her body. The head spun in midair as it returned. “You an-noyeeng lit-tle girl, how DARE you at-tack meeeeee. Time to make you pay, yes, time to make you bleeeeed!” Before she could blast her gun at Mary, Gonbe leapt up with Aeincha riding him and bit Mama’s hand. She shook him off and redirected to shoot the rabbit, but forcibly whipped around toward a red mark on the wall and shot it. “Vhat?”

“Have fun with that.” April smiled and painted numerous red spots on the walls before hurrying forward with her friends. The disembodied actress shot every mark in her attempt to shoot the kids. “Leetle brrrats, come BACK heeeere!”

The W7 kids found an elevator and rode it to the 4th floor, checking a nearby directory to confirm their selves close to the bridge to the 3rd car. Planktonbots were rolling up, so April drenched Mary’s palette knife with pink paint so she could spread it against the robots and make them feel weak and depressed. The girls kept running and eventually crossed to the 3rd car. Pipo Monkeys excitedly hopped at them and blasted laser guns, which Apis countered by drawing a M.U.S.K.E.T. and shooting their helmets. “I wish I could do more. These monkeys aren’t easy to control with those helmets on.”

“I could, but it’s dangerous. Chimney could handle it, but you never…”

“Just give it to me and see what happens.” Apis said rushedly. Shrugging, April dipped her brush in blue paint and created a mark on Apis. The Christian felt a powerful burst of energy. “Oh-ho, THAT’S what Ah’m talkin’ about!” Moving much faster and stronger, she zipped around and punched all the apes unconscious, and when Protomantises started marching down, guns blazing, Apis was able to yank the weapons off their bodies and bash their domes in with them. “Come on, fellas, let’s go!” She was excited to move forward with this pent-up energy.

Sector V was rushing up many flights of stairs that shifted back-and-forth for each floor, no different than the ones at school, but at least they didn’t need to carry backpacks. “Go, Typhlosion!” “Magmortar!” Rocket Agents sent their Pokémon to blast powerful bright flames around the whole hall, but Chris sucked up a portion like a vacuum and coughed Fire Bullets against the creatures. “Noivern, use Dragon Pulse!” Another agent summoned the Dragon-type, who charged a green energy ball and fired. Chris charged a Combustion Beam and destroyed the sphere halfway, but Noivern flew through the smoke and slashed Chris across the face with Dragon Claw. “Gah!”
A swarm of locusts were suddenly clouding around Noivern, released from Artie’s mechanical backpack. “Kinda remembered this when those things were swarming us earlier.” he mentioned. Sheila punched Light Fists to knock agents down one at a time so the crew could proceed. They heard another pattering of footsteps to their right, and were joined by Sector W7. “Glad you could make it.” Mason said.

Their wristwatches rang as Aisa appeared to be calling them. “Guys, are you sure they’re really in Car 2? Because whoever told you that might’ve been trying to trick you.”

Down in her quarters, Aisa was about to cross to Car 3. “I’m sensing Mocha a few hallways down, and she’s in a battle with something that’s with four other presences.”

Chinking sounds were heard behind her, Aisa turned to see two patches of steel spikes charging at her along the floor; Dennis was running across the ceiling in the lower room. “I think Maddy and the others are in there!” she yelled. “You might be walking into a-”

“AAAAHH!” Dennis burst up from the floor and flew his fist at Aisa, who evaded, grabbed the Conache Pumpkin from her satchel, and swung it against Dennis into the wall.

Sectors V and W7 ran past slide-open doors. “Aisa, what’s-” Chris responded, the group half-focused on their path. They heard the doors close forcefully behind them, and Sleepytime Planktonbots guarded it. (End song.)

“So we meet at last, do we?” The friends faced ahead. Spotlights lit up a stage, and five figures appeared. Some of them were familiar.

“So we meet at last, do we?” The friends faced ahead. Spotlights lit up a stage, and five figures appeared. Some of them were familiar.

“Prepare for trouble, you annoying worms.” Giovanni smirked.

“Make it multiple like thousands of germs.” Specter followed.

“To protect the universe from ultimate doom.”

“Giovanni.” “Specter.” “Mr. Dark.” “Plankton!” “Doctor NEFARIOUS!”

“Surrender now, or be destroyed by our might.” followed Nefarious.

XANA appeared on a screen, then zapped onstage with his teammates in a second. “That’s ri—ght!” He glitched.
“XANA?!” Chris and Dillon exclaimed.

“Whodat?” (“Gyom-gyom?”) W7 asked.

“I must be honest, I thought the ‘motto’ wouldn’t sell us very well, but hearing it roll off the tongue was very nice.” Specter said.

“I still don’t get why I only got the last part.” XANA replied grumpily.

“Well, you have been hooked on the computer most of the time.” Dark informed.

“And you haven’t been dreaming?”

“So you’re Dr. Nefarious?” Chris asked.

“And Mistuh Dark!” Sheila balled her fists. “’e attacked me an’ Fybi with a genie monster!”

“Yes, and I was courteous enough to let you roam the Dream World in search of the Lights.” Mr. Dark said. “How dare you repay my kindness by attacking my soldiers. Keeping bases organized isn’t easy, you know.”

“We should let you guys know,” Plankton whispered, “Mr. Dark’s a little grumpy since he’s the only non-scientist.”

“For the last time,” Dark glared, “I don’t need science when I have sorcery.”

“Show me your PhD in magic and we’ll be square.”

“I wanna play with the monkey!” Mary yelled, tugging on Specter.

No, I do! Kirie refuted, tugging his other arm.

“I, said, STOP!” He stretched a psychic bubble and blew them off. He fixed the collar while Giovanni spoke.

“By this point, you children have likely caught on to our actions by now. Our armies are conquering the Earth as we speak. Our goal is the same as yours, however: to find the Seven Lights and Thirteen Darknesses to enter the New World.”

“But as this universe is seeing its last days, we felt it natural to make the best of things.” Specter followed. “My goal is to dominate the Earth with apes. Nefarious wishes to rule with robots. Of course, ruling together will no doubt cause conflict, which is why we’ve made a pact: when the Keys are gathered, and the Gate is open, each of us will have a fraction of the New World. A fair deal, I would say. There should be no conflict involved. And my teammates agree.”

“But there is another rule to the prophecy: who controls this universe controls the next one.” Mr. Dark continued. “That is why we of Team Gnik must conquer now, so the denizens of this universe will know their future. In dreams, seas, stars, earth, and Cyberspace, we will control all.”

“How the hell do you even know about the Apocalypse?” Harry asked.
“Thanks to a certain man.” Giovanni grinned. “A man who saved us when we were down. Gave us a means of success, through each other. Lesser Lord Ragaj Gnik.”

“Who’s that? Someone who works for the World Government?”

“HA HA HAHAAHAHAHA!” They all laughed. “How RICH that you think those pathetic humans are behind it a—ll!” XANA glitched. “Quite contrarily, we are against them, too.”

“Our goal is to find the Twenty Keys.” Nefarious recapped. “We know who they are. You know nothing! But if you cooperate with us, things can go much smoother. We will reveal the Lights to you and help you awaken them, so we can open the New World, save everyone from the Apocalypse, together!”

“Wait- you said you would reveal the Lights to us, but what about the Darknesses?” Apis inquired.

“Ah- yes, about that!” Nefarious spoke knowledgeably. “Y’see, we… have no idea who those are. Ragaj never told us. Zilch, not a clue.”

“But that’s besides the point.” Plankton spoke up. “We see how well you work together, and well, I didn’t like these guys at first, but given a few months, they’re okay! So I’m sure we’d make such an unbeatable team, moral differences notwithstanding, and we’re kinda stronger than you anyway, so whaddya say we forget this whole battle and work together? Like they teach kids nowadays, about the power of teamwork.”

“Valid.” Haru agreed. “But we have better things to do than be friends with a… germ, a computer nerd, a pair of clothes, an albino monkey, a guy with rectangle eyes, and a life-size toy radio machine.” She pointed each respective member out, Nefarious last.

“LIFE-SIZE TOY RADIO MACHINE?!” The robot’s circuits sparked. “If I haven’t heard a misconception greater than that one before today, I’LL DISLOCATE MY HEAD AND USE IT TO BAKE—” His circuits overloaded, and All My Circuits was on.

“Oh, I’m just too confused, Boxy. How can you go on, knowing no matter what happens, robotic chickenpox will prevent you from adopting a puppy. Oh, why must we be plagued with such misfortunes. Can you ANSWER that, Boxy, despite your trillions of Gold Bolts and triple-size robo-Amazonians? I…”

Lawrence came out and lightly knocked his master’s head. He put on a baseball cap, pulled out a bat, posed like he were about to swing, eye on the head, and… he fixed a loose bolt with a screw, and Nefarious was back to normal. “Thank you, Lawrence. Enjoy your baseball game.”

“I will indubitably, Sir.” The butler rolled away.

“Back to business… Of the lot of you, Sheila is the most crucial to our plan.” Mr. Dark said. “So we will be taking her. I’ll also be taking—”

“Yeh yeh, lemme ask something first.” Sheila rose her hand. “So Maddy and ‘er blokes are in the 3rd car, not this one?”

“Just makin’ sure.” Sheila lit her tail gold and spun two beams at the Sleepytime robots, then Chris blew the door open with combustion. “AFTER THEM!” Nefarious cried, the Team Gnik members chasing.
Aeincha rode Gonbe like a giant wild bull through the smoke, “Nyaaaa!” but soon after they were through, Persian was after them. He swiped his claw at the rabbit, who dodged aside while Aeincha through her grappling hook at his eye, the cat flinching and swiping his paw against the rope, flying Aeincha off of Gonbe’s back. She nimbly dodged Persian’s pouncing paws and snapping teeth, but soon found herself pinned. His fangs came at the tiny’s head, but Gonbe leapt and sank his teeth in the cat’s tail. Persian screeched and whirled in circles to shake the bunny off, but Aeincha had thrown her hook into his mouth so his rapid turning would yank the tiny into the air until she swung onto Persian’s head.

“Bad kitty, down kitty!” Aeincha lied along his nose and tugged Persian’s whiskers on either end. Strangely, the Pokémon settled down and became far more docile. “That’s it, good boy. To the third car, let’s go!” She tugged his whiskers toward the bridge as Persian obediently dashed that way.

“No! Come back, you stupid-!” Giovanni tried to chase and shoot the Return laser from his Pokéball. The operatives had crossed the bridge as Team Gnik chased them—“GAAAAAAAH!” A string of huge blades sliced across the ceiling, hitting Nefarious and pushing him outside.

“How is THAT for teamwork, tonchikis?” Chimney exclaimed, having just sliced the roof of the bridge with blades on the bottom of her train. “Thanks for the heads-up, April, you all make it okay? Mary, too?”

“Yes, we’re just fine!” her teammate responded.

Nefarious flew up before her windshield using jetshoes. “You’re not leaving ‘til I get 10,000 Bolts in repairs!”

Plankton bounced over to Mr. Dark and spoke, “Just so ya know, Mr. Dark, it’s ready whenever you wanna use it.” He smirked evilly.

“Yes… I think we should do that now. Come along, Sheldon.” He held his hand open for Plankton to jump on, then Mr. Dark spun into a vortex with his Protoon.

Mocha flew backward and shook the room, rolling aside before Klunk lunged with his fist. The once-tiny robot had transformed into a super-strong fighting machine that was twice Mocha’s size. “You might be larger, but your body is still flesh.” Klunk said. “When bone hits metal, one is sure to break.”

“I know that. Which one, though?” Mocha got up and threw her fist, Klunk caught it in his larger palm and swung Mocha against the wall, the giant collapsing on the floor. She thrust her hands against his hip as she stood and shoved with all her might, Klunk’s feet scraping against the floor until she shoved him out of the door. Mocha hurried over to Maddy and poked her with her finger. “Maddy? Maddy, wake up.” She spoke softly.

“I have given her 2 gallons of Sleepytime Jelly gas, ensuring she has sweet dreams.” Klunk returned. “Many have fallen to their intoxicating lure, and not many have awakened. If you have any means of ‘shocking’ her out of such a state, feel free to try.”
“WHOOOA!” Yellow Monkey suddenly rolled into the room and knocked the robot down. “Oopsie! Sorry, Dearie.” The overweight ape was lain on his front over Klunk. “I got a little ditsy and got beat by that missy.”

“Yes, and I’m proud to finish you in this pose.” Aurora flew above them and released twin beams of ice to freeze both giants. She landed on the ice cube and slid to the floor, reverting out of her Ice Fury. “Okay, now I regret it. You alright, Mocha?”

“I’m fine.” Mocha smiled, ignoring her own bruises and bloody nose. “We need to wake Maddy up soon. But she’s out cold.”

Aurora spoke to her wristwatch, “Chris, are you guys coming? Maddy and the others are safe, but we can’t wake her up.”

“The robot said we could wake her up with a shock, but I don’t know anything that could…” Mocha spoke regretfully.

“Hmm… I know this sounds crazy, but… it just might work.” Chris responded.

“If you’re sure, then go ahead and try it. What is it?”

Three minutes later, they arrived. Aurora and Mocha stood aside and watched him approach the girl on the bed. Like Sleeping Beauty… Maddy was so pretty in slumber. Only one thing could wake her. He was on his way to fulfill this task. He stood over Maddy and bent his head down. Their lips made contact, a deep, warmhearted kiss… Maddy’s blue eyes opened.

The gray eyes of Mason Dimalanta stared longingly into them. Maddy never socked anyone harder in the face, and Mason’s speed flying into the wall was unusually fast. “PFFFFFA HA HAAAAA!” Dillon cracked up. “Oh man, I can’t believe you did it!! Way to go, Bro!”

“Pluck!” Maddy spit several times and wiped her tongue. “Dillon? Mason? What’re you guys up to?”

“Dillon offered Mason 20 bucks to test if metahumanism was contagious.” Chris chuckled. “Now we just need to wait and see if he gets it. …You okay?”

“Y-Yeah… where’s-”

“WAKE UP!” Mocha screamed, smashing Drake with the heel of her foot as the boy wheezed awake. Kirie tickled Ratchet’s nose so the Lombax sneezed awake.

“Well, we worked that problem out.” Artie said. “What’s wrong with him?” He lightly tapped the Zach statue, which fell over.

Outside, Chimney was still having a blast in her R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N., expertly evading all enemy aircraft and tricking them into crashing each other. Every little move that humiliated this giganto-size train made her even more happy, because it proved even further that her train was the big gahuna. “I no know what that is exactly, but it’s time for this Rocket-san to go! Time to show this big-so my ultimate technique. Get ready for LIGHTSPEED JETSTREAM ATAAAAAACK!” She uncovered a hidden, giant red button that she pressed excitedly. Jet wings appeared on all sides of each car of the train, the craft glowing blue and zipping miles into the stars. The R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. was returning, ready to puncture the center of Car 2 with extracted blades on the front.

Mr. Dark and Plankton appeared in a room of Car 2 as the latter hopped up to the cockpit of a giant ray gun (about the average size of a normal person). Plankton typed on a terminal and locked onto the incoming train. “Target sighted, all we need is the power source. Would you do the honors?”

“This should be enough juice to take Bigmouth down a few pegs. Listen, Darky, since we’re friends now, I uh… I wanna tell you something, and I don’t know who else to turn to. …I think XANA is seeing my W.I.F.E. behind my back.” Plankton spoke sadly.

“Now Plankton, you shouldn’t go thinking that your wife, a computer, gets a little lonely because you’re a microorganism and XANA’s another computer she can relate to.”

“But I don’t know how to confront them about this, and it’ll feel really awkward working with him…”

“XANA doesn’t even work with us much, he’s always in Cyberspace – look, can we just focus on this?”

“Rocket-san’s pumped and prime, ready to BLOW this baby a new one!” Chimney exclaimed with an almost psychotic grin. “Engines more than charged, commencing contact – warning, countdown may be shorter than implied – in:”

“THREE…” Chimney and Plankton’s eyes locked tight. “TWO…” Plankton’s ray gun brimmed, Chimney’s train was like a blue sun. “ONE…”

The R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. was a split-second away from piercing the Star Train, but the green light of Plankton’s device swallowed it. “What the—” Before she knew it, Chimney fell to an extreme decrease in speed. “AAAAAAAAAHHHH!” She crashed into the side of the train, her own train bouncing as rampantly as a toy down stairs.

“She didn’t get shot down, did she?” Aeincha asked, still on Persian’s head.

“Knowing her, she could’ve crashed herself.”

“Sorry about your pitiful friend.” Giovanni remarked. “Perhaps you would’ve been better off on our side. Golem, use Tackle Attack!” He tossed his Pokéball open.

Apis used telepathy, Golem, are you weak against ice?

Yes.
“Mary, your blue crayon!”

“Okay!” Mary rushed over and drew light-blue on Golem’s face. The Pokémon curled up and shuddered in place.

“Ahh!” Giovanni was caught in Dillon’s Shadow Possession from behind. The other operatives were with him.

“Guys, where did Chimney go?”

Before any of the members could respond, Aisa called their communicators. “Guys, I’m sensing Chimney in Car 4, lower floor. You better come quick.”

Sector V nodded W7 to do so, so the friends ran off. “NYAAAAH!” XANA appeared behind Dillon from thin light, the shadowbender dodging his dual blades. Chris and Mason shot fire and gas, but XANA warped and caused both powers to explode and blow everybody back. “Hahahahahaha!” XANA spun to a halt. “Didn’t expect ME to come back, huh?”

Dillon glared. “XANA, I thought we destroyed you back in Cyberspace. Why are you alive?”

“The power of desire goes a long way, boy. I don’t very much enjoy it, being in this human wor—ld. I’m not the only one. Vanellope hates it, too.”

“Come back!” Dillon furiously chased.

“You must forgive XANA’s childishness.” Specter floated into view with Dr. Nefarious. “He is only 7 months old. Thank Nefarious’s technical knowledge in repairing his software.”

“Oh, you flatter me too much.” Nefarious flushed. “Anyway… BACK TO THE BED WITH YOU!” he screamed at Maddy.

“We’re in space, there is no bedtime!”

“Now tell us who the other Lights are!” Chris demanded.

Nefarious loomed snarkily at him. “Is there an ‘Or else’?”

“Watch out!” Drake grabbed him and ducked, the others following suit when heat vision beams zipped from down the hall.

“I didn’t just take it like a wimp during my youth years. I’ve mastered Ninjutsu!” Nefarious declared. “Substitution… and now:” he formed swift hand-signals, “Shadow Clone Jutsu!” A squad of clones appeared behind and lunged at each kid, pinning them down. Chris lit with fire and dispersed his clone, then quickly punched fire at the others, but Specter lifted them with psychic.

“You can try to defeat us, but there is no means of escape. You’re trapped here. Accept—” His collar crackled. “Son of a- what’s WRONG with this-?”

Drake aimed his harpoon to pierce the base of Specter’s chair, the ape falling as his psychic hold broke. Mason burped a Gas Bomb at Nefarious, which Chris countered with a fireball to blow the robot up, his Shadow Clones vanishing. “Let’s look for the others and find a way off.”

“Nnnuuuuh…” Chimney was knocked unconscious after that sudden and bumpy ride. She was still on the R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N., but the atmosphere beyond the windshield wasn’t space, it looked like… mountain-size crates in a vast, metal plain. The ground outside suddenly shook, Chimney panicked and thought she was under attack, then a tremendous green shoe stomped before the windshield. She almost fell off her seat when the ship shook, for some force was raising it upward. A great blue eye was peering into her window, blinking. Chimney didn’t need long to process what happened, but she was afraid, more afraid than she’d ever been about anything:

Mary Goldenweek was holding the shrunken train and staring at the tiny driver. “Chimney?”

“NAAAAAAAAAAAAHHHHHH!” The other W7 members came shortly after – even from their relative distance, Chimney had the loudest scream imaginable. “NOOOOO! PUT ME DOWN, PUT ME DOWN, ON’NANOKOS, SAVE MEEEEEEE!”

“She shrunk again.” Apis said with disbelief.

“Poor Chimney.” Aisa sighed.

“Good thing Aisa has good Observation.” Mocha noted.

“Oooooo! Chimney’s train got small!” Mary beamed, observing it from every angle. “She’s small, too! I wonder if she’ll fit in my train set back home?”

“NOOOOOOO! I’d rather die before my baby becomes one of your toys!! Aisa, make me big before I kill myself!!”

“You have some anger issues to work out.” Aisa said, lightly taking Chimney out of the window and holding a red apple beside her—Chimney jumped onto the magic fruit and munch-munch-munched right away. “Why am I still tiny?! WHYYYYY!!”

“Oh, is that Skypian Apples? That won’t work.” Everyone looked above when Mr. Dark appeared, holding the Protoon to his cloak while Plankton stood on his hat.

“I used Mr. Dark’s Protoon as the power source for my shrink ray!” Plankton proclaimed. “He was so nice to let me borrow it.”

“Indeed, our one weakness was that we squabbled too much. We at Team Gnik must learn collaboration if our plans are to have succession. So from now on, you may borrow my troops, Sheldon.”

“At any rate,” Mr. Dark continued with resent, “my Protoon’s magic is powerful beyond your knowledge, so your toy train won’t be flying you anywhere anytime soon. Enjoy your stay on Team Gnik Express-”
“HYAAAH!” Mocha leaped up and punched the cloak man into the wall, Plankton with him, and shook the floor upon landing. Mr. Dark fell, looking up with fright as Mocha flew toward him with an Armament punch. He whipped his Protoon upward and projected a pink shield, the impact of Mocha’s punch creating a powerful collision that made the whole train car rumble. The shield broke after seconds, surprising Mr. Dark, but Plankton leaped up, puffed, and grew to Mocha’s size with a burly muscular body – save for his tiny head, and sent the girl flying with a punch.

“I had second thoughts about Specter’s Vita-Z Bananas at first, but they were SCRUMPTIOUS!” Plankton proclaimed, flexing his muscles. “Next time I visit the tavern, I’m telling those thugs HAVE SOME OF THIS!”

Mocha ran at Plankton and locked arms, shoving with almost equal strength. “Wh-Whoooa!” Mocha lost balance when Plankton shrunk back to normal, smashing facefirst into some crates. Mr. Dark caught Plankton before swirling his cape and vanishing. He appeared above Mocha, dropped Plankton, and the organism puffed to muscle-size again to crush Mocha’s back.

“HNNN!” A large crate burst down by the might of Dennis’s spiked boots. Space Mama gracefully landed beside him, dancing on her toes.

“UGH, will you PLEASE shut up!” Dennis demanded.

“Oh-ho, of course!” Space Mama jumped to the center of the girls, spun, and hit them away with her bazooka. Aisa gasped and rolled away before Dennis stomped, Gonbe jumped to bite his ear and Apis grabbed him around the neck, the hunter grabbed and threw both against the floor. The three hurriedly got up and ran when he threw knives, the hunter giving chase around the giant crates. Mocha was thrown into another stack, catching Plankton’s fists in her palms and pouring every ounce of strength to hold him back. Aeincha ran up the giantess’s arm, up Plankton’s arm, and began punching the organism’s little head. “Hey-hey! Get offa me! My muscles! They’re too… big to reach!” Indeed, his arms couldn’t flex enough to reach his own head.

“UUUUU-YAH!” Mocha gutted him with an Armament fist and sent Plankton across the room, leaping for a follow-up beatdown.

Space Mama flew above April and Mary and separated both girls by shooting the floor between them. They flew separate ways, but the actress focused her attacks on April, who jumped several paces backward while slashing pink paint at the woman.

Mr. Dark materialized above Mary, yellow eyes glaring. “Finally, you’re alone. I’ve been eager to meet you.”

Mary gritted her teeth and lunged at him with her palette knife, but Mr. Dark shot purple lightning from his Protoon and blew her backward. “You can drop the act around me. We both know what you really are.”

“Wh-What’re you talking about?” Mary asked.

“I have an acquaintance in the Dream World, you see. You’d be amazed how many people suffer… seek desire and redemption through means of slumber. You’re… hur hur hur. A very interesting specimen. So I shall be taking you-”

“ZORA JUJUTSU!” A swift, sudden, bullet-size blur zipped every direction across Mr. Dark’s vision, until it shot right between his eyes.

“No! Ugh! Uuuuuurr!” Chimney squeezed herself between his eyes, and Mary watched as they both rolled out, his clothes drifting to the floor. The Protoon clinked and bounced across the floor. Chimney crawled out of the cloak and scampered over to Mary.

“For the record, I only saved you for April’s sake, but I for one find you annoying. Now take me to on’nanokos AND BE CAREFUL WITH MY TRAAAIIIN!”

In Car 3, Dillon chased XANA and blasted a G.U.M.Z.O.O.K.A., but the Program became pixels and glitched behind, kicking Dill in the back of the head. “Hahahahaha! Surprised? After you ‘destroyed’ me with your H.E.A.D.S.E.T., I was able to absorb Vanellope’s glitching prowess through it! I detest them strongly—y, but they make do.”

Dillon recovered and glared spitefully, “Where’s Vanellope?! What do you mean she hated this world?”

“I mean that she no longer desires you and your miserable group. She was suffering in this world, dying. She didn’t belong. I helped her find solace after the Zoni returned her to my world, and now she is working with me. We are BOTH working under Lord Gnik’s instruction, controlling the world of Cyberspace. Face it, boy. You may have thought you had a sister with Vanellope, but you were less than just non-blood. You were never one in the same.”

“You’re lying!” Dillon yelled passionately. “Vanellope loved our world! She loved being able to see it, and loved hanging out with us. And wherever she is… I’m sure she would come back to us if she could!”

“You’re still the same as you were on our first meeting: gullible to strangers, gullible to yourself. You’re the one who’s lying, denying that Vanellope was dying in this world, denying her the aid she needed. Tell me, boy, why would she want a brother like you? A brother who refused to cure her illness? What sliver of evidence have you to show me she still cares about you?!”

“Becauuuuuuue… I do?” They both faced a nearby monitor—Dillon’s eyes fell so wide, they would burn from its staticky image.

“V…Vanellope.”

“Geez, Dillon, did someone carve your eyelids out? You’re such a dweeb!” Vanellope said with her adorable, candy-girl voice.

“Vanellope!” Dillon reached up and touched both hands on the screen. “Y-You’re here! Where are you?!”

“Look, I can’t tell you everything and I don’t have much time. I don’t exactly know what’s going on myself, but the Zoni had a message to send you and Maddy. They said you had to return to Earth, but Maddy needs to stay here, and find someone called… the Disbanded? They’re never really clear about things, like apparently there’s two of those Shimmer things, one of them is...—” Static.

“Vanellope!”

She appeared once more. “Dillon, I’m on the Bridge to the New World. Yeah, I know it sounds weird, but the Zoni said you’ll be coming this way soon. So... we’ll meet again. Count on it. See ya later, Dillon. Stay sweet!” The screen went off.

“Dillon, you okay? We have to find W7 and escape.” Aurora said.

They scurried back to the first floor and regrouped with Sector W7. “Where are those guys, did you lose ‘em?” Aisa asked.

Maddy sweatdropped. “I don’t like her!”

“You expect us to ride in that?” Artie asked.

“I DON’T WANT ANY OF YOU FATHEADS IN MY BABY!!” Chimney cried.

“We’ll need to steal some of their ships or something if we wanna get outta here!” Haruka yelled.

“There’s not enough for all of us, and we need to find a ship for Mocha.” Haylee mentioned.

Protomantises, monkeys with guns, Planktonbot Chucks, and Hecklers surrounded them. Dennis, Space Mama, and Vorselon smirked at their victory. The friends were too tired, their only means of escape was disabled, they were completely surrounded… if there was ever a time for a miracle, it would be now. “…Apis, what’re you doing?” Chimney squeaked.

The Christian child was on her knees with hands folded. “Praying to God for a miracle.”

“Apis, if there was ever a time to stop being stupid, IT WOULD BE NOW!”

I’ll. . save. . you. . I’m. . com. .ing. .

Apis’s eyes widened. “Guys! Did you hear that?”

“I swear to God, if you say ‘The Lord spoke to me.’”

I’ll. . save. . you. . Get ready. . to jump. .

The voice was distant, majestic, otherworldly… Apis, for a moment, believed God was speaking to her… His voice was right inside her head… just like… her Animal Telepathy.

The train shook furiously at that moment. The right side of the hallway was steadily detaching from the rest. That whole chunk of the train popped off, in the mouth of—it was a weird sight for them, too—a tremendous space-whale.
“WHAT- THE- beep.” Nefarious’s censor program beeped. He and his allies were aghast at the creature.

The great white whale spat the chunk of Star Train away and flew forward with his open mouth looming. It crashed against the side of the train, the kids frantic to keep their balance as it tilted. “Guys! I think he wants us to jump in!” Apis yelled.

“I’M NOT GONNA BE KRILL!” Chimney screamed.

“I must’ve summoned him with my power—he shouldn’t harm us! Come on, let’s just go for it!” Without waiting another second, the Catholic fearlessly jumped onto its tongue. With questionable looks, all the operatives and Ratchet dropped onto the squishy floor. The great whale, Mobius Dick, sounded its cry to the stars and flew away, unleashing a spout of energy from its hole and vanishing into space.

“Grrrrrr DAMMIT! Shitty cock-beep son of a BITCH!” Nefarious stomped. “Why is it that, just when EVERYTHING goes my way, some giant beep-ing space-whale comes and TAKES MY PRISONERS?!”

Lawrence casually swept the floor of the ruined train. “I should’ve paid extra for the censor options.” He resumed sweeping.

I really didn’t expect to stretch this chapter that long. :P I wanted to include the next Fybi scene, but I guess I’ll save for next time. So after a long, hard-knock battle like that, let’s dedicate the next chapter to some downtime. :P Happy 4th of July.
False Gibberish

Chapter Summary

The Kids Next Door try to find a way to get back home.

Like I said, cool-down chapter.

Chapter 25: False Gibberish

Mobius Dick

The band of operatives were impressed, to say the least. The inside of an interdimensional space-whale was certainly not what they expected. “…Nice place.” Haylee said. Apparently, the whale had eaten its share of spaceships in its time, and kept several of the parts inside to serve as living quarters. One of the ships had a kitchen with some food still in the fridge – alien food, true, but any provisions were good right now. A few bedrooms were around, not enough for all of them, and a living room for space-TV.

“No telling how old all of this stuff is.” Artie observed. “Everything looks intact, so I can only surmise Time is at a stalemate within this creature.”

“So we’ll never grow up in here?” April asked.

“Possibly. Unless all of this stuff was recently acquired.”

“Then how do you know he ain’t tryin’ to eat us?” Harry asked.

“I’ll ask it. HEY, MR. WHAAAALLLE.” Apis yelled. “ARE WE YOUR DINNER?”

Nooooo…

“See, we’re just fine!” she grinned. The others questioned her judgment.

Drake walked to one of the beds, slipped off his shoes, and lied down. “‘Long as I finally get to snooze, I’m fine with it.”

“Weren’t you just unconscious?” Mocha asked.

“Cruckers, we might be the youngest tykes in centuries to explore the belly of a space-whale.” Sheila said with amazement. “We’d be right down in the head to pass up this experience. I’M first to ride the blowhole!” She marched forth.

“At least we have a chance to rest after today’s events.” Chris said, brushing his headbanded forehead and looking at Maddy. “I think we all have a story to tell.”

They all spent what felt like hours resting in the giant whale. Though it was possible no time was passing at all outside. Some operatives were getting well-desired sleep, others were exploring this peculiar creature. Otherwise, they were summarizing their exciting tales up to this point, or passing the still-time with some fun.
“And that, Mary, is why whenever your close, respected friend is shrunk to a powerless size, you must treasure each moment because you may rarely have another chance.” Aisa explained with a devious grin.

“Who cares.”

“NO I AM NOT OKAY WITH IT!” While Chimney was squirming ragefully between Aisa’s toes, the Nimbi was scraping dirt out of her nails using the toy R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N.’s blades. “AISA, IF YOU DON’T QUIT CONTAMINATING MY BABY NOW, I’MMA DISOWN YOU FROM MY SECTOR. I SWEAR TO ALL THAT IS HOLY, OBEY ME RIGHT NOW!”

“Oh? Mary, you have some food between your teeth.” Aisa noticed.

“I do?”

“Yeah. Here, use this side to clean it out.” She grinned witfully and passed her the train.

“Okay…” Though she didn’t feel anything, Mary scraped the toy train’s blades between her teeth. “Is it gone?”

“Did I get it, yet?”

“Yeah, you did. …Do me a favor and scratch my back, Mary-chan?” Aisa turned around.

“Okay!” Mary lightly scratched the train’s blades along Aisa’s dress.

“Ahhhh, that’s the spot. I really should wash this thing…”

“I’m going to murder you both in your sleep. Not joking.”

Chris and Maddy sat on the edge of a second-floor bedroom within a chunk of a ship. After both of them told their stories, Chris finally revealed the birthmark under his headband, and his reasons for hiding it. “So you had that power… all along?” Maddy asked.

“Yes, but like I said, it’s dangerous. If I get hit in the forehead, that’s the end. Keeping a chi-block over it keeps it safe. …To put it frank, I’m a freak among firebenders.”

“Maybe, but doesn’t that still kinda… go against everything you’ve been trying to tell me?”

Chris sighed in annoyance. “Fine, you got me. People shouldn’t be ashamed of their traits or ‘deformities’, but if you have something that’s legitimately dangerous, it is a good idea to hide it until people warm up to you. But that factor wouldn’t have supported my argument to you regardless, that’s why I kept it a secret.”

“Well, I… can’t argue with that. I gotta be honest, I’m glad you don’t show it around often. I never woulda spoken to you, ‘lot of people wouldn’t. So did your friends know?”

“Does that mean you aren’t warmed up to them?”

“Of course I’m warmed up to them, but if they knew I had a Combustion Eye, they’d keep pester- ing me to use it. And I didn’t wanna have ta keep relying on it ‘cause it’s dangerous.”

“So why now?”

“Because Cheren says we should pull all our strengths together, so I reckon it’s time to let it loose.”

“Oh. Still… you—”

“—would look weird walking around with an eyeball on my head.”

“Yes.”

“I’ll still wear the headband, take it off when it’s time for use. I never used it much at all, so I’ll be pretty rusty.”

“Maybe I can help you train with it.”

“Come on, if you can teach me to fight small-size, I can help you use a laser eye. Let’s find someplace after we get off this whale and try it.”

“Well… okay. I’m just afraid of it going faulty.”

“If anything, we’ll make it an emergency attack. You’re a good-enough firebender as it is. So, did your parents know about it?”

“I was born with it, so yeah. All the doctors know, Melody found out, George—I mean…”

“Who’s George?”

“George King, from Sector IC. He, uh… kinda found out during Arctic Training. Heh, kinda just remembered, I made George make an ‘Unbreakable Vow’ to save you. We sent his team to find you in the first place.”

“I didn’t think the two of you were so close. Whaddyou have to bond over?”

“Well, after he promised to keep this a secret, we sort of hit it off, we’re kinda like pen-pals. …So, um… what’s with Zach, exactly?” He gestured at the blank-faced statue by the bed.

“We just sorta found him that way. If he’s just in one of his phases, he’s really overdoing it. Sigh… but at least you all finally showed up. Hopefully, we can go back to Earth.”

“Y-Yeah, but… remember what Dillon said?”

“About what?”

Apis was sitting on the tongue of the whale, smiling brightly as she exchanged pleasant conversation. “So Mr. Whale, what do you eat?”

_Quantum energy. . . galaxy dust. . . and space-krill._
“Are you the only one of your kind?”

There are millions. . . or perhaps I’m the only one across timelines. . . I never stopped to ask.

“Why did you come to save us?”

I heard you ask. . .

“Do you mean that God heard my prayer and He told you?”

I was passing this plane of existence at the time of your prayer. . .

“Hmhm! I’ll take that as a ‘yes.’”

Aeincha hurried over beside Apis and sat down. “Boy, I never knew anyone get chummy with something that could swallow them whole. Except for me and Chimney! Heehee!”

“It’s definitely not something you see everyday. But I guess the space-whale is only one of God’s magnificent creatures!” Apis grinned.

“Oi, Apis, if you keep preaching about God, we might ‘ave ta turn our treehouse into a church!!” Chimney shouted from afar.

Apis frumped at that statement. “Oh Aisa, you have a booger in your nose.”

“Oh! Thanks, Apis-chan!”

“NOOOOOO!” The next action went without saying.

Further down the inside of the whale, Haylee, Artie, Ratchet, Kirie, and Sheila were exploring. “Hmm, so you’re of the Lombax race, are you?” Artie asked Ratchet quizzically. “Tell me, what is the primary form of technology of your people?”

“Iiiii was dropped on another planet and abandoned as a kid, so… no idea.” Ratchet shrugged sheepishly.

“Oh. Well, what is your skill in using a 3.5 cubic meter sonic cannon powered by tetrahydro silicus and zyrinium xlexion gas?”

“Yooooou’ll have to ask Clank for that, I wouldn’t know.”

“Uh-huh. Do you naturally speak English, or is your native language a tongue so complex, everybody’s eardrums within a ten-mile radius would dysfunction before you could pronounce one letter?”

“Iiiiii don’t know?”

“…How many fingers am I holding up?”

“Artie, stop it.” Haylee said. “Sigh, don’t take it personally, Artie’s just trying to learn about alien cultures ’cause he has the hots for this alien girl.”

“Funny, I never said it was Makava.” Haylee smirked slyly.
“I’m sorry I’m not in the mood for more worthwhile conversation, but Dr. Nefarious kidnapped my friend and I have no idea where he is.” Ratchet explained. “I wanted to search that train more, but you guys came first…”

We’re sorry, Mr. Ratchet. Kirie frowned.

“I ain’t sure of what a hatchet is myself, but check THIS out!” Sheila announced. The friends made it to the end of this tunnel and overlooked a large, open cave with a huge, pink tube in the shape of an infinity symbol, energy and space-fish spiraling through at a rapid pace.

“It looks like the… whale’s colon!” Artie observed. “Its edible matter is circling for infinity! If it takes this long to process its food, it probably doesn’t need to eat for trillions of years.”

“Astonishing and gross at the same time.” Haylee remarked. “I should be able to assume it doesn’t reek of decay—SHEILA, get off of there!”

The raccoon had tail-flown onto the Mobius Colon, balancing on it. “’ey, if I was in this thing and it goes infinite, I bet I could beat the world record for longest time on a roller coaster without throwing up.”

“Sheila, get off, you don’t know what that thing will do to you! It might turn you into a baby or old lady, or stop you from aging!”

“The latter seems more likely.” Artie reminded.

“And we’d never forget you.” Haylee sweatdropped.

Returning to the mouth area of the whale, Chris, Maddy, Aurora, and Haruka had just heard Dillon’s info again. “But why would Vanellope just show up there?” Aurora asked. “How do you know XANA didn’t project that on purpose to trick us?”

“But if they wanted us to do those things, they wouldn’t have shrunken Chimney’s train to keep us there.” Dillon reasoned. “So maybe… she’s learning things, too. And those are places we have to go.”

“Did she tell you who this ‘Disbanded’ was or why I have to find him?” Maddy questioned. “I finally have a chance to go back home, I don’t wanna stay in this dump.”

“I wish you didn’t have to stay either, but… we don’t have enough info to argue otherwise, and since the Apocalypse is coming…” Chris didn’t finish.

“So why do I have to come back.” Dillon thought aloud, looking away. “Can’t think of any reason I’d be special.”

“Maybe it’s something to do with Midna.” Haruka implied. “If your mom is her Guardian, wouldn’t that mean you inherit her?”

“I don’t remember that being in the Firstborn Prophecy.”

“Except the Firstborn Prophecy talked about ‘Eight’ Firstborn, as we saw with Sugar, that isn’t the case.” Chris reminded.
“Sigh, then I guess I’m not returning to Earth.” Maddy sighed with aggravation.

“Maybe you can’t, but… Dillon didn’t say anything about the rest of us. Maybe I- or, some of us could go with you… if you want.”

“You’d want to go with me?”

“Well, I-… It might be easier for you traveling with someone you’re used to… Unless you’re afraid of my head exploding.”

Maddy looked down in thought. “Hmmm… Well, if anyone, Ratchet would be taking me for most of the journey… we don’t even have a ship right now, so too many passengers would be troubling him, so maybe… we shouldn’t… I mean, that’s assuming Drake wants to come, but that’s kind of a stretch.”

“Actually, we have this whale.” Aurora noted, looking up at the mouth’s ceiling. “But we’re probably ruining his tastebuds by now.”

“Tell you what, we’ll stick by you until we can get a decent ship.” Chris said with a smile. “Then you can pick who you wanna come with.”

“Yaaawynn. Man, I didn’t wanna be up this late after that battle. Wanna make like the others and get sleep?”

In the next half-hour, the explorers had returned and chosen a resting quarters, Aisa and Mary were tired of picking on Chimney, Apis’s mouth got dry from chatting up the whale, and they all were asleep. Gonbe was on his back as Aeincha cuddled up on his soft, furry tummy, and held little Chimney to her chest. The Gilligans shared an upstairs bed, sprawled out messily, while Ratchet lied on the floor beside them, still awake as he tapped his wristwatch exhaustedly. “Come on, Aphelion… pick up.”

“Mama, I don’t complain about your late-night ramblings on the cellphone, so if I’m up late playing a videogame, don’t be…” Artie, who was on the edge of the bed, rolled off onto Ratchet. Without bothering to sit his own back up, Ratchet tried to lift and place Artie back onto the bed, but when the boy kept plopping back onto him, Ratchet kicked skyward, sent Artie flipping and flying into the air, before he plopped onto Aisa on the lower floor, whom was asleep on her front on the carpet. He settled softly on the angel as neither woke up.

April was still awake and painting a canvas, smiling. It was the inside of a great white space-whale, with broken chunks of many a captured ship, served as bedrooms, kitchens, and all of them were doing miscellaneous activities. Apis was talking to the whale in the center, Sheila, Ratchet and co. were exploring a tunnel above, Mary and Aisa were having fun with a toy train, and April herself was painting. With this beautiful image and this happy moment in mind, April lied on the floor of her shared room with Apis and Mary and drifted to slumber, using her folded jacket and hat as pillows. Now she could dream about the Art World, more beautifully than ever after knowing Symphonia exists. For if a planet could be dedicated to music, why not paintings and drawings? She would take her friends there, someday.

OOOOOooo… MOOOOOoaaan. . .
Apis woke up with a start, looking left-to-right frantically. She grabbed her hat and shoes and ran off onto the tongue. “GUYS! He’s saying he’s about to let us off!”

Smaller moans echoed as some of the kids awakened. “Wh-Whut?…” Aurora yawned.

The mouth of the whale swayed up and down furiously. “He’s saying he found a planet to drop us! Everyone, brace for impact!”

Mobius Dick was flying over a barren brown surface under a dark sky. Roughly 10 meters from the ground, he spat every one of his passengers out, covered with cosmic saliva. His wails sounded across the heavens as he soared up and vanished into a vortex. “THANK YOU, Mister Whaaaaallllll!” Apis waved.

Chris ignited himself to dry the spit, as did Aurora. “Nice of him to give us a warning. Where are we?”

“I…I recognize this place. Look!” Maddy pointed to a distant town, where the whirring of racecars roared. She, Ratchet, and Drake recognized this as Peoples α, the planet of gangs and hustlers where she so superbly bested others in a race.

The friends all journeyed to the town as the racecars and rap tune that distinguished Blipton District grew louder, and a group of cars just zipped across the track behind the grated walkway that stood over the ground. “This place smells like rusting bean cans.” April commented.

Drake, remembering his first time here and glancing at Mocha, said to her, “Hey Mocha, small favor to ask you!” She looked at him. “Uh, Maddy got in a race here the first time, and I sorta betted against her and lost all my money, and I was too afraid of the Human Resources guy to complain to ‘im, but now that you’re here, could you…”

“That’s whatcha get for being unsupportive!” Mocha said with a grin that said, ‘Not gonna help ya.’

The friends found a grated stairway leading onto the path, where many thuggish aliens were cheering for their betted racers. Though Mocha chose to stay below, not one for moving well across crowds. “I racked up a lot of money during our travels, but not enough for a ship for all of us.” Ratchet said.

“If only we could change Chimney and the train back somehow.” Aeincha said sadly, riding Gonbe’s back while holding her friend. “We could all go back home.”

“STEP right up, try your minds on the unreadable block!” They directed their attention to the sideshow alien on his platform next to a stone cube with foreign writing. He was a very skinny, blue, flimsy alien with a big nose and eyepatch, wobbly skin that made him seem like an amoeba, and wore a white sleeveless shirt with tan trousers. “While waiting for people to crash each other, test the magnitude of your brains by reading a language known by no one! You can try, you can fly, but your translators will hang themselves, want to risk your wages by saying otherwise?, well come up here and READ this unreadable block!”

Sheila’s brain sparked. “OH!! I remember! I’ looks like the one on Candied Island! The one I read with my dyslexia! What’s it called, again… Gibberish Rock!”

A text box from Murfy’s Manual read, *These rocks are called Poneglyphs, dumbo. See, this is why we gotta name these concepts the moment they’re introduced. Now we’re using the lousy fan-name, I swear this…

“Oh, that’s right!” Haylee remembered. “We think Sheila awakened herself by reading it!”

“Does that mean… these blocks have something to do with the quest?” Maddy asked.

“Let’s go up and ask what that guy knows.” Chris suggested as they approached the platform.

“I bet I can read it!” Sheila smirked.

“Actually, we’d like to know how or where you found this block.” Aurora answered. “Do you know anything about it?”

“No one knows WHERE it hails! Is it from the sky or is it from the ground? Maybe its uninterpreted text will tell us, but WHO has the brains to read it!”

Aeincha climbed off of Gonbe and snuck around the back of the block with Chimney in hand. They observed every inch of the weathered structure, until Chimney pointed at a tiny hole on the bottom. She jumped out of Aein’s arms and walked in, then the Lilliputian crawled after. It smelled of dust and it was hard to see inside the darkness, but light poked in through cracks, and she gasped after realizing.

“It’s a fake!” The others looked as Aeincha ran back around, pointing at the monument. “This Gibberish Rock has a bunch of metal supports on the inside!”

“It does?” Dillon questioned. “Why?”

“N-No, no, that’s not true!” the alien yelled defensively. “She’s only lying, this rock is purely-!”

After hearing this from the ground below, Mocha punched and destroyed a metal beam that lodged into the ground, grabbed the higher end of it and pulled, causing all sides of this stone cube to topple as the metal supports inside were yanked through the platform. “Huh?” Several nearby aliens looked onto the platform. “Someone say it’s a fake?”

“He made the Gibberish Rock himself?”

“Ye cheeky bastard! Any nimrod can draw a bunch a’ symbols and call it a language!”

“Ay’m gonna rip yer HEAD in tuh!” A gang of beefy aliens marched up the stairs.

“W-W-W-WAIT! WAIT!” The sideshow alien cowered behind the monument’s rubble. “Fine, I built that rock myself using painted metal, but it’s based on a REAL rock! I saw it, wh-when I visited this planet!”

“All OF YOU get back.” Aurora ignited with flames to make all the aliens cease. “We were here first, we’ll deal with him. Just go back to watching your race.”

“Nnnn-nnn, nuuuh…” With grouchy expressions, the aliens complied.

Dillon stepped up, “What planet did you find this rock on?”

“A planet in the Milky Way Galaxy! I may look like a thug, but I’m actually a profound explorer who needed some extra cash!” the alien explained quickly. “So I, decided to host an attraction in “What planet was it?” Chris asked.

“Earth! I-I originally went there because I was picking up strange readings. According to intergalactic news, Earth was a real hotspot… for, uh, things, so I flew there. All of a sudden, my ship malfunctioned and I ended up crashing through the atmosphere. I wound up in a forest called Gravity Falls, where this elderly human found me. I forget his name, but he owned a shop that sold all kinds of weird things, and after we got to know each other, he showed me a book. He thought since I was an alien, I might know what ‘this’ says, so he showed me a page that had this very rock. I wrote down the text to see if I could translate it later, but uh, financial issues and all, I spent awhile repairing my ship so I could head home immediately. And I never got around to deciphering it myself.”

“So you thought a bunch o’ chinheads could read it?” Sheila asked.

“No, of course not, this was all just for profit. …Would’ve been nice, though…”

“But did this man say where the stone was found?” Aurora asked.

“No. He didn’t. …He had a lot of funny-looking curios, though. Actually bought me a few of ‘em. Like this magic potion that’s said to cure most ailments.” He reached under his shirt and pulled out a tiny vial with steaming peach-colored liquid.

Aeincha gasped. “We could use that on Chimney!”

“YES! Give it to me FAST!!”

“No!” Maddy yelled. “Let’s give it to Zach!”

“WHAT? Screw him, I’M the one who’s suffering!!”

“Mocha told me you still fight well that way, Chimney, but my brother hasn’t come out of that pose since we found him, and I’m getting worried.”

“How do we know it’ll even work on him?” Aein asked.

“I don’t, but… please, let’s try? It’s more annoying to carry him than Chimney, wouldn’t you agree?”

They all looked at Zach’s stiff, heavy body and exchanged agreeing glances. “FAIR ENOUGH.” ("Gyom-gyom.") Though now Chimney had plenty more people to murder.

Maddy popped the cork off the vial as Drake and Dillon tried to force Zach’s mouth open. She poured the odd-smelling substance inside. It flowed down his stiff throat, so they awaited results to happen. “…” Zach’s face swirled up and shrunk into his flesh like a toilet. And on that blank face, a great big mouth, half-closed teary eyes, and a bigger tongue stuck out.

Apis clamped her nose and squinted her eyes. “So that means it wouldn’t’ve healed Chimney, after all. But if someone wouldn’t wake up, though…”

“Nnn. Thank you for saving my life, Maddy-san.” Chimney grunted from the stench.

They stared with disgust when Zach began scraping his tongue against the grating. Mary was happily coloring the scene on her sketchpad. “Well, uh… thanks, Mister.” Haylee said. “Listen, I know this is outta nowhere, but do you have a ship or something we could borrow? F-For all of us?”

“My ship can carry roughly five people, if I drop equipment, but all of you is asking too much.”

“Well, do you know a place we could hang out until I rack up enough Bolts to buy us a bigger ship?” Ratchet asked.

“Oh, you can stay at my laboratory! I have a private residence out in the plains, good place away from these hustlers. I never knew anyone who was so into my research before; plus, I’d like someone to protect me in case these guys are still, ahem, mad.”

“Heart of a Lion Turtle, this one.” Drake remarked as they began to make their way off the walkway.

“Heheh. I usually take the subway to the plain. I’ll persuade them you’re all on a field trip, that should lessen the cost.”

Büe’s Laboratory

In case I forgot to mention, this intrepid alien explorer’s name was Büe. As you figure out how to pronounce that, the near-two dozen kids were able to join him on an ugly subway train, that let off on a southern station. Which was kind of confusing because every direction is south on this planet. The neighborhood next-door to the station was quiet, but very unpleasant-looking. However, Professor Büe was taking them in the opposite direction, across a rugged plain where trash bags (in place of tumbleweeds) breezed around the soil. “Not many thugs come out here. Too many prairie jaguars. I scare them away with this whistle.”

“Now, just for safety’s sake, you aren’t going to betray us by trapping and handing us to a bad guy, right?” Haylee asked.

“No, of course not, that’s the easiest trick in the book! …But to be honest, I wouldn’t mind that happening. I’d feel more important.”

“Now I’m curious, is this girl half-Dancingian? I don’t know anyone else who talks with gestures.”

“I wouldn’t know, but I’m starting to get the feeling Zach is an alien.” Maddy remarked.

“Here-here.” Drake agreed. “Which reminds me, why am I still carrying him even though we have a giant?” Zach, with his big-tongued face, was riding over Drake’s shoulders, “BLUUU-HUEEEEEEHHH!” drenching the boy with saliva-falls every 5 minutes.

“I may have something to drink after we get there, but I don’t know what quenches you humans.”
They made it to a small house out in the middle of the expanse, surrounded by a decaying wooden fence and a yard with nothing prospering. A ship was parked in the garage, looked decent, but wouldn’t fit all of them, like he said. Inside the house were dozens of charts on shelves, globes of different planets, and journals full of data-recordings. Ooh- except for that one. “Nice place you have here.” Artie said. “You go to a lot of planets?”

“Yes, I’m somewhat of a cultural professor.” Büe took off the eyepatch that he used to make the aliens think he was tough. “I study the landscape and lifestyle of all kinds of planets; and also see if they have any valuables that would fetch a high price on the market. Speaking of which, the man from Earth sold me this ‘dimensional stitcher’ for 20 Gold Bolts, can you verify if that’s a reasonable price?” He showed them an ordinary stapler.

“Must be one fine-quality stitcher.” Haylee remarked.

“Can you please find something to drink for this guy?” Drake said with aggravation. Zach’s chin was starting to look like a toad.

“Y-Yes, come to my kitchen and look for something in the fridge.”

While some of them followed the professor, Maddy touched Chris’s shoulder. “Chris, since we’re out in the middle of nowhere, you want to, uh… practice that combustion beam?”

“…Well, okay.” Chris shrugged, figuring he’s got nothing better to do.

Mocha was the only other person outside for obvious reasons, but considering the size of their group, they expected others to clear out of that tiny house. Though Professor Büe might’ve mentioned having basement floors to store more valuables, so maybe not. Chris and Maddy walked a half-mile away to practice. “Okay… try firing at that boulder.”

Chris sucked through the nose quick and forced a pulse to his head, “Spark spark spark spark BOOM” destroying the pointed rock. “Okay, aim for that mountaintop.” Miles away was a mountain, small in their eyes, so narrowing his eyes, Chris inhaled and pulsed. “Spark . . . spark . . . spark . . . spark . . . boom.” The mountain tip flashed.

“Hmm…” Maddy noticed something. “It only explodes when it hits something, doesn’t it, you can’t make it stop.”

“I can try.” Chris inhaled and pulsed at open air, trying to decrease the throbbing in his head that split moment, but his sparks already flew a good distance before popping. He fired another direction, but used a noticeably weaker pulse, thus it exploded shortly. He thrusted his body forward with a half-second pulse, firecracks appearing in a zigzag line before a smaller POP. “It looks like the harder I focus, the further and more powerful it goes. I wonder how it would work in Fury Mode. If I’m not wearing the headband, I can probably go into it.”

Chris pulsed at open air, and made it explode at 10 meters. He blew forward at a more acute angle, shook his head to make it pop at roughly 8 meters. He looked directly skyward, inhaled, and puffed. The sparks flew higher, higher, higher, higher, until Chris willed an explosion, an average yellow dot in the dark sky. “Huff, my lungs hurt.”

Ratchet, Harry, Mason, Dillon, and Haylee later came out to join them. “I thought you’d be stargazing, not making fireworks.” Mason remarked.

“So how’s Zach? Is he better?” Maddy asked.

“He’s not taking anything that man has to offer.” Harry replied. “Every weird drink we give ‘im, goes BLEAH, slurp, BLEAH, slurp, BLEAH, slurp,” while making his face and tongue like Zach’s.

“Darn it. I wish he wasn’t such a picky eater. I’m starting to think he was better off as a statue.”

“Me or Haruka could probably bend the juice out of his tastebuds. Onion has to have some level of toxicity, right?” Mason wondered.

“Hahah.” Ratchet chuckled, still typing in his watch for Aphelion. “Hey Chris, wanna try shooting a star, go for that one.” He pointed at a flying white star over the mountains ahead.

Even though it might’ve been a million miles away, Chris had the natural instinct to shoot the star. He narrowed his eyes and aimed his Combustion Eye, but… the star appeared to shift direction to them, growing bigger. “Wait… that isn’t a star.” (Play “Taming Epona” from Zelda: Twilight Princess.)

Everyone else looked up curiously. The object was growing closer, they could see the blue within its whiteness. “Is that…” Ratchet looked through binoculars. “APHELION?!”

Maddy squinted her eyes, recognizing the ship. “But who’s driving it?”

Haylee looked through her goggles. “No way… it’s…”

“WOOOOOOOOO!!!” Jar Jar Blinks had no sense of; that thing that tells you where to go. His ship was zooming faster toward the ground, the team ducked seconds from impact, but Jar Jar zoomed the ship upward right away. Ratchet stood up first and looked determinedly at the craft. Aphelion turned around, giving them a side-view of Jar Jar’s head, his tongue dangling out while he aimlessly fired lasers. “WAWAWAWAWAWAWA-”

The ship barrel-rolled and swooped over them again, so seizing the chance, Ratchet blasted his Swingshot to latch it. He ran at ceaseless speed as Aphelion pulled him, then was lifted off the ground before his grappler pulled him forward. Ratchet kept tight hold, swerving about everywhere with Jar Jar’s unprecedented maneuverability, but eventually landed on the ship’s roof. “That’s MY ship, GET OUT OF IT!”

“I’M relieving you!” Ratchet dove into the seat and strangled Jar Jar for control, his sluggish eyes and froggy tongue flailed helplessly as he continued steering. From the kids’ eyes, the craft was haphazardly moving around the sky, and before long was dead-set on Büe’s house. “LET GO! NOW!”

“I NO KNOW DOSE ACTIOOOOOONS!”

“Zach, for the last time, eat the spinach or no more dessert for you.” Haruka ordered, trying to shove the substance in his toad mouth.
“BLEAH!” She was spat at.

“What is Thaat?!” Mocha screamed. All their eyes widened at the sight of the incoming ship.

“AAAAAA! I stole nothing illegally!” Büe cowered into his home.

“Grrrrrrrr!” Ratchet was more determined to pull the brake lever on his ship. When he finally did, Aphelion froze in place, and- “WOOOIIIIIEEEEEEE…” Jar Jar flew out like a rocket, clutching a bottle of milk tight. The Gungan’s face became still and blank, the group of kids growing larger in his vision, but more notably Zach Murphy. With no conscious intention of avoiding the other, Jar Jar crashed into the boy and they tumbled into the house. (End song.)

Ratchet softly landed Aphelion as the others scurried back to the house. They were actually nervous of peeking inside, so they approached the door slowly. Inside, Blinks was cradling Zach like a baby, allowing him to slurp the rest of his milky. “Dere, dere. Dash all you neeed.”

“…That’s convenient.” Maddy said.

The beginning of the “Drink Your Milk” song played, Zach and Jar Jar performed stylish, simultaneous flips, like their minds were in sync, coming toward the door. When the fanfare picked up, reaching its end, they flipped faster, then performed superb poses when they were outside, the music stopped, and ‘MILK’ appeared over them in flashing letters. “WOO-WEEEEEE!” Blinks cheered. “Where-sha you BEEN all my life?”

“No idea man, but BOY am I glad you’re here now!” Zach exclaimed.

Jar Jar began crying, the sun (which was originally not there) glinting off his tears. “I sho glad you, sniff sniff, are back to me.”

Zach’s green eyes were pretty behind his tears. “Me, too.”

“…” They shared a heartwarming hug. The feels were high in all of them right now. It was so beautiful. “-OH! !” Drake kicked Zach, and Ratchet kicked Jar Jar in the crotch.

“Now explain to me HOW you happened to come by Aphelion?” Ratchet demanded.

“Aha!” The pain left Blinks as he spoke informatively. “‘Tis quite an exciting tale. A tale of love, romas, twists and turns and strong, but subtle foreshadowing. To know the full extent of this adventure, read Jar Jar’s Shifty Shenanigans in Seven Lights: The Side Stories. DWAH!” Haruka kicked and sent him flying.

“You’re not getting a story arc.”

After everyone settled down from the commotion, Zach explained his own exciting tale. “Next thing I know, I’m drinking onion juice, now I’m here.”

“Yeah, I kinda slapdashed that part. My engines were powered by toaster fuel, crayons served as pilots – I broke the red one on the way here – and I burned headphones for oxygen. That clear it up?”
“…Sure, why not.”

“Ugh, I’m starting to get a headache with all this nonsense.” Chimney squeaked. “Mary, thanks for not talking much during these last scenes, I have more respect for you.”

Maddy glanced between her, the shrunken R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. in Apis’s arms, and Zach. “You guys will never look at me the same way again after saying this, but… Zach, can you fix Chimney?” As expected, everyone passed her looks that said she wasn’t the same Maddy anymore.

Zach stared at the shrunken leader thoughtfully, rubbing his chin. “Well, I could… try. I mean, I have an idea that might work, but…”

“If you’re too unsure, we’d rather not risk it-” Aeincha said worriedly-

But right away, he took Chimney and the train and held them to an invisible camera. A gentle music started playing that sounded like it belonged to an instruction video. “Hi, kids, is your best friend shrunken beyond repair? Well, uncle Zach Murphy’s here to teach you a quick and easy way to stretch them good as new.” He pulled a table into view, and dropped Chimney in a blender.

“Add this credit card,” he dropped said item in, “some textbooks. These toenails will do, toolbox, PlayStation 4, Donkey Kong hammer, some hourglass, ooh this clock looks nice, uhhhh,” Chimney grunted at each item that dropped in, and she grew more concealed from their eyes, “this pedometer, dead cat, window blinds, quantum energy, the entire collection of dubbed Fairy Tail on DVD, a Lorax (‘Hey!’), coffee bean, baby grand piano, lighter oil, with just an itty-bitty hint of rotting whale,” they would never question how Zach fit such a huge creature in there, “we are good to go.” He clamped the lid on and activated the blender.

Looking back, this was probably a bad idea, thought most of our friends. The faster the ingredients spun, the more they thought it was too late. Zach switched it off and opened the lid, revealing what had all been molded together in groddy, unsavory mush. …Tiny limbs floated to the surface along with a blouse, all scattered and lifeless. Their eyes were so wide, they could never close again, the blood in Sector W7’s veins might as well freeze. “Er… or maybe it was, add the pedometer first, and mix it with ponytail wands. …Well, can’t waste good smoothie!” Zach grabbed and gulped the whole shake in one slurp, much to the absolute horror and bloodthirsty anger of Chimney’s friends. “Tasty!”

“YOU FUCKING IDIOT!!” Apis tackled and strangled the boy until he was dead. “HOW COULD YOU MURDER CHIMNEY AND DRINK HER REMAINS? I’LL MAKE SURE YOUR SOUL NEVER GETS SAVED!”

“What’re you talking about, I didn’t drink Chimney, Mason did!” Apis looked bafflingly to where Zach pointed.

Now Mason’s face was toad-like. His mouth puffed like he was about to vomit. A fantastic victory fanfare played, and out came the R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. in its entirety. It was sparkling shiny and silver, and Chimney was passed out on the control deck. “Nnnnn… what did I just go through?”

“April, why did that train come out of that boy’s mouth?” Mary asked.

“Because boys have a different diet than us, Mary.”

Chimney was later outside, depressedly leaning her head against the train. “I’m so ashamed.”

“Come on, Chimney, I’m sorry for misusing your baby back in the whale.” Aisa replied with a humorous smile.

“Yah, but it never shoulda happened. My train never woulda gone through that if she was just a bit stronger. I…” She faced up at the sky passionately, “I NEED TO MAKE HER AN EVEN BETTER TRAAAAIIIN!!”

Needless to say, Büe didn’t miss the spectacle from the house’s door. “I need to study this species more. They certainly do more than what the textbooks say.”

Ratchet took the time to polish his own ship, smiling with warm green eyes. He kind of knows how Chimney feels, Aphelion means a lot to him, too. “Well, since Ratchet has his ship, and we got our train back… I guess we can continue our journey.” Chris said.

“Yeah…” Maddy looked down.

“So who you wanna take, Mads? Want me to go…”

“Hmm… I’d like to take you, but… well, you kind of have your own team.” Maddy replied with an assuring smile. “Drake, you can go back too, if you want.”

“Eh… abandoning a girl in need, I wouldn’t sleep well.” Drake said coolly. “I’ll stay with you, too.”

“I know I’m not leaving her.” Zach said.

“Then I guess we go separate ways.” Aurora nodded.

“Don’t worry, Mads.” Chris smirked. “I’ll have George bring you back soon.”

Maddy smirked. “Well, I wouldn’t want his Unbreakable Vow to be broken. Keep working on that combustionbending.”

“Will do. And keep working on… um, tolerating alien company.”

“See you later, Maddy!” Mocha waved. “Come back big and strong!”

Sectors V and W7 were on the R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N., engines roaring and ready to lift off.

“Good thing Professor Büe lent us his record of galactic coordinates.” Artie said, studying the paper. “Now we can get back to Milky Way with no problem. And come back whenever we wanna find Sugar or Maddy. Actually, after we buy another Warpdrive Key, I wanna visit Professor Büe again. I think he and I could learn a lot from each other…”

“After we get back home, we’re going to save Midna.” Dillon said firmly. “Then we’re going to Gravity Falls, aren’t we?”

“Yeah.” Haru nodded. “If Gravity Falls had a book about these Gibberish Rocks, it can tell us where to find them.”
“All engines are a-go.” Chimney reported. “Passengers aboard. Rocket-san’s happy to not be annoying brat’s toy. WE’RE GOING HOOOOOME!”

The R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. flew to the skies up north, Aphelion left the atmosphere down south. Chris peered out the window of the former, Maddy from the latter, watching as the other ship became a tiny shooting star in the distance. “Hey… did we forget something?” Aurora asked.

Chimney gasped. “Did we leave Mary??”

“Dammit. Ah, probly ain’t important. Entering lightspeed noooowwww!”

The silver train vanished. The sky was empty over Büe’s land. With the hopes of meeting that Artie boy again, he went back into his- “LOOKIE LOOKIE LOOKIE!” Jar Jar Blinks had formed many a paper plane from his notebooks. “I-sha made de aaaaairpooooort. Pshoooooowwww.”

“…” Büe needed money for hunting rifles.

Sector W Treehouse

“Refurbish thineselves with drinks and snacks and make use of yon urinal before we depart.” Fybi told everyone as they disembarked the S.C.A.M.P.E.R. “I wilt not take complaints en route to homeland.”

Phosphorua was relieved to be out of the vent, stretching her limbs and bending back to relieve the stiffness. “So this is one of your treehouses. No wonder Viridi hated them, it’s unnatural for something so big to stand over a tiny house.”

They spent the next 10 minutes resting from Hawaii’s heat and gathering whatever provisions they desired for their trip. “So why did you wanna come back anyway, Fybs?” Anthony asked. “Just snacks?”

“I hath been developing this project for a good many months, acquiring resources from homeland KND as well as GKND ops.” Fybi said as they returned to the hangar, showing them a large leather blanket covering something. “Voila, my motion-controlled Angel Wing!” She blew the covers off: The friends gasped at the shining white, mechanical aircraft with folded angel wings, three soft, cloud-made benches to fit 3 people each, and black lines around some parts.

Aranea climbed onto the glass. “Um… there’re no controls.”

“Ah ha ha. Such a vessel is not controlled by such.” Fybi dug around a trunk. “‘Tis controlled by one whom is not controlled, except by she. Ta-to-yon-da!” She came out with black straps with blue edges around her arms, waist, and legs. “Checketh this out.” Fybi walked a few feet in front of the ship, back facing it directly. A scanner locked onto the straps, and the ship’s black lines glowed blue. Fybi shifted horizontal, flying in place, and the ship lifted off the floor, its wings outstretched. Fybi shifted leftward, then right (“Whoooa!” Aranea screamed, still on the ship), forward, back, up, down, and softly landed on her feet. The ship mimicked all movements.

“Cooool!” Harvey gazed.

“Yeah, cool…” Nea climbed down. “Have you ever really flown this thing?”

“I hath taken for many test runs, ’til it wast perfect. I believeth it will help me maneuver much better in the air, predict very sudden patterns as my skin feels the atmosphere. The idea came to me last year, as we flew through Phosphora’s storm, watching with regret as I flew forth, and Aranea piloted the vessel as thou followed.”

“I mean no offense, but I feel uncomfortable when I cannot fly mineself, and mine sector simultaneously. Yonder technology helpeth me achieve both tasks. I thinketh it to be wise idea.”

“And what of the event thou gets scratched in yon bandage-thingies and we taketh great fall?” Anthony asked.

“‘Tis programmed with parachute shouldst it drop suddenly over thousand-foot fall. Thou may be most helpless during thine descent, but let us hope not much harm will come. Art thou ready, for let us fly to Skypia ‘fore sun sets!”

Anthony, Sally, and Harvey took the front seat, Nea and Phosphora in the middle, while their trunks of supplies got the back seat. “Motion sensors on: Engines full, wings readyeth.” Fybi spoke, hovering in place as the aircraft was off the floor. The same thoughts were on everyone’s minds, the worry of riding a motion-controlled vehicle. Anthony especially knew how Fybi flies, even with a mini passenger on her back, she wouldn’t hesitate to make every twirl she wanted to. “I canst feel it shaking in my nervous system, the ship’s eagerness to meet the skies. Shall I deny it the freedom any longer? Surely thou jest. To Rubberband Land in clouds above, I shalt not drift too high, lest I leave the atmosphere. On mine markest, getting set, let us go!”

Fybi shot out of the hangar like a jet, and the Angel Wing followed as the passengers screamed, the craft shifting an angle and going vertical. With Fybi’s speed, it seemed even their seatbelts wouldn’t protect them from impending crashes. But Fybi took it more softly when they were above the fluffy clouds and floating horizontal. Fybi’s form was balanced and graceful, and this made the ride relaxing. After they were accustomed to the craft, they could look out the window without worry. Since their seats were made of clouds, it added to the feeling of being so high, flying over the heavens like birds, and that’s just where they were going. Skypia, Fybi’s homeland, where people lived on clouds and flew 24/7. Anthony was still against this adventure, he was totally powerless in the sky, no ground or dirt, he couldn’t protect his teammates if danger came. For the time in this land, Fybi was their leader.

In time, they had no idea where over the Earth they were, flying for what felt like hours, even though Fybi flew under the clouds to give them a better view, but it was all oceans for most of the trip. Curiously, a plane piloted by a teenage boy with sunglasses passed them a few miles back, and three children in his backseat waved at the sector. Finally, they were closing in on a cloud with a village rested atop it, and beyond that was the amusement park called Rubberband Land.

Fybi glided to the island’s shore slowly, and the moment her feet touched, the ship landed and disabled. The friends climbed out of the craft and set foot on the soft, solid cloud. Skypia was more than they imagined, they half expected every inch of ground to be blank white clouds, but green trees, grass, and bushes were planted around the houses, Conache Pumpkins, cabbages, and fruits grew, even though the clouds had no earth, they had other means of adapting. It even felt new for Phosphora, having not seen a Sky Island for so many years except that old temple, but this was where regular Nimbi lived, under sunlight and blue skies instead of storms. Compared to her homeland, this peaceful village was in stark contrast.

“Fybi, is this really the town you were born?” Sally asked.
“Nay, I wast born on Angel Island, my mother’s homeland. I will love to take thee sometime, but now let us be lost among yon rubberbands.”

Aranea checked the time on her phone, then looked at the horizon to see a faint shade of pink.
“Fybi, it’s 6:30, it’s gonna be nighttime soon. I’m not very fond of flying under a storm when it’s already dark.”

“Fair, then we shalt rest hither, fly tomorrow. Ist there harm in camping outdoors? Art thou afraid of rain? We art above yon clouds! Thou fearest the bug crawling in thine mouth? Reasonable, because bugs art prosperous up hither. But thou dost not even needs shoes,” Fybi kicked her sandals off, “when we art above the soil, allow Skypia’s softness under thine soles! Ha HAAAA, my excitement be untamed!” She flew forward with joy.

The kids shrugged and slipped their shoes off, but not Phosphora as she was a little less ecstatic.
They followed Fybi across the milk-white street, looking around to all the Nimbi working in their gardens or fluttering about the town. The adults paid no mind, but the children drew very curious expressions at the five humans (not knowing Phosphora was a Nimbi herself). Fybi returned to the surface after they crossed the barren cloud plain on the way to Rubberband Land, the angel landing before the gate. “Howdy thither, yon folkies! Art thou hither to embrace in yon substance of earthly cloud? Seet’ that thou hail from yonder surface, thou art therefore visitors, so thine admittance into our fair land is freeth!” The tollbooth man spoke with a country accent.

“Mr., um, Tollbi,” Sally read his nametag, “why did they make an amusement park based on rubberbands?”

“‘Twas very heroic tale of chills and yon thrills, fair Nimbi explorers ventured to world below clouds, discovered the legendary material that wouldst be our park’s foundation. Didst humans attempt to create cloudlike substance, whilst not the same, ‘twas a joyful, exuberant material! So yon devices, Rubberband Land became Skypia’s joy. What sort of creation doth protect one from lightning the way it dost??”

“We wanted to ask about that!” Nea perked. “We wanted to go to Birka, the lightning island, so we were hoping you had rubber suits.”

“Thou shalt find all that thou needst, but fair humans shouldst not visit such a cloud. Dangerous beeth that place, though I shalt not deter thee, I must encourage time with bands of rubber, and enjoy thyselfs!”

The kids enjoyed their selves very much. Aranea participated in a shooting game, given a pile of rubberbands to stretch and shoot at cardboard Bokoblin. After winning the cloud-made Loftwing balloon, she shot one last rubberband at Anthony’s eye. Sally and Harvey went to a complex of giant rubberbands tied around tall pegs, the Nimbi bouncing up and down and all around them. The twins were happy to join, able to enjoy the bounce a lot more without wings, they even befriended a few Nimbi kids, told them what it’s like living on Earth. Who knew that Earth pumpkins were soft and made good Halloween decorations.

Anthony found a mini-game where a series of giant slingshots were aligned on small Island Clouds, their large rubberbands dangling over the chasm. Anthony jumped in the first one on his left, his weight stretching it down before he was flung up and into the close one on his right, going down further due to momentum, flung higher and farther, into the second one on the left, then the second on the right, going farther each time with added momentum. The very left end had a tub of Conache Juice, the right end had a tub of mud, and where he landed depended on his starting choice. While it was intended to be the bad choice, Anthony was very thankful to land in the mud.
A carny released several rubberband balloon animals into the sky, Fybi used her B.O.W. to shoot every single one. She scored cotton candy fresh from sheep on Cotton Clouds, and allowed Phosphora to have some. Then, the woman joined them to the Loftlings, baby Loftwings for young angels. Sally and Harvey bonded with their birds quite well, Nea cried and hugged hers tight as it flapped forcefully, thousands of feet above the ocean. Anthony angrily ordered his bird to kneel so he can climb on, but it snapped its beak at him. Fybi happily flew around the sky on her golden Loftwing, and assured Phosphora it was okay. Even though she was much taller, she sat on a black Loftling, it withstood her weight and lifted off the cloud, then flew. Phosphora held tight, taking her tall height into account, while Fybi freely held her arms outstretched. The sensation of flying without doing it on one’s own, it wasn’t the same for Phosphora, but she was reminded how nice the feeling was. She knew how it felt for normal Nimbi almost, to fly with feathers under gentle wind, not energy under darkness and rough storm.

The evening was pleasant, the five children could go to bed with weary minds. As the sun was sinking beyond the horizon, they returned to the ship and slept on the soft ground around it.

“Yawn… great work today, everyone…” Anthony moaned. “Hope you enjoyed yourselves, ‘cause tomorrow is storms all day. Gonna get this crazy lady back to her island and do whatever the crud Fybi wanted. G’night, sleep tight, don’t let cloudbugs bite.” He was snoring away.

Phosphora sat on the edge of the cloud, staring at the endless night sky. It’s been such a long time, she feels like she’s come so far… but she was finally returning home. And so suddenly… she wonders how much has changed. And traveling with these kids, she almost felt bad. Getting them into what they’re getting into. “Couldn’t sleep either, huh?” Aranea came beside her, lied on the ground and stared at the stars.

“What happened to your wings, anyway? How old were you?”

“I was about 12, kinda gutsy for my age, and I… Well, I tried to see how much energy I could absorb from a lightning rod. …I overpowered myself and my chi-paths ruptured. Benders can have Chi Overload, you know. Too much power than they can understand, their bodies are too small. You could imagine.”

“You really miss your home, huh?”

“Well, it’s the place I grew up, that I was forced to leave because of a deficiency, so… a little.”

“Can I tell you a secret? I’ve always been jealous of Fybi.”

“Oh, ok.” Phosphora lied back, hands folded under her head.

“… Aren’t you gonna ask why?”

“No, it’s because she’s prettier. Better hair, clothes, face…”

Aranea glared. “I meant her-”

“I know, her wings, I’m not stupid.”

“Y-Yeah… She’s just so unique, happy and; spirited all the time… because she can fly, go anywhere she wants, you look at her and just know, she could do anything she wants to. I’ve always wanted to be like her… but I’m always stressing over stuff. Anyway, that’s why I feel bad for you, not being able to fly.”
“Don’t sympathize with me, you’re a human, you’re all the same.”

“I am not—” Aranea looked at Anthony, who released a loud snore just then. “Anthony… I dunno. He’s a jerk, he stinks, he’s gross… but today, he worked really hard training; he just wants to do his best for his friends… really, I used to hate him, but now I can’t say that, anymore. He’s trying to prepare for what’s to come, and sometimes I wonder… why he’s our leader, why he wasn’t picked for a higher position. After everything he’s been through, he always stood strong in the end.”

“Oh, I see… you’re in love with him.”

Nea flushed. “HECK no!! I respect him is all, but the picture of me BEING with him… e-e-e-e-e-”

“No, shuddup, I hear you a mile away, snooooore…” Anthony mumbled.

“SHUT your waterhole, Anthony!” Nea yelled back.

“Hm hm hm!” Phosphora giggled. “I’m fond of you, Blue Girl, I’ll admit that.”

“I’m lovable.” Nea said proudly. “…Hey, Phosphora… you said Birka was ruled by a ‘god’, or something… Um, who is it? What kind of person…”

Phosphora frowned and turned away. “He showed up on a terribly stormy day. The clouds spiraled, and he appeared in a blinding flash of lightning. He stood atop Dashi’s Peak, and announced himself as our god. His name…” She saw the towering altar in her mind, great big bolts of lightning, and the caped figure standing tall and mighty, “was Thor.”

Yeah… but since I had a One Piece obsession, I made it seem like the ‘god’ would be Eneru, the lightningbender from Birka. Nah, Thor is so much cooler. Lol looking back on previous chapters, I never or barely called the monuments Poneglyphs, now I’m more fond of ‘Gibberish Rock’. X) Well, see you next time, when we go to Birka. Later.
Simple, Yet Complicated

Chapter Summary

Wendy Marvell goes to the Climate Plains to learn from a wizard named Ezlo.

Decided to add the “B-” before the chapter numbers.

Chapter B-15: Simple, Yet Complicated

Facilier’s Voodoo Emporium

“And that, Frederick, is why we use caution when executing a prank regarding Acne Cream.” Facilier said as he spread Anti-Acne Cream on the boy’s face, which was filled with bloated red dots.

“Thank you, Dr. Facilier.” Frederick blushed.

“A’ight, run along now.” The boy jogged out of the shop, then Samantha walked up. “Hey, Sammy! What’s new?”

“Mr. Facilier, my brother and I just remembered who the KND leader is!” Sam yelled. “His name’s Cheren, and he was-”

“I know, I know, everyone forgot him and remembered him outta nowhere!” Facilier summed up. “I was pretty weirded out, too, but then… eh, it’s not important.”

“Mr. Facilier, my brother says that Cheren said the Apocalypse is coming! We didn’t believe it at first, but… Sigh, it’s starting to worry him. …I was wondering if…”

“You wanna read your fortune?”

“…Mmmmm, uh-uh.” She shook her head. “I don’t know if I should… maybe we just need to lighten up. You have any of those Image Bubbles?”

“Haha, sure, kid.” Facilier grabbed a pink bubble bottle from the shelf.

“Thanks.” Sam paid the money and began to walk out.

“…Hehe.” Sam grinned and exited the shop.

“A’ight, WENDY, you can come down!”

The ceiling hatch opened, and Carla floated down before Wendy climbed down the ladder. The girl sat in the chair opposite Facilier. “Did y’all get a good night’s rest?”

“Yeah, I did.”

“Good! Alright, quiz time, give me three types of spells and describe them!”
“Umm… There are Charms, which are supportive spells that give a special property to the target… Curses, which are harmful dark spells that can last briefly or indefinitely, like a hex… and Transformation-type spells, which alter the target’s size, shape, or appearance.”

“Do you have a favorite?”

“Definitely Charms.” Wendy smiled. “I really don’t do with Curses.”

“I can imagine. Okay, Wendy, you’ve been getting plenty of fighting experience, so I think we can level off on that for a bit. We need to start teaching you to combine your airbending with your magic.”

“But I already do. I cast the Repiti spell on my Cyclone Fist to keep it going.”

“That’s very creative, but it ain’t what I mean. Magic benders in the past have utilized bending powers that others wouldn’t have. But I ain’t an airbender, so I’m not sure what power you can invent… however, my sources inform me of the perfect teacher who can tell you. He’s an old wizard named Ezlo, and he was last seen walking across the Climate Plains in Europe. We can warp you to the train station through the Floo Network.” He pointed to the fireplace. “I’ll stay behind and look for where the twins and Floop are hiding.”

“Okay. Will I need contacts?”

“Nah, it’s not a populace setting. You can give your eyes more breath.”

“Okay…” Wendy lightly grasped the lap of her emerald dress, looking down.

Facilier noticed her downtrodden expression. “…You still upset, aren’t you?”

“Yeah… I know you don’t want me to be, but…”

The doctor reached over and tilted Wendy’s head up. “Wendy, it’s okay to feel upset if you wanna be… it’s just it’s a different story if you let these feelings get to you, know what I mean?”

“I do. I just want something good to happen for a change. I want these ‘missions’ to feel… worth it.”

Facilier looked away. He wanted to grant such a request, but wasn’t sure what to give her. …He smiled and said to her, “Tell you what: you come back from this mission, I’ll show you the wand that I use.”

“You mean your cane?”

“Naw, the cane is just a disguise.” Facilier held said cane up. “The wand is inside of it. I never showed it to anyone, but I’ll be happy to let you and Charles be the first.”

“Really?! The first?!?” Wendy’s expression brightened.

“My first student and my first pet! Is that enough to inspire you?”

“YES, it is!! I’m so excited!”

“I am not YOUR pet.” Carla stated. “Besides, isn’t the shadow your pet?”

“Hey, that’s offensive.” The doctor stated. Shadow nodded. “Plus, he already knows since he’s part of me.” Shadow shrugged. “So are y’all ready to go?”
“I sure am!” Wendy jumped to her feet. “Let’s go!”

Facilier gave her a backpack that carried Floo Powder for her to return. “Climate Plains!” he called as he threw a bundle of powder into the fireplace. Wendy and Carla jumped into the emerald flame and vanished.

Upstairs in the bedroom, the girl’s ‘Wendell’ clothes were folded under her bed. …A small, triangle-shaped paper with an eye drawn on it helped itself out of the shirt’s neck hole, and looked around.

Fizzuras House

“Vell, ve had a few nasty bumps in ze road…” Henrietta grinned sheepishly. “But I am proud to share our first family breakfast in five years vith zese unaging babies, and our special guest, ze cavegirl, Nel.” She smiled at the cavechild sitting at one end of the table.

“Nel is happy to be in Aughsucks family cave.” Nel clapped. “Missus Fizzyrocks makes tasty little green trees.” She was eating broccoli. “Would Aughsucks like some?”

Augustus was sitting inside a large, but cramped cage, eating dogfood from a doggy bowl. “Why, again, is the animal-like cavegirl not sitting in here, but I AM?!?”

“Because ze little cavegirl has shown better manners zan you so far, Augustus liebe.” Henrietta replied, dropping a bone-shaped treat in her son’s bowl. “You need ein tighter leash zan she does.”

“Why do we even have this cage, anyway?”

“It used to belong to the dog you didn’t feed before you left.” Augustus’s father, Antonio replied.

“Oh, yeah… I forgot about Syrup.”

“Named your dog Syrup?” Rallo asked. “Well, no wonder he ran away.”

“Look, Augustus, I woud not have minded zis adventurous streak if you had not gone and ‘made a name’ for yourself.” Henrietta stated, still focused on her breakfast. “Vanted posters of Candy Hunter Augustus everywhere, how much vill it take to clear your name?”

“Tell me about it. I changed my epithet to ‘Stone Fist’, how do I get that public? AH!” Henrietta kicked the teen’s cage.

“Still, that’s a weird-looking rock you brought home with you.” Ace said. “Where did you find that?”

“Antonio, he ruined your plane, don’t encourage him.” Heinie scolded.

“Eh, nothing we can’t fix.”

“Mom, have you ever heard of sweets called the Lost Candies?” Augustus asked, eating his treat.

“Ze Lost Candies? Vhere vould you have heard about zem, ’cause I haven’t.”

“I heard about them from a sick boy in Pueblo de Niebla. The Sugar Fairy Princess says that not many people have heard of them, however.”

“You met ze Fairy Princess?”
“Heh, I met two of them! Pretty slick for a runaway, right?”

“Nel has to go potty.” Nel said. “Nel can poop in corner, or anywhere?”

“Ahem, AUGUSTUS, teach Nel how to use ze bathroom.” Heinie picked up her plate and carried it to the sink. “And afterwards, give her a bath.”

“Ain’tchu gonna let me out of here??”

“Vhy? You have thumbs.”

Augustus flexed said fingers. He used them to grab that little slide-in bar, pull it out, and unlock his cage. “…I knew that.”

Bathroom

“He he, he he, he he!” Nel was happily swinging her feet while Augustus tried to scrub them. Her unclothed body was covered in bubbles. “Nel feels a happy feeling in her feets now. Is Nel’s feet tasting?”

“You have millions of years of catching up to do.” Augustus said. Behind him, his mom was brushing her hair. “So Mom, can you think of any reason why the World Government would wanna burn any references to the Lost Candies?”

“Vhy vould ze Government concern their selves vith that?”

“To be fair, the Sugary Wonders were pretty deadly items. You’d think they would’ve shown more initiative in stopping our ancestors from finding them all those years.”

“Oh well. Do you know if there’s any way to get to Oceana?”

“Vell, ZAT is out of nowhere! Augustus, Big Mam vonce made an agreement to protect Oceana from invaders in exchange for zeir delicious candies. Now that Big Mam is no more, zey von’t welcome you.”

“Augh, you are purposely ignoring the parts I vant you to hear.”

“Hey, I’m sorry for running away without notice, but I need to find the Lost Candies before Luviro dies this month.”

“This… month? He says he vill die this month, specifically?”

“W-Well, back in November, he said he had seven months to live, so… this would be the seventh month, wouldn’t it?”

“…” Henrietta grew more suspicious. “Augustus, if finding ze Lost Candies is that important, zen perhaps you should get ze help of someone with expertise in this subject. Like, ze Kids Next Door.”

“Sigh… Perhaps they are too busy.” Henrietta sighed, aware of their own conflicts the KND is dealing with.

Garage

After bath time was over, Augustus’s crew set to work in the garage, which was filled with scrap. It only took half an hour to repair the Ace Flyer. “There we are, good as new.” Stewie smiled. “While we’re here, I suppose I can construct a few weapons for our upcoming quest.”

“You get started on that, I’ll phone in Nickel Joe.” Augustus said as he dialed on his cellphone. After two rings, the other end decided to chance the caller ID and answer. “Ye… Hello?”

“Hey, Joe, it’s me, Augustus.”

“Who is this Joe you speak of? I am Trader Slim, the on-the-run sales clerk. Can I interest you in this pretty little bowl that looks like a turtle shell?”

“No thanks, now tell me, Joe, you collected debt from Oceana, haven’t you?”

“W-Why do ya need to know? Are there, eh… cops about?”

“No, it’s just me. Joe, I wanna go back to Oceana and look for something, but I need coordinates.”

“Eh… Well, it so happens that I saved the coinkiddinks on my phone. But Gusty, we’re all wanted in that place, and the only way in from the surface is through the Mother Child Islands, and anybody with eyes will see you come in from there.”

“Big deal, I should easily be able to build a submarine. Just link me the map and I’ll let you get back to your sales.”

“You bargain hard, Gus. Just don’t bet more than you can pay up.” The call ended. Augustus watched as a digital map appeared on his phone with a location marked in the Atlantic.

“Before we go, we should fly to Gumdrop Cove and buy some Oxybursts.” The captain said. “Since you Devil Fruit eaters can’t swim, they’ll help you breathe underwater.”

“Augustus, aren’t you concerned how the pirates will treat us for the Davy Back Fight?” Stewie asked. “And what if some of the participants are there?”

“They might. Hmm…” Augustus picked up the Rock Nut and stared at it. “The Rocknut Tribe used this nut to strengthen their armor. When I licked it, my Haki fully came back. Do you think this thing has the power to strengthen defense?”

“You wanna test it out?” Rallo asked.

Augustus decided to put the Rock Nut in the Ace Flyer’s trunk. “…kay, Stewie, blast it.” The baby whipped out his ray gun and shot the biplane. After four shots, he grabbed his missile launcher and fired, exploding on the plane. It barely left a scratch. “Awesome! At least now we won’t get shot down.”

“It could weigh us down.” Stewie said.

“Well, we’ll make do. I’m more worried about how we’re gonna take a submarine all the way to Oceana.”

“Actually, I might be able to make something that can fix all those dilemmas. Give me about an Climate Plains

Wendy and Carla exited the emerald fire and found their selves under the roof of the train station, which was open to the outside atmosphere. The sun was shining high over a vast green plain with tall mountains. The roaring whistles of trains echoed in the distance. “This place is really pretty, Carla.”

“I agree. But did Dr. Facilier say why it was called Climate Plains?”

“I know. ‘Train Plains’ would’ve sounded better, right? Heh heh!”

“He didn’t even tell us what Ezlo looked like. What, does he expect you to walk around and ask casually?”

“It shouldn’t be hard. There isn’t many people around, so we just have to find someone that looks… wizardly! Let’s just run around and see the sights while we’re at it. Haha, try to keep up!”

(Play “Realm Overworld” from Zelda: Spirit Tracks!)

Stage B-12: Climate Plains

Mission: Find the wizard, Ezlo.

Wendy dashed down a hill toward a small mountain, and she spin-jumped on a propeller spring to get up onto a cliff on its side. She hopped on a pair of train tracks and grinded toward a field on her left. A train was coming, but instead of jumping off the rail and going around it, Wendy leaped and ran across the roof. She grabbed a Fire Soul at the end before running off and grinding the track. Wendy was about to cross a high bridge over a river, but a train was coming from directly ahead. She jumped left and grinded a rail on the train’s side, and jumped flamethrowers coming from the train.

Once past the train, Wendy got back on the tracks and grinded into a cave. The route where the train came from was closed, so Wendy jumped off the rail and ran the alternate way. She stopped at a cliff over a chasm, but saw a Spring Pad up on the right wall. Carla lifted her up so the spring could bounce her to a dash panel on the left wall. Wendy sidestepped when blue Blastworms popped out of parts of the wall, avoiding the explosive bugs.

Wendy ran off the edge of the wall, landing on a safe foothold before going up a U-turn slope that brought her into a round tunnel. Rocktites (four-legged rock spiders with an eye in their mouth) skittered around the floor and walls, staying ahead of Wendy and waiting to jump at her. Wendy lined up with each Rocktite to shoot Attack Spells and knock them out of the way. One Rocktite jumped her while she was running on the wall, causing her to drop to the floor as she tried to shake it off. Carla did a Torpedo Spin to aid in that, and when another Rocktite jumped, Wendy whipped the Attack Spell to defeat it.

At the end of the tunnel, Wendy ran along a path on the side of a mountain. The path sloped down, then up again, and three GUN Shield Hunters blocked her path. Wendy slid under the middle one’s shield, knocked it off its feet, then hit the Spring Pad behind them to bounce up to another level of the mountain. It was a small field where Fire Souls were lain around. Wendy ran up to the first fiery ring—it became a Like-Like that snatched Wendy in its vacuum mouth. Wendy struggled to escape, clutching her wand inside the mouth and casting Stupefy to make it release. They figured all these Fire Souls were Like-Likes’ lures, so Wendy avoided them all. (One was probably real, though.)

Wendy hit a spring on the other side of the field, bouncing to a mountain path that sloped up and around the peak. Near the top, she hit a rail and grinded all the way down toward a beach overlooking the vast ocean. As she raced across the beach, Ergtoroks (Octoroks that dwell in sand) popped up to cough rocks at her, but Wendy avoided before hitting a spring at the end that bounced her onto some train tracks. She grinded the tracks over a great long bridge that crossed the sea. Partway across, the tracks sloped down onto the surface, curved left, and ended as Wendy ran across the ocean’s surface.

Some small battleships were trying to blast Wendy from either side, and she avoided the splashes made by their cannons as she was coming to another tall bridge. Carla quickly grabbed her master and lifted her up onto the bridge, and Wendy grinded rightward along the tracks. There was a train coming from ahead, riding tracks that were on the surface on their right. When the bridge was reaching its end, Wendy jumped onto the rail that was on the train’s roof. When the train was ending, she jumped left and grinded another bridge rail.

The track swerved left, and Wendy jumped off their dead end to bounce across a series of GUN Beetles. The last one was a Spring Beetle, which bounced Wendy up to another train track on a bridge. She grinded the bridge toward a snowy mountain, going between two other tracks that trains were riding, then quickly jumped on the left track when that train passed, avoiding the train on the center track. When the center train passed, she returned on the center track and made it to the mountain’s base.

She jumped off the track to avoid going in the train tunnel, hitting a spring that bounced her to the next mountain level. GUN Laser Hunters shot goop guns at her, but Wendy took them out with punches from her Cyclone Fist, which pushed the robots against the wall and broke them. Carla lifted Wendy onto the next ledge, where she could enter the snowy mountain. “First a pleasant meadow, then a beach, now a snow peak?” Carla questioned.

“So that’s why they’re called the Climate Plains!” Wendy realized. The cold of the Winter Zone made her toes chilly, so her speed was a little faltered. Wendy ran up a small slope to a ground where GUN Rhinos tried to run her over, but Wendy jumped them and cast Reducto Curses to destroy the mechs. Wendy ran off a ledge afterward and raced down a wide slope within a trench. A train suddenly exploded from the ground behind them, haphazardly rolling down the path and making an avalanche. The train had a drill on its front, so Wendy ran faster, avoiding the snowballs coming from the avalanche.

At the end of this slope, Wendy jumped on a frozen ice rail on her left, curving leftward as it brought her over a chasm between a trench. The rail dropped her on a path along the right wall, so Wendy ran across it, jumping the Ice Chuchu that sprang up. The path ended at a protective fence, and there was also a thin, tall pole. Wendy blew a cyclone up the pole, then she grabbed onto it as the wind spiraled her up. Once high enough, Wendy released and flew over to a path on the left trench wall. The path ramped up and forced Wendy to run along the wall itself, but when the cold caused her to lose speed, Carla quickly grabbed the girl and lifted her to the next safe ground.

The path directed toward the center of the trench, Ice Chus guarding the path as Wendy cast Fire Spells at them. Wendy boosted up a ramp at the end, flying her over the chasm before she landed on a new path, which turned left, brought her out of the snow, and into an orange autumn forest where colored leaves floated down. “Ahhh, this is much nicer. Carla, what’s your favorite season?”

They came to a dead-end area with several log pillars with springs. There was a switch at the base of each pillar, and pressing them would change the springs’ direction. Wendy made a left spring face right, made that spring face up, the above spring bounce left, the following one down diagonal, and that final upward spring bounced her onto the ledge. Wendy kept along the path, coming to an area where three trains went over three parallel sets of tracks, horizontal in Wendy’s perspective. She jumped the flat beds of the first train, used Carla to float over the second one’s short cars, but to get over the third one, Wendy jumped into a vine-made slingshot, which Carla then pulled to aim and launch Wendy over the train.

The next path turned left and led Wendy to a trench area with a huge gap between her and the next ledge, but there was ground below. Another of those slingshots was partway over the edge, so Wendy jumped into it. Carla aimed Wendy at a vine that was swinging circles on the left and launched her to it. Wendy hung onto the self-swinging vine before launching herself to a swinging platform. The platform swung beside Centiflies, which were dragonflies with centipede legs. They floated up-and-down, and when they floated up, Wendy could safely bounce their heads and cross them. (There was a small blue fairy that appeared to be sketching the large bugs.)

Wendy landed on a swing hanging from the branches above, and using her airbending, she swung further and higher before launching herself toward the ledge. Wendy began to scamper through a forest maze, screeching when the large spiders, Skulltula tried to drop in her way. She seemed to be running aimless around the forest, but in every turn she came to, a branch from a dead tree was pointing either left or right. Carla suggested she follow those directions, and when Wendy did, they found their way out of the forest.

They were back in the Spring Zone, going down a green hill and up the other side. Wendy raced up to a lone rock where a small creature was sitting. (End song.)

The creature on the rock was about six inches tall. He was an old Minish with white hair in a bun, a large white beard and eyebrows, wearing a green robe. He was sitting cross-legged, meditating. A wood staff with a round top was lain before him. “Perhaps ask him.” Carla whispered.

“You’re not standing too far away, I can hear you.” The Minish stated.

“Eeeek!” Wendy yelped. The Minish got up, picked up his staff, and turned to them. Wendy and Carla decided to approach him.

“What is it you wanted to ask me?”

“I just… wanted to know if you’ve seen a wizard named Ezlo around here.” Wendy asked shyly.

“Who did you think I was?”

“Y-You’re him?” Wendy was a little shocked. He was smaller than she expected, but she didn’t say that. “Um… Well, my name’s Wendy, this is Carla. A man named Dr. Facilier sent us here to find you. He said you could teach me how to use airbending and magic together.”

“Oh, did he? And did ‘Dr. Facilier’ send any notice that some red-eyed blue-haired girl and her weird-looking cat would try to find me and want to learn magic?”

“I… guess not?” Wendy flushed and shifted her feet.
“Sir, we’re sorry for disrupting your meditation, and we promise to question Mr. Facilier later.” Carla told him. “He has taught Wendy all she knows about magic so far, but he is not knowledgeable enough to show her how to use it with her bending properly. That’s why he sent us to you. We understand you might be too busy, so if that’s the case—"

“Y-You will?” Wendy stuttered in shock again.

“But first, just how good with your powers are you?”

“Well, I’m… a pretty good airbender. I ran all the way across this valley in minutes, but I’m sort of just learning magic. I have a Lamia Scale.” She showed him her wand.

Wendy planted both feet on the ground and wiggled her toes between the grass. “It isn’t so bad.”

“Indeed.” Ezlo nodded. “Now put your wand down and do what I do.”

They both placed their wands on the ground before them. Wendy mimicked Ezlo as they performed yoga-like movements, bending their bodies to either side, balancing on one leg while stretching the other one out, and bending back like a rainbow.

“Can I ask why we’re doing this?” Carla asked, figuring she would try it herself.

“Element benders are known for molding their chi by exercising their body.” Ezlo explained. “Magic users know little more than waving a wand and casting spells. Even magic benders don’t think to make them one in the same practice. True, magic is not classified as a sole Element Chi, but it is a combination of forces, natural and supernatural, that make up wizards’ bodies. To grow with it, you must grow with nature. Breathe…” The Minish took a deep breath, and exhaled softly, while balancing on one leg.

Wendy mimicked his posture and breathed softly. She felt the fresh air ease her lungs. A yellow butterfly flew by her face, and since Wendy’s airbending made her breathing stronger, she sucked the bug in. “Ack- aaack!” She fell over and punched her chest, but when the butterfly wouldn’t come out, she took a breath and swallowed. She shuddered from the tingly, buttery feeling.

Ezlo sighed. “Alright, Step 2. Pick up your wand.”

Wendy grabbed her Lamia Scale and got back up. She mimicked Ezlo’s pose, holding her wand in both hands, aiming directly forward, and closing her eyes. “Magic, like chi, is everywhere. Because although some areas are more fluent with a particular chi, all chis come from the same source, so there are tiny fragments of all chi everywhere. Ordinary mages are born with this energy in our blood, so we are able to bond with magic wands, which help us direct and control the internal and external magic energy. But magic benders have a stronger bond, because their body houses a form of chi and can therefore control part of nature. I want you to channel the Air Chi and the magic to your wand.”

They were too many words for Wendy to process all at once. She kept a firm grip on her wand and tried to focus her power. Even though Dr. Facilier wasn’t an airbender, he had a book that taught Wendy basic moves. Since she had a good bond with her chi already, she was able to learn Dragon Style from the books, too. Of course, even if she could blow a strong cyclone, she wasn’t perfect in the art. She never tried focusing her chi without actually bending, let alone focusing magic.

She stood like a statue for several minutes, trying to picture firmly in her mind, the Air Chi and magic connecting at her wand. Her arms and legs were growing numb, she felt the sweat between the wand and the palms of her hands. “Uuugh.” Wendy sat on the ground and gasped for breath. “This is too hard. There’s so many things to remember, and it’s all so confusing.”

“But don’t benders have to use their mind, too? So they can focus where they want the chi to go, and how it works?”

“Yes, but basic moves shouldn’t require much thought! All your chi needs is a brief instruction, and it will do it! It may not always work out, but that’s how you grow with it!”

“But you keep saying that magic is a part of our body, just like chi is. Why can’t they be one in the same, and better yet, why can’t anybody else use magic? Why isn’t everyone born with this ‘mix of chi’ or whatever?”

Ezlo sighed. “The truth is, girl, I have no idea. I may be a master wizard, but even I’m not sure what sets magic apart from chi. I don’t think anybody does, all we have are predictions and theorems.”

“Oh, pipe down, you’re still a child.” Ezlo jumped down and sat on her chest. “And you came to me for an on-the-spot lesson, did you expect to master it right away?”

“Haha, I guess not.” Wendy chuckled. She faced up at the moving sky, the light breeze calming her nerves.

“I don’t know if you learned this in elementary school, but in our universe, there are ultimately Four Forces whose ultimate beginnings extend beyond our understanding. There is magic… chi… metahumanism… and even physics. Those are the four main forces that have become infamous across history. It is from those forces that people developed a variety of powers and skills. And no person knows where they came from. True, we think Arceus is the ultimate creator. We think he created all of the chis, we think he created magic by combining chis, we think Bang Gas was spawned from Arceus’s gas… but what force created Arceus, and where did that force come from? Billions have researched, but the answers are nowhere. Did Arceus even make all this himself? No one knows…”

“Wendy, all I’m saying is that it is confusing. Explanations are important for knowledge’s sake, but trying to learn everything or even understand everything is impossible. I don’t want you to hurt yourself just trying to remember the inner workings of magic or bending. But you must learn to mold the two powers in your own way."

In my own way... “Mr. Ezlo, could you get off me?”

The Minish did so. With a new determined aura, Wendy got to her feet, pulled her arms under her dress, and ripped off her Chi Stabilizers. “Child, what’re you doing?!” Carla yelled.

“Huh? Why did the wind suddenly pick up?” Ezlo asked, having to stick his staff in the ground to keep from blowing.

Wendy held her wand forward, locked herself on the ground, and focused her power. Is this why I couldn’t control my curse? Because I didn’t know to control my magic? If so, then that’s going to change. If I don’t get anything else... I at least want Lee Andrew to be proud of me.

A cyclone encased her body, and the ground at her feet glowed. Carla held Ezlo and stayed firm as they both stared at the wizard with awe. Wendy opened her eyes, kept her wand grasped in both hands, and waved it as the cyclone became a strip of wind and blew in the pointed direction. Wendy whipped her wand right, and the wind redirected and flew that way. Wendy twirled in place, making the wind spiral around and around like a dancer’s ribbon. Then, with a mighty swing toward the sky, the wind shot up and separated a passing cloud.

Without her Chi Stabilizers on, it was the longest time Wendy stood without wind blowing around her: two minutes. Eventually, the breeze started to pick up again. “That was... impressive, Child.” Carla said.

“Really? It felt pretty easy to me.” Wendy blushed.

Ezlo jumped out of Carla’s paws and approached Wendy with interest. “Who did you say sent you to me?”

“Doctor Facilier. He’s a witch-doctor.”

“Did he, now?” Ezlo stared up at Wendy’s bright red eyes. He felt the breeze that was steadily increasing. “…It’s funny… you remind me of an old student of mine. He was an airbender... who strongly sought to improve his magical potential. His name... was Vaati.”

“Vaati?” Carla repeated.

“Yes. But like me, he was a Minish. At least... he used to be. I taught him to embrace nature in order to embrace the magic and chi inside him... and he did. But he took it too far. He studied Dark Arts and the dark side of his bending. I sense... the same kind of power in you.”

“In me?” Wendy spoke, feeling hurt.

“I sense... the same type of desire in you. The passion to learn more on your own power. And the stronger your passion, the more you will desire. And then... you will fall into depravity.”

Wendy’s excitement from earlier faded away and replaced with fear. She stared at the Lamia Scale in her hands. A powerful wand that could shatter defense, but create strong defense. She thought she was becoming better at her powers, stronger... but what if this was bad?

“But like I said, don’t think about it too much.” Ezlo said. “If it is meant to happen, it will happen.”

“Child, don’t listen to this geezer.” Carla stated. “It’s good for a person to seek knowledge. It’s just a matter of what you do with it.”

All three of them jumped when the ground exploded a few yards away, and the drill train they had evaded before emerged and dragged along the ground. A hatch on the top of the train opened, and a familiar skull-headed witch stuck out. “We meet again, you little ostrich. Thought you could give me the ditch?”

“That’s right, I am back! You haven’t given me the sack! In Orchid Bay, the Fairy Sphere trapped all the citizens in fear. The fairies came and sought the culprit, and I told them I wasn’t it! True, I was to blame, but not all alone, because Miss Marvell here was guilty to the bone! The Fairy King planned to trap me, but the story changed when he… (heard)…”

“Trap me here, you should not! Or your beloved Ocean Princess will rot!” Gruntilda threatened Jorgen.

“What?!”

“The Ocean Fairy, I have in chains. Thought I could use her for selfish gains.”

“YOU have imprisoned Princess Lazuli?!” Jorgen thundered, aiming his King Wand at her.

“Destroy me, trap me, do what you may! But then Princess Lazuli will pay. My minions are ordered to dispose of her, if I do not call by the hour!”

“So here I am, free as a bee. Not bad for little old me.” Grunty said proudly. “But a bargain with them, I made: eviction from my actions, should your bounty be paid.” She held up Wendy’s wanted poster.

“But why do the fairies want to capture me?!” she shouted.

“The Fairy King believes you seek the Fairy’s Tail, he decrees. A powerful wand owned by Her Highness, should not fall to anything less. I will defeat you with my train, the Hag Express, full of lots of pain. Try to catch me, Dear, but Grunty’s victory is clear!” (Play “Gruntilda’s Challenge” from Banjo: Nuts & Bolts.)

Boss fight: The Hag Express

Wendy dodged left when the train charged at her, and when the vessel began to make its turn-around, Wendy ran after to stay behind it. Cannons on the roof launched bombshells, but Wendy kept dodging as she closed in on the train. She was able to jump on a rail on its right side, grinding to the link binding the other car and casting Alohomora to make the nail pop off.

The back car detached as the train swerved around to face Wendy. “So much for my mortar cannons. I’ll slice you up! Say hi to Ganon!” The drill buzzed to life, and Wendy ran away as the train chased. She couldn’t make a tight-enough turn because the train stayed dead behind her, and it was closing in. “Child, make a shield!” Carla yelled.

“OH! Protego!” Wendy stopped, cast a pink bubble over herself and Carla, and both braced for impact. The train BOUNCED up into the air upon hitting the impenetrable bubble.
“Your magic’s stronger than I thought.” said Grunty, still in midair. “Can you spot me underground? I doubt!” The train faced directly downward, descending and drilling through the ground. Wendy and Carla searched around, but when they heard the rumbling, they dodged before the train popped up. It flew into the air, aimed at them, and buried underground again after it missed the girls. The train repeated the process a second time, but on the third, Grunty’s front car ended up getting stuck halfway. “Darn it, I’ve hit a tight spot! I’m not looking too hot!”

Now that Grunty was sticking out of her cockpit, Wendy spun a cyclone around her right fist, charged at the disembodied witch, and PUNCHED her in the glass containing her head. Grunty was pushed back inside the train by the force, and the vehicle flew up out of its trapped position. “I’ll just chase you from afar! And wait until your defense is ajar.” The three-car train began to chase the girl again, so Wendy ran a good distance ahead. She jumped the mini drills that were launched through the ground.

“I don’t wanna keep relying on the shield. I wanna think of other ways. Like…Like this!” Wendy waved her wand in one hand and used the other to airbend. She conjured an Air Ball and hopped on it, balancing as she controlled the ball with her magic. She whipped around at sudden speed going past the drill and grabbing the back of the last train car. She climbed up onto the roof, and Grunty popped up from her car and casted spells at Wendy. The young mage jumped them as she ran across, then dealt a round of punches at Gruntilda.

The witch blew Wendy away with a propulsion spell, and when the wizard landed on the back car, Grunty cast a spell to detach it. The car began beeping, so Wendy leapt off before it exploded. “You’ll no longer be going around. These lasers will keep you bound to ground!” A wall of lasers appeared on the sides of both cars, and would prevent Wendy from Air Balling around them. Grunty sent both ground drills and spells to impede Wendy’s speed, and the train gained speed to catch up. Wendy controlled the wind with her magic, making numerous quick spins to slam the wind against the side of the Hag Express. After four blows, the train fell and dragged on its side.

Wendy was able to run around it, get in view of the next link, and shoot a spell to detach it. After a little more dragging, the drill car got back on its wheels. Grunty popped out and said, “Think you’re fast, you little dragon? Then come and catch me, don’t be laggin’!” The train drove directly forward, and Wendy gave chase as Grunty blasted quick spells that left pink strips of light. However, these strips were solid enough for Wendy to grind on, and slippery enough for her to do so barefooted. She kept going up these conjured rails, jumping Grunt’s spells, and landing on the next, steadily making her way to the witch.

Finally, Wendy landed on the roof, and Grunty screeched when the girl charged up to punch her in the glass. The witch was knocked out of the cockpit, and the train was about to crash into a cliffside. Carla held onto Wendy as the latter jumped off, and both watched the drill car explode against the cliff. (End song.)

“Rack! I’m done messing with this brat!” Grunty stomped. “It’s too exhausting with my suit so fat. I must return to my team. ’Til we meet again, you windy gleam!” The witch Disapparated.

“Sigh… My feet hurt.” Wendy sighed, rubbing her soles.

“Put your sandals back on, Child.”

“That wasn’t a bad performance.” Ezlo said, popping out of Wendy’s backpack before hopping to the ground.
“Oh, Mr. Ezlo! I almost forgot about you.”

“You’re utilizing your Air and magic well. But I’m sure there’s more you can do with both powers combined. I hope you will train yourself to learn that.” The Minish turned and began to leave.

“Huh? Mr. Ezlo, where are you going?”

“I was in the middle of traveling when you came.” Ezlo stopped. (“No, you were meditating.” Carla mumbled.) “I was happy to give you a brief instruction, but I’m not making it a full-time job.”

Ezlo watched her become a dot in the distance, impressed by her speed. “Hnn, no doubt… she is his daughter.”

From the sky above, a tan-skinned fairy with pink hair had recorded the events on his camera. He poofed away.

Fairy World Throne

In the vacant hall of the Fairy World Royal Throne, the princess sat all alone. She glowed like a sun, with massive butterfly wings of neon colors. Her golden hair was big and long like a curtain, and she had strict green eyes. Her pink dress with blue diamonds on the waist ended at her bare feet.

The fairy cameraman poofed before her. “Princess Mavis: I recorded footage of the ‘Windy’ child fighting Gruntilda.”

“Let me see.”

So the fairy showed her the recorded battle. Mavis analyzed Wendy’s moves, her skills and powers. The camera also recorded shots of her running across the Climate Plains. “…Tell Jorgen to call the fairies off. She isn’t dangerous.” Mavis ordered.

“What? But how can you tell?”

“But… she…”

“Trust me, Butch.” Mavis winked. “I’m a pretty good judge of character.”

Facilier’s Voodoo Emporium

Wendy and Carla used their Floo Powder to warp through the fireplace in the train station, and returned to the emporium. “Mr. Facilier, we’re back.”

“Already?” Facilier grinned cheerily. “Did you find him?”

“We did!” Wendy beamed. “I’m learning how to control my wind curse now!”
“Really? That’s amazing!”

“But while we were there, we were attacked by Gruntilda again.” Carla informed. “It seems she made a bargain with the fairies to capture Wendy.”

“What? After that mess she caused in Orchid Bay, they actually trusting her??”

“She seemed to pin the blame on Wendy. If they come after us, we have to try and reason with them.”

“I hope that we can.” Wendy said. “I just can’t take anymore drama. But Mister Facilier, weren’t you going to show me your wand?”

“Ahh, that’s right! Well, grab a seat, girls, and the good doctor will give you a show!”

Wendy jumped up to the chair and sat, then set Carla on her lap. Facilier pulled the yellow ball off the tip of his cane. “Wendy Marvell and Carla, Doctor Facilier presents to you… a one-in-a-few of its kind, premium edition… Devil’s Wand!” He pulled out a blackish-brown wand with pale red designs over it. “Illegal in over 102 countries, including five Dolphin Republics, only usable by wizards who have made deals or have contacts with demons of high authority!”

“Wooooooow!” Wendy gaped.

“You grow more suspicious by the minute.” Carla stated. “Just how did you come by an item like that?”

“Well, when I was a kid, I was hit with a spell from the Demon King, Malladus, enhancing my magical abilities. ’Course, no decent store would sell a Devil’s Wand, thankfully I found one in the Negaverse for an expensive price. (Er, expensive is cheap there.)”

Facilier put the wand back in his cane and screwed the cap back on. “Now, Wendy, if people knew I were using a Devil’s Wand, it would not sit pretty. That’s why I want you to promise not to tell anyone else. A’ight?”

“All right, Mister Facilier.” Wendy nodded. “I promise I won’t betray your trust!”

“Ah knew I could count on you.” Facilier patted the girl’s head. “So, how about we go someplace and you show me whatchu learned?”

“Sounds great!”

The strip of triangle-shaped paper with the eye drawn saw from the ceiling hatch’s gap. The Devil Wand caught its attention.

Ezlo comes from Zelda: Minish Cap, and Mavis is from Fairy Tail. Also, that blue fairy in the Climate Plains was Spree, a fairy OC I adopted from a deviantART user. She’s an artist who wants to draw all the world’s creatures, so she’ll make cameos around animal enemies. In a couple chapters, we will get to the titular focus of the Original Worlds Arc. Stay tuned.

Chapter 26: Birka

Star Train

“I don’t CARE who was supposed to handle the budget for welding equipment.” Dr. Nefarious yelled at his and Plankton’s robots, standing on the edge of where the chunk of ship was ripped off by Mobius. “Get this train fixed or you’ll all be welded to FIX IT!”

“Uuugh…” Mr. Dark appeared out of a vortex.

“Well, LOOK who decided to rematerialize, Mister Most-powerful-being-in-Dreamland. What good did your lousy Protoon do this time?”

“Hey! In the Dream World, the Protoon makes me more powerful than you could possibly imagine. But even with it in my possession, there are rules that Imaginary beings, such as myself, must abide by. (One of those rules is ‘the Protoon must not leave its resting place’, but screw that.) I assure you, however, if I was at my full power here, you would fear me.”

“I’m sure I would, but right now, I fear the amount of Bolts it will cost to have this train fixed. Yell at some of your minions to help out. I need to see if Lawrence recorded that new Gobots episode.”

The robot marched away.

Mr. Dark sighed with aggravation as Plankton hopped over. “If it makes you feel better, I clogged the electrical outlets of his TV with chum.”

Dark turned away, staring at the pink electrical sphere and rubbing a finger against it. “Plankton… do you know what a Creation is?”

“If it’s not my robots, I’ve been using the wrong term all this time.”

“A Creation refers to any sort of life-form that was not naturally created, except by the will of ordinary mortals. Psychicbenders are more well-known for creating Imaginary Friends, but they are not the only ones who can. We Dream Spirits are subconsciously created by sleeping mortals and primarily thrive in the Dream World, and on a more literal sense, robots are created out of physical material and Programs are designed in the sub-dimension, Cyberspace. But strict laws are established upon the species that are created from thoughts. An Imaginary Friend can easily fade into nothing if the Creator no longer cares, or dies, and we Dream Spirits cannot survive in the Waking World for long. Only by the power of the Protoon am I standing here, talking to you.”

“Yes, and I would like to have as much power in the Waking World. Do you know about the Switching Spell? It is a special charm that allows two mortals to trade bodies, based on a matter of trust and agreement. Creations have their own version… via a trading of existences between a mortal and Creation, the imaginary can become real. That was a theorem discovered by Weiss Guertena, a legendary artist. And one that can help me spectacularly, because if I could trade existences with another mortal, I would have power in this world! I could manipulate the dreams of mortals from outside, and rule the Dream Realm from this position.”

“Can’t help ya there, buddy.” Plankton declined simply. “I love you Thaddeus, but not enough to trade my existence.”

“Regardless… it is a theorem I want to research. That is why… I must get my hands on that girl named Mary.” He looked at Plankton with maniacal eyes. “Because she is Guertena’s daughter.”

Skypia; Rubberband Land

It was 10 in the morning before Sector W woke up. Sleeping on solid cloud was a wonderful experience, they never felt more relaxed. So much better than camping on soil. “Yaaawn-d’ow!” Anthony yawned awake, and splatted cream against his face with his hand.

“HAH! And you all wondered why I packed whipped cream!” Aranea shouted.

Anthony angrily wiped it off with his arm, then onto the cloud ground. “Arise and burn like the sun, mine comrades.” Fybi sang from the air. “Yon time to fly to Birka hast dawned. Clothe in yon suits of rubber and let us make haste.” She dropped a skinny blue rubber suit beside each of them.

The kids each went behind a rock-cloud, as they had to take off most of their clothes to fit the rubber suits on. They all appeared skinnier than their bodies, but once the feet were in first, they could see how they stretched to a more worthy size. They were still very hard to squeeze into, then they had to fit the rubber hoods over their hair, making them all appear totally round and hairless. “Hnnn-nn-nn, stupid-!” The girls and Harvey giggled at Anthony, who rolled out from behind his rock in his underwear, unable to squeeze his big foot into the suit.

“He he he he!” Phosphora giggled through her teeth. She blushed at her action, frowned, and turned away. She looked at the suit Fybi had dropped beside her.

“Thou art powerless, but a bender of lightning nonetheless.” Fybi said. “Thine choice to wear is optional.”

“…” Phosphora slung it over her shoulder. “No, I don’t think I will. I grew up in that atmosphere, I want to feel it. …Hang on… where’s your suit?”

“Prithee, am I ungeared?” Fybi sparked with mock-realization. “Nay, I canst not fly without wind on my skin. I will not be able to maneuver thee through storm. I fly metaphorically naked.”

“HUUUUURRRRR!” Aranea struggled to help Anthony squeeze his suit on. She stretched the hood a great length, then- “Ow!” released, letting it snap onto his head. “Ugh… thanks, Nea. Fybi, are you sure you’ll be okay without a suit?”

“The suit wouldst feel uncomfortable on my wings, call it a hunch. I am certain I canst navigate thee through the storm. Phosphora, where is Birka’s direction?”

“Around this time of year, Birka usually flies near Europe. That doesn’t make it easy to track; their clouds shift location pretty quickly.”

“The inside of my vessel possesses yon weather radar. I am certain it canst find Birka’s ominous clouds shouldst I flutter ‘cross the continent. Into the ship, and we shalt lift off.”

Everyone boarded the Angel Wing as Fybi stood the seven feet in front of it, letting it read her motion-sensor straps. The weather map appeared on the front deck in the cockpit, reading them over the Atlantic Ocean. “Yes, Europe is just northeast. And…” Phosphora swiped her finger across the monitor to Europe, and zoomed in, “there is a storm; a big one. About to pass over Greece.”

“Then yon skies of Greece, ’tis where we head.” Fybi smirked with enthusiasm. “I pray that its gods allow us safe passage. Art thine seatbelts buckled? Wilt no one go flying in midflight? Willest—”

Fybi stared. “On-thy-mark-get-set-GO!”

Stage 37: Birka

Mission: Find the lightning island, Birka!

Act 1: Cloud Cruise

This was the very kind of flying Fybi was looking forward to, high, unmatched speed going a hundred miles per hour, thousands of feet over the sea, wind pounding powerfully against her features. Her friends really wished she wouldn’t go too fast, but as long as they had a straightforward path… well, until they get to the storm. “Avast, yon creatures of the sky wisheth to thwart our path! Well, guess once more!” Fybi drew her B.O.W. and blasted arrows at the strings of Spiked Parabuzzies who tried to impale her with their spikes, or the Lakitu who tried to chuck Spinies. Her energy arrows came out at whipping fast pace, although the creatures weren’t defeated instantly because of their shells, Fybi’s arrows got through before long.

An airplane was flying by, unseen at first because of the large cloud in their way. “Whoops! My apologies!” Fybi swooped down, her friends screamed when the ship mimicked the action. She flew smoothly again as she shifted altitude upward, but as if out of nowhere, a plane shot up to them from behind another cloud, but Fybi quickly shifted up higher and soared over its roof. A higher plane soared by from the right, she dodged down, dodged up to avoid a low plane from the left, then when a longer plane was coming up from behind, Fybi dodged left and flew along its side. She slowed her flight to let it pass, smiling at the passengers inside, and shifting heights to dodge the plane’s many wings (for both herself and her ship, requiring Fybi to use good judgment so neither would hit a wing). “The plane schedules are too clustered for my comfort!” Aranea cried.

After this final plane was cleared, Fybi could fly safely through open skies. The clouds were far away, and shadows of landscapes could be seen across the horizon. Once they crossed the sparkling sea, it was a shorter distance away to Birka. “Huh? Fybi, look at all those Nimbis up there.” Sally pointed directly ahead.

Fybi almost thought they were clouds, but drawing closer, she realized they were a fleet of adult Nimbi. “Prithee, art we on path of Skypian militia’s patrol route? Mayhap I shalt alter course this direct—She swerved and dodged by the beat of her heart; the Nimbi had begun shooting arrows. Before long, Fybi was flying through the scrambled fleet, rapidly blasting the Nimbi with her B.O.W.

“Wherefore ist thine reason?” Fybi shouted.

“By order of the Government, these children art not permitted access within Birka’s boundaries. Heed our warnings and return to whence thou cometh.”

“These guys work for the Government?” Harvey asked.

“Wait, I remember Viridi telling me a story.” Phosphora mentioned. “Earth’s World Government convince Nimbi to believe they’re angels of the true Heaven, forced into the mortal world because of everyone’s disbelief. They work with the Government to help realize their ideals.”

“But how do these Government Nimbi know what we’re up to?” Nea asked. “Even we don’t know why Fybi wants to go there.”

“I shalt shoot first and ponder these queries later.” Fybi nimbly dodged and air-rolled every direction, charged a powerful arrow to shoot through a team of Nimbi, then Tornado Spun to create a wind drill, bursting through several more. She shot upward and out of the swarm, flying forth with breakneck speed to get away. “I shouldst not engage them much, lest my sensors rip. We must get away.” She swerved and maneuvered around groups of clouds to lose the Nimbi, but she stopped behind one, whipped around, and whirled a tornado with her arms to blow some Nimbi away, then kept flying. Armored Nimbi began chasing them, wielding Flaming Swords of Vengeance that launched flaming beams.

The Angel Wing took a few blows, much to the passengers’ horror, so Fybi evasively tried to maneuver away, throw air blasts back to disperse the flames, then decided to dive-bomb toward the sea. She about-faced upward while still descending, her ship going behind as a result so she could blast charged arrows at the Flame-sword Nimbi. Most evaded her shots and narrowed closer; then forming an idea, Fybi smirked and spun during her descent, and since the ship always stayed behind her, it whirled around Fybi and knocked some Nimbi away. She faced down again and dove faster, her friends shut their eyes in fear she would hit the sea. Then—Fybi stopped, the ship stopped, the Nimbi sped by and splashed into the sea, which bubbled from their flame swords. Before they could dry their wings, Fybi took off toward the nearby landscape. “We’re about to pass over Spain.” Phosphora reported. “Then over the Mediterranean, past Italy’s southern shore, then Birka is over the Ionian Sea.”

“The wind under my wings grows as great as our destination. I canst feel the air guiding me thither, closer.” Fybi pressed her arms to her body, legs together, and flew faster with as little resistance as possible. Spain’s landscape was passing under so quickly, they needed each moment to marvel it. Especially when Fybi had to start maneuvering through a herd of giant fking Sky Whales. Seriously, how do Earth people not notice all these things in the sky? Fybi turned sideways so her ship could squeeze between some whales. She shifted up to fly over a whale, then dodged left around a line of whales. A large whale glided below her, just for fun she flew down and dashed along the whale’s back, thankfully the ship followed her since she wasn’t stationary. “If some o’ these whales fart, it probly ain’t pleasant for the other ones.” Anthony remarked.

“Anthony, why can’t you keep your freaking mouth shut during these parts?!” Nea shouted. After they were clear of the whales, more Flame-sword Nimbi were after them, riding the backs of Loftwing. Fybi dodged down and flew past them, but the Loftwing about-faced and coughed giant nuts at the Angel Wing. Fybi performed a somersault and got behind the colored birds, shooting the Nimbis in the back with charged arrows. “I do not wish to harm fair birds. Pity they must be tamed for such evils.” A gentle pattering hit her ears, the tiny wooden propellers of Fly Guys. The masked sock creatures fluttered over Fybi, dropping bombs or spikeballs, though the Shy Guys were easy to shoot down with rounds of small arrows.

Phosphora wasn’t looking at the monitor. “It’s… right over there.”

Fybi smirked at the great mass of dark clouds directly ahead. “I know. I doth be checking thine attention span.”

“How do we know that’s even Birka?” Anthony asked worriedly. “Aren’t there like a zillion storms happening per day?”

“We enter yon storm noweth.” (Play “Cloudtop Cruise Thundercloud” from Mario Kart) The inside of the clouds was like a tunnel, in brightest day, the sun couldn’t get inside. The air was still very hot, which was to be expected since there was no rain. Tornados spiraled from the clouds on their upper-left, direct right, and from below, Fybi barely dodged them and got herself and her ship away from their current. Armored Nimbi were still riding into the storm, but their swords were electrified and unleashed such beams. Fybi briefly turned around, blasted one with a charged arrow, dodged two others’ beams, then turned back to resume flight. She swerved around numerous bulky clouds to lose sight of them, if it wasn’t for all the flashing lightning, she couldn’t tell which way was open and which way was solid cloud.

Parts of the clouds swirled and rose to become Dark Puffs, small clouds with smiling faces and sub-sentience, but they were anything but kindhearted smiles as they charged lightning bursts and blasted. Fybi evaded and dispersed the clouds into fragments with her arrows, but parallel rows of Dark Puffs flew along the floor and ceiling, or both walls, connecting with their parallels via electrical bars. Fybi had to shoot a few of the Puffs on either side, creating openings for her ship to fit through. The Angel Wing briefly took a shock, not damaging the kids because of their suits, but it wasn’t healthy for the ship all the same. The great cloud tunnel shifted leftward, where clouds became more pitch-black, but still enough light from the lightning.

The clouds above had many bright flickers, so to be safe from lightning, Fybi landed on the flat cloud path below and ran. Bolts did strike down on various parts of the path, it was a matter of dodging left or right, lest she be forced to stop. The path curved sideways along the right wall, steadily looping to upside-down, the left wall, then back to normal, her quick pace allowing her to shift in these directions. The tunnel ended as Fybi took flight, across an open expanse of the storm where tornados spun in place. Fybi kept a safe distance, but Skytails flew out from the darkness, she repeated her evasive skills and shot their weak tails. “We just need to fly around a few more trenches before we make it.” Phosphora informed.

“Y-Yes, but I don’t see-” said Phosphora.
Fybi forcefully spun her arms and sent a cyclone beam, drilling a hole within the cloud, then spiraled into a wind drill herself and burrowed through the cloud like ground. Her friends spun and spun in the ship, there were moans of disgust when Anthony puked. Fybi felt the sparks of lightning tingling her skin, her wind drill glowed brighter as it drew in the lightning. She withstood the tingles and kept spinning, if she lost momentum now, she would never get through. She came bursting out of the other side as a spinning bolt, but the lightning dispersed as she flew straight.

Fybi really didn’t need a response for that. They wished they’d stayed in Hawaii. “On the bright side, though, we’re nearing the center.” Sally observed on the monitor. “I really can’t wait—”

After a blinding blue flash of lightning, a titanic, godlike figure of bright blue skin, with white hair and beard, glowing blank eyes, and a darker blue toga, rose from the clouds and yelled at them with a mighty voice that rang in their ears. “EISVOLEÍS. EXAFANÍSOU APÓ AFTÓ TO MÉROS. PLÉNONTAI, EPISTREPSETE STON ÁDJ.”

“YAAAAAAAAHHHH!” Sally and Harvey screamed and hugged each other. “What IS that thing?! What is it saying?”

“Incidentally, our native tongue is Greek.” Phosphora replied calmly, though was just as panicked. “It’s telling us intruders to be gone and be purged. It’s our energy-made Thunder Lord, Birka’s guardian; we won’t be able to get through unless we beat it.”

The Thunder Lord roared another sentence in Greek, raising a massive bolt of blue lightning in its right hand before striking down with supreme power. The range and the force resulted was larger than expected, Fybi barely avoided. She stretched and shot charged arrows one after another at Thunder Lord’s face, then proceeded bombarding him with smaller faster arrows. Thunder Lord swiped his arm at Fybi, she dodged up as that strip of air lit with lightning for a brief second. The guardian roared and coughed energy balls at Fybi, easy to dodge as she ceaselessly bombarded arrows. The guardian raised another lightning spear, Fybi blasted two charged arrows at his wrist, the deity roaring when his attack ceased. He unleashed a deafening cry, blasting endless beams from his eyes, Fybi had to maneuver far away so neither her or the ship would be struck.

“All of it is lightning created from complex arrangement of clouds with positive and negative charges.” Phosphora replied. “It’s Lightning 101, pretty basic stuff for Birkans.”

“I view the weather channel every day, I know what creates it. And how it disappears.” Fybi whirled her arms and blasted a constant air gust at the Thunder Lord’s base. She spun it like a tornado, poured a lot of strength into expanding, trying to push the clouds away. The Thunder Lord threw another spear, Fybi zipped to the left, dodged, then flew far up into the sky. “Thou wilt not enjoy the sensation, so thou wouldst understand.” Fybi smacked the sensor strap on her waist, and the ship deactivated. The kids were horrified, but the parachute equipped and slowed their descent. Fybi spun into a wind drill, dove beneath the clouds, and spun and spun and spun.

The guardian cried thunderous curses in Greek, staring at his hands which steadily began to fade. The Thunder Lord roared to the heavens before he was nothing, his clouds separated. Fybi flew up, back faced toward the Angel Wing’s tip, and let it read her sensors. The parachute retracted as Fybi resumed flight. After the last few clouds moved away, the expansive island was in view. “There it is… Birka!” Phosphora beamed.

“Sweet!” said Harvey. (End song.)
The Lightning Nimbi on Birka were both confused and a little excited to have a visitor. Down from the clouds he came, on his homemade spaceship. But Killer Bee, the dark-skinned ninja rap star with yellow hair and sunglasses, was not just touring. No, he was a little lost. “Hmmm.” Bee looked at a map of space. “I was almost certain that wormhole to Termina was three light-years left of the third quasar. Unless it was counting that one way off my path. Ah hope it wasn’t a temporary wormhole. Hmmm…” He folded the map and looked around. “One thing’s for certain, Ah don’t got a clue what this planet is. It’s not bad, though. The staticky air feels good on my nerves. Ah feel a nice tune comin’. Gonna find me a club or somethin’, introduce some beats to these flashy angels. Fools, ya fools…” He jigged his way up the path.

Under a flash of lightning, the island denizens saw another ship approaching, guided by a redhead angel. Despite the powerful winds, Fybi was able to slow to a halt over the shore, landing softly as her ship did the same. Her friends climbed out of the cockpit to welcome themselves to the atmosphere. Well, the other four were wearing rubber suits, so they weren’t too welcoming, but Phosphora felt a feeling of nostalgia tingle her nerves.

Birka was a fiercely windy place, and though no sun could penetrate its dark, endless-spiraling clouds, the electricity kept everything bright as day. The Nimbi had shades of gray with their white skin to match the clouds, and they wore mostly loose robing. With their sparkling blue wings of energy, they zipped everywhere all the time, one part of the island to the other in the blink of an eye. There were many metal devices, small platforms that uplifted to floating houses via lightning beams, platforms that traveled along electric-powered rails all across the island.

A Birkan man zipped up above them, “Heeey welcometoBirka, islandoflightningstormsandenergy, wehopeyouenjoyyourselayhere, pleasevisitourgiftshopstouristsstayatourhotelsforfree, havefun!” He zipped away before they could ask him to slow down.

A group of Birkan kids appeared around the Sector W members (except Fybi, who was airborne). “Hey’re these guys humans?”

“They got funny outfits!”

“Come play shockball with us!”

“So lame.”

“Watch me fly to Dashi’s Peak—watch me do it again!”

They all zipped away before I could briefly describe their appearance. “Well, the people are awful friendly.” Sally smiled.

“How short is a Birkan’s lifespan, anyhow?” Anthony asked.

“Pray, doth not ask such things.” Fybi told him from the air. “Each and every split second, the Birkan lives their life vigorously.”

“Kmm, he he!” the friends giggled.

“…Prithee?”

“Fybi, your…!” Anthony choked snickers.
Fybi’s frizzy hair was puffy like an afro, standing right upward. She glanced at it and laughed softly. “Thou hast gotten me thither.” She tried to pull it down, but it stayed standing. “Birka’s air be very static, unpredictable. Shalt we begin knowing the structure of this land?”

“There’s a playground I always used to hang around up this path.” Phosphora said. “Let’s see if it’s still up.”

They followed a road that was carved into a small gorge. The more they were in Skypia, they more they wondered if platforms, stairs, or pathways were even necessary if everyone flies all the time. Of course, there was always the chance of visiting humans, not to mention flightlessness was a disability. There was a park at the end of this path, where Birkan kids were playing. The swingset’s swings could loop constantly around the bar they hung from, and took the form of electric circles when kids used them. The roundabout flew high into the air when kids powered them with electric charges. Hoops sat at the top of thin poles, each at varying altitudes, and tested kids’ precision as they zigzag-zipped through them. The five Birkan kids from before were in the air above the playground, one of them holding a metal ball, which was really a grouping of stick-like bars with wires, wrapped into a sphere with many gaps. While I have a moment, the three boys were named Dio, Brendix, and Laxy, while the two girls were named Amper and Ela.

Dio lit the ball with his power, causing a blue electrical sphere to shine in the center. He looked down and saw the humans. “Look, it’s those humans again.”

“Betcha they can’t.” said Brendix.

“Hey humans, lookathis.” Dio zipped above, kicked the ball at Ela, she zipped to its side, kicked it at Brendix, he kicked yards away, Laxy zipped that distance and kicked at Amper, she zip-flipped and kicked the ball towards Anthony. Thinking fast, Anthony kicked the ball with his rubber-covered foot, and considering the speed at which it came, it was amazing his kick sent it across the park.

Impressed, the five Birkans zipped down to Anthony, fluttering in a circle above him. “That was strong.” said Dio. “What’s that about?”

“Are you herculean?” asked Amper.

“Who are you, anyway.” said Brendix.

“Wait, I’ve seen those teeth somewhere. He’s an Earth-beaver.” Ela said.

“How’d you get up here, Beaver?” Laxy asked.

“We wear things so we don’t get struck by lightning.”

“Why’re you worried?” Brendix asked. “Gonna die? Sure, we can shock you to death. But we’ll just shock you back to life. Want me to kill somebody and show you?”

“No, please!” Sally panicked. “We’d rather not test it!”
“You guys need an official tour.” Laxy told them. “We can do that, here I’ll give a tour right now. Try to keep up.” He zipped away—he came back, “Thus concludes our tour. Any questions?”

“Thou mayest not notice, but yon woman of the still yellow hair wast one of thou, at one point.” Fybi mentioned. “We hath come hither based on her knowledge.”

The Birkans flew around Phosphora. “So you used to live here? Where’s your wings, why’d you move?” Ela asked.

“If you’re from here, tell us stuff.” Brendix told her.

“Okay, okay, sheesh.” Phosphora waved them off. “Birka was created a long time ago by ordinary airbending Nimbi who bended hundreds of thunderclouds together into an eternal fortress, and have mended Island Clouds from the same type clouds. Buildings were constructed, society formed, they learned how to bend lightning through airbending, and in time, they developed lightningbending in general. Of course, lightning is unstable and needs to be controlled, so the five Thunder Towers were constructed around the island. They absorb the energy from the everlasting clouds outside and provide power for the entire town.”

“. . .” The five Birkans looked at each other weirdly. “We don’t pay attention in history, we don’t know this stuff.” Laxy said.

“Except the Thunder Towers.” Amper said. “Everyone knows them. My mom says they’re better than ever, because of God Thor.”

“The people of Birka believed the Thunder God, Thor would appear one day, and bless pure energy unto us.” Phosphora explained herself. “22 years ago, he came from the sky above Dashi’s Peak.”

“You were there when he came?” Brendix asked, the kids zipping around her. “What was he like? Did all the girls go crazy? Did YOU go crazy?”

“Like you wouldn’t.” Ela remarked.

“Don’t you guys got other people to bug?” Anthony asked.

“Fine, screw you.” Dio said. “Let’s go prank that fat human that showed up here.” They zipped away.

The sectormates approached the central statue in the park, constructed from solid Island Cloud that was black as onyx. He wore ancient garb and a cape, held a staff with an electric spark inside a cube, and a helmet which kept his still, sharp face exposed. For the moment, they had no developed opinion on the god, statues were common in places. Phosphora led them down a nearby village street, where several houses or buildings were at varying levels on either side. They’d like to say the citizens strolled or skipped merrily up the street, but no, most of them were zipping place to place. At times, they were afraid of people bumping into them. They tried to avert their eyes away from the people to avoid getting dizzy.

The kids exchanged wondering glances before Sally said with a smile, “Well, it’s no vacation if we don’t embrace their culture. Who knows, it might be tasty.” She took a cookie and bit a piece, the light electric charge sparking in the empty chunk. She swallowed, “A little tingly, but very tasty, too.”

Her friends shrugged and took a cookie themselves, then Phosphora, smiling as she savored the taste. She really forgot how good these were. “Hmhmhmhm!” Fybi laughed. “Mine tongue feels most jiggly! Pray that it dost not jump from my mouth and run.”

“Yeah, these are kinda fun.” Anthony smiled. “You use to have these, Phosphora?”

“What’s that?” Harvey asked after swallowing.

Phosphora mentally counted down. …Anthony jumped back from a spark in his mouth, then Harvey, Sally, Fybi, Nea. “W-What’s th-” Nea said, her head shook as she uplifted off the ground several feet due to a shock, then landed. Sally flew several yards back, Harvey slammed against a pole, Anthony spun vertically like a wheel, Aranea stumbled and twitched along the ground, Sally zigzag-zipped sideways around the air (within a set area), Harvey uplifted a few feet as his ear hairs stuck out, while Fybi just inched farther and farther to the sky.

After that silly sensation was done, the group proceeded to the end of the village path, standing atop a steep hill that overlooked a gray cloud river. “You might guess it, but our main source of hydration is rainwater.” The lighting woman commented. “Sky people are more adapted to it, but you humans might think differently.”

“We play outside in the rain sometimes.” Sally said. “We taste it. It’s so-so.”

Several yards away from them, in reality high above the river, five familiar Birkans were zipping.

“Guess who.” Anthony said.

The shockball kids zipped above them. “Hey it’s the humans again.” said Dio.

“They’re just now getting here?” Amper asked.

“They’re so slow.” said Brendix.

“Excuse us if we aren’t lightningbenders.” Anthony stated.

“We’re just saying, Birkans make a hundred rounds around the island in minutes.” Dio zipped away, came back. “We aren’t used to visitors.”

“Especially humans.” Ela said. “God Thor doesn’t like outsiders. If he knows you’re here, he could smite you.”

“Everyone else seems nice.” Sally replied with a frown. “Not to suggest anything, but wouldn’t they be smite, too?”

“It’s because you’re kids, so they’re nice.” Brendix zipped away, returned. “They know you can’t stay here, so they feel self-satisfaction in showing their homeland to visitors, in their few moments.”
“Not that we’d tattle on you.” Amper said. “That’s what grown-ups do. Besides, you shouldn’t have to worry about anything since you’re kids. Still, don’t get too close to Dashi’s Peak. See you in a few minutes!” And they were gone again.

“Where’s Dashi’s Peak?” Anthony asked.

“That’s it over there.” Phosphora pointed at a great, dark-gray tower a few miles away. It was roughly 80 feet wide, but stretched hundreds into the sky. Its top appeared to be at the center of the spiraling clouds above. “God Thor lives all the way at the top.”

“They can never just live on the second floor, huh.” Anthony gulped, his fear of heights kicking in. Well, at least they might not have to go up there.

Three blue strips of straight, flat lightning zipped across the air, the force creating a strong breeze that almost moved them. They watched as the source of those strips swerved leftward around the island in the distance. “What were those?!?” Harvey beamed.

“Oh-ho, those.” Phosphora chuckled. “Those would be Lightning Chariots. Birkans can only go at lightspeed a few meters every interval, but those things can fly to other planets if they wanted to. The Thundercorns (lightning unicorns) that pull them are among the fastest creatures in the universe. It takes a strong stomach and sense of will to control them.”

“Sweet!”

“I get the feeling our skulls would fly out of our noggins if we attempt to ride one.” Nea commented. “Well, as a small estimate.”

“Pray, dost thou ever wish to ride one as a youth?” asked Fybi.

Phosphora blushed and looked away. “Maybe my former dream was… to become the fastest Chariot Master around.”

“Ha ha HA! Thou were a true child!”

“It does look pretty cool.” Anthony sat on the ground and tried to scratch his arm through his suit. “But I still don’t get why we came here.”

“Phosphora, thou sayest yon people of Birka hath long awaited Thor’s arrival.” Fybi recounted. “So wherefore were thee to speak of him in a negative light? Thou speakest as though he were not a god, but a mere king which calls himself such. You spoke of him as a stranger, whom appeared atop the peak, as though thou hast not expected. Am I on track?”

The kids stared at Phosphora curiously. The woman shifted her feet and looked down with a downtrodden expression. “Your few minutes are up!”

“DAAAH!” A shockball flew by and bashed Anthony in the face. The boy bumped all the way down the hill and splashed in the Rainwater River. The Birkan kids flew above his friends, staring down. “Maybe that was too hard.” Dio said.

“Toldja he couldn’t.” Brendix remarked.

“We should help him.” Laxy suggested.

“No, we might shock him to death.” Amper noted.
“Oh well.” Ela said, and they were gone.

“Ay. We shalt help him.” Fybi flew down, followed by Sally and Harvey who slid down the slope.

Phosphora sat down with her legs hanging over the hill’s edge, and Aranea joined her to watch the show. “I don’t want to offend any of your people, but I only believe in one God.” The girl said. “Even with all my parents’ stories, I was raised a Christian, so He’s the only God I believe in. Stories of God and Jesus make me feel… warm inside. …Hehe, I’m not boring you, am I?”

“I see why you would think that.” Phosphora said, still turned away.

“Fybi has a point, you said that your people have been waiting for Thor to arrive, but on the S.C.A.M.P.E.R., you talked about him differently. …Did you not… believe in Thor?”

Phosphora smiled sardonically. “I believed in Thor greater than anyone. I believed… for a very long time, he would come.”

“So what happened?”

A thin, dark veil fell over the sky that shadowed Phosphora’s eyes. Her smile alone looked comical and mocking. “I learned that religion is for fools.”

Sector W7 Treehouse

After the team had dropped Sector V at their treehouse, Sector W7 returned to their own. They were delighted to breathe the salty air of Water 7 again, and wanted to return to the living room so they could pass out. “’ey, you girls flip on the TV and look for something good, I gotta make a phone call right quick.” Chimney told them before leaving to the hallways.

“You girls as hungry as I am?” Apis asked, going to the kitchen. “I’ll cook us something to eat.”

Aisa perked at the thought of her friend’s terrible cooking. “I-I could, run down to the market really quick.” She hurried to stop her.

April and Mary carried their canvases to the former’s room, storing them with the collection. “There’s another of a hundred adventures I won’t soon forget. Hmhm, and Mary, I see you have some yourself.” April giggled at her cousin’s crayon drawings.

“Yes, but… April… do you ever consider coming back to Germany?”

April looked a little quizzical at the question. “I guess I could, if I asked Cheren to transfer sectors… but I’m happy here. Why, do you miss me that much?”

“Not just transferring sectors, I mean… stop doing this KND stuff altogether.”

“Why would I do that?”

“Because, it’s dangerous!” Mary said with a worried, downtrodden look. “We almost got killed by those people, and some of them are really scary. That cloaked guy, he said…he said something creepy.” Mary replayed the words in her head.

“You can drop the act around me. We both know what you really are. I have an acquaintance in the Dream World, you see. You’re… hur hur hur. A very interesting specimen.”

“Oh, right… you got hurt by that guy, I saw. We’ll get you treated if it still hurts, Mary.” April smiled. “Don’t let anything he said get to you, bad guys are always pulling this stuff.”
“Um…” Mary looked away, sadly. Truthfully, she didn’t know what that man was talking about, yet it gave her a foreboding feeling. She didn’t know how to address this to April, however. “I guess so.”

“You’ll feel better after a snack.” April put an arm around Mary. “Let’s go with Aisa and get your favorites.”

Mary gasped. “Macaroons, macaroons, yaaaaay!” She skipped as April led her along.

In Chimney’s room, the Sector Leader switched on her personal transmission monitor. “Sector W7 Leader Numbuh W473R, requesting Sector JP’s Numbuh Chinese New Year. Kodama, pick up!!”

The static screen projected a jovial girl with a light-red, knotted headband under her short, shiny black hair. She wore a blue robe with yellow, spiked explosion designs on the shoulders, orange sleeves on her undershirt, and had purplish-red eyeliner under her vibrant black eyes. She grinned and greeted Chimney with a salute. “What’s-up, Chimney!”

“First I wanted to say, that your fireworks blew this shitty giganto train’s mind away like the day yo’ numbuhed for!!”

“Wow, really? Well, I’m glad to help out!”

“Yes, and I woulda wasted them beautifully, if I ain’t got king shrunk!!”

“Oh….” Kodama’s face sunk, but she still smiled sheepishly. “You got small again, huh?”

“Yes, and Giganto totally humiliated my baby! Now I gotta work extra hard to make her as beautiful as ever!”

“I’m sure you can handle that easy, Chimney!”

“NOT DONE! If I’m gonna give those deki sokonai a show, I’m gonna need bigger more beautiful fireworks. That’s where you come in, Ko-chan!” She pointed vigorously.

“What do you want me to do, exactly?”

“Do whatchu always been doin’! Make me the biggest, most powerful fireworks you gooot!!”

“Even more powerful than before?!!”

“Yes! I need fireworks big enough to dazzle a whole galaxy, and you’re the greatest explosive expert I know! So what say you, Ko-chan? Are you NOT the biggest firework fanatic around?!”

“Whaddyou mean, of course I am!” she yelled defensively.

“Then can YOU make fireworks good enough ta be on the R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N.?!”

“You better bet I can!” She balled a fist and smirked.

“Then will YOU work your ARSE off to CREATE such explosives?!”

“I WILL, Chimney!”

“I AIN’T HEAR YOU LOUD ENOUGH! Yell that to me in a full sentence!”

“I’LL CREATE THE BIGGEST, BRIGHTEST FIREWORKS YOU’VE EVER SEEN! SO YOU “BETTER MAKE EXTRA SPACE IN YOUR TRAIN, ‘CAUSE THEY’LL BLOW YOU AWAY!”

“GOOOOOD! I expect them before month’s end!!”

“YEEEEAAH!”

“Yaaaaaaaah!”

“YEEEEEEEEAAAAAAH!” They both screamed, before the screen switched off.

Mocha stomped in with a confused look. “What’s with all the Japanese screaming?”

Flora Galaxy; Galactic News Studio

“-so Planet Rovere is sure to see good times with their latest discovery of molten Alumitanium.” The green-skinned anchorman reported.

“In other news,” continued the anchorwoman of the same species, “tomorrow, Earthican billionaire Ted Wassanasong will begin construction of his project, Golfing in the Stars, which will be established over the would-be former Violet Dwarf System.”

“Planetary citizens all over the galaxy are excited and have shown their support for the Earthican benefactor, whom is supported by Galaxia’s very own Mom of Mom’s Friendly Robot Company. Speaking of which, if I may, I bought the greatest robot from them a few weeks ago, hasn’t shorted out once. Robot 1-X, my antennae, please.”

A short, floating white robot with a round-square head, a blue monitor face, and no legs glided over, extracted Q-tips from its fingers, and twisted gunk out of the anchorman’s green antennas. “Your ears are void of all unnecessary wax and I shall begin refining them into a bottle cake as you requested.”

“Not what I wanted to hear before dinner…” said the anchorwoman with disgust.

“Hey, you can’t go in there!” The doors swung open when Arianna burst in, escaping the large-bodied guards.

The child ran behind the stand between the anchorpeople. “People of Florae, you must NOT support Ted Watchacallit!”

“Did our translators spell his name wrong?” the anchorman said into his headset.

“Young lady, this isn’t a playground, do you have-?” The anchorwoman was cut off as Arianna spoke.

“The people of this galaxy can’t allow this man to destroy an entire system just for some pastime entertainment. I have flown by the Violet Dwarf System many an occasion, and I’m certain many of you have, too. The Violet System is a wonderful place, endlessly frolicking with creatures too majestic for our eyes. Those creatures do not exist in many quadrants, they struggle to survive today, so who are we to let them die tomorrow?”

“Miss, we can see you’re very sensitive about the topic,” the anchorman intervened, “but the money was already donated, the people of Florae support Ted. The star system isn’t located too
“YES IT WILL. Do you not think these animals are people, too? Don’t think their habitats are settlements? Very well, as part of nature, stronger or more intelligent species hunt and kill the weaker for food. But that act is terrible on its own, even if necessary, so to kill them just for temporary entertainment is soulless! How would you all feel if the same thing happened to you, WHAT IF we were to die tomorrow, every one of us?!”

“All I’m saying is, try to imagine yourselves in the animals’ place. Grazing in your homes, your markets, carefree and innocent, when all of a sudden, a force beyond your control rains down and destroys everything you care about. A being that deems itself far greater than us has no qualms, it laughs at our planets reduced to rubble and lives its existence happy and uncaring. Never once had it considered what we felt. All the children we love, the parents and friends. Our existence meant nothing to this ‘person’. How would you know the animals don’t think and act in their own special way? Living lives as average as ours, for the sake of living. Do we think ourselves as gods? …I guess we must.”

The news aliens were silent for a while. Everybody in Florae was silent before their TV screens. For an 11-year-old girl, she sounded very passionate and sure of herself. They never really looked at this whole operation from a different point of view. True, a lot of parents took their kids to see the star system, it was a pretty place. They wondered if a golf course would be any better. Sure, it might be wicked fun, but establishments are sure to be torn down after a while, the Violet System has been there for eons, roughly.

“Yeah, but then again, she’s just a little kid.” Arianna gasped when someone else barged in the room and shoved her away. It was Ted’s son, Chane Wassanasong, a handsome black-haired Laotian of 15, with a white shirt and gray jacket that made him resemble his father. “But the Chanester thinks differently. Hey ladies, how’s it hangin’?” He winked.

“I’m just saying, who cares if a few animals in the universe go ‘bye’? I mean, it’s not like we see ‘em all the time on our home planets, right?”

There were mutters between a club of teenage boys at a party. “Well, yeah, maybe…”

“Before long, they’ll grow old and die within a fraction of our own lifespans. And since all they have are those little strips of asteroid, there won’t be too many mates to have more kids with. The last of those generations will just get old and die alone, and no one wants that, right?”

“NOOOOO!” screamed more girls.

“It’d be better to die together than alone, that’s what I’m saying! But you guys, all you male and female species out there can have fun for years to come at my dad’s new golf course. Cotton candy made of all fruity flavors for the little ones.” He showed a picture of the rainbow-colored candy.

“Mommy, I want that!” an alien girl pointed.

“For the adults, a million different flavors of wine, including static, skin cream, and garbage sludge.”
“Mmmmm I want that.” A blobbish garbage alien smiled hungrily.

“So if you wanna see animals, pick up a pet or something. We can lose an asteroid field-full. Continue supporting Ted’s Golfing Galaxy, and please, tune in or join us tomorrow, and witness the unveiling of Golfing in the Stars.” He knelt down and put an arm around Arianna. “What say you, little lady? Will you come golf with us?”

Arianna stared enticingly at his gorgeous face. Her purple skin flushed, she spoke excitedly, “I would love to, Chane!”

“You heard it here, folks, on Channel One Quadrillion!” the anchorwoman grinned. “Tune in tomorrow as we film the bombing of the Violet Dwarf System!” The cameras panned away and the anchors left. Arianna was still blushing as Chane walked away. …The color immediately drained from her face, and no longer did she want to live anymore.

Birka

“Cough, cough, keh. Huff… huff…” Anthony was soaking wet by the time Sally and Harvey were able to fish him out of the water with their yo-yos. He had the soaked appearance as though he were out during a rainstorm. Aranea and Phosphora eventually chased after them, and Anthony flowed quite a distance up the river. “Uuugh… now I’ll never get this dumb suit off.”

To Aranea, the comical ordeals that happen to Anthony get old after too much. Instead, she let her mind wander to the area they were now. They were at the edge of a small, cluttered, decrepit village that looked like a power plant, thin wires connecting house-to-house with small, weak sparks traveling along them at random intervals. At the other side of the village stood a Thunder Tower. “What’s this place?” Nea asked.

Meanwhile, Fybi had flown over the island’s edge and beneath the whole mass, to get beneath the river’s base as she used her airbending to keep Anthony within. Since cloud water was weaker than land water, Anthony sunk faster, so this was a necessary precaution, of course Fybi didn’t wanna submerge through herself, lest her wings get too droopy. The bottom of Birka was unsurprisingly barren—except for the gigantic upside-down antenna not too far away. The grayish-black device shone with energy, before sending a powerful beam directly through the clouds below. Phosphora wondered if this was some strange means of creating lightning for the earth-dwellers, but she would ask Phosphora. She quickly flew toward the edge to return to her friends.

Very near the large antenna, an armored Birkan saw her. He flapped up through an opening in the cloud and up Dashi’s Peak that the antenna was connected to. He landed at the very top and kneeled before the man on the throne. “O Great and Powerful Thor. A little Nimbi child has seen your machine. Her wings were feathered, so she must be from outside.”

Thor tapped his fingers on the armrest. “Outside, is she?” He spoke with a light, calm voice.

“Yes, and according to earlier reports, she is accompanied by four human children, and one adult.”

“Would this adult be the singing human that was reported previous?”

“No, it was a woman. With yellow hair and little clothing. We do not know how the singing human landed here, but our Thunder Lord was destroyed half an hour ago, after he appeared. The only explanation is these kids. Shall we make ready to banish them from the island?”

“…Not yet.” Thor picked up his staff and stood. His greasy black hair was shiny and smooth, his sharp face stretched a smile. “I want to meet them first.”

I’m somewhat at an impasse for this arc. I wanted for a fair bit of time in Birka, but I also don’t think I can stretch the conflict for 4 more chapters. Symphonia was regrettably rushed since I wanted to make the 10-chapter mark, that’s why. Not to mention, the Presidents Saga coming up has a lot of stuff about it, so I could dedicate more chapters to it. So yeah, this saga may end soon. Next time, we will finish Arianna’s arc, and if there’s time, learn Phosphora’s backstory. See ya.
Chapter Summary

Nerehc Onu goes to meet Ragaj Gnik.

This chapter is short and is mostly a setup. But next time is when the real action begins.

Chapter B-16: Whereabouts of the Few

Reykjavík, Iceland

Egroeg and AlyakAm waited for a chance to steal the spare S.C.A.M.P.E.R. in the Uno House. When Sector V went on a mission to Dressrosa, the siblings seized the chance. It took them a while to find Iceland’s location in the Posiverse; it was in the opposite direction it usually would’ve been. They saw a treehouse growing from a house they recognized as their own.

“I wonder if our parallels are home.” Egroeg asked tonelessly as they stepped off the ship, which they parked in the front yard.

“We can determine that by our Positive mother’s reaction if we knock.” AlyakAm replied.

With that, the younger sister knocked on the house’s front door. A woman who looked like their Positive mother, Misty King, answered. “George, MaKayla! Welcome back from space!” She grinned.

“I guess they aren’t home.” Egroeg said.

“Who’s not home, George?”

“Greetings, Mother.” AlyakAm spoke with a higher tone, in attempt to sound like how she perceived her Positive to sound. “Is Father—I mean, Mr. King—I mean… yes, Father, is he home?”

“N…No, he’s still at the Great Clock.” Misty replied, confused by her daughter’s behavior. “He should be back by tomorrow…”

“That is well.” Egroeg said. “We will go up to our rooms, and change clothes, and brush our teeth, and look over Kids Next Door files. You do not need to come check on us, because we will be down for dinner.”

The two kids with their blank expressions entered the house as Misty watched them. She couldn’t shake the feeling that they sounded too much like robots today.

Egroeg and AlyakAm passed their Positives’ rooms and entered their parents’ room. AlyakAm searched the closet, moving the couple’s clothes aside to find nothing unordinary. She picked up a book leaned against the closet’s corner. It was a copy of the Avalaran fairytale, Fairy Sisters… there was a white tape under the title, but AlyakAm couldn’t pick it off. “Meh.” She put the book back in the closet, not thinking it was relevant.
Egroeg searched the nightstand drawers. There was a crayon drawing of Jagar and Yuki, smiling and holding hands. There was a drawing of a six-fingered hand. There was a drawing of a smiling green skull with green eyes. Egroeg decided to search under the bed. He pulled out a heavy book and read its title. “AlyakAm, look at this.” His sister walked over and looked at the book on the floor. Its cover depicted a body of green mist, with a hooded head on its top and bottom. Ghosts of my Family, by Alexander Pines. (Illustrations by Trevor Wickens.)

They turned the book over and read the description on the back. For as long as I can remember, I was haunted by green ghosts. My father claimed that he too was haunted, and that his father was haunted… So I sought to learn the truth behind these spirits which I have called Shimmers. My colleague, Trevor Wickens, and I travel to find a way to delve into the hidden confines of the human mind and discover the meaning of dreams.

“We should look up the online reviews and see if it’s any good.” AlyakAm said.

Egroeg opened the book—there was a paper taped inside the back cover. *See also: Diary of Stanford Pines. …No, I am not an egotist.

They searched the room, but found no trace of any supposed diary. “AlyakAm… do you suppose our Positive father keeps things in the basement, too?”

The siblings quietly crept down the stairs, seeing Misty was cooking in the kitchen. They snuck into the door they recognized as the basement entrance. Instead of finding a meeting room where their father gathered a bunch of intergalactic supervillains, there was dusty junk piled in the basement. There was an upside-down poster of a tree hanging on the wall… no, apparently the tree itself was upside-down, and a room underneath the tree was circled.

Egroeg found a dusty book laying on its front. Diary of Stanford Pines. “Why are these people so fascinated with these… Pine Trees?” AlyakAm asked.

“AlyakAm, you remember the stories our father has told us, right?” Egroeg asked, flipping pages of the diary. “The connections I’m drawing from these books is much too similar. Which means that, perhaps somewhere in here, is a clue as to how…” He glimpsed at a peculiar page with bolded writing.

Dear Diary: ASTONISHING! Today, I learned the equation that baffled scientists for eons: the equation that can cancel the seal of any chi-block anywhere! I wrote it in my journal—but don’t tell anyone!

“UUUUGH, another book we have to find!” AlyakAm groaned.

“Now I understand how Mr. King stole from Father.” Egroeg said, looking at the poster of the upside-down tree.

Knock knock knock, the sound rang from upstairs. “Oh, maybe it’s Jagar!” Misty’s voice cheered, making no sound with her bare feet as she fast-walked to answer it.

Adrenaline filling them, Egroeg and AlyakAm went up the basement stairs and peeked through the door, watching Misty about to answer the front door. “What if it’s our Positives? Or worse, Mr. King?” Egroeg asked.

“If it’s our Positives, we can make the claim we were just doing a playful prank.” Alyak said. “If it’s their father, I vote to sacrifice you.”
“Why? It’s not like their powers can effect us.”

“But if he knows that equation, he can.”

Misty answered the door. “Oh, Miyuki, hello! And I see you brought friends over. Lemme see, you kids were… Dillon York and Melody Jackson, right?”

“Haha, I guess they are!” Ikuyim’s cheery voice said. “Hi, Positive Egroeg and AlyakAm’s Mother! We’re looking for our friends, Egroeg and-”

“GUYS!” Egroeg shouted (still sounding a bit toneless) as he and Alyak ran up to them.

“THERE you two are.” Nollid stated. “We need to talk to you about a few things.”

“Kids, what’s going-” Misty tried to ask.

Misty looked down at Ydolem’s solemn smile and creepy white eyes. “I enjoy your choice of décor.” Ydolem said before calmly following the others upstairs.

The five kids gathered in George and MaKayla’s room, and slammed the door. “All right,” Nollid began, “I don’t know if you heard, but Nerehc was possessed by the goddess, Medusa, who apparently wiped all our memories of his existence until a while ago. The last thing he and Sipa remember was leading you two to the Posiverse to meet your matches. Is that just a coincidence? If not, why did you end up finding your way here by yourselves? You didn’t notice that they didn’t follow along?”

“That’s why we volunteered to come here and look for you.” Ydolem said.

“Actually, she kinda just wanted to come outta nowhere.” Ikuyim mentioned.

“I have a reason. AlyakAm…” Ydol stared at the female Gnik. “You were the one who came to me that night, weren’t you? On the night before my brother became a traitor… you were the one who made me keep that secret.”

AlyakAm was silent. “Wait…” Nollid said, remembering that night, “you mean the secret you wanted me to transfer out of your mind?”

“…Your vow is to keep secrets, isn’t it?” AlyakAm asked. “So whatever this secret is… you should hold by your word.”

“But is what you’re doing here have to do with that secret?” Ydolem asked. “Because… why else would you come here alone?”

Ydolem looked saddened, folding her hands behind her and leaning forward. “I…”

Someone knocked on the door. Egroeg answered, finding Misty standing there. “Mother…”

“…You kids… are Negatives, aren’t you?”

“If you know what our Positives look like,” Nollid began, “then we thought you would catch on to us earlier. We didn’t mean to intrude, we just wanted to bring these two home.”
Misty looked at her Negative children. “…If you two are my kids’ Negatives, then your father must be…”

The two made a break for the room’s dresser mirror—Misty used her timebending to freeze the room in time. Nollid, Ikuyim, and Ydolem stood like statues, frozen with shocked expressions. Egroeg and AlyakAm observed their frozen forms. “Whuh…” Misty was confused as to why they didn’t freeze. “Why are you still…”

Egroeg and AlyakAm pulled up their shirts. Japanese symbols were inscribed on their bellies. “Our father cut these chi-blocks into our bodies to make us immune to all forms of bending.” Egroeg explained. “Except, of course, to the bending of the Lord of Time, according to Father. You must know his name. It’s ___.”

Misty stared at him confusedly. AlyakAm glanced at Ydolem. “Oh. It seems the Secret-Keeping Spell is still in effect.” She said. “Our father forbade us from speaking his name, so I told it to Ydolem, and it seems Nollid ensured that no one but her or me would be able to utter it.”

“I wonder if we told her the equation to disable chi-blocks, no one would be able to use it.” Egroeg said.

“You kids-!” Misty lunged to grab them, but Egroeg and AlyakAm dodged and jumped the woman, bringing her to the floor.

“You know, if I killed Egroeg, then your son George would die.” Alyak mentioned. “And you couldn’t stop me from doing so. So you have to tell us where it is. The item your husband stole from our father.”

“I’m afraid it’s not here!” Misty grunted, trying to shake the kids off. “And I wouldn’t allow you to take it back for him!”

“It doesn’t matter.” Egroeg said. “We figured we’d kidnap you, anyway. According to our father, your husband is afraid to face him. So he won’t try to save you if we-”

“Stupefy!” Nollid casted stunning spells to make Egroeg and AlyakAm stiff. He, Ikuyim, and Ydolem were mobile again. “I guess your chi-blocks don’t make you immune to magic. When you jumped this lady, your chi-blocks wore her Freeze off.”

“It’s all right, Miss Posi-Mom!” Ikuyim said happily. “We’ll bring these two back home and make sure they don’t do this again.”

“Heh heh… Thank you.” Misty smiled nervously. She watched as they carried the stunned Negative kids out of the house, then she shut the door. “Sigh…” She put a hand to her forehead. “Jagar, why did you have to go and take that thing? Sigh… I really hope George is safe.”

Fizzuras House

The Marzipan Pirates completed their submarine, titled the Ace Swimmer. It was relatively small, but big enough to fit the five pirates. “So how are we going to carry this thing? Shrink ray?” Augustus asked.

“Better!” Stewie pulled out a ray gun with a capsule of a light-blue liquid. He shot the submarine, and it compressed into a tiny blue cube. He approached the cube, picked it up, and stashed it in the Infi-Cube in his back pocket. “I had Big Mom purchase alien technology from Nightmare Enterprises, too. I kept a few parts in my Infi-Cube in case I would need to build something.”
Augustus whistled. “Convenient. How does that work?”

“Do you want me to explain the science?” Stewie asked with disbelief. “Is anyone gonna listen? Gonna remember? You all scientists now?”

“Why would we be sinuses now?” Nel asked, sucking a drop of snot back in her nose.

“All you need to know is if the cube is drenched in water, it’ll change back to normal.” Stewie said. “So when we drop it in the ocean, it will be ready to sail.”

“Alright, then what we need to do now is go to Gumdrop Cove.” Augustus climbed in the Ace Flyer. The Baby Trio got in the backseat, and Nel climbed in the trunk. “Let’s hope we can reason with the pirates.”

“You’re going already?” They looked to the garage entrance as Ace walked in. “You haven’t even been back for one morning. Isn’t there a limit on this adventure thing?”

“It isn’t just about adventure, anymore.” Augustus replied, starting a new lollipop. “I don’t know why, but… I really think I need to try and find the Lost Candies. I need to know why the World Government hates them, and why the fairies want me to find them. At this point, we’re probably the only people who can.”

“…Well, there’s no trying to stop you, anyway. Just come back before your mom gets too upset.” Ace smiled.

“Hm. We’ll see.” Augustus smirked. The captain started the plane and took off for the sky. Ace walked out of the garage and watched them fly into the sun.

“AUGUSTUUUUUUS!” Fuming in rage, Henrietta charged outside, hopelessly chasing the plane. “YOU STUPID SHIIIIIIIT!” She bounced on one foot as she pulled the boot off the other. She spun around rapidly and chucked the boot skyward. It hit the plane, but did no damage. “Vhen you get back home, I am putting ein MUZZLE on your ARMS! …Und YOU!” she shouted at Ace. “You just let zem LEAVE?!”

“Uhh… yeah. But on the bright side, make-up kissing?” Ace grinned sheepishly.

Henrietta knocked him out cold with an Armament punch.

On the flight to Gumdrop, the Marzipans saw a redheaded Nimbi girl guiding a ship across the sky. Augustus missed the feel of the breeze on his face. Every few minutes, Nel peeped open the trunk, and one could see her big hazel eyes looking around.

Eventually, they landed on the shore of the light-brown island that was shaped like a wad of gum. Augustus and the babies climbed off the plane as the former opened the trunk. “You alright in there, Nel?”

“AUGUSTAAAAAAHHHHHH (Gustaaaaaaaarrrrrrrrrr)!” Gumdrop’s bands of Candy Pirates stormed over to the infamous teen.

“FRIEEEEEENDS!” Augustus happily walked over with open arms. “Glad to SEE ya again!” They all drew swords and aimed them at him. “Ooo, did you sharpen your swords?”
“Gustah!” The pirate with the brown beard and eyepatch – Harold the Helium Voice – shouted in his hoarse, high voice. “I look forward to one thing and one thing a year: the Davy Back Fight!” He gasped. “Yoo ruin it! Yoo take the Fairy Princess for yourseeelf.”

“Yes, I betrayed the rules of a Davy Back Fight.” Augustus admitted. “But Captain Hook captured that fairy by force, he had no right to give her away as a prize. Besides, those rules are ridiculous, a member of the loser crew has to join over to the winner crew? Isn’t the key to being a pirate supposed to be freedom? Freedom to make one’s own choices and decisions?”

“YER a wreshed liar, ye wreshed flesh wretch!” Gelatin Gerald shouted. “If yush had the fairy in yer grasp, why would ya NOT want ta keep her luscious powers for ya?”

“Why don’t we move this to the Soda Can? I’ll thrill you guys with a story…”

Soda Can

“Thank you, thank you everybody!” said the leader of the owl mariachi band. “Thank you for welcoming us to Gumdrop Cove, we will take any low-paying gig we can get! We are Los Búhos Musicales, here to tell you the story of Augustus the Stone Fist!”

Ohhhhhhh

_There once was a boy_
_Who deeply loved candy_
_He sought it and found it_
_In places most dandy_
_His abuela was BIG and_
_So round and fat!_
_She gobbled so much_
_And made mountains of scat!_
_One day, she found him and said,_
_“COME WITH ME!”_
_So Augustus sailed with her_
_Across the great sea_
_To find the world where_
_They would find their dreams_
_To great Candied Planet, ’tis where_ _The Sugary Wonders lead!_
_But LO, it was a trick, so_
_Au-gus-tus leaves_
He and his crew sail
To find new things
Other pirates, so rageful
So drunken and pissed
But when they cross Augustus
They’ll meet his fiiiiist!
Hard as iron, unmoving as stone
The sound of his name brings chills to the boone!
His FIIIIST… of STOOOONE
His FIIIIST… of STOOOONE

While they were livening the bar with their music, Augustus explained the adventures he has been on since he last met the Gumdrop pirates. “Before Princess Aisling left, she told me to go to Oceana and see a friend of hers. Since these babies can’t swim, I wanted to buy some Oxybursts in this town, help them breathe.”

“Aye, that do be a tale of thrills and chills.” said Bubbly Brandon. “The Sugar Fairy Princess? The one only known in legends?”

“He must be fibbin’.” Harold gasped.

“Heheh, it’s not a fib! Everything I told you is real. The fight with Azula, the trip to the past, the Rock Nut and the cavegirl I have in my trunk.”

“Even if we wanted to believe you, you’re wanted among pirates for what you did at the Back Fight.” Brandon said. “Helping you would be a crime.”

“But isn’t that what makes us pirates?? Breaking all manner of rules to follow one’s dreams?”

“Didja not take history in school, Lad?” Gerald questioned. “Pirates always had rules. That’s why there’s good and evil pirates. ’Tis the Code, set by the Brethren Court, the Pirate Lords of the olden times. Freedom has a price.”

“Politics in piracy is total crap.” Augustus threw the finished lollipop away. “Even in normal society, rules are meant to be broken. I saved an innocent person, I saved the Fairy Kingdom, and the only reason those pirates are hunting me is because they wanted Princess Aisling for their own selfish plans.”

“You got two Pirate Lords and a Pirate Empress on your tail.” The skinny Black pirate mentioned. “Good deed or not, you’re a cursed man.”

“So what, you’re not gonna sell me ANY Oxybursts, OR a new sword?”

“It would be bad karma.” Harold replied. “Course, if you wanted to steal such supplies, we could not be held liable.”

“Since ya like freedom so much, mangy cur.” Gerald followed.
“Captains!” A skinny pirate with a red bandana and striped shirt ran in. “The Silver Bullet from the Slag Pirates is outside!”

“Silver Bullet?!” Augustus exclaimed.

Near the town’s shore, the silver robot with the single red eye spotted the Ace Flyer after landing. “That looks like something Augustus would fly. A real shabby piece of work.” The robot approached the biplane. “I hear something in the trunk. What could be…”

She opened the trunk and found Nel happily sucking on the Rock Nut. The cavegirl looked up at the robot curiously. “Some kind of unevolved human? Hmm… Perhaps I’ll take you as a pet.”

A Gobstopper flew and struck Bullet in the back of the head. “She isn’t for you, la hojalata.” Augustus stated.

“You know, a remark in your ethnic language isn’t always necessary.” Stewie commented. “Just call him a tinplate and move on already.”

“Will consider.” Augustus began a new lollipop. “But I’m afraid you’re mistaken, Stewie: she’s a girl.”

“You see her robo LADY PARTS?!” Rallo gaped.

“Heh heh… no, but her build appears ladylike. And before you tell me robots are genderless husks, I doubt this person is a real robot.”

“You’re very intuitive, Captain.” Silver Bullet approached him with a gun raised. “Maybe if you hand me the Forest Fairy, I’ll give you my number.”

“I think the question should be, do you want MY number.” Augustus smirked. “Plus, you’re out of luck. The Fairy Princess already fled. I have a tight schedule anyway, so if you’ll excuse me!” The teen ran at Bullet with an Armament fist, dodging the disguised robot’s self-named bullets. He knocked the gun out of her hand, but Bullet dodged his punches, rolled behind him, and pulled Augustus’s arms back. She pinned the captain on his front, still bending the arms in a cross.

“I may be a lady, Captain, but you won’t believe how many people doubted my abilities. True, I’m not very strong, but this suit changes that. If I capture you with brute strength alone, perhaps the pirates may respect me a bit more.”

“Ow!” The Bullet recovered and glared at the Neanderthal. “That brat is stronger than she looks!”

“You’re too young, Nel, so please get off.” Augustus was still laying down with Nel standing on him.

“Hold on, doesn’t that Rock Nut make things stronger?” Rallo asked. “She been suckin’ it all this time, so maybe she got a power boost.”

“Did she now? In that case,” Augustus grabbed Nel and got to his feet, “back away or she’s going old school on your arse!” he yelled as he held Nel toward the robot.
Silver Bullet aimed her left arm, shot the hand over like a grappling hook, and took Nel away from Augustus. She quickly tied the cavegirl up and propped her over the shoulder. “You’ll have to make better threats than that, Augustus.”

“Don’t hurt your teeth, girl. I doubt you know any good dentists.”

“NYUH!” Nel ripped a piece of armor off the metal suit.

“GYAH! How in the world did you—”

Augustus ran up, socked the fake robot in the chest with Armament, and sent her flying while Nel dropped back in his arms. “That yuckiest rock Nel ever taste!”

“Augustus!” Stewie shouted as he, Rallo, and Maggie ran for the Ace Flyer. “Maggie stole everything we need from the candy store! Let’s hurry before they catch us!”

Augustus saw a swarm of angry Candy Pirates storming over from the town, swords and guns raised. “W-What?” When Silver Bullet looked up and saw them, she was immediately trampled by the scallywags.

“Hm. Good plan.” Augustus smirked, carrying Nel as she ran for the Flyer, stuffed the cavegirl in the trunk, then hopped in the cockpit. “Hasta la vista!” The biplane took off, and the pirates hopelessly chucked swords that dropped after partway, and shot guns in the wrong directions.

“Uuuuuh…” After Silver Bullet recovered, she was unable to clear a way around the rowdy pirates. “Damn it—you guys—move aside—I can’t see…”

Little did she know was that the pirates were doing what they were doing on purpose. From atop some stairs, Gelatin Gerald and Bubbly Brandon watched their crewmen act. “Well, we shouldn’t be in trouble with the other pirates now.” Brandon said. “It ain’t like we told them to steal… did we?”

“That’s shnotty shwabbie better not be yankin’ our licorice!” Gerald yelled. “He better show us that them Lost Candies are worth all this nonsense!”

“Nice thieving, Mags!” Augustus praised, viewing the small sack of yellow starbursts the child had stolen. “This should be more than enough to go to Oceana.”

“You actually stole a lemon-flavored cutlass?!” Stewie exclaimed. “How much was it worth?”

“Mw-mw.”

“DANG, that’s a lot!” Rallo shouted. “I don’t actually understand her, but it is, right?”

“Mw.” Maggie winked.

“Okay, Oceana,” Augustus clutched the steering wheel firmly, “here we come!”

“You remember the coordinates, don’t you?” Stewie asked.

“Pull out my phone and double-check for me!”
Negaverse; DNK Moonbase

Egroeg and AlyakAm were handcuffed to a table in the interrogation room. Nerehc paced before them, looking less than pleasant as he tried to formulate a question. “After everything I’ve just been through these past few days… I dunno where to begin. Just… WHY did you sneak into your Positives’ house and try to kidnap their mother?”

“It was a simple matter of ‘eye for an eye.’” AlyakAm replied. “Mr. King took something that belonged to our father. We were unable to find it, so we tried to take something that belonged to Mr. King.”

“And what was this item that was so important? Gardening sheers?”

“Our father forbids us from telling you… so we won’t.” Egroeg said simply. “We know you won’t torture us at the risk of harming Cheren’s friends, our Positives. You don’t need to know. Medusa is helping you find the Darknesses now, is she not?”

Nerehc looked at him with a raised brow. “How would you know about that? You weren’t around when she…”

The two Gnik siblings glanced at each other. Nerehc gritted his teeth and slammed his hands on the table. “So you DID set me up! You knocked me and Sipa out, giving Ragus the chance to kidnap me…”

“Fine, you caught us.” Egroeg admitted. “It was part of our father’s plan, too.”

“Silence, Brother.” AlyakAm kicked him.

“In other words, your father is the one I should interrogate.” Nerehc summed.

“I’ll decide that.” Nerehc walked out of the room. Nollid, Ydolem, and Ikuyim were sitting on the bench outside, with Sicnarf beside them. “Anyway, thanks for bringing them back, you three. I’m going down to their house so I can question their father. Apparently, he’s the one who staged a lot of this.”

“Before you do,” Ikuyim got up and spoke loudly, “Ydolem’s been keeping a secret for AlyakAm! They were talking about it back there, and it sounds like it’s important!”

“Well, Ydolem?” Nerehc looked at the shadowbender inquiringly.

Ydolem turned away. “I can’t… I can never betray anyone’s secret. I made a vow… to be the most trustworthy operative in the team.”

“Ydolem, if you have information that is VITAL,” Sicnarf stood over the girl imposingly, “then you HAVE to tell us! As a fellow operative, we trust you to help us, and we trust you not to be gullible and let traitors like those two misuse your trust. So can’t you break your lousy vow and tell us—”

“HEY.” Nollid held his wand to Sicnarf’s cheek. “Her brother did the same thing when he turned traitor. If she doesn’t wanna tell us, she doesn’t have to.”

“You can’t be serious. If she was told to keep how to save the world a secret, would you let her be silent??”
“Nollid’s right.” Nerehc stated. “Before the DNK changed its name… Ydolem was the one person that everybody could trust. She was the symbol that we could be better than what we were.”

“So you want her to keep the secret?”

“Well… at least let her make the choice to tell us if she wants to. But AlyakAm is the owner of the secret, so we can choke it out of her later. For now, I’m going to their house.” Nerehc began to walk away. “The rest of you can head home.”

Nollid smiled as he got up and pulled Ydol to her feet. “I’ll take you home.” Ydolem stayed silent and let Nollid lead her along.

Gnik Household

Nerehc landed before the house where Nega-Sector IC’s treehouse was growing from. As he approached the front door, Ghirahim came out of the Devil’s Sword. “Master, perhaps I should do the interrogations this time. I’m a master of torture.”

“No, Ghirahim, if we hurt the Negative, we hurt the Positive, like they said. Still, if he’s in league with Medusa, there might be more to him than we expect. I hope we don’t end up in a fight.”

Nerehc turned the doorknob and opened it. “Dude just leaves his house unlocked?” The interior was dark, so Nerehc lit a violet flame to see the way. He and Ghirahim walked upstairs, searching the vacant rooms. Before long, they came upon the parents’ room. A woman, Ytsim Eneerg, was injecting syringes into a bedridden man’s stomach.

“I keep the door unlocked for my guests.” said the man in bed; Nerehc flinched when he seemed to acknowledge their presence. “There is nothing in this home of impertinent value.”

“. . .” Nerehc shook his head, “But then why did you send your kids to take back something that was stolen from you?”

“Because the item that was stolen did not belong in this house.” Ragaj Gnik replied. “Granted, it did not belong where it originally was, either. I planned to find a way to retrieve it, but my Positive got ahead of me.”

“...Mr. Gnik, are you allied with Medusa? Did you plan for her to infiltrate the DNK?”

“The answer is yes, and no. I am the one who verbally instructed Medusa... but I speak for someone much higher. I act for him. I am his voice and his ears... but sadly, I am unable to do more for him.”

“What are you talking about?”

“. . .” Ytsim moved away as Ragaj sat up. “I long to be able to taste... to look at the world around me. But my only sustenance is nutrition compressed into liquid which my dear wife injects me with, day after day. It is the only way this mortal body can survive. Just until... the Final Day.” He turned to Nerehc.

The boy stumbled back, struck with horror and disgust at the sight. He turned off his flame so the man’s features could not be seen in the dark. “Nerehc...” Ragaj slowly swerved around to put his feet on the floor, and approach him. “For many years, the Gnik Family and the King Family have been doomed families... because we are the only ones who can possibly know.”

“Kn-Know what?” Nerehe backed up.
Ragaj stopped at the doorway and put his fingers on his round head. “You seek the whereabouts of the Darknesses, don’t you? Some are close, but others are far. Since before the beginning, their destinies were set in motion. And throughout time, their journeys have been. And others work to bring them to their fates. Even if they do not realize. I will give you some examples.” A line of green mist floated from his head to his fingers, making them glow. “With memorybending.” Ragaj bent down and placed the glowing mist against Nerehc’s head.

Dozens of images flashed in Nerehc’s eyes, too many to keep track of—his vision zoomed up to a prison cell, where a vicious woman with frizzy black hair and a broken skull mask, clothed in black, smirked at her captors. She was tied by spirit chains.

“For some reason, my spiritbending isn’t affecting this one.” Rukia Kuchiki said. “She has a stronger soul. Will you be able to restrain her?”

“I will.” Aggie Prendergast replied, aiming her glowing hands at the restrained witch. “Once Ellen arrives, she can search this woman’s mind and see what’s keeping her.”

“RUKIA!” Norman cried. “We have intruders!”

Arrancar stormed the base, attacking the Spirit KND operatives. One of the Arrancar cast a spell to break Bellatrix’s chains. The black-haired woman fell on her front and gaped at her savior. “Dolohov…”

“You know where he is, don’t you?” Dolohov questioned. “Go. He trusted you to save him.”

Bellatrix almost felt like crying. “. . . AAAAAAAAAAH HAHAHAHAHAHAHA!” Her madness and desire became her fuel, for she flew out of the base faster than the wind.

“Who are you people?!” Rukia demanded, her sword drawn.

“We are DEATH EATERS! We serve the Dark Lord.”

Mysterious train station…

This station was so bright, nobody could see, and so white, no one could make out anything. No soul had been here for decades… except one, who continues to linger here.

This soul was writhing with pain. A bloody, shriveled, hairless imp. It had destroyed its soul after creating seven Horcruxes. It tried to find strength… It tried to crawl forward… but its pain was endless… as much as this barren station. And yet, it wanted to keep crawling… because it saw him, just in his grasp, but still so far away… “Harry Potter…”

Then it heard something: shoes clanking across the posh floor. A dark figure emerged from the hallucination. It stood over him, shielding him from the blinding light at long last.

“My Lord…” Bellatrix knelt down and picked him up like a child. “My Lord…” She cried, hugging him close. “It’s been so long… I wanted to come here sooner… Oh, why didn’t I…”

“Bell. . . atri. . .” He spoke hoarsely. “I need. . . a vessel. . .”

“I will, My Lord… I know someone… who can serve as your vessel. A friend of mine… showed me to him…”

Unknown world
The chamber was composed of glistening white diamonds, smooth and unbreakable. A towering woman of yellow skin and clothing approached the throne. She had a yellow diamond on her chest, and a tiny, slender yellow woman with a pearl on her chest skittered close to the giant’s feet.

“My Diamond, we have driven the angels away from the Quartz Training Grounds. They failed to take any of our Power Crystals.”

“Very good, Yellow Diamond…” White Diamond spoke softly. She was twice Yellow Diamond’s size, and wore a beautiful white gown that complimented her flawless skin. “We cannot afford to lose any of our resources…”

“My Diamond, I suspect that the angels have formed an alliance with the trolls. We must attack their world before they can do anymore-”

“No, Yellow Diamond. The project which the trolls are constructing makes them too dangerous to confront. You remember what has happened to the Black Queen of Derse. Protecting Homeworld must be your only concern. Tell the other Diamonds.”

“My Diamond, if we let those organics be, they will keep marching onto our surface and taking our crystals. The troll called ‘Sanula’ stole five of them last cycle. Our precious Ether!”

“Patience, Young Diamond. The amount of Ether in their possession is no concern. But we Diamonds are responsible for maintaining the Ether. Without us, it will go everywhere, and all order is lost. Yellow Diamond… do not try to engage the trolls. Is that clear?”

Unknown wasteland

Thousands have died in this barren landscape, their weapons discarded on the ground. Two men of Japanese ethnicity stood face-to-face… One of them was clothed in black, with long spiky hair, and very strange eyes with an unusual design. “Madara…”

On the sea

The next vision Nerehec saw was of a ship, the Queen Anne’s Revenge. “Ehhh?” Blackbeard looked utterly confused. “I ended up on a different world? How is that possible?!?”

“I wish I could say.” Medusa replied. “But do you really need to know?”

“Heh… As long as I can still sail, I’ll be just fine! Ze ha ha ha!”

Underworld Prison

“For ten years, I longed to sail upon the shore where you had gone…” Davy Jones spoke, sulking in the back of his dark cell. “For ten years, I waited to be with you… And all I was to you… my emotions were just toys-ah. They were nothing more than fickle little things you could mold to your whim.”

“Davy Jones… please come with me.” Medusa held an arm inside the cell. “I need the Thirteen Darknesses… to make the New World. When I do… I will give you a thousand oceans. I will give you as many as you need to finally conquer your despair.”

Jones shot up and grabbed the woman’s neck in her crab claw. “I will be rid of my despair myself.
I will not be a toy to this cruel entity called ‘destiny.’ I will not fulfill the duties you had planned for me. I will never give you… my heart.”

“…I wonder, before I up and dumped you, were you planning to literally put your heart on an engagement ring?” Medusa inquired.

“GUAAAAARDS-AH!” Jones cried.

Blackbeard ran by, holding a cherry pie in one hand while he grabbed Medusa’s in the other. “Forget him, he’s a baby, LET’S GO!” The chubby pirate dragged her off.

Gnik House

Nerehc fell over as the memories overcame him. “Master!” Ghirahim gasped. He growled at Ragaj, drew a sword, and readied to stab him…

Ragaj slowed Ghira to a Stop. Winding his finger counterclockwise, Nerehc and Ghirahim began to Rewind, from talking to Ragaj to coming up the stairs, and entering the house.

The Rewind wore off when they were outside by the ship. Nerehc fell to his knees, feeling the weirdest sense of déjà vu. “I don’t understand… are those people the Darknesses?”

“What people?” Ghirahim asked.

“But how are we supposed to find them? We still don’t know how to get to the Original Worlds… even if we could, how do we know where to look?”

“You need the keeeey.”

“Huh?” Nerehc looked up. Four small, black aliens with big blue eyes floated down to him. “Wait, I remember you things.”

“The KEY is what you need.”

“What key?”

“THIS KEY!” The four Zoni shocked Nerehc at once.

Another image flashed in his mind: an ocarina, colored sapphire. “The Ocarina of Time is the key. Take him to Termina, and find it.”

When the vision ended, the Zoni vanished. “The Ocarina of Time? …Take who?”

Facilier’s Voodoo Emporium

“Really?…” Facilier asked curiously, holding a phone to his ear. “Ohhh, reallyyy…?” He nodded, becoming more fascinated. “Well, if that ain’t worth checkin’ out… Got it, I know, I’ll send someone over. ’kay, see ya later, Stanny.” He hung up. “Heyyy, Wendy! It’s time for another job!”

“Really, another job?” Wendy ceased organizing a chest and raced to sit in the chair.

“And what masochistic objective do you have in mind today?” Carla asked.

“Oh, don’t be like that, Charlie, think of it as an adventure! Wendy, I want you to run to a town called Gravity Falls, Oregon, and find a house called the Mystery Shack. I just got done talking with a friend of mine – his name is Stan Pines – he found himself a couple of shrunken merman heads. I’ll lend you some money so you can buy them – and get a few other souvenirs if you want. Use the Point Me spell to find the place.”

“I know, Point Me.” Wendy repeated quickly. “Okay, it sounds fun! Is there anything else?”

“Yes, actually.” Facilier winked. “According to Stan, Gravity Falls has been having weird gravity anomalies these past few months. The town crawls with all sorts of supernatural voodoo, but even this was unusual, Stan says. I want you to poke around and see what’s causing them. Then come back and write a report about it!”

“I’ll bring your notebook, Child.” Carla said.

“Oh well, it still sounds fun.” Wendy stood up eagerly. “I’ll go to Gravity Falls and be back in a jiffy!” She and Carla raced out of the shop.

Somewhere hidden…

The machine hadn’t been turned on in 30 years. It was shaped like an upside-down triangle with an empty center. Little sparks lit up within the center, too weak to do anything. But that was going to change very soon…

And that would be next time. ;P The next Side Stories chapter will, in fact, be conjoined with Chapter 30 of the Main Story… well, mostly on deviantART. I’ll explain later. Kids, don’t sneak into peoples’ houses.
Your God Spits On You

Chapter Summary

Team Vweeb go to stop Ted's evil scheme! Meanwhile, Sector W learns Phosphora's backstory.

To make up for the excessive wait, I give you an extra-long chapter.

Chapter 27: Your God Spits On You

Dunfree Household

Arianna lay dead in her room. Well, not actually dead, but she really wished that she was. She’s been this way through the whole night, and even as morning arose, she lay still. No telling how many people from Florae or Galaxia saw that news broadcast. She couldn’t show her face to anyone, anymore. She would shut herself in her room and never live the humility.

‘Course, when she felt a tiny force land on her upturned shoulder, she learned that wouldn’t be the case. “Well, that news was… ehh, that was somethin’.” Vweeb said with a loss for the right words.

“Will you just go AWAY, Vweeb?!” she shouted angrily.

“Arianna, I really don’t get you, anymore. That speech you made there, that was the greatest speech I’ve ever heard. You sounded more sure of yourself than ever, but then you toss it all away to agree with that Chane kid?! What’s wrong with you?”

“I…I don’t know, either.” Arianna sunk her face into her pillow. “I really was sure of myself, but that boy; Chane was… when I looked at him, and heard his words, he was just so… confident. He didn’t stutter, and he was so charming, and I thought he made his case so… well. Maybe deep down, I… I really didn’t care about the animals. Deep down, I knew that someone was going to hunt or kill them, and there was nothing I can do. Maybe all my words really are just a bore.’” Her whisper grew fainter as she turned to hide her face further.

With a disbelieved stare, Vweeb jumped down before her face, stuck his tiny hands underneath, and turned her head upward so it was perfectly on its side. “Arianna, take it from someone who’s been getting stepped on his whole life before this: you’re an idiot. What you said on that TV was really inspiring, and it made me look at you differently. It made me think, whether you were spineless or gutsy Arianna, you actually opened my eyes with your speech, and you were the bravest person in the galaxy for breaking in there to say it. But then Chane comes out of nowhere, AND IT’S all gone! I wasn’t actually looking, but what about that guy’s ‘charm’ made you DROP the whole thing?”

“You… weren’t looking?”

“I was, uh, inside my mom’s ear, helping her clean out stuff. Hehe.” Vweeb blushed. “Come to think of it, Makava was trying to finish a chapter of this book, so she wasn’t looking. But both of us were still listening, and we dunno why you found Chane so likable.”
Arianna sat up with a thoughtful look. “Vweeb… do you think Chane might have… brainwashed me?”

“Whaddyou mean?”

“I-I can’t really say for sure, but… I also can’t think of any other explanation. I mean… were you and Makava really not watching, just listening?”

“Well… yeah. But Arianna, even if you’re right about that, it’s a little too late. Ted’s gonna blow up the star system in a few hours, and everyone’s gonna be watching him.”

“Then… Then it’s now or never!” Arianna spoke passionately. “We’ve gotta get to the Violet System and stop Ted from blowing it up!”

“Again, Arianna, really confused about you.” Vweeb smirked. “You go from wimpy to gutsy to emo to gutsy again in the span of a day. Just pick an Arianna and stick with it, which are you?”

Arianna blushed slightly at this realization. “I’m… um, I’m gutsy!” she proclaimed confidently.

“That’s what I was hopin’ for.” Vweeb leaped up, smacked her shoulder, and dropped. “Then let’s hit the stars, Kava and Tronta are waiting for us outside.”

“Wait, you’re going to help me?”

“Someone has ta keep ya from looking more like an idiot than you already are.” Vweeb smiled casually. “So come on, let’s go!”

“Arianna!” Nova suddenly barged in. “Celebi’s missing! I found this beside her Spirit Ball.”

She held out a small paper, which Arianna hurriedly got up to look at, Vweeb on her shoulder. Be the first to visit Golfing in the Stars. Don’t be late. ;)

Violet Dwarf System

Nearly 24 asteroids and planetoids orbited this system, with the most majestic flora and fauna under the stars. Antelope, whose dozens of horns shine like rainbows, drank from the pure, gentle pond. Pitch-black fish swam within, whom when their anglers lit up, it revealed neon eyes and skeletons inside. Phoenixes soared across the asteroids, but instead of flames making up their wings, they were composed purple juice, which dripped onto the Zippy Toads, whom stopped to guzzle the drink before resuming moving at bullet pace. All of these planetoids drifted close to a tremendous, though relatively small violet sun, the very sun this quadrant was named for. Its magical glow lit all of the habitats purple.

Many miles away, the Orbital Auditorium hovered, where hi-def cameras zoomed close to give everyone a spectacle on the big screen, which displayed in front of a great glass wall. Ted Wassanasong stood behind the podium onstage. “Today is the day, folks, we are live outside the Violet Dwarf System, where in the next half hour, Earthican President Ted Washington will commence the blowing up of the Violet Dwarf System.” the anchorwoman spoke with a grin. “Hundreds of galactic residents have gathered to watch the event up close, inside this Orbital Auditorium specially provided by MomCorp. Mom, is there anything you would like to say to commemorate this event?” She held her microphone to the elderly tycoon, who bore a grouchy wrinkled face.

“Yes, I’ve had to address this problem to ten people: NO FREE REFILLS ON THE DRINKS!” Then she walked away.
“Hu hu hu hu!” The anchor laughed. “Let’s have a word with the man of the hour, President Washaphone himself, Ted?”

“Thank you, um… News Alien.” Ted replied politely, with no idea how to pronounce her name. “As it would so happen, construction of the golf course has finished early, and we have the entire attraction on standby. My son, Chane will assist in moving the entire course to this region, once the asteroid field is rid of.”

“Your son, Chane was a very nice young man, and we were happy to have him on our set. I feel I should ask you, though, what was your opinion on the Harnitan child’s speech last night? She put up a very compelling argument if I do say so myself.”

“She made quite the case, but what she does not understand is that this is a matter of business. You’ll find my son, Chane agrees as well, and the two of us are quite… persuasive.” He cocked a brow.

“You most certainly are. So, when the golf park is officially opened, how much will you be charging first admissions?”

“My lawyers are currently determining specific numeral values of alien currency. However, the first ten admissions will be free.”

“YAAAAAAAAAY!” the audience cheered.

“We’re STILL charging you for parking, you dumb clods!” Mom shouted.

50 space-miles away from the Violet System was the long-awaited golf park. Each colossal structure was tied together, all ready to be pulled by a single tiny spacecraft. Team Vweeb was currently approaching the course in Makava’s Heart Star. “I can’t believe Ted would just kidnap Celebi.” she said. “When she wasn’t even in her Spirit Ball, how can you DO that?”

“It doesn’t matter, because Ted has officially gone too far.” Arianna stated. “Tronta, after we land, you and I will search this place to find Celebi. Makava, Vweeb, I’m trusting you to fly to the auditorium and stop Ted, can you do that?”

“YOU BET!” both siblings perked.

“Yeah… I’m gonna have ta say ‘no’.”

The Heart Star was suddenly trapped in a blue attraction beam. “What?! It’s pulling us to the course!” Makava exclaimed, for their ship was steadily sinking toward a base of the course. They were forcibly parked on a blue pad in the middle of a grassy ground, with the only way up being a narrow hill, which was designed like a playground slide. “AAAAH!” The kids screamed when a giant golfball was about to roll down and flatten them.

Vweeb jumped out of the ship and used his super-Kateenian strength to stop the ball’s course, barely under the bottom of it. “Grrrrrr help me out, guys, I’m about to go squish!”

Tronta threw two Light Discs that connected with rope, which they used to pull the giant ball back onto the flat ground above. “Huuuuuff.” Vweeb fell on his back. “That’s exercise for the week.” He spoke with little breath. “Makava, pick me up, please.”

Makava fiddled with the Heart Star controls. “The attraction beam is gluing our ship to this pad. We’ll have to turn it off!”
“Awww, why would you wanna do that?” Chane Wassanasong’s image appeared on a screen above—Arianna shut her eyes. “Stay here, kids, be the first to try the golf course. We got plenty of mega-size holes to go around. First to land three holes-in-one scores a ride on the Chane Train. Ladies only.”

Makava was swooned, “Well, since you offered—”

Arianna smacked her, “SNAP out of it! He’s brainwashing somehow, we can’t look at him!”

“You won’t be able to resist my charm for long. But if you twerps want something to entertain yourselves, my dad sent Pokémon to guard the golf course. Play with them if I’m too sexy for ya. Catch ya later, nerds.” The screen shut off.

“We don’t have time for this!” Arianna yelled. “Let’s all work together and get up there as soon as possible! We have roughly 27 minutes before Ted blows up the system. Hurry!” (Play “Specter TV Fortress” from Ape Escape 3.)

Stage 36: Golfing in the Stars

Mission: Stop Ted from blowing up the Violet System!

The four operatives hurried up the slope to the small field of fake grass, where the giant golfball still sat. Porygon zipped out of thin space and blasted Psybeams, the four dodging before Makava grabbed Vweeb and threw him at one, using his superhuman strength to push it into another. Arianna had several potted plants strapped to her belt, thrusting her arms up to extend brambles from two of them, smacking away the other Porygon. Tronta twirled and tossed his Light Discs across their heads to knock them unconscious. A door in the center of the blue wall was sealed, with a hole in front of it the size of the giant golfball. Tronta commanded his roped discs to move the ball, however his friends indicated a small, steep hill on the right of the garden. A tiny ledge was far above this hill, and a Gold Bolt rested on top. Figuring they could use the extra money, Makava hopped atop the ball while Tronta struggled to get it up the slope, then the Glomourian could jump up and retrieve the bolt.

Afterwards, they moved the ball into the hole, causing the door to open. They entered a large, dark room with space’s chasm below, and giant golfballs traveling along narrow paths. Their first path was ‘U’ shaped, where the giant ball rolled back-and-forth, so when it was coming up their end, the kids jumped over and quickly ran up the opposite end before it came back. They turned down a left slope, where giant balls dropped one after the other on the top, proceeding to roll down with little space in-between. The operatives kept between two balls as the slope navigated two different turns, before the balls rolled off to a lower path. When the ball in front did so, the kids jumped and balanced on top. While the balls rolled into a hole their size, Arianna extended vines from her plants to quickly wrap around a row of nails across the wall, allowing the kids to grab hold and climb across.

They landed on a thin walkway with a ladder leading up to the platform on the opposite side from the starting point. The door was sealed, but all they had to do was hit a small golfball across a little path, past the lasers moving along the floor, then into a hole. Makava took the club, waited for the lasers to move, then hit the ball into the hole, so the door opened. They were allowed into a wider field of fake grass, where little red pegs with bouncy rubber sides sat around. “Only a hole in one passes here, kiddies.” Chane’s handsome features appeared onscreen; the girls closed their eyes while Vweeb and Tronta looked. “But do me a favor, please don’t touch the switch that turns the springs. It really doesn’t make a fair game, ya know?”

“Well, he has a point.” Vweeb spoke, then Arianna smacked him with a vine.

“No, he’s brainwashing you!” she yelled.

“Really? I thought he looked a bit attractive.”

“Good luck with that. Oh, and don’t mind the Gulpin, it’s their midmorning lunch.” Indeed, there were Gulpin stationed around the field, wobbling towards the golfball at the start in their lust to eat it. Tronta ran around and defeated the little monsters with his discs, but when more slid out of their hiding spots, he kept the pace. Makava flipped a switch on a center pillar several times, which made the spring pegs face a different direction, until she could determine the perfect order of springs to hit the ball to. Apparently, it would end up rolling up a narrow, gravity-altered wall, then a ceiling, where the path would just end, directly above this very pillar. Makava decided to rush up this blue path herself, and when she could look directly up (down) at the pillar’s top, she saw the hole.

Unfortunately, Makava couldn’t keep the springs lined up how she wanted, because they kept switching back on their own. Arianna used vines to climb nails up onto a ledge behind the start, finding an Aipom flipping his own switch. She knocked the creature out, so Makava could turn the springs herself to the right order. Meanwhile, Vweeb discovered a tiny tunnel, leading into a room with the Grav-Switch on. With everything prepared, Makava hit the golfball to her desired first spring, watching it bounce around the others, up the Grav-Path, and then Vweeb flipped the switch to disable the gravity when the ball was in perfect position to fall into the pillar’s hole.

Having met the desired hole-in-one, a door on the right side opened. They felt their selves lift off the floor in this room that displayed a holographic projection of outer space, stars glittering everywhere. A red, green, and blue golfball were inside stationary barrier spheres, and nine energy hoops, three for each color, were scattered. There was also a sealed hole for each color around the room, so they figured out the puzzle. Arianna first used her vines to line all the green hoops between the ball and the hole. They were about to float apart again, so Makava quickly hit the ball through (the barrier automatically disabled when her club came), and the hole immediately opened when all hoops were passed, landing hole-in-one.

The blue loops were aligned with their hole in disorderly fashion, but when Tronta stuck his disc into a nearby circular spot, spinning it caused each hoop to zip left-and-right back-and-forth. He had to stop his disc when the hoops were perfectly lined, then Makava hit the ball through. The red hoops performed their own left-and-right movement, but the red ball was in a diagonal alignment with the hole. She waited ’til the hoops were in such a staircase alignment, quickly hit the ball through, and the hole was hit. A hatch opened on the ceiling, so the aliens floated up and onto an outside path, where the gravity was normal.

Porygon2 zipped out of space, and zipped haphazardly around the field in their aim to knock the kids down. Tronta and Makava quickly dodged them and countered with their weapons, but the Pokémon would only stay dizzy for a second, so Vweeb had to Stun them with his gun in that time. A boulder-size golfball was perched, and they would need it in going down a winding road of thin rails. Vweeb shrunk Ari and Tronta, and Makava set them on her hair while she climbed and balanced on the ball. It rolled like a roller-coaster down the rails, Makava had to move her feet quickly to stay on. Porygon2 zipped non-warningly out of space, but they were fast enough to avoid them before the ball hit a spring, which flung them to another area of the park.
Makava balanced the ball carefully across platforms that threatened to tilt. Little Chain Chomps rolled around in attempt to push them off, so Makava stayed clear of the creatures. She rolled onto a spatula-shaped platform that was attached to and rotating around a central axis, keeping the ball stable on the wobbling device before rolling onto a series of scattered, zigzag paths, and many holes. Voltorbs popped out of holes and rolled toward the golfball, intending to self-destruct, so Makava stayed clear, keeping absolute focus on these narrow paths. She finally made it to the flat ground on the other side, but didn’t cease momentum so she could dodge the Porygon2, then successfully landed the ball in the giant hole.

Vweeb restored his friends to normal as they entered the newly-open door. “I gotta ask, if people actually pay to come here, do you think they gotta go through all these trials?” he asked. They shrugged. The next room was incredibly long and tall, and contained a gigantic blue slide whose bottom end they stood by. The sound of a light force rolling down its wood echoed across the room.

“Just let it hit the bottom.” Chane’s image appeared, the kids kept their eyes down. The source of this rolling was a tiny golfball coming down the slide, so heeding against Chane’s advice, Makava raised her club high, ran up the steep slope, and—“NNNN!” hit the ball with all the force she could muster. It rolled up partway, but the momentum directed it down again, so Makava kept hitting it further. She couldn’t stay balanced on the slippery, flat slope, so Tronta aided her using his roped discs. Eventually, Makava got it up to the top of the slide and into a hole. Meanwhile, Arianna helped Vweeb and Tronta get up by vine-swinging the nails that led up the side of the slide.

The kids entered the doorway to a room where the lower floor was a giant pinball machine. A row of holes was along the bottom, golf clubs were stationed around the field, and balls were rolling down. The kids had to use the switches to flip the clubs and direct the balls into each hole. “Behold, Ted’s Golfing Galaxy’s Remote-Controlled Golfing!” Ted’s automatic P.A. announced. “It is not based off of any game you know!” It didn’t take long for Kava to land each hole, and the door on the other side opened. They crossed the walkway on the side of the room and found another giant golfball in an outside area. Vweeb minimized the others so Makava could guide them across.

The Glomourian moved her legs rapid-fast when she was forced to roll the ball down a steep hill, directing it left and right to avoid holes. The ball rolled up a ramp at the very bottom, flying high and taking land on a giant pool table. Conveniently, Makava’s golfball was white, so she proceeded to bonk each ball into a hole. Oddly, the 8-ball was more frantic and bouncing around, so Makava struggled a bit in pushing it where she wanted to, but it got there eventually. The north-most hole emerged a spring, so Makava rolled on as her ball was flung onto a spiraling path.

She kept herself stable and let the hill guide the ball, and the momentum would help them proceed across a wider, flat road, whose green floor possessed the fabric of a pool table. Electrodes popped out of holes, Porygon2’s zipped out of space, she even had to maneuver around hungry Gulpin. A great big statue of a gorilla, whose mouth opened and closed, hovered in the distance. Makava made sure to maneuver her ball to the center of the path, so when it rolled off the end, the low gravity and momentum allowed it to float directly to the mouth. Just when the mouth was in the midst of closing, Makava ducked, and the ball barely made it through. The ball shortly landed inside a hole, opening the door.

Vweeb returned the others to normal as they progressed through a short hallway. They looked out a window to find the starting area where their ship was parked, so once the attraction beam was off, they could drop down and take off. They saw another ship suspended in midair, whose rope was tied to this building, which was tied to the other structures, so this ship would eventually pull everything into place of the Violet System. Not that they would let that happen. They barged into a room at the hallway’s end, the control room where Chane Wassanasong worked. The teen turned to smirk at them, and Celebi floated close by. (End song.)

“Well, whaddya know. You dweebs actually made it. We’re honestly surprised you could bear to look away from me. Aren’t we, Celebi?”

“Biii-i-i-i. . .” Hearts were around the Forest Spirit. She floated near Chane with loving, googly eyes.

“Celebi! What did you do to her?!” Arianna demanded.

“I snuck into your house last night and, eh… talked her into hanging with Chanester. I didn’t want you disrupting Dad, so I took her to trap you here. She cooperated after I explained my dilemma.
She’s enjoyed every minute, haven’t you?” He scratched Celebi’s chin.

“Bi biiiii!”

“No, you BRAINWASHED her!” Tronta yelled, drawing his discs. “Just like you did Arianna! How’re you doing it?!”

“You got me.” Chane shrugged. “That creepy Clown guy with the puffy coat gave me and Dad Persuade-Persuade Fruits. We can talk anyone into doing anything, like getting all these loser aliens into supporting Golfing in the Stars.”

“So TED’S been brainwashing people, TOO?!” Vweeb shouted.

“Yeah. ‘Course, you won’t tell anyone… will you?”

“. . .” Vweeb, Makava, and Arianna were swooned by his charm.

“Stop tryin’ ta put a stop to this whole thing. You’re in the greatest golf park in the universe, you should be happy! Quit acting like a bunch of hopeless idiots.”

“Feh.” Tronta walked forward, his look smug.

“What? You wanna see the Chanester up close? Sorry, man, this body’s reserved for ladies onl-”

Tronta socked him across the jaw, knocking Chane down. The others and Celebi shook free of his control. “Beauty’s in the eye of the beholder, isn’t it?” Chane wiped his mouth and glared at Tron.
“Your mind-control only works if people look at you, too.”

“Yeah? So move those bangs aside and get a load of me, Hippie!” Chane snapped.

“It won’t matter if I do.” Tronta smiled coolly, brushing up the bangs blocking his faded green eyes. “Because… I’m blind.”

“You… WHAT?! Then how are you SEEING me?!”

“My antenna is extremely sound-sensitive, so I know the position and movement of everything around me. Vweeb just farted. (“Trooon!”) You might be able to hit on every other boy, but I can only judge by character. And you are very unattractive.”

“The hell I-!” Chane lunged at Tron, but the boy nimbly spin-jumped and kicked him away.

“Everything moves, you know, everything vibrates, and my antenna feels their movement. Like that switch on the wall, what is that?”
The big blue switch was labeled Attraction Beam. “Worth finding out!” Makava quickly pressed and turned it off.

“Quick, let’s get back to the ship!” Arianna yelled.

“Don’t even THINK about-!” Chane ran to press the switch, but Tronta grabbed and pinned him down.

“I’ll take care of this guy. Just go!”

“Come on, Celebi.” Arianna said. (“Bi-biiii!”) The Firstborn fluttered after the trio. Makava, Vweeb, Ari, and Celebi hopped in the Heart Star as Kava hurriedly started up the engines, and they took off straight to the Orbital Auditorium.

“Ted, look out!” Cindy gasped, and the audience screamed when the Heart Star burst through the glass window, Ted and Cindy ducking from the shards as the ship landed.

Arianna was quick to hop from the spacecraft and whip Ted away with brambles. “EVERYONE! You can’t allow Ted to carry out this plan! You are ALL being tricked, he and Chane have brainwashed you!”

“Honey!” Cindy tried to run to her husband’s aid, but Makava blocked her and drew swords.

“You wanna tango?”

“…” Cindy frightfully backed away.

“Citizens of Florae, look at the screen!” Arianna directed up at the projection of the fauna-filled planetoids. “Watch how these animals innocently graze. The marvel of the Violet Star. Will you really let Ted destroy them?”

“That is enough from you, young lady.” Ted recovered, throwing open two Pokéballs which contained a Scyther and Scizor. Both Pokémon raised their blades and claws respectively. “This is an important, World Government-approved operation, and if you do not desist, I can have you jailed for life.”

Arianna gritted her teeth. “VWEEB, under his shirt, NOW!”

“You got it!”

AAAAH! A little, brownish-black bug was flung into the air by Vweeb, who then punched it to the floor. Ted fell on his back, rasping with pain.

“Ted!” Cindy cried.

“What is that?” Makava asked.

“This creature is what poisoned Ted, not my brambles!” Arianna shouted. “I heard him with my telepathy; I think it was possessing him!”

Vweeb wrapped arms around and pinned the worm-like creature to the floor. “Just what are you?”

I am the Dark LEECH! Only Arianna could hear him. The very LAST Dark Leech in Mars’s great toxic puddle! Six months ago, Ted conducted an expedition to Mars, and filled my puddle with cement, destroying my clan! I only survived when Ted chose to keep me as a pet. My entire species, gone, because this man wanted to build a golf course! Anger consumed me, he destroyed my people because they were an infestation to his would-be park, so I vowed to have revenge on ALL impudent species! I possessed Ted using my poisonous suction, learned of the Violet Star System in Florae, and through Ted’s resources, I organized this entire operation! Making him eat that ‘Devil Fruit’ proved very helpful. I never could have collected enough money to buy a Star Bomb from some Nightmare company.

“Mr. Leech, I’m terribly sorry for what Ted did to you, but to misplace your anger on all of these innocent creatures?!” Arianna stated.

Mwah ha hah! You think their lives matter to me? My species craves poison and destruction! As the last of my kind, I vow to make up what they lost. I will destroy ALL endangered species! And until his body decays, Ted will be my SLAVE! The leech coughed acid at Vweeb, forcing him to get off so the creature could slither back under Ted’s shirt. Cindy stared with horror when her sickened husband stood up like a puppet.

“Scizor, Scyther. Attack, please.” He ordered calmly. The Pokémon lunged at Arianna, only to be blocked by Makava. Vweeb jumped and punched Scizor away while his sister clashed with Scyther’s blades. Ted balled his fists and glared at Arianna, who returned the look and readied her brambles.

Tronta hopped off of Chane to let the teenager stand up. “You shoulda let your friends stay.” Chane smirked. “Cause Dad doesn’t give the call to launch the Star Bomb, I do! With the push of a button, you can kiss your precious Violet Star good-bye. You don’t think YOU can stop me, do ya?”

“Boy, you really are dry.” Tron said.

“What?”

“Have to rely on superpowers to seem like a hottie to everyone, blowin’ up star systems to feel like a bigshot, just how many girls could stomach to look at you before this?”

“Tsk tsk tsk.” Tronta shook his head. “You have no idea. I may not have the looks, but I got the right brains and brawn to know you will NOT be looking well after this. You want people to look at you, well get a look at THESE!” Tronta ripped off his shirt and his lower pants legs. Chane shut his eyes, but then opened them confusedly: Light Discs were strapped to Tron’s chest, back, arms, and legs. He held his two signature discs in his hands.

“Obsessed, you say?” Tronta cocked a brow; the Frisbees began playing a jazzy music tune. Tron began speaking in a sing-song voice. “There’s more than obsession under these Frisbees, baby, there’s love and there’s passion, even some romance, maybe, and I’ll tell you just what I’m gonna do, prove once and for all that I’m better, I’m sexier than you.”
Chane glared and balled his fists. The two of them slowly circled around a center as Tronta sang.

This is Tronta: Ah’m back in action

I’m not getting myself beat by the likes of you

‘Cause I’m so much prettier. Much pithier.

I take one look at you and say, “I pity her.”

Chane growled in anger and ran at Tronta, throwing punches that the alien blocked with his Wrist Discs, his cool smile not changing.

The four of us ain’t gonna follow your rules

Come at me with your so-called “fancy” tools

Let’s go, just us two.

And you’ll see, I’m se-xi-er than you.

He pushed Chane back with a thrust of his Chest Disc, but the boy recovered with a twirl, kicked off the wall, and flew at Tron like a rocket. Tron air-flipped and kicked Chane down with his Leg Discs, picked the teen up, and threw him across the room.

In the auditorium, Arianna dodged Ted’s puppet-like punches and kicks, binding his wrists and ankles using vines, but the Dark Leech stuck out of his shirt collar and spat the vines with quick acid bullets, retreating back into his shirt as Ted plopped on the floor. He got up quickly and flew at Ari with a midair cartwheel, which she blocked with brambles, but Ted flipped underneath the thorns, grabbed Ari, flipped up, and threw her headfirst into a distant wall. Arianna dodged Ted’s whip-like kick and thrusted brambles against his chest, causing Dark Leech to fly out. Arianna twirled her brambles and tried to whip the sprightly insect.

The Dark Leech latched onto Scyther, the Bug-type going mad with rage as it lashed its blades more rapidly. Makava defended with equally-quick precision, but Scizor grabbed her by the waist from behind and threw her into the audience, with those members scattering backwards. Arianna lashed her brambles up Scyther’s chin, making the leech fly off before it hopped across the floor and back onto Ted.

Go ahead and try to hit me, if you’re able

I see and hear you comin’ though my eyes are disabled

You should see how me and ladies intermingle. Tronta touched his fingertips together.

I think you’re upset because you’re still single.

You’re not gonna stop what we’re trying to do. Tronta leaped overhead, grabbed either side of Chane’s head, midair spun vertically, and hurled him against a wall.

I’m gonna come outta this good as new

See these discs on my knuc-kles here? Tron’s Wrist Discs broke into tinier discs for his knuckles.

Listen close, because it really ain’t something to fear
Because these discs are full

O-o-O-o-ooof

Lo-o-O-o-ove

Tronta repeated these lines several times. His knuckles flew across Chane’s features at each “O”, and he imagined funny screenshots of how his face looked after each punch. His uppercut sent Chane skyward, then using Leg Discs, Tronta flew up, spun, and kicked Chane, sending him flying to his ship. Chane burst through its roof and looked up as Tronta was rolling forward like a midair ball. Chane grabbed a nearby pitching machine and fired an onslaught of golfballs.

Arianna saw the purple bulging veins on Ted’s flesh, the man moving with quicker speed as he threw punches. A successful punch sent Arianna hurling against the microphone stand, then she rolled out of the way before Ted’s fist impacted and broke through the floor. The man ran on all fours like a beast, snarling as well as he tried to snap Arianna with bubbling fangs, she raised a vine that his teeth sank into, then she wrapped the vine around his head before flailing him around the air. She tossed Ted away, but he recovered, snarled, and ran at her again, only for Ari to jab a bramble directly at his chest.

Makava grabbed Scizor’s right claw and stuck it into Scyther’s left blade, leaping behind the former to kick the back of his head and push him into Scyther. She saw the Dark Leech land by her foot, but in her attempt to stomp it, it latched onto her neck. “Makava!” Arianna lashed vines at her friend, but against her will, Makava cut them with her swords.

“Ari, hold her still!” Vweeb yelled, trying to aim his Tri-gun. Arianna threw four vines to bind her arms and legs, and as Makava tried to shake away, Vweeb blasted his Shrink ray, the Dark Leech dodging just in time while Makava shrunk. Arianna whipped her vines across the floor and swatted the leech against the window, then ran forward to swing her foot against it. The leech stayed strong and hopped back to Ted, who was otherwise growing weak from the bug’s poison.

You think you can stop me, well think again

I think you’re forgetting just who I am

Still rolling in midair, Tronta easily dodged the golfballs, before throwing two discs, one to slice the pitcher and one to knock Chane down.

If you try to hurt my sister, I’ll give you a blister

Buck up, ‘cause things just got downright, Mister.

Tron landed in the ship, Chane fearfully tried to back away, but Tron tossed two discs to bind his legs and make him trip. He leaped and stamped his foot against Chane’s back.

I know you think you’ve seen all of me (hot dude)

So you wonder what makes all the ladies love me (not you)

Well, I have something that you don’t, see

I balled it up in here, Fist “A” and Fist “B”

These fists are made
And it’s sexier than you!” Tronta threw his fists across Chane’s head, picked him up, and threw him against the controls. Chane growled and ran at Tron, but his antennas sensed the movement, so Tron fell, spin-kicked, toppled Chane toward him, then he kicked the teen up into the ceiling. Tronta hopped back up and kicked Chane away when he fell.

“I’m sexier than you!”

Makava ran at Scyther and performed a mighty leap, but when the Pokémon lunged forward, Vweeb shrunk her sister so she could land on its face and slash the eyes. She kicked off and flew to Scizor, and Vweeb biggified her as she slashed down his face with both swords. Makava grabbed the Pokémon’s legs, swung him around, and into Scyther, then Kava leapt and spun midair before slamming her blades against them both, and the creatures were down.

Arianna caught Ted’s arms with brambles, squeezing them, but when blood lightly seeped, she held back, knowing this man was against his own will. She slashed a bramble across his chest – his shirt was more than shredded by this time, and the Dark Leech flew off. Vweeb stood before it, smirking as he punched the leech with superhuman strength. While it was downed, Arianna slammed her brambles onto and kept it down.

I’m tired of kicking you into walls

So I’ll just kick you in the-

Tronta’s boot flew into Chane’s crotch. The teen’s eyes almost popped out, but they were too far out for his eyelids to close. His cheeks puffed as though concealing the scream that couldn’t burst. Tronta calmly pulled away and let Chane fall on the floor, writhing in pain. “…balls.”

The Dark Leech was down and defeated. Vweeb’s fists were balled, expecting him to get back up, but no such luck. Arianna gasped for breath and retracted her vines. “I think… huff… it’s done. …” The three of them looked at the audience. They were flabbergasted, to put it simply, with blank, frozen stares.

Tronta cut the rope binding the ship and the golf park with a Light Disc, then sat himself at the controls to take them back. Still holding his crotch with one hand, Chane reached in his pocket with the other to grab a remote. He pushed it, and to Tronta’s utter surprise, the Star Bomb shot from the ship’s bottom, soaring like a comet to the Violet System. “NO!”

From the auditorium, murmurs echoed throughout as the audience pointed outside. The three operatives saw the comet coming. Arianna gasped. “The star system, no!!”

Hearing this, the Dark Leech recovered, hopped Ted’s fallen body, and fished the remote out of his pocket. It plucked open the hatch with its teeth, and Arianna was too late to react before it pressed. “STOOOOP!”

The bomb exploded in the distance—and froze. Everybody stared speechless. A bright body of light replaced the bomb in that split second; the first phase of the explosion, but it was frozen in time. When the cameras skinned around, they found a tiny figure a few meters from the explosion. George King wore a space helmet and held the flame in a Time Stop, floating while a cord kept him connected to a ship. “Uhhhhh, anytime is good, Jerome.” he said. A vortex appeared below the Stopped explosion and sucked it in.

Supreme Leader Nebula splorped in the auditorium above the stage. She looked down at her subordinates. “Either of you wanna explain why George’s Future Sight picked up my four best operatives ruining an important business project?”

“Oh Numbuh Eternal, thank you so much!!” Arianna spoke with pure delight.

No! NOOOOOO! the Dark Leech cried. My perfect plan, RUINED! All thanks to you meddlying kids! Currerrrse yooooou…. CURSE YOOOOO-!

Vweeb Stunned him senseless. “Way to bring back the classics, dude. (I didn’t understand him, I’m just assuming…)”

“HEY, look at the screen!” an audience member pointed.

The kids whipped their attention to it immediately. The dozens of fauna-filled asteroids lined together, and flew directly toward the Violet Star. They sunk inside within an instant, much to everyone’s horror. But before their eyes, the star turned white, bulgy, and egg-like. It divided into two bulges, then four and eight, then 32, it was a big round body of bulges. “It’s like… an egg and a sperm.” Arianna gazed with wonder.

“Ew.” said Vweeb.

Then, the star became a bluish-purple, with an oval-shaped glass dome at its top, depicting a vast grass plain with a lake and mountains. The body stretched to life, became flat, nothing could describe the absolute marvel: it was a gigantic sting ray. The majestic creature of indescribable wonder soared to the auditorium. It glided miles beyond the window, and gave everyone a marvelous view of the landscape on its back.

“LOOK!” Arianna pointed. “They’re… Ancient Flowers!”

human heads and green jelly bodies. They were among other tiny creatures Vweeb recognized.
“Shrimpkins! And Smurfs!”

“I think that’s a Vestian!” an audience man pointed at an alien wearing a vest.

“And Vegims!” beamed Ari. “Are all of these… extinct plants and animals?”

The tremendous manta flipped, and stopped with its back facing the audience directly. His tiny eyes at the top fixed on them. “LIFE.” The audience was startled by his great thundering voice.
“DENIZENS of Florae: I am the Encyclopod. The Keeper of Life and all DNA across universes.
Arianna Dunfree…” The child gasped quietly. “You have my eternal thanks. Because of your selfless deed, I can now travel the universe, collecting all remaining DNA of plant and animal species. Once my duty is complete, the new universe can be born with many a species, and existence can begin anew.”
Murmurs sounded across the galaxy, from this little chamber to everyone at their TVs. “E-Excuse me!” Arianna shouted. “What do you mean the new universe? Do you mean…”

“The Apocalypse is coming soon, children. I have seen it twice before, before God Arceus created the gods beneath him. My job, since the beginning, was to collect the DNA of all endangered species. I took many forms, a frog, a snake… Until the time of awakening, my body grows as a Violet Star, but from my slumber, I can see anything and everything. My presence senses all species in danger of declining, and summons their energy to me. 14 billion species I have collected… 5 billion I have yet.”

“And now, I shall collect my next: the Dark Leeches will yet be revived.”

NOOOOO! screamed the leech. I cannot go now! I still have so much to do! So many planets to-DAAAAAAAHHHH! The leech was absorbed by the manta’s laser eyes. His entire, tiny being became one with the Encyclopod, among billions of others.

“Um… Mr. Encyclopod.” Arianna spoke. “Does this mean that-”

“Yes, the Apocalypse is real. It will come by the end of the month. There is so much left to do, before the gate can be opened. I believe you children can succeed, however. Until that time comes, I will fulfill my duty.”

“Well, if you’re saving all species, then… I dunno, maybe human?” Vweeb queried, indicating the rasping man on the stage.

Cindy Wassanasong buried her face into her husband’s bloodied, poisoned chest. The kids felt pity for the man, now… the way he looked, he wouldn’t last another minute. “Do not worry. A friend of mine should be arriving soon.”

“H…Haruka?” Nebula queried.

“Move aside!” Haruka pushed Cindy away, bent down, and stuck her fingers into Ted’s chest. The purple within his skin absorbed up Haruka’s arms, but that purple slowly dispersed through Haru’s antibodies. “Is there a med team, hurry up and bandage him!”

Doctors rushed out and covered Ted’s cuts with the white wrapping. Ted’s rasping calmed, he barely looked as sick as he did before. Cindy sighed with pure relief. “Phew. Made it just in time.” Haruka sighed.

“Haruka, what are you-” Makava said.

“I’ll tell you guys later, I can’t stay long!” Haruka ran back onto Mobius’s tongue. “See you in a week, I think!”

Mobius shut her inside and flew away. “Many thanks, once again.” The Encyclopod said. “Goodbye, children. See you in the New World.”

The manta flew away, gliding past Jerome and George’s tiny ship. His eyes especially narrowed on the helmeted timebender. The purple headband around his forehead. Strange… I sense an unusual power from that boy. I haven’t sensed power like this… since that Lord English fellow, a few universes back. I was almost certain he was destroyed. …It is a very worrisome feeling. The kids watched until the terrific creature was gone from sight.

“Hoooooo…” Ted Wassanasong held his chest, his wife holding his sides worriedly. “I’ve been trying to tell people about that Dark Leech for 6 months. That thing was quite a bother. You children have my thanks.” He bowed. “In spite of the aggressive means of handling it, you saved my life. If there was anything I could do to repay you…”

The kids looked out in the distance, where Golfing in the Stars still floated. They looked at the vast, barren space before them: the Violet Dwarf System they had struggled to save transformed into a giant space-manta and flew away. There was now absolutely nothing. They looked between the golf park, the nothing, the golf park, the nothing, then they looked at Arianna. Arianna looked at Celebi, who only shrugged. “…Um… free, lifetime memberships to Golfing in the Stars, for all our friends?”

“YAAAAAAAY!” the operatives cheered.

“Arianna!” The operatives looked as Nova hurried onto the stage, embracing her daughter in a hug. “We’re so proud of you!”

“Oh, Mother.” Arianna blushed. “Anyone could have.”

“Yes. But you did. That’s why somebody…” Nova pulled out a green ball the size of her hand, “deserves something special. Celebi is officially yours.”

Arianna’s face lit up like the sun. She looked at Celebi, who smiled and nodded approvingly. Arianna tossed the Spirit Ball at the Firstborn, and she was sucked inside. The ball landed on the floor, shook and made little beeps… bong. The Spirit Ball hovered in the air. It shone with a green light Nova saw once before. The top half was light-green, the lower half dark-green, but a bright golden ‘II’ was now lit above its central lock. Arianna caught the ball and held it proudly: she was now Celebi’s Guardian.

Arianna captured a FIRSTBORN! Only 7 more to go!

Tronta walked into the room, shirtless as he scratched his head awkwardly. “Um… Chane has a girl’s voice now. Just thought you all should know.”

“HAAAH!” Vweeb laughed.

Birka; Joel

The five kids and Phosphora casually walked a street in the run-down village. It was just like the power plants the kids see on a regular basis, gray dull buildings with bars, cylinder tanks, and wires. “I’m guessing you weren’t rich?” Anthony inquired.

“Nope.” confirmed Phos. “Unless you count rich in energy. The primary purpose of this place is to regulate the energy taken in by the Thunder Towers. You could say we’re kind of a big deal to the island, but nobody gets paid. Before God Thor came along, the priests were the only government; but the idea of money was something the townspeople adapted on their own.”

They were close to the Thunder Tower at the island’s edge, very tall and foreboding up close, though not nearly as much as Dashi’s Peak. They jumped when lightning struck the tower, filling it with energy. “The good part is, no one has to pay bills on this island, so it’s easy living. Especially when you’re orphaned.”

“Orphaned?” Sally queried.

“I lost my mom when I was five, and I never knew my father. Don’t get me wrong, it was loads of fun.” She smiled casually. “I had plenty of friends, we played games, got into loads of trouble, the rest of the time, I was in….”

“Iiiiiin what?” Harvey asked.

“This way.” Phosphora walked forward quickly. “I wanna see if she’s still around.”

She brought them to a church a few blocks from the Thunder Tower. The windows had no panes, allowed the wind from outside to freely pass through. A statue of God Thor stood over the altar, and an elderly Birkan with graying white hair and a decaying robe stood before it. The woman turned to face them, a smile on her wrinkled face. “Hello, children. Session is over for the day, but if you have a prayer, we’d be happy to…”

Phosphora approached her. The old woman was hunched, so Phosphora appeared taller than her. “Lady Sulfa… it’s me. It’s… Phosphora.”

The woman’s old eyes seemed to light. “Phosphora…”

Sector W exchanged wondering glances. The elder lightly hugged Phosphora, who returned the gesture. They pulled apart. “It’s been so long. Where’ve you been all these years, Child?”

“Oh, you know… embracing nature.” She smiled jokily.

Lady Sulfa looked around her. “And who are these children? They don’t have wings.”

“They’re, um… kids I met. On the surface. They helped me come back here.”

“They certainly look the peculiar bunch.”

“’Tis a natural response we art given.” Fybi said.

“Oh, how the years have changed you… I still remember you. That little girl who was so excited and happy all the time… so devoted to her beliefs… Tell me, is your house still intact?”

“Would you like us to see together?”

“Um… okay.”

The old woman moved slowly, so the sectormates grew a little impatient in waiting. They walked ahead while Phosphora stayed by Sulfa, and behind one of the fences, they saw something curious: a chubby, dark-skinned human with yellow hair and sunglasses, and a white ninjas’ uniform. The five approached him calmly. “M…Mister?” spoke Sally.

“Oh?” Killer Bee looked at them. “Well, hello, kids. I don’t suppose you want my autograph?”

“Uhh… no?” Anthony replied.

“Of course, everyone in this dimension’s a critic. Sorry, kids, Ah’m tryin’ to lay low here. I got lost while looking for a wormhole to my homeworld, and when I was tryin’ to start up a show here, these guards started tailin’ mah tail. Lemme ask you, kids, how does one ‘steal lightning’?

“We don’t know.” Nea replied.

“Ah well. I gotta get movin’, there’s too many eyes here. If you kids wanna talk to me about concert tickets, find me blended in with the wall behind Quiznos. Catch ya later.” The rapper squatted like a crab and scuttled away sideways.

The group reached Phosphora’s house, which was in less-than-exceptional shape. The ceiling and roof were long since crumbled, and only three or four tiny rooms made up the place, leaving no place to hang around. The seven gathered in the bedroom, where Phos and Sulfa sat on a gray cloud bed. Sally, Harvey, and Nea sat on an old metal bench, Anthony took the floor, while Fybi hovered. “‘Twas a shame… what happened.” Sulfa spoke.

“Nothing happened.” Phosphora spoke almost defensively.

“It was 22 years ago… when God Thor arrived. Little Phosphora was so happy… don’t you remember, dear?”

“What gave you the idea that I was happy?” she asked snarkily.

“You were happy… For a time. Siigh, but accidents do happen.” The woman looked down depressedly. “Unforeseen events beyond our control. Still, what can you do about it. If it was God Thor’s will, then it must be-”

“God Thor is a phony.” Phosphora stated outright.

The elder looked up with as much surprise as her weary old face could display. Her subtle reaction drew attention from the kids. “My dear… I know you were forced to leave because of God Thor’s, erm, unexpected policy, but that’s no reason to stop believing in him. He only wanted your protection. A Birkan who cannot lightningbend will have difficulty living here.”

“You literally have no idea what happened, do you? You people still don’t know a thing, like a bunch of idiots. Did Sola ever find out, Node, or even Lingning??”

“The situation was explained to them, Child. They were very sorry to lose their friend… They deeply wanted to come and visit you, but they worried that you would be angry at them. Still able to fly and all.”

The kids flinched when Phosphora punched the wall behind her out of anger, breaking a hole. She held her head down with regret. “Well… I guess it wouldn’t matter, anyway. Nothing mattered anymore…”

“If I may speak, thou seemeth to have quite a tale to tell.” Fybi said.

“Yeah, so tell us already, quit bein’ a baby.” Anthony demanded.

“Only one of us hasn’t caught up with the others on the evolution scale.” Nea remarked, earning a glare from her leader.

“Miss Phosphora, why don’t you tell us what’s wrong?” Sally spoke kindly. “It might make you feel better.”
“Yeah.” Harvey agreed, swinging his yo-yo.

Phosphora gripped her lap with her hands, internally forcing herself to keep silent. Lady Sulfa gently placed her hand over Phosphora’s right. “If there’s something you know that we don’t, Child, I encourage you to speak.”

Birka; 22 years ago

It was an unusually stormy day in Birka. The clouds were dark, spiraled quickly, and the lightning was furious. This was never a problem for the citizens of Birka. Storms were lovelier the more furious they were, it was a sign for great energy harvest. The mighty god, Thor was watching over them, blessing his children with power even now. Of course, some children desired more rations than others. A few miles from the island, within the dark of the Storm Canyon, a band of Nimbi kids stared with both awe and horror at the gutsy angel above them.

“Don’t listen to her, go for it Phosphora, go go go!” a boy, Node sparked.

Phosphora was an ordinary Birkan with purple eyes, and long, pretty blonde hair, though the ending strands curved up as a result of static friction. She wore a white top that exposed her belly, white shorts, and brown Greek sandals, as well as green laurels over her ears. Her lightning wings, long and graceful, shone brightly. “Come on, guys, it doesn’t even look big, quick being Remlits!”

“Some of us aren’t even religious like you, Phos!” another boy, Bzzbert yelled. “And just because you’re the only one that prays to him, doesn’t mean God Thor is gonna go easy on you!”

“Maybe. But as Thor as my witness, I will SURVIVE!”

Without warning, the powerful bolt of lightning struck—Phosphora caught the charge in both her open hands, and this caused dozens more lightning bolts to strike the same spot. Her friends shielded their eyes, afraid to witness Phosphora’s end. The girl’s body was shining with lightning, she felt the incredible power building within her veins. She struggled to pull her left arm away, pointing a finger at the canyon wall and directing the plasma forth. The energy was scattered amongst the clouds, and once the crackling finally stopped, the kids worriedly opened their eyes.

Phosphora passed them an innocent grin, her body sparking slightly as her hair stood up like a wall. “So who’s buying me drinks?”

In town

Rizbi guzzled five Electro Cookies before his zappy sensation kicked in, Lingning could only eat half of one, being 5 years old, Sola managed to eat 10 before lightning popped out of her ears, Bzzbert ate two, puffed, and shot lightning from his nose, and Node swallowed three in one gulp, before so much lightning shot out, he went from fat to skinny. With that, they all focused on Phosphora, whom had happily finished devouring her 23rd cookie. While scraping between her teeth with her nails, she felt an incredible surge of energy, so strong that she felt like she was vibrating, so fast that they couldn’t see. “BUUUURP.” A great beam of lightning flew from her mouth, and there was no telling how far it would go.

Later, they were all down by Rainwater River. “Girl, are you really gonna drink from it like that?” Sola asked.

“I gotta find somethin’ to do with this straw.” Phosphora winked, holding a bent metal antenna like a bendy-straw.

“Put it in a smoothie!” Lingning cheered.

“No thanks, I just dropped 20.” Node replied.

“Suit yourself!” Phosphora stuck one end of the antenna in the water, kissed her mouth over the other end, then when a great bolt of lightning struck the river a few meters away, the energy flowed across the current, up the antenna, and sizzled Phosphora furiously when it conducted to her mouth. She flew back several meters after it stopped, and when the friends worriedly flew over to check her, Phosphora happily sat up and spat spark streams at each of their faces, then to all the passerby. “Too much salt, needs more sugar!”

Next, they were several meters in midair, just under a team of Lightning Chariots that swooped by, leaving their perfectly flat trail. “NOW!” Phosphora flew up first, grabbed two chunks of a strip to use as extended arms, and her friends did so as well before they began lashing them at each other. They laughed joyfully, each swing flying at lightspeed, having a blast through trying to send the other flying. “Hahaha! Say, where’s Lingning, I don’t really want her to get-”

A tremendous pair of lightning arms rose over them. Lingning was much smaller compared to her friends, but her arms were superior. She wore a devilish grin as she swatted all of her friends. She then grabbed Phosphora in both hands, whirled and whirled and whirled her around, then sent her flying away. “WAAAAAAHHH…!"

Joel

A skinny Birkan with an electric mustache was hunched over while an Amp (a living electric sphere with a face) was scratching his back with its energy. Phosphora burst through the ceiling and crashed upside-down against the wall. The man looked at her. “Nnnnn, this is hereditary.”

Phosphora held her head dizzily as she walked out of the house. “Phosphora, there you are!” A slender Birkan woman with a white gown, long white hair, and blue eyes floated over. “What were you doing?”

Phosphora stood up straight with a sheepish grin. “Nothing, Lady Sulfa! I was heading back and I overshot my landing, that’s all!”

Phosphora spoke and waved her arms panickingly, “Something just came up, maybe later, guys!”

“Okay! Catch up later.” Bzzbert said, and they zipped off.

Phosphora returned her sheepish grin to Lady Sulfa, but after feeling her scolding glare for a few seconds, the girl slumped, baring a pouty face. “Phosphora, why are you always getting yourself into trouble.”
“It’s just hanging out with friends.” Phosphora smiled casually, sticking hands in her pockets. “Besides, Sola’s your daughter, aren’t you glad the two of us are bonding?”

“I wish you would set a better example for Sola. She doesn’t follow our religion, but I don’t want you giving her the idea these games are safe. One of these days, you’re going to hurt yourself.”

“You worry too much, Sulfy.” Phosphora lightly kicked the ground. “I’m a survivor, I’m like Bowser, I can withstand anything that’s thrown at me, LIKE THIS!” She flew up to the air, caught a sudden bolt of lightning, and blasted the nearby Thunder Tower. “See?”

“Don’t DO that! Sigh, come on, we’re supposed to be praying at Dashi’s Peak. God Thor won’t get here any faster if we neglect prayer during a storm like this.”

“I know, I know.” Phosphora sighed as the woman headed first toward the tower. She was about to join her, but first zipped up, got in the way of a bolt, and let it tickle. “PHOSPHORA!!” She snapped back to attention and zipped toward the peak.

Dash’s Peak

According to Birkan law, it was sacrilege to set foot on Dashi’s Peak before Almighty Thor. For that reason, most Birkans took care not to fly too close. The only ones to be so close were the priests and priestesses, forming a circle around the structure as they bowed in prayer. Their respective groups of students were aligned behind them in similar fashion. Those who knew what Phosphora was like outside of class would get confused in thinking they’re the same person. The very same daredevil who always challenged the powers of nature was politely bowed, a peaceful smile on her face. Every time the Head Priest spoke, she replayed the words in her head.

“Mighty God Thor,” the ancient Birkan spoke before the stairs, “we are but your humble servants, who hath dwelled on this island for many a century. In this eternal storm, we know that from the heavens higher than ours, you bless us with everlasting energy, and this storm is a form of your praise and kindness, not your anger. Our children, and our children’s children happily accept your gift, knowing it will allow us to thrive for more generations to come. So if it is your will, please let greater thunder roar across the heavens and earth…”

So that all beings may know the power and prosperity that Birka brings, power which said beings, humans and Nimbi alike, use to prosper today. Phosphora concluded in her mind.

A distant zipping sound caught her ears. Phosphora sat up and looked back, seeing a trio of kids several hundred feet in the air, zipping place-to-place as they kicked a shockball around. They were steadily, though unknowingly getting closer toward the tower. With a powerful kick that used lots of momentum, the shockball was on a collision course with the tower. The kids were too nervous to go after it, fearing they wouldn’t make it and be branded as the culprits, though the ball would make impact either way. The priests and students looked up, gasping as the ball was a second from crashing.

Even without blinking, they couldn’t comprehend Phosphora’s speed when she practically warped up to the ball and sent it beyond the clouds with a mighty swing. The kids looked at each other sheepishly before flying away. Phosphora looked down at her classmates, who all gazed up with praiseful stares, and Sulfia was especially proud. “…. Oooooow.” She had to grip her toes for the next several minutes, for kicking that hard with a sandaled foot couldn’t come without price.

After session was over a few hours later, the students were all parting ways, while Sulfia was speaking with Phosphora. “In spite of all your regular activities, at least you’re still a model student during session. Why are you so different every other time?”
“I like to think I’m embracing what Thor gave me. The wings to do whatever and fly anywhere I want!”

“Thor wants \textbf{all} children of Birka to live their lives happy and healthy, not maim themselves in a storm.” Sulfa said with a sweatdrop. “Besides, you remember what happened to your mom, r-”

“My mom died doing what she loves!” Phosphora exclaimed, almost defensively. “And Thor as my witness, I’ll go down the same way!” She faced up at the sky with confidence. “I’ll become the greatest Chariot Master ever!”

“Well, I can’t stop you from doing what you love. But I’d at least consider Priestess as a fallback. Have a nice evening, Phosphora.” The priestess waved good-bye before flying away.

Phosphora lived by herself in the old power plant village, Joel. Her father left them before she was born, so only her mother raised her. Of course, her mom was a carefree woman too, her passion was Lightning Chariot racing, and Phosphora always loved seeing her in action as a little girl. But one day, when Phosphora was five, the Thundercorns broke free of their reigns when her mom was flying at a thousand miles per hour. She crashed against the island in a blinding blaze, and the rest was history. Phosphora was orphaned and upset, but feeling sympathetic toward her, the local priestess Lady Sulfa comforted her. She introduced Phosphora to their religion Raikism, taught her to honor and worship Thor, the mighty Thunder God who would ensure safety and prosperity to all Birkans. Phosphora believed her mom was up in the Spirit World now, with Thor, with all the everlasting energy to survive a thousand chariot crashes. Despite what’s happened, Phosphora still wanted to be a Chariot Master, and prayed for Thor’s blessing every day so that her dream could be realized.

Maybe that was the reason behind her ‘daredevil’ side, to always test the powers of lightning and see if Thor, or maybe her mother, was looking after her best interest. She didn’t know, either way it was fun, so she and her friends got into regular amounts of mischief on a daily basis. For now, however, Phosphora was tired after burning so much energy, so she returned to her little crumbled house in Joel, slipping out of her sandals to collapse onto her mini raincloud bed. She wasn’t even sure what time it was, no one did in Birka, the sky is always blocked by clouds, which always produce lightning. Even though the clouds today, as she could still see through the hole in her ceiling, were very dark.

She barely slept, just closed her eyes and let her mind wander for a couple hours. She pictured herself riding across the planet in minutes on her Lightning Chariot, saw herself jump out of her chariot in attempt to race the Thundercorns, because how epic would that be. She also pictured God Thor, finally descended onto Birka, and asked Phosphora to be his vassal. She would get to spend every waking moment with the sexy, muscular, powerful deity. And maybe when she became old enough, he would fall for her and wish for Phosphora to carry his half-mortal child. Hey, don’t judge her, she’s turning 13 next year, she has to start having fantasies like this.

A knock at her front door shocked Phosphora out of her thoughts. She got up and answered to find Sola and her friends. “Girl, what’re you still doing in, I thought you’d be out ‘n’ about by now! You gotta take a look at this storm, it’s like it’s a portal or somethin’, over Dashi’s Peak!”

Curious, Phosphora joined her friends as they flew closer to Dashi’s Peak. The very center of the spiraling clouds brimmed like a vortex, and a tornado-like shaft seemed to stretch miles upward within this center. The light within the shaft grew brighter as lightning cracked every few seconds, growing steadily louder, everyone was anxious as to how loud or powerful the strikes would become. Then a terrific, tremendous, godlike bolt struck the top of Dashi’s Peak, the entire structure shone. The light stretched across Birka for several minutes until the storm finally calmed.
An armored, caped figure stood upon the very top of the peak. The Birkans’ gazes fell on nothing else, especially Phosphora, whose purple eyes trembled with extreme wonder and delight. The being raised a staff in his right arm and roared with a high and mighty voice, “DENIZENS OF BIRKA. I AM YOUR RULER. My name is Thor, God of Thunder. From my place up in Higher Heaven, for thousands of years, I have heard your prayers. Now was my time to descend unto you. I will bring Birka, and this whole world, into a GOLDEN AGE! From this day forward… you shall be forever pure!”

Roars and cheers rang across the island, rivaled only by the lightning. Phosphora still couldn’t believe her eyes or ears. The god she has always waited for, dreamed of meeting, suddenly to appear before their very eyes. “…Sii-i-i-i-i-igh!” She couldn’t contain her breath, she was too excited. How she wanted to be atop that tower as soon as possible.

A few seconds later

“Hiii, Lady Sulfa!” Phosphora didn’t need long to find her. “So um, not to sound too abrupt, but when’s the field trip to go up and meet Thor??”

“Hmhm, I’m excited too, but even the teachers aren’t allowed up on Dashi’s Peak, yet!” Sulfa replied with a chuckle. “Only the Head Priest and his group can have the honor. You can wait a little longer, can’t you, Phosphora?”

“Wait a little longer?! Haven’t we been waiting for this day, like, forever?? Do you not know how huge a deal this is??”

“Of course I know what a huge deal this is, but no huge deal should be approached precipitously. We have to behave respectfully in the presence of Lord Thor. But-just-in-case, can I have your opinion on hairspray, standing or stationary?” She excitedly held up two bottles of electric hairspray. Phosphora stared with disbelief and said nothing before zipping away.

She seated herself on a rooftop overlooking Lightstreet, where Bzzbert, Node, and Sola were quick to join her. “If I could take a chance to use an adult phrase correctly, I’d say you’re horny.” Node said—Phosphora flipped, kicked down against his head so hard, it sank into his body, puffing him fat again. His head popped back out, dizzy.

“Girl, we know you been waitin’ for this since before you were born, but Mom’s right, you shouldn’t go all crazy.” Sola told her.

“Hey, if you guys could understand an ounce of what I’m feeling, you wouldn’t be saying that, but you never even believed Thor would show up.” Phosphora retorted.

“You’re right, I didn’t, and I sure as heck don’t believe it now.”

“What’s that supposed to mean.”

“I mean, for Thor to suddenly SHOW UP in the middle of a storm just doesn’t seem real, I mean why now, why today? I feel like just anyone coulda ‘descended’ onto Dashi’s Peak and say he’s our god.”

“Please, that is the most ridiculous thing I-”

Rizbi and Lingning showed up, “He’s fake.”

“What?”
“I flew by and snapped this photo after he appeared.” Rizbi showed them his camera. “Took a couple of times to get it precise.” The picture depicted the figure in brownish-gold armor, with a horned helmet and sharp face. “And here’s a book depicting an ancient drawing of Thor. There’s a… slight difference.”

He showed them a dusty-looking tome, with a worn-out image of a mighty, muscular man raising his hammer. “…Well, there is somewhat of a… difference… But that drawing was ages ago, and; maybe no one ever saw him, it was just their interpretation of Thor.” Phosphora reasoned.

“Does he still match your fantasy?” Bzzbert asked.

“Maybe not exactly, but… you know, never judge a god by his facial features!” Phosphora beamed. “Besides, if it isn’t Thor, who else could it be?”

“Look, just for fun, we’re gonna say that it is.” Sola said. “We don’t want ‘im to completely drive you away from us. You might be spending an extra ten-hundred hours praying to him, but before you go and do that, at least play shockball with us.”

Phosphora sighed lightly. “Yeah, you’re probly right. …I call first serve!” She zipped skyward.

“I know who gets last!” Rizbi remarked before the others (minus Node) followed.

“Haww, darnit.” The overweight Nimbi joined them.

Dashi’s Peak

“My Lord, do forgive us if this place of residence is not to your liking.” The Head Priest bowed, as did his apprentices. “Birkan law states that we were never to set food on this tower. For 5,000 years, it’s stood. We promise to renovate this place to your liking if it is your will.”

Thor rubbed his fingers on the armrest of his throne, feeling for dust. “It will do for now.” He sat down. “I should hope your people have made excellent use of my lighting over the years. What is this island’s technological status, exactly?”

“Icredible, My Lord! We are the most advanced in technology because of your energy, and now we pray to be even greater with the limitless power you will bestow! …If it is your will.”

Thor smiled. “Your Lord will be more than delighted to bestow the energy you so helplessly desire. There is… only one problem. My powers are drastically diminished.”

“M-My Lord… what do you mean?”

Thor kept his wry smile, but it went unnoticed by his subjects. “There is a reason I decided to show myself now. It seems that, after 5,000-plus years of providing this world energy, my powers are a bit faulty. You don’t need to worry… because I have every intention of granting you the promised energy. I expect you to heed my every order if you want it, since I am your god.”

“Yes, My Lord! Your wish is our command.”

“Good.” Thor twisted his staff in his fingers. “First… there will be new laws established on Birka. Outsiders are forbidden to enter, and those too-” His attention was directed to the sky behind the priests. A team of five Birkan kids were happily zipping about and kicking a shockball around.

Phosphora sent it to Rizbi, who spun at 10,000 degrees and flung it skyward, Sola performed a Screw Kick, diagonally down to Node, who bounced it with his bulbous belly as he turned skinny, then Bzzbert sent it to Sola with a headbutt, and they just kept passing it around, all around the island. After Bzzbert headbutted it for the 10th time, his eyes widened at something. “Uhhhh, guys?”

Five-year-old Lingning wasn’t gonna pass out on the fun. She had flown to another Lightning Chariot strip, and grown another pair of energy arms. On an instinct, Rizbi sent the shockball toward her whipping fast, and Lingning balled both fists and struck the ball with greater force. The only problem was, it was flying directly toward Dashi’s Peak, the very top where Thor now sat. None of the kids bothered to try and stop it, but Phosphora was especially horrified, the speed it was going. With rageful eyes, Thor rose, swung his staff, and shot an energy ball so swift and powerful, it zapped the shockball through space and time.

The priests stepped aside in fear when Thor marched to the edge of the stairs. His green eyes fixed on the distant little dot that was Lingning, whose energy arms shrunk into nothing. Thor whipped his staff, and a lightning bolt struck inches in front of the child, barely scraping her as she fell to the ground. “LINGNING!” Phosphora cried.

Thor warped to the area where she fell, standing atop a short cliff that overlooked the child. “THIS IS how you treat your god?! Sheer disrespect with childish antics?!”

The Head Priest zipped down to him, “Please, forgive her, My Lord. Children don’t know any better-”

“I was to understand that ALL Birkans were raised to honor and worship me.”

“N-Not all of them, My Lord, roughly 10 percent of the population-”

“Then YOU should have tried harder.” Thor thundered at the elder, before focusing his anger on the 5-year-old. “ALL mortals must know my power, including hopeless little runts like her. I will TEACH her the price of insubordination,” incredible power built up in his scepter, “ONE way or another!”

Seeing the light on his weapon grow, Phosphora zipped down in the way of Lingning, just when the powerful beam fired. Phosphora caught the energy in her hands, she felt her feet glued against the ground. She absorbed every ounce that she could, Thor’s power was truly godlike, her nerves were tingling like she couldn’t believe. “AAAAAAAAAHHHHHHHH!” Her body glowed totally white, her flesh was furiously burning.

Lingning fearfully backed away, staring with silent horror when Phosphora fell. Her body was burnt brown, her clothes were nearly disintegrated. Little sparks lit up her body. “PHOSPHORA!” Lady Sulfa flew over, and Phosphora’s friends surrounded overhead with worried expressions.

“Uuuuu…” Phosphora looked barely alive. The Head Priest flew down, bent over, and softly felt around her singed form.

“Oh, my!” Sula gasped.

“Girl…” Sola was at a loss for words. The friends bowed their heads in guilt and sympathy. After how risky, cheerful, and carefree Phosphora was… the sad part of it all, she was only trying to protect her friend.

“Nnnn-n-n…” Phosphora weakly got back on her feet, much to everyone’s surprise. She held her left arm and forced a grin, still sparking as she looked up at Thor. “My…My Lord…” She said hoarsely. “Forgive my… insolence…”

Thor only stared at the child. How pathetic she looked… it was humorous. Staring at him like an idol, the god he was… right after she was so brutally injured. Thor released a chuckle and smiled. “The rest of you leave us. I would like a moment alone with the child. …Her bravery must be commended…”

Lady Sulfa and the Head Priest looked at each other with worry and confusion. Phosphora’s friends bared the same features, but obeyed the god and zipped away. Thor softly dropped onto the ground where Phosphora limped. The child was still so happy… gazing at the deity. “My Lord… mighty god, Thor.” She fell to her knees and bowed. “I am… your humble servant. I may be just a child, but… my faith that you would come was very strong.”

A gentle rumble of thunder took place. Thor remained silent. “You know this already, but we’ve all waited… for a very long time, God Thor.” Phosphora fought the pain in her nerves. “Your power was mixed with your kindness, giving all Birkans a place to call home. Yet, you must show discipline, when it is needed… do forgive Lingning, My Lord. She is an innocent child, in the end. It was an honor to take your punishment in her place. Mighty God Thor, if I am deserving of your kindness… please, replenish my wings, and my chi. In return, I shall devote my life to serving you. Mighty God Thor, savior of Birka… please, shower unto us your divine energy.”

Thor’s soft smile didn’t change. This child’s loyalty and devotion was beautiful. He could see through her humbleness like water: deep down, she truly believed he would grant her request.

Thor raised his staff and smashed Phosphora’s head against the ground. Blood and teeth fell from her face. “Mighty God Thor, do this. Mighty God Thor, thank thee for that.” He swung his staff like a bat and hit Phosphora against a mound. “It’s the same with all of your pitiable kind. You act so humbly towards your god, because deep inside, you think you deserve it. You think your god acquiesces. But let me tell you something.” He jabbed the base of his staff against Phosphora’s face, forcing the back of her head against the mound. “A true god feels no pity.” Bashed her across the jaw. “A true god seeks to punish for insubordinance, not forgive.” Across the other end of the jaw. “And your God Thor does not care for you. He would never set foot on such a meager planet.”

As blood continued seeping from Phosphora’s swollen features, Thor grabbed her by the neck and zipped to a nearby edge of the island. “Remember this, Child.” He whispered softly in her ear, even though she was less than conscious. “My name is Loki. Second son of Odin. Your religion has always been a sham. Of course, the people of this island don’t need to know that. Not until my use for them is through. An age of pure power is dawning over Birka. Those too weak to embrace it do not deserve to live here. Good-bye… Phosphora. May you be with your gods soon.” He dropped Phosphora’s limp body on the ground, then kicked her over the edge.

She was too nearly dead to understand that she was falling. Her brain was as active as her limbs. Her body twirled and twirled and twirled as she descended. She wouldn’t and couldn’t attempt to stop herself. When it seemed her vision was clear of endless gray, the blue sea stretched below her. She splashed in the salty surface, and everything went black.

When vision returned to her, she was staring at blue sky and sunlight. Two things she’s never seen. She was in a very filthy coastside dump of an unnamed town. As she sat up to observe her surroundings, her mind was still lost. Was it the lightning, was it the sea salt in her lungs, the loss of blood, either way she didn’t understand anything, anymore. She tried to stand up, but her knees faltered. She remained hunched as she limped across the trash. The sea had washed some of the blood and soot, but now it appeared dried on her flesh. Tiny shreds now served as her shorts and shirt, barely covering her private areas, but could crumble away at the slightest tear. Her sandals were long lost, and the bottoms of her feet took cuts from the shards lying about.

Her legs carried her to town, but could walk no further. She was on all fours, crawling helplessly. She made her way to an alley and crawled into the gungy path. She let her body lie dead on its front, staring mindlessly at the roaches crawling around, slurping the little puddle of substance. The sun was directly overhead and shining through the buildings’ gap. She felt her skin growing warmer. She didn’t know what to do or where to go. Only await death.

She weakly looked up at the sound of some thumping. A large creature in lime-green armor stared at her. Or maybe she was hallucinating, that was the likely explanation. The creature turned and walked around the alley’s corner. Phosphora regained a fraction of strength in her arms and crawled. She was led to an open area, where a green spaceship of sorts sat. The armored soldier looked at Phosphora before marching into the open hatch. While still weak and slow in the mind, Phosphora crawled in after it.

Within the next several hours, Phosphora was carried to a distant, alien planet, inside a tremendous fortress made entirely of bark. The strange creatures here bathed Phosphora in invigorating spring water, gave her a shirt and shorts stitched from leaves, and patched her wounds using vine. She was brought to a dining room, where a slim, handsome butler with bluish-purple skin and brown hair fixed her dozens of plates of steaming vegetables and fruit. Phosphora guzzled almost every bit, she had never felt so replenished. “Do you like it?” a peppier, feminine voice asked. “Arlon’s cooking was never one to disappoint.”

Phosphora swallowed a carrot. “Yeah. It’s great. But… who are you?”

“Call me Viridi.” The 8-year-old girl replied from behind a cluttering of vines, which blocked her out. She had bright blonde hair and green eyes. “Goddess of Nature and all living things.”

“Goddess of… Nature?”

“Your mind is still processing slowly, it seems.” Arlon observed. “A natural phenomena, after such a traumatic experience.”

“I… I don’t understand…”

“I saw the whole thing through my crystal ball.” Viridi informed. “It disgusted me to no end… how an ordinary human could claim to be god. This ‘Thor’ was the furthest thing from.”

“Ordinary… human?”

“Well, he isn’t EXACTLY human, but he’s still a despicable mortal. Of course, I suppose I don’t really look in the best shape, either. The truth is, I’m a hundred percent god, but because of certain ‘crimes’ I committed, I’m locked up here.”

“What… crimes?”

“Crimes for trying to teach humans and ALL nature-haters a lesson! The other gods branded me for trying to destroy the world, I’m trying to SAVE it! You’ve seen it yourself, Phosphora, how great mortals deem themselves. An ordinary human like Loki impersonating a god, treating your people like vermin. And look what he’s done to you… poor, innocent child. Phosphora… I really want to help you, but I can’t do anything ‘long as I’m trapped here. That’s why… I would like you to work for me. I want you to help me destroy ALL disgusting humans like Loki. Make the worlds a better place for all creatures of nature. I have a device that can give you lightningbending, and I will train you to command my soldiers. But if you don’t want to, I’ll happily let you stay here.
Well… Phosphora?"

Even though it didn’t seem like it, Phosphora understood every word. She replied solemnly, “I will.”

“Excellent. Welcome to the Forces of Nature… Lieutenant Phosphora.”

“Ahhh, I’m glad we have that business out of the way.” Arlon sat across from the girl. “You must be wondering how I came to be in Viridi’s ranks. It all started when I was a little boy living on Lunaria—”

“We’re running out of chapter-time, Arlon.”

“Very well. I’ll wait for the Side Stories.”

Phosphora’s house; current time

“So I worked for Viridi for the next 22 years.” Phosphora continued. “She gave me a Lightning Scarf that restored my bending, but I couldn’t use it too much without recharging. Since then, my loyalty was only to Viridi.”

“No offense, but why would Viridi care about you?” Anthony asked.

“You wouldn’t believe it, but Viridi was a very kind spirit. She feels compassion for all creatures who are unjustly treated, like merpeople, Minish, or those little aliens.” Anthony frowned grumpily and looked away. “Humans and other mortals think themselves powerful over these creatures, like they were gods who could decide their fate. That’s why Viridi wished to punish them. I know her ultimate goal was the wrong way, but for a long time… I didn’t really care.” Phosphora looked down and glared. “There was no proof that my religion was correct, but it was something I came to love. Then on that day, when Thor—when Loki appeared, I was overcome with joy… on that day, everything that I believed in came flying to me in the blink of an eye. And as fast as it all came… it crashed. That so-called ‘god’ destroyed me inside, so I… believed Viridi. I wanted to destroy all of those people who think they’re god, destroy everything they believed in.”

“But why is this ‘Loki’ still hanging around?” Aranea asked. “Wasn’t Viridi going to help you destroy him?”

“She wasn’t in much condition to help me destroy anyone; not until she could use Celebi to return to full power. It didn’t matter in the end, though, because Viridi was defeated. The person who gave me a home after my banishment… then I spent the next few months in prison. Until that stranger with the red eye broke us out. Took Arlon with him, but he gave me a ship he stole. During that time, though… I had time to think. I thought about why I joined Viridi to begin with, I saw myself falling from my island, then I remembered Fybi… after her wings were destroyed by my lightning. For a long time, I couldn’t stop thinking about how distraught she might’ve been, so after I escaped from prison… I wanted to meet her again.”

The kids sat in silent agreement. Fybi was distraught by the incident, this was true. “But I never expected Fybi to want to come here.” She continued. “To tell the truth, I never wanted to come back. The island where I was made to look like an idiot. I never wanted you kids to know about it, the shame of it all. But after Fybi asked, I thought about… what you kids could do. I heard the stories, you Kids Next Door are more than what you seem. I heard what Cheren and Nebula did, and I fought you five directly… As weird as it sounds, I thought you kids could help me, too. I still didn’t want you to know about me, so I tried to keep it subtle, that ‘Thor’ was just a phony god whose secret I discovered. But… sigh, I can’t run away from my past if I’m returning to it. After what I did to Fybi, you kids must be really humored to know this.”

“But Miss Phosphora, that’s terrible what happened to you.” Sally stated.

“Yeah, I mean, you may’ve gone completely nuts with us, but I probly would’ve gone the same.” Aranea noted.

“Not sweet at all.” Harvey said with strong disapprove.

“In spite of our past conflict, thou must know that thou hast our full support.” Fybi promised. “Ist this not so, Anthony? …Anthony?”

The boy was gone. They heard the front door shut. The six of them quickly hurried outside, seeing the Sector Leader go up on a small hill. He held Fybi’s B.O.W. and took aim at Dashi’s Peak—Fybi felt her skirt and realized her weapon was missing. Anthony stretched the string and formed an energy arrow, locked absolutely tight on the caped figure atop the peak. He let the charged arrow fly, and… it pierced Loki’s chest. They watched as his armored body fell over and plummeted down the tower.

“EEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEAAAAAA!” The sectormates and Phosphora panicked, taking cover behind a fence so as to imply, ‘He’s not with us.’ But more than halfway down the tower, Loki’s body dispersed into dust, and they all stared confused.

“Huh?” Anthony was just as surprised.

“A pleasure to meet you, too.” Lady Sulfa flew up behind him, and transformed into Loki. He thwacked Anthony across the head with the head of his scepter.

“ANTHONY!” His friends ran out, but stopped when Loki turned at them.

“Did you children really believe you could waltz onto this island under God’s supervision? Never forget that I am anywhere and everywhere. I may sit atop Dashi’s Peak some of the time, but I mostly prefer to go for a little walk. That figure you just shot was a mirage I created to deceive people, while I disguise myself as the commonfolk. It’s the best way to snuff out the town of disloyalty and have those people imprisoned. But I was particularly interested in you young visitors. I must admit, I had forgotten about that child until she told us her story. To think you were still alive all this time, Phosphora.”

“You…” Phosphora’s eyes trembled, “Where is Lady Sulfa?!”

“Imprisoned in the tower with a few others who stood against me. They’ve been excellent help in providing the tower energy, but it’s just not enough. I must say, I’m rather interested…” Loki bent over and picked up the B.O.W. from Anthony’s hand, “with this.”

“PRAY, what interest hast thou in my weapon?!” Fybi shouted.

“Your weapon? Well, I suggest that you explain to me how a bow of this design can magically conjure arrows, if you don’t want your half-beaver friend to become dust.”

“Grrrr!” Fybi displayed the anger on her face, but kept herself from acting rashly. “I hath purchased material from alien beings to create such a weapon, which canst produce endless amount of energy, which I hath programmed to take form into solid arrows to smite evil beings like thyself.”

“Limitless arrows and energy…” Loki studied the small weapon with interest. “I think this trinket can complete my ultimate plan. I’ll just take it with me, if you don’t mind.” He smiled wryly at the angel. “Many thanks to you, Feebi. You all can witness my crowning moment from the dungeons of Dashi’s Peak.” In a second, he zipped away.

A swarm of armored Birkans appeared around them. “This is where it came from!” the captain yelled. “By the will of God Thor, you are all under arrest. Surrender now, or be-” Furious storms of lightning rained down on all of them.

“‘Smited’ is what you were going to say, right?” A shockball whipped around and bashed each Birkan in the head, knocking them senseless. Amper appeared, and after inhaling, she puffed herself and sent tiny, but furious sparks around to singe all of the guards. Ela, Laxy, Brendix, and Dio appeared above the group. “I guess you kids finally know what’s goin’ on.” Dio proclaimed.

“Uhhnn… wh-what?” Anthony regained his senses and looked up. “You guys again? What’s the deal, who ARE you?”

“We’re the Birkan Kids Next Door. I’m the leader, Numbuh Kilo.” Dio zipped away, Amper took his place.

“You guys better come with us to our base so we can fill you in.” she said. “Birka is about to pass over Mount Olympus. If this happens, Loki will try to unleash the Titans.”

Talk about trying to squeeze so much into one chapter. That song was a parody of “Stronger Than You” from Steven Universe, the Encyclopod is from Futurama, reality is an illusion, the universe is a hologram, Fairy Tail uses mind-control waves, eat lots of pancakes, I’ll see you later! Oh, and Loki is from Thor!

Chapter Summary

Sector W takes the fight to Loki!

Well, we’re finally here, the final stage of Lightning Saga, and the boss.

Chapter 28: Rulers of this World

Sector STORM Treehouse

Far away from Birka, near the entrance to Storm Canyon, was Birkan Kids Next Door, Sector STORM’s treehouse. Much like the rest of Birka, it is composed of storm clouds hardened into metal, with thousands of wires, and constantly takes in lightning from the clouds. Sector W returned to their Angel Wing, which they used to follow the Birkan kids to this hideout. “Welcome to our place!” Dio zipped away, came back, “Make yourselves at home!”

He was gone, Laxy replaced him, “We’ll give you the tour, show ya around.” He zipped off—came back, “That’s the end of our tour. No asking questions about the secret room.”

“Quit buggin’ us and just tell us what’s goin’ on!” Anthony yelled. “Is this the only Birka sector?”

“Duh, there’s only one Birka.” Amper said, zipped away, Ela replaced her.

“We’re part of Skypian KND, though. They call us for fast-pace missions.” She zipped away, Brendix replaced.

“We knew who you were, Phosphora. Our parents told us about you. Betcha can guess who they are.”

“Wait…” Phosphora figured it out quickly. “You mean you’re-”

Dio and Amper zipped. “Sola is our mom, Sulfia is our Grandma.”

Brendix zipped, “Node is my dad, didja know that?”

Then Laxy. “Rizbi’s my dad, I’ll tell ‘im ‘hi.’” Zipped away, came back, “Just kidding, he’s in jail.”

“And mine is Bzzbert. That’s all.” Ela concluded.

“Course not, she’s only 27.” Dio replied. “Who has kids when they’re younger than 27?”

Around the world

“ACHOO!!” All of the Nextgen parents sneezed.
“Funny thing about Lingning, though.” Dio said. “It was her idea that Birkan KND should be formed. She was the original operative. This was her treehouse. And some friends of hers. Not yours, they were too old.” Zipped away, Amper filled in.

“But they all knew what Loki did to you, they were just afraid to do anything. Lingning took action by starting this KND, her team worked to try and find a way to expose and defeat Loki, but never managed, now we’re continuing their work.” Zipped away, Brendix filled.

“Loki kinda caught on, too, Lingning and our parents are locked in Dashi’s Peak right now. But now we know just what Loki’s doing here.” Zipped away, Ela began to explain.

“Loki built a giant ray gun on the island’s underside, it’s connected to Dashi’s Peak, wasn’t there before.” She spoke quickly (much like her friends). “It shoots below the clouds every now and then, it’s absorbing energy from the surface.”

She zipped away, Laxy filled in. “And we know why, we found a book in Loki’s room on Dashi’s Peak. How’d we sneak in, shrink ray of course, everywhere else has one, why not a lightning sector? Anyway, he had a page bookmarked, about Mount Olympus down on Greece, he’s gonna-” “Guys, can you at least explain this part slowly, I can’t follow along when you talk so fast.” Aranea interrupted.

Dio filled in and talked normally. “It tells a story how Greece used to have their own band of gods, before the main gods told them to leave. The reason is those gods created a group of gigantic monsters called Titans. There was a Rock Titan, Ice Titan, a Magma Titan, bunch of them. I think there was also a Cyclops.”

“But wouldst Loki not need terrific amounts of energy?” Fybi inquired. “He hast been absorbing power from the surface, verily, but we art talking of a seal created by a god. Canst average Earth lands produce so much energy?”

“But Fybi, he took your B.O.W., didn’t he?” Aranea asked. “You said it produces limitless energy arrows.”

“V…Verily.” Fybi felt a growing tinge of worry inside. “But Birka wast already crossing Greece before he hath taken. Didst he not already possess enough?”

“The book didn’t actually look clear from what we read, so we don’t know if Loki is sure, either.” Dio replied. “But what about this B.O.W. of yours? How can it produce unlimited energy?”

“Hmmm…” Fybi thought for a moment. “I believeth… yon GKND who hath lent me such material… claim it is from Vaporia, planet of electric.”

“Home of Volcor, Vaporian God of Thunder.” Laxy knew. “We were in the Viridi War, you know. Betcha can guess why you didn’t see us.”

“Thou means to say that ‘Volcor’ is whose energy my B.O.W. possesses?” Fybi inquired.
“It’s a thought. Either way, Loki could definitely get a handy amount of energy from Vaporian technology. If Loki sets those Titans free, he could ruin the whole planet.”

“Well, what’re we up here for? Let’s fly to Dashy’s Peak and clobber him!” Anthony fist-palmed.

“Surprised you still have the ability to say that after being clobbered in the head by him.” Aranea remarked.

“You can if you want to.” Laxy replied. “But it won’t be easy. A barrier made of Loki’s energy protects the cannon until it needs to fire, and that same shield protects the upper parts of the tower. It forces electrical bodies like Birkans to go all crazy, like some radioactive business. Only soldiers get to the top by flying through the inside, except for those brief moments when the shield’s down.”

“So we wait for the cannon to shoot, then go up?” Harvey asked, swinging his yo-yo.

“That’s not a good move, either.” Ela replied. “Let’s assume that his next destination is Mount Olympus, if we wait for it to fire, the Titans’ll come up. The best plan is to go into Dashi’s Peak through the bottom entrance and make your way up. Since you guys have those rubber suits, you should be safe from most of the electricity.”

“Go inside Dashi’s Peak and find a way to turn off the barrier.” Dio told them. “While you’re in there, you can save all the prisoners being forced to contribute their energy to the cannon. In the likely event it fires on Mount Olympus, the less energy, the better.”

“’Tis a rational course of action.” Fybi agreed. “I wish to reclaim my B.O.W.. I shal not let it be used for such evils.”

“Come to our armory and we’ll let you pick out some of our weapons.” Laxy zipped away, he came back, “Well, what’s taking you guys so long?”

“Stop doing that, Laxy.” Amper said with disbelief, before the Birkans calmly led the humans away.

Anthony was going to join them, but noticed Fybi float away from the group, apparently lost in thought. He approached his angel friend. “Fybi, don’t you want any weapons? Without your B.O.W., you…”

“Pray tell, Anthony, fair Tom hast told thee the way of lavabending, yea?”

“Pfft. It took me forever to Seismic Sense, you think I can lavabend?”

“Nay, but wouldst thou hath the stomach for it? Is not what Tom said to know what heat is? Thou dirty thine feet with the dirt of the world sun after sun, ast thou embraces fair earth, thou canst control it. Tom continues to know heat every day, and hast tapped into Earth’s raging form. Wherefore canst I not do the same? I hath flown hot summer air and cold winter chills. Shouldst I not be able to make my air hot or cold, whenever I desire?”

“IIIiiii wouldn’t think so?” Anthony had trouble understanding her sometimes.

“Nay.” Fybi smirked. “I shouldst.” Fybi clamped her hands together, focused her chi, and spun the air around her. Anthony’s jumpsuit became increasingly sticky with sweat, the air was so hot, he thought he might suffocate. “Prithee, is it hot?” Fybi smiled brightly and let the air chill. Anthony begun to shudder now, he wished he was wearing something thicker, because it was co-o-o-o-o-old.
Their teammates later returned with gray, cloud-made, electrical-based weapons in hand. Aranea held the empty handle of a whip, Harvey wore shoulder pads that he could press with his head and shoot lasers, Sally had an average electric ray gun, and Phosphora possessed a small, thick thunder rod. “Well, here’s some for you guys.” Aranea said, passing Anthony a set of electric knuckles, and Fybi her own shock ray. “Bur-r-r, who turned the air down?”

“My apologies.” Fybi grinned. “I shalt not be needing a weapon for present. I shalt only use my B.O.W. to battle Loki.”

Outside Dashi’s Peak

The tower was tremendous up close, and its front gates were shut. If one gazed at Dashi’s terrific size, they could hardly believe it doesn’t stretch above the clouds. Guards were stationed at every exterior corner. Since no one could fly to the top through the barrier, only the bottom parts required guarding. One soldier looked in the distance, seeing five Birkan kids innocently kicking a shockball around. Amper kicked it skyward to Dio, who spun around and sent it rocketing to the base of Dashi’s Peak. It smashed against a guard’s face, and said guard flew backfirst against the tower. The guards stared up at the kids. “GOD THOR SUCKS LOFTWING MILK!” Brendix announced for all to hear. “Betcha didn’t know that!!”

A trio of guards zipped up to chase him, but Brendix’s friends flew down, zapped the other guards, and earned their full attention. The citizens of Birka got to enjoy an afternoon spectacle of guards chasing kids, in the forms of strips of light. Sector W and Phosphora peeped out from behind a bush. “Now’s our chance!” Anthony whispered, and the group bolted to the stairs to the gate. The gray, wooden doors were sealed, but posed no threat to Fybi. She whirled her arms, spun the wind around her to a single point, and thrust the gust forward to blow the doors down. Stage 37: Birka

Act 2: Dashi’s Peak

The first room was large and wide-open, with columns of lightning surging from the floor to the ceiling. Birkan Spearmen zipped around the room, zapping small electric spheres from their rods. Sally and Harvey tossed their yo-yos, which had blades extracted on their sides that contributed to the damage, injuring their exposed areas. Aranea extracted her Electro Whip that she lashed through the guards’ armor, and Anthony fought with the mud he got from Rubberband Land, performing Mud Slices across the armor. During their weakened states, Fybi used gusts to blast them into the electric columns. The five heroes climbed a ladder onto an upper walkway (Fybi flew) and found a huge door sealed with four giant locks. “It needs four mega-charges to open.” Phosphora explained. “It must be the point of these columns.”

“That’s why I took this.” Phosphora held up her metal lightning rod. “Very attractive. I might just keep it afterward!” She winked.

“I shalt take it now.” Fybi took the metal rod and flew to the closest column, keeping a firm grip when the electric attracted to the rod’s tip. Her arm trembled from the force, but she held tight and pulled the lightning to the first lock. She stuck her rod in, turned it off and pulled away, and the lightning stayed directed in the lock. She repeated the process with the other three columns, and once all four charges were set, the door shone brightly before opening. This room was more narrow, but wide, with many electric columns that kept platforms aloft. The friends found a stairway of platforms to their left, but jumped up them carefully, as they were close between the other columns.

They reached a large gap between their current platform, and another platform that floated left and right. An unlit rod was hanging horizontal above them, so only Sally and Harvey swung across with their yo-yos. They rode the moving platform to the very left, finding another unlit sideways platform against the wall. Sally and Harvey tossed their yo-yos around the rod and pulled it with them when their platform floated back. When it was close to touching the other sideways rod, Aranea lashed her whip up and between both rods, connecting them with an electric charge. They floated across the gap between the kids and the parallel cluster of columns, passing under an unlit rod and lighting it.

This rod connected with a Charge Pad on the floor, which allowed the platform to float over, in which Fybi flew above to push the platform down beside her friends. (Sally and Harvey had to drop to the floor and come back up the platform stairs to reunite with their friends.) The group rode it to the upper floor on the other side, and were able to freely jump around the platforms of equal height. There was a ledge on one side (directly above the room’s entrance) with a sealed door, requiring two charges on the antennas. There were higher platforms connected to antennas via charges, and Phosphora used her thunder rod to catch the lightning from two of them, jumping the platforms and pulling them to the antennas. When she had the charges connected with these antennas, the door opened.

They were in a vast, cylindrical room that seemed to stretch many floors. The four electric columns from the lower room stretched up this far. A line of holes spiraled up around the wall, but no stairs. “I shalt see if I canst find a way.” Fybi floated all the way up the room, avoiding the Amps and Ruff Puffs around. The line of holes ended at a ledge with two round slots on the floor. After examining their insides, she flew back down to inform her friends. “Seemeth a device which turns is required above.”

“Why would tops-?” Before she could finish her thought, the twins pulled out tops from their pockets, which puffed to their size on the push of a button.

“We learn a few things from our Negatives.” Sally smiled. “Let’s go, Harvey!” (“Sweet!”) The kids hopped on their tops, which extracted blades from the sides that stuck into the barren stairholes, allowing them to grind up the spiraling wall in this fashion. The twins ducked the Amps that flew by in attempt to hit them, and they tossed their yo-yos to dizzy the Ruff Puffs. The tops rolled off on the floor, and the kids each claimed a slot and kept spinning. They felt cogs underneath turn, and a stairway shortly came into being from the holes. Their friends seized the moment to run up, with Aranea and Fybi using their whip and wind to take out the Ruff Puffs.

Fybi blew the gates at the top open, bringing the group to an outside stairway. Beamos were stationed along the stairs, sensing the kids’ presence as they blasted their signature beams. Harvey bumped his shoulder pads and shot the eyes with lasers while Sally took aim with her own shock gun. “My neck’s gonna hurt after this.” Harvey said. A chunk of the stairs was missing, with a rod stationed on the upper side, so Aranea roped it with her Electro Whip and pulled, unveiling the concealed stairs. The friends rushed up the stairs before Aranea switched her whip off, then jumped on before the stairs retracted fully. A door with a diamond center was sealed, but all they had to use was a single Beamos. Fybi smirked and got the sentry’s attention, tricking it into blasting its laser at the diamond, which shone brightly before the door opened.

There were Birkans with chains around their ankles, forced to clutch wires within the walls and contribute energy. Guards were watching them, and had Jolteons on leashes. “Those must be the prisoners.” Phosphora deduced. “Let’s help them out!” Fybi whirled hot air around her arms and blew it at two guards, causing them to suffocate. Phosphora rushed forward and punched them in the face while the Harper twins struck with bladed yo-yos. The Jolteons were released as one of them sent a thunderbolt at Anthony, who withstood the shock with his suit before slicing the creature across the face with his mud.

The Harper twins rode their tops and rammed the guards with the bladed edges, and when the Jolteons ran at them, Aranea roped them with her whip and threw them into the electric columns, defeating the Pokémon with thousands of more jolts than they could stand. Aranea sliced the chains of two of the prisoners, and Anthony did the same with his Mud Slice. “Are all of you okay?” Phosphora asked.

“Yeah, but my hands aren’t gonna feel the same for… Phosphora?” One of the men spoke to her. Phosphora needed a moment to recognize him. “Rizbi?”

“Holy friz, where’ve you BEEN all this time?! We thought you were dead!”

“I’ve been out of this world, if that still qualifies. Where are the others?”

“On other floors. Probably getting their juice sucked out like me.” Rizbi sat on the floor.

They jumped a cloud-stairway to a solid foothold in a corner, close to a set of lightning columns whose three platforms shifted up and down. When the nearest platform was at their level, they jumped on, were lifted to the second, then jumped from there to the third. A Dark Puff was innocently hovering around, so Fybi made good use and puffed it with cold air. The Puff felt stick to its core, but the friends passed this off and boarded its inflated body. The air was forced out of its mouth with their weight, blowing toward another foothold in the corner. The team jumped off before the Puff deflated. Leading to the next walkway was a group of energy geysers, rising up from the pool below. Fybi flew to the area on the other side and found a crate of emergency rubber rafts – inside a box with Rubberband Land’s logo. Fybi took and dropped a raft over the tip of each geyser, allowing her friends to cross once more.

They entered a door and turned to pass down a hall—Loki grinned at them from the other side, and the friends braced for impact when the king fired a sphere. Fybi attempted to blow it away, but the sphere phased through her and didn’t harm the kids at all. “It’s an illusion!” Phosphora yelled. The fake Loki chuckled solemnly before vanishing. The heroes found a room where a Birkan prisoner was running ceaselessly on a large hamster wheel, barked at by Sky-Blue Spinies, whom were commanded by Dark Lakitu. Phosphora recognized that candy-green hair to be Bzzbert.

Fybi blasted the Lakitu with airbending, then the Spinies curled into balls to zoom at the kids, dealing painful damage with their high speed. Sally and Harvey rode their tops to ram the Spinies, bouncing between them and the wall as they steadily pushed the creatures toward the wheel’s generators. Their spiky bodies took a deadly zap while also destroying the two generators, forcing the wheel’s energy flow to stop. “WAAAAAAH!” Bzzbert was caught off-guard, slipping and zipping around the wheel before he was thrown to the wall.

“Hmph, I could’ve been. I’m Phosphora, Dumbo.”

“I was almost gonna guess that. …Sorry, I’m really happy to see you, I just… huff… been running for a long time…”

“Wouldst thine breath return quicker, knowing we were going to rescue thy friends?” Fybi asked.

“Huuuuff… almost!” Bzzbert fainted.

By stopping the wheel, an electric barrier blocking a stairway was gone. The friends rushed up, avoiding the Amps coming down, and entered a small, straightforward room with Voltorbs. The ball Pokémon rolled at the kids, who immediately dashed down the stairs when the explosions happened. Fybi blew away the smoke that followed them, and when the kids returned, the Electric-types were defeated like that. The friends crossed the room to another outside stairway, where the thunder roared furiously overhead. “WHOA!” The kids jumped to avoid a sudden bolt, and a strike began to occur every 2 seconds.

“The energy in the tower must be getting stronger!” Phosphora yelled. “It’s making the clouds unstable! I’ll run ahead first.” She raised the thunder rod and rushed up the stairs, catching each sudden bolt and feeling a tremor in her own body. The sectormates kept behind her, safe from the bolts themselves. They noticed the energy in the rod was building after each strike, and this would become convenient when they reached the sealed door, with a keyhole as wide as the rod. “Need a charge, do ya? Well, here it is, fresh from nature.” Phosphora stuck the rod inside, filling the door with enough energy to open.

The moment they entered this room, they were horrified: the severed heads of Birkans, their bodies as well, lay dead and bloody. The sign above read Dýspistous Prosochí! “It says ‘Disbelievers Beware’…” Phosphora spoke with gloom.

“Beware of what?” Fybi blasted air everywhere, dispersing the illusion. “Our own mind, mayhap.” The guards that were hidden tried to attack them, Aranea roped one’s wrists with her whip and flipped him upside-down, leaving Anthony to punch them in the face with his Watt Knuckles. Phosphora kicked another in the shin, then Fybi blew him into a nearby lightning column, and the Harpers stood on either side of a column as they threw their yo-yos around the arms of a soldier, pulling him back and into the electric. The next door was above a high ledge, with no way to climb up. Fybi flew above and observed the walkway, seeing two holes beside one area. She felt above those holes—discovering an invisible ladder. “Loki’s mirages be most deceptive.”

The friends climbed the revealed ladder to the next room, which was reddish-pink colored, massive, and a stairway of rows of giant blocks led up to the door. Phosphora was going to climb the first one, but it vanished, and Fybi pulled her back before the hidden Amp zapped her. “Most deceptive indeed.” The woman replied.

Anthony observed the blocks carefully, walking just inches from them to avoid touching the fakes. He felt an odd force beside one of them and touched it, confirming it solid. “This one’s safe.” Phosphora helped the kids climb before getting on herself. So for the rest of the room, Anthony determined the solidity of each block, and the kids progressed based on his judgment. “Not bad, Anthony.” Aranea said.

“Earthbenders gotta know what’s hard.” He winked. Behind this next door, the hall was incredibly narrow and cramped. The way they progressed through might’ve been similar to a 2-D side-scroller. There was a small pool of electric, where they had to wait for a platform to come over, jump on, and ride across. A pair of platforms were moving along a square-shaped line in midair, so the kids hopped on and rode the nearest one, jumping an incoming electric sphere. Pink electric sparks lit up the following passage, each one at certain intervals, so the six were patient in getting through.

The group entered what seemed like a pumping room, with four pipes channeling energy from a center. Phosphora didn’t need long to recognize Node, who shifted from fat to skinny on a regular basis, and was now using this trait to pump electricity through the pipes. He was trapped inside a glass dome, so Anthony decided to use his Watt Knuckles to begin punching it. Birkan Archers zipped into view and attempted to shoot him, Fybi blew off the electric arrows and Screw Kicked the first guard in the face. Harvey caught Aranea with his yo-yo and hurled her to the second guard, and she caught his legs with her whip to pull him down, letting Phosphora run up and kick him across the face. Sally threw her top above the third one, whipped her yo-yo up to press its switch, and the top expanded to crush and bring the guard down, then she grabbed the enlarged toy to bash him senseless.

The minute Anthony’s fist broke the glass, Node puffed to the ceiling. He slowly drifted down, as flat as a paper. Phosphora grabbed and stretched him to normal. “Ouch. Is that you, Phosphora?”

The friends showed disgust, so they quickly left him to recharge. A door was opened with the pipes no longer operable, bringing them outside. A platform was connected with an energy tube spiraling up around the tower, so they boarded on and began to ride. Sky-Blue Spinies dropped down from above, and the kids dodged when the turtles tried to roll at them. Some Birkan Archers landed, Phosphora fell and spin-kicked one off its feet, letting Fybi blow him down, and Anthony caught another’s arrow to stick it in the guard’s mouth, before Sally hit his face with her yo-yo and knocked him over. The platform came to a stop on a new ledge as they entered the door. “I actually wonder how much of this technology was built when Loki arrived. Because otherwise, this tower’s been here for thousands of years.” Phosphora thought aloud.

This room was the prettiest inside the tower: dozens of giant, colorful plasma lamps were stationed around, giving this place an alien, otherworldly feel. This appeared to be the lounge room, for guards were laying on couches, smoking electrical cigarettes. “So I was down at Shizzles’ the other day, I saw this guy’s daughter, and she was HOT. Like, SO hot.”

“Dude, I was with you. She was twelve.”

“I know. This was back when we were kids.”

“Oh, yeah…”
No one was attacking them, and it looked like there was nothing worthwhile, except they could rejuvenate their selves in the hot spring. They decided to do so, and once their strength returned, they entered the next door. It was a huge disco room of sorts, where hundreds of hovering, vertical pads circled around the central ball. The pads lit beams every few intervals, so the six kept an eye out for lit ones and dodged them. The kids performed this gesture as they hurried to a flight of stairs to their right, leading onto the upper floor. Inside an electric barrier surrounded by colorful tiles was Phosphora’s friend, Sola, dancing gracefully to the music that played and powering the disco with her energy.

Birkan Spearmen were there to slow their progress, so the others had them dealt with while Phosphora studied the flashing tiles. Red, green, yellow, blue, purple tiles, but how to free Sola. She discovered a nearby terminal, with a design of a red circle with an empty center, likely resembling this floor. There were purple numbers at different spots, 1, 2, 3, 4, and Phosphora deduced they were the purple tiles, which flashed in fewer areas than others. On the bottom-right of the screen, each tile color was lined up, with arrows between them, implying those colors would change to those. The yellow tile had a Check mark, letting Phosphora know they were safe to stand on.

Phosphora considered the purples’ location on the map with the actual ones, and thankfully the ‘1st’ one was nearest the edge. She jumped to, stepped on it, and jumped back. The second tile was further in, requiring Phosphora to jump around yellow tiles, hit the purple when it came, and make her way back to start. The third tile forced her to maneuver a complex pattern of appearing yellows, and from there, she skipped to the fourth tile, just touching the barrier. The entire room blacked out, the disco, tiles, and the barrier. Sola gasped for breath, thankful she no longer had to dance.

“My legs are gonna hurt for hours.”

“Awww, but you were always so good, Sol.” Phos grinned.

“Phosphora?” Sola said during a breath. “When did you…”

“Clearly, I’m Birka’s most-recognized. Sola, is your mom here? Where is she?”

“I think she’s in that room up there.” Sola pointed to a stairwell across a bridge. “That’s the room where the barrier machine is.”

“Thanks.” Phosphora faced the stairs unwaveringly. “Come on, guys, let’s take it down.” She ran first while Sector W followed, and bright blue flashes were seen up above. They glanced at an alternate passage on their left, to a hangar room where Lightning Chariots faced the open sky, waiting to be ridden. The heroes made it to the barrier chamber, where two giant rods focused toward a center, where powerful electric energy was channeled between them via a small force.

(End song.)

“That must be what’s powering the barrier!” Sally exclaimed.

“But what is it?” Harvey asked.

“It’s…” Phosphora looked closely. She only knew one Birkan who could channel that much lightning through her arms. She ran forward and yelled, “LINGNING! LINGNING, IS THAT YOU?”

“Mayhap Loki hath done something.” Fybi said.

“LINGNING, SNAP OUT OF IT! It’s me, Phosphora! I’m all right!”

“Phosphora’s dead. Phosphora’s gone. I should be dead. I should be gone.”

“Lingning, please! I was glad to take that lightning for you! I didn’t know what was gonna happen afterward, no one could have! But despite everything that happened, I’m glad it was me and not you! I still remember how you looked, Lingning. A little girl who saw us playing around and wanted to get in on it. You were better at lightningbending than all the other kids, so no one else your age played with you. You felt like one of the big kids, even though you were only five! Looking back, you probably could’ve survived that blast, but I wasn’t gonna chance it! So don’t blame yourself, Lingning! Snap out of it and come down!”

Groups of lightning bolts suddenly struck either rod of the machine and destroyed them. The surge shot back to Lingning and shocked her, and Phosphora caught the 27-year woman before she hit the floor. Even after all these years, she still could only look at her like that same little child. Lingning opened her tired yellow eyes. “Phos…phora?”

“Talk about overworking.” Sola remarked, joined by the others of Phosphora’s friends. “Did you find…!”

They looked to the other side of the room. An elderly Birkan with a robe was just powering some wires, before the machine suddenly exploded. Phosphora passed Lingning to Rizbi and hurried to her side. “Lady Sulfa?”

The woman looked the very same as when Loki impersonated her. She looked up wearily.

“Phosphora… Is that you, Child?…”

“I don’t know, is that really you? Not Thor?”

“Thor?… My dear… that’s not Thor looking over Birka… it’s Loki.”

“But you’re you.” Phosphora smiled. “Lady Sulfa… I’m sorry this all had to happen. All of you are in here because of me.”

“No, Child… Loki’s actions against you, exposed him for what he really is. I was much the same as you. This ‘Thor’… is not the same one I grew up with, either. I didn’t want to honor a god so evil… and yet, I couldn’t bear to tell the others the truth. I wanted them to still be able to hope… Oh, what a fool I was.”

“Oh, will you?” The friends jumped aside when a bolt struck down. Loki stood grinning at them from a high perch. “Isn’t this pleasant… The first humans to grace the presence of their new ruler. Millions of children are envious of you, now.”

“That’s funny, because we’re envious of all the children who AREN’T looking at you.” Aranea retorted.

“You’d be wise to watch your words, little girl.”

“Where did you even find a book about our world, anyway?”

“So you know about that, too? Interestingly, the book was delivered to my jail cell on Asgard, along with dimensional coordinates. I’m not sure from whom, but it was clearly trustworthy information. The note told me something that was not in the book’s pages: the true Pure Energy under Mount Olympus.”

“True Pure Energy?” Phosphora questioned.

“Of course. Those Titans will merely be my aids in reshaping this world. But when the Greek gods were forced to abandon this planet, an embodiment of Zeus’s energy was contained and sealed deep within the mountain. Using all of the power I harnessed in this tower, I will be able to take it! I, Loki of Asgard will become a TRUE God of Thunder, and reign over your people like insects! There will only be one religion across the planet, and it will be the greatest of all! To honor the one, true god that rules this domain! To realize their selves as DIRT in the eyes of their Lord!”

“Even if we do let you get away with that, no one will ever worship you.” Aranea stated. “Because you aren’t the god that people want to honor.”

“Hm hm hm, can I assume you’re one of them?” Loki grinned humorously. “A sniveling human that clings to a religion for the sake of appearing important before whatever imaginary god you idolize?”

“There’s more to a religion than just worshipping a god or feeling self-satisfaction. I follow my religion because it gives me hope and happiness. Because I believe that God does care about His followers. He gives everyone a bright future that they can strive for. No matter who you are or what power you have, you’ll NEVER be our god!”

“The words of a child… hmph. The lot of you are nothing but a nuisance. The only worth you’ve proved is handing me this bow.” He pulled out Fybi’s treasured weapon. “Its energy contributed massively to my Energy Cannon. A worthy weapon for a king of this world. Perhaps I’ll give you children the honor, of being the first smited by it.” Loki pulled the string back and charged an arrow. “Good-bye, children.”

A lightning bolt struck the ledge below him, making Loki stumble and drop the B.O.W., while Fybi caught it. “That’s no-way, to treat the kid-dies!” a sing-song voice sang. A rap tune played, for standing at the entrance was Killer Bee.

“He’s a lightningbender?” Phosphora noticed.

Killer Bee swayed as he rapped, “Ah saw them kids, goin’ up the tower, and thought they would need my power, and now that I see you, Ah say, Ah’m not lettin’ you get your way, fool, ya fool!”

“Peh. Keep your toy.” Loki scoffed. “I’ve absorbed more than enough power from it. Say your final prayers, children, and we’ll see how well your God protects you. Say your same words after you come outside!” He zipped away.

“Let’s get him!” Anthony and friends rushed up the stairs and to the door that was behind Loki.

“You guys go, and I’ll protect the co.. Go give him a show. Fools, ya fools!” Bee rapped.

“I’ll catch up with you!” Phosphora told the kids, running back down the stairs.

Dashi’s Peak

The door led them outside, to a small flight of stairs to the top of Dashi’s Peak. Loki’s throne was empty, so Fybi blasted it with her B.O.W., expecting an illusion. The throne crumbled to pieces, the kids looked around frantically. “Up here!” Loki was hovered above them on a Lightning Chariot, swinging his staff to strike a bolt from the sky.

“WHOOAAA!” The kids were blown over the stairs and over the edge, losing their electric weapons as the hundreds-feet fall began. Sector STORM swooped by and caught them inside their ship, flying alongside Fybi outside.

“Came as soon as the barrier went kerploot.” Laxy said. “Wanna see us come again?”

“Just fly after him!” Phosphora yelled, having appeared beside the ship on her own Lightning Chariot. She boosted after Loki’s chariot in the distance, and the sector followed.

Loki had soared far beneath Birka’s edge, and was in view of the island’s underside. “YOU’RE TOO LATE!” he cried to his pursuers. “The era starts NOW!” (Play “Dragon King” from Fairy Tail!)

The tremendous cannon on the bottom of the island shone with energy. A laser of incredible power fired down, and blew away the sea of clouds below. The peak of Mount Olympus was revealed, with many ancient temples and structures that belonged to the Greek gods. The laser struck, and began burrowing down the mountain’s center. It felt like the entire world was trembling. Even from the heavens, they could feel it.

A few miles in the distance, the ground was crumbling. A tremendous brown arm made of thick, solid stone reached up, clutching its fingers. The rest of the earth crumbled, and within seconds, the Rock Titan was towering over the land. A round, rugged bulky body with two heads on top, red eyes and mouths. Lythos roared to the heavens and began his march to crush Greece into canyons.

A skinny, skeletal arm, made of the coldest ice, with long, sharp fingers, reached from the earth, the land around it freezing. The Ice Titan, Hydros broke free, and the terrifying skeleton would begin his march to turn the ocean into a great field of ice. “FWAAAAAH-” A very fat Titan with reddish-pink skin, no clothing except for a red loincloth, and a single yellow eye on his bald head, came bursting from the mountainside, rolling midair before landing on the ground with a terrific quake. The Cyclops looked around confusedly, before eying fleeing herds of sheep and horses. “ME go eat FOOOOD.” The ground shook at each quick step as he chased.

“THE WORLD IS ENTERING A NEW ERA.” Loki cried for all of Birka to hear. “I, Loki of Asgard, shall reign supreme as the God of Thunder and Destruction! From the ashes of this world, I will create an ideal law! Humans, angels, and ALL creatures will forever live in fear of the gods! And with the energy I shall harness from this mountain, I will spread my power across the cosmos! There will be no mortal alive that can challenge me!”

The operatives watched with horror as the Titans made slow, but great progress across the landscape. “If that laser keeps drilling the mountain, the other Titans will be waken up, too!” Laxy exclaimed. “The Magma and Wind Titans are the worst. We have to destroy that machine!”

“But we can’t just let the Titans wreck everything!” Aranea yelled. “We need to stop them somehow!”

“Easier said than done with Choki botherin’ us!” Anthony reminded. “What’re we supposed to do about him?!”

The many kids and Phosphora gripped their heads in aggravation. What should come first, the laser, the Titans, or Loki? They were hopelessly outnumbered. “PRAY, wherefore dost thou hold thine heads in such mannerism?!” Fybi shouted them out of their thoughts. “We shalt approach this quick and now! Sector STORM, thou shalt attack the cannon with everything thou hast! Anthony, Sally, Harvey, and Aranea, slow the progress of the Titans if nothing else! Phosphora…” The Birkan looked at her. “We shalt battle Loki posthaste. Realize thine dream of driving a Lightning Chariot and duel him with me!”

Fybi didn’t seem phased by the situation at all. She was the smartest of all of them, her sectormates had to admit, and her spirit was strong. They all put aside their feelings of worry and became determined. Within minutes, Sector STORM was flying them all to the mountainous Titans. “But first,” Anthony announced, ripping off his rubber suit and switching for his real clothes. “I fight much better like this.” The others followed his example and changed.

STORM’s ship glided over the Rock Titan, so Anthony dropped down first. “HAAAAAAA!” He balled his fist and smashed the center between their heads. The Titan cried and shook, hopelessly flailing its arms, unable to reach Anthony, who had fallen down the front and landed on the ground. He shook slightly from the impact, but stood firm on his feet and faced the Titan.

The sector flew over the Ice Titan next as Sally and Harvey leaped out. They swung their yo-yos to wrap around the beast’s neck, swinging around as Hydros roared and tried to swat them away. The twins landed on its shoulders. “Sis, you’re sure these strings are unbreakable, right?” Harvey asked.

“If what our Negatives said was true.”

Aranea stared with worry as the ship hovered over Cyclops. “I dunno, that guy looks pretty big.”

“WAAAAH-!” Aranea landed atop Cyclops’ s head. She lost her footing when the monster shook his head confusedly, falling down the front as she grabbed the top of its eyelid. “Uhhhh, hey, big guy, I’m gonna have ta ask you not to destroy everything. You probably don’t have anything better to do, but we’d appreciate it-“

“OOOWW!” Aranea felt like she flew miles, landing against the leaves of a tree before she fell to the ground. She regained her senses and watched the Cyclops continue to chase sheep. “Sure, send the smallest operative to fight who is, without a doubt, Anthony’s ancestor. This is gonna go well.”

Fybi was high within the clouds, glaring at Loki on his Lightning Chariot. The man kept his wry smile as Phosphora caught up on her own chariot. He began to chuckle, seeing that look in her purple eyes. Eyes that were once so joyous to meet her lord, now sought revenge on him. “‘Tis true, those of the youth serve as its only protectors. I hath seen it too many times, and heard so many stories. And children like us… shouldst not hath to undergo so many trials. Our childhoods ruined by what battles yon gods hast ordered us to endure. As an airbender, I must be against such battles. Mine wish is to follow the ways of peace, to know serenity and freedom. I wish this life for all kids. The wind is lovely under my wings…” She gently flapped. “But thither be angry winds, too. When the direction changes, so must I. Under calm skies, I let the wind carry me.” She held both hands open, spiraling wind around them. “But when yon raging storms blow forth… I must allow my anger to burn… like FAIR LIGHTNING!”

Her hands shone with electricity, and during Loki’s utter surprise, she blasted two bolts at his chest. “FYBI!” Phosphora screamed. “You’re a LIGHTNINGBENDER?!”

“Oh oh oh!” Fybi smiled innocently. “Pray, what is lightningbending? What is Birka, the Lightning Island? Dost it magically spawn from our very being? Nay… lightning be the conflict between positive and negative charges. A bender doth be the master of their element. I canst make the air hot, or cold, and both between.” She spiraled the two different airs around her hands. “Water molecules forever float among the winds, they canst be molded to make clouds, and yon clouds become my charge. Birka is incredibly rich with this power. Conflicting temperatures art all around. For long as I’ve flown, I hath soared hot summer airs and cold winter mountains. Temperature, climate, altitude, thou may call me its queen!” Lightning shone on her hands again.

“Hn hn ha ha ha.” Loki calmly stood up, brushing his armored chest. “Simple little angel… you should know better than to play with lightning.” The head of his staff shone brightly. “No matter who you are, however… you’re still only a mortal. And you will face judgment before the eyes of a god.”

Fybi smirked. “Speaketh such words to a certain goddess, whom hast received a most horrifying fate.” (Play “The Encounter” from Kingdom Hearts II)

Boss fight: Loki

Fybi spiraled more lightning around her arms and blasted at Loki, but the mirage dispersed as the real Loki zipped between both girls on the Lightning Chariot, Phosphora nearly falling off of hers. She hopped back on and whipped her reins, forcing the Thundercorns to dash after the other chariot, while Fybi flew alongside her. Loki threw rounds of energy spheres from his staff, the girls having to think fast to avoid them, and when the phony god swerved left and upward, Fybi attempted to halt, then boost to cut him off, but in a flash of lightning, three Lokis whipped out of space, Fybi braced for impact when they came, but the mirages dispersed upon colliding, then the real Loki zipped out of nowhere and grabbed Fybi by the ankle. He merely pulled her along for a few seconds, but Phosphora flew up from the side and rammed her chariot into his, Loki stumbling back as he released Fybi. The younger angel clamped her electrified hands over his face, resulting a shock, then Phosphora punched him in the nose, before the god recovered and batted her off with his staff, flying away on his chariot.

He vanished beyond the clouds, so the girls chased—and ended up flying over a valley of active volcanoes. They evasively dodged the giant meteors, the sudden lava geysers that sprout up from the surface, then Fybi was caught unprepared when Loki zipped out of the distance and bashed her with his staff. She recovered and evaded the array of lightning bolts that struck out of the heavens, dodged Loki’s electric shockwave when he flew back down, then attempted to chase him, but a great wall of magma exploded from the ground. “Fybi, he can make mirages, remember?!” Phosphora shouted. “None of this stuff is real!” The woman tested her own claim and flew through the magma, and rather than burn and melt, the spot she flew through became a blue, mystic light, hinting its falseness. Fybi flew through as easily as a ghost.

Phosphora was chasing Loki as they swerved about in the air, and Fybi stopped in place to lock on with her B.O.W.. When Loki turned at an angle that faced Fybi, she fired and struck one of his Thundercorns, causing the chariot to turn sideways. Loki fell out, and Fybi performed a Screw Kick as she flew at him whipping-fast and kicked him in the face. Loki recovered and activated his anti-gravity boots, launching spheres and energy columns at Fybi, who spun clouds around her arms, passed them to her legs, and lit them electric. She dodged Loki’s attacks with greater speed, flew up to him, and dealt quick electric stomps at his face, then flew behind to charge and arrow and strike his backside, leaving a crack in his armor. Loki zipped back onto his chariot and rode it away.

The Rock Titan’s foot was bigger than five houses, and Anthony dodged it by inches when it came down. The colossal creature seemed to take no interest in him and continued stomping.

“If you’re anything like the OTHER rock titan I fought, you have a weak spot inside!”

The monster began shaking, reaching a hand back to smash Anthony like a bug, but the boy stood firm and pressed his hands against the great stone palm, keeping it up. Anthony kept stomping until he could sink partway into the monster’s back. Lythos stood up and furiously shook, letting himself fall backwards and smash the earth. He got up and turned to glare at the tiny, fallen Anthony. The two-headed Titan raised his right fist and prepared to bring it down. Still on his back, Anthony raised both hands and countered with all his strength.

“WHOOoosa, WHOOoaaa...” Sally and Harvey swung about frantically from the Ice Titan’s neck, holding tight to their yo-yo strings while the monster shook. “OOF.” Both siblings collided with each other, and their strings unraveled before they fell. The Ice Titan felt a burn in his neck where the strings were, forcing ice onto that crack to freeze it up. The twins panicked when the Titan prepared to blow ice against them, grabbing tops and throwing them under their feet as they expanded to the size of platforms, letting them slide away. They continued sliding desperately when the storm of ice chased. “If we get frozen by that, we’re goners!” Sally exclaimed.

“Too cool, man! Too cool!” Harvey yelled with worry. The ice finally stopped, and they looked back to see that area of ground frozen completely. The Ice Titan lashed icicle missiles, the twins dodging on their tops and riding them over the ice, the slippery surface allowing greater momentum. “Its legs, Harvey!” Sally yelled, and both siblings skied to a separate leg to toss their yo-yos around it. They tugged, emerging the yo-yos’ blades as they spun back around and cracked the Titan’s legs, making the creature fall forward with its long-fingered hands against the ground.

“Let’s take him apart!” Harvey exclaimed as the duo each climbed onto a leg, hopped on their tops, and rode up and across the Titan’s back while the tips of their tops released a small laser, cutting perfectly through. The twins formed parallel lines up to his shoulder blades, and Hydros roared as he was split into three. Each part still had half a leg or two, and the arms helped their respective sides up, leaving only the middle down. Each arm side chased one of the siblings, forming giant ice boulders in their hands that they chucked.

“Huhu hwah hwah hwaaaaah!” The Cyclops had several sheep squirming in his hand, picking one up at a time and tossing them in his mouth. “Mmmm, woolly goodness!”

The colossal fatso squatted down and squinted closely at the girl, scratching his cranium with his long, black fingernail. “Talking fw-weeeea?”

“YES, and as much as I hate to say it, my Uncle Herbie doesn’t stuff himself as much as you! Are you really this hungry?”

“I’ve been asleep for nearly…” Cyclops took a moment to count his fingers, “7,520 years. So my last meal was,” he took a moment to count again, “7,520 years ago. Yes, I’m pretty hungry.”

“Well, there’s such a thing called moderation. You ever consider going on a diet?”

“I’ll EAT what I WANT to, FWEEEEAAA. If YOU ate more, you wouldn’t be so POOOOO-ny.”

Aranea was getting a headache from this lug. “If I’m so poo-ny, how do I know what a Higgs boson is, or how to multiply a fraction by a decimal, or how to determine the exact circumference of your navel?”

“Duuuuh-” Cyclops scratched his head.

“Because by eating right each and every day, my brain is decades ahead of yours in terms of development, and it’s got more juice in its veins than every ounce of lard on your whole being. Yup, it’s a real shame that you don’t have a brain as improbably large and juicy as mine.” She smiled proudly.

“Hoo HWAH HWAAAAH hwah hwah!” Cyclops laughed and pointed giddily at the child, his sound ringing in her ears. “How can such a POOOO-ny flea have anything but the POOOO-niest of wittle-fwea bwains?”

“Well, this puny brain knows how to ripen a wider range of vocabulary, and possesses the uncanny ability to enunciate words correctly and without drawling.”

“Hoo HAH ha… uuuhhh…” Cyclops couldn’t think of a comeback. His head hurting, the monster raised his hand out of anger and SMASHED Aranea flat. However, the girl easily evaded and climbed onto his finger. “Guess again!” She slipped under his nail and lay hidden, and when the Cyclops was unable to shake her out, he gripped that nail and pulled. “UWAAAAH!” He cried, for it was a painful sensation.

“Thanks! I needed one of these!” Aranea held onto the severed nail, pulling it free from Cyclops’s fingers, and dropping to stab it in his eye.

Phosphora lashed her Thundercorns to boost toward Loki, but the mirage vanished, the real Loki zipped beside and shocked her with his staff, then zipped away, appearing a few feet from Fybi, who spun and slammed a kick into his face. Loki zipped away and landed in his chariot, throwing his staff skyward to make streams of lightning rain down, but Fybi spun a Wind Sphere into being and caught the lightning on. In this energy form, she boosted to Loki and blasted the energy at him, while he countered with his staff. Fybi flew away, charged an arrow, and shot an energy sphere of his, then Loki zipped underneath and made Fybi spiral vertically.

The pseudo-god soared to the underside of Birka to view the progress of his Energy Cannon, but to his horror, saw the laser was blocked, with only a tiny sliver making it to Olympus. The five kids of Sector STORM were pulling the rest of the energy to them, then channeling it to blow away from their bodies. “You WON’T interfere with God’s plan!” Loki swung his staff, striking lightning bolts from Birka’s clouds to zap the kids away. The laser continued drilling Mount Olympus at full power.
“NNNNNAAH!” Phosphora rammed Loki’s head with her chariot, forcing him out of his own. He hovered using his boots, twirling his staff when Fybi blasted an onslaught of arrows. Loki flew away, charging a powerful beam and shooting it into Birka’s cloud. Much of the underside lit blue, and giant spheres began to rain down everywhere. Fybi nimbly dodged them, but- “AAAAH!” Phosphora’s Thundercorns were struck, and she plummeted. Fybi glared at the god, who chuckled and sported a taunting grin. The angel soared around and around, likely attempting to make a tornado from Loki’s view, and he merely let her do so for humor. But this tornado was becoming inexplicably hot, Loki was sweating under his armor. The god rasped, in desperate need of breath, and during this moment of weakness, Fybi charged her B.O.W. and struck him in the chest.

Anthony jumped aside himself to let the Titan stomp, catching his own breath. He couldn’t rest long, for he had to chase the Titan before it got far, then quickly stomped the ground to send rock chunks at its legs. The Rock Titan growled and turned to glare at the leader, raising its arms and falling forward. Anthony smirked, dashing forth before its bulky body could crush him, and got between his legs. Anthony swished his mud around the air a little, made it flat as a blade, and began cutting the bases of the Titan’s legs. In minutes, they were severed from its body, and the Titan was unable to stand. The monster was forced to crawl around to be able to face Anthony, and realized the boy was holding its feet with his earthbending.

Sally and Harvey wished they could say it was funny how the severed halves were hopping on one leg, but it was a different story when the colossal stubs were chasing them, and freezing the ground around them. Sally’s half formed another ice boulder and threw it at her, so she used both yo-yos to catch, pour a lot of strength into whirling it, then threw it at the knee. It cracked slightly as the monster slumped, and Sally glided forward on her top and threw a yo-yo around the knee, pulling and chopping it in two. Meanwhile, Harvey boosted toward the other leg on his top, blades extracted from all sides around the device as he rammed against the foot. He dodged the icicles and came around for another ram, and the monster-half came tumbling down, but held itself up with its arm.

The central body blasted ice breath at the ground to propel himself upright on both leg-halves. The Titan trembled and began to regrow his end sides, and the arms were in their first, stub phase. The left side attempted to grow its own head, and both halves of the right side’s severed leg began to grow its respective missing part; in other words, Sally and Harvey were up against four Ice Titans now.

Cyclops furiously stomped his feet, but Aranea was much too fast, and his one eye was still tearing from the fingernail stuck in it. Aranea blew a raspberry and ran away from the monster, laughing happily, but when the Cyclops decided to fall forward, she panicked. His bulbous blubber body shook the world, and Cyclops stood to view his flattened foe. “Huh?” Aranea was nowhere on the ground, so he gripped his belly and pulled it upward to search for remains. “HEY!”

“Dude, I hope you aren’t planning to rent this place, because IT needs SERIOUS cleaning!” Aranea yelled from the confines of his bellybutton.

“GET OUT!” Cyclops furiously punched his belly. “COME out of there and FACE me, FLEEEAAA!” He shook his belly and punched it some more, but couldn’t hold back from coughing afterwards. He held his fist by his navel during a fit, giving Aranea the chance to jump and grab his knuckles. The Cyclops confusedly raised his hand to look at her, but when close enough, Aranea jumped and grabbed the fingernail still lodged in his eye. “Hoo-HWAAAAAH!” She merely stabbed the nail in his iris again, and when Cyclops felt the instinct to punch, Aranea slid down his right arm, letting his left arm sock himself in the face. The Titan stumbled backward and fell, his right arm flinging Aranea upward before she landed between his upturned toes. Before she could recover, the toes squeezed her between, and her face smashed against the ground when the Cyclops stood.

The Sector STORM members recovered and used their powers to try and pull the laser’s energy to their direction. “I don’t think we can keep this up much longer!” Ela yelled, the five struggling to fully direct the energy their way.

“Keep trying!” Dio yelled. “We can’t let anymore Titans escape!”

But to their horror, another region of the earth was crumbling. A pitch-black wind burst from the crust, and took the form of a gigantic tornado, with demonic red eyes in its blackness. “OH NO!” Amper screamed. “It’s the Wind Titan!”

“Canst thou not destroy it?!” Fybi yelled.

“No we canst! It’s completely made of wind, I don’t think there’s any physical entity!”

The wind immediately began to pick up. The clouds spiraled in the sky above the Titan, and sucked into its form. “It’s going to suck up all of Skypia if we don’t do something!” Phosphora shouted. “Somebody has to stop it!”

Laxy and Brendix were about to fly after- “NO!” Dio stopped them. “We have to keep holding back this laser! If the Magma Titan escapes, we’ll never be able to stop it! COME ON!” The five operatives focused their power on the laser.

“Hm hm ha ha.” Loki laughed wryly, his armor ruptured thanks to Fybi’s arrow. “It’s not even funny anymore, you children. To think this world has survived so long with you as its protectors. I seem to be horribly misunderstanding.”

“Verily… thou art.” Fybi said. “I take it upon myself to educate thee.” Fybi spun like a wheel as a circle of lightning formed around her, flying at Loki who rose his staff in defense. She continued spinning and pushing on his weapon, then flew below and kicked him upward. Loki recomposed, dodged Fybi’s arrow, but Birka’s underside was hit, resulting in a lightning bolt striking Loki. Fybi flew up, punched him, then dealt a round of kicks against his face, before Loki zipped behind and batted her away. Loki summoned his Lightning Chariot and boarded on before flying away.

Fybi flapped her wings forcefully and chased with wind-breaking speed, B.O.W. aimed forward as she blasted endless arrows at his back. He struck three bolts, Fybi dodged, then dodged the three Loki clones that sped at her. The real Loki zipped by, grabbed her, and slammed her against the floor of his cart. He stomped her chest, then Fybi blew forcefully at his face, which she kicked upward as she recovered. She blasted rounds of charged arrows that he blocked with his staff, but was unprepared when Phosphora’s Lightning Chariot shot up before his, making Loki stumble. Phosphora flew in place and passed a smirk and wink to Fybi, who returned the gesture.

Loki jumped up, struck a beam upward, and shot two bolts down on either Nimbi. He blasted Fybi away, but Phosphora ducked when the staff swung over her, whipping her Thundercorns to speed away while Loki chased. He struck the right wheel of her chariot, but she kept her grip on the reins. Loki thrust his staff backward, and Phosphora dodged the lightning that struck from ahead, which then hit Loki’s staff before he shot skyward, lit the clouds blue, and rained lightning down to injure her. Loki was about to shoot her again, but felt a chill in the air and turned back. A sphere of cold wind spun around Fybi, who flew at Loki with a determined look and frosty skin. She flapped her wings toward him and swallowed Loki in the freezing wind. She flapped away and surrounded herself with hot wind next.

Loki furiously blew the cold wind away and blasted Fybi, who dispersed into mist. “What?”

Loki chuckled at the antic and sent illusions around to disperse the Fybi fakes. “OOOF!” Phosphora zipped her chariot by to ram his, the pseudo-god falling over again.

“Pay attention to all your opponents.” she remarked.

Anthony controlled the feet of the Rock Titan and stamped them against its heads. Lythos furiously swatted the chunks away with his arms and lunged forward with mouths wide, so Anthony seized the moment and dove into the right head. The head swallowed, but then they both exchanged worried glances. “Uh-oh.” They felt furious thrashing inside them, until the right head was blown clean off. Anthony’s tiny head replaced it.

“Ha-hall RIGHT! This is awesome!” The child exclaimed, raising the monster’s arms. “Who knew you could control a rock monster like a robot! Let’s see what THIS does!”

“Hoo HWAH hwah hwah!” Cyclops joyfully kicked Aranea up and down and up and down. “Bouncy fwea, bouncy FWEA!”

“UUH!” The child landed on the ground backfirst, then gasped horrendously when the Titan’s underside loomed over her.

“POO-ny flea go POOT.” Cyclops smashed Aranea under his butt, then happily stood up to see her practically flattened. Cyclops giggled as he picked the tiny operative up in his fingernails. “Wittle FWEA go in my MOUTH. Hoo HWAH hwah hwah!”

Cyclops flicked Nea off so she would take the fall on his tongue, but she quickly regained herself, grabbed one of his teeth, and flipped atop his upturned face. His pupil focused on her confusedly, but didn’t reach before Aranea climbed into his ear. “I was right, alright. The only thing that occupies this space is the retina. Well, not for long.” Aranea drew out her S.P.I.C.E.R. and proceeded burning the fragile cord.

“WAAAAAAH! WAAAAAH!” Within minutes, the eyeball rolled right out of his head. “What have you DONE to me! I’m BLIIIIIND!”

Sally and Harvey used their tops’ lasers to burn through the severed leg Titans, then tossed their bladed yo-yos to slice the legs of the bodies with heads. Sally and Harvey swung to the top of either head, throwing their yo-yos around their necks in attempt to burn through. “INCOMING, GUUUUYS!” Anthony cried, trudging over on Rock Titan’s body and grabbing the Ice Titan’s severed arms/legs. He swung them around and smashed the giant ice chunks into pieces.

“AAAAAGYGHOOO!” The Cyclops flailed his arms helplessly and collided with the Rock Titan, furiously beating and shattering the stone as Anthony was flown out. The trembling caused both bodies of the Ice Titan to fall forward, just when Sally and Harvey had the heads chopped off, the Cyclops turned around, one head landed in his mouth, the other down his loincloth, and both of those areas froze solid. The Cyclops fell forward, and the ice smashed.

Sector STORM was almost totally burnt out. They focused every ounce of strength into redirecting the laser, but its resulted tiny laser was growing larger, for the amount of energy they could channel back was steadily decreasing. But in what seemed like a miracle, the energy was blocked by another force. Lingning was keeping it back with her bending. “Don’t stop now! It’s time for Sector STORM to complete their mission!”

The younger operatives looked as their parents zipped by. “Keep holding it back, kids!” Sola yelled. “We’ll take care of the tornado!” They zipped off in the Wind Titan’s direction.

Fybi swiftly avoided each Loki that flew at her, blasted arrows at some, then ducked the real Loki’s staff before shooting at his head, but Loki batted the arrow away, Phosphora rammed his chariot from the bottom, and Fybi Screw Kicked him in the face during his weakness. Loki lashed the reins of his Thundercorns and boosted skyward, making the loop around to charge back. Loki attracted the lightning trail onto his staff and formed a massive energy whip, each swing coming as fast as lightning as the Nimbi narrowly avoided. “You totally stole this idea from Lingning!” Phosphora retorted.

A successful whip shocked them both, suspending them in midair for a few seconds. “To think that your powers were given by gods.” Loki chuckled. “‘Lightningbending’, ‘airbending’… you’re unworthy of such powers. All of you are.”

“HYAH!” Phosphora lashed her Thundercorns after regaining her senses, and was gone above the clouds in seconds. Loki and Fybi faced each other alone, floating in place.

“TELL ME, CHILD, like that woolgathering Birkan who just fled me, what kind of creature do you perceive yourself in your gods’ eyes?” Fybi glanced up, seeing the trail of Phosphora’s chariot forming a glowing circle in the clouds. “An angel of justice? A pure soul? Is that why your gods give you such powers?! I’ll tell you the real reason! Your gods are MOCKING YOU!”

The circle of energy in the clouds was growing brighter. “They bless mere mortals with their powers because they’re unworthy to wield it! They watch how you pathetically struggle and fight each other with the powers given to you! They watch as you mortals DESTROY each other! Before long, this entire planet will fall into decay because you mortals didn’t know the power you possessed! But you, you Kids Next Door think you’re the saviors. Why, in your most droll of opinions, do you think the gods give you these powers?”

Fybi laughed softly to herself and closed her eyes. Listen to Loki ask such a question, like a curious child. She knew because she asked the very same question.

“Prithee, Auntie Rachel?” Five-year-old Fybi asked the woman. “’Tis not a lie that thou hast met God Rayquaza?”

“’Tis not a lie at all, Fybi.” Rachel shook her head.

“To meet a god must be a wonderful honor! Pray, didst thou ask him this query for me?”

“What query would that be?”

“Why yon Anthony possesses Earth, thine children create Fire, and my mother and I control the wind… wherefore ist their reason?"

“Hmmmm…” Rachel smiled and nodded her head in thought. “We did kind of talk about this. And what Rayquaza told me… was that we mortals are stronger than gods!” She grinned brightly.

The lightning reflected off Fybi’s determined emerald eyes. “’Tis because the gods doth not think we mortals should rely on them.” Fybi shot to the sky, spinning rapidly toward the circle of lightning. “’Tis because the gods wish for us mortals to have power! To decide our fates, to give us the ability to hope!” She flew to the center of the circle, spinning the wind furiously, hot and cold and hot, channeling the lightning inside. “For we art the most powerful! Our souls are the most pure! Because ‘tis brewed with the most impure of impurities!” The energy was coming below the clouds. Fybi was a blinding ball of electric. “Our anger. Our love! The storm that always spirals! ‘Tis what makes mortals powerful!”

Loki crunched his teeth and jumped from the chariot, headfirst toward Fybi. “So thou shalt see!” Loki held his scepter forward, charging power in the head. “The true gods of this world art… yonder KIDS NEXT DOOR!”

The two powers collided and lit up the whole landscape. Loki used all his strength to stab through Fybi’s shield, but the power was too strong, her lightning was directed to his body, the energy from his staff followed suit. Loki was blown away, the momentum from Fybi’s attack sent him directly toward the Energy Cannon. His scepter, now overfilled with concealed energy, was aimed toward the cannon, and the moment it stabbed through, the unbearable power channeled through Loki. “AAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAHAAAAHHHHHHH!

With a sudden flash, the cannon exploded, and the beam pierced directly up through the island, with Loki with it. Phosphora flew by on her Lightning Chariot and rammed the king once more, sending Loki falling to Dashi’s Peak. He collided with a painful thud, his helmet flown off. (End song.)

Phosphora’s friends caught up to the Wind Titan, whose wind was stronger than ever up close. “Shoot lightning from all angles until you find a weak spot!” Sola declared, trying to stand her air.

But the black tornado heard them and turned, glaring with its fearsome red eyes. The four readied to battle the demon, and the Titan was ready to make its move. “…!” Its eyes widened. The tornado spiraled and swirled like a thing being flushed down the toilet, and in seconds, it shrank into the distant ground, like it was never there. The four adults exchanged the most baffled of glances.

The Wind Titan roared and ragefully hit the tiny jar it was trapped in. The Man With the Red Eye held the captured creature to his face. “This is an interesting specimen… I know someone you could be very useful to.” He hid the jar under his coat and Disapparated. The four Birkans zipped down and searched the area. With no detected trace of the Titan, they decided to fly back home.

Phosphora and Fybi reunited on Dashi’s Peak, taking the moment to catch their breath. They exchanged grateful smiles, still sparking with electric. Sector STORM was there to join them as they faced Loki. The defeated god helped himself stand. “I will not be defeated… by lesser mortals like yourselves.” He rasped. “I am Loki… of Asgard! I am a GOD among you people! I will not be beaten like some pathetic-!”

A blinding flash of lightning struck Dashi’s Peak, blowing Loki against a pillar before he fell on all fours. Phosphora and Fybi shut their eyes and kept away from the great white bolt. The lightning vanished, and someone stood in its place: an armored figure with a red cape and yellow hair, wielding a powerful stone hammer. The mighty being turned, glaring at Loki with clear blue eyes.
Loki shuddered at his appearance; but Phosphora’s purple eyes have never shown so much delight.

“Brother…” Loki spoke lowly. He lunged to punch the figure, but he batted the blast away with his hammer, then smashed him with the tool. Loki moaned from the force, which following his battle against the two Nimbi, rendered him unable to fight further.

“You’ve hidden from me long enough, Loki.” the man said. “But no more. I am taking you home, where you will face judgment.”

“No…” Phosphora limped forward, slumping to her knees. “Are…Are you…”

He turned to look at her. “Do not be alarmed, fair maiden. I am Thor. First son of Odin. I am not permitted to explain the details, but my brother, Loki traveled to this dimension with unorthodox means. I cannot stay for long,” Thor sat Loki against the pillar and planted large, stone cuffs over his wrists, “so I must take Loki quickly. Farewell-”

“Wait!” Phosphora jumped up and gripped the man’s arm. Her purple eyes were full of wonder and excitement. “You’re Thor… THE Thor!… The God of Thunder! We’ve been waiting for you for so long!”

“I was… expected here sooner?”

“Thine raised brow dost tell thou dost not know.” Fybi figured. “So I shalt clarify: thou art honored as god among fair Birkans.”

“You blessed the very first lightningbenders with your energy, your power is what brought life to Birka!” Phosphora spoke quickly. “And we waited for you for thousands of years so you would give us pure energy!”

“…Oh… Well, this is awkward.” Thor said. “Your people may have misunderstood. Although Asgardians live many years, we are not immortal. Even if I were, I cannot grant what you call ‘pure energy.’”

“You…You can’t?”

“I do not know the customs of your people, nor do I wish to go against them. But I can assure you that my power is not what gave life to you. Perhaps it is a force you have not yet acknowledged. Whatever that force may be, it would seem your people have thrived well on their own. I don’t know what ‘pure energy’ is, nor how great it would be… but know that perfection is not always needed. One’s own strength may be enough.”

“I see.” Phosphora looked down with disappointment. “I guess you couldn’t restore my lightningbending, huh?”

She looked up when Thor put a hand on her shoulder, smiling handsomely. “You seem like a kind young woman… I wish I could provide you the answer you want. If such power is what you desire, I could allow you to come to Asgard.”

Phosphora turned red in the cheeks. She turned to look at Fybi and Sector STORM, whose expressions were eager. She turned back and smiled politely. “No thanks. I only just got home, I want to stay.”

Thor nodded, and his cool smile kept Phosphora blushing. “Very well.” The Asgardian backed away, took Loki by the arm, and raised his hammer before they zipped to the sky in a flash of lightning.
The Head Priest and his guards floated a few meters from the peak, having witnessed the spectacle. “So that was Thor…” he spoke hoarsely. “The god that had been reigning over us… was a fake. Oh, I am such a disgrace.”

“Don’t be so glum, Baskerville.” Lady Sulfa’s weary voice spoke brightly. The priestess had appeared beside him. “I think we all learned a valuable lesson. And that lesson was… make sure our god has a hammer before we brand him as ‘Thor.'”

Fybi and Phosphora heard panting from below the stairs, and watched as Killer Bee and Sector W made it up. “Not to worry!” Bee gasped. “I brought the tykes back safe and sound!”

“Thank thee, fair rapstar.” Fybi smiled.

“Hey Fybs, what happened to Joki?” Anthony asked.

“Phosphora and I hath showed him the exit. Or mayhap Thor, wouldst be an accurate answer. Without regards, yon island is saved from phony god.”

“Wait. So you ladies took down that crazy lightning guy?” Bee asked. “Even if I was far away, he looked like pretty powerful stuff.”

“Hmhmhm. Thou shouldst not look at me, and say I am not powerful.” Fybi twirled.

“Well, Ah gotta say, y’all are pretty hot stuff. Ah dunno if you’re being rewarded, but take this from me.” Bee reached under his robe and pulled out a blue headband, with a shiny silver buckle depicting a swirly leaf design. “It belonged to an old friend of mine. Think of it as, uh, special ticket for mah next three concerts.”

Fybi took the headband and let it dangle from her hand. “I shalt bring it to mine heart.”

A beautiful ray of sunlight poked from the cloud tunnel above. No one on Birka remembers the sun ever shining on their land. “Prithee… from where doth yonder light shine?” Mesmerized by its golden glow, Fybi softly floated upward. (Play “The First Mask” from Rayman 2.)

The clouds stretched miles and miles up the sky. The texture around the clouds was blended with many colors, alit only by the golden sun above. Fybi drifted higher, and higher, she thought all of this sun would blind her vision, but it became more warm and wonderful the higher she went. Just when she was about to touch its very source, she found herself above Birka. The top of the eternal storm fortress was calm and very beautiful, with a sky of blue, gold, and pink tones. She was enclosed within a great cloud mountain range, but floated even higher to land on a vast, long road of solid marble, leading to a temple in the distance. But just on the start of this road, between the parallel stairs, was a stone cube with ancient writing.

Phosphora and Sector W flew up on a Lightning Chariot, landing to watch as Fybi slowly approached the monument. Her eyes gazed at nothing else, as if this stone was calling to her. She stopped a few feet from the stone as her rewarded headband glowed, floated up, and sunk into the cube. The ruin shone with blue light, which flew into Fybi’s body, then faded. Her friends didn’t know what it was, Fybi knew just as much, but an odd sensation flowed within her.

Fybi awakened herself as the THIRD LIGHT! Only 4 more to go!

The odd writing on the monument glowed. Fybi read its contents clear as daylight. “‘If you’re reading this, congratulations, you must’ve come a long way. You can rest for now, but don’t get too comfortable, because the real battle has yet to begin. We look forward to the day we can meet you, and we know you can make it. Believe it! –Naruto Uzumaki’.”
“I didn’t know Fybi spoke Greek.” Aranea said.

“That’s not Greek, I can’t read it either.” Phosphora corrected.

“Then what is it?” Anthony asked.

“Ha-halright! You guys finally made it!” They looked up when an angel with glowing wings flew in a circle overhead. He stopped and flapped in place, grinning at the heroes. “Took ya a while!”

“Huuuu!” Fybi gasped, her emerald eyes displaying pure delight. “Thou art… Pit Icarus!!”

“Long time, no see, Fybi!” The brown-haired angel winked. “Lady Palutena knew you would find the Poneglyph.”

“Lady… Palutena?” Phosphora asked.

“Yeah! This is where she lives. Come on, I’ll introduce you! She prepared a banquet and everything.” Pit flew across the road. “I’ll race ya.”

“Hahahaha!” Fybi happily flew up, and said to her friends, “Thou must hurry, or the sun will set! First course is for meeeeee!” She joyfully flew after Pit.

The five other friends exchanged excited glances. “I wanna meal after all that!” Anthony yelled, so they all bolted up the stairs and across the miles-long road. The spirit of a boy with blonde, spiky hair, blue eyes, and whiskers on his face appeared, grinning at the kids as he fixed on his headband. (End song.)

Down below, things had never been more calm on Birka, and though they wished their lightning would return soon, the sunlight was something to marvel at. The Energy Cannon had drilled deep beneath Mount Olympus’s surface. Deep within that hole, a blue flame appeared. From the flame, a two-dimensional spirit, a golden triangle with black, stubby arms and legs, as thin as lines, a black skinny top-hat, and a single eye.

The very bottom of this hole is where Loki’s staff fell. The spirit grabbed the blue, glowing cube on its head and ripped it off. “So, this is the Tesseract, huh?” he spoke with a perky, monotone voice. “It doesn’t feel as powerful as I imagined. Maybe its energy is limited in this world or something. Still, this is just the kind of material I needed. It looks like Loki was able to prove his use after all.” He tossed the cube into his chest, vanishing into his being. “I should be able to have the machine running, soon. Matter of fact, they should be stopping by in a little bit.” He squinted his eye giddily, his body displaying images of Cheren, MaKayla, and Wendy Marvell. “I guess I better get back to Gideon. Bill Cipher is back in action, baby!” The spirit dispersed into flame.

Great Clock

Jagar King sat in meditation before the Time Gate. The twenty chairs around the room were empty, and had yet to welcome their guests. In this Chamber of the Twenty Keys, Jagar always felt melancholy. Especially now, more than ever, knowing what was to come. “Calliope… if what you say is true… then I can’t let it happen.” Jagar stood, clutching the Chrono Staff tight. He looked at the room’s doorway with solemnity. “I can’t let the Twenty Keys come together.”

So those were the Titans from Hercules. Sorry if you were expecting different Titans. ;P Get ready, people, because we’re about to enter the Presidents Saga. This one is gonna be very long, and very eventful, and that goes for the Side Stories, too. Like, I consider Presidents Saga the halfway mark if anything, it is gonna be loooooong as far as I can tell. So next time, we will begin it. And as you can tell by that ending scene, it will feature Gravity Falls. ;D
Django’s Crew

Chapter Summary

Kimaya and The Gang go to rescue Midna!

Okay, everybody, it’s time to start the Presidents Saga! Quick note, though, since Gravity Falls will be featured in this arc, I’ve decided to start using cryptograms! I will put a code at the end of each chapter, and my readers can try to decode it! Most likely, the code will foreshadow something. Today’s code uses the Caesar Cipher.

Chapter 29: Django’s Crew

Palutena’s Temple

“Again today we go a-soaring through the skyyyyy!” Pit and Fybi sang together, holding each other and flying joyfully. “Our enemies, we’ll dish ’em UP enough to fryyyyy!” Sector W and Phosphora rolled their eyes humorously. “Gracious Goddess of the Light: watches from up above. At dinnertime, we always show the cook some LOVE!”

The interior was colored a whitish-gold, the windows white with sunlight. The dining hall had a great variety of meat, fruits, vegetables, any food group to satisfy the kids, all being carried in by Centurions, angel warriors in golden armor. “All this food looks so yummy!” Sally beamed. “It’s nice to get rewarded for our hard work!”

“Yeah, but this is kinda unexpected.” Aranea smiled, sitting in front of some steamed broccoli (beside molten cheese, thank God!). “I know we were popular, but to have a goddess as our fan?”

“Lady Palutena’s a fan of all of you.” Pit replied, seated beside some hamburgers. “She’s been watching you Kids Next Door for a long time! Heh heh, her favorites are the shrink stories.”

“Can you tell Palutena to quit watching us like cartoon characters?” Anthony asked.

“I’m not sure if I want to. It’s fun getting in debates with her. Or you can just ask her yourself! Lady Palutena, you’re finally here!”

The friends looked at the doorway atop the narrow stairs. Lady Palutena, the Goddess of Light, was the most beautiful woman they ever laid eyes on. Her shiny green hair dangled to her knees, its many strands flowing everywhere. Her emerald eyes were gorgeous, complimented by her gold sun necklace, gold laurel crown, and many gold bands around her arms, and gold accessories hanging from her belts. A Mirror Shield was tied to her left arm, she held a blue staff with a golden head, and blue sphere on top that hovered disconnected from it. Her flowing white dress ended before her brown, high-heel sandals.

They felt a lovely warmth from her presence when she stepped down the stairs, and joined them in the largest seat at the table. She took an orange and had a bite. “A good breakfast is the start of a great day!” She grinned brightly.

“Um, Lady Palutena, this is lunch.” Pit corrected confusedly.

“All meals should be treated with equal respect.”

“Thou art Goddess Palutena?” Fybi said with awe. “Art we so deserving to be in thine presence?”

“I think it’s high time you and me met, Fybi!” The goddess smiled at her. “Excluding that brief moment I repaired your wings.”

“That power wast… thou?”

“Yes. I can heal almost any injury with my power, as long as it was received recently. Otherwise, I can only give power to an inoperable body part for 5 minutes. Just ask Pit. Neither his body, nor his Gigai had working wings for thousands of years.”

“Thousands of years?” Sally asked.

“I died when I was this age.” Pit blushed. “I’ve been inhabiting a Gigai all this time. Those are artificial mortal bodies.”

“Lots of Nimbi are born flightless, so sometimes I like to give their wings some function, just so they can know what it’s like.” Palutena noted. “You might be familiar with a Nimbi called Aisa. Her friends get in tons of dangerous situations, so I give her Flight powers when it’s necessary. If I let them use the power for five minutes, their wings burns up, and my healing powers wouldn’t work.”

“Hmhm, well you already know part of the reason. You kids know the Apocalypse is coming, and to save everyone, you need to find the Seven Lights and Thirteen Darknesses. This was a prophecy established a long time ago. My job, according to Arceus, was to find the Seven Lights when the time came. And the Thirteen Darknesses… were to be sought by Medusa.”

“Medusa?” Sally repeated.

“Medusa is the Goddess of Darkness, and my twin sister. You can already guess, but we were always at each other’s throats. She wanted Darkness to consume the universe, but I wanted it to be bathed in Light. Our conflict was the law that established every conflict in history: Good vs. Evil, Light vs. Darkness. But the reality was, neither of us could have our own way. The universe needs Light and Dark to everything. And this very same law is what establishes the Twenty Keys.”

“Right.” Aranea recapped. “The Seven Lights and Thirteen Darknesses come together to open the ‘New World.’ Then you two goddesses go mano a mano to decide if Light or Darkness rules the New World. Um, that’s what Cheren told us.”

“Yes…” Palutena lightly shook a glass of orange juice. Her look was solemn. “Me and Medusa never fought so hard until 20 years ago. We worked together to help your parents defeat Arceus, because we knew that 20 years from then, the real Apocalypse would come. But that was when our ultimate struggle would begin. Already, she’s working to find the Thirteen Darknesses, recruiting any available mortal children to help. But the ultimate law of us gods is, we aren’t allowed to interfere with mortal affairs, unless other gods were involved. She’s breaking several laws so she can get her hands on the Darknesses. But the thing about that is, if she hadn’t broken these laws, she couldn’t get the Darknesses.”
“But you’re searching for the Lights.” Nea reminded. “You helped Fybi, and now we’re here…”

Palutena sighed. “At this point in time… the idea of laws and destinies are entirely different; since the very beginning, the Apocalypse was beyond our control.”

“Whaddyou mean?” Anthony asked.

“Arceus and Dialga sensed the Apocalypse happening around this time, but they never could determine the actual cause. Arceus’s disruption of the universe damaged the Time Gate, releasing powerful unstable energy, we realized that 20 years ago. Yet, this all… None of this makes any sense.” Palutena plopped her forehead in her hand. “If the gods never had control over the Apocalypse’s happening, why is it that we, the Goddesses of Light and Darkness, are the ones to have the battle. The ultimate law of Light vs. Darkness… to me, it just feels too… simplistic.”

The Sector W members exchanged weirded, though worried glances. “But… that’s how almost everything is, isn’t it?” Sally asked. “An evil force threatens our universe, so the good force has to do something.”

“Hm, I know.” Palutena looked up and smiled softly. “But every day, I keep having… nightmares. That there’s more to this prophecy than what Arceus knows. And all of the gods are… afraid. Sigh, I tried to explain my worries to Medusa, but she’s just so stubborn. Her only interest is finding the Darknesses and establishing her ideal world. I mean, I know that’s what we’re supposed to do, but I just can’t stand all of this… conflict.”

“But thou dost know whom the Lights art, dost thou not?” Fybi asked.

“Only recently. Thirteen years after Arceus’s defeat, the dark energies inside the Pyrameglyphs were supposed to begin brewing, awaiting the Darknesses who would read them. Then seven years after that, the light energy inside the Poneglyphs. That was that rock you read outside.”

“So I am a Light.”

“Yes, you are. Fybi, Sheila Frantic, and Suki Crystal, those are Lights that have been awakened. And according to the prophecy, each Key possesses a special power. Not an elemental power or anything of that sort… it’s something else.”

“I don’t understand, though.” Aranea said. “You said the gods have no control over the Apocalypse, yet they established this ‘Twenty Key’ thing. How is it that the Keys have the power to make a difference, but the gods don’t?”

Palutena looked down with gloom. “This is the funniest part… Arceus and Dialga were confused when they saw these happenings in the future… they never had any idea what was going on. The Poneglyphs and Pyrameglyphs were nothing of their design. They never established this prophecy, they were told about it.”

“Told about by WHO??” Anthony shouted, tired of all this complex stuff.

“A mysterious spirit, who, around 10,000 years ago, was named one of the Six Demon Saints. He told us who the Lights and Darknesses would be, but forbidded us from actually revealing their names to you, because it would jeopardize the destiny. We didn’t understand why he knew so much, but he was terrifying. His name… was Bill Cipher.”

“Yeah, um, hi, excuse me, Phosphora here.” The lightningbender rose a hand. “Just a quick question, um… WHEN WAS ANYONE GONNA TELL ME ABOUT THIS ‘APOCALYPSE’?!”
“Oh, right.” Palutena chuckled. “You still don’t know. I don’t actually understand everything myself, but let me tell you what I know about the First Dimension…”

KND Moonbase

Panini blasted endless rounds of fireballs at Cheren, she didn’t hold back at all, they might need a new gym room after this. Cheren held no weapons, he evasively dodged Panini’s flames, maneuvering to her to throw punches. Her fists were larger than his and easily blocked, she countered with kicks to his chest, but the boy withstood and slipped behind, wrapping his arms around her neck. She tried to pull him off, but he flipped upside-down and slammed her head on the floor. He backed away, letting Panini hop up, Cheren kicked her in the nose and sent her flying against the wall. He smirked victoriously. “Panini, I would almost suggest MaKayla a better opponent.”

Immediately, he froze in time. MaKayla King casually walked in and kicked his hip. He unfroze—“OUCH!” and flew away.

“If you can fight a timebender, I guess it is better training.” She shrugged.

“Yo, Supreme Leader 3621.” Francis Drilovsky walked in. “Sector V’s finally back from space.”

The four of them hurried to the bridge and found the team of 10 waiting. “Hey, Bro, looks like you’re getting your butt kicked by girls as usual!” Chris greeted.

“Who says we can’t kick you in areas?” Aurora asked quizzically.

“Hey, it’s funny when it happens to him.”

“When we were at Solana, we met a group of bad guys who were looking for the Seven Lights, too.” Dillon informed.

“By any chance, did these bad guys work for someone named Ragaj Gnik?” Cheren asked.

“A-Ah…” Aurora was at a loss for words, wondering how Cheren knew. “Well, they were called Team Gnik, so I guess… How would you know?”

“I told ‘em!” Sunni Chariton popped behind the team, startling them, grabbing Harry’s shoulders.

“S-Sunni?!”

“Hehe, I’ve been working on my psychicbending, Harry!” she grinned brightly. “How d’you like the new me?”

“Uhhhh. . . speechless.”

“Sunni encountered a group recently that captured her mom.” Cheren informed. “She fought back and interrogated them. What they said was…”

Team Rocket was still suspended in the air by Sunni’s power. The child was still innocently lain on a midair psychic platform, her head rested on her hand as she stared at Team Rocket with childish eyes. “Giovanni is our boss, and he wanted us to capture you and your mum because you were Mew’s Guardians!” Meowth explained quickly. “But Team Rocket isn’t alone, we’re workin’ with “a bunch of bad guys, and the BIG boss in all this is a man named Ragaj!”

“Ragaj?” Sunni asked.

“Ragaj Gnik, to be exact, but we haven’t actually seen him.” James followed. “Only the boss and the other armies’ bosses have.”

“And as for who the Twenty Keys are, our boss never really told us.” Jessie replied. “He’s only interested in capturing the Firstborn. However, according to Giovanni, he isn’t even sure how Ragaj knows who the Keys are. Unless you’re a Time God or something, there are hardly any clues about this ‘Apocalypse.’”

“There, is that all your questions, can we go?”

Sunni thought for a second. “All right, you can go.” So she pulled back, and blew them to the sky with terrific force.

“Now we’re REALLY blasting off agaaaain!” (“Wobbuffet!”) Twinkle.

“But what’s your end?” Cheren asked the team afterward. “Tell me about this ‘group.’”

Sector V began to explain their attack on the Star Train, fighting Team Gnik. “So what I’m working from this is… some Negatar Gnaa wannabe is trying to find the Lights first.” Francis concluded. “So that he and his buddies can rule the universe with ultimate power.”

“We’ve had reports from KND treehouses being ransacked by apes.” Cheren noted. “And atomic bombs going off in the ocean. Not to mention Maddy getting kidnapped. So it looks like, not just the World Government we have to worry about, but these Gnik guys, too. But it sounds like the Firstborn are tied into all this as well.”

“Hold on, if these were the guys who kidnapped Maddy, didn’t you save her?” Francis asked.

“And now to explain Act 2:” Haruka began informatively. So the second part of the story commenced, Dillon’s information from Vanellope, meeting Professor Büe, and why Maddy had to stay behind.

“If we’re talking about the Firstborn, I guessed it had something to do with Midna.” Dillon mentioned. “I was supposed to come back to rescue her. Maybe I shouldn’t have trusted Django to do it.”

“Back this up a little bit.” Cheren spoke up. “So this professor person… learned about these ‘Gibberish Rocks’ from Gravity Falls? The same kind of rock you found on Candied Island?”

“Righty-o, Mate.” Sheila nodded. “So these blokes are thinkin’ that stuff is there. Sounds like an adventure.”

“We have a sector in Gravity Falls!” Cheren rose his voice suddenly. “I remember after I announced the Apocalypse… the leader of Sector GF, Numbuh 2012 called and said he would do research on it. I wonder if he actually found anything…” Cheren rushed over to the Global Tactical Station and activated. “This is Global Command calling Sector GF. Numbuh 2012, this is Numbuh 3621, do you read me?”

The screen was very staticky, but they made out the image of a boy wearing a hat. “This is "Numbuh 2012, Dipper Pines." He spoke with a deep voice, likely in the shift from child to teenagehood. "What is your transmission?"

“I’m calling to ask if you have any info regarding the Apocalypse, like you said?”

“Well, um, not exactly, but,” the silhouette scratched his head, “my sister and I found a secret bunker in the woods the other day. We didn’t look too far yet, but we found a broken laptop. I—I’ll send you a detailed report if you want.”

“That won’t be necessary. Sector V confirmed a possible clue to this entire mystery, in your town. I’ll be coming to your sector to research it with you.”

“W-Wait, a clue?! What kind?”

Haruka came over and explained, “There’s a picture of a Gibberish Rock inside a book somewhere. An old man had it, inside a ‘shop of weird things’. Know anything like that?”

“A shop of—YOU MEAN MY UNCLE’S JOURNAL?!” Dipper sounded very excited. “H-Hold on, I’ll go get it!”

“I’m coming down there shortly, have it ready for me.” Cheren told him. “End transmission.” The screen vanished.

“Do you want us to go with you?” Aurora asked.

“We have to go save Midna.” Dillon reminded. “Let’s get back to Miracle City and find their hideout.”

“I’ll go with Cheren.” MaKayla walked beside the boy. “There’s still things I need to learn about this whole quest, too. But maybe Clockwork’s Future Sight can help me recognize something.”

“Want us to come, too?” Francis asked.

“You two need to stay here and keep everything together. Send operatives or look for available sectors to help the ones we can’t get in contact with. And Sunni, since you’ve been training, maybe you can help the Psychic Sensors look for villain activity. It’d be nice if we could find Team Gnik’s bases this way.”

“Weren’t we supposed to have our epic rivalry battle first?” Sunni grinned.

“Heheheh. We’ll worry about that stuff later. Anyway, we have our missions. So Kids Next Door, let’s move out.”

As Sector V got back onto the C.O.O.L.-B.U.S., Dillon was calling home with his cellphone. “Hey Mom, it’s Dillon. We’re back from space.”

“Sigh, Dillon, thank goodness, I’ve been worried sick. I still haven’t seen your father since Dressrosa.”

“Really? Sigh, that doesn’t sound good… Listen, did you hear anything from Django? He said he was going to rescue Midna, but I’m not sure if—”

“Yes, I’ve been trying to call you about that. Django came home with Midna yesterday, safe and sound. He’s right here, wanna talk?”

“Wassup, Dills!” a familiar voice greeted.
“Django? You actually saved Midna?”

“Told ya, didn’t I. I gathered my crew, drove down to Texas, then boom, wrecked those Brotherhood bastards. That reminds me, I had no idea Kaleo was your cousin.”

“Wait… KALEO?!?”

Canyon of Miracles; yesterday morning

We’re gonna jump back in time again. Don’t get confused. After Hannibal Bean elected himself as Brotherhood’s leader, they established their base in the Canyon of Miracles. Which, just previously, was the battle site between the KND and Nerehc Onu. The villains have grown accustomed to this H.Q. during these 8 months, especially after carving the base out. And it was here where Django’s mission took place. He stood at the edge of the canyon, dust blowing in the desert wind. He took a whiff, and imagined the scent in his deceased nostrils. “Well, this is where I heard my grandma say their base was.”

“So why couldn’t we DRIVE the whole way? Why we gotta cut through that Texas canyon?” a girl asked.

“The element of surprise. Besides, it takes a lot of energy to control that train, especially when a 50-ton passenger is riding the roof. How did you say he got giant, again?”

“I TOLD my mom butterscotch was gross! !” Kaleo, the 2-story giant shouted. “I was allergic, but she didn’t believe me! Oops, sorry Stewie.” He stepped off of his Imaginary Friend.

“I might just try it myself later.” Django replied. “You ready for this, Gang?”

“If we ain’t, we wasted a trip.” Kimaya said.

“Let’s BASH their skulls open! No offense, Django.” Beat fist-pumped.

The five members of The Gang stood ready. And this is probably the part where the readers are confused. I won’t show you the flashback now, but the short version is, Django met The Gang two years ago, when his grandma took him to Virginia while she was visiting the local witch-doctor. Django stumbled into The Gang’s hideout, and after they got used to the fact he was a magic skeleton, he became one of the crowd. Unfortunately, Django had to go back home to Miracle City, but they promised to keep in touch. He visits them every now and then. And The Gang, of course, was loyal to each other, enough to help Django break into a base of supervillains. “Let’s roll.” (Play “Ruins of the Temple” from Kid Icarus: Uprising!)

Stage 38: Canyon of Miracles

Mission: Rescue Midna from the Brotherhood!

Django ran first toward the canyon, seeing a band of Ice Cream Men coming his way, so he strummed his Mystic Guitar and sent a sonic wave to knock them down. A wall of Ice Cream Trucks blocked the way, so Kaleo sent a Mega Gas Bomb to blow them apart. Kimaya extracted twin Poison Whips and twirled as she knocked several men down, and the Gang members proceeded to the canyon. The Brotherhood’s living quarters were primarily wooden mining houses, of course more advanced technology existed within as well. Hungry Men flipped out to attempt shooting the ruffians with plunger arrows. One of the plungers caught Beat’s face, but he pulled it off, yanked the string, and pulled that Hungry Man forward before kicking him in the face.

Django was performing a fast-pace Spanish tune on his guitar, so Rhyme danced as she mended the soundwaves into notes, which she aligned into notesheets that she flew around and defeated other Hungry Men. Of course, Kaleo took credit for most of the damage, as his giant size squished some of the mining houses, whose interiors were metal, making it a little challenging for the task. When nearly all of the men were down and out, Django grabbed Little Juan by the neck. “Hey.” He grinned with skeleton teeth and brimming red eyes. “Where’s Midna?”

“J-Just up that passage, man! P-Please, take off your costume, it’s so real!” He shuddered. “Take off yours.” He threw Little Juan against a wall. The four other members jumped up the rocky, natural stairs, while Kaleo climbed with a few steps. Jackbots flew over the gorge ahead and destroyed the stone pillars, leaving nothing to cross the distant bottomless chasm. “Keep up that tune, good buddy!” Beat cheered, so as Django continued strumming the guitar, he and Rhyme created a Song Road. The Gang members shifted lines to hit the notes and keep the rhythm flowing. The note path swerved between snaky walls of a close trench, and when Jackbots flew along the path to disrupt them, they shifted the respective lines to avoid them.

Of course, since Kaleo was too large, he merely needed to clutch a wall and climb across after them. The teammates made it to a large, barren field, but when they took a few steps forward, turrets popped out of the ground and fired. Django strummed his guitar, Skeleton Soldiers sprouted up and took the bullets, then when the turrets had to reload, Beat and Rhyme blasted soundwaves to destroy the turrets. They progressed, diagonal rows of turrets appeared from the side, Django sprouted skeletons in that position to take the hits, then Leo burped Mega Gas Bombs to destroy them. They progressed even further, one turret popped up at a time, Django timed the placement of each skeleton. A circle of turrets appeared around them, Django was still able to protect his friends before Kimaya, Beat, and Rhyme used their powers to destroy them.

The Gang followed a small passage before reaching a hill of mining houses built within. Gramma Stuffum’s Food Patrol charged out, Kaleo was excited to grab the little foodlings in his hands and stuff them into his mouth. None of his friends would want to see him again afterward until he brushed his teeth. (Oh, and yet Django is so tolerable.) Kaleo lifted and carried his friends up the hill – the houses were like stairs to him, but they found an energy barrier blocked the next passage. Kaleo punched the barrier furiously, but made nary a dent. The barrier even stretched too high for the giant to climb over.

“Look for generators inside the houses.” Django said. Leo set the group down as they checked each house on each level of the hill. A different kind of enemy patrolled their house; Beat and Rhyme had to fight Flu Bugs, Hands of Justice, then find a generator protected by Lunch Ladies. Kimaya fought through Hungry Men, Stickybeard Pirates, then gassed a room full of Cheese Ninjas before intoxicating a barrier. Django, however, mostly walked by each house, strummed a Skeleton Soldier into being, and had it break inside. He didn’t know which house it was, but one of them destroyed the last generator.

Kaleo helped his friends up again, and they progressed down the path. A minecart track stretched across, so Django, Kimaya, Beat, and Rhyme hopped in to roll off. “See ya down the road, Leo!” Django waved at the giant. The cart sped down a hill, then the track became more curvy as it drove over a river, going around stalagmites. A piece of track was broken ahead, so Django strummed his guitar and summoned a skeleton from the nearby stalagmite, its bones forming a bridge so they could cross. Jackbots swooped by and destroyed parts of the track with lasers, Django made use of the nearby stalagmites and sprouted skelo-tracks from them. The tracks became rugged and were going to run off, so Django kept strumming while Beat and Rhyme created a Song Road.

The four jumped off, grinded the road up a garden of mountain needles, and landed safely on a cliff beside an old ruin. The Rhymer’s Rappers appeared to stop their progress, Beat and Rhyme had the honors of performing an in-sync dance, mending the songwaves together to wrap the Rappers up. They spun the songwaves around the henchmen and got them dizzy, then Kimaya mixed this with her gas to put them to sleep. Kaleo caught up with them by climbing across the mountain needles, following his friends to a dried, ruined fountain. This area appeared to be a central location of the canyon. Our Gang members didn’t know this, but this was the site of Cheren and Nerehe’s battle, nearly 8 months ago. Boy, does time fly.

The direction that caught their attention was a temple atop the hill. More turrets popped out to shoot them, so Django repeated the process of timing his skeletons, blocking the bullets before his friends destroyed them. The temple had no actual walls or doorway; at least not anymore, and all that was inside was a black and white, shadowy imp with an orange ponytail, binded by orange energy hoops. Django recognized her as Midna, but before they could act, a swarm of Elite Jackbots flew in their way. “MWAH HAH ha ha!” A white-skinned boy with red hair and a black suit hovered above with a helipack. Beside him, a small purple ghost with a white mask and yellow eyes. “End of the line, um, random intruder people! Jack Spicer, evil boy genius, will have the honor of destroying you with his army of Jackbots!”

“Nope.” Beat shook.

“WHAT?! I’m one of the Brotherhood’s elite!” Jack whined. “I led the operation to infiltrate Moonbase and disable its defenses! Go ask Cree; wherever the heck that snotty deserter is!”

“FOCUS, Jack!” the purple ghost, Wuya shouted. “Hannibal Bean entrusted us with guarding Midna… until Pottymouth got back from his kid’s party. Don’t let your guard down!”

“Relax, Wu’s, they look like a couple of street punks.” Jack folded his arms with a confident fashion.

“You’re the one who wet his pants, I see.” Django smirked.

“WHAT?!” Jack reddened. “W-Well… at least I have the fluids to WET my pants!”

“Do not let him get inside your head, boy!” Wuya shouted.

“Who are you, his grandma?” Django asked. “Hey to break it to ya, but mine is 1500 years prettier.”

Wuya flew up to him, “Say that again, boy…”

“Ew, man, I smell that stank breath from HE-YUH!” Kimaya waved a hand by her nose.

“What, is this ghost made of pee and crack stench, yo?!?” Beat remarked.

“It smells like an air freshener they would hang in the sewer’s dung creeks!” Rhyme grinned.

“OOOOOO! You children are the BANE of my existence.” Wuya furrowed. “Hurry up and destroy them, Jack.”

“What’re these again, JACKbots?” Django asked. “Creative name. They don’t have anything over “my Skeleton Soldiers, though.”

“Oh, please. My Jackbots are made of the sturdiest metal, your skeletons are made of… bones. Robots CRUSH bones!”

A Jackbot designed with a doctor’s uniform made sad eyes. “Um, Master,”

“Except you, Docbot. You fix bones. But the rest of them will crush your skeletons into dust!”

Django strummed his Mystic Guitar and summoned a swarm of undead soldiers. “Shall we wager?” He grinned.

“JACKBOTS: ATTACK!” Within seconds, the temple floor was swallowed in the dust of battle.

Midna’s expression was bored and uninteresting. She just wanted to get rescued already, Jack’s voice was painful to her. Thankfully, her wish would come true, when Rhyme snuck through the conflict and picked the Firstborn up in her arms, smiling comfortingly. “It’s all right. We’re taking you home!”

“Can we stop at the Ear Doctor, first?” Midna replied.

A Jackbot drilled a skeleton’s empty sockets, a skeleton ate a Jackbot’s innards (it's just wiring, geez), two skeletons choked each other because they couldn’t see in the dust, a skeleton rode a robot like an amusement park ride, and one skeleton and robot were secret lovers. Wuya flew above this chaos, knowing for certain it was going nowhere. She looked at the empty pedestal where their captive was—her eyes widened. “STOOOP!”

Both sides froze in place. Jack Spicer looked confused. “YOU FOOL!” Wuya yelled at him. “Midna’s gone, and it’s ALL because of your incompetence!”

“I should’ve known: you can never trust a dead kid to abide by the rules of warfare.”

Wuya face-palmed, “Put these robots to use and FIND them!” The ghost rubbed her intangible hands, “I was planning to use Midna for something…” (End song.)

After the Gang members made it away from the canyon, Django strummed his guitar to summon the Ghost Train. Kimaya used the spikes on her cuffs to pick the mechanical locks on Midna’s hoops, setting her free. She stretched her weary limbs. “Well, not the most useless people on the planet.”

“Hee hee HYEAH-yuh!” Beat high-fived Kimaya and Django. “We made fools of those Brotherhood fools!”

“Glad I could count on you guys to help.” Django said.

“Hey, we street kids always look out for each other.” Kimaya punched his shoulder. “Even dead ones or… giants.”

“Guys, I think one of those spinach guys is stuck in my teeth.” Kaleo scraped his teeth with his pinky nail. “Help me get it out?”

“Which reminds me,” Django said, “we have to do something about Leo’s condition.”

“I can help.” Midna zapped the giant with her power. In seconds, Kaleo was dispersed into Shadow Matter. “I did something similar with his father. I’ll bring him back when we get home.”
“PLEASE teach us how to do that!” Beat pleaded.

“Alright, guys, get on, I’m running a tight schedule here.” Django said rushes, gesturing the group to get on. Django was about to board the train himself, but stopped to look in the desert horizon. Very far away, it would seem like a grouping of rocks, or even mountains. But no, Django recognized that village. Long forgotten by everyone else. He could walk there right now if he wanted to.

“Yo, Deadbones, ya comin’?” Kimaya asked.

Django flinched, “Y-Yes.” He boarded the train, and had it speeding across the landscape before long. The Gang members and Midna sat patiently on the benches. Django looked out the window, watching the village grow smaller out of sight.

“The Gang looks out for each other, man.” Kimaya told him. “You need anything, just come to us.”

“…Hmph.” Django smiled solemnly. “Anything, huh? Right… because you’re all my ‘buds.’”

York Household: present time

Sector V took land outside Dillon’s house, as the boy was first to hurry inside. “Mom, I’m home! Is Midna really safe, where is she?”

“She’s in the kitchen with Django, sweetie.” Danika smiled softly, sitting on the couch. The sectormates looked to the kitchen and saw Django and Midna at the table, playing poker.

“You know, this game was invented in the Underworld.” Midna informed him. “Except the cards were emotions back then. Malladus played against Mesprit. She whooped his butt with Love.”

“You don’t say…” Django halfheartedly stared at his cards, slurping a dead fish in one gulp.

“Midna, are you okay?” Dillon asked, entering the kitchen.

“Of course I am, Dillon, it was just the Brotherhood. I was trapped on Vaporia, too, remember?”

“But they had to’ve made you do something, right?” Haruka asked. “You don’t just capture a Firstborn and put her on your collection shelf.”

“Yeah, but they just weren’t interested in me.” Midna laid a card down. “It was Jirachi they wanted, they were just going to use me to find him. I don’t know where Jirachi is, but apparently we Firstborn can telepathically ‘sense’ each other, according to whatever phony history book they wrote.”

“Can you?” Artie asked.

“Not across a billion light-years, no.”

“But why do they want Jirachi?” Dillon asked.

“The Apocalypse is coming, so they want to wish it won’t come. And I told them that, even IF Jirachi still had all his powers, it would’ve been beyond him.”

“That’s true.” Aurora remembered. “He wouldn’t even be able to make Dimentia’s ideal world. We all know what really would’ve happened.”
“So tell me about space or wherever you went, how did that go?”

“Well, we learned that there was a ninth Firstborn.” Dillon responded. “In fact, we’re starting to think that we need to capture the Firstborn all over again. I don’t suppose you still have your Spirit Ball?”

“Heads up.” Danika walked in, and tossed her son the black-and-white ball.

Dillon caught it, almost unprepared. “…Well?” Midna cocked a brow. “Aren’t you gonna catch me?”

Dillon shrugged. “Good to get this part of the quest over with.” So he threw the ball. Midna became a beam of energy and was sucked inside.

The ball wiggled and beeped on the floor. Everyone watched eagerly. Will Dillon have caught his very first Pokémon? He’s still got over 700 to go before he becomes a master. Unfortunately, that wouldn’t be happening soon, because Midna burst free. “Not even close, man.”

“What?”

“This reminds me of a similar scenario.” Midna tapped her chin. “Django, do the act I taught you. Pretend you’re Nolan York, and I’ll be Celebi.” She gave him the Spirit Ball.

Django turned his chair to face them, then sat hunched like an old man. “Duuuuuh I’m a human child in a wheelchair who’s working for a disembodied brain in a jar. Master Genious, I got the Firstborn Celebi! I’m not her Guardian, but I’mma catch her, anyway!” He threw the ball.

“Bi-biiiii.” Midna cried sarcastically, and she was sucked inside. The ball beeped on the floor again. Midna broke free. “Now pretend I’m Darth Genious: You’re a fool, Nolan York. I’mma strangle you now.” She clutched Django’s neck with her ponytail hand.

“Aaaaauuuuck- No! Please! I didn’t read the story very well!” Django rasped. “I thought the Firstborn were human benders, not Pokémon! I only based my knowledge off of the Fan Forums review! Oh, what a fool I waaas!”

“And… scene.” Midna concluded, crushing Django’s neck. She released, and the skeleton fell dead.

Dillon felt his head throb with anger when his friends giggled. “Well, if I’M not your Guardian, WHO IS??”

“No, you actually ARE my Guardian. But you haven’t awakened yourself, yet. And you’ll only awaken yourself, by fully understanding your spiritual self. So, ask yourself… what makes Dillon York?”

Dillon looked down in thought for a moment. His spiritual self, eh… What did make Dillon York. What was the most unique thing about Dillon’s personality. “I’ll tell you one thing,” Mason spoke up, as if reading his mind, “he idolizes his dad a lot. Ironically, most of our friends are closer to their mom.”

“Even you, Maseyfairy?” Haruka cooed.

Mason blushed and furrowed. “Yes.”

“I look up to him,” Dillon replied, “and we had our share of moments, but my dad says he doesn’t want me tryin’ to be like him, and I should focus more on my shadowbending, since it’s what I was born with. And I’m trying to be good at it, it’s just a pain when you have to.. rely on someone for it.”

“What do you mean?” Midna asked, raising her brow.

“I mean, you know how other element benders can just bend their element, and that’s all there is, but shadowbenders have to rely on their sub-sentient shadows for most of the work?”

“Shadow is the Element of Hiding. It has to do with loneliness. It’s a feeling of being forced to hide, feeling cast off.” As Midna explained, Django frowned and looked away. “But they’re never alone, because the shadows are hiding with them. The shadows teach the benders, and the benders teach the shadows. That’s the beautiful thing about shadowbending.”

“Well, it’s not very beautiful for me.” Dillon stated. “Mario’s been totally useless lately, I’ve been slumping in every fight thanks to him. I know it’s supposed to be a thing about friendship, but I wish shadowbenders could be able to fight by their selves, you know? Get by with their own strength and not have to rely on; someone or something else.”

Oh, is THAT how you feel about me, is it? Mario said, his anger growing.

“What?” Dillon looked at his shadow.

You know, Master, I haven’t been feeling fond of YOUR attitude lately, either. You forgot I can read your thoughts, I hear you saying ‘Stupid shadow’ or ‘Every king time’, but I never say anything because I have to agree with everything you say. Well, you know what, fuck the laws, if you wanna fight by yourself, be my guest. I don’t have to put up with a snotty, ungrateful master. Good-bye, Dillon.

“M-Mario—HEY!!” To everyone’s surprise, the shadow flew off of Dillon’s body, out the front door, and across the houses. “COME BACK, MARIO!” Dillon fought through his friends to outside, but lost any sign of his shadow under the sunny sky.

“Whoa… Dillon’s shadow ditched him.” Mason spoke with awe.

“I don’t believe it…” Danika spoke quietly.

Artie fell on the floor and tearfully hugged his shadow, “I’m sorry for everything bad I might’ve done, Shadow, please don’t leave me!”

Haylee and Harry stared with disbelief. They heard a crackling sound and looked at Dillon, eyes widened. “Dillon, you’re on fire!!” Haylee shouted.

“Wh-What—AAAAAAAHHH!!” Dillon’s hand was swallowed by a whitish-gold flame, then his hair, and slowly his entire body was burning.

“DILLON!” Danika stretched Cheshire forth, grabbed her son in her shadow’s fingers, and pulled him back in the house, slamming the door.

The friends stood around as Dillon was thrown on the floor. His eyes were struck with fear as he studied himself, but no trace of the flames remained. “W-W-What just happened?!”

“It’s called Loneliness’s Toll.” Midna responded gravely. “A person who, for any reason, lost their shadow, has lost the connection between their Light and Dark Sides. Dillon has to keep himself in shadow at all times, because if he steps into the sunlight, with no shadow to balance out half of the Light Energy of the sun, his body will disintegrate.”

“You mean I…I can’t stand in sunlight until I get Mario back?!”

“The only reason the sun never disintegrates anything is because everything has a shadow to moderate half of the Light Chi. Too much Light Chi or Dark Chi destroys a person, that’s the simple part of it. That’s why every person needs a shadow… The question is, where did Mario run off to?”

“’ey, so if Dillon can’t get in sunlight,” Sheila spoke inquiringly, “does that mean I can’t do this?” She lit her entire arm gold.

Palutena’s Temple

Sector W was stuffed. They had no desire to do anything until that food settled down. They never felt more deserving of a meal. They patiently waited for Phosphora to finish bathing, then they would each take turns. Their young bones really needed the repair of energy. “We’ve gotta save countries more often.” Aranea commented.

“We art most gracious, Lady Palutena.” Fybi spoke politely. “But pray, is it true? Thou canst not tell us the identity of yonder Lights?”

Palutena was turned away from them. “I really want to, but this ‘Bill’ said that we couldn’t. I don’t know if I should believe him or not. With something the gods have no control over… I feel like everything me and Medusa are doing is a waste of time. If these Lights and Darknesses are destined to awaken themselves… what if the two of us are being played for fools?”

“Don’t say that about yourself, Lady Palutena!” Pit perked up. “This Apocalypse effects ALL creatures, including the gods! And no one cares about all life more than you, Palutena. That’s why you wanna do your best to protect everyone! It’s why you constantly watch the Kids Next Door and help them when they need it!”

“Hmm, I already knew all that, Pit.” The goddess smiled. “But even gods have worries that we can’t ignore. Still…” She turned to the five kids, “It looks like the prophecy is coming true on its own. Three Lights were already awakened. I bet, before long, the fourth will appear, then the others. Now I just need to hope Medusa is holding up her end of the quest. Despite her means of doing it.”

“Yeah! And when all the other bad guys hear how we beat Loki, they’ll go runnin’ and cryin’!” Anthony fist-palmed.

“Verily, ’twas Phosphora and I that were the victors in that fight.” Fybi reminded. “However, I hardly call Loki fair game. Ha ha HA!”

“Still, if we’re on the topic, what’s the deal with those World Government people?” Aranea asked. “I only heard about them from Cheren’s announcement. Is it true that one group rules the whole world?”

“Yes. And I’m ashamed to say I helped one of the World Leaders.” Palutena replied. “Her name is Jennifer Bush. Over 4,000 years ago, Jennifer was a child who died and became a spirit. I felt pity and granted her lightbending in the afterlife. She trained with it for years until she challenged me to a battle. Our contract was, if she won, I would grant her part of my Personal Chi, revive her with eternal life, and give her my home on Sun Pillar. ...And she did.”

“Why would you agree to all that?!” Nea shouted.

“It was a law established near the beginning, where mortals can challenge gods for their powers. I had the choice not to accept, but I did. She still had the heart and soul of a child, so I was deceived. I had no idea she would befriend the original World Leaders and form what would become the World Government. And I had no idea how great a threat they would be. That they would fulfill the role of ... gods.”

“Whaddyou mean ‘gods’?” Anthony asked.

“The World Government possesses an incredible power, unlike anything we’ve seen. Even Dialga shudders at the thought of it. There have been many World Leaders throughout history, and all have been mortal, but many of them felt so... distinguished from everyone else. They act as though they aren’t human or mortal, they’re greater than anyone on the planet, they’re the sole importance. It’s sickening, really. And yet, they’ve only recently become more active. I think it’s because, like the real gods, they’re afraid of the Apocalypse.”

“Yeah, but they’re NOT gods.” Anthony stated firmly. “They’re humans just like we are. But I don’t see THEM tryin’ to stop the Apocalypse. They have a problem with us, well I’m not very fond of them, either. I wanna get strong enough to KILL one of those Leaders!”

“Fine, then I’ll just beat them really bad.”

They heard fast-pace steps echoing from the hallway beyond the door. Palutena, Pit, and the sectormates readied their selves for what was coming. “YA FOOOOLS-!!” Killer Bee burst in—

He skidded to a halt when Palutena and Pit zipped up to him, weapons aimed. “Who are you?! State your name and business!” the goddess demanded.

“Hey! It’s Dr. T!” Harvey shouted.

“Really? I thought Dr. T had black hair.” Palutena said.

“Maybe this guy works for the B-Team.” Pit assumed.

“No, no, no! Fools, ya got it all wrong, the name’s Killer Bee, but I work for no team, so it would seem, fools, ya fools!” Bee sang.

“What are you doing up here?” Palutena asked.

“Er, um, uh, Ah saw the kiddies goin’ up the clouds, and since Dashi’s Peak was unoccupied, I thought I’d please the crowds, singin’ a song ‘bout the fake god behind the shrouds. Apparently, such a topic was a little too early, but that ain’t why I came, because some angels came and, through all shame, said they looking for the kiddies, playing some game where apparently it’s illegal for ‘em to come here.”

Confused by what he meant, Palutena looked at the crystal orb on her staff. It displayed squadrons of Nimbi soldiers searching around Birka. “The God’s Angels Air Force.” She knew. “The Nimbi that work for the World Government.”

“We fought some of those guys when we were flying here.” Sally remembered. “We have no idea why they were after us.”

“The Government is afraid of the Apocalypse to the point that they’re trying to ignore it.” Palutena stated. “And they’re ignoring it to the point that they don’t want anyone to act upon it. They don’t want the Twenty Keys to come together.”

“But they can’t just ignore it, because it’s going to happen, anyway!” Aranea shouted.

“They distinguish their selves from mankind by acting as gods. And nothing like the Apocalypse should be beyond a god’s control. That’s why they’re ignoring it, I’m guessing.” There was subtle anger in Palutena’s voice. “I’m going to seal this temple inside a barrier, so they shouldn’t be able to get inside.” Palutena hit the floor with the handle of her staff. The blue orb flashed, and outside, a spherical barrier appeared over the temple. “My guess is they’ll really be after Fybi. You kids should stay in here until they’re gone.”

Phosphora came out of the bathroom wrapped in a towel. She noticed the worried looks on everyone’s faces. “Um… What’s going on?”

“God is mad at Nea for skipping her weekly church visits, so His angels are coming to smite her.” Anthony explained.

“They would get you first, Anthony.” The girl said.

“Thou art certain they canst not penetrate, correct?” Fybi asked.

“Relax, Fybi! Lady Palutena’s shields are the strongest in the universe!” Pit beamed. “It’d take an awful lot of power to break it.”

Palutena gasped. “You might’ve spoken too soon, Pit. I’m sensing... very powerful Light Chi. It’s... It’s mine!”

A team of angels were pulling a golden-pink chariot under the rainbow sky, drawing nearer to the great dome around Palutena’s Temple. An army of God’s Angels rose up from the distance, and some crossed the cloud canyon when the chariot landed. A pair of pink high-heels touched the marble path. World Leader, Jennifer Bush looked beautiful under the sunlight, and her smiling face could warm anyone’s hearts. She dashed joyfully to the barrier’s edge. “Lady Paluteeeenaaaaa! Palutena-senpaaaaaiiii! Yoohooooo! Could you tell me why King Andrew felt one of the Seven Lights become awakeeeened? He does not want thaaaaat.” She swayed her body like a worm.

Pit Icarus dashed out with his bow ready, “You aren’t taking anymore of Palutena’s ENERGY!” He loosed an arrow of energy, and it flew through Jennifer’s heart perfectly.

“AAAAAHHH!” The woman fell on her back, dead. A beautiful ray of light shone from the heavens, a chorus of angels sang. Jennifer was back on her feet. “I am God’s Daughter, I’ll keep coming back! I’m- im- mor- tal.” She paused at each syllable. “AH HAHAHAHAHAHAHA! Now excuse me, I must capture the little babies inside! Since nothing else works, we’ll just wipe their memory of this whole Apocalypse business. Come ooooon, Palutena, I beat you once, I can beat you again.”

“It’s not safe for you kids here.” Palutena told Sector W. “I’m sorry you didn’t have time to rest more, but we can’t let them capture you. Come with me to the Reflecting Pool and I can make it transfer you all to the Negaverse.”

“What’s the Negaverse?” Phosphora asked.

“We shall inform thee in time.” Fybi told her. “But mayhap thou shouldst not accompany. Thou hast little knowledge on this matter, so the Government may not hunt thee if thou dost not affiliate with us.”

“Yes, Miss Phosphora, we wouldn’t want you to get in trouble because of us.” Sally followed. “And I’m sure if you act like one of the maids here, those angels might not care for you. We promise to meet up with you again as soon as we can, okay?”

“…” Phosphora bit her lip, as though contemplating an ultimate decision. She nodded, “Okay. Um, and Fybi? …Thanks for everything.”

The Fulbright girl smiled.

“But methinks you kids, need an ounce of parental supervision.” Bee rapped. “I shall accompany thee, too, until I’m no longer needed by you, baka, you bakas.”

“Fair enough, Bee.” Palutena smiled. The goddess led them to the chamber of her Reflecting Pool, which she stirred with her staff to display who appeared to be a cheerful Anthony. “Would Anthony’s Negative be okay?”

“Yes! He’s pretty nice.” Sally beamed.

“Come on, I’d rather go to yours.” Anthony replied.

“Same difference, either way.” Palutena shrugged. “Jump in, kids.”

Each kid made a “Hup” sound and dove into the mystic pool, and Killer Bee’s bulky exterior was last to make the gesture.

With that, the Goddess of Light marched out through the front gates, joining Pit against the thousands of God’s Angels. “Miss Palutena, there you aaaaaare!” Jennifer cartwheeled. “Were you trying to keep me oooouut?”

“I don’t really appreciate uninvited guests.” The goddess stated. “Now what do you want, Jennifer?”

“I know you’re hiding the kids from meeeeee. My angels saw them coming to this island.”

“I’m afraid there aren’t any kids here. You can search the temple top to bottom, but you’ll find nothing. Not that I intend to let your troops barge in.”

“Is that a THREAT, Lady Palutena?!” Jennifer became enraged.

“I’m just stating obvious fact. Thou shalt not pass.”

“If THAT’S the case, I challenge you for MORE of your God Chi! GOOD LUCK BEATING
Palutena clutched her staff tight, “Hm-hi don’t accept. This isn’t a matter of taking one’s chi, this is home invasion. And even gods need self-defense.”

“You’re no god to ME, Lady Palutena! I’ll show you how far my chi has COME since I took it from you! JESUS, GIVE ME STRENGTH!” Jennifer leapt and stomped her heel against Palutena, who blocked with her staff.

Washington; White House

Let me tell you a story about a certain boy. A boy who became a man, and changed the world.

The hallway was pitch-black. A bright light shone at the end.

This boy’s father was a U.S. Senator. His parents taught him all about politics and American history.

The man fixed on his coat and straightened his tie.

He loved reading about American presidents. All of their noble deeds and faults.

He slowly walked toward the light. Thousands of people were cheering outside.

When he turned 18, this boy joined the U.S. Army. He went from Cadet to Lieutenant to General, then Admiral in a few short years.

The man smiled, the light reflecting off his glasses.

He performed many noble deeds for his country. His strength was greater than anyone’s.

He felt the summer air from outside growing warmer, the closer he got.

His only real crime was a detention he received in Fourth Grade. But all children have such a fault.

The man briefly kissed his wife on the cheek, before she joined him outside.

America was consumed in war with Iraq, China, Canada, many countries. This man led the front lines, and now these countries are aligned with America.

There was a rumor that he got his strength from a demon. If this was true, nobody cared, anymore.

The people of America cheered for the man atop the flight of marble stairs.

People say he is the most powerful man in the world, under the World Leaders. They say he once shared a soda with King Andrew.

If this man wanted to, he could become a World Leader. He was just that great, and noble.

This man is now the 46th President of the United States.

And his name was…

James Nixon McGarfield.

Clothed in the shiniest white tux, a red emblem on his necktie, the sturdiest white cowboy hat. He appeared fat at first glance, but the loyal citizens knew it was muscle. His hair was brown, his eyes were a beautiful blue behind his glasses. He was the most handsome, most charming man in the world. The people of America were so delighted to elect him as leader.

Today, President McGarfield has an announcement.

Jimmy lived in the White House—more like the White Palace, as it was the largest house in America. American flags hung everywhere. The courtyard was large enough for these thousands of citizens. Directly above Jimmy’s podium, above the front door, was a banner depicting a golden triangle with an eye. The Eye of Providence which gave the people of America hope.

So we introduce the main antagonist of this saga. Well, ONE of the main antagonists, you’ll see the others later. Well-p, Chapter 30 next, you know what I think we should dedicate it to? Going to Gravity Falls! Next time, we’ll meet the Pines Twins! See you then! ;)

Gravity Falls

Chapter Summary

Cheren and Wendy Marvell met the Pines Twins and explore a secret underground bunker. (Warning: VERY plot-heavy chapter!)

Hmm, Chapter 30? Strange, the story isn’t even close to being finished. Hehe, my other stories would be completed by now! XDD Extremely complex plot development, people!! Today’s codes use the A1Z26 Cipher, but they’re found within the story.

NOTE: This is also Chapter 17 of Seven Lights: The Side Stories.

Chapter 30: Gravity Falls

York Household

“Midna, explain to me, very slowly, what the hell HAPPENED?!” Dillon yelled ragefully.

“Like your slow-witted father, you are excessively thick.” Midna replied, frowning with disappointment. “Let me put it to you simply:” She poked Dillon’s nasal bridge with each word, “Your shadow. Is. PISSED. Do you remember every time YOU were angry with your father, so you walked away? Well, this is the same thing.”

“My fucking SHADOW! How do you get in a fight with your fucking SHADOW, and it flies AWAY?”

“All people’s shadows have a conscious, it’s just shadowbenders are able to interact with them better. In reality, Shadow is a material all on its own, like poison or earth, the living shadows are composed of that material, and they can touch it. The shadowbenders can control other shadows, but until they’re at that level, their own shadow acts for them. But now you have no shadow, so you can’t shadowbend.”

“So give me a new shadow and give my bending back!”

“Pfft, a god can’t just CREATE a life-form out of thin air, they have to be born! We exhausted our energy creating the original life-forms, we don’t intend to make anymore. Dillon, you’re just going to have to find Mario and kiss up to him.”

“In that case, better hope Mario is on a clean metal pole, and not a trashcan, crumbling wooden house, or somebody’s butt.” Aurora said.

“Either way, I’m snapping a picture when he does.” Mason said, holding his phone, and the friends couldn’t contain their laughter.

“Midna, do you have ANY idea where Mario could’ve run off to?” Dillon asked.

“Even you could guess that one.” Midna replied. “But for the sake of saving a few lines of dialogue, it’s Twilight Town.”
“That shadowy forest in Pennsylvania where Mom and my aunts took me to train?”

“Mm-hm. The forest bathed in eternal sunset.” Danika replied. “It’s sort of the Anderson Family’s heritage, and a retreat for shadows who had a… falling out.”

“Yes, but it’s also the home of the Twili.” Midna replied. “A shadow sub-species who are descended from humans that moved to the Shadow Realm. They’re like the Fishmen in Oceana, their appearance changed after adapting to the environment.”

“Interspecies relations are weird.” Artie said. His siblings stared at him, knowing his crush on Makava.

“Won’t the fact that you can’t go into sunlight be a little problematic?” Haruka asked.

“Being a shadow myself, I can serve as your temporary shadow.” Midna informed. “You will be able to bend a little bit, but you won’t be much without your birth-shadow.”

“Whatever, I can live with it. As long as I don’t combust like a vampire.” Dillon said with silent aggression.

“Technically, vampires would shine like diamonds in sunlight.” Aurora corrected.

“I’ll call Victoria to tell her you’re coming.” Danika said. “She works at the local inn, so she could fix some rooms for you kids if you end up staying a while.”

“I guess I’ll be staying here by myself, then.” Django sighed with fake depression. “Just a dead kid and Dillon’s sexually-depressed mother. Aaaall by myself, with no one to play with.” He slumped lazily on the kitchen chair he was sitting in.

You can come, too, Mr. Django. Kirie signed politely.

“I’m going to assume that was an invitation to come, YES!” The skeleton fist-pumped.

They heard a sudden cellphone ring, coming from Mason’s pocket. He took it out and looked at the Caller I.D.. “It’s Carol.”

“Is she Number One- Ow!” Haruka rubbed her leg after Mason kicked it.

Mason answered, “Hello, Carol?”

“Maseyfairy, THERE you are, I’ve been trying to call you since yesterday! Your mom said you were in space or something, why would you go without calling me??”

“Because you’re not my mom, OR my girlfriend, Carol!”

“My, what a mouth on you. Hey, I’ve got something to tell Dillon: His dad got arrested by the Government!”
“What?!” Dillon took the phone.

“Arrested?…” Danika gasped.

“I’m waiting inside your treehouse, come over and I’ll explain.”

“We’re on our way.” Dillon gave the phone back to Mason, who hung up. “’Guess Twilight Town will have to wait.”

“Who was she?” Django asked as they piled outside.

“Operative in training.” Aurora replied. “She wants to be in our sector.”

“Hold on, why is she allowed in your treehouse and not me??”

“She isn’t, we aren’t even sure how she would get in.” Mason said.

“Because Maseyfairy lets her in when no one else is around, wink-wink.” Haruka pressed her cheeks.

“Why is my ‘relationship’ with Carol the only one that’s mocked?”

“Because you remind us of Dad and Lizzie.” Chris answered.

Gravity Falls, Oregon

Cheren and MaKayla flew their S.C.A.M.P.E.R. over a thick, vast forest of towering pine trees, and landed in a random location. They both stepped off as MaKayla looked around. “Why did we land here? Is their treehouse nearby?”

“Sector GF is sort of a ‘secret sector.’” Cheren explained. “They’re given mystery-based missions and research secrets that the KND can use. They requested the Supreme Leader before me to become their own sector, but he turned it down and insisted they be part of Sector O. After I became leader, I gave ‘em the green light. As part of the terms, they don’t use an actual treehouse. We’re landing this far to avoid giving away their location.”

“So where is the location?”

“Some kind of tourist hut in the middle of the woods. I visited here a few times; there really is some weird stuff here. I wouldn’t be surprised if some of Roguetown’s creatures wandered over here. Be careful, MaKayla.”

“You’re telling that to a timebender. Watch your own back, Cherry.” (Play “Hidden Mountain & Forest” from Smash Bros. Brawl.)

Stage 39: Gravity Falls

Mission: Meet up with Sector GF!

Act 1: Gravity Forest

Cheren and MaKayla marched forward as an eerie wind rustled the pine trees, and the sun could barely poke through the branches. Wooden, tree-bark monsters called Groots broke free from the trees, lashing their thick vine arms at the duo. Cheren sliced the vines with his sword while MaKayla chucking Time Bombs to slow them, giving her leader an easier time to shoot the Groots with Fire Arrows. A short, but high cliff blocked their way ahead, but Cheren noticed the barren areas on the trees, where it looked like branches would grow, but didn’t. MaKayla held on while Cheren launched to the first spot with his Hookshot. With his pair of Hookshots, they flew to one target, then the next, and if they fell, they would end up going down a slippery slide carved into the earth, leading off the short cliff, therefore dropping them at the start of this segment.

The two had to time their Hookshot swings when rows of Zingers buzzed back-and-forth between targets, and also when Gnomes launched up to them like arrows, getting their pointed hats stuck in the bark. The final Hookshot target let them off on a safe ground, just before a Gnome stuck into it. It was then Cheren realized, from there, he could’ve hooked to another target, on a branch that would give him a Heart Piece. Now he couldn’t hook the previous target because the Gnome was in the way. ‘Guess he’d have to play the level again. The duo wandered into a small field of bushes, where Gnomes popped out and attacked them directly.

The tiny creatures jumped in the air and dove at them like arrows, and with their great speed, MaKayla had to slow them, giving Cheren the chance to shoot them with real arrows. With the creatures knocked out, the kids proceeded to a grouping of trees—a tree that was oddly-shaped stepped away like a gigantic leg, quaking the ground, and a flock of crows flapped away when the branches forcefully rustled. The two exchanged frightened glances and followed a right path, away from that monster. A river flowed gently into the forest, so the friends stayed along its side as they progressed. The earth suddenly trembled, and they felt their selves floating into the air. “W-What’s happening?!” Cheren exclaimed.

“Gravity anomalies are common in this forest. My father senses them regularly, he told us. I’d like to know what’s causing them.” Unfortunately, the two were about to be lifted to some Zingers, who managed to float in place, so the kids swam along the low-G to keep from hitting them. They floated above a large tree branch when the gravity dropped them, crossing a group of rope bridges across other branches. Skulltulas ambushed them from above, but Cheren was quick to act by batting them, turning them around, then stabbing their weak undersides. The last branch overlooked a far cliff, so Cheren told MaKayla to grab on before he glided them over using the Pirates’ Sail.

They followed the path through a shady area of forest, where a ray of sun shone against a giant crystal, causing a purple light to shine through the other side. Cheren drew his blade when a Skulltula crept toward them, but when the spider walked through the light, it shrunk to the size of a regular tiny spider. The two stared curiously before Cheren stomped the Skulltula, then Fi came out. “Master Cheren, I have determined this is a Size Crystal. When light shines upon it, depending on which side, the other side will cause targets to either shrink or grow. I surmise an 88% chance the woodland creatures will have varying heights. Master, your Mirror Shield may be able to deflect the light.”

“Magic is lovely.” Cheren said. A tall, pointed boulder was blocking their path, so Cheren bounced the purple light with his shield to decrease the rock’s size. The next path had Size Crystals lodged in the sides, touching the ground with blue beams, and when innocent local Goomba wandered into those beams, they grew to giant size. MaKayla ran, jumped, and climbed on top of one to begin bashing the creature’s head, since Goombas still had weak bodies regardless. Cheren blasted another Goomba with Fire Arrows until it was down, but now Buzzy Beetles were wandering onto the Grow Lights and changing size. They curled in their massive shells and spun at the operatives, so Cheren and Kayla evasively dodged them. The world shook when the giant beetles bounced around the walls. Another giant boulder was blocking the way, so the kids tricked the beetles into ramming into it until it smashed open.
A giant Skulltula was seated on a web, blocking the path out of there. There was a blue light, but that would only make the Skulltula bigger. “Wait a second, can’t we just make OURSELVES bigger with these??” Cheren realized.

“Fine. …Kayla, grab that pebble.” MaKayla picked up a nearby pebble, while Cheren bounced the blue light above the spider. Kayla tossed the pebble above and into the light, it grew to boulder size and crushed the Skulltula. Thankfully, the stone was still flat enough for the duo to climb over; Cheren noticed a tiny Size Crystal growing from a mound. “I think I’ll take one… you know, just in case.” So he did.

Over this pebble-boulder, the two could slide down a snaky slope, laughing with excitement before they were set onto a mostly barren ground. Undead hands reached up from the earth; the Redeads made their otherworldly moans as they limped toward the duo. Cheren ran between some and performed a spin attack, MaKayla leapt around with strong, swift kicks to send their heads flying, but their horrifying screams caused the kids to shudder in place. A tremendous, tree-root foot stomped a grouping of zombies, then kept walking, and the friends saw it was the same monster from earlier. They paid it no mind still, doing away with the rest of the Redeads before proceeding down the next path.

The world shook, and the two were uplifted by Gravity Fails. There were a lot of spider webs in the branches above, so they maneuvered around the air to avoid them. They flew forward, feeling the gravity return when they were above a path of webs, so they let their selves land on a branch in-between. While wondering where to go next, the gravity failed again, they were able to keep going. Above a garden of very sharp pine cones, they let the gravity drop them over a solid patch. They repeated these intervals until they landed on the next path between some trees. Groots emerged from the bark, and Gnomes leapt out from behind the creatures and flew at the kids, Cheren and Kayla dodged as the latter slowed the Groots, and Cheren shot the Gnomes with arrows. He hit the Groots with Fire Arrows before hurrying forward with his friend.

“Creee-ee.” A weird sound was heard, the two whipped around to see nothing there. A sign nearby read, Beware the Hide Behind. Cheren and Kayla exchanged worried glances and kept forward. They heard footsteps behind, they turned around, nothing there. MaKayla stood back-to-back with Cheren and kept walking, they heard the steps up in the branches, aiming to gnash down on them. They exchanged frantic glances and ran for it, and hearing the quick footsteps, MaKayla threw a Time Bomb back, and the two whipped around to catch the Hide Behind in the act, a tall, lanky shadow creature. Cheren leapt and slayed the monster with a jump attack, so the two could continue without worry.

The earth quaked again when they made it to a barren area under a cliff. The gigantic, tree-bark monster stomped out of the woods to their right, hunching forward and planting his hands against the cliff’s edge. Curious, the two hurried behind the monster, and were able to climb the vines around its left leg. Walltulas were creeping along, Cheren shot them down with arrows before climbing. They then had to sidle up a thin ledge, sloping up to the creature’s back, Cheren sliced a Snapdragon that got in the way. They reached the sloped part of the back, hurried up, then ran across the giant’s arm to get onto the cliff. They turned back to its gruff, wrinkled face as MaKayla waved happily, “Thank you, Mr. Tree Giant!”

the ground, the operatives readying their selves. The Gnome aimed its fists and blasted its smaller comrades like pointed bullets, Cheren bounced them against the body with his Mirror Shield. MaKayla ran, punched, and kicked several of their little Gnome faces, climbing to the head (a Gnome with a brown beard) for a quick punch before flipping down. Cheren got behind the giant and shot a M.A.R.B.L.E. at the left leg, blowing those Gnomes off. It hopped around on the other leg, then with perfect agility, MaKayla leapt toward, spun sideways and horizontally in the air, and kicked the head Gnome off, letting the whole thing crumble down.

“Ow!” The brown-bearded Gnome fell on his back as Cheren and Kayla stood over him. “Hey, you’re not bad, toots. How would you like to be my queen?”

“I’m a King, sorry.” Kayla remarked.

“Really?” The Gnome stared at her lower area. “I thought male humans had—” MaKayla forcefully kicked him toward the wall of Gnomes and let them topple. She exchanged a friendly nod with Cheren before they progressed, making it to an open road. The sign indicated the ‘Mystery Shack’ to their right, and there it was. A large gift shop in the middle of the forest, displaying its name on the roof, though the ‘S’ was fallen and upside-down, so it looked like ‘Mystery Hack’. No refunds.

(End song.)

At the same time...

The Point Me spell continued to lead Wendy and Carla as they raced all the way across the country. When they were at the edge of a stone bridge within a forest of pine trees, the wand started to get jittery. “What’s it doing?”

“Perhaps it’s reacting to a magnetic field.” Carla assumed. “This must be Gravity Falls.”

“No use for the spell, then.” Wendy dispelled the Point Me. “Finding the Mystery Shack shouldn’t be too hard, right?”

“No, but gravity anomalies are a different story. There’s something awfully suspicious about this place, Child. Please be careful.”

“How can I not be with you eying over me, right?” Wendy chuckled.

“You got it!” (Play “Made Me Realize” by Brad Breeck!)

Stage B-13: Gravity Falls

Mission: Investigate the gravity anomalies.

Act B-1: Gravity Road

Wendy started across the bridge, building up her speed, and zooming around the trees on the snaky forest path that followed. Wendy made it to a straight path, which led her up a hill and off a ledge, landing Wendy on a small field where Gnomes were riding Big Goombas. Carla used Torpedo Spins to knock the spike-topped Gnomes off the Goombas, then Wendy could bounce on the Goombas’ exposed heads to knock them out. Wendy kept racing through the forest, crossing a path of ruins where Piranha Plants hid behind stones and tried to snap Wendy as she ran by, so she sidestepped away from the stones’ sides. When two stones were coming up, Wendy jumped to dodge the twin plants.

Wendy ran along a swerving road, where trees created a pattern of shadowed parts and sunny parts on the ground, so the top of Wendy’s vision blinked on-and-off in these light and dark spots. The path brought Wendy to Lake Gravity Falls, and her keen speed allowed her to run across the surface. “Wendy, watch out!” Carla yelled when a massive, robotic lake monster emerged from the lake. Wendy drifted leftward to avoid the monster, and when this route brought her to a group of jagged rocks, Wendy drifted right to avoid crashing. She avoided the jumping fish as she raced toward a group of yachts fishing in the lake. She flew up a skier’s ramp, bounced off a yacht’s sail, and landed back on the lake as she kept boosting.

The robotic lake monster — the Gobblewonker — swam alongside Wendy’s right, so she drifted left to avoid crashing, then dodged the other boats as she came to the shore. The Gobblewonker submerged below the water, then reemerged ahead of Wendy as she ran up the robot’s back, across its rising neck, then the head flung her into the air as she flew toward the pine trees. Wendy bounced across the tree tops before landing on the forest ground and running toward a cliff. A blue light suddenly flashed over the land, and Wendy was lifted off her feet and floating. “Whooooaaa! Is this what Mr. Facilier was talking about? ?”

The gravity returned, allowing Wendy to run up a steep hill. She ran off a ledge at the top, and she landed on an abandoned train track bridge that hovered miles over the town. She had an amazing view of the valley, and the track was between two cliffs facing each other. As she raced across the great bridge, a gray pterodactyl swooped over in attempt to grab her, but Wendy slid to avoid its talons. The pterodactyl came back, swooping its whole body across the bridge’s surface, so Wendy jumped to avoid. The pterodactyl came from behind, and the bridge was about to go into a tunnel sealed by wooden boards. “Reducto!” Wendy destroyed the boards with the explosive spell, escaping inside the tunnel before the dactyl caught her.

Wendy grinded some rails that felt too close to each other and made jumping rails uneasy, especially since they led her over a narrow river of lava where fireballs bounced up. “I can see why they closed the tracks.” Carla said. Wendy landed on stable ground as the cave curved and sloped down left, but soon had to run across the left wall over another lava river. A fireball jumped in her way, so Wendy jumped to the right wall, she felt the gravity steadily weighing her toward the lava, but her heart could relax when she made it to the safe ground just in time.

As the tunnel sloped lower, Wendy and Carla arrived at a great, vast cave glowing with orange. They were gigantic chunks of frozen tree sap… and dinosaurs of all types were sealed inside. “Wow! Carla, look! Dinosaurs!”

“Are they frozen in tree sap?” Carla observed. “I read a theory that said tree sap had ice-like properties, but I dismissed them as hogwash.”

“Welcome to Jurassic Sap Hole!” A gruff voice spoke from a tower with a speaker. “For just 10 dollars, join a tour to see real live dinosaurs! For an extra 20, you’re allowed to taste the sap! The-Mystery-Shack-is-not-responsible-for-any-paying-customers-devoured-or-dismembered-
“It seems we’re getting close.” Carla said. The girls admired the sights as they trotted (and flew) through the cave. When they passed a tunnel to another cave, a gravity anomaly appeared and forced them to float. Huge drops of tree sap fell from above, and Wendy was unfortunately pushed down and stuck to the ground by one. She used Incendio to melt the sap off and floated up again. She made it onto a ledge by the time the gravity returned. There was a cave drawing of a caveman with a Stone Fist, punching a green caveman while a pterodactyl family cheered.

Wendy ran right along the path before entering another tunnel. This cave had a chasm on her left, with minecart tracks leading to a nest with a baby pterodactyl. The baby was guarding a Fire Soul, and seemed to change position to face a certain track rail. Wendy grinded on the rail he wasn’t in front of, but the baby reacted by flying at and knocking Wendy off. Thankfully, she bounced on a large mushroom on the ground below, and used a stairway of these mushrooms to get back up to the ledge. Wendy decided to grind the rail the dactyl was facing – because its eyes were far apart, the avian couldn’t see her coming, then Wendy could jump the baby, get the Fire Soul, and grind back.

Wendy raced into the next room, which featured a T-rex inside a weak chunk of sap. She went up a slope onto the left ledge, and from there could cross a path passing the front of the rex’s face. Wendy boosted across—the dino’s head broke free and snapped its teeth on the path, missing Wendy by an inch. In the next room, Wendy jumped in a stronger steaming geyser that propelled her out of the cave and into fresh air. She raced a new path, coming to a ray of purple light just before a stone. When she zipped past the light, she shrank in an instant, and went through a hole under the rock.

This path was filled with flat stones, and tiny Wendy ran up a slope onto the first rock, then could either jump across the others or run on the low path. These rocks brought her to a mini spring that bounced her to a mini path on the left ledge. She climbed some stone pillars before a blue light stretched her to normal size, allowing her to grab a Fire Soul. From here, Wendy passed the flat stone path, climbed onto a short ledge, and touched a purple light to shrink again. She raced up a spiraling path going around a tree, and squirrels came out of holes to chase the little prey. Wendy jumped off the end of that path, landing safely on Carla’s head.

Skulltulas hung down everywhere in this field, while some dropped on the ground to approach the blue-haired delicacy. Wendy casted quick blasting spells to defeat the hideous creatures, and once she beat the ones hanging from the web above, the web dispersed and Carla was able to come down. She lifted her owner above a ledge, escaping the field and running a new path.

Finally, Wendy made it to the actual town, passing glances at all the happy-go-lucky citizens. She decided to make turns around all the city’s streets. She sped past Lazy Susan and spun the woman around as she cried, “Woooooowwwwwhhhhh!!” She jumped on the roof of Bud Gleeful’s car store, jumped on the Discount Prices dollar sign, and rode it partway across town before jumping in the miniature golf course. She ran to the windmill, grabbed one of its blades, and spun it faster with her airbending before it broke off and flew away – exposing the little golfball people inside the tower. Wendy raced past more forest, touched a purple light that shrunk her, and used her small size to skid across the surface of Gravity Falls Pool. She dodged the water balloons thrown at her before a kid’s splash knocked her back onto land, and she touched another blue light outside the pool’s fence.

Wendy got back to town and raced down a street leading into the forest. The sign read Mystery Shack, and before long they saw the secluded house. Wendy slowed before the front door and entered. (End song.)

The girl and kitten caught their breath after that invigorating run. Carla set foot on the floor to rest her wings. “Yo, what up!” a redheaded teen girl called from the register. She wore a green patterned shirt and a lumberjack hat. “Welcome to the Mystery Shack. Say, are you new in town? ’Cause I would definitely recognize hair like that.”

“Yes, I am.” Wendy smiled. “My name’s Wendy.”

“No way, my name’s Wendy, too!”

“It is?”

“Shyeah! That must mean we’re, like, brethren or something. Aw, and you even like green, dude we should totally hang out sometime.”

“Not when you’re working!” A gruff old man stated as he walked in. He wore a black tux, had a big round nose, and wore a maroon fez with a yellow Pac-Man-like shape. “Say, are you the person Dr. Facilier said would come over?”

“Yes, I am! Are you Stan Pines?”

“The one and only.”

“Hello, Mr. Pines. Do you still have those shrunken merman heads?”

“Right here!” He held up the three shrunken heads, whose pale skins had a tannish tone about them.

“How do we know they’re not ordinary shrunken heads?” Carla asked.

“Why would they be? I found them in the lake, what would they be if not merpeople?”

Wendy felt a little creeped out. “I, um… Maybe we should buy something else… I hope Dr. Facilier doesn’t mind.”

“Sigh, suddenly everybody’s a paranormal critic. Fine, feel free to shop around.” Stan walked away. “Corduroy, make sure she doesn’t shoplift.”

Wendy Corduroy’s cellphone went off. When the teen checked it, the called ID read HIII. “Oooo, I gotta go do something. Catch ya later, Little Wendy.” She hopped over the desk. “And if Stan asks, tell him my hormones are acting up.” Wendy waved as Wendy ran off.

“She seems nice.” Wendy smiled.

“Come on, Child, let’s look into these anomalies. We can question Mr. Pines’ credibility later.”

“You’re right.” Wendy jumped around and was about to race out the door.

“So that’s Sector GF?” MaKayla asked as they approached the entrance to the Mystery Shack.
“Yup. Perfectly disguised, no one would ever suspect. Their great-uncle owns this tourist trap, their room is up in the roof. Let’s go say ‘Hello’.” Cheren walked onto the porch and opened the door.

“WHOOA-!” The minute he did so, a blue-haired girl collided into him, both falling on the ground. They stared into each other’s brown eyes for a minute, blushing. Cheren grinned. “Hehe. Why must we keep running into each other like this?”

“Hehe. Sorry.” The girl climbed off and helped Cheren up. He and MaKayla saw the white, winged kitten behind her.

“Your name was Wendy, right? And the cat was…”

“Carla.” Wendy replied. “And you… were…”

“Cheren. This is MaKayla, one of my operatives. What brings you here?”

“I’m doing work for Mister Facilier. You wouldn’t happen to know about the gravity anomalies that happen around here?”

“We may’ve encountered some.” MaKayla said.

“We call them ‘Gravity Fails’.” Cheren followed.

“Well, we won’t keep you.” Carla replied, walking around the group. “Let’s look elsewhere, Wendy.”

“Hold on!” MaKayla stopped them. “Maybe you two should join us.”

“Why ever should we?”

“Yeah, Kayla, how come?” Cheren asked.

“They’re here to check out the gravity anomalies, and we’re here for information about the Apocalypse. I wonder if both of us can find what we’re looking for.”

“Wait… you know about the Apocalypse as well?” Wendy asked.

“Y-Yeah, we’re trying to stop it.” Cheren said, scratching his head confusedly. “How do you-”

“Please, Carla, can’t we join them?” she pleaded to her cat. “I told Mr. Facilier I would help them stop it, I think we should.”

“Wendy, we have our own priorities to take care of, we’ll just be in the way.”

“Siiiigh.” Carla sighed. “Very well. As long as we don’t get too far off track.”

The group headed upstairs and approached a room down the hall, guarded by two girls. One was shorter, with long black hair, glasses, and a green striped shirt, while the other was large and bulkier, with brown hair in a ponytail, a pink shirt with ‘COOL’ written, and purple shorts. “HALT!” the large girl spoke with a gruff, man-like voice, holding a hand to them. “This room is restricted. Only those who know the password may enter! Unless you’re here to give me your number, Cutie.” She smiled flirtingly at Cheren.

“Numbuh 3621, welcome!” the shorter girl, Candy spoke with a French accent. “Dipper and Mabel were expecting you.”

“I’m STILL waiting for your call!” the large one, Grenda scowled with hands on her hips.

“Numbuh Pounds, I told you I didn’t want your number. May we enter now?”

“Fine, whatever.” The girls entered first, followed by the four guests. “Hey guys, the Supreme Leader’s here!”

“All right, you made it!” Dipper looked up from his journal. He was a brown-haired boy in a light-red T-shirt, navy-blue vest, and a blue and white hat with a pine tree.

“I baked cookies!” Mabel grinned, showing the braces on her teeth, holding a tray of cookies. She had long brown hair, a light-blue sweater with a white bird, and a purple skirt.

“WOOOOOOOO!” a distant, otherworldly applause roared throughout the room.

The Pines Twins looked confused. “What was that?” Dipper asked.

“Our readers are really excited to see you.” Cheren blushed.

“I know I’d be excited to see me.” Mabel replied. “HEYOOOO!” she waved at the readers.

“WOOOOOOOO!”

“Numbuh 2012, you said something about your uncle’s journal.” Cheren reminded. “Did you get it?”

“Yes! It’s right here.” Dipper held up the brown book, with a golden six-fingered hand, and a large “3” written on it. Cheren, Wendy, and MaKayla peeked over Dipper’s shoulder as he opened it. “I found this a long time ago while I was exploring the woods. It tells about all the weird things in Gravity Falls.” The pages depicted the Gnomes, Redeads, and Size Crystals. “Our Grunkle Stan took it from us to think up props for his shop. What is it you said you were looking for?”

“That!” MaKayla pointed at a picture of a block with strange writing. “That’s the very same rock we found on Planet Glacia! Only Suki was able to read it back then…”

“Well, what did it say?”

“Um, it was written by someone called ‘Ichigo Kurosaki’. It just congratulated Suki for being the ‘Chosen One’, and that there’re six more. Also, her power would be important. But let me look back, just in case. Thankfully, I have a very keen memory.” MaKayla touched her forehead and closed her eyes. She rewinded her own memory back to when they and Sector SOUL found the Gibberish Rock. She reopened, “No, that one was written differently.”

“Wait a second, if this book is about Gravity Falls, wouldn’t that mean that rock is HERE?” Cheren asked.

“Hey, you’re right!” Dipper perked. “That secret bunker I told you about! What if it’s somewhere in there?”

“Excuse me, but I would like to take a look.” Carla spoke up.

The twins looked at her—“AAH!!” and screamed. “Did that cat just talk?!”

“And it has wings!” Mabel exclaimed. “It’s a bird-cat!”

“I wonder if that’s somewhere in here??” Dipper flipped the pages.

“JUST give me that book!” Carla shouted. Dipper complied and handed it to her. The kitten skimmed through pages with ghosts, some kind of black triangle with an eye (and red ink written), and what looked like part of some blueprints. “There are an awful lot of blank areas.”

“Yeah, I’ve been wondering about that myself.” Dipper said. “It’s like the author got lost in thought while writing it.”

“…” Wendy glanced at the pink wand in her hand. “W-Wait! Let me see it.” She knelt beside Carla and touched her wand to the book. “Aparecium.” A light glow emitted, then faded. Everyone stared as faint white writing appeared on the current page.

Dipper gasped. “How did you do that?”

“Invisible ink…” Dipper took the book and excitedly flipped the pages. “I don’t believe it! It’s a whole bunch of mysteries I didn’t even know about! So many more things to-”

“Yes, yes, Season 2 was a hoot, flip back to the Gibberish Rock!” MaKayla demanded.

“R-Right, right.” Dipper hurriedly flipped to said page. “Yes, there’s writing! ‘I discovered this rock when I was in Germany, doing research for a company. I visited a local art gallery and found this rock in its basement. I tried to translate the language to the best of my abilities, but no luck.’ There’s also a code—Mabel, write this down: 9-6 / 25-15-21 / 23-1-14-20 / 8-5-12-16 / 1-19-11 / 13-1-18-25. We’ll decode that later.”

“So the rock isn’t here.” MaKayla said with disappointment. “It was just research.”

“No, come on, there has to be something!” Dipper flipped more pages and skimmed the invisible ink. “AHA!!” He startled them with his sudden outburst. “Lookathis!” He showed them a drawing of a pyramid, with similar writing as the Gibberish Rock. It was made with invisible ink. “‘I discovered this in one of the dimensions. Its stone and symbols are very similar to the cube from my world. There is definitely a connection. I want to continue researching, but using the machine too much is very risky. I wonder if he would know anything’… Who?”

“What machine is he talking about?” Cheren asked.
“I think it’s this.” Dipper flipped to the blueprint page. “I never found out what this was, but I assumed it’s part of a design for some… alien machine.” There was invisible ink. “At last, I found the Original Worlds!”

“I’ve seen just about enough.” Cheren stated. “Dipper, take us to this secret bunker you told me about.”

“I wonder if this has to do with the gravity fails!” Wendy said excitedly. “Carla, we have to check it out!”

“What if Dr. Facilier is expecting us, we can’t spend too long.”

“You know, she kinda showed us the invisible ink.” MaKayla noted. “Who says a little magic can’t be helpful?”

“Yeah, Carla, it’ll be fun! I’m sure Mister Facilier wouldn’t mind.”

“Perfect.” Cheren smirked confidently. “We’re cracking the mystery behind these rocks today!”

“Who are these girls again?” Dipper asked.

“MaKayla, from Sector IC.” The timebender responded.

“My name’s Wendy.” The mage bowed. “This is my cat, Carla.”

“Um, no offense, but we kind of already know a Wendy.” Dipper said. “So I’m gonna call you… Uhhhh…”

“BLUE GIRL!” Mabel shouted.

“Yeah, that’s it! Blue Girl!” Dipper agreed. “Is that okay?”

“Um… I guess so.” Wendy looked down and shifted her feet.

Cheren touched her shoulder and passed a smile. “I’ll call you Wendy.”

The girl flushed. “Heh heh heh.”

“You can call ME Grenda!” Grenda popped up between Cheren and Wendy, grinning at him. “Cutiiiieee.”

Cheren sweatdropped, looking fearfully. “O-Okay, sure.”

“Boy, you’re so SWEATY!” Grenda grabbed Cheren in a bone-crushing hug. “I like sweaty guys with glasses. We should call each other and talk about our sweatglands!”

“EW, NO!”

“Congratulations, Cheren, you got your eleventeenth girlfriend!” MaKayla smiled.

“Wow! That’s more crushes than Mabel.” Dipper remarked.

“I demand to see Cheren’s Romance Book!” Mabel shouted.

Cheren shook his head and pushed away from Grenda. “Look, just take us to this bunker!”

“Candy, Grenda, hold the fort.” Dipper ordered as they piled out. “We’ll call you in case we run “Oh-ho, that’s his excuse.” Grenda eye-rolled.

“Want to look at Dipper’s Internet history?” Candy smiled.

“Hot dog!” Grenda perked.

The band of kids headed downstairs and to the exit, passing an old man with a muscular body, black tux, and square glasses, who was stacking items on shelves. “Bye Grunkle Stan, we’re going to investigate a secret bunker for clues about the Apocalypse!” Dipper told him quickly.

“Oh, okay, kids, be back by dinner!” He didn’t look at them, and the kids shut the door on the way out. “Wait… What?”

The Pines Twins led the group not too far away from the shack, to a seemingly ordinary pine tree. “Me and Mabel were playing Sit-on-the-Pinecones, and when she grabbed that branch up there, this secret stairway opened.”

“For the record, I won the contest.” Mabel grinned. “Now stand aside, kids. I’ll flip that switch with my-” She whipped out her signature device, “GRAPPLING HOOK!”

“Won’t it be easier for me to fly up and-” Carla said.

“Too late, my Mabel urges are acting!” The Pines sister shot the grappler up, bounced off the lever-branch, and “OW!” hit Dipper’s head.

The ground shook slightly as the space around the tree sunk down. Wooden plank stairs popped out of the side in spiral fashion, leading into a passage. Dipper switched on his flashlight and led the way down. (Play “Dungeon 5” from Ib.)

Act 2: The Author’s Bunker

The group wandered into an abandoned laboratory, with dust-covered knick-knacks, opened food cans, and waste drums. “This is the desk I found that laptop.” Dipper indicated. “And we found a tunnel through there.” He pointed at a sealed hatch with a turnable wheel.

“I wonder what all these things do?” Wendy asked, taking a ray gun-like device and studying it.

“It may not be worth finding out, don’t touch those.” Carla told her.

“Imagine how much Grunkle Stan could make for this.” Mabel thought aloud, tapping a spider in a corner. She gasped with an idea, “Maybe HE’S the author!”

“Heheh, sure, Mabel. …?” While examining the desk, Dipper discovered a small slip of paper behind the back-right leg, against the wall. He picked it up and read the little writing. “I knew this was a bad idea. I trusted him, but he lied to me. I need to escape someplace where he can’t find me, but I won’t be able to come back. I must hide the journals someplace safe and sever connections with my family. To my son, Ruford, if you find this, know that I love you. I know your power will be a great gift to everyone.’ …Well-p, I am officially scared out of my wits.” Dipper balled the paper and flicked it under the table.

“Look, we won’t find anything unless we keep going.” Cheren said impatiently, standing by the tunnel.
“Yeah.” Dipper held the flashlight against his shoulder while skimming the journal, following Cheren, who crawled into the tunnel first. “Cheren, wait!” Dipper stopped him. “This is a pipe maze. We have to follow a specific path or we’ll keep going in circles.” The specific path was highlighted with white ink.

They were in a small room in which the floor, walls, and ceiling were made up of tiles, all with strange symbols. “I get the feeling we’ll need to touch certain ones.” MaKayla said. “We shouldn’t move until we’re sure-”

“W-Whoa!” Wendy stumbled after climbing out of the tunnel, stepping on a panel that pressed down. The tunnel sealed, and one at a time, the panels began to rise from the structure, threatening to crush them.

Dipper hurriedly flipped the pages, finding one with these same symbols, though some were highlighted by white ink. “Quick, press these buttons!” Carla saw one on the ceiling, she flew up, nimbly dodged the rising panels, and pressed. Cheren saw one across the room, he shot his Hookshot to press it. MaKayla saw a symbol on the floor to her right, nearly blocked by rising panels, she crawled underneath with her skinny form, pressed it, and escaped. Mabel frantically hopped around the panels and saw it in a corner, “Got it!” She pressed, returned to her friends, and they barely escaped through an opened passage.

The operatives gasped for breath, seeing the panels completely clutter the room. Worried, Dipper phoned his wristwatch, “Candy, Grenda. Can you guys hear me?”

Candy’s image was staticky. “Yah, Dipper, is something wrong?”

“Sigh, good, we still have reception. … Barely. W-We’re fine, but if we don’t call in an hour, come with back-up. Hopefully there’s another way out.” Transmission ended. Dipper got his flashlight and journal, “Hokay, let’s keep going.”

They walked down a stairway into a vast, underground cavern, where a still river lay. The stairs let off on a small islet with spider webs and stalagmites. Mabel discovered a code engraved on a stalagmite: 1-14 / 1-18-20-8-19-20 / 13-21-19-20 / 3-18-4-1-20-5. An arrow sign read Switch and pointed down a left cavern. However, there was no way to cross the river. “I’ll go look for it.” Wendy offered. “Step aside, you guys.” She blasted twin air blasts behind her and raced across the river at super speed, sidestepping to dodge falling stalactites and finding a tall island at the end. She grinded up and around the rails leading up it, suddenly stopping herself before she went off the edge. She stepped on a switch and raced back to her friends, finding that a pathway of barrels floated up from the water.

“Nice job.” Cheren smiled at her, and Wendy blushed before joining her friends over the barrels. They reached another tall island pillar and climbed its rugged side. Once on top, they overlooked a trio of floating platforms, which had bladed wings spiraling around and around. MaKayla tossed Time Bombs to slow their speed, making it safer to jump, but good timing still helped them. There was nothing between this current platform and the other, except for the big swinging axes. Mabel aimed her grappling hook, waited for each axe to be away, then fired, grabbing a stalagmite on that ledge to pull herself over. She pulled a lever, forcing the axes to stop, and the kids were able to hop across them.

They then had to sidle across a thin ledge between close walls, still very high above the river. Dipper poked Cheren and showed him the journal. An ordinary line had highlighted white marks, possibly indicating the parts of this ledge that are safe to stand on. Dipper memorized the pattern, so he jumped the first chunk of the ledge and confirmed its solidity; he almost fell, so Carla flew in front and kept him on. He jumped or sidled his way across the ledge, and the others mimicked the action; though since Wendy was a bit more clumsy, Carla held her hands and floated to keep the blue-haired steady.

“Anyone starting to wonder how the Author got through all this?” Dipper asked as they wandered into a dark hallway, using his flashlight. They were in a decaying library of sorts, the shelves were filled with many old books. Whether they were for the Author’s research or for collection, they couldn’t say. Cheren decided to take a dark-pink book off a shelf and read its contents.

The … of Making Pa…ies To a …Sick Child’s … Parents … Dependence

The ink was much too smeared, so he put the book back. Mabel pulled out a red book, then noticed a 14 on the wall behind it. She pulled the rest down to unveil the new code. 6-15-18 / 14-15-23 / 8-5 / 19-12-5-5-16-19. “I wonder if he had any books on the Apocalypse.” MaKayla said, skimming the faded titles.

“This practically is the Apocalypse.” Dipper remarked somberly.

The earth began shaking, they felt their bodies lift off the ground for a few seconds. “I really felt it that time!” MaKayla rose her voice. “I feel a powerful source of energy down this cave. This way.” She eagerly ran forward first, Dipper aimed the flashlight her direction as they all hurried after. The further they went into its depths, the more they hoped they would find a way out soon.

In the center of this dungeon, a short boy with a blue tuxedo and huge white pompadour carefully set the blue energy cube, known as the Tesseract, into a slot. He closed the hatch, flipped a few mini switches on the panel, and two tubes of energy sparked to life. A triangular machine with a hole in its center glowed to life, ready to channel its power into the center. Li’l Gideon pulled off his goggles to look. “Is it workin’?”

Bill Cipher, the golden, one-eyed intangible triangle, rubbed his nonexistent chin. “Yep, I think it is.”

“There! I helped you fixed your machine, Demon!” Gideon yelled demandingly. “Now you have to help me!”

“Relax, kid, a deal’s a deal. But there’s something I wanna do with this, first. Our guests should be arriving right about… NOW!” He threw his attention to the entrance, when the operatives rushed in.

“Well well well, if it isn’t my favorite saps, Dipper and Mabel Pines!” The twins glared at Bill’s comment. “And who are these, some friends of yours? Ahh, yes: Cheren Uno, MaKayla King, Wendy Marvell, and of course, Charle!”

“How do you know our names?” Cheren glared.

“Please, anybody can figure out THOSE names. I happen to know lots of things! LOTS OF THINGS.” His voice turned deep and malicious, his body displaying images of Malladus, the World Leaders, and a black dragon. Bill resumed to normal and spoke, “Very nice of you twerps to join us this evening. I was a bit afraid when Dipper started snooping around this bunker. Thankfully, he couldn’t get far in without you bunch.”

Cheren drew his sword, “What kind of creature are you?!”

“I am BILL CIPHER!” The triangle projected a wheel behind him, with many symbols. “One of the Six Demon Saints! Master and creator of dreams, keeper of secrets, and knower of knowledge! And this is my little sidekick, Li’l Gideon.”

“I AM NOT your sidekick!” Gideon screamed. “I specifically called you back to help with Master President’s plan!”

“Master President?” Cheren questioned.

“What’re you up to, Gideon? How did you get out of prison?” Dipper demanded.

“You’d love to know that, wouldn’t you?” Gideon smirked. “Well, for your information, my bail was paid by a special ‘friend’, you might say. In return, he wanted me to steal Journal 2 back and get in contact with this one-eyed demon.”

“In return, Gideon’s been helping me handsomely.” Bill followed. “Thanks to his resources, he was able to find the right material to fix the machine you see behind me. The only thing missing was the perfect power core to function such a device. Luckily, a recently-departed god has provided me just what I needed!!”

“And what does this machine-of-the-hour do?” MaKayla asked.

“I’m glad you asked, Miss Thinks-She-Knows-Everything. My friends, you are looking at the greatest, and only worthwhile achievement the Author of those journals has created. Behold, the Multiverse Portal!”

“Dun-dun-duuuuuun!” Mabel sang.

“A Multiverse Portal?” Carla questioned.

“And why would you want something like this?”

“Yes, Bill. Wah DID Ah have to fix this for you?” Gideon asked.

“Haven’t you ever wished to travel the multiverses? To see what other worlds are like compared to our own? I know the Author sure did!” Bill’s eye half-closed in a giddy fashion. “That’s why he asked me to help him build this machine to begin with! He wrote all about me in his journals. Yup, there’s no person you can trust greater than Bill Cipher! And if you still doubt this wonder, how about we just SHOW YOU. Turn it on, Gideon!”
The white-haired child approached a large lever in the corner. “Hold on a second!” Carla spoke up. “A machine that transports to multiple dimensions can’t just do so willy-nilly. A device of this magnitude has to burn and consume terrific amounts of energy! This town is already facing gravity distortions, that’s just a small issue. We’re talking about tearing through our very dimension, maybe even beyond! A machine like this could cause very hazardous effects for the Space-Time Continuum.”

Cheren and Wendy ran to attack Gideon, but the boy stretched a hand forward, caught them in a psychic grip, and blew them back. “Oh yes, Gideon’s a psychicbender. Did you know that?” Bill remarked.

MaKayla froze Gideon in time and attempted to run and kick him, but Bill flew in her path and stared with his wide single eye.

A woman was stabbed in the heart, and her blood soaked the floor of the classroom. Four-year-old MaKayla stared with horror.

MaKayla fell to her knees, and Gideon blasted her to the others with psychic. The white-haired child shook and channeled his power, causing the ground beneath the operatives to crumble. "WAAAAAAAAHHHHH!!" They fell in. With that, Gideon used psychic to pull the large lever. The triangular machine sparked as a vortex formed within the center.

The kids hit the ground in the bottom of a huge underground chamber. A chasm was on the sides around this floor. “Ouch. Is everyone okay?” Cheren asked.

“I’ve survived worse.” Dipper said, wiping blood from his nose. “We’ve gotta get back up there and stop that machine! Who knows what Bill’s planning to do with it?”

“Wwendy, use a Shrinking Spell on everyone and I can carry you up.” Carla said.

“Hahahahahahaha!” Li’l Gideon hovered above them using his power. “Y’all aren’t getting out of here that easy! My other friend will see to that!” Gideon pulled out a dog whistle and blew.

“AAAAAHHH!” Carla clamped her ears shut and fell, but none of the others were effected.

They all heard a distant cry that sounded like it belonged to an overgrown bug. Their suspicions were true, for a huge, alien-like creature with slimy white skin and a round mouth crawled through the hole above, and hopped to the floor. Its left arm was bulkier than its right, and it stood upright on four legs. “What kind of creature is that?” Dipper asked.

“Friends, I’d like you to meet the Shape Shifter.” Bill Cipher announced, floating beside Gideon. “I named him Glen. He used to go with the Author on his adventures, and he’s seen many a monster. How about I show him a few more?” He flew in front of the creature, and Bill’s body displayed brief images of several familiar monsters. Glen demonstrated his power by changing into Mukak, Dodongo Dragon, Xitsflicks, and then Grenda.

“WAAAAAAH!” Mabel cowered behind Dipper. “It’s hideous!!”

“Um, Mabel? …” Dipper wanted to question her judgment.
“Go ahead, Glen!” Gideon cheered. “Show these mouth-breathers who’s boss!”

“What ever you say, Ice Cream Topping!” Glen said with Grenda’s voice. (Play “Desire for All That Is Lost” from Kingdom Hearts II!)

Boss fight: Glen

“Reducio!” Wendy cast the Shrink Spell, but Glen morphed into Army Dillo and bounced it upward with his armored shell.

“Whoa!” Gideon dodged the blast. Glen came out of his shell and laughed at the operatives. Still in armadillo form, Glen curled into the metal shell and rolled at the kids, who all jumped aside except for MaKayla. The timebender slowed the giant wheel in time, nearly stopping it in place, though it threatened to push her off the edge. Wendy blew a cyclone from her mouth and successfully knocked it down, but Glen transformed into a glob of water and slithered away, emerging to be Chaos 6. The overgrown water insect lashed its axe tail at the lot while they dodged, until Mabel grabbed ahold and let it lift her above. She took out some Ice Candy and threw it into the liquid body, freezing it solid. Cheren blasted M.A.R.B.L.E.s and blew the creature to smithereens.

“Pull yerself together!” Gideon demanded, and the melted ice droplets slithered to a center and reformed the beast, who transformed into Crackjack, the giant psychotic clown jack-in-the-box. The kids scattered again as the monster hopped toward Dipper, grinning madly and trying to stab the boy with its knife. Cheren ran in front of the creature and shot his Hookshots into its mouth. Glen chomped his teeth on the chains, keeping them inside, but Cheren passed the items to Wendy, who boosted away and caused the jack-in-the-box to topple over. She readied to cast a spell at Glen’s head, but was caught in a psychic grip and thrown backward.

“Fine! ‘Guess I need to help, too.” Gideon decided, taking land on Glen’s back when the creature turned into Icipede. The Child Psychic held the operatives in place while Glen crawled around to snap them in his claws, Cheren used his Hookshots to rescue Dipper and MaKayla. He then drew his bow and launched Fire Arrows to melt its various ice chunks, so the creature transformed into Dogadon and flew high in the air. The dragon rammed into the cave’s walls and caused boulders to fall, which Gideon grabbed with his psychic to chuck at the heroes. MaKayla stopped the boulders with her timebending and quickly Rewinded them back, but the Dogadon form changed its front into Army Dillo’s shield, protecting himself while the dragonfly wings remained in flight.

“He can merge multiple forms at once?” Cheren observed.

“I have an idea!” Dipper said. “MaKayla, get ready to slow them, Carla, fly up from behind.” He ran away from the others and yelled, “HEY, GIDEON! How many of those things can you throw?!”

“Enough to finally squash YOU!” Gideon grabbed multiple boulders with psychic and chucked them consecutively.

“NOW!” Dipper yelled, MaKayla slowed the boulders in time, allowing Dipper to jump his way up. Gideon clutched the boy in psychic, but Carla flew up behind and rammed Gideon in the back, knocking him on his front. Dipper was released, so he jumped to the Dogadon’s face, the dragonfly shaking furiously, but the action caused Gideon to lose his balance and plummet toward the abyss. He saved himself by floating and landed on the ground, but Dipper dropped from Glen and landed on the Child Psychic, wrestling with him. Gideon threw him off, then blew his whistle to sick Glen on Cheren, in the form of a Moldorm.
“Corpus levitas Diablo Daminium Mondo Vicium!” Gideon read aloud from Journal 2, summoning a group of Redeads from the earth. MaKayla kicked Glen off of Cheren, then helped freeze the zombies in time while the swordsman sliced them up. He flinched and dodged aside when Glen leapt back up in the form of Goht, the giant robotic goat whom Cheren recalled was destroyed by Kyurem, back in Termina. The shape-shifter charged an energy beam in its horns and blistered at them, missing and striking a wall over the chasm, unveiling a secret tunnel. The Goht leaped into the tunnel while Mabel shot her grappling hook onto its horn. “WHOOOA!” It didn’t serve her much, for she was flapping behind Goht while holding the device.

“Mabel!” Dipper cried.

“The fewer, the better!” Gideon stated, grabbing a zombie’s remains and chucking at Dipper and Kayla.

The tunnel had several bumps and curved a lot, and the Goht kicked boulders toward Wendy, forcing her to sidestep and dodge. The shape-shifter eventually ran off a ledge, into a small lake. “MABEL!” Wendy yelled when the girl was pulled in as well.

A patch of bubbles brewed on the lake’s surface, and Wendy’s heart raced with anticipation, hoping Mabel was okay. “RAAAAAAAHHHHH!” Glen transformed into the Kraken, its tentacles swinging everywhere. Mabel hung by the grappling hook, swaying to and fro from the demon’s head. The Kraken smashed tentacles down, but Wendy ran left and raced along the wall. The Kraken kept trying to stab tentacles in the wall, Wendy sidestepped and swiftly avoided, and as her speed increased, she moved higher up the wall. When she was high enough above the Kraken’s head, the minute Mabel was swung above it, Wendy squatted, kicked off the wall with great force, and grabbed Mabel before the demon could snap its teeth.

Glen turned into Crazy Dillo and chased the girls through the tunnel. Wendy ran faster and held tight to Mabel, pulling her by the sleeve, staying inches ahead of the spike-shelled monster.

Gideon hovered in the air and encased himself in a bubble, bouncing around forcefully to crush Dipper, MaKayla, and Cheren. When he attempts to smash the latter again, Cheren holds up his Mirror Shield, causing Gideon to bounce suddenly to the curved ceiling, then against the wall before he flies toward Dipper, his bubble deactivated. The male Pines readies his fist and socks Gideon in the cheek, knocking on his back.

“You either help me or stay outta this, Triangle!” Gideon shouted. He shone blue and flew at Dipper, pushing him away, then when Cheren swung his sword down, Gideon blocked it with psychic and pushed the leader back. MaKayla rolled forward and dealt several quick jabs against his stomach before kicking Gideon away. They looked when Wendy leapt back in from the tunnel, holding Mabel by the sleeve, and Glen in the form of Crazy Dillo spiraled after them, creating an explosion of dust after hitting the ground.

Wendy blew the smoke away as they all searched frantically for the shape-shifter. “Huh?” two voices said simultaneously. Two Dippers stared at each other. “Aw, man! Not this bit again!”

“Which one is the REAL Dipper?” Mabel exclaimed.

“I am!” Dipper said.
“No, I am!” Dipper contradicted.

“Why you-!” Naturally, both started to fight.

“I’m not through, yet!” Gideon lit with bright blue, raising Cheren, Wendy, and MaKayla in the air. Mabel looked between the Dippers and Gideon, panicking, but noticed that Carla had snuck behind the psychic.

“Carla! Gideon’s ticklish!”

“What?” Gideon looked at her, confused. Seizing the chance, Carla stuck her paws under Gideon’s arms and began tickling. “Hahahaha! HAH HA ha ha ha! HAAAAAAA HAHAHAHAHAHAHA! HAHAHAHAHAHA—AAAAAH HAH HAH HAH HAH HAH HAH!” His mouth was foaming.

His hostages were released, and Mabel took the chance to take Gideon’s whistle, throwing it in the chasm, as well as Journal 2. She flipped through its pages hurriedly. “Look! It says its main form is weak against fire!”

“But which one is it?!” Cheren yelled, holding his sword ready as he watched the Dippers.

“Ooh, I know! Show us your birthmark!” Mabel beamed.

“Birthmark, what birthmark?” a Dipper asked.

“She means this one!” Dipper held up the hair blocking his forehead, revealing the Big Dipper mark.

“HEEE-YAH!” Cheren spun and stabbed his sword into the other Dipper. Glen made its horrendous bug-like cry, transforming into Ripto, Dracula, a blue-skinned girl, screaming with their voices for that time, then reverted to his slimy white form, oozing green blood. Cheren grabbed his bow, aimed a Fire Arrow, and loosed.

“Engorgio!” Wendy hit the arrow with a spell, increasing its size, and swallowing the creature in bright flames. The monster cried in the most agonizing pain, stumbling backwards and falling into the abyss. Li’l Gideon was still cracking up under Carla’s tickle torture, so MaKayla made the final blow and stomped him in the stomach, knocking the laugh-sick boy unconscious. (End song.)

“All RIGHT!” Dipper exclaimed, hugging Mabel tight. “We have Journal #2!”

“We can’t celebrate now, we have to stop that machine!” Carla reminded.

“Right!” Wendy nodded seriously. “Everyone, stand together.” They all stood in a bunch as Wendy held her wand above. “Reducio!” They were all zapped to a small size, leaving Carla to pick them up and fly them to the hole they fell in through.

Once on solid ground, Wendy re-expanded them all, and MaKayla used her timebending to repair the hole into solid ground again. “It’s too late, brats!” Bill Cipher declared. The cave was quaking furiously as the Multiverse Portal was spiraling its rainbowy colors. “The portal is almost at 100% capacity! A gateway to endless universes will be mine to use as I please!”

“Not if we shut it down, first!” Wendy ran forward.
“Wendy, wait, it might ex-” MaKayla tried to chase her.

A quick, but sudden energy pulse bursted from the machine, knocking them all down. When Wendy and MaKayla recovered, the girls found their selves floating off the ground, towards the spiraling vortex. “MAKAYLA!” Cheren screamed.

“WENDY!” Carla yelled.

MaKayla was about to fly in first, Wendy reached and grabbed her hand, Cheren jumped and grabbed Wendy’s other hand. The Supreme Leader held tight and struggled to pull back. Dipper grabbed and pulled Cheren, followed by Mabel, and Carla in the very back. “NNNN!” Gideon teleported back into the room and blasted them with psychic. The line of friends was forced to release.

“WAAAAAH!” MaKayla and Wendy vanished into the portal.

“MAKAYLA!” “WENDY!” their friends cried again.

The Transportifier began sparking again, the earth quaking at the force of its power. The vortex quickly shrank into nothingness, all of the lights disabled, and the machine was shut down completely. “Yuh-oh… this is problematic.” Bill said.

“Whaddyou MEAN ‘problematic’?!?” Gideon shouted.

“I thought I memorized the blueprint, but the Author must’ve done something. It didn’t stay on as long as it used to.”

“I’m TIRED of working on this thing!! We’ve gotta get back to Washington NOW!”

“Don’t worry, Gideon, we’ve done enough for today.” Bill told him calmly. “I think our friends got a worthy demonstration.”

“What did you DO to them?!” Carla demanded. “Where’s Wendy?!”

“If my calculations are correct, your friends have been zapped to another dimension! What dimension specifically, I can’t say. But I’m afraid you won’t be SEEING THEM anytime soon. Not until this machine is fixed.”

Cheren whipped his sword out, “BRING THEM BACK RIGHT NOW!”

“Sorry, kid, but that’s beyond my power at the moment!” Bill said perkily. “But don’t worry, I’m sure your friends will survive… as long as they make it through the Dimensional Byway, ha ha haAAA! I’d love to stay and mess with you more, but fighting would be pointless. You can’t destroy me, and I don’t want to destroy you. YET. See you down the road.” A wall of sapphire flames sprouted behind the spirit. “Oh, and remember: Reality is an illusion, we’re all figments of a fanfiction writer’s mind, watch lots of football, bye!” And in a blinding flash, Bill was gone. Gideon had vanished as well.

Carla solemnly approached the machine, staring at the barren portal. “Wendy…” She fell to her knees, her shiny brown eyes watering. “I knew we shouldn’t have come… Why don’t you listen to me, Child…”

Mabel came beside her and put a comforting hand on the kitten’s back. “I’m sorry, Carla. You know, whenever I’m upset, I talk to my pet, Waddles and pretend like he understands me. But since you’re an animal, maybe he could understand you for real.”
“Um… thank you, Mabel.” Both of them looked at the portal. Carla sighed and calmed herself. “To tell you the truth, I don’t know why I’m so attached to her. We only met a few months ago, but all that time, I’ve felt… indebted to Wendy. I feel like I’d sooner die for her than… than let anything happen.”

Cheren bore the same solemn look as he stared at the portal. He wasn’t personally close to MaKayla, but why shouldn’t he be concerned for all of his operatives the same way. “I’m sorry, Cheren.” Dipper told him sympathetically. “I wish there was something we could do.”

Cheren remembered something. “Your journal had blueprints to this machine, didn’t it?”

“Yes, but only part of it. We still need Journal 1. I’m not sure where it is.”

Carla stomped her paw and looked at them with pure austerity in her eyes. “Find the other journal as quickly as possible. If it tells us how to fix this machine, make it your Number One priority!”

“We’ll try our best, Carla, but I’m not even sure if the other journal is IN Gravity Falls.” Dipper replied. “The Author travelled to Germany, so the journal could be hidden in any.”

“Mister Cheren, you’re the commander of an army of children with access to a variety of technologies, according to Dr. Facilier.” Carla spoke matter-of-factly. “You should expend every available resource at your disposal to finding this other journal. Can you do that?”

Cheren didn’t want to admit that half of their treehouses were being taken over by apes. And nearly every other sector was unavailable, everyone was stressing and scrambling over the Apocalypse. …Cheren smiled promisingly and gave a thumbs-up. “You have my word. We’ll save both MaKayla AND Wendy. Promise.”

“Hold on, Dipper!” Mabel spoke up. “What about this laptop?” She pulled out the broken device.

“Mabel, of course!” Dipper spoke elatedly. “Maybe the Author left back-up blueprints on it, or something about the dimension they went to.”

“Huh? Actually, I was gonna say we beat the machine with this laptop and see if it comes on. But yeah, your stuff works!”

“It doesn’t actually look that broken.” Carla observed, walking closer. “If you had tools in the Mystery Shack, I could easily fix it myself.”

Dipper and Mabel’s wristwatches beeped. They answered and heard Candy’s French accent. “Dipper, Mabel, Teen Ninjas have appeared in the forest! They could be looking for you!”

“What? What could they want?” Dipper panicked.

“You don’t think Gideon called them, do you?” Mabel asked.

“If he did, they might be able to find this bunker.”

Dipper quickly searched Journal 3, finding a picture of the tree that hid the secret bunker. The bunker’s secret entrance was depicted with invisible ink, and Dipper noticed a tiny code in the top-left corner, with the same ink. “Cheren, see if this can work: 1017118.”
Cheren inputted the numbers, then pushed Enter. A secret door with a ladder unveiled beside the terminal. “It worked! You guys stay down here, I can take care of the ninjas.”

He climbed the ladder out of a secret hatch in the woods that was concealed under some bushes. He closed it and quickly hurried through the forest, finding a small band of Teen Ninjas flying around the trees on jetshoes. “Dude, we looked everywhere. I don’t see any operatives.” A teen with long orange hair and a lumberjack hat said. “I think Gideon was just trying to punk us. You know how brats are.”

Cheren did know a few Wendys as operatives, but none personally, so he sort of forgot at first: Wendy Corduroy was a TND operative from Sector O, who was entrusted with protecting Sector GF’s secret. But it looks like she had to keep her cover when the ninjas were called to Gravity Falls. Still, for the sake of differentiating, he would call her Corduroy. “Guess again, Wendell.” A nearby, red-haired teen said (hey, that name works, too). “I’m sensing a powerful body of chi nearby! It’s, sniff sniff, kind of hot! It’s over… there!” Karin pointed giddily in Cheren’s direction.

The white-haired half-Fishman, Suigetsu Hozuki hovered above. “Well, isn’t this a find, the Supreme Leader out for a little stroll.”

“Doing stuff that’s none of your business!!” Karin retorted hotly.

“Our boss sent us here to help one of his benefactors.” Suigetsu said, holding his own large sword. “I guess it was true. The same kid who attacked the Corporate Presidents hasn’t gotten his fill. I guess we better do somethin’.” He shot down at Cheren and swung his sword, Cheren clashed back and attempted to slice Suigetsu, but he flew up.

“HAAAAAH!” Karin shot down for some fast-pace punches and kicks, Cheren took blows before jumping away and throwing his Bananarang, but the girl flew up and dodged, then avoided Cheren’s arrows with her Observation Haki. Before he knew it, Cheren was encased inside a bubble of water that originated from Suigetsu’s water-made arms.

“Whoa, dude, I thought we were gonna capture ‘em, not drown!” Corduroy said with concern.

“That was before we found out this kid was Supreme Leader! This kid’s the worst troublemaker of all of them. And the minute we silence him in a water grave,” Cheren was furiously struggling to escape the water, “we’ll be in for the promotion of a lifetime.”

Suigetsu’s water suddenly boiled, so he quickly released to avoid evaporating. Cheren was lit on fire, having gone into Demon State. Suigetsu growled and lashed arms-made-into-Water Whips at him, but Cheren grabbed them both and made them bubble, “Aaah!” forcing Suigetsu to pull away. He whipped his attention to Karin, zipped up, and slashed her armor to pieces, letting her hit the ground.

“Tagging out, man!” Corduroy cried, retreating. A swarm of Teen Ninjas revealed their selves from behind the pine trees, narrowing their sights on the flaming child of anger. They flew at him, Cheren raised his sword as it shone with vicious flames—and everything stopped.

Cheren’s fire vanished, his anger replaced with confusion. Everything had stopped, from the flapping butterflies to the jetshoes’ engines. Everything fell dead quiet. Was this another one of Gravity Falls’ mysteries?

Cheren heard crunching in the grass—another sound, and turned around. A familiar man in a purple cape, pale skin under brown hair, and a blue shirt with a clock on it, held a scepter with a clock for a head. “Mr. King?” Cheren spoke.

Jagar held a finger by his mouth, gesturing a ‘shush’. He held his cape open and reached to his back pocket. He pulled out a brown book, with a golden, six-fingered hand icon with a “1” on it.

“Journal #1…” Cheren gazed with shock. “Why would you have-"

“I’ll explain why later.” Jagar said calmly. “Let’s entrust this to your friends so they can repair that machine and bring my daughter back.” He calmly approached Cheren and gave him the journal. “I’ll erase all these teens’ memories so they’ll forget why they came.” He turned around and walked away. “Afterward, I’d like you to come back to my house. I want to discuss something with you.”

“Wh…What?”

“I need to explain to you… why we can’t let the Twenty Keys come together.”

Washington; White House

“Wah, Little Gideon, it’s a pleasure to see you again.” U.S. President McGarfield swerved his chair around, smiling charmingly at his miniscule partner, who was almost totally hidden behind his office desk. “I hope you didn’t run into any ‘problems’ in that there Gravity Falls.”

“Would wittle old me wun into any problems?” Gideon spoke with an adorable face. “Whatever would you mean, Master President?”

“Nothin’ of the sort.” James brushed the air. “So I trust that our special ‘friend’ is cooperating?”

“Behavin’ like a girl in ballet class. Ah must say I had mixed feelings about working with Bill again, but he’s been mighty fine help. This Author was tellin’ the truth about him. There ain’t no one you can trust better than Bill Cipher!”

Close to the White House was President James’ Elementary School for the Seriously Uneducated. It was the quietest, most peaceful school you would ever find in the world, because all of the children were asleep. They were, however, paying close attention in class, which took place entirely in the Subconscious. Everyone looked half-awake, the dimension was entirely black-and-white, and wobbly. There was only one teacher in the entire school.

“Great job so far, class.” Bill Cipher spoke, holding his golden cane in both hands. “But let’s try it ONE more time. Repeat after me: Ahem. ‘The World Government is our friend.’”

“The World Government is our friend.” They droned.

“‘We can live in bliss under the Government’s watchful eye.’”

“We can live in bliss under the Government’s watchful eye.”

“‘America is the Government’s example. We must stand to be the greatest country.’”

“Amer*ica is the Government’s example. We must stand to be the greatest country.*”

“‘The New World Order should not be feared. All hail the New World Order.’” Bill’s eye was peering through their souls.

“The New World Order should not be feared. All hail the New World Order.”

Act B-3: The Dimensional Byway

“WHOOOOAAAA!” Wendy found herself whirling through a bright, blue dimension; it looked like a tunnel of water, displaying all sorts of surreal images.

“I GOT YA!” MaKayla grabbed Wendy’s arm as she grinded on an energy rail, flipping around it as she threw Wendy to another rail.

“Aaaah!” Wendy naturally grinded along, keeping stable as she viewed around the dimensional tunnel. “Wh-Wh-Where are we?!”

“The Dimensional Byway! Just stay on the path and hopefully we’ll be safe. Otherwise, we could end up anywhere. Let’s try and stick together!”

Their rails were ending, leading to a region where scattered rail parts looped around the tunnel’s surface, so the girls made careful leaps across these rails before landing on a single, longer one. The rail divided in a fork, the girls each taking their own path as either rail mirrored the other on their opposite surface. Wendy and Kayla were upside-down to each other—when the rails reached their end, the girls jumped, kicked off each other, landed on a rail segment, and repeated the process before the two rails intertwined.

Wendy and Kayla spiraled down a narrow, snaky tunnel, then their rails turned straight and unwind as MaKayla grinded several feet lower than Wendy’s rail. Kayla shot a Chrono Beam to hit a switch on her right, which turned a curve in Wendy’s rail to face straight and keep her going. Wendy was coming to a group of propellers that were lifting rail parts, and she had to jump and bounce each one so they lowered down to Kayla’s rail, preventing her from riding off. Both rails became level with one-another as the two girls rode side-by-side.

They had been riding through a vast region of the Dimensional Byway, and bubbles depicting a variety of symbols floated everywhere. “Whoa… I think we’re in the Sea of Worlds.” Kayla said with awe.

“What’s that?” Wendy asked.

“This portal must cut deep within the Dimensional Plain. I wonder how far we’ll travel?”

The byway was growing brighter the deeper they went, forcing Wendy and Kayla to shield their eyes. “Uh-oh!” Kayla spoke up. “The byway’s becoming unstable! I feel a force pulling me the other way… WENDY!”

“KAYLA!” Both girls reached for and grabbed the other’s hands tight. Both felt a magnetic-like pull drawing them the opposite way, the light was shining brighter, they felt each other’s fingers slip from their grasp… “WAAAH!” Inevitably, both were torn away.

Wendy was sent zipping down an alternate tunnel, hurriedly jumping scattered rails in order to stay on track. The tunnel’s direction curved upward, as did the rail, which twisted a few times before leading Wendy over a loop-di-loop. Wendy viewed the bubbles floating around: they depicted smiling and vibrant-looking people, like a girl with blonde hair, a girl with scarlet hair, a dark-haired boy with a cool smirk, a scowling guy with spiky black hair…

Wendy came to another region of scattered rails, in which some of them were more blue and see-through. When Wendy jumped on them, they immediately fell into the spatial abyss, so Wendy had to jump the next rail quickly. The last rail was reaching its end, so Wendy jumped and descended down the abyss, where the next rail was in sight. She felt the momentum increase as she fell, and it was gone so suddenly when she set foot on the rail. There was nothing else obstructing her path as the rail led her beyond the dimension. The realm ahead morphed into lovely, abstract flower designs, dizzying Wendy’s vision. Then, as she felt her very being stretch, the realm turned white. (End song.)

Unknown city…

“Nnnn…” MaKayla opened her eyes to a blue sky, with few clouds and a sun shining over her. When she sat up, she realized she was on the top of a skyscraper, overlooking a city with a river flowing through the center. “This place feels… familiar…”

Kayla heard a faint whoosh sound and looked to her left. A girl with raven-black hair, wearing a black robe, and strict purple eyes flew by. “Wait, I know her… She’s from the Spirit Kids Next Door…” Kayla remembered the adventure on Arendelle. “She’s… RUKIA!”

The spirit operative slowed to a halt at the sound of her name, turning to MaKayla with surprise. “Who’s…”

Unknown forest

Wendy woke up to leaves swaying above her softly. Sunlight poked through gaps in the trees and shone on her eyes. “Mmmm…” She groggily helped herself stand, exhausted after that journey. She felt around her eyes. “I lost my contacts again… Sigh, Mr. Facilier is going to be upset.”

She heard footsteps quickly trotting across the grass and whipped around. A familiar magenta-haired girl with blue eyes and pretty blue shirt and skirt came from around some trees and stopped at seeing her. “W…Wendy?”

Wendy gaped. “CHELIA!!” Without thinking, she ran at and threw her arms around the teen dancer.

“Waaah!” Chelia yelped, taken aback by the younger girl’s sudden actions. “W-Wendy, it’s nice to see you, too!” She smiled, blushing. “Geez…”

“Chelia, how did you escape??” Wendy looked up and showed the elder her tearing red eyes.

“Escape? From where?”

“From that World Leader!”

“World…?” Chelia looked more closely at her friend. “Wendy… why are your eyes red?”

“What?” Wendy let go of her, slightly offended. “They’ve… always been red.”

“Last I saw, they were brown.”

“That’s just my contacts; come on, Chelia, you know they’re actually red.”

“They… are?”

Silence fell between them. There was clear confusion on both of their faces. Why did they seem to know each other, but it felt like their first meeting all the same? “…Wendy, are you feeling well? Maybe you need someone to take you home.” Chelia took Wendy’s hand and began to lead her along.
“Home? Where’s that?”

“Come on, Wendy, don’t be silly!” Chelia said with a bright smile. “It’s Fairy Tail, of course!”

So yeah, almost all our favorite Gravity Falls hoo-ha. X) Here’s where this crossover takes a real Kingdom Hearts-ish turn. Next time, Wendy and Kayla explore these new and strange worlds.
Original Realms

Chapter Summary

In this strange world, Wendy Marvell goes to Fairy Tail, where the people seem to know her.

This is one of the chapters I’ve been most looking forward to. X) Atbash cryptogram at the end.

Chapter B-18: Original Realms

Portal Chamber

Carla flew around and studied every inch of the portal. There were a few sparking areas, but most of the machine looked properly taken care of. This shiny blue cube in one slot appeared to be a key power source, but Carla had no idea what it was. “So, uh… do you have a master’s in engineering or something?” Dipper asked, questioning the kitten’s technical knowledge.

Carla whipped around and outburst, “Well, at least I’m doing SOMETHING! Are you just going to stand around, because the more time we waste, the longer Wendy could be lost in some multi-dimensional subspace!”

“Okay, calm down! Look, the only way we’ll have any hope of understanding this portal is if we have the journals.” Dipper held up Journal 2 and flipped its pages. “But without the first one, it’s hopeless.”

“Dipper, look!” Mabel called after getting up from searching behind some barrels. “I found it!” She ran over.

“It…It can’t be.” Dipper gaped at the book in her hands. It had a six-fingered hand with a ‘1’.

“JOURNAL NUMBER ONE?!” He excitedly took the book and flipped through its pages. “I don’t believe it! W-Was it just lying around?!”

“I guess so.” Mabel shrugged.

“Th-Th-This is great!” Dipper opened to the pages depicting blueprints. He laid all three journals on the floor, aligning them to make the full blueprint. “Now we might be able to get it working again! Not only that, we can also figure out why the Author made it!”

“Let me see!” Carla flew over, landed in Dipper’s way, and stood over the blueprints. The corresponding pages depicted other parts of the machine. She took the books, flew over to these parts (such as the temperature dials, toxic waste chambers), and compared them to how the books read… “This isn’t right. A few things match up, but other parts are…” She found a page with an empty machine where it looked like something would go. “What is this?”

Dipper came over and looked at this design. “Another part to the portal? Maybe it’s around here some-” “WAAAAAH!” They heard Mabel screaming, followed by loud banging sounds. The two rushed back in to see Mabel fallen on her back, grappling hook extracted and attached to a metal rectangle. There was now an opening in the wall. “Uhh… I meant to do that?” Mabel said, unsure of herself.

The three entered the hidden chamber revealed by her. The empty machine that the journal depicted was standing before them. “This is it.” Dipper said as he and Carla approached it. “It looks like something goes here. But the journal doesn’t say.” He looked at the page.

Mabel picked up a bar light from a box and turned it on as it emitted a purple light. “Ha ha! Dipper, look!” Mabel shone it on herself. “Do I look _spooooky_?”

Mabel glanced down at the open journal. “Dipper, what’re those white lines?”

He and Carla looked at the journal. The purple light not only exposed the invisible ink, but the machine had a huge, gem-like thing in its chamber. “Is this what the Author used to see his own ink?” Carla thought aloud. “But what is that thing?”

“Wait… I recognize it.” Dipper said. “I saw it once when I visited the KND Museum. It’s the Master Emerald!”

“So can we use that emerald to power the portal?” Mabel asked.

“It appears to be the case.” Carla observed. “If you children know where it is, then I encourage you to get it!”

“You’re right!” Dipper nodded seriously. “We’ll get the others and bring that emerald ASAP! Don’t worry, Carla, we’ll save them before you know it!” He and Mabel ran off in a hurry.

Carla returned to the portal chamber and stared at the disabled device. Her little heart filled with worry. “Wendy… please be safe. …Oh…” Carla touched a paw to her forehead. “My head hurts for some reason… sigh, it’s probably nothing.”

Dimension “Fiore”

Chelia brought Wendy to the edge of the forest, standing atop a hill that overlooked a small town. “What’s this place?” Wendy asked.

“What’s Fiore?”

“The country we live in, of course!” Chelia giggled.

“I’ve never heard of…”

Chelia looked at Wendy with a questionable frown. She touched her friend’s forehead. “You must really feel sick… Hopefully, Fairy Tail will be able to help you.”

“You never told me what that is.”

“Ugh, it’s the guild you work at! Wendy, don’t you remember anything?”

“I remember you!”
“Yeah, but you have a weird story on how we met! Look, we’ll talk about this later, let’s just hop a train and get to Magnolia.”

“Do we need a train? ’Cause we can just run there.”

“Hmhm, hyou’d have to have pretty strong legs to run that far.”

“Yeah, but I’m pretty used to that.” With that, Wendy dashed down the hill, across the town, and Chelia only saw her as a strip of wind.

“WENDY, WAAAAAIIT!!” Chelia cried. Just as fast, Wendy came back in seconds. “When did you GET so fast??”

“I’ve always been fast!” Wendy chuckled. “I kind of thought you were, too.”

“Well, I’m not! I trip a lot, anyway! I admit it seems more efficient, but I can’t keep up with you.”

“It’s okay. I can just carry you like this.” Wendy aimed her wand and yelled, “Reducio!” She shrunk Chelia down to doll size.

“WAAAAAHHH!” The tiny screamed with high pitch. “Where did you learn to do this??”

“I think something’s wrong with your head, too!” Wendy chuckled, picking Chelia up and placing her partway under her dress collar. “Just tell me where to go and I’ll get there in a jiffy!”

“Sure, Wendy.” Chelia smiled confusedly. Boy, she seems really different. I wonder… is this the same Wendy? (Play “Camelot Castle” from Sonic and the Black Knight.)

Stage B-14: Homecoming Kingdom

Mission: Get to Fairy Tail!

Wendy raced down the hill, whooshing across the first village street and evasively dodging the townspeople, who as usual were whipping to face Wendy in surprise. She turned a left street, dodging the trees and jumping the small rivers that flowed in-between parts of the ground. “Wendy, be careful not to hit anything! I don’t wanna go squish!” Chelia yelled.

“I’m sorry, Chelia! I’ll be careful!” Wendy was reaching the edge of town, going up a road that was paved into a hill.

“Wendy, you’re going the wrong way! The train tracks are the other way!”

“Darn it!” Wendy made a loop around a forest path, coming back to town and hitting some Spring Pads that bounced her onto the roofs. Bird-Knights appeared, avians made of dark energy and wearing knight helmets. Wendy cast spells to knock some away, but she also used them to bounce over large gaps between buildings. After making it across the town, Wendy landed at the base of a forest hill, and dashed up as she sidestepped the Spear-Knights (knights wielding long jousting lances and made of the same dark matter).

Wendy found the train tracks, and on Chelia’s instruction, she hopped on and grinded leftward, blowing air behind her to move faster as usual. Shield-Knights sprouted up to thwart her progress, so Wendy had to jump between the twin rails to get around them. The tracks seemed to be steadily curving right, so the forest trees made it impossible to see ahead of them. “We’re about to reach Clover...
“WAAAAAAHH!” Caught completely off guard by the huge train, Wendy instinctively jumped off on her left. They were over Clover Canyon, but she thankfully landed on a cliff path, running down, jumping off the end, and using airbending to kick off a ledge. She flew across the chasm toward a pillar holding the train bridge, kicked off to another ledge, and kicked again before landing on a ground. The canyon was very deep and vast, and the chasm was nothing but fog. “You know, Wendy, some people don’t think this canyon even has a bottom.” Chelia smirked.

“Gulp. I better not fall.” Eye-Knights surrounded Wendy, but she shot them down with quick blasts from her wand. Wendy began to run across a set road atop the canyon, jumping a few small stalagmites and avoiding the Crossbow-Knights. “Chelia, what are these creatures, anyway?”

“Look, Wendy! Flying Fish!” When they were reaching a ledge over the canyon, they saw a flock of huge fish with blue scales, yellow faces, big open mouths, and yellow bird wings. Wendy smiled in amazement at the creatures, using them as platforms to get across the chasm. Afterwards, she jumped off on a road within the canyon, following it as it sloped down, turned right, slightly left, then turned flat and straight across a ground that was crumbling. A Crossbow-Knight was launching arrows from the other side, and Wendy avoided them while also sidestepping the weak parts of ground. She cast an Attack Spell on the knight, running past as the road curved right.

She hit a spring at the edge of the cliff, sending the girls flying up to a passing train. She landed on one of the platforms between cars, entered the train, and dashed down the center, scaring all the passengers with the force of her wind. “Sorry, everyone! I’m just in a hurry, usually careful, sorry!” Wendy jumped off the back car and grinded across the tracks before they brought her to a huge train station. Wendy entered the station, swiftly evading the townspeople as she raced up some stairs, and exited onto one of the station’s roof levels.

Wendy used airbending to knock down the Crawl-Knights that were climbing up the sides of the building. She hit a spring in the corner of the roof to bounce to the next level, blew down more Crawl-Knights before reaching another spring, and at the top of the station, she grabbed a zipline and flew down to the rooftops of the city. “You know, Wendy, I don’t recall you being this coordinated in your running, much less jumping across roofs!”

“Actually, it does seem like I’ve been getting more balanced- AAH!” Wendy tripped on the edge of a roof, fell to a lower building as she stumbled on her feet, and when she jumped to the next roof, she collapsed onto her back. “Ow… You okay, Chel?”

“Just dandy…” Chelia was dizzy. Wendy got back up, jumped off this last roof, and began to race across a mountainous region. “This valley cuts straight to Magnolia. With your speed, we’ll get there in no time!” Wendy made a great leap over a huge gap, landing safely on the opposite cliff as it brought her to a steep slope. Wendy was unable to slow down, she sidestepped to avoid the Spear-Knights, but feared jumping would result in a bumpy landing.

She was glad when the ground became flat at the bottom, but when she was about to run across a seemingly flat plain, a series of stone prisms popped up and created a maze. Wendy attacked all the Underworld Knights she encountered, but the maze really impeded her quick progress. Eventually, she found the exit, and didn’t hesitate to boost up the next hill, down the other side, and then skidded across a river. “Wendy, I still can’t believe how fast you’ve gotten!”

“Chelia, why are you acting like this is the first time we met?”

“It isn’t the first time! But you’re the one who’s acting weird between us, Wendy. …Look! That’s Magnolia! Just a little bit until we reach Fairy Tail!”

They arrived at a very populous town, and Wendy’s first act was to skid across a canal, dodging the people on rowboats, whom were naturally looking at Wendy in surprise. She jumped onto a bridge and zipped right into the town. “Turn right at this next street!” Wendy nodded and turned again, coming toward a great cathedral. “Oops, this is Kardia. My mistake. Um, just go around and go left.”

Wendy bypassed the South Gate Park, where friends and acquaintances were casually hanging about. She swerved left, crossing another town street and making it to a central street. “Wait, there it is! On the right!” Chelia pointed. “The guild hall and Kardia are directly across from each other! Silly me.”

“That’s it, huh?” Wendy saw the building in the distance. “Okay.” With a determined look, Wendy boosted across town, dodged all the citizens, and made it to the building. (End song.)

It was about three stories tall, had red roofs, and looked like a church itself, given the belfry with the big gold bell up top. An orange banner showed a symbol Wendy couldn’t make out, and the sign above the gates read Fairy Tail. “Wendy, can I get big now?”

“Oh, right!” Wendy put her friend on the ground, aimed her wand, and called, “Engorgio.” Chelia stretched back to normal.

“Phew. Now if I could ask you to never tell my guildmates about that. Well… here it is!”

“‘Fairy Tail’?” Wendy read the sign. “I thought it was spelled the other way?”

“No, it’s spelled that way on purpose. It’s based on the idea that fairies have tails, which is what that symbol’s supposed to be. …Wendy, I asked you the same thing and that was your answer.” Chelia stared at her weirdly. “Are you trying to quiz me?”

“N-No! I… So, is this where you live, too?”

Chelia held a hand out, giving a kind and trustful smile. Wendy stared at it, then slowly reached over and took her hand.

The pink-haired mage guided her past the gates and to the front door. Chelia knocked on the door. The person to answer was a tall, teen girl with long white hair and wearing a red dress. “Oh? Well, hello, Chelia!” The girl greeted with a smile. “If you’re looking for Wendy, she…” However, she reopened her eyes and noticed the blue-haired child. “Wendy?”
“I found her in the forest.” Chelia replied. “She looked a little lost and… dizzy. And, for some reason, her eyes are red.”

“Red?” The girl – Mirajane – looked at Wendy’s eyes and noticed this. Wendy remained silent, confused as to how this woman seemed to know her. “Well, come on inside, you two. We’ll straighten this out.” The two airbenders followed her into the building.

“Hey, everyone!” Mirajane called to all the inhabitants sitting at the tables. “Chelia’s here, and she brought Wendy!”

“Hi, Wendy!” Levy greeted, a teen girl with short light-blue hair and an orange top.

“Back already?” a tan-skinned girl in a bikini – Cana – asked. “You didn’t scrape your knee and cry, did you?” She proceeded to drink a barrel of beer.

“Yeah, Wendy, weren’t you on a mission with Team Natsu?” a boy with spiky dark-purple hair, and a red vest that exposed his abs, asked.

Wendy gasped at seeing him. “Romeo! What’re you doing here?”

“Huh?” Romeo looked confused. “I… kinda live here, sorta. I’m a Fairy Tail wizard like you.”

“Like… me?”

The people all faced Wendy and noticed the look on her face. She really didn’t look like herself. For one, she had red eyes and pointy ears, and the guild mark on her right shoulder was missing. “Wendy, what exactly were you doing before I found you?” Chelia asked.

“…” Wendy looked down shyly, not sure how to respond. “I… I was going through a portal with a friend of mine… but we got separated. Before that, I was traveling with other friends in Gravity Falls, then we…”

“Gravity Falls?” Mirajane repeated.

“I’ve never heard of a place like that.” Elfman said suspiciously. He was a muscular man with spiky white hair.

“Me neither.” Gajeel replied. He had long, spiky black hair, and metal nails in several parts of his body. “Do you think she could be from Edolas?”

“The Edolas Wendy was taller, and…” Pantherlily (a small black panther) stared at Wendy’s chest. “Well, yes, taller. However, perhaps she could be from another world, like Edolas.”

“Do you think you could tell us more about… where you came from?” asked Levy.

Wendy felt a little awkward with everybody staring at her, eagerly expecting a story. She never felt this popular in a crowd before. Wendy decided to tell them about herself, how she was an orphan with an airbending curse, forced to run around the world. She told them how she met Dr. Facilier, who became her teacher, and she found a weird winged cat named Carla. She mentioned meeting Chelia before, and then how she was sucked into a machine called the Multiverse Portal, along with MaKayla.

“Hey, slow down, I can’t keep up that fast!” Gajeel spoke up.

“Good thing you’ve got me, right?” Levy giggled.
“So you’re a different Wendy,” Romeo recapped, “but you know a Chelia, a Carla, and a ‘me’ from your world. What about the rest of us?”

“No, I…I don’t know any of the rest of you.” Wendy replied. “Wait, there’s a Carla in this world, too? W-What’s she like, what kind of creature is she?”

“She’s from a sentient cat race known as Exceed, like myself.” Pantherlily replied.

“Exceed?…”

“Boy, she seems really confused.” Levy said to the others. “I’m not sure what to do…”

“You don’t have to worry about it.” Wendy said, turning around to leave. “Maybe I’ll find a way back if I go back to the forest. I don’t want to trouble you guys.”

“Wait a minute, don’t go!” Mirajane grabbed her arm. “We wanna help you.”

“Why? I’m not the Wendy you know…”

“Who cares!” Levy said perkily. “Any Wendy is still Wendy. And even if you weren’t, we can’t just ignore someone who needs help.”

“Let’s go down to the library and see if we can find any books about this.” Mirajane suggested.

“Can I come, too?” Chelia asked.

“Sure, if you want to!”

“Wendy, feel free to make yourself at home.” Levy told her as they headed to a different room. “I figure traveling between dimensions can make one exhausted.”

“W-…” Wendy wanted to say something along the lines of, ‘don’t really know you very well because we only met twice. Ha ha ha…”

“Oh…” Romeo frowned. “That’s fair, ’cause I don’t exactly talk to Wendy much. Well, maybe we can get to know each other now. I’ll tell you about our world, and you tell me about… yours.”

“Um… Sure, that sounds fun!”

“Oooooooo,” Cana moaned from her table, wobbling drunkily, “Romey’s got a daaa-aaaate…” Romeo flushed. He began to lead Wendy outside. “So, what kind of person… is your Wendy like?” she asked.

“Oh… She’s awesome.”

MaKayla’s world

“Rukia!” MaKayla called to the black-robed spirit girl. “Remember me? We met back on “Arendelle?” Rukia asked. “I’ve never seen you before. How do you know my name?”

“What are you talking about? You helped my friend, Miyuki out? The white-haired girl? Then we helped you guys beat those Arrancar.”

“If this is some trick to manipulate my mind, I won’t fall for it!” Rukia clutched her sword hilt and threatened to draw it.

“No no no no!” Kayla waved her hands frantically. “Please, I…I’m just a little lost and confused! Can you… tell me where this is?”

“Why don’t you explain yourself first, stranger? I’m sensing some kind of spiritual pressure from you, so I can tell you’re not an ordinary human.”

Still confused over Rukia’s lack of memory, MaKayla explained her position in Sector IC, she was a timebender, and she could separate her soul from her body. “I don’t understand any of that other stuff,” Rukia said, “…but if you can separate your soul, does that mean you’re a Soul Reaper?”

“You mean a Grim Reaper?”

Both of them were silent for a moment. “Hold on…” MaKayla thought aloud, remembering the portal she just fell through. “Is it possible… I’m in another dimension?”

“Another dimension?” Rukia repeated.

“Um… Can you get me off this building first?” Kayla asked with a blush, almost forgetting that she was on a hundred-foot skyscraper. “Then you can tell me about this place.”

On a city street minutes later

“So this universe is composed of three dimensions,” Kayla recapped as she and Rukia walked downtown, “the Living World, Soul Society, and Hueco Mundo. Sounds kinda like our Spirit and Underworlds. Except we also have a Negaverse, a Netherverse, and a Dream World…”

“The point is that you’re definitely not from around here.” Rukia stated. “Whatever this portal is you mentioned, I’m afraid it could create an upset on our dimensional plain. How do we send you back?”

“I don’t know. We just found the portal machine recently, and it was constructed by our enemies. It sucked in me and…!” Kayla’s eyes widened. “I got separated from Wendy! She has blue hair and a green dress; I don’t know if she landed around here or if she landed in a different universe!”

“Calm down. Look, I promise to help you in any way I can. I’ll get the other Soul Reapers to help, too, but I can’t promise you they’ll be very trusting. However, there’s one person in particular I think would have knowledge on the subject. We’ll visit him first.”

“He’s not crazy, is he?” Kayla asked with a sheepish smile. “I’m just wondering if I should brace.”

Rukia chuckled. “Well, he’s… pretty sane. But there is that unpredictable side to him, though.”

Urahara Shop

Rukia brought Kayla to a small, wooden shop in a downtown alley. There were two kids sweeping the ground outside: a boy with red hair and blue shorts, and a thin girl with black hair in pigtails, sandals, and a pink skirt with white polka dots. Both of them wore a white shirt with red Japanese letters that read Urahara Shop.

“Hm?” The redhead boy looked up when the two girls approached. “Check it out, Ururu. Rukia’s back with some other chick.”

“Hello, Jinta and Ururu.” Rukia greeted them. “This is MaKayla. She’s… lost, and we thought Kisuke could help her find her way home.”

Kayla gasped at seeing them. Her most clear memory was of a Girls’ Boxing Tournament on Moonbase. “Jinta? Ururu? From Sector JP?!”

“Who’s from what now?” Jinta asked.

“Jinta, don’t play dumb. I remember you fighting in that boxing tournament for girls!”

Jinta flinched and blushed. Ururu asked, “Jinta-kun, when did you do that? Are you a pervert?”

“NO!” Jinta pointed panickingly at Kayla. “That girl’s a liar!! She’s an evil spirit of deception out to get us! Ururu, brace yourself!” He grabbed his broom. “Get ready to fight for your dignity!”

“But I’m too young for fanservice!” Ururu covered her chest.

“Please, just relax!” Rukia yelled. “We think MaKayla comes from a different dimension. She claimed to have met me in the past, but her story was unfamiliar. Let us speak to Urahara.”

“Fine, the old man is inside.” Jinta said with a scowl. “Go and confront him about his sexual desires, not mine!”

“I wouldn’t even have known you had some, were it not for you telling me.” Kayla remarked as she and Rukia entered the shop.

“I DO NOT!!” Jinta screamed. Ururu blushed and backed away from the boy.

Rukia led Kayla to the back of the shop, finding a man in a black jacket and a white- and green-striped bucket hat. “Thought I sensed your spiritual pressure, Rukia. But who’s the one beside you?”

“Kisuke, this is MaKayla. She’s from another dimension. Kayla, this is Kisuke Urahara. He owns this shop.”

“You can call me Mr. Hat-and-Clogs.” Kisuke stood up and turned around. He wore a green shirt and pants under his jacket, hid his face with a fan, and was barefoot. He had pale yellow hair.

“Ha ha, okay!” Kayla beamed. “You can call me Ms. Hat-and-Slippers.”

“Well, the ‘MK’ on your shirt’s gonna make me call you that.” Kisuke closed his fan, showing his cool smile. His hat shadowed his eyes. “So, what’s the situation, again?”

“I was sucked into a portal and landed in this town.” Kayla recapped. “I know who Rukia and Jinta are because they work for my organization, the Kids Next Door. I think I’m in some kind of parallel universe.”

“Kisuke,” Rukia spoke, “I know this is sudden, and I don’t really understand it either, but if nothing is done—”
“Now, hold on.” Kisuke interrupted. “I seem to remember something like this happening. It was a few years ago, when I was walking around the forest, I met a strange man in a brown coat who claimed to be from another universe. He called himself Ford.”

“Ford?” Kayla asked.

“Yes. He told me he constructed a portal whose purpose was to pierce far into the Dimensional Byway, cross the Sea of Worlds, and find the Original Worlds.”

“The Original Worlds?”

“Of course,” Kisuke laughed, “naturally, I just HAD to ask him what the hell he was talking about! And before we knew it, we became close friends, and we would be pen pals if we knew how to send letters across universes. He told me about his world, showed me his journal…”

“Then this Ford must have been the Author of Dipper’s journal!” Kayla realized. “Mr. Hat-and-Clogs, what happened to Ford? He must have gotten back home!”

“Well, of course. Out of nowhere, a powerful beam of light fell down from the sky, and Ford bid me farewell before jumping in. He claimed it was the call-back system of his portal. He said it was dangerous for the portal to stay on for too long, so he sets it to switch off after being used, but it is programmed to self-activate at a later time and track down his location.”

“So if I just wait around, then the portal will reactivate and I can go back?”

“I don’t know. But here’s something else a little interesting: Ford showed me a drawing in his journal: a cube with strange writing on it. Back when I worked for the 13 Court Guard Squads, I came upon a stone pyramid deep in the dungeon cells. Its writing was similar to the writing on Ford’s drawing. In fact, I think I still have the picture.” Kisuke went beside his counter in the store and pulled out an old, wrinkled paper. “See? Drew the pyramid myself.”

MaKayla studied the picture. The pyramid had an eye on its tip, like Bill Cipher. The writing was indeed similar. “The Original Worlds… the Gibberish Rocks… so they are connected. Mr. Hat-and-Clogs… do you have any idea of the purpose of this pyramid? Do you know anyone else who’s… interacted with it in some way?”

“Hmm…” Kisuke stroked his chin. “Now that I think about it… when we were kids, I recall Aizen sneaking into the dungeons just for fun. …When he came back, that’s when he started acting weird.”

“Aizen?” The name sparked a reaction in Rukia. “Well, did you ask him what he saw in there?”

“Not really. To be honest, I just thought he saw two prisoners doing adult things.”

“Who’s Aizen?” MaKayla asked.

“Anyway, I don’t know if your portal is gonna call you back at some point.” Kisuke said again. “But I doubt anyone in Soul Society will have any clue as what to do, so I guess you’re stuck here. Why not go for a walk, get some fresh air.” He said in a laid back fashion. “You know, since you’re new in town, I’ll offer you some free samples of my candy.”

“That’d be nice.” Kayla chuckled. “My money’s probably no good here.”
“Maybe I should stay with you until you can go home.” Rukia offered. “You mentioned that there are Hollows in your world, well that’s no different here. I should protect you.”

“Hey, I can protect myself, just so ya know.” Kayla folded hands behind her head. “But I appreciate it.”

After she took some candy from Urahara’s shop, she and Rukia began their casual stroll downtown. He said it was only a few years ago when he met Ford. Kayla thought. Just how recently did the Author vanish, exactly? Or maybe… the Multiverse Portal can travel through Space AND Time!

Negaverse; Dnalhsa Park

“Everyone, I hereby call this meeting of Sector Leaders to order!” Ynohtna announced to the operatives gathered around the park fountain, which the bucktoothed boy was standing on. The participants included Aroru, Ydolem, and Asia. “Because of Egrog and AlyakAm’s recent treachery, Cousin Nerehc has decreed that Sector -IC needs a new leader. And we have all decided that Numbuh -6:00m.a., Ikuyim Latsyrc, is most appropriate for the job!” There was little applause as Ikuyim came to stand by Ynohtna.

“Oh, Ynohtna!” Ikuyim proclaimed happily. “I promise to do my absolute best to help my sector recover. Honestly, even Yrret is having a hard time being good again, but Egrog and Alyak, too?? It really tears at my heartstrings!”

“Why are we having this meeting outside?!” Sector -JP leader, Nirak whined, flailing her arms. “My shoes are getting all dirty, and there’s so many bugs!”

“I think a gathering of friends in fresh air livens our spirits and boosts our creativity!” Ynohtna cheered.

“The air might be more breathable than it used to,” Asia replied, “but it’s still smelly enough to derive us from focus.” She sprayed some freshener.

“Maybe, but we’re steadily getting there. Look at this fountain, for instance!” The Nega-Sector W leader turned to look in the water. “It’s so clean now, we can see our reflections! And look how shiny it is. …” The fountain began to glow. “Eh?”

“WAAAAAH!” Five figures came flying out of the fountain, plopping on the ground before the leaders. Ikuyim approached and studied the group of 7-year-olds.

“Huh? Ynohtna, it’s your Positive!” Ikuyim pointed at the barefoot boy who looked like him.

“YOOOO!” Another person flew out of the fountain and landed on his face in the grass. His lower half was propped up before falling down, then he jumped to his feet. “Yo, yo!” Killer Bee, the ninja rapstar, rapped. “I was travelin’ on a stormy island when I saw these kids, they beat the snot out of some god with this, supah-dupah thundered-up angel, then the Goddess o’ Light sent us to this world with a opposite angle, fools, ya fools!”

“You said it, Cous.” Asia remarked.

“Anthony!” Ynohtna jumped down to hug him from behind. “Nice to see you again! I missed you so.”
“I didn’t miss you, Shoe Boy.” Anthony broke away from him. “The only reason we’re here is ’cause Palutena sent us.”

“We were under attack by one of the World Leaders from our world.” Aranea explained. “Palutena thought we would be safe in Ynohtna’s care.”

“Yeah, but we don’t like it.” Anthony stated. “On the bright side, it feels nice to be on solid ground again.” He brushed his foot along the pavement.

“Hey, are you an earthbender?” Ikuyim asked.

“Yeah, so what?”

“That’s funny! I’m an earthbender, too!” She pointed at her bare feet.

“Oh. Well, you’re already cooler than your Positive.”

“Anthony, maybe Ikuyim can teach you some new things.” Sally smiled intuitively. “You were in the middle of training before we had to help Fybi.”

“Shyeah, but Tom was a lavabender.” Anthony folded his arms in a haughty fashion. “I bet Ikuyim doesn’t do anything close to that.”

“Well, my sister is a lavabender,” Ikuyim laughed, “but I doubt she would be a good teacher. But Anthony, have you ever heard of Nature Crystals?”

“No?”

“They’re supernatural crystals that grow from the Heart of the World and have unique properties. They’re very fluent with a planet’s very life force. I first learned of my earthbending when I trained to sense these crystals!”

“Okay, so you can sense magic crystals. But I wanna learn earthbending to fight, how does that help me?”

“Fools, ya fools!” Killer Bee rapped. “If nature and elements were used to battle, every bender would be an offender! Then their brothers go tattle, and that’s immature, but we wanna be mature, that’s why it rhymes with nature, ya dig?”

“Ha ha ha ha!” Ikuyim laughed with a sunny expression. “I think what this man means is, you’ll only get stronger by bonding with your element! Don’t just focus on the parts that would help you battle better, you have to know why your element is so wonderful to begin with!”

“I already know all that nature crud.” Anthony stated. “Chiri taught it to me, how the earth is a living organism that ‘cares for its children like a mother’ or somethin’. I’m already pretty good at Seismic Sense.”

“This much is true, Anthony, but there’s a lot more you need to learn.” a woman’s voice said.

“Well, I wanna get ta learning the important stuff before I… Wait, whut?” The boy looked around in confusion.

“Look!” Ynohtna pointed at the fountain. A bright projection of Goddess Palutena rose from the water as the Negatives gazed in awe.
“Goddess Palutena…” Asia stared.

“I had time to whip up this self-aware hologram to tell you a few things.” Palutena said. “Anthony, you are aware that you are a member of the Granite Family, who are said to be the leaders of the Four Earthbender Families. But did you know that, on many occasions throughout history, the Granites have always been taught by the other families?”

“Um… no. Wait, so did my mom learn from the other families?”

“Well, she never had the chance to. But don’t be fooled just because she made Logia. If you really want to become stronger, you will have to train under the other families. Your mom and your sister taught you what the Granites should know, and Tom of the Sovites was kind enough to be your teacher… You’ll be happy to know that the other families have kids who are still learning their abilities as well. I think they’re the ones you should train with.” She gave a smile.

“So, shouldn’t my sister train with them, too?” Anthony cocked a brow.

“Oh, let your sister mature a little more. She’s still so young and developing.”

“My butt.”

“That’s Anthony, Ikuyim here is the daughter of the Latsyrc Family. They are part of the Negaverse’s own Noble Earthbenders, for their ability to bend crystals and gems. They may not be infamous in their own history, but you can be the very first Granite to learn from them.”

“Hmm… Doesn’t sound bad.” Anthony figured. “So do I have to learn from the other Nega-Families?”

“Not unless you wanna perform dark arts.” Palutena said sheepishly. “Ikuyim should serve as a good teacher for now. But when you return to the Posiverse, search for Shelly Johnson, the daughter of the Quartzite Family. Her specialty is sandbending.”

“But what about the fourth family?” Sally asked.

“The Hornfels daughter still hasn’t awakened herself, yet. But when she does, I’ll tell you.” The goddess winked. “I’m about to fade off, so I wish you the best of luck. Be strong, Anthony, Fybi, and Harvey. Your future struggles are not far.” And she was gone.

“…So the Hornfels is a girl. Fantastic.” Anthony rolled his eyes.

“Why did she mention you, Harvey?” Aranea asked. “I know Fybi’s a Light, and Anthony’s the leader, but why you?”

“I dunno.” Harvey swung his yo-yo. “Maybe she thinks I’m sweet!”

“Better than nothing.” Anthony said as they adjourned a few yards away. “I just wanna shake off the skysickness.”

Medusa watched them from afar, under the shade of a tree. “Thankfully, I happen to know the perfect training ground.” She smirked.

Magnolia, Fiore

Three hours passed since Wendy came to this world. She had been exploring Magnolia with Romeo, who offered to buy Wendy ice cream (since her money was worthless in this world). Now they were at the South Gate Park, sitting under a lone tree. Romeo told her how Fairy Tail recently competed in the Grand Magic Games, where their Wendy met Chelia, he mentioned how the founder of their guild was a spirit girl called Mavis… And Wendy told him about element bending, which was kind of like their own elemental magic, but it wasn’t… Romeo could detect Wendy’s confusion by her own explanation.

“The truth is, I’m still a student.” Wendy said with a blush. “Not even my teachers know the difference between magic and bending.”

“Some teachers!” Romeo chuckled.

He felt a tinge of delight when Wendy shared in the laugh. “I guess so! …” They both sat silent for a moment, gazing up at the pretty blue sky. “Hm… It’s so weird, talking about different worlds and universes like this.” Wendy mentioned. “We’re acting like I just came from another country.”

“I know, I almost forget.” Romeo blushed. “You look and act just like our Wendy… If it weren’t for your eyes, I wouldn’t tell you apart.”

“So, is your Wendy… really popular? Everyone else seems to like her.”

“Well, I think everyone in Fairy Tail likes each other the same. It’s kind of our policy. But our Wendy wasn’t sure of that at first, she had a lot of trouble fitting in… But in a way, I guess she is popular.”

“Hmm…” Wendy looked down, smiling at the humorous thought that she had so many friends in another universe. “I guess your Wendy… wouldn’t want someone like me stealing her friends.”

“Are you kidding?? Two Wendys would be the greatest thing ever!”

“Huh?”

“Uh, n-nothing.” Romeo flushed. “What I meant was… I’m sure our Wendy would be happy to welcome you. I don’t know what it’s like in your homeworld, but it’s hard to find a better place than Fairy Tail.”

“There you two are!” The two turned right to see Mirajane. “I had a feeling you lovebirds would be here.”

“Ghhhh!” Romeo flushed, Wendy giggling at his reaction. “We’re not lovebirds. …So, did you find anything, Mira-nee?”

“I’m sorry…” Mira frowned with regret. “We can’t find any books that talk about ‘Gravity Falls,’ ‘element bending,’ ‘Bill Cipher,’ or any of that stuff Wendy described. You might have to stay with us for a while. Is that all right?”

Romeo turned to Wendy. The girl thought for a second, before giving a big smile. “Of course it’s fine! As long as it isn’t a huge burden for you.”

“Not at all! Come on back to the guild and we’ll give you something to eat if you’re hungry.”
At the guild hall, Wendy was given some slices of strawberry cake, orange gelatin with little blueberries inside, and juice to wash it down. Romeo’s father, Macao and his friend, Wakaba thrilled Wendy with stories of their exciting adventures, and when they brought up what a catch they were with ladies, Mirajane smacked them out of anger, and Romeo shrank in embarrassment. Cana, who was still drunk, found delight in picking Wendy up and feeling how light she was. She questioned if Wendy’s breasts were smaller than their Wendy’s, making Wendy blush.

Before they knew it, it was nighttime. Team Natsu still hadn’t come back, yet, but since Wendy’s room in the Fairy Hills would be left unoccupied, they found no harm in letting Wendy sleep there. But first, Levy and Mirajane invited her to a mini-sleepover to get to know her better. During her stories, they painted each other’s nails and brushed their hair. They were sad how Wendy spent most of her life alone and homeless, but her ability to run fast was so cool, they wanted to hear details about her adventures. So Wendy told them every little jump, skid across water, and train-track-grinding that she remembered, making body motions to emphasize the excitement.

When she went to sleep in their Wendy’s bed, with the wrinkles and texture left by its owner, it really felt like something she had lain on. It made her feel more like this was her original home.

This world really isn’t so bad. Maybe... I could get used to it here. I guess I should help them look for a way to go back. Oh well... I’m not in a hurry.

Undersea Headquarters Sanitization Committee

Chapter Summary

Team Emily infiltrates Plankton’s Undersea Mansion. Cheren Uno has a talk with Jagar King.

Warning: Spoilers for those who aren’t caught up with Gravity Falls. Today’s codes use the Atbash Cipher.

Chapter 31: Undersea Headquarters Sanitization Committee

King Household

Cheren’s never been to the Kings’ house before; add that to the hundreds of other operatives he doesn’t associate with much. The interior was fancy with elegant-looking chairs and carpet, as well as old paintings. Rely on timebenders to be more into the classics. Jagar King walked in with two cups of tea, one for Cheren. “Hope you like Koopa Tea.”

“Why not.” Cheren mumbled sarcastically, having a sip while Jagar sat on the couch beside him.

“Mr. King, I didn’t really feel comfortable leaving my operatives behind. I assume what you want to tell me is important.”

“Well, first, the journals…” Jagar had little spirit in his somber voice. “The person who wrote those journals was my father. Stanford Pines.”

Cheren swallowed a large glob of tea. “R…Really?”

“My original birth name was Ruford Pines. My father was always very obsessed with uncovering paranormal secrets, even while his wife, Judy King was pregnant with me. He created the Multiverse Portal with Bill Cipher’s help, but then something terrible happened, so my father had to leave where Bill couldn’t find him. He entrusted his first journal to my mom to hide, then demanded that we drop the name ‘Pines’ and call ourselves by Mom’s maiden name. He even went as far as to rename me. I believe his exact words were…”

“Listen to me: his name is NO longer Ruford. Ch-Change it to something else, like Jagar; Jagar King! E-Except pronounce it like Hagar, who names their kid that?!”

“I was a little over a year old, and I had already displayed timebending. My mom never actually told me any of this; I was able to see into my own past after becoming the Ghost of Time.”

“But if your last name is Pines, wouldn’t that mean Dipper and Mabel-”

“-Are my uncle, Sherm’s grandkids, and George and Kayla’s cousins.”

“Sigh, now Gravity Falls is ruined for me.” Cheren sighed sadly. He shook back to attention, “S-So what happened with your father and Bill?”

“My father achieved the impossible: he created a Dimension Transportifier that actually linked with the Original Worlds. You may know that our universe is one that was born from mixing hundreds of other universes, through something called Dimensional Fusion. The ‘Original Worlds’ are the universes where parts of our dimension was taken from. People, places, events, those were taken from the Original Worlds to create this one. But those worlds are very far away along the Dimensional Byway. Creating a machine that could actually take you to them would consume tremendous amounts of power. That kind of power is dangerous for the universe. That’s why my father wanted to stop Bill from using it for his own gain.”

“And what ‘gain’ did Bill want from it?”

“. . .” Jagar clutched his Chrono Staff and looked down. “This is what I wanted to talk to you about…” He looked up at Cheren with as much emotion – in the form of seriousness – his blue eyes would display. “You all have to stop your quest for the Seven Lights and Thirteen Darknesses!”

“What?! But wouldn’t we be able to save everybody from the Apocalypse?!”

“The Apocalypse is going to happen either way, but the results are actually different. There are two gates that maintain the unstable energy in our universe, the Time Gate and Space Gate. When Arceus unleashed his wrath 20 years ago, both of those gates suffered incredible damage. The Great Clock was given the greatest attention when fixing, but the Space Gate – the Nexus – was still weak. In truth, Cheren, the person who instigated the Apocalypse… was Dimentia’s brother, Dimentio.”

Cheren’s pupils shrunk with anger and horror. “Dimentio? . . . The one that almost destroyed everything two months ago?!”

“Yes. Dimentio tried to destroy all matter in the universe by controlling and destroying the Nexus, which controls all of the unstable Space Chi in the cosmos. Nebula and my daughter defeated him and restored the Nexus to a safer condition, but it wasn’t enough. By the end of this month, the Nexus will truly start to falter. Unstable Space Energy will begin to burst free from the moons – which are normally the primary entries to the Netherverse. When that happens, all planets will be destroyed by their power. Arceus will only rescue a choice few, so that they may help construct the New World.”

“But what about the Twenty KEYS?! We’re trying to find the Keys to open the Time Gate, so that EVERYONE can escape to the New World safely!”

“How do you plan to fit a whole UNIVERSE of people into the Time Gate?!”

Cheren clenched his teeth and looked down. He hadn’t thought about that. “It won’t work.” Jagar stated. “Arceus may have approved the hunt for the Twenty Keys, but it’s far too dangerous. The Time Gate is what’s maintaining all the unstable Time Chi. Letting all of that energy loose into this universe will create worse cataclysm than the Nexus.”

“But if we DON’T find the Keys, jillions more people might die! You just said Arceus approved the hunt, why wouldn’t HE know all of this?!”

“Because he DOESN’T! The only reason I was able to determine this is because of-!”

Jagar stopped himself. Cheren stared up at him curiously. “Because of. . . ?”

Jagar sighed, sitting on the couch as he spoke more calmly. “There’s a demon.”

“I fight demons.”
“No, it’s nothing like Demise, Malladus, or Majora! This demon is more powerful than anything you can possibly imagine, and his name is ____! …! His name is ____! …” Jagar held his throat with shock.

Cheren cocked a brow. “Couldn’t think of a good name for your crappy story?”

“I…I can’t say his name!”

“Oh, lemme guess: VOLDEMORT.”

“No, I literally can’t say his name! I-I don’t under… His name is spelled _ _ _ _ _ _ ! Hold on!” Jagar ran off to get a paper and pencil. He drew the first line- “Sspk!” the pencil sparked, the line faded away.

Cheren glared. “…Mr. King, you’re full of crap. I bet the reason you don’t want us to find the Keys is because… ‘cause you’re The King.”

“What?”

“You’re The King of the World Government!” Cheren got up and walked around the opposite side of the table, pointing accusingly at Jagar. “The same one who used that Octagon or whatever to kill my dad, and for SOME wild and crazy reason, you don’t want us to stop the Apocalypse!”

“I am NOT The King!” Jagar shouted, standing upright.

“Then who IS The King? You must know that, Ghost of Time.”

“I don’t know who he is-”

“WHAT A LOAD OF BULL!” Cheren stomped the short table.

“Cheren, you’re just going to have to trust me on this, trust me when I say not to find the Twenty Keys-”

“Then tell me what’s gonna happen if we do. The minute we bring all of the Keys to the Time Gate, after EVERYTHING we’ve freaking been through, what’s gonna happen?”

Jagar clutched his staff and looked down again. How he desperately tried to find a good answer. “I don’t know. . . I can’t see. . anything…”

Cheren calmed down and looked closely at the man’s features. Jagar trembled, stuttered in a fashion that meant… he was telling the truth. He really couldn’t see… so he was afraid. The Ghost of Time, unable to see what’s going to happen. “Mr. King… I don’t know what’s going to happen, either. I even get the feeling I might… die. But you can’t just sit around and cry away your fear. You have to take a chance. That’s why… we’re going to find the Twenty Keys. We’re going to save as many people as we can.” Cheren passed him an assuring smile before walking to the exit—

He froze in time, mid-step. Jagar walked over and picked him up like a statue. “I’m afraid… I can’t trust your word over mine.” Jagar said. “Your friends can’t be allowed to find the Keys. I don’t want to harm them, though. Without their Supreme Leader, they may be discouraged either way. It might by some time.” Jagar carried Cheren into the basement, setting him in a corner. He left the room and shut the door. Cheren’s frozen, assuring smile went unchanged in the darkness.

Under the sea; Dr. Cooper’s submarine
Emily’s square-spectacled eyes focused on the tiny tray under the microscope with pure attention. Her blue eyes narrowed on them for several minutes, her brain pulsed trying to determine an answer. “…Seven-million-and-four?”

“NOOOOO!” Sheldon Cooper cried. “There are FIVE million and forty-THREE! Honestly, this is the one good use Amy had for these germs, and you’re treating this like a joke!”

Emily stomped around to face him, “Well, I’m sorry if I haven’t been able to perfect a sight-based martial art in less than two days!”

“Holeh SEACOW, Emily’s not PERFECT at something!” Sarah exclaimed. She and her brother were on the second-floor couch, watching the sea pass by in the window.

“Call the fraud police!” Gary yelled.

“For your information, I never said I was perfect… with physical body skills!” Emily retorted. “I never planned to learn ANY martial art, let alone Haki!”

“And yet, you deliberately guessed the number of nails that make up my lab!” Sheldon argued. “Miss Garley, you were allowed in the company of Sheldon Cooper for over 36 hours since our meeting, not being able to learn Observation Haki is your fault, not mine.”

Emily tiredly slumped away from the microscope. “Well, I’m officially too weary to embrace the beauty of microorganisms. I’m gonna lie down.” She was about to settle down on a large bed in the corner.

“Ne-Wai—HAAAANG on…” Sheldon stopped her before she did so. “That’s MY bed, yours is right there.” He pointed at a lanky metal bed against the wall, about Emily’s own width. For a minute, she thought that was a stretch bed.

“Why can’t YOU sleep on that one?”

“Khh! Now you’re only acting silly; unless you intend to recite a passage from E.M. Snickering’s beloved children’s book, ‘The Tall Man From Cornwall’.”

“Who?”

Sheldon raised a finger, gesturing to wait, and walked over to the skinny bed. He turned on a radio and played a jaunty sailor tune (Mrs. Puff’s Theme from Spongebob) before sitting on the bed with his legs across it; his entire lower body stretched the length of the bed. He recited the poem in rhythm with the music.

“There ONCE was a tall man from Cornwall: Whose length had exceeded his bed. My body fits on it, but barely upon it, There’s no ROOM for my big Cornish head!” He lied down completely flat—his upper-body couldn’t fit on the bed, so he was lain diagonally, uplifted by the head side’s fence.

Emily cleared her throat and recited her own poem: “There once was a man from Oregon, Who had an extra finger on each hand. He couldn’t wear gloves, so Winter was unloved, but he was the lead drummer in a bestselling band.”

The sailor tune resetted again as Sheldon got up from the bed. “There was a rotund woman from Kentucky, Whose width was too round for the door. She was incredibly heavy, more so than a Chevy, However she wrote one hell of a score.”
Emily blushed and touched a finger to her chin in a cute fashion. “There was a little girl from Germany, Who was born with Size 10 feet.” She looked at her shoes. “She trips, she stumbles, in the water she fumbles, But them booties were easy to beat.”

The volume of the tune increased as they stood back-to-back and sang together. “There were a couple of musicians from England, Who were chemically glued to the back.” They swung their legs forward as they circled in place. “They knew how to pose and smelled like a rose.”

They held their heads close to each other and spoke impossibly fast, “It-took-a-while-to-find-a-manager-who-was-comfortable-with-the-idea-but-you-can-imagine-the-public-wasn’t-so-into-it-at-first-they-would’ve-had-the-accident-reversed-but-they-ran-into-financial-issues-so-they-had-to-compromise-their-albums-didn’t-sell-well-for-a-time-but-when-a-rival-attempted-to-rip-off-their-work-they-sued-him-for-millions-now-they’re-living-it-up-in-a-mansion-with-two-women-who-like-them-now-because-they’re-rich”

“-but their bedroom skills are sufficiently lack!” The song reached its final notes. Emily and Sheldon made a stunning pose.

“. . . . .” Sarah and Garry wanted to erase that from their minds. “Aren’t you glad we don’t have as many scenes as other characters?” the former asked.

“Ahhhh, you’re a delightful company, Lady Emily.” Sheldon sighed.

“And you are very tolerable, Sir Sheldon.”

“Eh, fun fact, in the Japanese dub of this series, I would be known as ‘Sheldon-sama’.”

“Noooo, I would refer to you as Sheldon-kun. Because you’re so cute.” Emily flushed goofily.

The monitor on the control deck started beeping. Sheldon hurried over. “Oh, dear… seems we’re not alone.” He observed. “There’s some kind of… structure, traveling along down here.”

“You know, part of me had a feeling that wasn’t a fish…” Gary replied. Beyond their window was a dark, tremendous force in the distance.

A red light at the radio station started beeping. “Uh-oh. Seems they’re trying to signal us.” Sheldon said.

“We can’t just ignore ‘em.” Emily spoke with mixed thoughts. “But are they friend or foe?”

“Only one way to find out…” Sheldon worriedly went over to the station and put on headphones. “Remember, kids, the key to avoiding any terrible situation is a well-developed lie.” He said to the group. Sheldon pressed the microphone button and responded, “Ahem, hello?”

“Pardon me, fine sailors, but this is restricted land owned by Chum Bucket Labs. All unauthorized personnel will be annihilated on the spot.” A deep and maniacal voice spoke.

Sheldon quickly concocted his lie. “Sir, we are part of the Undersea Headquarters Sanitization Committee, and we received a report about a, um, newly identified mobile fortress, 200 nautical miles southeast of the Gulf of Mexico. Would that be your fortress by any chance?”

“Well, actually, yes. Can we help you?”

“Wonderful.” Sheldon smiled. “As you can surmise, our Number One priority is the purest cleanliness of all undersea fortresses, and it would be a shame if a headquarters as remarkably tremendous as yours was drenched top to bottom in repulsive, disgusting seaweed for another minute. Should you have questions or concerns about our credibility, I would be glad to provide you a list of clients who are familiar with our work.” Sheldon held up a clipboard. “Feel free to call them to your hearts’ content, and you will see, the UHSC is the finest under the sea!”

“Hmm… Come to think of it, we do have too much seaweed clogging up the ventilation shafts. Alright, come on in! But DON’T get any soap on the sofas! I got those with a bargain.”

A garage door on the bottom of the fortress opened. Sheldon steered their submarine inside, parking it in a surface pool. The interior walls were brownish-orange, and a red carpet led down the tunnel. There was a camera in a ceiling corner. “I bet if I can hack into the camera, I can get footage from all the others in this place.” Emily said. “Then we can see what’s in this fortress.”

“And how d’ya plan to do that?” Sarah questioned.

“With THESE!” Emily held up her glasses proudly.

Kids Next Door: S.P.E.C.S.
Spectacles Propellerized Equipped Camera Spygear

Emily took out a mini remote/monitor, which displayed the image from her square glasses as they flew around with twin propellers. Gary opened a hatch on the ceiling so they could fly out, letting Emily land them on the camera. She pressed a button on her remote, extracting a cord to plug into a slot. The glasses’ lens displayed a staticky image that appeared on her monitor. She could search through dozens of screens displayed from different cameras.

“Holy mole, check it out! There’s a bunch of monkeys in here, too! Maybe Specter owns this place! And… hold on.” Sarah, Gary, and Sheldon looked over her shoulder. The monitor displayed a prison cell, containing a frightened child with dark-red hair, clutching the bars and looking around worriedly. “They’re holding somebody captive. The fiends! Come on, guys, this is officially a Kids Next Door mission!”

“Yes, but before we do that, I need a list of your friends’ phone numbers, whom we can pretend to be clients that the, quote-on-quote, ‘UHSC’ has worked with.” Sheldon showed them his pen and clipboard. “Be mindful that these must be friends who are willing to stay faithful to the lie for an undetermined amount of time.”

“Buff that lie, Sheldon!” Emily shouted, putting her glasses back on after they flew back. “They’re going to catch us catching their monkeys and breaking that girl out. Stay here and guard the ship; it’ll be the only way we can escape.”

Sheldon shook, stumbling on what to say, “We can’t just call the lie off right NOW! These people are expecting a fine-quality sanitization of their entire fortress within the next 5 minutes. The best spy missions keep the aforementioned lie up in the best and longest way possible.”

“Then Y’ALL can spend yer time scrubbin’ seaweed outta their vents,” Sarah tossed him a mop and bucket, “while we conduct our rescue mission.” She and Gary marched out with no regrets, joined by Emily, who waved cheerfully at the older man.

“Good luck, Sheldon-senpaaaaaii!”

“. . . . .” Sheldon stood with a blank expression, holding the mop and bucket. “I want a refund.” (Play “Frozen Frenzy” from Donkey Kong: Tropical Freeze.)
Stage 40: Undersea Mansion

Mission: Capture 15 monkeys and rescue the prisoner!

The three operatives jumped out of the submarine and proceeded down the tunnel lit by flickering lamp posts. They saw the first Pipo Monkey up on the ceiling, holding the seaweed while he swung innocently, with a stairway of thin ledges leading up to him along the wall. Gary chose to grapple and hop up these ledges himself, then kicked off toward the monkey to net him, then landed beside his friends. They wandered into a large room with giant gears, being churned by the ocean down below. On their left, the three could float onto a high ledge with their Sky Flyer, then jump their way across a constant turning bar to another platform—any missed jump would send them sliding into the sea.

From here, they had to cross a flat, turning gear, but several security lasers were crossed and turning along it. The trio was careful to hop in the open gaps, then they had to ride one of the bars up a vertical gear, steering clear of the lasers that were in-between bars. They jumped off on a safe platform—however, Sarah saw a platform below it and rode the gear further until she could jump off on it. A ladder led down the wall and close to the sea, where a Pipo Monkey was innocently surfing on a board. Sarah had to time it precisely: she jumped down, net outstretched, caught the monkey, then Sky Flew upward to grab the ladder, and climb back on the platform. Then she could Sky Fly off and up to the higher platform, where her friends helped her up.

They Sky Flew up to a thin ledge along the next wall, having to hold tight with their fingers as they climbed across, and wait for the security lasers to skim away from it. They made it to a platform with a door leading into a corridor of fishtanks. Exotic fish of many varieties, and unknown origin, swam freely inside. Some of them were, in fact, Pipo Monkeys, but there was no discernible way inside of the tanks. The hallway turned right and sloped up, leading into a very dark passage with security lasers. Two sets of lasers were diagonal, moving back-and-forth, and crossing each other, with the only gap available at the top, after they slid away. When the lasers were in the process of moving away, they quickly spun their Sky Flyers and got through.

The next portion was a maze of lasers, with platforms of varying height blocking some. They first jumped onto a platform on the right, used Sky Flyer to fly over some and around other lasers to land on the second, then they crouched to crawl under a row of platforms blocking more lasers. Then they could crawl onto safe ground, and the rest of the hall had dozens of lasers sweeping back-and-forth in diagonal fashion. This task required their Super Hoops, speeding across as the lasers were opening up, and getting past before they closed. The three scientists jumped into a small pool and swam underneath with their Water Nets.

There were floating balls with searchlights moving about—Search Spheres. They swam behind a group of rocks in the down-right corner to avoid the first light. The next Search Sphere circled around a water mine, so they had to stay on the exact opposite side of the mine to be out of its sight; without touching the mine. Once past it, they swam down to inhale some air bubbles to rejuvenate their selves, then they netted a Pipo Monkey hiding inside a clam. The next Search Sphere shone along the floor and ceiling, but couldn’t hit the walls because of the rock blockades. However, Torpedo Teds came out of holes at the end of those passages, chasing the kids with devious grinning faces. They had to hurriedly swim behind a strip of rock that spiraled across the passage, hiding them from sight of many Search Spheres, and outrun the pursuing Torpedo Teds.

At the end of the passage, the trio climbed out of a surface pool, bringing them to a lounge area with potted plants, red couches with gold edges, and chandeliers. Two Pipo Monkeys were lounging on a couch, chucking nut shells at the Fodder robots who were mopping. The robots clearly had pent-up rage, so the kids put them out of their misery by shooting them with their slingshots. The twins monkeys panicked as one hopped across the lasers over the floor, and another leaped to grab the chandelier above. A dresser was standing against the wall, and Emily could jump onto it, and from there Sky Fly onto the chandelier to—the monkey greeted her with a storm of rapid punches, then- “Ow!” pushed her off. When the monkey ran to the opposite side of the chandelier afterward, Emily had Sarah shoot the ape repeatedly with slingshot pellets, distracting him so she could float onto the chandelier again to catch him.

The lasers scrolled around slowly, but Chucks were throwing torpedoes from afar in attempt to push the kids around. The kids avoided and shot the robots with slingshots, but a hidden Duplicatotron was spawning more. Gary simply shot the robots himself while his friends got across, then Emily destroyed the Duplicator hidden behind a wall. The second Pipo Monkey was still hopping around between the lasers, but Sarah kept him in place with slingshot while Gary netted him. The next passage was blocked by lasers, so the trio hopped up some stairs to an upper area composed of chandeliers. The chandeliers were far apart, requiring Sky Flyer usage, and lasers skimmed in-between. From the starting point, Sarah and Gary had to shoot Chucks while Emily crossed the platforms herself. She was able to get into a hidden room and destroy a Duplicatotron, afterwards flipping a switch to disable the lasers blocking the path.

“Plankton, I’m starting to doubt these people are from the Undersea Headquarters Sanitization Committee.” Karen’s voice sounded throughout the base.

“Quit worrying, Karen, this guy is totally credible, listen to him!”

“One year ago, we signed a contract with the Kremling Krew of Oceanic Base, which as you can see, has interior floors and walls with a newly-painted seaweed-green hue, complimenting their scales!” They heard Sheldon’s voice through the intercom. “Course, that’s nothing compared to the Marine Research Facility, although it is difficult to go five seconds without slipping, thanks to their polished marble floors.”

She returned to her friends, and they entered the new hallway where giant blue jellyfish floated in a river. A Search Sphere was moving about below, shining its light above the surface. The jellyfish served as barriers, but if they stood on them too long, they would electrify. They had to wait until the searchlight went away, then hop to the next jelly, and repeat the pattern until they were across. However, a Pipo Monkey was clutching a chain on the ceiling above one of the jellies. Emily shot it down with the slingshot, and Gary made his way across again to net. The trio entered a very tall, upward shaft, where a Search Sphere floated up-and-down through the center.

The kids put on their M.A.G.N.E.B.O.O.T.S. and walked up a metal path that went up the shaft. There were barriers in place in certain areas, to protect the group from the searchlight when it came by. Partway up, an alternate, snaky path led to a Pipo Monkey, who was taped to the wall. Sarah quickly stomped up to net it, then return under the shelter before the light caught her. At the top of the shaft, they switched for their real shoes and entered a wide, empty room, where steam pipes circled around. To open the next door, they had to catch three monkeys. They saw two peep out of hatches on pipes, so Emily rushed to one with her Super Hoop and bashed it open. “AAAH!” She was met with piping hot steam to the face, no monkey.

Clearly the three apes were switching between pipes, so they had to use the R.A.D.A.R. to find them. Emily ran to one pipe, Gary another, and Sarah the other, hitting those pipes open so they could catch the shifty monkeys. The door was open, but this entire following river passage had vertical and horizontal security lasers. Emily chose to use her S.P.E.C.S., flying them carefully around every wide-enough gap within the lasers. There was a wiring hatch in a far upper corner of the room, so Emily let her glasses float beside it, insert the cord, and begin hacking. All of the vertical lasers were disabled, so the crew could swim under and through the river. Two Pipo Monkeys rode Enguarde swordfishes, the kids barely avoided their jabs before catching the monkeys with Water Nets.

The kids had to swim through a rightward tunnel at the end, navigating a cavern of sea anemones and jellyfish. They encountered two Pipo Monkeys piloting mini-submarines and launching torpedoes. They couldn’t net the monkeys through the subs, so they lured them into the sea anemones. They were grabbed in their tentacles, the subs were squeezed and ruined, and when the monkeys swam out, they were netted. The trio swam to a more narrow tunnel, having to avoid electric eels as it snaked, and they resurfaced in a room. It was incredibly huge and wide, and a searchlight took up nearly the entirety of the space, its source coming from a glass dome on the ceiling. There were Sleepytime robots lurking around, and some naughty Pipo Monkeys who threatened to wake them. The robots couldn’t be shot with slingshots because they had protective lasers.

However, a trashcan was nearby, and using the handles of her S.P.E.C.S., Emily could cross them under the can’s lid’s handle and lift it. She turned the lid to face the searchlight as she made it float up to the source. A large area of floor was made a blind spot, and Emily controlled her glasses to keep protecting them as they trekked through the danger zone. The monkeys threatened to awaken the Sleepytimes, so Sarah shot and stunned them, Emily maneuvered the blind spot as they got closer, and Gary netted the apes. The friends had to press three switches around the room, each guarded by a Sleepytime. To destroy the robots, the kids crawled close within their range, and quickly shot an explosive pellet, so their laser couldn’t react in time.

With all three switches hit, a staircase extracted on one side, leading into a passage. The trio hurried over, and Emily kept protecting them with a blind spot as they jumped up. By this point, her eyes were getting tired, and walking while focusing on the monitor was no picnic either. Thankfully, after they made it into the passage, Emily could call her glasses back and put them on. At the end of this passageway of pipelines, they found the jail cell. (End song.)

Sandy Sidney had almost lost any hope. They were trapped in this dingy old place for days, and had nothing to eat but Chum Patties. But her spirits lifted when she heard the fast-paced footsteps rushing up the hall. A blonde girl with big square spectacles, and her two odd-looking friends hurried in. “Hu! Are you here to rescue us?”

“Never fear, little lady, the Kids Next Door is here!” Gary cheered dizzily. “And we may be here a while, because I need to take a rest.” So he plopped on his back and snored away.

Emily approached the girl’s cell. “Are there any other prisoners here?”

“Just me and my brother, I think. I’m Sandy, by the way, this is Jessie.” She indicated the unconscious, tan-skinned boy behind her.

“Mah brother, I get, but what’s his problem?” Sarah asked.

“I don’t know.” Sandy spoke sadly. “He forced himself to stay awake before we got here—then we get captured out of nowhere, and he won’t wake up! I’m really worried…”

“Don’t worry.” Emily drew her slingshot. “We’ll get you both out of here and get your brother help. Step back.” Sandy did as told, and Emily destroyed the cell’s lock with an explosive pellet.

Sandy grunted as she struggled to lift her brother up in both arms. “Could you help me carry him?”
“Not a problem. You two can get inside this.” Emily placed her Infi-Cube on the floor.

Sandy looked at it with confusion. “Th-That?”

“Yeah, just put your brother on it!”

Sandy carefully set Jessie onto the little box—“Wh-Whoa!” He was slurped inside like a vacuum. She frightfully stepped on it herself, and in she went. Emily closed the box and hid it under her coat. After Gary’s short-lived nap, the trio hurried back into the huge searchlight room. “Not so fast, kiddies!”

The searchlight vanished, and the doors on either end sealed. A figure emerged from the small stage in the center of the room: he wore a light-red jumpsuit, with blue rubber gloves, boots, and underpants, and a blue helmet-mask with a smirking red mouth and eyes. There was a blue belt with a gold buckle around his waist. “If you plan to escape this place with your lives, you’ll have to get past Man Ray! BWAH hah hah ha!”

“Holy cow! A muscular guy in speedos!” Emily exclaimed. “My one weakness! Must… avert… eyes… can’t… from… HOTNESS!…”

Sarah and Gary stared in disbelief. “We both know that’s yer overly-sarcastic mock.” Sarah said.

“Usually, you itch when you’re turned on.” Gary remarked.

“Huhu!” Emily blushed. “Forgive me for trying!”

“MOCK my speedos all you want, kiddies, but I am sporting the LATEST in supervillain swimwear!” Man Ray proceeded to make fashionable poses. “My muscle-tight body suit! Undergarments of the silkiest rubber! Topped with a Tickle Belt of solid gold buckle!”

“Tickle Belt?” Sarah questioned.

“Umm- that’s not important.” Man Ray furrowed. “You phonies from the UHSC have taken a very important prisoner from us! Hand us that weird voodoo box or else!”

Emily glanced at the Infi-Cube under her coat. She clutched her Stun Club and looked at him sternly. “You want these kids back, you’ll have to do it around the corner of my multi-directional glasses!”

“We both know they can’t do that.” The friends chorused.

“Why can’t I dream!!”

“Quit bickering!” Man Ray demanded. “Just try to get past my array of ‘multi-directional’ searchlights!” The supervillain pressed a remote, lowering a giant disco ball from the ceiling. Dozens of searchlights appeared and started circling the floor of the chamber. “By the end of this day, you’ll regret having never learned how to dance as well as… MAN RAY! Huu! Oh yes!” The speedo-wearing gentleman flashed his sexy poses on the stage. “That’s the stuff! Ho!”

“Well, he’s not as bad as Yellow Monkey…” Emily sighed. (Play the Mini-boss Theme from Battle for Bikini Bottom!)

Boss fight: Man Ray
The searchlights were turning rapidly, so getting close to the villain would be difficult. The trio used their slingshots to blast exploding pellets, but Man Ray was quick to react by punching and kicking, and being able to withstand the explosions, he was tougher than he looked. Man Ray whipped out a ray gun and started trying to blast the trio, giving them a trickier time with trying to strategize. Emily remembered his note about the Tickle Belt, so her curiosity reached the peak of her improbably large mind. She told Sarah and Gary to distract him with slingshot pellets, so without his ray gun to distract them, Emily flew her S.P.E.C.S. through the searchlights (the defense turrets didn’t register to them) and narrowed in on Man Ray. The villain was still distracted punching her friends’ pellets, so Emily was able to stick the S.P.E.C.S.’ cord into his belt lock.

“He he he he, he HWAH ha ha, HOO HOO HOO hahahahahaha!” The Tickle Belt lived up to its name, for the villain started laughing uncontrollably. The array of spotlights started skimming forward-and-back, left-to-right, whichever direction they chose at respective intervals. Sarah wanted the honor of landing the first blow, so she maneuvered around the quick-moving searchlights, leapt onto the villain’s stage, then jumped to bash Man Ray’s head with her Stub Club. “OUCH!” The force of the attack made him bump Emily’s glasses away from him, so free from his tickling, he grabbed Sarah and furiously threw her across the room. Man Ray pushed his remote again to raise his platform higher, nearly halfway up the room. They noticed grabbable ledges around the sides.

Not only were searchlights spinning around again, Man Ray skimmed security lasers across the room every few seconds, with wide-enough gaps for them to dodge, they just had to be attentive. It seemed the lasers could only sweep across certain areas, so the kids remained in the safe spots as they shot at Man Ray again. While he blocked the pellets, Emily sent her S.P.E.C.S. across the room, having to evasively dodge the security lasers that appeared out of nowhere, stretching across the room. They were a minor hazard, and once her glasses made it to Man Ray, they connected with the Tickle Belt and induced Tickle Torture. While Man Ray entered a laughing fit, the searchlights were still spiraling around the center, with only one empty spiral path going around to Man Ray.

Gary readied his Super Hoop, waited until the path’s entrance circled by him, then rushed on, keeping absolute focus to stay within the path’s boundaries, inching leftward the whole time as the road led into the center, and then he was at the risen stage. As he grabbed and hopped up each ledge, security lasers shone onto the pillar, requiring Gary to either jump or wait in order to avoid them. Once he made it onto Man Ray’s platform, he managed to land two hits against his head, before the villain shook free of the S.P.E.C.S. and kicked Gary away. Man Ray pushed his remote again and rose his platform to the near top of the dome-shaped room, a little under the disco ball.

No ledges led up around the side of the pillar, but after studying the room, they noticed a metal path going up and around the wall, ending near the ceiling. One of them could jump from there and Sky Fly onto the villain’s platform. But this time, Man Ray sent respawning Chucks to even the score. Emily flew her S.P.E.C.S. all the way up the tower, Sarah shot Man Ray with pellets, while Gary shot the Chucks, which proved tricky since they were high up in the air. Emily linked her glasses with the villain’s belt, then Sarah took the task of stomping all the way up the metal path with her M.A.G.N.E.B.O.O.T.S.. The Chucks still chucked torpedoes at her, so Gary defended her from the ground, so all Sarah had to do was watch out for the searchlights that skimmed by.

After nearly exhausting her legs, Sarah was at the top of the room, with Man Ray in close view. She jumped out of her metal boots, hovered across with Sky Flyer, avoided the disco ball’s searchlights (God, she would hate to get hit and have to do all that again), and thwacked the cackling supervillain with her Stub Club. “UAAAAAAAH!” Man Ray’s head flew clean off his body, landing close to Emily and Gary.
“AAAAAHH!” Emily screamed, calling her glasses back. “You beheaded him!!”

“No no, it’s alright!” Man Ray’s platform sunk back to the floor, as his body was gesturing with his hands. “My head naturally comes off, I’m still fine.”

“Aaaaaaand the explanation behind that is?” Sarah inquired.

“….I’m not really sure.”

“Well, I guess it’s alright if I do this, then.” So Emily whipped out her net, and “GOTCHA (GOTCHA)!” had the severed head teleported. Man Ray’s body panicked and ran around aimlessly, before slamming into the wall, falling, and shaking crazily.

“That doesn’t look too pleasant.” Gary commented.

“That’s because his head was warped to a cage full of monkeys.” Emily reminded. “I don’t think it’ll be in too fine a shape by the time he finds it.”

“Great. Now one of you get my boots back so we can get outta here.” Sarah stated.

“Yeah, sure. In a minute.” Emily put on her own M.A.G.N.E.B.O.O.T.S. and stomped up the path to recover Sarah’s. (End song.)

“No! STOP THEM, Dirty Bubble!” Sheldon J. Plankton yelled from his control room (don’t be confused with Sheldon Cooper). “We can’t let those clowns from the Undersea Headquarters Sanitization Committee get away with the Light! Catch them NOW!” (Play “Hell’s Gate” from Rayman Legends!)

Emily, Sarah, and Gary bolted down the halls of the mansion to find the docking room where Dr. Cooper waited. “Hnn HNN hnhnhnhnhnh!” A giant, brown bubble with an evil face was chasing them with swarms of robots. “Come back here, little morsels! I need a new helping of dung to refill my DIRTY Blasters!”

“SUPER HOOP IT, GUYS!” Emily screamed, so the trio spun their hoops to run faster. Chucks tossed torpedoes, the trio sidestepped left-and-right to avoid them, giant piranhas popped out of the floor ahead, they had to maneuver around those as well. A huge chunk of floor was broken, the trio leapt, spun their Sky Flyers to go across, landed on a stable foothold, then Sky Flew again. The entire fortress shook, for the mobile structure was shifting upwards, making the hallway slope incredibly, their feet were moving faster against all control. Parts of the floor popped open and shot water spouts, the kids made sure to avoid them, and then they took land in the water.

They quickly got their Water Nets and kicked hurriedly to swim, but Dirty Bubble had dove underwater and was on their tail still. Emily looked back, eyes widened when the bubble’s giant, demonic mouth loomed over, and she swam down to dodge when he chomped. Dirty Bubble shifted lower, readied to snack on her again, Emily hurriedly kicked up and dodged his teeth. He slowed down, but swarms of Torpedo Teds were coming out of holes, it took quick-thinking maneuvering to go around them. The kids swim into a dark tunnel, lit only by jellyfish and Search Spheres.

Aside from avoiding the jellies, the trio had to keep an eye out for the blockades and swim behind them to get past the searchlights. Water mines fell down from below, they had to maneuver down to avoid the high ones, then kick up to dodge the low ones, but they made it out of the water, and the ship shifted normal-ways again as they Super Hooped through a hall. A series of floor lasers was coming, they carefully jumped the gaps, they dodged fast-moving diagonal lasers, then

Waterfalls popped out of the floor, the kids expertly avoided them, they had to kick to and run along the opposite wall (ceiling), dodging the waterfalls and leaping Magikarp. The fortress shifted normal again, the kids landed on the floor and turned down another hall. They dove under another river, swimming past the incoming electric eels and continuing to outrun the smirking Dirty Bubble. Suddenly, a shark was coming their way, Emily blasted a Water Net at its face, causing the shark to haphazardly swim against the glass and pour all the water out. The kids were dumped out as well, they recognized this particular hall, they kept running along, then they were at the room of giant gears. They jumped their way down, then ran through what they recognized as the starting hall. They avoided the Sleepytime robots’ searchlights, and saw Sheldon’s submarine in sight.

Sheldon Cooper was brilliantly keeping his lie, “For just 200 doubloons, we’ll have the underside of your headquarters scrubbed of all soil, seaweed, and waste, but throw in an extra treasure chest, we can coat it with Sleek ‘n’ Slippery Soap, guaranteed to make filth fly off and keep your bottom clean for five-to-eight months!”

“Quit your bellyaching, I know what you’re really doing!” Plankton shouted.

“Oh, dear.” Sheldon frowned. Team Emily made it back just in time, slamming the door to their sub. “Okay, new plan!” Sheldon spoke quickly. “You’re all mentally ill children from the Make-A-Wish Foundation, your wish was to see the best aquarium possible, and the only one we could land was this one, you like to capture animals and break stuff for fun, so your reasons justify-”

“START THE RUDDER AND LET’S GO!” Emily ordered impatiently.

Quickly as he was startled, Sheldon started the ship, backed it away and under the surface, and out of the garage hatch just before it closed. He spun the wheel, turned the ship around, and sped them away from the mobile mansion as quickly as possible.

“They’re gaining on us, can’t this sub go any faster?!” Gary yelled when Torpedo Teds started to chase them.

“Hu- it can’t!” Sheldon panicked. “In the event we were chased by an enemy structure, we were meant to surrender while I offer my friends as sustenance!”

“No one is becoming sustenance today!” Emily declared as she turned a dial on her T.E.L.A.-N.E.T.. “Thankfully, I snapped other destinations with my net several months ago, in case we would have to make a getaway. Everyone stand still and we’ll make the leap to Sector L!”

“Are you sure this’ll work?” Sarah asked worriedly.

“This is why we test it with monkeys. Get ready, NOW!” Emily whipped her net over Sarah, then Gary, both were transported. “CURL UP, Tall Man from Cornwall!” Sheldon frightfully curled in a ball, enabling Emily to net him. She took out her Infi-Cube and netted that by itself, just in case. As the submarine was being bombarded by torpedoes, Emily forced the net over herself, and a-splopping she went. With no one controlling it, the submarine rammed into several small mountains, and along with the torpedoes, was torn to pieces.

“CURSES!!” Plankton furiously banged his control panel. “And my plan to capture the Light was so brilliant! Lesser Lord Ragaj told me who he was, and Mr. Dark said he was a Bubble Dreamer, so cornering him at Sabaody Park was perfect!” He grabbed the microphone and yelled demandingly, “All troops, MOVE OUT and find where those brats escaped! No matter who you have to destroy, find and recapture Jessie Sidney at all costs!” (End song.)

Sector V Treehouse

The KND’s largest field sector finally made their return to their favorite place. “Hooooome SWEET hooooome!” Haylee cried, happy to bask in the scent of their hangar. “I have MISSED this place!” She twirled as they headed for the door.

“I’m actually allowed in here now?” Django asked.

“You’ve proven your trust, congratulations.” Dillon said with slight sarcasm. The group entered the living room. “You and Carol will make excellent—!” They all gaped.

The wooden walls were decorated bright green, gorgeously intricate rugs were lain around, and the tables, cabinets, and chairs were replaced by those of the fanciest quality. Django looked weirdly at all of their struck-open mouths and eyes. “What?”

“WHAT HAPPENED TO OUR TREEHOUSE?!” Haylee screamed.

“Impressive, isn’t it?” a familiar voice perked up.

Their second surprise of the day. “Carol? . . .” Mason stuttered. “Is that you?”

Carol Masterson wore a green business suit with a white shirt and blue tie underneath. She had a dark-green skirt and very high white socks that went into black Mary-Janes. She held a laptop in her right arm, her light-blonde hair was in two puffy buns, and her blue eyes were as clear and pretty as ever. “Meet Carol Masterson: Computer Nerd!” She winked and stuck a tongue out at them.

They couldn’t take their eyes off of her. “Carol, what the heck did you do?! Mason asked. “How did you get in our treehouse?”

“As I learned in Arctic Training, with additional help from my butler, Jenkins, I am a master Computer Expert! I let myself in using pro hacking, then I called a couple hundred helpers to redecorate this place while you were away. I think this place looks a HUNDRED times prettier! Well, Maseyfairy? I know you think I look cute.” She swayed her hip.

Mason blushed, shaking his head. “It’s certainly a wild change of style!”

“Well, I had a wild change myself: I went from richest girl in Cleveland to smartest computer wiz in KND… while still having millions of dollars at my disposal! Actually, when I was running laps during training, my ginormous hair got stuck on a broken oil can, so Numbuh 6,000 suggested I get a haircut. He recommended a girl named Aeincha from Sector W7, so I hitched a ride to her sector a couple days ago. I don’t know if you know her, but she was… not what I expected.”

“Wait… YOU’RE Aeincha?” Carol asked with the clearest confusion.

“You were expecting somebody bigger?” Aeincha blushed, scratching her head.

“Kind of. I was told you’re the best stylist in the organization. And for the record, I have a whole team of barbers style my hair, so I know how to judge.”

“Oh, yeah? Come to my room and I’ll show you what real quality work is!” Aeincha smirked confidently.
Carol was later seated by a sink in Aeincha’s room, back facing it while her huge puffy hair was lain atop it. Aeincha certainly had a lot to work with; she never imagined a person carrying this much hair. It would be a real test of her abilities, but Aeincha wasn’t afraid. She spent several minutes combing and brushing, noting every single pattern of the strands. When she was ready, she picked up the pair of scissors in both hands, cutting with absolute precision in all the right areas. Her little arms were used to handling such large items, she trained herself to work with them quickly; she wouldn’t let tiredness get the best of her, this operative-in-training needed an example of KND’s greatness.

Aeincha had a pile of severed strands on the floor and sink. Carol had lost a terrific portion of her hair, but once it was short enough, Aeincha retrieved two blue braids from the drawer. It took just as much strength and effort to pull the still-thick hair into two puffy buns, and tie them in place. “Huff… huff… huff…” Aeincha sat on the edge of the sink to catch her breath. “Do you like it?”

Carol stood and viewed her new appearance in the mirror. Her eyes went wide. “It’s so pretty!! I didn’t think someone so tiny could MAKE something like this!”

“Heh… really?” Aeincha smirked, her heart still not caught up. “That was nothing.”

“I feel so light and pretty and SMART!” Carol twirled joyfully. “And Maseyfairy will SO go google-eyes for me! …Here. For your troubles.” She placed a bundle of dollars beside the little barber.

“Aaaaahhh-!” Aeincha went google-eyes over all those ‘100’s. That bundle of bucks became her temporary bed. “I never wanna spend this.”

“I’ve been able to move MUCH faster,” Carol twirled, “and I feel a jillion times smarter, too!”

“So you’re a Computer Expert now…” Dillon replied solemnly. “Just like… Vanellope.”

“Oh…” Carol frowned. “I almost forgot… I’m not trying to replace-”

“No-no, it’s fine, it’s fine. C-Carol, you called us because you said my dad got arrested.”

“Oh, right!” Carol sat down and placed her laptop on the floor, “Well, when I went to the party on Mariejoa, I logged into the mountain’s Wi-Fi. I wanted to hack into the World Government’s database, but I wasn’t sure how to go about it. Thankfully, Cheren lent me his 4DS before he got toyified; I didn’t remember who it belonged to at the time, but it was extremely helpful. I Copied and Pasted his Miis to my computer, and with some quick modifying, they were able to steal their passcodes! Of course, they did need a little leadership. Guess what new friend I made!”

“Beep! Beep! Bip-bip-bip BEEP!” a familiar, two-dimensional black creature floated down on a 2-D parachute.

“Mr. Game-and-Watch!” Aurora beamed.

“I met him a while ago, when I practiced hacking into your treehouse.” Carol winked. “He was pretty upset over Vanellope going missing, so I gave him a little patting on the back. WHO helped me hack into a top-secret Government website, YOU did, THAT’S who!” Carol lovingly petted Game-and-Watch’s head. If he could make other colors, he would be smiling and blushing. “But more importantly, they had a list of wanted posters, and which of those criminals they had incarcerated. Nolan York is being held in the CIA Headquarters, Langley Falls! Pending interrogation!”

“Sigh, it was only a matter of time, huh Dad?” Dillon sighed.
“CIA, shme-I-A, let’s bust in there and save his half-dead ass!” Django fist-palmed.

“If I get close enough to the building, I should be able to hack Game-and-Watch into their—” Carol froze. She stared weirdly at Django. “…Who’s the skeleton?”

“The hottest guy you’ll ever meet.”

“Dillon, I dunno if we should help your dad, yet.” Chris said. “We need to get your shadow back.”

“His… shadow?” Carol questioned.

Midna came out from under Dillon. “Allow me to explain:”

So Carol got to hear their exciting and dramatic tale. “Ohhhhh! So THAT’S what happened in Peter Pan!” she realized.

“With this mystery solved, it is now a beautiful piece of cinema!” Artie smiled.

“Carol, do you think you could save Dad?” Dillon asked. “I mean, if you’re really that good at what you do…”

“I could…” Carol frowned sadly. “But I really wanted to go on a mission with you. I wanna show you how much smarter I’ve gotten, Maseyfairy. And a place like Twilight Town sounds soooooo romantic!”

“Carol, an operative must plan based on what’s best, not what one wants.” Aurora spoke wisely.

“Then again, my dad’s a pro hacker himself, he can probably bust himself out.” Dillon noted.

“No, Dillon… I have to do this for you.” Carol decided. “I’ll go to Langley Falls and rescue your dad! Meanwhile, you should just worry about getting your shadow back and not dying like a vampire. However, as soon as Mr. York is safe, I’m coming to Twilight Town for an endless evening of romance!!”

“It’s officially a race to get Dillon’s shadow back.” Mason blushed with embarrassment. “Um… just out of curiosity, Carol, did you decorate me and Haruka’s room?”

“Oh ho ho hoooo.” She winked.

Then Mason was staring humiliatingly at his room. Paintings of Carol, sculptures of Carol, cookie jars of Carol, Carol pillow, Carol blanket, Carol absolutely ensured Mason could be with her all night. “…Kirie, may I move into your room? I think Carol’s gonna take my spot.” Haruka asked.

Cyberspace

“That stupid Ragaj doesn’t make my job easy.” XANA mumbled as he was hard at work fixing a robot. “So I hope you will change that. I’m reviving you from Digital Nothingness specifically for your excellent construction skills. This entire world is a mess, so you better be worth the money.” He closed the hatch on its chest and walked away. “I was to understand your field of combat is range and deception, rather than direct. Well, that’s acceptable, but expect to be submitted through some experiments.”

XANA pulled a lever. The metal bed the robot rested on began to shift vertically. “Based on Lesser Lord Gnik’s orders, you are to help repair every pixel in this realm, leave no spot unchecked. And if you see a little girl with candy in her hair, give her the same treatment. I actually have a more important task for you, but I’ll test your ability on the field, first. Do you understand… Peridot?”

She was a Program composed of green skin of various hues in different parts of her body. Her legs became bulky past the knee and ended in boots, and her fingers were little green bars floating separate from her stubby hands. Her hair was a pale yellow, shaped like a tetrahedron, she had a visor over her eyes, and a triangle-shaped green gem on her forehead. Her green eyes opened—“AAAAAAHH!” She began shaking and looking around frantically, her arms and legs still binded to the bed. “Where are they?! Where am I?! No no no this is bad, I can’t be captured, I have to report back to-!”

XANA socked her across the jaw, knocking Peridot dizzy. “Nnnnn bvoold wrznImw… hzev nv…” She was unconscious.

XANA angrily pulled out a notepad and wrote, “Note to self: Before giving an instructional speech, make sure the Program actually pays attention, and/or has no past trauma.”

So I wonder what Olive’s true name is, then. :O Ehh, not important. So um, yes, Carol Masterson is now a computer nerd, and is based off of Rebecca Hawkins from Yu-Gi-Oh, whom actually shares Carol’s voice actor, Kerry Williams. She is officially Vanellope’s replacement in Sector V. Next time, we will go to Twilight Town, so Dillon may begin his path to reclaiming his shadow. Later.

Chapter Summary

Sector V heads to Twilight Town.

Today’s code uses both the Caesar and A1Z26 Cipher, with the latter being reversed. Can’t make these codes too easy!

Chapter 32: Mother of Shadows

Pennsylvania; Twilight Forest

Sector V landed the C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. deep within the dark forest and stepped off. The sun was halfway over the horizon, giving the sky deep shades of orange and magenta. The trees were very shadowed under the branches, and an eerie chill fell down their spines as the wind rustled the leaves. “Why couldn’t we land close to Twilight Town?” Dillon questioned.

“Because it’s a secluded setting.” Midna stated. “You think any aircraft can just fly there willy-nilly? Well, yes, but show a little more respect, why don’t you.”

“I wouldn’t mind a quiet stroll.” Django stretched his old bones. “Cold breeze, darkness. Think we can see some predator action?”

“I came here with my mom to train, so I kind of memorize the way.” Dillon mentioned. “There’s just a few creatures we have to watch out for.”

“I’ll provide your shadowbending on the way, but don’t get steam-headed.” Midna told him. “Or I may just up and leave like Mario.” (Play “Forest Interlude” from Donkey Kong Country 2.)

“Wait, wasn’t that the same music for Forest of Darkness? Why couldn’t we just make them one in the same?” Dillon questioned.

“Looks like I need to go over the fundamentals of shadowbending again so you understand why it’s HARDER to bend at nighttime.” Midna stated.

“Alright, never mind.”

Stage 41: Twilight Town

Mission: Make it to Twilight Town.

Not many areas of ground were touched by the orange sunlight, but as they followed Dillon through the trees, they spotted shadows in those sun patches, who perked and sunk away when the humans looked at them. The team encountered a group of jagged rocks blocking their way, however one of the stones was movable, Dillon remembered, as he extracted Midna’s big ponytail hand to push it forward. The group entered a clearer part of the forest, where Hyper Clefts – green, spiked stone creatures – charged out of bushes to ram the kids. “Just so you know, I can make new inventions, too.” Harry announced as he placed his boombox on the ground. He turned it on, and its loud tunes shook the ground forcefully, flipping the Clefts upside-down so that Chris and Sheila could punch them senseless with their fists.

Shadows appeared on the sides of trees and rocks, grinning Cheshire-style at the kids before swooping away. The group stepped up a few short mounds before getting to a narrow pathway within the grass. Crazee Dayzees leapt out from the sides and charged at them, Kirie thought fast and tossed flower shurikens to knock them out. The path led to a barren tree, where Murkrow swooped down at them from its branches, Mason and Haru shot gas puffs to put them asleep. The path turned rightward, ending at a vast trench chasm. They questioned what to do, until Dillon punched the tree, and a swarm of shadows flew out of its shadow and down the cliff. They gasped with horror when Dillon jumped down, but the child stopped partway down in midair.

Sheila was obviously next to jump down, then the others followed suit—they realized those shadows were forming a midair pathway. However, they were against the cliff, so the kids’ shadows stood on them, making it seem like they were standing on invisible ground. Dillon assured it was fine and kept leading them forward. They had to jump square-shaped lumps in the shadows, over a slight hole, then carefully jump a series of separate platform shadows, before Wall Jumping parallel columns of shadows, landing on a dead-end shadow-platform. “Then my mom would Shadow Glide us to that path.” Dillon pointed across the trench.

“Screw that.” Django strummed his guitar, summoning a bridge of skeletons to cross over. “These guys start to fall after you step on them, ME FIRST!” Django ran across the skeletons, the kids quickly followed as one-at-a-time, the dead bones collapsed. They safely made it to a grassy path void of most trees, and the view of the orange-magenta sky was brilliant. Deinos were hidden within the grass, and when the kids drew close, the Pokémon coughed blue fire at them. Aurora and Chris caught the flames in their palms, though it was heavy and pushed them back, being of its origins. They chucked the flames at the Deinos as Aurora followed them with ice blasts, defeating the young dragons in seconds.

Dillon led them to another cliff overlooking a chasm, but no shadows led the way down. He mentioned his aunts having to find them hidden across the grass plain, so the group split up. Dillon uncovered the first shadow underneath a boulder, which he used Midna to push off. Kirie happily hopped up a pine tree, finding a shadow at the top and tagging him. Sheila wandered to a large boulder with a cave-like dent in its side, pitch-black inside, but when she punched a Light Sphere, the shadow panicked and flew out. Haylee found a very skinny, dead tree – looked more like a branch growing from the ground, and hit it with her wrench to scare the shadow out. Harry came to a garden of tall grass, but it was easy to scare the shadow out by blasting his boombox.

Django twirled his guitar and blasted a laser at each in a grouping of boulders. He discovered the shadow in the third one, but destroyed the rest just for fun. Mason and Haruka sent gas up twin trees, scaring the shadow out with no place else to go. Aurora froze a pond, seeing the shadow trapped inside, then pelted him free. Finally, Artie had a gut feeling a shadow was under that small rock—he flipped it over and found an Amazy Dayzee. Artie bolted away, not wishing to duel the golden, overpowered flower. It didn’t matter, ‘cause they found all the hiding shadows. Dillon jumped off the cliff first, a shadow grabbed him, threw him to the first one within the narrow trench, got thrown to the next, following the zigzagging path within the trench, until the shadows threw him safely on a new forest floor.

His friends were able to enjoy the wild ride as well, then they explored this open, soil ground with several trees scattered about, with varying height. Sheila spun and punched a Light Sphere; there were shadows on the trees, hidden in this area where sun didn’t shine, but Sheila’s light could reveal them. They could stand on a shadow around a tree that was almost touching the ground. The next tree had a shadow halfway up, but was too far to jump to, but when Dilllon made the leap, he grabbed onto a force halfway. Clearly the shadows weren’t positioned directly beside the trees. They saw an open shadow hand on a faraway tree, Dilllon made the jump, he didn’t go far before the invisible spirit grabbed, whirled him, and chucked him onto a shadow to a further tree. The friends caught up with Sheila in company, and the next alignment of trees had shadows with arms positioned like bounce pads.

Dilllon led the way, landing on invisible platforms that made them go bouncy, repeating this act carefully across the trees. There was a hidden area to their right, so Kirie decided to glide over and follow it. She found a wrinkled, blue-skinned old Twili, sitting still as a ghost beside the bushes. “Iluvw H… wkhq I… qrz J. Zkdwv qhaw, K?”

Silly old man! Kirie smiled, before returning to her friends. They continued across the bounce pad shadows, lest they fall into the bushes below and have to fight Hyper Clefts, but they successfully made it to a new path. It was straightforward, though Chris was ready to set fire to bushes if anything came out—then he felt something tap his shoulder. He whipped around to Harry with a start. “What?”

Harry raised a brow. “Um… nothin’?”

“Don’t do that.” They kept walking. Something tapped Chris’s shoulder again- “Stop that, Harry!”

“I ain’t doin’ nothin’!”

“AAAH!” Haruka freaked, grabbing her dress. “Something just lifted my skirt!”

“Mason, didn’t we talk about brushing your teeth?” Haylee asked, waving an awful stench away from her nose.

“How d’you know that isn’t Django?”

“It isn’t, guys.” Dilllon said with disbelief. “It’s the Ghost Pokémon.”

A Gastly, a Haunter, and a Gengar materialized, cackling humorously at the children. “Very funny, guys.” Haruka put hands on her hips. “Are you gonna help or not?”

The Pokémon exchanged glances… and nodded. They flew down the path, so the kids followed quickly. “It’s a maze over here, you have to follow the path they hint out.” Dilllon said. They came to a circular path with four different roads, with bushes, trees, and rocks within the center. Chris set fire to the assaulting Green Fuzzies as the friends searched for the ghosts’ hints. Aurora studied a jagged rock close to one path, and it formed lips, leaned in, and smooched her. Aurora frantically shook the germs off, then indicated this path. Another circular area, Django shot down some Inkay Pokémon using his guitar laser. While Artie followed behind Haylee, the brother panicked when a leafless tree revealed big eyes and sharp fangs, ready to snack on Haylee unsuspectingly. Artie yelled for her, but the tree stood back to normal when she looked. His heart racing, Artie pointed this as the correct path.

On this next circle road, some Weavile zipped out of the bushes, Sheila was swift to dodge their quick attacks and defeat them with Light Fists. The friends kept an eye out for the “subtle” clue—when a boot popped out of a bush and kicked Harry down a path. Must be the right way. Flower Fuzzies attacked in this area – pink Fuzzies which suck their chi – Haylee bashed them with her wrench while Artie gooped them with a M.U.S.K.E.T.. When Kirie innocently walked by a path, Haunter popped out, clamped a hand over her face, and forced a fart out of her (however that worked). Haunter laughed, and the kids followed that path. They were at the final circle road, nothing to attack them. It took a while to find the subtle hint, but then Dillon indicated the secret 5th path, within the hologram of some woods. The illusion dispersed—“BAAAAAAAIIEEE!” Gengar screamed in Dillon’s ear, totally surprising him, but at least the kids were through with that area.

The Pokémon laughed at Gengar’s action. “Thank you for helping us.” Haruka spoke with half-politeness. The ghosts nodded and faded away. Sector V began the trek up a steep, rocky mountain, having to take high steps or climb up tall mounds, really putting their legs to work. But they heard forceful flapping of wings: a Hydreigon flew down, the three-headed final form of Deino. The dragon prepared to blast them with its breath, but Django sighed impatiently and strummed his guitar, summoning three large skeletons to jump onto and pin it to the ground. The skeletons choked the dragon’s heads, until Midna flew out and destroyed them with Shadow Balls. “Don’t do that!” she yelled at him. “It’s just protecting Twilight Town!”

“Well, I’m protecting you guys!” Django argued. “And using this guitar a lot takes my energy, so you should thank me.”

“It all worked out, so don’t worry.” Dillon said as they bypassed the weakened Pokémon. “Let’s just get there.” They had to climb a rugged wall up the rest of the mountain, but once they made it, they were there. (Play “Twilight Town” from Paper Mario: TTYD.)

Twilight Town was a small and peaceful village, composed of mostly wooden houses. The trees had very few leaves, and pitch-black crows with eerie white eyes sat on the branches. The eternal sunset still peered at them from the horizon, but atop this mountain, over all the trees, it was even prettier to look at. The rest of the sky was a shade of magenta, and the yellow Full Moon was in marvelous view. Then there was the townspeople: they wore average, old-timey clothing, they had hair colors of brown, orange, yellow, black – like any normal human – but their skin was surreal green, blue, or purple respectively, and their glowing eyes peered from the shadowy dark top areas of their face. They were the Twili, and seeing them interact with the actual shadows, the whole presence of the town made their skin tingle.

“They kind of look like Midna.” Haylee noted.

“That’s not surprising.” Midna came out of Dillon. “I was the original shadow and Twili. Remember the Twili are descended from ordinary humans who moved to the Shadow Realm, and grew closely accustomed with the shadows and shadowbending. Not that I’m saying I’m human-designed, we Firstborn are more-or-less… fairies.”

“But the Twili are basically human just like us.” Aurora understood. “They just prefer more shade.”

“Like nerds.” Haruka remarked.

Kirie gasped brightly and silently: there were certain animals roaming the streets of Twilight Town. PIGGIIIIEEEEES! She joyfully skipped to one of the chubby oinkers.

“DON’T, Kirie!” Artie jumped in the way. He wore a skeptical scowl that you’d see on a conspiracy theorist. “I saw this in a movie once: every time the steeple bell tolls, a villager gets turned to a pig!” He whipped around and clamped the pig’s face. “Who did you use to be?! Wait, let me call someone on my Galactic Transmission Radio!” He pulled out a small, high-tech radio and tapped some buttons.

A girl answered, “Hey, Artie, what’s up?”

“Makava, get Arianna! I need her to ask this pig something!”
“Um… okay? Ari, it’s for you.”

“Hello?”

“Arianna, translate this pig for me!” He held the microphone by the pig’s mouth. “Now, did you use to be human…oid?”

“Oink oink oink.”

“Void of all human sense.” Artie sighed with regret. “The horror…”

“How long did you have that, ’cause we coulda called for help in Solana.” Haruka stared at him.

“Hello, visitors!” They looked to their right. An ordinary Twili with green skin and brown hair under a hat approached them. “Welcome to Twilight Town! I’m Freddy, the tour guide. This must be your first time, since we don’t have many humans. …Are all you kids by yourself?”

“I’m 46 years old, so technically I’m the responsible adult!” Django shouted.

“I’ve actually been here before.” Dillon informed. “With my mom and aunts. But that was only to train, I never actually explored.”

“Wait, are you part of the class that warps here often?” Freddy asked.

“What class?”

“HEY, DUDES!!” a woman’s voice shouted from afar. They saw her running their way, black hair in two pigtails, pale skin, a black shirt and shorts that showed her belly, and holding a cigarette between her fingers.

“Mrs. Stork!” Dillon exclaimed.

“’t’s okay, Freddy, I’ll take it from here.” Virginia assured him, blowing a smoke.

“Cough!” the Twili choked. “Be my guest.” He quickly walked away.

“Dudes, how’s it hangin’?” The 34-year-old woman asked perkily. “I stepped away from my class for a quick smoke, then here you guys are!”

“Oh yeh, I forgot.” Harry spoke. “Sunni told me Twilight Town was one of the places for her dad’s school.”

“Yeah, we warp here with a team of psychicbenders.” Virginia said. “Speaking of warping, Lola and Terry are here, too. Now, what’s this about you guys sending them into space?”

“Looking back, we’re starting to think it was a pointless gesture.” Harry said.

“They said they saved a mountain from some ghosts. I dunno if that has any relevance, but it sounded pretty cool!” Virginia blew a smoke. “So what’re you dudes doing here?”

Dillon’s friends looked at him, and he especially felt Midna’s one-eyed glare. “I got in a fight with my shadow and we think he ran away here.”

“Wow, dude, really? Well, this might be kinda awkward.”
“Isn’t that the same with a lot of shadows here?” Aurora asked.

“Yeah, but… lemme show you somethin’.” Virginia led the team across the road, around some village houses. She indicated the tall, dark statue in a town square, depicting a long-haired woman in a dress. An old, blue-skinned Twili, with white fluffy brows and mustache, standing with a cane, was beside the statue. Virginia approached him. “Kids, this is Mayor Dour (pronounced ‘dow-er’). Hello, Mr. Mayor.”

“Oh, visitors.” The old Twili turned to face them. “Are they on a field trip?”

“Oh, of course… This fine woman is the ruler of this land. Daphne Anderson, also known as one of the World Leaders. We at Twilight Town were always poor, little food and resources, until this woman rose to power. She was born here, you see, adorable little girl. Who would’ve thought someone from a country as poor as ours would rise to such greatness?”

“Daphne… Anderson?” Dillon gazed at the statue.

“Is she one of your relatives??” Haylee asked with surprise.

“She’s my… great-aunt. My mom mentioned her.”

“Did she mention she was one of the World Leaders?” Chris asked with spite.

“…No.”

“You kids seem like you’re familiar with her.” Dour noted. “She is quite famous, true.”

“The World Leaders are monsters!” Chris yelled. “They killed our dad!”

“I’ve heard…” Virginia spoke regretfully.

“Now, that’s quite a stretch.” Dour replied. “Mother Anderson is a kind woman. We’ve never felt safer under her rule. And the shadows, especially…”

BONG. . . . BONG. . . .

“AAAAAAHHH!” Artie stuck his head under Kirie’s sweater. “It’s happening!! Someone’s gonna get piggied!!” Kirie smiled and patted his back.

However, they all looked with wonder and confusion when all of the disembodied shadows, as well as those belonging to Twili, wistfully flew away. They were going to a distant part of the forest, like a swarm of black, see-through clouds. “It’s the stroke of Pure Twilight.” Dour informed. “7:00p.m.. When every conscious shadow is called to Minerva’s Cathedral for one hour. Naturally, we shadowless benders have to stay in the shade, which isn’t hard since most of town is shaded.”

“Everyone has to go shadowless for one hour, why?” Midna questioned.

“Because they are having a session with Mother Daphne herself. She resides in the cathedral, whenever she isn’t on Mariejoa. There, she soothes them. Gives them bliss, and peace of mind. Then they return and spread their bliss to us. Then we Twili feel we never have to worry. This is mostly for the shadows who were deserted by their benders. Mother Daphne will send those shadows back to them, with the hopes tensions between them will be cured.”
“So Mario must be at that cathedral.” Dillon deduced, looking in the distance. “Come on, team, let’s get him back.” He started to walk forward.

“Wait, Dillon!” Haruka grabbed him. “One of the World Leaders is in that building! If Mr. Uno couldn’t beat them, maybe we should stay out of it.”

“Except Dad was by himself.” Chris fist-palmed. “If this lady’s by herself, we can easily jump her and take her out. Heck, I’ll blow that building up with my Combustion Beam.”

“Don’t act like an idiot, Chris!” Aurora stated. “I hate them for what they did to Dad, too, but we shouldn’t just go bursting in!”

“Why not, Aurora, she’s outnumbered, we can totally whoop her butt!”

“I second the motion.” Django raised his hand. “If she sends those shadows at us, I got an army of skeletons at my disposal.”

“Plus we have Midna, a Firstborn, we can get Mario back AND take out one of our major enemies!” Dillon reasoned.

“You realize you kids are talking about destroying the savior of this village in the middle of town, and in front of the mayor.” Virginia said with disbelief.

Now that they realized, a lot of townspeople were looking at them weirdly. “It’s okay, guys, they’re just kidding around!” Midna assured them. “You know how immature children are.” She pinched Dillon’s cheek playfully.

“Ms. Stork, can you take us someplace more private?” Aurora requested.

“Sure, dudes.”

The smoking woman brought them to a dark alley, leaning against the side of a house and smoking while the kids talked. “Okay, so let’s get some facts straightened out:” Aurora began. “One of the World Leaders, right now, is out in the forest. Assuming she’s by herself, it’s all of us against her. We can safely assume she is a crazy-powerful shadowbender. However, we have the Shadow Firstborn. Also, Sheila is a lightbender, me and Chris are firebenders, and if she sent all those shadows to attack us, maybe Django could fight them with his skeletons. Then again, all of the townspeople love her, and attacking her may kinda get the other World Leaders riled up. So in conclusion: We should not fight Daphne Anderson.”

“Why the heck not?!” Chris shouted.

“Look, we may SEEM like we’ve got the advantage, but we don’t know how strong this woman really is! We only came here to get Mario back, so that’s what we’re gonna do. We’ll wait for that… ‘session’ to end, then Dillon will have a man-to-shadow talk with Mario when he gets back. And to be honest, Chris… we never really asked Grim which of the World Leaders killed Dad. If anything, The King did it; or maybe they all did it together, we aren’t sure.”

“Sigh… all right.” Her brother folded his arms.

“So why don’t we find the inn Dillon’s aunt works in and settle in.” Harry suggested.

Artie hoarsely cracked up. “_That was the best sentence you ever said!!_”

“Aw, please.”
“I’m all for that, dudes.” Virginia said. “Ah’ll take ya to her place.”

The Shady Inn was 5 stories tall, though it seemed kind of small in width. “Hey, I’ll tell Lola and Terry you’re here, so you can hang out later.” Virginia told them before leaving them to enter.

The kids met a very tall woman of 38 years old with black hair at the reception desk. She smiled brightly at them. “Dillon! Hi, little guy!”

“Hi, Aunt Victoria.” Dillon blushed. “These are the guys. And girls. And dead guy.”

“Hm hm, it’s nice to finally meet all of you! Danika told me you were coming—did you really get in a fight with your-”

“YES.” Dillon was tired of repeating this.

“Heh heh…” Victoria blushed. “Well, don’t worry, I’m sure you’ll straighten it out. We have two rooms prepared for you—we assumed you wanted Boys’ Side and Girls’ Side, so—”

“We’ll take it from here, Miss!” a woman said. Three Twili showed up with bright expressions. A woman with dark red hair and glowing blue eyes, a man with bright blue hair and green eyes, and a Twili that was half their size and looked like a two-legged black-and-white cat.

“Let us show you to your room, kids!” the man followed.

“We got a ton of plates of dunch set up for ya!” the cat replied with an accent. “That’s dinner-plus-lunch.”

The boys took a room on the second floor while the girls had the room next to it. Artie took out his Infi-Cube and popped out all the sleepover essentials, pajamas, sleeping bags, and some handheld games for all of them. “When is bedtime, exactly?” Harry questioned.

“Please, try Shady Inn’s Peachy Peaches and Golden Tea!” the red-haired woman offered the foods with a bright grin.

“And for the Firstborn of Shadow herself, fresh Inky Soup!” The cat handed Midna a bowl of shadowy soup.

“Thank you.” Midna smiled, holding the spoon in her ponytail hand while she slurped.

“We’ll be up with your meals shortly!” the woman beamed as they backed weirdly out of the room. “If you need anything else, please don’t hesitate to ask!”

The three Twili calmly walked away from the twin rooms. They held their heads close to each other as the man whispered, “Was that really her, Meowth?”

“Yeah, the Foistborn of Shadow, Midna!” Meowth perked up.

“Hm hm, this is too easy!” Jessie grinned. “We’ll wait until their guard is down, and that Firstborn is ours for the taking! The boss will be so pleased!”

“Just play it cool until then, capiche?” Meowth said as they resumed walking.

“Blunkers, do me soles need some airin’!” Sheila sighed in relaxation, plopping front-first onto the bed.

The boys and girls stared weirdly at her. “Don’t you wanna be in the girls’ room, Sheila?” Mason
“Who the heck says we should?” she questioned. “We all shared a room on Sunny Day. Like that night that was really cold, and we were shivering.”

“Please don’t mention it.” Mason sunk.

“So we all cuddled up together like rodents in a cave.” Sheila hugged the bed lovingly.

“And Carol held Mason like a body pillow.” Haylee said.

“They’re mentioning it.” Mason flushed.

“Don’t you wanna come and explore the town, Sheila?” Haruka asked. “Cause that’s what we’re doing, maybe hang out with Terry and Lola. We can keep an eye out for Mario, too.”

“I think I’ll rest for now.” Dillon lied on the floor with his arms wrapped behind his head. “Think about what I’m gonna say to Mario.”

“Oi, somebody climb in with me and we’ll think together.” Sheila spoke lazily—she already looked fast asleep, and drool leaked from her mouth. Mason raised a brow, suspecting she was off on a Dream Land adventure.

“I need some alone time, too.” Chris said before leaving down the hall.

The male Uno child held his head down, one hand over his forehead. One of the World Leaders was in the forest… one of the people that killed his dad. Made Cheren upset. He really wanted to go out there and attack her, but he feared Aurora was right. Her strength might be too much for them. But what if she decided to come to town herself and see them? Would they have a choice? “Your turn.” A gruff old voice said from a closed door.

They sounded familiar to Chris. He held an ear by that door.

“I wager 200 years of damnation.”

“You will suffer for all your sins, Sire!”

Now they creeped him out. Chris walked away- “Where are you going, Boy?” He stopped. He looked at the door, clenching his teeth in fright. “I can feel your rage. Please, come inside.”

Chris lightly creaked open the door to the small room. “Have a seat.” The taller man said.

Chris gasped. “What’re you two doing here?” (End song.)

Sector L Treehouse

Danny gathered the papers and stacked them neatly together, ready to do another news segment. He glanced over at his sister, who was playing dead on the couch. “Melody, are you sure you don’t wanna anchor with me?”

“I told you, Danny, I’m done.” She rolled over.

“Come on. Remember when Mom used to recap the events of Firstborn? I feel like this story is due for some recaps, since it’s longer.”

“Alright, fine.” Melody groggily walked up and took the papers. Her eyes were baggy in the camera, her long hair was a mess, and she spoke quickly. “Good evening, everyone, this is Melody Jackson, here to recap the events of Seven Lights. First, Sector IC went to Glacia and murdered Elsa ‘cause Frozen is getting old, Cheren got turned into a monkey by Aunt Morgan, Corporate President Doflamingo got hung by a birdcage, there’s a Ninth Firstborn named Sugar, and Hatsune Miku was her Guardian, Phosphora escaped from prison, we learned she was a religious nut that got bitch-slapped by her god, now Fybi and Suki are Lights, also Chimney got shrunk and Jar Jar is traveling with Maddy, and I think Arianna hatched a giant sting ray, also Tronta’s gay—THIS has been Melody Jackson, see you in 30 chapters when this plot advances.” So with that concluded, she returned to the couch.

“Danny, I just can’t take it, anymore.” Melody folded her arms and rolled away. “I didn’t know what I was expecting when I took over this KNN stuff, maybe report some major victories, juicy secrets, the most dramatic thing I was expecting was daily decommissions. Hearing about the ‘Apocalypse’ out of nowhere, then Cheren killing a corporate billionaire, it’s… sigh, it’s just that these’re too big of things for me to think about.” She spoke more sadly. “I’m training with Mom to become better at waterbending so I can help, too, but I can’t just sit in front of the cameras and talk about these things comfortably. Especially Mr. Uno…”

“But Melody, they’re relying on us to keep everyone up to date. And ever since this ‘Apocalypse’ thing started, crazy things’ve been happening left-and-right. One minute, we’re having this emotional moment, all of a sudden four intrepid explorers fall out of the sky.”

“Danny, what makes you think four people would-”

Five flashes of light appeared above the room, Sarah fell out, Gary, Sheldon Cooper, an Infi-Cube, then Emily Garley. “OOOF.” All on top of each other.

“…We have our next news segment.” Melody remarked.

The next 10 minutes were spent getting all of them straightened up, Emily releasing Jessie and Sandy from the Infi-Cube, and the crazy events that led to them splorping inside their treehouse. “Then these three came to rescue us and, put us in their box.” Sandy concluded, with confusion at that last part.

“Excuse me, but we have been inside your home for 10 minutes and 35 seconds, and no one has offered us any hot beverages!” Sheldon argued.

“Coming right up.” Danny walked away.

“To be honest, I’m surprised Specter didn’t take this place over.” Emily mentioned. “A KND news studio would’ve been perfect for his plan.”

“Well, don’t give them the idea now.” Melody remarked.

“Um, if we’re done with the explanations, can anyone please fix my brother?” Sandy asked with worry.

As Jessie lay asleep on the couch, Melody extracted the water from her two bottles using her bending, placing her watery hands over Jessie’s head and chest. They glowed with a mystical light, and Sandy held her hands over her chest in prayer for Jessie’s health. “His body is fine… but there’s something off about his mind. It’s unusually lightheaded. You said he’s been sleeping for over 2 days?”
“Uh-huh.” Sandy nodded. “You don’t think he’s... brain-damaged, do you?”

“Maybe I’ll bring him to our mom, she’d know this stuff better than me.”

“Whenever I have trouble waking up, my mother used to turn on the Geology Channel!” Sheldon informed, followed by giddy laughter. “They think that geology is a real science!”

“Um... okay?” Sandy responded questionably. “Um, Jessie laughs at Spongebob. Maybe we could turn Spongebob on.”

“Nooo, that’ll only make his brain worse.” Sheldon said worriedly.

“I’m in the mood for some cartoons, so flip it on.” Gary swiped the remote from the table and turned on the TV. He changed it to Nickelodeon, where conveniently Spongebob was playing.

“I barely remember this show.” Melody commented. “Like, there’s a starfish, a cowboy squirrel; I hardly remember the actual main character.”

“I had a similar dilemma, but I’m given to understand that the main character is a talking sponge with square-shaped pants.” Sheldon explained. “At first glance, you can already point out the inaccuracy that he is not designed like a real sea-sponge.”

“I dunno why it’s so popular, either, but it might be a good break from catching monkeys all week.” Emily seated beside Gary. “No sugar in my cocoa, Danny!”

Hall of Doors

Sheila leapt out of a pool of Waking Water marked Twilight Town and met up with Murfy, Globox, and Rayman, the latter of which was tied to a leash held by Globox. “Okay, so I flew back to Toons in Trouble, but Magician wasn’t there anymore.” Murfy explained. “It looked like Hoodlums ransacked the place, tryin’ to steal all the Lums we collected.”

“I thought we were collecting Electoons?” Sheila questioned.

“We’re saving both, it’s just the Lums are everywhere, and Gamewizard ain’t gonna write out every single one. Anyway, the Magician fled to a more private setting, some dreamscape of a 12-year-old girl from Japan. It’s kinda far away, but I think we can take this shortcut through the Sponge Dream. It’s real convenient, because it’s where we can awaken-”

“HEY! Give that back!” Murfy chased him inside.

“I guess leashes work better if it has a neck to go around.” Globox figured, studying the rope’s empty loop. Sheila ran and dove into the portal, then the blue toad followed suit. (Play “Spongebob’s Dream” from Battle for Bikini Bottom.)

Stage 42: Sponge Dream

Mission: Cross the dimension to find Magician’s residence.

Sheila came out on a floating, sandy island, very high up in the sky, which seemed to have no earth below at all. The entire sky was yellowish-orange, with millions of intricate designs of tikis, palm trees, any oceanic-related stuff. The entirety of standable areas were floating islands or platforms. The first trial, for instance, required Sheila to jump some quick back-and-forth floating green blocks, which constantly flipped and had spikes on all sides except for one. However, the final block was lower than the following island, though no spikes were on it. “Let me go first!” Globox insisted, expertly hopping across the platforms and landing on the final. He lied on his back, clutching the sides with his hands and feet, and held on as the block flipped. “Jump on me!”

Sheila used the best of her precision (the music gave her an upbeat aura, too) to jump across the fast blocks, keeping an eye for the safe sides, and had to do something similar when Globox’s side on the last one came. She bounced on the toad’s belly and flew onto the soft, sandy island. There, she found a bed with a tan-skinned 7-year-old, brown hair, purple shirt, and black shorts. Sheila shook the familiar youngster awake. “Nnmmm… what king time is it?”

“’ey, help me get across this place, ya sailor-mouth dingo.” Sheila ordered.

“Who the  are you?”

“… fine.”

Jessie kicked the covers off and approached a large, cube-shaped yellow sponge, jumping on and performing a Ground Pound with bubble feet. Many Block Bubbles flew out of the sponge, forming a path to the next island, which had a giant squirrel in a white spacesuit and air helmet floating over it. “Maybe you should wait in here.” Jessie encased Sheila inside of a bubble, the girl balling up while Jessie pulled her. The boy bounced across the back-and-forth Bubble Blocks himself, and each one popped upon impact. Jessie used his double-jumps and maneuvering wisely, and he successfully took land on the island. There was a thin tree inside a large glass air dome with a grass garden inside. Murfy was floating by it.

“Sheila, I saw Rayman go in this room! Help me follow him!” Murfy flew into the dome’s door. Sheila sighed with annoyance and went in with Jessie.

Sandy Cheeks’ dream took place in the skies above Texas’s plains. The moment the kids dropped in, they were going down the longest slide they’ve ever seen, very narrow, colored red on the sides with a center white line, blue stars, and thousands of meters in the air. Sheila and Jessie drifted along a left turn, quickly drifted rightwards, then took a terrific leap off a ramp, flying the great gap, landing on the lower slide. Before continuing, Sheila saw some Hoodlums making mischief on a giant sandcastle to their right, so she took Jessie’s arm and jumped over.

Sheila pelted Light Spheres at the Hoodmongers, Jessie aided, but Stumblebooms stood atop the castle’s towers tossing grenades. While Sheila took out the minor troops, Jessie spotted a Chuck in the distant sky, so he sent a Bubble Torpedo to wipe the robot out. A green Power Can was dropped at their island, Sheila grabbed it to obtain the Tornado Fist. She leapt up the stairs within the short castle to get where the Stumblebooms were, spinning them off their stilts. She proceeded to kick them senseless, and in doing so, an Electoon Cage was revealed. Sheila rescued the critters, and the sliding continued. They slid down a sudden steep slope, but the road became flat again as they had to side-dodge a series of powder kegs.

Chucks tossed torpedoes at them from the sides, they paid them no mind and kept sliding. They were about to go off an edge, Sheila caught a blue Power Can, grabbed Jessie, and swung the Purple Lums that staired upwards. They made it on top of another part of the slide, letting the downward momentum carry them, they constantly drifted left, right, left, right, left, then constantly go right—Sheila barely saw that Purple Lum whip by the corner, still with her Swing Suit, she grabbed Jessie and swung on, up onto a floating water tower reading ‘ARLEN’, and breaking an Electoon Cage atop it. The duo floated back to the slide, which eventually dropped them on a small island with a faucet that released little bubbles.

Jessie rolled a Bubble Bowl against the faucet, letting it puff to a size so he and Sheila could get in. They rolled down another brief slide into a portal. They were suddenly warped to the ocean, using the momentum from that slide to roll up and around a great, looping wave. They rolled onto a stable water-made path (they were confused if it was solid or liquid), off a ramp, and landed on an uplifted surfboard, which bounced them to another, then another, until they landed on a path within a looped wave, rolling down. The path curved leftward until it sent them down a steep slope, up a ramp—the water below was definitely liquid, but there were solid, ramped platforms in the form of waves, they landed on carefully to swing upward again and land on the next.

They made it onto a larger shore and rolled their Bubble Ball across a bridge of surfboards that floated by, ending at a water spout that sent them onto the beach. Before rolling into the Tree Dome door, they followed a right route, where a rising bubble column lifted them up, and they could roll onto an Electoon Cage to break it open. They then left the dreamscape through the Tree Dome door, returning to the Sponge Dream hub. They could roll their bubble on another bubble jetstream, lifting up before they rolled over a series of floating bubble vents.

They landed on a new island and popped the Bubble Bowl on a spike. “Darn it. While you were takin’ your time sliding, Rayman escaped into this dream!” Murfy was close to the Krusty Krab, represented by Mr. Krabs’ gigantic form. “This one’s a real doozy. The mind of a miser is not a safe place, let me tell you. Best of luck to ya, tykes.” The duo entered the treasure chest restaurant —Sheila and Jessie landed on a patty of a giant grill, and giant spatulas were flipping certain patties every interval.

They jumped to the next patty before theirs flipped; whenever a patty was flipped, the top was scorching red, so they had to wait for it to cool before jumping. Just as well, they couldn’t land on the grill, or risk being melted. Sheila punched Light Spheres to Chucks who were trying to thwart their progress, but thankfully the duo made it onto a safe treasure chest. Well, safe until it suddenly POPPED open, sending them flying to another distant stove. This entire road was covered in oil, thanks to the Planktonbot Slicks, who were surrounded in oily shields. Sheila and Jessie were forced to ski around this ground, dodging the Slicks’ oil balls. A giant block of ice sat at the start of the road, but Sheila wasn’t able to move it. There were many burners around the stove, lighting aflame every few seconds, so the duo took care not to slide into them—for all this oil would result in massive damage.

There were two burners that had switches within them, and both had to be pressed simultaneously. Sheila and Jessie waited beside one, waited for the flame to go off, and quickly Ground Pound the buttons before jumping off. An Electooon Cage was called up, free for Sheila to burst. At the end of the oily road, they encountered a Tubelet, which was three robots floating on top of each other. The lowest one spun around and released a stream of fire, forcing Jessie and Sheila to keep away as that area was set aflame. Sheila punched a Light Sphere, Jessie a torpedo to destroy two of the robots at once, then Sheila sent another sphere to destroy the top one before it revived its friends.

Sheila gained a Strong Suit, and saw the rest of this scape was a river of boiling grease. Sheila returned to the start of this oil road, to the giant ice block. Jessie distracted the Slicks with torpedoes, letting Sheila slide the block across the oil using her enhanced strength. Depending on the strength of her punches, the block slid further. She had to make sure it didn’t slide off the edge, or onto a lit burner. Once the block was aligned with the grease river, Sheila slid it down, freezing the substance solid. She and Jessie slide down with terrific momentum, stopping at the dream’s exit. The ice block also landed in the rays of two giant desk lamps, melting to give them a barrel of Sheila carried the juice in through the exit, and they met Globox in the dreamscape’s hub-world. “Sheila, you won’t believe how I got across—PLUM JUICE!” The toad grabbed and guzzled the barrel. His allergic reaction kicked in, puffing to bloated size as he burped a stairway of purple bubbles. These bubbles were steady, thankfully, allowing the pair to hop up them and reach the final island: a huge pineapple with a door and windows; which overlooked the island where Sheila started from. A familiar—yet unfamiliar yellow sponge was floating above the fruit, so Jessie was eager to go inside.

The dimension’s sky was endless rows of pixelated Spongebob images, flashing yellow and blue. Bubbles floated everywhere, all the way up this winding tower. Sheila clutched Jessie’s wrist and used her superior speed to rush up the path carved within the tower, making all the necessary right turns, left turns, avoiding blockades, the larger bubbles that floated in her way. At the top of the aqua-blue tower, they were nearly blinded by the presence of three giant desk lamps. All pointed at the center above the tower, where a floating cage contained a near-shriveled, yellow-brown sponge. Arfs, Tubelets, and Slicks appeared everywhere, respawned every time Sheila destroyed one. Rayman was also at the top of the tower, thankfully distracting some of the robots as he snarled like a dog.

Jessie trusted Sheila as his defense and sent a Bubble Torpedo behind the base of each giant lamp. By hitting the switches, the lamps shut off, and once all three were destroyed, the sponge could no longer shrivel. The robots stopped respawning, then Jessie used his Headbash attack (in the form of a bubble Viking helmet) to break the cage open. (End song.)

The brown-yellow sponge gasped heavily on the ground (he was on top of the Exit Portal). With a stern expression, Jessie opened his bubble bottle over him and poured the soap on. The vibrant little sponge puffed to his natural yellow color. “Bai-yai-yai-ai-ai! Sudsy!”

Rayman stuck his tongue out and panted, dropping the Manual. On all fours, the Ray-dog pounced toward the fairy—Murfy swung and bashed him unconscious with a frying pan. “Hnn. Like I would give you my treat.” Murfy munched the cookie in his own big teeth.

With that, Globox had Rayman locked in another cage. “Rayman, you gotta learn how to behave. I won’t have to take you to the vet, will I?”

“A dog-walk a day keeps the vet away!” Spongebob spoke wisely. “Now I believe you three were looking for-” He twirled his arms, then aimed at the portal, “the exit.”

Sheila and Spongebob stood beside the pedestal. They did the silly dance with hands on their hips, kicked their legs, spun in place, then the portal open. Sheila slurped inside, Murfy flew after, Globox cannonballed in with Rayman’s cage. “Now… just where the k have you been?” Jessie asked Spongebob disapprovingly. “You don’t show up in my dreams for months, then I have to work with those weirdoes to save your ass?”

“Gee, I’m sorry, Jessie.” Spongebob touched his shoulder comfortably. “I really wanted to meet you again, too. But maybe dreaming isn’t the best way of doing it. I want to meet you for real. You can come and meet me-” He leaped into the air, diving backward over the tower, “under the SEEEEEEEEAAAA!”

to go there?"

Sector DR Treehouse

Dressrosa was still in ruin after that crazy, out-of-nowhere battle that occurred three days previously, and GUN soldiers were struggling to organize and calm down all the citizens. Sector DR’s treehouse was left completely abandoned, because three of the members were arrested, while another member is on a vacation to a music planet. However, one member was left behind. A strange nutcracker toy was still in place. Finally, Sugar’s curse was wearing off on him. The toy shone with white light as he transformed back to normal.

He was a yellow square-shaped sponge with big blue eyes, a long nose, buckteeth, and green holes. He had stick-like arms and legs, with little white sleeves on the base of his arms, black shoes and white socks, and wore brown square pants with a white shirt and red tie. “I think it’s safe to say THIS twist was a little… nut-cracker! Bah-ah-ah-ah-ah-ah-ah!” After giving his trademark laugh, the semi-sentient sponge leapt into the air, headfirst in the bathroom’s toilet. As it flushed, Spongebob took the form of a small, live-action sponge, going down the drain. “Bai-yai-yai-yai-ai-ai-ai-ai-ai!”

Twilight Town

And THIS one’s a piggy! Kirie stared wide-eyed at a little oinker, who scurried away. And THIS one is a piggy! She approached another, it retreated. And THIS one is a piggy, TOO—. . . She frowned when she approached a fat, blue-skinned Twili in a purple hood from behind. The woman turned around.

“Yes, can I help you?” she asked.

“Kirie!” Aurora, Haylee, and Harry hurried over to the girl, panting. “You haven’t seen Dillon, have you? He’s not in his room and we can’t find him in town.”

They heard a gentle guitar strumming up above. They knew only one person that carried a guitar. The group hurried away from the inn and looked at its roof, seeing Django. The sunlight made him appear half dark, and half orange. His eyes were closed as he played the guitar peacefully. “We… are the Kids Next Door. We’ll always kick your ass. And if you think we won’t, tell that to the guy on the floor—”

“Django!” He opened his eyes when Aurora yelled up at him. “Do you know where Dillon is?!”

“YEAH, I saw him go into the forest. To that cathedral place.”

“YOU SAW HIM GO WHERE?!!”

“He must be going to get his shadow back!” Haylee exclaimed. “Django, why didn’t you stop him?!”

“Puh.” Django spat a nonexistent glob of spit, smiling coolly. “Midna’s going with him, too. He makes a good argument. The fact is…” He narrowed his glowing red eyes. “It’s his shadow. It’s his battle. And he won’t become Midna’s Guardian unless he fights it.”

Dillon made it to Minerva’s Cathedral, and Midna came out of his shadow for a better view. There was nothing bright about this place. The sun didn’t touch this area. It looked like a large, grey, cold stone, carved hollow to become a cathedral. Dillon glanced at his Firstborn companion, sucking a breath before marching into its front gates. (Play “Requiem for the Lost Ones” from Bleach.)

He felt the color fade from his body. It was grayer than a retro movie in here. Along the walls, on the floor, the ceiling, the seats, were shadows. Different hairstyles, different shapes… same color. They were partially black, but that black was in the process of becoming gray like the building. Like… her.

She was at the altar. The woman who the statue represented. Daphne Anderson. Dillon’s great-aunt was more pale and looked more dead than a ghost. Her lips were blacker than Death’s cloak, her eyes were darker than the Reaper’s sockets. Dillon couldn’t imagine her ghostly-white hair feeling any better than the coldest, rustiest wilted flower. All of the shadows were looking at her. Dillon and Midna felt a grave, depressing feeling from all of their souls. They saw a particular shadow was skinny and football-headed; Nigel Uno’s shadow.

But they especially recognized the young shadow who was with Daphne at the altar. “It’s a cold world… after all.” She spoke with a voice that would dampen even the most brightest of spirits. It had no interest in love or life at all, and mixed with those soulless eyes, how could any person want to feel hope around her. “You look at the moon… you look at the sun… you look at the stars… and still you feel nothing. Because they are far… and you are here. They look at you… taunt you… and lay endlessly out of your reach.”

She softly petted Mario’s hair, gently rubbed his cheek, like a mother comforting her child. Dillon could feel the solemn tranquility from his shadow. All of the spirit and soul draining from his form. Feeling only solace before the woman who sapped this force from him. “You poor dear…” She spoke softly to the shadow. “You knew the feeling… of anger… tears… joy… confusion… your mind is in an unsteady place… all you are feeling… is false.”

Daphne pulled out a black rose with a white stem. She began to pluck its petals. Dillon flinched at each pluck.

Dillon laughed as he recorded Mason and Sheila’s kiss.

Dillon playfully took strings from Mason’s sweater.

“These feelings of yours… joy, pain, and sadness… they are what destroys a heart.” Daphne plucked three more petals.

Dillon was so happy when Vanellope joined their sector.

Dillon was so upset when Vanellope was taken away.

Dillon was so angry when Carol was going to replace her.

Dillon was glad to help Carol when she needed it most.

“This is why shadowbenders do such things… because you shadows are the reflection… of what they are.”

Midna looked concerned as Dillon hunched over from unseen pain. The boy limped forward down the aisle, eyes fixed determinedly on his shadow. “To be thrown aside… To be treated as trash… because deep down, you know… you don’t belong in this world. You’re cold, like dead air… a ghost of something that wants to exist. In truth, you have no voice… your desire goes unheard. So just sit alone… take solace in darkness… let your heart be still.”

And Mario embraced every word. This beautiful woman… opened his eyes. He drifted closer, leaning his head on Daphne’s chest. The woman put an arm around him softly. Mario wanted to be close to her… he felt so warm around her… so understood. Daphne let him embrace in her. She was about to pluck the last five petals of the rose. “Aunt Daphne?”

The woman stopped. She looked at him. The boy with passionate brown eyes. The only color, the only life, the only soul in this place. Dillon reached under his sweater, took out a S.C.A.M.P.P., and aimed it at her. “Give me my shadow back.”

If anyone remembers that nutcracker toy from Viridi’s Last Stand, working for Sector DR, you now know the truth. And you’ll know the story behind that truth later. Twilight Town comes from Paper Mario, but the Twili are from both that game and Twilight Princess. Next time… well, hopefully you’ve been following along, and not relying on Melody’s recap. Because then you’ll know the inaccuracies. :P
33. The Ocean’s Bane

Chapter Summary

Sector V battles World Leader Daphne Anderson! Team Emily goes to Oceana, which is being terrorized by an unwanted person.

Today’s code uses the Atbash Cipher. Resume “Requiem for the Lost Ones” from Bleach.

Chapter 33: The Ocean’s Bane

Minerva’s Cathedral

Dillon stood firm and locked his S.C.A.M.P.P. on the woman. While all the shadows felt solemn and cold around her, Dillon showed emotion in his brown eyes. Determination to get Mario back. Daphne looked at him with her cold dark eyes, which, if one looked closely enough, could see a shred of humor. “I was wondering who had walked in during my monologue.” Daphne said with the same depressed tone. “What else did I expect… another wayward soul.”

“Mario, get away from that woman!” Dillon demanded. “Come back to me!”

“Why should he.” Daphne softly hugged Mario to her chest. “After all, you are his… reality. Shadows suffer so much… living in the light of their masters. Their emotions become the shadows. The shadows despair and decay in what the masters feel. No… a shadow… knows peace.” She rested her head on Mario’s, closing her eyes. “A shadow suffers in peace. All they should need… is quiet… blindness… bliss… but their masters ruin such tranquility.” She reached for a black petal on the white stem. She plucked.

Dillon hated the Zoni for wanting to take away Vanellope’s glitch, that which made her great.

“A true shadowbender… knows bliss like the shadows. They must become still… silent… soft…” She plucked another petal.

Dillon woke up with embarrassment on the Sunny Day, cuddling with Mason on that cold winter night.

“But the only way a person can know such tranquility… is through death. There’s no more wonderful embrace. A Gray Shadow is a shadow whose master has faced death, in the most gentle way.” She plucked another.

Five-year-old Dillon hugged his dad lovingly after he got home.

“Void of all emotion… all feeling… that is the beauty in my power.” Daphne slowly reached for the last petal. “Enter that void… and sleep.”

Dillon clutched Daphne’s arm before it reached. She looked down at him. “A real shadowbender… knows how to let their shadow feel these things. A real shadowbender… takes their shadow away from that boring tranquility and shows them what it really means to have emotions. Instead of being just a shadow under their master… they get to be a friend to their master. They’re able to stop being shy and interact… like a real human. If a Gray Shadow comes from a dead master… why are you so gray? Why am I feeling your flesh…”

Daphne closed her eyes. The memory brought no feeling to her heart.

Daphne was five years old, Isabelle Anderson was seven. They were two sisters living in Twilight Town. Although they were human born, their skin was pale, in the process of becoming Twili. Daphne loved to hide in the shade, Isabelle was a ray of sunshine. She always grabbed her little sister’s arm and ran around the village, around the forest, playing games with their shadows. Isabelle ran too far, Daphne worriedly chased after her. Although young and full of energy, Daphne never expressed much emotion, only subtle hints.

Then the demons captured them. The demons that served Malladus and Hell’s Royal Family. Malladus’s son was married to Queen of Shadows, Malevolous. Shadows and shadowbenders alike were subject through experiments. Shadows were transformed into ravenous monsters, so why not do the same to shadowbenders? Give them a feeling of being demon. Isabelle and Daphne were in prison for years, before the demons decided to experiment on them.

Daphne’s shadow, Shaydes was extremely agro, she bit and scratched the monsters, desperate to protect her master and sister. The demons injected the shadow with their dark magic, Daphne cried for her shadow, the girl had finally shown emotion in the form of tears. She hugged Shaydes closely. Let the tears soak her. It was unbearable, but the young shadow withstood, fought the pain. …But at a price. Shaydes had faded into a soulless gray color. Her previous pitch-black form possessed the vibrance and joy Daphne lacked, but that color was sapped from her form now. The dyed shadow crept back behind her master, and in the weakest, most hopeless voice possible, Shaydes promised that she would always be with her.

And then the Kids Next Door appeared, tearing the factories to pieces, Malladus and Grandfather were destroyed, the demons were cowering back to the Underworld, light had returned to the planet. Isabelle met a handsome boy in raggedy clothing called Daniel. His parents died of illness when he was a baby, he lived in his own secret sewer hideout with nary a home or a surname. But Isabelle loved him, he became her best friend and soon-to-be-lover. Daphne was not left alone, however… That handsome, chubby boy with sunglasses, Numbuh Zero, grinned at Daphne and reached a hand down.

Monty Uno, the traitor to the Uno Family, comforted Daphne for what happened to her shadow. Daphne, whose soul was dried like Shaydes’ color, found light and warmth next to this boy. She thought Monty could help repair the color that was lost. Then… he disappeared. No one knew where he went. No one on the planet.

In the years that came, Daphne became a teenager. She met a handsome, older boy called Reggie Johnson. He took Daphne to where he lived. A beautiful mountain in eternal sunlight. Daphne met other people, some close, some far from her age. They became friends… then, they became rulers. They had the power to decide, to run this world. They had the power to bring and restore the peace they desired. Daphne knew… the very peace everyone deserved.

Daphne reopened her eyes. “If, for even the tiniest bit, I am allowed to desire… it is to serve the people who saved me, and destroy all the evils in this world. But all evils… stem from feeling. With no feeling… there would be no evils. My shadow… all shadows… I will be the mother they have longed for. I will show them what my shadow has shown me…. Solace.” She reached for the petal again. (End song.)

“EEEH!” Midna smacked the flower away from Daphne’s hand with her huge ponytail hand. She clutched the woman’s arm tight and tried to pull her away. “SHADOWS, stop LISTENING to this woman!” she yelled to them. “You all need to be with your masters. Alive or dead, both of you need each other. This woman is poisoning you. Only your masters should be able to give you any kind of solace!”

“Hmmm…” Daphne rubbed Midna’s cheek with her other hand. “Even the Firstborn… after spending so long in the mortal world… has let the masters ruin her mind.”

“Uuuuu…” Midna’s grip on her arm faltered. The Firstborn’s areas were fading to gray. She was growing sleepy…

“DILLON!” The cathedral doors flew open. The Sector V members burst in, holding weapons or powers ready. “Are you Daphne Anderson?!” Haylee questioned.

“She looks more dead than I am.” Django remarked.

“How much did she hurt you?!” Chris yelled.

“Now I’m being judged again.” Daphne closed her eyes, smiling somewhat. “‘Hurt’, he says. ‘Dead.’ Kids really know nothing. I am a mother to every shadow you see here. A mother’s job… is to give their children warmth and comfort. A home. Every Gray Shadow you see here… belonged to a master who I had introduced to Death. Death is a terrifying thing to wait for… so I take them in safe, easy steps. I pluck one petal at a time. Then… on the last pluck, the heart stops. They never feel more peaceful. Just ask the latest one to my collection.”

She gestured to a tall, thin shadow with a football-shaped head. Chris and Aurora’s eyes widened. “Dad…” The former glared at Daphne, “So it was YOU who killed him!!”

“Why are you angry? It was your father that attacked us. We felt horrible for what we did. But we couldn’t let him wreck everything. So I killed him with my Gray Shade. You should have seen him when he died… he was beautiful.”

“AAAAHH!” Chris punched a flame at the woman, Shaydes jumped in the way and defended her master, then reformed from the flame. Chris kicked on his rockets and flew, but all of the shadows piled on and held the boy back. He desperately tried to fly at Daphne, but the shadows were surprisingly strong. They redirected him at the ceiling, causing the firebender to fly and break through. “WAAAaaah!!”

“Django, the skeletons!” Aurora whispered at him. “We need to get Daphne outside for our plan!”

“That’s mah jam.” Django strummed his guitar, forcing skeletons to pop out from each seat in the church.

Daphne made a chuckle that sounded like a simple, toneless breath. She waved an arm, and all of the shadows flew under those of the skeletons. The corpses began shaking of their own accord, directing at the operatives. “What?!” Django furrowed.

“Thank you for helping us test our experiment.” Daphne smiled. “Shadows can be added to the bodies of corpses, bringing them to life. Those corpses will have the physical abilities and personalities of their shadow’s master.”

“Does this sombrero make my head look fat?” a fat skeleton asked with a woman’s voice.

“’Ey, yo, what’s the dillio??” an Italian skeleton questioned.
“Kah…kids?” a skeleton coughed.

Aurora gaped. “Dad?…”

“Kids… Thah… The King… his name is…”

Daphne clutched her hand. The skeletons stood upright and silenced, ready to attack her enemies. “Well-p, we tried, it failed.” Django turned a dial on his guitar to force the skeletons back into the earth. The shadows floated back in the air.

“Mario, just snap out of it!” Dillon yelled. “I know I act like a jerk, but is that really worse than having the life sapped out of you??”

“You’re only so indifferent, because you do not know the everlasting serenity.” Daphne reached down to pick up the one-petal rose. “I will happily… give it to you.”

Mario touched her arm. Daphne looked at him curiously. He spoke to her telepathically. Dillon could tell, though he couldn’t hear. Daphne’s eyelids and brows inched up in a way that she agreed. “Oh… yes. Perhaps we should. After all… they are making this last far too long. If you would… Mario… you may.”

Mario nodded. He flew around to all of Sector V’s shadows, and to their utter astonishment, they flew out from their positions. Mario flew to the center of the room, and spoke to all of the shadows. They flew together in a swarm, and soared directly into Daphne’s body. “Uuu-uuuh!” The woman choked, her skinny ghostly body began pumping. Black and gray aura surrounded her body, her eyes glowed white. The kids stared with the greatest terror as she grew larger.

“Uhhhhh maybe we should go.” They agreed with Aurora and bolted out of the church, through the trees, as fast as they could. Since they didn’t have shadows, they had to keep within the shade of trees. After they ran a safe distance, and hearing the crumbling of a building, they turned around —gaping at the colossus.

Daphne was a hundred times fatter, and a hundred times bigger. She towered like a short mountain over the shadowy forest. One half of her ghost-white body was dark, but the other half facing the sunset mixed with orange. The colossus turned and looked down at the kids with blank white eyes. “Was her growing into a giant part of your plan, Kirie?” Haylee questioned. The mute shook her head frightfully.

“It’s the Shadow Absorption…” Midna spoke, still ill from Daphne’s touch earlier. “The strength of every person those shadows belonged to… is hers. Including you guys.”

“Any chance you could do what you did to Big Mom, Sheila?” Aurora asked.

“Lightbending ain’t as easy with no shadow, Mate.”

Daphne took a few minutes to let the shadows settle. Let the incredible power flow within her. The power of a single World Leader. She would now show them, what the World Government possesses.

Then Daphne hunched over slightly. The kids looked extremely curious… the woman was bulging… like she were about to throw up. “Mm-mm… mm-mm…” Her mouth threatened to burst. Her blank white eyes would be wide and bulging if they had any life to them. But the sensation was all the same. “UUUUUUUUUPTTTTTTTHHHHHEEEH!!!” A stream of black and gray came spewing from her mouth like vomit.
The stream struck Dillon, showering him. He felt the shadows endlessly pounding upon him, he couldn’t move away or stand straight. It wasn’t just the immense weight. Dillon felt an unbearable sensation. Incredible pressure was building inside him. Growing greater by the minute.

Daphne shrunk back to her regular human size, collapsing on the ground. The ghostly woman felt a shadow over her. …A spark of emotion was hinted on her gaping face.

His friends never expected this turn of events: Dillon York had grown over 50 feet high, brimming with black aura, his eyes blank white and furrowed. Parts of his clothing were ripped, the muscles underneath were pumping. The colossus raised his right hand and stared at it. “Wha-a-a-a-at’s thi-i-i-i-i-i-is?” His voice was vibrating from the power.

Your body isn’t strong enough to withstand this power for long, Master. Mario spoke. Attack her while you have the chance!

Snapping to attention, Dillon looked down at the little ghost woman, and slammed his fist down. A crater was created, but Daphne had flown several meters in a Shadow Veil. Daphne was caught in a Shadow Possess suddenly, by Midna from behind. Dillon expanded a tremendous Shockwave Zone, sending the storm of shadows to fly out and gnash furiously around Daphne’s form. After the shadows returned to the giant, Daphne flew away, hovering at height with the giant’s chest using a cyclone of Gray Shadow. All of the shadows from the trees spiraled into her center, and she made them take the form of a spear that stabbed the giant in the chest.

Dillon cried like the Hulk-like monster he was, stumbling backward and feeling the need to explode. The shadows scattered away from the beast, across the distant sky, back to their normal masters, and Dillon shrunk down to normal. Sector V hurried around the trees, jumped over the fallen ones, to find their friend panting on the ground, his clothes torn. Dillon couldn’t feel any sense or muscle in his body, he couldn’t stand. The friends looked ahead, glaring as Daphne Anderson walked softly through the trees.

“So, his shadow led me into a trap.” She spoke with the same depressed tone. “How sad. His master would’ve been much happier, if I had plucked the last petal. His death would be painless.
Peaceful. He never would’ve known greater warmth… than such an embrace. Look at him as he suffers. Begging for peace. I will grant his—”

Aurora grabbed Dillon, flew backwards with Rocket Boost, and when a cloud of green and purple gas flowed into the area, it was immediately set aflame. Daphne slid away with her shadow—the forest in front of her exploded. Chris hovered in the sky on jetshoes, sucking in forceful whiffs through his nose and puffing Combustion Beams at every area around Daphne, destroying every last tree. Daphne was totally surrounded by fire—Sheila Frantic bolted through a spot Aurora had cooled open, the wereraccoon forming a Light Sphere in both hands that was bulging in many areas. Quickly, she ran around Daphne, chucked the distorted Light Sphere above, and it popped into a storm of droplet-sized beams that rained around Daphne, sizzling her and her shadow.

Aurora froze and dispersed a huge chunk of the flame wall, forcing the remaining half to stretch Shaydes the other way. Chris dashed forward, flipped, and waved his arm like a karate-chop to send a Flame Slice, severing the stem between shadow and master. Before it could reform, Sheila lit her foot solid gold, zipped up by Daphne’s head, and kicked her with enough force to send her flying like a kickball, against a distant tree. Shaydes tried to return—Chris and Aurora ignited a wall of flames in its wake. “IN YOU GO!” Artie whipped out a mechanical thermos, blasted a blue laser, and struck the shadow. Shaydes unleashed an echoing cry of despair as it was sucked into the thermos, and Artie clamped the lid. “Wow! It actually DOES work on shadows!”

Daphne hid in the shadow of the tree from the sunlight. “Way to go, Kirie!” Aurora praised. “Your plan worked like a charm!”

“Keh… plan?” Dillon spoke hoarsely.

Kirie held up a finger gesturing ‘Wait’, then showed them her sketchbook. Many colorful, crayon drawings, of Chris going ‘pop pop’ with the trees, making fire go burrerrrr around Daphne, Sheila going ‘crackle crackle’ with her Light Sphere, Chris going ‘hot slice’ on Daphne’s shadow, then Artie going shuuuuurrrrrp with his Phantom Thermos. Well, that’s what Dillon made from it, since it just happened. Kirie put the book away, and bowed.

“You think you’ve won.” Daphne said with humor in her tonelessness. “You forget… I’m a mother to all shadows. Every tree has–”

Sheila kicked her off her feet, she and Chris got on either side. The others shut their eyes—a ballad of cartoon punching and beating sound-effects rang across the air. When it made it to the ‘rrrrRINK, DONK, PSH-SH-SH-sh-sh-sh!’ sounds, it stopped. The kids opened their eyes.

Daphne Anderson had blood and bruises all over. Parts of her face were swollen. Teeth were knocked out. She was totally unconscious. Kirie pulled out a pair of chi-cuffs—the ones Haruka found in Dressrosa—and locked them over Daphne’s wrists. Aurora didn’t blink. Her wide blue eyes tried to process what happened. She didn’t tear away as she held her wristwatch to her face. “Hi, Francis. Uhhh, send a couple S.P.R.A.Y.S.H.I.P.s to our coordinates? Long story, but I’ll try to make it short.”

Minutes later, Aaron and Rhilliane Doblemitz arrived to take Daphne onto their S.P.R.A.Y.S.H.I.P.. Francis was there on his own ship, to take the Phantom Thermos from Artie. “Excellent work, Sector V.” Francis said with a slight hint of confusion. “I’ll have this locked in a secure place, then we’ll attempt to interrogate this woman.” He boarded back on, and both ships took off.

“. . . .” Aurora’s stunned expression went unchanged. “We… We beat her.” She stretched a psychotic grin. “We beat her! WE DEFEATED ONE OF THE WORLD LEADERS!!!”

“Uh-huh! There’s just one problem.” Harry pointed that direction. “The whole town saw.”

The people of Twilight Town stared blankly. Mayor Dour, Virginia who was smoking, Victoria, Lola and Terry. “Mother Daphne was our hero…” Freddy spoke with concealed emotions. “She made us feel so happy. Why… would you do this?”

“Because Mother Daphne did THIS!” Haruka showed them Midna, still pale with sickness.

The town gasped. “Midna, the Twilight Princess?!” a purple Twili exclaimed.

Midna coughed. “Yes. Mother Daphne tried to drain my power. She tried to drain all of your energy through your shadows, but these kids saved me. They’re your heroes, not your enemies. Daphne Anderson may have provided funding for your town, but she wasn’t a good person.”

“It’s all… so hard to believe…” Mayor Dour spoke hoarsely. “She was making our shadows feel so… happy.”

“That happiness was all her shade, it wasn’t true. A shadowbender shouldn’t be separated from their shadow at all. Since she won’t be taking them anymore, you have to make your shadows happy yourselves. In the event that Mother Daphne comes back, you shouldn’t let her take them.”

“Hmmm…” Dour’s head sunk down. “Mother Daphne… we could never repay you for saving our town… I don’t want to accept what these children say… Still… if you really did save us, you children should be rewarded. Please, rest in our town as long as you need to.”

“That’s great, because the Twilight Princess really needs some potion.” Midna spoke up. “Oh, and someone oughta fix Dillon, too.”

Shady Inn

Dillon was lain on bed as Aunt Victoria brought him a bowl of black potion, the Drink of Shadows. “Guff, huff…” Dillon drank the substance, and felt the pain in his veins going down. Midna also had a drink, and her color returned. “Shadow Absorption.” Victoria repeated, shaking her head. “Wow, Dillon. You have one heck of a shadow.”

“Man, I wish I coulda seen that up close.” Lola said. “That giant Dillon monster looked wicked!”

“Yeah, Tael, were you really in Dillon’s body?” Terry asked his shadow. Tael nodded.

“I’ll just explain it.” Dillon said. “Mario apparently convinced Daphne to let him persuade all the shadows to enter her body to give her power. But while she was embracing them, he persuaded all the shadows to abandon her and enter my body. I don’t actually… understand how or why.”

Your desire to get me back was stronger than Aunt Daphne’s ‘love.’ Mario explained. That internal strength spread to me, Master. And I let Sector V’s shadows in on my plan, and together we were able to lead the other shadows away from Daphne’s teachings. Mr. Uno’s shadow still cared for his kids, especially… I think a lot of them wanted to be away from her, they just couldn’t find the strength.

“Wait… so was all this ‘abandoning me’ stuff part of your plan to sneak-attack a World Leader?” Dillon questioned.

Actually… it wasn’t. I really was angry at you, Dillon, so I wanted to socialize with my own kind. I learned about Aunt Daphne, and against all odds, I attempted this sneak attack… It was pretty gutsy, to be sure, and I had to rely on you for part of it. I risked giving you Chi Overload so we could have a shot, but I guess the others had it handled.

Dillon smiled. “Thanks, Mario. You are my buddy, after all.”

Don’t feel too flattered. I’ll stay under your body so you don’t combust, but I’m still mad at you. I wouldn’t say our issue’s resolved.

“Oh, come on! After all of that, you’re still mad??”

Well, right now, I’m tired. Let’s go to sleep, Master. We can discuss this in the… evening.

Good evening, Dillon.

Dillon was under the covers and fast asleep. “I second that.” Harry agreed, going to get his pajamas.

“Isn’t anyone else a little weirded out that this was our EASIEST mission ever??” Aurora said.

“I’m not keeping my spirits up.” Mason replied, going to change clothes. “I’m holding out that a giant mutant turkey will attack us because someone stole its Nintendo DS.”
The boys and girls in separate rooms (excluding Sheila), the teammates got in sleeping bags and went to sleep. Victoria shut the curtains to make the rooms totally dark, sporting a bright smile at how cute Dillon’s friends looked. She shut the doors to their rooms quietly. After the first hour of their twilight vacation, they were exhausted. They let slumber consume them, and would wake up under an orange sky.

Sector L Treehouse

“Bai-yai-yai-ai-ai-ai-ai-ai-ai!” Spongebob laughed. Team Emily and Sector L watched blankly.

“DUH-HUH-HUH-HUH-HUH-HUH!” Patrick laughed.

“Bai-yai-yai-ai-ai-ai-ai-ai-ai!”

“DUH-HUH-HUH-HUH-HUH-HUH!”

“This is ridiculous.” Sheldon stated simply. “I hardly believe this child’s brain is worth saving at the expense of ours.”

“No one’s telling you to watch, go someplace else.” Danny retorted, sitting on the floor. “So I can sit on the couch.”

“No you can’t, this is my spot.”

“You must be crazy.” Melody said.

“I’m not crazy. My mother had me tested. And I can promise you, the second this boy awakens to this garbage, he will say something insane.”

“Nnnnnuu…” Jessie moaned awake.

“Holy cow, it actually worked!” Emily perked.

“Thank you so much for healing him!” Sandy told Melody with tears in her eyes.

“Jessie, are you okay?” Sandy asked. “Are you sore anywhere?”

“Sandy… we…!” Jessie’s eyes widened. He pointed forward, “We have to go to the bottom of the ocean!!”

They formed sweatdrops. “Yep, I knew this would happen.” Sheldon put on a doctor’s mask. “Say the word and I’ll begin the brain extraction.”

“Um, Jessie, we were just in the bottom of the ocean.” Sandy spoke with worry.

“Then we have to go back!! Spongebob is waiting for me down there!”

“Wait!” Emily perked. “I suddenly remember… the series. HOLY COW, his recent seasons are terrible!!”
“Oh my GOD, yes!” Melody smacked her forehead. “Why are they still AIRING this series, can’t we play the old ones?! …Why are we suddenly remembering Spongebob?”

“Doesn’t this kinda feel like what happened with Cheren?” Danny questioned.

“You mean Spongebob was turned into a toy?”

“Spongebob was turned into a nutcracker by some girl, yes.” Jessie confirmed.

“What?!” They screamed.

“Yes, he told me so in a dream. He got added to a group called ‘Sector DR’. He didn’t mind, but he felt awfully stiff.”

“So that girl who turned Cheren into a toy got to Spongebob.” Melody summarized. “That’s why we barely remembered his show. But… that means… Spongebob is real? And he’s in Oceana?”

“Ocean-whona?” Jessie asked.

“The Sea Kingdom.” Danny answered. “If you really wanted to go, I think our mom could take us. It wouldn’t hurt to visit Grandpa, would it?”

“Grandpa?” Sandy questioned.

“Yep! We’re the Prince and Princess of the Sea!” Danny and Melody posed. “Our grandpa is Ocean King, Kyogre!”

“I’m leaving.” Sheldon walked away from this nonsense.

“Get back here, young man.” Emily grabbed his pants. “Assuming Spongebob IS real, how the heck were you talking to him through dreams? Are you a psychicbender or something?”

“How the fuck should I know?” Jessie stated angrily.

“SAY WHAT?!?” they panicked.

“He has a point.” Sandy had adorable eyes.

“TRUE THAT.”

“Going to Oceana wouldn’t hurt.” Melody figured. “We could even meet Uncle Manaphy while we’re down there!”

“Sounds fun.” Emily shrugged. “You guys up for it?”

Sheldon stumbled on his words, “Now- before I go sailing on an undersea voyage, I would like to address some concerns: 1) being eaten by Krakens, 2) the level of stability of our vessel, and 3) how do you expect me to breathe in a fantasy kingdom of fish-people?”

“I know someone who can answer all of those.” Melody smirked.

Samiyan Sea; Mother & Child Isles

The group sailed here on a 4x4 ship. Eva Roberts-Jackson stood on the front in her red top and blue dress of ocean designs, feeling the ocean air on her skin. The stars were pretty in the sky. “It’s a beautiful night for sailing, isn’t it?”
“HMMMMMUUUUUEEE!” Sheldon barfed over the edge. He stood up and faced them, “See this is why I require indigestion pills everywhere I—HUUUEEEEEE!!”

“Melody, can you… remind me why you wanted this trip, again?” Eva requested.

“That kid wants to meet Spongebob. I didn’t get it either, but I thought a trip to meet Grandpa would be nice.”

“Melody, I keep telling you not to call him Grandpa.” Eva stated hotly. “Eric is your grandfather. Kyogre is Blood-Grandpa.”

“That just sounds gross. Why can’t I call him Grandpa, Manaphy is our uncle.”

The ship sailed into the island surrounded by a stone wall. Little fairies inhabited this beautiful garden. Eva drew and raised the Phantom Sword, pointing at the full moon above. The sword brimmed blue, and a light emerged from the central fountain. A child spirit of glossy, shiny, cyan skin, blank eyes, and a dress appeared. “Hehehehehe! Why, if it isn’t Princess Eva! My goodness, how much you’ve grown! Are these your children?”

“Queen of Ocean Fairies, Danny and Melody.” Eva introduced. Her kids bowed. “Danny and Melody, Queen Cerulea, of the Ocean Fairies.”

“Pleasure to grace your presence.” Cerulea bowed. “You’ve arrived with wonderful timing. Oceana is-”

“HUUUUUUEEEEEE.” Sheldon barfed. Cerulea flew in front of the man, flicked his stomach, and sparked blue glitters. Sheldon stared at his stomach. “Astonishing… What genius could invent a hologram with electrons that shock an upset stomach into submission?”

Cerulea flew above her fountain, frowning sadly. “I’m really glad you’re here. Oceana is in danger. A terrible maniac that had long been missing has returned. The citizens are in an uproar. Some are even calling him worse than Davy Jones.”

“Worse than Davy Jones?!” Eva exclaimed.

“Well, maybe he isn’t THAT bad! But still… you guys better go quickly. I’ll send you through the tunnel.” A whirlpool spun the ship around and submerged them underneath. They sailed through a speeding current thousands of meters under the sea, where they could gaze at the wonder of millions of fishies. Of course, since Team Emily was already under the sea moments ago, they weren’t too awestruck. Besides, this same scene was in Firstborn, they can see it there.

Still, it was safe to say Oceana was one of Earth’s wonders. A towering city of corals, shells, and seafloor rock, all encased within an enormous, everlasting air bubble. In the distance was Samiya, the Sea Temple, built with the shiniest and reflective marble. And everywhere were merpeople, Fishmen, or general fish floating about with bubble floaties.

They already heard screaming and shouting coming from downtown. “Cerulea was right, it sounds like.” Eva noticed, holding her Phantom Sword ready. “Don’t let your guard down.”

They rushed to a deep part of town where merpeople were fleeing from. “He’s turning down Wailord Road! STOP HIM!” Rows of streetlights and seahorse carriages were ruined ahead. A team of merman guards in golden armor were chasing a familiar yellow sponge with an eager expression.
“Sheesh, fellas, hold the welcome party for later, some of us are overdue on JELLYFISHING!” Spongebob excitedly raised his net.

“CATCH THAT NET AND HAVE IT THROWN IN A VOLCANO!” a guard cried.

“Okay, I’m not big on Spongebob either, but THIS is overreacting.” Danny commented.

The guards chased Spongebob into a dead-end alley, cornering him. “I’ve got bubbles.” Spongebob said nervously, pulling out his bottle and wand. “Fun at parties!” He dipped the wand in and blew some.

They hit a guard’s eyes. “MY EYES!!” He furiously swung his trident around, knocking the other guards into nearby Fishmen.

“My leg!”

The remaining mermen growled with anger and lit their tridents, slowly approaching to disintegrate the sponge. “Now HANG ON!” Sheldon Cooper jumped in the way. The guards lowered their weapons, seeing this man intended to defend him. “Before you commence with this… I need to see a dry-cleaner ASAP, where is it?”

“…?” The guards pointed to his left. There was a laundry mat with a tailfin logo. “Thank you!” Sheldon smiled gratefully and jogged in there. That’s when Eva, Melody, Danny, and Jessie ran in the way.

“But this is as far as you’re going!” Eva declared, her arms morphed into water. “What would Kyogre say if his guards were wasting energy over an innocent sponge?”

“THERE he is!” The God of the Sea, the great blue and white whale, Kyogre Neptune, hovered over the area with desperate eyes, and a fleet of swordfish. “ARREST that monster, NOW!”

“HOLD on, Sire!” Sebastian the Crab spoke up. He dropped to the floor, skittered under the guards, and approached the tall, slim, redhead woman. “Could it be… Princess Eva??”

“Princess??” The guards began murmuring amongst their selves. Eva smiled with pride.

“Yep! Princess of the Sea, Eva Jackson at your service!” She bowed. “And my children, Melody and Danny.”

“Holy sea cow!” Sebastian beamed. “Look how much you’ve grown, Princess! You aren’t, um… are you still with that fat human?”

“Ahem.” Danny glared.

“Ay guess so.”

“Blood-Dad, what is the meaning of this? Why are you calling a Code Red attack on Spongebob?”

“Eva, you’ve been away for a while, so of course you wouldn’t know, but this sponge is an incredible nuisance. So please stand aside so we may have him taken far away.”

“ Heck no!” Eva absorbed the moist air around her and grew into a colossal water body; though only half as tall as the buildings. “This kid came a long way to meet this sponge, and I can’t imagine it’s done anything to warrant this much treatment. You better explain what’s going on or I’m grilling fish for dinner.” Even the kids were terrified at her appearance.
“Very well, Eva.” Kyogre spoke. “At least allow us to apprehend and secure him in the palace dungeon. Then I shall explain.”

Eva shrunk down to normal. “Fair enough.” And she splashed water over to freeze Spongebob in ice.

Sea Palace, Samiya

Eva stayed close to the guards as they carried the unfrozen, handcuffed sponge up the shiny, slippery palace stairs. “Dang, Melody, your mom’s a Logia?” Sarah said with amazement.

“She sure is. No matter how she morally words it, she’s Queen of the Sea.”

“I’m not surprised.” Emily said. “. . . . I JUST REALIZED SOMETHING!!” She freaked out. “Sarah, Gary, are you related to Davy Jones?!”

Sarah approached a team of mermen with an honest, yet sarcastic smile. “We are terribly sorry for everything he did to you.”

“We forgive you.” They smiled.

“Well-p, that conflict is taken care of.” Emily blushed. “What were we doing? Oh yeah, something to do with Spongebob.”

After Eva helped lock Spongebob in the palace dungeon, everyone gathered in the throne room where Kyogre floated. “Ahem… excusing that… chaos a moment ago… welcome to Oceana, children. I would like to believe none of you secretly signaled a fleet of warships this time.”

“Humorous as that may be-” Team Emily snickered at Dr. Cooper’s garb: golden straps over his top area (mainly covering his breasts), and a metal armored skirt over his underwear. He still wore his shoes and socks, “but I have quite a few complaints about the lack of variety of emergency clothing in your laundry mat. Putting THAT aside, however, I tried to question the manager if the machines were made to clean salt from my garments, but as I don’t understand Mermish, I suppose a higher, English-speaking authority will suffice. Also, while I do not understand Oceanic customs, we are guests in your home, and in America, we provide our guests with hot beverages.”

The little crab scuttled away, mumbling something about ‘Humans being allowed in their palace every decade.’ “While I wait for that, I believe I’ll ask the residents for any, um, less-revealing clothing. At the very least an Aquaman suit…” Sheldon walked away.

“Now, the matter regarding Spongebob.” Kyogre changed the subject. “First, I feel I should ask: Why did you come all this way to see him?”

“Because we’re fans of his show.” Sandy answered. “My brother especially, he-”

“I talk to Spongebob through my dreams and he wanted me to come and meet him.” Jessie stated firmly. “So why the  are you locking him in prison?”

“You talk to him through dreams?”
“Yes, and we go jellyfishing, we bother Shelly and Squidward, we eat Krabby Patties, and don’t get me started on my Sabaody Bubbles.” Jessie held up his bubble bottle and wand.

“Jessie is really great at blowing bubbles.” Sandy spoke brightly. “It’s like his superpower or something! …Mr. Kyogre, I was wondering, is there a thing called… bubblebending?”

“Bubblebending, you say? Well, waterbenders have an attack called Bubble Beam, and can rapidly shoot bullet-like bubbles from their mouths. And controlling average bubbles in the air is a child’s task. Yet… I do sense an unusual power from this child.” He looked at Jessie. “He and Spongebob both possess it. I believe that the two of them are… Bubble Dreamers. Which, in a way, is sort of ‘dreambending’.”

“How?” Eva questioned. “Like fearbending can create nightmares?”

“Um; sort of. I am not an expert in the area… but based on Chronicler’s knowledge, Bubble Dreamers are incarnations of the Dream Spirit, Polokus. A very powerful non-god entity who could put Bad Dreams to sleep with his power. I am not talking about Darkrai’s everyday Nightmares. I am speaking of Dream Spirits who step beyond their boundaries and terrorize the peaceful dreams of mortals. Bubble Dreamers can seal away those spirits. I know of one certain spirit who even the gods feared, that Polokus put to sleep. His name was Bill Cipher. Tell me, Jessie, are your own dreams… peculiar in any way?”

The others looked at him curiously. “Well, I talk to Spongebob a lot, and… he takes me to his friends’ dreams. Sometimes I go to my sister’s dream, and Joey’s. Timmy and Hikari. Oh- hah ha, and Shelly!”

“Very interesting. I heard that Bubble Dreamers were able to enter other peoples’ dreams. Without the aid of Dream Spirits as outside assistance. This way, they could find the Bad Dreams and put them to sleep. The people of Oceana can tell you of Spongebob’s constant messing with our dreams. Ugh…”

“It sounds like a really interesting power.” Eva mentioned. “If Spongebob can do it… maybe it would be worth the while to let him teach Jessie.”

“Absolutely not!” Kyogre shouted. “Spongebob is royally a nuisance! HE is the reason that Manaphy is no longer here!”

“What?” The Ocean King sighed. “A terrible story, really… You must have met the Queen of Ocean Fairies, Cerulea coming in. She is not the only fairy our people renown. There is also a Fairy Princess—a very beautiful spirit that Cerulea allowed to be one of her own. Majestic and graceful… Princess Lapis. We loved watching her dance at regular parties or gatherings. Then one day—ugh—it feels stupid to talk about it. Spongebob purchased a ‘jumbo-sized’ jellyfish net and chased a large jellyfish into an outdoor party. He caught Lapis by accident, but he didn’t notice, so he mindlessly swung his net around to catch the darn creature. Lapis kept getting hit against the ground. You see, a fairy’s ultimate weakness is any kind of net, they’re powerless under the things, I don’t know why. Eventually, Spongebob broke the core of Lapis’s power, her Lazuli Gem. Lapis’s mind and energy were distorted, and she fell into an incredible rage. She would have destroyed Oceana, if… Manaphy had not intervened. He used his wonderful voice to soothe Lapis’s soul, then led her far away from Oceana. None of our healers could fix Lapis’s gem, so he sought to find one that could. Sigh… no one knows where he is now. The least we could do was banish that ungodly sponge.”

“Why couldn’t YOU do something about Lapis, O Mighty King?” Jessie questioned sarcastically.
“I am not the Mighty King I used to be. Gods sacrifice terrific amounts of power when they bear children—especially Firstborn. I cannot protect my people from powerful invaders… Not too long ago, we entrusted our safety to a band of Candy Pirates, but even they are long gone now. Manaphy and Princess Lapis used to be our primary means of defense, but now… Regardless, I cannot let that sponge roam the streets. He won’t find many people in Oceana willing to show him kindness.”

“But how else can Jessie learn about this ‘Bubble Dreaming’?” Sandy questioned.

“What if we found Manaphy and Lapis and brought them back?” Melody inquired. “If we fixed Lapis somehow?”

“I would be eternally grateful, but it would not change my mind about Spongebob. Still… Jessie’s Bubble Dreaming ability is a very important gift. If I recall… there is a forest called the Boggly Woods in Kochi, Japan. The tribe there studies rare and unique abilities such as Bubble Dreaming, and they could teach Jessie what they know. I will allow you to visit Spongebob’s dungeon, but he cannot—”

“Your Majesty, Your Majesty!” Sebastian skittered into the room. “The four prisoners we captured earlier escaped, and they’ve taken Spongebob with them!”

“What?!”

Everyone rushed outside, seeing a blonde-haired teenager in a brown vest throwing exploding pellets at the merman soldiers, carrying Spongebob in his other arm. Augustus Fizzuras flashed the group a grin and wink behind his sunglasses, making his arm Armament to punch through some guards. A football-headed baby flew overhead with jetpacks and blasted missiles to clear the path, and a spike-haired baby blasted bullets at floating swordfish. “Hold on!!” Sandy shouted. “Those babies worked for the pirates who kidnapped us!”

“They’re escaping on a submarine!” Eva pointed, noticing the vehicle rise up beyond the bubble barrier. “I’ll stop them!” The woman spun into a watery cyclone and flew to the barrier, her Logia body dispersed into bubbles.

The Marzipan Pirates suddenly felt their submarine stop, wrapped around a tentacle-current while Eva’s water-made face glared into their front window. Augustus dove out of the bottom hatch, swimming to Eva’s head and swinging Armament punches against her. “A-a-a-ah!” Eva shrunk back into human form, her chi blocked as she was forced to hold breath. Two mermen grabbed and carried her back in the bubble, while Augustus returned to the submarine and flew to the surface.

“We can still catch them, let’s go!” Melody spoke quickly, leading the others back to their boat.

They sailed through the undersea current again and popped out at Mother & Child Isles. They hurriedly sailed in the direction of Oceana, finding a team of mermen surfing along the sea, chasing an airplane high above. “That must be them!” Emily narrowed her eyes, grabbing her slingshot. “Lock on and we can take ‘em down!”

Suddenly, a tiny blue cube landed in Eva’s cleavage. “What the-?!” Almost instantly, it grew into the lovable yellow sponge they were trying to rescue.

“Wow, this feels softer than my pillow! Bai-yai-yai-ai-ai!”
“AAAAAAHH!” Eva punched the sponge away from her, grabbing her ripped red top and covering herself. “THE FUCK DID HE COME FROM?!”

“Hey, there’s a note on his forehead.” Emily took the little paper off. You twerps owe me one. Signed with the Marzipan Jolly Roger. “Um… should we thank them?”

“JESSIIIEEE!” Spongebob’s eyes glittered.

“SPONGEBOOOOOOB!” Jessie never looked so happy.

The two hugged lovingly. It was so heartwarming, to finally meet each other in the flesh. ...Just how long did these two fking know each other in Dream Land? That was the question weighing on everyone’s minds. They pulled away. “Bai-ai-ai-ai! I’m sorry I haven’t seen you in awhile, Jessie. But this scary guy in a dark cloak captured and locked me on that tower! And Neptune knows my real body wasn’t anymore mobile than a nutcracker.”

“Mister Spongebob, it’s a real honor to meet you!” Sandy spoke happily. “We’re big fans of your show! So, um, where’s Sandy?”

“YOU’RE Sandy! Bai-ai-ai-ai! Ahem, actually, I haven’t seen her since I was kidnapped, so um, heheh.”

“Well, since we have a moment’s peace, maybe you could… tell us about that.” Melody requested.

“Hmmm…” Spongebob sat down and scratched his head, “It happened eight years ago, so it’s kinda hard to remember… I was kidnapped by some Water Pokémon, and they brought me to a guy with a pink feathery coat. He said a woman named Morgan put him up to it, ‘in exchange she doesn’t reveal his secret’. Next thing I know, a little girl turns me into a nutcracker. Not like I wasn’t doin’ that enough already, bai-ah-ah-ah-ah-ah!”

“So Kyogre told us you were a Bubble Dreamer like Jessie.” Sandy spoke. “Do you, um, think you could, teach him anything?”

“Well, I dream a lot, and blow bubbles! But that’s about it.” Spongebob shrugged. “Except for jellyfishing, and fry-cooking! And karatay.”

“Either way, we should bring you back to Oceana and have you arrested.” Eva came out of the cabin with a black top wrapped around her chest. “But I guess that wouldn’t be ethical, would it?”

“KND Arctic Prison

The 45 Twins brought Daphne Anderson to the darkest available corridor, keeping her in chi-cuffs as they pushed her into a cell with a metal door. “Why does Marcus want even more extra security...”
now?” Aaron whispered as they walked away.

“Duh, because this lady’s a big deal. She’s with the Illuminati or somethin’.”

“Those guys are real?”

“I don’t know. Either way, they said she had wicked shadowbending, so let’s bring a few more blocks.”

Daphne sat on the floor, cuffed arms over her legs. Even the dark and cold of this room didn’t compare to her. In her mind, however, there was someone she thought about. The thought gave her warmth. “I will save him. Then… you’ll save us, won’t you. I know you’ll always come back for us…” The great, armored figure on the throne. “My King.”

No one is probably gonna get it at first, so I’ll just say it: It is Dimentia’s fault that Nigel Uno is now dead. Reread Daphne’s backstory, and let everything sink in. Well, it partly is. So uh, quick question, how many people here like the new Spongebob episodes, because this guy doesn’t, and you know what, the people of Oceana don’t, either. XP That’s why this makes a funny conflict. So yeah, Boggly Woods, we actually mentioned that place in an earlier chapter, another group is heading there if you recall. In fact, next time we’ll check that group. See you then.

B-19. The Cupcake Core

Chapter Summary

The Marzipan Pirates go to Oceana in search of the Cupcake Core.

The Original Worlds Arc may only be a few more chapters. But don’t worry, we’ll see more of them. This comes after Chapter 33.

Chapter B-19: The Cupcake Core

Oceana; Sweets Factory

The Sweets Factory was the main candy distributor in all the ocean. The merman workers kept the salt out of their sweets, but when it came to applying sugar, they had Sugar Fairies for that. One of their products was fruit-flavored candy, made using real fruit collected from islands. The adorable little creatures had their own secluded break room, a tiny room with a tiny door. Knock knock knock. One of the fairies answered the door to a red-eyed fairy with blue hair and a blue tuxedo. “Hi, everybody!”

“HI, Sally the Salesman Fairy!” the fairies all chorused. “Did you enjoy Glitzville?”

“I sure as sugar did. And look! I brought back the Cupcake Core!” She pulled out a her-size cupcake colored sky-blue, with gold icing and a star-tipped wand, from her little pocket.

“Ooo, goody!” A fairy with a purple mermaid tail said. “Did anybody see?”

“Just a girl with blue hair and her kitty! Some bad men came, but I gave them the slip, and a boom! Tee hee! I’ll take this back to its hiding place. But no telling when the bad men will come again.”

“That will look sweetielicious! Well, off to hide it. Be right backsy!” She picked up the big cupcake, waddling as she carried it off.

The mer-fairy’s cellphone rang. “It’s for me!” She took it out and answered. “Hello? Oh? … Princess Zeiry?”

Above the surface

The sun was setting over the Atlantic. The Ace Flyer flew over the part of the ocean where Augustus’s digital map was marked. Stewie Griffin threw the blue cube that compressed the Ace Swimmer’s matter onto the surface. The submarine miraculously puffed back into being, still in perfect condition. The captain parked the biplane next to the sub, taking Nel out of the trunk as the crewmen crossed to the sub. Stewie compressed the plane into a cube, which he stored in his Infi-Cube.

“Why is big rock floating?” Nel asked as they climbed into the submarine.

“Future caveman magic, Nelly.” Augustus started a new lollipop.
“You know, we may not be taking the front entrance, but how are we going to enter Oceana without being discovered?” Stewie asked as he started up the controls.

“We’re going to park a few miles away from the actual town. Then we’re going to eat these Oxybursts and walk there. We’ll sneak around and look for anyone who looks like a fairy.”

“As foolproof as plans get.” Stewie remarked. “Okay, all systems are go. Get ready to submerge.”

The submarine sunk below the surface, headlights pointing the way forward. They saw the great bubble containing the oceanic city many fathoms below. The pirates parked a few miles away, within a small coral gorge. “Here you go, Nel.” Augustus fed the cavechild the yellow oxygenated starburst, which she began to chew.

“Rock ish really squishy.” Nel said through chews. “Ish rock become mud?”

They climbed out the submarine’s bottom hatch, their lungs light thanks to the magic candy (Nel wouldn’t get the complex science). Stewie, Rallo, and Maggie felt very heavy thanks to the Devil Fruits in their veins. Augustus had to lift the four kids as he jumped large crevices or skipped over mounts. Jumping around underwater was as easy as jumping around space. At the very edge of Oceana’s barrier, the crew could hide under a short wall. Augustus peeped up, and Nel curiously did the same, clutching the top of the wall. “It looks like a back alley section. Let’s go in.”

Augustus hoisted the babies up, and they all entered the bubble.

The crew snuck between two warehouse-like buildings, keeping eyes out for anyone. There were seahorse-drawn carts that octopus Fishmen were hauling boxes into. Stewie took out his binoculars and zoomed on the building across the yard. “Wait a second, this is the Sweets Factory!” he realized. “It’s where Oceana produces all of its candy! The place that Big Mom ordered from.”

“You know, Big Mom offers me a few crumbs from the candy she orders here… they’re pretty good.” Augustus said. “W- Hold on… do you think Aisling’s friend works here?”

“Why would you think that?” Rallo asked.

“Well, if she and Zeira wanna find the Lost Candies, maybe the friend does, too. Maybe there’s a Lost Candy in here or something.”

“Aughbucks, look!” Nel pointed at the side of the warehouse they were beside. “It’s cave drawing of you, but on square leafs and weird paint.”

The Marzipans saw the wanted posters she indicated. Stewie Griffin - $80,000, Maggie Simpson - $66,000, Rallo Tubbs - $33,000, and Augustus – 700,000 Chocolate Dollars. “First, Nel, it’s called paper, and it isn’t paint, it’s called gradient, Adobe Photoshop, and Adobe InDesign. But holy cow, they upped my bounty by 200,000!”

“We can’t go into that factory, they’ll catch us red-handed!” Stewie stated.

“That’s why it’s called bein’ stealthy! What, did you wanna send Nel inside and ask around? Not like she’s wanted.”

“It could work.” Rallo said with sarcasm. “Mah mom catches cave kids scavenging around the trash all the time, they won’t notice a thing.”
“Nel good at stealing from Rocknut cave.” Nel smiled silly. “Nel move like jaguar. Dumb cavemen no notice.”

“Mw-mw, mw-mw, mw-mw.” Maggie pointed.

“Those vents do look small enough for Nel.” Stewie said. “Perhaps if we climb into the Infi-Cube, Nel could carry us inside.”

“You fit into tiny rock?” Nel looked at the dimensional cube in Stewie’s hand.

“Just push this button to pull us out once you get inside.”

“Can you do it, Nel?” Augustus asked the cavechild.

Nel smiled adorably. “Nel is glad to help Aughsucks. Nel is happy for Aughsucks for bringing her to Futur.”

“Aughsucks—I mean, Augustus is happy to have you in Futur. ’kay, Stew, let’s-”

“NO.” Stewie shouted. “I told you to NOT call me that!”

“Just get in!” Augustus took the Infi-Cube, set it on the ground, and forced Stewie inside. He, Rallo, and Maggie joined after. Nel got on all fours and picked the cube up in her teeth like a dog. (Play “Wriggle Sweet Room” from Charlie and the Chocolate Factory!)

Stage B-15: Sweets Factory

Mission: Find info about Aisling’s friend.

Nel scampered into the open factory yard, coming to twin rows of sacks of flour lying on the ground. The parallel sacks were used to prop another sack up from the ground. When a hammerhead Fishman was approaching, carrying two sacks in his arms, Nel crouched and hid under one of the propped-up sacks, otherwise he was sure to notice the cavegirl with his stretched-apart eyes. “Ehhh, where was I supposed to lay these?” the Fishman asked himself, mindlessly walking back-and-forth beside the rows. Nel had to keep crawling under the flour sacks, and when the Fishman walked away from the end of the row, Nel crawled out and kept running.

The cavegirl came to a row of crates, which were each spread apart by one crate-length. A barracuda Fishman was looking into a different crate, his back facing them—he whipped around at the sound of Nel’s faint footsteps. The girl hid behind the first crate just in time, but with every footstep she made, he would whip back around. When the barracuda wasn’t looking, Nel had to position herself and perform a sideways midair flip between each crate, so when she landed behind the next one, the Fishman wouldn’t see her. After the last crate, Nel could make a dash for the fence gate around the factory’s boundaries. Too bad there was a searchlight.

An angler Fishman stood on a watchtower and lit the area around the gate with his light. The fence itself had barbed wire on top of it (was that really safe for an underwater city?). However, there was a small, open box nearby that contained light-rainbow-colored, wriggling critters that were as big as footballs, and had several skinny stems that served as their limp legs. Nel couldn’t read, but the box said Wriggle Sweets. Nel picked out one of the wiggling critters, throwing it into the searchlight. Nel gestured right, and the Wriggle Sweet followed her direction, luring the curious searchlight away. Nel rushed for the gate, using her short size to crawl under a gap at the bottom.
Once Nel was under the targeted air vent, she pushed the button on the Infi-Cube to shoot Maggie out. The non-speaking baby shot her grappling hook above the vent and pulled Nel up with her. Maggie used a screwdriver to unlatch the top of the vent, the two climbed inside, then Maggie pulled the vent back up, assuming it wouldn’t fall off the rest of its bolts. The girls crawled through the duct, dropped down a vertical shaft, and smashed through a vent at the bottom, creating a loud noise that made Maggie wince. Thankfully, the room they were in was stacked with big crates and no immediate guards.

Maggie took the cube and squirted out the rest of their crew. “Nice job, Nel!” Augustus praised. “But we’re going to have to keep it up. So let’s be careful when breaking vents open, okay?”

“Mw-mw.” Maggie rolled her eyes.

The pirates jumped up some short stacks of crates, but afterwards they had to sidle along a thin ledge left open by a taller stack. They could climb into an open spot between two stacks, leading inside the crate fort. They looked over a narrow path below, where a lazy Fishman was asleep on a pile of fallen candy. Above their perch, the top ends of some boxes were slightly open. The crew used their Licoropes to swing these boxes, and doing so caused them to open and spill more candy down below. The kids thankfully made it across before the snoozing Fishman would notice.

They jumped down on a floor below, and from here they could pass a doorway with a fruity-flavored waterfall. They coughed after passing the fall, while also savoring its taste. A conch-shell speaker rang as an announcement spoke: “The Sweets Factory’s new anti-Oxyburst magic fruitfalls are guaranteed to give any non-merman intruder a hard time! A big thanks to all staff for supporting this proposal.”

“Wait, so our Oxybursts won’t work now?!” Augustus shouted. “NOT CONVENIENT!”

They were in a room where a huge gap separated their ledge with the opposite ledge. A 3-feet deep pool of water was down below, along with some floaties. There were gears on the other side, and they had view of the side of a turnable cog lodged within the wall. Augustus threw his Gobstopper at the gear, turned it, the ball bounced back, and the water rose slightly higher, but sunk back down quickly. Augustus kept throwing and hitting the gear until the water was at their level. The babies jumped across the floaties and made it without drowning. The four kids stacked atop each other so Rallo could keep spinning the cog, letting Augustus swim across the level water.

The next room was puffing colorful bubbles of water, made of fruity flavors and magically floating. Augustus jumped into a yellow, lemon-flavored one close by, swimming in it as though it were normal water. He stuck his head out and said, “Tastes yucky, but it’s safe.”

“Even if we could breathe in those things, we can’t swim.” Stewie stated. “Can you carry all of us across them?”

“It won’t be easy to jump them… Fine, hang on.” To reach the bubbles that were higher, Augustus had to swim toward the top of his bubble, perform a Torpedo Spin, and launch out of the bubble with the momentum, reaching the higher one. Augustus got to a cherry-flavored bubble, propelled to a smaller grape bubble, and then he could Torpedo Jump to a ledge with four bottles of Fizzy Lift. However, he noticed a much smaller cherry bubble with a Gold Wonka Bar above it. He couldn’t build enough momentum to reach it from the grape bubble, so he had to start from the lemon bubble and perform consecutive, nonstop Torpedo Spins, to the large cherry, to the grape, and then his jump was strong enough to reach the small cherry and grab the candybar.

Augustus grabbed the four soda bottles on the ledge, dropped back to the Baby Trio plus Nel, and allowed them to drink. “Wuuuuuh…” Nel felt extremely light, turning upside-down once she was off her feet. “Nel feels like bubble…”

“Help her float, you three.” Augustus ordered the trio. “And move quickly.”

The captain made his way back up to the ledge, the babies floating after him as they entered a corridor with a watery chasm. Fruity bubbles floated in here, too, so Augustus used them to cross the room while the babies had to maneuver around them. There were cannons stationed on either wall (they looked like F.L.U.D.D. from Mario Sunshine), shooting huge globs of water through the fruit bubbles, so the pirates made sure to avoid them.

A waterfall blocked part of the passage, but Augustus noticed a bubble on his upper left against the wall, holding a switch. Augustus shot up to it, hit the switch, and dropped back down to the bigger bubble. The waterfall stopped, but the crew encountered another one. There was a gear in the right wall, which the airborne babies turned to make the waterfall open. Augustus could jump to a ledge, which had another gear to keep the waterfall open and let the babies join him.

The Fizzy Lift wore off just in time. They passed another doorway and were standing on a ledge overlooking a room with a long treadmill. Sugar Fairies dressed like fruit were dipping sugar onto sweets passing along the treadmill. “Hey, Sugar Fairies do work here!” Augustus exclaimed. “We’ll ask one of them!”

“Sigh, good point. Let’s see if there’s a way around them.”

“EEEEEEEEEEEE!” The adorable little fairies scampered happily in circles before piling into tiny doorways.

“Way to manipulate the predictable.” Augustus pulled out his dry lollipop and dropped it.

“Maggie says there’s Pop Gum over there.” Stewie pointed across the room. “Perhaps I can control the ceiling cranes with this panel and lift Nel across.”

“Now things are convenient.”

Stewie approached the control panel on their right, with Augustus lifting the baby so he could reach. The cranes began to move under Stewie’s control, so he lowered the closest one for Nel to grab onto. He moved the crane to the next one so Nel could swing to it, and repeated the process until the cavegirl landed on the opposite ledge. She grabbed a container of orange Pop Gum and started chewing. She then jumped down to the lower floor, behind the treadmill so the guards wouldn’t see, and the others did the same as they crawled over to her.

Augustus grabbed Nel, peeped up over the treadmill, and when both puff-fish yawned at the same time, Augustus shot a gum into each of them so they would PUFF. With that, the pirates could pass the incapacitated guards and enter a room with a pool. There was a ledge on the other side with a bushel of Rock Candy. It was too high for Augustus to Torpedo Jump to, but he could push the dark-pink inflated puff-fish in and balance on her round body (his boots protected him from her spikes). He allowed the babies to cling onto him, throwing them up onto the foothold before jumping on himself.
They ate the Rock Candies and encased their selves in spheres, with Augustus sharing his with Nel. They rolled into the water and each held down four switches. This opened a gate, leading them into an underwater passage. The four had to maneuver around mines and force their rock spheres against four different, long buttons on the walls. They had to press these buttons simultaneously, as they would begin to stretch back out, giving them a limited time to get into the gate. This led them to a tunnel with pitfalls on either side, and pipes shooting currents that threatened to push them in. They pushed through the currents quickly, stayed on the path, and rolled above a surface.

They smashed their crystal spheres against a ledge, which the kids peeked over to see into a room with a giant apple rotating on a stand. There was a path carved into and around the apple (that part of skin was cut off), and Sugar Fairies were digging into it. The crew could casually walk around the apple with the fairies busy, and another box of Wriggle Sweets was found in a corner. Augustus picked one out, hid under the entrance ledge, and tossed the sweet several feet to the right in the room. The captain Armament punched the wall, making the Sugar Fairies whip to attention and notice the Wriggle Sweet.

They immediately climbed off the giant apple and swarmed in, making little “AWWWWWE”s and saying “Silly Wriggle Sweet!” With the cute fairies all nuzzling the critter, the pirates put on their Corn-Clamber Boots and marched up the giant fruit (August carried Nel). At the top of the apple, they could see a giant banana swinging up and down, so when it was down, the pirates jumped to and latched their boots to it. They trekked to the top of the banana, and when it swung up, they could jump to a ledge.

At the end of this ledge was a large orange spinning aimlessly in place. They could only briefly spot the cut part, so Augustus went first in jumping and sticking to it. The orange would rotate by a floating, stable cut lemon platform, which the captain jumped to, and from there, he faced a giant floating bushel of purple grapes. A specific row of grapes were taking turns turning and exposing their green undersides before turning back. Augustus jumped to the first one when it came, stepped across the following ones quickly, but before jumping to the platform above his vision, he kept following the green grapes higher up the bushel to get a floating Wonka Bar.

He jumped to the foothold afterwards and set Nel down as they awaited the others—the Baby Trio merely launched their grappling hook to the ledge and hauled their selves over. “Platforming isn’t normally our thing.” Stewie remarked, earning an eye-roll from Augustus. The crew entered the next hallway, which had several high ledges with water pools before them. The first one was short and squirted water spouts, so when one was about to shoot, they jumped in and were pushed up to the next ledge.

The next pool was longer, but twin rows of spouts led to the ledge. Each set of spouts took turns, starting from their end and moving to the other end, but they were only up for half a second. They quickly jumped on one of the starting spouts and raced across the following ones as they came. The third pool’s spouts were more spread-out and had water cannons shooting big bubbles. They kept their eyes out for spouts about to pop up, avoided the water cannons, and successfully reached the final ledge.

They were in a large, dim-lit room with several security devices protecting a capsule with a blue cupcake with golden icing. “Damn, and Ah thought mah mom liked to hide cupcakes from me.” Rallo said. “They didn’t have any good ceiling cabinets?”

“A cupcake? Maggie, gimme those.” Augustus took the girl’s binoculars for a better view of the sweet. “…Is that the Cupcake Core?”

“One of the Lost Candies?” Stewie asked.
“Yep. I may not know what it looks like, but the crazy security makes it a pretty likely guess. Alright, kiddies, it’s time for some Mission: Impossible.”

There were two rows of searchlights rotating endlessly in the same direction. There was an empty spot in each row, but they weren’t next to each other. Thankfully, there was a Wriggle Sweet box close by. Augustus waited for the empty spot to show, then quickly threw the sweet into the light next to the spot. The entire row ceased rotating so that one light could shine on the sweet. When the second row’s empty spot came by, the kids jumped through.

A glass wall blocked their way, but fruity water bubbles were coming out of cannons below, floating up quick and popping on the ceiling. Augustus went by himself, Torpedo Jumping his way across the bubbles, going a half circle around the center where the Cupcake Core was, then he was able to swim into an opening in the glass. He pressed a switch to open the glass, so the four kids could jump over the gap where the bubbles came from.

Another glass wall protected the Cupcake Core, and there was a short water spout risen up on one area. Two Amps (floating electric balls with faces) flew circles around the glass wall, electrifying the water spout when it went through. Augustus jumped onto the spout, and a stairway of them rose up and around the glass. Augustus hurriedly ran over the spouts, jumping the ones that would be electrified by the Amps, until he could get inside an opening in the glass. He pressed a switch to open the glass and let the babies inside. The only thing protecting the cupcake was an electric barrier with four generators.

“Time for Stone Fist to mark his name.” Augustus turned his hands Armament and punched his palms. He punched and destroyed each generator as the electricity stopped. The captain marched up and took the cupcake with the star wand. (End song.)

“Mmmm… That rock look yummy.” Nel asked with big sparkling eyes and a drooling mouth.

“Sorry, Nel, but I don’t know if these regenerate like the Sugary Wonders.” Augustus turned the cupcake and studied every inch. “But man, I bet this tastes like Heaven. Or greater.”

Suddenly, the room turned red as alarms rang, and Sugar Fairies dressed as fruit hung onto ropes and surrounded them, aiming tiny bows and arrows. “Hands where we can see ‘em!” one yelled in their squeaky tone. “You may think you’re a bunch of sneaky rats, but rats don’t sneak by us. Because we’re teenier than them!”

“Man, those voices are starting to hurt my ears.” Augustus remarked.

“When we shoot you with our cupid bows, you’ll go gaga over each other. You’ll be kissing and kissing, and we’ll take pictures and post them on the Internet.”

“And since that boy is a teen, ALL his friends will think he’s a creepy perv who stalks little kids.”

“Ruin someone’s future is funilicious! Get ready to fire, fairies!” They all readied their arrows. “Wait! Don’t hurt them!” The Sugar Fairy with the purple mermaid tail flew in. “They’re the people Princess Zeira called about!”

“You mean he’s the pirate Augustus?” The fairies lowered their weapons and looked more closely.

“Yes! He’s on all the pictures.”

“Wait, Zeira told you about me?” Augustus asked.
“She did. She said you were searching for the Lost Candies. Our friend, Sally just brought the Cupcake Core back from Glitzville. Princess Zeira called us and said to keep it safe, because a smelly man called Augustus was searching for the Lost Candies!”

“Only smelly ’cause I change baby diapers all the time.” Augustus subconsciously passed the cupcake to Nel while he fished around for a new lollipop. “But since we’re here anyway, do you fairies know if the Lost Candies regenerate if they’re eaten?”

“A berry good question.” The mer-fairy said as Nel studied the delicious cake in her hand. “It’s hard to say, really.” Nel sniffed the cake, entranced by its scent. “Because the Lost Candies…” Nel opened her mouth for a big bite, “are indestructible!”

CHOMP! They whipped their attention at Nel. She had golden icing around her lips. She licked it off. The pirates and fairies merely stared at the innocent-looking cavechild. “. . . . Nel’s tummy heavy…”

“Did you just swallow the Cupcake Core whole??” Augustus questioned.

“It big, but squishy rock. But now Nel feel sick. Nel like taste, though.” She smiled.

“Boy, that’s going to be a really big poop.” The mer-fairy said.

“EEEEEEWWW!” the other fairies squealed.

“Oh yeah, almost forgot!” Augustus spoke up. “We came here to begin with because the Forest Princess, Aisling mentioned a friend of hers in this town. Would you know anything about that?”

“You must mean the Ocean Fairy Princess, Lapis.” A fairy dressed like a banana said. “But she hasn’t been seen in eight years. And it was all because of…”

“Hu-hu-hu-hu-hu-hu…” The fairies shivered, afraid to speak of the culprit’s name.

“The alarms went off in here!” They faced the entrance to the room as Fishmen began to storm in.

“Crap, it’s the buzz!” Augustus exclaimed.

“THAT’S them!” the puffer Fishwoman yelled. “They used me as a platforming prop!”

“I don’t think we’ll be able to speak for you with these guys!” the mer-fairy yelled.

Augustus kicked Nel several feet backwards. “Nel’s not on the wanted posters. After they take us, can you fairies guide her outside? Bring her behind the factory and tell her to get to the sub. Oh, and give her this after you’re outside.” He tossed them an Oxyburst.

“IT’S OVER, pirates!” The Fishmen grabbed the four humans and handcuffed them. “We’re taking you to Samiya! You’ll be lucky if the Ocean King treats you well. Nice work catching them, fairies. We’ll throw you some extra gummy koalas.” The guards began to escort the pirates outside, not noticing the cavegirl in the faint light.

Washington; KND Museum of Artifacts

The museum had been closed for several days, due to Emily Garley’s absence. Sector GF landed their S.C.A.M.P.E.R. (piloted by Candy Chiu) outside the treehouse entrance. As they stepped off the craft, Carla was quick to fly out of the pig, Waddles’ range, for the pig had been trying to nuzzle her the whole journey. “Ha ha! See, Carla, I told you Waddles would open up to you.”
Mabel laughed.

“Well, could you please tell him I am closed to him?” Carla stated. “I do not associate with runts of the litter!”

“Speaking of closed, the museum still isn’t open.” Dipper observed. “How do we get in?”

“Closed, shmosed!” Grenda stomped forward, looking agro. “The ticket booth was closed at Sev’ral Timez’ concert, but that didn’t stop me from breaking in and catching the ticket guy making out with his magazine. Heeeey-YAH!” With a mighty punch, Grenda broke the sealed door open.

The museum was still lit by a little daylight. Dipper led them to the back room that he remembered the first time he was brought there. “I first read about the Master Emerald in a KND book and asked the curator if it was actually here. She brought me back here and… Voila!” After opening a secret trapdoor, they climbed down into a dark room, lit green by the enormous emerald.

The mystical light reflected in their awestruck eyes. Carla set foot on the floor and approached the beautiful gem. “Astounding… Where would one find a jewel like this?”

“I heard the Mobian KND wanted to thank the Firstborn Guardians for their help, so they allowed them to keep the Master Emerald.” Dipper explained. The male Pines helped himself up and straightened his back. “What I don’t understand is why the Author planned it for his portal. I mean, if Bill helped him make the portal before, then he should’ve known about it, which means he would’ve brought the emerald there before trying to activate. Did the Author make the decision without Bill’s knowing? But if Bill said that it worked before, then this feels like a really huge change in programming.”

“You’re thinking too much, Dipper.” Mabel said as she carefreely climbed on the emerald. “The Author probably wanted his portal to look prettier. If this thing wasn’t so big, it would make a PERFECT wedding ring!”

“Which brings up the question, how do we carry it back to Gravity Falls?” Carla asked.

“Grenda has no problem carrying it.” Mabel replied as her muscular friend lifting the giant emerald with one hand. “But it probably won’t fit on the ship…”

“Wait! Mabel, didn’t you bring the Crystal Flashlight?” Dipper asked.

“Oh, yeah!” Mabel jumped off the emerald and whipped out the flashlight. “We’ll shrink it down and put it in our pocket.” Grenda put the emerald down, and Mabel flashed the purple light on the shining green gem, shrinking it to the size of her hand. Mabel picked it up and placed it in her backpack. “Or a backpack.”

“Hokay, let’s get back to Gravity Falls and stick this in the machine.” Dipper climbed first up the trapdoor’s ladder. “But we’ll still need to fix the rest of the portal. Maybe we can ask one of the KND scientists.”

“I should be able to fix the machine with the right tools.” Carla said as she hurriedly flew ahead. “Just hurry, I want to bring Wendy back as soon as possible!”

“Okay, just take it easy!” Dipper tried to jog after her.

“She talks, she flies, and she’s a technical wizard!” Candy said with admiration. “Where did Wendy shop for you, Carla?”
“The discount store of mutant pets for magic children…”

Oceana; Simaya’s dungeon

The Marzipan Pirates were locked in the palace dungeon after they were shown to the guards. It was dark, empty of other prisoners, and, not surprisingly, damp. “At least they air-bubbled our cell.” Augustus said with a casual smile.

“Ugh, what the hell are we going to do now?” Stewie asked angrily. “They took all of our weapons, AND the other Oxybursts.”

“Do you think they’ll let us call our moms?” Rallo asked with worry. “But I don’t remember my house’s phone number! OH GOD, we’re gonna get eat by fish-people!” He gripped his afro and shook.

“Chill out, you twerps. At least it can’t get any worse than this.” Augustus said.

That’s when a merman appeared and opened their cell door. “You’ve got a new cellmate. Enjoy him.” He tossed what seemed like a big yellow sponge with limbs into the cell before closing.

The sponge pushed his hands against the floor and propped himself up on his feet. “Not the most comfy place for a slumber party, is it?”

“AAAAAHH OHMYGOD OHMYGOD!” Stewie shook ecstatically. “You’re Spongebob Squarepants, oh I’m such a HUUUUUGE fan!”

“Hold on, Stewie, is that yo’ dad??” Rallo questioned.

“No he’s not, but I WISH he was!!”

“I just assumed he was because BOTH of you need your asses cancelled.”

“Oh, HA HA, become an old comedian, why don’t you.”

“What the hell is he doing in here?” Augustus asked.

“I don’t know.” Spongebob shrugged with honest confusion. “I was just on a downtown jellyfishing run (excuse all the wrecked carriages outside) when these mermen started trying to arrest me for hurting their princess, or something…”

“Princess? Was she a Fairy Princess?”

“I dunno. Ooo, but if I was a woman, I would be the Princess of Krabby Patties…” He imagined himself in a flowing gown designed like his favorite sandwich, and had a castle made of ketchup and mustard bottles.

“… PWAH HAH HA, pwah hah ha!” Stewie started cracking up. “Hah hah ha! HAH ha! OH, that is quality comedy you don’t get on Cartoon Network!” He wiped a tear. “Please, Augustus, let him join our crew!”

“You have a pirate crew?” Spongebob asked. “Oh, I’d love to, but I can’t. There’s someone I’m supposed to meet. He’s upstairs in the palace with his friends, but I won’t be able to leave with him if I’m a criminal.”
Augustus turned his hands Armament and tried to tug the cell bars. “Man, these’re tough. But I think I have a plan. Spongebob, do you remember that episode where you and Patrick were making faces or something?”

“Are you talking about the Season 8 episode ‘Face Freeze’, the Season 12 episode ‘Face Flash’ where we tried to get the silliest picture for Photo Day at Mrs. Puff’s Boating School, or the Season 18 episode ‘Face Frenzy’ where everyone in Bikini Bottom tried to make funny faces and ended up-”

“JUST make a face! Any of them will do!”

“Okay! Just give me a sec to prep up.” He turned around and started rearranging his face.

“GUUUAAARD!” Augustus called. “We have a medical emergency!”

The merman jailer swam over, looking suspicious. “What seems to be the ailment?”

“POOR DESIGN QUALITY!” Augustus grabbed Spongebob and faced him at the guard: Spongebob’s eyes, nose, and mouth were inside-out, exposing the hideous and snot-oozing undersides.

“AAAAAHHH!” The merman screamed before passing out and floating up like a dead fish. His keys sunk down, allowing Augustus to grab them and open the cell. “I’ll swim out and grab our things, you kids wait here with Sponge.” He dropped the sponge on the floor and swam out of the air bubble.

Stewie, Rallo, and Maggie tried to hold their stomachs in, their faces green. “I don’t remember any of those episodes! BLUEEEEH!” Stewie puked.

Augustus swam out to the lobby and found a giant clam holding their Infi-Cube and Maggie’s weapons. Augustus tugged the clam open with Armament hands and grabbed the items before quickly swimming back. He grabbed some Oxybursts from the Infi-Cube and gave one to each baby and himself. Stewie grabbed a remote control from the cube and pressed some buttons. “I’ve set the Ace Swimmer to come to our location. We’ve got to get to the barrier!”

“No time to lose!” Augustus grabbed the babies and Spongebob in his arms. “Let’s go, Sponge!”

As he struggled to swim through the lobby, Spongebob noticed the clam Augustus tore open minutes ago. “That reminds me of the time I fell in love with a Krabby Patty and killed a bunch of baby clams to protect it!”

“Your show teaches kids to kill birds for food??” Rallo questioned.

“Mw-mw-mw.” Maggie noted.

“I think he was trying to avoid saying that.” Stewie replied.

“Prisoner escape!” More bands of mermen were swimming out once the pirates made it to the palace foyer. “They’re taking the Yellow Devil!”

“Oh, like the episode where I dressed up as a monster and fell into a church while I was jellyfishing!” Spongebob remembered as Augustus kept carrying him.

“Not even gonna question that!” the captain remarked.
Stewie grabbed a jetpack and a missile launcher to fly overhead and blast at incoming guards, and Maggie shot bullets at floating swordfish. As they were escaping the palace, Augustus looked back and saw the group of human kids, and one redhead adult, rushing out to observe the situation, along with the Ocean King himself. “Uh-oh. 'Guess we played around too long!”

“WAIT! That boy is the kid I was talking about!” Spongebob pointed.

“If you’re still wanted, it won’t work to just throw you to him!”

“Right on time!”

Rallo spun around to shoot soundwaves at the pursuing guards. Once they were at the barrier, Augustus grabbed onto the babies, jumped out, and quickly swam to the submarine, climbing in the still-open bottom hatch. Nel had thankfully made it back beforehand, picking her nose at the time of their arrival. Stewie jumped at the controls and turned off the autopilot. “As soon as we’re back in the sky, they shouldn’t be able to—” The submarine quaked just then.

“What was that?!” Rallo yelped.

A face made of water and bubbles appeared at the ship’s front window, glaring venomously at the escapees. “Just where are you going, little worms?” Eva Jackson hissed.

“SEA MONSTEERRR!” Rallo flailed his arms.

“No, Logia waterbender.” Augustus spat his lolli-stick out and punched his palms. “Not a problem for me, anymore!” He dove out of the submarine and swam to the woman’s projected water-body. With his fists hardened, he dealt quick jabs at the liquid body, blocking Eva’s chi as she shrunk back into her human form. “A-a-a-ah!” She was forced to hold her breath underwater.

“Kids, don’t drink and swim!” Augustus winked at the woman before going back in his sub.

The mermen were still giving chase, but as soon as the pirates reached the surface, Stewie threw the dehydrated Ace Flyer into the sea so its cube would grow back into the biplane. They jumped in the plane, Stewie compressed the Swimmer into a cube and caught it, and Augustus quickly set the plane for liftoff. “Love to stay, Oceana, but we have places to be!” Augustus cheered.

“Ooo, going on pirate adventures is gonna be so much fun!” Spongebob said excitedly. “I’ve been ready for this longer than I can remember! Check out this pirate tattoo I have on my right buttock!” He dropped his pants-

“UUUGH!” The crewmates shut their eyes (except Nel, who looked curious as always).

“PLEASE get rid of him!” Stewie clutched his captain’s pants and cried pleadingly. “He’s not as funny as he used to be, now he’s just annoying and I want him gone, I don’t want him in our crew anymore, pleeeaaase!”

“Alright, alright! …Hey, there’s those people again!” Augustus pointed at a yacht in the sea ahead. “They catch up fast. Lemme just write a note.” Augustus grabbed a small paper and pencil from a compartment at his seat, wrote You twerps owe me one, drew the Marzipan Jolly Roger, and posted it on Spongebob’s forehead. “Stewie, now!”

Stewie shot the annoying sponge with his dehydrator, then Augustus threw the compressed cube down to the yacht. The mermen were hopelessly pursuing their plane from afar, not aware that Spongebob was safe on his friends’ yacht.

“Sigh… That was exhausting.” Augustus sighed as they flew under the night. “Nel, do you still have the cupcake?”

“Mm-hm…” Nel rubbed her sore belly.

“You know, why is it called the Cupcake Core, anyway?” Stewie asked.

“The same reason for the Sugar Fuel?” Augustus cocked a brow. “Heck, even the Rock Nut looks like the fastener type of ‘nut.’ …Wow, I can’t believe I didn’t notice these things.”

“The Lost Candies are named after terms that would apply to… a machine of some sort.” Stewie thought aloud.

“Well, except the Sun Cream. Speaking of which, if the Lost Candies are indestructible, how did Veruca’s Devil Fruit powers still affect the Sun Cream?”

“Indestructible doesn’t mean they can’t be supernaturally transformed in some way.” Stewie argued.

“I dunno… something doesn’t add up about that whole thing. Well, at least now we have two Lost Candies. Unless we count Zeira’s Sugar Fuel, that means we have half of them. And I remember where Luviro said we could find another one: the Gear Heart.”

“That’s named after a machine part, too!” Stewie noticed.

“Exactly. The names can’t just be a coincidence. And by the time we find them all, we may as well know. And as for the Gear Heart, get ready to go to the place where the gays are all up in your face: Kamabaka Kingdom.”

“Oh, Stewie, your hometown!” Rallo joked.

“Oh, shut up.”

Fiore Dimension; bathhouse

The next morning, Levy, Mirajane, and a purple-haired girl named Laki brought Wendy to a bathhouse. The girls were naked, sitting in a tub that was carved in the ground as the steaming water eased their souls and melted away their woes. “Um… Excuse my rudeness, but does this world have bathing suits?” Wendy asked, feeling a little awkward about being naked in a tub with three teenagers.

“Yeah, but they’re not used for bathing.” Levy replied. “Lighten up, Wendy!”

“I don’t think I’m old enough for this!” Wendy flushed, covering her chest.

“Wendy, it’s fine.” Mirajane said with a friendly smile. “We do this with our Wendy all the time. There’s nothing shameful about it because we’re all members of the same guild.”

“Even so, this feels a little too… personal.”

“Maybe, but it’s what we do.” Laki lied back and folded her hands behind her head. “You might as well get used to it.”

Wendy sighed, relaxing herself and pushing aside the awkward feeling. These girls allowed her to bathe with them like it was a common thing. She embraced in the tub’s heavenly feel.

Should I be concerned? Should I be desperate to go back to my world? ...Because it’s hard to feel that way. I like it here.

According to the guildmates, Chelia stayed at a local inn, so that she could return to the guild and keep looking for ways to send Wendy back home. None of them appeared too concerned. It was like they enjoyed Wendy’s company.

They’re so nice to me. What did I have in the other world, anyway? Sure, I had a few friends... but all I did was cause trouble. The Government keeps trying to arrest me. My friends would be happy I found a better home.

“Hey, Wendy, what’re those papers on your waist, again?” Mirajane asked.

“Oh, you mean my Chi Stabilizers? They keep my Air Chi from going crazy. Without them, the wind would blow around too much outside. ’Course, I’ve been learning to control it, but just in case…”

Maybe I’m getting my hopes up. I could make trouble for these people, too. Then they wouldn’t want me…

“Maybe we could research a way to get rid of that curse.” Levy said. “It must be a pain to have to deal with.”

Wendy looked down in shame. “It is… You guys wouldn’t wanna be around me for 10 seconds.”

“Oh, I’m sure we could manage.” Mira replied. “A little wind is nothing compared to what we deal with.”

“And we would help you with it, too.” Levy promised. “Just don’t hesitate to ask!”

“Boy, you’re more modest than our Wendy.” Laki remarked. “Quit whining and just accept our help, already. That’s what I always tell her.”

“You never told her that!” Levy argued.

“Well, I should.”

“Hm hm hm!” Wendy laughed.

Still... I wonder if I asked them... would they mind having two Wendys? I bet I would make great friends with the other one.

Fairy Tail

After their bath, the girls returned to the guild, where Mirajane cooked some ramen for Wendy and brought a glass of juice. Chelia greeted them, but was sad to report she had no luck in finding a way back for Wendy. Wendy thanked her for her effort and decided to share her ramen with Chelia. Then for the next hour, they forgot about the subject of Wendy’s return home altogether, as Gajeel entertained them with stories of his own adventures. This led to Chelia sharing some stories, and Levy and Mira began bragging about how fast this Wendy claimed to be.

This resulted in Wendy and Chelia having a footrace around Magnolia. Wendy only used a fraction of her whole speed to give her friend a chance, but by the end of the race, Chelia was clearly more exhausted. The pink-haired airbender (or should we say Wind Mage) decided to challenge Wendy to arm-wrestling, to prove she was still stronger, and she beat Wendy in three quick matches. Wendy cast the Arms spell on her dominant hand, so Chelia had a harder time besting her. Their arms locked in place for three minutes before Wendy’s was able to pin Chelia’s.

To reward her for this lucky break, Chelia agreed to tie Wendy’s hair in two long pigtails, in the same fashion that their Wendy sometimes had her hair. The tails were fixed with red bows, then Chelia brushed them until they were perfectly smooth and straight. “There!” Chelia said after finishing. “You look as pretty as our Wendy!”

“You know what would look super cute?” Laki asked. “Putting tiny stars on the tips of her ears so they look like Christmas trees!”

“She does look like an elf, so why not?” Cana followed.

“How about it, Wendy, can we??” Laki excitedly requested.

“Stop it, you two are embarrassing her.” Levy said.

Wendy blushed at the idea of her pointed ears being decorated for Christmas. …She remembered last Christmas, when she had a dream of meeting her older self, living with a family and having friends. The more time she spent with these people, the more she felt like she was dreaming. She was afraid that, when she woke up, she would be back in her own world… but she wasn’t. She was still here, with the happy, carefree people that loved her. They thought Wendy was a delight. If she asked them, they would let her stay here. And no one would miss her in the other world.

…Well, Dr. Facilier would wonder what’s keeping her. The first man to give Wendy a bed to sleep on, taught her magic, made her feel like life was worth living. And Carla, her talking winged cat whose very existence was a mystery, she would never know what type of creature she is, never know that there were others of her kind in this dimension, an “Exceed.” The Chelia in her homeworld was probably captured by the Government, hoping Wendy was at least safe, and Lee Andrew might be hoping to hear from her again, and…

Wendy clasped the lap of her dress. Her lips quivered, and tears quickly built up in her eyes. “Sniff, sniff!” She got up and ran outside.

“Wendy!” Mira yelled as everyone looked in surprise.

Wendy fell to her knees and cried. No matter how much she wiped the tears, they wouldn’t stop. Wendy’s hands and arms became soaked. The Fairy Tail members came out to see her. “Sheesh, it was just an idea!” Laki shouted. “We weren’t gonna make ya get the little stars!”

Wendy sniffled. “I’m sorry! All of you are really nice, and I’m really thankful for your hospitality. Nobody’s treated me so nice before, it’s like the home I never had. I really want to stay, but…but I can’t! This isn’t my real home! If I don’t get back to my own world, Carla and Dr. Facilier will be worried about me, and I’ll just feel so bad if I…” She choked out more sobs.

“Wendy, calm down!” Mirajane knelt down in front of her and tilted Wendy’s head up. “There’s nothing wrong about missing your home. We promise we’ll keep trying to find a way back. Just stay positive.”

She sniffled, and the tears started to subside. “The truth is, I… I really like this world. I actually liked it better than my home, I didn’t wanna leave. What if Carla and the others are going crazy trying to bring me back? I’m a terrible person.”

“I’m sure they’ll be thankful you aren’t hurt, at least. For now, we’ll just work even harder to find a way back.”

“But if it makes you feel better…” Levy began with a playful smile, “We’re sorry for being too likable!”

“Sniff… Ha ha ha ha ha ha!” Wendy couldn’t help but find that hilarious.

“The second you get home, make sure your friends throw you a party.” Mirajane stated. “But if they don’t, we might just come to your world and throw one ourselves.”

Facilier’s Voodoo Emporium

Dr. Facilier was boredly looking at his crystal ball. Wendy and Carla certainly have been gone a long time, and he was unable to find them. Perhaps it was a result of Gravity Falls’ obscure magnetic field. He wished he could tell if they were in danger.

A ringing sound came from his fireplace. Somebody was trying to teleport to him from the Floo Network. However, the doctor had a spell in place, requiring him to approve the person’s entry, otherwise the warp would fail. He approached the fireplace, and was delighted to see the magical projection showed Wendy’s vibrant face. She must have kept Floo Powder with her just in case. “Come on in, Girl!” He clicked the icon.

Emerald flames emerged from the fireplace. …Gideon Gleeful was the one who came out, wearing a Wendy mask. He took it off and smiled wryly at the man. “Expecting somebody else?”

He threw Facilier over the table with his psychicbending. The doctor scrambled to his feet as the Child Psychic approached. “My, look at this beautiful shop full of illegal magic stuff. The Ministry of Magic would love to see this. BOYS, come awn in!”

Four magic Aurors marched out of the Floo Network and stood beside Gideon. Facilier’s heart was racing, the doctor unable to configure how any of this happened, what would happen now, or even more-so, what happened to Wendy. “Dr. Harvey Facilier,” the Head Auror spoke, “for possession and use of a Devil’s Wand, and harboring a wanted criminal, you are hereby under arrest. You will await trial in Azkaban.”

Negaverse; Latsyrc Household

“Friends, I’m happy to welcome you to my home!” Ikuyim danced into her room and allowed Positive Sector W inside. Ikuyim had several plants, shelves aligned with pretty gems of various colors and shapes, and a sleeping mat on the floor.

Fybi sniffed the pleasant air of the room. “‘Tis the most fragrant scent in this malodorous world. Thine choice in décor is praiseworthy.”

“It isn’t bad, I guess.” Anthony said, enjoying the natural air. “So like, what’s up with those people at the volcano, again?”

“Oh, that’s just my sister and her friend, Yllehs.” The group went over by the window to view the volcanic field beyond Ikuyim’s back yard. “Ikus gets a lot of temper tantrums and turns everything into lava, so we need Yllehs to fight her and cool her down.

Lavabender Ikus Latsyrc and icebender Yllehs Nosnhoj were in another climactic battle. Yllehs surfaced on an Ice Road, creating a wide curve around her opponent while Ikus sent streams of lava to break parts of the ice. Yllehs suddenly lunged at Ikus, hands lit with ice as she attempted to slam them against her, but Ikus raised a lava wall, which Yllehs turned to stone when her ice hands touched. Yllehs was knocked back when Ikus kicked a piece of the wall at her, then the lavabender surfaced forth on a lava wave. Yllehs skied away, raising a trail of tall icicles, but Ikus surfaced between each one and melted them in her pursuit.

“Wow, and I thought Michelle was annoying.” Anthony remarked. “How do you get any sleep?”

“Knowing that tomorrow is another adventure!” Ikuyim happily danced over to her shelf of purple gems. “I loved to collect treasure as a hobby, but when I discovered my earthbending, I began to practice with them.” She waved her hands and made an oval gem and triangle gem float. “I had a natural talent for it. You try!” She passed the oval gem to Anthony.

The boy set the gem on the ground and held his hand above it. He channeled his power and struggled to lift it. …The gem shook and lifted slightly, but it plopped back down when Anthony’s grip broke. “Sigh, it’s really heavy.”

“Didn’t that Minish say no earthbender ever lifted a diamond?” Aranea asked.

“That’s not a diamond, it’s an amethyst, silly!” Ikuyim laughed. “But you’re right, diamonds are impossible to bend. They’re like, super strong!”

“More than you know.” A woman’s voice said from the doorway.

Ikuyim gasped, recognizing her immediately. Medusa walked in and said, “Thannypoo, knock the extras out.”

The green snake on her shoulder flashed his eyes at each of the Sector W members. They passed out on the floor, with Fybi dropping like a bird from the air. Ikuyim clenched her teeth in anger. “Whaddid you DO to them?!”

“Easy, I only put them to sleep!” Thanatos yelled defensively. “Not the everlasting sleep.”

“I’m sorry to interrupt your lesson, but the Darknesses won’t find themselves.” Medusa said. “I’ll need you for this one, Ikuyim.”

“Need her for what?” Anthony asked groggily. The three looked in surprise as the boy was pushing himself up from the floor.

“He withstood my Sleep Stare?” Thanatos asked. “How is that possible?”

“When you train as long as I have… heh… you decide when to sleep.” The boy smirked.

“Hmmm…” Medusa scratched her chin. “Impressive feat of will, but… you’re not really relevant to my plan.”

“Ikky-yim, who is this lady?”

“She’s Medusa. And--; hn-hn, that’s not my name, silly!” Ikuyim switched from a serious glare to a sunny smile.

“Wait… Medusa?” Anthony cocked a brow. “Palutena’s sister?”

“HISSSS!” Medusa bared her fangs, scaring the boy. “Don’t you mention her name in my
“She told us you were searching for the Darknesses. So, are ya?”

“I am.” Medusa still glared. “That’s what I was about to ask Ikuyim to do. You’re going to awaken one of the most important Darknesses.”

Ikuyim glanced at Anthony. “I want him to come with me.” She stated firmly.

“What? Why?”

“So that I can give him some on-the-field training. I don’t think you would’ve asked me unless this had something to do with my power. Now, who is this Darkness?”

“How very clever.” Medusa smiled lightly. “All right. Your little beaver can come with you and die before one of the mightiest women the universe has ever known. She is a real beauty of a gem… A conqueress by the name of Yellow Diamond.”

These Side Stories chapters are actually getting to be pretty long. It’ll be annoying when I have to divide them on deviantART. Well, Chapter 20’s next, so let’s dedicate it to our well-known Lady Darkness.
Chapter Summary

Anthony and Ikuyim travel back in time to meet Yellow Diamond.

Wanted to write a little more of the stage, but screw it, I had a hard day at work and need to do some homework.

Chapter B-20: Diamond and Pearl

Island south of Indian Ocean

Medusa brought Ikuyim and Anthony to the Posiverse, where she then warped the two to the designated island via Dark Portal. “I still wanna know what’s going on!” Anthony demanded.

“Just hold your horses.” Ikuyim told him. “Medusa promised to help us find the Thirteen Darknesses. Hopefully, she’s taking us to a clue.”

Medusa led them to the underground chamber where Stewie’s time machine lay. “I set the coordinates to take you to a planetoid called Crystallia. Exactly 6,557 years ago. There, you should find the one called Yellow Diamond.”

“Yes, and a very special one at that.” Medusa smirked. “She comes from the First Dimension. The very place that, when the Twenty Keys are united, will be open, and the New World can be constructed. You two must serve as her guides, and be on your best behavior. Return with the Return Pad when you’re finished. And remember, you are not to tell her of your mission.”

“You don’t tell me what to do!” Anthony shouted.

“I can turn you to stone right now!” Medusa shot her face into his, her reptilian eyes narrowed. “Now get in the machine!”

With a gulp, Anthony stepped into the machine with Ikuyim, the door shutting behind them. They pressed the activate, and the blinding blue light zapped them across the timeline. “But I thought Anthony wasn’t included in Yellow Diamond’s original story.” Thanatos said. “Only Ikuyim matched the description. Won’t this affect things?”

“We’ll watch from here and see what happens. Perhaps there was a mistake…”

First Dimension; White Diamond’s Throne

“White Diamond…” Yellow Diamond marched into the massive, white, glittering chamber.

“Yes, Yellow Diamond?” the towering, beautiful empress asked softly.

“I wanted to apologize for my earlier insubordinance.” Yellow bowed her head. “I was only… concerned for our wellbeing.”
“It is understandable. All is forgiven…”

“I’ve just been… so angry.” Yellow hugged herself lightly, speaking with congested anger. “Our Ether falling into their hands… They’re abusing our people! They act as though we’re merely objects, even though WE’RE the ones who wish to SAVE this crumbling dimension!”

“Yellow Diamond… please be calm.”

“My Diamond, please fuse with me!” She looked up at her empress with pleading eyes.

“Excuse me?”

“I need… solace.” The smaller diamond closed her eyes. “We haven’t fused in so long… I would like to feel your warm embrace again. I just want a reminder… we will always have each other…”

“Topaz…” White Diamond slowly reached down.

“My Diamond…”

White Diamond gently picked her up. The empress remembered the last time they fused. Although she didn’t express it, she enjoyed it very much. Her subordinate was so tiny… so adorable… yet, her love and passion for her empire was vast… and White Diamond loved her fierce and strict aura.

White Diamond held Topaz to her chest, stood up from her throne, and twirled. Yellow Diamond shone and sunk into her empress’s chest. White Diamond glowed, and their body transformed into a beautiful entity comprised of both their souls.

Yellow Diamond… this is wonderful. I had forgotten… how it felt to be with you.

It is wonderful, My Diamond. And I will always keep you with me. I’m sorry… to have to…

Topaz… what are you doing?

I will not let the trolls reap our land any longer. I want to destroy them, but I can only do so with your power. I knew you would not agree to this… so I must…

Topaz… Stop!

My Diamond… forgive me…

Crystallia

Amethysts, jaspers, and pearls lay scattered around the landscape. The planet’s surface composed of crystals and gems of diverse colors, and their beauty was complimented by the stars of space. A single pearl of yellow tint shone as it rose into the air. It formed a body of a yellow, slender humanoid, whose yellow hair was up in a point, she wore a one-piece, had long leggings, and yellow slippers, and the pearl was on her chest.

But then she heard a faint shimmering sound. She turned and saw the yellow diamond float into the Yellow Diamond had reformed. “My Diamond!” Pearl happily skittered over to the woman who was slouched on her knees.

“Augh… Pearl…” Yellow Diamond stretched to full height. “What… happened…”

“Those dirty trolls attacked us with their machine! All of a sudden, I was poofed, and all of the other Gems—…” Pearl paused and looked at her empress with shock.

“What? Pearl, what is the matter?!” Diamond asked sternly.

Pearl skimmed her up and down, standing stiff and her eyes wide. “M-My Diamond… you’re so… small.”

Diamond’s eyes widened. She looked down and only then realized that Pearl was a few inches shorter than her. “WHAT HAPPENED?!?”

“I-I-It must’ve been the after-effects of the machine. Heheh, traveling dimensions certainly absorbs a lot of energy from a Gem, hahahahaha.”

“This is UNACCEPTABLE!!”

Her thundering voice scared Pearl into slouching like a crab and scuttling backwards. “You’re still taller than me! M-My Diamond, I’m certain this doesn’t change how powerful you are.”

“Sigh, it doesn’t even matter! Did we really end up in the dimension the trolls were constructing?” Yellow Diamond looked around.

“Ugh… We need to find a way back home. Without all the Diamonds, the Ether will be impossible to control. Pearl, start collecting all these gems and store them in your pearl.”

“Yes, My Diamond.” Pearl started picking up each and every fallen gem, stuffing them inside her chest gem, which glowed and let them into a subspace. “Sigh, the idea of all these Gems confined in my chest… it’s like a breeding ground. Hu-hu-hu-hu.”

Yellow Diamond heard a buzzing sound and turned. A blue light flashed into existence and dropped two characters on the ground: a girl with white hair, a dark-gray shirt, and orange skirt, and a boy with buckteeth and large feet.

As Ikuyim and Anthony helped their selves off the solid, shiny ground, the pair of high-heel boots approached them. They stared up at the imposing yellow woman with the diamond on her chest. “Who are you?” she demanded.

“Uh… I’m Ikuyim Latsyrc, and this boy is Anthony.” The Negative girl answered.

“You’ll show your respect, Antling!” Pearl stated, skittering up from behind her empress. “You lay before Co-Empress of the Gem Empire, Yellow Diamond!”

Ikuyim stared at her with admiration. “You’re Yellow Diamond!” She stood up, smiling brightly. “You’re so beautiful! And that gem is so pretty!”

“She looks like a bottle of pee.” Anthony stated, getting up.
Yellow Diamond bent down, grabbed him by the ankle, and picked him up upside-down. “H-H-Hey-!” The empress grabbed two of his toes and shook them, turning the hanging boy and studying every angle.

“Wait… you’re an organic being.” Diamond said. “Like the trolls or the angels.”

“What, you mean the Nimbi?”

“What exactly is your purpose here? Do you hail from our home dimension?”

“We’re just explorers!” Ikuyim shouted assuredly. “We came here to explore this crystalline planetoid! I am also trying to teach that boy earthbending.”

“Earthbending?”

“The ability to control stones and soil, of course!” Ikuyim smiled. “My specialty is crystal and gembending!” She stomped the gem ground and forced a chunk into the air, flying it around before setting it back. With a spin and jump, Ikuyim forced red crystals out of the ground around her.

“She can control GEMS?!” Pearl fearfully clutched her master’s arms. “My Diamond, she can’t be trusted!”

“Hold on…” Still holding Anthony, Yellow Diamond bent down and felt the ground. “I…I’m not feeling any Ether in this ground. But then…” She looked at Ikuyim, “How do you use such power?”

“I connect with the chi in the ground using my feet!” Ikuyim pointed at her bare feet.

“Chi? Is that the same as Ether?”

“I’ve never heard of Ether, so I’m sorry, I don’t know.”

Diamond stood up fully and said, “But if you have control over this land, you could be of use to us. You will escort me to the source of this chi you speak of so that we can harness its power!”

“Hah hah, you must be misunderstanding! Chi is-”

“YES, we’ll escort you, please lemme down!” Anthony yelled with blood rushing to his head.

“I promise we’ll help you the best we can!” Ikuyim bowed.

“Very well. You are hereby my temporary escort.” Diamond acknowledged. “And as for you…” She looked at Anthony. “You can be Pearl’s pet.” She dropped the boy in Pearl’s arms.

The slender servant’s eyes stared with the seven-year-old’s brown eyes as she held him like a pet. “Uhh… You someone’s mom?” he asked.

“SILENCE!” Pearl dropped him and pinned a foot on the boy. “You are my pet, Fleshy! Sit before Master!”

“I’m not doing this-”

Yellow Diamond drew an electric sword from her chest, flashing it threateningly. Anthony sat before Pearl like an obedient, frightened doggy. Pearl smirked with pride and malice. “Ha ha, hokay, but I still reserve some time to teach him bending.” Ikuyim laughed. “Let’s begin exploring!” (Play the “Underground” Theme from Yoshi’s Island!)
Ikuyim led them along a path out of the field. The path was enclosed between some steep mounds and snaked around some large, dark-green emerald crystals. There were green Bald Clefts hiding behind the emeralds, rock monsters camouflaged with the environment. They charged at Ikuyim when she walked by, but Anthony was quick to stomp them. The path ahead was blocked by huge bright emeralds. “Anthony, try to move this aside.” Ikuyim instructed.

“HUUUUUUU!” Anthony poured all his strength into pushing the unbendable crystals.

“I’m guessing this one is defective.” Yellow Diamond said.

“No wonder it’s so small! N-No offense, My Diamond.” Pearl stuttered.

“Anthony, gembending is about seeing the inner beauty of the earth.” Ikuyim told him. “When you look at that emerald, does it make you think of anything you’re fond of?”

Anthony took a breath and placed a hand on the crystal, staring at it. In its beauty, he saw Fybi. Her emerald eyes matched the crystal. Fybi smiled at him, and Anthony smiled back. He used a gentler touch in moving the rock aside. His hand pushed through and cracked it. Ikuyim decided to break the rest of them. “Good on your first lesson!”

“So instead of knowing how to function since birth, he must be taught verbally.” Diamond observed.

“He really is a pet.” Pearl said.

They came to a vast canyon with a deep, spiky crystal bottom. The group stepped onto a flat-topped, blue gem pillar leaning against the cliff. Ikuyim felt the entire pillar through Seismic Sense, seeing its loose base. She willed the pillar into tilting across the chasm, doing so gently so her passengers could stay balanced. Orange space jellyfish (Jelliens) were floating around the air where the platform tilted, so Pearl drew a two-sided electric spear, swinging it at the jellies in a graceful fashion. When they were close to a green gem pillar, they jumped over to it, then Ikuyim used her bending to shift it toward a pinkish-red pillar. Pearl cut away more Jelliens, but when they landed on the pink pillar, it wouldn’t tilt in either direction. However, Ikuyim used her bending to make it sink into the ground, then gave a thrust up, making the gem shoot up and spring them across the chasm. They landed bumpily on a convenient soil ground.

The four entered a cave that was very dark, except for the sparkling light-red crystals. It made the explorers appear as red figures in the darkness. The earthbenders could see around the cave with Seismic Sense, but Ikuyim confirmed there were Eyeballus Rocks lurking about, eyeball creatures made of rock. Ikuyim lifted a ruby crystal to light the way, and when its glow shone on the Eyeballuses, the creatures shirked. However, other ones were spitting small rocks at them from the darkness, and when any of them came for Yellow Diamond, Pearl sliced them away.

Ikuyim stopped at a dark, bottomless chasm, her steps causing a few pebbles to crumble and plummet. There was a big, ruby door of some sort across the chasm and on a cliff. The chasm was also on their right, but there was a path leading to the door on the wall across the pit. “If only we could get over there.” Ikuyim said. “This ground is pretty loose, so I can’t make my own bridge from here.”
“I might be able to reach there by going up this wall.” Pearl indicated the opposite wall they were close to.

“Could you take Anthony with you? Then he could make a bridge from up there.”

“Just hurry up, Pearl.” Yellow Diamond stated impatiently.

“Yes, My Diamond. Now, hold still, my pet.” Pearl lifted Anthony in her right arm and twirled her spear in her left. She spun it fast as a helicopter, sticking it in the wall as she sawed up it. She then sawed across the ceiling, body hanging over the chasm, the Eyeballus still shooting at them, until they could set their feet on the path above the parallel wall. They walked around to the ruby door, and Anthony stomped the cliff to stretch a stone bridge down to Ikuyim and Diamond.

After the two regrouped with them, Ikuyim led Anthony to the ruby door. “When I think of rubies, I think of anger.” Ikuyim told him with her positive smile. “Course, I can’t think of anything that makes me angry! What about you, Anthony?”

Anthony put his hand on the ruby. The only red thing he could think of was Michelle’s hair. And boy, did his sister make him angry. Laughing at him so cockily, because she was so much better at earthbending. Anthony did to this ruby what he could never legally do to his sister: he punched it and shattered it to pieces. “Forget punching-bag dolls, therapists should get THESE in their office!”

The door led outside, where rows of Crystal Clefts charged at them. Anthony couldn’t stomp on the spiked Clefts, so Ikuyim stomped crystals up from the blue ground to knock them away. They followed a snaky path within a narrow trench before it led them to a chasm with lava. A long, blue crystal hung over the lava from the right wall. Anthony punched the wall and made the crystal fall into the lava. It floated as the current turned it to face the other side. Ikuyim jumped down first, ran across the buoyant crystal, and jumped to grab a thin crystal dangling from the cliff.

Since Anthony wasn’t nimble like she was, Pearl picked him up, ran across the crystal, and wrapped her legs around the hanging crystal to climb it. Yellow Diamond simply made a high jump onto the left wall, went across, and dropped down to the others. The group proceeded on the path, and they stopped at a dead end, but the wall stretched over another chasm of lava. “This way, Pearl.” Yellow Diamond simply leapt high above the wall and walked across. Pearl followed her with her buzzsaw spear.

“That’s okay. We can just do like this!” Ikuyim slammed the wall, sticking some green crystals out of the wall over the chasm.

“Why can’t you just spring us up there?”

“Because this is more fun, silly!”

The crystals threatened to fall under their weight, so they had to quickly and carefully jump down to the next one. The crystals sloped down like stairs, but when they landed on the lowest crystal, Ikuyim used her bending to make it shake up and down, building enough momentum to fling them onto the next high crystal. No other crystals were available, so Ikuyim smacked the wall to make some more. The next one was too far away, so Ikuyim wiggled their current crystal left and right until they could launch forward. The following crystal required the same mechanics, but since it was at a lower level, Ikuyim softened the shake so they could make it. The next one was further and higher, so Ikuyim wiggled this one diagonally to fling in that direction.

Ikuyim smacked the wall again and emerged more crystals that formed a “W”. The kids ran down the first slope, up the next, each of the crystals immediately fell out the wall after stepping, down the third slope, up the fourth, then they made it to where Pearl and Diamond waited. The group approached a sapphire door this time. “Whenever I look at sapphires, I always find myself cooling down.” Ikuyim said.

“Well, most Sapphires possess cyrokinetic abilities.” Pearl informed. “Though very rare ones possess telekines—”

Anthony punched the door open. “I just pretend its Vweeb and I’m stompin’ him. Man, gembending is easy.”

“Heheh… Lucky for you, these are easy gems to move.”

The door led to an enclosed area with a left road and right road. The right had an impassable river of lava, while the left road was above a short cliff. Ikuyim propelled herself and Anthony up there. They followed a jagged, narrow path that sloped upward, knocking out some Crystal Clefs on the way. They saw a large, round boulder with little crystals sticking out, perched on a tall cliff. “That can get us across!” Anthony said hopefully, climbing the last bit of steps before the cliff.

“Anthony, don’t-” Ikuyim tried to say.

The boy punched the wall, making the boulder loosen from its perch and threaten to crush them. “Yuh-oh.” The earthbenders hurried back down the path as the spiked stone chased them. They leaped off the ledge they started from and watched the boulder roll into the lava river. The kids shrugged at each other, figuring this could work—they realized that Pearl and Yellow Diamond were missing. “We’re over here!” Pearl called from across the river.

“You’re taking much too long. Hurry up!” Diamond shouted.

“Heeeeeeere, Anty Anty!” Pearl patted her knees, calling Anthony like a dog.

“I’m getting tired of that lady.” Anthony said as he and Ikuyim got on the boulder and used it to roll across the lava, withstanding the pain on their scorching feet. They were quick to jump off on the opposite side and cool their feet down. The narrow trench path led them out into an open crystal canyon, with the humans walking several paces ahead of the Gems. (End song.)

Ikuyim saw a piece of amethyst on the ground and made it bounce to her hand with a stomp. “Try to crush this, Anthony.”

She gave the gem to Anthony, who began squeezing it in attempt to shatter. “Ow… How’s this one work?”

“They’re just a stronger variety. Most normal earthbenders have a hard time with it. Some people believe that gems grow from the Heart of the World, too, the same as Nature Crystals. Their pure properties reflect the beauty of the Heart. And because the Heart is the embodiment of Mother Earth’s heart, it’s very strong and unbendable.”

The amethyst cracked in Anthony’s hand. “Hn… Not to me!” He smirked. “…Ow!” He dropped the gem and shook his hand from the pain for how hard he squeezed.

“How much longer until we reach the source of ‘chi’?” Yellow Diamond asked.

“Oh yeah…” Anthony remembered that was the reason they were escorting them. “Where are we supposed to lead them?” he whispered to Ikuyim.
“Uh, I dunno… I’m gonna run ahead!” Ikuyim skipped forward eagerly.

“I need a rest.” Anthony sat down to rub his aching soles.

“Organic wastes of space.” Yellow Diamond scoffed. “Pearl, do a scan of the area. These fleshies probably wouldn’t know Ether if they were sniffing it.”

Pearl skipped her way up a nearby crystal mount, perching her feet perfectly on its tip. Her pearl lit up and scanned the vast crystalline landscape. “Sigh, I’m not detecting one trace of Ether.”

“This can’t be possible.” Yellow Diamond picked up the cracked amethyst Anthony dropped. “How can there be so many lifeless gems in one setting?”

“What is Ether, anyway?” Anthony asked.

Pearl slid down and responded, “Well, Pet, Ether is the energy that dwells in the Gem Homeworld. It is a powerful force that can give life to anything and manipulate reality. For a long time, races from other planets have been stealing our Ether to achieve their own ends.” She made a scowl. “As if our dimension wasn’t distorted enough.”

“The four Diamonds of our world had the power to stabilize the Ether.” Yellow Diamond said. “But without me or White Diamond there, it will run rampant. The Gem Empire’s ultimate goal was to save our universe from its chaos… but thanks to those trolls, all of them will be doomed!” Her fist trembled.

“My Diamond, please calm down!” Pearl said with her hands held up. “I promise we will find a way back home.”

“Guuuuuuuys!” Ikuyim’s voice echoed from the distance.

The three walked a few feet down the path and saw the girl waving her arms from the top of a hill over a trench. Many shiny blue, giant crystals stood up from the hill’s surface. “I found this weird pyramid! There’s some writing on it!”

Ikuyim went up and rubbed the pyramid. “I don’t really recognize this type of stone. It’s like… otherworldly.”

“Well, we are on another world.”

The ground trembled, startling the four to attention. Ikuyim bent down and touched the ground. “Uh-oh. I thought I felt something weird about this hill. It’s not a regular hill… it’s alive!”

“Alive?!” Anthony shouted.

“WHOOOOOOOOOOOOOA!” The hill turned sideways and caused the four to fall to the ground below. From here, they watched as the colossus stomped away on stubby feet. The beast that was 20 stories high ran several miles away and turned, showing its ugly, big-chinned mug.

“GREEEEEEHHHHH!”

“It’s like one of our Gem Monsters!” Pearl exclaimed. “Except... I’m still not detecting any Ether from it.”

“It must be mad at us for climbing on it. We should go-”

“Wait!” Anthony yelled. “We have to get up to that pyramid again!”

“That pyramid is of no interest to me!” Yellow Diamond stated.

“Yes it is!” the boy argued with her. “Don’t ask me how I know, but I think you’re able to read what’s on it.”

“That text was unfamiliar. I would not-”

“JUST trust me!”

“Steel your teeth, Pet!” Pearl smacked him. “Show your respect to Her Highness-”

“WATCH OUT!” Ikuyim slid the two away with earthbending when the Cleft sent a storm of sharp crystals at them. Yellow Diamond turned her body into solid diamond, the crystals unable to shatter her while they broke their selves. Ikuyim hurried beside Anthony as they both got in fighting poses. “Anthony, if you’re right about what you say, then we need to take this monster down. This’ll be your first true test as a gembender.”

“It’s not the only time I fought an oversized rock. This’ll be a walk in the park!” (Play Blizzeta’s Theme from Zelda: Twilight Princess!)

Boss fight: King Cleft

The colossus unleashed an earsplitting roar and charged at the two earthbenders, but Ikuyim stomped the ground and sank herself and Anthony into a hole. The planetoid trembled ferociously under the beast’s contact with the cliff, and Ikuyim hurriedly burrowed a tunnel underneath the Cleft. They resurfaced behind the mountain as Ikuyim hurled some large gem shards at the crystals on the Cleft’s rear. Roaring with anger and slight pain, the Cleft stomped its feet as it about-faced. The mountain performed a tremendous leap, its big-chinned mouth hanging open as he faced directly down, wishing to devour the morsels. Anthony and Ikuyim bolted forward, out of the monster’s range, and the earthbenders flew into the air when his body crashed against the ground.

His big stubby feet wiggled as he seemed to be stuck in this position. There was a bright reddish-pink, circular crystal patch in the center of his underside. “Gross.” Anthony said. “Why do all these rock monsters have to have a weak spot on their-”

“Anthony, if I shoot you up there, can you break through it?” Ikuyim asked. Yellow Diamond and Pearl came up to them from behind.

“Why can’t we make Pearl do it?”

“I wasn’t bred for this type of task!!” Pearl flinched in disgust. “It’s on you, Pet!”

“Now or never, Anthony!” Ikuyim stomped and sent Anthony flying at the weak spot with a rock-jab. The boy charged his fist and punched through the gem patch with great timing. Inside the Cleft’s turned-over inside, the boy clutched a wall and started punching it, creating dents and cracks with his bending. He smashed every fragile crystal he could on the inside, and the interior suddenly rolled as Anthony felt himself land on the right-side-up floor. Overwhelmed by the beast’s thundering roar, the King Cleft spat him out of its mouth.

The colossus ran miles away, running in circles around the distant plain as crystal missiles flew at its opponents. Ikuyim quickly knocked away the crystals coming at them, but the Cleft was too far away to attempt to chase on foot. “Do you guys have any idea to catch him?” Ikuyim asked.

“Yes, My Diamond.” Pearl drew out her two-sided energy spear, ripping the polearm in half as both sides contracted to just the spears. She flipped gracefully and stuck them on the bottom of her shoes. Pearl picked Anthony up and began to skate across the gem ground with great haste using the energy blades on her feet. She swiftly dodged the crystals and was quickly closing in on the beast. King Cleft roared, charged at his pursuers, but then flipped to sit and slide on his bottom. Pearl rapidly spun around and moved towards the left, evading the monster by inches.

Anthony was dizzy and sickened by the spin. Pearl didn’t understand his moans, but told him to cease as she skated toward the now-standing monster and got beside its foot. She reformed her spear, twirled it like a baton, and used it to saw up the foot and across the Cleft’s underside. She threw Anthony up into the hole, where he resumed stomping and destroying the weak crystals. He was blown out by the beast’s great bellow, hitting the ground haphazardly as Ikuyim and Yellow Diamond made it to where he was.

Ikuyim grabbed Anthony’s arm and ran around the King Cleft. The beast narrowed his agro eyes on Yellow Diamond, and desired nothing more than to crush her into gravel. Yellow Diamond tried to summon the power taken from White Diamond, tried to conjure floating diamonds to shield her from the creature’s foot. However, her full powers had yet to recover in this miniaturized form. “MY DIAMOND!” Pearl jumped in the way, spinning her spear so fast, it projected an energy barrier to keep the Cleft’s foot aloft. “Please get away! I won’t let this monster crush you!”

“Nothing can crush a Diamond! And with the strength of two Diamonds, are you really questioning my-”

“I, said, MOVE!!” Pearl jabbed her foot so fast, she kicked her empress away, but her pose faltered and resulted in her being smashed by the Cleft.

“UUUUUUUUUUOOOOOOOOHHHHH!” The Cleft howled with anger over these hard-to-kill enemies. Ikuyim and Anthony ran underneath as the former sprung up a pillar to lift them into the opening. “You know, it would be really funny if this guy’s chin fell off from all his yelling!” Ikuyim said with a smirk.

“I’m ready when you are!” Anthony returned the look.

Both earthbenders hurried to the beast’s mouth, standing their ground against his deafening roar. Anthony and Ikuyim locked hands. “Let’s channel both of our chi into one amazing stomp!” Ikuyim yelled.

“On three!”

The kids jumped out of the open mouth and high-fived. They hurried around the monster’s fallen body and saw Yellow Diamond standing by a crater. They rushed over to her side. The Diamond’s expression was one of horror and anger. Pearl was lain in the crater, her limbs bent and smashed, and the pearl on her chest cracked. …The cracks were growing.

“Pearl… Why…” Yellow Diamond tried to restrain her anger. “I told you it couldn’t have crushed me… Why didn’t you LISTEN?!”

Pearl’s body fizzed like static. She had a big smile as she spoke weakly. “Because you know… as much about this world as I do. And that’s… not very much.” Fizzed. “My Diamond… we were so lost and confused… all of the other Gems have lost their power. I wouldn’t have lasted… if it wasn’t for you… My Diamond…”

“I did not order you to sacrifice!” Diamond shouted. “I still needed you… to carry the Gems and find a way back to Homeworld! Without Peridot here, you were the only capable one I had!”

“Heh heh… A capable Pearl… not many of us get to hear that.” Her gem cracked more, and her body fizzed harder. “It was truly an honor… to serve you, Yellow Diamond. I know a Gem as flawless as you… will find a way back home… and save our universe.” Another fizz. “Good-bye… My Diamond.” The gem shattered, and Pearl’s body disappeared.

When Yellow Diamond was going for a walk outside her palace, something caught her eye: a Pearl was stylishly swinging a two-sided spear behind a large, jagged gem. Curious, the empress approached her. “What are you doing?”

“YAH!” Pearl flinched, facing the empress with one leg bent and up in the air, while the other foot was on its tippy-toes. “My Diamond! I-I was just…"

“Playing with your spear.”

“Hee hee…” Pearl grinned nervously. “I heard that… the soldiers were preparing for another battle. I thought, if I were able to fight… I could dwindle the enemy’s progress?" "

Yellow Diamond raised a brow. “If that’s what you thought… then I’ll put you on the front lines.”

Even though the Pearl was so skinny and flimsy next to the Quartzes, she was fast and made quick work of the angels. After that battle was done, she came to bow before her Diamond. “That was impressive… Hmm… very well: from this point, you will be my personal Pearl. That means I expect more from you than the other Pearls. You must move faster, be more obedient, and be overall better than the other Pearls. Am I clear?”

“Yes-My-Diamond!” She saluted quickly.

Almost instantly, every gem that Pearl had stored into her Infi-Storage materialized around the field. It was a disheveled mess of lesser pearls, jaspers, and amethysts. “…Well, that sucks.” Anthony remarked.

Yellow Diamond picked up the broken remains of her Pearl. She crushed the shards in her hands, still angry. “Disobedient… And I thought she was the perfect Pearl. She followed me everywhere… she did everything I told her without question… I know it’s not uncommon for a Pearl to fail… but WHY do I feel so aggravated?!?”

“Because she meant a lot to you.” Anthony said. “You loved her… for always being loyal to you.”

“Hmph… What would a mere rodent know?” She glared at him.
Anthony remembered himself as a tiny, riding on Fybi, the person he trusted the most. “A rodent that knows a lot…” he replied, seeing no point in explaining to her.

“Now’s our chance to get back up to that stone.” Ikuyim pointed. “If Anthony’s right, you can read it, Yellow Diamond.”

The angered empress decided to comply, allowing Ikuyim to lift them to the top of the King Cleft via a rising pillar. Yellow Diamond approached the pyramid with foreign writing. It was true… Yellow Diamond was able to read it now.

One who seeks perfection and order will find their selves crumbling. Submit to the chaos, and understand there is nothing you can do.

A dark aura appeared around the pyramid. It flew into Yellow Diamond’s self-named gem. She winced a little, but as it absorbed completely inside, she felt odd.

Yellow Diamond awakened as a DARKNESS. Only 10 more to go.

“…” Yellow Diamond stared at her hands. “Was this… the source of your ‘chi’?”

“N-No, no!” Ikuyim stuttered. “I didn’t get a chance to explain! Chi is a force that exists everywhere and inside all beings. But the gods give people called benders the power to control certain parts, like earth. L-Like, for instance…”

“I don’t think now is the time for a lecture.” Anthony noted.

“Sigh… well, now I need a new servant.” Diamond said. “Are you two going to help pick up these gems or not?”

The kids looked at the hundreds of gems scattered down below. They exchanged quick glances. “Return-Pad!” Anthony yelped. Ikuyim put the device down as they stood on it and warped back to the present.

“WHERE ARE YOU GOING?!” Diamond yelled hopelessly. “GET BACK HERE! HEEEEEEEY…”

Yellow Diamond was stranded on Crystallia for two Earth years. She was all alone on this planetoid with no way to harness power for her gems. The longer she waited, the more she knew that Homeworld must be crumbling. She despaired in not being there, to retain order. And yet, the message on that pyramid still haunts her…

After ages of waiting, she heard a sound above her. Yellow Diamond looked up and saw a tremendous ship of dark-magenta color and unknown origin. It was accompanied by a fleet of Irkens, who sought to make a settlement on this rock. The Tallest Dirk saw the tall, yellow woman from afar… that was one long neck.

With the Irkens’ aid, Yellow Diamond finally found a great source of Ether called Planet Avalar. However, the natives of this universe seem to call it “magic.” Regardless, Yellow Diamond was able to revive her Gem soldiers, and in exchange, they would serve the Irken Empire, a race that sought rule and order across the universe. To this day, she didn’t understand why that white-haired girl and her pet rodent appeared on that lonely rock…

Present time

“Oh, now I remember.” Medusa spoke after watching the monitor. “When Yellow Diamond told us her story, she mentioned a white-haired girl that controlled the lifeless gems... and her pet rodent! Hmm, so much for firsthand sources.”

Anthony and Ikuyim materialized out of the time machine. “So, when she read that pyramid... she awakened herself?” Ikuyim asked.

“The same thing happened to Fybi after she read from a Gibberish Cube.” Anthony replied. “But I still don’t get what those things do.”

“The Poneglyphs awaken the True Light within the chosen ones.” Medusa responded. “While the Pyrameglyphs awaken the True Darkness. Then when all twenty have come together, the final battle between me and Palutena will commence.”

“So the Lights are going to fight the Darknesses, too?”

“Yes... Too bad we have the advantage.” Medusa smirked. “Anyway, congratulations to you brats. I’ll take you back to Ikuyim’s house.” The goddess opened a dark portal, leading the children inside.

“Medusa, no one said anything about ‘True Light’ or ‘Darkness.’” Thanatos whispered. “You’re just making that up!”

“Be quiet! I still need to act like I know what I’m doing, if just a little bit!”

Latsyrc Household

After Medusa dropped them in front of Ikuyim’s house, the two went back upstairs to her bedroom. “Anthony, Ikuyim!” Sally exclaimed. “Where have you two been?!?”

“Judging by their description of a purple woman with a snake, I assume it was Medusa?” Ynohtna inquired.

“Ugh, you? What’re you doing here?” Anthony asked rudely.

“My sister and I were in the bathroom when somebody fell through the mirror!” Ynohtna blushed. “Wanna guess who?”

“ANTHONY, THERE you are!” Michelle McKenzie stomped around Harvey and Aranea. “I’ve been worried sick about you, and so has Mom! But Dad’s just bein’ lazy like usual. You better tell me where you went!”

“Michelle, how the HECK did you get in the Negaverse?”

“I climbed on the sink to catch a bug, but then the mirror turned all gooey, and I fell in.”

“Then we had a little mishap,” Ynohtna followed, “where she thought I was her brother, and Ellehcim was her long-lost twin.”

“It’s nice to meet you, Michelle!” Ikuyim waved. “My name is Ikuyim. I’ve been teaching Anthony gembending!”

“Gembending?”

“Yeah, it’s a really tough form of earthbending.” Anthony poked his sister’s nose. “Too tough for you, even. Since gems are more pure and clean than regular rocks, it’ll take ya forever to-”
Michelle casually made two amethysts from Ikuyim’s shelf float around the air using her fingers. “Tee hee hee! It’s easy!”

Anthony’s mouth drooped open, and he looked less than intelligent. “Uuuuuh…”

“Wow, if you can do that,” Aranea said, “maybe you can bend those diamonds-”

“FORGETIT! Let’s gohome!” Anthony grabbed Michelle and dragged her out of the house, not wishing to discover if she can bend the unbendable gem.

Gravity Falls; Portal Chamber

Mabel set the Master Emerald on the ground and resized it with the Crystal Flashlight’s blue ray. Grenda then used her super strength to set the massive emerald into the machine like the journal had drawn. Carla looked over the blueprints and began to alter the other settings on the portal. It took a little under an hour before she finished double-checking. “Sigh… It appears to be done.”

“If this works…” Dipper approached the activation lever, “we may be able to bring MaKayla and Wendy home. Still, I’m a little worried… What exactly did Bill and Gideon wanna do with this? Carla, even you said it was harmful to the Time-Space-”

“We’ll shut the machine down afterwards.” Carla shouted. “Just bring Wendy back!”

“Okay! Well… here goes.” Dipper jumped up and pulled the lever.

The portal spiraled to life, and the symbols around it lit up. A small arrow rotated on the circle, aiming at a symbol of a flame, then at one of a fairy with a tail. v“Detecting coordinates of previous users. Initiating callback system.”

“Callback system?” Carla repeated.

“Maybe it’s trying to bring Wendy and Kayla back!” Dipper said hopefully.

“Is it?! Oh, Child, please be safe…”

Dimension “Karakura”

Night had fallen over Karakura Town, but the street and building lights kept the city vibrant. Rukia showed MaKayla to an outdoor ice rink, where the human girl was carefreey sliding around on some rented shoes. “You should join me, Rukia!” Kayla told her with a hand held out. The spirit swordswoman was sitting on the fence, watching her skate in circles.

“I can’t.” Rukia blushed. “I’d have to run back and get my Gigai, anyway…”

“You’re a spirit, stop making excuses.”

“Sigh… All right.”

Rukia hopped off the fence and took Kayla’s hand as the latter guided her across the ice. “Nnnh!” Rukia stumbled a little. “These sandals aren’t really good for this!”

“You’re an icebender and you don’t know how to skate.” Kayla looked in disbelief. “Honestly, Rukia.”

“I told you it isn’t icebending!”
“Yeah, but you’re not so much of a spirit, either. Way too heavy. Just lighten up and do what I do.” MaKayla took both of Rukia’s hands, let her head hang back, and her hair breeze as the two girls spun in place. The other skaters who were unable to see Rukia looked confused by MaKayla’s pose. Still, she managed pretty well, not falling in that position.

MaKayla pulled her in skating around the rink some more. “To be honest, I thought you would be a little more worried.” Rukia said. “We don’t know if the portal will call you back to your world. As a matter of fact, what if it appears in the same place it dropped you?”

“I haven’t sensed its presence. But then again, it could be because of the huge amount of spiritual energy I feel in this city’s air. But I know I’ll get back home.” Kayla winked back at her. “I have good intuition.”

“…Hm.” Rukia gave a light smile. “It’s weird… You act like the two of us are already familiar with each other, so you expect me to take your word for it.”

“Well, it was only a brief meeting. But your team saved Miyuki, so I have to be thankful about that!” She grinned.

Rukia stayed silent, figuring asking more questions would lead to more confusion. The girls skated peacefully until MaKayla spoke again. “Still… the pyramid that Urahara had drawn… There’s definitely a reason Bill Cipher wanted to build that portal. That pyramid must be the reason… I wonder if the other Original Worlds have them.”

“MaKayla?” Rukia said with concern.

“Oh, sorry.” Kayla blushed. “Just thinking out loud.”

“Come on, Karin, it’ll be fun!” They looked at the rink’s entrance. A girl with short light-brown hair was happily tugging her black-haired sister’s arm.

“Yuzu, I told you I only like my feet on ground that won’t slip me!”

“Hey, it’s Karin from Sector JP!” Kayla beamed.

“You know her, too?”

“They’re actually friends of mine, too.” Rukia smiled. “Their brother is the Soul Society’s hero. Ichigo Kurosaki.”

“Ichigo?”

“Is he also from your world?”

“…” Kayla thought for a second. Where had she heard that name before? “Wait… his name was on the-”

“Mommy, look at that!” A little girl pointed at the sky.

Everyone looked up as a result. There was a growing white light in the sky. “AAAAAAH!” The light became a white beam that struck the ground outside the rink.

“KARIN, WHAT’S HAPPENING?!” Yuzu cried.
“I don’t know, but we’re leaving!” Karin grabbed her sister and bolted from the rink. Thank God, an excuse not to skate!

“What’s this energy I feel?!” Rukia shouted.

“I… I recognize it.” Kayla said, holding her forehead. “This is it! The Multiverse Portal! It must be calling me back!”

“Are you sure?”

“Yeah! Well, I guess this is good-bye for now.” Kayla jogged up to the powerful beam. “It was great meeting you again, Rukia!”

“W-Wait! Maybe I should go with you and make sure you get there safe.”

“I appreciate the gesture, but it might just create problems if we couldn’t send you back. But hey, I’ll tell the other you you said ‘hi’!” Kayla shot her one last smile. “Farewell, Rukia!” With that, she ran and jumped into the beam. Her body became light, and she was slurped up into the sky. The beam faded away after a few minutes, leaving a huge burned mark on the ground. The witnesses were murmuring in confusion.

“Hmm… I have a feeling there is more to this conundrum than we believe.” Rukia said with suspicion.

Fiore

“Guys, look at that!” Levy shouted, pointing at the sky.

A white beam struck the ground before the guild hall, quaking the earth. The members of Fairy Tail piled out to see it. “Is it an Etherion?!” Chelia shouted.

“No, it’s something else!” Mirajane yelled.

Wendy gazed at the vortex-like beam. She recognized its appearance. “Guys… I think this is the portal.”

“The portal?” Romeo asked. “You mean… it’ll take you home?”

“…I don’t know.” Wendy slowly stepped forward. “I wonder… is it safe?”

“I-If you don’t think so, then maybe you shouldn’t!”

“But this could be her only chance!” Panther Lily shouted. “And if this portal stays active, it could harm the Space-Time Continuum.”

“But-”

“He’s right.” Wendy stated firmly. “I have to try… If Carla is on the other side, I need to go in now. But first…” She turned around to face the Fairies. “I’m really grateful to you guys for letting me stay with you. I don’t know how, but… it feels like I’ve known you guys forever. This world is the happiest place I’ve ever seen, and I would love to stay here, but…”

“We understand, Wendy.” Levy giggled, since they’ve been through this already. “That world is your home, and you have friends to get back to.”

“It’s not just that.” Wendy smirked with determination. “I’m gonna tell my friends all about you. I want my world to be as happy as this one, I want people to be as loving and caring as you guys! I wanna try to set the example… and maybe when it’s good enough, I’ll welcome you guys to visit me!”

“I know you can do it, Wendy!” Chelia raised a fist. “Just do your very best! And always remember: Love is the most powerful magic!”

“Please be safe going home, Wendy!” Mirajane cheered. “And send us a letter sometime!”

“Hey, Wendy…” Romeo scratched his arm, blushing. “If you see the other me again… Tell him about me?” He made a nervous grin.

“Hmhm, sure! And you should talk to your Wendy.”

“Hehe… I will.”

“Good-bye, everyone!” Wendy gave one final wave. “I’ll never forget Fairy Tail!” She turned around and jumped into the vortex. Her body turned into light, and within minutes, the beam vanished.

Gravity Falls

The portal was furiously spiraling, the earth trembled under its power, then suddenly, two people spat out and hit the wall on the opposite side. “UUH!” Wendy and MaKayla fell on the ground.

“There they are!” Dipper exclaimed.

“WENDY!” Carla flew over and landed beside her owner.

“Ow… Carla!” She looked up at her kitten, holding her sore head.

“I was really worried about you, Child! What was it like in there?”

“It was… Oh, I’ll tell you about it later. Let’s go back to Dr. Facilier!”

“I agree. I’m sure he can survive without his false merman heads. That man has sent you on your last masochistic endeavor!”

“Oh, he didn’t know this would happen. But when we get back, let’s have a party!”

“Why ever would we?”

“Just because. Let’s go!”

Carla showed Wendy the secret exit, and once they were back in the forest, the air mage and kitten began their exciting run home.

Cleveland, Virginia

The two made it back by late afternoon, Wendy excitedly turning city blocks en route to… They came to a halt and stared confusedly at the crowds of people gathered around and facing the voodoo emporium’s direction. “Carla, what’s going on?”

The kitten flew over the crowd to search for a plausible answer. She gasped: a team of wizards in brown coats were ganging up on Dr. Facilier, casting spells that the witch-doctor countered, while his shadow was flying around and biting them in the necks. “AAAH!” The man was grabbed by the neck in Gideon’s psychic. The shadow tried to attack the child, but the Aurors cast Lumos Solem to weaken the shadow, and Facilier was hit with stun spells.

“What’s happening?!” Wendy shoved through the crowds, struck with horror when the Aurors were trying to shove her mentor into a black carriage.

“Er- Wendy!” Facilier grunted, unable to repress the stun effects. “Run away, they’ll get you… AAH!” They threw him inside.

“My, my, if it isn’t Wendy Marvell.” Gideon approached the taller girl with his wry smile. “The famous Sky Dragon. Escaped from the portal, did you? You caused quite the stir up in Glitzville. But this doctor ain’t the ONLY one with Friends on the Other Side! Bill Cipher showed us what you were doing! Ever since your encounter with Master Churchill, he’s been watching you from a piece of paper that latched onto your clothes. Your little harborer is going to Azkaban and YOU’RE coming with!”

“A-Azkaban?” Wendy stuttered.

“Them dementors are gonna find your widdle souls soooooo delicious!” Gideon sang with an adorable expression.

“Child, let’s get out of here!” Carla tugged Wendy’s arm and tried to pull her as she flew. “We can’t let you get captured! Wendy! …?”

Wendy stared at the carriage where her mentor was trapped. Shadow Facilier was trying to creep out, but the Aurors shocked him with spells and forced him back. The others were glaring at Wendy. “…Grrrrr!” She gritted her teeth in anger.

“CHILD!” Carla cried when she charged forward, whipping her wand out.

“I WON’T LET YOU TAKE MY TEACHER! Sky Dragon ROOOOOOAAR!” She unleashed a cyclone that blew Gideon and the Aurors down. “Too many of my friends got HURT because of me!” she yelled as she cast attack spells at the men. “I WON’T let that happen again! I WON’T lose the man who gave me a HOME!”

“ENOUGH!” Gideon squeezed her by the arms in his psychic grip, raising her off her feet. “The only home you’re gettin’ is a dark, cold prison cell!”

“PUT HER DOWN!” Carla lunged at the Child Psychic from behind.

“Oho, tryin’ to tickle me again??” Gideon telekinetically grabbed the cat by the neck. “Sorry, Kitty, but you’ll have to bite harder than that. Shoot her, Killbone!”

Gideon’s henchman, an African-American with huge muscles and vicious scowl, took out a gun and shot, scratching Carla’s waist with the bullet. “CARLA!!” Tears spilled down Wendy’s eyes. “AH-!” One of the Aurors bashed Wendy in the head and knocked her out cold. Gideon used his psychic to make her float into the carriage where Dr. Facilier lay stunned.

The Head Auror took Facilier’s cane, popped it open, and let the Devil’s Wand slide out. “Yep… it’s a Devil’s Wand, all right. Prime condition.” He set it in his pocket and took Wendy’s wand. “Lamia Scale… these are rare. That pink-haired girl had the same kind.”

“And now we’ve got them BOTH!” Gideon beamed. “Can you imagine the odds of that? TAKE ’em away! I want the report of my success in this capture mailed to President Jimmy by the morning!” He went around to sit on the front of the carriage. “Killbone, my baby seat! NOW!”
Carla coughed, trying to lift off the ground, but the bullet scratched her right wing as well. She helplessly crawled forward, eyes set strictly on the carriage where her master was trapped. “No… Give her… back to me…” The carriage magically lifted off the ground by an unseen force. Carla watched it shrink into the sky, despairing in her helpless state. “Wendy… please…” Her world turned dark. She was on the ground, asleep.

...My child… don’t take… my child...

I predict the Side Stories will have at least 40 chapters, so we’re at the halfway mark. (This is the Presidents Saga, after all.) Next time, we’ll do the last chapter of the Original Worlds Arc, then we’ll work on the Main Story again.
The King’s Request

Chapter Summary

Shelly and Gonshiri finally make it to Boggly Woods. There, they learn a shocking truth about themselves.

Welcome back, folks! Sorry this took a long time, I had some struggles with this chapter, but I think you’ll like the ending parts. Today’s code uses Caesar Cipher.

Chapter 34: The King’s Request

Flight Sanley

It took days for Shelly to find an airport that allowed 9-year-old girls in swimsuits, but it paid off. Her and Gonshiri’s clothing were worn and tattered, and the few passengers on the plane avoided them. “Boggly Forest better be worth this.” Shelly said angrily.

“I’m starting to wonder the same thing.” Gonshiri replied. “Traveling with you is joyless.”

“You didn’t have to buy a ticket, you don’t get to complain. Sigh…” Shelly rested her head on her hand. “Even if we do make it to the forest, what’ll I do afterwards? I’m sure a bunch of Minish live there that’ll support you.”

“True, but you can always shrink down to our level, and be my servant.” The princess smiled wryly. Shelly said nothing for a few seconds, and from her perch on the human’s shoulder, Gonshiri could sense her downtrodden (though scowling) expression. “You only have five seconds to make a comeback, otherwise I win.”

“Blah, blah.” Shelly replied uninterested. “Not to get too personal with this, but… how many of your people actually care about you?”

“That’s a matter of opinion.” Shiri said, with a raise of a brow at this question. “My mother tries to raise me to be an excellent princess, I have perhaps a thousand teachers, servants are obviously under my orders… Of course, many of them are being paid, I assume. I don’t… have any normal friends, if that’s what you’re implying.”

“How do you feel about that?”

“I never minded. But what is it to you? How many human friends do you have, or ‘care’ about you?”

“I’m the Fourth Grade President at Gallagher, you can only make that position by having a ton of friends, so yeah.”

“I thought presidents were chosen because of their ability, not their popularity?”

“We’re kids, Shiri, we don’t care about people’s skills or responsibility, we elect based on if they’re cool or not. And a lot of people think I’m cool, I’m the princess of a desert. Granted, I’ve misled them into thinking I’m rich, when really my dad just created a giant sandcastle and declared... himself king of that backsand country, even though we have no authority whatsoever. …Sigh.” She leaned her head against her knuckles.

“I surmise the cliché occurrence where you’re a large-headed bully who boasts about being better than all your peers, when really you’ve nary a penny.”

“My cousins have a lot of stuff.” Shelly informed. “Course, I never get to touch or show it to anyone. Sigh, to be honest, Shiri, this sack of dough is the only decent money I ever got. Otherwise, I rely on the allowance of less-graders to buy me lunch. Not enough for a new set of clothes.” She tugged her sticky swimsuit. “Don’t get the idea I’m jealous of you, Shrunken Violet, but you’re lucky to have a whole tribe to give you stuff.”

“Only because I’m the rightful princess. I don’t mean to console you, either, but consider it an honor that your human peers respect you enough to make you president. You may have claimed to have money, but that promised nothing on their end. I would like to think the students of Gallagher wanted—albeit a bad choice in my opinion—a strong leader with gusto like yourself.”

“Well…” Shelly smiled slightly, “these feet of mine won many a soccer game. My team would’ve lifted me in the air if my knights weren’t bodyguarding. …Do you think… they’re wondering where I am right now? If they’re worried?”

“That’ll be up to you to figure out. …Well, it looks like our flight is ending. Don’t unbuckle yourself at the last minute, Shelly.”

After arriving at Kochi City, Shelly quickly blended in with the hundreds of tourists and townspeople. “This brings up an interesting question, Termite, can you speak Japanese?”

“The only reason I speak English is because of an English Jabber Nut. Minish produce Jabber Nuts of all kinds of languages, unfortunately it’s only safe for Minish to have one. We also have a type that speaks our language, Picori, for humans.”

“So no Japanese. Well, whatever, I’m sure I can speak their language one way or another.”

Although she couldn’t read the sign, Shelly entered a store with a design of a Japanese robe. This was the clothing store. “Ā, kon’nichiwa, shōjo. Sore wa hijō ni kyōmibukai ishôdesu. Anata wa manga no pôzu shite imasu ka?” the clerk asked her. (“Ah, hello, little girl. That is a very interesting outfit. Are you posing for a manga?”)

“And you plan to translate him how?” Gonshiri asked.

Shelly smirked slyly and pulled out a red ruby and gold coins from her treasure sack. “OOOOOOOOOOOOOHIIIIIIIIII!” The Asian man’s eyes went wide, his mouth an “O”.

“That’s right.” Shelly nodded. “Show me all your garbs and I’ll make a decision.”

Of course, despite her status as a princess, Shelly didn’t want anything fancy. She walked out of the store, very comfortable in her purple T-shirt and shorts that matched her swimsuit, which still lied underneath. “No shoes?” Gonshiri asked.

“Hey, it’s weird to go around in a swimsuit.” Shelly admitted, wiggling her toes. “But being barefoot is healthy. Okay, enough sightseeing, let’s look for these Boggling Woods.”

“My teachers told me they exist along the northern side of Kochi. You could see if a bus will take you.”
Shelly glanced at her still-loaded sack of gold. “If they don’t, something tells me they’re gonna start today.”

Alaska; Minish CND Training Course

Timothy and Hikari regretted agreeing to do this with Rupert, and Rupert himself owed Timmy a debt of 40 dollars. The snow was cold on their tiny bodies, even clothed in the Minish coats they were offered, the snowflakes were as large as boulders. Rupert never liked winter, he hated the frigid cold (and on an unrelated level, no looking at older girls in swimsuits at the pool).

Regardless, they endured every bit of this cold. Their skill with Pikmin had improved terrifically: they now had 41 Reds, 60 Yellows, 52 Blues, 40 Wings, 53 Whites, 41 Purples, 41 Rocks, 32 Musics, and 20 Ghosts (10 of which were still alive). The sun was blocked by thick snow clouds as Team Rupert marched out for their third day of training.

“Well-p, after two days and multiple tries, you passed each Battle and Treasure Course with near perfect marks.” spoke Jetta Tarka, the Drill Sergeant of the CND Training Base, a large and buff Minish girl with a gray coat. Rupert embarrassedly mistook her for a boy at first, and made his friends promise not to tell. “I must say, I’ve never known a couple of human runts to be as talented with Pikmin as you. Your next test combines all of the regular obstacles – but based on your prior experience, it should be no problem. Simply utilize your Pikmin skills and reach the goal. This test will also observe your ability to breed a new Pikmin type, as you will soon see. If you’ve successfully passed, I will highly recommend you to the Supreme Leader as honorary operatives.”

“You could’ve gone home whenever you wanted.”

“I was talking to Rupert.”

“Yeah, yeah, we’ll go home.” Rupert eye-rolled. The truth is, he insisted on staying at the training base until he made an efficient amount of progress. Then he could proudly tell his parents the good news, to make up for how long he’s been missing. And of course, Timmy and Hikari had to stay with him in case he got eaten. “Bring it on, Coach! This is the one gym class I’m used to!”

“You’ve got 20 minutes to reach the goal with as high a score you can get.” Jetta smirked. “Good luck, soldiers.” (Play “Valley of Repose” from Pikmin 2.)

Stage 43: Plain of Crystals

Mission: Pass the MCND Training Course!

Team Rupert took 15 Reds, 11 Yellows, 14 Blues, 10 Whites, 5 Purples, 10 Ghosts (5 alive), 15 Musics, 80 total. They approached some grazing Snow Bulborb, which were Dwarf Bulborbs with white backs and blue spots. Easy enemies to take out with Purple Pikmin, but they held off on collecting for now. The team journeyed up a mound of snow before descending down the other side. A short way to their left, there was a large (to them) light-blue Chaos Emerald perched on a platform, with a light waterfall pouring on it from the side of a cliff. Because of the water, none of the other Pikmin could touch it, and the platform was too small for Blues to be thrown on. The Ghosts also couldn’t touch it because the Emerald was glowing.

The trio proceeded to what seemed like a campsite, with snoozing sled hounds, a tent, some discarded bags, and while they expected a fireplace, a bar heater was rested in a dry area of snow, its bars glowing a fiery orange as the tinies could feel its heat. It started to make their coats feel useless, they wanted to dispose of it soon. In fact, close by in this dry area was a light-blue Onion. First, Team Rupert used their Yellow Pikmin to break the electric bars protecting the heat bars. There were three heat bars that sloped like large stairs. With the electric bars gone, their Reds were sent to begin work against the heat bars. The heater was disabled, so they expected the new Onion to come to life. ...It didn’t.

When they observed the stair-like fashion of the bars more closely, they realized they could set their Music Pikmin on them. The maestro stood at the front, the kids made sure their unbloomed Pikmin were around. The friends vigorously danced to the “Freezeey Peak” soundtrack from Banjo-Kazooie, remixed with the squeaky vocals of Magenta Pikmin. The song filled the light-blue Onion with Christmas spirit, and they watched with joy as the Onion sprouted from the ground. Landing on all three legs, the Onion released a single seed. The ice-blue Pikmin felt cold on Rupert’s hands when he plucked it.

Team Rupert discovered Ice Pikmin! These chilly buddies can freeze and walk across water, and anybody is allowed to follow their paths! However, any water spaces will unfreeze after a minute, unless they’re walked over again, so be careful. In large groups, Ice Pikmin can briefly freeze enemies! Just keep them away from fire and they’ll serve you well!

They called their Music Pikmin down, then the kids began the work of harvesting the Frosty Pellet Posies. 20 Ice Pikmin were collected, making 100 total. Their first objective was to go back to the Onions and switch out their Yellow Pikmin for 11 Wings. Returning to the tall snow mound, they stayed above it and followed along the left, getting above the ledge where the waterfall poured from. An Armored Cannon Larva emerged from the snow, so the crew tested their Ice Pikmin to attack it. The beetle froze at brief intervals during their beatings, giving their Ghost Pikmin a chance to attack and defeat the creature. They let the Music Pikmin carry it back for sustenance, then Team Rupert threw their Ices onto the base of the waterfall, freezing it with enough hits. The ice shook and threatened to burst free, so the Wings were sent to pick up the Chaos Emerald (Common Rarity) and take it back.

With that, the friends continued on the path beyond the campsite. A large pool of water prevented any other Pikmin from crossing, but each Ice Pikmin froze a path as they walked across, and the other ground Pikmin could cross as well. The team wandered into a field of Eeno, snow-made creatures that took the form of moving mounds, but would reveal their eyes and mouths if the kids got close. They chuck large snowballs, meant to bury their Pikmin, and while the act wouldn’t kill them, the Pikmin had a chance to let their flowers bloom. Regardless, the snow monsters were annoying, so the kids plucked their Red Pikmin to do away with them quicker. Defeating the Eenos would break the monsters into irreparable pieces, but Pellets or nectar eggs would be dropped.

The friends used their Pikmin Radio to summon the Music Pikmin back from the Onions—they now noticed the annoyance with having to keep Ice Pikmin here to freeze the water pool. However, in the wall on the pool’s left, their Pikmin could walk up a snow mound and dig a tunnel through a weak spot of the snowy wall. The tunnel came out on the other side of the pool, and the snow they dug through fell out and now served as a slope to this hole: a shortcut was made. The Music Pikmin could come through, and they continued their journey to a larger area of water.

They used the Ice Pikmin to create an ice-path to one of many small islands, where the other Pikmin crossed to. There were Pellet Posies stationed on tall jagged rocks that the Wing Pikmin could grab, but they didn’t bother. Timmy decided to take 10 Ice Pikmin and freeze a path along a snaky part of river between some walls, while Rupert and Hikari used the other 10 Ices to freeze a path to the next island, steadily making their way across the lake. One of the islands had a Frosty Blowhogn that they tossed their Red Pikmin to battle, but they were thrown off and some ended up frozen by its Ice Breath. (It should be noted Ice Pikmin can’t affect ice enemies). After they managed to defeat the creature, Timmy returned and told them he needed Red Pikmin, so he took 8 of them.

Timmy had discovered a Goron’s Ruby (Seal of Brotherhood) on a ledge at the end of the snaky river, and needed to bring the Red Pikmin along the frozen path, because the ruby was fiery hot. Just as well, the Ices had to keep the river frozen while avoiding touching the ruby as the Reds were carrying it. Rupert and Hikari crossed to the next island, but by this time, Skeeterskates were skiing around and shooting water globs at their Pikmin. The Pikmin panicked and ran into the water, forcing the duo to call them back, and as expected, Ice Pikmin were the best with dealing with the water spiders, for they could never sink and the monsters froze instantly. However, another flaw arose: if a monster was defeated while frozen, it would shatter and couldn’t be carried back. Oh well.

Rupert saw a treasure underwater: a Water Element coin from Luigi’s Mansion. It was emitting bubbles magically, so they knew only the Blues could touch it. 10 Blue Pikmin were thrown underwater to carry it up a slope to a piece of land above the surface—from here, they needed the Ice Pikmin to create a path back to the shore. While Rupert took care of this, Hikari sent the Wing and Ghost Pikmin to battle a Puffy Blowhog hovering by the next island. By the time the Water Element coin (Life’s Treasure) was returned, all three kids regrouped with all their Pikmin. They crossed the rest of the lake to an enclosing between huge snow mounds. They overlooked a flowing river with many large ice chunks, and they had to keep their Pikmin close together as they jumped their way up the flowing ice. The team jumped off on a left enclosing partway up, but further up was a large cage. Hikari took the five Ghost Pikmin up the river and sent them through the cage’s bars, but 10 were needed to carry this red top-hat (Note of Distinction) – which looked like Chopper’s hat from One Piece. Rupert and Timmy decided to throw their 5 Green Pikmin in the river, so when they became Ghosts, they could carry the hat up and out of the hole above the cell, and fly all the way to the Onions.

The group entered a large field where Frosty Blowhogs, Hairy Bulborbs, and Swooping Snitchbugs roamed. They used the Purples to wipe out two Bulborbs, defeated three Blowhogs with Blues and Reds, and took out two Snitchbugs with Wings, letting those respective types have the remains. On the right of this field was a long, wide road swarming with Bulborbs, Blowhogs, Dweevils; so many enemies, it would take forever to defeat them all in such a close range. Thankfully, a Music Pikmin stage was nearby, so their 15 were gathered on it. They chanted the “Homecoming Hijinx” song from Donkey Kong: Tropical Freeze, and their thundering, high-pitched notes caused an avalanche that buried every monster under mounds of snow. The Pikmin army could walk up atop this heightened ground, bypassing every dead enemy and reaching a beautiful blue rose (Selfless Guard) half-buried in the snow. The White Pikmin dug it out and carried it back with great haste.

“Rupert, I know you’re probably having fun, but our 20 minutes might be almost up.” Timmy pointed out.

“Crud. Well, we can at least finish with more Ices.” In the previous field, there was a Pellet Posy worth 20 Ice Pikmin, so 20 Ices were needed to carry it. Hikari also chose to run back and check on the ground Pikmin crossing the lake—turns out, an alternate path led over and around the lake, from the end point, back to the starting point, but Ice Pikmin were needed to cross the lake again. Hikari later returned with all of their Pikmin after the Ices got their fill, then the kids followed an enclosed pathway from the field. Jetta Tarka was waiting for them inside a cave, so they thought this to be the finish line. (End song.)
The Minish Drill Sergeant was scribbling a message on a leaf. The three adventurers eagerly awaited her response. “So do we pass?” Rupert asked her.

“SUPREME LEADER?!” The team was caught off guard.

“I told you I would recommend you. Didn’t say if I already did.” Jetta smirked.

“So you’re the humans that were involved in the Dressrosa Operation?” Lenari questioned. “The one who helped destroy that factory?”

“If knocking out a little girl counts for doing that, I guess…” Timmy was still confused about that whole scenario.

“I don’t know the story behind that myself, but these kids know their Pikmin.” Jetta informed. “They’ve got a surplus, and they found a bunch of colors just by wanderin’ around their neighborhood. For humans, these kids are pretty good.”

“And the three of you… aren’t affiliated at all with the Human Kids Next Door?” Lenari asked them.

“Nope.” Rupert shook his head. “We just kinda wandered into your, eh, tiny world, and we picked up quickly.” Though he could feel Timmy and Hikari’s stares, wanting to explain their end of that story.

“But according to their report, they were trained by Sappo and Gibli from Virginia.” Jetta reminded. “They said those two were captured by someone named Shelly, ‘for stealing their princess.’”

Lenari gasped. “You mean Shelly the… Sand Castle Princess?! You mean you three encountered her?”

“She’s kind of our school bully, so we encounter her on a regular basis.” Timmy informed.

“Wait, did she really capture you guys’ princess?” Rupert asked.

“Yes. …Sigh…” Lenari turned away. “The truth is I’m supposed to be her bodyguard. Ever since she was kidnapped on Christmas, I’ve exhausted everything trying to track her kidnappers. Then a few weeks ago, our spies reported finding her at Sand Castle. But she was always hidden or guarded, and we could never get around to making a plan because of Pikmin shortage and…”

Team Rupert could tell Lenari was stressed by the sound of his voice, worried for his princess. “Um, Mr. Lenari? Since we’re good at Pikmin, maybe we could get your princess back.” Rupert said.

“Or we can try to break in normally.” Timmy reasoned. “You know, normal size. Since we’re humans.”

Lenari chuckled, smiling at the trio. “I have to be honest, though… I was pretty sour about humans after our princess was kidnapped. But after seeing what you guys do… I think I made my “What decision, Mr. Leonard?” Hikari asked.

“Heheh. Nothing that concerns you.” Lenari closed his eyes, thinking back on the two human leaders who requested an alliance. “Anyway… after I fill out the paperwork, some Minish will come to take you to the Tree of Beginning. You’ll officially be honorary Minish.” Rupert, Timmy, and Hikari exchanged proud smiles. “But just in case, take these as a gift from me.” He handed them all whistles made of a golden wood.

“Extra Pikmin Whistles?” Rupert said.

“These Gold Whistles are given to expert Pikmin users in our group. You’ll be able to bring 200 Pikmin with you. …Just be careful not to lose any, okay? You guys have a heck of a surplus.” With that, Lenari left.

“Well, with that outta the way, I understand you runts want to go back to your homes now.” Jetta recapped. “Just say the word and we’ll ship you off on our Bigonions.”

Timmy and Hikari looked expectantly at Rupert. Their leader smiled and nodded. “Take us home.”

Boggly Woods

A gentle breeze softly rustled the white leaves, which grew from trees of grayish-black bark. The moment Shelly stepped into the forest, her feet had never known greater ease. She enjoyed the feel of the soft, white flowers under her soles, between her toes. The chilly feel of the wind blew away all her woes. Looking up at the milky yellow sky beyond the swaying leaves, Shelly felt very drowsy. “You want to watch where you step, Minish live here, too.” Gonshiri said.

Shelly shook out of her trance and looked down. There were tiny beady eyes looking up from below the grass. “What the heck is with this forest?” Shelly ruined the moment by asking. “Why’s it so weird-looking?”

“My knowledge is only based from my forced studies, but I believe the Boggly Woods are closely connected with the Dream Realm. The Puni tribe studies the art of dreaming, how denizens in the Dream World are born wholly from mortal thoughts or from pieces. I still don’t understand why the elders would want me to come here, but maybe I’ll find out.”

“Where do these Puni guys live? Not the Minish, I mean.”

“I’ll ask.” Gonshiri leaped off Shelly’s shoulder and vanished below the white flowers from the latter’s vision. In this forest of black stems, Gonshiri approached a group of Minish. “I am Gonshiri, Princess of the Minish Tribe. I seek the race known as Puni and wish to know the direction of their residence.”

The Minish, who wore black and gray robing, were silent, staring blankly while glancing at each other. They then pointed upward at Shelly, so Gonshiri deduced the Minish were terrified of the monster. “It’s all right, she’s under my control. She won’t bite or step on anyone on purpose.”

The Minish made quiet gestures for one of their group to go forward. That Minish looked worriedly, but he complied. On Shiri’s instruction, Shelly bent down and held her pinky beside the Minish. When the tiny creature climbed on her nail, Shelly lifted it to her face. The creature stared very closely into Shelly’s narrowed left eye. Shelly’s eye was black and shiny. It reflected the Minish’s image like a mirror. He gestured the human to lower him down on the ground. He spoke in gestures to his people, and they nodded. The Minish plucked flowers from the ground and soared across the breeze through the forest.

“They approve of you.” Gonshiri said, getting back on Shelly’s shoulder. “Try to keep up.” (Play “Boggly Woods” from Paper Mario: TTYD.

Stage 44: Boggly Woods

Mission: Find the Punies.

Act 1

Shelly jogged around the forest paths to keep up with the tiny, flying flowers that breezed around tree after tree. After walking miles of desert, the feel of such soft ground under each step was a delight for Shelly. Unfortunately, since most of this was flora, her sandbending wouldn’t be put to much use. Which means Gonshiri had the upper hand with her superb bending. Pale Piranha Plants popped out of the ground in attempt to munch the human, so using her wooden sword (which still had a sakura petal), Shelly sliced the black-and-white plant monsters. Shelly overlooked a cliffside, but Gonshiri began jumping up the ladder-like steps of a large tree. Shelly climbed the tree herself to get above its branches.

The Minish Princess nimbly leaped across each large branch, but it was harder for Shelly’s large and unbalanced feet. The human flinched when a Pider – a large black-and-white spider with a round body – dropped and dangled over the gap, so Shelly cut his web to let him fall. After chopping down a series of Piders, she made it to a huge Pider Web where the Minish were trapped. Piders were crawling toward them, so Shelly sliced the stems of the web that were latched to the branches, climbed the trees on either side to slice those stems, while Gonshiri detached the stems on higher, smaller branches. The Piders collapsed to the ground while the Minish were free and kept flying. To cross this chasm, Gonshiri extended a gray-and-white vine from a tree with her plantbending. Shelly grinded across the zigzagging vine, having to shift her head left or right when Piders dropped.

Shelly landed in a field of white bushes, but the path forward was blocked by a large gray beehive. “This is a Jabbi Hive, actually.” Gonshiri informed.

“You don’t know I was thinking otherwise!” Shelly yelled defensively.

“Yes you were. Jabbies are types of insects that live here, and according to my studies, they’re very wild in groups. I wouldn’t go near that nest without an offering.”

“Don’t even think about it. I believe they enjoy mushrooms, however.”

There were plenty of trees growing around the area. Shelly kicked one, shaking it as an egg dropped out, splatting on the ground. “Whoops.” She kicked another tree, a coconut bonked her head. “Ow! Should that even grow here?!” She kicked one more tree, a red mushroom came down.

“Well, look for someone to give it to.” Gonshiri told her. Shelly looked around the bushes until she saw a pair of staring little eyes. She shook the bush, and a Jabbi baby came out; it had tiny wings, a little pointy mouth, and was gray-bodied like everything else. The Jabbi took the mushroom and flew back to its hive. An alarm light, which Shelly just noticed was attached to the nest, lit green, and the entire fortress shifted sideways. Shelly marched into an open area of the forest, void of many trees with a great view of the white plain.
Clefts posed as gray rocks, then charged at Shelly when she got close. She could easily pick up and throw the creatures away with her earthbending. Within the grass, Shelly discovered a sealed black trapdoor with an “X” crossing. She lifted a Cleft in her bending and bashed the hatch open with the creature’s spikes. She discovered a sock inside, though still had no idea what these were for. Shelly continued across the field and arrived at an area with tall, thin, black trees. The only passage through this area was over a long and narrow chasm, but a tree was perched on the ledge across. Shelly saw a thin, weak spot in the lower part of the tree, so she grabbed one of the Clefts to throw it spikes-first against the spot. The tree tumbled toward Shelly and served as her bridge.

Unfortunately, she couldn’t follow this route as a Jabbi Hive was securing the area. There was a staircase on its right side, but if Shelly stepped beyond the security line (in the form of a line of white flowers), a swarm of Jabbi would fly out and sting her ‘til she’s bulgy. The entrance to the hive was on the bottom, like a cave on the ground. Shelly looked up and saw a boulder suspended directly above it on two branches. Shelly grabbed another Cleft with her bending and threw it at the boulder, making it fall over toward the ground and block the hive’s entrance. As for the Jabbies wandering around the area, Gonshiri swatted them away with extended vines from the ground, and Shelly could safely march up the stairway. Rather than follow the path that turned a left corner, she noticed a narrow walkway between the tall black trees, which led over the side of the path to the Jabbi Nest. The bark was oddly textured in this enclosing; they looked like letters, and each tree had a few. PLQ LVKV LV WH UVE HIR UHKX PDQ PLV WHUHV

Shelly climbed a ladder to a dangling branch with some white leaves, in which Gonshiri used her bending to stretch another vine-rail, which led over the current path she was supposed to follow. Shelly grinded across, grabbed a sock that was suspended in midair via a bubble, and jumped off to a tree stump that was over a short chasm. (If they followed the route normally, Shiri could’ve stretched a vine over the gap). Another Jabbi Nest sat at the other end of this passage, and with all the Jabbies snoozing on the ground, Shelly sensed that touching the ground would wake them all.

Starting from this tree stump, Shelly jumped a series of bushes that Gonshiri reshaped and fortified with her bending – though the prickly plants tickled Shelly’s feet, so she had to jump quickly before she stumbled off. From the second bush, Shelly had to jump and grab a dangling branch, then she waited for Gonshiri to grow a large flower platform, swinging to it before the branch snapped. Shelly jumped a stairway of three flowers, then Gonshiri extended a vine-rail to a small rock. Shelly briefly grinded, then stopped perfectly on the rock before overshooting. Shelly used her earthbending to lift the small rock with herself on it, setting it on a tall stump that was too far to jump to. From there, she grabbed a thin ledge along the right wall of trees, climbing across before setting her tippy-toes on a long, thin rock. Said rock made small, snaky turns before it led to a corner path from the right of the Jabbi Hive. Shelly could safely step off and keep going.

This next passage featured a creek of neon, soapy substance, which produced bubbles that floated in the air. Shelly walked through the shallow creek, feeling her feet become soapy and slippery. A dead end lay at the end of the creek, so Shelly would have to jump her way up the large bubbles. The flying Minish flew around the bubbles that were deemed sturdy enough, so Shelly memorized them and bounced up. She bounced a secret route of sturdy bubbles to grab a sock inside one, then bounced her way to the ledge. This path was very long, leading to a tremendous tree of the same dark-gray bark and white leaves. But on the way, Jabbies were perched on stumps, looking every which way for intruders. Gonshiri would have to grow bushes to a large enough size so Shelly-

“Screw all this stealth crud, I’m goin’ head on!” Shelly bolted to the first Jabbi and punched it in the face, knocking it out. The alarm on the distant nest blared red, making the sound of a police siren, and the princesses saw a thousand Jabbies scramble out.

“Uuuugh! You blundering fool!” Gonshiri and Shelly ran forward as Gonshiri punched and kicked every Jabbi sentry she could using her bug-like speed, while Shelly kicked and sliced the creatures with her sakura petal sword. Jabbies swarmed all around the human princess, they were furiously nipping Shelly’s head, she withstood all the shots and frantically flailed her sword. Gonshiri extended some bush vines to swat the bugs away from her friend, desperate to swat others away as well, and when Shelly had her vision back, she resumed striking Jabbies.

The under-a-thousands were still coming, so Shelly whipped out her Sand Wand to whack Jabbies along with her sword. Shelly ran away from the swarm to recompose herself, then looking at her Sand Wand, she had a crazy idea and aimed it at the ground. A mound of soil rose up on her command, so she threw it around and knocked away incoming Jabbies. She made good use of the soil and took down Jabbies as she ran toward the base, with Gonshiri protecting her with extended bush vines. As the routine drew on, the number of Jabbies in the air were falling, all of them lay dizzy on the ground with their wings twitching. However, the gate on the side of the nest was still blocking the path, so they realized a single Jabbi was still fluttering around. Shelly ran to deal the blow with her Sand Wand. The alarms stopped and the gate opened.

On this final route to the Boggly Tree, another Pider Web was connected via two trees, and their Minish guides were stuck. “Perhaps it’s a good thing we rushed it after all.” Gonshiri said. Before the Piders could dine on the Minish, Shelly used her Sand Wand to slam the soil against them, tearing the web down. The Minish flew and landed in the grass close to the tree, so the princesses quickly joined. (End song.)

The silent Minish looked up at Shelly with disbelieved stares. They shook their heads disapprovingly at her reckless action. “Don’t make those looks at me, I saved your butts, didn’t I?”

The Minish knew this, of course. They smiled and bowed their heads in gratitude. “I agree.” Gonshiri understood them, jumping down to their level. “While Shelly isn’t very bright, she is strong, and you can rely on her to help you if she desires it. And, if I must say…” Gonshiri turned to the giant human with a smile, “Picily ki, picani, picidili micori ki!” The Minish made silent laughs at this.

“Whaddyou MEAN the doctors transmitted my fat into what existed of my brain?!” Shelly shouted with anger.

Gonshiri giggled for a moment—then was struck with shock. “You…You understand Picori?”

“Of course I—” Shelly froze. She was stunned by herself. “I…I do?”

The Boggly Minish exchanged glances and confirming nods. They took flight with their flowers and vanished up the Boggly Tree. Shelly and Gonshiri looked weirdly at each other. “Well, um…let’s get going.” Shelly said, following the smaller princess to the huge tree.

“Excuse me? Hellooooo?” Gonshiri yelled, gazing up the towering bark. “We are looking for the Puni Tribe. Is anybody home?”

A pair of little eyes peeped out of a bush. “Wh-Wh-Wh-What is that?” it asked with a squeaky voice. “Is that a bully?”

“As a matter of fact, I am.” Shelly spoke proudly. “So gimme your lunch money, because these feet aren’t for show.” She stomped the ground.

“Shelly, don’t say that!” Gonshiri yelled. She turned back to the creature, “Ahem, it’s all right, this monster isn’t going to hurt anybody. Now if any more of you are hiding, I implore you to come out.”
Shelly watched as more little eyes peeped out from the bushes, before they all came out. They looked bigger than Minish, but still rather small. They were roundish, mouse-like creatures with tiny legs, no visible mouths, gray bodies of various textures, and antennas with round colored balls at the ends of them. The balls were mostly yellow, but Shelly saw green, pink, and others in the mix. They all stared up at Shelly with wide round eyes, full of either wonder or terror. Gonshiri spoke, “It’s quite all right, ladies and gentle Punies. I am Princess Gonshiri of the Minish Tribe, and this is my escort. She rescued me from imprisonment and she is very well-trained.”

“Yes, Princess Gonshiri, we always knew you would be coming one day.” The Punies scrambled out of the way when an older, hunched one of their group appeared. The Puni Elder’s body was drooped like a gray robe, and he had a purple antenna dangling in front of him. “It was prophesized that the Minish Princess would ride here on a terrifying steed. However, before transactions conspire, we do not want such a behemoth stomping every which direction. There is a stump with Minish Dust over there.” Shelly looked at said gray-colored stump on her right.

“Screw that!” Shelly stated. “Look, man, I had a long and exhausting journey with this whole thing, I rescued the princess, so at the very least, I’m not turning tiny in front of a bunch of mice.”

“I AM A WOMAN!!” the Puni Elder screamed, growing to Shelly’s size and scaring the girl. He- I mean, she shrunk back to normal right after. “And both of you snarky little lasses need to learn some respect. To start off, little brats should not be bigger than their elders, otherwise it detracts from the affect of calling you a little brat. Now get in the stump, you overgrown brat!”

Shelly huffed with anger, stomping over to the stump with Gonshiri following. She planted both feet on top of it, let Shiri bend the Minish Dust, and shrink Shelly into their world. The Punies all gathered to look at her—the scary monster was a lot less imposing. Shelly, on the other hand, was now creeped out at all the rats’ large staring eyes. “There, I’m the size of an insect now!” she yelled at them. “Are you happy?”

“OF COURSE I’M NOT HAPPY!” The Puni Elder puffed to giant size and scared both princesses. “Because you’re still an ungrateful brat! Both of you are. But I guess that’s to be expected. I would hope you two learned a thing or two about yourselves on this journey.”

“All I learned was that Princess Chipmunk is worse than a whistle in your ear.” Shelly stated.

“And Her Royal Sandybutt possesses the worst form of company.” Shirited countered. “But this is completely off subject. I am only to understand your people are friends with the Minish Royal Family. For that reason, I entreat you to-”

“YOU’RE A MONGREL!” Elder turned giant. “I WILL TALK AND YOU WILL LISTEN! Do not forget, we are in Japan, and Japanese kids obey their elders!” She shrunk to normal. The Elder turned to her Punies, “Well, what are you all standing around for? Staring is rude! Go inside and clean up the tree!” The hundred-plus rats scampered inside, their feet making little squeaky sounds at each step. A few of them stayed behind to listen.

“May we come in, too?” Shelly asked with fake politeness.

“Don’t be impatient, Missy, you’ll have your chance for a drink.” The Elder walked past the girls with a calmer aura. “I must say, the two of you are impossibly stupid for not noticing. Your attitudes are so unbearably similar.”

“What the crud are you talking about?”

The Elder was silent for a minute, her back facing them. “Princess Lánshelly Johnson the Second and Princess Gonshiri… the two of you are sisters!”

Silence followed. They all stood still. The two needed time to process this info; their miniscule brains weren’t prepared. Then: “AAAAAAAAHHHHHHH!” Their eyes turned a ghostly white.

“You mean I’M RELATED TO THIS BLOATED BUFFOON??” screamed Shiri.

“I’M RELATED TO THIS TINY TERMITE?!”

“THIS IS AN OUTRAGE, I TELL YOU, AN OUTRAGE!!”

“How COULD THIS POSSIBLY HAPPEEEEEEEN?”

“It’s a tale many of us know.” Puni Elder began. “It was about 18 years ago when Sandy’s mother, a descendant of the Quartzite Family, took him on a small vacation…”

Europe; 18 years ago

Empty plains surrounded the western side of Europe. A towering mountain range surrounded an even greater tree. A slim mother in a purple dress, yellow shorts purple eyes, brown hair, and no shoes led her son across the country to this great tree. “But Moooooom, why couldn’t we just go to the BEEEEEACH?”

“We go to the beach all the time, Sandy, try something new!” his mother, Roxy said brightly. “We’re learning about our family heritage!”

“But why doesn’t ANDREW get to come?”

“Because since you and I are the only earthbenders, it’d make the trip a real chore for them!”

“I can’t make a sandcastle in THIS dump. Where are these Minish, anyway?”

“They’re around—watch where you step. My friend set her house up for us a few miles over, we’ll rest there and go to meet the Minish tomorrow.”

“Whatever. Mind if I pee?”

“Hehe, okay. Catch up soon!”

Sandy walked a few steps to the left for a good spot to do his business. A certain spot caught his attention: a band of tiny, green bugs, as tall as ants, were dancing merrily around a small green fire. A female among these creatures yelled for everyone’s attention, indicating the giant human child gazing over them with wondering eyes. They assumed he was a child that wandered out of town, so the Minish excitedly waved ‘Hi’s and ‘Hello’s to him.

Seconds later, a stream of yellow liquid rained all over the party, dissolving the fire and giving the bugs an awful smell. Sandy smiled smugly and began the walk back. “I’m coming, Mooooom!”

The female Minish looked the most enraged of all of them.

That night, Sandy was fast asleep. He felt rather odd as the night drew on; the ground he lay on was uncomfortable, he felt a dizzy sensation. He woke up. “Wh…”

“Rise and shine.” said one of many angry Minish surrounding him with spears. Sandy barely had time to view his somehow-ginormified room before the guards dragged him out.
He was brought to the very top of the Tree of Beginning and pushed onto the ground before a stairway, where the Minish Princess in the purple leaf dress and pink flower crown glared at him with resentment. “Well, if it ISN’T the overgrown monkey that likes treating my people like a urinal nut.” She spoke with a high voice.

Sandy got to his feet, “And who might YOU be, R-R-R-Royal Chipmunk?” he asked in his regal tone.

“I am Princess Lánshelly, heir to the Minish Throne, and YOU had the GALL to URINATE on me and RUIN my birthday party! LET ALONE my new DRESS!”

“Well excuse me if I have no resent on drowning a couple of annoying TERMITES.”

“You SHOULD have resent, because NOW you’re AMONG these termites, who plan to give you the full course of royal punishment. UNLESS you bow where you stand and offer your sincerest apology.”

“KING SANDY apologizes to NO ONE.” He closed his eyes and turned his head.

“If you DON’T apologize, I’ll see that you spend the REST of your days here. You will never speak with your silly-minded human friends again, and shall be walked over and crushed upon like we who you’ve chosen to torment, every day.”

“Your brain is naturally smaller than mine is, so I’ll try to make this simple.” Sandy marched up the stairway with absolute sureness. “I’m a human, you’re an undersized chipmunk. I’m the king of a beach, which means my kingdom is automatically bigger than ALL of your people combined. And the moment my mom realizes I’m missing, she, my brother, AND my cousins will charge in here and stomp all of you to dust.” Lánshelly fixed her glare harder when Sandy stopped right in front of her. “So I, possessing the more SUPERIOR of power, hereby order you chipmunks to bow to me, and MAYBE I’ll reconsider stomping all of you the moment I’m bigger.”

“…” The princess snapped her fingers. “Leave us, guards. I’ll carry out the punishment myself.” With very frightful looks, the guards backed away. “Alright, you…” Sandy took light steps backward, seeing the ocean of rage in Lánshelly’s eyes. “Let me show you what happens to those who deem themselves higher than me…”

Minutes later-

“AAAAAAAAUUUUUGH!” The Minish citizens jumped aside when a strange ball began rolling down the forest of giant flowers. When it stopped, it appeared that Princess Lánshelly and King Sandy were going mano a mano. Gripping each other’s arms tight, trying to pin the other down. Shelly got on his back and tried to bend his arms behind him, but Sandy grabbed her between his legs and tried to slice her like scissors. They became pretty tangled after a while, until both just couldn’t move. The anger on their faces faded into happy, joyous smiles. “HA HA ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha!”

Current time

“And from that moment on, the two became lifelong, childhood friends.” continued the Elder. “Lánshelly allowed him to revert to normal size and back—but needless to say he made use of his normal size in getting back at Shelly.”

“Uuuuuuuukhh…” Shelly and Shiri were wobbling like ghosts. They couldn’t process the fact they were related.
“Elder, I think they wanted a longer flashback.” a Puni named Punio said.

“I’M AN OLD LADY!” Elder puffed giant. “YOU THINK I REMEMBER EVERY SINGLE DETAIL?!” She shrunk down and continued. “So anyway, the two became very close over the years, both still ordering the other to give in and bow to them. Then, when both were 18, Sandy was the one to do so. He was normal size when he got down on both knees, and showed Shelly a, erm, giant ring with a green butterfly emerald. One week later, Sandy and Her Highness were at the altar, and became the first recorded Human/Minish couple in history. They were together for 2 years ’til they were 20, ready to conceive their first child. I remember that day very well…”

Sandy and Lánshelely were the same tiny size when it happened. They got under the leaf blanket of Shelly’s bed, kissing each other—

“WE DON’T NEED TO HEAR THAT PART!!” the princesses screamed.

“Oh, fine! Bunch of whiny… Well, you know how it ended. It was almost fate that they would bear two daughters: one human, and one Minish.”

“YOU MEAN WE’RE TWINS?!”

“Well, of course. Didn’t you ever ask each other’s birthdays?”

Nine years ago

Baby Shelly and Gonshiri Johnson were furiously tugging on a tiny rattle, both wanting to shake it more than the other. “You have to take her away, Sandy.” Lánshelely told him.

“But why? Why can’t our daughters grow up together?”

“A human growing up in the Minish World is just too unreal. They need to get adjusted to their own kind; if Shelly II is smaller than every human, or Shiri is bigger than every Minish, they just wouldn’t feel comfortable. It doesn’t mean they’ll never see each other.” The Minish Queen smiled. “We’ll wait a few birthdays, then we’ll finally bring our girls to meet.”

Sandy returned the smile before both looked at their daughters. Shelly II succeeded in claiming the rattle, bashing Gonshiri’s head with it.

Now

“So Gonshiri stayed with her mother in Europe, while Sandy took Shelly to South America. ‘Course, he let her attend Gallagher in Virginia, where she stayed at her uncles’ house, and that really…”

“GRRRRRR, EERRRRAAAAAAAH!” Both girls were on the ground trying to strangle the other.

“I REFUSE to acknowledge your genetically mutant blood IN MY VEINS!!” Shiri exclaimed.

“YOU THINK I DO?! I MIGHT SUFFER A DRAMATIC SHRINK-SPURT BECAUSE OF YOUR CHIPMUNKISM!”

“AAAAAAAHHHH—GYYYYAAAAAAAAHHHH!” They rolled all around the tree, and wouldn’t give up with trying to choke the other. They would never accept that the two of them were sisters. Never in a million years.

Three minutes later
“Hahahahaha ha ha ha ha!…” After getting their bruises bandaged, both girls relaxed on the foot of a giant tree root.

“Now that I had some time to think about it,” Shelly smiled, “having a little sibling follow my footsteps sounds pretty neat.”

“Excuse me, but how do I know you aren’t the little one following MY footsteps?”

“Uhhhh, because in reality, you’re only a centimeter big, therefore my footsteps will be the ones being followed. I can already picture it:” Shelly held her hands forward. “I’m just an average human girl, walking ‘cross the hall, down the sidewalk, unaware that my pipsqueak sister is doing her very best to follow, wanting more than anything else to be like the powerful, strong girl she looks up to. I mean, looking at it the other way around just looks sad.”

“Well I’m afraid that’s JUST how it is, because I will NEVER look up to you, bigger than me or not, you are a hopeless mammal that should give everything you got just to be like me. You should do everything I ask, carry me places, fix my baths, bring me food, only then will I teach you the secret of baring my intelligence.”

“Have my brain shrunk and be genetically mutated into a chipmunk?”

“Yes, but you’ve already done the same, but mutated into an ape, so you’re already on the wrong path.”

“Well it’s NOT gonna happen, Pintbrain.” Shelly lied back with a proud smirk. “Because I will ALWAYS be bigger than you.”

“My brain is the largest, most fearsome piece of intelligence on the entire-”

“ARE YOU TWO DONE?!” The Puni Elder shot to ginormous size, scaring the girls, then she minimized.

The twins shook back to their senses as Shelly asked, “So wait, if my dad and her mom planned for us to meet, why did Dad kidnap her?”

“Ahhh, yes… Why? That must be the thing you are wondering.” Elder said. “You see, the two of you belong to a number of important families. The Minish Royal Family… the Quartzite Family… and…”

Two years ago…

Seven-year-old Gonshiri was currently in one of her many regal classes, so she never noticed the troupe of Pikmin carrying an envelope. A giant letter was carried to Lánshelly’s throne, so the queen read it eagerly. Dear Lánshelly, Sandy’s handwriting began, this desert feels so barren without your charm to warm me. Your daughter has fastly asserted herself as Queen of Cleveland Beach and Gallagher Elementary. She takes after the both of us quite well. I’m sad to say she has not demonstrated any earthbending, but as she insists on getting sores on her feet, perhaps I am speaking too early. Either way, if I could handle Your Highness, this little monster is no trouble for Yours Truly. Hope to hear from you soon. –King Sandy

A couple weeks later, a single Wing Pikmin brought Sandy a tiny leaf. He used a magnifying glass to read it. Dear Sandy, I’m sorry if this got to you a little late. We Minish don’t have the most effective mail-to-humans system. Regardless, it is nice to hear that Shelly is quickly finding her way in life. Gonshiri, albeit possesses the natural spoiledness of a princess, has a long way to go, and continuously slacks off with her studies. However, I am proud to say our daughter is a terrific plantbender. I would say she is like her mother, but according to the elders, her chi is very special: she has the ability to revive dead plant matter. It’s a power that few of us Minish Royals are born with. I will be excited to see Gonshiri develop such a power. I am also contemplating a date when our children should meet. Let me know what you think when you write back. –Lânshtelly

Sandy smiled, hearing from his beloved wife. He put the leaf under his shirt and waved the Wing Pikmin good-bye. “King Sandy!” His knight, Sir Shovelot walked in with a salute. “You have a visitor! ‘Tis your elder brother, from the Holy Land!”

“Big Brother Andrew, eh?” Sandy smiled wryly. “Oh, mercy me, to be in his presence. …Fix some mangoes for us and bring it to the guestroom.”

“Yes, Sir!”

Sir Shovelot had two mango smoothies prepared and brought to the two men. Sandy looked out the glassless window of his sandcastle and smiled peacefully at the clear desert sky. Meanwhile, his older, stronger brother sat on the sandcouch, head tilted directly down over his smoothie. “Couldn’t bother with coffee, could you?”

“Juice feels more… beach-friendly.” Sandy shrugged. “So, um, Andrew, great to see you and all, I know it was a long journey, but I have a small question.” He held his thumb and index an inch from each other for emphasis. “Why are you wearing a frying pan over your head?” (Play “Eclipse Gate” from Fairy Tail.)

Sandy spit out his juice. “The King-?”

“The Octogan’s powers became too much for our father, so the worst happened. I’m under a lot of pressure right now, Sandy. The Octogan reads that the Apocalypse will happen in two years. Within that time, I have to get my armies organized, but there are so many problems. The White Lotus Revolutionaries, this ‘Ragaj Gnik’, not to mention this Twenty Key Prophecy. I must continue what my ancestors started: bringing this world’s denizens into my own Spirit World, where they will live in peace long after this world’s fall. To end the Dimensional Fusion that caused all of this chaos.”

Sandy looked down with a foreboding chill. He knew this for a while… that their father was the King of the World, they were descended from a long line of World Leaders. Their father never saw a strong leader in Sandy, his brother Andrew was bigger and stronger. So only Andrew joined his father to Mt. Mariejoa, where he learned the ways of The King, including all three forms of Haki. Sandy was angry and jealous of his brother, so he established dominion over his neighborhood’s beach, and insisted it was not pretend. Now Sandy created this giant Sand Castle in Sand Kingdom, declaring himself the king of this country. But Sandy knew at least the World Government’s history: 4,000 years ago, they sensed the end of the universe through a device called the Octogan, an extremely powerful item once discovered and hidden by a man named Acnologia. As a child back then, the very idea frightened Sandy, but he had believed it was a myth as he grew into his teenage years. But Andrew’s presence here… now…

“So what are you doing?” Andrew asked, his helmeted head looking up. “Are you and that insect continuing this horrid bestiality of yours?”

“Just a second!” Sandy proclaimed angrily, stomping his foot. Andrew made it clear before that he didn’t like Lânshtelly for what she was, especially now that she and Sandy were married. He didn’t come to their wedding, nor did their father. “Just because you’ve become an overly-devoted Man of God, and THINK you’re God Himself, don’t say a word about my wife! Lánshelly is a wonderful woman, and I miss her every second! And even more so, she is the mother of your nieces, so if you disrespect her, you disrespect your fam—”

Andrew smashed the table with his mighty fist, shaking the castle. He stood and stomped angrily to Sandy, “YOU disrespect your family! Marrying that FILTH… Those Minish are evidence of the Dimensional Fusion! The force that threatens our universe to the very core. All denizens of that Fusion are unholy beings!”

“This ‘Dimensional Fusion’ stuff is a load of NONSENSE!” Sandy proclaimed. “A bunch of universes combining together and creating a universe-wide catastrophe? I admit, these made scary kids’ stories, but you can’t possibly believe they’re true!”

“The Octogan has never LIED to us! It is the most powerful gem that sees beyond the timeline’s boundaries! It knows the force which combined our universes, why that force will end up destroying us, and it is the only way we can survive! The gods have been deceived into thinking a ‘Twenty Keys Prophecy’ will be the key to everyone’s safety, but they are wrong! Because we have seen beyond the Time Gate! A force more powerful than anything this universe knows! That force will bring a worse cataclysm than the Apocalypse! This is why the Twenty Keys cannot come together, why we must go against the gods and declare ourselves our own God. But many of this world’s fools fail to listen! Siiiigh…” Andrew looked down and plopped the ‘face’ of his pan into his hand. “Sandy… you must understand. Understand why our family is what it is. The Apocalypse is real, and with the Octogan, I have seen it. I’ve never been more afraid, Sandy, but I cannot show my fear in front of the World Leaders. I…I need my brother.”

Even through that helmet, Sandy could tell when his big strong brother was upset. He could feel his inner turmoil. Sandy smiled comfortingly and hugged his brother. “It’s all right, Andrew. I…I really would like to help you. But what have I got, besides a bunch of sand?”

Andrew stood up straight and began to walk away. “I should return to Mariejoa. I am sorry for troubling you.”

“HEY!” Sandy yelled impatiently. “When I said that, you were supposed to tell me a way I can help!!”

Andrew stopped. “…I sense an incredible war coming. The White Lotus will attempt to thwart our plans. We need an unstoppable army. My fellow Leaders have a solution. …The Grand Inferius. It is an ancient dark spell that can revive the dead to perfect, healthy, invincible, and controllable form. Imagine a zombie movie where all the zombies are crazy powerful.”

“You want me to help build an army of zombies?” Sandy asked with a very questionable look.

“No. But the spell requires a number of steps to create such an army. There is a key component I need: a legendary Fruit of God, whose juice can be harnessed to create the Elixir of Life. Along with several other components, they can create the most powerful army of undead. That kind of army is the only one that could fight the White Lotus, and give us enough time to enact our Spirit World Project. Unfortunately, that fruit has been extinct for centuries. …Perhaps… if you knew a way…” And so, Andrew walked away slowly. It was times like these, Sandy always thought his brother could read his mind. Andrew stopped, “Oh, and should you ever wish to contact me, you will address me as King, not my name. …I would not like some people to know who I am.”

As he turned the hallway, a kickball lightly hit his helmet. It bounced back to seven-year-old Shelly, in a swimsuit and bucket crown. “Oh? Hi, Uncle Andrew!” She kicked her ball the other
Dear Lánshelly: I think it would be best for our daughters to meet as soon as possible. Something very crucial has come up, I cannot explain, but I’m sure our daughters will be delighted. –Yours Truly, Sandy

Dear Sandy: I’m not sure if now is a good time. Gonshiri is very deep in her studies, so pulling her away now wouldn’t be helpful. But don’t worry, I’m sure they’ll get to meet soon. Maybe until they’re both a little more mature. –Yours Especially, Lánshelly

Dear Lánshelly: I understand that Gonshiri’s studies are important, but it never hurts to take a break once in a while. Just as well, as the princess, it should be important to know the history of both sides of her family. Knowing the pridefulness that exists in both our blood, I’m sure she will enjoy her studies a lot more if she knows. I await your reply. –Sandy

Dear Sandy: I know you’re very excited, but I really think we should hold off a little longer. We’re facing a shortage of Pikmin at the moment, so my first priorities as Queen are to help reproduce. I hope you understand. –Lánshelly

Dear Sandy, I know what you’re trying to do. One of my Puni agents was at your castle, he told me about your meeting with King Andrew. You want to use my daughter’s power to revive the God Fruit, you’re going to use her to help the World Government. Sandy, I knew for a while that you were related to those people, but I still wanted to trust you, and you proved that trust until now. When you write back to me, I want you to tell the truth. –Queen Lánshelly

Dear Lánshelly: You’re right, it’s true. When my brother mentioned the extinct plant, I thought for sure Gonshiri’s power could work, and I wanted to help him. But I feel I must ask, what did you mean when you made that point about trusting me? Is there a problem with my family being part of the World Government? –Sandy

Dear Sandy, I didn’t mean to imply anything, but the World Government is cruel to us Minish. Because of their lunatic theories about the Dimensional Fusion and Apocalypse, they like to kill us or enslave us when they can. I love you, Sandy, but I don’t want Gonshiri to associate with them. –Lánshelly

Dear Lánshelly, I admit that my brother is very aggressive, and I strongly disapprove of how he talks about your people, especially in regards to our children. But deep down, Andrew just wants what’s best for everybody, he wants to protect us. I admit, I was jealous that he surpassed in this business when I didn’t, and I’ve grown away from that over time, but he is still my brother. I can tell when someone like him is scared or upset; I thought this Apocalypse was a joke as well, but he seems more knowledgeable in the matter. Lánshelly, I promise to protect Gonshiri before he does anything rash, but maybe we should consider his plan. For the greater good. –Sandy

Sandy, I won’t let my daughter become a tool of mass destruction. In fact, we are starting to become afraid that the Government is overseeing our letters. I’m sorry to say this, Sandy, but I think we should stop communicating, and I don’t think our daughters should meet for a long time. But if you decide to rethink your priorities, when you decide that your daughters are more important than helping your brother’s insane plans, then I encourage you to write to me. Until then, good-bye, Sandy. –Your wife, Lánshelly

Shelly and Gonshiri were speechless. The Punies noted their horrified looks. The sisters slowly turned to look at each other. Gonshiri faced forward and spoke with a frightful stutter, “So, King Andrew—my uncle…” She corrected herself. “He wants to use my power to create an Inferi Army?”

“You know what that is?” Shelly asked.

“My history teachers taught me about it.” Shiri spoke with noticeable fear in her eyes. “Roughly 6,000 years ago, a powerful army of undead was awakened, and nearly destroyed the plains of Planet Avalar. The zombies were commented as being perfectly healthy, but flesh that felt unreal, and with their indestructible bodies, their martial arts, magic, and element bending was for their controllers to use as they please. I believe the dark wizard who commanded such an army… was named Zeref the Black Cloud. It was the very first recording of dead being brought to life on such a terrific scale. In time, the spell called ‘Inferio’ was created to command lesser ‘Inferi’, but that catastrophe came to be known in history as ‘Grand Inferius.’”

“And Uncle Andrew… is trying to recreate that catastrophe?”

“I’m afraid it is so.” The Elder answered hoarsely. “Not only does he want as much power as possible, but, I assume, it is his means of forcing the people to accept this Spirit World Project of his. A Zombie Apocalypse, a Spatial Apocalypse, no matter what catastrophe, the citizens will want to survive. Of course, the only other way to survive is to find the Twenty Keys, and guide all denizens through the Time Gate. However, we have feared what King Andrew said may be true. We do not know of the force he speaks of behind the Gate, nor can we confirm the Octogan’s credibility. We have only grown up on what Polokus has told us. A powerful Dream Spirit who, along with another of dark intentions, knew of the Twenty Keys Prophecy. He has taught our ancestors his teachings. To this day, we believe that fulfilling the prophecy is the key to saving this universe. Of course… I cannot prove such a prophecy to you girls, now. What is your belief?”

Shelly and Gonshiri couldn’t believe any of this. The fact they were sisters was crazy enough, but… this ‘Apocalypse’, this Inferius, what King Andrew wanted to do… Shelly shook her head, “Who was this Dream Spirit of ‘dark intentions’?”

“His name is Bill Cipher, and many times has he appeared throughout history, albeit subtly. Polokus told us of his powers… he possesses vast knowledge, knowledge which stems from his ability to see from any image of himself. Such as an American one-dollar bill.” That comment made Shelly’s heart skip a beat; all of the one-dollar bills she stole from less-graders. “It was Bill who told the gods this Twenty Key Prophecy, but as they have learned across time, Bill Cipher is a demon. And no demon would do something kind, such as passing knowledge, without desiring a price. That’s why the Twenty Keys Prophecy is feared by many, including the gods. However, Polokus has told our ancestors, and many denizens of the Dream Realm, that the Twenty Keys must be found, and the Time Gate opened. Nobody, not even the gods, know what will happen once it’s open. So the decision to find, or not to find the Twenty Keys is up to you.”

“Just what are these Twenty Keys?” Gonshiri asked.

“Seven Lights and Thirteen Darknesses. This very moment, the Twenty Chosen Ones are on their journeys. One of them will be coming here shortly, as our prophecy reads. It is your decision, whether or not you wish to aid him.”

Shelly and Gonshiri exchanged serious glares. “Shelly… I think we should help him. I may not be kind, nor am I a great princess… but I will not be used for Uncle Andrew’s evils. If the Punies believe it is in our best interest to find the Twenty Keys, we should.”

“Yeah.” Shelly nodded. “I don’t know why my uncle’s putting his hope in some octagon, but he sold me away with this crazy zombie idea.” She faced the Elder. “So who is coming here? Which of these Seven or Thirteen Darklights or whatever?”

They felt a footstep quake the earth. “He is here now.” The Elder spoke. (End song.)

The light, though thundering footsteps, which belonged to a normal-size human, came from around the tree. Shelly and Gonshiri slowly approached, their mouths in ‘o’s. Their minds knew only wonder and excitement. Who was this mysterious hero? Who, along with nineteen other people, would supposedly save the world? The answer would soon be apparent, when the girls stepped around the tree root.

“Yaaaaaaaawwwwn.” The seven-year-old with brown skin yawned, very tired from the journey. His yawn echoed in the ears of the tinies. Shelly immediately panicked. This was the one surprise that she definitely couldn’t take.

Dickson Household

Rupert eagerly rushed into the tree stump in the yard across the street. He looked at his Pikmin briefly, and nodded in thanks. He entered the stump, and puffed back to normal size with the help of Minish operatives. After all this time, it felt so weird. Rupert was so used to his tiny size, it was the greatest adventure of his life. Being back to normal size would take some getting used to. Regardless, he was excited to run to his house and tell his parents everything. His father would be proud of him, his mother would be so happy, and boy did he have lots to tell them.

“MOM, DAD, I’M HOME!”

His father was sitting on the couch, his face buried in his hand. “You’re finally back, huh?” he said after a moment of silence.

“Uh… yeah.” His father didn’t seem happy to see Rupert at all. Definitely not the reaction he expected. “Weren’t you wondering where I was?”

Chad chuckled softly. He sat up, smiling at his son. “It’s almost ironic… your mom says I don’t have faith in you. Yet, I’m the one who kept saying you would come back okay. …She didn’t believe me.”

“Whaddyou mean? Dad, where’s Mom?”

As a response, Chad flipped on the news. “It isn’t your fault, Kiddo, but… just watch.”

“Breaking news, all the way from Washington D.C., a sudden massacre inside President James’ School for the Seriously Uneducated! Students everywhere are running away in fright, as the school seems to be under attack by a ghost!”

Presidents James’ School

“Ooo-hoo-hoo!” Li’l Gideon laughed gleefully. “Bill Cipher is an excellent teacher! Hm-hm, but only thanks to your marvelous mentoring skills, Mr. President.” He made his cute and bubbly face.

“I wouldn’t sell dear Bill short.” James McFarland replied. “Even though he is on the one-dollar bill! HA HA hahahahaha!” He and Gideon laughed.

“You know, I’ve always had a fondness for teaching.” Bill Cipher replied, leaning on his cane casually. “I even considered teaching a class, but I just didn’t have the credentials. Granted, I was a substitute at Harvard Law School for a time, one of my favorite students was-”

The walls suddenly burst open, and blue fire shone through the smoke. Emily Phantom looked less like a human, and more like a demon. “Where is my baby?…” she panted hard.

“I know you took him away!” Emily spoke venomously. “He was playing with his Gallagher buddies and you kidnapped them! Give him BAAAAAACK!” A powerful Ecto Ray flew from her lungs.

“AAAAAAAAHHHHH!” Bill Cipher was struck in the eye, the tip of his body dispersing.

“RUUUUUPEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEERT!” The children screamed from Emily’s fury, all of the mesmerized students were awakened and fleeing.

“NO! COME BACK, YOU LITTLE TERMITES!” Gideon screamed. “OBEY ME, NOW!”

“You’re a hot piece of work, you know that?” James grunted, helping himself up from the force.

“GRAAAAAAH!” Emily lunged at the president, clutched his neck, but James grabbed her arm in his Armament Haki hand.

“I may have been afraid of hags like you when I was in diapers,” James began, struggling to push her away, “but that was before Ah hit the Big Four-Six! This country’s ruled by a NEW man now, and his name is JAMES!” He socked her in the face with an Armament punch, sending her against the desks.

Emily watched as Bill Cipher reformed above her. “Oh, right, you’re a ghost! You can touch me. But that also means that I CAN TOUCH YOU, TOO.”

His eye glowing blood-red, Bill lowered down, looking closer into Emily’s monstrous eyes. The woman felt herself whirling in an ocean of despair. Spiders latched her from all sides, tore her limbs, her organs were harvested by skeleton scientists, her heart and brain were minced through a juicer, and her soul was lost in the bowels of Hades.

The ghost woman was on the floor, more pale than before, her face frozen. Bill licked his fingers in his nonexistent mouth. “A little spicy, but definitely been sitting out a while. I’m not cleaning that up.”

“No problem.” Gideon said. “VIOLET! SCARLET! CLEAN-UP!”

The cat women walked on all fours with blank, glowing blue eyes. They picked Emily up in their teeth and carried her away.

As you can tell so far, the Presidents Saga focuses a lot on the World Leaders’ backgrounds.
We may not show them all quite yet. The Punies and Boggly Woods come from Paper Mario: Thousand-Year Door. Next time, we'll do Maddy and Vanellope’s next stages, and I’m excited to write the fight that happens. ;3 See you later.
Catch Her!

Chapter Summary

Dr. Nefarious pursues Maddy, while Vanellope pursues Peridot!

This chapter is also titled “Fanservice.” ;3 Today’s code uses the Atbash Cipher, but the phrase is backwards.

Chapter 35: Catch Her!

Star Train; The Head

Dr. Nefarious paced back and forth in the control deck, the anger clear on his eternal-scowling face. “Pardon me, Sir,” Lawrence approached him with his emotionless frown, “but you’ve been pacing around the same spot for two days. You’ve imbedded footprints in the metal.” If one looked down, one could see this was true. “Might I ask what is wrong?”

“Just when I think I’ve got Maddy back in my clutches, she escapes again!” Nefarious spoke with anger. “And not one of my robots has tracked her whereabouts! How hard can it be to chase after a giant space-whale?!?”

“With all due respect, Sir, perhaps you are exhausting too much in trying to track this girl. She is one of the Seven Lights, true, but you are becoming obsessed with her.”

“Well, of COURSE I’m obsessed with her, Lawrence!” Nefarious faced him, making an arm gesture that emphasized his logic. “Lesser Lord Gnik TOLD us she was the most powerful of the Lights! That’s why we’ve been spying on her all this time, because even GNIK doesn’t know what this power is!” He turned away and rubbed his fingers deviously. “Ever since they were eight years old, I’ve been watching her. I staged that little twerp buying her dumb dog on her birthday so that one day, I could discover what this power is, and TAKE IT for myself!” He punched his palm.

“Yet, I’ve come up with nothing! That’s why we must capture that child and FORCE IT OUT OF HER!”

“Dr. Nefarious, Sir-”

“What?!” Nefarious screamed at the robot hologram that just appeared.

“Our scoters have detected Ratchet’s Aphelion near the region of Planet Oltana. Subject ‘Maddy Murphy’ was detected with them. Shall we engage in pursuit?”

“No! I’m tired of relying on you clowns to capture Maddy. I’m joining in the chase myself! BUCKLE IN, Lawrence, we’re detaching the head!”

Meanwhile, in the halls of the train, Lord Vorselon was whistling a merry tune while sweeping the floors of rubble from the earlier battle. The train began shaking all of a sudden, and Vorselon nearly lost his balance when the wall of the door he was about to enter broke away from the hall. Vorselon stood on the edge of the train, watching as the Nefarious-shaped head of the vessel drifted farther away. “I’m stepping out for a while, Lord Vorselon!” Nefarious said through the PA speaker. “Use the back-up controls to pilot the train. Also, I’m cooking some French fries with triple-packed oil, make sure to turn the stove off in 10 minutes!”

HELLO, READERS! Welcome, come one, come all, to this exciting tale of goes and bows. Welcome to Jar Jar Blinks’ story arc of Seven Lights: The Side Stories: Jar Jar Blinks’ Shifty Shenanigans! WEE HEE HEE HEE!

It all starts on Nightmare Land, when I was-a helping Da’ky helpin’ Anna get settled in. (A picture was shown of Jar Jar peeping on Anna of Arendelle in the shower, with said girl creeped out.) She was-a pretty upset over her kingdom going ploopy, with her sister deady-weddy, so I-sa say, “It’s okaaaaay.” (A picture of Jar Jar smooching Anna.) “Jah-Jy’s here, and he’s-a gonna make it betty,” and then Anna says, “OOOOOOO Jah-Jyyyyyyyy!” (Anna lovingly kissed Jar Jar back.) “Ohsh, but I’s am so sadness over my sissy-poo,” and then I says, “What cans I do about Anny-do?” Then Da’ky comes to me. He was-a REAL bright and shiny. He says-si:

> “Jaaaaar Jaaaaaar.” (Darkrai was depicted with a white beard and robe, the sun shining behind him over a hill.) “Thou must fly to the galaxy of Solana, and find Ministry Queenmoo, then seek from her the Holy Milk. Only then will Anna feel happy about sissy.”

*But I knows I cans not do it alone. I-sa needs me old friend, ones I have known for yearsies: Zachary Murphy. He’s and I’s know each other from 4th birthday of his and Mads, when his Sissypoo broke her booboo-receiver, so I’s feeds her milk from baby bull. (The next picture describes itself.) I’s flies everywhere in Solly Gally, but noes Zachy-Wacky. Thens I sees alie-walies drivin’ dat dem Apheli-Wheeli, so I says silly: “GIVEE THAT BACK!” I’s battles them, and I’s takes Aphelion back, but oshi-NOOO! I-sa losin’ control, and going for gangbusters’ planet! Nows I am here, with Maddy, Zaddy, Raddy, and Draddy, and ours exciting Side Story continues. I wills not give up ‘tills I finds the Holy Milky, so thats all sad sissy-poos everywhere shall always-

> “JAR JAR, two things,” Maddy yelled with anger, “1) This isn’t the Side Stories, and 2), even if it was, YOU ARE NOT GETTING A STORY ARC!”

> “But my plots is so enticiiiiiing.” Jar Jar said depressedly. “When you looks at all the subtle clues and foreshadows, none would even suspect my’s great-grandsister is Luvita Blinkingsling, street-renowned juice thief. Ha!” Jar Jar gasped. “I-sa spoiled it! I-SA SPOILED MY SECRET FAMILY RELATION! NYEEEEEE-!” He flailed his arms like an idiot.

> “SHUT IT!” Maddy punched his bomback mouth. “Sigh…” She sighed depressedly. “I can tolerate Zach, but why did YOU have to come?”

> “Maddy, did you really drink milk from a bull?” Drake asked.

> “NO! ! And he and Zach were never childhood friends, this story’s all at the top of his head! That is to say his head isn’t a black hole.”

> “Please, Maddy, your head’s rounder than any hole.” Zach remarked, using a glider to fly alongside their ship. The airless void chilled his face. “And for the record, I think that situation with the bull stems from the intimacy you never got with your mom as a kid.”

Maddy wasn’t gonna draw on from that. “Zach, you’re in space, your head’s gonna pop.”

> “Hn-hno it won’t, Maddy, my head is specially trained to-” The airless void caught on to him, and his head exploded into blood. His lifeless body float there.
“OH MY GOD!” Ratchet panicked.

“And 3,” Maddy began with disbelief, “2… 1…”

“BAP.” Jar Jar’s head came off, revealing to be Zach in disguise. “Ta-daaaa! We dropped Jar Jar off on some curtain planet.”

“I hope he enjoys himself.” Maddy eye-rolled. “Zach, can’t you be a little bit serious about this? I’m still angry that we didn’t go home with them ‘cause we have to find some ‘Disbanded’ person, based on what Dillon told us Vanellope said out of nowhere. And frankly, I’m not even sure why I believed him, I’m sick of this dump.”

“This ‘dump’ is kind of my home galaxy, Maddy.” Ratchet replied, piloting Aphelion with a solemn look.

“I’m just saying that I wanna go home, too. But I’m also worried about this ‘Apocalypse’ thing, so—I dunno—maybe I’m going along with whatever happens for the sake of something good happening.”

“Remind me, again, where this Apocalypse thing came from?” Ratchet requested.

“We honestly have no idea.” Drake shook his head. “And we’re really sick of the whole thing, already. Totally ruining our summer.”

“Aphelion, are you any closer to tracking Clank’s radio waves?” the Lombax asked his ship.

“I am sorry, Ratchet, but I cannot detect Clank’s antenna waves anywhere within a 10,000 light-year radius. There is a chance that Clank’s antenna was severed, his waves are being obstructed by a force, or he is very very far away.”

“And how far is 10,000 light-years?” Drake asked.

“Not so much, but pretty far.” Ratchet sighed. “But assuming he was captured by Nefarious, he could have taken his antenna off, maybe even reprogrammed him!” He spoke with frustration, “I wanna go back to that train and make Nefarious tell me where he is!”

“Mad-dy? Mad-dy?” Zach was now a 5-year-old, tugging on his big sister’s sleeve.

“Not now, Zachary. Ratchet, I’d like to ask Nefarious a few questions too, but we barely escaped that train last time. We’ll just have to survive without Clank.”

“Mad-dy? Mad-dy?”

“Sigh, I know all that, Maddy. It’s just… well, you weren’t with us for very long, so you didn’t get a chance to see, but Clank’s been kind of… sick, lately. Like, every now and again, he kind of shorts out and speaks gibberish, so if he’s trapped or by himself somewhere, he’s got no way to protect himself. That’s why I’m worried.”

“Mad-dy?”

“Well, I can’t argue with that.” Maddy said. “You should see the kind of messes Zach gets into—What the heck is it?!?”

“Dat.” Zach pointed behind them.

“MAAAAAADDYYYYY!” The three panicked: Dr. Nefarious’s gigantic space station-size head was chasing them imposingly. “I foooooound yooooouuuu!”

“Sir, if we’re doing this, can you please not talk suggestively?” Lawrence asked.

“AAAAAAAAHHH!” Maddy screamed. “Ratchet, get us away from here!”

“Ratchet, I am detecting Planet Oltana approximately 5 light-years away. Shall we hide there?” Aphelion asked.

“Yes, go for it!” On Ratchet’s command, the ship escaped through hyperspace, though the Star Head was still in pursuit. …A small black ship watched and went unseen by them, but it vanished into hyperspace, too.

Planet Oltana

Stage 45: Oltana Valley

Mission: Get away from Dr. Nefarious!

Act 1

Aphelion entered Oltana’s atmosphere and landed in an enclosing of a canyon. The planet looked dead and desert-like at first glance, and the surrounding horizon was a sunset orange, while the rest of the sky within was dark. Regardless, the landscape was bright as if it were daytime. Team Ratchet trekked down a slope along the right side of a chasm, the Lombax using his OmniWrench to whack away Tumfoids. They arrived at a dead-end cliff, and Maddy held onto Drake as he used his grappler to swing a Swingshot target. She expected Zach to hold onto Ratchet, but-

“Roo-REE-roo!" Zach took the form of a squat, rectangle, spring creature with a shocked face, bouncing across in one swoop. “Look, Zach, this is gonna get old after a while.”

“You would know, Mads. Hey’d you want that Gold Bolt over there?” He pointed to the ledge they just swung from: it had a cave below it, with a Gold Bolt inside.

“Whoops. Too late now.” Ratchet said.

“No it isn’t. Roo-REE-roo!” He Roo-Bounced over to the cave, got the bolt, and returned. With that, the four would begin their venture across a rickety wooden path alongside a canyon wall.

“Maaaaaddyyyyy, where aaaaaare yooooouuu?” The four gasped and looked up: Dr. Nefarious’s head gradually emerged from the dark sky. “Ahhhhhh! THERE you are! You must be careful! You wouldn’t want to lose your footing and FALL! Ex-TERMINATE them!” (Play “The Precipice” from Rayman 2.)

The ship blasted a laser that destroyed the rocky foothold they were just on, the team was forced to bolt forward. Parts of the wooden walkway were shaking and threatened to fall under the cannonfire. They jumped a gap to a lower walkway, and a red Walking Shell (a missile with legs) was dropped ahead of the path, running toward the group as they had to jump it. When a bombshell exploded under their current bridge, the entire foothold flew off to the right, but the four jumped off and landed on a flat rock balanced atop a stone needle. They jumped a series of balanced rocks, which tilted back-and-forth at their weight, but were in the process of falling due to Nefarious’s cannons.

They jumped to a narrow path on the side of a small mountain, crossing a short cave before landing inside a minecart. The cart rolled down a track, up a ramp they had to jump, and a cannon blew off part of this next track as they made the cart jump again. Two Walking Shells ran at them from either side, so they jumped again, quickly jumped a gap that was blown open, then the next chunk of track collapsed as they fell off and rolled down a steep slope. Their cart crashed against a rock, but the four jumped out and ran along another cliffside. Bombshells hit the wall above them, dropping rubble down and forcing the group to stop, so when the rubble finished falling, Ratchet used a grenade to blow it up. They ran further, a large chunk of path was blown off, but a huge flat boulder fell vertically past that gap, so the team quickly Wall Jumped it to get across.

They turned leftward between a trench, then continued their run across another rickety bridge, suspended over a chasm by weak supports. Under the bombshells’ explosions, the parts of the bridge were toppling over, the four heroes ran as fast as they could with disrupted balance. They swung a Swingshot target part of the way, the path took them between close trench walls. The cannons were blasting the walls and sending rubble everywhere, the friends had to keep an eye out for boulders falling to their path. Among the rubble was an old man with a white beard and scarecrow hat, crying “VNRG HRS TMRGHZD HVS!” The team turned left across a series of platforms they had to jump, and they made it to a longer path that stretched along a cliffside.

“Wha- Who’s that?” Ratchet stuttered.

“I’m going deaf anyway, so I’ll risk it.” Drake ran that person’s direction, the others followed, it was a tight narrow passage within a trench. The shadowed person drew further away, the four stayed on their tail. “Maddyyyyy, where’d you gooooooo?” (End song.)

They watched the person jump into a hole, so the four heroes followed. The sound of explosions and gunfire was stopped, but they heard the engines of Nefarious’s ship in the sky. Regardless, they were glad to rest their ears and legs. “We dunno who you are, but thanks for helping us.” Ratchet said.

“My pleasure.” The figure with black shiny armor turned to them with her glowing violet eyes.

“WAIT A SECOND!” Maddy screamed, pointing accusingly. “You’re that… Shade girl! One of the Teen Ninjas!”

“Maddy, you know her?” Ratchet asked.

“Yes, and she’s a bad guy!”

“No I’m not!” Shade stated. “Sigh… time for me to explain.” She pushed the left breast of her armor, and her B.R.A. retracted, revealing the black jumpsuit underneath. She had light-purple eyes and light-red hair, curved backward in several large spikes. She had a little black, animal-like nose.

Maddy stared for a moment. “You’re a… hedgehog?”

“I’m an echidna.” Shade said with disbelief. “Well, a Mobian echidna, actually. And I’m not really your enemy, I’ve been posing as a Teen Ninja for the past few years so that I could spy on you.”

“I have had it up to here with people ‘spying’ on me.” Maddy held her hand above her head. “If you’re not my enemy, why did you kidnap me to have me shrunken down?”

“If you recall, I also knocked Nya out for you so you could get back to normal.” Shade argued. “Besides, I helped them with that whole thing because I wanted to see if it was true. …You have Conqueror’s-“
“Maaaaaaaddyyyyyy. Come oooooouuu-uuuuut.”

“If we stay here, they’re going to find us. Come with me.” Shade pulled a ninja mask over her mouth and hurried forward. Maddy contemplated following her, but when they looked at Nefarious’s vessel above the hole, they decided to. (Play “Volcano Force Point Temple” from Star Fox Adventures.)

Act 2

They hurried after the echidna as she ran through a series of maze-like caves. “How exactly do you know the way again?” Maddy asked.

“I don’t in particular, but he’s starting to send robots inside, I can see where they are with my Observation Haki.”

“Haki? Why does that sound familiar…”

“Duh, Maddy, Mr. York had it!” Zach said brightly. “He was playing Hockey with Caesar! I even kept the trophy.” He held up a golden trophy of Sandman sliding a puck with a hockey stick.

“Um… no.” Shade replied. “It’s a kind of martial art that heightens the senses. Armament Haki-”

“Yeah yeah yeah, maybe you wanna tell me why you’re suddenly a good guy?” Maddy requested.

“Oh, right. Would you believe me if I said I was 4,000 years old?”

“NO.” They all chorused.

“I’m not.” Shade said humorously. “I’m actually 23. But that is how old our prophecy is. I’m not just an average Mobian, I’m from the Netherverse. Our tribe of Mobians have very wise prophets, and they saw the end of the world happening near this date. According to history, a man called Acnologia came to our universe to hide a gem called the Octogan. From it, the ancient prophets harnessed power, and saw the future. Because of what they saw, they feared the Octogan, so they sent it back to this universe. They kept the power that they took from it, because the prophecy was real regardless.

“According to that prophecy, when a man who claimed to be the ‘King of Space’ came to our universe, it was a sign that the Apocalypse was coming. That man, Dimentio, appeared in our world 20 years ago, so the time to fulfill their part of the prophecy was then. 18 years ago, when I was five, the prophets used the harnessed power of the Octogan to give me the knowledge of this prophecy, then they banished me to this universe, so that I could help Maddy.”

“There’s still a couple of holes in that story.” Ratchet noted. “Like, why are you helping Maddy, and why didn’t they send an adult?”

“The Mobians used Space Magic, which came in short supply, to send myself and two other children, Vendra and Neftin, to this universe when Dimentio was taking over. It was convenient on their end because of my exceptional combat skills, that’s why I was chosen. And I was ordered to help Maddy because they knew she was one of the Seven Lights.”

“My brain officially hurts.” Zach remarked.

“So what’s why Nefarious is after me? And you, are you… the Disbanded?” Maddy asked.

“That’s probably why Nefarious is after you, and no. The ‘Disbanded,’ actually, is someone who ended up in this universe 20 years ago, following Arceus’s explosion. He’s actually a denizen of one of the Original Worlds. I don’t know how you know about him, but you need to find him so he can train you.”

They arrived at a tall cliff that Shade climbed up effortlessly. She saw a stalactite on the ceiling, jumped to pull it down, then stuck it in the cliff partway down. She did the same with two more, making a stairway of sorts for the others to follow her. “They’re watching from outside. Don’t stand in the holes.” This tunnel had large holes in the sides, where Chuck Planktonbots viewed inside with searchlight eyes. The group stepped up some natural stairs to a narrow ledge above a hole, sidling across. Rather than drop down on the other side, they used their grapplers to latch above the next hole, while Shade climbed across the wall.

They dropped down after the second hole, but kept out of the diagonal sunrays of corner holes. They came to an area filled with gaps in the ground, with the only crossable paths blocked by searchlights. “Maaaaaddyyyyyy. I can detect your body temperatuuuuuure!”

“If that were true, this place would be crumbling under cannonfire.” Shade assured. She crawled up the wall of this cave to the ceiling, punching stalactites as they fell to stick on small platforms below. They could use the taller footholds to bounce across the chasm and under the searchlights. They jumped to a space on a path between two searchlights, then had to drop down the opposite ledge to climb across a grabable area. They went under the searchlight and climbed onto the foothold again. Two searchlights skimmed up-and-down between this foothold and the next, so the group waited for an opening and flew across with their grapplers.

“Hold on, Shade, does the Disbanded live here?” Drake asked as they journeyed another straightforward cave.

“No, he’s on Planet Pokitaru. But you guys retreated here, so I had to follow you. And before you ask how I even got here, I flew on my ship; I’ve been wandering around this galaxy ever since your leader announced the Apocalypse.”

“If you knew about the Apocalypse all along, how come you never told anyone?” Maddy asked.

“The World Government knew about it, and they let the Kids Next Door be because they didn’t know. I didn’t exactly know when you would find out either, but it took the Government by surprise. They’re a little disorganized trying to schedule legal attacks on your organization. All they can do is try to stop the Twenty Keys from doing what they do. At least, that’s based from my job as a Teen Ninja—I wasn’t given ALL of the prophecy. …Maddy, lemme ask you something: do you remember, I dunno, anything weird you might’ve done that you couldn’t explain? I mean—besides that whole screaming fiasco during the shrink ray incident?”

Maddy raised a brow, both at the question and at the example. “I remember when we were escaping Nefarious’s ship,” Ratchet explained, “she said she saw Qwark’s aura outside. Not that Qwark is easy to miss, but through the wall and all…”

“Hm… interesting.” Shade said. “Let’s talk about that after we escape. We’ll have to get outside someplace where Nefarious won’t spot us, then I can summon my ship.”

“We’re getting my ship back too, right?” Ratchet asked.

“I won’t make promises, we may have to come back later.”

They entered a wider tunnel of Sleepytime robots, and (much to their disgust) bones laying about the ground. “Can you do this?” Shade asked, nimbly leaping the short stalagmites that made a path between the Sleepytimes.

“If KND teaches them Ninjutsu, probably.” Ratchet remarked.

“I’m glad you asked!” Zach made swift hand signals. “Substitution Jutsu: Swap bones with:” He planted his hand against the floor, “GRAHAM CRACKERS!” In a puff of smoke, all of the bones turned into graham crackers.

“THIS DOESN’T HELP US!!” Maddy screamed. But just then, the Sleepytime robots startled awake. “Oopsie.”

The Sleepytimes looked at the graham cracker floor around them. The robots became very frantic, their tongues popping out excitedly as they began digging into the treats. “Well, that works.” Drake shrugged as they stepped around the robots, crunching the crackers beneath their shoes. They met with Shade at a long, wide chasm, in which the ninja Wall Jumped between either wall, across the pit—and they noted how far the walls were apart. “…Any ideas?” asked Drake.

“Well, you and me can hold onto these two and take turns with our-” As Ratchet explained, he absentmindedly moved his arms, hitting Zach in the face when he walked by eating a cracker. The boy flew up in the air, landed on his back, and farted out a Golden Gate Bridge. “…Or that.” They crossed the bridge with many questions waiting to be asked.

“Maddy, will you JUST get your ass back into my room so that I can harvest your body for POWER already!”

“Sir, please stop talking.” Lawrence pleaded.

There was a large opening in the ceiling ahead, and they saw Nefarious’s head-ship slowly looming over. Shade jumped in the water. “It’s deep enough to swim under. We can hide this way.”

Maddy clutched Drake’s arm nervously. “Sheee, eh, has a phobia.”

“Oh, right.” Shade remembered. “Does Zachary have any ideas?”

Zach searched his pockets. “Candy that inflates into a submarine when dipped in water: go!” He threw the little yellow candy into the water. Bloop. Tiny splash.

 “…Sigh, just hold onto me.” Ratchet said impatiently, taking Maddy’s arm as they dove under the surface. Shade guided them through an underwater tunnel, and Maddy had her eyes and mouth shut the whole way. She normally wasn’t one to trust an alien with her life, especially underwater, but here they were trusting Shade to bring them to safety, and Ratchet’s been helping them the whole time. Things sure change quickly, Maddy realized. Maybe someday, she could put this water phobia aside completely.

They resurfaced and stepped onto solid ground. They followed a narrow, quiet tunnel, hearing the wind blowing from outside. They saw orange sky in the distance, peeking out of the tunnel exit. Nefarious’s ship was several miles back, steadily flying right from their perspective. “Sigh. Okay, now’s our chance.” Shade tapped buttons on her wristwatch. “As soon as my ship’s here, we’re jumping on and getting off this planet. It’ll be a miracle if we can lose him before-” (End song.)

“So sorry, dears.” The group jumped when Lawrence suddenly appeared from thin air. “But my master has been yelling my hearing sensors off ever since Maddy escaped, so it would be easier for everyone if you agree to let him experiment on you.”

“Easier, my forehead. Where did you come from, anyway?” Maddy retorted.
“Dr. Nefarious programmed me with teleportation, and it comes in handy so very much.”
Lawrence thought back on Nefarious’s many tantrums. “Unfortunately, I need 5 minutes for a recharge every time, so… RAAAOO RAAOO-!” His head became an alarm, he began blaring—Zach glomped around his head in the form of a Minion from Despicable Me.

“EEEEEEEEAA. Bippity-boop-dah! Dippity-doo!” He shouted in a Minion’s voice. “91 minutes of my life wasted! GAAAAAAAH!”

“Run for it!” Ratchet bashed Lawrence away with his wrench, pulling Zach back into their group as they bolted.

“THERE you are! You’re not escaping me THIS TIME!” Nefarious’s ship about-faced and chased them again, firing round after round of bombshells. The group raced across a valley of stalagmites, the cannons blew up their bases, the ‘mites flew up in the air and threatened to stab the group, forcing them to watch out and dodge. Shade was the first to Wall Jump the strips of parallel walls ahead, and the walls were close enough for them to do the same. The cannons blew up chunks of the walls, so they were careful to kick off the right areas lest they fall in the pit.

They landed on a snaky path within a very close trench, boulders toppling down because of the ship’s cannons, and they watched as Shade leaped up and punched every one coming for her comrades. “We have to get somewhere safe where I can call my ship again!”

“Dude, what’s with the herculean strength?” Drake asked as they ran.

“Echidnas are super strong, don’t worry about it.” After they passed the trench, they ended up tumbling down a steep rocky hill, in which Maddy, Ratchet, and Drake balanced on Zach, who rolled downhill like a barrel. They evasively maneuvered around the boulders that rolled down at them, and Zach was back on his feet after they arrived at the bottom. They raced across a somewhat-flat field, avoiding oncoming cannonfire, until a storm of robots appeared before them.

“I have had it up to HERE with this game of Cat and Mouse, Maddy! …Since you can’t see me, my arm is stretched to the ceiling. ‘Cause, it extends and all. Ahem, anyway, if you don’t surrender now, I’ll see that your silly friends NEVER see the light of-” Lasers rained down all over the robots, destroying every one. “WHAT?!”

“I’m afraid we can’t authorize that.” Jerome Winkiebottom’s Jamaican accent echoed. A fleet of armored Wisps and GKND ships appeared from the sky.

“THE GALACTIC KIDS NEXT DOOR!” Maddy cheered, for the first time in her life.

“Are you KIDDING ME?! WHERE DID they all come from?!”

“Who—… George?” Maddy barely remembered the boy. “When did all of you get here?”

“George sensed you coming here with his Future Sight.” Jerome replied. “It has proven to be a very helpful power. The Earth KND is very lucky to have someone like you.” He smiled.

“Heheh. To tell the truth, my Future Sight’s been getting really active lately. It couldn’t even tell me when pop quizzes were coming before.”

“NOOOOO YOU DON’T!” Nefarious thundered from his giant head. “I am NOT losing Maddy again! She’s coming with me, and ALL of you will BE MY SLAVES!” The mouth of the head opened, unveiling a huge cannon. The cannon locked on the swarm of Wisps, charging a fiery yellow-red beam. The cannon fired, and the Wisps unleashed their squeaky screams before their colorful bodies turned metal and robotic.

“WHAT THE HECK WAS THAT?!” Maddy screamed.

“It’s Nefarious’s Biobliterator!” Ratchet exclaimed. “It turns any flesh being into robots! I coulda sworn me and Clank destroyed it a few years back…”

“Correct, Ratchet!” Nefarious spoke deviously. “Unfortunately, this Biobliterator is on a lower scale. The energy is limited and wears off after a while. But I’ll keep YOU Roboticized long enough to FINALLY do you in!”

The cannon was beginning to charge again. Its sights locked on all of the operatives. “We may not be able to get away in time!” Shade yelled.

“Zach, if there was a time to do something crazy, NOW would be it!” Maddy stated.

“PERFECT!” Zach expressed his readiness in an animated fashion. “I brought my EMERGENCY RAFT!!” He raised the inflatable yellow boat in the air.

He threw it on the ground, hopped in, and- “Huff huff huff huff huff huff huff huff huff!” Began to row hurriedly. …He was going nowhere fast.

“You’re a nutcase, Zach.”

“Sigh, alright.” George jumped off the ship and shoved Maddy and Ratchet aside. “I’ve got an idea that might work, but it’s gonna be a little intense. All of you should step back a few meters.”

With mixed looks of worry and curiosity, Maddy’s group ran far away (except Zach, trying to get away on his raft). George looked up at Nefarious’s ship with a grave stare.

“Ahhhh. A volunteer, I see.” Nefarious smirked. “Want to take the full blast, do you? Perhaps the effect will last longer on you! I’ll be happy to make you my servant!”

George gripped his purple headband tight. Nefarious’s cannon locked closely on him, the robots staring with interest. George yanked his headband off.

“OOOOOOWWWYYYY!” 3-year-old George was in so much pain. His head throbbed, even with the headband wrapped around him. “D-Dad! It…It huuuuurrrrrts!”

“Jagar, this whole thing is insane! We can’t risk our own son’s life for this…this thing!” Misty stated.

“Misty, neither me, Clockwork, Dialga, or any timebender can see the Octogan in any point in history. But if we had one of them, we’d be able to work around that rule. But the Octogan needs to adapt to a young timebender, and once George gets older, he’ll have more control.”

“And you expect that headband to stay on with no one noticing?!”

“It has chi-blocks all around the inside. It’ll hold back a lot of the unstable power while still having enough for himself. But George, you have to promise you won’t show it to anyone, and don’t use it for anything unless I say otherwise. Okay?”

“Aaaaaaaahhhhhhh!” The child was in no position to answer.
“AAAAHHH!” The screen in Nefarious’s ship blacked out, his own vision sensors hurt.

The operatives stared agape at George when the canyon began trembling. An “8” was inscribed on George’s head, and incredible power burned from it. “Wh-Wh-What’s going on?!” Maddy trembled.

“I-Is that the… Octogan?!” Shade stared wide.

George’s eyes glowed, he felt unbelievable power surging through him. He inhaled a terrific breath of air, filling his lungs with Time’s very particles. When it was all ready to let loose: BONG. . . .

His Roar of Time was so loud, it sounded like the toll of a church bell. A white laser that blinded everything else struck through Nefarious’s ship. “EEEEAAAAAAAAAAAAHHHHHHHHH!”

Long after the gigantic head exploded, the energy was still burning uncontrollably. All of the Wisps were being blown away, along with Jerome’s rescue ship. “Guys! We have to get away!” Ratchet cried.

“ZACH! Get your butt over here!” Maddy screamed.

George desperately tried to get his headband off the ground, but the pain in his head was forceful, it wouldn’t let him. “Aaaaaahhhhhh…” A bright white circle expanded from him and encased Maddy’s group. They felt their selves uplift into the air… Then they were all gone. The GKND operatives searched the canyon, but found neither hide nor hair of the humans, echidna, or Lombax.

Let’s look at the term “Octogan” for a second.

“Octo” means “eight”, “gan” means “eye”. It is an “8 Eye”.

Many average creatures in the universe have two eyes. There are two Octogan.

One of them had many owners. One of them had few. Such is the law of opposites.

Few creatures know where they originate from. Those who do fear to speak his name.

So I will not speak his name, either.

King Household

Jagar gasped, falling to his knees and gripping his head. He panted heavily, sweating. “No… George! Where’s George!” He clutched the Chrono Staff and saw his son in the past, tracing his chrono signature forward. “No… George, no!” 8888888888 The flashing “8” was all that he saw. “Damn it, George… Why did you take it off?! Who saw?” He walked over beside the window, planting his hand against it with his head down. “Why… I thought if it was with him, I could observe it easier, I could control it easier. But I’m not any close.” A blue flash blinked in the sky. “And now… augh, what if somebody—”

A Psycho Sphere blew through the front door of his house like a comet: the entire two-story building burst into flames. As Jagar choked, fighting his way through the smoke, he began to panic inside. He had never been the victim of a sneak attack, but since he just viewed the Octogan in his mind, his Sight was disrupted. To think in just so short a time… he gasped, “Cheren!” Jagar fought through the flames with his bending and got into the basement. The boy’s time-frozen statue had fallen over. “Cheren!” He picked him up.
BOING! “Ha ha ha ha ha! Ha ha ha ha ha!” A Cheshire Cat head popped out where Cheren’s head should be, swaying left and right with that creepy laugh. As Jagar stared baffled, the Cheren dummy bent his leg back, and- “OOOF!” kicked Jagar in the crotch. “Ow!”

Sunni Chariton flew miles away from the home, setting the frozen Cheren on the ground. She took a chi-blocker out of a box, sticking it over his forehead before pulling off. “Waaah!” Cheren was just walking, so suddenly finding himself on the ground put him in a shock. “S-Sunni! Where the crap am I?”

“Since I’ve been, er, ‘touching’ you a lot lately, I’ve picked up your aura signature, and you’ve been at Mr. King’s house an awfully long time. He froze you in time and locked you in his basement.”

“What?!” Cheren said with anger in his voice.

“What did you go there for, anyway?”

Cheren recounted their talk to the best of his memory (even though it was only a few minutes ago to him). “All I can make of it is Jagar is afraid of what will happen when we find the Twenty Keys, so he’s trying to stop me from finding ‘em. Just like… the World Government would.”

“But do you think he’s really The King?”

“I don’t know. Sigh, but now I need to go up to Moonbase to warn everyone about him; at the risk of making Sector IC look bad. Speaking of Sector IC, I have to go back to Gravity Falls to check on that portal situation, too.”

“What portal situation? Maybe I can go there after taking you to Moonbase.”

“It might be easier just for us to go together. Sigh…” Cheren put his hand on his forehead in exhaustion. “This is starting to become like the old days all over again. We can’t trust any adults and people who seem like allies are bad guys. I was almost sure we grew past all this.”

“Awwwww, don’t be so frowny.” Sunni poked his cheek. “You still trust me, don’t you?”

“Hehe. You’re one of my closest operatives, Sunni, I trust you guys more than anything.”

“Hehe, me too!” Sunni grinned. “So’re you ready to go back to Moonbase?”

“Yup. Warp us up, Sun.” With that, Sunni teleported the two of them.

Cyberspace; Land of Quartz and Melody

Vanellope was splorped to another strange land under a black sky with violet rainbowy strips. The whole surface was made of quartz crystals, blue and purple, that towered like mountains. “Ugh. These snow levels are getting way too common.” Vanellope said.

“’Tis not snow. It is quartz. This land is rich with mystic energy. Like all others, it is broken. XANA has sent his helper to fix it.”

At the note of his ‘helper’, Vanellope looked a short distance ahead. Light-green spherical robots, with four crab-like legs, walked around, shooting cracked areas of the quartz using cannons. Those cracks repaired their selves in the robots’ sparkling goo, good as new. Vanellope saw a tall, slim being with green skin, and the back of their yellow head was shaped like… from Vanellope’s view, a Dorito.
Four fingers on Peridot’s right hand floated away and formed a square, displaying a midair holographic computer screen. She tapped the screen using her thumb. “Sector 34 of Area ‘LOQAM’ is 95% repaired. Reparation of entire planet is currently 55%. Patience with nagging computer-headed guy: 2%.” She narrowed her eyes. “Personal confusion about this entire mission: 80%. But it’ll all be worth it once I-” She turned around, and spotted Vanellope a few inches away.

The candy-haired girl and the green-skinned robot stared confusedly. They were both peculiar creatures from the other’s eyes. “What the heck are you.” Vanellope said, folding her arms. “I think that question is reserved for me to use.” Peridot remarked.

“Are you some kind of Dorito person?”

“A what?” Peridot cocked a brow. “A Dorito?”

“Yeah, but you’re on top of a Mountain Dew bottle, that’s why you look weird.”

“I am not a Dorito, NOR a ‘Mountain Dew’ bottle!” she said hotly. “I am a Type 10 Maintenance Program specifically designed to repair broken Cybersites, sent here by ‘Master X.A.N.A.’ to fix the broken domains of this quartz planet, using my Flask Robonoids.”

“Be whatever you want, you still look like a Dorito.”

“I AM NOT A DORITO!! Besides, look at yourself, you look like some child’s doll.” Peridot began scanning her with her holographic computer. “Just what are…!” She gasped at the image that appeared. “Wait! You’re the ‘Vanellope’! The one XANA wanted me to—AAAH!”

Vanellope pounced on and began munching Peridot’s head. “Bleck, this is the worst Dorito ever!”

“GET OFF ME!” Peridot threw her off, and her right fingers connected like a windmill around her thumb, which aimed and blasted a laser at Vanel.

“WHOA!” Vanellope jumped back. Peridot pointed her finger forward, sending the Robonoids to chase and shoot their glittery goo at Vanel.

“Do not let it touch, or you will be fixed!” The Zoni chorused, so Vanellope glitched about and dodged their shots. With her lightspeed, she zipped to and kicked the robots away, breaking them. “UWAAAHH!” Vanellope gasped when Peridot shot the Zoni, binding them in green energy rings.

“Not cool, man!” Vanellope spin-glitched and shot at Peridot, kicking her in the chest as she flipped back. Peridot landed on her fingers and scuttled away like an insect, grinning crazily.

“I can’t imagine why XANA would wanna hire someone so annoying.” Vanellope shook her head. (Play “Sinister Shadows” from Kingdom Hearts II.)

Boss fight: Peridot

More Flask Robonoids were sent after Vanellope, she dodged their shots and kicked them senseless, chasing Peridot as the Program floated away in her protective bubble. Vanellope glitched after her, trying to get around the bubble, and when Peridot floated around a quartz mount, Vanellope zipped around the other way and dealt lightspeed kicks against her bubble. “Tough break, Candy Clod! No one breaks through MY shield!” Vanellope continued chasing while observing the bubble, and realizing the five fingers surrounding it, Vanellope glitched to and kicked one of them to the ground. “AAAH!” Peridot panicked when her barrier shattered. The robot flew higher, and the other four fingers aligned in various forms to shoot lasers or energy balls at Vanel.

Vanellope dodge-glitched and kicked another finger into submission, then the other three spun in a triangle alignment and tried to slice the girl in the form of a Frisbee. She glitched midair, downward, the Frisbee-triangle stayed on her tail as Peridot cackled. Vanellope smirked, glitching underneath, glitching just below, then glitching in front of the Program, sparing a sarcastic wave before zooming away. “AAAH- HEY!” Her own Light Disc sawed through and chopped her arm and legs apart. She used her right arm to crawl around and recollect her limbs, but Vanellope kicked the side of her head, upside the chin, then sent her backward with a chest kick.

Peridot growled and shot green energy ropes from her fingers, pulling her limbs back to her and reattaching them. As Vanellope ran at her, Peridot connected the fingers of each hand with energy, spinning them around her body at rapid speed, in the form of whirring green lights. Vanellope glitched around and tried to find an opening, the height of the fingers changed to match Vanel’s altitude. Vanellope zipped up-and-down repeatedly, noting the slightest delay in the fingers, so she glitched up really high, then quickly glitched down to zip underneath and kick Peridot in the face. Peridot bounced on her arm-stubs and back to her feet. When Vanellope ran at her, Peridot jumped, shifted horizontal with her legs clamped together, and her boots aimed at Vanellope before shooting off her legs and stamping the girl’s face.

The rocket boots sent Vanellope several meters backward, but after coming to, she watched the boots fly around a quartz mount. Vanellope zipped to that direction to ambush Peridot, but- “HNN HNN HNN!” a bunch of grinning, flying Peridots surrounded her, but each were a brighter tone and staticky like holograms. They closed in on Vanel, she examined each one closely. “NYAAA!” Vanel immediately zipped leftward when the real Peridot furiously blasted laser-bullets, and the girl was scratched in her back by one. She glared at Peridot, who laughed snarkily and landed back on her feet. She spun both propeller-fingers and cut a circle in the quartz ground around her, using those fingers to lift that chunk of ground and chuck it at Vanellope, who dodged.

Peridot flinched when her earpiece rang loudly. “I SAW THAT, you stupid lime! I repaired you to FIX this world, NOT TEAR IT UP!”

“OKAY, okay! It was just a-”

“YAAAH!” Vanellope zipped up and KICKED Peridot in the face, breaking her visor. Her back hit against the quartz mount, then Vanellope zipped up to stomp a storm of kicks against her body. Vanellope glitched to the side, then shot up for a more forceful kick across her head, knocking Peridot away. “Heh! Who’s a clod now, you Dorito Clod?”

“ENOUGH of this!” Peridot got back up. “You think you’re hot stuff, ‘Vanellope’, but this is just the beginning!” She locked her windmill-fingers at her, charging a laser. Vanellope readied herself to dodge, staying focused. “…Of my ESCAPE!” Her laser died down, she raised her arm upward and flew away like a helicopter.

“HEY!” Vanellope tried to chase, but Peridot was already too high. The Program dropped more seedlings that hatched into Robonoids, which Vanellope proceeded to destroy. She watched with aggravation as Peridot escaped. “You’re really just a coward, aren’t you?”
“You must chase her!” The Zoni had recovered.

“What? Why?”

“You must fix, before she does. Chase her, and stop her.”

“Fine. But I really can’t stand her voice. So whiny and nasally and… blech.” (Play “Dance of Swords” from Steven Universe.)

Stage 46: Land of Quartz and Melody

Mission: Chase Peridot!

Peridot dropped Flask Robonoids in her wake as Vanellope chased her, with the girl either dodging around or kicking them senseless. Peridot turned left around a quartz mount, and Vanellope stopped before nearly running off a cliff over lava. There were midair lava blocks, and Blarggs jumped out of each one, forcing Vanellope to spin-jump across them as they came. Some Blarggs were high and required forceful jumps, some were low or close and required weak jumps, lest she miss the chance to bounce the Blagg. Peridot turned rightward as this route took them between a trench area. When Vanel landed on a safe platform, she immediately had to jump when three Robonoids tried to shoot her together, kicking the robots into the lava afterward. However, seeing the next lava river route, she kept a Robonoid, jumped over the next ledge, and kicked the Robonoid up to hit a switch, which redirected a line path for a platform to come down and catch Vanel.

She kept holding the Robonoid as the platform carried her over the river via its line path. Fuzzies came at her along the line, requiring Vanellope to jump, but when she saw parts of the line were broken, she squeezed the Robonoid to squirt its healing spit, fixing those parts. The line was about to lead into the lava, Vanellope kicked the Robonoid to hit a switch within the wall, redirecting the path straight so the platform could keep moving. Chainsaws started to buzz along the line from ahead and behind, and Vanellope had to spin-jump to become immune to their sharpness, while avoiding floating Munchers and staying over the platform. She landed on the platform just when the line sloped down just over the lava, and Vanel jumped a Blagg with great timing before the platform sloped up. But during so, she kicked the Robonoid to hit a floating switch, allowing the platform to direct up to a safe ground.

Vanellope chased Peridot across a vast quartz field where blue-shoed Koopas kicked shells off from platforms, the shells sliding and bouncing everywhere as Vanellope zipped around and dodged, also having to watch out for platforms with Robonoids. Peridot was flying above a midair obstacle course, but to chase her, Vanellope would need one more Zoni. She braved the onslaught of shells and found a “Zoni.” on a platform, and with it, Vanellope performed four glitchwarps up to the course’s start. She had to glitch her way up a vertical shaft of Munchers, and more Koopas kicked blue shells out from their enclosings. Vanellope had to maneuver her warps to bounce on the shells, bouncing each following one with great precision, until she could glitch through a zigzag route onto a tiny safe block within the Munchers.

A Baseball Chuck was chucking, well, baseballs at Vanellope from his safe spot. Vanellope had to wait for an opening between the balls, then she glitched through the tight zigzag Muncher path to grab a Power Star. She sparkled with invincibility, quickly jumped up the Muncher stairs, then ran across a long Muncher path while jumping Muncher pillars. “Seriously, where does XANA find so many of these things?” Her star was about to wear off, so she used four glitchwarps across the rest of the Munchers to land on the solid quartz ground. She chased Peridot into a maze of stacks of music blocks. “Give up, Candy Clod, you can’t chase me forever!” Peridot hovered in place above, since Vanellope could bounce on the music blocks, she attempted to fly up and grab the Program’s legs, but the hologram dispersed.

Vanellope glitched up into a tunnel of music blocks, and by this time was getting annoyed by their sounds every time she bounced. Flask Robonoids were also bouncing around, constantly flipping as they shot their healing goo. Vanellope had to stay clear of the goop spots, needing to glitchwarp to bare areas with good precision on her way through the tunnel. She made it to an outside area, miles over the ground, with a great view of the violet rainbow sky. The music blocks were very far apart, it took more precise glitching to land on the tiny bounce pads, while XANA Hornets tried to shoot her from the sides. Vanellope glitchwarped across a larger gap, but didn’t make it to the cliff—thankfully, a Bullet Bill popped out of nowhere, bounced her upward, and she made it. She chased the Mountain Dew-colored Program across another quartz valley. (End song.)

Peridot landed on the ground and retreated behind a mount, leaning against it to catch her breath. “I expected the ‘Vanellope’ to be some kind of virus, but this brat’s beyond annoying. And those little things that float with her… What kind of Cybersite-?” Vanellope glomped her left leg. “WHAT?!” Get the heck off me, you stupid-!” She shook her leg and punched the child’s head.

“No!” Vanel withstood the punches. “I wanna know why you’re working for XANA. You don’t look like one of his robots, so…”

“That’s none of your business, you pesky glitch! Now get your snotty doll-hands off me!” Peridot aimed her finger laser and blasted, but Vanellope dodged back in time. She spun her helicopter and balled up, taking flight into the violet sky. “Next time you mess with my job, I’ll tear up your pixels worse than numerous resizes on Photoshop. Good-bye, Candy Clod!”

Vanellope watched as the green dot shrunk into the violet sky. “First I’m going after green spirits, now green Teenage Robots. What am I even doing again?”

“You must follow!” the Zoni stated. “Her fixing must be yours!”

Okay, but for the record, I don’t get many chapters in this story, and I don’t wanna spend them chasing some weirdo. I mean, how can XANA even stand a girl like her? She sounds like her nose is congested, and all her gloating gives me a headache, using cheap tricks to fight me, and making fun of my hair, XANA has the worst taste in…” The Zoni stared at Vanellope in disbelief as she drew on. …She later caught up to her words, reflecting on herself. “Wow, I just hurt my own feelings. …So, uh, where’s she going?”

After Peridot left that Cybersite’s atmosphere, she flew into a dark ship. She caught her breath once more, bending over as she planted her hands against her yellow kneecaps. “Well, that was slapdash, C+ work if anything.” XANA told her reprovingly. “I didn’t expect you to beat Vanellope, but was that the best you had to offer?”

“For your information, I almost had her before you decided to go RINGING in my ear!” Peridot argued.

“And I went ringing in your ear because you broke part of the SITE!”

“WHAT THE HECK’S WRONG with this place, anyway?! The cracks in the ground are one thing, but there’s junk all over the place! What’d you do to this world?”

“Lesser Lord Ragaj ordered me to fix this dump of a Cyberspace, but my means of doing so are quote-on-quote ‘sloppy’, and he needs this place fixed. You see, Peridot, this isn’t any average Cyberspace: this entire dimension exists within the mainframe of the Great Clock’s computer, the source of all time in the universe. Everything in this world is recorded memory of what exists of the First Dimension. But based on Lord Gnik’s information, this space is also connected with that First Dimension, that’s why he wants it fixed! And I hereby order you to fulfill your duty!”

“I WILL fulfill it, you square-headed dork! As long as you keep YOUR end of the deal! I fix this space for you, and YOU take me to see Yellow Diamond! You said you knew where she was!”

“Patience, girl. You’ll get to see your Diamond again. As long as you cooperate, you have Master X.A.N.A.’s word.”

“Sigh… Okay.” Peridot sighed calmly, internally believing he would keep true to his word.

“Now then… despite your performance with Vanellope, your repair skills are exceptional thus far. It’s time for your next test.” XANA opened a compartment in the wall, rifling through junk. “One of my cohorts brought this to me. It happens to be the leader of those Zoni creatures you saw fluttering around Vanellope. He’s suffered some damages, so I need you to mend him to our control. Now… get to work!” He threw Clank’s unmoving body on the floor.

Peri the Dotypus comes from Steven Universe if you don’t know. ;P And Shade the Echidna is from Sonic Chronicles, after all this time, you finally know who she is. ;P Sorry about the short stages, though. Chapter 36: Assimilation and Infiltration

Sector L’s boat; en route to Japan

If there’s one thing you had to love about KND ships, it’s that they were efficiently fast, especially when powered by waterbenders. Team Emily, Sector L, and the Sidneys made it to Japan by 11:00 in the morning. …The sail was hell.

“B-O-A-T R-I-D-E S-O-N-G Song!” Spongebob was hurriedly playing a small guitar while Jessie and Sandy sang along. They repeated this verse over and over, faster and faster. …Everyone else had their ears clamped shut. “But it would help iiiiif you just siiiing aloooong!”

“That statement is contradictory because our lungs would hurt along with our ears!” Emily yelled.

“Actually, it’s statistically impossible to hurt one’s ears with one’s own voice, not to mention our soundwaves regulate the soundwaves coming toward us, I’m just not a singer!” Sheldon explained quickly.

“You forgot to mention how sound travels faster through liquid, and by liquid, I mean Logia waterbenders,” Eva said quickly, “so with that in mind, SHUT THEM UP!!”

Gary and Sarah shoved their Stun Clubs into Spongebob’s mouth. “Ther’ we go.” Sarah said. “As soon as we get to Japan, y’all are hopping train to this ‘Boggly Grove’ and gettin’ out of our hair.”

“While we have a moment of peace, why the heck hasn’t Spongebob suffocated by now?” Gary questioned.

“Bai-ai-ai! You silly!” Spongebob beamed. “Moisture floats in the air around us, so I don’t need to be in water to breathe!”

“Dude, these H2O particles are too small for even a normal sponge to absorb on its own.” Emily pointed out.

“Emily, since we’re going to Japan, I thought it would be wise for us to brush up on the language,” Sheldon spoke thoughtfully, reading a Japanese Language book. “There’s only so much manga and anime could teach us, so let’s practice. Ahem: Aisatsu, faro. Anita wa sago no your atarshi episoto kotaga walkinmart taka?”

“We just waged war against Japan, didn’t we?” Danny asked.
“I hope not, ‘cause we’re almost to the island.” Melody replied as they spotted the incoming shore. She and her mother were waving their arms, using waterbending to make the waves push the boat. “Where is Sector JP, again?”

“Shikoku Island, Karakura Town, located at least 537 miles after the shoreline.” Emily informed.

“Sigh, ‘guess we’re gonna have to walk.” Danny sighed miserably.

“No we won’t!” Spongebob spoke brightly. “I can drive us there easy!” The young sponge went for the vessel’s steering wheel.

Melody perked in fright, just realizing. “Wait, Spongebob, DON’T-!”

“FLOOR IT!!” Spongebob stomped the gas pedal (apparently boats have that), and the ship made a screeching sound like tire wheels as it boosted across the water, toward the shore. The passengers screamed and held on for their lives as the boat flew up the coast like a ramp, scraping along the ground as it raced across the landscape.

“TURN LEFT!” Eva screamed, unable to keep her watery skin on. “NO, YOUR OTHER LEFT! WATCH OUT FOR THAT BABY! THROUGH THE RING OF FIRE! DO A U-TURN! WAAAAAAAHH!”

Several houses and several townspeople were blown away, they were looking to millions of dollars (or yen) in property damage. “Dr. Cooper,” Emily cried, “I know that tiring long walks are the illogical fallacy when crossing a country, in this case I think we should make an exception!”

“I AGREE!” Sheldon screamed.

So with that, the four members of Team Emily let go and flew off, bumping against a dirt road. As Emily recomposed herself, fixing her glasses, she noticed the sign by the road. She used her glasses to scan the Japanese letters, translating them. Karakura Town: 1 minute away by train. “Holy eggroll! We made it!”

“Dern right we did.” Sarah said as she took out her R.A.D.A.R., which was beeping crazily. “There’s monkeys all over the place.”

“Considering this is Japan, I expect we’ll be seeing a share of anime parodies.” Gary assumed.

“In that case, we should count on the monkeys to be super slow. Huhu!” Emily laughed. “You think Melody and the others are okay?”

“Assuming they haven’t puffed up and exploded.” Sarah remarked. “Besides, we can look for ‘em after we go to Sector JP. I don’t wanna imagine the cruddy dubs these apes try to make.” (Play “Wabi Sabi Wall” from Ape Escape)

Stage 47: Animonkey Tour

Mission: Catch 20 monkeys and get to Sector JP!

At a nearby train station, two monkeys were playing cards on a table. One was dressed like Yugi Muto, the other like Jaden Yuki (from their respective Yu-Gi-Oh series). Sarah shot Yugi with her slingshot, then Jaden reacted by chucking his cards like shurikens, scratching the Jones siblings in the sides as they winced, while Sheldon nimbly dodged with Observation Haki. Yugi recovered as they both threw card shurikens, with neither the Jones’ or Emily able to get close. “Okay, Mr. Haki, make yourself useful!” Emily tossed Sheldon her T.E.L.A.-N.E.T.. The lanky scientist complied and dodged his way to the Pipo Yugi, swinging the net to catch the ape. During Jaden’s distraction, Sarah and Gary pelted him with pellets, allowing Sheldon to catch.

“You know, if Nintendo had licensed Ape Escape on their consoles, this would make an astounding Wii-motion game!” Sheldon commented as he returned Emily’s net.

“Let’s get to town!” Emily said before they boarded the vessel and whipped across the grasslands.

In less than a minute, the train dropped them off at a station in town. The four (or at least the main three, Sheldon stayed behind) hurried to a city street where a monkey dressed like Ash was having a Pokémon battle with a monkey dressed like Brock. They were using real Pokémon; Ash a Piplup and Brock Geodude. After they saw Team Emily, however, Geodude defended the apes by punching the kids back if they got close, and Piplup assisted him using Water Beam. Their exploding pellets couldn’t harm the Geodude, so they let the Pipos be for now. Gary picked up a 4x4 piece in an alley on their right, then they ventured down a slope leading onto the pier of a canal. Water spouts squirted up all around the area, and surfing along them was a monkey dressed like Sun Seto from My Bride Is a Mermaid. When Emily dove in the nearest spout, using the Water Net to swim, the ring of spouts either rose high or sunk low going counterclockwise, and Emily had to swim along them as the Pipo tried to outrun her. She had to maneuver up as a spout rose, or down when it sunk, so she would keep her speed and allow her to catch the mermaid monkey.

She swam back to her friends as they returned to the street, following it to the front yard of a high school. They entered the white building and encountered Nefarious Drones (not that they knew who Nefarious was), who extracted their buzzsaws and lashed them at the four. “AAAH!” Sheldon panicked, narrowly dodging their extended arms. He cowered behind Emily, “I should’ve warned you, while my moral support is absolute, in a physical confrontation, I will be less than useless.”

“Choke it up, Shelly.” Emily and co. blasted the drones using exploding pellets, then ran against them with Super Hoops. They saw a team of Protomantises marching up from down the hall, so with little desire to fight the robots, the team retreated into the girls’ bathroom. “Wait, we shouldn’t go in here!” Emily realized. “The spirit of Hanako might be haunting one of the toilets!”

“Please,” Sheldon remarked smartly, “that legend’s as believable as Moaning Myrtle having lunch at Arby’s.”

“Hehehe!” came a little girl’s giggle.

“What was that?” Sheldon whipped around. Curious, Gary approached the farthest bathroom stall and knocked three times. The stall nearest the entrance swung open on its own, so all four stepped in, both nervous and cautious. Emily flushed the toilet, then the stall on the far end exploded open. “Hehehe!” A little girl ghost with black hair and a red dress flew out. She wore a bright smile and slowly drifted toward the group. “Good Lord, someone left their hologram projector in here.” Sheldon said.
“You think there’s something in the stall?” Gary questioned.

“I ain’t tangoin’ with that ghost!” Sarah yelled.

Emily sidestepped left-and-right, but Hanako stayed aligned with her. “Sheldon, let’s play Don’t Touch the Hologram.” Emily said, pushing him forward. “You first.”

Rolling his eyes, Sheldon played along, stepping left-and-right as he waited for an opening. “Huu-uu!” He gasped when Hanako zipped forward suddenly, dodging around the spirit, he ran to her stall, dodged again when she zipped to him, then Sheldon rushed into the stall. “There’s a bus pass in the toilet—honestly, why do Japanese high schoolers care for their belongings so poorly?”

“Get the pass, Sheldon!” Emily yelled, seeing Hanako float into the stall. With repulse, Sheldon reached into the toilet to pick it up. When Hanako reached him, she whiffed and put on a disgusted look.

“You smell awful!” With that, the ghost faded away. When the group left the bathroom, the Protomantises were still guarding the hallway, so they ran into a classroom opposite. Each desk had a cardboard Pipo Monkey with a real blaring helmet. ‘Course, anyone who knew their anime knew the only real monkey was sitting in the back, gazing reflectively out a window. Sarah got down and crawled in-between the desks to sneak up and net the monkey dressed like Kiyo from Zatch Bell. With that, the team left the school and continued further across the road, arriving at a restaurant called Ichiraku Ramen. They peeped inside and saw two monkeys, sitting across from each other at a table and staring intently. They were dressed like Monkey D. Luffy and Naruto Uzumaki.

Before attempting to net the apes, Emily crawled around the tables to a camera that was aimed at them. She pressed the switch to record the staring monkeys. Five episodes later. The caption read. With that, Sarah rushed up to net the Luffy monkey, while Naruto leaped away with ninja agility and threw shurikens. Gary tossed Sheldon his net as the adult dodged the stars, attempting to swing at Naruto while the monkey was perched on the wall, but the Shadow Clone puffed into smoke. Sheldon evasively dodged the Naruto that appeared behind him, swung the net, but that Shadow Clone poofed. When a Naruto dropped down from the ceiling, Sheldon swung upward and successfully netted the ape.

The heroes left the restaurant and turned another corner of the street to find a bus stop. Sheldon held up the toilet water-covered pass to the sign, and as if it were programmed, a bus swooped by, its destination set for Bath Springs. The speedy vehicle drove them out of town in seconds, to a mountainous area where the sloping path led to a bathhouse. They walked up a slope and arrived at a tall ledge where they could Sky Fly. But before doing so, the R.A.D.A.R. detected a monkey around the right side: the ape was clutching the cliff with fear in her eyes, and was dressed like Aoi from Encouragement of Climb. “I ain’t even heard of some of these anime.” Sarah mentioned as she leapt to net the monkey, then Sky Fly back onto their foothold. With that, they flew up onto the ledge (throwing one of their Sky Flyers down for Sheldon to come up), and trekked up a hill with lots of bushes on the sides.

A tiny spidermonkey dressed like Doraemon was running back-and-forth between bushes, but like the spidermonkeys back in Nashville, the ape could dodge between the strings of their nets if they tried to catch it. They let the tiny cat be and headed to an old wooden shack atop this hill. The tavern was empty, except for two apes, one dressed like Spike from Cowboy Bebop, and the other like Dandy from Space Dandy. The two were running around the bar blasting guns at each other, but when they noticed the kids, the gunfire was directed at them. Both teams took cover behind the tables, and Sarah passed Sheldon her T.E.L.A.-N.E.T.. The lanky scientist dodged the guns and maneuvered toward the Spike ape, while Emily used the Super Hoop to dash around the tables and capture Dandy.

They found a 4x4 piece from the shelf behind the counter, then left the bar to follow the next route up the hill. A tank was stationed at the end of this hill, shooting cannonballs to random areas of the path every half-second. When Sarah rushed on the path with her Super Hoop, the cannon was desperately trying to shoot her, Sarah kept an eye on the bombshells’ positions and dodged them going forward. She made it to the tank and climbed up to its cockpit to break the monkey’s protective glass. The ape was dressed like Lutgalnikov from Miritari, but that didn’t stop Sarah from catching her. When her friends caught up, the four finally entered the bathhouse. The wooden wall was sealed, blocking any means of peeping, except for the tiny opening on the bottom. The sign read ‘Fanservice Hour.’ “Didn’t we just do a ‘Fanservice’ chapter?” Gary asked.

“I believe that particular Fanservice was a play on words based around the name and primary desires of a certain person,” Sheldon explained, “while actual fanservice is a means of a fictional series ‘serving’ its fans by some deluded means, i.e. half-naked animated females.”

Inside a pot in the corner, Emily discovered another small 4x4 piece. “I know just what to make with this!” She combined the four tiny pieces and created a red toy car with remote control.

Kids Next Door: C.A.M.-C.A.R.

Camera Active Machinery Can Accomplish Reconnaissance

“I also built a tiny net inside for catching spidermonkeys!” Emily spoke brightly. “For you, Dr. Cooper. Because you’re old enough.”

“Oh, please.” Sheldon took the remote. “I enjoy the occasional anime now and again, but not for such pointless filler.” He drove the car through the opening, and the remote’s monitor depicted the scene inside the hot spring. A monkey dressed like Lucy from Fairy Tail was washing a monkey dressed like Orihime from Bleach. There were lilipads floating in the water, so Sheldon carefully drove the car across. He made it to a central platform with a button, which the car could press and open the wooden fence for the team to get in.

But at the same time, a door that was atop a group of short mounts came open, and another monkey stepped out. She was dressed like Sailor Moon, posing her sexy body, and the Orihime and Lucy monkeys gaped. They felt ashamed of their selves. Sarah and Emily rolled their eyes before netting the two monkeys, and when Gary tried shooting Sailor Moon with the slingshot, the ape was nimble as she jumped down the mounts and around the spring. The three kids ran to separate areas with their Super Hoops in attempt to corner the monkey, until Gary was able to catch her at her jumping spot. Before moving on, the group returned to the hill area with the bushes, with Sheldon controlling the C.A.M.-C.A.R. to chase the Doraemon monkey. He pushed a button to catch the tiny ape in the car’s net, warping him.

They also decided to board the bus back to town, to the spot where the Ash and Brock monkeys were still battling. The kids hid as Sheldon sent the C.A.M.-C.A.R. to draw Geodude’s attention, the Rock-type chasing the tiny car. Sarah and Gary shot pellets at Piplup (that’s mean) so Emily could run out and net Ash. Brock tried to run away, but the toy car came back to ram and knock him down, scoring another catch for Emily. With that, they returned to the bathhouse and climbed the mounts to exit the door Sailor Moon came out of. They viewed a hill that led all the way up to a treehouse growing from a tower. “I thought Sector JP was supposed to be a stealth-based sector.” Sarah pointed out.

Partway up the hill, they came to a flat field where a red curtain was hanging over a stage, likely built there by the apes. Spotlights came on, and the curtains opened to reveal the three Steven Universe monkeys. A Pipo dressed like Pearl made a graceful pose, and an unseen audience applauded her. A taller monkey dressed like Garnet flexed his/her fists, and there was more applause. A monkey dressed like Amethyst swayed her hip… a cricket was chirping somewhere. Angered, the monkey fingered all SU fans. The Pearl monkey majestically skipped around the field as Sarah chased, but the Amethyst monkey kept a safe distance and whipped the kids off their feet. The Garnet monkey leapt forth and tried to crush Emily with its fists, but she rolled away just in time.

Emily began beating Garnet with her Stun Club, but was punched in the face and knocked several feet. While Sarah was dodging Amethyst’s whips, Sheldon controlled the C.A.M.-C.A.R. to get behind the monkey and ram her feet, knocking her over as Sarah ran over to capture. Gary was able to chase Pearl with no disruptions, and after ramming her with the Super Hoop a few times, he caught her. Emily dealt a few hits against Garnet at a time, dodging her fists afterward, until finally the robotic body was ready to explode. She broke into Ruby and Sapphire monkeys (spoiler alert), and before they fused again, Emily caught Sapphire. Ruby burned with rage and punched Emily in the back, then dodged Gary’s Stun Club. Sarah ambushed and whacked the monkey, and before he could retaliate, Emily netted Ruby. (End song.)

With nothing else to disrupt them, the kids and adult hurried up to Sector JP’s treehouse. A swarm of Nefarious Drones was steadily approaching the tower, but Team Emily gaped when a storm of colorful fireworks rained down upon and exploded on the robots, covering them with sticky confetti. “Now’s your chance, Ururu!” a girl’s voice called from the treehouse.

“O-Okay, Kodama.” A girl wearing a red jumpsuit with a “K” on it, along with bat wings and a devil’s tail, flew overhead and rapidly blasted the robots with guns. She was Numbuh Centipounds, Ururu Tsumugiya, who had black pigtails sticking out of her red helmet, and bluish-purple eyes behind her green visor.

“HEY! Are you with Sector JP?” Emily yelled up at her.

“Oh?” Ururu looked their direction from midair. “Who are you guys?”

Sheldon ducked the swing with his Haki, and the boy flew over and crashed against a tree. “Jinta-kun, wait!” Ururu yelled with her soft voice. “I-I think they came to help us.”

“Yes!” Emily replied with a sure and serious look. “We’re on a mission to recover all the monkeys that escaped from my grandpa’s lab! As well as, various other places in the world. Are one of you guys the leader?”

“No, Karin’s fighting some monkeys in the soccer field out back.” Jinta pointed. “We still gotta take care of some monkeys in the treehouse, so can you guys help her?”

“Excuse me, but I believe you meant to say she’s in the football field—honestly, you’re Japanese, you should know this.” Sheldon said reprovingly.

“Sure, we’ll help your leader.” Emily nodded. “Come on, guys!”

A girl with short, raven-black hair and dark-gray eyes was hunched over and panting on the soccer field. She wore a white shirt under a black sleeveless shirt with a yellow kitten face, blackish-blue shorts, and white gym shoes. She glared at a tall, blue monkey with a white T-shirt and a blaring-red Pipo Helmet, who stood with several lesser Pipos behind him. “The art of soccer isn’t your everyday ‘Kick the can down the sidewalk.’” Blue Monkey stated, holding the metal soccerball under his arm. “It needs precision and durability! But you’re a thousand years too early to be taking me!”

The girl, Numbuh Twelve Points To Zero (12-0), Karin Kurosaki, huffed and stood up straight. “The art of soccer also needs LEGWORK, dumbass. And when I say ‘legwork,’ ROBO legs don’t cut it!”

“The art of soccer requires a keen mind!” Blue Monkey was wearing sturdy mechanical legs, as were his teammates. “And a keen mind uses the best strategy! Against our speed and strength, you twerps fall short!”

Karin readied herself with a firm stance, “I’ll show YOU who falls short!”

“Numbuh 12-0, wait!” Karin looked right when Emily ran over—the nerd tripped and fell on her front.

“Who’re you?” Karin questioned.

Emily jumped up and saluted, “Numbuh 303 from the KND Museum of Artifacts, best scientist in the organization! You can take a breather now, ‘cause our team can handle this.”

“No thanks.” Karin stated simply, walking forward with an unphased stare at the monkey. “I’m in the middle of teaching this guy a lesson.”

“Hehehe.” Emily blushed. “Be that as it may, their technology has advantage over your natural strength alone. I strongly advise you allow us to assist you.” She held up her Stun Club and Slingshot.

“This game just started, so I’m not throwing in the towel, yet.” Karin replied firmly. She held her right leg up and rubbed under the knee, “You probably didn’t notice ‘cause you stayed away from that area, but I won 200 soccer matches during Arctic Training. I developed something called ‘Inhumanly Strongism.’ So if I could beat that many twerps, I think I’ll be alright here.”

“It may be safe to say you are incredibly talented, but judging by the solidity of that steel ball, plus the relative speed it would accumulate due to the momentum of robotic leg kicks, the chances of you winning this match without aid are-“

Karin grabbed Emily by the hair, threw her up in the air, and—“AAAAAAHHHHH!” sent her flying to the treehouse with a kick. “Twelve to Zero.” Karin concluded.

“OW!” Jinta screamed from the treehouse—Emily had crashed into him when she flew. “YOU DID THAT ON PURPOSE, Karin!”

“BUZZ OFF, Jinta!” Karin yelled. She narrowed her eyes on Blue Monkey again.

“Twelve To Zero, eh?” Blue Monkey raised a brow. “I think it’s a game then.” One of his Pipos pressed a remote, encasing the soccer field inside an electric barrier. “The shield only goes down when 12 gets the crown. The team that loses gets buried 6 feet underground. After the barrier’s energy transmits to and shocks them to death. Already we outnumber you 9 monkeys to one. You’ve signed a death contract when you took that codename, Numbuh 12-0. And I’ll be your Reaper.” (Play “Monkey Soccer” from Ape Escape 2!)
Blue Monkey served first and kicked the metal ball at Karin, who swung her leg powerfully and rocketed the ball toward the enemies’ net. It flew past Blue Monkey, but a Pipo kicked it to one on Karin’s right, he kicked it to another close to her left, he sent the ball at Karin’s face, she flipped, kicked the ball away, but another Pipo kicked it into Karin’s net. When the Score 1 was marked on their board, energy from the barrier came down and dealt a shock to the Sector Leader. “Nnnnnn!”

“HA ha ha!” Blue Monkey laughed. “Each scorer gives a free shock to the enemy! That should slow you down.”

Karin gritted her teeth in anger, standing straight up as that same Pipo Monkey kicked first. Another Pipo kicked it from Karin’s right just when she was about to, she watched a Pipo kick it to a far right one, then a left one, to Blue, who kicked to Karin’s net, the girl jumping in the way to block, but it collided with her chest and shoved her into the net as well. She screamed as she endured the shock. “Nobody blocks this ball!” The next round started, Blue Monkey kicked the ball to a Pipo, he kicked at Karin, who flew her leg upward and sent the ball to the air (the metal sphere went through the barrier). It came down, Karin jumped, spun, and sent the ball rocketing over the monkeys to their net. Energy from the shield came down to zap them all. “Good thing I know how to kick them.” Karin remarked.

After the ball was handed back to her, Karin threw it in the air, then jumped and flipped upside-down as she kicked it forcefully, bouncing off Blue Monkey’s face, about to fly over their goal, then a Pipo leaped up and kicked it to her, but Karin smirked as she kicked it toward a Pipo near the left, bounced it off his face, and into their goal. The score was even 2-to-2, and Karin was ready for more after taking the ball and kicking it to a Pipo on the right. The ape kicked it to one in the air, who sent it to Karin’s goal, while said girl kicked it skyward before sending it to Blue Monkey. He kicked it back to her, she kicked it back, he kicked it back, she kicked it, a Pipo kicked it to Karin’s right, then she sent it into their goal. Blue Monkey angrily bonked that Pipo’s head, but as he wasn’t paying attention, he panicked and ducked when Karin kicked the soccerball right over him, into the goal. “You apes would have better luck kicking a barrel of bananas.”

“Or perhaps we’ll have better luck kicking YOU. Rudy, Ginger, Max, Ophelia, get her!” Four of the Pipo Monkeys screeched and leapt to Karin, the girl reacting quick as she dodged their robo-leg kicks and knocked them away. The ball was still on the ground at her side, so another Pipo Monkey rushed to send it in her goal. Karin was dealt a shock, then the Pipos kicked her upside the face, bumping her against the goal’s pole while Blue Monkey had the honor of getting another score. After enduring another shock, Karin furiously tried to kick the monkeys away, but when the ball flew to her goal, she jumped in attempt to bonk it with her head, but the metal object knocked her into the goal again, giving her a bloody nose and a black eye. “The score is 5-to-4 now.” Blue Monkey smirked, tossing the ball up and down in his hand.

She took a few seconds to recompose herself, listening to the excited screeches and “UKKIIIS!” of the monkeys. “GrrrrRRRRR!” Anger fueled the girl’s form, she channeled it all into her foot as she kicked the ball, rocketing into Blue Monkey’s face and sending him flying back into his goal. Still enraged, Karin wiped the blood off her face and sloshed it into a Pipo’s eyes. The four enemy monkeys ran at her to attack, but Karin nimbly turned and jabbed her right foot to each one, sending them against the barrier. Another Pipo came to kick the ball, Karin planted her hands on the ground, bent her legs toward the monkey, caught him between, then pushed herself to the air as she spun and hurled him to Blue Monkey. With her momentum still going, she kicked the ball during her descent to the ground, and it flew into the enemy’s goal. “6-to-5, buddy! You gonna cry yet, or have I not BEAT you enough?”

“I think it’s time we start gettin’ DIRTY!” Blue Monkey served the ball himself, Karin kicked it straight in the air, kicked it a few feet forward and higher when it came down, then she jumped, planted her feet against the goal’s top pole, then kicked off it to swing a momentous kick into the enemy goal. The monkeys grew angry after the shock, Karin kept sharp eyes on them as they subtly kicked it around the ground. A Pipo leaped at her from behind, she kicked her foot up behind her to knock him away, then the metal ball flew at her, she ducked in panic as it hit her goal, making the score 7-6. They got first serve, Karin kicked the ball to the far left corner, a Pipo kicked it to the far right, Karin ran and dodged the pursuing angry Pipos, then the ball flew into her goal. Karin kicked the angry Pipos away, and when the ball flew to her goal again, she jumped to kick it leftward, bouncing against one of the enemy Pipos, back to her before she sent it at Blue Monkey, bouncing off him to the left, then a Pipo panickingly kicked it into their own goal. 8-7.

“Frap this!” Blue Monkey cursed. At his command, several outside monkeys threw more metal balls into the barrier, making a total of five.

“WHAT?! You can’t be serious!” Karin exclaimed. “Only one ball can be on the field!”

The 9 monkeys kicked the giant ball together, and Karin’s eyes grew wide as it rolled closer. She had to get out of the way, but if it passed her goal, it was over anyway. If she was gonna go down today, she wouldn’t go down a coward. Karin jumped to her goal, grabbed the top bar, and kicked both legs outward when the ball came as they made contact. “Hnnnnnnuuuuuu!” Her legs were bent as the ball began to squish her. The monkeys were still pushing the ball from their side, Karin felt her internal pressure decreasing. It was amazing she was keeping it back for so long with her own strength. …It was because she couldn’t let this ball pass, for many reasons: she was leader of Sector JP, she had to protect her treehouse, she had to protect her title as KND’s greatest soccer star, and she had to become the soccer champion of the world. Never in all her years would she let a pack of apes, and their oversized metal ball, crush her mighty legs like sticks.

With every last ounce of strength, Karin stretched her legs straight and pushed the ball. “UKKIII!” The apes panicked as she heard several of them crushed, their robot legs breaking to pieces. “WAAAAAH!” Blue Monkey shared this fate, his goal was crushed, and Karin watched with utmost satisfaction as the barrier’s being was channeled to each of their bodies. “AAAAAAAAAHBBBBBBBBB!”

Blue Monkey and his Pipos were covered with soot. Since each of them took a share of electricity, none of them were dead; that’s not to say they weren’t in a lot of pain. Karin stared at them with her smug glare, casually kicking the normal metal ball up and down. Sarah and Gary approached her with nets ready. “Mind if we clean up?” Gary asked.

“Be my guest.” So with that, the Jones siblings ran around and netted each monkey. Sarah saved Blue Monkey for last, and the commander vanished into light within her net. (End song.)

“Ahhhh.” Sarah sighed with relief, stuffing her net in her Infi-Cube. “It feels nice when Emily doesn’t get the glory in a boss fight. Say, you wanna join our monkey-fightin’ squad?” she asked Karin.
“Hmm. I’ll think about it.” she shrugged. After all, she did get all the high scores in the Ape Escape games.

They all returned to Sector JP’s treehouse, having successfully captured the monkeys running rampant. They had time to get acquainted with the JP members, including Numbuh Chinese New Year, Kodama. Her attire greatly stood out among her teammates, a blue robe with yellow spiked explosion designs, purplish-red eyeliner, a light-red knotted headband, and wooden sandals.

Karin was sat with her legs spread across the couch while her twin sister, Yuzu placed a warm towel over her legs. Yuzu (Numbuh 5 Degrees) had yellowish-brown hair, brown eyes, and wore a yellow shirt with a white apron. “Karin, you should’ve let them handle it.” Yuzu spoke scoldingly. “You know better than to sprain your legs kicking a metal ball. Let alone one that’s five times your size.”

“I didn’t sprain them, they just got a little stiff. Besides, I still kicked his butt.” Karin smirked proudly and flexed an arm, “I’m the soccer champion of the world.”

“Before this escalates, I can’t let this illogicality go on any longer,” Sheldon spoke up, “just because you speak English, why are you classifying the sport as ‘soccer’ and not ‘football’?”

“I don’t know, it USED to be called ‘football,’ but they changed it to soccer five years ago.” Karin stated. “My dad says it’s ‘cause America took over.”

“Oh dear, of course.” Sheldon smacked his forehead. “How could I not remember? For the past 12 years, America’s been assimilating other countries one after another. Part of some ‘New World Order’ type of malarkey.”

“Yeah, and it totally STINKS, too.” Jinta replied hotly. “All of our anime are crappy dubs, our riceballs have jelly and custard in them, AND WHAT THE HECK ARE THESE FORKS?!” He angrily held up the silver utensil. “I grew up on chopsticks, dang it!”

“It isn’t so bad.” Ururu smiled. Without her Tiny Devil jumpsuit, she wore a white shirt with a pink flower skirt and sandals. She had blush marks on her cute face. “You could look at it as a way of being multi-cultural. I think these Fritos are really delicious!”

“SAVE HER, SHE’S BEING BRAINWASHED!” Jinta grabbed her around the neck and twisted his knuckles against her head.

“Ow! St-Stop it, Jinta- ow!”

“Personally, I don’t care what they call it. I just wanna kick SOME kind of ball around and be good at it.” Karin replied, kicking her soccerball upward a few times.

“On the bright side, I get to experiment with America-brand fireworks.” Kodama mentioned with a smile. “It’s been helping my arsenal a ton!”

“Who wants some American chocolate chip cookiiieees?” Yuzu sang as she brought a tray of the steaming pastries.

“NOOOOO! STOP THE ASSIMILATION!” Jinta raised his giant baseball bat and smashed the tray to the floor, much to Yuzu’s horror.

“They kinda teach us all this in Social Studies.” Emily replied. “And all of this assimilation was thanks to James McGarfield. Currently the 46th President of the U.S., and by extension, all of its assimilated nations.”
“Course, before that, the 45th president, Kevin James ran them.” Gary followed. “Still can’t believe it though, comedian to president in a few short years. ‘Guess that’s the American dream.”

“You guys know why they’re assimilating everyone, right?” Jinta asked with a scowl. “The World Government wants ‘em to it. Because, in reality, they’re THE ILLUMINATI!” With gusto, the red-haired boy whipped out an American dollar, pointing out the pyramid with an eye on it. “They won’t stop until everyone is bowing to the New World Order! And do you know what they’ll do after that?! They’ll trap all our souls inside a Magic 8 Ball while a giant skeleton demon plays with us like dolls, turning us into poorly-drawn characters using MS Paint, as we live the rest of Time’s existence completely unaware-!!”

Karin punched the boy in the head, frowning angrily. “You and your crazy conspiracy theories. Sigh, this entire thing is getting completely off track. You were supposed to tell us about these monkeys, not a basic recent-history lesson.”

“My, but who says the two subjects can’t be one in the same?” a nasally voice echoed from outside.

They all gasped and rushed to a rooftop balcony. A fleet of Pipo Monkey ships (designed like giant robot monkey heads) surrounded the treehouse, led by a white ape on a floating chair. “Specter!” Emily recognized him.

“Ahh, Dr. Cooper.” Specter smiled handsomely at the aforementioned, his voice still nasally due to his missing modifier. “That was quite a nifty move you pulled back in Texas. I wasn’t happy to hear the news. Perhaps you don’t want your dear Amy safe after all.”

“You might be able to use threats in attempt to coax me to comply with your desires, but that only accentuates how much you need my intellect in order to proceed.” Sheldon folded his arms in a sure fashion. “Should any fate befall Amy, you will have no means of convincing me, and taking her feeble skin and physical strength into account, any means of torture are risky in that sense, ergo it seems you’re at a loss.”

“Hm hm hm, dear boy.” Specter chuckled snootily. “Your technology would be convenient for us, but we could manage without you. It should suffice you to know we had our own reasons for kidnapping Amy. I wouldn’t mind doing away with you right now, but I do not wish to harm this treehouse. I’m looking to turn this base into my own anime broadcast station. I expected Blue Monkey to get defeated, which is why I was waiting in the wings. Once we get to broadcasting our anime, we’ll be able to brainwash millions! I’m sure your minds must be tired from all that thinking.”

“Oh, you just WAIT for the right moment and-” Jinta retorted.

“Why are you wasting time with this brainwashing crud?” Emily questioned. “You know the Apocalypse is coming, right?”

“All the more to make the best of things.” Specter shrugged. “So with that in mind, I really don’t want to get in a fight. Perhaps this should lighten the mood. LUXURY BEEEEAM!” He pushed a button.

“DON’T LOOK!” Karin and Sheldon exclaimed—everybody whipped the opposite direction and shut their eyes. The monkey ships opened to reveal green-and-orange hypno wheels. Yuzu didn’t react in time, so the yellow-haired Kurosaki twin was brainwashed. “Ugh, dammit, Yuzu.” Still keeping her back toward the wheel, Karin grabbed her sister in her arms and carried her, running with the others. “Everybody get into our C.O.O.L.-B.U.S., we’ll find someplace to hang out.”

The operatives and Sheldon boarded a Japanese-style C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. and took off from the underground hangar, fastly escaping under the fleet of Pipos.

“Oh darn, they’ve escaped. No matter. My new anime shows will have dub and sub-lovers alike under our control! Chimp Tail, Banaruto, Want Peace, Yellow, Uk-Ki-Oh, Space Nanner, we’ll brainwash the whole world before long! We’ll be able to turn everyone against the World Government as Lesser Lord Gnok ordered. Then they’ll have little to stop us from taking their Octogan! The only other problem is,” he turned on a small screen and shouted, “I still wish that SOMEONE would talk less and get to fixing my freaking MODIFIER!”

Mojo Jojo replied, “I am trying to fix your modifier, but it is not easy, as your voice is so loud, it is hurting my eardrums, which is distracting me from completing the task you have entrusted me, which is fixing your modifier, so your criticisms are thereby decreasing the productivity of my…” Specter face-palmed in annoyance.

Langley Falls; CIA Headquarters

It was 11:00 at night when the limousine pulled up to the CIA’s front gates. “Thank you for driving me, Jenkins.” Carol Masterson smiled to her butler before stepping out of the vehicle. “I’ll take it from here.” She approached a guard at the gate booth, who was playing a Nintendo DS. “Excuse me.” He lowered his device to look at Carol, who wore a serious look. She held up a badge, with a picture of herself with a smile, wink, and tongue sticking out. “I am Special Agent Carol Masterson from Cleveland’s CIA branch, sent here to help redesign this building’s security network. It’s close to midnight, and as a little girl, I need my sleep, so if you don’t mind, I’d like to get this job over with as soon as possible.”

The guard in sunglasses shrugged and opened the gate. Carol smiled proudly and walked in, while the guard returned to his DS. Carol casually entered the building, showing her self-printed badge to every agent that glanced at her, before she entered the main computer room. “You’re all relieved, guys, I’m fixing your security network, so nobody can be using them at the moment.” She told the agents inside.

“But I’m looking up something important!” Dick Reynolds, a bald-headed agent, yelled urgently.

Carol glanced at the website he was on. “Euu-hu!” she shuddered at it. “I think that can wait.”

Carol waited until all of the agents cleared out. With that, she hooked her own computer into one of theirs. “Mr. Game-and-Watch, are you ready?”

“Bip-BOP-boop!” the 2-D Program saluted.

Stage 48: CIA Langley

Mission: Rescue Sandman’s team from the base!

Mr. Game-and-Watch was in a dark-blue cyberspace, completely 2-D like him. He jumped a pool of electric, then saw a key floating above a square line, in which two platforms traveled along it. Game-and-Watch hopped on one of the platforms, avoiding the electric spheres moving on the line as well, and grabbed the key, opening a locked door ahead. When he entered, floating, black, 2-D drones hovered over and shot turrets at Game-and-Watch. The Program used his frying pan to flip hams up to the drones and destroy them. Game-and-Watch began to jump a series of platform columns, where certain ones only scrolled up or down. More turret drones flew at him, so Game-and-Watch avoided their bullets as he maneuvered on lower platforms to flip hams up at them.

Game-and-Watch encountered a group of four stationary turrets, protecting a key from all sides. Each one took several hits from Game-and-Watch’s ham before it was destroyed, the Program took a few hits from their bullets, but he survived with what HP he had left and destroyed them. The door opened after he grabbed the key, so Game-and-Watch continued to a field full of electric gaps in the floor. Columns of electric appeared between them at certain intervals, requiring Game-and-Watch to use caution while jumping. The end of this route was blocked by a larger stationary turret, so Game-and-Watch maneuvered to avoid both the electric and the bullets. The battle was tedious with G&W’s hams, but the sentry blew up eventually.

With that, Game-and-Watch made it to a door labeled ‘Interrogation Room.’ Game-and-Watch entered, and through his eyes, Carol saw that the room was holding ‘Sandman.’ “Perfect, Mr. Game-and-Watch. Let’s set our little Sandy free.” The duo cracked the code ‘Mindwash.’

Nolan York sat bored inside the interrogation room, head rested in his hand while his elbow propped against the table. He heard the speaker by the ceiling ring and expected an agent to come and question him. “Good news, Mr. York! Your savior has arrived!” said an energetic girl’s voice.

“Huh?” Nolan sat up in surprise. “Who is this?”

“Oh yeah… Wait, what’re you doing here?”

“I found out you were in jail and came to rescue you myself. It turns out, I have a superb talent with computers and hacking!”

“And suddenly you’re breaking into government facilities? Seems like a wild jump for you.”

“You’re just jealous ‘cause I learn faster. Listen, I’m about to unlock your cell, then once I do, you’ll have at least 30 seconds to grab your gear out of that hall over there and back out. I want to focus time on turning off enough security for you to escape.”

“Hang on, I still have to help Wiccan and Coldman. Are they in here, too?”

“Sigh, fine. But I’m taking a big risk here, I’ll help you as much as I can, but you’ll have to do the hard parts. Mr. Game-and-Watch says your wristwatch has Vanellope’s signature in it. I’ll be able to talk to you directly if you have it.”

“Got it.” Once the cell was open, Sandman quickly rolled out. He crossed to the open door on the other side, finding a hallway of security lasers. The lasers shut off, so Sandman used the 30 seconds to race across the passage, maneuvering around the metal blockades they had in the way just in case. He grabbed his suit and equipment, dressing himself up quickly before making his escape through the hall. He got out just in time before the security lasers reactivated. Carol then appeared on his wristwatch.

“Nice rollin’!” she nodded brightly. “While we’re on the subject, how come Vanellope’s signature is in your wristwatch?”

“She helped me reprogram my watch to be good at hacking. Not that I wasn’t a master before.” Nolan smirked lightly.
“Egomaniac.” Carol puffed her cheeks. “Okay, I found something else. Prisoner ‘Wiccan’ is in the Northwest Wing, just past that door.” Sandman looked at said door’s label, the Northwest Prison Wing. “While Prisoner ‘Coldman’ is in the Weapons Storage, being used for research. Two agents in the offices have a Card Key for the prison wing and Weapons Storage. You’ll have to try and swap them without being spotted. Their names are Duper and Eric.” She sent him pictures. “The agents aren’t looking at your room right now, so this is your chance.”

Sandman crept out into the offices, using Detective Vision to spy the agents as he hid behind the nearest cubicle. “So do you think that girl is one of those girls who looks like a kid, but she’s really 18, or-or 21?” Agent Dick stuttered.

“Don’t be silly, Dick.” Agent Jackson told him. “Even if she is, she’s way too young.” Agents Duper and Eric’s auras were marked green in Sandman’s Vision. Since several agents were close around them, Sandman sent out the Grapple-Cam to latch its way across the room. “I see up them shorts.” Sandman whispered into his controller’s microphone. His voice emitted from the Grapple-Cam, catching their attention.

“G-G-Guys?” Dick shuddered. “Ah-I think there’s a ghost!”

“Dare you to check it out, Dick.” Duper snickered.

“Mmmm.” Angry, Dick went over to the source of the voice. The Grapple-Cam was on the ceiling corner, so when Dick was below- “Ow ow ah!” Nolan pelted his face three times with the grappler before flying the Grapple-Cam to another corner of the room. “Okay, which one of you guys did that!”

“What’re you talking about, Dick?” Duper chuckled as the agents went over to check it out.

During their squabble and distraction, Sandman rolled behind another cubicle with a computer desk. The computer screen displayed a code in green numbers: 15-14 1 14-15-2-12-5 13-9-19-19-9-15-14 20-15 10-1-16-1-14, 20-8-5 D-G-20-8 16-18-5-19-9-4-5-14-20. Sandman quietly snuck up behind Eric in the back of the crowd, swiping the Card Key off his belt. Sandman rolled back and hid before any agents looked over. Duper was still surrounded by agents, so Sandman positioned the Grapple-Cam to a far corner and said, “Duper is a pooper! Pooper Duper!”

“What?!” Duper whipped around as the agents snickered. “Alright, I swear I’m gonna…” Thankfully, Duper went to investigate the sound by himself, so when he was far enough away from the other agents, Sandman tailed him to swipe his Card Key. With that, he hurriedly rolled back to the interrogation room, sliding Eric’s key into the slot beside the prison wing door. Sandman rolled inside and drew attention from the criminals behind barrier cells.

“If you get beside your friend’s cell, I can have Game-and-Watch jump in from your watch.” Nolan searched each cell before… “There she is! Crystal!” He spoke hushedly.

The witch looked up from her bench. “Nolan!” She eagerly came over. “How did you get out?”

“The same way you’re about to.” Nolan held his watch beside the cell terminal.

“There’s your window, Game-and-Watch! Jump in!” On Carol’s command, the excited little Program jumped into the terminal’s mainframe. Floating sentries swarmed in and blasted at G&W, who withstood some shots as he flipped ham up to destroy them. Mr. Game-and-Watch had to jump up a series of platforms where twin security lasers scrolled up and down (each going opposite of the other). There were protective bars on either wall, so G&W got on the platforms beside them, waiting for the lasers to pass by before jumping further. Game-and-Watch made it to a high field where red balls bounced all around between the floors and nonexistent ceiling. He evasively dodged the balls as best as his 2-D controls would, took a few hits, but he managed to grab a key to open the door.

There were floor turrets in this room, trying to scroll below Game-and-Watch and shoot upward.
Game-and-Watch got onto some platforms above, and from there flipped hams up at stalactites to make them come down and stick through the floor. They destroyed the turrets with successful strikes, allowing Game to pass to the code room. He cracked the code ‘Bowling Day’ and opened Wiccan’s cell.

“Hoo. Thanks, Nolan.” The witch smiled as she stepped out.

“Don’t thank me. Thank this little girl.” He showed her his wristwatch.

“Wow, your hair is so purple!” Carol beamed. “You look like a witch in this story I read!”

“Fascinating. Nolan, I’m afraid they took my staff.”

“It could be in the Weapons Storage. We’re going there for Yuki.” The two hurried through the prison wing—Sandman stopped them before they entered the interrogation room, sensing agents inside with Detective Vision.

“Maybe the ghost was just one of the criminals.” Dick’s voice was heard.

“Maybe. Hey, didn’t we have a guy in there?” Duper asked, pointing at Nolan’s former cell.

“Someone else musta locked him in there.” Eric replied. “Hey, you think Director Bullock will let us play with his gadgets?”

“I wonder if Sandman has Anti-Aging Cream?” Dick asked hopefully. “Oh-ho-ho, what I wouldn’t give to look 32 again…” Sandman watched them pile out. He sighed with relief before entering the room with Crystal. The agents were sitting at computer desks in the office room.

“Crud. We can’t sneak into Weapons Storage this way.” Sandman said.

“I have a plan.” Carol reported. Sandman saw the girl’s aura walk out into the offices. “Hey, everybody! My CIA office is sending donuts to us, outside!”

“YAAAAAY!” The auras excitedly piled out. Sandman and Wiccan seized the chance by rolling out there. “The short story is, Dunkin’ Donuts owes me a few favors.” Carol informed. “With that in mind, you have about 20 minutes ‘til they get done with ‘em. I’ll go back to watching cameras, you handle the rest.” Carol rushed back into the computer room.

Sandman used the Card Key to open the door to a short hallway where an agent was backed against the wall, holding a chair to an angry mammoth in defense. “All I wanna do is ride you to McDonald’s! Why do you gotta be like this?” The two heroes paid this no mind, as Sandman used his grappler to fly up onto a walkway near the ceiling, pulling Crystal with him. They avoided sight of the agent, then dropped to the floor on the other side.

They entered the massive room that was Weapons Storage, where missiles, guns, and gadgets alike were lain about, and agents patrolled everywhere. He detected a stiff frozen aura far away, and when they looked from behind some missiles, they saw it was Yuki Crystal. He was frozen in a capsule of liquid nitrogen, which had chi-blocks set around it. “Since he can’t icebend, he can’t unfreeze himself.” Nolan observed. “If we could at least burn those off…”
“Let’s look for my staff.” Wiccan said. They grappled to a higher walkway, seeing the guard was several feet ahead, then grappled up to the large metal ceiling pipes. Sandman detected an orange, stick-shaped aura on the right side of the room. Crystal’s staff was encased inside a safe, protected by two armed guards. “Carol, could you hack into that if we got close?”

“Yes, but make sure no one’s looking.” They waited for the walkway guard to climb down the ladder, then Sandman glided onto it—weighed down a little carrying Crystal. Nolan sat at the very edge of the walkway, holding his watch up. “You aren’t close enough.” Carol told him. The safe was just a few feet around this turn.

Crystal noticed the metal pipe that traveled along the wall, from them to above the safe. “Give it to me.” she said. Nolan unhooked his watch and gave it to Crystal, who put it around her head like a necklace. She climbed up and sidled atop the pipe, then very carefully stepped onto the safe. She made sure not to breathe as Game-and-Watch did his thing.

A giant green wall chased G&W inside the blue space, so he hurriedly beeped and ran. He ran through a field of orange spikes both on the floor and air, jumping precisely in-between them. He quickly jumped up a set of tall stairs, and at the top, flying drones began shooting at him. He flipped hams up to destroy a few, then kept running. He climbed a ladder, giving the green wall some time to catch up, but G&W got away in time, running across a long field. He encountered a wall of pixels and flipped his hams to destroy each little one, doing so hurriedly as the wall was catching up. When the pixels were all gone, Game-and-Watch rushed inside to crack the code ‘Forbidden.’

The safe beeped open, but the guards didn’t seem to hear. Crystal quietly climbed off the safe, cracked it open, and got her staff. She subtly shut the door and flew away on the stick. “Way to go, Crystal.” Nolan said, taking his watch back. “Um, and Carol. I’ll distract the other guards, you shoot those chi-blocks.” Sandman grappled above the pipes and sent his Grapple-Cam to a wall away from the frozen capsule. “You wield that gun like a girl!”

“Of course I do, my mom taught me.” One of the guards replied simply.

“The safe guards are still there, but I’ll risk it.” Crystal aimed her staff and shot small fireballs to burn the paper seals. The safe guards didn’t seem to notice or react, and the other guards were still looking for the Grapple-Cam. Nolan and Crystal watched the frozen capsule intently after the chi-blocks disintegrated. …The frosted glass was beginning to crack. The agents whipped around when it shattered completely.

Yuki Crystal stood on the platform that once rested his liquid nitrogen capsule. “Brrr-r-r-r… I feel a little… stiff.” Yuki spoke calmly, but inside he was flowing with power. “I should… stretch my legs a little!” He smirked vigorously.

“Yuki, freeze all of the guards, quick!” Sandman yelled—again startling the agents.

“Oh! Okay!” Each guard ran for an alarm button, Yuki blasted ice beams at each one, one at a time. The safe guards shot their guns at him, Yuki flipped off the platform, dodged, and froze them from afar.

“That’s anything but stealthy…” Carol said with disbelief.

“At least we still have time. Sort of.” Sandman replied. “Is the coast mostly clear out there?”
“Not really, they’re coming back already.” Carol replied, looking at the offices camera on her computer. “And… uh-oh.”

“I just wanna check something on my email real quick, maybe that girl will let me.” Dick said as he was about to enter the computer room.

Carol hurriedly closed her laptop, unplugged it from the CIA computer, and looked worriedly for a place to hide. She saw an air vent on the floor and said, “Good thing I brought this.” as she pulled out her screwdriver. She unscrewed the bolts in the vent, cracked it open, and crawled in, closing the vent.

“Oh, she’s gone.” Dick said as Carol saw him sit down. “Maybe she was outside and I didn’t notice. Oh well!”

Carol sighed in relief before deciding to crawl further in the vent. She heard the fast strumming of a banjo and some singing echoing from the room around the corner. When she peeped through this vent, it appeared to be an office. Carol clutched the vent bars and pushed it open with all her force, but held the vent tight so it didn’t bang on the floor. Carol crawled inside and saw who was singing.

The CIA Deputy Director, Avery Bullock, was at his desk. He was kicked back as he merrily strummed a banjo, singing “The Window Cleaner” song. “All day up this ladder, I’m as happy as can be. Any thing thing thing, anything, the things I shouldn’t see! Oh, the blushing bride looks divine…”

Bullock’s telephone suddenly rang, so he placed the caller on speaker. “Hello? Deputy Director Bullock?” a gruff voice spoke on the other end. “I’m not... interrupting anything, am I?”

“Oh, Corporate President Carter Pewterschmidt!” Avery spoke brightly in his British accent. “No, of course not, please, chat with me for a pint.”

“Um, okay. Also, why the hell is your speaker phone on?”

“It makes the atmosphere feel more open, of course. Besides it hurts my arm to have to hold that dreadful device to my ear for too long.”

“Well, considering all that coke I send you, God forbid your arm gets tired. So what’s the deal with these White Lotus Revolutionaries stealing our Mega Footbombs?”

“Oh, it’s nothing to worry about, Carter,” Avery spoke casually, tuning his banjo, “they only stole prototype bombs from the stadiums. I have the secret locations of three bombs marked on blueprints in my office, they’re all still safe.”

“Good. We’re thinking of sending the Teen Ninjas to blow up KND Moonbase, Arctic Base, and their Undersea Base. Three bases, three Footbombs, keep ‘em safe, Avery.” Carol internally gasped at this. “Then the Leaders can quit worryin’ about them. Anyway, something else, Director, my security cameras saw a group of kids crossing the border to Mexico a few days ago. One of them was some sort of giant, and they had a skeleton child with them. Did you see anything like that on your cameras?”

“I thought I caught a glimpse of something of the sort. I was on cocaine at the time, however, so my memory’s a little fuzzy.”

“Well, send extra security to the border ASAP! We saw them go back over the border, but that skeleton was the same that escaped from Pueblo de Niebla, and I don’t want him finding his way back there! Not only that, but one of those kids was one of the Seven Lights our Leaders told us about! Since Pueblo de Niebla has one of those ‘Gibberish Rock’ things, I know they’ll be going back there eventually. I don’t want those brats to ruin my Lazarus Operation!”

“For God’s sake, Carter, you’ve already harnessed more than enough of that Lazarus to last yourself another 30 years. Why do you insist on staying in that back desert country?”

“Because the World Government caught on to what I’m doing, and they want in.” Carter said with what seemed like a whisper. “I’m gonna have to mine this whole desert to give ’em the amount they want. Just send me your agents so I don’t have to worry about those twerps!”

“Relax, Old Boy, my Agent Smith is the best there is. He’ll show a few brats a thing or two. Plus you’ve still got those hillbillies you’ve persuaded to work for you.”

“Sigh, alright. So um, anyway, that whole thing with Doflamingo was pretty messed up. You know, they’re actually considering letting his son fill in as president. As soon as they find him.”

“A CHILD for a president, if that isn’t the highlight of my evening!” Bullock exclaimed with humor.

“What’s he gonna do with the company,” Carter continued with a noticeable humorous stutter, “turn it—turn it into an action figure, comic book-type business—aaah, you know that crap kids do!” He and Mr. Bullock shared in laughter. “Ahhh, well uh, I have a meeting to go to, so I’ll let you get back to… whatever it is you’re doing. Send those agents over soon.” He hung up.

“Sure, sure, I’ll get right on that.” With that, Mr. Bullock continued playing his banjo, resuming his “Window Cleaner” song. “The bride groom, he’s doing fine, I’d rather have his job than mine…”

Now that the dialogue was over, Carol kept on the floor as she searched for the Footbomb locations. On the wall beside the door was a collection of wanted posters. They depicted Wendy Marvell, Augustus Fizzuras, King K. Rool, Sandman, Red Eye, and Ragaj Gnik (who was worth two billion dollars, however a reason was not given for his criminality). Carol found a blueprint taped to that wall, so since Bullock’s head was tilted back during a verse, she quickly stood and snapped the blueprint with her cellphone camera. She then crawled to one of the vents in the opposite wall, opening its bars to see a blueprint lodged within. While Bullock was singing, she quickly reached in to pull it out, uncrumple it, and snap the picture before stuffing it back in.

The only place Carol guessed where the other one was was Bullock’s desk. She crawled around his right side, seeing the man’s head totally upward as his chair tilted back and his feet were on the desk, lost in song. His singing hurt her ears up close, but she used the distraction to stand up, rifle through a drawer, and found a Riddler Trophy. Annoyed, she crawled around to search the drawer on his left side, finding the blueprint. She snapped the picture, put the paper back, then crawled to the opposite side of the desk from Bullock.

“I’ll send these to Maseyfairy to send to Cheren.” Carol thought aloud quietly, texting Mason the photos while warning him about the Footbombs and the planned attack. The blueprints read the Footbombs were in New Jersey, Arlen Texas, and Colorado’s NFL Stadiums. “That’ll give them some time to make a plan.”

With that done, Carol was about to crawl back into the vent- “Who the devil are you?” She flinched. She turned her head to show her panicked face to Bullock.

“Uhhh… I’m the vent cleaner.”
“Ah, I was wondering when you’d come.” The Deputy Director smiled. “Well, carry on, then. Ahem, all day up this ladder, I’m happy as…”

Carol sighed, crawling back in as she stuck the vent’s hatch on. Dick was gone from the computer room, so it was safe for Carol to crawl out. She peeped into the offices and saw… all of the agents frozen solid. “Great, you made it.” Nolan greeted her.

“You certainly take care of things quickly.” The girl remarked.

“I’ll unfreeze ‘em if we’re ready to go.” Yuki promised. “Are we?”

“Yes, I think we should.” Nolan nodded. Yuki summoned all of the ice back into his hands before the team rushed out of the building.

“You guys! My life just flashed before my eyes!” Jackson exclaimed, panting after being unfrozen. “And I use… way too much… syrup on my waffles…”

Team Sandman hurried past the gate as Carol showed her badge to the guard, “All taken care of, have a nice night!” The guard nodded uninterestingly, focused on his DS. The team ran a far-enough distance away, where Jenkins’ limousine was parked. The heroes caught their breath.

“Well, Carol, you have our thanks.” Sandman told the child. “But I have to ask, since you even look like her now, why couldn’t Rebecca Hawkins from Yu-Gi-Oh fill your role?”

“It’s called character development, Mr. York, it’d do YOU a few favors.” Carol spoke with a smug frown, her eyes closed. “I’m not letting you off the hook easily, you each owe me 150 dollars.” She held a hand open and wiggled her fingers.

“Why the devil should we?!” Wiccan shouted.

“’Cause I’m a little girl who’s up past her bedtime rescuing three adults from jail. I want a bigger allowance.” Her hand was still open.

“We’re superheroes, we don alter-egos to avoid paying compensation.” Coldman argued.

“Fine, I’ll put it on your tab. That only means your debt will increase as time goes on.” She winked cutely and stuck her tongue out.

“We’ll keep that in mind. Can you get home okay, Carol?” Sandman asked.

“Sure.” Carol casually walked to her limousine and got in. “Worry about yourselves. Oh, and consider it a gift from me,” she smiled at them, “I Copied Game-and-Watch and Pasted his clone in your wristwatch. Hopefully, he’ll make hacking a lot easier. I’ll say ‘hi’ to Dillon for you!” The heroes watched as the limo drove away down the street.

Sandman checked his wristwatch, seeing Mr. Game-and-Watch’s happy image. He made some beeps and bops before ringing a 2-D bell. “Hooray, we have a new friend!” Crystal grinned.

“Where should we take him next? What’s our next mission?”

“Hmm…” Sandman sighed. “I think it’s been a long day for all of us. They’re going to know we’re gone before long, so let’s go home and catch up on rest. …Then afterwards, we gotta look for this Hugo Strange. If he’s one of the World Leaders’ apprentices…” Sandman looked at Game-and-Watch on his watch. “He must be pretty important to them.”

Boggly Woods, Japan
Some believe it was fate that caused Spongebob to crash the boat all the way in Kochi, conveniently near the place that they were going. But some people just want this little yellow nuisance to go away already, because he causes more trouble than he’s worth. That’s why Melody, Danny, and Eva chose to stay behind in town and trust Spongebob to protect Jessie and Sandy. “Oh, and there was the time I crashed the car so many times, Mrs. Puff puffed really big and floated out of the planet’s atmosphere. Then she exploded like a firework in the sky!” Spongebob recounted a story with a bubbly expression. “Bai-yai-ai-ai-ai! ‘Course, that wasn’t nearly as fun as the time Squidward broke his voice box while yelling at me, so I taught him sign language and translated everything he was trying to say. Bai-ai-ai!”

“You probably don’t know this, but you got all of his translations wrong.” Jessie noted, having seen that episode. “Like, horribly wrong.”

“These are all really sad episodes.” Sandy spoke downtrodden. “Can’t we talk about the good ones? Like when Mr. Krabs and Plankton worked together to find out the Kelp Shake formula?”

“You missed the ending of that one, didn’t you?” Jessie asked.

“Oh, yeah. What happened?” Jessie whispered the ending in Sandy’s ear. “Oh… well, never mind.”

“Fellas, I admit I’m not a bestselling author,” Spongebob replied simply, “but come on, you kids grew up on my show, didn’t ya?”

“Doesn’t mean we liked all of them.” Sandy replied shamefully.

“Some of them were pretty ed up, you have to admit.” Jessie followed.

“Okay, I made a few, dare I say, ‘flops,’ bai-ai-ai…” Spongebob walked forward with his eyes closed casually, “but I think I have a good routine goin’ on, and my fans are as loyal as-” His shoes were untied, he stepped on a lace, “AAAAHH- d’oh- dah- DOI- dack!” He ended up tumbling and bouncing down a rugged hill, landing beside a giant tree of dark-gray bark.

“Hmhmhm, that episode was one of my favorites.” Sandy smiled, recalling the untied shoes episode. “Flying Dutchman taught me how to tie knots.”

“Yaaaaaawn.” Jessie stretched his arms. “This forest is making me sleepy.” He rubbed his eyes as they stepped down a natural stairway in the hill. “Let’s take a nap under this tree or something.”

Jessie still felt drowsy as they walked around the tree, in search for a good spot to rest. “Jessie, wait!” Sandy stopped her brother before he walked around a tree root. She noticed a couple of purple, ant-like bugs on the ground. One of them panicked at the sight of them. “Is that… Shelly?”

As we know by the last chapter, it is Shelly. :P “The Window Cleaner” was written by George Formby, but it was in American Dad, which is where Bullock and those agents come from. Next time, Jessie’s Bubble Dreamer training, then maybe Sector V will wake up in Twilight Town. Later.
Bubble Dreamer

Chapter Summary

Jessie and Spongebob go through Bubble Dreamer training. At Twilight Town, Wuya takes Jack Spicer to meet her sister.

I’m slating the Presidents Saga to end at Chapter 41. It definitely shouldn’t end on Chapter 40, there’s quite a bit to do. Today’s cryptogram is Caesar.

Chapter 37: Bubble Dreamer

Boggly Tree

The humans and Spongebob were allowed into the Boggly Tree. In-between the bark walls were glass-like barriers in which water flowed through, little bubbles inside of it. There were black columns and statues with white, intricate designs, and the floors were of colorful grass. It was a beautiful type of scenery, but Jessie and Sandy’s attention had been drawn to something else for a while.

Shelly stood on a tree stump with anger on her face, impatiently awaiting a reaction from the giant-to-her first-graders. Jessie and Sandy had been staring at the tiny bully for at least three minutes.

“It certainly looks like Shelly.” Sandy said.

“What’s that?”

“The fact I am very happy to see her.” Jessie smiled wryly.

“For your information, Shorts, I just learned I’m the princess of an entire race of chipmunks, which is more than anything you accomplished!” Shelly squeaked.

Jessie bent closer and replied, “That won’t change the fact that you are small enough to replace Fluffleupagus as our classroom pet.”

“Ugh! Hey Elder person, these brats have to shrink too, right?” Shelly yelled at the Puni Elder behind the stump.

“Actually, Jessie is more important than you, ergo we shall not alter him.”

“WHAT?!! You biased son of a-”

“DON’T TAKE THAT TONE WITH ME!” Elder puffed giant. “Also, I would not be a ‘son,’ I would be a ‘daughter’!” She shrunk down.

“Perhaps we should tell Jessie why exactly we were expecting him.” Gonshiri informed.

“I ain’t recapping that entire story.” Elder stated. “Besides, he doesn’t need to know it all, yet. All he needs to know is that he and that sponge are Bubble Dreamers.”

“We were told.” Sandy replied. “Could you, um, remind us what a Bubble Dreamer is?”

“As you might have learned, Bubble Dreamers are a rare type of people, reincarnations of the spirit Polokus. Their job is to enter people’s dreams and put a stop to rogue Dream Spirits. Such spirits are a different type from general Nightmares, just so you know. As for the term ‘Bubble,’ a Bubble Dreamer’s primary power is control over Dream Bubbles. Dream Bubbles are bodies which are born from sleepers’ minds and form dreams and Dream Spirits. A Bubble Dreamer can bend those bubbles to their will. The embodiment of people’s dreams makes the ‘dreambender’ (in this context) stronger.”

“So Spongebob and Jessie can control dreams and use them to fight?” Gonshiri tried to summarize.

“You know, I did something like that once!” Spongebob beamed. “I once fell out of my own dream and explored my friends’ dreams.”

“Spongebob and Jessie have explored their power already.” the Elder said. “But there is more they can do. A Bubble Dreamer can ease or subdue Bad Dreams by encasing them inside Sleep Bubbles. Those bubbles will then take their place in thousands of stars in the Dream Realm sky. Now, are you three aware of Bill Cipher?”

“Mr. Kyogre mentioned someone by that name.” Sandy replied.

“Bill was once in slumber thanks to Polokus’s power, but he escaped 4,000 years ago. Bill Cipher had since found a hobby with aiding the World Government behind the scenes, doing so by helping American presidents with their position. You should know that the World Government controls America greater than any other country. If a president, such as Abraham Lincoln or John Kennedy, do not comply by their rules, the World Government has them executed. However, thanks to Polokus’s power, Bill is trapped in the Dream Realm, and can only communicate to the World Government, or anyone, using images of himself. For that reason, the Government has images of Bill everywhere, and all of their workers bare his likeness as a tattoo. They call it the Eye of Providence.

“It was only 30 years ago when a man named Stanford Pines found a way of summoning Bill into our world. Bill helped Stanford create a machine that the former could use for his own goals, which is finding the Thirteen Darknesses. Thankfully, Stanford realized Bill’s treachery and had the demon banished again, until last year, when Gideon Gleeful summoned him back. During the 30-year gap, Bill Cipher began to communicate with Jimmy McGarfield, using a simple one-dollar bill that displayed Bill’s likeness. Under Bill’s guidance, Jimmy trained to become stronger. While serving in the army, Jimmy learned the best strategies of conquering countries, it is thanks to Bill Cipher that Jimmy has become a renowned president. When Jimmy learned that Gideon had a means of summoning Bill, he made Gideon his adviser. Now under their command, Bill Cipher is brainwashing the children of America to obey the World Government.”

Jessie shook his head, “You’re king losing me, Lady! Just get to the point of this story!”

“THE POINT IS,” Elder puffed giant, then shrunk down, “you are a Bubble Dreamer, reincarnation of Polokus, so it is your job to defeat Bill Cipher! Otherwise, you will not be able to save your friends.”

“What do you mean?”

“I mean that the children of Gallagher accused the middle school of kidnapping you kids and Shelly. They went to war, and many of them were captured. They are slaves in President Jimmy’s school now, and Bill Cipher, your fated enemy, is their teacher. Jessie Sidney, there is no choice in the matter, you must learn Bubble Dreaming!

“Yeah, Jessie, let’s do it!” Spongebob perked up. “It sounds like fun!”

“…” Jessie thought for a second, his eyes furrowed. “So this ‘Bill’ person is controlling our classmates. Hmmm… if this is the only way I can help them…”

“So be it. Your training shall begin now.”

“Shouldn’t we wait a little bit first?” Sandy asked worriedly. “Jessie’s been through a lot lately, and we’re really tired from the walk.”

“Then it’s a good thing the little brat will have to be asleep. Come upstairs, we have some nice patches of flowers for you.”

Jessie, Sandy, and Spongebob followed the Elder and a group of Punies a few floors up the tree, to a small room with white patches of flowers. Jessie and Spongebob rested their selves on two of them. The flowers were very soft and comfortable, and Jessie already felt his body easing. His unconscious body hadn’t had any decent bed to sleep on this whole time. “Your main weakness is that your real body is vulnerable while in slumber, so someone has to protect you. You can count on these whippersnappers for that. Now into slumber…” The Elder dipped her purple antenna into a bottle of pink soap. She waved the antenna and blew bubbles over Jessie and Spongebob’s eyes. Their lids grew heavy as they sank into slumber.

Dream World

Stage 43: Boggly Woods, Act 1.5

Mission: Become a Bubble Dreamer.

The sky over Boggly Woods was black, while the outer horizon became yellow, with a milky gradient in-between. The grassland was a mix between yellow and red, while the black Boggly Tree towered in the distance. Bubbles of neon color floated everywhere. “Welcome to my dreamscape.” The Puni Elder sat a few feet before them. “This is where most of your training will take place. Keep in mind a few things: your power only exists in the Dream World, ergo cannot be used in the Waking World. Now then, since Bubble Dreaming is essentially ‘dreambending,’ you must expect it to be on psychicbending’s level of power. However, dreambending is like a mix between psychic and energybending, as you are bending the energy that makes up Dream World, which in itself requires imagination.”

“Teehee! Bubbles!” Spongebob giddily popped a few bubbles. “Tehehe!”

“I don’t even know what psychic or energybending is, how the  would I-” Jessie cursed.

“BY SHUTTING UP AND LISTENING!” Elder puffed giant, then shrunk. “Perhaps you impatient brats want some direct practice. Well, no harm. Grab the bubbles in the air and make whatever your hearts desire.”

Jessie and Spongebob both took bubbles from the air. Spongebob molded his like clay, into pickles, ketchup, onions, lettuce, molded into the finest Krabby Patty he’d ever seen. Meanwhile, Jessie molded a bubble into himself, another one into Shelly, then placed a smaller bubble beside his bubble-self like a kickball. He made his bubble-self kick the ball at Shelly, smiling proudly.

“Good, good NOW AWAY WITH THOSE THINGS!” Elder puffed giant and blew those bubbles away. “The Dream World is made of such bubbles. They exist in the air and ground. So quit being blind old bats and grab them.”

Jessie and Spongebob exchanged glances and shrugged. They waved their arms like waterbenders would, and Jessie soon found bubbles form around his arms. Spongebob created a bubble jellyfish net, which he used to catch a bubble jellyfish he made. “Alright, enough of that.” Elder told them simply. “Make use of your fancy bubbleworks. Get to the top of that tree.” She turned to face the Boggly Tree in the distance.

Jessie and Spongebob waved their bubble wands in the air to catch and mold bubbles, afterwards blowing them into a stairway of platforms. They raced across the air on an ever-rising bubble stairway, but ended up going much higher than the treetop. With excited smiles on their faces, Jessie and Spongebob jumped down and raised their wands, forming bubble parachutes. They plummeted into a shaft down the tree, landing in a dark underground area. They stood on the ledge over a black chasm as the Puni Elder appeared from a puff of bubbles. “You already know your bubbles can take any form. Do what you just did to cross this chasm.”

Jessie and Spongebob waved their wands overhead as they ran off the edge, creating bubble hang-gliders to soar over the darkness. They maneuvered left and right when Pale Piranhas popped out of the sides, before they were able to take land on safe ground. There was a Bubble Bowl wheel, in which Spongebob spun said bubble into being and hit the wheel, opening a hatch at the top of a towering shaft above them. “It’ll close in a matter of seconds.” Elder informed them. “It’ll take faster work than just flying to get there.”

“No problem! Hit me, Jessie!” Spongebob opened his mouth wide as Jessie released a storm of bubbles into his throat. The sponge grew larger and larger, and when his roundness was ripe, Jessie jumped into his mouth. Spongebob aimed directly above and POPPED, sent Jessie flying like a bubbly cannon, sliding him through the hatch before it closed. Spongebob hit the wheel and opened the hatch again, creating his own assortment of bubble springs as he bounced higher into the air, soon to join Jessie above the hatch. This next passage was a grayish-white, and completely blocked by thick bubble substance. Some of the bubble was clear, but other parts were a shiny, solid white-neon.

“You’ll have to force your way through this maze of Waking Water.” Elder said. “If you touch that stuff, you’ll have to start from the beginning.” Jessie went first and forced his hands into the substance, tearing it open. Spongebob kept close behind, helping keep the back of their makeshift tunnel open while Jessie tore a way for the front. They were like moles digging through dirt, they had to maneuver left, then rightward around the Waking Water. A wall of Waking Water blocked them, they had to dig back a few feet, then dig a stairway that barely inched above the Waking Water. Jessie noticed a tight-looking tunnel through the water, so he dug through carefully until he managed to find a sock. In their attempt to maneuver out of the tunnel, Spongebob touched the Waking Water and suddenly vanished in Jessie’s vision. “Gash, blast it!” Elder cursed. “Looks like you’re on your own, boy.”

“I don’t think so.” Jessie burrowed into the Waking Water himself. The next minute, he woke up tiredly in the real Boggly Tree.

“What the devil was that for?!?” the Elder shouted.

“If I don’t get to take Sandy with me, Spongebob and I are still a team.” Jessie stated.

“Ugh, the youth of today… Fine, if that’s the way you want it. We’ll do this all day if you insist!” So the Elder put them to sleep again.
The duo made their way to the Waking Water maze and, with no more need to use the tunnel, they continued higher. Columns of Waking Water stood, Jessie and Spongebob made careful use of their steps as they maneuvered around, until they could exit the maze at the top. They came to a locked door sealed with a keyhole. “We’re in the Dream World, remember?” Elder asked. “Make anything that suits your needs from the bubbles.”

The situation here required a key, by the looks of it. So Spongebob blew a large bubble, and from that bubble was born… a cannon. After the fuse was burned all the way, it blasted the door clean open. Jessie and Spongebob entered a clear, narrow passage, where a Deathtoon (a red Doomtoon) appeared out of midair and approached them with a beefy pose. “Now the real test: trapping Dream Spirits inside Sleep Bubbles. You must let your mind be calm, and imagine your very serenity as you mold a bubble from your mind. Trap the Dream Spirits inside such a bubble, and they will know slumber.”

“How the  do we make it from our mind?” Jessie asked.

“JUST move your hands closer to each other in front of your forehead and imagine pulling a bubble out!” Elder shouted. “Now hurry! Deathtoons can destroy your mind by the touch!”

Jessie shut his eyes tight and enclosed his hands beside his forehead. He literally pulled a bubble from his mind and threw it at the small red creature. The Deathtoon was trapped, but his anger fumed as the bubble steamed, and the Toon broke free. “No no, your mind was too angry, you have to make a CALM bubble!”

“You keep king yelling at me-!”

“Watch out, Jessie!” Spongebob pulled a bubble from his own mind and threw it at the Deathtoon. The creature furiously tried to break free, but it soon became drowsy. The Deathtoon fell asleep, and Jessie and Spongebob watched as the bubble floated into the sky, taking its place among stars. Jessie huffed with aggravation and touched his forehead.

“You’ll never defeat Bill Cipher with a torrential mind!” Elder shouted. “You can be angry while you’re fighting him, but at the calling moment, you’ll have to put that anger aside! Now buck up, there’s more coming.”

A green, man-size bug called a Cricket came, whose yellow shoes and light-green head were separate from its dark-green body. It wore a taunting scowl as it kept in the two’s way, and when Jessie tried to approach, the Cricket flew into the air and kicked him away. Jessie sighed, relieving himself of anger, and calmly pulled a bubble from his forehead. He let it float to the Cricket, but the creature kicked it into nothing. “Is that puny bubble gonna catch a creature that big?!” the Elder yelled.

“No, but this one should!” Spongebob positioned his hands to pull out a bubble, moved them further from his head, and extracted a bigger bubble. The bubble was able to encase the large Cricket, put him to sleep, then it floated into the stars. “Like that, you little snot.” Elder scolded.

Jessie huffed. “How the  do you expect me to pull this off? Hell, why can’t Spongebob fight Bill himself?”

“You just said you two were a team, you hypocritical dope! Besides, you’re the one who needs to take his place in destiny, this lousy sponge is just along for the ride. Either way, I’m afraid at some point, you’ll have to continue this training on your own. A Bubble Dreamer’s other power is entering peoples’ dreams, but it’s hard to practice that when not many are willing to go to sleep. Well, I suppose there’s millions asleep right now, but it won’t matter. You at least need to master your Bubbling before we conclude. The next room should suffice.” Elder led them along. “I borrowed these guys from a friend of mine.”

The Puni led them to an enormous room of Stone Demons—those seen in the Chronicler’s Realm. Jessie and Spongebob exchanged smirks—Spongebob molded karate gloves out of the bubbles while Jessie made a soccerball. Spongebob leapt around and karate-sliced all of the stone monsters, Jessie kicked the soccerball and bounced it around their heads. After dizzying them, Jessie blew Bubble Torpedoes to explode the statues into pieces, but their remains lived and crawled toward the Bubble Dreamers.

Spongebob smiled with solace and pulled bubble after bubble from his mind to encase each piece of broken stone. Jessie was surrounded by Stone Demons both together and broken, hurriedly molding Sleep Bubbles from his mind, large and small, to catch them. He threw the wrong-sized bubbles at some statues, while the others easily broke free. “Just think of something happy, Jessie!” Spongebob told him. “I think of Krabby Patties!”

“I have had the worst few days, so telling me to be king happy is a stretch!” Jessie whacked a demon away with his wand.

“That’s a real shame, boy!” Puni Elder called. “I guess I left Shelly at that miniscule size for you for nothing!”

Jessie only just remembered. He didn’t have enough time to appreciate the sight, before he was forced into training. He pictured himself in the Waking World, happily poking the little Shelly, flicking her around, calling her “Shrimp.” Jessie closed his eyes and stretched a large bubble from his mind. He threw it at a single whole Stone Demon and trapped it. In the creature’s attempt to break free, the demon felt incredibly giddy, dancing a tap-dance, before the bubble broke open. “You almost had it, but you have to be serene!” the Elder scolded. “As though you were dreaming.”

“When I’m making Krabby Patties, I feel like I drank 10 cups of cocoa and fell asleep under 20 blankets. Haaaaaah.” Spongebob sighed with the purest relaxation as he Bubbled another monster.

Jessie imagined himself tucked cozily under his blanket… with a mini Shelly screaming angrily from a jar on his nightstand. He pulled another large bubble from his mind and trapped two Stone Demons. Jessie watched as those demons fell asleep and floated to the stars.

By the time it was all over, however, Spongebob had Bubbled many more demons. The sky was filled with stars, which in reality were Bubbled monsters. The Puni Elder approached the two Dreamers. “You have a long way to go, Jessie. Perhaps it is good Spongebob is with you. This yellow devil’s mind is so unbearably happy, it’s a haven.”

“I never asked to be a king ‘chosen one of destiny.’” Jessie folded his arms and looked away. “Before all this started, I just wanted to eat ice cream.”

“Be that as it may, it’s time for you brats to wake up.” The Elder turned away from them; Jessie walked away in a half-awake fashion. “There are a couple things I should warn you about Bill Cipher. First, you should never look directly in his eye, that’s how he…” She turned around. Jessie was gone. “Eh? Where did that boy go?”

Jessie walked up a stairway that neither Elder nor Spongebob could see. The Boggly Tree slowly faded into black, and was replaced by endless stars. The stairs led Jessie onto a floating, flat asteroid with a golden circular pool. Jessie stared into the surface, the golden light making his eyes heavier. …He fell in with a splash.
Jessie appeared on the shore of a starlit sky. The massive full moon was halfway over the horizon of the indigo sea. The atmosphere of this space was making him sleepy. The waves brushed across the shore and touched his feet, sending a chill through his body that would ensure his sleep faster. Jessie looked at the tall pedestal not far away. On it rested a very short creature with a tall top-hat. His hat was violet with faint yellow stars, his skin was a pale yellow, and he bore very long arms. His body was very short and round, his mouth stretched across the whole of the top front. He had bare feet under blue pants that covered his bottom body.

“Welcome, Jessie…” He spoke with a calm and patient voice as Jessie walked closer.

The boy stopped a few feet away, staring with half-awake eyes. He believed this creature was only a figment of his imagination. “Who the  are you?”

“I am the Bubble Dreamer the Elder speaks of… I am the spirit who resides in all Bubble Dreamers like yourself… I am Polokus. For a very long time, I knew that one of my incarnations would be one of the Seven Lights… as it was planned by my Creator.”

“Cre…ator?” Jessie spoke tiredly.

“Let me tell you about Creations, Jessie. In all of existence, there have always been two types of Creations.” Polokus outreached his long, right arm, sticking up the index finger. “There are Dream Spirits, Creations born in the Dream World from the subconscious mind of sleeping mortals. And there are Imaginary Friends,” he stuck up the middle finger, emphasizing ‘II,’ “Creations directly created by conscious mortals. Bill Cipher and I are the latter. We are Imaginary Friends, dreamt up by two Creators. My Creator… was the one who originally thought of the Twenty Keys Prophecy. She is the reason the prophecy exists. And the reason the prophecy exists, its primary purpose… was to defeat Bill Cipher’s Creator. An extremely powerful, and terrifying monster, whose abilities defied Time and Space. The destiny of you, and the other Nineteen Keys, will ultimately be to defeat this monster.”

Jessie shook his head, speaking tiredly, “Hold up, hold up… I thought I was learning this to beat Bill Cipher… not some king monster. What the  do ‘Twenty Keys’ have to do with anything?”

“Ohhhh, yes… You were not yet told the prophecy. All in good time, Jessie… There is only one thing you need to be certain of. Bill Cipher is our fated enemy. He has in his captivity the ones you hold dear. That is why, I will bless you with my greatest of powers, Jessie. I will bless you… with the knowledge of my Creator’s name, and Bill Cipher’s Creator’s name. By knowing my Creator’s name, as I am a part of her, I can bless you with her power. By knowing his Creator’s name, you will have power over Bill Cipher. But this power will only come into play, after you have said his name in front of Bill Cipher himself. That is why I want you to take extra care in remembering them. Will you?”

Jessie’s look stated that he was still hallucinating, thinking it was all a dream. …He nodded.

“Very good. My Creator’s name… is Calliope. And Bill Cipher’s Creator, whom she has invented this Twenty Keys Prophecy to stop… his name is…”

Boggly Tree; Waking World

Shelly and Gonshiri were outside as the former was sitting on the ground and mindlessly waving her Sand Wand. “I still don’t like this whole thing.” Shelly admitted. “When did a twerp like Jessie get to be a big deal? I kick way more butt than he does. And he can’t even use his superpowers in the real world!”
“Regardless, we agreed to help Jessie fulfill his supposed ‘destiny,’ didn’t we?” Gonshiri reminded.

“I still can’t even believe this whole ‘Apocalypse’ thing. I just don’t want Uncle Andrew to raise a zombie army, and I also wanna save my less-graders from that Bill Cipher weirdo.”

“But according to the Elder, Jessie and Spongebob are the only types of people who can defeat a Dream Demon. As strong as you are, simple earthbending wouldn’t work.”

“This Sand Wand is totally useless, too. I mean, in the desert I’m a badass, but talkin’ about concrete or marble, what can this piece of junk do, besides pick up little grains?”

“Which is utterly useless if my chi is limited to DUST!” Shelly shouted.

“And my studies of the Quartzite Family prove otherwise.” Gonshiri narrowed her eyes in annoyance. “A sandbender who develops their skills becomes a formidable force in almost any landscape. This is because sandbenders can destroy entire landscapes into deserts. What was once a marble temple becomes a pile of sand under their power. What I understand from reading about the Quartzites is that their power is destruction.”

“Pssh, I thought lavabenders had that honor.” Shelly snickered.

“That’s true, too.” Shiri smiled lightly. “But lavabenders can solidify their rock, and by extension make sand into one body again.” Shiri looked up reflectively, “Then there were the metalbenders, Hornfels. I read that they were very smart people who specialized in archaeology. Through mastering their abilities, they could return any solidified rock to its pure form, such as gold or platinum, and they could locate all of the pure quantities inside rocks. As you might surmise, the Hornfels were hugely responsible for technology and industrial development. Then as for the Granites, well, they were considered the leaders because they saw the beauty in Earth and earthbending. To harness nature from a very core element.” Gonshiri softly rubbed the soil. “Where plants grow, water flows, where shadows rest upon, what makes space so diverse, that is Earth.”

“I’m complaining about my crappy sandbending, I didn’t ask for a history lesson.”

“For your information,” Gonshiri spoke fast and angrily, “I only know all that stuff from my forced studies, which YOU didn’t have to endure because you’ve been living the simple life with human peasants, you never had to worry about a thing because you’re so unintelligent!!”

“So I can break anything into sand, is that what you’re saying? Okay, so how do I do that?”

“Develop your Seismic Sense so that your chi can burrow into the very confines of the ground. Then you force your chi to destroy the ground it connects with.”

“Perfect. I’ll just go ahead and do that.” Shelly remarked sarcastically.

“Uh, excuse me, princesses?” They turned right as Punio approached them. He had dark-gray stripes and a green ball antenna. “The Elder says that Spongebob and Jessie are wrapping up their training. With that in mind, we’re setting up to take you all to the Tree of Beginning. I’m sure your mom must be worried.”

“Since when do a bunch of tree mice have a ship?” Shelly questioned.
“Since these tree mice became the Puni Kids Next Door, a division of the Minish Kids Next Door.” Gonshiri replied.

“And HOW long have you known that??”

“I’m the princess, I have to know all of my operatives. The Punis are a stealth sector, so that’s why I didn’t say anything.”

They entered the tree and traveled to a high balcony, where Sandy was trying to keep a half-awake Spongebob and Jessie standing. “Nnnnn, don’ worry, Mrs. Puff, one-thousand, two-hundred and sixty-seven’s a charm…” Spongebob mumbled.

“May I stomp on Shelly now…” Jessie wobbled.

“No, Jessie, that’s mean.” Sandy replied politely.

“The first thing I’ma do is stomp you when I’m bigger, Shorts.” Shelly declared.

“Before you kids leave, take this with you.” The Puni Elder came with a bubble bottle of pink soap. Sandy picked it up and studied it. “Those are Sleepytime Suds, the very same bubbles I used to draw those two into slumber. Tell Jessie to use them whenever he needs to put somebody to sleep. Bubble Dreamers of old used them to help rid the demons inside peoples’ heads.”

“Thank you, Mr. Elder. But, how would Jessie be able to tell when-”

“THAT’S MISS ELDER TO YOU!” Elder scared the girl with her giant size, then shrunk. “The reason I’m giving it to you is because of Bill Cipher and James McGarfield. Jessie will only be able to fight Bill inside the Dream World, leaving his mortal body vulnerable to James. The only safe option is for Jessie and Spongebob to fight them both in the Dream World. And that’s not to mention all of McGarfield’s subordinates. Seeing as McGarfield’s the United States President, you kids will need one hell of an army.”

“An…An army?” Sandy spoke with worry.

“The Apocalypse is coming, so everyone is being put to the test. Including you kids. The battle that is about to happen may shake the whole world, and the outcome may surprise everyone. You young whippersnappers better be prepared.”

“Here come the ships!” Punio announced. “Get ready to board!!”

Shelly and Gonshiri gasped at the magnified sounds of flapping wings. A swarm of Jabbies were coming, their eyes spinning and their mouths as spiky as ever. “IT’S THE JABBIES!” Shelly screamed.

“Turn me to normal so I can swat their asses!!”

“No no, it’s okay!” Punio exclaimed. “The Jabbies are on our side, they just thought you were intruders before! We can ride them to Europe, they’ll get the big people, too.”

Shelly and Gonshiri seated their selves on individual Jabbi, whom were laid down and big as one-man planes to their sizes. Groups of Jabbi roped the arms of Sandy, Jessie, and Spongebob, and had the means of lifting them in the air. “Are you sure this is safe?” Sandy asked.

“This isn’t the first time they lifted humans.” Punio replied, seated on the Captain Jabbi. “In fact, you guys are kinda lightweight. Let’s go!” He kicked his Jabbi. “To Minish Kingdom, Europe!”

The Elder watched all of her children and the others fly away. Sandy’s look of worry didn’t change as she watched the Boggly Tree shrink in the distance, while the horizon grew closer. Even if it was destiny, she feared for the fate that was in store for her brother. Jessie was still half-awake; no matter how much Elder talked about ‘Bubble Dreaming,’ he still looked completely helpless in that state. She prayed that everything would turn okay. A single dollar bill was flapping halfway out of Jessie’s pocket, and the Eye of Providence stared from the paper.

Bill Cipher watched them from this very dollar. His eye narrowed with interest. “Well, well, well. The Bubble Dreamers are coming for me again. Then I guess that means… IT’S TIME TO GO TO WAR.” His eyes viewed the scene over Washington, flashing images of the Teen Ninjas, Li’l Gideon, King Sandy, then President Jimmy.

Twilight Town

The friends of Sector V yawned and stretched awake. It was a crisp and clear… sunset in this time-frozen land of Twilight Town. The kids felt refreshed after their sudden battle last ‘night,’ and they weren’t in a hurry to leave Twilight Town right away. Besides, it seemed Dillon had some rekindling to do with his shadow, thankfully they didn’t need to worry about him combusting in the sunlight anymore.

Dillon was currently lain on the ground within a garden of bushes, staring at the full moon in the magenta sky. “Any idea what the science is behind this place?” he asked Mario. “Like, how could the sun be in one place forever, for this particular town? Even assuming it’s an illusion, it’s still being projected millions of light-years away, isn’t it?”

I’m as clueless as you, Master. Mario replied.

“I’m just not gonna think about it.” Dillon laid still and closed his eyes to clear his head of that thought. He reopened to stare at the yellow moon. “So what exactly are you mad about, again?”

I don’t know… For the past few days, I feel like I’ve been getting pushed too hard. And I couldn’t force myself to fight like you want me to because inside I sensed your true feelings. I always wanted to think that I was a part of you that you cared about, not just some means of power.

“That’s why shadowbenders talk to their shadows, isn’t it? Because it’s their power?”

That’s what I mean. You were truthful with what you said to Daphne. Because of shadowbenders, we shadows don’t have to act as still and silent as we do, we feel like we have a conscience. But I also know that you wanted me back because you wanted to feel powerful again. I sensed your unspoken fear with having no means except Midna to protect yourself.

“Why the heck wouldn’t I feel afraid, I was going to burn up in sunlight.” Dillon spoke with a logical and angered tone. “Why accuse me for wanting to protect myself, it’s no different from the other guys. Aurora didn’t even think we could beat that woman before you turned me all giant.”

I admit that part of the reason I did that was to make up for all the times I failed you for something. You could call it a means of ‘tough’ or ‘ironic’ love, but at least I didn’t let you explode.

“That comforts me.” Dillon rolled his eyes. “All I mean to say is if Chris’s firebending could talk, or Mason’s poisonbending, they’d tell it to work harder. And why shouldn’t they, after what happened to Mr. Uno, why shouldn’t they want to get as powerful as they can?”

I’m your shadow, Dillon, you think I don’t have a clue with what’s been going on here at all? I know why you want to get more powerful, I would’ve been glad to help you, but Shadow is the only element that has a conscious, and it can feel when its master is spiteful toward whatever. All I’m saying is I didn’t want to be thought of as just a way for you to have power. Even against the Apocalypse, I want to feel like I’m your friend, too.

“You are my friend, Mario.” Dillon stroked his shadow’s hair (really stroking the ground). “I didn’t mean to say- or, think all those things… I guess I just got a little frustrated. I mean, this Apocalypse thing came outta nowhere, I guess I feel a little… behind. You remember Sheila’s little show, don’t you?”

Sigh… I guess that isn’t your fault, either. When Cheren made that announcement, I felt your worry strongly. None of us could have seen it coming. Both of us wanted time to grow with each other, but this forces us to push ourselves against our own will. I guess I shouldn’t hate you for getting a little frustrated. My anger is yours, after all, and it isn’t just because I’m your shadow.

“Well… even if I do get a little mad at you, I don’t want you to leave me, Mario. I want to have someone – besides Mason and the guys – I can be worried with and vent my anger to. You’ve been with me for so long, Mario; you really are a part of me, so I guess I never thought about our… friendship much.”

You humans have that weakness often, but it’s alright. I’ll tolerate your anger and stay with you until the end, Master.

Dillon smiled and patted his shadow’s head. “I love you, Mario.”

Now you’re just being narcissistic.

“k you, Mario.” He punched the shadow lightly.

Meanwhile, Haruka had decided to visit the clothing store, and dragged Mason along with her. “Which do you think would look cuter?” Haruka asked him, holding two Twili dresses. “Blue-to-white gradient or violet-to-orange?”

“I’m not a fashion expert, Gothic Lolita.” Mason replied with a grumpy frown.

“You go shopping with Mom all the time, Pocket Mason.” Haruka smirked wryly. “You expect me to think all her cute clothes aren’t ‘cause you picked ‘em?”

“Fine, I’ll help you as long as you don’t use that nickname again. Speakin’ of which…” Mason decided to look at his phone, and saw a text message from Carol. “Maybe she rescued Mr. York.” He clicked the message labeled To Cheren, though he was confused by the title. “…Huh?”

“What is it?” Haruka asked.

Before she got an answer, Mason rushed out of the store and saw Aurora observing a pig pen. “Aurora!” She looked over to see him come. “Check it out!” Mason showed her his phone.

The message featured flashlight-lit blueprint images of NFL Stadiums, and “X” marks on each of them. “‘Teen Ninjas gonna attack Moonbase, Arctic, and Undersea with Footbombs. Let Cheren know ASAP. :Heart: Carol.”

“You think she found that out while helping Dillon’s dad?” Mason asked.

“I’m sending this to Cheren right away.” Aurora stated, quickly tapping buttons on Mason’s phone. “I wonder if this is because we caught one of their Leaders?”

“We only caught Daphne last night, they couldn’t have planned this so quickly. I wonder if they “Sigh, well I just sent Cheren the message. I’m sending it to Francis too, get as many people in on this.”

They ran around to all their teammates to tell them of Carol’s message, so they sent messages to different friends of theirs, like Harry to Sunni, Artie to Danny, Dillon to Leanne, while said boy also texted Carol to ask if Dad was saved. (Dillon wouldn’t expect his father to wanna come home afterwards, ergo his mother couldn’t call to confirm this.) “That reminds me, has anyone seen Midna?” Dillon asked. “I didn’t see her in our room, so I thought she already got up.”

“Why don’t we go ask Aunt Victoria?” Harry asked.

However, when they entered the Shady Inn, the woman in question was absent from the reception desk. “Hellooo? Aunt Victoria?” Dillon called.

THUMP. THUMP. They started at the sound of the forceful bang against the closet door behind the desk. Kirie climbed over and opened it—Victoria Anderson tumbled out, tied up and gagged. The kids gasped as Kirie pulled off the gag. “Finally, I was waiting for someone to get up.” Victoria gasped. “Kids, I saw Midna get kidnapped by three Twili!”

“What?! Who?” Dillon exclaimed.

“It was those three employees who showed you to your room!”

“How far did they get?” Aurora asked. “Maybe we can find a trace!”

“I think I found one.” Django called, standing outside as he looked up to the building’s roof. “Guys, out here!”

They all ran out to join him, and gaped at the sight of the Meowth hot-air balloon floating over the inn. “Prepare for trouble, we are not what we seem!” a woman’s voice declared.

“Make it double, under twilight’s gleam!” Two figures appeared on the roof of Shady Inn. The male and female employees that Victoria mentioned had a still-sick Midna tied up.

“To protect the world from devastation!” the woman began.

“To unite all people within our nation.”

“To denounce the evils of twerps on adventure!”

“To extend our reach is our conjecture!”

“James!” He threw off his.

“Surrender now, ‘cause we’re on the rise, son!”

“Meeeeowth: that’s right, Hun!” Meowth concluded.

“Woooobuffet!”
“Chiiiiime.” Chimecho sang.

“Yaaaay, they brought Chimecho back!” Aurora applauded softly.

“Are you guys from the same group as Butch and Cassidy—who’m I kidding, I watch Pokémon.” Chris stopped himself.

“Oh, so you met Butch and Cassidy, did you?” Jessie smirked. “Unfortunately for you, those two are small-time compared to us three.”

“Yeah, but it’ll only take one of us to take you down!” Django strummed his guitar and blasted an energy beam.

“Wobuffet, use Counter!” Jessie ordered.

“Wooobuffet!” The blue blob glowed red and bounced the laser back to the ground, blowing the kids apart with an explosion.

Chris tossed twin beams of fire, but- “Pumpkaboo, use Shadow Ball!” Jessie summoned the floating Ghost Pokémon.

“Pumpkaboo!” It formed a black-and-purple sphere that struck Chris’s flames and exploded into smoke.

“Chimecho, catch them with psychic!” James declared.

“Chiiiiime.” The wind chime Pokémon lifted the 11 kids high into the air, steadily squeezing them tighter. Django felt his bones about to crack while the humans felt like their blood would squirt out like jelly.

“I think we made our point quite clear!” Meowth said proudly.

“Clearer than the cleanest glass.” Jessie agreed.

“Oh, don’t make me laugh.” A gruff voice stated.

“HM?” Team Rocket turned the opposite direction. A yellow bolt of lightning flew up from above and struck the balloon, swallowing it in smoke. “AAAAAAAH!” In the next second, the three agents and their Pokémon were seen flying across the orange sky. “Team Rocket’s blasting off already?!” (“Wobuffet!”) Twinkle.

The Sector V operatives landed on the ground and rubbed the sore spots. Dillon noticed Midna landed a few feet away, so he scrambled to get over and untie her. “Midna. Are you okay?”

“Uuuugh… I knew there was something funny about that soup they gave me.”

“That was awfully convenient.” Aurora said. “Who do we have to thank for that?”

“Me.” Stated the same gruff voice.

The kids except for Django gaped at their appearance. A tall, black shadow with a long beard, and bright yellow eyes, floated beside a short leprechaun with orange hair and two horns, one big and one small. “GRANDFATHER?!” Aurora exclaimed.

“Chancellor Cole?!” Haruka followed.
“I assume by the looks on your faces that my great-grandson hasn’t mentioned us, yet?” Grandfather smirked.

“Chris…?” Everyone looked at the Uno boy curiously.

“I found them in one of the rooms at the inn yesterday.” Chris admitted. “I was gonna tell you guys, but…”

“Please, do not be alarmed, kids.” Grandfather smiled openly, sinking to the ground beside Cole. “I’m not here to harm anyone. In fact, I happen to have special rights in this town. I am the King of Shadows, after all.”

“Since when?” Artie asked unbelievingly.

“Since he married the Shadow Queen, Malevolous Djinn.” Midna remembered.

“Correct.” Grandfather winked. “Which is why I come here every now and again for vacation. After all, it is the setting where my beloved wife is buried.” He frowned sadly. “For 50 years, ever since she was murdered by Ganondorf.”

“You know, I always wondered about that.” Mason said. “If you guys’ great-grandmother was the Shadow Queen, aren’t you part-shadow?” he asked the Unos.

“Quite the contrary.” Grandfather raised a finger. “My descendants are part-Twili! Malevolous was born an ordinary mortal, who achieved a very long life force through the aid of her shadow. That is, after she became a Logia shadowbender. But alas, even the most powerful of creatures is nothing to a sick devil like Ganon.” His features furrowed. “Enough about me, however. Chris told me what’s been taking place during my absence. Is it true that my grandson is dead?”

The friends exchanged solemn looks. They looked at him and nodded.

“That’s a shame.” Grandfather bowed his head, as did Cole. “And a trifle curious.” They looked up quizzically. “Is it not true that Malladus’s genes passed on to you afterwards?”

“Whaddyou mean?” Aurora raised a brow.

“Hmmm… I guess it hasn’t.” Grandfather stared up at the sky, stroking his beard in thought. “Interesting…”

“Wait a minute, this guy is your grandfather?” Django spoke up. “You guys are related to the Demon King?!”

“Did we forget to mention?” Aurora asked.

“I say, Sire, I don’t believe we’ve seen that one before.” Chancellor Cole said, floating down to observe Django up close. The leprechaun was a few inches shorter than the skeleton.

“No, Cole, I believe we haven’t.” Grandfather smirked. “But there is an interesting presence radiating from him. Tell me, boy… are you familiar with Lucifer?”

“Doesn’t sound familiar.” Django folded his arms coolly and turned away.

“Don’t play coy with us!” Cole shouted. “Every decent mortal’s at least heard of Lucifer! Especially if they’ve come back from the dead!”

“Guess I shoulda paid more attention in history.” Django flicked Cole’s forehead with his boney finger before walking away. “I’m goin’ to the forest to look for dead animals. Don’t wait up.”

“Wonder what his deal is.” Chris thought aloud quietly. “So, who was Lucifer, exactly?” he asked Grandfather.

“The short story is, he’s the reason we Unos exist.” Grandfather replied.

Twilight Forest

A gassy purple ghost with a white mask, pointed red nose, and yellow eyes led her terrified, white-skinned human sidekick through the dark forest. “W-W-Wuya?” Jack Spicer, evil boy genius, stuttered. “These shadows give me the creeps. W-What’d you say we came here for again?”

“Someone very important to me, of course.” Wuya hissed. “You still have the Shen Gong Wu, right?”

“Uh-huh.” Jack pulled out an octagon-shaped mirror with a fancy design, and a wooden trinket that curled on one end, but had a red eye inside a black space on the other end. “The Reversing Mirror and Zing Zom-Bone. Right?”

“Yes, boy. We are almost at the place… ah-ha!” Wuya’s mouth (which didn’t move while she talked) became a wide smile. Jack saw they had arrived at a graveyard of deceased Twili. There were all sorts of names Jack didn’t recognize, while one of the graves was written in jumbled letters: \( WKH \text{KHURHV RI WKH XQLYHUVH DUH ZLFRNHQV! KRRUDR IRU HOOHQ! } \)

Wuya floated to the largest grave in the center, a stone tomb that was atop some stairs, perfectly exposed to the twilight. Jack joined her up there. “Jackie, boy… would you be interested in a little story?”

“Okay?”

“This world is closely connected with our own on the Dimensional Plane, as you may know. One thousand years ago, the Xiaolin Warriors banished my spirit into this world, using a Shen Gong Wu imbued with Space Chi. Lost and lonely,” Wuya frowned for a second, then grinned evilly, “I was taken in by a marvelous lady, the Queen of Shadows. As time passed, I came to call her my ‘sister.’ Then, around 80 years ago, the two of us met two fetching young demons. I forget the one she fell for, but I was in love with another: Cole Fulbright! The old man took pity on my disembodied soul, so he conducted a ritual, to allow my ghost to inhabit the body of a simple Irish woman. My body was mortal, but my soul was not, so we bypassed those anti-mortal laws and had a son!”

“Wait, you had a son in this world?!” Jack exclaimed. “When were you gonna tell me that??”

“I was going to tell you after the Brotherhood conquered the world, but clearly I had my hopes too high.” Wuya rolled her eyes. “It doesn’t matter now. It was then, approximately 50 years ago, when a man called Ganondorf attacked our family. He killed the body I was inhabiting, was court-martialed in the Underworld, then he killed my older sister.” Wuya looked sad again. “Cole was very sympathetic, and protective towards me. He helped me find a wormhole in space that went back to my home universe, where Ganondorf could never find me if he attacked again. Then a couple decades later, I met you.” She looked disbelieved. “I never lived that down.”

“Hey!”

“Which BRINGS us to the reason why we’re here!” Wuya shot to Jack’s face, grinning with malice. “Jack Spicer… use the Zing Zom-Bone on this grave! Then, combine it with the Reversing Mirror, and the corpse inside will be free and, partially alive!”
Jack gulped, looking at the tomb. He knew exactly who this was now, but the idea of a reanimated corpse freaked him out either way. “Zing Zom-Bone!” He zapped the tomb with the artifact. “Reversing Mirror!” Then shone the mirror’s light.

The tomb quaked, and the lid slid open as Jack tumbled backwards down the steps. Wuya smirked with pure evil and madness in her eyes. The shadows of the trees and graves became more black. Gray, wrinkly, decaying hands clutched the sides of the tomb as the body climbed out. “Yeeees… YEEEEES!” Wuya’s hissed voice screamed. “Behold, Jack Spicer… my adoptive sister! The Queen of the Shadow Realm!” The corpse sat completely upright, her mouth and right eye drooped open. The grayish gold, jeweled crown sat on her head of long, grey hair. “Malevolous Djinn!”

I’ve been going through a lot of stress lately, and it’s having an effect on my stories. You probably don’t wanna hear it, but it is what it is. X/ You could say the ‘Bubbling’ was inspired from Steven Universe, but I didn’t really notice it until I was writing. The Twilight Town Arc may conclude next chapter, then the rest of Presidents Saga will be focusing on defeating Bill and Jimmy. Stay tuned. P.S., the fact that Jessie will have to fight James is a total coincidence. XOXO
The Black Queen

Chapter Summary

Sheila explores the dreamscape of a girl named Madotsuki. Sector V battles the Shadow Queen.

I forgot to mention that Malevolous is basically the Shadow Queen from Paper Mario, so she’s sort of half-OC. I remember way back then, I always thought Grandfather was like a Shadow King, and I imagined them being a pairing, so there’s that origin. Same idea with Shadow Queen and Wuya being sisters. Anyhoo, let’s stuff. Cryptogram is A1Z26, but it’ll be tricky to figure out.

Chapter 38: The Black Queen

Twilight Forest Graveyard

“Behold, Jack Spicer: my adoptive older sister, the Queen of Shadows, Malevolous Djinn!” Wuya announced once again (in case people missed the recap). The boy genius crawled backward in fright as the grey, towering zombie rose taller. “Malevolous, it’s me! It’s Wuya, your favorite witch!” The ghost looked ecstatic. “I came back to revive you, just like I said I would! I hoped to be in better shape than what you see now, but it all worked out! We’ll get my body back soon enough.”

“Уууунунун… ннннуууухх…” The droopy-faced zombie moaned and wobbled mindlessly. Jack wondered when it was going to lunge for him and eat his brain. …Malevolous’s corpse fell backward and plopped into her coffin.

“PAH HAHAHAHAHAHA!” Jack laughed hysterically and kicked his feet in the air. “Guess being dead for 50 years makes you a little uncoordinated! Ha ha ha ha ha!”

Wuya glared at him with anger. She flew over Malevolous with a worried expression. “Oh, Malevolous, this isn’t how I wanted you to look, either. I was going to force the Firstborn, Midna to become your shadow and revive you. These Shen Gong Wu could reanimate your corpse, but you are anything but sensible at the moment. It’s all right, dear, I’ll get you the help you need. JACK, get off your buttocks and help my sister this INSTANT!”

Jack sighed and snapped his fingers, summoning two Jackbots to pick Malevolous up by the arms. Once she was on her feet, other Jackbots came to help her get down from the gravestone. “Malevolous, it’s alright. Everything’s going to be okay.” Wuya spoke comfortably. “We’ll restore you to full power, and then you’ll conquer the world!” She smirked devilishly. “I still remember the spell that Cole used for me! Once I get my body back, I will use it for you—I will find you a vessel and—”

“NUUH!” Malevolous swung an arm, Jack yelped and ducked, inching backward as the zombie panted. “Taaah… taaaay… tah-me-bah… TAY MAY bah…”

“Maybe we should wake her up in the morning?” Jack wondered with fear.
“Malevolous dear, what’s wrong?” Wuya asked.

“Tay may bah… teh may back… Derrrrrse!”

Tree of Beginning, Europe

A swarm of Jabbi glided over the mountains as the enormous tree came into view. They were set to land within a narrow tunnel several meters up the tree, which in reality was a hangar. Jessie, Sandy, and Spongebob had to crouch slightly, seeing the Minish guards stand aside so a path was clear for them. “Before we actually let you pass, whose orders was it to bring full-size humans in here?” a Minish operative questioned. “As well as some oversized sponge creature?”

“My orders.” Gonshiri climbed off of her Jabbi and approached the guard in a regal fashion.

“Princess Gonshiri!” The Minish bowed. “You finally got saved? You have to tell Numbuh Hundred Acres ASAP, he’s been worried sick!”

“I have every intention. Now move aside, you can’t trust these half-awake lugs not to crush anyone.” The princess waved her hand to gesture them aside as she walked.

From his 50 Minish-feet high throne, Supreme Leader Lenari saw two big humans and a sponge approaching, escorted by a troupe of Punies. If nothing else drew his curiosity, it was this. He leapt off the throne with the intention of greeting Punio, but saw that two other tinies were leading ahead of him. “Princess?!?” the leader exclaimed with shock. “You’re back! And…And Shelly?”

“That’s Princess Shelly to you.” She informed thusly. “Twin Princess Shelly?”

“Excuse me?”

“Lenari, meet my long-lost half-human sister.” Gonshiri smiled regally.

“. . .” Lenari processed everything for a minute. The humans and sponge were weird enough. “Well, maybe Punio would like to fill me in. You should go tell your mother you’re okay, she’s in her room. …I’m sure she would know if she had a human daughter.” With that, Gonshiri nodded and led Shelly away.

Punio walked forward and saluted with one stubby leg. “Numbuh Hundred Acres, Sir, the Minish KND have a mission. Petunia, the report.” Punio’s sister, a smaller Puni with a pink antenna, gave Lenari a leaf scroll.

Gonshiri led Shelly to the royal quarters of the tree, made of pretty glittering stone and pure green leaves. Shiri’s mom’s room had furniture made of wood and miscellaneous decorations found only in their world. Shiri knocked on the closed bedroom door. A Minish woman with long eyelashes, a gold flower crown, and posh green dress answered. She gasped, “Gonshiri?”

“Hello, Mother.” Shiri smiled politely. Shelly made a smile that was half-warm and half-smirk as the taller Minish bent down and hugged her daughter, who returned the gesture.

The queen looked up at the human. “Who is this?”

“Well-p, my feelings are hurt.” Shelly folded her arms and turned away. “Some mother you are.”

“Shelly?”

“What’s up.” She turned back around.
“It…It’s really you?” Lánshelly stood up, making a hopeful smile.

“The one and only.” She smiled proudly. The human princess shortly earned a hug from her mother. Shelly shrugged and put one arm around her. “So I guess it’s all true, then.” She figured. “I’m really the Minish Princess. Same for that story about you and Dad.”

“You know what happened?” Lánshelly asked, pulling away.

“The Puni Elder told us.” Gonshiri confirmed. “However, I distinctly recall Shelly saying her mother left Father because he was an incompetent king.” She smirked.

“Well, I never met her, so that’s what I assumed!” Shelly shouted.

“Hmhmhm, Sandy did boast a lot.” The queen giggled. She then frowned, “I can’t believe that man kidnapped you, though. You aren’t hurt anywhere, are you?”

“Not much. However, my nose still feels bent from when Shelly stepped on me.”

“Shelly, don’t you know better than to crush your little sister?!” Lánshelly yelled at her daughter.

“Sister, shmister, ants get squished!” Shelly retorted.

“Well, you’re an ant now, so I hereby ground you until you’re 13.”

“Screw you, Mom, you’re not the boss of me and you’re not so big!” Shelly smirked (she was a fan of Malcolm).

“I’ll have you know I can be very ‘big’ when I need to.” The queen smirked back. “But seeing as you brought your sister back from captivity, perhaps I’ll go easy on you. How did you two escape, anyway?”

Shelly and Gonshiri recapped their long and arduous journey, from crossing Sand Kingdom, finding the Sand Wand, then flying to Kochi. “There’s something that concerns me, however.” Gonshiri said afterward. “If Father was really set on capturing me, I’m certain he would have searched by now. More specifically, searched our birthplace.”

“We haven’t had any signs of Sandy or the Government.” Lánshelly replied. “However, travel here takes a while by plane; although you all still made it.”

“I suppose it doesn’t matter for now.” Shiri resumed. “Mother, we may not be staying long. There’s something we have to do, but you’re not going to be okay with it.”

Lenari’s Throne

“YOU WANT US TO WAGE WAR ON THE AMERICAN GOVERNMENT?!” Lenari screamed after reading the scroll.

“We have no other choice!” Punio reasoned. “It wasn’t even our idea, it’s the Elder. If she says that Bill Cipher is a monster, and only the big people can stop him, we have to do what she says.”

“The Minish Kids Next Door was never meant to go to war with adult human governments!” Lenari argued. “Even if the princess were to agree with this plan, how exactly would an all-out attack on Washington benefit us?”

“Our classmates are trapped in Washington, along with many others.” Jessie told them seriously. “I’m the First Grade President at Gallagher Elementary, so it is my job to help them.”
“And Shelly is the Fourth Grade President, so she’ll be helping, too.” Sandy followed.

“That still doesn’t change the fact that we’re going against humans.” Petuni replied. “You’re all so much bigger than us. You three could crush hundreds of us in minutes.”

“Petuni, we keep telling you to not give them ideas!” a fat Puni named Puniper yelled.

“Sorry!”

“We understand that, but you’re the only army we know.” Sandy spoke pleadingly. “Well, except the Kids Next Door.”

“NO.” Jessie and Lenari said together. …Both leaders stared at each other.

“I never agreed to an official alliance, yet, so we can’t work with them.” Lenari explained.

“And if any big kids are helping us, it’s ones from our school.” Jessie stated.

“CHOKE IT UP, Whippersnapper!” Punio yelled, scaring them. “That’s what Elder would say. Numbuh Hundred Acres, we’re not even trying to destroy the American government, we just need to get Jessie and Spongebob to Bill and President Jimmy so they can fight them. But they’ll need to fight them in the Dream World, so one of the bad guys’ helpers could hurt them if they’re asleep. That’s why we need a lot of people supporting them. It may be against Minish Code, but even all of our Pikmin would have a hard time against those big people. The Kids Next Door could help us…”

“The World Government hates the Minish, they’re generous enough by not attacking us directly.” Lenari argued. “If we just up and attack America, what’ll that mean for us?! Mass and legal extermination!”

“But if we were aligned with the Human Kids Next Door, they could protect us from the WG. Besides, didn’t you hear any news about this ‘Apocalypse’? The Government’s going crazy about it, they’re blaming the Minish for some reason, so sooner or later, they’re gonna get us, anyway! I personally don’t know what could result from this battle, even if we win, but it would be nice if we weaken the Government any way we can. If the WG’s using a monster like Bill to do their work, we gotta help these humans beat him.”

Lenari huffed and smacked his hand onto his forehead. “I never even heard of ‘Bill Cipher’ until today, I never cared about what America was doing to other countries, why is this suddenly our responsibility?!”

“Because the princess orders it.” Everyone whipped around to look at Gonshiri and Shelly, whose mother was behind them. Gonshiri spoke, “The World Government kidnapped me for their insane purposes. If we allow Bill Cipher to run even part of the scene, they’ll have more than enough manpower to capture me again, and burn down our entire kingdom just to do that. I can’t verify anything about the ‘Apocalypse’ or ‘Twenty Locks’ (“Keys.” Punio said), but as Princess and vice-leader of this Kids Next Door, I have to agree with the best possible means of protecting everyone.”

Lenari let out a long, hard sigh. “Do you actually agree with this, Your Highness?”

“Of course I don’t, the children of my kingdom are going to war.” Lánshelly stated. “But my daughter and that young Puni are right. I would like to hope there’s still good in my husband, but we can’t trust any of the World Government not to attack us. I may be an adult, but I’m not oblivious to anything the Kids Next Door are up to. You are strong, to be sure, but if those two human leaders from before would like an alliance, it would do no harm to trust them. Their strength can help you.”

“Are you really sure, Your Highness?” Lenari asked.

Lánsheully smiled. “I’ve read stories of many strong and noble humans—or big people in general. The Fairy Sisters of Ancient Avalar, the Earthbender Families, and I was proud to bare witness to the Human Kids Next Door’s heroic acts 20-plus years ago. Forgive this adult for telling you how to do things. It’s only a considerate mother’s suggestion.”

Lenari looked at Gonshiri, then to Punio, then to Jessie, who put on a half-interested, accepting look and gave a shrug. “All right.” Lenari decided. “I’ll go to the nearest Human KND sector and get them in contact with Moonbase. I’ll explain our dilemma to their leader, then no matter their decision, our fate is set: we will attack Washington at High Noon tomorrow!”

“YEEEEAAAAAH!” As Minish, Punies, and Pikmin alike were cheering, the room ringing with squeaks in the big peoples’ ears, a short Minish scampered up to the Supreme Leader.

“Numbuh Hundred Acres, Sir!” the Minish saluted with an Australian-ish accent. “We just received word from our sector in Virginia! Our Pikmin Instructors, Sappo and Gibli, were spotted in the possession of King Sandy. They’re currently at the human school, Gallagher Elementary.”

“What?!” Shelly stepped forward. “What’s he doing there?”

“Well, uh, our reports say that the school ground was turned into sand. The kids inside are trapped.”

Shelly’s eyes widened with realization. Gonshiri knew it was obvious, even to her. Sandy was using Shelly’s subjects to lure them into a trap. “…’Guess I’ll give him what he wants.’ She smirked and punched her palm.

“For the record, people will get confused between my sister and Shelly’s dad.” Jessie informed. “How ‘bout we just remember to call him ‘King’ Sandy?”

“And I’ll be Vice-President Sandy!” the girl beamed.

“Too long, you’ll just be Sandy.”

“Okay.” She frowned.

Hall of Doors

Sheila, Globox, and the still-caged Rayman followed Murfy to a portal labeled Mado no Nikki. It was represented by two ghosts with swirly tails, with black bodies (one had purple outline and one had pink), and both leaked drool. “So what’s in this place again?” Sheila asked.

“This is where the Magician is hanging out.” Murfy recapped. “It’s a dreamscape that belongs to a 12-year-old girl called ‘Madotsuki.’” His info was based from the Manual. “He chose this place because it’s really weird and maze; the Hoodlums would never think to look here. Haha, if you think about it, her name is a mix of Maddy and Suki’s names! The kid kinda looks like ‘em too, maybe these two Fuse like in Steven Universe? I’m gonna flip ahead and see if that happens.” Murfy quickly flipped pages forward.

“Put that spoilbook away so we can get going!” Sheila yelled, jumping in the portal before Globox and Rayman.
“Okay okay! Just let me bookmark.” Murfy put a bookmark in his chosen page—the Manual had bookmarks in every section. He flew in after them. (Play “Forest World” from Yume Nikki.)

Stage 49: Mado no Nikki

Mission: Find the Magician’s residence.

Sheila appeared within a vast forest of coniferous trees, where the sky and invisible ground were pitch-black. A tremendous image floated in the sky: to the best of Sheila’s analyzation, it was a red Egyptian monkey god, staring at her with hexagonal yellow eyes, and had a tail that curled in a square, with a black hand with a face reaching out from its bottom-right—it was just weird. There were a couple of ways to go in the forest, so Sheila chose a random path. “So apparently this level’s from some horror game.” Murfy read from the Manual. “In fact, after the Presidents Saga, we’re gonna have a lot of horror crossovers. Mary’s even a central character in the next saga, if you don’t know about her, she…”

Murfy’s voice droned out. Sheila was lost in the forest, long separated from the group. She encountered one of the purple-outline ghosts that were outside the portal. She reached to touch it, then the ghost latched itself to Sheila’s head via its green drool. Sheila shook her head, grabbing the drool in attempt to yank the ghost off, but had no luck. With annoyance and disgust, Sheila walked forward. She wandered aimlessly for a few minutes, encountering similar ghosts with pink outline, and as she grew more lost, seven of the two different ghosts latched onto her head with drool. The ooze was covering her eyes, so Sheila walked forward with her hands outstretched, feeling around the trees. She was close to finding her way even less, and had no means of ditching these ghosts.

“AAAAAH!” She heard the familiar scream that belonged to Globox. “Sh-Sheila? Don’t look now, but there’s a bunch of ghosts on your head!”

“Okay, I won’t look.” she said sarcastically. “But someone’s gonna need to be my eyes if I ain’t.” Globox took Sheila’s hand and led her through the forest, however the toad had as much idea where to go as Sheila.

“Oooo, Sheila, look at these weird rectangles!” Globox spoke ecstatically after minutes of wandering. “Oh wait, I guess you can’t. Maybe Murfy can tell us what they’re for—MURFYYYYY! You aren’t chatting up that frog, are you? Oh well, let’s keep goin’.” Globox led Sheila between the parallel, green zigzag rectangles—they were suddenly taken out of the forest and into a field of large face carpets. A group of seven, skinny bird-like people—with brown hair in pigtails, normal clothing, and crazy purple eyes—quickly walked toward Sheila’s direction.

“Sheila, watch out!” Murfy yelled. “Those are Toriningen, if they catch you, you won’t be able to escape unless you wake up!”

Said Toriningen were attacked by the ghosts drooling over Sheila, allowing her to wipe her eyes clean. She seized the moment and ran around the Toriningen with Globox. This Face Carpet Plaza had odd and creepy face carpets that were cyan and purple, with smaller variations that had spikes sticking out. The plaza was surrounded by a spike wall, so Sheila searched around for a place to go. The purple face in the down-right corner had a squinted left eye, so when Sheila stomped this eye, a yellow Power Can came out. Sheila touched it and became imbued with Shock Gloves.

“Sweet, a new power, and totally erases the Flight Suit from the story.” Murfy spoke (the yellow can was the Flight Suit in Rayman 3). “Use that to power things up. You know, pointy objects are conductive too, right?”
Sheila wouldn’t know that, but as far as Dream World went, the raccoon began punching electric at each of the face carpets’ spikes. “No no, don’t punch the cyan ones, those will only power them up!” Sheila rolled her eyes and instead punched the spikes on the purple faces. By this time, the Toriningen were chasing her again, and Sheila’s own Light Spheres couldn’t hurt them. After she lit all the purple spikes, the floor within their center shone with energy. Sheila lured the Toriningen across, but ran off this floor herself, watching as lightning struck down and destroyed all the Toriningen. Globox, who was cowering in the corner, looked back up and sighed in relief. Sheila saw that the gateway out of the plaza was sealed, so she used her Shock Fists to ignite the spikes on the cyan faces. Globox wandered mindlessly onto the energy ground that formed, and when the lightning struck him, he was imbued with enough adrenaline to run around, crashing and bouncing many parts of the wall of spikes (Sheila having to dodge him at some points), until Globox finally burst through the gate.

From here, Sheila ventured into another forest area, with a prettier night sky of stars, and lampposts one would find in parks. Globox was already conked out from that energy boost, so Sheila was glad she didn’t do the same. This path was more straightforward, though a few routes led her into dead ends. She found an open area of lampposts, in which one of them was turned off. Sheila realized her Shock Fist ran out of juice, so she rushed back, grabbed the Power Can, and returned to the lamppost to shoot and activate it. When Sheila touched the post afterward, she warped to an alternate dimension with a pink and purple wavy sky, in which she was secluded on a platform of same-color tiles. Sheila opened a wardrobe to find an Electoon cage. She punched it open, then touched the lamppost to warp back to the forest.

The route led her into a mall of some sort. The interior walls had bluish-purple, block-like tiles, while the floor and ceilings were black. The shoppers had various colors of skin and clothing—some bright and some darker, but none of them had faces. Sheila couldn’t talk with any of them, so she bypassed them all and walked up an escalator. There was a shoe store close by, and along the shelves were various shoes that came in single pairs. “Easter Egg alert, these shoes belong to horror game characters.” Murfy commented, startling Sheila with his appearance. “There’s even a footnote section that tells you specifically. Want me to read it, or you wanna get on with the stage? Just break that box there if you do.”

Sheila released an annoyed “Ugh” and punched the box open, releasing a Crazy Sandal. When Sheila touched it, as what happened in Fly High Tower, she shrunk into one of her own sandals, while the other one drove away. Sheila drove her current sandal and chased the crazy one across the mall’s walkway, maneuvering around the standing or walking shoppers. On the other side of the mall, Sheila chased the Crazy Sandal into an open air vent, driving up its slope and slowing down to avoid giant fan blades. The vent came out over the building’s roof, where the crisp morning sun poked over the horizon, under a misty cloudy sky. Sheila chased the Crazy Sandal around the rooftop and rammed it several times with her own sandal like bumper cars. After dealing the required number of hits, Sheila stretched back to normal.

Sheila had a terrific view of a city from up here—miles above the planet’s surface. Over one edge of the building, she felt a light gust of wind blowing upward. Sheila jumped off and spun her tail, kept aloft in the air by the gust. She slowly floated through misty clouds, maneuvering around the witches on broomsticks that went unseen except for their shadows. To her left, Sheila noticed the small, faint shadow of an Electoon cage, so she punched a sphere to break it open. As Sheila neared the end of the mist, the cloudy sky became indigo again. It was nighttime, but there were no stars in the sky.

Sheila set foot on the edge of a dock, within a vast, endless ocean that reflected the sky’s blue. Lampposts stood up from the water and served as the only lights. The docks turned many corners and together formed a maze. There were mysterious faceless creatures swimming in the water; at least, Sheila hoped they were swimming, and not either dead or drowning. After wandering the maze for some time, Sheila came across a hooded spirit in a brown cloak. When she touched the spirit, Sheila was warped to a rocky plain where Lizardmen roamed about. Well, that’s what Sheila decided to call them – she couldn’t make out their characteristics well as everything was pixelated, including herself.

Sheila talked to one Lizardman, but all he said was 201819. She talked to him again, he said 201518. She approached another one, he said 191225. Then he said 131415. Since they had nothing interesting to say, Sheila kept along the pixelated path. She had to navigate a maze of gray blocks – they were short enough for her to jump, but the RPG world limited her actions. In getting a little lost, Sheila discovered a pixel Electoon cage, which she could punch open (her Light Spheres only traveled a few feet in the pixel world). Sheila later found a secret path above the screen’s boundaries, which led her into an enclosing of the maze. She trekked down a stairway that led deep underground, then as she expected, she found herself within a maze of stairs.

The interior was like somebody’s house, with small dressers, lamps, and many doors on the many floors. Some of them led to new areas, whose doors led to dead ends, then back to previous areas, allowing Sheila to check other doors, then other stairs, which brought her back to previous rooms. The lowest room that Sheila could find was filled with Goblins – small, blue-skinned creatures with red clothes and green swords. Sheila’s Light Spheres defeated the Goblins in one hit, but had no effect against the Big Goblin.

Sheila retreated from the room and back up the stairs, then up another flight of stairs. The door on this secluded floor was locked. Sheila returned down the stairs and explored more routes until she found a room with a demon with light-red skin. Sheila defeated the demon with a simple Light Sphere, watching him drop a red Power Can. Sheila got the Strong Fists and quickly found her way to the Goblins’ room again. She defeated the respawned small Goblins, then bested the big one with her Strong Fist. She collected the key from him and used it to open the door on the upper floor.

Sheila exited to a pretty grassland and followed the path away from the house. She touched another gateway of purple-and-black, zigzaggy rectangles that warped her to another dark area, and was thankful to be back to a normal, non-pixelated form. As she approached a big purple house, represented by a tall top-hat with a star, Sheila saw Murfy come from the right, grunting as he carried Rayman’s cage. “This is what I meant when I said not to turn on the cyan spikes first.” He said. “Globox is pooped, he had to rest in the lounge back at that mall. Good thing I knew a shortcut to this place.”

“Shortcut woulda been nice.” Sheila admitted, looking around the dark sky. “I dunno what it is about this world… but it don’t sit right with me. I don’t like it.”

“Tell me about it.” Murfy agreed. “Little girls need to dream about ponies or boys. None of this is natural for a Dream World. Oh well.” Murfy lifted Rayman’s cage again. “Come on, let’s go tell Magician the good news. In case you’re interested, his real name’s Ales Mansay.” (End song.)

The Magician’s house featured posters of Dream Land’s scenic locations, bottles of potions, and many typical artifacts one would find in a wizard’s home. Sheila saw an animated clock, with gloves and shoes separate from its body, and when his hour hand struck ’11,’ the clock’s eyes whirled as his bells rang. The Magician was in a medical room, where a Red Lum was pinned to his desk as he gently poked it with a needle. Sheila assumed he was in the middle of an experiment. To recap, Magician wore a tall top-hat and a sleek black jacket. He was shorter than Sheila, and had a big, light-blue nose like all Teensie. He turned his head and gave a bright grin at his guests. “Hey, you guys made it!” Magician said perkily. “For a minute, I was afraid you’d get lost.
Madotsuki! Fetch our guests something to drink."

The girl in question walked in from behind purple curtains on the left. Her eyes were closed as she walked listlessly. She had brown hair in two pigtails, a pink hoody sweater with a window design on the chest, and a purple skirt. Her red shoes made little squeaks as she walked. “Oi, is this girl sleepwalkin’? Ya can’t sleepwalk in your dream, ya dumb drongo!” Sheila shouted at her.

“Don’t worry, she’s totally conscious!” Magician grinned, patting the girl’s head as she walked by. “She’s only resting her eyes, but she knows every nook and cranny in this place, so it’s alright. Her dream, after all.” Madotsuki walked into the kitchen. “Anyway, great that you’re here, how’s the quest been going Sheels, have you been collecting me them Lums?” His eyes turned big and bright at the word.

“Got ‘em right here, Sir!” Murfy pulled several giant jars of Yellow Lums out of nowhere. “Sheila’s been doin’ great, she got like two S-ranks, mostly A’s, but that’s after replayin’ a few levels. Heh, these levels are just too fun not to replay!”

“I hope you’re planning to use these ‘Looms’ to help out Raydum.” Sheila said.

“All in good time.” Magician stretched his arm and shoved all the jars away into the curtained room. “First, lay our guest of the hour on my table over here.”

Murfy carried Rayman to said table and opened his cage. He forcefully shook it until Rayman tumbled on all fours onto the table. Magician quickly cast some spells to bind Rayman’s hands and feet. Magician jumped onto Rayman’s body on the table, pulling his mouth open to peer inside. “Mmmm-hm…” He grabbed a Purple Lum out of nowhere and shoved it in Rayman’s mouth. Nothing happened. He shoved another one in. Nothing happened. Then another, another, another, and another. “That’s somethin’.”

“I’ll say. Rayman has no neck, arms, or legs!” Murfy joked.

“It’s not only that. His eardrums absorbed so much Rabbid screaming that his brain up and left his body. It might be wandering the Dream World this very minute; assuming nobody stepped on it.”

“Do ya mean we have ta go on a big quest to find Rayman’s BRAIN?” Sheila asked exasperated.

“No we don’t!” Murfy spoke eagerly, skimming the Manual. “If we go to Picture City, ‘Where art becomes real,’ we can paint him a new brain! And that’s not even the best part, the next Light is in Picture City, her name is-”

Sheila grabbed the Manual, tore its pages off, threw them on the floor, and furiously stomped and grinded them under her sandals. “NOOOOOO!” Murfy grabbed a few tiny pieces. “My Manual! My limited edition Guide to Legend of the Seven Lights, made by the one and only Catswell Patterson, same guy who made guides for all the other Gameverse stories! WHAT HAVE YOU DONE, Sheila?! That thing had all the answers, every big secret was in that book! What are we gonna do now?! I don’t know what’s gonna happen, NONE of us know! How can we possibly survive without knowing the end of the story?!”

“You spent this whole adventure buried in that piece of garbage.” Sheila scolded. “Well, I’m the captain of this voyage, so we’re going by my rules. And Cap’n Sheila says… we do this adventure the way we’re supposed to.” She winked at the camera. “Keep everyone guessing.”
“Sniff.” Murfy was sobbing, hugging the ripped bits to his chest.

“Either way, he had the right idea.” Magician said. “If you go to Picture City, you could make a new brain for Rayman. I’ll still need to conduct the surgery to get it in there; that’s gonna take a few thousand Bubble Bucks. Thankfully, we’ve been making a ton of money from Super Legends Heroes. Make sure to read that when you have time.”

“Yeah, when we’re done saving the universe.” Sheila stretched her arms. “Well-p, it’s right time for me to wake up, or me mates will miss me. Where’s the way out o’ this place?”

“Right in the kitchen.” Magician pointed. Sheila smiled in thanks and walked in, finding Madotsuki standing by the portal pedestal. She and Mado performed a silly dance to make the portal open. Sheila swirled inside.

The Magician waited until he was gone. He looked as Madotsuki returned with a cup of coffee. The Teensie drank it calmly. “Thank you, Mado. Now, if you would with this Lum?” He noted the red, winged energy ball on the table.

The Red Lum shook frantically to escape its binds, but it was hopeless. Madotsuki put her hands beside her forehead, and pulled a Sleep Bubble into being. She caught the Red Lum inside. Ales watched as the creature fell asleep, shuddering from the nightmares it was now having. “Good job, Mado. Now, why don’t you go out and play, it’s a nice day out. I’ll have more work for you later.” Without opening her eyes, Madotsuki walked to the exit and left.

The Magician entered the purple curtains, which led down a flight of stairs. He used a key to open the door to a secret passage. Ales put the Bubbled Red Lum inside a closet with many others. All those Lums were mutated, however, some growing blank white eyes, arms, legs, yet all were asleep and shuddering in their bubbles. Ales closed the door, then peeked into another closet, where all of the jarred Yellow Lums Sheila collected were placed. Ales smirked evilly, intending to conduct experiments on them later.

With that, Ales entered the main room of the passage, grinning ecstatically: Mr. Dark posters, Mr. Dark carpet, banners that read I :heart: Mr. D, fan letters to Mr. Dark, Mr. Dark T-shirts—the Teensie was totally obsessed with this one person. Ales Mansay rubbed his hands with a malicious smirk. “Just gimme a week… only one week so I can work on these Lums. I’ll create the most powerful army of mutant Lums you’ve ever seen! Then once Madotsuki lives up her worth… she’ll be the perfect sacrifice! The Waking World will be yours, Mr. Dark! Oh, but don’t worry… I’ll be sure to keep away any incursions.” His eyes narrowed to a bubble across the room: it contained a short being with a silver body, pink head, and two long tails, fast asleep. “You’ll be good and stay in here, won’t you? Thanks.” The Magician left and shut the sleeping creature in the dark.

Twilight Town

Sector V was still lingering around Twilight Town, and Grandfather and Cole were sitting at an outdoor table and slurping tapioca. The operatives still couldn’t believe how mellow these two were, knowing the terrors and atrocities they caused in the old days. Cheren called them to confirm he got their message, and he’s summoning a group of available operatives to plan an attack. “We should go to help them, too.” Aurora said. “We mostly came here to get Mario back to begin with, and he and Dillon look pretty patched up. He can claim Midna as his Firstborn later.”

“Are you still sick?” Dillon asked Midna.
“I’m feeling better.” Midna replied. “But I also feel… something else. A familiar presence… Huh?”

“EVERYBODY RUN!” a Twili screamed as many citizens were running from one side of town. “The robots are invading!!”

“Yo, what’s going on?” Virginia asked, hurrying to the center of town with Lola and Terry beside her.

“Is this another tradition they have?” Lola asked.

“I’m glad we don’t come here often.” Terry remarked.

“Wait! Look at those robots!” Django pointed.

A swarm of short robots with red eyes, no legs, metal claws, and black and dark-yellow designs flew up from the cliff around town, surrounding them. “BWAH HA hah ha!” came the cackle of the red-haired boy with a helipack. “Kids Next Door, your ultimate match has returned once again! Jack Spicer, evil boy genius, is from this point forward, the CONQUEROR of this town!”

Grandfather shot up and grabbed him by the chest. “Under WHOSE authority?!”

“Listen, you overgrown coat hanger,” Wuya flew up to Grandfather’s face and glared, “if you were wise, you would make like the other shadows and- HUUU!” The ghost gasped. “Wait! I know you! You’re…” Wuya’s eyes narrowed to the left, seeing the little man floating in midair. “COLE?!”

“WUYA?” Cole exclaimed.

“COLE!” Wuya happily flew to the leprechaun as they locked hands (sort of) and twirled in place. “Where have the years BEEN? I have been having the most exhausting time with this nose-picking pest.”

Jack was in the middle of picking his nose as Grandfather clutched him. At Wuya’s remark, he wrapped the hand behind his back. “But this is wonderful timing, Cole!” Wuya beamed. “I need your help- no, my SISTER needs your help! We need you to use that spell again to give her a vessel!”

“Your… sister?”

“Uuuuuueeeeee.” The group looked down the left street and gaped at the source of this moaning. The grey zombie in the large blue-and-brown dress was nearly Grandfather’s height, and was only kept standing with the help of Jackbots.

Grandfather gasped and dropped Jack, “Is that…?”

The Jackbots stopped to let Malevolous droop and catch her breath. The zombie lifted her head to stare at the team of frightened children. Her hazy vision looked at Midna, then focused on Virginia, who was holding a lit cigarette. “HUUUU!” The zombie thrusted her chest forward, and her shadow stretched out and latched Virginia’s.

“UUU-Uck!” The woman choked, feeling her very nerves bind. Virginia dropped her cigarette. The shadow between her and Malevolous grew black, and the half-human’s body became black, too.
Malevolent’s zombie collapsed, and the shadow flowed over to encase Ginny’s body completely. In a flash, Virginia was wearing purple-and-black clothing, and her eyes were a milky dark. “Siiiiigh... huff...”

“M...Mom?” Terry choked.

“Dude, is she possessed?” Lola asked.

“Malevolent?” Grandfather bore a teary smile and eyes, lowering to take Virginia’s hands. “Is that really you, Dear?”

“Yes!” Wuya hissed. “YEEES! At long last, the Queen of Shadows is reborn! Come, Malevolent.” She flew beside the possessed woman. “Let us finish what we started! Let’s take over the world together!”

“NO!” Malevolent swung an arm through Wuya’s hazy body, wobbling away from Benedict as she bent and cupped her hands onto her knees. “I...I am Malevolent Djinn... a Logia shadowbender. My chi remained inside my corpse after death... I am controlling this woman with an advanced Shadow Possession. So tell me...” She looked at Midna, “Is this woman—this shadowbender; is she the Firstborn Guardian?!”

“I believe you want that fellow there.” Cole smiled wryly at Dillon.

Malevolent faced him, and Dillon glared back. “Oh... my mistake. Very well...” She walked forward. “Come here, boy...”

“The HECK you will!” Aurora and Chris jumped in the way, lighting with flames.

“You...You ignorant children. Why are you defying me?”

“Don’t play dumb with us,” Harry said, “you wanna possess Dillon so you can control Midna. Viridi pulled the same crud, it ain’t gonna happen.”

“You useless imbeciles, you don’t understand! Let me possess him!”

“Or what?” Django tuned his guitar, smirking.

“Oh, come on, YOU again?” Jack exclaimed with annoyance. “Look, I can only deal with one dead thing at a time, so let’s make some adjustments. JACKBOTS: ATTACK!”

“Skeletons, attack!” Django strummed the skeletons into being and had them fight the robots. Terry and Lola jumped Malevolent in their mom’s body, trying to weigh her down, and when Kirie leapt for a kick, Grandfather blasted heat vision to knock her away.

“HEY, what’s your deal?!” Haylee shouted.

“Please, this is my wife here.” Grandfather smirked. “You kids need to mind your elders.”

Aurora blasted ice at the demon, and Cole sent ghostly mice to latch the Uno girl to his energy strings. He forced Aurora to battle Chris, but Harry tossed CDs to slice his strings, then Haru and Mason bounced Haylee up to whack Cole with her wrench. “Nnn-nnn!” Artie tried to whack Wuya with his hat, but the ghost was intangible. “What’s the deal with you, anyway?”

“I created a Horcrux back in my world.” Wuya smirked. “Not telling you what it is, though. But let’s see what secrets you’re hiding.” The ghost shrunk and flew into Artie’s ear, and her image could be seen behind his green eyes. She flew out the other ear and stretched to normal. “I didn’t think a boy your age could keep so many nude posters!”

“THOSE WEREN’T MINE, THEY’RE HOAGIE’S!” Artie flushed.

“ENOUGH OF THIS!” Malevolous blew Lola and Terry off of her, stomping toward Dillon. “Just let me-” A Light Sphere punched her in the side of the head, forcing the Shadow Queen out of Ginny’s body.

“Sheila!” Mason exclaimed.

“‘ey, did you numbskulls forget to wake me up again?” Sheila remarked, her fist shining.

The disembodied shadow flew in circles on the ground before going into Dillon. “AAAAH!”

“DILLON!” Midna screamed.

“Aaaaaaa-aaaaahhh!” Dillon twitched everywhere as black shadow was encasing his body. “Let… gooooo!”

Subconscious

Dillon panted heavily, landing within a shadowy black plain with a blue sky. He looked up when a glob of the shadow ground rose. It formed into Malevolous Djinn, glittering pink hair in strip-like strands, golden crown with jewels, and her blue-and-brown patterned dress was in great shape. She had no eyes, but a mouth that grinned at Dillon. “Queen Malevolous…”

“It’s useless to resist me, boy. Now, stop this insolence.” She loomed forward. “Allow me to-” But for the second time, she was thwarted. Mario flew up from the ground and punched the Shadow Queen away.

“You’ll stay AWAY from my master!” the shadow declared. In this realm, Mario sounded like he was actually talking, rather than a voice in Dillon’s head. “A fat ugly shadow like you doesn’t belong here.”

“How DARE you attack me!” Malevolous floated back up. “You lesser impudent shadow, I command you to obey me!”

“Mario, let’s take her on!” Dillon said readily. “If we can fight Aunt Daphne’s control, this old hag will be easy! You with me?”

“Yes, Master.” Mario got beside him. “There’s only room for one shadow. And Midna.”

“Heeeeh… I don’t want it to be this difficult.” Malevolous sighed. “But if I must… I will. Before there can be reason, there must be punishment. I will teach you that lesson the hard way!” (Play “Shadow Peach Battle” from Paper Mario: TTYD!)

Boss fight: Malevolous Djinn

The Shadow Queen dug her arms into the ground, making a line of hands sprout up along a path to Dillon. The boy dodged aside, then ran as the hands kept chasing him, sending Mario to punch them away. “The ground is shadow, Master, use it!” Dillon squeezed the air in his hands, psychically grabbing the shadow ground and whipping it in front of him as a shield, blocking Malevolous’s chomping teeth when she lunged. Dillon waved and thrust his arms toward the queen, making streams of shadow pelt her in the face, but Malevolous countered with a swarm of shadow columns. Dillon raised his hands in defense to block the shadow, but Malevolous Veiled in the ground and came behind him, grabbing Dillon in her hands. Mario popped out and punched her away, then pulled Dillon into his own Veil.

The Shadow Queen looked around before a huge hand reached up and pulled her down, allowing Dillon to deal some punches against the witch. Malevolous easily escaped, then Dillon rocketed out for a headbutt against her face. “Ow.” He grunted after landing, dodging Malevolous’s stretched, roundabout hand. Dillon evaded other such attacks before stretching Mario to bind the queen. She was too strong to hold in his Shadow Possession, and Mario couldn’t get close to wrapping around for a Strangle. Malevolous’s head stretched and shot over to bite him, but Dillon dodged, punched a fist up, and had a shadow gush pop up from the ground and hit her neck.

Dillon punched a barrage of gushes against her neck until the queen’s body toppled over. Dillon slithered over to her body and popped up with a large shadow fist, punching her in the gut. The queen sunk into a Veil, and Dillon ran as a string of her clapping hands chased him. Dillon became exhausted and stopped, stretching his hands to either side to push the queen’s hands back, then he gasped when the queen’s mouth appeared below and caught him inside. Dillon furiously punched the inside, and with Mario’s help, he broke free. He recovered and stretched a Shadow Shockwave, sending Mario to bite and gnash the queen from all ends, tearing a few pieces of her dress and hair.

The Shadow Queen fumed with anger and molded much of the shadow ground up onto her form, encasing herself within a bulging ball. “What’s that about?” Dillon asked.

“It’s going to explode, Master, watch out!” Mario quickly pulled his master below, letting the powerful Shadow Bomb erupt without harming them. When they came up, Malevolous karate-sliced and knocked them away, and when Dillon recovered, the queen dealt stretched punches across his features. She flew up and grabbed his arms, ready to sink her teeth into him, but Mario punched her in the teeth and saved his master. Shadow Queen flew and chomped her teeth, but Dillon sunk into a Veil. He came up a few feet to her left, she chomped him, the Shadow Clone faded. Another one, then another came, she attacked both, Dillon clones were popping everywhere like Whack-A-Mole.

“You aren’t the only one who can clone herself! Er, himself. Er, forget it!” Malevolous spawned a wall of Shadow Clones and had them all fly at the Dillon clones, dispersing every one. The real Dillon emerged behind her as a tall shadow, wrapping around her like a snake. Dillon flew off onto the ground while Mario remained wrapped, close to strangling the woman, but Malevolous sunk into the ground just as fast, coming up below Dillon to make him fall. He jumped to his feet and punched a shadow gush at Malevolous from the ground, but the clone dispersed, and the queen punched him from behind.

The Shadow Queen expanded a Shockwave and attacked Dillon with an onslaught of shadows, then pulled him into a Veil with a single hand to lay beatings. “Gnnn!” Dillon grunted after being thrown back onto the floor, and the moment he stood, he was trapped in Malevolous’s Shadow Possession.

“Quit trying to resist. You will submit to me! You will listen!”

“No, Master!” Mario yelled. “You must fight her! You can!”

“Easier said than done… Mario!” Dillon choked, watching the shadow steadily rise up past his waist. “I’m not… the Logia shadowbender here.”
“It doesn’t matter who’s a Logia, what matters is I’m your shadow! The same way you took me back from Daphne, Master… If I’m really important to you, you can fight her with your own strength of will. If you want me to give you power, you’ll have to give me power, too! Come on, Master! I don’t want to get eaten by this bitch!”

“Dude, if Mom heard you cussing…”

Malevolent’s essence was about to pass Dillon’s neck. He struggled harder and stopped her there, desperate to break his arm free of the blackness. “Come on, Dillon, you can do it!” Haruka’s voice cried out.

“Huh?” Dillon looked up. The shadows of his friends appeared in the blue sky.

“Don’t let Mario die on us!” Chris’s shadow yelled. “We need someone to hang out with!”

“If he’s gone, we’ll have no way of talking to our masters!” Shadow Mason followed. “Being a shadow is lonely when you can’t feel like part of the group. Come on, Dillon, do something!”

“Artie is still trying to hit Wuya, and he looks really stupid right now, so please hurry!” Shadow Artie cried.

Dillon couldn’t believe it. The shadows of his friends came to support him… like they were their own persons. No, what is he saying… all shadows have a conscience, it’s just that most of them can’t express it. All of Sector V’s shadows were alive, they were Mario’s only friends besides Dillon. But through each other, Dillon was friends with the shadows, and Mario was friends with the humans. …Dillon chuckled. “If you guys love Mario so much, help me out here. Are you just gonna let your teammate get eaten? Quit being a bunch of lifeless husks and HELP US!”

“Blimey, Dillon is a sourmouth.” Shadow Sheila put hands on her hips. “No wonder we never talk to him.”

“Come on, let’s just help him.” Shadow Harry said.

“OKAY!” Shadow Kirie cheered. With that, the team of shadows flew into Dillon and imbued him with power. Dillon successfully broke free of Malevolent’s grasp. His sweater was white, his hair was white, and he brimmed with a white aura as he turned to face the queen.

“It can’t be!” Malevolent hissed. “White Shadow?!”

“The Power of Dawn, baby.” Dillon said simply. “And you are looking a little pale.” He blew a White Shadow Breath that blinded the queen, sent Mario over to land a few bright punches, then stretched a Shadow Shockwave for some blinding gnashes from His Truly.

“Oh… yo.” Dillon pointed at himself.

“What… you mean you…”

“Choke it up, you worn-out piece of paper.” With that, Dillon wrapped Mario around the queen, and Strangled.
“AAAAAAaaaahhhhh. . . .” The Shadow Queen broke into little particles of light. Mario returned to his master, and the shadows of his friends flew out. (End song.)

“Huff… huff…” Dillon bent over to catch his breath. Mario kept him standing. “We sure showed her, didn’t we?”

“Yeah. But it was probably Sheila’s shadow that helped us use White Shadow.”

“Better keep her with us then, right? Heh heh.”

A shadow crept up behind the unsuspecting boy. “GYAAAAH!” Malevolous captured him again, putting her eyeless face beside his as she whispered softly.

“I guess it’s true, then. You are Midna’s Guardian, there’s no other option. It’s great to know I didn’t waste my time with you. Now…” She slowly moved her open mouth to bite him.

“No! No! No! No!” Dillon shook frantically, he felt Malevolous’s essence enter him, he was becoming overpowered. “NAAAAAAHH-!”

Many images flashed before him. A purple city on a small planetoid, citizens were black shadow-like creatures, a baldheaded man in a black robe was locked in prison, vast space with many odd planets, flashing “8”, gray-skinned creatures with orange horns, salamanders, a giant red warship, then Majora’s Mask shrinking beyond the fires.

Dillon gasped for breath, finding himself floating in darkness. All those images were burned into his mind. “What the…What the heck is this?!”

“The future.” Malevolous hissed. “I am not only the Shadow Queen, boy… I am the Black Queen. The Black Queen of Derse, the Kingdom of Darkness. I was born in what you people call the ‘First Dimension.’ I was the original shadowbender of that world. After the creation of this universe, the inhabitants of that world banished me here, in order to watch a powerful demon called Majora. Majora had been banished to this universe a few years before then. Through my Logia shadowbending, I was able to meld with my own shadow. As a half-spirit, I became immortal. Then the gods, how pitiable they were. They made me the Queen of Shadows, in exchange that I tell no one of the First Dimension. I was made Midna’s guardian spirit…

“I will not confess to being a saint, that’s why the First World decided to banish me. I used Majora’s Mask for evil purposes, I ruled with darkness in my heart. I wedded to Benedict Uno and bore two children. In their veins exists the blood of demons, of humans, and the blood of my species, Carapacians. Then my body, which had lasted for millenniums, was killed by Ganondorf. But my memories… remain in this body.”

“You’re…You’re from the First Dimension?” Dillon asked, struggling to process all of this. “The one that’s… behind the Time Gate? The one we’ll go to—”

“When the Twenty Keys have been collected, yes. There’s something you should know about that world, boy. There is no law. There is no balance. I may have died in this world, but I am still alive in an earlier time of that world. That’s why I wanted to get in contact with Midna’s Guardian. The moment Wuya revived my corpse, returning my soul to here, I had to speak with you. I can only assume that Negatar Gnaa has already been banished from this universe.”

“What does Gnaa have to do with anything?”

“Before I was sent here, Negatar Gnaa arrived in the First Dimension, having been sent from here. Time is horribly unbalanced in that world. It does not correlate with this world’s time at all. If Gnaa was sent there, it meant that very soon, the gateway leading to your world would open. Now that I am here, no longer controlled by the gods at this moment, I can tell you something. You must find the Firstborn. You must find them, and bring them to the First Dimension. And you must do it, before the gate is opened.” Dillon felt a throbbing pain. “I cannot hold onto you for long. My deceased soul exhausted too much energy. Listen, Dillon… you must do what I said, find the Firstborn, and come to our dimension. Our world is in terrible danger. It will affect your world, too, and any world that should come. Please… Dillon…”

“Okay, I will. But why couldn’t you tell me all this before?”

“I wasn’t sure if you were awakened as Midna’s Guardian, so I had to test you. You passed. You are a true shadowbender, but you must become stronger. Dillon… I will leave you a fraction of my chi. Use it… to strengthen your own. Dillon… I know that you and your friends… can save our world. Tell my descendants… they possess the blood of rulers.” They were swallowed in light.

Twilight Town

Dillon collapsed onto the ground, rasping. “Dillon, are you okay?!” Aurora asked worriedly.

“I don’t sense Malevolous’s presence.” Midna said. “He must have fought her back.”

“No! NOOOO!” Wuya cried. “Malevolous! This can’t be! Quick, Jack, revive her body again!”

The boy jumped to attention and rushed to Malevolous’s corpse. “Zing Zom-Bone! Reversi-AAAAH!” A laser blasted the dead body and destroyed it.

“Oops. Did I do that?” Django smiled innocently. Smoke emitted from the head of his guitar.

“NOOOOOOOOO!” Wuya cried once more. “My precious sister! How could you do this to her?!”

“Actually, she was around 8,000.” Grandfather informed.

“How were we born again?” Chris asked.

“I think it’s about time we conclude this chapter.” Dillon got back on his feet, taking out his Spirit Ball. “Do you agree, Midna?”

“A thousand times.” The Firstborn nodded.

Right out of nowhere, a glass cage came down and caught Midna and Dillon inside. “WHAT THE CRAP?!” Mason shouted.

“Prepare for trouble, we are back for more!” A jet with a red “R” hovered overhead.

“Make it double, won’t you feel sore?” Midna and Dillon’s cage dangled on the bottom.

“Dashing hope, putting fear in its place!” James followed.

“A rose by any other name’s just as sweet!”

“When everything’s worse, our work is-”
“JUST get to the point!” Haruka shouted. “We never liked the Diamond/Pearl motto, anyway.”

“Midna is ours, that’s the point!” Meowth smirked. “We’re blasting off to Giovanni, and won’t he be happy to see us?”

“So let’s put the pedal to the metal, James!” Jessie said brightly.

“Austa la vista, twerps.” So with that, the aircraft flew away. (Play “Double Trouble” from Pokémon!)

“Get after them, Jack!” Wuya shouted. “We can still harness the Firstborn’s power!”

“Pumpkaboo, use Shadow Ball!” Jessie threw her Pokéball open.

“Victreebel, Razor Leaf!” James threw his—“DAAAAH dammit, Victreebel!” His loving Pokémon began munching him.

Chris narrowly dodged Pumpkaboo’s spheres while Jack Spicer used the Ruby of Ramses to catch the Razor Leafs and toss them back. Wobbuffet stood on the roof of the ship and used Counter to bounce the leaves back again, scratching the sides of Jack’s cloak. Chris kicked more fire to his shoes and flew faster after Team Rocket, only for James’ Chimecho to catch him in psychic and throw him back. Jack used the Reversing Mirror to bounce Pumpkaboo’s Shadow Balls to knock the creature down. He then shot the Zing Zom-Bone at Chimecho to make her zombified, easily letting Jack pass.

“Come on, Victreebel, he’s gaining on us!” James shouted, so the Plant-type lashed Vine Whips that Jack evasively dodged, using his helipack to slice the vines. “Wobbuffet!” The blue blob jumped in the way and brimmed red as Jack neared.

“Reversing Mirror!” Jack’s mirror glowed, so now it was a matter of which Counter power was stronger. Wobbuffet was knocked clean out, flying into Victreebel as they broke through the roof. “Eeeeeek!” The Rocket Trio panicked when Jack dropped in after.

“What’s that?” Jack smiled wryly. “Did I hear screams of panic at my presence? I suppose that reaction is to be expected. Hands in the air, because you’re now under MY care! –Jack Spicer, evil boy genius.”

Dillon and Midna were trying to punch the glass, but no avail. “You won’t get out of that!” Jessie yelled to them. “That cage is chi-blocked.”

“But is your ship?” Dillon smirked.

“What?” Team Rocket and Jack looked at the controls, watching as Mario pushed the ‘Detach’ button. The villains panicked again when the glass cage dropped to the earth, shattering to pieces.

“Awesome job, Dillon!” Chris announced, landing on a mount in the forest. Mario returned to his master.

“Chris, use Combustion Beam!” Aurora jabbed a finger at the jet.

“Are we roleplaying or somethin’?” he stared.
“Yep, so play your part, Bro!”

“All right.” Chris threw off his headband, sucked in a breath, and puffed his head. Spark spark spark...

“AAAAAHHH!” Team Rocket and Jack’s features grew wide, and the ship vanished in flames. (End song.)

It was on this moment, Team Rocket had the greatest view of the sunset. “Ahhhh… it really is beautiful from up here, isn’t it?” Jessie sighed with delight.

“You really appreciate life’s wonders when you’re looking down on them from way up above.” James agreed.

“The breeze feels good on my whiskers, too!” Meowth perked.

“Wooooobuffet!”

“Hey, um, are we actually safe up here?” Jack Spicer asked, flying along with them.

“Except for the occasional bruises, we usually come out okay.” Jessie replied.

“Sometimes we land somewhere inconvenient.” James said.

“But ya really get used to it after a while.” Meowth followed.

“Hm… it is kinda fun.” Jack smiled. “How long does this last, anyway?”

“Two minutes, at least.”

“We don’t have long, then!” Jessie beamed. “Let’s do it!”

“Team Rocket is setting off with the suuuuuun!” (“Wobbuffet!”) The agents and Jack flew into the yellow orb over the horizon. Twinkle.

The other Sector V members regrouped with their friends in the forest. “Always end a story arc with a bang.” Artie said.

“With that outta the way,” Dillon held up the Spirit Ball, “after you, Midna.”

The Firstborn nodded. Dillon threw the ball, transforming Midna into light as she flew in. The ball shook and beeped on the ground, the light on the lock was red. …It stopped. The Pokéball hovered into the air and shone with its black top and white bottom, with glowing cyan lines. A golden ‘II’ was inscribed above the lock. Dillon held the ball proudly.

Dillon captured a FIRSTBORN! Only 6 more to go!

Wuya floated with a defeated, downtrodden stare as Grandfather and Cole joined her near the kids. “You snot-nosed urchins never change, do you?” Pappy asked.

“Old habits die hard.” Haruka shrugged.

“I would’ve loved for Malevolous to stay a little longer.” Ben frowned. “We could’ve had the whole family. After all…” He looked up with his devilish smirk, “my grandson’s funeral is coming.”
Sector V exchanged surprised looks. They hadn’t heard news of a funeral date, yet. “May the 10th, that’s a good date.” Cole agreed. “I hope you children don’t have plans.”

This turned out better than I thought. Well, with Twilight Town done, the rest of this saga will be aaaaall fighting. Like, a lot of fighting in the next few chapters. Get lots of rest, kids!

Chapter Summary

Carla and her allies work to rescue Wendy and Facilier from Azkaban.

Last chapter of the Original Worlds Arc.

Chapter B-21: Azkaban

Cleveland, Virginia

A baby was crying, wrapped comfily in a blue blanket. She had beautiful brown eyes and hair as deep blue as the ocean. A man in a dark cloak took her away. She reached for her baby, but despaired as she drew farther away from her grasp.

Carla moaned as she woke up in the alley. A pair of black high-heeled boots stood before her. Carla’s hazy vision moved up to see the glaring, boney face of Madame Rouge, smoking a cigarette. “Ma…Madame Rouge.” The kitten spoke weakly. “Where’s… Wendy…”

“She and Dr. Facilier have been taken by Magic Aurors.” The French woman replied. “I saw it from ze crowd.”

“You… You saw?” Carla got to her feet and angrily yelled, “Why didn’t you DO anything?! You let Wendy and your own husband be captured!”

“It vould not do to blow my own cover. I am on ze vanted lists, too. My husband is in enough trouble for harboring Vendy.”

“He’s still the man you married! Why would you dare to marry him if you would not fight to protect him? He might not be an honest man, but you’re a terrible-”

“I vill not be lectured by you, Cat!” Rouge stretched her neck down and glared at the animal. “I do love Dr. Facilier, and ze reason I do not show myself around here often is to avoid getting him in trouble.” She pulled her neck back upright and turned away. “Wendy was not the only person running away from people who tried to arrest her. Vhen Hannibal Bean unfroze me six years ago, I could not go anywhere without hiding my true face. That bratty Nolan York told the G.U.N. about us and marked me in their criminal banks. Vhen my escape was noted, wanted posters have gone up. Vone day, vhen I was on a stroll through this town on a rainy night… I went into Harvey’s emporium. He saw through my disguise, but had no intention of capturing me. Instead… he read my fortune.”

Carla said nothing for a moment. Rouge was speaking reflectively, thinking of warm memories, the kitten could tell. “…Madame Rouge, if Dr. Facilier means to you as much as Wendy means to me… we must save them.”

The slender woman turned to her. “You mean as much as a pet loves her master? Zat is not how I feel.”
“You know very well what I mean.”

“Regardless, zey are going to Azkaban. It is the most secure prison in the vizard community. Ve could not hope to infiltrate it.”

Carla rubbed her chin with the “knuckle” of her paw-finger, thinking. “…That Mr. Floop person said that the World Government uses Azkaban as their main prison. He suspected that Chelia would have been taken there.”

“Your point?”

“Well, seeing as Floop served a World Leader, he may have information we can use. Honestly, it’s the only hope we have. Where did those twin hooligans take him, anyhow?”

“I know where they’re hiding. Come with me.” Rouge transformed into Rachel Uno and began to walk off.

Carla stretched her wings to fly- “Aaaah!” She sank to the ground.

“What now?” Rouge asked.

“My wing still hurts. I’m afraid… I’ll have to walk.”

“A kitty has to walk, how dreadful.” Rouge kept walking.

“Not like you ever went a mile in your own shoes.” Carla retorted as she hurried after.

Azkaban

The rusty doors slowly creaked open, letting light into the dull little room. World Leader Henry Churchill entered the cell, escorted by a black-haired woman with red eyes, a boney upper-body of cold blue skin, a red dress, while the rest of her body was that of a spider’s. This spider woman, La Contessa, crawled up the wall and on the ceiling as Master Churchill approached Wendy Marvell, who was glued to the wall by a spider web.

Wendy’s eyes were a dull red, and her face showed no expression or soul. Master Churchill gave his wry, quirky smile, reaching a hand up to softly rub Wendy’s cheek. “Chapter 21 of Defeating Your Enemies: seeing them… at their weakest.” Henry spoke softly. “Tell me, Miss Marvell… how long did you plan to run? Knowing that the entire world feared you, by merely putting your face on a piece of paper… It’s amusing how people react.

“Did you think this old witch-doctor could hide you? Did you think your lovely pink-haired friend could protect you from me? You’re sorely mistaken… because the simple fact is that you aren’t a child worth saving. Wendy… do you often wonder why you were born? Why you were given a name, and a world in which to run around? It’s easy… the creatures which you call the ‘gods’ have played you like a fool. There is no meaning behind your birth… All you are is a hindrance and a troublemaker. And here you are, sulking in the cold air the dementors have wrought. Soon, they will suck out your soul, and you will be nothing…”

“Uuu… Uuu-uuuuuuuhhh…” Wendy could barely move her arms or bare feet. She tried to lift her head up and speak. “Che…Chelia… Where is… Chelia…”

“Chelia? On the brink of disappearing from existence, she is the one you are concerned for? Hmm.” Henry began to pace around the room. “Well, while I intended her to be carted to Azkaban, that was before we learned she possessed God Chi. And no ordinary mortal is allowed to have the power of a god. That power belongs to us.” He turned to show his witty smile. “So we are keeping her elsewhere until we can sap the God Chi from her veins. Sorry, Dear… but you will not get to say a final farewell to each other. Floop could have made the ‘Sky Sisters’ a royal hit, but not all dreams can come true. And when I turn around and walk away, I will never see you again. And… now.”

So Henry turned and walked out of the cell. La Contessa crawled down the web holding Wendy, tilting her face up to look in her eyes. “After the dementors are finished eating your soul, I will have the remains. I hope you taste good.” The warden crawled out of the room and shut the door.

Cleveland; Floop’s hideaway

“DO NOT pet the lion while he’s sleeping (do not).” Floop faced the camera and sang as Sonny was about to pet a giant lion.

“Or he will (WILL) tear you into pieces!” Several Floops popped up at different distances from the camera as the lion tore up a Floop doll. “He can!” sang a Floop whose face appeared directly at the camera.

“(Can?) Can you crush a bird with your hammer?” Floop made a shrug as Donna threatened to smash a bird in her nest.

“You can! (YES!) But no, you should NOT! (Oh, no!)” Floop wagged his finger.

Unless you are a hobo that needs a quick snack!” A table floated up with plates of small turkey and scrambled eggs. Sonny and Donna licked their lips, holding knives and forks.

A trio of Floops were then sitting in a Viking boat, rowing concurrently. “Use positives, and negatives, to accomplish, your, objectives! Conjunctions! Adjunctions! Know: how they function!”

“Know your verbs! (‘Mr. Floop?’) Know your words! (‘Mr. Floop?’) Use this stone to kill TWO-”

“I BEG YOUR PARDON, MR. FLOOP!” The show host snapped back to reality—the holographic background snapped off, revealing the true form of Goofy Goober’s basement.

“Oh, Charles!” Floop acknowledged them from his chain-linked platform. “Madame Rouge! Lovely to see you! Take five, twins.” He clapped his hands to lower his platform.

The birds that Sonny was about to crush with a rock immediately flew out of there. “He made us kill several of them while we were rehearsing.” The male Climber said with a casual smile.

“I love modern children’s programming.” Donna followed.

“Whaddya think?” Floop asked with a bright smile, approaching the two women. “These twins got me a part-time job making shows for this restaurant’s customers! There was mostly scrap down here, but I was able to make what I needed. Eh, don’t ask where I got the lion.”

“Mr. Floop, Wendy and Dr. Facilier were arrested!” Carla shouted.

“Arrested?” Floop’s bright expression sunk.
“Ze Aurors caught zem. Zey are being taken to Azkaban.” Rouge recapped.

“Azkaban? That’s awful…” Floop looked away in remorse.

“You said that Azkaban was being used by the Government, did you not?” Carla asked. “As a former World Leader’s apprentice, would you have clearance to enter the facility?”

“Heh, ‘former’ is the key word.” Floop chuckled, pacing around the room. “Given what happened at my castle, they’ll likely suspect I’ll try to rescue Wendy.”

“They will!” said one of Floop’s clones.

“You’re on break, Floop 4.” At this, a hole opened on Floop 4, causing him to blow around the room as his air deflated.

“Well, do you at least know where the prison is located?” Carla asked. “I can simply fly there and rescue them myself.”

“That’s too dangerous. The prison’s island is surrounded by a 50-foot wall, with dementors patrolling the sky. The only way in is through the gate and on a boat, but you would either need clearance or have a wanted criminal tied up at your-…” The man paused midsentence and looked at Rouge. “Wait a second… Madame Rouge… you’re on the wanted list!”

“What are you thinking?” She glared.

“I’m thinking…” Floop rubbed his chin and resumed pacing, “if I sailed to the island with you handcuffed, and they would let us in to bring you to a cell… and we somehow found a way to sneak Carla and the kids in, and they go to rescue Wendy, Facilier, and you as well… Ugh, but how would that work.”

“Perhaps we could hide under her coat?” Carla inquired.

“No, they would check that.”

“My body is made of liquid rubber.” Rouge informed. “I could store zem inside my body.”

“DIRTY IMPLICATIONS!” the twins sang.

“You would be willing to do this?” asked Carla.

“A meager prison cannot hold me. But I trust you to do your part.”

“We can also use Facilier’s yacht to sail to the island. He even has a magic teleporter installed in it.”

“Halright.” Floop clapped hands. “It’s going to be a long shot… but I think we can pull this off. Here’s what we’ll do…”

Close to Azkaban Island… (Play “Prison Grounds” from Sly 2.)

After unhooking Facilier’s Old Orleáns from the city pier, they sailed it to where Floop memorized the prison to be located: a lone island in Britain’s North Sea. The sky was bleak with dark clouds, but there was an opening in the sky to allow the eerie blue moon to highlight the prison. Ghostly black beings floated in the sky over the walled island—the dementors.

“Attention small and shabby yacht,” said a voice from the speaker, “access beyond this point is Floop activated the boat’s speaker and yelled, “My name is Fegan Floop! Apprentice to World Leader, Henry Churchill!”

“According to the database, you were stripped of your title.”

“I know! But I captured a wanted criminal and wanted to bring her into custody. Laura De Facilier nee Mille, aka Madame Rouge.”

A swarm of flying eyes came down from the wall and peeped into the yacht’s windshield. They skimmed the rather chubby woman in the red jumpsuit, long black hair, and ruby lips, her gloved hands cuffed. “She’s a bit… pudgier than what our records read.”

“She’s uh, been… putting on some pounds, true.” Floop chuckled. “You know how these washed-up criminals are.”

“Grrrr!” Rouge growled.

“Hmmm… Miss Contessa, what are your orders?”

“Open the gate and let them inside. We will contact Master Churchill and ask what he wants us to do with Mr. Floop.”

The gates to the wall opened, exposing the island with the steel building with three, triangle-shaped towers. Dementors floated over the sea, and the boat was steadily freezing from their presence. Madame Rouge felt her skin harden.

They docked the boat next to the island as Floop and Rouge stepped off. Two Aurors escorted them inside the facility. They retained calm auras as they were guided into the first hallway of despairing and psychotic criminals. Rouge suddenly sat down and jumped back up, dropping a large glob of rubber goop on the floor. “Euh, what’d you do that for?!” an Auror shouted in disgust.

“If I am going to jail, I’m leaving you a treat!”

“Ugh, KEEP walking!” The Auror pushed her along. “Somebody call the janitor!”

After they were gone, Carla climbed out of the goop. “I share his disgust… Sigh, alright, let’s find Wendy and the doctor and escape as soon as possible. Oh, I pray to God they haven’t hurt her, yet…”

Stage B-17: Azkaban

Mission: Rescue Wendy and Dr. Facilier.

Carla hurriedly jogged down the corridor, already creeped by the prisoners eying her with craving looks. She peeked around a left turn and saw Floop and Rouge being led up some stairs. Carla jogged over to said stairs, but skidded to a halt when an old, man-size bird, who had the dark feathers of a crow and the neck of a vulture, and wearing a guard’s uniform, limped around the corner behind the stairwell, holding a lantern. Carla ducked into a different passage on her right. “Caw?” The vulture-crow (Shadow Guard) heard Carla’s movement, and when she saw that lantern light about to come around, she tried to lift off the ground and fly. “Nnn!” Her wing still injured, she could not go far.

Carla kept running, making little sound with her tiny paws. She turned a left corner and found a door to a janitor’s closet, and a hole high up on the wall. She couldn’t fly up there, so she opened the closet and found a broom to lean on the wall, under a shelf of pictures with cobwebs. Carla quickly climbed the broom’s stick, hopped on the shelf, hopped to another higher shelf, and from there could jump into the hole. The Shadow Guard arrived at the passage, but did not see what creature was making the disturbance.

Carla landed on top of a gargoyle statue outside, feeling the eerie cold air on her fur. The presence of the dementors lurking around made her feel despair… she felt her very happiness slipping away. But she tried not to let these feelings get to her, picturing Wendy’s image firmly in her mind. If she did not hurry, she would never see Wendy again. The gargoyle was hanging over the raging sea, but on her left, Carla saw a dented path going up the wall. Carla glided over, despite the pain in her wing, and managed to set foot on the base of the dent. She clasped the rugged wall and began to climb.

It was hard to keep a firm grip in her little paws, and her left foot slipped for a brief moment, but she passed off the jump in her heart and kept climbing. She faltered when the cold seemed to grow, and her fear increased dramatically when she viewed ahead: dementors loomed over the wall she was climbing, and the black phantoms drifted down to feast on the kitten’s soul. But then, a giant spider made of silvery-white light crawled down the wall and scared the dementors away. Carla felt a warmth radiating from the spider, and when she viewed ahead again, another large spider, but with a skinny woman’s upper body, black hair and red eyes, crawled over the side. Based on Floop’s info, she must’ve been the Contessa.

“The dementors have been acting very frisky lately.” The Contessa said to herself. “Perhaps I should feed them Facilier’s soul now. A wizard who has ties with a Devil must be a 5-Star meal. And perhaps Madame Rouge can be the appetizer… while Wendy will serve as dessert. Hmm, this is really working out for everyone.” The spider woman crawled away, not seeing Carla.

The winged kitten made it up onto the wall and viewed a small prison yard where the Shadow Guards were roaming. Carla was able to sneak between two vultures who were faced away from each other, then around another one as it was in mid-turn. She was standing under a small tower with a sign above the door that read Prisoner Belongings. Perhaps they are keeping their wands inside. Carla thought to herself.

A series of gargoyle statues went up and around the tower. She climbed up on a convenient trashcan, mustered strength in her wings, and flapped up to the nearest gargoyle. She repeated the maneuver for the other gargoyles—a dementor came around the bend. Carla climbed down and clutched the side of the gargoyle to hide from its hooded gaze. The phantom loomed close, almost certain there was a frightened little snack to feast on, but it resumed flying and ignored this feeling. Carla climbed back on the gargoyle and flapped up the rest of them.

She took a minute to catch her breath and ease her sore wings after getting onto the top of this building. She peered into the glass-made roof, seeing the items confiscated from prisoners. The shiniest one in there was Wendy Marvell’s Lamia Scale. Carla was able to flip open one of the window panels and drop into the room. Facilier’s Devil Wand was thankfully placed next to Wendy’s on the table, but it was tied by metal cuffs. Carla looked around the room and saw a sword leaned against the wall. She used the sword to pick the locks on the cuffs—she only had to pick the first one before the Devil Wand JUMPED out and hit against the wall.

Carla jumped to grab the wand, but it struggled like a living entity. “Please, calm down!” Carla whispered. “I could understand wands choosing a wizard, but having their own free will is a different story. Are you trying to find Dr. Facilier? We’ll find him, please settle down!”

She shoved the Devil Wand and Lamia Scale into her satchel, which stuck up in a certain direction as the former was still moving. To escape this sealed room, Carla decided to ram herself against the double doors. She then hid behind some junk as she saw a crow-vulture’s silhouette appear on the paneled door windows. The guard unlocked the door and crept in in search of the source of the sound. Carla used her small size to sneak behind the bird, avoiding detection from the two outside as she ran to the other side of the yard.

She entered a door to another hallway of jail cells. A Shadow Guard was marching up from ahead, so Carla hid behind a trashcan. The guard about-faced and patrolled forward before passing the can. Carla saw another gargoyle several feet up, but the only available boost to jump to it was the Shadow Guard. So when the crow was close to it, Carla hurried up, jumped up on its back, and quickly flapped up above the gargoyle. “CAAAW! CAW!” the Shadow Guard panicked, flapping its wings and looking around for its assaulter. It didn’t spot the winged cat, so it resumed patrolling, though with a fearful expression.

Carla stepped on a thin ledge over some cells and sidled across, then grabbed hold of a chain dangling from a few feet up. “Aaaaaaaahhhhh!” a scream echoed from the prison depths.

“We can do this all day, you know. Legilimens!”

“Aaaaah! You won’t… get a shred of thought out of me!”

“That sounds like Dr. Facilier.” Carla whispered. “I must be close.” And right she was, for after climbing to the top of the chain, she viewed a wide open floor leading to a door where the screams and buzzing sounds seemed to echo from. She glided over to the edge of this floor, but took note of the Beamos standing around. The one-eyed mechs were immobile, but Carla thought they would shoot their lasers if she got close. In fact, she had to quickly jump back after walking closer; the Beamos shot its laser, but it ceased when she was far away again. Carla looked at the brick floor and saw how some of the bricks were broken and disorderly. When she stepped on these bricks, the Beamos didn’t attack her. She stayed on this trail and made it across.

When the door was about to open, Carla gasped and backed herself against the wall beside it. Three Aurors stepped out. “I don’t know if it’s some kind of voodoo, but his mind is too strong. But if this guy is involved in black market deals, we have to crack him. And if he was harboring that Wendy, he could be connected to the Man With the Red Eye.”

“Why don’t we call a specialist from Bulgaria?”

“We shouldn’t have to. A few minutes with the dementors will scare him straight.” Carla snuck behind the Aurors and into the room before they shut the door and walked away.

“Mr. Facilier!” Carla exclaimed after finding him strapped to a metal bed. “I’ve brought. . .” The cold and dreary air became apparent as she looked up and gaped at the cloud of dementors.

“Nnn!” Facilier twisted his left hand to face up and open. “Carla, my wand! Gimme my wand!”

“Oh-!” Carla snapped back to reality, fishing through her shaking satchel to get the frisky Devil’s Wand. The dementors floated down, she was frozen with fear, for they were going to suck out her soul.

“CARLA!”
The cat flinched and dropped the satchel as the wand flew out and up to his hand. “Expecto Patronum!” A silvery-white raven flew out of the wand and forced the dementors into backing away. “Alohomora!” He used the unlocking charm to open his cuffs and set his feet on the floor.

“Mister Facilier, where did they take Wendy?”

“Ah dunno, they separated us. But we should be able to find her. Point Me Wendy!” The Devil’s Wand whipped to point up diagonally. “A couple of floors up. Let’s get moving.” They exited the room, and Facilier cast spells to stun the Beamos when they tried to shoot lasers. “We’ll go this way.” Facilier grabbed Carla and used his green Flubber to rope across some gargoyles high on their left over the lower hallway. They swung to a high ledge with a door that led outside.

They were on a balcony overlooking the ocean (before the outer wall, at least), and looked up at the row of gargoyles leading to the top of this tower. “Say, can you fly?”

“No, my wing was shot. I can’t go very high.”

“Sigh, too bad Devil Wands don’t heal well. Wait, how did you get here, anyway?”

“I’ll explain as soon as we find Wendy, can we just hurry?”

“Alright, alright. We’ll get a better view from up here.” He used his Flubber to rope the first gargoyle, yanked the green blob, and loosened his grip to launch them up. He quickly roped the next gargoyle, launched up, and repeated until they were at the top. He cast the Point Me spell, and his wand aimed at the tower across the central prison yard. “Looks like it’s that window. Gonna be a hard trip.”

“Could you use a spell to make me float there? Then I could give Wendy her wand.”

“Well, I guess that would simplify things…”

“I suppose I’ll just tell you, Mr. Floop, Madame Rouge, and the twins are here, too. Rouge was posing as a prisoner that Floop was turning in, and the twins were inside her.”

“’kay, I’ll send you over to help Wendy, and I’ll look for them. Careful, Charles.”

“Will do, Harvard.” With that, Carla was uplifted with Wingardium Leviosa, gently floated over to the opposite tower. Dementors saw her coming and came to get their snack, only to be averted by Facilier’s Patronus. As soon as the kitten set her feet on the barred windowsill, the doctor released the spell.

Carla peered into the dark room and saw Wendy glued to a spider web. “Wendy!” she called in hushed tone. “Child! It’s me!”

“Уииииооо…” A faint moan leaked from her mouth.

“Wendy, I’ve got your wand. Don’t worry, we’re going to get you-”

The door to that room opened. The Contessa crawled in, her red eyes the only highlighted feature on her eight-legged body. “Guess what, Wendyyyy? It’s time for dinner. Hm?” She caught a glimpse of a cat’s shadow in the window light, but it was gone. The Contessa walked in front of the window and saw nothing. In reality, Carla was now clutching the edge of the sill as tight as her paws could.

The kitten pulled up to peep into the cell, watching as Contessa took Wendy off the web, wrapped her up, and set her on her bulbous behind. “Master Churchill wants a recording of the dementors sucking your soul. We’ll record it along with Dr. Facilier and Madame Rouge. And as for Floop… well, that’ll depend on Master Churchill’s decision.” The spider woman crawled out of the room and slammed the door. The echo of the door seemed to sound from outside. Carla looked down and noticed the stairs leading up and around the tower. Contessa was coming down them with Shadow Guards at her behest.

They were then walking across a wall on the side of the central yard. Carla jumped off the windowsill and flapped her wings to soften her fall. She chased after the guards and warden, tailing close behind without making too much noise. When one guard turned around, Carla gasped and hid behind a broken part of the stone fence. The guard returned beside his friend, but this gave Carla an idea: she grabbed a lone rock off the ground and threw it down to the island surface over the fence. The guard came back to investigate the noise, while Carla climbed across a thin ledge under the fence, leading to another broken part. She could then sneak behind the guard, run up, and do a brief Torpedo Spin that knocked him over the edge. It seemed vulture-crow hybrids didn’t fly well.

They turned a corner on the wall, and Contessa was about to crawl down some stairs leading to the center yard (but if she’s a spider, taking the intended path seems unnecessary). Carla saw a cat-size hole in the ground, and a similar hole further head. She tossed another rock back and dove into the hole. When the Shadow Guard came to look around, Carla quickly crawled through the small tunnel and out the other side, viewing the backside of the guard as he peered into the hole. With catlike reflexes, Carla ran up his back, grabbed his vulture head, and pulled it into the tiny hole. Carla crawled out the other side again, and the large bird frantically flapped its wings, unable to get his big beak out of the little hole.

I’ll never be able to do that again. Carla thought, quickly catching up to the Contessa. The spider woman crossed the central yard, approaching a sealed door. Carla grabbed the Lamia Scale and held it up as she quick-walked closer to Wendy. The child showed no signs of motion, and her dull red eyes stared at Carla. Carla hated seeing her master in such a state, and hoped above hope that returning Wendy her wand will refuel her with power and confidence. The second Contessa stopped to begin unlocking that door, Carla reached up to give Wendy her wand, expecting a reaction.

The Contessa crawled down a wide flight of stairs, leading into the prison’s basement. Carla noted the webs on the diagonal ceiling, spiders crawling around them. She wondered if they were Contessa’s children. These spiders hung down in attempt to bite Carla, so she maneuvered around them. At the bottom of the stairs, the Contessa entered a very large room with more webs on the ceiling, dementors, and two of those silvery-white spider Patronuses were on the webs. There were web mummies hanging on them, too, likely the Contessa’s victims. Madame Rouge and Floop had been brought here. (End song.)

“What?! Weren’t you interrogating him?!”
“I-It was right after we went for break!” he stuttered. “Er, but don’t worry, Miss!” As he talked, Madame Rouge saw Carla in the darkness on their right. “When we called Master Churchill, his answering machine said he was on a tea and golf break. We have plenty of time to catch—”

Rouge stretched her legs and kicked the Aurors away. She puffed her arms and broke off her cuffs, but when she tried to stretch and grab Wendy, the spider woman shot a web up to the webbed ceiling and pulled herself up, along with Wendy. Contessa stuck the wrapped-up child to the webs. “No one steals MY dinner! Dementors, attack!” She snapped her fingers and made her Patronuses vanish.

When the phantoms flew down to dine on the rubber woman, Sonny and Donna burst out of Rouge’s fat area. “The Comical Twins are here to SAVE THE DAY!”

“Lovely, you brought some more morsels.” Contessa smirked. “But no child can bear their will against the dementors.”

“Expecto Patronum!” The raven Patronus flew in and scared the dementors away. Dr. Facilier jumped between Contessa and his friends. “Laura, take the twins and Carla outta here! I’ll save Wendy. My Patronus will protect you from any more of them.”

“You really think you can win?” Rouge asked.

“I mighta got my ass whupped before, but that’s because my cane reduces the full power of my Devil’s Wand. Now that it’s out in the open, it’s ready for action!”

“Now, hold on!” Carla shouted. “I’m staying here and helping Wendy! And don’t try to tell me otherwise.”

“I know I am not staying.” Rouge remarked, grabbing the twins. “Do not die on me, Harvey!” She raced out of the room with the raven Patronus following them.

“Aren’t you going to stop them, Floop?” Contessa glared.

“Actually, I’m feeling a little gassy!” Floop’s body puffed. “Oh, Floop.” The balloon popped.

“Fine, you can help.” Facilier said to Carla. “But stay back and let me wear her down first.”

“What kind of creature is the Contessa, anyway?”

“I am an Arachnimorph.” Contessa replied, keeping her hand on Wendy as she stood on her web. “We are spiders who can take the shape of humans.”

“They’re a despicable race.” Facilier said with a scowl. “They pose as humans and go out on dates with real humans. They lure ’em back to their cave for ‘dinner’, and guess what happens next.”

“Sadly, there have been advances in anti-disguise charms. My people keep getting discovered, and we cannot land any decent meal. However, I was lucky enough to find a friend in one of the World Leaders. Now I have a full-time job where I can have all the food I desire, and for a good cause.”

“A good cause, my tail!” Carla retorted. “This prison is a nightmare house! Using these horrid phantoms to eat the souls of your inmates?! Let alone an innocent child like Wendy! Do you really find pride in this?”

“Why not? You humans are as despicable as us spiders. Stealing and slaughtering others for petty gain. There is a reason prisons were created. And scum like this little troublemaker…” Contessa bent her head over Wendy’s gloomy face and rubbed her cheek, “will atone for their sins in mine and the dementors’ bowels. –AAAHH!” Facilier shot her with a fire spell that made Contessa drop to the ground.

“The only scum in this room is YOU!” Facilier yelled. “Wendy never had any reason for being on them posters, and if the Government didn’t have mindless idiots like GUN at their disposal, she wouldn’t be here! We’re getting out of here as soon as I kick yo’ ass!”

“Don’t think I’ll go down with a simple giant newspaper!” Contessa got back on her feet. “I may be a spider, but I am an excellent witch. You know how most wizards can only cast one spell at a time? Well, my Spider’s Leg allows me to cast eight spells at a time!”

“So that’s how you had two Patronuses active. But we’ll see how your eight spells compare to my voodoo!” Facilier moved the skull and crossbones on his hat over his face. “I hope you’re ready, Contessa!”

“You think you’re the only voodoo master in here? All you’re doing is burning carbs. And I like my food spicy!” (Play Sally’s Song from Nightmare Before Christmas: Oogie’s Revenge!)

Boss fight: La Contessa

Facilier shot attack spells at the spider woman, but Contessa jumped to his left and shot three web balls. The doctor flipped right and shot a Leg-Locker Curse at her, tying the Contessa’s eight legs as she fell forward. She shot up to her ceiling web, pulled up, then aimed her bottom at the ground to shoot out eggs. Baby Arachnimorphs crawled at Facilier and jumped on him, but his shadow ripped them off quickly while the doctor stomped them. “Facilier, Wendy!” Carla shouted, pointing up frantically when Contessa was going to eat the child.

“SHADOW, GO!” The doctor sent his shadow up to grab the woman by the neck and tug. Contessa clutched Wendy and tried to bite her, but the shadow gave a forceful tug and made her fall to the ground. Facilier ran at the spider to kick her, but Contessa recovered and gnashed his leg in her teeth. Facilier kicked her, but the spider’s grip remained firm as the pain in his leg grew. “Sectumsempra!” The second he cast the spell, Contessa broke away, and Facilier ended up cutting his own leg.

“AHH!” He slouched. “Augh… that’s gonna need stitches.”

“Seeing that blood only makes me HUNGERIEST!” Contessa hissed, crouching down like a predator. “I WANT YOU!” She lunged again, but Facilier blew her back with a Reductor Curse.

“Facilier, we need to cut Wendy down!” Carla shouted.

“Not when I’m around!” Contessa blew the smoke away with a wind spell. “I’m giving this place a makeover!” Her wand flashed, and thick spider webs as wide as logs popped out around the walls. Facilier was pushed against a wall by one of them, dropping his Devil’s Wand. He flinched when Contessa dropped onto his web, close to his face. “The only people who could use a Devil’s Wand is one who’s sold their soul to a Devil. And you accuse me of being evil?”

The wand flew back into its master’s hand as he aimed it at her head. “I put my past behind me.” He said before shooting her off, then burning the web with fire. “But I still keep in contact with old friends!” Facilier grabbed a vial of pink liquid from his jacket and smashed it on the ground, creating a pink explosion. Colorful designs moved along the walls as voodoo dolls and tiki masks emerged from them. Contessa scoffed and shot Sectumsempra to slice the dolls, Reductos to destroy the masks, and Protego to shield herself.

She saw Facilier casting fire spells to burn the thick webs, then Contessa launched a web over to catch him and throw him against the wall. Contessa leapt over, grabbed him, and tried to bite his neck, but the witch-doctor dodged his head left and right before Shadow tackled her from the side. The spider used Lumos Solem to scare the shadow off, and Facilier whipped an assortment of attack spells that Contessa was quick to defend. The spider-woman shot a web to the ceiling, swung across, and knocked him down.

Contessa jumped off and shot a swarm of large spiders out of her wand onto Facilier, who grabbed his Flubber and spun around with it to catch and throw them off. The Contessa shot a web at the end of the Flubber, but Facilier whipped it back, pulling the spider’s web and making Contessa fly over as well. Facilier punched her across the jaw, and Contessa returned this by scratching his face with her arm-legs.

One of the spiders she conjured landed next to Carla, who also noticed the web column leading up to Wendy. Carla hopped on the large spider and rode it like a bull. “I don’t know the Spanish word for ‘spider’, but you better do what I say! Now, take me up to Wendy!” The spider did as told and crawled up the web. Carla took the Lamia Scale out of her satchel and held it up to her. “Child, here! Your wand, please take it! Please!” She poked her face with it. “Wendy, why aren’t you moving?! Did they already take your soul?!”

“No, they haven’t, yet.” Contessa hissed as Facilier had his arms around her neck from behind. “But I told you a child’s will can’t last long in the dementors’ presence.”

“That doesn’t mean we can’t bring it back!” Facilier yelled, punching her head against the ground and hopping off. “I didn’t want to in case the others still needed it, but I’ll chance it. Expecto Patronum!” He shot his raven Patronus up to float by Wendy’s face. Its light reflected off her eyes.

“You think that’ll help?” Contessa whacked Facilier with her butt to knock him down, and when he tried to get up, she flashed a hypnotic beam from her eyes and made him dizzy. She blasted a spell that made him flip up into the air and get stuck on the ceiling web. The Contessa crawled up the wall, excited to dine on his flesh. “…Oopsie!” Facilier perked when a bottle of green liquid fell to the ground and shattered, causing a larger current of the green ooze to float up and encase his body. It burned the Contessa’s arms when she tried to touch him, and burned the webbing so he could drop free.

“What is that?” Contessa questioned.

“Voodoo magic condensed into liquid!” Facilier spoke as his eyes and the inside of his mouth appeared flashy and colorful, complimented by the magical skull mask over his face. “You never know when you might need some!” The entire room glowed an eerie green as he controlled a wave of stitches and sewing needles. Some wrapped around Contessa’s legs while others began to cut up the web binding Wendy. More tiki masks appeared and floated up to attack Contessa.

“Expecto Patronum!” The warden cast four spider Patronuses to keep the tikis at bay. “You know Patronuses work on voodoo creatures too, right?” The Contessa shot the Jelly-Legs Curse at Facilier, followed by a magic web that tied him up. “Forget about sucking her soul, I’ll just eat her now!”

The raven Patronus was still flapping around Wendy’s face, but it was chased away by two of the spider Patronuses. The Contessa grabbed her own head and pulled it back like a hood, revealing her true, hideous face with pinchers oozing venom and eight red eyes. Wendy’s conscience was coming back thanks to the Patronus, and she saw a blurry mass looming over her. “I’ll send the dementors after your soul in Hell.”

“C…Carla…” Wendy’s vision became clear to see the little kitten on the hideous spider.

The Contessa grabbed Carla in both her arms and hissed at her. Carla was helplessly struggling. “I suppose you’ll serve as an appetizer.” She opened her mouth to swallow Carla whole.

All of Wendy’s other senses returned that very moment. “CARLA!” She was able to get her arm free of the cut web-wrap, grab the Lamia Scale that was dropped on the ground, and cast Expelliarmus to knock Carla away just before Contessa’s teeth snapped. The spider hissed and crawled over to pick her up by the arm. “You wanna die first?!”

“Not today!” Facilier whipped his Flubber to pull Wendy over. “Sectumsempra!” He blasted the white slice to chop off Contessa’s right arm.

“AAAAHH!”

“You think you’re a bringer of justice with this job, Contessa?!” The Shadow Man yelled as a tornado of liquid voodoo spun around him. “Sapping the love and joy out of people until there’s nothing left?! I don’t know what sick thoughts you’re thinking to make those Patronuses, but you don’t deserve them! I may have done bad things and have a fondness for Dark Arts…but if I do any worthwhile thing, it’s givin’ this girl a reason to be happy! And if YOU got a problem with that… you can take it up with my Friends on the OTHER SIDE!”

With a wave of his wand, the voodoo spirits swarmed Contessa, attacking her from all sides and trapping her in a whirlwind. Dr. Facilier performed a dance to keep the spirits coming, preventing Contessa from recovering. When the doctor did a splits, the voodoo exploded into colorful fireworks. The dark room turned back to normal. Contessa lay defeated on the ground, her wand rolling away from her spidery claw. (End song.)

“Hoo…huff…” Facilier gasped for breath, his skull mask dispersing. “Been a while since I did that… Lemme getchu outta there, Wendy.” He ripped off the rest of the web covering her and helped Wendy to her feet. “You okay?”

“I am…”

“Child!” Carla rushed up and jumped to her master’s chest.

“Carla!” Wendy hugged her back.

“Hate to cut the reunion short, but we need to go! Can you walk?”

Wendy took a step forward- “Mmm!” her leg faltered. “My legs feel numb…”

“Harvey!” Madame Rouge broke into the room, and some Aurors’ unconscious bodies flew in with her. “Your Patronus disappeared!”

“I had to use it to save Wendy. Sorry if I worried you. Laura, I need you to carry Wendy and Carla!”
“Alright.” The woman stretched her arms to grab both girls.

“What are the twins at?” Harvey asked as they hurried up the stairs.

“They’re in the center yard. We better hurry, the dementors—” When they got outside, they saw a cloud of dementors surrounding a center. Sonny and Donna were in this center, and the dementors caused the ground to freeze with their presence. The Ice Climbers looked as dull as Wendy did moments ago, their bodies steadily covering in ice. “Secure the island!” Aurors were swooping in on broomsticks, landing on every wall and tower. “The prisoners must not escape!”

“Expecto Patronum!” Facilier tried to cast one from his wand, but the light came out in an impure mist. “Darn it! I used up too much power just then.”

“Hold on! What are they doing?” Carla asked.

As the dementors were slowly moving closer to them, Sonny and Donna weakly looked up and smiled at each other. “Hey, Donna…?”

“Yes, Sonny…?”

“…Super cold…”

Both siblings slowly reached and locked their mittened hands. The ice encased their bodies, their brown hair turned white, and their hands glowed with their Ice Chi. They raised their hands up, slammed them on the ground, and the entire prison island froze solid. It began to snow, and the Aurors shivered. The ocean around the island was also frozen. “…Well, that was something.” Facilier remarked, having protected them with an anti-freeze spell.

Madame Rouge stretched over to grab the twins and pull them through the dementors. They went up the stairs to one of the walls and found the side of the island their yacht was parked, jumping off and racing to the boat. Floop was waiting for them. “Well, we were all set to go, but then the ocean froze! What happened?”

“These kids did it.” Facilier indicated the twins, whom Rouge dropped on the floor, still making dull smiles. “My guess is they got a power boost from the dementors. Never seen an icebender do that.”

“Well, can they unfreeze??”

“Don’t worry, I’ve got another idea.” Facilier ran down into the storage hull and opened a crate filled with potions. He found a blue one and drank, restoring his energy. Afterwards, the doctor ran back onto the deck and shot fire down into the frozen water, opening a hole for him to dive into.

“Mr. Facilier!” Wendy yelled.

“I swear, zat man is more insane than Brain sometimes.” Rouge said.

“What’s happening to the boat?!” Floop yelled when the vessel began rumbling.

The Old Orleans was lifted by the tentacles of a giant squid. The squid’s head rose above the surface, and Dr. Facilier was standing on it, clutching his wand in his teeth, folding hands above his head, and swaying his head to a mystical, banjo-like tune. “He’s controlling the squid!” Wendy remembered when he did this to the Racatan at Orchid Bay.

The giant squid smashed through the frozen ocean and out of the gates to Azkaban. More Aurors were hovering on brooms and casting spells that made water spires sprout up, so Facilier had the squid maneuver around them. The dementors were catching up, taking the form of a dark cloud, but since Facilier couldn’t shoot a Patronus like this, he kept the squid moving. The squid had to dodge around reefs, whose presence was only indicated by waves crashing into them. Once the reefs were passed, a small fleet of GUN navy ships started to fire at them.

When two more GUN ships were coming up ahead, Facilier had the squid set the yacht down on their right, then he jumped onto the deck, letting the squid crash into the ships in its last seconds of hypnotism. “Just about every wizard-owned facility has a giant squid in its waters. Is the Apparator functional?”

“It is!” Floop responded.

“Good, then I’m getting us out of here!” Facilier jumped at the controls and set coordinates for the Apparator. “We’re going to Iceland!” He pressed the activate and opened a spiraling green portal in the sea ahead. The yacht sailed inside and was gone, leaving the pursuing dementors in confusion.

Ocean close to Iceland

The boat popped out of the other end of the portal, on a peaceful sea and clear night sky. “Sigh…” Wendy sat on the deck and rubbed her legs. “My legs are sore…”

“Perhaps they’re just cold. I’ll warm them up.” Carla hugged her master’s legs.

“Oh, right.” Carla looked at the wing and flapped it. “Well, I guess I won’t be much help to you now. I’ll just be a hindrance.”

Wendy grabbed the kitten and hugged her to her chest. Tears dripped onto Carla’s head. “No you won’t. You saved my life… I’ll always want your help.”

Facilier, Floop, and the Ice Climbers smiled at their moment. Madame Rouge kept her usual scowl, but she watched them nonetheless. Wendy looked up at each of them. Dr. Facilier, Mr. Floop, Madame Rouge, Sonny and Donna (whom were still partly frozen with white hair). “…I’m sorry… for causing so much trouble for you all.”

“It ain’t yo’ fault.” Harvey said. “Besides, someone had to teach that hag a lesson.”

Carla gasped. “Oh, no! I completely forgot about Chelia! W-What if she’s still-!”

“She isn’t.” Wendy said. “That World Leader came to my cell… he told me Chelia wasn’t there. They took her somewhere else to suck out her God Chi.”

“Well, we’ll find her, Wendy.” Floop said with promise in his voice. “We’ll find where they’re keeping her and rescue her, too. She’ll be added to our group… and I’m going to make us one hell of a sitcom!”

“Is that the only thing on your mind??” Carla giggled.
“What? I have creator’s urges, what do you expect?” he asked with a shrug. The group exchanged in slight laughter, except for Madame Rouge, who sighed at the simple attempt at humor.

It really is just like Fairy Tail. A family I didn’t know I had. I hate to ask this of them… but I hope they never leave my side. I’d like to meet more people like them, too. … It was then Wendy remembered Cheren.

Symphonia: Bald Mountain

Medusa, Thanatos, and Pandora approached the dark mountain where dementors roamed. The mountain whose odd shape was in actuality the folded wings of the Song Demon, Chernabog. Pandora was in her god form, a black and blue flame with a face and halo. The Goddess of Chaos unleashed a beam from her mouth that exploded the mountain.

“Chernabog wakes up once a year on La Melody Extravaganza.” Medusa recapped. “But until then, he must rest to recover his energy, robbed from him by the Three Goddess Bells. If he were to awaken before the one-year mark…”

A shadow appeared in the smoke. It was shaped like a baby with horns and small wings. Chernabog crawled out… the terrifying demon had the appearance of a baby. An adorable face with chubby cheeks, and his innocent glowing eyes made him look cuter. He crawled up to Medusa, who was the size of a doll compared to the big winged baby. Medusa smirked as she proceeded to finish her sentence: “He’s going to be very cranky.”

Medusa decided to flick his young nose. Cherny felt the slight tinge of pain. “Buu buu bu...” Tears welled up in his shiny yellow eyes. The cranky demon cried out his feelings. “WAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAHHHHHHHHH!” The earth around Bald Mountain cracked, and any mortal within ten miles went deaf.

The Contessa comes from Sly 2, but the Arachnimorph concept is from Gravity Falls (I made them one in the same ’cause they are :P). Next time in the Side Stories, we will begin the Tenth Firstborn Arc. But don’t worry, the Original Worlds don’t really end here. Sadly, it will be on hiatus until I write more of the Main Story. Still, we made a fair amount of progress in a short time. Here, have an Atbash Cipher.

Chapter 39: Japan vs. America

KND Moonbase

“Numbuh 3621.” Panini reported hurriedly to the Supreme Leader. “The ships of Sectors W7, JP, and KB are about to board the hangar. Carol is with them, too.”

“Good.” Cheren nodded. “Tell them to meet me up here.”

The Sector Leaders of the aforementioned sectors gathered on the bridge and greeted Cheren with a salute. Numbuh 2=1, Bon Clay Jr., of Sector KB, Numbuh 12-0, Karin Kurosaki, of JP, and Numbuh W473R, Chimney, of W7. “At ease,” Cheren told them. “A—Melody, Danny, Emily?” He noticed the five extra operatives. “Why were you with Sector JP?”

“And we kinda got picked up on the way.” Melody followed.

Cheren shook his head, “Tell me later. Now, my sister sent me these photos earlier,” Cheren held up his phone, displaying the stadium maps, “and said they originated from Carol here. Could you tell us where you got these?”

“Gladly.” Carol walked up to the front and spoke with a serious and confident aura, “Last night, don’t ask why, I broke into a CIA office in Virginia. I overheard the director and one of the Corporate Presidents talk about sending Mega Footbombs to the three main KND bases. Their secret locations were marked inside NFL Stadiums, so I snapped those photos.”

“There are Mega Footbombs in New Jersey; Arlen, Texas; and Colorado’s NFL Stadiums.” Cheren looked at his phone. “I’ll mail each of you these photos, then I want you to break into these stadiums and steal the Footbombs. The best course of action would be to dispose of them, but considering their range and magnitude, it may not be the best option. I think I’ll summon Nebula from GKNB over to warp them into a black hole or somethin’. The Footbombs will likely have a lot of guard, which is why I want you to go as sectors.”

“No worrehs, Cherry Boy!” Numbuh 2=1 smiled brightly. “We’ll swipe them balls and have ‘em trashed like yesterday’s muffin top. Won’t we, fellas?”

“YEA!” The okama operatives posed in the background.

“I have some queries first.” Karin raised a finger.
“What is it, Numbuh 12-0?”

“First, our treehouse just got taken over by apes, so the longer we do this, the more they might be touching my stuff, so send backup. Second, we carried two adults with us, one of them’s a water freak, the other is annoying. We need to drop them somewhere first.”

“And our Uncle Sheldon.” Sarah followed.

“We’ll set up a guestroom for them here.” Cheren replied. “Emily’s group can stay and tell me about their adventure.”

“I also have an annoying guest I’d like to leave here.” Chimney raised her hand.

“Chimney, if it’s that new Mary friend of yours, I don’t wanna hear it.” Cheren said with disbelief. “Besides, April called and told me she was helpful. Wanted to recommend her for training.”

“Curse that traitorous April.” Chimney fumed with anger.

“When you’re ready to leave, suit up.” Cheren instructed. “Sector JP, you’ll go after the Footbomb in New Jersey. Sector KB, you get Colorado. Sector W7, you’ll do Texas. I’ll send the maps to your phones. Sector L, will you be helping JP?” Cheren asked.

Melody was looking at Danny’s phone, nodding with her brother. “We think we’ll stay here, too. There’s something else we wanna talk about.”

“So be it. Kids Next Door, battle stations!”

Cheren sent them all the bomb locations as the operatives returned to their ships. Melody walked up to Cheren and showed him Danny’s phone. “Look in the top-right.”

This photo depicted New Jersey’s stadium. In the top-right of the flashlit camera, there was a tiny portion of a different paper on the wall. The words Mermaid Swamp were legible. “Mermaid Swamp?”

“Yes, that. Any idea what that is?”

“No, but what does it have to do with anything?”

“We’re trying to find Manaphy, but Grandpa Kyogre says he’s been missing for years. Carol, look that place up.”

“Got it.” Carol typed the swamp into her laptop. “A legendary swamp said to be hidden within Louisiana’s bayous. Home to toxic mermaids who prey on visitors.’ Quite a story there.”

“Louisiana, huh.” Melody thought aloud. “Danny, you and I should go there.”

“You shouldn’t go now.” Cheren told them. “We’re gonna have Dad’s funeral in a couple days. Can you wait ‘til then?”

“Okay. We think we’ll borrow a S.C.A.M.P.E.R. to take Mom home.”

“Alright. See you later.” Cheren’s two cousins left the bridge.

“I’ll head to communications.” Carol said as she walked away. “I wouldn’t mind trying a few “Er- Carol, you don’t have clearance!” Cheren called.

“I will in a moment!” Carol winked. Cheren sighed with disbelief.

“Yer workin’ awfully hard lately,” Panini mentioned. “Knowin’ yer dad’s funeral is comin’, it’s surprising you can manage all this.”

“Someone has to run the organization. Zero knows you can’t.” He smirked lightly.

“What if something big comes up on the day?”

“Then we’ll have to take care of it. That’s why I wanna get these Footbombs dealt with ASAP, so—”

“Incoming transmission from Sector E.” Panini rushed to the Global Station to answer this call.

“This is Numbuh 860, what is your transmission?”

Numbuh Great, Sector E’s leader, appeared onscreen. He spoke with a British accent. “Ah, Numbuh 3621, good that you’re here as well. I have someone that wants to speak with you.” He held up his pinky finger. “He claims to be the leader of the Minish.”

“The Minish Leader?” The camera zoomed in on the little Minish on the finger. It was close enough to make out Lenari’s blurry form. The Minish was saying something that Cheren and Panini couldn’t make out.

“He claims that he wants your help in destroying America.” Numbuh Great said. Lenari panicked and shouted frantically. “My apologies, he wants your help in attacking America.” They saw Lenari face-palm and yell in Great’s ear again. “He says to let him explain slowly, he wants to get this over with. He’s grunting with annoyance. He wishes to stop repeating everything he says— goodness, is this some sort of mental issue?” he asked the Minish.

“Um, tell him to wait there, Numbuh Great, I’ll just come down.” Cheren said, tired of this banter. “Watch the treehouse, Panini.” The leader ran off.

Gallagher Elementary

It was no joke when it was said that Gallagher Elementary was surrounded by a swirling sand pool. Teen Ninjas surrounded the building, some were inside and tying up the hostage students. King Sandy tapped his foot impatiently outside the sand pit. “We’re done implanting all the hooks.” Nya LaMar flew overhead and reported. “The carrier crafts are gonna be here in a few minutes.”

“That’s all well and good.” Sandy sighed. “I’m just a tad disappointed my daughter didn’t show up.”

“Yeah, ‘cause when my school turns into a giant sandpit, I wanna rush over there ASAP.” Nya remarked sarcastically.

“She’s bound to show up sooner or later. Right now, at least I can make up for my mistake by bringing President Jimmy another helping of students. …Ah, here they are.”

A team of Teen Ninja Carriers hovered overhead and lowered long, hooked wires down. They latched onto the hooks that the Teen Ninjas hammered into the school, and the whole of Gallagher was uplifted from the unsteady sand ground, into the sky. “This is Hoagie to Command Carrier.” Hoagie Gilligan III spoke into his communicator. “Gallagher is off the ground.”

“Excellent.” Gideon Gleeful replied from the Command Carrier. “Father, set a course back for Washington!”

Gideon’s father, a fat man in a sun hat and red button-up shirt with flower designs, was driving the craft. “Now, I’m happy to do this for you, son, but this seems like an awfully complicated construction project.”

“All perfect masterpieces are complicated!” Gideon rubbed his hands evilly. “And the more pieces, the better! After Bill absorbs enough mind power from these kids, he’ll become unstoppable. We will RULE America and all of its colonies! The Kids Next Door will be powerless to stop us! And once we give them a taste of our Mega Footbombs, it’ll be all sugar.” He blinked his eyes in a pretty fashion. “I mean, what can they possibly do at this point?”

Timothy and Hikari Gilligan were among the students tied up at Gallagher. The siblings exchanged nods before easily slipping out of their ropes. You can always count on Hoagie not to betray his family. Hikari opened her backpack to let the nine Pikmin Onions flutter out, and inside them were Rupert and his Pikmin. “Are you guys sure there aren’t any bad guys?” Rupert squeaked.

“They’re all watching from the outside.” Timmy whispered. The building was swaying on its midair hinges. “I can see why.” Timmy held his stomach, feeling ill. “You don’t have to untie everyone, just go help the Kindergarteners. They can take care of the rest.”

“Will do. Come on, fellas.” They watched the colorful Pikmin army scamper out of the classroom.

“But even if we get untied, what’re we gonna do afterwards?” Timmy asked his sister. “How are we supposed to save Rupert’s mom and all the kids in Washington?”

Hikari sighed, laying her head down on her desk. Timmy brought up a good point. How would they be able to escape with all of their friends? How… “Tell me how, Jessie.”

Sector JP C.O.O.L.-B.U.S.

“Um, Karin?” Ururu spoke softly, after fixing on her Tiny Devil suit.

“Yes, Ururu?”

The former directed Karin’s attention to Yuzu, whose eyes had been spinning the whole trip. “I think there’s something wrong with Yuzu. She’s been… like that since she got hypnotized.”

“She’s just being silly.” Karin approached her sister and waved a hand by her. “Yo, Yuzu, snap out of it. We got a job to do, I know you aren’t very strong, but focus!”

Yuzu’s eyes spun for a few seconds. Then they stopped, as the girl yelled, “DEATH TO THE WORLD GOVERNMENT!”

“YEAH! That’s more like it!” Jinta grabbed the girl around the neck. “Fight the power!”

“Wow, you two actually have something in common.” Kodama grinned sheepishly, making a sweatdrop.

“Ah, crap, she’s still hypnotized.” Karin sighed.
“Oppose the Government!” Yuzu raised her spoon with pride.

“Oppose the New World Order!” Jinta cheered.

“Join the Freedom Fighters on your own time!” Karin yelled. “Kodama, how close are we to the stadium?”

“10 miles and closing.” The Fireworks Expert responded, piloting the bus. “We’ll land a few miles away so they don’t suspect anything.”

“You know what we should do?” Jinta asked with a grin. “Make it a game with the other sectors to see who gets their ball first. Last place has to buy everyone snacks!”

“That does sound kinda fun.” Ururu replied softly. “It would inspire us more.”

“It’s no fair if the other teams don’t know they’re playing.” Karin said disagreeingly. “Besides, there’s more than just money for snacks weighing on this game…”

Sector KB’s S.C.A.M.P.E.R.

“HOMOSEXUAL.” Bon Clay shouted out of nowhere. He was sitting on the captain’s seat of their pink S.C.A.M.P.E.R.. “Thou must be: HOMOSEXUAL. Are you guys with me? Because I don’t think you seem to understand what I’m saying. I’ll clarify it: ah-he-hem: gaaaaaaay-”

“UUUUGH!” One of the female members slammed her fists on her control deck. “Will you JUST SHUT UP already!?” She had short, brownish-red hair and a red sleeveless shirt, black shorts, and dark-red boots. She also has red skin. “We KNOW we’re gay, everyone here is gay, but YOU hurt my EARS!”

_Numbuh One Half, GKND transfer operative from Solar Mines_
RUBY

“Ruby, vous êtes en train de brûler à nouveau votre-” A girl with blonde hair and a light-blue shirt was speaking in French.

_Numbuh Perfect Pair, swordsgirl of Sector KB_
LIBBY BELLE

“And YOU!” Ruby pointed at her. “SPEAK ENGLISH!”

“She was saying that you’re setting your seat on fire.” Sapphire replied. She was a blue-skinned girl in a blue-and-white dress, and light-blue hair that covered her eyes. Ruby saw that the pillow of her seat was engulfed in flame.

_Numbuh Other Half, GKND transfer from Glacia, telepath of Sector KB_
SAPPHIRE

“I’m sorry for being such a loudy-mouth.” Bon Clay smiled wide, but sadly. “I’m still upset over Lexi. Why did he have to leave us?! Oh ho ho ho!” He began crying.

“Who cares about Lexi, just let ‘im hang out with his Teen Ninjas.” Ruby folded her arms in anger. “What’re we gonna do about these Mega Footbombs?”

“Sapphire will find it, of course.” Libby replied, her French accent noticeable. “Her psyceek is excellent. Are ve close to ze stadium?”
“Sure, sure.” The ship’s pilot replied with a nonchalant smile, powdering his face with sparkly makeup. He had brownish-blonde hair and pretty blue eyes, and was wearing a pink shirt under a black sleeveless, and slim black pants. He was driving the wheel with his knees.

Numbuh Binary, 4x4 officer of Sector KB

HIBIKI LATES

“Hibiki?” Sapphire spoke in a low tone. “There are two things wrong with your statement.”

“What is that, Sapphy?” he asked with handsome narrowed eyes.

“One… we have changed course about 80 degrees from our destination five minutes ago. Two… we are about to crash into a satellite.”

“WAAAAAAAAAAAH!” They all screamed (except Sapphire) at the incoming satellite in outer space. Hibiki whipped the ship around and flew them back to Earth.

Sector W7’s R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N.

“Oh, wow, we’re going to a football stadium?” Mary asked with a bright and cheerful face. “I’ve always wanted to see an American football game! I heard that they don’t actually use their feet. April, how can you play football without-”

“Mary, if ONE more word comes outta your mouth, I’m gonna rip your tongue out!” Chimney shouted.

“But that all sounds fun!” Mary grinned. “Who doesn’t like to paint their face?”

“Did anyone else notice Sector KB’s adorable outfits?” Aeincha asked with a dreamy smile. “I wanna get in on that.”

“YOU GAY?” (“Gyom?”) her teammates chorused.

“I dunno.” Aeincha sunk.

“There’s Texas, girls.” Chimney reported. “The map says the Footbomb is under the field, so we’re gonna split in pairs and find a way down. Got it? Let’s go!”

After the train took land outside Arlen’s football stadium, the team split into pairs: Chimney with Mocha, Apis with Aisa, April with Mary, and Aeincha with Gonbe. The others followed routes through different floors and corridors, while Apis and Aisa headed to the vast, empty field directly.

“I wish Water 7 had more grass.” Aisa smiled with delight as her bare feet trekked the field ground.

“I thought you might like it.” Apis giggled. “Without all the raging fans, football fields are pretty nice. Hey, do you think you can sense the Footbomb with your Mantra?”

“I’ll try.” Aisa closed her eyes as they kept walking. “There are a few guards and stuff here… yeah, I see it. The Footbomb is 10 meters below this field.”

“It sure would be nice if there was a shortcut around here. …Oh, look!” Apis pointed. “There’s someone there!”
A man with a white T-shirt, blue jeans, brown shoes, and dark-brown hair with a flat top was mowing the grass some yards away. He bore a warm smile, and his eyes behind his square glasses showed he was in daydream. He saw the girls coming and stopped his mower. “Oh, hello, girls. Couldn’t wait until the Cowboys got here?” Hank Hill joked, speaking with a moderate voice.

“Nope.” Apis blushed. “Did you mow this entire field? It’s really pretty!”

“Oh sure did. Fresh Matrix RealGrass.” Hank took a pleasant whiff. “You can’t even tell they used pesticides.”

“You did a great job.” Aisa smiled, wiggling her toes on the grass.

“Say, would you girls like a free sample from Strickland Propane’s new Deluxe Propane-Powered Grill?”

“No thanks.” Apis smiled politely. “We’re just looking for something we lost in the stadium. We’d like to try it later, though!” They were about to walk away.

“Oh, I can’t let you leave.” Hank said, still smiling. “You see, the Teen Ninjas sent us pictures of you girls, so you must be Kids Next Door operatives.” The two whipped around at him with slight surprise. “I’m afraid you’re gonna have to stay a while. But to pass the time,” Hank climbed off his mower, “let me show you how I cut this grass.” He bent down and put his finger on a grass blade. “You want to trim the blades of your mower to 60% smoothness. That way, the tops of the grass-”

“Whoa whoa whoa whoa,” Aisa interrupted, “you’re not gonna keep us here with boring stories, we’re finding our stuff and going.”

Hank sighed sadly and stood up, “Halright, I guess we’ll do this the hard way. This grass is great though, isn’t it?” He smiled. “It really, gets in your nostrils.”

A powerful scent flowed into their noses. The girls felt dizzy and sank to all fours. “Yeah, sometimes it’s recommended you wear plugs in your nose.” Hank pointed at his nostrils. “The scent is too powerful sometimes. Oh well. I’ll go grab the cages.” Hank walked off casually, leaving Apis and Aisa to grow drowsy in the scent.

April and Mary found their way to the employee break room—they stared weirdly at the sight. A man with yellow hair, tan skin, and orange speedos with black tiger stripes was laying on a bed while several ladies cuddled up to him. “Ho ho, take-it-easy-man, dang-ol’-got-enough-room-for-every-one-o’-you, jus’-one-at-a-time, or, maybe-dang-ol’-two, man.” Boomhauer was speaking very fast.

“April? What is that man doing?” Mary asked.

After the women left, Boomhauer faced the Goldenweek cousins with a serious glare. “Tell-y"
Boomhauer punched a switch in the wall, and the Goldenweeks felt the floor shake and rise like an elevator.

They were lifted up to the stadium’s roof, where it was so windy that April had to hold her hat down. Boomhauer went flying to the air, surfing the winds on his own air-light board. “Ah-don’t-even-need-water-to-surf, man, I’m-a-teach-you-how-it’s-done, dang old, enguarde, man!” Boomhauer swooped at the cousins, who dodged aside and fell, watching as Boomhauer swerved around to attack again. April dabbed some red paint on the roof and ran away to let Boomhauer crash there, but a forceful gust of wind blew the red paint away. “Real-windy-up-here, man, good-luck-tryin’-ta-dang-ol’-paint.”

Aeincha rode Gonbe like a horse to a storage area inside the stadium, where cockroaches and insects crittered all around the floor and walls. “Gross! They really oughta call an exterminator or something!” Aeincha said.

“Gyom, gyom!”

Gonbe kicked open a door, stopping at the sight of a lanky man in an orange jumpsuit, orange hat, and shiny sunglasses, with a can of gas strapped to his back. “They did call an exterminator.” Dale Gribble blew a cigarette. “Somethin’ about a rabbit hit with spray can and some genetically animated doll.”

“Are’n’t they more concerned about the man-size preying mantis?” Aeincha remarked.

“Not as surprisin’ as the display before me. I bet no one’s entered you in the Stuffolympics.” His glasses twinkled. “Get ready to win First Prize.”

“Eeeeek!” Aein and Gonbe panicked.

Colorado Stadium

“Hey, Sapphire?” Hibiki asked as the five operatives were in the midst of battle.

“You’re going to ask what these things are.” Sapphire predicted, nimbly dodging the monsters’ attacks.

“Pretty much.”

“They are monsters from Nightmare Enterprises.” The creatures attacking were very short men with heads, arms, and legs, no central body, and each represented the mascots of football teams. “They’re called Rushers.”

“How do you know that?” Ruby asked, punching each Rusher using a pair of red mech gloves.

“Well, look at this, Karin.” Two Teen Ninjas flew over to them. One had white hair and a big sword, the other had red hair and red eyes behind glasses. “Our Rushers found a bunch of snot-nosed kids. In case you brats are curious, we ordered those things from Nightmare Enterprises.”

“That’s how.” Sapphire answered.

“SAY WAT?” Bon Clay looked up with a panicked smile. “Oh! For a second, I thought Karin from Sector JP turned traitor!”

“There’s already a Red Eye.” Suigetsu reminded.

“Then I’ll be Karin U.!!” The girl steamed. “Because my last name is Uzumaki!”

“Doesn’t matter WHO you are, ‘cause I’ll kick your ass!” Ruby balled her fists.

“Right then!” Bon Clay twirled. “Ruby and Sapphire will whoop those two! Let’s go find the Football!”

“Secret elevator underneath the PA box, you’ll have to cross the stadium.” Sapphire informed.

“Uh, Sapphire? They’re already gone.” Ruby noted.

“I know. I was talking to Hibiki telepathically.”

“I’m on it, Sapphire!” Hibiki yelled across the hall.

“Darn it, I was hoping to take on all of you.” Suigetsu smirked. “I need a plate of fries to fill my appetite, not two small ones.”

“I’ll show YOU a small fry!” Ruby jumped up and socked Suigetsu in the jaw with her fist, sending him across the room.

“Ouch!” Suigetsu recovered angrily. “What the crap?! I’m a Logia, how did you punch me?”

“The knuckles of my gloves have chi-blocks!” Ruby smirked proudly. “But I can still get HOT!” She sprouted rockets from her feet and flew at the Logia, forcing her fists on him as they were gone down the hall.

“I’m SICK of that guy leaving me behind!!” Karin U. shouted. “Fine, then I’ll just get you.” She swung a kick at Sapphire, but said girl floated up to the ceiling.

“I’m a psychicbender who mastered Prediction.” Sapphire said tonelessly. “I can predict something an hour away by weighing any and all possibilities and facts around me. Tonight, you’re gonna be in bed for a long time before you go to sleep.”

Karin’s skin became as red as her hair. “SCREW YOU!” She flew up using jetshoes and threw a punch, Sapphire dodged down before throwing a Psycho Sphere, which Karin dodged, kicked at Sapphire, who flew left, then lunged at Karin, who flew up, kicked down, then Sapphire dodged. “But I have Observation Haki, so I already knew your elements as you were coming in!” She grinned wryly. “I don’t need to predict anything, you just let me know and I’ll dodge it!”

“Then I guess..” The camera zoomed on Sapphire’s face, “it’s a battle..” Even closer, “of dodges.”

Bon Clay was dancing like a ballerina, taking terrific and graceful skips down the hallway, while Libby Belle ran ahead of him to cut Rushers with her sword. “Numbuh 2=1, I would appreciate eet if you could ’elp me fight.”

“A human’s body, must be reserved!” Bon spoke brightly. “Like a ‘frigerator, it must be kept in perfect form, ready to serve, not wasted on little freaks! Un, deux!”

“If you aim to fight soon, garçon paresseux, do it when you find ze bomb. I’ll go this way, you go up there.” Libby ran past a stairway while Bon skipped up said stairs.

“Ah-haaaaa!” He was happy as a swan. “I feel no gravity because I am a bird! To be gay is to be freeeee! Come be gaaaay with meeeeee! Un, deuuuu-x!” Clay kicked open a door, finding himself in the “Oh, so the Supreme Leader sent you.” A Russian voice said. “I guess it was expected.”

“HUUU!” Bon Clay’s features stretched wide. “Lexi…”

New Jersey Stadium

Karin Kurosaki kicked her soccerball and bounced it around a team of Rushers, Jinta smashed another group with his giant bat, Ururu sliced them with the claws of her Tiny Devil suit, and Kodama had swiftly tied other Rushers to her firecrackers, passing a salute before watching them fly away. “Like we said, team, split up.” Karin ordered. “Kodama, take Yuzu with you, she shouldn’t be left alone like this.”

“Why can’t I take her?” Jinta asked angrily.

“Because I’m afraid you’ll start a war with her. Alright, team, move!” They split different directions, with Kodama pulling Yuzu along, and Jinta sighing with anger.

Karin rushed into a gym room decorated with a cyan-blue tone—the door sealed behind her. Jinta found his way to a track field on an upper floor—the door sealed. Kodama tripped on her sandals as she tumbled into a target practice room, letting go of Yuzu’s hand in the process. “Yuzu!” She reached to her friend hopelessly before the door sealed. Meanwhile, Ururu wandered onto the football field, gazing up when an electrified net spawned in place of a roof above the stands.

“Bad idea to come here.” Karin whipped her attention forward. An African-American boy approached her, wearing a white mechanical suit with a football helmet of the same material. “We thought the Kids Next Door would find out about our plan, so we were prepared. Where are you guys from?”

“Sector JP from Japan.” Karin replied sternly. “And telling you that before hearing who you guys are is the MOST generosity you’ll have from me.”

“We’re the Canton Rushers. I’m the leader, Ish Taylor. We’re Teen Ninjas who specialize in forms of football. Our Battle Ready Jerseys make us unstoppable.”

“You mean you can’t play well in football without crummy suits?” Karin smirked sardonically. “That’s pathetic. I can easily kick through that crotch plate.”

“I see you have a soccerball. Still haven’t moved up from the kiddie field, I see.”

“What’d you say?” Karin narrowed her eyes.

“I mean, it’s a decent workout for your legs, but football requires real muscle. I don’t think your teammates are gonna cut it.”

“Really?” Her eyebrow twitched, Karin was struggling to repress her anger. “Maybe you just haven’t seen what we’re made of.”

Ish drew out a glowing blue energy football. “Do you care to show us?”

Karin held her soccer ready to drop. “I’ll just tell you: We’re made of FIRE!”

Ish hurled the football at Karin, who nimbly dodged aside and kicked her soccerball to his face. Ish dodged forward, but wasn’t prepared when Karin charged at him for a mighty kick, sending him across the room. Ish kicked off the wall and tackled Karin, the two rolling on the floor before Karin flipped up and kicked away. Ish ran at her to throw a punch, but Karin countered with a kick as both attacks hit with equal force. Ish swung a punch at her head, Karin ducked and kicked Ish off his feet, but the boy grabbed Karin’s legs and kicked on rocket boots, flying around and pulling Karin along. Ish spun around and threw Karin against the wall before flying and dealing a punch.

In the target practice room, Troy Kang, a Korean-American in a Battle Ready Jersey, faced Kodama from across the long room. “It never matters how far it is, I always go for the goal.” He assured.

“I can relate to that.” Kodama smiled proudly. “I can blast a balloon a thousand miles away!”

“I wouldn’t wear sandals on a football field.” Troy extracted a cannon on either wrist, charging energy footballs. “You tripped walking in, you won’t make it to me.”

“I won’t need to!” Kodama twirled her dress and unveiled a trio of firecrackers from underneath. “Because my eyes are on the prize!”

“Better keep your eyes on the ball.” Troy blasted the footballs, Kodama sent smaller fireworks to destroy them, then sent a giant one to Troy, who took a great leap forward while the area behind him exploded into colorful smoke.

“I wonder who will reach whom first?” Kodama remarked. She blasted another round of fireworks that Troy countered with footballs, afterwards dashing through the smoke to get closer, then Kodama blasted another huge firework to the floor in front of him, making Troy jump back.

“Hope that it isn’t me.” Troy said.

On the football field, Ururu stuttered with fright at the imposing giant. Tua Tupola, a Samoan-American in his own B.R.J., was obese and roughly 30 feet tall, staring down at Ururu as he stomped toward her. “Look, why don’t you just surrender?” Tua asked sincerely. “I don’t like fighting little girls. Especially the really little ones.”

“O-Oh, that’s okay.” Ururu blushed, swaying her hip in a sheepish fashion. “I may be small, but I’m really strong, a-and I can fight.”

“Heh, tell you what.” Tua smiled. “I’ll give you the first hit for free. How’s that sound?”

“O-Okay. Thank you.” Ururu bowed. She pressed a button on her Tiny Devil, and vanished into thin air.

“What?!” Tua searched around. “Where did she go?! OW, AHH!” His head punched left, then right, then upside the chin as he fell on his back. When the giant narrowed his eyes to the center, he spotted a teeny-tiny Ururu on his nasal bridge.

“My Tiny Devil suit converts my size into strength.” Ururu squeaked. “I based it off of Ant-Man. I may be tiny, but my targets are only bigger.” Ururu smiled.

“Why you- ow!” Tua attempted to grab her, but Ururu flew away, causing him to smack his own face. Tua got to his feet and saw Ururu back to normal, throwing a punch at the girl, but Ururu jumped and shrunk down to run up his face for another punch.

A similar scenario was happening to Jinta, who was getting punched left, right, diagonal, frontways, sideways, backways. “URURU is that you!?”
“Nope!” A blonde-haired boy zipped by, punched him- “It’s me!” Zipped around, punched him again, “Marty Stevens, nice to meet you!” Zipped around to punch the ear, “How ya doin’?”

Left, right, in the air, back to the ground, then Jinta felt the speedster zooming around him like a whirlwind. “GHHHH!” Jinta bit his teeth in anger and swung his giant bat, bashing Marty in the face. “You need to control yourself!” He smashed his bat down, but Marty sped away again.

Yuzu wobbled left to right as she limped slowly. Her nose picked up a scent from the nearby room, and her instincts told her to follow. It was a kitchen area, and it looked in pretty fair shape. “Stop right there!” a girl’s voice yelled. Yuzu lazily turned around, seeing an orange-haired girl with bright green eyes. It was Ash Reynolds. “I know you’re with those Kids Next Door. You won’t find the Footbomb in there, if that’s what you’re thinking.”

“What are you saying?” Ash asked.

Yuzu’s spiraling eyes flashed. “REVOLUTIONOOOON!” Acting on instinct, she dashed into the kitchen, turned on the oven, put a pot on, and began stirring ingredients.

Ash couldn’t make sense of this. “Is this some sort of baker’s symbolism?”

Yuzu faced her with passion, “A fight to destroy oppression! The World Government must fall! I will bake a meal so powerful, it will make them fall! My Ramen Kempo will reign supreme!” She grabbed a spatula and ladle, twirling them like weapons. She professionally stirred the pot, flipped ingredients out, and shot them at Ash, who jabbed fists at each one before spaghetti hit her in the face. After Ash wiped it off, she evasively dodged when Yuzu flicked a storm of patties like shurikens, followed by buns, lettuce, tomatoes, Ash stared with confusion when a wall of hamburgers grew behind her. With a twirl of her spatula, Yuzu chucked it at the burgers and caused them to all topple down over the female footballer.

“Oh, Lexi!” Bon Clay cried, falling to his knees as his emotions poured. “Why do we have to fight?! Why did you have to leave us, why couldn’t you tell us what was wro-o-o-o-ong!”

“STOP crying!” Alexei Abramovici hit his former leader with his hammer staff. “It’s that kind of idiocy that ensured my decision!”

“But it was YOUR idiocy, too!” Bon cried, outstretching his hands. “You were gay, I was gay, ALL OF US were gay! Come back and be gay with me, Lexi! Come back and be gay with me aga-a-a-a-ain!”

“No!” Lexi hit him with the hook staff. “The only person I serve is Master Lucas. The World Government will save the world, and you ignorant Kids Next Door will regret not siding with them.”

“You know, Lexi,” Bon Clay stood up assuredly, hands on his hips, “I might have sided with you, I might have agreed with you, but those Government guys did one thing I disagreed with: THEY KILLED CHERRY BOY’S FATHER.” His features became dark, and his smile was terrifying. “I will always be loyal to Cherry Boy. He let Sector KB be a THING, he let us be GAY!” He posed brightly. “So if he don’t like the Government, I ain’t helpin’ ‘em one bit!”

“You’re a fool.” Lexi glared. “Can Cherry Boy stop the Apocalypse? In what little time we have, can he match the powers of the Government? It is not too late to quit being stupid.”
“I BELIEVE in Cherry Boy!” Bon’s eyes were sparkly. “He never failed us before! And I will not fail you!” He kicked his swan slippers at Lexi, who rolled aside and swung his hammer. Clay leaped off the polearm and jumped to kick Lexi against the microphone desk.

Hibiki Lates searched intently in the area beneath the PA box. He sported his cool smile and touched his forehead, closing his eyes. He could sense it: the very faint photon particles in the air. He followed them to an ordinary wall, which in reality was wallpaper. He found a secret elevator behind it, as the photon particles hovered around its buttons. He rode the elevator to a secret passage under the stadium. Hibiki approached a door sealed by a terminal, sporting a soft chuckle at this defense. He formed his own holographic computer in the air and hacked into the terminal. The door opened.

Hibiki solved a few more such codes before finding the central room. The Footbomb inside the glass capsule was orange, baring the symbol of the Denver Broncos. “You got here quickly,” Gage Davidson said. The former Arctic Prison inmate still wore his black jacket, pants, and sunglasses. His yellow mustache and beard were longer. “What kind of computer is that? How the hell did you hack in?”

Hibiki brushed his hair back. “I’m a lightbender who can manipulate photons in the air. All computers project a sort of wireless signal I can bend to my will. Though to be fair, this defense was lacking.”

“So like, you can control any sort of computer? Even mine?” Gage asked aggressively.

“Hm hm. I’m not that type of sport.” Hibiki patted his shiny hair. “A person needs to be their self, and fight how they choose. So how will you fight me?”

Gage quickly tapped his keyboard and summoned a Flash-made ninja and cowboy gunman. Hibiki nimbly dodged the gun shots and ducked when the ninja slashed him, sending a kick at the ninja’s crotch to distort his code. Gage sidestepped a few feet away and summoned small UFOs to shoot lasers at Hibiki, the latter used his bending to grab the lasers and shoot them back, then punched the cowboy. On Gage’s code, a team of machineguns came up from the floor and blasted bullets, Hibiki created a shield of security blocks from the wireless air, shielding from bullets, then using the holo-screens to slice the guns. Hibiki thrusted the screens forward and sent Gage flying, but the Teen summoned some Flash hawks to grab him by his coat.

Karin U. tossed kunai knives at Sapphire, who dodged. Sapphire blew some psychic at Karin, she dodged, Karin ran to throw some punches, Sapphire dodged every one, Karin flew away when Sapphire tried to grab her in psychic. The Teen Ninja shot lasers at Sapphire, she still dodged, the latter threw a string of Psycho Spheres, Karin dodged left-and-right, the ninja kicked on rocket shoes and blasted at Sapphire, she projected a psychic bubble, Karin directed up before hitting it, then flew back when Sapphire flew up and missed her. “This dodging match is boring!” Karin shouted.

“I agree.” Sapphire showed no emotion.

“How ’bout we just fly and throw a punch at each other?”

“Nnn… alright.”

Both girls flew at the other, threw a punch—they stylishly dodged and faced each other in midair again. “I knew you would dodge.” Sapphire said.

“I’m not letting myself get hit! Sigh, fine, let’s do it again.”
“You’re going to dodge me again.”

Suigetsu swung his giant sword at Ruby, who punched with her right fist and blocked, then the Solaran jumped a low swing to kick Suigetsu’s face. Her foot sunk into his water-made face, and when it reformed, Suigetsu was biting Ruby’s arm in his sharp teeth. Ruby grunted with pain before Suigetsu threw her against the wall, afterwards grabbing her right arm in the form of water. Ruby boiled with anger, heating up Suigetsu’s arm, his water arm bubbled as Suigetsu winced and pulled away. “Munch THIS in your jaw!” Ruby aimed her mech fists at his face, and using her firebending, she rocketed the fists forward, forcing Suigetsu against the wall with great force.

Suigetsu smacked the fists away, and when Ruby tried to run and get them, the Fishkid slammed his sword in her way. “You aren’t so strong without them!” He swung at her, Ruby rolled aside, she ran for her fists, then Suigetsu kicked and sent her across the room. She got up in time to dodge his sword, punching fire at the Logia and creating steam with each hit. Ruby sparked with an idea, smirking as she punched rounds of flames at Suigetsu. “Ow- Hey- Stop that, stop that!” Suigetsu grunted as the hall began to fill with steam. “I can’t see anything!”

“That’s more like it!” Ruby punched twin flames.

Hank Hill was hauling two glass cages, each fit for one, out to the football field. After stopping to drink an Alamo Beer, he nearly choked at the sight. “What the hell?!?” The grass of the field had grown to terrific size, tall as trees.

“Surpriiiiiise!” Apis sat on the edge of the blades above Hank, grinning. “I used my Cell Telepathy to accelerate their growth! Looks like you have more mowing to do before next game!”

“Gah!—Turn my grass back right now!” Hank fumed. “And how the hell did you escape that scent?!”

“Come get us, Dummy!” Apis taunted as they vanished into the grass.

“GAHHH!” Hank furiously trudged through the thick grass. Apis and Aisa giggled tauntingly during this time, but he managed to find his lawnmower. “You kids need to learn some respect. You don’t go magically altering a football field’s lawn!” He pushed a button that extracted buzzsaws on either side of the mower, chopping the grass forest down as he followed the girls jumping across the grass tops.

“WATCH OUT, RAINING PUMPKINS!” Aisa threw her Conache Pumpkin down against the mower’s front. Its iron-like hardness ruptured and weakened the mower.

“Better sharpen those blades, they’re growing again!” Apis telepathically spoke with the cells of the grass under Hank’s mower. He was uplifted into the air.

“Get ready, Mary.” April said as Boomhauer swooped down again on his surfboard. The girls dodged aside, with Mary sticking two white crayons against the board as she was pulled along.

“Hey-man, git-git-git-offa-this, man!” Boomhauer yelled when Mary flew onto the board and was bent over the side.

“Waaaaah!” Boomhauer spun the board around as Mary fell off for April to catch her. “Gah, dang old…” However, the man suddenly felt his surfboard weighing to the roof. “What-What-the-hell-did-you-do, man?”

“I used Gray Crayons to make your surfboard heavy like metal!” Mary smiled, holding two crayons of said color. “Heavy stuff doesn’t float well on water, does it, April?” Her cousin shook her head.

“You-know-what, I’m-dang-old-glad-my-board-is-heavy, ‘cause-dang-wind-is-gonna-get-chilly-chilly, man.” Boomhauer landed on the stadium roof and pressed a remote. A giant fan emerged from the roof a few meters away and began blowing powerful wind. April and Mary grabbed hold of one of the poles for stadium lights while Boomhauer weighed himself down with his heavy-as-metal surfboard.

Aeincha rode Gonbe as the swarm of moths and cockroaches chased them, directed by the gas that Dale Gribble was spraying at them. “Gonbe, jump onto those boxes and kick me to him from there!”

“Gyom, yom!” Gonbe nimbly pounced up the stairway of large crates before facing down at the exterminator. Gonbe pounced off, let Aeincha fly off of him, then kicked the Lilliputian toward Dale to land against his face. “GYAAAAH! Help!” Dale cried. “I’m being attacked by a Cabbage Patch Kid! I told you I’m not crazy!”

Aeincha threw her grappling hook around to latch the top of his container, swinging around to fly on top of it. She tried to turn the dial with all her Lilliputian strength, but failed. “Not so fast!” She was instantly grabbed in the exterminator’s gloved hand. “You may have won the battle at Farmer Brown’s Cabbage Patch, but I’m stronger than I was back then! I can predict every move you make, from the blink of your eyes to jumping off your-”

“Gyom!” Gonbe pounced up from behind, bit his teeth into the gas container, and poked it open. Dale dropped Aeincha in surprise, and Gonbe caught her on his back before hopping away. Dale stood there mindlessly as gas flowed out and surrounded him. “Dang…”

Mocha and Chimney fought their way through a basement area, stomping swarms of Rushers that tried to get in their way. Er, needless to say Mocha did all the stomping, and the punching down doors, Chimney rode her hair. “That’s showin’ them, Mochan!” Chimney fist-palmed. “We’re gonna find our ball first and WIN this contest!”

“This is a contest?” Mocha asked.

“Why not? I betcha Kodama’s sector’s doin’ it.”

Mocha broke down another doorway to a room with a scaled-down football field. Across the room was a fat man that was cradling the Footbomb like a baby. He had brown hair around a bald scalp, a white sleeveless shirt, and blue jeans with brown shoes. (He looked almost like Hank.) Bill Dauterive was feeding the Footbomb (which was midnight-blue with the Dallas Cowboys logo) a baby milk bottle when he looked up and noticed the girls. “Oh, hello! Sorry I didn’t see you, I was busy feeding my baby. It’s a bouncin’ baby boy!”

“…” If that wasn’t the weirdest thing the sectormates hadn’t seen all day. “Oi, isn’t that thing some sorta superweapon?” Chimney asked.
“Well, it does go ‘boom’ a lot, if that’s what you’re thinkin’.” Bill chuckled, cradling the ball. “I’m actually raising this for Lenore, for when she gets back. She’s been at work for the past 15 years,” There was a choke in his voice, but his smile was still happy, “but I’m sure she’ll come back eventually.”

“Well, you’ll have to take my ball OVER MY DEAD BODY!” Anger consumed Bill as he sealed the Footbomb in a glass container. He stomped a switch to block his section of the room with a wall of metal squares, all linked together. Using his terrific strength, Bill charged and shoved the metal toward Mocha, who threw her hands forward to push back with equal strength. Chimney jumped off of Mocha to begin throwing speedy kicks and punches around the squares, trying to find a weak spot.

Karin swung a kick at Ish’s head, the boy ducked and punched up at her face, Karin flew back and kicked off the wall to rocket at Ish, who ran across the room, then dashed back. He tackled and shoved Karin against the wall, she threw a punch at his head, Ish ducked back and ran to force Karin against the wall again. Ish jumped back and tossed two energy footballs, which Karin rolled forward to evade, then ran to swing a storm of kicks that Ish countered with punches. Ish then managed to grab Karin’s leg in both hands, swing her overhead, and slam Karin against the floor, headfirst. “It’s too bad soccer doesn’t teach you to wear a helmet.”

“It’s too bad your helmet’s a piece of crap!” Karin flipped upside-down, pushed herself into the air, and stomped her foot against the face of Ish’s helmet. The glass cracked slightly, but the boy paid this no mind and charged against Karin, struggling to shove her across the room while she stood firm with both legs.

In the kitchen, Yuzu was swiftly tossing hotdogs and condiments into buns, tossing them across the floor so Ash slipped on them. When Ash recovered, she watched as Yuzu cut open two sacks of flour, which she tossed over to cover the female footballer in white. “This is getting ridiculous!” Ash yelled. “This isn’t real fighting, you’re just throwing food at me!”

“I am making a recipe!” Yuzu announced. “A recipe for the World Government’s DEFEAT!” She whipped out a pair of chopsticks and yanked several long strands of spaghetti from the pot. Ash watched with utter confusion as the girl wrapped herself in spaghetti like a mummy. “Ramen Kempo ARMOOOR!” There was an opening for her head, and Ash dodged as Yuzu swung stretched spaghetti punches at her. Ash flew for a kick into Yuzu’s chest, but the leg got stuck in the ramen, then Yuzu whipped her arms around, wrapped Ash in the spaghetti, then whirled her out of the room.

Jinta kept his ears open for the speeding Marty, and when he heard the Rusher come up from behind, Jinta swung his bat into his legs, watching Marty fly forward with his body shifted. However, the speedster began spinning in a ball like Sonic, going up the wall, across the ceiling, then Jinta jumped back to dodge his Homing Attack. Marty still spun and shot at Jinta again, so the latter blocked with his baseball bat as the spinning pinball grinded it. Jinta jumped high, letting Marty pass underneath, and had already turned around to attack again.
“In your dreams!” Still in midair, Jinta swung down and sideways, sending the spinning ball flying across the room. Marty crashed and fell onto the floor, weakly getting on all fours.

“Alright, enough playing games.” Marty smirked at his opponent across the 50-yard track. “I’m coming at you with lightspeed! Just need a minute to charge up.” Jinta watched as the footballer began vibrating furiously. With no time to lose, the baseballer raced across the track, not letting the weight of his bat slow him down.

In the target room, Kodama unveiled some colorful cannons (where does she hide all these?) and blasted confetti at Troy, which would then combust into sparks. Troy had to keep backward, but he hurled an energy football over Kodama, who watched it sprout a forcefield that took up the length of the room. Troy pushed a button on his wrist, and Kodama had to run when the barrier began moving toward her. “Yeah, that’s it, come closer.” Troy smirked.

Kodama returned the expression, “You’re gonna regret that.” She tied a large red firework to her back and lit it up. She rocketed across the room, Troy ducked, then Kodama detached herself to let the firework explode against the wall. She whipped out twin sparklers and aimed them at Troy, squirting twin streams of sparks that the boy was quick to evade. He rushed at Kodama and kicked her in the chest, sending her across the room.

On the football field, Tua was stomping his feet in attempt to crush the tiny fly, while Ururu was zipping around the grass beneath him in half-second intervals. His foot then stopped partway to the ground, Ururu was keeping it up with her own strength, then the Tiny Devil flew out and up to his head, landing a series of punches. Angered, Tua instinctively threw a punch backward, and he felt his titanic fist come into contact with Ururu, seeing the dot-size opponent fling away. He saw Ururu grow back to normal size, weakened and on the ground.

The giant hopped over and stomped his boot onto the Tiny Devil. “Not only are you still not a match, you’re just as annoying as a fly. I still don’t wanna hurt you, so I’ll ask you again: surrender, and I’ll turn off the barrier over this field. You can fly away and pretend this never happened.”

Ururu was struggling to push the giant off of her. “Th-That barrier… w-what’s it made of?”

Ururu smiled softly. “Th... Thank you. That’s all I wanted to know.” She pushed the button and shrunk again, dealing more speeding punches across Tua’s head, the giant flailed his arms in attempt to swat her away.

“UUUA!” He felt the fly-size devil crash against his crotch, Ururu then flew behind his right leg and forced it upward, the giant fell back. Ururu flew underneath and used her tiny super strength to push his back, carrying him directly upward. Tua gasped as the barrier’s ceiling drew nearer, he flailed his limbs to try to shake away. Just before he touched, Ururu let go, flew far below, then shot up like a bullet to send him flying up to the barrier. The area flashed as Tua absorbed the 100,000 volts through his suit, and Ururu flew away to watch the giant plummet to the field. The impact was quaking, and his armor fell off into pieces. Ururu watched as the barrier sparked and disabled itself; the controls for it were likely in Tua’s suit.

“Now where was that bomb again?” Ururu asked herself. “Oh, right!” She flew for the large TV.

Tua

“I don’t know about the others, but this guy was totally lame.” Apis said casually as she and Aisa walked across the field.

“I know. Usually, bad guys put up a better fight than—”

“DWAAAAAH!” Hank Hill tore through the extended grass, his body pink with rage. “YOU DONE CROSSED THE LINE, I paid 6,000 dollars for that mower and Ah’m takin’ it from your allowance until you’re 30!”

“AAAAAAHHH!” The girls frantically swung their arms and ran away from the Texan, who had the rage and speed of a bull. “COME BACK here, I’ll kick your ass one way up this field ‘n’ down the other way, you little brats think you c’n do whatever you want, I’ll show you a thing or two, quit runnin’ around so I can grab you little—”

Aisa whipped around and swung a kick at his crotch. “Dwaaaah!” Hank’s redness vanished, and pain flowed through him. “My narrow urethra! Dwuuuuhh.” He collapsed onto his back.

“…” Aisa and Apis only stared. They couldn’t feel excited about this victory. “Like I said, totally lame.” Apis restated.

April held onto Mary as the latter was using white Glue Crayons to stick into the roof and climb across, aiming to make it behind the giant fan. However, Boomhauer was steadily approaching them, using the weight of his Gray Crayon-colored board to withstand the wind. “Ee, yo-yo, man, talk-about-a-big-bowl-of-irony, man.” He positioned the heavy surfboard to stab down at the girls. “Nn, sorry-I-have-to-do-this, man.”

“NOW, April!” Mary cheered. April held up a bottle of her red paint, squirted it out, and let a stream of the substance fly past Boomhauer, the fan winds blowing it off of the roof.

“HEY! E-e-e-e-e-!” Boomhauer panicked when he was forced to chase the paint, for his simple attack was forcibly directed toward it. “GAH, dangoldcheaptrick, man, Itellyouwhat, I’magonna…” He spoke incomprehensively fast as he ran off the roof and hit the ground below. April let Mary crawl to the nearest fan by herself, watching her cousin stab the fan’s base with a yellow crayon. The fan became electrified, and Mary let herself blow away from it before it exploded.

The Goldenweek cousins helped their selves to stand. “Excellent job, Mary.” April smiled.

“You’re the one who got rid of the creepy guy, April!” She grinned.

“Yeah, but we fought way harder battles. Let’s go find the others.”

The cousins rode the elevator back down to Boomhauer’s room, already eager to leave as it bore a strong scent of cologne. Before leaving, Mary noticed a remote control on Boomhauer’s dresser. … She smiled with curiosity and picked it up.

Mocha and Bill Dauterive were still at it, pushing the wall of metal boards with 110% strength. What Bill failed to realize was during their ongoing struggle, Chimney found an air vent that led directly to his side. She punched open the glass jar containing the Footbomb and yelled, “I got it!” before jumping back into the vent, taking it with her.

“Great!” With nothing to worry about, Mocha used full strength for real this time, pushing the metal boards effortlessly across the room and smashing Bill against the wall.

“NOOOOO!” Bill cried helplessly as the girls ran off with his baby ball. “Lenooore! Don’t leave meeeeee.” He started sobbing.
After Chimney called and told the others the news, the team finally regrouped at the stadium’s entrance. “We got the ball!” Mocha cheered.

“Great!” Apis beamed. “Let’s get back to the train before any more show up!”

Down in the storage area, Dale Gribble merely stood and let the fumes from his can fade away. All of his bugs were gone. He was all by himself. “…Hm hm hm.” He chuckled darkly and walked over to an ordinary crate. “Those stupid Kids Next Door. Even if they do find the Footbomb, they won’t realize it’s a fake!” He opened the crate. “The real one is right here!” The Footbomb in question was dark-purple with a red core, and had silver tips.  “This one’s made of dark energy. The same type that was found on Mt. Gnaa! Our Teen Ninjas will throw this at Moonbase. Then, on the push of a button, their headquarters will be lost in oblivion!”

R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N.

“Look at what I found in the creepy man’s room!” Mary happily presented the tiny, one-button remote.

“Mary, why did you take that?” April asked. “You don’t even know what it does.”

“I wanted a souvenir to remember going to my first American football game!”

“And a football wouldn’t have sufficed?” Aisa sweatdropped.

“Gyoooom-gyom!” Gonbe happily leapt up to push the remote. Curiosity got the best of him, too.

Dale’s room

The exterminator watched as the Dark Footbomb beeped. “Oh, mah…”

Arlen Stadium was swallowed in an expanding sphere of darkness.

Colorado

Bon Clay dodged Alexei’s hook and hammer with little effort, his big smile wry. “The World Leaders forbid you from learning Hakeh!” Bon Clay swung a kick up at the teenager’s face. “They forbid you from doing Okama Kempo.” A kick in the chest that pushed Alexei back. “Just look at you, Alexei, they’re starving you totally skinneh!” Lexi angrily swung more blows, Bon Clay danced ballet and dodged, skipping around his old friend before kicking his butt.

“I’ll have you know they prepare me meals from the finest chefs!” Lexi argued.

“Yet, I can still see the bones through your bodeh! Lexi, just what have you to gain from them? What can they give you over your friends?”

“What can you gain from the Kids Next Door?” Alexei asked. “What do you have over the Government?”

“Hmmmmmm…” Bon Clay’s grin was thoughtful. “Sector KB’s got passion.”

After Ruby created steam from Suigetsu’s body, she attempted to locate her mech gloves in the mist. “GNNNN!” All of the steam retracted to a single point, and the Logia waterbender stood over Ruby as a body of water with a growling face. “Make all the steam you want, it doesn’t stop me! Water extinguishes fire, and your time’s up!” He lunged with his mouth open.
“That’s what YOU think!” Ruby dove into his watery body. Her voice gurgled, “I am an eternal flame, baby!” She heated to incredible temperature, boiling Suigetsu’s body as he spat her out. He needed some time to reform, but gasped when Ruby leapt at him with her recovered mech fists. “And I’ll evaporate you!” She punched the chi-block knuckles on either side of his head, then with a rocket burst from her hands, Suigetsu’s head was squished from both ends. Ruby watched as the Fishkid morphed into wobbly, unstable water, collapsing on the floor.

Red-Eyed Karin and Sapphire jabbed punch after punch at each other, both of them were continuously dodging. Karin kicked, Sapphire dodged right, blasted psychic, Karin dodged, both of them faced the other and panted. “Give it up, brat.” Karin gasped. “I know all your tricks by now. I’m ready for anything you might throw.”

“Really.” Sapphire put her hand under the bangs over her face. “Is that so?” She raised them to reveal her large, single blue eye.

“GYYYYAAAAAAHHH!” Karin screamed in fright- “That’s no big deal.” She calmed down. “That’s not all. When I look into your eyes, I can read your mind.”

The room felt very cold. Karin shuddered and hugged her arms. “Wh-Wh-Who turned down the thermosta-a-a-at?”

“I can see that you’ve been in Arctic Base a long time. You don’t like cold weather. I am using mind-tricks to make you believe it is cold.”

“It’s alright, though. You needed to chill.” Sapphire encased herself in a bubble and smashed Karin against the wall. The teenager was out cold, her glasses broken.

“We’ve got charm.” Bon Clay resumed.

Gage Davidson was flying with his Flash-hawks as he programmed a Flash-cannon to appear from his laptop and blast Hibiki. The lighthbender dodged the slow blasts and quickly typed on his own holo-computer. The glass capsule protecting the Footbomb opened, so the handsome operative jumped up the staircase to retrieve the weapon. “Sorry to cut this short, but I got what I needed.” Hibiki told his opponent.

“Not even gonna try to beat me, are you?” Gage asked.

Gage panicked when his Flash-cannon glitched up, and his computer screen turned into pixels. “What the k?! What the hell did you-” His Flash-hawks glitched out, so the teen fell to the floor and smashed his laptop.

“I felt the wireless signal between the Footbomb and your laptop. You were gonna wait until this was taken to Moonbase or something, then set it off like that. Hm, but don’t worry. We’ll drop this bomb in a safe location before you have a chance.”

“You think you’re real smart, don’t you.” Gage nodded sarcastically, and Hibiki could feel the look behind his sunglasses. “You must be the favorite of your sector.”
Hibiki threw a Light Frisbee that hit the side of Gage’s head, knocking him out. “Hm… I wish.” Hibiki smiled to himself, turning away. “The only problem is, I’m not really gay. I just like to dance silly. Plus, they’re a really nice team. But I can’t help that I find girls pretty. Sigh…” He opened his eyes and faced the corridor out of here. “I’ll tell them someday.”

“Aaaaand we got talent!” Bon Clay concluded.

“Hee-SHYAH!” Libby Belle snuck up from behind and sliced the heads of Alexei’s staffs. Bon Clay laid the final blow and kicked the side of his head, knocking his former teammate out. “It’s a shame I could not find any worthy opponents.” Libby said, sheathing her sword.

“The battle doesn’t matter, Libby. It’s preserving the peace! Let’s go find the others and make peace again!” Libby ran first out of the room with Clay about to follow. He spared one look at Alexei and sighed sadly, leaving the fallen teen.

Troy approached Kodama after the Asian girl was kicked into the smoke. “Watch out, crazy madman throwing grenades!” Kodama jumped out and threw mini firecrackers that made forceful explosions on the floor, Troy jumping hastily as they were aimed at his feet. Kodama threw a string of firecrackers to his left, a larger one to his right, then blasted a missile to push him back a small distance. “Keep an eye on your ball!” Kodama pointed.

Troy turned around—the barrier that had formed from his football was still moving, closing in on him. Kodama blasted one more firework to push the teen into the barrier, swallowing him in soot as the football was destroyed in the explosion. Troy fell on his front in defeat. “If you want an encore,” Kodama gave a proud thumbs-up, “make sure to catch Chimney-chan’s R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. in action.”

Marty was vibrating faster, he was a few seconds away from speeding at Jinta faster than a bullet. His eyes narrowed on the red-haired boy, but Jinta was still coming with his bat raised. The second Marty kicked off to boost was the same time Jinta jumped and swung his bat down. He barely smashed Marty’s accelerator in time, causing it to malfunction as his speed went beyond his control. “Wh-Wh-Whoa-WHOOOOOAAA!” Marty burst through the wall, across the city, across the sea, he ran to the ends of the Earth.

Jinta held his bat over his shoulder and smirked victoriously. “Do you wanna see me do it again?”

Ash shot lasers at Yuzu’s ramen body, but the spaghetti strings never seemed to fall apart, and Yuzu kept swinging her flexible string arms against the footballer. “Alright, that’s it!” Ash allowed one of the arms to wrap around her body, then she spun around to unravel Yuzu’s suit completely. “EYAH!” With a burst of force, Ash blew the spaghetti off of her. It all lay scattered across the hall. “I’m ending this once and for-” Ash’s suit began to spark. “What? Oh no! Sauce got in my suit! No, no, no!”

“This is a message to the Leaders of the World Government!” Yuzu raised her spatula with pride, pretending that Ash was a camera. “If our food burns, your food will burn with it-” An electric bolt from Ash’s suit struck Yuzu in the head, the same time the suit blew up.

Yuzu held her dizzy head as she stood up. “What happened…” Her normal brown eyes looked at Ash with confusion. She viewed around the area. “YAAAAAAAHH!” What was all that food doing on the floor? “This place is a MESS! THIS IS UNACCEPTABLE! Uuuugh, please let there be a mop in this- YAAAHH!” She ran into the kitchen and slipped on a hotdog. “Ooowww…” A spoon fell on her from the counter.
Karin Kurosaki countered Ish’s punch with a kick, his headbutt with one of her own, but the Japanese girl became dizzy from the impact. Ish punched Karin in the chest and knocked her to the floor, but this position allowed her to see her soccerball stuck between a stack of mats. “This armor isn’t so bad, is it?” Ish remarked.

Karin raised her foot over Ish’s face and stomped with full force. She shattered the glass and poured more pressure against his face. Karin stepped off and grinned wryly at the distorted way Ish’s face looked now. “Tell your friends that Japan KICKED your face!”

Karin and Jinta regrouped at the football field, where Ururu flew down from the large TV with the Footbomb in hand. It had the logo of the New York Giants. “I’ve got it!”

“Sweet job, Ururu!” Jinta fist-pumped. “But where’re the others?”

“Kodama, where are you and Yuzu?” Karin asked in her wristwatch.

“I found her in the kitchen.” Kodama responded. “She’s, um… cleaning up the mess.”

“Who in their right mind leaves perfectly good food lying all over the floor?! Do these Americans have no respect for quality ingredients?!” Yuzu was shouting.

“At least she isn’t a rebel, anymore.” Karin said. Jinta slumped in disappointment. “Yuzu, get your butts out of there and back to the ship. We got the Footbomb, so we can go back.”

The team of five made it back to their C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. and took off for Moonbase. “So this is a Footbomb, huh?” Jinta asked, holding the weapon with interest. “How do Americans play with these things, anyway?”

“Put that down, Jinta, you could set it off!” Karin shouted with worry.

“You know what, I’m tired of you doubting me!” Jinta scolded. “Just because I can’t hold a cup of cocoa,” he absentmindedly threw his arm back, “I’m smart enough to be more careful with a dangerous-” The ball was gone. Their eyes widened with fright.

The teammates peeked out the window to watch the Footbomb plummet to the stadium. BOOOOOOOOOOOOM… The entire structure was engulfed with flame. “WE’RE OKAY.” The Canton Rushers yelled.

“Why do I have the urge to dethrone the World Government?” Yuzu asked.

Sector E Treehouse

Cheren was on his knees on the floor before the living room couch. Lenari was standing on it, having just explained the mission to Cheren. “And that’s the most I can recollect.” Lenari concluded. “I know we don’t actually have an alliance yet, but… we could really use your help.”

“Bill Cipher, hm?” Cheren remembered the demon from Gravity Falls. It was because of him Wendy and MaKayla were missing. Regretfully, he hadn’t gotten around to asking the Pines Twins about an update on the situation. “He’s a worse threat than I thought… sigh, but my dad’s funeral is coming up.”

“Oh.” Lenari scratched the back of his head, feeling both surprised and embarrassed. “Well, you don’t really have to agree to this battle. We’ll mostly want your protection when the Government, em, gets mad at us.”

“I want to help you, and… I should. It’s just out of nowhere.” Cheren reasoned. “We’re already facing the threat of megabombs destroying our bases. And starting a war with America right before my dad’s funeral… it’d just look weird.”

“I can see how you would think that. Oh well. Regardless, after the conflict, I am considering signing a treaty with your leader, anyway. I’m just afraid how we’ll…”

Cheren gave a weak smile. “I’ll still help you, but it depends on how many of my operatives are available. Everyone’s been dealing with a lot of crap, we think everything’s okay for one second, then all of a sudden…” Cheren’s wristwatch rang. Lenari looked up and immediately saw the mopey look on the human’s face. Cheren answered, “Hello?”

“Chereeeeeeeennnn!” Panini sang joyfully. “You are gonna wanna get on your knees and kiss the floor I walk on after hearing my good news!”

“Heh, Paniniii, Paniniiii…” His instinct was to say ‘Not in front of the Minish Leader.’ “What good news?”

“We did it, we fixed the portal!” The familiar voice of Dipper Pines said excitedly. “MaKayla and the Blue Girl are okay!”

“Y-You did?!” Cheren’s heart jumped. “Okay?”

“A-OK!” MaKayla’s voice said.

“And that’s not all! The sectors you sent off to retrieve the Footbombs completed their mission!”
Panini cheered. “Sort of.”

“Sort of?”

“Um, Sectors KB and JP already got rid of theirs. We called Nebula to get rid of W7’s. So what’s up, Cheren, what are you and the Minish Leader talking about?”

Cheren looked at Lenari, whose smile indicated he could read Cheren’s mind. “…Panini, make sure those three sectors still have some fight in them, call any other available sectors. Dipper, you’ve fought Bill Cipher before, right?”

“Yes?”

“I want you to tell us everything you know about his weaknesses. …Tomorrow, we’re gonna humiliate America.”

The next day; White House

“What?! WHAT?” President McGarfield yelled at his phone. “Whaddyou mean the stadiums in Arlen and New Jersey blew up?! The Kids Next DOOR?” He hung up forcefully, “BILL?
BIIIIIILL! Get out here, you one-eyed Dorito!”

Bill Cipher poofed out of a spark of blue flames. “Sorry, I got confused because there’s another Bill in this chapter. What’s up, Jimbo?”

“The Footbombs we were gonna use on the Kids Next Door were used against us! We’ve gotta act NOW, Bill! Wasn’t the Minish army supposed to attack us today?!”

“Yes, but you got nothin’ to worry about.” Bill brushed the air. “I called in some special assistance to take care of those buggers.”

The president’s phone rang again. He answered roughly, “What is it this time?!”

“Sir, it’s Gideon! There’s a swarm of little gray bugs comin’ from the south; and there’s little mice riding them!”

“Speak English, Gleeful, you’re not making any sense!”

“I think the exact translation is, AAAAAHHHH!” Bill screamed.

The rapid flapping of Jabbies rang in the ears of all the citizens. A gray cloud of the pointy-nose bugs were swarming over the city, stinging any and every Teen Ninja that was sent to attack them. “We need to order an evacuation!” Hoagie III yelled at Nya.

“Hoagie, Wendy, you get all the citizens outta town!” Nya ordered. “Ashei, call the G.U.N.! Rodrigo, go help security around the President’s School!”

“SANDY, set up a barrier around Gallagher!” Gideon ordered. “We can use those brats as hostages!”

King Sandy clamped his hand against the ground and turned the area around Gallagher—which had been successfully brought to Washington this morning, into sand again. He encased the entire school inside of a huge, round sandshield. “AAAAHH!” The front of the shield blew open, blowing Sandy away with a gush of sand.

“Were you looking for me, Father?”

King Sandy looked up, gasping. His daughter was standing in Gallagher’s doorway. Jessie Sidney, Sandy Sidney, the Kindergarten Chief, the Second and Fifth Grade Presidents, Spongebob Squarepants(?), the students of Gallagher were freed and ready for battle “SHELLY?! H-How did you get in the school?!”

“I have friends in a looooot of places. TWERPS OF GALLAGHER, GIVE THEM HECK!” The army of grade-schoolers screamed and ran daringly into the capital. Jessie’s gang was at the front of the crowds, and they had many miles to go until the White Palace in the distance. Inside, he could feel them coming. Bill Cipher saw the Bubble Dreamers coming.

“Well, well, Polokus.” Bill said to no one. “Long time, no see.”

You know, I might’ve misspoken in the earlier chapter, I had a fight scene planned at Gallagher Elementary, but I wasn’t sure how much I could stretch it out, so... well, here we are! The saga’s conclusion will commence in Chapter 40, then it may or may not end at Chapter 41. I don’t think I’ll be able to squeeze the boss fight in. Next time, the Gallagher Kids vs. Jimmy’s Army. Sleep well, kids!

...
QVHHRV ULI KIVHRWVMG, QVHHRV ULI KIVHRWVMG!
The students of Gallagher, along with their KND allies, attack the capital of Washington!

Maybe we did get here a little quicker than I expected, but like I said, I didn’t have any way to draw this saga out. :P Took care of the action stages I wanted to, anyway.

Chapter 40: Kids of America

Gallagher Elementary; en route to Washington (the night before the battle)

The Teen Ninja Carriers were hauling the uplifted school through the night. Naturally, the Teens got sleepy and went up to bunks in their carriers. They didn’t expect the school of children to have the energy to try and escape, rather than sleep. They were still unaware that the students had been untied hours ago, with the help of the Kindergarten Tribe, who had been untied previously by Rupert’s Pikmin. While their comrades were asleep, the Second, Fifth, and Kindergarten Leaders met in the teacher’s lounge, along with Timothy, Hikari, Joey, and tiny Rupert on the desk. “Little person with ant people took me by surprise.” Chief Fingerpaint, the dark-skinned Kindergarten Chief, said. He wielded a wooden stick staff with a purple orb dangling from one end. “I thought him to be messenger from Crayon Gods.”

“I did use to be higher up.” Rupert joked.

“We have to come up with an escape plan.” David Keith, Fifth Grade Leader, reminded. “If you said Third Grade Leader and the others got locked up in that school, how do you expect us to rescue them?”

“There’s a good chance Jessie and Shelly are in there, too.” Richard Teague, Second Grade, deduced in his nasally voice. “Knowing they used to be the Top 2, I don’t see this workin’ out.”

“Jessie’s not in there!” Hikari beamed. “He told me so in my dream!”

“Say what?” Timmy asked.

“When I took a nap on my desk, Jessie came to me in a dream.” She spoke with dreamy eyes. “He said he and Sandy are okay, and Shelly’s with them, and they’re gonna save everyone with their army of ant people.”

“Impossible.” Richard scoffed. His peers shared his look of disbelief at the 5-year-old. “Unless you were born with some sort of psychokinetic ability, or were struck by a radioactive energy wave, the idea of communication through dreams is the most confounded—”

“Oh, I’ve been longing to sock you in the nose, Soprano Voice.” A familiar girl’s voice remarked. Jessie Sidney, Sandy Sidney, and Shelly Johnson were in the doorway. “JESSIE!” Hikari screamed.
“Sandy!” Timmy lighted.

“SHELLY!” the presidents beamed.

“And me!” Gonshiri cheered from Shelly’s shoulder. “Princess Gonshiri of the Minish Tribe, here to grace your humble presence.”

“Holy Toledo, it’s a talking mutant chipmunk!” Richard perked. Gonshiri glared.

“Where did you guys come from?” Timothy asked.

Jessie, Sandy, and Spongebob were minimized to be carried inside the Pikmin Onions. Jessie had chosen to sleep and practice his Bubble Dreamer powers, and with Spongebob joining him, the two discovered that Hikari was asleep, and her dreamscape was open. …Jessie had seen it a couple times, but he was still creeped out: his likeness made up most of the entire scape, from balloons to carpets.

And it was in this ‘scape where Hikari and Jessie told each other what was happening. By interacting with her, Jessie could see where Hikari was sleeping, and from how far a distance. After informing his friends, the Pikmin Onions managed to track the airborne school and fly inside under the Teen Ninjas’ vision. They were grown back to normal size after landing.

“That’s the short version of it.” Jessie finished.

“That still leaves a lot of questions, dude.” Richard said. “Like, Spongebob was with you? Seriously?”

Punio and Petuni walked in and stood beside the humans in the doorway. “We got Spongebob to sleep.” Punio said. “Hopefully, he can get into all the sleeping kids’ dreams and tell them the mission.”

“What’s with the talking mouse?” David asked.

“Alright, before we actually recap all the random crap we endured during our absence,” Shelly began, “I’m gonna make this straight: we’re going to attack Washington. More specifically, the White House.”

“What?!” Richard freaked.

“Is this to save all our friends?” Rupert asked.

“Of course it is.” Jessie spoke seriously. “But there’s something else, too. We need to destroy a monster called Bill Cipher. He’s in the White House, and he’s the one turning all our friends into mindless zombies. Me and Spongebob are the only ones that can fight him, but we need everyone in Gallagher to help us.”

“It isn’t just us.” Sandy assured. “The Minish Kids Next Door are gonna help, and they said they would ask the real Kids Next Door, too.”

“We’re actually a little ahead of schedule.” Gonshiri noted. “We planned to rescue you all, then set off to Washington, but it seems they’re already taking you. This is the perfect chance for a sneak-attack.”

“If Hikari hadn’t told me what was happening when she was asleep, we would’ve wasted our time.” Jessie smiled. The girl in question gave a blush.
“Hold on, this is going WAY too fast.” David spoke up. “We’re gonna attack the White House so you and ‘Spongebob’ can fight some sort of monster?”

“And the Minish KND are helping?” Rupert asked.

“It happened very fast for us, too.” Gonshiri replied. “But at least we have time to rest before we arrive. I was told that you have an assortment of modified toys and bikes in your arsenal; I doubt their effectiveness in this situation, but anything will suffice.”

“I’m sure they can handle it.” Rupert said readily. “We took on the middle school! I mean, that’s what started this whole thing, and we sorta lost, but, what I’m trying to say is…”

“It’s time for all you Grade Presidents to represent, not just your school, but all elementary schools everywhere.” Gonshiri announced. “It’s time to prove to all the bigger kids what you’re really made of. Does that inspire you?”

“Not to the point we wanna get ourselves killed.” Richard replied.

“That’s why the Kids Next Door is helping us.” Sandy reminded. “But listen, if you guys agree to help, we can promise you free autographs from Spongebob himself!”

“Do we die, or get made into mindless zombie?” Chief Fingerpaint asked himself. “Mmm. Either way’s the same. But I would rather fight big bullies first!”

“Okay, we’ll do it.” David decided. “To protect our classmates.”

“Those big losers are going down—OW!” Richard was punched in the nose by Shelly. “What was THAT for?!”

“Ugh, your voice is so horribly high-pitched!” Shelly complained.

“Let’s go get the bikes ready.” Jessie suggested. “Hopefully, those dumbass big kids are too lazy to check on us.”

“You really need to work on your cussing, dude.” Richard said as they headed for the gym.

“It gets him fired up.” Sandy reasoned with a pretty face.

“Oh, fine.”

Washington; day of the battle

The Jabbies, Punies, and Minish were already attacking. The grade-schoolers could hear the conflict outside. Shelly’s father, King Sandy, was forming a great big sand bubble around their school. The army of Kindergarten-through-5th graders were ready on their bikes, their weapons, and waited at the front door. “I’m gonna blow this bubble down, then everybody heads straight to the White House.” Shelly announced, clutching her Sand Wand tight. “Our main priority is to get Shorts and Sponge over to the White House, and protect them from any jerks that come for ‘em. Got that?”

“This is the very same as attacking a middle school.” Jessie assured. “Except these kids are bigger, meaner, and have the United States Army to back them up. But we’re gonna rescue our friends and give them HELL!”

“YEEAAAH!” The kids cheered vigorously.
“Twerps of Gallagher:” Shelly waved her Sand Wand and blasted the bubble clear open, “GIVE THEM HECK!”

The grade-schoolers burst out of the school raced through the capital, either on foot or on bikes. Teen Ninjas swooped in to subdue them, but Jabbies were flying around their heads and stinging every corner, and Timmy and Hikari noticed the Pikmin slip into the big kids’ ears. “You brats ain’t goin’ anywhere!” Gideon cried. “Violet, Scarlet, SICK THEM!”

The two werecat women raced onto the field on all fours, their eyes glowing blue under mind-control. They split up and went for two squads of students, the grade-schoolers screaming and running. “HEEEEEEEE!” Richard Teague let out a high-pitch scream, hurting the werecats’ sensitive ears. His comrades shut their ears and seized the chance to run past.

“’Guess it’s good for somethin’.“ Shelly remarked.

Punio and his army of Punies dropped down from the cloud of Jabbies to run ahead of the kids. “You guys focus on getting to Bill!” Punio yelled. “We’ll rescue your friends!”

“Hey, watch out!” Timmy pointed ahead. “It’s that lady from before!”

Susanne Suave skied toward the crowd of kids, clothed in only a red bikini as she left a trail of her slippery suntan lotion. Some of the Gallaghers didn’t heed the warning and kept speeding on their bikes, which caused them to drive out of control and crash into buildings. “AAAHH!” Jessie’s group was lifted into the air by psychic.

“That’s as far as you go!” Gideon smirked. “Sandy, wrap them up!”

King Sandy had caught up as well, morphing this entire area of ground into sand so that other Gallaghers would have a harder time crossing. He grabbed a stream of sand in his aim to seal Jessie’s group inside a bubble. Lenari and Gonshiri snuck up behind Gideon, ordering their Wing Pikmin to carry Music Pikmin inside his ears. “Wa-wa-wa-WAAAAH!” Gideon screeched from their loud vocals.

The minute his psychic grip released, Shelly waved her Sand Wand to catch the sand surrounding them, and throw it at her father during their descent to the ground. “Just run ahead, Shorts.” The princess ordered. “I wanna get some payback at Daddy.”

Jessie nodded and ran ahead with his friends. Gideon angrily shook the Pikmin out of his head and flew after the kids.

King Sandy got to his feet on the sandy ground and faced his daughter. “Hm… It’s nice to see my two girls getting along.”

Gonshiri hopped up to Shelly’s shoulder, baring the same glare. “How come you never told us we were sisters?” Shelly asked.

“I can guess why.” Gonshiri followed. “It’s so that you would have no qualms about me being taken away by the Government. All along, he was going to hand me to his brother so that I can bring to life his God Fruit.”

“So, you know the truth, do you? Yes.” Sandy admitted, baring a remorseful look. “Disregarding my obsession with ruling a beach, the only thing I ever cared about was my family. I was indebted to Big Brother Andrew, and for a long time, I wanted to see my other daughter. I wanted Gonshiri to get to know Shelly. But your mother found out about my chat with Andrew. I felt terrible for losing her trust… but I’m not sorry for wanting to help my brother. My daughters didn’t even know they were related, but they were already bound to each other. You know the feeling.”

“But your brother is terrible!” Gonshiri shouted. “He hated my mother, your wife.”

“And I hate him for that! But it doesn’t matter.” Sandy reasoned. “All he wants is to save the world. My brother always knows what’s best. So I’m going to help him in any way I can. If he needs Gonshiri’s power for his plan—whether that’s raising a zombie army or selling cookies for boy scouts—I have to help him. But I promise, the moment I think he’s going to do something dangerous, I’ll protect my daughter.”

“Bullcrap, you can’t be relied on for jack, and Uncle Andrew doesn’t know anything.” Shelly argued.

“And I will not be used to breed any zombie army whatsoever!” Gonshiri yelled. “So you can piss off, Father!”

“The two of you already messed up by attacking Washington.” King Sandy replied. “Your friends are going to be captured, and you can either join them in that school, or come with me to Mariejoa.”

“I’ll take the third option.” Shelly smirked. The princess waved her Sand Wand and grabbed a bundle of sand to surround her and Shiri. “Beating the snot out of any weirdo that tries to control us!”

Gideon flew over Jessie’s group and encased himself in a psychic bubble, forcefully bouncing around the field in attempt to crush the kids, who stopped and ducked in fear. “Ah’ll squish every one of you rats!”

Before he could crush Jessie, Spongebob kicked him out of the way and stretched in width, bouncing the bubble away as it disabled, and the Kindergarteners launched a storm of crayons from small bows to stick and pin Gideon to a building’s side. He fumed with anger when Jessie’s team ran ahead, using psychic to pull the crayons off and float back to the ground. Chief Fingerpaint approached the white-haired boy. “You really weird girl.” Chief said. “Is that some kind of lotion?”

“I AM NOT A GIRL!” Gideon shouted. “I dunno if you’re a kid or some kind of jungle person, but no one gets mercy from me!” The psychic blew his dog whistle, summoning the brainwashed werecats to his side.

“You use curious powers, to your disposable.” Fingerpaint said. “But you are not only one with power over mind.” He held up a small, convenient bag of catnip, calling Violet to pounce over. Fingerpaint leapt onto her back like a horse, bit his wooden stick staff in his teeth, and performed a jig as hypnotic music played. Colorful swirls appeared in Violet’s eyes; she was under the Kindergartener’s control. Gideon climbed onto Scarlet’s back as both controllers forced the werecats to claw at each other.

Jessie’s team made it to the Lincoln Memorial Reflecting Pool, so the next course of action would be to go around it. “Guys, look at that!” Joey pointed when the pool began bubbling.

“HAAAAAIIIIIIIEEEEEE!” A gigantic, green sea serpent emerged from the water, and riding on its head was Ashei Winters, the pale-skinned Eskimo with a white coat and sleek black hair. She took attention to the stampede of Punies running around the pool, so she directed the monster to Punio in the lead. The Puni Leader looked up and screamed at the incoming monster’s mouth, but a giant blue letter “B” block flew in the way and clogged its mouth. The Punies and Ashei looked over at Joey Beatles, who held his giant Lego Bazooka.

“Better you fight that monster than me.” Richard remarked as the other children and Punies kept going. The sea serpent angrily flailed his head as it tried to bite the block, but decided to toss it away and lunge at Joey again. The boy dodged aside, and Ashei watched with interest as he began to run around the field, dropping letter blocks in his wake, until a great wall of blocks surrounded the pool’s perimeter and towered over the beast. The sea serpent shared Ashei’s baffled expression.

“You can’t be serious.” Ashei said as her monster rammed his head against and toppled the blocks down, but by making it unbalanced, the longer wall behind him toppled down and over the monster, crushing him into the pool. Ashei blew her horn and jumped off to let the giant snowbird to swoop down and take her in its talons. The winged beast had snow-white fur, blue talons and wings as sharp as icicles, and a blue beak under piercing yellow eyes.

“Looks like it’s bird season!” Joey whipped out his bazooka and began blasting giant blocks that didn’t go high enough to reach the bird. The snowbird slashed its wings to shoot icicles that Joey ran to avoid.

Susanne Suave skied across the sides of the buildings near the Reflecting Pool to go over the fallen blocks, afterwards kicking off to ski on the ground to Jessie’s group. “YAAAAAH!” She leapt high into the air for a kick at them, Sandy immediately noticed and threw her lasso to rope her, but Susanne easily slipped through and stamped her foot against the girl’s face, flying her away.

“SANDY!” Jessie exclaimed, running to his sister’s side. “Are you hurt?!”

“Ow… m-my nose…” Sandy held her bent, bleeding nose.

Jessie gritted his teeth and looked at the teenager with anger. “You slippery WHORE!”

“WHADDID YOU CALL ME?!” Susanne turned red, despite her lotion. “I’ll break your SKULL in, you little turd!”

“Could you pleath wash that sunscreen off?” Richard whined, his nose congested. “I’m allergic to, a-gi-gi, a-gi-gi- ACHOO!” He blasted a glob of greenish-white snot at Susanne’s face. The girl panicked and shook to shake it off, but the kids seized the chance to escape and make a mad dash to the distant White House. Jessie was helping his sister along.

“We’re almost there!” Timmy exclaimed.

“Don’t celebrate, yet!” Richard cautioned. “Here come the GUNs!”

A troupe of GUN soldiers marched forth from the White House in perfect rows, ready to subdue the kids. “Are we really gonna arrest a bunch of grade-schoolers for attacking the White House?” one of them asked.

“We’ll phone their parents later.” The leader said. “Just hit them with light chi-blocks and we’ll carry ‘em back-”

“I’M NOT THROUGH YET, BRATS!” Susanne screamed, skiing after the children after getting the snot off. His allergies were still active, so Richard sneezed a rope of snot to stick onto the teen, then Richard turned his head to swing the attached girl to the GUN troops, bowling them over like pins. To further complete this simile, Spongebob created Bubble Bowls to send the soldiers toppling, literally in the shape of pins.

“Are you kidding me?!” Nya shouted, floating beside Wendy Corduroy. “They have to be the weakest soldiers in the world!”
“Well, it’s not like beating up kids will look good on the news.” Wendy argued.

“Raaah!” Nya growled when some Jabbies swooped by, attempting to shoot the bugs with her laser. “Robbie, do something about those twerps!”

“You got it!” Robbie Valentino, a black-haired boy with black armor and a few zits, flew out onto the field and landed a short distance from the kids. He outstretched his arms and extracted huge, twin metal wheels with sharp blades. They spun rapidly as he smirked devilishly at the kids, rolling for them.

“You called my ex-boyfriend?!” Corduroy exclaimed. “He’ll tear those kids to shreds!”

“Not our fault.” Nya replied uncaringly.

The children braced for impact when the bladed wheels were seconds from slicing them, but David Keith bounced his bike off of the teen’s head, having rode off from a nearby roof at high speed. Robbie lost control and swerved to the left, missing Jessie’s group and hitting a building. David landed on the ground and stopped his bike near the kids. “I’ll take care of him. Focus on saving the others!”

Robbie roared with anger and recovered, speeding toward the biker as David hurriedly spun the pedals, attempting to outrun the Teen. Robbie was steadily inching up, David and the others shut their eyes from the former’s inevitable demise. A wave of water swooped by and hit Robbie in the face, causing him to shift and crash against a building. Team Gallagher looked up at their savior:

Melody Jackson jumped down from her KNN C.O.O.L.-B.U.S. and hurried over to Sandy Sidney. “Big kid!” The child said with surprise. Melody giggled and bent down, molding water over her hand to put it over Sandy’s broken nose. The water glowed blue as the blood stopped, reshaping her nose. Sandy smiled with gratitude and touched her nose, and Melody passed a brief salute before running off to join the fray.

A small fleet of KND ships were landing around the city as its operatives burst out to battle Teen Ninjas and GUN troops alike. Chimney quickly leapt around to kick ninjas senseless, Mocha had delight in crushing her enemies, Mary colored some soldiers’ armor green – causing them to stink horribly, and April painted a red dot on a building to make all ground turrets blast it. Karin Kurosaki knocked a ninja down, wrapped his limbs up like a ball, and kicked him to Jinta, who swung his bat and flung the teen to take down his airborne comrades. Ruby was flying thanks to Sapphire’s psychic, so she could help punch ninjas out of the sky with her fists. Sector W was also back from their Negaverse vacation, and were flying overhead to find a good place to start fighting.

A helicopter was hovering far above this conflict, and Eva Jackson stood in the door. “This is Eva Jackson live at Washington, D.C., where the city is under siege by, what appear to be grade-schoolers and a swarm of gray bugs. And now Kids Next Door operatives have gotten involved. People of America, I think we can safely assume we’re watching history. As a parent, I have to route for my daughter’s side.”

James McGarfield saw this on the news. The street to his palace was in shambles, teens and kids were fighting, and that particular group, led by the Indian boy in the purple shirt, was coming for him. “Grrrrrr!” Jimmy pushed the PA button, “You kids, WHADDYOU think yer doin’?!?”

“The American Government is one of the founding footholds to the World Government itself?” His voice was heard everywhere in the city. “By attacking this city, you are declaring WAR against the World Government! Is that what you snot-nosed kids want?!! To become enemies of the world?!!”
“Screw the government!” a voice yelled from outside. A baseball was hit through Jimmy’s window, and the president read it was autographed Jinta.

The president growled again. “BILL! Get out here!”

Bill Cipher appeared again. “Didju find my contact lens?”

“The Kids Next Door are here, Bill! When is that special help supposed to arrive?! Where is he?!”

“No need to worry, Jim Belushi, he’ll be here momentarily! Meanwhile, I’m gonna go out and see my competition.”

Jessie’s team was almost at the White House, they just had to cross the courtyard and they would make it. Bill Cipher poofed above the front gates, and everyone stopped to gasp. “WELL, well, well!” His perky voice echoed. “What have we here? I spy with my All-Seeing Eye, a couple of Bubble Dreamers!”

“Correct, Jesselina! Or should I call you Polokus?” He narrowed his eye and folded his line-arms, lowering down to the group. “Are you going to try and Bubble me? Well, I’m right here, so take your best shot. Oh, wait a second, YOU CAN’T!” His eye widened giddily. “You can only Bubble me in the Dream World! You can try to if you want, but it won’t work!”

“Grrrrr!” Jessie forcefully dipped his wand in a bubble bottle and blew Bullet Bubbles at Bill.

“Haaaaa hahahahaha, ah hahahahahaha!” The demon cracked up when they all phased through his form. “Anyway, I’ll catch up with ya later! Until then, you can play with this guy. Look out above!” He poofed away.

“Hey! Look up in the sky!” Timothy pointed. There was a tiny, black dot that was fastly descending from the clouds. “It’s a bird!”

The object collided with the earth in front of the palace gates. After the smoke cleared, it was revealed to be a brown-haired man in a black sweater, blue jeans, and brown shoes. His hands were folded in front of his mouth. “Who’s that?” Wendy Corduroy asked.

“Oh no! That’s one of the World Leaders!” Hoagie said with worry. “Lucas Stonebuddy!”

“What?! The president called a World Leader to fight grade-schoolers?”

“I do not want to exhaust much energy.” Lucas said to himself, observing the school of children that were standing with their guards raised. Lucas whirled his left arm in a square-like form, before slapping his hand against the ground. A great, stone wall rose from the ground, blocking the entire front of the White House’s garden. Three more walls appeared from either side of the building’s grounds. The White House was sealed behind rectangular prisms with great height and perfect angles. Lucas stood on the top.

“I’ll take care of it!” Anthony declared as Sector W flew over the White House. “That guy is goin’ down!”

“Anthony, don’t!” Sally panicked. “He’s a World Leader, you can’t beat him!”
“I don’t see any other earthbenders. I have to. Wish me luck!” He jumped off of the S.C.A.M.P.E.R., despite his friends’ protests.

Anthony landed atop the stone wall a short distance from Stonebuddy, immediately stomping the ground to propel a rock out, then kick it at him. Lucas blocked it with a single hand, so Anthony kicked another rock that Lucas blocked. The World Leader stretched and waved his hands to grab chunks out of the wall, in the form of giant stone hands. Anthony ran back before the hands clapped, dodged another clap, and when they came at him again, Anthony outstretched his own hands to push them back. The hands clapped, but Anthony was safe in the holes he pushed open.

Sandy tried to throw her ropes up the wall, but to no avail. “There aren’t any places to grab onto!”

“I can float us up there!” Jessie declared.

“Forget about it, that guy up there will get you, anyway.” Rupert said, standing on Timmy’s hat with his Pikmin. “Let’s go save everyone in the school, we’ll wait for Anthony to beat ‘im.”

Jessie watched the earthbender boy battle the World Leader, and he could already sense the fight would take a while. He decided to lead his team to the school, following the band of Punies.

King Sandy sent five streams of sand at Shelly, who raised her Sand Wand to create an invisible shield, taking the sand to throw it at her father’s feet. The man flipped away and punched the ground, sending a row of sand geysers at his daughter to propel her to the air. Sandy rushed over to a building and planted his hand against it, channeling his chi through the entire structure to break it into sand. As he waved it away to throw at Shelly, only a few scaffolds remained: Cleveland Brown was about to slide off in his bathtub. “No no no NO NO!” Crash. “I made it halfway through this story, and I tried to go for the goal.”

Shelly quickly raised her Sand Wand to block the oncoming sand, leaving a narrow space for herself as the rest of the wave flew past. Some sand got in her ears, where Shiri was currently in refuge to be safe from the attack. Shelly used one hand to hold the wand, and the other hand to pull out her sakura petal sword. She forced herself through the storm and burst out into open air, “HYAH!!” slicing her father across the left waist with the sharp petal.

“OW!” King Sandy gripped his waist and sank to his knees. He turned to look at the strange weapon that had cut him. “A sakura petal?” He drew interest at the simple pink petal growing from the wooden sword. “Hold on… you can’t mean to tell me…” Sandy noticed Gonshiri peek out of Shelly’s ear. “Did you do that?”

“Believe me, it wasn’t easy.” Gonshiri informed. “I doubt I’m strong enough to help your brother’s crazy plan.”

“No matter. It’s a start!” Sandy threw an arm up to shoot a gush of sand at Shelly’s face, pushing her on her back as Gonshiri fell off. Sandy threw an arm back, pulling a gush of sand from under Shiri toward him, and allowing him to catch his Minish daughter between his hands. “I don’t mean to act this forceful, but I promise we’ll make this an easy journey.”

“Like hell you will!” Shelly punched the ground to sink a sand trail leading to her father, but King Sandy stomped up a sand wall to save himself before running away.

“Princess!” Lenari flew overhead with his Wing Pikmin, having some of them carry Brown Pikmin into Sandy’s ears. The man felt his ears clog, so he cupped Gonshiri in his left hand and stuck his right pinky finger into his right ear. The Brown Pikmin remained stuck, then Lenari’s Wing Pikmin dropped Purples down to Sandy’s feet, making him ache as he tried to shake them off, then Shelly hurled a sand stream at his butt to push her father down. Gonshiri was released and bounced across the ground before Wing Pikmin swooped down to save her. “Are you okay, Princess?” Lenari asked, flying level with her.

“I’m fine. It’s difficult to battle when there aren’t many plants around. Especially when this lunatic is turning everything into sand.”

“I think I saw a rooftop garden on another building. If it’s still intact, I’ll go bring you some. Until then, you can use my Pikmin.” Lenari flew away with his Wing Pikmin, leaving the ground Pikmin for his princess.

Chief Fingerpaint and Li’l Gideon were still riding Violet and Scarlet. They made the werecats run up and stand on their hind legs as they clawed at each other. Fingerpaint seized the chance to poke Gideon in the eyes, pushing him off his cat, then Fingerpaint jumped over to land on Gideon’s belly. Gideon hacked spit and pushed Fingerpaint off with psychic, then ran away from the werecats to let them continue their fight. A second-grader ran by, snapped a picture of the fighting catwomen, then ran away.

“Corpus levitas Diablo Daminium Mondo Vicium!” Gideon chanted the spell from memory, and Chief Fingerpaint backed up in fear when Redeads emerged from the earth. “You ain’t the only kid who knows a bit of magic!” The psychic declared.

“Yes. But you are not the only one who can raise the dead.” Chief Fingerpaint dropped his staff, folded his hands, and closed his eyes. “Haish bishah, comayea, hishiminshihah, nortah, netamye…”

“Is that some kinda Javanese?” Gideon raised a brow.

“It means, ‘Crayon Spirits, come help me beat this chick.'” Fingerpaint translated. Almost on cue, a team of colorful child spirits, each wearing clothes reading ‘Crayola,’ emerged from the ground. Gideon exchanged a glare with the 5-year-old, blowing his whistle to sick his zombies, while Fingerpaint made hand gestures to send the spirits. The zombies weakly swung their hands at the ghosts, and as the spirits blew around the corpses, their shriveled bodies became colorful. When there came to be a yellow zombie, green one, pink, blue, and red, some fast violin music began to play. The zombies put hands behind their backs and performed a tap-dance, made synchronized hand-waves, then breakdanced on the floor.

“…I did not expect that.” Fingerpaint said.

“Should we just go back to fighting normally?” Gideon asked.

“Yes.” So with that, the two screamed and ran at each other.

The snowbird was too high for Joey Beatles’ Block Cannon to reach, but when the monster swooped down to grab him in its talons, Joey dodged aside. “This isn’t goin’ anywhere. I’m gonna have to break out the Big Blocks.”

When Ashei had the snowbird turn back, she watched with interest when Joey was building another wall of letter blocks, which he proceeded to cower behind. Ashei chuckled, ordering her winged beast to swoop down to ram the wall down—he collided facefirst with the massive stone block behind the letter blocks. His ice-cold beak cracked, and the snowbird fell on the ground. “Where the heck did you hide this? !” Ashei exclaimed after falling as well.

“No place you would ever look!” Joey taunted.
“Really? I’ll have to call my friends to come look at it.” Ashei blew into her horn again. The ground began shaking as a stampede of yeti charged from around the buildings. Joey panicked and began blasting the monsters with his Block Bazooka, but soon thought it fruitless and bolted away. Joey dropped more and more blocks that ended up becoming a stairway. The yetis charged up the stairway and… ran off the top edge. They stayed in midair for a few seconds, exchanging looks with each other before they screamed and fell.

Jessie and Spongebob blew Bubble Torpedoes at the Shy Guys protecting President James’ Elementary School, and Sandy roped their little bodies to pull them over, then throw them into other Shy Guys. As they hurried into the school, they saw the Punies scamper out of the classrooms. “All of the students are asleep.” Punio reported. “Their dream selves are probably locked in a trance.”

“So we have to go in and wake them up?” Jessie asked.

“You and Spongebob need to save your energy to fight Bill and Jimmy. We’ll think of a different way to wake them up.”

“I can help with that!” Rupert squeaked. “My Music Pikmin can sing a song to wake them! Right, guys?”

“Ree-roo!” The Music Pikmin perked. “Reer?” Their antennas picked up a distant, beautiful tone: the strumming of Spanish guitar strings. “Hey, where’re you going??” Rupert yelled when the Music Pikmin jumped off of Timmy’s hat and ran away.

“Hey!” Sandy perked up. “Now I wanna follow it, too.” So against all their wills, the grade-schoolers and Punies followed the music.

Rodrigo Añorga was rapidly strumming his guitar as a team of students were groggily dancing behind him. He looked at the tiny Magenta Pikmin that had gathered on the ground, staring at them with cool brown eyes. His glittering eyes made the Pikmin swoon, so the handsome Spanish boy kept playing.

Jessie’s team gathered in the music studio, beginning to dance in unison like the hostages. “This is like what happened at the middle school!” Timothy exclaimed.

“He must’ve been the one behind it!” Richard cried. “I conjecture it’s a form of hypnosis in which the soundwaves alter our brainwaves in a manner where our body actions-”

“He’s a musicbender, case closed!” Punio yelled. “We’ll never rescue anyone unless we fight it!”

“It’s no use.” A 9-year-old in black clothing and glasses replied in a miserable tone. “We’re totally under his control.”

“Hey, that’s the Third Grade President!” Timmy realized. “Leon.”

“I’ve been here for who knows how long.” Leon Anderson Sobs whined. “And he’s keeping us here until we feel like staying asleep. I’m so exhausted. My own shadow abandoned me. That doesn’t surprise me, though, I would abandon me, too.”

“Brown Pikmin make good earplugs.” Punio said. “Too bad we don’t have some of them.”

Anthony stomped up and kicked more rocks at the World Leader, but Lucas Stonebuddy blocked each one with his hands. Furthermore, he used quick stonebending to repair the chunks that were missing from his wall, keeping it perfectly steady. “We have to help Anthony!” Sally exclaimed from their ship.

“How? We’ll be as good a match for that guy as he is.” Aranea reasoned.

“I shalt assist.” Fybi decided. “Aranea shalt command yon ship.” She put the S.C.A.M.P.E.R. on autopilot and flew out, spinning the air around her hands. She created lightning and struck down at Lucas, but the Leader jumped back and emerged stone donuts from his wall. He flew them around the air to attack Fybi, but the angel was quick to dodge them, trying to fly far away to outrun. When she looked back to see them fall behind, Fybi gasped when the Lincoln Memorial flew up to smack her between its hands, afterwards descending to the ground. Fybi shook and managed to get away before the crash, but Lincoln remained under Lucas’s control as he tried to swat Fybi like a fly. The World Leader faced Anthony with one hand over his mouth.

“Why do you keep covering your mouth?” Anthony asked.

“My job in the World Leaders is to calculate the best possible and most probable strategy for every battle, and it wouldn’t do if my enemies could see me move my mouth and calculate them.”

“But your friends can’t see you calculate ‘em, either!”

“Of course not, I speak them to myself, I’m the only one who needs to and it helps my brain to process.”

“Come on, man, you’re an earthbender, you’re supposed to quit thinkin’ and fight!” Anthony stomped and kicked another rock, an easy block for Lucas.

“Yes, you are really prevailing in this fight.” Lucas said. “I cannot anticipate what you’ll do next.”

Anthony glared at the World Leader, closing his eyes and putting one hand on the gray stone they fought on. Using Seismic Sense, Anthony focused and raised one hand to punch through the wall and burrow underneath. Lucas was ready for him to come back up, feeling the boy underneath him, so Lucas stomped to send a quake down. He felt Anthony stop. “Hmph. Not worth my-“ Lucas’s eyes shot open when a jagged stone popped up and struck his crotch. Anthony smirked as he came out behind him, thrusting another rock-jab at Lucas’s back, but the World Leader defended with his own. “That doesn’t affect me like most people.” Lucas informed calmly, stepping away from the rock between his legs.

“Are you a Logia or something?”

“Please, I would never do something so barbaric.” Lucas threw a hand up, flipping the ground Anthony was standing on over to crush the boy, but Anthony managed to push the stone up with his feet. Lucas clapped his hands and brought up two square chunks of stone from the wall’s sides to seal Anthony from either end, then one more square to seal him from the other side.

Before long, every news studio in the country sent reporters to film this event. The Battle of Washington became the most-watched news in America’s history. Word soon spread about the American Capital under attack by grade-schoolers. America was laughed at by every other country in the world.

Gideon grabbed debris from the battle in his psychic to throw at Chief Fingerpaint, who dodged them as he spun his staff to pick up and throw debris using magic. However, Gideon’s attacks came faster, so Fingerpaint was forced to retreat behind an alley. “Hey, are you alright?” a voice asked behind him. Chief Fingerpaint turned around to see an older boy with a pine tree hat, and a girl with a gray sweater that depicted a missile with a burning engine.

“Who are you, Big Kid?”

“My name’s Dipper, and this is Mabel.” The girl grinned and waved, showing her braces. “We saw you fighting Gideon and wanted to help.”

“You know white-haired man-girl?”

“Yes- hha ha ha ha!” Dipper laughed at that comment. “Listen, do you know where Jessie Sidney is, we brought him a list of Bill Cipher’s weaknesses.”

“He should be near White House, or inside prison school. Big kids, I may need your help for this battle.”

“I’ll help you.” Dipper decided, giving Mabel a piece of paper. “Mabel, you bring this to Jessie—Cheren said he’s an Indian boy. Um, he’s probably not wearing make-up or clothing like these guys.”

“On it, Dipper. DELIVERY MABEL AWAAAAYYY!” She ran out of the alleyway, holding the small paper above her as she ran past Gideon.

“Oh, why Dear Mabel’s here!” Gideon beamed. “I was hoping my queen would witness my victory.”

“You’re gonna have to keep dreaming, Gideon.” Dipper told him. Gideon turned and scowled with anger at the Pines. Chief Fingerpaint was riding on his shoulders. “You’re not becoming King OR Queen. Chief, whaddyou want me to do?”

“Keep avoiding his attacks, so that I may focus.” The Kindergarten Chief started waving his staff and swinging the purple orb it was attached to. Dipper watched as debris floated in the air, covered in purple aura as it flew at Gideon, who countered with psychic-thrown debris. Dipper jumped around and dodged the psychic’s attacks, keeping Fingerpaint steady so he could attack as well.

“Listen, Gideon isn’t a real psychic.” Dipper told him. “The last time he did this, he was using a magic necklace. Try and attack his chest!”

“You need to learn to keep your mouth shut, Pines!” Gideon blasted psychic and blew Dipper and Fingerpaint backwards. When Dipper saw a large boulder fly his way, he grabbed the chief and pulled him away.

Lucas Stonebuddy was trying to smash Anthony within his rectangular stones, but the Sector Leader used every ounce of strength to push away. “The World Government has no real quarrel with you, and you have nothing to gain from this battle, so why are you fighting?” Lucas asked.
“You’re humiliatingly exhausting yourself for nothing.”

Anthony concentrated chi to his head, lifted it up, then hit the back of his head against the stone to break a hole, sink in, and slip out of the stones. Anthony punched up forcefully to blow the rectangles off, climbing out and slumping as his head ached. “I said that I would… beat up one of the World Leaders for Cheren… f-for his dad.”

“Oh, that business again.” Lucas sighed. “Well, I guess I’m going to have to give you brain damage. OOOH!!” A foot swung up from behind and kicked his crotch.
“No one hurts my brother’s brain more than he does!” Michelle McKenzie declared, followed by a kick to Lucas’s shin before she ran beside her brother.

“Michelle?! When the crud did you get here?!”

“When I snuck on your ship, of course. Tee hee hee! I was waiting for you to mess up, Big Brother. Why is this guy so hard? Even I can tell he’s just a big rock.”

“So he is a Logia?”

“No, he’s really a big rock. See?” Michelle suddenly stomped her foot, forcing a sharp stone up under Lucas’s arm to chop it off. The stone-made arm fell over the wall and hit the ground below.

Lucas kept his mouth covered with his other hand, while the edge of the amputated arm was gray and dropping specks of gravel. “So, you saw through my ruse? Impressive. Yes, my real body is still in Mariejoa. I send my copies out to battle when I am called, and it is through them I can earthbend from afar.”

“So you’re earthbending from a thousand miles away?” Anthony asked. “Huh. You’re just a big coward. I can beat up a statue easy.”

“Anthony, let me beat him!” Michelle stomped her foot demandingly.

“Nuh-uh. I’m the big brother, so I beat up bullies. You’re the little sister, so you ruin things. Make yourself useful and tear this wall down!”

“HMPH!” Michelle huffed with anger and ran to one corner of the wall’s top, forcefully punching the stone in her attempts to break it. Lucas flipped up perfect rectangles into the air to crush the child, then Anthony hurriedly knocked them away with his own stones, then chucked one at Lucas, which he blocked, then Anthony grabbed the rubble from the stones to throw all at once, making Lucas stumble back.

Mabel made it to President James’ Elementary School and burst through the front door, still clutching the note in her hand. “Okay, we’re looking for an Indian boy with no makeup. …” A distant Spanish tune caught her ears. Mabel looked curious as her arms and legs began to jig on their own. “Hey, this is pretty catchy! Ra-dat-dat-dah-dat, da la la la, rada dat-dat-da-da, I gonna download this to iTunes! Okay, time to focus, Mabel, let’s look for that Indian boy.” Still dancing, Mabel peeked into a classroom. “Indian boy?” She looked at an African-American. “No.” Next classroom, “Indian boy?” Chinese girl. “No.” Next one, “Indian boy?” It was a closet. Mabel gasped with delight: “Kittens!”

Lilac Farley and Berry Bean were bound inside small cat cages, trying to clamp their cat-ears shut from the music. “Aww, they’re wearing people clothes! And people hair. And skin.”

“We’re humans, Dumbo!” Berry insulted her. “They locked us in here when we tried to help our moms. Grrr, I can’t stand that music anymore!”

“What’s so bad about it?” Mabel jigged. “I think it gets my heart pumpin’!”

“Hey! Hey, Human!” a voice squeaked from above. Mabel looked up and saw Sappo and Gibli inside a small jar on a shelf.

“Wooooow!” Mabel took the jar down and stared close at the Minish with wondrous eyes. “You’re like chipmunks and ants! Chipants!”
“We heard it before!” Sappo yelled, he and his sister dancing to the music. “Listen, why isn’t that music controlling you as bad as the others?”

“I dunno.” Mabel smiled bubbly. “I guess because I’m a fan of all types of music.”

“Listen, the guy making this music is up ahead. You have to destroy his guitar so we can all be free!”

“Hurry up! We saw the Punies run by earlier!” Gibli bounced.

“Don’t worry, Mutant Chipmunks, you can count on me!” Mabel carried their jar and ran down the hall, breaking into the music room. The girl gasped, seeing the brown-skinned boy with a purple shirt dancing with his friends. “Indian Boy!” She danced over to Jessie and touched his cheeks. “It really is you! No makeup or anything.”

“Quit king touching me and save our asses!”

“Okay.” Mabel turned to face the handsome Spanish boy with determination—until she actually got to look at him. Rodrigo Añorga looked so handsome. He played that guitar with perfection. “My true love.” Mabel breathed.

“Oh, boy.” Richard sighed.

Shelly whirled two bundles of sand around her arms and hurled them at her father, who propelled himself to the air using a sand geyser and flew back. King Sandy threw his arms up and rose a team of sand columns, which he spun into a tornado to pull in the air around. Shelly ran as the cyclone chased her, but the princess was sucked inside and whirled around the air. After the cyclone stopped, Shelly was panting on the ground. She grabbed her sakura sword and tried to run at her father, but Sandy threw a blast of sand to knock the single petal off.

“Hey! I worked really hard on that petal!” King Sandy was suddenly flung away by a flower pot. Gonshiri was controlling a large body of leaves and flowers, all stemming from pots. “And I don’t appreciate my work being tarnished!” the princess exclaimed.

“Pikmin, SWARM him!” Lenari called from a lower part of the plant mass. Tiny screams rang in the air as Pikmin stormed out to attack the giant human. King Sandy floated a mound of sand above to crush them, but Shelly whipped her Sand Wand to yank it back, smother it over her father’s face, and let the Pikmin climb his legs to whack various areas. Sandy scratched to shake the Pikmin off, then got punched in the face by one of Gonshiri’s flower pots. Sandy recovered and saw the monster come again, he blocked both pot-fists with his hands and channeled his chi to morph them into sand.

King Sandy ran away and clutched another building to scatter its matter and throw the resulted sand at Gonshiri. The plant creature barely dodged aside, but lost its lower half as Sandy hurled another wave. Shelly jumped in the way and blocked this wave with her Sand Wand, then whooshed it along the ground to knock Sandy down, then she buried his head with it. “Termite, I’m getting a little exhausted.” Shelly panted. “You know a lot, tell me a way we can wrap this up.”

“Seeing him disintegrate these buildings reminds me of something.” Gonshiri began. “While structures are torn into sand, they retain their previous hardness or material. If you can break something of a hard-enough material, you can use the sand to fight him.”

“I can’t even break REAL material, I’m only using the sand that HE makes!”
“I remember reading that if you stomped on your Sand Wand, it would force you into Fury Mode, which strengthens your power. But the Sand Wand will be broken as a result, so you’ll only have one chance. Shelly, why don’t you search for a good material and I’ll fight him?”

“YAAAH!” King Sandy blew the sand off of him.

“I’ll protect her, you go!” Lenari assured. Shelly nodded and ran off to find something, while Shiri and Lenari commanded a swarm of Pikmin to attack the Sand King.

“You know, I play guitar, too.” Mabel spoke sheepishly to the Spanish teen, dancing close to him. “My brother says I could be in a band. He thinks I could be lead singer, too, but, he’s my brother, so whaddoes he know, right? Heh heh.” She chuckled.

“There’s a good time and an inconvenient time for flirting with the enemy.” Richard whined. “This is the latter!”

“Ooo, I know!” Mabel beamed. “Let me play your guitar and I’ll show you!”

“No, mi chica.” Rodrigo denied.

Mabel snorted, “I’m not a chicken, silly! Come on, just let me play it!” Against Rodrigo’s wishes, Mabel took the guitar. “ESO NUEBLA, hola olaaayy!” Mabel strummed the strings loudly and sang what she thought was Spanish. “No esque ooocho, espanol no leeee!”

Jessie rushed over, took the guitar, and smashed it against the ground the minute he was free from control. Timothy took the jar containing Sappo and Gibli to drop them on the floor. “So this is where he took you!” Rupert realized.

“Now’s your chance to wake up everyone else!” Punio declared. “Use your Music Pikmin!”

“Let’s get on it, Gibli!” Sappo said.

“Right!”

“Leon, we have to get going!” Richard yelled at Third Grade’s leader.

“But I can’t go anywhere without my shadow.”

“We’ll look for it.” Rupert assured, flying with Wing Pikmin. “We have to find my mom, too.”

“Hey, are you Jessie?” Mabel ran up to the Indian. “I brought this for you.”

Jessie took the note and read the list of Bill Cipher’s weaknesses. He nodded. “This makes it even easier.”

“You really think they’ll work?” Sandy asked.

“If they don’t, I know another weakness of his. I don’t really know how it works, but if I say his Creator’s name, he’ll weaken.”

“What’s his Creator’s name?”

“I’ll tell you later, in case it’s a one-time thing. Quick, let’s go to the White House!”

David Keith sped his bike from around a building, immediately chased by Robbie, whose bladed wheels cut those sides of building. “Those kiddie wheels ain’t gonna last ya, dude!” The goth teen taunted. “They’re about to become chopped rubber!”

David sped faster to another building, bent backward to make the front part of his bike shift up, then David hurriedly pedaled up the building’s side. He saw Robbie easily chase up the building using his bladed wheels, but David quickly pressed the brake, stopped, and plummeted down, landing against Robbie (the bike’s wheel against his face) and smashing him to the ground. David pedaled away before Robbie got up to glare at him. “You might have fancy Big Kid bikes,” David remarked, “but my uncle is Lance Strongarm! And he once outran an airplane traveling a kajillion miles an hour!”

Robbie glared and extracted his wheels again, chasing the 12-year-old. David evasively pedaled away, going between the buildings as Robbie sawed through the sides. David expertly bounced his bike up a convenient stairway of Teen Ninjas, getting atop the roofs as Robbie sawed up and continued pursuit. David drove off a high roof to a lower roof, then swiftly U-turned to go down an alleyway, watching Robbie continue ahead. The goth teen stopped on the following roof to look around. “Where did that twerp go?”

“UGOH UGOH UGOH UGOH!” The yeti were running frantic and distorted around Joey’s letter block maze, they turned one way, came back the other way, found a different way-

“STOP RUNNING!” Ashei screamed. All of the yeti stopped to look at her. “Alright, if we’re gonna get outta this maze, you all need to stop acting like idiots!”

“Ugoh-ugoh?” a yeti asked.

“We took that way eight times, there’s nothing there.”

“Ugoh?” a yeti pointed at a certain wall.

“I know those blocks look like Queen Latifah, just focus!”

“Ugoooohhh!” A yeti threw his arms up.

“We tried throwing each other up in the air, Billy’s arms got tired, and Cedric never came down.”

“Ugo hugohugohugohugohugohugohugohugoh!” All of the yeti were engaging in mindless bickering.

Ashei huffed with anger and stepped away from the crowd. …She stepped on a loose part of street. She looked down, and pulled the handle of the trapdoor open. The Eskimo smirked evilly. “Found your secret passage.” She climbed in to search for Joey.

Dipper Pines kept running around with Chief Fingerpaint on his shoulders. The older boy was dodging Gideon’s psychic throws while Fingerpaint was molding mantra, as far as Dipper could tell. “What’re you trying to do again?”

“I am trying to summon the ghost of Big Taking Bully, who take things from little kids.” The chief responded. “I will tell him to take the necklace of which you speak. I must also keep throwing things at him.”

The chief used his magic to pick up trashcans in an alley and chuck them at Gideon, but the psychic pushed them away with his own power and continued pursuit. “Wah!” Dipper stopped with a jump when he saw the brainwashed Violet and Scarlet look around the alley corner, snarling at “Jump on dumpster!” Fingerpaint yelled. Dipper jumped off a can to get onto the nearby dumpster, and the kindergartener used his magic to levitate them to the roof. Gideon lifted Violet and Scarlet up with himself, ordering the werecats to pounce after them across the roofs. Dipper came to a dead-end roof, nearly stumbling over the edge, and turned to look at the werecats with fear. “Uhnnnn, n-nice kitties.”

“Scratch under chin, cats like that.” Fingerpaint said. Dipper worriedly approached the catwomen and scratched under their necks. Violet and Scar bore relaxed looks in their blank blue eyes, purring with satisfaction.

“Violet, Scarlet, QUIT wasting time and tear that Pine Tree to shreds!” Gideon clutched his hand, and the werecats fell back under control and gnashed at the Pines, who dodged back onto his rear and backed away. The werecats were slowly inching up, and Dipper internally pressured the chief into hurrying.

Gonshiri controlled the Purple Pikmin and made them fly around the air, smacking King Sandy’s head from left and right using their strength. Sandy stomped a sand wall to surround himself, then blew it apart to push the Pikmin away. He clutched the ground to morph it to sand, then made a gush fly his daughter to his hand. “That’s enough, Gonshiri.”

“PRINCESS!” Lenari screamed. “You let her go!” The Minish Leader ran up to bite Sandy’s toe, but he easily flicked him away.

Shelly hurriedly searched the town, feeling every fancy building she came by to see if the stone would be suitable. She couldn’t make a decision, and she may only have a short time to use the stone against her father. Then, Shelly’s eyes widened: the Washington Monument, of solid white stone, towered above her. …Shelly looked left, and her eyes shot open wider: the Obama Monument was even bigger, and a sturdy black stone. …For some reason, that sounded weird in Shelly’s head.

“I’ll use this against Dad.” She decided. “But I hope I can pull it off.” Shelly put the Sand Wand on the ground and raised a foot. “Fury Mode, GO!” She stomped the wand into pieces, and felt power flow through her veins as a sandy yellow aura surrounded her. Shelly clasped her hands to the Obama Monument, sensing the entire structure with her Seismic Sense. She channeled her terrific power, all throughout the monument, pouring all her strength as it rumbled. The Obama Monument was gone, broken into millions of pieces of black sand.

King Sandy flailed his hand to swat the Pikmin away, Gonshiri almost jumped out of his fingers, but Sandy clamped her between both hands. “Enough!” Sandy stomped up a sand bubble to protect himself. “This game is dragging on too long.”

“May I say, for your own I.Q., that you are the worst father a Minish could ever have!” Gonshiri insulted.

“Don’t you think I’m worried about Andrew’s plans, too, Gonshiri?” Sandy stated. “If I don’t do this, he’ll just come after you himself and destroy your people, the only way I can protect them is to hand you over myself. Besides, at this point, you and Shelly have no choice. If you can’t even beat me, what makes you think you’ll get out of here unscathed? !”

A wave of black sand broke through his shield and knocked Sandy onto the ground. Gonshiri seized the chance to hop over to her sister, who was glowing sandy yellow and controlling a body of black sand behind her. “Gut instinct.” Shelly replied. King Sandy angrily threw sand, Shelly blocked it with her black sand and furiously slapped her father across the face. The princess waved her arms and lifted her father to the air using the sand, wrapping it around him like a spherical present.

“SHELLY, DON’T!” King Sandy cried as only a little of his face was visible. “What’ll you do if Uncle Andrew comes?! If he’s set on making the Grand Inferius, how will you protect Gonshiri from him?!”

“I’ll kick a ball at his nuts instead of his head. He doesn’t really look that tough. Sorry about this, Dad.” Shelly smashed the palms of her hands together.

“ANDREWWWW!” The name forced out of Sandy’s mouth when the sphere of sand contracted on him. Shelly waved the black sand away to let her father land on the scattered ground. He was left with several bloody openings and crushed bones.

Lenari and Gonshiri came over to the part of his waist that Shelly cut. “Wait a second…” Lenari noticed the dangling part of a white bandage. “Shelly, lift his shirt up.”

Shelly walked over to her defeated father and did so. White bandages were wrapped around Sandy’s waist. “When did he get those?”

“The agents that came to the castle must have done that.” Gonshiri assumed. “I don’t know if Uncle Andrew approved of it or if it was their own choice.”

Shelly shook her head in disappointment. “He’s a bad brother either way. …Hey, what’s that big wall over there?” Shelly pointed to the distant stone wall where Anthony and Lucas were fighting.

“That’s where the White House is supposed to be!” Lenari realized. “Someone musta raised it. Shelly, you still have Fury Mode, run over there and tear it down!”

“I’m on it!”

Lucas Stonebuddy emerged pyramids from his stone and threw them at Anthony, he thought quick and punched them away, then saw one going for his sister. “Michelle, watch out!”

The girl gasped, looking up from trying to tear a part of wall, and raised a stone shield. “Waaah!” The child was blown off of the wall, but Fybi swooped down to rescue her, dodging a punch from the Lincoln Memorial.

Lucas used his bending to stomp into place new pieces of stone to fill the gaps. “They say that my ancestors created the Great Wall of China. I never looked into it, but I wouldn’t be surprised. You’ll never get through this wall.”

“I don’t know the ‘Timber’ variation for walls, but here goes nothin’!” Shelly Johnson dashed up to the stone wall and punched her hands into it. Lucas felt his precious wall tremble before the low front portion morphed into sand. The structure lost balance and began to lean toward the White House’s garden. The wall crashed as Lucas fell on the ground, and a band of Gallagher students cried as they charged over the fallen defense. Lucas looked up, and his eyes focused solely on Jessie Sidney, passing the Leader a smirk as he leaped across with Spongebob.

“No!” Lucas rolled to his front and outstretched his only arm. “The Light!” Then Anthony leapt and landed on his back, pinning the stone man down.

“You’re the light of my life too, Buddy.” The earthbender stomped and smashed Stonebuddy’s head into pieces. Around the perimeter, Michelle and Shelly were destroying the rest of his wall.
“Better stay safe, ‘cause I’m comin’ after the real you.” Anthony threatened.

“HEY, stop those kids!” a GUN commander roared as his soldiers formed a line before the White House, holding their shields perfectly straight. “They’re not allowed to enter the White House!”

“I’ll take ‘em down!” Spongebob rolled a Bubble Bowl to the soldiers, but it simply bounced off their shields and rolled back against the sponge’s legs. “Uw-WAAA-AA-AAAAH!” Spongebob tripped and rolled rapidly, knocking a group of soldiers down on his own, and when the other troops about-faced, they were pounced and bitten by Gallagher kids.

“WHOA-ho!” Wendy Corduroy perked. “That kid just knocked that guy’s teeth out!”

“Ugh. Man, we should’ve called CP10.” Nya sighed in exhaust, swatting away some Jabbies. “World Leader sure was useless. Hoagie, Wendy, go back up Rodrigo at the school. Susanne, stop those kids!”

“Roger!” The TND operatives nodded and flew off to the school. Susanne Suave glided across the courtyard, swiftly kicking every Gallagher she skied by. Richard Teague turned around and sneezed a glob of snot that Susanne ducked, coming at him faster to throw a punch, but Richard dodged. “Keep going, Jessie!” the nasal-voice yelled, shooting another snot-robe at Susanne. The girl shifted left and smirked tauntingly as Richard’s snot was stuck to a tree. But the Second Grade President returned the look as he lunged himself forward with the snot to kick Susanne in the face, the girl slipping off her feet and falling.

Jessie’s team made it to the White House stairs, but quickly came to a halt and gasped: “It’s the President!” Sandy exclaimed.

“ALRIGHT, you little brats, get back in that school or I’ll have all your families deported!” James McGarfield threatened, standing atop the stairs.

“GO AHEAD!” Jinta taunted—the members of Sector JP, KB, and Grenda and Candy of GF charged into the courtyard as well. “You were planning to do that from the beginning!”

“Come on, Sapphire, let’s break his glasses!” Ruby fixed her mech fists and rushed up.

“No, Ruby!”

An invisible force overcame everyone, and many of the children and operatives fainted. Jessie was struggling to stand, but his sister had fallen. “Sandy!”

When Ruby fainted and bumped down the stairs, Sapphire grabbed and flew them away with psychic. “The president uses Conqueror’s Haki. So that’s how he was able to assimilate all those nations.”

“You big jerk!” Jessie attempted to blow bubbles at the president, but Jimmy lit his fist with Armament Haki and dealt an upper-cut, flinging Jessie far across the courtyard.

“Nah-nah-nah DOO-DOO!” Susanne mocked, seizing the chance to slide over to swing her foot into the nerd’s face.

“Nobody treats my friends that way!” Spongebob announced before leaping at James. “KARATE CHOP!”
The sponge’s tiny yellow hand dealt no damage against the burly president. “AAAAHH!” James used Armament to throw a punch at the sponge, but squeak, made nary a dent. James was surprised, so he threw an onslaught of Armament punches, though not one injured Spongebob’s squishy body. Spongebob leapt over and wrapped arms around Jimmy’s head, the president shaking in attempt to get rid of him. “Anna, do something!”

“I’m on it!” Jimmy’s wife, Anna Worthington-McGarfield, controlled a huge Bus Walker and grabbed Spongebob off of the president using one of many claws. She tossed Spongebob into the Walker’s hold, then proceeded to collect all of the operatives taken out by the Haki. Sandy Sidney was among them.

In James’ Elementary School, Rupert and the Minish twins rescued Lilac and Berry from their cages. They rode the werekittens as they searched the school for Leon’s shadow and Rupert’s mom, with Mabel and the Punies accompanying. Lilac sniffed around. “I smell something stinky over there!”

“Maybe it’s Mom!” Rupert said hopefully. The kids turned a few more corners and found an auditorium. Emily Phantom and Leon’s shadow were locked in coffins with see-through glass, hanging on the wall above the stage. “Mom!”

“Baskerville!” Leon exclaimed without changing his expression.

“WHO NAMES THEIR SHADOW THAT?” the others chorused.

“Those must be some kinds of spectral containers.” Punio assumed. “If we can break the glass, they could escape.”

“I’ll do it!” Mabel announced. “With my GRAPPLING HOOK!” She blasted the hook up to Baskerville’s coffin, it bounced off the side and hit Emily’s cage. Both coffins fell as the glass broke open. The werecats pounced up onstage as Rupert sent his Magenta Pikmin beside his mother’s ears.

“Baskerville!” Leon cheered with sad delight, embracing his shadow in a hug. “I missed you so much. I had no one to be miserable with.”

“Hang on, Mom, we’ll make you better!” Rupert reassured his grey, shuddering mother. The Music Pikmin were beginning to sing.

“Rupert, didn’t you say you saw our moms?” Berry asked.

“They’re outside, being controlled by some fat kid. You can go out and find them, I need to stay with Mom.”

“We’ll stay to watch him.” Punio promised. The werecats and Mabel hurried out of the auditorium.

You little niños done it now!” Rodrigo Añorga shouted, entering from the stage’s left. “I had a perfectly good flow of Music Chi goin’, then that girl ruined it! At least I still can blow your heads up with Bad Notes!” He used maracas to control the soundwaves in the air, shaking them fiercely as purple Bad Notes with munching mouths spawned.

“Hey, stop thaaaaat!” Leon whined when the Bad Notes began swarming him. “It’s burning my earlobes.” He sunk into a Shadow Veil.

“Oh no you don’t!” Rodrigo searched around. “Where did that kid go?”
Leon came up in the doorway behind him. “Hi.” He said with his gloomy face. “I can use my Shadow Veil to go wherever there’s a shadow. I use it to get away from bullies. So don’t find me.” He Veiled again before Rodrigo could throw soundwaves.

Hoagie III and Wendy Corduroy flew into the auditorium. “Yo ‘Rigo, what’s up?” Wendy asked.

“Help me find that shadow mocoso! He’s one of the students here!”

“We’re on it, man.” The TNDs flew off.

Ashei Winters climbed up the ladder eagerly. Wherever this led, Joey Beatles was hiding, and she would finally take the brat down. “Ah-HA!” She came up out of the hatch- “WHAT THE-?!” She was now standing at the base of a tremendous Jenga tower. “When did he have time to make THIS?!”

“Oh, hello!” Joey waved at her from an upper floor. “You’re just in time to help with my construction project!”

Ashei glared and blew her horn, summoning a team of owls to lift and carry her up to his floor. Joey hurriedly made block staircases to get to higher floors. Ashei sent her owls to peck him while she ran up the block stairs, during which Joey swung Lego swords at the owls and dropped scattered Legos on the stairs to slow Ashei’s progress. “Stop running around!” she demanded after chasing Joey onto the top floor. “There isn’t anywhere to go from here!”

“Actually, I think we can work from up here.” Joey decided. “But I might need a little help. It’s time to caaaaall…!”

“LEGONYX!” A colossal figure fell from the sky: it looked like Sardonyx from Steven Universe, made entirely out of Legos and wielding a giant block hammer.

“WHERE DID SHE COME FROM?!” Ashei freaked.

“Good MORNING, everyone!” she announced like a talk-show host. “This is the LOVELY Legonyx coming to you live from Jenga Tower, Washington, D.C.! I’m visiting from Planet Legola to see a very special friend of mine… oh, there he is! JOEY, baby, how’s my little man?” She happily reached up and took the boy off the tower.

“I’m doing great! And you’re looking beautiful today, Legonyx.”

“Ohhhh, you are so sweet, I wanna eatchu like candy!” She pinched Joey’s cheek with one of her four hands. “But for now, just sit back and relax, Joey, as I show you artistic talent!”

“So you lured me up here just to let your giant monster smash this tower?!” Ashei shouted.

“Hmm… ‘Smash’ is the word one would use to describe what other people might do.” Legonyx replied. “The proper words to describe Yours Truly are:” She performed a graceful leap into the air, “Specific!” and knocked a Jenga block out of the structure to fly across the city, crushing no one. “Intelligent!” Another block. “Accurate!” She kept it up, the tower still didn’t fall. “Faultless! Elegant! Controlled! Surgical! Graceful! And POWERFUL!” To conclude, Legonyx flew high above the tower, spun, and smashed her hammer, taking the entire fortress down. Ashei Winters was among the fallen blocks, dizzy and unconscious.

“But for this occasion, I will settle with smashing.” Legonyx shrugged.

“Bo-bobo Kempo?” Joey Beatles asked the dark-haired boy he met at the park. “What’s that?”

“How does it work?”

“I dunno. I just think of stuff to happen and it happens.”

“What kind of stuff?”

“Whatever you can think up, I guess.”

“Could I carry a bunch of blocks that way?”

“If you want to…”

Lilac, Berry, and Mabel looked around the battleground from afar. Teen Ninjas, kids, and Jabbies were everywhere, Washington had no sense of order anymore. “Look, there’s my brother!” Mabel pointed to the top of a building, where Dipper was backed up on the edge, approached by two snarling catwomen.

“And there’s our moms!” Berry noticed. “We gotta get up there!”

“Grab onto me, kittens, I’ll grapple hook us up there!” The werecats did so and clasped onto Mabel- “Ow! Not so hard with the claws.”

Dipper Pines looked over the edge with worry, then faced back at the approaching werecats. Chief Fingerpaint was still chanting, and the Pines feared he wouldn’t get done in time. A grappling hook latched onto the edge beside him, and Mabel and the kittens flew up. “WHOOGAA!” She overshot and flew right over the cats and Gideon, landing on the next roof.

“Mom, don’t!” Berry and Lilac pounced off and tackled their parents, trying to bite and tug their ears.

“Don’t eat those boys!” Lilac pleaded.

“GET OFF, you filthy street cats!” Gideon picked the girls up with psychic and began to choke them.

“Aaa-ah!” Lilac choked. “M-M-o-ommy-y-y!”

“Mom! . . .” Berry choked.

Violet and Scarlet felt a spark in their minds. They looked up at their daughters. “Li-lac?…” Violet breathed.

“Berry?…” Scarlet spoke.

“FOCUS, you fools! Get back to killin’ that Pines kid!” Gideon ordered. The werecats shook under Gideon’s enforced grip.

“I am ready!” Chief Fingerpaint announced. “I summon from the Grade School Down Below: Big Taking Bully!”

The spirit of a fat, tan-skinned boy with black hair, a yellow shirt, and black pants appeared. He fixed his glare at Gideon, who looked with fright. “Hey! What’s dat under your shirt?”

“What? What’re you talking about?” said Gideon.
“Dat!” The bully flew down and lifted Gideon by the leg, shaking him.

“Hey! Stop it! Let go o’ me!” Several coins and items fell out of his pockets, along with a psychic-blue necklace from under his shirt.

“Hey, dis looks fun!” Taking Bully smirked. “I dink I’ll give it to him!” He tossed the amulet to Chief Fingerpaint.

“Thank you, Taking Bully. I will dispose of it posthaste.”

“The HELL you will!” Gideon dove at the kindergartener, they both ended up falling over the building, but Fingerpaint used the necklace to make himself float, watching Gideon fall. “WAAAAAH!”

The white-haired boy fell into a trashcan, getting his entire lower half stuck as it fell over. He tried to squirm free, looking up when Dipper and Fingerpaint floated down. “Sorry, Gideon, but your sham is over!” Dipper threw the necklace to the ground and stepped on it. “It’s back to the dumps for you!”

“Noooooooo!” Dipper kicked the can and watched it roll away with Gideon.

In the elementary school, Añorga’s Bad Notes were flying everywhere, desperate to find Leon and snack on him. “’Ey, did you chicos find him, yet?!” Rodrigo yelled at his communicator.

“We’re looking as hard as we can, dude, it’s not easy to find a shadowbender.” Wendy replied. After she hung up, she looked at Leon Sobs under a desk. “Okay, so what do you want us to do?”

“Just tell me where he is and I’ll try to catch him.” Leon said glumly.

“Got it. Hoags, where’s ‘Rigo?” she said to her phone.

“Okay.” Leon said before sinking in a Veil. He traveled along the shadows and found the art room, where Rodrigo was looking over the shadows of shelves in the corner. “Hey, I’m over here.” Rodrigo whipped around to find Leon peeping out from the shadow of a stool. He ordered his Bad Notes to attack it, but Leon sank as they mindlessly chewed up the stool. Leon peeped out of shadows of canvases, which had paintings of Mariejoa, the Eye of Providence, and an American Flag with the Earth in place of stars; the Bad Notes chewed up every single one in their failed attempts to catch him.

“’Rigo, I saw him in the science lab!” Hoagie III yelled from down the hall. The Spanish teen rushed out and saw Hoagie beside the science room.

Rodrigo carefully searched under the tables for suspicious shadows. The teen perked when he spotted the upper half of Leon’s head peeping up from a shadow, like a sad frog in water. “Hey!” Rodrigo dove in after when Leon sank, he ended up going in the shadow as well and flying out from underneath some cabinets, smashing the empty glass containers on the table. “Aaahh! Dammit!” He saw Leon under another table, Rodrigo dove in, popped out from under the teacher’s desk and bashed his head, causing the table top to become tilted and drop the teacher’s items on his head. Rodrigo saw him in the shadow of a stool, Rodrigo dove—then got stuck halfway, as he was way too big to fit.

“Gaaah! Ayúdame a cabo, pedazo de mierda!” Rodrigo demanded, his upper half poking out of the shadow of a classroom globe.
“It wasn’t my fault, you were too big for that.” Leon said mopingly. “Oh well, we’ll find some grease or something.”

“Not until my Bad Notes squish you into grease!” Rodrigo shook his maracas, which were still by his lower half with his hands. The Bad Notes flew into the science room, where a body’s lower half was sticking out of the floor. The Bad Notes smiled madly, swarming in to begin chewing Rodrigo’s lower half. “Gaaaah! ¡Fuera de mi culo, estúpido…!”

“Now you’re scaring me.” Leon said. “I’m gonna leave now.” He sank into a desk shadow and was gone, leaving the musicbender stuck.

David Keith raced all the way to an active highway, pedaling expertly around the cars in the opposite direction traffic was coming. Robbie Valentino was behind him, unhesitatingly slicing cars as he chased the Fifth Leader with madness in his eyes. After David changed course onto an exit, the road was clear, and Robbie spun his wheels faster to quickly catch up. David looked back, Robbie was inching closer, the camera view switched between David, then Robbie, David, Robbie, David was panicking, the camera zoomed on Robbie’s psychotic eyes. …David passed a salute and smirk before driving out of the way. HOOOOONK. A gigantic truck was coming.

“AAAAAAAHHH!” Robbie crashed into it face-on, flashing stars populated his vision, his armor and wheels crumbled to pieces as he flew from the impact. He bounced around the highway, getting hit by many cars, before finally flying into a colorful tour bus.

Inside this bus, Robbie looked up at a bunch of preschool children smiling at him. “Well, hi there!” the teacher greeted brightly. “You’re just in time to join our Friendship Tour! Class, let’s greet him with the Friendship Pledge.”

The kids all locked hands and sang, with Robbie in the mix. “If you stub your toe and it hurts you know, Friends are there to heeeelp you! When you trip on your face and your teeth-” “NOOOOOOoooooo…!” Robbie plopped his hands and face to the back window, crying with despair as the bus toured across the country.

Richard Teague sneezed his snot onto another tree in attempt to swing around and kick Susanne, but the agile teen ducked and kicked upward, sending Richard high. His snot still attached to the tree, Richard was forcibly yanked to it and collided. The nasally boy detached himself and recovered dizzily. He looked over and watched an unconscious Jessie get captured by Anna’s Bus Walker, thrown into the hold. “Pay ATTENTION to me!” Susanne demanded before skiing over to throw a punch, but Richard ducked and ran away from her.

“Sorry, but I can still see the wrinkles in your skin.” Richard mocked. “That sunscreen doesn’t help.”

“Doesn’t HELP, does it? Then maybe if I use THIS!” Susanne whipped out a bottle of Super Screen, dousing herself entirely. The teen was completely soaking in white, so she zoomed after Richard at greater, air-light speed.

Richard smirked, sneezing a larger line of snot ahead of him to latch onto the Bus Walker’s legs, pulling himself to it to make more ground between himself and Susanne. He landed ahead, watching the teen ski at him, but Richard sneezed on the Walker again and propelled himself back overhead, tempting Susanne to slide around the Walker’s legs and chase. The minute the Bus Walker stepped on the trail of slippery lotion, “WAAAAAH!” the structure flew up and crashed on its back. The roof hatch was open, exposing the captured kids who were waking up from their Haki knock-out.
Sapphire flew over and shouted, “Now’s your chance, everyone get out of there!” The kids shook fully awake and hurried out of this strange hold.

Spongebob carried Jessie and Sandy Sidney out as the latter woke up to find her brother with a bloody nose. “What happened to Jessie?!?”

“He’s just knocked out. I’ll have to wake him up!” Spongebob took out the Sleepytime Suds and doused some on his eyes, putting himself to sleep.

Inside the Dream World, Spongebob found the door to Jessie’s dream close by, rushing inside to find the boy dizzy. “Jessie, what’re you doing SLEEPING at a time like this?! We’re in the middle of attacking WASHINGTON!”

“Polokus…” Jessie moaned drearily. “Sandy… Bill…”

“Whaddo ya WANT, Jessie, an inspirational speech?! There’s no time for that, WAKE UP!” He punched his friend in the face.

“SONOFA!” Jessie shot awake. “Ow! My nose…”

“Jessie!” Sandy hugged her brother. “Thank goodness. Come on, we’ll look for a CleanEx inside the White House.” She held Jessie’s hand as they ran to the building.

Susanne Suave slid far away from her opponent before making a wide turn and coming straight back. Richard Teague sneezed a long string of snot, missing Susanne as he latched to a tree and propelled himself to it. Susanna watched as he flew around the tree, his snot stretched longer as he got in range of her, and successfully caught the teen in his snot. “What?!” Richard then detached himself, the momentum forced Susanne to spin around and around and pull the snot around her like a white sticky mummy. She continuously spun on her exposed, slippery feet, crashing through a pile of sacks of garbage to cover herself, followed by some pots of cacti, then across a family of chickens to cover herself in feathers. To conclude, Susanne bumped against and flew into a drum of lemonade. “EYAAAAAHHH!” Her beautiful gloss skin wouldn’t look the same afterwards.

“If that doesn’t clear up my summer allergies, I dunno what will.” Richard remarked.

Jessie and Sandy made it inside of the White Palace, where Timothy and Hikari were vigorously outsmarting and besting GUN troops. “The president’s office is on the 4th floor!” Timmy pointed. “You can’t miss it, it has a fancy entrance and everything!”

The twins nodded and raced up the many stairs to get there. “Not so fast!” Anna McGarfield burst in through a window on jetpacks. “You kids aren’t going anywhere NEAR my husband!”

“We don’t even want to hurt him, we’re only going to stop Bill!” Jessie reasoned.

“I don’t care! Jimmy’s been a major success ever since Bill started helping and I’m not going to let you ruin that!”

“How the hell can you king trust Bill? How do you know he won’t eat Jimmy’s soul after all this?”

“I’ll protect my husband if he tries anything. For now, if Jimmy trusts Bill to help him become World Leader, then I’ll support him all the way.”

“Well then, you’re a waste. Sandy, now!”

“Right!” Sandy jumped back, roped her brother with a lasso, yanked it to make him fly behind, then she hurled Jessie forward and over the woman. Jessie slipped out of the lasso, and when Anna attempted to chase, Sandy roped her with another one. “I’ll join you later, Jessie! This won’t be long.”

Jessie ran across a long hallway that led to brown double doors with an American Eagle crest on the carpet before it. Jessie blew a Bubble Torpedo and burst the doors open to get inside. “Well, look who’s here, Jimmy!” Bill Cipher perked. “It’s Jessie Sidney!”

“Aren’t you supposed to be in the nurse’s office, brat?!” James shouted.

“Please. You don’t punch anywhere hard as Shelly.” Jessie retorted.

“Then maybe this will keep you senseless!” James used Conqueror’s Haki again. Jessie felt the odd force in the air, but withstood it.

“What, you want to play a staring contest?”

“Alright, that’s it!” James climbed over his desk and came at Jessie with Armament, the boy dodging as his fist broke a hole in the floor. James slipped over, grabbed Jessie, and threw him against his shelves. The boy weakly looked up and tried to blow Bubble Bullets, but James grabbed and threw him against a painting of George Washington, which fell off the wall and revealed a safe behind it.

Anna McGarfield took out a ruler and began trying to hit Sandy with it, the girl fastly dodging. “We had a hard-enough time with your parents in elementary school!” Anna panted. “I won’t have the same trouble from you!”

Sandy dodged behind, threw her rope up to catch a chandelier, and pulled it down to smash Anna. The vice-president was unconscious. “We’re not the same as them.”

She heard squeaky footsteps come up the hall as Spongebob finally caught up. “Sorry I’m late! Where’s Jessie?”

“In the president’s office, let’s go there!”

After James was done beating Jessie, he dropped the Bubble Dreamer on the floor and stood over him imposingly. “It’s too late for you, Boy! No matter what you do, Ah’m gonna run this country ’til my term is up! Then I’ll move up to Mariejoa, and become a REAL World Leader!”

“Sorry to rain on your parade!” Spongebob announced, standing in the doorway with a bubble wand ready. “But it’s time for your afternoon nap!” Spongebob blew the pink bubbles against Jimmy’s face.

“Hey! Wh-What the…” The big strong president wobbled front and back, growing sleepy. James fell backward and shook the floor. He was snoring like a hibernating grizzly bear.

“I have to say, kids, I am impressed.” Bill Cipher folded his arms, narrowing his eye in interest. “You made it all this way, I bet you expect to go further. All right, Jessie, let’s finish this once and for all. If it’s a Dream Fight you want, it’s a Dream Fight you’ll get. I’LL BE WAITING FOR YOU. AHH hahahahahaha, AAAH HAHAHA HAHA!” The triangular demon sunk into Jimmy’s head. The president started mumbling and squirming from a nightmare.

Sandy grabbed some tissues from the president’s desk to wipe the blood off of Jessie. “Are you sure you’ll be okay, Jessie? I know only you and Spongebob can beat him, but what if you mess
“Then we’re all kin’ dead.” Jessie stated simply. “But I’m not worried at all.” He smiled confidently. “Me and Spongebob can take the both of them. And once I say his Creator’s name, we should have it in the bubble. If not, then at least we have these weaknesses.” He looked at the paper once more.

“Okay then. I’ll protect you from out here until you’re done.”

“I know. Thanks, Sandy.” Jessie nodded. “We’re gonna throw everyone a party after we get back home, and we’ll bake your favorite cake.”

Sandy smiled at the tasty sweet in her mind. “Good luck, Jessie. Good luck, Spongebob.”

“‘Luck’ is my middle name.” The sponge assured. So with one final breath, the two touched Sleepy Suds to their eyes and fell asleep. In a moment, a climactic battle would take place within Jimmy’s very mind.

Told you I couldn’t fit the boss fight. :P I bet the intensity of the battle spread to you guys, too, you must be exhausted. :P Sadly, it isn’t over: next time, the Battle of Jimmy’s Head: Jessie and Spongebob vs. President James and Bill Cipher. The conclusion will impact everyone. Atbash Cipher today.

Chapter Summary

Jessie Sidney and Spongebob battle Bill Cipher and James McGarfield in the dreamscape!

It’s hard not to confuse these two between the Team Rocket agents. X) I mean, I literally didn’t intend to make that coincidence, it just happened!

Chapter 41: Forty Seven

Dream World

The sky of President Jimmy’s dreamscape was entirely an American Flag. Its blue square of white stars were as pretty as the night. The entire ground was a gigantic American Eagle crest. Jessie Sidney and Spongebob Squarepants glared at James McGarfield and Bill Cipher. “Well, well, well.” Bill said his signature catchphrase. “After all of these years, Polokus has returned to get me. You know, back then, old Long Arms was a total bore, but he put up one hell of a fight. Now I have to worry about a pee-pants kid and some overrated sponge?”

“We’re taking this from some nard who looks like Mr. Peanut, but with Doritos?” Jessie retorted.

“Humorous, Jessie, humorous.” Bill’s eye narrowed. “I gotta write that down. I wanna start a comedy club after this. Any final words before we duke it out old school?”

“You’re very confident about yourself, Mr. Cipher.” Jessie folded his arms. “We’ll see how you feel after I say a certain word: your Creator’s name!”

“What?!” Bill’s eye widened. “How can you possibly know that?!”

“What’s he talkin’ about, Bill?” James questioned.

“Uhh, did I say that, hehe, what I meant to say was…” Bill tapped his fingers.

“You know very well what I’m talking about, so I’ll say it.” Jessie stated. “Your Creator’s name is _____. …!” Spongebob looked at him weirdly.

“What? My Creator’s name is WHO now?” Bill inquired.

Jessie shook, “His name is _____. …!”

“Um, Jessie, are you okay?” Spongebob asked.

Jessie fell to his knees and clutched his head. What’s going on?! The name’s on the tip of my tongue. It’s in my mind, but I can’t say it! Why can’t I…

“You’ll have to speak a little louder, Jessie!” Bill exclaimed. “I can’t seem to HEAR YOU.”

Jessie and Sponge flinched at the sight of Bill’s fiery eye, shielding their vision. “Well I guess you’re all outta options, Jessie!” The demon hovered beside them, circling around. “But because I’m a good sport, I’ll give ya a chance. Go ahead, Bubble me!” He flew to different spots rapidly. “Go ahead! G’mon! Bubble! Bubble! Bubble! BUBBLLLLLE!”

Jessie hurriedly pulled a bubble from his head and threw it at Bill. “Aaaahh!” The triangle was caught. “Oh, no! I’ve been Bubbled! How can this happen?! It makes me so MAD!”

He burst free, and the force blew the Bubble Dreamers away. “AAAAHHH hahahahahahaaaaaa! That came a little too overcooked, Jessebelle! I’m afraid I take my meat medium rare.”

“Enough with these games, Bill!” President Jimmy marched forward. “I’m punching these twerps back to reality and ending this battle!”

“Jessie, watch out!” Spongebob grabbed his friend and jumped away to avoid Jimmy’s punch. “If we get hit too hard, we might wake up!”

“You’re right. It’s now or never to take him down!”

“Bill, would you take a second to explain to me what the deal IS with all this?” James requested.

“This is your dreamscape, Jim-Jars! You can do whatever you set your mind to. And I’m gonna help you out! By overshadowing your body, I can dramatically increase your strength. You and me had quite a while to get used to each other, so it shouldn’t be too painful.”

“Fine, I’ll take it. As long as I can mangle these twerps faster.”

“I like your enthusiasm, buddy. You’re gonna make a great Leader! But for now, merging bodies. Alright, Bubble Dreamers, get ready to see a party trick!” Bill Cipher flew into Jimmy’s body, and the president shook. (Play “The Encounter” from Kingdom Hearts II!)

James McGarfield shone with a golden aura. His shirt and jacket burned off his body, revealing the muscles underneath. The glasses on Jimmy’s face fell and broke, and the president opened his sharp yellow eyes wide – made that way thanks to Bill’s possession. He formed a grin that could terrify a demon. Jessie and Spongebob readied their bubble wands.

Boss fight: Bill Cipher and James McGarfield

“Spongebob, you first!” Jessie declared, whipping a long bubble shield in front of himself as Spongebob jumped to and bounced against it. He flew toward Jimmy and spun like a torpedo, only for the president to punch him to the sky with Armament. James lunged at Jessie and swung a punch, Jessie leaped away and blew quick Bubble Bullets that didn’t penetrate James’ defense at all. The president whipped out twin pistols and fired ceaselessly at Jessie, who was quick to raise Bubble Shields in defense, but they were easily punctured as Jessie took scratches to the side. “Come on, brat, can those wimpy little bubbles defeat me?!” James taunted, in unison with Bill’s voice. “This is my dream, so I have the upper hand!”

Still spinning, Spongebob was descending down at Jimmy, this time wearing a pointy metal helmet like that of a missile. The sponge collided with Jimmy’s head and knocked the possessed president dizzy. “Jessie, we’re in the Dream World, remember? We can make anything we want!” Jessie sparked with remembrance, smirking as he molded bubbles together. A katana appeared from the bubbles as Jessie rushed at the president, and McGarfield lit his hands Armament and grabbed the sword. Spongebob created a torpedo gun and blasted Jimmy from the side, knocking him to the ground, then Jessie leapt in attempt to stab the president, but James leaped backward and dodged.

“We don’t even need to worry about Fatso,” Jessie said, “we just have to get Bill out of his body.”

“No problem!” Spongebob whipped out a jellyfish net with enthusiasm. “Everyone knows that anything that flies is helpless under a jellyfish net.”

“That only works on fairies, stupid!” Bill Cipher’s conscience replied.

“Not in THIS dream! Nnnn-NUU!” Spongebob leapt at the president and swung his net, but Jimmy dodged to the side to fling Spongebob away with an Armament punch. Jessie leapt to slice his sword against Jimmy, but the president grabbed his blade, pushed Jessie off, then tore the sword into two as it dispersed into bubbles. He approached Jessie, who recovered and threw Bubble Bowls, easy for James to jump as he then blasted heat vision at Jessie (thanks to Bill’s influence). Jessie hastily dodged it, then quickly blew a series of slow-coming bubbles around Jimmy’s head. James smirked cockily, but the bubbles instantly popped and smothered him with goop. By the time the president could yank it off, Spongebob surprised him by catching his net over his head.

“And now I activate the Brain Scrubulator!” Spongebob pushed a button, making spinning waxing machines come out of the net’s side and rapidly scrub Jimmy’s head.

“AAAAAAHH!” Bill Cipher spiraled out. Jessie calmed his mind and pulled a Sleep Bubble from his head, throwing it at Bill. “NNN!” The triangle blasted it with an eye laser. “Don’t go thinkin’ you’re hot stuff just because I’m separated from Jimmy. The whole time I was ‘teaching’ your classmates, I was actually stealing their mentality! All of their dreams, fears, and thoughts are mine to use as I please! And I must say that some of them have quite the BIG HEAD!” He grew to five times his size.

“You won’t have such a big head in a moment.” Jessie retorted. “I’ve got a list of your weaknesses ready for use. Weakness Number 1:” He waved his wand, and the bubbles formed cartoon characters inside them: a male gopher with a blue shirt, female with a yellow dress, a penguin with a microphone, and a crocodile. “Cartoons in reality!”

“AAAAH!” Bill panicked. “The cartoons from Out of Jimmy’s Head?!”

“I got the idea when Spongebob got you out of Jimmy’s head.”

“ZING!” Tux the Penguin exclaimed. “That was Jessie Sidney with our opening joke! ‘Course, anything that opens has to close right away, otherwise it spoils. ZING!”

“NOOO!” Bill gripped his wide-eyed head. “His jokes have no body behind them! Please, someone toss me a tomato!”

James McGarfield punched the penguin away with Armament. “Get a grip on yourself, Bill, they’re just crappy characters from a cancelled show! During Cartoon Network’s dark ages, but still!”

“DAAAAARK!” Crocco the Alligator grabbed around Jimmy’s head. “I don’t like the dark! I need my blanky!”

“Golly, Dolly, I need you guys to attack Bill!” Jessie commanded.

and Dolly opened their mouths wide and leaped up to begin munching the demon.

“NO! That ride was an atrocity!” Bill cried as parts of his body were chomped off like a chip. “It gave children the impression that alligators have chips in their diet!”

James punched Crocco off of him and growled with anger, unprepared as Jessie and Spongebob leaped over with bubble-made spike boots and stomped him in the face. James flew back and bounced onto his feet, using Armament to punch the spiked soles when Jessie was thrown at him by Spongebob. Said sponge stretched himself forward via his legs and swung a kick with one foot. James ducked the kick, but Jessie rolled inside a bubble ball as he came from behind the president, knocking James forward against Spongebob. When Spongebob fell, the still-outstretched leg flew up into the air, came down, and STOMPED Jimmy with the spiky shoe.

Bill Cipher exploded into blue flames, which all scattered into a team of Bill clones. “AHHHH HAHAHAHAAAA!” The Bills flew around quickly. “What’s wrong, Polokus, more Bills than you could chew? Go on, bite me first, bite me! Ahhh hahahahahaha!” They zipped about faster and blasted energy balls at the Dreamers every second.

“If there’s one thing I learned from Shelly, it’s taking a bunch of shrimps down in one kick!” Jessie created a soccerball from the bubbles and kicked it at one Bill, it bounced around all the others as they all got dizzy. However, the Bill clones continued spinning, so fast they were like helicopter propellers, turning horizontally and spinning close to or above the ground. Jessie hastily ducked or jumped the Bills, spinning in place to surround himself in bubbles. “AAAAHH!” The Bills easily chopped through the bubbles and sliced Jessie’s sides.

“I-say, I-think-this-is-how-you-cut-a-log, but-whaddo-I-know, I’m-just-a-triangle-with-an-eye!”

“PIZZAAAAA!” Crocco the Alligator leapt up to grab one of the Bills in his teeth, swallowing the demon whole. The gator’s indigestion kicked in, his belly increased in size and exploded, hitting each Bill with a glob of digestive acid.

Almost instantly, Golly, Dolly, and Tux were taken out by Jimmy’s Conqueror’s Haki. The Bill clones shook the acid off of them and reformed into a single body. “Ugh, that was revolting! Time to put these cartoons to good use.” His eye glowed and sucked the fallen cartoons inside of him, then the demon flew back into McGarfield. James blew Spongebob off him with a burst of his power, and having absorbed the cartoons, the president could transform his arms into stretchable hammers. The hammers turned Armament as James attempted to smash Jessie between them, but the boy jumped back, and when the hammers collided again, Jessie quickly blew a Bubble Bomb to explode against them.

During Jimmy’s weakened moment, Jessie blew a Bubble Torpedo at the president’s chest, but James leaped over and lit his legs Armament as he flew at Jessie. The first-grader dodged, but Jimmy had sunk partway into the ground as he lit with Bill’s light-blue fire. Blue columns of flame sprouted everywhere around the field. “OUCH-OUCH-OUCH!” Spongebob was burned in the butt, rocketing toward the air. Jessie was evasively dodging the fires as he blew an array of bubbles to the sky. They all exploded, sprinkling around the field and weakening most of the flames. James stomped his foot through the ground before him, sending a crack toward Jessie that the boy dodged. A terrific wall of blue fire erupted and blocked the other side of the field.

“How do ya like the new Presidential Firewall?!” The combination of ‘Bimmy’ exclaimed, stepping through the fire to Jessie’s side. “When I’m through with this, I’m putting these all over the Internet! You aren’t posting on deviantART without MY permission!”

“Don’t worry, Jessie!” Spongebob called from the other side. “There’s gotta be some water somewhere!” He raced across the dreamscape, shoes squeaking with each fast step.

“He’ll have to beat my Swimming Obamas first!” Bimmy announced. The president grabbed part of the firewall in either hand and lashed flaming whips at Jessie. As the boy dodged, he stuck his wand into his bubble bottle, then stabbed the wand into the ground to make bubbly jetstreams. He created a wall of jetstreams, which dispersed Bimmy’s flame-whips when he tried to slice them. Through the bubbles, Jessie fired a Bubble Torpedo to hit Bimmy’s face and back him against the firewall, but when his back caught fire, the president rolled like Sonic and shot through the bubbles as a flame ball, Jessie barely avoiding.

Spongebob found the President’s Swimming Pool a short distance across the field, where Barack Obama clones were swimming back-and-forth. When Spongebob attempted to suck up the pool using a straw, the Obamas jumped out and threw kicks at him. Spongebob whipped out his karate gloves and sliced a few Obamas into bubbles, but several more surfed out and grabbed Spongebob from all corners. The sponge contracted into his Sponge Ball and slipped away, rolling a few feet before turning back to normal and creating a bubble-made Shock Bowl. He threw the electric bowling ball at the Obamas and destroyed them. With that, Spongebob proceeded to suck up the pool of water.

Jessie spun several bubbly hoops into being and chucked them at Bimmy to further disperse his body flame, only for the president to jump over and collect more from the firewall. Bimmy spun like a rocket and blasted at Jessie, who got scorched while dodging to the side. James smirked devilishly, but then realized his firewall was being destroyed by Spongebob’s outpour of water. During his distraction, Jessie put a Bubble Viking Helmet on his head and rammed Jimmy’s rear, pushing him toward Spongebob as the sea critter caught his head in his jellyfish net. Jimmy’s head was waxed clean again, forcing Bill out. Jessie leapt forward, pulling a Sleep Bubble from his head, and dunked it on Bill like a basketball. The demon felt very excited, so he was able to burst free.

“Boy, am I in a good mood all of a sudden!” Bill said perkily. “I think I wanna call some friends over!” Bill shot lasers that summoned a spider on tap-dance shoes, a clown mailman, and Governor Ratcliffe from Pocahontas. The spider danced its way over to Jessie, who pulled a Sleep Bubble to throw over its head, but the spider shuddered with fright before popping it off. The clown mailman threw packages around Jessie, and jack-in-the-boxes popped out of them and laughed hysterically before exploding. As Jessie tried to shake off the confetti, Ratcliffe seized the chance to leap over and stab him, only for Spongebob to block his sword with a spatula.

“I’m not scared of the mailman, tap-dancing, OR guys with swords!” Sponge declared bravely. “These guys are on me!” He caught Ratcliffe’s sword in one of the spatula’s holes, leapt overhead while pulling the sword up, and forced Ratcliffe to stab himself. The governor faded into bubbles, then Spongebob dodged when the mail-clown blew Bombballoons down to him. Spongebob pulled a Sleep Bubble partway out of his head, then ran around with his arms still stretched, pulling the bubble longer. It was at a perfect length and size to capture the mail-clown, watching the monster fall asleep and float up into the American Flag star sky.

Jimmy’s Armament punches now sent energy balls across the air, aiming to hit Jessie from afar. Jessie created a small cannon that attached to his wrist, which would blast an ice cream ball with each jab of his arm. James countered the ice cream with energy balls, but a chunk of strawberry latched onto his face, followed by vanilla and chocolate over either fist. Jessie looked as Spongebob was shooting Bubble Torpedoes at the tap-dance spider, so the Indian calmly pulled bubble after bubble from his head to throw at the spider’s feet. Each of his legs became sleepy, then Spongebob Bubbled the head as the monster fell asleep and floated up into the stars, albeit partly Bubbled.
The Dreamers screamed and jumped when a giant Bill Cipher blasted a powerful laser through the ground, burning a path around them. “AHHHH hahahahahaha!” The ground inside that area collapsed, and the heroes took the fall through a vortex. Bill’s image expanded before them, and the kids shut their eyes to avoid looking at his gaze. But that brief look forced their eyelids to grow sharp fangs, biting their eyes as they screamed in agony.

“MY EYELIDS!” Spongebob cried. “How can I trust you to protect me from sunlight now?!”

Jessie punched his own eyes to stop the biting, then he dumped some of his bubble bottle over his face. “Huff…” He had limited eyesight back, but it was slowly healing. “Time for Bill Cipher’s next weakness: ironically, it’s jimmies!” He created another turret over his left wrist. He blasted ice cream from the right one at Bill, then shot it with sprinkles from the left one while the cream was still flying.

“AHH!” Bill frantically dodged the cream balls. “Sprinkles ruin everything! They’re so colorful, they make things seem full of love and life!”

“Bill, why does it seem like all of your greatest fears have to do with my name?” Jimmy questioned.

“It’s called being tolerant, Jimbo.” Bill glared at him. “Not that you would know. Because I’ve been teaching you otherwise.” He shot lasers from his hands to hit a few sprinkle-filled balls, but Spongebob flew above Bill Cipher with a bubbly bike and created the Goofy Goober from his bubbles. The peanut chuckled and dumped a bucket full of sprinkles onto the giant Dorito. “Noooo! They’re sticking all over me! They’re ruining my perfect taste!” He frantically tried to scratch them off.

“Weakness Number 3, blueberry!” Jessie switched the dial on his ice cream gun to Blueberry, blasting the fruity blue cream all over the demon.

“STOP! DOOON’T! All of this is too unnatural! It’s such an unpleasant taste!”

Jessie and Spongebob then leaped into the air, stylishly forming propeller-powered bubble surfboards under their feet. They rocketed below Bill, shot upward, and began shoving the demon back up the vortex against his back. Jimmy stepped back to watch the giant triangle fly out into the sky, then Jessie and Spongebob flew above to about-face and ram Bill again, blowing him against the ground to crash onto Jimmy. They watched the flattened triangle help himself up, seeing the president smashed in a big triangle crater. Bill turned to glare angrily at the duo.

“I’ve been going easy on you worms, but I’ve about had it up to HERE! I’ll make you kids never want to sleep AGAIN!” The demon flew into Jimmy’s body again as the president surged with greater power. A fiery blue aura lit around him, and Jimmy’s upper body grew bigger. They couldn’t count how many muscles were on his body, and his arms looked too long to be fair.

“Spongebob, doesn’t this look like a good time to become You-Know-Who?” Jessie inquired.

“My mind must be open, ’cause you read it like a book!”

“What are you two clowns gawkin’ about now?!” the Buffbod Bimmy shouted.

Spongebob stuck his bubble wand into the top of his head, then began a long and large inhale as bubbles flowed from Dream Land’s atmosphere, into his lungs. When he was puffed to a large height, the sponge clamped his mouth shut and trembled, as if he was blowing on the inside. Only his head remained square, as the rest of his body, along with his white shirt, stretched and grew into muscles. He also put a blue mask over his bubble wand and eyes.

“Have no fear: The Invincibubble is here!” The superhero sponge proclaimed.

“Not THIS cheap excuse for a second movie!” Bimmy growled.

“How’s THIS for cheap?” Spongebob channeled more bubbles in through his wand, sending them into his right arm as he ran at the behemoth for a powerful punch to the chest. Bimmy slid across the ground, but remained standing as Spongebob leapt and channeled the muscle into his legs. James lit his entire upper body with Armament, easily withstanding the twin kicks as he grabbed Spongebob’s legs and whirled him around. He chucked the muscled sponge at Jessie, who managed to bubble up a giant spatula during this conflict. He caught Spongebob just in time, flipping him to the air before whacking him toward Bimmy.

Spongebob collided with and shoved the president slightly, then landed his feet on the ground to continue pushing. James withstood and pushed with his own strength, his auras growing brighter as his muscles grew stronger. The Invincibubble was shoved away, shaking the landscape after falling. “That’s COMPLETELY ridiculous!” Bimmy exclaimed. “This is MY dreamscape, and I control every inch and corner! So with that in mind, let’s bring out the tanks!” Under Jimmy’s will, a squad of tanks poofed out of nowhere and launched bombshells at the sponge.

Spongebob narrowly avoided the explosions while creating Bubble Shields to bounce the bombs back and destroy the tanks. However, warplanes started flying overhead, releasing Mega Footbombs that Spongebob hurriedly captured through Bubbling. “Jessie, grab my net! Try to get Bill out of him!” The Indian nodded and swung a bubble rope to catch Spongebob’s net from his pocket. Jessie molded Bubble Jetpacks on his back and flew across the air, avoiding bombs and explosions as he readied to catch Jimmy’s head. Bill Cipher’s eye opened on Jimmy’s chest, but Jessie was too late to shut his eyes as he appeared in a white dimension, where Bill was floating over his Cipher Wheel.

“I’m Bill Cipher, Jesserella! Master of dreams, keeper of secrets, knower of knowledge! And my knowledge is eons ahead of yours! Every Cipher, from Caesar to Vigenère, I invented all of them and hid my messages all over the universe! It’s unfathomable how much I know over you!”

“Yes, yes, smarty-pants, if you’re older than me, obviously you’re going to king know more.” He blew Bubble Torpedoes at the demon, Bill dispersed and reappeared a few feet away, Jessie shot him, he reappeared again, and then a circle of Bills appeared around him.

“It’s not about all the knowledge I have, it’s my ability to accumulate so much of it. My likeness is depicted everywhere, every one-dollar bill feeds me knowledge! Everything people say and do, I don’t miss a beat! I know everything you’re thinking, how you’re so desperate to beat me, you wanna tour the world with Spongebob, or how you think Shelly is the hottest piece of-”

“NNNNNRRRRR!” Jessie forcefully grabbed Sleep Bubbles out of his mind and chucked them at each Bill.

“WOW, am I mad right now! I can’t remember EVER being this mad! In fact, it’s a little too maddening, how mad I am right now.” Jessie was ceaselessly throwing bubbles to catch the Ciphers in multiple. “I’m so mad that, I can’t help it! AAAAAHHH, it burns! Stop it, stop the madness, STOP IT NOOOOW!”

“ERRRRRAAAAAAAHH!” Jessie woke up on the ground, watching the Bimmy colossus grip his head with purest aggravation. “BILL, WHAT’RE YOU DOING?! You’re giving me a headache, Bill! GET, OUT, OF, MEEE!” James punched his own head with Armament, and the spirit flew out. James shrunk and contrasted to his normal form. “That’s it, NO more possession, Cipher! I don’t need a crummy demon to whoop a kid in MY dream!”

Jessie quickly jumped away when James came for a punch, then Jimmy whipped out an imagined whip to grab Jessie by the legs and swing him back and forth against the ground. He released and flew Jessie into the air, imagined a bazooka, and blasted a net up to the airborne Indian. Spongebob leaped up to be caught in the net instead, and the muscular sponge struggled before ripping the net apart. He crossed arms in defense when the smaller Jimmy came up to throw punches, and the powerful president was able to send Spongebob away. Jimmy raised a needle and performed a terrific leap to the sponge, piercing one of his abs as bubbles leaked out, and Spongebob began to shrink to a normal square.

Jessie blew a storm of Bubble Torpedoes that Bill avoided, but when many were surrounding him, Jessie clapped his hands to make them all pop and stun the demon. Jessie calmed down, pulled a Sleep Bubble from his mind, and threw it at Bill. The demon was successfully captured, but Bill surged with power and burst free, growing bigger. “I don’t just know a lot of things, I am a BODY of mind energy! Every piece of information I collected, for thousands of years, from every single mortal, all of the knowledge I absorbed directly through peoples’ minds, has contributed to my power!”

Bill Cipher absorbed all of the tanks and planes that were around the field. He grew to colossal stature as his eye burned red. “This is how my Creator imagined me! To be the smartest being in the entire cosmos! And no creature in any universe is more imaginative than he is! This is the END of you, Polokus! The end of ALL that you hold dear!”

Jessie blasted torpedoes up to his gigantic eye, but Bill destroyed them all with small lasers. He blasted a massive laser from his eye that exploded the ground before Jessie, flying the boy back and unconscious.

“Jessie, boy… Jessie…”

The child awakened in Polokus’s dreamscape. He turned around as the spirit sat on his pedestal. “Do not let Bill deter you, Jessie. His knowledge is vast… but my Creator created me with wisdom. Her mind and heart cared for all things. She loved all creatures in this universe… so she wanted me to protect them. I will protect them through the Bubble Dreamers. Through you, Jessie.”

“Well, you’re not doing a good kin’ job of it, are you?!”

“You must never forget, Jessie. Never forget my Creator’s name. You possess my essence. I was created from Calliope’s mind. You possess Calliope’s power. Jessie… although you cannot speak of the monster who created Bill… Calliope’s existence is all you need to know. Let me fill your mind… with all the love and knowledge that she knew.” He spiraled energy around his hands and let it all flow to Jessie.

“Oh, I forgot.” Bill stared with disbelief at the fallen boy. “You’re just a kid, aren’t you. You’re nothing like the real Polokus. You’re just a hopeless boy dreaming hopeless dreams.”

“You take that BACK!” Bill whipped over to Spongebob. The sponge was weakly limping forward after being stabbed by Jimmy, glaring up at Bill. “Sure, Jessie likes to dream a lot, and he picks up too many bad words from his parents; and from the Krusty Krab dumpster that I show him. But Jessie isn’t Class President for nothin’! That’s because Jessie’s brave, and heroic, and he cares about ALL of his friends!” The world turned dark as a spotlight shone upon him.

“What the heck is goin’ on?!” James exclaimed.
“But the most important thing you need to know about Jessie…” Smoke began to flow in.
(“What’re you doing?” Bill asked.) “Is that he’s…” Spongebob bent over, “He’s…” Even further, “HE’S…” (“What the scallop?!"

“HE’S A GOOFY GOOBER (ROCK)!” (Play “Goofy Goober Rock” from the Spongebob Movie!)

“AAAAHHH!” President McGarfield was blown away by the force. Spongebob whipped out an electric guitar and microphone, singing with all his passion.

“NOOOOO!” Bill Cipher gripped his head in agony. “Rock and roll! ! My greatest weakness of all! How could you possibly…” He looked down at Jessie. Bubbles flowed all around the Indian child, encasing his unconscious body. Jessie floated up into the air, clothed in midnight-blue pajamas with glittering star designs. Polokus’s hat was firm on his head. “It can’t be! Polokus awakens at the power of music?!”

“Didn’t know that?” Jessie smirked. As Spongebob strummed his guitar, a Song Road came and caught Jessie, allowing the boy to surf into the sky and chase Bill Cipher. The demon blasted rounds of energy balls at the Dreamer, Jessie swiftly evaded them and threw bubbles to counter. Jessie whooshed his wand in front of him to mold four torpedoes at once, sending them all to strike Bill’s eye. After Bill’s short blink, Jessie caught up to him, surfing across his giant eye and sending bubble spikes to deal some damage. Jessie created bubbles in the air that formed patties inside them, then surfed by to use a spatula to flip the burning meats at Bill’s eye.

“STOP THAT!” Bill screamed, his eye now red from pain instead of power. “His chops are too righteous!! I could never stand this level of rock and roll! DO SOMETHING, Jimmy!”

James sent his Conqueror’s Haki across the dreamscape, steadily approaching Spongebob in hopes of knocking him out. The president was hit with a sonic wave that blew him back, James ran at Spongebob in attempt to grab him, but Sponge leaped, kicked off Jimmy’s head, then blasted another soundwave at the president. James punched energy spheres from his Armament that Spongebob countered with notes, then he strummed his guitar faster to have a swarm of notes surround Jimmy and flip him on his back.

Jessie sent clones of Golly, Dolly, and Crocco to feast on Bill’s body, which tasted extra pleasant with the inclusion of sprinkles on blueberry ice cream. “Is this really the power of Polokus?!” Bill exclaimed. “The power that exists in all Bubble Dreamers?! But the reason Jessie is… it’s because he’s a Light, isn’t it? The only reason Polokus is lending Jessie his power, is because he’s one of Calliope’s Lights!”

Jessie flew far above Bill and channeled his energy. With a soft and graceful breath, Jessie blew into his wand. A titanic bubble grew forth, grew larger than Bill, and overshadowed the entire field. Bill felt this shadow and turned, gasping with fright. The bubble swallowed him entirely. President Jimmy felt darkness surrounding him as he woke up from his fall. The gigantic bubble was expanding, ready to crush his little body. “AAAAAHHHHH!” (End song.)

The bubble exploded and forced Jimmy into the Waking World. The colossus Bill Cipher made himself into was destroyed. All of the mind power he stole these past few weeks was scattered, returning to their owners. “Ohhhh…” The demon felt groggy as he awakened. He was back to his normal size. “What?” A bubble surrounded him again. He tried to bang its interior, but to no avail. “The Sleep Bubble! I-I can’t get out! This can’t be happening! Getting… sleepy… Want to drink cocoa… and read from textbooks… NOOOOO!”

The monster looked down at Jessie and Spongebob with a promising glare. “You may have won this time, Jessie Sidney, but mark my words, you have NO idea what you’re up against!” Jessie and Spongebob’s heads tilted more back as they watched the bubble ascend into the sky. “My Creator will return to this world, and he’s more powerful than anyone can possibly imagine! I’m eagerly awaiting his return. And when he does, I’ll be back.” Bill Cipher’s cry echoed beyond the stars. His bubble had long floated away from the dreamscape, to the endless ocean of stars, which in reality were millions of sleeping, Bubbled monsters. “I’LL BE BAAAAAAAAAAACK…!” Bill Cipher then became drowsy. He yawned, folded his arms under his head, and fell asleep.

White House

The president’s office was in shambles. Jessie and President James were tattered on the floor, with Sandy watching over them and Spongebob. “Uuuuuoooh…” The large-bodied president awakened first, wobbling as he stood. He stared at his flabby arms and body, and panicked. “What… Bill? BILL?” The president looked around frantically. “It can’t be! Bill! You little…”

“Ahh!” Jessie had still not recovered as James grabbed him by the neck, lifting him.

“Jessie!” Sandy cried.

“You may be powerful in the Dream World, you little trash-mouth, but in the real world, you’re a piece of filth! I’ll crush you one way or another, and have your family deported! This country is—”

A sudden gust of wind burst in the office, blowing James against his desk while Jessie dropped. The Indian boy was more awake, rolling to his arms and looking up at the assaulter: it was a very tall man in a dark cloak, the right half of his white face covered by a mask. His exposed red eye glared at Jimmy, before looking down at Jessie. “Out of the way, child.”

Still woozy, Jessie got to his feet, and Sandy and Spongebob helped him walk to the door. They didn’t exit, only looked at the back of the stranger’s silver hair as he approached James. “Y… You.” The president panted, getting up. “You’re that Red Eye! The leader of them White Lotus! You picked the wrong house to blow into. I am the 46th President!” He threw his Armament fist at Red Eye, striking the side of his head. Red Eye retaliated by flicking a spell from his wand, knocking James onto the severed desk.

“The story of America’s history always intrigued me.” Red Eye spoke with a deep voice. “A Land of the Free, they say. This country became independent from Great Britain as a means of being free from the king’s tyranny. Sure, America has had its hypocritical faults in the past, but there is one that still stands: such a country cannot become a free land, when its leaders continue to follow the law of the World Government. You are, by far, one of the worst America’s had. But I will restore this country, to what it’s supposed to be.”

“Hu-u-uck-uck…” Red Eye began to whirl his arms. Jessie, Sandy, and Spongebob watched as President Jimmy’s eyes bulged while he choked. A stream of breath flowed out of the man’s lungs, he reached desperately to take it back. Red Eye began to spiral the breath around Jimmy’s head in the form of a sphere, the man flailing helplessly.

“What the fuck are you doing?!” Jessie asked in shock.

“To live is to breathe. To breathe is to have Air. Air is Freedom. To live is to be free. Without freedom, there is no air. There is no… breath. It is time you presidents learned that. It is time for this country to…” Red Eye dispersed the breath with the atmosphere. The kids watched horrified as James fell on his back. The president was dead. With that, Red Eye whipped his magic wand and broke open the safe on the wall—the one that was formerly behind Washington’s painting. He took a rolled-up piece of paper from inside and became wind, breaking out the window behind the desk.
Red Eye flew above the front entrance of the White House, watching the fighting continue. “PEOPLE OF AMERICA!!” Red Eye’s voice echoed. Everybody looked at him. His presence was recorded on the news. Everybody in America was watching. “This is the United States Constitution!” He unrolled the paper. “The Supreme Law of your country, that has long been tampered with by your rulers! Your current ruler, President James McGarfield, is DEAD! Vice-President Anna has met her fate as well! My followers have massacred and destroyed everyone in the Congress! I am Red Eye, Leader of the Revolution, and I hereby introduce a New Order to America. A FREE order! As of this moment… America, and all countries it has conquered, are FREE!!” He used his wand to set fire to the Constitution.

Citizens all over the country went ballistic. Nerds were breaking into game and comic book stores and taking everything they wanted. Criminals were breaking out of prison, policemen and firemen were at war, churches were playing poker with bars, farmers converted their barns into factories, and vice-versa for factory workers, and toilets were no longer flushing. Citizens were breaking into army bases and taking tanks, the airplanes were driving on the ground, trains across the sea, and boats took flight. It was a national catastrophe, the country was in a worse state than it’s ever been, and soon their chaos would spread to the whole world.

Joey, Shelly, Timmy, and Hikari ran into the president’s office; with Gonshiri riding Shelly’s shoulders. “Jessie, what the CRAP happened in here?!” Shelly screamed.

“Some psycho broke in and killed the president!” Jessie yelled. “Right after we took care of Bill Cipher.”

“What are we going to do?!” Sandy exclaimed. “The country’s gonna tear itself apart if we don’t have a president!”

“But all of the Congress members are dead, who’s gonna wanna be president NOW?!” Timmy panicked.

“ Especially in a country where everybody is completely and utterly- . . .” Gonshiri spoke.

Jessie listened to the cries and chaos outside. Everyone in America was crazy. Like a school full of immature children. With this in mind, he looked at President James’ fallen body, his cowboy hat dropped on the floor. …He put on a serious look.

“SIIIILEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEENCE!”

An earsplitting scream stopped everything. The people of America looked at the podium before the White House. A little girl of about 7, with dark-red hair, panted heavily after such a loud scream. With everybody looking at her, Sandy Sidney turned nervous. “U-um… citizens of America, give a round of applause for, um, President of First Grade, Jessie Sidney!” She stepped away when an Indian boy in a white cowboy hat stepped up on the podium. He bore a strict expression as he cleared his throat.

“I want to start off by saying that everyone in this country is completely FUCKING STUPID!” The child’s accented voice was on every news channel on every TV, and every radio. “Just because your president DIED, you’re all acting like you can do whatever the fuck EVER! You’re acting like just because you have no leader, you have no fucking sense of humanity, WHERE THE FUCK IS YOUR SENSE IN THAT?!” Red Eye still hovered in the sky, watching this display with interest. “I am a seven-year-old boy in First Grade, after summer I’m moving on to Second Grade, so the fact that I, a child, am smart enough to point this out to you is the most retarded thing ever! If you all really need a president to tell you how to act like common-sense people, clearly an adult would be the wrong type to have! Maybe you should let CHILDREN run your country. Would that make
“First, I want every policeman in this country to get the fuck AWAY from your donuts and start catching those criminals! If there’s a fire somewhere, firemen need to put it out, none of this silly rivalry with the police! Also, no fucking factories near rural areas, those are annoying, and quit polluting rivers and oceans. And while you’re at it, give every ‘conquered’ country its rights to be their own country back, and make sure every child gets an education in a friendly school—because you adults have everything BUT an education. There, these are easy, SIMPLE laws that even a five-year-old can abide by! If you need a Constitution so bad, I’ll have the Kindergarteners draw one up in crayon, they’ll do a hell of a better job! My fellow Americans, I have made my point: STOP ACTING LIKE IT’S THE END OF THE WORLD!”

Everyone in America was speechless. The whole country was told off... by a first-grader. “...Coughjessieforpresident.” Chief Fingerpaint coughed.

“Coughjessieforpresident.” Another kindergartener coughed.

“Keh, Jessieforpresident.” Richard Teague coughed.

“Oh, great, there’s a flu bug going around.” Leon Sobs moaned.

After witnessing this entire scene, Eva Jackson spoke into the camera, “You heard it live, folks, from the 47th President of the United States: Jessie Sidney!”

Everybody in America cheered to the sky. The Gallagher students were flabbergasted. Red white and blue confetti was thrown up to Jessie’s podium, as well as a variety of gifts, some teddybears, videogames, and a white square-patterned scarf around his neck. The booths were piling with people, adults and kids alike, everyone was throwing Jessie’s name into the boxes. Everyone wore Jessie Badges, artists were making posters of Jessie, and one artist got sued for manipulating a Jessie poster, calling it his own art. People were putting Jessie bumper stickers on their cars, authors were writing novels about Jessie’s life, and the Sidney Monument – a very small, brown tower with a pointy tip – was created.

Shelly, Sandy, and the others stared awestruck. Hikari elbowed them all, and saluted happily. Shelly put on a serious look and saluted, they and all of Jessie’s friends stood beside their president proudly. The 47th President, the first president to be an Indian, and the first president to be a child.

“...You were right, Gonshiri.” Shelly said. “The people of this country are nitwits.”

Mariejoa; God’s Castle

King Andrew and Lucas Stonebuddy watched everything on their TV. “Lord Stonebuddy?”

“Yes, Your Majesty?”

“What the fuck did we just watch?”

“In all my years and expertise of calculating probable outcomes, I’m afraid I cannot provide you a justifiable answer.”

Washington

“One more thing!” Jessie announced, pointing at the banner of Bill Cipher above him. “This country is no longer aligned with the World Government! We are going to be our own country, and that’s final! So everybody in America is hereby ordered to burn EVERY image of a pyramid with an eye! We’ll replace your dollar bills with a different symbol, like...like diamonds! Nothing
Every banner of Bill Cipher was burned, every window pane that looked like him, every one-dollar bill. Diamonds were instead marked on the bill, and everyone felt rich just by holding one. In time, however, crazy conspiracy theorists came up with some whackjob theory about how their world is ruled by the “Diamond Authority,” but everyone passed them off as nutcases and ignored them.

Red Eye chuckled to himself. “Well, this was an unexpected turn of events.” He smiled solemnly at Jessie. “Oh well… I can let this leader slide. No doubt the Government will want him, however. I should protect him.” He flew away.

“Excuse me, Mr. President!” A brown-haired man in a black suit approached Jessie with a perky smile, and a bunch of keys. “I am Carl Keysley, the country’s Key Keeper, and as President, you are entitled to every key to every door in the country!” Jessie was handed the huge ring of keys. He looked confusedly; why would he want so many keys? “They can open anything, money vaults,” Carl held up each respective key, “bedrooms, bakeries, and this one opens the secret passage in your fireplace.”

Jessie’s friends all stared wondrously at that key. They exchanged excited smiles. (Play “The First Mask” from Rayman 2!)

There was a keyhole in President Jimmy’s fireplace. His friends watched with wonder as Jessie stuck the key inside, and a secret hatch opened. They all climbed down a ladder to an underground chamber. They passed a long, wide hallway with ancient brick walls and torches. There was a round table with six chairs, each marked for President Jimmy and a World Leader. One more chair sat atop a short staircase, meant for ‘King Andrew.’ Behind that throne was another secret passage, leading to a tall room with a raised platform.

The path curved up and turned vertical along the pillar’s side. Jessie whirled his wand and tossed a Bubble Bowl up the path, hitting the switch. Different parts on the vertical path flipped and became a winding stairway. Jessie and his friends hurried up. The top of the pillar bore something Jessie and Sandy had seen before: a stone cube with foreign writing. “Hey! That looks like that thing we saw on Candied Island!” Sandy pointed.

“What’s it say?” Shelly asked.

“Doesn’t look like any language I’ve seen.” Gonshiri said.

Jessie slowly approached the cube, staring wide. The monument called to him. He stood inches from the ruin, but could read no part of its text. …The white scarf, which a citizen threw around his neck moments ago, glowed blue. It floated up and into the strange cube. The entire thing glowed, and its light shot into Jessie’s body. The child felt the oddest sensation.

Jessie awakened himself as the FOURTH LIGHT! Only 3 more to go!

The foreign text glowed. Jessie read its words out loud to his friends. “‘If you are reading this rock, way to go!! Now you’re all a little bit closer to saving the world! There’s still a couple more, but don’t stop now! Keep fightin’, and stay fired up!! –Natsu Dragneel.’”

“The fuck?!” Sandy exclaimed. (Jessie said the same thing when Sheila read her rock.)

“What in the world is going on here?” Gonshiri questioned.

“Maybe it’s a scavenger hunt!” Spongebob perked up. “Whoever finds the golden coin is the winner! Pssst: last time I played it, I slipped coins in everyone’s pockets.” He whispered slyly.
“Everyone’s a winner!”

“I… have no idea.” Jessie rubbed his forehead. “All I can say is I have a headache.”

“Well, if this is all there is, maybe we should get back upstairs.” Sandy suggested. “We’ve got a whole country to run, after all.”

“Yes… I suppose we should get to that.” So they all left the chamber and returned upstairs. A holographic image of a teenage boy, with strawberry spiky hair, a black vest, and a white scarf, grinned and gave a thumbs-up at the kids. (End song.)

James’ Elementary School

All of the students that were under Bill Cipher’s trance were awakened. Their minds were in almost perfect order. “Look, Punio! They’re waking up!” Petuni exclaimed, seeing their eyes open as they moaned like zombies. “Sort of…”

“Then I guess Jessie and Spongebob finally defeated Bill.” The Puni Leader deduced. “Finally. I was getting sick of the Elder talking about him.”

“Ohhhh…” Emily Dickson regained her senses. Rupert beamed, watching his titaness-to-him mother sit up. “What… happened?”

“MOOOOoowoom!” Rupert cheered to the sky, though his tiny voice didn’t travel far. Emily heard his high-pitch squeak and looked down. Her tiny son was waving his arms, alongside an army of colorful ants. …Emily collapsed, needing to catch up on sleep. “Oh, Mom.”

White House

“Mr. President!” An aid rushed into the office after Jessie’s friends climbed out of the fireplace. “You have some visitors. They say they’re your parents.”

“Our parents?” Sandy gasped in surprise. “Are they outside?”

“Actually, they’re… right here.” He stepped aside to reveal Samuel and Jessica Sidney. The mother was infuriated.

“JESSIE, what the FUCK do you think you’re DOING?!” Jessica screamed. “We haven’t seen you in DAYS, th-then you’re in Washington, o-on the news, a-a-and this,” she gestured at James’ dead body, “a-a-a-and the-, en-d-d-d, mitu-widu??”

“What your mother’s trying to say is,” Sammy said, “this seems to be a huge misunderstanding. You don’t really think you can be U.S. President, do you?”

“But he did just save the country’s children from an evil triangle demon.” Sandy reasoned.

“And calmed everyone down when they started acting like idiots.” Gonshiri followed.

“My mom always talks about how she hates the whole ‘assimilation’ thing.” Timmy mentioned.

“President Jessie, I have finished drawing U.S. Constitution in crayon!” Chief Fingerpaint reported.

“I’m making a bill that states that all allergy medications have to be given to prescribed patients for free!” Richard exclaimed.
“I guess I’ll go help reorganize the military.” Leon moaned.

“You see, Mom and Dad, running a country is easy.” Jessie sat at the broken office desk and propped his feet upon it, tipping his cowboy hat back. “You just have to be nice to everyone and say a bunch of words that’ll get people to like you.”

Sammy and Jessica exchanged very concerned looks. “Well, since no one else is stepping in to be president,” Jessica scratched her head, “and everybody else is okay with it…”

“As long as you keep us around to give you advice.” Sammy stated.

“And you keep up with your schoolwork.” Jessica smiled. “Since Gallagher was transported here anyway, I guess it all works out.”

“We will have to call someone to bring our stuff. As well as, everyone else’s parents’ stuff. … They’re going to send me the bill, aren’t they?” Samuel sighed.

“Eh, we’ll put everyone’s taxes to decent use then.” Shelly said simply. “But how did you two drive here all the way from Virginia so fast?”

“Your mother is very reckless when she gets this way.” Sammy blushed.

“We might need to use those taxes to pay for all the cars I hit.” Jessica said.

The next day; KND Memorial Cemetery

Cheren wore a black suit and tie, which he found very itchy. The sky above was gray and cloudy. Hundreds of people were here. “Hey, Cuz.” Anthony greeted, walking past his older cousin/hero. It was the first time Cheren saw him wearing shoes, Michelle too. Even though he’s never been to one, Cheren didn’t like funerals. Everybody looked so bleak.

As he walked around, glimpsing at party guests, a familiar blue-haired girl with red eyes walked up to him, with her white winged kitten beside her. “Hello, Cheren.”

“Wendy?” Cheren said with surprise. “They said you made it back. Where did you end up, anyway?”

“Someplace… weird. But also amazing.” Wendy smiled. “I’ll tell you about it later. Mister Facilier told me what happened, so I felt I should come. I never knew my parents, so I can’t say what losing one is like, but…but I’ve always imagined. So… if you wanted someone to talk to, I don’t know if I could help, but…”

“Hm.” Cheren gave a smile. “I’ll keep that in mind, Wendy. And thanks for your help in Gravity Falls.”

“Heheh.” She blushed. “Um… see you later?”

“Count on it.” He winked, making Wendy blush. Cheren resumed looking at guests. Dipper and Mabel had come with Grunkle Stan, the twins smiling and waving at their leader. Cheren looked to the right, seeing an aquamarine-haired girl through a crowd of people. He eagerly shuffled his way through. “Sugar!”

Cheren stared up at her with shock—for one thing, he had to look up. “W-Wow, you’ve… grown.”
“Hm hm hm! Get used to it.” She smiled cutely, swaying her hip. She seemed to take delight in being many inches taller than him now, with hair in a ponytail. “My growing’s only just begun.”

“Heh heh. Someone will need a pardon from decommissioning. …” Cheren only just remembered. “Oh, right… your father, too.”

Sugar frowned. “Oh… to tell the truth, I can’t feel too upset about it.” She spoke honestly. “I never felt more happy in 12 years. My heart feels…” She smiled and touched her chest, “free. Symphonia is an amazing planet. I’m still glad I decided to come back by the time of your dad’s funeral.”

“I’m glad you’re here too, Sugar. It’s great to see how much you’ve… grown.” The idea was still weird to him. “How long until you’re at normal age?”

“About three years. Apocalypse pending.” She chuckled.

“Hah ha. Yeah.”

Cheren then saw April Goldenweek a short distance to the left, painting a canvas. He approached her. “Hey, April. Can I see?”

“Oh? …Sure. You’re April’s friend.” She spoke without looking at him. “April’s friends are my friends.”

“Well… all my friends are your friends, then.” He grinned. “Which means you now have hundreds of friends. Also, if you wanna join the KND, I’m all ears.” He was about to walk away.

“Cheren?” Mary spoke. Cheren turned to her. “Did you… really love your father?”

“…” He was confused by her question. Regardless, he looked down regretfully. “I didn’t spend as much time with him as I should have. I guess it’s… too late now, right?”

“…” Mary looked down. Cheren expected her to say something back, but she turned away without a word. It made Cheren wonder what her story was. He passed it off for now and kept walking.

All of Sector V and their parents were here, including Mr. York. Sector W7 was sitting on Mocha’s big head. Sector RZ and their parents—Lee Andrew had just encountered Wendy, and they looked happy to see each other for some reason. (Hope Haruka doesn’t get jealous.) Sector L, except Eric, was here, Emily Garley was with Sarah and Gary, Sector IC except for George. He saw Chris and Aurora with their mom, and Chris seemed upset that Maddy wasn’t here. Cheren had to wonder what all these people were doing.

He was approached by a short girl with messy orange hair. “Ci…Cindy?” He recognized his cousin.

“Hello, Cousin Cheren.” Her right eye twitched. “Mom said I should come and cry over Mom’s cousin’s husband. She says that I can’t scare anybody here. Can you tell me how to cry, Cheren?”
Cheren blushed. “I… can’t tell you what to cry about. You have to want to yourself.”

“That’s good. ‘Cause I don’t want to.” Cheren watched her go back to her parents. Aunt Mandy, the Pirate Emperor, was chugging down rum, standing beside her husband, Billy Cortix.

Cheren saw Nebula and Jerome at a table, where a Minish was sitting. When he got closer, he realized it was Minish KND Leader, Lenari. “Nebula? Why are you with Lenari?”

“Numbuh Hundred Acres has officially decided to sign the treaty.” Nebula confirmed. “We plan to do so after the funeral. He thought of attending the funeral as a symbol of our new friendship, or something like that.”

“What made you decide to sign, anyway?”

“The realization that the Minish KND’s been helping humans in secret for too long.” Lenari’s tiny voice stated. “Maybe it’s time we started helping each other for real. If humans can grab and throw Pikmin, maybe Minish can punch and bite like humans. To an extent. Anyway, consider the Minish KND your allies.”

Cheren smiled, albeit not understanding what he means. “Shouldn’t you be with your family?” Jerome questioned.

“Y-Yeah.” On his way to his family, Cheren glanced at Dimentia, who looked solemn as well. Cheren’s father did forgive Dimentia after everything she did, but now that he remembers, Dimentia’s brother had met a fate not long ago. Granted, Dimentio tried to destroy the universe, but no matter the reason, losing a relative wasn’t easy.

He then passed by Jagar King, whose head was down. When he looked up to glance at Cheren, the boy only scowled at him. “I’m sorry.” Jagar said. “After rethinking my actions, I… regret what I did.”

“Then I don’t expect you to do it again. We will find the Twenty Keys, Mr. Pines.” He walked forward-

Jagar grabbed his shoulder. “Cheren, I…I can’t stop any of you from completing this quest. But there’s something else you should know. I can’t actually confirm it, but I think my daughter, MaKayla’s the Gatekeeper. The person who’s meant to open the Time Gate after the Twenty Keys are found.”

“How much of this prophecy do you know?”

“Not much, actually. I know the Twenty Keys have to unlock the door, a Gatekeeper opens it—and a Groundskeeper cleans the passage to the New World. But with this in mind, Cheren, I…I want you to protect MaKayla. And… whatever you do, I really want you all to be careful.”

“…We will.” Cheren nodded. “But, Mr. King… what were you trying to say before? Who’s the demon that’s more powerful than I can imagine?”

“…” Jagar turned away. “I still can’t say it. I don’t know why, but…”

Cheren stared at him weirdly. He bypassed him and walked over to stand by his mother and siblings. Panini and the Drilovskys were close by. Grandfather was hovering beside Cole and Wuaya, who looked less than interested. Mandy, Billy, and Cindy joined close by. The Grim Reaper appeared with his son, Death the Kid, who Cheren knew was the Spirit KND leader. The Reaper put on reading glasses and opened a book. “In loving memory of Nigel Uno. A Kids Next Door legend, husband, father, and Demon King for three minutes. He saved de world from alien invaders, demons, and helped save de world from mutant fispeople and lunatic gods. Yah. He was a big deal. And because he’s a big deal is why we’ll always remember him. For every mortal, in reality, is immortal in spirit. So Nigel Uno will always be watching his family from de Spirit World above. His next biggest achievement: being the first demon-blood allowed in de Spirit World. Ha ha ha ha!”

Everyone stared blankly at Grim. …The Reaper closed his book and stared back. “We now condemn Nigel Uno to eternity. May Kids Next Door and mortals in general follow his example.”

The coffin slowly lowered into the grave. Once it was in, the hole would be filled with dirt. They watched every grain of gravel. The former KND’s legacy. The Demon Prince, Earth’s Best Operative. His story had come to an end. A new generation was here to fill the shoes. Chris, Aurora, and Cheren Uno would continue the legacy. They would do what Nigel Uno has done before: save the universe, no matter what evils.

King Andrew, his World Leaders, and Morgan Uno watched the funeral from a distant mountain. Andrew’s helmetless head looked down with remorse. One of the greatest operatives Chad ever trained. Andrew would never forget.

Tree of Beginning, later that day

Every Minish in the entire KND came to watch this, as well as Team Gallagher. Numbuh Eternal, Nebula, and Numbuh 3621, Cheren had lain the piece of paper on the ground, waiting for Lenari to finish inscribing his, erm, very large signature. Once he was finished, he stepped off, smirking proudly at the larger human leaders. Nebula picked the treaty up, then lifted Lenari on her finger to sit him on his tall throne. “As Supreme Leader of the Galactic Kids Next Door, I, Numbuh Eternal, am happy to welcome the Minish Kids Next Door to the Galactic Kid Council!”

“YAAAAAAAAAAYYYY!” The million screams were very high-pitched at their tiny sizes. Cheren felt his eardrums tingle.

“And to further commemorate this day,” Lenari announced, “we are honored to welcome the return of our ‘fair’ Princess Gonshiri, and long-lost princess, Lánshelly the Second!” He gestured to the bucket-crowned human princess, who bowed, while Gonshiri bowed from her shorter platform next to Lenari’s. “We will celebrate this occasion by welcoming new operatives to our ranks! Please, step up to the throne: Rupert Dickson, Timothy Gilligan, and Hikari Gilligan!”

The humans saw that a tiny strip was clear through the Minish crowds. Three miniature figures were leading an army of Pikmin, and the Gallagher kids knew who these tiny humans were. (I mean, he just announced them.) Princess Shelly picked up and placed Lenari on the ground this time, while Gonshiri jumped down herself. They both approached the humans, with Lenari holding a golden leaf paper, and Gonshiri some cups of green and purple ooze. “Just put your fingers in the green ink and mark your fingerprints on the leaf.” Lenari showed them the gold leaf’s writing, a seal of approval for new Minish operatives. “Then Princess Gonshiri will mark it with the purple ink. You’ll officially be Minish KND operatives.”

“All right!” Rupert happily dipped his index in the ink and stamped his fingerprint. “Come on, guys, don’t leave it hangin’!”

Timmy and Hikari exchanged contemplative glances, as though unsure if they wanted to do this. “Oh sure, why not.” Timmy shrugged. “I mean, we came this far.”

“Yeah! And Jessie looks super cute from down here.” Hikari looked dreamily at the President. She and Timothy marked their fingerprints.

“Well, Princess?” Lenari cocked a brow.

“Hmmmm.” The princess studied the humans, or rather Rupert, with mock suspicion. “I’m not sure if I want to. As good as their skills with Pikmin are, I feel they’re… lacking something of a true Minish.”

“The worst part of being tiny is looking at Shelly from down here,” Rupert explained simply, “we never realized how ugly she was until now, and every second makes us want to barf.”

“You are hereby approved.” Gonshiri smiled proudly, taking the purple ink and stamping the leaf.

“Numbuh Ounce, Numbuh TG, and Numbuh Kindergarten, WELCOME TO THE MINISH KIDS NEXT DOOR!” Lenari declared. “Whenever us Minish require the aid of humans, let us be assured we can always rely on our new operatives and allies!”

“YAAAAAAAAAAYY!”

“So, uh, Princess…” Rupert spoke sheepishly to Gonshiri. “Since I’m in your KND now, did you have any… plans comin’, or…”

“Oh, don’t even try with me, Loose Tooth.” Gonshiri retorted. “Besides, I do have plans. Don’t I, Lenny?”

“We have catchin’ up to do.” Lenari smiled and took Gonshiri’s hand.

The kids gaped. “Y-You mean you and the princess?…”

“Meetchu at the treetop later?” Lenari told Gonshiri smoothly.

“Don’t be late.” The princess smooched her bodyguard.

“I don’t want no humans kissing my sister, anyway.” Shelly folded her arms.

“No humans’ll wanna kiss you either, thead.” Jessie remarked.

“HE CUSSED!!” The Minish squeaked.

“He’s President, he can do that.” Sandy looked adorable.

“HAIL TO THE CHIEF!”

“We have, like, the biggest army right now.” Cheren said with a humored smile.

“I have the biggest army right now.” Nebula smirked, raising a brow.

“Good thing, too. After that crazy business… I doubt the World Government is going to rest.”

“We need to find the Twenty Keys soon.”

“You’re right. We got a few Lights, but I never heard a thing about the Darknesses. …I wonder if Nerehc knows anything.” Cheren said thoughtfully. “I haven’t seen him since we started this quest. I think we’ll schedule a meeting.”

Arctic Base Medical Wing
Everyone that was involved with President Jimmy was captured and arrested, including Gideon and the defeated Teen Ninjas. King Sandy, with his bones still broken, was being cared for in the medical wing. “Mr. Johnson, you have a visitor.” A nurse walked in and said. Sandy glanced over: a Minish woman was standing on the girl’s finger.

Sandy smiled weakly. “Thank you. You can set her on the table.”

The girl allowed the Minish to walk onto the bedside table, then left them alone. “Things didn’t work out, did it?” Lánshelly asked.

“It’s that moment when your two twin daughters beat the crap out of you that makes you realize.” King Sandy said. “I’m not getting younger, and they’re getting older.”

“You’re still 30, liven up.” The queen remarked. “You aren’t still planning to follow Andrew even after this, are you?”

Sandy sighed. “Chances are, Andrew isn’t gonna be happy with any of them, now that Jessie rules America. Since I was dumb enough to let them get away with it…”

Lánshelly leapt over onto Sandy’s bed, approaching his head. “Then this is your chance to be a real good father. Since King Andrew will only get more upset over this, you have to do the responsible thing and protect your daughters. Besides, this is what we always wanted, Sandy.” She smiled. “For our daughters to meet each other. Now they finally have, and they’re so close. We can all be a family again. Just you, me, and Shelly and Gonshiri.”

Sandy smiled down at the tiny woman. “You really missed having someone to scare all your bullies away.” The queen giggled at this. “I’d really love to, Dear, but I’m kind of… tied up at the moment.”

Queen Lánshelly snapped her fingers, summoning a team of Onions into the room. They went unnoticed by the guards. “I’ll sneak you out right under their noses.” The Pikmin landed and carried out several Minish-size jars of Minish Dust. “We’ll continue your treatment inside and take you straight back to Europe. But keep in mind that Shelly will be larger than you.” She smirked. “So she’ll keep you in line if you try anything.”

Sandy gave a defeated, humorous sigh. “At least Gonshiri can protect me. Hmmh… alright, Shelly. Let’s go home.” The Minish Queen grinned, using her bending to wave the green dust over her husband. He was zapped to size and carried inside the Onions by Pikmin.

Mariejoa

The World Leaders’ throne was currently empty. The Octogan was still resting in its golden pyramid. The 8-ball was flashing crazier than ever. The eye was going mad, as if excited. It saw the Fourth Light awaken. Just three more to go, and only 20 days of putting up with these retarded World Leaders! Then he would finally be free, finally! His eye flashed images of all the expectant faces, of Bill Cipher, Dimentio, Xehanort, Zeref, Yellow Diamond, the ‘8’ became a series of letters O R Q J O L Y H H Q J O L V K, before displaying a longer image of the shadow of a skull demon, surrounded by emerald flames. The image flashed the shadow of Ragaj Gnik before becoming a normal ‘8.’

Jinta’s theory about the Illuminati had some truth to it. Like, totally true. Well, my friends, we are officially halfway through the Seven Lights Saga. With four Lights collected, we can move on to the Art Saga, starring the Goldenweek cousins. Don’t get too comfortable, yet. We still have a long way to go!
That Dream Again

Chapter Summary

Mary wakes up from a nightmare of an art gallery. Sheila and April meet a strange girl in Picture City.

Hokay, guys, here begins the first chapter of the second half of Seven Lights, opening with the Art Saga! We’re gonna cool down from all the crazy action that happened last time; there’s plenty of time for crazier action later. A1Z26 Cipher. (Yes, Bill’s still trolling us. ;3)

Chapter 42: That Dream Again

Dark hallway

“Hello?” Mary Goldenweek called to no one. She was all alone in a dark, violet hallway, lined with many odd paintings. “Is anyone here? April?”

She walked forward, echoing the halls with the sound of her shoes against the solid floor. The corridor seemed to go on for infinity. She wondered where the exit was. It just seemed to grow darker and darker. Then, she reached the end. There was a painting hanging on the wall. It depicted a sleeping man, with lavender hair, a dark blue jacket, surrounded by blue roses, and holding one to his chest. “Who…Who’s that?”

“I have no idea.” Mary flinched. She turned around to see Mr. Dark. “I was hoping you did.”

Mary stepped backward, looking at him with fear. “You’re that… weird guy.”

“It took me a while to find your dreamscape.” Mr. Dark looked thoughtfully. “In fact, I couldn’t seem to find any trace of it. I had to persuade Darkrai to let me in during tonight’s round. I wanted to meet you again, Mary, because I want to know… how did you do it? How did your father figure it out?”

“You mean Alvin? My dad?”

Mr. Dark chuckled. “That’s not the one.”

“I don’t know who you’re talking about, then.”

“I’m sure your memory will kick in. Perhaps that gentleman behind you would know.” Mr. Dark pointed at the painting.

Mary stared at the lavender-haired portrait. No matter how long she looked, she couldn’t recognize him. She stared closer. The blue roses were pretty. …She felt a terrible pain in her head. She grabbed her head and shook, feeling agony.

She gasped and started awake in her bed. The guestroom bed she was given in April’s house at Water 7. “Good morning, Mary.” Her cousin greeted her with a smile in the doorway.

“April…”
“Dad made us breakfast. You always liked to sleep in a lot.” She made a light chuckle.

“April… I had that nightmare again.”

“Oh…” April frowned. “The one where you’re in the gallery?”

“Uh-huh. But this time, that weird guy was in it. He’s saying weird stuff.”

April noticed her solemn look. Her cousin had been having this dream a lot. Even before April moved, she had this dream, and it was always on her mind the next morning. “You know, I’ve been having that dream lately, too.” April admitted.

“You have?”

“Well, not as much. Most of the time, I dream I’m in an art city. Hmhm, it’s really fun.” She sported a smile. “Let’s go eat breakfast and go up to the treehouse. No one gets your mind off a bad dream better than W7.”

“Hehe… okay, April.” Mary grinned.

Hawaií; Tom’s Training Camp

Anthony and Shelly knelt over the ground and planted their hands to the hardened soil. With their Seismic Sense, they sensed and felt the earth around them. “Got a good grip?” Tom Taylor asked them. “Give me a sand pool, shrimplings.”

“Don’t call me a shrimpling, Redhead.” Shelly retorted.

“I’ve been told you were half-Minish, ‘shrimpling’ is a compliment.”

Shelly grabbed and twisted the ground, molding the black soft earth like a whirlpool that partly morphed into sand. Anthony struggled to twist his ground, then when he made a more forceful twist, he sent a sudden quake to hit Shelly. “Whoa!” She fell over.

“No fighting each other.” Tom stated.

“Her chi keeps gettin’ in the way o’ mine!” Anthony accused.

“That’s not even possible, is it?” Shelly argued.

Gonshiri was sitting a few feet away, reading a book. “According to this, if two same-type benders are bending in the same area, their chi will tend to mix one way or another. Mostly if you’re in a battle.”

“I don’t get why I need to learn sandbending if the Quartzites can do it.” Anthony responded.

“It’s not about whether you actually master it or not, it’s the experience.” Gedra replied, sitting on his own Minish-size pillar, which was three-fourths of Tom’s height. “The Four Families learn from each other to improve their own strengths. The Granites are masters in Seismic Sense, and the Quartzites are masters at breaking big areas of ground at once. (Which requires Seismic Sense.) And the Sovites, not that this guy is a good example, teach you all how to take heat.”

“I don’t get why I need to learn sandbending if the Quartzites can do it.” Anthony responded.

“What about the other family, where’re they in all the fun?” Shelly asked, lying on the ground for rest.

“The Hornfels tell you how to be smart. Unfortunately, we don’t have any clue who the current family is. But don’t worry, ‘soon as they turn up, we’re puttin’ their kid through this training, too. Now come on, back to work!’ Gedra stomped his pillar into the ground, shaking the earth as all three earthbenders fell on their fronts.

“Hey Gonshiri, you wouldn’t happen to know whatever’s at the bottom of the Beginning Tree, would you?” Shelly inquired.

“They never actually let me down in that area, so I can’t be certain.” The princess replied. “But if the Hornfels ever turn up, perhaps we’ll have our answer.”

Dickson Household

“You told me not to treat him like an ant.” Chad spoke mockingly, folding his hands behind his head as he sat on the couch with an arrogant air. “You told me not to drop him in the woods. And what happened after all of that ‘bad’ treatment? He joined the Kids Next Door.”

“The Minish Kids Next Door.” Emily Dickson corrected, dusting off the ceiling in her ghost form. “Chad, how can you be okay with our ant-size son going on dangerous expeditions? You heard him, he almost got eaten twice.”

“And he told us that excitedly. Emily, this is exactly the kind of training Rupert needs, to fight monsters that are bigger than him, not shirk away in the face of dangers or hardships. If turning small doesn’t force a person to learn all those things, I’m not sure what will.”

“But Chad, didn’t you tell me the whole point of him becoming stronger was to catch up with the other kids? Especially with this Apocalypse thing coming up? Even if he’s the greatest Pikmin Master ever, he’s still sacrificing 36 inches of strength just to do this. He’s more vulnerable than ever.”

“Yeah, but it’s sounding to me like it works. It’s not just about being as strong as the other kids, it’s having a way to protect himself or help other kids out. Besides, he’s learning survivor skills in dangerous environments, physical endurance, he spent a couple days in an arctic tundra, and he’s learnin’ how to fight kids that’re 50 times his size. We might be able to sweep him up in one stroke, but every minute he spends with those Minish is making him stronger, Emily. I know it.”

Distant Spring

“Rupert, Timothy, Hikari,” Sappo began, his arms folded behind his head in relaxation, “it is of the greatest honor to have taught the first three human Minish operatives. You now have full permission to use our secret swimming pools.”

“This one is our absolute favoritest!” Gibli said.

The Minish twins, Timmy, and Hikari enjoyed the soul-soothing warmth of this spring. Minish were roaming everywhere in this region of pools and springs, playing games with Pikmin or simply relaxing. “Hey, where is Rupert?” Timothy asked.

The Dickson boy was wearing orange swimtrunks as he lay on his front on the ground. He was near the cliff edge and staring dreamily. “You know what the best part about Small World is?”

Beyond this cliff was a regular-size human hot spring. Slim, tall, and beautiful Japanese girls were giggling and splashing each other, wearing the cutest bikinis Rupert’s ever seen. “Ho, boy.” Sappo rolled his eyes.
“Rupert, you know those girls are twice your age, right?” Timmy asked. “Some of them could even be Teen Ninjas.”

“That doesn’t mean I can’t admire how shiny they are.”

Sappo climbed up onto the cliff and approached Rupert, putting a hand on his shoulder. “Listen, Rupert, I just want you to know, you aren’t alone in this. Hundreds of Minish become curious about humans of the opposite gender, I myself once pondered the texture of their bodies. But the more Minish think about human girls, they draw away from Minish girls. And do ya know what happens then? The girls step on ‘em when the Minish try to go up and talk.”

“But I’m a human.” Rupert reminded. “And didn’t Queen Lánshelly marry a human? That’s why the princess is half-human?”

“She’s the queen, she can get whoever she wants! I’m just sayin’, it’s not a crime to stare at girls, but if there’s a size difference, it can become a bad habit, then you’ll get killed.”

“I guess you’re right. Although I kinda wanna bounce on those—”

“Get down.” Sappo grabbed the boy and pushed him back into the spring with Timmy and Hikari.

“Good thing I don’t like girls, yet.” Timmy mentioned. “And I’m even Japanese.”

“All Rupert really wants to be is someone who gets to see a giant—OW!” Hikari was kicked in the shin by Timmy before she could say more.

“Speaking of the princess, why did Shelly’s dad try to kidnap her, again?” Rupert asked.

“Because she’s a plantbender who can control living and dead plants!” Gibli splashed.

“And that’s a rare thing?”

“Yep.” Sappo replied casually, sipping a green juice from a martini glass. “Apparently, he wanted to use her to find some ‘God Fruit.’ ‘Course, even if the princess could bring it to life, they have no idea where the original fruit was grown. In fact, nobody does!” Sappo smiled proudly. “No one except Lenari and his closest friends.”

“That would be us!” Gibli beamed.

“SSSH!” Sappo clamped her mouth shut.

“Wait, you mean you guys know where it is?” Timothy asked.

Sappo stared with annoyance and removed his hand from Gibli’s mouth. “Fine, we know where it is. But no one else can ever know, especially the princess, otherwise she’ll be more of a target.”

“It’s okay, Sappo!” Gibli spoke positively. “The place it’s hidden is totally chi-blocked for non-Pikmin, and it has a bunch of monsters and traps protecting it!”

“Yeah, but any explorer that was gutsy enough would brave it.” Sappo smirked. “Not just for a lousy dead fruit. You humans probly don’t know the story of Malarko, but the short version is, he’s a Minish who built up an Army of a Thousand Pikmin. And all of their Onions are in the same hiding place.”

“Wait, for real?!!” Rupert spoke excitedly. “The Malarko that started the Minish KND?”
“Wait, you know about him? Man, you really HAVE been training.” Sappo chuckled. “Look, Ruppy, don’t get your hopes up, only members or friends of Malarko’s family can wake up those Pikmin. You’d be exhausting yourself for nothing.”

“I know that, but…” Rupert smiled in deepest thought, “but what if we ended up making a BIGGER army? We already have close to 500 Pikmin, don’t we?”

“Rupert, are we really gonna try and get one thousand Pikmin?” Timmy asked.

“Come on, it isn’t really THAT hard. On average, we make more Pikmin than we lose. I don’t know math, so I don’t know, but, come on, don’t you guys wanna try it?”

“I wonder if Jessie would think my colorful Pikmin army is pretty?” Hikari spoke dreamily. “Do you think he would make me a general?”

“Y’know, I’ve been seeing a lot of you guys with those Brown Pikmin.” Rupert mentioned. “Where can we find those?”

“Usually in marshlands.” Sappo sipped his juice. “Especially in the Zingers’ Hive. ‘Fact, Lenari said we’re running short on Premium Honey, if you guys were desperate enough…”

“Zingers’ Hive? Is that like a beehive or something?”

“You called it.”

Rupert looked down contemplatively. He really didn’t like bees, always stinging him when he went camping, getting his arms and face swollen all over. A sting at this size would make him explode. “Maybe we shouldn’t…”

“There’s the Rupert I know and love.” Timmy sighed in relief.

“It isn’t that bad.” Sappo said. “I mean, bees usually don’t sting anyone that’s smaller than them.”

“If you guys did it, we would tell you where the Pikmin Army is-!”

“GIBLI!” Sappo shut his sister’s mouth again. “Ehhh… all right. If you got outta that place with enough honey, we’ll let you in on the secret.”

Rupert bore a new thoughtful look on his face. Timmy and Hikari noticed it, silently pleading him not to take it. “Okay, we’ll do it!” His friends sank in the steaming tub. (“I-I-I wa-a-ant sixty-y bu-u-u-ucks.” Timmy gurgled.)

“On’nanoko, rukkusu, kōzan ga fuyū shite imasu!”

Rupert’s ears perked at the Japanese girls’ voices. “Right after I try to decipher what that one girl said!” He climbed up the cliff to once again overview the humans’ spring.

Uno Household

Cheren and MaKayla gazed longingly at the former’s dresser mirror. “This is really your only way of talking to him?” Kayla asked.

“It’s the most obvious way. But I think we can also get Mr. Facilier to open a portal.” Cheren held his left hand out to lightly tap the glass with his fingernail. It made quiet, brief ding sounds with each tap. …The kids gasped: the mirror spun into a vortex. “Oh, I guess he’s home! Let’s go in, Kayla!” They locked hands and jumped up onto the desk, through the portal.
After exiting the sub-dimension, the two carefully stepped off the dresser onto the floor. “Nerehc!” Cheren beamed. His Negative was passed out on his front on the bed, head rolled away from them. His red jacket was off, exposing his black T-shirt.

Nerehc turned his head to look at them with one eye. “I, have had, the worst, week.”

“I had a bad week, too, so one of ours must be better.” Cheren replied as they grinned blushingly. “What’ve you been through?”

“Well, it started when I just wanted to walk over to your world to meet you. So now that we’re finally meeting, please tell me you’ve been making progress with this whole thing.”

“Well, taking Kayla, Sheila, Fybi, and Jessie’s stories into account, we now have four Lights.” Cheren counted up fingers. “What about you guys, Nerehc? Any word on the Thirteen Darknesses?”

“Actually, yes. We found two Darknesses.” The two kids exchanged smiles. “But we had some ‘help.’” Nerehc kicked himself out of bed. “Some bitch possessed my body and got us to work with her. She’s also looking for the Demon Saints.”

“The Demon Saints?” Cheren questioned.

“A title given to powerful and threatening demons.” Kayla confirmed. “I came across the term a few times. Although I don’t think the Demon Kings ever had it.”

“So, what else is going on with you?” asked Nerehc.

“Aside from getting my butt kicked by Aunt Morgan and turning into a Rainbow Monkey, nothing much’s happened.” Cheren informed.

“Speaking of the Demon Kings,” MaKayla mentioned, “I wanted to talk with you about your Demon State, Cheren.”

“That’s out of nowhere.”

“I wanted to bring it up for a while. I know you lose control because of it.”

“How much does your timebending tell you?”

“A hell of a lot.” She smiled proudly. “I clearly have to know a lot of things about you. Having 20 girlfriends gives you a lot to think about, clearly.”

Cheren turned a hot pink. “You better fuckin’-”

“I’m kidding, but it’s written all over your face. Cheren, let me ask you something: how often do you go into Demon State?”

Cheren returned to normal peach color and looked down. “It happens when I’m really angry, or when I’m in danger. Of course, I get really angry when I’m in danger, so that’s… And when I go in Demon State, I can never remember what I did during that, and I still feel really angry after it’s done…”

“Can you name a few times?”

“Well, you probably know that thing with Doflamingo, but I remember back in Termina—why are we even talking about this?!” Cheren shouted all of a sudden. “We completely changed the subject!
Nerehc was saying some person is looking for the Demon Saints!"

“And by extension, the Demon Kings, then by extension, you two.” Kayla reminded. “Cheren, the truth is, I saw an event like this coming back when Clockwork was inside me. I didn’t know when it would happen, but this sounds like it. Cheren, you’re upset and ashamed about your Demon State because you can’t control it. But you need to learn how to control it if you wanna protect it from being stolen.”

“And how am I supposed to learn to control it?”

“Termina.” Nerehc said out of nowhere. “A while ago, these little black alien things told me to take you to Termina. Find something called the ‘Ocarina of Time’?”

Fi leapt out of Cheren’s sword in an excited fashion. “Master Cheren, I could not help but overhear, but I have important information regarding this topic.”

“I’ll scold you for eavesdropping, but let it loose.”

“The Ocarina of Time is a very sacred and important relic that Link possessed in one of his eras. It granted the hero the ability to control time. Its mystic songs could perform miracles, ranging from manipulating times of days or turning back time itself.”

“Holy cow, Link had that??”

“Affirmative. But after the passing of that incarnation, the ocarina was taken by the gods into the Spirit World. I am unsure of the location, but Master, be mindful that this form of Link passed away in Termina Earth.”

“And I have an idea where.” MaKayla said. “Clockwork pointed it out to me when I had this vision about you. It’s an ancient temple that existed in the DunBroch Ruins—”

“DUNBROCH?!” Cheren jumped with joy. “Halright, we can visit Merida while we’re there!”

“Who’s Merida?” Nerehc asked.

“Another girl he thinks about in his sleep-” Cheren stomped MaKayla’s foot, blushing hotly.

“Uh, hehe…” Cheren chuckled. “Not even just her, actually, I can visit Termina Sector V and everything. I wonder if the Apocalypse would affect them, too…” His look turned solemn.

“I’ll go with you guys.” Nerehc stated. “There’s something we need the ocarina for.”

“You can tell us the details on the way.” Cheren appointed. “Let’s see if the Dimension Transportifier in Father’s mansion still works.” With that, the three of them jumped through the mirror back to the Posiverse.

Sector W7 Treehouse

“You use the Stylus to move him around.” Apis explained, moving the tip of said Stylus around the bottom DS screen. Link was following its movements.

“Is that a magic wand?” Mary asked, sitting on the couch and watching her. Aeincha was standing on Mary’s blonde hair and combing it.

“Not really.” Apis laughed. “It’s just a technology that they have. I don’t know how it works, I just love going around killing demons.”
“Does that little guy know you’re controlling him?”

“If Wreck-It Ralph is true to its word, then maybe. Don’t your parents let you play videogames?”

“Not really. My parents are rich!” Mary grinned. “They buy me classy stuff and make me do ‘fine arts’ stuff. They let me have lots of fun, though! Maybe they would buy me a game if I asked…”

“You’re rich, Mary?” Aeincha asked. “April, doesn’t that make you rich?”

“If our grandpa didn’t favor Uncle Alvin more over my dad, I would be.” April replied, painting a canvas of Mary and Toon Link. The two were staring curiously at each other, noting their strikingly similar appearance. April then got the idea to make Mary Cheren’s long-lost cousin.

Aeincha saw Chimney walk in from the hallways, carrying a bulletin board. “Hey, Chimney, Mary’s parents are rich! If you asked her, she could buy you stuff for your train!”

“Yeah-yeah, I don’t believe it and neither should you.” Chimney set the board on its legs and unrolled it. “ALL EYES UP HERE, on’nanokos!” The six girls and rabbit faced her. “We got an important update regarding our ultimate quest!” Using a stick, she pointed at the pictures on the board. “According to Cheren-san’s info’mation, we now got FOUR of the Seven Lights. Their names are,” she pointed at Sheila’s image at the top, “Sheila-chan from Sector V, Suki-chan from Sector IC, Fybi-chan from Sector W, and Jessie-kun from Gallagher School. The rest of them, we still dunno.” She pointed at three shadows. “But judging by the information, it’s obvious: the Seven Lights are IN THE KND!”

“Suki and Jessie are not operatives.” (“Yom-yom.”) The friends except Mary chorused.

“That’s not important! There’s a jillion sectors in the KND, so I got this to narrow it down:” Chimney flipped the page, “Behold, the current Top 10 sectors.”

1. Sector V
2. Sector DR (defected)
3. Sector W
4. Sector IC
5. Sector Q
6. KND Bike Hub
7. Sector L
8. Sector JP
9. Sector KB
10. Sector RZ

“Thus far, some of these sectors has had either a Light or a Firstborn Guardian. Maybe both. We can assume that the other sectors will have one or the other. Even Sector DR had Sugar, Melody-chan will probly be Manaphy’s Guardian, that Garley chick will have Uxie, so let’s pretend she works for Bike Hub. AND WE’RE NUMBER 2 ON THE LIST!” she cheered. “WE TOTALLY HAVE A FIRSTBORN GUARDIAN IN OUR SECTOR!”

“You got a little off track.” Aisa sweatdropped. “None of our parents are Firstborn, so one of us must be a Light.”

“You do make a lot of sense though, Chimney.” Mocha complimented. “I didn’t think you were that smart!”
“Now:” Chimney spoke authoritatively, “which one of you girls is hiding a crazy superpower?!” She ran up to Mary and glared at Aeincha atop her head, “I’m lookin’ at you, Aeinchan.”

The Lilliputian blushed. “It would be pretty cool if I was. But then I would have a big responsibility, so…”

“Mary, I don’t remember,” Aisa spoke up, “did you come to Water 7 by yourself or are your parents in town?”

“I came myself.” Mary smiled. “They wanted to come, but I promised I was a big girl now and I could do it! Besides, Uncle Galdino was waiting at the airport for me.”

“Sounds like an awful long way to travel.” Apis said. (“Oi, what about my thing??” Chimney shouted.) “What do your parents look like, anyway?”

“I have a picture of them!” Mary excitedly reached into her briefcase. “Here you go!”

Mary showed them a photo: it depicted herself, facing the camera and smiling with her parents. Her mother and father both had brown hair; the mother’s was short and in a ponytail. Father had black eyes and Mother had red eyes, and both wore fancy attire. “That’s them, huh?” Aisa said.

“Yes!” Mary beamed. “Father is April’s father’s brother! We’re cousins, but we’re like sisters!”

Apis made a frown. “That’s weird.”

“What?”

“Your parents don’t look a thing like you. I mean, most kids you see have something that resembles their parents, but you don’t look like them at all except for skin color.”

“April doesn’t look like her dad, either.” Aeincha spoke with a bubbly face. “Maybe it’s a family thing!” (“Gyom-gyom!”)

“If you ask me, she was adopted.” Chimney commented. “All annoying kids were adopted.”

“Like you, Chimney?” Mocha asked.

“NO WAY! Kokoro’s mermaid veins run within me!”

“I read an article online that said 57% of orphans have blonde hair.” Apis mentioned. “It also said that 80% of blondes are rich. Coincidence, maybe?”

“Really?” Chimney rubbed her chin. “Well, I need to ask Granny Kokoro if we have a few hundred —YOU’RE MISSING THE POINT!” She shook back to focus. “We just established that one o’ you girls is a Seven Lights. Now which one o’ you is it?!”

“How could we even tell?” April asked, painting a new picture of Chimney with a big brain. “Do we have to wait for a spirit guide to come into our… yaaaaaawn, mind?”

“Maybe I’m a Light.” Apis spoke with a smile. “I am a girl of God, after all.”

“If anyone, it’s Chimney.” Mocha said. “She’s got the most personality of all of us. And she really loves us.”

“Yaaaaaawn, that was my vote, too.” April’s eyes were getting heavy.
“Nnnn? What if I am?” Chimney spoke thoughtfully. “I already got a big responsibility raisin’ YOU girls. And I got the best train in the universe!” Her eyes were sparkly.

“That’s gotta be it, Chimney’s the Light!” Aeincha agreed.

“I guess you can rule me out, since there’s already a Nimbi.” Aisa sighed, upside-down on the couch with her legs against the backrest.

“Yaaaaaawn-”

April rested her paint on a stool and rubbed her eyes. “Sorry, Chimney. I guess I didn’t get much sleep last night. I’m gonna lay down, maybe then I’ll feel more awake.”

“Bleh, you teenagers.” Chimney mocked. “Always wantin’ ta sleep.”

Mary sat up and watched her cousin trek down the hallway slowly. She got up off the couch and fast-walked after her. “April?” The girl in question entered her art gallery-style room, took off her shoes, hat, and cloud-pattern jacket, and climbed into bed. “April, you aren’t sick, are you?”

“No, Mary, I’m just a little drowsy today.” she replied with a smile, feeling both humored and grateful at her cousin’s concern. “I’ll take a short nap, then we’ll play some games.”

April rolled onto her side with one arm beside her. Mary stared at her cousin with worry. She wondered if she would have the same nightmare about the art gallery again, or if that weird guy would be in her dream. “Wake up soon…” she told April before walking back to the living room.

Hall of Doors

“I am sleeping way too much for my own health.” Sheila stated as she progressed alongside the river. “Me poor legs are growin’ stiff as a newborn. Man, why’d I get stuck with all this Dream World hoo-ha? Why can’t I go on pirate adventures with me mates like we were already doing? Darn blokes know they need me.”

Sheila stared at the next portal, labeled Picture City. It was represented by a bright wall of splattered colors. “Sigh… goin’ without Murfy or Globo’s gonna be boring. I still like havin’ mates to travel with, even if some of them ruin the surprises. Well, I guess I’ve got me a brain to paint up for ol’ Rayman. Blimey, I’m not good at art.” With that, she dove into the portal. (Play “Picture City” from Rayman.)

Stage 50: Picture City

Mission: Create a brain for Rayman.

Sheila was dropped on a giant pink eraser that seemed to be suspended hundreds of meters in the air. A giant pen stuck out from the bottom, and the eraser felt slippery with ink. The sky was wavy with rainbow colors of a tint hue, and the buildings that towered in the distance were designed like pencils, pens, paintbrushes, whatever particular form of art they were made for. To get across this chasm, Sheila had to bounce across a series of blue, sparkly erasers, which were as bouncy as trampolines. Pan Pirates – alien pirates that were riding flying frying pans – appeared out of thin air and chased Sheila from behind. More appeared as she progressed, but she saw a lower eraser and dropped to it, letting the aliens fly over. With that, she could bounce back up and punch Light
Spheres at them from behind.

Sheila bounced in place on the last blue eraser as she faced a garden of giant pencils, whose tips were sharp and deadly. Sheila fired rounds of Light Spheres to wittle the pencils down, so she could safely jump across their round tips. Sheila made it to and took land on a field of canvases, surrounded by puddles of colorful paint. The canvases had a variety of miscellaneous paintings, but Sheila paid them no mind as she maneuvered around the maze of canvases. After she made it out on the other side, Sheila discovered the artist responsible:

April Goldenweek was standing before a canvas and painting a swirly ink road. “Hmmm… I don’t remember painting those cages of pink things.” April observed. “A great addition, however. It implies sadness in fun.”

“Blimey, April!” Sheila perked in surprise. “This is YOUR dream?”

“Chimney?” April turned around. “Oh, Sheila, it’s you. This is a surprise.”

“Yeh, ‘cause you and I are such close pals. April, Ah need you to make me a brain.”

“I already had an order for Chimney, but I’ll make time for you.”

“Not me, some bloke with rabbit ears!”

“Panini?”

“Not HER, some bloke with- sigh…” Sheila face-palmed. “I dunno, just make a brain.”

“I’ll need some special material to make a quality brain. Come with me to the city and I’ll show you.” April resumed painting her swirly ink road. Sheila gaped when the empty chasm before them spawned a real, life-size fortress made of dark ink. “After you?” April inquired.

“YAAAAHHOOOO!” Sheila surfed across the slippery ink, down a steep hill, up a ramp, and she flew high into the air, across the chasm, and onto a straight path leading into the fortress. Sheila drifted leftward and flew up a ramp along the wall, letting some Pan Pirates fly underneath her before landing back on, sliding right, and up another ramp, seeing April Goldenweek slide along a higher road. After Sheila landed, she followed a wildly snaky road, which would then bring her to an outside road with the bottomless chasm on either side. Sheila jumped each Pan Pirate that poofed out of nowhere, swung a Purple Lum over a ledge, then landed on an ink slide that slid down rightward, then curved up with a sudden turn back left.

The world spun above Sheila as she slid around a sidewards spiral of the slide, the same time April was sliding on a parallel segment in the opposite direction. During her dizziness, Sheila was able to spot and punch an Electoon cage, then the two roads met up as she and April locked hands and leaped off of the edge while spinning like a wheel. “Hit the targets, Sheila!” April passed her some yellow paint, she herself used blue paint, hitting the respective same-color targets suspended along their midair path. They set foot on the edge to Picture City, able to claim another Electoon cage that was free from a Colors Trap (a forcefield of color).

The buildings of Picture City looked even taller up close. The sirens of police rang throughout the air, and cars that were shaped like 3-D protractors drove everywhere. Sheila and April stood on a ledge and overlooked a street of speeding cars, so they knew it’d be dangerous to fall down. April indicated the blank white path along the right side of a building, then she showed Sheila a roll of blue painter’s tape on a building that was across the street from the previous. April and Sheila ventured rightward along their current ledge, which had yellow and orange splotches of paint along the ground. A Hoodstormer (a small Hoodlum with a cannon and propeller) was flying over the end of the path, shooting these splotches onto the ground.

Splatoon Squids surfed along these splotches and tried to knock Sheila and April off their feet. Sheila punched Light Spheres at the squids while April hurriedly dipped white-out over the puddles, until the girls made it to the Hoodstormer. There was a canvas stationed on a platform to the left, which April jumped to to paint a barrier blocking the Hoodstormer. It could no longer shoot at them, but Sheila could send Light Spheres around to attack it. The Hoodlum was destroyed, and it dropped a Swing Suit Power Can. The girls rushed back to the painter’s tape as Sheila punched a grappable fist, allowing her to pull and unravel the tape into a bridge.

April could cross the tape and enter a small room where a window could view the white path along the next building. April painted a platform course on the window, and a real course appeared alongside the building. April held onto Sheila as she swung a Purple Lum with the still-active Swing Suit, landing on the path. Doomtoons dropped down from above and lunged at the girls with big teeth, which Sheila gladly punched. April took interest in how their bodies flew away, leaving only their eyes bouncing around. The girls Wall Jumped between two vertical platforms to reach a higher point. The girls bounced the buttons of some giant pens to cross the street, then they touched a Shrink Fairy over the last pen as Sheila floated herself and April to land on a standable ledge of a windowsill.

The building they were on was black and white in a lot of misc. areas, namely the windows, which had inverted colors. The miniaturized girls crossed the top sills of two windows, then dropped to the bottom sill of the third one as the top sill was flat. Sheila had to punch Light Spheres to determine if the sides of windows were solid, or if the floors were standable. For some windows, they could climb onto the middle strip to the top strip, or jump to the middle of the next window—it became a baffling 2-D maze. The route ended at a window that was sealed on all other ends, but the girls could enter the blank white space inside.

There was a (giant to them) paintbrush dipped into a can of black paint, which April jumped up to grab the end of. The girls were navigating another maze, but with everything completely white, April had to paint the ground and walls with black paint as they progressed. April walked ahead and revealed holes they had to jump and a Wall Jump area in one part. There was an Electoon cage in the up-left direction from a ledge, and April revealed a secret staircase that Sheila could climb to break the cage. The Blank Route was steadily leading downward, and they could see an exit below. April dropped the paintbrush as they entered the tiny hole, and a Shrink Fairy poofed them to normal on the other side.

They were in a sewer area in which the walls and ceiling were wooden with ink splotches, and the river below was pitch-black ink. The flat tops of colorful pencils were rising up and down, and since Sheila had no intention of getting her feet inky, she jumped the pencils when they were risen. They rested on a small, steady eraser platform, where a one-eyed ball was suspended above it, with colors of a Yin-yang symbol. Sheila hit the Yin-yang and caught it when it fell. She noticed a walkway along the wall above the entrance they just came from, so Sheila carried the ball across the bobbing pencils, and once under the path, she released the ball to bounce in place.

Sheila used the Yin-yang as a foothold to jump up onto the walkway, then cross it to a set of parallel walls with an Electoon cage on top. Since they were too far to Wall Jump, Sheila sent a Light Sphere to bounce up between and hit the cage. She turned back—Deathtoons appeared along the path, Sheila jumped the insta-kill creatures hastily. She made it back to April, seeing the Yin-yang respawned above the safe platform, so the two carried it across the next set of pencils. April used it to jump up to a floating platform with a canvas, which she used to paint more pencils across the barren area of ink between them and an eraser course. The duo crossed to the erasers, and saw the next route crossed over giant pencils that bobbed up-and-down under a short ceiling with giant pushpins.

The girls had to crouch to avoid the pins, but their awkward position made it difficult to jump. April’s hat got stuck to a pin, so she quickly pulled it off before the pencil sank. The girls made it to a floating pencil-sharpener, which carried them up a shaft. They had to dodge left and right to avoid pushpins in either wall, then they could step off at the top. Deathtoons were helicopter-flying over a field of blue Bouncerasers, so the girls took care to maneuver around or under the monsters. They stopped on a safe eraser, which had no other route to follow, only two cups of red and blue paint. “These should help your tail out.” April said as she dipped two brushes in and colored Sheila’s tail with both paints. “Now you’ll be able to fly.”

Sheila rapidly spun her tail propeller and hovered in the air, not feeling the need to come down at all. “Strewth! Ay’ve been really mad since me tail got hurt during that Minish Door jumbo, I can’t actually do much besides glide anymore!”

“Was that the excuse the writers put?”

“Yep.” Sheila grabbed April by the hands and flew them over the sea of ink. “That spinning’s gonna shake the paint off, though, grab some Paintballs on the way.” April cautioned. Sheila flew a little off course when she saw an Electoon cage in the distance. She whirled and punched a large Light Sphere to break it from afar, then grabbed April’s other hand again and quickly redirected toward the sewer tunnel.

She grabbed a Paintball just before her flight wore off. April kept her legs bent as they flew in the tunnel, close to the inky river that threatened to discolor her shoes. Walls of floating trays with needles blocked their path, but Sheila could punch through the spiked Yin-yangs within the gaps to fly through. Sheila kept hitting the Paintballs, narrowly avoiding the falling giant pencils as the tunnel shifted right. They exited into sunlight as the artistic buildings towered over them again. The flight was about to wear off, so Sheila quickly floated them onto a sidewalk on the left.

The roads around here were closed, as there were big splotches of colorful paint around the streets and buildings. “Splatoons.” April informed. “They like to engage in Color Wars and mess up the town.”

“Why, what’re they trying to do?”

“Nothing. They have no real objective at all. Just pointless gang wars.”

The two explored the streets as Splat Squids jumped in and out of their respective colors, either in place or along paths of puddles. Sheila punched and destroyed the squids on their way to a cliffside, which had a white background and made of very intricate black textures. The girls were able to climb textures that looked like combs, while the textures that were big splotches were flat and would cause them to slip and fall. There were hidden numbers blended in with the textures, like 9, 14, 19, 5, and 3. Sheila and April stepped off on a safe foothold and viewed a blank white area of the cliff. Colorful flowers grew on this ledge, and there was a table with black paint and a canvas. April picked up one of the flowers, dipped it in the paint, and began stamping the texture of the petals around the canvas.

Those petal textures appeared along the blankness, and the girls could keep climbing along. There were other numbers and some letters; in order, Sheila saw they were 20, 15, 18, 23, G, 15, 14, 12, 25, B, 1, 18, 5, 16, 21, 18, 5, 12, 25, 8, 21, 13, 1, 14. A Hoodboom was chucking paint bombs at them from his vantage point, and with those areas of texture unusable, the girls had to either maneuver around or climb fast. The duo finally made it onto the Hoodboom’s cliff, and Sheila seized the chance to punch and destroy the creature. This area had green and yellow paint Splatoon splatters lain around, and appeared to be the rooftop of a building with drums and a short water tower. The Hoodboom dropped a Crazy Shoe, so Sheila and April touched it to shrink down and drive one of their shoes like bumper cars.

When the girls drove over the different paint puddles, the color absorbed into their shoes, and they could push a button to sink into the puddles and maneuver within their dimension. Sheila absorbed enough yellow paint to surf her way up a stairway of tall drums, in which the top parts were yellow, then got inside a water tower to break an Electoon cage inside. Sheila and April then absorbed green paint as they slid down a slope of the color, having to submerge every so often when Hoodmongers stood in their way. At the bottom of the slope, they had to submerge and go up the painted wall, then the girls began their drive over the rooftops.

They absorbed some magenta paint and submerged in the color to drive over the edge and down the building’s side, and from there jump to an eraser platform with same-color paint, then to the next building. They absorbed blue paint next and drove over some midair erasers with pushpins sticking out. Since the pins were covered with paint, they could submerge and swim within the spikes, having to surface and absorb more before the power wore off. They then drove and bounced across Bouncerasers, which bounced them to blue paint on the ceiling, so they could submerge inside and go over the spikes.

They dropped off on a street and drove their Crazy Shoes to a backstreet area. The place was totally drenched in paint: Splatoons were running amuck, children wearing average clothes and glasses. They were mindlessly blasting paint guns, throwing paint bombs, and swinging giant paintbrushes to paint up the place. “Blimey, you weren’t jokin’ about these drunks. How d’ya propose we beat them, April?” Sheila asked.

The girl in question noticed hers and Sheila’s other shoes driving around, covered in neon paint as they changed colors every few seconds. April boosted her shoe and sped up to her crazy one when it was close to a magenta Splatoon. She rammed the shoe and exploded some yellow paint over the Splatoon, causing the kid to tremble and explode. “Like that.”

Sheila drove into an alleyway to find a Splatoon wielding two brushes of blue paint to whip his color across the walls. Sheila bypassed the kid and found her Crazy Sandal was taking cover in the alley corner, and the sandal drove back the opposite way when she appeared. She chased it to the kid, and when her shoe lit magenta, she rammed and exploded the paint on him. April was still in the main square, aiming to take down a green Splatoon with a big paintbrush. She rammed her Crazy Shoe to explode blue paint and destroy her. The last two kids were up on the roofs, so Sheila absorbed some blue paint, while April absorbed yellow paint to surf up those colored walls. A yellow Splatoon was throwing grenades below from his roof, and Sheila needed some expert maneuvering to trick her Crazy Sandal into jumping to his platform. Once it finally did, she surfed over to join it and exploded orange paint on the Splatoon.

April chased her Crazy Shoe across a long orange path, where Splat Squids surfed over from the opposite end. The last, orange Splatoon was there, but now it was time for him to disappear, because after April was there and done, she and Sheila—“Ugh, I can’t get that trailer out of my head!” April huffed with anger. “Just die, you stupid excuse for a multiplayer!”

April hit her shoe, which exploded into blue paint and killed the Splatoon. With the enemies defeated, both girls grew back to normal size. Sheila made sure to hit the Electoon cage while on the roofs, then the girls dropped down and followed the road past this wharf. They were approaching some kind of theater, which was advertising Space Mama’s Fanfare: Starring Ib as the Caged Stage Objective. (End song.)
“Is this where we’re gonna make Rayman’s brain?” Sheila asked as they wandered the dark theater. “Or watch some crummy interpretation of One Piece on Ice?”

“This theater wasn’t supposed to be here. There’s something strange going on and I want to see what’s up.” April replied.

“You’re very in control of your dream, aren’t you?” Sheila said with disbelief. “Aren’t dreams supposed to be more free, not so ‘organized’?”

“If it’s too free, then we have Splatoons. I’ll be free where it matters.”

They stopped before a pair of huge red curtains. “‘Twas THREE eras und 74 weeks ago,” a high opera voice sang throughout the room, the curtains lifting as spotlights appeared, “a most loveliest of woman wanted naught more than to be among the STARS, but alas, was shrouded by the streetlights of the meager.” The scrolling background depicted the moon’s landscape and outer space.

“But soft, what light through yonder alley br-r-r-r-REAKS?” Space Mama floated down from the barracks above, wielding her bazooka. A cage dropped and dangled beside her; it contained a young girl with brown hair, red eyes, a white shirt, red skirt, and black socks with red shoes. “‘Tis no ordinary light: Meester Dark hath holden the Protoon, and dost giveth me new beauty!”

“Wait a sec!” April exclaimed. “You’re that woman we fought on the train!”

“Und yo-o-o-o-ou are that annoyeeng girl, whom doth defend the yellow-haired maiden Mr. Dark so fancies.”

“You mean Chimney, ‘cause she’s one of the Lights?”

“NnnnnOOOOOO! The one that doth wear green!”

“Oh, Mary. Wait,” April shook, “why is your boss after Mary? And; who’s that girl? HEY, are you okay?”

“I’m fine!” The girl in the cage yelled.

“Do not speak!” Space Mama hit the cage and had it reel back up. “I will have my revenge! I will get the secret Meester Dark desires from you, and he will reward me soooo! Eet’s time for your final act!” (Play Space Mama’s Theme from Rayman.)

Boss fight: Space Mama

Sheila and April felt the gravity falter in the theater, and could make slow, terrific leaps into the air. Space Mama gracefully leapt around the room, blasting slow lasers from her bazooka that bounced around the floor and walls. Sheila maneuvered toward the woman, spinning her fist slowly to ready a punch. Space Mama glared and swung her bazooka at the raccoon, which Sheila countered with a kick, then punched Mama in her helmeted head. Space Mama spun around and flew away, gliding above the girls to drop missiles down on them. Thinking fast, April jumped up to the stage and painted blue barriers on the scrolling landscape, protecting herself and Sheila from the descending missiles (even though no 3-D barrier appeared over the field).

Space Mama kept floating so high, they couldn’t reach her, and Sheila’s Light Spheres were too slow to hit her. On April’s cue, the two of them jumped, the former painted a standable line on the scrolling background, the girls could land on it, and they kept jumping as April painted more. Space Mama tried to move away, but April hurriedly painted a stairway toward her so Sheila could run up and punch her in the helmet. All of them descended to the ground as Space Mama leapt and Ground Pounded, propelling the duo up with her force. She spun below them and sent up more missiles, and still midair, April painted a barrier to block the missiles. Sheila landed and jumped at Mama, who smirked and leaped backward away. The woman flipped with her cannon outstretched, Sheila simply grabbed onto its roof when she came back around, socking Mama in the face again.

Mama kicked away from Sheila and blasted lasers down at April, who was forced to dive away from the stage. Mama spun at a low point around the air to release missiles, and before they could fire, April hurriedly dashed up onstage. She and Sheila ducked, for she could barely draw a low shield in time before the missiles dropped. Space Mama flew up beside the left wall, and when April tried to paint a path up for Sheila, Space Mama flew to the right. April had an idea, so she had Sheila make her way to Mama again, dodging her attacks before the woman leapt back to the left. Then, April painted spikes at Space Mama’s level in the background, so when they scrolled over to her, the woman took several hits.

Angered, Space Mama plummeted down and Ground Pounded, propelling Sheila and April into the air again. She made missiles appear along the left wall, they were easy to block as April’s barrier scrolled their direction. However, some missiles still made it past, they did a U-turn to come at the girls again, so April quickly blocked. In the air, the remaining missiles directed down, April blocked with haste. Space Mama landed on the ground and skipped toward Sheila, leaping above for a Ground Pound, but the raccoon dodged and was propelled into the air. Sheila thought fast and Ground Pounded onto Space Mama, striking her helmet.

“I will not let you ruin my show!” the actress declared. “I will wash away the two of you!” She leaped above the stage, and April ran away before a washing machine could fall and crush her. Mama used the machine as a shield and blasted her bazooka from her point on the stage. Sheila nimbly dodged her blasts and shot a Light Sphere at the washer’s dial, turning it up one notch. They noticed the washer shake faster, so Sheila smirked and dodged closer to her opponent, punching another sphere to turn another notch. Mama began to shoot bouncing lasers across the ground, Sheila quickly hit Light Spheres at them as she rolled closer. “The only thing we’re washing away is your act!” Sheila made it up to the washer and turned it up full blast.

“Nooooo!” Space Mama clutched her washing machine tight as it propelled into the air. “I will not lose! Not so long as Meester Dark is depending on meeeeee!”

“If I were him, I would be thankful not to hear that voice again.” April remarked as she painted some platforms up to the woman. “So annoying.” As Space Mama was swaying in midair on her washer, April jumped to the device and painted an extra notch on it, turning it up higher. The washing machine shook beyond control and propelled to the ceiling. “NOOOOOOOOHAAAAA!”

The washer exploded, the upper barracks came down and brought the background down along with it. The girls felt their bodies heavy with gravity again, and watched as Space Mama fell down helmet-first. The glass smashed against the floor, and Mama was knocked out. The cage containing the imprisoned girl dangled close to them. (End song.)

Sheila punched the cage and let the girl drop on her knees. She went over to help the child stand. “You okay?”

“Yeah.” The red-eyed child looked up and smiled. “Thanks for saving me.”

“Neither is raccoon ears.”

“Ari, I don’t really wanna stay here long.” Sheila told the artist as she approached them. “Can you just promise to make me a brain by the time I get back?”

“I’ll try to make time for it.” April said. “Depends on how long I feel like dreaming. …It was fun hanging out with you, Sheila.”

“You too, mate.” Sheila stretched her arms in a bored fashion. “See ya later.” She and the red-eyed girl approached the portal pedestal behind the fallen background. The two of them performed the silly kick-your-legs dance before Sheila was sucked into the portal.

With that, the girl turned around to face April. “Is that really you, April?”

“Um… yes? Who are you?” April asked with confusion.

“My name is Ib.” The girl smiled. “You sure look a lot different than before.”

“Before?… I don’t understand. Where do I know you from, and why’re you in my dream?”

“I don’t remember how I got here…” Ib frowned and touched her head. “That weird guy with the blue coat appeared and captured me… I heard him talk about April, and then I… I remembered Mary, so I asked him, and he… uuuuoh…” She fell to her knees.

“Ib? What’s wrong?” April asked with concern.

Ib looked up at her with groggy red eyes. “April… do you still remember… the gallery?”

April gave a light gasp. “Gallery? What gallery?”

“The… The one with Guertena…” She was becoming more sick. “April, please… I don’t wanna stay here anymore… Please come… back… Mary… please…”

April stepped back in fear when the dreamscape began to turn dark. Ib’s begging body morphed into reddish-pink, before the dimension inside swallowed April. The pink hallway of paintings zoomed past April as she stood agape, drawing further into the darkness. An empty portrait of yellow roses was coming closer before the world flashed.

April’s Room

April jumped awake. She was back in her art studio room. She sat up and touched her head. “What a weird dream… It’s too weird to even paint a picture of it. Suddenly I’m friends with Sheila… then we’re… hmmm… Guertena… Gallery…” April gasped, her mind sparking with remembrance. “The Guertena Gallery!” She formed a big smile.

In the living room, Apis was looking over Mary’s shoulder as the yellow-haired girl was playing Zelda: Spirit Tracks on the DS. She was controlling the Spirit Train and blasting enemies with the cannons. “Apis, if I’m the little guy in the train, aren’t those monsters people, too?”

“Relax, Mary, they’re just mindless programs, they’re going to respawn no matter how much you kill them.”

Mary frowned with concern. “If you really say so…”

“April-chan, there you are!” Chimney proclaimed after the older girl came back. “We’re tryin’ to figure out what my secret power is. If you ain’t tired anymore, get to helpin’ me tap into my hidden “Please, Chimney, my eyes hurt.” Mocha moaned, having just endured a series of brutal kicks to her eyes in her battle with Chimney.

“Mochan, if YOU can’t force me to use my hidden superpower, who will??”

“Hey, Mary, guess what!” April began brightly. “I think I finally figured out the answer to our gallery nightmare.”

“You…You did?” Mary asked.

“You’ve been having nightmares, April?” Aisa followed.

“Um, I didn’t mention it to you guys, but… Mary, do you remember the Guertena Art Gallery? The one our parents took us to before I joined KND?”

Mary gasped. “Oh! Yeah, I do remember!” She smiled happily. “That was the last thing we ever did together.”

“So why don’t we revisit memory lane?” April suggested. “In fact, all of you guys can come with us! You can meet Mary’s parents and we can see the gallery that inspired us!”

“Don’t be silly, April!” Chimney shouted. “We don’t got time for crummy art, we’re tryin’ to discover my ultimate and emotionally-tolling destiny!”

“I wouldn’t mind going to a gallery!” Aisa grinned, now lain on the floor with her feet up against the couch. “It’s better than just lying around here and doing nothing.”

“Yeah, um…” April spoke embarrassedly, “about that, Aisa, the Guertena Gallery’s a pretty classy place, and if not that, Mary’s parents certainly are, so you may need to… dress up?”

“WUUUUUUHT?” Aisa totally freaked out.

“And you, too, Mocha.” April was still embarrassed. “They wouldn’t let a giant in and shake up the place.”

“Well, that’s okay.” Mocha complied. “I’ll just eat one of Aisa’s apples, no harm done.”

“For what it’s worth, I like ALL of you guys the same!” Mary beamed.

“April, this is turnin’ into total bull.” Chimney huffed. “Does this mean I gotta shut my mouth the whole time we’re with Mary’s parents?”

“You know, Chimney, your secret power might arise for having your mouth shut for a day.” Aeincha kidded.

“April,” Mary spoke with a concerned look, “I still don’t think we should go. Maybe the reason we keep having nightmares is ‘cause… it’s scary. Some artists like to make scary stuff, don’t they?”

“I don’t remember it being scary, and you weren’t scared, either.” April reasoned. “Also, have you ever heard of the Nightmare Spirit, Darkrai? I read somewhere that his nightmares can foretell someone’s future. …” April was silent for a minute, thinking back on her dream just now. “Whatever- or whoever’s at the Guertena Gallery… it might be something important. Come on, Mary, it’ll be fun!”
“Sigh… okay.” She sighed solemnly.

“Chimney, get the R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. prepped.” April commanded, walking away. “I’ll see if Dad wants to come, too.”

“WAT?! I gotta let a stinking adult on my baby, too?”

“Guess I’ll go break in the sandals.” Aisa figured, leaving with April. “I can probably wash them in the ocean.”

“Haa… I don’t get a say in this, do I?” Chimney slumped.

“That’s the emotionally-tolling price, Chimney.” Aeincha shrugged.

North Carolina; 1123 Wilson Way

Sunni Chariton calmly walked up the street under the partly-cloudy sky. She was about to pass the tall, black fence protecting the giant, orange and brown-roofed building behind it. A black flag with the signature blue “F” flapped on top. Sunni looked at the note that read the address her father gave her.

“Hey, uuuummm… Dad?” Sunni spoke, balancing on her heels like a sheepish little girl. “I know I’m not tryin’ to be like Mom and all, but I just wanna know, how does she make Imaginary Friends like she does? ‘Cause like, if I could do that too, it would like, help I guess? But like, isn’t making Imaginary Friends super hard?”

“Heh heh, unless you’re Morgan.” Rainier chuckled. “To tell the truth, your mom wasn’t good at making anything that didn’t come from dreams.”

“So I just gotta dream a lot?”

“I wouldn’t, that’s bad for your legs. But listen, I’ll tell you about the house your mom liked to come to.” He wrote something down on a piece of paper and gave it to Sunni. “If you want a few Imaginary Friends, this is the place for you.”

If this house didn’t stand out, Sunni didn’t know what did. She passed through the front gates and approached the purplish-red double-doors. However, it seemed that two Anti Guys (dark-gray Shy Guys) were guarding the entrance, yelling at Sunni with sing-song voices, “No no, dear! No one’s allowed! :heart: You don’t wanna mess with us!”

Sunni stared disbeliefed. “Get out of my way.”

“No no! You can’t go in! :heart: Our Lady’s in, and she-”

“It’s okay, guys, she can come in.” A British voice yelled from inside.

The Anti Guys perked with surprise, then shrugged. They pushed open the doors together to let Sunni inside. “You know, except for the blue aura, your psychic really is similar to Mika’s.” The woman in the white labcoat commented.

Sunni gasped. The woman turned around as her emerald eyes stared at Sunni from behind her blue glasses. “Aunt Morgan?”
To be honest, I really wanted Picture City to be the 50th stage. XD Anyway, plenty of stuff I want to happen this saga, I’m not actually sure when we’ll get to the Guertena Gallery. Next time, we’ll have some Sunni progression, we haven’t really gotten much of-

Okay, I gotta settle this guy down. See you next time, peoples.

Chapter B-22: The Gear Heart

Iceland; Climbers Household

After escaping Azkaban, Team Facilier took refuge in Sonny and Donna’s house on Oil Ice Mountain. It was a pretty log cabin with hunting gear and meat that their parents collect from their travels. The living room had a stuffed polar bear with purple shorts and sunglasses. It creeped Wendy out.

The blue-haired mage-in-training awoke on her small, but cozy guestroom bed. Carla was asleep at the foot of the bed, and looked more peaceful and cozy than Wendy did. Carla’s wing had a bandage wrapped around the hole. Wendy smiled, remembering how everyone saved her. She was so grateful, and felt bad that Carla was injured.

“Carla.” She reached over and shook the kitten. “It’s morning. Wakey wakey.”

“Mmmmm…” Carla’s slanted brown eyes peeped open. The blurry image before her morphed into the clear form of her young master. “Is it time for food?…”

“Are you hungry, Carla?” Wendy grinned.

“Well, cats usually ask for food in the morning… and I feel more like an average cat.” She flexed her wing lightly.

“Don’t be silly. You’re smarter than the average cat!”

“Hm hm hm! Then I should make use of my intelligence and steal a family’s picnic basket.”

“Or make a bunch of equations that could catch an ostrich!”

“Hm hm, perhaps!” Carla hopped off the bed as Wendy got up. The kitten brushed against her legs and purred. “Good morning, Master.”

“Since when do you call me ‘Master’?”

“Oh, you’d be surprised how a pet’s behavior changes when her master is gone for so long.”

Wendy picked Carla up and faced her. “I don’t wanna be your master. I wanna be your friend!”

“…” Carla returned the gesture with a soft smile. “Thank goodness, because it’s a real shame when the brains is not the master.”
“Exactly! …W-WAIT!” Wendy flushed.

“Hyou walked right into that one!” Carla laughed.

When the two entered the living room—“Wendy Carla, Cendy Warla!” Sonny and Donna bounced out to greet them. They wore a green and yellow sweater, black pants, and socks.

“Hello, you two.” Carla smiled.

“Look! We don’t have white hair anymore!” Sonny beamed.

“We’re not becoming sad old people!” Donna followed.

“And we’re not dying to save a fish’s life!”

“We had to put them by the fireplace until they warmed up.” Their father, Popo said. He was a handsome, robust man with similar clothes to the twins, but a blue sweater. “They were in some kind of Ice Fury. I’ve never seen it before.”

“If we didn’t warm them, they would’ve turned into kidsicles!” Nana cheered. The mother had long brown hair and wore a pink sweater.

“THEY TASTE LIKE YOUTH!” The four Climbers jumped.

“…The parents look like they’re twins.” Wendy whispered, staring awkwardly.

“Indeed.” said Carla.

“OH, FLOOP!” An explosion came from the kitchen. The six people looked in to see Fegan Floop covered in soot. “Eh… I tried making a cooking robot out of some firewood I found outside. In retrospect, it might’ve… misunderstood its programming.”

“Having strangers in our house is fun!” Popo and Nana sang.

“That reminds me, Mr. Facilier is waiting for you downstairs.” Nana said. “Don’t keep him waiting!”

Wendy, Carla, and the twins walked down to the basement. It was pitch-black, but a faint light revealed the doctor’s silhouette on the other side. “Young mages and magic enthusiasts: Dr. Facilier presents the relocation of the Voodoo Emporium: VOILA!” Lights flashed on, revealing the boxes and assortments of magical items on shelves.

“Wooooow!” Wendy gaped in awe. “It looks just like the old one!”

“It is! After we escaped Azkaban, I got in contact with my Friends on the Other Side. They slurped up every last artifact and moved it all here before them Aurors ever had a chance to notice! From now on, business will take place here. You see that door?” Facilier pointed on their right. “It’s connected to the door to the old shop in Cleveland! When people knock on it, namely my old customers, I’ll be able to see and let ’em on in!”

“That’s amazing! I’m glad your customers can still come to see you.”

“But the Government can just as easily find us again.” Carla said. “Won’t it be safer to close down shop?”

“Girl, we can’t close this down!” Facilier flapped his arms, emphasizing his logic. “Magic ain’t just some product, it’s a living thing, it needs life and love! People need to explore the wonder of magic, especially them everyday folk who doubt it exists!”

“He’s right, Carla.” Wendy smiled, doing a twirl. “Magic is all so wonderful! You can do anything you want and possibilities are endless!”

“And what’s more, due to that chaos up in Washington, the Government’s all sorts of disorganized!” Facilier grinned.

“Oh, yeah. I’m glad we got to go to Mr. Uno’s funeral. I enjoyed it. …!” Wendy flushed when she retraced her words. “I MEAN, I didn’t enjoy it, I hated it! -! I MEAN, I’m upset that Cheren’s father is dead, but I’m glad that… um…” She looked away, cheeks still red, “It feels like we’re friends now.”

“When people share emotions, it brings them closer together. You’d be surprised how strong sadness is in that regard.”

Wendy perked up. “I just remembered! When I was sucked into that portal, I landed in a different universe. There was a place called Fairy Tail—it had Chelia, and Romeo, a-and Carla; there was a cat person like you, and there was-”

“Wait wait wait, one at a time, Child!” Carla shouted.

“Mr. Facilier, where’d the stretchy lady go??” Donna interrupted.

“Who, Madame Rouge? You can’t expect her to stay in one place too long. She needs to stretch her limbs and fly – or trot, depending what animal she changes into.”

“Excuse me, I think Wendy was going to tell us a story.” Carla reminded.

“I know that,” argued Donna, “that’s why I’m sad that Stretchy Lady has to miss it!”

“And I want popcorn!” Sonny pouted.

“Actually, before I do,” Wendy began, “…I was wondering if I could use the Floo thing to go to Lee’s house. I talked to him at the funeral and promised we would meet up…”

“Wendy, I really think you should just lay low here.” said Carla. “In spite of what the doctor says, the Government may be trying even harder to find you. I don’t mind getting in trouble, but anybody else could be endangered-…” Her words were making Wendy upset, Carla noticed. “Um… On second thought… perhaps you shouldn’t keep him waiting. You deserve as many friends as you want.”

“Aye.” Harvey nodded. “Plus, if she’s going to a KND sector, the Gov’ will have to deal with the KND. I don’t think they want that right now. So of course y’all can go to Lee’s house!”

“Thank you.” Wendy bowed her head. “Ahem… So, my story… I got separated from Kayla and landed in a forest…”

The sky somewhere

On a chilly, starry night, the Marzipan Pirates decided to rest on a small Island Cloud. They slept next to their parked plane and listened to the peaceful music of the Mariachi Owls, whom were drifting on a different cloud. “Welcome, faithful viewers, to another chapter of Augustus’s Candied Adventure.” The band leader said. “Here, our intrepid explorers are weary from traveling through time, clashing with enemy pirates, and having nothing to eat but candy. They have come here to rest for the unbearable trials ahead.”

Ohhhhh the Stone Fist Augustus

And his four young crewmen

They got in a fuss with

Some demonic women…

“How long are they gonna follow us…” Rallo moaned in aggravation.

“They’re just sad because someone they know died.” Augustus said. “Even though they foreshadowed his death, like, 20 years ago.”

And we know how Augustus

Does with the ladies

He certainly likes them

With skirts and braidies

His eyes widened. “Um… What is this song about, exactly?”

When he’s not hunting candy

They’re always on his mind

From nearly the PM

To the AM of nine

Stewie, Rallo, and Maggie crawled away from the captain, looking creeped out.

These notes are believable

We-put-cameras-in-his-room-on-Whole-Cake

Just so we can see

“GYAAAH!” Augustus snatched one of Stewie’s weapons, shot the cloud the owls were on, and watched them plummet to the sea. “Sigh…” The captain lay back down.

Nel crawled up on Augustus’s chest and stretched her arms in a hugging position as she slept. “Pterodactyl song make Aughsucks attractive.”

“Ugh…”

“Why haven’t we gone to Kamabaka, yet?” Stewie asked. “It was right there.”

“Because Mandy’s ship was sailing around it, Dummy. Like they waiting for us. But it’s gone now, so maybe they gave up. First thing in the morning, we’ll fly there and look for the Gear Heart.”
Captain Mandy returned to her cabin with a half-drunk bottle of rum in one hand. “Did we enjoy ourselves?” said Lord Licorice with a wry smile, sitting on Mandy’s throne.

“Didn’t I tell you you can’t be in here without my permission?”

“Somebody had to.” The Candy Lord stood up. “Still think His Majesty rules with bias intent? He was quite fond of Mr. Uno, too. Imagine the pain he felt in executing him. I wish we hadn’t have left Kamabaka just so you could attend his funeral.”

“I had to.” Mandy sat herself on the throne. “I owe Rachel that much, at least.”

“Balderdash! You helped her slay a powerful Demon King when you were children, what more can she want from you? I, on the other hand, have a job to complete. I can easily persuade His Majesty to have the Fairy Princess captured, no matter where she may be… but I can use the same powers of authority to have you assassinated by the Cipher Pols. So, Captain Mandy, we had better get back to hunting those Lost Candies ASAP! Since the job involves taking revenge on Captain Augustus, you can’t possibly want to refuse.”

Mandy glared at the lord. “Why are you so fixated on these lame candies, anyway? What do you, the King of the World’s dog, have to gain from expending all your time and energy trying to find them?”

“The King’s orders are absolute! That is all I will tell you. I will send word to the other pirate crews to secure the locations of the other Lost Candies. We are to make sail to Kamabaka again soon. On your command, ‘Captain.’” Licorice exited the cabin.

“Hmm… Understood.” Mandy stood up and moved her throne aside. She opened a secret hatch on the wall and pulled out a dusty book with cobwebs dangling from it. Fairy Sisters: Sugar Fairies.

“After all… it’s not like the Lost Candies peak my interests as well.”

Kamabaka Kingdom, the next day

Like Augustus promised, he flew his crew to Kamabaka when morning hit. The island’s most notable features were towering cliffs that were shaped like hearts at the top, composed of red and pink trees. There was a treehouse on top of the biggest mountain, the base of Sector KB.

The Ace Flyer landed at the base of a path going up through a forest, and would lead up the mountains. “Sorry the wait was so long, but here we are: the island with the weird name.” Augustus announced with little enthusiasm. “The bushes in this forest are lush with natural-growing heart candy, and at the top of this mountain lies the Gear Heart. We may just be able to find it without setting into town whatsoever.”

“I smell a homophobe.” Rallo remarked.

“Yeah, right.” Augustus opened a new lollipop. “I don’t care if we do or not. It’s just hard to find any ladies that’ll smooch me.” He smirked before starting the lolli.

“Aughsucks want female to mate with?” Nel smiled.

“Still too young, Nel. And at the same time way too old. O-kay, pre-stage banter done, on-stage banter starts now.” (Play “Deep Woods” from Sonic and the Black Knight! )
Stage B-18: Lovely Hill

Mission: Find the Gear Heart!

Boko Babas grew out of the ground, likely planted there by the Boogey Pirates. Augustus sliced them with little struggle using his new Lemon Candycane Cutlass. They came to a gorge where they would have to swing vines to the opposite ledge, and said vines had small red hearts on their ends. They were too far apart, and when Augustus threw his Gobstopper at the closest one, it wouldn’t even budge. “Hmm… I remember reading about this place in a book. Everything in this forest only reacts to love.”

“Wellp, I guess it was now or never.” Stewie said. “Come here, Rallo.”

“NOT LIKE THAT!” August shouted. “We have to use certain Heart Candies to make things react!”

“Oh! Well, of course I was only just kidding… of course.” Stewie blushed.

“I wanna file a restraining order when we get back.” Rallo said.

They jumped down into the gorge and saw two monkeys with strange helmets eating Heart Candies by a bush, with the candies popping in their mouths. The helmets had red lights on them. When the monkeys spotted the pirates, they chucked the Pop Hearts at them, but Augustus punched the monkeys unconscious before Stewie shot his net gun to capture them. Augustus fed some of the Pop Hearts to Nel and used her to shoot the heart vines. The hearts inflated as the vines began swinging back and forth, allowing the pirates to swing across the gorge.

A gentle rain began to pour, but the morning sun was still shining bright through the clouds. The Marzipans needed to use their Corn-Clamber Boots to climb a cliff to the next area, but the wall would not allow the spikes to penetrate it. There was a puddle of reddish water that looked like Kool-Aid down in a corner of some trees. Augustus cut away the Kool Chus guarding it and stepped their Clamber Boots in the puddle, imbuing them with love apparently and enabling the team to step up the cliffside.

They stood on the shore of a Kool-Aid river, with lilipad-hearts floating in it. The hearts were too light for Augustus to stand on, and naturally, he was the only one who could swim in the river. The captain dove under and struggled to see through the bright redness. At the bottom of the deep river, four Dexihands were surrounding a Gold Wonka Bar, so Augustus chopped the ghoulish cyan hands before claiming the candy. He resurfaced and swam further down, seeing all the taller Heart Flowers that they would eventually have to jump. He saw a platform with some Shrink Sweets and took some.

Augustus hurriedly swam back to the four children and climbed back on shore. “Sigh, sorry that took so long. We’ll eat these and Nel will carry us.” He handed the other three a Shrink Sweet.

“Why can’t we just hide in the Infi-Cube like last time?” Rallo questioned.

“’Cause that was when no Shrink Sweets were around.” Augustus threw his lolli stick in the river. “Otherwise, we breathe the air the world gives us. Now get shrimpy, Shrimpy.”

After the four minimized, Nel picked them up and put them in the holes of her skull mask. The cavechild was light enough to jump on the lili-hearts. Some of the hearts had Bio Boko Babas latched underneath, so when Nel stepped on their lilipad, the plant monsters would flip it over, forcing Nel to jump quickly. The river turned right and more narrow as Nel jumped up a stairway... of Heart Flowers, landing on a safe platform. She jumped two more Heart Flowers, dodging the Skulltula that dropped down and tried to bite her. Nel landed on a thin ledge on the right wall, with only enough room for her small feet as she sidled across. She got parallel with a path on the opposite side, and the cavegirl made a nimble pounce across.

When Nel was about to venture through a thin path of the rainforest, a swarm of bees began swarming around her head. “Aaaaahh! They like Rex Bees, but small! Nel sorry for taking honey!” she yelled as she tried to swat them away.

“How the hell, Nel! Maggie will shoot them!” Augustus yelled. Nel pranced through the path on all fours as Maggie blasted missiles full of bug-repellant at the (giant to her) bees. Nel jumped a fallen tree and dodged right to avoid a Boko Baba. Nel turned left and pounced up a stairway of Heart Flowers, with Maggie continuously shooting upcoming bee swarms so the cavegirl could get through a curtain of heart vines. They stood upon a cliff overlooking the town, the morning sun shining beautifully through the rain clouds.

Nel set her friends on a rock with some Growth Gum, watching as they stretched big again. “You were a big help, Nel.” Augustus said, noticing her swollen features due to the bee stings. “It doesn’t hurt too badly, does it?”

“Mm-mm.” Nel shook. “Nel use love to run!”

“Heh heh…” The captain blushed. He lifted Nel over his shoulders to ride. They had to cross another cliffside with Corn-Clammers, but their boots needed a love source. A couple Kool-Aid Chuchus appeared close by, so Augustus sliced them into puddles. The four pirates stepped their clamber boots in the liquid to walk on the cliff. They could drop on an upcoming ledge, but Stewie saw three Pipo Monkeys below, catching Kool-Aid droplets from the cliff in their mouth. He proceeded to catch the apes in nets.

After landing on the ledge, the Marzipans viewed a rainbow road that stretched over the town, had many curves, and would go higher up the mountain. There was a bushel of Rock Candy, but when Augustus waved his hand through the rainbow, it waved and felt like mist. Further down the ledge was a rainbow waterfall, so he and the Baby Trio encased their selves in a Rock Candy sphere to roll to it. Heart-shaped panels stuck in and out of the ledge and threatened to push them off. The crew waited for each heart to retract as they reached the waterfall, rolled under, and drenched the rock spheres in its neon colors.

The crew returned to the rainbow road, and the rainbow-powered spheres were able to touch and ZOOM over the rainbow. They would’ve liked to admire the scenery as they were soaring over the town, but they had to focus on the road. There were holographic, rotating flowers on the rainbow, and when Augustus hit them rolling by, a slope tilted down from above and let them onto a higher path, where they rammed a Pipo Monkey that was forced up onto the ball.

The rainbow road began to zoom up and around the main mountain, during which they had to jump huge globs of water that rolled down from ahead. There were more flower cogs that the captain had to strike before jumping the water balls, and hitting all three would open an alternate route that curved along the right of the main road. They caught another Pipo Monkey, and the rainbow road reached its end over a cliff. The monkeys fell off Augustus’s shattered rock sphere and became dizzy as Stewie caught them.

It turns out that a large eyeball lodged in a ledge was crying the water balls. The explorers climbed a few steps before looking over a barren, gray ravine. They jumped into it, suspecting some type of blockage to be behind this. “Mw-mw.” Maggie turned around and indicated the blockage to her teammates: two giant stone eyes (with eyelashes) were twitching due to the small rocks lodged in their lids. “This is a weird level.” Stewie said.

“Help them out, Ralls.” August ordered, starting a new lollipop.

“Don’t use nicknames.” Rallo activated his afro stereos and stuck his head into the cracked wall under the eyes. By shaking the earth, the rocks fell out of the eyes and they started crying waterfalls. Augustus grabbed Rallo out and ran as the ravine started flooding. The crew climbed a short ladder up to a dry canal and kept running from the pursuing flow. More Cry Eyes were dropping water bombs from above, but they were a minor nuisance. At the end of the canal, they arrived at a small lake that was only partly filled, but thanks to the restored flow, it rose to full height.

Augustus grabbed the four kids and held them in the brief seconds it took to swim to the left shore, an arduous task with all four weighing him down. They had to catch their breath before studying their next puzzle: there were four platforms with heart switches, connected to pipes that ended at a stairway of deactivated water spouts. There was a Bounce Gum on the shore, and Augustus decided to attempt this puzzle himself first. He bounced over to the closest platform with a heart switch – he squished a Kool Chu that materialized, drenched his gum in its substance, and released the Kool-Aid when his gum pressed the switch.

August bounced three normal platforms to reach the next switch – it didn’t activate and the gum popped. The third platform had another one next to it with a Kool Chu. Augustus swam back to shore to repeat the puzzle, this time hitting the Chu and pressing the second switch. He then had to bounce on the shells of two large turtles, before the third turtle would serve as a boost to the switch. However, August continuously bounced on the turtle as it swam beside a platform with the Kool Chu, smashed it, then pressed the switch. From there, Augustus bounced some lilipads that sunk after one bounce. The Kool Chu spawned on a small lilipad which surprisingly withstood Augustus’s weight, then he pushed the fourth switch.

The Baby Trio used Bounce Gums to cross a row of platforms that served as a shortcut to the right shore. They all smashed some available Kool Chus so their gum would be permitted onto the stairway of now-active water spouts, setting foot on the ledge above. They were almost at the top of the mountain, but their path was blocked by a series of brick walls, and wooden towers with Bulblin archers perched on top. “Stewie, you’re the only one who hasn’t had a role in this stage, yet.” Augustus remarked. “Any ideas to get through here nice and easy?”

“Well, since this level revolves a lot around Kool-Aid, why not now? HEY, Kool-Aid!”

An unexcited Kool-Aid Guy appeared from their left. “You know the deal, kid. It’s five bucks to drink it, ten bucks to ride it.”

“Twenty Chocolate Dollars to burst all the way through here.” Augustus gave him the candy money.

“You got it. Alright, everyone hop into my liquid.” The pirates climbed into the giant pitcher. The Kool-Aid charged, broke through each brick wall, and tore the Bulblin towers down as well. “I’m gonna need a refill!” When Kool-Aid ran around a snakelike path in the jungle, Augustus directed him left and right to hit the Kool Chus and refuel him. They came to an open field, where Kool-Aid smashed open some cages with Pipo Monkeys hiding in them. He had to run around and get aligned with a series of stairway platforms, starting with the lowest one and jumping up each as they brought him to a high path with another wall to break through.

They were on a thin ledge on the side of the mountain, with a great view of the island below. Kool-Aid ran up a curve, going up a vertical path before Augustus yanked him and signaled to jump.
Kool-Aid jumped a spike trap and ran up another wall, then jumped to the next path. He ran up a vertical path that took place behind a waterfall, having to jump between this one and a parallel path. His liquid poured out faster, so while there were no obstacles, he had to jump to where the Kool Chus appeared.

The Kool-Aid Man made it to the top of Lovely Mountain, where a rainbow arched over the summit. They bid the Kool-Aid Guy farewell and progressed, with rain continuing to pour through the sunlight. They found the source of the mountain’s waterfall, a lake where two figures were dancing and skiing as though the water was frozen. (End song.)

“LAAAA!” One of them was a black-haired boy dressed like a swan. “Mwaaaaa!” The other was a fat, yellow monkey with banana-shaped lips, green hair, wearing a Pipo Helmet and underwear that… was not quite big enough.

“Can you dance better than meeeeee?” Bon Clay Jr. sang.

“We’ll just have to seeeee!” Yellow Monkey sang.

“WHEEEEEE!” They skied close to and began twirling in the center, making graceful poses.

“What the HELL is this?” Augustus snapped.

“Yes, if they’re going to figure skate, where are all the snowballs?” Stewie asked. “Figure-skating’s always better when you throw a few-”

“STEWIE!” August stopped him. “Your sentences man, I…I don’t like some of your sentences!”

“Nel from past.” Nel said, still holding on the teen’s shoulders. “Nel don’t get references.”

“Yaaaaah yaaaaah yaaaaah!” The two figures kept dancing in place. Then, Clay and Yellow, with smirks on their faces, both swung a kick at each other. “OOOOOWW!” Bon Clay took the blow and splashed in the non-solid water.

“Uh-uh-uuuuuhhh!” Yellow twirled to a halt and wagged his finger. “You have to do better than that to touch me, Sweetheart! Honestly, have you looked at yourself in a mirror lately? How grodyyyyyyyyyy!”

“Pleh, pleh!” Clay resurfaced. “At least my style comes from natural talent! I have my OWN heart to give me power! My own LOOOOOOVE!” He spun and emerged from the water, making a pose as he stood on the liquid again.

“It doesn’t matter to me where love comes from.” The Freaky Monkey took out a pinkish-red heart, with bars that one would find on a gear, and hugged it. “As long as it tastes sensulicious!” He licked it.

“It’s the Gear Heart!” Augustus exclaimed, drawing his sword. “Hey, Chunky Ko-!” He splashed in the lake when he tried to run over.

“Un! Deux! Yaaaaaaa!” Bon Clay skied by when Augustus resurfaced. “You’re just gonna drop on in without showing so much as a pint of feeling? Get on outta here before you filthify this lake!”

“But I wanna help you beat him!”

“I am delighted by the offer, but you shan’t need to fear!” Clay twirled. “This dirty monkey invaded mah treehouse and assaulted my pals! It’s high time for his just desserts.”
“When are you gonna get it through your cute little head?” Yellow Monkey swayed his hip. “You can kick me and smack me as much as you want, but I’m so much more beautiful!”

“Sector KB does not belong to you, Flashy Hat Monkeys! Even if I die, I shall continue to dance against you until you fall flat on your bubbly belly!”

“Hoo hooooo! If you were looking for a way to stir my hair follicles, you might have just found it, Sweetie Feathers.” Yellow winked.

“Then our battle for the fate of Kamabaka begins right now!” Clay made a fighting pose.

“I’ll look forward to keeping your beaten body as my priiiize!”

“Then let’s go! UN!”

“DEUX!”

“HEEEEEY!” Both stretched an arm, crossing each other’s like an ‘X’, and their epic battle commenced. (Play “Hippos on Ice” from Sly Cooper: Thieves in Time!)

Boss fight: Yellow Monkey

Both fighters put hands on their hips and skated circles around the center. They spun around and stretched one leg out, blinking flirtingly at the Pipo Cameras recording them. Clay and Yellow reunited at the center, holding each other’s arms as they swung kicks behind them. Yellow hugged Clay to his belly and jumped, then they held each other by one arm and rotated in place. Yellow spun faster and hurled Clay away, but the Sector Leader recomposed quickly and skated along the very edge of the lake. Yellow Monkey glided after him like a graceful ugly duckling. When Yellow was getting close, Clay swung a kick up, Yellow ducked and tried to grab him, but Clay dodged back, leapt over, and stamped Yellow in the head.

The monkey wobbled around dizzily, giving Clay the chance to kick him from behind and slide Yellow across the surface on his belly. (Again, we’re assuming both of them are male.) Yellow’s head slammed against the side, but the ape recovered as his vocals vibrated in anger. “Ooo-hoo-hoo-ho-o-o-o!” With that, both opponents returned to the center, facing each other as they did a Russian squat dance. They skied around for a second—then quickly threw punches at each other before Clay was slid away again.

Yellow Monkey drew the Gear Heart and slurped all over it before placing it back on his back. The ape glowed red and spun faster, exploding with hearts that flew everywhere. Bon Clay dodged the hearts and tried to kick Yellow Monkey, but the ape leaped over like a grasshopper and kicked the boy in the back. Clay spun about-face and kicked back against the wall to propel forward, but Yellow had already skied up to punch him in the gut. Yellow followed with a combo of punches before throwing one at Clay’s back and sliding him forward.

Yellow Monkey smooched the Gear Heart like a man making out with his pillow. His lips seemed to stretch when he pulled his face away, but it was actually a light-red sticky goop-like energy rope linking his mouth to the heart. He stretched it longer before the rope snapped off the Gear Heart, and Yellow spun before whipping it at Bon Clay. The Okama caught the whip on his mouth, around his puckered lips, and it seemed like his and Yellow’s lips were linked. Both dancers stared at each other with wide, sparkling eyes. They rotated around a center and were steadily pulling close. The sun seemed to shine on their moment. They grabbed each other, leapt in the air, and their faces moved closer…

Clay smirked, forced his momentum down and pulled Yellow with him as the ape smashed his helmet against the water-ground. Clay sliced the energy-rope with his bladed swan slipper, kicked Yellow in the belly, and rolled him against the side of the lake. Yellow got up and huffed, showing his rear to Clay as he skied away. Clay was making the same movements, except he was skiing backwards and following Yellow. When he caught up, both figures bent forward, reached behind to link hands, and their rears… okay, don’t need to know that part.

The Marzipan Pirates didn’t know what they were watching, and they didn’t know why they were still watching. This was supposedly a boss battle, but the momentum sort of shifted a lot. “Does everyone in Futur do this?” Nel asked.

“No sentient person does this, Nel.” Augustus said.

“Do they actually hate each other?” Stewie asked. “I feel like they’re either friends or rivals.”

Clay and Monkey kicked away from each other, circled the center in opposite ways, and when they reunited, Yellow grabbed Clay, who allowed the monkey to lead. Both of them had bright, dreamy smiles, and never felt closer with one-another. Yellow Monkey raised Clay high, making him feel like the graceful swan he is. Yellow then put Clay on his back and stretched his arms like he were an airplane. With a big smile, Clay stood and faced the opposite direction, posing like a lookout.

Bon Clay jumped off as they skied away from each other. “Heeeey!” Clay called as Yellow faced him. The Sector Leader held the Gear Heart up.

“Ooooooh!” Monkey’s mouth shaped like an ‘o’, and was likely meant to say ‘For me?’

The Kool-Aid Guy sat a few feet away, smoking a cigar. “You kids ever see Paul Blart?”

Yellow smiled with graciousness, his hands open as he welcomed the boy back. Bon Clay flew over and set the Gear Heart in his hands, the two of them spinning in place. But then Clay yanked the heart and pulled Monkey over, kicking him in the stomach, and when Yellow hunched over, Bon Clay STOMPED his Pipo Helmet and broke it. The chubby monkey splashed in the water, leaving Clay to keep the Gear Heart. “The thing about love is it always HURTS in the end!” He smirked. (End song.)

“WHOOOOPEE! And the battle is won by ME!”

“That will never, in a million years, be classified as a battle!” Augustus retorted. “Dude, how are you standing on the water?”

“Because I got love in me, of course! From the soles of mah slippers to the ends of my hair.” Clay tugged one of his hair strands. “I’m guessing you had to solve those silly little puzzles on your way up here.”

“Yes, and I will be glad when it’s time to leave. Give us that Gear Heart you got there.”

“No ho ho ho way.” Clay wagged a finger. “I know who you are, Augustus Fizzy Pants. Cherry Boy told me how you kidnapped his lady. He told me what you done with Big Gorilla. I don’t think I want you havin’ this handy-dandy heart.”

“What does the Gear Heart do, anyway?” Rallo asked.
“Gives ya energy!” Clay beamed. “Gives ya loooove! ’Long as you had it, you could just keep going and going and going and going and going and GOIIIIIING!” He spun repeatedly before coming to a stop. “But you’ll go POOP the moment you put it down. So don’t think I’m going to give it to you. My family has been protecting the Gear Heart for five thousand YEARS!”

“REALLY??” The crew gaped.

“Nah. I’m just an average citizen.”

“D’OOH.” They drooped.

“But this tasty piece of candy has been here a long time. It’s our sacred treasure! Legends say it was given to us by fairies. A band of dirty pirates like you could never comprehend the value of a treasure like this. Why, you’d sooner toss it in your gut and-”

“ULP.” Nel’s stomach tightened. “Oh… Nel feel… PLEAAH!” She coughed the Cupcake Core onto the ground.

“Heh?” Clay raised a brow.

Augustus picked the cupcake up and wiped it clean. “For your information, we’ve been searching for these candies all month. They’re called the Lost Candies, and there’s six of them. According to the Sugar Fairy Princess, they were created by Termina Giants.”

“Termina Giants?…” Bon Clay remembered that part from Cheren’s story. “But what are these candies for?”

“The truth is, we don’t know. But the Fairy Princess said the Illuminati – whom I assume is the World Government – is trying to destroy them. I’m trying to find them and protect them from Lord Licorice. He’s the apprentice to the King of the World.”

Bon Clay frowned – a rare sight even to this crew. Augustus’s words seemed to stir memories in him.

“I really admired you, Clay. I would have followed you forever.” Alexei said. “That was a mistake of my own. I found a real man to follow.”

“…” Clay stared at the Gear Heart before looking up at Augustus. “I still don’t think I should give this to you. You hurt Cherry Boy’s friend.”

“Who the heck is Cherry Boy, your boyfriend?”

“NO… though he is pretty… Perhaps ‘Panini’ is the key word here.”

“Oh, right.” Augustus looked away. “Fine, I’ll admit that I was a bad guy in the past. I worked with Big Mom for my own selfish goals. The only thing I loved was adventure, and…and I still do. But now I’m actually trying to do something good for somebody – for a lot of people, by finding the Lost Candies.”

“And tell me something, if you don’t know what these Lost Candies are gonna do, how do you know you’re doing something good for anyone, huh? ?”

“BECAUSE I AM, alright?! Ugh, it’s pointless to try and convince you, can I just have the stinkin’ heart?”
“Alright then: show me how much you love the person you’re doing this for. If you can walk across the water and get to me, I’ll let you have it.”

“Um… er…” Augustus looked at the water, unsure if he could do this.

“You don’t even know Luviro that well, do ya?” Rallo asked.

“There’s gotta be some trick to it. Like-” Augustus stepped in the water and splashed in.

“That ain’t it.” Clay shook.

Augustus climbed out and huffed in annoyance. He calmed himself and pictured Luviro in his mind. Pale white skin, wrapped almost fully in blankets… Augustus stepped in and splashed in the water again. He climbed out and proclaimed, “This is stupid! I can’t just magically walk on water like Jesus or Sonic! The only reason you and that monkey can do it is ’cause you were raised on this island of magic Kool-Aid, so it’s totally-…” Nel hummed a little tune as she walked on the surface, looking down to make sure her feet were on the water. “Wh… Nel?”

She turned and faced him, making a balancing posture as though she might fall. “Nel think of Aughsucks. Maybe Aughsucks think of Nel?”

“…” Augustus closed his eyes to think. He first started this adventure to find the Lost Candies for Luviro. He met Luviro seven months ago and promised to find them. But he neglected his promise to help Big Mom find Candied Planet. Because he would’ve loved to find Candy Planet, the world of endless adventure for all candy hunters. He would’ve loved to explore that world for the rest of his life. But Big Mom’s true intention was to make Earth into a Candy Planet.

Augustus detested the plan… Not only would it not be the adventure of a lifetime, but it would’ve poisoned everyone. At first, Augustus didn’t mind harming a few innocents to find the lost planet, but after learning it was Big Mom’s only intention… he felt disgusted inside. He wished he spent this time finding the Lost Candies than being Big Mom’s dog. He felt like granting Luviro’s wish would make up for it all. He really wanted to help him.

Augustus stepped over the water—splashed in once again. “COME ON, I really gave that one some thought!”

“I guess your passion ain’t strong enough.” Clay taunted.

“JUST GIMME THE FREAKIN’ HEART!” Augustus hurriedly swam after Clay, who skied across the watery surface. “You damn flamingo-swan-whatever, I’m gonna cook you into turkey and eat you for-!”

“Just give him the heart, Clay.” A girl’s soft voice said.

“Oh?” Clay looked over and smiled. “Hiya, Sapphy! You really think it’s okay?”

“Yes.” Sapphire nodded. “Trust me. It will be a major help to us.”

“Well, Sapphy doesn’t lie. It’s all yours.” He dropped the Gear Heart on Augustus in the water.

The captain resurfaced. “Um… thanks. See you later, Sector Weird.” He and his crew began their long journey down the mountain.

“You know, fellas, Sapphy’s a real good telepath.” Clay told them. “She could predict what those candies are gonna do.”
“That’s okay.” Augustus waved. “It’s no adventure if we know what’ll happen!”

“I knew he would say that.” Sapphire said tonelessly. “And I didn’t need psychic.”

Augustus stuffed the Gear Heart and Cupcake Core in the Ace Flyer’s trunk. “ Couldn’t you-a thought of your mom or dad to walk on that water?” Rallo asked as they climbed in the plane.

“Yeah, but I ain’t doing it for them. Anyway, now that we have the Gear Heart, and still including Zeira’s Sugar Fuel, we have four Lost Candies and two left to find. And one of them happens to be the Sun Cream.”

“Perhaps I can use my Metahuman Neutralizer to purify the intoxicated Sun Cream pool.” Stewie thought aloud.

“Maybe, but I still can’t believe a metahuman power could affect a Lost Candy. We might’ve missed something back on Buttermilk. So let’s fly there ASAP!” Augustus started the plane. “Now that my Haki’s back, I ain’t afraid of those Willy Wonka Wannabes!”

The pirates flew away from the island. Moments later, a S.C.A.M.P.E.R. landed on the same spot, and Team Emily stepped out. “Alright guys, time for our next monkey-hunting exploration!” Emily Garley declared. “We are going to catch every monkey on this island and save Sector KB! …?”

A bunch of monkeys trapped in nets were bundled at the start. They were ripe for the taking. “WHOOP, stage complete.” Sarah proclaimed. “Guess someone did it for us.”

“I object to that!” Sheldon argued. “We can’t just bypass a stage because of some ‘shortcut.’ If we don’t play all the levels the way they were meant to be, we don’t get the full experience, and we may even miss some crucial parts of the storyline, therefore—” Yellow Monkey dropped from the sky and smashed Sheldon. The helmetless monkey of average intelligence lifted Sheldon over his shoulder and ran off into the jungle. “AAAAH! He’s putting a dress on me! Somebody call the zookeeper!”

Palace of Winds

Somewhere in the sky, lost among the dark clouds was an ancient palace. Some say it was home to the Sky King, and had thousands of Shandoran Nimbi enslaved here. It was a story that he took interest in. Now he made this old temple his home.

The Man With the Red Eye soared through the dark clouds and entered the palace. It was pitch-black inside, so the mage had to see the way with a light on the tip of his wand. Red Eye got to a room lit by some dim torches, and a faint light coming from a magic mirror. Somebody was seated and watching the projection. “Red Eye burned the American Constitution and fled the scene, and chaos and mayhem ensued everywhere throughout the country. The situation was resolved by a young boy named Jessie Sidney, who shortly after, became…”

“You certainly are a violent sort.” The man watching the MV said. “I’m not sure if I want you visiting my planet.”

“That man would have slain an innocent child had I not flown in.” Red Eye said, his body shadowed except for the left eye. “I use violence to deliver justice to those corrupt beings. I hoped America would stay a free country, but we will see how this child president fairs. But I do not wish to bring harm to your world. I simply wish to study its magic potential. And I think it is the perfect place for my daughter to meet me.”

“I see…” The man—Arlon—stood and faced Red Eye, with his own monocle eye glowing red.
“Then I shall comply to your request. I want to see my daughter again, too. I still have mixed feelings about.”

“DARN IT!” A bowl of berries was thrown at Arlon’s head. “These are blueberries! And they’re ROUND! WE’RE OFF SCHEDULE!” An infant-size creature flew between the two men, facing Arlon. It had an indigo body, a crescent moon head, and a crescent symbol on the chest. “Tonight is a crescent moon! I need a banana! Or a cookie with one bite taken out of it! Half moons, I drink half a cup of grape juice, or a taco. And during eclipse, I eat donuts. Blueberries are for FULL MOONS!! I’ll also accept a plum or a moon pie.” He smiled. “Always up for a moon pie. BUT WHAT’M I SUPPOSED TO EAT RIGHT NOOOOW?”

“Master Crest, I am positive that the food you choose to eat is irrelevant to the current phase of the moon!” Arlon argued.

“Irrelevant?! Dude, it’s ALWAYS relevant!” Crest threw his arms up. “It’s…It’s LOGICAL! It’s…IT’S…”

“Crest.” Red Eye spoke. “You will still lead me to Lunaria like you promised, correct?”

“Oh yeah sure man, whatever floats your boat.” Crest said quickly. “We can do it on May 15, that’s a full moon. Provided you get me more of-” He rubbed his fingers and glanced at the berries on the floor, “those things.”

“May 15 was the date I had in mind, too. That shall be it then.”

“Coolness! So uh, you know uh, those uh…?” He continued rubbing his fingers.

“Bananas, yes.”

“Neat, well, buh-bye.” Crest flew off.

“And on the same day… I want you to bring Wendy and her friends to Lunaria.” Red Eye told Arlon.

“To that end, I fear for Master Crest’s safety. It is true that my people have long awaited the Young Lord… but there are many prying eyes who would JUMP at the chance to seize him! He is, after all, the Tenth Firstborn.”

“Yes…” Red Eye turned away. “The Firstborn are bodies of limitless power. They are only children, but cruel adults seek to capture them, abuse them for their own ends. I detest such adults. If anyone tries to take Crest, I assure you… they will fall by my hands.”

Kamabaka is from One Piece, but I made up all the magic Love Kool-Aid random… stuff. So these first few chapters take place within the Art Saga, so there shouldn’t be very many, because when we get to the main arc of the Art Saga, I don’t wanna pull much attention away from that. But this next chapter is actually connected to the main story’s chapters – I won’t pull another Gravity Falls gimmick, but Ch. 44 in particular will lead into the next SS chapter. So see you for that. Later!
Real Friends

Chapter Summary

Sunni Chariton and Morgan Uno have contrasting views regarding Imaginary Friends.

Chapter 43: Real Friends

Foster’s Home For Imaginary Friends

“I really wish Mikaela didn’t get you in the habit of calling me ‘Aunt.’” Morgan said.

“Good point.” Sunni glared at her. “You don’t deserve it after what you did to your nephew.”

“I was in the middle of an important operation.” Morgan argued without changing her moderate voice. “If his parents won’t make an effort to control their son, then I have to.”

“You tried to kill him!” Sunni shouted. “Is that how your side of the family disciplines children?”

Oh, wait, I’m talking to Father’s biological daughter.

“You don’t have any qualms of trying to kill your mother.”

“That’s totally different!!” Sunni steamed red. “That’s a matter of personal growth, symbolism, thing… Look, what are you doing here, anyway?”

“She’s here to pay our mortgage.” An old woman’s voice said. Morgan stepped aside as Madame Foster came down the stairs. She was shorter than Sunni, with white hair in a large bun, a green overshirt, yellow shirt, glasses, purple skirt, and a cane. “Hello, Morgan Dear. Will you be taking an Extremeasaur today?” She smiled politely, but Sunni noticed the look of resent.

“Hmm… maybe. I’d like to look around, though. We need some extra help around the base.”

“Certainly, Dear. Take all the time you need.” Madame Foster moved aside as Morgan went up the foyer stairs. Another gang of Anti Guys stared at Sunni before following their master.

After she was gone, Sunni approached Madame Foster and sat before the short woman, “She pays your mortgage?”

“She’s the only benefactor that was willing to offer.” Foster frowned regretfully. “After Mr. Herriman was killed by a Werehog 10 years ago. Lady Morgan has been a regular visitor before then, ever since she left her Imaginary siblings here. Those four are a delightful bunch, I tell you what.” She made a smile. “And we are so grateful to her. It’s nice to be friends with the Head of the Corporate Presidents.”

“I dunno, I seen that look on your face, you got a problem with her.” Sunni’s eyes narrowed.

Madame Foster sighed. “In return, Lady Morgan wishes to make contracts with Imaginary Friends. Preferably the Extremeasaurus. Those are the very monstrous kind. But as a request, Lady Morgan wants those Friends to have more freedom. So naturally, the other Friends get terrorized.”

“I’m sorry to hear that. But what is this ‘contract’ thing, anyway?”

She turned to Sunni, “Well, I don’t know if you know about psychicbenders, but certain kinds of people with powers come in here to make ‘contracts’ with the Friends. They can use their powers to summon the Imaginary Friends to their side for whatever chore they had in mind. Lady Morgan and some psychics use their Friends to fight for them.”

“That’s pretty cruel. And you let her get away with that?”

“Oh, it’s not cruel at all, Dear!” Madame Foster proclaimed bubbly. “You’d be surprised how well some of our Friends fight! Besides, it’s good for their health. Since their Creators have long abandoned them, they need the psychic energy to stay alive. And by warping Friends to their locations, the benders are giving them their energy. Plus, when that happens, they aren’t as hungry for dinner, and Lord knows we need extra hands in cooking.”

“I’m trying the best I can, ya know!” Handy walked by and yelled. He was a large, brown glove with a face.

“I wasn’t talking about you, Handy! Anyway,” Foster faced Sunni again, “forgive me. You must be here to adopt a Friend. What’s your name, Dearie?”

“Sunni, Sunni Chariton. My mom’s name is Mikaela, do you know her?”

“You’re Mika’s daughter? Ho ho ho, I thought you looked familiar! Yes, your mother is a regular visitor, too. Used to come all the time with Lady Morgan, but now I only see them apart. Mika said you might be coming here in the near future.”

“Hehe, well here I am.” Sunni grinned and blushed. “I don’t understand how it works, but I wanna try this contract thing. But, I kind of planned to use them for battle, too.” She scratched her head nervously. “If that’s okay…”

“Oh, it is, don’t worry about it. I’d love to help you look around, but I need to help my granddaughter with papers. I’m sure the Friends will like you just as much as they like Mika!” She gave her positive smile before walking to the office on their right.

“Hold on! I don’t even know how to make a contract.”

“Oh, the Friends can tell you how to. Really, it’s not as hard as you think.” Madame Foster assured the girl before continuing to the office.

Sunni made a shrug before going upstairs. It might’ve been her imagination, but this house looked far bigger inside than it did outside. I mean, it was unnaturally huge. The length of these hallways and all their rooms looked longer than the house’s width, and all these intricate stairways made it so mazelike. “Hey! Hey! Hey! Hey!”

And now there was an odd, faint sound in her ears. She stopped and looked around for a source. “Down here!” She looked down. There was a very tiny, green pea with a face, arms, and legs beside her right shoe. It had a thimble for a hat. “Hello, Miss! Can I help you find something?” It spoke energetically.

Sunni raised a brow. First interesting sight of the visit. “Yes, I dropped my silver grain of sand here earlier and I was looking for it.”
“Ahhhh, you’re a kidder!” The pea playfully punched her shoe. “My name is Peas! If you’re looking for an Imaginary Friend, I’d be happy to give you a tour.”

“Actually, I’m a psychicbender. The name’s Sunni. I’m looking for some Friends to make contracts with.”

“Oh, well I’d be glad to make a contract with you! Just bend down so I can reach your finger.”

“What I meant is I’m looking for some Friends that can, y’know, fight?”

“Well, I can fight. I mean, I can’t duke it out,” he jabbed his tiny fists, “but I can run fast and I’m great at distractions. I’ve been studying Tiny Style.”

“That’s great, but I prefer to save room for ones that’re more… direct? Maybe. Just how many contracts can I make?”

“Oh, please give me a chance.” The little guy pleaded. “I don’t get noticed very much, so it would be great if someone picked me for a summon. The only limit on contracts is your imagination. If I’m really not good, you could still pick plenty more.”

“Hmmm…” Sunni thought for a second. “I never actually made one before, so… can you teach me how?”

“Oh, certainly! It’s easy! Just let me touch your finger and mark me with your aura.”

“Hehe-hyeah, ‘cause, I dunno how to do that.” She forced a sheepish grin.

“Come on, I’ll teach ya how. Let’s do it!”

Suni sighed and sat on her knees, holding her pinky beside the Friend. Peas touched both hands on its tip. Sunni closed her eyes and tried to sense both their auras. Seeing the inch-tall Friend touching her finger, Sunni tried to channel energy to her pinky’s tip. “GAAAH!” Peas blew across the hall like a bullet. Sunni gasped and chased after him, finding the tiny green pea knocked out against the wall. “Ohhh…” Peas held his head as he sat up. “Well, I see whatcha mean when you wanted a bigger friend. Your psychic’s a little too… strong for me.”

“At least I know what to do now.”

“Wait!” Peas perked up before she could leave. “I still wanna be friends with you! Just… try again, but don’t do it so hard.”

“Whaddyou mean ‘don’t do it so hard’? If it’s too much for you, then we aren’t gonna work out!”

“I’m just saying, you’re gonna have the same problem with other Friends if you’re too hard. Even some big guys get repelled by too much psychic. Come on, just try again.”

“Uuuugh.” It was embarrassing to be taking psychic lessons from a pea. Sunni bent down and touched her finger to him again. She kind of did it on accident the first time, but this time, she tried to focus her power with a weaker sense of effort. “WHOW!” Peas smashed against the wall again. “That wasn’t as bad, but… ow.”

“Huuuff.” Sunni sat and lied back on the stairs. “This exercise is giving me a headache already.”

“You wouldn’t be having a headache if you just work on your focus.” Peas said as he climbed up to Sunni’s shoulder.
“If you’re implying my psychic’s too strong, then maybe I should focus on stronger Friends.” Sunni argued logically. “Then again, I’m not even sure if I need any Friends. I finally got adapted to my real psychic, so I can kick enemies’ butts by myself.”

“Do ya mind if I ask which enemies’ butts you’re trying to kick?”

“Well, in all honesty…” Sunni sat up and spoke lower so only Peas would hear, “that Morgan lady is one of the ones I want to beat. She attacked a friend of mine. I didn’t even expect her to be here, but…but if she’s picking Imaginary Friends, wouldn’t that mean she’s not very strong by herself?”

“Not really. She picks a lot of Extremeasaurs, and only really tough psychics can do that. Sunni, having Imaginary Friends isn’t about having someone else do stuff for you, it’s about having someone to do stuff with. Your chances of winning are better when you fight with them. Even if you’re the greatest psychic ever, sometimes a Friend is great to have. Especially against other psychics.”

Sunni released a solemn sigh. “I used to have Darcy to do stuff with. But she’s been on her own adventure for weeks and I haven’t heard from her. Still, you’re probably right about having friends, even Imaginary ones. But I don’t think you and I are right for each other. I’m going to try to make contracts with stronger Friends.”

“Fine.” Peas folded his arms. “But just because a Friend doesn’t suit up to your style, it doesn’t mean they wouldn’t be a good friend.”

“I still kind of like you, if that’s what you’re saying. But in the midst of war, preferences have to be made.”

“I guess.”

They heard glass shatter upstairs. Peas rode Sunni’s shoulder as the girl rushed upstairs. Shy Guys were running amuck in a living room area. Some were trying to eat an Imaginary Friend made of gelatin, others ran off with a giant baby’s rattle, while some Pyro Guys were chasing a snowman Friend. “Uhhhh what da hell is this?” Sunni questioned.

“These are all Lady Morgan’s Shy Guys.” Peas responded with a sigh. “She always brings them so they have a place to play around.”

“I’m starting to think Lady Morgan’s getting more than what she’s paying for outta this place.” Sunni said with a glare.

“She’s still the one paying our mortgage. Look, it’ll be fine, I mean some Friends get a few bruises, but we can’t just-”

Sunni grabbed a couple Shy Guys in psychic and chucked them at the ones eating the jelly Friend. The other Shy Guys whipped in her direction. “A’right, you all better settle down or I’ll TEACH you what rowdy means.”

“Sunni, no!” Peas exclaimed. “Lady Morgan’ll get mad at us if we attack her soldiers!”

“If she’s gonna criticize someone’s parenting and attack their kid, I’m gonna do the same. I’m sure there’d be a few grateful Friends out there.” She cracked her knuckles. “It would make a great start to a contract.”

“Ho boy. I would be afraid to be your friend.” Peas sighed. “Just try not to do more damage than they do.” (Play “Shy Guy’s Toy Box” from Paper Mario!)
Stage 51: Foster’s Home For Imaginary Friends

Mission: Clear out the Shy Guys and make contracts with Friends!

Rather than heed her warning, the remaining Shy Guys in the room went rampant. Two Guys were jumping up-and-down on the couch and whacking each other with pillows. Sunni quickly swiped the pillows, and when the creatures began running around the floor, Sunni threw quick kicks and knocked them out with the heel of her Mary-Janes. Sunni saw a Shy Guy peep out from behind a small garbage can in the corner, but he ducked when she looked over. Sunni only saw from the corner of her eye, watching him emerge before pulling him over with psychic to knock him unconscious. Another Shy Guy was holding a lamp horizontally to block Sunni from entering the passage. Sunni stepped to either side, but the Shy Guy wouldn’t let her, and he jabbed the lamp if she approached. Sunni decided to rush to the left, quickly zip past the hall’s edge with psychic, then got around the Shy Guy to knock him out and take the lamp, standing it up.

Sunni headed up the following staircase to a roundish room where a chubby Imaginary Friend with green fur was being forced against the wall by three Headbutt Guys, using the attack they were named for. “That’s Belly Bob Norton.” Peas explained. “He’s fun to bounce on. Unfortunately, the Shy Guys know that.”

“Not a problem.” Sunni jumped directly in front of the Friend and created a shield, blocking the Headbutt Guys, but her shield was cracking under their attacks. Sunni grunted and thrusted her shield against them, raising the Shy Guys in the air with psychic. She felt them quickly shaking free of her grip, so Sunni dropped them on the floor to face each other, resulting in them aimlessly ramming and knocking each other out.

“Thanks for saving me.” Belly Bob told her. “It never actually hurts, but boy do I feel woozy.”

“About that,” Sunni began, “would you agree to a psychicbender contract where I summon you to be a back-up shield?”

“Well… okay, but nothing too scary.”

“And it’s called a Creative Summons Contract.” Peas informed. Sunni grabbed Norton’s hand and channeled her aura, pouring extra focus since he was a bigger friend (only slightly taller than her).

“Oh!” Norton’s hand burned as he pulled away and shook it. “You don’t have to do it THAT hard!”

“That’s what I kept telling her!” Peas shouted.

“Fine, I’ll do it where you’re less sensitive!” Sunni placed both hands on Norton’s belly, but this time channeled her chi at a weaker rate.

“Uhhh… not feeling anything.” Norton said.

“Y’know what, screw you, I’ll find someone else.” Sunni stated before proceeding to the hallway. When she looked up, a Shy Guy was hanging on the bottom of a chandelier and swinging back-and-forth. Not surprisingly, the chandelier detached and plummeted, so Sunni threw a hand up to grab it in psychic. “Don’t let anything fall!” Peas yelled. A few jewels on the chandelier dropped, Sunni held her other hand forward to grab each jewel one at a time, but she lost her grip on the chandelier and let it smash to the floor, knocking the Shy Guy out as a result. “That’s coming out of my allowance.” Sunni figured.
She used her Aura Sense to see into other rooms, and found a Shy Guy in two of them. Those Shy Guys scamppered out of the rooms and through a taller door, and when Sunni entered, she discovered this room was a basketball court. There was an Imaginary Friend designed like a scoreboard, with the two scores being labeled for Shy Guys and Sunni. He seemed to be forcibly strapped to the wall above the basket, and two Spark Guys shocked him to make a point go up whenever one of the Sports Guys scored a basket. “I heard of kids who were forced to be a basket, but since when do you force a scoreboard to be, well, a scoreboard??”

“Hang in there, Stats, Sunni will save you!” Peas yelled.

“These guys think they’re so great, but let’s see ‘em play without hands!” Sunni swiped the basketball from the Sports Guys and bounced it around with psychic, much to their astonishment. Sunni chucked the ball to the basket, but a Sports Guy leaped up to whack it away. His friend caught it, bounced toward, and tried to send it to the basket, but Sunni pulled it away with psychic, bounced it to the floor, the opposite wall, then against the ceiling before flying it to knock out one of the Spark Guys. She rapidly bounced it around the room, and when the Sports Guys attempted to tackle her, she jabbed her foot against each of them to knock them out. She tossed the rubber ball at the remaining Spark Guy to defeat him.

“Sigh… glad that’s over.” Stats sighed. “Hey, wanna hear a secret? If you score 10 points, you’ll find a secret passa-”

Sunni grabbed the basketball in psychic and tossed it through the hoop 10 times. A secret door opened on the left wall, leading to stairs. “Thank you!” Sunni hurriedly jogged up the stairs. Stats was left alone, hanging on the wall. “I assumed you would help me, too!” he yelled.

The stairs brought Sunni to a fancy room with a curtained roof over the bed, a writing desk, and a small table in the center. A very fat Shy Guy with a knife and fork was sitting on the little chair, facing a plate of what seemed like melted apples. Sunni wasn’t sure what that food was, it smelled good, but looked gross. “D’oh… I thought I smelled something good, but I couldn’t possibly eat this.” The Gourmet Guy said. “Little girl, would you go down to the kitchen and bake me a cake with flour, white icing, strawberry-“

Sunni stunned the overweight Shy Guy before punching him across the head and knocking him out. “Most boring mini-game ever.”

“Hey, lookathis!” Peas bounced onto the table and pressed a small button. A trapdoor opened before the room’s main entrance. Sunni grabbed the little Friend and jumped down the chute, taking land within the laundry room. Sunni’s shoes sank partway into some shallow water that covered the floor. Shy Guys were climbing up the wall of washing machines and pulling them open, letting water spill constantly. Sunni approached and tried to open the door—something was blocking it on the other side. Sunni banged the door. “You guys better not be out there!”

“What? Who’s in there?” someone’s voice yelled.

“Hey, that’s Wally!” Peas realized. “HEY, WALLY! Why are you blocking the door?”

“I’m trying to keep the water inside! Listen, if you can do something about the Shy Guys and stop the flooding, I’ll open.”

“Don’t mind letting us drown, do you!” Sunni shouted. She quickly used her psychic to close each washer, but the Shy Guys were readily climbing around to reopen. Sunni tried to grab them in psychic, but the Shy Guys held surprisingly tight to the washer doors. Sunni decided to close a pathway of washers as she climbed up herself, and once close to the Shy Guys, she punched them to make them fall to the flooding floor, unconscious. Once all four Shy Guys were down, Sunni closed all the washers with psychic to stop the flooding. “Okay, we’re done!”

Wally stepped away from the door, letting all of the water flow down the hall when Sunni opened. He was a red brick wall with a pair of eyes inside a black space. “Sigh, Frankie’s gonna love cleaning that up.” Peas said.

“Hey, Wall Guy, wanna make a psychicbender contract with me?” Sunni asked Wally.

“Umm… sure?” Wally shrugged. Sunni walked over and placed both hands against him, channeling a stronger amount of energy considering Wally’s apparent sturdiness. “Ummm… I’m ready when you are?”

“Ugh, I’m trying!” Sunni shouted. “You’re a lot bulkier than I thought, you know? How ‘bout I…” Sunni trembled and channeled greater chi—Wally went blasting across the hall.

“IIIII… think you came on too strong.” Peas said.

“Let’s just kill more Shy Guys.” Sunni progressed down the opposite hallway and entered the house’s arcade. The many game consoles’ screens lit up the otherwise dark room, but no one seemed to be occupying it. Sunni spotted the brief images of Shy Guys on the consoles’ screens, zipping around within every console as they blasted coins at her like speeding bullets. After getting scratched by coins from a nearby console, Sunni drew out her lightsaber in anger and lunged at the nearest one with a Shy Guy.

“DOOON’T!” Peas cried with his high voice, Sunni immediately stopping. “You already broke a chandelier, but we’ll never be able to afford to replace these!”

“How could you buy these to begin with?!”

“I don’t know, just find another way to get them out. Can you do Force Lightning?”

Sunni was about to respond- “Ow! Ah!” More coins scratched her from either side, “I haven’t gotten around- ow! It’s a dark move anyway, isn’t- oof! And I don’t think I can bend well-” She got scratched by three more rounds of coins, “RRRRRRR!” She threw her fingers up and zapped lightning at the consoles, causing the screens to turn staticky. When she hit the ones with the Spark Guys inside, the creatures were forced out. They were still zipping frantically around the room, Sunni shot more lightning at the Guys and overfilled them with energy, up to the point where they explode. With the arcade cleared out, Sunni headed outside to the hallway, seeing a staircase going up on her left.

A banging sound rang in their ears, seeing a Shy Guy using a cookie pan as a sled as he rode down the stairs. He passed Sunni and slid across the hall, and Peas noticed the monitor in the ceiling corner. It depicted the Foster’s foyer, with vases lined up like bowling pins. “Oh no!” Peas pointed. “Sunni, you have to stop those guys!” Sunni rushed over to the sliding Shy Guy and used psychic to slam him against the wall. He tried to run for it, but she grabbed the cookie pan and bashed him unconscious.

Sunni headed back and began to run up the stairs, grabbing any Shy Guy she passed in psychic to throw him over the edge. The stairs stretched up a tremendous, vacant shaft in the house, and the sounds of the sliding pans echoed all around. Sunni didn’t question again how all of this fit inside the house, she was set on throwing Shy Guys. One of the staircases was broken with only a few standing chunks, so she had to float to each one. Pogo Guys were hopping down the chunks on pogo sticks, aiming to smash the vases on the ledge where these stairs began. Sunni made a psychic bubble to bounce each Guy off and down the chasm.

“Remind me how many floors are in this house, again?” Sunni requested.

“I lose track between 42 and 2,017.” Peas replied. After getting to the top of the stairs, the duo followed another passage that led to the house’s roof. A Shy Guy had forced the Imaginary Friend, Scissors to detach a group of balloon Friends from the railing. Sunni kicked that Guy over the roof’s edge, then quickly used her psychicbending to grab the balloons and pull them down. Considering their durability, Sunni grabbed the balloons gently and could only pull them slowly. All the while, Sky Guys were trying to shoot the balloon Friends with slingshots, so Sunni briefly released the balloons to grab their pellets with psychic, chuck them at the Sky Guys’ balloons, then grab the Friends again before they drifted too high. She maneuvered the Friends in the air as she got them low enough for her to safely release. She repeated this pattern until all the Sky Guys were taken down, then the balloon Friends could be lowered back to the roof. Peas leapt off and grabbed the ends of their strings, using Tiny Style acrobatics to wrap them around the railing.

“Safe and secure!” Peas proclaimed proudly. “High five, Sunni?”

“More like a low one in my case.” Sunni smirked, holding her pinky beside him.

“It’ll do!” Peas smacked her fingertip ecstatically.

“RAAAAAAHHHHH!” A monster’s roar screeched across the air, followed by the forceful sounds of banging metal. Peas hopped on Sunni’s shoulder as she ran to the opposite railing, seeing a huge metal cage shaking under some force.

“That’s our Extremeasaur cage.” Peas informed. “Lady Morgan must be in a fight with one of them again.”

“She’s fighting them?!”

“Well, yeah. They are Extremeasurs. If you’re goin’ near those things, you better know how to fight.”

“I wanna see what’s up with this.” Sunni leapt over the roof’s edge and used psychic to make herself float down steadily; scaring Peas at first. She landed lightly on the grass and was about to approach the large, distant cage. (End song.)

“NOT SO FAST!” Sunni stopped. She and Peas looked around for the source of this militant voice.

“Sunni, look out!” Peas pointed upward, and Sunni dodge-rolled away before the large force could crush her. It was… a giant rubber ducky. Sunni and Peas exchanged weirded looks.

Steam emitted from the duck as the head opened up. A Shy Guy leapt out, wearing a white general’s cap with a gold emblem. He wore a white robe with some medals and spoke with a strict general’s voice. “I’m the General Guy, the commander of the World Government’s Shy Guy battalion! I am Head President Morgan’s personal escort, and I do not appreciate you attacking my troops!”

“Well, WE don’t appreciate your troops making a mess of our house!” Peas retorted. “Forgive me for disrespect, but I think your battalion needs new management.”

“NEW MANAGEMENT?! Am I to take criticism from some half-pint, morbidly obese bean?!”
“WHAT? I’m not obese—I’m not even a BEAN! I’m a pea, and the name’s Peas!”

“Well, Ah got news for you, Peas, I don’t take lip from ANY sentient delicacy, not no way nor no how! In fact, just because I’m impressed with your physical ability in besting my best troops, I’ll invite you on the secret of my true identity!” The General Guy grabbed his hat and mask. “There’s only one reason I’m always in my prime, and why I always have the best taste in both troops and Drake Bell CDs. I’m not just the General Guy.” He spun around. “My alternate identity… is GENERAL RICE!” Underneath his sock suit, the General Guy actually had a head shaped like a yellowish-white block of tofu.

“YOU’RE A TOFU HEAD?!” Sunni screamed.

“Aaaaahh!” Sunni flew a few feet back and hit the ground. “Grrrrr!” She helped herself up angrily. “Alright, you wanna go Filipino o Genero, I’ll turn your rice into sushi!”

“Not so fast! You still need to eat dessert!” The General Guy turned around, preparing a dish. “And for dessert, nothing follows rice up better than… WATERMELONS AND DORITOS!” He held the former in one hand, and a bag of Doritos in the other.

“Does Japan even HAVE Doritos?” Sunni questioned.

“I had this stuff imported from Turkey, don’t patronize me! Just eat your dessert.” He tossed her the food.

Sunni sighed and sat down, using her lightsaber to cut open the melon. “Sunni, you’re really gonna eat that?” Peas asked.

“Why, you think it’s a trap?”

“It wouldn’t hurt to make sure.” Peas jumped into the opening that Sunni cut. The tiny Friend searched within the juicy red insides carefully. Everything seemed in order… until Peas got to a candlelit room.

A penguin was laying in bed with an antelope as romantic music played. The penguin looked up at Peas with shock, baring an angry look. “Out- Get out—GET OUT NOW!”

Sunni saw the distraught look on Peas’ face after he climbed out. “You don’t wanna eat that.”

“I’ll say, THEY FORGOT THEIR BILLY JOEL CD!” General Guy threw a boombox at the melon, shattering it, and injuring Sunni, the antelope, and the penguin in the process.

“That’s it, I’m done playing around.” Sunni charged a Psycho Sphere. “See ya later, Squarebob.” She let the sphere fly and strike the general directly. He was engulfed in an explosion, Sunni brushing her hands off with a victorious air about her.

The smoke cleared, revealing General Guy’s bacon body underneath his robe. “Well-p, you done blewed off my garb. I hope you’re happy.”

Sunni sighed, “You’re gonna make me ask, do all Shy Guys look like this?”
“Not really. Martin is made up of a pill and a bellybutton lint, while Louie Gibbson is naught more than two drivers’ licenses and a hacky sack.”

“Well, I’m glad I cleared that up.” Sunni made a sweatdrop.

“But now that you know my REAL secret identity, I have no choice but to exterminate you!” The General Guy leaped high up into the sky. “Prepare to face the deadliest move of Shy Guy Style! Medium Rare Grill-heat-to-right-temperature Attack!” He spun around and lunged at Sunni bacon-first. The Filipino raised a psychic barrier to protect herself, struggling to withstand as the bacon was about to pierce through.

“Sunní, maybe fighting this guy isn’t such a good idea!” Peas proclaimed. “We should take this chance and get away!”

“Come on, this guy’s just a bunch of talk. I can make a whole harbor out of psychic, you expect me to be afraid of…”

General Rice broke through, entering the bubble shield in the form of dozens of Toothberries from Donkey Kong Returns. “THE HECK ARE THESE THINGS?!”

“Frybits, frybits, frybits, frybits!” The tiny, blue, and sharp-toothed creatures chanted as they bounced endlessly around Sunni with their limbless bodies.

“Why are people so obsessed with those things lately?” Peas questioned, rolling his eyes. “Frybits, frybits, frybits…” They all stopped and faced up at Sunni. “Fryyyyy-BIIIIIIITS!” They all fired Solar Beams at Sunni and sent her flying into the sky.

“OW, D’OW, daaaaah!” Sunni landed on one of Foster’s’ many layers of roof, dropping down other ones before hitting the ground. Sunni held her aching arm as she got to her feet, glaring at the general with anger. “Okay, this fight is losing its appeal. I’m serving chopped tofu for dinner, with a side of bacon!” She drew out her lightsaber and ran at the Shy Guy. “Haaaaaaa-!”

Sunní stepped on a wire that dropped a gigantic empty rice bowl and caught her underneath. She tried to force the bowl off of her with psychic, but it was stuck tight. “What kind of bowl is this?!” She was unable to cut the bowl with her saber. “Some kind of chi-blocked diamonddantium?"

“This bowl is greater than a peasy chi-block!” General Guy declared. “This is a limited edition diet-block that I bought from the hardware store. It feels that your body is lacking in healthy rice and intends to keep you under until you get yo’ belly full! So if you will pardon my absence, I am going to the kitchen to prepare the grand course! I hope you’re hungry, ‘cause I’m gonna stuff ya with so much rice, you’ll be more square than a Christmas present!”

“Your analogies make no sense!” Sunni shouted, her voice muffled by the bowl.

“THEY ONLY MAKE SENSE EVERY OTHER HALF-MOON! But first I’ll sing you a gentle Mexican lullaby. Ahem:” He took out two maracas and began singing quickly, “La CucaRAAAACHA, La CucaRAAAAACHA, eehhhh di adi-adi-aaaa! La Cucaraaaacha, La Cucaraaaaacha, EEEEEHHH-di adi-adi—DON’T YOU COOK-A MY RACHA!” He smashed the maracas against the bowl, ringing it like a giant church bell.

“Nnnnnnn!” Sunni gripped her head from the unbearable noise, feeling her mind spinning.

“Let her go, General.”
“HUHN?!” The General Guy slowly turned his tofu head. President Morgan was standing behind him. “But…But she-”

“She’s not worth your time. Just release her.”

The general huffed with anger. He took out a tiny nail and stuck the very tip under the bowl’s edge. He raised a little pebble above the opposite end. He brought it down lightly—the giant bowl went flying away. The General Guy put his robe, mask, and hat back on before leaving.

Morgan walked over to Sunni as the Filipino sat up on the ground, still holding her aching head. “Since you’re probably wondering, the General Guy uses Bo-bobo Kempo. I don’t know what it is, either. Some kind of martial art that incorporates the Imagination element, that’s the best I can come up with. Don’t peg him wrong, he’s the strongest general in our military. Even I’m afraid of getting in a fight with him. His style works.”

Sunni helped herself up, glaring at Morgan while Peas stood on her shoulder. “So did you pick your new Friend?”

Morgan raised a hand and gestured with her fingers. A tiny pink bunny-rabbit hopped its way over, baring an adorable smile. The rabbit formed wide eyes and metal jaws as an enormous and deadly laser cannon emerged from its mouth. Sunni and Peas stared with colorless expressions that said “Oh sh,.” Morgan waved away, and the cannon retracted as the bunny hopped away. “You want to see my other ones?”

Morgan led them to the Extremeasaurs’ holding cage, opening the small human-size entrance. Sunni immediately ducked at the cry of Chompjaws, the monster forcefully trying to smash through its giant cage. Morgan bore an emotionless look as she led Sunni through casually, while said girl and Peas were absolutely frightened. Like the foster home, this holding place was bigger inside than it was outside. They all entered a door at the end of this passage, going down a dark flight of stairs. At the bottom, Morgan used her psychic to light the room blue.

Sunni forced herself not to scream. Slifer the Sky Dragon, the tremendous snakelike armored colossus, was asleep inside a cage. He was breathing through both mouths of sharp teeth. “This is the monster that I summoned to attack Cheren. He’s the most powerful and indestructible Friend that lives here, who was created to destroy any and all enemies the summoner sets them against, and any other enemies that should appear. The sad part is that he isn’t actually imaginary. Some kid ripped him off from a card game.”

Sunni and Peas gaped at the monster. They didn’t want to imagine this thing when it was awake. They can’t even imagine how they got him down here. “…You were gonna kill your nephew with THIS?!”

“I was going to stop Slifer before he actually completed his attack, I only meant to scare Cheren. I really didn’t expect that business with Sugar. I mean, I knew about her powers, of course, that’s why I had her transform Spongebob. Too bad she’s gone rogue now.”

“And I suppose you brought me down here to scare me, too?”

“Well… yes, in a way. I can see your progress in making Imaginary Friends is… faulty. Let me tell you something about the Creative Summons. It’s not just about how strong your chi is. It also matters how well you connect with the Friend. Many of these Imaginary Friends’ creators have died, so their essence is being kept alive by the Psychic Chi that flows within here. If they left this house, they would fade, unless they were ‘adopted’ by someone else. That much could only happen if the adopters felt a strong bond with the Friend, and that bond would keep the Friend solid. Creative Summoning requires such a bond. The Extremeasaurs, for example, like to fight, so their choice friends are ones who can fight. Believe me, even with my power at the time, it was hard, let alone Slifer. But I did it, anyway.”

“I still don’t get this whole thing.” Sunni said, turning away. “Even if these guys are monsters, they’re still called up only to fight. Were most of the Friends here even made to fight? I figure most of them were made to just goof around with their creators.”

“Do not forget these are Imaginary Friends. Even if they take physical form, they’re still imaginary at heart. No matter who they’re adopted by, an Imaginary Friend’s purpose is to make their owner happy, serve them even. And the fact is, real friendships can’t develop between them. They can’t even attempt to act like real friends. Because real friendships have all kinds of feelings, sadness, anger, support, comfort… Imaginary Friends are merely a catalyst for children who have no real friends. But Imaginary Friends will not help them in reality, and in time, those people realize that and abandon them. The Imaginary Friends that live here only stay with their adopters for so long before they are abandoned again. Relying on ordinary children to keep their essence solid will not work for very long. That’s why their only hope is to rely on psychicbenders. Not just for a sake of friendship, but to fight for them, work for them, anything so long as the Friend can survive on their Psychic Chi. What depends, then, is if the Friend can follow the orders they were given. In my case, I need good Friends who can fight.

“What I’m trying to tell you, Sunni, is sometimes people should have their pick in Friends. You can become friends with any real person out there, but Imaginary Friends are a different story. The only Imaginary Friends you should make are any that would suit your serviceable needs. Because, although they would keep you happy, you can never find a real friend in an Imaginary one. Of course, you yourself, Sunni, are looking for Friends who can fight for you. Unfortunately, no Friends match up like the Extremeasaurs, especially that little pea. You can find all the other strong types in the house, but my Friends are superior in power. Sunni, the simple fact is, no matter how much you or your friends try, real or not real, the World Government is—”

Morgan turned and realized Sunni was on her knees, turned away from her. Sunni had lowered her pinky finger to the floor as Peas touched it. Morgan sensed the psychic flow between the girl and the pea. It was a very small flow that fit his size. …Peas shone with a light-blue energy, then he smiled confidently. “I might’ve come here to look for Friends who can fight for me,” Sunni proclaimed, standing up and holding the tiny pea to her cheek, “but I still like a few that I can talk with once in a while!” They both wore vibrant smiles as Peas hugged her cheek.

Düssenheim, Germany; Goldenweek Residence

The Goldenweek Mansion was stationed 20 miles from the city of Düssenheim, in a beautiful grassland with few trees and a bright sky. The mansion itself was made of solid reddish-brown brick, two stories tall and 32 rooms. The R.O.C.K.E.T.-T.R.A.I.N. came for a quaking landing in the open courtyard, scraping on the ground and halting just before hitting a hedge. The Sector W7 members stepped out with only minor dizziness, being used to Chimney’s driving. “Well, Dad, I hope you enjoyed the Flying Train Experience.” April said sheepishly to her father.

Galdino Goldenweek stumbled out of the train, hunched over as he felt his stomach twisted. He was a black-haired man that wore slanted glasses, a shirt with blue and white vertical stripes, and yellow khaki pants. He had a droopy face. “If you were going to insist I come to see my brother again, where was the harm in riding a Sea Train?”

“Cause a Sky Train is free and gets the job done faster.” April laughed.

“YAAAAAY!” Mary danced off the train, knocking her hunched uncle aside. “We’re home, we’re home! I mean, my home, you guys are away from your home, but welcome to my hooouuuse!"

"Whooa!" Apis gaped at the mansion. "This is where you live, Mary? You really are rich!"

"No kidding." Chimney narrowed her eyes at April. "April, how come you never dropped me a few mulas when I needed 'em?"

"Because Euros aren't accepted in Water 7?" April asked with a sweatdrop.

"Then exchange 'em for OUR money!"

Aisa was gazing longingly at the grass. She wore a golden dress, white sandals with green straps, and her cap was absent. A white satchel was slouched over her shoulder, and Aeincha and Mocha peeped out of it when they felt their friend jittering. "What’s wrong, Aisa?" the miniaturized giant asked.

"I wanna take my shoes off and walk in the grass, but April says I have to look classy, or else I can’t go to the gallery." Aisa looked close to weeping. "Do you think they’ll be mad if I’m barefoot just a little bit?"

"I’d be more mad at Chimney for landing a train in their garden." Aeincha said.

"Mother, Father!" Mary skipped up to the front doors and knocked excitedly. "I’m back, and April’s back, and Uncle Galdino is back, and I wanna show you all my new frieeeends!"

Mary’s mother, the woman with brown hair, red eyes, and a red robe answered the door and smiled at her daughter. "Mary, you’re finally back!" She bent down to hug her. "How was your visit to Water 7?"

"It was so much fun! Me and April went to space on our flying train, we visited a music planet where me and a raccoon girl sang karaoke, then a giant monster tried to kill us, then we fought space-pirates on an even bigger train, THEN we flew to America and beat up a man with funny underpants!"

"That sounds like quite the adventure!" Rosa replied jubilantly at her daughter’s imagination. "And… April, hello!" She looked up and saw her niece approach, going over to hug her. "I haven’t seen you in years! You’re such a big girl now…"

"Hello, Aunt Rosa." April blushed, hugging the woman with one arm. "I just thought about showing my friends the place I grew up. Er, partly grew up."

"Look, Mom, these are all the friends I made!" Mary danced around and pointed them out. "This is Chimney, and Aisa, and Apis, that’s Gonbe, and look!" She reached into Aisa’s bag and pulled out the two tinies. "These are their dolls, Aeincha and Mocha! Of course, Mocha’s normally bigger, but now she’s tiny, and they’re so cute!" She pressed them to her cheek lovingly.

"We still have lungs!" they choked.

"It’s wonderful to meet all of you." Rosa smiled politely. They looked in the doorway when Mary’s father appeared, the man with short brown hair, black eyes, wearing a midnight-blue tux. "Alvin, Mary’s back! And she brought April and her friends."

"I thought I heard commotion outside." The man chuckled, smiling at the group. "It’s a pleasure, really. …" He frowned when he looked at the slim adult with the drooped face. Galdino was staring resentfully at him. "Hello, Galdino."
“Alvin.”

“…” The girls felt the awkward silence between them. “Shall we… adjourn inside?”

The friends and adults were at the dining room table after lunch was prepared for them. Gonbe was on the floor and chewing up carrots that were cut up and dropped in a bowl. Chimney, who was wearing a red bowtie on her chest to make her look fancy, was forcefully tugging on her piece of steak in her big teeth. She stopped when she glanced up at Mary’s parents, who stared with curious expressions. Chimney sighed, putting the steak down so she could cut it and eat it like a proper lady.

“We actually expected Mary home much sooner.” Rosa said. “She was only supposed to be in Water 7 for three days, at most.”

“I was, but I was having so much fun with April’s friends, I got sidetracked!” Mary spoke brightly. “Whoopsie!”

“You lose time quickly when you’re traveling in space or demoralizing a country.” Apis commented, eating a pea. “So, uh, COUGHHUAHIsmaryadopted?”

“Apis!” April hissed.

“Oh! Excuse me, Mr. and Mrs. Goldenweek.” Apis smiled with mock politeness.

“Why would you ask a thing like that?” Alvin asked.

“Oh, I dunno. It’s just, neither of you have blonde hair or blue eyes, so I thought it was interesting.”

“Mary isn’t adopted.” Rosa chuckled. “Though we have considered adoption at one point, if I do recall. But April started coming over a lot, so Mary had her for a big sister.”

“Mrs. Goldenweek, did anyone tell you you have really pretty eyes?” Aeincha complimented.

“Well, thank you! You’re a very kind little doll, Aeincha.”

“Heheh, actually I’m a Lilliputian.” She blushed. “If you want, I know lots of good eyeliner that goes with red.”

“Uncle Alvin, Aunt Rosa, we actually wanted to ask you something.” April spoke. “Do you remember the Guertena Gallery you took us to when we were kids?”

“Oh, yes, that place was lovely.” Rosa replied. “I remember those pretty red jewels they were selling at the gift shop. I still have them!”

“I found that museum rather odd.” Alvin spoke awkwardly. “Mr. Guertena had a peculiar mind for… designs.”

“Alvin’s not as appreciative for art.”

“I would say so.” Galdino remarked smugly, sipping a teacup.

“Well, as far as our father was concerned, our work at Adams Tech was more profitable than Galdino’s sculptures.” Alvin informed. “You couldn’t have been surprised when the family fortune was passed to me. Of course, it’s not as odd as Bertrand’s style. …He liked to make sculptures out of his unusually lavish earwax.”
“Yeah, his son makes sculptures at the KND Museum.” April said. “But anyway, me and Mary were wondering if you’d like to take all of us.” Mary’s smile faltered at the inclusion of her name, and she slowed down in eating.

“To the Guertena Gallery?” Alvin asked. “I suppose we could… What’s the occasion?”

“Lately, me and Mary have been having nightmares about it. We don’t know why, but we wanna go there and ease our thoughts about it.”

“It’s not a scary place, is it?” Mary asked, forcing a smile. “It has lots of silly paintings. And there’s a pretty big rose sculpture! Mom, that’s your name, Rosa!”

“It would be nice for a visit.” Rosa agreed. “Alright, then. After we’re finished eating, we can all drive downtown when you’re ready.”

“I hope we won’t encounter any monkeys while we’re there.” Alvin said, standing up as he left the room. “I’m going to call the lab to see if everything’s okay.”

“Who was this Guertena, anyway?” Aisa asked. “Was he a famous artist?”

“Not incredibly famous.” April answered. “He lived in the late 1800s. But I think he died of a heart attack after the century.” She ate a piece of steak. “I wanna paint a picture of it sometimes.”

“Um, Honey?” Alvin called from the foyer. “When did we get a train in our front yard?”

“I’m charging for rides.” Chimney stated. (“Gyom-gyom.”)

Louisiana Bayou

Melody and Danny Jackson were calmly rowing their canoe down a murky swamp river. The air was filled with seaweed-green mist that blocked the sky, making the swamp appear dark, even though it was broad daylight. “There’s nothing I enjoy about this.” Danny said, afraid of the lack of sunlight and various sounds of miscellaneous, unseen animals. “Why couldn’t we just search from our C.O.O.L.-B.U.S.? It’s not like a magic tornado would’ve sucked us in.”

“Did you forget how foggy it was from the sky? And I wasn’t gonna fly too low and get gunk all over my ship. It’s safer in Sector X’s treehouse.”

“But why couldn’t they come with us?”

“Because there’s apparently some crazy rumor about monkeys with guns going around and taking over treehouses, and they wanna be around in case they come. Blame Emily for that.”

“Assuming this Mermaid Swamp does exist, what makes you think we’re going to find Manaphy? As far as Oceana’s terms go, this would be the ‘Outlands,’ and an Ocean Prince in a lawless area of his country is asking for trouble. Besides, how does an injured Fairy Princess expect to get healed here?”

“But if the Ocean Prince and a Fairy Princess turned up anywhere else, you’d think there’d be news about it, from anywhere, and at least one or two KND sectors would’ve learned about it. Our best guess is a mysterious swamp that not many people know about. Either that, or some bad guys captured them.”

“So why didn’t we place our bets on GUN first.” Danny asked rhetorically.
Melody and Danny stopped by a large boat that was suspended in a tree. The siblings jumped over to the tree’s ladder and climbed into the boat’s opening. Ancient furniture and fancy decorations made up the interior. An odd smell emitted from the cauldron in the center, where the short, wrinkly woman in the white robe and shades to indicate blindness was stirring a brew. “Can you believe that scruffy old Cranky got away with stealing mah song, Juju?” Mama Odie asked her snake companion. “Twenty years since that failed lawsuit, and I still can’t get over it.”

“Excuse me?” Danny spoke up, knocking the side of the wooden entrance. “I hope we aren’t interrupting something.”

“JUJU!” Odie spun and swung her ladle, the snake ducking. “Why ain’tchu tell me we have guests? I hope you got those magazines off the floor.”

Juju nodded, using his tail to sweep a pile of adult animal magazines under the chair. Melody and Danny were unsure, but they assumed it was okay to walk further in. “Is your name Mama Odie?” Melody asked. “The kids in the treehouse down the river told us about you…”

“Yes yes, you have the right 1100-year-old blind woman.” Odie replied, walking to the other side of the boat to shuffle through supplies in cabinets.

“Good, ’cause we were afraid of confusing you with the other old woman in that mud cave.” Danny joked, earning a giggle from Melody.

“Save your jokes for the news, Danny!” Odie threw her ladle at his head. “Them’s the only kids that’ll like ‘em.”

“Do you know us?” Melody asked.

“Of course I do, Melody!” She turned around, bringing armfuls of colored jars to the cauldron. “You’d be surprised how long a fortune-telling cauldron stays runnin’ in the magic world.” She dropped the items on the floor beside the cauldron. “Even with all the Chocolate Plum Stew I be cookin’ in it! Eh HEH heh he…” Odie opened a pink glass jar and dipped a single eyeball in the soup. She peeped into the jar with confusion. “JUJU!” She screamed at her snake. “Where are my warthog eyes? Did you invite some boys over when I was out walkin’?”

Juju frightfully shook ‘no.’ …He began to lightly nod yes, then more quickly, then he made a sheepish smile and shrugged. (Since he’s a snake, he stuck his back end up to imply a shrug.)

“Then GIT OUT to the swamp and git some MORE! And I don’t want no complaining about them mermaids.”

“Wait, did you say mermaids?” Melody asked.

“Yes, the ones in the Mermaid Swamp. You were gonna ask about that, weren’tchu?”

“Does that mean you know if Manaphy’s there or not?” Danny asked.

“Oh, I can’t see what goes on in the swamp. In fact, not too many humans can. Only animals can find their way through the swamp. They can bring humans along with ‘em, but that’s only if they get through all the predators.”

“Okay.” Danny spoke with mock interest, still not liking the sound of this place. “What’s the science behind that?”

“The mermaids there emit a sound and smell that only most animals can smell or hear, especially fish. That’s how they lure ‘em in. Then legend has it they COOK ‘EM like pork beans!” She banged her cauldron with the ladle.

“O-kay, we’re gonna go.” Danny tried to walk away.

“Danny,” Melody grabbed his shirt, “that’s the perfect reason Manaphy would be lured there. We have to check it out. Mama Odie, can you lead us?”

“Who, me? I can’t even tell the color of these circles over mah eyes,” she touched her sunglasses, “you think I can git through a foggy swamp? Naw, Juju here can take you. Won’tchu, boy?” The snake nodded. “And they’ll make sure you get them warthog eyes, won’t they?”

“Can we at least have magic charms to ward off evil spirits or whatever?” Danny asked.

“Chill out, whippersnapper, evil spirits only show up every other Monday. Just get your rumpuses over to that swamp—and quickly now! Y’all don’t wanna try traveling this fog when it’s nighttime!”

Melody forced an anxious sigh. “Alright, let’s go.” She allowed Juju to slither up her arm.

“Come on, Melody, you can’t be serious about going in there.” Danny said as his sister climbed back down to the canoe.

“Danny, there’s nothing to worry about, we brought a lantern, and we can protect ourselves with waterbending. Though it might be best not to tell the mermaids we’re royalty.”

Danny released a worried sigh and climbed down to join her. “You’re just not afraid ‘cause you know they’re gonna eat me first.”

Juju pointed his head in the right direction, so the Jacksons rowed the boat into the green mist. Their presence was indicated only by the lit lantern. A crocodile’s eyes were peeping out of the surface of the swamp, watching them.

Deep within the swamp’s green mist was what appeared to be a mountain. The mountain had an odd shape about it, a crocodile head with a crown on top, and two clawed arms reaching forward. If one could see closer through the thick fog protecting it, they would see it wasn’t actually a mountain. It was a fortress. A fortress that had run aground here from the sea.

An eerie breathing was echoing through the halls of this fortress. The master was sitting in his throne, gazing at a glass prison cell where a slim, blue-skinned figure was down on her knees, faced away from him. The teardrop-shaped gem on her back was cracked. A single Kritter – a man-size crocodile on two legs, wearing an open shirt with his crew’s crocodile Jolly Roger – jogged down the fortress halls and arrived at the throne room. The Kritter told his King the news. “Ahhh… I see.” The large crocodile’s deep voice echoed. “Well then… make sure they’re kept safe.” The Kritter nodded and jogged back down the hall.

“Uhhhh Master Kroctus, Sir?” A Klump spoke through the PA. “The guys you were expecting are waiting for you.”

“Good… It’s time for a meeting.”

King Kroctus helped his overweight self off of the throne and trudged down the halls. He lightly shook the halls with his weight, and his red cape blew behind him. The spiky golden crown sat firm on his head. Finally, King K. Rool made it to the meeting room. He sat at one end of the rectangle table. “New and old members of Team Gnaa… I’m glad you all could make it.”
The other people around the table were King Bowser Koopa, Dr. Ivo Robotnik, and Gruntilda Winkybunion. “So… what did you call this meeting for… Miss EiznekCm?” Kroctus looked up at the blonde-haired woman on the opposite end of the table.

The Foster’s stage dragged on a little longer than I planned, mostly ‘cause of the end scenes. You probably don’t need to hear the Foster’s Friends come from the show with the really long name. :P The General Guy is from Paper Mario, with a little bit of General Fishcake from Bo-bobo. And remember Mama Odie from Princess and Frog, she was in Firstborn. Next time, we will maybe go to Termina. L’ars.

Chapter Summary

MaKayla and Nerehc take Cheren to Termina to help him master his Demon State.

Anyone up for strawberry milk? Today’s code uses Atbash Cipher, however the letters are scattered.

Chapter 44: Demon State

Foster’s; Extremeasaur Cage

“So you’ve made your first Friend.” Morgan said nonchalantly as Sunni was still hugging Peas to her cheek. “I suppose if you were desperately hungry and had nothing else to eat, he would make a decent snack.”

“Ewww, I don’t like food that screams.” Sunni said. “But Aunt Morgan, haven’t you ever stopped to think, I dunno, maybe Imaginary Friends are more than just a way of entertainment? I mean, these little guys still have hearts, don’t they?”

“Imaginary hearts aren’t the same as real hearts. The only feelings the Friends have are those that the creator feels. They’re made only to suit the creator’s desires. My own siblings, for instance, were the ideal family I’ve always wanted, a brother to fight with, sisters to joke around with, all of them to support me. But in time, I learned to embrace the fact they weren’t real. It may seem like these Friends have natural feelings, but that’s only their illusion. Imaginary Friends.”

“The same woman that attempted to kill, and humiliated her nephew in front of a bunch of rich people, is lecturing me about Imaginary Friends.” Sunni stared reprovingly, as did Peas. “I think I’ll believe what I want about this matter. Aunt Morgan, even if you’re right about Imaginary Friends, they still make kids happy, and they leave a lot of good memories by the time they’re adults. Besides…” Sunni frowned regrettably and looked away, “sometimes you kinda feel sorry for them. They have to rely on their creators or psychicbenders if they wanna survive. They’re forced to be dependent on people. If they had as much freedom as humans did, I’m sure they would want to be more than… ‘entertainment.’”

“Perhaps you’re right.” Morgan replied. “It’s merely the law of nature that was set in place for them. But we can’t change nature. Imaginary is what it is.”

“That’s still no reason to show favoritism for the monsters.” Sunni glared. “If you’re noble enough to pay this place’s mortgage, you’d give your power to all the other Friends, too. Make friends with them, give them a sense that they won’t be forgotten and fade away.”

“I’m not going to waste my time with useless Friends who aren’t even-”

“Then I will.” Sunni declared. “I’ll make contracts with every Friend in this house. I have more Psychic Chi than I know what to do with, I guess I’ll share it.”

“Hm.” Morgan made a wry smile. “Now you’re obviously just making false devotions to imply that you know better than me. Sunni, I think you do have potential as a psychicbender, so don’t waste it all on these living child’s toys.”

“Or is someone afraid that my army of Imaginaries will kick the crap out of your Extremeasaurus?”

“If you want to exhaust yourself, you can try. But even on their terms, you couldn’t possibly make friends with all of them. I’d love to stay and watch you attempt, but I have business to attend to. Do me a favor and tell Cheren not to break into my parties.”

“Pfft, tell Mom not to sneak him into your parties.” Sunni eye-rolled.

As Morgan was about to walk away, she stopped at this statement. “…Mikaela snuck him into my party?”

“What? No, not my mom, I meant Mom the… person. Th-The Corporate President.”

 “…I see.” Morgan resumed walking. “My mistake.”

They waited in the cell until Morgan’s footsteps faded. “So um, you’re really gonna make contracts with everyone?” Peas asked.

“Sigh, I guess I have to now.” Sunni sighed. “Know a good place to start?”

“SNOOOOORE… shhhhhh…” Slifer the Sky Dragon made a breeze with his snoring. Sunni and Peas looked at the monster, then exchanged a glance with each other.

“Sunni, please don’t.”

“I’m not, I’m not. …”

Delightful Mansion

“How many retired supervillains just have a Dimension Transportifier sitting in their house, gathering dust?” MaKayla asked as Cheren was turning on the machine.

“Don’t question it.” Cheren smiled coolly. “Just enjoy the fact that Father’s still in Arctic Prison, which means we have this baby to ourselves.” The machine took a few minutes to power up, but the pink swirling vortex made its presence known.

“Let’s try not to get separated like me and Wendy did.” Kayla cautioned. “The byway is really messed up.”

“Hang on, I just realized something.” Cheren said. “If you and Wendy went to another dimension, doesn’t that mean your Negatives did, too?”

“Oh yeah, I guess so.” Kayla realized. “Nerehc, do you know if anything happened to…” she tried to say her name backwards, “Al-yak-kam and… Ednew?”

“Not really.” Nerehc shook. “Come on, let’s go in.” Without waiting another moment, the three jumped into the portal and surfed through the Dimensional Byway.

Termina

They came out of the Transportifier in Father’s mansion in Termina, exiting the house to breathe the similar atmosphere of this parallel dimension. Termina Virginia looked the very same as Hyrule Virginia, same neighborhood, same school, same treehouse over the same Uno House.
“Wanna go say ‘hi’ for me, Nerehc?” Cheren asked.

The Negative shrugged and flew up to the treehouse’s balcony. He cupped his hands on either side of his mouth and bellowed, “RAINBOW MONKEYS TASTE LIKE UNICORN BARF.”

“What?!” a girl’s voice cried from inside. Cheren recognized her. “I’ll have you know unicorn barf is used as ice cream toppings after it’s been cleaned by…” When Kellie Beatles stepped out onto the balcony, she gaped at who was flying over the edge. “Cheren?…”

“That’s Nerehc, Kellie!” Cheren exclaimed, waving his arms for her attention.

Kellie beamed with joy. “Cheren!! Harry, Lissa, Celeste,” she dashed inside, “Cheren’s here, Cheren’s here! Lower the stairs!”

In time, a set of wooden stairs was lowered for Cheren and Kayla to walk up. The three entered the living room where the sandy-blond Stork girl rushed up to greet them. “Yo, dude! It’s been forever since we saw you!”

“Cheren, what’s up!” Harry Uno grinned happily, joined by Melissa Gilligan, Thomas Drilovsky, and Truman Kirman.

“Finally decided to pay us a visit, huh?” Melissa asked.

“Although I guess our location’s pretty inconvenient.” Truman blushed. “Another dimension and all.”

“Good thing we know a shortcut.” MaKayla smiled. “My name’s MaKayla, by the way. Thank you guys for helping Cheren save Miyuki.”

“Well, she was trying to destroy the planet anyway, so… it was our pleasure.” Melissa said. “What’s new with you? Stop anymore moon crashes?”

“Funny story, actually.” Cheren scratched his head.

Nerehc rose up before the camera. “Half an hour later:”

The six Sector V members were wearing derpy faces. “Well, those aren’t things that happen every day.”

“So when Majora turned the moon into a monster and tried to destroy us, that was actually what was going to happen?” Harry asked.

“That’s what Zanifr told me.” Cheren confirmed. “He used Miyuki’s timebending to speed up the moon’s years and power it with dark energy. I don’t actually understand most of what he did…”

“My prediction is that the moons are destined to rupture, one way or another.” MaKayla said. “Majora was only trying to instigate it faster. But the darknessbending was probably his own touch.”

“So are you here to try and stop it or what?” Harry asked.

“Um… kind of.” Cheren answered. “We need you guys to take us to DunBroch Ruins. There’s something there we’re trying to find.”

“You mean that place you went to without us because you were mad?” Thomas remarked.
“Yes, that place.” Cheren stared. “If you aren’t busy, can a few of you take us?”

“I’ll take you.” Melissa complied. “But I don’t want to stay too long. We’ve been a little busy with our own things.”

“Cheren tells us part of the adventure involves time-travel, so that might help.” Kayla replied. “Kind of a coincidence, because I wanted to ask, Cheren, didn’t you have special relations-”

“How DO YOU HAVE TO SEE EVERYTHING IN MY TIMELINE?!” Cheren flushed hotly.

“Heeheehee, okay, okay! …When we’re alone, then.” Kayla smirked.

KND Arctic Prison

“He’s in here.” The guard told Dillon, leading him into a private cell. “You have 5 minutes.” He shut the door.

Dillon approached the dark cell slowly. The prisoner inside had thick, mechanical cuffs over his hands, which were chained to the wall. “Doflamingo?”

The leader of Sector DR let his head hang back, an uncaring frown on his features. The blue round sunglasses covered his eyes. “It’s me. Dillon. I know you and I were enemies when we last met… but I wanted to apologize for… for what my dad did to your dad. We can’t deny that what your dad was doing was bad, but… we really wish it could’ve gone differently than it did. So, with that in mind, we’d like it if your team joined the KND again. We’ll make up for what my dad did as long as you help us with our mission. We already forgave your sister.”

“…Is that the best you have to offer me?” Doffy Jr. raised his head. “You seem to have forgotten something. I’m still the Prince of Dressrosa. Even if my father committed a crime, I won’t forgive your father for murdering him. You think simply promising a friendship is going to erase your past sins. But let me tell you something.” Doflamingo got up and walked as close to Dillon as he could before the chains pulled him back. “Even if the World Government is evil… your KND is just as evil. ‘Friendships’ cannot solve everything. You can remember that… Dillon.”

“…” Dillon turned around to walk out of the room. “You can’t blame a guy for trying.” He said before shutting the door.

Termina; DunBroch Ruins

Melissa parked the S.C.A.M.P.E.R. on an area of grassland a few miles away from the ruined town (since Cheren insisted the walk was nice and Kayla agreed). On the way, Cheren, MaKayla, and Nerehc told her a few stories about their recent adventures, and Melissa didn’t know whether to feel jealous, or relieved that her team didn’t get involved in so much action. Melissa told them about how Truman’s been feeling very feverish, ever since his Delightfulization during Majora’s attack. “That’s why I don’t wanna stay here too long.” she told them. “Truman is… really important to me, and I wanna be there to help if he needs it. So if you’re time-traveling, I dunno how you actually work that, but…”

“We might need a few more favors after this.” Nerehc noted. “But we’ll fly back to your place first.”

“Alright, let’s go.” Cheren declared. “Hopefully the Warp Gate is still in the town ruins. We’ll go back in time to see Merida with that.”
Stage 52: Ancient Ruin

Mission: Find the Ocarina of Time.

Act 1: The Road

Cheren led the group across the field. It looked the same as when he’d first visited seven months ago. A gray cloudy sky, peaceful grasslands, forests in the distance, but no signs of human life. He walked by a small hole—“Cough!” some gas emitted from it, making him choke. He looked behind to see Kayla and Nerehc trying to catch up, though the two were viewing around at the sights.

“Chereeeeeeen!”

Cheren heard the Scottish girl’s cry in the distance. His heart filled with delight. “Guys, did you hear that!”

“What?” Kayla asked.

“Cheren, wait!” His friends chased him.

“Chereeeeeeen!” Her voice was still faint, but he knew he was getting closer. The ruins of the ancient town were in sight. “Chereeeeeeen!”

He saw her among the ruins, waving her arms, her frizzy orange hair swaying. “MERIDA!”

He jumped a few broken walls, crossed some hills, and stepped over the broken buildings to…Merida’s expression was eerie and cold. She had no legs… the bottom of her green dress was ragged, dangling from her blue ghostly body. “Cheren…” Cheren was deafened to every other sound except a howling wind, but he couldn’t feel anything. He was unable to move, and his vision was centered on Merida, everything else spinning and blurring.

Merida’s eyes became black holes, her face more ghoulish, as she glided toward Cheren and swallowed him in darkness. In a blink, Cheren was in a field of skulls under a red sky. MaKayla’s skin unraveled off of her body before her skeleton collapsed, Aurora and Chris caught on fire and became bones, April Goldenweek’s body melted, Anthony’s limbs were scattered, and Panini’s skin hung on a post like wallpaper. Cheren clasped his head and ran. Chunks of the earth were flying into the heavens, going into rips in space that sucked in galaxies.

“AHHHHH HAHAAHAHAHA, AAAAH HAHAAHAHAHAHA!” Bill Cipher laughed hysterically above all the destruction at a giant size. “WHERE YA GOIN’, Cherry Cakes? The party’s just getting started!”

“BILL!” Cheren glared with malice. “I thought Jessie got rid of you! Why are you back?!”

“You think I’m gonna sleep through the end of the universe (universe universe…)? My master is going to come back to this world, Cherry. I’m just taking a little catnap, but rest assured, I have every intention of GREETING him when he does. But try your best to find those other Keys, it makes great entertainment. Wake me up for hotdogs! Ahhhh hahahahahaha, ah hahahaha…” Bill shrunk into the distant sky as the most terrifying colossus rose from the earth. The demon was a shadow in emerald flames, with a skull for a head. Flashing 8-balls stared at Cheren from his eye sockets. 8888888888888888

Cheren trembled in anger. All of his friends were dead, the universe was coming apart, and there was nothing he could do. "RRRRRRRRRR!" His body caught on fire, letting his Demon State take over. He flew at the demon like a rocket, and the moment he made impact, the world was swallowed in a great explosion.

Cheren was knocked unconscious for who knows how long. When he awoke, he was still in his Demon State, consumed in anger. He was miles up in the sky, in the center of a massive fiery tornado. Pieces of the DunBroch Ruins flew everywhere, and he was on one, close to a wall. Cheren gasped and ducked under a tree when the colossal figure of Legion peeped over, looking for his prey. "I know you're here..." He went away.

Definitely the Termina Legion. Cheren thought. Oh well. He isn't that tough. I'll get 'im when he doesn't suspect. Cheren progressed across the path—lightning struck, and the ground collapsed, leaving him only able to sidle across the thin ledge. He made it across and ducked under a wall when Legion looked over, and waited until the giant began to turn away before he faced a set of Hookshot targets on floating ruins. Some of the targets were turning in place or shifting left-and-right, making it confusing for Cheren as he latched across. Cheren remained on a turning target when Legion made the loop, not spotting Cheren when the target was turned away from him.

Cheren ducked behind a wall when Legion whipped his direction, after he landed on a foothold. Legion directed his vision left-to-right every few seconds, on either side of this windy shaft. Cheren had to jump in the shaft, whip out his Pirate Sail, and float up. When Legion looked over, Cheren let go of his sail to fall softly in the draft, staying behind a piece of wall, then floated up higher when Legion looked away. Cheren made it inside a building, where Stalfos appeared. The skeletons swung swords at him—fast as light, Cheren zipped behind one and sliced it in half with his flaming sword, then he chopped another one up in multiple directions as its bones disintegrated.

Cheren lit on fire, clutched two more Stalfos’ skulls, and had them turn orange before they popped. The last Stalfos leapt at him from behind, but Cheren shot a fire beam and destroyed him. Cheren burst through the wall and rushed across a straight path while Legion was looking the other way. There were stone pendulums kept suspended by pillars, so Cheren had to blow up the pillars using M.A.R.B.L.E.s so the pendulums could swing and hit Legion’s head. He had to duck under a wall when Legion looked over afterward, but when three pendulums struck him, Legion became dizzy. Cheren was able to run to the pile of boulders on the end of the path, light up the powder keg, and blow the boulders away without Legion catching on.

The giant was about to recover, but Cheren was already running up a stairway leading to his head. “AAAAHHH!” Cheren leapt forth and stabbed the giant in the forehead, then the eyes, then the nasal bridge, he stabbed Legion everywhere with his flaming sword. “You died in the other world, now you’ll DIE in this one! RAAAAAAAAH!”

Cheren sliced his head clean off, watching it fall into the burning abyss. He panted, standing on the edge of Legion’s neck. The burning sky was turning dark, his flames died away. Cheren watched his shadow stretch away from his body, becoming a shaded mirror copy of himself. "I guess a hallucination is better than nothing."

“It’s you again?” Cheren asked.

“Nice to see you, too.” Shadow Cheren retorted. “Y’know, it’s not easy being a shadow, when I finally wanna talk to my master, I expect a friendlier greeting.”

“Pardon me if I don’t feel comfortable with you. You’re the Demon State. The one that never listens to me.”

“I’ve BEEN listening to you, remember? You wanted Doflamingo dead, you wanted Viridi dead, you want all those operatives to leave you alone. I do what you’re not strong enough to do.”

“But I don’t WANT you to do those things! I’m not TELLING you to, I wouldn’t want you to, not unless I straight-out say so.”

“It’s not my fault that you aren’t clear about it! All I want is what you want, I wanna survive the same way you do, I wanna stop the Apocalypse, I’m just SICK of all those jackasses getting in the way!”

“I KNOW that I want those things, I’m sick of all those people, too! But if we’re gonna beat them, if we’re gonna stop all this, you and I have to cooperate better.”

“That’s the problem, we CAN’T stop it! You’re lying to yourself! You’re trying to chase a dream, I’m trying to help you accept reality, you can’t stop the Apocalypse. That’s why we can’t cooperate, because you’re an idiot!”

“We CAN stop it! If you would just do what I say, you would see!”

“I’ve BEEN doing what you say!”

“No you WEREN’T! You never do what I say when I let you out!”

“You never TELL ME what to do after that, you just tell me to kill somebody and I DO IT!”

“NO I DON’T! Ugh!” Cheren smacked his forehead. “This is ridiculous! We shouldn’t be having this conversation, you’re my shadow—my firebending—or something. You’re supposed to go along with what I say or do, no argument needed! And I’m not talking about what I think, if a person just does whatever they think about, how can they… Sigh…”

“Cheren? Cheren, wake up.”

“What?” The darkness went away. Cheren was sitting on a scorched ground, MaKayla touching his shoulder.

“Finally.” She said. “That hole we ran by had some Nightmare Toxin leaking out of it. Me and Nerehc breathed it, too…”

Cheren looked around. The grassland was black with soot, as were some of the trees in the forest. The ruins of the town were more destroyed, some of it still had small fires. “What happened?”

“She said you jumped into your Demon State while you were hallucinating about Merida.” Nerehc replied. “Tore up everything. Too bad I missed it.”

“Lucky for both of you, I fought out of my nightmare early.” Kayla stated. “Even if I still think about it… Come on, Cheren. The Warp Gate was in town, right?”

“Right…” Cheren rubbed his head, remembering Merida was in the past. He should’ve saw through that hallucination.

The Warp Gate Cheren had used to travel back 800 years was still intact. Just like last time, he struck the Timeshift Orbs with his Time Chi-imbued Master Sword, and the portal spiraled open. The three jumped inside.

The next second, DunBroch Town was restored and bustling with people. The sky was full of gray clouds, but there were large gaps in-between that showed the blue sky and sunlight. It filled their hearts with delight to see so much people in a land that was once dead. Er, a land that will be dead.

Cheren led them all to the north gates of town, running across the plain between them and the distant castle, which had an unmistakable KND treehouse growing from it. Cheren remembered the first time he was here, helping the soldiers fight through an army of demons and skeletons. DunBroch looked much prettier since then.

There were two guards protecting the front gates of the castle, who were at first quick to deny the strange-clothed kids entry. However, once they examined Cheren, and checked their own posters of ‘approved’ people (Cheren was drawn with a much more proud and manly face than he really was), they shrugged and allowed them all entry.

“So I told Lord Macintosh,” King Fergus proclaimed to his men in the throne room, “Ay don’t mind that yer hair is longer than mine. Ay just wanna know if you’re at least charging the fleas RENT!”

The Scottish men erupted into laughter, which the three operatives were just in time to listen to, smiling in disbelief. “WHAT’D WE MISS?” Cheren exclaimed to all of them.

“Hey, WHO let in a pack of gypsies?” a soldier asked.

“What? Gypsies, you say?” Fergus inquired, looking toward the shuffling soldiers. “Ay hope they aren’t plannin’ to juggle torches in my…” His expression lit up when the kids made it through the crowd. “Hold the phone, boys.” (“What is a phone?”) “It’s… CHEREN! Elinor, look who decided to visit! It’s wee Cheren! And ‘e’s brought a fancy young maid along!”

“Oh, you really are too kind.” MaKayla smiled and blushed, swaying on the spot.

“And who is that boy?” Elinor inquired at Nerehc. “Your twin brother?”

“Yep. We’re two peas and a pod.” Cheren remarked.

“So ‘ave ya decided to marry my daughter?” asked Fergus. “Unless this lass stole yer heart.”

“Fergus, Ay told you they’re too young!” Elinor whispered.

“Ay, me grandfather MaDungus met HIS true love when he was a wee toddler, ‘o says love has an age?”

“Ah ha ha.” Cheren blushed. “Well uh, I’m still reaching a conclusion. I came to see her actually, where is she?”

“She be upstairs in ‘er room. Do ya want me to call ‘er down for ya?”

“No, I… think I’ll surprise her.” Cheren smirked, already going upstairs. “Come on, MaKayla.”

“A’right then. You know, Ay think I can set yer friend up with one o’ the Lords’ sons!”

“I will… see to them myself.” Kayla replied detestably.

In the room Cheren recognized as Merida’s, the Scottish Princess was not there. Cheren only spared a knowing smirk to his comrades and walked onto the bed. Very gently, he creaked the wall passage open, leading MaKayla and Nerehc up a ladder inside a dusty shaft.

They coughed as they emerged above a dusty fireplace, covered in gray as they peeked into the treehouse’s living room. “Willie, did you steal my last Berry Cake again??” questioned the tall boy, Stephen Macintosh.

“Uhhhhhh...” moaned Willie Dingwall.

“You are much too attached to those things.” Arbur MacGuffin replied, walking by while witling a wood crossbow. “You oughta go on a diet, try some steamed carrot stew.”

“Oh, really?” Macintosh turned to him, “And what’s that blue stuff on yer lip?”

“Ay said you ‘ad to. Ay’m not the one in shape.” He smiled witfully.

“Ya dirty little sneak!” Stephen whipped out a sword. “I oughta gut ya and-”

“You boys are HOPELESS.” proclaimed Merida DunBroch as she marched in. “Ay can’t go ONE day without you burglarizing all the food, and when it’s not you, it’s apparently those Dust Sniffers that go crawlin’ around the fireshaft, just like those three over—” The moment she looked and pointed to the fireplace, three gray dust beings were standing there with wide, querying eyes. “AAAAHH!” she panicked. “They’re real!”

“Geh!” Cheren frantically shook, the dust scattering. “Oh drat, we’ve been cornered.”

Merida perked. “Ch...Cheren!”

“Did I arrive announced?” he winked, and soon found himself caught in Merida’s hug.

“What a surprise! It’s been months, Ay thought ya might have forgotten about me!”

“Oh, I could NEVER... hold on, you didn’t happen to forget me, did you?” he asked curiously.

“Fer...Forgotten you?” She let go.

“Yeah, when... um, tell you later.”

“Ay, who is this?” Macintosh questioned, approaching the other dust people. “Found yerself some weird pets?”

MaKayla shook the dust off, “I’m MaKayla; a friend of Cheren’s, and this boy is Nerehc, his... brother. I think you’re acquainted with my friend, Miyuki.”

“The masked girl?” Merida asked.

“Yeah.” Cheren nodded. “MaKayla’s a timebender, too.”

“You guys are all over the place now, aren’t you? What brings ya here, Cheren?”

“Well, um... it’s a crazy story... but we’re looking for the Ocarina of Time.”

“Ocarina of Time?”

“It’s a powerful timebending relic once used by Cheren’s family.” MaKayla explained. “It was left here by Link during his Terminan adventure, and the Giants left it in the Spirit World. And Cheren... well, he also has a second side of him whenever he grows really angry.” Cheren glanced away in regret. “We planned to help him control it. Are there any areas of this kingdom that are... well, really sacred and spiritual?”

“You mean like the Heavenly Ruin?”
“Hey, hang on.” MacGuffin spoke up. “Durin’ one of me and me dad’s excursions, we found this… really strange temple in the cliffside over Madara’s Chasm. It was the strangest temple we’ve ever seen… doesn’t look at all like one of ours. We didn’t go inside ‘cause we thought it mighta been haunted, and I—er, my dad, was scared.”

“And you never brought this up when I visited?” Cheren asked.

“’ey, this was after you left. Ay dunno what it is, but there was somethin’… ghostly about it.”

“Hmmm…” MaKayla closed her eyes. “Yes… I do feel something. Strange spiritual energy… over a giant chasm. I wonder if the Giants hid the ocarina there.”

“Alright, let’s get goin’.” Nerehc fist-palmed. “Anyone’d like to show us the way?”

“Ay know Ay’m goin’.” Merida declared. “Cause I know Cheren can never survive without meh. Anyone else?”

“No way!” Macintosh said. “You know the stories about Madara’s Chasm: legend tells of a fearsome warrior from a far-off land, took on thousands of warriors and destroyed ‘em in a single blow: by destroying the very earth and sending all o’ them to the Underworld. That’s where the chasm leads, and that’s whom it’s named after: Madara.”

“Yeah, well some dead Scottish warrior’s not gonna scare me.” Cheren spoke confidently. “I’ll cross his chasm like a boss.”

“We’ll have you know Madara wasn’t Scottish.” Arbur informed. “’e was from the east. Japan, Ay think.”

“Big deal, he’s still dead. Let’s get going.”

“Hold the fort, boys.” Merida told her teammates before descending down the fireplace.

After the operatives snuck the princess out of the castle, they headed further north, far behind the castle before they reached a tremendous, foggy chasm. The opposite land seemed miles on the other side. “…So one Japanese guy made this, huh?” Cheren asked.

“Yes.” Merida said. “We’re lucky not to be around back then, right?”

“I’m feeling spiritual energy.” MaKayla said, pointing a little to the left. “Over there.”

Nerehc lit his rocket shoes and soared to the direction Kayla pointed, becoming harder to see as he shrank into the mist. He turned around a corner of the opposite canyon wall, completely unseen. … Nerehc flew back as fast as he could afterward. “It’s there.”

Nerehc carried Kayla and Merida across while Cheren glided using the Pirate Sail, falling far behind as a result. Again, Cheren was never a fan of heights, he hated being suspended above where no ground was visible. He hoped Nerehc would come back and carry him the rest of the way, too. … … … Nerehc was a jerk.

Thankfully, there was enough wind to keep Cheren uplifted, and as he swerved around the canyon, the ledge within the enclosing came into view. He set foot on the grassy ground, gazing at the brownish-orange temple of curious design and structure. It looked like aliens had created it, and didn’t look ruined at all in this era. There were lines of light-blue energy, as well as totem poles with same-color spheres. “There was a reason I felt it so well.” Kayla said. “This place is rich with Time Chi. This must be how Majora made that Warp Gate, and why the Giants hid the ocarina
“But who made this place?” Cheren asked.

“I wish we brought Miyuki. She could see its history.”

“Let’s see what this place has.” Nerehc said. “Catch up later.” With that, he flew over the temple and left his friends.

“CHEATER!” Cheren shouted.

“Come on, we’ll explore this place without ‘im.” Kayla said. “Hopefully their hieroglyphics are easy to read.” (Play “Colorful Mist” from Naruto: Shippuden.)

Act 2: The Temple

The ground outside the temple was all lush grass, and the structure’s magnificence was complimented by the sunlight poking through the gray clouds. The door was sealed, but the walls on either side had round slots. MaKayla stood between them and shot Chrono Beams from her hands, and the other two gazed as the lines within the entrance glowed blue. The temple door, which bore the design of a Termina Giant, opened. They were led to a small pond area, enclosed within canyon and temple walls, and cubes floated around in midair. Cheren and Kayla stepped into the opening of the first cube. There were Eye Switches on the opposite wall, which Merida could shoot with arrows to make the cubes flip certain directions. If she turned the cubes to drop her friends in the water, they would have to climb some stairs back to the starting ledge and try again.

The puzzle was too complicated for words, but eventually, they solved it and got to the ledge on the right side. Cheren then pulled Merida over with the Hookshot. The grassy path turned a right corner, but Cheren noticed a short stone in the corner with writing.

If what the man with the strange face says is true, this temple holds the gem of incomparable wisdom and power. With it in my hand, I may finally harness all the inner secrets of our cosmos. To any who should read this stone, if you know my name, I was victorious, and the gem is no longer here. If you do not know me, the gem is truly too powerful for mortal understanding. Heed my words, and turn away.

“Sorry, I don’t know you.” Cheren remarked. He hurried after his friends to another water area enclosed within walls. Cheren attempted to shoot part of the water with an Ice Arrow, but the frozen platform melted away in seconds. MaKayla climbed down to the step before the surface and stuck her finger in the water, pulling it out and shaking the heat off. “This water’s piping hot. But it doesn’t look…” She put her finger in another part. “This part’s cold. Mixed temperatures?…”

Cheren shot his Ice Arrow at another random area, and the frozen platform stayed. “Crazy science for the win.” Around the pool were three odd tiki statues with Timeshift Orbs in the mouths. Cheren froze multiple ice platforms for Kayla to jump around, having trouble finding the cool spots. Kayla collected the orbs one at a time and brought them to the small temple room on the far left corner. They were each set in a slot, and Cheren and Merida glided over to join her. The three orbs caused a giant clock to emerge from the floor. It was like the turntables in Cheren and Merida’s adventure, they could stick their swords into individual slots and turn it. The clock hands turned before stopping at 7:30. Lightning flashed before it started to rain.
The sky became darker, and the hot areas of the pool emitted steam. The team was able to swim through the cool route and climb back onto the previous starting ledge. They returned to the pool with the cubes, seeing no other way to go. They decided to dive into this pool, and a tunnel led within the wall underneath. They swam through as Merida used her sword to cut up the Lockjaws coming at them. The tunnel directed upward to a surface within the cave, where a waterwheel was turning thanks to the rain. They grabbed one of the wheel’s pegs and were lifted up to the opening, climbing onto the grassy ground above.

The air was a misty dark-blue under the rain, but they could make out a large area of temple stretching partway over the next field. They walked down a stairway, through a path between the temple walls. They didn’t see it coming through the mist, but a large blue eye opened up on an archway, blasting a blue beam along the ground toward the group. They flipped back and took cover within an enclosing on the right wall. Cheren jumped out, tried to shoot the eye, but did no effect, quickly jumping back before it shot. Merida noticed the sequence of far-apart platforms in this enclosing, jumping up them to get across the wall. She got behind the archway, seeing the opposite side of the eye, and she and Cheren shot both eyes simultaneously to destroy them.

“You know, you never told me why yer lookin’ for this ocarina.” Merida mentioned. “What’s been goin’ on?”

Cheren sighed, “I am really tired of telling people this story. Look, it’s a future thing, you don’t need to worry about it.”

The path led to an open area with a short totem that sat a miniature sun, and a tall totem that had a mini moon. The gate had a glowing emblem designed like the Earth over it. Both totems were stationed in carved paths, so they could only be pushed within those paths. They pushed the totems at a perfect position where the Earth aligned with the moon, aligned with the sun. This solar eclipse caused the rain to turn into snow. “The machinery of this temple is manipulating the weather.” MaKayla observed. “I never thought about using timebending like that.”

The gate opened, allowing them up a stairway. This area was a wide open field with temple walls in every other direction. There were Crystal Switches stationed on pillars, and when struck with arrows, random tiles rose at different heights around the field. The group had to figure out another maze regarding which switches raised what tiles, and some of the switches were concealed inside hollow pillars, in which Cheren had to drop M.A.R.B.L.E.s in from the top. Several pillars had letters on them: in no specific order, they were L I Z M N W V F G H M N.

They had to get MaKayla onto two platforms to grab Timeshift Orbs, then they eventually found the right set of platforms to make a path to a ledge to the next area. This garden was enclosed within canyon walls, and a circle of brown-orange tikis surrounded a circular patch of snow. MaKayla set the Timeshift Orbs into two slots that caused a clock to emerge from a wall. Merida climbed the hour hand that was aiming at the 6, up to the minute hand as she stuck her sword in the gap. She let herself fall, pulling the minute hand with her so it whirled around rapidly and turned the hours. At 12:00, the snow was gone, letting sunlight shine.

“What the heck are you guys doing?” Nerehc asked, sitting atop a cliff before floating down to them.

“Changing nature, what’re you doing?” Cheren retorted.

“Waiting for you guys.”

“We could’ve gotten through there faster if you’d helped.”
“Yeah, but how do you develop?”

“That’s a good question,” MaKayla sighed. “I think… this is the place.” They faced the light-brown metallic circle in the center of the tikis. MaKayla breathed through her nose and closed her eyes. “Yeah…” She stepped out of her shoes and approached the circle. “Alright, Cheren. We’re going to enter the Spirit World from here.” She sat cross-legged, and Cheren sat directly in front of her as they locked hands. “Now, focus. Clear your mind and soul of any obstructions, and our path will be set.”

“Have you ever done this before?”

“Yes. I’ve made regular visits to the Spirit World since I was 5.”

“Wow, really? How come?”

“Oh, something happened, just… It’s nothing.”

“Come oooon. Tell me.” He smirked.

“Sigh, well… Back when we were in kindergarten, we had a teacher named Mrs. Sheryl. That was a time when I wasn’t too into anything, just playing and coloring like a normal kid. She was a really sweet woman, showed me how to draw a bird, she played blocks with me when no one else would… we just had that connection. But then—it happened outta nowhere: a mugger broke into the school; I dunno what for, and found his way to our classroom. The rest of the class made a run for it while Ms. Sheryl held him off, but I stayed behind and watched. He… stabbed her in the chest three times before he ran.”

“Whoa… I’m sorry.” Cheren felt bad about asking her now.

“Well naturally, I was pretty traumatized for awhile, but; that’s when Mom told me about it: the Spirit World. She told me about the place where all people go to when they die, and if I wanted to, I could visit there. Eventually I calmed down after a few months, when I started meditating with her. Then when I was good and ready, we… Ascended.”

“Ascended?”

“It’s when a mortal’s soul is uplifted into the Spirit World before their death. A person that becomes spiritually connected is able to Ascend into the Spirit World as a means of searching into their selves. When I went there, it was the most beautiful thing in the whole world. And my mom took me to find my teacher. …She was teaching a class of 5-year-olds who’d also died.”

“Mmmm.” Cheren noticed the teary smile form on her face.

“Since then, I’ve never been as afraid of dying, knowing we were bound for a happy place. But still… the sight of blood makes me panic. And I couldn’t bear it if someone I was close to died. Seeing that death enabled me to see spirits, and the Hollows as a result. But my bond with Clockwork came naturally. And when I first saw the Apocalypse coming… I knew I had to stop it.”

“And we are going to stop it.” Cheren looked at her with passionate eyes. “We’ll find the Twenty Keys and open the Gate before the Government or Team Gnik have a chance to stop us.”

“Yes… there always was a special fire about you. A fire that can burn through anything. And I know, what lies beyond the Gate will be more fierce and powerful than anything we can imagine. That fire is what will burn it down. I want to help you ignite.”
“Let’s do it!” Cheren gripped Kayla’s hands and shut his eyes tight.

“Don’t get too eager. Only a weightless soul may Ascend to the spirits. Your heart is still filled with anguish.”

“Well, how do I get rid of it???”

“Just relax, and focus… Face your inner demon, and take his soul with yours.”

They sat in silence for several minutes. Things steadily grew silent, things steadily grew dark. MaKayla disappeared. All Cheren could see now were the tan metal circle, the bright green grass surrounding it, alit as though sun were shining, even though everywhere else was pitch-black. Cheren opened his eyes and stood, walking forward with a sure expression. He stopped and looked down when his shadow stretched before him, detaching and standing at his height. His black body alit a tiny amount, to a very dark tone of Cheren’s colors. It glared and spoke in a fashion like Nerehc.

“Back again, huh?” Cheren’s shadow asked.

“Yeah. I’m a bit more calmed down.”

“Yeah, not for LONG. You know you’re just gonna DIE, why not kill yourself?”

“That seems a tad excessive.”

“Look at how much TIME you wasted! You spent 4 months KEEPIN’ this a secret, you got less than 30 days ‘til it happens, and everybody just FORGOT you for a day! You’ve done absolutely NOTHING all this time. Just letting all your buddies run happy and clueless, only to break all their spirits with the fact they’re going to die. You expect any of them to be any stronger before it comes; heck, YOU’RE probably the most powerful kid in your army, and what’ve YOU got to show? How do YOU know what’s going to turn out, if you’re gonna find the Keys, how can you be so sure you’ll save everyone from what you already know is unavoidable? And why are you wasting what’s left of your life trying to?!”

“Because…” Cheren presented the Book of KND from his pocket, “I have hope. The kind of hope only snot-nosed kids are stupid enough to believe in. Fine. I don’t expect to be at God’s level by the end of this month, and I don’t expect everyone else to. All I can do is keep everyone hopeful, and promise them that I CAN stop it. That I can give them a future. That we will all have the power to do our part.”

“That’s IT?! Hope? What do you expect HOPE to do for you?! This isn’t a fairytale where you can just WISH for a miracle, and if your GODS cared a damn bit, they woudla done somethin’ about this. How can you be so sure of yourself?”

“Because…” Cheren stretched a smile as joyous and tearful as MaKayla’s, “because I’m a silly little kid whose parents have rotted his mind with that ideology. And I’ve got such a big ego, I’m the King of the World. And AS King of the World, you oughta do what I say.”

“Like I’ll ever! I don’t serve any king who cries like a pansy!”

“Yes you do.” Smiling mischievously, Cheren wobbled forward and put an arm around his shadow’s neck. “Because we are one silly kid.”

“No we are not!”
“You are Cheren Uno.” He spoke very quietly in his ear.

“I am NOT!”

“We… are Cheren Uno.”

There was something about Cheren like a magnetic pull. That silly little smile that looked so annoying. Thinking he was the King of the World. What people followed him? Those silly little twerps of his that followed his every order. He ordered them to help stop the Apocalypse. Like they could follow such a request. He almost wanted to play along with him. Just try to stop the Apocalypse. Satisfy his twerpy little mind. Heh… if only..

The shadow embraced Cheren in his own hug. He had fallen into his trap. “You are one slick little monkey.” were his final words before his essence dispersed into Cheren. Cheren stared at his arms as they brimmed, feeling his body alight with sun-orange flames. The light returned to the world, as did MaKayla, Merida, and Nerehec, and he raised his fiery arms in victory. (End song.)

Cheren gained control of his Demon State! He has finally awakened himself as a firebender! After accumulating enough energy, he can enter this Fury Mode whenever he likes, but he’ll be exhausted when it ends.

Whirling his arms, he threw them sunward and unleashed a straight ray of flames. “AAAALL RIGHT!! I’m finally a bender like my siblings!!”

“I know, that’s so great!” MaKayla beamed, Merida clapping excitedly in the background. “Too bad you can’t use it now.”

His flames vanished. ”WHAT?”

“Well, now we have to go in the Spirit World. Can’t use bending there. Or your weapons.”

“Aaaaawwwww. But how will I defend myself? Is Fi at least going?”

The spirit emerged, “Master, although I will be able to see your progress from here, I will not be able to assist you directly. I may still provide info for you telepathically.”

“Well… good enough. Let’s do it.”

Both he and MaKayla sat down again cross-legged. “Now… just close your eyes and look inside yourself… find your spiritual center.”

“Siiigh…” He closed his eyes. “Fiiind my center… bееее a spirit… I, am, a spirit… I eat nothing but onions and banana juice… my skin is so shriveled, I’m skeletal… I am an airbender… I am air… I am… wind… I’m bald… I am-“

“Okay none of those things apply to you.” Kayla said quickly.

“Well how the hell am I SUPPOSED to go in the Spirit World?! I don’t have time for all that CRAP!”

“Cheren, every person has their own spiritual center, and it’s never easy to find. Think about what applies to you. Think about what makes your soul, and let that uplift you to the higher realm. What makes… Cheren.”

“What makes… me…” Cheren thought long… but not hard ‘cause he felt like that never works.
What did make his soul… his responsibility as Supreme Leader… his duties to his organization and… to the universe. His mission was to stop the Apocalypse and bring peace of mind to kids and people everywhere. All he desired was a universe where kids can run around and act like idiots, save the world from impending doom in pretend games, not for real. But to achieve such a world… he needed to set the example. In a pretend world where he was crazy overpowered, he can do anything, never giving his enemies the advantage… because he was the big hero who would save everything. He was the hero that was above all the rest… so above, he was the King. Yes… he was the King. The King of… the Whole World. He ruled on high… so very high… as the World’s King… so… above it all… above… high…

His body was gone, for he no longer felt the ground beneath his rear. He was soaring high, high into the sky, past the clouds, past the stars, in a single blur. He had… Ascended.

He had only been to the Spirit World once, er, six times before, when each Giant had been awakened. In those places, he was on a pillar, miles above the ground. Bubbles floated everywhere, columns of water rose from the ground into the sky, and the landscape itself represented whatever world Cheren was in at the time, be it a jungle, ice land, or amusement park. This was… almost like that.

He was on a pillar, miles above the sea of clouds, and columns of water rose miles from where he stood. The sky was very misty and reddish-pink, the sunset, or was it sunrise, in the distance. He had no idea what way there was onto this tower, but several more stood in the distance beyond, all baring gold round tops, and their walls painted in Arabian styles. Since he was just in Scotland, he really questioned how the Spirit World did things. He guessed that no particular mortal area had a set Spirit World, none of it was existent, all depended on the mind, it seemed.

“A report, Master:” Fi’s voice sounded from directly in his mind. “Judging by your soul exiting your body seconds ago, I conjecture an 80% chance your soul has Ascended from its mortal form. You are now in the Spirit World.”

“Yeah, I… see that.”

“MaKayla has requested me to inform you she may not be able to follow you where you have gone. However, somewhere in this space lies that which belonged to Link: the Ocarina of Time. There is a 70% chance this information is accurate. While I cannot assist you directly in this world, I shall be happy to provide status updates when need be. Oh… and Merida would like me to inform you a beetle has crawled up your pants and you may feel a paining sensation upon your return. Master… I wish you luck.”

“DOESN’T MEAN YOU CAN’T HELP IN THE MORTAL WORLD, FIIIII!” (Play “Flip Panel Footpath” from Captain Toad: Treasure Tracker.)

Act 3: Spirit Skies

Cheren was on a platform with a wall too high to climb. There were twin switches that mirrored each other, but Cheren couldn’t press both at the same time. There was a tile within the gap in the wall, which Cheren assumed would rise if both switches were hit. He heard a faint sound, nervously moving away when a cloud of bluish-gray smoke chased him. The smoke PUFFED, and a glowing ghostly mummy appeared. The gaps under his white wrapping were dark-blue, and a little opening showed his beady light-blue eyes. He was shaped like Cheren. “Uh… Fi?”

“Target locked: Mummy-Me. A type of mummified Duplighost who, like others of its kind, can take the shape of whomever it comes in contact with. While their mummified appearance makes them unlikely to deceive anyone, they memorize every movement the mimickee makes and follows with haste. If a Mummy-Me catches up with you, Master, you will suffer damage. Should you be over a dangerous chasm, you will take the fall. I’d advise you keep track of your own movements and be ready to dodge them, Master.”

Cheren ran in circles, looking backward, and the Mummy-Me mimicked his actions precisely. He quickly ran back-and-forth between the twin switches, so when Mummy-Me mimicked, both switches were pressed, and Cheren quickly jumped onto the rising platform, then climbed to the ledge. He faced a chasm of floating spinning tops, running around his foothold when the Mummy-Me climbed up. When the first top spun over, Cheren jumped on, trying to maintain balance as he waited for it to float back over, while also avoiding the mummy. He jumped to the next top, and from there, he had to swing between two floating ropes of energy balls.

He had to alternate heights on the ropes when the Mummy-Me was swinging with him. When the top spun over, Cheren let go, and waited for this top to carry him to a path within the walls of a tower. He hurried through with the Mummy-Me hot on his tail. He followed a narrow, snaky path and pressed a switch, but with the mummy behind, Cheren had to Wall Kick up and over him to escape that dead end. Cheren ran down another road, climbing a ladder that appeared on the wall, due to the hit switch. Parts of the zigzag ladder sunk in and out, Cheren waited impatiently for them to appear, having to stop every half-second so the Mummy-Me would move slower.

At the top of the ladder, Cheren sidled across a thin ledge along the wall, stopping to let the Snapdragons snap, but moving quickly afterward to outrun the Mummy-Me. He could safely run when the path became wider, pressing a switch at the edge of the chasm. A platform activated down below, so Cheren jumped down to let it slowly carry him across. It stopped every few seconds to let the Mummy-Me catch up; Cheren grunted at this troll move. He shifted to different positions of the platform to avoid the mummy.

Eventually, the platform brought him to a very tall, thin tower, where Cheren jumped his way up a series of rotating platforms. The pattern was set where if a platform was horizontal, the next was vertical, so Cheren had to stand on the edge of each one before it turned vertical, then jump onto the next one, without letting Mummy-Me catch him. The next part of tower had in-and-out platforms, which followed an odd sequence that required Cheren to step back to previous platforms before the next ones would stick out. Cheren then quickly, but carefully sidled up another thin ledge to reach the top of the tower. A Snapdragon surprised him, but he missed it by an inch, kept sidling, and got onto the tower before Mummy-Me caught him. The minute Cheren grabbed the shiny blue ocarina on the pedestal, Mummy-Me poofed into nothing. (End song.)

Cheren got the Ocarina of Time! This was a treasured artifact that belonged to Link in his era! Its notes can create many a mystic effect.

The ocarina felt warm in his hands. He sensed a strange energy coming from it. He held it close to its heart, embracing in its warmth. The Spirit World around him blurred, he felt his soul flying quickly across the misty sky. The next second, Cheren was on Earth, in his body, with his friends.

“…YOOOOOOOWW!” Cheren felt the stinging pain in his leg.

“Oh, come on, ya big baby, Ay wasn’t THAT hard!” Merida said.

“Do you have the ocarina?” Nerech asked. Cheren stood up and reached into his pocket. He pulled out the shiny blue instrument.

Fi came out. “Master, I can safely tell you with 100% assurance, this is the Ocarina of Time Link possessed. Link’s spiritual signature is still very clear upon its shell. Master… if you would, I would like to hear you play it.”
“Haha… okay.” The three kids and spirit smiled eagerly (except Nerehe), excited to hear the ocarina’s mystic notes. Cheren took a calm breath, put his mouth over the reed, and blew.

_HREEEEEEEEEEEEEEEEE!_ It was the worst sound they ever heard.

“Sorry!” Cheren grunted. “Let me cover a different hole. Huuuu—” _REEEEEEEEE-

Nerehc swiped the instrument away, “YOU CAN’T PLAY!”

“I could play the Spirit Flute, how is this any different?!”

“You just need a little practice,” MaKayla blushed, chuckling. “Or maybe let someone else. Anyone can use it, right?”

“Affirmative.” Fi said.

“I guess we should go back to the future now.” Cheren figured. “Melissa’s probably getting tired. So, Nerehc… what did you say you needed this for, again?”

“Merida…” The boy in question faced the Scottish princess. “Didn’t your friend say that Madara lived in Japan?”

“Um… yes?”

“Where, exactly?”

This chapter was a lot shorter than I expected. Convenient! XD If I squeeze in enough stages, I could make Guertena Gallery the 57th stage. But it wouldn’t matter. ;3 Next time, we’ll adventure Mermaid Swamp. G’day.
Old Legends

Chapter Summary

Nerehc Onu travels back in time to meet Madara Uchiha. Meanwhile, AlyakAm takes Truman Kirman to an ancient tomb.

Like I said before, this chapter comes after Chapter 44 of the Main Story, and actually continues from it. So if you don’t remember, skim through it if you want. XP But I’ll throw in a quick recap just in case.

Chapter B-23: Old Legends

DunBroch Kingdom

After retrieving the Ocarina of Time from the Ancient Ruin, the team of Cheren, Kayla, Nerehc, and Merida returned to DunBroch. Using the ocarina, Nerehc played the Song of Soaring, which Cheren memorized, as it would warp them to the owl statue that he activated in DunBroch long ago. The four kids were encased in a pair of giant wings, which spun around, and within seconds they were whisked to the statue in the middle of the town.

“Wow, it actually worked!” Cheren beamed. MaKayla and Merida were dizzy from the experience.

“What other manner of witchcraft haven’t you showed us?” the princess asked.

“So Nerehc, why are you suddenly interested in this Madara person?” Cheren asked, regarding Nerehc’s question before they warped.

“You mentioned having confronted Ragaj Gnik.” MaKayla noted. “Did he have something to do with it?”

“Yes.” Nerehc nodded. “Ragaj showed me visions of some people—I think they were the Thirteen Darknesses. And in one of them, two Japanese guys were having a face-off… and I heard the name ‘Madara.’ So Merida, how much do you know about him?”

“Only as much as my dad and Macintosh told me.” Merida replied as they headed to an alleyway, away from the noisy townspeople. “He was a Japanese warrior that came here from the Land of Fire 200 years ago. Like Macintosh said, thousands of warriors fought him, but he destroyed them all.”

“Two hundred years?” Cheren raised a brow. “That’s awfully recent. A bit too recent to be a ‘legend.’”

“Well, the thing is, everyone was destroyed. No other witnesses lived to tell the tale. But Madara survived and that giant canyon just appeared. Everyone who came to see it believed Madara was responsible.”

“So then what happened to him?” Nerehc asked.
“Another Japanese man appeared and chased him away… so the legends say. I can’t tell ya any more than that because I don’t know.”

“Another man…” Nerehc rubbed his chin. “The two men from my vision…”

“What did they even look like?” asked Cheren.

“Well, one of them was wearing a silver headband… It had a symbol like a swirl… with a little point.”

“Your descriptive powers are sensational.” Kayla remarked.

“Hey, I only had a second to look at it!”

“Wait!” Cheren reached in his pocket. “Did the symbol look like this?” He pulled out his Hidden Leaf Headband.

“IT IS!” Nerehc recognized the symbol.

“Oh, yah.” Merida remembered. “You use that to turn into a ninja. Fuh-reakyyyy.”

“I got this headband from the Land of Fire in Japan.”

“Then that’s where we should go.” Nerehc decided. “If Madara is a Darkness…” He looked at the Ocarina of Time in his hand, “then I need to meet him.”

Fi jumped out of the Master Sword. “Master Cheren, based on these words, I conjecture an 80% chance Nerehc intends to use the Ocarina of Time to travel back to a time when Madara was alive. The ocarina does possess the potential to travel through many periods in time. However, in order to set a specific time and date, certain requirements must be fulfilled.”

“What kind of requirements?”

“It may suffice you to know that the Master Sword and the Ocarina of Time were created from the same Timeshift Stone. If I could examine an object that has existed since a certain time period, I could trace the object’s history and transfer the recorded data to the ocarina. Afterwards, by performing the Song of Time, one would be able to travel to a previous point in time in which that object existed.”

“Like if we found something of Madara’s… We would be able to travel back one thousand years in our time.” Cheren figured. “Let’s return to the present and go back to Sector V. We can rest up and then fly to Japan. If Madara was famous in his own country, there would have to be one or two historical artifacts lying around.”

“Well, this adventure was fun while it lasted.” Merida sighed. “It was great seein’ ya again, Cheren.” She smiled and waved. “I’d like to join you, but Ay have NO idea what you’re doing, and it’s probably too much to explain.”

“You have nooooooo idea.”

Present time; Termina Sector V

“This is the Ocarina of Time?” Harry Uno held and examined the shiny blue instrument.

“Oooo, so prettyyyy!” Kellie Beatles took it, her eyes sparkly. “Can I give this to my Uncannily Sky Blue Rainbow Monkey?”
“You know, whatever happened to that magic flute thingy you used to have?” Celeste asked.

“I gave it back to the Mask Man after we returned home.” Cheren replied. “Nerehc wants to go back in time and find somebody called Madara.”

“You’re trying to find Madea?!?” Thomas exclaimed.

“No, silly, he said ‘Madara!’” Kellie giggled. “He was a Japanese warrior from the Land of Fire!”

“You know about him, too?” Nerehc asked.

“Of course! He was my great-great-great-great-great-great-great-great grandfather!”

“?!?” Cheren and Nerehc shared the same aghast expression.

“Aaaaaaaaand I’m just kidding.” Kellie said after a minute and a half. They were able to unfreeze their faces. “But he is related to my pen-pal from Sector LF, Sarada.”

“Really? Then maybe she can help us.” Nerehc said. “Fy said we needed certain requirements to go back in time.”

“It’s pronounced ‘Fee.’” Cheren corrected.

“She’s a spirit girl who speaks gibberish and whose name is only written. I’ll pronounce it however I want.”

“So you won’t mind if I start pronouncing you ‘Neerehc’?”

“Cher-REN??”

“I don’t…” Harry Uno and the others stared confusedly. “I don’t know what they’re talking about.”

“Never mind.” Cheren sighed. “I’m guessing Sector LF is in Land of Fire? How come we didn’t meet them during the Majora thing?”

“Well, they are a ninja sector.” Melissa said. “Not like we can just show any interdimensional traveler their location. But you’re cool now, so don’t worry, Cherry.”

“Uh he…” Cheren flushed, remembering his awkward moment with her in the Tortuga journey. “Well, as soon as MaKayla’s done in the bathroom, we can head on over.”

Bathroom

“I thought part of being spiritual was not needing to use the bathroom as much.” Kayla said to herself as she washed her hands. “Heh, as if. I need my girl time.” She splashed water over her face and washed it. “Gotta stay awake, too. We’re starting to find real leads in this quest. I wonder if the Ocarina of Time can-” She opened her eyes and looked up at the mirror.

“Hello.” Truman Kirman was behind her.

“HEEEEYY-YAH!” Kayla instinctively kicked back and stomped him in the stomach.

“OOOOOF!” Saliva flew out his mouth.

“What the heck?! I thought this was the girls’ room!”
“It is… ack!” He coughed. MaKayla pulled her foot back. “My name’s Truman… Nice to meet you.”

“Hello, Truman… Why the heck are you creeping on me?”

“I saw you come in here and you… I thought you smelled nice.”

“…” MaKayla inched toward the door. “So, I will just… let you finish in here… and we will never talk about this… ever.” And she left.

Truman approached the mirror and stared at his reflection with half-closed eyes. He was completely motionless, like his reflection was just a picture. Then the mirror wobbled like liquid—Truman gasped and backed away. MaKayla climbed out of the mirror… but she held no emotion on her face, and the letters on her shirt were ‘AM.’ “I will assume I smell bad by that logic. But that’s okay.”

Sector LF; Land of Fire, Japan

Melissa flew Cheren, Nerehc, Kayla, along with Kellie to Japan. They landed in the forest a few miles away from the Hidden Leaf Village before stepping off the S.C.A.M.P.E.R.. “Thanks for driving us, Melissa.” Cheren waved.

“My pleasure.” She said with a mocking smile. “It’s always fun to be the chauffeur to the heroes saving the world.”

“Uh…” Cheren felt a tad guilty by that remark. “Well, you could come with us.”

“Nah, I’ll just guard the ship.”

“…Seriously, I’d feel bad if we treated you like a minor-”

“Just come on!” Nerehc grabbed his Positive and pulled him with.

“So where’s Sector LF?” Kayla asked as they followed Kellie up a hill. “I don’t see any treehouses.”

“You don’t expect them to have their base out in the open, do you?” Kellie questioned. “They’re ninjas! They gotta be seereeet.”

“Like Sector GF.” Cheren recalled. “Or even Sector JP. Before they… stopped being a spy sector.”

Kellie stopped at a tree that was slightly bigger. She knocked the trunk with a special sequence before a hatch opened. They followed her in climbing down a ladder into the dark hideout. They set foot on a floor that they couldn’t see, so Cheren used the light of his Master Sword to see.

“What is this?” he whispered.

“Hi Sarada, it’s me, Kelliiieee!” The girl grinned and waved. “Don’t worry, they’re my friends!”

They all heard loud WHISH sounds—MaKayla used timebending to freeze the incoming kunai in time, then Cheren slashed them out of the air.

The lights switched on. There was a pale boy with yellow hair and pale green eyes crouched behind a cardboard bush. There was a shadow on the ceiling, and a boy with spiked black hair was peeping out of it with narrowed dark-green eyes – a shadowbender by the look of it. “Shikadai, Inojin, come on out.” A black-haired girl with black eyes, red glasses, and a red sleeveless shirt uncovered her cloak that camouflaged her with the floor.

“You knew it was Kellie, why do we always have to set this up?” Shikadai said, dropping from the ceiling. “What a drag…”

“Kon’nichiwa, Sarada-san!” Kellie greeted happily.

“Kon’nichiwa, Kellie-chan.” Sarada returned in a more casual tone.

“We don’t understand them.” The other three chorused.

“Wait, but I have this!” Cheren put on the Hidden Leaf Headband and magically turned into an adult ninja. “Kon’nichiwa!” He spoke with a deep, cool voice.

“Kellie, who are these people? You know we don’t invite strangers to our treehouse.”

“I know, but they’re kind of on an important mission. See, that’s Cheren, who can transform using magical masks, that’s his parallel-universe twin Nerehc, and that girl is MaKayla, she can control time. Oh, they’re also from a different universe.” Kellie explained with a casual grin.

“Can you translate for us, Cheren?” Nerehc asked.

“Yeah, they probably think Kellie’s crazy now. Look, I hate to cut to the chase, but Kellie said you could tell us about someone named Madara.”

“Madara?” Sarada repeated in surprise. “Why do you want to know about Madara?”

“It’s just important to us, alright?”

“You can trust him, Sarada.” Kellie promised. “I know he looks like a creepy ninja who can turn into a boy, but he helped us save the world a few months ago!”

“Oh right, when the moon was falling.” Inojin said tonelessly, drawing an ink picture on his scroll. “Here’s what I thought it would look like.” The picture depicted the moon, with its giant face, munching the Earth like a cookie.

“Well, Madara was my ancestor.” Sarada explained. “He was a patriarch of the Uchiha Clan that lived a thousand years ago.”

“Before he came back to life 20 years ago and tried to kill everyone.” Shikadai said in a laid back fashion.

“Twenty years ago?” Cheren was familiar with that time era. “That’s… something worth discussing.”

“I don’t really understand it.” Sarada continued. “I mean, according to our recent history, Madara came back to life, and he fought the hero of our village, Naruto. Madara was destroyed, but then, all of a sudden, Naruto just… disappeared. No one knows how it happened or why. But Naruto earned the title of ‘Hokage’ in honor of his memory. Pretty stupid if you ask me.”

“If he’s your ancestor, then you must have something that belonged to him.” Nerehc imputed. Cheren translated this to Japanese.

“Well, she has a ton of swords in her room.” Shikadai smirked, gesturing back with his thumb. “And there’s a rusty-looking one hanging on the wall.”
“I TOLD YOU NOT TO SNEAK IN MY ROOM!” Sarada flustered.

“Wasn’t me.” The boy sunk into his shadow.

“I think he does this.” Inojin drew a picture of Sarada changing clothes and Shikadai peeping from a shadow.

“Ugh! Yes, I do have an old sword, and I think it did belong to Madara. If you wanna see it, then by all means, come along.”

Sarada led them all to her room, where the walls were lined with all types of swords. She showed them to one hung on a plaque on the wall, a rusty-looking ninjatō. Fi leapt out of Ninja Cheren’s shuriken – scaring the Sector LF members. “Master Cheren, after a thorough three-second analysis, I have determined that this sword is approximately 1300 years old. By transmitting the data to the Ocarina of Time, you will be able to travel back to any date within those 1300 years. Also, by playing the Song of Time backwards, you can return to the present.”

Cheren took off the Ninja Headband and turned back into a kid. “And we have to play the Song of Time, right? I think it went like-” He took the ocarina back from Nerehc and played —HEEEEEEEE! Everyone clamped their ears shut.

Nerehc swiped it back. “Just hum the tune and I’LL play it!”

“Wait a second, just what are you doing exactly?” Sarada asked.

“They wanna go back in time and meet Madara!” Kellie answered

“You can seriously do that?!” Shikadai exclaimed.

“How do I pinpoint exactly where I want to go in time?” Nerehc asked. “I mean, WHEN I want to go…”

“If you have a specific date in mind, Master Cheren’s Negative, I may telepathically affirm the date to the ocarina.” Fi said.

“You can? Hmm… Then I want to go back 1,050 years. Just to see what happens.”

“You’re going by yourself?” MaKayla asked.

“Well, you’re a timebender, so in case I don’t come back soon, you can probably help do something. For now, I wanna try and meet Madara myself. So, how does the song go?”

Cheren sighed, still not sure about this plan. “Like this:”

Ooooo-ooooo-aaa-ooooa-oooo… Fi hummed the song with her majestic voice as Nerehc played it consistently. A column of blue light encased Nerehc and made a mystic whirring sound, growing brighter as the others covered their eyes. Nerehc found himself falling into a white abyss of clocks, going faster as the years passed.

In a forest…

The blue spire of light released Nerehc in a forest. It was sunny, and a gentle breeze rustled the leaves. Nerehc heard a noise coming from up a hill, so he walked up to investigate. Nerehc peeked over the top of the hill, viewing the bloodstained battlefield where two armies of ninjas killed each other left and right.

Somebody snuck up from behind Nerehc with a sword drawn. His sandaled feet scurried across the grass, footsteps drowned out by the screaming armies. When he was going to stab Nerehc in the back, Ghirahim popped out of the Devil’s Sword and countered with his own blade. “HUAH!” Ghira slashed, and the assaulter jumped back. He was a boy about Nerehc’s height, black spiked hair and dark eyes, wearing a dark blue robe with a white sash. “You drop your guard way too much lately.” Ghirahim smirked.

Nerehc grabbed his sword and raised it against the kid. The boy ran up to swing his sword, but Nerehc fought back, and his superior sword knocked the kid’s away. The boy narrowed his eyes at the strange kid and his diamond-skin accomplice. “…Anatahadare?”

Nerehc felt like he got shot in the brain. “DAAAAAH I DON’T KNOW JAPANEEEEEEESE!” He gripped his head and flailed frantically. “Cheren’s been translating all this time, now it all sounds like Gobbledegook to me, I’m gonna look like such a stupid head in this damn feudal Japan period!”

“Master Nerehc, I speak Japanese.” Ghirahim said.

“Ya do?” Nerehc stopped instantly.

Ghirahim turned to the boy and spoke in Japanese: “Greetings, I am Demon Lord Ghirahim. This is my master, the Demon Prince Nerehc. We possess dark powers and the ability to create an age of torment and everlasting doom.”

“… . . . AAAAAAHHHHH!” The boy dashed away with his arms raised. Ghirahim splorped over and grabbed him by the shirt, raising him. “Not a good opening line?”

“Hey, calm down!” Nerehc shouted, standing in front of the kid. “Listen, we’re looking for someone named Madara. Know anyone like that?”

After Ghirahim translated, the boy looked at him curiously. “Madara?”

“Yes, Madara. Familiar?”

He pointed at himself. “I’m Madara.”

“You?”

Ghirahim set the kid down. “Uchiha Madara.”

“…” Nerehc stared at him for a minute. “You can’t really be one of the Thirteen Darknesses. You’re just a kid.”

“So are you.” Ghirahim remarked. “Everyone is born a child, Master. It doesn’t mean they can’t grow into demons.”

“The only thing demonic about him is his hairdo. You swing your sword like an old lady.” He snapped at Madara.

“I’ll have you know my grandma killed hundreds with that blade alone!” Madara retorted. “Now what’s your business here! Are you really demons?”
“Yeah, kind of. Humanity is really messed up in the future.” Nerehc replied casually.

Madara blinked. “The future?”

“…How did you say you knew my name exactly?”

“Well, you’re kind of famous in the future. You… Why is he famous again?”

“You blow up a canyon.” Ghirahim said. “Heh, pretty famous if you ask me.”

“Why did you come here to meet me?” asked Madara.

“Well, we—er…” Nerehc wondered if it was safe to tell him about the prophecy. “Er, we wanted… to learn more about you.”

“What do you want to learn about me? You just said I was famous.”

“Yes, but I don’t know very much about you.”

“Then HOW DID YOU HEAR ABOUT ME?!”

“YOU BLEW UP A CANYON!!”

“ENOUGH!” Ghirahim shouted. “It’s bad enough being your two-way translator, but I won’t be the consolidate for your ARGUMENT!”

“Sorry, sorry! Ugh…” Nerehc pinched his temples. “I can’t focus with all this yelling going on. Do you know someplace else we can talk?”

Madara glared in the direction of the battle, then faced further in the forest. “This way.” He went to get his sword before leading them.

“Those two armies are the Senju Clan and Uchiha Clan.” Madara explained as they arrived at a river. “My dad is the head of the Uchiha Clan. I don’t even remember why we’re fighting.” He picked up a rock and chucked it at the river, resulting in a splash. Nerehc thought he intended to skip the stone. “If you’re from the future, you must know how this battle ends.”

“Ehh… Not really.” Nerehc said sheepishly.

Madara looked at him suspiciously. “You’re a weird time-traveler. Where in the future did you say you were from?”

“The correct terminology would be ‘WHEN am I from.’”

“HAH HA HA HA, HAH HA HA HA!” Madara clasped his chest. “That is the funniest thing I EVER heard!”

“I know, right?” Nerehc chuckled. “Ahh, in the past, everything is original.”

“Ha ha ha!” Madara calmed down and spoke more seriously, “So, what is the future like? You said humanity was messed up.”

“Oh yeah, oh ye…” Nerehc waved a hand in the air, collecting his thoughts as though his mind fogged for a second. “Like, humans started getting with demons and having human kids with dark powers, and I think this angel hooks up with this half-demon kid – even though he looks nothing like a demon, it’s pre-tty fun-ny!” He started chuckling.

“??” Madara was baffled. “Humans, demons, and angels… live together?”

“Um… sort of? There’re also mermaids, aliens, and these little chipmunk guys that live in the grass.” Madara looked at the ground, possibly intending to spot these ‘chipmunk’ things.

He looked back up at Nerehc. “Would you show me this future?”

“Huh? Um… I’m not sure if I’m allowed to do that.”

“Yet, you’re allowed to come back to the past and talk to me?”

“Good point.”

“Master, may I have a word with you?” Ghirahim requested.

“Sure… Excuse us, Madara?” Nerehc said awkwardly. The Japanese boy simply watched as the two strangers walked a few feet away. He couldn’t eavesdrop on their English conversation, anyway.

“Ghirahim, if you’re gonna complain about being our translator, I don’t wanna hear it.”

“I’m bored out of my mind, Master! You’re not getting anywhere with this brat! I hoped for at least an action stage by now. If you’re not going to mention the prophecy to him, how do you plan to find out if he is one of the Thirteen Darknesses?”

“He might not even know what I’m talking about if I mentioned that! Based on Ydnic and Ikuyim’s stories, Davy Jones and Yellow Diamond didn’t seem like they knew anything about the prophecy. They just read some Gibberish Pyramid and… ‘awakened’, I’m assuming?”

“So, ask him if he’s seen any such pyramid.”

“I will, but we can’t just leave it like that. We need to try to learn more about this. You remember how Medusa acted back on Moonbase. She really doesn’t seem to know what’s going to happen, she might not even understand why the Darknesses were chosen.”

“Davy Jones and Yellow Diamond were evil beings who did evil things in the past. The Darknesses may bear similar fates. This Madara boy is no different.”

Nerehc faced the boy in question. “…But what’s the source of his darkness? I wonder…” He approached Madara again.

“Stop playing games with me, Stranger.” Madara stated. “I’m starting to have doubts about you. Why did you really come here? Where are you really from? Tell me the truth.”

“…” Nerehc was silent for a second. “The truth is I’m from a really hectic future. It’s so hectic that I wonder how it got the way it was. It makes me wonder what the past was like. …I may not know what you do in the future, but the fact is, you become a legend, Madara. So I want to ask you… is there something that you want more than anything else in the world?”

“…You said you were a demon.” Madara turned away. “A demon wouldn’t understand.” He ran off with wind-like speed.

“HEY!” Nerehc kicked on his Rocket Skies and raced after him, Ghirahim keeping up on his own swift feet. They ran into a deeper, thicker part of the forest where the sun could only poke through in little rays. Nerehc kept his eye on the spike-haired boy—he halted immediately when Madara whipped around and held his sword up.

“The battle hasn’t come this far, yet.” Madara said with a glare. “This forest is where the spirits live… Any demon who enters here will drown in their light. Let’s see if you can get through.” He ran forth once again.

“Man, you’re annoying.” Nerehc held his sword up, summoning Ghirahim back inside. (Play “Sacred Grove” from Zelda: Twilight Princess.)

Stage B-19: Lost Woods

Mission: Follow Madara.

Nerehc chased Madara through a straight and narrow path—Madara turned a sudden left path, but Nerehc kept after. He jumped up a set of tree branches, which would allow him to grab a zipline vine that stretched leftward and set him on an upper path. This route was narrow, and would turn into an abyss with a path on either wall to go across. Nerehc jumped on the left path as did Madara, and he would hit a mushroom that sprung him down right. Nerehc landed on a rail and grinded over the abyss, but when it was about to slope down, Madara jumped on an upper rail that just appeared, so Nerehc followed.

The rail sloped up right and set them on a snaky path between close walls, in which Nerehc lost sight of Madara, but this was no problem on the linear path. The forest became foggy, and Nerehc inevitably lost his lead at a fork in the road. Both routes had bushes, and since one path’s bush was waving, he assumed Madara took that way and followed it. He came to a three-way fork, where one of the paths had a stick snapped in two, so he took that way. Another three-way: the middle road had a torn bush—but the road on its right had a cloud of fog that seemed to be reforming. Madara likely tried to trick Nerehc into taking the middle route, but Nerehc took the right.

The fog cleared as Nerehc came to a cliff with two vines. He saw Madara swimming in the pond below, so Nerehc grabbed the right vine and swung after him. He landed on a shore, chased Madara through a narrow path, and then had to Wall Jump across a chasm. He avoided the steam that erupted out of holes in the sides, maneuvered up, and followed Madara through a hole on the right. The forest became more wide and open as Nerehc skied around trees and jumped logs and holes. Madara listed leftward, then right, grabbed a vine to swing across a pit, while Nerehc had to glide across with jetshoes. Madara jumped up some platforms that led up to a cliff, and Nerehc almost missed seeing him jump to a lower, hidden platform on the right, leading to a secret path within the wall. Nerehc bypassed a garden that had a large blue cube with a depiction of the sun shining rays down below. He headed through another clearing of trees. (End song.)

Madara had finally decided to stop, glaring at Nerehc as the latter caught his breath. “Well, look at that.” Nerehc panted as Ghirahim came out to translate him. “I didn’t drown in any holy spirit light… huff… at all! Now, I asked you a question! What do you want more than anything else?!”

“…” Madara turned around. Nerehc realized they were standing on top of a cliff, hundreds of feet above a great forest valley. “All my father wants to do is destroy the Senju Clan.” He stated. “And the Senju Clan merely wants to destroy us. Both of us have grown to hate each other… it’s how we were raised. What I want to do is put an end to hatred.” Madara reached forward and pretended to clasp the valley. “I want a new world without conflict, without destruction or spite… I want a world of peace and kindness.”
“…” Nerehc stood beside him. He held up his right hand to view the Triforce of Power mark. “I want that kind of world, too.”

“You do?” Madara faced him. “I thought you were a demon.”

Nerehc’s right hand lit with a purple flame that surprised Madara. “I never asked to be born as a demon… I never wanted darkness inside of me. But the world I live in is filled with darkness. I hate it. I wanted to make a world where we all loved each other. I didn’t want people to view me as a demon, I didn’t want to follow a demon’s instincts and thrive on darkness. I wanted to… be different.”

“And… where did that lead?” asked Madara.

“…” Nerehc faced him and smiled. “It led me on the right path. Me and all of my friends.”

“Your friends?”

“Yes. Madara, I’m not saying it’s possible to destroy hatred. But it isn’t the only path you can follow. If you want a more peaceful world, then work to achieve it. Then after you’re gone, people can follow your example.”

“Cough, you’re completely influencing the past.” Ghirahim commented.

“Ah, nothing’s gonna happen that hasn’t already will happen.”

Madara was silent. “…I was always afraid there would be no one who shared my feelings.”

“Well, you’re not alone anymore.” Nerehc smirked.

“…Would you stay here and help me?”

“I… kinda need to get back home.” He blushed. “But don’t worry. I’m sure other people will share your vision. You just have to look around. Hopefully, they will speak the same language.”

“He he…” Madara grinned.

The three entered the forest again and stopped to look at the blue cube with the sun ray depiction. “I’ve been through this wood several times and always wondered what this stone was. It looks nothing like the surrounding ruins.”

Nerehc picked up the Ocarina of Time. He looked between it and the cube. “Master, play the Song of Time.” Ghirahim whispered. “I recognize this stone…”

Nerehc glanced at his servant before putting the ocarina to his mouth. He played the Song of Time as he memorized. The cube vanished in a spire of blue light. In its place stood a stone pyramid with foreign writing and an eye on its tip. Nerehc gasped, recognizing such a pyramid from Ydnic and Ikuyim’s stories. And already, Madara felt a strange attraction to it, gazing at the ruin as he approached.

Darkness is hatred. To hate the darkness is to feed it. Allow it to feed you in return.

A dark aura appeared around the pyramid. The eye glowed and cast a beam at Madara’s forehead. The darkness was transferred to his body, his eyes glowing. After seconds, it stopped.

Madara Uchiha awakened as a DARKNESS. Only 9 more to go.
Nerehc approached him cautiously. …Madara turned: his black eyes were read circles that had three pointed swirls surrounding the pupil. “Gyah!” Nerehc flinched. “Did you… break a blood vessel?”

“No, stupid. This is the Uchiha Clan’s Sharingan. I guess it’s finally awakened.”

“Oh? I guess I do now. It must have been watching your mouth movements all this time. The Sharingan allows me to copy and mimic other peoples’ abilities. So, English is this language, huh?”

“Yes!” Nerehc grinned. “It’s the dominant language in the future, for the most part!”

Madara looked away. “I will make note of that…”

“Alright, if you know the way back, then I guess it’s okay for me to return to my time. Good luck on your dream, Madara.”

“Yes.” He nodded. “Good-bye, Nerehc… and thanks.”

“Heh.” Nerehc grinned. With that, he played the Song of Time backwards. A spire of light appeared to return him and Ghirahim to the present.

“…I blow up a canyon?” Madara repeated to himself. “Sounds pretty awesome.”

Madara returned to the river. He picked up three stones and failed to skip any of them across. Then it seemed like one of the stones came back. Madara looked up in shock. There was a boy with short black hair on the other side. He grinned at being able to make it across, while Madara glared at him.

Present; Sector LF

The others watched as Nerehc rematerialized. Thanks to his sunglasses, the light didn’t affect him too much. “How long was I gone?”

“About five minutes.” Sarada replied.

Nerehc whipped at her. “So you know English, too!”

“Heheh, she kinda revealed it after you left.” Cheren blushed. “Wait, what do you mean ‘too’?”

“I met Madara.”

“You did?!” Sarada exclaimed.

“What was he like?” asked MaKayla.

“I met his child self, actually. And I think he is one of the Thirteen Darknesses. But there was nothing about him that seemed… evil. Sarada, what did Madara do that was so bad?”

Sarada looked away, trying to remember and piece together the story. “His goal was to end world conflict. That’s what my mom told me. But… he got a little carried away.”

They listened to her story for the next hour.
The S.C.A.M.P.E.R.

The operatives left Sector LF, watching the Hidden Leaf grow smaller as they took off in Melissa’s S.C.A.M.P.E.R.. “So you saw the pyramid with your own eyes.” MaKayla said. “The same one that was in Ford’s journal. The one Kisuke had drawn in the other dimension.”

“What are you talking about?” Nerehc asked.

“Nerehc, I think we have an idea for how to find the remaining Darknesses. And the Ocarina of Time may be the key.”

“But I still don’t understand. I thought the Darknesses were supposed to be evil. Dark-hearted or something.”

“Ehh, I dunno.” Kellie replied. “Madara did go a little cuckoo.”

“But he wasn’t like that when I met him. He had a good intention, he had a good vision for a future. That pyramid must have influenced him or something! If I didn’t go back and help him find it-!” Nerehc clenched his teeth in anger.

“It doesn’t matter!” MaKayla insisted. “It was his fate to find the pyramid one way or another, and it was probably your fate to lead him to it. Madara is a Darkness, and now we’re one step closer to finding all the answers.”

“But it isn’t fair! Madara never had an evil heart. Why did the prophecy choose him? Why are any of these people chosen, what sets them apart from others?!”

“Nerehc, take it easy!” Cheren yelled. “I’m sure there’s a reason behind everything. And sooner or later, we’ll know what it is.”

“I know that! It’s just… if Madara can turn that way while following his dream… what if it happens to me?” He looked down at the floor. “What if I give in to my darkness…”

He looked up when Cheren touched his shoulder. “I’ll bring you back to the light. I promise.”

“…” Nerehc smirked. “Don’t get all touchy-feely, I don’t wanna become one of your girlfriends.”

“Shut up.” Cheren chuckled, smacking Nerehc in the chest before going to sit down.

“Get a room, you boys.” Melissa joked, earning laughs from the other girls.

Nerehc spared a chuckle before thinking to himself: I never told Madara my name… How did he know it at the end? Did his Eye Powers do that, too?

Egypt

At the same time as their adventure to Japan, AlyakAm had stolen a small R.O.A.D.S.T.A.R. from Sector V and used it to take Truman to Egypt. She parked the flying racecar outside a pyramid, which had a pathway of torches leading up to the entrance, giving the ground a red glow under the night sky. AlyakAm and Truman climbed out of the car. The former examined the stone statue of a spike-headed figure above the entrance. “This must be the tomb Medusa described. …” She looked at Truman. “You are surprisingly cooperative.”

“I seem to… remember this place…” Truman said, his blue eyes blank. “But from where exactly? …”
“Medusa said that you might. There is something in this temple that belongs to you. I’m here to take you to find it.”

“But what is this temple?”

AlyakAm stared at the spike-headed statue for a minute. “Medusa called it the Tomb of the Nameless Pharaoh.” She led Truman inside. (Play “Dry Dry Ruins” from Paper Mario.)

Stage B-20: Tomb of the Nameless Pharaoh

Mission: Find the tomb’s treasure.

The two walked down a small staircase into the first room of the pyramid. The wall was cracked, and there was a Bomb Flower that could be used to destroy it. However, given the fragile appearance of the room, the flower could make the ceiling cave in. There was an empty coffin lain in a corner, so Alyak and Truman carried it over beside the cracked wall and set it on its front. AlyakAm plucked the Bomb Flower and tossed it under the coffin, which contained the full force of the explosion, but still caused the wall to collapse.

They went down a couple more stairs into a wider room. AlyakAm stepped on a switch in the center—two dozen giant beetles fell from the ceiling upside-down. Three of them had glowing bellies. “Find the correct ones, or be PURGED.” A dark voice hissed. The beetles flipped right-side-up and started skittering everywhere. Alyak noticed one of the shiny-bellied ones and ran to kick it. Truman kicked another beetle—the spiked ceiling lowered partway. AlyakAm found another shiny-belly, then kicked one which she thought was shiny, but this wrong move lowered the spike ceiling. The ceiling lowered slowly, so the two panicked. Truman managed to kick the third shiny-belly. AlyakAm grabbed him and dashed to the open door before the ceiling squished them.

The next room was a mazelike path over a dark pit. There were statues with swords placed around the maze. “Only those who show respect may enter. All others will be eaten by the darkness.”

“If this were the Japanese version, it would be bloody spike pit.” AlyakAm said. “This riddle is unfamiliar to me.”

“It is to me.” Truman said. “Look at the statues. Their left foot is placed forward. We move like this.” He put his left foot forward and kept it like so as he moved forward. AlyakAm tried to walk normally—one of the statues sliced at her, she jumped back with a start.

“This pains my pride to great extent.” Alyak said as she moved with the left foot forward. One of the paths curved backward, but would curve again back in the right direction. However, Truman hit a switch on the curve-back: the spiked ceiling slowly began to lower down. “Egyptians need to come up with some original traps.” The two moved faster in this left foot posture. While Truman managed to escape through the door, AlyakAm was falling behind. She made a mad dash, dodged the statues’ swords, and made it out.

They stood atop a ledge and viewed down a dark shaft with a ladder leading down. AlyakAm picked up the lone torch and climbed down first. They set foot on a ledge, then had to climb down another ladder. Once under the ledge, a swarm of bats awakened and tried to nip at the torch-holding girl. AlyakAm swung her torch to scare them away, but she accidentally dropped it on the ledge below. “Well, we were going that way, anyway.” She said as the bats left her alone.

“We might want to get there fast!” Truman exclaimed. Small, poisonous beetles were crawling down the ladder. Truman just decided to drop down, pushing Alyak under his butt as they hit the floor.

“Uck!” She pushed him off. “I would sooner have let you be the snack. …?” The torch landed on a trail of powder, which burned like a fuse and exploded against a pile, blowing the wall open. The next room consisted of red, green, and blue tiles, with no real organization, and two normal floors were on the left and right. Doo-doot-doot-doooot! Four tiles blinked and made a song. AlyakAm skipped across these tiles to the left floor, and pulled a lever on it.

Five tiles made a rhythmic path to the right foothold, where AlyakAm could pull another lever. Seven tiles made a much quicker rhythm, giving Alyak little time to memorize. She slipped on the fourth tile, and all the tiles immediately gave way. “I GOT YOU!” Truman grabbed Alyak and leaped to the left foothold. “Are you okay?”

AlyakAm panted, feeling her heart race. “I didn’t think… I could still feel emotions…”

“It’ll be all right. Just stay focused.”

“At least it’s a change from the spike ceiling.” The tiles floated back up in their places. The puzzle started over, so AlyakAm had to do it again. She did the third pattern accurately and caused the door to open. The next room was wide and box-like. A chasm took up most of the floor and many rows of swingable handles took up the left wall. “The Pharaoh loves to watch performers... eh, perform. If he is pleased, he will allow you further into his domain.”

There was an image on the right wall that looked like a Connect the Dots. AlyakAm knew these represented the correct order of handles. She jumped to grab the first one, swung to the one above it, jumped forward, forward once more, dropped to a low handle, back to one behind, swung over the forward one to grab the one after it, then had to diagonal-swing up-right to grab the last handle. The part in the middle of the intersecting wall opened like a drawbridge. AlyakAm grabbed the ledge on this wall to climb over to it, and Truman had to swing the handles to get to her. (He didn’t have to repeat the puzzle.)

They entered a long, wide passage where a dark abyss loomed down below, with a suspended bridge leading across. Coffins were standing up along the railing, and their lids would topple over if the kids stepped in front. Alyak and Truman dashed down the path, hearing coffin lids fall one after the other, but halted at a dead end of the bridge. When they turned around, mummies, snakes, and Dark Chuchus came out of the coffins. There was a switch at the start of this path, and a ray of light shining beside it.

Truman picked up one of the torches and set fire to the mummies while AlyakAm lured the Dark Chus over to the light ray. The light turned the Dark Chus into stone, making them heavy enough to hold down the switch. A bridge stretched from the dead end to the next part of the path. Alyak and Truman quickly hurried across before the Chuchu could get off the switch. The bridge brought them to a more open floor with four square tables, and rectangular tables lined up on the walls that had several items.

“In order to reach the Pharaoh’s Tomb, you must feed his vassals. For their first meal, they order five crawlies and a thirst-quencher the color of tears.”

There was a bowl of water and some cups on the table, and Truman noticed spiders crawling around the floor. He caught five spiders and set them on a table, along with a cup of water. Some mummies came up and started eating their meal. “Very good. Now they desire two samples of fresh meat, with five punctured squares and four preborn lives.” The kids grabbed two fish from bowls, four plant seeds, and five small cheese crackers (which had holes in their centers). They set them on the second table so mummies could eat.

“For dinner, they wish for a destructive force, mixed with tiny strings grown from meat.” The dark voice said. They got a bomb, then AlyakAm used a pair of scissors to cut off some of Truman’s hair, serving both items to the third table. “And finally, for dessert, they wish for liquid the color of soil, with five throat-piercing blades and four sources of beauty.” The items required were a glass of soda, five darts, and four lipsticks.

“The vassals are satisfied with their meals, and their bellies full for another five thousand years. You may enter the Pharaoh’s Tomb. But make sure to wipe your shoes on the mat. We only just polished.” The final door opened, a stairway leading them down a corridor. They were in the Pharaoh’s Tomb. (End song.)

The golden tomb atop the stairs had what looked like purple spiked hair on its head. The face of the tomb had narrowed eyes. There was a small plate above the tomb with Egyptian symbols neither of them knew. On the platform before the tomb sat a stone pyramid with writing that wasn’t Egyptian. On top of that pyramid was a golden triangle with an eye, encased in a ring that had five points dangling from it.

Truman stepped up the stairs and gazed at the treasure. It glowed, and the eye appeared to stare at him. Truman climbed the pyramid and took the ringed treasure off, exposing the eye that was engraved on the stone’s tip. Truman climbed down and held the ring to face the writing. The treasure’s mystical glow gave him the ability to read it.

_We have awaited your return, O Dark One. The vessel you now possess need only be temporary. Let your conscience awaken, and let your destiny be realized._

A dark aura appeared around the stone, and as we have seen previously, it flew into Truman’s body. His expression was still blank.

Um… huh? I don’t understand what’s going on, but it looks like Truman Kirman awakened as a Darkness. Only 8 to go, I guess.

“Do you… feel any different?” AlyakAm asked.

“…” He turned to face her. “I feel like I have the worst insomnia you can ever imagine.”

Sector V Treehouse

Night had fallen by the time AlyakAm and Truman returned. “Your team is probably concerned for your absence.” Alyak figured. “It’s no concern to let myself be noticed now. So let us deliver the good news.”

In the living room, Sector V and Cheren’s trio were gathered like she expected. They were conversing over Truman’s absence, with Melissa looking the most concerned. The girl in question looked back and saw them. “THERE’S Truman! He’s with MaKayla- eh, wait a sec…” She turned back around, as MaKayla was clearly with Cheren and Nerehc.

“ALYAKAM!” An enraged Nerehc rushed over and held his sword up to her. “I thought you were in Moonbase, how did you escape?!”

“Nerehc, what’s wrong?” MaKayla asked, surprised at his outburst. “Is she my Negative?”

“Medusa ordered them to free me.” AlyakAm stated. “She used the Dimensional Traveler designed by the Nainozama to send me here. My work is done, so you may take me back in your custody.”
“What work?! What did Medusa tell you to do?”

“She is doing as she promised in your deal. The prophecy is progressing ever so smoothly. I just needed this child’s assistance to accomplish the mission.”

Nerehc swerved behind and grabbed her arms. “It’s time to go back home. Clearly, I’ve been away too long.”

“Truman, are you okay?” Melissa put an arm around her friend, noting his unbalanced posture. “What did she make you do?”

“I think a beetle crawled up my pants… Would either of you mind checking for-”

“NOT IT!” Melissa pushed him to Kellie.

“I hate to cut this reunion short, but you know home drama.” Cheren said to Sector V. “Thanks for helping us, Sector Termina.”

“Any day of the week, Sector Hyrule!” Harry grinned. “Good luck with your ‘Twenty Keys’ and fighting demons and… whatnot.”

“Sure, man.” Cheren blushed. “Call me if any more moons fall, you know where the portal is.”

“We’ll miss you most of all, Melissa!” Kayla waved ‘bye’ as they left the treehouse. “You were the biggest help!”

“Yeah, yeah…” Lissa waved halfheartedly and rolled her eyes.

Madara and Sector LF are from Naruto, and if you remember Down in the Negaverse, we actually met Sector LF’s Negatives. So yeah, compared to the Lights, the Darknesses are easy to rack up. Well, until next time, enjoy an Atbash Cipher.

The Swamp Prince

Chapter Summary

Melody and Danny make it to Mermaid Swamp and find Manaphy.

This has to be the shortest chapter in a while. I guess I could’ve squeezed in another stage, but I didn’t want to. :P Caesar crypt.

Chapter 45: The Swamp Prince

Louisiana Bayou

Dark green mist blocked their view entirely. Melody and Danny had docked their boat beside land minutes ago, and walked forward into the swamp with Juju as their guide. “You don’t think they’ll be into a human who stuffed himself with chips before coming here?” Danny asked, holding the lantern.

“If they’re poisonbenders, I’d assume they’d welcome that.”

“Darn.”

“Don’t worry, Danny, it’s just a legend. The mermaids might be vicious, but ‘cannibals’ seems like a stretch. A little reasoning can do wonders. And if it doesn’t, don’t forget I’m tougher than I look.”

Stage 53: Mermaid Swamp

Mission: Locate Manaphy in the swamp.

Juju slithered across the grass ahead of them, and Melody and Danny followed with haste, lest they would lose their guide. Juju made several turns around trees and bushes, and the Jacksons expected a monster to ambush them any second. Rustle-rustle.

“Whuhwazzat?” Danny whipped around, holding the lantern toward the path they just came. Nothing but flora leading to pitch-darkness.

“Come on, Danny!” Melody grabbed her brother in a water tentacle and pulled him along as they resumed chasing Juju. The snake jumped and swung a vine over a murky pond, so the siblings thought it best to follow his example.

They came to a wide area enclosed within thick vines, in which Juju slithered his way up a diagonal vine that was his width and got onto the ledge on the other side. The Jacksons couldn’t follow him up the vine, but there were three thick stalks growing around this area. Melody lashed her water tentacles to grab the top of the shortest one, pulling it before loosening her grip, and flinging to the air. She grabbed the medium stalk, flung to the tall one, then onto the ledge where Juju waited. Danny hooked the lantern to his pants and repeated the actions, though his heavier body made it more difficult. In his fails, Danny saw a secret high ledge to the left of the medium stalk, and when he decided to redirect his momentum and fling over there, he collected a trophy of Neptune! “…Yaaaay, game completion.”

Danny caught up to his sister and watched Juju jump and roll down a thick vine slide, up the ramp on the bottom end to land on ground across a pond. “Danny, I’m gonna need your help here.”

“I know.” Danny sighed. He gave Melody his lantern before bending water from his bottles into his mouth. He turned more round, and Melody climbed onto him as he rolled down the slide. His momentum allowed him to go up the ramp and land on the next ground, and Melody jumped off to let Danny deflate. “If I ask for drinking water, say ‘no.’” Melody remarked as Danny put the water back in his bottles.

Mermaid ghouls flew at them from gravestones nearby. Their bodies were gassy purple, with glowing yellow eyes and sharp fangs. Mel and Danny frightfully sliced them with water, but the smoke reformed into the ghosts behind them and tried to choke their necks. Melody got her arms free and sliced water at the graves, severing them, and the ghosts faded away, giving them the chance to breathe. In the next field, they saw a gravestone on a tall pillar, Merghosts coming at them. Mel and Danny sliced water and dispersed them, then Melody ran to get behind the pillar, climbing on a small platform to grab a beanstalk with water tentacles. She propelled herself up to the pillar and sliced the gravestone.

Melody latched her water-arms on some thick vines above her, climbing toward a cliff they were growing from, but Merghosts flew down from up there, too. As she was swatting them with water, Danny stuffed himself with his own water and lay on his back like a big round pillow. “Melody, drop that rock on me!” He pointed at the stone lodged in the vines on her right. Melody grabbed said rock in her water-arm and dropped it on Danny’s belly, causing him to blast a tall gush of water, and Melody (regretfully) jumped in and was propelled to the cliff. She destroyed the gravestone and waited for Danny and Juju to catch up to her.

The duo then followed Juju through another foggy maze. The only sounds were grass and twigs crunching under their shoes, the rustling of bushes they moved aside. Rustle. Melody and Danny whipped around. They still saw nothing but darkness the way they came. “You think anything is stalking us?” Danny asked.

“Yep.” They turned back around… “Where’s Juju?” The siblings quickly ran forward, holding their lamp/glowing water in every direction. “Juju?” Melody called with a not-so-loud tone.

“Juuuuuuuuuu?” Danny howled. The snake had gone missing entirely. They looked around for a few minutes, before Danny concluded, “We’re gonna die.”

“No we’re not. We’ll just keep heading straight, eventually we’re bound to end up somewhere.” Melody insisted as she led them both forward.

“Yeah, in a Neptunian Humantrap.” Danny scoffed.

“Please, where’d you come up with that?”

“They’re mermaids!” he hissed. The two walked straight for several minutes, making sure they stayed close to each other. The swamp continued to drag on. Trees, vines, and grass were all they encountered. “Do you think Mama Odie will be mad that we left her snake for death?” Danny asked.

“She sent him in here to begin with.”
“’kay.”

The two made it to a muggy cliffside. Melody stretched a tentacle up to grab a part, but it broke off on her grip. She proclaimed it was too slippery, so using her bending, she grabbed much of the muddied liquid off the cliff, shaking the dirt off and holding only the clear water. “Get ready to use your circus acts again.”

“I’m gonna drink mud water?!” Danny exclaimed.

“We need enough to get a good booster. It’s clean now, relax.” Melody bent the water into Danny’s mouth, inflating him again. Danny fell onto his belly, mouth facing the ground, as Melody climbed onto his back, raised twin Water Fists in the air, and PUNCHED down on her brother to make him squirt an endless stream. He propelled into the air like a balloon, but they made it to the cliff before he deflated. The next path led over a murky river far below, between close vine walls. Thick vines were hanging outstretched, and Melody went first to grab the vines in her tentacles, whirl around them, and fling to following vines. Danny followed her example, again at a slower rate.

After getting across, they then faced a murky river with far-apart platforms that each stepped higher. Danny sighed in exhaust, again stuffing himself with cleaned water from the mud, letting Melody climb onto his bloated body before he began bouncing, going higher with momentum so he could get up the platforms. They reached a dead end, but Danny could smash through a weak patch to a lower path. The boy deflated as they proceeded to what seemed like another maze. Again, Melody intended to go straight.

“Huff…huff… I need to rest…” Danny slowed down before finally falling on his back.

_Rustle._ Melody briefly saw a large shadow rush behind some trees. She ran to where it went with her water raised in defense. She saw nothing at first, but saw the shadow go behind a further tree, so Melody chased. She saw nothing. “Sigh… I’m seeing things.” Melody returned the other way to rejoin… “Danny?” She looked around. Her brother didn’t respond. “Danny?”

She began to walk in circles around a set area. Still no sign of him. No sign of his lantern light. “Danny, you BETTER not be pranking me.” She walked quickly forward, then she turned right, went left, went slightly right… Somehow, she was back at the muggy cliffside. “Oh, come on.” She decided to head the way she came, retracing her steps… which she didn’t really remember. “Hello?” she called to no one. There was no one. No Danny… no Juju… no Eric… just Melody. She sighed to herself and merely walked forward. “I have to get out of here. Get a search party or something. Wait! I’ll just radio Moonbase.” Melody tapped her wristwatch, which depicted static. …The image didn’t change. “Oh. Well, I’ll call Mom.” She took out her phone and dialed the number. “…No signal.”

Everywhere she looked was trees, shrubs, and darkness. No matter how far she walked, she found no sign of exit. “My legs are tired…” She decided to sit down and rest beside a tree. “…I’m lost. I wanna go home. I don’t…” She lied down, “I don’t want to do this, anymore. I wish I just… stayed home.”

Melody had never been so lost and hopeless. It made her question everything. She wanted to become a reporter… but news had just been so dramatic for her. She thought they could make it through Mermaid Swamp… the fog was too thick for her. And what of the… Apocalypse? Why were they doing anything, knowing what was to come. Why, and how could they stop it. …What did Cheren have planned. A week ago, he was despairing over his father, he believed nothing else. Two days ago, they conquered America. What a wild story that would’ve made. Would look great on KNN News.
“…” Melody jumped to her feet, “Cheren’s not giving up, and I can’t, either. I have to get us out of this place, for his sake. …And find Manaphy.” She kept walking.

Meanwhile, Danny was almost completely drained. “Meeloodyyyyy.” He held the lantern still, but his chubby legs were like jelly. He prayed for a miracle… a guardian angel to guide his wayward spirit.

_Upon one summer’s morning, I carelessly did stray_

_Down by the Walls of Wapping, where I met a sailor gay_

Was his prayer answered? A beautiful voice sang to him, soft and enticing.

_Conversing with a bouncing lass, who seemed to be in pain,_

_Saying, William, when you go, I fear you will ne’er return again._

Danny saw her through the trees ahead. A lovely mermaid with a purple tail, and purple long hair covering her green body.

_My sailor is as smiling as the pleasant month of May,_
_And oft we have wandered through Ratcliffe Highway,_
_Where many a pretty blooming girl, we happy did behold,_
_Reclining on the bosom of her jolly sailor bold._

Danny slowly walked closer. The mermaid turned and looked at him. She was about 16 years old… but Danny was attracted to her. Water dripped down her gorgeous flawless face, down her cleavage. Her yellow eyes peered into his soul. He wanted to kiss her purple lips.

_Come all you pretty fair maids, whoever you may be_
_Who love a jolly sailor bold that ploughs the raging sea,_
_While up aloft, in storm or gale, from me his absence mourn,_
_And firmly pray, arrive the day, he home will safe return._

A smile stretched onto Danny’s face. He was going to hug this mermaid… he was going to kiss her.

_My name it is Maria, a merchant’s daughter fair,_
_And I have left my parents and three thousand pounds a year,_

Others of her kind waited beneath the surface. They felt the tasty, rotund boy coming.

My heart is pierced by Cupid, I disdain all glittering gold,

Danny reached the edge of the river. The gorgeous mermaid leaned down to him. He felt her breath as she spoke the last words of the song.

_There is nothing… can console me…_

Danny inched his face closer… he joyfully awaited that kiss.

...but my jolly... sailor... bold.

“…HAAAAAH!” She exposed her sharp teeth, grabbed Danny, and pulled him under the water.
Melody gasped, whipping her head left at the sound of the splash. “Danny?!” She ran that direction, and found a patch of bubbles in murky water, beside a dropped lantern. She took a breath and dove inside, lighting her hands blue in attempt to see. It was far too dark underneath, but she felt the light bubbles patting her from below, so she swam toward them. “HAAAAAH!” Another ravenous mermaid came up to snack on her, Melody punched her off and whirled her arms to send streams of bubbles toward her. A mermaid was thrown at Melody from below, dizzy from punches, and the girl held her glowing hand down to see Danny. Three more mermaids were swimming at her, she slashed her arm and sent a bubble-slice at them.

Danny and Melody swam back to the surface and climbed onto land, the former grabbing his dropped lantern. Melody stepped in a puddle—“AAH!” A mermaid’s purple-nailed fingers grabbed her, she slashed water to knock it off, then a group of mermaids lunged out of water nearby and tackled them both. One of them stuck her hand in her mouth, covering it with gooey saliva which she used to handcuff Mel and Danny.

“It’s been a while since we had fresh human.” a mermaid hissed. “And we were just now getting ready to cook the one that came earlier. This fat one smells extra special.”

“Oh, God!!” Danny panicked.

“Hurry up. We must get the pot ready.” One of the mermaids farted gas at them, making the Jackson kids dizzy and drowsy…

When their vision came back, the Jacksons felt their selves floating on their backs in murky water. They quickly held their heads up, seeing the mermaids pulling them were heading to a steaming yellow-green cauldron, in a circular pond where other mermaids were waiting. They were chanting with excitement, waiting to feast on fresh humans. Melody looked right, seeing Juju stuck to a stick as mermaids were frying the terrified snake over fire. The humans were tossed onto a wooden platform on the water.

“Melody! Danny! Is that you?”

The siblings looked over. A nerdy boy with drenched, ragged clothing was on another platform. “Eric?!!” Melody exclaimed.

“Ho, thank goodness! I was afraid you got blown up by the atomic bomb. Hah ha, funny story, after the explosion, my boat crashed on a reef, so I had to paddle and ended up lost at sea. I made it to this swamp and, well, I heard some really beautiful singing and followed it. Wouldn’t ya know it, it was a trap set by sirens.”

“I thought only animals could hear them.”

“My mom had a lot of animal habits, so I guess I inherited ‘em. Melody, PLEASE tell these guys you’re the Ocean Princess! I tried to, but they don’t believe me!”

“HAAAAH!” A mermaid shot up onto Melody’s platform, hissing at her. “This girl is the mermaid princess?” She examined her legs. “Then what are these extra limbs?” She sniffed Melody’s foot. “Spice compliments?”

Melody kicked the mermaid in the face, pushing her off. She quickly spun her cuffed hands and called some water up over them, freezing the sticky goo, then pulling her hands until the ice broke. “Listen,” she jumped to her feet and spoke confidently, “my name is Melody Jackson, granddaughter of Kyogre, and niece of Manaphy Neptune. I hereby order all of you to stop this crazy ritual.”
The mermaids all hissed loudly in shock. “Lies!” one declared. “Any waterbender can wander into our midst and claim they’re royalty!”

“Alright, you asked for it. Water Gate, Open!” Melody thrusted her arms to either side, and her body lit with an aqua-blue aura. She jumped into the water, and the mermaids swam away when all of the water started flowing into a single, focused gush. A liquid colossus of Melody that was almost as tall as the trees towered over them, reflecting the light-blue glow of her body. She raised her fist as it grew bigger with more channeled water. “I am the Princess of the Sea, and all bodies of water it connects to. Release my friends or face the consequences.”

“I would do what she says.” They all looked up the river. A large, rotund mermaid with a green upper body, and purple lower body (like many others of her kind), with golden bands on her wrists, sloshed across the surface, making the gesture of marching. The lesser mermaids looked again at Melody’s form, choosing to free Danny, Eric, and Juju before some of them swam away in disappointment.

Melody’s liquid body dispersed as she set foot on Danny’s platform. Eric paddled his over to join them, and the merwoman approached the kids. “No other human so small can use waterbending at such a large level.”

“You must be a friend of our mom’s!” Danny beamed.

“DON’T count your guppies!” She folded her arms and leaned over them imposingly. “My name’s Ineptune. I work for the Kremling Krew.”

“Ineptune?” Melody recognized that name. “You fought Vweeb’s parents, didn’t you?”

“Yes, girl, ‘I fought VWEEB’S parents.’” She spoke in an aggravated tone. “I don’t know who Vweeb is, but as long as I’m in the history books, CHALK one up! Name me ‘Ursula’ for all I care.” She folded her arms and turned away.

“Well, why did you help us?” Danny asked. “You were a bad guy, weren’t you?”

“Bad’ is a matter of perspective.” She turned back around. “But yes, I did desire Oceana’s destruction. I, unlike my poisonous sisters, desired to live in the big city, but my poisonbending made me a little… unbearable. Then after a long and heartaching story, I met King K. Rool and joined his Kremlings.”

“What was the story?” Eric asked hopefully.

“NONE of your business! Anyway, the reason I helped you is because we know one of you will be Manaphy’s Guardian. Probably Goddess here. It is our desire that you should be ‘awakened.’” She sloshed away.

“Why do you care if I’m awakened?” Melody asked.

“Ineptune looked at them again, “King K. Rool and his allies are trying to find the Firstborn. Again. It’s all part of Project: Find Gnaa.”

“They’re trying to find Negatar Gnaa?”

“Yes. Finding the Firstborn and summoning Arceus is what caused Gnaa to go missing. They believe that bringing the Firstborn together again will help them bring Gnaa back.”

“I assumed they would be worried about the Apocalypse.” Danny said.
“The what?” Ineptune questioned.

“Yeah, I mean, if they called Arceus, they could ask him to do something about it. …It makes me wonder if he could.”

“That seems like an interesting topic to bring up with the captain. But in due time. I supposed you want to see… His Majesty?”

The three operatives and Juju exchanged glances. Melody shrugged, “Sure.”

The group walked on the side of the river as they followed Ineptune through the village. Many of the mermaids were snarkily talking amongst their selves, while others feasted on the remains of unknown creatures or passed dirty looks at them. “Were they really going to eat us?” Melody asked.

“Well, of course. Humans are quite delicious, especially benders. I’ve never tasted one, though I tried to with that human and her alien friends back then.”

“That’s just horrible.”

“Who’s going to do anything about it? Oceana’s law does not reach here. They would not even welcome us if we came, we eat what we ensnare to survive. Of course, that was before the Kremlings made this land their base. They’ve provided loads of lush fruit and bananas. There’s our base.” She pointed to the oddly-shaped mountain a few miles away.

“That’s K. Rool’s base?”

“Yes. After the Firstborn Quest, the World Government started becoming rather ‘antsy’ about catching him. He needed a place to lay low, so I brought him to my homeland. It wasn’t easy. Hundreds of warships went after him. Kroctus sunk every last one. The Kremling Krew is fiercer than the average animals!”

“Is Yogi Bear a division commander?” Danny asked. His friends laughed cheerily.

“Does this mean K. Rool has Manaphy trapped in his base?” Melody asked. “With the Fairy Princess?”

“The Fairy Princess we have, yes. But Manaphy is the Sea Prince, he deserved to be with his kind. …We might have judged wrongly on that.”

“Whaddyyou mean?”

They arrived at a river that turned left, and Ineptune looked down and said perkily, “Oh! There he is!” The kids caught up and curiously looked where she pointed.

A gang of mermaids were roaring and cheering for a fight taking place: a little slime-green creature with two antennas was biting and tugging a Kasplat Kremling. “Mana-Mana! Mana!” The small creature hissed, and the Kasplat cried when its sharp teeth sunk into his shoulder. The mermaids continued hollering for the creature, throwing fish, and it caught one before swallowing whole.

“Hey, leave that guy alone!” Melody yelled, throwing water at the creature to knock it off the Kremling. She stepped through the ankle-deep water and shoved the mermaids aside. “Just what are you-” The creature looked up and glared at her. “…Manaphy?”
The Firstborn of Water was venomous, with sharp fangs, triangles on his eyelashes instead of circles, sharp antennas, a jagged red gem on its heart, and heartless yellow eyes. “MAAAAN.” The creature leapt and chewed on Melody’s leg.

“Hey- Stop it! STOP IT!” She shook her leg, then grabbed and pulled Manaphy off. “Manaphy, I’m Eva’s daughter! I’m Melody!”

The Firstborn stopped shaking and stared at her eyes. A part of him almost seemed to recognize her. “…Maaaan!” He tried to bite her face, Melody punched him to the water and kicked him to the shore. Manaphy hissed and flopped to the main river, swimming up the route they came.

The group followed him partway before Manaphy began to try to catch fish, chewing them heartlessly. “What… happened to him?” Melody asked.

“Water is the Element of Change.” Ineptune spoke. “Manaphy is the Firstborn of Water. One of his special powers is adapting to the environment he’s in. Manaphy was lured here by the mermaids’ wail, and he brought that blue girl with him. It was horrible, what they did to the Fairy Princess. ‘UCK, she’s blue, she must be sick!’ they said. ‘Don’t eat her, she’ll give us food poisoning.’ ‘Wait, maybe she’s an ice person, LET’S beat her around to see if she breaks!’ Cruel, cruel treatment to Miss Lapis Lazuli. Her gem was already broken, so we assumed Manaphy wanted to get it fixed. He tried to tell them to stop, but needless to say, they took delight in the little prince. Cursed as he is, he’s still a baby. An impressionable baby, at that. …The mermaids made him into one of their own.

“Manaphy put aside his concern for Princess Lapis, and started trying to eat her. What a jerk, right? Lapis became consumed with despair; she would have destroyed this land in her rampage… until Dr. Robotnik caught her with a net. Now she is locked in Hideout Helm. We’ve been trying to keep Manaphy within the swamp’s boundaries until someone came to get him. It should suffice you to know, deadly poisons are harder to get rid of than healthy poisons. That is K. Rool’s theory, which is why he doesn’t want Manaphy to leave. The people of Oceana would hate what the Sea Prince has become.”

Melody couldn’t believe this was the same Manaphy her mother described. The happy, joyful Sea Prince, whose voice was magical and won the love of all animals of the sea. She was watching this same prince wrestle with and chew the flesh off of fish. He jumped at and bit every mermaid that jeered at him, and they punched him in turn. “If only we brought our mom. Manaphy loved her… she could help him get back to normal.”

“Melody, I think you need to do that.” Danny reasoned. “Assuming you’re gonna be his Guardian and not me.”

“Yeah, you’re probably right.” She sighed. “Manaphy needs an older sister… or in this case, an older niece to help straighten him out. …” Melody turned to look at Hideout Helm. “But first I should make up for his mistake. I’m gonna help the Fairy Princess.”

Cyberspace

The Zoni teleported Vanellope to another expansive and beautiful landscape. This entire world was made of glittering gems, with small crystals sprouting from the ground. The sparkling stars in the bright, grayish-pink sky complimented this posh world. Vanellope was gazing at a towering structure of these gems. “What is this place…”

“This Land of Crystals and Gems is a Core World.” the Zoni said. “Precious energy dwells beneath the rock. XANA has brought Peridot here. She will use this planet’s resources to fix our leader. You must rescue him, and fix before her."

“Don’t I get a ‘Pretty please with sugar and sprinkles’?”

“Later! Please go!”

“Close enough.” (Play “Atop the Sea Spire” from Steven Universe.)

Stage 54: Land of Crystals and Gems

Mission: Rescue the Zoni’s leader.

Vanellope marched up a clear, diamond stairway to a round area with small, crystal bugs with pink mouths, that looked like larva. “The Crystal Shrimps feast on energy. You must avoid.” Or better yet, Vanellope thought, she could spin-jump and bounce around all of them. One of the columns around this garden had a sapphire gem, so Vanellope grabbed it during her jumping, then bounced over to chuck it into a slot in a pillar over the edge. The pillar sunk low enough for Vanello to glitchwarp over on top of it, then she glitched her way across a series of more distant pillars, each farther than the last. The last pillar was too far for three glitches to make it; a Chargin’ Chuck fell from above, Vanellope barely seized the chance to jump and kick off of him before making it across with three glitches.

Vanellope faced a shiny gem stairway littered with Crystal Shrimps, and as she spin-jumped up, Volcano Lotuses spat fiery pollen over the stairs, forcing Vanellope to be cautious while jumping. At the top of the stairs, a King Bill blasted over from the opposite way. Vanellope hurriedly glitchwarped above the massive missile, landing on its top before jumping off the other side. She landed on a broken edge, just now realizing the next path had many broken parts. She glitchwarped to the next foothold, glitched up when a Banzai Bill came from the right, glitched once more when another came from left, and when a King Bill blasted directly from above, she let herself descend, glitched across the next gap, and dodged it. “Ya know, how come my levels are never as peaceful as they should be?”

“Peace gets old.” The Zoni said. At the end of this road, Vanellope turned down a path on the left, which led between twin walls of waterfalls. Rip Van Fish were snoozing inside of them, but at the whistle of a Chuck that was hidden within the falls, they all woke up and swam at Vanellope in midair. Parts of the path began collapsing into the falls, Vanellope glitchwarped across gaps, evasively maneuvering around the flying fish. Eventually she arrived at a more open region of the water canyon, viewing a group of large, gem-made platforms.

Buzzy Beetles were crawling up the steep slope leading down to these platforms, so Vanellope “Wheeeeee!” slid down the slope and kicked the beetles off. At the bottom, Vanellope glitchwarped to the first platform near her left. A sphere of Boos was surrounding a blue P-switch, which rested on a single small block. Timing carefully, Vanellope ran and jumped between an opening, glitched just onto the block’s edge to grab the switch and not press it—she slipped and fell to the floor, thankfully missing the Boos, and she threw the switch away and glitched out of there.

She threw the switch to and glitched onto a taller, right platform. She dodged the Crystal Shrimps’ gnash with a start, beginning to spin-jump across the spiky creatures. Hidden amongst them was a gray P-switch, which Vanellope decided to smash. The Crystal Shrimps morphed into coins—and so did the R.S. Buzzies that were crawling around the midair blocks leading between a waterfall trench. Vanellope carried the blue switch here and pressed it, and when she followed this block path, she saw that the rest of the path, which was previously coins, turned into blocks, too. She hastily ran across these blocks, over a watery chasm and to a lovely gem temple, before glitchwarping across the gap to said temple, zipping left-and-right to avoid falling boulders.

Vanellope stepped up a short stairway before entering the temple, starting with a narrow hallway with giant, winged Piranha Plants. The large plants jumped, shot a fireball while in midair, then landed, each at different times. Vanellope expertly glitched and dodged them, getting into the next corridor to a wider room that had a waterfall chasm below. Vanellope picked up a pink key at the edge of this path, threw it over, then glitched across the chasm to the tiled floor. On this floor, the tiles were flashing many different colors, each its own color, until a respective one stopped. When red stopped, fires bounced everywhere. On blue, Buzzy shells bounced. On purple, Chargin’ Chucks came at Vanellope. On white, buzzsaws. Amongst them, Vanellope noticed a single pink tile in the corner, and when she dropped the key on it when it lit, the door opened.

Vanellope went up another staircase—avoiding a buzzsaw from the ceiling, and appeared in another chasm room with ropes moving along paths in the ceiling. They moved quickly, making it hard to jump to each one, and Torpedo Teds were released from the ceiling to fly at her. There was a block switch on the right wall of the room, so she grabbed a rope that moved her close, jumped off to bump the switch, then glitched to grab the rope again. The door on the other side of the room opened—it also caused some ropes to fall off, so she glitchwarped over into the door.

Vanellope walked up stairs into a taller, wider passage with waterfalls in-between columns on either side. She spin-jumped to get across the floor full of Crystal Shrimps, but the stairway on the other side was lined with Munchers. She assumed that a Power Star was in the ? Block on the floor, but she couldn’t hit it in that position. She bounced near the waterfalls and found a hidden enclosing with another key. She spin-jumped and carried the key across the shrimps, and landed on the small open space on the floor beside the block. Before the shrimps could bite her, she kicked the key at the block to open it, grabbing the star.

She used her invincibility and charged through the shrimps, up the stairway of Munchers. She ran across a small ground that had four statues, two on either side, which were white, yellow, blue, and pink. The pink statue’s head was cut off, and the blue statue had a crack in its head. As her Star Power wore off, she ran up another staircase, to an open field at the top of the temple. (End song.)

Peridot was hunched over Clank’s fallen body, burning the green laser from her fingers into his open chest. “For what looks like a hatchling’s toy, this ‘XJ-0461’ has curious circuitry. Perhaps if I located a Rose Quartz, chop it and combine with a Jasper, I can remake him to XANA’s—”

“Hey! Dorito!” Peridot looked up and saw Vanellope heading her way.

“Ugh! Not the ‘Vanellope’ again!”

Vanellope stopped and looked at the smaller robot curiously. “Hey, cool new toy! Can I play?”

“NO PLAY! He is Leader!” the Zoni moaned. “You must saaave!”

“You won’t have the chance.” They all looked up when XANA appeared over the temple on a floating platform.

“Guy-I-don’t-remember!” Vanellope pointed.

“Oh, shut up! I’ve about had it with you meddling with my affairs, Vanellope. Lesser Lord Gnik expects me to have this space cleaned, and I can’t have you ruining it!”
“I don’t know much of what’s going on, but these buggy guys here keep telling me to ‘fix’ stuff, so don’t we have the same goal?”

“Also, I’m the one fixing what you clearly messed up.” Peridot said to XANA smugly.

“So like, why are we fighting?” Vanel asked.

XANA grumbled and screeched in his high-pitched voice. “All Ragaj keeps telling me is to do something about the Zoni, so by extension, I have to kill Vanel! Peridot, if you don’t want your precious hide munched, you would pick Clank up and move. Goooo GET her! My Centipeetle!” XANA flew away.

The ground started shaking, so Peridot grabbed Clank in one hand and made the other into a propeller to fly away. The Centipeetle emerged from over the edge, a centipede with an emerald-green back and darker-green bottom. It had a large, cream-colored mane, a long mouth of sharp teeth, and when it roared, Vanellope noticed the round, green gem that bore the Eye of XANA (and looked like a Pokéball) in its mouth.

“For a second, I thought that thing was Serpentine.” Peridot said to herself.

“Yeuchk.” Vanellope looked disgusted. “I don’t wanna know how your parents met.” (Play the Mini-boss theme from Zelda: Twilight Princess.)

Boss fight: Centipeetle

The Centipeetle blasted globs of acid around the field, then it attempted to crawl at Vanellope, who dodged left. The Centipeetle turned and spat more acid at her, further covering the floor as a result. The creature’s mouth-eye glowed as it attempted to gnash at Vanel, who glitched backward, nearly falling in an acid. When it caught up, Vanellope glitched past and along its side, then onto the end of the Centipeetle’s tail. She held on as it wagged its tail, looking back to hiss at her. Vanellope chose to let it fly her to the air, so when the Centipeetle spat acid, she glitched down to its tail, then glitched away to trick it into hitting its own tail.

The monster cried, facing up at the sky, then Vanellope climbed on its back, ran to its mouth, and performed three glitch-kicks against the eye. The tail shook, and five of its segments broke off into individual, Baby Centipeetles. When they crawled at her and opened their mouths wide to gnash, Vanellope seized the chance for a glitch-kick to each one of their eyes. The babies were destroyed, but the Mother Centipeetle became more angry. Without all those extra parts to hold it back, the Centipeetle charged faster, running circles around the field as Vanellope dodged. Finally, the monster crawled over the edge, climbing back up on one of the surrounding pillars.

The Centipeetle’s eye glowed as it charged energy, then blasted a bright-green ball into the sky. It exploded and rained small globs of acid, Vanellope quickly dodging each one. “Hey, watch where you’re spitting!” Peridot shouted. The Centipeetle wrapped itself around another pillar and shook it, causing four Koopas to fly out from the top and onto the field. Vanellope took one of their shells, leaped off toward a pillar, threw and bounced the shell against it, then jumped on it for a boost. She did three glitchwarps to get atop the pillar, watching the Centipeetle try to get away. Vanellope chased it across the pillars, but it kept evading as it shook each one and made enemies spawn out of it.

When one of these pillars emitted a torch at the top, Vanellope smirked, beginning to jump the opposite way so the Centipeetle would be forced to about-face. The creature’s tail was burned on the torch when it landed on that pillar, then Vanellope hurried over to glitch-kick its eye. Five more chunks of its body broke off, each baring wings while the mother fell to the field. Vanellope locked sights on the closest one that approached her, but in her attempt to glitch-kick, it dodged up. Vanellope fell to the field and waited for the winged bugs to come down. Another one prepared to snap her, she glitched up to it, it dodged, she glitched again, it went higher, but she managed to kick and destroy it on the third glitch. She repeated the same moves for the other four.

With only three more parts besides its own, the Centipeetle began leaping around the field, rapidly munching its mouth and aiming down at Vanellope for each descent. She kept a sharp eye, when its mouth was open, she glitch-kicked the eye, forcing the creature back as another part flew off. Vanellope destroyed the youngling, then kicked the mother’s open mouth again. A winged baby came off, she performed the three-kick combo to destroy it. With only one part behind the mane left, the Centipeetle leapt high into the air, coming directly down at Vanellope. The girl squatted, charged the pixelated force into her legs, and shot up.

Vanellope dealt a string of rapid glitch-kicks against the creature’s eye, watching the XANA-infected gem blink with static. Vanellope zipped lower, charged again, and zapped up for a mighty kick that flew Centipeetle to Peridot above. “Waaah!” The Program was hit, dropping Clank as Vanellope glitched up to catch him. The Centipeetle crashed on the ground and puffed into pixels, leaving only its round gem eye. (End song.)

“HA haaa!” Vanellope cheered with victory, smirking at Peridot. “Your robot toy is MINE, you sour soda!”

“No! Give him back!” Peridot flew down. The Zoni got in her way and blasted energy spheres to send her flying. “AAAAH!”

The Zoni came back down and stared at the sleeping robot, whom Vanellope rested on the ground. “He is our leader.”

“This toy robot?”

“He inherits soul of Orvus, first Zoni. You must fix him. Then, his knowledge is yours.”

“You guys, I still don’t know how to fix anything, I’m not a mechanic like Dewey you just blew away.”

“In this land, there is a way to fix. We will bring you to Fountain of Quartz. That is where... she will heal him.”

Mermaid Swamp is kind of based off the horror game of the same name, but at the same time totally different. Ineptune was from Spyro: A Hero’s Tail, the Centipeetle’s from Steven Universe, “Jolly Sailor Bold” is from Pirates: On Stranger Tides, and now I’m tired. XP Next time, we’ll do two stages, then we’ll be at Stage 57, Guertena Gallery. Later.

When They Are Young

Chapter Summary

Karin Kurosaki travels back in time with the Multiverse Portal to meet Sōsuke Aizen. In a flashback, Negatar Gnaa meets a young Tom Riddle.

This may be the last Side Stories chapter within the Art Saga. Soon, we'll get into the main plot of Tenth Firstborn. (P.S., if you haven’t read Sector JP, beware of spoilers in this chapter.)

Chapter B-24: When They Are Young

DNK Moonbase

AlyakAm was locked back in her cell alongside Egroeg after she and Nerehc returned to Moonbase. “We don’t have any idea how she escaped, Master Nerehc.” Ininap said in her nervous tone. “We looked everywhere, we really did, b-but-”

“Yeah yeah yeah, take it easy, Stutters. It sounds like Medusa had something to do with it.”

“A dark portal, to be precise.” AlyakAm confirmed. “This petty fortress of scrap is nothing to even the simplest of a god’s abilities.”

“And what were you doing with that boy? Were you looking for one of the Thirteen Darknesses?”

“Yes, and I can safely assure you, you now have less of the quest to worry about.”

“Then who was the Darkness in question?”

“Medusa says you don’t need to know that, yet.”

“Of course we don’t. Ininap, I’m going back to the Posiverse. Cheren and Kayla said they might know where to look next. Let everyone know to watch out for Medusa.” He began to walk away. “I should’ve expected her to look for loopholes in this deal…”

“Hm hm hm.” AlyakAm chuckled.

Ininap turned to her curiously. “Eh he… What’s so funny?”

“Nerehc is concerned for what conniving tricks Medusa has up her sleeve regarding this grand plan. He, like Medusa herself, is deceived into believing the latter is the mastermind. Her position is no greater than that of any of our father’s ‘associates.’”

“She is to our father what I am to AlyakAm.” Egroeg commented. “Even I am smart enough to know this.”

Ininap approached them. “You two know more about this prophecy than any of us, don’t ya? Yer father knows… somehow, someway…”
“You are inferring what exactly?” AlyakAm asked.

“You know important answers.” Ininap spoke seriously. “You can be a real big help to us. You can help us be prepared. You can help us save everyone.”

“You are mistaken. There is no amount of preparing you could do and no way to save everyone. You can never comprehend what is to come.”

“And you can? Are you two all right with what’s going to happen? It won’t affect you in any way?”

“…” Alyak took a minute to respond. “It doesn’t matter if we are or not. And a weak person like you would only cower in a closet. If I decided to tell you, you would utterly give up and give in.”

“I wouldn’t. Not on my own… anyway…” Ininap turned away. “Not unless Nerehc does. I would follow where he thinks we should go. If he thought it was a losing battle… I would agree. If he thought we could win… I would let him use me as a shield if it would help him get there.”

“You haven’t a single speck of pride in your veins.” Egroeg said. “What a pity. …” Alyak was staring at him. “What? I have more than she does.”

“I’m not very smart or strong,” Ininap stated. “Until I learn how to be… I’ll trust Nerehc to guide me. Maybe you two should, too. Because it sounds like… you aren’t sure what to do, either.” She left the room.

Grayson Household

During a boring afternoon on a sunny day, Lee Andrew lay figuratively dead on the living room couch, lazily swaying his foot as his eyes leaned in the direction of the fireplace. His sister, Leanne came in and saw that his position did not change. “Wouldn’t you rather be trying to build an upgraded 4x4 weapon?”

“Wouldn’t you rather be acting like a snob at Guitar Hero?” the boy retorted.

“Lee, just because Wendy promised to magically spawn out of the fireplace to meet you, do you have to spend every waking moment waiting for her?”

“It’s not like we got any fun missions. I thought we would be fighting swarms of bad guys from the Government or these Gnık people, but we’re still just getting crappy Brotherhooders. I wish I could’ve gone to Magic World with Wendy.”

“Just get up once in a while so you don’t turn into a potato sack. Plus, you aren’t doing her any favors. Once Haruka hears how much you’re fixated on Wendy, she’ll turn her into blueberry soup.” On that note, Leanne left.

Lee passed off the conversation and continued waiting. After 10 more minutes, an emerald fire lit in the place. Lee got to his feet and gazed with eager blue eyes. “Uh!” Wendy popped out on her front. “So that’s what happens if the other side is smaller than the first.” Carla came beside her as Wendy looked up. Her face beamed. “Lee!”

“Wendy!” Lee exclaimed.

“Child, your feet are still in the fire.” Carla said.

“NOIDON’Twannamoseyfeet!” Wendy immediately scrambled out and hit the couch, toppling it over with her legs propped up. “I’m okay.”
Lee and Wendy lay on the breezy hill and watched the clouds drift by. It was the same hill where they met before, when Lee tried to help Wendy with her powers. That day was only three months ago, but it felt like years to both of them. The peaceful atmosphere put Carla into slumber on Wendy’s chest, leaving her and Lee to talk in private. “I still can’t believe how far I’ve come,” Wendy said. “Mr. Facilier taught me so much in just three months. I know magic, and Dragon Style, and I haven’t even started my first year at Hogwarts.”

“I sure feel jealous.” Lee replied casually. “You’re going on way cooler adventures than my team is.”

“Mr. Facilier told me you guys were on a quest, too. The Seven Lights?”

“No, everyone else is on that quest. It usually matters if we have a Chosen One in our sector, which we don’t. At least not at the moment. It feels like, until we actually know, the whole thing is random.”

“So the Chosen Ones are the only ones who matter?”

“That’s what it feels like. Take a look at Cheren, for instance, his family has a long record of always being Chosen. I guess if you’re lucky enough to be friends with a Chosen One, you have a shot at making the books. But I can never see a reason to try and help out with this quest unless we were actually part of it.”

“I can see how you would feel that way. But when you think about it, it doesn’t make you much different from everyone else. There are billions of people in the world, and only seven Seven Lights. Imagine all the people who aren’t concerned with this quest. They’re probably worried about accomplishing something else. Like me.” Wendy held up her Lamia Scale and softly rubbed it. “All I want to do is meet my family, make a lot of friends, and learn who I really am. And I guess somewhere else in the world, there are other people just like that. The world is a much bigger place than most people think.”

“I guess you’re right there.” Lee rolled on his side. “But when the Seven Lights and Eight Firstborn Guardians happen to be people you know pretty well, it makes the world feel smaller. Even in the Kids Next Door, we have thousands of sectors, but there’s only a few worth mentioning. That’s why we have the Top 10 list. And MY sector wouldn’t have gotten 10th Place back if Sector DR didn’t turn evil. It makes me wonder if Cheren even remembers to check up on every little sector.”

“He’s the Supreme Leader, isn’t he? Dr. Facilier once told me that Cheren is like… everyone’s friend.”

“Yeah, I guess he’s pretty nice, to a fault. But you should’ve seen him when he first became leader, he was getting torn up. Like, back then he was trying to grant everybody’s wishes like Jirachi. He got a lot of people to like him, but I can’t believe that he could manage the entire KND the same way. If you want my advice, Wendy, don’t make too many friends, because all those friends are gonna want things from you. Especially if you run a worldwide organization.”

“I don’t think I need to worry about that…” Wendy said sorrowfully.

“Hey, do you wanna join my family for dinner tonight?” Lee asked, sitting up. “We can introduce them to your weird cat.”
“Don’t call her weird.” Wendy sat up, too.

“Alright, sorry. So, you wanna come?”

“Sure.” She smiled. “I mean, if Mr. Facilier thinks it’s okay.”

“Cool, can’t wait! Heh, if you’re lucky, you’ll get to see Diwata turn into a werewolf with us.” Lee snickered.

“What do you mean?”

“Almost every night that wasn’t cloudy, she lays outside and stares at the moon. I’m not sure if she’s a werewolf or a Nine-Tailed Fox, but it creeps us out. You’ll see what I mean if the sky’s nice.”

“Well, now I’m scared to come!” Wendy panicked.

“Well, ya better watch out,” Lee got on all fours, “‘cause I might be one, TOO! !”

“AAAAH!” Wendy fell on her front when Lee pounced on her. “Ha ha ha ha ha ha ha ha!” They laughed happily.

“Child, you’re crushing me!”

“Oops, sorry, Carla.” Wendy climbed off of her flattened cat.

EiznekCm House

Nerehc took a quick bath after returning home, and the wetness was still present in his hair by the time he was dressed. He went to his room and would enter the Posiverse through his dresser mirror to meet with Cheren again. He had laid his sword halfway in the mirror to keep the portal open for that reason. But Nerehc saw a different sword on his bed: it had a green hilt and was encased in a black sheath.

Nerehc picked up a note by the sword. It read, 500 years Karakura. Signed with a green crayon picture of a head with snake hair. Nerehc glared at her signature and focused on the sword, then took the Ocarina of Time out of his pocket. Medusa must know what they’re going to do next.

En route to Sector JP

“So you think it’s another clue?” Cheren asked. He, Nerehc, and MaKayla were flying to Japan in a S.C.A.M.P.E.R., which the former was piloting.

“Yep, Medusa must be on to us. I guess it’s a good coincidence we were heading to Karakura, anyway.”

“I don’t think Medusa was talking about this Karakura Town.” MaKayla replied. “When I was sucked into the Multiverse Portal, I landed in a different Karakura. The members of Sector JP were there, except they weren’t Sector JP. It was an Original World.”

“An Original World?” Nerehc repeated.

“Do you know about them?”

“The Moon Spirit Cresselia appeared and told us about them. And Lucifer mentioned that that’s where the Darknesses come from.”
“Then we really are on the right track.”

“But why did you want to come to JP again?” Cheren asked MaKayla.

“Because if they have counterparts in Original Worlds, we could possibly use them to trace that universe again.”

“Don’t we have this sword to do that?” Nerehc asked. “Assuming you’re right, of course.”

“Yes, but I think Karin in particular would be suitable for the task at hand, given her position.”

“What position?” asked Cheren.

“Oh, riiiiight, she never told you!” Kayla cooed, pinching Cheren’s cheek. “Well, you’re in for a surprise.”

At the moment, Sector JP’s treehouse was taken over by monkeys, so the sector was forced to take refuge in a secret bunker in their local forest. A hatch on the ground opened to let the S.C.A.M.P.E.R. land in the underground hangar. The hangar turned dark when the hatch closed, so the trio entered a lit-up doorway to the hideout’s living room. “Cherry Pie, welcome to the Secret Pad.” Karin Kurosaki greeted with mock enthusiasm. Jinta and Ururu were seen playing games on a couch. “I don’t suppose you’re here to help us get those monkeys off our backs?”

“You’re still having trouble with those apes?” Cheren chuckled. “I thought you would’ve called animal control by now.”

“We tried to, but they have hypno beams at every entrance. Yuzu keeps getting hit and going Karate Mode.”

“Unfortunately, we’re here for a different matter.” MaKayla said seriously. “I think it’s time you revealed your secret, Karin.”

“Secret?” Karin’s brows twitched. Jinta and Ururu heard this and looked over.

“You have an affiliation with the Spirit Kids Next Door. Believe me, I have my sources, and I sensed the energy radiating from you during sector meetings.”

Cheren and Nerehca raised a brow at Karin. She sighed. “Fine, but promise you two won’t gasp and jump back in shock. Cheren, you remember that report I sent when we fought the Brotherhood leader a few months back?”

“Yeah?”

“Well, I left out a little detail.” Before their eyes, Karin FLASHED, and transformed into a ghost. She had a black robe, light-blue flames around her ankles, and a white aura around her body.

“YAAAAH!” Cheren and Nerehc jumped back in shock.

“Ugh.” Karin face-palmed. “S’yeah, the truth is I’m a Halfa – you know, like Danny Phantom. I do part-time work for the Spirit Kids Next Door, but I’m not allowed to use my powers against mortals. That’s sorta why I never told you.”

“I encounter the Spirit KND during my regular trips to the Spirit World.” Kayla said. “I got the tip from them.”

“What, is she in trouble or something?” Jinta questioned.
“No, but we need Karin for a project. As a matter of fact, her uniform will work perfectly for this mission.”

“What’re we doing, exactly?” Karin asked. She hadn’t really expected any sort of mission today, let alone one regarding her powers.

“We’re going to find one of the Thirteen Darkesses.” Nerehc confirmed, holding up the unnamed sword.

“We’ll explain on the way.” Cheren said. “Our next stop is Gravity Falls.”

Gravity Falls; Portal Chamber

The triangle machine was still active and spiraling its neon colors, the only light in this dark, ancient basement. Mabel, Grenda, and Candy were sitting on the floor, holding fishing rods that were cast into the portal. “I bet if I eat a Dimension Bass, it’ll create a wormhole in my stomach, and I’ll be able to eat 10,000 cheeseburgers without exploding!” Grenda exclaimed.

“I just wanna put it on my wall and hear it sing.” Mabel said with an innocent smile. “But it might sing in some garbly, other-dimensionly language.”

“Mabeeeel!” Dipper cried, entering the chamber with Cheren’s group. “I told you not to go dimension-fishing in the Multiverse Portal!”

“Relax, Dipper! It’s not like we’re going to catch the Time-Space drain plug with our fishing poles. Oh, I caught something!” Mabel quickly reeled hers in. An ant the size of a dog flew out of the portal, nibbling the lure. “WOAH! That is one ugly dog!” The ant spat out the lure and crawled back up into the portal.

“Sigh. Anyway, we’ve been studying this portal ever since Wendy and MaKayla made it out.” Dipper explained as he led them into the secret room. The Master Emerald was still sitting in its power station. “Look at this.” He showed them a scanner machine with a computer attached to it. “According to the journals, this device was meant to scan people or objects and detect duplicates of them in the Original Worlds!”

“Really? Try to scan Karin.” Cheren ordered.

“Sure. Stand in front of it.” Karin stood a few feet from the tiny eye-size hole, which shone a red holographic scan that swept down and up her body.

“Parallel detected in Original World ‘Karakura.’ Directing to targeted destination.”

They went to look at the portal. The arrow in the circle of symbols pointed at one of a flame. “So it can.” MaKayla observed. “But I think the portal has another purpose: it can travel through time.”

“IT CAN!” exclaimed Dipper, flipping open Journal 2. He lit the purple light and showed invisible ink. “While the portal can target specific universes, it seems that it drops me off at certain points in Time in those universes. Bill and I have built a device for an object called the ‘Ocarina of Time,’ which he says can be used to target specific times. But the ocarina in question has been lost for—”

He looked up when Nerehc held up the instrument.

“Not anymore.”

There was a machine on the left of the main panel with a small, square-shaped glass cabinet. It was perfectly fit for the ocarina’s size. Fi leapt out and said, “Master Cheren, I can use my telepathy and command the ocarina to transport the user 500 years in the past. Based on the structure of this device, there is a 70% chance that the vast chronokinetic energy contained in the ocarina will be transferred to the Multiverse Portal. This will, in turn, enable the portal to warp people and objects to the respective time date within the specified dimension.”

“Sounds like a 70% worth chancing.” With that, Nerehc performed the Song of Time, joined by Fi’s marvelous vocals. When the ocarina began to glow, they set it inside the cabinet and shut it. It shone a bright blue light, and the energy transferred along the cords to the portal. The machine shone blue, as did the spiraling portal. Mabel, Grenda, and Candy shut their eyes from the blinding light and ceased their fishing.

“This must be it!” MaKayla exclaimed. “Karin, now’s your chance, go in! Eventually, the portal should call you back.”

“But I don’t even know what I’m looking for!”

“You’re finding one of the Thirteen Darknesses. His name is Aizen. You need to take him to the dungeons and find a stone pyramid.”

“How do you know these things?”

“Because I was here before! This is based on the information I picked up.”

“First we’ll make sure the Darkness’s location is on the dot!” Nerehc ran up to the scanner and presented the sheathed sword to it. The machine detected the sword’s original location, and the destination of Dimension Karakura didn’t change.

Karin faced the portal with nervousness in her heart. She took a breath to relieve this feeling, then transformed into a ghost. She flew headfirst into the portal and whisked across the Sea of Worlds. There were bubbles with images of a white-haired man, a strong man with a cocky grin, and a creature Karin recognized as a Hollow. She was nearly dizzied by the images in the Dimensional Byway before a great white light engulfed her.

Soul Society; 500 years ago

Karin woke up under a blue sky with clouds, having landed in an alleyway between old wood houses. She got up on her feet and observed her surroundings. She floated upward for a better view of the area. She was in a village of some sort, with a huge white castle-like structure in the distance. The village looked like something from feudal Japan.

“Hu!” Blue mist escaped from Karin’s mouth; her Ghost Sense. It leaked out like a cracked bottle —Karin cupped her mouth shut. She landed on the ground and began to look for the cause that alerted the sense.

“What’s wrong, Nerd?! Why’re you so afraid, huh?” Karin heard a voice from around a left building corner. She peeked and saw a gang of large boys, surrounding a smaller boy with brown hair. They all wore ragged clothing and the small boy was the only one with shoes – brown sandals.

“Come on, guys.” The boy’s head was bowed, and he looked timid. “Can’t we just forget about it?”

“Nuh-uh!” The largest bully, a fat boy with blue robes and budding hair, smirked. “We know what you did to those Shinigami chasin’ after Kisuke! You got in their way and blew ’em back with your Super Reiatsu! Sōsuke, the mega freak who can’t go nowhere wifout his Spirit Pressure over-
“Guys, stop! Really, I mean it- hey!”

“What’re those kids’ problem?” Karin asked herself with spite. “Hm, they’re about to have another one-” She stomped up to them—the bullies were all blown apart by a sudden explosion, a small but forceful one. The boy was standing in the center where it came from, panting with anger.

“AHHH!” The bully screamed. “He really is a monster! RUUUN! Let the Shinigami get rid of him!” His friends followed his example and cowered away from the area, screaming.

Confused, Karin decided to approach the boy. He gazed up at her with nervous brown eyes, and moaned a faint “Uhhhhh…”

“Hey, I’m not gonna bully you.” Karin said. “So close your mouth before a bug enters in.”

He waited a moment before speaking. “…Are you… a Shinigami?”

“Shinigami?”

“Yeah… you’re wearing the robe…”

“I am?” Karin looked at her black robe. “I guess I am… So, why were those guys picking on you?”

“Um…” He looked down. “Because of my Reiatsu.”

“Reiatsu? …Hu!” Karin’s Ghost Sense leaked out in a ceaseless fashion again.

“Yeah, I have really big Reiatsu. And it makes me…?” He looked up and saw Karin trying to hold her mouth shut.

The girl turned around and let the mist float out. Wait a minute... this is a Spirit World. Everything here... but this boy, he...

“Are you okay, Miss?”

Karin turned back to him once the Ghost Sense settled. “I’m fine. My name’s Karin – Karin Kurosaki.” She smiled and sat down. “What’s your name?”

“Aizen?” The name immediately rang a bell.

“Do you want something from me, Shinigami-sama?”

Is this kid really a Darkness? He’s so small. But then again... “I was just looking around.” Karin answered. “But tell me about this Reiatsu of yours, Aizen. You said it was really big?”

“Uh-huh.” Aizen said in his timid voice. “I don’t know why it is, I was just born this way. I was told my mom died giving birth to me, and my dad just... dropped me. And I can’t control it most of the time. I can’t...!” Aizen’s hair started waving, and Karin felt an invisible force. “Aaaaah... It’s happening again!” He started panicking.

The blue mist leaked out of Karin’s mouth again. “Hang on!” She shot ectoplasmic energy from both hands and encased Aizen in a green barrier. She found it difficult to contain the force, and the barrier was cracking from it. Karin managed to keep it steady long enough for the power to die down. After three minutes, she released the barrier.

“I’m sorry… It acts up on its own a lot.” He said shamefully. “I… Wait… What was that spiritual pressure, Miss?”

“What? You mean that barrier I just did?” Karin replied.

“Yes… I’ve never seen Reiatsu like that. It doesn’t feel like any…”

Karin wondered if it was okay to say where she was from. She decided not to and chose to alter her backstory. “I was also born with a strange Reiatsu. It’s green-colored and behaves differently from normal Reiatsu. But it gave me an unfair advantage over everyone else; and I felt kind of bad for it.” She was referring to her skill on the soccer field. “Not only that… my mother died because of my power.” Karin said remorsefully.

“What did you do about it?”

The story was actually sensitive to Karin, and she felt awkward about editing it. “Well… I just learned to accept my powers. They didn’t change who I was inside, and best of all, I could use them to help people. I’m not sure how to help you control your powers, but maybe you can think of them as a gift. In the future, they could help you do something phenomenal.”

“Hmm…” Aizen bowed his head. “I never thought about it that way… The only thing I worry about is… how strong my power could get… I worry about what could happen because of them…”

Karin tilted his head back up, giving him an assuring grin. “If you’re worried about it, then make sure it doesn’t happen. Try to learn how to control them, try to get in touch with these powers. One day, you’ll be able to do great things, and you’ll be very thankful that you have them.”

“You really think… that I can?”

“Sure ya can, Slugger!” Karin playfully punched him in the shoulder. “Just keep your chin up and believe in yourself a bit more!”

“Ah!” Aizen flinched, holding his shoulder. “Why did you hit me, Shinigami-sama?”

“What? No-no-no, that wasn’t a hit!” she said quickly. “It was a shoulder bump! It’s just my way of saying ‘I have faith in you’!” Man, I really hope I’m not screwing up the timeline.

“Eh heh. That’s a very odd way of saying that, Shinigami-sama.”

“Please, just call me Karin. …Actually, call me Karin-san. I like being called that.”

“Ah!” Karin jumped at the question that could easily blow her cover. “Well, I, uh… work in Squad 1 and I…” She beamed at the opportunity at hand, “I work down in the dungeons! Checking on prisoners and… stuff! If you want, I can give you a tour of the place!”

“A tour? Are you allowed to do that?”

“Sure I am, it’s no big deal!” Karin grinned, ruffling his hair. “But just in case, let’s not tell anyone.
But FIRST, I’m gonna quiz ya!” She winked and stuck her index finger up. “Where is the dungeon located?”

“U-Under Squad 1…” Aizen stuttered.

“Correct! Which is where, exactly?”

“Er… it’s that big place right there.” He spoke as if the answer was an obvious fact and pointed at the castle-like structure.

“Yes, that would be pretty obvious to anyone that that… is where it is.” Karin felt stupid inside.

“O-kay, quiz completed, hop aboard and let’s go!” Karin picked the child up and turned invisible as she soared across the village.

They went unseen by the Shinigami guards, but they appeared to sense the Reiatsu emitted from Aizen. Karin phased them through the ground outside the castle and down several floors of what was clearly an underground dungeon. Karin and Aizen set foot on the 8th floor, the former lighting her hand green in order to see in the darkness. “I’m looking for a stone pyramid, is that it?” she mumbled. “Something like that shouldn’t be too hard to…”

“Did you say something, Karin-san?”

“Um, I was talking about the… super rare treasure that is lost within the dungeon depths.”

“Treasure?”

“Yes, it’s a pyramid! It’s an old legend that’s told among us Shinigami, but no one’s ever found it. I wonder if we’ll be lucky enough to?”

“Heh, is this some sort of game, Miss?” Aizen smiled.

“Maybe it is! You should play along.”

“Wait… I feel something.” The boy looked left.

“What?”

Aizen entered an open cell that had nothing inside but dust and chains. He approached a dark hole in the corner of the room. Karin held her glowing hand over the hole, but could not see its bottom.

“What do you feel, Aizen?”

“I don’t know… but I wanna go down there and see what it is. Is it safe?”

“I’m… not sure. …But I wanna see what it is, too. Let’s go down together.” Karin picked him up and began to float down. “Don’t worry, I’ll protect you.”

“Karin-san… do you think the pyramid is down here?”

Stage B-21: Dungeon Depths

Mission: Find the Pyrameglyph.
Karin and Aizen set foot on the bottom of the hole. The cave was full of dust and bones, and it was surprising to have faint light giving them vision in this dungeon. The first room was small and had a locked door—and it seemed Karin was unable to go intangible through it. She began to overturn the many small stones that were lain in the room. A dark scorpion with a skull mask jumped out of one of them and latched onto her face, but Karin was quick to yank it off and destroy the Hollow. “Look, Karin-san!” Aizen said, pointing to the key that was uncovered from the rock.

The two used it to unlock the door and go to the next room. They were on a platform over a wide room with many tall pillars that had mirrors on them. There was a Sun Switch on the other side, and it had a sleeping face due to no light. There was a light shining on a higher mirror, but it was faced away from the others, and all those mirrors faced random directions.

Karin kicked her soccerball at a mirror—the ball ignited like a comet from the force of the kick, and the mirror spun around before stopping to face another. Sadly, the mirror changed back after a few seconds. Karin saw a higher platform on her right and decided to fly up. With good precision, she kicked the ball around a sequence of mirrors, turning them one after the other, then she quickly hit the top mirror to direct the light all around them, eventually hitting the Sun Switch and opening the door.

The following room was even more wide, but the floor was covered in a blue fog. “Karin-san, that’s Curse Fog.” Aizen cautioned. “You won’t be able to use your Reiatsu in it.”

Karin examined the rest of the room, her eyes falling on the locked door on the other side. “But what choice do I have? Hop on my shoulders and I’ll walk us across.” Aizen complied, and was safe above the Curse Fog’s reach as Karin stepped in. She felt powerless with the blue fog touching her, and hidden under its mist were black holes on the floor. Dark hands called Holemasters lunged out of these holes and seemed intent on grabbing Aizen, so Karin leapt away before they had the chance. She was forced to keep her eyes down in search of the key, dodging Holemasters every which way. She felt her foot step on something long, discovering the key.

Karin made her way to the ledge with the locked door and got inside. She and Aizen viewed a corridor over a chasm, in which the door was partway down on the opposite end. Blue Bubbles, skulls with the Curse Fog, were floating over the pit. Karin was unable to fly up high, for an unseen force was preventing her. She would have to glide across. She carried Aizen and maneuvered around the Blue Bubbles, having to wait for an opening between two of them and having to sink lower to get under three stationary Bubbles. She managed to land the platform before going too low and they entered the next room.

It was another straight hallway where the door was free for the opening. Karin smirked at the simple puzzle and walked forward proudly. Steps before touching the door, a ghost possessed her and forced Karin to go back. “Hey, get off of me! Stupid ghost, let me go!” No matter how much she tried to force herself around, the Poe wouldn’t comply. Eventually, the ghost left her body on its own accord.

“Are you all right, Karin-san?” Aizen asked.

“Yeah. Boy, was that ever unpleasant.” The two entered the door to a bigger room over a pit of Curse Fog. A bridge crossed over to a central platform, then a set of smaller platforms would lead to a door. Karin’s Ghost Sense picked up more hidden Poes, waiting to possess her. She shot Ecto Blasts at the empty air, but they seemed to do nothing. “Ugh. I know more of those ghosts are waiting for me.”

“Karin-san, I have an idea.” Aizen said. “That ghost was making you go the opposite of where you wanted to, right? Maybe you can use that against them.”
“Hmm… Good idea, Kid.” Karin walked forth and allowed the first Poe to possess her. She tried to walk the opposite direction, but the Poe’s will commanded her to keep forward. She moved carefully over the thin bridge with no railing, making sure she didn’t shift left or right too much. By the time she was at the platform, the Poe abandoned her. Karin and Aizen then had to cross a series of platforms that would tilt under their weight. As Karin expected, a Poe possessed her, and commanding it to will her in the opposite direction required better timing and precision on these unbalanced footholds. Karin managed to reach the last platform, but in her attempt to step on the ledge, she stumbled and fell over. “AAAH-!”

“Karin-san!” Aizen grabbed and pulled Karin over to the ledge. The Poe left her body.

“Phew, thanks! Hey, how come those ghosts don’t come after you?”

“Maybe my Reiatsu’s too much for them.” He blushed.

They entered the door and gazed up a flight of stairs. “I got this.” Karin picked Aizen up and flew up the stairwell at high speed. It was nice to know this room didn’t weigh her down, for she kept flying and flying, the stairs and wall texture whipping past her. And she kept going and going and going… there were so many stairs. Why hasn’t she made it outside at this point?

“What’re you talking about, we’re going straight.”

“No we aren’t, we’re just flying in a loop. It’s getting dizzy.”

“What…” Karin stopped. The stairs and walls turned wavy.

“The door is down there. Just fly down.”

The stairwell faded away, revealing the true, downward stairs that led to a door. “What… was that about…” Her mind still swimming, Karin floated down and entered the door. (End song.)

A dreary mist filled the room and dozens of skulls lay around the floor. Through the fog, they could see a triangular shadow. As Karin stepped closer, she could make out hieroglyphics on the pyramid and the eye on its tip. “Aizen… it’s the pyramid!”

“It is?”

The dozens of skulls floated up. Karin readied her guard, expecting them to attack. One at a time, the skulls lit with a colored flame, starting from orange, green, blue, purple, then it repeats. Soon, all the skulls were lit, flying around the pyramid in a colorful circle. They stopped: all the skulls had goofy faces and began to sing loudly.

OOO, INTRUDERS WANDER TO OUR MIDST

To beat us with their groady fists

A giant skull mask appeared above the pyramid and sang in a dark voice-
We’ll turn their ORGANS upside-down!

We’ll stew their brains and crunch their bones

And see they never pay back their loans

Their SOULS- ARE- NOW- OUR- OOOWWWNN!

All the flame skulls flew into the mask, which puffed a fat black body with a hole in its chest. The hole filled with a neon light composed of all the souls in this Hollow’s body. The ghost cackled demonically and the battle began. (Play Jalhalla’s Theme from Wind Waker!)

Boss fight: Jahollow

“If that isn’t Most Creative Boss Name of the Year!” Karin retorted. The giant Hollow blasted colorful fireballs as Karin flew up and around him. She shot Ecto Blasts at his belly, but they merely bounced off and shot herself. Jahollow flew over to smash Karin under his belly, but she had flipped over to push against his weight with both feet. She kept him high enough to quickly fly out, letting him plop onto nothing. When Jahollow recovered, Karin blasted twin Ecto Rays at his chest, the Hollow shaking from the unbearable pain. The light of the neon chest grew brighter until he exploded. The colorful skulls scattered and flew around rampantly.

We’re SEPARATED all around

Master Jahollow has fell down

Run away, up high, up low

Before she deals her fatal blow!

“Unfortunately for you, I see a bunch of moving balls!” Karin flew around and, with power and gusto, kicked as many of the skulls as she could. Each one ricocheted around the room before shattering, and Karin took delight when their flames made many a colorful flame-line during their bounce-around. After striking six skulls, Jahollow’s face returned, and the remaining skulls reunited at his core, reforming his body.

Karin blasted at his chest, but the Hollow pulled his belly up to shield his chest. Jahollow began to inhale, creating a vacuum that Karin tried to outrun. When the Hollow ceased, it released the condensed air at the ground, blowing several tornadoes of dust. Karin was swept up in one of the whirlwinds, spinning around and around before she was forced against the ground. Jahollow seized the chance to smash her.

Karin forced twin Ecto Rays up to push the fat ghost off. As she gasped for breath, she took note of how she pushed him off. She flew level with Jahollow and shot twin rays, pushing him once more. She pushed him above the pyramid, flew above, then pushed down so the pyramid’s tip pierced his belly. The Hollow exploded, freeing the rainbow skulls as they flew rampantly again. Karin tried to beat her record, kicking each skull that crossed her vision. She was able to beat nine skulls, leaving four more. Those four flew into the Hollow mask once it returned.

Jahollow turned invisible and reappeared behind Karin, possessing and forcing her to fly in opposite directions. She smirked, having already encountered this trick, so she faced Jahollow’s direction and fired- “AAAH!” She shot herself with the Ecto Rays and flew back. The curse must redirect her aim, too. When she recovered, Jahollow immediately possessed her again. She managed to face up at him and would shoot herself in order to forcibly shoot him. However, Jahollow saw this trick and broke his control, letting Karin shoot herself again.

“Karin-san!” Aizen ran up to her.

“Aizen?”

“Karin-san, let him possess me!”

“What? I’m not gonna risk you like that!”

“Please just let me!” The child looked fearlessly as Jahollow approached. This new prey was brimming with Reiatsu, and it looked so delicious to the Hollow’s dead eyes. Jahollow cast its possession spell on Aizen—immediately the monster was overwhelmed, and exploded from the radiating power.

Karin seized the chance to kick and destroy the last four skulls. Only Jahollow’s skull remained, and Karin smirked at his helpless state. “Don’t worry, this is only an accident.” Karin tossed her ball up and kicked it at Jahollow’s face with full force. Like many kids from the soccer field she can’t remember, his skull broke. “Nothing a trip to the nurse’s office won’t fix.” (End song.)

“Hey, Karin-san!” Aizen yelled excitedly. “I did it, didn’t I?”

Karin bashed him in the head. “OW! Is that your way of saying ‘yes’?”

“NO. That was my way of saying that was a VERY risky move!”

“B-But I—”

“And I’m proud of you for it.” She smirked and tilted his head up.

“Ah… hehe.” He blushed.

“Honestly, you reminded me of one of my teammates.”

“Hehe…” Aizen turned and faced the stone pyramid. Karin frowned as he approached it, looking as though he was in a trance.

“Aizen… you feeling okay?”

He stopped before the pyramid. “I’m fine.” A dark aura appeared around the ruin. With the gray mist out of the way, he could see the text. And Karin could tell that he could read it.

Do not deny the powers in your veins. Let them be yours, and know that the only force in this world is absolute power.

The eye on the pyramid tip glowed and the dark aura entered his body. Karin suspects the mission is now complete.

Sōsuke Aizen awakened as a DARKNESS. Only 7 more to go.

“…Karin-san.”

She was silent, almost fearing what he would say after that. “Er… yes?”

“…Do you think… I can join Gotei 13?” He turned to her with a smile, holding a green-hilted spear in his hand.

Karin was shocked. “Where did you get that?”

“It just appeared… heheh. Maybe it’s a Zanpakutō. I wonder what it does?” He drew it.

The Ghost Sense leaked from her mouth again—a dizzying sensation fell over Karin. “Karin-san?” The world turned blurry, her feet felt cold, she was smelling delicious cakes and pastries. “Karin-san, what’s wrong?” She could taste that cake, too. Mmm, it was so good. She wanted to keep eating it. She wanted to keep-

“Karin-san!” The feeling was gone. She was on her hands and knees, facing Aizen directly. He had sheathed the sword.

“Nn… sorry.” Karin got up. “Let’s get you out of here.” She carried Aizen and flew up through the ceiling, phasing through all the many layers of spirit-rock until they made it above the surface. “Sigh, THAT time it works. Aizen, it was great meeting you, but I’m afraid I can’t stick around. If you want to join the Gotei, you should talk to one of the higher-ups.”

“Karin-san… why did you lie to me?”

Her heart skipped a beat. “Uh… What?”

“A minute ago… you said you were from a different universe. Here to find me.”

She bit her teeth. “I didn’t say that!”

“But… you did. Or was it… your mind?…” Aizen looked at the sheathed sword he was holding. He faced Karin again and yelled, “Karin-san, who are you really?!”

“…Sigh.” She calmed down. “Aizen, I’m sorry. You’re right, I’m from a different world. I was on an assignment to help you… ’awaken’ yourself.”

“What does that mean?”

“I… don’t really know myself. I couldn’t explain it to you, and… I don’t think I should. Aizen, I think you should forget that you met me. Just remember what I taught you.”

“Karin-san…”

A ray of light pierced through the sky and shook the ground. “Uh-oh! I guess that’s my way back!” Karin exclaimed. “Good-bye, Aizen! Who knows, maybe we’ll meet up again! Until then, see ya!” She flew into the portal, which then vanished after a few seconds, the tremors ceasing.

“Good-bye… Karin Kurosaki.” And from then on, Aizen never mentioned her to anyone. But he remembered her name to this day… Kurosaki.

Portal Chamber

“Heads up, girls! Mabel’s got herself a ringer!” Mabel exclaimed, standing firm as she reeled her fishing rod with gusto. “We are gonna EAT tonight!”

None other than Karin flew out of the portal. “PLEH!” She spat the lure out of her mouth. “Dammit, I’m not a fish!”

“We caught a ghost with a fishing pole!” Candy beamed. “Take THAT, Jack Fenton!”
“Karin, you made it back!” Cheren exclaimed. “What was it like? Did you meet the Darkness—did you find the pyramid?”

“Good, I think, and yes. I found Aizen like you said. He read the Gibberish Pyramid and then darkness flew inside him.”

“That about sums it up.” Nerehc said. “You guys were right, then. The Darknesses really are through this portal.”

MaKayla approached it, staring at the swirly vortex. “But why? The Original Worlds were said to be secluded from our dimensional plane. According to legend, the gods designed this universe from what existed in those universes. So why are the Darknesses in those worlds? Who would’ve decided this?”

“The only thing we can do now is find them.” affirmed Nerehc. “Cheren, you and your pals focus on getting the Lights. Me and my operatives will keep using this portal to find the Darknesses. I may have to rely on Medusa to send me more artifacts.”

“But what about the ocarina? You won’t be able to target the dates without Fi.”

“So leave Fi here.”

“Ghh!” Cheren flinched. He took out his sword and held it aloft. “Can I do that?”

Fi jumped out. “Master Cheren, in the same manner that I was commanded to guide Sector V to Solana, I can remain in this chamber if you so need me to. If my advice is not needed, you may take the Master Sword whilst I remain and obey the requests of Not-Master Nerehc. If it is your desire, let it be so.”

Cheren hesitated to answer. Fi’s advice was helpful, whether or not it’s needed most of the time… Without her spirit in the sword, he would feel a tad lonely. But for the sake of finding all the Keys… “Okay, Fi. Stay here and do whatever Nerehc tells you.”

“Understood, Master. I hope that we may reunite soon.”

Cheren faced his Negative. “Bring her back as soon as you’re done, got it?”

“Relax, man, I will.” Nerehc smiled. “My sword’s cooler, anyway.”

“Ha ha… Well, good luck, you two.” He, MaKayla, and Karin left the cave.

Fi turned to Nerehc and said, “Master’s Wannabe Nerehc, I am at your command.”

“Well, this is gonna be fun.” He sighed in exhaust.

Somewhere in Europe; 96 years ago

The waves smashed against the cliffside on this gloomy, stormy day. A person’s voice could roughly be heard down here. If someone were to fall into the raging sea, nobody would hear them scream. It was a sea that Davy Jones loved to sail.

It wasn’t often that Davy Jones sailed this close to land, but he agreed to at the request of his new master. Negatar Gnaa stared at the cliffside as the Flying Dutchman drew close to it. “I cannot go any farther without alarming the town.” Jones said. “Why did you wish to sail this way, Lord Gnaa?”
“I feel a voice calling to me.” Gnaa said solemnly. “A voice… in the darkness.”

“I, too, feel it, Master.” Phantom Gnaa hissed, holding his master’s shoulders. “Let us go.”

The phantom carried Lord Gnaa across the waves and the rocks, and set him on a thin path along the cliffside. Lord Gnaa entered a cave where he felt the darkness emanate. It was very dark, and the only areas that had a hint of light were a dull gray. Tiny drips of water echoed across the dank cave. Gnaa’s only guide was the darkness that called for him.

He found the source between a group of crystals that gave off a gray glow. It was a small boy of nine years old, with dark hair and dull clothes. He looked up at the figure with an arrow on his head. Negatar Gnaa stared at him blankly and spoke in a whisper, “Why are you down here?”

“I’m hiding.” The boy said lowly.

“From who?”

“I’m hiding from the world. I don’t belong in the world. The world… hates me.”

“How does the world hate you?”

“I can do things that others can’t. I can make things move without touching them. I can make animals do what I want without training them. I can make bad things happen to people who are mean to me. I can make them hurt.”

“…I can do things that others can’t as well.” Gnaa said. “I can feel the darkness in people’s hearts.”

“Is that why you’re down here?”

“I came down here because I felt the darkness in your heart. I can feel the darkness clouding you. I can feel it… becoming you. The world has given you pain. It has made you want the darkness.”

“Then… what am I to do?”

“…Embrace the darkness. Welcome it. And it will always be with you. It will always help you…”

“Would the darkness… be my friend?” The boy stood. “Would it… talk to me?”

Phantom Gnaa rose from the ground before him, a body of black mist with glowing eyes. “Yes… it would…”

The boy looked down at his feet. His own shadow appeared to stretch away from him, acting on its own. When the boy looked up, the stranger was gone. He walked forward slowly, the sound of his footsteps mixed with the echoing droplets. The child looked right when another part of the cave glowed. Down the passage of crystals was a stone pyramid.

The boy approached the strange ruin. It must have sat in this cave for thousands of years. And yet, it looked so… clean. The cavern droplets did not wither away its text or its form. But some droplets seeped into the engraved letters and the eye on top. The crystals brimmed greater, giving everything in the cave a bright gray. They highlighted the pyramid’s perfect form, and the letters clear enough for him to read.

The light shall fade… only darkness can live forever. Do not let yourself fade. Reject the light… Rejoice the darkness…

The dark aura from the pyramid flew into the boy’s body. He understood the text’s meaning… he let it sink into his mind.

Tom Riddle awakened as a Darkness. Just 6 more to go.

The Flying Dutchman sailed away from the land, soon to be gone with the storm. “There should be a number of worthy shadowbending teachers in Britain. Many of the wizards and witches are-ah.” Davy Jones said.

“I have already found a worthy teacher.” Gnaa smirked. “Now it is a matter of…” he looked back and faced the cliff, “waiting.”

Same cliff; present time (Play “Organization XIII” from Kingdom Hearts II.)

Ninety-six years later, waves were still mercilessly smashing against the cliffs. Some of the rocks had eroded away. Medusa stood on the edge and felt the forceful wind. Behind her, Baby Chernabog was asleep, kept warm by Pandora’s flame. Medusa looked back at them for a moment, then faced the horizon. “Let me ask you something, Thanatos… When is a person most susceptible to the darkness?”

“The answer is obvious, Medusa!” said the snake on her shoulder. “It’s when they are young!”

“Correct. A child is always most vulnerable to darkness. An undeveloped mind is an open mind. Even Firstborn like Jirachi can be easily fooled. That’s why many of these Darknesses realize their destinies when they’re young. And it is why, even as they have become adults, the light has never reached them. True, the Seven Lights can try to avoid the darkness all the same… but all that matters is destiny is truly set in stone. Then it’s survival of the fittest.”

Outside Sector JP’s hideout

It was a cloudy and chilly night in the forest. Karin’s teammates have gone to sleep, but she was outside, waiting. Her Spirit KND mentor, Yachiru, flew down from the trees and set foot, making a salute. “You called me, Karin-chan?”

“Ha ha, hi, Yachiru.” Karin smiled. “Sorry if you were busy… but I wanted to ask you something.”

“Sure, anything!” The pink-haired girl smiled brightly.

“Do you know anything about anyone named… Sōsuke Aizen?”

“Aizen… hmmm…” Yachiru stroked her chin. “The name sounds familiar…” She paced left and right. “I think I read it in a book… OH!” She perked up. “Right! It’s a story about a man who challenged the gods, nearly 10,000 years ago! His name was Sōsuke Aizen!”

“Do you know… what it was about?”

10,000 years ago…

He woke up in a desolate field, lost and confused. He didn’t know how he landed here… there was a great flash in the sky and that was it. Dust blew in the wind, and swords were impaled in the ground, marking the places of fallen warriors.

Aizen heard a pair of footsteps behind him, but did not turn to see their owner. “It was a bloodthirsty battle.” Medusa said. “But I’m sure it was nothing… compared to your power.”

“…That’s a shame.” Aizen turned around. He was a handsome man with smooth brown hair, sharp brown eyes, and a sleek white robe. “For a second, I was… upset.”

“I feel it in your heart. The irrepressible urge to unleash your unending power. But striking at mortals would be like… striking at empty air. You want beings that you can call equals.”

“Equals… So there is more than one?” Aizen was humored at the idea.

“Of course… And I would be happy to take you to them.” She smirked maliciously. “But first… I want to test your power.”

“I can’t believe it took all the gods together just to beat him!” Yachiru said.

I didn’t feel like Tom Riddle needed a stage. Maybe because we just did a cave stage. So Aizen is from Bleach and Riddle is from Harry Potter—which you all should know. :P I might throw in an Augustus stage next, but soon we should get to the nitty-gritty of Tenth Firstborn Arc. This arc continues in Lazarus Saga, so see you then. ;P
Team Sandman steal some cargo from trucks in Raiders' Valley. Team Rupert infiltrates the Zingers' Hive. Sector W7 sleep one last night before their trip to the Guertena Gallery.

Sandman and Rupert get action today! And a number cipher!

_Chapter 46: The Night Before_

Kentucky; Raiders’ Valley

The sun had gone down over this region, and the cloudy sky was totally black. Sandman, Coldman, and Wiccan marched across a grass road between the short walls of a trench. The wind was filthy with the dirt of the country, so the heroes kept their masks and hoods on. “I received an email telling me to come to this location, on the night of Nigel’s funeral.” Sandman said. “Now I’m waiting for this guy to reply to me.”

“You just trust whatever some Internet stranger emails you?” Wiccan asked.

“Well, I did backtrack to a couple areas to pick up Riddler Trophies, soooo… Ah, here he is.” Someone was calling Sandman’s wristwatch.

“Hi-diddly ho, a-riddling we go!” the perky voice exclaimed on the other end.

“It’s Bill Cipher!” Coldman gasped.

“Very funny, Gladius. No, this is the Riddler, reporting to you live from an undisclosed location! I’m so glad Sandman found the time to go back and find my trophies while he was busy breaking into government facilities. I see you were also able to discover which people among those enemy guards were actually my henchmen.”

“They weren’t hard to figure out after sending a Game-and-Watch copy to your email.” Sandman informed.

“See, this is why videogame walkthroughers shouldn’t offscreen, because now I’m totally lost.” Crystal smacked her forehead.

“Yes, your little game character was an interesting trick. Too bad I blocked him. I sensed you were getting tired of backtracking, however, so I thought I’d give you a pointer to your next mission. This is a rather secluded valley in Kentucky, called the Raiders’ Valley, after the outlaws who used to run around here in the 1980s. Milkmen used this passage to cart milk to various stores and such, and the Raiders had a gimmick with breaking their cargo. Don’t understand the story behind that, all you need to know is Hugo Strange found an interest for it.”

“What are you saying?” Nolan asked.

“I’m saying that I have a couple of boys among these people as well, so they know that Dr.
Strange is planning to ship what seem like ordinary milk bottles, which are actually filled with a peculiar substance, to the stores. Search me for whatever that is, my boys didn’t seem to know.”

“So Dr. Strange is trying to put this stuff on the shelves in place of milk? Where’s the actual milk?”

“The actual milk is mixed in with it, it looks like. I don’t know if the farmers were persuaded to turn a blind eye, but it might’ve been behind their backs.”

“If this is true, then I can’t let them make it to the stores. We have to steal these bottles from the trucks.”

“How are we supposed to do that? Our own personal truck?” Wiccan asked rhetorically. “They couldn’t all fit in the Sandmobile, could they?”

“Ahem.” Riddler coughed. “It so happens I have a special carrier craft hovering over the area. It’s watching your movements down there; just hold the bottles outside and it’ll reach down to take them off your hands.”

“You expect me to trust you with this unknown substance? What’s in this for you, anyway?”

“What I want is not important. But you can certainly trust I wouldn’t want any minds dirtied because of this stuff, and I’m sure you don’t, either.”

“Hmph… I’ll play along, but don’t think I won’t take some for my own research.”

“I was counting on that, Sandy. Just don’t take more than you can drink.” (Play “Infiltration of Hyrule Castle” from Zelda: Four Swords Adventures.)

Stage 55: Raiders’ Valley

Mission: Steal the cargo from the milk carts.

Team Sandman trekked up the road, unable to see far forward through the dust and darkness. Sandman mostly used his Detective Vision- “Up here!” He grappled to a ledge in the wall on the right, his friends joining him as they were nearing a horse-drawn cart, carrying bottles of milk. The cart seemed to be dropping landmines as it went, so Sandman ordered Wiccan to fly down to it on her staff. The witch softly landed on the safe spot between the bottles, picking up each one, holding it over the back edge, and a mechanical claw reached down from an unseen source in the darkness to claim them. Crystal kept a single bottle under her cloak before flying back to her friends.

“Whoever’s controlling it, there’s definitely a ship up there.” Sandman observed. “This whole thing is really unnerving.”

“Rest easier knowing it’s for a good cause. Now are you gonna sit there, or are you gonna get the rest of those carts?”

The snipers turned around to search for the voice. The heroes quickly moved forward, Sandman latched the left cliff and knocked the sniper out, and Yuki froze the one on the right. Sandman used Detective Vision to see ahead; they stopped to let a cart drive by from a left road, which turned straight from their direction. They wanted to pursue, but duos of guards were standing on either side of the road. One looked at the back of the cart when it passed, the other looked the opposite way in each group. Yuki swiftly froze each one before any of them could notice, and the heroes bolted across the path before Crystal flew to the cart and landed on a clear spot. She handed each bottle to the extended arm, except one she kept under her cloak.

They watched the cart drive casually down the rest of the road, and the heroes took flight over a chasm on their right, landing on a cliff. They followed the road to a small field where guards roamed. This zone was chi-blocked, so Yuki's OP ice attacks wouldn't work. Thankfully, there were several tall rocks in this area, so the heroes snuck around and knocked out the three roaming guards. The two gate guards weren't armed, but the minute they spotted the heroes, they rolled forward for swift punches and kicks.

Crystal blocked with her staff, which the guard kicked away, but Crystal managed to roll behind him and punch him in the head. The guard withstood and grabbed her arm, throwing the witch forward, but Yuki leapt and kicked him in the side of the head, knocking him out against the wall. Nolan grabbed the other guard's fists in his Armament hands, but the guard flipped his legs in the air, overhead to kick Sandman in the face and push him on his back. The guard leapt at Sandman, who turned his stomach area Armament to withstand the impact, afterwards swinging a punch at the guard's legs to knock him down, then climb on top to punch his head senseless.

Nolan's friends helped him back onto his chair. “Ever since the Doflamingo fight, using my Haki hasn't been easy. I'm not good at Coloring other parts of my body besides the fists.”

“At least you have us along in case things get rough.” Yuki said. They swipe gate keys from both martial artists, using one of them to open the way out of this field. Sandman saw a cart coming from the right road, aiming to enter a gate on their left, he used the other key to seal that gate shut. The cart was forced to change course down their path, but the heroes took cover in a hiding place in the wall. When it passed, Crystal flew on to rob the cart of its bottles. The heroes progressed down the road the cart previously came from, coming to an area with a medium cliff and high cliff, and guards patrolling on each of the three levels.

Sandman threw a boomerang at the guard on their level, then quickly knocked him out. He waited for the guards on the second level to pass each other, afterwards he and Yuki grappled up to knock both out simultaneously. Two guards were protecting the path on the very left side of the third level, so Crystal floated to the very right, sidling along the wall to slip behind the nearest guard, then she stood between both before performing a Ground Quake with her staff. In their dizzy state, the trio knocked them out.

After crossing this small dirt road, they arrived at a wider road where two carts drove side-by-side. They noticed that the right cart had more bottles and no standable areas, so Wiccan was tasked with boarding the left one for its bottles, while Yuki pushed Sandman’s chair after the right one, allowing the hero to grab them off the cart. It took longer to pass each bottle (except two) to the ship, but they managed okay.

On the right, they viewed another chasm with a low cliff on the other end, but two snipers stood guard. When they were turned away from the center, Sandman quickly rolled off the edge, shot his grapper to the opposite one, but remained under so the snipers didn’t see. He climbed below the left sniper and pulled him off to dangle by a rope. He repeated this for the right sniper so his friends could cross. The road turned leftward, bringing them to an enclosed area with several
They had to knock out these guards before the cart escaped. Sandman first rolled down a slope on his left, getting behind a sniper to knock him out. He grappled to the vacant cliff on the center platform, then climbed over a short rock wall to take out the guard standing there. On another segment of the center platform, the guard was facing a guard on a wall ledge, so Sandman sent his Grapple-Cam behind the latter guard and whispered, “There’s a creeper gonna creep when yo’ sleepiiiiing.” That guard turned, Sandman knocked out the one on the platform segment, then grappled to the ledge guard to take him out quickly. Meanwhile, Crystal floated over to knock out the remaining ledge guard.

Afterwards, the witch floated down to the slow-moving cart, and since there were no standable areas, she followed and took each bottle out to hand to Riddler’s ship. The heroes continued on the next path north of this mini canyon. They hurried across this wide road and chased, not a horse cart, but a large truck of black steel. The back doors were sealed, but there was a terminal on the side. Yuki pushed Nolan after the truck while the latter called Mr. Game-and-Watch on his wristwatch, holding it toward the terminal to see if G&W could connect.

In his cyberspace, Game-and-Watch chased a two-dimensional train-like vehicle with multiple segments. He jumped on the back segment, over some boxes, then he Ground Pounded onto the link and severed the back part. The train moved slightly faster, and while G&W chased, midair turrets fired at him, the Program tried to avoid the bullets to catch up. He jumped on the train car and flipped patties from his frying pan to defeat turrets perched on it, then he could chop the link off. He chased more, jumping pits of electricity, then got onto the next car, patiently waited for the laser barriers to disable, and severed the link. There were no obstacles on his way to the faster-moving front car, and there, he had to flip patties at a wall of turrets. Afterwards, he entered the train and inputted the code ‘Ginger.’

Team Hero watched as the truck’s backdoor opened. Wiccan and Coldman flew onto the standable spot on the edge, working together to hand the bottles to Riddler’s ship. Finally, the truck was clear, and the two jumped off, chased after, and shut the doors like they were never there. They stood in place and left the truck to drive away. (End song.)

“Well done, Sandman. I should’ve expected no less from you. I’ll make sure these hazardous bottles are put away safe and sound. For now, it’s been a long night. I think we all deserve some beauty sleep… by which I mean you. Keep looking for my trophies!” Transmission ended.

Seeing the ship about to fly away, Sandman forcefully threw a tracking device skyward, latching it to the bottom hull. “I’m sure he expected me to do that.”

“Nolan, now that you have these, erm, samples, how do you plan to examine them?” Crystal inquired.

“Humans have senses for a reason.” Nolan twisted the cap on one of the bottles and opened.

“Don’t do that!” Yuki cautioned. “What if it’s Nightmare Toxin, or worse?”

Nolan took off his mask and smelled the liquid. “…Definitely more than sour milk… but I don’t recognize the smell. A taste test would be out of the question.”

“I should hope.”

“Not to worry, guys.” Nolan twisted the cap back on. “There’s one expert on poisons I know well enough to make a guess. ...Of course, it might be past her bedtime.”

DK Isles; Zingers’ Hive

Sappo and Gibli led Team Rupert’s Onions to the jungle island with the Donkey Kong-shaped mountain. Among the trees was a massive beehive fortress, where the mammoth-size bugs they were named for, the Zingers, fluttered in and out. The Onions were careful not to touch any of the oozing honey before they landed in a dry spot within the hive. The constant and furious rumbles of buzzing filled their ears once they stepped out. “You’re lucky you don’t have Zelda ears.” Sappo remarked, poking their fingers in their big ears. “Alright, you kids remember the deal, right? Get the Premium Honey, along with whatever treasures these bugs collected, and we’ll tell you where Malarko’s Pikmin Army is hidden.”

“You can count on us!” Rupert proclaimed confidently.

“Aaaaah!” Timothy screamed, having gotten his shoe stuck in a patch of honey. “I might need a little help here.”

“Don’t worry, Timmy! Just play dead and the bees won’t think you’re food!” Hikari said bubbly.

“Bees don’t eat humans, anyway.” Sappo said. “They will want the honey on his shoe, though.”

“You guys better find some Brown Pikmin fast!” Gibli jumped. “Only they can carry Premium Honey, or eat regular honey. In case you don’t know, Premium Honey is more shiny and gold. Like those weird cards that humans use for money!”

“That narrows it down.” Rupert shrugged. “Alright, gang, let’s nab today’s breakfast!”

Timmy tried to pull his foot out of the honey, but remained stuck. “Just help me out before I become a bee’s breakfast!” (Play “Hornet Hole” from Donkey Kong Country 2!)

Stage 56: Zingers’ Hive

Mission: Collect Premium Honey!

Rupert and Hikari pulled out 20 Ice Pikmin, 15 Reds, 15 Musics, and 10 Purples for now. They viewed a lake of oozing honey, and Rupert decided to toss Ice Pikmin onto it. The honey froze. The two smiled at each other, beginning to freeze a path for them all to cross. “Guys!” Timmy panicked when some Fuzzybees (furry bees that were their size) were buzzing toward him slowly. Hikari quickly threw some Reds up to take the bees down, then she called 10 Yellows to give to Timmy, letting him defend himself. With that, the other two proceeded across the ice path the Pikmin froze.

They could step onto a dry shore, where an incomplete bridge began. The tiles of the bridge were over on a small island, so the two would have to use their Ice Pikmin to- “Or we could use Wing Pikmin!” Hikari smiled. “They can carry over anything.”

“Yeah!” Rupert agreed.

“No, you can’t!” Sappo yelled at them. “We forgot to mention that Zingers hate Wing Pikmin! They’ll attack ‘em the moment they’re out!”

“That’s inconvenient!” Timothy shouted.
Regardless, they could use the Ice Pikmin to carry across the bridge tiles. It didn’t reach all the way, and they saw another isle of tiles on the opposite side of the big room. Unfortunately, those tiles were drenched in honey, so the Pikmin couldn’t get them without being stuck (even the Ice ones).

They returned to the previous shore, going further across as Hermit Crawmads peeped out of holes. Rupert threw an Ice forward, quickly called it back when the Crawmad came out, then they sent Pikmin on the creature. They repeated this pattern for the next two Crawmads, then continued to the wall at the shore’s end. A honey waterfall was dripping out of a hole, and while the Ice Pikmin could freeze it, they couldn’t climb up. On the opposite edge of this wall-side shore, there was a standing plank half-buried in the ground. Their Pikmin dug it up, then the Ices carried it over to lean it against the edge of the hole, causing the honey to flow down the slope. The Ices could freeze the river so the others could walk up it and into the tunnel.

The tunnel dropped off over a high point, but the Ice Pikmin froze the honey below so the kids could safely drop, then get onto the shore. They viewed this new honey pond, seeing three downpour currents focused on a single point: over a Brown Onion. They saw a path near the ceiling leading above those currents, and a honeycomb ladder on the wall of their shore. Hikari agreed to take some Ice Pikmin up there, having the creatures attack some Zinger Larvae on the walkway. The Ice Pikmin couldn’t freeze the currents because the constant flowing made the ice break, but Hikari saw a cavern of Bomb Rocks across the center. She led her Pikmin over to them, had them place bombs beside the honey slides’ bases, and destroy them so the falls would flow down the wall.

The honey over the center isle flowed away, leaving it dry, and the Brown Onion sprouted to life and dropped a seed. Rupert and Hikari regrouped to freeze a path to the platform, and the former plucked his first Brown Pikmin.

Rupert discovered Brown Pikmin! Their sticky bodies make them hard to shake off! They can cross and climb sticky terrain, and also eat sticky sweets off of items! Just don’t grab them too hard, or they’ll stick to you, too.

“I have a feeling we’re gonna need a lot of them to help the others around.” Rupert said.

“Me, too.”

They dedicated the surrounding Pellets and fallen enemies to the Brown Pikmin, ending up with 35. After that tedious journey, they brought that many Browns to the start and freed Timothy from his trap. Afterwards, they got out 20 of each Pikmin, except for Ghosts and Wings, making 195 total.

The Brown Pikmin ate the honey off the bridge tiles before bringing them to repair said bridge. They explored the rest of this lake with their Browns, and one of the honeycomb shapes in the wall was golden. Looking closer, it was made of glass. They threw their Rock Pikmin to break the glass, and inside the short tunnel was a pool of golden honey. “That must be the Premium Honey!” Rupert pointed.

“Alright, Brownies, go and get some!” Hikari threw the Brown Pikmin inside, and they made trips back-and-forth from the Onions until all the fragments of Premium Honey were collected. On one of the sides of the lake, a path of honey led up into a higher hole, so the Brown Pikmin performed the arduous task of carrying all their friends up (if the twins were trolling them about the ‘no Wing Pikmin,’ those two were gettin’ honey up their dresses). The tunnel was wider inside, and they saw the Silk Spitter from Xiaolin Showdown stuck to the left wall by honey. They threw the Brown
Pikmin onto the honey spots to eat it off, afterwards sending 10 Ice Pikmin to carry the Silk Spitter (Captured Rival) back, with Timmy accompanying them with 10 Browns.

Rupert and Hikari encountered two Honey Bulborbs, and only the Brown Pikmin could be tossed onto and defeat the creatures. Afterwards, the duo made it to an open area of the hive, where Zingers were fluttering about. Their hearts raced nervously when one of the giant bees hovered above them, and when it suddenly swooped down for a stab, the kids commanded their Pikmin to roll aside. They tossed Yellows up to weigh the bee down, but they were doing no damage. Hikari decided to throw Rock Pikmin at its stinger, and the bee winced with pain under each blow before falling.

They took care of three more Zingers in the field, and when Timothy returned to them, they fed their Pikmin some nectar from a garden of eggs in the center. They led their Pikmin to a side of the room where they had to go up some stairs, following a walkway that led to two large gaps between footholds. Timmy threw his friends to the first, then Rupert threw Hikari to the next, and she continued. She entered a cave that was barren, but the soil felt soft, so she returned to her friends and told them to throw White Pikmin over. As expected, they found diggable patches within the ground, and like oil, Premium Honey spurted out of them when they dug deep enough. Hikari told her friends to throw Brown Pikmin over to begin carrying.

To avoid having to throw the Browns over the gaps every single time they came back, the White Pikmin could thankfully dig up a weak patch of the ledge, causing it to slump into a slope. However, Fuzzybees were flying down to recover the stolen honey, so the trio had to throw Pikmin up to take them down. While waiting for the Browns to finish, they allowed their Music, Ice, and Rock Pikmin to take the fallen enemies (the Ice went first to make a path). Afterwards, the kids viewed another honeycomb ladder in one side of the wall, and since some holes had Zinger Larvae slumbering inside, they had to punch the bees and slay them (how cruel). They led their Pikmin to an area at the top of the room, viewing a complex, twisty path that led to the other side.

Big balls of honey rolled across this road, being spat by Honey Cannon Beetles from different turn points in the path. Timothy ran up, staying to the side to avoid their boulders, and distracted the beetles after reaching them, allowing his friends to come up and attack with Pikmin. As soon as they were all dealt with, the kids reached the other side, seeing a Bob-omb (Kids’ Kamikaze) from the Mario series sat on a platform. They tossed Purple Pikmin to pick it up—the bomb’s fuse lit, it turned red as it threatened to explode, burning the Purples with its heat. Only the Reds could carry it back, and going across the complex path took up time. Furthermore, they had to use Ice Pikmin to freeze over the honey lake, but just when the bomb was seconds from exploding, they reached the Onions.

The trio climbed the honeycomb ladder again, for there was also another tunnel up top to follow. A dry path snaked between sticky honey on the ground, so they kept their Pikmin within it. There were holes in the wall that were likely sheltering large creatures (such as bees), and would snack on anyone who steps on the honey. They made it through with no trouble and were standing in a tall, wide, and vacant room. There was a Music Pikmin stage facing a bright, towering wall of frozen honey. The Musics sang a remix of the “Rolling Boulder” song from Zelda: Skyward Sword, and their notes caused the hive to tremble and the frozen honey to loosen.

The kids bolted downhill when the honey began flowing toward them. They constantly whistled so their Pikmin would keep up, maneuvering them around Dwarf Bulborbs and honey patches in the way. They saw a walkway to the left and aligned their Pikmin to run up it, watching as the honey flowed down the rest of the hill. It stopped at the dead-end ahead, rising higher until it was level with their walkway. The Ice Pikmin froze a path leading to a narrow tunnel.
Honey dripped from the ceiling, and the Brown Pikmin had to eat every pile since there was no room around the honey. They kept an eye on the ceiling for forming globs, moving their Pikmin away before the honey fell on them. Just when they were reaching the end of the tunnel, Hikari spotted a shiny drop of honey form on the ceiling and hit the ground. Two Brown Pikmin carried the Premium Honey drop back, and Hikari brought two Ice Pikmin to follow them.

The other two entered a taller passage where faint streams of honey flowed down like slow, web-like waterfalls. They used Yellow and Rock Pikmin to defeat two Zingers in the area, then the Rocks broke down a couple of yellow glass walls through a passage. Speaking of webs, the room through this passage was a spider-web wall with Arachnodes crawling on them. Instead of questioning what the hell spiders were doing in here, the duo threw Pikmin onto the web to lure the spiders down. They called their Pikmin off before the spiders ate them, and when each spider was defeated, the Brown Pikmin began the tedious task of carrying each of them up the webs. Rupert and Timothy led their army into a very dark cave, where sprouts of fire popped up from holes. While Red Pikmin could destroy the holes, they were the only means of light, so they kept the other Pikmin away.

The group walked along a ledge over a pool of honey, which was nearly hidden in the darkness. However, Rupert noticed a weird object with what faint light was over the honey, but their Browns couldn’t get underneath the gooey liquid. After trekking up a hill, the duo saw a water faucet up on the wall. They tossed Yellow Pikmin up onto the faucet, and they turned it as a stream of water flowed out into the honey pool. The substance was washed away, and their Blue Pikmin could go into the weaker liquid to retrieve the treasure: a laser-light for cats (Ceaseless Mockery). After it was out of the water, they had 10 Brown Pikmin carry it back.

Hikari regrouped with them as they ventured further through the cave, still dark, keeping along a narrow path over honey pools. One of the pools on their right had what seemed like a closed hatch on the wall over it, and a handle on top. They threw a Yellow on, and the (magically appearing) Pikmin counter required 20 to pull it open. They counted spaces under the current one, and the Pikmin would touch the honey before the quota could be met. So instead, they tossed two Purple Pikmin, causing the hatch to fall open, the handle part landing over the edge so the Pikmin could land safely. Inside the hatch was a mount of Premium Honey, so the Brown Pikmin were on the case.

After that was done, their journey led them out of the cave. They were in an expansive room where faint streams of honey dripped down the walls. Some of the honey patterns shaped like numbers; they were 2 5 3 1 18 5 6 21 12 23 8 1 20 25 15 21 19 20 5 1 12 19 15 13 5 23 15 21 14 4 19 1 18 5 8 1 18 4 20 15 8 5 1 12. A stairway led up a tall, wide altar that had a huge pot of honey at the top, like that seen on Winnie the Pooh. Rupert and Timothy helped Hikari climb and stand on the pot’s edge. The honey was as shiny and yellow as solid gold. “Ooooooh! This honey looks super-duper yummy!”

“And I guess it’s free for the taking!” Rupert beamed.

Their Minish communicators rang, and Sappo’s voice spoke on the other end. “Say, did you guys find King Zing’s King’s Brew?”

“More like Winnie’s Big Score, if he were here. But yeah, we found it!”

“Listen, guys, don’t worry about taking that. King Zing will get really mad, and he’ll tail you guys like you were made of pollen. Just look for other Premium Honey.”

“We wouldn’t want the whole kingdom mad at us.” Timothy figured. “Okay, let’s leave it. I see another tunnel over there.”
“No way!” Rupert proclaimed confidently. “We can take on a giant bee!”

“What?! No we can’t, Rupert, a giant bee is scarier than a giant girl!”

“You’re completely right in that statement.” Rupert said with a blushed, dreaming face. “But with a score like this, we’ll go down in Pikmin History!”

“History means we DIE!”

“Come on, at the very least, we’ll get extremely swollen. Alright, Whites, get it on!”

It took 30 Pikmin to lift the King’s Brew, so their 20 Whites plus 10 Ices were used. They marched and carried the honey pot down the stairs, ready to enter the dark cave. “Rupert, I really don’t think this is a good idea!” Timmy hissed.

“Timmy, you worry too much. We can have this big pot outta here before King Zing even notices. Where is the fatty, anyway? (I just assume he’s fat.)”

“Maybe that big bee there will know!” Hikari pointed at the ceiling. “Heeeey, Mr. Big Beeeee!”

Rupert and Timothy freaked: they had just now realized the ceiling was spiky with yellow and black stripes. The giant bee puffed as he snored, curled up, and rolled upward as his tired eyes peeped open. “Bzzz…bmmm?” The room and altar was a big circle with smaller circles from his view. He thought a more yellow circle would be in the very center… instead, he saw three humans, and no pot of honey. “Bzzz? Bmmmmmm-zzzzzz!” King Zing shook with anger, buzzing his wings to life and detaching from the ceiling. He fluttered above the kids and rapidly blasted stingers, and they tumbled down the stairs to avoid.

“He’s gonna go after the Pikmin!” Rupert exclaimed. “I’ll go with ‘em and attack from the front, you guys stay behind and get ‘is stinger!”

“Deal!” Timmy nodded frantically. (Play “King Zing Chase” from Donkey Kong Country 2!)

Rupert took a team of Pikmin and rushed after the Pikmin taking the pot, and when King Zing forced himself through the tight dark tunnel, his narrowed eyes were clearly seen. Zing was faster than the Pikmin, so Rupert quickly tossed Rocks and Purples to damage his eyes and slow the bee. From behind, Timmy and Hikari threw Rocks at his stinger, and the bee stopped totally for a few seconds to recompose himself and shake the enemies away. Rupert was at the wide area of the dark cave, and King Zing had more room to fly. His wings beat the ceiling rapidly, causing boulders to drop around in the darkness.

Rupert only had a few seconds to see the shadows of boulders in the fire spouts’ lights, and had to call the carrying Pikmin over if they were in danger, or move his own Pikmin aside if it was them, then they quickly had to resume carrying the pot. They escaped the cave and traveled down the drooping honey path, and under King Zing’s shaking, globs of honey dropped in the way, forcing the carriers to stop while Brown Pikmin ate it. To keep King Zing from catching up, Timmy and Hikari threw Yellows at his stinger (since it was currently electrified). When the way was clear, they progressed the narrow tunnel, and since Zing couldn’t fit, he stuck his stinger in and blasted stinger bullets. Rupert threw Rock Pikmin at each one to stop them.

Rupert escorted his Pikmin up the slope where the large honey river downpoured, and when King Zing slammed the ground, honey boulders rolled down from ahead. He ordered the carrier Pikmin to maneuver around them, and once up the slope, they traveled the snaky path between the honey ground. Like the dark cave, King Zing forcibly squeezed his way through, Rupert hit him in the eyes while his friends hit the stinger. They were back in the large room with the Cannon Beetles’ path, they dropped to the floor below as Fuzzybees chased them, aiming to reclaim the honey.

When King Zing floated below the ledge in his pursuit, Timmy and Hikari threw Red and Purple Pikmin onto his wings, slowing the king greatly. The carriers had one more trip through a tunnel, Rupert froze a path in the lake below with Ice Pikmin. Sappo and Gibli jumped excitedly when they saw the large pot coming, and after the Pikmin crossed the ice, the King’s Brew was inside the Onions.

King Zing burst out of the tunnel, desperately trying to recover his honey despite the Pikmin wailing on his wings. When he sank closer, Rupert threw Brown Pikmin on his eyes, Yellows on his stinger, Pikmin were beating him down all over. Eventually, King Zing was worn out, he collapsed into the honey lake, and the victors summoned their Pikmin back before they sank as well. “HOORAY, we did it!” Rupert cheered.

“Wow, guys, I can’t believe you made it!” Sappo exclaimed. “Wait until Lenari sees the hefty load you got us!”

“But not now! Let’s get outta here before the king wakes up!” Gibli said rushedly.

With that, all of them boarded the Onions and took flight away from the hives. “I almost wish we went with you.” Sappo said. “You guys have guts to steal from King Zing.”

“He’s just a giant bee, what’s to worry about.” Rupert said casually.

“You don’t know how dangerous that was. According to stories, King Zing’s stings are fatal and slow-killing. Your body just keeps swelling, and before you actually die, the pain is horrible. I’ve seen pictures of it, and trust me, I had mixed feelings about coming here. The worst part is, there’s absolutely no way to heal it.”

“Yeesh. I’m glad we escaped when we did. But now that it’s over, you gotta tell us where Malarko’s army is!”

“Yeah, about that…”

“You lied to us, didn’t you?” Timothy inquired.

“No, we were truthful. But we wanna ask Lenari’s permission to reveal such classified information. He’ll probably be mad at us for dropping the hint, anyway.”

“But I’m sure he’ll confide in you!” Gibli spoke surely. “You guys are awesome!”

“Even if we don’t find out, that was still pretty fun.” Rupert smiled. “Next time I see a bee when I’m bigger, I’m gonna say, ‘I’m supposed to be scared of that?’”

“My answer will always be ‘The crud I’m not.’” Timothy remarked.

Within the honey lake’s ooze, King Zing slowly and weakly resurfaced. The bee fumed with rage, knowing his precious treasure had been taken. He would have his revenge on them all. (End song.)

Goldenweek Residence
Since it became fairly late in the day, the Goldenweeks decided to schedule a trip to the art gallery tomorrow. The Sector W7 friends spent the night in Mary’s mansion, engaging in late-night antics such as coloring (which April proved best at), pillow fighting (Chimney showed no mercy toward Mary), Hide-and-Seek (Aeincha and Mocha took a while to find), but then Apis made them bored (except Mary) reading her Bible stories, so the girls were finally ready for bed. The other friends were sharing a guestroom, with Chimney on the bed, cuddling Aeincha and Mocha close to her, and Gonbe, Apis, and Aisa on the floor.

“Isn’t it great, Big Sister April?” Mary happily bounced on her bed, wearing a dark-green nightgown, while her cousin was brushing her teeth in Mary’s personal bathroom. “We get to sleep and cuddle each other just like when we were kids! I mean, we’re still kids, well mostly me ‘cause you’re a teen, the point is we were littler!”

“Would I even fit in the same bed with you, anymore?” April asked with a smile. “We’re way too old for that, Mary.”

“No we’re nooooot.” Mary made a fake mopey frown as she sprawled out on her bed. “Come on, April, I’m tired of cuddling with dolls. I wanna cuddle with my big sister before she leaves tomorrow!”

“Well, I kind of missed it too, I guess. Scoot over, Mary.” She chuckled.

Mary excitedly whirled so her head was on the pillow end, getting under the covers and scooting left so April could climb in. The older girl moved some of Mary’s dolls aside to fit her head on the pillow. She felt her little cousin’s arms grab around and hug her tight, like an overgrown doll. “You have such wonderful friends, April. It’s no wonder you don’t care about me, anymore.”

“Don’t be silly, Mary. You’ll always be my little sis.” She patted Mary’s hair. “I might not act like it, but I really miss you a lot.”

“I’ll miss you guys, toooo.” She moped. “I wish you would stay here with me, forever. I wanna play with you all every single day.”

“You saw our flying train, we can easily come visit you. But Mary, you really should join the Kids Next Door. You’ve already been on missions with us, so you’re a step ahead. You might not get put in our sector, but we would still see each other more, and you’d make lots of friends. I mean, even if they were scary, didn’t you have fun on our missions?”

“Of course I did, April!” Mary hugged her tighter. “I had loads and loads of fun! In fact, I wanna go on more missions with you. That’s why I’ll be sad when you leave after we visit the… gallery.”

“Well, we’ll come visit you either way, Mary. You can count on that. Tomorrow’s gonna be fun, though, even if it’s just walking through a boring gallery.” April pulled the lamp switch and made the room dark. “And Mary? Don’t worry about those nightmares. As soon as we see that gallery, they won’t bother us, anymore. Good night.” April rested her head on the pillow and closed her eyes.

Mary frowned, loosening her grip on her cousin during slumber, but still lying close to her. She didn’t understand her nightmares, or why she had such worrisome thoughts about the art gallery… For some reason, she felt like after tomorrow, she would never see April again. She really hoped this didn’t happen, though. She was already sad when April moved to Gobi’s Desert, she didn’t want her to leave again. She hoped she could stay with April forever…
On Chapter 47, we’ll go to Stage 57, the Guertena Gallery, at last starting the Art Saga’s main plot. The Zingers come from DKC2, but take note that it wasn’t just a filler stage, Sappo’s words have wisdom. Next time, the gallery. Don’t stay up past bedtime.
The World of Guertena

Chapter Summary

Sector W7 go to the Guertena Art Gallery. It is a much more frightening place than expected.

Did I mention Mary comes from Ib? ‘Cause that’s kind of important. Also, an Atbash.

Chapter 47: The World of Guertena

Goldenweek Residence

The sun rose over the lush grassland where the Goldenweek mansion stood. Few white clouds were in the sky, so the day would be bright and clear today. Mary was still asleep in her soft, warm bed, her yellow hair a mess after rolling around all night. When she stretched her arms to either side, she hugged only dolls. It took her an hour to realize that none of them were body-size. She lazily sat up, looking around. She looked at her doorway when April walked in, fully dressed except her shoes and hat. “Good morning, Mary! Did you have any nightmares?”

“Mmmm… mm-mm.” Mary shook ‘no.’

“That’s good. Do you wanna sleep in or eat breakfast first?”

“No, I’m hungry.” She smiled. “I wanna eat cereal! It tastes like tiny tasty sand dancing in my mouth!” She smacked her lips and tongue up and down like she were chewing.

“Ha ha ha! Be down, soon! The gallery opens at 11, so your mom and dad wanna go at 12:30. Plenty of time to play around!”

“Okay. I can’t wait!” After April left the room, Mary kicked off her bed and entered her bathroom. She doused her hands with hot water under the sink and splashed it on her face. She looked up at the mirror, her tired eyes squinted as water dripped from her face. For some reason, her face seemed darker in the reflection. She stared at herself close, like an image in a canvas. Today, they might learn the secret behind her nightmares. But Mary felt like she already knew.

Outside

“TAG!” Aisa exclaimed, pushing Chimney. “You’re it!” The Nimbi laughed as she ran away, the feel of the grass under her bare feet giving her energy. After they had breakfast, the friends went outside to engage in an energetic game of Tag.

Chimney chased Aisa, her teeth gritted furiously, until the leader stopped and noticed Mary to her left. Chimney smirked, dashing over to push Mary forcefully. “TAG!! You're it, Mary-chan!” She ran away.

“Yaaaaay! I’m it, I’m it!” Mary jumped.

“Mary, you don’t want to be ‘it’.” April chuckled, painting a canvas.
“Why not?”

“Because the one who’s ‘it’ dies! That’s how I always interpreted it.”

“Oh. I don’t want to die.” Mary frowned.

“Actually, since Chimney tagged you, that makes you our new Sector Leader!” Apis grinned.

“WHAT?!” Chimney freaked. “NO I DIDN’T! YOU TAG ME BACK RIGHT NOW, YOU SNEAKY…” She tackled Mary, angrily slapping her face as the others laughed.

Aeincha and Mini Mocha climbed up April’s long legs, eventually resting on her shoulders to view her painting. “Whatcha doin’?” Aeincha asked.

“Oh! It’s Sector V!” Mocha pointed. The painting depicted Sector V standing on Candied Island’s shore, with Sheila grinning, winking, and raising a ‘peace’ sign.

“I know. I’m making pictures of all the places the Lights went to.” April explained. “There’s the others.” Aeincha and Mocha dropped to the ground and walked around a tree, viewing the four paintings leaned against it. Sector IC with Arendelle Castle at the top, Sector W flying through Birka’s storm, Team Gallagher fighting in the Battle of Washington… then Sector W7, happily exploring an art gallery.

“Our isn’t very exciting, huh.” Aeincha sweatdropped. “But does this mean you think one of us will be awakened there?”

“Kind of. I met Sheila in a dream last night, and she told me about the other people she visited. A few chapters later, a new Light.”

“Guess Chimney is finally going to learn her secret power.” Mocha said. “You’re amazing though, April. You’ll put this Guertena guy to shame.”

“I wouldn’t say that. His art was pretty deep, from what I remember.”

“Yeah, but he lived a long time ago.” Aeincha said. “They’ll need to make way for the Goldenweek Gallery pretty soon!”

“YEAAAAAAH!” Chimney stood victoriously over Mary. “I’m the Leader of Sector W7 agaaaaain!”

“Oh- my mistake.” Apis said. “Since Mary isn’t an operative, we’re playing normal Tag, so you’re going to die.”

“NOOOOO!” She fell over. (“Gyom-gyoooom!”)

“Hehehehehehe!” Mary giggled, still lain on the ground. “Do you guys have this much fun every day?”

“In some way or another way.” Aisa shrugged. “You aren’t bored of us, are you?”

“No way! You guys are so much fun! Hey, if there was a way we could play like this forever and ever, would you?”

“HECK no!” Chimney shouted, sitting up. “I might DIE if I was stuck with these on’nanokos forever! I need my alone space.” She folded her arms and turned away.

“Oh. Well, I surely would!”

“You guys, it’s 12:00!” Rosa Goldenweek yelled to the children. “If we leave now, we can make it downtown by 12:30!”

“Adams Tech tells me the monkey situation is under control, so that sounds like a green light.” Alvin called.

“Oh!” April beamed, quickly grabbing her paintings. “Let’s go, Mary!” (“Gyom!”)

Mary stood and watched her new friends run to the two separate cars, driven by her mother and father respectively. She sighed and hurried to her mother’s dark-red car, where April was sitting.

Downtown Düssenheim

“My, I can’t believe a pack of monkeys could cause this much damage.” Rosa said, studying the smashed windows of many cars and buildings. Their trip took numerous detours because of holes in the road.

“I kept telling them the Pipo Helmets would come back to haunt them.” Alvin said, speaking to the other car via their radios. “It’s awful, almost every building in town was attacked. Thankfully the bridge was fixed, otherwise we couldn’t get over there.”

April gasped. “You don’t think they ruined the gallery, do you?!” If that were the case, she wouldn’t rest until every monkey on Earth were strangled.

“As a matter of fact, I asked about that.” Alvin replied. “My co-workers had a funny story. Apparently, several of the monkeys and their robots were seen guarding the Guertena Art Gallery. They didn’t let any visitors in at all, and after they were finally captured, nothing in the gallery was reported damaged or stolen. They were entirely baffled, it’s almost as if… they were expecting somebody.”

“The monkeys… they work for that Team Gnık group.” Apis remembered from the Star Train. “Team Gnık is after the Seven Lights. Do you guys think that… a Gibberish Rock is inside the gallery?”

“A Gibberish Rock?” Rosa smiled humorously. “That would be something Master Guertena would create. I can’t wait until we get there.”

Galdino Goldenweek huffed exhaustedly. “The only exhibit I’m looking forward to is the lounge. I didn’t enjoy coming the first time, I won’t enjoy it this time.”

“You’re just upset because Guertena had a better mind for sculptures.” Alvin said simply.

“I could outwax him in my sleep…”

The Guertena Gallery was a large, white building that was two floors tall, and a posh tiled floor was spread out before the stairs leading up to it. The sign read, in German, Welcome to the World of Weiss Guertena! The place of homage to the late artist since 1923! “It’s been around that long?” Aisa asked.

“Some say it was Guertena’s own living quarters.” April answered. “It has to be, because one of them is a floor painting. It’s pretty cool, wait’ll you see it.”
“Yeah, yeah.” Chimney sighed, uninterested. “I’m just gonna be thinking about One Piece the whole time.” (Play the Gallery Theme from Ib.)

Stage 57: Guertena Gallery

Mission: Explore the gallery.

Act 1

The lobby of the gallery was a bright white, and the floor was shiny and marble. The visitors wore mostly fancy clothing, but teenagers wore average clothes. “It’s already bringing back memories.” Rosa smiled. “I wonder if they still have the pretty rubies?”

“I still remember needing to visit the reception desk before touring.” Alvin said. “Shall we?” The band of kids followed the parents to the brown desk, where a white-haired man in a black tux stood.

“Uncle Alvin, Aunt Rosa?” April spoke. “Is it alright if we all go ahead?”

“Hm hm, eager for an adventure, aren’t you?” Rosa chuckled. “Alright. Just don’t cause trouble for the other visitors. April, you’re the oldest, so we’re counting on you to keep your friends under control.”

“Will do.” April blushed. “Come on, fellas.” The kids all walked ahead (Gonbe peeped out of Aisa’s satchel).

“So do you really think a Gibberish Rock is here?” Aisa asked Apis.

“It’s possible.” Apis smiled thoughtfully. “If one of us is a Light, that person would be able to read what’s on it.”

“Right you are, Apis-chan.” Chimney agreed. “Let’s split up in groups. Search every nook and cranny ’til we find that rock.”

“First I wanna show you the floor painting.” April said eagerly. “It’s over here! See?” Several visitors were standing around a square-shaped rope fence. The W7 members looked over, gazing at the huge floor painting: it depicted a gray angler fish coming in from the right, against a dark-blue background that was under the sea. The angler had a gaping mouth of sharp teeth, and black holes for eyes. “Whoa… for the first time, I feel super tiny.” Aeincha said.

“I wanna be bigger in case that thing comes out.” Mocha said worriedly.

“Hmhm, that’s a typical reaction.” April laughed. “It’s called ‘Abyss of the Deep.’”

“Hey girls, check it out!” Chimney waved her friends to come over beside the nameplate. “I found gibberish! Maybe this is connected to the rock!”

“Chimney, that’s German.” Apis said. “It says, ‘Abyss of the Deep: A world where man will never stand. To realize that world, I decided that I would engrave it within the canvas.’”

“Hah?? You understand German? I don’t know any of these words!”

“Mary taught us all while you were fixing your train.” Aisa informed. “She showed us a bunch of super-easy tips. Even Gonbe learned a few words!” (“Gyom!” the rabbit confirmed.)

“You mean I’m the only one in this gallery who can’t read?!” Chimney shouted quietly. “I feel so…so… stupid!”

“Aw, chill out, Chimney.” Mocha smiled. “Just be thankful that you know the storylines of anime better than anyone, because dubs and subs can never get it right!”

“It’s not the same, guys.” Chimney was down on all fours, facing the floor in a depressed fashion. They could imagine the blue wavy anime lines over her form. “I need some time to monologue internally.”

“Well, okay.” Apis said. “Let’s split up and look for that rock.” She went with Aisa, Aeincha explored with Mocha, and April with Mary.

Apis and Aisa went south of the floor painting and found a tall sculpture of a red rose. The stem was spiky, and red petals lay on the floor. “‘Embodiment of Spirit: Beautiful at a glance, but if you get too close, it will induce pain. It can only bloom in wholesome bodies.’” Apis read.

“What do you think that means?” Aisa asked.

“Who knows. It’s art.”

April and Mary carried Aeincha and Mocha up to the second floor. They glanced at a painting of a green Yoshi, dangling upside-down via a rope around his legs. The Yoshi’s face was miserable. “I read that Mr. Guertena based this creature off of those from an exotic island.” A man observing the painting said.

“He does not use real creatures for models often, does he?” his female companion asked.

While April walked ahead, Mary stopped before a familiar painting. She gasped to herself: it was the painting from her dream. A slumbering man with lavender hair, wearing a dark blue, ragged jacket, with a green shirt underneath. He held a blue rose, and was surrounded by such roses against a black background. It was called Forgotten Portrait. “Mary?” April called.

“Oh. Coming!” She chased her cousin.

“April, what did Guertena look like?” Mocha asked.

“I don’t know. There really aren’t many pictures of him. There’s plenty of books, but no pictures. He didn’t do self-portraits, either. Though to be honest,” April smiled, “I picture him wearing white clothing. The ‘Weiss’ in his name is German for ‘white.’”

They looked at paintings labeled Misshapen Diamond, Couplet Towers, Bitter Fruit, and The Lady in Red, a brown-haired woman with red eyes and a red dress, smiling. Mary smiled back at the painting, delighted by her appearance. Aeincha and Mocha especially took interest in a trio of headless statues, colored red, yellow, and light-blue. They were titled Death of the Individual. “How come those guys don’t have heads?” Aeincha asked.

“I guess it’s because ‘the individual’ lies in one’s expression. That’s why they’re ‘dead.’” April responded.

“I just thought it was because you need your head to stay connected to your body.” Mocha said. “But your idea’s good, too.”
Downstairs, Apis and Aisa viewed a set of four glass cases; this exhibit was labeled the Twinkling of Crystals and Stars. The sight inside the glass was too spectacular for human words. “…Apis, look!” Aisa pointed, running to a door in the corner. “It’s the Basement! They probably have a ton more things down here.”

Apis tugged on the doorknob. “It’s locked. Do you have any shrink apples?”

“I had to make room for Gonbe. But Aeincha’s arms could probably reach in.”

“Good idea. It would be great if the Gibberish Rock was hidden in here.”

After passing the headless statues, April received a call on her wristwatch. “April, are Aein and Mocha with you?” Apis asked. April confirmed ‘Yes.’ “We found a door to the basement, but we need them to reach into the lock.”

“Alright. Mary, can you carry them down?” She handed her cousin the tinies.

“Of course! I love holding my dollies!” Mary pressed them to her cheeks.

“We enjoy your company too, Mary.” Aeincha remarked.

While Mary jogged back to the stairs, April proceeded on this floor. A white couch sat inside a rope fence, titled Reserved Seat. A little boy with a yellow shirt tried to sneak under the fence, but his mother grabbed and pulled him away. “I told you you can’t touch anything, Norbert.”

“Eh.” When the boy thrust his arm toward the couch, a card fell out of his sleeve. “Mom, my Yu-Gi-Oh card!”

April shook her head humorously and kept going. “Wariness” was a pink sphere with three swords stabbed into it. The “Taste-Cleansing Tree” was a thin black tree with colored strips hanging from the branches. “Fusion” was a sculpture of a blue, blob-like humanoid with a bald, drooped head. She then walked by a painting of a black cat’s head, and a little girl excitedly pointing at it. “A kitty! Mommy, look, it’s a kitty-cat!”

“Yes, I see it, now be quiet! I told you not to shout.”

April remembered why she loved this place. So many unique paintings and sculptures, so many people talking about them. Art can have so many interpretations, they create so many discussions. April wondered if, a hundred years from now, people would talk about her art. How amazing it would be if she lived on in history as Germany’s second greatest artist. People would call her a reincarnation of Guertena… no, no, April was thinking too much.

“Hmm?” April saw another painting… well, it was almost like a mural. It was very wide, taking up a large space of wall. There were many black, shadowy blotches. The left side was blue and had a red rose in the upper-left. After that, green, then yellow, a pink splotch with a crescent moon next to it, then gray. The right side was dark-red, with the Lady in Red’s canvas at the very end. April read the title. “S…Something… World? I can’t read that word. …I don’t even remember this painting. Hmm.” (End song.)

The lights flickered. April looked up with a start. The light remained normal afterwards. “That’s strange…” Then again, this gallery was a century old, so lighting problems would happen. April continued ahead; this route made the loop back to the headless statues. The gallery had gotten quiet. April saw no other visitors. “Where did… everyone go?”

She went downstairs. The receptionist was gone, his desk abandoned. April walked to the room with the floor painting: she never pictured a time where no one surrounded the marvel. “HELLO? Chimney?… Apis?… Mary? Anyone?…”

She returned to the lobby and looked at the entrance. “Did they all… go outside?” April approached the brown double-doors and grabbed both handles. She gasped when the doors wouldn’t open, jiggling and tugging them. “It’s locked.”

The lights flickered again—then they faded to a very dark dimness. April heard faint, rhythmic footsteps in the distance. “Hello? Who’s there?”

No one responded, and April wasn’t sure how far the footsteps were. Her heart racing, April rushed to one of the windows, trying to pull open. It was sealed tight. April peeked outside, viewing the pitch-black world. “But… it was broad daylight.”

Blood leaked from the top of the window—April jumped back. Her heart raced faster, the footsteps kept pounding in her ears, so April ran upstairs. She passed a window—a silhouette walked by the window. Curious, April approached and looked out. When she saw nothing, April resumed walking. BANG BANG BANG! She whipped around, and the window was cracked. She ignored this and fast-walked past the headless statues, to the big mural painting. A blue ooze leaked from the bottom left of the canvas. April slowly approached. “What… is this?” She softly touched it—BIP BIP BIP BIP! She turned—blood-red letters splattered on the floor, reading WELCOME BACK. The blue ooze had turned into writing. It said, come down below april you know the way.

April didn’t understand, but she chose to return down the stairs. The footsteps wouldn’t stop, but there was no sign of another presence. She wondered what the writing meant… then, she saw it: a piece of the fence around the floor painting was open. Blue, painted footprints led into the Abyss of the Deep. April didn’t appreciate defilement around such a great painting, but it didn’t appear damaged.

She looked around the gallery further. She viewed the Embodiment of Spirit sculpture, which—Cough!” April whipped behind. The Coughing Man painting hung on the wall, a black-haired person in an orange shirt. April approached and looked at him closely. Did he just… cough? April shook this idea off and kept looking. She returned to the second floor, passing the mural to the next row of paintings, such as the black cat—

“Mroooowww.” She definitely heard it that time. That cat moaned. Yet the painting lay motionless. She went up to view the other paintings. The Lady in Red, Misshapen Diamond, and Bitter Fruit remained—the apple in Bitter Fruit fell out and splat on the floor, leaving only the pear. Well-p, that pretty much clarified it: something was wrong with this gallery.

April was getting more annoyed with those footsteps, but seeing no one they belonged to. She wandered downstairs and looked at the footprints beside the Abyss of the Deep. Could it be that… April stepped on that spot. As she viewed the giant, open-mouthed angler fish, she thought without a doubt, this would be the craziest thing to ever happen. She stepped one foot over the floor painting. She stepped down… then, she splashed in as if it were water.

April held her breath. She was underwater, inside the painting. Bubbles floated from her mouth. Fish swam about. It was brighter blue than it had been in the painting, but the angler fish wasn’t here. It was… amazing. Already, she felt like she were in a whole different world. A world where man would never stand. April felt her body turning, slowly within the liquid. Her soul felt uplifted, her mind was wide open. This entire space… was inside a painting. She fell into a painting… everything under this water was paint. And yet, it felt so real. One minute ago, she was afraid. Now, she was in awe beyond compare. Her imagination was touched at its core. (Play “Dungeon
She felt herself go through a surface, and her feet touched down on a flat, blue floor. She looked around the short, blue-colored hallway, then at the ceiling, where she noticed the faint waves of the “water” stop rippling. That was where she came from, but it looked like a blank ceiling now. Wherever she was, she wouldn’t be getting back.

There were two paintings on the wall: both depicted cliffs looking out over a sea, one blue, the other red. April followed the hall past the blue sea, coming to a door beside a painting of an abstract, gray pattern. The Geometrical Fish, it was called. It didn’t look much like a fish; perhaps Guertena can stump April after all. There was an empty, square hole under the picture. The door was locked, so April went down the other hall. Light-blue letters were scattered around the wall; April tried to list them in the order she passed, T F V I G V M Z O R E V H.

There was a small brown desk blocking a door, and a base with a bright pink rose sat on the desk. April was enticed by the rose. It smelled lovely, and looked beautiful. The vase’s water was shallow, so she found it amazing that a rose could have so much life in a building’s dim-lit basement. April reached over and took the rose... for some reason, she felt an odd connection with it. A part of her told her not to put it back. April gently put the rose in her jacket pocket. She moved the desk aside to enter the door, leading to a small room with a painting of a woman with dark-cyan hair. She was smiling, eyes closed in arches, and wore a white shirt. It seemed her hair’s paint was leaking out of the canvas.

There was a box-shaped device with mini square tiles on the floor. April picked it up—the painting’s eyes opened to an angry slant, and her mouth grinned with sharp teeth. April gulped, wanting to walk out of there, but she noticed a paper under the painting. It said, When the rose wilts, so too shall you rot away. April walked out of the room. There was also a poster beside the rose’s former desk, which said, You and the rose are unified. Know the weight of your life.

The light-blue letters in the hall were gone, replaced with red letters. April couldn’t put them in a specific order, but each of the five different letters splatted on the floor before her, reading THIEF. April quick-walked down the hall, back to the Geometric Fish painting. She put the tile box inside the open square. When she moved the tiles in the box, the tiles on the painting moved as well. April reorganized the tiles, each with various shades of gray, and created a realistic fish. A blue key dropped from behind the portrait, and April used it to open the door.

She was in a green hallway with numerous, simple paintings of bugs. A ladybug, a bee, a Bulb–

“hey, watch where you’re going.” April gasped and looked down. An ant was close to her large shoe. Curious, April bent down and scooped the ant on her finger.

“Did you just… talk?”

“of course. i’m an ant. ants talk.”

“So do humans, but we know how to use capital letters.”

“do you love paintings? i love paintings. my painting is especially cool. i’d like to see it again, but it’s kind of far away.”

“Where is it?”

“over there.” His stubby leg pointed to an alternate corridor.

“Well, I’ll take you.” April smiled.
“no, i don’t go that way. you can bring it to me, though.”

“Um, okay.” April set the ant down and walked toward that passage. A sign read, Beware the edges. April progressed, not sure what that— “HAH!” A black claw reached from the wall, April jumped back with a start. “HAH!” Another one nearly grabbed her—April bolted down the long passage, “HAH HAH HAH!” arms shot out to grab from every direction, she dodged left and right and moved her legs faster. When the hall turned right, she dodged that way, and no more claws reached for her. Beside a locked door, April found the ant painting. She took it off the wall and swallowed nervously. The arms were still outstretched, but could only go so far. She kept in the very center of the passage and walked quickly.

“oh. that’s my painting. it’s just as cool as i remember it.” The ant was staring longingly at the picture when April showed it to him.

“Um… that’s nice… Hey, do you know a way out of here?”

“Oh, no. maybe the person in there will.” He pointed further down the hall. April sighed, still carrying the painting as she followed. A picture labeled Prologue depicted a yellow-green dot against blank white background. Chapter 1 showed a worm, Chapter 2 had a cocoon, and the Last Chapter depicted a beautiful yellow butterfly. April opened a door to a small room with a rectangular hole in the floor. Oddly, the ant painting would be good to lay down and cover it… but April wouldn’t treat art that way, not to mention her long legs could easily step over the short hole. So she did.

She was led to a dead-end room with a red headless statue on the other side. A painting on the wall depicted the yellow butterfly being eaten by a black spider. Epilogue. A green key lay on the floor, so April picked it up—“HAH!” The headless statue reached forward and chased her like a zombie. April immediately bolted through the door, the statue pursued quick and prevented her from shutting it, so April—“WAAAAAH!” Her foot stepped into the hole in the floor; losing balance and scraping her head against the side, April plummeted through.

She landed in a red hallway, feeling a searing pain in her legs and on her face. “O-ow-w-w-w-w…” Her knees jittered when she tried to stand. She saw that the ant in the painting was literally squished by her weight, its body parts severed with blood leaking out as if it were flesh. She looked up, seeing the headless statue standing over the hole in the ceiling. April tried to walk forward quickly, but the pain wouldn’t leave her body. Her legs felt like sticks. April remembered the rose in her jacket and pulled it out. It had one petal left.

April eventually made it to a door, bringing her to a corridor with a bright blue vase on a desk. There was a painting of such a vase, and it was called Eternal Blessing. April decided to put her one-petal stem in the vase. Like magic, the rose’s petals reappeared, making it good as new. The pain in her legs and head disappeared, allowing her to stand upright. She sighed with relief.

“Hm…” April picked the rose up and stared at it. “So, does this rose… represent me?” She turned it over from a few angles. “But just what is this water?” She looked at the apparently magic vase. April sighed and sat on the floor, staring at the pink rose thoughtfully. “Talking ants… living statues… everyone disappearing… nothing here makes any sense.”

April’s eyes inched left, stopping at the communicator on her wrist. Realizing this, she tapped it to try and call her friends. …It was completely dead. Worry flowed inside her heart. Where had her friends and everyone in the gallery disappeared to. She took a breath and cried out, “MARY, CHIMNEY, APIS, AISAI CAN ANYONE HEAR ME?”

As she expected, no one responded. Her voice traveled as far as the limited space in this hall. She sighed again and got up. “I wonder if they’re in the same situation as me. …I wonder if they’re not and they even know I’m gone. …” She looked up at another door ahead. “I guess I have to try and find a way out of here.” April walked forward, putting the rose in her jacket.

Gray Area

Aeincha and Mocha were climbing a ladder down a small shaft. After Mary set them on the floor and ran back to find April for some reason, the tiny girls attempted to follow her. The lights flickered when they looked at a giant painting, and everyone else disappeared. They found a loose tile in the floor and decided to climb down the secret tunnel. “Why would an art gallery have this?” Mocha asked. “Do Lilliputians work here?”

“It is kind of strange.” Aeincha agreed. “Hopefully, this leads down to the basement. If only I brought a flashlight.”

“The one thing I don’t understand is, weren’t we on the second floor?”

“That’s what makes me lost.”

They finally set foot on ground and crawled out of a mouse hole, into a small (to a regular human) gray room. There was a white canvas with a line-drawn, unsymmetrical box called Unbalanced Box, and a picture of two hands clutching a heart, called Heart in Custody. The girls took solace in the fact they were clearly in the gallery’s basement, and there was enough light to see. They approached a gray door that towered over them. “I still can’t believe how small I am now.” Mocha said. “I’ve been giant for so long, it’s such a dramatic change. How are we supposed to open that?”

“I’m glad you asked, Mocha,” Aeincha smiled and winked, “because Mistress Aeincha will happily teach you the Art of Tiny Lifestyle to make your tiny experience as easy as eating pie. Starting with my grappling hook!” Aeincha pulled out and threw her hook up to the doorknob. She climbed up quickly and grabbed the knob, shifting her body weight to make it turn. At the sound of the click, Mocha used her strength to push the door open.

Aeincha dropped to the floor as they entered the new room. They gasped—the wall was aligned with ghostly-white mannequin heads that all faced the center path. Paintings of said heads hung on the wall; the first one had an average face, as did the second one, and the third one had no pupils. The hallway was very long at their size. “This is creepy…” Aeincha shuddered.

“Yeah, but if they wanted to, we’re the perfect size. …Mocha, look at those!” Aeincha’s eyes lit up as she pointed up the desk in the corner. Two roses, a green and a gray one, sat in a vase.

“How do those roses survive down here?”

“I don’t know, but they’re so pretty! Let’s climb up there!” Aeincha grabbed the table leg and climbed.

“Aeincha, hold on!” Mocha climbed after her. “We don’t wanna knock anything down!”

After getting onto the desk, Aeincha attempted to climb the vase. “It’s too slippery. Mocha, give me a boost.”

“Aeincha, I really don’t think we should—”
Aeincha accidentally pushed the base, spilling the water as the roses fell to the floor. “Er!” the girls yelped, feeling an aching wince. “Boy, that was weird.” Aein said.

“Yeah…” Mocha looked down at the roses. “Well, someone’s gonna be mad.”

“Let’s just take them and find another vase!” Aeincha happily dropped down to pick up the green rose. Mocha followed her and grabbed the gray rose. “Hahaha! We’re Rose Warriors!” Both girls giggled as they swung their larger-than-them roses.

“We sure are! But let’s be careful with them. Hopefully, we can find someone—” Mocha turned toward the mannequins’ path—the sculpted heads were staring at them creepily. “Uhhh… they weren’t looking at us before.”

Aeincha noticed this. Her heart filled with worry. “Uhh… I think I saw another door this way.” The girls returned to the room with the two paintings, where another door stood. Aeincha repeated her grappling trick to open the door, then Mocha pushed it. They had to jump down a step into this new passage.

“AHAAHAHAHAHA!” Their tiny hearts almost stopped at this crazy laughter. They whipped around—the other side of the door was a black canvas with blue, droopy eyes and a mouth, both twitching up-and-down. “Your flowers look nice! Give me those flowers and I’ll let you back through! Ahahahahaha!”

“AAAAHHH!” The girls scampered away, afraid of becoming dinner for a talking door-painting. Once around the corner, they stopped to catch breath. “THAT was unexpected!” Mocha said.

“What’s up with this gallery? It’s like Night at the Museum!”

“I thought the point of coming during daylight was so that WOULDN’T happen!”

“Maybe this is the reason the basement was locked. Maybe we should find a way out of here.”

“Good idea. Wait, I hear footsteps!” The girls looked down the hall. Two red headless statues came from around a corner, marching their way.

“Are those the same statues that were upstairs?” Aeincha asked.

“Can they see where they’re going?”

One of the statues turned to their direction, stopping. It took notice of the roses being held by the doll-size girls. “HAH!” They walked quicker, and the girls sensed that they were the targets.

“I think they can!” Aein exclaimed.

“Run for it!” The two hurried down another passage, but the larger statues caught up before long.

“Never mind, I wish you were bigger now!” Aeincha panted. “I don’t think Tiny Style will be good against those things!”

“Maybe, but to me, size is irrelevant!” Mocha set her rose down and turned to face the statues determinedly. “I’m still an Honorary Amazon!” Mocha ran forth, and when a statue tried to step on her, she threw her Armament hands up and kept its foot lifted. She poured more strength when the statue pushed harder, and the shrunken giant forced up and caused the statue to fall back, knocking its ally down. Mocha got her rose and ran back to Aeincha. “But on the bright side, we know why they’re called ‘Death of the Individual.’” Mocha panted, giving a humorous smirk.
They saw the statues recovering, so Mocha and Aeincha kept running. They managed to get around a few more corners before the statues lost sight of them. The tiny girls caught their breath and sat along a wall underneath a small painting of coffee and cake. “April thought this was gonna be boring.” Aeincha breathed. “But honestly, I would welcome- OOOOWWW!” A piping hot drop of brown liquid fell on her head, the Lilliputian shaking her head frantically. “What is this, COFFEE?!”

Mocha looked up at the aforementioned painting. “I… think so? …Aeincha, your rose!” The girls looked to see a couple petals fall off the green flower.

“Oh. I guess we should find a vase. I don’t know why, but… I feel something weird from these roses.”

“Me, too.”

They silenced when they heard more footsteps, looking to a leftward passage a few feet away. A man of about 18 years appeared. He wore a dark-blue jacket that was very ragged on the edges, a light-green shirt underneath, and light-brown pants. His lavender hair was messy, hanging over his wondering dark eyes. “Aeincha, it’s another person!” Mocha pointed.

“HEY!” Aeincha ran to him first. “Excuse me! DOWN HERE!”

The man stopped walking when squeaky voices reached his ears. He looked down, seeing the tiny girls waving their roses. “Oh-… Oh my.” He walked closer and knelt down, speaking softly. “This is a surprise… how did you ladies get so small?”

“That’s a long story.” Aeincha blushed. “My name is Aeincha, this is Mocha. Mister, your hair is so cool!” Her eyes sparkled. “You have to let me cut it! (You can use it, honestly.)”

“Sir, can you please help us?” Mocha asked. “We climbed down from upstairs and we wanna get back up to our friends. Can you carry us?”

“Why, of course.” The man smiled, gently picking the girls up. “I couldn’t leave two young ladies of such a stature by their selves. My name is… er…” He frowned. “Hm… I dunno…”

“You don’t?” Aeincha asked.

“No… Well, no matter, anyhow.” He smiled warmly. “I’ve got to get you girls to safety.” He began to carry them around the halls.

“There’s a lot of scary statues walking around.” Aeincha said as she relaxed in his right hand. “I’m glad we have a handsome giant to protect us!”

“I guess somebody has to be.” Mocha chuckled, making an embarrassed blush.

The man’s hair hung over his eyes, casting a shadow. The girls didn’t see his devilish look.

Yellow Area

Aisa and Apis were wondering what was taking the others so long, so they went upstairs to look. After wandering the second floor—and everyone else seemed to disappear, the door into the basement was open. After going down stairs, the two found their selves in a storage room with white mannequin statues, large heads, and tables. “Something isn’t right here, Aisa. Everyone else in the gallery disappears, our communicators don’t work…”
“Well, if there’s no staff, I guess no one’ll mind if I do this.” Aisa took her sandals off and smiled innocently.

Apis noticed a vase nearby, holding a dark-yellow rose that matched her dress, as well as a brown rose. She reached to take both out, studying them. “Here.” She handed the brown rose to Aisa.

The Nimbi sniffed it. “It’s nice, but…”

The lights in the room flickered; one of the head statues began to move toward Aisa. It moved a little closer every time the light flickered, but Aisa didn’t notice as she explored the room casually with Apis. They stared at a painting of a red rose. “The budget on this place is terrible.” Apis said.

Aisa felt her foot step in goo, looking down to see it was yellow paint. The substance was dripping from the ceiling. “Eww! Tell me about it.” She left footprints as she walked further. “These leaks won’t be good for the artworks—”

A shattering sound rang in their ears. Both girls whipped behind, seeing a head statue fallen over and broken. It seemed to have tripped on the yellow puddle. “…Their skin was still tingling. “Let’s go someplace else.” Apis said.

There was a yellow key inside the head’s remains, so they used it to open the door out of this room. They passed a small room with cat-like eyes on the wall, to one with several block-shaped pillars, and curtained portraits with yellow painted buttons under each one. She had doubts these paint spots would actually react like buttons, but she pushed one anyway, and the curtain opened to reveal an eraser. “AAAAHH!” Apis screamed when the upper-right half of her vision turned blank. “What happened?!”

“Apis, your eyes got erased!” Aisa exclaimed.

“Erased?! Well, find a pencil and draw them back!”

Panicking, Aisa ran to push another button, exposing a painting of a naked woman. “Aaaah!”

“OW!” Aisa was slapped. “Sorry!” She pushed another button, exposing a gun. “OUCH!” She was shot in the foot; two petals were now missing from her rose. The Nimbi began to limp as her foot bled. She pushed a button that unveiled a painting of a pot of roasting fish. They could smell it as though it were actually there. “MEOOOOWWWW.”

“APIS, WATCH OUT!” Aisa grabbed her friend and dodged between the pillars when a giant, yellow cat stormed in to gaze at the painting. They helped each other out of the room. A chunk of the wall, where the cat eyes formerly were, was gone, exposing a passage.

“Thanks a lot, Aisa…” Apis sighed with relief. “…Hey, my vision’s back!”

“Thank goodness. Can you help me walk?” Apis nodded and helped her injured friend. The girls entered a new hall and saw a black canvas, with red eyes and a wiggling tongue, on the wall. The face spit on the floor- “Ow!” Aisa felt a burning pain in her foot when she stepped on the spit. “I’m starting to think the ‘No shoes’ policy was a warning! I need a first aid kit, fast!”

They entered a door that led to a small library. They skimmed the titles for anything that might be interesting. Apis found a book titled Worldbuilding, which she opened to a bookmarked page. When an artist develops a world inside their head, consciously or subconsciously, it becomes more real than they realize. When that world forms into being, the only laws are that which the creator establishes. Even as they die, the world they created lives. Of course, without their creator, the denizens of that world cannot survive beyond the boundaries.
Aisa found a book titled Secrets of Immortality. Inside were images depicting a magic fountain, a person’s spirit being split in two, and one of a black demon. Aisa found this too scary and put it back. Apis skimmed a book about Conspiracy Theories, seeing pictures of Bill Cipher, a gray face with two orange horns, and a diamond whose page was labeled ‘Polymorphic Rocks.’ “Sigh, we need to find a way out.” Apis sighed.

“Yeah.” The two left the room and went down an alternate passage, which had a painting series lined up. An axe rose from a log it was chopping, inched higher, higher, the last painting had the axe at its highest—“AAAAH!” it chopped down and nearly cut them. They stayed silent for a few minutes to let their hearts race. “Apis, please tell God not to let me lose my feet today!”

“I already asked Him to help us get outta here alive!” Apis helped her friend back the opposite way, eventually squeezing through a door called the Liars’ Room (however, they didn’t read the label). Paintings of shadowed people hung on the wall, wearing green, brown, yellow, blue, white, and red respectively.

Try the door on the left! the writing under the green one said. Try the door up north. Brown said. Blue’s got the right idea. Yellow said. I just went with white. Blue said. The right door, it’s the right one! said White. There’s a trapdoor behind the statue. Red said.

The girls were confused, but there seemed to be more votes for white. They shrugged, heading into the next room to walk to the right door. Apis creaked it open and peeked into the darkness. A cloud of purple gas blasted both girls. They grew sleepy, lost composure, and tumbled into the abyss within.

Gray Area

It felt like half an hour since the strange man began carrying the tiny girls, but Aeincha and Mocha didn’t mind the rest. The gray halls seemed to drag on forever. They both looked up when the man was approaching two paintings, depicting a bride and a groom. Grieving Bride and Grieving Groom, they were labeled. “Awww. What’s wrong with them?” Aeincha frowned.

“The bride lost her wedding ring.” The man replied. “Now they can’t be betrothed.”

“That’s so sad.” Mocha frowned. “Assuming these paintings are alive, too, it’s good to know they have feelings… sort of. …What are those hands?” There was a black hand in front of each painting, flexing its fingers.

“Those are the bride’s hands. They’re desperate to find her ring. Hm…” He smiled. “You shouldn’t feel too bad for them, though. They like to play. In fact…” He formed a smirk, “you girls look pleasantly fun.”

“Hey, what’re you—” Aeincha gasped when the man set her in the left hand, while Mocha was placed in the right hand. He swiped their two roses, and the black hands began to squeeze the helpless girls.

“Ahh! Mister, help us, please!” Mocha pleaded.

“Hm hm hm hm hm.” The man twirled the roses in his hands. “You girls will make excellent toys for the Ladies here. There’s nothing for you to worry about, however. As soon as you’re dead, you won’t feel a thing.”

“D-DEAD?!” Aeincha panicked, trying harder to squirm out of the bride’s hand. “No! We don’t wanna die! Please don’t kill us!”
“Have you girls ever played ‘Loves Me, Loves Me Not’?” The man giggled maliciously. “There’s a trick to it: just pluck the stem petals, too. You can always win. Over he-e-e-e-ere, lad-i-i-ie-es!” He wagged the roses in the air. “Come and geeeeet ‘eeeeeem!”

Hissing sounds were heard. Creatures were crawling from down the dark passage. The tiny girls shuddered at them.

Red Area

April passed a painting of a Smoking Gentleman, in which she could smell the smoke. A Heartbeat picture depicted a simple green line, but it made a thump thump as the line waved like a heart monitor. A blue statue called “Uh” towered in the room; it was a blob-like woman holding a baby in a bundle. A red statue called “Ah” depicted a similar woman, but her mouth was open as she cried.

April looked ahead and saw a more pleasant painting at a dead-end passage: The Lady in Red. The upper half of a brown-haired woman in a red dress, pretty red eyes, and smiling courteously. April returned this smile and stopped before her. If this painting was alive as well, April couldn’t imagine her being monstrous. It was like Mona Lisa: April got a warm feeling from her. Her smile gave her comfort.

“RAAAAAH!” The Lady in Red exposed sharp fangs, smashing through the glass of her canvas as she grabbed April. The girl was hurt by the glass, she punched the Lady off and ran away—the Red Lady crawled after her, having no legs, only the canvas to serve as her “lower half.”

April swung a door open and slammed it before the Red Lady caught up. The Canvas Lady furiously banged on the door, desperate to claim her prey. Thankfully, she couldn’t seem to reach the knob. April sighed with relief, walking calmly down this new path. April noticed a hole camouflaged within the dark-colored wall. She viewed the inside, ducking as she entered it. She hit a wall and had to turn right, seeing an exit.

On the other side, she gazed at a large painting of a blackish-blue tree, leaves scattering under a shaded pink sky. Black creatures with red eyes stared at the tree, and misty energy flowed from their bodies to it. The painting was Soul-Sapping Throng.

If the Abyss of the Deep sucked her into this world, April wondered if this led to another world. Did she even want to know… or maybe there was no other way. April approached cautiously… she reached her left arm… and touched the painting.

“AHHHH!” Black claws emerged from the painting and grabbed her tightly. She struggled to shake away, but it proved hopeless as she was pulled inside. She completely vanished into the portrait.

Violet Area

“Uuuuuuh… where am I…?” Chimney mumbled groggily, hunched forward as she limped weakly. The hallway was dim with a strong shade of purple. “I thought I saw a head in a picture hide behind the wall… and when I tried to climb after it, I’m here. Why doesn’t my wristwatch work… and why does my arm hurt?” She flexed her right arm. “Ugh… comin’ here was a bad idea. I ain’t gonna be the chosen one if I don’t even know German gibberish… I just wanna go outside and sit down somewhere.”

Chimney stopped when she noticed someone a few meters ahead. A girl with blonde hair and a green dress was happily twirling a yellow rose in her hand. “Nnn? Mary?”
The Goldenweek girl looked over. “Oh, Chimney! Hi there!” Mary waved. “For a second, I thought everyone else left me.”

“I wouldn’t blame them.” Chimney remarked as she approached her. “What’s that rose you got?”

“I found this in a vase. Isn’t it pretty? I mean, I was never a fan of yellow, to be honest, but I still like it. I mostly like red, and pink, but especially blue! What’s your favorite color, Chimney?”

“Nnn… never thought about it.”

“Oh. I was hoping it’s orange. I found this rose, too!” Mary pulled out an orange rose. “For some reason, it reminded me of you. I was touching the petals and I pulled one off by accident.” Mary frowned regretfully, handing Chimney the rose. “Sorry, Chimney.”

Chimney stared half-interestedly at the 8-petal rose. “Eh… I don’t mind. Mary, did you get here the same way I did?”

“Um… I found a staircase, so if that’s what you mean…”

“Well, can you show me those stairs? I wanna leave.”

“I wanna leave, too…” Mary’s head faced down as she bore a sad, worried look. “But I can’t find the stairs. I don’t think they’re…”

“Sigh, I’ll look for them myself.” Chimney walked past her. “Or at least an elevator or something.”

Chimney’s left wrist was grabbed in Mary’s hands. Chimney turned to see her pleading blue eyes. “Don’t leave me, Chimney. I’m scared of this place.”

“Okay, Mary, sheesh. Just let go of my hand.” Chimney pulled her arm free and kept walking.

Mary’s footsteps stayed in rhythm with hers, so it only sounded like two feet were moving. Chimney stopped and turned, seeing Mary just inches behind her. “Personal space, please?”

Chimney walked again, but Mary kept in close quarters.

“I wanna stay with you, Chimney. You’re a nice person. You protect your friends if they’re in danger. I’m your friend, too, right?”

“To an extent, I guess.”

“Chimney… what if there was no way out of here? What if you, me, and all the others were trapped here? That wouldn’t be bad, right?” Mary smiled lightly. “Because we would have each other. Forever.”

“Forever with you is long enough. I’d just as soon leave you here if I wanted to.”

“Oh…” Mary frowned and kept following Chimney. She smiled again, “Well, I was just saying ‘what if.’ We’ll get out of here, right, Chimney? Then we can all play some more. You, me, and our friends.”

All they did was walk through the dark, violet corridors. They passed a painting of a shadowed, crying man, a painting of a grey toad on a lilypad, and a painting of a fly on a branch—the toad’s tongue shot into the fly’s canvas and caught it. “Chimney, since I know German, do you want me to read any of these paintings for you?”

“Nah, the point of knowing their names is to figure out the symbolism, and I’m not into that stuff. I like April’s stuff better ‘cause I know what’s going on.”

“I’ll be glad when we find the Gibberish Rock and never have to see you again. Why can’t I call the on’nanokos?” She looked at her blank wristwatch. “This is starting to feel like some Halloween gag.”

“Halloween is fun.” Mary beamed. “You get to dress as something you aren’t to get candy. I like being a mummy.”

The girls walked down a long, vacant hallway in silence, only their footsteps making sound. The hall turned left, and they glanced at a blue, zombie doll with yellow eyes, black frizzy hair, and a pink dress lain against the wall. There was purple writing on the wall that said, Hello, Mary. Mary stayed beside Chimney so that she wouldn’t notice the writing, and she gestured Chimney to walk faster. Mary looked back; the doll was gone from its spot—Mary gasped to herself when the doll was leaned against the wall up ahead. The writing said, We missed you.

“You lookin’ to race or something?” Chimney asked as Mary took her hand and walked faster.

“I just wanna find April.” Mary replied sadly. “Or a way out. I wanna get out soon.”

They passed the doll again, with writing that said, We like your new friends. The wall turned right, then right again, and when they passed the doll with writing that said, Will they join us for tea?, Mary began to jog, pulling Chimney with her. They turned several more corridors before they saw a door up ahead. “Maybe we can get out over there.”

“Sheesh, Mary-chan, get ahold of yourself, nothing in a haunted house is real, and all these paintings are a load of-” When Mary pushed open the door, a red, blue, and yellow headless statue were on the other side, along with a Lady in Red and Lady in Blue.

“HAAAHH!” The monsters hissed. Mary screeched and tried to pull the door shut, but a headless statue stuck its foot in while the Canvas Ladies pulled it back open. Chimney and Mary backed away in fear as the monsters inched closer.

“Chimney…” Mary held the girl’s shoulders and crouched behind her.

The Red and Blue Ladies crawled toward them with ravenous expressions, eyes locked on the orange rose in Chimney’s hand. But they stopped, noticing the blue-eyed girl behind her; Mary ducked her head behind Chimney’s when she saw them looking at her. The Canvas Ladies smiled with glee, exposing their sharp teeth and terrifying the humans with their mad looks. “MA’Y!” The humans backed away faster as the grinning ladies came. “MA’Y!”

“It’s okay, Mary, we can get past ‘em.” Chimney clutched her rose confidently. “Use that Ice Crayon to color the floor, then we’ll kick across the wall over them, a-; Mary!” She turned around, seeing the Goldenweek bolting back the other way. The Red Lady reached for her rose, Chimney kicked her in the face, then swung her foot to the side of Blue Lady’s face, afterwards leaping to kick between the headless statues. When Chimney landed- “Ah!” the Red Lady scratched her leg, causing a petal to fall off her orange rose. “MARY, COME BACK HERE!”

“No!” Mary cried, running ceaselessly around the many corridors. “I don’t want to! I don’t wanna come back, I never wanted to come back!”
She arrived at a fork, she tried to run one direction, but three headless statues were waiting for her. She tried to run the other way, a Lady in Yellow and Green peeked around the corner, grinning at her. Mary’s only other option was to enter a door, but at the feel of the cold doorknob, she stopped herself. She looked both ways frantically, backing against the door as her heart raced. The headless statues and Canvas Ladies came closer. She looked at the passage she just came from, seeing the blue doll walk toward her like a zombie. There was nowhere to run. The monsters were about to seize her. She could feel death approaching.

“No… No, please!” Mary turned and leaned her head against the door, crying. “Please… don’t take me… please!” I… Mary clenched her teeth as tears fell. I’m not one of you… I’m not… Please leave me alone… Please…

The Lady in Yellow reached up and softly touched Mary’s shoulder. She hissed through her devilish, sharp-toothed grin, “Welcome back, Mary…”

Visiting the Guertena Art Gallery was like visiting an amusement park.

I had so much fun, the day was over before I knew it!

You’d be surprised what delightful friends you could make of the paintings!

It was from that day that I began to get my muses from dreaming.

-Diary of Stanford Pines

This is going to be a fairly long level. We’ll continue it next chapter, then we’ll go back to Mermaid Swamp. Next time, we’ll learn Mary’s backstory. Kids, always wear shoes and shirts in an art gallery. (Also, don’t bring your dolls ‘cause the artwork might play with ‘em.)
A Creation’s Creation

Chapter Summary

Mary's past is fully revealed.

This chapter is also titled “Ib in a Nutshell.” (So spoilers.)

Chapter 48: A Creation’s Creation

Guertena Gallery; Violet Area

“EVERYONE!” the Lady in Yellow hissed as the headless statues guided Mary into a room.

“Ma’y’s back! MA’Y’S BACK!”

“MA’Y! MA’Y!” The statues raised their arms in excitement, the mannequin heads were bouncing, and the Canvas Ladies were plucking petals off of blue roses.

A blue doll painted purple writing on the wall. It said, We missed you so much, Mary! We thought you would never come back.

Another one wrote. We made your favorite flavor.

Mary was seated beside a small table on the floor. The blue dolls poured imaginary tea into a cup and passed it to her. Mary picked up and stared at the empty plastic cup. “Um… what is all this about?”

“Ma’y, yor so si’y!” the Blue Lady hissed. “You lef’ a lon’ time ago. You came back!”

“You must be mistaken.” Mary smiled brightly. “I’m not one of you guys. I’m just a little girl from Germany!”

“She lost her memory when she left.” A painting of lips called Tattletale said. “Her time in here was forgotten.”

Mary, don’t you remember us? A doll wrote. You knitted every doll here. And we played with you every day. Mary looked around at all the blue, zombified dolls with black hair and yellow or red eyes.

“I love playing with dolls.” She grinned. “But I never played with any of you. You must be mistaking me for a different Mary.”

“No. You are our Mary.” Tattletale informed. “The one who wanted to leave. The one our father loved more than any other. The last painting Guertena ever created. Mary-”

“No I AM NOT!” Mary punched the table and smashed it, much to their horror. Mary snarled, her expression vicious. “I am NOT the same Mary! I wasn’t made here, I’m not one of you! I am a human GIRL!” She stomped. “Do I look anything like any of you?! I do NOT!” She punched the wall. “I am MARY, I am MARY!” She punched the wall each time she repeated. “I am MARY, I am MARY, I am MARY, I am MARY, I am Mary, I am Mary, I am Mar…” Her knuckles were becoming bruised and darkened. She fell to her knees and began sobbing.

The Lady in Red bore her warm smile as she crawled closer. “Ma’y… you were always in your room... plucking roses like we do. Father made you differently... but you are the same. You are our Ma’y.”

“Oh, yeah?” Mary turned and looked at her angrily. “Well, prove it. What makes you think I’m the same as you?”

"’Cause you understand us."

Mary gasped and clamped her mouth. Was she not speaking English? No… they weren’t speaking English. They only spoke in hisses and pants. Mary understood almost every word. “Only we know what we say.” Tattletale mouthed. “Only you speak perfect English.”

More tears leaked from her eyes. She looked at the floor. You know it’s true, too. A doll wrote. The truth of your existence was always in your memory.

“…You’re wrong.” Mary stood up. “I couldn’t have come from this place. I’m not one of you guys. I’m… I’m Mary.” She faced them. “I live in Germany with my mom and dad. I have a cousin named April, and we have a bunch of friends that came to this gallery.”

“Bu’ you didn’t befoooore.” Yellow Lady hissed. “You stole their places. The boy and girl that were stuck in here. Both of you stole their places.”

“Bo…Both of us?” Mary questioned. “Who do you… mean?”

“NYAAAAAH!” Chimney kicked open the door and rapidly began punching every Canvas Lady and kicking every doll. “Mary, you just gonna stand there or you wanna get out?!”

“Chimney!” Mary seized this chance to run out of the room. She stopped when her friend didn’t follow. “Aren’t you coming?”

“Just run ahead, I’m gonna beat these guys in case they follow!”

“…” Mary wanted to protest for a second, but she really didn’t want to stay there. She nodded and ran off.

“MA’Y!” The Lady in Yellow tried to crawl after, but Chimney kicked her in the face.

“The only thing I know about art is that it’s easy to break! So COME AT ME, furiku kaiga!” She punched more Canvas Ladies and kicked off the walls to knock the headless statues down. “I’ll send all o’ you back to the drawing board!” She kicked dolls across the room, watching red fluid spill out. “TASTE MY SANDALS, skulls!” Chimney kicked one of the mannequin heads, and it shattered into pieces.

Black Area

Stage 57: Guertena Gallery, Act 2

April woke up in an area that was pitch-dark. She held her head and walked forward with a slight aching feeling. When she checked her rose, it seemed only a couple petals were missing. April held her hands forward to feel her way. She heard a male’s voice echo from a distant speaker, “Attention, all staff, attention: One of our visitors is damaging the displays. If found, please report them promptly. Those who damage the gallery exhibits will b… comp. . . sat . . n…” The speaker was glitching up.

April gasped. “Is it talking about me because I crushed the ant painting? Hmm… I need to find an exit soon.” April made it into a wide room, atop a long staircase. She was gazing at a black, diamond-shaped bed, with a curious black diamond design over it. She wondered if this was one of Guertena’s pieces… then, her gaze focused on the person sleeping under the covers.

It was the girl from her dream. Her eyes were closed in slumber, but the brown hair was familiar. Her name was Ib, April remembered. (It’s not easy to forget a name so odd.) She looked very ill. April put a hand on her forehead. She felt average. “Ib? Hello?” April shook her gently. Ib moaned weakly, as though wanting to wake up, but couldn’t.

April stared for a minute. “I wonder if this bed’s doing something?” She pulled off the covers and stuck her hands under Ib’s arms to pull her up to her feet. She was about to fall, so April kept her standing. She saw a green stalk drop from Ib’s hand. April bent down to pick it up, noticing the single red petal. “This is her rose.” While observing it, she lost her grip on Ib, so she caught her quickly. “When I get hurt, petals fall off my rose. If this petal falls, will you die?” She stared worriedly at the moaning girl. Ib made no response. “Sigh… we have to get it healed in that magic vase or something.” She put the stalk in her pocket with her own rose and helped Ib to walk.

They entered a dark passage, in which April outreached an arm to feel ahead. Her hand touched a door, then she felt down for the knob. She entered a room that was almost as dark, and there were a lot of paintings of humans with white clothes and bare feet, and black scribbles on miscellaneous parts of their body. April looked at the sign hanging from the ceiling. “Hall of Mistakes? Interesting that they have this. But I guess every artist has faults. Am I right?” She looked at the camera.

April carried Ib through a passage with smeared-out Canvas Ladies and other paintings on the wall. In fact, it kind of looked like parts of those paintings were cut off and pasted on other paintings. When April turned a left corner in the passage, she found a big canvas with a door painted, in which the chunk where the knob would be was cut off. Still carrying Ib, April searched the hallway for a painting piece with a doorknob. April found such a piece over the head of a rabbit painting, and when she pulled it off, she viewed the smeared result of the head. She brought the doorknob to paste over the empty chunk, then she was able to turn the knob and open the painting.

There was a vase of water in this small room, so April placed the one-petal stalk inside it. The red rose bloomed with petals, looking beautiful. “Mmmm…” Ib’s weight on April’s shoulders was subsiding. She could safely release and let Ib stand on her own feet. She opened her red eyes and viewed around. “My rose…” She picked the flower out of the vase. She looked up at the taller girl, her savior. “April?…”

“You’re Ib, aren’t you?” April asked. “You spoke to me in my dream?”

“April! It’s really you.” Ib hugged the older girl. “I was afraid you and Mary would never come back.”

“Me and Mary?” April pulled away. “What do you mean? Have we been here before?”

“Yeah! I mean… I don’t know.” Ib stared at her for a minute. Her expression was confused. “You kind of look like… um, w-where are you from?”

“Germany… Me and Mary are from the Goldenweek Family.”

“Goldenweek?” Ib looked a little surprised.
“Yeah, it’s a rich family.”

“…But…” Ib frowned. “My last name is Goldenweek.”

Shattering sounds ruptured the air, making them jump. “Oh, no. Those paintings must be coming to life.” April assumed.

“What do we do?”

“Stay behind me, I’ll get us through.” The girls ran out of the room and hurried through the passage. The smeary paintings made eerie moaning sounds and either reached forward or fell to crawl on the floor, looking like ghoulish zombies. They reached the room of scribbled-out Mistakes, which all broke out of their portraits and began to scramble about the room. The ones with scribbled faces were moving aimlessly, but those with faces came after the girls.

“Time to decrease your quality.” April dipped her brush in pink paint and slashed it across the Mistakes. The paintings stood confusedly at first, then resumed trying to attack the girls.

“Whaddid that do?” Ib asked, evading their swipes.

“Pink paint is supposed to decrease your confidence, but I guess these guys don’t feel much of anything. Ib, can you fight well?”

“Not really.”

“Well, get ready to learn.” April painted blue paint on Ib’s back, and the 9-year-old felt empowered. She began moving at quicker speed and punching the Mistakes, and April drew a red mark on another one so that others would attack it. She and Ib made it to the door and escaped, slamming it forcefully afterwards. “Sigh… that was-” The door opened, and the Mistakes were trying to pile out. The girls gasped and bolted down the passage, back to the room with the diamond-shaped bed. They ran through an opening in a rope fence, up a flight of stairs where they took cover in another room.

April put a stool against the door in case the Mistakes tried to follow. “Sigh…” The girls sighed with relief, and April wiped the blue paint off Ib’s clothes. “Now that we have a moment… how did you get here, again? How do you know me and Mary?”

“Ib, I don’t remember much of anything… I know that I came here a long time ago… and I got lost. I found that weird bed and took a nap… then I started having dreams about my family. They made me feel so happy, I didn’t wanna wake up. But sleeping on the bed made me feel real sick… I kept trying and trying to find a way out, but I couldn’t. I could only feel happy by having those dreams. So I kept looking for vases to heal my rose… so I could sleep more. Then all of a sudden, I got captured by a weird clothes monster in my dream. When he locked me in a cage, I heard him talking about someone named April. Then… I remembered Mary.”

“I don’t understand.”

Ib stared at her. “April… do you really not remember anything? Does Mary ever talk about this place?”

“Mary and I have been having nightmares about this place. We came here years ago, but we don’t remember any of this…”

“Aaaaaaaaaahhh! Heeeeeellllp!”
They gasped, looking at a ladder in a corner of the room. “That sounds like Aeincha and Mocha!” April exclaimed.

“Who are they?”

“They’re friends I came with. Ib, come on!” The artist climbed up the ladder first, followed by Ib.

The ladder ended at a square hatch, which April lightly pushed up. She saw Aeincha and Mocha being squeezed by black hands, and a man with lavender hair handed a green and gray rose to two Canvas Ladies. “Those must be their roses.” April whispered.

“A, what’s going on?” Ib asked, stopped on the ladder while the taller girl was blocking it.

“One at a time, ladies.” The man cackled giddily as the Canvas Ladies touched the first petal of either rose. “He loves you…”

“OW!” The tiny girls yelped when a petal was plucked.

“He loves you not.”

“OH.” Another pluck.

“HEY, leave them alone!” April climbed into the room and swung a punch across the tall man’s head. The Canvas Ladies hissed and chased her down the hall, dropping the roses in the process.

The man growled with anger as he sat up and rubbed his jaw. He saw Ib climb out of the floor and attempt to grab the roses, but she gasped when she noticed the man herself. “Garry!”

“Heheheheheheheheeee!” The man known as ‘Garry’ grinned psychotically. “Don’t be afraid, little precious. Come play with us! You’ll be fine with all of this company.”

“Please, help us!” Aeincha struggled. “Get us out of here!”

Ib noticed the two doll-size girls in the hands. “GIVE ME THOSE ROSES!” She gasped when Garry lunged at her, dodging and running the direction April went.

April turned a corner—then halted just before she ran across a hall with spider-web designs painted on the floors, walls, and ceiling. Seeing the Canvas Ladies coming, April quickly painted a red spot in a web’s hole, and she dodged as the painting women lunged at it, ending up stuck on the sticky floor. April met back with Ib in the hallway, turning back as Garry caught up. “It’s all right. You can keep those roses if you want.” The man was still giggling madly as he squeezed Aein and Mocha in his hands. “All I gotta do is squeeze the little air out of them, then they’ll make the deadest little dolls!” He tightened his grip, and as their heads seemed to swell, April and Ib saw a petal drop off their roses.

Ib passed the roses to April and ran up to the man. “Garry, stop! Why are you acting like this?! Come on, don’t you remember who I am?!”

“Nnn?” Garry frowned, still showing his gritted teeth, and stared at Ib with his only exposed eye (the left one was covered by his hair). He loosened his grip on the tinies. Ib’s pretty red eyes were pleading. She almost looked… familiar. “… Garry shook his head, grinning madly again as he kicked Ib in the face, making a petal fall off her rose. “You know, these dolls do look adorable. I wonder if they taste like candy? Munch, munch, muuuunch…” He opened his mouth and moved Aeincha closer, headfirst.
“AAAAHHH! NOOOO! PLEEEASE!” the Lilliputian cried.

“OOF!” April kicked Garry in the crotch, dropping Aein and Mocha on the floor as they got behind April’s shoes. April picked up and passed them to Ib before painting blue paint on herself. She threw furious punches across Garry’s face before he fell on his back, then April stomped his head to knock him out.

She gasped for breath and wiped the paint off. “Thank goodness you came, April.” Aeincha said. “But… who are you?” They looked up at the one holding them.

“My name is Ib.” She smiled. “Why do you dolls talk?”

“Aeincha, Mocha, wasn’t Mary carrying you?” April asked.

“She was, but she let us go to look for you.” Mocha answered. “Then we tried to go after her, and we found this secret ladder; then these big statues started chasing us!”

“We met this man down here and asked him to help us.” Aeincha explained. “But he took us to these scary hands and… Hey, did you say his name was Garry?”

Ib approached the defeated man with a sympathetic look. “We were trapped in this gallery together, and he tried to protect me… but that was before Mary…”

“I think we should get away from him.” Mocha said worriedly. “Before he wakes up. We should also try and find the others.”

“We probably should.” April agreed. “Ib, come on.” She took a few steps ahead, but Ib was still looking at the man. “Ib?”

“I… I want to find out what’s wrong with him.” Ib said. “I wanna help him.”

“He tried to hurt us, Ib!” Aeincha shook. “Let’s just go somewhere safe!”

“Err… Okay, you’re right.” Ib carried the tinies and followed after April.

Brown Area

Apis awoke in a dark, brown-colored room. In this room’s weak light, she saw Aisa laying feebly on the floor. Only one petal was on her brown rose. “Apis… are you okay?” She shook her friend lightly.

Aisa moaned, opening her eyes to a squint. “Apis… where are we?”

“Somewhere else in the gallery, I guess. Let me help you.” She lifted Aisa to her feet and put her friend’s arm around her head as she helped her walk down the passage. When they were approaching a left turn, they heard other footsteps, so Apis stopped and backed against the wall. “I wonder who that is.” Apis whispered, inching closer to peek around the corner. The footsteps grew louder until Apis saw someone walk by the left route ahead. “Mary!”

The girl gasped and looked right. “Apis?”

“Thank God.” Apis walked over to her with Aisa. “We thought we were splorped to an alternate dimension for a while. It’s good to know at least you’re here. Where did you come from?”

“Um… a door over there.” Mary pointed behind her. “Chimney saved me from a bunch of evil monsters.”
“Chimney’s here? Let’s go down and find her!”

“W-Wait!” Mary perked up nervously. “W-What’s wrong… with Aisa?”

“She got shot in the foot by a gun. Er, a painting of a gun. I wasn’t sure because my eyes were erased at the time. …The bottom line is, this gallery isn’t natural.”

Mary looked at a vase on a table in the middle of the room. “Aisa, let’s put your rose in that vase.” She took the one-petal stalk and hurried to do so. As the brown petals magically reappeared, the wound in Aisa’s foot disappeared. The Nimbi stepped away from Apis and looked at it in awe.

“It’s healed! How did you do that, Mary?”

“These vases can fix your roses!” Mary smiled. “I, um… I saw one earlier.”

“So we’re connected to these roses?” Apis questioned. “I guess we should hold onto them. Okay, let’s go help Chimney.”

“Hold on!” Mary stopped. “It could be dangerous. Besides, Chimney’s tough, and fast, she’ll catch up.”

“She knows the layout of this place as much as we do.” Aisa noted. “We have to go get her so we can find a way out together.”

“Yeah… you’re right…” Worry still displayed on her face as Mary led them to the aforementioned door. She turned the knob and tried to pull, but it wouldn’t budge. “Huh? It’s locked.”

“Locked?” Aisa and Apis walked over. “But didn’t you come through here?”

“Darn it. Well, maybe there’s a key somewhere.” Apis said. “Let’s split up and look around.”

Violet Area

“Muuuu… I’m hungry.” Chimney moaned as she wandered into a library. “I’m so hungry, I could eat Apis’s crappy cooking. Maybe one of these books has a map to the building’s lunchroom.”

Chimney picked out a book. “‘Art Styles of the 17th Century’? Nope.” She threw it behind her. “‘Legend of the Planet of Yarn’? Lame.” Threw that one back. “‘Mary’s Diary’—whah?” She found a book that was written in crayon. A smiling, peach-colored face with yellow hair and blue eyes was drawn. She opened the book—“AAAAHH, it’s written in German!” Chimney wept. “Blaaaah, if only there was a way-…”

She noticed a book titled English-German Dictionary. “…That’s very helpful.” Chimney took the book and began the slow, tedious process of deciphering.

Gray Area

“This looks like a good room to rest.” April said as they entered a room with a white ancient couch and some stools. “We’ll probably be doing a lot more running, so we should give our legs a break.” She sat on the couch, Aein and Mocha on her lap, while Ib took a stool.

“This is a lot more excitement than I bargained for.” Aein said, lying down. “April, did you try calling the others?”
“My wristwatch doesn’t work. I’m not even sure if the others are down here.”

“Let’s hope they can take care of their selves.” Mocha replied.

“Ib, now that we have a moment, maybe now you can finally tell us.” April stated. “How do you know Mary; or me, for that matter?”

Ib stared at her red rose and twirled it in her hand. “You look just like the doll that Mary had.”

“Doll?”

“Me and Garry met Mary here after we got stuck in the gallery. She was swinging a little doll around, saying it was her sister. Then we found out Mary was…”

Violet Area

“Hold on, wait a minute!” Chimney proclaimed after deciphering and writing down the first few pages of words. “Did I line these up right? This better not be some funky language thing! Or crappy crayon writing. Let’s see… ‘Dear Diary, today I created a new doll. Her name is April, and she’s my big sister! I’m Mary, she’s April, and we’re sisters, and we love each other very much. We love each other so much, that we…” Chimney looked at the small, sloppy crayon drawings at the bottom. “Mary-chan and… APRIL-chan!!”

Guertena Gallery; unknown date (Play Mary’s Theme from Ib.)

Mary had been in her room for the past hour with a smile on her face. She had been working diligently on this doll… her absolute favoritest one of all. It had taken ages to find the right material… but now she was done. “Ha ha!”

Mary picked the doll up and ran all across the halls. She arrived at her destined room within the maze and kicked it open. “Look, everybody! Meet the newest friend in our group! Her name is April, and she’s my BIIIG sister!”

She held the tiny doll by its hands in either thumb and index finger, letting April dangle beside her skirt. All of the dolls faced her; they were stationed in that position before this. April had peach-colored, sewn skin, wore a cloud-pattern dress cut from some fabric, and part of a maroon-colored cup, cut off and taped on her like a skirt. Her thin, stick legs ended at big cottonball feet, blush marks were painted on her face, and dark-red string was intricately sewn around her head, tied in two pigtails.

Mary carried April in to join the other dolls. Some small, some medium, but all bore dark-blue skin, frizzy black hair, yellow or red eyes, and single dresses of varying color. Mary sat cross-legged with April on her lap. “April would like to join us for tea! Jen, would you bring us some?”

One of the small dolls in a pink dress stood. Jen waddled as she walked to a corner and brought a teacup and pot. There was no tea, but the doll made the gesture of pouring, anyway. She brought another cup, and Mary lightly sipped one. “Mmmmm! Delicious! April, you should try it!” She put the other cup in April’s lap; it was large enough for April’s arms to reach to its sides. The doll was unmoving. “…Okay! I’ll help you!” She tipped the cup to April’s mouth. “Delicious, I know! Now…” Mary stood, “who wants to play a game? April?”

She looked at the doll in her hands. April faced up. The black googly eyes were toneless. “…Hide-and-Seek sounds like fun! Don’t run away from me, now!”

She threw April to a random corner, then closed her eyes. She counted to a hundred. “Ready or not, here I come!” She searched every corner of the room, behind every sitting doll. She frowned, for she couldn’t find April. “Hmmm… where did she go. Oh?” She saw a very tiny arm-stub between two dolls against a wall. She crawled over and reached for it, grabbing April. “THERE you are, Sister! You’re really good at this!”

The little doll stared at her blankly. …Mary’s features shrunk to a quizzical look. “You wanna play Tag?” She frowned sadly, “But you’re so much faster than me, Big Sister. My legs get too tired.” The doll said nothing. Mary stared at her for a few seconds. “…Give me a headstart? Well, okay.” She smiled.

“Huff, huff, huff, huff!” Mary ran all around the gallery halls, excitement and desperation on her features. She ran as fast as possible, for her big sister would catch up before she knew it. “Ha ha ha!” She made a big smile, overfilling with confidence, she had gotten so far ahead, she might actually win this! “Good luck, Sister April!”

She waited. For hours… and hours… her big sister never found her. Mary was all alone in the dark halls. She began to feel sadness… regret… had she run so far that her sister gave up looking? Mary tried to retrace her steps, running all around the halls until she could get back to the Doll Room. “APRIL!” She filled with joy after finding her sister lain on the floor inside the room. She rushed over, picked her up, and hugged April to her chest. “April, I’m so sorry for running too far! I don’t care if you’re faster than me, I don’t want anymore headstarts! I just don’t wanna be away from you, Big Sister! Don’t ever leave me alone!” Mary sunk to her knees, letting her tears of joy flow. Her happiness was powerful, being reunited with her sister.

…”Mary looked at all of the dolls, tears streaming from her wide blue eyes, past the corners of her smile. All of them stared blank… their eyes, their smiles… all as she had sewn them to be. Mary trembled, still grinning madly. More tears fell. They were full of despair, not happiness. She hugged April tighter to her chest. Her head faced the floor, shadowing her eyes in darkness. Only the tears gave any reference to her eyes. She sniffled, clenching her teeth. “Don’t leave me alone… Daddy… Please don’t leave me alone…”

Mary cried. Her sobs echoed across the vacant halls of paintings. No soul was there to hear her. No soul was there to hold her… (End song.)

Dear Diary: The owners of the gallery moved my painting to the basement. They want to make room for more stuff. They said I wasn’t interesting, anymore.

Dear Diary: A man named Stanford visited my basement. I helped him find a secret room. He thanked me and wrote about me in his journal. …I wish I got to talk to him.

Dear Diary: I like the visitors coming in today, but I wanna leave this place and go outside. But the only way I can leave is to switch places with someone from outside. Won’t somebody come soon? Won’t somebody come soon…

Mary was in her room. Yellow rose petals littered her floor, along with stems. She was sitting on her knees and picking one. “He loves me… he loves me not… He loves me… he loves me not… He loves me…” There was one petal left. …She picked it. “He loves me not.”

Her eyes had been open for hours. They twitched. She was going mad with desire. She picked her palette knife off the floor and stood over a mannequin head. She held the knife up, wanting desperately to stab it through. Her arm trembled… she held herself back… but she wanted to… no, she couldn’t. She had to try again. Mary grabbed another yellow rose from her canvas, sitting on her knees to pluck it.
“He loves me… he loves me NOT… He LOVES me… he loves me NOT… He LOVES me… he loves me NOOOT!” The last petal was torn. She panted for breath, growing more angry. …She looked at the stem, noticing a little leaf hanging from it. …She plucked it off. “He LOVES ME!! I KNEW IT! HA HA HA HA HAAAA!” She hugged the stem and joyfully rolled around the petal-covered floor. “Now I can—!” She stared at the barren stem. A green stick made of fabric. The same fabric as the yellow petals around her. There was no real life to them. No life…

An elderly man in a shiny white tux and white pants was sitting on a stool, painting a canvas in the middle of a vast meadow. The sun was bright overhead. It highlighted his lavender-colored hair. “Oh, Mary… my Mary.” The image he was painting was of a smiling blonde girl with pretty blue eyes, and a developing green dress. “Soon, you will be complete. You will be… born. Mary… I poured my heart and soul into so many creations… but you are the only one; cough!” He grabbed his chest and paused painting. “Hm…” The artist resumed. “I may not be long for this world… but I will not slow down. You will be my greatest creation. You will have a heart, a soul. I want you to live for a very long time.

“If the Creator of an Imaginary Friend dies, the Friend fades away. This is because they have no mind or heart to be connected to any longer. I will not let that happen, Mary. I will see to it that the world knows you. I will let everyone come to look at you. Your smile and soul alone will make everybody love you, even if you’re a painting. They will want to believe you are real… then, it will happen. You will live for a very long time, as long as people remember and love you. Because you are more than just imaginary, Mary. You are… my precious daughter. I love you.”

Mary heard him. In the deep subconscious of his mind, Mary floated. Peacefully. Very slowly, she watched her own body assemble. She was missing a left arm, her lower body swayed like a legless ghost. But little by little, her body was forming. She wept and smiled at the distant man’s face. Mary reached her arm forward. “Father… I love you, too. Please make me soon. I want to stand by you. I want to feel what you feel. Father… Father…”

Mary stared at the stem still. Her eyes were dropping tears again. She was still alone… in this Fabricated World. She was fabricated… her mind… her heart… her soul… She wasn’t real… she would never be real…

Mary approached the giant mural that hung on the main gallery’s wall. The portal that connected this world with the real world. Mary reached up and put a hand on the protective glass. The real world… plainly within her sight. If she stepped beyond these boundaries… she would perish. An Imaginary being belonged in no world that saw her as nothing else. All she was was a painting. A forgotten painting. No one should know her or care.

Mary wandered the gallery’s dark halls. Every day of her life, she looked at other paintings of her dad’s creation. The Beach Isolation, which depicted a tan-colored, dusty shore next to water. This was called a “beach,” as she read in a book. It was really warm there and smelled nice. The “sun” always shone there, a giant ball of fire in the sky. She’s seen pictures of it, and it looked pretty. She drew the sun in her room using orange crayon.

Her father painted a picture of something called a “moon.” Or a crescent moon, to be precise. It was like the night’s sun, it made everything dark, but there were tiny dots in the sky. Mary thought these looked like candy, and she wanted to taste them. She drew the moon in her room. Her father made a small painting of “large ice.” Ice was apparently a really cold rock that turns into water when it’s warm. Must be magic!

Mary really wanted to get out there and see it all. She wanted to leave and live in the real world, where all these magical things happened. Food that grows on trees, “animals” that interact with people, they’re both large and small, like the talking ants in the gallery. Mary filled her room with colorful crayon drawings of all these things, all these things that she wanted to see. Every once in a while, a misguided human wanders into this world, lost, scared, lonely. Mary had a chance to take their place and escape. But they had always found a way out before she could find them. The possessions they left behind, however, she kept to herself. Souvenirs from the real world. In that world, there was probably millions of these.

Mary had only her fellow paintings to socialize with. But there was one problem: her dad was never as passionate about them. Their “souls” were undeveloped. The headless statues that patrol the corridors could only go “HAH!” The Canvas Ladies were inspired from the gold-digging women who tried to court him for his inheritance, so their personalities were limited. They were the most Mary interacted with, though, besides her hand-made dolls. They were her older sisters, whom she lent her roses to to play “Loves Me, Loves Me Not.” The more Mary remained here, with them, the more she felt like she didn’t belong. She had a fully developed, human body, she could think and talk. So why wasn’t she allowed to leave? She may have been Imaginary, but she’s different, she wasn’t a monster like the others. Was she? …No, of course not. All Mary wants is to have friends, a family, be loved. She wanted to be where she truly belonged. She wanted to be real.

In the upper floors

She didn’t know how she ended up here. She didn’t know where she was. Ib’s parents brought her to an art gallery to see a collection of works by an artist named Guertena. Her biggest mistake was asking her parents to let her explore alone. For one thing, she didn’t know most of the words. She was only 9 years old. The pictures looked nice, that’s all she could say, but the grown-ups were talking about them in ways Ib didn’t understand. Is it so much trouble to say a picture looks pretty and move on?

But that much was before everyone in the gallery disappeared. The front door was locked, the lights dimmed. She thought she heard the Coughing Man cough, the cat painting meow, the apple fall out of its frame. Then, Ib walked into a floor painting of a big fish. As she descended through the water, gazing at the fish that swam by, she had no understanding of anything else. She had fallen into a world unlike her own. And she didn’t like it.

“Hello?” she called through the vacant hallways. “Mommy? Daddy? Anybody?”

No one answered. She wandered the halls endlessly. She picked up a red rose from a vase. It was very pretty and matched her eyes. Yet, she also felt an odd connection with it. Before long, she understood. “AAAAH!” Black claws reached at her from the edges in one passage, and when they scratched her, petals fell off her rose. She bolted through, taking rest in a room with headless statues. “AAAAH!” The statues chased her, Ib kept running. She hid in a room with a lot of curtains with buttons beneath them. When she curiously pressed one, she saw a sinister painting: it depicted herself, being grabbed and strangled by the claws.

Ib ran further, her pants sounding down the halls. “MOMMY! DADDY! Anybody! WHERE ARE YOU?”

Her young legs were wearing thin, so she stopped, gasping for breath. She wanted to sit down, but in fear of more monsters coming for her, she stayed on her feet. She had been wandering the gallery for an hour. She had never gone so long without sitting. And she was very scared. But she never showed it too much. Her parents taught her never to show fear; it wasn’t proper for a lady. To keep herself from being afraid, she thought about bunnies. She had dozens of them in her room at home. She pictured herself going back home to be with her stuffed bunnies.

When Ib wandered into a red hallway, she found someone passed out on the floor. A man with lavender hair and a dark-blue, ragged jacket. He looked sick, moaning, and made little response when Ib shook him. He was clutching a key, so the girl decided to take it. She used this key to open a locked door into a small room. The Lady in Blue, a living Canvas Lady in a blue dress, connected to a frame, was plucking petals off a blue rose, playing “Loves Me, Loves Me Not.” The lady saw Ib, and “HAH!” began chasing her. Ib gasped, evasively dodging the painting, grabbing the one-petal rose off the floor, and escaped.

There was a bright blue vase with water inside. When Ib put the blue rose inside, it healed like magic. She decided to do this on her own rose. She no longer felt tired, had the strength to run another hour. But first, Ib brought this blue rose to the tired man. “Mmmm…nnnn…” He helped himself to stand. After regaining his senses, he looked at Ib. “GYAAAH!” He fell on his rear, backing away in fright. “Whaddyou want now, there’s nothing left from me to take!”

Ib gasped. “Uh-I…”

Garry noticed the blue rose in her hand. “My… Wait a moment. Could you be… someone else from the gallery?”

“Um… I came with my parents.” Ib said shyly.

“…” The man smiled. “Thank goodness. Someone here besides me.”

The man introduced himself as Garry. A 20-year-old, he came to the gallery by himself, on a casual walk through town. Then all of a sudden, he ended up in this cursed place. Much like Ib, he had no idea how things came to this point. “Even these roses.” he said. “Wounds appear on me when the petals drop. At any rate… it’s great to know I’m not alone.” He smiled at the girl. “You came pretty far for someone your age. Are you in a club called ‘KND’?”

“No… What’s that?”

“I’m not sure.” Garry looked away. “I have a little cousin that says he’s in it, and he says a lot of other kids are, too. Either way… I can’t leave a young girl to wander this place by herself. Let’s find a way out of here.” Garry took Ib’s hand and led her along. “I’ll protect you from any-”

A face painting with a wiggling tongue spat on the floor. “GYAAAAH!” Garry fell backwards. Ib stared at him blankly. Garry blushed, getting up again. “I, um… was a bit startled, that’s all. Let’s keep going; and watch out for such bizarre things as that.”

With Garry in her company, Ib didn’t feel afraid anymore. The older man helped her solve many of the gallery’s puzzles, and could read the words Ib didn’t understand. She found it funny how Garry got freaked out all the time by the startling sights, such as a blue face that wanted to eat their roses, or Canvas Ladies that burst out every now and then. Ib was afraid too, of course, but she proved better at staying levelheaded than the grown man.

“I wish the lighting in here wasn’t so cheap.” Garry said when the lights flickered; a mannequin head appeared a few yards behind them. “It’s starting to hurt my eyes.” They flickered again; the mannequin appeared closer. “Ib, if you want, you can close your eyes and I’ll hold your-EYAAAAAH!” The head appeared right in front of them. “Son of a-!” He swung his foot and smashed the delicate head against the wall, breaking it in pieces. “…Phew. Just a mannequin.” Ib rolled her eyes. The two kept progressing down the passage. Where the mannequin smashed, gray writing appeared. Hanged Garry.

Ib and Garry entered a new room with a white, ancient couch; they recognized it as the Reserved Seat from the main gallery. On the opposite wall, Ib saw a painting that nearly made her faint.
“What’s wrong, Ib?” Garry asked.

The painting labeled Couple depicted a familiar man, with brown hair and dark-blue fancy clothing, and a red-eyed woman with red clothing. “Th-They’re… my mom and dad.”

“What?” Garry looked more closely at them. “They do look like you, Ib… But why would such a painting be…”

He felt Ib’s little hands clutch his arm. “Garry… do you think they’re down here?”

Garry smiled assuringly. “I’m sure they’re fine, Ib. We’ll look for them and get out of here.”

“Do you think so?”

Garry knelt down to her eye level. “I promise that one way or another, I’ll get us out of here. … You look a little tired, Ib. Do you want to lie down for a nap?”

“But…But what if something comes get us?”

“Then I’ll pick you up and carry you someplace else. You just lie down and rest, Ib. I’ll protect you.”

“Um… okay… Can I lay on that couch?” She pointed at the ancient sofa.

“Er, that probably isn’t a good idea; I don’t trust anything in this place. Just… lie on the floor. You can use my coat as a blanket.”

Ib went over beside a corner and lay on the floor like Garry said. The man took off his ragged-edged coat and put it over her. “Garry?…”

“Yes, Ib?”

“Why do you talk like a lady?” She smiled with half-closed eyes.

Garry blushed. “My… Do I? Why, I guess I… haven’t noticed…” He scratched his head sheepishly.

“I think it’s silly.”

“W-Well…” His face remained red. “Thank you, I guess…”

“Good night, Garry…”

“Good night, Ib.” He watched the adorable child close her red eyes and go to sleep. After everything she’s been through today, her soul was so innocent. He questioned why a child like her deserved to be in this type of mess. She deserved to live her childhood more freely, more imaginatively, but this gallery was frightening. He wanted to find a way out soon, for her sake. On his word as a TND operative.

Violet Area

“Hmmm hm hm hm hmmmmmmm.” Mary hummed merrily, swinging April by her little arm as she strolled about the purple passage. “April, what do you think we should do today?”

The doll’s expressionless face lay still as Mary swung her. “Guess the painting without reading the title? Okay, that sounds fun! It would be great for our brains!”
They came to a painting depicting a man and a woman arguing—Mary shut her eyes after briefly looking at it. “I believe this was called… Fighting Friends. Am I close, April?” No response. …

Mary opened her eyes and read the nameplate. The Force of Quarrel. “Darn.” Mary frowned. “But isn’t it two friends fighting? Why don’t they make it an easy title and not a hard one? My name is Mary. That’s easy to remember, isn’t it, April?”

A fast patting rang in Mary’s ears. She looked to a door on her left. The footsteps were growing closer. But who besides her could be making footsteps? The headless statues? When Mary curiously approached the door, it swung open, and a red-eyed girl flew through. “AAAH!”

Ib rammed Mary and knocked her down. The brown-haired gasped at what she did. “Ib!” Garry came in behind her.

“Owww…” Mary held her head.

“Oh, my… I’m terribly sorry.” Garry held a hand down to the strange girl. “We didn’t look where we were going.”

Mary looked up at him curiously. Where had this weird man and this girl come from? Were they… like her? “It’s okay.” Mary took his hand and got up.

“But could you perhaps be someone from the gallery, too? Are you in the same predicament as we are?”

Mary was silent for a minute. They were from the real world, of course. …But they thought she was from their world, too. They thought Mary was real. …Perhaps she had a chance. “I… I was looking to see if there was anyone else, too. …I wanted to get out, so I…”

“Ahh, perfect! Well, I’m Garry, and this young lady is Ib. We’re trapped in the gallery as well. Why don’t you join us and we’ll find a way out?”

“Sure! I’d love to!” Mary smiled happily. She turned to Ib, “It’s nice to meet you, Ib!”

“Nice to meet you, too.” She returned the smile. Ib looked down and noticed the doll behind Mary. “What’s that doll?”

“Oh!” Mary bent down and picked it up. “This is my big sister, April! April, say ‘hi’ to Ib and Garry!” The doll said nothing.

Ib and Garry stared at the doll. “…Hello, April!” Ib said happily.

“Charmed.” Garry greeted, playing along. “So, Mary, seeing as Ib and I both have roses, do you have one as well?”

“Oh!” Mary searched her dress pocket frantically. “Yeah, a yellow rose!” Thankfully, she still had one.

“Ah, I see. Ib and I have them, too. Hold onto those, okay? And don’t give them to anyone. And-”

“Woooow! Ib’s rose is reeeed!” Mary sang. “My rose is yelloooow. I like yellow, but I also like pink, and blue! April likes pink, too!”

“Learn to listen, would you?” Garry stated with a sweatdrop. “I’m serious, we need to be attentive in this-”
“Ib, do you like dolls?” Mary asked perkily.

“Yeah, a little bit. I mostly like rabbits.”

“I like rabbits, too!” Mary jumped. “When we get out, do you wanna go pet rabbits?”

“Sounds great, Mary! Maybe I can ask my parents to let you come over. …Would your parents let me come to your house?”

Mary frowned, glancing down. She smiled and looked up, “Sure they would!”

“Okay, girls, let’s keep pressing onward.” Garry told them.

The group of three wandered the violet corridors in silence for several minutes. Ib and Mary were a few feet behind Garry as the latter whispered to her friend of the same age, “Psst.” Ib moved closer to her at the gesture. “Ib, I was wondering… is Garry your dad?”

“No.”

“Okay, so you’re Dad is somebody else. …Is your mom nice, Ib?”

“Not when she’s mad.” Ib giggled.

“Your mom gets mad at you, Ib? But you’re so nice!” Mary beamed.

“Well, she does.” Ib blushed. “Are your parents nice, Mary?”

“Y-…Yes, my parents are… nice. …Hey, Ib, if only two of us could get out of here, who would you take with you?”

“Why would you ask that, Mary?”

“It’s just a ‘what if.’ I mean, who do you like better, me or Garry?”

“Mary, I like both of you. I could never choose between you. In fact, I…” Ib turned away thoughtfully, “I might stay here if you two could…”

Mary frowned. “But, Ib… then we couldn’t play together. …Well, we’ll get out of here, you’ll see!”

Rustle. Rustle. Rustle. The three stopped and looked around at this noise. “What is that?” Garry asked.

“Ib, look!” Mary pointed at a blank brown canvas. “Something’s coming from that painting!”

“Watch out!” A spiky rose appeared on the painting, and the trio jumped away when green spiky thorns popped out of the ground, connecting from one wall to the other. Ib and Mary were on the opposite side from Garry.

“GARRY!” Ib yelled, running to the thorns. “Are you okay?”

“I’m fine. Ib, don’t get too close to those!” the man cautioned.

“What are these things?”

“I don’t know, but I’m going to burn them with my lighter.” Garry pulled said device out and held the lit candle to the thorns—Mary gasped at the fire. “Wait a minute… these vines are made of stone.”

Mary glanced at a door nearby. “Ib, why don’t we go this way, and Garry can keep going that way? Maybe we can find a place to meet up.”

“You think so? I’d rather not split up…”

“I don’t want to split up either, but…” Garry examined the vines. “These thorns are too sharp to climb and too hard to break. Sigh… alright, we’ll go with Mary’s idea. Just promise you girls will stay safe.”

“We will! Let’s go, Ib!” Mary grabbed her friend’s hand and skipped into the door.

Ib and Mary found a brown-colored storage room with piles of boxes. The door was locked, so they searched the boxes for a key. “Look, Ib! I found a palette knife!” Mary perked, pulling said item from a box. “Maybe this can cut those vines?”

“Could it?”

“Not really. Palette knives don’t cut! I was only joking, Ib.” Ib blushed at this. “But I think I’ll hold onto this. You know, just in case.”

“Right… Hey, I found the key!” Ib beamed. The girls used it to open the door, continuing through the next hall. The lights were flickering in this passage, and they heard a bouncing sound. When they arrived at a staircase, they stopped and stared as a red ball was bouncing down. It splat against the wall. The girls saw that a Clown painting was up the staircase, missing its nose.

“Ib, where did you say you met Garry, again?” Mary asked.

“Ib…” Mary had a worried expression. “Do you think Garry could be… a painting?”

“A painting?” Ib looked at her in surprise.

“Yeah. What if Garry’s a painting that’s trying to lead us in a trap? Maybe he meant for those thorns to get us.”

“But Garry’s been so nice to me. And he’s really afraid of everything here. I know you haven’t known him as long, but you must’ve seen the other things here, Mary. All these paintings are monsters. Those Canvas Ladies are the worst, always trying to get our roses. I just wanna leave and never come back ag-”

“A-HEM.” Mary coughed loudly, so Ib silenced. The blonde girl looked a tad aggravated at something, but Ib didn’t question it. “I’m just saying that Garry’s way too suspicious. He’s too different from us, Ib. You know you can’t always trust what grown-ups say. Maybe we should just find a way out ourselves. Forget about Garry.”

Ib frowned and looked away. She really didn’t want to think this was true. Mary was probably just nervous. Ib felt the same when she fell in here. “We need to find Garry.” Ib stated. “I think he’s a person just like we are. If you really aren’t sure, we’ll just ask him.”

Mary’s eyes narrowed. She looked away. “Fine.”
April was still swinging from Mary’s clutched hand around her own. She could feel the frustration in her sister’s voice. Garry had to be stopped, for Mary’s sake. She mentally sent the note to all her fellow dolls.

Garry began walking through an empty hallway with lots of turns. The more he wandered throughout this dungeon, the more he wondered how any of this was built down here, how far it extends. Of course, his chance to ask that was probably long irrelevant. He hoped that this path would take him back to Ib and Mary at some point. He passed numerous blue dolls on his way down… actually, it felt like that same blue doll was teleporting ahead of him. Garry simply speed-walked, wanting to bypass this area already.

Eventually, he found a library that he decided to rest in. The sign read, No checking out books. Garry decided to skim a few of the titles; maybe one of them had a hint to get out of this place. He opened a book called Theories on this World. “‘Via a trading of existences, the imaginary can be made reality.’ What does that mean?”

There were books such as Conquer the Unknown and Know No Fear, The God of Creation, and Terror. The latter book read, Being alone is fearful. A group of two can have relief. A group of three… The rest of it was torn off. “Ugh!” He shook his head. “I’ve gotta quit wasting time with these! I need to find Ib and Mary before…” Garry glanced at another book, which was located close to a painting of an ear. Collected Works of Guertena. “Hmm… It would be nice if I had more information on the paintings. Weaknesses or something…”

Garry decided to skim the book’s pages. “‘Worry: A painting depicting half of a white head with an eye. The head hides partway behind the canvas as it seems to stare at the viewers, giving them a sense of fear that they are being watched.’” He flipped several pages back. “‘Process of Severing: A series of paintings that depict an axe rising to chop a log. As the point of view is taken from the perspective of the cut, most people feel the need to jump away before it chops.’ Sigh, don’t you make anything that doesn’t instill fear in the most literal way possible?” Garry aimlessly flipped page after page.

He stopped at one with no known date. “‘Mary: The last work of Guertena’s life. While the girl appears almost lifelike, naturally, she is not based on a real person.’ Wait a second.” There was a picture of a smiling blonde girl with blue eyes, a green dress, surrounded by yellow roses. “Is that… our Mary?” The ear painting was jiggling. “If she’s not real… could that mean…”

Ib and Mary were wandering the Brown Area in search for a way down to Garry. They passed a painting of lips against a blue background; Mary saw the Tattletale was whispering. Only she could hear its voice. “I know Mary’s seecreeet…”

Mary gasped. She looked down at April in her hands. Ib turned back and noticed she had stopped walking. “Mary?” She approached her. “Are you okay?”

“Okay? Yeah, I’m Mary.” She smiled innocently. “I’m Maaaaary, I’m Maaaaary, oh HO hohohohoho!” She grinned menacingly. “I don’t like him. I don’t like him ONE bit! Eeeheeheeheeheeheehee!” She excitedly ran down the hall ahead of Ib, letting April blow behind her.

Ib hurried after her friend. Mary swung open a door to another room, and when Ib ran after… Mary was stabbing a mannequin head with her palette knife. “In my WAY, in my WAY, in my WAY, in my WAY…”

“Mary… what are you doing?”
“This THING is in the way, if it weren’t, we could go ON, we could get OUT of here, but this thing’s in the WAY, if it weren’t, if it WEREN’T!…”

“Uhhh…” Ib nervously backed out of the room. She walked away- “Ib.”

She flinched. Mary caught up behind her. “…Please don’t leave me, Ib.”

“…” Ib turned to face her. “What were you doing, Mary?”

“Oh… just relieving some stress.” She smiled. “Hey, Ib, do you know what ‘snow’ is? I heard it’s this sugary stuff that falls from the sky. And some people make it into cream and eat it!”

“Y-Yeah, I like to make snowmen sometimes.”

“Oooo, you can make men out of snow?!”

“Yeah, haven’t you ever made one?”

“…Sure I have!”

“…” Ib was really confused. “Mary, we have to find Garry. He’s probably worried.” She walked ahead, and Mary followed her with a scowling face.

After Garry walked out of the library, he saw a blue doll tiptoe around a right corner. It looked back, and when it noticed him, it made a squeaking sound before dashing in a room. Garry walked around the corner and found the door that closed. He peeped inside—the room was filled with zombie-like dolls, staring at him with wide yellow and red eyes. “Uh… wrong room.” He closed the door—a blue doll jumped in the gap and kept it open. “AAAHH!” The dolls came out and all ganged up on him, Garry forcefully threw them off or stomped on them, squishing red liquid out every time. Garry bolted around the turns and found a flight of stairs—Canvas Ladies and headless statues on the sides came to life, and he barely avoided their grabs.

Ib and Mary found a staircase and were walking down. They heard screaming echo from below, along with fast footsteps. “Ib, maybe we shouldn’t go this way.”

“IB! MARY!” The girls gasped. Garry was scrambling to get up the stairs, but Canvas Women and statues were grabbing him from all over, and dolls jumping on him. “IIIIB!”

“Ib, no!” Mary cried when her friend ran down the stairs.

“Get your hands off of Garry, you creeps!” Ib swung kicks at the Canvas Ladies’ faces and pushed the dolls off.

“Augh!” Garry’s arms were binded by the headless statues. “Ib, the lighter! Get the lighter out of my pocket!”

Ib fished around his right jacket pocket and grabbed said device. She raised it and flicked it on. “AAAAAAHHH!” The Canvas Women bore horrified expressions, and they, the statues, and dolls were moving away. Now free, Garry took the lighter back and held it to them. “Get away or I’ll burn every single one of you!” The monsters complied and scrambled down the stairs.

“Sigh… That was scary, Garry.” Ib sighed.

“At least we know their weakness.” Garry looked at his lighter. “I’ll have to save the oil on this thing, in case we… My rose!”
Garry had dropped his rose, and April was on the floor and trying to pluck it. “MARY!” Garry swiped the flower back and kicked April forcefully, sending her up the stairs. He growled furiously at Mary. “You lying little monster!”

“Garry, what are you talking about?” Ib asked.

“Ib, stay away from her!” Garry pulled Ib behind him. “Mary’s not human, I saw her in a book! She’s one of Guertena’s paintings!”

“Huh? Mary, is this true?”

“No it’s not!” Mary spoke angrily. “Ib, HE’S the painting person! Don’t listen to him!”

“Don’t try to trick her, Mary! Your doll was just trying to pick my rose!”

“I dropped her and you kicked her like a meanie! Ib, you don’t really believe him, do you?”

“Mary, let me see your rose.”

“What?”

“Show me your rose!”

“Why, so you can TAKE IT?”

“Mary, GIVE IT to me!” Garry ran up and locked arms with the girl, trying to reach in her pockets.

“NO! IT’S MY ROSE, MY ROSE!”

“AAAH!” Garry pushed the girl on her back and grabbed the yellow rose. He studied and felt its petals. “…It’s paper. Look, Ib, Mary’s rose is a fake.” Ib bore a terrified look from the fight that just transpired. “We have to get away-”

“GARRY, WATCH OUT!”

“AHHH!” Mary tried to stab him with the palette knife, but Ib jumped in the way and grabbed her arm.

“IB, LET GO! If he’d’ve just been good and stayed down there, we could’ve…”

Garry socked Mary in the eye and knocked her out. Ib hugged the taller man worriedly. “Sigh… It’s alright, Ib.” He patted her back comfortingly. “At least you weren’t hurt. Come on, let’s get away before she comes to.” He held Ib’s hand as they ran up the stairs.

April recovered and approached her fallen creator. Mary looked up at her “big sister.” Her left eye was darkened. “…April?” She was silent for a second. “Do you wanna see the outside world, too?” April nodded. “I do, too. Do you think… we could belong out there?” Mary smiled. “Do you think we can make lots and lots of friends?” April nodded. “Me, too. …” Mary helped herself up, keeping her head down. “Then I guess… I’ll have to play a little dirty…” She shook her arms and caused the entire gallery to tremble.

Garry and Ib were climbing down a new flight of pink stairs, leading to darkness. “You know, Ib, as far as we’ve managed to come, aren’t we heading down? I mean, most of these stairs head down. So…” Garry glanced down at the girl clutching his arm. She looked worried. Garry smiled. “Well, nothing in this gallery makes sense. Maybe there is an exit.”
They stopped when the building began shaking. “What? Is this an earthquake?”

The walls fell away, and the two found their selves surrounded by stars in outer space. “….! Ib, the stairs!” Garry grabbed her hand and rushed up the stairs when they began to shift vertically.

“Garry, we aren’t gonna make it!”

“İb, hold on!” Garry wrapped arms around her tight as they plummeted down the abyss. Their eyes remain shut during the descent, blinding their selves from inevitable demise.

Blue dolls, mannequin heads, and headless statues were perched everywhere in this strange room. Large crayon drawings covered the floors and walls. Ib and Garry exchanged glances as they recovered, wondering where they were. “Hello, Ib. Hello, Garry.” Mary was standing a few feet away, smiling. Her palette knife was clutched in her hand. “Welcome to my Toy Box. All my friends love to play here. Would you like to play? I know lots of fun games.”

Garry stood in front of Ib. “Mary, just let us out. We already figured out what you are, so we’re not gonna fall for your tricks.”

“I’m sorry, Garry.” Mary looked down sadly. “I just wanted someone else to play with. I won’t be mean to you, anymore. Won’t you please play with m-”

“No, Mary. You can’t be trusted and you can’t come with us. You’re a painting, and a monster like the rest of them! You can’t-”

“NO!!” Mary shook the room. Tears fell from her madness-filled eyes. “I HATE IT HERE! I’m sick of living here! You don’t know what it’s LIKE for me here! You don’t know how it feels to be all alone, with NO ONE!”

“What are you talking about, Mary?” Ib asked. “There are a bunch of paintings here.”

“The other paintings are MONSTERS! No matter how much I try to make friends with them, I’m just too different! I’m not like them… I don’t belong here…” Mary began sniffing. She fell to her knees. “Fine… I tried to hurt you… No matter what I say, I’m still a painting… but let me ask you something.” Mary looked up at them. “If I’m not real… are my tears not real? Is my voice not real? Is nothing I’m saying to you real? Tell me the truth… IS MY HEART NOT REAL?!”

“But Mary, if you really wanna leave, why don’t you?” Ib asked. “Isn’t there an exit in this place?”

“I’m not allowed to leave! I’m imaginary, and Guertena died ages ago! The only way I can live in the real world is if someone from the real world stays here. I need to trade places with someone, and I was gonna do it with Garry so I can be with Ib!”

“Too bad, Mary. I’m not going to be your sacrifice.” Garry stated. “I’m sorry it has to be this way, I really am, but me and Ib have lives in the real world, we’re not going to give them up so…”

“So what?” Mary sniffled. “So I don’t get to live? I don’t get to know what it’s like to live? To be loved and grow up like…like a real person?”

“Mary, please.” Ib stepped around Garry and approached her slowly. “You may not get to come with us, but you’re still our friend, and we love you. You’re as real to us as anyone.”

Mary let a few more tears fall. “Am I really… Ib?”

Ib smiled and walked closer. She knelt beside the painting girl and hugged her. “Of course you are,
Mary. And after we leave, we’ll tell everyone about you. We can bring all our friends here to visit you, and we’ll find a way for you to come outside with us. You’ll never have to feel alone again, Mary. Right, Garry?"

The 20-year-old had mixed feelings, clearly displayed upon his features. He was worried that Mary would stab Ib during this chance… but she made no moves. Mary was simply crying over her shoulder. Garry sighed and walked over to hug Mary as well. “I guess so.”

Mary sparkled at the chance. She grabbed the rose from Garry’s pocket and jumped away.

“MARY!”

“Sorry, Ib, I’m not gonna stay here, so sacrificing one of you is the only way! I don’t want it to be you, so Garry’s it.” She plucked the first two petals and ran toward some stairs.

“Ah!” Garry winced. “MARY, COME BACK!” He and Ib dashed after her, evading the dolls and mannequins that tried to catch them.

Garry’s speed was faltering as Mary continued plucking petals, but he tried to stay strong and chase her. Mary ran up another set of stairs- “Waaah!” she tripped and threw the rose forward. When she crawled to try and grab it, Garry jumped on and began wrestling with her. “Augh, let me go, Garry!” She grabbed her palette knife.

“No!” Garry grabbed her arms and tried to push them away. Ib made it up the stairs to watch the conflict. When she looked ahead, she noticed an empty portrait on the other side of the room, except for yellow roses. “Mary, is that your picture?”

“GET AWAY FROM THAT!” Mary shouted, still wrestling Garry.

“IB, HERE!” Garry tossed the lighter for her to catch. “BURN IT, NOW!”

“No!” Mary squirmed more forcefully as Ib ran to the canvas. “IB, STOP! DON’T!”

“Ib, I can’t hold onto her! Do it!”

“Okay!” Ib lit the lighter and was inches from touching it to Mary’s canvas.

“NOOOOOOOOOOOO!”

April jumped and hit Ib’s hand away, causing her to throw the lighter, which flipped off, into a pile of junk Mary collected. The doll kept its arms firm around Ib’s, staring at her red eyes. Somehow, Ib detected a pleading look in the doll’s googly eyes. Garry and Mary stopped struggling, both surprised at the sight. Realizing this—Mary pushed Garry off, raised her knife, and severed the head of his rose. “GARRY!!” Ib cried.

The man gave one final breath, and fell dead. Crying, Ib ran over to him. “Garry, speak to me!” She shook the sleeping man, but his body was still and peaceful. Mary ran over to grab April, then she bolted past Ib and out of the room. Ib looked up with a gasp. “Mary, come back!”

She chased Mary down more stairs, through a few more corridors, until finally, Ib found they were in the main gallery. The rooms were black instead of white, but it was the very same gallery. Jumping back to attention, Ib ran up to the second floor, to the large mural painting that started this entire journey. Mary was there, about to climb into it like a portal. “Mary, wait!” The girl stopped and looked at Ib, who was tired from running. “We can’t just leave here without Garry!”

“Ib, it’s too late. I already sacrificed him, so after I leave, he’ll take my place as a painting. I waited for this day forever, Ib, I’m not going to miss this chance! Ib, now’s your chance to get out of here, too, because if you wait too long, the portal will close.”

“I won’t, Mary. I won’t leave Garry.”

“Why not?!” Mary swung her arm in anger, throwing April into the mural portal. “You don’t even know him, Ib, why do you care about him? Why would you stay here for someone you don’t know?”

“Because he doesn’t deserve this any more than you do! Mary, I understand how you feel! This place is scary for any boy or girl, I was completely scared when I came here! Even if you’re one of these paintings… I can tell how you feel. Being alone here would be terrible. That’s why I can’t leave Garry alone.”

“But… Ib…” Mary looked upset. “I wanted to play with you more… I wanted to explore the real world with you. Won’t you come with me?”

“I’m sorry, Mary. But I’m staying with Garry.” Ib turned around. “And I’m not leaving until I find a way out for both of us.”

“…Fine.” Mary stepped into the portal. “Good-bye, Ib.”

With a flash, glass appeared over the painting, blocking any further access. Ib walked the spooky corridors. All alone. No mother… No father… Garry was dead… Mary was gone… She didn’t see anymore paintings come to life. Ib was completely alone.

She was completely lost. She couldn’t find where Garry was. She had no sense of direction. She had no idea how long she had been wandering. But her mind and heart was drowning. She didn’t remember what her parents looked like… what her house looked like… anything. She was so depressed and afraid, trapped in endless darkness. She would love to lie down… and dream forever.

She found a black, diamond-shaped bed, in the middle of a large room. She wondered… if the person who owned this bed wouldn’t mind her sleeping there. Ib took off her shoes, climbed in the bed… and fell asleep. (Play “Memory – Ib All Alone” from Ib.)

“Happy birthday, Ib!” her mother and father chorused. “Nine already, huh?” Father said. “You sure are growing fast.”

“I hope you had a good night’s sleep, Ib!” Mother beamed. “We’ve invited all your friends for the party.”

She had her ninth birthday days ago. The last wonderful memory of her life.

“Ib, this is a handkerchief.” Mother showed her. “I had your name knitted on it.”

“Honey, isn’t she too young for this?” Father asked.

“Oh, nonsense! Ib’s always careful with stuff, so I know she won’t lose it.”

Ib still had it with her.

“Oh? Looks like she found our secret present.” Father blushed. “Well, alright, Ib, open it.”

It was a large stuffed bunny.
“Do you like it?”

“Honestly, Dear, another rabbit?” Mother spoke reprovingly. “Her room is filled with them!”

“Oh, does she?” Father blushed. “But Ib sure seems to like it.”

“Sigh... all right.”

It was soft and warm.

“Oh? Ib, you look sleepy.” Mother noticed.

“She’s been partying an awful lot.”

“Why don’t you lie down for a nap? We’ll keep partying after you wake up.”

“Good... night... Ib...”

Real world...

April Goldenweek couldn’t remember what she was doing. Her head was very foggy. She tried to organize her memories. She was seven years old. She loved to paint. She was thinking about joining the Kids Next Door. Her father was Galdino Goldenweek. Her mother died when she was young. ...And her cousin was...

“Audit, there you are!” She looked over. Her 4-year-old cousin, Mary Goldenweek, skipped happily while her parents held her hand. “We looked for you everywhere!”

“Did Galdino let you wander off by yourself?” Her father, Alvin chuckled. “Honestly, that man...”

“Come on, April, let’s go find him.” Rosa held a hand out to April. “We have to leave soon.”

“...Okay!” April smiled and took her aunt’s hand.

When a real person dies in an imaginary world

An imaginary person can become real.

But when realities change, so must reality itself.

Garry died, and Ib chose to remain in that world.

April and Mary filled their places.

However, their parents do not remember them. Nobody does.

Galdino Goldenweek has always wanted a daughter, but he never married.

April and Mary still want to be sisters.

When the imaginary becomes real, reality is modified in a way to make as many people happy as possible.

So if some people have to be forgotten, then so be it.

But no one knows what force is behind how reality gets re-structured. As you can see, Mary is much younger than she was before.
Sometimes, reality is altered in a way that works for everyone…

Current time

Aeincha, Mocha, and April were speechless. The former two looked up at April, who was staring at her hands. “That… doll… really was me?…”

“You look just like it.” Ib replied. “Mary said she had to kill Garry to be real. If I stayed here, too… maybe you turned real.”

“I can’t believe it…” April stood up. “I… I’m an… Imaginary Friend. Me and Mary both are.”

“April, I’m so sorry.” Aeincha spoke regretfully. “Mary must’ve forced you to go along with that plan. If you were anything like you are now… you wouldn’t have done that, would you?”

“I don’t know.” April looked at the floor. “I really can’t remember any of that. I mean… this gallery feels so familiar to me now… I wonder if I even had a brain. This is just… so much to take in.”

“What are you going to do?” Mocha asked.

“…Me and Mary have to stay here.”

The tinies gasped. “April, why?” Aeincha asked.

“We stole the lives that belonged to Ib and Garry. Ib’s been suffering here; and just look at Garry. They need to go back. Me and Mary have to stay here.”

“Aleincha, you can’t!” Aeincha jumped off the couch and ran up to April’s shoe, looking up with weeping eyes. “You’re one of our best friends! We’ll miss you so much if you stay!”

“I know… sniff…” April was beginning to cry. “I… I would’ve much preferred decommissioning… I would love to keep going on missions with you… but… I just couldn’t, knowing these two would be forced to stay here… We stole the lives they had in the real world… we don’t deserve them!…”

“Aleincha, it wasn’t your fault!” Mocha shouted. “You were just doing what Mary told you, she threw you in!”

“It doesn’t matter, Mocha. We don’t belong in your world. We have to stay… It’s the right thing.”

The girls held their heads down. Aeincha and Mocha didn’t want to accept this… but April was right. Ib and Garry were the prisoners here. It wasn’t fair for them. …It wasn’t fair for any of them...

“This gallery’s a terrible place.” Aeincha stated. “I thought museums were supposed to be fun, but this is only making us sad.”

“You’re only happy when you’re outside.” Mocha said. “Nobody outside knows this gallery’s dark secret. …After we leave, we won’t remember, either.”

“I wish there was a way… that everyone can be happy.”

“…Not this time.” April said solemnly. “Not this time…” (End song.)

Violet Area
Chimney walked out of the library. She had a terrible headache. She had a feeling Mary was some kind of monster… but April, too? Chimney must have translated that diary wrong at some point. It did have a lot of illegible crayon writing. She needed to find those two and straighten this out.

Chimney, not paying attention where she was going, entered a random door. “Nnnn?” Blue dolls were staring at her from every direction. Some small, some large. They were extremely creepy. A blank white canvas was on the opposite side. “Uhhhh… I’m gonna go.” She turned to walk out—the door shut. She jiggled the knob, but couldn’t open it. “What?” Writing appeared on the door. Let’s have a treasure hunt. Who? Who? Who has the key?

“So? The room turned a shade of blue. BONG… “Oh, crap! Where’s the key?!” Chimney grabbed each and every doll, tore it open, and shook stuffing out. BONG… “Where is it?” She searched in one’s head, tore one in half. BONG… A figure was slowly reaching up from below the blank canvas. BONG… It had frizzy black hair, zombie blue skin, and piercing red eyes like the dolls. BONG… It was far bigger than the dolls. It was slowly climbing out of its canvas. BONG… Its mouth was open very wide. Chimney looked delicious. BONG. . . .

“YES, I FOUND THE KEY!” Chimney proclaimed with delight. “Now I can…” The room was a very dark dimness. Chimney felt it behind her. She slowly turned… The giant demon was out of its canvas, inches beside her… Chimney’s world went black in its mouth.

Chapter 49: Ruin of the Heart

Mermaid Swamp

Ineptune led Melody, Danny, and Eric (as well as Juju) to the shore of a large lake, where Hideout Helm sat in the center. “We’re going to enter from the underwater entrance.” The mermaid said. “You two kids are waterbenders, so I’ll hope you keep up.” She dove underneath. Eric and Juju held onto Mel and Danny as both waterbenders dove underneath, making air bubbles for them. Melody glowed with her hands to serve as a light for them all, trying to see Ineptune’s bulky form through the fog.

Ineptune swam into an underwater gate that the kids followed her in. After they resurfaced, the kids climbed onto a metal floor. “Klubba, these children are guests of King K. Rool.” Ineptune told the green, buff Kremling wielding a spiky club.

“I still need a toll.” The Kremling stated gruffly, patting his club in the palm of his other hand.

“We have a snake!” Danny perked, raising Juju. Said snake panicked. “You can use him for, like, floss or something.”

“No, I have 10 pythons. …Hmmm…” Klubba reached over and picked up Eric. “But this boy could be fun to practice my balloon animal art.”

“There’s a couple things I don’t like about that sentence!” Eric panicked.

“Deal with it or don’t pass.”

“That won’t fix the emotional trauma!” the nerd cried.

“I’ll take you to King Kroctus.” Klubba slapped Eric over his shoulder and let his club drag along the floor as he led the two kids through the base.

Meeting Room

“Hmmm… So it is true, then.” King K. Rool said after Lehcar told her story. “The Apocalypse really is upon us. Then I guess we have waited too long. We must unite the Eight Firstborn and their Guardians. With Arceus’s great power on our side, we cannot be harmed.”

“King Kroctus, I think you’re overlooking a few details.” Eggman spoke informatively. His brown mustache was graying, and he had wrinkles. “First, remember the first time Arceus was called back? He went completely berserk, and Gnaa lost the conscience to control him. Also, even if Arceus would cooperate with us, what good is a universe that’s destroyed? True, Arceus could just make a new one, but I’ve grown too fond of this dimension.”

“It isn’t only about surviving or having power.” Kroctus said. “It’s the powers behind all of it. Lehcar speaks of the Twenty Keys that must be gathered, and a Dark Goddess searching for them. Furthermore, this group called ‘Team Gnik,’ and the unreal energy Dr. Eggman has detected in the World Government’s possession… I have to wonder, if Arceus, the God of Everything, would have known anything about these.”

“Those same Gnik guys keep talking about Ten Firstborn, ‘stead of Eight.” Bowser mentioned. “I got some Koopas over in their gang, spying for them. You think it’s something to be worried about?”

“Eight or Ten, I’m so confused.” Gruntilda nagged. “These Firstborn were ALL over the news! You found them once, why find them again? They’d just protect everyone from the end.”

“We’ve been keeping tabs on the Firstborn for years,” Eggman said, “ever since the Guardians set them free. The fact that they would know about the Apocalypse, and aren’t doing anything about it, is stifling.”

“Just what are the Twenty Keys.” Kroctus scratched his chin. “What have they to do with the Apocalypse and ‘Team Gnik.’ Mmm…”

“Kroctus.” Klubba banged the side of the entrance with his club. “Ineptune brought some twerps for you.”

“Holy wow, Bowser!!” Danny ran up to the Koopa King excitedly. “I’m your biggest fan!”

“Guess again, Roundo.” Bowser remarked. “I’m not the Bowser you’re thinking of, I’m Bowser Jr.. Bowser Sr. is still running the Koopa Clan, and trust me, he’s still bigger than I am.”

“Mrs. Uno?” Melody noticed the woman across the table. “No, wait… you’re Lehcar, aren’t you?”

“Glad you noticed, Ydolem.” Lehcar propped her feet on the table and folded hands behind her head. “Which reminds me, your Negative is acting real suspicious about something. Give her a talking to sometime.”

“If you’ve come through the swamp, you must have seen the sorry state Manaphy is in.” Kroctus stood up from his chair, his strong, bulky appearance towering high. “We thought his Guardian could restore him.”

“I…I’m going to.” Melody assured. “But first, I know you have the Fairy Princess here. Where is she?”

“This way.” They stepped aside to let Kroctus march down the hall.

The Kremling King brought them to his throne room, showing them a glass cage that peeked into a chamber that looked like a giant barrel. “This is her.” Inside was a girl of dark-blue skin, hair, and dress of various hues, sitting on her knees as she faced the opposite wall, so they could only see the soles of her feet, and the cracked teardrop gem on her back. “Gruntilda told us her identity as Lapis Lazuli, one of three renowned Fairy Princesses from an ancient fairytale on her home planet, Avalar. Lapis ruled the Ocean Fairies on this planet beside Queen Cerulea, and she is known by the merpeople as a beautiful and graceful dancer. Until…"

“Until Spongebob caught her in a net and broke her gem.” Danny recapped the crazy story.

“Yes. Then you must also know about her rampage, and that Manaphy consoled her using his song. Unable to find someone to heal her, they wandered into Mermaid Swamp. We have contained her powers in this specialized cell, but we are unable to aid or even speak with her. If we enter, she may attack us or try to escape. We were Gnaa’s closest allies, so we know when darkness and anger is rising inside a heart.”

“Let me go in there.” Melody stated. “I can try to help her. I have healing powers, I can fix her gem.”

“Hold on, Melody.” Eric spoke, still slouched over Klubba’s shoulder. “Em, big guy, can you turn around?” Klubba turned so that Eric could view the situation. “Melody, do your powers even work on magical rocks, or spirit people for that matter? Besides, even if you could, Lapis might still try and destroy this swamp.”

“That’s why I’ll try to reason with her, too. Just let me in.”

“Very well.” Kroctus complied. “This window is also one-way, so do not tell her of it. This way.”

He led Melody around a back room, opening a door into a short, white hallway. He sealed the door behind her, then opened the next one into Lapis’s chamber. Melody calmly approached the kneeled princess, whose head was drooped. “Princess Lapis?”

“Who is it, now.” She responded lowly.

“Melody Jackson. …I’m the Ocean Princess. Kyogre’s granddaughter.”

“Oh… I see.” Her head straightened up. “Sorry if I didn’t recognize you.” She turned and looked at Melody with oval-shaped, mirror-like eyes, with no pupils or irises.

“Eee!” Melody’s heart jumped a bit. “…Um… pretty eyes?”

“Don’t patronize me.” Lapis flipped to sit on her rear. “It’s the least of what happened to me after my gem was broken. I can’t fly, anymore. If I could, I would’ve left this miserable planet. Never even wanted to stay here. Sigh…” She buried her face in the lap of her dress.

“What are you talking about? Someone was making you stay?”

“Oh, so I guess your ‘grandfather’ hasn’t told you.” Lapis looked up, her mirror eyes slanted in anger. “He demanded me to stay on this planet, for 5,000 years. After I heard about Malladus attacking this world, I flew here to heal the injured merpeople and some humans. A lot of them were upset about the whole war, so I started doing Fairy Dances with them, I made them feel happy again. Even after Malladus was gone, Kyogre wanted me to stay. I had to dance at all of their parties, help protect the ocean, and I granted my healing powers to newly-born waterbenders.”

“Your healing powers?” Melody stared at her hand. “Does that mean my healing powers came from you?”

“I was the first waterbender born with healing, because of my Lunar Magic. I was born on a planet called Lunaria, but I was forced to move to Avalar when a war was happening. I wanted to go back there ever since I became a fairy, I wanted to leave this dump, but I felt like protecting these merpeople was my responsibility. But I don’t care, anymore.” She rested her face on her dress again. “I just wanna see Mavis and Aisling again. Avalar or Lunaria, I just wanna go back home.
Where I’m happy.”

Melody sat beside the princess and put a hand on her shoulder. “So that’s why you were so upset.
Getting your gem broken was the last straw for you, wasn’t it? My grandpa pestered you into staying, even though you didn’t want to. He kind of almost did the same with my mom. My mom was used to living on the surface, so she didn’t want to move to Oceana, even though it would’ve been her dream. She got with my dad, and-“I don’t wanna hear your sob story.” Lapis smacked her hand off. “That’s the problem with your family, you only think about yourselves.”

“We do not! I was just saying that I get where you’re coming from, and I know how you feel!”

“No you don’t! You and your mom have a great life and friends you like to be around. I know that Kyogre wanted your mom to come back, but never did, why did Kyogre accept HER decision, but I still couldn’t go back to MY home?!”

“Okay, okay, so we’re not the same. I still wanna help you. If I have your chi, I can heal you. But when I do, you have to promise you won’t hurt anybody else. Agreed?”

“…Sigh. Alright. I just want my wings back so I can leave.” Lapis got on all fours to show her gem to Melody.

Melody got on her knees and bent water onto her hands, putting them over Lapis’s gem as they glowed. “So wait, how come I can bend in here, but you can’t?”

“Butterfly net strings are tied around the walls outside. They render all fairies helpless. Don’t ask me why.”

“Wouldn’t it be easier to chi-block this cell?”

“That wouldn’t hold my magic back.”

Melody closed her eyes to focus. She had to sense where Lapis’s wounds were, make her own water into new flesh. …Except she was not human. “You have an… interesting body.”

“I know. Solid photons.”

“That’s problematic. I-I can’t seem to… heal your gem.”

“I THOUGHT you said you could DO something!” Lapis shouted.

“I-I thought I could, I wasn’t sure! I’m used to healing people, not cracked objects! Why couldn’t you fix it yourself before?”

“Because my powers don’t WORK as well when my gem is busted!”

“Okay, okay! Sigh…” Melody stopped trying. “Maybe waterbending’s not gonna help. Our KND has a few timebenders, I could bring one of them to fix this.”

“Don’t even try to get my hopes up.” Lapis sat back on her rear and folded her arms. “You merpeople are all the same. From Kyogre keeping me on this planet, Spongebob for breaking my “gem, and Manaphy for leading me to this godforsaken swamp just to betray me.”

“Manaphy didn’t betray you, he was poisoned by the swamp’s influence.”

“Please, how can you go from being ‘sweet and lovable’ to a monster in just a few hours?”

“I don’t know—it’s a Firstborn/Water/spiritual thing! Lapis, I know you’re upset about everything that’s happened, but at least take solace in the fact I’m trying to help you. If me or Mom knew that Kyogre was pestering you to stay here, we would’ve done something about it.”

“If you really want to help me, tell them to let me out of this cell.”

“I want to, but you’re still kind of… sour. I mean, we don’t want you to take revenge on Oceana if you’re trapped on this planet.”

“Hmph.” Lapis looked away. “You don’t even care if I get better, as long as I can still be ‘friends’ with you merpeople.”

“I do want you to get better! And I won’t care if you hate the other merpeople forever, I still don’t want you to destroy ‘em. Sigh…” Melody sat beside the wingless fairy. “Look, Lapis, I’m sorry I can’t heal you, and for what my grandpa did, but can’t we just be friends? I already feel responsible for what Manaphy did to you.”

Lapis was silent for a minute in thought. “…If anything, you could tell those people to stop watching us.”

“What people?”

“Come on, you think I don’t know about the invisible window that peeps in this cell? How else would they watch me. I bet there’s a bunch of people watching us like a movie.”

“Come on, I’m sure there isn’t THAT many.”

The throne room was filled with Kremling soldiers, gazing enticingly at the window into the cell. One of them was eating popcorn. Klubba was scratching his chin in thought, looking at Eric, whose limbs were currently bent into a triangle-ish shape. …Klubba stuck one arm up and bent the hand at 90 degrees, then he nodded approvingly.

Melody walked up to where she thought the window was and knocked. “Look, boys, show’s over, just go eat shark meat or something.” The Kremlings murmured comments as they piled out of the room.

Melody sighed in exhaust, unsure if there was even anyone out there, and went back to sit by Lapis. “Lapis, I’m sorry about everything my grandpa put you through, and I really wish I could heal you. Is there anything else I can do to… I dunno, be friends?”

“…Well…” Lapis had her head propped on her hand, tapping her chin with her pinky, “We could trade bodies.”

“Excuse me?”

“I want to believe you’re telling the truth and you’re nicer than all the other merpeople, but the only way I can be sure is if you understand how I feel. If we traded bodies, we could see into each other’s minds. I would know you’re honest, and you would know how upset I am.”
“That’s an… awfully weird solution. How would we even do that?”

“Can’t Manaphy switch peoples’ bodies?”

“Well- Yeah, but he’s not in the right state to do that.”

“You’re his big sister. You can fix him, can’t you?”

“I’m his niece, technically. …Although if my mom hatched his egg, she could be considered the mom, making Manaphy my brother.” She spoke logically. “But that still makes him older than me.” She shook her head and stood up, “Alright, I’ll try to help Manaphy so he can do this for us. Just… don’t mess up my body when you’re in it, okay?”

“Sure, of course.” Lapis nodded, her blank expression unchanged.

Melody left the cell and met Danny down the hall, and they followed Klubba, who was using Eric as an around-the-neck towel. “She wants me to use Manaphy to switch our bodies.”

“Switch bodies with a fairy and have all her powerful fairy magic?” Danny questioned. “Lucky you!”

“I’ll say- ow! My rib!” Eric yelped as Klubba kept wiping with him. “I’ve always dreamed of being a fairy princess with cool magic powers! And I had the prettiest dress…”

_The opening of Star vs. the Forces of Evil began to play, but in place of Star, it was Eric Horvitz. “It’s gonna get a little weird! Gonna get a little WILD! I’m not from around here! I’m from another DIMENSION!”_

“…We’re not doing anymore cutaways.” Melody decided, disgusted at the thought.

“Oh, tarter sauce.” Eric moped.

Land of Crystals and Gems

The Fountain of Quartz was as expansive as a small lake, with shining pink liquid that could make one’s eyes mesmerized. The shallow water almost reached Vanellope’s skirt as she followed the Zoni and carried Clank to the fountain’s center. The fountain’s source was a statue of a bulky woman with large hair, closed eyes, and a star on her belly. “It is her…” The Zoni moaned.

Vanellope’s wide, awestruck eyes were drawn to the person on top of the statue. Their hair matched that of the woman’s, pink in very large curls. Vanellope held onto Clank as she climbed on the flower-shaped edge around the fountain, gazing longingly at this mysterious person. …They turned around. “Good mornin’!” It was a weird-looking man with an orange mustache.

“…Who’re you?” Vanellope asked.

“I’m your Uncle Grandpa!”

“My who now?”

“Uncle Grandpa! Everybody’s uncle and grandpa!”

“…Is that even legally possible?”

“Of course it is! Wanna come into my van and see my giant realistic flying tiger?”
“...What’s that?”

“OUUUUCH!” The Zoni zapped Uncle Grandpa and sent him flying. “That was not her!” they chorused. “We have been trying to get rid of that guy for years. No more wasting time! Throw Master into the fountain!”

Vanellope looked at Clank once more, then she threw him in. Being a robot, Vanel expected him to short-circuit instantly. ...Clank’s green eyes beeped to life, the robot started twitching and sparking, Vanellope braced herself for the explosion. Clank’s head spun around—his green eyes turned a midnight-blue and starry. The robot hovered in the air as his antenna shone the same color. The Zoni’s bulbous eyes became staticky: afterwards, one’s turned gray, another’s turned cyan-colored, and the third one’s turned a dark-green. “OH, LOOK WHAT FINALLY FKING HAPPENED.” The gray-eyed Zoni said annoyedly. “THE CANDY GIRL FINALLY BROUGHT ORVUS BACK.”

“K4RK4T, I C4N SM3LL YOUR SP1C3 FROM W4Y OV3R H3R3.” The cyan-eyed hissed.

“Terezi? Karkitty? I’m so glad we get to c’at again.” :3 The green-eyed said.

“Huh? You guys can talk now?” Vanellope asked.

“AND LO, WE HAVE THE HERO OF THE HOUR.” Karkat said sarcastically. “GIVE HER A ROUND OF APPLAUSE, LADY TROLLS AND MAN-TROLLS, SHE ACTUALLY DID SOMETHING REMOTELY USEFUL.”

“HEY, SARCASM, I THINK YOU LEFT YOUR CAPS-LOCK ON!” Vanellope shouted. “WHY ARE YOU TALKING LIKE THIS?”

“BECAUSE THIS IS HOW I TALK! IF IT BUGS YOU, SHOVE THAT CANDY INTO YOUR HOLLOW EARS!”

“JUST tell ME who YOU are SO we CAN get ON with THIS!”

“1 4M T3R3Z1 PYROP3. H3 1S K4RK4T, SH3 1S N3P3T4. W3 4R3 TH3 TROLLS FROM TH1S D1M3NS1ON.”

“NOT THIS PLACE, SPECIFICALLY.” Karkat followed. “ALL THIS CYBERJUNK IS THE RECORDED DATA OF OUR REAL DIMENSION. NONE OF THE PEOPLE WHO LIVED THERE ARE ACTUALLY IN THERE. NOT EVEN ROSE QUARTZ.”

“Except for Puridot.” Nepeta smiled. “But that’s ‘claws Yellow Diamond sent her to s33 what we were doing. So we put her in Cyberspace.” :33

“It might be the weird language, but you guys are losing me.” Vanel said. “What dimension are you talking about, what’s a Rose Quartz and Yellow Diamond? And for the love of God, dude, whisper or something!”

“(Fine. I’m whispering. You happy?)” Karkat whispered. “(You still didn’t put it together? We’re the people who created the universe you came from. The universe Arceus asked us to make, before he shut us in here.)”

“K4RK4T, I DON’T THINK V4N3LL0P3 3V3N KNOWS 4BOUT TH3 4POC4LYPS3.”

“I didn’t. You guys told me about it.”
“(Our Zoni must have done that. Listen, Shiitake Candy, the Zoni are poly-dimensional robots that we designed. Um, okay, it was sort of us, but we did have help from-) “Karkittyyyyy! I don’t think she knows, y33333t!” >:3 Nepeta whined.

“THEY’RE GOING TO FIND OUT EVENTUALLY, NEPETA. HECK, ONE OF THEM’S SNIFFING THROUGH MY DRAWER RIGHT-”

“TH3 P4ST MUST NOT B3 T4MP3R3D W1TH, K4RK4T.” >:3 “TH4T 1S WH4T SH3 S41D.”

“Yes, Karkat, you can’t tampur with the past.” :33

“TELL THAT TO THE  WHO HAS A MILLION DEAD PARADOX CLONES IN HIS ROOM!”

“You know, if this is a bad time,” Vanellope was about to climb off the fountain, “I’m gonna-

“DON’T MOVE A MUSCLE, CANDY! YOUR JOB ISN’T EVEN OVER, YOU STILL HAVE TO OPEN THE EGG CHAMBERS.”

Vanellope sighed, thinking this was another task she had to do. “What’re those.”

“HA! WE KNEW YOU COULDN’T HAVE OPENED THEM YET, IF YOU WERE JUST NOW HEALING ORVUS. WHO, BY THE WAY, DOESN’T LOOK A KING THING LIKE THE REAL ORVUS. IS THAT THE FORM HE DECIDED TO TAKE? HE LOOKS LIKE A HUMAN PUPA’S TOY.”

“TH3 3GG CH4MB3RS W1LL B3 US3L3SS UNL3SS TH3 F1RSTB0RN W3R3 F0UND BY TH31R GU4RD14NS. DO YOU KNOW IF TH3 Y46 V3?” Terezi asked Vanellope.

“Well, it’s not like I was allowed to go back to them and ASK.” Vanellope emphasized.

“A FEW OF THEM SHOULD HAVE BY NOW. LET’S JUST GET STARTED.”

“Orvus better come back befur we’re fi’shed. Or the chambers won’t work.” 3:>

“DID YOU REALLY JUST MAKE A CRAPPY FISH PUN? YOU AREN’T FEFERI!”

“Kitties like fish, Karkitty.” :33

“Are you guys gonna say something that actually makes SENSE?!!” Vanel exclaimed.

“TOUGH BREAK, CHOCOLATE CREAM. THIS STORY’S ABOUT TO GET A LOT MORE CONFUSING ON YOUR END.”

Mermaid Swamp

“All I’m saying is that if we’re taking Manaphy back there, DANNY’S gonna be the subject of his water balloon experiments!” Eric complained as Melody used waterbending to heal his aching parts.

“You deal with bullies on a daily basis, at least your body was ready for it!” Melody argued.

“So how are you planning to change Manaphy back to normal?” Danny asked.

“I’ll try healing him.” She finished with Eric and stood up straight. “If that doesn’t work, I guess I’ll try talking to him. He loved my mom a lot, I’m sure he could feel the same with me. Why don’t you guys go with Juju and get those warthog eyes or whatever that lady wanted.”

“Is that so we don’t get to watch you get beat up by your baby Uncle Brother?”

“Duh.” She eye-rolled. “I’m way too cool for that.”

A few feet down the river, Melody saw a Klump standing on the shore’s edge, belly bumping Manaphy whenever the Sea Prince jumped out to him. The action repeatedly happened like a rewinding tape. Melody approached him casually. “Hey. Your shift’s up.” She gestured behind her with her thumb.

“Okay.” Klump took out a crocodile cigarette, blew smoke, and walked away.

“MANAAA!” When Manaphy leaped out to bump him again, Melody grabbed him in her arms.

“Manaphyyyy!” She lovingly hugged her Uncle Brother, nuzzling him with her cheek. “How’s my baby bwoyyyyyy-ni-ni-ni-niiiiii…”

Manaphy’s mouth opened wide, his fangs sharpened, and he CHOMPED Melody’s arm. “Yeowch! Hey-Hey-Hey-Hey!” Melody frantically shook the arm, then pressed her foot against the baby prince until he finally came off. When blood dripped from her wounds, Manaphy was underneath, trying to catch in his mouth. “Stop that!” Melody bent the blood up in the air, away from him- She just realized what she was doing. “…Wow, I’m a bloodbender. ‘Guess I’m a bad person, now.” She tried to force the blood back into her cuts, then grabbed more water from the swamp, shook the mud out, and began healing herself. When Manaphy started hopping around to catch flying, overgrown bugs, Melody had to stop partway finished and run in front of him.

Melody squatted before her uncle, who looked up at her with his scowl. “Manaphy, you and I both know this isn’t who you are. I think you’re only stressed because years and years of trying to find help for Lapis have led to zero results! The last thing you wanted was to end up in a swamp of snotty, heartless, cannibalistic mermaids, believe me, I would feel the same. But what you were trying to do was a good thing, and now that I’m here, we can find a cure for Lapis together! Come on, Bro-Bro.” She smiled confidently and held a hand to him. “Whaddya say?”

“…” The little monster looked between Melody’s hand and her face. Contemplating on her words. …Manaphy took her hand in both of his… and swung her back, forth, back, forth, hitting her against the ground, before throwing her to a tree. Melody weakly looked up to see the prince climb up a tree to a beehive, tear it down, and started munching on it like a cracker. He chomped any bees flying around him. “Yeah, I pretty much walked into that one.” Melody figured.

The news anchor sat cross-legged, leaning her head on her fist as she watched Manaphy bounce and chase three Klaptraps. The green one stopped, turned, and growled at him. Normally, after a Klaptrap gets K.O.’ed, its tongue and jaws come out to chase their opponent. Manaphy did the reverse: he jumped into the Klaptrap’s mouth, ate its tongue and teeth, then jumped out before knocking the body out. “Hmm… I didn’t actually try healing, yet.” She noticed. “If nothing else works…”

As Manaphy finished chewing, he turned to see Melody come back to him, water ready on her hands. He tried to jump away, but Melody grabbed and struggled to pin him on his front. He snarled like an angry dog, and just as well, he didn’t put up much resistance as Melody’s hands glowed, softly rubbing his back. Blue waves were moving along Manaphy’s green skin, and she saw hints of his normal color. “This is all he needs.” She made a slight pant, still needing to keep him pinned. “Just a magic touch from his favorite family. There, there, Manaphy. Most kids your age get shots, so you’re lucky enough to have me. The pain’ll be gone in a second.” He kept struggling. “Just… a little…”

“MAAAAA!” Manaphy growled, shook, flipped upright, and bit Melody’s right ring finger clean off her hand.

“YOOOOOOOOOOOWWWWWW!” Her pupils shrunk and her hair stood on end. Manaphy spit the finger on the ground. “OH MY GOD! SON OF A BITCH, WHAT THE FUCK?! YOU SHITTY LITTLE.” Melody swung her foot and kicked him in the face, knocking him several feet. Manaphy got up, wiping mud off his nose and growling with more anger. “You wanna go mermano o mermano?! Wanna throw down?! ‘Cause I will! I’ll beat some sense into you ONE way or another, you fuckin’ turd-booger!”

“Oooooohhhhh!” Surrounding mermaids were gathering to watch the spectacle. “Human chick’s gettin’ it on with little Gremlin!”

Manaphy leapt to gnash Melody, who punched him away, ran up, and kicked him against a tree. Manaphy kicked off and grabbed Melody’s shoulder in his teeth, the girl crying in pain as she grabbed and tried to pull him off with both hands. She succeeded, leaving a deep gash in her shoulder, and she began smacking Manaphy across the face left-and-right. Manaphy chomped a fang into the back of her hand, so Melody ran and smashed him against a tree. The dizzy prince fell off, then Melody forcefully tugged his antennas away from each other, clutching them as she swung and hit him against the ground some more.

More mermaids were being attracted by the commotion, and Danny, Eric, and Juju followed the noise as well. “MELODY?!” they screamed at the sight of their mangled friend and what she was doing.

“Feel like behaving now?!” Melody stated as she pressed Manaphy face-first against the mud, the prince growling like a protesting dog again. “Huh? ‘Cause I got all day. I got all day to knock those teeth out. Just say the word, Swamp Scum, and we’ll do it.”

“Melody, stop!” Eric and Danny ran over to pull her away. “What the heck is going-”

Melody held up her missing ring finger. “AAAAAAAAAHRRRRHHH!” the boys screamed.

“MANAAAA!” Manaphy lunged at Melody, who grabbed him by the cheeks with her thumbs in his mouth, backed him against a tree, and stomped his face to knock some teeth out. She threw Manaphy down and backed away, both of them panting. “You know what, Manaphy, maybe it’s GOOD that you ended up in Mermaid Swamp, because if you can change THAT easily, Oceana doesn’t need you! You’re nothing like the Manaphy from Mom’s stories. You’re just a sour, heartless little mutant!”

“Maaaaaan!” He hissed at her once more and hopped away.

“Ugh.” Melody went to pick up her severed finger. “Come on, let’s see if the hideout has any bandages.” She marched back to Hideout Helm in anger. “And if Klubba’ll let me borrow his club.” Danny and Eric stayed 20 feet behind her.

Guertena Gallery (Play “Dining Room” from Ib.)

“Apis, Aisa!” Mary called to the two girls exploring the Brown Area. “I found the key!”

She led them into a room that was black and white. Even they had no color about them. “What “What kind of room is this?” Aisa questioned.

“There’s no color at all.” Apis said.

“There’s the key! Over there!” Mary pointed across a dark chasm. The key was sitting on a small table.

“That’s too far to reach.” Aisa said. “Isn’t there a way across?”

“I don’t know…” Mary spoke sadly.

“I can’t even sense anything down there. Let’s keep looking around.”

The three girls later discovered a very narrow hallway with small lamps hanging on the wall near the ceiling. “I wonder if there’s a way down through here?” Apis thought aloud before stepping forward-

Aisa grabbed her, “Don’t! There’s spike traps all over.”

“There are? Then… how do we get past them?”

In the Violet Area below, Ib was leading April, who was carrying Aein and Mocha, through a long, vacant passage. This corridor was vaguely familiar to Ib, who had a hard time remembering much of the gallery already. There were strange, line diagrams near the ceiling on each long wall, and light switches under some of them. “What do these do?” Aeincha asked.

April flipped a few of them in the down position. “Not sure.”

In the Brown Area, the lamps above the passage were switching off, making it darker. But Aisa noticed something else with her Mantra: “The spikes switched off. Well, most of them.”

“But I can’t see.” Mary frowned.

“I can. Stay close to me.” Aisa guided them both down the hall, sensing where some of the spikes were still active and instructing Apis and Mary to step over them. They made it into a room at the end of the passage, in which a hole separated two sides of the floor. “Nothing we can’t step over.” Aisa said, about to do so-

“HAH!” Claws reached up, preventing this feat. They looked around the room, but all that was here were five cords lined up on the ceiling, with a green painting with blinking eyes under the fourth one.

Downstairs, April’s group made it to the main room of the Violet Area, where various paintings hung, such as Worry (its eye blinked), Juggling (an animated juggler), and Fleeting Thoughts on a Moonlit Night, which depicted a cherry blossom tree with animated falling petals. Five cords, like those seen on lamps, hung around the room. When Ib pulled one close to a wall, she was scratched by a claw. When April pulled one near a toad painting, the toad caught Aeincha on its tongue, chewed on her, and spat her out. Ib then pulled the cord beside Worry, flinching as she expected to be hurt again.

In the Brown Area, the portrait of blinking eyes slid down the wall and became a bridge across the hole. Shrugging at each other, the three girls crossed it, and the eyes made a boink sound. “Hehehe!” Mary giggled. They found a room of flickering lights, standing atop a wide staircase as they watched a red ball bounce down. At the bottom, the ball fell into a dark chasm. Another ball came out of the missing nose of a Clown painting and began another descent.
April’s group entered a room with seven pedestals, and a palette hanging on the wall. The sign below it said, The seven balls of paint will show you the way. “Balls of paint?” Mocha said after April read it. “Where are those at?”

With Mary’s group, they noticed that a narrow path led over the chasm down below, to a platform with a smaller hole. There were pegs around the stairs that altered the red ball’s path. A peg was set before this path as well. The girls could move the Clown’s position on the wall, setting it on a good route where the ball could bounce off that peg and onto the path. They watched the ball fall down the hole, wondering what that accomplished.

April’s group split up to explore this area, and Ib saw a red ball fall out of a painting of stairs. When she picked it up, the ball mysteriously vanished. April looked at the Fleeting Thoughts painting again. There was a small message below that said, Offer your condolences. The cherry blossoms were pink like her rose. …April pulled three petals off her rose and dropped them before the painting, wincing from the pain. A pink ball of paint fell out, and it vanished upon April’s touch.

Aeincha and Mocha entered the library, where they discovered an open English-German Dictionary on the floor. “You know, that’s kind of what Chimney would read.” Aeincha noted.

“You think she was in here?”

“She coulda been. Oh well. You think there are any paintballs hidden here?”

Mocha saw an Essentials of Color book a few shelves up. She climbed and used her super strength to pull the book out, letting it plop open on the floor. The two tinies flipped the pages, seeing color wheels, saturation wheels, and pages of color dots with numerous hues – one of the dots stuck out like a lump. Aeincha pulled the green ball of paint out, and it vanished.

Ib entered a room that was kind of like a waterway. There was a painting aptly labeled Barren Pipeline. A blue ball of paint sat on a platform that was too high to climb to. But in one corner, Ib found what seemed like a valve wheel. There wasn’t any good place to latch it in here. Ib returned outside—there was a fishing hook dangling out of a blue painting labeled Fishing Hook. Just for fun, Ib decided to hook the valve onto it. She gasped when the valve was reeled up into the painting.

Apis, Aisa, and Mary returned to the main room of the Brown Area to look around. Mary noticed a Fisherman painting, holding a valve. When she approached, the man held it out for Mary to take. The golden-haired girl searched around, and found a small room that had a painting of a small hole, titled Water Valve. Mary was able to hook the wheel onto the painting and turn it, smiling happily as she pretended she was driving.

Below, April’s group heard a sudden rushing of water. They entered the waterway room to find it filled. Since neither of them could swim, Aeincha rode a small lilypad over to the platform with the blue ball. It vanished when she touched it.

Upstairs, Apis found a painting called Heavenly Thread, which was a string hanging within a blank white space. Taking the rest of this gallery’s shenanigans into account, she decided to reach in and touch it. Indeed, she was able to, and the Christian decided to climb into the portrait and climb the thin string. It stretched into utter whiteness for miles, making Apis wonder if it was okay to keep going. She eventually reached a small, gray platform, hidden at first within the blankness, and found a white paintball seated. When she reached to touch it, it vanished.

Aisa found a painting called Skin and Scales, which depicted orange and purple tiles in diamond-like patterns. There was a yellow ball through the scales, and she felt the need to grab it. Her hand got pricked by the scales, and it seemed the various squares were in different positions. Using her Mantra, she determined the depth of the painting and maneuvered her arm within it. After carefully touching the yellow ball, it vanished.

April’s group searched nearly the whole of the Violet Area, but couldn’t seem to find the other Balls of Paint. They decided to roam the long corridor they previously came through, wondering if they missed it. In one of the corners, Ib spotted the purple ball camouflaged with the room’s color. She picked it up and let it vanish.

Mary and Apis found a library inside a small room. Skimming titles, Apis picked out one labeled Ruin of the Heart. If your spirit suffers too much, you will soon start to hallucinate. And in the end, you will be destroyed. More worrying yet, is that you will not even be conscious of that fact.

Mary found a book titled A Girl’s Last Days. Once upon a time, there was a little girl. The girl went with her parents to an art gallery. But all of a sudden, the girl realized that she was lost. She searched through the dim gallery, but found neither her parents nor the exit. Scared, helpless, lonely, hungry, and thirsty, she fell and hurt herself, putting her body past the limit… The last page had an illustration of a collapsed girl.

“Guys, there you are!” Aisa barged in. “I just checked that colorless room again, and a rainbow bridge appeared! I crossed it and got the key!” She held said key up.

“Great!” Apis beamed, putting her book back. “Mary, let’s hurry downstairs!”

“Um… I’ll catch up with you.” Mary was staring solemnly at the picture of the collapsed girl. “I need to… rest…”

Aisa and Apis exchanged questioning looks. “Okay, Mary, just don’t go too far.”

They used the key to open the door to the stairwell. The area went from brown to violet as they rushed down. The door at the bottom was locked, however they could turn the dial to unlock it. When they entered, they were surprised at who they ran in to. “April!” Aisa beamed. “Aeincha, Mocha, …Who’s this?”

“I’m Ib.” She greeted. “Is that a Halloween costume?”

“No… April, did you see Chimney down here? Mary said that they were down here.”

“No, not really.”

“Wait, you guys ran into Mary?” Ib asked.

“Yeah. Do you know her?”

April looked down; Mary hasn’t told them, yet. Aein and Mocha looked at her expectantly. “…There’s something we have to tell you guys. Let’s find Chimney and Mary first.”

“Oh, is that so? Nnn hee hee hee…”

The girls gasped softly. “Did you hear that?” Apis whispered.

“Really? Boy, that’s somethin’…” They heard the voice come from around a corner, down a passage. The teammates decided to follow it. “Well, you know, things happen.” There was a door that was cracked open. “Hee hee, you’re so funny!”
“That sounds a lot like… Chimney.” Mocha said.

“Is she talking to someone?” Apis asked.

“This door was locked before.” Ib mentioned. “I wonder who opened it?”

Aisa sensed the presences on the other side of the door. There were many of them… they freaked her out. She gulped. “Let’s see.” She put her hand on the door and pushed it open. (End song.)

Bunnies of white and pink fur frolicked freely in this small, peaceful room. They had adorable, beady red eyes, their noses twitching as they sniffed about. A large painting of a pink rabbit, sitting on a grassy meadow, hung on the wall. Chimney was sitting in front of a green rabbit, smiling and exchanging pleasant conversation. “Are you kidding?! Who would do that to a girl?” she questioned. “Well, if I saw someone doing that, I’d tell ’em off for sure.”

The teammates didn’t know what to say. The sight was… adorable and confusing all at the same time. “She’s… talking to it?” Aisa asked.

Apis looked at a nearby bunny that was sniffing the floor. She smiled. “Well, at least they’re cute.” She was about to pet it.

“Whoa whoa!” Aisa held her back. “What about them is cute?!”

“Huh? Well, they kind of are… It’s not like we don’t have an oddly-colored bunny.”

“Bunny? Whaddyou mean?”

“The… These bunnies.”

“These aren’t… bunnies.” Aisa said confusedly.

“She’s right… they aren’t.” April said.

“Then… what are they?” Aein asked.

What some of them saw as bunnies, in actuality, they were dolls. Blue, zombified dolls with wide staring eyes. The pink rabbit painting actually depicted the Red Eyes, a bigger, more terrifying version of these dolls. Chimney, while she seemed to be smiling sprightly, was actually very gray and wrinkled. The blue dolls were climbing on her, licking her skin. Her orange rose was slowly decaying. “Yeah… I know the feeling.” Chimney said. “You feel so helpless sometimes… you want to do something, but you know you can’t. It’s nice to not have to think. Just forget all your problems… you know?”

“Chimney!” Aeincha jumped out of Ib’s hand and ran onto the lap of Chimney’s skirt, looking up at her face. “Chimney, it’s me, Aeincha! Is something wrong with you?”

Chimney glanced down at her. “Oh, hello. Are you lost? Well, we have plenty of room here. Make yourself comfortable.”

“…Mmmmmmph!” Aeincha fumed with anger. “Chimney, get ahold of yourself!” She jumped and smacked her giant head. “Snap out of it!”

Chimney didn’t feel a thing. “That’s what I mostly do is sleep. I just feel more happy in bed, you know? Not havin’ to do anything…”
Apis sat beside Chimney and read from the Bible, “‘And God said to Abraham, ‘You will kill your son, Isaac.’ And Abraham said, ‘I’m sorry, I can’t hear you. Can you speak a little-?’’ Wait, wrong one…”

“Did you know I can sleep a whole day?” Chimney asked. “I know, weekends are the greatest…”

Aisa walked over and pinched Chimney’s nose between her toes. “Yes, Chimney, I ditched my sandals.” She grinned teasingly.

“School’s boring, though… I just don’t pay attention. I doubt it really helps…”

“Well-p, I’m out of ideas.” Aisa pulled her foot away.

Aeincha was close to crying. Her best friend was completely senseless. She wasn’t hearing them at all. “…Mmmmmmmmmmmmm CHIMNEY, I LOVE YOU!”

The others looked at Aeincha in surprise. The Lilliputian gasped and clamped her hands over her mouth. “…Nah?” Chimney looked down at her. She shook her head, frowning and raising a brow. “Aeinchan?”

“Chimney?” she spoke, blushing.

“You’re back to normal!” Apis beamed. “Nice job, Aeincha!”

“Hehe, remember that for next time!” Aisa laughed.

“Uhhh… What on Earth happened to me?” Chimney stood up, scratching her head.

“Let’s get out of this room.” Aeincha suggested. “These bunnies are giving me the creeps.”

The group left the room of dolls and shut the door. They heard footsteps coming from around the corner, and saw Mary appear. The blonde Goldenweek gasped when she saw her cousin. “APRIL!” She ran up and embraced her in a hug. “I didn’t know where you were, I was so lost, and I lost you, and I thought you were lost, but now we-!” She looked up at her taller cousin’s face. April was frowning, while Mary’s smile was shining. “What’s wrong?”

“Mary, I…I have some bad news. I don’t know if you remember, but…”

Mary was a little shocked by her appearance… but wasn’t sure why. “Who are you?”

“Mary, this is Ib. Ib Goldenweek.” April replied. “She’s Alvin and Rosa’s real daughter. Mary… you used to be a painting. A Guertena painting. And I was a doll you created, just like the ones in that room. We trapped her and Garry in this gallery and stole their realities. We became real humans, and they became paintings… or something like that.”
