What's in a Name?

by helsinkibaby

Summary

The difference between blood kin and family.

"You're just a kid. My kid."

Joe doesn't remember the exact words Barry replies with, something to do with Joe not being his father, something that hurt like hell.

Because as far as Joe's concerned, eleven years ago, he walked into the Allen house a dad of one and came out a dad of two. Attended two sets of parent teacher conferences, checked two sets of homework. Cleaned up after two sick kids and two well ones. Took pictures at two sets of high school and college graduations.

He's got two kids and he's never let anyone tell him different.

Please drop by the archive and comment to let the author know if you enjoyed their work!